Sales tax down, but percentages improve slightly

The month-to-month comparison for Snyder's latest sales tax return shows a 10 percent drop when compared to last year, a slightly better showing than the city has experienced the past several months.

The year-to-date figure for Snyder is listed at a minus 22.4 percent, also better than last month.

During that period, both the monthly and the yearly comparison were at a minus 25 percent.

The latests figures reflect sales made in February and reported to the state comptroller's office by March 20.

In actual dollars, the year's fourth reporting period showed Snyder's sales tax total at $221,367. At the same time last year, the total was $285,521.

The monthly comparison was closer to last year's however. The latest figure was $46,742 compared to $52,282 last year.

The figures reflect 1 percent of the total sales reported here.

Across Texas, sales tax returns were down some 6 percent. Other area cities both larger and smaller than Snyder generally reflected a minus trend also. These include:

WTC looks strong as rodeo proceeds

Western Texas College cowboys suffered no letdown in performance as second-night action of the NIRA rodeo was wrapped up here Friday.

Adam Brewster continued his fine effort by slipping into contention in the bareback as well as the bull riding, while Keith Hudson made a strong debut in the calf roping. Other WTC students fared well also.

The rodeo was to continue with performances at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Saturday and the Sunday 2 p.m. short-go or finals. Action is taking place at Scurry County Coliseum where tickets are $4 for adults and $3 for students.

Brewster, who scored a 72 Thursday in the bull riding, made his mark in the bareback Friday night. The Snyder native scored an unofficial 74 to tie with teammate Mark Carrillo for first place.

Carrillo scored his 74 in the event Thursday evening.

Hudson, the defending NIRA calf roping champion, took over the lead in that event with a 9.3 clocking Friday night. His hold on the top spot was short-lived, however, as Shane Talkington of TSU flashed a speedy 8.0 moments later. Hudson's effort is now in second place.

Western's Wesley Henderson contines to lead the saddle bronc with his 75 posted Thursday. Schoolmate Steve Roberts is not on the designated six-man WTC team, but nontheless is bidding for points with his third-place score of 70 in the event.

Top times in the steer wrestling dipped considerably Friday as Guy Yarbrough of Odessa clocked a fine 4.2 and Western's Joel Marr turned in a 4.8 to take over first and second place. TSU's Don Eddleman grabbed third with a 5.1.

Team roping also took on new leaders. Flynn Farris of Texas Tech and Brad Harris of Sul Ross State University headed 'em and heeled 'em in 7.0 to grab the lead. Western Texas' Chuck Smith and

Firemen's convention planned next weekend

Snyder will host the 97th semi-annual meeting of the MidWest Texas Firemen and Fire Marshals Association next weekend.

The event will begin with a 10 a.m. registration Saturday, April 25. It will be at the Central Fire Station.

Other activities include a business meeting set for 1 p.m. at the National Guard Armory. District officiers will be elected at that time and legislation pertaining to firemen will be discussed.

Pumper races will be conducted around 4 p.m. at 40th Street and Houston.

A supper catered by Clark's Country Kitchen will begin at about 6 p.m. in the armory. A dance will follow.

The Ladies Auxiliary will have a luncheon and business meeting at 11 a.m. at the First United Methodist Church. They will also conduct their own pumper races.

Towns to be represented at the meeting include Abilene, Anson, Aspermont, Baird, Clyde, Colorado City, Hamlin, Haskell, Lueders, Merkel, Roby, Rochester, Roscoe, Rotan, Stamford, Throckmorton and Tye.

'Germanfest' RSVP required by Monday

Monday is the deadline for reservations to "Germanfest 1987," the event slated next Saturday at the Diamond M Ranch as a fund raiser for Noah Project, the locally-based haven for abused women and their children.

To be featured will be a buffet line of real German food, a German Oompah band, a humorous talk related to the German heritage in Texas, an art show and sale featuring 100 pieces and, to cap the evening off, an appearance by the Texas Tech German Dancers.

Cost for the event is $25 per person and sponsors note almost 100 percent of these funds will go toward the Noah Project. Reservations should be made by sending a check to P.O. Box 425, Snyder, 79549.

The buffet will be served from 5 p.m. to 6:30 p.m., and the band "Das Glockenspiel" will play during the meal.

Dr. Meredith McClain, associate professor of German at Texas Tech, will offer the humorous side of the German heritage at 6:30 p.m.; and the dancers are scheduled to perform from 7 until 8 p.m.

The feller on Deep Creek says, "People living together without getting married is especially disturbing to a guy who just got a citation for fishing without a license."

Sex education has been around for a long time. It used to be called growing up in the country and being around farm animals.

We were reminded of that the other morning when we attended the annual Ag Breakfast held at the Diamond M Ranch. Those of us at the gathering without hats and boots really stood out.

It was obvious that we had no expertise, other than eating a great chuckwagon breakfast prepared by Jerry Baird and Tommy Marricle.

Several years ago in another county, we did try our hand at raising cattle. We bought three calves with the intention of fattening them up for the freezer. One in particular seemed to be taking to our generous feeding program.

In fact, the heifer was getting so fat that we penned her up to "finish out" the feeding process. One late February afternoon, however, we found the gal on the ground, giving birth to the fourth member of our herd.

A call back to town resulted in about 15 neighborhood kids arriving for the big event. We still don't know much about cattle, but it was sex education at its best.

Othal Ellis, our farmer friend from Dunn, can't understand how even a city boy could be that ignorant. Ellis and his wife, Essie Pearl, came to the breakfast with their neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Fuller.

Othal got lost on his way to the Diamond M Ranch, ending up at the Knapp Baptist Church. Fuller, who Thursday night was honored as the top farm conservationist, was offering to drive home for Othal.

For one Snyder family, it's not hard to remember a birthday. If the day is the 13th, it probably is a relative's birthday.

Jim and Carrie Richardson had a son, Bradly Allen, born April 13 at Cogdell Hospital. The 13th is also the birthday for Carrie's father, Lawton Taylor and for Lawton's father, Orville Taylor.

Court faces tax sale, water system repairs

The sale of property to collect delinquent taxes and items related to the Hermleigh Water Works will be considered by county commissioners as the court meets in regular session at 10 a.m. Monday.

Included is the consideration of resale of two tracts of real estate not sold in a recent sheriff's sale for foreclosure of delinquent taxes.

The two properties were offered for sale at public auction in March, but Sheriff Keith Collier did not receive bids in excess of the amounts owed in back taxes.

The properties — both located inside the city limits — were then deeded to the Snyder Independent School District as trustee for the school, the City of Snyder, Western Texas College and Scurry County.

Attorney's representing all four taxing districts in the delinquent tax cases have advised commissioners the law now allows the private sale of such properties at a price lower than the taxes owed if all taxing jurisdictions approve the sale.

Currently, an individual has submitted bids of $500 and $400 for the two pieces of property. The tracts are described as lot 8, block 30, Bootheland West addition to the City of Snyder and lots 5 & 6, block 29, of the Deavours

Documents link plane, leader

WASHINGTON (AP) — Documents recovered from a cargo plane seized by drug agents in Florida last month indicate the pilot had dealings with a Nicaraguan Contra figure involved in rebel supply operations.

Investigators from the special Senate committee looking into the secret sale of arms to Iran and the alleged transfer of profits to the Contras fighting Nicaragua's leftist Sandinista government have examined diaries, maps and manifests found on the plane. But they have not drawn any conclusions from them, a source said Friday.

The documents were discovered on a DC-4 cargo plane confiscated March 28 by agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration at Charlotte County, Fla.

Among the documents found was one indicating that the pilot Frank Moss' company, Hondu-Carib Cargo Inc., of Georgetown, Grand Caymans, transported relief supplies for rebel supplier Mario Calero on March 25, 1985.

The supplies went from New Orleans, where Calero has his headquarters, to Tegucigalpa, Honduras, a Customs Service document shows.

Calero, the brother of Contra leader Adolfo Calero, runs a supply operation for the rebels.

In a telephone interview Friday, Calero said he contracted with Hondu-Carib, the company of which Moss is the president, in 1984 and 1985 to deliver humanitarian aid to the Contras. On the Customs document, Calero is listed as "operator" of the plane, while Moss is the pilot.

Hondu-Carib had more than one plane, Calero said.

Moss, of Port Charlotte, Fla., has denied having links to drug smuggling or to the Contras, according to the Fort Myers, Fla., News-Press.

DEA spokesman Jack Hook in Miami said Moss claims to be the owner of the plane impounded in Charlotte County, but he has been unable to prove ownership.

The drug agency, which had been looking for the plane since 18 people were indicted in a cocaine trafficking ring in April 1985, believes the plane was "purchased with drug money for the intent of smuggling drugs," Hook said.

Detective Ron Bellomy of the Charlotte County Sheriff's Department said the plane was rigged for dropping loads from the air.

Besides documents, there were military items aboard the plane, he said. Investigators intend to search the plane again next week to recover more records, he said.

Another document on the plane was a shipper's export declaration which showed R-M Equipment Inc., a Miami arms company, exported military-related items to Honduras in February 1985.

James McCoy, a former U.S. military attache in Nicaragua and now an officer of R-M Equipment, confirmed that his firm sent the items. He said the materiel, approved by the State Department, was for the Honduran Army, not for the Contras.

Among the items sent to Honduras, the declaration said, were 25 boxes of magazines for rifles and 20 M-2 tripods.

McCoy, who is a friend of Adolfo Calero, and his partner, Ronald J. Martin, arranged for the purchase of weapons for the Contras in 1984 and 1985, The Washington Post reported two months ago.

Under U.S. weapons export laws, private American arms merchants are barred from shipping weapons to the Contras if the shipments originate in the United States or pass through the United States. But there is no law that prohibits merchants from arranging for sales from other countries.

In other developments:

—The FBI said Friday it was checking reports that FBI agents last year supplied Lt. Col. Oliver North, then an aide to the National Security Council, with information about pending criminal investigations as well as intelligence matters.

Newsweek reported last weekend that North had received FBI files on the private assistance network to the Contras.

Federal law enforcement sources Tuesday told The Associated Press that North had received an FBI investigative report on a criminal probe being conducted out of Miami of alleged gunrunning to the Contras.

—CBS News reported Friday that the CIA had used Michael B. Palmer, who is under a federal indictment on drug smuggling charges, to run secret flights to Central America. The network said U.S. Customs Commissioner William von Raab "hit the roof" in complaining to the CIA about its use of Palmer.

—Witnesses before a grand jury investigating the Iran-Contra affair have been questioned about their knowledge of the role of conservative fund-raiser Carl "Spitz" Channell in providing money to Nicaraguan rebels, according to unidentified lawyers cited in today's editions of The New York Times.

Key Bros. Implement receives Deere honor

Weldon Key, the John Deere farm equipment dealer in Snyder, has been recognized by Deere and Company for Key Bros. Implement Co., Inc.'s service to customers and its contribution to John Deere's position as the free world's leading supplier of farm equipment.

The dealer recognition was in conjunction with the 150th anniversary celebration of Deere and Company, which was founded in 1837 by pioneer blacksmith John Deere.

Leroy Key received a commemorative plaque engraved with a quote from John Deere, "I will never put my name on a product that does not have in it the best that is in me." The plaque also bears the company's Sesquicentennial medallion in sculptured brass.

In addition, Gary Brogan, division sales manager, of John Deere's Dallas branch office presented Weldon Key with a plaque recognizing his 32 years of service as a John Deere dealer. Brogan said, "These plaques attest to the importance of your contribution as an independent businessman who represents the John Deere name and all it stands for."

Brogan said the plaques were the company's way of thanking Key Bros. Implement Co. and other John Deere dealers in more than 100 countries for their efforts, "which have maintained Deere's standing as the largest supplier of farm equipment in the free world since 1963."

Key Bros. Implement Co., Inc. has been in business since 1954 and employs 20 people.

Comedian is dead at age 57

LA JOLLA, Calif. (AP) — Comic actor Dick Shawn, who played Hitler for laughs in the Mel Brooks movie "The Producer," died Friday night after collapsing before a college audience, a hospital spokeswoman said. He was 57.

Shawn was about 25 minutes into his comedy act at the University of California, San Diego, when he fell and struck his head on the stage, said Ken Leighton, who was covering the show for the Times-Advocate of Escondido.

Members of the audience went to his assistance after realizing the fall was not part of the act, said Leighton, who estimated the crowd at 800.

Shawn was taken by ambulance to Scripps Memorial Hospital in La Jolla, where he was listed in very critical condition, said hospital spokeswoman Diane Yohe said. He died about 45 minutes after arrival, she said.

"They're assuming he had a heart attack," Ms. Yohe said.

Leighton said Shawn had just delivered a punch line when he fell face forward. The reporter estimated three to five minutes passed before a doctor rushed up on the stage and began administering cardiac massage.

"People thought it was a joke. They thought it was part of the act," said Leighton, adding that Shawn's son, Adam, called for help when his father had lain prone on the prone on the stage for several minutes.

The younger Shawn was watching his father from the balcony and contacted stagehands to check his father.

Shawn's films included "It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World" in 1963, and "The Producers" in 1968, in which he played a hippie actor who became a smash playing Hitler in a Broadway musical based on the Nazi dictator.

He was also in "Love at First Bite," in 1979, "Wake Me When It's Over", in 1960, "A Very Special Favor" in 1965, "What Did You Do in the War, Daddy" in 1966, and "Looking Up" in 1977.

"I've always been hard to classify," Shawn told The Associated Press in an October 1985 interview. "I don't do mother-in-law or ugly girl jokes. In fact, I hardly tell jokes at all. I just stick to my own point of view instead of fitting into any formula."

Floating garbage said unwelcome

VENICE, La. (AP) — A moored barge rotted and stank under the south Louisiana sun Friday, its cargo of more than 3,000 tons of garbage shipped out of a New York town for lack of room, denied entry to two other states and ordered removed from Louisiana.

"It's pretty ripe," Dale Givens, assistant secretary to the Louisiana Department of Environmental Quality, said Friday.

"It contains just about everything from automobile tires and hoods to household garbage to sticks and stones," said Givens, who went to Venice, about 60 miles southeast of New Orleans, to inspect the barge Thursday.

He said the waste — 3,186 bales measuring one yard to a side and weighing about one ton each — apparently has been on the barge about a month. It has attracted thousands of black flies and mosquitoes, and smelly puddles which oozed from the bales after a storm are seeping over the side of the barge, he said.

The odyssey of the garbage began at Islip, N.Y., on Long Island because the community's landfill is running out of room and no longer accepts commercial solid waste, authorities said.

All communities on the 120-mile-long Long Island will close landfills by the end of 1990 because garbage is endangering its aquifer, its only source of fresh water, officials have said.

The load has been refused entry to North Carolina and Alabama, and Louisiana has given the hauler, National Waste Contractors, a week to take it elsewhere.

Lowell Harrelson, a Bay Minette, Ala., resident who owns National Waste Contractors could not be reached for comment Friday.

His wife said he was on a business trip and she did not know where he was. A woman who answered the phone Friday at National Waste, also listed as National Plumbing Contractors, said he had taken the day off.

Givens said Harrelson was ordered to get the barge away from Louisiana and to tell his agency by Thursday when and where it will go.

Givens said National Waste Contractors agreed to take the load because the company thought it could be unloaded at a North Carolina landfill being designed to produce methane gas for industry. When North Carolina officials said no, it was towed to New Orleans, where Louisiana authorities rejected it.

Louisiana Environmental Secretary Martha Madden said she had a letter delivered to Harrelson Wednesday warning him the barge couldn't be unloaded here.

Qualification is offered through several achievement steps, including regular membership, life membership, and the advanced memberships of Lone Star and Grand Council, which call for superior sales achievements.

Reduced erosion loss seen

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department's soil experts say farmers should be reducing erosion losses by 93 percent on cropland signed up last year in the long-term Conservation Reserve Program.

Put another way, the savings realized by planting the land with a protective cover could amount to 25.4 tons per acre each year that otherwise would be lost to wind and water runoff.

Wilson Scaling, chief of the department's Soil Conservation Service, said Friday the erosion reduction was computed for the initial 8.2 million acres of highly erodible land enrolled in the program in 1986.

An additional 10.6 million acres were enrolled this year, and a further signup is scheduled for July. The goal set by Congress is to take 40 million to 45 million acres of highly erodible land out of crop production by 1990 by planting it to protective cover, including grass and trees.

The soil saved on the 8.2 million acres totals an estimated 209 million tons a year. If the 1990 goal is met, agency officials said the annual soil savings could be about 825 million tons annually.

Scaling said the average annual erosion rate on the 8.2 million acres contracted last year will drop from 27.3 tons per acre to 1.9 tons per year after it is protected by permanent cover.

Texas and Colorado, each with more than a million acres enrolled in 1986, were the largest participants in last year's signup.

Farmers who participate receive government payments for up to half of the cost of establishing trees or grass. Those are one-time payments that average $37.51 per acre, officials said. Annual rental payments, based on bids accepted from farmers, average $45.53 per acre for land enrolled last year.

Commandant asks support of Corps despite spy affair

WASHINGTON (AP) — The commanding general of the Marine Corps said Friday he couldn't rule out additional arrests in the sex-and-spy affair involving embassy guards, but pleaded for Americans to support the Marines.

"We are a very close-knit organization. It borders on, with us, being a religion," said Gen. P.X. Kelley, the Corps' commandant. "We belong to the American taxpayer. We are a proud Corps. And we must press on.

"We cannot allow the actions of a remote handful of individuals ... we cannot allow that to destroy our morale," he said.

Kelley, appearing at his first Pentagon news conference since details of the affair began emerging, said the investigation of Marine guards posted to Moscow initially had been slowed by a lack of cooperation among federal agencies.

He also said he had already ordered some changes in selection procedures for new embassy guards, including psychological screening.

He defended the ability of Marine attorneys to assure all those accused a fair trial.

Asked if he was satisfied the affair would end with the three espionage arrests made to date, Kelley replied: "No, I'll never be totally satisfied ... until the investigative bodies working this case come to me and say we have run our lines on every single lead and we have no more."

The four-star general also asserted that during his almost four years as the Corps' commandant, he had "never, and I repeat that, never ... heard one word nor had my staff heard one word which would have caused us to be concerned" about the security guard force.

Complaining about a double standard in public attitudes, he said, "It is interesting to note that in almost every instance (of earlier spy cases), the focus has been on the individual, not the institution. In this case, however, it seems that just the opposite is true."

He also criticized Soviet statements "to degrade and humiliate" the Corps, adding: "If they can destroy the image of the United States Marine Corps, then all of our precious institutions will be vulnerable to their slanderous attacks."

The affair became public last December with the arrest of Sgt. Clayton J. Lonetree, a 25-year-old guard who worked at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow in 1985 and 1986.

Marine jets working with Apache pilots

FORT HOOD, Texas (AP) — Pilots at this Army installation are working with Marine gunners in an inter-service exercise designed to see how much firepower jet aircraft and attack helicopters can deliver in one maneuver.

Apache combat pilots of the 6th Cavalry Brigade's 1st Squadron have been "laser-designating" targets for Marine Corps AV-8B Harrier jets all week, a spokesman said.

The Fort Hood training is checking out the ability of the sophisticated systems on the two aircraft to work together, said Lt. Col. Joe Jenkinson, commander of the 6th Cavalry Regiment.

The Marine jet can take off vertically and hover like a helicopter, then change to full forward flight at speeds approaching that of sound.

Cooperative training between Foot Hood air combat personnel and Navy A-6 jet pilots earlier was "very successful," Jenkinson said.

"That was in the first part of March at Fort Lewis, Wash. After those successes, we wanted to work with the Marines," Jenkinson said.

A Marine attack helicopter pilot, Capt. Mark Gibson, is assigned to Jenkinson's squadron at Fort Hood. Gibson, who was instrumental in bringing the Marine jets here, said the training was "very, very encouraging."

Gibson said that the idea started when the Army worked with the Air Force at Nellis Air Force Base.

The Apaches place a laser "spot" on the target, then the Marines use the locating data to compute a release point for their bombs. The jets sweep in low and lob the bombs on a precise trajectory.

"They never have to go in front of the Apaches," Gibson said. "It's a super survivable technique. The suppressive fire (from the Apaches) continues while he (the Marine jet pilot) lobs the bomb and leaves before the enemy can engage him.

Marketing loan bill revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is leading a bipartisan group of four senators in advancing a new farm trade proposal aimed at reducing foreign agricultural subsidies and boosting U.S. exports.

