Presidential poll

As presidential politics heat up, few things are certain, other than an abundance of surveys and polls measuring the relative appeal of the candidates.

Released Saturday, the latest nationwide poll by Time Magazine and CNN shows Perot ahead of Bush for the first time in a three-way race for president.

Do you think West Texans' opinions are the same?

Assuming George Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot were all on the ballot, and the election were held today, for whom would you vote?

Let us know at the Reporter-Telegram Cityline COMMUNITY PULSE poll. Dial 560-2400, then choose category 7660 to register your vote.

Callers are invited to register their opinion as well as leave a comment on the candidate of their choice.

The survey lines will remain open until midnight Wednesday, and the results will appear in Friday's edition.

Skydiver dies

STANTON — A Lubbock skydiver, jumping for the third time at Martin County Airport, fell to his death Saturday night when he failed to open his parachute, Stanton police said. Christopher McMeens, 29, was jumping with four other people. McMeens jumped second and made no attempt to open his parachute, police said. Another skydiver followed McMeens in an attempt to locate him. McMeens was pronounced dead at the scene. /2B

Thief steals 'bluff'

LUBBOCK — Officials say the theft of a sculpture by Abilene artist Emily Jennings could jeopardize a program to display art in city parks. The stolen sculpture is one of five pieces in an exhibit installed in March titled "Blind Man's Bluff," said Fine Arts Center director Connie Gibbons. The piece, which depicted a boy's head, painted blue, was taken late last week from a park. "All five pieces were set up by sliding them over poles. Whoever stole the piece just lifted it up off the poles," said Ms. Gibbons, who added that the missing art weighs less than 100 pounds and measures 8-feet-by-6-feet.

Iran-Contra prosecutors turn attention to Reagan

WASHINGTON (AP) — Iran-Contra prosecutors are trying to persuade two key former Cabinet members to cooperate in investigating former President Reagan and a possible coverup of an arms shipments to Iran, sources close to the probe said Sunday.

But lawyers for former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger and former Secretary of State George Shultz told prosecutors that their clients have no information suggesting a coverup involving Reagan or anyone else, said the sources, speaking on condition of anonymity.

Texas dolphin deaths puzzle marine experts

By Roberto Suro
N.Y. Times News Service

GALVESTON — Since the beginning of March the carcasses of 120 Atlantic bottlenose dolphins have been found in the network of bays that extends less than 100 miles along the Texas Gulf Coast in the highest concentration of deaths of these mammals known in the United States.

Scientists know wnere the animals died and when, but the identity of the killer is an environmental mystery that could take months to solve.

And with carcasses still being found, experts say this marks the first time there has been such high mortality among dolphins in sheltered waters. They say that such

Bush eases EPA's limits on pollution

■ Proposed rule would allow companies to increase toxic chemical releases without notifying the public.

Keith Schneider
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Handing industry its second victory over the Environmental Protection Agency in a week, President Bush has decided to allow companies to increase emissions of pollution without notifying the public, administration officials said Sunday.

If, as expected, the proposed pollution rule is adopted, officials of environmental groups said they were likely to challenge the regulation in court.

Drafted to carry out the 1990 Clean Air Act, the pollution rule is one of at least a dozen important regulations that the EPA and the White House have been fighting over since the law was enacted in November 1990.

Led by Administrator William K. Reilly, the EPA argues that the law was a mandate from the public to aggressively cut toxic air pollution.

Industrial executives argue that the law's provisions are too costly, and they have enlisted the President's Council on Competitiveness, led by Vice President Dan Quayle, to insure that the law's regulations are written in such a way as to reduce their costs to business.

The battle over allowing companies to increase toxic air pollution above their permitted level has been the most heated so far.

Reilly argued that the 1990 Clean Air Act specifically requires the public to be notified and to have an opportunity to make comments if a company increased the levels of toxic air pollution above the levels authorized on their operating

OAS tightens squeeze on Haiti

NASSAU, Bahamas (AP) — The hemisphere's foreign ministers on Sunday tightened the economic and diplomatic squeeze on Haiti, where a military-backed government has defied their call to reinstate President Jean-Bertrand Aristide.

The officials from the Organization of American States also planned sanctions against Peru, but put off a decision when President Alberto Fujimori said he would go to Nassau to plead his case.

Fujimori arrived late Sunday. He made no public statements, moving quickly to a private suite for closed-door meetings with OAS officials. He was originally scheduled to speak tonight, but his speech was put off until Tuesday to give time for private talks.

Climb from poverty is now more difficult, studies say

By Sylvia Nasar
N.Y. Times News Service

In the continuing debate over the distribution of wealth and income — the richest 1 percent of American families control more wealth than the bottom 90 percent — one school of thought says findings like this, however extreme, do not present a true picture.

In this view, largely conservative, these data are flawed because they are mere snapshots of a single moment in time and fail to reflect the constant ebb and flow of fortunes.

Even if the raw numbers are accurate, these economists say, the portrait fails to capture the amazing fluidity and flux of American society, the hard-scrabble beginnings of many a millionaire, from Bobby Bonilla to Ross Perot.

And the richest person in America these days is not a Rockefeller or a Du Pont but

Disease advocates merge sickness, politics into clout

Sheila Swanson founded a cancer network.

WASHINGTON — Sheila Swanson's second career as an in-your-face political agitator began after she learned she had cancer in her left breast. Again.

CURE ME FIRST

It was a "second primary," a brand-new tumor unrelated to the one she had survived in 1979. The first time she had the lump out and got on with her life. This time she got angry.

Swanson had both breasts cut off, quit working as a nurse and vowed to do everything she could to make sure her daughter and other women's children would not have to go through this, too.

"I looked at my life and said I have to make some sense out of getting this disease a second time. I decided I had to become outspoken and not be one of the silent women," said Swanson of Saratoga, Calif.

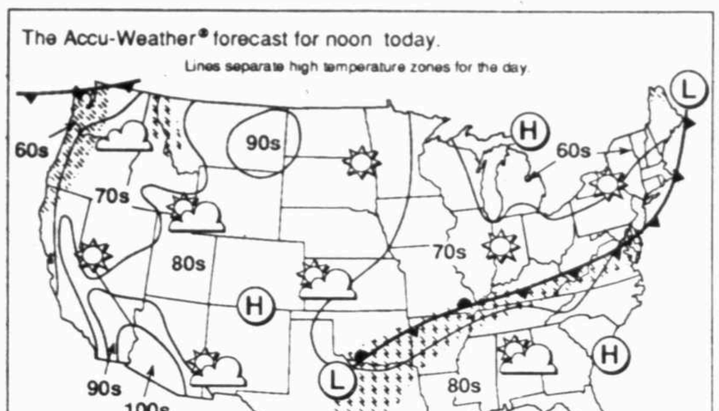

So with a friend, she founded the Bay Area Cancer Network in 1990 and set to work waking up the world. About the same time all over the country, lots of other people — and not all of them women — got the same idea.

Dozens of groups have sprung up: people with prostate cancer, people with kidney cancer, relatives of people

WEATHER SUMMARY

Chance of rain, 80s ahead

Staff report

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with a 20 percent chance of rain, a high in the lower 80s and east to southeast wind at 10 to 15 mph. Tonight should be fair with a low in the upper 50s, according to the National Weather Service in Midland.

Tuesday should be mostly sunny with a high in the mid-80s.

After an overnight low of 54 Sunday's high reached 85 compared with the record high for that date of 97 set in 1978. The record low for that date is 45 set in 1986.

STATE

An upper-level disturbance that dumped more than 10 inches of rain in some parts of South Texas over the weekend was expected to produce more strong thunderstorms, forecasters said Sunday.

Flooding from widespread showers and scattered thunderstorms closed some roads and bridges in the San Antonio, Austin and Houston areas, the National Weather Service said.

A flood warning was posted by the weather service for Cibolo Creek and the Guadalupe, San Antonio and lower Nueces Rivers.

Largest rainfall totals Sunday were 6.46 inches at Nixon, 6 to 7 inches west of Stockdale and a report of 20 inches between Stockdale and Falls City near Koscusko, the weather service said.

Freestone County sheriff's officers said high water covered some sections of U.S. 80 between Teague and Donie. The weather service issued a flash flood warning for the county.

Moist, unstable gulf air combined with the low-pressure disturbance and some afternoon heating to produce the storms.

Only far West Texas, along the Rio Grande, had occasional sunshine today. Skies elsewhere in the state were cloudy.

Afternoon temperatures ranged from the 60s in rain-soaked North Texas through 70s in the Panhandle and 90s in the far west.

Winds were mostly northerly to northeasterly at 10 to 20 mph in South Texas, and variable elsewhere.

A weak cold front stretched from central Oklahoma through just north of Midland and into eastern New Mexico.

Scattered to numerous showers and thunderstorms were expected to continue through Tuesday statewide, some with locally heavy rains.

Daytime highs Monday and Tuesday should range from the 70s to the 90s, with overnight lows from the 50s to 60s.

Some early-morning fog could develop in West Texas today.

NATION

Strong thunderstorms moved into the upper Midwest on Sunday. Sunny skies prevailed over the western part of the nation.

Strong thunderstorms formed over Indiana and lower Michigan on Sunday afternoon ahead of a cold front crossing upper Michigan, Wisconsin and eastern Iowa.

A severe thunderstorm watch was posted for portions of Indiana, parts of Ohio, Michigan, and a small part of northwest Pennsylvania.

A flash flood watch was in effect Sunday for the central and eastern sections of north Texas, and for most of south Texas.

On Sunday, midday thunderstorms over Arkansas deluged Little Rock with nearly 1½ inches of rain in 30 minutes.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from Oklahoma to southern Illinois on Sunday, and across the Florida peninsula. A few showers and thunderstorms were reported from the central Gulf Coast to Kentucky.

Skies were sunny across New England and over the western half of the country.

Temperatures were in the 80s by early afternoon from the lower Mississippi Valley and the Southeastern states to southern lower Michigan and the lower Great Lakes region.

Clouds and northerly winds behind a cold front helped keep afternoon temperatures in the 50s across most of the upper Mississippi Valley.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

EMISSIONS: Bush to relax air-pollution regulation permits.

Last summer, E. Donald Elliott, then the EPA general counsel, concluded in a legal memorandum that courts would uphold this interpretation of the law.

Quayle and his staff at the Council on Competitiveness interceded on behalf of business executives who contended that allowing the public to comment on what they called "minor" increases in air pollution from factories would have been unduly costly.

Such public reviews often take months and would have held up worthwhile changes in manufacturing practices to improve efficiency and profitability, said members of Quayle's staff in interviews last month.

Last week, Bush decided the issue in Quayle's favor, according to the White House and EPA officials. Bush's decision was disclosed Sunday in The Washington Post.

The proposed rule would give companies immediate authority to increase toxic air pollution above the permitted level by up to 80,000 pounds annually once they have notified state environmental agencies, EPA officials said Sunday.

States would have 28 days to approve or disapprove the notification. If the notification is sent on by the state, the EPA would then have 17 days to approve or disapprove. The president exempted companies from having to notify the public or hold public hearings, said an EPA official who insisted on anonymity.

Sunday, several corporate officials praised the decision, saying an 80,000-pound increase of toxic emissions represents a tiny percentage of the overall toxic chemical levels poured into the atmosphere from large chemical installations.

Typically, refineries, bulk chemical plants and other petrochemical complexes emit millions of pounds of toxic chemicals into the atmosphere each year quite legally under permits written by states.

"We have argued for flexibility in the operation of our production sites," David W. Gustafson, manager of air issues for Dow Chemical, USA in Midland, Mich., said Sunday in a telephone interview. "The issue here is if there is a change in operation that results in minimal air emissions increases above our permit level, authority to do that should be expedited without getting held up in 60- or 90-day approval periods."

Environmentalists said they were prepared to sue the environmental agency over the regulation.

David D. Doniger, a lawyer in Washington for the Natural Resources Defense Council, said: "Increasing pollution is the most fundamental change you can make. If you change permits in this way without involving the public then permits are hardly worth the paper they are printed on."

Rep. Henry A. Waxman, D-Calif., had already filed a lawsuit against the Administration, contending that the Competitiveness Council has violated the Clean Air Act by holding up regulations and ignoring the requirements of the law.

The battle between Quayle and Reilly has dismayed officials in the EPA and the White House, many of whom thought the issue did not merit such high-level concern.

"The issue was about minor permit amendments," a high-level EPA official who requested anonymity said Sunday. The official added: "It's kept other rules, more important rules, from going through the White House because this one took so much energy."

REAGAN: Prosecutors turn to former president

been told he might face felony charges in the scandal unless he provides evidence they believe he has against Reagan.

"I can't comment on that" report, said Mary Belcher, a spokeswoman for the office of independent counsel Lawrence Walsh, who has been investigating the scandal for the past 5½ years.

A federal grand jury investigating Iran-Contra went out of business last week, but Walsh could go to any sitting grand jury if he decided to seek indictments.

Weinberger's lawyer, Robert Bennett, refused to say whether his client had been offered any kind of a deal in exchange for testimony against the former president. Seven people have pleaded guilty to lesser crimes in the Iran-Contra affair in order to avoid felony indictments.

"Mr. Weinberger will not plead guilty to anything because he is not guilty of anything," Bennett said. Lloyd Cutler, one of Shultz's lawyers, said through a secretary last week that he would have no comment on the matter. Shultz has said he is a subject in the investigation, meaning his actions fall within the scope of a grand jury probe.

Reagan's lawyer, Theodore Olson, said late last week that he has cooperated with various document requests from Walsh's office, but has not heard from Walsh's office recently.

The focus of the prosecutors' attention, according to the sources: who knew, and how much did they know, about the most legally troublesome of all the Iran arms shipments, a CIA-assisted delivery of 18 Hawk anti-aircraft missiles from Israel to Iran in November 1985.

Reagan has given several different accounts of how much he knew about the November 1985 Hawks shipment.

The sources say prosecutors have examined notes from key White House meetings attended by Reagan, then-Vice President Bush, Weinberger, Shultz and White House chief of staff Don Regan in late November 1986 when the public furor erupted over the secret Iran arms sales.

Prosecutors retrieved some of Weinberger's notes from the Library of Congress late last year.

HAITI: OAS ministers tighten economic squeeze lished one-man rule with military backing on April 6, saying it was necessary to combat terrorism, drug trafficking and corruption.

(From 1A)

"I want to explain directly the objectives of my government and its immediate plans," Fujimori said Sunday before leaving Lima.

Also Sunday, he shortened his previous 12-month timetable to return to democracy, proposing elections in six months for an 80-member constituent assembly that would determine what constitutional reforms are needed.

The special one-day foreign ministers' gathering preceded the regular OAS annual assembly.

In the case of Haiti, the foreign ministers agreed that tougher sanctions were needed to force the impoverished country's military-backed leadership to restore Haiti' first freely elected president, Jean-Bertrande Aristdie.

They approved a resolution calling on member nations to ban ships that do business with Haiti from their ports, to deny or revoke visas of the coup supporters and to freeze their assets abroad.

However, they rejected a limit on air traffic and a cut-off of diplomatic relations, suggesting that OAS countries keep embargoed goods off of Haiti-bound flights and consider reducing their missions to Haiti.

In the Haitian capital of Port-au-Prince, the government's information minister reacted angrily.

"The position of the OAS is shamelessly cynical, to drive Haiti into famine in order to save it," Girard Bissainthe told The Associated Press.

But a pro-Aristide senator, Eudrice Raymond, applauded the move, calling it a reaction to an agreement by the army, the interim government and legislative leaders to establish a new administration without Aristide.

The foreign ministers also agreed on the need to plug leaks in the hemispheric trade embargo imposed after the coup.

The embargo has crippled Haiti's economy. But gasoline has arrived from European countries not committed to the embargo, and other goods are slipping in from both within and outside the region.

DOLPHINS: This 'die-off' raises many questions

clusters of deaths, called die-offs, have previously occurred in open seas and that one so close to shore raises many questions.

"This is not a save-the-dolphins, save-the-seals, save-the-whales issue because over time it could turn into a save-the-humans issue," said Nina Young, a marine biologist at the Center for Marine Conservation, a environmental advocacy organization in Washington. "Dolphins live along our coasts, using the same water we do and consuming the same fish we eat. If indeed they are dying because of the consumption of contaminated fish, then these contaminants could wind up on our plates."

Every spring some dead dolphins are found on Texas beaches, usually calves and females who have been weakened from calving. Last year, in what was considered a normal spring, 57 carcasses were found along the entire Texas coast, with 11 in the area where the dead dolphins are now being found, said Graham Worthy, director of the Texas Marine Mammal Stranding Network, a volunteer organization.

"This year in a short period of time, in a limited area we've had a large number of dolphins dying of all ages and both sexes, and meanwhile we have not seen increased numbers of dead fish or birds, and all of that makes this a very unusual event," said Worthy, who also teaches marine mammal biology at Texas A&M University's Galveston campus.

Since 1987 there have been major die-offs of dolphins along the Atlantic coast of the United States, in the Mediterranean Sea and in the Gulf of Mexico, but these events have involved populations of dolphins that range over a wide area and whose deaths can be attributed to a number of causes.

The Texas deaths are so concentrated that researchers are considering the possibility a single culprit might be at fault.

"What is happening this spring is clearly localized, and that leads you to think that we may be looking for a specific event, some local happening of natural or manmade origins that is responsible for the majority of the deaths," said Larry Hansen, a research biologist with the National Marine Fisheries Service, the federal agency leading the scientific detective work here.

Among the events that distinguish this spring in Texas are record-setting rains that began in mid-December and are continuing. Runoff has filled rivers and streams and has been dumped into the bays, turning them a muddy brown and altering salinity levels.

Hansen said that the change in salinity alone was unlikely to sicken the dolphins but that the runoff doubtless brought human wastes, heavy metals and other substances that could have affected their health.

Another possible cause being considered, experts say, are unusual algae blooms and other natural phenomenan, adding that they are not ruling out industrial contamination.

The area, 100 miles southwest of Houston, is home to several large petrochemical plants, which produce a number of highly toxic substances. And all are close to the bays or waterways that feed them.

The shallow coastal bays in this area are the winter nesting grounds for dozens of species of migratory birds, including the rare whooping crane, which returns yearly to the marshes of the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge near Corpus Christi.

POVERTY: Rags-to-riches stories are exceptions

(From 1A)

William Gates, founder of Microsoft Corp., the leading software company.

But modern Horatio Algers notwithstanding, a wave of recent studies shows that rags-to-riches remains the economic exception, not the rule.

Though many doors and many rewards are open to talent, being rich or poor is more likely than not to carry over from generation to generation, and certainly from year to year.

If anything, economists say, the climb out of poverty has gotten harder in the past decade or two. The U.S. economy has become increasingly less hospitable to the young, the unskilled and the less educated.

It is highly unlikely that this year's rich man will be next year's pauper — or vice versa.

"It's certainly true that someone whose parents are poor has a lower expected income, on average, than someone whose parents are rich," said Gary Solon, a University of Michigan economist. "It's not that you inherit the same position, but there's a substantial correlation."

A child whose father is in the bottom 5 percent of earners, for instance, has only one chance in 20 of making it into the top 20 percent of families, according to a forthcoming article in The American Economic Review by Solon.

The same child has a 1-in-4 chance of rising above the median wealth and a 2-in-5 chance of staying poor or near poor.

