McVeigh prosecutors rest after emotional testimony

DENVER (AP) — Prosecutors brought their case against Timothy McVeigh to an emotional end today, with an Oklahoma City bombing survivor describing the "tornado-like" force of the blast and a slide show designed to leave jurors with lasting images of the carnage.

The government rested after a formality — a medical examiner introducing a stack of death certificates on nearly all of the 168 people who died in the worst act of terrorism on U.S. soil.

U.S. District Judge Richard Matsch rejected a routine request by McVeigh's lawyers to have the charges dropped, and told them to be ready to present witnesses today.

Throughout a streamlined government case that has seen 137 witnesses in just 18 days, prosecutors have used McVeigh's former friends and even his sister to try to tie him to the April 19, 1995, blast. Their last day was devoted to the victims for an emotional finale.

One juror actually wept and another appeared on the verge of tears as Florence Rogers, president of the credit union in the federal building, testified how the force of the blast blew open the wall of her office, killing 18 workers and two customers.

"When I was able to stand up, all the girls that was in the office with me had totally disappeared," she said. "I never saw them again."

Ms. Rogers said she spent hours after the blast just wandering the streets.

"I was desperately trying to search for my staff members," she said. "I had hired each and every one of them."

Prosecutors then showed a series of slides on the rescue effort, as District Fire Chief Mike Shannon described his

TIME DOESN'T HEAL ALL WOUNDS

10 years later, victims recall deadly tornado

By Jimmy Patterson
Staff Writer

SARAGOSA — Ten years later, Ismael Dutchover can't shake the emotions. Or the fear. Or the memories.

Ten years later, he is still overcome with sadness when trying to talk about the 30 people who died in the devastating tornado that hit the migrant farm working community of Saragosa.

Dutchover carried too many dead and injured children from the Saragosa Community Center that night, where 22 of the 30 victims were crushed to death at the scene of what had been a graduation ceremony for the community's small children who had completed the Head Start program.

Dutchover, a Reeves County Commissioner at the time of the tragedy, still lives in nearby Balmorhea. A sense of terror still strikes him when the skies grow dark, although tornadoes very seldom strike that area of the state.

"Just last week," Dutchover said, "the sky was dark and the winds began to blow, and I told my wife, 'This reminds me of that night.'"

Fire started by 4-year-old, official says

By Kes Gilhome
Staff Writer

A fire that damaged a family home Wednesday was started by a 4-year-old girl, according to an official with the Midland Fire Department.

"A kid was playing with matches and caught the house on fire," said Battalion Chief Russ Conley.

"She started it in a back room, in a closet in my mom's room," said Cynthia Molinar, 18, who was baby-sitting the child at the time of the fire. "I was cooking and I guess she got hold of some matches."

Ms. Molinar said that she was baby-sitting two children, ages 3 and 4, as well as looking after her own 1-year-old daughter when the fire broke out. "I looked up and I saw fire in the hallway," she said.

All of the home's occupants — Ms. Molinar, her mother Carmen Hernandez, the three small children and two teen-agers — escaped without search for survivors.

"I found two ladies on the inside, asked them of their injuries," he said. "They told me of some 25 children they expected to be on the second floor above us."

He said one of the women "grabbed me by my gear. ... She chastised me about the children on the second floor, telling me to get up there."

Shannon said nine floors of the building pancaked and "were all compiled into one."

Rescuers had to dig tunnels to rescue some of the victims, he said, contending with fall hazards, potential collapse and chemical hazards from dripping body fluids.

With that, Matsch chastised U.S. Attorney Patrick Ryan for the graphic testimony, saying he was "going far beyond" what was necessary and there was no issue over who was killed in the bombing.

The final witness, Oklahoma City medical examiner Fred Jordan, testified about the grisly task of identifying the victims. He had death certificates for all but eight of the dead — three were missing because of a paperwork problem and five were not on government property and not listed on the indictment.

He said refrigerated trucks were used to "control the flow of bodies" and stations were set up to take fingerprints, blood samples and photographs.

Jordan then went through a chart of victims, telling jurors how each one was identified. One had a scar from a curling iron, another had a birthmark, yet another an arthritic spine.

McVeigh, a 29-year-old Gulf War veteran, could get the death penalty if convicted of murder and conspiracy in the blast.

Sources close to the case told The Associated Press that McVeigh's lawyers plan to call 30 to 40 witnesses over the next two weeks to challenge "every facet" of the prosecution's case.

The sources, who spoke on the condition of anonymity, said the defense hopes to discredit the FBI using a federal report that criticizes the agency's crime lab for its handling of the bombing investigation.

Attempts by McVeigh's attorneys to launch a full-scale attack on the FBI crime lab on Tuesday were cut short when Matsch barred questions about federal criticism of the lab.

The Justice Department found last month that FBI scientists, including some who worked on the bombing case, produced flawed work or slanted their findings in favor of the prosecution.

McVeigh attorney Christopher Tritico tried unsuccessfully to question FBI chemist Steven Burmeister about findings in the Justice Department report. Tritico also was barred from questioning Burmeister about new laboratory procedures put into place since the bombing.

Matsch only allowed Burmeister to answer specific questions about some possible shortcomings of the physical evidence.

Burmeister testified that explosive residue, which was found on McVeigh's clothing and earplugs, wasn't detected in McVeigh's alleged getaway car or in the Kansas storage bin where McVeigh and co-defendant Terry Nichols allegedly stashed bomb ingredients.

Burmeister also said McVeigh's clothing — which tested positive for explosive residue — showed up at the crime lab in a rolled-up grocery bag and not in the sealed plastic envelopes usually used.

Texas executes Callins, third inmate in a week

HUNTSVILLE, Texas (AP) — Convicted killer Bruce Callins was executed by lethal injection Wednesday evening, almost 17 years after he fatally shot a Fort Worth bar patron and robbed the man of less than $3.

Callins, 37, was pronounced dead at 6:29 p.m. CDT, six minutes after a lethal dose of drugs began flowing into his outstretched right arm.

"I just want to let all my people know — everybody that supported me — I love them and I wish them all the best," the condemned man said in a final statement.

He raised his head from the gurney as the drugs began taking effect, coughing and gasping as five witnesses he selected, including two sisters, watched quietly.

Wilena Waggoner, mother-in-law of Callins' murder victim, said by telephone after the execution that the inmate, "had 17 more years to live than Allen Huckleberry."

"I say it's about time," she said.

Callins was the third inmate to receive lethal injection this week in Texas, where the pace of executions is accelerating as long-time inmates see appeals exhausted and new laws designed to speed the appeals process take effect. It was the 14th execution in Texas this year.

Another condemned inmate, Larry White, was set to die Thursday for strangling and stabbing a Houston woman with a screwdriver during a burglary more than 20 years ago. And one execution is likely next week.

The U.S. Supreme Court on Monday denied an appeal and refused to grant a reprieve, clearing the way for Callins' punishment.

injury, Conley said.

Firefighters wearing breathing apparatus put out the fire before it could spread. "There is a lot of smoke damage to the rest of the house," Conley said. "But the guys caught it before it got in the attic."

"The back bedroom is heavily damaged. But there is still a lot of salvageable stuff in the house," he said.

Three fire trucks, including the MFD's rescue unit, responded to the fire, at 1805 E. Magnolia St., that drew crowds of onlookers from nearby Pease Elementary School.

The fire and the Fire Department's response were fairly normal, according to Conley. "That's a typical fire for that part of town," he said. "A single-family residence that is close to a fire station. That's the kind of stuff we're geared up to do."

Brazilian city grapples with radiation ghosts

By Harold Olmos
Associated Press

'The psychological wounds have been far worse than the physical damage.'
— Dr. Maria Paula Curado cancer doctor

GOIANIA, Brazil — The moment his brother gave him the glowing blue stone, Ernesto Fabiano somehow sensed it would mark his life forever. And it did.

One of the marks is an 8-inch crater on his thigh next to the pocket where he carried the bean-sized stone, wrapped in a handkerchief.

Another is the metal shaft that holds his femur together, so weakened by the stone that last year it snapped like kindling when he was playing with his granddaughter.

Fabiano, 57, is a survivor of the worst episode of radiation poisoning in the Western Hemisphere.

In 1987, chunks of cesium 137 were unwittingly distributed as curiosities in Goiania. The radioactive stones killed four people, sickened 103 others, and condemned a still-unknown number of others in this city of 1 million to lingering illness and deaths.

When Fabiano and his friends learned the truth about the stone he showed around as a kind of lucky charm, he became a pariah. "They looked at me as if I had AIDS," he said.

Ten years later, the city — and Fabiano — still are struggling to make peace with their ghosts.

"The psychological wounds have been far worse than the physical damage," Dr. Maria Paula Curado said.

Curado is a cancer doctor at the Leide das Neves Ferreira Foundation, named after a 6-year-old girl who died after eating particles of the stone.

"The wounds are inside their heads, and there's no way to measure the extent of the damage," she said. "They all suffer from paranoia, blaming cesium for every bad thing that happens to them."

The nightmare began one sweltering summer afternoon, when scavengers picking over the ruins of an abandoned cancer clinic found a lead capsule in a machine once used for radiation therapy. They took the capsule and sold it to scrap dealers.

At Devair Alves Ferreira's junkyard, employees broke open the casing with a sledgehammer and marveled at what they saw — a gleaming stone, weighing about 3.5 ounces. Friends, including Fabiano's brother, flocked to stare at the stone. Some took small pieces of it.

Fabiano wrapped his fragment in a handkerchief, stuck it in his pocket and headed for the neighborhood bar. An hour and several beers later, he was home, showing the stone to his wife and wondering if it might have magical powers.

A week later, he was in the intensive care unit of a hospital in Rio de Janeiro, 580 miles to the south, with dizziness, vomiting and a huge blister on his reddening leg, from which surgeons were chipping away dead flesh.

He was not alone. Thirteen other people who had seen the wondrous stone up close also were in ICUs. Over the next few days, four of them died, including Ferreira's niece, Leide.

Panic spread as people who had indirect exposure to the stone were also hospitalized. Thousands rushed to emergency rooms, fearing they had been contaminated.

For 16 days, chunks of cesium had been carried around town. Everyone who had direct contact with it received a radiation dose of between 400 and 1,000 rems — as much as some victims of the Hiroshima and Nagasaki atomic blasts in World War II.

Over the years, three more people died from radiation-related cancer. Ferreira, the scrap dealer, died in 1994 of cirrhosis of the liver.

Doctors at the Leide das Neves Ferreira Foundation track dozens of residents who may have been exposed to radiation. None has shown symptoms of radiation poisoning such as leukemia, lymphomas or fetal malformations, but many radiation-caused illnesses take years to surface.

Authorities are trying to dull the memories and calm the lingering fears.

The junkyard where the capsule was opened is now an abandoned lot. A civic center was built on the site of the cancer clinic. There are no signs, no reminders of what happened there.

Whatever was left of the original chunk of cesium and everything that was contaminated — 6,000 tons of clothing, furniture, pieces of buildings, even dirt — were packed in steel drums and containers and carted away to an abandoned quarry.

The refuse now is buried in underground, earthquake-proof concrete vaults. The quarry, with its deadly waste, was filled in and made into a 320-acre park. The site is a low, pyramid-shaped mound, surrounded by lush green grass.

Radiation levels are periodically tested by the Brazilian Nuclear Energy Commission in a laboratory built in the center of the site.

The park, due to be inaugurated this year, officially will be named after 6-year-old Leide das Neves Ferreira. Residents already have their own name for it: Cesium Park.

SARAGOSA: Survivors recall tornado that destroyed town

(From 1A)

La Noche de la Luna Negra. The Night of the Black Moon. That is how the survivors in this heavily Hispanic, largely Catholic community refer to May 22, 1987.

Ten years later, Linda Briceno refuses to talk about what happened. Ms. Briceno worked with the Head Start program and was in the Community Center that night until a family member came in and took her to safety. Ten years later, she remains wracked with the emotion of the night.

A tall, soft-spoken woman with long white hair, Ms. Briceno calmly shakes her head no when asked to talk about the specifics of the evening. With her ever-present, gentle smile, she says she can't talk about the tornado, but gives the names of some people who have spoken about the night's terror.

A couple of more questions, and Ms. Briceno relents, but barely. The brief memories she shares are precious, and painful.

"It was an ugly, terrible feeling," Ms. Briceno said, just loud enough to be heard. "It was black dust and it was coming fast."

A family member grabbed Ms. Briceno from what would soon be the rubble of the Community Center. Ms. Briceno and her family ran for cover under the Toyah Creek Bridge, about 200 yards northeast of the Head Start ceremony.

"As soon as we got there, everything started flying," she said. "We were praying. It was a mess. We were sucked out from under the bridge."

And that is all she will remember for a stranger.

La Noche de la Luna Negra. The Night of the Black Moon.

There was very little in Saragosa before May 22, 1987. The Black Moon took it all, cutting a southwest-to-northeast swath through the tiny town.

It has often been written, with great embellishment, that a tornado wiped a particular town off a map. Anyone with knowledge of the small West Texas town and what happened there 10 years ago knows that is precisely what happened to Saragosa. Every free-standing structure in a five-square block area of the small town was obliterated; blown apart by the killer storm. With 30 deaths, almost 10 percent of the town's population was left dead. All of the dead were Hispanic.

Peggy Walker, Joey Herrera and Shirley Parrish were three who survived the storm's devastation. Of those, only Ms. Walker lived in Saragosa.

Ms. Walker owns three Needlework stores, in Pecos, Alpine, and Jal, N.M. Living in Saragosa, she is centrally located to her three sewing stores.

Herrera, an insurance salesman in Pecos, was secretary of the Balmorhea-Saragosa Independent School District and president of the towns' Community Council in 1987. He was in Saragosa to give a speech at the Head Start graduation ceremony. His wife and infant son died in his arms, trapped in the twisted remains of the Community Center.

Ironically, Ms. Walker, Herrera and Mrs. Parrish were located at the beginning, middle and end of the storm's path.

Aerial photographs indicate the tornado first touched down at the rear of Bob and Peggy Walker's house, on the southwest part of town. Herrera was in the Community Center, the epicenter of the storm's destruction. The Parrishes pulled their car over on the northeast corner of town, as the storm exited what remained of the town.

Mrs. Parrish, of Midland, was on her way to Fort Davis for the weekend with her husband and friends when their two carloads were forced off the road by the storm.

All three have unique points of view of La Noche de la Luna Negra.

Peggy Walker: 'When I saw our porch swing 8 feet up in the air, I knew we were in trouble.'

I was in my house at my sewing machine and the electricity went off. It started hailing and my husband Bob came in and said he was going to move the pickup to the barn and sit there and watch it rain, which is something we liked to do a lot.

I went to the front door and saw that our two-seater porch swing was 8 feet in the air, and that's when I knew we were in trouble.

I got in a little closet in our house. I never saw the tornado because we had about 60 trees around our house. Unless I could've gotten out from around the trees I probably couldn't have seen it anyway. The pressure was trying to pull open the closet door, and I guess that's about when the roof came off our house because that's when the pressure released.

I've always heard to never go out soon after it hits because it always comes again. And it did. The back of the tornado hit about two minutes later, I guess, but it wasn't as powerful as the front.

The back of our house was completely gone. There were aerial photos that showed that the back of our house is where the tornado first touched down.

When I was trying to find Bob, I hurt my ankle stepping in a hole where one of our trees had been. Bob wasn't hurt badly either. The wind had sucked the window out of his pickup. I told him everything we had was gone because he didn't know what had happened except that there was a big wind.

A friend came and took us to his house in Balmorhea. We came back the next morning and when we got back to the house, we found some kids looting our dresser drawers and I did lose some jewelry.

Our neighbor, Martin Brijalba, across the street, wasn't listed as a fatality. But he lost everything he had, moved to Odessa and died within a few months of the storm.

I did see my cat, Barney, in the air. We were gone from living at our home for about a year while we rebuilt, and about a month after we came back, we heard a meow at the door and we saw this scrawny little cat. Her tail was broken from the storm, and she was horrible looking, but we still have her.

I'll never forget the sound of the tornado. A year later, we had a real strong wind. It got up to a certain pitch that sounded like the tornado did that night. And I remember the smell more than anything. The smell of wet dirt. I remember that a whole bunch.

After the tornado, everything was deathly quiet. And I thought, 'well good, nobody's hurt.' About that time, we started hearing animals. Maybe 15 seconds of dead quiet, and all of a sudden all this noise started in. Cows and horses, and we had sheep and goats. I guess they were quiet for the same reason the people were. I guess they were in a state of shock.

We were gone a year. We stripped back to the foundation and rebuilt. People ask us why we would go back. It's all we have. We have 70 acres there. We're still working on things, and we probably will be for the rest of our lives.

Joey Herrera: 'Both Elsa and Jonathon, they just looked like they were asleep.'

I remember it vividly, like it was yesterday. I had left about 6 in the evening along with my wife and son. Our son's first birthday was going to be the following Sunday and my wife was still doing invitations to his birthday party. She wanted to take our son down and show him to some of the people in Saragosa.

We got there and got to visiting with people; the children started doing a skit. In the middle of the intermission when kids were changing into their caps and gowns, a gentleman who worked for the highway department came in and grabbed his son, who was a participant, and he said there was a real bad storm coming.

We were bottlenecked in the entrance of the building trying to look to see what the storm was like. There wasn't much panic or anything, and I looked at it and said 'that's a tornado; I know what a tornado looks like. We need to take cover.'

The old drills we learned in school, that's what everybody was doing. We all got in a sit-down, squatting position.

The building was completely flattened. Most of the individuals that passed away were in the building on the sides of the walls when it happened.

My main concern was trying to take care of my family. My wife and my son were right beside me, in my arms. I'm not a doctor, but I knew they weren't alive at the time. There wasn't a whole lot I could do because of the way we were pinned in there.

It didn't take people in the community very long to arrive and start helping. They pulled out a lot of bodies. We were kind of the last ones to be taken out. I had cracked ribs, a bruised leg, and a bruised arm because one of the main structure walls fell on me and they had to get a back hoe to lift the wall to get me out.

I remember that at almost the exact same time the year before we had come in to the Pecos hospital to deliver our son. It was ironic that a year later, at the same hospital, this was happening.

I had been in the Wichita Falls tornado in 1979. The devastation in Saragosa was on a smaller scale, but 10 times worse.

I went down to the funeral home where they had all the bodies. I looked at a young lady and she didn't resemble my wife. I didn't think anything of it. By the time I got back from Fort Stockton, where they had my son's body, I went back and looked at the same young lady I had looked at, at 4 in the morning. I got to looking at her; my wife had an unusual birthmark below her knee that looked sort of like the state of Texas, and this woman did too. And I said, that's my wife. I looked at her, and she just looked like she was asleep. Both Elsa and Jonathon, they just looked like they were asleep.

Shirley Parrish: 'Every 30 minutes or so, a nurse would come into the waiting room and read a list of the names of the deceased.'

Before we got to Saragosa, it was raining hard and hailing. It got real pink, except for a black wall cloud. Then we saw the funnel. It seemed far away and we weren't frightened at all.

When we first pulled off the road, we saw the debris blowing across the highway. It engulfed the whole town. It was a gray mist. We sat in our cars, and we felt like we shouldn't get out. Something told us not to get out. Then, a pickup pulled up beside us, and all the people from that pickup ran inside this little building off the side of the road. None of us did that. We scrunched down on the floor of the car. When it was all over, we saw that the back wall of the building the people had gone into was gone. One by one, they started popping their heads up, the people that had run inside the building. They were all OK.

When we pulled off the side of the road we weren't scared because we were praying. We were confident. I didn't sense fear until it was over. I feel we were spared. It's one of those unanswerable questions and I don't understand. But I definitely feel we were being watched over.

We saw some people walk by us. One was carrying a tiny baby, another was carrying a little boy or girl. The baby looked to be unconscious. Later, we heard that someone had been under the bridge and their small children had been sucked from their arms, but they found them later sitting on top of the bridge.

Marty, a son of our friends, Marvin and Helen Sanders, who were also with us, was injured on the back of the head. Someone came by and asked if there was anything they could do, and Helen said Marty needed stitches, could they take us to the hospital.

Awhile later, a car full of Hispanic men pulled us over and told us we didn't have any tail lights. They said they would follow us to Pecos so no one would run into us. It wasn't until we got to the hospital that we knew something serious had happened. There were hundreds and hundreds of people waiting.

Every 30 minutes or so, a nurse would come into the waiting room and read a list of the names of the deceased. People were crying and screaming. It was horrifying. We cried a lot that night.

We went back down on Sunday. What we saw in the daylight was most devastating. We saw pieces of baby beds, little children's toys and we saw a jeep up in a tree.

I do still remember the silence when it was over that night. Then, the screaming and crying.