The proposal, to be introduced later this month, would require the United States to launch a marketing loan program for wheat, soybeans and food grains unless a new international trade agreement is reached curbing farm subsidies that hurt U.S. producers in the world market.

The plan wouldn't go into effect until 1990, in essence putting other countries on notice that if they don't negotiate an agreement on reducing their farm subsidies, they face the expanded marketing loan system.

Faced with the threat of a glut of underpriced U.S. commodities on the world market in the absence of a farm-subsidy agreement, Bentsen and his Senate colleagues think other countries will be inclined to bargain.

"The beauty of the marketing loan is it is a wonderful trade tool," said Marty Clayton, Bentsen's legislative assistant for farm issues. "It scares everyone else in the world silly because it takes away this price peg they've been piggy-backing."

Marketing loans, which already exist for cotton, rice and honey, provide producers with a payment equal to the difference between a government-set loan rate and the actual market price.

Since implementation of the marketing loan program in 1985, rice exports have risen by 60 percent, while cotton shipments have skyrocketed 300 percent and cut into sales for other countries.

The current U.S. farm policy is tied to a set loan rate for soy beans, wheat and food grains. Farmers who can't sell their produce for more than the loan rate simply keep the loan while the government keeps the commodity and eats the loan loss.

That is often the case, because other countries use the U.S. loan price as a gauge and set their prices just below it. Consequently, stockpiles of farm products being held by the U.S. government continue to grow.

A marketing loan would still offer farmers the same loan rate, but would require only 70 percent repayment. So if a farmer finds a buyer willing to pay from 70 to 99 percent of the loan, he can make the sale and keep the remainder of the loan, which the government will have to digest.

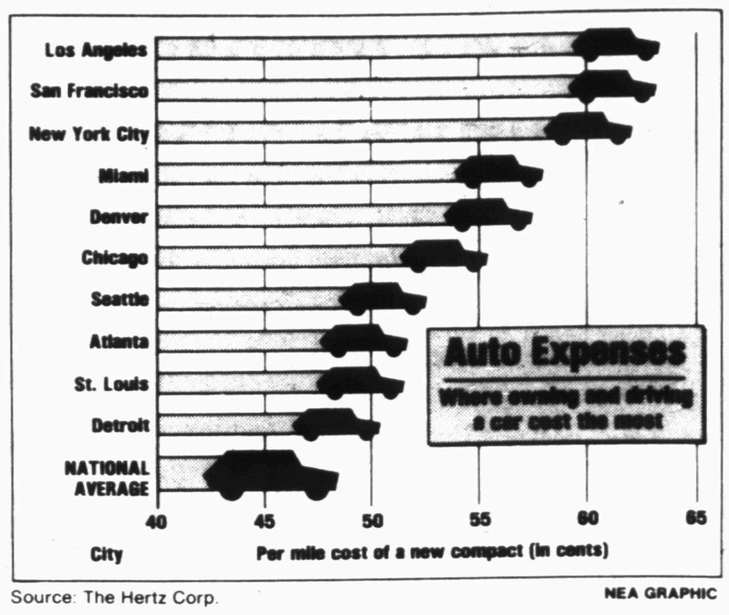

In this way, excess stocks will decrease and the U.S. producers' share in the world market will grow accordingly.

Cost to the government of implementing such a program is estimated to average $1 billion per year for the first four years, then begin declining, according to the Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute, a nonprofit arm of Iowa State and Missouri universities.

Bentsen sees the threat of across-the-board marketing loans as a way to pressure U.S. trading partners into cutting subsidy programs.

"We see great potential in the upcoming round of multilateral trade negotiations for major improvements int he agricultural trading system that will benefit U.S. farmers," according to a letter sent to Senate colleagues by Bentsen, John Danforth, R-Mo., Thad Cochran, R-Miss., and David Pryor, D-Ark.

The Reagan administration also views elimination of farm subsidies as a major goal of the current round of trade negotiations. A substantial increase in European Economic Community wheat and feed grain exports, stimulated by subsidies, has plagued U.S. producers in recent years.

Agreement reached on nuclear tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union and the United States would detonate underground nuclear explosions at each other's test sites under a surprising agreement reached during high-level talks this week in Moscow, U.S. arms control director Kenneth L. Adelman says.

The agreement could set the stage for Senate ratification of two treaties arranged in 1974 and 1976 that limited test blasts to no more than 150 kilotons.

"It's a very positive move," Adelman said Friday in an interview. "We've wanted better verification for six years, and they have said yes."

"The Soviets agreed we can test at each other's test sites," he said.

Adelman first mentioned the test exchange at a briefing with foreign journalists and repeated it in a telephone interview.

At the briefing, he called it an idea that had been around for a long time but which the Soviets only recently have accepted. He also said the Soviets accepted an invitation to visit a chemical warfare destruction facility at Tooele, Utah, but no time for the visit was set.

Adelman said in the interview that the two sides must decide whether to use the U.S. Cortex system of test verification, the seismic measurements the Soviets prefer, or some combination of the two methods.

The Cortex procedure involves lowering sensitive devices into the testing area. Seismic monitoring is akin to procedures for measuring earthquakes.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz made the proposal Monday to Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze. Adelman discussed it Tuesday with other Soviet officials. The Soviets agreed before the U.S. group left the next day.

The 1974 treaty, which was negotiated during the Nixon administration, set a limit of 150 kilotons on underground blasts. They are the only kind that have been permitted since the two superpowers agreed in 1963 not to test under water, in the atmosphere or in outer space.

In 1976, the same ceiling was imposed on so-called peaceful tests for such projects as water diversion. As part of the Ford administration accord, the Soviets agreed to on-site inspection. But none was carried out.

President Reagan, in two reports to Congress, has accused the Soviets of violating the 1974 accord by exceeding 150 kilotons. He also has alleged that radioactive debris was vented into the atmosphere.

The Soviets denied the charges.

Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev tried several times to persuade Reagan to agree to a test ban, but the president declined. After a 19-month unilateral moratorium, the Soviets resumed testing in February and have conducted four tests this year.

The United States never interrupted its testing program. Officials say the tests are necessary to make sure American nuclear weapons work properly. Some tests are known to be related to Reagan's drive for a way to shoot down Soviet missiles in space, his Strategic Defense Initiative, also known as "Star Wars."

The two treaties never have been ratified by the Senate. The agreement in Moscow could set the stage for Reagan to send them to the Senate, Adelman said.

The Soviets last month in Geneva suggested the two sides lower the ceiling on the size of tests or limit the number that can be carried out, but Reagan's instructions to Shultz before he went to Moscow directed him to focus on improved verification procedures.

B-1B bomber breaks existing distance, endurance records

ABILENE, Texas (AP) — In what Air Force officials call the most challenging test yet of a B-1B bomber's global mission capability, it stayed airborne long enough to set distance and endurance records for the aircraft.

The plane and its six-man crew took off from Dyess Air Force Base at 9:08 a.m. Tuesday and landed on the same runway at 6:48 a.m. Wednesday. The flight included five mid-air refuelings at 20,000 feet.

The mission lasted 21 hours 40 minutes and covered 9,411 miles.

The previous records of 13 hours 12 minutes and 5,940 miles had been set by a test crew at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., last Oct. 29.

The plane flew as far afield as northern Alaska, where it came within 160 miles of the Soviet Union, Dyess officials said Thursday.

It was the closest a B-1B has ever been to Soviet territory, the Air Force said.

"It was a solid mission that further demonstrates and confirms what a formidable weapons system we have in the B-1B," said Col. Robert E. Dempsey, 96th Bomb Wing commander.

"The B-1B performed superbly and I'm very happy with the preliminary indications," said Col. William A. Hayes Jr., a test director on the flight.

Commanded by Lt. Col. Larry M. Jordan, the B-1B flew north from Dyess over Seattle, Wash., to the northernmost point of Alaska. From there, the plane headed east and southeast to a turnaround point south of the Victoria Islands in north central Canada.

It flew the same route on the trip home, the Air Force said.

"For duration purposes, the mission could have been routed to the South Pacific or to the Carribean, but for these test purposes, we were interested in how the B-1B can perform its global commitment that might very well one day require flight near or over the North Pole," Hayes said.

Other items tested involved maximum gross weight, human factors and overall aircraft performance.

The average flight speed was about 450 mph. The Air Force anticipated the B-1B would have the capability of flying more than 7,000 miles without being refueled, but computer simulation tests have put the actual capability at closer to 5,800 miles.

Texaco changes affiliation decision

HOUSTON (AP) — Texaco Inc.'s legal battle with Pennzoil may be frozen in the courts, but its dispute with a neighborhood gasoline station over the Texaco star ended just a few days after it began.

Last week, the oil company served notice on brothers John and Alfred Artz that their Houston Texaco station was not up to company appearance standards.

Tariffs could double prices, consumer effect said small

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's imposition of $300 million in tariffs on Japanese personal computers, color televisions and power tools could double some prices, but industry and government officials say the cost to U.S. consumers should be minimal.

Reagan, vacationing in Santa Barbara, Calif., slapped the 100 percent punitive duties on the Japanese products on Friday in retaliation for alleged Japanese violations of a 1986 pact governing semiconductor trade.

The action had been expected since Reagan first announced his intention to impose the duties late last month. However, until Friday, the exact products to be subject to the fees were not known.

"The products which in fact they finally selected are fairly competitive. So you're not going to have a major problem in trying to find an 18-20 inch television set that's made in this country or someplace else. It's not going to happen," said Mark Rosenker, a vice president for the U.S. Electronics Association.

"The folks that are going to take the heat on this are strictly the importers, the guys who are making sets in Japan and sending them over here," he added.

The tariffs would not apply to products made in the United States by Japanese subsidies. For instance, Sony color televisions, one of the most popular Japanese brands marketed in this country, would not be hit with the duties because the sets are assembled in this country by Sony U.S.A., a subsidiary. There is no tariff on unassembled TV parts from Japan.

While the action was praised by the U.S. electronics industry, it brought predictable criticism from the Japanese.

The government of Japan said in a statement it was "deeply disappointed" by the sanctions and said it would immediately protest the move to a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade tribunal in Geneva, a 92-nation trading alliance.

"The Japanese government will seek the earliest possible withdrawal of the U.S. measures through constructive dialogue with the U.S. government," said the statement, issued by the Japanese Embassy in Washington.

In Tokyo, the move was denounced as "Draconian" by Shoichi Saba, chairman of the Electronic Industries Association of Japan.

"The U.S. decision defies logic," Saba said in a statement. "Retaliatory actions against Japan will not solve problems relating to the U.S.-Japan semiconductor dispute," he said.

Saba said the move could "stir up protectionism and nationalism in both nations which might lead to a trade war between the United States and Japan."

However, U.S. analysts suggested that a full-fledged trade war seemed unlikely.

"Now that the Japanese realize we're serious, I think that they'll sit down and negotiate a compromise — maybe a voluntary restraint agreement like they have done in the past with autos and steel," said economist Michael K. Evans.

"I regret that these actions were necessary," Reagan said in a statement announcing the toughest trade action taken against Japan since World War II.

"The health and vitality of the U.S. semiconductor industry are essential to America's future competitiveness," he said. "We cannot allow it to be jeopardized by unfair trading practices."

Chris Vinyard, a spokesman for International Business Machines Corp., whose PC Convertible laptop computer competes with a hot-selling model from Japan's Toshiba Corp., said, "upon initial review, the impact appears minor."

Repeating past company statements, Vinyard said IBM continued to believe that negotiation is the best method of resolving trade disputes.

The Semiconductor Industry Association and some U.S. manufacturers, including Zenith Electronics Corp., supported the action.

Semiconductors are the tiny electric chips which are the building blocks of computers and most modern electronic equipment. U.S. seminconductor manufacturers claim they have been losing up to $1 billion a year through deliberate Japanese underpricing of computer chips made in Japan.

Last September, Japan signed an agreement promising to stop "dumping" chips at bargain-basement prices in the United States and in other markets and to grant more access to U.S. chip makers to Japanese markets.

The administration claims that Japan has continued to dump chips in such third-country markets as Singapore and Hong Kong and has done nothing to open its own markets.

The Japanese items hit with the 100 percent tariffs include:

—Desk-top computers capable of handling 16 bits or more, a category that accounts for $130 million of the $300 million in tariffs.

Marketing loan bill revealed

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen is leading a bipartisan group of four senators in advancing a new farm trade proposal aimed at reducing foreign agricultural subsidies and boosting U.S. exports.

The proposal, to be introduced later this month, would require the United States to launch a marketing loan program for wheat, soybeans and food grains unless a new international trade agreement is reached curbing farm subsidies that hurt U.S. producers in the world market.

The plan wouldn't go into effect until 1990, in essence putting other countries on notice that if they don't negotiate an agreement on reducing their farm subsidies, they face the expanded marketing loan system.

Faced with the threat of a glut of underpriced U.S. commodities on the world market in the absence of a farm-subsidy agreement, Bentsen and his Senate colleagues think other countries will be inclined to bargain.

"The beauty of the marketing loan is it is a wonderful trade tool," said Marty Clayton, Bentsen's legislative assistant for farm issues. "It scares everyone else in the world silly because it takes away this price peg they've been piggy-backing."

Marketing loans, which already exist for cotton, rice and honey, provide producers with a payment equal to the difference between a government-set loan rate and the actual market price.

Since implementation of the marketing loan program in 1985, rice exports have risen by 60 percent, while cotton shipments have skyrocketed 300 percent and cut into sales for other countries.

The current U.S. farm policy is tied to a set loan rate for soy beans, wheat and food grains. Farmers who can't sell their produce for more than the loan rate simply keep the loan while the government keeps the commodity and eats the loan loss.

That is often the case, because other countries use the U.S. loan price as a gauge and set their prices just below it. Consequently, stockpiles of farm products being held by the U.S. government continue to grow.

A marketing loan would still offer farmers the same loan rate, but would require only 70 percent repayment. So if a farmer finds a buyer willing to pay from 70 to 99 percent of the loan, he can make the sale and keep the remainder of the loan, which the government will have to digest.

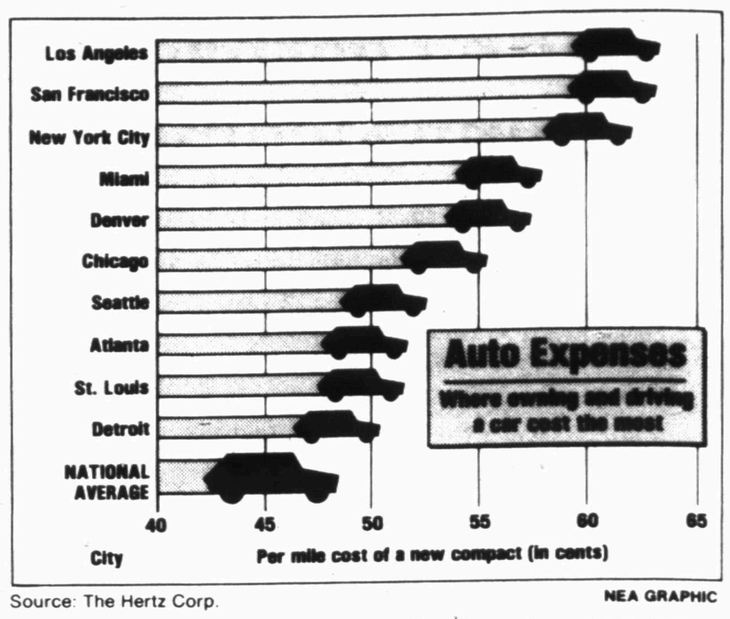

In this way, excess stocks will decrease and the U.S. producers' share in the world market will grow accordingly.

Cost to the government of implementing such a program is estimated to average $1 billion per year for the first four years, then begin declining, according to the Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute, a nonprofit arm of Iowa State and Missouri universities.

Bentsen sees the threat of across-the-board marketing loans as a way to pressure U.S. trading partners into cutting subsidy programs.

"We see great potential in the upcoming round of multilateral trade negotiations for major improvements int he agricultural trading system that will benefit U.S. farmers," according to a letter sent to Senate colleagues by Bentsen, John Danforth, R-Mo., Thad Cochran, R-Miss., and David Pryor, D-Ark.

"Now that the Japanese realize we're serious, I think that they'll sit down and negotiate a compromise — maybe a voluntary restraint agreement like they have done in the past with autos and steel," said economist Michael K. Evans.

"I regret that these actions were necessary," Reagan said in a statement announcing the toughest trade action taken against Japan since World War II.

"The health and vitality of the U.S. semiconductor industry are essential to America's future competitiveness," he said. "We cannot allow it to be jeopardized by unfair trading practices."

Chris Vinyard, a spokesman for International Business Machines Corp., whose PC Convertible laptop computer competes with a hot-selling model from Japan's Toshiba Corp., said, "upon initial review, the impact appears minor."

Repeating past company statements, Vinyard said IBM continued to believe that negotiation is the best method of resolving trade disputes.

The Semiconductor Industry Association and some U.S. manufacturers, including Zenith Electronics Corp., supported the action.

Semiconductors are the tiny electric chips which are the building blocks of computers and most modern electronic equipment. U.S. seminconductor manufacturers claim they have been losing up to $1 billion a year through deliberate Japanese underpricing of computer chips made in Japan.

Last September, Japan signed an agreement promising to stop "dumping" chips at bargain-basement prices in the United States and in other markets and to grant more access to U.S. chip makers to Japanese markets.

The administration claims that Japan has continued to dump chips in such third-country markets as Singapore and Hong Kong and has done nothing to open its own markets.

The Japanese items hit with the 100 percent tariffs include:

—Desk-top computers capable of handling 16 bits or more, a category that accounts for $130 million of the $300 million in tariffs.

Misunderstanding led to fight

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Leslie Negley, the granddaughter of a man who built a construction conglomerate, put up a strong fight to save her sanity, literally.

It was a court battle that alleged Ms. Negley, 37, was being manipulated both by her rich mother and by Ms. Negley's deeply religious, but much-less wealthy, acquaintance.

Ms. Negley now is spending a quiet Easter after a Bexar County probate jury decided she was perfectly fine.

"I do not have a mental illness. I'm just trying to work things out," Ms. Negley told jurors on Friday. "I know my mother's tenacity and when she sets her mind to do something she does it."

Ms. Negley's family wanted her placed in a mental institution to receive treatment for manic depression and her $3 million estate managed by a relative.

The family charged Ms. Negley had lost her mind after she took her daughter out of an East Coast prep school and gave away more than $100,000 in cash and gifts to people she met at a religious fellowship less than two months ago.

Ms. Negley argued that the court battle was only another manipulative tool used by her mother, Nancy Brown Negley Wellin, the daughter of George Brown Sr., one of the founders of Brown & Root Inc.

The jury deliberated less than two hours before agreeing with Ms. Negley.

Her estate, which includes stocks and bonds, has been frozen and most of the money and gifts she gave away had been turned over to the court. "The only crime that she has committed is being a little too generous," her attorney, Bill Berchelmann told jurors in final arguments. "She is not a mentally ill person."

The court battle pitted not only the daughter against mother, but some of Ms. Negley's rich friends against some of her deeply religious friends.

During the three-day hearing, the two groups sat on opposite sides of the courtroom.

One side looked through copies of business journals, while the other side read the Bible and repeatedly whispered, "Amen," during testimony.

Ms. Negley's family snickered during testimony of people who said Ms. Negley was motivated by God to give them cash and automobiles.

It was a legal fight that grew out of a misunderstanding, Ms. Negley testified.

She said her mother began mental health proceedings after Ms. Negley withdrew her daughter from a private school in Concord, N.H.

Ms. Negley said her daughter was having trouble adjusting to the school. She has since re-enrolled in the school, however.

Ms. Negley said she was in a San Antonio hotel room on April 4 when her mother showed up at the door.

"She said, 'I've come to take you away. It's like a country club,'" Ms. Negley said. "Police are out there and they're coming to take me away. I said, 'This is so bizarre.'"

Ms. Negley said she wrestled with three policemen, but was handcuffed and taken to a hospital and initially placed in a padded cell for psychiatric observation.

"I was fighting for my life. I was sticking to my rights," she said.

When asked why her mother began proceedings to have her temporarily committed, Ms. Negley said, "It's more manipulation."

But Mrs. Wellin charged that her daughter, who normally was frugal, was being taken advantage of by David and Elisa Ramos, both 25.