"All you have to do is look at L.A. to decide that there are lots of people who think their permanent prospects are pretty crummy," said David M. Cutler, an economist at Harvard University.

What is more, apart from changes in income and wealth that reflect the normal lifetime pattern of growing earnings and savings until retirement, followed by a gradual decline, most Americans do not move a great many rungs, up or down, in a lifetime. The changes tend to be one step forward or one step back, not from the lower half to the upper.

To be sure, Americans can still shinny up and down the economic ladder with an agility that has amazed visitors from Alexis de Tocqueville to the latest arrivals from Latin America or Asia.

"We have more inequality than other countries," said Timothy M. Smeeding, an economist at the Maxwell School at Syracuse University. "But we probably have more mobility as well."

Some conservative economists, including Bruce R. Bartlett, deputy assistant secretary of the Treasury, and Lawrence B. Lindsey, a governor of the Federal Reserve Board, argue that much of the apparent increase in inequality in the last 15 years is a statistical artifact that reflects more upward mobility.

"The rising share of the top 1 percent means that there was a lot of income mobility in America during the 1980s," Lindsey said.

Similarly, Bartlett said: "Those who are on top today could easily be down and out tomorrow. A little luck and hard work can turn today's poor into tomorrow's rich."

But recent studies that track the fortunes over time do not support the view that there is so much mobility that where people stand in any given year hardly matters.

"There's a lot of churning at the top and the bottom," said Lawrence F. Katz, an economist at Harvard University, "but the key is that the top group has just pulled away from everyone else."

Economists look at three kinds of mobility that vary mainly in whether they define income in terms of a year, the average of several years or the average over a lifetime.

"More time allows for more things — good and bad — to happen," said Paul Menchik, an economist at Michigan State University.

From one year to the next, according to Census Department data from the Survey of Income and Program Participation and from a study of taxpayers by Joel Slemrod, a University of Michigan economist, roughly one-fifth to one-fourth of the people in the top income group — whether the top 1, 10 or 20 percent — were not in that group the year before.

But much of this short-term turnover may be illusory.

with Alzheimer's disease. All over the country, these victims of disease have stopped waiting quietly for medical science to proceed at its usual regal pace.

They want cures. They want prevention. They want big, big federal research budgets for what's killing them. And they want them now.

Members of this new category of political agitator freely acknowledge that they have a stunningly successful teacher — the AIDS movement. Using everything from old-fashioned lobbying to street theater, AIDS activist made their disease the most richly funded target, tied with cancer, on the federal research agenda.

With similar tactics, these latest crusaders are already shifting the way money is divided up among disease researchers.

"The advocacy groups have demonstrated the influence that articulate, well organized, very vocal, very angry people can have on resource allocation," said Dr. Robert Wachter of the University of California, San Francisco.

Last fall, the activists and their champions in Congress succeeded in getting the budget of the National Cancer Institute — the government's primary supporter of cancer research — increased by 14 percent. Moreover, they told the scientists there how to spend the money.

Rather than leaving these decisions up to the career science administrators and their advisers from medical schools, Congress specified sizable increases in spending for cancer of the breast, prostate, ovaries and cervix.

A year earlier, they set aside specific amounts for Alzheimer's disease research. And throughout the 1980s, they did the same for AIDS.

The ease with which advocates of individual diseases can manipulate research goals worries some. They caution that for every disease that gets an outsized share of attention, some other illness without a lobbying force will get less than it deserves.

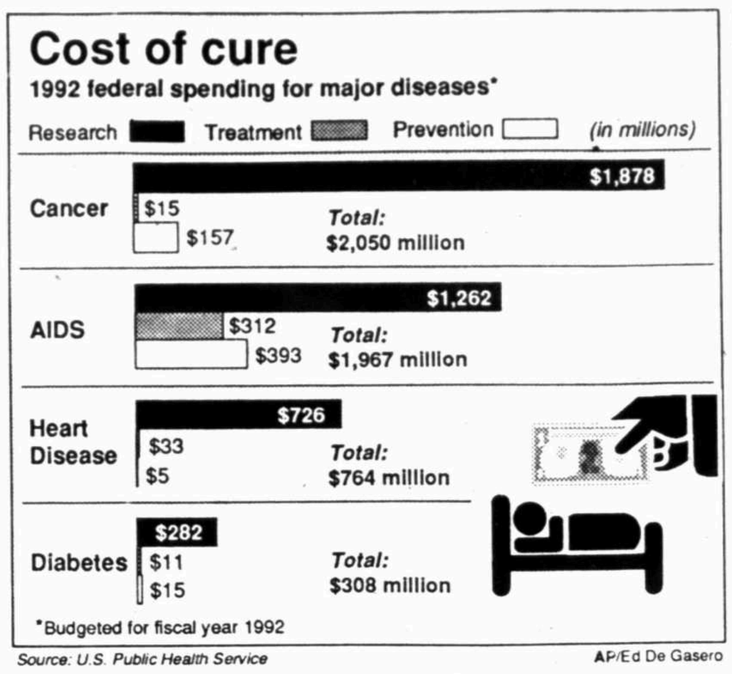

Until AIDS, Congress had been reluctant in recent years to earmark precise amounts of money for specific diseases. Instead, those decisions were left up the administrators at the National Institutes of Health in suburban Bethesda, Md. and their outside committees of doctors who reviewed requests for research money.

But scientists, lobbyists and others both in and out of government agree on one thing: AIDS changed everything.

Since 1982, when the federal government spent $5 million on it, the war on AIDS has grown to consume $2 billion in federal research, prevention and treatment programs. That's the same as the government spends on cancer, a disease that will kill 22 times more people this year.

Precisely comparing federal spending for various diseases is difficult. The U.S. Public Health Service provides the totals but concedes it uses different accounting methods for AIDS. AIDS advocates contend the government underestimates what it spends to treat cancer, heart problems and diseases other than AIDS.

But Eugene Schonfeld, a kidney cancer survivor who founded the National Kidney Cancer Association, asserts that "The AIDS movement has radically altered health care funding by the federal government."

Source: U.S. Public Health Service AP/Ed De Gasero

While AIDS activists certainly had plenty of help from scientists and sympathetic congressmen, their single-minded efforts are widely credited with keeping up the pressure that led to the vast increases in AIDS spending during the 1980s. Some quietly lobbied in traditional ways. Some became expert observers of technical developments who learned to prod the scientific establishment to work more quickly. Still others blocked traffic, invaded the New York Stock Exchange, crashed opening night at the San Francisco Opera and disrupted a service at St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York.

No group has learned these lessons so well as the breast cancer lobby. Over the past two years, many of the countries 200 local breast cancer support groups have shifted their attention from mutual reassurance to politics.

Even though breast cancer is the most heavily financed of all cancers, real progress is hard to see. The death rate is virtually the same as it was 20 years ago. In part because of better detection, the disease is now diagnosed in 1 in 9 women at some time during their lives.

"Women will not stand for this any more. We will not be passive. Our anger is palpable," said Amy Langer, executive director of the National Alliance of Breast Cancer Organizations.

So far, though, that anger has not resulted in the confrontational tactics used by some parts of the AIDS movement.

"Do you work within the system or do you demonstrate noisily?" asked Sharon Green of Y-ME, a national breast cancer organization. "My inclination is to first try the system. But if that doesn't work, we will see much more activism."

The system, so far, seems to be working well. Last year, the breast cancer activists enlisted the outspoken support of congresswomen, testified on Capitol Hill, held rallies around the country and organized a campaign that flooded Congress and the White House with 600,000 letters.

As a result of this and other lobbying, Congress jumped breast cancer spending by $41 million — to $133 million, a 45 percent increase.

This year, women in this movement say they will try for a $300 million increase in breast cancer spending. And they vow to do what they need to get it.

"We don't want to cross the line and become a fringe element or obnoxious to no end, but we are willing to become obnoxious to an end if it comes to that," said Ellen Crowley of the Women's Community Cancer Project in Cambridge, Mass.

Some, like Swanson, are willing to push the boundaries to get — and keep — Congress's attention.

Last year, they sent out before and after posters of a breast cancer victim. On one side was a pretty 35-year-old woman. On the other was same person after treatment — bald, bloated, naked from the waist up with a missing breast.

Now, she said, women who have had mastectomies are talking about demonstrating at the White House. Their tentative plan: March with their shirts off to show their scars.

"We are staying in their faces," said Swanson. "We want them to be aware that we will not go away."

HILLARY: Candidate's wife mixes campaign rhetoric, soft touch country for her husband, she seems to impress men as well, rapidly ticking off the Democratic presidential front-runner's reasons for wanting to replace George Bush and prompting comments that maybe she ought to be on the ballot.

But polls show some Americans are leery of her, worried that she might hurt Bill Clinton's chances of winning in November. One recent poll found that nearly a third consider her a liability in his campaign.

Some of that suspicion stems from Clinton's being a professional in her own right, a Yale-educated partner in a prestigious Little Rock, Ark., law firm, an untraditional position for a potential first lady.

Clinton annoyed homemakers and political wives by remarking that she could have stayed home, baked cookies and had teas instead of pursuing her law practice and by insisting that her defense of her husband wasn't a case of "standing by my man."

With supporters fearing she's coming off too tough, Clinton seems to be making sure people see a softer side. Clinton, a board member of the Children's Defense Fund, says she would use the first lady's office to be a "voice for children."

She now frequently mentions her 12-year-old daughter, Chelsea, after a friend reported that some people didn't know the Clintons had a child.

A typical campaign day for Hillary Clinton might include a stop at a school to read to 3-year-olds or chat with other children about the latest movies over mixed vegetables and cafeteria pizza. She has visited adult education centers to talk with high school dropouts about what motivated them to come back, if they have health care for their families or job prospects for themselves.

She has often served duty opening up campaign headquarters in a new primary state or stopping by a Democratic committee meeting to push her husband's candidacy with local activists.

Her stump speech reflects her husband's, plugging investment tax credits for business, boot camps for young criminal offenders and college tuition for those who commit to community service or payroll deductions to pay for it.

Democratic crowds love her digs at Bush.

'We need a president who will go where the news is bad, not just where it is good," she says, noting that Bill Clinton visited south-central Los Angeles three years before the deadly riots.

"He was there because he cared about what was going on long before there were any problems on the television screen. That's the kind of man he is; that's the kind of president he'll be, because he knows that if we don't do better than we're doing, that there is no them in America, there's only us, then we cannot solve the problems that need to be solved."

Republican administrations over the last decade allowed just a few to reap economic gain, she told the Montgomery crowd.

"My husband says no more money-based economics and let's invest in the only part of our country's resources that won't get up and move — our people," she said.

Dispute over health-insurance bias case divides Bush administration

By Robert Pear
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — A bitter dispute has broken out within the Bush administration over whether to support or oppose a decision by a federal appeals court allowing employers to revoke the health insurance coverage of employees who develop costly illnesses like AIDS.

The case involves a man with AIDS whose company severely limited his medical payments after he told company officials that he had AIDS and filed his first claims. His lawyer has appealed the ruling to the Supreme Court, contending that the company illegally discriminated against the man, John W. McGann, by stripping him of health insurance benefits at the moment he needed them most.

The court has asked the administration for its views on the legality of such cutbacks.

The issue poses a problem for the White House in a political year when it has stoutly defended the private insurance system against calls for a program of national health insurance financed by the government.

The Labor Department, which regulates employee benefit plans, generally supports the appellate court ruling. It maintains that the government should not interfere with employers' prerogative to cut costs by reducing health insurance benefits.

But the Department of Health and Human Services says the court should overturn the decision on the ground that if employers are allowed to renege on their commitments it will undercut the system of private health insurance on which more than two-thirds of all the nation's workers depend.

Moreover, governors and many federal officials fear that the federal government and the states will incur huge new costs if gravely ill workers, denied coverage through private insurers, turn to Medicaid and other public programs to pay their bills.

"If private insurers, under cover of federal law, are allowed to dump people with catastrophic illnesses, those people will wind up in public programs," said Alicia S. Pelrine, director of human resources for the National Governors' Association. "Specifically, they will wind up in Medicaid. We view that trend with some alarm."

In letters to the Labor Department and the Justice Department, Mark E. Haddad, a lawyer for the American Medical Association, said the appellate court decision "may adversely affect the tens of millions of Americans who receive health insurance as a benefit of employment" from companies serving as their own insurers.

In addition to the AMA, the American Association of Retired Persons, the National Governors Assocation and groups advocating better treatment of AIDS patients oppose the court ruling and are lobbying the Administration to seek its reversal.

The Supreme Court has invited Kenneth W. Starr, the U.S. solicitor general, to present the administration's views.

Violence threatens L.A. gang truce

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Members of rival gangs hugged and shook hands at a picnic Sunday following a night of violence that killed four people and threatened to shatter a truce forged after last month's deadly riots.

But at the same time as the picnic, a gang brawl at the county fairgrounds about 40 miles east of downtown left at least one person dead and several others shot or stabbed, said Pomona police Lt. Bela Laszlo. He didn't immediately have details.

Police in Las Vegas, meanwhile, used tear gas and foam pellets early Sunday to battle a crowd of nearly 1,000 after suspected gang members beat a white motorist.

In South Central Los Angeles, more than 300 members of the Crips and Bloods gathered Sunday in a city park for a picnic to promote the fragile truce. A few blocks away, officers in more than a dozen squad cars stood by.

Young men wearing Crips blue shook hands and hugged others wearing Bloods red.

"It's a miracle that I would not have believed in, but it's true," said Charles Rachal, 28, a former Crip who helped organize the picnic. "The Lord's going to let it work out. There can't nothing bad come out of something good."

Nearby, another former gang member identifying himself only as De'andra knotted a blue Crips neckerchief with the red bandana of a Blood.

"This is real, you know what I'm saying," he said.

The picnic was one of a series of gatherings gang members have held to encourage harmony.

Gang members declared a truce after deadly riots set off by the acquittals last month of four police offficers in the videotaped beating of motorist Rodney King. But police said the violence Saturday demonstrated that little has changed.

"Things haven't cooled off at all. They're trying to make things look like it's cooled off, but you can still cut the tension with a knife out there," said Sgt. Don Keith.

Four people died and three were wounded in gang-related shootings Saturday in South Central, police said. Police initially believed gang members were responsible for a fifth death north of downtown but later said it wasn't gang-related.

Neither Charles Norman, a coordinator for Community Youth Gang Services in South Central, nor police could say for sure if members of factions involved in the truce were responsible for the slayings.

Norman was optimistic the truce would survive, but said setbacks such as Saturday night's bloodshed were inevitable. Rival gangs have battled for control of South Central neighborhoods for more than a decade. Police estimate there are more than 100,000 gang members throughout Los Angeles County.

"Every gang hasn't joined in. We're working with a core group ... but others are slowly, surely coming in," he said.

Effort to spare prisoner's life sparks debate

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — An international effort to spare a prisoner condemned to die may have as much to do with his being white and articulate as it does with his claim of innocence, some observers said.

"The more articulate the defendant, the more skilled ... at relating to the media, the more likely that person is to get widespread coverage and generate support for their claim of innocence," said former newspaper crime reporter Robert Snyder.

Roger Keith Coleman is scheduled to die in the electric chair Wednesday for the 1981 rape and murder of his sister-in-law in a southwestern Virginia coal mining town.

Coleman, 33, has consistently maintained his innocence. He and his lawyers said they have new evidence that one or possibly two other men committed the crime.

Coleman was on the cover of Time magazine and appeared on national and international television. His story has been featured in the Los Angeles Times and The New York Times.

A growing network of capital punishment opponents, including Amnesty International, has joined his Washington legal team in calling for a new trial.

Snyder recently completed a fellowship at the Freedom Forum for Media Studies at Columbia University on how the press covers crime and criminals.

"I think the press should show more diligence in covering capital punishment cases where the prisoner about to be executed is not so attractive, white, or palatable to a wide audience," he said.

Pamela Rutter, program coordinator for the National Coalition Against the Death Penalty in Washington, said: "There is something to the fact that you can look at a person and say, 'He looks like us, he doesn't look like a monster.'"

The coalition, which is involved in Coleman's case, makes some effort to oppose every scheduled execution in the country, she said. So does Amnesty International.

"I suppose Roger Coleman looks sort of all-American. ... You see Roger Coleman can go on the 'Today' show and talk, and then you see when Dalton Prejean went on the 'Today' show with dreadlocks down to his shoulders and wasn't very articulate," Ms. Rutter said.

"Rainy days and Mondays get you down..."

Troops open fire on pro-democracy demonstrators in Thailand

AP Laserphoto

A demonstrator smashes the window of a firetruck during a violent protest in Bangkok, Thailand, Sunday.

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Troops backed by armored vehicles opened fire today on thousands of pro-democracy demonstrators demanding the resignation of the prime minister, who declared a state of emergency.

Hospital officials and witnesses say at least nine people were killed and hundreds injured in the protests, which began with a peaceful rally a day earlier.

The troops may have been firing into the air simply to disperse the demonstrators, but protesters and foreign journalists said they saw troops firing into crowds.

Thousands took to the streets Sunday to demand the ouster of Prime Minister Suchinda Kraprayoon. Suchinda proclaimed a state of emergency in the capital and four surrounding provinces, giving him wide powers but stopping short of martial law.

Authorities banned gatherings of more than 10 people, clamped curbs on the press and closed schools for three days.

Suchinda, a general who spearheaded a military coup last year, has been criticized for going back on a pledge not to become prime minister. He was appointed to the post in early April by a coalition of pro-military parties.

Protesters are angry he is not an elected member of Parliament, and his appointment also aggravated growing resentment over decades of deep military involvement in politics.

The number of dead or injured could not be confirmed. Two foreign reporters and some demonstrators said they saw a number of wounded and at least six killed today when the troops fired.

That was in addition to three deaths and 212 injuries reported by hospitals on Sunday. The official media reported that some policemen had been injured.

After the troops fired today, pro-democracy leader Chamlong Srimuang moved among the protesters and urged them to remain.

"Our victory is ahead of us," he said.

Troops had trapped some 20,000 demonstrators on the main Rajdamnern Avenue, a major thoroughfare where a student-led uprising erupted in 1973 and toppled a military junta. Other protesters had scattered to neighboring streets.

The protests had begun peacefully Sunday, with tens of thousands of well-organized demonstrators on the streets. Chamlong led them on a march toward Government House after concluding a peaceful rally in a field.

But then some tore down a barbed-wire barricade set up by police and the army at a bridge about halfway along the route.

Chinese police search Washington Post bureau

BEIJING (AP) — State security officers searched the bureau of The Washington Post on Sunday and questioned the newspaper's correspondent about her work and contacts.

Lena Sun said in a written statement that authorities accused her of "activities incompatible with my status as a foreign journalist."

They did not cite specific violations or say what could happen to her, Ms. Sun said.

Ms. Sun, the Post's Beijing bureau chief since July 1990, said officials from the Beijing branch of the State Security Ministry seized several notebooks and a list of Chinese names and telephone numbers.

She said that she was questioned for nearly two hours in her office and that security officers would not allow her husband and their 2-year-old son to leave their nearby apartment during that time.

She said she was asked about her relations with a Chinese friend and former classmate at Beijing University whom they said had been arrested. They did not disclose the charge, she said.

Security officers barred U.S. Embassy officials who arrived at the building housing her office and apartment.

The Post sent a telex to the Chinese Foreign Ministry strongly protesting the questioning of Ms. Sun and seizure her notes. Executive Editor Leonard Downie demanded an immediate return of the material and any copies made of it.

