Airport road, parking plan barely flies

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Two years of studies and delays on a plan to expand the parking area and rebuild the road system at Midland Regional Airport almost were extended a few more months Tuesday when the Midland City Council refused to second a motion to approve the concept.

But the plan scraped through after an apparently shocked Col. Wilson Banks asked the council what the problem was with the plan during the council's regular meeting in City Hall Council Chambers.

The plan for expanding the parking area was drawn in three phases to take the airport's needs up to the year 2000 by the engineering and design firms of TRA, Inc. of Seattle, Wash., and Parkhill, Smith & Cooper, Inc., of Lubbock.

Failure to pass the council's first scrutiny was contrary to the action that Mayor G. Thane Akins had predicted last Thursday the council would take. After a joint meeting of the Airport Board and the City Council in which the plan was recommended for approval by the airport members, Akins had implied the council's sanction would be a routine matter.

As the clock edged toward noon on Tuesday, Akins read the item on the agenda which would have given the engineers the go-ahead to prepare plans and specifications for bids, and one councilman moved that it be approved. Many long silent seconds later, the mayor said the motion died for lack of a second and the council would recess until 1:30 p.m.

At that comment, Banks, who is director of aviation for the city, popped his pipe out of his mouth and jumped up to question their action.

"What concerns the council," replied Councilman Gordon Marcum II, "is that the surface parking might not be the direction we want to go."

First phase of this parking and road plan — which is estimated to cost almost $16 million — involves extending surface parking to the west. By Phase III, however, a multi-level garage directly in front of the Terminal building would be constructed, according to plans outlined last week by the engineers, Don Gerard and Bill Wauer.

This plan also incorporates such improvements as an air carrier parking ramp.

"It's all tied together. The decision was made earlier to go this way," Banks said of a previous council action in which the master plan that included this portion was adopted.

"If we hold off to do another study for upper-level parking, we're going to be in a dilemma with parking out there. I can't over-emphasize the importance of getting going," said Banks, who later added that delaying the starting construction date for another study is "upsetting the apple

Texas prison officials deny admission to 68 prisoners

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Texas prison officials turned aside the first challenge to their admissions freeze policy and sent 68 Harris County inmates back to the Harris County jail in Houston.

The showdown Tuesday night came after Harris County criminal judges dared the Texas Department of Corrections to risk contempt of court citations by turning away 82 inmates ordered transferred to the state penitentiary.

TDC officials accepted 14 of the prisoners who met strict conditions for admission at the overcrowded state prisons by the Texas Board of Corrections when it announced Monday it was closing the prison doors.

"The 68 remaining prisoners that will be returned were refused by (TDC) Lt. William C. Bradham. He told me he was not authorized to accept these remaining 68. He has orders to only accept those designated by the Texas Board of Corrections," said Mendenhall.

TDC spokesman Rick Hartley said Tuesday the TDC could only accept parole violaters arrested out of state, escaped inmates being returned or convicts released for court action and then ordered returned.

Max Rogers, second administrative judge for 34 southeast Texas counties, said prison officials could be held in contempt of court for refusing to accept the inmates.

Mendenhall said the county would continue to send its prisoners to the TDC "so long as we receive a valid court order."

While prison guards and Harris County sheriff's officials conferred at the gate to the diagnostic unit, prisoners in one of four vans used to bring the prisoners here shouted to reporters and briefly rocked the vehicle.

"They brought us all here and they know they ain't gonna let us in," shouted one prisoner, who identified himself as Ray Scott, 28.

Eighteen county criminal judges, prosecutors and the Harris County sheriff met privately and devised the challenge Tuesday, just one day after the Texas Board of Corrections voted to limit admissions at the state's 19 prison units.

The board froze prison admissions to meet the inmate living space requirements outlined in a sweeping order by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice aimed at ending prison overcrowding.

The freeze came after the TDC failed to meet an April 30 deadline imposed by the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals to provide 40 square feet of living space to each inmate housed in the dormitories.

TDC officials said the Texas prison system, the largest in the nation, housed 33,917 inmates before the Harris County prisoners were sent Tuesday.

District Judge Wallace C. Moore said the judges were forced by overcrowding in county jails into trying to make Prison Director Jim Estelle back down on the admissions freeze.

"We've got to do something with our situation, which is worse than his," Moore said. "We're doing our damnedest and the TDC is, too. This is a Catch-22 situation."

Moore said U.S. District Judge Carl O. Bue ordered Harris County officials to bring jail conditions up to state standards nearly a decade ago.

"We're essentially in the same situation that the TDC is. We're under the orders of a federal judge to get our jails in shape, and so are they. We could be cited for contempt of court, too," Moore said.

But Estelle said in Austin that he could not budge.

"I can't accept prisoners that put us in noncompliance," said Estelle.

"I might try that myself, putting inmates on buses," said Estelle, adding he thought it would "be an interesting excercise breaking into prison."

Harris County Judge John Lindsay said that as of May 1 there were 3,031 prisoners in the county jail. He said the facility has a capacity for 1,558. Several judges said that refusal to accept the prisoners will precipitate further action.

Release of 450 inmates planned

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — The State Board of Corrections plans to release 450 inmates by Monday in order to ease overcrowding in state prisons and comply with a federal court order.

But the inmates release does not mean the system could accept more prisoners immediately, board member Harry Whittington said following a Tuesday meeting with Gov. Billl Clements.

The prison board, faced with a bulging prison population of more than 33,900 inmates, shut the 19-unit prison system to further admissions Monday.

The order came in an effort to meet a sweeping prison reform order by U.S. District Judge William Wayne Justice that among other things requires the state to provide 40 square feet of living space for each Texas Department of Corrections inmate.

"It looks like we might make that by midnight Monday," Whittington said after meeting with Clements, TDC director W.J. Estelle and Ruben Torres, chairman of the State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Torres said paperwork for the release should be completed by the end of the week.

"According to the numbers TDC presented today, that would put them in compliance," said Torres. "Whether they can take inmates at that point I don't know."

Torres said another 1,200 inmates would be released on mandatory supervision within the next two months.

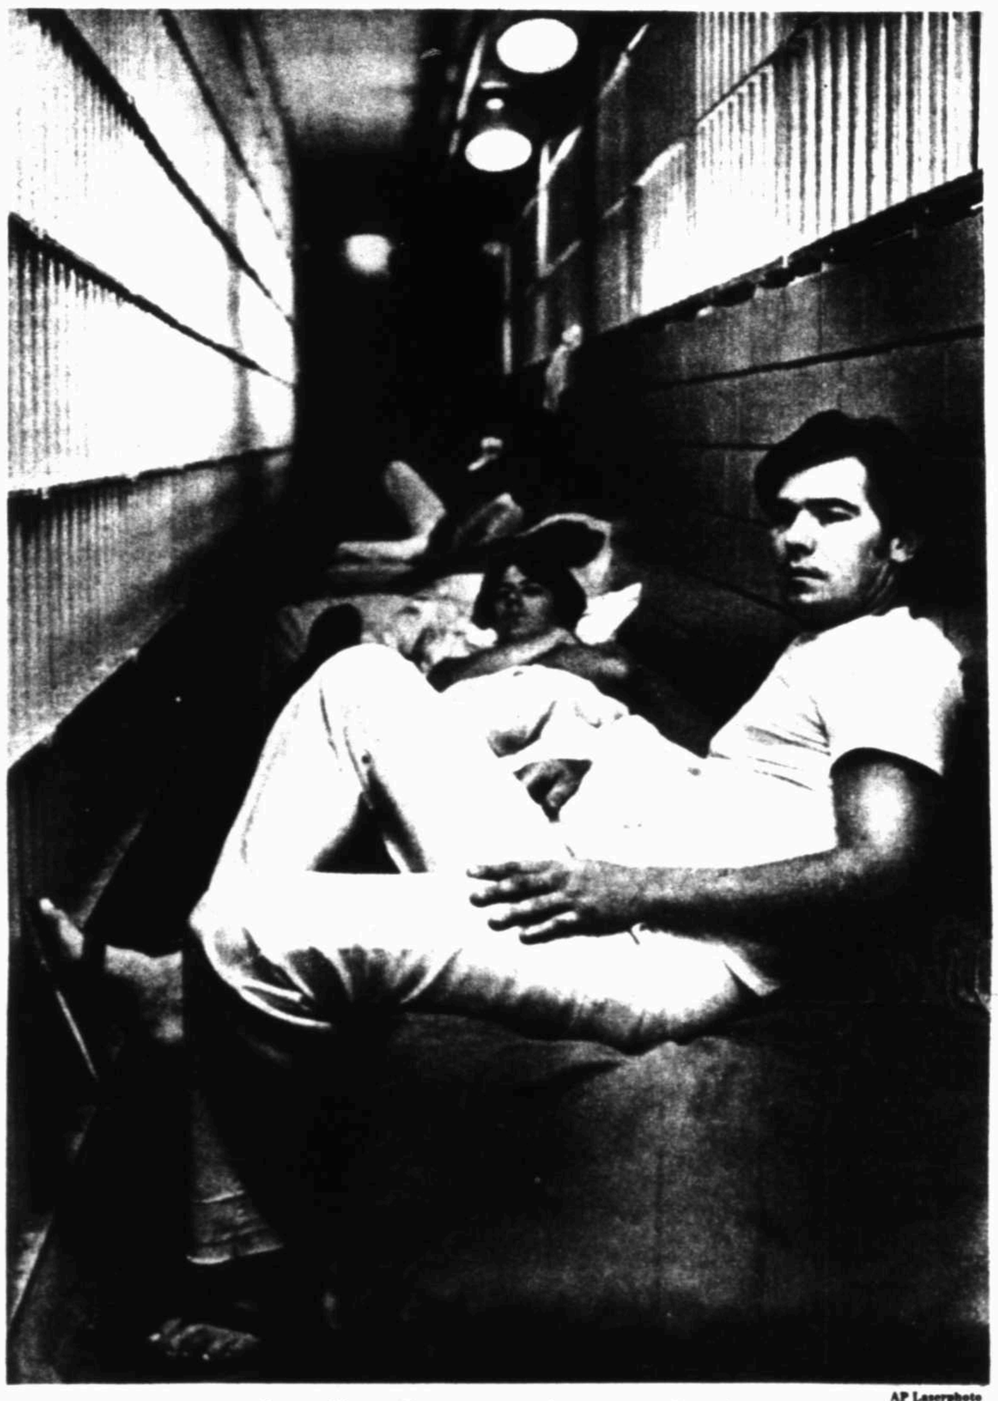

Whittington said the releases would put TDC in compliance, but would not allow the prisons to accept any new inmates.

"If we were in compliance on Monday, by the virtue of the number (Torres) is giving us, we would be back in noncompliance maybe on Tuesday," said Whittington. "So we are going to have a discretionary policy to take only those inmates in as we have inmates leave."

Whittington also said the state will speed up current construction efforts throughout the TDC. New facilites are scheduled to be ready in May, June and July. The biggest facility — a 2,800-inmate emergency unit — should be ready July 15, according to Whittington.

Clements, who did not speak with reporters after the closed-door meeting, was "surprised" by the prison board's Monday action, said Whittington.

Before the meeting, Clements said he would not open the upcoming special session of the Legislature to consideration of the prison problem. The session, scheduled to start May 24, will be limited to the state property tax and college construction funding, Clements said.

MISD trustees move to reinstate campus security measures

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

During a presentation of a list of priorities by the Lee High School PTA Advisory Council, Midland Independent School District Trustees unanimously approved the reinstatement of campus security for both high Midland high schools.

"We are a high school," Dr. Joe Smith, LHS principal, said. "We've got big kids coming and going. And whether you realize it or not, we have a criminal element on our campus. We are a miniature society."

"Being an ex-principal, there is no question you feel a lot more secure and confident when you have a law enforcement officer by your side," Dr. Joseph P. Baressi, MISD deputy superintendent, said.

Reinstatement of off-duty police officers came after one year without campus security. During the past year, teachers have been asked to help patrol the campuses before school, during the lunch period and after school.

"THE TEACHERS DO it because they think it is important and because I ask them," Smith said. "But they don't want to."

Trustee Joyce Sherrod, agreed. "They (teachers) feel that they are out there with no authority. We're also asking them to do more and more each year. We're just adding an extra straw on that back."

According to Ed Brannon, LHS PTA advisory committee member, two uniformed off-duty police officers or sheriff's deputies can be employed for six hours per day, 175 days per year, for $26,250.

"Both high school principals have included in their (1982-83) budget requests the reinstatment of off-duty police," Baressi said.

In other action, trustees awarded low-bidders First City National Bank of Houston and Associates the $9,475,000 Midland Independent School Buildings Bonds, Series 1982. With a gross interest cost of $7,841,445 and no premium, the effective interest rate was set at 9.966249 percent. Length of term on the bonds is 10 years.

Trustees met with city council members shortly after 5 p.m. to discuss development of the site chosen for one of two new elementary schools passed in April's school bond election.

The Bluebird site, located on Bluebird Lane on the extension of Ward Street, was chosen by school trustees for three reasons. According to MISD Board President Parker Humes, the site qualified because it is north of FM 868, is close to a growing population with elementary-aged children and is more centrally located than the Mockingbird site, located near Melody Acres in far northwest Midland.

"THERE IS QUITE a strong feeling by the board to not even build over at Melody Acres," Humes said.

Although the site is owned by the school district, several problems, including drainage, access and utilities, arose during plans for development.

According to Fred Baker, director of public works for Midland, "The city would provide the drainage that we see must be provided in order to plan for future developments (of the area.)"

With the school site on a hill, the drainage problem is "not with the site proper," Baker said. Rather, he explained, it is with the drainage which must run north to northeast of the site.

Baker said water lines, which would be permanent, would cost about $14 to $16 per foot, while a small-sized pressure line for sewage would cost about $8 to $10 per foot.

Sixty-foot wide streets done on the penetration pavement basis, sans curbs and gutters, between Mockingbird and Bluebird Lanes, perhaps could be paid for "in a swap" for a half acre of school district land, City Manager Jim Brown pointed out.

Brown said the half acre, located on

No fatalities reported in Seminole tornado

A tornado ripped through south Seminole at 3:39 a.m. today, inflicting 15 to 20 minor injuries and damaging businesses and mobile homes.

No fatalities were reported.

The Department of Public Safety's preliminary information indicated that one business downtown and several mobile homes sustained severe damage. The National Weather Service office at Midland Regional Airport reported the Sheriff's Office also was damaged, wiping out communications.

Details were sketchy this morning, as telephone lines were down in the area.

Meanwhile, the Midland forecast continues with the same prediction of possible severe thunderstorms through Thursday.

According to the NWS, there is a 40 percent chance tonight, declining Thursday for thunderstorms.

The low tonight is expected to be in the low 50s with the high Thursday in the low 80s.

Winds tonight should gust southwesterly 15-20 mph, shifting northwesterly 15-20 mph Thursday.

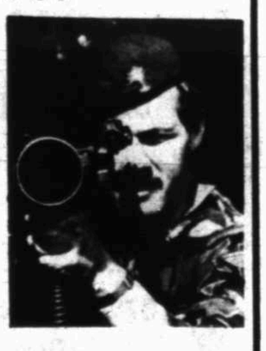

Wednesday's high of 86 fell short of the 100 degree record high set in 1962, and the overnight low of 68 was quite a bit warmer than the record low of 41 set in 1931.

Elsewhere in Texas, numerous other tornadoes were sighted during the night. Areas involved included a portion of West Texas and some areas of North Texas and North Central Texas.

Hospital boards approve May 30 wage increases

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Midland Memorial Hospital's governing boards voted Tuesday to raise starting salaries and wages of existing personnel, with the action to take effect May 30.

As a result of this decision, the 1982 fiscal year budget will have to be amended, which may lead to higher rates for hospital services.

In Tuesday's joint special meeting of the MMH board of trustees and directors at the hospital, President Ray Branson presented an eight-point wage compensation package which was unanimously approved.

The boards voted to upgrade entry-level wages of nursing personnel and other needed positions until these slots can be filled. Currently, 16 beds are being left empty because of a nursing shortage at the hospital

In addition, the boards approved to give nurses and other patient-care personnel an 8 percent across-the-board raise, while increasing other hospital personnel wages by 6 percent.

Other adjustments include initiating weekend shift differential wages, adopting a merit increase to coincide with the end of a 90-day probationary period and adding two more merit raise hikes to the present seven-step

Graham says he sees no religious repression

MOSCOW (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham said today he has seen no direct evidence of religious repression in the Soviet Union and said the concept of religious freedom was a relative one.

"It would seem to me that in the churches I visited (in the Soviet Union) — and there are thousands of them — services are allowed to go on freely," the 63-year-old Baptist told a news conference at the close of the second plenary session of the Conference of Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe.

"In the countries that I go to — and I've been to more than 50 — there is some form of control over religion. That doesn't mean there is no religious freedom. I have experienced total liberty in what I say."

Graham preached last Sunday in Moscow's only Baptist church and when he concluded his sermon two people in the congregation held up signs protesting religious persecution. A young woman who unfurled a banner reading "We have more than 150 prisoners for the work of the gospel" was later detained inside the church by a man in plainclothes.

As Graham left the news conference today, reporters asked him what he thought of that incident.

He at first refused to answer but finally responded: 'We detain people in the United States if we catch people doing things that are wrong."

The lanky preacher met for 75 minutes Tuesday with six Soviet Pentecostalists living in refuge in the U.S. Embassy in Moscow and told reporters later he prayed with them. He declined to answer questions about their 22-year battle to emigrate from the Soviet Union.

Graham was quoted in the English language Moscow News today as saying the "majority of Americans" supported his decision to attend Moscow's five-day international conference against nuclear war, which was sponsored by Patriarch Pimen, leader of the Russian Orthodox Church.

"When I accepted Patriarch Pimen's invitation to take part in this religious conference I thought I would be criticized back home. But it seems that the majority of Americans approve of my decision," Graham was quoted as saying.

Pope John Paul II sent a message to the patriarch which was read at the conference, reaffirming "my firm desire to cooperate with your church in all fields in which genuine devotion to resurrected Christ and his gospel can and must be displayed by Christians of the modern world," the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

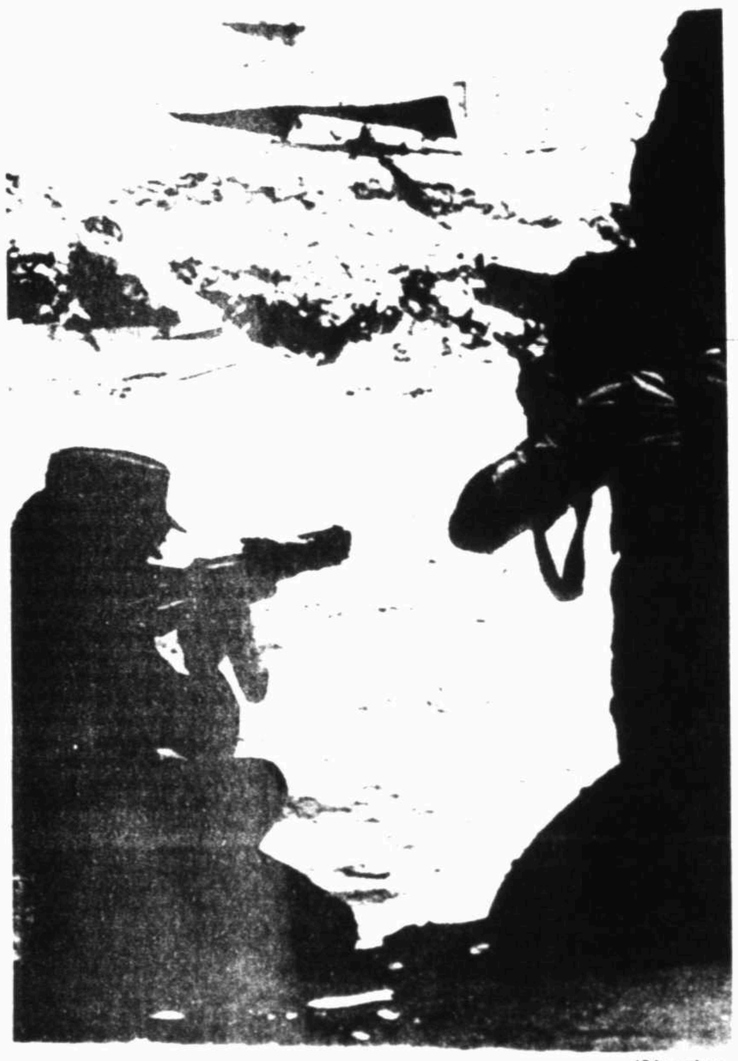

The message said two Vatican observers were attending the session.

At a meeting Monday with Yuri Zhukov, top commentator of the Communist Party newspaper Pravda, and president of the Soviet peace committee, Graham said he received 10,000 letters daily from Americans.

"Judging from these letters I can say that the majority of Americans stand for peace," the minister was quoted as saying.

U.S. officials in Washington reportedly opposed Graham's trip because they feared his presence would give the anti-nuclear conference additional exposure and credibility. Graham said he met with President Reagan, and "the president never objected to me personally."

Pilgrims await pontiff's arrival at Portuguese Shrine of Fatima

LISBON, Portugal (AP) — More than 700,000 Roman Catholic pilgrims waited through the night at the Shrine of Fatima for Pope John Paul II. The pontiff was arriving tonight from Rome to thank the Virgin Mary for delivering him from an assassin on the 64th anniversary of her apparition to three shepherd children at Fatima.

Lucia dos Santos, a frail 75-year-old Carmelite nun and the last survivor of the three children who claimed to have seen six visions of Mary starting May 13, 1917, was to greet the pope at the shrine. She lives in seclusion at a convent in Coimba, 54 miles away, and was last at Fatima 15 years ago to meet Pope Paul VI.

Before leaving the Vatican today, the pope told 50,000 tourists and pilgrims at a general audience in St. Peter's Square: "I am not going to Fatima in a pilgrimage just to express my gratitude to the Madonna. I am also going to that blessed place to listen again, in the name of the whole church, to the message delivered by the lips of the Madonna, worried about the fate of her children."

John Paul II, whose papal motto is "Mary, I am all yours," frequently has commented on the coincidence that a Turkish terrorist tried to kill him in St. Peter's Square on May 13, 1981, at the same hour that Lucia and her two cousins, Jacinto and Francisco Marto, said the "lady in white" first appeared to them.

Despite a 24-hour strike by Communist-dominated labor unions, the pilgrims made their way to the central Portuguese village. Some crawled part of the way on their hands and knees, others were barefoot as a sign of penance. Poor peasant women in simple black dresses carried belongings in potato sacks on their heads, while the sick and disabled rode in buses, trucks and trains.

Hundreds were treated for scraped, swollen and sometimes bleeding feet at roadside first-aid centers set up by the Red Cross, the Order of the Knights of Malta and the Portuguese army.

Officials at the concrete-walled sanctuary, which houses the glass-covered Chapel of the Apparitions, said they expected nearly 1.5 million people by this evening, when the Polish-born pontiff begins a four-day visit to Portugal.

The government declared Thursday a national holiday in his honor and Parliament adopted a decree granting amnesty to some 600 people jailed for petty crimes.

The pope's pilgrimage raised speculation that the "third secret" of Fatima, supposedly revealed to the children by the Virgin, might be made public.

Lucia said Mary's first secret predicted an end to World War I but said a worse war would follow unless man repented for his sins and prayed.

The second secret predicted that the Soviet Union would "spread the error of her ways in all the world," threatening "wars and persecution of the church." Ultimately the Soviets would be converted to Christianity and "a certain period of peace would be granted to the world," Lucia said.

She wrote the last secret in Portuguese and turned it over to the Vatican on condition that only a pope reveal it after 1960. Five popes since then gave increasing importance to Fatima, but did not reveal the remaining secret.

Paul VI told his secretary that like his predecessors, he "would not comment either" on Lucia's document. But theologian Ennio Innocenti, a Fatima expert, said the pope paraphrased it by talking about a crisis inside the church and an unprecedented world conflict.

John Paul II, who has said current international tensions remind him of the state of the world during World War I, will read a four-page document on the Virgin Mary during an open air Mass Thursday at Fatima.

Portugal was recognized as "fidelissima" — most faithful — nation by the papacy during the Renaissance. Ninety-six percent of its 10 million people are baptized in the Roman Catholic Church and more than half have visited the site of the visions.

John Paul will visit other Portuguese cities Friday and Saturday, ending his trip in the northern industrial city of Oporto, where police said a bomb blast destroyed four buses of a company opposing the general strike.

The strike shut down industrial plants and disrupted traffic throughout the country Tuesday in a protest against the deaths of two workers in Oporto during May Day disturbances. In Lisbon, a driver enraged by the strike rammed his bus into picketing workers, killing one of them and injuring three.

Irish home-rule plan given preliminary approval

LONDON (AP) — The British cabinet minister for Northern Ireland is pushing a new home-rule plan that both Catholics and Protestants in the strife-torn province criticize sharply.

"You've got to start somewhere," said James Prior, the secretary of state for Northern Ireland, in an interview.

But he indicated Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government is open to compromise on a key element of the plan giving the Catholics a veto.

Prior was interviewed Tuesday after the House of Commons gave his plan preliminary approval by a vote of 291-29. The opposition Labor Party abstained. Final approval is expected later this month, but there may be modifications first. Elections would be held in Northern Ireland in the fall.

For nearly 13 years, the Provisional wing of the mostly-Catholic Irish Republican Army has been fighting a guerrilla war of assassination, bombing and ambush to take Protestant-dominated Northern Ireland out of the United Kingdom and unite it with the Catholic Irish Republic to the south.

Home rule ended in Northern Ireland in 1972, after 51 years of autonomy, when the British government suspended the provincial parliament and took over the administration of the province because of the communal violence.

Three British attempts since then to return governmental power to a provincial parliament have failed because of Protestant opposition to sharing power with the Catholic minority. The Catholics, after more than half a century of discrimination, reject any system in which they are not guaranteed a voice.

Prior's plan calls for the election of a 78-member assembly that would work out the form and powers of a new provincial government and submit its recommendations to the British Parliament.

In an attempt to ensure that the representatives of the million Protestants do not ride roughshod over the representatives of the 500,000 Catholics, the plan requires approval by 70 percent of the members of any recommendations to Parliament.

Although all major parties in Northern Ireland are expected to take part in the assembly election, almost all of them — both Catholic and Protestant — have sharply criticized the plan as unworkable or a betrayal of Protestant or Catholic interests.

Prior replies: "To those who say, 'Well, you know, you shouldn't start here,' they haven't answered the question of where you should start."

He rejected a criticism that the assembly would further embitter the vicious sectarian debate in Northern Ireland.

"I don't see how you ever get the various political parties and factions to come together unless they have some forum," he said.

Catholic Irish nationalists reject the plan because it would continue British power in Northern Ireland. Some Catholic moderates contend that the Protestants might be able to muster a 70 percent vote in the assembly. Protestant leaders argue that the 70 percent requirement means a Catholic minority could dictate.

Prior insisted that the 70-percent requirement is not a "very important point."

"What is much more important is that in any arrangement ... there should be cross-community (Protestant-Catholic) support," he said.

South Africa claims exchange of Soviet, Western agents

By The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

CAPE TOWN, South Africa — South Africa announced Tuesday that it had exchanged a Soviet spy in its custody for eight "very important" Western intelligence agents who had been jailed in the Soviet Bloc and a South African soldier held in Angola.

The Western agents were not identified but some of them are believed to be Americans.

The nine-for-one trade took place at an undisclosed location in Europe, Prime Minister Pieter W. Botha told Parliament. He said negotiators had also tried unsuccessfully to gain the release of Soviet dissident Anatoly Shcharansky, who is seeking to emigrate to Israel.

The Soviet, held by South Africa for at least 16 months, was identified as Maj. Alexei Mikhailovich Kozlov, an agent of the Soviet KGB security police.

Botha said Kozlov, posing as a German businessman, had been detained on his fourth visit to South Africa since 1976. His main assignment, the prime minister said, was to assess the effectiveness of armed black nationalist opponents of white-ruled South Africa, such as the outlawed African National Congress and the South-West Africa People's Organization.

The South African soldier who gained his freedom in the deal is Sapper (private) Johan Van der Mescht. He was captured by SWAPO in February 1978, apparently while on a South African army operation in Angola from Namibia (South-West Africa). SWAPO is fighting to gain independence and black rule for Namibia, a territory administered by South Africa under an old League of Nations mandate.

A government spokesman said negotiations for the prisoner exchange were "basically a South African deal." Botha used the announcement to call for better treatment for his country from Western nations which have distanced themselves from South Africa because of its policy of apartheid, racial segregation.

Chernenko's appearance on Red Star cover could indicate appointment

MOSCOW (AP) — Red Star published a large picture of Politburo member Konstantin U. Chernenko addressing a major military conference on its front page today. Western diplomats said it was a strong suggestion that he had assumed the powerful top ideological post in the Communist Party.

The Defense Ministry newspaper showed Chernenko, 70, reading a message from President Leonid I. Brezhnev to the sixth all-army conference of secretaries of primary party organizations.

When the last conference was held in 1973, top Kremlin ideologist Mikhail A. Suslov delivered the Brezhnev message. Suslov died Jan. 25 at the age of 79, and his successor has not been announced.

One Western specialist said the picture was "the clearest indication yet that Chernenko has moved into Suslov's spot."

Soviet television also showed Chernenko Tuesday night reading the message in the Kremlin's Grand Palace to an audience of top officers, including Defense Minister Dmitri F. Ustinov. But Pravda, the Communist Party newspaer, printed Brezhnev's message on its front page without mentioning Chernenko.

Chernenko immediately took a more prominent public role in the Soviet hierachy after the death of Suslov, who was widely regarded as the No. 2 man in the ruling Politburo behind Brezhnev.

Chernenko is a Brezhnev protege who has written many published articles on the leading role of the party. His rise to prominence in the secretive ruling body has been swift since he was made a member only four years ago.

'Some progress' seen in Falklands talks

By The Associated Press

British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym said today that "some progress" had been made in talks at the United Nations to settle the Falkland Islands crisis but that "many difficult problems remain."

He spoke after a Cabinet meeting in London but did not elaborate.

Argentina made new proposals at U.N. headquarters Tuesday, and Britain's representative said they were "very interesting" but would take "a few more days" for assessment.

Meanwhile, no new military action was reported in the South Atlantic. Britain claimed its battle fleet has a stranglehold on the islands 250 miles east of the Argentine coast and had isolated the estimated 9,000 troops occupying them. An Argentine naval source said the British claim was "ridiculous."

After a fifth day of talks Tuesday at the United Nations, diplomats reported some progress toward an agreement to call a cease-fire and resume negotiations on the future of the disputed islands. But the possibility of a British assault on the Falklands still loomed.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the House of Commons that "the fact we are negotiating does not close off any military options at all."

British sources predicted the critical point in the talks could be reached by Thursday. But British ministers have denied speculation that the government has set a deadline for agreement in the talks at U.N. headquarters.

One deadline of a sort was set, however. Cardinal Basil Hume, the Roman Catholic archbishop of Westminster, announced that Pope John Paul II's visit to Britain starting May 28 would be cancelled unless "military hostilities ... cease or be on the way to coming to an end by the middle of next week."

The visit would be the first in history by a pope to Britain.

The content of Argentina's new proposals could not be learned immediately. wBut U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar said he was "rather encouraged," and believed the talks were "on the right course."

He said, however, he needed another "couple of days for achieving practical results."

"There have been some very interesting propositions that have come forward from the secretary-general," said British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons. "We'll go now and digest them. We need a little more time ... a few more days."

An Argentine Foreign Ministry official in Buenos Aires said there had been "a change of attitude but not of basic position" on the issue of Argentine s sovereignty over the Falklands.

The official, who requested anonymity, said full British recognition of Argentine sovereignty "is not absolutely necessary," but "at the end of any negotiations, we must be exercising sovereignty."

Argentine insistence on recognition of its claim to sovereignty over the 149-year-old British colony it seized April 2 has been a major stumbling block to the effort to arrange a military truce and get negotiations started.

In negotiations in recent years, the British have in effect recognized Argentina's claim to the islands but have been insisting that the 1,800 islanders must agree. The Falklanders, most of whom are of British descent, have refused. But British spokesmen have abandoned the earlier stand that the islanders' wishes must be "paramount."

British correspondents with the task force in the Falklands reported senior officers said the Argentine ship attacked early Tuesday sent a fireball into the sky when it blew up, and the size of the explosion indicated it was a tanker.

Peter Archer of Press Association, the domestic British news agency, said the frigate Alacrity spotted the ship in the southern approaches of the Falkland Sound, the five-mile-wide channel between the two Falkland islands,a nd challenged it.

When the ship tried to escape, the frigate opened fire with its 4.5-inch guns, Archer said.

Military engagements over islands listed

LONDON (AP) — Following are the military engagements between British and Argentine forces over the Falkland Islands:

April 2: Argentina invades the Falklands at dawn. British marines surrender after a 3½-hour battle around the governor's residence.

April 3: South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands are seized.

April 5: Lead ships in the British armada set sail from Portsmouth, England.

April 23: A helicopter from the British task force ditches in the Atlantic. One crewman is missing, presumed drowned.

April 25: British forces invade South Georgia, taking the principal port, Grytviken, and damaging the Argentine submarine Santa Fe.

April 26: British forces recapture the island's other harbor, Leith, and accept the surrender of the Argentine commander. Britain says an Argentine prisoner is killed in an unspecified "serious incident."

May 1: A British Vulcan bomber flying from Ascension Island attacks the airfield at the Falklands capital of Stanley before dawn. As light breaks, Sea Harriers from one of the two British carriers, Hermes and Invincible, attack the airfield and a secondary airstrip at Goose Green. Later, British warships bombard Stanley and Argentine bombers attack the fleet.

May 2: A British submarine sinks Argentina's only cruiser, the General Belgrano, with two torpedoes. About 350 crewmen are lost.

May 3: British Lynx helicopters sink the Argentine patrol boat Alferez Sobral and damage another patrol vessel. The Argentines say the boats were aiding rescue efforts near the Belgrano. London says the boats opened fire on a British helicopter. Argentina reports eight killed and six wounded in the encounter.

May 4: Another Vulcan bombing attack on Stanley airfield and several Harrier attacks on Stanley and Goose Green. One British Harrier is shot down. Argentina says that in three days of attacks on the Falklands, 11 Argentines were killed and 31 wounded.

An Argentine Super Etendard, flying from a mainland base, fires two Exocet missiles at the British destroyer HMS Sheffield, one connects and demolishes the ship. Twenty British seamen are killed, 24 wounded.

May 5: Two more Harriers disappear while on patrol. Argentina claims they were shot down but Britain says they were lost in bad weather and may have collided.

May 9: Britain mounts new attacks on military targets near Stanley airfield.

Mediation could restore some of U.N.'s prestige

By WILLIAM N. OATIS
Associated Press Writer

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — If Javier Perez de Cuellar mediates a solution to the Falklands crisis, he will win back some of the prestige the United Nations has lost because of its failure to resolve other such conflicts.

A quiet-spoken Peruvian, the world organization's fifth secretary-general quickly won the confidence of both British and Argentine negotiators after the collapse of Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig's peace initiative.

"I can't imagine anyone who could have handled this better," said a well-placed British source. He added that Perez de Cuellar was proving to be strictly impartial despite his Latin American roots.

British Ambassador Sir Anthony Parsons says he is "strong, quiet and determined."

As an aide to Secretary General Kurt Waldheim, Perez de Cuellar was involved in peace efforts in Cyprus and Afghanistan. But the Falklands conflict is his baptism of fire as U.N. chief. He succeeded Waldheim Jan. 1.

U.S. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick observed that the Falklands crisis is not encrusted by Soviet-American rivalry. For this reason, "it's quite possible that this kind of a problem will turn out to be one in which the secretary-general ... can make a contribution," she said.

U.N. peacemaking goes back to the early days of the 37-year-old organization, but of Perez de Cuellar's predecessors, only Dag Hammarskjold took such a first-hand role in the operation. It cost him his life.

Under Trygve Lie of Norway, the first secretary-general, a three-nation Security Council committee that included the United States got a truce in the 1948 Indonesian rebellion against the Netherlands. This led to Indonesian independence a year later.

Also in Lie's administration, Ralph J. Bunche, an American in the U.N. secretariat, mediated talks on the island of Rhodes that led to the signing od the 1949 armistice agreements between Israel and Egypt, Lebanon, Jordan and Syria. But three other Arab-Israeli wars followed, and mediation by the United States not by the United Nations produced the only Arab-Israeli peace treaty, the Camp David agreement between Egypt and Israel.

U.N. peacekeeping forces became an element in peacemaking while Hammarskjold, a Swede, was secretary-general from April 1953 to September 1961.

The first U.N. Emergency Force, 6,000 strong, grew out of a Canadian resolution the General Assembly adopted on Nov. 4, 1956, to take over the Sinai peninsula from Israeli forces that had advanced to the Suez Canal three months after Egypt nationalized it.

Withdrawal of the force in 1967 was blamed for the outbreak of the ensuing Six Day Arab-Israeli War. After that one, Gunnar Jarring of Sweden tried for four years to work out a settlement as a special representative of Secretary-General U Thant but fnally gave up.

The largest U.N. peacekeeping operation to date was in the Congo where the force grew to 20,000 in 1960-64. The biggest problem there was the secession of Katanga Province under Moise Tshombe, and Hammarskjold was killed in a plane crash on his way to meet with the rebel premier. The separatist movement and two like it in other parts of the country eventually collapsed.

A U.N. peacekeeping force has been stationed in Cyprus since 1964, but it could not prevent the Turkish seizure of the northern part of the island in 1974. The dispatch of a U.N. force in southern Lebanon in 1978 helped secure the% withdrawal of an Israeli invasion force, but the U.N. troops have not been able to prevent periodic hostilities between the Palestinian guerrillas and the Israelis and a Lebanese Christian militia allied with them.

The United Nations has mounted only one major military operation against an aggressor, when it joined forces with the United States against the North Korean invaders of South Korea in 1950. But that was possible only because the Soviet Union was boycotting the Security Council and could not exercise its veto.

The Soviets have not made that mistake again. And the United Nations has been unable to do anything about such major conflicts as the Vietnam War, the Ethiopian-Somali fighting for the Ogaden, the Soviet occupation of Afghanistan and the war between Iran and Iraq.

NATO commands watching warfare in Falkland Islands

By JOHN HARRIS
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Air and naval warfare around the Falkland Islands is being closely studied by NATO commanders in Western Europe, which now lacks the formidable strength of the British task force dispatched to the South Atlantic.

Allied officials feel that Britain is now mounting an effective blockade of the islands, both through air and naval bombardment of their two airfields and through submarine and surface control of the surrounding seas.

They believe the British are capable of landing appreciable numbers of troops on the islands, too, but assert that the decision to invade the Falklands will be based on political as well as military considerations.

The officials also think, hpwever, that with the advent of severe winter weather in the South Atlantic, Britain will have difficlty in maintaining a fleet for a lengthy period of time off the Falklands to provide support for troops ashore.

The nearest British land base to the Falklands is South Georgia Island more than 800 miles away, and which provides only limited anchorage facilities.

Argentina's air force, numbering about 110 planes, numerically outmatches the 18 or so British Sea Harrier fighters based on carriers in the area, and the 20 more reportedly on their way to the combat region.

But the force is mostly land-based on fields more than 400 miles from the Falklands, meaning that it would have to operate at a dangerously-extended range if it tried to attack British vessels.

Budget Committee drafts spending plan

By CLIFF HAAS

WASHINGTON (AP) — House budget writers are trying to create a spending blueprint out of the chaos that has Republicans in disarray over an administration-backed compromise and Democrats split into at least three factions of their own.

"It's a miserable prospect," said House Republican Leader Robert H. Michel of Illinois.

The Democratic-controlled House Budget Committee was beginning work today on writing its version of a spending plan even as the president was continuing his lobbying effort for a budget worked out last week with the GOP majority on the Senate Budget Committee.

House Budget Committee Chairman James R. Jones, D-Okla., was presenting his panel with an outline that includes raising taxes by $145 billion over three years and doubling the military spending reductions envisioned by the Senate GOP budget.

Not only has that Senate version drawn a thumbs down from Democrats, it also has hit a brick wall with Republicans in the House.

"Don't expect the same game that's being played over there in the Senate to be played over here," Michel said he told White House officials.

MICHEL DECLARED Tuesday there is "just no way" Congress will vote for Social Security benefit reductions this year as a way to reduce spending. "You've got to take that off the table before you can even start" writing a budget House Republicans will support, he said.

Michel also said the Senate Republican plan raises taxes too much and fails to cut the defense buildup enough.

The underlying goal of the competing budget approaches is to do something to reduce deficits expected to soar to $182 billion in 1983 and $233 by 1985 unless changes are made.

Michel and other House Republicans met privately Tuesday afternoon to assess the situation. After the meeting, a House Republican source who asked not to be named indicated Republicans remain undecided on a substitute package but insisted that no Social Security changes would be included "if and when" an alternative is drafted.

Jones, meanwhile, is having problems on his side of the aisle.

Democratic leaders have given Jones' plan lukewarm support and House Majority Leader Jim Wright, D-Texas, a member of the Budget Committee, conceded the Jones plan may have to "change a little" during the panel's consideration.

Conservative Democrats, who helped Reagan win his budget victories last year, are rejecting the Jones plan outright.

"IT'S TOTALLY unacceptable," said Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, a Budget Committee member who co-sponsored last year's budget bill that passed after dozens of conservative Democrats broke with their Democratic leadership and supported Reagan. "I'm disappointed we could not work out an agreeable coompromise (with Jones,) but it's clear at this point we cannot."

Gramm and other so called "Boll Weevils" scheduled a meeting today to discuss whether they want to introduce their own budget or align themselves behind something similar to the package offered by Senate Republicans.

Liberal Democrats also are upset.

For example, Rep. David Obey, D-Wisc., a Budget Committee member, said he would propose an alternative budget to set out "what we think ought to be done." He declined to be specific, except to say it would call for higher taxes than in Jones' plan, and more spending on domestic programs.

Jones conceded the problems Tuesday saying, "I do not underestimate how difficult it's going to be under these circumstances."

But he added that all sides, including his own, would have to give a little. "If everybody digs in their heels and says, 'It's got to be 100 percent pure, as I see it, or nothing,' then I don't think we'll be able to pass a budget."

The plan Reagan is backing calls for $40 billion worth of unspecified Social Security savings — presumably through cuts or payroll tax increases — over three years to help reduce budget deficits. The proposal has been approved by the Senate Budget Committee and awaits action from the full Senate.

IT ALSO provides for $95 billion in tax increases over a three-year period coupled with a $22 billion reduction in the administration's defense buildup.

Michel, reflecting the election-year jitters over tampering with Social Security, said, "As much as I personally would like to see us do something on Social Security, there's just no way we can address that issue" before receiving a year-end report from a bipartisan study commission.

However, Reagan appears unconcerned by the problems in the House and is in the midst of three days of White House meetings with businessmen and bankers to plug for the Senate package.

"We need your help, all of you, all of us working together," Reagan told a group of businessmen Tuesday at the White House. "If we are successful, we will get this economy moving and put this country on the road to greatness."

So far, the president has won pledges from the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers and the Business Roundtable for help in pressuring Congress to approve the spending plan passed by the Senate Budget Committee.