Ms. Negley, an Episcopalian, had met Mrs. Ramos at an interdenominational church gathering two months ago.

Ms. Negley said she had a strong faith and gave her money away because she wanted to.

"I am an individual who loves Jesus and is walking her walk with the Lord," she said.

Between March 20 and April 2, Ms. Negley gave the Ramoses $40,000 and Mrs. Ramos' sister, Maria Medina, $5,000.

Ms. Negley also purchased a $20,000 Camaro for Miss Medina, a $20,000 van for Ramos and a $12,000 sedan for Ramos' mother-in-law, court testimony revealed.

Ms. Negley and the Ramoses also began paperwork to form a corporation called "Kingdom of God and Associates," Ms. Negley said, but declined to elaborate about its purpose. State prosecutors, who have jurisdiction in mental health matters, said that Mrs. Ramos, who accompanied Ms. Negley at various business transactions, was the manipulator.

"Elisa's the bad guy. Elisa's the villain," Assistant District Attorney Jay Norton said. "The question is not religion. It's the people who call themselves religious and use the influence they have."

Berchelmann said Ms. Negley would not be meeting with the Ramoses anytime soon.

"She's tired of this whole thing. She thinks it's been real unfortunate," he said.

Reagan imposes Japanese tariffs

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan slapped $300 million in punitive duties on imported Japanese personal computers, television sets and power tools on Friday, retaliating for alleged violation of a computer chip trade agreement.

Reagan, in his toughest move yet against America's second-largest trading partner, signed a proclamation imposing 100 percent tariffs on four categories of Japanese goods.

"I regret that these actions were necessary," Reagan said in a statement accompanying his proclamation.

"The health and vitality of the U.S. semiconductor industry are essential to America's future competitiveness. We cannot allow it to be jeopardized by unfair trading practices," said Reagan, who was vacationing at his California ranch.

His action, first threatened in March, could double the cost of the items.

The government of Japan said in a statement it was "deeply disappointed" by the sanctions, denied Japan had violated any agreement and said it would immediately protest the move to a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade tribunal in Geneva. GATT is a 91-nation alliance for negotiating trade disputes.

"The Japanese government will seek the earliest possible withdrawal of the U.S. measures through constructive dialogue with the U.S. government," said the statement, issued by the Japanese Embassy in Washington.

Presidential spokesman that Reagan and Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone had exchanged personal letters on the issue just before the proclamation was signed.

Although the spokesman declined to describe the contents of the letters, he did say, "The president and the prime minister are good friends, and I know the president is very concerned about having to take this action." Nakasone is scheduled to visit Washington at the end of this month.

Reagan said the duties were chosen to minimize the impact on U.S. consumers and businesses because the products were also available from U.S. or other foreign producers.

He said the duties would remain in place until the U.S. government had evidence that Japanese transgressions had stopped and "access to the Japanese market has improved."

The penalties are in retaliation for Japan's alleged violation of a 1986 agreement to open its home market to American-made semiconductors, or computer chips, and to avoid "dumping" chips at unfairly low costs in other countries.

While the Americans acknowledge that the Japanese have stopped dumping semiconductors in the United States, U.S. officials contend the chips are still being sold in third countries so they can be resold in the United States at cheaper rates.

Reagan imposed the duties even though he said he was encouraged by recent actions by the government of Japan to improve compliance with the agreement.

Ira FFA members receive district and area offices

During the annual Lone Wolf District banquet held April 14 at the Western Texas College banquet, two Ira FFA members were elected to offices.

Shane Bearden was elected reported and Janna Burrow, who is the retiring district president, was elected as the area officer candidate from the Lone Wolf District. Burrow will be competing against other district candidates for various offices on the area level during the Area II convention which will be May 15 and 16 at Angelo State University.

Kaila Barbee, Ira FFA sweetheart, won the district sweetheart contest during the district banquet and will be competing for the area crown during the area convention at ASU.

New policy might mean more milk

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scientists say a new government policy announced Friday to permit patenting of genetically engineered animal breeds could help produce leaner pigs and more milk from cows, but animal welfare groups see negative consequences.

The U.S. Patent and Trademark Office said it would permit inventors to patent animals produced through gene splicing and a host of new reproductive techniques.

The policy, to be published Tuesday, would make the United States the first country to patent animals. It bans patents of new human traits and continues the policy of finding animals produced through natural breeding to be unpatentable.

The office, which has patented genetically engineered single-cell organisms since a 1980 Supreme Court ruling, has received 15 applications for multicell patents and expects many more because of the new patent protections, said Commissioner of Patents and Trademarks Donald J. Quigg.

A coalition of animal welfare and public policy groups led by the Humane Society of the United States and the Washington-based Foundation on Economic Trends filed a petition with the patent office Friday calling for the policy to be rescinded.

"It's an arbitrary and capricious agency action because the statutes of the patent law were never meant to cover animal life," said Jeremy Rifkin, president of the foundation.

The group is also drafting legislation, which it hopes to have introduced in Congress next week, that would prohibit patenting of animals.

"It's really outrageous for a handful of officials to say all members of the animal kingdom are reducible to the same manufacturing process as an automobile or toaster oven," Rifkin said.

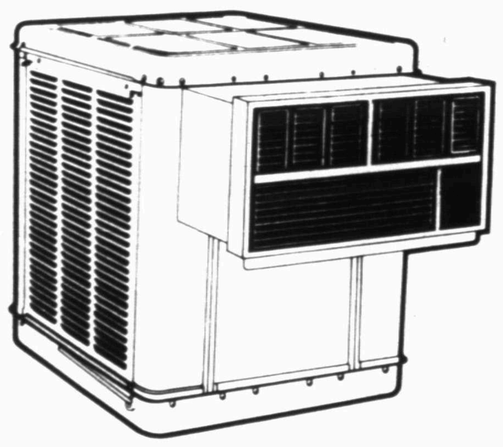

Howard Hawk, an Agriculture Department researcher at Beltsville, Md., said leaner meat, more productive cows and disease-resistant animals could result from genetic experiments.

Ex-college basketball player still loves to play the game

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The walk remains unmistakable.

It is that half-speed, time-can-wait stroll that earned Rich Pokorski a steady assortment of vocal coach's reprimands and the nickname of "garbage man" during his collegiate basketball career at the University of New Mexico.

It has been 12 years since Pokorski played for New Mexico, a 6-foot-7 forward with deceptive slowness who often got his points by rebounding a teammate's missed shot, earning his nickname by cleaning up, in essence, on the offensive end of the court.

Since his playing days at New Mexico, where he scored on 66 percent of his shots from the field as a junior and averaged 13.3 points per game as a senior, Pokorski has, more often than not, continued to be at the right place at the right time.

Doubling as biology teacher and coach, Pokorski guided the Eldorado Eagles to the 1983 state basketball championship after a runner-up finish in 1982. He resigned his coaching duties after the 1983 title year, but still teaches biology and coaches the school's tennis team.

But it is basketball competition that remains the now 33-year-old Pokorski's primary addiction.

As a member of an Albuquerque amateur team mostly comprised of former players from New Mexico colleges, Pokorski continues to play and excel in the sport he did not take up until his sophomore year in high school.

Pokorski consistently has been the leading scorer on an Albuquerque team that through the years has been known as Hot Licks, The Maloofmen and currently Coors Extra Gold.

"Pokorski is probably the best center in Albuquerque," said teammate Tim Downing. "He can average 35 to 40 points a game."

Downing, who will be 38 in November, founded the team under the sponsorship of the late George Maloof, a local businessmen whose family once owned the Houston Rockets franchise of the National Basketball Association.

A former player at Southeastern Oklahoma, Downing, like Pokorski, found his appetite for basketball didn't diminish with the end of his collegiate eligibility. He has played winter and summer league basketball in Albuquerque since 1965.

"It just becomes a way of life," said Downing. "For me it is a release from the aggravation and pressures that go with your everyday job."

For Pokorski, basketball remains a thirst he has not been able to quench.

"I've never gotten my fill of it," he said, "plus I still think I'm quite competitive."

Pokorski, in fact, concedes it was his desire to compete on the court, rather than from the sidelines, that had some influence on his decision to leave coaching after the 1983 high school season.

"I knew when I went in (to coaching) that I would never be a 20-year coach, and I guess I have to admit that knowing I could still play was a factor," he said.

Downing, Pokorski and former New Mexico point guard Petie Gibson are the veterans on the Albuquerque team. Gibson, now 38 and an elementary school teacher in Albuquerque, had 560 career assists as a point guard for the Lobos.

Other longtime members of the team include Chester Fuller, 36; Mike Nied, 36; Bobby Wright, 35, and Bobby Armstrong, 34.

As The Maloofmen, the team consistently won the AAU title during the early 1980s. The team never made it further than regional competition, falling to teams with too much depth.

"The competition is tremendous," says Pokorski. "You see legitimate CBA (Continental Basketball Association) and pro potential players who just never got the right break."

The competition runs virtually year round, with games two and three nights a week. It is a situation, says Pokorski, that allows the wounded little time to heal.

"Injuries are a big factor," said Pokorski. "You're not playing every day like you did in college, and you have no availability to a training room."

For most of the players, the post-college competition and tournaments in high school gyms begins almost as soon as their college eligibility runs out.

Serious solution sought to state budget problem

AUSTIN (AP) — The state budget is a mess. The politicians have been in town since January and have made little headway toward cleaning it up.

Now it's your turn to offer suggestions. And remember, tough times call for creative solutions. The more creative, the better. Today's jokes are tomorrow's solutions.

Case in point: Several years ago, a state senator issued a news release with his prison crowding solution. Put inmates in tents, the senator said. The release elicited some laughs and earned a spot on the Capitol press room bulletin board, which is something of a legislative hall of shame.

It was funny until the idea caught on and turned out to be a relatively palatable solution to a distasteful problem, so don't be discouraged if your idea initially draws guffaws.

Let's prime the pump here with a couple of ideas.

THE NON-LOTTERY LOTTERY — A lottery makes money, but some people with morals do not want the state enticing Texans to fritter away their kids' milk money in hopes of hitting the jackpot.

Here's how the state can make money from a lottery without having one. It's got everything, including a chance to move Yankee money south, like the black golden days gone by.

Instead of using state money to administer a lottery, give that cash, in small bills, to Comptroller Bob Bullock. Once a month Bullock would go to New York to buy tickets in that state's lottery.

Eventually Texas will hit the New York jackpot. New York dollars would flow to Texas. A single win would not solve Texas' problems, but it would help.

Is there anything so American as one state helping another in its time of need?

THE VICTIM PREVENTION FUND — The state now has a Victim Compensation Fund that helps Texans whose lives are touched by crime. But here's a twist that could save money and prevent crime.

Take the $500 million or so the state needs for prison construction, but don't use it to build prisons. Instead, put it in the Victim Prevention Fund. A toll-free number would be set up to field calls from potential criminals.

The caller would have to convince a state official that he or she is capable of committing a crime.

Caller: "I'm heading to the (insert the convenience store of your choice) and I figure I'll get about $124 by robbing it."

State criminal screener: "What kind of gun do you have? Do you have a mask?"

If the screener is convinced the caller could pull off the heist, $124 would be sent to him or her.

The crook is happy. The state is happy. The non-victim is happy.

See how easy this budget-writing stuff is?

David Everett of Austin does.

"The answer to our revenue shortfall is right under our noses. What we need is a state evangelist," Everett said in a recent letter to the Austin American-Statesman.

"This evangelist could promise fiscal salvation for the state and personal prosperity for all its citizens in exchange for hefty donations. The loot from lottery tickets is peanuts compared to what folks are willing to send in to a scripture-laden spellbinder. So let's recruit some money-talkers from the Legislature, launch a televangelical Texas channel, staff the phone banks, start the tub-thumping and put Texas back on the financial map," Everett wrote.

One suggestion to avoid: Do not carp about lawmakers' high salaries. They get $600 a month. Nevertheless, whenever times are tough, the folks back home suggest a pay cut.

"The way we could start balancing the budget would be for all of you to cut your salaries 5 percent," a letter-writer told Rep. Sam Russell, D-Mount Pleasant.

"I sent this lady a copy of my paycheck," he said.

Some ideas leap beyond the creative and outside the constraints of constitutionality.

"I had one that said what we should do with the criminals on Death Row is give them swords and put them in Texas Stadium and sell tickets. He also said maybe we should not give them swords, just let the lions loose on them and sell tickets," said Rep. Keith Oakley, D-Terrell.

Rep. Steve Carriker, D-Roby, said the strangest suggestion he can recall comes from an older gentleman who lives near the Capitol.

"The weirdest thing I've heard is the Gov. Clements plan. That's the seriously weirdest thing I've heard," Carriker said of the Republican governor's plan to balance the budget without further tax increases.

Come up with some creative ideas of your own to send to your lawmakers, and the proposals will be appreciated.

"I love getting weird mail," said Rep. Bill Haley, D-Center.

Mourning fans honor famous wrestler

LEWISVILLE, Texas (AP) — Hundreds of fans filed past the yellow-bannered coffin of Mike Von Erich, paying their last, emotional tribute to the youngest of the three wrestling Von Erich brothers.

As fans mourned the death of Von Erich Friday, Denton County Justice of the Peace Herbert Cunningham announced that the 23-year-old wrestler died of an overdose of Placidyl, a quick-acting, sometimes addictive tranquilizer.

"Von Erich had an overabundance of Placidyl in his blood," Cunningham said, but added that he did not know the level of the drug in the wrestler's body and did not know whether the substance was injected or swallowed.

Although authorities believe Von Erich's death may have been a suicide because of notes discovered in his car and residence, Cunningham has not ruled on the manner of death.

"We just don't know," he said. "We're not making any ruling till we have more information."

A funeral was scheduled for 11 a.m. CDT Saturday at the 2,700-seat First Baptist Church of Dallas, a church chosen for its size by the family, which remembered the crowds at services of another son, David, who died while on a wrestling tour in Japan in 1984.

Though a successful young wrestler, Von Erich's private life was scarred by physical and personal problems before it ended in a sleeping bag in a wooded area near Lewisville Lake.

Officials said he apparently died Sunday, the day after he was released on bond from the Denton County Jail, where he had been held for investigation of driving while intoxicated and drug charges.

His family reported him missing Monday, but it was Wednesday night before his car was found near the lake's shores, and and it was the next morning before his body was found.

At the Dalton & Son Funeral Home Friday night, several hundred people waited for up to two hours to pay their respects.

By 7 p.m., nearly 300 had signed the guest register and filed past the closed casket containing Von Erich, whose real name is Michael Brett Adkisson. They stopped briefly to pray, to leave notes and flower bouquets on a small table and choke back tears.

The silver-steel casket was draped in yellow roses and a yellow banner with the single word "Michael" spelled out in gold glitter.

Viewing of the casket was expected to begin about 5 p.m., but was delayed about an hour so that Von Erich's mother, Doris Adkisson, could spend time alone with her son.

"She's a strong lady," funeral director Bill Dalton said later. "I think she's doing real well."

Family spokesman Tom Pulley said the family had no comment on the autopsy results showing the wrestler had died from an overdose of tranquilizers.

Jan Dalton, son of the funeral director, said fans' phone calls began streaming into the funeral home Thursday and did not let up until about 1:30 a.m. Friday, only to resume again about 6 a.m.

Some callers asked to be put in contact with family members or if they could have time alone with the body. Most, however, wanted to know whether the casket would be open so they could see Von Erich's body.

Several women claiming to be girlfriends called or came to the funeral home, but Von Erich's mother allowed none of them private viewing time. She decided at the last minute that the casket be closed during public viewing, Bill Dalton said.

Many fans pledged to remain loyal to wrestling and to the Von Erich family.

James Knox Polk, the 11th president of the United States, was born in 1795 in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

Rangers falter again; victim of hot Brewers

MILWAUKEE (AP) - Ted Higuera pitched a five-hitter and struck out 12 as the unbeaten Milwaukee Brewers sent 12 men to the plate in a seven-run seventh inning Friday night to beat the Texas Rangers 10-2 and extend their winning streak to 10 games.

The Brewers are one victory away from tying the 1981 Oakland A's for the fastest start by an American League team. The 1982 Atlanta Braves hold the major-league record with 13 straight victories to open a season.

Higuera, 3-0, allowed solo homers to Larry Parrish in the second and Don Slaught in the seventh.

The Rangers lost their seventh straight game and the 1-8 record is the worst in their history after nine games.

Cecil Cooper drove in the go-ahead run n a three-run sixth inning with an infield out and also doubled in another in the seventh. Robin Yount and Jim Gantner drove in two runs each for the Brewers, who played before a roaring crowd of 41,548.

Paul Molitor began the Brewers' sixth against Rangers starter Mike Mason, 0-2, with a walk. He stole second and scored on Yount's line-drive double into the right-field corner.

Yount moved to third on Glenn Braggs' groundout and scored on Cooper's grounder following an intentional walk to Rob Deer, who was running on the pitch to Cooper as the Brewers were able

Snyder ladies secure berth for region golf tournament

MONAHANS – Leslie Light shot a sizzling 69 here Friday as Snyder's Lady Tigers secured a spot to the Region I Golf Tournament, finishing almost 100 strokes ahead of third place in the final 2-4A standings.

Light's 69 was the two-time defending district medalist's best score ever.

"I didn't really think about it. I just tried to take it one hole at a time," said Light, who will place third in the overall medalist race this season because of a scorecard error in the first tournament.

Andrews repeated as the 2-4A champion. The Lady Mustangs, led by district medalist Genny Kovacs, shot a 1,411 over four tournaments. Snyder's 1,440 was next, followed by Fort Stockton, which had a 1,538 - 98 strokes behind the Tigers.

It was the Lady Tigers' second straight year to finish runnerup behind the Mustangs. Snyder went on to take runnerup in the 1986 regionals as well, but aced the field in Austin to serve as Class 4A state champions.

Three Tiger girls made the 10-woman all-district squad. Andrews' Kovacs led with a 330 and was followed by teammate Melissa Northcutt with a 339. Light followed with a 345. Her score included a 120 on a scorecard error in the first district tournament of the season. Had the card been scored correctly, she would have shot in the 80s and repeated as district medalist a third straight time. Tiger player Lea Ann Thompson was next with a 351, followed by Debbie McClain of Fort Stockton with a 357, Kami Sheffield of Andrews with a 369 and Camille Reed of Snyder with a 372. Others were Richelle Stephens of Andrews, a 373; Rene Zamarippa of Fort Stockton with a 374 and Michelle Cox of Big Spring with a

Tigers conclude golf season; place 4th at Sweetwater event

SWEETWATER – Snyder's boys golf team didn't quite reach its goal of finishing fourth in the final District 2-4A standings, but the Tigers did make another good showing here Friday.

The Tigers shot a 330 to finish fourth in the final 2-4A golf tournament - their second best outing of the 1987 season.

Andrews won the single-day, 18-hole event with a 299 and locked up the district championship with a 1,546 overall. Sweetwater, which shot a 315 Friday, will be the 2-4A runnerup and will also qualify for regionals with a 1,631.

Big Spring was a distant third in the race for regionals, posting a 1,689.

Chad Sellars and Mike Trull shot 82s to lead Snyder varsity, which finished seventh overall this season with 1,720 strokes in five rounds of play. The Tigers were just three strokes out of fifth place, shared by San Angelo Lake View and Pecos.

The scores of Sellars and Trull were backed up by 83s from Wade Hatter and Marc McQueen. Ken Meckley shot an 86.

Snyder B-team, or junior varsity, turned in a 408 Friday. Coy Berryman led the group with an 88. Brett Morton shot a 99, Robin Kraatz a 101, Ron Baker a 120 and Mike Forshee a 123.

Season medalist honors went to Andrews' Mark Burgen, who turned in a 74 here and shot 376 for the five rounds. Gym Bice of Andrews was second with a 383, followed by Tony Lara of Sweetwater and Jeff Beal of Andrews, who turned in 385s.

The low 10 players earned all-district honors. Along with Burgen, Bice, Lara and Beal were Gilbert Velez of Lake View, a 398; Michael Torres of Sweetwater, a 400; Chris Sims of Big Spring and Jeff Deitiker of Pecos, 404s; Lance Jones of Andrews, a 407; and Brett Boynton of Andrews, a 408.

Snyder's Trull was 16th overall with a 425.

Lewis' club tops Brownfield Cubs with strong bats, 13-10

BROWNFIELD – Snyder Tiger baseball team scored four eighth-inning runs, then held off a strong Brownfield Cub team to win in non-district action here Friday afternoon, 13-10.