"We deeply resent this kind of behavior and intimidation against both this newspaper and its correspondent, who is engaged in proper journalistic activities of the kind routinely engaged in abroad without this kind of harassment," Downie said in the telex.

The Post also protested in a letter to China's ambassador in Washington.

Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., the ranking GOP member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, called the action "reprehensible conduct" and said Washington should review its relationship with Beijing, including extending most-favored nation trade status.

China's Communist government tries to discourage foreign journalists from developing friendships with ordinary Chinese and obtaining information about virtually any subject from non-official channels.

Chinese have been jailed for passing on apparently harmless information to foreigners.

Swiss change course, endorse membership in World Bank, IMF

BERN, Switzerland (AP) — Swiss voters on Sunday reversed decades of reluctance to join global organizations and endorsed Switzerland's membership in the World Bank and International Monetary Fund.

Markus Lusser, president of the National Bank, took the vote as a sign the Swiss also might be willing to join the European Community.

"Swiss voters have realized that the world has changed since the fall of the Berlin Wall and that the time has come to open themselves up internationally," Lusser said.

A referendum is planned in December on whether to join the European Economic Area, a preliminary move to seeking EC membership.

Finance Minister Otto Stich welcomed Sunday's vote. "I'm glad that Switzerland now can help determine policies and not just serve as contributor," he said.

Switzerland has given generously to the two Washington-based organizations for years even though it held only observer status.

With all 26 cantons, or states, reporting, nearly 56 percent of the voters backed membership in the IMF and World Bank, which provide loans and development aid to member nations. About 37.7 percent of the 4.5 million eligible voters participated.

With the end of the Cold War and the collapse of the Soviet bloc, the Swiss government has been moving away from its strict neutrality.

All major political parties, industrial and labor groups supported joining the institutions, but opposition came from an alliance of leftists and arch-conservatives.

Leftists claim IMF policies have enriched wealthy countries at the expense of developing nations.

Right-wing isolationists said joining the institutions could cost the government billions of dollars. Swiss officials say the nation would pay $284 million over five years.

The issue of costs helped defeat a 1986 Swiss referendum to join the United Nations, even though the country is host to a number of U.N. agencies.

Voters also approved a revision in 50-year-old sex laws for minors and a constitutional amendment to allow conscientious objectors to perform civilian duty.

Seventy-three percent of the voters approved a plan to decriminalize sex between a person under age 16 and another person no more than three years older.

Opponents said the change would foster promiscuity and lead to a breakdown of the family.

Southpaws shake candidates' hands

Who would win a three-way race for President among George Bush, Bill Clinton and Ross Perot? Regardless of the vote totals in November, the correct answer is Lefthanders International, based in Topeka, Kan. Its delighted members have discovered that all three candidates or near-candidates are left-handed.

That is true for 10 percent of the adult public and for them the striking coincidence may be the most heartening development since Leonardo painted "Mona Lisa" and Michelangelo carved "David," left-handedly of course.

Southpaws are reminded daily that they belong to an unthinkingly abused minority. The most blatant bias is mechanical: tools, appliances, automobiles, even stairs and dueling swords are usually designed by and for arrogant right-handers. More insidious is the linguistic tilt to the right — as in "adroit" and "maladroit," from the French meaning "to the right," or "sinister," from the Italian term for left.

Because right-handedness is deemed normal, left-handed children were often seen as freaks, needing forcible correction. According to Lefthanders International, Ronald Reagan was among the millions who were born southpaws but who switched sides — anticipating his similar rightward transit in politics. If parents and teachers are less ferociously intolerant nowadays, that's partly because left-handers are believed to excel in some sports, notably baseball.

Hence the indignation among left-handers over a recent book, "The Left-Hander Syndrome," by Stanley Coren. He's so righteous that some wonder if he isn't a self-hating portsider (he claims to be right-handed). The author insists that although athletes like Babe Ruth batted left they were really right-eyed, and that southpaw superiority in baseball is a myth. Direr still, he cites data suggesting that left-handers have a shorter life expectancy by an average of nine years.

The statistics are in dispute but even if true, they don't prove the inferiority of left-handers or their bumbling inability to avoid accidents, as Coren seems to believe. Instead, they show the need to make life for southpaws safer and fairer.

Millions of American lefties are tired of being repeatedly denied a presidential choice (until Bush, it is said that Gerald Ford, Harry Truman and James Garfield were the only left-handers). This year, they can't lose.

Judge didn't do best on atheist ruling

The Cub Scout Promise reads: "I promise to do my best to do my duty to God and my country, to help other people, and to obey the Law of the Pack."

A California judge has, in effect, ruled that God must go. He ordered a Santa Ana pack to reinstate 10-year-old twins, whose parents are atheists, who were removed from the organization for refusing to say "God" in the Scout promise.

Judge Richard Frazee said that the Orange County Council of Boy Scouts is a "business" and cannot therefore exclude people for their religious beliefs.

We judge the judge to have committed an outrageously reversible error. Scouting's only business is in the development of youngsters' minds, bodies and — most important — character. Those youngsters voluntarily apply for membership in an organization whose established values and standards — including reverence for God — extend to its foundation in this country in 1910.

Those who do not share, or wish to honor, those values and standards need not savage their consciences by joining. And no judge, who takes an oath to defend the laws of a country whose own motto is "In God We Trust," should bludgeon a private organization's and its members' constitutional right to free association.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, May 18, the 139th day of 1992. There are 227 days left in the year. This is Victoria Day in Canada.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 18, 1980, the Mount St. Helens volcano in Washington state exploded. The blast took 1,300 feet off the top of the mountain, leaving 57 people dead or missing.

On this date:

In 1642, the Canadian city of Montreal was founded.

In 1804, the French Senate proclaimed Napoleon Bonaparte emperor.

In 1860, the Republican Party convention in Chicago nominated Abraham Lincoln for president.

In 1910, Halley's Comet, as seen from Earth, moved across the sun.

In 1911, composer Gustav Mahler died in Vienna, Austria. His last word: "Mozart."

In 1926, evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson mysteriously vanished while visiting a beach in Venice, Calif.; she reappeared a month later, claiming to have been kidnapped.

In 1933, the Tennessee Valley Authority was created.

In 1934, Congress approved the so-called Lindbergh Act, which called for the death penalty in cases of interstate kidnapping.

In 1951, the United Nations moved out of its temporary headquarters in Lake Success, N.Y., for its permanent home in Manhattan.

In 1953, Jacqueline Cochran became the first woman to break the sound barrier as she piloted a North American F-86 Canadair over Rogers Dry Lake, Calif.

In 1969, astronauts Eugene A. Cernan, Thomas P. Stafford and John W. Young blasted off aboard Apollo Ten.

Rep. Campbell tries to get things done

WASHINGTON — Rep. Ben Nighthorse Campbell, D-Colo., remembers the time a constituent called him to complain that her garbage hadn't been picked up on time. "I told her, 'This isn't the sanitation department, why didn't you call them?' She said, 'Oh, I didn't think I was going to have to go that high.'" Campbell sees it as another day at the office, an indication of how low Congress has fallen on the political food chain. Part of the reason stems from a system driven overwhelmingly by blow-dried, middle-aged, media-managed white men. Campbell is crashing the club called the U.S. Congress.

Anderson

Some things are visible. It starts with the ponytail (he won't cut it), extends to the dress code (he has special permission not to wear a coat and tie) and includes his choice of transportation (a Jeep amid BMWs and limos).

Other things are less visible. His life story reads like something out of a Horatio Alger novel. "I came from a very rough home. My dad was an alcoholic and my mother was tubercular. I was living in an orphanage and on the streets," he explains.

He wasn't coddled during childhood, and his wont is not to coddle special interests, or even constituents he thinks get out of line. "They (interest groups) want absolute subservience to their cause and I'm just not like that. If they want a puppet, they can go buy one," Campbell told our associate Melinda Maas recently. Though Campbell is far from a puppet, his political ambitions have recently expanded. He is currently campaigning for the Senate seat being vacated by the retiring Tim Wirth, who Senate observers point to as the prototype of the media-age politician.

Campbell's direct style may offend some, but he offers no apologies. On voter anger, Campbell believes too much time is spent worrying about inconsequential matters while more important issues like health care and the deficit are put aside year after year. He cites the people who called his office wanting him to pass a bill requiring people to be kinder to chickens, or the man who wanted him to change the national anthem to a song his brother wrote. One time, when a constituent was giving him a particularly hard time about his taxpayer-supported salary, Campbell struck back. "I looked up and found out just before that happened that two cents of a taxpayer's money goes toward congressional salaries. So I threw the two cents at him and told him to shut up.

As the only Native American member of Congress, he's comfortable as a minority. While large portions of Congress is made up mainly of lawyers and career politicians, Campbell is a jewelry maker and rancher by profession. He says that he only agreed to run for office after his neighbors asked him to.

His office on Capitol Hill, decorated in Western style with handcarved wooden furniture and an Indian head garment estimated to be worth $50,000, is a far cry from his roots. At age 12 he took his first job, and soon dropped out of high school to join the Air Force during the Korean War. After the war, Campbell went back for his general equivalency diploma and later attended college in California. But it wasn't until last year that Campbell finally went back to receive his high school diploma.

Campbell says his rough beginning is a big reason why he now considers his family to be the most important aspect of his life. But he also asks people to consider his experience before they condemn the entire congressional process.

One of his best friends in the House is Rep. John Lewis, D.-Ga., another rags-to-riches member who was a leader in the civil rights movement before entering elective politics. Campbell is also close with Rep. Joe Kennedy, D.-Mass., whose background could scarcely be more different than his. "When I took my oath of office, I remember standing between him (Lewis) and Joe Kennedy and I was thinking that night, 'My God, we're in a world where a Johnny Lewis can have an equal opportunity in making national policy as a Joe Kennedy, or some kid like me.' Nowhere in the world could this happen."

CHARLEY REESE

It's time Americans get to know each other

The way to deal with racism is to talk about it, which is to say do the opposite of what we've been doing.

In recent years, instead of confronting our racism and talking about it, we've shoved it under the bed by announcing our moral judgment that it is bad. We condemn any white person who expresses any doubt that African-Americans are not white Americans with only slightly different skin tones. We allow demagogues to use the charge of racism as a club anytime anything or anyone doesn't suit them.

Reese

In other words, we just don't deal with racism in a realistic way.

Racism is a set of beliefs. These beliefs usually arise from a combination of education and experience. Like beliefs about anything, they can range from dead wrong to partially correct. No belief about anything has ever in the history of mankind been simply legislated out of existence. You can only change beliefs by engaging the minds of the people who hold them and persuading them with new evidence and logic to change them.

Instead, we've made it impossible to talk about the subject. Now I'm not referring to the pathological degree of racism that produces malevolence. I'm not suggesting anyone tolerate someone screaming insults, inciting others to violence, or attacking people. This kind of language and behavior has always been out of bounds. And should always stay out of bounds — regardless of the race of the speaker and the perpetrator.

But racism is not necessarily malevolent. Sometimes it's just mistaken. There is no evidence, for example, that Jimmy the Greek, a Las Vegas oddsmaker, holds any malevolent beliefs about African-Americans. But what happened when he said, in reply to a question, that perhaps there were proportionately more African-American athletes than whites because of slavery? Wham, bam, he was banished from the airways. Network television executives, who in reality do more to propagate racial stereotypes than almost anyone else, pronounced it a racist comment and fell into a self-righteous fit.

But Jimmy the Greek, no anthropologist, was just applying common sense in trying to answer a question. Charles Darwin's theory of survival of the fittest is certainly a well-accepted premise in Western society. Maybe, Jimmy the Greek mused, that given the terrible hardships of slavery, only the physically strongest survived.

I'm neither an anthropologist nor a biologist, so I have no idea if it's dead wrong, partially wrong, or right. But why couldn't he say it? Why couldn't the question be discussed? Everyone knows that a disproportionate number of African-Americans excel in certain sports like football and basketball and are virtually absent in others like swimming.

Why can't we talk about the fears some white people have of black males?

A lot of people who are kind and just and would never knowingly harm an African-American or insult them nevertheless have some racist beliefs such as that blacks are more prone to crime, tend to be lazy, tend to be less smart, and so on. Probably African-Americans harbor a long list of beliefs about whites.

We can't dispel false beliefs by simply forcing people to keep silent. When we do that, they just hang onto their beliefs and add another belief that society, for crass political or economic reasons, is being hypocritical.

You deal with racism like you deal with any other set of beliefs, by talking to and getting to know each other. After 400 years, don't you think it's about time we Americans got to know each other?

Because white people are afraid to talk about their racist ideas and in fact are not allowed to discuss them, African-Americans aren't listened to when they complain about racism and its impact on their lives. A semantic game: because no one can express it, there is no racism, so how can you be a victim of it?

LEWIS GRIZZARD

Movie makes basic instincts question ratings

Your reporter recently went to see the movie "Basic Instincts," to find out exactly what all the fuss is about.

As you may or may not know, the gay community is upset at "Basic Instincts" because of the way it allegedly portrays homosexuals. Gay pickets even have been spotted at certain theaters featuring the movie.

Grizzard

Hollywood has been portraying Southern white guys like myself as hayseeds, goofballs and bungling Bubbas for years, but I've never thought of picketing a movie theater because of that fact. I guess I was always too busy rotating the tires on my pickup or eating mud.

At any rate here is what I can report on the way "Basic Instincts" portrays homosexuals:

There really is just one featured homosexual, a rather nice looking woman named Roxy. Except for the fact that she cuts her family's throats and tries to run down Michael Douglas in a car in the midst of a jealous rage, I thought she was portrayed as just another cocaine addict choosing an alternative lifestyle.

In one scene she goes into the men's room in a nightclub and sits down on her female lover's lap and gets a quick snort of coke from a man who just happened to be in the stall with them.

But the movie is set in California, which, I suppose, explains all that.

How homosexuals were portrayed was not, however, what I noticed the most about "Basic Instincts." I left the movie more concerned about the fact that we need to do something about the current movie-rating system.

There is "G," for instance, for movies that you can take your 5-year-old and your grandmother to, and nobody in "G" movies will say any bad words or get completely naked.

Then, there's "PG13," which means if you take your 13-year-old, he or she will be able to explain to you what was going on in the scene where three people were under the covers in bed with a duck.

Movies rated "R" means the covers are off and you can see for yourself. In X-rated movies you get to see everybody's quacker.

"Basic Instincts" is rated "R," but it's really more than "R." The movie shows more skin than in a leather furniture store showroom.

I kept missing my mouth with my popcorn because I was afraid if I took my eyes off the screen, I'd miss three lust scenes.

There was frontal nudity and backal nudity. The entire movie was about one millimeter lower for the camera from being a downright "X."

The language was typical for an "R." It would have embarrassed a roof-full of carpenters. What stood out, however, was that nobody in the entire cast seemed able to speak one sentence without uttering at least one industrial strength profanity.

"Basic Instincts," I firmly believe, is more than your everyday "R." It's not quite "X," however, because you don't actually get to see the key moving parts.

I think "Basic Instincts" should have been rated "D" for "Damn, did I just see what I thought I saw?"

If a movie is not quite explicit enough to be an "X," it should be rated "D" and also should fall into the category of movies you don't discuss with a female employee unless you want to risk the chance of a sexual harassment lawsuit.

I should mention that there is a murder plot in "Basic Instincts," which further distinguishes it from an "X."

The trouble is I was too busy trying to figure out just who was doing what to whom to remember who done it.

World in brief

■ Rebels murder 3 hostages after hijacking

BOGOTA, Colombia — Suspected leftist rebels Sunday killed three soldiers who were aboard a commercial airliner the guerrillas had hijacked a day earlier, police said.

The soldiers' bullet-ridden bodies were found in Colombia's eastern plains. The Aerotaca twin-engine plane was hijacked while on a flight between two towns in the area.

"The three cadavers correspond to the three soldiers who were aboard the plane," said a police official interviewed on the RCN radio network. He did not give his name.

Aerotaca general manager Mauricio Hoyos said six people from the plane were released during a brief stopoff Saturday. The plane took off with 13 passengers and three crewmembers aboard.

Hoyos said the number of hijackers was unclear, but local radio stations cited officials as saying the hijackers consisted of two or three young men.

The RCN radio network said authorities, after speaking with the released hostages, believed the hijackers were rebels of the Simon Bolivar guerrilla front, as airline officials also suspected.

Air force craft Sunday were searching for the plane, which Hoyos said had enough fuel to fly for three hours. Except for a brief conversation with the captain Saturday, authorities have had no other contact with crewmembers of the hijackers.

Officials not indicated if any ransom demands have been made.

■ Bosnian troops call off barracks assault

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — Bosnian troops backed down from their threat to attack two federal army strongholds Sunday after the government reportedly reached an agreement on a pullout of Serb-led soldiers.

"Obstacles to the peaceful withdrawal of army personnel from the barracks in Sarajevo have been removed," the republic's B-H news agency said in reporting the agreement.

Under it, several hundred of the federal troops were to leave the Marshal Tito and Viktor Bubanj barracks with only their personal weapons. Such a plan would lessen the threat of a new surge in fighting in Bosnia's capital.

There were no immediate signs of a pullout after the 5 p.m. (10:00 a.m. CDT) deadline set by Bosnian authorities passed.

Fighting overnight Saturday died down near daybreak, but an exploding mortar shell killed Jordi Pujol, a photographer for Spain's Catalan-language daily Avui, and wounded Associated Press photographer David Brauchli. He was operated on for shrapnel in the head, groin and arm.

It was the first death of a journalist in the Bosnian war, which has killed 1,300 people and created 700,000 refugees in 10 weeks. Twenty-three journalists in neighboring Croatia died in fighting that broke out there after the republic declared independence nearly a year ago.

■ Agreement nears, Afghan interim leader says

KABUL, Afghanistan — The head of the interim Islamic government said Sunday that a deal was near on meeting the demand of renegade guerrillas for the removal of a former pro-communist militia from the capital.

Sibghatullah Mojaddidi, president of the ruling council formed by several rebel factions after the communists were ousted last month, said the agreement could restore peace after 14 years of civil war.

But there was no immediate comment from the government's defense minister, Ahmed Shah Masood. The former pro-communist militia, led by Gen. Abdul Rashid Dostam, bolstered his rebel faction after abandoning the government of President Najibullah this year.

Military experts in Kabul have said Masood and the interim government need Dostam's estimated 10,000 militiamen to survive any further fighting with the Hezb-e-Islami guerrilla faction led by hardline fundamentalist Gulbuddin Hekmatyar.

Hekmatyar, a long-time rival of Masood, has refused to join the interim government while the Dostam militiamen remain in Kabul.

Hekmatyar's fighters battled Masood's forces inside Kabul after the communists fell and later shelled the capital after being forced from the city, leaving scores dead and hundreds wounded. A truce has held for more than a week during negotiations, but both sides have been reinforcing their positions around Kabul.

Pope beatifies founder of controversial Opus Dei

VATICAN CITY (AP) — An unusually large crowd of more than 200,000 people jammed St. Peter's Square on Sunday to witness Pope John Paul II beatify the founder of the controversial Roman Catholic organization Opus Dei.

The beatification of Monsignor Josemaria Escriva de Balaguer of Spain was one of the biggest celebrations since John Paul became pope in 1978. Pilgrims from 60 countries came on more than 2,000 buses, hundreds of airline flights and two ships from Spain.

