WTC okays pay hike

By Joyce May
Staff Writer

Western Texas College trustees approved a two percent across-the-board salary increase plus $500 for each employee, when the board met in a special budget session Monday night.

The action could mean a tax increase, but the board will not set a tax rate until its August meeting, according to WTC president Dr. Harry Krenek.

According to staff recommendations, in order to fund the proposal, it would be necessary to increase revenue by $129,403.24, which would necessitate going to a tax rate of approximately .3225. The current tax rate is .2923.

The board voted 6-1 for the salary boost with Eddie Peterson opposing the action, citing current economic situations in the cattle, oil and cotton industries.

"We have ranchers who can't sell their cattle, oil is down to $12 a barrel, it's a 110 degrees in the shade, and we have a $20 million school bond issue that will probably go down like a lead balloon."

Board president Dr. Jay Kidd also expressed some concern about a tax increase. "If our tax base drops, we are in deep trouble. It is continuing to fall but it is hard to predict the future."

Dr. Krenek told trustees that concerns about increasing taxes are legitimate ones, but the staff could see no other way to provide the necessary funds.

"The budget is so tight it would not be feasible to go in and try to find the funds for the salary increase in other areas."

Trustee Drew Bullard concurred. "It is a very lean budget. We cut all the fat out and we've started cutting the lean. The only way to get the salary increase is a tax increase."

The tax increase is only a staff recommendation, Dr. Krenek said, "The board could come back and change their minds.,"

The WTC president also said he is appreciative of the board's decision to increase salaries.

"I know it's not easy in any situation, especially not the one we are in now. But, I do appreciate the board's recognition of the contribution of faculty and staff in providing for the salary increase."

The last salary increase was a 1 percent hike in 1995, administrators said.

Bullard said he, too, favored the increase in employees salaries. "People need to be rewarded."

In other action, the board rejected a proposal from the Coca-Cola Company for the soft-drink and consessions at the college. The board said that by doing so, it would allow the opportunity to hear proposals from other companies.

In other considerations, the board gave its approval for the administration to pursue bids for furniture for the Workforce Training Center.

According to Dr. Krenek, the primary need is for tables and chairs to be used in classrooms, labs and conference rooms.

"The furniture will add to what I think will be a very attractive facility," Dr. Krenek said.

Bettie McQueen, vice president, presented the proposed budget for review by the board.

During the budget talks, trustees discussed several proposals that have been brought up in recent months, including the possibility of a covered arena for the rodeo program, implementation of a baseball program and a new floor for the gym.

Bullard brought up a proposal on the rodeo arena to possibly use matching funds — having the rodeo program raise "X amount of dollars", then matching a certain amount of that.

As far as a possible baseball program, Bullard said he felt there would be strong enough support in the community, but he would like to see someone neutral research it more.

Board member Lee Presswood agreed there should be more investigation before starting another sports program. "We need to get our ducks in a row."

Trustee Jackie Greene also suggested the possiblity of adding golf cart sheds and replacing current golf carts with a leased fleet.

"I had the comment made to me that, especially during the summer months, that all of the carts are usually gone by 8:30 in the morning," Greene said. "Also some people want memberships, but they want to bring their own carts so they want a place to put them. I think it would create more revenue and should be considered."

To do that, however, would require pulling funds from elsewhere, and Patrica Claxton, director of fiscal services, pointed out that it was previously agreed that the golf course should operate one full year "to see if it could stand alone (financially) and see if it can stop taking funds from other areas."

The board also considered the possibility of hiring a full-time grant writer.

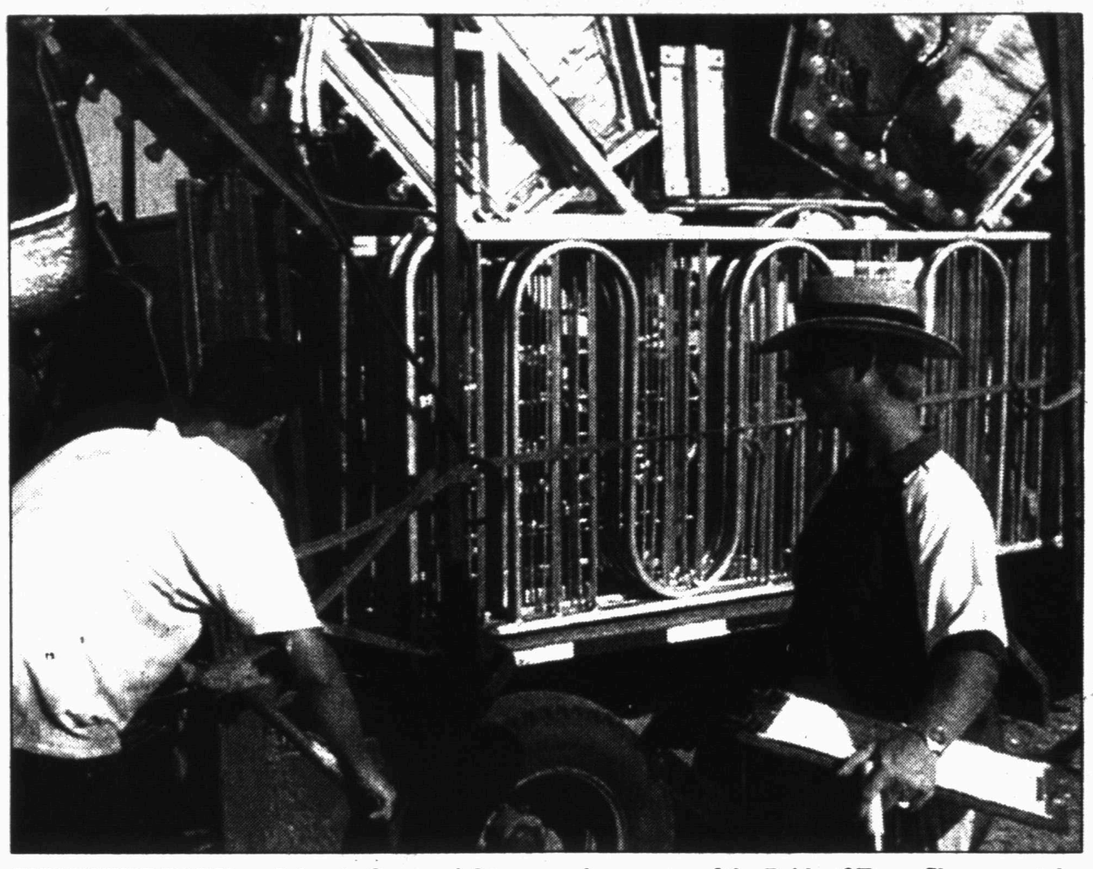

No action was taken concerning the golf related items or the grant writer, pending further investigation.

The board is scheduled to meet again July 13.

Dr. Kidd presided and board members present were Bullard, Peterson, Presswood, Greene, Carolyn Barbee and R.C. Patton.

One-cent increase in postage okayed

WASHINGTON (AP) — The cost of mailing a letter will go up by a penny early next year, the Postal Service's governing board announced today.

The new rates, approved by the independent Postal Rate Commission on May 11, will take effect Jan. 10, 1999, board chairman Sam Winters said.