The Social Security changes in the Senate plan are part of a broader package of tax increases and spending cuts designed to reduce what would otherwise be a deficit of $182 billion in 1983, $216 billion in 1984 and $233 billion in 1985.

The Senate plan would trim deficits to $106 billion in 1983, $69 billion in 1984 and $39 billion in 1985. Jones said his plan would bring deficits to $103 billion in 1983, $71 billion in 1984 and $31 billion in 1985.

Council OKs raising water, sewage rates

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Discussion of a proposed effluent disposal contract with J. "Timber" Floyd was postponed Tuesday by the Midland City Council, who decided to take up the matter in a 4 p.m. special session Thursday in City Hall. However, one councilman noted much of that discussion will take place in executive session, as it pertains to land acquisition.

The council, meeting in a regular session in City Hall, however, listened to comments from two Midlanders about the proposal. In other action, the council approved raising the water and sewer rates on first reading, denied water and sewer service outside the city, passed a plan for a two-level downtown parking garage and ratified a housing subdivision plan for northwest Midland.

The proposed $20 million sewage disposal plan involves piping primary treated effluent from the sewage treatment plant to Floyd's land southeast of the city and near the Glasscock County line. There the effluent will be retained in holding ponds before being used to irrigate the land.

Objecting to the plan was Fred Hansler, who lives in the Valley View community.

"I live south of town and you'll run it close to my property. You'll primary treat it but it still will smell. For that money ($20 million), you could build a water treatment plant and treat it so I could use it," Hansler told the council.

AFTER THE COUNCIL informed him that Floyd's land lies far to the south of Hansler, the farmer replied, "We're still going to smell it. You could build a good plant to treat it properly and use it for industries."

Mayor G. Thane Akins answered that the city's consultants had figured the cost for that to run four times as much as the Floyd disposal plan. "On the water and sewer rates, I don't think the people would stand to do what you're proposing," he added.

Earlier, the council had approved raising the water and sewer rates, adjusting them to reflect the increased cost of paying off the water bonds for the project and higher pumping costs from Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Hansler contended the treated effluent would soak into the ground and pollute people's water. But Akins said this water is being located on a site where there isn't much water under it. And what is in the area is of a poorer quality than the treated sewage water.

City Manager James Brown interjected, "The problem is not bacteria, it's the mineral content. We've had plenty of farmers who wanted to take the water, but the state (Department of Water Resources) said we would pollute the underground water mineralwise.

"Primary effluent is just great to put on a farm," he continued. "God only knows we tried to get close to town but we couldn't come up with the right land. Building a tertiary treatment plant wouldn't help, either."

The other Midlander, Bill Rapp, suggested the council find an innovative way of treating the sewage water and reusing it in light of a predicted statewide water shortage by the year 2000.

In a verbal parry, the mayor and Rapp disagreed over the feasibility of the latter's suggestions.

"Conservation is the now solution to the water problem," Akins said.

The council approved raising the base water rate by 9 percent and the base sewer rate by 47 percent. If approved on the second reading at the May 25 meeting, the rates should go into effect June. 1.

WESTERN HIGHLAND subdivision, which will be located south of Mockingbird Lane and 2,600 feet west of Midland Drive, was approved by the council after the northern tier of quadraplexes was changed to duplexes. Mockingbird Lane will be routed south of its current intended route to protect the Agriculture Estates zoning to the north.

The approval came without the consent of Councilman Jesse Hatfield, who stated he sees these developments as an encroachment upon the AE zoning in this northern section of Midland. As a resident in that area, he said, "We're getting squeezed more and more out there with Texaco and Green Tree. If the elementary school goes in on Bluebird Lane, they'll be wanting to put in housing around it."

One stipulation to the approval required the developer to come up with an acceptable drainage plan.

A REQUEST TO CHANGE zoning on a strip of land north of Hillander School from multi-family to O-1, office, was denied. In spite of the negative vote, the mayor said he believes the office zoning is more compatible with the school. "I can't think of any MF I'd like to see close to a school."

Jack Hightower didn't encounter a problem with his plan to construct a two-story parking garage on the west side of Carrizo Street between Michigan and Tennessee Avenues. But the council and city staff haggled over where the in and out ramps should be located.

The council denied water and sewer service to N.J. Bell, who was trying to sell his 32-acre tract of land near Cottonflat and I-20 for a mobile home park. The council noted that its policy is to extend the city lines only for industrial purposes.

But, again, the council argued over the merits of that policy without coming to any changes.

And the council approved abandoning and vacating various streets and alleys downtown for The First National Bank to begin its two 40-story tower Eagle Plaza project.

Before the meeting began, City Secretary James McCullough swore in the winners of the April city elections: Akins as mayor, Steve Davidson in Place 4 and Tom Sloan in Place 5.

FAA grounds planned flights of Muse Air Corporation

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

On Monday Muse Air Corporation of Dallas was to have initiated service to Midland Regional Airport, bringing to West Texas a fleet of McDonnell Douglas Super 80 aircraft which Muse authorities describe as the quietest, most comfortable, and most fuel-efficient commercial craft in existence.

But over the weekend, according to Muse Corporation Chairman Lamar Muse, the Federal Aviation Administration grounded their planned flights even before the high-technology craft flew the skies of the Permian Basin.

"The FAA didn't approve landing slots," he said during a visit this morning to Midland Regional Airport,designed to foster public awareness of the airline's plight.

"The reason they gave was that the skies were too crowded here and there was no more room to land," Muse said.

The chairman, who was instrumental in the success of Southwest Airlines during the last decade, was emphatic in his contention that the FAA's reasoning was not valid.

"The reason Muse went back into (commercial flying) is because the air business got deregulated during the Carter Democratic administration," he said.

"Now during Reagan's administration, the FAA, under the guise of safety, is completely controlling the industry. They're refusing to grant us any more landing rights."

He added that he believes personality conflicts have a great deal to do with the FAA's refusal.

"I made the horrible mistake after the PATCO strike of criticizing (FAA officials)," he said. "I think now (FAA authorities) are showing the industry nobody can say anything derogatory about the FAA and get away with it."

In a public relations release, Muse President Michael Muse, amplified on the FAA ruling.

"On Feb. 18, the FAA completely changed the rules for airline expansion and anounced that no new landing slots would be made available at certain restricted airports, including Dallas and Houston, and any slots that might become available would be allocated by means of a lottery among all airlines," he said. "Incumbent airlines would be able to keep their existing slots and trade among themselves. International operations would become exempt from this ruling. And general aviation (private planes) operating over 29,000 feet would not be restricted. As a result of the FAA's new rules, Muse Air has been left out in the cold and will not be able to fly the aircraft."

"It leaves us with $41 million in aircraft on ramps in Dallas that cost us $25,000 a day to own," said the corporation chairman.

"I hate to think the (FAA ruling) is cut-and-dry, but they haven't given me any encouragement...at the moment I don't see any prospects of getting (landing slots in Midland) — ever. I think we'd take the market if we could just provide the service."

Muse Air has provided commercial service between Dallas and Houston since last July. Four Super 80s already are owned by the corporation while four more of the 154 passenger craft already are on order and are expected to be delivered in June, said the chairman.

Lamar Muse said Muse representatives are continuing to negotiate with the FAA in Washington, D.C., adding that if efforts fail "the only alternative left is the courthouse."

MISD trustees move to reinstate security measures the corner of Midland Drive and Mockingbird Lane, would be ideal for construction of a fire sub-station approved in the April 3 city bond election.

Trustees and city council members will study the cost of each item involved in the proposed swap and meet again for a final decision.

Trustees approved several modifications of architectural plans for the new elementary school, which were presented by Preston Geren, architect.

GEREN, USING THE same plans implemented in other Midland schools he designed, suggested several modifications to "enhance and create an elementary school that will be complementary to the area."

Proposals included various colors of brick and tile to be used on the low roofs and a turnaround to provide easier traffic flow for school buses and parents dropping off or picking up students. Geren also suggested using an asphalt-type surface for recreational purposes in lieu of tile. According to Geren, asphalt provides better drainage, easier cleaning and grass will not grow through it as it does with tile.

Board members asked Geren to provide examples of his suggestions at the next board meeting.

Trustees also approved recommendations concerning redirection of the vocational agriculture program. According to Dr. Charles Thompson, MISD vocational coordinator, a new course, general agriculture mechanics, would include about six weeks of instruction in six major areas. Those areas include gasoline and diesel engine mechanics, oxy-acetylene, plumbing, construction and carpentry, general and arc welding and electricity.

Thompson said that two teachers, one at each of the high schools, are qualified to teach the course. Classes would be limited to 12-16 students.

"During the summer, we will have an overflow of welders," Thompson said. "It will pick back up in August or September when production picks up. But this course would allow students to be trained in other areas."

Authorization was given to Dr. James H. Mailey, superintendent, to enter into a contractual agreement with International Business Machines Corp. (IBM) for the lease or purchase of word processing equipment to be used solely in the administrative offices.

According to Mailey, the equipment "should improve efficiency" in the central office and they "will pay for themselves in the long-run."

THE LHS PTA Advisory Council presented a list of priorities following an initial meeting which took place in November 1981. The list, presented by JoAnn Gardner, chairman of the council and president of the LHS PTA, and Ed Brannon, LHS business instructor, included a multi-purpose workout gymnasium for boys and girls athletics and physical education, an agriculture facility accessible to LHS, expansion of the band and choir hall facilities, an all-weather track and lighted football field adjacent to the campus and additional parking facilitiesfor students.

The council also asked for the realignment of LHS's attendance boundaries, specifically asking for the reinstatement of students in the area bordered by Haynes Street, north on Garfield to Loop 250, west to Midkiff and north.

Based on projections that Midland High School will have a larger enrollment than LHS, council representatives requested that the priorities be met.

According to Trustee Bill Jackson, enrollment at the two high schools on May 6 differed by 40 students. Humes pointed out to council members that projections are merely estimates and "I wouldn't rely too much on projections."

A three-year plan for comprehensive special education services also was approved. Gifts from Sam Houston, South and Henderson elementary school PTA's were accepted.

Bids for the Midland High School gymnasium and shop renovation were awarded to Rose and Sons, Inc. of Midland.

Joseph Bernard Rubin was selected to serve as Reading and Language Arts Coordinator effective for the 1982-83 school year. He currently is assistant professor of elementary education at the University of Arizona.

cart."

Councilman Tom Sloan recommended the entire plan be approved but contingent to having a study done on the need for upper-level parking.

Boiled down, the council was concerned that constructing only Phase I of the parking plan wouldn't be enough to accommodate near-future parking needs and that Phase III would have to be included.

"Yes," said Banks, "but the money."

Last week, the engineers said an additional $10 million would be needed to add the upper-level parking to the $16 million project.

"It still bothers me that people will have to walk 1,500 feet" from the far west end of the parking lot to the Terminal building, Marcum said.

"That's not till way in 1990," replied Akins in a slightly-agitated tone of voice."Let's get on with our business and do what we should have done last fall. My concern is not to underbuild again. I feel like what they've come up with is an excellent plan."

Banks urged the council again to "get on with" the project and the motion passed the second time around.

Plans and specifications should be ready to advertise for bids in late October and construction could start in early 1983.

Armed robbery suspect arrested

ODESSA — Bad luck and an alert police officer are credited with the apprehension of an armed robbery suspect early this morning.

Authorities said Sgt. John Magee was responding to a robbery call at the Desert Inn Motel on East Second Street shortly after 2 a.m. when he saw a man pushing a disabled car down the street near the intersection of 8th and Dale.

After arriving at the motel and being provided with a description of a suspect and getaway car that matched that of the man and vehicle he had seen earlier, Magee retraced his route and spotted the car parked near a 7-Eleven store at 8th and Cumberland.

The suspect was standing near the vehicle and told Magee he was having transmission problems. He was arrested after a .22-caliber rifle was found in the car, according to police.

The motel clerk had told officers a man armed with a rifle had come in about 2 a.m.; took an undisclosed amount of cash and told her to "keep your mouth shut if you want to live."

The suspect, a 22-year-old Cuban, was to be formally charged with armed robbery sometime today. The holdup money also was recovered, according to police.

schedule.

A newly-schooled nurse now would start at an entry level of $9.20 an hour. If the nurse works 3 to 11 p.m. or 11 p.m. to 7 a.m., there would be an increase of $1.50 and $2 to the hourly wage, respectively. In addition, with the new rate, if the nurse works weekends, there would be an additional $2 increase on top of the shift differential and the hourly wage.

A nurse could conceivably make $13.20 an hour working weekends on the 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. shift.

Al Kelm, MMH vice president of patient-care services, said these increases are necessary to fill the critical nursing positions.

He added that his first two weeks in the newly-appointed position has been to give direct input in this package plan. The program is two-fold — to recruit and retain nurses — and Kelm said more incentives will be added in the future.

Another item which was approved included pursuing methods to recognize clinical employees.

"There needs to be a method to recognize a nurse who does not want to get into management, but is a very proficient clinical nurse," Branson said, adding that a pay increase would be part of the method.

"I've been involved in assisting and developing this kind of [illegible] a clinical track program would be very beneficial," Kelm said.

Branson noted that the wage increase is long overdue but he, along with the other administrative staff, wanted to hear Kelm's ideas on the program before initiating it.

The cost of the wage compensation amounts to $437,340 for the remainder of the fiscal year.

However, MMH officials said with the revenue from 44 more beds — 16 beds opening by July and 28 more by October — and revenue from increases in ancillary services which begin in June, this amount should decrease to $187,748.

Three restaurant employees killed in 'brutal' killings

MOUNT PLEASANT, Texas (AP) — Bandits shot, beat and stabbed three pizza restaurant employees to death during what police are calling the most brutal murders in the history of this small northeast Texas city.

Police chief B.C. Sustaire said Tuesday police are searching for two men and a woman believed to be driving a 1968 Chevrolet.

"We've had some pretty bad things happen in Mount Pleasant, but this is the most brutal," Sustaire said Tuesday.

"The way it looks now, there was a pistol, a butcher knife and a claw-hammer all used" on the victims, said Texas Department of Public Safety trooper Jim Tatman. "It was a pretty bad scene."

The victims were identified as cook Howard Leroy McClaflin, 25, waitress Shirley Obier Thompson, 24, and assistant manager George Dwaiane Landrum, 42.

Medical examiners in Dallas, 120 miles to the southwest, performed autopsies on the bodies Tuesday.

Landrum was shot once in the chest and beaten in the face with a blunt instrument, said a spokesman for the Dallas County medical examiner's office.

The spokesman said McClaflin was shot once in the head and Mrs. Thompson, who had been working at the Pizza Hut for one week, was shot once in the chest, stabbed and beaten.

The officials said the restaurant closed at 11 p.m. Monday and the deaths occurred about 2 a.m. Tuesday. There were no signs of forced entry, they said.

Tatman said an undetermined amount of money was taken from the restaurant's cash register.

Titus County Attorney Charles Cobb said the bodies were found in a storage area at the rear of the restaurant. One body was found in a walk-in cooler, but Cobb declined to say which body.

The trooper said Mrs. Thompson's husband went to the restaurant after she did not return home from work and "found the doors open and cars still in the parking lot."

Jury advises 99 years for admitted killer

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Jurors have recommended a 99-year prison sentence for an admitted homosexual prostitute convicted of murder in the slaying of an El Paso man.

The jury deliberated five hours before convicting Steven Blaine Jones, 24, of Los Angeles, for the Aug. 8, 1980, murder of Frank Lee White, 34. Jurors deliberated three hours Tuesday before recommending the sentence.

Jones testified earlier he hit White on the head several times with a ratchet wrench and choked him with a rope after White insisted on being the dominant party in a homosexual encounter.

White's blood-spattered body was found in an El Paso motel room.

Jones had been charged with capital murder in the case because prosecutors maintained robbery was the motive for the slaying. But the jury found him guilty on the lesser charge of murder.

If Jones had been convicted of capital murder, the sentence would have been death or life in prison without parole.

GM says 'recall' really free customer assistance

DETROIT (AP) — Owners of 1.35 million front-wheel drive cars will be given free help if their autos start leaking transmission fluid, General Motors Corp. says.

GM said Tuesday the cars involved are all 1980 and some 1981 Chevrolet Citation, Pontiac Phoenix, Oldsmobile Omega and Buick Skylark models.

If automatic transmissions run low on fluid, they will begin to shift from gear to gear, GM said. And drivers of cars with manual transmissions low on fluid will notice gear noise, the automaker said.

Robert Ross, public information specialist at the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration in Washington, said the announcement was a recall but GM said the action amounts to "a free fix and a customer satisfaction program — not a recall."

Attorney general invests in 'questionable' tax shelter

By BOB WOODWARD
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Attorney General William French Smith personally invested $16,500 in an oil and gas tax shelter late last year that gave him about $66,000 in tax deductions — at least twice the amount permitted by a current Internal Revenue Service ruling.

Two hundred pages of confidential documents obtained by The Washington Post show that Smith and 34 partners have invested in what some experts described as one of the most aggressive and perhaps questionable tax shelters available to wealthy Americans.

Smith and his partners relied on a tax opinion from a Los Angeles law firm that says they hope to beat an IRS challenge in court, although the opinion warns that "there are risks and uncertainties on a number of tax issues."

The partnership, called Yale-Quay Energy Partners, filed a certificate listing the investors at the recorder's office in Los Angeles County at 4 p.m. on Dec. 31 last year — just eight hours before the end of the tax year.

The partnership offered 200 investment units for sale, and a partner had to buy at least six units at $5,500 each — half payable in 1981 and the other half by March 31, 1982.

According to the confidential investment summary, "Investors are expected to receive a tax write-off in the ratio of $4 for each $1 paid in 1981. In 1982, investors are expected to receive an additional write-off in the ratio of $2 for each $1 paid in 1982."

TO MAKE the investment, Smith and the other investors had to sign a statement that they were aware of the risks involved and have net worths, not counting their homes and personal belongings, of more than $200,000.

Using an accounting method often questioned by the IRS, Yale-Quay builds the base for the large deductions on future liabilities. The company had no gas or oil drilling last year. Operations were under way by February on 198 acres of land in Payne County, Okla., near the small town of Yale, but the first drilling effort failed to produce any oil.

Richard J. Sideman, a San Francisco attorney hired by Yale-Quay to defend an anticipated challenge by the IRS, said Tuesday that the partnership has a tax and legal concept that is "most adventurous...I don't think we've ever seen one with a write-off of this magnitude."

Sideman said he has since terminated his representation with Yale-Quay for reasons he declined to discuss. Before he left, he was given $5,000 in what an Oct. 20, 1981, agreement with his law firm called a "Tax Defense Fund."

Thomas P. DeCair, a spokesman for Smith, Tuesday confirmed that Smith had personally made the investment. "He knows very little about it," DeCair said. "He did it himself despite his blind trust that holds his assets."

The trustee who hold Smith's considerable assets both prepares and signs Smith's tax returns, according to a special arrangement with the IRS, so Smith does not know precisely what was filed with the IRS, DeCair said.

As required under terms of the agreement, Smith paid an additional $16,500 into Yale-Quay on March 30 of this year. This entitles him to receive a tax deduction for his 1982 taxes of about $33,000. As a limited partner, he is only an investor and has no role in managing Yale-Quay.

SMITH IS ALSO formally committed to pay other sums to those drilling the wells, but the partnership agreement indicates that these payments could be made from actual oil and gas drilling profits.

"The attorney general considers this a legitimate investment," DeCair said. "He relied on his former law partner Francis Wheat who went over its legality."

Wheat, a partner at Smith's former firm of Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher of Los Angeles, also invested the same amount in Yale-Quay.

Wheat, a former Securities and Exchange commissioner, Tuesday confirmed his role and said he felt everything was perfectly proper, although, he added, "The investment did provide a rather larger tax deduction than I expected."

A formal IRS ruling of 1980 challenges the basic concept and theory of the deductions in Yale-Quay, according to a 41-page tax opinion issued to Yale-Quay by the Los Angeles law firm of Meserve, Mumper and Hughes. Citing a later federal Court of Appeals decision in California, the law firm says, "We have expressed the opinion based on this case and other judicial authority that this ruling is incorrect."

"If the service (IRS) were to successfully take the position set forth in Revenue Ruling (80-70) in this case, the partnership would not be permitted" the large deduction from 1981 federal taxes.

The tax opinion, dated Sept. 15, 1981, warns that "there are risks and uncertainties of a number of tax issues," including another problem on the method of accounting that the tax opinion says could cause the IRS to disallow other deductions.

AS ATTORNEY general, Smith represents the IRS in court and is supposed to defend the federal government in challenges to IRS actions and rulings, such as the Revenue Ruling issued in 1980.

As a Los Angeles lawyer, Smith managed Reagan's financial affairs and once was the manager and trustee of Reagan's personal finances.

Smith is reliably reported to be a millionaire and to have extensive investments which would bring him income in his blind trust that could be sheltered by the Yale-Quay deductions. That means investment income from stocks and other sources would be offset by the Yale-Quay deductions of $66,000. Or, this deduction could be used to make his annual $69,630 salary as attorney general totally tax-free.

Several tax experts consulted Tuesday said that as a general rule such oil and gas partnerships can now only be expected to provide deductions of twice the initial investment, and most partnerships adhere to the 1980 IRS ruling.

IRS spokesman Leon Levine Tuesday said the IRS stands behind the 1980 ruling, which he said prevents a taxpayer from improperly allocating deductions.

IRS Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. has made it a high priority to crack down on abusive tax shelters and has given a series of speeches around the country criticizing them.

Yale-Quay was set up Oct. 12, 1981, with only $50 in assets by Donovan M. Essex, a former Montgomery Ward salesman and store manager in California. The partnership raised $1.1 million from wealthy individuals, including Smith, who purchased 3 per cent of the investment shares.

ALAN L. BROWN, a petroleum geologist who did the study showing that Yale-Quay could expect to find oil on the Oklahoma land, said Tuesday that one well was drilled earlier this year but "it hasn't done well. That location we drilled wasn't any good."

According to Bonnie Lawrence, an attorney for Yale-Quay, "We hit a lot of salt water." But she said that Yale-Quay plans to go ahead with more drilling and indications are that oil will be found.

Brown's geological survey, which was included in the Yale-Quay investment prospectus, states that about 68,500 barrels of oil might be recoverable from each of four wells drilled on the partnership property.

Brown says in his report, however: "By the nature of oil and gas business, no guarantees can be made. In fact, there is no certainty that any wells drilled on the prospect will be productive, or if productive will produce oil and gas in quantities sufficient to return even the cost of drilling and completion."

In a recent report to investors, Essex, the president of Yale-Quay, wrote:

"May the Snow of Oklahoma Be Blackened With the Future Production of Y-Q."

Freedom Newspapers Inc. exemplifies free-enterprise success

By MICHAEL A. HILTZIK
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SANTA ANA, Calif. — When a tiny man in an outsized, broad-brimmed hat drove his vast Cadillac into Brownsville, Texas, one day 25 years ago, Jim Dean could be forgiven his comic thoughts.

"He looked like a thumbtack," recalled Dean, who worked for the man's company until the late 1970s.

But the broad brim cast its shade over a business powerhouse. Its owner was R.C. Hoiles, who, from modest roots in Ohio, built a newspaper chain that is today the nation's 15th largest. Its publications are the voice — generally the lone newspaper voice — of 31 communities in 12 states.

The chain, Freedom Newspapers Inc., also espouses a uniquely contrary strain of political thought: Libertarianism, an individualist philosophy that rigidly opposes taxation, labor unions, public works and government services (especially public schools and libraries). This brand of libertarianism is distinct from the more moderate views of the Libertarian Party, which ran a candidate for president in 1980.

Hoiles erected a newspaper empire that, by one measure, is valued at as much as $640 million, and that has remained firmly in family hands since its creation more than 40 years ago.

But there are indications now that Hoiles's death in 1970 at the age of 91 — he left the company to the families of his daughter and two sons — is finally having its effect on the family business, bringing an inevitable mood of change to a company that once billed its flagship, the Register of Santa Ana, as "California's Most Consistent Newspaper."

ON APRIL 14, Harry Hoiles, R.C.'s 66-year-old surviving son, asked an Orange County Superior Court judge to dissolve Freedom Newspapers Inc. and apportion its newspapers evenly among the three family branches, thus giving Harry Hoiles and his family full control at a part of the business. The suit came just four months after the death of Harry's only brother, Clarence H. Hoiles, who had led the company since their father's death.

Some insiders suggest that the lawsuit reflects the changing of the guard at Freedom Newspapers — specifically the ascendance of the family of Mary Jane Hoiles Hardie, Harry's younger sister, and her husband, Robert C. Hardie, now the company's chairman.

One indication of their rising power, sources say, was the appointment in 1978 of D. Robert Segal as company president. Segal, the company's first top officer from outside the family, is thought to have been Robert Hardie's personal choice for president.

Since Segal's appointment, Freedom Newspapers Inc. has taken a distinctly more aggressive tack toward its business enterprises, contemplating expansions into new broadcast properties and into cable communications, according to Segal.

The company has also made unprecedented capital investments in its flagship, the Register. It spent about $15 million on advanced new presses, computerized the paper's mail room, and installed a $2 million video-display system for its editorial and advertising departments.

At the same time, the Register's editorial outlook — while still true to many of its traditional tenets — has changed its tone, becoming less strident, to use Segal's term.

ALL OF those changes have left Harry Hoiles outmaneuvered and out of step, in the words of one source familiar with the Hardie family. "This lawsuit is his last poker hand."

The company R.C. Hoiles built is a paragon of free-enterprise success. Its newspapers have a combined circulation of about 800,000, including 245,000 for the Register, the chain's largest publication. As a private, closely held company — every share of stock is owned by the descendants of R.C. Hoiles and their families — Freedom Newspapers discloses no current revenue or earnings figures. But documents filed in Orange County probate court show that the company has made Hoiles family members multimillionaires.

Furthermore, the last time that earnings for the Freedom chain were made public, in connection with the probate of R.C. Hoiles's will, they showed that the chain's profits in 1970 amounted to a substantial 16 percent of revenues after taxes. (This compares to a current average of after-tax margin for newspapers of about 8.5 percent.)

According to Harry Hoiles's lawsuit, the company is also "singularly free of debt" — an uncommon distinction in these times of highly leveraged businesses.

Harry Hoiles contends in his lawsuit that his brother's and sister's families have undertaken a systematic program to exclude him from management of the company. He has been dropped from the company's three-member executive committee, the lawsuit states, even though R.C. set it up to represent each of the three branches. The majority stockholders (that is, the families of Clarence and Mary Jane) have also taken steps that Harry Hoiles contends have depressed the value of his stock — offering on two occasions to buy him out at a price he considers to be less than one-third of its fair market value.

On the advice of his attorney, Harry Hoiles refused to be interviewed for this article. Hardie also would not respond to a request for an interview, although Segal did answer questions at his Santa Ana office.

IT IS difficult to understand the Hoiles family fight without first understanding the man whose character, 12 years after his death, still pervades Freedom Newspapers, Inc., the humorless and argumentative Raymond C. Hoiles.

R.C. Hoiles, known to his employees and to acquaintances alike as "the old man," held rigid, unwavering beliefs, according to those who knew him. Some former reporters at the Register remember him as a tiny figure of less than 100 pounds, going through the newsroom distributing Libertarian literature.

To others his influence was more forceful. "He was an apoplectic old man," remembers Velma Dunlap, who, with her husband, published an ill-fated Register rival called the Santa Ana Globe for three years in the 1940s. "He would argue with anybody, getting blue in the face, pounding the table and shaking."

In R.C.'s world, the evils of government were exemplified by public schools and libraries, against which he railed to the end of his life. His newspapers denounced them as socialistic and "incompatible with the American way of life." (The Register, among other Freedom newspapers, does not customarily endorse candidates for office and does not otherwise encourage readers to vote.)

R.C. Hoiles began his empire with the Santa Ana Register in 1935. (As Orange County grew, "Santa Ana" was dropped from the newspaper's nameplate.) From there he gradually added papers in Texas, New Mexico, and other states in what would eventually be called the Sun Belt.

Hoiles appeared to relish taking aggressively unpopular stands. Still, even his intellectual enemies concede that he was rigidly faithful to his principles. "They did, in fact, stay out of (political) things," Richard J. O'Neill, a former Orange County and state Democratic party leader, said of the Register. Politicians who tried to cultivate the newspaper, he says, invariably gave up the enterprise because the newspaper's negative response never varied.

TO THIS day, many of the company's labor policies reflect the principles as well as the tight-fistedness of R.C. Hoiles. Workers at the Register have never been given a company-sponsored retirement plan, in part because R.C. opposed such plans.

"R.C. thought people should make their own plans, that retirement programs would tend to stagnate them," former editor Dean said.

Insiders and outsiders, partisans and opponents, now agree that the Register and Freedom newspapers are changing. "The family isn't content to sit back and let the money roll in any more," one family friend said.

Segal acknowledges a bow to practicality when he discusses what some call the chain's mellowing. He insists the chain's editorial policy has not changed — only its means of expression.

"We're no more a supporter of a tax-supported fire department than we ever were," he said. "We just don't get apoplectic about it anymore."

It takes more to be controversial now than it did in the old man's day, he added. "In the days of legalized abortion and gay rights, and so on, how the schools are financed is a dull subject. In relative terms of shock, we're well down the list."

Massachusetts fire leaves 140 without homes

FALL RIVER, Mass. (AP) — A fire that started while a workman was soldering metal to preserve the landmark Notre Dame de Lourdes Church ravaged the towering structure and 34 nearby buildings and left at least 140 people homeless.

The Red Cross estimated that at least 140 and perhaps as many as 300 people were forced to flee their homes and buildings. The fire caused caused an estimated $13 million in damages.

The 76-year-old stone church was being renovated, and the flames apparently started while a workman was soldering on the rooftop Tuesday afternoon, said Fire Chief Louis Shea.

"It looks like an accidental fire," he said, adding that investigators still are looking into the matter.

More than 100 National Guardsmen patrolled a nine-block area of the neighborhood where electricity was shut off. They were expected to remain there for the next day or two. No looting was reported.

Flames still flickered along the turrets at the top of the building and water gushed down the sides of the streets late Tuesday night. The scaffolding that had been used in the rehabilitation hung like a huge twisted cobweb over the front door of the church.

The fire spread quickly to a block of three-story apartment buildings in the congested neighborhood near the church, virtually destroying it.

"The wind picked up from the north and there was a tremendous amount of heat from the church itself," Shea said. He put damages to the church at $10 million and to surrounding buildings at $3 million.

No one was injured seriously in the general-alarm blaze reported about 2:30 p.m. At its peak, 450 firefighters were at the scene.

Flames competely engulfed the church, leaving the shell standing but toppling the 235-foot copper-sheathed twin steeples that have dominated the skyline since the completion of the edifice in 1906. The heat melted the copper.

Embers carried in the wind ignited nearby buildings, which soon were reduced to rubble.

More than 100 occupied housing units were destroyed or severely damaged, said Donald Walker, volunteer coordinator for New England Red Cross disaster services. The homeless, many of them elderly, all were taken in by friends, relatives, and others who called the mayor's office to help, he said.

He said that more than 20 buildings were destroyed, along with a dozen businesses.

"This was a fire storm just like Lynn," said Massachusetts Fire Marshal Joseph A. O'Keefe. He was referring to a fire which engulfed parts of that North Shore city near Boston several months ago, causing $70 million in damage.

The general-alarm fire which caused an estimated $13 million in damages to downtown Fall River, Mass. rages out of control Tuesday in this photograph. The fire allegedly began in the Notre Dame de Lourdes Church, upper left, destroyed that and at least eight other buildings, and left at least 140 people homeless.

Couple 'imprisoned' by radioactive yard

CLEVELAND (AP) — White stakes stand in Eugene and Joan Skiljan's back yard this spring as they have in past years. But instead of supporting tomato plants, the sticks warn of radioactive "hot spots" — the legacy of a former resident.

A shed filled with toys for four grandchildren is off limits, as is a swing. Fruit from an apple tree, already in bloom, probably won't be eaten this summer.

Since the Skiljans discovered about 200 vials of radium buried in an unused barbecue pit, the couple are "prisoners of our own home," Mrs. Skiljan said. State health officials have advised them to stay out of the yard.

The couple found the buried radium on April 30 while clearing the backyard for a new driveway. Since then, tests have located about a dozen "hot spots" where radiation levels are higher than normal.

"We didn't realize what we actually had when we found this," Mrs. Skiljan said Tuesday at the family's house on Cleveland's east side.

"When you read a vial that says 'U.S. Radium Corp. — Poison,' you know you've got a problem, but you don't know how bad," she said.

"When a man in a white space suit comes out, you know it's serious."

The cost of cleaning up the radium and decontaminating affected areas is estimated at $100,000. The state has agreed to pay the bill.

Robert M. Quillin, a state health department official, has assured the couple the levels of radioactivity are too low to harm them. The Skiljans, however, say other authorities who have visited the site have given conflicting estimates of the danger.

They have been checked by their doctors, who found no evidence of contamination. Mrs. Skiljan, who handled one of the radium vials when they were first discovered, said she felt a tingling in her hand, but now believes that was her imagination.

"We're trying to pretend our life is normal," Mrs. Skiljan said. "But this could be all summer or fall until this is taken care of."

Richard Noble, director of the Cuyahoga County Disaster Services Agency, said there is no record of a similar discovery on private property anywhere in the country.

"Even from the start, this was tough because we didn't know who had jurisdiction," Noble said. "Who ever figured you would have a nuclear plant sitting in somebody's backyard?"

Noble said a man who owned the house 30 years ago apparently dumped the radium in the yard.

The former owner, Walter Issel, has since died. He was president of Dial Services and Manufacturing, which produced faces for clocks. Radium was used in the process, and Issel apparently worked out of the home, Noble said.

The Skiljans bought the house 3½ years ago from another owner.

Early examination of the dozen or so "hot spots" on the Skiljans' property showed it contains low-level alpha radiation. The front yard and house were not affected.

Of the three types of known radiation, alpha is the hardest to remove because it can be absorbed by other materials, Noble said. The cleanup, which will be performed under a tent in the Skiljans' back yard, could involve excavating much of a 22,500-square-foot area in the three-quarter acre backyard.

St. Helens expected to erupt again soon

VANCOUVER, Wash. (AP) — Mount St. Helens is preparing for another eruption, which could come in the next few days, scientists say.

"From the signs thus far, the eruption will probably include dome growth with or without some explosive activity," said Donald Peterson, scientist in charge of the U.S. Geological Survey volcano center.

Peterson said scientists would enter the crater today, weather permitting, to measure the swelling of the volcano's lava dome.

The eruption prediction, issued Tuesday night, was made jointly by the USGS and the University of Washington geophysics center.

"Our best guess would be it would probably resemble the eruption we had on March 19," Peterson said.

That eruption sent ash and steam seven miles into the sky and sent a torrent of water, mud and debris down the nearby Toutle River, forcing dozens of people to evacuate. A smaller plume shot from the peak thg next day.

Peterson said scientists who visited the crater Tuesday felt shallow earthquakes and observed swelling on the lava dome within the crater.

"Seismicity has been increasing gradually for the last two days and the dome has been swelling at rates like those observed within a week of recent eruptions," he said.

Some points on the dome have risen more than two feet in the last six days, and earthquakes "are now distinctly showing an increasing rate," Peterson added.

Earthquakes started shaking Mout St. Helens in March 1980, and the volcano erupted a plume of steam and ash on March 27 of that year. On May 18, 1980, the mountain exploded with a force estimated at 10 million tons of TNT, devastating 150 square miles northwest of the peak and leaving 60 people dead or missing.

Rescue attempt may have saved two

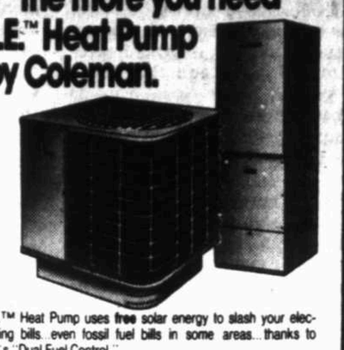

SUPERIOR, Ariz. (AP) — Two men who survived a copper mine cave-in that killed three colleagues had hurried to find rescue equipment and therefore escaped the falling debris, officials say.

One of the survivors of the Monday night accident, Andres L. Arroyos Jr., was back on the job Tuesday, said Pinal County Sheriff's Deputy Jeff Sommers. The other, George Gomez, was at the mining company hospital, where officials would say only that "he's OK."

Frank Harris, Magma Copper Co. spokesman at headquarters in San Manuel, said Joe Granillo, 25, of Queen Creek, was caught in the initial collapse of overhead fill material at the 3,440-foot level of the mine.

George Michael Martinez, 39, of Superior, and Joe Cassaro, 46, of Mesa, were trying to pull Granillo free of a timber and other debris when the rest of the ceiling fell, killing all three, Harris said.

MENTAL HEALTH UPDATE

Reactions to mental treatment vary

By KENNETH H. WOLF, MSSW, SP

QUESTION: I have known or heard of people who have been to counselors or in other kinds of mental health treatment for years, and they don't seem to get any better. Some even do worse than before they started treatment. How is mental treatment supposed to help and how long should it take?

ANSWER: There are several different kinds of mental health problems. Some are more severe than others. Some people respond to treatment relatively quickly and others require long periods of treatment in order to control the symptoms of their problems.

For severe mental disorders such as schizophrenia and other psychoses, there is no presently-known cure. These illnesses can be controlled, however, with continued treatment — usually medication. When treatment is discontinued, the probability that symptoms will recur is greatly increased. This may explain why some people may be in treatment off and on for years and not seem to be cured. The treatment of such severe mental problems can be compared to the treatment of high blood pressure or diabetes. To be effective, treatment must be continued indefinitely and usually on a life-long basis. Fortunately such severe mental problems affect less than 3 percent of the general population.

For milder problems treatment can be more oriented toward a "cure." The term "cure" is misleading, however, because most milder mental problems such as tension, stress, anxiety, mild depression, marital problems and the like, arise out of living problems. No one is immune from the stresses of life, so there is no "cure," as such. Mental health treatment for these milder disorders generally involves counseling, psychotherapy and sometimes short periods of medication. The treatment is designed to help people deal with the stress of living in better ways than they currently use.

People, however, show a great deal of variation in their responses to counseling or psychotherapy. Those who respond best are those who are willing to examine and evaluate themselves. This self-examination often reveals some not-too-pleasant aspects of a person which play a large role in bringing about his or her mental health problems. Those who respond least well to counseling are those who are least willing to critically evaluate themselves and also least willing to work at making appropriate changes in themselves. It is therefore quite possible for a person to be seen by a counselor for long periods of time and not to improve or, perhaps get even worse. Counseling and psychotherapy require much more active participation and cooperation by the client than many other forms of treatment, which can be "done to" the client without his active involvement.

Comments or questions from our readers are invited. Although the Update cannot give personal replies or give specific advice, we will use as many comments and questions as possible in our future columns. Please address them to: Mental Health Update, 3701 N. Big Spring, Midland, Texas 79701.

Freeze activists feel like new 'right'

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. Edward J. Markey predicts that nuclear freeze activists will be the pivotol foot soldiers of the 1982 elections, as such New Right activists as the Moral Majority were in 1980.

"We will have the same ability to 'distort' the outcome of the elections as the Religious Right bell-ringers did two years ago," Markey told a seminar sponsored by the political action committee Independent Action.

Recent polls show a 3-1 support for an immediate nuclear freeze, Markey said, and the coalition now includes both the traditional grass roots anti-nuclear activists and the academics and intellectuals from the arms control movement.

Markey also was skeptical of President Reagan's dramatic proposal Sunday that both the United States and the Soviet Union make deep cuts in their huge nuclear arsenals.

Reagan would require the Soviets to severely trim their bread-and-butter stockpile of land-based missiles while the United States could continue building the MX missile, the Trident II missile, the B-1 bomber and the Cruise missile, Markey said, almost guaranteeing a Soviet rejection, and further fueling the freeze movement.

Not everyone agreed that nuclear freeze is a cutting campaign issue and at least one campaign manager said it already had peaked.

"I think you're kidding yourself," said Jim Benson, manager of a suburban Virginia congressional campaign for a Democrat who opposes the freeze. "This will be a non-issue by November. I haven't seen that much press on it since Ground Zero."

"You couldn't be more wrong," Markey retorted, citing increasing activity by Catholic bishops and mainstream Protestant leaders as proof this is "not some transitory chic issue that will disappear by the time people go down to their summer homes at the Cape."

Benson, who personally supports the freeze, wasn't persuaded by Markey.

"I think he's riding high on an important issue but he's not taking into account the public's attention span and he's underestimating the impact of the president's potential talks with Soviet President Brehznev."

Pollster Peter Hart agreed the freeze is an issue but he distrusted national polls showing overwhelming support for it: "I don't think this is the case. I don't think the right questions are being asked...In polls, you have to give people the full range of options of answers to understand where things really stand. You can't measure it by a 'yes' or 'no.'"

Political consultant Roger Craver said nuclear freeze will be an issue "only if it's framed so that it's a difference of opinion between the candidates."

In many races, Craver added, that just won't happen.

'Marti' causing static

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's plan to beam radio broadcasts into Cuba is causing static in Congress, where some are worried that the Castro government will retaliate by jamming American airwaves.

A House Commerce subcommittee on telecommunications was told Monday that the United States should explore negotiations with Cuban Premier Fidel Castro rather than launch Radio Marti, the proposed radio service.

John B. Summers of the National Association of Broadcasters said Cuban interference with U.S. radio stations could get worse if Radio Marti is approved.

Cuba has plans to expand radio transmissions that could reduce listening areas for more than 200 U.S. stations in 32 states and the District of Columbia, Summers said. New diplomatic initiatives may be needed to head them off, he added.

MEMBERS of the House panel reacted skeptically to a statement by Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders, who predicted that Castro would respond to Radio Marti with his own propaganda broadcasts rather than further jamming of U.S. stations.

"While we cannot say for certain just what Cuba will in fact do, the stage seems set for counter-broadcasting rather than jamming. And, gentlemen, we have no fear of anything Castro might say," Enders said.

"You think the response would be sending in broadcasts about ourselves?" asked Rep. Al Swift, D-Wash. "The odds based on past experience" would suggest the Cubans will retaliate by jamming U.S. broadcasts, he said.

Radio Marti, approved overwhelmingly in March by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, is a government-financed station that would broadcast news of Cuba, along with sports and entertainment, to Cuba.

THE PLAN has aroused deep misgivings among American broadcasters who fear Cuba will build huge transmitters to interfere with U.S. stations.

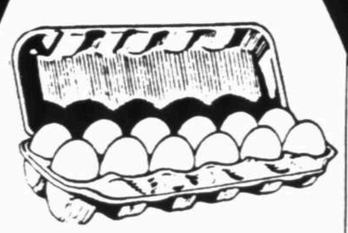

The issue is particularly sensitive in Iowa, because Radio Marti would use the same frequency — 1040 kilohertz — as that used by radio station WHO in Des Moines. By coincidence, President Reagan was a sportscaster for the station in the 1930s.

Rep. Thomas J. Tauke, R-Iowa, said WHO broadcasts of "information that is essential for farmers" might be jammed by the Cubans in retaliation for Radio Marti. The administration has proposed the new station without weighing potentially disastrous consequences for WHO, Tauke said.

Robert G. Engelhardt, vice president of Palmer Communications Inc., which operates WHO, said the government will be wasting the $17.7 million it plans to spend in two years on Radio Marti if it uses the 1040 kHz frequency.