Beatification is the final step before sainthood. Some former Opus Dei members and church liberals who have criticized the group argued that the step was being taken too hastily. Critics say Escriva, who died in 1975, was ill-tempered and manipulative, and created a secretive, conservative and ambitious organization.

But to the worshippers packed under a blazing sun, the ceremony was another sign of Vatican approval for the energetic, orthodox organization. Opus Dei emphasizes church tradition and discipline and the sanctity of everyday work.

John Paul, in glittering gold robes, sat in a high-backed white chair in front of St. Peter's Basilica and listened as two prelates requested the beatification of Escriva and Giuseppina Bakhita, a Sudanese-born nun.

Then, the pontiff announced in Latin: "From now on they can be called 'blessed,' and their feast days can be celebrated."

Three decades in the works, Munich's new airport opens

MUNICH, Germany (AP) — A new $5.3 billion airport opened near the Bavarian capital Sunday to replace one of Europe's most crowded and noisy air fields, but environmentalists protested the ceremonies and promised more rallies.

A charter flight from Turkey was the first arrival at the Franz Josef Strauss airport, named for a late Bavarian political leader. Minutes later, two Lufthansa planes took off simultaneously on parallel runways.

The airport was first proposed in 1963 but was the subject of court challenges that suspended construction in the 1980s.

Protesters draped a pink banner declaring "You are flying direct into a climate catastrophe" on the side of the white metal and glass terminal building. Others handed out leaflets saying aircraft exhaust gases damage the ozone layer, speeding global warming.

Greens party spokesman Christian Magerl said protests would continue against proposals to expand the airport's capacity beyond the projected 14 million passengers a year.

The airport replaces the 52-year-old Riem airport in eastern Munich. It built to handle 5 million people a year, but in 1990 hit a record 11 million.

At midnight Saturday, Riem was closed after its last flight, and 1,600 vehicles guarded by 500 police moved equipment to the new airport.

A 17-mile railroad connects the new airport and the city center.

Construction on the airport began in 1980, but was halted in 1981 because of a court order. It resumed in 1985 with a new plan using 67 percent of the land in the original layout.

NOTICE OF CONSERVATORSHIP OF PROGRESSIVE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Pursuant to Article 21.28-A of the Texas Insurance Code, the Commissioner of Insurance issued an official order No. 92-0454, effective May 11, 1992, placing PROGRESSIVE MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY, Richardson, Texas, in a state of conservatorship. This company is a Chapter 11 mutual life insurance company. Progressive Mutual Life Insurance Company's primary line of business is individual major medical insurance policies.

The Commissioner of Insurance finds that pursuant to Article 21.28-A, Section 5, of the Texas Insurance Code, the company has requested and consented to the appointment of a conservator. Supervision is inadequate to accomplish the rehabilitation of the company.

Under the order, the Conservator will assume control and operation of the company and will take all steps and legal measures necessary to preserve, protect, and recover the assets and property of the company. Efforts are being made for the assumption of the company's business by another insurance company for the protection of its policyholders and the public.

If you are a policyholder of this company, your insurance coverage continues in effect for as long as you pay your premiums. If the company is rehabilitated, your coverage will continue as though nothing happened. If the company is not rehabilitated, it may be placed into receivership or its business reinsured, and you will be so notified. In either event, contractual claim obligations will be paid by the company, by the reinsurer, or by the guaranty fund subject to the limitations provided in law. The guaranty fund provides protection for covered claims up to the amount specified in Article 21.28-D, of the Texas Insurance Code.

Courses of action available to policyholders include continuation or cancellation of their policies. Policyholders who wish to continue their coverage need do nothing more so long as their premiums are paid. If premiums are due, policyholders should continue to pay them in the same amount and manner as in the past in order to keep their coverage in force.

To avoid possible loss of coverage, policyholders must continue to pay premiums unless and until similar insurance can be obtained from another company. Policy provisions with respect to filing claims remain in force and must be observed.

Claims will continue to be handled in the standard process as specified in the insurance contracts issued by the company. Policyholders will be notified if there is any change in claims processing or handling.

Policyholders' rights are governed by the Texas Insurance Code, Texas Department of Insurance rules, and by policyholders' individual contracts of insurance. Policyholders with specific questions regarding policy provisions should seek independent legal advice. No action is required by policyholders under Commissioner's Order No. 92-0454. If any action should be required in the future, policyholders will be notified.

Air show

Andrea Pat

The super-secret, radar-eluding Air Force F-117 Stealth attack fighter plane flies past the crowd.

Air show spectators walk through the cavernous interior of the C-5B Galaxy transport.

WINGS —N— THINGS

The Union Jack flies from an RAF deHavilland Chipmunk trainer.

The Stealth, shrouded in mystery and money, made its Midland debut last weekend before a cast of old-style "prop jobs," supersonic jet warplanes, and thousands of aviation buffs.

The flyover was brief and without fanfare during the Confederate Air Force's Wings-N-Things at Midland International Airport. The impression may last.

Like a jet-propelled black bat with ominous angular lines and a deadly, quick temper, the swept-winged sleuth came out of the sky's curtain of clouds. It swooped in at a pretty good clip, banked and turned, passed over the airport in gear-down slow flight, and quickly bade adieu. With gear up and throttle advanced, the multi-million-dollar Stealth streaked away.

The strange bird — or bat — is the U.S. Air Force's F-117 Stealth, a supersonic fighter designed by Lockheed Aircraft Corp. to sneak undetected into strongly defended enemy air space for reconnaissance and attack missions.

The Stealth is not as easily detectable on radar as are conventional, all-metal aircraft. "We didn't paint much of a target on him (on the radar screen)," said Pat Petosky, manager of the airport's control tower.

The prototype first flew in 1981 and the Air Force adopted the secretive twin-jet aircraft in 1983.

"It was very impressive," Odessa pilot Paige Sibley said of the Stealth's flyover.

She flies conventional propeller-powered aircraft in her quest to fly jet

Military cutbacks translate into fewer education options for many minority students

HOUSTON (AP) — Military cutbacks that have some Americans dreaming of uses for a peace dividend are translating into fewer educational options for minority students.

Daniel Moreno, whose father served in the U.S. Marines and whose uncle made a career out of the Army, planned since he was a boy to enlist. But now, the 20-year-old Houston high school senior is one of thousands of teen-agers and young adults who are learning options available to their parents and grandparents are obsolete.

The new leaner, meaner military won't take Moreno.

The Army turned him down two months ago after he scored poorly on the entrance exam.

The U.S. military — long considered a springboard to upward mobility for minorities — is cutting back and becoming more selective. The vast changes worry many who fear minorities and the disadvantaged will be the losers.

"It's always been my dream," said Moreno, a four-year veteran of the high school's reserve Officers Training Corps program. "It seems like it's challenging. If you can overcome that, you can overcome anything. I just wanted to do it."

The combination of the nationwide recession and the end of the Cold War is prompting the armed services to downsize to 1.6 million from 1.9 million by 1995. Five years ago, the Army, Marines, Air Force and Navy employed 2.1 million.

"As the size of the Army gets smaller, we're going to go for the highest quality we can get," said Douglas Smith, spokesman for the Army's national recruiting headquarters in Fort Sheridan, Ill. "It's more people chasing fewer slots. It's like any organization, you try to fill with higher quality folks first."

Unlike when Moreno's father signed up after dropping out of school in the eighth grade, the military now requires a high school diploma. In 1980, only 54 percent of the recruits had diplomas.

Most applicants also must score in the 50th percentile of the entrance exam. Only a couple of years ago, the cutoff point was 31.

The military is looking for "the same people that any college or major corporation might be looking for," said Buddy Gee, a Houston Army spokesman. "Squeaky clean, no drugs, high school diploma," a good physical condition and no criminal record.

"I'm glad the Army quit being a welfare agency and a proving ground because so many people didn't prove they could do it," Gee said. "It cost too much money to train a person and then put them back out on the street."

Others disagree.

Retired 1st Sgt. Chester Currin, a ROTC instructor at Milby High School, had an eighth-grade education when he hit basic training camp. Yet, he made the Army a career, earned a high school equivalency degree, college credit and raised a family while in the military.

"Today, for example, I wouldn't be able to get into the military," he said. "It's going to be rough on a lot of young men and women that have been able to turn their lives around. The service has really offered them a place to be. In the future, who's going to take up the slack?"

airliners.

"It was probably one of those electric jets, like the F-16 (Fighting Falcon)," Ms. Sibley said of the F-117. "Everything is controlled by electronics. You don't really fly. You are just along for the ride."

She flies by stick-and-rudder. There's no computerization in the airplanes that she pilots.

Though proud of the bat-like fighter, the U.S. Defense Department has not revealed everything about the Stealth.

"Space-age technology is here," surmised pilot Porter Wallis, who also flies remote control aircraft.

"It's moving forward fast," fellow pilot Tommy Fulton said of aviation technology."

Fifty years ago, amid World War II, aviation technology had advanced because of the pressures of war.

Right behind Ms. Sibley, Wallis and Fulton in the Confederate Air Force's giant hangar was the superlative example of high-technology in strategic warplanes in 1942. It was Boeing Aircraft Co.'s four-engine B-29 Superfortress bomber powered by four highly complex, 18-cylinder Wright R-3350 Cyclone radial engines. Each power plant turned a four-bladed propeller. The B-29, which was the high-tech sibling of the revered and dependable Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress, made its maiden flight on Sept. 21, 1942.

All told, 3,970 Superfortresses were produced during the war. Of the lot, only the CAF's B-29 "Fifi" is flying.

The B-29 boasts a 141-foot wingspan and, fitted for combat, was designed to carry a 10-man crew. The F-117 Stealth has a 45-foot wingspan and a crew of one — the pilot.

Not all airplanes have on-board pilots.

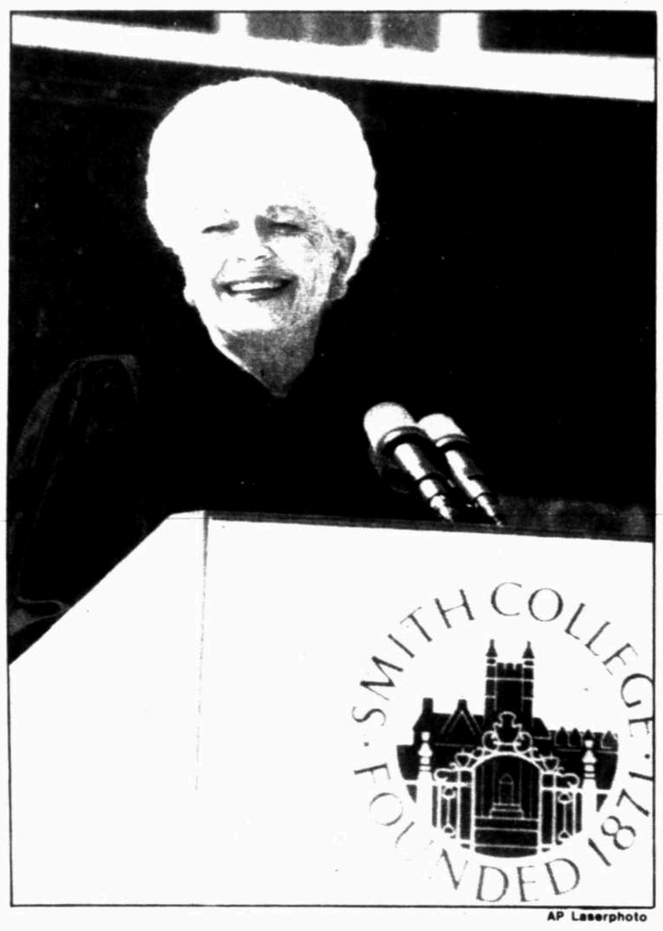

The diminutive airplanes that Ms. Sibley, Wallis, Fulton and Bob Uhr were towering over take no crew members in the cockpit. None could fit in.

They were scaled-down airplanes, including models of the Boeing B-17 Flying Fortress, the Lockheed P-38 Lightning, and the Douglas Dauntless dive bomber, which West Texas model aircraft builders had brought to the CAF event.

Uhr, who lives in Monahans, brought several of his scaled-down airplanes, including the Spitfire, the P-51 Mustang, the Waco and the Zero.

"I scratch build them," he said. Mostly, they are constructed of balsa and spruce.

"You learn something about life" in building and flying airplanes, Uhr said. "They become dear to you. And if you tear one of them up, it's like losing a loved one."

Lubbock skydiver dies

Staff report

STANTON — A Lubbock skydiver, jumping for the third time at Martin County Airport, fell to his death Saturday night when he failed to open his parachute, Stanton police said.

Christopher McMeens, 29, was jumping with four other people at about 6:45 p.m. McMeens jumped second and made no attempt to open his parachute, police said. Another skydiver followed McMeens in an attempt to locate him. McMeens was pronounced dead at the scene.

Federal Aviation Administration investigators were expected to examine the scene today, but Stanton officials called the death accidental.

"We're assuming at this point that he blacked out or perhaps panicked and failed to open his reserve," a Stanton police spokesman said.

The death is the second skydiving fatality at the airport in just over a year. On May 5, 1991, Odessa advertising executive Price Womack, 40, died when his parachute became entangled with the parachute of Midlander Brent Berry, 39.

The collision occurred when Womack tried to avoid the discarded parachute of fellow skydiver Jennifer Christon, who had cut away her parachute when it failed to open completely. Ms. Christon opted for her reserve parachute and was uninjured.

Womack and Berry fell from about 1,000 feet. Berry landed on top of Womack and was critically injured.

Dallas man posts bond after arrest at protest during Bush SMU speech

UNIVERSITY PARK (AP) — A Dallas man posted bond Sunday on charges stemming from his arrest at Southern Methodist University as President Bush was giving a commencement address.

Jack Conrow, 20, had a knife and a sign reading "Give Hinckley another chance" when he was arrested Saturday, police said. He was walking toward the auditorium where Bush soon delivered the address.

Conrow appeared before a municipal court judge who set a $10,000 bail bond, said A.T. Martinez, dispatcher for the University Park police.

The suspect is not an SMU student, officials said.

CPS workers aim to balance public, parental expectations

FORT WORTH (AP) — Child Protective Service workers say they perform a daily balancing act brought on by public and parental expectations.

They're expected to vigorously identify abused youths but often face criticism from parents who say their methods needlessly traumatize children.

For example last month, a 7-year-old girl, examined at her school for physical abuse by a man who didn't identify himself, came home frightened and confused.

The man turned out to be a state CPS caseworker. Such incidents have sparked criticism from parents and civil rights advocates who contend the agency is out of control.

"I don't think it's right," the father of the David Smith Elementary second-grader told the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. "When I take her to school in the morning, I leave her in the trust of the principals and teachers.

"I tell her not to talk to strangers and then they turn her over to strangers and the child doesn't know what to think."

The caseworker, acting on an anonymous complaint that the Haltom City parents had physically abused their daughter, took off the girl's pants at the school and examined her, the newspaper reported.

Texas law does not require CPS workers to notify parents before an examination or to have another person present — even if the child is of the opposite sex.

State officials, defending the practice, say it is designed to maintain confidentiality and prevent parents or others from hindering an investigation.

Caseworkers from CPS, which investigates child abuse and neglect cases, are asked to protect thousands of children every year.

"We have to be safe rather than sorry, so we have to investigate," said CPS spokeswoman Andrea Helms.

Texas CPS caseworkers last year investigated 90,601 child abuse reports, up almost 8,000 from 1990.

A few weeks after the report on the Haltom City girl, CPS dismissed the case.

Often, schools feel the brunt of parents' fear and anger after CPS has interviewed their children, said Sylvia Nichols, Arlington schools' director of guidance and at-risk programs.

A man who has twice been accused of physically abusing his sons said the system should be changed. The father from Coryell County said his sons refused to remove their clothes when asked by caseworkers, one of whom was female.

Both CPS investigations were dropped after long battles.

"This is setting a dangerous precedent," said Scott Buchanan, a member of Victims of Child Abuse Laws. "We teach our children not to allow anyone to disrobe them except a doctor or a nurse."

Report: Military inspectors help stifle complaints

DALLAS (AP) — Some military inspectors, responsible for exposing fraud and abuse of authority, have helped commanders stifle complaints and retaliate against whistleblowers, a published report says.

A copyright story in Sunday's editions of The Dallas Morning News reports the inspectors general sometimes showed confidential complaints to the same commanders accused of wrongdoing.

The newspaper also cited sources who said they received more scrutiny than their complaints.

The inspectors general of the respective services branches are senior military officers. Inspectors, investigators and other officials who work for them typically are referred to as "IGs." They may be civilians or service members, but they ultimately answer to a uniformed superior.

Former civilian Army inspector Don Thompson remembered the reaction of one superior to a new complaint.

"He would pick it up and the first thing he would say is, 'How can this get us in trouble?' Not 'What did you find?' or 'What's wrong here?' "

After Michael Tufariello discovered payroll fraud at the Dallas Naval Air Station in 1983-'84, he brought his allegations to a Navy inspector general office in New Orleans.

The investigation stalled.

"Literally they said that too many people in the upper echelon were involved in this thing, and if it came out it would put mud on their faces," the former chief petty officer said.

But an investigation launched from Washington gave merit to Tufariello's allegations. However, he was forced into a psychiatric evaluation and passed over for promotion.

"Once things got hot and the investigation started, all of them — from a rear admiral on down — put their papers in to retire," Tufariello said.

The Morning News spent two months examining the military inspector general system. The research included interviews with more than 50 people and reviews of lawsuits, reports and a draft report by Senate investigators that never was officially released.

Forfeiture laws fall under question as government bounty grows

HOUSTON (AP) — The federal government is learning that crime pays.

By using forfeiture laws designed to take the profits of drug dealers and other criminals, the government has confiscated $1 billion worth of cars, homes, cash and luxuries, the Houston Chronicle reported Sunday.

In a copyright story, the newspaper reported that a computer analysis of federal seizures from the Houston area, which ranks sixth in the nation in forfeited goods, shows the law is applied so liberally that it is often the ordinary citizen and not the criminal who is being caught.

"There's an attitude in the federal government that anything they can grab is theirs — and they're pretty much right," Houston defense attorney Kent Schaffer said. "It's a barbaric system."

The federal forfeiture system is based on the premise that a person is guilty until he can prove his innocence.

Under the law, the government may seize property based on "probable cause" — a legal test more than mere suspicion but far less than actual proof — and may keep the property without ever filing criminal charges or proving the item represented ill-gotten gains.

Instead, it is up to the property owner to prove he has an innocent claim to the goods.

"What they're doing is stealing without due process," contends Houston defense attorney Jim Lavine, who is active in a national organization of criminal defense lawyers trying to persuade Congress to revise the forfeiture laws.

"We've gone way too far in this 'War on Drugs.'"

Federal officials, however, say the forfeiture system hits criminals where it hurts them most — in their pocketbooks — and innocent citizens who get caught up inadvertently in the system can always appeal.

"If you were just able to prosecute people for their criminal activities and give them long sentences, they would still have the fruits of their crime," said Ken Magidson, who heads a federal drug task force based in Houston and supervises forfeiture cases handled by the U.S. attorney's office.

"It's not enough to just put them behind bars. The alternative is, if you wanted to stop doing forfeitures, you would cripple law enforcement, and these organizations would be even stronger than they are right now. To me, that outweighs the occasional problem that arises in the system."

