Aides and security personnel surround former Philippines first lady Imelda Marcos as she steps from a limousine at New York City's Waldorf Astoria Hotel. She arrived Sunday to face today's arraignment on embezzlement charges.

Imelda Marcos in New York to face embezzlement charge

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Philippine first lady Imelda Marcos has returned to the city where she once threw lavish parties, this time to answer to an indictment accusing her and her husband of embezzling $100 million from their homeland.

Mrs. Marcos and her entourage arrived Sunday by luxury jet from Hawaii, where she and ousted Philippine President Ferdinand Marcos have lived in exile since fleeing the Philippines in February 1986.

Defense lawyers convinced U.S. District Judge John F. Keenan that the 71-year-old Marcos was too frail to make the trip to New York City for a court appearance. His arraignment was postponed, at least until a government physician examines him.

The judge, however, ordered Mrs. Marcos to appear. She was scheduled for arraignment today on charges that the couple used the country's money to buy property including four New York buildings and artwork.

Lawyers said Mrs. Marcos, 59, will plead innocent to charges in the Oct. 21 embezzlement and racketeering indictment. The main racketeering charge carries a maximum penalty of 20 years in prison upon conviction.

Mrs. Marcos flew from Hawaii on Saturday, the first time she has left the state since her exile there.

On Sunday, a limousine brought her to the Waldorf Towers, one of the New York locations where she threw lavish parties as first lady. She was surrounded by reporters and photographers. Bodyguards cleared a path as she and those with her strode inside the luxury apartment-hotel without comment.

A Marcos associate in Honolulu, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said Mrs. Marcos hoped to shop and entertain old friends while in New York.

"Her real concern is that she also hasn't left her husband's side for three years and she's very concerned about his health," John Bartko, a Marcos attorney, said in Honolulu.

"She's going to meet her legal obligation, but I just don't see her having a gay old time in New York City."

Sunday afternoon, Mrs. Marcos visited St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Cathedral. Aides said the Waldorf bill, which reportedly will run $1,800 a night, is to be paid by friends they won't identify.

The criminal indictment is similar to a 1986 civil lawsuit filed in California by the Philippine government of Marcos' successor, Corazon Aquino.

Dukakis challenges Bush to new debate

Associated Press

Michael Dukakis boasted about his liberal background and challenged rival George Bush to an election eve debate while the Republican nominee, wary of a tightening presidential race, vowed a tough fight in the waning days of the campaign.

With eight days left until Election Day, and some polls indicating a race closer than earlier surveys suggested, an enthusiastic Dukakis campaigned by train Sunday through California's Central Valley, where he added a new twist to his populist appeal.

"We need a president in the tradition, yes, the liberal tradition of Franklin Roosevelt, Harry Truman and John Kennedy," the Democratic nominee told voters at stops from Bakersfield to Stockton.

Questioned by reporters about his decision to embrace the "L-word," a label he has shunned for months, Dukakis said he comes from the liberal tradition of "presidents who were on the side of average Americans, presidents who helped to build middle class America."

"Harry Truman was a liberal who believed in balancing budgets and that's the tradition I come from," the Massachusetts governor said.

Dukakis also called on his GOP opponent to use the network television time they both bought on election eve for a one-on-one debate with a moderator and no reporters.

"I'm going to be a president who unites America," Dukakis said. "If he (Bush) wants to talk about that, then I'd be happy to meet him face-to-face."

The vice president, in the second presidential debate on Oct. 13, ruled out the possibility of a third confrontation between the two candidates.

Bush stumped in Philadelphia's suburbs on Sunday and briefly manned the phones at his campaign headquarters in Montgomery County.

"This is George Bush calling from the headquarters. We're trying to get the vote out. I know you probably don't believe it, but that's who it is," the GOP nominee said in one call.

Precinct 1 race heats up as election day approaches

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last in a two-part series on local candidates running for office in the Nov. 8 general election.

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

With a little more than a week remaining until election day, campaigns for commissioner of Midland County Precinct 1 are rapidly gathering up steam.

In the race, 20-year veteran Republican Commissioner Durward Wright is waging a campaign to hold on to the post sought by Democratic Party rival Mark Spears.

Wright is a 57-year-old financial consultant who has turned the commissioner's post virtually into a full-time job.

Spears teaches life science at Alamo Junior High School and would hold down both jobs if he is successful at knocking Wright out of office.

Most local hopefuls unopposed

Although the controversial presidential race is beginning to stimulate interest in the November general election, it appears Midland's down-ballot candidates have nothing to lose since most are running unopposed.

U.S. Rep. Lamar Smith, a Republican from San Antonio, is nearing the end of his first term in office still dedicated to making energy a priority issue in his unopposed campaign for re-election.

Tax credits to stimulate domestic production — and the deregulation of natural gas — are ideas Smith said would boost the energy industry.

Smith said he also will continue to push for opening of the national wildlife refuge in Alaska for exploration.

A Drug Enforcement Administration agent assigned to the Permian Basin Regional Narcotics Task Force was funded, in part, because of Smith's efforts in acquiring a $525,000 federal grant to operate the task force for a year.

Truck driver held after 70-mile West Texas rampage

FORT HANCOCK, Texas (AP) — Authorities say a truck driver accused of shooting an officer and forcing several motorists off Interstate 10 — including a woman who was killed when her vehicle flipped — may have been under the influence of drugs.

Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells said authorities arrested Denver Jerome Burrell, 30, of Anderson, S.C., after a 70-mile, hour-long traffic rampage through a remote area of West Texas Sunday morning.

Burrell, who was hauling a shipment of lightbulbs from South Carolina to Nevada, apparently went berserk at the wheel, speeding down the interstate and forcing vehicles off the roadway, officials said. He then led authorities on a chase through the desolate, mountainous area, allegedly shooting a constable and trying to run him down with the tractor trailer.

A 48-year-old El Paso woman was killed after the Ford Bronco she was driving apparently was run off the road and flipped over.

Burrell remains in Hudspeth County Jail in lieu of $400,000 in bonds on charges of attempted capital murder, involuntary manslaughter and driving while under the influence of a controlled substance.

Wells said authorities are unsure what type of drug Burrell may have been using when the accidents occurred.

"The only thing we know is he was high — evidently on drugs," said DPS Trooper Bob Newman of El Paso. Arresting officers at the scene "said he was out of his mind." Other witnesses confirmed Burrell appeared disoriented.

The rampage began about 10:30 a.m. near Van Horn, about 100 miles southeast of El Paso, Newman said. As the tractor trailer continued west on I-10, it allegedly rammed the 1985 Bronco driven by Sharon Marie Agutter of El Paso, sending the vehicle careening off to the right and flipping off the road about 10 miles west of Sierra Blanca.

Justice of the Peace Arcadio Ramirez of Sierra Blanca pronounced Ms. Agutter dead at the scene. A poodle in the vehicle survived, Wells said.

Newman said officials hoped to upgrade the involuntary manslaughter charge against Burrell stemming from Ms. Agutter's death to a murder charge.

As the rampage continued, the truck rammed a Winnebago that was pulling a compact car atop a trailer behind, smashing the car. Raymond Price of Los Angeles, the Winnebago driver, was unhurt, but continued to follow the truck to act as a witness.

Newman said Hudspeth County Constable Sonny Hillin and a U.S. Border Patrol agent chased the truck and were able to stop Burrell initially. But as Hillin stepped out of his patrol car, the truck driver allegedly tried to pin the officer against his car.

Hillin scrambled back to his car and stopped the truck again by pulling in front of it. But Burrell allegedly shot through the truck windshield, hitting the officer in the neck.

Jackie Hillin, who operates a volunteer ambulance service for Hudspeth County, said she heard her constable husband call for the ambulance on a police scanner.

Jaycees' spook-house tradition a must for many local youngsters

By JANE MARLER DEES
Staff Writer

Taylor Wells returned to the Midland Jaycees spook house Friday night though an event last year could have scared him away for good.

"I was here last year and it wasn't so scary," said Wells, 14. Unfortunately, his friend didn't feel that way.

"Last year he (the friend) ran smack into the glass door when the 'chain saw' man came out," Wells recalled in between chuckles.

It's Halloween, a good time to be afraid.

Since the late 1970s, the local Jaycee chapter has hosted a spook house during the Halloween season that organizer Debbie Steele said should "scare the wits" out of those brave enough to enter.

Located in a now-defunct post office in the Northland Shopping Center, the "Chamber of Horrors" boasts a maze-like layout with enough blood, guts, limbs, animal parts and such to weaken even the strongest of stomachs.

Response from the children in line ran from the blase to the terror-stricken.

"The only time I get scared is when somebody comes out from behind me and taps me on the shoulder," confessed Brian Wilson, 14.

Vanessa Oglesby, 9, believed she was "gonna be scared of just about anything.

"I'm looking for the vampire so I can stay away," she said.

Vanessa's 5-year-old sister, Katrina, had never been to a spook house and was scared, she said.

She planned to hunt down any ghosts so she could "hit them in the nose."

Allen Bloodworth, 9, admitted his last name sounded "Halloween-ish" in itself, and admitted that last year he couldn't bring himself to enter the spook house.

Armed this year with a mother, father and older brother, however, he vowed he'd go inside despite "the blood."

Taylor's attitude was a bit more philosophic. He claimed the goings-on inside the Chamber of Horrors made him laugh, though even he felt a bit spooked last year, when he was younger.

But anyway, "It's the stuff in the real world that scares me," Taylor explained.

The Jaycee spook house will be open tonight at 7 p.m. Admission is $3 for adults and $2 for children, though ticket prices are discounted $1 if the person brings a can of food for a Jaycee food drive.

Proceeds from the event — expected to be between $2,500 and $3,500 — fund the Jaycees' Christmas project known as the "Children's Christmas Shopping Spree," Ms. Steele said.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Cloudy skies, low in 40s due

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midland skies will be cloudy tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 40s, with winds will be light and variable.

Brief early morning clouds are expected for Tuesday morning, becoming sunny and a little warmer with the high in the upper 70s. Southerly winds will be 5-15 mph.

Sunday's high of 75 was 13 degrees cooler than the record high of 88 set for that date in 1987. The overnight low of 53 was 21 degrees warmer than the record low of 32 set for this date in 1949.

STATE

Much of the state was beset with a gloomy Monday as low clouds, fog and scattered drizzle were dominant across Texas, the National Weather Service reported.

The persistent clouds and drizzle were the result of warm moist Gulf air flowing over the cooler air at the surface.

Thunderstorms were over Central Texas due to a weak upper level storm passing over the state. Meanwhile, far west texas had generally clear skies.

The wind over the state was from the north or northeast at 5 mph to 10 mph.

Early morning state temperatures were in the 60s and 70s over South Texas and generally in the 40s and 50s over North and West texas. The 4 a.m. state temperature extremes were a low of 36 degrees at Dalhart and a high of 72 degrees at McAllen.

Mostly cloudy skies were likely for South Texas and trick-or-treaters may need to incorporate raincoats into their costume as some thunderstorms also were expected.

Lows tonight ranging from the low 40s in the Panhandle to the low 60s over the lower coastal plains.

NATION

Record low temperatures were reached in the Northeast and Midwest today, and showers lingered in the warmer South.

Early this morning, the mercury plummeted to new depths for the date in Cleveland, Flint, Mich., and Grand Rapids, Mich., all at 22 degrees; and South Bend, Ind., at 25.

Records were tied at Wilkes-Barre, Scranton, Pa., and Rochester, N.Y., at 22; and Williamsport, Pa., and Fort Wayne, Ind., at 23.

Today's records came after record lows for the date also were broken or tied in three cities, including Youngstown, Ohio, where the mercury dipped to 21.

In the Southeast, where higher temperatures prevailed, showers and occasional thunderstorms remained through the early morning hours in northern Texas, and across Louisiana and central Mississippi to central Alabama.

Thunderstorms produced hail a half-inch in diameter at Abilene, Texas.

Today's forecast called for rain scattered from Texas across the lower Mississippi Valley, the southern Atlantic Coast, Florida and the Pacific Northwest.

Predicted highs: 40s and 50s from the northern Plains and upper Mississippi Valley through the Great Lakes, the Ohio Valley, the central and southern Appalachians, and from the Middle Atlantic States into southern New England; 30s in northern New England; 80s in southern Florida, and from southern Texas through the Rio Grande Valley and the southern Plateau into Southern California; and up to the mid-90s in Arizona's desert areas.

Much of the rest of the nation is expected to be in the 60s or 70s.

The nation's temperatures at 2 a.m. EST ranged from 18 degrees at Elmira and Massena, N.Y., to 77 at Yuma, Ariz.

Anderson tape says U.S. impeding release

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Pro-Iranian Shiite Moslem kidnappers today released a videotape of American journalist Terry Anderson, who read a message blaming the U.S. government for preventing his release.

The tape was delivered to a Western news agency office in Beirut, along with a statement in Arabic, a few days after Anderson spent a fourth birthday, his 41st, in captivity.

"Once again I have been given the chance to speak to my government, my family and my people," said the chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press.

"I love you, I miss you very much. I know of your continued strong efforts for me," he addressed friends and family in the message.

"I have been very close to being released several times over the past three years, but each time it seems that the U.S. government uses its influence to stop any agreement and I don't understand this.

"I am not asking (President) Reagan to deal with terrorists, although Mr. (George) Bush did so in the Iran-Contra affair and TWA hijacking." He did not elaborate.

"Our problem could have been solved a long time ago without such complications as arms deals," Anderson said.

He urged the U.S. administration to negotiate his release and appealed to the new U.S. president once elected to end the plight of the hostages. The Reagan administration has said it refuses to negotiate with terrorists.

Anderson, of Lorain, Ohio, was kidnapped March 16, 1985, in Beirut and is the longest-held of the 14 foreigners, nine of them American, missing in Lebanon and presumed captives of kidnappers.

He was seized by a group calling itself Islamic Jihad, or Holy War, which said in the accompanying statement that it provided the videotape "on the occasion of Terry Anderson's birthday and in response to your letters, and according to his desire to send you a recorded message."

Islamic Jihad also holds Thomas Sutherland, 56, of Fort Collins, Colo., who is acting dean of agriculture at American University in Beirut. He was kidnapped June 10, 1985.

In a statement Oct. 23, the group repeated its longstanding demands for the release of Anderson and Sutherland, which include the release of fellow "holy warriors" from all foreign jails and withdrawal of Israeli forces from south Lebanon.

In the videotape, Anderson said: "With Palestinians in the West Bank and the Lebanese in Israeli prisons, U.S. support to Israel is no different.

"All what is necessary is that Mr. Reagan and Mr. Bush, if he is elected, use their influence in a positive way, not in a negative one, with those who are trying to find a way out of this terrible impasse."

Vice President Bush is the Republican candidate in the Nov. 8 presidential election.

Anderson appeared relaxed as he read from the prepared statement. He was cleanshaven and wore eyeglasses. His hair was cut short and neatly combed.

"I heard him come on the radio and say, 'Get me an ambulance, I've been shot,' " Mrs. Hillin said. She and her son-in-law escorted Hillin to an El Paso hospital some 70 miles away, driving on the opposite side of the highway and passing the alleged assailant on the way.

A nursing supervisor at Vista Hills Medical Center in El Paso said Hillin was listed in stable condition late Sunday. But Mrs. Hillin said her husband would require extensive surgery to repair the jaw.

After officers from the DPS, Border Patrol and sheriff's office continued to pursue the truck for several more miles, Newman said Burrell finally stopped his rig just a half-mile west of Fort Hancock and surrendered without incident.

Newman said a .357 Magnum revolver on the dashboard of the truck had been fired four times.

"If the management is there, then you can cut down on the time that is necessary to do the everyday chores," Spears said, referring to his plan to take two Mondays off each month without pay to attend regular meetings of the Commissioners Court.

Spears says he has the needed management expertise to bring to county government. A captain in the U.S. Army Reserves Corps of Engineers, Spears was graduated in 1976 from Bradley University in Peoria, Ill., and worked in geology for a major oil company and later worked as an independent geologist before he entered teaching.

Were he to be elected commissioner, Spears said he would develop a centralized operations department to assure that there is an accounting of all the tax dollars that are being spent by the different county departments.

"Right now, there's a lot of waste out there because we do not control the money that is being spent," he said.

Spears also said the county should have a more visible personnel office that would promote affirmative action.

Wright's basic philosophy of county government is to represent the people within the confines and limitations set by the budget, statute and Texas Constitution, he said.

Spear's plan to reorganize the county's personnel department won't work, Wright said, observing that most personnel matters already fall under the responsibility of County Treasurer Dee Thompson.

"Each individual office-holder by law is entitled to hire his or her own employees and the decision is not the Commissioners Court's," he said. "All a personnel office would be is a clearing house for applications."

In contending that he is the best qualified candidate, Wright cited his willingness to tackle the really tough questions that county government is forced to face.

Among those challenges are finding solutions to an overcrowded courthouse, which the commissioner deemed a "priority" issue because "anyone who serves on a jury can see that we're on top of ourselves in almost every office," he said.

Once the new downtown jail is constructed, Wright proposes the county build a "cost-effective" law enforcement center directly next to the jail with existing surplus funds.

"That will enable us to expand our operations within the courthouse proper to the extent that everybody will have a place to sit down," he said.

Spears opposes the construction of the new jail, primarily because of its location on the corner of Main Street and Industrial Avenue.

Wright said he was never satisfied with earlier jail proposals, including plans to build on the the courthouse or a $10 million facility east of town.

However, he said the voter-approved $3.8 jail "is the answer because it is tax-effective and it will virtually pay its' own way.

"The land was available at a very, very reasonable price. All of these things are why I support it," he added.

BALLOT

Midlander Tom Craddick, 44, is presently serving his 10th term in the Texas House of Representatives, holding seats on the Joint Committee on Water Resources, the Ways and Means and Energy Committees.

The state's out-of-balance budget weighs heavily on the mind of Craddick, who predicts that fiscal matters — including a prohibition on a state income tax — will dominate the next legislative session when it convenes next January in Austin.

Tort reform, which lawmakers enacted in the last session, also will be high on the legislative agenda, Craddick, a Republican, has said.

Craddick's Libertarian Party opponent, Leonard Caryl, said that if elected, he would push for a state constitutional amendment requiring voter approval on all state and local tax increases.

Caryl, whose name has been mispelled on the ballot and appears as "Leonard Carl," also wants to reduce state control over the public school system to create competition, he said.

State District Judge Pat Baskin, who is running unopposed for a third term on the 142nd Judicial District bench, claims to have sent a greater percentage of criminals to jail than any other West Texas judge.

The former Democrat turned Republican said criminals are less apt to enter into plea-bargain agreements because they fear his sentencing prowess.

State District Judge Dean Rucker is seeking his first full-term on the 318th Judicial District bench, replacing Barbara Culver, who stepped down after her appointment last spring to the Texas Supreme Court.

A former attorney in private practice, Rucker also served three years as chairman of the Midland County Republican Party.

Midland District Attorney Al Schorref, also running with no opponant, will enter his second term as chief prosecutor with an eye toward curbing narcotics trafficking in the area.

Schorre, a member of Gov. Bill Clements' Criminal Justice Task Force, was instrumental in acquiring funding for the drug task force.

Expansion of a victim-witness program and prosecution of repeat felony offenders — with an assistant prosecutor assigned to those cases — also have marked Schorre's first term in office.

Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, the county's chief law enforcement officer since 1985, has been active in fighting the flow of drugs which make their way into Midland County.

One of the brightest accomplishments was the push he and Schorre gave to help create the narcotics task force, said Painter, who also has no opponant.

A reserve deputy program, which utilizes volunteer officers to assist on patrol and in the jail, was implemented by the sheriff during his first term and has saved the county thousands of dollars, he said.

Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman, who prosecutes misdemeanor criminal offenses, juvenile offenders and represents the county in civil matters is nearing his second term in office.

During his tenure, Dettman claims to have achieved one of the highest conviction rates in the state and has successfully defended the county in civil lawsuits totaling more than $20 million.

With computerization, Dettman's office also has more than doubled the collection of hot checks without additional personnel, he said.

Keith Jobe, annother unopposed candidate who is seeking his first full term as Precinct 1 Justice of the Peace, said his priorities include maintaining the efficiency of his office and coordinating duties with fellow Peace Justice Robert Pine.

In his court, Jobe presides over civil matters involving $2,500 or less, and small claims court with amount of $1,000 or less. He also issues criminal warrants and sets bonds.

Frances Shuffield, Midland County's Tax Assessor/Collector since 1981, said computerization has become the watchword in her office, and will continue to be as she enters her third term.

Ms. Shuffield's office acts as an agent for collection of Midland County property taxes, and as an agent for the Greenwood Independent School District, State Department of Highways and Public Transportation, State Comptrollers Office, and Texas Alcohol and Beverage Commission.

Midland County Constable Ron Rice is unopposed in the race for his first full term after being appointed to the post in August, 1987.

Rice has a penchant for organization and efficiency, having implemented a flexible scheduling system for deputies.

A warrant service fee, which brings in revenue by charging convicted offenders for the cost of serving arrest warrants, also has been implemented since Rice took office.

Bush also delivered a pep talk to staff members at the headquarters, saying he and his wife, Barbara, plan "to keep running like we're 10 points behind. Nobody is going to out-work us."

The vice president was campaigning today in Louisville, Ky., and St. Louis and Kansas City, Mo., after taping an interview in Washington, D.C., with NBC News anchorman Tom Brokaw.

As part of a counteroffensive, the Dukakis campaign in Missouri announced late Sunday that a free lunch with the homeless will be held across the street from St. Louis' Union Station at the same time as the Bush rally.

The lunch for clergy, veterans, the elderly and others is being sponsored by the St. Louis Clergy Coalition, Students for Dukakis and other organizations, the campaign said in a statement.

The Democratic nominee was continuing his campaign in California with stops in San Jose and the Los Angeles suburb of Norwalk. Aides to Dukakis said their internal polls showed California, and its major prize of 47 electoral votes, is up for grabs despite surveys last week showing Bush ahead by 10 points.