Airlines hope cloudy financial picture clears up

NEW YORK (AP) — Going through $250,000 an hour, $6 million a day, the nation's airlines together lost more than half a billion dollars in the first three months of this year.

As the peak-travel summer season approaches, many carriers are flying on little more than hope.

The most withering loss was that of venerable Pan American World Airways. Pan Am, whose China Clippers blazed a trail across the South Pacific a generation ago, has in recent years sold its headquarters building and a chain of luxury hotels to satisfy its lenders.

IN THE FIRST THREE months of this year, Pan Am showed a net loss of $127.3 million. It lost $360 million in 1981.

Trans World Airways lost $110 million on airline operations in the first quarter. In 1981, "for the third year in a row, we didn't make a dime, we lost money," TWA President C. E. Meyer Jr. told employees.

"In those circumstances, no matter what the economy is doing, no matter what the other airlines are doing, we're in bad trouble," he said. "We're not making it."

The airlines have universally blamed their problems on recession and deregulation. Recession has reduced travel. Deregulation has heightened competition, bringing on deep discount fares the airlines believe they must match even if they can't break even.

The airlines' net losses for the three months ended March 31 compared with the same period a year ago:

—American Airlines, $41.6 million vs. a profit of $3.9 million
—Braniff International, $41.4 million vs. a loss of $24.7 million.
—Delta Air Lines, $18.4 million, vs. a profit of $27.9 million.
—Eastern Airlines, $51.4 million vs.a profit of $4.1 million.
—Northwest Airlines, $18 million vs. a loss of $7.4 million.
—Pan Am, $127.3 million vs. a loss of $121.6 million.
—Republic Airlines, $22.6 million vs. a loss of $15.2 million.
—TWA's holding company, $102.7 million, vs. a loss of $57.5 million.
—UAL Corp., holding company for United Airlines, $129.3 million vs. a loss of $21.3 million.
—Western Airlines, $10.8 million vs. a loss of $1.7 million.

Only USAir, among the major airlines, showed a first quarter net profit: $10.8 million, up from $6.2 million the previous year.

AMONG THEM, FOR example, TWA, United and Pan Am took in $3 billion in the quarter, but watched it immediately flow back out, mainly to their employees and the fuel dealers who account for about 70 percent of airline costs.

How long can the "bloodbath," as Meyer calls it, continue without some major bankruptcies? "With those numbers, not very long," says Charles H. Hanneman, airline industry analyst with Thomsom McKinnon Securities Inc.

He and others agree the airlines are flying on the hope that the recession will recede and they can make it to summer, the No. 1. season for virtually the entire industry.

A pickup in business, minus the fare wars that prevailed last year, could return some in the industry to profitability by the end of the year, analysts and the airlines say.

For others, survival is the more immediate concern.

Braniff, which "from an accounting point of view has been bankrupt for a year," says Hanneman, has been "making do," limping along with two-for-one ticket promotions and trying to get across its new image as a one-class, low-cost domestic carrier.

One of Braniff's most immediate problems is convincing potential customers it will still be in business by the time they want to book vacation flights.

Julius Maldutis, who tracks airlines for Salomon Brothers Inc., says preliminary indications are that summer airline traffic will be better than expected. He sees "significant improvement" in the second quarter and strong earnings gains in the third quarter.

"However, the critical issue will be the economic recovery — and, therefore, traffic growth."

The airlines, tightly regulated by the federal government until the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, long were able to pass fuel and labor costs on to customers, confident that no upstart would undercut them.

THEY NO LONGER HAVE that luxury and were generally already at work trying to control costs a year ago — before the latest recession, the flight controllers strike that disrupted traffic and schedules and the fare wars triggered by new discount airlines.

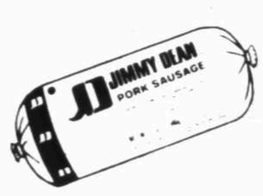

Most of the major airlines have had substantial success in controlling costs, particulary through labor concessions in a heavily unionized industry, and fuel conservation.

As recently as three years ago a gallon of jet fuel averaged 57.8 cents. It gushed to a peak last year of $1.04 a gallon. Estimates have the price receding a penny a gallon this year.

All the airlines agree that the discount fares they were forced to match were one of their worst problems and one they hope they can put behind them this year. In 1981, seven out of 10 tickets sold were at discount levels.

The result was that even Delta, regarded as the industry's blue chip and a model for surviving the competitive pressure of deregulation, wasn't immune to the losses.

Jojoba may be savior

Hearst Feature Service

SAN ANTONIO — The little-known jojoba plant could become a bonanza cash crop and the salvation of the world's sperm whales.

Dr. Don McLain, an ethnobotanist and jojoba researcher at Incarnate Word College here, says the oil from jojoba (pronounced ho-ho-ba) seeds is similar to the oil obtained from sperm whales. And that would mean hunters would not have to decimate whale herds in order to gain oil.

McLain said there are possibly as many as 150 uses for jojoba oil. The most common application for the substance, which resembles liquid wax, is in shampoo. Jojoba oil dissolves sebum, the greasy substance in human scalps, and is also an ingredient in facial shampoos, McLain said.

The heat resistant qualities of jojoba oil make it ideal for high performance engines. Even though it is an expensive oil change — approximately $100 per gallon — some race car drivers use jojoba oil in the engines of their souped-up automobiles.

McLain's laboratory challenge is to develop a formula for determining the sex of jojoba plants before they flower. Growing in the wild, male jojoba plants, which do not produce the valuable oil-laden seeds, outnumber female plants three to one.

Because of tremendous variations among the plants, McLain said he also must isolate a genetic variance that is more resistant to cold temperatures and consistently produces large, plump seeds. Once he has accomplished these goals, McLain will begin cloning hardy jojoba plants that could stock plantations. "The number of plants possible from a single stem is astronomical," McLain said.

Jojoba plantations could be a boon to areas where little else grows, the researcher said. The future scarcity of lubricants, too, should make jojoba plantations a profitable enterprise. There presently are six jojoba plantations in Texas, but the fledgling industry has yet to turn a profit.

U.S. residents want to fight

NEW YORK (AP) — Hundreds of U.S. residents have contacted the British and Argentine consulates to volunteer to fight for the Falkland Islands, but so far none has been accepted, consulate officials say.

Argentine Deputy Consul Ramon Granda said about 220 people, mostly expatriate Argentines or former residents of Cuba or Puerto Rico, have volunteered to fight the British. He called the number "encouraging," but said only Argentine citizens were being accepted for the fighting.

British consulate spokesman Peter Beckingham said Saturday he "couldn't possibly give a figure" for the number of would-be volunteers to fight against Argentina, but said the number has been "very substantial."

Donovan: Testifying 'felt good'

By PAUL MOSES

NEW YORK (AP) — Secretary of Labor Ray Donovan says it "felt good" to appear before a federal grand jury after enduring months of allegations linking him to illicit union deals.

Donovan testified for more than five hours Tuesday at U.S. District Court in Brooklyn before a grand jury investigating allegations he witnessed a $2,000 labor peace payoff in 1977.

After confirming he had testified, Donovan told reporters, "I did it freely, fully and honestly and let me tell you, it felt good."

Donovan continued his refusal to discuss in public the allegations or probe, which began last Dec. 29 with the appointment of attorney Leon Silverman as special prosecutor.

FBI informants have asserted that his business, Schiavone Construction Co. of Secaucus, N.J., had ties to New Jersey organized crime figures.

The grand jury is investigating allegations that Donovan was present in 1977 when another Schiavone executive paid $2,000 to Louis Sanzo, president of Blaster's Union Local 29. The assertion was made by the local's former secretary-treasurer, Mario Montuoro.

The accusation was not disclosed publicly until after the Senate confirmed Donovan's appointment last year.

The FBI also has told the Senate Labor Committee that an informant said Donovan once knew reputed gangster Salvatore "Bugs" Briguglio, a New Jersey Teamsters Union business agent slain in March 1978.

The FBI reported receiving allegations from an informant that the Schiavone company provided $50,000 in building supplies for the Clifton, N.J., home of Anthony "Tony Pro" Provenzano, a former Teamsters Union leader now serving a 20-year federal prison term for labor racketeering.

According to the FBI, Briguglio was a close criminal associate of Provenzano at Local 560 in Union City, N.J.

Provenzano briefly testified in an earlier grand jury session and did not know Donovan, said his attorney, Gerald Shargel.

The attorney described the allegations concerning Provenzano's home as "patently false."

Donovan met with Silverman for five hours Monday and requested to appear before the grand jury, said Labor Department spokesman Vernon Louviere. The spokesman said he did not know whether Donovan would face the panel a second time.

Silverman was empowered to investigate any criminal allegations made against Donovan, including perjury.

The labor secretary had testified under oath at his Senate confirmation hearings in January 1981 that Schiavone company and its executives never paid for labor peace or colluded with organized crime figures.

Donovan, who was executive vice president of the Schiavone company, was nominated as labor secretary after managing President Reagan's 1980 New Jersey election campaign.

Hinckley's siblings testify about emotional condition

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — John W. Hinckley Jr.'s brother and sister say he was so depressed a month before he shot President Reagan that they urged their father to send him to a mental hospital.

But Scott Hinckley testified Tuesday that their father, John W. Hinckley Sr., felt the "emotional trauma that may be associated with putting him in an institution may do more harm than good."

Scott Hinckley and Diane Hinckley Sims, the older brother and sister of the 26-year-old man accused of shooting Reagan and three other men March 30, 1981, both told a federal jury that they recommended to their father in February 1981 that their brother be sent to an institution.

"John was so extremely depressed and so withdrawn," said Mrs. Sims, 29, who was to resume her testimony today.

"It was just a constant low," she continued. "He could not seem to cope with what was going on around him. We felt a psychiatrist or psychologist at an institution could help him overcome the problems he was having."

The defendant's father was to be called to the witness stand today.

John Hinckley Jr., who could face life imprisonment if convicted, admits the shootings, but has pleaded innocent by reason of insanity.

Hinckley's father founded the Vanderbilt Energy Corp. and built the oil and gas exploration firm into a multimillion dollar business. He groomed Scott, now 31, to follow in his footsteps and the oldest son is now the firm's president.

Scott testified that religion has always been important to his father, a member of the Church of the Hills Presbyterian congregation in the wealthy Denver suburb of Evergreen, Colo.

"The family went to church and religious school on a regular basis," Scott testified. "John went to Sunday school."

Politically, he said, "We're basically a conservative family. We supported Ronald Reagan for president, and support his administration."

Mrs. Sims, her blonde hair falling over her shoulders, said the only person who could break through John's moodiness was her 4-year-old son, Christopher.

"The only times I saw him (John) laugh were the times he was with my son, she said.

But there were light moments in the letters and postcards John sent her, as well as expressions of gloom, she said.

"This apartment I am enduring now is the size of a prison cell, but its got air conditioning, kitchen appliances and all (utility) bills are paid," John wrote from Lubbock, Texas on May 7, 1980, in a letter introduced into evidence.

The next month he wrote, "I got your letter a few days ago with the picture of booger nose," a reference to Hinckley's nephew.

And two months before his shooting spree in Washington, Hinckley wrote his sister a note in a Peanuts birthday card: "Give Chris a hug and kiss for me. Give Steve (his brother-in-law) a handshake."

But Hinckley also wrote his sister of his disappointment with Yale University, where, he told his family, he enrolled briefly in a writing course in 1980.

Hinckley's real purpose in traveling to Yale, the defense contends, was to attempt to contact actress Jodie Foster, a Yale student who rejected the defendant's efforts to see her.

A week later, Hinckley sent another postcard from Washington. Dated Sept. 28, 1980, it said: "I'm staying a couple of blocks from Carter's fortress ... Classes at Yale should begin soon. Yale is such a disappointment.

"The entire Northeast can really be depressing. It's hard to explain. These past two weeks have been strange times. I keep getting hit over the head by reality. It doesn't feel very good."

Los Angeles police chief's remark draws critcism

By DAVID JOHNSTON and EDWARD J. BOYER
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Los Angeles Police Chief Daryl F. Gates said Tuesday he is sorry if he offended anyone with his remark about blacks and chokeholds. But his comment continued to draw criticism, including some from the Urban League and the highest-ranking black in the department.

In an interview published in the Los Angeles Times Saturday, Gates said he had "a hunch" about why so many blacks die from the effects of the controversial carotid chokehold, which cuts off blood to the brain.

"We may be finding," Gates said in the tape-recorded interview, "that in some blacks when it (the carotid hold) is applied, the veins or arteries do not open like they do in normal people."

The remark prompted demands for his resignation or firing by three City Council members and a score of civil rights, civil liberties and black religious leaders. Mayor Tom Bradley, calling the remark "insulting," ordered an unprecedented disciplinary investigation into Gates' remarks over the last four years about Jews, Latinos and blacks.

Gates told an impromtu press conference at a downtown hotel Tuesday:

"If anyone has been offended, I'm sorry for that. I did not intend to offend anyone by this. It's just the opposite."

Gates then gave a luncheon speech and had a team of Police Academy instructors demonstrate the carotid hold and a second chokehold, which he banned last week, to about 50 directors of the Central City Association. Reporters were barred from the speech.

After the speech, Gates was asked why he qualified his apology with the word "if" and whether that indicated he doubted his remark offended many people.

"Obviously I have," Gates replied, "and if I have I'm sorry for that. I certainly did not intend to. That's just a way of saying it, isn't it? How else would you phrase it?"

A reporter suggested he could drop the word "if" and "just apologize."

"I'm concerned with people being offended," Gates added, "and I'm very sorry for that and I think that, in effect, says what is in my heart more than anything I could say.

"There is, again, no effort on my part to offend anyone to begin with, to set out to be injudicious."

Gates' remarks came after John Mack, president of the Los Angeles branch of the Urban League, called for Gates' suspension for remarks that Mack said were "racist, archaic and ignorant."

Deputy Police Chief Jesse Brewer, who was appointed by Gates to head the Police Department's South Bureau and who was the first black ever elevated to deputy chief, was sharply critical of the Gates' remarks.

"The thing that really incenses us," Brewer said in an interview before Gates made his apology, "is that after he made an inappropriate comment regarding Jews, after he made an inappropriate comment regarding Latino officers, he came out with an apology. He hasn't done that in this case."

The five-member Police Commission is scheduled today to take up Bradley's written request for a disciplinary investigation into Gates' remarks about Jews, Latinos and blacks.

Gay rights amendment rejected

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Voters have rejected by a 4-1 margin a "gay rights amendment" to extend local anti-discrimination laws to homosexuals in the first referendum of its kind in the nation.

The measure, which was defeated Tuesday by 37,249 to 10,419 votes, had sought to add "sexual orientation" to the list of classifications, such as race, creed and gender, protected by local ordinance from discrimination in employment, housing and public accommodations.

Dow Jones & Co. sues federal regulator

WASHINGTON (AP) — Dow Jones & Co., publisher of the Wall Street Journal and compiler of the Dow-Jones stock averages, is accusing a federal regulator of a conflict of interest.

In a suit filed in U.S. District Court in Washington, Dow Jones said the chairman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Philip Johnson, represented the Chicago Board of Trade as a lawyer before joing the commission, and thus should not have taken part in commission consideration of the board's proposal to trade a stock index future based on the Dow-Jones averages.

A commission spokesman said Johnson had not taken part in any of the commission's actions on the matter, but the Dow Jones suit said Johnson did not take himself out of the case "until the very last moment," had helped draft the board's original plan for trading in index futures a year ago and had been in contact with board officials as recently as February about it.

A hearing on Dow Jones' request for an order banning a commission vote on the board's proposal was scheduled for Wednesday.

Science easy as 'Greezed Lightnin'

HOUSTON (AP) — Passers-by probably thought the laughter and screams coming from the Astroworld amusement park were just a bunch of silly youngsters going wild on the rides.

Regardless of what they sounded like, the people on the rides were actually students serving the interests of science.

Schoolteachers determined to prove science can be fun turned 570 out-of-town teen-agers loose in the park Monday night and told them to ride the rides to study principles of physics and biology.

Experiments were performed to study such things as G-forces, velocity vectors, momentum rolls, and the effects the various rides have on bodily functions such as coordination, pulse rate, skin moisture and blood pressure.

"The data we're gathering here are fun for many people, but for us they are very important," Professor Howard L. Jones said, raising his voice to be heard above the screaming science students nearby.

"The kids can deal with science in a more touchable way," he said.

The students were in Houston to attend the International Science and Engineering Fair. They represented the 50 states and seven foreign nations, and each was a local science project winner.

As they waited in line to board the "Texas Cyclone" roller coaster, they discussed it in terms of gravity, centrifugal force and acceleration. But once the three-car train was falling down the first hill, a 94-foot incline of 53 degrees, all scientific discussion stopped.

"We want to get them to look at science in their everyday lives," said Jones, a University of Houston education professor who is director of the National Science Foundation-funded project.

For the first time Monday night, biological data were collected on the students before and after they rode various rides.

It will take a month for the data to be evaluated, but Jim Collins, a science teacher from nearby Pasadena, Texas, said preliminary results were predictable — "we're finding increased pulse rates, higher blood pressure and sweatier palms after the rides."

He said the most dramatic results were shown after students rode a shuttle loop known as "Greezed Lightnin," which exerts 4.8 times the force of gravity on its riders — nearly two Gs more than that experienced by the space shuttle astronauts on liftoff.

Bell: Education's treatment fair

WASHINGTON (AP) — Education Secretary T.H. Bell, who has come under attack from educators and conservatives, contends the Reagan administration is treating the field of education "fairly."

Bell also said in an interview Tuesday that his job has "a lot of misery...but there's a lot of satisfaction, too."

Since assuming the post, Bell has been criticized by educators for advocating budget cuts. Conservatives also are livid over the department's continued existence.

A life-long educator and former Utah schools chief, the 60-year-old Bell said conservatives view his department as "the symbol" of intrusive federal government.

Bell has convinced Reagan to back his plan to streamline the department and downgrade it to a non-Cabinet Foundation for Education Assistance. But he has been forced to delay submitting the reorganization bill to Congress because of a dearth of supporters.

"Given the fact that I came here and took a job as head of a department that this administration didn't want and made a commitment to abolish, I have felt that I have been treated with respect," said Bell. "I appreciate how thoughtful and understanding the president is of my job."

Bell has denied repeatedly he plans to resign his post soon. Rumors that he might quit began circulating through the capital in January as the president put the finishing touches on his bid to cut Bell's education budget from $13 billion to slightly under $10 billion in fiscal 1983.

At congressional hearings, Bell often is praised for his personal credentials. But the Reagan administration's education policies, including attempts to cut aid to poor and handicapped children by a third, have been lambasted frequently.

"Many people erroneously feel that deep down inside I don't think that we'd ought to be making these budget reductions," Bell said.

Given the state of the economy, said Bell, "We have an obligation to sacrifice...I think that education has been fairly dealt with. I don't think we've been favored by any means, but I think we've been fairly dealt with by the administration."

Last week, Bell accused the media and "almost hysterical" critics of misleading students about the impact of Reagan's proposed curbs on Guaranteed Student Loans and $1.5 billion cut in Pell Grants and other campus-based aid to college students. Bell said too much aid could deprive students "of the privilege of earning their own way."

Bell would like to see states gradually take on the responsibility for subsidizing loans for college students.

"Everything we do here ought to be done under a capacity-building strategy where we try to enhance the capacity of the states and the local school boards and the private institutions to do what's really their responsibility," he said.

Drug manufacturer upset with DES ruling

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Eli Lilly and Co. says it is "appalled" at a ruling by New York's highest court that the pharmaceutical company must pay a half-million dollars in damages to a woman whose mother took the drug DES during pregnancy.

In a unanimous ruling Tuesday, the Court of Appeals decided the company must pay $500,000 to a Minnesota woman, Joyce Bichler, even though it was not determined that Lilly manufactured the drug.

The court upheld a 1979 decision by a state Supreme Court jury that Ms. Bichler should receive compensation for cancer which developed in 1971, when she was 17. That jury had decided that Lilly and other major DES manufacturers had not adequately tested the drug before putting it on the market.

"The pharmaceutical industry can hardly be expected to predict unforeseen results 30 years in advance of the rest of medical science," said Jean Palmer, a spokeswoman for the Indianapolis-based company.

"We continue to believe that DES saved the lives of thousands of children who otherwise might not have been born," she said. "DES was tested by leading experts at Harvard, Yale and the Mayo Clinic in the 1940s and 1950s and found safe and effective."

There was no immediate word whether the company would appeal.

DES, or diethylstilbestrol, was used in the late 1940s and 1950s to prevent miscarriages and other pregnancy problems. Since the early 1960s, it has been linked to cancer in daughters of women who took the drug. Its use was discontinued in the 1970s.

Ms. Bichler's lawyer, Alfred Julien, said Tuesday's decision represents the first time that an award for DES-related health problems has been upheld throughout an appeals process.

He said the case also sets a precedent for people harmed by drugs who "cannot establish who manufactured them."

The appeals court said Ms. Bichler's cervical and vaginal cancer had left her unable to bear children and "enjoy normal sexual relations."

Ms. Bichler, now married and living in St. Louis Park, Minn., has published a book on her struggles with cancer and the courts, titled "DES Daughter."

Group repurchases land from Michelin

Officials of the Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc., today announced the repurchase of a 232-acre industrial site in Midland County from Michelin Tire Corporation. Michelin had purchased the property from the Foundation in June 1979 as the site for a proposed 500,000 square foot material blending plant.

Michelin has elected to indefintely postpone construction of plants in Temple, Lubbock and Midland, citing the national economic situation and static demand for passenger car and truck tires, according to a spokesman with the Foundation.

Officials of the Foundation expressed disappointment that Michelin is unable to move forward with the Midland project, saying that at the same time the Foundation understands the economic realities that support the company's decision.

Foundation representatives said they feel the repurchase of the property by the Foundation will ensure the availability of this prime industrial tract in the future for Michelin or any other major industrial users who may be attracted to the area.

The site purchased by the Foundation is located just west of Loop 250 between Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

The Foundation and the Chamber of Commerce plan to maintain contact with Michelin in the event the project planned for Midland might be rescheduled, emphasizing the community's continuing interest in having Michelin locate here.

The Industrial Foundation of Midland, Inc. is a non-profit corporation which operates as an arm of the Midland Chamber of Commerce. Since 1968, the Foundation has developed and operated the Midland Industrial Park, I-20 Terminal Park and other industrial sites as a part of the community's over-all diversification program.

Midland-Odessa area bridge cited for repair, replacement

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — A bridge in the Midland-Odessa area needs to be repaired or replaced, according to a recent study of bridge deficiencies in Texas.

The bridge identified in the report is located on Route 1053 over the Pecos River in Crane County.

The Road Information Program (TRIP) Tuesday released its study showing that some 17,276 bridges of more than 20 feet in length are deficient by state and federal engineering standards.

The study, requested by the Texas Good Roads and Transportation Association, indicates that 908 state-maintained bridges and 6,940 locally maintained bridges are inadequate to handle the vehicle weights authorized on the roads leading to them. Another 4,754 state bridges and 4,674 local bridges are "functionally obsolete," with narrow clearances or sharp roadway approach angles or with too few lanes for existing traffic needs.

TRIP has recommended a 15-year, $184.5 million-per-year program to replace or rehabilitate those bridges. The State Department of Highways and Public Transportation has spent an average of only $40.6 million annually for bridge repairs since 1978.

Kiss was too long

HOUSTON (AP) — Painted signs on their car proclaiming they were "just married" did not stop an angry motorist from stabbing a bridegroom who kissed his bride at an intersection and blocked traffic, police said.

Darren Mayeaux, 19, was treated at Rosewood General Hospital for stab wounds in his left side and released. Police said they have no suspects.

Mayeaux said after he drove away from the intersection, the angry motorist behind him swerved in front and stopped.

"He got out of the car, so I jumped out of the car," Mayeaux said. "We went over to the curb, where he knifed me in the gut."

Boardings set record in April

Boardings at Midland Regional Airport for the month of April set another record with 59,399 persons reported.

This is a 29.6 percent increase over the figure of 45,803 recorded in April 1981, according to Col. Wilson Banks, director of aviation for the city.

For the year to date, he said, boardings are up 30.7 percent above the figure at this time last year.

Midland County Commissioners pass ordinance governing housing, streets

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

In overseeing the development of rural Midland County, the Midland County Commissioners' Court has adopted a five-article ordinance to govern housing subdivisions, to regulate the building of paved streets and roads, and to ensure proper drainage.

The measure, which went into effect Tuesday morning, was unanimously passed by the five-member court.

This ordinance could give the court power to ensure a degree of uniformity to housing developments and to the construction of streets, roads and alleys, but does not give the court any zoning or building code powers similar to those of the city of Midland.

However, the court's enforcement of the ordinance "is limited" and has "no penal provisions," noted County Attorney J. Scott Henderson, who drafted the ordinance.

Henderson allowed the court could impose a $25-a-day fine and a 24-hour jail term each day of a violation. Furthermore, said the county attorney, the court "possibly" could sue the developer for damages should he not properly build a street or road and thereby cause the court to spend taxpayers' money to bring the road or street up to standards. Midland County automatically assumes control of and maintenance of a road, if not formally dedicated, after a road has been used by the public for 10 years.

Copies of the ordinance may be picked up from County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry or from Henderson in the downtown Midland County Courthouse.

To be legal, any developer or any landowner who divides a tract of land into two or more parts for a subdivision must get approval from the court and must file plans of the proposed subdivision with the county. Main roads must have a 100-foot right of way and the cut must be at least 45 feet. Other streets and roads must have at least a 50-foot right of way, though the ordinance says a 60-foot right of way is preferred.

In other business, the commissioners:

—Approved Sheriff Dallas Smith's request to pay 18 deputies overtime for 1982's first quarter and for portions of last year. However, the court downgraded the request from $20,444 to $18,829. At present, the sheriff has slots for 45 deputies but has been running short of manpower.

—Awarded the county's fuel contract to Phil Morrison, the lower bidder. In sealed bids, Morrison agreed to sell the county diesel fuel at 0.917 cents per gallon, 87-octane unleaded gasoline at $1.037 per gallon and 88-octane regular gasoline at 0.987 cents per gallon.

—Referred bids on ceiling repair of Culver Youth Home to consulting engineer Bill Harral.

—Vacated dedicated county roads in the South Irvin Addition Annex at the request of Lester Irvin.

—Unanimously approved the re-appointment of Johnnie Thompson as county auditor, a position she has held since 1980. By law, the county auditor is appointed by district judges.

—Authorized the auditor to advertise for bids for putting in curb, gutter and paved parking lot on county-owned property in a triangular plot bordered by Front and Washington avenues and by Pecos and B streets. The county is proposing to build a 10,040-square-foot building at that site to house the offices of Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield and Elections Administrator Janeice Builta.

Warrant issued for suspect in Neal's bombing death

From Staff and Wire Reports

ODESSA — A warrant has been issued for a suspect in last month's bombing death of Odessa businessman Joe Lee Neal.

Authorities here Tuesday said a warrant was issued by Ector County Justice of the Peace Manuel Valles for John Clifford Skelton, 51, of Odessa, who is believed to be out of state.

Neal, 46, died after his pickup exploded as he attempted to start it across the street from his home in the 3400 block of Brentwood about 7:30 a.m. April 24.

His teen-age daughter escaped the blast because she had returned to the house to get her purse.

Police said the warrant was issued following an intensive investigation by Det. Sgts. Jerry Smith and Rodney Casey, along with agents from the Department of Public Safety Intelligence Unit and the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms.

The investigation concluded that an explosive device had been wired to Neal's pickup. It was also determined that Skelton had made several threats on Neal's life, police said.

Skelton is a former owner of Husky Steam Cleaners, where Neal worked as a salesman in 1979 and 1980.

The blast demolished the 1982 Ford Blazer and scattered debris for a 1,000-foot radius. Neal, who had been area manager of ERCO Petroleum Services of Odessa since February of this year, was dead on arrival at Medical Center Hospital.

Airlines offer discount fares for children

NEW YORK (AP) — Children accustomed to a bus ride to summer camp may find themselves this year on an airplane trip instead, as ailing airlines try to drum up business with discount fares for youngsters.

Pan American World Airways calls its promotion "Free Kids," giving away tickets to children accompanied by adults on some routes to vacation spots.

"Pint-size fares" are Eastern Airlines' offering. Braniff International calls it a "School's Out" sale.

And some other carriers, rushing Tuesday to match the competition, didn't even bother to come up with catchy jingles or slogans.

The summer fare wars also may lead to confusion for travel agents and passengers trying to figure out how much to pay and when to fly. Keeping up with ever-changing fares is "impossible, it really is," acknowledged Delta Air Lines spokesman William Berry.

The troubled major carriers reported net losses of more than $500 million for the first three months of 1982. Only USAir, among the major airlines, reported a net profit for the quarter, $10.8 million.

The airlines attribute the losses to the recession that has cut into air travel and to decreased revenue from discount fares. But none of them want to lose business by failing to match the competition.

Braniff announced its ticket offer in nationwide newspaper advertisements, offering 50 percent discounts for children between 2 and 11 accompanied by an adult, and a 25 percent discount for young people between 8 and 21, escorted or not, anywhere Braniff flies.

American Airlines immediately said it would match the discounts on routes where it competes with Braniff.

Pan Am said its promotion would apply on its north-south routes between New York, Washington and Florida, and in the Los Angeles-Honolulu market.

On the East Coast runs, Pan Am undercuts Eastern and Delta, which had been promoting a round-trip youth fare of $49, slashed from a standard round-trip youth fare of $262.

Youth fares are usually about three-quarters of an adult fare although infants under 2 held on a parent's lap usually fly for free.

High court upholds prosecutor's removal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice Byron R. White has refused to bar the removal of the Hidalgo County, Texas, prosecutor from office.

White denied Tuesday an emergency request from prosecutor Oscar B. McInnis that would have barred state officials from declaring his office vacant until the full court considers his formal appeal.

McInnis has been suspended from acting as Hidalgo County criminal district attorney. He has been stripped of his license to practice law because of alleged misconduct in trying to regain custody of a young child.

The suspended prosecutor said that if White did not grant his request, his "elective office will be declared vacant and a successor appointed by the governor of Texas" before the high court can act on the appeal.

Last May 21, a Texas appeals court upheld McInnis' October 1979 disbarment.

White technically refused to block the lower court's decision — thereby blocking the disbarment and removal from office — until the full Supreme Court considers McInnis' case.

McInnis was re-elected to the office of criminal district attorney in November 1978. He told the Supreme Court he has not been able to perform his duties as prosecutor since the election.

McInnis was disbarred after a special prosecutor from the state bar of Texas alleged he plotted to have a female friend's former husband killed by luring the man to Reynosa, Mexico, to be shot by a Mexican policeman.

McInnis reportedly met the would-be hit man in the Hildago County jail. The prisoner, previously convicted on drug and murder charges, had been returned to Hildago County on other charges.

Conversations between McInnis and the inmate were secretly taped with a recorder strapped to the prisoner's body, FBI agents said.

French composer instrumental in presenting underwater concerts

By MATT DAMASKER
Copley News Service

A big blue plastic blob — a pop-art jellyfish — floats at the deep end of the pool, trailing streamers laden with mirrored glass and glowing tape. All around it and throughout the pool, about 100 people are bobbing and drifting head down or face up.

The uninformed eye might judge it to be the latest in California cult worship, or perhaps a new form of aquatic therapy for the comatose. But it's a musical event, and the 100 floaters are concertgoers.

From above pool level, all you hear is a vague electronic sound. But stick your head in the pool and the sound clarifies, magically, into a crystalline pattern of sonic squiggles, beeps and drones that ebb and flow with a sealike rhythm.

It's the strange water music of a million "wet fantasies," as its composer, a 30-year-old Frenchman, named Michel Redolfi, likes to suggest. If this catches on, he could be drawing concertgoers to swimming pools as easily as Rod Stewart packs a stadium.

Redolfi plays down such ambitions. But the composer has been making waves of late with these underwater concerts — "Sonic Waters," he calls them.

THIS ONE, FOR example, floated and floundered in appropriate concert attire: a pair of blue Jantzen swim trunks (no pleats), scuba mask and snorkel by U.S. Divers Co. (the Jacques Cousteau models).

It was good: 60 weightless minutes in a womb-warm pool, drifting with a bunch of drifting bodies, not so much listening as feeling the sound, for you don't hear music in water quite the way you hear it in the air.

Redolfi's music is perceived only when your head is in contact with the water; this allows your inner ears a direct pick up of the sound waves as they bypass your eardrums and vibrate your bones, via special underwater speakers that hang from the plastic "jellyfish."

This "bone conduction" process, as Redolfi terms it, makes the crucial difference: It's as if you are the music more so than the music's auditor — it literally inhabits your body. Composed on sophisticated digital computers and performed either live or on prerecorded tape, the music blends purely synthesized sound with the natural voicings of flute and other instruments.

If it seems a stunt or a passing novelty, a chat with Redolfi says otherwise. This affable man from Marseilles has not only pioneered the concept of underwater music, he receives a large grant from the French government to pursue it as a composer-in-residence at the University of California at San Diego's Center for Music Experiment.

"It seems that the more experimental contemporary music becomes, the more boring it becomes for the public, and it shouldn't!" he affirms. "It's usually presented in traditional halls, where you wear uncomfortable clothes and either have the best seats or the worst ones. I wanted a form of music that addressed this physical problem."

THE CONCEPT BEGAN forming in his mind four years ago. "I went swimming one day, and it struck me that there was so much underwater sound around me — the shrimps clicking, and so on — as opposed to the Mediterranean Sea I'd known in Marseilles. The ocean is very dead and polluted there."

At first, Redolfi experimented with bringing this natural sound up from the depths, using special underwater microphones and computer synthesis. This resulted in two major compositions, "Pacific Tubular Waves," and "Immersion," which have been released on record.

Redolfi's next, more radical step was to turn the idea around, bringing artificial sound into the water — and the listening public along with it. Last year he presented his first underwater concert, blending his computer-generated sounds with the natural sounds of the cove. From there, he began to refine the process for more manageable swimming pool presentations. This allows for a multi-media approach — underwater spotlights, bubbles generated by chunks of dry ice, a real theater of the sea.

The reactions from the concertgoers were uniformly postive and seemed stimulated by a sense of revelation.

"Very musical, very reverberant quality," judged Dan Cox, 23, an electrical engineering major at the University of California at San Diego who composes his own electronic music. "I expected a lot less actually, but there was a lot going on — it developed tension and released it, like Beethoven in a way."

"I would like to do it again," said Stephan Greber, 28, a German exchange student majoring in set design at the university's theater department. "To me, it is two things at once: music and sport. The music has a glass-like sound — brilliant, prismatic, spectral."

Video games make money for school

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — If students at West Virginia University write the folks for more money, it may not be for pizza and beer. It could go to feed Pac-Man.

The 70 video games at the Mountainlair student center and Towers dormitories turned a tidy $150,000 profit for the school this term.

"We have been told that WVU has the highest income per machine of any campus location in the nation," said Dan Adams, associate director of the Mountainlair.

Proceeds from the games — which took in more than a million quarters — were split between the vendor that supplied and serviced the video games and the university, Adams said. Profits help pay expenses at the student center.

Two years ago, WVU replaced pingpong and pool tables at a game room with 49 video games. Another 21 were placed in the Towers.

The results were so impressive, he says, that other universities have made inquiries. Last week, Adams talked to officials at Virginia Tech and Texas A&M about WVU's video operations.

Before Pac-Man and his video relatives took the campus by storm, the other games produced only about $10,000 a year, Adams said.

French composer, Michel Redolfi, has developed the concept of underwater concerts. The music is perceived only when your head is in contact with the water; this allows your inner ears a direct pick up of the sound waves as they bypass your eardrums and vibrate your bones, via special underwater speakers that hang from the plastic "jellyfish."

A realistic approach

President Reagan's sweeping arms control proposal logically offers a way in which the two superpowers can honestly get down to the core of making the world a safer place for the human race to live. While agreeing wholeheartedly with the objectives of what the president is proposing, we do have doubts as to whether the Kremlin will embrace the even-handed plan.

What Reagan is proposing is a treaty setting equal ceilings on U.S. and Soviet strategic nuclear forces. Under the first phase of this plan the nations would each have to dismantle more than 2,000 nuclear warheads. The second phase would require the two nations to further reduce their strategic forces and to reach lower and equal levels.

The plan was obviously offered up as a means of stopping the resumption of the nuclear arms race that can only make a nuclear holocaust more likely. It would, for the first time, actually address a reduction of forces instead of talking in terms of limitations.

Surely no one honestly expected the Soviets to embrace the proposal. After all, during the past several years they've expended tremendous energy and money building up their arsenal. Why should they now agree to dismantle that arsenal? There is not one logical reason.

And it's true that even if Reagan's proposal was accepted and implemented, it would only translate into a reduction of the enormity of the destructive force now possessed by the two nations. The power to destroy millions of lives and to damage the ecosystem would still be present at the reduced levels.

So why embrace Reagan's plan? Because it embodies the start of the reversal of a dangerous build-up that can only enhance the likelihood of a nuclear confrontation. Instead of maintaining the arms race, what the president is proposing is to draw a line at a lower level at which, perhaps, the option to use nuclear power would be less tempting.

There is hope, of course, that such a plan would stimulate other nations throughout the world to follow the lead of the two superpowers and to begin thinking in terms of settling their differences at a negotiating table instead of on a battlefield.

We aren't naive enough to hold out hope that the Soviets will be willing to participate in such a plan. But it could at least serve as the catalyst for negotiations aimed at a balance of power at levels that would make a nuclear war less likely and less destructive. Backing down from such a high perch is certainly trecherous, we're all learning. But it is the best hope the world has.

Admiral in the pulpit

Americans always knew Admiral Hyman Rickover is a man of versatility. This retired sailor was enough of a scientist and engineer to build an atomic submarine, and is a scholar conversant in many subjects, including public education.

What we did not know was how well he would do behind a pulpit. We learned the other day when he appeared in the sanctuary of the Church of St. John the Divine in New York to give the first in a series of talks on public affairs. Here are three gems from the admiral's sermon.

On creativity: "The deepest joy in life is to be creative. To find an undeveloped situation, to see the possibilities, to decide upon a course of action and then devote the whole of one's resources to carry it out, even if it means battling against the stream of contemporary opinion."

On excellence: "Life is potentially an empty hole, and there are few more satisfying ways of filling it than by achieving and exercising excellence . . . A lack of excellence implies mediocrity. Mediocrity can destroy us, just as sure as perils far more famous."

On ignorance: "A cause of many of our mistakes and problems is ignorance, an overwhelming national ignorance of the facts about the rest of the world. A nation, or an individual, cannot function unless the truth is available and understood."

Well preached, admiral, and in the genuine blunt and challenging Rickover style. Your life has been a sermon in creativity that has taught lessons in the glories of excellence and the dangers of mediocrity and ignorance.

Another View:

Second look merited

Democratic leaders were quick to label the compromise budget proposal of Sen. Peter Domenici, R-N.M., no compromise at all because it is offered by a Republican and attempts to reduce the deficit partly through suspension of the automatic cost-of-living adjustments for Social Security.

Rather than further polarize the budget controversy, the Democrats should try to use the $779 billion Domenici spending plan as a vehicle for reaching middle ground. That might not suit an election-year strategy of portraying the budget as a "rich vs. poor" issue. But a resolution of the budget imbroglio could help restore flagging public confidence in the economy as well as the budgetary process.

As chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, Sen. Domenici is an appropriate go-between. Though a Republican, he is not exactly a Reagan "insider." Since the budget dispute between the president and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. got a little too personal last week, perhaps an outside viewpoint and time can help heal the wounds.

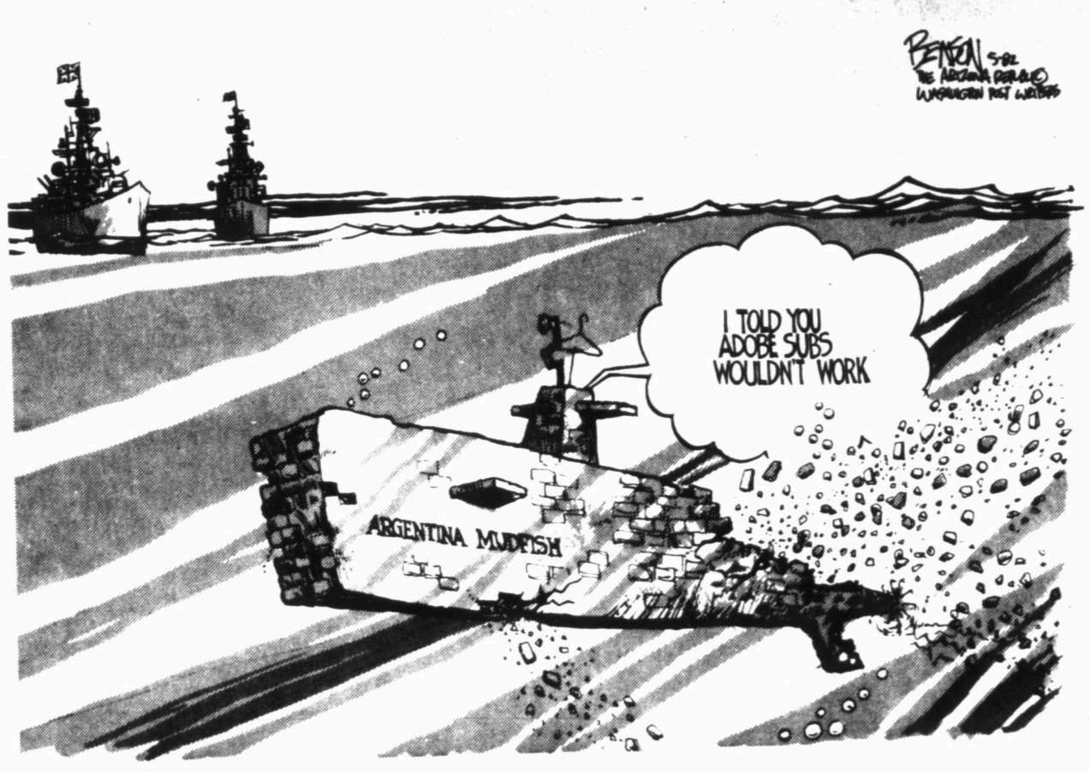

Only the latter has been offered by the House Budget Committee, which delayed work on a counter-proposal until next week. Chairman James Jones, D-Oklahoma, contends that the only guidance he's received from Democratic leaders is "that of an octopus — going off in all directions."

Sen. Domenici's suggestion to defer the 7.4 percent boost in benefits to 36 million retired Americans is something that even President Reagan would prefer to postpone until after the elections, despite a White House endorsement of the proposal. But Sen. Domenici thinks that it will be necessary, along with freezes in federal retirement and veterans' benefits and a suspension in federal pay increases. He would also raise nearly $100 billion in new tax revenue over the next three years and make spending cuts of $225 billion in order to achieve a relatively modest deficit of $19 billion by 1985.

More needs to be done to make the Domenici budget a consensus or compromise budget. Further cuts in defense spending is one area. Though it has not eliminated the third-year tax cut the Democrats would like to repeal, the Senate Budget Committee also has insured flexibility on this sensitive matter by not locking in a tax reduction in its budget.