But the Chronicle's study of the forfeiture system, including analysis of cars, cash and property seized by the federal government from 1986 to 1989 in the Houston district which stretches south to Laredo and Brownsville, suggests problems with forfeiture laws have grown along with their use.

Among the findings:

■ Seizures rose dramatically in the four-year period to more than $38 million a year for the Houston region, which federal officials attribute not to an increase in drug cases or other crimes but to a widening use of the forfeiture laws. Some properties were seized from citizens who were never charged with crimes.

■ The sharpest increases were in seizures of vehicles — quick-money items that are easiest for the government to keep because many owners cannot afford to fight for return of inexpensive cars.

■ The more property the government seized, the bigger the share it had to give back. In 1986, for example, the government kept 80 percent of all vehicles seized. By 1989, it had to give back more than half.

■ Federal agencies kept increasingly expensive items for themselves.

Tarrant County leads state in youth violent crimes

DALLAS (AP) — Youths in Dallas and Tarrant counties commit more violent crimes per capita than their counterparts in other parts of the state, according to a published report.

The Texas Juvenile Probation Commission says 55.4 violent crimes were committed in Dallas County per 10,000 juveniles in 1991, The Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

The Dallas County rate is surpassed in the state only by Tarrant County, which last year had a rating of 57.7, the newspaper said. Those numbers compared with a 39.9 rating in Harris County.

"The only thing I can say with certainty is juveniles are increasingly violent, and as a result, we're coming into a decade that will be the most violent in the city's history," said state District Judge Hal Gaither, one of two Dallas County juvenile court judges.

Once a rarity, violent crimes made up more than 20 percent of the felonies committed by juveniles last year, according to county records. Adolescents committed 45 homicides in Dallas County last year, up slightly from 43 in 1990.

Through April of this year, juveniles already had committed 33 homicides, according to statistics at the Dallas County Juvenile Department. If that pace continues, the county will have more than 90 juvenile slayings in 1992 — a 100 percent increase.

"It makes you tremble for what the future holds," Gaither said.

Most juvenile authorities believe the increase is caused by a continuing deterioration of families, especially those in low-income neighborhoods.

"It is not unusual for us to contact a parent after a kid has taken his mom's or dad's gun and been arrested, and they want their gun back but not the kid," said Dallas Police Lt. Tom Moorman.

Officials say juvenile crime in Dallas County not only is getting more commonplace, but the crimes also are becoming more serious and the offenders younger.

Last year, nine of the county's 45 murders by adolescents were committed by 14-year-old boys. The youngest suspects arrested for sexual assault and aggravated assault were 10. Sixteen robberies were committed by kids who were 12 years old.

Bob Logan, director of research and analysis at the probation commission, said the trend toward more young violent offenders began in Harris County three years ago.

"By 1990, it seemed to have permeated other major metropolitan areas in the state. By 1991, it spread to the other metropolitan areas, like Amarillo and Lubbock," he said.

The problem is so relatively new that authorities are still trying to unravel its complex causes.

"I don't see any answers on the horizon," said Steven Kossman, executive director of the Dallas County Juvenile Department.

Officials study chemical emissions to try to explain border birth defects

HOUSTON (AP) — At least 72 babies born without brains along both sides of the Rio Grande in recent years have health officials considering the dangers of chemical emissions from nearby maquiladoras, or industrial plants, a Houston newspaper reported Sunday.

The Houston Post reported 30 documented cases of babies born without brains in Texas in as many months, while at least 42 cases have been identified in Matamoros, Mexico, during the same time period.

The birth defect, anencephaly, causes the fetuses to develop without a brain. With misshapen and incomplete skulls, few of these babies are born alive. Those that are usually die within hours.

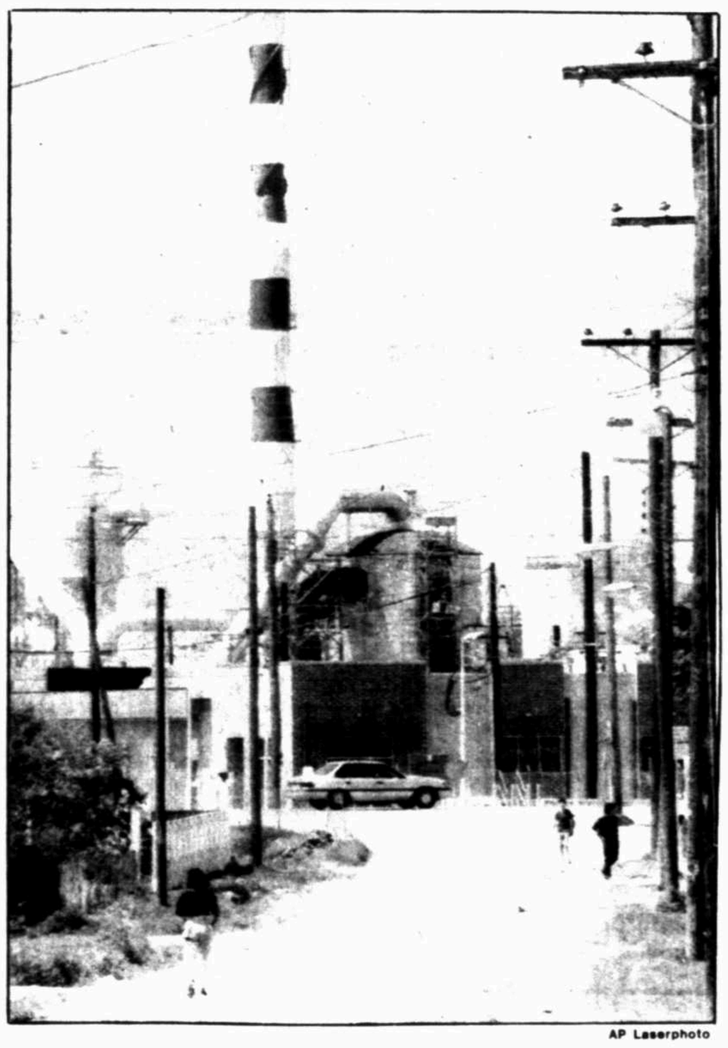

Most of the Texas babies were born in Brownsville within a 2.4-mile radius of the Rio Grande and international border. In Mexico, at least a dozen of the 42 cases occurred at one hospital alone.

Three such babies were born at one Brownsville hospital within a 36-hour period last spring, an incident that sent doctors hurrying to notify state health officials.

Texas medical researchers say the trend may have been caused from toxic air or water produced from the maquiladoras, or twin industrial plants. There are about 2,000 maquiladoras employing about a half-million workers operating in Mexico, most along the border with the United States. They use imported U.S. materials and cheap Mexican labor to produce goods.

Any number of factories use common chemical solvents — xylene and toluene — that have been shown to contribute to anencephaly and a related defect, spina bifida.

One of the more popular theories is that emissions from the Mexican maquiladoras are lifted into the air by prevailing south and southeasterly winds, spreading toxic materials throughout Matamoros and ultimately depositing them in its American twin-city, Brownsville.

AP Laserphoto

People walk past a manufacturing plant in Matamoros, Mexico, earlier this month. Researchers are studying the wind and poisons blown into Brownsville from this and other plants in Mexico to see if it is causing the proliferation of tragic and unusual birth defects in the South Texas city.

Air samples since the incidents have consistently detected the presence of toluene, although its source has not been determined.

Bill Lipps, president of Pan American Laboratories of Brownsville, will conduct extensive testing for state officials this summer in an attempt to find an answer to the problem.

Meanwhile, the federal Centers for Disease Control and Texas Department of Health are conducting a joint study. The largest investigation TDH has undertaken, the study is expected to be complete by July 1, Dennis Perrotta, TDH director for epidemiology, said.

College president says some fired staffers had questionable degrees

DALLAS (AP) — Paul Quinn College interim president Winson D. Powers says some of the 14 staffers he fired last week were let go because the authenticity of their doctoral degrees could not be verified.

Powers had earlier attributed the firings to budget shortfalls at the financially ailing institution.

On Saturday, Powers said there was more than money involved.

"I will not cotton to people who profess to have doctor's degrees and we can't find the college that they got their degree from," said Powers, who refused to name specific employees.

Only a few of the 14 fired last week had questionable degrees, he told The Dallas Morning News.

Powers said he is continuing to look at school records to see if further terminations are needed.

"We're continuing to review what we need to enhance our educational status, maintain appropriate accreditation status and keep the appropriate ratio of doctors to non-doctors," he said.

At least 30 percent of Paul Quinn's faculty must have doctoral degrees to meet accreditation standards. Powers said those standards now are being met.

The newspaper said Powers now has fired 10 percent of the college staff since he took over as interim president last month.

On Friday, Powers blamed the firings on poor job performance, budget shortfalls and a belief that some were being paid improperly with federal funds.

Bachelor Auction raises funds, enthusiasm

By Linda Anderson
Staff writer

Take 35 of Midland's most eligible bachelors, dressed in tuxedos and armed with fabulous date packages to places like Las Vegas, Nev., the Albuquerque balloon festival and Disneyland; stir in several hundred single women, armed with cash and credit cards, and you have the recipe for the annual Big Brother/Big Sister Benefit Bachelor Auction.

The sixth annual Bachelor Auction, which is a fund-raiser for Big Brothers/ Big Sisters, was presented Saturday at the Petroleum Club. Nancy Anderson-Hill, executive director for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, said the event is the agency's "biggest (annual) fundraiser, aside from the United Way campaign in the fall."

This year "we hope to raise $15,000" for Big Brothers/Big Sisters, she said. The money will be used for general operating expenses, "and to recruit and screen new volunteers and match as many kids as possible, and to maintain the matches already in existence." Currently, about 130 children — a high percentage of them boys — are on the waiting list to be matched with Big Brothers or Big Sisters.

According to information from the agency, "Big Brothers/Big Sisters serves children ages 6-16 from single-parent families. The agency's goals are to help children reach their full potential while assisting them in positive social, emotional and academic development. A Big Brother, Big Sister, a married couple or a junior or senior in high school is matched with a child and spends two to three hours a week with that child. The professional staff (of Big Brothers/Big Sisters) screens volunteers and children, makes matches and provides support for the match relationship." The agency has been in Midland since 1975.

This year the auction offered something new. Drew Pearson, former Dallas Cowboy and National Football League superstar, was on hand as a special guest. Pearson, speaking to the crowd about having fun at the auction, reminded everyone to "not forget the spirit of the reason we are here — to support Big Brothers/Big Sisters."

In addition to the Bachelor Auction itself, a silent auction was presented during the evening. Items available for bidding included such celebrity memorabilia as a "Hook" poster autographed by Robin Williams; a script from "Evening Shade" autographed by Burt Reynolds; a New York Knicks T-shirt autographed by Pat Riley; and a script from M*A*S*H autographed by Alan Alda.

The bachelors who, with their date packages, were participating in the event, seemed to be enjoying the auction almost as much as the bidders were.

Bachelor Mark Henkhaus, 34, was one of those men. "I got volunteered," he laughed, "by a couple of friends of mine who are involved in Big Brothers/Big Sisters." Henkhaus, the father of two, added that as a single parent, "I realize how important it is that they (children) have someone to turn to."

Bachelor Tim Rosborough, 32, was participating in his first Bachelor Auction. "A friend of mine with Big Brothers/Big Sisters conned me into this," he said, adding that he may become a Big Brother himself. "Several of the guys (participating in the auction) do have Little Brothers, and it does seem like a good program."

Even the Masters of Ceremonies were volunteers. MC Bill Dingus said he is very involved in working with the United Way, and since Big Brothers/Big Sisters is a United Way agency, he was glad to help out. Dingus said while he never participated in the Bachelor Auction itself, "I was a door prize three years ago" in the raffle part of the auction.

Mike Conaway also served as master of ceremonies, and the auctioneer was Dennis Black.

This year's bachelors were: Rene' H. Barreda, Mickey Cargile, Mark Chesson, Jerry Clearman, David Daniel, Don Robby Davidson, Mike Deichert, Douglas K. Dietrich, Mike Dreyer, Mike Emanuel, Fred Forthuber, Marc D. Graham, Craig Gropper, Mike Harrell, Henkhaus, Randy Herring, Robert B. Holton, Pat Hurley, Boomer Kingston, Tony Lewis, Kevin Lilly, David L. Lindley, Mark Linroth, Kevin Myers, Woody Roberts, Rosborough, Vernon Shaw, Ray Schoaff, Tod Slaton, Brooks L. Smith, David "Dok" Standefer, Rick Turrentine, Charles Viktorin, Will Wallace and Fred G. Walsh.

Ushers were Monica McAnear and Debbie Torres; hair stylists were Holly Herzer and Laura Rodriguez; and pianist was Scott Aycock. Photographs were by Lisa S. Frosch and tuxedos were from Janee's Evening Wear.

The group's board of directors are Rick Davis, president; Robert Burns, president elect; Jan Baker, vice president/operations; Russell Malm, vice president/fundraising; Paul Bauernfeind, vice president/recruitment; Patty Keys, treasurer; Melinda Martin, secretary; Perry Marchioni, past president; and Tony Farish, Rebecca Petty, Mike Moore, Jan South, Rod Slaton, Leigh Sell, Trish Kile, Horace Brown, Judy Deeds, Robbyne Fuller, Jane Hellinghausen, Owen, Linda Nicholson, Ben Conley III, Leslie Hendrix, Brad Howard and Mike Velasco.

DEAR ABBY
Woman with breast cancer fears surgery

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Your help is needed. There are no friends or family members to whom I can turn.

Van Buren

A cancerous lump was found in my breast. I've had medical opinions, read everything I can find on the subject, and have all the facts — and I do not want that breast removed. To know that I may wake up and find that I am only part of a woman scares me to death. I have no support from my husband; he was more concerned when my wisdom teeth were removed.

I thought maybe someone from the American Cancer Society could help, but I was told to hurry up and have it done, and worry about the rest later.

How do other women handle that kind of problem? No one knows about this except my husband. I feel that there is no need to worry my family. I really don't want all the unwanted advice I'd get from them. I have been a loner all of my life, and this is the only way I can handle it.

Death is better than surgery. I'm damned if I do, and I'm damned if I don't. Sign me ... DEATH ROW WOMAN

DEAR WOMAN: Death is not better than surgery! The American Cancer Society CAN help you. Many women live through this kind of ordeal and emerge with flying colors, and you can, too. You may be a candidate for more limited surgery than the "old" radical mastectomy. Call your local American Cancer Society for a referral to a breast cancer specialist. In the meantime, share your feelings with your physician. And please write again and include your name, address and telephone number.

DEAR ABBY: My husband of 25 years walked out and left me with two teen-agers to raise. He said he was in love with a woman he works with. I wondered why he worked all those long hours and never had time for his family. He told me he wanted to be president of the company he worked for, which employed about 25,000. I was very naive. I believed him. Now I know that the real reason was that he was having an affair with his secretary.

After a very emotional time and no self-esteem, I see now that life goes on. My children and I are going to survive after many therapy sessions and the support of friends and family. One thing that helped me during this trying time was one of your columns. The response about the man who has a lady for a wife and will pick up some tramp described my situation perfectly.

Please reprint that story to help some other woman whose marriage has ended due to adultery. Thanks for your help. — A LADY

DEAR LADY: If the item has helped you regain your perspective after your trauma, I am gratified. Here it is:

DEAR ABBY: Why will a married man pick up a tramp and treat her like a lady, then turn around and treat his wife (who is a lady) like a tramp? — MINNIE

DEAR MINNIE: A man picks up a tramp because he wants a female companion who is no better than he is. In her company, he doesn't feel inferior. He rewards her by treating her like a lady. He treats his wife (who is a lady) like a tramp because he feels that by degrading her, he will bring her down to his level. This makes him feel guilty, so to get even with his wife for making him feel guilty, he keeps right on punishing her.

Dodger moves

LOS ANGELES (AP) — First baseman Kal Daniels, out for nearly three weeks with a sore right knee, was reactivated by the Los Angeles Dodgers on Sunday after Darryl Strawberry was placed on the 15-day disabled list.

Daniels, who hasn't driven in a run in 25 at-bats this season, did not start against the New York Mets. But he was healthy enough to return to the 25-man roster, according to general manager Fred Claire.

"He's been working hard, and we thought he was close," Claire said. "Had he not been ready, we would have brought up somebody else. It's probably a day earlier than the plan, but we've got to adjust the plan."

Claire's plans had to be altered suddenly when Strawberry went on the disabled list because of a herniated disc in his lower back.

Nugget news

DENVER (AP) — Denver officials say they expect to announce the hiring of former Nuggets star Dan Issel as the team's head coach on Wednesday.

"We've got a couple of i's to dot and t's to cross," said Nuggets general manager Bernie Bickerstaff. "Monday we should get that done, and Wednesday have an announcement."

Charlotte vice president Gene Littles and Nuggets assistant Mike Evans are expected to be Issel's assistant coaches, according to The Denver Post.

Cavs, Bulls forge ahead

■ Cleveland reaches the Eastern Conference finals for the first time since 1976.

Associated Press

RICHFIELD, Ohio — The biggest game in the Cleveland Cavaliers' history turned out to be one of their best.

Brad Daugherty scored 16 first-quarter points and the Cavaliers didn't let up, beating the Boston Celtics 122-104 Sunday and advancing to the Eastern Conference finals for the first time since 1976.

It was only the fourth time in 21 tries that the Celtics lost the seventh game of a playoff series. They are 6-2 in seventh games in the Bird-McHale-Parish era, which may be coming to an end.

It marked a giant step forward in Cleveland's recovery after more than a decade of mismanagement, missteps and injuries.