The new rates will boost the cost of mailing a first-class letter by one cent, to 33 cents. A variety of changes will affect other classes of mail.

"This penny increase is the right amount at the right time," Winters said at the postal governors' monthly meeting.

"The rate adjustment is being made to provide a continuing investment in America's communications future," he said.

Other rate changes included include a cut in the price of sending additional ounces of first-class mail from 23 cents to 22 cents. Thus, a 1-ounce letter will go up to 33 cents, 2-ounces will be the same as now, totaling 55 cents, and heavier letters will cost less than at present.

A priority package will rise from $3 to $3.20; sending a local newspaper will cost 15.7 cents, up from 14.5 cents; the price to mail a national magazine will rise from 27.1 cents to 29.1 cents and a basic parcel post package that cost $2.42 cents to send will rise to $2.74.

The postal board rejected a proposal from the rate commission to set lower rates for special, preprinted envelopes used to pay bills.

The decision to implement the rate increase in January ends wide speculation about when it would take effect. Congress last week urged a delay in implementing the new rates.

THE SDN COLUMN

By Roy McQueen

The feller on Deep Creek says, "It's better to know some of the questions than all of the answers."

El Nino is still getting the blame for the summer heat.

The experts are wrong. We think increased global warming is being caused by the new male anti-impotency pill.

The magic pill, at $10 each, has created an enormous stir. A noted Republican politican has stepped forward with a personal testimony about the benefits. Senior Democracts are demanding equal time.

And now senior citizen sex scandals are on the rise. One guy didn't leave home without his bottle of magic pills, but he did leave home without his wife who had just nursed him through the recovery of a four-bypass surgery.

And there's more, including a heated gender debate about insurance reimbursements. Some are paying for the new pill, but companies don't pay for the birth control pill. Women are hollering discrimination.

And the TV commentators are getting in on the debate. One cautioned that insurance companies might be endorsing a possible birth rate explosion by paying for a pill while refusing to pay for a pill that reduces the risk of conception.

Then along comes the pretenders and con artists who have dosed up their own magic formula. And like everything else, these pretender can range from absolutely useless to deadly.

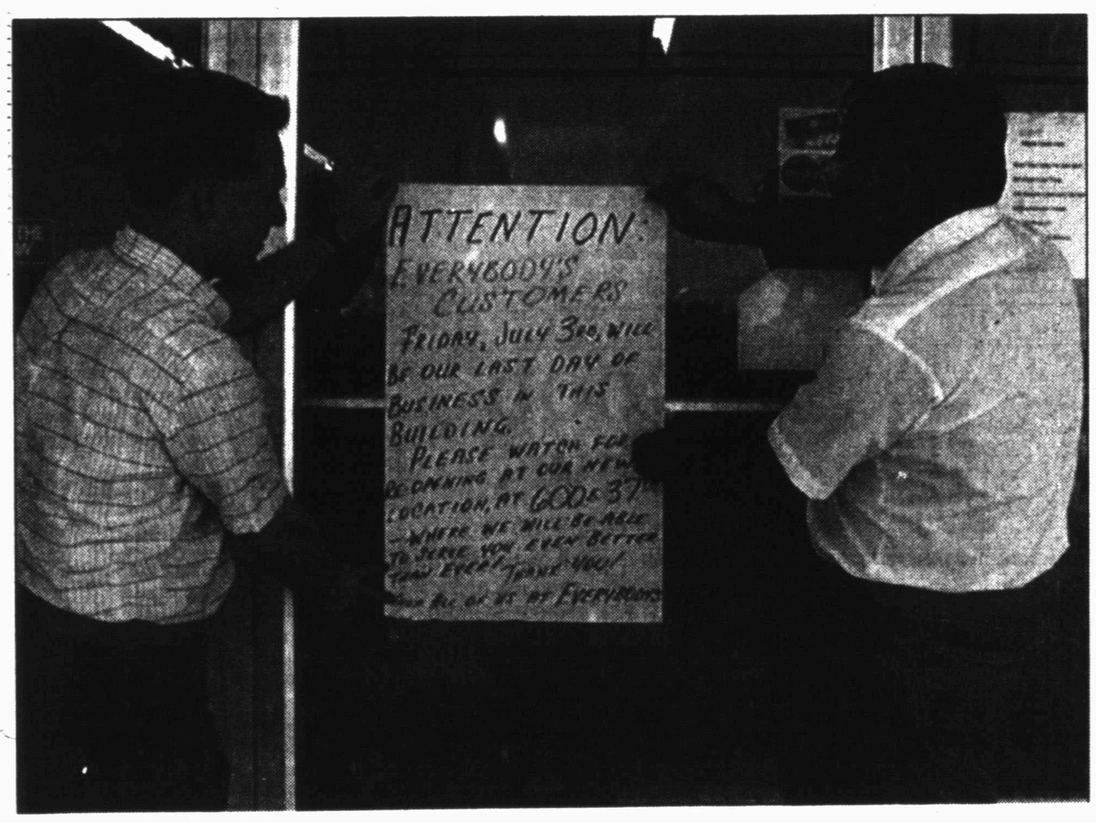

One enterprising company has begun to offer tour packages of exotic and erotic venues for the newly-inspired senior set. One tour promotes a two-week cruise to the Hawaiian Islands, complete with all the complimentary Viagra that a couple wants.

And now there is a debate over the side effects. One guy in the coffee shop panned, "I take the pill and it gives my wife a headache."

On one cruise, calling home to brag about renewed friskiness is anything but economical.

After charging $15.50 a minute for a call, the cruise line got so many complaints that it had to reduce its charge to $9.50 a minute.

And there is a report that the name of the retirement community near Austin has been changed — to Viagra Falls.

Everybody's Thriftway will relocate to East 37th Street

Everybody's Thriftway will soon have a new home.

The grocery store, which is owned by Ronnie Tomlinson, will be relocating to 600 37th street into the former Key Brothers Lawn and Leisure building.

"We will close down Friday and plan to reopen in the new location the middle part of July," Tomlinson said.

The reason for the move, he said, is to provide a better shopping environment.

"We will have a bigger building than what we have now."

Tomlinson said no definite plans for expanding the store's product base have been made.

"I don't know for sure what we are going to be doing. We will move what we have now and go from there."

Tomlinson's son, Mike, who is the store manager, added that "we'll cross that bridge when we get up there.

"Right now we're just ready to get cranking and get started."

He added he was ready for the moving day to get here.

"I'm excited. Right now we are getting some game plans together for the way we want the store laid out. We're going to have a new look," Mike said.

Ronnie said most of the customers that he has talked to have welcomed the move.

"A lot of people are happy about us not being on College anymore because of the traffic, especially senior citizens. Everybody we've polled has had a positive reception to it.

"Also, I think it will be positive for 37th Street."

He said the store has been in its current location since 1980 and the Tomlinsons purchased it 1992. Tomlinson said he had been in the grocery business 35 years.

Rains along coast do not dent drought in South Texas

DALLAS (AP) — Hopes for drought-ending summer rain are drying up across most of Texas, except for along the coast and far south where dying remnants of a tropical disturbance pounded residents.