Yet it hardly "balances the budget on the backs of the poor" as some Democrats charge. The proposal to defer the cost-of-living adjustment comes at a time when the level of inflation has been reduced and when many economists question the accuracy of the consumer price index, on which the boost in benefits is based. The fact that it will be missed by millions does not negate the need for a second look. And we hate to think what murky alternative will be offered by "the octopus."

ART BUCHWALD

Testimony of well-dressed shrinks needed

One of the things I can never understand is why learned psychiatrists, who are hired by the government and the defense in a major crime case, can arrive at such different opinions when it comes to the sanity or insanity of a defendant.

Art Buchwald

I asked a defense lawyer why it was impossible for opposing psychiatrists, when testifying, to agree on the mental condition of the accused at the time he committed the crime.

"Doesn't it confuse the jury?" I asked.

"I guess it does. So, as a lawyer, I have to be very careful when selecting a shrink that he looks and sounds as if he knows what he's talking about. When you're going for an insanity plea you don't want your expert to look like a quack."

"Suppose you hire a psychiatrist to examine your client and he decides the person was sane at the time he committed the crime."

"I fire him. Obviously he is not sufficiently qualified to be a defense witness. You waste a lot of money when you hire a psychiatrist with an open mind. I've had cases where five shrinks have examined my client before I could get one to say he was crazy."

"And that was the one you called to the stand?

"If I called the other four, I could have been sued for malpractice."

"How do you find your medical experts?"

"We have lists of shrinks who believe anyone who commits a major crime is crazy, just as the government has lists of doctors who are willing to testify that anyone involved in one was sane. We don't use their lists and they don't use ours."

"Besides the lists you work from, what else do you look for in a psychiatrist for the defense?"

"Appearance counts for everything with a jury, so you want your shrink to look more psychiatric than their shrink. I personally prefer one with a beard and glasses so he will remind the jurors of Sigmund Freud. If I can't get a guy with a beard, I'll settle for one that looks like Alan Alda. People believe the medical opinions of an Alan Alda. If my expert has a tweed suit I always ask him to wear it. I don't want my doctor to look too rich, or the jury will suspect he's in the testifying business for the money."

"I imagine the prosecutors prefer their experts to look the same way."

"Yes. Sometimes it's hard for the jurors to distinguish which shrink has testified for the defense and which one was a witness for the state. That's why it's better to have a psychiatrist with a German name, and preferably an accent.

"I always insist that my man testifies in language that will not overwhelm the layperson. But I want him to use enough medical jargon to show he isn't just some doctor who walked in off the street.

"The most important thing of course is that my shrink does not become rattled in cross-examination by the prosecution. I don't want him to lose his cool when they start questioning him about his childhood."

"How do you cross examine the government's psychiatrist?" I asked.

"Ruthlessly. I must make the jury believe the government's expert should never have been granted his medical degree.

"The trick is to trip him up so badly he starts behaving on the stand like Captain Queeg in the Caine Mutiny trial. I might even raise the question of his sanity before I get finished with him."

"One final question. What type of psychiatrist is willing to spend all his days in court and put up with this kind of abuse?"

"Mostly one who is tired of listening to people's dreams."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Producing hard evidence on coin scandal

WASHINGTON — Last month I reported on some suspicious finagling in the arrangements to mint and sell commemorative coins for the 1984 Olympic Games in Los Angeles.

Jack Anderson

The gist of the story was that Franklin Mint first lost the bid for the coin contract, then managed to get a piece of the action by some indelicate pressure.

The Franklin coin dealers threatened to give the House Banking Committee evidence of chicanery on the part of the winning bidder. This was a consortium comprised of Occidental Petroleum and the Paris-based international banking firm of Lazard Freres.

Any contract for Olympic coins needs congressional approval. So the threat of a congressional stink apparently persuaded Occidental Petroleum and Lazard Freres to include the Franklin Mint in their deal. The three partners in this forced marriage called themselves the Coin Group.

Since my column appeared, the Coin Group withdrew from the arrangement. But the partners have now told Rep. Fernand St. Germain, D-R.I., the House Banking Committee chairman, that they're willing to reconsider and go ahead with the deal after all.

"Unless someone produces 'world-class evidence,' I hope we will have surcease in charges of 'world-wide scandal,'" St. Germain solemnly intoned at a recent hearing. "If someone has hard evidence pertinent to this legislation, let them produce it now."

I will be happy to oblige. The details of this multimillion-dollar coin manipulation are set forth in a memo in the committee's own files. It is written by staff aide Curtis A. Prins and is titled "Scandal — Olympic Coin Legislation."

As further evidence of the possible worldwide skulduggery in commemorative coins, my associate Tony Capaccio has obtained a fascinating cable from the confidential files of the State Department. This cable arrived in Washington last January from the U.S. Embassy in Athens.

It dealt with charges that Lazard-Numarco, a marketing arm of Lazard Freres, engineered a sweetheart contract with the Greek government to market commemorative coins for this September's Pan-European Games in Athens.

The embassy questioned a Greek government official and executives of the company that lost out on the deal. The results of the embassy's investigation can best be summarized as inconclusive but suggestive.

"We are, unfortunately, still unable to confirm or deny the accusations of wrongdoing in connection with awarding of the contract," the cable states. "While circumstantial evidence suggests that the government of Greece was trying to hide something in the matter, Lazard-Numarco could have been the sounder choice."

What whetted suspicion was the involvement of Archilles Karamanlis, brother of Greek President Constantine Karamanlis. This also made the inquiry difficult for the embassy, as the confidential cable points out.

"Achilles Karamanlis' involvement in the issue makes it unlikely that we can uncover the truth without exceeding the limits of appropriate diplomatic questioning," states the cable delicately.

The Greek president's brother was undersecretary to the prime minister for sports at the time that the contract for the Pan-European Games was approved.

The embassy concluded that while it couldn't say for sure that Lazard-Numarco "had an inside track," Achilles Karamanlis' involvement "makes many observers assume the worst ... Although the government of Greece appears to be reviewing all contracts, the Karamanlis connection could exempt this one."

Footnote: A Greek Embassy spokesman said the president's brother was not part of the three-man team that recommended Lazard-Numarco. But the spokesman conceded that "coins were one of his areas of responsibility" as undersecretary for sports.

HEADLINES AND FOOTNOTES: In the U.S. Army's Special Security Group, everything is official, apparently. The unit recently sent out — at taxpayers' expense in envelopes marked "Official Business" — invitations to its annual picnic, complete with map and RSVP form.

— The United Nations Special Session on Disarmament was not expected to be a great media event, and State Department officials weren't exactly snowed under by requests to be part of the U.S. delegation. Then President Reagan announced that he would address the conference. Suddenly, Foggy Bottom has been flooded with requests from members of Congress who want to be in on the deal.

— Egyptian Ambassador Ashraf Ghorbal found himself in a dicey diplomatic dilemma the other day. Informed that Rep. Bob Shamansky, D-Ohio, was an outspoken opponent of the Reagan administration's proposed $400 million aid increase to Egypt, Ghorbal telephoned the congressman for a little persuasive palaver. But in the midst of the conversation, the ambassador's secretary told him that Cairo was calling on another line. Not wishing to put his boss back home on hold, Ghorbal ended up cutting short his talk with Shamansky and taking the Cairo call. Shamansky ended up still opposed to the aid increase.

A CHANGING WORLD

Cleaning up after liars, cheats, thieves

Liberal Democrats, concerned mainly with their own political skins, are ranting and raving about President Reagan's expressed hope to do something about the fraud concerned with federal loan guarantees for students in higher education.

John Pinkerman

Along with welfare, food stamps and Medicaid, the nearly $3 billion laid out for what was conceived as a lofty and good program to educate ambitious needy students is a national disgrace. The president proposes to do something about the liars, cheats, thieves and deadbeats — students, parents and colleges — who have wronged the program. He is genuinely interested in providing even greater aid for the truly needy who deserve the nation's assistance in advancing their education but shares the contempt of most Americans for those who manipulate the system unfairly to their own advantage at great cost to taxpayers and the rising federal budget deficit.

Despite clear evidence of costly abuses of the loan program, Congress, despite all its cries against Reagan deficits, is determined not to do a thing about a clean-up. Senators and House members, mostly Democrats but including some Republicans, have their eyes on the November off-year elections. As Rep. Dennis E. Eckart, D-Ohio, says while scoffing at suggested reforms, "There aren't five dozen votes out there" in favor of stemming waste and fraud.

Eckart is joined in his contempt for corrective action by Rep. Paul Simon, D-Ill., chairman of the House Post-Secondary Education subcommittee. And, Rep. Peter A. Peyser, D-N.Y., has the audacity to say that Mr. Reagan, not the Democrats, "has totally deceived the American public." Adding more rhetoric to such ridiculous comment is Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich.

Well, these men who cry out for selective economies and look the other way at student-aid fraud, should consider a few plain, old-fashioned facts.

First, the bottom line. Loans to education outstanding total $13.6 billion. Of this amount $3 billion is in arrears. Those who get loans, in considerable numbers, simply do not keep their promise to repay. For every non-payment of a loan, that much money is not available to the revolving fund that helps finance new aid to the truly needy and deserving.

Among the deadbeats, doctors are numerous — and do you know any poor doctors these days of outrageous fees? Along with dentists, nurses and other health-care professionals, these well-heeled "servants of humanity" owe Uncle Sam $31 million in unpaid bills on the education that is making them rich today.

Some of these doctors even are taking money from the federal Treasury for Medicare and Medicaid — despite their delinquent accounts. Others teach at medical schools, even though the law says they should be fired if they fail to repay such debts.

All that is bad enough, but listen to this. Under the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, needy students are supposed to be the beneficiaries. However, 44 percent of borrowers come from families with over $20,000 in income, 10 percent from families with over $30,000 and 5 percent from families with over $40,000. There even is cheating — plain thievery — among some of those who report incomes of barely $10,000. Students, in certain instances, come from middle- or higher-income families but claim to live apart with low personal incomes.

The program also was designed for students willing to study in college. Such is not the case in too many sample experiences. Forty-three percent of students getting Department of Education and Social Security college aid have academic averages below 2.0. Many are below 1.5 (D plus). One student was found to have received more than $8,400 in aid even though he passed only 35 of 215 credit hours of study.

Undergraduates can get up to $12,500 in federal aid; graduate students up to $25,000. Repayment is supposed to begin within six to 12 months of study completion. It rarely does.

Democrats who scream to high heaven in support of such a corrupt program, abused by too many lying beneficiaries, should be ashamed of themselves for denouncing President Reagan's efforts in behalf of a reform that would both save the government money and provide even greater funds for those who genuinely need and deserve what could be a truly worthwhile investment in the young people of these troubled times.

Students keep peace at school

By MIKE McQUEEN

MIAMI (AP) — During football season, Fredrick Walker is a rugged blocker whose job is clearing away tacklers for Miami Norland High School running backs.

Off the field, Walker has a different assignment — keeping the school's halls and grounds clear of troublemakers.

Walker is on the 10-member Varsity Patrol, a unique peace-keeping force in the Miami school of 2,000 students. It is the brainchild of assistant principal Jeff Miller, a former baseball coach.

The Varsity Patrol walks Norland's halls before school, during lunch and after school. Wearing gray-and-red T-shirts emblazoned with "Varsity Patrol," they watch for disturbances, drug pushers, and "outsiders" who don't belong on school grounds.

Patrol members are under strict orders not to use violence to break up fights or to nab robbers, chain-snatchers and drug-users. If efforts short of violence fail, they alert administrators.

IN THE PAST seven months, the patrols have made a difference in what once was one of the most troubled schools in Dade County, Miller said. During the 1980-81 school year, there were two dozen snatchings of gold chains, he said, while so far this year there hasn't been one.

The drug problem has also been reduced, Miller said, but no figures will be compiled until after the end of the school year.

A decade ago, when Dade's school desegregation program paired predominantly white and predominantly black schools to achieve racial balance, Norland went from nearly all white to having a three-fourths black student population. Racial tensions, and student-victim crimes, followed at the school which is located in a predominately white, middle-class neighborhood.

Miller believes that part of the problem was that black students didn't identify with their new school and its white roots.

"These young people have had a tremendous impact on school pride," Miller said recently of the Varsity Patrol. "This school year is the best I've seen in 10 years. And it's because of these young people."

Nine of the group's members are black, one is Latin and two others, who belonged to the patrol but quit, are white. The two whites "had other commitments, but they still help out sometimes," Miller said.

PETER ROSSI, an investigator with the school system's security unit, said he thinks the idea behind the Varsity Patrol — "taking the biggest or the meanest kids on campus" — works because those students command respect from fellow students that administrators, security guards or student "snitches" don't receive.

Walker was one of Miller's first selections for the squad.

For Walker, membership in the Varsity Patrol was sort of a personal revolt against crime. His locker had been broken into, his wallet was stolen. He helped recruit Terry Henry, a 6-foot-3, 265-pound defensive tackle.

"One change is that our crime rate has dropped dramatically," Walker says. "At first, they were calling us names. But after they saw how we were operating, they began to relate to it. Now, some are asking how to join."

The Patrol members weren't necessarily model students before. Some admit that joining the Patrol may have kept them out of trouble.

"I used to not want to come to school," testifies Todd Eady, a football player and Varsity Patrol member. "But now I want to come to school. This Varsity Patrol thing gave me a reason."

Adds Elesha Smith, one of two girls in the patrol, said she could have graduated early in December. "But I didn't want to leave the school because I like it so much," she says.

PRINCIPAL ROBERT Fowler said the Varsity Patrol often keeps students from getting into big trouble by nipping fights early.

Fowler said he asked one of the boys how he felt about the Varisty Patrol. "After he had cooled down, he was glad they stopped him from fighting," the principal said.

Miller gratefully remembers the time the Varsity Patrol bailed him out of trouble.

Manage diabetes by eating foods high in fiber

Dear Dr. Solomon: I recently found out that I have diabetes. If I understood my doctor correctly, my goal is to lose weight until I reach my ideal weight. Then I should maintain that weight. This will be a big step toward managing the diabetes. Is this all I have to do? — P.R., L.A.

Dear P.F.: No, although maintaining your ideal weight is very important, it is only one step toward the dietary management of diabetes. The approach taken toward reaching that goal is also very important. Increase your intake of greens as well as other types of vegetables, grains, and other high fiber foods. Simply losing weight is not enough; it is important to follow a diet that is high in fiber and complex carbohydrates while you are losing the weight and also afterward in your maintenance diet.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I talk with my parents and grandparents, I get the feeling that people used to eat a lot more than we do today. My grandfather describes breakfasts he used to have that would last me all day. Yet all we hear today is how people are getting fat. Is there any way to explain this? — Howard, Philadelphia.

Dear Howard: The trouble with your reasoning is that you considering only one side of the equation. The number of calories a person consumes is important, but so are the number of calories expended. You don't mention your age, but I imagine your grandfather was much more physically active at a corresponding age.

One report I have seen does indicate that the daily consumption of calories has descreased slightly over the past several decades, but this has been accompanied by a substantial decrease in physical activity.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I am a recently divorced woman and I live alone. It is very difficult for me to maintain a diet because I am not used to cooking for one person. I work full-time, and for the first time in many years, I am on a very limited budget. Recently, I find that either I am so hungry that I overeat or I skip meals altogether. Can you set me straight? — E.L. Baltimore.

Dear E.L.: Set yourself on a regular eating regimen. Eat three meals a day at approximately the same time each day. Plan your meals by the week or even the night before. Be flexible, but it is important that you know what you will eat so you will be more likely to plan well-balanced meals. Instead of buying convenience foods, cook from scratch. More vitamins and minerals will be retained, the taste is much better and the cost significantly lower. Keep a variety of low-calorie snacks on hand, bouillon, fresh fruit, vegetables. Prepare a large quantity of any one food, divide it into meal size portions, then freeze each portion. The night before you plan to use, defrost the portion. You can do this with meat, vegetables or meat casseroles, fruits, desserts. You will be coming home from work to a well-planned, well-prepared meal. With a little planning you can make your meals something to look forward to.

(If you have a medical question, write to Neil Solomon, M.D., 1726 Reisterstown Road, Baltimore, Md. 21208. Dr. Solomon cannot give personal replies but will answer as many questions as possible in his column.)

Teacher thinks meetings should be more accessible

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Accessibility is more important than the quantity of persons who attend Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees meetings, contends Sam Manning, president of the Midland Federation of Teachers (MFT).

And meetings at 1:30 p.m. every other Tuesday are not accessible for everyone, he added.

According to Dr. James H. Mailey, MISD superintendent, school board meetings have been held in the afternoon for the past 20 or so years.

"We tried for a period to have meetings at night, but they didn't yield that much increase in attendance," Mailey said.

"If you are a citizen with a concern, you should be able to attend school board meetings and not have to take time off from your job," Manning stated. "The issue is access, not how many can attend. If there are no people there, that is not the concern.

"BUT MOST PEOPLE aren't aware of this problem until they have an issue to bring before the board and decide they want to attend a meeting," he added.

Manning and other members of the MFT have suggested to school board members that several "issues be viewed as demands for the public good in the forthcoming academic year." Those issues concern evening school board meetings, as well as all-day kindergarten, salary raises for aides to no less than $11,000, placement of aides in all elementary classrooms with more than 30 students and providing aides for each department at the junior high and high school levels.

Other requests include easier transfer policies for students with legitimate needs, development of coordinated honors programs at the high school level by curriculum specialists, increasing teacher salary levels by no less than 25 percent, limiting classroom loads to no more than 22 students per teacher per class period and providing a health care plan that does not require teachers to pay any part of their health care bill, including payments for dental care.

"Aides' take-home pay ranges from $400 to $500 per month," Manning said during an interview at Lee High School, where he teaches social studies. "They work very hard and are needed at all levels.

"Many of them have college hours, some have college degrees. I know we couldn't run the special education program without them."

Manning said that high school students occasionally serve as aides. They are paid about $3 an hour in addition to gaining valuable experience, he pointed out.

"Aides do not get enough and they do a very good, dynamic and essential service," Manning said.

Examples of the types of work that aides could perform at the secondary level include administrative services such as checking out books, coordinating media equipment and standardized testing and working with students individually if they are qualified, Manning said.

"AIDES COULD HELP keep up with all of the materials effectively," he said. "It would help take the pressure off departmental chairmen."

This year, MISD trustees approved a cut from full-day kindergarten to half-day classes, limiting full-day programs to Title VI schools. According to Manning, the action stemmed from an attempt to save "space and finances."

"All-day kindergarten is very important," he said. "Most of us that work have young children that we will have to put in day care centers. It is going to be very difficult for the child to go to half-day day care and then half-day kindergarten."

Although some of the overcrowding in elementary schools will be alleviated through the recent bond issue which called for construction of two elemementary schools in addition to two being built from last year's bond election, Mailey said he sees no return to full-day kindergarten in the immediate future.

The high school honors program needs improvement, according to the MFT, Manning said. Although the MFT's demand stated, "Allow curriculum specialists to develop a coordinated honors program at the high school level," Mailey responded, "We've had curriculum specialists do that for many years."

"My observation is that sometimes people who teach it and people responsible for the department don't get together," Manning explained. "We need to have teachers be aware of what other honors teachers are doing."

Limiting honors classes to a minimum of 12 students is restricting the entire program, Manning claimed.

"In Texas, the handicapped are guaranteed special classes. Why not the same for the gifted?

"We should not specify a limited number of students before an honors class can be held," he said.

Scheduling also poses difficulties for some students, he said. "Scheduling can be a problem because sometimes only a few sections are offered. If a student wants to take calculus and honors government, and the only sections are during the same period, he'll only be able to take one of the classes."

The district is making "some positive steps — but many of them can be improved," Manning said. That is one of the functions of the MFT.

Affiliated with the AFL-CIO, the Texas Federation of Teachers and the American Federation of Teachers, the MFT is striving to improve teachers' rights, including insurance coverage, salaries and the right to collective bargaining, Manning said.

"(In Texas) public employees do not enjoy the right and privilege of collective bargaining," he said. "Public employees in Texas have the right to organize, but that is the only right they have.

"We're up against a legislative wall."

MEETING WITH SCHOOL trustees and administrators as equals to negotiate contracts and specify duties, expectations in performance, salaries and insurance are some of the goals of the MFT, Manning said.

Organized six years ago, the MFT has never been officially recognized by school administrators, according to Manning. "I think a lot of people in Midland just don't understand unions," he said.

"We've been a vocal minority, letting our position be known by speaking out and using the First Amendment to its fullest," he explained.

"It's the only way our democratic society can last."

Originally organized with 35 members, Manning said the group has kept 10 or more members every year.

Denial of the right to collective bargaining has had an effect on salaries and contracts, Manning said. "For years, teachers have signed a paper that says we can be moved around. For years we have signed a contract that had questionable salaries. If you don't sign, you don't have a job."

One of the issues the MFT presented to the school board dealt with a 25 percent salary increase "to reward teachers in a manner that demonstrates a concern for education."

"If we had received that 25 percent raise, it would have taken everybody out of financial difficulties," Manning said. "The 4 percent bonus for housing that was given to us based on a three-year, bachelor degree teacher was very interesting. I wonder how it will be applied to housing. It was a nice gesture, but I don't think it will help much.

Sam Manning

"MY OPINION ON the whole salary is that the board simply ratified Dr. Mailey's proposals," Manning continued. "The teachers only proposed one thing: for the board to return the Social Security benefits. Anything the teachers asked for was actually denied.

"He (Mailey) was basically the one doing all the proposing," Manning said.

"Teachers went down there in a kneeling posture. In collective bargaining, that wouldn't have happened. It would have been the teachers asking instead of administrators."

The MFT is asking "only for the bread-and-butter type things," Manning said. "The every day things like salaries and insurance."

Many of the MFT's proposals (such as a 1 to 22 teacher-student ratio) are "ideal types of situations," and only can be realized when Midland's tax base increases, he said.

"Right now we're in that netherland between when we're going to get the money and what we can do," Manning explained. "The tax base will increase dramatically when all of the new buildings under construction can be taxed.

"Most of our demands are actually proposals because we realize that we don't have enough money now.

"But I think we should continue to speak out," Manning said. "We should try to make suggestions and changes to help the whole system.

"This is what the union is about. This is what the First Amendment is about.

"We've got a good system now. But we can improve it."

Jobs plentiful in Oklahoma

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Summer jobs may be scarce elsewhere, but they are plentiful in Oklahoma, which still is benefitting from a mid-1970s oil and energy boom.

"They're screaming for people," said Suzi Newkumet, job location specialist at the University of Oklahoma in Norman.

While the recession is putting the pinch on summer jobs elsewhere, Oklahoma's economy is robust. The unemployment rate is 4.8 percent, about half the national rate.

Ms. Newkumet said she was aware of only one employer that might cut back this summer — the U.S. Geological Survey. She placed about a half dozen students in apprentice jobs with the agency last year.

"But overall, the summer job market is good," she said. "We have almost 100 summer jobs listed with summer camps, amusement parks and such."

Stella Roberts, spokeswoman for the state Employment Security Commission, said 50,000 students are expected to look for summer jobs, while W.J. Bowman, the commission's chief researcher, said about that number of summer jobs is available.

"We are expecting a continued high demand in service areas like fast foods, nurseries, yard care and retailing," Ms. Roberts said. "And kids with clerical skills should be able to get jobs this summer."

Restaurants always have openings for part-time jobs, said Linda Wheeler, spokeswoman for Sirloin Stockade, an Oklahoma City-based chain of 190 steakhouses located in 21 states. And park departments in Tulsa and Oklahoma City said they will hire the same number of summer employees as last year.

Gary Cruzen, assistant to the director of Oklahoma City high schools, said he has seen cutbacks only in the oil industry, which has curbed production because of a world oil glut.

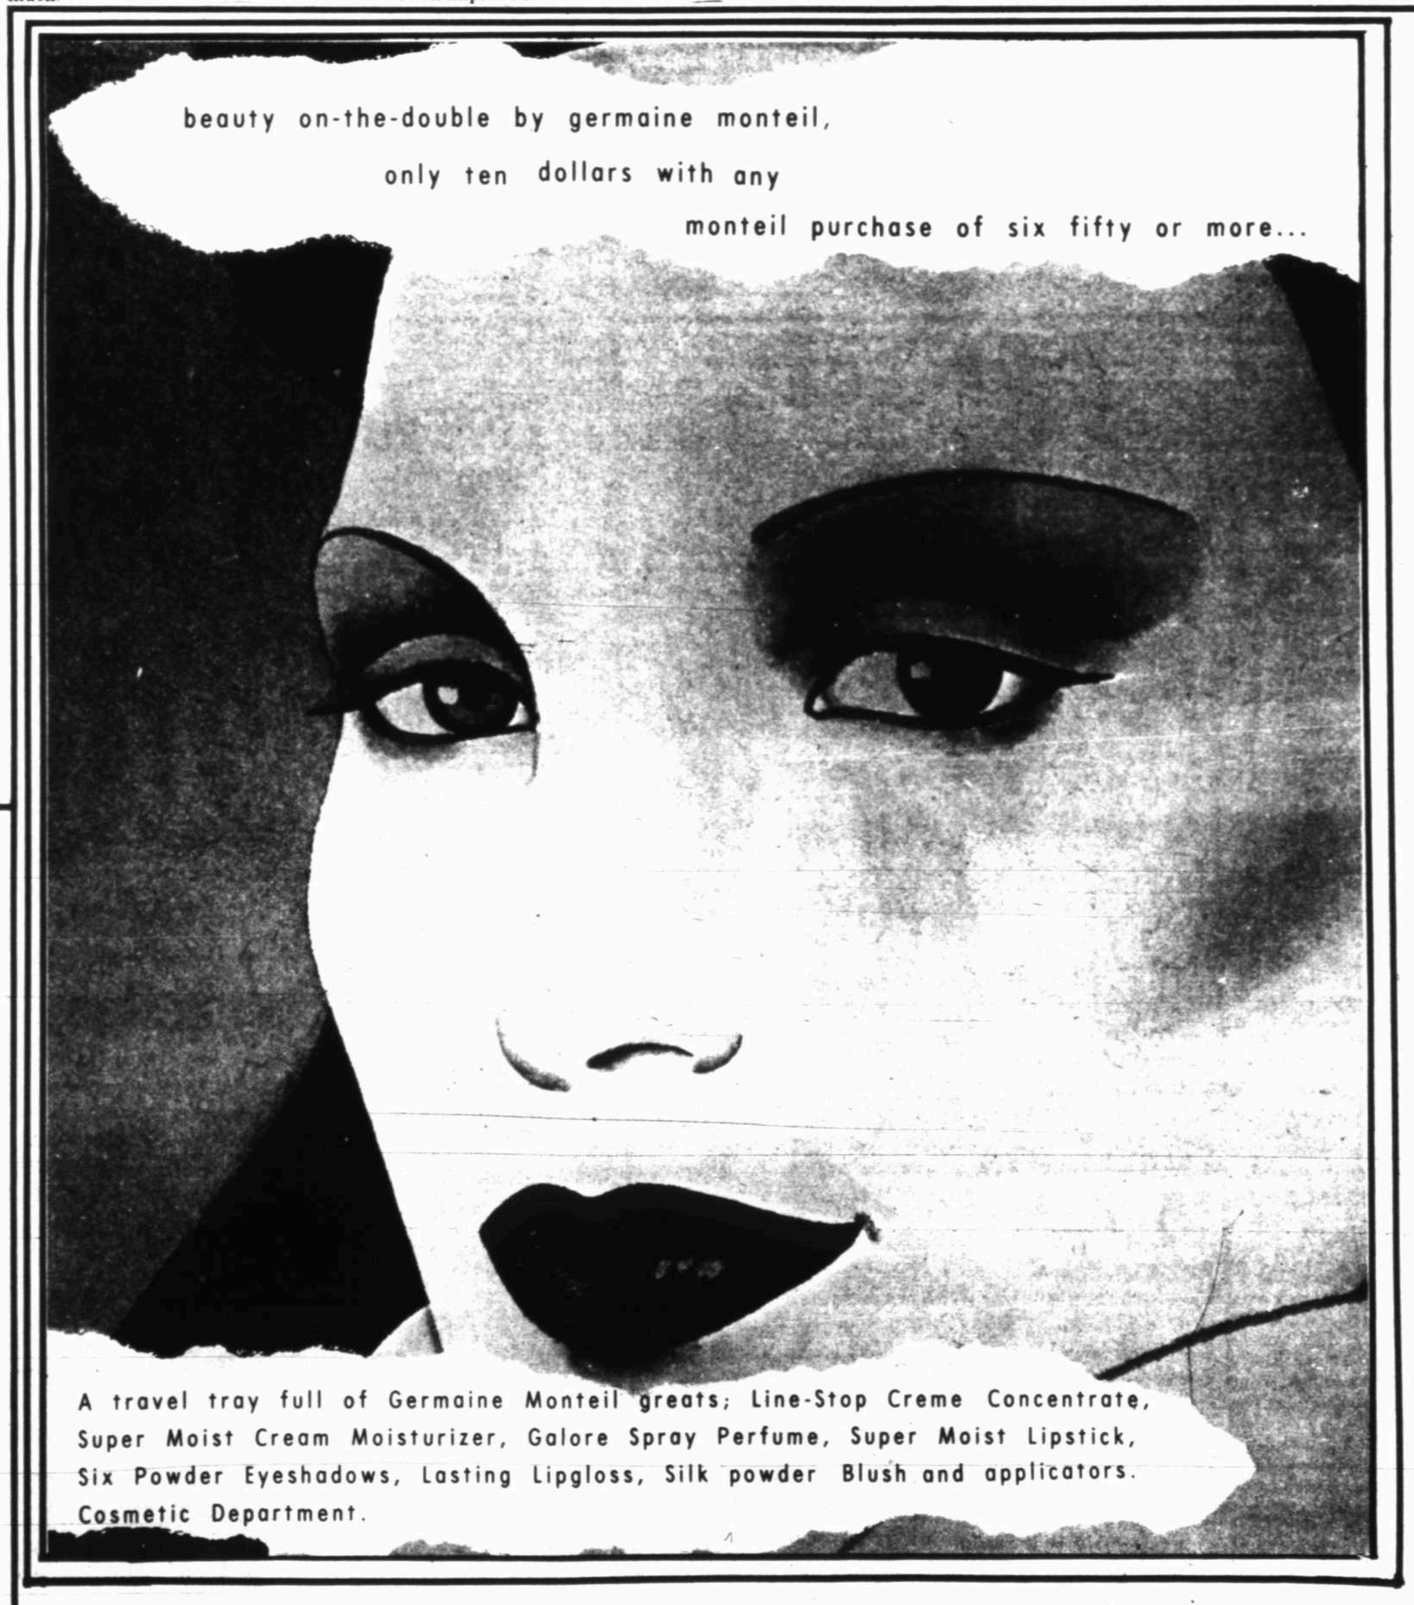

Even construction, down elsewhere, is expected to pick up. Les Isbell, a homebuilder in Broken Arrow, says he and subcontractors will employ about 20 students this summer, up 40 percent over last year.

"I think any kid in Tulsa who wants to work can find a job," he said.

Raspberries can make entertaining elegant

SEATTLE, Wash. — The season of long, lazy evenings and dining al fresco is here, and there's no better way to add elegance to outdoor entertaining than with raspberries. To refresh thirsty guests after a competitive game of badminton or croquet, offer Raspberry Float Punch — a crisp, sparkling blend of raspberry and citrus juices, dotted with luscious whole berries.

Tired of the same old fruit salad? Try Raspberry Delight, a lush combination of flavors and textures. Shimmering chunks of raspberry gelatin, enlivened with pineapple juice and studded with sliced bananas, are lightly tossed together with plump red raspberries to create a salad that's a pleasure to the eye as well as palate.

When the sun sets and the after-dinner drinks are poured, bring out the Mile High Raspberry Pie; A cloud-like confection of whipped cream, meringue laced with vanilla and a generous portion of raspberries, presented in a golden walnut/butter crust.

And on the Fourth of July, what dessert could be more spectacular — or coolly delicious — than a Raspberry Bombe? This irresistible legacy of the independent French involves a frozen shell of raspberry sherbet over a layer of strawberry ice cream, protecting an exquisite center of whipped cream, candied fruits, toasted nuts and rum.

Any way you choose to use them, raspberries can't help but sweeten your summer entertaining.

RASPBERRY BOMBE

3 pints red raspberry sherbet
2 pints strawberry ice cream
1 cup whipping cream
3 tblsp. powdered sugar
Dash salt
¼ cup finely chopped mixed-candied fruits and peels
¼ cup finely chopped toasted almonds
Rum flavoring to taste

Chill a 2½-quart deep metal mold in freezer. Stir sherbet just to soften. With chilled spoon, quickly spread over bottom and sides of mold; be sure sherbet comes to top. (If it slips down, refreeze in mold until workable). Freeze firm. Stir the ice cream just to soften. Quickly spread over raspberry layer, covering completely. Freeze firm. Whip cream with sugar and salt to soft peaks. Fold in fruits, nuts and flavoring. Pile into center of mold, smoothing top. Cover with foil; freeze six hours or overnight. Peel off foil. Invert mold on chilled plate. Rub mold with hot damp towel to loosen; lift off mold. Serves 12-16.

MILE HIGH RASPBERRY PIE

¾ cup sugar
2 egg whites
2 cups fresh or frozen raspberries
1 tsp. vanilla
1 tblsp. lemon juice
Pinch of salt
1 cup whipping cream, whipped
1 (9-inch) baked pastry shell or crumb crust (recipe below)

Combine sugar, egg whites, raspberries (partially thawed), vanilla, lemon juice and salt in large mixer bowl. Beat at high speed 15 minutes, until thick and voluminous. Fold in whipped cream and pile mixture in baked pie shell. Freeze several hours. After pie is frozen, wrap in foil. To serve, remove from freezer, slice and serve immediately. Will keep a few days in freezer. Serves 6-8.

Crumb Crust

1 cup flour
¼ cup brown sugar
½ cup butter
½ cup walnuts

Mix crust ingredients; spread on cookie sheet. Toast at 375 degrees for 10 minutes, stirring occasionally. Press into pan. Add filling. The filling can also be piled in individual dessert glasses or bowls (sans any crust) and frozen. Remove from freezer and serve at once.

RASPBERRY FLOAT PUNCH

3 (3-oz.) packages raspberry flavor gelatin
4 cups boiling water
1½ cups sugar
4 cups cold water
½ cup lime juice
2¼ cups orange juice
1¼ cups lemon juice
1 quart ginger ale
2 (10-oz.) packages frozen raspberries

Dissolve gelatin in boiling water. Add sugar, cold water and juices. Cool, but do not chill or gelatin will congeal. (If it congeals, heat just enough to bring back to liquid state). When time to serve, pour punch into punch bowl. Add ginger ale and frozen raspberries. Stir until raspberries break apart and are partially thawed. Quantity: 4 quarts; serves 16-20.

Raspberries can add elegance to outdoor entertaining. Suggested are Raspberry Float Punch, Mile High Raspberry Pie, a Raspberry Bombe dessert and Raspberry Delight.

Microwave oven can be used to prepare several types of soup

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

No longer a mere prelude to the main course of a dinner, a soup today can constitute a hearty meal in itself.

As versatile as it is satisfying, soup can take on an amazing variety of forms — from a robust, steamy, Manhattan clam chowder to a more delicate, cooling vichyssoise.

Microwave cooking is ideal for fresh vegetable soup, as this style of cooking preserves bright colors, textures and that fresh-from-the-garden flavor that makes your soup a hit. And even if you resort to the canned variety, you can mix, cook and serve all in the same dish.

One thing to bear in mind, however, is that some homemade soup stocks require the lengthy and slow simmering only a conventional range can provide, lest there be a compromise on flavor.

A bonus for the economy-minded is to save you slightly wilted vegetables, meat bones and broths for future soup dishes. Save hardened or dried cheese to add to recipes that require it. Grate cheese to freeze in plastic bags for use later.

Less than perfect mushrooms may not go over well with stuffed crab, but floating in a cream soup they are a lovely accompaniment.

Odds and ends are perfect for augmenting stock and your soup can be as fun as it is flavorful.

You are not necessarily tied to a recipe when creating a delicious soup. Use your imagination and whatever is on hand. Taste as you add to see where you're going.

For the weight watchers, what better means of keeping calories in check! Even clear broth can be tasty with the proper seasoning.

A light, refreshing bowl of soup is just the thing for those on the go as well. If you often are rushed for time, prepare and freeze several containers of soup, making sure you have a tight seal and leave room for expansion. Lunch or dinner is just a defrost and quick heat away.

A guide for heating prepared soups is as follows:

Mix-in-a-cup Soup. Measure three-fourths cup hot water (or amount specified on package) into a cup or mug. Heat in the microwave oven two minutes or until water boils. Slowly stir in one packet (¼ of a six-ounce package) dry soup mix. Stir until dissolved.

Dry Soup. In a two-quart soup tureen or casserole, stir together one package or envelope soup mix (amount for four to six servings) and four cups hot water (or amount specified on the package). Cover and cook in the microwave or until liquid is bubbling all over the surface. Let stand, covered, two to three minutes. Stir well before serving. Makes four to six servings.

Canned soup. For a single serving of condensed soup, fill a mug or bowl a little less than half full with soup; gradually stir in an equal quantity of hot tap water. Cook, uncovered, in the microwave oven two to three minutes or until hot and bubbly. One can makes two to three servings.

To prepare an entire can of condensed soup, spoon soup into a small deep casserole (about one quart size); gradually stir in an equal quantity of hot tap water and cook, covered, six to eight minutes or until hot and bubbly.

For heat-and-eat canned soup (regular strength), simply heat, uncovered, in individual containers or a small casserole; times will be given about the same as for condensed soups given above.

Pouch-packed frozen soup. Place an eight-ounce pouch of frozen soup in a 1½-quart casserole. Pierce top with a fork in three or four4 places. Cook, uncovered, in the microwave oven five minutes or until hot and bubbling in the center. Cut open one corner of pouch and pour into bowl. Serves one.

MIDNIGHT ONION SOUP

2 tbsps. butter or margarine
4 onions, sliced thin
4 cups hot beef broth
1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
Salt, pepper
6 slices toasted French bread
6 tbsps. grated Parmesan cheese

Cook butter or margarine and onions in three-quart casserole, covered until onions are colored, about 15 minutes. Add broth and seasonings to taste, cover, cook 10 minutes. Divide into five or six individual bowls, top each serving with toast, sprinkle with Parmesan cheese.

VICHYSSOISE (LEEK AND POTATO SOUP)

2 tbsps. butter
2 leeks or 4 scallions, white part only, sliced
1 medium onion, finely chopped
2 small potatoes, peeled and diced
2 cups boiling water or broth
Salt, white pepper
1 cup milk
1 cup heavy or light cream

Garnishes: butter or margarine, chopped chives.

Cook butter or margarine, leeks or scallions, onion and potatoes in two-quart casserole or soup bowl, seven minutes, covered. Add water, salt and pepper to taste. Cook, covered, five minutes. Press soup through a sieve or whirl in blender to make a smooth puree. Add milk and cream, heat two minutes, covered. Refrigerate.

Cooking Time: 18 minutes.

Served chilled; sprinkled with chopped chives. Makes four to six servings.

VEGETABLE SOUP

2 tbsps. oil
1 carrot, diced
1 stalk celery, sliced
1 onion, diced
2 large potatoes, diced
2 tomatoes, peeled and diced
3 cups very hot vegetable or beef broth
1 tbsp. parsley, chopped
1 tbsp. chopped chives
½ tsp. marjoram
Salt, pepper

Pour oil over carrot, celery, onion and potatoes in two-quart serving bowl. Cook about five minutes, stirring once. Add tomatoes, broth and seasonings, cook about 10 minutes longer. Makes four to six servings.

NEW ENGLAND CLAM CHOWDER

1 strip bacon, diced
1 medium onion, chopped
2 medium potatoes, finely diced
1 can (8 ozs.) minced clams
½ cup water
2 cups milk
Salt, pepper, hot pepper sauce

Cook bacon, onion and potatoes in covered two-quart bowl five minutes. Stir halfway through cooking time. Drain liquid from clams, add liquid and water to bowl. Add milk and seasonings. Cover, cook five minutes. Stir in clams; let stand two minutes covered before serving. Makes three to four servings.

Using wood waste

PORTLAND, Ore. (AP) — Georgia-Pacific used wood waste to supply 90 percent of the energy needed to produce 1.4 billion board feet of lumber in 1981. In the energy-intensive pulp and paper industry, Georgia-Pacific provided 70 percent of its own energy from "wastes."

The whole paper industry reduced its annual use of fuel oils by 40 percent, between 1972 and 1981, the company reported.

LIVING TODAY

'Older Americans Month' celebrated in May

By SHARON A. HILLIS
Midland County Extension Agent — Home Economics

Who are the older people in your life? A parent, a neighbor, someone in your church that you see on Sundays, a former teacher? Take time to think about and acknowledge the older people you know during May, Older Americans Month.

Think about the contributions they have made on a personal level to you and others, in their work and to their community. Perhaps the 4-H leader of your youth started the love of wildflowers that you have today. Perhaps the English teacher who was so demanding of perfection contributed to your spelling and writing skills. You may think about people who sponsored and coached the little league team you played on. Or you may think of a parent or grandparent who instilled your family with values you hold today.

Acknowledge these contributions through a personal visit, telephone call, a card or letter. In making a personal expression of thanks you are contributing to that individual's sense that their life has truly had an impact on others.

If you have moved from the town where you grew up but would like to express appreciation to people from that community, write a letter to the editor of your local paper and make your thanks public. You may even want to thank specific individuals that you know are still living in the town.

In some communities, programs have been initiated whereby school students provide a "hotline" service especially adapted for older citizens who might be in need of help. Also a part of the programs are adult education classes, and along with this, an escort service, encouraging many who otherwise would not venture out alone, to participate. The courses may be geared to needs of the elderly, or especially designed to fill requests for certain subjects.

While social service agencies look after some of these functions, younger persons can contribute immensely to the well-being of older Americans. Do they need windows washed? Need the lawn watered? Need a ride to the doctor? Need small repairs done? Need new washers in drippy faucets? Need floors cleaned or mopped, or vacuuming done? Many tasks seemingly trivial become difficult for older persons. Or maybe they just need a hearing, sympathetic ear!

Getting elderly persons INVOLVED also contributes to their mental and physical well-being. Intergenerational theatrical productions with everyone who wants a role involved, or dances in which all may participate relieve boredom, a common "older citizen" ailment.

Older Americans Month is a time to let the older people in your life know that you care!

AT WIT'S END

Claiming territory

By ERMA BOMBECK

Aerobics classes usually happen without incident.

You just drag in and do it before you wake up and realize where you are.

But this morning was different.

Someone took my "spot."

It's one of those things where you know someday it will happen, but you're never really prepared for it when it does.

Actually no one is assigned to any one place. It's all on a first-come-first-served basis, but your "spot" is "understood," like your row at church or your booth in the restaurant where you eat lunch every day.

Mine is the best spot in the whole room. Back row, right next to the door. You get a breeze from the fan, you don't have to worry about bumping into someone behind you and it's right next to the water cooler. I eyed it for months and when the woman who had it before moved to Pittsburgh, I moved right in.

I promised myself I wouldn't get paranoid about staking off unmarked areas as my own ever since I used to ride the bus. I got on at the Loop and for four years rode in the same seat, left hand side, four back, window. I cannot tell you the frustration I felt when I boarded the bus one day and discovered another person in "MY SEAT!"