Actress Sally Field, family unhurt in jet collision at Aspen airport

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — Academy award-winning actress Sally Field and her family were soaked with jet fuel but escaped unhurt when their private plane aborted takeoff and smashed into two parked airplanes.

"It's absolutely a miracle" no one was seriously injured in Saturday's crash, said Pitkin County Airport operations manager Bill Frome. "We're very, very fortunate that it's our slow period."

Field, 42, was en route to Burbank, Calif., when the Challenger CL60 crashed. Also on board were her film producer husband, Alan Greisman, 41, her 11-month-old son, Sam, and mother, Margaret O'Mahoney.

Israelis vow to avenge deaths in bus attack

JERICHO, Occupied West Bank (AP) — Israeli leaders today vowed to avenge the deaths of a Jewish woman and her three sons in the firebombing of a bus. The army said the Palestinian attackers were in custody, and there were reports two had confessed.

The attack in this West Bank town came 35 hours before Israel's parliamentary elections. It could drive undecided voters to the Likud bloc of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, who has advocated a hard line in dealing with violence.

In newspaper interviews published today, Shamir and his rival, Foreign Minister Shimon Peres, promised revenge for Sunday's attack.

Industry Minister Ariel Sharon, at an election rally in southern Israel, accused Israeli liberals of creating an atmosphere for such attacks, by saying: "All talk of withdrawal or pullbacks brings more and more firebomb attacks," newspapers reported.

Shamir was quoted as telling the Hadashot daily: "This despicable act in Jericho deserves an appropriate response that will prove to the murderers they will be punished to the full extent of the law."

Chief of Staff Lt. Gen. Dan Shomron told Israel radio that soldiers apprehended the assailants. "They will be punished severely," Shomron said, without saying how many had been arrested.

The radio listed the number of Arab suspects as seven, said they were detained while playing cards, and that two admitted to the attack.

Israeli news reports identified the dead woman as Rachel Weiss, 27. She and her sons, Rafael, Netanel and Efraim, aged 9 months to 3½ years, lived in Jerusalem and were returning home from the northern Israeli town of Tiberias, where they celebrated a friend's bar mitzvah, a coming-of-age ceremony for Jewish boys aged 13.

The woman's husband escaped without serious injury, army officials said.

Five other passengers were injured, one a soldier who was seriously burned.

Two of the injured are immigrants from Pittsburgh: Dov Blum, 35, who suffered serious burns on his face, and his wife, Cindy, burned on her face and back, said Ruth Mekel of Hadassah Hospital in Jerusalem.

Sunday night's attack claimed the largest number of Israeli lives in a single assault since the Palestinian revolt against Israel's 21-year occupation of the West Bank and Gaza Strip broke out almost 11 months ago.

AP

A total of 305 Palestinians and 10 Israelis have been killed in the uprising, which began Dec. 8.

Maj. Gen. Amram Mitzna, the West Bank commander, told reporters in Jericho today that a curfew was imposed on the town of about 17,000 Arabs 18 miles east of Jerusalem.

The attackers tossed the firebombs from a banana plantation next to the road. As reporters watched today, an army bulldozer plowed under rows of banana trees to prevent future ambushes.

Soldiers, some using police dogs, searched door to door.

Officers said the attack was meticulously planned, but Mitzna played down a connection with the elections: "The timing is just two days before the election, but it is not the first time that firebombs were thrown on (West Bank) roads."

In the past two months, there have been more than 100 firebomb attacks in the Jericho area, Israel radio said.

Mitzna said firebombs were hurled at the bus by Palestinians at about 8:15 p.m. One broke through a window, setting afire the back seat where the children were sitting.

"Two or three Molotov cocktails were thrown at the bus, which went up in flames in seconds," Mitzna said.

Poland says Lenin Shipyard to be closed

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Lenin Shipyard, a hotbed of labor activism where strikes eight years ago gave rise to the Solidarity trade union movement, will be closed Dec. 1 because it is losing money, the government said today.

Solidarity leader Lech Walesa, an electrician at the shipyard, said workers were ready to take over the business and run it profitably. The shipyard was closed today because of a holiday and is to reopen Wednesday.

Walesa called the decision a "personal provocation of Prime Minister Rakowski against the birthplace of Solidarity."

The Gdansk shipyard is the first big industrial enterprise to be singled out for closure by the government of Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski, who has promised to act aggressively in restructuring Polish industry.

Rakowski was a firm supporter of the Dec. 13, 1981, martial law crackdown that crushed Solidarity, the Soviet bloc's first free trade union. He was named prime minister Sept. 27 to replace Zbigniew Messner, who was criticized as ineffectual in reforming Poland's inefficient and debt-ridden economy.

The government's move comes as it bickers with Solidarity over proposed talks on social and economic reforms, including legalization of Solidarity.

After Walesa persuaded workers in August to end a wave of nationwide strikes, authorities said they would sit down with the opposition to discuss grievances. But officials object to Solidarity's choice of negotiators.

The official news agency PAP said Rakowski approved the decision to close the shipyard Saturday. It referred to a speech he made Oct. 13 when he presented his government to the Parliament:

"Rakowski announced that his government will go from words and plans to firm acts which would recover the Polish economy.

"That would include liquidation of enterprises that are inefficient, unproductive and some enterprises which require subsidies from the state treasury," the agency said.

The shipyard's workers will be offered jobs at other enterprises in Gdansk province, PAP said. It said the 10,000 workers will have some 30,000 jobs to choose from.

PAP said the announcement of the closure "is not a surprise for public opinion or for the work force of the Lenin shipyard. The possibility of liquidating this shipyard has been discussed in public...for a long time."

The shipyard, scene of strikes in May and August, has for two decades been a center of union activity but has been in decline for years.

Military leader says poor hold key to ending war

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — An army officer who says winning the loyalty of the poor is necessary to win the country's civil war has been named head of the military.

Col. Rene Emilio Ponce, a brigade commander, takes command of the military forces on Tuesday, replacing Gen. Adolfo Blandon, who is going to France as military attache.

Blandon, head of the joint chiefs of staff since 1983, announced the change of command within the U.S.-backed government in a local television interview broadcast late Saturday.

The 48-year-old general, who had been expected to step down by year's end, said his transfer "is not related to the political situation. It is necessary to open spaces for new generations."

Ponce, 41, was singled out as an exceptional commander by four U.S. Army lieutenant colonels earlier this year in a Harvard fellowship analysis of the Salvadoran civil war.

"We cannot think that solely by military means we are going to resolve this war," Ponce said this year. "Even if we kill all the subversives, the problem will not end. Such deplorable socio-economic conditions would remain that it (insurgency) could easily revive."

Rebel and government negotiators have met three times, most recently in October 1987, in an unsuccessful bid to negotiate a cease-fire in the 8-year-old civil war.

Sunday, two rebel commanders arrived in Panama City for talks with the Rev. Arturo Rivera y Damas, the Roman Catholic archbishop of San Salvador, on the possible resumption of peace talks.

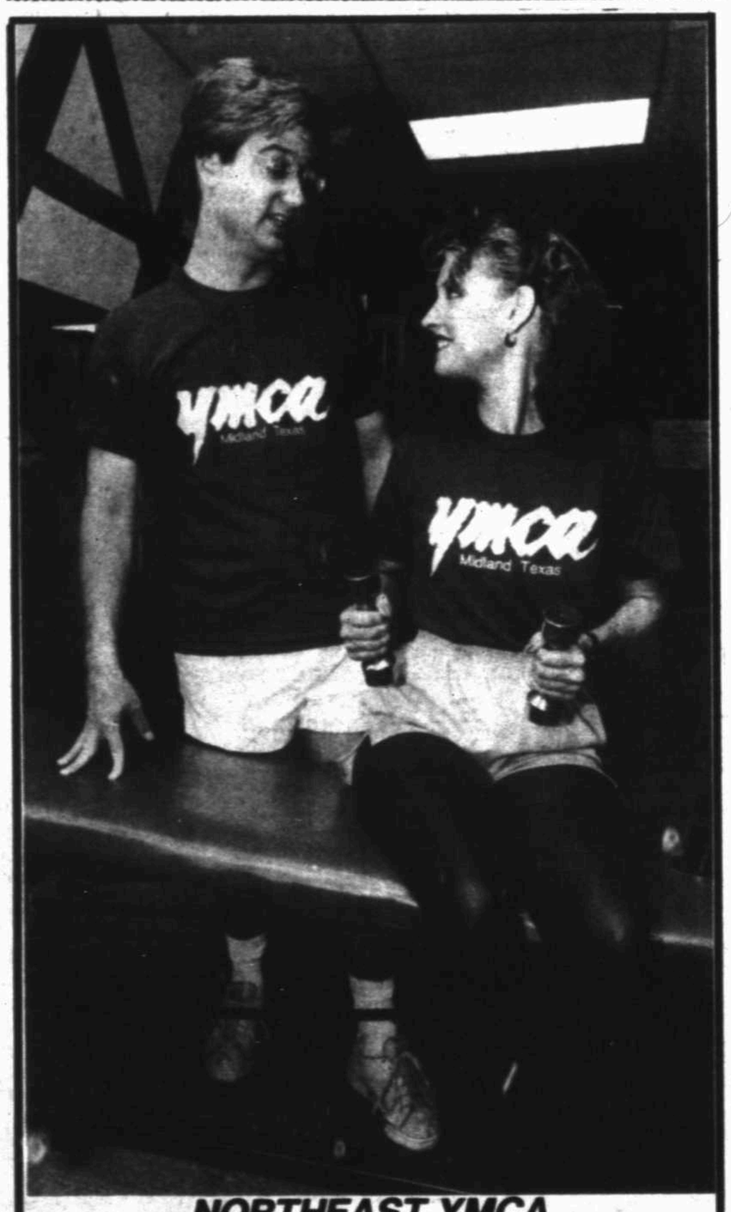

Joaquin Villalobos and Leonel Gonzalez said they planned to meet today with Rivera y Damas and the Rev. Emile Stehle of West Germany. Stehle has participated as an observer in previous government-rebel talks.

Ponce commands the 3rd Infantry Brigade and belongs to the "tandona," a tight-knit block of officers who have consolidated control of the armed forces in recent months.

Blandon will leave the nation with a legacy of a larger military. He increased its size to 50,000 troops.

Wichita Falls family clowns together

WICHITA FALLS, Texas (AP) — Sweet Pea backed away barking when she first saw Pickles wearing white face paint, a green wig and red suit.

That's because Sweet Pea, an English bulldog and family pet, didn't recognize Pickles as her master, Air Force Tech. Sgt. Glenn Roberts.

But the dog soon got used to the outlandish disguise when she saw 6-year-old Joshua Roberts decked out in similar fashion.

Glenn and his son, Josh, are two of the newest members of the Wichita Falls Clown Arounds, a city clown club.

Waiting in the wings to join in is 3-year-old Amber Roberts.

Glenn's wife, Jeannie Roberts, describes her role as a behind-the-scenes coordinator, making the costumes and helping with makeup. She even found a ready-made white and green clown collar that Sweet Pea wears around her midsection.

Glenn, a 31-year-old instructor at Sheppard Air Force Base, said he always has been fascinated with clowns and circuses.

When Glenn and Jeannie read about a clown clinic being offered by the Clown Arounds, they decided that Glenn and Josh should check it out.

They wound up joining the club that is sponsored by the Wichita Falls Parks and Recreation Department.

"I was getting into youth sports and being around kids. I'm a soccer coach at Sheppard and Josh is a member of the team I coach," Glenn said.

"It was something that I could do with Josh and Amber. They like to see the clowns," he said.

"I think," said Jeannie, "He's a clown at heart."

Glenn is a native of McMinnville, Tenn. His wife, a 29-year-old elementary school teacher in the Wichita Falls Independent School District, is a native of Louisville, Kent. They have had two Air Force assignments in Wichita Falls, the last one spanning thus far two and a half years.

Jeannie said Josh picked Winky for a clown name. "When he gets his clown face on, he winks one eye and then the other," his mother said.

Josh said he liked being a clown, putting on makeup and pretending to be someone else.

Amber chose the name Buttons, said her mother, who just finished making costumes for both of the children.

Glenn's costume is an elaborate taffeta suit with a ruffle around the neck and sleeves, red shirt top and striped pants.

Glenn and Amber wear the white faces of "the happy clowns you see at the circus," said Glenn. Josh wears hobo makeup.

"Being a clown adds spice to your life," said the Air Force sergeant.

"The Clown Arounds performed at the Special Olympics on the base last spring. The kids all wanted to have their pictures made with us, and they enjoyed the hugs the clowns gave them. We worked in shifts and had two people there most of the time during the day,. It was a rewarding experience."

They gave another performance to promote the Farmers Market, he said.

"We talked with kids and we handed out helium baloons. Probably what the kids enjoy the most about clowns are the colors, the costumes and the makeup," said Glenn.

But another group, the senior citizens, equally enjoys the exaggerated high jinks of clowning.

Dentist retires after seeing 190,000 mouths

ORANGE, Texas (AP) — Once his mind bites into something, getting him to change would be a little like pulling teeth.

Until his recent retirement party, Dr. Elwood Hood spent more than half of his 67 years as a dentist in Orange. "And I wouldn't have retired — I wasn't planning to retire — but my eyesight isn't as good as it was," he said.

In August of 1952, the Port Arthur native arrived here from the University of Texas Dental School in Houston to become one of five dentists then practicing in Orange, "because I loved the community and the people."

Since then, he estimates that he's seen 15 to 20 patients every working day — about 140,000 to 190,000 open mouths during his 36 years next to his dental chair.

"It adds up," he said.

Dentistry has come along way since his early days in Orange, and teeth are better nowadays because of it, he said.

"The instruments are better, there's more use of fluoride and people take better care of their teeth," he said.

Hood suggested that dentists tend to put their money and beliefs where their mouths are, proudly revealing that his nearly seven-decade-old teeth are his own.

He decided on dentistry "because I wanted to get into the health profession, but I wasn't particularly interested in being a physician," he said. "I wanted working conditions that would be more compatible with what I needed out of life."

Before graduating from Lamar University in Beaumont, University of Texas-Austin and UT's dental college, he had made two other major commitments.

First, as a recent high school graduate, Hood entered the Air Force six months after Pearl Harbor and joined World War II — "the big one." He stuck out his assignment "on a radar outpost" in the Aleutian Islands until after the war was over.

That's about the time he had his first blind date with the woman to whom he has now committed 42 years.

"We have a good relationship," he said of his wife, Dagma.

Of their three daughters, the youngest has chosen a career as a dental hygenist in Austin.

Through the years, Hood has given his time and energies to other interests outside his family and his practice. He is a charter member of Ducks Unlimited's Orange chapter, which just celebrated its 14th anniversary this month.

He also helped organize the Exchange Club in Orange, served with the Orange Rotary Club "for 10 or 12 years," and is an active member of the First Methodist Church in Orange.

As a long-time member of the Texas Dental Association, Hood says he's glad dentists aren't perceived as frightening ministers of misery anymore.

"Most of the younger generation aren't as worried as the older ones used to be," he said, adding that practically pain-free dentistry was the inevitable result of better medicines, equipment and technology.

Now that he's retired, he plans to catch up on some of his other pursuits — gardening, hunting and fishing.

His biggest conquest in the great outdoors, so far, is a 10-point buck.

"You'd be surprised what you can find in East Texas," he said.

His den, with various trophies from hunting and fishing expeditions, could serve as a backdrop for an L.L. Bean catalog.

Danger called 'occupational hazard' in diamond business

By BARBARA ROSEN

NEW YORK (AP) — In Manhattan's tradition-bound Diamond District, Barbara Mangiameli was different — a young Italian-American Catholic woman in an industry dominated by Jewish men, an outsider who went to school for the expertise more often passed down through families.

But it is not Barbara Mangiameli's success in the diamond business that its denizens will remember.

Mangiameli, 33, disappeared Feb. 4 along with more than $500,000 in diamonds, the day after a proposed sale fell through. In June, her body was found in the Hudson River; she had been bludgeoned to death. Only one of the six missing jewels has been recovered.

"She was just an innocent victim," says Laura Hruska, executive director of the Diamond & Jewelry Association Inc. "The lesson that has to be learned from this is that...you have to take care of yourself, you have to take every precaution."

Aside from Mangiameli's death, there have been three other murders this year in the block of midtown bounded by 46th and 47th streets and Fifth and Sixth avenues, which is the Diamond District's heart. That's high for a business area, says a detective.

A walk down 47th Street, where gold-filled windows front onto rooms crowded with jewelry-laden counters, suggests the business's inherent risk: Gems are easily portable, readily negotiable, highly valuable things. Danger, says one dealer, is "an occupational hazard."

But some say something is wrong when a young, relatively inexperienced, unprotected woman is allowed to carry half a million dollars worth of jewels to an unknown prospective buyer. As is customary in the industry, Mangiameli only had to sign memos to receive the diamonds on consignment from a broker with whom she'd done business before.

"This was an enormous deal and way beyond Barbara's league," says Debra Shapiro, Mangiameli's friend from childhood. "If things aren't changed it can happen again and it will happen again."

Born in Brooklyn and raised on Long Island, Mangiameli earned a two-year associate's degree in business and went to work in advertising for more than seven years. Slim, athletic, with long dark brown hair, she is remembered by friends and associates as sincere, kind, family-oriented.

In 1986, she decided to go into the jewelry business.

"She was always interested in things like archaeology and gems and stones and physics," Shapiro says.

Mangiameli started out selling what are called "findings" — jewelry parts and raw metal. When her interest turned to diamonds she entered the Gemological Institute of America in June 1987, to learn what are known in the trade as the four C's — color, clarity, carat weight and cut. She emerged an accredited expert in the quality of diamonds and other precious stones.

She had met a broker, Charles Fischler, who says he became her "mentor in the diamond business." He describes her as a woman of "simple elegance," one who wore little makeup or jewelry. Her eye, he says, was on the top.

If so, she was in the right place: Last year, 80 percent of the $3.4 billion in non-industrial diamonds that entered the United States came into New York.

Much of the actual diamond dealing is conducted in secure offices or in bourses like the Diamond Dealers Club on West 47th Street. There, amid high-tech security and state-of-the-art business conveniences backed by three computer systems, men in long beards lean across narrow tables littered with pieces of white waxed paper. Tweezers in hand and loupe to eye, they trade tiny crystals potentially worth millions of dollars.

AP Laserphoto

Jewelry stores line 47th Street at the heart of Manhattan's Diamond District. Four murders this year have heightened the sense that "danger," as one dealer says, is "an occupational hazard" here.

It is a business based in trust. Deals are sealed and stones change hands on just a handshake and the words "mazel and brucha" — Yiddish for "luck and blessing." A date of payment is agreed upon, a memo is signed. Should one side renege, the dispute goes to the club's arbitration.

Though she started out in sales, and earned money doing free-lance deals during and after her student days, Mangiameli apparently decided she did not belong in this part of the industry. When she disappeared, she had worked several times on a free-lance basis verifying gems at Christie's, the auctioneers. She was also interviewing for a full-time job in diamond merchandising at Tiffany & Co.

The women who do make their living dealing in the Diamond District know well the rules of this exotic world, where some very Orthodox men will put a stone on the counter for them to pick up, rather than risk touching a woman to whom they aren't married.

They are also well acquainted with its dangers.

Barbara Laufer Shapiro, 35, runs the retail and wholesale jewelry exchange started by her father. Two years ago, her husband, Henry, 35, left the store to meet someone who owed him money. He was carrying about $6,000 worth of jewelry, his wife said.

Henry Shapiro's body was found in February 1987, in a Queens swamp. He had been shot four times, in the head and chest.

For most of Barbara Mangiameli's short time in the business, she was not confronted by the dangers. While in school, she began to do free-lance sales, first of finished jewelry, later of actual gems.

As time went on, Fischler said, she began to ask for larger and more important stones for clients. She continued to free-lance after graduating in December, and on Feb. 1, Fischler says, Mangiameli called and said she had a prospective buyer for investment-quality diamonds.

At about 5:30 p.m. on Feb. 3, Fischler says, he put Mangiameli in a taxi. She was to deliver an engagement ring to a customer at 6 p.m. and then meet a diplomat from a Third World nation who was supposedly interested in the diamonds.

The meeting had been arranged through two Italian brothers who were friends of Mangiameli's. Fischler says she didn't seem overly excited. He had given her stones worth as much as $250,000 before.

When he'd heard nothing by midnight, Fischler said, he called Mangiameli's apartment and she told him the meeting had been canceled at the last minute. Fischler and Mangiameli agreed to meet at noon the next day, when she would return the diamonds and hand over $3,500 from the sale of the engagement ring.

She called an associate of the broker's around 11:30 a.m. and said she was on her way.

At NCNB we have this simple formula to get to know you. You come in. Have a seat. We'll pour the coffee. And you tell us how we can help you. To us, that's how banking is done. Simple. Direct. One on one. But we can't start without you.

For the past few weeks we've been spending a lot of time talking about ourselves. Enough already. It's time we did a little listening.

We want to hear from you. We want to hear what your needs are. What your goals and dreams are made of — because more than anything else, we want to help you fulfill them. For only when we help you succeed will we achieve our own success.

You see, NCNB Texas is dedicated to bringing Texas a strong, secure bank. We promise to support you with the strength of a bank that manages over $50 billion in assets. And we'll serve you from more than 121 locations across the state. Plus we'll provide the very best in products and services we know how to create.

Additionally, we offer one more thing: a "can do" attitude on your behalf. An attitude that says when you put us to work for you, we'll try as hard as any bank you've ever seen. Our goal is to be the hardest-working, smartest-working bank in Texas.

Now there may be some doubters out there among you. That's fine. You have every right to be skeptics. So I'd like to give this challenge to you from the 15,000 NCNB Texas employees. Come by and tell us what your needs are, and see just how fast NCNB Texas rolls up its sleeves — and how hard we'll work for you.