An upper-level low in Mexico could also bring scattered showers and thunderstorms to the Rio Grande Valley and Permian Basin. And isolated storms could dampen North Texas through Wednesday.

But, although a temporary help for lawns, it's not enough for parched farmland and dried-out stock ponds to recover from the drought that has settled over much of the state.

"Most of Texas is supposed to be above-normal on temperature and below-normal on precipitation through July, August and September," said Joe Harris with the National Weather Service in Fort Worth.

"There's just not much relief out there," he said Monday. "In North Texas, we'd have to get a system like what hit the Houston area to feel better."

As much as 8.3 inches of rain fell in the 24 hours ending Monday morning in Matagorda County, with 6 inches around Clute and up to 5 inches in eastern Chambers County as remnants of a tropical disturbance swept through.

As the disturbance associated with an upper-level low pressure system moved into northern Mexico, it dumped 2-3 inches of rain in Medina and Frio counties near San Antonio.

But away from the coast and South Central Texas, the picture is bleaker.

The Pacific's El Nino weather phenomenon that brought record rain to California, with tornadoes and flooding in the Southeast, is slowly yielding to sibling La Nina. It brings dry conditions to the South and cold, wet conditions to the North.

Now about three months old, this year's Texas drought has already dried up $517 million in crops, costing $1.7 billion to the overall state economy, agricultural economists have said.

More than one million acres of cotton, the state's largest field crop, have now been abandoned, according to unofficial estimates.

Carl Anderson, Texas A&M University cotton economist, told the Houston Chronicle yields are expected to be one-half or less of normal on dryland fields stretching from the Lower Rio Grande Valley through the Blacklands of Central Texas.

"It would be awfully hard to find any dryland better than half a crop through the Blacklands," he said, adding that unirrigated cotton in the Lubbock area is in "sad, sick shape."

Cotton farmers are abandoning as much as 35 percent of their acreage in the Lubbock area.

Scant showers in the South Plains on June 10 were "just enough to ruin the seed," said Shawn Wade, director of communications for the Plains Cotton Growers association in Lubbock.

In North Texas, El Nino-driven storms dried up in April, Harris said. At Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport, where 3.5 inches of rain is normal in April, only 1.25 inches fell.

Only 2.38 inches of rain was recorded in May instead of the normal 4.88 and June has been a similar story, with 1.75 inches instead of the usual 2.98.

"And that's during the time when the sun is heating up, evaporation increases and vegetation is sucking moisture out of the ground," Harris said.

Renown Marine fighter ace slain during robbery at home

ROSEBURG, Ore. (AP) — Marion Carl spent much of his life outracing death in a fighter plane.

He led World War II air battles at Midway and Guadalcanal, where he survived being shot down. Then he became a test pilot and flew higher and faster than anyone before him. In his 50s, the fighter ace returned to combat in Vietnam.

This is how retired Maj. Gen. Carl died: He was shot in the head Sunday night by a robber who kicked in the door of his home and demanded cash from his wife.

"It's a hell of a way to lose a great American hero," said retired Marine Col. Denis J. Keily, spokesman for the Naval Aviation Museum Foundation in Pensacola, Fla. "I guess it's a statement of our times."

Authorities on Monday issued a warrant for the arrest of Jesse Stuart Fanus, a 19-year-old from the area who has a record of arrests on charges including drunken driving, burglary and criminal trespass.

Sheriff's deputies said Carl, 82, was in bed and his wife, Edna, was up reading when a young man wearing wraparound sunglasses, holding a shotgun and accompanied by a German shepherd burst through the side door and demanded car keys and money.

Carl was shot when he walked into the room, and Mrs. Carl was grazed in the head but not seriously hurt.

The man took $200 to $400 in cash and drove off in their car, but abandoned it 10 miles away. A patrolman found the dog walking nearby.

"It appears to be totally random — random and irrational and not thought out," sheriff's Detective Joe Perkins said.

Sheriff's deputies staked out known haunts of Fanus after a tip he may have been involved.

Carl's flying exploits spanned from World War II to Vietnam, in a career that included 18.5 aerial victories.

In 1942, the Oregon native became the first Marine fighter ace, downing three Japanese bombers and a fighter plane over Guadalcanal. He ended his stint at Guadalcanal with 11.5 combat aircraft destroyed, according to the National Museum of Naval Aviation.

In one dogfight, his shot-up Wildcat fighter went down off the coast of Guadalcanal. His official Marine biography says he was "losing his battle to swim ashore against the tide, when he was picked up by friendly natives in a canoe. After five days with the natives, he finally made his way back to his base."

After the war, Carl became a Navy test pilot, setting a world speed record of 651 mph on Aug. 25, 1947, at Muroc Field, now Edwards Air Force Base, in California. But his fame was fleeting and soon forgotten.

Chuck Yeager, the Air Force's top test pilot, wrested away the title of world's fastest human by breaking the sound barrier two months later, also at Muroc. He flew a Bell X-1 rocket plane at Mach 1.07 — 700 mph — on Oct. 14.

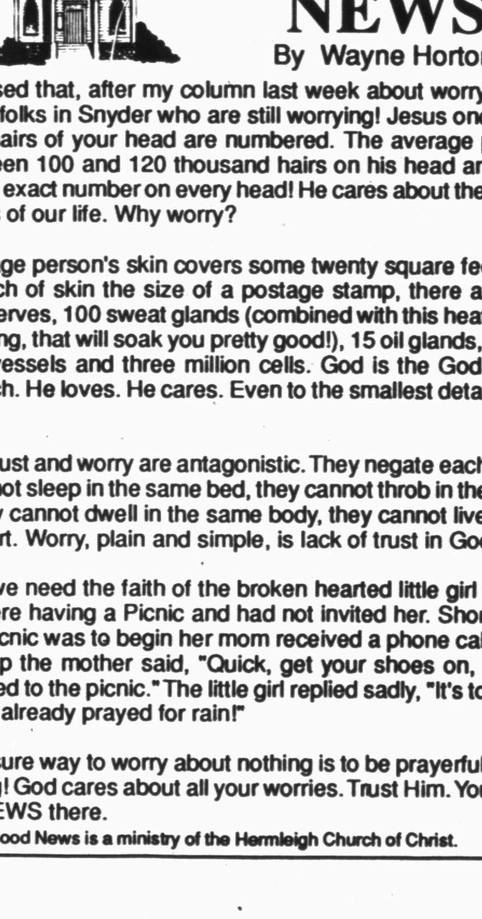

In 1953, Carl set a world altitude record of 83,235 feet and two years later flew U-2 photo reconnaissance missions over China.

"One time I'd flown higher than anybody and another time I'd flown faster than anybody. I think I was one of the very few who had accomplished that," he told The Associated Press in an interview last year.

He returned to combat during the Vietnam War, commanding the 2nd Marine Air Wing. He retired in 1973 with 13,000 flying hours, a Navy Cross with two Gold Stars, the Legion of Merit with three Gold Stars, the Distinguished Flying Cross with four Gold Stars and the Air Medal with 13 Gold Stars.

In 1994, he wrote his memoirs in a book called "Pushing The Envelope." Co-author Barrett Tillman described Carl at the time as a man "almost totally lacking in ego; unusual among flag officers, rare among test pilots and nearly impossible among fighter aces."