Kabila takes his time naming new Congo leadership

KINSHASA, Congo (AP) — Congo's new leadership pushed back its deadline on Wednesday for forming a government, shrugging off delays but meeting with a popular opponent of the deposed dictator whom it once labeled a sellout.

Meetings between Etienne Tshisekedi and a senior aide of leader Laurent Kabila appeared to be exploratory talks on including him in the new government. But hours passed, news conferences were scheduled and canceled, and Kabila's aides avoided reporters.

Late Wednesday night, state-run radio reported that the anticipated announcement of a new government would come today. "Consultations," it said, were continuing.

Meanwhile, French Embassy officials said 80 members of Mobutu Sese Seko's entourage had applied for visas to France, but were turned down. The deposed dictator was in Togo temporarily with 155 relatives and aides, but the Togolese government refused visas to 80 of them and kept them at the airport.

In the end, the 80 boarded a plane for the Central African nation of Chad. It was unclear whether they would be welcome there.

Kabila had said he would form a government within 72 hours of taking power Saturday — a triumph he achieved in a seven-month rebellion that started in Zaire's east.

No information about the meeting with Tshisekedi was available, but a second meeting was possible, according to Tshisekedi's spokesman.

Tshisekedi had opposed Mobutu since the 1970s, advocating a constitution guaranteeing basic human rights and systemic reforms. At parliament's insistence, Mobutu accepted him as premier in April — a move seen as a ploy to weaken Mobutu's opponents by splitting their loyalties.

Tshisekedi apparently accepted the post only to embarrass Mobutu. He was ousted in a week, after dismissing all Mobutu's cronies and offering Kabila's rebel alliance the top six government jobs.

Kabila, however, has described Tshisekedi as a sellout who would taste the "poison chalice" for even dealing with Mobutu.

Kabila's aides appeared unruffled by the delay in forming a government, saying rebuilding Congo after years of neglect and abuse under Mobutu required proper planning.

"We are starting the second phase of our revolution, the reconstruction phase, so you could understand that the reconstruction phase cannot go as quickly as the military phase," Kabila's foreign minister, Bizima Karaha, said in a statement.

Kabila needs a relatively smooth transition to avoid angering the millions of Congolese who cheered his overthrow of Mobutu and want rapid improvements in their decaying, neglected country.

But hints that his alliance will keep all the power, instead of sharing it with opposition groups from the Mobutu era and others representing factions in a nation of 47 million people, have people concerned that Kabila will merely replace one dictatorship with another.

Kabila's alliance said Tuesday it was committed to multiparty elections within 12 months — a guarantee that the United States and other Western nations had pressed Kabila to make.

South African President Nelson Mandela slammed Western nations — without specifying the offenders — for "lecturing" Kabila on democracy. Africa's elder statesman said Kabila promised to establish a panel within 60 days to prepare for elections.

"What is most strange is that some Western countries that have supported the most vicious dictators for decades are now ... taking it upon themselves to lecture him on democracy," Mandela said during a state visit to Zimbabwe.

British, Sinn Fein talk terms for IRA cease-fire

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — The British government and Irish Republican Army supporters offered cautious hopes Wednesday of achieving a new IRA cease-fire after their first meeting in 15 months.

"It was a meeting which addressed many of the difficulties which have stalled the peace process for the last number of years," Martin McGuinness, chief negotiator of the IRA-allied Sinn Fein party, said after three hours of talks at Stormont Castle, the seat of British administration in east Belfast.

The four-member Sinn Fein team emphasized its need to gain speedy access to negotiations on Northern Ireland's future that will resume among nine other parties and the British and Irish governments on June 3.

Four government advisers, led by senior civil servant Quentin Thomas, pressed Sinn Fein for an "unequivocal" IRA cease-fire before that could happen.

Sinn Fein, which was certain to win a solid minority share of the Catholic vote in local council elections Wednesday, has been barred from the negotiations because the IRA abandoned its 1994 cease-fire in February 1996.

The talks began last year under the direction of former U.S. Sen. George Mitchell but have made little progress, largely because of Protestant politicians' fear that Sinn Fein might be admitted without a permanent IRA cease-fire.

Leaders of the province's pro-British Protestant majority have threatened to walk out of the talks if IRA supporters are allowed in.

Wednesday's election involves seats in Northern Ireland's 26 local councils, which have little power but are important as forums for Protestants and Catholics to work together — or, more often than not, against each other. Final results could take two days.

The new British Cabinet minister responsible for governing Northern Ireland, Mo Mowlam, said the Sinn Fein-British meetings would continue so long as the IRA didn't strike again. But she would not meet McGuinness without a formal cease-fire. Mowlam didn't attend Wednesday's meeting.

The IRA last attacked on April 10, when the outlawed group shot a policewoman in the back in Londonderry, the province's second-largest city. Mowlam said the de facto truce since has been "a help."

'We have at the moment neither peace nor process. And we've got to get peace in place. We've got to get that cease-fire for the process to start.'

— Mo Mowlam
British Cabinet minister

"Obviously an unofficial cease-fire is a plus. But what we want is an unequivocal restoration of the cease-fire," she told reporters outside Stormont after being briefed by Thomas.

"We have at the moment neither peace nor process," she added in an interview with The Associated Press. "And we've got to get peace in place. We've got to get that cease-fire for the process to start."

But McGuinness indicated there would be no new IRA cease-fire before June 6, when a national election in the neighboring Irish Republic will determine whether John Bruton remains Irish prime minister. Bruton has worked closely with the British and been critical of Sinn Fein. His challenger, Bertie Ahern, has been the opposite.

"Many people who are close to this process are very conscious about the need for those elections to be out of the way for the new government, whatever complexion they will be, to move forward decisively," he said.

Earlier Wednesday, the British government announced the transfer of two high-profile IRA prisoners from prisons in England to a prison in their native Northern Ireland. Transferring a few dozen IRA prisoners from English jails is one of several "confidence-building" issues that Sinn Fein says would encourage the IRA to lay down its guns again.

The IRA launched its campaign against British rule of Northern Ireland in 1970 and has killed about 1,800 people.

Pro-British "loyalist" paramilitary groups have killed about 900, mostly Catholic civilians, since 1966 and in recent months repeatedly have breached their own October 1994 cease-fire. British soldiers and police have killed about 350 people, though none since 1992.

Gandhi's widow under pressure to take charge

■ Supporters see Sonia Gandhi as only person who can save India's once-mighty Congress Party.

Associated Press

NEW DELHI, India — She seldom speaks in public. When she does, every word is carefully analyzed.

So when Sonia Gandhi put down her fee of 1 rupee — about 3 cents — to renew her membership in the Congress Party last week, many in India wondered: Why? And why now?

Six years after her husband was assassinated, the widow of former Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi is seen by supporters as the only person who can save India's once-mighty Congress Party — now riven by rivalries, shamed by scandals, and humiliated by a 1996 election defeat that toppled it from power after nearly a half-century.

Party workers were delighted by Mrs. Gandhi's unexpected decision to rejoin the Congress Party after years out of it, and immediately urged her to take over its leadership, hoping she could return it to power and prestige.

"Sonia Gandhi decided to join the party to revive its credibility, which is at its lowest point in history," declared Arjun Singh, a Congress politician close to Mrs. Gandhi.

The Gandhi name still commands deep respect across India. Three generations — Rajiv, his mother, Indira and his grandfather, Jawaharlal Nehru, were prime ministers for 37 of India's 50 years of independence.

On Wednesday, Mrs. Gandhi marked the anniversary of the May 21, 1991, bombing that killed her husband and 17 others at an election rally in southern India.

While she sat at Gandhi's mausoleum, near memorials to his mother and grandfather, supporters in pickup trucks cruised around New Delhi carrying tall plywood likenesses of Rajiv and Sonia Gandhi and playing mournful tunes over loudspeakers.

"Like the Kennedys, the Gandhi family has always been in politics," said New Delhi teacher Lakshmi Sharma. "They have done much for the country. I will definitely vote for Sonia if she contests."

In keeping with her enigmatic image, Mrs. Gandhi, 50, has not revealed her political plans — if she has any — to the public.

The Italian-born Sonia is a silent celebrity in India. Her photograph is often on magazine covers or newspaper front pages, though she has not granted an interview in years.

Newspapers and magazines frequently poke fun at her mysterious side.

"Mona Lisa Makes Her Move," the respected news weekly "Outlook" said in a cover story, superimposing her face on the Mona Lisa painting.

Her silence sometimes arouses suspicion. "The moment she opens her mouth, she will lose that mystique," political commentator Narendran Nair predicted.

Mrs. Gandhi didn't hide her aversion to politics when her husband was alive. When he was murdered, she rejected an invitation to take his place as party leader.

Since then, she has refused any political role, devoting herself to a charitable foundation created in her husband's name and funded mainly by the government.

Still, her influence is enormous. Prime ministers regularly consult her, foreign dignitaries routinely call on her, and she is the sounding board for all Congress leaders.

The Sonia-for-president chorus — always heard in the party — grew louder last month when the Congress leader, Sitaram Kesri, suddenly withdrew support from the governing coalition, plunging the nation into weeks of political turmoil.

Kesri's move was seen as an abortive and embarrassing bid for power. A new coalition government took office on April 21, but it was not led by Congress as Kesri had planned.

Recent polls indicate Congress would do better in elections under Mrs. Gandhi's leadership, although there's no talk — yet — of her seeking elected office.

But why would she seek power now? Critics suggest she's more intent on salvaging her husband's reputation than his party.

In particular, some suspect she wants to be in a position to counter a federal investigative report due out soon on allegations of bribery in a $1.3 billion arms deal signed during Rajiv Gandhi's administration.

Tainted by the scandal, Gandhi lost the 1989 election, and was just beginning a comeback when he was assassinated. The Indian Express newspaper reported last week that the federal investigation will identify Rajiv Gandhi as a key player in the bribery.

Astronauts, cosmonauts part company as shuttle Atlantis pulls away from Mir

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — After a bittersweet goodbye, astronauts and cosmonauts parted company Wednesday night, with space shuttle Atlantis leaving Russia's Mir station the same way it came — ever so slowly and gently.

The shuttle pulled away as the two spacecraft soared 250 miles above Russia, leaving behind a new oxygen generator and other crucial repair equipment, as well as a replacement for U.S. astronaut Jerry Linenger.

Linenger was elated to be going home on Atlantis after four difficult months aboard the aging Mir. He returns to Earth on Saturday.

"I'm going fishing!" he said earlier in the day, just before the hatches were sealed. "What I miss most are things like fresh air and the breeze in my face."

His wife, Kathryn, has some other ideas, like preparing a nursery. She's due to give birth to their second child on June 27. And she's already arranged a haircut for him; he's looking a little shaggy these days.

"I have a whole list of to-do things for him. He will NOT be bored," she promised.

During his Mir mission, which seemed to feature a drama du jour, Linenger battled flames, fumes, excruciatingly high temperatures and broken machinery. The 42-year-old doctor said it was "a tough time," but added: "Any adventure like that when you come close to pushing the envelope and survive, it's a great adventure and in retrospect I have no regrets whatsoever."

Nonetheless, Linenger made sure he wouldn't be left behind. He was the first one into Atlantis when it came time to close the doors after five days of linked flight.

Cries of "We'll see you" filled the docking tunnel, as well as "Spasibo," Russian for thank you.

Michael Foale, Linenger's relief aboard Mir, smiled as he watched his American colleagues float away one by one. The seven shuttle fliers and three Mir men hugged one another and shook hands.

"It's a little bit sad, of course, because a thrilling flight is coming to an end," said shuttle commander Charles Precourt. "We're happy that we were able to pull it off."

This was the sixth time Atlantis had docked with Mir and, for the Russians, one of the most important linkups.

The 11-year-old Mir needed the new oxygen generator as soon as possible as a backup. The generator now in use is unreliable; it stopped working for a while in March because of a clogged filter.

Supervision best bet for prisoners

It's like an old "what would happen if ..." version of "The Outer Limits" that starts with the announcement not to adjust your television set, that the eerie images you are witnessing are actually occurring because you have crossed over into "THE OUTER LIMITS!"

Imagine this. Within the next two years 71,000 murderers, rapists and other criminals will be released from the Texas Prison System under an old mandatory release law — turned loose to prey on the very society that sent them to prison because they couldn't obey the law before — and there isn't a thing that can be done to prevent it.

Florida faced a similar situation in March, releasing 300 rapists, robbers, murderers and other hardened criminals because of a Supreme Court ruling that said, essentially, that the state must give prisoners "gain time" they earned to relieve prison overcrowding.

The dilemma facing Texas even prompted the Texas Senate to approve imposing nonstop supervision on violent and sex offenders to be released over the next two years, a move which will cost taxpayers an additional $19 million.

But that isn't a solution, merely a reaction to the fear generated by turning thousands of hardened criminals back out onto society.

Granted, for the judges to have ruled that the criminals should not be released or to propose an alternative would have constituted "legislating from the bench," which is equally wrong. But couldn't they have given legislators a specified time to resolve the dilemma through the legislative branch rather than releasing the inmates.

And one must consider that there may be some inmates who have made the determination to go straight after being released, but realistically the statistics don't support such a claim.

It's a tough call, but Texas had better get ready. The Senate's plan of nonstop supervision for the worst released prisoners may be the best immediate solution.

Bill could help make 'Railroad' link to past

The Underground Railroad was a term used to describe a system in which escaped slaves made their way north to freedom prior to the Civil War.

Stopping places along the way were called "stations," the escaped slaves themselves were called by the code words, "packages" or "freight," and those who helped facilitate the escapes were called "conductors."

The railroad is one of the most fascinating chapters of American history. Members of Congress are taking a well-justified interest in helping to educate Americans about it and in preserving the buildings that were part of the way to freedom for tens of thousands of slaves.

A bill before the House of Representatives proposes assigning the National Park Service to assist with various local efforts to spotlight the significance of stations on the Underground Railroad.

The buildings include homes, churches and barns, and many of them have secret rooms or tunnels. The historic structures could be illustrative for museums, historical groups and other educative organizations in teaching a unique part of our history.

The slavery era of the United States was a cruel time that is no doubt hard for many people to understand today. But the cruelty only existed in part of the population.

It is important to teach that great kindness and humanity existed in the form of "conductors" who were willing to break the law and take risks to help others to freedom.

The stories and sites of the Underground Railroad are deserving of preservation and documentation. The bill would help to make it a more visible part of history.

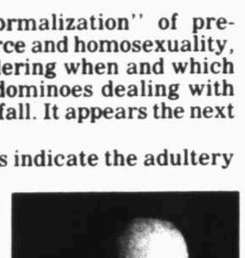
Adultery: The next moral domino to fall?

Following the "normalization" of premarital sex, divorce and homosexuality, I have been wondering when and which of the few remaining dominoes dealing with personal morals would fall. It appears the next to go will be adultery.

Several press reports indicate the adultery domino is already teetering. The Air Force brought several charges, including adultery, against Lt. Kelly Flinn, the first female B-52 bomber pilot. Flinn admits to an affair with a married man. The New York Times characterized it as "violations of the heart." Wrong organ. CBS's Morley Safer rolled his eyes during a "60 Minutes" interview with Flinn, communicating his view that the idea of punishing adulterous behavior is a leftover relic from the era of witch trials in Salem.



Thomas

Another press report tells of Army men visiting a brothel in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico. A 33-year-old married soldier, who paid $40 for five minutes of sex with a prostit e, explains, "Everyone is human, it's going to happen," as if "humanity" and its lower inclinations are the new standard. Would his wife agree? Would he feel the same about humanity if she was the cheating spouse?

Then there is the story of broadcaster Frank Gifford, who was caught on videotape by a supermarket tabloid, embracing a woman who is not Kathie Lee Gifford. Initial reaction was about entrapment and "press ethics," not the damage adultery causes to the wife and kids.

Rushing to keep pace with the cultural decline are at least 40 member churches of the Presbyterian Church (U.S.A.), which last week signed a "covenant of dissent" signaling their noncooperation with the denomination's "fidelity and chastity" law. That law, to be adopted this spring, requires church leaders not to engage in sex outside of a male-female marriage bond. If some churches start going wobbly on a central biblical teaching, what are the rest of us to think?

Psychiatrist and family therapist Frank Pittman has written about adultery, calling it the "primary disrupter of families, the most dreaded and devastating experience in marriage. It is the most universally accepted justification for divorce. It is even a legally accepted justification for murder in some states and many societies."

Indeed, the author of the Mosaic code deduced from the Seventh Commandment prohibiting adultery that people who committed it were to be stoned. Jesus said of the woman allegedly taken in adultery (which looked like a setup to entrap Him) that she should "go and sin no more."

Adultery is about breaking an agreement -- to forsake all others until death parts the agreers. That some high-profile people, such as Donald Trump, Lt. Flinn and, apparently, Frank Gifford, engage in adultery does not repeal the law given for our individual and corporate benefit.

Why do we treat perhaps this most sacred of human contracts in such a cavalier manner? Today, adultery is largely regarded as less offensive than a politician's broken promise. The breaking of a business contract is more universally condemned than the violation of a marriage contract. Yet, the consequences to a society which lowers its standards for such things is broken homes, broken children and, ultimately, broken society.

Infidelity is primarily about lying. That is why it is incorrect to assert that a politician, or anyone else, can be one person in his or her "public life" and another person in private. If one lies about a marital promise, on what basis do we judge his standard for truth-telling elsewhere? Some politicians who promote themselves as favoring "women's rights" see no inconsistency in violating their marriage contract through extramarital affairs, divorce or "annulments." What about the rights of the woman who has been victimized by her predator husband, whose first responsibility is to preserve and protect his family?

Most states continue to treat adultery as a misdemeanor and everywhere it is grounds for divorce. But seeing the dominoes that have already fallen and the deaf ear we have turned to the Seventh Commandment (and all the others), give it time. It won't be long before adultery is taught in our public schools as "normal," "human," even beneficial.

The medium is the message, not the massage

So, did you hear the one about the masseuse who posed for Playboy wearing nothing but her official massage therapy certificate?

Actually, that isn't the beginning of a joke. And nobody at the American Massage Therapy Association thinks it's at all funny.

Why should they? The Illinois-based organization has been laboring for the past half-century to distinguish its thousands of associates and their profession from the sex industry's version of "massage."

Certified massage therapy is about healing torn and strained muscles and ligaments, painful backs and messed-up necks. It has as much in common with massage parlors as the San Francisco Ballet has with lap dancing.

No doubt, the last thing the Association wanted to hear was that Playboy is planning a "pictorial" of nude or scantily clad women who are, alas, not massage parlor employees but certified massage therapists.

I say "no doubt" because the organization will not comment publicly on the issue or on its newsletter appeal for members to voice polite protests to Playboy.

A spokeswoman said the newsletter is an internal memo intended for members only. The organization's board would take no stand on the Playboy matter, she said, and asked me not to quote from the newsletter. Which I won't.

I understand exactly where the American Massage Therapy Association is coming from. It's called "between a rock and a hard place."

Many years ago, when I was one of the few female sports writers in this country, most of us spent more time and energy than we wanted trying to dispel the myths about our profession.

The public, team owners, managers, coaches, players — and players' wives — all seemed to think that women became sports writers just so they could sleep with athletes.

Whatever one of us did reflected on all of us. So, when one woman wrote a novel about a female sports writer, all of us cringed: The title was a double-entendre; the main character slept with a player whose team she covered; art on the book jacket featured a lacy brassiere hanging from a baseball bat.

A lot of us were torn between (1) denying the novel's insinuations and (2) ignoring its existence.

Bill Farley, director of communications at Playboy Enterprises, confirmed that the magazine is indeed planning a pictorial on certified massage therapists for sometime next year. Playboy has featured "so many professions in our pictorials — we've done doctors, lawyers, members of Mensa — we're running out of job categories," said Farley.

But, he said, Playboy knows there's a big difference between certified massage therapists and massage parlor sex workers.

"By no means are we going to imply that the people who appear in that pictorial are available for sexual services, anymore than we do that with the Playmates or celebrities who appear," said Farley. "If we did a pictorial on police officers, I don't think anybody would assume that they were available for sexual services."

But nobody ever confuses cops with sex workers or makes suggestive jokes in that vein.

"True, there is a finer line here," Farley allowed.

The massage association's letter-writing campaign has brought hundreds of "thoughtful, reasonable and intelligent" missives to Playboy, he said, "but I don't think it will have any ultimate impact on our decision."

Right, and for all of Farley's respectful, sober explanations about the upcoming pictorial, he couldn't resist making a joke about how legitimate massage deals with kinks in people's backs while the other kind "takes care of kinks in the front."

Ahem.

That's exactly why the American Massage Therapy Association had to register some protest. Even if it was just for posterity's sake. Posterity is about all you get when your nearest neighbors are a rock and a hard place.

Contemplating a suit can lead to double standards

There is a yin and yang even when it comes to sexual harassment. DeVan Shumway told me his story.