The victory improves Snyder's record to 8-8 overall as the Tigers prepare to resume District 2-4A play again. Snyder entertains Pecos at 8 p.m. Tuesday on Moffett Field.

The Tigers had trailed 8-5 going into the top of the seventh inning here Friday but got a three-run homer from Kenneth Pickering and a single-run homer from David Martinez to take a slim lead. Brownfield came back with a run in the bottom of the inning that sent the game into an extra inning.

Troy Burton singled to lead off Snyder's half of the eighth inning. Sacrifices from Dennis Martinez and Israel Hinojos put the Tiger centerfield at third base, and he scored when Van Echols singled. Next-up Scott Lanier also singled to score Echols, and Pickering followed with an RBI shot moments later. The two-out rally continued when David Martinez collected his fourth hit of the day - a two run double.

The mele put Snyder up 13-9. Brownfield made a rally back at the Tigers again, scoring one run and leaving two on base before relief pitcher Pickering could strike out Rusty Blankenship to end the game.

"I was real proud of the kids, the way they kept battling back," said Coach Albert Lewis. "They played much better. Brownfield has a good baseball team. They get hits off of anybody and I knew they would probably hit us, but the factor of the game was we were able to hit the long ball."

Pickering slammed his fourth and fifth home runs of the season in a three-for-five day and David Martinez belted his first two shots over the fence while going four-for-five. Burton was three-for-three and Echols went two-for-five as Snyder scattered 15 hits during the game.

Pickering picked up the victory, his second in five outings. The big right-hander came in for starter Reynaldo Gomez after three and one-third innings.

Brownfield took an early lead in the ballgame as Blankenship walked and Danny Garza followed with a home run in the first inning. Tony Garcia also walked and scored on a Joe Luis Garcia double.

Snyder got its first runs in the second. David Martinez singled and scored on Brad Gartman's triple. Lee Fletcher then socked Gartman home to make it a 3-2 ballgame.

The Tigers went in front in the third on a two-run homer by Pickering. The advantage didn't last long, however, as the Cubs came back in the fourth to retake the lead, 6-4.

David Martinez's first home run and a couple of scores by the Cubs gave Brownfield an 8-5 lead heading into the seventh.

Withers qualifies for regional track

JAYTON – Brent Withers of Ira soared 12-6 to win the pole vault at the District 10-A Track and Field Championships here Friday and qualify for regional competition.

Withers was the only area qualifier in a meet dominated by larger schools in the district - Rotan, Roby, Jayton and Roscoe.

Hermleigh's Manuel Castillo was third in the 3,200 meters with a time of 11:11.64 while Ira's Michelle Holmes was third in the girl's 1,600 meters with a 6:16.84. Joe Mireles of Hermleigh also placed third in the discus with a 113-4 throw. Only the top two places in each event qualify for regionals.

Rotan won the boy's division with 134 points while Roby took second with 92, Jayton took third with 88 and Roscoe was fourth with 76. Eleven schools entered.

Roscoe edged Jayton for the girl's title, 135 points to 123. Rotan had 115 for third place.

'Horns uncovered violations during football investigation

AUSTIN (AP) - There is no question that apparent NCAA rule violations were uncovered during an investigation of the Longhorn football program by the NCAA and a lawyer hired by the school, University of Texas officials say.

"It likewise is naive to believe that UT and the NCAA uncovered all the of the rule violations that occurred" over the seven-year period from 1980 to 86, UT said Friday.

The university's written comments were in response to 62 allegations in an NCAA Letter of Official Inquiry released March 23. Approximately half of the allegations were "substantially correct," UT said, although mitigating circumstances were noted in some incidents.

Other accusations by the National Collegiate Athletic Association were denied, called not substantially correct or the evidence was said to be "conflicting." The university said other accusations may be correct or could not be determined.

The allegations included 15 loans and gifts totaling $670 to football players, loans of automobiles, excessive spending on prospective recruits, improper contacts with recruits, improper sale of complimentary tickets and the employment of a prospective high school recruit by a university alumnus while the student was still in school.

"It is believed that no UT staff member knowingly engaged in a pattern of willful violations of NCAA rules," the school's 70-page written response said. "Although isolated incidences of rule violations did occur over the period 1980 to 1986, rule violations have been found to be neither flagrant nor common."

UT did say head football coach David McWilliams, then an assistant, provided $50 to a former student-athlete so he could pay for a copy of his transcript to transfer to another school. UT also said McWilliams loaned less than $20 to an athlete to go home, and the loan was repaid.

In addition to the $670 identified by the NCAA as loans and gifts to nine athletes, another athlete was alleged to have received loans totaling $300, the school said. It said that $300, plus more than $300 of the $670, was paid back.

Reasons given for the gifts and loans, the school said, "range from hardship to friendship."

The joint investigation uncovered at least 11 allegations of loans of automobiles to student-athletes, plus one involving several loans of automobiles to the same athlete, UT said.

Many of the loans were to student hosts who were showing prospective recruits around the UT campus, the school said, and "UT has taken appropriate steps to prohibit this practice."

UT said the athletic department would, in the future, register all automobiles "in the possession of UT student-athletes as well as job employers."

School officials will meet with the NCAA Committee on Infractions during its April 24-27 meeting at Hilton Head, S.C. UT would have the option of accepting punishment from the committee or appealing to the NCAA Council.

Suns' Davis admits to more drug abuse

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) - All-Star guard Walter Davis has been suspended for cocaine use while three other Phoenix Suns players could face lifetime banishment from the NBA after being indicted on drug charges.

Authorities said Friday that Suns center James Edwards, guards Jay Humphries and Grant Gondrezick and two former Phoenix players - Garfield Heard and Mike Bratz - had been indicted by a Maricopa County grand jury investigating cocaine trafficking.

NBA Commissioner David Stern, in a telephone news conference, said Edwards, Humphries and Gondrezick underwent drug tests Friday, "and the results should be available on Monday. Any player whose test results are positive automatically will be permanently disqualified from the NBA.

"If the player tests negative, the NBA would have the right to test that player three more times within the next six weeks," Stern said. "If all tests prove negative, the player will be presumed innocent until proven guilty and no action would be taken against him pending the outcome of the criminal charges."

Stern said if any of the players were convicted of "a crime involving the use or distribution of cocaine, he will be permanently disqualified from the NBA."

Suns General Manager Jerry Colangelo announced Friday that Davis "came forward to league officials" and admitted he had become involved again with cocaine.

"He has been suspended for the one game that's left this season (here Saturday night against the Los Angeles Clippers) and will enter a drug rehabilitation center on Monday," Colangelo said. "Walter Davis was not under indictment. His situation falls into the area of relapse."

The 32-year-old Davis, a six-time All-Star and the NBA's Rookie of the Year in 1977-78, is the leading scorer in Suns' history.

In basketball shootout...

Houston wins second 'fight'

HOUSTON (AP) - Houston's Akeem Olajuwon scored 29 points and the Rockets broke from a bench-clearing fight in the third quarter to beat the Dallas Mavericks 121-99 in a National Basketball Association game Friday night.

The Rockets were leading 79-66 when Houston's Jim Petersen and Dallas' Roy Tarpley were ejected for fighting.

Houston's 18-point halftime lead had been cut to seven points earlier in the third period. But the Rockets burst to a 22-point margin, 92-69, going into the final period.

It was the second fight in as many games between the intrastate rivals.

Houston's Steve Harris and Dallas' Al Wood were ejected after exchanging blows in Dallas' 113-107 victory Wednesday night in Dallas.

Prior to Friday's fisticuffs, Dallas' Derek Harper led a Maverick surge that cut Houston's lead to 63-56 after 2:47 of the period.

Harper scored 16 of his game-high 28 points in the third quarter and Sam Perkins added 21 points and 10 rebounds.

Ralph Sampson scored 20 points and Olajuwon also had 10 rebounds and did not play in the fourth period.

The Mavericks took a 6-2 lead in the first quarter before Houston ran off 14 straight points and exploded to a 59-41 halftime lead.

Dallas went scoreless for 4:01 during Houston's surge and the Rockets led by as many as 21 points in the second quarter.

Dale Sveum then extended his hitting streak to 10 games with a double to left, scoring Deer.

Slaught led off the Texas seventh with his second homer. Pete O'Brien then reached on an error and Jerry Browne walked but Higuera avoided further trouble when O'Brien was thrown out trying to steal third as Ruben Sierra struck out.

Molitor doubled home a run in the seventh and scored on Yount's RBI single to center off reliever Dale Mohorcic to make it 5-2. Deer's single to left off Scott Anderson scored Yount. Cooper doubled to right for another run and another scored when Greg Brock was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded. Ganter's two-run single capped the inning.

In a recent survey, representatives of 30,100 stores said they lost almost $1.3 billion in 1985. They attributed 42 percent of the losses to employee theft, 31 percent to customer shoplifting, 23 percent to bad paperwork and 4 percent to theft by the vendors who sell the stores merchandise.

Mutineers give up to guards

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Mutineers led by a former guard of Ferdinand Marcos stormed army headquarters Saturday in a bid to free jailed comrades, but surrendered after loyal troops began firing on them.

Chief of Staff Gen. Fidel V. Ramos said one mutineer was killed and two hostages — one a Navy captain and the other a civilian — were slightly injured after the mutineers stormed Fort Bonifacio in suburban Makati at about 3:45 a.m.

The rebels' attack was aimed at freeing prisoners jailed in connection with a January coup attempt.

Col. Honesto Isleta, chief military spokesman, said 41 mutineers had been arrested. He said this included seven who burst into the sprawling camp aboard a flatbed truck and stormed the stockade, where 110 prisoners were held following the Jan. 27 coup bid.

According to Isleta, 42 of the prisoners left the stockade, and 25 of them joined the mutineers. Seventeen others remain unaccounted for and are believed to have escaped, he said. Isleta said nine military police guards also joined the rebels, who attempted to flee the camp.

When they found gates blocked by loyal troops, they took over the headquarters building, seizing about 50 military and civilian hostages.

Earlier, Ramos had said 13 rebels took part in the initial assault.

Ramos said the mutineers held out amid intermittent gunfire until around noon, when Maj. Gen. Rodolfo Canieso, the army commander, prepared to storm the building.

One of the mutineers told reporters they gave up after a light tank fired a shell at the building. Ramos said an assault force of elite Scout Rangers and elements of the Light Armored Regiment had surrounded the building.

Reporters heard at least two bursts of gunfire after Canieso ordered the mutineers to surrender.

Ramos identified the mutiny's leader as Tech. Sgt. Ernesto Librado, a former member of Marcos' 6,000-member Presidential Security Guard who deserted after a military-civilian revolt swept President Corazon Aquino to power in February 1986.

Mrs. Aquino remained at her residence near Malacanang Palace in Manila, and assistant spokesman Danilo Gozo said she was being briefed on developments. Soldiers deployed at least seven armored vehicles near the palace.

"In the beginning, Tech. Sgt. Librado was very adamant," Ramos said. "But after Gen. Canieso fired a few shots by way of persuasion, the holdouts started coming out one by one."

One of the rebels, who refused to give his name, told a reporter they surrendered after they realized they were outnumbered and outgunned. Reporters saw the group sitting beneath a tree under military guard, but officers ordered journalists to leave the camp.

Ramos said the situation was normal elsewhere in the country. But armed men hurled a grenade at a constabulary camp in Nueva Ecija province 55 miles north of Manila early today, wounding a soldier.

It was unclear whether the armed men were Communist rebels or mutineers or whether the incident was linked to the Fort Bonifacio mutiny.

Col. Emiliano Templo, chief of staff of the capital regional command, said soldiers put up roadblocks at the entrances to Manila to prevent possible rebel reinforcements from arriving.

Before the mutineers surrendered, one soldier told reporters he heard them shout "dead or alive, we won't leave here." The soldier, who refused to give his name, said the mutineers were wearing black arm bands with the word "revolt."

Reporters said some of the mutineers had tattoos with the words "Guardians, Revolt." Members of the Guardians, a military fraternity, were involved in the January coup attempt.

Ramos said he had not determined whether the mutineers belonged to any faction but that Guardian leaders had assured him they were not involved.

Sri Lankan troops search for rebels who killed 122

COLOMBO, Sri Lanka (AP) — More than 5,000 troops backed by helicopter gunships launched a massive search in the jungles of eastern Sri Lanka Saturday for the Tamil rebels who massacred 122 men, women and children.

The troops were ordered "to wipe out Tamil terrorism from the entire eastern Trincomalee district," said government spokesman Tilak Ratnakara.

In addition to the deaths, about 60 people were wounded when a large band of Tamil terrorists waylaid six vehicles — three buses, two trucks and a car full of returning holiday revelers. The terrorists dragged the passengers onto a jungle road and attacked with machine guns and grenades.

Ratnakara said the official death toll rose to 122 from the overnight count of 107. Some newspapers reported the toll was 130.

The attack, at the end of the Sri Lankan lunar New Year, took place near the village of Ayuth Oya, about 115 miles northeast of the capital city of Colombo.

The government said almost all the dead were from the island's Sinhalese majority, but newspapers reported Tamils and Moslems were among them.

Official sources said said 121 victims died of bullet or shrapnel wounds and a 3-year-old boy was killed by a man who swung him by the legs and dashed his head against a tree.

The sources, who could not be identified under briefing rules, said the dead included 35 Sri Lankan soldiers and 10 policemen who were traveling on the buses in civilian clothes.

The search operation in the eastern district, a stronghold of Tamil militants campaigning for a separate homeland, follows a police order Friday night for residents to stay home until dawn Sunday.

The step was taken to avoid civilian casualties. The troops are expected to search a large number of Tamil villages in the jungles, the official sources said.

A census taken before the Tamil separatist campaign turned violent in 1983 showed 223,000 people lived in the Trincomalee district.

The attack brought an abrupt end to a 10-day ceasefire that the government had hoped would help renew peace talks with the militants.

Militants had said they would go along with the ceasefire, but both sides had accused the other of repeated violations.

The death toll was the second highest of any single terrorist attack in the civil war. A total of 157 people, many of them Sinhalese Buddhist monks and nuns, were killed on May 14, 1985, in the holy city of Anuradhapura.

Tamils, who make up 18 percent of Sri Lanka's 16 million people, have been agitating for equal rights and autonomy since 1956 when the government moved to make Sinhala the official language.

Open warfare began in July 1983 after Tamil militants killed 13 soldiers. Rioting erupted and more than 1,000 people were killed.

The Tamils, who are mostly Hindus, accuse the predominantly Buddhist Sinhalese of discriminating in education, job opportunities and language. The Sinhalese are about 75 percent of the population.

Moslems or descendants of colonial settlers make up the rest of the island nation's population.

2 vehicle break-ins investigated Friday

Police are investigating two vehicle burglaries reported in the city Friday evening.

Kelly Sheen of Lamesa filed the first report at 9:43 p.m.

She reported someone had broken into her pickup while it was parked at The Shack restaurant between 8:15 p.m. and 9:35 p.m.

Investigators report it appeared someone had used a burglar's tool to enter the locked truck cab. Listed as stolen were a .45 cal. Colt pistol valued at $500 and a radar detector valued at $270.

A second report was filed by Kathy Voss of Snyder at 11:49 p.m.

She told police a white leather purse and a radar detector were removed from her 1986 Chevrolet Surburban while the vehicle was parked at the Scurry County Coliseum.

No value were estimated for the items taken from the Voss vehicle.

In other action Friday evening, police jailed one suspect for public intoxication and one for driving while intoxicated.

Locally based highway patrolmen logged one arrest for DWI Friday night.

Obituaries

Mary Conrad

Services for Mary Conrad, 88, of Snyder Oaks are set for 10 a.m. Monday at Bell-Cypert-Seale Chapel with the Rev. Jeff Culp Jr. of Waco officiating. He is a Baptist minister and nephew of Mrs. Conrad. He will be assisted by the Rev. Rex Reynolds of the First Baptist Church in Hermleigh.

Graveside services will be held at 4:30 p.m. Monday at the Clifton Cemetery where she will be buried.

She died at approximately 8 p.m. Friday at Snyder Oaks. She was born July 15, 1898 in East Texas. She was a housewife and had moved to Hermleigh 15 years ago from Clifton.

She was a member of the First Baptist Church in Hermleigh. She was married to Julius W. Conrad Dec. 23, 1915 in Clifton. He died July 4, 1969.

She was preceded in death by four brothers.

She is survived by two sisters, Naomi Gleastine of Snyder and Athylene Simmons of Hermleigh; two brothers, Odell Culp of Petersburg and Olan Culp of Meridian; and several nieces and nephews.

subdivision of the Cody addition to the City of Snyder.

The offers represent a recovery of some 33 percent of the taxes owed for each of the four taxing entities.

Commissioners will also be considering two measures affecting the county-operated Hermleigh water system.

One will be repairs to the Hermleigh water tower.

According to Pct. 4 Commissioner Ted Billingsley, the tower's interior is in need of sandblasting and recoating as well as major maintenance work to the main pipe, which is rusted and leaking in several places.

Also on the agenda is consideration of an increase in the reconnect fee for water service in Hermleigh.

Currently, Hermleigh water customers are charged a $5 fee each time their service is terminated and reconnected.

Billingsley said Thursday that an increase in the fee is needed because it "simply costs more than that to cut off and reconnect a customer."

Ira FFA advances to state

The Ira judging teams recently had their best day during area competition held at Texas Tech University.

After the results were given, the poultry, dairy cattle and livestock teams all qualified for the state contest which will be held April 25 at A&M University in College Station.

The wool team also had a fine day, placing second at the highest level of competition offered for this particular contest.

Team and individual results are as follows:

The wool team placed second at Texas Tech, second in district and second in area.

Shane Ballard was second high individual and Shane Bearden was third high individual.

The dairy cattle team placed 10th at Texas Tech, third in district and fourth in area.

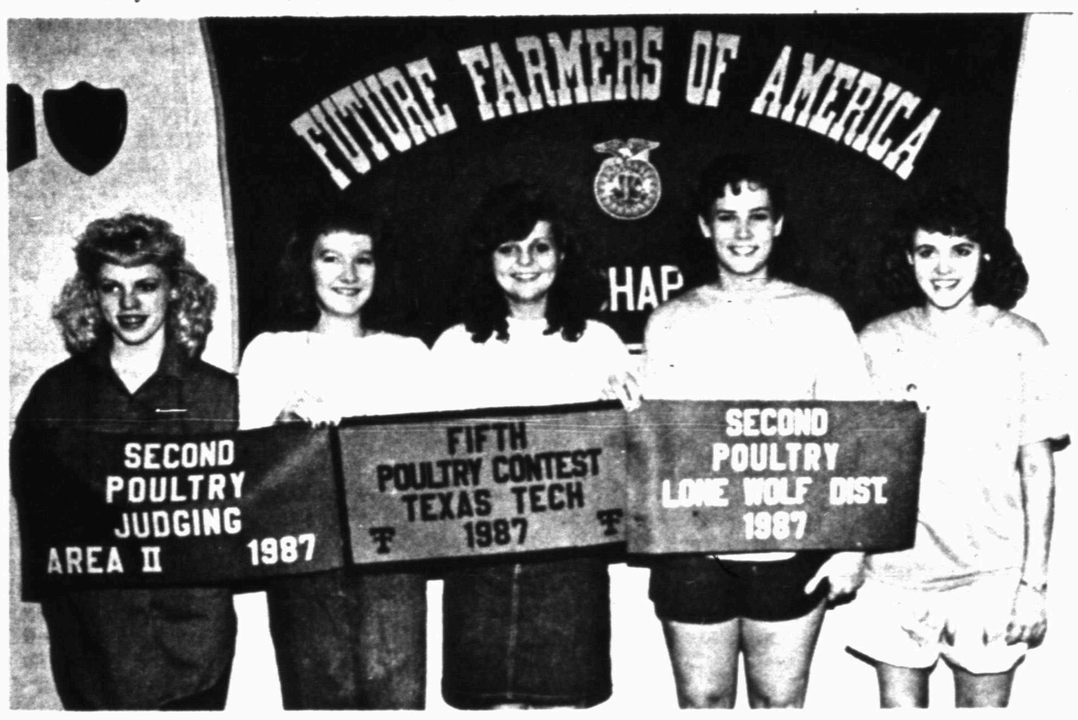

They also qualified for state.