In other words, put us to the test. What have you got to lose? The next move is yours.

Chemical warfare action shameful

In a bipartisan display of resolve, Congress last month rightly approved economic sanctions against Iraq for engaging in chemical warfare. Now, in a shameful display of cowardice, Congress has quietly purged the amendment that would have authorized those penalties.

That sends the worst possible signal to other nations that might be tempted to unleash chemical death on an enemy — a signal they can do so without risking isolation from the civilized world.

Congress' reversal came in the waning hours of a recent flurry of last-minute legislation, most of it concerned with technical corrections to tax legislation. With public attention focused on the so-called "Taxpayers' Bill of Rights," which requires the Internal Revenue Service to deal more leniently with those suspected of tax violations, little notice was made of the sanctions against Iraq.

That's not likely to be the case abroad, however. With Iraq's barbarism all but swept under the rug, other rulers are now likely to see few consequences, and much military gain, by following the same path in future conflicts.

What possible justification could Congress give for such a reversal? Surely not that it believed Baghdad's denials that it had used chemical weapons in its war against Kurdish rebels. Western journalists long ago proved otherwise. Just last spring, they found evidence Iraq had used mustard, cyanide and nerve gas on the Kurdish town of Halabja in an attempt to regain it from Iranian troops and Kurdish guerrillas. The victims included hundreds of women and children.

As recently as August, Iraq stood accused of using poison gas against Iranian civilians, with grim photographs of victims who literally had dropped dead in the streets.

Not until early September, when the evidence was too grisly to deny, did the State Department explicitly denounce Iraq's actions. Congress, sensing the need to condemn the barbarism, ordered economic penalties.

At least then Congress understood that the civilized world, led by the United States, needed to show its outrage over chemical warfare. It still does.

Have safe Halloween

It's Halloween and tonight literally thousands of young ghosts and goblins will be haunting Midland neighborhoods in hopes of collecting treats. Regrettably, on too many recent Halloweens there also are a few tricks handed out — and some of them can be deadly.

Restricting children to carnivals and other formalized events can provide a safe setting for Halloween fun. But if children are outside these settings, taking other steps can make the evening safer.

Parents should accompany youngsters on trick-or-treating excusions. Youngsters should wear costumes that are reflective, and they should remain in well-lit areas. Extra caution should be observed when crossing streets.

Many adults participate in this spooky celebration by giving treats to the children who come calling, but some do not and youngsters should avoid going to houses with no exterior lights on. A lit exterior light is the age-old signal that trick-or-treaters are welcome and youngsters should respect that tradition by avoiding houses without lights.

Most importantly, parents should inspect the treats carefully before children are allowed to consume them.

Have a safe and fun Halloween!

Theft spoiled 'sale'

On Saturday, Oct. 22, we had our annual garage sale. As long as I can remember, we have had a wonderful sale. We sell appliances, furniture, clothing, and collectible items. Our sales have always prompted a wonderful crowd of people. There are even several people who now come to our garage sale every year. In the past we have never had any problems or complaints; Midlanders have always been so honest and friendly.

But, my outlook on garage sales has been altered by the actions of one individual. This man was looking at chaps and spurs we had put in the garage sale. He seemed very interested in the spurs as he tried to bargain with us. As always we came off of the marked price a few dollars, then no more. This man said he wouldn't pay that price. He continued to look around the sale and visit with us. He purchased a bowling bag and left. It never crossed our minds that someone would fill a bag with items before purchasing it. But, that is obviously what happened. As he left we began to look for the spurs to set them next to the chaps again. After some time of looking we concluded that they were gone; our spurs had been stolen.

The whole family was shocked at the nerve of this man. How could someone steal from you right before your eyes?

I hope the man who took them reads this letter and realizes what a disgrace it is to steal. Not only is he hurting others but he is hurting himself. I do wish he would return them to our house, although I know he won't. And, I hope he knows how wrong he was in taking them. I have definitely learned a lesson from this ordeal. I just hope this isn't an example of how far the public can be trusted. But, it does bring to mind the saying, "No one can be trusted."

One last note for all of the people who enjoy having garage sales, keep your eyes out for theft. It doesn't even help to have the more valuable items near the cash table as we did. And, to all of the people who go to garage sales, remember one person can ruin it for everyone.

Article 'inaccurate'

I am fast learning that as a public official the only way to get a complete statement in the media is to write it out.

While I do not mind how the Wednesday, Oct. 26, story portrayed me, I do think that the article inaccurately reflected the actions and feelings of the other board members. I made it clear to the reporter that everything I was saying was my own beliefs and actions and not that of the board as a whole.

I asked Bill Sewell to submit his name to the board. I did it as an individual board member and not as a representative of the board. Prior to the Oct. 18 executive session no other board member expressed in my presence a preference for one candidate over another.

The statement that the board had already selected Bill Sewell before the Oct. 18 session is not true. Only one board member, myself, had publicly expressed support for Sewell, and I made no secret of it. I wish that I could say that the board would follow my lead in everything that we do, but I think they believe they have minds of their own and can make their own decisions.

Evidence says plot backfired to kill JFK

WASHINGTON — We have uncovered startling evidence that Robert Kennedy oversaw an undercover operation — a CIA plot to eliminate Cuba's Fidel Castro — that backfired cruelly 25 years ago and triggered the assassination of his own brother, John F. Kennedy.

Jack Anderson

This is a painful story that the authorities don't want to face. Only two months ago, the Justice Department tried to close the door on the dreadful crime that changed our nation's history. The department declared, "No persuasive evidence can be identified to support the theory of a conspiracy."

Yet our findings, if not conclusive, are certainly persuasive. We have pieced together evidence of a conspiracy — implicating an unwitting Robert Kennedy — from hidden documents and credible witnesses. The evidence we have seen is far more compelling than the Warren Commission's verdict that President Kennedy was killed by a lone, deranged gunman. We will present our case to the nation Wednesday (Nov. 2) in a two-hour, prime-time documentary on more than 150 television stations.

The tragic events that ended in Kennedy's death began four years earlier in the backrooms of the CIA. In December 1959, then-CIA director Allen Dulles, who continued to serve in the early days of the Kennedy administration, made a chilling proposal. Eight months later, the CIA director of security, Col. Sheffield Edwards, was assigned to implement it.

The operation was so secret that it wasn't committed to paper until years afterward. Then a CIA account described it as "a sensitive mission requiring gangster-type action. The mission target was Fidel Castro." The purpose was to liquidate the charismatic Castro, leaving Cuba leaderless just before the Bay of Pigs invasion.

A CIA front man, Robert Maheu, sounded out a top crime figure from the old Al Capone mob, Johnny Rosselli, about killing the Cuban leader. Rosselli introduced Maheu to Sam Giancana and Santos Trafficante. One CIA account observed: "Both were on the list of the attorney general's 10 most wanted men."

The mob accepted the contract. But the assassination plot failed and the 1961 Bay of Pigs invasion was a fiasco. The newly elected president, John F. Kennedy, was furious at the CIA for botching the invasion and asked his brother, thereafter, to oversee the CIA.

On May 7, 1962, Attorney General Robert Kennedy was told about the mission to liquidate Castro. This was followed a week later by a written review. "This memorandum for the record is prepared at the request of the attorney general of the United States following an oral briefing of him relative to a sensitive CIA operation conducted during the period approximately August 1960 to May 1961," the report began.

It outlined the mission, concluding, "Knowledge of this project during its life was kept to a total of six persons ... and there were no memoranda on the project nor were there other written documents or agreements. The project was duly orally approved by the said senior officials of the agency." The memo added, "In view of the extreme sensitivity of the information set forth above, only one additional copy of this memorandum has been made and will be retained by the agency."

Not long afterward, Robert Kennedy joined in the decision to revive the mission. Our sources claim he took a personal interest in the operation, and one document suggests he once contacted Rosselli directly. Another time, the conspirators received false indication that a Castro hit had succeeded. A witness recalls Maheu exclaiming, "Bobby's gonna be very happy."

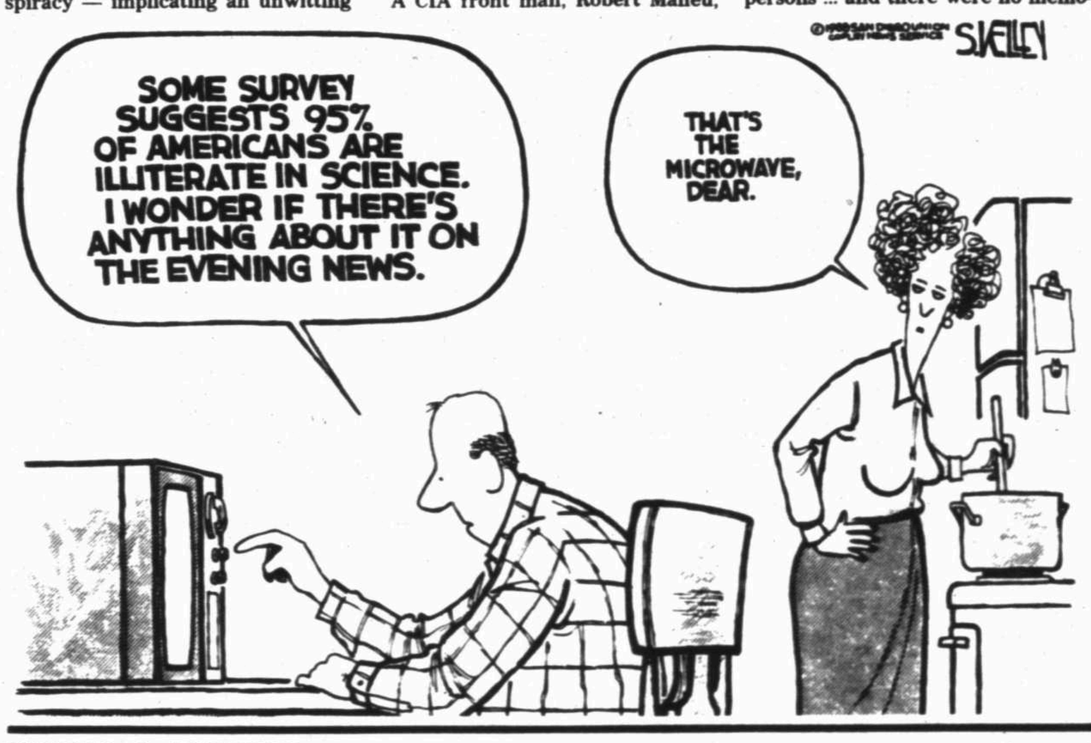

All told, six hit teams were sent to Cuba; all six failed. The CIA later concluded that the plot against Castro had backfired and that Castro had retaliated against President Kennedy. Our sources say that then-CIA director John McCone delivered that grim report to Robert Kennedy the morning after his brother's assassination.

The next day, McCone reportedly gave the same oral report to the new president, Lyndon Johnson. Two years later, in a private conversation, Johnson startled the distinguished television commentator Howard K. Smith by blurting, "President Kennedy tried to get Castro, but Castro got Kennedy first."

OVERTURES TO JAPAN — Our intelligence sources predict that Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev is preparing a major new diplomatic courtship of Japan. Gorbachev has been discussing with the Japanese the possibility of a visit to Japan. No Soviet leader has visited Tokyo since World War II. As a calling card, Gorbachev is talking about reviving a 1956 proposal under which Moscow would return two of the four Kuril Islands that it has occupied since 1945. In return, Japan would commit to large-scale economic development in the Soviet Union. For a decade, the Soviets have stationed a full division of troops and a squadron of MiG-23s on two of the Kuril Islands.

Demo Kirk would stay to avoid 'bloodbath'

WASHINGTON — While saying nothing publicly, Paul Kirk has passed the word that he would be willing to serve another term as Democratic national chairman to avoid an intra-party bloodbath next January.

Just such a battle has been expected over the Rev. Jesse Jackson's efforts to install his political operative, Washington lawyer Ron Brown, as chairman. Anti-Jackson forces in the party are planning a fierce struggle against that. Among their possible candidates are Michigan Democratic Chairman Rick Weiner, former Arizona Gov. Bruce Babbitt, former Maryland Rep. Michael Barnes and others.

Kirk's agreement to stay on would drive out all other candidates and perhaps Brown as well. A disastrous outcome in the presidential election would not be held against him apart from Jackson's inner circle. Even Southern state chairmen who four years ago opposed Kirk as a former aide to Sen. Edward M. Kennedy have become his enthusiastic supporters.

ZBIG'S POLISH VOTE

Campaigning alone so far, Democrat Zbigniew Brzezinski's forays for the Bush-Quayle ticket in Illinois, Michigan and Pennsylvania could shift up to 75 per cent of the normally Democratic Polish-American vote to the Republican ticket.

Brzezinski, former President Carter's national security adviser, may campaign in tandem with George

Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

Bush next week. His scorn for Michael Dukakis's national security policies won plaudits from Richard Nixon after Brzezinski told an interviewer that George Bush would best represent the United States but that he would prefer Dan Quayle to Michael Dukakis sitting across the table from Mikhail Gorbachev.

When Nixon read that in a newspaper, he privately praised Brzezinski for "good political instinct." Some of Zbig's old Democratic friends, however, are furious that he is campaigning for Bush.

KENNEDY TO QUAYLE

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, who has taken a few knocks himself, sent Sen. Dan Quayle a handwritten note a few days ago enclosing his defense of the Republican vice presidential nominee, published in the Boston Herald, in which Kennedy called him a bright and hardworking senator with more on the ball than he gets credit for.

Kennedy was roasted by the media following an interview with Roger Mudd before the 1980 presidential election during which his inability to spell out why he wanted to be president became a notorious landmark of the 1980 campaign.

Quayle has been under unusually harsh attack in the press since the New Orleans GOP convention, but his most vulnerable point came when he failed to satisfy critics with his answer to the question, asked three separate times, what he would do if something happened to Bush and he suddenly found himself sitting in the Oval Office.

BUSH COMES FIRST

When a White House mixup scheduled President Reagan to campaign on the same day for George Bush in Arkansas and the Republican Senate candidate in Wisconsin, Bush operatives insisted that he keep the presidential date in Arkansas, Oct. 27.

The blame was put on White House political director Frank Donatelli's office for agreeing to send the president to Wisconsin for State Sen. Susan Engeleiter, running an uphill race against Democratic businessman Herb Kohl. Although Bush leads in the presidential race by landslide proportions, his campaign aides insisted on the Reagan visit to Arkansas where the vice president's margin is only 5 percentage points.

That was a body blow for Engeleiter in Wisconsin, where the cancellation was interpreted as a sign that national strategists had abandoned her. Reagan was re-scheduled for Nov. 1, but Wisconsin GOP insiders said the president's visit now had become a "damage control" operation.

DEMOCRATIC INFIGHTING

A statement by political consultant Mark Siegel that a post-election takeover by the Rev. Jesse Jackson would mean the Democratic Party "as we know it may be destroyed" has renewed efforts to purge Siegel from his seat on the Democratic National Committee.

Jackson forces threatened Siegel's seat at the Atlanta convention, but he was saved as part of the Dukakis-Jackson peace settlement there. However, the outspoken Siegel's quote on the front page of the Wall Street Journal has renewed efforts to oust him. In the forefront is Deputy Democratic National Chairman Yolanda Carway, a Jackson supporter given her post at Atlanta.

A footnote: Siegel is expected to be in the forefront of post-election planning to restore "superdelegates" to the next national convention. These at-large delegates were drastically reduced at Atlanta as a concession to Jackson.

Criticize them, but don't call 'em liberals

It's funny. Conservatives don't mind being labeled conservatives but for some reason, liberals don't want to be labeled liberal. They want the American people to believe there are no liberals in American politics, only rightwing extremists, conservatives, and moderates.

Charley Reese

Another funny thing is that while liberals, when called liberals, reply that it is negative campaigning to label people, they themselves rely on labels more than anyone else in the country with the possible exception of Campbell Soups.

Dukakis' campaign manager gave a good example on a recent television interview. She had just delivered the liberal lecture on the heinousness of labeling when she was asked about the Republican approach to child care. "Oh," she said, "the American people are not going to support a rightwing scheme like that."

It's true that the definitions are fuzzy. It's also true that definitions change. Liberals and conservatives today are not the same thing as liberals and conservatives in the 1930s. Nor are the terms synonymous with Republican and Democrat. Both parties contain both.

It's also true, however, that the main reason most liberals shun the term during a campaign is that the philosophy of liberalism was tried and failed, and the majority of Americans don't want any part of it. Therefore liberals must seek public approval in disguise.

You may well ask that if liberalism was tried and failed, if liberals know the public doesn't want them in office, then why do they resort to trickery rather than changing their beliefs.

Well, that's speaks to the definition of a liberal in today's context. A liberal is a person who manages to stay far removed from most of reality and has cultivated the skill of evading what little reality seeps into his or her life through the cracks. It is far more important to a liberal to preserve the cherished concepts inside his head than it is to change his concepts to conform to reality. That's why a significant characteristic of a liberal is the inability to learn from the past which borders on the pathological.

No amount of empirical evidence of failed government programs will deter the liberal from advocating more government programs to solve the problems his earlier government programs failed to solve.

No amount of history can dent their ideological beliefs. Forty communists in succession can dupe them and they will adamantly argue that the 41st really is a democrat at heart and if only we'll be nice, he'll set up a democratic government.

Eighty-eight years of failed efforts to rehabilitate criminals does not deter the liberal from arguing that prisons are not the answer.

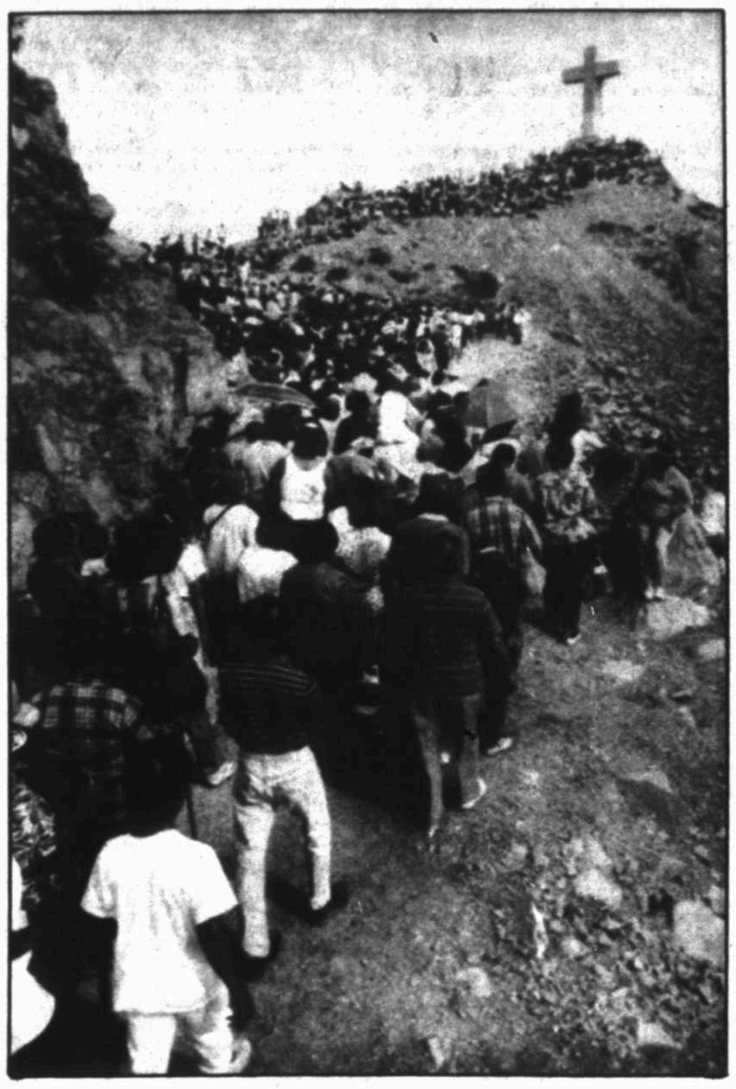

Liberals, like other ideologues, end up being a stewpot of contradictions. They justify abortion on the grounds of respect for privacy, but they have no respect for the privacy of the private employer-employee relationship. Government, liberals say, may not intervene to save the life of an unborn child; government, liberals say, should intervene to mandate a government-dictated set of employee benefits. It's okay to kill an unborn child; it's not okay to kill a hardened criminal.

We should show no mercy to South Africa, guilty of denying blacks the vote, liberals say, but we should build bridges of understanding to the Soviet Union and China, both totalitarian governments guilty of mass murder and attempted genocide.

What Americans should realize is that a pathological avoidance of reality is more to be feared by people in positions of power than simple venality or old garden variety greed. I would rather have a rational crook in government than an irrational saint. I would rather ride with a car thief than with an honest blind man. I would rather the pilot of my plane be a chronic gambler than a psychotic.

Defense indictments about a week away

WASHINGTON (AP) — The prosecutor in a massive defense contracting probe says the complexity of the case — not politics — will delay indictments until after the Nov. 8 election.

Henry E. Hudson, the U.S. attorney in Alexandria, Va., who is coordinating the multistate investigation, also said indictments could continue for a year as a result of a probe into the $150-billion-a-year Defense Department purchasing system.

A federal grand jury resumes meeting Nov. 15, so indictments could come then, which would be about five months after the FBI revealed the investigation by searching more than 40 premises across the country.

"I am very optimistic on November indictments," Hudson said. Information about the case has been scarce because prosecutors have sealed most search warrants and affidavits.

The investigation centers on whether private consultants, many of them former Pentagon employees, paid bribes to Defense Department officials for inside information about contracts, chiefly within the Navy.

Hudson, a Republican, denied any suggestion that indictments were slowed so that Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis could not make them an issue in his campaign against Vice President George Bush.

"Nothing would have given me greater pleasure than to hand down indictments in the first part of October," Hudson said in an interview.