Of course, I don't get upset about those things now that I'm older and more mature. Someone took "my parking spot" the other day at the grocery and it hardly bothered me at all.

Hey, I don't own the spot, right?

PAINLESS PERMANENT HAIR REMOVAL

You don't have to take our word for it! Read what medical experts have to say about the "no needle" electronic tweezer method of hair removal.

from Jonathan Zizmor, M.D., Chief of Dermatology, St. Vincent Hospital, New York, and instructor Dermatology, Albert College of Medicine, New York, in "Skincare" page 66:

"Using ultrasonic waves is worlds better than conventional electrolysis primarily because it is absolutely painless. It is also extremely safe, somewhat more effective since fewer hairs return, and faster since many more hairs can be removed in a sitting because of the lack of discomfort.

You'll neither hear nor feel a thing. There is no questions that this is the preferred method for removal of unwanted hair.

Electrolysis hurts . . . of course the (electrolysis) method is not 100% effective . . . many sittings are usually required since the patient can stand only just so much pain."

If you have any questions about removing your unwanted hair painlessly and permanently, call us for FREE consultation and demonstration. It is the intelligent thing to do.

DEAR ABBY

Right to be wanted is every child's right

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: You published my letter last March in which I took issue with your statement, "If the parents cannot agree whether to terminate the pregnancy, the decision should be the mother's because it's her body."

I said, "Pregnancy is not simply the state of a woman's body. It is also the stage in another person's life. The whole issue of abortion is difficult enough when both parents agree, but to deny one parent his share in that decision, just because he doesn't agree with the other parent who by biological accident happens to be in control, is unconscionable." My closing remark was, "After all, you could not claim as your own another person's car parked in your garage."

In your published response you said, "A woman's body is not a garage that can be rented by the week or month.'

In a subsequent personal unpublished letter to me you wrote, "Now don't tell me you aren't with the right-to-lifers. You're certainly not pro-choice!"

Wrong! And right! I am still getting letters of congratulations from pro-lifers, which shows how poorly I expressed myself. However, I am NOT with the pro-lifers; neither am I with the pro-choicers. I have enormous difficulty with the issue of abortion.

In the case of an unwanted child who would be severely emotionally or physically crippled by child abuse because he wasn't wanted in the first place, I would have to opt for abortion to prevent that kind of suffering. But I cannot take lightly the argument that abortion is murder. — HERBERT S. HEINEMAN, M.D.

DEAR DR. HEINEMAN: At last we agree. Every child has a right to be a wanted child.

DEAR ABBY: Do you remember the column you had about girls needing to go all the way like a moose needed a hat rack? Well, I cut it out when I was 12 and gave it to a girlfriend who needed it more than I did at the time. She said it helped her make the right decision. It helped me, also, later on.

Please run it again for other girls who are struggling with that problem. Thank you — MISS R. IN OHIO

DEAR MISS R.: Here it is:

Girls need to "prove their love" through illicit sex relations like a moose needs a hat rack.

Why not prove your love by sticking your head in the oven and turning on the gas? Or playing leapfrog out in the traffic? It's about as safe.

Clear the cobwebs out of your head: Any fellow who asks you to "prove your love" is trying to take you for the biggest, most gullible fool who ever walked. That proving bit is one of the oldest and rottenest lines ever invented!

Does he love you? It doesn't sound like it. Someone who loves you wants whatever is best for you. But now figure it out. He wants you to:

Commit an immoral act.
Surrender your virtue.
Throw away your self-respect.
Risk the loss of your precious reputation.
And risk getting into trouble.

Does that sound as though he wants what's best for you? This is the laugh of the century. He wants what's best for him ... he wants a thrill he can brag about at your expense.

Love? Who's kidding whom? A boy who loves a girl would sooner cut off his right arm than hurt her. If you want my opinion, this self-serving so-and-so has already proved that he doesn't love you.

The predictable aftermath of "proofs" of this kind always find Don Juan tiring of his sport. That's when he drops you, picks up his line and goes casting elsewhere for bigger, and equally silly, fish.

(Do you hate to write letters because you don't know what to say? Thank-you notes, sympathy letters, congratulations, how to decline and accept invitations and how to write an interesting letter are included in Abby's new booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions." Send $2 and a long, stamped (37 cents), self-addressed envelope to: Abby, Letters Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Chicken still a best buy at the meat, fowl market

By BETSY BALSLEY
Los Angles Times-Washington Post News Service

Around my house when menu ideas are fleeting, there's a strong tendency to fall back on, "What can we do with some chicken?" Fortunately, chicken is a family favorite prepared any way. It could probably appear at dinner three or four times a week and not earn a single gripe about the sameness of our meals.

As an admitted fried chicken freak who constantly fights a weight problem, I've had to change my method of preparation of one of my favorite foods in order to avoid all the extra calories present in the old deep fat-fry way of cooking this popular dish.

Now, instead of shaking it in a bag of seasoned flour and frying it in deep, hot fat, I place the chicken pieces, skin side down, in a cold, nonstick pan. The pan is placed over medium to medium-low heat and the chicken is cooked, uncovered, until it is nicely browned on one side, then turned to brown on the other side. The chicken parts cook in their own fat when prepared this way, and while it takes longer for the chicken to cook, it does eliminate a good percentage of the calories present when prepared the conventional way.

The flavor? Well, it isn't the same, certainly, as the crisply-coated, super-moist fried chicken I grew up with, but the virtuous feeling I have while devouring it makes up for that.

There is, of course, infinitely more to chicken than a fry pan. Some treatments for this most familiar of all fowls can make it a dieter's most reliable meal. Others make it anything but a low-calorie food. It all depends on personal inclinations and tastes and what sort of occasion is involved.

Certainly chicken seems to remain one of the best buys at the meat counter for any meal, whether it's a special occasion or a simple family dinner. And one of its better attributes is its ability to make itself welcome as a recycled leftover. Used as a stuffing for baked onions or in a cold salad or in any of innumerable other second-day recipes, chicken will be as welcome as it was the first time around.

LEMON-GARLIC DRUMSTICKS WITH STEAMED VEGETABLES

2 pounds drumsticks
Juice of 3 lemons
3 cloves garlic, crushed
1-2 teaspoon ground oregano
1-4 teaspoon ground cumin
Salt
1-8 teaspoon black pepper
1-4 cup butter or margarine
Steamed vegetables

Place drumsticks in wide saucepan with lemon juice, garlic, oregano, cumin, salt to taste and pepper. Bring to quick boil over medium heat, then simmer, covered, 20 minutes or until almost tender. Remove drumsticks and place on broiler rack or grill.

Add butter to remaining mixture in pan and heat to melt. Brush on chicken. Broil chicken until lightly browned, brushing with sauce occasionally, about 10 minutes. Arrange drumsticks in center of large platter and surround with rows of steamed vegetables such as asparagus, celery and carrots. Makes 4 to 6 servings.

CHICKEN WITH LEMON-HONEY STUFFING

2 tablespoons butter or margarine, melted
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 tablespoons finely chopped onion
1-4 cup butter or margarine
3-4 cup water
2 tablespoons honey
2 teaspoons grated lemon peel
2 tablespoons minced parsley
3 1-2 cups herb seasoned croutons
1 (3-pound) whole chicken, washed and patted dry

Stir together 2 tablespoons melted butter and lemon juice. Saute onion in 1-4 cup butter in large saucepan until tender. Stir in water, honey, lemon peel and parsley. Add croutons, tossing lightly. Spoon into neck and body cavities of chicken. Fasten cavities by securing skin with skewers. Tie legs together with string. Place breast side up on rack in roasting pan. Brush with lemon glaze.

Bake at 350 degrees 1 1-2 to 2 hours or until tender, covering with foil during last part of baking to prevent overbrowning. Makes 4 servings.

ROLLED CHICKEN AND ASPARAGUS

2 whole chicken breasts, boned and skinned
24 to 30 small asparagus spears
3 tablespoons homemade or bottled oil and vinegar dressing
1-2 cup chopped green onions
1 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon black pepper
2 tablespoons sesame seeds, lightly toasted

Cut chicken breasts into 8 to 10 strips, about 6 by 1-inch strips. Wrap each strip in corkscrew fashion around bundle of 3 asparagus spears and place in shallow baking dish (wood picks are not necessary). Repeat for all strips.

Spoon oil and vinegar dressing over bundles, then sprinkle with green onions, salt and pepper. Cover and bake at 350 degrees 15 minutes. Remove cover and sprinkle with sesame seeds. Bake about 15 minutes longer or until fork can be inserted in chicken withease. Serve hot or chilled. Makes 4 to 5 servings, 2 rolls each.

CHICKEN-STUFFED ONIONS

4 to 6 large onions
Boiling salted water
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
2 tablespoons minced celery
1 cup chopped mushrooms
2 tablespoons flour
1 3-4 cups chicken broth
1 1-2 cups diced cooked chicken
4 tablespoons dry white wine
1 1-2 tablespoons diced green chiles
Salt, pepper
1-4 cup soft bread crumbs
1-4 cup grated Parmesan cheese

Peel onions, cut about 1-2 inch off tops. Remove centers and save for other use. Parboil onions in boiling salted water or broth until crisp-tender. Drain and set aside.

Melt butter in skillet or saucepan. Saute celery and mushrooms 2 minutes. Stir in flour, cook 1 minute. Slowly add chicken broth and simmer until thickened. Stir in chicken, 1 tablespoon wine and chiles. Season to taste with salt and pepper. Cool slightly. (Mixture should be thick enough for filling.)

Stuff onions with mixture and sprinkle with bread crumbs and cheese. Place in shallow baking dish with remaining 3 tablespoons wine and 1 cup chicken broth. Bake at 350 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until heated through. Serve with pan juices, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

CHICKEN COLESLAW

2 cups shredded cabbage
2 cups diced cooked chicken
1 cup diced apple
1 cup halved and seeded grapes
1-2 cup sliced celery
1-2 cup chopped walnuts
Honey-Cream Dressing

Combine cabbage, chicken, apple, grapes, celery and walnuts in bowl. Add dressing and toss gently. Cover and chill at least 1 hour before serving. Makes 6 servings.

Honey-Cream Dressing

1-2 cup sour cream
3 tablespoons honey
3 tablespoons mayonnaise
1 tablespoon lemon juice
Salt, pepper

Combine sour cream, honey, mayonnaise, lemon juice, and season to taste with salt and pepper. Blend well and chill.

Spam still a big seller

By DREW JUBERA
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

The second most important thing to keep in mind about Spam is that despite still being what it is — a can full of chopped pork shoulder, ham, and sodium nitrate, which in its pristine state looks like the side cut of a human forearm — it nonetheless continues to sell like . . . Spam.

In fact, Spam is selling more like Spam now than it ever did before — more so, even, than it did during World War II, which people who don't buy Spam figure is the last time that anybody did. Hormel, which manufactures it, says that Spam now has about 70 percent of the canned meat market. Perhaps God knows why.

(Note: Although more than 90 million pounds of Spam are now sold each year — picture, if you will, 90 million pounds of Spam — everyone who still buys it silently assumes that they are one of only six people in the world who has bought a can since Elvis was inducted into the Army. They also assume that, of those six people, they are the only ones who are not obvious social amputees.

(Additionally, those people who do not still buy Spam — and they number plenty — also think that only six people in the world have bought a can since Elvis was given his shots. They think, however, that of those six people still buying Spam, each one, totally and without exception, is nerd-like. As proof, they ask that you picture somebody eating a one-sixth portion of 90 million pounds of Spam.)

The third thing to keep in mind about Spam, particularly if you're one of the six people still eating it, is that it could very well be coming at you in a six-pound can. Think about that for a minute: a six . . . pound . . . can. Of Spam. When Spam's precursor, Spiced Ham, was first being packaged in 1927, technology was such that Hormel was forced to stuff it into six-pound cans. Six . . . pound . . . cans.

Finally, searching for an efficient way to dump all of the pork shoulder it had sitting around, Hormel developed a recipe that combined chopped pork shoulder with their ham (and their sodium nitrate). They had to delay marketing the result, however, because the only thing they could fit it into was their standard six-pound tub. Apparently a tub of Spam sounded excessive even to Hormel. The eventual 12-ounce can was developed nine years later, in 1936. That leaves something else to think about: somebody, at some point, went out and bought a six-pound can of Spiced Ham. Perhaps to atone for that, Hormel developed a quick-down seven-ouncer of Spam in 1964.

The fourth thing to keep in mind about Spam (quickly, a review of the three others for anyone scanning: Spam still is; Spam still continues to sell, despite what it still is; Depression-era technology saved us from a six-pound can of Spam) — the fourth thing to keep in mind about Spam is that few foods have taken more pies in the face. Say "Spam," and people immediately start edging in for the punch line.

Spam began taking its lumps early, during World War II, when its pre-cooked convenience and seven-year shelf-life made it a staple ration for GIs in the field. (Much of what many GI's thought was Spam, however, was often Hormel's variation on a theme, called "Government Spam," or a competing brand of canned meat. Spam became the buzz-word, it's supposed, simply because it was the commercial canned meat manufactured first.) Ironically, the abuse thrown Spam's way, begun during World War II and carried on to this day, has been largely responsible for keeping it alive, giving Spam almost unparalled name recognition. (The word Spam, by the way, is a foreshortening of Spiced Ham. The name was the achievement of an actor-brother of a Hormel vice president. No one else in the world knows this now but you.) Hormel couldn't be happier — they expected Spam to disappear after the war.

Suffice to say that ultimately there are two kinds of people in the world: those who don't eat Spam, and those six people who do.

Here are three gourmet Spam recipes for those six who have dared.

SPAM DIVAN BAKE
(Serves four)

1 small bunch broccoli (about 1 pound)
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 tablespoons flour
1-2 teaspoon onion powder
1-4 teaspoon dry mustard
1-2 teaspoon salt
Dash cayenne
1 1-2 cups milk
4 slices (4 ounces) American cheese, cut in small pieces
1 can (12 ounces) Spam
Paprika

Remove outer leaves and tough part of broccoli stalks; separate into smaller lengthwise pieces. Cook in small amount of boiling salted water until tender; drain. Melt butter in medium sauce-pan; blend flour, onion powder, mujstard, salt, and cayenne. Stir in milk. Cook over medium heat, stirring until mixture thickens and boils. Add cheese; cook, stirring until cheese melts. At this point you might want to ask yourself why you're doing this. Arrange broccoli in a single layer in buttered 12 x 8-inch baking dish; pour about half of sauce over broccoli. Cut Spam into 8 slices; overlap slices on top. Pour remaining sauce over top; sprinkle with paprika. Bake in 425 degree oven 10 minutes, or until piping hot.

SPAM A LA KING
(Serves four)

1-2 cup chopped green pepper
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
3 Tablespoons flour
1-4 teaspoon salt
Pepper to taste
1 cup water
1 cup half-and-half
1 chicken flavor bouillon cube (cubed?)
1 can (12 ounces) Spam, cubed
1 can (4 ounces) mushrooms, drained
1-4 cup chopped canned pimiento

In large saucepan, saute green papper in butter until tender. Blend in flour, salt, and papper until smooth. Stir in water, half-and-half, and bouillon; cook over low heat, stirring until bouillon dissolves and mixture boils and thickens. Add Spam, mushrooms, and pimento; cook and stir 3 minutes. Serve over rice or toast.

SPAM TETRAZZINI
(Serves six)

8 ounces thin spaghetti
1-4 cup butter or margarine
1-4 cup flour
1-4 teaspoon salt
1-8 teaspoon pepper
2 cups water
2 chicken flavor bouillon cubes
1 cup light cream
1 can (12 ounces) Spam, diced (diced?)
1 can (4 ounces) sliced mushrooms, drained
4 tablespoons grated Parmesan cheese, divided

Cook spaghetti according to package directions; drain. In medium saucepan, melt butter; blend in flour, salt, and pepper. Stir in water and bouillon cubes; cook and stir over medium heat until mixture thickens and boils. Remove from heat; mix in cream, Spam, mushrooms, and 2 tablespoons cheese. Wrestle with your conscience. Combine sauce and spaghetti; turn into lightly-greased 2-quarter casserole. Bake in 425 degree oven 30 minutes, or until bubbly and lightly browned on top. Observe yourself in a mirror and determine whether or not you are still there.

Mexican dishes provide good eating in California schools

By BARBARA HANSEN
Los Angeles Times - Washington Post News Service

Take a lesson in good eating with these recipes for Mexican dishes that are served in the public schools.

The recipes were provided by Norma Dalesio, administrative assistant in food services for the El Monte City School District, El Monte, Calif.

Mexican food is served at least once a week in the 18 elementary schools that comprise the district, Dalesio said. Popular dishes include burritos, tostadas, tacos, enchilada pie and quesadillas.

The high percentage of Mexican-American children in these schools accounts for some of the appeal of the Mexican dishes. "But the Anglos and adults like them too," Dalesio said.

The burritos and tostadas are especially well-liked and are useful recipes because their component parts can be used in other ways.

The bean-and-meat mixture that fills the burritos and the well-seasoned beans that top the tostadas can be served on their own as side dishes. And the enchilada sauce that is mixed with the burrito filling could be used on another occasion with enchiladas or chilaquiles or even as the topping for huevos rancheros.

SCHOOL BURRITOS

1 1-2 cups pinto beans
1-4 cup butter
1-2 pound ground beef
2-3 cup chopped onion
1 1-2 cups shredded Cheddar cheese
1-2 cup Enchilada Sauce
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
3-4 teaspoon chili powder
1-4 teaspoon garlic powder
12 (8-inch) flour tortillas
Melted butter

Sort and wash beans. Soak overnight in hot water to cover generously. The next day, cook beans until tender. Drain. Whip to coarse puree. Add butter.

Cook beef and onion together until beef is browned and onion is tender. Combine bean puree, meat mixture, cheese, Enchilada Sauce, salt, chili powder and garlic powder.

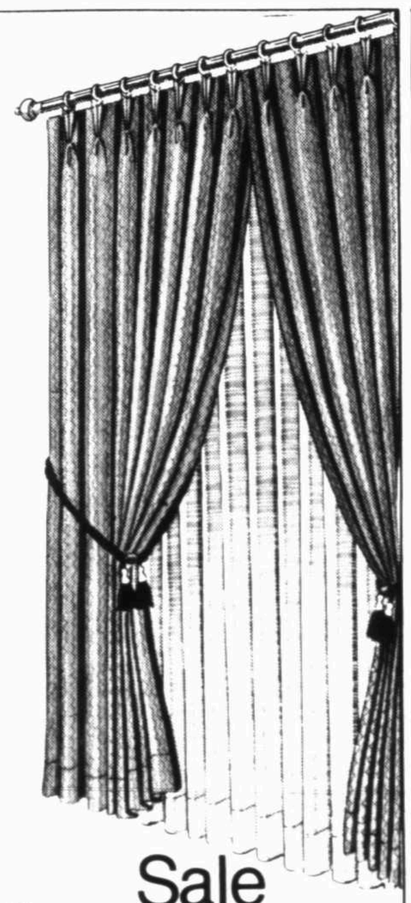

Wrap tortillas in damp towel and place in 250-degree oven until softened. Place scant 1-2 cup filling on each tortilla. Fold sides to center over filling and roll up from bottom. Place on oiled baking sheet. Brush well with melted butter. Bake at 350 degrees 15 to 20 minutes or until just heated through. If desired, sprinkle an additional 1 1-2 cups shredded cheese over burritos upon removal from oven. Serve at once. Makes 12 burritos.

ENCHILADA SAUCE

2 tablespoons lard or oil
2 tablespoons flour
1-2 cup canned tomato paste
2 1-2 cups water
1 tablespoon chili powder
1 1-2 teaspoons salt
Scant 1-2 teaspoon garlic powder
1-8 teaspoon black pepper

Heat lard. Add flour and blend. Combine tomato paste and water. Add to flour mixture and cook and stir until smooth and thick. Mix chili powder, salt, garlic powder and pepper. Add to sauce and simmer 30 minutes, stirring occasionally.

Strawberry Shortcake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

How do you like your strawberry shortcake? Many cooks still follow the original way of making that old-time dessert — they bake biscuit dough in a large, round pan. The moment the shortcake comes out of the oven, it is split, buttered, sandwiched together with strawberries and served piping hot with "pour" cream.

Other cooks — and I am one of them — prefer to make strawberry shortcake in individual form and serve it with whipped cream. It is a recipe of this sort I offer here. But no rolling of the biscuit dough is needed — it's patted out.

One hint: It is a good idea to have a helper (a sister, cousin, aunt or friend) at hand when the biscuits come out of the oven. To serve them warm, you have to fill and top them with berries and cream in short order. For this, four hands are better than two.

These biscuits are short and rich, so we advise splitting them carefully. But even if a few edges crumble, the strawberry shortcake will still taste wonderful.

STRAWBERRY SHORTCAKES

2 cups fork-stirred all-purpose flour
4 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
Sugar
⅓ cup (¼-pound stick) butter
2 large egg yolks
½ cup milk
1 large egg white, slightly beaten
2 pints strawberries (hulled, sliced and sweetened to taste)
1 cup heavy cream, whipped and sweetened to taste

In a large bowl stir together the flour, baking powder, salt and ¼ cup sugar. With a pastry blender cut in the butter until it is in fine particles.

In a 1-cup liquid measure, with a fork, beat the egg yolks slightly; gradually beat in the milk to blend; with the fork, stir into the flour mixture to make a soft dough. Divide the dough into 6 equal parts; form each into a ball. On a lightly greased cookie sheet pat out each ball, well apart, to a 3-inch round, moistening your fingers with the egg white to prevent sticking. Brush the tops with egg white; sprinkle with extra sugar.

Bake in a preheated 450-degree oven until golden — 10 to 12 minutes. (Tops may have some cracks.) With a wide metal spatula, loosen the biscuits and place each on a dessert plate. With a knife, split a biscuit horizontally, making sure that the top layer is thicker than the bottom one, to prevent the top from breaking. With a wide metal spatula or pancake turner lift off the top, leaving it on the spatula. Spread the bottom layer with strawberries and cream; replace the top layer; garnish with cream and strawberries. Fill and top the remaining biscuits, one at a time, the same way.

Makes 6 large servings.

Make some cooling summer refreshments with vegetables

By DIANE SAVAGE
Copley News Service

With hot summer weather just around the bend a good store of recipes for cooling drinks is a must.

A juicer, if you have one, is a great asset. There's nothing like fresh carrot or orange juice for full flavor and good nutrition. Not only do fresh juices have more vitamins than the store-bought kind, but the taste is far superior.

Once you've tried fresh-squeezed orange juice, you may find yourself unable to go back to those lamentably oversweetened frozen concentrates. A blender, too, is essential to the preparation of a large number of great beverages, especially smoothies and shakes.

While an occasional soft drink here and there won't do you any harm, do resist the temptation of making it a regular habit. Soft drinks, especially colas which contain a good deal of caffeine and sugar, are high in calories and low in nutritional value. If your children are prone to overdo it in the soft drink department, you should wean them away toward the more healthful home-made fruit beverages.

The beverages described below, all of which require the use of a blender, can wake you up in the morning or cool you down on a warm afternoon. For a festive touch, you might want to add a sprig of mint or a curl of orange to the individual glasses.

Fancy ice cubes are also a great way to make a drink look special. Fill the ice cube tray with water and place a strawberry, cherry, or chunk of pineapple in each section. Or simply fill the tray with orange juice and freeze, but watch that these don't get eaten before you're ready to use them.

HOMEMADE ORANGE JULIUS

4 cups orange juice, chilled
3 tbsps. honey
2 eggs
½ cup cracked ice
Pinch of salt

Put all ingredients into a blender and blend well, at medium tohigh spee, until frothy. Pineapple juice may be substituted for a Pineapple Jucius.

FRESH PEACH YOGURT SMOOTHIE

¾ cup fresh peaches, skinned and cut into chunks
4½ cups plain, or peach flavored yogurt
6-8 tbsps. honey
3 ice cubes

Blend until smooth ½ cup of the yogurt with fruit and honey. Addthe res of the yogurt and ice and blend until well mixed and smooth.

Here's a good cherry coffeecake

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
Associated Press Food Editor

If you enjoy pairing pink or red rhubarb with another fruit, you may be interested in a new recipe we've just tested. It's for a Cherry-Rhubarb Coffeecake that's delicious to serve at Sunday brunch.

As is my wont, in the following recipe I specified exactly the kind of dark sweet cherries we used — a 17-ounce can of the pitted variety. But if a jar of whole unpitted dark sweet cherries is at hand, don't hestitate to use it. Just pit the cherries after draining them.

This coffeecake may be brought to the table in its baking dish, cut there and served warm. Family and guests are likely to relish it as they linger over those last cups of coffee.

CHERRY-RHUBARB COFFEECAKE

Topping, recipe follows
17-ounce can dark sweet pitted cherries in heavy syrup
1 cup diced (½ inch) fresh rhubarb (about 5 ounces)
2 teaspoons cornstarch
1½ cups buttermilk baking mix
1-3rd cup sugar
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg
3 tablespoons butter, at room temperature
1 large egg
1-3rd cup milk
Make the topping

Grease and flour a 2-quart square baking dish (8 by 8 by 2 inches).

Drain the cherries, saving the syrup. You'll need 3 tablespoons of the syrup for this recipe; refrigerate the rest and use in a beverage or some other dish.

In a 1- or 1½-quart saucepan bring the rhubarb and 2 tablespoons of the reserved syrup to simmering; simmer, covered, until the rhubarb is tender — 3 to 5 minutes; remove from heat.

In a cup stir together the cornstarch and 1 tablespoon of the reserved syrup until smooth; stir into the rhubarb mixture. Over moderate heat, stirring constantly, cook until clear and thickened. Off heat, stir in the cherries; set aside.

Into the bowl of an electric mixer turn the baking mix, sugar, nutmeg, butter, egg and milk. Beat on low speed for ½ minute; beat on medium speed for 4 minutes. Spread half the batter in the prepared baking dish. Spoon the cherry-rhubarb mixture over it; add the remaining batter by spoonfuls, spreading it with a small spatula. Sprinkle with the Topping.

Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until the top is golden and springs back when lightly touched in the center — 35 minutes. Serve warm. Makes 8 servings.

Topping: Stir together 1-3rd cup each all-purpose flour, sugar and chopped (medium-fine) unblanched almonds; with a pastry blender cut in 3 tablespoons butter until it is in fine particles. Makes about 1¼ cups. Set aside until needed.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Woman shares tips for removing different types of super stains

DEAR HELOISE:

Help me, please! My white blazer and favorite white blouse, both polyester, each have an unsightly brownish stain. I washed them and let them soak in bleach for synthetic fabrics but the stains are still there.

I only wore them last summer, but would feel awfully tacky wearing them this year as is. If you know of a way to remove the stains, you'll make me very happy. — Mrs. T.J. Caderro

+ + +

The following letter from one of our readers, Mrs. Ruth Carr, could help you. I can't guarantee her tip will remove the stains from your clothes but it has removed several from mine. At least it's worth a try. Here's what she has to say:

"I work in an office where we use an offset printer. The ink is so gunky it comes in a caulking tube.

"When I get a spot on my clothes, I work a cream hand cleaner, such as the kind mechanics use, into the stain, then wash as usual.

"This hand cleaner has saved so many of my family's clothes, I can hardly believe it. Here are a few of the stains I have removed with it:

"Tar, offset ink, ballpoint ink, stamp pad ink (supposed to be absolutely permanent), grass stains, grease spots, a two-year-old stain from my daughter's party dress... I could go on and on, but try it for yourself.

"I keep the cleaner in the fridge as it seems to stay fresher, but if you have small children use caution — they might sample it!"

As I said, it's worth a try! — Heloise

CAKE DUSTING

Dear Heloise: To dust a cake with powdered sugar instead of frosting it, I use a 10-inch square of cheesecloth, folded into several thicknesses, if need be.

I put a half cup or so of powdered sugar in the middle of the square, tie into a pouch, and it's ready to use.

The best part is I just stick the cheesecloth in the can I keep my powdered sugar in and it's ready the next time I need it. — H.C. Woolcock

MICROWAVE-ING

Dear Heloise: I read someplace that a microwave oven does a great job cooking bacon and that you can cook lots of it at the same time, which sounds good to me because I have a large family. Do you know the technique for this? — C.D.

+ + +

Sure do. You simply put heaps of bacon on paper towels in a microwave-proof baking dish.

The towels absorb the fat and the microwave cooks all the bacon to a perfect crisp in short order. Check your microwave cookbook for timing, which will vary depending on how many strips of bacon you're cooking. While you're at it, read over basic rules for using a microwave to be certain you're not making any errors. Remember, a microwave calls for different cooking techniques than a stove. — Heloise

Pomegranates popular since ancient days

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

It has been referred to as the Chinese Love Apple and is one of the most unusual fruits in existence.

This romantic name for the pomegranate originated in ancient days when the Chinese regarded the fruit as a symbol of fertility.

The orange-size globe, with its hard, leathery skin, is crammed with seeds, but what flesh there is has a pleasantly acid taste. It can be eaten by itself, in salads, or pulp bits can be sprinkled over desserts.

Don't try to cook the pomegranate, or you will wind up with bitter mush. The best way to eat it is split open and served with a spoon.

There are other uses for the fruit, however. The seeds, with a little of the pulp clinging to them, make a tasty addition to a cream cheese and walnut mixture, and other foods.

A syrup is made from pomegranate that is better known than the fruit itself. Called grenadine, it is especially popular in France, and has long been a mix for drinks.

Grenadine, substituted for cassis, can be blended with champagne to make kir. The French like the flavor of grenadine so much that in warm weather they pour some in a glass of ice and mineral water to make a cooler.

A medium-sized pomegranate contains about 160 calories and is high in carboydrates, but its vitamin content is negligible.

Pomegranates were popular in ancient times, and King Solomon cultivated an orchard of them. They are also said to have been grown in the famous Hanging Gardens of Babylon.

Pomegranates have been cultivated in America since the middle of the 18th century. The bush-like tree on which the pomegranate grows will flourish in a variety of climates, but it produces the best fruit in regions where the ripening take place in warm temperatures and a dry atmosphere. It is most successfully grown in California and the Gulf States.

A tasty dessert can be made with this recipe for Orange and Pomegranate Compote.

ORANGE AND POMEGRANATE COMPOTE

4 naval oranges
2 pomegranates
1 tablespoon fresh lime juice
1 ounce Curacao
Sugar to taste (if desired)

With sharp knife pare rind and white skin off oranges. Cut into thin slices on plate to catch juice. Remove any seeds. Place orange slices in a glass serving dish. Cut pomegranates into quarters. Remove seeds. Remove white membranes from between seeds. Sprinkle pomegranate seeds and pulp bits over orange slices. Sprinkle with lime juice, Curacao and sugar to taste. Chill until ready to serve. Serves four.

Favorite apple pie

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

Far be it from me to sing the praises of apple pie or remind cooks that it is still one of America's favorite desserts. Enough has been written on that subject to induce me to leave it strictly alone.

But because I am often asked for my favorite apple pie recipe, here is the one that, at present, I like best. It calls for Granny Smith apples — the great variety that is here all year because nowadays it is grown in the United States and also shipped in from a number of other countries. And the pastry for the pie is made with butter.

YEAR-ROUND APPLE PIE

Butter Pastry, recipe follows
¾ cup sugar
¼ cup all-purpose flour
⅛ teaspoon ground cinnamon
⅛ teaspoon ground nutmeg
6 medium (about 1¾ pounds) Granny Smith apples
2 tablespoons butter, cut into small pieces

Make up the pastry and refrigerate as directed in the following recipe. On a pastry cloth, with a stocki-net-covered rolling pin, roll out half the pastry and line a buttered 9-inch pie plate with it; keep the remaining half of the pastry in the refrigerator. In a large bowl stir together the sugar, flour, cinnamon and nutmeg. Peel the apples, core and slice thin — there should be six cups; toss with the sugar mixture; turn into the pastry-lined pie plate; top with the butter.

Roll out the remaining pastry a little larger than the top of the pie plate; place over apples; seal edges well with your fingers — fluting will not hold its shape. Cut six to 12 one-inch slits for vents. Cover the edge with a 2- to 3-inch strip of foil. Bake on the rack below center in a preheated 425-degree oven until apples are tender and pastry is browned — 55 minutes.

Remove foil around edge about 20 minutes before the end of the baking period and place a sheet of foil on the lowest rack of the oven to catch any syrup that may bubble over. Serve hot with vanilla ice cream or cheddar cheese.

Butter Pastry: Into two cups all-purpose flour, with a pastry blender, cut one cup (two ¼-pound sticks) butter until the size of small peas. Sprinkle with one tablespoon of water at a time (you'll need about four tablespoons altogether) and mix with a fork until the pastry can be pressed into a ball; chill for at least 30 minutes before using as directed in the Year-Round Apple Pie recipe.

Coconut Macaroon Pie has different texture

By ROSE DOSTI
Los Angeles Times—Washington Post News Service

DEAR SOS: The Hollander Cafeteria in Glendale, California, has a marvelous coconut pie with a consistency more like pecan pie, not cream pie. I wonder if they would share their wonderful recipe. — MRS. E.L.

DEAR MRS. E. L.: Our taste panel flipped over the pie's unusual texture and good taste.

COCONUT MACAROON PIE

2 eggs
1 1-2 cups sugar
1-2 cup water
1-4 cup flour
1 teaspoon almond extract
1-4 teaspoon salt
1 1-3 cups shredded coconut
1 cup butter or margarine, melted
1 unbaked 9-inch pie shell

Lightly beat eggs in mixing bowl. Beat in sugar, water, flour, almond extract and salt until blended. Stir in coconut and melted butter. Pour into pie shell. Bake at 350 degrees 45 minutes. Let cool to warm. Cut into serving-size pieces.

DEAR SOS: I would appreciate receiving a recipe for sopaipillas, a Mexican fried bread. — MARIA

DEAR MARIA: The old Senor Pico's restaurant served these crispy fried breads with an apricot-pineapple sauce.

SENOR PICO'S SOPAIPILLAS

1 package dry yeast
1-4 cup warm water
3 cups flour
1 cup buttermilk
1-2 teaspoon salt
1 tablespoon lard
Deep hot oil
Apricot-Pineapple Sauce

Stir yeast into warm water and let stand until dissolved. Measure flour into deep bowl. Make hollow in center and pour in dissolved yeast. Add buttermilk and salt and mix thoroughly. Add softened lard and mix until dough pulls away easily from sides of bowl and from hands.

Cover bowl with towel and place in warm, draft-free area. Let dough rise for one hour to one hour and 15 minutes. Punch down and let rise again for 30 minutes. Punch down, remove from bowl and roll out until 18-inch thick. Cut dough into ovals, squares, triangles or rectangles, and place on greased wax paper. Leave at room temperature.

Heat oil to 400 degrees. Add sopaipillas a few at a time and fry until golden brown on each side. Drain and serve with Apricot-Pineapple Sauce. Makes about 21 sopaipillas.

Apricot-Pineapple Sauce

2 cups apricot-pineapple preserves
1 cup water
1-8 teaspoon vanilla

Combine preserves and water. Bring to a boil and simmer for 20 minutes. Remove from heat and strain through fine strainer, then stir in vanilla and let cool. Makes two cups sauce.

DEAR SOS: About two years ago, you printed a recipe for chile relleno casserole. I've made it with wonderful compliments from those who tried it but I loaned it out and it was never returned. — MARY

DEAR MARY: This is the Lawry's casserole recipe that many readers have requested be reprinted.

LAWRY'S CHILE RELLENO CASSEROLE

1 pound bulk pork sausage
1 small onion, chopped
2-3 cup bottled taco relish
3-4 cup milk
4 eggs 1-4 cup flour
2 cups shredded Jack cheese
2 (7-ounce) cans whole green chiles, seeded

Brown pork until crumbly and well done, about 20 minutes. Add onion and saute until transparent. Drain fat. Add taco relish and cook over medium heat until mixture thickens. Beat together milk, eggs and flour and add cheese. Layer chiles, pork mixture, cheese and egg mixture in greased eight-inch square baking pan. Repeat layers ending with cheese and egg mixture. Bake at 350 degrees 45 minutes. Let stand 10 minutes before serving. Makes six to eight servings.

Note: An eight-ounce can stewed tomatoes and one package Mexican rice seasoning mix can be combined as a substitute for taco relish, if desired.

Delicious asparagus

By CHARLOTTE BERCAW
Copley News Service

When spring arrives, cooks' fancies turn to asparagus and their favorite ways of serving it.

In addition to being delicately delicious, asparagus is abundant in vitamins A and C, potassium and phosphorus. It's also a blessing for dieters because each spear averages around four calories.

Regions around the Mediterranean Sea were the first sites where edible asparagus was grown. The Greeks and Romans used it for food and medicine 2,000 years ago. In the United States, asparagus has been cultivated since the 1600s.

When shopping for asparagus, select spears that are round, smooth (without up and down ridges) and deep green. The tips are tightly closed in top-quality asparagus.

The idea that thin spears are the best is a myth. Actually, jumbo spears are more tender and cook up to a delectable tender-crisp stage. And they look so much more generous and inviting on the serving platter.

If you must keep asparagus for a couple of days, wrap it in wet paper towels, put in a plastic bag and refrigerate in the coldest part of the refrigerator.

When ready to cook, take each spear in both hands and bend gently. Brittle spears break, separating the tender upper ends from the tougher lower ends. Discard tougher ends. Cut scales from a few spears to see if any sand, grit or mud is lodged beneath them. If there is, cut off all the scales.

Wash asparagus in cool water, brushing gently with a soft brush, and drain for use.

When cooking fresh asparagus, place prepared stalks in salted water and bring to a boil. Cook for six to seven minutes. Asparagus is done when a fork penetrates the stalks easily.

Many people enjoy their asparagus with simple accompaniments like melted butter seasoned with lemon juice or hollandaise sauce.

For those who want to try something a little fancier, check the following recipes.

ITALIAN BAKED ASPARAGUS

2 tbsps. margarine or butter
1 lb. cooked asparagus, drained
2 tbsps. finely chopped onion
2 tbsps. finely chopped celery
1 medium tomato, sliced
⅛ tsp. oregano leaves
⅛ tsp. thyme leaves
Dash pepper
1 tbsp. grated Parmesan cheese

Heat oven to 350 degrees F. While oven is heating, melt margarine in 10x6 inch (1½-quart) baking dish in oven. Remove dish from oven. Place asparagus in bottom of dish. Sprinkle with onion and celery. Arrange tomato slices on top. Sprinkle with oregano leaves, thyme leaves, pepper and cheese. Bake at 350 degrees F for 15 to 20 minutes (or until thoroughly heated). Makes four servings.

ASPARAGUS SOUFFLE

3 lbs. cooked asparagus (reserve cooking liquid)
1¼ cups butter
6 tbsps. flour
¾ cup milk
4 egg yolks
6 egg whites, stiffly beaten
¾ cup French bread crumbs
1 tsp. grated orange peel
Celery salt and pepper to taste
¼ tsp. basil

Force asparagus through a sieve or puree in a blender to make 1½ cups. Melt ¼ cup butter in a heavy saucepan, stir in flour, gradually add milk and ¼ cup reserved liquid. Cook sauce over low heat, stirring constantly, until thickened. Add the asparagus puree; cool slightly. Beat in egg yolks and seasonings; fold in egg whites. Pour into a buttered souffle dish, set the dish in a pan of water, bake at 375 degrees, 45 minutes, until puffed and brown. Brown bread crumbs in one cup butter; add orange rind and seasonings. Serve souffle at once, with brown butter sauce in a sauceboat. Makes six servings.

ASPARAGUS BREAD

2 eggs
1 cup sugar
¾ cup salad oil
1½ cups sifted flour
¼ tsp. salt
1 tsp. soda
¼ tsp. nutmeg
1 tsp. cinnamon
1½ cups finely diced asparagus
¾ cup chopped nuts
1 cup raisins

Beat eggs, sugar and oil until creamy. Blend in combined dry ingredients. Stir in asparagus, nuts and raisins. Pour into 9x5-inch bread pan. Bake at 350 degrees F for 45 minutes or until done.

ASPARAGUS WITH CREAMED CHICKEN

3 cups cubed, cooked chicken
2 cans (10¾-ozs.) cream of mushroom soup
¼ cup dry sherry or dry vermouth (optional)
¼ cup minced green onions
¼ cup minced celery
1 tbsp. fresh lemon juice
1 tbsp. Worcestershire sauce
2 tbsps. butter or margarine, melted
1½ lbs. fresh asparagus slices, cooked
1 can (3½-ozs.) french-fried onion rings

Heat oven to 375 degrees F. Combine chicken, mushroom soup, optional sherry or vermouth, green onions, celery, lemon juice and Worcestershire sauce. Place chicken mixture in a greased 9-by-13-inch baking dish. Add butter or margarine to cooked asparagus, coating well. Top chicken mixture with asparagus. Cover with foil and bake for 30 minutes; uncover, top with onion rings and bake five to 10 minutes longer.

Newark should change its name for new outlook on life

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Special Correspondent

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Thoughts rising up with the industrial smog over the Pulaski Skyway: The time has come, in fact is long overdue, for Newark, N.J. to change its name.

Newark has always enjoyed or been depressed by a poor press and low, low self-esteem, largely because of its name. Sitting off all by itself there across the New Jersey meadows or what's left of them from the New York skyline, Newark has become a bad word, almost as bad among provincial New Yorkers, who have this thing about the Holland Tunnel and the George Washington Bridge, as New Jersey.

There is a short story by John McNulty, who of course wrote for the New Yorker, that begins very deprecatingly with one New Yorker on a Manhattan barstool asking another, "Pal, was you ever in Newark?" It goes down hill from there. Newark is a turn off, a negative buzz word.

Newark could end all this and get a new lease on municipal image-success by giving itself a new name. Eagle Rock, perhaps, after that big rock on the outskirts of town or maybe Kellerville, for Charley "King Kong" Keller who boomed a big bat for the Newark Bears in the days of my youth when I lived in Newark, which I don't talk about much anymore on account of the town having this hang dog moniker.

Lots of places are changing their names these days to get a new outlook on life. The first thing the Argentines did when they occupied the Falkland Islands was to change the name to the original Spanish tag of Islas Malvinas. They twice changed the name of the capital, Stanley, ending up with Puerto Argentino, which must have caused some confusion down at the post office to the 1,000 or so citizens of the town but made no difference to the 900,000 sheep. The English inhabitants will have a little trouble at first inserting those hidden h's into the language that the really refined Spanish speakers affect. The capital should come out "Poo-air-ho HarHenHino," or something like that.

Just the other day Zimbabwe, which used to be called Rhodesia, changed the name of its capital from Salisbury to Harare, retiring another British statesman from the map of Africa and giving the folks at Hammond and Rand McNally a reason for coming up with a revised atlas in time for the Christmas trade.

Not all the new names grab you right away.

Saigon to me will always loom larger in literature than Ho Chi Minh City because of Graham Greene, Somerset Maugham and Jean Larteguy, the fine French novelist. Besides, Ho Chi Minh wasn't the fellow's real name anyhow, just one of his many revolutionary pseudonyms, which is no way to go about renaming a city. If nicknames count, you might as well rename New York the Big Apple, which is trendy and pretentious and a trifle smug (making all the rest of the cities Small Apples or perhaps even Small Potatoes) but welcome nonetheless, because why keep on giving all this publicity to a forgotten Duke of York? New Jersey, too, has paid enough obeisance to our imperial past.