GOOD NEWS

By Wayne Horton

I'm surprised that, after my column last week about worry, there are some folks in Snyder who are still worrying! Jesus once said the very hairs of your head are numbered. The average person has between 100 and 120 thousand hairs on his head and God knows the exact number on every head! He cares about the smallest details of our life. Why worry?

The average person's skin covers some twenty square feet. In a square inch of skin the size of a postage stamp, there are four yards of nerves, 100 sweat glands (combined with this heat we've been having, that will soak you pretty good!), 15 oil glands, a yard of blood vessels and three million cells. God is the God of the square inch. He loves. He cares. Even to the smallest detail. Why worry?

Friends, trust and worry are antagonistic. They negate each other. They cannot sleep in the same bed, they cannot throb in the same brain, they cannot dwell in the same body, they cannot live in the same heart. Worry, plain and simple, is lack of trust in God.

Perhaps we need the faith of the broken hearted little girl whose friends were having a Picnic and had not invited her. Shortly before the picnic was to begin her mom received a phone call. After hanging up the mother said, "Quick, get your shoes on, you've been invited to the picnic." The little girl replied sadly, "It's too late, Mom, I've already prayed for rain!"

Well, the sure way to worry about nothing is to be prayerful about everything! God cares about all your worries. Trust Him. You'll find GOOD NEWS there.

Good News is a ministry of the Hermleigh Church of Christ.

Your Birthday

Wednesday, July 1, 1998

Stronger emphasis than usual will be placed on gaining new knowledge for self-improvement in the year ahead. Once this wisdom is acquired, you'll find ways to improve your lot in life.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be extra protective today of household items you cherish. Keep them out of reach of careless guests or frolicking children: both pose a possible threat. Cancer, treat yourself to a birthday gift. Send for your Astro-Graph predictions for the year ahead by mailing $2 and SASE to Astro-Graph, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 1758, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be sure to state your zodiac sign.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Usually, you're not a person who spouts off before thinking. Today, however, you might blurt out something offensive that could hurt the feelings of someone within earshot.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) If you go shopping today, scrutinize the merchandise you'd like to purchase carefully. If you don't, you could end up with flawed goods.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Your mind may be focused on self-interests today. This is okay, provided it doesn't cause people to feel you have little concern for them.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) It's not that you're a gossip, but you might not be at your best today when it comes to keeping secrets. Make an effort to keep your mouth shut if your discipline is weak.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Before accepting financial advice from a pal, quiz him/her in detail to be sure s/he really knows the score.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In critical career matters today, don't rely heavily on the support of associates. The help you anticipate might not be forthcoming.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Your original ideas will be sound today, but you might make last minute changes that could lessen their bite and benefits. Keep your presentation as forceful as possible.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Joint endeavors requiring cash should be treated with cautious respect today. You may regret impulsive moves.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) If you enter into an agreement today, honor your pledge. If you try to back out, your image could suffer more than you realize.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You won't take pride in your accomplishments today if you attempt important tasks in a hasty fashion. Approach your work in an orderly, methodical manner.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) An opportunity of financial significance should be acted upon promptly today. If you're indifferent rather than assertive, it could slip through your fingers.

The annual international event

England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales have concluded the 55th series of Camrose matches. (For the first eight years, Eire also competed, and will return to the competition next year.) Before the final match between England and Scotland, the northerners enjoyed a 10-victory-point lead. But with 60 points at stake, nothing was decided. In the end, though, the Scots were worthy winners. (And, as is usual, the rub of the green baize ran the way of the victors. On the first deal of Saturday evening, Scotland played a laydown grand slam in game. However, one of the English players, back late from dinner, walked into the Vu-Graph room and saw the cards up on the screen. So the deal was scrapped.)

This deal featured a good gain for Scotland. How would you play in six diamonds against a low spade lead?

The English pair stopped in three no-trump, winning 11 tricks.

North's two-heart rebid was Kokish: either natural or a balanced 25-plus points. South was supposed to continue with two spades, permitting North to complete his description. However, North had forgotten to tell South about this addition to their system! So, South bid a natural three diamonds.

The declarer, John Murdoch, decided that East would have bid with seven spades to the king-jack. So, just in case the diamonds were 3-0 offside, Murdoch finessed dummy's spade queen. Right!

The victory rostrum now reads: England 41, Scotland 12, England-Scotland ties 2, the rest 0.

Elvis Presley to be inducted into another hall

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Already a member of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, Elvis Presley will now be receiving a similar honor for country music.

Presley will be inducted on Sept. 23 into the Country Music Hall of Fame, the Country Music Association announced Monday.

The late singers Tammy Wynette and George Morgan, and broadcast executive E.W. "Bud" Wendell will be inducted along with Presley during the CMA's annual awards show.

Presley aspired to be a country singer before he became a rock 'n' roll icon. He died in 1977, and was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 1986.

Wynette, best-known for her classic "Stand By Your Man," died on April 6. Morgan, the father of country singer Lorrie Morgan, scored hits like 1949's "Candy Kisses."

Other entertainers in both halls of fame include Johnny Cash and the late Bill Monroe, Jimmie Rodgers and Hank Williams Sr.

Lockout set to begin at midnight

NEW YORK (AP) — The NBA didn't even wait until the deadline to announce its lockout.

With collective bargaining negotiations at a complete standstill, the league put out the official word Monday: It will be shutting down until a new labor pact is reached.

When the clock strikes midnight EDT tonight, all business comes to a halt: No trades, no free agent signings, no practices, no summer camps.

"The current system does not work," commissioner David Stern said. "We can't afford to play next season under current system. That's just the reality. That's why owners elected to lockout."

The move came as no surprise. Players had been told all season to expect a work stoppage, and talks between the league and the union broke off more than a week ago.

The biggest question now is when it will end.

The NBA has never lost a game to a strike or a lockout, but both sides are so far apart that the impasse could last into November, December — or even 1999.

"Yes, that is fair and accurate," Stern said of possibly losing games to a work stoppage for the first time in NBA history. "There are a number of clubs that will do better not operating than operating. That's something the players don't seem to understand."

This will be the third lockout in league history. A lockout in the summer of 1995 lasted three months, and one in 1996 lasted only a couple of hours.

The old agreement was to run for six years, but the owners had the right to reopen it if the amount of designated revenue being paid toward player salaries exceeded a certain level — 51.8 percent of basketball-related income.