But the prosecutor said the case has been "administratively complex" with attorneys forced to examine about 700,000 documents and listen to "thousands and thousands of tapes of two years of telephone interceptions."

Federal and defense sources also indicate Hudson's staff has been kept waiting for answers from some potential defendants who have been offered plea bargains.

Adding to the task was the time-consuming process of gathering financial evidence from foreign bank accounts, which Hudson described as an "always delicate issue."

Hudson said there were good reasons for thoroughness, including the "high national visibility" of the case, and the propensity for judges in Virginia to schedule trials shortly after indictments are returned.

"I will not present this indictment until we are ready for trial, and we feel we will be ready ... within the next month," he said. As the case evolves, indictments and trials could be held in other cities, sources said.

Hudson did not discuss charges that could be filed. But the use of Internal Revenue Service agents on the case suggests that tax charges may be contemplated in addition to the more obvious counts of theft of government property, bribery, fraud and conspiracy to defraud the government.

Fifteen attorneys, some of them working 12-hour days and weekends, plus 75 federal agents from the FBI, the Naval Investigative Service and the IRS have been assigned to the case, which Hudson called, "the largest case ever handled in the eastern district of Virginia."

Hudson refused to say how many indictments he expected to be returned initially, but noted that courtroom space generally confines the number to less than 12.

Though Hudson declined to name the targets of the investigation, he did not rule out members of Congress.

"All individuals that may have been engaged in wrongdoing or committed a criminal act in connection with the defense procurement process will be scrutinized and prosecuted if appropriate," he said.

Hudson disputed reports that he had told members of Congress during the summer that none was a target.

"I told the members of the House of Representatives that no member of Congress had been the subject of electronic surveillance, had received a subpoena to testify in front of the grand jury at that time or had been the subject of a search warrant."

Supreme Court to review presidential secrecy law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court agreed today to consider reviving an attempt by Congress to limit the president's authority to withhold classified information from the nation's legislative branch.

The court said it will review a ruling that invalidated a law aimed at giving Congress more access to national security information.

The justices are expected to announce their decision in 1989.

A federal judge had ruled the law violates the required separation of legislative and executive powers.

The clash between Congress and the president over classified information is a longstanding one.

But the case acted on today has more recent origins in a national security directive adopted by President Reagan in 983.

The directive requires federal officials, before they are allowed access to classified information, to sign an agreement that they will not disclose the information.

The directive also established a standard form for officials to sign, promising they never will divulge classified or "classifiable" information without written permission from proper authorities.

Some members of Congress bridled at the directive, particularly the use of the word "classifiable."

They said the presidential order restricts the free-speech rights of federal employees and "allows after-the-fact classification of information in order to punish whistleblowers for making disclosures that embarrass their superiors."

Opponents of the presidential directive said the secrecy agreement that federal employees were forced to sign would bar them for life from revealing information to Congress which it is entitled to receive.

Congress then enacted legislation prohibiting use of funds during the 1987-88 fiscal year to implement the standard forms Reagan had authorized.

The legislation, attached to a general government spending bill, was aimed at blocking the executive branch from withholding "classifiable" information or from impeding congressional access to such material.

U.S. District Judge Oliver Gasch declared the legislation unconstitutional last May.

"The statute impermissibly restricts the president's power to fulfill obligations imposed upon him by his express constitutional powers and the role of the executive in foreign relations," Gasch said.

In other action today, the court:

■ Agreed to decide whether states must continue to provide lawyers for indigent death row inmates after they have lost their initial round of appeals.

The court said it will hear an appeal by Virginia officials who said requiring states to pay for attorneys in such cases could lead to interminable delays in carrying out executions.

■ Killed a lawsuit against the government stemming from the World War II mass detention of Japanese-Americans in U.S. prison camps.

The court, without comment, left intact rulings that the veterans of the internment camps waited too long to file suit seeking compensation for property losses.

■ Rejected an appeal by Kansas prosecutors challenging state laws that broadly justify using deadly force to defend someone's home or personal property.

20-year-old movie ratings still getting mixed reviews

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The film ratings system, which at its inception gave a G to "Dracula Has Risen From the Grave," turns 20 years old Tuesday to mixed reviews from Hollywood insiders and outsiders.

To groups denouncing what they see as a penchant by the film industry for sex, violence and drugs, the Motion Picture Association of America's ratings system is inadequate.

To many filmmakers, an X rating, or even a family-oriented G, means box-office poison, and obtaining a PG-13 or an R has become imperative, the equivalent of a mass-marketing seal of approval.

To Gene Siskel, film critic for the Chicago Tribune, "The R-rated category is now so widespread, and covers so many emotions and physical acts that I don't know how valuable it is to parents."

But to Jack Valenti, who has overseen the rating system for two decades as the association's president and chief executive officer, the film code has achieved at least one feat.

"I think just the act of surviving is itself a minor triumph," Valenti said in a recent interview.

The ratings, however, have gotten less than rave reviews from Thomas E. Radecki, chairman of the National Coalition on Television Violence.

"It's a system designed to placate the public," Radecki said, "and to prevent a public rating system from coming into existence."

Radecki conceded that the code is better than none, but argued the ratings are "why we have so much more violent and sexually degrading films than we did when the rating system was started."

Radecki would prefer a ratings system with specific guidelines, something like the 1934 code that prohibited "passion that stimulates the baser emotions" and "lustful kissing."

He contends that rating guidelines should forbid the use of alcohol or drugs in PG-rated movies.

But Valenti, who dismisses Radecki's group as "right-wing zealots," said he's rejected pleas to designate a variety of things depicted in films as taboo, including sex, violence, drug use, smoking and even animal cruelty.

"Pretty soon we would put such baggage on this rating system it would collapse," Valenti said.

The principal guideline given board members, Valenti said, is: "If you had to meet with the parents of Wichita Falls, Texas, tomorrow, do you believe they would find what you want to rate this picture to be fair and reasonable?"

Valenti also disputed arguments the ratings have somehow encouraged Hollywood sex and violence. He said the ratings are a mirror of society's values and that the association surveys moviegoers' attitudes toward the code each year to measure its success.

"Over the last decade, 65 percent to 73 (percent) of all parents with children under 13 say it's 'very useful to fairly useful' in helping them" determine which movies their children see, Valenti said, "and 20 to 23 percent find it not useful at all."

"Now by political standards that's a landslide," he added.

The board's nine members "are neither gods nor fools," Valenti said. "They're just people who like movies, and they're parents and they're intelligent."

Valenti hires the board's chairman, and together they select the eight other members.

The board's costs are underwritten by a fee each filmmaker must pay in submitting the movie to be rated. Appeals are possible only to a 22-member board comprising theater owners, independent producers and distributors and major producers and distributors.

Church spirit survives fires

ALTON, Ill. (AP) — The Rev. Steven Jackson delivers one message to his 125-year-old black congregation: Forgive those who twice this year burned down their church.

"They might burn the church, but they ain't burnt nobody's spirit," Jackson bellowed Sunday, eliciting cries of "amen!" and "hallelujah!" from about 50 worshipers.

"Only love can conquer hate," said Jackson, pastor of the New Bethel African Methodist Episcopal Church of Rock Fork, who was delivering his sermon at a different church, only a few miles from the charred remains in Godfrey.

New Bethel was burned to the ground Oct. 18 for the second time in six months. Last year, racial epithets were carved into the walls and swastikas were spray-painted on the church.

Elsewhere in southern Illinois, there have been four cross burnings since July on property owned by blacks in predominantly white neighborhoods in Belleville and Fairview Heights.

Blacks wonder if they're the targets of a well-organized campaign to stir racial violence in many of the towns in the region across the Mississippi River from St. Louis.

State, federal and local authorities are investigating all the cases, but few believe the acts of violence are being committed by one group.

Marbled murrelet may halt cutting

WASHINGTON (AP) — If the marbled murrelet turns out to be an endangered bird, it may endanger loggers' plans to take timber from some of the oldest forests in North America.

The Fish and Wildlife Service, in a little-noticed decision published in the Federal Register, agreed to consider listing the marbled murrelet as an endangered species.

The agency found that a National Audubon Society petition for listing the bird "presented substantial information indicating that the requested action may be warranted."

Not much is known about the marbled murrelet, a robin-sized seabird that seems to swim better than it walks or flies. But scientists are convinced the bird nests almost exclusively in the old-growth timber that towers over the coastal regions of the Northwest — some of the oldest forests in North America.

Listing the bird as endangered or threatened could result in a ban on cutting trees that are prized by the timber industry for their top-quality logs and premium market price.

Korean trade considered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration is expected to respond to an appeal from South Korea early this week by announcing an easing of diplomatic and trade restrictions against North Korea, according to U.S. officials.

The moves are a complement to efforts by South Korean President Roh Tae Woo, who has called for a north-soth summit meeting and a resumption of trade between the two Koreas as part of an attempt to ease tensions on the peninsula.

Roh met with President Reagan 10 days ago and suggested the United States take some modest steps in coordination with South Korea's own moves.

Detroit arsons decline

DETROIT (AP) — The tradition of arson in the days before Halloween appears to be fading, but Devil's Night will burn brightly for some time in the mind of Mamie Lee King, whose home was threatened by a burning house next door.

Ms. King watched as flames consumed a neighboring house and threatened her own home early today. She fought to hold back tears as firefighters doused her roof to keep the fire from spreading.

"It started in a garage and spread to the two houses next to mine," Ms. King said. "Somebody had to have set it. ... There's just no excuse for it."

Firefighters saved Ms. King's house but the two other dwellings were gutted, leaving at least three people — including a 77-year-old invalid — homeless.

Devil's Night, traditionally a night of pranks in Detroit, grew into a night of arson, peaking in 1984 with 810 fires that killed one person and left dozens homeless. Last year, the number dropped to 290 fires over a two-day holiday weekend.

Gang violence takes life

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gang-related violence killed a 17-year-old youth and wounded at least 11, including a toddler who was shot in the head, after 200 police officers conducted an anti-gang sweep of the area.

Police said 15-month-old Dalafayette Polk was wounded Sunday night during a drive-by shooting in the Watts section of Los Angeles. The boy was in critical condition today at Martin Luther King Jr.-Drew Medical Center, said nursing supervisor Sarah Patterson.

The boy's mother, Sheila Williams, was in good condition with a gunshot wound to the foot, said Patterson. Six others were wounded in the attack.

The motive for the attack was unknown and there were no arrests.

Girl emerges from coma

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — An 11-year-old girl whose skull was pierced by a lawn dart has emerged from her drug-induced coma, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Amy Herrin of McMinnville regained consciousness early Sunday morning, said Nancy Humphrey, spokeswoman for Vanderbilt University Medical Center. Doctors Saturday stopped administering the coma-inducing drugs.

The child's doctors are "pleased that she is responding as she is," Humphrey said. "But they will be evaluating that over the next few days now that she has regained consciousness."

Amy underwent eight hours of surgery last Tuesday to remove the metal and plastic dart that was stuck 2 inches into her head. Doctors put her into a coma to keep her brain activity to a minimum until swelling subsided.

The child remained in critical condition and doctors planned to administer tests to determine the amount of brain damage she may have suffered.

Journalists, voters share bias for close campaign

By JONATHAN WOLMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — There may be an insidious media bias at work this election year, but it isn't the publishers tilting Republican or the networks showing an Eastern Establishment slant for the Democrats. No, it's an anti-ideological prejudice in favor of a close election.

Close elections make better stories.

Close elections make it seem as if the American Democracy is in some kind of wonderful balance.

Close elections are fun to cover.

Close elections give journalists and politicians something to talk about over drinks after work.

Journalists — like gardeners, accountants and electrical contractors — tend to pursue their own best interests. If there is a close race, they'll work to keep it that way. But if one candidate moves way ahead of another, journalism often triggers mysterious forces that test a front-runner's mettle or encourage the underdog's heroic comeback effort.

In races like those for Pennsylvania or Tennessee Senate seats, there is little anyone can do to boost the fortunes of anonymous and underfinanced challengers against popular incumbents like John Heinz III and James Sasser.

In races for the House of Representatives, where 90-odd percent of the 435 seats will be won by incumbents, journalism can't even provide a finger for the dike.

But the presidential campaign is another matter altogether, and the bias for a close race has been a factor in the titanic struggle of George Bush and Michael Dukakis.

Today Bush leads the race and the bias for a close election is benefiting Dukakis. Bush would complain, except that he's benefited from the same process and might need to again — say next weekend, for example. Also, Bush would not like to anger the other constituency, aside from journalists, who welcome a close race — voters.

From a voter's perspective:

Close elections make for humble and responsive public officials.

An Analysis

Close elections make it seem as if the American Democracy is in some kind of wonderful balance.

Close elections are fun to watch on TV. The ads become especially entertaining, even if the debates tend to wax insufferable.

Close elections make it seem as if every voter counts, even those on the West Coast.

Journalists can do lots of little things to make close elections possible, assuming that the underdog is not morally repugnant, intellectually comatose or too bankrupt to mount a respectable challenge.

How journalists do it:

— Raise new and sharply tougher questions about the front-runner. This happened to Bob Dole during his brief stay atop the GOP primary race. He won Iowa and sought a New Hampshire knockout of George Bush. But Bush waged a great comeback campaign, his forces fanning reporters' questions about the operation of Mrs. Dole's trust fund. (It didn't hurt that Bush allies controlled the New Hampshire GOP and he began primary week with a big lead).

— Raise the underdog's visibility. This is happening now with Dukakis, who is deluged with TV invitations and is using the platform to explain his values to voters who are just now tuning into the election process.

Bush has the most to lose from TV exposure, and so he's limiting his appearances to the morning talk shows. If he slips in the polls, he'll change his strategy before you can say, "Live from New York, it's Saturday Night."

— Write encouraging things about the dauntless, dignified, suddenly impassioned comeback kid. Dust off the 1948 Truman stories, explain how the Electoral College math provides a glimmer of hope for an Election Day "miracle." Suggest that Democrats may yet "come home" to the party of Roosevelt and Kennedy.

Americans love the candidate who battles from behind. Since Dole disappeared in February, the presidential race has looked like this: Dukakis emerged in New Hampshire and led Bush just before Super Tuesday in March; then Bush swept 18 states and led Dukakis for several months; then Dukakis put away Jesse Jackson in a succession of springtime primaries, and led Bush until the Republican convention. Then, from 10 to 17 points down, Bush began his latest surge.

This is exactly the sort of campaign that journalists like to encourage, except that Bush went too far, built a big lead in October, forcing voters to pray that the race will tighten one last time in the final days.

How can voters and journalism help restore this balance?

Journalists now use "tracking polls" to identify and publicize one-day trends in public opinion. If those ubiquitous "likely voters" provide good news for Dukakis — like they did last Thursday, for example, journalists will be in high dudgeon.

Reagan signing pact offering artists reciprocal copyright protection

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The United States is entering into a worldwide treaty providing reciprocal copyright protection for American artists and writers and those of 76 other countries.

In a ceremony in a hotel meeting room today, President Reagan was signing legislation bringing American copyright law into compliance with the 102-year-old Bern Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works.

The Senate ratified the treaty on Oct. 20, but legislation making changes in American copyright laws was also needed before the United States could become a full-fledged member of the convention.

Differences between American and other nations' copyright laws stalled ratification for decades, but many of the obstacles were removed when Congress enacted a sweeping overhaul of U.S. copyright law in 1976.

Participation in the convention will enable the United States to have copyright relations with 24 countries with which it now has none.

DOMINOES

Senior citizens spend hours and hours with strategic game of skill, not pizza

Time can pass slowly for senior citizens.

Like molasses running from a pitcher, the hours in a day can drag on for what seems an eternity.

For too many older Americans, the golden years become a chore. Companionship does not find its way to an elderly person often enough.

Unless he or she likes to play dominoes.

Dominoes is the sport of the older generation, and there are not too many reasons why it should not be enjoyed by those young or old.

Maurine Hickman is one who enjoys dominoes and how the game gets her spirit of competition flowing. And she has a great theory about growing old.

A player takes a close look at her hand.

Hickman says there is no point of wasting away the day, at home alone in a rocking chair, when there are so many things for a senior citizen to do these days in Midland.

Maurine is 79 years old and she practices what she preaches.

You can find Maurine, and plenty just like her, at the Midland Senior Citizen's Center every day slapping down the ivory trying to beat the men.

Her partner on this and almost every day is Rosa Lee Cooper. At 81, she is the senior-est senior at the table.

Cooper looks at dominoes philosophically. Her sense of its importance is exceeded only by the amount of pleasure the game gives her.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Midland girl raped by man wielding plastic gun

From Staff Reports

A 12-year-old Midland girl was raped early Sunday after police say a man armed with a plastic pistol broke into the home where she was alone with her 6-year-old brother.

The girl, who suffered a head cut and whose face appeared swollen when she talked to police, told officers she was sleeping on a couch at her house in west Midland about 1:20 a.m when she was awakened.

Police Roundup

The man threatened the girl with a plastic pistol, then assaulted the girl. At the time of the attack, the girl's 6-year-old brother was asleep in a nearby bedroom, according to police.

The man apparently entered the home through a kitchen window, according to police. Officers found the toy pistol outside the home after the attack.

The suspect was described as a white man, about 20 years of age. He was described as about 6 feet tall with a thin build, and was last seen wearing blue jeans and black felt or suede shoes.

In other reports, police are investigating the burglary of a business at 1011 W. Texas Ave.

Police believe at least two persons were responsible for the burglary, which occurred between 7:30 p.m. Saturday and 11 a.m. Sunday morning after someone broke in through a window on the southeast side of GLM Interiors.

Several tables and chairs, vases and prints valued at about $20,000 were reported stolen.

Police said a van or another large vehicle was apparently used to cart away the stolen goods.

Pedestrian killed on I-20

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — A 20-year-old pedestrian was killed and another man injured late Sunday in an accident on the Interstate 20 north service road, the Department of Public Safety reported.

David Moreno of Odessa was pronounced dead at 9:40 p.m. Sunday at Odessa Medical Center, according to DPS reports.

Jesse Castaneda, 27, suffered mouth and head injuries and was taken to OMC where he was listed in good condition, DPS reports said.

The accident occurred at 8:05 p.m. Sunday three miles west of Odessa, when a 1963 Chevrolet pickup truck driven by Carlos Marquez of Odessa approached a 1977 Pontiac two-door sedan which was legally parked on the shoulder of the service road.

Marquez, who was driving east, apparently lost control of his vehicle, which struck Castaneda, then hit the parked car and rolled over, according to the DPS.

Marquez was not injured, according to the report.

Robbery suspect surrenders

EL PASO (AP) — An armed man police said they wanted to question about a New Mexico bank robbery surrendered after barricading himself in a trucking company office, police said.

Donald "Donnie" Elliott, 37, was arrested about 2 p.m. Sunday after police negotiators talked him out of the Jenney Freight Lines office. Elliott, who was armed with a shotgun and knife, had barricaded himself into the office about an hour earlier, police said.

Elliott is wanted for questioning in Wednesday's robbery of Carlsbad (N.M.) National Bank's Northgate branch, El Paso police Lt. William Buonvino said. A gunman believed to be in his mid-30s took an undisclosed amount of money in that robbery.

El Paso police Lt. J.R. Grijalva said Elliott apparently broke into the office, called a Carlsbad clergyman and said he had weapons and was despondent. The clergyman called Carlsbad police, who called El Paso police.

"He was asking for help," Grijalva said of Elliott.

The man surrendered without incident.

Violent criminals being released early, paper says

DALLAS (AP) — Violent criminals are leaving prison early because of a law designed to control the prison population and a court ruling that has made the statute retroactive, a newspaper reports.

The Prison Management Act was enacted in 1987 amid legislators' promises that only non-violent inmates would get out when the law was invoked by Gov. Bill Clements.

But The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday that 86 inmates, including 31 who had committed violent crimes, were released up to seven months early when Clements signed an executive order July 21 triggering their release.

Three of the released inmates had committed murder, two others had attempted murder and 10 had sexually assaulted children. One was convicted of rape, 11 of robbery and four others served time for aggravated assault.

Unlike Texas' controversial furlough program in which inmates are allowed to leave prison for a week and return, an early release means the inmate's prison term is over. The furlough program was frozen last week after lawmakers expressed dismay about reports that violent criminals were receiving leave time.

Asked about the early release of violent offenders, Clements said he was reluctant to shorten the terms of any prisoners. But he said, "under the...circumstances, we had no choice."

Orginally the Prison Management Act stipulated that only non-violent offenders with sentences shorter than 10 years would be eligible for early release and would receive "good time" awards that shortened their sentences.

But the law's application to only non-violent offenders was effectively nullified by the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals in December. The court ruled that inmates who were convicted before the 1987 law was passed were eligible for good-time awards under a less-restrictive 1983 version of the law.

As a result, about 2,500 current Texas inmates who were convicted before February 1987 now receive 30 days of good time each time the Prison Management Act is invoked.

Clements invoked the act six times in 1987 and the seventh time in July, resulting in the release of some violent offenders seven months ahead of schedule.

"That obviously was not the Legislature's intent," said Sen. Bob McFarland, R-Arlington, who authored the 1987 bill.

The state is under a federal court order as part of a lawsuit settlement to alleviate chronic overcrowding in its prisons. The Prison Management Act grants the governor the emergency powers when the prison population reaches 95 percent of capacity — the legal limit set by the court order.

Woman backs pork-barrel politics

HOUSTON (AP) — A Houston woman who has bowed to pressure from city officials and agreed to move her pet pig out of town is calling for friends to march on City Hall in a campaign to "Keep Jerome at Home."

The 700-pound pig known as Jeffrey Jerome has been used as an attraction at charity events by owner Victoria Herberta Ziesig, who believes the animal deserves special treatment as an exception to city ordinances.

"As far as I'm concerned, he is instrumental to the work I am doing as ambassador to the needy," Ms. Ziesig said.

"We have parties for him and...ask people to bring canned goods," she said. "This helps me because sometimes my demand gets past what I can supply. I have been feeding street people for four years out of my own pocket."