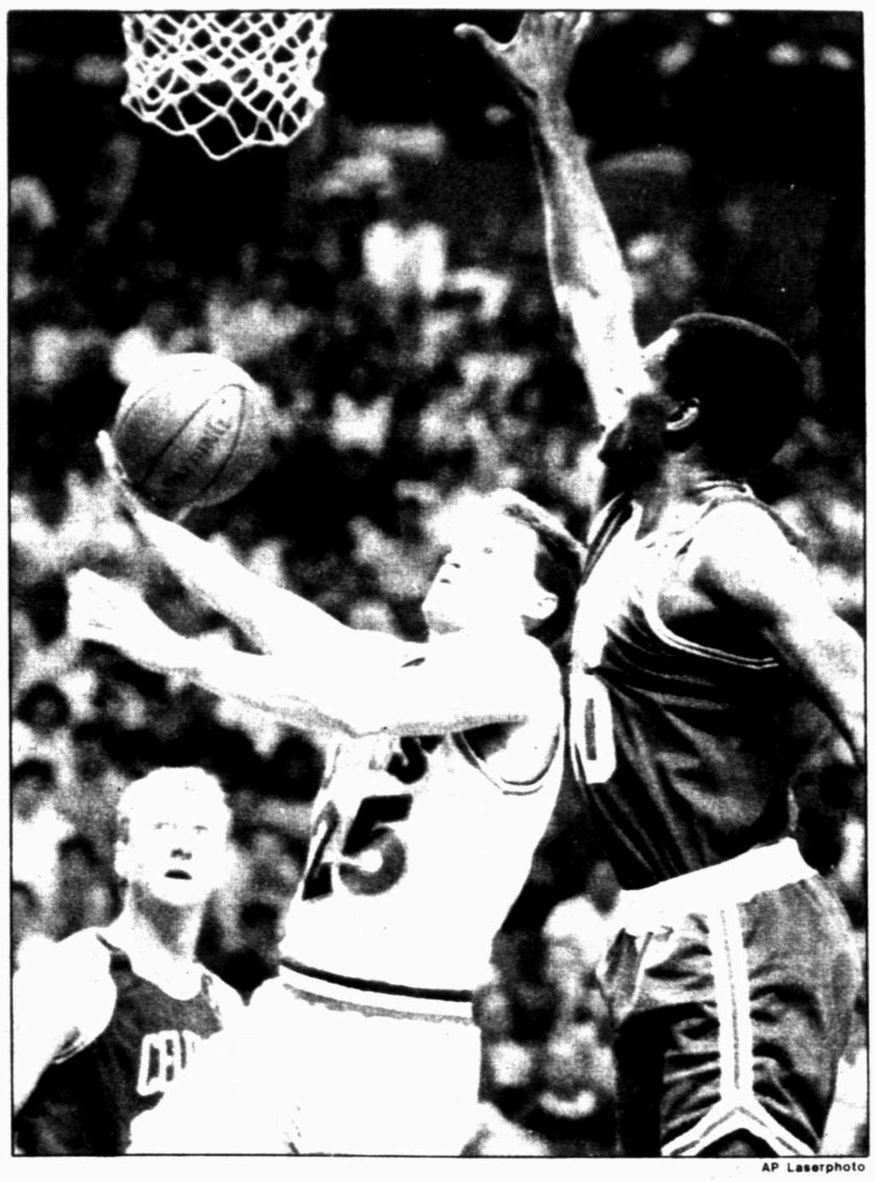

"It's a great accomplishment. We've struggled with injuries throughout our careers," Daugherty said. "People got traded. People got injured. Those types of things are disruptive. We've finally got everybody healthy, and now we'll see what happens."

The Cavaliers, perennial losers in the early 1980s, became competitive again soon after Wayne Embry became general manager in 1986. But they missed the playoffs a year ago, their season doomed by injuries that sidelined Mark Price and John Williams.

They turned it around this year, matching a franchise record with 57 regular-season victory, then eliminating New Jersey — and now Boston.

Cleveland had been knocked out of the playoffs by Boston twice before, and the Celtics forced a seventh game by handing the Cavs their worst playoff loss ever, 122-91 Friday night at the Boston

■ Jordan comes alive with 42 points and Chicago kills the Knicks' bid to reach the Eastern Conference finals.

Associated Press

CHICAGO — The Chicago Bulls stayed alive in a bid to repeat as NBA champions Sunday when Michael Jordan gave a repeat performance.

Jordan, six-time scoring champion and career average leader in the playoffs, scored 42 points in Chicago's 110-81 victory over New York that gave the Bulls the Eastern Conference semifinal series 4-3. They will play Cleveland in the conference finals starting Tuesday night at Chicago Stadium.

Scottie Pippen, outplayed by New York's Xavier McDaniel for most of the series, also had a solid seventh-game performance for the Bulls with 17 points, 11 assists and 11 rebounds.

"The Knicks woke us up," Jordan said. "We went into the series sort of sleepwalking. Everyone seemed to expect a sweep. But we responded to the pressure of the seventh game and played more like people expected."

Supposedly worn out by the Knicks' physical tactics throughout the series, Jordan spent most of Game 7 wearing out the nets, especially in the first half when he scored 29 points, more than half the Bulls' total.

"It was mentally draining to wake up every day having to face this physical, brutal team," Jordan said. "It would've been very disappointing not to get to the level we did last year. If I was tired, I didn't feel it. This is the kind of game you want to play."

Chicago took control defensively in the third quarter, holding the Knicks to 13 points on 5-for-19 shooting. New York trailed just 60-57 with 9:01 left before

Betsy King walks off the 18th green with her first LPGA Championship.

Betsy King reigns over LPGA world

■ King becomes the first player in LPGA history to shoot four rounds in the 60s at a major championship.

Associated Press

BETHESDA, Md. — Betsy King throttled a tough golf course, devastated the competition and rewrote the record books Sunday in coasting to her first LPGA Championship.

King shot a 5-under-par 66 for an 11-stroke victory, the 26th of her career and fifth in a major championship. It was the largest margin of victory in the 38-year history of the prestigious tournament, breaking the record of 10 strokes by Patty Sheehan in 1984.

King's 267 over four rounds was an LPGA record in any tournament.

"This being a par-71 kind of helped a little bit," she said. "But you wouldn't expect that on this golf course. It's not that easy."

King, 36, sure made it look that way. She completed four trips over the difficult 6,246-yard Bethesda Country Club course with 19 birdies and just two bogeys. She led the event wire-to-wire and became the only player in LPGA history to shoot four rounds in the 60s at a major championship.

"One of the greatest performances I've ever seen," JoAnne Carner said. "Especially on this course, where you

Orlando wins O'Neal sweepstakes

Second-worst NBA team draws chance to draft LSU center

By Hal Bock
AP Sports Writer

SECAUCUS, N.J. — Orlando general manager Pat Williams, who came into the NBA lottery equipped with the second-worst record in the NBA and the second most ping pong balls in the draft lottery drum, figured the numbers.

Now, they're on Shaquille O'Neal's side

Williams came up with the lucky ball Sunday and the right to select LSU's 7-foot-1 All-American with the No. 1 pick in the draft June 24 at Portland. Now the trick is to sign a player who figures to cost upwards of $6 million a year.

"O'Neal is very special," Williams said. "It improves us, no question, if we can work all this out."

O'Neal

O'Neal, who was unavailable for comment Sunday, has indicated a preference for Los Angeles. Because the Clippers and Lakers were in the playoffs this season, they missed the O'Neal grabbag. To get to LA, O'Neal's rights would have to be traded, a move he could force by refusing to sign with the Magic. Williams couldn't imagine why he wouldn't.

"Everybody else wants to come to Orlando," the GM said. "He's from the south. He likes warm weather. It's a warm, gracious city. We'll make him feel at home."

But what about LA, Williams was asked.

"We are the LA of the East," he said.

Orlando had 10 chances at the No. 1 pick because its 21-61 record was the second-poorest this season. Only Minnesota (15-67) had a worse record and more chances. But the Timberwolves, with 11 balls in the drum, came up with the third pick, behind Charlotte.

The remaining order of the draft in inverted order of won-loss records for the other non-playoff teams will be Dallas, Denver, Washington, Sacramento, Milwaukee, Philadelphia, Atlanta and Houston.

"When Minnesota was called (at third), suddenly my heart was racing," Williams said. "When the Charlotte card was turned over, my sense was we had 10 in there and they had four so it favored us. It was a little overwhelming."

Allan Bristow, coach of the Hornets, got a break when Charlotte, equipped with just four chances, wound up with the No. 2 pick. He said the pick almost certainly would be Alonzo Mourning of Georgetown.

"Barring any flaws, we've got to fill a void with a defensive presence and that means it's more toward Mourning," he said. "We're 95-96 percent certain but I don't want to say definitely until we bring him in and see how he fits in with the Hornets."

That would likely leave Player of the Year Christian Laettner of Duke for Minnesota. "We'll get one of the three big players everyone's talking about," said Bob Stein, president of the Timberwolves.

O'Neal is the highest profile player in the draft, largely because of his universally accaimed pro potential. But the draft has a number of other talented players, who chose to come out early. They include Jim Jackson of Ohio State, Harold Miner of Southern Cal and Tracy Murray of UCLA.

Among the 4-year players are Player of the Year Christian Laettner of Duke, Alonzo Mourning of Georgetown, Todd Day and Lee Mayberry of Arkansas, LaPhonso Ellis of Notre Dame, Doug Christie of Pepperdine, Tom Gugliotta of North Carolina State, Robert Horry of Alabama, and Byron Houston of Oklahoma State.

Indy field decided

■ Didier Theys of Belgium comes up short in an attempt to qualify a second Midland car.

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Rookie Jimmy Vasser was bumped but not beaten Sunday, regaining a spot in the record-smashing field of the Indianapolis 500 with a backup car he qualified 4 mph faster than his earlier effort.

The 26-year-old Vasser outshone everyone on the final day of qualifications, including former Indy winners Tom Sneva and Gordon Johncock, both of whom also overcame tough odds and bad breaks to make the 76th Indy race.

Didier Theys of Belgium did not. Theys, attempting to qualify a second car for the Midland-based Hall/VDS — Pennzoil team, suffered a blown engine on the second lap with 40 minutes remaining.

Hall/VDS already qualified its first car, driven by John Andretti, who will start in the middle of the fifth row.

Johncock avoided disqualification after disallowed protests by the teams of the two alternates for the 33-car field. It was determined by the sanctioning U.S. Auto Club that a rule prohibiting more than one driver from using the same engine to qualify was no longer on the books.

The average for this year's starters is 223.479 mph. The last and slowest qualifier, rookie Ted Prappas at 219.173, is faster than the former record field average of 218.590 set last year.

Vasser, from Discovery Bay, Calif., was among 27 qualifiers on the first of two weekends of time trials. He spent the ensuing week knowing his four-lap average of 218.268 mph was vulnerable and working in his backup car.

On Sunday, with tension building and

■ Indy 500 Lineup/3C

rain threatening through the day, Vasser's emotions were like a roller coaster.

"I heard all the horror stories," Vasser said. "We just lived it."

After 1983 Indy winner Sneva became the 33rd qualifer with just three hours remaining in Sunday's session, Vasser remained "on the bubble" with the slowest speed.

Johncock, a two-time winner who had blown seven engines since practice opened May 2, was mercifully quick in bumping Vasser's primary car from the tentative lineup. He turned in a run at 219.288, with each succeeding lap faster

OHS boys claim state track title

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Although Odessa High came to the state track meet with enough firepower to win the Class 5A state championship, they had to overcome a challenge by Longview in the meet's final event.

"They're good kids. They came down here to win the thing and that's what they did," Odessa coach Kent Jackson said at the conclusion of the rain-delayed two-day meet Saturday night.

Odessa went into the 1,600-meter relay with 44 points to 28 for Longview, which had the best qualifying time in the 1,600. All Odessa had to do to win the state title was finish fourth if Longview won the event.

Odessa did what it had to do, finishing fourth behind Longview's first place. It gave Odessa a 52-48 team total for the team trophy.

Saturday's meet was marred by a three-hour rain delay that included flood warnings and a tornado scare. Many of the meet's events were com-

Felix Jose's grand slam leads Cards past Astros

Associated Press

National

HOUSTON — Felix Jose hit a grand slam and drove in a career-high five runs and Luis Alicea drove in the go-ahead run with a ninth-inning triple, leading the St. Louis Cardinals past the Houston Astros 7-5 Sunday.

The Cardinals have won seven of their last eight games to move within 1½ games of first-place Pittsburgh in the NL East.

With the score 5-5, Ray Lankford doubled with one out in the ninth off Doug Jones (3-3) and Alicea then tripled over the head of center fielder Steve Finley. Jose singled in Alicea.

Since coming off the disabled list on April 29, Jose has hit in 16 of 17 games, going 29 for 70 (.414) with 20 RBIs and four home runs.

Cris Carpenter (2-1) pitched two-thirds of an inning for the victory and Lee Smith pitched the ninth for his 14th save.

Jose's second career grand slam gave St. Louis a 4-1 lead in the third. A single by Bien Figueroa, his first major league hit, a fielder's choice by Jose DeLeon and a walk to Alicea set the stage for Jose's two-out grand slam.

The Astros cut their deficit to 4-2 in the fourth on Eddie Taubensee's RBI double.

Padres 6, Pirates 5

PITTSBURGH — Kevin Ward's homer started San Diego's five-run fifth inning as the Padres completed a three-game weekend sweep of division-leading Pittsburgh.

Andy Benes (4-3) continued to pitch well away from home, checking the Pirates on three runs and seven hits in 7⅔ innings. Benes is 4-1 with a 1.84 ERA on the road and won twice as the Padres went 7-4 on their longest road trip of the season.

Randy Myers pitched the final two-thirds of an inning for his 11th save, allowing a two-run double to Jay Bell with two out in the ninth. Andy Van Slyke struck out to end the game.

The Pirates have lost four straight at home and four of five overall and were swept at home in a three-game series for the first time since Aug. 10-12, 1990, by St. Louis.

The Padres have won four straight, five of six and seven of nine and have had 10 or more hits in all but one of their last eight games.

Phillies 5, Reds 4

CINCINNATI (AP) — Lenny Dykstra, Mariano Duncan and Dave Hollins had RBI singles as Philadelphia scored three ninth-inning runs off a wild Rob Dibble.

Dibble (0-1) took a 4-2 lead into the ninth, but couldn't find the strike zone. Steve Lake led off with his third single of the game, and Dibble threw 10 straight balls while walking Mickey Morandini and Wally Backman.

Dykstra followed with his third single of the game, making it 4-3, and Duncan lined a single to tie it and bring on Norm Charlton.

Hollins then hit a shallow fly that dropped between second baseman Bill Doran and right fielder Paul O'Neill, both of whom slowed down at the last second to let it go untouched as Backman scored.

It was Dibble's first blown save in six opportunities.

Mike Hartley (1-0), making his first appearance since returning from a pulled hamstring, pitched a perfect eighth for the victory. Mitch Williams finished for his fourth save.

The Reds built their lead on the strength of Greg Swindell's pitching and one big inning off Brad Brink, who was making his major-league debut.

Expos 5, Braves 4

ATLANTA — Montreal roughed up Tom Glavine, who was trying to become the National League's first seven-game winner, in a game marred by a bench-clearing confrontation.

Atlanta reliever Kent Mercker hit Marquis Grissom on the helmet with an 0-2 pitch in the sixth inning causing both benches to pour onto the field. No punches were thrown and order was quickly restored. Grissom stayed in the game.

Atlanta has lost two in a row and seven of its last nine.

In four innings, Glavine (6-2) gave up five runs on seven hits. He walked three.

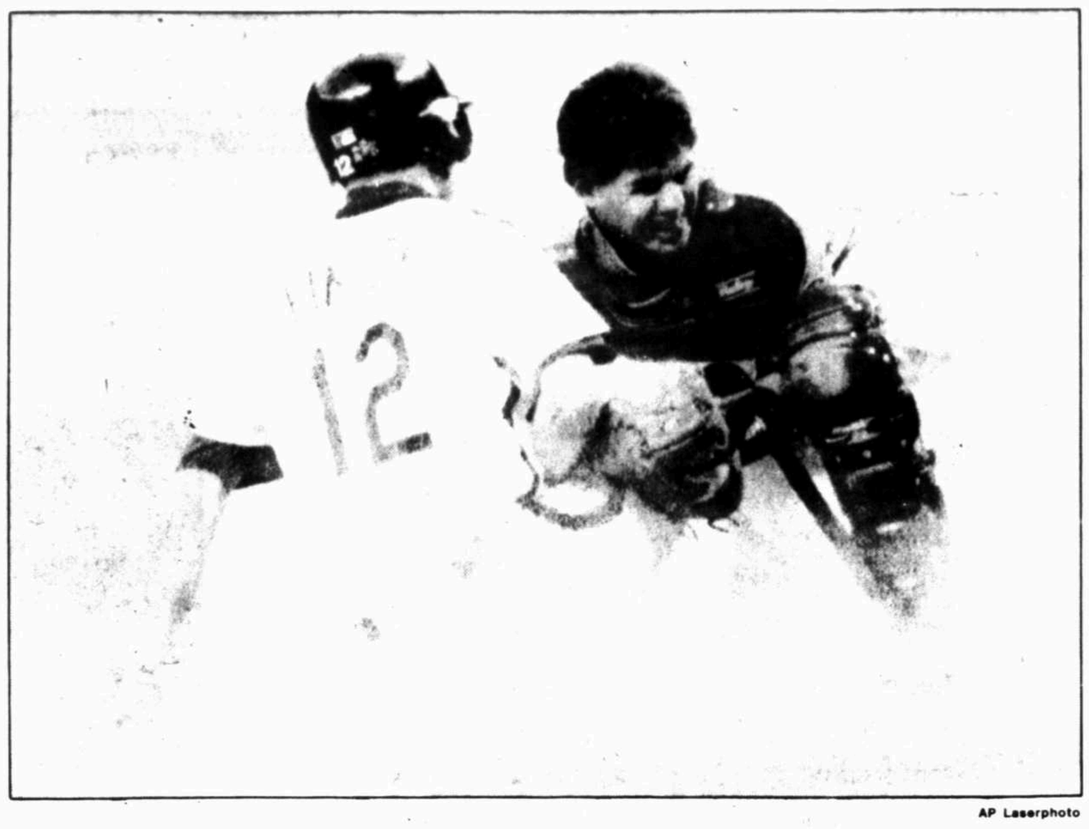

Cubs 4, Giants 3

SAN FRANCISCO — Andre Dawson drove in three runs with a homer and a two-run single to help Chicago beat San Francisco.

Mike Morgan (3-2) pitched four-hit ball for seven innings as the Cubs won for the fourth time in their last five games. Bob Scanlan got the final three outs for his first save.

The Cubs opened the scoring off Dave Burba (2-4) in the second inning when Ryne Sandberg led off with a single, stole second, went to third on a flyball by Dawson and scored on Luis Salazar's single.

Burba was taking the place of six-game winner Bill Swift, who was scratched because of tightness in his right shoulder.

Houston's Steve Finley is called safe at home when St. Louis catcher Tom Pagnozzi tags him without the ball during their game on Sunday, but the Cards beat the Astros, 7-5.

Dodgers 6, Mets 3

LOS ANGELES — Ramon Martinez won at home for the first time this season and Mike Scioscia capped a four-run sixth inning with a two-run homer.

It marked the first time in 19 games this season that the Mets lost a game in which they scored first. New York took the lead on the game's third pitch, when Chico Walker hit his first homer as a Met.

Martinez (2-1) gave up three runs, scattered eight hits, struck out five and walked two in seven-plus innings.

Rangers nip Brewers in 10th

Associated Press

American

MILWAUKEE — Jeff Huson tripled in the go-ahead run with two outs in the 10th inning as the Texas Rangers beat the Milwaukee Brewers 2-1 Sunday night to snap a five-game losing streak.

Al Newman walked with two down in the 10th off loser Jaime Navarro (3-4), stole second and scored on Huson's drive off the top of the right-field fence.

Navarro allowed six hits in the longest outing of his career, a 134-pitch effort over 9 2-3 innings.

Jeff Russell (2-1), the fourth Texas pitcher, pitched 1 2-3 innings for the victory.

Paul Molitor led off the bottom of the 10th with a single, moved to second on a sacrifice and advanced to third on Robin Yount's infield hit to second. But Greg Vaughn popped out and Dante Bichette grounded out to end the game.

Molitor's two-out homer in the third inning, the 150th of his career, gave the Brewers a 1-0 lead off Bobby Witt, who allowed five hits in eight innings.

Angels 3, Red Sox 1

BOSTON — Mark Langston settled down after walking the first three batters he faced to pitch eight strong innings as California beat Boston.

One of the four hits Langston gave up came in the eighth inning when Wade Boggs beat out a grounder over second base for his 2,000th career hit in his 11th season.

Langston (4-1) carried a shutout into the ninth inning when Tom Brunansky led off with his second home run. Bryan Harvey then relieved and got the last three outs for his 12th save, allowing one hit.