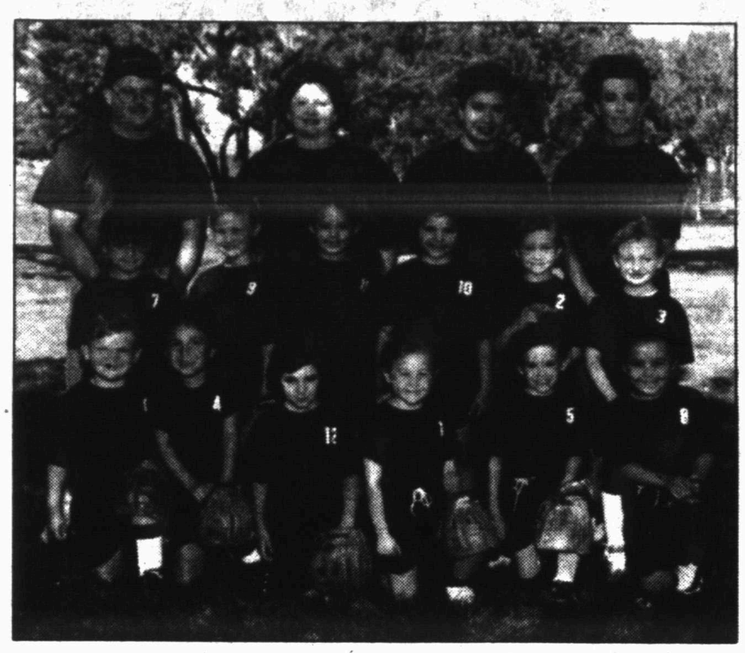

The owners say they are now devoting 57 percent of those revenues to player salaries, a total of almost $1 billion.

Despite meeting nine times since April, the sides have made only minimal progress on a new agreement to replace the one expiring at midnight Tuesday.

"We've made four different proposals, all involving player salaries going up every year," deputy commissioner Russ Granik said. "The players made one set of proposals, and have never moved off those proposals in any way on economic issues."

The players' association did not immediately comment on Monday's announcement.

Stern and Granik said the league's profit margins have been shrinking for the last five years, and almost half of the 29 teams stood to lose money in the just-completed season.

Dallas gets Nowitski

DALLAS (AP) — German sensation Dirk Nowitzki said today he'll play for the Dallas Mavericks next season instead of continuing to play in Europe.

Nowitzki, who initially said he'd need two more seasons overseas before being ready for the NBA, was drafted ninth overall by Milwaukee in last week's draft then traded to Dallas. Mavericks officials flew to Germany the next day to try convincing him to play in the United States next season.

Nowitzki arrived in Dallas on Sunday, stayed at the home of coach-general manager Don Nelson, held a news conference Monday and attended a barbecue with prospective teammates that night. Another news conference was scheduled for today to discuss his decision.

"Nellie called me 20 minutes ago and said he's agreed to play here," team spokesman Tony Fay said this morning. "Nellie was excited and probably a little relieved."

The 20-year-old forward said he was concerned that his game wasn't polished enough for the NBA and he wanted to make sure he was free to help the German national team qualify for the Olympics.

Nelson assured Nowitzki he's ready, as many other top league executives have said, and the Mavericks have agreed to let him leave the team in the fall and winter to play for his country's squad.

The 6-foot-11, 237-pound Nowitzki was facing a deadline of today to decide whether he would play for the Mavericks. Negotiations would be barred after midnight due to an impending lockout by NBA team owners, who are embroiled in a labor dispute with the players' union.

Also, Nowitzki plans to return to Germany later today, Fay said.

Nelson was afraid to let Nowitzki return to Germany unsigned because he would be free to negotiate with European clubs. He turned up the heat on Nowitzki by hinting that Dallas would look at other players if Nowitzki didn't give the team an answer by today.

The Mavericks cannot offer him a contract because the rookie salary scale is up in the air due to the labor dispute.

Snyder ready for all-stars

Hosting Little League Baseball All-Star tournaments has just about become an annual event in Snyder and this year is no exception.

Moffett Field and Logan Field will be sites for tourneys once again, when all-star action gets underway beginning Monday.

Eleven senior league squads will battle at Moffett Field for the right to advance into the next round. Snyder opens play at 6 p.m. Monday against Coleman.

Also participating in the senior event will be Eula, Colorado City, Clyde, Wylie, Cross Plains, Merkel and three Abilene squads — Southwest, Senior and North.

The field of teams won't be quite as large at Logan Field. With more towns added into the district for this season, the 11-and 12-year-old tournament will be played out at four different sites, with six teams per site. The four winners will then meet to decide the overall district champion.

Snyder opens play at 6 p.m. Monday against Sweetwater, while Tri-County takes on Colorado City in the other first-round contest. Rotan and Hamlin drew byes and will face the winner Monday's games on Tuesday.

In addition to hosting two events, Snyder has two squads traveling to Abilene and Sweetwater.

The 13-year-old all-stars will square off at Abilene's Redbud Park, where Snyder faces Sweetwater at 6 p.m. Monday to begin play.

Snyder, Sweetwater and the three Abilene entries combine with Wylie, Coleman, Merkel, Clyde and Colorado City to comprise the bracket.

Snyder's youngest group of all-stars, the 9-and 10-year-olds, begin action Saturday at 1 p.m. against Clyde in Sweetwater.

The Sweetwater event is this district's largest tourney with 15 teams slated to compete.

Also entered are Eastland, Hamlin, Coleman, Eula, Sweetwater, Albany, Merkel, Cross Plains, Colorado City, Breckenridge and three Abilene squads — Dyess, Western and Lone Star.

McGwire leads voting; Sosa waiting

NEW YORK (AP) — All those home runs made Mark McGwire a shoo-in to start in the All-Star game. All Sammy Sosa can hope for, however, is a chance to be a backup.

McGwire, leading the majors with 36 homers, was the top vote-getter in NL results announced Monday. He was the fans' choice to start for the sixth time overall, the first five coming when he played for Oakland.

"I think it's going to be great," the St. Louis slugger said over the weekend. "It's been great that I've been able to play in the All-Star game so many years for the American League, and now I get to do it for the National League."

But Sosa, whose 19 home runs in June set a major league record for most homers in any month, has to hope he's picked as a reserve for next Tuesday night's game at Coors Field at Denver.

The Chicago Cubs star, who has hit 32 homers, finished sixth among outfielders and was only 12th overall in the fan voting.

New York Mets catcher Mike Piazza, the NL's top vote-getter the past two years while with Los Angeles, earned another starting spot.

Second 'Jurassic' sequel planned

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Despite a cold-blooded response to the giant lizard in "Godzilla," dinosaurs show no sign of extinction at the box office.

A third installment of the popular "Jurassic Park" saga is in the works, according to Universal Pictures and Amblin Entertainment.

Michael Crichton will write the script and Steven Spielberg is set to produce the latest primordial saga of dinosaurs on the loose.

Device to recheck mammograms approved by FDA

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government approved the first computerized scanner Monday to doublecheck mammograms for signs of cancer that radiologists may have missed.

The ImageChecker promises to help improve the accuracy of mammography reading, thus helping to catch breast tumors earlier when they're more treatable.

"There's always the possibility the radiologist will overlook something important," said Dr. Matthew Freedman of Georgetown University, which is researching similar technology. "This is the check on the radiologist to know, 'I've not missed anything.' ... Radiologists will use this and like it."

Just how helpful the ImageChecker will be is still up for debate. The Food and Drug Administration estimates the device could increase a radiologist's accuracy from detecting 80 of every 100 cancers to catching 88 of 100.

The manufacturer, California-based R2 Technology Inc., predicts that for every 100,000 cancers easily caught by mammograms, the ImageChecker would help diagnose 12,800 more patients. Those are women whose cancer might not otherwise be found until they return for the next year's mammogram, time enough for a tumor to double in size, said Alan Stein, R2's vice president.