Jeffrey Jerome appeared on the porch of Ms. Ziesig's home Sunday in a "Vampig" costume at a gathering that drew about 1,000 people, who donated "a pickup bed full of food," for Jerome's last appearance as a Houston resident.

"They agreed to let me keep him for his Halloween party today, but they said after that, they want him out of the city limits," she said.

"In other words, I'm going to cooperate with the city in the hope they'll let met get a special permit and let me continue my work."

SMU's legal clinic taking asylum cases

DALLAS (AP) — In the drab basement of Southern Methodist University's School of Law, there is new hope for illegal aliens seeking freedom from political persecution.

In SMU's 41-year-old legal clinic, educators are using a $72,000, renewable Department of Education grant and matching funds from the university to expand their normal case offerings — consumer fraud, housing and employment — to include a service not offered at any other university in Texas: political asylum.

Local attorneys have praised the school's entry into the field to help out with a burgeoning caseload — 213 illegal aliens applied for political asylum in August, the latest month for which statistics are available, compared with 76 in August 1987 — and a shortage of attorneys to handle them.

Under the direction of project director Stefan Krieger and supervising attorney Joe "Chip" Pitts III, about 12 SMU law students will focus their efforts on cases that might change federal law.

"We're not going to take every case that comes through the door," said Pitts, 27, a visiting assistant professor who serves as the clinic's full-time faculty member.

Cases are referred by local charity and legal organizations as well as the East Dallas police storefront.

Vicky Stifter, a staff attorney for Proyecto Adelante, a private legal organization that represents Central American refugees, said the clinic could provide "much-needed assistance."

"Most of our energy is focused on the front-line representation of our 1,000 clients — we don't have time to think about the long-term," Stifter said. "The SMU group intends to focus on research and making a difference in the law, and that's going to be a lot of help for us."

Currently, the SMU clinic has four political asylum cases, the specifics of which Krieger and Pitts declined to discuss. All four have hearings before the Immigration and Naturalization Service next month and are expected to take between two and three years to resolve.

"All I can really say is that they all have a well-founded fear of persecution," Pitts said. "We selected the cases on the basis of their educational and service value, not for political reasons. We have some who are seeking freedom from the military, some from Latin America. Some are rebels. Some are from countries considered to be U.S. allies; some aren't."

In the past, INS officials required refugees seeking political asylum to furnish proof that they would face likely persecution for racial, religious or political reasons if they returned home, Pitts said. Under that rule, critics said, those fleeing countries with which the United States was not on good diplomatic terms, such as Iran, were given asylum freely, while refugees from dictatorships friendly to the U.S. government were rejected.

DOMINOES

"So many of our people have had Alzheimers and we don't want to get that," Cooper said. "Dominoes keeps our brain busy."

Seventy-five-year-old Leon Nicholson agrees with Cooper.

"I got so old I just couldn't do much of anything," Nicholson, a retired truck driver, said. "I got sick and I couldn't drive that truck anymore.

"Dominoes just keeps you from sittin' at home all day."

Cooper, who had popped her head into the conversation, wanted to bicker."Keeps him from mowin' the lawn, too," she said.

As a rule, senior citizens love to play games. Dominoes is not necessarily the most popular. You can find a few men in the pool room and a few ladies playing bridge or pitch. But there's something about dominoes that makes it unique.

Forty-two is the most popular form of the game played at the Center and it is hard to find a senior who brags about his or her game.

Both Hickman and Cooper played as children when they were growing up in Cooper and Brownwood.

"My parents played a lot when I was a child," Cooper said. "They took it serious. We just play for fun, but I think we've improved over our parents."

"It's just a lot of fun," said Mildred Johnson, a 75-year-old retired nurse at Midland Memorial. "I don't care who beats or who wins. I just enjoy it."

"Sometimes they shuck us a good many times," Hickman said, concerning the men's ability to beat the women. "But sometimes we get it back on them."

A little more confident in his ability as a domino player is 80-year-old Jack Feemster, a former carpenter. Day after day, Feemster likes his chances of domino success.

"If you know how," Feemster said, "you can tell what I've got in my hand. But if you're not a good player, there's not a way in the world you can tell.

"I was raised on a farm in bad weather. That's the only way I got to learn how to be good."

Good or not, though, ask anyone who plays and they'll tell you it's just a good time. And that's about the only thing that matters to most of them.

"After you get to be a certain age and retire," Mildred said, "you've got to have something to keep your life going. It's just a lot of fun."

Roloff's 'The Farm' on auction block for taxes

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A 550-acre spread where the late evangelist Lester Roloff operated unlicensed homes for youths goes to the auction block this week to repay a local school district unpaid taxes.

Roloff, a dynamic radio preacher whose sermons were broadcast throughout the nation, died in 1982 when his private plane crashed.

"The Farm," as Roloff called it, is located just outside the Texas coastal city of Corpus Christi on Farm-to-Market 665.

The property of People's Baptist Church, founded by Roloff in 1951, will be auctioned Tuesday at the Nueces County Courthouse to satisfy a $75,250 judgment against the church for back taxes owed to the West Oso Independent School District.

The state Supreme Court ruled in September that the church owed the taxes after finding the church had nullified its tax-exempt status by allowing a for-profit business to operate at the farm.

Last Friday, the church was about $1,000 short of halting the public auction by paying the taxes owed for 1978 through 1985, plus penalties, interest and court costs.

Church and school district officials could not reach an agreement on payment of the back taxes. The West Oso school board decided last week the church must pay the taxes in full.

The judgment and decision infuriate the Rev. Wiley B. Cameron, Roloff's successor.

"The church does not belong to Caesar," said Cameron. "Should we render money to Caesar, or (render) redeemed people now able to walk uprightly and not be a burden to the state?"

The property includes outbuildings for farm equipment, a guest house, residences for about 65 church and schooi staff members, a school for children.

'Dallas' actor backs Dukakis

DALLAS (AP) — Television's wealthy Dallas oilman has an off-camera message to Texans: Vote for Michael Dukakis.

Patrick Duffy, who plays Bobby Ewing on "Dallas," said Sunday he decided to use his celebrity to encourage support of the Democratic presidential ticket after he became angered over Republican campaigning.

"The Bush campaign has declined to seriously address the real issues which have been headlines in the news for the last eight years," Duffy said. "The lies and distortions in this campaign have created the necessity for concerned citizens to focus clearly on those matters which most directly affect us."

Duffy said he realized celebrity endorsements are more influential than that of other voters. He told about 75 people at Dukakis' Dallas campaign headquarters he felt obliged to tell hunters and gun owners that Dukakis doesn't oppose responsible gun ownership.

"I am a gun owner," said Duffy, 39. "I enjoy using a shotgun four or five times a year to bird hunt. Mike Dukakis has no intention of trying to take our guns away."

Duffy also said despite the fact Dukakis is opposed to the death penalty, the Massachusetts governor is not soft on crime, as Republican advertisements portray him to be.

"I can safely say that I know as well as anyone the great pain and terrible loss from brutal, violent crime," he said.

Duffy's parents were killed in 1986 in the Boulder, Mont., bar they owned. As the couple shut down the tavern for the night, they were fatally wounded by two teen-agers wielding a shotgun.

Duffy, 39, was in Dallas filming the TV show when he decided to make his support of Dukakis public.

Bentsen says Bush 'trashing the truth'

AUSTIN (AP) — Vice presidential candidate Lloyd Bentsen condemned Republican George Bush in a prime time national television commercial and told the nation he was attempting to set the record straight.

Bentsen spoke for five minutes Sunday calling Bush absolutely miserable and full of "noisy smears" that "trash the truth."

"What (Democratic presidential candidate) Mike Dukakis and I say is that there's strength when we all pull together...Then we can do incredible things together as the greatest nation on earth," Bentsen said.

The campaign said it used some of the Democrats' remaining $19 million in campaign money to buy the advertisement because Bentsen is having "a real impact on the horse race."

"While our opponents trash the truth, we're losing the precious opportunity we have in the nation to make some decisions about where we want this country to go in the future," Bentsen said in the commercial.

"For the Democrats to put forth Lloyd Bentsen the way they are doing is unprecedented," said Dr. Eugene Alpert, head of the political science department of Texas Christian University.

Jackson says Dukakis right to 'define' liberal

McALLEN (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson today said Democratic presidential candidate Michael Dukakis was right to define and publicly accept the "liberal" label.

"What Dukakis did yesterday was to do as many of us appealed to him to do, to define the term," Jackson told a gathering of Democrats.

Dukakis, campaigning in Calfornia Sunday said he is a liberal in the tradition of former presidents Franklin D. Roosevelt, Harry Truman and John F. Kennedy.

Supporters of Republican presidential candidate Vice President George Bush have used the image of the Massachusetts governor as a liberal to attract conservative and moderate voters.

"When he properly defines liberalism and liberation as expanding the democracy to make room for the common people, it is the highest and best tradition of Roosevelt and John Kennedy and (farm worker leader Cesar) Chavez and Martin Luther King and the Statue of Liberty," Jackson said in this Lower Rio Grande Valley city 10 mile from the Mexican border.

Jackson said after he is finished with a get-out-the-vote effort that began Sunday in Houston and continued today in South Texas, "the polls can say that Dukakis and Bentsen have an early lead in Texas."

He denounced polls that show Bush ahead of Dukakis in the state and elsewhere, and said, "The polls don't vote."

Jackson, who campaigned in this primarily Hispanic area during his Democratic primary race for the presidency, accused the Republicans of trying to intimidate minority voters and running a racially divisive campaign.

Jackson also planned stops in Austin, Dallas and Fort Worth today.

Sunday, speaking a Houston park, Jackson drew the image of Rosa Parks' 1955 bus ride that symbolized the civil rights movement to remind a mostly black crowd of the struggles and bloodshed that led to their right to vote.

"This is a critical moment in the history of our country and our world, and you are the difference," Jackson told more than 600 supporters who cheered and chanted during the rally at Houston's Emancipation Park.

"I want the word to go forth tonight that we have a lead in Texas because you voted today," Jackson said. "And then I want you to go home tonight and say, 'Match me.'"

He then joined about 150 supporters on one of several buses bound for precinct voting places, while others followed in caravan of cars.

"She refused to surrender and she was jailed," Jackson said of Mrs. Parks' stand against discrimination, stirring the crowd to applause and shouts of support.

"To think that today we have the right to leave this park and get on these buses and ride down the street and vote for Michael Dukakis and Lloyd Bentsen," Jackson said. "We can do it right now — Texas can set the pace and lead the nation."

Absentee voting totals are expected to hit new highs across Texas this election because of a new state law allowing anyone to vote absentee for any reason. The voting began Oct. 19 and continues through Friday.

Although Jackson's Texas tour was designed to prompt Democratic voters to take advantage of the law, he also used campaign stops Sunday in Houston to denounce the Republican ticket and promote the civil rights record of the Democrats.

Dreams permanently registered in the unconscious mind

By LYNNE KORNECKI
Copley News Service

Pauline was restless as she attempted to sleep on a small cot in the downstairs guest bedroom. It was cooler there, but still she tossed and turned fitfully. When she finally dozed off, she had such an eerie dream that now, 25 years later, she still recalls it vividly.

Once asleep she saw a shadowy figure holding a flickering candle, descending the back staircase of her house that led to the enclosed back porch. The figure then entered the kitchen, continuing into the guest room where Pauline slept.

In the candlelight, Pauline could discern that the figure was her long-dead father standing at the foot of her bed, gazing at her. Slowly, a gentle smile crossed his face, and then he turned to leave.

When Pauline awoke it was long past dawn. The sunlight was streaming through the windows, and another hot day had begun. Stretching out on the bed, she thought about how real her dream had been and how good it felt to have seen her father again.

AS SHE GOT UP to walk into the next room, she felt something sticky that seemed to be spilled on the floor beneath her bare feet. Kneeling down to examine the spots, she saw that they actually were a trail of candle wax drippings.

She followed their path from the foot of her bed, through the kitchen and up the back stairs, where they eventually stopped. Pauline lived in a two-flat on the North Side of Chicago, and many years before, her parents had lived in the upstairs apartment — where the candle wax path led.

■ REALITY VS. SPOOKINESS — Pauline later decided that she experienced more than a dream, but actually a supernatural visit from her father. How else could the candle-wax drippings be explained — especially since she was alone in the house that night? Although this incident happened many years ago, Pauline has never forgotten it — some dreams are such unusual experiences that they become a part of our reality, never leaving us.

Wanda was dying of cancer when she shared a puzzling dream with her family. She dreamed that she was going into a beautiful, peaceful green forest, which she interpreted as heaven.

AHEAD OF HER, already in the wood, was her mother-in-law, Marie, eagerly beckoning Wanda onward. Marie, although several years older than Wanda, was in excellent health; Wanda was perplexed — if she was indeed dreaming about heaven, how could she and Marie be going there together?

The dream was seemingly explained later, when, exactly one week before Wanda died, her mother-in-law suffered a fatal fall down a flight of steps. They were buried in the same cemetery, just one week apart.

■ EXPLAINING THE UNEXPLAINABLE — Although these two stories may sound more like plots from "The Twilight Zone," they are actual dream experiences. Dreams are the mysterious realities we all share each night, whether we remember them or not. Some dreams haunt our waking moments as we ponder their meanings. Some dreams actually have gone down in history.

History records the now-famous dream Abraham Lincoln had, foretelling of his death by an assassin's bullet.

THERE IS ALSO the insightful dream Friedrich Kekule, the father of organic chemistry, had in 1865. Scientists at that time were stymied by the molecular structure of benzene, as yet unaware of the existence of double bonds in chemistry. Kekule's dream solved the puzzle as he dreamed of rolling snakes, grasping each other by the tail, thus demonstrating the form of the benzene ring. This discovery became the basis of organic chemistry, leading to the development of medicines and dyes, all of which contain benzene rings.

Even though dreams have been with us since man first slept, people generally seem to view them as irrelevant to waking life. Examples of how dreams have inspired composers, artists, writers or scientists still lack credence in today's pragmatic society. And yet, rejecting the reality of our dreams is to deny access to the energy of our inner, creative selves that could be harnessed to help us be more successful, more caring and more dynamic in our daytime world.

■ WHAT GOES ON UPSTAIRS — According to sleep researchers at the Harvard Medical School, certain cells in the brain stem are responsible for REM (rapid eye movement) sleep, which is the stage in which dreams occur.

ELECTROCHEMICAL messages are relayed by these cells to the part of the brain that controls vision, hearing and movement. In order to decipher the incoming data, the memory storehouse is accessed to supply corresponding images — resulting in the strong visuals comprising our dreams.

In a recent interview, psychotherapist Ronald W. Nelson commented on dreams and how they can be a key to better understanding our innermost selves.

"We have learned what happens when we don't dream," he said, "demonstrating that dreams are vital to both our psychological and physical well-being.

"We dream during the REM sleep stage. In (research) subjects that were constantly kept from entering the dream state, it was observed that they became depressed, disoriented, irritable, had nervous breakdowns and developed psychoses.

"Our dreams serve the purpose of helping resolve conscious or unconscious conflicts, problems or needs at an unconscious level."

Today, society views dreams and their messages arrogantly — if you can't touch it, taste it or smell it, it doesn't exist.

"Everyone dreams each night, having anywhere from five to seven dreams," Nelson explained. "We usually only remember the ones we have prior to waking."

■ AS INDIVIDUAL AS FINGERPRINTS — Our dreams are couched in symbols that mean something different to each person. The content of the dream is not as important as the feelings connected to that content.

Most of us prefer to think of our mental and emotional lives as logical, stemming from the conscious part of ourselves. However, a much larger portion of our minds is our unconscious. After we consciously learn how to do something, tie our shoes, for example, it becomes a permanent part of our learning so that we eventually can perform that skill unconsciously.

Everything we do while awake or asleep is permanently registered in the unconscious mind. The unconscious is a vast warehouse of information, always assimilating and processing information. Accessing the unconscious is useful in hypnotherapy because it assists in problem-solving and aiding self-esteem.

Nelson noted that symbols cryptically provide information to the dreamer about himself and what may be bothering him in his waking life. The conscious mind may not understand all the problems facing an individual, but the unconscious mind does.

BY DREAMIN IN symbols and feelings, the unconscious mind can explain things to the dreamer's conscious self. Dreams can help explain our problems or our fears. Especially troublesome dreams can be rewritten to have happier endings. For instance, Nelson uses hypnotherapy to bring the dream back to the client so that he can repeat it and finish it in a manner that's more acceptable.

"I give clients dream assignments," Nelson explains, "that will assist in understanding their problems and in finding solutions to them. The unconscious will develop a good dream to explain or suggest how to deal with the client's situation.

"I have clients keep a notebook by the bed to write down dreams immediately upon waking. The client must then bring the notebook to therapy and, together, we examine it and can always discover a useful answer as provided by the individual's own unconscious mind."

■ REPEAT IMAGES — Recurring dreams an individual may have are very significant, Nelson noted. It is the unconscious mind knocking on the door of our consciousness, begging for attention. These dreams are very important and must not be discounted. The feelings in these dreams are very real clues as to what the dream represents.

Nelson recalled a client he had several years ago who came to him with generalized anxiety and panic attacks. In the course of her therapy, Nelson soon realized that these problems were stemming directly from a recurring nightmare that haunted her night after night. The recurring dream was so upsetting that she was afraid to go to sleep at night, in an effort to avoid it.

Her dream was that her daughter, in her 20s, was going to die soon. When Nelson encouraged her to face the feelings she felt in her dream, she soon realized that she needed to repair her relationship with her daughter. Their communication improved greatly as the mother was finally able to address many unresolved issues between the two. Not only was she able to express emotions to her daughter, but she learned how to reach out to others in her family as well.

A lifetime habit of hiding her feelings from others finally was channeled into learning how to reach out to others in a positive way.

FOUR MONTHS LATER her daughter was killed in a freak car accident. The mother was able to handle the death relatively well, even though she was tremendously grieved, because she had strengthened the bonds between herself and her daughter before the death.

"If we assume that our true nature is spiritual rather than physical, then we are more than what we appear to be," Nelson philosophized. "Our dreams are a very real part of our existence and must not be denied just because they are an experience in another dimension of our existence.

"Mankind tends to fear the unknown, stubbornly denying the unexplainable. We need to respect our dreams, accepting them. If we spend time thinking about them before abjectly rejecting them, we may discover something about ourselves, our lives or others that we need to know in order to improve our situation.

"Make special note of the feelings that accompany your dreams," Nelson advised, "then the symbols in the dreams become more significant. We may never quite crack the dream code we dream in, and asking other for their interpretation may lead to all kinds of varying answers.

"But in paying attention to the feelings we have in the dream, we can then progress to asking ourselves the following questions: What do I need to accept in my life? What do I need to work on or understand better? The answers our unconscious provides us can then flow into our waking lives."

Scary costumes most popular

By LUCRETIA STEIGER
Copley News Service

If you're a parent and want a good fright, just ask your kids what they plan to wear Halloween night.

"I'm going to be a good fairy," said Sharry Anderson, 7. "My mother will make my costume. She keeps on having to spend money to get the other costumes."

Sharry's mother was relieved — somewhat — by her daughter's final choice.

"At least it's not a dinosaur," said Patricia Anderson with a sigh. "I'd have trouble making ridges. Last year, she was Dracula, so it's a complete turnaround this year."

And some of this year's outfits present a special challenge. The old standbys — ghosts and witches — are being displaced by a coven of costumes inspired by movies and television. For instance:

Freddy Krueger, whose burned face and razor-sharp talons have shocked fans of the "Nightmare on Elm Street" movies and "Freddy's Nightmares" television series, is the top draw for boys.

Other kids are looking for plump and juicy "California Raisin" costumes.

Little girls often favor pretty costumes such as fairies, princesses and angels, although witches, clowns and even Valley girls have their share of takers.

Adults, too, are making some unusual costume choices this year.

One rental shope reported requests for Freddy, the California Raisins and ALF. At another, orders are coming in for Freddy, Jason of "Friday the 13th" fame and costumes inspired by the musical "Cats." Jason masks and plastic axes are especially popular due to the recent release of "Friday the 13th Part VII: The New Blood."

At the Costume Shop in San Diego, Barbara Stompoly expects Freddy to lead the competition for the second straight year.

"There's an awful lot of interest in special effects," she said. "Burns and scars and other horror stuff — you can purchase scars already made up or make them with liquid latex."

Costumes for adults tend to be sophisticated, refined — and expensive. But many of the most imaginative outfits come from the kids.

To talk with the real Halloween experts, we visited Patsy Wong's and Ernie Durkin's first-grade classes at Fletcher Elementary School in San Diego's Birdland area.

Some children, like Derrick Frazier, 6, noted their costumes would come from a shop.

"I'm going to be Freddy," he said. "His face is burned and he wears a gray and red sweater. He has sharp nails for fingernails and he's scary. ... My mother is going to the store and look for my costume."

AP Laser Photo

The recent release of "Friday the 13th Part VII: The New Blood" has made costumes featuring the macabre killer Jason popular for Halloween. Many of this year's costumes have been inspired by horror movies and television shows.

Others look to the U.S. Postal Service.

"I'm going to be a skeleton and my costume came out of a mailbox," said Andrew Cawley-Bennett, 5. "My mother's paying for it. I can look out and I can talk when I'm in the costume. My little brother Kevin, he's going to be a little skeleton."

But many of the trick-or-treaters are turning to the family seamstress.

"Oh, we've been thinking about Halloween since summer," said Kim Seach, whose 6-year-old daughter, Natalie, will wear a good fairy costume this year. "I like being creative, and I remember that it was the fancier the better when I was a kid. I remember being a gypsy with lots of jewelry, scarves and ruffles on my skirt."

And there are a few do-it-yourselfers.

Lance Forman, 6, noted that his brother Hollis, 7, would make a werewolf costume out of paper this year. Someone might help Hollis, but it won't be his brother.