He got on the elevator in his office building and a very attractive woman dressed in one of those suits with gold buttons was a fellow passenger. Shumway smiled at her and she smiled at him.

Buchwald

To be polite, he said, "That's a beautiful suit you are wearing."

She replied, "I'm going to sue you for a million dollars."

Shumway was shaken. "You mean for saying you have a nice suit?"

"You did not have my permission to say it. What I wear is of no concern to you."

"Then why are you wearing it if you don't want anyone to comment on it?"

"I'm hoping Larry Hagler will notice it. He used to work on the same floor that I do."

"I would think the fact that someone noticed the suit would please you as well. A compliment in an elevator is certainly no cause to start World War III."

She said, "Women are sick and tired of men noticing what they are wearing. It's very degrading."

"So forget I said it," Shumway answered. "It's my fault for even noticing it because someone in the coffee shop told me to have a nice day, and like a damn fool I was having one."

The woman turned her back on Shumway. A man got on the elevator and apparently knew the lady, so he said, "Gloria, you look ravishing."

"Be careful," Shumway warned. "She'll sue you for the entire farm."

Gloria said, "Hello Blake, long time no see."

"I'm on the 10th floor now, and the express elevator never stops at the sixth on the way up. I forgot how good you look in clothes."

"You really think so?"

"I love your shoes too. Gloria, you are really put together."

"That's exactly what I was telling her," Shumway said.

Gloria looked at him and said, "You will hear from my lawyers in the morning."

"How come your buddy here says all those things to you and you look pleased as punch, but I throw a compliment your way and you want me to get the death penalty."

"There is a difference between sexual harassment and flattery."

"I know what it is," Shumway said. "It's what someone who works on the 10th floor says to you. I assure you I will never mention an item of your clothing ever again."

"You'd better not, or my lawyers will ask for an all-female jury."

Air Force's top general lashes out on Flinn case

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lambasted by lawmakers for picking on pilot Kelly Flinn, the Air Force's top general said Wednesday the issue is not adultery but "an officer entrusted to fly nuclear weapons who disobeyed, who lied." The ex-wife of Flinn's former lover urged the Air Force to show her no mercy.

At the Pentagon, Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall canceled an out-of-town trip to consider 1st Lt. Flinn's request for an honorable discharge instead of a court martial. Meanwhile, pressure built on Capitol Hill for dismissal of the charges against the service's first female B-52 pilot.

Senior Air Force officials, speaking privately, said they expected Widnall to act within the next two days. They noted she has not looked favorably on the idea of an honorable discharge.

At a Senate hearing, Sen. Tom Harkin, D-Iowa, berated Air Force Chief of Staff Gen. Ronald Fogleman and Widnall for what Harkin called an overly moralistic military legal code.

"I think the Air Force is looking ridiculous on this," Harkin said.

Fogleman, a highly decorated Vietnam-era fighter pilot, argued that the Air Force could not be selective in enforcing its rules. And he said too many people are commenting without knowing the facts of the case.

"The adultery thing ... that's the thing that has been spun up in the press. That's not what the Air Force is interested in," Fogleman said. "In the end, this is not an issue of adultery. This is an issue about an officer entrusted to fly nuclear weapons who disobeyed an order, who lied. That's what this is about."

Harkin pressed on, asking Fogleman why the young aviator was being charged with adultery and not with lying and disobeying an order.

"She is!" said Fogleman, to which Harkin replied: "I thought she was just charged with adultery."

"It's this fact thing, sir. It's the fact thing," Fogleman responded.

Flinn, who is single, is accused of having an affair with a civilian man who was married to an Air Force enlisted woman, of lying about the relationship to investigators and of disobeying an order to end the affair.

In her interviews, Flinn admits lying about the affair but says her only crime was falling in love with the wrong man. She also said the man, Marc Zigo, lied to her about his marriage.

But Zigo's former wife, Gayla Zigo, wrote Widnall asserting Flinn knew what was going on.

"I am tired of Lieutenant Flinn acting as if she is the victim when she is the one who committed the crime," Airman Gayla Zigo wrote. "Lieutenant Flinn knew exactly what she was doing, and that it was wrong. ... If Lieutenant Flinn gets away with these crimes, what does that say to the rest of the Air Force populace?"

On Tuesday, Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott charged the Air Force with abusing Flinn, saying she should be granted an honorable discharge. On Wednesday, Lott said the military needs to review its rules on fraternization.

"We have men and women in the military together now. ... For us to suggest they're not going to develop friendships or love is just not realistic," Lott told reporters.

Elsewhere on Capitol Hill, a group of female lawmakers accused the Air Force of bungling the case.

Rep. Nita Lowey, D-N.Y., said, "The Air Force should have offered Kelly Flinn counseling, warnings and a transfer. Instead it has thrown the book at her, treating her like a criminal."

Abortion argument creates obstacles for some lawmakers

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than once in recent private meetings, Iowa Sen. Tom Harkin has told fellow Democratic senators of his near-death political experience shortly before last year's election.

Attacked for opposing a ban on so-called "partial birth" abortions, Harkin recounted plummeting 10 points in the polls in just four days, according to one aide who has heard his remarks. Harkin speculated that if the assault had happened closer to the election, he might have lost his seat.

In the end, Harkin won re-election despite the scare, and on Tuesday, voted once again against the GOP-crafted measure that passed on a vote of 64-36. But his lingering concern over the issue underscores how the political landscape has shifted on the abortion debate in just a few years.

"The movement's all in our direction," says Douglas Johnson of the National Right To Life Committee. For now, at least, there's no dispute, as evidenced by Democratic Leader Tom Daschle and two other Democrats reversing their previous positions and switching sides on the issue.

"To the extent that they're able to shift the focus onto an unborn fetus, that works to their benefit," Mark Mellman, a Democratic pollster, said of the abortion foes. The challenge for Democrats, he said, is to regain the offensive by reminding the "pro-choice majority (in the country) that there is a well-organized radical right group that wants to take away your right to an abortion."

Kate Michelman, president of the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League, agreed.

"We do need to initiate legislation that really gets the debate back to the issue of who should decide, of emergency contraception, family planning and early abortion," Michelman said. "They (Republicans) are opposed to all of those things, as well."

Johnson countered there is no debate, saying there has never been "anything approaching majority support for abortion on demand, even in the early stages of pregnancy."

Senior Republican officials have been searching for a way to reframe the abortion debate to their advantage. They may have stumbled upon it by concentrating their energy these days on barring one specific, gruesome procedure.

"Infanticide" was a word often uttered on the Senate floor as the debate unfolded on a procedure that partially extracts a fetus legs first through the birth canal, cuts an incision in the barely visible skull base and then drains the contents of the skull.

The procedure is considered sufficiently offensive to so many that Lake Research, a polling firm that works for many Democrats, was prompted to caution its clients in a pre-election memo last fall.

"Do talk about the life and the health of mothers," the memo said. "Don't talk about the health and the condition of the fetus.

"Voters believe that this procedure, no matter what we call it, kills an infant," the memo continued. "We cannot get around this basic belief."

That much was evident on the Senate floor Tuesday, as abortion foes picked up six votes from last year's veto override attempt on a similar bill banning the procedure.

Girl catcher removed for not wearing cup

BOCA RATON, Fla. (AP) — Twelve-year-old Melissa Raglin can't play catcher on her coed baseball team anymore. She doesn't have the right equipment.

Melissa is refusing to obey a Babe Ruth League rule that she wear a jock strap and protective cup, because, well, she doesn't see the need.

"When the ump asked me if I was wearing a cup at the beginning of the second inning, I took my helmet off and said, 'I'm a girl,'" said Melissa, who sat behind home plate for 2 1/2 years — without a cup — until last Thursday.

Apparently Melissa, her coach and most of the umpires hadn't even realized that the rule that catchers must wear cups applies to girls, too. She has been banished to the outfield until she complies.

The dispute has become a hot topic in the community and on talk radio, drawing in the league's national officers and the National Organization for Women.

"It's almost some of kind of harassment," said Linda Bliden, president of NOW's South Palm Beach County chapter. "The cup has nothing to do with a female anatomy. Why are they forcing girls to wear it?"

She wondered if boys would object if made to wear bras.

The Babe Ruth League said it is treating both sexes equally in requiring all catchers to wear a cup, a triangular concave piece of hard plastic that slips into a jock strap and is designed to protect the testicles from a foul ball or wild pitch.

Girls have been playing in the league — with 1 million participants nationwide — since the 1950s.

"It's for her protection," James Stewart, Babe Ruth's commissioner for the Southeast Region, said from Trenton, N.J. "A blow there to a young girl could have devastating long-term effects. It's no different than her mask."

But doctors said that girls do not need as much groin protection as boys do and that, in any case, girls should not wear gear designed for boys.

"I would not apply a boy's device to a girl — they're made for boys," said Dr. Francisco Medina, medical director of children's emergency at Baptist Children's Hospital in Miami. "Any extra protection would be good, yet it's probably not as important as in boys."

Stewart said she could play if she wears female protective gear — briefs with a padded crotch that can be ordered at sporting goods stores. But Melissa's mother, Patricia Raglin, said store clerks laughed at her when she inquired about such a product.

"If something was made for a girl, we'd have gotten it and she'd been wearing it," Ms. Raglin told the Sun-Sentinel of Fort Lauderdale. "But she's not going to wear a boy's cup over a penis she doesn't have."

Melissa, the starting catcher for the Boca Raton Youth League Dodgers, played outfield for two playoff games rather than wear a cup. Then, eager to catch in Sunday' playoff game, she showed up wearing her cup — on her ankle. League officials said she was mocking the rules and again exiled her to the outfield.

"She doesn't want to play the outfield. That's where they put girls who can't play," Ms. Raglin said. "The boys like her as catcher. They want her there."

By Wednesday, Melissa sounded as if she were ready to compromise. She has put in a rush order for female protective gear from Bike Athletic Co. of Knoxville, Tenn.

"If they'd let me catch, I'd probably put it on," Melissa said. "I just want the rule changed. ... I'm just trying to change this rule for everybody."

'The Lost World' to challenge 'Mission Impossible' on its opening weekend

UNIVERSAL CITY, Calif. (AP) — The only question is how big.

"The Lost World: Jurassic Park" is expected to wipe out opening-weekend box office records when it hits theaters Tonight. About the only question at other studios is whether Steven Spielberg's sequel will gross $60 million, $70 million or $80 million by the end of the Memorial Day weekend.

"You never know, you don't know what people want," said "Lost World" star Jeff Goldblum. "But I know that dinosaurs are in the brain. And the movie at this point really seems to be catching people's interest."

"The Lost World" — with the help of ticket prices as high as $9 in New York City — is challenging a box office record set by "Mission: Impossible," which grossed $56.8 million in its first four days in 1996.

"Lost World" also will benefit from the widest release ever — more than 3,000 theater locations in North America. Because many of those are multiplexes, the actual number of screens showing the movie could approach a record 5,000.

"The Lost World" is the first movie Spielberg has directed since winning seven Oscars for "Schindler's List," which came out in late 1993.

His "Jurassic Park" is the all-time international box-office champ, with global ticket grosses of $556 million. In its first three days in 1993, "Jurassic Park" grossed a then-record $50.2 million.

Universal Pictures would not predict how much the film will take in. Sequels generally gross about two-thirds of their predecessors, but the anticipation surrounding "The Lost World" is extraordinary.

Audience surveys by the National Research Group showed that a week before the film opened, 25 percent of moviegoers said the sequel was their first film choice. A typical blockbuster might register at 15 percent.

The next choice was the holiday weekend's only other wide opener, the romantic comedy "Addicted to Love" with Meg Ryan and Matthew Broderick, registering just 5 percent. This week, the numbers for "Lost World" soared to 33 percent.

MovieFone, an advance-order ticket service in 30 cities, said the number of "Lost World" calls has exceeded that of any movie since "Jurassic Park."

The sequel follows Goldblum as he tries to rescue his naturalist girlfriend, played by Julianne Moore, from a dinosaur-infested island.

Some critics have said "The Lost World" is not as good as the original, which many reviewers said wasn't all that good to begin with.

"The effects may be a little better," said Matt Crenson of The Associated Press said of the sequel. "But basically we're dealing with the same thing."

Daily Variety said: "Underneath the technical virtuosity is a standard chase film, and director Steven Spielberg does little to elevate it dramatically."

"The audience goes in saying, 'I don't want the same thing again — but don't you dare change it!'" said the film's screenwriter, David Koepp. What moviegoers really want, he said, is Spielberg's "visual prowess."

Indeed, Angel Cabrera, 25, of Mission Hills, said: "I'm looking forward to the opening. The first movie amazed me. The effects were mind-boggling, and I just know the sequel will be better than the first."

Short car chase leads to drug bust

Police arrest one, second suspect flees

Kes Gilhome
Staff Writer

One suspect is in custody and police are searching for a second after a short car chase led to a drug bust shortly before 9 a.m. Wednesday.

Marcus Acosta, 23, the passenger in the vehicle, was arrested on felony charges for possession of more than four ounces of marijuana.

The other suspect, the driver, is believed to be 24-year-old George Arsiaga, according to the report. He is being sought on a felony charge of possession.

"Basically, he's a known gang member. They both are," said Tina Sanders, public information officer for the Midland Police Department. "It's just a case of catching up with him."

Detective Mark Hinshaw, an investigator with the Police Department's Gang Unit, observed a vehicle violating traffic laws at the intersection of Lamesa Road and Wadley Avenue, according to police reports. The two men in the vehicle were known gang members, Hinshaw said.

After the officer tried to stop the vehicle a short chase ensued. Speeds of up to 70 mph were reported.

Police said that when the vehicle tried to make a right turn from Lamesa Road onto Hamby Avenue, the driver lost control and struck the fence at 1101 Hamby Ave. No one was injured in the accident.

Acosta was arrested at the scene after police found marijuana in the vehicle.

According to witnesses, police recovered a second amount of marijuana, believed to have been thrown away by Arsiaga as he fled eastbound on foot.

The drugs are believed to be in sufficient quantities to justify a felony warrant for Arsiaga, police said.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE

SHE CAN PRONOUNCE YOU MARRIED ... OR DEAD

Johnnye Montgomery/Reporter-Telegram
Howard County Justice of the Peace China Long stands next to her prized photograph of the legendary Judge Roy Bean.

By Johnnye Montgomery

BIG SPRING — If you saw your back-alley neighbor heading into the Howard County Justice of the Peace office and think you can find out why by tuning into the Morning Show on KBST Radio, forget it. Judge China Long isn't telling.

The Big Spring woman, who is working on her fourth term in office, does a 15-minute radio show every day before she comes to work.

She says it's laid back and gossipy, but some subjects are off limits.

"I never talk about my cases," she said.

She explained the various functions of the justice of the peace.

"I think someone decided all the things nobody else wanted to do would be the duty of the JP," she said. "I have a criminal court and a civil court. The criminal court deals with Class C misdemeanors, such as traffic tickets, or anything that can be settled with a fine only.

"The civic court is a small claims court, similar to Judge Wapner's court, if you remember him. If you have a problem with someone owing you up to $5,000, that can be handled in a small claims court. You don't have to have a lawyer. You can represent yourself."

She said a surprisingly large number of people seem to look to the justice of the peace to solve their problems.

"I think we're the only people accessible as far as judges go," she explained. "You can't talk to a district judge, and usually not even the county judge," she said. "But you can always come to your friendly justice of the peace.

"I've had a lot of cases where people steal other people's dogs, or they injure the dog and the owners sue them for the veterinarian's bill.

"One young man sued his parents for the return of some pictures he had painted when he was 8 years old. He had fallen out of favor with them for

Crime Stoppers names Crouse as coordinator

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Crime Stoppers of Midland has changed leadership, with Sgt. Jim L. Crouse of the Midland County Sheriff's Office taking over as coordinator for the organization.

Crouse

Crouse, previously a supervisor at the Midland County Central Detention facility, is replacing Sgt. Greg Galvan, who served as Crime Stoppers coordinator for a year and a half.

Galvan is leaving the post to take up a position as an investigator with the Sheriff's Office.

Crouse has asked local news media representatives to become even more involved in the Crime Stoppers effort, helping to keep the community informed of the need for information and the rewards for that information.

"That's what makes the program work," Crouse said Wednesday afternoon.

Crime Stoppers offers rewards of up to $1,000 for information that leads to the arrest and conviction of those responsible for felony crimes.

As coordinator, Crouse will be working directly with area law-enforcement officers and must keep abreast of ongoing investigations within all agencies, such as the Texas Department of Public Safety, local police, sheriff's deputies and members of the Permian Basin Drug Task Force.

The position of coordinator for the local organization is funded by the Midland County Sheriff's Office and a secretary is funded by the city of Midland.

A board of trustees oversees the local Crime Stoppers operation and new officers for this board were sworn in last week.

These new officers for 1997-98 are Kathy Armstrong, who will serve as president of the board; John Maddox, vice-president; Charles Kuss, treasurer and Daniel Watts, secretary.

MOSC director praises achievements, thanks donors for 'chance to dream'

By Georgia Temple
Staff Writer

Rob Hunt praised the significant achievements of the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale Inc., during the organization's annual meeting Wednesday, and thanked the sponsors and donors "for giving us a chance to dream and to aspire to excellence."

"The past year saw some significant, maybe pivotal, achievements in the life of the orchestra and chorale," the music director and conductor said. "Among the most important of these accomplishments were the dramatic resurgence of the guilds, the continued financial health of our organization and build-up of the endowment, and growth in attendance at Masterworks concerts."

He considered as artistic peaks the Masterworks concert with pianist Lee Luvisi, the orchestra's performance of Tchaikovsky's Fifth Symphony and the Holiday Pops, with "Linda Bond's creative touches and a parade of diverse community talent that gave the evening a rich texture."

In an interview before the afternoon gathering, Hunt called the meeting "an opportunity certainly to celebrate the success of the previous year but also to look forward to the future."

During the annual meeting, he played recorded excerpts from pieces the orchestra and chorale will be performing during the "Reach for the Stars" season. The brochures were mailed earlier this month.

"I'm very sold on the programming we have planned," Hunt said of the 1997-98 season. "It includes pieces like the 'Firebird' (Stravinsky), the 'Carmina Burana,' which is one of the most spectacular pieces ever written, a concert of American music including Bernstein's 'Symphonic Dances' from 'West Side Story,' and an all-Mozart evening. We also have Wagner and Liszt represented, as well as lesser-known composers."

The orchestra plans, Hunt said, "To build upon the growth in our classical season audience in a major way next year."

Each classical concert of the 1997-98 season contains, Hunt said, "An interesting juxtaposition of material."

He cited as an example, the concert featuring works by Mozart.

"The Mozart concert pits the music of Mozart with that of Antonio Saleri, who is suspected by some people in having a hand in killing Mozart and who, at the least, was a great rival. It's a chance to hear the two composers' music side by side and hear the difference in temperament and perhaps in talent."

Each concert, Hunt said, "Has something that will make the audience think and provide a new perspective because of the way the program is put together."

During the meeting, the day was proclaimed "Frank Bell Day" by the mayors of Midland and Odessa. Bell, who was with the organization for three years following a 30-year successful career in the business world, retired this spring as executive director.

"He was very wise," Hunt said of Bell. "He set pricare at the level of emergency medical technician (EMT), according to Chip Balzer, assistant chief of support services for MFD.

These 135 certified personnel constitute the bulk of the 165-man Fire Department in Midland. "In 1986 we started requiring new hires to receive EMT certification ... so at some period in time we will be at 100 percent," Balzer said.

In the Midland EMS system, there are five ambulances certified to the level of "mobile intensive care unit" by the Texas Department of Health, Balzer said. The mobile intensive care unit (MICU) is the most complex form of ambulance and provides facilities for the most advanced of life-saving techniques for sick and injured citizens.

These ambulances are stationed strategically at fire stations across Midland and are manned at all times by two paramedics.

There are two other units kept in reserve to support the five active ambulances and crews, Balzer said.

Last year, there were 5,718 calls for assistance to the local EMS system, with MFD personnel caring for almost 6,600 sick and injured people.

These totals have been increasing by about 6 percent each year for the past three years, Balzer said.

MFD took over the operation of local ambulance services in the late 1970s and is responsible for emergency medical response in the entire county.

Emergency medical personnel are part of a larger system that includes a network of area trauma centers. An informed public capable of recognizing a medical emergency comprise an important part of this system, according to TDH officials.

The mission of EMS personnel in Texas is to provide the best, most timely pre-hospital care to the sick and injured, and transferring these people safely and quickly to appropriate medical facilities.

Texas Emergency Medical Service Week continues through Saturday.

OBITUARIES

Dorothy Wyvell-Dickson

Dr. Dorothy Bryan Wyvell-Dickson, one of the first medical specialists in Midland and an original founder of what has become the Midland medical community, died Monday at age 83.