Maputo, the big apple of Mozambique, is easier to spell than Lorenzo Marques, whoever he was, but somehow it doesn't have a romantic ring to it, the way faraway places should.

I have no quarrel with changing the name of the Belgian Congo to Zaire, but why did they have to rename the famous river and render obsolete Vachel Lindsay's fine poem, which no one ever calls on me to recite anymore at parties? Also changing Stanleyville to Kisangani just cuts Spencer Tracy out of the African picture.

Sri Lanka may be more content with its national image than when it appeared on maps as Ceylon, but it's just not my cup of tea. I just can't see myself going into the food hall at Harrod's or Fortnum and Mason's or Macy's and asking for a pound of Sri Lanka.

Mulligan's Stew

The people in Fernando Po seemed happy enough with their new national designation as the Republic of Equatorial Guinea, when the Pope visited there earlier in the year, and for all I know may go around gaily warbling their new national anthem, "Let's Walk Through the Jungle of Our Immense Happiness."

To me Benin doesn't seem as romantic as Dahomey, and Kampuchea hasn't caught on at all as Cambodia, but I have no quarrel with Belize and Bissao over whatever they used to be called.

Many of our American cities could profit by taking a new name.

We don't need a Charleston, S.C., and a Charleston, W.Va. I would ask the latter to consider calling itself something else, becase the former has a Restoration air about it more in keeping with the saga of swinging old Charles II.

Springfield, Mass., and Springfield, Ill., are twice s many Springfields as we need, to say nothing of the one in Vermont and another in Missouri and who knows where else? I would give the nod to Illinois here, because of its Lincoln associations and let the others use their imaginations a little. I don't recall ever seeing a spring or a field in Springfield, Mass., so the name can't have all that many emotional associations there. If the city fathers are willing, this column would gladly provide a forum for receiving new name nominations. Perhaps the prize could be a week in Springfield, and let's please not have any jokes along that line.

I admire Baton Rouge for the originality of its name, and Truth or Consequences, N.M., if it's still called that.

The long stretch of warm, sunny days in northeastern Ohio was perfect for sun worshippers, but the accompanying dry spell has area farmers concerned for their crops.

On my brother-in-law's first day of action with a field-artillery unit in Vietnam, his gun crew nervously awaited the call from the forward observer detailing their targets. Anxious moments slipped by with sweaty palms being wiped on dirty fatigues until, at last, the call came through. The soldiers stiffened as a young GI answered the field phone and listened intently for a few moments. The tension vanished, however, as he said calmly into the mouthpiece, "Honey, I told you never to call me at work."

We and two other families in our neighborhood gave a party to welcome our new neighbors, a retired Army colonel and his wife. The evening was a great success, and our guests of honor expressed their appreciation over and over. "Really, this has been just wonderful," they exclaimed again as they were leaving. "We do these things for each other in the Army, you know, but we didn't know that people did!"

When I applied for Conscientious Objector draft status, a friend suggested that I ask a variety of individuals to write and explain their personal knowledge of my sincerity as a non-violent person. After getting letters from several friends, I decided also to ask my nine-year-old brother to write one. His letter, which was never submitted to the draft board:

Dear Sir,

I think I know Billy pretty good since he is my big brother and we have known each other all my life and now.

I'm 9 years old. He never shot a gun or hurt anything.

He is against violence. He doesn't even fight. I don't know why he wants me to write this, but he said he would break me in half if I didn't. So I did.

At a U.S. Air Force base in England, a sign hanging in the office of the Security Police desk sergeant read: "He who hears no evil and sees no evil isn't doing his job."

Upon completion of his basic Army training, a friend of mine was ordered to report to headquarters for assignment. "I see your record says you took typing in school," said the sergeant in charge there.

My friend, wanting no part of an office job, replied, "Yes, but I got mostly Ds."

Said the sergeant: "Well, we have a critical shortage of typists. I'll give you a little test." He picked up a pamphlet and a sheet of paper and, pointing to a desk across the room that held a typewriter and an adding machine, said, "Go over there and type a couple of paragraphs from this." My friend did as he was ordered. However, he made it a point to type very slowly, and saw to it that his work contained several errors.

The sergeant gave the typed copy only a brief glance as he took it from my friend's hand. "That's fine!" he said. "Report for work at 8 tomorrow."

"But aren't you going to check the test?" my friend asked.

The sergeant grinned. "You passed the test," he replied, "when you sat down at the typewriter instead of at the adding machine."

When my grandson joined the Air Force Reserve in 1970, all the young men were required to shave off their beards and mustaches.

After completing basic training, however, they were permitted to grow mustaches of regulation length and shape. My grandson eventually became aware of a distinct personality change in one of the reservists who had grown a mustache. At each monthly meeting, this young man kept more to himself, speaking only when spoken to, and then answering curtly in a grim, stiff-faced manner.

One weekend, while on duty, the two reservists drove to the cafeteria for lunch. The mustachioed airman said stiffly that he preferred to eat in the car, and asked my grandson to bring him a hamburger. Handing it to him, my grandson was astonished to see him withdraw from each corner of his mouth the long handlebar of a magnificent mustache — the ends of which he had been keeping tightly coiled in each cheek!

While I was stationed in Africa during World War II, a buddy of mine had an abscessed tooth. After weeks of suffering, he finally had the tooth extracted at our field hospital. When I asked him if the extraction was very painful, he replied, "It hurt. But it was worth it just to hear an officer tell me to open my mouth."

During a recent trip to Sheppard Air Force Base in Texas, I attended evening Mass. At the conclusion of the services, the priest turned to the congregation and inquired, "Does anyone have a birthday today?" One man, a newly enlisted airman, happily stepped forward and said, "I do, Father."

Father replied, "Good! You can blow out the candles."

Taking austerity too far

MEDFORD, Ore. (AP) — When public schools here stopped serving hot lunches as a cost-saving step, 11-year-old Rachel Devlin took her own austerity measure.

The fifth-grader at Griffin Creek Elementary School carried her lunch to school Monday in the same brown bag for the 144th straight day.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Actress Bea Arthur, distinguished drama critic Clive Barnes and former U.S. Sen. Mike Gravel (D-Alaska) celebrate birthdays today. Also born on this date: the greatest of all heavyweight fighters, the late Joe Louis. Like romance, financial security is very important to your happiness. In the coming year, you pursue prosperity with a vengeance and find rich success in the areas of business, land development and the arts. Your efforts to promote teamwork bring the desired results. You receive the cooperation you need to move forward on several different fronts. Do not leave loved ones in the dark about your long-range plans.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your career plans win cooperation from the top. Approach higher-up for a raise. Avoid becoming the target of gossip. Attend a business function with loved one.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Make some concrete plans for improving your employment situation. Socialize with your colleagues and entertain those who are influential.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day for seeking credit if planning to buy a car. A romantic illusion is shattered. Take off your rose-colored glasses. Loved one may not be at fault.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Use your keen intellect to evaluate your co-workers' assets and liabilities. You accomplish the most by working alone. If single, think about a long-term commitment.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A critical time for business and marital partnerships. Influential person offers you excellent advice on increasing your earning power. Follow it.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A financial matter requires expert advice. Double-check figures and do everything possible to safeguard savings. Patience and tolerance are your strongest allies. Play a waiting game.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Your work schedule is busier than usual. Do not fret if business negotiations are halted. Catch up on routine chores. Comparison shopping helps cut household expenses.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A last-minute change is upsetting. Intrigue can lead to heartaches. Avoid it like the plague! You are now able to cement your relationship with someone fascinating.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be careful not to overlook an important angle. Public relations mean the difference between winning and losing a contract.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You have to deal with some stubborn people today, but in the end, you have more money and greater prestige. Continue to emphasize financial planning.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19): A family member could make important demands on your time today. The romantic outlook is mixed. Stick to social circles where you can be comfortable.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You now struggle to keep a current project in proper perspective. Take whatever is said at place of employment with a grain of salt.

The bidding:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	4 NT	Pass
5 ♡	Pass	6 NT	Pass

Opening lead: Two of ♡.

We have been taken to task for suggesting that rubber bridge and duplicate are really two entirely different games. To fortify our contention, consider how you would play this hand at those two forms of the game.

There is nothing to the auction. After North opens the bidding, South's hand is worth going to slam, and it's simply a matter of whether you play in spades or no trump. South chose the latter, in case one of his minor suit tenaces needed protection from the opening lead.

At duplicate bridge, the first question you ask yourself is whether you are in a good contract. Obviously, the answer is yes. Next, are the other pairs sitting in your direction likely to get to slam? Again, the answer is yes. Therefore, you must make at least the same number of tricks that they do.

The slam is safe if spades break either 2-2 or 3-1. The only problem is a 4-0 distribution. This is far less likely than a 2-2 division. If you take a safety play to protect against a 4-0 split, you will lose to all those pairs who cashed the ace-king of spades and found a 2-2 division. So you lead to the spade king at trick two and go down when East shows out.

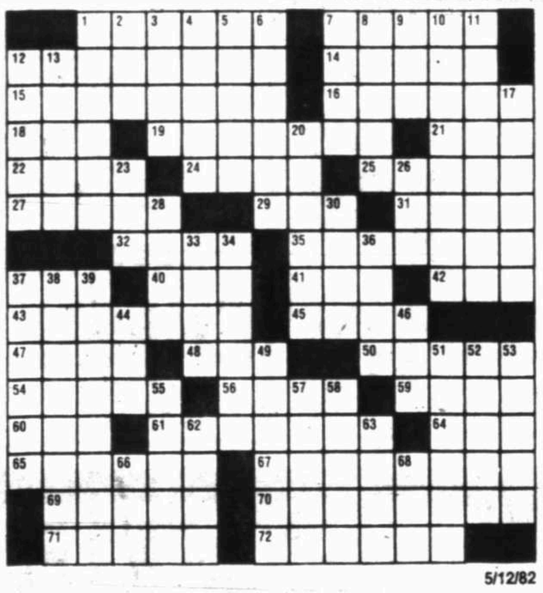

At rubber bridge, or even IMP team-of-four play, the overtrick is relatively unimportant. You stand to lose so much if spades break 4-0, and to gain so little if you find an even spade split, that it would be foolish not to guard against an unlucky distribution. At trick two, therefore, you lead a low spade from hand and, if West plays low, you finesse the eight. Your foresight pays off when East shows out. You lose only one spade trick, but you make your slam and pocket a fair amount of change in the process. (If West plays an honor on the first spade lead, you win and play a low spade to the nine. Now you can finesse for West's remaining honor.)

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Charles Goren's "Four-Deal Bridge" will teach you the strategies and tactics of this fast-paced action game that provided the cure for unending rubbers. For a copy and a scorepad, send $1.75 to "Goren-Four Deal," care of this newspaper, P.O. Box 259, Norwood, N.J. 07648. Make checks payable to Newspaperbooks.

Businessman's task is to find bureaucratic waste

EDITOR'S NOTE: J. Peter Grace, a gruff, no-nonsense businessman with limitless disdain for the Washington bureaucracy, has the president's carte blanche to search for waste and inefficiency. He arrived in the capital recently and discussed his mission with The Associated Press.

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When J. Peter Grace took over the family firm, W. R. Grace & Co. owned a federally regulated airline, a federally subsidized steamship line and a national bank.

Twice a week, Grace came to Washington to handle the company's dealings with the government. Fed up, he sold all three and vowed to "have nothing to do with Washington."

"I don't like businesses where you have to come down with your hat in your hand to ask people in Washington for favors," he said. "You always get the raw end of the stick."

Now the blunt-spoken Grace is back — this time with a hunting license from the president.

President Reagan appointed Grace to head a task force with the uncharacteristically bureaucratic title of the President's Private Sector Survey on Cost Control in the Federal Government. His mission: save money.

Peter Grace, who turns 69 this month, took over W.R. Grace at the end of World War II. He was 32 years old and out of college less than 10 years, but he soon set a new course for the company that his grandfather founded in Peru in 1854 and which was still specializing in trade with Latin America.

ASKED RECENTLY what business he is in now, Grace said, "We're in almost every business you can imagine. We are mainly a chemical company making specialty proprietary chemicals that are used in packaging, and we are also the largest producers of fertilizers in the world.

"Moving out of chemicals, we're in oil and gas and coal in the energy field. We also have a very large business in the energy services field, such as 110 drilling rigs, all kinds of down-hole services in the oil drilling business and then, in addition to that, we sell about $1.2 billion in retailing. That's in sporting goods and home centers, if you want to repair your home, and we have jewelry stores; we have Western apparel, and then we have 600 restaurants. So that's the picture."

Since February, Grace — among the most enthusiastic backers of the Reagan economic program — has been recruiting other corporate officials to volunteer for a coordinated assault on government operations.

"I don't start with the theory that government is inefficient," Grace said on his first day in his new Washington office. "I do start with the theory that anything that's very big is probably inefficient. I also start with the theory that new looks can always find new things."

He already has encountered his first stumbling block. The idea of setting between 65 and 80 of the nation's corporate giants loose on the bureaucracy raised a plethora of conflict-of-interest questions. Most of those corporations — or their competitors — have substantial government contracts or dealings with regulatory agencies.

"I can't stand legal questions," Grace said. "... I'm bored to death by legalities.

"RIGHT OFF THE bat, people said, 'You can't bring all these people down here.' So we have to get all these conflicts settled before we can appoint anybody to anything. We've been held up over two months."

In the meantime, Grace is using people and computers from his own company to collect data and reports that each of the 20 or more privately financed survey teams will set out with when they head for their assigned agencies.

"Each team is gonna be handed a package," Grace explained. The package will contain "a spread sheet with 1,000 columns showing every expense item from 1962 through 1983...the average annual growth rate and different ratios of every expense item, by state, by foreign country and so on, plus all the GAO reports, IG reports, special studies, all bibliographed with page numbers referenced."

Spread sheets are computer printouts which, to the unacquainted, look like a virtually endless, and meaningless, jumble of numbers.

A man at least as comfortable with figures as he is with words, Grace describes the spread sheets this way:

"You start usually like this; you can read it very fast; you get quick at it. It folds out, and it tells the story. You run right across the whole thing sort of like a storybook. If it's organized properly, it's very, very interesting to follow it ....

"Y'know, you take a secretary with ya' and read her two numbers, y'know, boom boom, boom boom, boom boom, boom boom and go cut and (say) 'bogey them ' which means rank 'em, 'and get 'em back to me in half an hour.'

"YOU GO AROUND the room like that, and you've suddenly got the whole bloody thing analyzed. You'd walk around the room in, oh, 12 minutes doin' that."

"Girls! Girls!" Grace shouts out into the hall. "They have no bells here?" he asks.

A middle-aged woman appears in the doorway, and her boss orders up a spread sheet. She reappears with a printout three or four inches thick.

He unfolds the paper and demonstrates the art of reading it.

"Now, this is National Defense-Other, which means other than Army, Navy and Air Force," Grace explains. "This has gone from 1962, 3.7 billion, to 10 billion in '70, and in 1981 it was 47 billion, and '82, 47½ billion. Here's capital spending, land and structures, equipment, uh, quarters, unvouchered refunds, anything you want, you see. It's all here ..."

"What Willie Sutton said," Grace continued. "They asked him, 'Why do you rob the banks?' And he said, 'Because that's where the money is.' Well, here it is. Here's where the money is."

GRACE SAID his outside investigators will have carte blanche to search their assigned agencies for whatever waste they can find.

"There's no way this thing could work unless we do that," he said. "Four months to go over $800 billion? Y'know, it's crazy. If you didn't do it that way, you'd go nuts."

The anti-government executive acknowledged that the operation may hurt some feelings and fray some tempers before it's over.

"You can't put a bunch of very aggressive people into where they're gonna look good if they can find a lotta crap against some other peoplewho are more or less doin' that and not expect there to be some clashes, right?"

The flashpoint, Grace said, is the personal pride of those who do things the way they have always been done or the way they think best.

"I've always said that when you're in business, once you walk in the front door of your office, leave your pride outside," Grace said. "There's nothing personal about business. It's all impersonal, getting a job done. If somebody can show you that you're a jerk and you've been doin' it wrong, you ought to kiss him on both cheeks and love him dearly."

Minister refuses to die

BLUEFIELD, W.Va. (AP) — Buford Muncy's heart has thumped to a stop 29 times in the past 3½ years, but the 44-year-old Baptist minister has confounded the experts each time by living to die another day.

Muncy was released Monday from Bluefield Community Hospital after recovering from his latest heart ailment. His wife, Mary, said she's lost count of the times doctors have pronounced her husband dead and been proven wrong when his heart restarted.

She also said she's lost track of the times health officials have announced he couldn't hope to live beyond a few months.

"And he's still living — that's the best thing," Mrs. Muncy said as she waited for her husband to go home once again. "I just give glory to God."

Mrs. Muncy, who would not allow her husband to be interviewed, said he was a surface-mine safety inspector with Allied Chemical Co. when he suffered his first heart attack at Beckley's Raleigh General Hospital on Nov. 6, 1978.

Since then, he's suffered three more heart attacks, his heart has stopped 29 times, and he's been defibrillated with electric current to restart his heart 36 times.

Bluefield Community Hospital public relations director Jim Worsham and Dr. James Lesnett, Muncy's doctor, confirmed the number of stoppages.

Dr. Bhasker Pujari of Bluefield, who has watched the case from the beginning, called Muncy's repeated recoveries "amazing."

"It certainly is," Pujari said Monday night. "As far as I know, I don't know of anyone who has been defibrillated 36 times and he has walked out of the hospital.

"I know several people who were defibrillated as many times, but they all died."

Defibrillation is the process of applying electric current to restore a normal rhythm in a heart that is undergoing rapid and uncontrolled contractions and producing ineffective heartbeats.

In one eight-month period, Muncy's heart stopped 13 times, Mrs. Muncy said, and doctors in Beckley said on four occasions that her husband was dead.

"But then the nurses and the doctors would go to work and defibrillate him, and then they would come out and tell me to straighten up, that he was still with us," Mrs. Muncy added.

The couple traveled to Cleveland Heart Clinic in March 1979, where doctors said Muncy had only 10 months to live, Mrs. Muncy said.

"They just didn't give us any hope at all," she said.

Muncy's latest heart attack came on Dec. 19, and his latest heart failure was in March after he entered Bluefield Community Hospital.

Congolese five-year plan depends on oil exports

By SUSAN LINNEE

BRAZZAVILLE, Congo (AP) — The most popular song in Africa's first Marxist-Leninist state is a catchy dance tune called "Money Attracts Money."

The recording by Congolese bandleader Pamelo Mounk'a blasts forth from bars and discos throughout this capital, a sort of musical confirmation that the People's Republic of the Congo is headed for a sustained period of petroleum-fueled economic growth.

On the wide, tree-lined streets of what was once the capital of French Equatorial Africa, gold-on-red signs exhort all 1.5 million Congolese to achieve the goals of the 1982-86 five-year plan.

Although not yet officially released, the plan reportedly relies heavily on expected revenue from petroleum production, projected to reach 140,000 to 200,000 barrels a day by the end of the decade.

European — mainly French — entrepreneurs and businessmen are returning in large numbers to Brazzaville after closing up shop when the first oil boom faded in the mid-1970s.

Hotels are full of travelling salesmen, and the wholesale price index for European consumers in the capital has climbed 22 percent since 1980. Flights to Pointe Noire, the oil town on the Atlantic coast, are booked weeks in advance.

ECONOMIC OBSERVERS say the turnaround has arrived not a minute too soon. The Congo suffers from poor internal transportation, stagnating agriculture and costly parastate organizations. Migration to Brazzaville and Pointe Noire, the two main urban centers, is placing growing pressure on public services.

Along with the economic upswing, diplomats and foreign businessmen have noticed a parallel turning to the West, accompanied by increasing hostility toward Soviet technical advisers.

An explosion in March at the Star movie theater here killed five people and seriously injured 14 others. It was described by diplomats as "disturbing" to the four-year-old government of Col. Denis Sassou-Nguesso. They say the incident, never officially called a bombing but widely believed to have been intentional, is unusual in a country that has seen a good deal of turmoil since independence in 1960, but most of it among rival factions in the military.

In 1969 the Congo became the first African country to call itself a people's republic and Marxism-Leninism became the official ideology. Successive governments brought about by military rivalries fueled by the most consistently radical youth movement in Africa have continued to pay lip service to these principles.

Sassou-Nguesso, named head of state in 1979 after the mysterious assassination of President Marien Ngouabi two years earlier, finally made his state visit to Moscow last May — after the Soviet authorities had put it off four times.

But the friendship treaty he signed there does not include the usual reference to Soviet help "in case of foreign aggression." The president also refused to allow the Soviets to establish a naval base at Pointe Noire.

SASSOU-NGUESSO, who also heads the Central Committee of the Congolese Labor Party, cultivates close ties with France while nuturing the revolutionary cult of Ngouabi. The slain president's portrait is seen at the capital's main intersections along with those of Marx, Engels, Lenin, Ernesto "Che" Guevara, Patrice Lumumba, the first premier of neighboring Zaire (then the Democratic Republic of the Congo), and the late Angolan leader, Augustinho Neto.

The Congo has maintained close relations with China through the years, and Chinese development assistance is reported by some sources to rank even ahead of that from France and the European Common Market.

But nearly all private investment comes from France and Common Market countries, which are also the main trading partners.

Soviet-bloc countries take no more than 6 percent of Congolese exports and provide less than 1.5 percent of its imports.

Apart from the Soviets who picnic on weekends on the banks of the Congo River, there are few signs of an East bloc and Cuban presence, although Cubans train the para-military militia and gendarmes.

While the government is pursuing liberal economic policies, particularly in the area of foreign investment, its domestic politics are authoritarian.

Brig. Gen. Joachim Yhombi-Opango, who took over as head of state after Ngouabi's assassination, remains under house arrest two years after losing out in an ideological test of strength with Sassou-Nguesso.

THE GOVERNMENT has prohibited circulation of editions of the French newspaper Le Monde and the trendy Parisian magazine Actuel. Both carried articles on the tug-of-war between the French and the Soviets for influence in the Congo.

Party censors recently decided after six months' deliberation to ban a novel published in France by a young Congolese writer, Sony Labou Tansi. The novel, "L'Etat Honteux" (The Shameful State), is a zany story of an imaginary African government that gets carried away by its own rhetoric.

'Wary Canaries' on allergy alert

KENT, Wash. (AP) — JoAnn Pinyerd is allergic to heating oil, carpeting, wallpaper, synthetic clothing and 140 foods. Eating some fruits and vegetables puts her to sleep.

The 44-year-old woman calls herself a "chemically sensitive" person. She and about 60 others with severe allergic reactions to common substances in the modern environment have banded together to form a sort of early warning system.

Their group, called the Wary Canaries, has set out to alert others to the environment's hazards.

Organized last fall by Zee Randegger of North Bend, the group took its name from the old practice by coal miners of taking canaries down shafts to detect hazardous gases. If the birds keeled over, the miners knew there was gas present.

"We feel we're the modern-day canaries. We're letting the 20th century know about these illnesses. We feel we're the detectors of the modern-day environment," Mrs. Pinyerd said.

The group hopes to alert the public to the impact of chemicals on the environment and humans.

Two years ago, Mrs. Pinyerd was hospitalized for a month in the "environmental unit" at Presbyterian Medical Center in Denver. Learning about her allergies helped explain her physical problems.

Chronically ill and suffering from a variety of complaints, she had spent years going from doctor to doctor searching for an answer and fighting the "hypochondriac" label.

She was fired from a job with the Boeing Co. after she returned from the Denver hospital because she was too sensitive to environmental pollutants undetectable by most workers, she said.

She and her husband, Ken, have turned their home near the Seattle suburb of Kent into a fortress against petrochemicals and other substances that cause her dizziness, headaches, sleepiness, mood changes and disorientation.

Because she is allergic to petrochemicals, wood stoves are used instead of oil heat whenever possible.

Since formaldehyde in carpeting causes a reaction, they have slate in the hallway and wood floors in other rooms.

"We don't have drapes because of the fibers and the chemicals," Mrs. Pinyerd said. Walls are painted with a special brand of paint or are papered with grass cloth instead of standard wallpaper.

Even organizing the Wary Canaries has proven hazardous to her health. On Monday, she walked into a copying business to have the group's newsletter printed, but she was overcome by chemical odors.

"I wasn't in there 30 seconds and my face got numb," she said.

The newsletter is intended to provide chemically sensitive people with answers to such questions as where to get organically grown food and how to get clothes cleaned without irritation, Mrs. Pinyerd said.

Indians turn to Mexico for help

DENVER (AP) — An Indian tribe stung by federal budget cuts and weary of government control of its economic destiny has turned to a Mexican company to learn how much oil and gas is under 100,000 acres south of the Grand Canyon.

"Even though I am (among) the 'first Americans,' I can't seem to rely on or depend on my own country," Hualapai tribal chairman Delbert Havatone said Monday.

The Hualapais have lost $500,000 of their $1.5 million annual budget because of federal budget cuts over the last 16 months, Havatone said, pushing ahead the decision to develop the resources of their desert wilderness.

About a dozen oil companies' representatives were on hand Monday as officials from the tribe and CAASA International Inc. of Mexico explained the seismic and geochemical survey to begin on the reservation this summer.

Hualapai and CAASA officials refused to estimate revenues from possible development of the tract, but tribal officials said they believe their oil and gas rights will mean "economic independence" for the 1,500 tribal members.

Havatone said CAASA seems willing to obey the environmental guarantees the tribe wanted. It was CAASA's "honesty" about such details that helped form the partnership, he said.

Past superficial surveys of some of the Hualapai's 1 million acres have been done, said Edgard Walema, a tribal council member, "but those results were never available to us."

"They're somewhere in the (Bureau of Indian Affairs)," Walema said.

Wells that are already producing to the north and south have led some geologists to believe the Hualapai land may cover a linking reservoir of oil.

CAASA International is the U.S. branch of the firm responsible for more than a third of the petroleum discoveries of PEMEX, the Mexican national oil company. CAASA President Carlos Aleman said his company also is talking with the San Carlos Apaches in southern Arizona about an arrangement similar to that of the Hualapais.

The decision to accept CAASA's offer for a thorough survey of the tract was made because tribal leaders were impressed by the possibility of taking primary responsibility for their land's development away from the BIA, said Havatone.

The tribe hasn't been favorably impressed by the U.S. private sector, either, Havatone said. "For so long, we see people grabbing, wanting more — always, they want a little more."

Royalty scandals uncovered last year on the Wind River Reservation of Wyoming and on other federal oil tracts also made the Hualapais reluctant to let U.S. governmental agencies have any more than a reviewer's role, said tribal counsel Thomas Acevedo.

Actors' union vetoes merger with extras

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Although a majority of actors voted to merge the Screen Actors Guild with the extras' union, the favorable vote was less than 60 percent, so the unions will not join at this time.

SAG president Ed Asner, vacationing in Colorado, said the issue would probably be raised again.

Asner proposed the merger, as well as another with the 50,000-member American Federation of Television and Radio Artists. He said the defeat, by a vote of 56.7 percent to 43.3 percent, means "the only winner in this situation is management."

The vote in mail balloting, which ended at 5 p.m. Friday, was 11,394 in favor of the merger and 8,670 opposed, the union said.

Asner had said a single union of actors and extras would help both groups because many producers use non-union extras, which he said undercuts the wages and job conditions of union extras and of actors who do work as extra players.

Charlton Heston, a former SAG president who opposed the merger, called the vote a "shattering defeat" for Asner's forces because "historically, recommendations of the union's board of directors are overwhelmingly approved by the membership."

The merger defeat was the second for Asner in a week. Only last week, the "Lou Grant" television show in which Asner stars was canceled by CBS. It's a move that some people said was based in part on Asner's role as a supporter of a program giving aid to a guerrillas in El Salvador.

"The membership has voted and we shall abide by their decision. However, we shall be able to carry on further discussions within the membership and reconsider the matter at a later date," Asner said.

"Naturally, I'm pleased," said Heston, adding he viewed the vote "as a victory for the professionals within the guild who did not perceive the merger as serving their best interests. I think most professional actors believe that they had little to gain and much to lose in a merger with the extras."

The Screen Extras Guild membership approved the merger by a 76 percent vote last March 24.

The actors union has a membership of approximately 50,000 and the extras union has 5,100 members.

Cable industry told of pros, cons

WASHINGTON (AP) — The theme emerging from the National Cable Television Association's annual convention is that everything about the cable industry — including its problems — is growing.

In just five years, the number of cable subscribers across the country has doubled, to roughly 24 million. New subscribers now are being added at the rate of 250,000 a month.

On the other hand, cable operators were told at their 31st annual convention last week that they must learn to market their product to counter competition from subscription TV stations and microwave pay TV systems.

The operators were presented with the results of a study showing consumers do not yet place a great value on cable's ability to deliver dozens of channels. Instead, they're only concerned about getting four or five special channels featuring things like movies and sports, the survey showed.

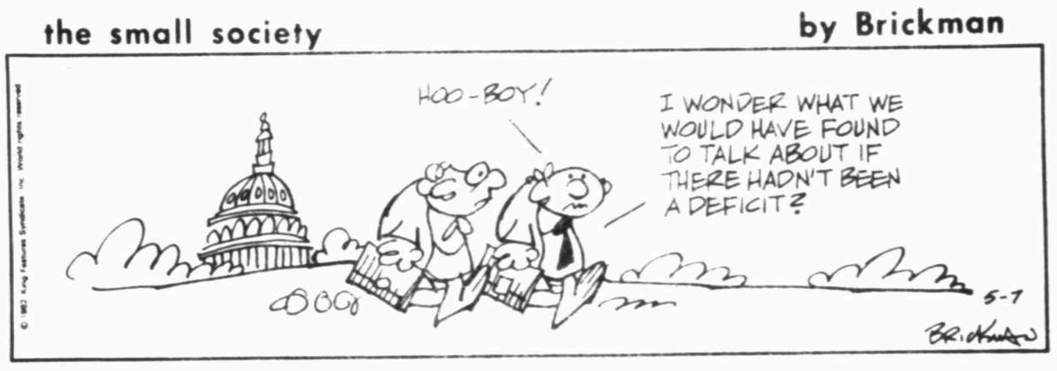

Leonard Matthews, president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies, said cable has made significant progress in attracting the interest of commercial advertisers, but that the industry might never reach its potential if it can't develop methods similar to broadcasting to measure audiences and prove performance.

On the plus side, cable is moving closer to the day when non-entertainment services — ranging from home security to one-way news distribution to two-way shopping at home — will become critical money-makers. Each such venture, however, will require substantial commitments of time, money and research.

Entry into the home security business, for example, will require much more than just new technical facilities, one convention panel was told. Subscribers want security services, but cable operators probably will face the expense of hiring a new staff just to verify home alarms because the rising incidence of false alarms is prompting police to demand verification.

While non-entertainment services may pose a question mark, there are developments in the entertainment area that offer more immediate possibilities for growth, the operators found. The technology for pay-per-view service has improved dramatically, according to equipment manufacturers, freeing operators to offer a wide variety of programming.

Asner bolsters protest

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A protest against the cancellation of the CBS television show "Lou Grant" turned into a shouting match between supporters of actor Ed Asner and demonstrators who backed U.S. involvement in El Salvador.

John Ichinaga, one of about 200 demonstrators picketing CBS studios Monday night, chanted "Stop the blacklisting. Save 'Lou Grant.'"

Asner supporters carried signs saying they were protesting the CBS decision to drop the TV series after ratings dropped sharply. In the drama, Asner portrayed the city editor of a Los Angeles newspaper.

The protesters, who marched at the busy corner of Fairfax Avenue and Beverly Boulevard, contended the cancellation was prompted by Asner's support of guerrillas battling the U.S.-backed government in El Salvador.

The professional tennis exhibition at Chaparral Center Tuesday night was certianly something you don't see at your local court on an average Saturday or Sunday afternoon, but the intensity of the pro sport just wasn't there.

Then again no one probably expected blood and guts matches when they shelled out their $10 to see Stan Smith, Bob Lutz and the Gullikson twins — Tim and Tom — go at it.

The foursome gave of themselves for the estimated 1,000 tennis fans that showed up for the exhibition, but lighthearted is the best way to describe the event. There was some good tennis and some unusual shots along the way, but the no ad matches still left a hunger for some "real" competition. But then again Midland is not exactly the center of the pro circuit and maybe we should be satisfied with exhibitions.

THE SINGLES match proved to be the highlight of the evening, even though Smith and Tim Gullikson played only one no ad set. Both have been playing well as of late. It was certianly no proof of superiorty, but Tim won the match by a 7-5 count while showing a booming serve that had Smith tied up most of the match.

"I'm playing better now than I have in the last three years," Tim Gullikson said after his showing. "I'm ranked 60th right now, but I'm trying to get back into the top 20. I'm going home to Florida for a little rest before the grass court tournaments start in England."

Smith, who is headed for Tulsa, Okla., along with Tom Gullikson for their next pro tournament stop, said the Midland exhibition was a rarity for him.

"I like to play exhibitions occasionally, but I don't play a lot of them," Smith said. "My game has been very good of late. I've recently won a tournament in Sideny, Australia, and also a team match there. I'm looking forward to Tulsa."

SMITH, A former Wimbledon and U.S. Open champion, teamed with Lutz against the Gullikson twins in the doubles exhibition. That was a good match in that the two teams play a lot of doubles matches together and it showed. Smith and Lutz won both sets by 7-6 counts, tiebreakers needed to decide both.

Lutz and Smith have combined for numerous doubles titles over the span of years and Lutz seemed to enjoy the relaxed atmosphere of exhibition tennis.

"I'd like to play more exhibitions," Lutz stated. "But maybe there's not that many people who want to pay to see me play."

Tom Gullikson admitted that he has been struggling with his singles game, saying, "It's been a very good year for me in doubles. I've won two tournaments already this year, but it's been very bad for me in singles. My ranking has slipped from 40 to about 90. I'm going to Tulsa, but I'm only playing in the doubles. My in-laws live in Tulsa, so it is going to be sort of a vacation for me."

OVERALL THE players seemed to give up quickly on the hard shots, but there were some occassions to open some eyes. Lutz put a spin on one ball that landed in front of Tom Gullikson only to come back across the net. Tom came with the ball and ended up laying in the court of Smith and Lutz, who refused to help him up.

Smith produced two shots in the matches that had the crowd buzzing. One was a back-handed, back-to-the-net return that was a real smash against Tim Gullikson. The other was a cross court sneaker that had Tom retreating for an expected deep shot only to get passed in the forecourt.

"The match was good for me because it gives you a chance to work on some shots you might not be so ready to use in tournament play. It gives you a chance to play with fans and linesmen in a tournament situation and that is hard to come by," said Tom Gullikson.

In a short four game set, Lutz teamed with Midland junior player Miles Boldrick while Smith teamed with District 5-5A girls champion Vee Ann Atnipp. Lutz and Boldrick won by a 3-1 count, despite Boldrick finding only air on one perfect smash setup.

MC leads JUCO nationals

PALM BEACH, Fla. — Midland College took the early lead in the National Junior College Athletic Association Women's Championship tennis tournament here Tuesday with seven point in the first day of action.

The best part, however, was that Coach Leon Dulin's troops didn't lose a first round match. Since Karen Mannheimer is the only sophomore on the team, it was important for the MC women to do well in the first round. They have now seen the competition and know they can play at this level.

Following MC after one day of play is Pease JC of North Carolina with five, Indian River of Michigan with four and Texas' Cooke College with four.

MC's hefty lead is mainly due to the fact that only Kym Somerville is seeded in the No. 4 singles and drew no byes in the first round. Tyler JC and Indian River are expected to be the teams to beat. MC tied for the national title last year.

MC got some added help Tuesday when Cooke lost a No. 1 singles match and the Chaparrals defeated Pease's No. 5 seeded team in the No. 2 doubles.

MC took four singles matches Tuesday, all in straight sets. Liz Alvarado won a No. 1 singles match with a 6-3, 6-2 win over Katrina Matheson of Central Florida while Jodi Wertenberger won her No. 2 singles match against Cathy Holmes of Gainesvill, Ga., 6-2, 6-3.

Mannheimer clipped Mary O'Connor of Mesa, Ariz., 6-1, 6-3, in the No. 4 singles play while Somerville ran past Deb Carston of Grand Rapids, Mich., in easy 6-0, 6-0 fashion.

Alvarado and Mannheimer teamed to take an easy 6-0, 6-0 win over Kimsey-Poulitto of Mineral Area, Mo., in the No. 1 doubles round while Wertenberger and Somerville had the toughest test of the day with a 6-3, 1-6, 6-3 victory over Key and Pileggi of Pease in the No. 2 doubles round.

The Chaparral start on Tuesday was a good one, but there is still a long way to go before claiming any national honors. The tournament runs through Friday.

Lakers use defense to defeat Spurs, 110-101, for 2-0 lead

By KEN PETERS
AP Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Most noticeable about the Los Angeles Lakers is their free-wheeling, flashy, fastbreak offense. But they seem to think good defense has put them where they are.

The Lakers are sitting atop a 2-0 lead over the San Antonio Spurs in the National Basketball Association's Western Conference finals, one bracket away from the league championship series.

They whipped the Spurs 110-101 Tuesday night after taking the opener 128-117 two days earlier. The best-of-seven series now shifts to San Antonio, with the third and fourth games on Friday and Saturday.

Reflecting on Tuesday night's game, Lakers Coach Pat Riley said, "Our defense was just excellent again...and we did a good job of dominating the defensive boards."

"Overall, I think our defense won out," said Los Angeles forward Jamaal Wilkes, whose 22 points shared Laker high-point honors with guard Norm Nixon. "Another great team effort defensively."

Laker center Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, who had 16 points in the victory, said: "Our defensive play has been very consistent. It seems when we play a hard defensive game, our fastbreak works better."

Mike Mitchell scored 34 points for the Spurs, but the Lakers did a solid job defensively on league scoring leader George Gervin. He wound up with 18 points, just slighty over half his average, and had only three points in the first half.

"We tried to deny George the ball at all times," said Wilkes. "I play him one-on-one, but as soon as he puts the ball on the floor, we double-team him. It seems to be working and I think that's been the key to stopping them."

The Lakers rallied from a 79-78 deficit at the end of three quarters, pulling away to a 10-point lead before the final period was half finished.

"They were able to pick up a lot of loose balls in the fourth quarter and turn them into fastbreaks," said San Antonio Coach Stan Albeck. "I think the turnovers and three Laker layups at the start of the fourth quarter turned things around."

The Lakers displayed depth and balance in the victory. Kurt Rambis led Los Angeles in rebounds with 15, while Earvin "Magic" Johnson had 19 points, 11 rebounds and nine assists.

Indy 500 magic number 200

By MIKE HARRIS
AP Motorsports Writer

The magic number at the Indianapolis Motor Speedway is 200 — 200 mph, to be exact.

"To the naked eye, the difference between 195 (mph) and 204 (mph) is invisible," explains Tom Sneva, the official all-time speed leader at the Indianapolis track. "All you really know is that the car is going awful fast. But somehow, going over 200 is special for the fans, and the driver gets a charge out of doing it, too."

It's a relatively new phenomenon at Indy, but one fast losing its uniqueness.

Gordon Johncock unofficially broke the barrier in the spring of 1977 during a tire test on Indy's 2½-mile oval. Sneva made it official that May when one of his four qualifying laps was timed electronically at 200.401 mph. His overall qualifying speed was 198.884.

The all-time record was established the next year when Sneva put together a four-lap set averaging 202.156. A.J. Foyt, Rick Mears and Danny Ongais then joined the club with single laps better than 200 mph.

The low-slung, bullet-like Indy cars were slowed by rules changes in 1979, but Sneva — always a leadfoot but never a winnzr at Indy — and eventual race winner Bobby Unser both got above 200 in 1981. Sneva was timed for four laps at 200.691, Unser at 200.546.

This year those speeds may not even be good enough for the first two rows in the May 30 race, much less earn the pole position as the fastest first-day qualifier.

"The rules-makers always talk about slowing down the cars and the teams and drivers keep trying to go faster," notes Mears, the 1979 Indy winner. "It's a never-ending battle.

"If the rules-makers strip away speed by changing aerodynamics, somehow the engine builders find more horsepower. If the horsepower is restricted, the designers get it back in new aerodynamics — like ground effects."

The Indy 500 is the only Indy car race sanctioned by the U.S. Auto Club. USAC's rules on the skirts which affect racing aerodynamics differ from those of Championship Auto Racing Teams, which sanctions the rest of the Indy car schedule.

At Indianapolis, the stationary skirts at the bottom of the chassis must remain integral to the body. They must remain well off the ground, defeating at least part of the ground effects.

Perlman nails down third win

TULSA, Okla. — Things got a little rough for Midland Cub pitcher Jon Perlman in the fourth inning against the Tulsa Drillers, but a little help from his teammates and two strike outs got him out of it without giving up a run.

Perlman went seven innings for the Cubs and picked up his third win of the season against one loss as Midland downed Tulsa 6-4 in Texas League action.

In that rough fourth inning, the Drillers threatened to cut Midland's 5-1 lead when the first three batters connected for singles to load the bases. The fourth batter, Jerry Neufang, grounded into a force out at home plate for the first out followed by Perlman striking out Mike Jirschele and Bobby Ball.

The only run Tulsa was able to score off Perlman came in the third run, and it was unearned. Jirschele reached first on an error by Cubs second baseman Jim Payne, stole second and went to third on an infield hit by Shake Moore. Ron Gooch brought him home with a sacrifice fly. Except for the fourth inning, Perlman and the Cubs were in control of the ball game.

Midland coach Brian Murphy opted to go with reliever Jim Gerlach to start the eighth inning and that's when the Cubs started losing ground. Gerlach was able to get only one out in the inning while giving up two runs and leaving second reliever Mike Thompson with runners at the corners. With Don Scott on third, Thompson came in and walked Jirschele to load the bases. The next batter flew out on an infield fly to Fritz Connally at third base and then Shake Moore connected for an RBI single, scoring Scott and recording Tulsa's final run. In the ninth inning, Tulsa went down one-two-three to give Thompson his first save of the season.

Henry Cotto opened the scoring for Midland in the first inning when he received a gift double from Tulsa outfielders Shake Moore and Tommy Dunbar who got their signals crossed and failed to make the play. Mike Kelley then hit an RBI double for a 1-0 lead.

With two gone in the third inning, Kelley picked up a second double and was able to walk on home when Joe Carter hit his fourth home run of the season. Carmelo Martinez added a fourth double to the Cubs' box score with his shot to right-center and scored on Connally's single to right. Connally went to second on the fielders choice when Tulsa tried for Martinez at home and scored on Carlos Lezxano's RBI single to center.

The final Cubs run came in the fourth inning on an error by Scott at catcher. Dave Owen reached first on a single and went to second on Payne's ground out to second. Cotto received a walk and both runners took off on a double steal. Scott's throw to second was wild and Owen came home.

The 6-4 victory gives the Cubs a 14-15 season record and five wins in their last seven outings while Tulsa fell to 11-18. Tonight, if the rain which started at 3 a.m. lets up, the two teams will square off in game three of the series.

Cubs recall Cox to Major Leagues

CHICAGO (AP) — The Chicago Cubs recalled catcher Larry Cox from their Class AA team in Midland, Texas, Monday and optioned outfielder-infielder Tye Waller to their Class AAA team in Des Moines, Iowa.