"I am going to be playing while he's making it," Lance said.

But costumes, of course, are not this occasion. At Fletcher Elementary, the children all had the same answer to the question, "What do you like best about Halloween?"

"Candy," Nathan Buxton, 5, said dreamily. "I'm going to Joey's house to get candy. Then I have all kinds of friends in the neighborhood, so I'll get all kinds of candy. That's the best part."

Non-smokers don't recognize rank

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You are going to get clobbered for telling that military wife who wouldn't allow guests to smoke in her home: "Rank has its privileges. I'd say that the commanding officer and such luminaries as JFK and FDR (if they were still living) would be welcome to light up wherever they please."

For as long as you have been writing your column, you should be aware by now how militant nonsmokers are. Some of them would kick their own mother out in 10 feet of snow if she dared to light up in their house.

I haven't bet on anything for many years, but I'd bet your mail will run heavily against you on that statement. — "PINK" PINKERTON, PICO RIVERA, CALIF.

DEAR PINK: Give the man from Pico Rivera a cigar! I am catching it from all directions. I did not say those luminaries would presume to light up without permission; I said I thought they would be welcome to. Big mistake. I blew it! My readers told me that I was wrong, and they were right.

DEAR ABBY: A reader asked, "Why don't people who are sick stay home, instead of going to work and giving everybody else their cold, flu, or whatever they have that seems to be going around?"

I can answer that in four words: They need the money. Many jobs don't include "sick days" — it's no work, no pay.

Many days I've dragged myself to work feeling lousy, but I can't afford the luxury of staying home.

My last job allowed six days off a year. But nobody would dare to take them because it would reflect on their job performance record. If you were out sick more than six days, you were called in and "counseled" — and when it came time to be promoted, your work record was marked "not dependable."

Now, about keeping kids home from school because of sickness: In my son's school, they actually lowered his grade by a whole letter because he was out more than eight days in one semester!

My sister is a 27-year-old widow with two children, 5 and 7. She saves her days off without pay for their illnesses. Her take-home pay is $210 a week, so two days off brings her paycheck down to $126.

Now you know why people don't stay home when they're sick. — RHODE ISLAND MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: I do. And it's time employers showed a little more heart.

DEAR ABBY: Five million Americans have diabetes and don't know it! These people are at risk of serious complications if diagnosis and treatment are not sought in time. November is National Diabetes Month, so you can help by alerting the public to the symptoms of diabetes so it can be detected early: increased thirst, urination and hunger; blurred vision, itchy skin, slowly healing wounds or extreme fatigue (especially after a meal), or a tingling sensation in toes or fingers. You are also more likely to have diabetes if you are overweight, are over 40, have given birth to a baby who weighed more than 9 pounds or have a relative with diabetes. Those at risk should be tested yearly for diabetes. — MARY GROSSI, R.N., C.D.E., LONG ISLAND CHAPTER, AMERICAN DIABETES ASSOCIATION

DEAR MS. GROSSI: I am glad to be able to pass on this valuable information. Readers: For more facts about diabetes, education and support, call your local chapter, or the national toll-free number: (800) ADA-DISC.

Oilers go wide to rout Skins

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Washington wide receiver Ricky Sanders knows a thing or two about the Houston Oilers' "red gun" offense.

That's the one with four wide outs, similar to the run-and-shoot Sanders learned with the USFL Houston Gamblers.

"I tried to tell our defense what they might do but I guess they didn't listen," Sanders lamented Sunday night.

Oilers wide receiver Drew Hill caught touchdown passes of 22, 33 and 11 yards from Warren Moon and the Oilers' defense forced six turnovers, four resulting in touchdowns, en route to a 41-17 NFL victory over the Redskins.

"Even though we knew Warren was going to throw, we still couldn't stop him," Washington quarterback Doug Williams said. "This was a dark day for us."

The Oilers defense pounced on Williams from the opening drive and Moon and Hill put on a scoring act that gave the Oilers a 24-3 halftime lead against the startled Redskins, the defending Super Bowl champs.

Hill's 22 and 33 yard catches, a 3-yard run by Moon and Tony Zendejas' 41-yard field goal put the Oilers in command at the half.

Washington could only provide a 46-yard field goal by Chip Lohmiller in the second quarter.

The Oilers recovered five fumbles, three by defensive end Ray Childress and 285-pound nose guard Doug Smith returned an a interception 20 yards in the fourth quarter to set up a score.

The victory improved the Oilers' record to 6-3 and set up an AFC Central Division showdown next Monday night against the Cleveland Browns in the Astrodome.

The Redskins fell to 5-4, ending their three-game winning streak, and they fell off pace with the NFC Eastern Division leading New York Giants.

"We've got a 1,000 problems to correct," Gibbs said. "Moon and Hill had great games for them, but their defense set the tone for the game."

The Oilers sacked Williams three times and two of Childress' three recoveries were fumbles by Williams.

"We changed our defense for this game and started attacking instead of waiting," Childress said. "They're so big we decided to attack."

Washington got some momentum in the third quarter when Williams completed a fourth down 30-yard pass to Kelvin Bryant to the Oilers' one and Timmy Smith dove in for a touchdown.

But the Oilers then reeled off Hill's 11-yard TD catch, a 39-yard field goal by Zendejas and a 16-yard run by Allen Pinkett.

Mark Rypien's four-yard touchdown pass to Keith Griffin with 1:34 left in the game fell far short of the necessary rally.

"Sean Jones, William Fuller and Childress were all over us all night," Williams said. "Houston's rush shut us down completely."

Hill finished the game with 148 yards on nine catches and moved into third place on the Oilers all-time receiving list with 214 receptions.

Cowboys blow another, 16-10

Cards pull it out at wire

By CHARLES RICHARDS

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Phoenix's sputtering offense got in gear just in time to beat Dallas 16-10 Sunday.

"It wasn't a good game, but we won, and I'll worry about what to fix on Monday," Cardinals coach Gene Stallings said after fullback Earl Ferrell scored the winning touchdown on a 1-yard plunge with 50 seconds left in the game.

Phoenix quarterback Neil Lomax hit Ernie Jones on a 42-yard pass to the Dallas 3 to set up Ferrell's touchdown.

"It seemed it wasn't going our way, but we kept fighting and fighting and knew something good was going to happen," Lomax said. "The Cowboys have the tallest team in the league. It's very frustrating getting my passes knocked down all day."

PHOENIX broke a two-game losing streak and improved to 5-4. Dallas, off to its worst start in a quarter-century, fell to 2-7.

"It was a shame. We played well and had a good chance to win," Cowboys coach Tom Landry said. "It came down to the last few minutes and the pass interception."

The Cardinals' winning 61-yard drive started after Cedric Mack intercepted a pass by Dallas quarterback Steve Pelluer.

Dallas safety Bill Bates said a pick play helped Jones get open for the key catch near the end of the game.

"It's like a basketball pick play," Bates said. "Two receivers cross, and Manny (Hendrix) and Vince (Albritton) got picked off, and all of sudden the guy was running free.

"Sometimes there's a question whether it's a legal play, but they didn't call it. You look for it, but when they run it correctly, there's nothing you can do."

PHOENIX fell behind 10-0 in the third quarter, but a 47-yard run by Ferrell set up Al Del Greco's 32-yard field goal with 2:38 left in the period.

Ferrell also caught a 14-yard pass from Lomax to tie the score with 7:53 left in the game.

UCLA loss opens door for ND, USC

By GORDON S. WHITE Jr.
N.Y. Times News Service

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. — The top of the national rankings underwent a major realignment Saturday with Washington State's 34-30 upset of UCLA (7-1), which was ranked No. 1 in the news agency polls and No. 2 by The New York Times in its computer ranking.

Not only that, but the Heisman Trophy battle may have become a much closer contest than it appeared to be a few days ago. A game that had a big bearing on those votes took place in Morgantown, where West Virginia (8-0) showed no first-half mercy for Penn State on its way to beating the Nittany Lions, 51-30.

TROY Aikman, the UCLA quarterback who was considered the front-runner for the Heisman Trophy, was unable to achieve a last-minute rescue of the Bruins. He threw four incomplete passes from the Washington State 6-yard line in the closing 35 seconds. Just before that he was intercepted with less than two minutes to go as UCLA moved toward a possible winning touchdown.

Washington State (5-3), which trailed by 21 points early in the third period, outscored the Bruins, 28-3, in the second half.

Rick Swinton went 1 yard for the winning touchdown with 6 minutes 21 seconds to go in the game as the Cougars drove 80 yards on 13 running plays.

TIMM Rosenbach, the Cougars' quarterback, directed this come-from-behind effort and may have remained No.1 in the nation in passing efficiency. Aikman had been No.2.

"I'm still in shock," said Coach Dennis Erickson of Washington State. "This is the biggest win I've ever been involved in."

TED BATTLES

Sherrill has point; 12th game...what about the 'students?'

Battles

Texas A&M's Jackie Sherrill raised a few eyebrows when he suggested the Aggies' athletic future might lie in independence or the Southeast Conference.

The SEC, that's a good way to become an also-ran in a hurry. It's no way to become a national champion unless you are really good. That may be one reason while Florida State eschews the SEC for a manageable schedule.

As Sherrill pointed out, as an independent, A&M could keep a Rice on the schedule, but play them before 50,000 at College Station instead of 10,000 at Houston.

Does that mean College Station fans are less discerning than those in worldly Houston?

In any case, Sherrill has a point. A lot of conferences might examine their situations, like the Big Eight where weekly 50-60 point spreads Oklahoma and Nebraska enjoy over their rivals can't be much fun for either side. Still, the packed houses indicate we haven't come that far from days of the Roman Coliseum....

THERE'S NO room for a football playoff to decide a national champion, but colleges are talking of making the season 12 games long. They need the revenue, to hell with the kids trying to carry an academic load and play football.

When would the game be added, before or after the current season? One thing, I'll bet the added foe would be an East Central Southwest Louisiana Teachers, a money-maker without the overhead or the risk of defeat.

A 12th game....if so, they should excuse squad members from the fall semester. And if they really wanted to be fair and honest, eliminate the pretense and offer the recruit the option of a salary for playing football, without any classroom obligations, or a scholarship with the guarantee that he would be permitted to earn his education outside the football season, no matter how many years it might take.

I know it won't work, but college football is big business and, although I never favored salaries for players before, this 12th game ploy threatens to make colleges about as savory as professional fight managers...

IDLE thought while watching the Dallas Cowboys and Phoenix Cardinals...Who is Tom Brahaney rooting for? I mean, he is a Texan, but he did play for the Cards....

Since complaining about the lost art of punting a couple of weeks ago, it seems as though every punt I've seen since has died on the one yard line. Well, a word to the wise....

Since there really isn't a rule that says Permian has got to be in the state playoffs, a coin toss will decide the two District 4-5A representatives if Permian, Lee and Midland end in a tie. Cruel, but at least the odd man out has the satisfaction of knowing he was a champion.

Up north in Amarillo, such quandries are decided by point deferentials involving games between the tying teams with 21 points the maximum allowed.....

As a champion of underdogs everywhere, I am happy to report my scenario for deciding the national champion is on schedule, now that UCLA has been knocked off. The Bruins knock off USC and USC knocks off Notre Dame leaving Wyoming and West Virginia to battle it out for the national title in San Diego's Holiday Day Bowl. I'm trying to sell the rights to such a finish to Hollywood....

Somehow it just doesn't seem right. Orel Hershiser pitches 59 shutout innings at the end of the National League season and he can't extend that number until next season. How can the nine additional shutout innings he pitched against the Mets in the playoffs, the NL's supreme level of competition, be ignored. For my money, Orel's streak is 68 innings....

Oklahoma's Mookie Blaylock, the former Midland College star, and Stacy King are rated by The Sporting News as possibly the best inside-outside duo in college basketball and the Sooners are rated No. 10 in the nation....

The Chicago Cubs are moving their Class AA farm club from Pittsfield, Eastern League, to Charlotte, Southern, and will play in a spanking new 10,000-seat stadium.....

Flutie torpedoes Bears

Browns, 49ers, Falcons, Rams win

Associated Press

Doug Flutie, sent back to the scene of his college stardom by the Chicago Bears, rose up to throw four touchdown passes on Sunday in leading the New England Patriots to a 30-7 upset romp over the Bears.

The Bears, 7-2, had allowed only a combined 32 points in rolling to five consecutive victories before running into the Patriots, 4-5. Flutie, showing the gambler's daring that helped win him the Heisman Trophy as a quarterback at Boston College in 1984, connected with Irving Fryar on an 80-yard scoring pass on the first play from scrimmage.

"Not a lot of teams have driven the ball against the Bears 70 or 80 yards," Flutie said. "We decided we would have to make some big plays, so why not start early?"

Although Chicago held a brief 7-6 lead, New England was in control throughout — especially after Bears quarterback Jim McMahon was sidelined with a strained right knee. McMahon, who made no secret of his displeasure when the Bears signed Flutie last year, will be out for at least four weeks.

Denver visits Indianapolis Monday night.

Patriots 30, Bears 7

The Patriots won the first meeting of the teams since the Bears' 46-10 thrashing of New England in the 1986 Super Bowl.

Flutie, traded to New England last season, completed six of 18 passes for 165 yards, with no interceptions. After hooking up with Fryar, Flutie threw two second-quarter scoring passes to Lin Dawson and one in the fourth period to Stanley Morgan.

Falcons 27, Eagles 24

At Philadelphia, second-year quarterback Chris Miller threw for three touchdowns as the Falcons, 2-7, snapped a five-game losing streak. With the Falcons trailing 24-20 with 7:04 remaining, Miller passed 21 yards to Gene Lang for a first down at the Eagles' 49, then connected with Michael Haynes for the winning touchdown.

Randall Cunningham had rallied the Eagles, 4-5, from a 20-10 deficit with fourth-quarter touchdown passes of four and 50 yards to Cris Carter.

Browns 23, Bengals 16

Herman Fontenot returned a blocked punt one yard for a touchdown and set up another score with an 84-yard kickoff return as Cleveland, 6-3, moved within one game of Cincinnati in the AFC Central.

The Browns, with the top-ranked defense in the conference, didn't allow a touchdown by the Bengals' No. 1-ranked offense. Cincinnati's only touchdown came on David Fulcher's 16-yard interception return that gave the Bengals a 7-3 lead.

Fontenot returned the ensuing kickoff 84 yards to set up Tim Manoa's two-yard touchdown run as the Browns regained the lead.

Bills 28, Packers 0

Free safety Mark Kelso returned an interception 78 yards for a touchdown and defensive end Leon Seals recovered a fumble for another score as the Bills, 8-1, dropped the Packers to 2-7.

The Bills sacked Green Bay quarterback Don Majkowski six times and forced four turnovers.

Rams 12, Saints 10

Mike Lansford kicked field goals of 37, 18, 47 and 30 yards to supply all the points needed by Los Angeles, which improved to 7-2 and tied New Orleans atop the NFC West. The Saints had a seven-game winning streak snapped.

Dolphins 17, Bucs 14

Dan Marino threw third-quarter touchdown passes of five and eight yards to Mark Clayton as Miami, 5-4, won for the fourth time in five games. Tampa Bay, 2-7, lost for the third time in four games against its Florida rival.

Jets 24, Steelers 20

John Booty blocked a punt to set up Freeman McNeil's clinching five-yard touchdown run, then intercepted a pass with two minutes to play to preserve New York's first-ever victory over the Steelers in 10 games.

The Jets, 5-3-1, trailed 10-0 in the first quarter, but used mistakes by the Steelers, 2-7, to build a 17-10 edge in the third period. A field goal by Gary Anderson and Earnest Jackson's run gave Pittsburgh a 20-17 edge.

Giants 13, Lions 10, OT

A blown handoff by Detroit's Tony Paige on the first play of overtime set up Paul McFadden's 33-yard field goal that kept New York, 6-3, atop the NFC East. The Lions, 2-7, tied it 10-10 on Eddie Murray's 37-yard field goal with 5:19 remaining in the fourth quarter.

Seahawks 17, Chargers 14

Rookie Kelly Stouffer passed for two touchdowns, including a six-yarder to fullback John L. Williams with 3:43 left, as Seattle, 5-4, moved into first place in the AFC West.

49ers 24, Vikings 21

Reserve quarterback Steve Young scrambled 49 yards for a touchdown with 1:58 remaining as San Francisco, 6-3, rallied past Minnesota, 5-4. Young, playing in place of ailing Joe Montana, dropped back to pass and then raced through the middle of the line and eluded several tacklers in the secondary before stumbling into the end zone.

Raiders 17, Chiefs 10

Steve Beuerlein passed for 248 yards and Bo Jackson and Marcus Allen each scored touchdowns as the Raiders, 4-5, outscored the punchless Chiefs, 1-7-1.

Beuerlein completed 18 of 29 passes. Jackson, returning from an injured right hamstring which limited him to two rushing plays at New Orleans a week ago, gained 80 yards on 17 carries and scored on a 22-yard run in the first quarter. Allen, who rushed for 70 yards on 21 carries, scored a team-record 78th career touchdown.

Hogs back in Cotton for first time since '76

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

It took a trifecta to pull it off but 11th ranked Arkansas took care of business and holds its first winning ticket to the Cotton Bowl since 1976.

All three games on Saturday's Southwest Conference card had to fall into place for the Razorbacks capture the title on the earliest date in league history.

— Texas Tech had to beat Texas. The Red Raiders, trailing 32-15 in the fourth quarter, rallied to a heart-stopping 33-32 victory.

— Houston had to beat Texas Christian. After falling behind 9-0 in the first quarter, sophomore quarterback Andre Ware came on to throw three touchdown passes, leading the Cougars to a 40-12 victory.

— Finally, after the day games had been decided, the Razorbacks had to beat winless Rice.

They completed the final move by breaking a 14-14 tie on John Bland's 5-yard touchdown run with 14:07 to play for a 21-14 victory.

"This team isn't always pretty but we stay in the fight," Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield said. "A lot of times a team that is favored tightens up at home and tries too hard."

The Razorbacks tried just hard enough and came away with their eighth straight victory this season and a 5-0 SWC record.

Texas and TCU each suffered their second league losses, meaning the Hogs could lose their final two SWC games against Baylor and Texas A&M and still advance to the Cotton Bowl.

The Razorbacks have beaten every team that could tie them for the title. In the event of a tie, head-to-head results would be the tie-breaker.

Texas A&M is 4-3 for the season and 4-0 in SWC games but they are on NCAA probation and ineligible for the SWC crown.

The Razorbacks have three games remaining, including a season-ending match at Miami but they're assured of hosting the Cotton Bowl for the first time since they beat Georgia 31-10 in the 1976 Cotton Bowl.

"We had a lot of motivation to win this one," Arkansas tackle Michael Shepard said. "But let me tell you, Rice did a lot of things right. They could have beaten us tonight and we played well."

Arkansas struggled in the third quarter when Rice's Quentis Roper hit Richard Williams for a 42-yard touchdown pass and a 14-14 tie.

The Owls still came away with the loss, extending the nation's longest losing streak to 14 games.

"I know we're 0-7, but we're not an 0-7 team," Rice Coach Jerry Berndt said.

Rice plays this week at No. 2 ranked Notre Dame.

Tech's Billy Joe Tolliver completed the Raiders' 18-point fourth quarter with a 46-yard touchdown pass to Eddy Anderson with 2:36 left to play and a two-point conversion pass to Travis Price for the winning points.

"I can remember a time when we would have lost this game," Tolliver said. "This was such a big game for us. It is every time we play Texas."

Texas Eric Metcalf gained 156 yards on 29 carries in the losing cause.

"When you have a 17-point lead you have to be able to hold it," Texas Coach David McWilliams said. "I never felt we had the game won. As long as Billy Joe Tolliver was in there throwing the ball, we couldn't relax."

McWilliams was coaching his first game in Lubbock since he was head coach of the Raiders in 1986.

Houston put itself back in the bowl picture with its comeback victory over the Horned Frogs, who lost their sixth consecutive road game dating back to last season.

Ware came on in the second quarter and threw touchdowns of 33 yards to James Dixon and 18 and 33 yards to Jason Phillips, the nation's leading receiver.

UCLA

But that kind of upset is not unusual in the Pac-10. It seems that every year, some underdog throws a monkey wrench into the Rose Bowl prospects of one of the powers.

Southern California (8-0), ranked first by The Times, is leading the league race for the Rose Bowl after its easy 41-20 victory over Oregon State. The Trojans must meet UCLA on Nov. 19.

Rodney Peete, the Trojans' quarterback, threw three touchdown passes in victory. He may move at least even with Aikman in the Heisman race. Peete had been considered second to his crosstown rival.

MAJOR Harris, the West Virginia junior quarterback, put himself in the Heisman battle as he ran and passed the Mountaineers to a record score over Penn State (4-4). West Virginia scored the most points against the Nittany Lions since Joe Paterno became head coach in 1966.

The game was marred by unruly fans during the final minute as thousands stormed onto the field with 49 seconds left. The teams left the field when it became impossible to complete the game.

Paterno was angry and showed it as he took his squad to the dressing room. This wasn't the first time West Virginia fans had misbehaved at a big victory over Penn State. Mountaineer followers did the same thing four years ago with 35 seconds to go during a 17-14 triumph in Morgantown. Both teams retreated to the safety of the dressing rooms without completing that game.

Notre Dame (8-0) will probably move to second place in the Times ranking and to the top spot in the news agency polls, replacing UCLA.

But the Irish, who beat Navy, 22-7, in Baltimore, did not look like the best team in the nation in the victory. They played sloppy ball, and Coach Lou Holtz benched his starting quarterback, Tony Rice, during part of the first half because things were going so poorly.

Where West Virginia, seventh in the polls and 10th in the Times ranking, will be this week is anyone's guess. It should be at least third in the polls, but will probably be fourth behind Miami (6-1). Nebraska (8-1) was ranked above West Virginia, as was Miami. But West Virginia's explosive first half, in which it went ahead, 41-8, could have been impressive enough to lift the Mountaineers over the Hurricanes, who played a soft opponent.