A longtime resident and a pediatrician in Midland from 1949 until her retirement in 1987, Ms. Wyvell-Dickson was born Nov. 19, 1913, in Washington, D.C., where her father worked for Secretary of State William Jennings Bryan.

Her father, hoping for a boy, gave her the middle name of Bryan.

She graduated from Duke University Medical School in 1938, one of only two women to do so that year. She was accepted as a Fellow of the American Academy of Pediatrics in 1944.

After internships at Montreal Children's Hospital and John's Hopkins Hospital, Ms. Wyvell-Dickson was a resident in pediatrics at Duke University and Children's Medical Center in Dallas.

While practicing in Dallas, she taught pediatrics at Baylor and Southwestern Medical Schools. She moved to Midland in 1949.

A self-proclaimed "right-wing extremist," Ms. Wyvell-Dickson closed her Midland practice in 1960 in order to run for Congress on a Constitution Party ticket.

"I'm the proudest of running for Congress," she said in a 1983 interview with the Reporter-Telegram. "I just felt such bad things were happening to people that I had to do something."

In the same interview she said, "We all have the same 24-hours. It's what you do with those 24-hours that makes you unequal."

She received the Lucy Mashburn Award from the Altrusa Club in 1985.

She was preceded in death by her husband Raymond Dickson.

Ms. Wyvell-Dickson is survived by two brothers, Conrad Wyvell and Donald Wyvell, both of Washington, D.C.; three sisters, Marion Leland of Wheat Ridge, Colo.; Janet Phelps of Washington, D.C.; and Eleanor Hogg of Houston; and six nieces and nephews.

information that leads to the arrest and conviction of crimes ranging from robbery, narcotics and burglary to sexual assault and homicide, Crouse explained.

Information on fugitives is also needed from area citizens, and can merit a cash reward.

In his new position, Crouse will be receiving tips that concerned citizens provide and relaying this information to the appropriate law enforcement agency.

He will also be working in fund-raising efforts to provide the money paid out to those informants who accept rewards for their help. All callers remain anonymous, Crouse stressed.

Crouse has been in law enforcement since 1993 and has a bachelor's degree in criminology.

Since the first of the year, there have been more than 100 arrests made through information called in to Crime Stoppers of Midland, Crouse said.

Since its inception in 1984, Crime Stoppers calls have resulted in 2,161 arrests locally.

MOSC: Bell provided symphony with firm fiscal footing, Hunt says orities for us at a difficult time in our history. We were able to maintain artistic integrity while cutting many costs. As a result, we're in excellent financial health and can face the future with the assurance that we can begin to grow again, but with the mind-set of being fiscally responsible.

"I think, in a way, he gave us a new corporate culture which will exist side by side with our artistic culture and provide us with a sound foundation for the next century."

During Bell's leadership, the MOSC eliminated its accumulated deficit, established cash reserves, and watched its endowment grow to $600,000. To remember Bell and honor his contribution to the organization, the MOSC board of directors announced Wednesday the establishment of the Frank A. Bell Award.

"The Frank A. Bell Award goes to a person who has made a big difference for the symphony as Frank has done. A person from the community who has had a huge impact on the symphony," Hunt said.

Tim Young assumed Bell's duties as general manager this spring.

In other business, Charles Nail, president of the MOSC board of directors, passed the gavel to Scott Long, the newly elected president.

Joining the board of directors either as new members or returning members are Jane Knox, Alan Gahm, Kay Smith, Sally Stella, Chan Driscoll, Gloria McGavran, Beth Santilli and Steve McHaney.

Harp music performed by 11 young harpists from LBJ Elementary School in Odessa opened the meeting and reception.

"Reba McHaney's program is notable in that it is one of the very few public-school harp programs in the country," Hunt said. "It has enjoyed wide acclaim, and Reba has received commendations from the Juilliard School and many outstanding figures in the world of music."

JUSTICE: She can pronounce you dead or swear in the president

(From 1B)

some reason, and he decided to retaliate by getting his pictures back."

Ms. Long said she found for the parents.

She said the first thing most people think of when they here the words "justice of the peace" is marriages.

"I often tell people I can either pronounce you husband and wife — or dead," she said. "And I think a lot of people see a close relationship there." She has performed more than 1,000 marriage ceremonies in the 12 years she's been in office.

"Before I became the justice of the peace, I had no idea how many people came to the JP to get married," she said. "They used to be able to come to the courthouse and buy the license over their lunch hour and get married before going back to work. But a couple of years back, the Legislature passed a law saying you had to wait 72 hours between the time you get your license and get married. It's a sort of cooling-off period.

"This is really a pretty good idea. Before that (legislation) I had several couples come in and get married, and the next day they would come back and say, 'There's been a terrible mistake. Can you unmarry us?' I'd have to tell them that I can't. They have to get a divorce at that point. Once the marriage is registered, it's a much more expensive procedure to undo it."

Ms. Long said the weddings take place in all sorts of settings.

"I've done weddings out on the courthouse lawn, on Scenic Mountain, in the city park, at the fairgrounds and the VFW hall, and one wedding I did in a bar. The people both worked there, and the bride marched down past the pool tables to the tune of 'Baby's Got Her Blue Jeans On'. The way I look at it, if they're entitled to get a marriage license in the state of Texas, then it's not up to me to tell them how to dress or where to have the marriage ceremony."

Ms. Long is also the person to call if your intended is incarcerated.

"Occasionally I do weddings up on the fourth floor (of the Howard County Courthouse), in the jail. I go up on the elevator with the bride, and we have the ceremony, and she and I ride back down together. And we have a number of federal prisons here, and occasionally someone will come in from New York City, or Houston, or Oregon, or somewhere, and I'll marry them."

The justice of the peace is also the county coroner. Ms. Long said she's called any time there is an unattended death — a death at home, or if they've been in the hospital less than 24 hours, or in the case of any kind of a questionable death. She said in any doubtful situation, she orders an autopsy.

"My job is to make sure if it's not a natural cause. I've had a lot of people say, 'Well, if it's a gunshot wound, it's pretty obvious that's the cause of death.' But not necessarily. They could have had a heart attack, and then have had someone shoot their body.

"And if there's a questionable death, I'm required to call the Sheriff's Office or the Police Department, depending on where it is. The law enforcement people do the investigation. Fortunately, questionable deaths and homicides aren't too common."

Ms. Long also conducts probable cause hearings at the Big Spring State Mental Hospital. Whenever a person is committed to the hospital, he must have a hearing within 72 hours to determine whether he needs to stay there. "My determination is, are they dangerous to themselves or others," she said.

Another duty she performs is the handling of truancy cases.

"The school people file complaints when kids aren't going to school, and I sometimes have to fine them," she explained. "But I try not to be mean about it. People get themselves into various circumstances, and things can get out of control. When I do fine them, most people don't take it personally. They tell me they know I'm just doing my job."

She said she has no dress code for the people who appear before her.

"I've never dealt with anyone who hasn't been fully clothed. I've had some funny marriage costumes. A lot of men wear gimme caps and never take them off. Maybe they're bald. People who are arrested show up in different kinds of dress, but of course, they have no control over what they're wearing at that point."

The justice of the peace also has the power to administer oaths of office. Ms. Long has sworn in a number of county officials, and when asked, she said, yes, she could swear in state or national officials.

"Why yes, I could swear in the president, in an emergency."

Marine shoots, kills 18-year-old near Big Bend

By Thaddeus Herrick
Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — A Marine on an anti-drug operation along the Texas-Mexico border near Big Bend National Park shot and killed an 18-year-old high school student who, authorities said, had opened fire.

Ezequiel Hernandez, who officials said fired a .22-caliber rifle twice at four camouflaged Marines on loan from Camp Pendleton, Calif., was struck once with a bullet from an M-16 Tuesday evening.

But authorities on Wednesday could provide few details about the apparent shootout. Locals from the tiny town of Redford, Texas, said Hernandez was tending his family's goats when the incident occurred.

'You're going to get your explanation. It's just not coming yet.'
— Task force spokeswoman Maureen Bossch

"You're going to get your explanation," said Maureen Bossch, spokeswoman for Joint Task Force-6, a federal agency that coordinates military and civilian anti-drug operations from Fort Bliss in El Paso. "It's just not coming yet."

Locals decried the shooting, calling Hernandez a hard worker whose most serious offense was driving without a license. They said the Presidio High School sophomore and U.S. citizen regularly carried a .22 when he herded his family's goats. They insisted that he had better sense than to shoot at soldiers.

"This is a kid who has never been in trouble," said the Rev. Mel LaFollette, a retired Episcopal minister who came to Redford 14 years ago as a missionary. "There is absolutely no explanation for it."

The incident raises questions about the role of the military along the border, where soldiers have been invited by federal agents to assist in the war on drugs. Though soldiers cannot by law confront suspects, they are used in a host of other traditional law enforcement roles, chief among them surveillance.

The military can, however, return fire. Tuesday's incident was the second border shooting since joint operations began in 1989. The first came last January near Brownsville, Texas, when a Matamoros, Mexico, man who shot at soldiers was wounded by an Army Green Beret. The incident touched off criticism from border rights activists.

Authorities said the four Marines, acting as "the eyes and ears" of the Border Patrol, were watching a suspected drug trafficking route on the southwest edge of the national park when Tuesday's incident occurred.

They said Hernandez came within 200 yards of them.

Locals said sheriff's deputies and Border Patrol agents arrived in Redford at about 6 p.m., shortly before Hernandez was killed, and told them to stay inside, because a man was loose in the nearby hills with a rifle.

"They were running toward the hills," said Jesus Valenzuela, who heads a local goat cooperative. "We couldn't see anything."

Belen Hernandez, Ezequiel's 26-year-old sister, said she heard only one shot, suggesting, as other locals did, that Hernandez never fired. But authorities said they recovered two spent shells from his .22.

Still, locals said Hernandez used his rifle to ward off coyotes and javelinas common in the hills and canyons of Big Bend country. Such low-powered weapons are no match for an M-16.

"It makes no sense" said Valenzuela. "He was an awful nice kid. He didn't smoke or drink. He was just one good kid."

The local district attorney has asked the Texas Rangers to investigate the matter. Top officials from the Border Patrol and the Joint Task Force-6 were expected to hold a news conference today.

Police arrest girl for shooting grandfather in oil royalty scheme

ANTON, Texas (AP) — A 13-year-old Hockley County girl remained in custody Wednesday after deputies arrested her and her 20-year-old boyfriend in the shooting of the girl's grandfather in an alleged oil royalty scheme.

Bobby Ake has been charged with attempted capital murder in the shooting, which occurred early Tuesday at the remote home of J.B. Brimhall, 73. The girl hadn't been charged in the juvenile system as of Wednesday.

The two called police after Brimhall survived a gunshot to the head, delivered by the granddaughter whom he's helped raise, authorities said. He remained in stable condition Wednesday.

"At first they claimed it was a drive-by shooting," Chief Deputy David Kinney said. "The house is in the middle of nowhere kind of on a hill, so officers determined immediately that was not true."

HOW TO READ THE MARKET IN REVIEW

Here are the 1,675 most active stocks on the New York Stock Exchange, 925 most active on the Nasdaq National Market and 405 most active on the American Stock Exchange. Stocks in bold are worth at least $5 and changed 5 percent or more in price. Underlining for 50 most active on NYSE and Nasdaq and 25 most active on Amex. Tables show name, price and net change, and one to two additional fields rotated through the week, as follows:

Name: Stocks appear alphabetically by the company's full name (not its abbreviation). Names consisting of initials appear at the beginning of each letter's list.
Last: Price stock was trading at when exchange closed for the day.
Chg: Loss or gain for the day. No change indicated by ...
Tkr: The stock's ticker symbol.
How to use: The ticker symbol can help you get information about a company. Two important uses: Most services that provide stock quotes over the phone require the ticker symbol. Second, stock brokers and analysts can recognize stocks more easily with a ticker symbol.

Generally, ticker symbols resemble the company name although some – BUD for Anheuser Busch Cos. and FON for Sprint Corp. – are more related to what a company does. Tickers on the New York and Amex usually don't exceed three letters. On Nasdaq, they go up to five letters.

The names you see in this paper are abbreviations of the company name supplied by The Associated Press. Companies can help determine what their abbreviation will be. Overall, AP tries to use an abbreviation that will most closely match the full company name.

Stock Footnotes: cc – PE greater than 99. dd – Loss in last 12 mos. d – New 52-wk low during trading day. g – Dividend in Canadian $. Prices rebound

NEW YORK — Gasoline and crude oil prices rose Wednesday on unconfirmed reports of Iraqi troop movements and supply worries ahead of the Memorial Day weekend, which kicks off the peak driving season.

Unleaded gasoline for delivery in June settled at 66.53 cents a gallon, up 1.14 cents, on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Crude oil for delivery in July settled at $21.86 per barrel, up 27 cents.

The reports of Iraqi troop movements in the north of the country followed word Tuesday that Turkish jets had bombed areas in northern Iraq while ground troops fought with separatist Kurdish guerrillas. There were also reports that Iraqi troops had moved into the area.

The area is protected by the United Nations following the Gulf War. Any escalation could eventually disrupt oil supplies.

Regarding gasoline, the Memorial Day weekend launches the nation's peak driving season when gasoline is in the hottest demand.

Natural gas prices were lower, with contracts for delivery in June ending at $2.206 per 1,000 cubic feet, up 1.5 cents.

Dollar climbs

NEW YORK — The dollar rose broadly Wednesday after the government reported a surprising shrinkage in the monthly trade deficit and a senior German central banker said he favors an exchange rate of about 1.7000 marks.

Traders said the dollar also was helped by rumors of Asian central-bank purchases of dollars as well as remarks by Japanese Finance Ministry official Eisuke Sakakibara, the country's top foreign-exchange policymaker, emphasizing the importance of currency stability.

In New York, the dollar settled at 114.18 yen, up from 113.04 yen Tuesday. The dollar cost 1.6946 marks, up from 1.6823. The pound cost $1.6450, down from $1.6570.

Other late dollar rates in New York, compared with Tuesday: 1.4085 Swiss francs, up from 1.3905; 5.7075 French francs, up from 5.6675; 1,667.25 Italian lire, up from 1,656.00; 1.3672 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3664.

Dow drops

NEW YORK — A powerful profit report from Dell Computer energized the technology sector, but blue-chip shares pulled back Wednesday as the inflation picture clouded just a day after the Federal Reserve said not to worry.

The Dow Jones industrial average fell 12.77 to 7,290.69, swinging from an early 49-point gain to a 64-point deficit before recovering. The morning advance would have beaten last Thursday's record finish of 7,333.55.

Broader sectors were mixed. The technology-heavy Nasdaq market drew a boost from Dell's earnings report, which was released after Tuesday's close.

Advancing issues outnumbered decliners by more than a 5-to-4 margin on the New York Stock Exchange, where volume totaled 537.04 million shares, up sharply from Tuesday's pace.

The Standard & Poor's 500-stock list fell 2.31 to 839.35, and the NYSE composite index fell 0.99 to 436.21. Both big-company measures bobbed into record territory during the morning before turning lower.

The Nasdaq composite index rose 9.87 to 1,373.75, led by Dell, which soared 7 1/8 to 106 3/4.

Sweeping financial reforms proposed

■ Proposal would end barriers between banks, insurance and brokerage businesses.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The administration asked Congress Wednesday to sweep away Depression-era restrictions keeping banks, insurance companies and brokerages out of each other's businesses.

Depending on one's viewpoint, the proposal would either usher in an era of efficient, one-stop financial shopping for Americans or foster an unprecedented concentration of financial power that could cost consumers money.

For instance, a bank might be tempted into pressuring auto loan customers into buying its auto insurance — unless Congress adopts stricter safeguards than the administration is proposing, consumer activists warn.

Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, who outlined the proposal in a luncheon speech, said that through increased efficiency, financial modernization could save consumers as much as $15 billion of the nearly $300 billion a year they spend on financial services.

If enacted, it would be the most significant overhaul of the nation's financial laws in 60 years. But in the past, even more ambitious plans, offered by the Bush and Reagan administrations, have failed to make it past the fierce lobbying of competing industries struggling for advantage.

Already, a range of organizations representing consumers, the elderly, farmers, community groups and smaller banks have raised concerns. They've focused on an option in the administration plan that would permit holding companies to own both a federally insured bank and commercial businesses such as a chain of travel agencies or a real estate development company.

Under the Treasury proposal, banks, securities firms and insurance companies would be able to own one another. Secondly, federally insured banks would be permitted to offer insurance and securities services they now provide only through a complex holding company structure or under other restrictions curbing their involvement.

For months, the administration also had floated a plan breaching the historic wall between banking and commerce. But it ran into a barrage of criticism, and Rubin offered it as one of two options.

Under the first option, Congress could permit bank holding companies "some modest measure of nonfinancial activity," but banks would be prohibited from owning the nation's 1,000 largest commercial companies.

Also, the banking and savings institution industries effectively would be merged, and the Treasury Department's two financial regulators — the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency and the Office of Thrift Supervision — would be combined.

Under the second approach, the traditional barrier between commerce and banking would be maintained. And the S&L industry, which has more freedom to engage in commercial activities than banks, would remain separate from banking, retaining its own charter and regulator.

Skeptics of financial modernization said they were pleased the Treasury Department downgraded mixing banking and commerce from a firm recommendation to an option, but said even the narrower alternative would dampen competition.

The administration is proposing consumer protections on investment products sold by banks. A bank mutual fund would carry a warning such as, "Not guaranteed by the bank, may go down in value."

But Mary Griffin, counsel for Consumer's Union, said further protections are needed to prevent banks from subtly pressuring customers into buying more services than they need. She would prohibit a bank from selling other services until after it had approved a loan application.

Trade deficit narrows dramatically

■ Private economists expect improvement in trade gap to be only temporary.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The trade deficit narrowed dramatically in March to $8.5 billion as rising demand for American jetliners, telecommunications equipment and computers pushed U.S. exports to a second consecutive monthly record.

The Commerce Department said Wednesday that the March trade gap between imports and exports was down 19.3 percent from February's $10.5 billion deficit. Exports shot up 4.1 percent, offsetting a record 1.2 percent rise in imports.

The Clinton administration hailed the better-than-expected showing as evidence of America's global competitive clout, but private economists called the improvement only a temporary reprieve given a number of factors acting to keep the deficit high.

Major overseas markets in Europe and Japan remain mired in slow growth while the U.S. economy is racing ahead, pushing up demand for foreign products. U.S. consumers have also benefited from a strong rise in the value of the dollar over the past two years, which makes foreign products cheaper in this country.

Even with the March improvement, the deficit so far this year is running at an annual rate of $126 billion, compared to last year's $114 billion, making it the worst showing in eight years.

"We are not out of the woods yet. Today's number is just a temporary reprieve. We have got bigger deficits ahead of us before we see any permanent improvement," said Lawrence Chimerine, chief economist at the Economic Strategy Institute, a Washington think tank.

Of particular worry to economists is a rising deficit with Japan, which they see as a product of the dollar's strength against the yen over the past two years. They said recent declines in the dollar are encouraging but will not help lower the deficit until next year.

For March, the deficit with Japan was up 8.3 percent to $4.6 billion, the highest since October. The deficit will rise even further in April, based on figures already reported by the Japanese government.

America's imbalance with China did decline by 22.4 percent to $2.6 billion, the smallest gap in nearly a year. Sales of commercial jetliners rose while imports of Chinese toys, shoes and clothing all declined.

Oilfield security to be reviewed

Staff Reports

Representatives from the National Research Division of Sandia Laboratories at Los Alamos, N.M. and Tool Branding Service of Hobbs will meet today at the offices of Charles J. George Inc. of Odessa to review oilfield security problems.

The National Laboratory, which has assigned 150 staff members solely to security matters, will have a team to focus entirely on oilfield security problems and namely how to prevent theft. The team will work with Brad Roberts, owner of Tool Branding, in conducting a comprehensive study of oilfield theft.

Tool Branding Service is a private oilfield security company that works closely with law enforcement officials to recover stolen oilfield property. Roberts says a review of security problems is needed because oilfield equipment stolen in the Permian Basin is often sent to Farmington, Houston and Oklahoma to be sold, costing operators hundreds of thousands of dollars.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Major medical coverage key to assessing health plan

By Eric Tyson

Q: I recently started my own business and I'm glad that I did. While I'm making less money than I used to, I'm much happier in my line of work and not having to deal with my tyrannical boss.

I am in the market for health insurance to replace the coverage I had through my previous employer — which I've continued for a number of months. I know it's more expensive than other plans and doesn't offer the best benefits, but I'm lost when it comes to understanding what different plans are available, how to choose among them and what to look for.

Tyson

Can you please help?

A: The details and nuances among the myriad health plans available in your area can start to make your eyes glaze over. And, when you are healthy, it's hard to imagine being very sick or injured, but that's the scenario you must consider when you are shopping for your health insurance.