John Dopson, who underwent right elbow surgery on Aug. 27, 1990, allowed five hits and three runs in seven-plus innings in his first start since June 5, 1990. At one stage he retired 14 consecutive batters for 15 outs.

Mariners 3, Blue Jays 2

TORONTO — Randy Johnson shut out Toronto for eight innings but left after walking the bases loaded in the ninth inning, and Seattle held on to beat the Blue Jays.

Edgar Martinez hit two home runs and Henry Cotto also connected for Seattle. Toronto lost the final three games in the four-game series and matched its longest losing streak of the season.

Twins 9, Indians 5

CLEVELAND — Kirby Puckett hit a three-run homer and Pedro Munoz hit a tie-breaking, two-run shot, leading Minnesota over Cleveland.

Kevin Tapani (3-4) won despite giving up three solo home runs, two by ex-Twin Paul Sorrento and the other by Carlos Baerga. Tapani pitched 6 1-3 innings and allowed four runs on eight hits.

Rick Aguilera got the last four outs for his 12th save. The Twins won for the seventh time in eight games. The Twins got a season high 15 hits off of four Cleveland pitches.

The Twins led 3-0 after five pitches from Cleveland starter Dennis Cook (1-4).

Yankees 11, Athletics 2

NEW YORK — Managers Tony La Russa of Oakland and Buck Showalter of New York nearly came to blows during a confrontation at home plate and were ejected as the benches and bullpens emptied, and the Yankees went on to beat the Athletics.

With a 1-2 count on Oakland's Scott Brosius in the fourth inning and the Yankees ahead 4-0, Showalter came to the top step of the dugout, apparently in response to comments being made from the Athletics' bench by La Russa and outfielder Willie Wilson at pitcher Melido Perez (4-3).

Royals 2, Tigers 1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Gregg Jefferies singled home Keith Miller with one out in the ninth inning, lifting Mark Gubicza and Kansas City past Detroit.

Miller drew a four-pitch walk from Walt Terrell (0-6) leading off and Brian McRae sacrificed him to second. Jefferies then lined a 1-1 pitch to left field and Miller easily beat the throw from Mark Carreon.

Gubicza (4-2) won his fourth straight decision, giving up six hits and one run while striking out six. He walked a batter in the ninth, his first walk in 18 innings.

White Sox 14, Orioles 10

CHICAGO — Steve Sax drove in five runs and Frank Thomas, Robin Ventura and Tim Raines each homered, powering Chicago past Baltimore.

The White Sox had scored only five runs in four games before breaking loose. Sax, who began the game with six RBIs this year, hit his first two triples of the season and had a sacrifice fly.

Raines, who also had two doubles and a single, homered on the second pitch of the game from Ben McDonald (5-1) and Venutra homered two batters later.

STATE: Stallings wins 800 in record time

pleted in a driving rain.

Galveston Ball won the girl's Class 5A team title while Calvert's boys and Flatonia's girls won Class A titles in Saturday night's final session. In Saturday morning's session, Class 2A Refugio and 3A Fairfield won girls' state titles and 2A Woodsboro and 3A Sweeny won boys' championships.

But the drama was saved for the final event of the meet, although Jackson credited Devorick Taylor's victory in the boy's 100-meter dash as setting up Odessa's title.

"It was a great thing for our school," Jackson said. "That's the one thing that did it. We knew that's what we had to do."

Two records fell in Saturday's finale.

Sam Unberhagen of Little River Academy set a Class 2A record in the boy's 1,600-meter run with a 4:19.5 clocking, beating out Jeremy Stallings of Stanton, who won the 800-meter record in an earlier event.

Unberhagen broke the record of 4:20.6 set by Ricky Marquez of Sanderson in 1974.

Stallings won the Class 2A meter run in a class record 1:51.9, breaking the record of 1:52.5 set by Trent Sharp of DeLeon in 1984. Comfort's Phillip Rust was a distant second in 1:55.5.

Killeen's Billy Spiller won the Class 5A boy's long jump for the second straight year with a leap of 24-11¾ but failed to break the class record of 25-4½ he set at last year's state meet.

Odessa got individual victories from Taylor and Ryan Ledlow in the high jump and they also won the 400-meter relay. Brad Givens had a third place finish in the 200 meters and Leon McDaniel's fifth place finish in the 400-meter dash contributed to the team title.

Calvert ran away with the boy's Class A team title, led by Troy Williams, who scored points in four events. He won the long jump and triple jump, placed fourth in the 110-meter hurdles and sixth in the 300-meter hurdles.

Galveston Ball's girls' team captured the 5A title by winning the 400-meter relay, placing second in the 800-meter relay. Sherell Baker won the 800-meter run.

Flatonia was the Class A girls' titlist, aided by second place finishes by Freda Williams in the 400-meter dash and the triple jump.

Before the rain delay of almost three hours, Class 2A Refugio and Class 3A Fairfield won girls' state titles, and boys' teams from 2A Woodsboro and 3A Sweeny won state team titles.

Refugio scored points in three relay events, with a victory in the 800-meter relay, second place in the 400-meter relay and fifth in the 1,600 meters for 72 total points.

Schulenburg was a distant second with 37 points with a victory in the 400-meter relay and second place finish in the 1,600-meter relay.

Fairfield's Nanceen Perry scored 26 points with victories in the 100 and 200 meters and a third place finish in the long jump, and a second place finish in the 400-meter relay, giving the Eagles the 3A title.

Woodville's girls won the 400 and 800 relays and finished second with 40 points, and Caynon was third with 36 points.

All of Canyon's points were scored by three athletes. Katherine Carter was first in the 3,200 meters and third in the 1,600 meters, Valorie Goodman won the 800-meter run and Colette Medlock won the 1,600 meters.

Woodsboro's boy's team won the 400- and 1,600-meter relays and John Nesloney was second in the triple jump and sixth in the 200 meters in capturing the Class 2A boys title.

Sweeny's boys won the 400 and 1,600-meter relays to beat out Atlanta for the 3A crown by a 53-38 margin.

CAVS: Cleveland beats Boston in every phase

(From 1C)

Garden.

"We've been coming of age all year long, not just today," coach Lenny Wilkens said. "It's been a steady growth process, getting guys back healthy, getting through the first round of the playoffs."

"They just outplayed us," said Larry Bird, who was hounded throughout the game by Mike Sanders. "They played better offense, better defense, and moved the ball better. We just weren't in the game."

The Cavs shot 73 percent in the first quarter, alternately beating the Celtics on fast breaks and letting Daugherty dominate the half-court game. Mark Price had nine points in the period, which ended with Cleveland ahead 35-21.

Boston got no closer than 10 after that, and Cleveland blew it open by sinking 10 straight shots from the field in the third quarter — the last three long jumpers by Larry Nance — for a 93-67 lead.

The Cavaliers beat Boston in every phase, outrebounding the Celtics 45-31, outshooting them 59 percent to 50, handing out 42 assists to Boston's 20 and blocking 11 shots to Boston's four.

Daugherty had 27 points, nine rebounds, six assists and three blocks before leaving to an ovation with 8:24 left. John Williams scored 20 and Sanders added 17 for the Cavs.

Reggie Lewis led the Celtics with 22 points. Dee Brown added 18, Kevin McHale 15, and Bird and Ed Pinckney 12 each.

Cleveland will play Tuesday night against the winner of the New York-Chicago game, played later Sunday. The Cavaliers last made it to the conference finals in 1976, when they were eliminated 4-2 by Boston.

The loss spoiled what had been a storybook finish to the Celtics' season.

After losing Bird to a bad back on April 3, they won their last eight regular-season games.

BULLS: New York held to 30 second-half points

(From 1C)

Jordan scored 7 points in a 17-5 run capped by Stacey King's three-point play that made it 77-62 with 39 seconds left.

The Knicks never threatened in the final quarter, scoring just 4 points in the first five minutes on 2-for-6 shooting. New York scored just 30 points in the second half on 32.3 percent shooting.

"We played a great defensive second half, and Michael rose to the occasion," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said. "We spent a lot of effort to get the home-court advantage during the season. It truly makes a difference in seventh games."

Patrick Ewing, playing on a sprained left ankle, scored 22 points for the Knicks, who allowed 90 points for only the third time in 12 playoff games and 100 points for the first time. Chicago scored 92.4 points per game in the series, 18 under their regular-season average.

"My ankle was fine the whole game, Chicago just outplayed us," Ewing said. "I thought we could turn it around in the third quarter when we got within 3 points, but we could not get the job done. We have no excuses."

"I don't want us hanging our heads, because we took the world champions to the hilt," Knicks coach Pat Riley said. "They flattened us out in the third period through the end of the game. They played us as what they are, world champions. I think they are the team that will win it."

Horace Grant scored 14 points for the Bulls, 67-15 in the regular season. John Starks had 18 for the Knicks, who took the series to the limit despite starting it with a 14-game losing streak against Chicago.

Jordan, who made just two of four free throws in Game 6 as the Knicks cut off his drives to the basket, scored 18 points in the first quarter on 5-for-8 shooting from the field and 8-for-8 accuracy from the line.

than the last, about two hours from the end of the session to earn his 24th Indy start.

"I do it a year at a time," said Johncock, 55, who was burned on the back of his thighs by hot oil seeping into the cockpit after a blown engine on Friday. "I'm not going to lie to you. There was a couple of times when I felt like going home, especially this morning after we went out there first thing and blew another engine."

The protests, filed by Walker Motorsports and Teamkar, which field cars qualified by Scott Goodyear of Canada and rookie Kenji Momota of Japan, which were both bumped from the field, were disallowed during a hearing 90 minutes after the close of qualifications.

The teams alleged the Buick engine used in Johncock's car was the same engine used by Buddy Lazier to qualify a week earlier, a move that was once a violation of the rules. That engine was apparently sent back to Brayton Engineering for rebuilding and somehow, apparently inadvertently, wound up in the Hemelgarn-Byrd entry driven by Johncock.

Tom Binford, the chief steward of the race, said, "There was a rule, and the last time I remember enforcing it was about 12 years ago. It was in the entry blank, the fact that an engine used in qualifying cannot be used in another car.

"This rule, and it's a surprise to some of the officials and competitors, is not in our rule book at the present time. It is not in the entry blank. There's some thought obviously in the past hour and a half that it might be looked at in the next year.

"But it is not specifically illegal to have used an engine that has been previously used in another qualified car."

Binford said the protest fee of $500 was returned to both entrants and that "a good healthy, respectful discussion" was conducted before the hearing was adjourned. "They both understood what the situation was and accepted the rejection as necessary under the current situation with the rules," he added.

Brown weathers four-man playoff

Associated Press

IRVING — A golf tournament with a history of weather problems added a whole new chapter.

For the seventh time in eight years, the Byron Nelson Classic had meteorological misfortune. It was so bad this time that no round ended on the day it started and the tournament was shortened to 54 holes.

Still, it ended Sunday in victory — playoff victory — for Billy Ray Brown.

He dropped a 15-foot birdie putt on the first extra hole to win a playoff among the four third-round leaders.

Brown, Ray Floyd, Ben Crenshaw and Bruce Lietzke — now, all winners of this tournament — finished the third round Sunday at 199, 11 under par on the sodden, saturated TPC Las Colinas course. They became playoff participants when continuing rain forced officials to reduce the event to 54 holes.

More than four hours later, there was a break in the weather long enough to start the playoff, but the golfers still had to be sheltered from a drizzle by umbrellas.

Brown, 29, whose only other win was at Hartford last year, was still disappointed about finishing third in his hometown Houston Open two weeks ago.

"It's been kind of stinging on me, having a chance to win your hometown tournament," Brown said. "For us Texans — with Byron Nelson and Ben Hogan and all the golf tradition we have here — we all want to win in our home state.

"That was my goal, to win in Texas. That's the first thing I thought of — 'I finally won in Texas.' Dallas or Houston, it doesn't matter. It's all Texas."

His chance at home state success came after he led the group off at the par-3 17th with a 4-iron below the hole.

Crenshaw got his to about 30 feet, Floyd to 35 and Lietzke got a break when his errant shot into the gallery hit a spectator and bounced back to the fringe.

Floyd and Crenshaw missed their long birdie putts before Lietzke chipped about 6 feet beyond the cup.

Brown then ran his into the heart of the hole and the tournament — disrupted and in disarray since thunderstorms threw it off schedule on Thursday — was over.

LPGA: King becomes all-time money leader

can't afford to make a mistake."

Only 13 other players in the field of 144 broke par. The 53-year-old Carner, Liselotte Neumann and Karen Noble finished tied for second, while Dottie Mochrie and Helen Alfredsson were 12 strokes off the pace at 278.

Carner had a 71 Sunday, Neumann a 69 and Noble had the low score of the day, a bogey-free 65.

"I don't know what course Betsy was playing," Noble said. "She just couldn't miss."

King, who took a 5-stroke lead into the final round, made birdies on two of the first three holes — dropping in a 30-foot birdie-putt on No. 3 — to erase any notion that she might fall back into the pack. She also had birdies on Nos. 6, 12 and 18.

King earned $150,000 to move past Beth Daniel into the No. 2 spot on the tour's all-time money list. She has won more than $3.5 million since joining the LPGA in 1977.

On the fairway leading up to the 18th green, King smiled as she traded high-fives with dozens of fans in an uncharacteristic show of emotion.

"I felt I had to do something," she said. "It's a neat walk down 18."

Despite King's outstanding track record, her name is often mentioned behind several other players when it comes to listing the finest women on the tour. But she ranks right up there in terms of respect from her peers.

"Betsy's always been one of the outstanding players on our tour," Carner said. "She's so quiet, she doesn't get the publicity she deserves. She doesn't seem to have a lot to say — she just goes out and whips our butt."

King, who has now won at least one tournament in nine straight years, was hard-pressed to remember a week in which she ever performed this well.

"This is probably the best four days of golf I've ever played, to win by this much over a good field," she said. "I just never envisioned anyone shooting 17 under on this golf course. I mean, how can you play 72 holes here with just two bogeys?"

King's best previous finish this year was a tie for ninth. She credited part of her resurgence to a session last weekend with her former teacher, Ed Oldfield.

Jagr's seventh playoff goal lifts Pens over Bruins

Associated Press

NHL Playoffs

PITTSBURGH — The Kid did it again.

Jaromir Jagr, contained most of the night by Boston's blanket defense, skated through the Bruins to beat goaltender Andy Moog at 9:44 of overtime Sunday night and rally the Pittsburgh Penguins to a 4-3 victory over the Boston Bruins in the Wales Conference playoffs opener.

The Penguins, shut out since the first period and playing without the emotion that keyed their Patrick Division playoff upsets of Washington and New York, trailed 3-2 until Shawn McEachern's tying goal at 12:27 at the third.

Both teams killed off power plays in the overtime until defenseman Kjell Samuelsson tracked down the puck at his own blue line and passed up ice to Jagr, the star of the Penguins' six-game upset of the Rangers.

Jagr, one of the NHL's most dangerous players in open ice, skated around Matt Hervey before throwing a forehander on the net, where it appeared to tick off Hervey and past Moog, who had throttled the Penguins most of the night.

The goal was Jagr's seventh of the playoffs.

Boston had been 3-0 in playoff overtimes and was 6-2 during the season. Pittsburgh is 2-1 in playoff overtimes.

The Bruins had dominated most of the game, outshooting the Penguins 41-31 while keeping them off the scoreboard for nearly two periods.

The Penguins appeared headed for a loss until McEachern's tying goal. McEachern threw the puck to Rick Tocchet at the right side of the net. Tocchet couldn't push the puck past Moog, but McEachern swept it inside the right post for his second NHL goal and second in as many games.

Prices recover

NEW YORK — Oil prices advanced Friday, regaining much of the ground lost in several recent sell-offs.

West Texas Intermediate for delivery in June settled at $20.69 per barrel, up 14 cents, at the New York Mercantile Exchange. For the week, the benchmark crude lost 17 cents.

Traders found no news to motivate Friday's trading but said players who had sold off oil earlier in the week decided it was time to buy it back.

Natural gas prices were mixed, with contracts for delivery in June settling at $1.657 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 3.4 cents for the day and 18.2 cents for the week.

At the New York Mercantile Exchange, lower-grade sour crude for delivery in June settled at $18.39 per barrel, up 32 cents for the day and up 3 cents for the week.

In London, the British pound fell to $1.8185 from $1.8215 late Thursday.

Dell Computer grows 'at warp speed'

Austin-based outlet reports record sales despite stumbling economy

Associated Press

AUSTIN — Executives at Dell Computer Corp. use supersonic terms to describe how the multimillion-dollar company is faring in rocky economic times.

The Austin-based computer outlet is reporting record sales and plans to hire 700 additional workers by this summer amid an industry downturn that has such giants as IBM and Compaq struggling.

Senior vice president Joel Kocher may not be understating the company's success when he says, "Dell is growing at warp speed."

Analysts say the success is due to foresight that has transformed Dell into a leader among computer dealers.

"They've gone from being a low-profile clonemaker to a true leadership role," said Peter Zandan, head of IntelliQuest, an Austin-based market research firm for technology companies.

"When Dell started, they were perceived as a follower. Now other companies are clearly imitating them."

Dell, which employs more than 3,000 people and sells computers in more than 70 countries, reported $889.9 million in sales — a 63 percent jump — for the year ended Feb. 2.

Now company officials say Dell's first-quarter results, to be released officially on Tuesday, will show more than $360 million in sales, a 60 percent increase from the same period in 1991.

Michael Dell, the 27-year-old who founded the company in his University of Texas dorm room eight years ago, said he has never been more optimistic.

"The momentum is clearly in our direction," Dell said. "We have massive momentum in every market we're in ... There are a lot of reasons to suggest that we have very, very bright prospects."

Dell was among the pioneers in the computer mail-order business in the mid-1980s who found that savvy computer buyers would purchase no-name clones. But all those business aren't thriving like Dell.

The company's founder offers simple explanations for the success: Dell listened to its customers and poured money into product development, service and marketing.

Industry experts and competitors also say Dell made smart changes over the last several years to separate itself from other companies.