THE CORNHUSKERS did not look very impressive in struggling from behind on their own turf to beat Missouri, 26-18.

Steve Walsh, Miami's quarterback, had his fourth straight game with at least four touchdown passes as he tossed for four scores again to beat East Carolina, 31-7.

Two almost forgotten unbeaten teams remained unbeaten and probably not much better known. One is Wyoming (9-0), which easily defeated Colorado State, 48-14, in a Western Athletic Conference game.

The other is Arkansas (8-0). The Razorbacks did not perform as expected against Rice, a team that has not won a game this year.

Colts' Dickerson holds grudge against Rams

NEW YORK (AP) — Running back Eric Dickerson said Sunday that the Los Angeles Rams wanted to teach him a lesson by trading him to Indianapolis, referred to Rams running back Greg Bell as "that little dwarf," and added that quarterback Jim Everett "never was a friend of mine."

The remarks were made in an interview with Jim Gray on NBC-TV's "NFL Live."

Dickerson, the Rams' all-time leading rusher, was traded to the Colts in the middle of last season after feuding with management over salary.

When asked if he thought the Rams were trying to "damage or severely ruin" his career by making the deal, Dickerson responded: "I think so. I think they wanted to try and teach me a lesson, send me to a place that I would not like, and would probably struggle the rest of my career, which I think backfired in their face."

Bell, a former Buffalo Bills' running back acquired by the Rams in the three-way deal that sent Dickerson to Indianapolis, has said that anybody can run up big yardage behind Los Angeles' offensive line.

"You know, that little dwarf should learn one thing; he is not my caliber, to be honest," said the 6-foot-3 Dickerson, who began Sunday as the NFL's leading rusher with 879 yards.

Bell, 5-10, started the day third among NFC rushers with 694 yards.

"If Greg Bell came here or if I went back to the Rams, he would sit on the bench behind me the rest of his career," Dickerson said. "If I got hurt, then he'd come in, and only then would he come in to play."

Dickerson also lashed back at remarks made by Everett, who has said the Rams were better off without the running back.

"You know Jim is a fine quarterback; I give his that," Dickerson said. "But Jim by no means is a friend of mine, never was a friend of mine. It's just business."

Everett, speaking after the Rams' 12-10 victory Sunday at New Orleans, said Dickerson still had not recovered from the trade.

"I think Eric has some problems," Everett said. "I think he was devastated when he left here (Los Angeles). I feel sorry for a man who is so very unhappy. I thought we were friends when he left here. I was looking forward to playing with him."

Dickerson expressed admiration for Los Angeles coach John Robinson, but said he preferred Indianapolis coach Ron Meyer.

Bell and Robinson already had left the Rams' dressing room Sunday and were not immediately available for comment.

Indianapolis, 3-5, plays at home Monday night against Denver. Los Angeles is 7-2, tied for first with New Orleans in the NFC West. The Colts and Rams do not play each other this season.

OILERS

Hill was stung by criticism last week about a dropped touchdown pass in the end zone in a 44-21 loss to Cincinnati.

"You all (media) made headlines about my dropped ball last week and I just wanted to come back today and play consistently," Hill said.

"I didn't lose the Bengal game any more than my three touchdowns won this game. It's a team game."

The Oilers didn't have a victory over a team with a winning record until they beat the Redskins.

"Maybe this will bury the story that we haven't beaten any good teams," Oilers coach Jerry Glanville said. "This was a total team effort on both offense and defense."

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠J10762 ♡K83 ◇A3 ♣762
Your partner opens the bidding with one heart. What do you respond?
A.—Whether or not you play four-card majors has no bearing on this problem. You are good enough for only one bid, so choose the one most likely to land you in the right contract. Don't muddy the waters by responding one spade—a raise to two hearts is correct.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠J98 ♡10873 ◇Q654 ♣A9
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
Pass	1 ♡	1 ♠	1 NT

What action do you take?
A.—The modern tendency is to treat partner's overcall, especially vulnerable, as if it were an opening bid. Had partner opened the bidding with one spade, you would have raised to two spades, so make the same bid now.

Q.3—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ1072 ♡Void ◇A7 ♣KJ10984
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ◇	1 ♡	?

What do you bid?
A.—You probably have a game or slam somewhere, but don't start with a cue-bid of two hearts—that's stealing your own bidding space! Simply bid your longest suit, two clubs. That's forcing. At your next turn, introduce your spades. That way, you can be sure to find a fit, if one exists, without escalating the auction to a phenomenal level.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ1084 ♡K ◇A1092 ♣K5
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—For a jump shift, you need either a self-sustaining suit or a good fit for partner. This hand virtually qualifies on both counts. Jump to two spades.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ10987 ♡K9 ◇6 ♣Q92
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	Pass	?

What is your opening bid?
A.—The fact that no one opened the bidding seems to suggest that the points are pretty evenly distributed around the table. Partner is unlikely to have enough for you to make slam, and with your lack of defense outside spades, it's possible the opponents have a big fit of their own in a side suit. Make it difficult for them to enter the auction by opening four spades. You're much to strong for three spades.

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ1093 ♡Q107642 ◇Void ♣A7
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—The normal procedure is to bid your longer suit first, and there's no reason to depart from standard practice on this hand. Despite the difference in quality between the suits, your correct response is one heart. You are strong enough distributionally to reverse into spades next.

Placido Domingo performs 'Aztec Songs' at Pyramid of the Moon

TEOTIHUACAN, Mexico (AP) — With the great pyramids of Teotihuacan as a backdrop, Spanish tenor Placido Domingo led the premier of "Aztec Songs," a choral symphony written in a 500-year-old Indian language.

"Aztec Songs" is based on the poetry of Nezahualcoyotl, a ruler of the Nahuatl tribe who died in 1472.

The songs were performed Saturday in Nahuatl, an ancient Mexican tongue that gave the world the word for chocolate. Thousands of people in Mexico still speak Nahuatl and there are Nahuatl poets still writing today.

Argentine composer Lalo Schifrin conducted the symphony with a baton of obsidian, the gleaming black volcanic rock fashioned into works of art by Mexico's pre-Colombian peoples, in an icy wind before an estimated 10,000 people at the foot of the Pyramid of the Moon.

The audience greeted Domingo, who performed with a cold, with an especially warm round of applause. The tenor has relatives in Mexico and his efforts to help it recover from the devasting 1985 earthquake has endeared him to Mexicans.

The performance was part of a campaign to raise $300,000 to preserve Teotihuacan, 25 miles north of Mexico City.

MORGAN HILL, Calif. (AP) — Residents of a subdivision turned out to help dig up their past as archaeologists began sifting through tons of dirt at a building site where 4,000-year-old Indian tools have been found.

"It gives us a chance to look back and see part of our heritage," said Jeff McBride, a high school senior earning extra credit in his geology class by helping with the excavation.

Alan Leventhal, director of the project under the auspices of San Jose State University, said the community is getting a chance to see things most have only heard about before. The volunteers began helping out Saturday and are expected to continue at the job for about a month.

"Most of them would never even get a look at an excavation and would hear about one only if there is controversy," he said.

Some of the volunteers are Ohlone Indians, possibly descendants of the Ohlone tribe that used the site to harvest and prepare food.

A bulldozer two weeks ago turned up several stone tools.

Hannah Tillich, whose vivid but unblinking remembrance of four decades as the wife of Paul Tillich scandalized some of his fellow theologians in 1973, died Thursday at Southampton Hospital after suffering a heart attack. Aged 92, she had lived in East Hampton, N.Y., since her husband's death.

Tillich, a humane philosopher and one of modern Christianity's most influential theologians, died in 1965.

The publication of his widow's book "From Time to Time," shortly after upset colleagues and alienated some of the couple's relatives for years.

Praised by reviewers for its style, imagery and candor, the book wove the tale of two lives that finally grew together, if only out of emotional exhaustion.

Their paths met in Berlin's avant-garde nightlife of the 1920s and took them to America after Tillich's defiance of the Nazis.

Mrs. Tillich, an art student, attracted the roving eye of the young theologian and sometime man-about-town at a dress ball of an art students league.

After their 1924 marriage, she did not pursue a career of her own, but did published a volume of poetry while still in Germany.

Tillich lost his university position in Frankfurt when the Nazis came to power in 1933. He was one of the first non-Jewish professors to be dismissed; he had spoken up when several hundred bullying brownshirts beat up a group of radical students.

In the United States, he first taught at the Union Theological Seminary.

There, at Harvard and the University of Chicago, he became a nationally admired figure. At his death, he was widely mourned.

But he had had a philandering side that others preferred not to talk about.

In her book, interspersed between allegorical dialogues and poetry, his widow speaks of her intense feelings and the many joys in her life, but also of her jealousies and humiliations, some of them at the hands of her husband.

Merger would create world's largest consumer products firm

NEW YORK (AP) — The unprecedented, mid-October frenzy of buyout bids has spawned its biggest deal yet, a $13.1 billion megabuyout of Kraft by Philip Morris that would create the world's biggest consumer products company.

The proposed merger announced Sunday would be the biggest ever between two non-oil U.S. companies and, if successful, would end a short but sharp takeover battle between the two giant food and consumer goods companies.

It also would create a $40 billion-a-year company armed with some of America's best-known consumer products, including Philip Morris Inc.'s Miller beer, Marlboro cigarettes, Jell-O and Maxwell House coffee, and Kraft Inc.'s Velveeta, Parkay margarine, Philadelphia cream cheese, Miracle Whip salad dressing and Sealtest ice cream.

That would fulfill Philip Morris' goal of reducing its dependence on revenue from its slowing cigarette business, while making it a tougher worldwide competitor against other giant multinationals.

"As we have stated from the outset, we believe the combination of Philip Morris and Kraft will create a U.S.-based food company that will compete more effectively in world food markets," said Hamish Maxwell, Philip Morris's chairman and chief executive.

In a joint announcement, the companies said they had a definitive agreement for New York-based Philip Morris to boost its outstanding tender offer for all of Kraft's outstanding stock to $106 a share from $90.

Kraft shares closed Friday at $96.50, up $2 a share on the New York Stock Exchange. Philip Morris closed down 25 cents at $94.75 a share.

Glenview, Ill.-based Kraft had rejected as inadequate the $90-a-share offer made Oct. 17, and unveiled a defensive restructuring it said would pay its stockholders $110 a share in cash and securities.

The restructuring, thought by many analysts to be mainly a bargaining ploy, would have boosted Kraft's debt by about $12.4 bilion, likely forcing it to sell some of its businesses to raise cash for debt payments.

Southwestern Bell names new president

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Southwestern Bell Telephone Co. announced Friday that John E. Hayes Jr. was stepping down as president and chief executive officer and that he would be replaced by James R. Adams, president of the company's Texas Division.

In a related move, Paul F. Roth, 55, was named to succeed Adams in Texas.

Zane E. Barnes, chairman and chief executive officer of parent company Southwestern Bell Corp. said Hayes will be missed.

"John Hayes has made enormous contributions to the success of Southwestern Bell and his executive leadership abilities are outstanding," Barnes said. "However, we have total confidence in the proven abilities Jim Adams brings to the job. He has the experience, dedication and creative approach to problem solving that are essential to success in today's highly competitive telecommunications market."

Beleaguered thrift executives meet

HONOLULU (AP) — The oldest and largest trade group of savings institutions opened its annual convention today, intent on persuading Congress to help the ailing industry with a multibillion-dollar bailout and preserve it as a system separate from commercial banks.

The nation's 3,048 savings institutions lost $7.5 billion in the first six months of this year and losses almost surely will top last year's post-Depression record of $7.8 billion.

An estimated 4,050 delegates and spouses to the U.S. League of Savings Institutions' 96th annual convention have gathered in the palm-ringed luxury hotels along Waikiki Beach to map strategy for 1989, when Congress likely will make decisions affecting the industry for years to come.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board, which regulates the industry, estimates the cost of restoring all S&Ls to solvency at $45 billion to $50 billion, but private analysts put the price tag as high as $100 billion.

Bank board chairman M. Danny Wall, scheduled to address the convention on Thursday, said his agency will have enough money to do the job, but only if thrift institutions are charged a special assessment for deposit insurance for the next 30 years.

S&Ls say they can't afford it and are looking to Congress to come up with the additional money.

Sears announces restructuring plans

CHICAGO (AP) — Sears, Roebuck and Co. today announced plans to sell Sears Tower, its corporate headquarters and the world's tallest building, as part of an effort to streamline the company.

Sears' restructing plan also will include a stock buyback, "intense cost-cutting" programs and the sale of its commercial real estate subsidiary, the nation's largest retailer said.

"We are acutely aware of investors' desires for improved returns and enhanced share value," Edward Brennan, chairman and chief executive officer, said in a statement. "And over the past year, we have thoroughly evaluated all strategic and financial alternatives available to the company.

"These alternatives have been reviewed not only with regard to shorter-term valuation objectives, but also giving consideration to the longer-term needs of our customers and $526,000 employees, the financial strength of our company and fulfillment of Sears' long-term strategic potential," Brennan said.

The Sears Tower, which rises 110 stories — 1,450 feet — from the grid of the downtown Loop business district, was built in 1974.

The statement did not indicate how much Sears hoped to get for the landmark building.

Brennan said it would continue to serve as corporate headquarters for the company.

UP AND COMING

John Castro dedicated to community service

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

John Castro freely admits he's a workaholic.

The 37-year-old San Antonio native says he began working when he was 8 or 9 years old, doing everything from shining shoes to washing dishes and delivering newspapers.

"I had my Social Security card by the time I was 11," he recalls. "I've always been driven. I can't just sit around and watch television. I like meeting people, and I think that's what drives me."

For the past 14 years, Castro has been employed by Southwestern Bell. Recruited while he was attending the University of Wisconsin at Madison, Castro started as a supervisor in the company's testing center, where customers called when they had repair problems.

He is now an area manager, working to automate many of Southwestern Bell's manual administrative records, mostly dealing with installations. He did a lot of traveling around West Texas during the two-year project, helping area offices automate.

While the project was underway, Castro managed three supervisors and 30 employees throughout West Texas. Asked about his management style, he said he tries to be fair and honest.

"I'm easy to work for, yet I'm tough when I have to be. When they do good, they get an 'attaboy.' When they make a mistake, I try not to be too critical."

Now, as the project wraps up, he works as a troubleshooter, solving problems with the system and coordinating with the other West Texas district offices.

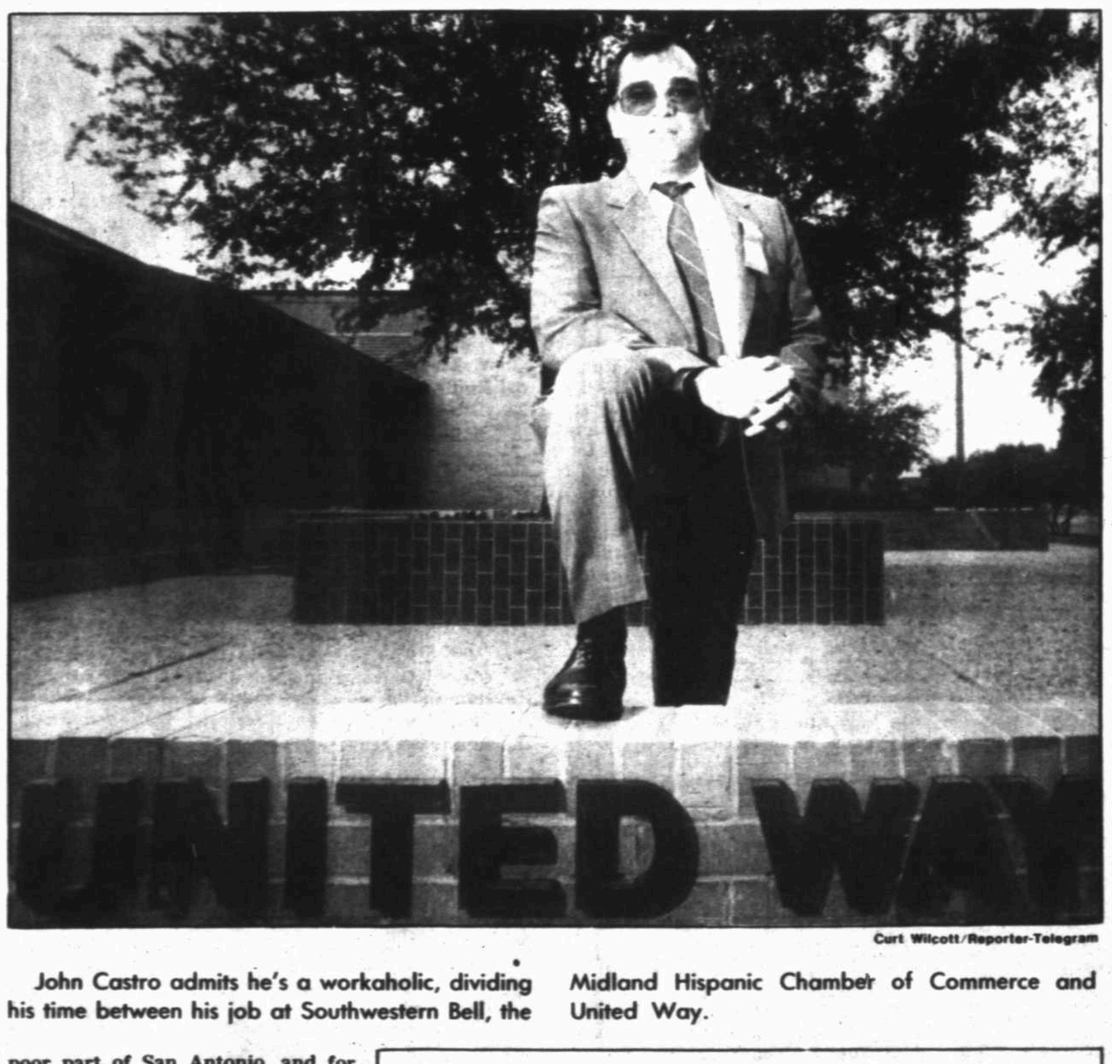

In addition to Southwestern Bell, Castro is involved with two projects that are very important to him.

The first is the United Way, which he has served as a loan executive for the past five years. He has been involved with the charitable organization since graduating from college, because he's seen it in action in his own life.

"I was born at home by a midwife," he explains. "I grew up in a poor part of San Antonio, and for the first few years of my life, we were very economically strapped. Then my father got on with the fire department and that changed our lives."

That willingness to give back some of the support he's received also influences his work with the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, of which he is president.

Curt Wilcott/Reporter-Telegram

John Castro admits he's a workaholic, dividing his time between his job at Southwestern Bell, the Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce and United Way.

Oil prices flounder near $14

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices floundered this morning near the $14-a-barrel level they reached Friday, largely on pre-weekend account reconciling among professional traders.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the near-month contract for West Texas Intermediate lost 3 cents this morning. On Friday, the December contract rose sharply at the opening and finished 17 cents higher at $13.85 per barrel.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 1.04 cents a gallon to 51.76 cents, and wholesale home-heating oil rose 0.29 cent a gallon to 43.33 cents.

Analysts said the maneuverings of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, which had caused prices to plunge early in the week, weren't influencing the market. Some predicted OPEC's activities would likely be discounted at least until key cartel ministers meet again late next month.

"Today we had book squaring before the weekend," said Peter Beutel, an assistant director of Elders Futures Inc. in New York. "We also had trade buying, refiner buying. With prices so cheap, it makes sense to buy crude and turn it into products."

Dollar quiet in pre-holiday trade

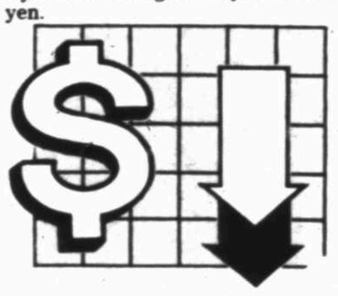

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was lower against major currencies in thin European mid-morning trading today ahead of a religious holiday in several countries. Gold prices rose.

Foreign exchange dealers said pressure to square trading positions before the end of the month partly caused the slight lowering of the U.S. currency.

They said trading rooms were closing down in a number of European countries for All Saints Day on Tuesday, and other dealers had taken a four-day weekend.

They added that the dollar was unlikely to suffer sharp swings this week before the Nov. 8 U.S. presidential election.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 1.08 Japanese yen to a closing 125.00 yen. Later, in London, it rose slightly to 124.95 yen.

—1.7760 West German marks, up from 1.7755

—1.4905 Swiss francs, down from 1.4970

—6.0415 French francs, down from 6.0750

—1.9969 Dutch guilders, down from 2.0010

—1,315.50 Italian lire, down from 1,321.50

—1.2192 Canadian dollars, up from 1.2035

In London, the British pound rose to $1.7770 from $1.7680 late Friday.

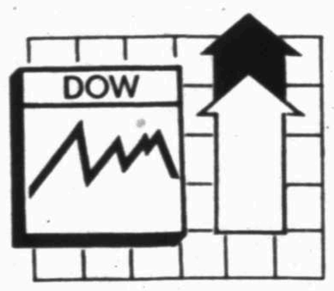

Gold opened at a bid price of $412.50 a troy ounce, higher than its late bid price Friday of $410.50. At mid-morning today the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a slightly lower recommended price of $412.30.

In Zurich, the mid-morning bid price was $412.30, up from $411.25 bid late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose 18 cents to close at a bid $414.46, up slightly from Saturday's $414.28.

Silver bullion was traded at a bid price of $6.31 a troy ounce, unchanged from late Friday.

Dow recoups part of week's loss

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market recouped some of Thursday's broad losses with a modest rally in slackened trading Friday.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, down 24.35 on Thursday, rose 9.06 to 2,149.89. That left the average with a net loss for the week of 33.61 points.