The poultry team finished in fifth place at Texas Tech, second in district and second in area.

Witness denies he recanted story

MIDLAND, Texas (AP) — A key witness in the arson conspiracy trial of a former Ector County commissioner and a former city council member denied Friday that he recanted his original testimony.

A retrial motion filed Feb. 6 by Willie Hammond Jr. and Keith Weddell in connection with their September 1985 arson conspiracy convictions cites the recanted testimony of government witness John Thomas Peterson as the basis for the hearing, which was recessed until May 1.

The motion states that Peterson now denies meeting with Hammond and Weddell and discussing burning the former O'Michael Building, now the Jackson Center, in downtown Odessa.

But in a hearing Friday in U.S. District Court, Peterson denied that he was recanting his trial testimony.

After listening to a tape recording that the defense alleged was Peterson, the witness testified that it was not his voice.

A recess request from defense attorney Warren Burnett was approved by U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton. Burnett said that during the next two weeks he will seek a voice specialist to prove the tape recording is Peterson.

Weddell, 55, and Hammond, 46, were convicted in September 1985 in El Paso of arson conspiracy in the Nov. 25, 1981, fire that damaged the O'Michael Building.

Weddell received a five-year probated sentence and a $20,000 fine; Hammond received a five-year probated sentence, six months in jail and a $10,000 fine.

Both men requested new trials, and in October the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New Orleans denied Weddell's request.

After a hearing in Midland last December on possible government misconduct during the El Paso trial, Bunton on Jan. 16 denied Hammond a new trial. That denial was upheld by the 5th Circuit in an April 13 ruling.

Teachers, warehouse workers share $26 million jackpot

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — Two groups of lottery players savored the joy of sharing Friday as they claimed a record $26 million jackpot in the Pennsylvania Super 7 game on Friday.

"To have it split 49 ways and have 49 happy people, I like that," said Randy St. Clair, who bought tickets for a winning group of warehouse workers.

Twenty-nine people who work at the Benjamin Franklin elementary school in Philadelphia and 20 workers at the Joseph Notarianni & Co. produce warehouse in Scranton had their tickets verified Friday at lottery headquarters.

Lawyers for both groups drew up contracts that all the winners signed to share the wealth. Each of the "Franklin Friends" will get about $13,000 a year for 26 years after federal taxes are withheld while each of the "Notarianni 29" will get $20,000 a year.

St. Clair, 24, of Factoryville, Pa., was in his first week of running the Super 7 ticket-buying program for the Scranton group, which ranges in age from 20 to 74 and includes several retirees.

"I'm happy to share it," he told a news conference.

Marlene Laderman, the school secretary who bought 145 tickets for her group, said sharing was "a lot more fun."

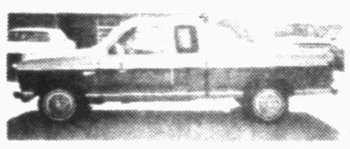

The Notarianni workers got the day off Friday and chartered a bus for the 100-plus mile ride to Harrisburg to have the ticket validated. The ride was quiet, said St. Clair.

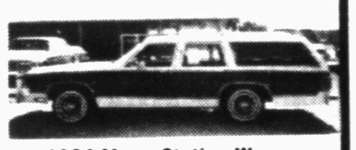

George Harris, 29, of Old Forge, said he and his colleagues felt grumpy during the ride. "We're all hungry," he said.

Courts shifting back to permanent alimony

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Permanent alimony awards are making a comeback to the benefit of women who have been short-changed by "rehabilitative" alimony, family law experts in three states say.

"We're just beginning to see the tide turning back in terms of common sense," said Judith T. Younger, a University of Minnesota professor and former dean of the Syracuse University School of Law in New York.

Short-term rehabilitative alimony, intended to help recipients become self-supporting, proliferated in the 1970s as women battled for equal rights, Younger said. Before 1970, permanent alimony awards were the rule.

"It was like: 'You want equal rights? OK, we'll give you them. You're equal. Go out and work now,'" Younger said.

Younger said excessive use of the short-term alimony was one of the backlashes of the equal rights movement. It continues in many parts of the country today, but the tide appears to be turning, said Younger and Herma Hill Kay, a family law professor at the University of California at Berkeley.

They and other experts cited changes in the law in Minnesota and New York, and court cases in California, Florida, Maryland and West Virginia as indicators of the trend.

The California Supreme Court and lower appellate courts have recently made it clear that permanent alimony should be awarded to women who do not have a real chance to find a job with earning power equal to their former spouse — even if enough short-term alimony is paid to put them through college, Kay said.

Doris J. Freed, a New York lawyer who has written a yearly treatise called "Family Law in the 50 States" since 1977, said this year's treatise will cite cases from around the country that demonstrate a growing frequency of permanent alimony awards. Most of the cases involve women who are divorced after long marriages to financially successful men.

"We're getting back to considering permanent alimony for women when there's no chance of the women coming out as good as the husbands," she said.

Her survey will be published next month in the American Bar Association's Family Law Quarterly, she said.

Freed said New York and Minnesota have amended divorce laws to emphasize the necessity of permanent alimony for women who are divorced after long marriages or who are unable to support themselves at the level to which they were accustomed.

That concern was reflected in an extensive revision of New York's maintenance laws last year, Freed said. The popularity of rehabilitative alimony throughout the 1970s contributed to the "feminization" of poverty, according to official commentary within the revised New York statute.

A 1985 change in Minnesota allowed judges to order temporary alimony only when they are certain the recipient can become self-supporting.

Minnesota Supreme Court Justice Rosalie Wahl said the Legislature has made it clear that rehabilitative alimony is designed for women who have the ability to be self-supporting.

"Rehabilitation is fine for the young women, but when you're dealing with women who have been homemakers for 20 and 25 years and who haven't worked out there in the marketplace ... that's where permanent alimony is needed," she said.

Dear Abby

Heartless Parents Prompt Tearful Cry-Room Scene

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1986 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: Recently, when I was in the "cry room" of my church with my children, a man, woman and their two children came in. Their daughter was about 4 years old and wore very thick eyeglasses. Their son was about a year old. They hugged and kissed their son constantly, while completely ignoring their daughter.

About 10 minutes into the Mass, the mother took the little girl's glasses off of her and said, "You look ugly with those glasses; I'll hold them. Do the best you can without them." The little girl started to cry, begging her mom to give her the glasses, but the mother said, "No, you're not getting them. I don't want anyone to see you with them on."

Abby, it was just pitiful. The girl kept begging for her glasses, then she said, "Daddy, please let me go to live with Grandma." This little girl tried to button her own coat and she couldn't even find the buttons. They bundled up their son and left the cry room. The girl literally had to crawl down the two steps while she was crying. (She couldn't see them.) I had tears in my eyes.

I am so upset. My husband says I should call the priest and tell him about it. I don't know what to do. I'm active in church and don't want any trouble. I pray for this girl every night and think of her every day. Is there anything I can do, Abby?

HELPLESS IN PITTSBURGH

DEAR HELPLESS: Yes. Tell your priest that if he doesn't call in those parents and arrange for parenting counseling, you will report them to the child protective agency. They are guilty of child abuse. Such ignorance and heartlessness must not be permitted to continue.

If you are concerned about "making trouble," please write to me: P.O. Box 69440, Los Angeles, Calif. 90069, and tell me the name of the parents and the church, and I will intervene on that child's behalf. Your identity will be confidential.

DEAR ABBY: Our 20-year-old daughter insists that when one of her friends comes to our house during dinnertime, the friend should sit at the table with the family (my wife, our two teen-agers and myself).

We feel that the friend should wait in the den until we have finished eating. My daughter becomes angry, leaves the table to join her friend in the den, and finishes her dinner after we have finished ours.

Abby, who is right? Should the friend join us or wait in the den?

CONCERNED FATHER

DEAR FATHER: You are. Since mealtime in some families is the only time the family gets together, it shouldn't be interrupted by drop-in guests. Your daughter is out of line. The friend should be asked not to come at dinnertime. And if the friend ignores the request, said friend should wait in the den. Alone.

DEAR ABBY: Could you explain to me what kind of person enjoys practical jokes? A man who works with my husband is obsessed with playing practical jokes on people.

One of his favorite jokes is to drop a lighted cigarette into the hip pocket of his victim's pants. Of course this goes unnoticed until the victim feels it. By that time there's a hole already burned in the victim's pants, and the poor guy also has suffered a burn on his skin.

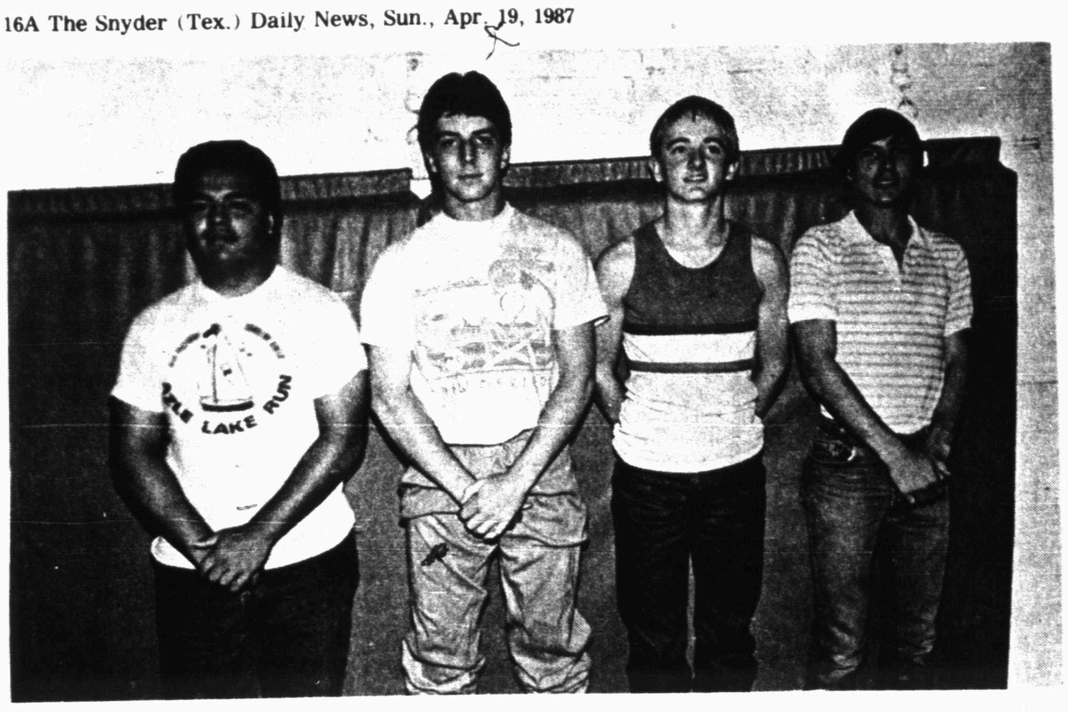

I like a joke as much as the next person, but this doesn't seem a bit funny to me — just weird. Does this man have arson tendencies or what?

NOT AMUSED

DEAR NOT: The man is childish, sadistic and has a perverse sense of humor. He is encouraged in this kind of behavior because onlookers laugh and the victim probably feels compelled to be a good sport and regard it as a harmless joke. It's neither harmless nor a joke. The victim could take legal action against the practical joker. And I hope one does.

Three more men captured in students' hatchet slaying

MONTERREY, Mexico (AP) — Judicial police in the northern border state of Chihuahua captured three men accused of the hatchet slayings of three students and police were seeking a fourth suspect Friday, authorities said.

Meanwhile, the 22-year-old university student who survived the attacks has been released from the hospital, Mario Dominguez of the judicial police in Chihuaua said by telephone Friday.

Dominguez said Javier Diaz Cruz, alias "La Fiera" or "The Wild Beast," and Cesar Antillon Martinez, alias "El Norteno," were captured Thursday in the Sierra Madre Occidenal mountain town of Creel, near where the slayings occurred April 11.

Another suspect, Fidencio Duarte Chavez, was captured Thursday in Cuauhtemoc, about 65 miles southwest of the state capital of Chihuahua city, Dominguez said.

A fourth man, Gerardo Payan, was being sought in the Pacific coastal state of Sinaloa, he said.

Police did not have the ages or professions of the accused on file, Dominguez said.

He said the three were charged with murder and were being held in the state penitentiary in Chihuahua.

Trees are not being replenished very fast

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — The state's $6 billion timber industry is being whittled away at a faster rate than it can be replenished, a Texas A&M University forest scientist warned Friday.

"We must change the way timberlands are being managed today so the industry can expand, but private landowners are hesitant to plant money in the ground and wait 30 years or so for a return," said Jay O'Laughlin, a specialist in forestry economics and policy at A&M.

If such a trend continues, O'Laughlin said the outlook for Texas' forest industry could turn out to be like that for the South's industry.

A study by the U.S. Forest Service notes that as many as 112,000 timber-related jobs in the South could be lost by the year 2030 because of a timber shortage.

Such a shortage also would drive up lumber prices, consequently raising the price of a house and other things, according to some analysts.

Timber amounts to about $6.3 billion a year in sales revenues in Texas and 64,600 jobs, O'Laughlin said.

School board rules that teen cannot represent his school

PORT ARTHUR, Texas (AP) — Port Arthur Independent School District trustees have banned an 18-year-old student who married his 40-year-old former academic adviser from representing his school at some events.

The board voted unanimously to prohibit Todd Colletti from representing Lincoln High School in Office Education Association events.

Colletti, national president of the association, will not be able to attend a leadership conference in Des Moines, Iowa on May 5 because of the board's ruling Thursday night.

The board's disciplinary action stems from a March 7 trip to a state OEA association leadership conference in Houston in which Colletti went on a bus with other students, but returned with Marty Sims.

Ms. Sims is now Mrs. Colletti. The two got married April 6.

Mrs. Colletti was a high school adviser until she resigned earlier this year, before the bus trip. She is the mother of 12, 13 and 21-year-old daughters and has a 1-year-old grandson.

"Them coming down on him this hard at this time is too coincidental to not have anything to do with the relationship," Mrs. Colletti said Thursday.

Superintendent Joe Pitts said school policy regarding school events forbids a student from using anything but transportation provided by the district unless he has written permission from his parents or guardian.

Colletti told the board he became self-supportive when he turned 18 in November and doesn't need anybody's permission. He said he was never told he was violating a school policy.

"There's an old maxim that says silence implies consent," he said.

Colletti has been on the school's golf team and education decathlon team, and can still participate in those events. Before he got married, he was presented the keys to Port Arthur by the town's mayor and earned a commendation from then-Texas Gov. Mark White.

He earned an appointment to the Air Force Academy, but turned it down to get married.

The unusual love story has attracted international media attention, and the couple said they have been beseiged with telephone calls from reporters and talk shows.

"We're not doing any of that," Mrs. Colletti said. "The bell has worn out on our telephone."

Judge sets new date for convicted killer

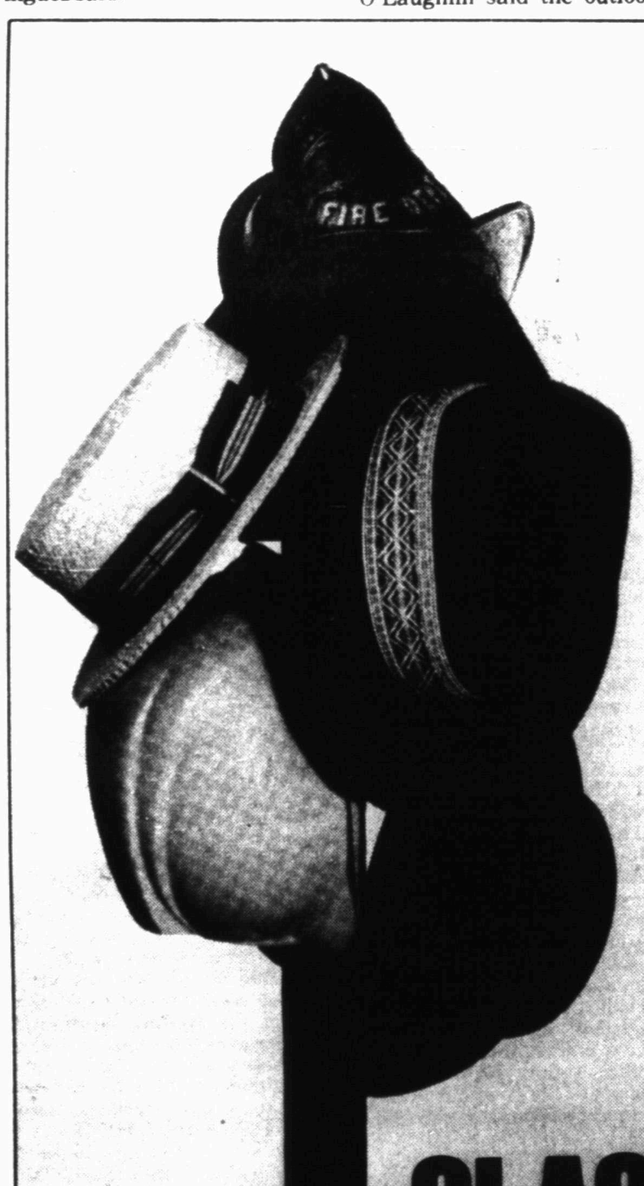

HOUSTON (AP) — A condemned man who won a reprieve earlier this week faces another execution date in the brutal slaying of a 13-year-old girl who was raped, strangled and beaten with a board.

State District Judge Woody Densen sent a warrant of execution to convicted killer Anthony Charles Williams by certified mail notifying him his execution has been set for May 28, the earliest possible date.

The new date is Williams' fourth. He had been scheduled to be executed early Tuesday, but the execution was stayed for 48 hours by the 5th U.S. Circuit of Appeals in New Orleans to allow him time to make his third appeal to the Supreme Court.

Densen said he sent the notice by mail instead of recalling Williams to Houston for a hearing because that proceeding would allow the inmate only the chance to ask for a stay, which the judge said he is unwilling to grant.

"I think there should be some finality in this case," Densen said.

Scurry County Folks...

By Vicki Brown

Winnie Miners of 600 29th St. would like to return home. Although she has resided in Snyder the past two years, she longs to return to the land she considered her own for over 50 years — Zimbabwe.

Born in England in a village near London, Winnie grew up in the country. "My father was a dairy farmer and we lived on a little farm not far from London. We cycled into the village to school. We could catch the train there and travel to London in about half an hour," she said.

Because most women did not pursue higher education in the universities at that time, Winnie attended business college. After passing civil service exams, she served as a secretary with the Ministry of Pensions for some six years. In 1930, she met William Miners.

Also an Englishman, Miners headed to the United States to seek business opportunities in the early 1920s. "He remained there about six years until the depression in 1929," Winnie added.

In 1930, Miners moved to Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) where he established himself as a building contractor. Winnie followed him six months later and the pair married in Cape Town, South Africa.

The couple struggled the first few years due to economic conditions. "The trouble was the Depression followed us there," she recalled.

But Winnie noted the days were "wonderful ones." She concentrated on her three girls — Elsie Anderson, now a mathematics professor at Western Texas College, Betty Russell of South Africa and Margaret Fouroe of Zimbabwe — and on maintaining an efficient household in Salisbury (now known as Harare, the country's capitol).

"I had a servant who took care of most of the housework," the 82-year-old smiled. "That's what I don't like about living here. I've never done so much housework in all my life."

Tradition and her own feelings kept her home. "People like me never left girls alone," she said. "When I got married in 1930, I only knew one woman who went out to work. She had a daughter the same age as Elsie."

With her husband's death in 1958, Winnie brushed up her skills and became a legal secretary in the Federal Ministry of Law. At that time, Elsie had already completed university studies and was teaching, Betty was in her first year and only Margaret remained at home.

"I loved going back to work. But I couldn't have done it if they had been any younger," Winnie noted.

She attributed her daughters' success partly to the government's view of education for all young people. "The government was very helpful with our daughters' education. Officials were very interested in education, particularly for teachers. All three received government grants and were educated in universities in South Africa," she said.

Winnie added that even on the elementary and secondary levels, education is highly stressed. "The educational standards are much higher and more difficult than here."

Her daughters were all "great swimmers and sportsmen" as well as academic achievers. An excellent swimmer, Margaret represented the Federation (comprised of Southern Rhodesia, Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland) in the 1960 Olympic games in Rome. "That was the first Olympics in which Rhodesia had representatives. Margaret was the breaststroke swimmer for the team," Winnie said, adding that her daughter held swimming records that stood undefeated in the country for several years.