The FDA cautioned that it's not yet clear if the new ImageChecker also will increase false alarms over benign lumps. It ordered R2 Technology to immediately begin studying that.

But the government considered the device important enough for a fast-track review — and radiologists said the nation's shortage of experienced mammographers means there's a strong need for a way to doublecheck women's exams.

Most U.S. mammograms "are not read by real experienced people," said Dr. Richard Reitherman, mammography chairman for the American Cancer Society of Southern California. The ImageChecker "is a definite benefit" for those clinics.

American women undergo some 30 million mammograms every year. The breast X-ray is the gold standard in detecting breast cancer, particularly early tumors.

But mammograms aren't foolproof. For every 80 breast cancers that mammograms diagnose, 20 are missed, the FDA estimated. Half those misses are probably inevitable, because the cells simply don't look suspicious to health care workers. But the other half might be preventable — they contain abnormalities radiologists overlooked.

With the ImageChecker, once radiologists finish reading the mammograms, the X-rays are converted into a digital computer signal. Specialized software rechecks the images for the most common signs of cancer. Video monitors highlight suspicious areas for radiologists to check again.

"The idea is that machines are really good at doing things repetitively," explained Dr. Susan Alpert, FDA's device evaluation chief. People, however "blink, they might miss an area. The machine doesn't blink."

The computer system will cost about $175,000. No one knows how much clinics will charge for rechecked mammograms. Mammograms today range from $40 to $150.

Studies show simply having a second radiologist reread all mammograms would be just as accurate, said Dr. Edward Sickles of the University of California, San Francisco, speaking for the American College of Radiology. But very few mammography clinics have the time or money to do that — insurers don't pay for it, he said.

Can AIDS virus be eliminated in people?

GENEVA (AP) — Researchers raised the possibility today that treatment may someday eliminate the AIDS virus from the body or lower it to a point where the immune system can successfully control it.

"Eradication of HIV is not a myth," said Dr. Roberto Siliciano of Johns Hopkins University. "This is something we can do."

The goal, he said, is to find the spots in the body where virus lingers, then flush it out and kill it.

Siliciano spoke today at the 12th World AIDS Conference, where researchers reported on experiments to measure long-lived pools of HIV-infected cells and destroy them.

Combination drug therapies with medicines called protease inhibitors can reduce levels of the HIV virus in the bloodstream so low that they cannot be readily measured. However, tests show that so-called memory CD4 cells in the lymph tissues continue to harbor the virus.

After a person has spent years on anti-AIDS treatment, the immune responses that have been damaged by AIDS rebound and grow more powerful. Some scientists believe at this point it may sometimes be possible for the immune system to control the lingering infection even if the virus is not wiped out entirely.

"It may be that you don't have to eliminate it," said Dr. Anthony Fauci of the U.S. National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases.

He and others at the meeting described cases in which people stopped treatment and yet their virus did not rebound in the bloodstream, apparently because their immune systems were able to control it.

Fauci said one possibility is to stimulate the latently infected cells so they will release their virus and die. While experiments show this may shrink the pool of infected cells, so far it has not wiped them out completely.

At the conference on Monday, researchers described the development of two new medicines that may offer easy-to-take alternatives to protease inhibitors, which have been the key ingredient of the so-called AIDS cocktail until now.

The medicines both appear to be about as effective as protease inhibitors but require taking far fewer pills than the standard mix. They may help those people who fail to respond to protease inhibitors or suffer bad side effects from them.

The two drugs are DuPont Pharmaceuticals' Sustiva and Glaxo Wellcome's Ziagen. Sustiva is known generically as efavirenz and Ziagen as abacavir. Both companies have asked the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for approval to sell the drugs, based on the data presented at this week's meeting.

The drugs will be given in combination with two older AIDS medicines, like protease inhibitors. Taken early in infection, the protease inhibitor combinations keep people from getting sick. When given to people whose bodies are already ravaged by the virus, they often produce dramatic turnarounds.

Their biggest drawback for many is taking as many as 20 pills on a precise schedule throughout the day. Some doctors are reluctant to prescribe them to people who are not motivated to take them exactly on schedule, because missing even a few pills allows mutant viruses to evolve that are impervious to the drugs.

When taking protease inhibitors, "you have to plan, you have to be organized, and you have to be disciplined. There is a need for simpler treatments, ones that patients can adhere to better," said Dr. Schlomo Staszewski of Goethe University in Frankfurt, Germany. He was involved in testing both new drugs.

Blood cell implants allow rats to regain some leg movement

NEW YORK (AP) — White blood cells that help heal wounds are showing early promise in rats for treating spinal cord injuries.

They helped the animals regain some leg movement after their spinal cords were severed, researchers report.

That injury normally paralyzes the hin legs permanently. But in many rats that received a dose of their own white cells in their spinal cords when the cut was made, the hind legs could eventually crawl slowly on the knees. The legs usually couldn't support the rats' weight.

The degree of recovery is about equal to what's been achieved before with other techniques, said researcher Michal Schwartz of the Weitzmann Institute of Science in Rehovot, Israel. The more interesting thing, she said, is that planting white cells in an injured spine can help it regenerate, much as the cells help heal damage elsewhere in the body.

She stressed that the technique has been tried only in rats, and the recovery is only partial. There is "a long way to go to see whether it works in humans," she said.

She and colleagues report the findings in the July issue of the journal Nature Medicine.

The approach is promising, said Naomi Kleitman of the University of Miami School of Medicine and the Miami Project to Cure Paralysis.

The work is part of a flurry of recent research that shows some recovery with just a small amount of spinal cord regeneration, Kleitman said. Scientists now have to figure out how that happens and whether it can be improved enough to help patients get around, she said.

If so, people would probably be treated with a combination of techniques, she said. Other approaches include building anatomical bridges across injury sites, providing substances to promote regrowth and blocking substances that inhibit regeneration.

Nerve cells through most of the body regenerate if damaged. Nobody knows why spinal nerve cells normally don't. Schwartz believes they don't get enough help from immune-system cells called macrophages, which rush to sites of injury elsewhere in the body, clean up dead cells and debris, and produce substances needed for healing.

So she and colleagues took macrophages from the rats' blood and stimulated their healing behavior by exposing them to segments of rat leg nerves in the laboratory. Then the researchers severed the animals' spinal cords and planted hundreds of thousands of the stimulated macrophages at the injury site and just next to it.

HIV procedure apparently does not work for non-Hispanic whites

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A new study on AIDS research has reached disappointing conclusions regarding two gene mutations that were thought to help in treating HIV-infected patients.

The findings by San Antonio researchers, published today in the journal Nature Medicine, suggest developing treatments around the relatively new science of genetic resistance to AIDS may be more difficult than many had hoped.

That's the view of Dr. Sunil Ahuja, assistant professor of medicine at the University of Texas Health Science Center.

The journal reported that a gene mutation previously found to extend the life and health of HIV-infected people appears only to work in African-Americans and perhaps Hispanics, but not non-Hispanic whites.

The study, which examined 1,090 HIV-infected Air Force personnel, also found that another gene mutation earlier believed to delay disease progression actually caused patients to sicken and die faster.