Cox was hitting .136 for Midland with six hits in 44 at-bats with no home runs and two RBI. He was invited to spring training this year as a non-roster player.

In 1978, Cox compiled a .281 batting average in 59 games with the Cubs. He had two home runs and 18 RBI.

Canucks playing good, but not good enough to win opening two

By BARRY WILNER
AP Sports Writer

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — It isn't exactly the goon style that helped the Philadelphia Flyers win two Stanley Cups in the mid-1970s. It's more a slowdown, bump-and-grind game the Vancouver Canucks are employing against the two-time defending National Hockey League champion New York Islanders.

And, though it has worked for a great portion of the first two games of this best-of-seven final series, the Canucks didn't win either game.

Roger Neilson's surprising Canucks, who wound up 41 points behind the Islanders in the regular season before storming to the championship series, lost Tuesday night 6-4. Added to a 6-5 defeat in overtime of the series opener, that puts Vancouver in a 0-2 hole as the teams head west. The third and fourth games of the series, in which the Islanders are trying to become the first United States-based team to win three NHL titles in a row, will be played Thursday and Sunday in Vancouver.

"It's been one guy trying to prove he's tougher than the other," said Isles left wing John Tonelli. "In the Stanley Cup playoffs, you'll do anything to win. That's what it is all about."

The Islanders have done plenty on the numerous power plays they've gotten in the two games. They've scored three power-play goals in each game, including the game-winner Tuesday by Bryan Trottier in the third period.

"It's like jumping in a ditch and going bump for bump, grab for grab," said Trottier. "They're trying to annoy us, to slow us down."

It hasn't worked at crucial times, such as in the third period of the second game. Vancouver took a 3-2 lead into the period, getting goals in the middle session from Thomas Gradin and Ivan Boldirev on power plays of their own and an even-handed tally from Lars Lindgren on a nice setup by Gradin, who was the best player on the ice.

For the Islanders, Billy Carroll had gotten a shorthanded goal in the first period and Mike Bossy put in a power-play shot in the second.

"After the second period, Roger mentioned that we shouldn't take retaliation penalties," said Vancouver defenseman Harold Snepsts. "He said it was one of the biggest periods of hockey in the playoffs for us. But we got panicky and got away from our system of remaining calm."

First Bob Bourne rapped in a 10-foot shot for New York's second power-play goal of the night at 32 seconds. Just 47 seconds later, Duane Sutter took a pass from brother Brent and beat Canucks goalie Richard Brodeur to make it 4-3.

"Those two quick goals got us running around," said Snepsts, who added that the players have complete faith in Neilson, "but this was the first time we didn't listen to him."

Gerry Minor tied it with a 30-foot slapshot that Isles goalie Bill Smith had no chance on at 2:27. Then Dave "Tiger" Williams and Smith got into a stick-swinging duel and the Islanders wound up with a power-play.

"It was a stupid penalty," Smith said of Williams' actions, which earned the truculent Canuck four minutes in the box, while Smith got only two. "At that point, it can really hurt. We got the winning goal (by Trottier) on it, didn't we."

"Tomas (Jonsson) took a shot and it went off the end boards," explained Trottier, who already has set a Stanley Cup assist record this spring with 20. "I saw the goalie sprawled on the ice and I put it in.

"Actually," he added with a smile, "we planned it that way."

The hard work of the Islanders' "Banana Line" resulted in the sixth New York goal, by Nystrom with 5:50 to play. That line of Nystrom, Tonelli and Wayne Merrick — given its nickname because all three players where yellow shirts in practice — has been particularly frustrating for the Canucks.

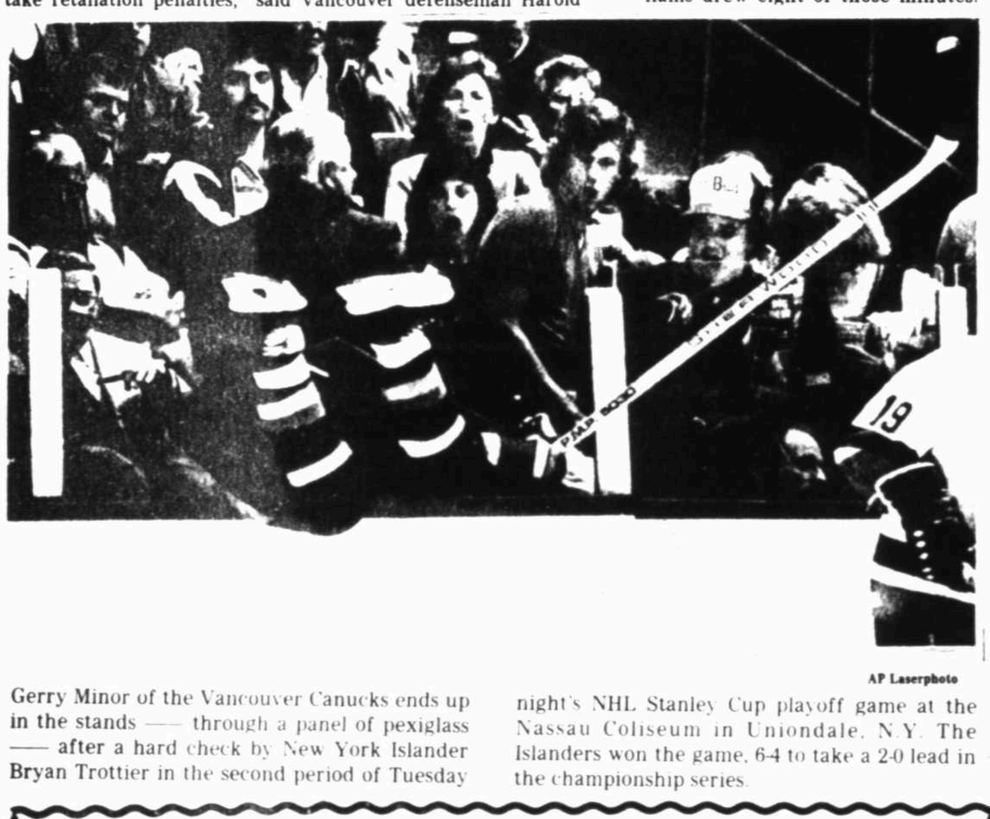

"We like to be respected as hard workers who can finish off a play," said Tonelli. "They'll know we'll come at them and they have to be extra careful."

But the Canucks have not been careful enough. Can they recover from being down two games to a club like the Islanders?

"We've been in both games," said Neilson. "I'm disappointed but not discouraged."

Williams was optimistic.

"It's not frustrating," said the man who played a major role in referee Ron Wicks whistling 96 penalty minutes Tuesday — Williams drew eight of those minutes.

US Football League will compete for talent, not fans against NFL

BY TOM CANAVAN
Associated Press Writer

NEW YORK (AP) — The fledgling United States Football League has no intention of competing with the National Football League for fans.

College football players are another market, though.

Boasting of strong ownership and hopeful of windfall profits from the cable-television market, the 12-team USFL unveiled itself Tuesday as the alternative to six months of football-less springs and summers.

But good football requires talent and that's where the USFL will have to challenge the NFL.

"The players will come from the 45,000 young men playing college football each year of which 200 make it in the NFL," said David Dixon, the league's founder and owner of the Chicago franchise. "We'll get some of the 200 and a good number of the others."

Lou Saban, expected to be named head coach of the league's Denver franchise, said he believed the current player pool could serve the needs of both leagues.

"I think there are a lot of young people that mature at a later date in their lifetime and there is enough talent to make this a good solid league," said Saban, a former Denver Broncos head coach and now an executive with the New York Yankees. "The NFL is a giant, a great league, and it's going to take a lot of time for this league to catch up. But they're (the owners) going to do the best they possibly can to attract the best talent."

The USFL season will have a 20-game regular season that will run from March through June with the first championship game scheduled to be held the night of July 4, 1982. The current NFL schedules run from September to December with playoffs in January.

"The United States Football League believes that the sports fan in the United States wants to see more than the current 16-game professional football season," said acting USFL chairman Peter Spivak, alluding to the current NFL schedule. "After all, his favorite baseball team plays a 162-game schedule and the basketball season runs 82 games."

"The American public loves football and I don't think they're going to back away from good football," added Saban.

Leonard's fans are driving Johns Hopkins operators crazy

BALTIMORE (AP) — As its famous patient recovers quietly from eye surgery, Johns Hopkins Hospital officials are coping with a flood of telephone calls from the fans of world welterweight champion Sugar Ray Leonard.

"Just driving us crazy," was what one switchboard operator said Tuesday night about the volume of telephone calls for Leonard.

And Gusta Drake, the head operator on the switchboard, estimated that three of every five calls are from Leonard's wellwishers.

"They just want to know how he is and they want to talk to him," Mrs. Drake said. "He's not receiving telephone calls and in fact he has it turned off."

Hospital spokesman Richard Peck said most calls are not being forwarded so that the 25-year-old champion may recuperate from Sunday's two-hour surgery on his left eye to repair a detached retina.

"He basically has to rest, Peck said, "so that's what he's doing, no direct calls are being forwarded ... He's spending a lot of time sleeping."

Peck said Tuesday night Leonard remained in good condition at the hospital's Wilmer Eye Institute.

Doctors who performed the surgery say it's too early to predict whether Leonard will fully regain the vision on his left side. But Dr. Ronald G. Michels, the ophthalmologist who headed the surgical team, said he was optimistic Leonard would be fully recovered in four to six months.

While Leonard recuperated, there were these other developments in the boxing world to his eye problem:

—Contrary to an earlier report, John Prenderville, chairman of the New York state Athletic Commission, said his group had no plans to investigate the injury, which became public seven days before Leonard was to defend his title against Roger Stafford in Buffalo, N.Y., this Friday.

—Stafford said he was disappointed by the cancellation of the bout. "I could cry," he said. "I have trained for 16 hard weeks ... but I'm also concerned about Sugar Ray. I hope that he recovers fully."

—Boxing figures such as promoter Don King and World Boxing Council President Jose Sulaiman urged Leonard not to return to the ring even if his sight returned to normal. "As a friend, I believe with all the money and all the glory he has attained that Sugar Ray should retire," Sulaiman said.

—Officials of the WBC and the rival World Boxing Association, which both recognize Leonard as the world welterweight champion, said they would ease deadlines for a defense of the championship to accomodate Leonard while he recuperates.

Technically, Leonard would have to defend his WBA title by July to hold it. But WBA vice president Bob Lee said he expected that to be relaxed.

"I strongly believe that our championship committee will give him six months to recuperate and make up his mind," Lee told the Baltimore Sun. "I am going to ask Leonard's attorney, Mike Trainer, to furnish us with a medical report, but until Sugar Ray makes a firm decision, I can't envision us (the WBA) holding any elimination bouts. It would be like burying a guy before he's dead."

And Bob Busse, chairman of the WBC's ratings committee said exceptions are usually made for boxers.

National League Roundup

Obscure rule catches Russell off guard

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

Whatever Bill Russell was thinking of, it certainly couldn't have been the obscure baseball rule that says a runner is out when "he fails to reach the next base before a fielder tags him or the base, after he has been forced to advance by reason of the batter becoming a runner."

What that means in English, among other things, is that if the catcher drops a third strike with two out and the bases loaded, all he has to do to end the inning is pick up the ball and touch home plate for a forceout.

The Los Angeles Dodgers were trailing the Philadelphia Phillies 9-6 in the seventh inning Tuesday night with two out and the bases loaded. Ken Landreaux struck out, but the ball got away from catcher Bo Diaz and Landreaux beat his throw to first.

Russell, who was on third, was obviously puzzled by the play and didn't run. And when first baseman Pete Rose threw the ball back to Diaz, the catcher touched the plate and the inning was over, just like it says in the rule book.

The Dodgers picked up two more runs in the eighth, but that left them one short and the Phillies beat them for the second night in a row by a 9-8 score. Russell and Los Angeles Manager Tom Lasorda had a shouting match after the game that was easily heard from behind the closed door of Lasorda's office. Neither one, however, would comment.

Nevertheless, the outcome gave the Phillies their eighth victory in nine games and lifted them into third place in the National League East past the slumping Montreal Expos, who lost to the San Francisco Giants 5-4.

In Philadelphia, newsmen heard Lasorda ask Russell, "What were you thinking about, Billy?"

"I don't know," Russell replied.

Lasorda said, "I'm going to have to fine you, Billy."

The shortstop replied, "I'll never pay it."

Some colorful language followed as Lasorda insisted it would cost Russell $150 and Russell shouted: "I'm not going to pay it. You're not going to show me up."

The angry Lasorda barked, "You'll never play for me again."

When the door opened, Lasorda was asked if he intended to go through with the fine. "None of your business," he snapped.

Rose, a veteran of 21 major league campaigns, said he had never seen the strange play before. "At first, I didn't know what to do with the ball. I knew he (Landreaux) beat it to first. I looked like a genius, but I didn't know what I was doing."

It was that kind of a game — 25 total hits, five stolen bases by the Phillies and four errors by the Dodgers — as Philadelphia erased a 5-3 deficit with four runs in the fifth inning and ended Dodger starter Jerry Reuss' four-game winning streak. Ivan DeJesus' two-out, two-run single broke a 5-5 tie.

Giants 5, Expos 4

Jack Clark, who tied the game 1-1 with a fifth-inning homer, doubled home the go-ahead run in a three-run sixth. After Clark's tie-breaking double, the Giants loaded the bases with two out and Jim Wohlford beat out a grounder to second baseman Tim Raines, who was slow in making the throw to first. Both Evans and Clark scored on the play. The Giants scored what proved to be the winning run in the ninth on doubles by relief pitcher Greg Minton and Chili Davis.

Cardinals 5, Reds 1

George Hendrick singled, homered, scored two runs and drove in two. Hendrick's home run, his eighth of the season, came off Mario Soto in the fourth inning. He also rapped an RBI single in the first off Soto, who started the game with a string of 14 scoreless innings. And to show that the Dodgers had no monopoly on strange plays, Tommy Herr scored from second base on a wild pitch by Soto in the fifth inning and Ken Oberkfell raced home all the way from first when catcher Alex Trevino was unable to pick the ball up and it went off his hand into the dugout for an error.

Cubs 6, Braves 4

Jody Davis drove in three runs with a pair of homers to power the Cubs to their fourth straight victory. Davis hit a solo homer in the fifth to tie the score 2-2 and capped a four-run sixth with his third homer of the season, all in the last two games. He hit a three-run homer in the ninth inning to beat Houston on Sunday. Chris Chambliss homered and drove in three runs for Atlanta.

"It was the wind, the wind," Davis said of the 18-mile-an-hour breeze blowing out. "I don't know if either one would have gone out if it hadn't been for the wind. I uppercut the ball, and that helps with the wind blowing out."

Mets 6, Padres 0

Dave Kingman drove in four runs with a double and his 12th homer and rookie Charlie Puleo pitched a four-hitter for his first major league shutout and complete game. Kingman's two-run double helped the Mets take a 3-0 lead in the first inning against Juan Eichelberger and his homer capped a three-run fifth. Puleo walked one and struck out three.

Astros 4, Pirates 2

Phil Garner hit a two-run homer in Houston's three-run second inning, while Nolan Ryan, Vern Ruhle and Dave Smith held Pittsburgh to eight hits. Art Howe singled before Garner hit his fourth home run of the year, giving the Astros' second baseman 13 RBIs in the last 10 games.

Fan files suit against Astros

HOUSTON (AP) — A man who says he a devoted baseball fan is suing the Houston Astros' parent company for stealing his ideas for "Astrodillo" and "Astrojack," the National League team's mascots.

Mike R. Anderson, a certified public accountant, claims the Houston Sports Association has profited from his ideas to use costumed mascots of the armadillo and jackrabbit.

Anderson has asked a state court for unspecified daamges.

"They stole his idea and what value that has, we have no way of knowing," said his attorney, Jimmy Griffie. 'He's upset that he wasn't given the credit for what he thinks is his idea."

According to the lawsuit filed Monday, Anderson approached the team in June 1980 with his idea and provided a survey showing Houston sports fans "overwhelmingly favored" the mascots.

The Astros said the ideas were "unique and refreshing" but rejected them, the suit said.

Last year, Anderson discovered the Astros were using the "Astrodillo" and "Astrojack" in souvenir sales, publications and during home-game performances, the suit said.

Ben Gillespie, a spokesman for the sports association, said he had not read the suit and refused to comment.

NFLPA says NFLMC's grievance is 'frivilous'

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Football League Players Association says a grievance filed against it by the NFL Management Council is "a frivilous attempt to make an issue out of something that shouldn't be."

The Management Council charged the union with illegally offering to counsel draft choices in their individual negotiations with the 28 NFL clubs. In a statement Tuesday, the Council said the union violated two sections of the Collective Bargaining Agreement.

"Management has taken everything out of context," said Dick Berthlesen, counsel for the NFLPA. "They are trying to create an issue that doesn't exist."

The Management Council said the union sent a telegram, signed by the player representatives, to draft choices which said, in part: "As a fellow player and your union's player representative, I am available to help you. If you want an independent analysis of the team's offer, call me or our national office."

Section 8 of Article XXII of the Collective Bargaining Agreement contains a waiver of the NFLPA's right to negotiate salaries for players for the term of the agreement, providing that "all players will have the right to individually negotiate salaries above the minima" set forth in the agreement, the Management Council said.

Section 9 provides the player may choose his own representatives in his individual negotiations with the clubs, "other than another active NFL player or someone employed by the NFLPA or an NFL club."

Seeking for cease and desist order, the Management Council has asked that "in view of the pervasive and continuing nature of the violation," the grievance be submitted directly to an outside arbitrator for determination.

Berthlesen said the union has sent similar telegrams to draft choices annually.

"We asked that that clause be included so it would be known up front that an employee of the NFLPA could not serve as a player agent," he said. "But we are their (draft choices') union and they can call us and ask any questions they want about the contract, what their rights are. And if they want to tell us how much their team has offered them, we can tell them what we think of the offer.

"But we can't and won't represent them."

Clemente Award to Trillo

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Manny Trillo, the second baseman of the Philadelphia Phillies, was presented the Roberto Clemente Award Tuesday night for contributions to baseball on and off the field and for emulating the late Pittsburgh Pirates outfielder.

Clemente, a member of baseball's Hall of Fame, died in December 1971 in the crash of a plane that was carrying food and supplies to earthquake victims in Nicarauga.

Trillo received the award from Luis Rodriguez, mayor of Santruce, Puerto Rico, before Tuesday night's game between the Phillies and the Los Angeles Dodgers.

The award is different from the award named for Clemente that is given annually by major league baseball during spring training for sportsmanship.

Royals end scoring slump, 17-3

By KEN RAPPOPORT
AP Sports Writer

For four miserable games, the Kansas City Royals were a frustrated bunch at the plate.

Tuesday night, they took it out on the Milwaukee Brewers.

Led by Hal McRae, Willie Wilson and Frank White, the Royals' slumbering offense woke up with a blistering 21-hit attack that buried the Brewers 17-3.

"It was good to score some runs tonight," said Manager Dick Howser, whose Royals had come up with but eight runs in their previous four games, including a three-game series loss to Toronto.

The Royals erupted for seven runs in the first two innings and had a 12-0 lead after five Tuesday night to back winner Larry Gura, 3-1. McRae drove in five runs, Wilson four and White three to pace the Kansas City attack. McRae and Wilson each had three-run homers among their hits.

"We hit the ball good in Toronto," said Howser. "We out-hit them in two of three games and hit some balls hard that were caught. The last couple of nights we got the runs in. Day in and day out we will score some runs."

The loser was Jerry Augustine, 0-1, who gave up 12 runs on 15 hits in the first five innings.

Milwaukee Manager Bob Rodgers said afterwards he was forced to keep Augustine in as long as he did because of injuries that left him with just three available relievers. Augustine was a last-minute replacement for scheduled starter Pete Vuckovich, who twisted his ankle while walking to the ballpark.

Indians 5, Mariners 4

Von Hayes singled home Alan Bannister with the go-ahead run in the top of the 14th inning as Cleveland beat Seattle in the longest game ever played in the Kingdome in elapsed time: 4 hours and 20 minutes.

With one out in the 14th, Bannister drew a walk off Seattle's third pitcher, Bill Caudill, 3-1. He stole second and Hayes slapped a sharp single to right to bring home the game-winner.

Cleveland's third pitcher, Ed Whitson, 1-0, retired the final four Mariners he faced, including working out of a 13th-inning jam, with Seattle runners on first and second.

Seattle had tied the score 4-4 with two runs in the ninth. Al Cowens doubled in one run to chase John Denny and Julio Cruz's groundout off reliever Dan Spillner brought home Jim Maler, who had reached on an error, with the Mariners' fourth run.

Blue Jays 9, White Sox 4

Wayne Nordhagen hit a two-run homer and Barry Bonnell smashed three doubles and scored three runs to lead Toronto over Chicago, snapping the White Sox' seven-game winning streak.

Jim Clancy, 3-2, scattered six hits over 5 2-3 innings before being relieved by Dale Murray, who earned his first save of the season. Chicago starter Steve Trout, 2-3, took the loss.

The Blue Jays virtually put the game away by taking a 7-0 lead after four innings, as Jessie Barfield contributed a two-run single in the first inning and Nordhagen a two-run homer in the third.

"I'm trying to be aggressive at the plate and trying to use the whole field " said Bonnell, leading the league with a .430 average. "I'm just going out and playing hard and swinging hard."

Twins 10, Red Sox 6

Minnesota scored five runs with the help of six straight singles with two outs in the sixth inning, including Randy Bush's first major league RBI, to break a 4-4 tie and beat Boston.

Bobby Castillo, 1-1, pitched 3 1-3 innings for the victory in relief of Brad Havens while Bob Ojeda, 1-3, took the loss.

Bush, pinch-hitting for Lenny Faedo, singled to score the first run of the inning and give Minnesota a 5-4 lead. Bobby Mitchell and Ron Washington followed with RBI singles and John Castino capped the rally with a two-run single to put the Twins ahead 9-4.

Yankees 3, Angels 2

Dave Collins, who entered the game as a substitute when first baseman John Mayberry was injured, hit an eighth-inning sacrifice fly for the winning run as New York beat California.

Dave Righetti, 2-2, held the Angels to four hits over seven innings, walking five and striking out four before Goose Gossage worked the final two frames to pick up his sixth save.

The Yankees' decisive rally began with Ken Griffey's one-out single off Ken Forsch, 2-3. Oscar Gamble singled Griffey to third to set up Collins' RBI fly ball to center.

Collins entered the game in the bottom of the first after Tim Foli, running out an infield hit spiked Mayberry on his left foot, forcing him out of the game.

Orioles 7, A's 1

Scott McGregor and Tim Stoddard combined on a three-hitter and Baltimore snapped a three-game losing streak by beating mistake-prone Oakland.

The Orioles capitalized on three Oakland errors, including a throwing error by catcher Jeff Newman which allowed two runs to score in the fifth inning. Center fielder Dwayne Murphy dropped a fly ball in the fourth, setting up an unearned run. An error by third baseman Wayne Gross on a grounder by Cal Ripken Jr. set up a three-run ninth for the Orioles capped by Ken Singleton's two-run single.

McGregor, 4-2, allowed only singles to Rickey Henderson in the third, Newman in the fifth and Cliff Johnson in the ninth before needing Stoddard's relief help with nobody out in the last inning.

Kingdome strikes again

SEATTLE (AP) — The second American League starting pitcher in less than a week has sustained an injury while punching the wall of the visiting dugout in Seattle's Kingdome.

Cleveland right-hander John Denny received a mild sprain of the thumb on his pitching hand after throwing a punch in frustration Tuesday night when he was removed from a game against the Mariners while leading 4-2 in the ninth inning.

Seattle team physician Dr. Larry Pedegana made the diagnosis after X-raying the hand, but it was not known whether Denny would miss his next turn in the Indians' rotation.

Denny was angry about not getting a decision in a game in which he allowed only one hit for more than seven innings and took a two-hitter into the ninth. Cleveland eventually won 5-4 in 14 innings.

Last Thursday in a 7-3 loss to Seattle in which Gaylord Perry won his 300th major league game, New York right-hander Doyle Alexander hit the wall in disgust and broke a knuckle on his pitching hand, knocking him out of action for a month to six weeks.

Tosco shareholders hear arguments

By KAREN TUMULTY
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Tosco Corp. management and dissident shareholder Kenneth Good pleaded their cases before shareholders at the opening of the firm's annual meeting Tuesday, but the outcome of Good's bitter proxy fight will not be announced until the session reconvenes May 24 in New York.

Tosco officials said the 13-day delay is necessary to tally votes on Good's campaign to seat his own five-man slate on the Los Angeles-based refining company's 14-member board.

Turning his back to the board, and facing more than 500 shareholders crowded into the Beverly Wilshire hotel ballroom, Good described his bid as a mission aimed at protecting Tosco stockholders from the "perilous plight of present management."

Tosco President Morton M. Winston argued management's side, saying Tosco's prospects are "quite bright," despite the decision of its partner, Exxon Corp., to scuttle their Colony Oil Shale Project in Colorado.

Exxon abandoned its 60 percent share of the project May 2, because it feared the massive venture's final cost would eventually have reached $6 billion, which was twice the original estimate.

Tosco exercised its option to have Exxon purchase the refining company's 40 percent interest in the project for $380 million, which yielded Tosco a $100 million profit.

The company is considering many other areas in which to concentrate its investment, including additional refinery improvements and methods of recovering more oil from existing reserves, Winston said.

Investment opportunities exceed available capital, he said, "and our exciting challenge is now to choose among them."

The meeting climaxed a year-long struggle by Good, who has purchased 9 percent of Tosco's outstanding stock and is its largest single stockholder, to gain control of the company and unseat what he described as Winston's "corporate fiefdom."

The 37-year-old Denver real estate developer charged that the company had engaged in a "Shalegate Coverup," and had issued false and misleading public statements to hide from shareholders the fact that estimated project costs had risen dramatically.

As proof, Good and his attorneys said after the meeting that they had obtained sworn statements from an Exxon official who said Exxon had informed Tosco of its escalated estimates as early as eight months ago.

Winston, however, denied the charge and said that Exxon never had reached a firm estimate on the project's eventual costs.

Shareholder sentiment during the session appeared to be mixed. The audience grew vocal when arguments on either side centered on the personalities of the other.

For example, when board secretary Erwin Millimet interrupted and rebuked Good for what he called a "personal attack" on Winston, he drew wide applause. But that reaction turned to loud boos with Millimet's assertion that Good himself was making a "rambling, unsophisticated statement."

If Good wins, he said, he will study the company's alternatives for getting the most value from its assets. Among those options, he said, is a "partial liquidation," such as selling its shale properties.

He also raised the possibility of seeking other investors to mount an alternate takeover effort if he loses.

He said he would meet soon with his financial and legal advisers to "get the second game of this world series going."

Flare Inc. plans to discontinue oil, gas exploration activities

MIDLAND (SWN) — Flare, Inc. has announced the company would discontinue its oil and gas exploration and production activities, which have been conducted through a wholly-owned subsidiary, S.R.I. Production, Inc.

Frank E. Lasater, Jr., president said that the company was now in the process of selling all of its producing properties, located primarily in West Central Texas. He said that the company had also ceased all exploration activities and would sell its inventory of undeveloped acreage in West Central Texas and New Mexico.

Lasater said that Flare was discontinuing oil and gas operations to enable management to devote its total energies to its rapidly growing seismic data business which offers greater profit opportunities. He noted that oil and gas operations had provided only minimal revenues to the company and had contributed no operating income.

Muse Air begins free enterprise campaign instead of service

DALLAS (SWN) — Instead of beginning service to Tulsa and Midland/Odessa on Monday, May 10, as previously announced and previously planned, Muse Air began expediting a free enterprise campaign today in response to inquiries by passengers, travel agents, business groups and local governments on what can be done to remedy Muse's current situation.

The letter from Michael Muse, which follows, summarizes Muse Air's dilemma. In a nutshell, the airline took delivery over the weekend of two brand new McDonnell Douglas Super 80 aircraft, but cannot fly them anywhere.

The Federal Aviation Administration guaranteed the $41 million loan to purchase the planes in January. In February, that same government agency changed the rules for airline expansion and told Muse it would not be able to obtain the necessary "slots" to fly between Dallas, Houston, Tulsa and Midland/Odessa.

Last week, Muse Air hosted VIP receptions in Midland and Tulsa, which turned out to be probably the first "non-inaugural" celebrations in the airline industry. We announced that we would probably not be launching our service to new cities on Monday the 10th.

The airline is experiencing such an outcry of public support for our efforts, that Muse Air officials decided to take the new aircraft to the cities where it plans service to provide a preview of what they can expect when Muse does obtain the necessary slots.

The following is the letter from Michael L. Muse, President of Muse Air:

"Dear Friend of Muse Air:

"We at Muse Air need your help in preserving the American free enterprise system and the benefit that such business competition brings to the marketplace. Currently, an unusual restriction by the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) is preventing us from competing on a fair and equal basis with other air carriers. It is important for you to be aware of this un-reasonable hindrance to commerce in a deregulated environment and to understand how it might ultimately impact the travelling public.

"Let me give you some background on our dilemma.

"— One year ago, the investing public gave Muse Air a bullish vote of confidence in a $38.5 million public stock offering. This capital enabled us to become a strong, low-fare, first class competitor destined to succeed in the newly-deregulated airline industry.

"— In July, Muse Air launched service between Dallas' Love Field and Houston's Hobby airport with 14 daily round trips — utilizing two brand-new, fuel-efficient, ultra-quiet, McDonnell Douglas Super 80 aircraft.

"— On August 3, the illegal PATCO strike began. Airlines were asked by the FAA to cut back schedules to accommodate the decreased capacity in air traffic control towers. Muse Air cooperated by reducing its level of service to 12 daily round trips, while our competitor increased its service in the face of the strike.

"— During the winter months, the FAA allowed many airlines to increase or add new flight schedules and indicated to all airlines that additional capacity in the air traffic control system would gradually become available in the spring. Several airlines significantly increased service during this time. Southwest, American and Braniff commenced new service to a number of new cities out of both Dallas and Houston.

"— In January, Muse Air purchased (with the assistance of FAA guaranteed loans which were approved by the FAA on September 30, 1981 and re-affirmed on January 15, 1982) two new Super 80 aircraft at a cost of $41 million to expand service in May to Tulsa and Midland/Odessa.

"By July, Muse Air will have six new Super 80's in its fleet and plans to inaugurate service to Austin and San Antonio. The four additional aircraft to be added to Muse Air's fleet in July, concurrent with the return to the manufacturer of our two original leased Super 80 aircraft, were ordered in april, 1981 (four months before the PATCO strike). The company has put down a nonrefundable deposit of $13,275,000 on these four aircraft.

"— On February 18, the FAA completedly changed the rules for airline expansion and announced that no new landing "slots" would be made available at certain "restricted" airports, including Dallas and Houston and any slots that might become available would be allocated by means of a lottery among all airlines. Incumbent airlines would be able to keep their existing slots and trade among themselves. International operations would become exempt from this ruling. And general aviation (private jet planes) operating over 29,000 feet would not be restricted.

"As a result of the FAA's rules, Muse Air has been left out in the cold and will not be able to fly the aircraft for which we paid $41 million. It will cost us $25,000 for each day the planes sit idle.

"It could cost the U.S. taxpayers as much as $33.2 million if the FAA restrictions force us to default on the FAA guaranteed loan.

"For the last three months, we have spent an inordinate amount of time in Washington pleading our case to the FAA, the Civil Aeronautics Board, the White House, legislative representatives and the Department of Transportation.

"We felt confident that justice and logic would prevail and that Muse Air would be awarded the needed 26 slots for May and 27 slots for July. This request would not place undue hardship on the air traffic control facilities in the Dallas and Houston areas.

"However, if we can't get the necessary slots Muse Air would be placed in an extreme hardship situation, since we now have brand new planes and nowhere to fly them. Currently, Muse Air is flying more than 40,000 passengers per month in the Dallas-Houston market.

"We have a strong customer base which is demanding the type of first-class, low-fare service we provide. That demand exists in the new markets we want to serve.

"If the FAA continues to prevent Muse Air from flying to these new cities — and indeed prevents us from staying in business — there will be an obvious loss to our stockholders and to the more than 400 employees who would have been employed in our six plane operation.

"There will be a loss to commerce in our areas of operation. And there will be a loss to the traveling public.

"The low-fare influence in the marketplace will be seriously threatened. Muse Air has been a model for a low-fare, efficient airline operation in the newly deregulated marketplace. Our management is comprised of highly experienced, extremely successful airline careerists.

"If Muse Air is not given the opportunity to succeed or fail in the free enterprise arena, no other "start-up" carrier is likely to ever obtain the necessary financing to commence operations. The big existing airlines will ultimately have a monopoly. Prices will be controlled, and fares will increase.

"The very existence of the free market is being threatened by the current actions of the FAA. Much more is at stake here than the existence of Muse Air. Everyone who benefits from competition in the marketplace has a stake in this issue.

"If you are as disturbed by this situation as we are, we encourage you to let yourself be heard — to speak out on behalf of free enterprise, the only hope for our country's future. Write to your legislators, Write the President. This is the time for all fair minded Americans who believe in the free enterprise system to band together.

"If more of us speak out, perhaps Washington will hear us. Your help in convincing the government that we should not be inhibited in competing on a fair and equal basis with our competition to Austin, Midland/Odessa, and San Antonio, Texas and Tulsa, Oklahoma from Dallas Love Field will be rewarded in the form of the superior service we now provide and will continue to provide each of our passengers.

Michael L. Muse, President"

Saxon Oil Company announces proposed refinancing plan

DALLAS (SWN) — Saxon Oil Company has announced the company and its chairman, Bill D. Saxon, have signed a letter of intent with James P. Linn and Gary Gray of Oklahoma City and Rock Island Refining Corporation, an Indiana corporation, whereby the group expresses their intent to arrange for $65 million of additional bank credit for Saxon Oil, which the company estimates will enable it to meet its cash requirements for the remainder of 1982, and all of 1983, including all presently scheduled drilling in the Fletcher field in the Anadarko Basin of Oklahoma and other previously budgeted operations.

As part of the transaction, Bill D. Saxon has agreed to sell all of his 16,901,477 shares of common stock of Saxon Oil Company, representing approximately 80 percent of the outstanding stock, for approximately $25,350,000, subject to an option whereby Saxon may repurchase one-half of the shares.

Upon closing of the transaction, Saxon Oil Company will repay to Bill Saxon $5 million which he loaned to the company in January of this year, plus accrued interest.

Bill Saxon will continue to guarantee $15 million of the company's bank line of credit until the loan is paid down by a like amount or the bank determines that increases in the company's oil and gas reserves justify release of the guarantee on a dollar-for-dollar basis.

Bill Saxon's option to repurchase 8,450,738.5 shares of the stock will be exercisable in whole or in part at any time or times within five years after the closing at a price of $3.00 per share during the first three years; $4.00 per share during the fourth year; and $5.00 per share during the fifth year. Bill Saxon will agree to vote any shares reacquired by him as directed by the purchasers to the extent necessary to give them majority voting power until the later of two years or the release of all the purchasers' letters of credit and guarantees to be furnished to Saxon Oil's lending bank.

Bill Saxon will remain as chairman and chief Executive Officer.

The sale of stock and related financing transactions are all conditioned upon the filing and receipt of government regulatory approvals and closing of an appropriate credit agreement from Saxon Oil's principal lending bank.

Saxon Oil, the purchasers and Saxon's principal bank are in active negotiations with respect to the new credit arrangement.

The consummation of the purchase is conditioned upon the execution of a definitive stock purchase agreement and other agreements, and the closing is targeted for June 10, 1982.

The sale is also conditioned upon the purchasers arranging financing for the letters of credit and the purchase price of the stock, and upon their guarantees being acceptable to the bank.

Saxon Oil also announces the signing of a consulting agree-ment with Merrill Lynch White Weld Capital Markets Group of Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Incorporated, pursuant to which Merrill Lynch has agreed to provide general investment banking and other financial advisory services to the company.

First quarter 1982 merger, acquisition activity continues strong

DALLAS (SWN) — Mergers and acquisitions involving Texas-based companies continued strong during the first quarter of 1982 with a record 51 completed transactions as compared to 46 during the first quarter of 1981.

The dollar value of these transactions was a healthy $1.23 billion versus $767 million for the like period in 1981, according to infor-mation compiled by First Main Capital Corporation.

First Main, a Dallas investment advisory firm specializing in corporate acquisitions, said this first quarter total exceeded the previous record first quarter of 49 established in 1979. The dollar value of $1.23 billion also exceeded 1979's first quarter dollar value of $1.15 billion.

"This continued strong merger activity comes as a pleasant surprise when the national scene is considered," said Fred Ricketts, president of First Main Capital. "With business feeling the recession, even here in Texas, corporate acquirers continue to be confident of the future of Texas companies. Otherwise they wouldn't be making acquisitions."

Ricketts noted that even with the decline in oil prices there continues to be acquisitions of natural resource-related companies with 31 percent of the total involving companies in this activity. Bank holding companies continued on their acquisition binge, completing 27 percent of the total.

Ricketts further commented, "Perhaps the main surprise is the number of acquisitions being made with stock. Fifty-three percent of the first quarter transactions involved stock as the medium of consideration as compared to 35 percent during the first quarter of 1981. With interest rates remaining high, buyers are turning to exchanging equities even though many companies feel their stocks are at extremely depressed levels. It is a way to complete an acquisition and avoid the high cost of borrowed funds."

The largest transaction completed during the first quarter was General Portland, Inc. of Dallas acquiring Canada Cement LaFarge for $326 million in General Portland stock. Other acquisitions which exceeded $100 million in value include the American General Corporation of Houston purchase of Creditthrift Financial, Inc. of Indiana for $150 million in stock and Dr Pepper Company, Dallas, acquiring the Canada Dry Division of Norton Simon for $143 million in cash.

Pioneer finals discoveries

Pioneer Production Corporation announced recently two natural gas discoveries in the Anadarko Basin of western Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle.

In Washita County, Oklahoma, 12 miles west of the city of Cordell, one discovery well encountered gas in the granite Wash Formation. The well, the Hicklin No. 1-9, is situated three miles south of the developing Burns Flat Granite Wash Field.

The well is completed in the Granite Wash Formation with perforations from 12,263 feet to 13,588 feet. It flowed at a rate of eight million cubic feet per day through an 11/64-inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 5,390 pounds per square inch.

The other well is in Roberts County in the Texas Panhandle, two miles southeast of the city of Miami. The discovery well, the Gill No. 1-41, found gas in the Morrow Chert Conglomerate. The well is three miles south of a Morrow Chert Conglomerate field that has produced 57 billion cubic feet of gas from 16 wells since its discovery in the mid-1970's.

The well is perforated from 11,067 to 11,096 feet. Gas was tested at a rate of 3.6 million cubic feet per day through a 20/64-inch choke, with a flowing tubing pressure of 1,300 pounds per square inch.

New system introduced

DALLAS (SWN) — The Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas has announced the implementation of a new method to access Federal Reserve services through the use of personal computers and the inauguration of its RESPONSE communications network. The Dallas Reserve Bank is the first in the Federal Reserve System to use personal computer technology to directly link financial institutions with the Bank and the nationwide communications network of the Federal Reserve System.

According to the Dallas Federal Reserve Bank President Robert H. Boykin, the personal computer will be beneficial to small- and medium-sized institutions, providing them with immediate access to the on-line services of the Dallas Reserve Bank. Initially, financial institutions will use the computer primarily to transfer funds (money). In transferring funds through the RESPONSE network via personal computers, institutions can obtain better security, lower cost per transaction, faster turnaround time, quicker accessibility to data and documentation of transactions. In the future, applications of the personal computer will include transfer of securities, ordering of currency and coin, automated clearing house advices, and inquiries about reserve statement information.

When not transferring funds, the versatiltiy of the personal computer will allow financial institutions to perform general accounting, manage cash flow and security inventories, and create other software programs for daily management activities. If desired, an institution can also purchase programs from computer software vendors to meet individual requirements of the institution.

Japan trade friction can be eased with serious compromise

By JOHN ECKHOUSE
and MIKE JOHNSON
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Trade friction with Japan can be eased, but it requires serious compromise on both sides of the Pacific and may never eliminate the sizeable U.S. trade deficit with Japan.

"The problem will never go away, so we'll have to live with it," says John K. Emmerson, chairman of a U.S.-Japan relations program at Stanford University and a senior research fellow at the Hoover Institution there.

However, if the Japanese quickly make some move, such as easing restrictions on the imports of U.S. beef and citrus products, and the United States "stops pounding the table," he suggests that the acrimonious relationship would be easier to resolve.

Emmerson, who served in the U.S. embassy in Tokyo during the 1960s, joins the agriculture and electronics industries in warning that protectionist legislation now be considered in Congress would exacerbate rather than solve the problem.

A senior official in the Commerce Department's International Trade Administration insists, however, that the Reagan administration will firmly oppose any measure that might require the president to take what amounts to protectionist action on behalf of U.S. industry. The official, who asked that his name not be used, says the administration believes trade with Japan requires "very serious action, but we want to focus on negotiation, not retaliation."

Attempting to reduce trade friction, Japan announced in January the elimination of 67 non-tariff trade barriers from a list of 99 problems cited by Western trading partners. But the reductions failed to mollify criticism and Japan feels pressure to make further reductions before the June economic summit conference of seven industrialized nations in Versailles, France.

Japanese government officials insist that their country should not take all the blame for a trade surplus with the United States. Hiroshi Kitamura, Japan's consul general in San Francisco, suggests that the United States could easily reduce its trade deficit by selling Japan the import it most needs: energy.

"I think the United States has a tremendous chance to improve matters here," Kitamura says. In particular he thinks the United States should sell Alaskan-produced oil to Japan.

That option was forbidden in 1973 when Congress passed the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act. Written at the height of the oil crisis, the law is designed to keep oil companies from selling domestically produced oil overseas.

Now, Kitamura notes, the U.S. problem isn't lack of oil but lack of exports. He says the sale of even a small fraction of the $16 billion-a-year Alaskan oil production would materially help the trade deficit, which last year hit $18 billion and this year could approach $30 billion.

Another potential U.S. export to Japan is coal, which gets strong support from many in the United States. A report issued recently by the Western Coal Export Task Force of the Western Governors' Policy Office projects that the export of coal to Japan will jump from 18 million tons in 1980 to 34 million tons in 1985 and grow to about 70 million tons in 1990. Even at current prices the 1985 figure would provide an additional $34 billion for U.S. coffers.

Many American observers contend that Japan can ease the trade situation by lowering tariffs and removing import quotas, but warn that the United States must make more fundamental alterations if it hopes to reduce its trade problem with Japan.

"Unfortunately, the things we need to do (won't) solve the problem in a few weeks," says Emmerson. He offers a list of possible solutions:

— Increase productivity. "Ours just isn't increasining at the same rate as Japan's; that makes our exports cost more."

— Better market research. Japan has a government organization, JETRO, that researches foreign markets for private industry – a cost that few individual businesses could afford on their own.

— Lower interest rates. A lower cost of capital would reduce the cost of U.S. exports.

— Making it permissible for American industry to adopt a long-term view. Japanese companies, unlike their U.S. competitors, do not have to post increasing profits as long as they increase market share and appear positioned for long-term profitability.

Leaders of this country's electronics industry believe they must be permitted to conduct joint research and perhaps engage in long-range strategic planning together if they are to remain competitive with Japan.