Although Rhodesia had been granted independence from British rule in 1923, Winnie noted that the Rhodesian government remained in the control of the country's white minority.

A change in leadership in early 1960 nearly cost her job. "The new president had planned to fire all women over 65 (years old). But my employers asked for a six-month extension until they could find someone to replace me. But I stayed on for years. I think they just forgot me," she laughed.

Africans toppled the federated government in 1980 and the country's name was changed. Although blacks were given priority in the new government, Winnie was retained until health problems forced her retirement and her move to the United States.

Not a newcomer to this country, Winnie first came in 1961 to attend Elsie's wedding. She also visited the couple when they lived in Laredo in 1968 and returned in 1976 and 1982.

"I usually took off about three months (from her job). I spent about two weeks in England first and then came over," she said.

Morning ceremony unites couple

Diana Castillo of Colorado City and David Rios of Snyder were joined in matrimony March 7 at 11 a.m. in Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church. Father Bernard Degan of Sweetwater officiated the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the couple are Mr. and Mrs. Henry Castillo of Colorado City and Mr. and Mrs. Ascencion Rios, Sr. of Snyder.

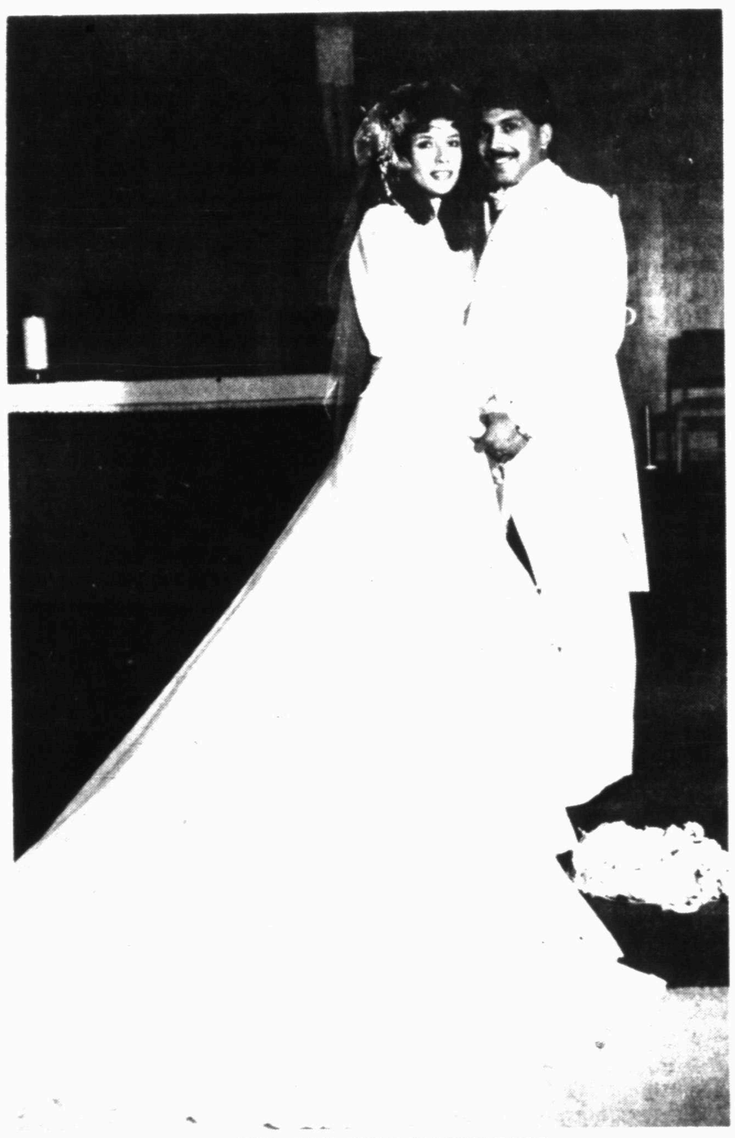

A brass wedding arch decorated the church doorway. Seven-branch candelabra and baskets of pink and white gladioli flanked the altar. Pews were marked with bows of white ribbon.

The "Bridal Chorus" and "Wedding March" were played by Christopher Fuentez of Snyder. Rick Baldania of San Antonio sang "Let It Be" and a Spanish song, "Porgue Te Quiero," ("Because I Love You").

Given in marriage by her father, the bride was adorned in a gown styled of white silk organza and trimmed in silk Venise and Chantilly laces. The high collar and yoke were of Schiffli embroidery. The sheer yoke was embellished with seed pearls. The lower part of the yoke was in organza and was overlaid in Venise lace appliques and pearls.

The low-cut Basque waist was overlaid in a row of Venise lace extending to the back where covered buttons extended from the neckline to below the waist. The full Victorian sleeves had a ruffle of Chantilly lace at the elbow. The sleeves were fitted below the elbow; Venise lace appliques and pearls were joined by covered buttons at the wrist.

The full skirt of sheer organza had a row of Venise lace around the skirt which curved up to large Venise lace appliques at the front, back and sides. A row of Chantilly lace edged the bottom of the skirt which swept to the back in a full cathedral train.

MR. AND MRS. DAVID RIOS

The fingertip veil of imported illusion was gathered to a circlet of pearls which came to a point at the forehead. A long cluster of silk organza leaves embroidered in sequins and pearls was at the side. A pouf bow of illusion topped the veil which was edged in pencil stitching.

The bride carried a cascade bouquet of pink roses and white lilies with tear drop pearls.

Linda Mendoza was maid of honor and Leticia Castillo, sister of the bride, served as junior maid of honor. Each wore a white tea-length gown of satin and lace. They carried single white roses with white ribbon streamers.

The rest of the bridal attendants wore pink tea-length gowns of lace and satin and carried single pink roses with pink ribbon streamers.

Kelly Jasso, niece of the groom, was flower girl. She wore a dress of pink lace and satin and carried a small pink basket with pink and white rose petals.

D. J. Rivera of Colorado City, nephew of the bride, was ring bearer. He was attired in a grey tuxedo.

Daniel Salazar was best man with Alan Lee Mow of San Angelo serving as junior best man. Both wore white tuxedos to match the groom's.

All other male attendants were attired in grey tuxedos.

Ushers were Bobby Velasquez, Isreal Ortegon and Ralph Hernandez.

The best man and maid of honor also served as candle lighters. The unity candle was lit by the bride and groom.

Following the ceremony, a reception and dance was held in the Civic Center in Colorado City.

The bride's table held a four-tiered cake with double-tiered cakes on either side. The entire cake arrangement was assembled on crystal-look plates with transparent pillars.

The side cakes were connected by crystal staircases holding tall taper candles. A flowing fountain seperated the bottom cake layer. Fourteen-inch crystal pillars held the main center cake.

Cascades of pink roses and sweetpeas decorated the cakes. A ruffle design was used to edge them. Roses and rosebuds were scattered throughout the cake decorations.

The top cake layer held a miniature bride and groom. The cake arrangement was designed and created by Mike and Reta Graham who also served.

The groom's table featured a large double heart cake. The chocolate chiffon cake was covered in double fudge frosting and was also created by Reta Graham.

Dance music was provided by Henry Baldania's orchestra from San Antonio.

The bride is a graduate of Colorado City High School and the groom is a graduate of Snyder High School. He also attended Western Texas College.

After a honeymoon trip to Fort Worth and Dallas, the couple will reside in San Angelo where the groom is employed with Skaggs Alpha Beta and the bride is employed at the Sassy Fox Dress Shop.

There's no need to frost this moist cake. The cream-cheese filling bakes right in the cake and takes the place of frosting.

HIDDEN-FROSTING CARROT ZUCCHINI CAKE

Two 3-ounce packages cream cheese, softened
⅔ cup sugar
3 eggs
1 ⅓ cup packaged biscuit mix
2 teaspoons pumpkin pie spice
½ cup shredded carrot
½ cup shredded zucchini
¼ cup cooking oil
1 teaspoon vanilla
Powdered sugar

Grease and lightly flour an 8 by 8 by 2-inch baking pan; set aside. For filling, in a small mixer bowl combine cream cheese and ⅓ cup of the sugar. Beat with electric mixer on medium speed until fluffy. Add 1 egg and beat mixture until smooth; set aside.

In a large mixer bowl stir together biscuit mix, ⅓ cup sugar and spice. Add carrot, zucchini, oil, 2 eggs and vanilla. Beat on low speed for 30 seconds. Beat on medium speed for 2 minutes. Pour half the batter into prepared pan. Spoon filling atop. Spoon remaining batter over filling. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 35 to 40 minutes or until done. Cool on wire rack. To serve, sift powdered sugar over cake if desired. Cut into squares.

WHEAT MEETING

A turnrow meeting on "Wheat Production" will be held Sept. 23 two miles west of Snyder on Highway 180. The program will begin at 10 a.m. on the west side of the Circle In Grocery.

The turnrow meeting will include programs on wheat fertilization, controlling insect pests, identifying freeze damage, and a wheat variety test.

Due to the severe freeze received at the end of March, many producers need to determine the damage to this year's grain crop. Some producers may need to harvest this year's crop by baling or grazing. A portion of the program will be over determining freeze damage in wheat.

The wheat variety test will show comparisons between both traditional and new improved varieties. The varieties in the test include TAM 101, TAM 105, Siouxland, Mustang and Chisholm.

The meeting will conclude by 11:30 a.m. All area farmers and other interested persons are invited to attend.

PECAN AND GRAPE SHORTCOURSE

A shortcourse on pecan and grape management will be held at the Lyntegar Electric Cooperative in Tahoka on Tuesday. The shortcourse will begin with registration at 8:30 a.m. This shortcourse is sponsored by the County Extension Offices in Borden, Dawson, Garza, Lynn and Scurry Counties.

The shortcourse will include programs on establishing new orchards, management of pecans and grapes, irrigation systems and insect control. It will also include a tour of a pecan orchard and a grape vineyard.

All area residents are welcome to attend.

On Oct. 26, 1881, the "Gunfight at the OK Corral" took place in Tombstone, Ariz. Wyatt Earp, his two brothers and "Doc" Holliday shot it out with the Ike Clanton gang. Three members of Clanton's gang were killed. Earp's brothers were wounded.

Good timing solves a problem

By James Jacoby

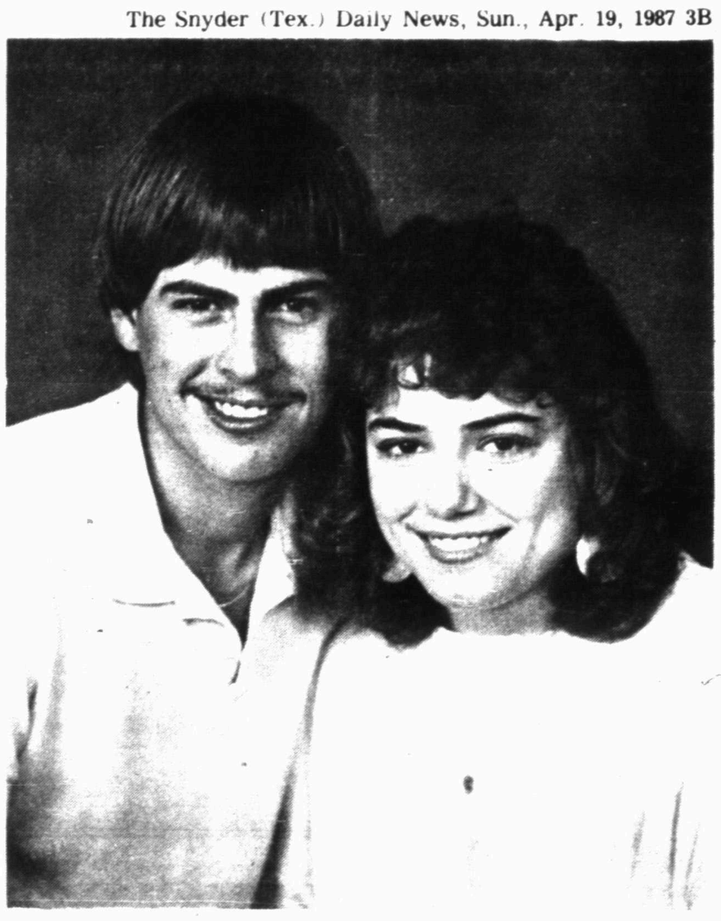

Here is an old-fashioned bidding sequence that we don't often see any more. Strong jump shift by responder North, two no-trump to show a balanced, rather minimum opening, a show of diamond support from North, then some cue-bidding followed by North placing the contract in six diamonds.

Although bidding can be old-fashioned or newfangled, play of the hand remains constant. Whether you're a traditional conservative or a modern bridge scientist, you should know how to take your best chance to make this slam. So cover the East-West hands and give it a little thought before continuing.

Do you see that it's easy to play A-K and ruff a club with the diamond 10, and then play ace and a diamond? Drawing trumps is no problem if they split no worse than 4-2. If diamonds are luckily 3-3, you may even be able to play spades and ruff one, if the ruff is needed to set up that suit. However, if diamonds are 4-2 (most likely) and spades are also 4-2, you may find yourself giving up a spade late in the deal only to see a defender cash the setting trick with a high club. Can that sad occasion be avoided? Sure. At trick two, simply play a low spade and play low from dummy. Give the defenders their trick now, when they cannot do any harm. Whatever they do next, you will be able to proceed as before. After you have ruffed a club and drawn trumps, the rest of the tricks will be yours.

A new book by James Jacoby and his father, the late Oswald Jacoby, is now available at bookstores. It is "Jacoby on Card Games," published by Pharos Books.

Suspended students receive motivation

GREENCASTLE, Pa. (AP) — It's quiet, very quiet, and the only visible sign of life in the green and white trailer is the man sitting hunched over the old, paper-cluttered, wooden desk.

Nine small cubicles, with just enough room to fit one of those desk-chair-in-one deals, fill the room. Six boys, school books in hand, sit inside facing the unadorned, brown paneled walls.

The time was up for one 10th grader who had spent 17 weeks in the Greencastle-Antrim High School's in-school suspension trailer for drinking at the school's first home football game — and he was out of there.

"I'm definitely happy about getting out," said the boy, Allen (not his real name).

Now he could join his regular classes instead of having to report to the trailer every day — where it's no day at the beach.

"We want full cooperation," William Schuchman, the trailer's supervisor, said. "There are no talking privileges and they must work steadily — something that forces them to do their school work."

Among other restrictions, the students aren't allowed in their schools unless Schuchman accompanies them, can't attend school social activities and get only two bathroom breaks a day, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

"It's a better alternative than throwing them out of school, which doesn't really mean anything to them."

Depending on each individual case, middle school and high school students can serve short-term (one to five days) or longterm (30 to 180 days) in-school suspensions for doing such things as smoking, swearing and, as in Allen's case, drinking.

Figures indicate it's a punishment many don't want to experience again. Of the 188 suspended this year, only 43 have been back.

"I do know they don't like it down here," middle school assistant principal Greg Hoover said.

Allen agreed.

"I didn't like not being able to socialize, but while I was in there I stayed out of trouble and after being in there I will continue to stay out of trouble," Allen said. "It's mellowed me out a lot."

Another positive aspect is that Allen's grades took an upswing.

"That's one phenomenon we've noticed," high school assistant principal Jerry Keyser said. "It's a very controlled environment and has had a very positive effect. Basically, that's our concern — to take something negative and turn it into something positive."

Before acquiring the trailer, which the school district put into operation last October, the schools lacked the space needed to accommodate all the suspended students.

"We used the small room next to my office, which could only fit about three students," Keyser said. He added that many times he was in and out of the office, so he couldn't keep an eye on them.

For these reasons many of the students were sent home to serve their punishments.

"It was like a vacation for them," Keyser said. "In many cases both parents work and weren't home during the day."

Something had to be done to make the students realize a suspension was a punishment, and the trailer was the school district's solution.

"The trailer has reduced the number of out-of-school suspensions to almost none," Keyser said.

Schuchman works on a one-to-one basis with each student, Keyser said, by helping them with the assignment their teachers have given them for the day.

"Sometimes all a student needs is that one-to-one," Schuchman said.

Another aspect of his job is to act as a counselor, and he often gives the students assignments on self-esteem.

"We make them aware," Schuchman said, "that they're here to straighten out a problem."

Sight-impaired keep up with daily news

NEW YORK (AP) — At most talk radio stations, background noise is to be avoided. Not so at the In Touch Network, where the rustling of newspapers can be heard loud and clear while announcers broadcast the day's events.

For most of its listeners, it is a welcome sound.

"It reminds them of the time when they could read the paper," says Jasha Levi, executive director of the station.

In Touch broadcasts 24 hours a day from more than 100 newspapers and periodicals — everything from The National Enquirer to the National Review — that cannot be found in Braille.

The station now has more than 275,000 listeners in more than 65 markets around the country who are blind or have other physical handicaps that prevent them from holding a newspaper, such as quadriplegics or the victims of stroke.

Isobel Willcox is nearly blind, but her handicap doesn't keep her from enjoying the New York Times, or such magazines as The Nation and The New Republic.

The station was founded in 1974 by James R. Jones, a 37-year-old stockbroker who lost his sight to a degenerative genetic condition. He had one goal: to provide a free closed-circuit receiver to everyone in the New York area who was "print handicapped."

Jones died in 1977, a year before the station's first broadcast. Jasha Levi, his close friend and executive director of the network, took over. Now, Levi wants to take Jones' goal one step further: he'd like to see In Touch in every hospital and nursing home.

Step-saving discovery! The lasagna noodles go into this layered casserole uncooked; then cheese, sauce and noodles all cook at once. You can use any brand of regular, whole wheat or spinach noodles.

CHICKEN LASAGNA

1 cup cream-style cottage cheese
3-ounce package cream cheese, softened and cut up
10¾-ounce can condensed cream of mushroom soup
1 cup loose-pack frozen cut broccoli
⅓ cup sliced celery
¼ cup milk
1 teaspoon minced dried onion
¼ teaspoon dried oregano, crushed
⅛ teaspoon ground sage
6 lasagna noodles
1 cup chopped cooked chicken or turkey
½ cup shredded cheddar cheese (2 ounces)
⅔ cup boiling water

In a mixing bowl stir together cottage cheese and cream cheese; set aside. In a mixing bowl combine soup, broccoli, celery, milk, dried onion, oregano and sage; set aside. Place 2 uncooked lasagna noodles in a greased 10 by 6 by 2-inch baking dish. Layer with half the cottage cheese mixture and one-third of the soup mixture. Repeat layers of noodles, cottage cheese and soup. Top with remaining noodles, chicken and remaining soup mixture. Sprinkle with cheddar cheese. Slowly pour boiling water into dish around entire inside edge. Cover tightly with foil. Bake in a 350-degree oven for 60 to 65 minutes or until done. Let stand, covered, for 10 minutes. Makes 6 servings.

HARD FACTS ABOUT EASTER EGGS

One of Nature's most nutritionally dense foods may be hiding in your Easter basket, disguised as an egg.

Eggs are a good source of iron, vitamin A and riboflavin which are part of the Recommended Dietary Allowance.

Eggs are considered nutritionally dense because of the large amount of nutrients they provide per calorie. This makes them popular with weight conscious consumers.

They are also light on the budget. By government standards, one dozen large eggs weigh 24 ounces which makes it easy to figure out their cost efficiency. For example, if one dozen large eggs cost 90 cents, that means they are 60 cents a pound, compared to over one dollar a pound for meat and other sources of protein.

Cholesterol levels should also be considered. Eggs are high in cholesterol, which has been linked to heart disease. If your doctor has put you on a low cholesterol diet, just eat the whites as all the fat and cholesterol are contained in the yolk.

To hard cook eggs, place them in a pan and cover them with an inch of tap water. Bring them to a boil, simmer for 20 minutes, then cool immediately. Make sure the eggs are hard after boiling, but over-boiling causes the whites to become rubbery.

Hard cooked Easter eggs will last, unpeeled in the refrigerator, up to one week.

Rosas, Munoz joined in matrimony

Terri Lynn Rosas of Snyder and Robert Munoz of Haskell were united in matrimony at 2 p.m. March 7 in Bethel Assembly of God Church. Mike Foster officiated the double-ring ceremony.

Parents of the bride are Joe H. Rosas and Yolanda H. Rosas of Snyder. Mother of the groom is Susan Munoz of Haskell.