More and more Americans are shifting from traditional open-choice insurance plans, which let you choose any available health-care provider, into restricted-choice plans called "managed care plans," such as health maintenance organizations (HMOs) and preferred provider organizations (PPOs).

By restricting your choices of doctors and hospitals, managed-care plans can lower your health-care costs. HMOs and PPOs use their group purchasing power to negotiate favorable rates with health-care providers. In return, those providers in the system get a steady flow of patients.

HMOs are insurance systems in which your primary-care doctor typically agrees to provide you with needed care for a set monthly fee.

In PPOs, by contrast, health-care providers are paid for services rendered, according to the plan's negotiated rates.

While the attraction of saving money on health insurance premiums is what attracts self-employed people into managed care plans, many people are concerned about the restrictions of providers.

Interview doctors and find out what health insurance plans they accept. And if you have a preferred hospital, ask the same of the hospital.

When you buy a health plan, you need what's called "major medical" coverage, which cn protect you from catastrophic medical expenses. The cost of major surgery and a hospital stay can easily run into the tens of thousands of dollars. A major illness or accident can push costs into the hundreds of thousands.

Some health plans limit how much they will pay in benefits over the course of your life. A million-dollar maximum is minimally acceptable. Look for a maximum of at least $2 million. Ideally, you want a plan with no maximum at all.

A broad medical plan covers physician care, inpatient and outpatient hospital care, surgical care, intensive care and diagnostic testing. Women considering having children should make sure that the plan offers maternity benefits.

If the health plan has deductible and co-payment options — most HMOs don't — choose the highest deductibles and co-payments you can afford.

Make sure the health plan you're buying is guaranteed renewable. You shouldn't have to pass physical examinations to renew your coverage.

With most types of insurance, it is cheaper to buy directly from an insurance company than it is to buy through an agent. However, that not the case for health insurance; a health plan is not more expensive if you go through an agent. If you are buying from an agent, however, be on the lookout for potential conflicts of interest. Agents who work on commission might have an incentive to steer you toward higher-premium policies, ones with lower deductibles than you might need.

Also check on the insurer's financial stability. There are a number of independent organizations — such as A.M. Best, Moody's and Weiss Research — that evaluate and rate the financial stability and viability of insurance companies. Ask your insurance agent or health plan for the plan's current ratings.

Finally, don't forget the best health insurance of all: Eat healthfully, exercise and keep the stress in your life to a manageable level.

Senate rejects cigarette tax for children's health plan

■ White House, top Republicans said plan would puncture budget-balancing agreement.

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate rejected an effort to boost spending for children's health care and pay for it with higher cigarette taxes Wednesday after the White House and top Republicans said it would puncture their budget-balancing agreement.

After seven hours of debate and behind-the-scenes phone calls by President Clinton and members of his Cabinet, and pressure by GOP leaders, the Senate killed the effort to alter the budget pact on a 55-45 roll call. Eight Democrats and 47 Republicans joined forces to defeat the changes, while 37 Democrats and eight Republicans stood by it.

It was the sternest challenge so far to the accord between Clinton and top lawmakers, which is aimed at eliminating deficits by 2002 while cutting taxes by a net of $85 billion.

At a Wednesday night fund-raiser that brought in $1.5 million for the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee, Clinton thanked Democratic senators for their support.

"Even though we have had occasional, well-publicized disagreements, the last time I checked the Democratic Congress has supported me more frequently than the Democrats supported my last three Democratic predecessors," Clinton said. "So I am very grateful for the partnership we have had."

Shortly before the vote, White House spokesman Mike McCurry telegraphed the amendment's defeat by saying that Clinton supported its thrust, but not at the expense of the hard-won budget deal.

"It stands encumbering the balanced-budget agreement that we also fought very hard for," McCurry told reporters. "The president is not about to see all that hard work go down the drain."

To give themselves political cover, Republicans insisted that the president publicly oppose the changes and round up Democratic votes to help defeat them, GOP lawmakers said later, speaking on condition of anonymity.

"Today, it was primarily calls from the White House" that helped defeat the amendment, said Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who sponsored it with Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah.

Kennedy said at least 15 senators got calls from Cabinet-level officials urging them to vote against the measure. Among them was Sen. Joseph Lieberman, D-Conn., who said White House chief lobbyist John Hilley offered to have Clinton telephone him.

"I said save him the call," said Lieberman, who opined that the timing was bad to pursue children's health initiatives. "It's clear there was a danger the budget agreement would unravel."

Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., had warned repeatedly that he would pull an outline of the budget-balancing pact off the Senate floor if the changes were approved.

"This is clearly a deal-buster," Lott said. "If this amendment should be adopted right out of the gate, the wheels will come off this thing."

Lott said he telephoned White House chief of staff Erskine Bowles Wednesday morning to seek administration support in defeating the amendment, and later got a call from Clinton in which he promised to do so.

But longtime tobacco foe Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, and liberal Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., persisted, with seemingly strong support. Their proposal to raise the 24-cent-a-pack federal cigarette tax by 43 cents would provide $20 billion for health-care coverage for 5 million low-income children, plus $10 billion to reduce the deficit.

"Are you for Joe Camel and the Marlboro Man, or millions of children who lack adequate health care?" Kennedy asked his colleagues.

And with expanding children's health care a top priority of Senate Democrats this year, Minority Leader Tom Daschle, D-S.D., sprung to their defense.

"If it means bringing down the budget resolution as some of my colleagues have threatened, then so be it," Daschle said.

Their proposal caused particular heartburn for conservatives because in effect, it would have shrunk the budget agreement's tax cuts to a net of $55 billion. As a result, GOP leaders worried that if it succeeded, Republicans would begin deserting the pact.

Win or lose, the Kennedy-Hatch proposal slowed the budget agreement's march through Congress. And it was the second time in hours that efforts to rearrange the budget compromise were threatening to start fraying it.

At 3 a.m. Wednesday, an exhausted House rejected a furious effort to pump road-building money into the deal by just 216-214, before overwhelmingly approving an outline of the agreement by 333-99.

Leaders have hoped to complete a final version of the blueprint, which does not need Clinton's approval, by this week's end. The measure maps a budget-balancing framework and lists programs and tax cuts the two sides have agreed to support, but leaves binding changes in the law for future legislation.

Daschle infuriated Republicans by insisting the Kennedy-Hatch plan was consistent with the budget accord, which cemented compromises the two parties reached on cutting taxes and providing funds for specific programs.

The agreement includes $16 billion for health insurance for up to 5 million children, which was one of Clinton's demands. The money sought by Kennedy and Hatch would have been on top of that.

"I would be willing to submit to any three intelligent people you want to pick" the question of whether the Kennedy-Hatch proposal violated the budget deal, said an exasperated Senate Budget Committee chairman, Pete Domenici, R-N.M., who was one of the bargainers. "Mind you, what do you think we argued for three months over?"

The agreement is designed to balance the budget by 2002 by saving $321 billion in hundreds of programs, while delivering tax cuts and spending extra money for education and other initiatives. On a net basis, it would lower projected deficits for the next five years by $204 billion.

Glavine's riches

ATLANTA — Tom Glavine will become baseball's highest-paid pitcher after agreeing Wednesday to a $34 million, four-year contract with the Atlanta Braves.

Glavine's agent, Gregg Clifton, said the deal gives his client $8.5 million a year and includes a club option for a fifth year at $8 million. The deal puts Glavine, a former Cy Young winner, in a tie for fourth-highest among major league salaries.

Glavine is in the final year of a five-year contract and is earning $5 million this year. He told Atlanta television station WAGA that while nothing had been signed, he expected the deal to be completed Thursday.

"I don't see anything to hold it up," Glavine said.

"In this day and age with players moving all over the place, it's nice to have an opportunity to spend your entire career in one city. The fans have been great. The organization has been great," Glavine said.

In March, Glavine turned down an offer from the Braves for a three-year deal in the $20 million-$22 million range.

"We've been in ongoing negotiations since before spring training. Tom had always expressed the desire to remain a Brave. I think this is a perfect situation when a player can became the highest-paid player at his position in his sport and still stay with the organization and the teammates he wants to be with," Clifton said.

The 31-year-old left-hander, who won the NL Cy Young Award in 1991, was baseball's winningest pitcher from 1991 to 1996 with 106 victories. In nine starts this season, Glavine, who is in his 10th season with Atlanta, is 5-2 with a 2.08 ERA.

The agreement would still leave the Braves with the problem of trying to re-sign four-time Cy Young winner Greg Maddux.

Pavlik surgery

ARLINGTON — Texas pitcher Roger Pavlik will be sidelined for a minimum of 12 weeks after undergoing right elbow surgery on Friday.

Pavlik, who was an All-Star last season, will have bone chips removed from the back of the elbow.

"It just wasn't getting any better," said Dr. John Conway, the Rangers' orthopedic consultant. "We hope he'll be pitching again in 12 weeks. It's a common problem for pitchers. You see it every year."

Pavlik was 2-3 with a 6.28 ERA in six starts this season. In 1996, Pavlik went 15-8 with a 5.19 ERA in 34 starts.

Raiders pleased with Central Region draw

■ Tech starts Central region action today against balanced field.

By Doug Hensley
Lubbock Avalanche-Journal

LUBBOCK — Texas Tech suspected they might see a Central Regional field loaded with giant-killers. Instead, the Red Raiders were pleasantly surprised to learn Monday that they would be playing host to a talented and balanced field.

"I think all of us thought it might be pretty stacked," Tech pitcher Jason Gooding said. "But as we saw some of the teams we thought might come here go to other regionals, it worked out all right.

"We've still got some good teams coming in here, so now we just need to get ready."

The Raiders (46-12 overall) were accorded the No. 1 seed in the six-team, double-elimination tournament that begins Thursday at Dan Law Field. Tech will face Southwest Texas State (36-24) at 7 p.m.

In the other two games Thursday, No. 2 seed Rice (43-14) will face No. 5 seed Southwest Missouri State

Chaps drop to 10th at national tourney

Staff Report

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — The No. 1-ranked Midland College golfers suffered through a nightmare of a day Wednesday during the second round of the National Junior College Athletic Association's Golf Championships.

The Chaparrals dropped from fourth place after the first round to 10th place in the tightly-bunched standings. MC totalled 305 Wednesday — 16 strokes worse than they shot Tuesday — for a two-day total of 594.

"It was by far the most disappointing day I've experienced as Chap golf coach," Delnor Poss said. "How do you explain a performance like this when teams we've beaten defeated us soundly. The game of golf is unpredictable sometimes."

Central Alabama Community College, the defending champion, fired 285 Wednesday to lead the four-day tournament at 571, and hometown team Scottsdale Community College stands second at 577.

The bright spot, Poss pointed out, is that Midland College is only 10 shots out of third place. Brevard, Navarro and Wallace State are tied for third at 584.

Midland Lee's Mike Hale has been the Rebels' ace in the playoffs, leading the team in post-season wins (2) and innings pitched. Hale and the rest of the Rebels will take on Texas high school powerhouse Duncanville in the Region I-5A semifinals this weekend in Abilene.

Ace's two faces

Hale's better side comes out in Midland Lee's playoff run

By Lee Passmore
Sports Writer

When Midland Lee pitcher Mike Hale takes the mound, both he and the Rebels know that they have to take the bad with the good.

LEE
Regional Semifinal

There's little doubt when it gets right down to it that the senior right-hander is Lee's ace and he has the most varsity playoff innings under his belt by far of all the Rebel pitchers. And when Hale has truly been needed to come through in the Region I-5A playoffs, he hasn't disappointed. He is the only Lee pitcher with two postseason victories.

Nonetheless, Hale hasn't always been at his best in the playoffs, something which he is well aware of.

"I've been a little inconsistent with my control," Hale admitted. "That happens. Sometimes you have to work on those things. I'm not really pleased.

"I don't really feel I've pitched to my potential in the playoffs."

Yet, he has pitched well enough most of the time, most recently last Friday in the first game of the best-of-three series with Abilene High in the regional quarterfinals. Hale, facing AHS ace Josh Duwe at Ernie Johnson Field, pitched eight innings and tied a season high with 14 strikeouts, holding the Eagles earthbound long enough for John Purves to blast a dramatic game-ending two-run home run which gave Lee a 5-3 win. The Rebels went on to win the series in three games, advancing to this week's regional semifinals against Duncanville.

In the bi-district round of the playoffs two weeks earlier, Hale defeated Amarillo High 13-6, giving up three earned runs while pitching a complete game. That win evened the series at a game apiece and allowed the Rebels to play a third game, which they won to advance to the area round.

The next round, the Hale who didn't pitch to his potential showed up against El Paso Socorro. He walked four of the first five batters he faced in the second inning and absorbed a 6-1 loss, prompting the Rebels to have to record a Saturday sweep for the second week in a row. No wonder, then, that Lee coach Jesse Benavidez was apprehensive on how to use Hale in the series with Abilene High.

"I had second thoughts about starting him against Abilene but I got to thinking maybe he'd work better with our crowd at home," Benavidez said. "When I found

Angels win 'wild' series opener

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

You can safely say that it was a "wild" Texas League ending at Christensen Stadium Wednesday night.

Midland pinch runner Jed Dalton scored from third base with the bases loaded and no outs in the bottom of the ninth inning on a wild pitch by Jim Gutierrez as the Angels handed the Jackson Generals a 6-5 loss in the first of five games between these two teams.

With the score tied at 5-5 going into the bottom of the ninth, Midland designated hitter Chris Norton led off with a single to center. Dalton came on as a pinch runner. Freddie Diaz attempted to lay down a sacrifice bunt. Jackson first baseman Daryle Ward fielded the ball and threw to second in an effort to nail Dalton, but General shortstop Carlos Guillen dropped the ball. Guillen's error allowed both Dalton and Diaz to move up an extra base.

It was then that the Generals elected to intentionally walk Kevin Young to load the bases, giving Angel newcomer Randy Betten, who joined the Angels earlier in the day from Lake Elsinore, a chance to be the game's hero in his first outing. But with an 0-2 count on Betten, Gutierrez uncorked a wild pitch that went back to the screen and Dalton broke for home and easily scored the game winning run.

"You try to think ahead and anticipate those kind of things happening," Dalton said. "I think (Midland manager) Mitch (Seoane) said, 'go,' but it's really your instinct in that situation. I thought I could score."

A wild pitch win, or not, Seoane didn't care which way the run came.

"It didn't matter to me how we got the run," Seoane said. "That's not what you expect to happen in that situation, but we'll take it. They had the infield and outfield in and we were just hoping that Betten could get a ball up that he could drive some-

Jazz play sweet music, put Rockets in 2-0 hole

By Chris Sheridan
AP Basketball Writer

SALT LAKE CITY — The Utah Jazz are operating so efficiently and so precisely that they've turned the Houston Rockets into a creaky, cranky, complaining shell of a team whose play has deteriorated into thuggery.

In another display of nearly flawless team basketball, the Jazz pick-and-rolled, outrebounded and frustrated Houston in a 104-92 victory Wednesday night for a 2-0 lead in the best-of-7 series.

Utah broke the game open with a surge at the end of the third quarter, and things deteriorated so much for Houston in the fourth quarter that Charles Barkley flattened John Stockton on a flagrant foul on which Barkley said he "was trying to separate his shoulder or break his rib."

Utah had such a well-rounded attack that the fans, for the first time in at least a month, didn't even chant "M-V-P" at Karl Malone. Instead, they were on their feet cheering the entire team — and with good reason.

Stockton had 26 points, 12 assists and eight rebounds, Malone had 24 points and 15 rebounds, Jeff Hornacek scored 17 points and Bryon Russell added 12.

Utah's bench pitched in, too, just as it did in the Jazz's 101-86 victory in Game 1. Led by reserve center Greg Foster and backup point guard Howard Eisley, Utah's bench outscored Houston's 23-11.

The Jazz also outrebounded Houston 56-37.

The series moves to Houston for Game 3 Friday night and Game 4 on Sunday, and the series might not make it back to the Delta Center if the Rockets can't find a way to stop Utah's multi-faceted attack.

"We've got to win Friday, we've got to win Friday," Barkley repeated afterward. "You can come back from 3-1, but not from 3-0."

Hakeem Olajuwon led the Rockets with 30 points, but almost half of them came in the fourth quarter when Houston was already out of it. Barkley, who fouled out, added 16 points and Clyde Drexler had 15.

The Jazz took control by ending the third quarter with a 15-2 run, getting strong contributions from their lesser-known players while Houston's attack

Spurs fans flood ticket office on prospect of drafting Duncan

By Pete Coates
c.1997 Bloomberg News

SAN ANTONIO — The prospect of watching College Player of the Year Tim Duncan next season caused a stampede on the San Antonio Spurs' ticket window.

The Spurs got the top overall pick in the National Basketball Association Draft Lottery on Sunday, and said they would take 6-foot-10 Tim Duncan of Wake Forest. When the Spurs' ticket office opened Monday morning, season ticket requests flooded in.

"You can't ask for anything better than what developed over the weekend," said Joe Clark, Vice President of Sales for the Spurs. "The phones have been ringing off the wall."

Clark said calls have come from fans renewing last season's tickets, re-ordering after canceling and placing orders for the fist time.

He said about 500 season ticket packages were sold in the first two days, a figure that "blows away" what is considered normal this early in the offseason.

The Spurs usually have a staff of six salespersons in the office to handle ticket requests. They had to call in five more people from other parts of the organization Monday morning to answer the phones.

"A lot of people say they were thinking about it, and this put them over," Clark said.

The burst of enthusiasm comes after a disappointing season. After reaching the Western Conference semifinals in 1996, injuries to All-Stars David Robinson and Sean Elliott led to a 20-62 finish this season.

The team's poor showing translated to a dramatic decline at the ticket window. Attendance at the Alamodome fell to 17,235 fans a game from a peak of 22,449 in 1994-95. Adding 500 season tickets orders in two days to a base of 9,000 is a good way to reverse that trend.

"It's a great repayment to our season ticket holders and fans from last year, who stuck with us," said Spurs Executive Vice President of Business Operations Russ Bookbinder. "They were very understanding and it's great to be able to do something like this."

Members of the Spurs front office assured fans that the team doesn't plan to trade away the pick.

"We have the No. 1 pick and we're selecting Tim Duncan," Bookbinder said. "There's no doubt about that."

Duncan is making Clark's job easier. It's hard to sell season tickets in San Antonio, he said, because it's one of the smallest markets in the NBA. People are reluctant to put down the $540 to $2,115 needed for a season ticket plan, instead buying single-game tickets.

"We don't have a strong corporate base," Clark said. "This is a military and tourist town, so it's an emotional buy when an individual comes in. They have to be able to justify that investment."

Chicago's Michael Jordan dunks Miami's Dan Majerle, right, during Game 1 in the Eastern Conference finals Tuesday. Jordan and Malone were unanimous picks for the All-NBA team.

Malone, Jordan unanimous selections for All-NBA team

NEW YORK (AP) — The honors keep rolling in for Karl Malone and Michael Jordan.

Malone, the Utah Jazz' power forward and NBA's most valuable player, and Jordan, the Chicago Bulls' All-Star guard and league's nine-time scoring champion, were unanimous selections to the All-NBA first team announced Wednesday.

Malone, a unanimous choice for the second time, and Jordan, selected unanimously for the fourth time, each received first team votes from all 115 sports writers and broadcasters who participated in the balloting.

Joining them on the first team were Houston's Hakeem Olajuwon at center, Detroit's Grant Hill at forward and Miami's Tim Hardaway at guard.

Malone and Jordan were the only players named on all the ballots and had 575 points in the voting based on a 5-3-1 point score for first, second and third team.

Malone also was a unanimous selection in the 1988-89 season. Jordan previously was picked unanimously in the 1987-88, 1992-93 and 1995-96 seasons.

Only three other players have been unanimous choices since the 1981-82 season — Larry Bird three times and Magic Johnson and Charles Barkley once each.

Olajuwon received 89 first-team votes and 514 points. He received votes on 114 ballots. Hill got 76 firsts and 483 points, and was named on 113 ballots.

This is the ninth first team selection for both Malone and Jordan, the sixth for Olajuwon, and the first for both Hill and Hardaway.

Malone averaged 27.4 points, second in the league to Jordan, along with 9.9 rebounds and 4.5 assists in winning the MVP Award for the first time and leading the Jazz to the Midwest Division title. Jordan won his ninth scoring title and second in a row with a 29.6 average, helping the Bulls win the Central Division title with a 69-13 record, the best in the league.

Olajuwon was seventh in scoring at 23.2, while averaging 9.2 rebounds and 2.22 blocked shots per game. Hill averaged 21.4 points. 9.0 rebounds and 7.3 assists per game, while Hardaway averaged 20.3 points and 8.6 assists, leading the Heat to the Atlantic championship.

Seattle guard Gary Payton led the second team with 42 first-team votes and 386 points. He was followed by Chicago forward Scottie Pippen with 337 points, New York center Patrick Ewing with 327 points, Charlotte forward Glen Rice with 316 points and Sacramento guard Mitch Richmond with 198 points.