Big Board volume totaled 146.30 million shares, against 196.54 million in the previous session.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by about 7 to 5 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 858 up, 595 down and 519 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 146.30 million shares, down from 196.54 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 173.07 million shares.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $10.83 billion, or 0.40 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .62 to 156.79.

Standard & Poor's industrial index rose 1.49 to 320.67, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was up 1.25 at 278.53.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market added 1.02 to 382.79. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 301.75, up 1.11.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Milken breaks probe silence

Milken

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Michael Milken, Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc.'s high-yield bond chief who's at the center of a federal insider-trading probe, says the ordeal of the nearly 2-year-old investigation has taken a personal toll.

Milken spoke in a rare interview published Friday in The Trentonian newspaper, which is owned by Ingersoll Publications Co., whose chief executive Ralph Ingersoll is a personal friend of Milken's and a Drexel client.

Administration rejects rice farmers request

WASHINGTON (AP) — In the first test of a tough new trade law, the Reagan administration rejected a request from U.S. rice farmers that it investigate whether Japan unfairly blocks imports.

The announcement Friday by U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter was surprising because because supporters of the request were hoping the pressure of presidential politics would force a different outcome.

AT&T wins 'computer contract of century'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. won a spirited competition to provide thousands of new computers to the Defense Department, establishing its position in the industry for years to come with what has been described as the computer contract of the century.

The contract awarded Friday was worth $929.1 million, and AT&T officials said it could ultimately exceed $1 billion depending on options excercised.

Solving computer problems can make anyone feel like 'a hero'

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Assistant Business/Oil Editor

The first step is often the hardest. When Ken Bryant sat down with his first personal computer, the routine task of formatting a disk took him three and a half hours.

Despite such an inauspicious start, it was enough to get the former petroleum geologist "hooked for life" on the machines.

In the more than five years since that first experience, Bryant has gained experience with both computer hardware and software.

In computer consulting, "like any kind of support service, the job satisfaction deep down comes from liking to be a hero," says the Midland High graduate who grew up near Greenwood.

"If someone is having a problem that you solve, in their eyes, you're a hero."

Bryant accumulated his expertise working as computer analyst and as service manager for a computer retailer. He also worked as a senior systems analysts for Mobil for a time earlier this year.

Bryant characterizes his consulting work as "open support" — providing custom programming, answering hardware and software questions and providing problem-solving services and advice for all types of computers — from personal computers to industrial mainframes.

"It's a lot harder than specializing in a particular area or type of computer, but it offers more opportunities too," explained Bryant, who served four years in the U.S. Army, from 1966-69, and earned his geology degree from Northwest Missouri State University at the same time.

Keeping current on developments in the computer industry — the latest software releases and hardware innovations — means "eating, drinking and sleeping computers," which Bryant doesn't mind.

He reads an average of 15 to 20 computer magazines a month, in addition to attending all the seminars he can get to.

"The business changes every day. There's no way to learn it all but it is fun trying."

Of his column which begins in today's Reporter-Telegram, Bryant says, "It's for the casual user who has basic questions and basic problems, but doesn't want to devote a lot of energy to finding answers.

Bryant

"Real computer buffs know how and where to look, but I'm interested in helping the everyday user get more out of his (or her) machine."

CASTRO

He related how he had recently taken a tour of the Lamesa Road area and visited with some residents who had been moved to make way for the road's realignment. In many cases, he said, they were much better off in their new homes. "That's why I'm so excited about the Lamesa Road project," he said.

As the new president of the MHCC, he has definite goals for his term. The first is to move into the chamber's new offices at 1100 Parker by the end of this coming January.

His second goal is to find a project that would let the chamber become more financially self-sufficient, less dependent on the corporate partners. He'd also like to see increases in membership and corporate membership.

Castro also plans to support the Eastside Economic Development Task Force in its efforts to finish the Lamesa Road project and establish a shopping center in the area.

Another goal is to support the statewide Texas Association of Mexican-American Chambers of Commerce, particularly in its efforts to become financially self-sufficient.

"I'm shooting for a strong year," he says. "Then I'll decide about a second term."

Looking to the future, Castro says he'd like to eventually become a district manager with Southwestern Bell, and hopes for the chance to work with TAMACC on the state level.

In addition, the political science major is eyeing the another avenue for community involvement. "I would like to get into the political arena. I'm interested in the school board the next time that rolls around."

MEET

"It's a 30-year mortgage we just flat out can't handle," said Theo H. Pitt Jr., chairman of Pioneer Savings Bank in Rocky Mount, N.C., and outgoing chairman of the industry group.

The bank board this year has shut down more than 135 institutions or merged them with stronger partners, but at midyear, 497 insolvent institutions were still open. Another 408 were solvent but losing money.

The Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp., financed by assessments on the industry, was set up to insure deposits in S&Ls but it has been weakened by the flurry of failures. S&Ls already pay more than twice as much for deposit insurance as commercial banks — $2.08 cents per $1,000 of deposits for S&Ls compared with 83 cents for banks.

Pitt contends that continuing the extra assessment, originally scheduled to be phased out in three years, would push otherwise profitable institutions into insolvency, creating an ever-enlarging problem.

So far this year, the extra assessment has made the difference between profit and loss for 69 institutions, he said.

"Clearly there is a limit to what the solvent institutions can do," he said.

Congress, when it decides how to pay the bill, whether through a direct appropriation from the Treasury or through some sort of taxpayer-backed guarantee, will almost certainly include measures aimed at preventing the problem from recurring.

Although much of the industry's problems are concentrated in depressed oil-producing states in the Southwest, they have been magnified in Texas, California and Florida by lax state regulation that permitted thrift institutions to make risky investments far removed from traditional home mortgage lending.

Many in the industry had pushed for permission to diversify in the early 1980s when soaring interest rates made it impossible for thrifts to make money on their old, fixed-rate mortgages. The argument was that a greater range of activities would help institutions pull themselves out of the hole.

As it turned out, Pitt said, the institutions that strayed most from traditional mortgage lending earned the least.

"The ones that have gotten into trouble were the ones who took the most advantage of the new powers," he said.

Rep. Gerald Kleczka, D-Wis., and other members of Congress say that after all the insolvent S&Ls are closed or merged with stronger partners, the entire S&L system should be merged with the commercial bank system.

But Pitt says American home buyers need a separate S&L system.

Texas executives skip conference

DALLAS (AP) — Although the Texas thrift industry is one of the sickest in the nation, state thrift executives won't be at a Honolulu convention beginning today where savings and loan officials will discuss how to restore the industry's health.

An estimated 4,050 delegates and spouses to the U.S. League of Savings Institutions 96th annual convention were expected to attend. However the Federal Home Loan Bank Board has told operators of insolvent thrifts they may not use company money to pay for their executives to attend industry gatherings.

The nation's 3,048 savings institutions lost $7.5 billion in the first six months of this year and losses almost surely will top last year's post-Depression record of $7.8 billion.

At the center of the thrift industry's problems are savings and loans in Texas, where 46 percent of 269 institutions open at the end of June were insolvent.

Both U.S. League board members from Texas are unable to attend the Honolulu meeting. Director Alan D. Myers Jr.'s Olney Savings Association was recapitalized earlier this month in a federally-assisted sale to Bryan cable television executive Don A. Adam.

J. Michael Cornwall, chairman of insolvent First Texas Savings Association of Dallas and chairman-elect of Texas Savings and Loan League, had anticipated attending the Honolulu meeting. Cornwall told The Dallas Morning News he changed his plans because of a conflicting board meeting at his thrift.

"There is no question that there will be fewer people from Texas," Cornwall said. "Certainly, the Texas presence will be much less than it has been in the past."

Utilities closely watching Wisconsin clean-air case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Utilities nationwide are closely watching a clean-air case involving a Wisconsin power company because it could affect future renovation projects at hundreds of older plants across the country.

The Environmental Protection Agency has told Wisconsin Electric Power Co. that it will have to meet more stringent standards for new plants if it goes ahead with planned repairs at a coal-fired power plant.

The industry has long assumed that such renovation projects were exempt from the tougher clean-air rules that apply to new plants. EPA's ruling is the first of its kind.

"I think they are flat wrong," said Henry Nickel, chief lawyer for the Utility Air Regulatory Group, which represents utilities. EPA's decision, he said, contradicts current regulations.

Bob Beck, environmental manager for the Edison Electric Institute, trade association of the nation's private utilities, said EPA's ruling could amount to "a de facto acid rain program."

The Energy Department has taken the utilities' side, protesting to EPA that the decision could jeopardize future power supplies, or make them more costly. Utilities say they may simply close plants or forgo repairs if the new-plant standards will apply.

But David Hawkins, an attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said EPA "is making the right call."

"It's about time they put some life and teeth into the requirements" that significant renovation qualifies a plant as new.

The plant involved is the Port Washington station in suburban Milwaukee, whose five 80-megawatt generating units were installed from 1935 to 1950.

In 1984 the company discovered severe cracks in steam drums. The following year one of the five units was taken off line and steam pressure reduced in the other four, for an overall drop in capacity of 40 percent.

Now the company plans to replace the steam drums in a project costing $71 million. Wisconsin Electric argues that this is routine maintenance that ought to be exempt from review.

But in an Oct. 14 letter to the company informing it of the decision, EPA Administrator Lee M. Thomas said the company had told state regulators the project was not routine, that $46 million of the expense was a capital expenditure, that capacity had deteriorated before 1984 for other reasons, and that other equipment also would be replaced to help restore original capacity.

Thomas said emissions will go back up once the plant resumes full-power generation, and that the increase will result from a capital rather than a maintenance expenditure.

The argument that the utility plans only to restore original capacity is not relevant under those circumstances, he said.

Sulfur dioxide is the most important pollutant at issue. Formed from sulfur in the fuel, it is transformed in the atmosphere into sulfuric acid, leading to acid rain.

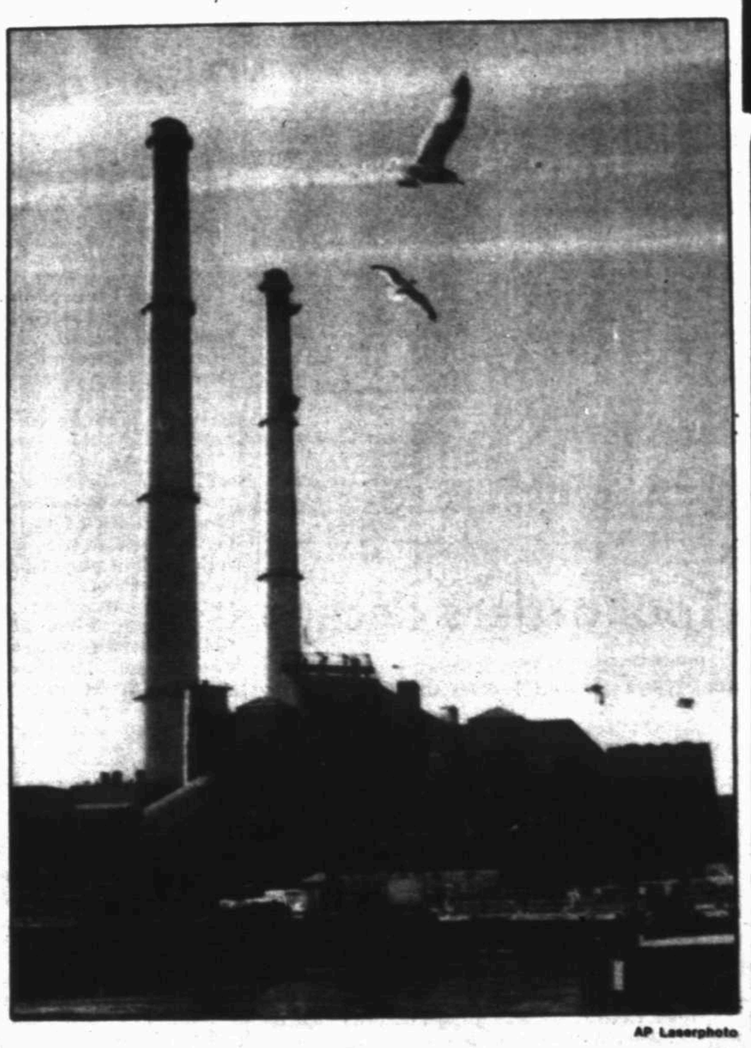

A new plant today would be limited to 0.6 to 1.2 pounds of sulfur per million BTUs provided by the fuel. At the same time it would have to remove 70 percent to 90 percent of the sulfur originally in the coal.

Port Washington now burns coal emitting 2.5 pounds of sulfur per million BTUs. EPA estimates that Port Washington's hourly emissions of sulfur dioxide would increase from current levels by 69 percent after the renovation.

As a practical matter, the only way to prevent that increase would be to install smokestack "scrubbers" — something that according to one industry rule of thumb could cost about $80 million at Port Washington, more than the repairs, and reduce the plant's electrical output by 5 percent.

Wisconsin Power is negotiating with EPA in a bid to avoid that expense. Lisa Fox, a company spokeswoman, declined to discuss specifics of the negotiations, though she did confirm that fuel-switching to oil or gas is an option.

Though U.S. sulfur dioxide emissions have been falling since the mid-1970s, environmentalists say they would have fallen faster if more old plants had been replaced by new plants.

Wisconsin Electric has been ordered to meet tougher air standards for new plants by the Environmental Protection Agency when it repairs this coal burning power plant in Port Washington.

Extending the life of old plants "wasn't even on the radar screen" in 1979, when the current regulations were promulgated, said Hawkins, who was then with the EPA and helped draft the rules.

Now, according to the Energy Department, plants more than 30 years old are expected to account for 25 percent of all fossil-fueled generating capacity in 1990 and 90 percent in 2010.

BUYOUT

Kraft said Tuesday it would negotiate only if Philip Morris sweetened its offer to at least $110 a share, and insisted it would not be pressured into a buyout.

A preliminary agreement was reached after negotiations Friday in Chicago. The Kraft board of directors approved it Sunday in New York, Maxwell said in a telephone interview.

"Our shareholders are receiving full value, and this merger is the best possible outcome for our employees, customers and the communities in which we operate," said John M. Richman, chairman and chief executive of Kraft, which has 47,000 employees.

If completed, the merger would rank behind only the $13.4 billion acquisition of Gulf Oil Corp. by what is now Chevron Corp. in 1984.

With combined revenue of about $39.5 billion in the year ended June 30, the company would be the world's biggest consumer products maker, outpacing the $30 billion-a-year British-Dutch company Unilever NV, according to industry estimates.

The combination of Kraft and General Foods Corp., which Philip Morris acquired in 1985 for $5.6 billion, would produce about $20 billion in annual revenue, making Philip Morris the world's second biggest food company, after Switzerland's $28 billion Nestle SA.

The proposed buyout follows a mid-October wave of multibillion-dollar takeover bids focusing on food companies.

Pending is a $20.3 billion proposal by the investment firm Kohlberg Kravis Roberts & Co. for food and tobacco giant RJR Nabisco Inc. Also pending are a $5.23 billion hostile bid for Pillsbury Co. by Britain's Grand Metropolitan PLC, a $1.4 billion bid for West Point-Pepperell Inc. by rival textile maker Farley Inc. and a $941.2 million bid for Holly Farms Corp. by Tyson Foods Inc., two of the nation's biggest poultry processors.

Maxwell said his company had no plans to sell any major Kraft assets and believed the combined companies' cash flow should be enough to pay off the massive debt.

He said Philip Morris, which employees 130,000, already had $12 billion in bank financing in place, which combined with cash on hand was enough to complete the buyout.

The offer expires at midnight Nov. 15 unless extended, and is subject to a majority of Kraft shares being tendered and federal antitrust clearance.

Maxwell has indicated he did not anticipate any antitrust problems because the companies' products compete in different market segments.

Kraft last year posted a profit of $489 million, or $3.60 a share, on revenue of $9.9 billion.

KKR may have inside track on RJR Nabisco

By JAMES STERNGOLD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The prospect of a bidding battle for RJR Nabisco Inc. appeared to diminish over the weekend as the company's financial advisers decided that they were unlikely to match the $20.3 billion that has been offered by Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., people close to the situation said.

The decision means that the next few days could prove crucial for RJR Nabisco, a food and tobacco company that is the country's 19th-largest industrial concern.

It suggests that Kohlberg, Kravis will either back away from its $90-a-share offer or walk away with the prize if it can line up the necessary financial backing from banks.

Over the weekend Kohlberg, Kravis started to receive the confidential financial information on RJR Nabisco's operations that it had requested.

A special committee of RJR Nabisco's outside directors agreed last week to supply the data to Kohlberg, Kravis to help it formulate its buyout deal.

Kohlberg, Kravis officials will start to meet Monday with RJR Nabisco executives to discuss the company's prospects.

Most important are the company's own projections of revenues and profits, people close to the situation said.

Those figures will be essential in determining if the company could support the more than $15 billion in debt that would be required in a buyout.

Although management is not likely to match the Kohlberg, Kravis bid, a lower offer could be made, but there was no clear indication if such a counter bid would be made.

F. Ross Johnson, RJR Nabisco's chief executive, started the bidding process earlier this month when he and his chief financial adviser, Shearson Lehman Hutton, announced that they were contemplating a buyout offer at $75 a share.

They were clearly surprised by Kohlberg, Kravis's $90-a-share offer.

"The $90 bid changed everything," one source said. He added that Johnson and Shearson did not believe RJR Nabisco was worth $90 a share, making the prospect of an immediate counteroffer slim.

The strategy of Johnson and his financial advisers seems to be to see if Kohlberg, Kravis will attempt to lower its bid once it examines the company's data.

A source close to Kohlberg, Kravis indicated that pulling back seemed unlikely at this point.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Forces' separation tops list at Iran, Iraq talks

GENEVA (AP) — On the eve of a new round of peace talks, Iran and Iraq each released 25 prisoners of war and U.N. chief Javier Perez de Cuellar said he would promptly seek the repatriation of the thousands that remain.

The United Nations secretary general told reporters on arrival Sunday he hoped the third round of talks that begins today would soon yield "positive results," specifically on the exchange of prisoners.

But he has said his first target as mediator to have both sides agree to the disengagement of forces that a U.N. report says have remained in "dangerous proximity" since Aug. 20, when a truce halted the 8-year-old war.

The U.N. Iran-Iraq Military Observers Group, which is monitoring the cease-fire, says in the report that in some places troops are separated by just 30 feet of no man's land.

Perez de Cuellar said he planned to discuss the prisoner-of-war issue this morning with the president of the International Committee of the Red Cross and expected to meet later today with the delegations of both sides.

A U.N. report estimates Iran and Iraq hold a combined total of up to 105,000 prisoners of war, though the Red Cross has registered just 50,182 in Iran and 19,284 in Iraq.

85 Czechs detained

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — At least 85 people were detained in a massive police roundup of dissidents that coincided with the 70th anniversary of Czechoslovakia's independence, a dissident source said.

Anna Sabatova, a signatory of the Charter 77 human rights document, said Sunday that most were rounded up Thursday and that all three of the movement's spokesmen were among those detained.

One spokesman, Milos Hajek, apparently was detained after going to Prague's Wenceslas Square Friday to attend a banned independent rally marking the anniversary, Sabatova said.

Hajek did not return home after the rally, which was broken up by riot police using water cannon and tear gas.

U.S. copter crash kills 4

TOKYO (AP) — An American military helicopter crashed Monday during a training mission on Okinawa, killing four U.S. Marines, the United States Media Liaison Office said.

Marine Master Sgt. Jake Rodrigues said two CH-46 Seaknight helicopters were involved in routine training when one crashed in remote, mountainous terrain on the Japanese island.

The second helicopter returned to its base at Marine Corp Air Station at Sutenma.

Woman holds Communion

LONDON (AP) — An American woman priest celebrated Communion with an Anglican feminist group outside a chapel where their services were banned after receiving widespread publicity.

"God is here," the Rev. Suzanne Fageol of Chicago said during the hourlong service Sunday night outside St. Benet Chapel.

"Her spirit is with us," was the united response.

Ms. Fageol, 38, was ordained in the United States, where the Episcopal Church is one of several provinces of the worldwide Anglican Communion to ordain women. The Church of England's governing General Synod has decided to move toward ordination of women, but there is much opposition at all levels.

Ms. Fageol had been celebrating Communion in St. Benet Chapel at the request of St. Hilda's Community group since spring of 1978.

But her service on Oct. 23, widely reported and photographed, led lawyers for the London Diocese and Fund, which administers property for the Bishop of London, to warn the group it would consider unauthorized services in the chapel as trespassing.

Two Moscow dissidents jailed, sources claim

MOSCOW (AP) — Two Moscow dissidents were jailed for their part in protests demanding freedom for hundreds of people they say are political prisoners, a dissident source said today.

Yuri Mityunov said police arrested Valeriya Novodvorskaya and Dmitri Starikov Sunday and they were given 15-day jail sentences. Mityunov is a spokesman for the Democratic Union, a group that bills itself as an alternative to the Communist Party.

At least 50 people were arrested as hundreds of demonstrators marked an imprisoned poet's death by protests demanding the release of hundreds they say are political prisoners, Mityunov said.

About 40 people were arrested in Leningrad, 14 in Moscow, and four in Novosibirsk, Mityunov said.

A few thousand people gathered separately in Minsk, capital of the Byelorussian Republic, to commemorate the victims of Hitler and Stalin. Fourteen people were arrested there, Mityunov said.

Ms. Novodvorskaya was arrested on her way to a planned demonstration on Moscow's Pushkin Square along with several other Democratic Union leaders.

A crowd of several hundred people gathered on the square in the cold and snow Sunday evening, but no protest took place. Starikov was arrested when he raised a banner demanding freedom for political prisoners after most of the crowd left, Mityunov said.

Earlier Sunday, five members of another group were arrested on the square for their brief protest.

Mityunov said 200-300 people gathered to read poetry and hold candles along Leningrad's Nevsky Prospket near Kazan Cathedral. At least 40 of them were arrested, he said.

A crowd of several thousand gathered near the police station where they were taken.