Vows were exchanged before an altar decorated with a heart-shaped candelabrum flanked by candelabra. The altar decorations were completed by arrangements of blue and white carnations. Pews were marked by blue bells with white bows and greenery.

Melissa Alvarado of Snyder lit the candles.

Phillip Hagar of Snyder provided piano accompaniment.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a lace gown with a cathedral train. The fitted bodice was appliqued with Alencon lace and the neckline was outlined with matching lace embellished with pearls. Chantilly and Alencon lace trimmed the puffed Juliet sleeves.

The fingertip veil of Chantilly and Venise lace was accented with white streamers. The veil was attached to a halo of silk flowers and pearls.

Lisa Rosas of Snyder, sister of the bride, served as maid of honor. She was attired in a light blue taffeta gown with an overskirt of ruffled white chiffon. The bodice featured an off-the-shoulder neckline. She carried a bouquet of blue and white carnations with streamers. Her hair was adorned with a flower wreath of blue and white silk roses with blue streamers and white net bow.

Best man was Rudy Cedillo of Haskell.

Melissa Alvarado of Snyder registered the guests.

A reception was held in the church fellowship hall.

The bride's table held the wedding cake and punch with the bridal bouquet serving as the centerpiece. The three-tier white cake was decorated with blue and white roses and bells. Each column had blue curled streamers and white bells.

Servers at the bridal table were Sandra Fulford and Cherie Ortegon, cousins of the bride. Both are from Snyder.

The groom's table was decorated with a two-light candelabrum trimmed in blue flowers and greenery. The groom's cake was in the shape of a double heart with blue icing and white roses.

Melissa Garcia of Snyder, cousin of the bride, served.

The bride is a graduate of Snyder High School. The groom is a Western Texas College graduate and is employed by M System Supermarket in Haskell where the couple is making their home.

Soviet judge living a quiet Florida life

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Sophie Weinbaum doesn't attract much attention, whether she's sweeping her porch or grocery shopping in South Beach. Few would guess this nondescript woman in plain clothing and no makeup was a criminal judge in the Soviet Union.

The 67-year-old Russian immigrant rarely tells strangers about her life. She never laughs, and seldom smiles.

"Who would believe my story?" she asked, standing in the doorway of her modest home.

She speaks without emotion when asked to recall her youth in Russia, escape from Poland, Jewish immigrant camps in Cyprus, life on an Israeli farm, migration to Brazil and, finally, the United States.

"I love Russia, even today, but I don't like the system," she said.

Born in Vinnitsa, Ukraine, she was educated in jurisprudence at Kiev University. After graduation in 1941, she was appointed a criminal judge in an appeals court in Donetsk.

"They taught you quality and justice and all the nice things in school, but when you got out, the boss decided," Weinbaum said. For her, that meant the justice ministry.

Trials she handled were predetermined, she said.

"There was a three-person jury, but it did nothing. It was for show purposes, the same as elections. Everyone was already guilty. The judge decided the sentence by the criminal code."

Because the government needed people to work in Siberia and none volunteered, the work force came from the courts, she explained.

"The trick was not to go to court," she added.

During World War II, there was no discrimination against Jews in Russia, she said. "Everyone was treated the same." Her position as a judge afforded her special privileges, however.

In 1941 when Germany invaded the Ukraine, Weinbaum was evacuated by train to the interior.

While on the train, she met her future husband, Alexander Weinbaum, a Jew who had swum across the Bug River to escape the Germans in Poland.

After their marriage in 1941, he was sent to Omsk to work in a factory. She joined him in 1942 and resumed her career as a criminal judge. Their two sons, Igor and Joseph, were born in Omsk.

At the war's end, Weinbaum's husband wanted to return to his native Poland.

Music lulls insomniacs to sleep

NEW YORK (AP) — For more than 10 years, clinical psychologist Stephen A. Kibrick of Encino, Calif., has been using music therapy to lull insomniacs to sleep.

"Anything but drugs," says Kibrick in Health Magazine. "Most drugs, including alcohol, interrupt normal sleep patterns. Music and other forms of self-induced relaxation promote a more natural sleep, without the harmful side effects common with drugs."

FEATURED THIS WEEK

THIS I CAN LEAVE YOU. By Mamie Sypert Burns.

Mrs. Burns' stories reveal life as it was lived on the Pitchfork Ranch, one of Texas' largest and oldest. Her reminiscences about life there with her husband and grandchildren and the many hired hands needed to run such a spread portray the exhuberant informality of chuck-house meals, the intricacies of relations with and among the staff, and the Forks' grand tradition of hospitality. It is a book that warmly and humorously shows us a kind of ranch life that vanished from the Texas plains when machines came to change the way the big ranches are run.

Employees seek avenues to promotions

NEW YORK (AP) — Clerks, supervisors, managers and professionals share a common struggle in the work place: how to knock down the barriers to advancement.

"It's easy to get trapped in a stagnant job," says career counselor Janice LaRouche in Family Circle magazine, but there are ways to break out. "Take on more challenging work and open the avenues to promotion, responsibility and a bigger salary."

Companies want two different kinds of employees, says LaRouche. They want people who will stick to a boring job and continue to produce no matter how they feel about it. And they want enterprising risk-takers who respond to challenges. This second group gets the promotions and becomes the managers.

Vows repeated in Ventura ceremony

VENTURA, CALIF. — Shirley Ranay Raschke of Snyder and George Preston Scifres of Hamlin were united in marriage at 10:30 a.m. March 7 at the Ventura Courthouse in Ventura, Calif.

Parents of the bride are Mr. and Mrs. Loyd Raschke of Snyder. Parents of the groom are Mr. and Mrs. Ronald C. Carter of Hamlin and Bobby W. Scifres of Abilene.

The bride was given in marriage by her brother, David Raschke.

Tammy Roberts of Camarillo, Calif. served as matron of honor with Gordon Roberts acting as best man. Tandy Roberts was flower girl.

The wedding reception was hosted by Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Roberts of Camarillo.

The bride is a 1986 graduate of Snyder High School and attended Western Texas College. She is employed at K-Mart in Thousand Oaks, Calif.

The groom is a 1986 graduate of Hamlin High School. He also attended Western Texas College. He is employed by L.M.I. Construction in West Lake, Calif.

The couple is making their home in Camarillo, Calif.

with the Andersons, Winnie has encountered some difficulties. Language has created some barriers for her, even though Americans speak English.

Words used in both countries often have different meanings. "What we called cakes, here are cookies. At home, cookies were called biscuits," she explained to illustrate her point.

Pronunciation has also proven to be a barrier as well. "I don't understand a lot of the people because some of them have such accents and I'm a little hard of hearing."

Because she never learned to drive and because some health problems hinder walking long distances, Winnie is sometimes lonely. "Mostly I miss the company. I could go where I wanted to by bus during the day and visit my friends," she added.

She hopes someday to return to England to visit a brother and sister there and to return to Africa to see her daughters and grandchildren.

Trading calories can help keep weight off

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — One way to lose weight without feeling that you are cheating yourself is to trade calories from one meal to the next, says a food industry expert.

"Try eating a light meal at lunch, such as a salad, when you know you'll be going out to dinner," says Donna Higgins, director of Del Monte Kitchens. "That way you can enjoy yourself without gaining weight."

Higgins says weight gain is "a matter of calories consumed vs. calories burned. Reducing the amount you eat without skipping meals will do more to take weight off than a crash diet, and it is a technique that can be used anytime."

APPROACHING MARRIAGE — Mrs. Carolina Ybarra wishes to announce the engagement and approaching marriage of her daughter, Mary, to Jon Goodwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. Bobby Goodwin. Vows will be repeated June 20 at 7 p.m. at 37th Street Church of Christ. (Private Photo)

Singing said to be helpful emotionally and physically

CARSON, Calif. (AP) — If you don't sing, you may be missing out on an important aspect of life, says Dr. Hansonia Caldwell, dean of the California State University, Dominguez Hills, school of humanities and fine arts.

"The American culture places music primarily as an appendage to its lifestyle. Some other cultures make music and art a central part of their lifestyles," says Caldwell, who is also director of the Dominguez Hills Jubilee Choir at the university.

Singing can provide an intense emotional release, she notes. It is a communication tool through which people can express emotions.

"Music with words tends to be heightened language," she says. "It takes the impact of language to a higher level, at which the language makes a greater impact on the person experiencing it and the person hearing it."

Singing also provides a means of expression beyond the narrow confines of speech, she explains. The melodic line gives shape and deeper meaning to the words.

This is why popular music tends to focus on themes that have significance to the ordinary person, such as love and sorrow, she observes. The words of a popular song may make such an impression on listeners that they may hear only the melody and not the harmony or rhythm.

"It's really not the music, it's the marriage of music and words that grab people's attention," she says.

The unifying effect of music and singing can be used in physical as well as emotional therapies, Caldwell points out.

"If you have to move your arm up and down, it's easier to do it to music," she says. "The rhythmic aspects of music are frequently used as an organizing tool. That's why you see the army marching to a rhythm."

Beyond providing an emotional escape mechanism, singing can also enhance your physical well-being, Caldwell says.

"When you learn to sing, you learn how to breathe properly. You learn what's going on inside of you. You can feel your breath coming in and out."

A singing session promotes proper breathing and relieves tension, she adds. "I work with amateur choirs," she says. "They come in after work at 7:30 p.m. and they are exhausted. But within five minutes of rehearsal they are transported outside themselves. It stops them from centering on their hurts. Nobody cares if your feet hurt while you sing.

"Mentally, singing provides still other benefits. One reason music is used in elementary school is because it's an attention-focusing device. Because it's enjoyable, it leads to the expanding of a person's attention span."

Singing in a choir setting also teaches youngsters collaboration and cooperation, she adds.

Caldwell, who believes singing should be a home activity, suggests turning off the radio news stations and using that time more productively in singing.

"As you listen to news, your blood pressure goes up," Caldwell says. "When you listen to music and you sing, your blood pressure goes down. Singing gets your psychological state at a more peaceful level."

"Mr. Philbin will see you now."

"Hey, great! How you doing Renaldo? I just came by to pick up my income tax return from you and your secretary said you might want to see me. So, what's the GOOD news? Hah! Only good news, see?"

"Please sit down."

"I'd really like to, but I left the car running and I'm trying to squeeze in some errands. Just lay the old return on me and I'll amscray pronto, hookay?"

"You're feeling well?"

"Great! Super! Couldn't be better. Except that undertaker look you're wearing is starting to make me a little nervous. Shadetree, old pal, what's on your pointy brain?"

"I'm afraid I have news."

"Wait, don't tell me. It's no problem. I haven't been expecting anything back from Uncle Sammie in years and years now."

"It's a little more than that."

"You mean I owe money? Hey, it couldn't be that bad. I mean, the income's the same as last year. We lost a few deductions, sure. Retired a few bills, lost interest and stuff like that. But that's called getting ahead, isn't it? The old American way. Moving on. All that."

"You experienced a capital gain."

"Say what?"

"A capital gain. You sold a house."

"I remember that. And it only took me five years to do it. We called it the old rat hole because of all the money we poured down it. So what? You know how many sheckles I made off that so-called deal. Nada, nintay. I let the guy have it, for goodness sakes."

"We had been depreciating it as rental income."

"So?"

"When you figure in its principal balance at the time of assumption, you experienced a capital gain."

"You told me that already. Can we stop tap dancing for a minute here? So, I wind up owing the government some money. What are we talking about, two little digits, three little digits?"

"More than three."

"We're talking MORE than three little digits. Then that would be four, wouldn't it? I mean, surely it can't be more than four?"

"No."

"Well, thank the Lord for some small favors. These four little digits. I can assume they have a '1' at the left hand side?"

"Closer to '2,' actually. Although, not quite."

"Ahh."

"Yes, that's correct.....Can I get you something?"

"Ahh."

"Water. A soft drink?"

"Ahh."

"Could I call someone for you? Your wife...a friend?

"Bahh-Ahh."

"I'm sorry. I'm having some difficulty understanding you. Perhaps if we loosened your collar."

"Bahh-Cahh. Ca Ma Bahh-Cahh."

"Could you please repeat that?"

"CA MA BAHH-CAHH!"

"Oh. Call your banker. Of course."

Country Life

By Deanie Francis Mills

I have a friend who, whenever we speak on the phone long-distance or she writes me a letter, always asks, "Have you stopped to smell the roses lately?"

I understand, like the young people say, "where she is coming from." After all, the woman wears a bullet-proof vest to work every day of her life. She is a police officer who works the late-evening shift in a particularly rough area of a large metropolitan city. My friend cannot go into or out of her house without activating and deactivating a complex security system. She measures distance from place to place in minutes, not in miles. "We're only ten minutes from such-and-so freeway," she'll say, that can take her so much farther in so many fewer minutes. My friend drives fast and talks tough, because that's what it takes to survive.

In spite of our wildly divergent lives, we are kindred spirits, my friend and I, and that's why she always asks, "Have you stopped to smell the roses lately?"

She knows that, like her, I tend to push myself too hard, handling a dozen hot irons at once and hoping I can juggle them without dropping them all, knows that I would not forgive myself if I dropped even one. She worries that our lives will become a blur that we won't even be able to remember very well one day. That we will get so very busy with our work and worries that we will fail to slow down even long enough to press a flower to our faces. So she asks me that question as a reminder to herself, not to take life for granted.

And I always smile when she asks it.

I smile because, what my friend will never understand is that, when you live in the country, it is almost impossible NOT to "smell the roses" each and every day of your life. You would have to be a total recluse not to. Farm animals and plants do not take care of themselves. Someone has to tend to them. And there you are, right in the middle of the roses, so to speak.

The other morning, for example, I went out to feed the horses in the midst of a misty rain. At first, all I noticed was that it was cold and miserable, but then, I made myself stop and listen. Just listen. There is nothing quite as soothing as the sound of raindrops patting the earth and plants ever so softly. Then I took off my cap and turned my face to the sky — it had been a long time since I'd tasted raindrops on my tongue. We get so grown-uppy, it seems, that we deny ourselves some of God's simplest pleasures, all under the fuzzy disguise of "dignity."

And is there any place cozier than a barn in the rain? The musty, dusty smell of hay mingles with the crunching of the horses with their feed while the cats put on a slapstick comedy of hide-and-seek. Peace creeps into your soul, crowding out distractions.

And all because of the bother of taking care of a simple, daily country chore.

Other times I might walk across a field in the evening with my husband to "check on the oat patch," and hold hands in silence while the sun pulls the curtains of night over the sky. Or follow along behind the kids as they excitedly show me a rock "bridge" they constructed over a stream. Or stretch back in the porch swing with a cat in my lap after an intense four-hour session at the computer, working the kinks out of my shoulders while listening to the birds argue.

My friend leads an exciting life and loves her job in spite of the danger. She possesses the vitality and energy of the city, the curiosity, the irreverance. Like me, she's that odd mixture of the cynic and the romantic. I love her like a sister, but I don't envy her. Not at all.

Because I'm not sure, in spite of her best intentions, if she would be able to recognize a rose, even if she had the chance to smell one.

FIVE YEARS AGO

Mike Reed was elected president of the Snyder school board during the board's annual reorganization last night — April 13. G.A. Parks Jr. was elected vice president while Dr. Leslie Butler — elected to the board April 3 — was sworn in as the newest member.

Jane Ann Billingsley, Snyder freshman, was named queen of the 1982 WTC NIRA Rodeo in ceremonies opening the intercollegiate event last night — April 15 — in the Scurry County Coliseum. Dave Appleton scored the first points for the WTC rodeo team, posting a 68 in the bareback bronc riding.

John Billy Koonsman and Carl Williams were named Conservation Rancher and Farmer of the Year at the annual Upper Colorado Soil and Water Conservation District Banquet last night — April 19.

10 YEARS AGO

Mrs. Jay Huckabee was installed as president of Texas Garden Clubs Inc. in formal ceremonies in Houston last night — April 14. Others representing Snyder at the organization's 49th annual convention were Mrs. F.G. Sears, Mrs. S.L. Terry and Mrs. Gene Best.

Mrs. Edith Whatley McKanna of Fluvanna was the recipient of the first McLaughlin Award given at the annual chamber of commerce banquet Friday night — April 15. The award was established this year to honor the late Claire and C.T. McLaughlin and to recognize a local resident for outstanding contributions to the oil industry. Also presented Friday for the first time was the Mayor's Award in memory of the late William A. Vestal, recognizing outstanding contributions to the City of Snyder. Roger B. Mize was named winner of the first Vestal Award.

15 YEARS AGO

Reggie Baker has been named valedictorian and Vicki Smith salutatorian of the Fluvanna High School Class of 1972. Baker, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Bill Baker, will finish his high school career with a 96.48 grade point average.

SDN Week in Review

SUNDAY
April 12

Snyder's Taco Villa has changed its name to Texas Taco, it was reported Sunday, but staffers indicate no other changes are planned at the Mexican food restaurant.

Officials with Dickies Work Clothes Rental Service said recent rumors that the company is closing down the services it offers here are unfounded, but indicated there is a possibility the industrial cleaning aspect of the Snyder operation might be phased into the Abilene plant and a second Dickies facility located in Odessa, it was reported Sunday.

MONDAY
April 13

An election to decide consolidation of the tax collecting duties in Scurry County cannot be called by county commissioners, the court was informed Monday.

The court indicated the issue could be decided by a vote of the people, but that the route to such an election would involve a petition rather than an order by the commissioners.

A random drug testing program for individuals serving felony probation terms is to be implemented here.

Scurry County commissioners Monday approved the purchase of a used refrigerator and supplies for the plan. It will be administered through the adult probation department headed by Larry Thompson.

According to Thompson, the tests will be carried out on a random basis for those probationers for whom the court has made testing a condition of their probation.

An annual longevity pay raise for maintenance, grounds and secretarial staffers at Western Texas College was eliminated Monday.

The change was implemented by the WTC board by amending a pay policy which affected WTC workers listed as "classified" employees.

Dr. Harry Krenek, WTC president, characterized the amount as not large, saying Tuesday it ranged from $84 to $196 per year.

TUESDAY
April 14

The Christian Student Center located on the campus of Western Texas College will reopen next fall as ownership of the facility is assumed by 37th Street Church of Christ, it was reported Tuesday.

The center has been closed this school year, but current plans are to restart the operation by Aug. 1 as ownership of the building is assumed from East Side Church of Christ.

The news was greeted happily in Snyder Tuesday morning that Gov. Bill Clements had signed into law legislation allowing the private construction and operation of prisons.

Miller Robinson, who heads the economic development committee which has lobbied for Scurry County as a potential site for such a facility, called it, "very positive stuff."

"We feel like this greatly increases our chances," he said.

Snyder ISD has joined with a statewide group hoping to convince state legislators that further cuts in state funds for public education could "devastate the quality" of Texas public schools.

The Snyder school board Tuesday voted to join in the "Save Our Schools" movement, being spearheaded by the School Finance Symposium, an organization composed of 36 associations and organizations "concerned with education."

WEDNESDAY
April 15

The first article in a series of three was run Wednesday detailing the problems and responsibilities of local staffers with the Children's Protective Service.

The series was used as a lead-in to the annual Child Welfare Board meeting due here Monday.

THURSDAY
April 16

District Judge Randol Stout of San Angelo denied two defense motions Thursday in a pre-trial hearing there for Amanda Lynn Miles.

Miles, 20, is scheduled to go on trial April 27 for capital murder in local 51st District Court in connection with the March 1986 shooting of a Snyder convenience store clerk.

Motions filed by defense attorney Peter Sheridan of Sweetwater Thursday included a routine motion to quash the indictment under which Miles is charged and a motion to reopen the hearing on the voluntariness of statements she gave police following her arrest in April of 1986.

Sidelighting Thursday's performance was the crowning of two rodeo queens. Dee Ann Marr and Jo Ditt Danley were presented as WTC Rodeo Queens for 1987.

The Upper Colorado Soil and Water Conservation District honored W.J. Fuller as its Conservation Farmer of the Year and Van York as the Conservation Rancher Thursday at the district's annual banquet.

FRIDAY
April 17

A passion play Friday night, a candlelight service Saturday evening and an early morning sunrise service Sunday were three special Easter events planned this weekend by Snyder churches and announced Friday.

The passion play was a product of the Snyder Ministerial Alliance. It concluded the alliance's observance of Holy Week.