The third team was comprised of forwards Anthony Mason of Charlotte and Vin Baker of Milwaukee, center Shaquille O'Neal, and guards John Stockton of Utah and Anfernee Hardaway.

Hawks denies Orlando's attempt to talk to Wilkens

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — The Atlanta Hawks have apparently nixed any attempt to lure coach Lenny Wilkens to the Orlando Magic.

The Magic asked for and were denied permission to talk to Wilkens, Hawks general manager Pete Babcock told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution.

Wilkens was the second prominent coaching candidate to be eliminated from consideration within a matter of a few hours late Monday. Earlier in the day, Magic General Manager John Gabriel met with former Detroit Pistons coach Chuck Daly, who asked to have his name withdrawn from consideration as well.

The Magic have offered Chicago Bulls coach Phil Jackson a five-year, $30 million salary. Jackson, however, told the Magic he would wait until the NBA playoffs are over before considering the offer.

Wilkens is the only person to be named one of the 50 greatest players and one of the 10 greatest coaches in league history.

Mesa's prosecutor: Albert has better chance of conviction

By Scott Newman
Bloomberg News

CLEVELAND — Sportscaster Marv Albert has a much better chance of being convicted than Cleveland Indians pitcher Jose Mesa, who was acquitted of rape charges last month, the prosecutor in Mesa's case said.

Albert, NBC's lead National Basketball Association announcer, was indicted Monday on a charge of assault and a felony count of forcible sodomy. If convicted of the sodomy charge, he could spend from five years to life in prison. Albert denied the charges.

While prosecutors say sports personalities are hard to convict because of their notoriety and money to hire the best defense, the man who led the case against Mesa said prosecutors have a better chance against Albert because they learned from the mistakes that Ohio authorities made.

"They've obviously looked at what happened with us and saw what was done wrong," said Frank Gaspar, a Cuyahoga County, Ohio, prosecutor. "They would seem to be in much better shape than we ever were."

For instance, Gaspar said the state of Ohio filed charges against Mesa within a week of the alleged incident and without doing background checks on the two women accusing Mesa of sexual assault.

Arlington, Virginia, police investigated Albert's case for at least two months after the alleged incident occurred Feb. 12. Police also said they did an extensive background check on the 41-year old woman accusing Albert before presenting the case to a grand jury.

"We wanted to be sure she was credible when we got to court," said Tom Bell, a spokesman for the Arlington police. "We wanted to make sure she wasn't a gold digger or someone with a checkered past."

A jury deliberated for less than two days before acquitting Mesa on all charges, including a felony count of rape, stemming from an Dec. 22 incident with two women in a hotel room.

Afterward, Gaspar said the jury foreman told him one reason the jury voted to acquit was because one of the woman accusing Mesa was fired from a job for stealing from a fellow employee, and another had said she liked hanging around with ballplayers.

"Many sexual assault cases come down to believability, and even though these things had nothing to do with whether Jose Mesa raped these women, it destroyed their credibility," Gaspar said. "If we had known a lot of these things beforehand, we might not have taken the case to court."

The Virginia state's attorney who will be prosecuting Albert said the state waited to make sure the woman's story checked out before filing charges.

"We have to protect the accused and the accuser in this case," said Prosecutor Richard Trodden. "After a thorough investigation, we believe this woman is telling the truth and that's why we're going to court."

Although the Arlington police haven't said whether they have forensic evidence connecting Albert to the incident, they said they have pictures of human bite marks on the woman's back. The woman's flesh was torn in places, Bell said.

In Albert's case, police were called after the woman went to National Hospital in Arlington and some of the wounds required treatment in the emergency room.

where."

The Angels and Generals are headed in opposite directions of late. Jackson has now lost eight of their last 11 games while Midland has won eight of its last 11. Midland is now 5-1 against the Houston Astros' farm club this season.

And Midland won this one going outside its starting rotation as Kurt Knudsen got his first start of the season. Reliever Bob Gamez (2-1) got the win with four innings of work, retiring the last nine batters he faced in order while striking out eight.

Gamez gave up two runs in the sixth inning as Midland fell behind 5-2, but was untouchable after that, striking out seven of the last 11 batters he faced.

"I feel really good about this outing," Gamez said. "I was able to throw all my pitches for strikes and I was getting the strikeouts with curve balls. I made a bad pitch and hit a guy in the first inning I was in there, but then I got into a rhythm."

Seoane added, "Knudsen (a right-handed pitcher) gave us a solid five innings and kept us in the game with a spot start and Gamez (a lefty) pitched great the rest of the way. This was nice to get since Jackson has mostly a left-handed lineup."

ANGEL DUST: Jackson robbed Young of a chance to hit for the cycle in the ninth with an intentional walk. He needed a home run to complete the cycle after a single, double and triple... The game featured three triples, including one by Angel catcher Bret Hemphill. The other came from Jackson's Jamie Saylor, who tripled to lead off the game against Knudsen... Midland shortstop Freddie Diaz doubled and homered, a line drive shot to left... The game produced a rarity in the first when plate ump Al Guarnieri tossed out Jackson catcher Mitch Meluskey for arguing strikes. Jackson's backup catcher Jimmy Gonzalez was the designated hitter and he had to go in to catch and Jackson lost its designated hitter for the night. That forced starting pitcher Mike Grzanich into the batting rotation and he didn't hurt the Generals. Grzanich had a perfect sacrifice in the fourth and singled and scored in the sixth... The Jackson bullpen is now 4-12 on the season with the loss... Betten, who played six different positions at Lake Elsinore, played second base Wednesday in his debut, getting one hit in three at-bats and an RBI. He was hitting .345 with 27 RBIs before getting the call to Midland...

deteriorated into a series of isolation plays, most of them unsuccessful, for its three superstars.

Hornacek hit a corner jumper, Eisley made a 3-pointer and Foster made a corner jumper while the Rockets were clearing out four players and giving the ball to Barkley or Drexler.

Problem was, the one-on-one stuff wasn't working and Olajuwon was resting on the bench.

On one isolation, Russell stole the ball from Drexler and went in for a fastbreak dunk. On the next, Drexler dribbled away the shot clock before missing a 3-pointer.

The strategy worked no better when the Rockets went to Barkley, who was rejected once by Malone and once by Foster and missed his other two attempts.

Eisley made another jumper, Foster scored on a drive and Eisley closed the period with two free throws to complete the 15-2 run and send Utah into the fourth quarter with an 83-68 lead.

Houston was unable to cut its deficit below nine points in the fourth quarter, and tempers started to flare as Barkley flattened Stockton under the Utah basket and was called for a flagrant foul.

"Next time I'll break him in half," Barkley said to referee Jack Nies.

"They're going to keep setting their moving picks, and obviously the refs aren't going to do their jobs," Barkley said in the interview room before mentioning that he was deliberately trying to hurt Stockton.

When a roomful of reporters chuckled at Barkley's comment, thinking it was another of his overstatements, he scolded them.

"I was serious," he said.

"Whatever," Stockton replied. "That's my comment on what he did and what he said — whatever."

Tomjanovich also complained that Utah was guilty of setting illegal moving picks, and he even sent his team captains to talk to the referees about it before the game.

"We addressed it in a professional manner, but it was like talking to a wall," he said. "I'm not trying to be a whiner, but it's a factor in the game."

A final period also featured an extended episode of trash-talking between former Olympic teammates Malone and Olajuwon.

Olajuwon had complained after Game 1 that the Jazz were "cheap and dirty," a "bunch of pretenders" and "bad guys, very bad guys."

Malone took umbrage, and he got a measure of revenge on his final basket when he soared high above Olajuwon and dunked in his face.

"Even tough it's dirty for some people, we've still got to go out and continue to play hard. We can't get caught up in all the sideshows," Malone said.

Woods wants to be master of his swing

By Mike Cochran
Associated Press Writer

FORT WORTH — He has won two straight tournaments — one of them the Masters — and leads the PGA money list. Tiger Woods, however, is not pleased. He says his swing is flawed.

"I'm going to be doing a lot of work on the range," he said before his first tour of "Hogan's Alley," scene of the Colonial Invitational, beginning Thursday. "I'm trying to find my game. I'm trying to get it back where it once was."

Knowing the 21-year-old sensation is less than perfect may be of some comfort to the competition, but the bad news is his mental approach appears in mint condition.

"I think my mind is as sharp or sharper than it was at Augusta," he said. That's where he stripped 18 shots from par and won the Masters by a record 12 strokes.

Decidedly less dominant last week, Woods still won the GTE Byron Nelson Classic by two shots, boosting his earnings this year to $1,290,350. It was his third championship in eight appearances.

"Winning last week, in a weird way, meant a little more to me than the way I did at Augusta," said Woods, who shot a 1-under-par 69 in the pro-am Wednesday. "When you're not playing well and you're all over the place and somehow you scrape it around and gut it out and win, that means a lot.

"It's not that hard to win a tournament when you're playing well, when all cylinders are pumping correctly, when everything's firing correctly."

Woods made it altogether clear that being the best is not good enough.

"My whole goal and objective is to be getting better," he said. "I nit-pick my game every day to see what part I can improve on. And there are lots of parts I can improve on quite dramatically."

Woods conceded there will be setbacks, but he said his approach is not without rewards.

"That's one of the reasons why I've been able to play well," he pointed out. "I keep looking for ways to improve. ... I'm working on it."

Woods this week plays the course immortalized by Ben Hogan, a five-time Colonial champion and very much a legend in his hometown.

"It's a pretty good test and I'm looking forward to it," he said.

Woods spoke a day after Tuesday's meeting with Fuzzy Zoeller. Zoeller said he apologized in person to Woods for his racially insensitive remarks after the masters.

"Now it's done, it's over," he said.

Still, there was an undercurrent suggesting Woods did not entirely condone Zoeller's comments.

For all his success of late, Woods might encounter trouble at the colonial. This is a course that rarely surrenders its charms to long hitters, demanding accuracy over power.

Tom Lehman, the 1995 Colonial champion and the reigning British Open king, could be the man to beat after taking four weeks off.

"I've generally played well after a break," he said Wednesday. "It's more important to be fresh mentally. You can overcome swing problems easier. ... I'm swinging well and I feel fresh and ready to play. Watching other guys play good golf for four weeks, I've got the itch."

Other contenders in the field are Paul Stankowski, Justin Leonard, Phil Mickelson, Tom Kite, Steve Elkington, Mark Brooks, Tom Watson and Davis Love III.

Colonial greets Zoeller with cheers, open arms

By Jaime Aron
AP Sports Writer

FORT WORTH — If Fuzzy Zoeller had any doubts about how he would be received at the Colonial, his first tournament since offending Tiger Woods, they were gone by the time he drove up to the clubhouse Wednesday.

A few houses from the main driveway, a banner draped between two massive pillars read, "We Love Fuzzy!"

That sentiment continued throughout the afternoon as a gallery of more than 200 followed the tournament's 1981 champion, cheering his every move and laughing heartily at all his jokes.

Zoeller has been off the PGA Tour since the Masters, where he called Woods "that little boy" and urged him not to request fried chicken or collard greens for the Champions Dinner next year at Augusta National.

It was exactly a month ago Wednesday that Zoeller first apologized for those statements, but the fallout has continued. Kmart stopped sponsoring him and he says he's received venomous letters calling him racist.

Zoeller got a chance to tell Woods he was sorry in a face-to-face meeting Tuesday. Afterward, both said all is well, although there were signs that isn't totally the case.

The two didn't cross paths Wednesday.

Zoeller was in the second-to-last group teeing off in the pro-am preceeding the MasterCard Colonial. He didn't even arrive until a half-hour before his 1:29 p.m. tee time, long after Woods finished.

The gallery for Woods was only slightly bigger than Zoeller's, although his 7:28 a.m. starting time and cold, cloudy weather probably kept many more people away.

The Colonial, where Zoeller is playing for the 19th time, proved to be the perfect place for his return to the tour.

There was tremendous applause along with whoops and cheers when he was introduced. One fan hollered a negative comment about Kmart which Zoeller responded to with a big smile and laugh.

Zoeller didn't waste time hamming it up. After his first tee shot, he spread his arms widely then used his hand to shield his eyes as if watching his drive soar. The fans ate it up.

Minutes later, Zoeller joined the rest of his playing partners and much of the gallery in singing "Happy Birthday" to teammate Russ Chappell, who turned 50 Wednesday.

The red marker Zoeller kept tucked in his back pocket nearly ran out of ink as he signed dozens of hats and programs as well as a woman's shirt sleeve and a $1 bill. After one hole, he took a ball out of his pants pocket, signed it and offered it to a young boy.

Two Fort Worth police officers walked with Zoeller's group — which isn't usually done in the pro-am — but they were hardly needed.

The crowd went the wildest at the par-3 13th, where about 400 people were packed around a grandstand behind the green. They cheered louder than the gang at first tee and chanted "Fuz-zee, Fuz-zee" as he approached. One man screamed "Tar-get, Tar-get" in yet another jab at Kmart's breakup with Zoeller.

"We still love you man," another voice cried.

As for his game, there were little signs of his six-week layoff. He parred most holes with a few birdies — including a near ace at 16 — and a few bogeys.

Toronto Blue Jays' pitcher Roger Clemens fires a pitch to New York Yankees batter Tim Raines in the first inning Wednesday at Yankee Stadium in New York. Clemens reached 200 career wins with a victory.

'Rocket man' mows down Yankees, earns 200th win

Associated Press

NEW YORK — The Rocket arrived at another career milestone Wednesday night.

Roger Clemens earned his 200th victory and his eighth straight of 1997, leading the Toronto Blue Jays to a 4-1 win over the New York Yankees.

Clemens (8-0) became the 94th pitcher to reach the 200-win plateau with the same type of performance that has made him baseball's most dominant pitcher the past decade.

Relying almost exclusively on his fastball, Clemens overpowered the Yankees, who entered the game as the AL's second-best hitting club. Clemens allowed four hits in eight innings, striking out 12 — including seven of 10 from the fourth through sixth innings.

It was the 71st time in his career that Clemens struck out 10 or more in a game. Clemens, who won his first 192 games during 13 seasons with the Boston Red Sox, allowed the Yankees to hit just five balls out of the infield.

Clemens pitched himself into and out of trouble in the second. He walked Paul O'Neill and Fielder to open the inning, but got Derek Jeter to ground into a double play and struck out Mariano Duncan.

Orioles 2, Tigers 0

BALTIMORE — Scott Erickson became the major leagues' second eight-game winner, and Rafael Palmeiro hit a two-run homer as Baltimore won its fifth straight game.

Erickson (8-1) allowed four hits and five walks before leaving with runners on the corners with two outs in the eighth.

Brewers 5, Twins 4

MILWAUKEE — Ben McDonald survived another shaky start, and the Milwaukee Brewers snapped a seven-game skid with a 5-4 victory over the Minnesota.

McDonald (5-3) won despite failing to get out of the sixth inning for the fifth time in his last six starts. He gave up two home runs, both to unlikely long ball threats: Ron Coomer and Greg Myers.

Indians 1, Royals 0

CLEVELAND — The Cleveland Indians won without hitting a home run for the first time this season and denied Kevin Appier his 100th career win by beating the Kansas City Royals.

Orel Hershiser (4-2) had his best outing of the season, allowing five hits in 7 1-3 innings and retiring eight in a row from the fourth through seventh. Appier (4-3) was even better, allowing only two hits in eight innings, but was plagued by a career-high eight walks as he failed for the third time to get his 100th victory.

White Sox 10, Red Sox 5

CHICAGO — Frank Thomas homered twice and drove in five runs as the Chicago White Sox won their sixth straight game.

Thomas and Albert Belle hit back-to-back homers in a five-run second inning. Belle's homer extended his hitting streak to 17 games.

Athletics 7, Rangers 3

ARLINGTON — Dave Telgheder got his first victory since last September and Geronimo Berroa homered and drove in three runs as Oakland snapped a four-game losing streak.

Telgheder (1-2) allowed six hits in 7 1-3 innings and had a career-high eight strikeouts to give the A's only their sixth victory from a starter.

Telgheder's previous victory came as a reliever last Sept. 27. It was his first win as a starter since pitching a shutout at Minnesota on Sept. 10.

Lockhart's pinch-hit home run lifts Braves

By The Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — Keith Lockhart hit a two-run pinch homer in the bottom of the ninth inning Wednesday, rallying Atlanta and Greg Maddux to a 3-2 victory over the Montreal Expos, the Braves' sixth straight victory.

Javy Lopez opened the inning with a single to left and moved to second on a sacrifice by pinch hitter Mark Lemke. Then Lockhart, batting for Maddux, hit a 1-0 pitch from Ugueth Urbina (2-3) over the right-field fence for his first home run of the season.

Pirates 3, Cardinals 2

ST. LOUIS — Mark Johnson's bloop double broke an eighth-inning tie as Pittsburgh, stymied most of the game by Alan Benes, ended a four-game losing streak.

Cubs 7, Phillies 0

CHICAGO — Kevin Foster allowed three hits over seven innings, and Mark Grace extended his hitting streak to 15 games for Chicago.

Sammy Sosa hit a two-run homer for the Cubs, who finished their homestand 6-3. Grace went 2-for-4 with an RBI single in the first and a run-scoring double in the seventh.

Rockies 10, Giants 7

SAN FRANCISCO — Kevin Ritz pitched seven strong innings, and Ellis Burks hid a three-run homer and four RBIs as Colorado held off San Francisco over the final two innings.

Larry Walker, who came into the game leading the NL in hitting and RBIs and tied for the lead in homers, had an RBI single in Colorado's three-run first for his 44th RBI. But he went 1-for-5, dropping his average to .406.

Mets 2, Marlins 1

MIAMI — Mark Clark allowed seven hits in eight innings, and Edgardo Alfonzo and Bernard Gilkey homered as the New York Mets snapped the Florida Marlins' eight-game winning streak.

Greg McMichael worked the ninth for his second save as the Mets prevented the Marlins from matching their franchise record for longest winning streak. McMichael's wild pitch enabled Jim Eisenreich to score from third, but he struck out Jeff Conine to end the game.

Astros 4, Reds 3, 14 innings

HOUSTON — Luis Gonzalez's RBI single in the 14th inning scored Jeff Bagwell from second base, giving the Houston Astros a victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

With two outs, Bagwell was intentionally walked by Scott Sullivan (0-1).

Bagwell stole second without a throw and Gonzalez, who was hitless in his first five at-bats, then lined a hit to left field. -

Sampras withdraws from Team Cup; U.S. victorious

DUESSELDORF, Germany (AP) — Top-ranked Pete Sampras pulled out of the World Team Cup Wednesday because of a muscle injury, but said he expects to be fit for the French Open, which starts Monday in Paris.

While Sampras is struggling, so too was Michael Chang, who lost to Goran Ivanisevic 6-2, 2-6, 6-3.

That was the only loss for the United States as it beat Croatia 2-1.

Alex O'Brien, filling in for Sampras, scored an emphatic 6-1, 6-2 victory over Sasa Hirszon to even things out at 1-1, and then played a part in the deciding doubles when he joined with Jonathan Stark to defeat Hirszon and Ivanisevic 6-3, 7-6 (8-6).

Sampras said he pulled out on doctor's orders.

"The doctor's recommendation is that it's best if I don't play. If I come back too soon there's a chance I could do it (the injury) again," Sampras said.

Sampras suffered a muscle injury in his left leg during the opening-round match Monday. Earlier, he had hoped to play again in the round-robin event.

"But the injury is feeling better. I can't feel it when I walk, and hopefully I'll hit a few balls Thursday or Friday, and I'm planning on playing next week," Sampras said.

Chang was undismayed at his poor clay court form, although since winning in Orlando, Fla., last month, he has won just one of four matches on clay.

"I feel like things are coming along. Even though I lost I feel I played a better match than against Mark (Woodforde) on Monday. Overall, I feel on course for next week. Physically I'm feeling good," said Chang.

Australia established itself as the favorite in its group to reach the final when the Aussies defeated the Czech Republic 3-0.

Mark Woodforde took a 2-0 lead, only to see Petr Korda take six of the next seven games to claim the opening set. But Woodforde fought back to take the match 3-6, 7-5, 6-1.

Mark Philippoussis also struggled against Bohdan Ulihrach, but emerged with a 6-4, 4-6, 6-3 victory. Olympic champions Todd Woodbridge and Mark Woodforde then scored a predictable 6-4, 6-3 win.

NBA legend Julius Erving answers questions at the Charlotte Motor Speedway, near Concord, N.C., Wednesday after a news conference announcing that the Winston-Cup team that Erving and Joe Washington plan to start will drive Fords next year.

Dr. J part of NASCAR's first minority-owned racing team

More Sports/8C

CONCORD, N.C. (AP) — Julius Erving and Joe Washington are giving NASCAR's Winston Cup series its first minority-owned full-time racing team in 25 years.