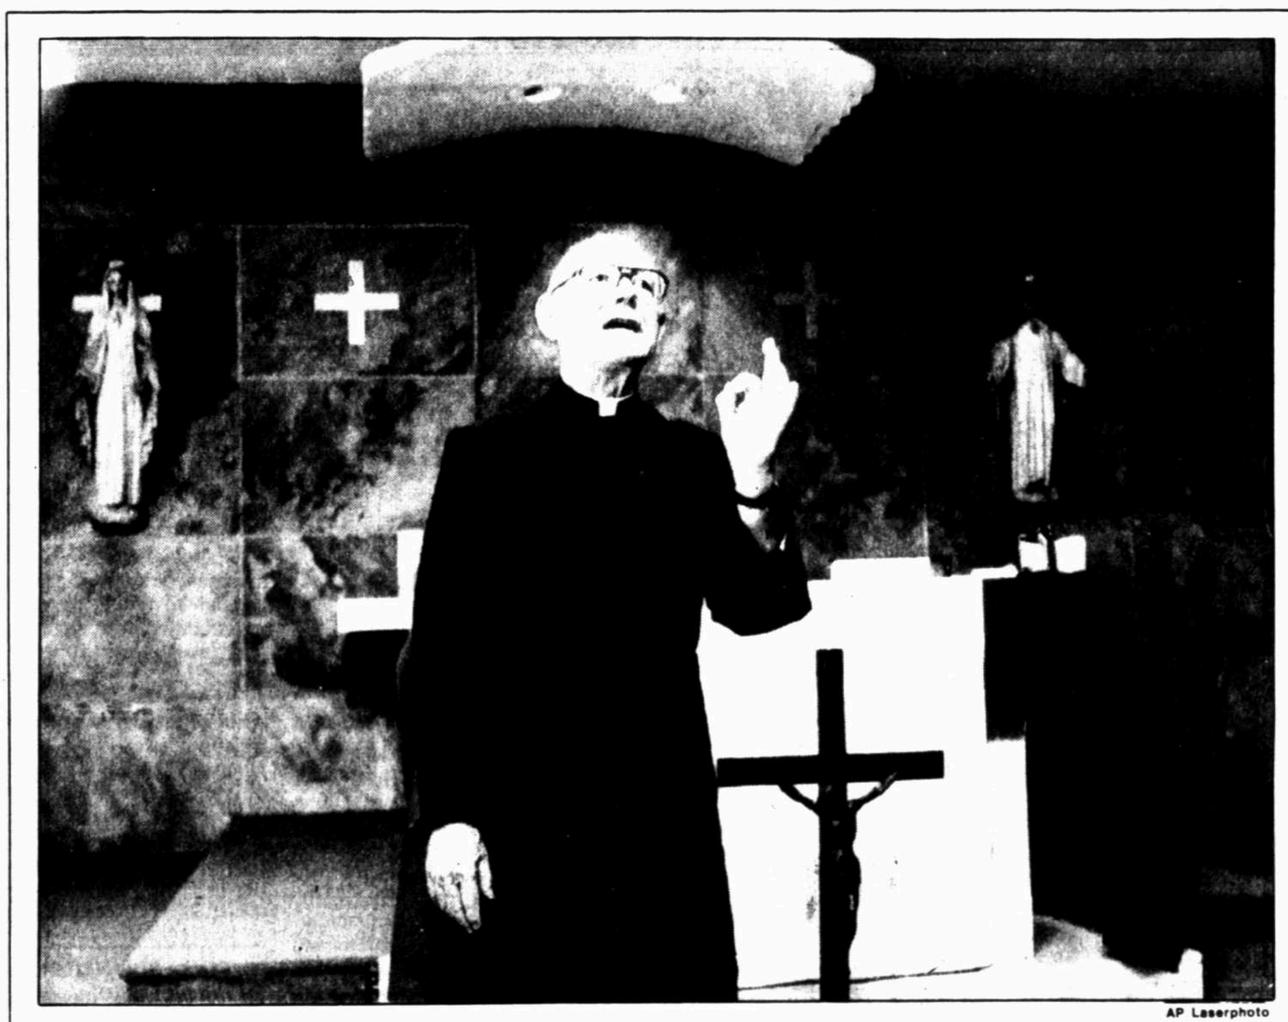

One of those changes was in 1987, when Dell offered next-day service to business customers through third-party service firms, a major innovation that has been copied widely.

Dell arrived in the big leagues in 1988 with its initial public stock offering, which raised $32 million. Company officials say that was a turning point because it enabled Dell to make needed investments.

After a few years of frequent turnover, the company's top management team stabilized in the late 1980s with a current group that includes former Kocher over domestic marketing and service; former IBM researcher G. Glenn Henry over product development; and British native Andrew Harris as head of international sales.

Last year, Dell embarked on an aggressive cost-cutting campaign that included tightening its parts inventory, cutting travel and even cramming more executives into smaller offices.

Those reductions enabled the company to keep prices competitive with other bargain computer outlets while allowing profits to remain in the target range of 5-6 percent of sales.

Monsignor Leo Conti gestures during an Easter week retreat at the Regina Continuing Care Center chapel in Evansville, Ind. Conti regularly attacks executives' high pay.

Minister takes on corporate goliaths' pay

By Bob Lewis
Associated Press writer

EVANSVILLE, Ind. — To the elderly and infirm who live in the Regina Continuing Care Center, the gentle, ruddy-faced man in the cleric's collar is simply Father Conti.

Monsignor Leo Conti earns about $7,200 a year tending their spiritual needs. He is a man at peace, his worldly needs met by the Roman Catholic Church.

Could this be the same person whose shareholder proposals have sent shudders through the boardrooms of America's largest corporations?

With only 76 shares of Bell Atlantic stock, Conti started battling four years ago to rein in the runaway pay of top executives. On a manual typewriter in his modest apartment, he drafted briefs supporting shareholder rights and sent them to the Securities and Exchange Commission, the government's stock watchdog.

Now he embodies the national tide of resentment against the bloated compensation packages paid to corporate executives.

Conti and others shareholders who have spoken out were vindicated Feb. 13 when the SEC gave shareholders a non-binding say in how much top corporate officials are paid.

It was a nominal victory, but one Conti had pursued for four years.

"It comes down to an issue of basic Christian justice," says the gregarious 67-year-old, whose smile seems too wide for his face.

"Four years ago it was different. There was no groundswell for this. Today, you find a different climate. You pick up The New York Times and every day you read about more people railing out against this legalized corporate theft."

Conti, the only child of two pharmacists, grew up in Providence, R.I., where the family attended Mass regularly and Conti became enthralled with its grandeur. By age 8, he knew he would become a priest.

'Big Three' show spunk in auto brawl

Associated Press

Like a bloodied boxer with an adrenalin-charged punch, Detroit seems to be throwing a few damaging jabs at its Japanese adversary in the bare-knuckles business of automaking.

The Ford Taurus, which has come to symbolize America's answer to Japanese car quality, is moving to overtake the Honda Accord as the best-selling passenger vehicle in this country.

Chrysler is enjoying notable success with a new slick-looking Jeep and is carefully introducing an advanced generation of passenger sedans that are considered its salvation for the 1990s. They are winning good reviews.

General Motors, the behemoth that once seemed incapable of change, also has debuted an array of smart-looking redesigns.

"Things are beginning to change," said Chris Cedergren, a consultant at AutoPacific Group Inc., a automotive research firm in Thousand Oaks, Calif. "The tremendous growth the Japanese incurred has slowed."

Bass investment outsells Fantasia

N.Y. Times News Service

FORT WORTH — Talk about your fairy tales.

In 1984, Fort Worth's Bass family invested close to $360 million in The Walt Disney Co., saving Mickey and the gang from the circling sharks of the day's corporate raiders. Today, that investment is worth more than $3.75 billion.

Now that's a REAL Magic Kingdom.

Eight years ago Ma7 17, the first gleam sparkled in what has become the crown jewel of one of America's largest family fortunes. It's an adventure sprinkled with storybook qualities, of corporate raiders and white knights, of private intrigue and entraneing profits.

Disney, in a move spurred by the glittering appreciation of its stock price to more than $150 per share. will split its stock four for one.

Brokerage policy on payment dates varies

By Bill Doyle

Q: I have observed that brokers habitually mail payments to their clients on the date due. This happens every time I sell a stock. However, they demand that they receive payment on or before the due date.

What happens if I mail payment to my broker on the due date, just as he mails payments to me? He tells me that if I want to receive my money on the due date, I must pick it up at his office. When I suggest he come to my home on the due date to get money due him he does not seem to understand.

I would appreciate your comments.

Doyle

A: Chances are there would be no adverse effect if you put your check in the mail (there's an overworked expression) on the settlement date of your sale transaction. Most brokerage firms give their clients – especially good customers – a reasonable amount of leeway on this.

In an extreme case, if the broker decides to play hardball, he could "bust the trade." In that event, the brokerage would buy back the shares you sold and you would be stuck for two commissions. Then, if you wanted to unload, the stock would have to be sold again. Voila, three commissions!

You have run into the five-day settlement for "regular way" transactions, the procedure through which stocks usually are purchased and sold.

A brokerage buys or sells stock for you on the trade date. In a regular way trade, the rules call for everything to be settled five business days later. Within that time span, you're supposed to pay for stock you bought or deliver stock you sold.

However, unless you specify four-, three-, two- or same-day settlement, the brokerage will not send you a check before the close of business five days after the trade date of a sale.

The money from a sale is available in your brokerage account on that fifth day. Count yourself fortunate checks are mailed to you on that day. Many letters to this column complain about brokerages delaying payments for stock sales well beyond the settlement date.

Q: My broker wants payment for stock I buy within five business days and insists I deliver certificates for stocks I am selling well within the same period.

I have no serious complaints about getting paid for stock I sell; typically, the brokerage house's check reaches me a few days after the settlement date. But obtaining stock certificates from the broker is an entirely different story. That takes weeks, sometime well over a month.

I say this is larceny. My broker says it's normal. Isn't he giving me a snow job?

A: No. Transfer of stock in "good delivery" form from the person who sold the stock to you, to that seller's broker, to your broker, to the stock's transfer agent, to your broker and along to you can consume time. But if delivery takes much more than a month, somebody goofed.

This does not alter the fact that you become the owner of the stock at the very minute of the trade date on which a brokerage firm buys the stock for you.

Q: About a year and a half ago, I read that the settlement period for regular way stock transactions would be shortened from five days to four. It was supposed to take effect in January. Did it?

A: No. The recommended "T plus 3" implementation has been pushed back to January 1993, and there's doubt it will happen then. Wall Street wheels grind slowly.

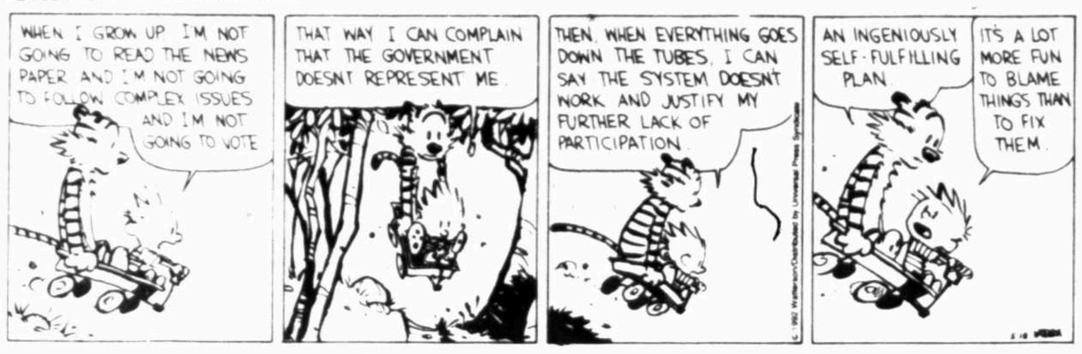

Q: Can banks be relied on to hold up payment on postdated checks until the proper date?

A: Generally, yes. But that depends on the efficiency of each bank.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

MONDAY, MAY 18, 1992

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Look for imaginative ways to promote yourself and your career this summer. Your mate has an idea worth serious consideration in September. Financial backing becomes available in late fall.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: movie director Frank Capra, actor Pernell Roberts, singer Perry Como, ballerina Dame Margot Fonteyn.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be careful not to overlook a single factor where your economic interests are concerned. Your plans must be based on solid ground. Refuse to let your children or parents run your life.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You may be enjoying a dream based more on illusion than reality. Those who insist on forcing certain issues should be prepared to face upsetting consequences.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You benefit from an opportunity to buy something through unusual channels. Do not expect wildly favorable terms, however. Those who are looking for romance should attend more social events.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stop waiting around for someone to give you the green light. Consult someone who is artistic about a decorating project. Stick to doing things your way when you know it is best.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The ideas come faster than you can keep up with them this morning. If you work for others, be prepared for cranky temperaments or an unexpected absence. Avoid arguing over money.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Mental and creative aptitudes are heightened. Press a personal or financial advantage. Luck plays an important role in what you accomplish now. Keep your feet on the ground in romance.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Instead of taking something to heart, welcome it as a guide for future planning. Friends who are active in official circles help you close in on an important objective.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Accept a confidential assignment that fits in with your secret wishes. It could turn out to be educational. Take your time when looking for an opening to reach higher-ups.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): It is by trial and error that most people arrive at their own special formula for success. Learn from your older associates. Discussions with key allies should be fruitful.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Life should look rosy, especially where home, family and friendship are concerned! Go as far as you like in promoting your interests, so long as you not usurp anyone else's prerogatives.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The urge to invest all you make besides what you can borrow is far too risky now. It is much wiser to leave your assets in safety. Watch a comedy classic tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A partner may be thwarting you as effectively as any competitor. Stop giving in so readily to excessive demands. Stick up for your rights and learn to say "no."

TODAY'S CHILDREN are artistic, gregarious and highly dramatic. In fact, their flamboyance will even show up in their handwriting. Many of these youngsters are ambidextrous and excel at sports. These Taureans' friendly, outgoing ways make them very popular with their peers.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠10 ♡AKQJ86 ◇10853 ♣J6
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—If you play that a two-over-one response shows reasonable values, then three hearts is an adequate rebid. However, if your initial response could be made with a woeful sub-minimum, we would take our chances and bid four hearts.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AQ94 ♡J76 ◇A105 ♣K82
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♣	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With the equivalent of an opening bid facing an opener, and a known eight-card or better fit in a major, there's no point in pussyfooting around. Bid four hearts. Partner is unbalanced, so why you should think no trump might be a better spot, especially with only one sure stopper in diamonds? A forcing jump to three hearts also is acceptable.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠3 ♡AQ10872 ◇AKJ ♣KJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You have 18 points in high cards, but your singleton in partner's suit is more a liability than an asset. We would make an invitational jump to three hearts. Unless partner can act again, game will be, at best, an iffy proposition. As for a jump in no trump — unthinkable.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠762 ♡8 ◇KQ10952 ♣854
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Dbl	?

What action do you take?
A.—A jump to three diamonds by you would be preemptive, but this is not the hand for such action. You have too many losers in the black suits and diamonds might break badly. We feel a simple two diamonds is adequate.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠6 ♡AK108 ◇KJ107 ♣A1087
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠

What action do you take?
A.—You certainly are too strong to sell out to two spades, but you have no idea which suit is best for your side. The way to enlist partner's cooperation is to double. Since North has not yet made a bid, the double is for takeout, not penalties, though partner is free to convert with the right hand.

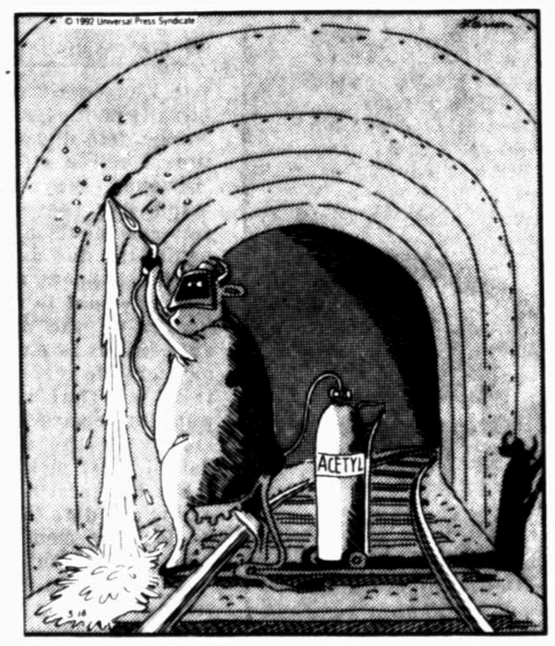

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q ♡987 ◇AKJ63 ♣QJ72
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ◇	1 ♡	1 ♠	2 ♡

What action do you take?
A.—You have a minimum opening bid and no fit for partner's suit. Had East passed, you would have had to bid something, but the intervention has relieved you of that responsibility. Pass and leave the driving to partner.

Wisecracking wine steward got best of Limbaugh in early days

PITTSBURGH — Radio host Rush Limbaugh likes to skewer liberals on his talk show, but a wisecracking wine steward got the best of him in his early days.

Limbaugh broadcast his show three days last week from Pittsburgh, the market where, in 1971, he got his "first job away from home" at WIXZ in McKeesport. Limbaugh is a Missouri native.

He said he tried to impress a date at a restaurant by asking the sommelier about a good year for the wine he wanted to order.

"For you, sir, the year you drink it," the server replied.

He later was fired from another Pittsburgh station where the general manager "told me I would never make it as a talent in this business and that if I wanted to stay in radio I should seriously consider sales."

Limbaugh's show appears weekdays on 400 stations nationwide.

NEW ORLEANS — Dan Aykroyd plans to open a New Orleans club to be named for his Blues Brothers act with the late John Belushi.

Among the investors: Belushi's widow, Judy, brother Jim Belushi, actors John Candy and River Phoenix, and Isaac Tigrett, co-founder of the Hard Rock Cafe chain.

"We hope to do for blues what Preservation Hall has done for jazz internationally," Tigrett said. "New Orleans' gift to the world is its music and a group of blues lovers have joined together to create a venue for live local and national talent."

Aykroyd recently was in New Orleans scouting sites on the riverfront and in the French Quarter. The venture also would include a museum and restaurant.

SPOKANE, Wash. — Miss America Carolyn Sapp will star in a television movie based on her relationship with an abusive boyfriend, NBC said.

Sapp

The filming of "Miss America: Behind the Crown" is to begin in June for broadcast in September.

Sapp, 25, was living in Hawaii when she became engaged to Nuu Faaola, who played football for the New York Jets. She said he turned violent and threatened her with a butcher knife in 1990 before they split up.

Faaola was never charged.

Sapp, who grew up in northeastern Washington, said she didn't expect playing the role to cause her any emotional distress.

"I've already dealt with that. It's over and done with," she said Thursday.

CHICAGO — Author Studs Terkel got a bridge for his 80th birthday.

City officials renamed a Division Street span the Studs Terkel Bridge in honor of the Chicago fixture and Pulitzer Prize winner.

Terkel's first oral history, "Division Street: America," came out in 1966. His latest, "Race," was released last month.

During a brief ceremony Saturday, which was Terkel's birthday, Mayor Richard M. Daley praised him for his "great love of this country."

"What Studs has done in Chicago is help build bridges," Daley said. "He faces reality and works with people together."

INDIANA, Pa. — Mister Rogers proclaimed "a beautiful day in this neighborhood" in a speech to college graduates.

Fred Rogers, host of "Mister Rogers' Neighborhood," said Saturday at Indiana University of Pennsylvania that he visited a 12-year-old girl in a hospital and asked her what he should tell the college kids.

Her advice: "People should do little favors for other people, and they'll feel good about themselves and do favors for other people," Rogers said.

Rogers received an honorary degree and drew cheers from the crowd with his trademark line.

PHILADELPHIA — Dr. Oliver W. Sacks, author of "Awakenings," urged graduates of the Medical College of Pennsylvania to listen to their patients.

"Find out what lies behind their words," he said Saturday. "Be aware of your roles as listeners, as providers of care."

Immense changes have taken place in medicine since he became a doctor in 1958, Sacks said, but "the role of physician is an eternal one that provides unique and intimate relationships with people."

"Awakenings" recounted his work in the 1960s in using the drug L-dopa to revive patients who had been in trance-like states for as long as 40 years. The book was made into a movie starring Robin Williams and Robert DeNiro.

COLLEGE STATION — College graduates should devote part of their professional careers to fighting drug abuse, poverty, racism and the breakdown of the family, FBI Director William Sessions said.

Those problems contribute to crime, he told Texas A&M University graduates on Friday.

"Public service seems to be dying as people become more interested in making dollars than in giving back to their communities," Sessions said.

"That is a change for the worse."