"We tend to fight each other rather than working together to solve problems as in Japan," says Robert Penn, president of semiconductor manufacturer American Microsystems Inc. of Santa Clara, Calif. "That's partly because of the way we do business, partly because our government frowns upon joint efforts."

Some observers think joint ventures between Japanese and American electronics companies might go a long way toward reducing both trade barriers and tensions. They point to the models of Yokogawa-Hewlett-Packard, a joint venture 49 percent owned by Palo Alto-based Hewlett-Packard Co., with $250 million in revenues last year, and the recent joint venture between GCA Corp. of Bedford, Mass. and Sumitomo of Japan to produce semiconductor production equipment.

But William Doolittle, H-P senior vice president-international, admits that despite the success of H-P's joint venture, many problems remain.

"The Japanese regard joint-venture companies as foreign in nature and as competing with local companies, so a joint venture is not treated on a par with a wholly-owned Japanese company," he says.

Some U.S. executives, particulaly those in the auto industry, think the best solution to America's trade problem is to force Japanese manufacturers to build factories in this country that would employ U.S. workers.

"But that doesn't help the vitality of American companies," complains Frank Weinstein, trade consultant and former director of Stanford University's Project on U.S.-Japan trade problems.

Perhaps the most important aspect will be the willingness of the two countries to continue their dialogue toward reaching mutually acceptable solutions for reducing trade friction.

Among positive signs: following talks between Undersecretary of Commerce Lionel Olmer and Shoekei Kurihara, Japanese vice minister of trade, the two governments agreed to set up a subcabinet-level working group to explore their differences in high-technology trade.

Mid-America finals discovery

Mid-America Petroleum Inc. has announced the completion of the Lehrer No. 3 well located in Colorado County.

This discovery is flowing naturally from the Wilcox formation through perforations between 8,989 and 9,004 feet.

The well was potentialed for 152 barrels of oil per day plus 67,000 cubic feet of gas per day with no water on a 14/64 inch choke with 350 pounds of flowing tubing pressure.

Mid-America and its affiliates own 16.666 percent of the working interest and Dynasty Oil Corporation and its affiliates own 4.166 percent. Page Petroleum Inc. is the operator and owns 33.3334 percent of the working interest.

MIGRATION — The movement of oil or gas through porous and permeable rock from source rock to reservoir rock.

PAY OUT — The point in time when sufficient oil or gas has been produced from a well to repay the cost of exploration, drilling and completion.

Reagan proposal called 'highly discriminatory'

A Reagan administration proposal for giving selected coastal states a share of revenues generated from offshore oil and gas leasing has been characterized as "highly discriminatory and potentially harmful to the ocean environment" by the National Wildlife Federation.

The administration proposal is "an effort to silence coastal states' objections to the administration's vastly expanded and accelerated leasing program," wrote Dr. Jay D. Hair, executive vice president of the NKWF in a letter to Rep. Walter B. Jones (D-Okla), Chairman of the Hose Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Hair's concern with the proposal, currently under consideration in the Cabinet Council on Natural Resources, is that it would hurt some states and would at the same time create financial incentives for other states to allow potentially damaging oil and gas exploration and development on the outer continental shelf (OCS).

Fifteen states would realize little or no economic benefit, and all coastal states would likely suffer environmental damage because of stepped-up leasing programs, said Hair.

"Linking revenues to leasing and production would give the lion's share of money to the big oil-producing states, like Texas and Louisiana," said Hair. "Other states could be adversely affected by OCS activity, but the Reagan plan would provide them with no compensation in cases where the most active leasing and production occurred in neighboring state waters."

"For example," Hair noted," states like Washington and Oregon that have important recreational beaches but little offshore potential for oil and gas would get no compensation for the impacts and risks of offshore drilling in adjactent states, such as Alaska and California. States in New England whose fishing interests may be affected by drilling on the Georges Bank wouldn't get much revenue because petroleum reserves may be located outside their OCS boundaries."

Hair also expressed concern that the revenue sharing proposal would further weaken programs that mitigate the impacts of offshore and onshore development, such as the Coastal Zone Management, Sea Grant and fisheries programs, which have in the past veen funded directly through congressional appropriations. These programs have already been reduced or eleminated by the administration, said Hair, and the Reagan revenue sharing plan would do nothing to guarantee their continued funding. It would leave many states "without the necessary funding to cotinue these vital efforts," said Hair.

Though the NWF is opposed to the Reagan revenue-sharing proposal, it supports an alternative revenue-sharing plan in which funds would be earmarked for specific coastal programs. "Since the administration is proposing to zero-fund grants to states for coastal zones management programs," wrote Hair, "it is important that other funding mechanisms be identified."

RCA executive believes consumers will pay more

LOS ANGELES (AP) — TV viewers will be paying more than advertisers for their home entertainment by the end of the decade, says Herbert S. Schlosser, executive vice president of the RCA Corp.

"By the end of the decade, we project that the consumer dollar spent will be greater than the advertising side," he says. "There will be growth in both areas, but the greatest growth will be in cable and home video."

This presages an "explosive" growth for pay and cable television and for cassette and disc video recorders — far more than anyone would have believed a few years ago.

SPECIAL PROGRAMming already is being produced for these markets, such as Jane Fonda's exercise class for cassette and disc, and movies by Faye Dunaway and George Segal for pay television. There are those in the business who predict this trickle will become a flood in the next few years.

Virtually all movies now reach the home video market via cassette and disc as quickly as they reach the theater.

Viewers will pay more for entertainment, but they will have a wider choice of programming and more control over when they see it, Schlosser says.

SCHLOSSER, formerly president of NBC, is head of the RCA task force studying the future of the entertainment industry. He is now in charge of all aspects of television and entertainment for RCA, except NBC. He also is in charge of the company's records division, and RCA's new cable network with Rockefeller Center, Inc., The Entertainment Channel.

"I think all the media will coexist in the future," Schlosser says. "When television came along, people thought it would kill radio and the movies. Radio is bigger than ever, and the movies have made a comeback.

"The existing media just get changed and shaped by the new competition," he says. "So many entertainment programs will be on cable and pay television first that I think the networks will be forced to do what they do best — sports, news and information.

"When Home Box Office went nationwide on the RCA satellite, that started the growth of pay television," Schlosser says. "That was the crucial event in the history of pay television. The home video market did not really begin until 1978, with the introduction of the video cassette recorder.

"Its growth, plus that of the disc player introduced a year ago, has been explosive — particularly in Europe where the choice of programming is much less extensive," he says.

"I think now is an excellent time for the people who create programming. There will be a need for programs of all types, entertainment, sports, news and information."

SCHLOSSER SAYS he believes that Direct Broadcast Satellite television (DBS) will come first in Europe, and possibly in Third World countries. Under the DBS system, a viewer receives the television signal directly from a satellite by means of a small dish antenna.

"In the United States," the RCA executive says, "we have a highly developed system of three networks, more than 700 commercial stations and we're well into building a cable network. DBS would be only a supplement here. I expect to see it developed in Europe first, particularly in Britain. But it could cause problems because its coverage would spread over four or five countries."

Schlosser, who pioneered the development of the miniseries and long-form programming at NBC, says, "I can see the time when pay television will make its own miniseries and they will eventually wind up on the networks. I don't think that's a possibility, it's a probability."

Martin's strong, sexy part comes somewhat naturally

By DOROTHY TRELOAR
Hearst Feature Service

HOLLYWOOD — Kiel Martin brings a background of street savvy and hard-won experiences to his role as the handsome womanizer, detective Johnny LaRhue, on "Hill Street Blues." This award-winning drama of eccentric, beleaguered police in a run-down area of an un-named city gives Martin a distinctive part that is fascinating. He has strength, weakness and the sheer, rugged pursuit of sex.

Martin has at least two of these qualities personally. He's strong and sexy. Movie-star handsome, he arrives running ("I don't jog") at my office. At 6' 1" and a svelte 160 lbs., with green eyes that turn blue, he's a bundle of charming, affable energy.

Asked how he started his acting career, Martin admits: "I played hookey from high school for 15 days until my father was notified of my absence. He had to back me up against a wall with his car to get me home. Then he called the drama teacher at my school and asked her to get me a part in 'Finian's Rainbow.' I ended up with the lead, and then knew my goal was to be an actor. My father, a classical pianist, turned my life around and remains my best friend."

Martin also had another best friend until recently — songwriter-composer Carol Connors. "I'm between engagements at the moment," Martin smiles.

"I'm looking forward to appearing in a two-hour 'Love Boat' special in which I play a street-wise reporter. It will be my first trip to Europe; we'll be filming in Greece, Italy, Turkey, Germany — and Southfolk, Ala.

"Then it's back to 'Hill Street.' I have a great part and it's a sensational show. Everyone in this cast loves going to work every day."

"My big break came in the movie 'Panic in Needle Park,' Al Pacino's first feature," Kiel said. "Then 'Lolly Madonna,' 'Log of Black Pearl' and 'The Undefeated' — the latter a most wonderful experience working with John Wayne."

ABC wins first week of May sweeps

LOS ANGELES (AP) — ABC finished on top for the first week of the May "sweeps," but the No. 1 show was the fast-paced, slapstick movie "Caddyshack" on CBS, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

"Dynasty," ABC's fast-rising prime-time soap opera, was second in the ratings. The show completed its current season of original programming with a series of cliffhangers that won't be resolved until next fall.

ABC took the first week of the May ratings ending May 9 with a rating of 15.7. CBS finished a full point behind with 14.7 and NBC was third with 13.3. The networks say that means in an average prime-time minute, 15.7 percent of the nation's homes with TV were tuned to ABC.

The sweeps, held several times a year by the ratings services, are checks on how many people watched particular shows. Sweeps are conducted for a month at the local-station level, and the networks usually enhance their programming to help their affiliates' score.

"TV's Censored Bloopers," an NBC rerun, was third, and completing the top five shows were ABC's "Too Close for Comfort" and "Three's Company."

Perennial CBS frontrunners "60 Minutes" and "Dallas," which are now showing reruns, did not make the Top 10. "60 Minutes" was in 11th place and "Dallas" was 25th.

Here are the Top 10 shows: movie-"Caddyshack," a rating of 23.2 or 18.5 million households; CBS; "Dynasty," 22.7 or 18.1 million, ABC; "TV's Censored Bloopers, 21.6 or 17.3 million, NBC; "Too Close for Comfort," 20.5 or 16.4 million, ABC; "Three's Company," 19.5 or 15.6 million, ABC; "Facts of Life," 19.3 or 15.4 million, NBC; "Hart to Hart," 18.9 or 15.1 million, ABC; "M-A-S-H," 18.8 or 15.0 million, CBS; "Inside the Third Reich," Part I, 18.8 or 15.0 million, ABC; "Battle of the Network Stars," 18.3 or 14.6 million, ABC.

French unsure of reason for Basque resurgence

BAYONNE, France (AP) — About 9:30 one quiet evening in the Basque mountain village of St. Etienne de Baigorry, two hooded men opened fire with automatic weapons on a patrol car. The result was two dead policemen and a precipitous rise in tension in the usually tranquil French Basque country of France.

Within 48 hours, police put out a wanted bulletin for Philippe Bidart, a 29-year-old former teacher known to be a member of the clandestine French Basque nationalist organization Iparretarrak. Police claim to have firm evidence pointing to Bidart, who remains at large. What is less clear, however, is who he was acting for and why, on that night in March.

The attack was unanimously denounced here, even by the most militant Basque nationalists, and sparked fears that years of relative peace in the French Basque country — a marked contrast to the violence in the neighboring Basque area of Spain — could be about to end.

THOUGH EXTREMISTS HERE have carried out numerous bombings and terrorist-type attacks over the years, most of the trouble has been a spillover from the Spanish side where Basque separatists are pursuing an armed struggle for independence.

The French Basque country long has served as a sanctuary for the Spanish militants fleeing authorities in the south and occasionally has served as a battleground between the Spanish Basque militants and the mysterious right-wing Spanish Basque Battalion, which many view as no more than an unofficial arm of the Spanish authorities in Madrid.

The ease with which the Spanish Basques are able to cross back and forth between France and Spain irritates authorities on both sides of the border. But the Spanish are particularly unhappy, claiming leaders of ETA, the Spanish separatist organization, use French territory to plan operations and return after attacks.

Proclaimed efforts to seal the border are greeted with derision by residents who know the area, and even police admit it is a futile effort.

"The Germans sent two divisions during the war to seal off the border and couldn't do it," said one police official. "How do you imagine 150 frontier police can do better?"

Nonetheless, authorities haven't been idle, as evidenced by the recent roundup of Spanish militants and the seizure of stocks of arms and documents. Thirteen people, including two French Basques, were arrested and charged in late April on a wide range of offenses.

French anti-terrorist specialists, however, do not see the killings in St. Etienne de Baigorry as a sign of an upsurge in activity by the French militants. Some officials even theorize that the attack may have been set up by the Spaniards hoping to provoke a crisis and a police crackdown here.

French Basque extremists are believed to number fewer than 100, mostly grouped in Iparretarrak, which means "those of the north" in the Basque language, and another group called Hordago.

But the French Basques have never had the separatist passion that exists in Spain. The reasons are largely historical.

SPAIN'S BASQUES SUFFERED through three civil conflicts, the two Carlist wars of the 19th century and the 1936-39 Spanish civil war. Their support of the republic during the civil war brought severe repression from the Francoist victors.

The French Basques also were engaged in three wars. But these all were national conflicts against a foreign enemy, Germany — in 1870, 1914-18 and 1939-45 — and had the effect of forging a sense of national unity and absorption into French society.

There also is the obvious difference in size. It is estimated that nearly 2.5 million Basques live in the four Spanish provinces of Vizcaya, Guipuzcoa, Alava and Navarra, while in the French provinces of Labourd, Basse-Navarre and Soule, only about 80,000 of the 250,000 residents are considered Basques.

Possible smoking ad change debated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposed change in cigarette advertising could hurt rather than help consumers because it would slow down the transfer of smokers to low-tar, low-nicotine brands, according to spokesmen for the tobacco and advertising industries.

The president of the American Heart Association called parts of their argument "somewhat difficult to believe."

The comments were testimony Monday on a bill which would require that cigarette packs and advertising contain a series of specific warnings about smoking-related health hazards instead of the general warning that now appears.

Testifying before the Senate Commerce Committee in opposition to the bill, spokesmen for the advertising and tobacco industries contended that cigarette advertising is not aimed at influencing people to start smoking but rather at persuading them to smoke a particular brand.

"Restrictions on cigarette advertising do not have any effect on overall cigarette consumption," Michael J. Waterson, representing the American Association of Advertising, told the Senate Commerce Committee.

"Advertising restrictions do, however, slow down the transfer of smokers to low-tar, low-nicotine brands," he added. "In my opinion, the bill may well result in a decline in cigarette advertising, denying valuable product information, particularly relating to new low-tar brands, to consumers, and therefore having an effect the very opposite of that intended."

But Dr. Donald C. Harrison, president of the American Heart Association, said cigarette advertising is aimed at presenting smoking, especially to young people, as part of a glamorous, chic lifestyle.

Legislator's mail better than usual

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Joseph McDade, R-Pa., probably gets no more or no less mail than most of his 434 House colleagues, but some of it has been unusually demanding lately.

For instance, constituent Amy Johnson suggested McDade do more for the little people: "Can you make a rule to tell the big kids on the bus to quit picking on us and quit writing on the seat?" she petitioned.

Melissa Carlson, on the other hand, told her congressman: "I am worried about taxes!!! Because I cannot get any more fruit bars! I want you to do something about this!"

You can't fool the kids at Blossburg Elementary School in Tioga County, Pa., with rhetoric and bromides. They know exactly what worries them and what they expect their elected officials to do about it.

The group of 7-year-old and 8-year-old students were asked by their teachers to write McDade on the issues they felt were the most pressing.

From his mailbag, here are some more of their concerns:

"My name is Benjamin Randise...I am worried about the taxes. I want you to lower the taxes to one hundred dollars."

"My name is Juanita Seeley...I am worried about some people wrote on the wall Monday night. Some good person called the police. I want you to stop it. Will you please try to do it?"

"My name is Lennie Yoder...I am worried about the pollution and people who throw out their garbage in other people's yards. I am sick of it so please do something about it."

"My name is Holly Bartlett...I am worried about the telephone bills. Is their anything Congress can do about it please?"

"My name is Billie-Jo Beck...I am worried about people writing on the wall with paint. Will you please make a rule saying don't write on the walls?"

McDade, who put some of the letters from his young correspondents in the Congressional Record, detected some signficant trends developing at Blossburg Elementary.

"As with all samples of opinion, some interpretation of responses is necessary," McDade said. "My tabulation of the problems cited is as follows: taxes, five; pollution and littering, three; prices, two; jobs, two; graffiti, two; crime, two; fires, two; bullies, one; telephone bills, one; and other, one.

Economist says interest levels rising

NEW YORK (AP) — Interest levels are headed back up to their 1981 highs, when the prime rate topped 20 percent, says the chief economist for the Wall Street investment house Salomon Brothers.

Researchers to try pillow talk for fish

BALTIMORE (AP) — Two Chesapeake Bay researchers are trying to bolster the population of striped bass by "talking" to them.

The researchers have determined that sound is the method that spawning striped bass use to get together. The next step in their research will be to try to manipulate the fish using artificially created spawning noises.

The striped bass, a sport and commercial species that ranges along most of the East Coast, lives for decades and grows to as much as 100 pounds. They are known locally as rockfish.

Nearly all of the rockfish are born in the Chesapeake, but for a decade they have been in a mysterious reproductive decline.

Using underwater listening gear the scientists painstakingly sorted out the rockfish sounds from the noises emitted by herring, perch, catfish and others.

It turned out that the female rockfish is calling the shots, attracting the numerous males that fertilize her eggs with sequences of what sound like thumping noises, Dr. George E. Drewry, a biologist with the federal Office of Endangered species, said in a recent interview.

Drewry said one way that this knowledge might be beneficial is in devising means to make the rockfish avoid areas where high mortality of young is likely, such as a power plant water intake.

Then there are what University of Maryland researcher Joseph A. Mihursky calls "the far out stuff...really exciting possibilites for actually giving the rockfish cues for spawning better than the ones they get from nature."

Times, they are a changin' for higher education

Hearst Feature Service

The next decade is certain to mark an evolutionary epoch in higher education, one that may bring about "social segregation."

Harvard University president Derek C. Bok stressed in his annual report that the Reagan administration needs to rethink its policies before imposing greater burdens on colleges by "sudden, drastic changes in its financial aid policies." He foresaw, he said, a series of affects.

College student populations will shift — many will move from private to public institutions, others will simply forego the financial burden of college — and the ranks of the institutions themselves will be depleted by similar financial crises.

DRASTICALLY REDUCED FEDERAL financial aid to students, a predicted 20 percent decline in the college age population and inflation will set the terms for the educational battle of the '80s.

Harvard, Bok continued, will survive. So too, will Yale, Princeton, Stanford and other large, stable and powerful institutions of higher learning. "But many other private colleges may have to close down or substantially reduce the quality of their programs," he added.

Bok hardly exaggerates. The picture taking shape for the future finds fewer and fewer students attending college because of high tuitions and no federal subsidies to ease the burden. Most of those students who will attend college will go to the less expensive (therefore more accessible) public institutions.

In 1960 five out of 10 students were in public institutions, today, eight of 10 are in public institutions. Inevitably, this will, as Bok suggests, tend to "segregate our colleges and universities according to social class."

With fewer high caliber students to select from, private institutions individually must do some creative work to attract students. And the luxury of institutional prosperity will be replaced by the need simply to survive.

Survival efforts have already begun to take many forms. The College of St. Joseph the Provider in Rutland, Vt. is one example. Originally established as a teaching college for women, the school has broken a 30-year tradition and acquired a beer and wine license, officials said, to better serve their student enrollment.

The college went co-ed several years ago. Today, 40 percent of its total enrollment is non-Catholic. With 80 percent of its enrollment in need of financial aid, however, the signs of instability are evident.

LARGER PRIVATE SCHOOLS like Brown University saw the pendulum swinging away from liberal spending early and similarly made their moves early. Brown recently increased its fund-raising personnel from one to five.

Yet in the face of the $1.6 billion cuts in direct student aid and another $2 million loss in Social Security grants, educators are eager to develop financial alternatives designed to satisfy the need for continued and effective higher education, as well as fiscal austerity.

On skids two years ago, Italian automaker makes U-turn

By DENNIS REDMONT
Associated Press Writer

ROME (AP) — Two years ago, Fiat, Italy's largest automaker and its biggest private company, was plagued by prostitution and drugs on the assembly line, battered by Red Brigades attacks and fearful that Libya would throw its 11 percent share in the company onto a depressed market.

Today, after trimming 60,000 workers from its domestic and foreign labor force, adding electronic robot welders to its assembly lines and introducing several successful new models, Fiat is announcing the highest dividend in its history.

Its cars are once again the hottest sellers in Europe, garnering 14.7 percent of the market in the first months of 1982, and 52 percent of the Italian market.

It has embarked on a multi-billion-dollar program to modernize its plants, gradually reduce the number of basic chassis from 15 to five and produce Modello Uno, the most talked about car in Europe since the U.S. X.

"In 1980, this place was a shambles," said Cesare Romiti, the company's chief executive officer in an interview. "On the assembly line, we had drug peddlers. We had organized prostitution. We had 15 percent absenteeism."

The Red Brigades murdered a Fiat executive in October 1979. In January 1980, they bombed a Fiat plant in Turin, killing a janitor and injuring another. They sabotaged some of the company's shops in 1979 and 1980, stalling production.

The workers at the company's Italian plants walked out Sept. 11, 1980, in protest against plans to fire 14,000 of them and lay off 23,000 others temporarily. Romiti advised the Agnelli family, the founders of the company and its biggest stockholder, to leave the country temporarily while he settled in for a long siege.

Strikers and non-strikers scuffled on the picket lines, and a few workers were hospitalized. After five weeks, on a rainy October day, 40,000 workers and foremen poured into the streets of Turin, Italy's Detroit, chanting: "We want to work."

A state prosecutor ordered the strike leaders to remove their pickets. The company agreed to cancel the 14,000 firings but went ahead with the 23,000 layoffs. The strike collapsed. Absenteeism dropped from 14 percent to less than 4 percent.

Then Fiat's new models took hold. There's a three-month waiting list for its low-priced Panda. Its Ritmo — Strada in the United States — attracted bujyers with the world's smallest diesel engine.

The Modello Uno will hit the market next January with lower weight, wind resistance and fuel consumption than any other car in the 1,000-1,300 centiliter range. It will compete head-on with the Volkswagen Rabbit and Renault's Le Car in the United States.

Fiat is also diversified. It builds robots for General Motors and makes steel, crafts machinery, construction equipment and aircraft engines. It prints the Turin daily La Stampa, owns an advertising company and makes telecommunications equipment.

Its defense division, with $1 billion yearly sales, produces trucks, planes, torpedoes, fuses and optical systems.

According to Romiti's report to the stockholders, every division of the company turned a profit except steel.

Libya's 11 percent of the company's stock makes it the second largest shareholder, and during the strike there was speculation that the country's volatile leader, Col. Moammar Khadafy, would get rid of what looked like a dubious investment.

But "we have found our Libyan shareholders, the Libyan Arab Bank, to have great capacity, great balance," said Romiti. "They don't do anything different from any regular stockholder."

He said Fiat continues to sell to Israel "and any country where we can do business and make good deals. The Libyans have kept their promise that they would not let their political views interfere."

However, he doesn't see completely smooth sailing ahead.

Negotiations between management, the unions and the government later this year will reshape salary structure and work rules. But if the outcome is favorable to Fiat and a worldwide depression doesn't develop, Romiti predicts that new issues of the company's stock will continue to be heavily oversubscribed, as one was today.

Inflation: Can good news last?

By ROBERT BURNS
AP Business News

NEW YORK (AP) — By now, anyone watching the American economy has noticed that one of its few bright spots is the unwinding of inflation. The upward march of prices has been slowing for seven months, and in March the government's Consumer Price Index actually fell for the first time in 17 years.

That's a big relief for consumers and corporations, particularly since much of the economy is reeling from the effects of recession and high interest rates.

But lingering in the minds of many people is a fear that it won't last, that once the recession runs its course and recovery begins, prices will start climbing again — as they did after the 1974-75 recession.

Here are some questions and answers to help explain which direction economists think inflation will go once economic recovery is under way:

Q. How far has inflation fallen?

A. Consumer prices over the past six months rose at an annual rate of 3.2 percent. That's a far cry from the 10.4 percent increase in the previous six months. Taking last March alone, prices actually fell 0.3 percent. That's not inflation. That's deflation. Many economists think, however, that March will prove to be the year's only month of deflation.

Q. Why can't it continue?

A. Mainly because the steep decline in energy prices that has led inflation's retreat will not last. In fact a turnaround in oil prices already is evident, and the likely result will be a jump in retail prices for gasoline. According to the Labor Department's figures, gasoline prices fell nearly 28 percent in the first quarter. By contrast, gas prices had soared 64 percent in the same period last year.

Q. Why is energy so important to the inflation outlook?

A. Jack Lavery, chief economist at Merrill Lynch & Co., says the single biggest reason for inflation's spurt in 1974 and 1980 was the huge increase in oil prices in each of those periods. The first oil-price shock followed the five-month Arab embargo that started in October 1973, and the second one followed the Iranian revolution that removed several million barrels of oil a day from the market and led to panic buying.

Lavery estimates that overall energy prices surged 18.4 percent at a compound annual rate in the decade of the 1970s compared with 1 percent in the 1960s.

Q. Now that energy prices have stabilized, will overall inflation steady also?

A. That seems likely, although there are other important factors to consider besides energy. Food prices, for example, play a major role in the inflation equation. The harvest and livestock prospects are considered encouraging this year, but crop failures caused by weather cannot be foreseen.

Q. What about wages?

A. Labor costs are a key element in figuring inflation's course because they represent, as a rule of thumb, about two-thirds of a company's total costs.

The government says major collective bargaining settlements during the first quarter of this year provided average wage increases of 2.2 percent for the contracts' first year and 2 percent over the life of the agreements. That compared with increases averaging 7.8 percent for the first year and 5.5 percent overall under terms of the expiring contracts.

Q. What will inflation be for all of 1982?

A. Lavery foresees inflation of about 4 percent or 4.5 percent toward the end of this year, followed by a pickup to about 6 percent by the end of 1983. Chase Econometrics, a private forecasting group, expects inflation to average about 7 percent through 1984. That would be down from 8.9 percent last year, as measured by the Consumer Price Index, and 12.4 percent in 1980.

Some firms sensitive to interest rates

NEW YORK (AP) — If interest rates ever fall from their persistently lofty levels, the whole economy is expected to benefit.

But financial analysts say utilities, financial institutions, insurance companies and the building industry all stand to gain the most.

These are interest-rate sensitive businesses, which along with bonds, rise when interest rates fall.

Despite the impasse on narrowing the federal deficit, and fears that heavy federal borrowing will maintain or increase pressure on high interest rates, some economists expect a rate retreat.

Albert Wojnilower, chief economist at First Boston Corp. and a long-time prophet of gloom about interest rates, advised clients last week that there is a good chance for modest declines over the next year.

U.S. Deputy Treasury Secretary Timothy McNamar says he expects rates to drop "very sharply" in the next 60 to 90 days, citing the dramatic unwinding of inflation in recent months.

On world foreign exchanges, the dollar has fallen against major currencies because of expectations of a decline in U.S. interest rates, something that would make dollar-denominated investments less attractive.

Not all forecasts are so glowing, however. Irwin Kellner, chief economist at Manufacturers Hanover Trust Co., warns that the prime rate could climb to a record 22 percent this summer from its current 16.5 percent if the deficit stalemate is not resolved, business failures escalate and unemployment exceeds 11 percent.

Even with doubts about the course of interest rates, Fred Fraenkel at E.F. Hutton & Co. Inc. says "no other investment appears less risky or more potentially rewarding over the near term" than interest-rate sensitive issues. "Banks could really become exciting," Fraenkel says.

"Declining interest rates are of particular help to the heavy-lending, money-center banks because dropping interest rates tend to widen the spread between the banks' cost of funds and their yield on loans and other assets," S&P says.

When rates are declining, the cost of banks' funds usually falls faster than banks' prime lending rates — the base upon which banks compute interest charges on short-term business loans to their most creditworthy customers.

Good-luck messages for Prince Andrew, 22, continue pouring in

Prince Andrew

LONDON (AP) — "Do look after yourself Andy and come back safe and well," read the message, one of dozens sent to Prince Andrew, who is serving as a helicopter pilot with Britain's Falkland Islands task force.

Good-luck wishes for the 22-year-old prince, who is serving on HMS Invincible, have been pouring into the London offices of the British Forces Broadcasting Service, which operates a daily request program for the troops.

BFPS officials said one woman signed her letter to Andrew, the second son of Queen Elizabeth II, with a huge kiss in lipstick and wrote on the bottom: "If I was 20 years younger, no other girl would stand a chance (with you)."

Mrs. Kissinger

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — An airport dispute between Nancy Kissinger and a "foul-mouthed" young woman was "too trivial" for prosecution, her lawyer said in asking to have an assault case dismissed.

Ellen Kaplan, a representative of the pro-nuclear Fusion Energy Foundation, alleged that the wife of former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger attacked her Feb. 7.

The Kissingers were preparing to board a flight from Newark to Boston where Kissinger, 58, underwent open heart surgery.

Mrs. Kissinger contends she was provoked by insults from Ms. Kaplan, culminating in a question to Kissinger: "Do you sleep with young boys at the Carlyle Hotel in New York City?"

"We're saying the case is too trivial to warrant prosecution," lawyer Richard McGlynn said Tuesday. "There are extenuating circumstances," he said, since Mrs. Kissinger was "under considerable stress at the time."

Mrs. Kissinger acknowledged she "grabbed Ms. Kaplan and threatened to hit her if she did not stop harrassing us. I then let go of Ms. Kaplan and my husband and I immediately went to take our plane," according to an affidavit quoted by McGlynn.

After the incident, Ms. Kaplan said she asked the question because the group was opposed to Kissinger and wanted "to confront the man with how low he is."

McGlynn called Ms. Kaplan's complaint "a little case, involving a fleeting incident, a spontaneous response to a foul-mouthed gnat. This court should say so."

He said the motion was based on a provision of the New Jersey penal code that gives courts discretion to dismiss prosecutions that are trivial or present extenuating circumstances.

A hearing on the motion is set for May 21 and trial in municipal court is scheduled for May 26. Mrs. Kissinger has pleaded innocent.

Irving Berlin

NEW YORK (AP) — Irving Berlin, who composed some of America's best-loved tunes for special occasions, spent one of his own milestones — his 94th birthday — quietly at home.

"He's never liked big to-dos," said Hilda Schneider, Berlin's secretary. She said the composer was in "pretty good health" and spent his birthday Tuesday quietly at home on Manhattan's East Side with Ellin, his wife of 56 years, and a few other relatives.

Berlin's "White Christmas" and "Easter Parade" have enjoyed perennial popularity, and his "God Bless America" is virtually an alternate national anthem.

Berlin assigned the royalties to "God Bless America" and a batch of other tunes to a fund for the Boy Scouts and Girl Scouts. By the end of last year, the fund had earned more than $1 million.

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Sid Caesar, one of TV's early stars, says pressures of live programming led to a 20-year ordeal with booze and pills.

At a news conference Tuesday to promote his autobiography, "Where Have I Been?" to be published in October, Caesar said he often considered suicide.

"I came to the point four years ago when I said to myself, 'Do you wanna live or do you wanna die?'" said the 59-year-old entertainer.

Caesar, who earned $1 million a year in the early years of television, said the stress of doing a weekly show was a factor in his alcoholism.

"When you're doing an hour and a half of live comedy 39 weeks a year with no cue cards, no prompters, no stopping if you make a mistake, it gets to you," he said. Caesar was a star of "Your Show of Shows" on NBC in the 1950s.

"I'm an addictive person, and I began drinking to relieve the pressure. Also, a part of drinking is swallowing your guilt ... My guilt was basic. A son cannot surpass his father. And if your father suffered, then you must suffer, too."

Viking replica sets sail for Norway

Ship's crew out to fulfill builder's 'homecoming' dream

KNIFE RIVER, Minn. (AP) — A Viking ship with a single square sail was heading across Lake Superior toward the Atlantic Ocean and Norway, pursuing the dream of a man who built the vessel but died before it set sail.

The Hjemkomst, a 76-foot replica of a Viking vessel, set sail Tuesday from the Knife River Marina after a two-day wait caused by rain and high winds.

About 150 people cheered as the Hjemkomst's crew raised the sail and steered the wooden ship in a straight course to the calm waters of the lake. Marina employees fired a two-gun salute.

Two of the 12-member crew — Tom Asp and Dennis Morken — remained behind in Knife River to gather gear and clean up after the departure. They will join the Hjemkomst, a Norwegian word meaning homecoming, after it crosses Lake Superior at Sault Ste. Marie, Mich.

Crew members said they weren't sure how long that leg of the journey will take.

Ham radio operator George Humphrey of Moorhead, Minn., said the ship was 27 miles from Knife River about 8:30 p.m. Tuesday. Humphrey is in charge of radio communications with the ship.

At the time, the ship was traveling about 5 knots — slightly more than 5 mph — with northeasterly winds of 10-15 mph, Humphrey said.

The crew reported no problems since leaving Knife River, he said.

"They were very happy to be under sail," he said.

The crew has been itching to go since the official launch of the Hjemkomst Thursday in Duluth. They had to return to Knife River for more supplies, then faced the delays due to the weather.

"We're just anxious to get out of here," Asp had said.

From Sault Ste. Marie, the Hjemkomst will travel down the St. Mary's River and across Lake Huron en route to Detroit.

Then it will sail across Lake Erie to the New York State Barge Canal and down the Hudson River to New York City. After a stopover in New York, the vessel will cross the Atlantic Ocean for Bergen, Norway.

Some scientists say Vikings visited Minnesota as early as 1362, but others say the evidence, a stone with inscriptions, is a 19th century hoax.

During the approximately 4,000-mile voyage, the crew will keep in contact with a network of amateur radio operators. If the ship fails to call the operators according to a schedule they've set, the operators will contact the Coast Guard.

The crew consists of 10 Americans and two Norwegians, led by skipper Erik Rudstrom of Norway, a veteran of several ocean voyages in ships similar to the Hjemkomst.

The voyage was the dream of the late Robert Asp of Hawley, Minn.

Prince Edward applies for marines commission

LONDON (AP) — His father and two brothers are navy men but Prince Edward, Queen Elizabeth II's youngest son, has applied to join the Royal Marines.

If accepted, the 18-year-old prince will train for a commission as a second-lieutenant, the lowest officer rank. He would serve at least two years, train as a commando and wear the marines' green beret.

The queen's press secretary, Michael Shea, said Edward will attend an assessment course Monday and Tuesday at the Royal Marine commando training center at Lympstone, in southwestern England.

"We are delighted that he may join us. It will be a feather in our cap to have a member of the royal family serving with us," said a spokesman for the marines.

Shea said Edward's application has nothing to do with the Falkland Islands crisis.

Edward's 22-year-old brother, Prince Andrew, is a navy helicopter pilot aboard the aircraft carrier Invincible with the Falkland Islands task force. Prince Charles, their 33-year-old brother and the heir to the throne, was captain of a mine sweeper.

Their father, Prince Philip, was a naval officer during and after World War II, and their grandfather, George VI, and great-grandfather, George V, were also navy men. But George V's other three sons broke the tradition, serving in the army and the Royal Air Force.

Queen Elizabeth as a teen-ager was a driver in the Auxiliary Territorial Service, the equivalent of the American WAC, during World War II.

Couples have Jewish wedding denied them in Soviet Union

NEWTON, Mass. (AP) — After 21 years of marriage Leonid and Larisa Aizenberg are newlyweds again.

Dancers at their wedding reception Tuesday night swirled past the smiling pair, who explain why they were among the 60 couples who had just taken part in a Jewish wedding denied them in the Soviet Union.

"With this ceremony, we feel we are coming back to the Jewish people, who we were separated from in the Soviet Union," Mrs. Aizenberg shouted above the din of the revelers at Temple Mishkan Tefila in Newton.

They were among 120 men and women, all Russian emigrants, who took part in a group religous ceremony at the temple — a wedding they were not allowed in the Soviet Union.

Some had been married 20 years. Others just a few months. But all had one common bond. They had to settle for civil ceremonies in Soviet government offices in Moscow, according to Emily Lipof, a spokeswoman from the Boston-area Jewish community that organized the event.

The Aizenberg's daughter Maria, 19, translating for her father, said her parents were married 21 years ago in Moscow in a civil ceremony in a tiny government office.

Jean Stapleton in several roles

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Jean Stapleton, a three-time Emmy winner for her portrayal of Edith Bunker on "All in the Family," will star in "The Buddy System" for 20th Century-Fox.

Miss Stapleton stars with Richard Dreyfuss and Susan Sarandon in the romantic comedy, which goes into production in July. It is her first feature film appearance since leaving "All in the Family."

She will also be seen as Eleanor Roosevelt in the CBS movie "Eleanor, First Lady of the World," set for May 12.

Students from Grand Prairie schools enjoy "The Rapids," an inner tube course that flows through whirlpools, waterfalls and short slides and is one of six major attractions at White Water, claimed to be the largest water recreation park in the U.S. The park, located west of Dallas in Grand Prarie, opened May 1 for the 1982 season.

Congressmen, Haig don't agree on proper weapons freeze status

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional advocates of a nuclear weapons freeze are stepping up their campaign, saying President Reagan's plan for deep cuts in missile arsenals will take too long to negotiate.

"We are not running against the calendar; we are running against the clock, and I think it's five minutes to eternity," Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee Tuesday.

Hatfield and Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., testified in support of their resolution to cut nuclear arms "through annual percentages or equally effective means."

SECRETARY OF STATE Alexander M. Haig Jr., however, told the committee such proposals would "undercut" the president's plan because they would lock in Soviet superiority and give the Soviets no incentive to negotiate.

The two-phase program Reagan outlined Sunday in a speech calls for the United States and the Soviet Union to reduce their arsenals of nuclear warheads by one-third and then agree on lower, equal ceilings on all strategic forces.

The committee planned to hear today from Sens. Henry M. Jackson, D-Wash., and John Warner, R-Va., sponsors of a resolution calling for a long-term freeze at "equal and sharply reduced levels of forces."

Haig testified that the administration supported the objectives of the Jackson-Warner resolution, but hoped the debate would not lead to "fresh battle lines between divided factions."

In testimony prepared for today's session, Rep. Clement J. Zablocki, D-Wis., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, supported a resolution he said "bridges the difference" between freeze proponents and administration supporters.

Zablocki said the Kennedy-Hatfield proposal "could destroy needed flexibility to bargain over new U.S. systems in exchange for reciprocal Soviet restraint."

ON THE OTHER hand, he said, the Jackson-Warner approach "seems to assume that a successful outcome from negotiations can be achieved only through a massive unilateral increase in the U.S. nuclear arsenal."

Zablocki's proposal follows the main outlines of the Jackson-Warner resolution, but also calls for an immediate start on nuclear arms reduction talks, continued adherence to the limits in the unratified SALT II Treaty, and demands that new destabilizing weapons be avoided.

Another compromise proposal was outlined Tuesday by Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., who said the Reagan proposal, "though belated, is a constructive and welcome step."

"Even if this new effort is sincere, and I assume that it is insofar as the president is concerned, the negotiating will take a great deal of time," Cranston added.

His proposal calls for continued compliance with SALT II, negotiations for a freeze, and negotiations for "major, balanced, verifiable reductions."

But Haig said the administration considers SALT II dead. "The worst thing we could do now would be to attempt to resurrect an agreement that could only generate massive controversy, confuse our allies, confuse the Soviets and confuse public opinion," he said.

Haig added, however, that the administration would continue to abide by the limits contained in SALT II as long as the Soviet Union does.

SALT II IS A strategic arms limitation treaty negotiated under three presidents and signed by former President Carter, but never ratified by the Senate.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, asked whether the Reagan plan would not give the Soviet Union a greater overall advantage than under the terms of SALT II.

"No, no, senator, precisely the opposite," Haig replied.

He said that even if the Soviets chose to retain their SS-18 missiles, the most potent element of their intercontinental arsenal, they would be compelled to give up almost everything else.

Glenn also questioned Haig about his statement that cuts would be made from current levels of missiles already deployed, rather than all the missiles in the stockpiles.

"You mean that we could continue to stockpile as many as we wanted to?" he asked.

Haig replied that the cuts would be measured in deployed missiles "for purposes of the count, but not for purposes of mutual understanding of our balance."

At this point, with Glenn still seeking clarification, Haig said he had to leave for a luncheon date with Reagan.

Glenn obtained agreement from Sen. Charles Percy, R-Ill., committee chairman, to invite Haig back later for a closed-door meeting.

"There are a considerable number of questions we want answered before we think that this is a really workable plan," Glenn said.

Passengers complain of long wait caused by bomb threat on plane

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Ten flights were diverted from San Francisco International Airport — the nation's fifth busiest — after a bomb threat forced 263 passengers to evacuate a Northwest Orient Airliner on a remote, windswept runway.

The bomb threat was discovered Tuesday, scrawled in lipstick across a mirror in a lavatory of the 747 arriving from Honolulu. It read, "I have a bomb on board."

Airport officials halted air traffic at 7 p.m. PDT, two minutes before the plane touched down on runway 19L near San Francisco Bay.

No bomb was found in the search by investigators, who used a dog from the San Mateo County sheriff's office. But another 36 inbound flights were delayed in the 67-minute diversion of air traffic, said Ken Golcher, assistant chief of the Federal Aviation Administration's air traffic control center in Fremont.

Passengers aboard the jumbo jet spent 30 minutes aboard the plane while the pilot consulted with airline and airport authorities on how to evacuate. Passengers said they waited another hour in cold wind outside the aircraft before buses escorted them to a terminal.

Most passengers said they weren't frightened by the possibility of an explosion but were angry about the long, cold wait for buses.

"The worst thing about this is that they had no provision for children out there," said passenger Alice Dickensheets, passing through San Francisco on her way to Britain. "I think it's ridiculous for an 8-year-old to have to stand out there for an hour in freezing cold."

The incoming flights were diverted to other Northern California airports because of the fear of an explosion aboard the Northwest aircraft and to eliminate risk to the 747 passengers as they were escorted by buses across airport landing, takeoff and taxi areas to the south terminal, authorities said.

Heat said to help interferon work

HOUSTON (AP) — Heat treatments can enhance the cancer-fighting ability of interferon and will be used in combination with the injections of the drug in the future, a researcher predicted.

Dr. Jordan U. Gutterman, head of an M.D. Anderson Hospital research team, said Tuesday interferon's effectiveness in reducing the size of cancer tumors seems to be enhanced by heat.

The doctor said he and other researchers have discussed combining interferon injections with thermal treatments, but the idea is still in the talking stage.

"We'll do it in the future," said Jordan, "I'm sure."

The researcher said that in very limited experimental trials with synthetic interferon, the drug tends to cause a rise in the temperature of patients.

Gutterman said the studies suggest that the natural production of interferon in the body may be responsible for the fever that generally accompanies viral infections, such as colds and flu.

He said it is not known precisely what function the natural rise in temperatures serves in the body's attempt to fight infection.