The two said Wednesday they have formed Washington Erving Motorsports and will begin fielding Fords on stock car racing's premier circuit next year.

"Our goal," Erving said, "is not to make changes or to make it different, but to be champions."

Erving, a member of the Basketball Hall of Fame, and Washington, whose 10-year career as an NFL running back included a 1983 Super Bowl title with the Washington Redskins, outlined their plans in a news conference at Charlotte Motor Speedway.

Among those the new team invited to the event were several members of the family of the late Wendell Scott, the only other black man who was the primary owner of a full-time Winston Cup team in the sport's history. Scott, who drove his own cars, competed on the circuit for 12 years before retiring in 1972. He died in 1990.

"What's happening today means a lot," Sybil Scott, the driver's daughter, said as she fought back tears. "I must believe that he's smiling at this announcement and that he's pleased to be recognized as the gentleman who broke a barrier."

Erving and Washington are being joined in their venture by Fields Jackson Jr., president of a merchandising firm in Cary, N.C., and Kathy Thompson, a marketing executive from Greensboro, N.C. Washington is the president of the new company and Erving is its chairman.

"We're former athletes," Washington said. "We don't proclaim to know anything other than you can drive a car."

Team officials said they are negotiating with several potential primary sponsors and hope to have a deal finalized within a few weeks.

The team has yet to decide on a location to build a shop, but has begun interviewing potential drivers. Washington said the team is hopeful of landing a top-10 driver.

"We aren't at liberty to say who we're talking to," he said.

Big 12 schools seek refunds

DALLAS — The Big 12 Conference ended a peaceful spring meeting Wednesday by tabling the ticklish issue of a bowl revenue rebate for Nebraska, Texas, and Colorado, which lost money on tickets they had to buy.

Commissioner Steven Hatchell said he sensed most schools wanted to help the schools recover their losses, but added that further study was needed.

Joe Castiiglione of Missouri, chairman of the athletic directors committee, said, "It was one of the most sensitive issues we had but most schools think fairness is important."

Nebraska was obligated to buy 15,000 tickets for being the bowl alliance selection in the Orange Bowl. The Cornhuskers sold only about 3,500 tickets, leaving a deficit of some $900,000.

Texas, the Big 12 champion by virtue of its 37-27 upset of Nebraska, played in the Fiesta Bowl, but needs help with a $350,000 shortage because the Longhorns sold only about 7,000 of the required 13,250 tickets.

Colorado also would like help for a Holiday Bowl trip shortfall.

Each Big 12 school received a check for $500,000 as its share of the profit from the Big 12 championship game at the TWA Dome in St. Louis last December.

Nebraska wrote a $1.2 million check to the Orange Bowl to pay for the leftover tickets, which cost from $60 to $125 each.

Some 10,000 Cornhusker fans had purchased tickets to the Sugar Bowl in anticipation of a victory over Texas and a showdown for the national title in New Orleans. Many fans had non-refundable reservations on airlines and in hotels.

Lewis rips U.S. Track

MONTE CARLO, Monaco — Carl Lewis assailed American track and field authorities on Thursday, contending they ignore and sometimes shield athletes who take performance-enhancing drugs.

"There's no question in my mind that they have more knowledge about the drug problem than they are telling the public," Lewis said.

Lewis, winner of nine gold medals at four Olympics, spoke in the wake of disclosures that distance runner Mary Slaney, a four-time Olympian and owner of several U.S. records, was under investigation for excessive levels of testosterone in a test at the Olympic trials in Atlanta last June.

There have been reports in Europe this week that U.S. 400-meter hurdler Sandra Farmer-Patrick also tested positive for testosterone during the trials and has been suspended for four years.

USA Track & Field said it would make no comment on any drug test case until all administrative remedies were exhausted.

Records ratified

MONTE CARLO — After a 10-month wait, sprinters Michael Johnson and Donovan Bailey finally have their names in the record book.

The International Amateur Athletic Federation on Wednesday formally ratified the world records set by the two at last summer's Olympics — Dallas native Johnson's 19.32 seconds in the 200 meters and Bailey's 9.84 in the 100.

IAAF spokesman Giorgio Reineri said it took so long to ratify the records because of delays in obtaining the paperwork from U.S. track officials.

Johnson and Bailey will meet June 1 at Toronto's SkyDome in a 150-meter race.

Schalke wins UEFA Cup

MILAN, Italy — Schalke 04 won its first international trophy, beating International of Milan 4-1 on penalty kicks Wednesday night to capture the UEFA Cup.

Inter, which won the trophy in 1991 and 1994, trailed 1-0 from the first leg in Gelsenkirchen, Germany, two weeks ago but tied the aggregate score in the home-and-home, total-goals series when Ivan Zamorano connected with six minutes left in regulation.

TECH: Raiders face Southwest Texas

(From 1C)

(33-23) at 3 p.m., and No. 3 seed Clemson (40-21) will meet No. 4 seed Nevada (38-19) at 11 a.m.

"I'm surprised a little," Raider head coach Larry Hays said. "I felt like we'd get UCLA or USC or Arizona State or (Cal State) Fullerton. That shows what I know."

A year ago, the NCAA selection committee sent three other Top 10 teams to Lubbock for what many considered the toughest of the eight regional tournaments. Tech finished third, with Oklahoma State defeating top-ranked Southern Cal for the regional title and accompanying slot in the College World Series.

This year, a California influence is absent. Nevada is the westernmost team invited to Lubbock.

"When I looked at the regionals this year, they all scared me," Hays said. "Last year, there were a couple I thought wouldn't have been bad to play in. But when I look at the others this year, I don't see any I'd volunteer for."

Tech won the Big 12 Conference regular-season title before finishing second in the league's post-season tournament. The Raiders dropped a 19-17 decision to Oklahoma in the tourney title game late Sunday.

"I think that experience was good for us as far as preparing us for regionals," Tech first baseman Joe Dillon said. "It helps you get ready to know what to expect."

The Raiders acknowledged that the partisan crowd at All Sports Stadium in Oklahoma City proved helpful to the Sooners.

"We had some great support up there, but it's going to be awesome to play in front of our home crowd," said Raider pitcher Shane Wright. "They've been pulling for us all year, and it will be great to have all those people out there pulling for us again."

Tech's regional opener a year ago wasn't exactly what the Raiders hoped for as the team fell 12-5 to Fresno State. Gooding, who will start Tech's opener, said it was impossible to overemphasize the importance of the first-round game.

"Hopefully, I can get out there and keep my pitch count down and have a good performance," he said.

"All we need to worry about is going from where we are," Hays added. "And that means doing everything we can to win that first game. Oklahoma (in the Big 12 tourney) showed what you can do as far as coming back (through the loser's bracket) and winning it.

"There's always going to be exceptions, but the big thing we need to do is try to win that first one. That's all we should be worried about right now."

HALE: Senior at his best late in game

(From 1C)

out Duwe was starting, I decided I had to use Mike."

That was all the confidence Hale needed after his sub par outing against Socorro, and he made the most of his chance.

"I don't want to go out like that," said Hale of the loss to Socorro. "I always want to be out there when their ace pitcher is out there."

When Hale hasn't been at his best this season, it's been because he couldn't get out of the early innings. The best time to get to him has usually been by the third inning.

As a hard thrower, it sometimes takes Hale longer to get going than some of Lee's other pitchers, but once he finds his rhythm he's been hard to hit.

"Once he gets past that third inning and gets warmed up he's tough to get to," Benavidez said.

While fatigue might be a factor for many high school pitchers, it hasn't come into play for Hale when he's still been throwing in the late innings of most games this season. His pitch counts routinely reach triple digits by the time the seventh inning approaches, when many coaches would start looking toward their bullpen.

It appeared that Hale might be flirting with disaster against Abilene High, against whom he ended up throwing 132 pitches, including 29 in the first inning. Despite the lack of economy, Hale gave up only one run in the first inning. If there was a message for the Eagles, it was that while Hale might be laboring they would have to work even harder to score against him.

"The end result is what matters to me," Hale said. "I try not to look at statistics during the game."

If having to work hard early makes Hale a slow starter, it has perhaps helped make him a stronger finisher. He found himself in trouble in the top of the eighth against AHS. The Eagles put two runners on with one out against Hale with a double by Hank Willis and a bloop single by Andrew Roy and it looked as if Hale might cave in.

Hale responded to the jam by whiffing John Michael Herrera for his 14th strikeout of the game then getting Brad Cowling to ground into a fielder's choice, ending the frame and setting the stage for the dramatics of Purves.

"The longer I go on the more I learn about each passing hitter," Hale said. "I'll know what his weak spots are and exactly where to pitch him and get him out."

The biggest challenge for Hale and the Rebels this season comes Friday at McMurry University in Abilene when Lee takes on 31-2 Duncanville in a doubleheader starting at 7 p.m. Hale will most likely start the first game against the Panthers, who have been ranked No. 1 in the state for much of the season.

It is a challenge Hale relishes and one that Benavidez thinks he'll be ready for.

"If Mike's on his game and keeps the ball down he's as tough as anybody out there," Benavidez said. "If he decides he wants to go out there and have a good game, he's going to have a good game."

For all of Hale's give-me-the-ball bravado, he's curiously aware of his weaknesses, most specifically his occasional struggles to get the ball over the plate.

"That's always been the big knock against me and I take it as a personal challenge when people say I can't throw strikes," Hale said.

The University of Arkansas saw enough in Hale to offer him a scholarship last fall and there has been interest from pro scouts who have come to watch Hale at Lee games this spring. However, Hale will spend a year at Vernon Regional Junior College before going off to Arkansas. He is lso eligible to be drafted after only one year at a JC, but is realistic about his pro prospects as they stand now.

"I've still got work to do," Hale said. "I don't think I'm quite what the pros want yet."

But he's exactly what Lee needs now.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Thursday, May 22, 1997:
You feel many currents within you this year. Likewise, your exterior life presents many choices and directions. Relationships vie with desires as you struggle for wholeness. The unexpected prevails. You gain new insights into your personality, understanding why you make certain choices and set certain goals. Travel is a strong possibility. If you are single, you find yourself in an unpredictable relationship or involved in several at once. If attached, you grow and learn together. As long as you share ideas, your relationship will continue to shine. SAGITTARIUS plays devil's advocate.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ You might trigger more than you realize by your own unpredictability. Friends and loved ones vie for your attention. Be direct about your expectations; others will respond. Your good cheer helps ease the tension of the full moon. Tonight: Be where the gang is.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★ You are pulled between two options, and there are many solutions. Maintain balance, and try not to lose your sense of humor. You gain insight because of what is happening. You will be making strong decisions about work soon. Tonight: It's a late work night.

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1♠	Pass	2◇	Pass
2NT	Pass	3♠	Pass
4♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Six of ♡

Study the North-South hands. You have reached a normal contract of four spades. How would you play the hand at duplicate pairs? Would you adopt the same line at rubber bridge?

In the modern style, South's two-no-trump rebid showed a minimum opener. North indicated three-card spade support and game-going values, and South wisely opted for the suit game.

Since 11 tricks could be available if trumps are 3-2, that likely probability has a bearing on how you tackle the hand. At duplicate, you should win the opening lead (you cannot afford a club shift), cash the ace and king of trumps and then go after diamonds. If the defenders cannot score a diamond ruff, there is a trump in dummy as an entry to the good diamonds, so you pick up an overtrick.

However, if the cards are as in the diagram, this line will fail. Indeed, you will not get home against best defense if you cash even one high trump on the table. At rubber bridge, you can afford to lose a trick in each red suit and a diamond ruff and still make the game.

Correct technique is to win the first trick then cash the king of spades. Even though both defenders follow, abandon trumps in favor of starting on diamonds. If West wins the second diamond and gives partner a ruff, declarer easily scores the rest of the tricks.

Better defense is for West to hold up the ace of diamonds to the third round, then cash a heart before exiting with a club. Declarer wins, crosses to the queen of spades and leads a good diamond. Whether East ruffs or not, the defenders cannot come to more than three tricks as the ace of spades is still on the table as an entry to a long diamond. Try it.

Matthew Broderick tells reporter he won't marry on day before wedding

NEW YORK — Matthew Broderick prepared for his wedding with Sarah Jessica Parker by putting on a straight face and telling a tabloid reporter he had no plans to marry.

The next night, the former costars of the Broadway hit "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" brought down the curtain on their long engagement with a private wedding.

Matthew Broderick married Sarah Jessica Parker Monday.

The couple had a public relations firm in Los Angeles announce the wedding with no details.

The Daily News said it was held Monday at a synagogue on New York's Lower East Side. Syndicated columnist Liz Smith said a dance followed, and more than 40 people serenaded the newlyweds as Peter Duchin's orchestra played.

Broderick, 35, is starring in a remake of "Godzilla" being filmed in New York. Parker, 32, is the star of Broadway's "Once Upon a Mattress."

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Some drivers were ready to pop when Bono and his band U2 shut some downtown freeways to make a music video.

The closures Tuesday and Wednesday affected Interstates 70, 670 and 35 and were complicated by swarming fans and a truck accident.

U2 brought its spectacular stage props to Kansas City for a Monday night concert, part of a tour promoting the album "Pop." The band stayed around to produce the video, featuring about 25 beat-up, vintage cars topped with 1960s furniture and suitcases swerving through traffic on the closed roads.

"They apparently like our skyline, and their video shoot here will generate as much as a half-million dollars for the local economy," Mayor Emanuel Cleaver said. "It also enhances our growing film industry. I hope that people understand that with growth there is sometimes a little inconvenience."

PARIS — Actress Isabelle Adjani, who headed this year's Cannes Film Festival jury, insists the top prizes went to "great films, not good causes."

Many of the winning films or their directors had some link to political or social issues, such as Muslim fundamentalism, spousal abuse and homosexuality.

In a rare post-festival interview published in Thursday's Le Monde, Adjani said her 10-member jury had no intention of drawing up a politically correct list of winners.

"Simply, the majority of the most interesting filmmakers are the ones confronted with difficult situations," Adjani said. "Their creativity blows a hole in the wall and lets in the light."

This year's Golden Palms went to Japanese director Shohei Imamura for "Unagi" ("The Eel") and Iranian filmmaker Abbas Kiarostami for "The Taste of Cherry," both films dealing with suicide. Kiarostami had trouble getting the film to Cannes because of Iranian censorship.

STOCKHOLM, Sweden — Just friends, say Prince Albert of Monaco and the young Swedish waitress he met last year.

Speculation about a romance grew when the 39-year-old heir to Monaco's throne and Anna-Karin Hasselborg, 21, were seen together at an automobile race in Monaco this month.

But "there is nothing romantic involved in our relationship," Wednesday's Expressen newspaper quoted the prince as saying. "I have no plans for her in my further life."

Ms. Hasselborg has returned to her job in Haernoesand, a city of about 20,000 some 180 miles north of Stockholm.

NEW YORK — Aaron Latham, a screenwriter and novelist, bills his new book, "The Ballad of Gussie and Clyde," published Monday by Villard, on the jacket as "A True Story of True Love."

And indeed it is. The passionate tale he tells is about the romance of his father, Clyde Latham, 87, and Gussie Lancaster, 84, his father's wife of 2½ years.

The book got its start at a dinner party. Latham's wife, Lesley Stahl, the "60 Minutes" correspondent, said to him, "You must tell everyone about your father," he said on Tuesday.

"Being congenitally shy," he said, "I tried to beg off, but as I told it, I realized that everyone was leaning forward in their chairs. Then she got me to tell it at another party, and pretty soon I was dining out on my dad. The reaction made me think about turning it into a book. I actually wrote a first draft, and then my father got sick. I put it aside, because I thought, It won't have a happy ending."

It did, though. About three months after the wedding, his father, a retired football coach in Spur, Texas, 55 miles east of Lubbock, developed circulatory problems that required the amputation of a leg and then had intestinal surgery. He recovered fully, and, Latham said: "He's been fine ever since. That's the power of love."

"As people live longer and longer, we begin to pay more attention to all the terrible things that can happen, but there is another side," he said. "If you are fortunate enough, love can happen again. What really surprised me was all the ways that this love affair in my dad's 80s was similar to what one goes through in one's teen years."

Captain Bodgit retires

NEW YORK (AP) — Captain Bodgit, who was beaten in the Kentucky Derby and Preakness by a total of less than a half-length, will not race again because of a leg injury.

"He was a truly admirable horse," Barry Irwin said Wednesday in announcing the retirement of Captain Bodgit, who was expected to again seriously challenge Silver Charm when the colt bids for the Triple Crown in the Belmont Stakes on June 7.

Irwin, who managed Captain Bodgit's career, told The Associated Press from his office at Pasadena, Calif., that his colt ruptured the "deep flexor tendon in the left foreleg."

Irwin said the injury was not to the bulging tendon in the left front leg with which the colt raced for his entire career. Irwin thinks the career-ending injury occurred in the Preakness last Saturday.

Captain Bodgit finished third in the Preakness, a head behind Free House, who was a head behind Silver Charm. In the Derby, he was second, a head behind Silver Charm.

Captain Bodgit earned $1,014,819 on a record of seven wins.

Arizona leads NCAA tourney after 1st round

UPPER ARLINGTON, Ohio (AP) — Defending champion Arizona grabbed a five-stroke lead while San Jose State's Janice Moodie led all individuals with a 68 in Wednesday's opening round of the NCAA Division I women's golf championship.

Arizona was led by Krissie Register, who shot a 1-under-par 71 at Ohio State's Scarlet Course, while defending medalist and teammate Marisa Baena was at even-par 72. The Wildcats totaled 292 strokes, 4-over-par.

Arizona State, which had a string of three team titles ended by their rivals last spring, was second at 297. San Jose State was third at 299, followed by UCLA at 301 and Auburn, Oregon and Tulsa, all at 303.

Host Ohio State was tied for 11th in the 18-team field, 16 shots off the lead.

Moodie, a Scot who handed in a test late Tuesday night to meet her last requirement for graduation, had five birdies against a bogey in her 68.

She made the turn at 2-under after birdies on the first and fifth holes, then added another birdie at the par-5 12th. She bogeyed the 14th before rolling in putts of 2 1/2 and 10 feet for birdies on the next two holes.

Register was the only other player to break par on a chilly and windy day at Scarlet, which is hosting its third women's championship in the tournament's 16 years. The temperature hovered around 60 all afternoon after morning lows around 40.

Baena was at 72 along with UCLA's Eunice Choi, Furman's Diana D'Allessio and Mhairi McKay of Stanford.

IRON: Furniture looks regal when combined with glass

(From 10C)

In an indication of the acceptability of the same designs for both indoor and outdoor use, Brown Jordan markets its "Florentine" and "Venetian" collections in both indoor (steel) and outdoor (wrought aluminum) versions. The El Monte, Calif., producer known for outdoor metal furniture also recently inaugurated a division to produce interior furniture of metal.

"We made a major thrust to catch the wave of the move of metal indoors with three new beds and four new baker's racks," said Richard Frinear, executive vice president. "We want to execute classic furniture styles in metal instead of wood."

Why has metal become so popular?

"You can achieve a great deal of opulence — a look that is highly desirable right now — in metal at popular prices because you can cast very complex shapes and then can finish them with paint and distressing," said Booth.

"We could do similar looks in wood with carving and special finishing, but the wood pieces would have to cost 10 to 15 times more than metal," Booth added.

Beyond differences in manufacturing between wood and metal, the appeal of metal furniture seems to reflect current cultural values.

"Because of metal's strength-to-mass ratio, you can get the essence of, say, a heavy leg in outline rather than as a solid form," says Frinear.'

"Perhaps there is less ultimate value in an outline than in a solid mass, but we are living in such fast-moving times that we may want to be able to change our environment easily," Frinear said. "Having less weighty items means we are not stuck with our cultural baggage," he said.

"And we mustn't forget that metal pieces are virtually indestructible," Frinear added, "except for rust — and rust happens to be fashionable right now."

This Mandalay sleigh bed and matching lamp table was created by Brown Jordan, a furniture maker in El Monte, Calif. Brown is known for his work in metal outdoor furniture. Other designers are also captitalizing on the trend of creating standard wood items in glass and metal.

DOORKNOBS: Add sparkle like 'jewelry on a dress'

(From 10C)

"If a room is simple and clean-lined," he says, "a beautiful doorknob will add flair in a quiet way."

STYLES CAN RANGE from one that looks like a miniature bird cage, available at Simon's Hardware & Bath in New York, to a blown glass knob in rose-colored glass with gold flecks, from Saks Fifth Avenue's Folio, a home accessories catalog. Bird cage latch sets are $160 in iron and $265 in brass. The rose glass is $200 for two knobs and a brass spindle.

"Among the most interesting designs are those that look handcrafted, such as iron doorknobs imported from France in black or rust finish," Chris Nicole Prince, co-owner of Simon's, says.