"Even though non-Hispanic whites and African-Americans have the same gene mutation, it's only protective in one group," Ahuja said. The findings suggest other, yet-undiscovered gene mutations also are at work in one group but not the other, he said.

For many years, it has been known the virus that causes AIDS latches onto a receptor called CD4 to enter and infect immune cells. In 1996, researchers confirmed the virus also locks onto a second site, or co-receptor.

That co-receptor varies depending on the stage of the disease. Early in the infection, the virus latches onto a receptor called CCR5. A mutation in both copies of the CCR5 gene makes people resistant to becoming infected in the first place.

The mutation in CCR5 is found in 1 percent of non-Hispanic whites, but is rare in other groups, Ahuja said.

As the disease runs its course, it binds to other receptors. Mutations in those receptors have been linked in earlier studies to longer, disease-free lives among HIV-infected people.

One is the CCR2 receptor. The San Antonio researchers found the mutated CCR2 twice as often in African-Americans, Hispanics and American Indians than in non-Hispanic whites.

Girl drops attempt to terminate mother's rights

DOVER, Del. (AP) — Samantha Frazer was 6 when her mom left her behind. As the girl went from one foster home to another, she heard from her mother once in a while, usually to break a promise.

So Samantha went to court to divorce her mom. Her legal fight redefined children's rights in Delaware.

After a two-week visit with the mother she once said "has not cared for me or loved me," Samantha, now 10, has changed her mind.

Samantha, through her lawyer, said she will move back with her mother, who claims to have cleaned up her drug addictions and wants her daughter back. They will likely be reunited Aug. 1.

No reason for Samantha's change of mind was given. Her lawyer, Matt Denn, said her decision came soon after returning last Thursday from a visit with Victoria Frazer in Georgetown, S.C.

"This is a story of perseverance and redemption," said Robert Taylor, a lawyer for Victoria Frazer. "That's her daughter. She loves her daughter."

The visit in Ms. Frazer's home gave the two time to "bond," he said.

"There is no doubt this child has been through a terrible process, but if anyone is going to heal that, it's her mother," he said.

According to court documents, Ms. Frazer was diagnosed with crack cocaine and marijuana addictions in 1992. She left Delaware two years later, moving to Texas with a boyfriend and leaving her two daughters behind.

The other girl had lived with her stepfather until last March, when she went to live with her mother in South Carolina.

Samantha, an energetic girl with glasses and a dazzling smile, has lived in four foster homes over four years. She will leave behind a former therapist who had offered to adopt her.

In her filing before the state Supreme Court on June 2, Samantha said her mother "never tried to come back and take care of me" after leaving in 1994.

"She did not even call me regularly, visit me regularly or celebrate holidays like my birthday with me. When she did speak to me, she made promises that she broke," the filing said. "Since she left me she has failed to act like a parent to me. She has not cared for me or loved me."

A Family Court judge ordered this spring that Samantha and her birth mother be reunited Aug. 1, denying the state Division of Family Services request that Ms. Frazer's parental rights be terminated. The judge ruled the state agency had not done enough to attempt to reunify the family.

The agency opted not to appeal the decision, resulting in Samantha's precedent-setting filing in the state Supreme Court, asking that she be given legal standing to appeal the ruling.

The Supreme Court granted Samantha standing. But she had to file to reopen the case in Family Court by Monday.

"I have advised Samantha about the legal implications of her decision, and she has made her decision fully aware of its potential consequences," said Denn, her lawyer.

Janice Mink, co-president of the Delaware chapter of Hear My Voice, a national child rights group, worries the move is not best for Samantha, but she understands how hard it is for her to reject her natural mother.

"It's every child's dream to be loved and wanted by their natural parent, but I worry about Samantha's future," Ms. Mink said.

Samantha's case already has had a lasting effect in Delaware.

By giving her legal standing, the Supreme Court essentially guaranteed that children whose parents abandon them can be represented by their own lawyers — instead of just the Division of Family Services' case workers or court-appointed advocates.

And spurred by her case, the General Assembly has approved legislation that makes it easier for children to ask for their birth parents' rights to be terminated.

Silent witness threatened to take 5th

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — A prosecutor disclosed in court Monday that she did not question a key witness in the Ennis Cosby slaying because the man had refused to testify out of fear of incriminating himself.

Deputy District Attorney Anne Ingalls, virtually whispering her remarks during a hearing with jurors absent, said Eli Zakaria was going to invoke protection against self incrimination in the trial of Mikail Markhasev even if Zakaria was granted immunity from prosecution.

In a somewhat odd finale for her abbreviated case, Ingalls paraded Zakaria before jurors on Friday without speaking a word. She was seeking to combat defense assertions that Zakaria is the man depicted in a composite drawing based on details from the only eye witness.

Bill Cosby's 27-year-old son was shot to death as he changed a flat tire along a dark road Jan. 16, 1997. Zakaria and Markhasev were together that night, authorities say.

Markhasev, 19, is charged with the murder. His lawyers say police have the wrong man.

Ingalls said Zakaria's lawyers informed her before his appearance that he would not testify, which was why she did not ask him any questions.

Dear Abby

By Abigail Van Buren

If you can't beat 'em, join 'em is hunting wife's motto

DEAR ABBY: I never laughed so hard as I did when I read about "Gwen" in the letter from "Turkeyless in Arkansas." I like that girl! I'm sure there are a lot of "hunting widows" out there who would love to have done the same thing (yell, "Run, turkey, run!")

My response to Gwen: You can do one of two things if your man decides to confront you about your "insensitivity" to his hunting:

1. "RUN, GWEN, RUN!" You will always be second to his hunting. It may be the turkey season now, but next on the list will be deer, bear, elk, moose, rabbit, squirrel, pheasant, duck, etc. If you should marry this guy, expect to wake up alone from late October to early April.

So, if snuggling in the morning is what you like to do, get a teddy bear. Don't make any plans without asking his schedule because morning isn't the only time they go hunting; late afternoons are popular, too. If dinners and movies are what you enjoy on Saturday evenings, take a girlfriend instead. And be sure to keep his "If I Go Hunting One More Time My Wife Is Going to Leave Me ... God, I'm Gonna Miss Her" T-shirt handy at all times. Or, you could:

2. JOIN HIM AND HAVE FUN! That is what I finally did after four years of griping and nagging. When I did, I got the opening-day prize — a 10-inch bearded gobbler! My husband and I have fun hunting together, although I don't go all the time. It taught me to respect his favorite sport, his hunting buddies and him more!

My suggestion to "Turkeyless in Arkansas" is: If you care enough about Gwen, don't try to force her to love what you do. Has she considered ditching you because you break out in hives whenever she asks you to accompany her to the mall? If you dump her, watch out! Your friend, who has a much better sense of humor than you, may snatch her up, and next year you'll be hunting alone.

TALKING TURKEY IN FLORIDA

DEAR TALKING TURKEY: I'm printing your letter in the hope that Gwen will spot it. As a hunter's wife, you have laid on the line what she should expect if she marries her boyfriend.

The comments about "Turkeyless in Arkansas" continue unabated. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: This is in response to "Turkeyless in Arkansas." Abby, just because this couple are not birds of a feather doesn't mean they can't enjoy a beautiful nest together. There is nothing written that says you must enjoy the other's hobby. In fact, I personally recommend that each have his or her own personal interests — it makes for more interesting individuals, who in turn enhance each other as a couple.