"How Great Thou Art" by David T. Clydesdale was presented. It involved some 65 singers, instrumentalists and actors from six Snyder churches: Colonial Hill Baptist, First Christian, First United Methodist, Lighthouse Assembly of God, First Presbyterian and St. Elizabeth Catholic Church.

Letters to the Editor

To the editor,

Just who are these people who call themselves "Concerned Citizens?"

I don't know what kind of group these people are, or what they are trying to hide by remaining anonymous. What they ARE trying to do is to stop the progress of our city.

We need the prison!!

In the April 12 edition of the SDN, they suggested searching for industry such as a glove factory. Now there's a winner. I'm sure that will add a lot of good jobs and increase the tax base. HA!

Live in the real world, people. We need a lot of jobs and this prison is most likely the best answer.

Thank you.

Ronald Keith

To the editor,

In 1986, when we were trying to get an import fee on imported oil, about 1,500 people signed the petition. If we could get these people and others to write our state officials saying we want a prison in Snyder, it might help our chances of getting one. When you drive around town and see how many places of business are shut down, you can realize how much we need some type of business project to help Snyder.

Your Birthday

Sunday, April 19, 1987

You have excellent chances for important achievements in the year ahead, provided you are not too self-serving or selfish. Helping others succeed will contribute to your own success.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Try not to do anything out of character today that could cause companions who hold you in high esteem to begin questioning their judgment. Major changes are ahead for Aries in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Usually your hunches are worthy of consideration, but today they could lead you down a dead-end street. Logic is an effective substitute.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) This could be one of those times when you're better off doing business with strangers than with friends. Conduct business as business.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) It's your prerogative to change your mind as often as you like, but today, if you abuse the privilege, it could cause friends to throw up their hands in dismay.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) If you don't appreciate people who go out of their way to be helpful today, they probably won't be available should you need them again.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Risky financial ventures are no-nos for you today, regardless of how appealing or potentially profitable an acquaintance predicts they will be.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be mindful of your mate's needs today. Don't unthinkingly do something that seems trivial to you, but could be upsetting to him or her.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Guard against tendencies today to take on more assignments than you can comfortably manage. Your patience may not be equal to your industrious zeal.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Spending lots of money is no assurance you'll have a good time today. In fact, pleasurable pursuits with tiny price tags are apt to be the best.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In your involvements with family members and relatives today, be careful how you handle delicate issues. A lack of tact could trigger tears and tantrums.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You'll pledge others to secrecy today. But should word leak out, it's likely that you'll be the one who spills the beans.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Unless you structure your day in advance, you'll probably waste time, money and energy spinning your wheels and going nowhere.

Your Birthday

Monday, April 20, 1987

Before starting new ventures in the year ahead, complete, to your satisfaction, those already in motion. Reap the old harvest before sowing new seeds.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Minimize your involvements with strong-willed associates today. You won't appreciate those who try to chart a course that you don't wish to follow. Major changes are ahead for Taurus in the coming year. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions today. Mail $1 to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 91428, Cleveland, OH 44101-3428. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Unfortunately, you have a knack for putting your foot in the glue today. Be extra careful you don't create problems for yourself that could be circumvented.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) If a friend notes your curiosity about a complication he is trying to sort out today, he may use your interest as an excuse to shift the burden onto you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) In delicate career situations today, think in terms of "we" and not just "me." If you're too self-centered, someone might saw off the fragile limb upon which you're sitting.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You won't get the results you're hoping for today if you try to force your ideas on co-workers. Let everyone think for himself.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Be extremely wary today of propositions that offer you "pie in the sky." Proposals of this ilk are more likely to be just a piece of burnt crust.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Try to comply as best you can to the unreasonable demands of your mate today. You can muffle rumbles that might otherwise occur.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Associates will only emulate those they admire. Today, if you expect to inspire perfection in others, you'd better set the right example first.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Guard against tendencies to be too frivolous with your resources today. Don't bet on long shots, whether they're horses, stocks or people.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) You won't tolerate anyone who tries to boss you about today, yet ironically, this might be the tactic you'll attempt in your dealings with others.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Strive to be a charitable listener today. If you are unwilling to hear the other guy's point of view, you can bet your bottom dollar he'll tune you out as well.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be careful you don't go into a hole today trying to keep up with friends whose budget is more elastic than yours. Live within your means.

Alcohol makes problems worse

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT — My husband's blood pressure was 210/90, so the doctor gave him Dyazide caps and Catapres. He drinks anything he can. Will this hurt him?

DEAR READER — I assume you mean that your husband is inclined to consume alcohol in excessive quantities. Beer, wine and liquor could be major reasons for his hypertension. He should stop drinking, under a doctor's supervision, to see if his blood pressure falls.

The alcohol probably is hurting more than his blood pressure because of its toxic effects on the brain, liver, heart, muscles and kidneys. If he refuses to stop drinking and claims he has no problem, go to Al-Anon to discover ways in which you can handle the situation so that you won't act as an "enabler" to his drinking — or make yourself suffer or feel guilty because of his behavior.

DEAR DR. GOTT — What is the best over-the-counter medicine to use for jock itch?

DEAR READER — In my experience, Tinactin is the most satisfactory over-the-counter remedy for fungus infection of the groin. Tinactin is marketed both as an odorless, clear liquid and as a cream. Use as directed, and if the skin irritation doesn't improve within a week or two, see a doctor for prescription medicine.

DEAR DR. GOTT — We post all of your articles on the bulletin board at our senior center. What can you tell us about the drug Cavinton?

DEAR READER — Don't post this one, because I don't know what Cavinton is. The Physician's Desk Reference does not list such a product. Any help out there?

DEAR DR. GOTT — My children are in school and day care. There seems to be an increasing number of scabies cases. Is one treatment adequate? Should the whole family be treated? If you have body lice, should you be treated for head lice, too? Can scabies be transmitted from animals to humans?

DEAR READER — Scabies is an excruciatingly itchy, contagious skin disease that is caused by a small parasite called the itch mite. The mite is passed by close contact from infected humans or domestic animals. It burrows into the skin and lays eggs. When the eggs hatch, two to four months later, the itching begins.

The infection is easily treated with a prescription lotion, but it can readily recur if the person is re-exposed to the mite.

Head lice are different. These are small parasites, visible to the naked eye, that suck blood. Body lice lay eggs in the seams of clothing and migrate to the body for supper. Crab and head lice live in hair, where they lay eggs on the hair shaft. Lice probably cause itching because their fecal pellets are irritating. Lice are passed from person to person or from articles (like combs, clothing and bedding). As with scabies, prescription lotions and shampoos are very effective in killing the parasites. However, lice can be re-caught within hours of treatment.

In school and day-care environments, where the spread of mites and lice is virtually unavoidable, all the children must be checked and, if necessary, treated to prevent reinfection from a "reservoir" individual.

Dr. Gott's new Health Report on MENTAL AND EMOTIONAL ILLNESS describes the different types of illnesses and the treatments available. For your copy, send $1 and your name and address to P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Be sure to mention the title.

The real things are hard to find

You won't be given a failing grade if you believe that Coca-Cola is no longer the Real Thing. The new Coke certainly isn't, nor is Classic Coke. Actually, neither was not-so-old Coke. Coca-Cola isn't the real thing anymore — or, at least it isn't the ORIGINAL thing — and it hasn't been for some time.

For the past 15 years, Ira Shannon, of the University of Texas Dental Branch in Houston, has been testing the sugar content of brand-name foods. In 1983, Coke contained a blend of glucose and fructose (from corn syrup) — and sucrose (from cane sugar and beets). The blend was 10.9 percent of the contents and gave a particular taste (that many people remember as "sharp") to the beverage.

When, in 1985, Shannon tested the new Coke, he found that it contained 11.9 percent corn syrup, with no sucrose whatsoever. An analysis of Classic Coke revealed a 10.9 percent sugar content (like the 1983 sample) — but, again, no sucrose. Then the investigator tested a batch of "old" 1985 Coke and got the surprise of his life: no sucrose.

There's no old-fashioned Coca-Cola left. The change came about when bottlers were permitted to add more corn syrup; they no longer had to add sucrose, which had given Coke a distinctive flavor.

Ronald Coleman, a spokesman for the Coca-Cola Co., says that Classic Coke is "the same product" as the one sold before 1985. However, the scientists proved him wrong by demonstrating that Coke is now sucrose-free; its taste, say many consumers, is not as good as the old "secret syrup" used to be. That's change for you.

While we're on the subject of edibles, you might be interested to know that there have been momentous changes in diets for diabetics. People with high blood sugars are still prohibited from eating refined (simple) sugar, but they are being encouraged to eat more complex carbohydrates, such as starches and pasta.

Once upon a time, diabetics had to watch carbohydrate consumption. Today, scientists tell us that carbs are good. Rather than restricting starches, diabetics are being advised to eat more of them — and of the fruit sugar, fructose. The current dogma is that diabetics should reduce their intake of fats; picky diets are out, more normal low-cholesterol diets are in.

As if this weren't enough, Dr. Victor Herbert, an internationally recognized nutrition expert at Mount Sinai School of Medicine in New York City, recently received a spate of letters responding to an article he wrote in Science magazine, which stated that the "highest frequency of colon cancer occurred in a sample of women eating the most cereal fiber."

This is contrary to the belief that fiber reduces cancer risk — but Dr. Herbert was correct. He simply was reporting on a study from Australia that was published in the Journal of the National Cancer Institute. This study also confirmed an increased risk of colo-rectal cancer in women who consumed alcohol, and a higher incidence of bowel cancer in men and women who ate large amounts of protein.

Sometimes, if you swear by the experts, you will get so confused that you can't win. No more real Coke? Diabetics eating starch? Fiber causing cancer? Is nothing sacred?

The obvious solution to dietary dilemmas is to take nutritional advice with a grain of salt — but hold on. A recent article condemned even the lowly low-salt diet for hypertension. The authors contended that patients with high blood pressure need to restrict their intake of salt even more stringently and that NO salt was a must.

Here we are, in a free society, being bombarded from all sides by expert opinion based on valid studies of human nutritional requirements. How are we supposed to react to the deluge of facts that pours from laboratories?

The REAL answer, I suppose, is to exercise moderation in our habits and to exercise moderately. We don't know all the answers and we have to trust that scientists, through trial and error, eventually will come up with the truth. During these confusing times of change, however, a little common sense should go a long way. Balance is what we need in our lives — balance in diet, work, play or stress.

Those individuals who are propelled to extremes will become victims of the latest fad theory and may kid themselves into thinking that there is one inalienably correct way to live. I say: Trust the scientists to put things right sooner or later — and, by the way, if you have a can of pre-1985 Coca-Cola, don't drink it. It may be worth its weight in gold.

Send your questions to Dr. Gott in care of this newspaper at P.O. Box 91369, Cleveland, OH 44101-3369. Due to volume of mail, individual questions cannot be answered. Questions of general interest will be answered in future columns.

Sheriff to allow jailers to return

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Bexar County Sheriff Harlon Copeland has backed off on his decision to fire four detention officers in connection with the March 30 escape of convicted killer Karl Hammond from the county jail.

Copeland announced Thursday that three of the four jailers will be allowed back to work. The decision was made after Copeland met with the guards and their lawyer, William F. McQuillen.

Copeland said officer Michael A. Ramirez could return to duty immediately with full back pay as well as Sgt. Manuel J. Filoteo, who will have to forfeit the back pay as part of a 15-day suspension for which he will be credited with having already served.

The third and youngest officer, David F. Mills, 24, will not be allowed back on the force immediately but will be allowed to be rehired in a year, Copeland said.

The fourth officer, Sgt. Mecaela Herrera, a 20-year veteran, was not allowed to be rehired, the sheriff said.

Copeland fired the two rookie jailers and two veteran sergeants April 1, claiming at the time that they "were in the practice of leaving the door (through which Hammond escaped) open in violation of my direct order."

There is no proof that eating too much sugar in itself causes diabetes. Overweight seems the largest factor in developing diabetes. It is estimated that your chance of developing diabetes more than doubles for every 20% your body weight is above the recommended level.

Agents seize marijuana cache

FALFURRIAS, Texas (AP) — Four dogs in training with the Border Patrol had been on duty only one week when they sniffed out a cache of marijuana worth $1.3 million hidden in a truckload of iced cabbage, officials say.

The early morning bust at the patrol's checkpoint here brought six months of seizures by the McAllen sector to $74 million worth of drugs, more than agents in South Texas seized in all of the past four years, said sector Chief Silvestre Reyes.

In their first week of training, the dogs helped agents in 15 other seizures amounting to 2,019 pounds of marijuana worth $1.6 million, Reyes said.

He said heavy drug activity along the U.S.-Mexico border between Brownsville and Rio Grande City helped convince federal officials to assign the Belgium Melnois dogs to his sector in a pilot program unique to the Border Patrol.

The sector is the only one in the Border Patrol to be using drug-sniffing dogs, Reyes said.

The 18-month-old dogs spent three months in training in San Antonio before arriving in South Texas, where they have been assigned to the patrol's checkpoints in Falfurrias, Sarita and outside Rio Grande City, Reyes said.

Officials probe allegations against Border Patrol agents

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — Officials are investigating allegations that Border Patrol agents burned a shack in Mexican territory and shot and wounded a Mexican minor, authorities say.

In the first incident, Jose Luis Mesa Villalobos, a Mexican citizen, claimed Border Patrol agents burned a wooden shack Sunday night he had built in Mexican territory about 25 meters from the U.S.-Mexico border.

The shack was near Sunland Park, N.M., a small community on the outskirts of El Paso and the site of a horse-racing track.

"We have received that allegation and it is being investigated," said Gustavo De La Vina, deputy chief Border Patrol agent for the El Paso sector. "He (Mesa) called it in Monday. He spoke to me."

De La Vina said the Office of Professional Responsibility, an independent agency within the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service, is in charge of that probe.

The Mexican consulate in El Paso is aware of the allegations, said consular officer Lopez.

"We know about the incident and we have conducted an investigation," said Ms. Lopez. "We have spoken to the gentleman (Mesa) on the telephone, but he still has not signed a complaint."

In the other incident, which allegedly occurred March 12, Octavio Romo Chavez, 17, and an unidentified cousin were detained by Border Patrol agents near the Rio Grande and ordered back into the Mexican side of the river.

Debbie Nathan, a member of the League for Immigration and Border Rights Education, a local group involved in immigration matters, said Romo's cousin "was making 'senas' (signals)" at the agents and one of them shot Romo in the leg.

Enrique Buj Flores, Mexican consul in El Paso, ordered consulate officials to question Romo about the accusations, said Ms. Lopez.

"The case then went to the (U.S.) Department of Justice and the FBI in El Paso," said Ms. Lopez.

Gary Webb, FBI spokesman in El Paso, said that agency is investigating the shooting incident, but declined further comment.

Larry Granelli confirmed that his office is investigating the burning shack incident.

Bluebonnets have not suffered from weather

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Late freezes and low rainfall haven't beaten down the bluebonnets growing along the Texas highways, says a Texas A&M University horticulturist.

Dr. Ed McWilliams, who has been keeping an eye on two bluebonnet species in three Central Texas counties, says tourists looking for a beautiful drive shouldn't be alarmed.

Bluebonnet trails will be as blue as ever for the rest of the month, depending on rain, because roadsides are seeded with the same type of bluebonnet that survives as far north as Oklahoma.

But fields of certain native bluebonnets in central and southern parts of the state aren't likely to seed this year. Some fields of blue from the sand variety have faded away — burned by the frosts, McWilliams said, especially in Brazos, Grimes and Robertson counties.

"While the flowers can survive under considerably drier conditions than we have now, they can't survive freezing temperatures in late March and early April," he said.

End-of-March frosts in Central and East Texas damaged the sand bonnets significantly more than the other species. The texensis variety seems better adapted to colder temperatures, and fared much better overall, McWilliams said.

"I've looked at them from Sherman to Dallas to Waco to College Station and they're all doing well. There's relatively little damage."

The texensis is the better known of the two varieties and usually found along the highways and is generally the bluebonnet people plant in yards.

It is difficult to distinguish the two species, McWilliams said, but the texensis usually has a white tip on the flower stalk and leaves that come to a sharper point.

The flowers shed their seeds in May and early June, he said. The seeds germinate with the coming of the cool, rainy fall weather in late September or early October and form a rosette in December; they grow vigorously in mid-February and March and then flower in April.

The cycle tends to occur a week later in North Texas and a week earlier in South Texas, McWilliams noted.

Dear Abby

Paper Deliverers Need Prompt Payment in Order to Carry On

By Abigail Van Buren

© 1987 by Universal Press Syndicate

DEAR ABBY: I know you have addressed this problem in the past, but please, just one more time.

I am referring to dodging the paperboy when he comes to collect. We live in an affluent neighborhood — not a house in the area is under $150,000. Wouldn't you think these homeowners could come up with $9 a month to pay the paperboy? These kids get up at 5:30 a.m. to deliver their newspapers — rain, shine or snow. I know; my son has a paper route. You wouldn't believe the excuses he hears when he tries to collect for his route! The most insulting is when he hears the parent tell a small child, "Tell him we're not home!"

Abby, please tell these people that those kids get paid very little for the service they give. And by the way, if the customer doesn't pay, the paperboy is stiffed!

Also, a 50-cent tip or a dollar tip per month wouldn't break some of those folks. How much do they tip a hairdresser or waiter?

MILWAUKEE READER

DEAR READER: Yes, I have addressed this problem many times. In fact, I have a honey of a plaque on my wall from "the 2,450 Sacramento Bee newspaper carriers" in appreciation of a letter I published on June 22, 1981, asking my readers to please pay their carriers promptly. And by the way, all carriers are not "boys" — neither are they "kids." There are girls and adults, too. Thanks for reminding me to remind people who have their newspapers home-delivered to pay their carriers — promptly!

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Could you please check with your experts and find out the following:

1. If a patient wants to stockpile his own blood before an operation, how much time does the hospital need to set things up?

2. If a patient has stockpiled his own blood, and the blood is not needed, can it be turned over to the blood bank to be used by someone else?

SIGN ME CONCERNED

DEAR CONCERNED: According to a spokesperson for the American Red Cross, only a physician can order blood to be stockpiled. Some operations may require a month to collect the amount of blood needed.

Yes, the blood can be used for another patient, but only if the donor signs a release.

DEAR ABBY: You have often been asked how to word a wedding announcement when the couple wants no gifts.

I just received this announcement from dear friends. Both had lost their mates and now they are married. I thought their reference to gifts was worthy of publication. If you agree, please share it.

GRACE VON KOSS, BIRMINGHAM, MICH.

DEAR GRACE: I agree:

We respectfully request
no gifts.
We have everything we need.
Now we have each other.

Who could ask for anything more?

Banks in control of Kendavis Co.

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — The bankrupt Kendavis Holding Co. and one of its main subsidiaries has been taken over by management installed by the company's 21 creditor banks.

Brothers T. Cullen Davis, 52, and Kenneth W. Davis Jr., 61, remain in control of some 50 other subsidiaries that account for most of the energy-related conglomerate's revenues, their lawyer says.

Lawyer John Flowers told the Dallas Times Herald Thursday's events could be reversed by a federal appeals court.

"It's a very complex situation," said Joseph Freeman, the consultant installed at the holding company by creditors Thursday.

"At the moment . . . I am chairman of the board of the holding company and the Davises remain in their offices as officers and directors of the various subsidiaries. Usually, when someone else takes control of a company, the directors leave voluntarily," Freeman said.

John Blinn, the lawyer representing the creditors, said the Davis brothers could be asked to surrender control of the other subsidiaries but said he doubted they would.

Kendavis Holding and a handful of its subsidiaries was forced into involuntary bankruptcy in February 1985 by a group of banks owed nearly $500 million by the diversified company.

The transfer of control over the Fort Worth-based holding company and of Kendavis Industries International, its management and financial arm, was first ordered by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert C. McGuire last November in an unusual approval of a creditors' plan for reorganization.

The judge earlier had rejected the Davises' own reorganization plan.

The ruling in favor of the creditors is being appealed by the Davis family in federal court.

U.S. District Judge Joe Fish last month affirmed the creditors' reorganization plan. And last week the judge refused to prevent the creditors from taking control of the company while the appeal is decided.

Control of the 18 other Kendavis subsidiaries will remain in the hands of the Davises even though the holding company has controlling interest in them, he said.

The Kendavis conglomerate is a leading manufacturer of an array of oil field equipment and specialized industrial vehicles. The companies control the largest number of energy drilling rigs in the world.