Simon's also stocks a cast bronze doorknob with a lion's head, porcelain knobs with little animals, birds or flowers painted on, as well as cut crystal and Lucite knobs. Prices range from $48 for a porcelain door latch set to $480 for the crystal set.

"Even companies that formerly offered only polished or antiqued brass now are showing unusual knobs and have expanded their finishes to include those such as bronze, pewter, verdigris, and rust," Prince says.

Baccarat, the French maker of fine crystal stemware, recently introduced doorknobs.

Thomas Bastide, principal designer, says the design is drawn from "the impression left on the sand by a receding wave."

THE DOORKNOBS are available in clear, amber, aquamarine, jade or turquoise crystal and range from $295 to $395 each.

Baldwin Hardware Corp. of Reading, Pa., known for its polished brass hardware, also has crystal doorknobs.

One of faceted cut crystal by Swarovski of Austria is $400 for the latch set.

Also a departure for Baldwin are brass knobs in pewter, bronze or copper finish.

Arlene Cullen, Baldwin's marketing and design director, says 80 percent of the hardware business is shiny brass.

But, she adds, "a growing number of small vendors — artisans and artists, usually — are coming out with small collections of unusual hardware for doors and cabinets."

While old doorknobs are the choice among renovators, copies can be less costly. Renovators Supply prices turn-of-the-century styles from about $34 to $74 for a set — knobs, spindle, latch and all. Styles range from the simple — molded glass or plain brass in round or oval shapes — to the more decorative, such as black or white porcelain knobs, some with color designs, and solid brass cast in intricate designs.

> 'Several years ago, at antiques flea markets and shops, doorknobs were jumbled together in a box and you could have any one you wanted for about $5.'
> — Terry Kovel, Shaker Heights, Ohio

If you must have originals, be prepared to pay the price, Terry Kovel of Shaker Heights, Ohio, warns.

"Several years ago, at antiques flea markets and shops, doorknobs were jumbled together in a box and you could have any one you wanted for about $5," Kovel, an authority on the antiques market, says. "Now that people have gotten into restoring old houses, anything out of the ordinary is typically $25 to $50 or more."

Two late 19th-century metal doorknobs, each a relief of a dog's head, recently brought $7,920 at an auction of antique hardware. The price, $3,960 each, is believed to be the highest recorded for a doorknob, Kovel says.

The knobs were salvaged from a Pittsburgh mansion and are based on a design patented June 7, 1870, by the Metallic Compression Casting Co. of Boston.

At the same sale, a knob from the Connecticut State Capitol went for $660.

WHEN WATSON has a house to renovate, he prefers to restore knobs rather than replace them.

"Old doorknobs often are quite decorative," he says. "The metal knobs may have reeding, chasing or gradrooning. The porcelain knobs may have floral decorations or be multicolored, and a glass or crystal knob will add sparkle to a room, like jewelry on a dress."

Auctions a source for inexpensive furniture

N.Y. Times News Service

There are a number of places to buy furniture for your home: department or furniture stores, thrift shops, flea markets and antique stores. Auctions are another good source for furnishings.

Some people avoid auction houses because they are unsure how to participate in the bidding process. Others are afraid that during the bidding an innocuous gesture, tugging an earlobe or removing your eyeglasses, may be interpreted as a bid and they may end up buying an expensive item unintentionally. These are common but groundless fears.

Auctions houses can be divided into two categories: city and country auctions. City houses generally have elegant surroundings with stylish, high-end (expensive) merchandise. Country auctions are held in warehouses, barns or even outdoors. The merchandise offered is not as polished nor as expensive as offered in the city houses.

There is another, less obvious difference between the two. Most large cities have stringent regulations governing the conduct of auction houses; many rural communities do not. Consequently a few country auctions will place a shill in the audience to drive up the bidding (this is illegal in city auctions). When visiting country auctions, it's a good idea to scan the bidders for any individual who always bids but never buys.

Auction houses have a pre-sale exhibition of the properties that will be offered for sale. During the exhibition the merchandise is available for examination, and prospective buyers can inspect the pieces for quality of workmanship and look for defects or flaws.

THE LARGER AUCTION houses will have a specialist on hand to answer questions, provide condition reports and assist you in inspecting the properties. Thus exhibitions offered by the better auction houses can be an ideal opportunity to learn about period furniture even if you have no immediate plans to purchase it. Often you can learn more here than at a museum, because you can actually touch the pieces and also discuss them with an expert.

The auction house groups related properties into lots for convenience. A lot may consist of a number of pieces, like a dining table and six chairs, or only one item, e.g. an armoire. The lots are listed in a catalogue with a number that indicates when they will be offered in the auction sequence. The catalogues offered by country houses are little more than printed lists of the individual lots. They are generally free.

In contrast, the catalogues of the larger auction houses have detailed descriptions of every lot in the sale, photographs of the pieces and a price estimate for the lot. The estimate is usually in the form of a range, i.e., a low and a high price. It is based on recent sales of comparable pieces, but it does not mean that this lot will sell for that amount. On rare occasions the phrase "estimate upon request" will appear next to a lot. This is employed by the auction house to see who is interested in very high-end lots.

The catalogue will also contain other important information, like conditions of sale, applicable warranties and a glossary of terms used to describe the lots. These catalogues are not free, but they are a valuable guide.

BUYERS VISITING the city auction houses typically feel that the merchandise offered is beyond their limited resources. This may often be true, but all of the large houses recognize the needs of the average buyer and they frequently hold special auctions of furniture, rugs, paintings and jewelry all within a moderate price range. Check with the house to find out more about these.

Before sitting in on the auction, carefully note in your catalogue which lots you are interested in. Next to the estimate jot down the price that you would like to pay, and also the maximum amount that you will spend.

It's easy to bid at country auctions; all you have to do is raise your hand and announce your bid. Usually there are no bidding increments and you may raise the bid by any amount you wish. At city auctions the bidding process is slightly more complicated. You are required to obtain a numbered paddle before you can bid. The paddle is free, but you must fill out a registration form that requests basic information: name, address, employer and bank references.

It's not necessary to wave the paddle with each bid. Instead show it with your initial bid. Display it again if you make the final bid. The auctioneer will then be able to record the individual who purchased the lot.

LARGER AUCTION houses insist that all bidding follow prescribed increments. If, for example, a lot receives an initial bid of $100, successive bids must be in increments of $5; so the next bid will be $105, followed by a bid of $110. As the bidding accelerates, the increments will change; a lot of more than $200 will require bid increments of $20. A lot of more than $500 will have higher increments of $50. The auctioneer will announce increment changes during bidding.

The final bid, the one that captures the lot, is known as the hammer price. The successful bidder will, however, have to pay more than that amount. Additional costs may include applicable local and state sales taxes and a buyer's premium — 15 percent of the final bid price. The buyer is also responsible for removing his purchase from the auction house within a set time. This may involve engaging a shipping company.

Nesting sites, feeders attract birds to backyards

By Anne Raver
N.Y. Times News Service

It looked like a jungle gym for birds: chickadees, cardinals, red-winged blackbirds, nuthatches and woodpeckers diving in and out of a dozen feeders in a backyard garden at the Cornell University Laboratory of Ornithology in Ithaca, N.Y.

"Look — there's a goldfinch in full breeding plumage," said Dr. Stephen W. Kress, a research biologist with a soft spot for birds. He nodded toward a little gold bird that had just landed at a thistle-seed feeder hanging about five feet from our window.

Some birds waited their turn perched on an arbor covered with trumpet vine and surrounded by winterberry. Others came in for a landing at a sort of kiddie pool for birds: a shallow basin, no more than two inches deep, carved in the base of a limestone rock and fed by a stream that trickled out of a pipe set deep inside.

Whether you have a 30-acre spread of rolling fields and stream-fed wood like the one Kress owns just outside of town, or a postage-stamp yard, the same principles apply for attracting birds: you need a variety of bird feeders (in spring, they fill an important gap before the first fruits of early summer), plants that provide food and shelter throughout the seasons, nesting sites and water (if it trickles, so much the better).

Now is an opportune time for gardeners to have birds on the brain: May is the peak of spring migration as birds fly up from South America and other southerly climes to mate and build their nests. They may be just touching down to refuel on their way farther north. Or maybe they're eyeballing your bushes for a nesting site.

Only last week at his home, Kress watched a pair of brown thrashers inspecting his lilac, which he had just pruned to allow more access to a choice nesting spot (a three-fork crotch in a sturdy branch), and he's hoping great minds think alike.

"They're beautiful," he said (though he'd probably say that about pigeons). "They have the most amazing yellow eye. And they sing like a mockingbird, only they repeat every note twice, in couplets."

A WHITE-THROATED sparrow dressed up for breeding landed near a patch of Christmas ferns at the base of the rock pool and began scratching about the ground looking for lunch.

It was easy to see the bright yellow band over this little fellow's eye, and the bright white throat that gives him his name: we were looking at him from only five feet away through a picture window, 6 feet by 20 feet, which had the effect of bringing the birds into the living room without their noticing.

A fine netting — so fine that humans hardly see it — was stretched tautly across the outside of the glass to keep birds from crashing into what would otherwise look like clear space. And a couple of microphones set under the eaves of the house and hooked up to speakers inside sent literal bird music cascading into the sunny room.

The more you know about birds — and plants — the more varied a menu you can offer your fine feathered friends at any season. Different birds like different seeds, and more than one feeder gives birds a chance to take turns, rather than get bumped by some big hog like a grackle or a bluejay.

The garden at the ornithology lab has about a dozen feeders, some hanging by chains from wires, strung across the yard to discourage squirrels from hanging by their feet and shoveling in the rations; others are set on posts with metal baffles to foil the furry marauders leaping from the ground. (It's true that stuff like this detracts from a totally natural look, but so do tricycles and barbecue grills. And the payoff is that we saw about a dozen species in 15 minutes.)

Still, some squirrels will hug a feeder with three feet and use the free paw for stuffing their mouths with seeds. But Dr. Kress likes squirrels: so he brings out more seeds. We don't use those mixes you buy at the grocery store," he said. "The birds just pull out the sunflower seeds, and the rest falls on the ground. Sparrows will pick up some of it, but a lot just rots."

As if on cue, a shiny blue-black grackle took sunflower seeds from one feeder, a downy woodpecker pecked at suet from a second, and a junko, a little gray bird with a white belly, ate millet from a third.

THE FEEDERS ARE, of course, just a supplement to a great variety of plants in this garden that provide shelter as well as food. Pines and hemlocks, which offer protection from the rain and a roosting place at night.

In the summer, fledglings need berries high in sugar, like mulberries, blackberries, currants and blueberries. As fall nears, the whole family will be laying on fat for the migration south, so plant magnolias, Florida dogwoods, myrtle and bayberry, all of which have high-fat fruits.

The plant list, which varies for bird species and growing conditions, is endless, and Kress supplies pages of plants in the National Audubon Society book "The Bird Garden" (Dorling Kindersley, 1995), as well as how-tos on everything from feeders to ponds. You may also call Cornell's ornithology lab at (607) 254-2447. The society answers questions at (212) 979-3080 or on the Internet (www.audubon.org).

KRESS CAME TO Cornell 25 years ago to begin a doctorate on natural resources and environmental education, and he never left. These days, the birdman divides his time between directing the Audubon Society's seabird restoration program — which has brought the puffins back to Maine, and teaching field ornithology at Cornell.

He is also building a bird habitat on his property. Kress has a lot of changes in mind: a small prairie of clumping grasses where ground-nesting birds like quail and pheasant can easily run along the pathways and many birds can feast on their seeds.

The birdman is also building a rock pool in front of his own picture window and surrounding it with columbine, cardinal flowers and other hummingbird plants.

And he envisions a shallow pond suited to wading birds and ducks next to his deep pond, which is stocked with bass (they eat ducklings for dinner).

DEAR ABBY

Family photographer regrets not turning camera on herself

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I recently lost both of my parents within three months of each other. My oldest son was very close to his grandparents, and when I tried to find a reasonably recent picture of them, I had difficulty finding one.

Van Buren

I'm the one who takes the photos, but I'm rarely in one. I've used several excuses: too fat, I don't photograph well, etc. But after trying to locate a picture for my son, I began to think, "If something should happen to me, would my children have any photos to remember me by — or to show to their future families?"

Abby, perhaps this can help change the minds of other camera-shy people. The people who love you don't care how photogenic you are. Also, remember to photograph the people you see every day, because one day they won't be there anymore. — HOLLY W., BANGOR, MAINE

DEAR HOLLY: Thank you for a valuable letter. And while I'm on the subject of family pictures: Readers, take time to go through that box of pictures you've stored in the back of your closet and write the names (and dates) on each one while you can still remember them.

DEAR ABBY: I am part of a car pool to after-school activities, and at my mother's instructions, I always say "Thank you" to the driver after getting out of the car.

My friends question this, saying the parent has offered to drive us, so a "thank you" is not necessary.

Abby, isn't it rude to get out of a car, after being given a ride, without so much as a "goodbye and thank you"? — SANTA ROSA

DEAR SANTA ROSA: Yes, it is rude. Your friends who say a "thank you" is not necessary are mistaken. I advise you to continue to thank the driver after every ride.

Good advice for everyone — teens to seniors — is in "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It." To order, send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Greek aristocracy started sunrooms, gardens

N.Y. Times News Service

MACEDONIA, — Here's something to think about the next time you are relaxing in your sunroom or enjoying a lavish outdoor garden. Some outdoor atriums — and that dependable glass enclosure on the back of your house — are actually descendents of ancient aristocrats.

Homeowners may be surprised to learn that what we call "Florida" rooms and "Sunday" rooms today, actually started as greenhouses in the fifth century B.C., reports Patio Enclosures, Inc., the nation's largest manufacturer of sunrooms.

"We think of them as a twentieth century invention — a cost-effective way to add living space and enjoy nature without the worry of weather conditions and pesky insects," says Rick Jones, president of Patio Enclosures, Inc. "But the first sunrooms were actually greenhouses owned by ancient aristocracy to grow exotic plants, fruits, and vegetables." Over the centuries the greenhouse evolved, and so did its purpose.

Patios have been around even longer, and have also evolved to mean anything from a fenced-in porch to an outdoor dining area.

As early as the fifth century B.C., Greeks were writing about sheltred "gardens of Adonis" where exotic plants were abundant.

By the first century A.D., the Romans were growing fruits and vegetables in very primitive greenhouses. A large greenhouse found in Pompeii appears to have been covered with rough glass, with tiers to place plants and a hot-air heating system.

In the sixteenth century, explorers and traders started to import exotic plants. For these plants to survive in the European climate, the first botanical gardens were built in Italy, then Holland and England.

This floral fantasy is much more intricate than many a home gardener would undertake, but it shows just how lush patio flora can be. The inspriation for this garden display is the flower-strewn tapestry, inset above left, "The Hunt of the Unicorn." The New York Botanical Garden is featuring "In a Medieval Garden: The Flora of the Unicorn Tapestries" through Sunday. In this re-creation of the famous tapestry, New York Botanical Garden Conservatory Manager Joe Kerwin used blue violets and white daisies to anchor spires of foxgloves and tangles of strawberries, among a profusion of plants to suggest the tapestry's stylized "millefleur" background. The unicorn is a sculpture.

SOON A LOT of study and research went into the cultivation of exotic plants. By the seventeenth century gardening became a science which became vogue among the aristocracy. Growing oranges became the nobles' favorite. The size of the trees made it necessary to build large orangeries, which doubled as banquet halls during the summer when the trees were moved outdoors.

The first inventions for creating a heated greenhouse were crude. Open fires, and portable braziers filled with charcoal were used, but the plants suffered from fumes and scorching. By the end of the seventeenth century, large heating stoves were in use.

By he early eighteenth century, light was recognized as a major factor in plant growth. The Dutch were among the first to use sloping glass walls and glass roofs to capture the most sunlight.

With the beginning of the nineteenth century, greenhouses came to be seen as a source of pleasure and leisure.

IN ENGLAND, a greenhouse, often called a "conservatory," became an essential for recreation in the home of every wealthy family. Wealthy landowners frequently had a dozen greenhouses, each for growing a particular plant. Dinner parties were given in the greenhouse so that guests could pick their dessert from a nearby fruit tree.

A major advance in English greenhouse technology came when the glass tax was repealed in 1845. For the first time, glass became affordable to the expanding middle class.

In the United States there were few greenhouses until the middle of the nineteenth century. By the turn of the twentieth century, greenhouses were losing their appeal. People had less time and money for growing exotic plants. Soon only the most avid gardeners owned greenhouses.

As domestic greenhouses became less popular, sunrooms and "Florida rooms" began to take their place. In the 1950s they were used in a more practical fashion — as storage space, a cool room for gatherings, and to heat the home with its sun-warmed air during the winter months.

AS AMERICA became fixed on impressing their peers during the Sixties and Seventies, sunrooms became a status symbol. Hot tubs and mini-bars became a standard feature. That's when companies such as Patio Enclosures, Inc. came into being. Designs became more sophisticated, with better blending into the architecture of the home.

By the 1980s, America was once again turning to the practicality of a sunroom.

Homeowners have developed creative uses for the added pace — a trend that continues into the '90s.

"Today's sunrooms, while still the center of relaxation, are also used for home offices, exercise rooms, breakfast nooks, and family gathering rooms," Jones said. "The Nineties family s rediscovered home relaxation and is more focused on quality time together."

A recent study by the National Association of Home Builders, found that 51% of buyers identified a sunroom as one of the most desired elements in a new home.

A sunroom can be a simple screen porch, an unheated three season glass and screen room, year-round rooms built with insulated glass, or a solarium with glass on all sides including a glass roof.

Although they serve a different purpose today than in the past, sunrooms still provide a sunny place for growing plants. Gardens are also sources of relaxation.

Put more iron in decorating diet

'New Mediterranean' look oppulent, inexpensive

By Barbara Mayer
Associated Press

It's rules-out-the-window time in decorating. Any and all interesting pieces are fair game in the effort to create an interesting room.

So iron benches, metal porch chairs and even the galvanized metal of an old-fashioned milk pail are turning up in living room furniture these days.

"My mother would not have thought of putting metal furniture in her house," says Pattie Shaw, home furnishings style director for the J.C. Penney Catalog. "But customers today see metal with new eyes."

The appeal of metal started in women's apparel when silver jewelry, silver buttons and trims became popular, says Shaw. Metal is being used to similar effect as curtain rods and tiebacks, and there are even metal grommets on curtains and draperies.

BUT THE PRESCRIPTION to put more iron in the decorating diet has gone far beyond mere trim. At the recent April furniture market in High Point, N.C., many showrooms were bursting with metal furniture and accessories.

While wrought iron — it is actually steel these days — seemed the dominant look, other metals ranged from matte and shiny chrome to copper, bronze and aluminum.

Mixing metal with other materials such as wicker, leather, wood and glass is also a widespread trend. A typical piece is a leather tray top table ornamented with brass nailheads that rests on a metal base.

Sixty-piece furniture reproductions by the Lane Furniture Co. exemplify the opulent wrought iron look that is being referred to in the industry as part of "the new Mediterranean."

Based on designs at the William Randolph Hearst estate in San Simeon, Calif., the Hearst Castle Collection offers 19 metal or metal-and-wood pieces, including curio cabinets, beds, tables, and mirrors. A signature piece is an 85-inch curio based on a gate at Hearst Castle, and executed in a muted gold and rusted metal finish.

Although the material has not displaced wood as the main furniture material, the quantity of metal furniture has recently grown astronomically, said Lee Booth, a vice president for marketing at Lane Furniture of Altavista, Va. In fact, Lane's sales of metal furniture are at least four times what they were five years ago.

Based on designs at the William Randolph Hearst estate in San Simeon, metal furniture — mixed with leather, wood, wicker and glass — is becoming a widespread trend. J.C. Penney's lightly scaled bedroom pieces, above, feature accented furniture of steel with a pewter-like finish with glass and canvas. Outdoor funiture designers are also creating bedroom furniture in metals.

Crystal doorknobs of delicate cuts and satin finish coordinate with interior color schemes. From Baccarat, Inc., by special order, they are available in clear, amber, aquamarine, jade, and turquoise set in nickel or gilt. Prices range from $295 to $395.

Crystal doorknobs decorative, pricey

N.Y. Times News Service

They open doors to some of the finest places.

Today's doorknobs can be as decorative as a fine brooch — and often as expensive. They are available in heavy brass, hand-forged iron, hand-blown glass, cut crystal, porcelain and Lucite.

Some are new designs, others are antiques or copies of early pieces.

Two trends are behind the fancy doorknob — an increase in housing restorations and a growth of the minimalist look.

Ken Jordan at Renovators Supply in Conway, N.H., speaks for the restorations.

"Many people moving into older homes which previous owners had modernized want to restore the original look," according to Jordan, technical director of the mail-order business that specializes in reproductions.

Marshall Watson, a decorator in New York City, speaks for the minimalists.