I'll bet "Turkeyless" would not want to take a special cooking class, but would like his turkey cooked to perfection. According to him, Gwen can cook and she looks good. She can pamper herself while he hunts, and then they can have a wonderful meal together while he feasts his eyes on her.

My husband loves tinkering with his old sprint and midget race cars. I sit in a rocking chair in my special corner of his workshop and do needlework, and we can still share time and conversation. Once in a while I will hand him a tool; occasionally he gives me an opinion on combining colors. Sometimes I accompany him to a vintage auto swap meet, and once in a while he will walk through a quilt display at a fair with me.

Relationships are give-and-take. Both must give and both must take.

Are frozen dinners too salty?

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I know that some dietary salt is beneficial, but the amount in commercially prepared food is ridiculous. As a recent widow, I find the option of an occasional frozen dinner most appealing. However, these meals are too salty and I don't understand why their manufacturers can't back off. Those consumers who want more salt can add it at the table.

I have written to several companies and their standard reply is: "People wouldn't like the food with less salt." So much for consumer clout.

DEAR READER: I couldn't agree with you more. Prepared dinners, especially frozen ones, are much too salty for people who wish to moderate or limit their intake of salt. While it's true that salt adds flavor, consumers could certainly add salt at the table if their frozen dinners seemed too bland.

I don't have much clout either, but perhaps if more of the public demanded less-salty frozen dinners, the industry would sit up and take notice. You folks at home, get out your pens.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I had a recent CT scan because I have high blood pressure and low potassium. The X-rays showed a "2-by-2-centimeter homogeneous mass in the left adrenal gland." My doctor told me not to be concerned. Should I be?

DEAR READER: You bet you should.

Some rare types of hypertension are caused by tumors in the adrenal glands. Called "aldosteronomas," these growths also cause low serum potassium. It sounds as though your doctors were looking for such a tumor with the CT scan. They seem to have found it. Now you need further testing (such as bilateral adrenal vein catheterization) to confirm it as a cause of your problem. If so, you need surgery.

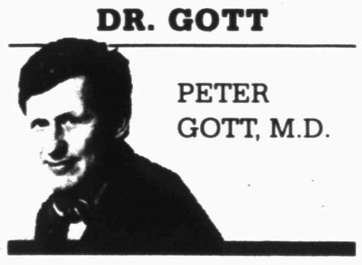

I don't understand why your doctors told you not to worry. I would have thought they'd be elated at discovering such an unusual (and treatable) finding.

Return to your primary care physician for an explanation and, perhaps, a referral to an endocrinologist.

To give you related information, I am sending you a copy of my Health Report "Hypertension." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2017, Murray Hill Station, New York, NY 10156. Be sure to mention the title.

"WISDOM FROM GOD"

Greek philosophers who had great advantages provided by nature and wisdom never came to know God, nor did the Jews with all of their theological advantages. To the Greeks God was too high and holy to soil Himself with man, and to the Jews He could never be a suffering servant. Therefore to both Jews and Greeks the gospel sounded like sheerest folly. In their pride their thinking was founded on human wisdom, and neither Jew nor Greek was willing to accept the Christ. For the most part, it was the simple, humble folk who responded to Christ.

Paul says, "Let us glory in the Lord" (1 Corinthians 1:26-31). He is our wisdom by which we walk, our righteousness for our right relationships with God and man.

Vietnam's unknown soldier identified

WASHINGTON (AP) — The remains of an American buried 14 years ago in homage to the nation's unidentified Vietnam War dead are unknown no longer: They belong to Air Force pilot Michael J. Blassie.

President Clinton, traveling in China, issued a statement confirming that the remains disinterred last month from the Tomb of the Unknowns were Blassie's.

He said a positive confirmation was made through DNA testing and that the Pentagon has notified the Blassie family "and the other families involved in resolving this difficult case."

"I am pleased that one more family has finally learned the fate of a loved one, and I remain committed to seeking a full accounting of the missing in action from that conflict," Clinton said in Shanghai.

Now, 26 years after Blassie's A-37 fighter was shot down around An Loc, Vietnam, his family will have the opportunity to bring him home, and military officials will have to decide whether to inter the remains of another serviceman.

The Blassie family, convinced that their relative was the unidentified veteran, had pressed for an exhumation. On Monday, family members said they were awaiting official word of the identification and would not comment until they received it.

"The Blassie family does not have any comment at this time, until we receive official confirmation that it is Michael," Mary Hart, Blassie's sister, told reporters in Florissant, Mo., a St. Louis suburb.

The identity was made public in a Pentagon telephone call to the family of another of the servicemen whose remains officials thought might be in the tomb. The official who called "just said they had got the results back and that the body was Blassie's," said Althea Strobridge, the mother of Capt. Rodney Strobridge, an Army helicopter pilot whom officials had believed may have been in the tomb.

South Korean boy climbs Mt. McKinley

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — A boy from South Korea became the youngest child to make it to the top of Mount McKinley when he reached the summit three days after his 12th birthday.

Kim Yong Sik reached the top of the 20,320-foot mountain, the continent's tallest peak, on Saturday. He was part of a seven-person team that included his father.

The boy has been climbing since he was 3. He reached the summits of the Matterhorn in Switzerland at age 8 and Mount Kilimanjaro in Tanzania when he was 9, said his father, Kim Tae Wung.

The younger Kim said climbing McKinley was easier than coming back down.

The climb was uneventful, unlike the attempt made two weeks ago by a team of British military climbers. Bad weather and several falls left two climbers trapped at 19,000 feet for more than three days before rescuers reached them in a high-altitude helicopter.

Kim's accomplishment eclipses a record held by Joshua Stewart, who was 12½ years old when he climbed McKinley in July 1995.

Tripp goes before grand jury

SHANGHAI, China (AP) — With callers lighting up the switchboard, President Clinton fielded questions on a popular radio talk show today, bantering with Chinese citizens about the Asian economy, World Cup soccer and how he stays in shape.

The exchange was tame by U.S. standards.

Clinton called the experience, his first talk show foray overseas, a "historic occasion" and suggested he'll do more of them to get a better idea of what ordinary citizens are thinking. He also vowed to work for more Chinese-American educational and cultural exchanges.

"The more we do these things, the more we will be able to work through our differences and build a common future," the president said. "And besides that, it will make life more interesting and more fun."

With the questions fed through an interpreter, the toughest came from host Zuo Anlong, dealing with Clinton's opposition back home and whether he had the courage to convince critics that his trip to China was the right thing to do.

Clinton said his televised exchange on human rights with Chinese President Jiang Zemin in Beijing and the broadcast of the president's remarks at Peking University should quiet his critics.

"I think the American people will see when I go home that this was a good thing that I came here," Clinton said.

In Beijing, the Chinese government was already declaring the visit a success, although Clinton doesn't leave until Friday. Foreign Ministry spokesman Tang Guoqiang said it "deepened the American understanding of China."

Clinton's talk radio appearance followed a 90-minute session with Shanghai community leaders at the city's new Internet-connected library.
