Hurricane Elena hovers off Florida coast

By RON WORD

CEDAR KEY, Fla. (AP) — Hurricane Elena stalled just off Florida's central Gulf coast Saturday, lashing the state with heavy rain and tornadoes, pushing seawater across coastal lowlands and forcing nearly 1 million people to flee.

The storm toppled a tree and killed a man in Daytona Beach, on the eastern coast, and a swarm of hurricane-spawned tornadoes struck central Florida, destroying dozens of mobile homes and injuring at least seven people.

The storm's 40-mile-wide eye, surrounded by 100 mph wind, stopped at noon 55 miles west-southwest of Cedar Key, and stayed there into the evening.

"It has us in a quandary as to whether it's come to a complete stop or whether or not it's going to continue its course toward the shore," said Jim Lynch, a meteorologist with the National Weather Service.

Gov. Bob Graham late Friday had extended evacuation orders to low-lying and coastal areas from just east of Panama City to Sarasota, a 650-700 mile stretch of coast.

On Saturday, he urged residents of mobile homes in low-lying areas of 15 inland counties to evacuate, and asked citizens to maintain their vigilance.

"It's very important that people don't take this pause in the storm to mean that the danger has past," said Graham. "The potential for damage and loss of life is still very much there."

Almost 1 million Florida residents had evacuated because of Elena, a 350-mile-wide tempest born last week off the coast of Africa, said Steve Hull, a spokesman for Graham. He said over 218,000 people were staying at shelters throughout the state.

This remote community jutting into the Gulf of Mexico was isolated by wind-whipped waves washing over its lone highway to the mainland. Most of the 750 residents had fled but a few rode out the storm in a schoolhouse, said Mickey Graham, a Levy County sheriff's deputy.

More than 500,000 people in Pinellas County, which includes St. Petersburg, were reported to be without power.

Hurricane warnings were posted from Apalachicola, in the Panhandle, to Fort Myers, in southern Florida. Gales and tornadoes howled over much of the region, and several communities received 4 to nearly 9 inches of rain since Friday morning.

The most severe weather was concentrated about 50 miles in all directions from the storm's center, said forecaster Miles Lawrence at the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables.

"The gale-force winds are already affecting portions of the Florida coast," Lawrence said. "The winds already started and they'll strengthen as the center approaches land."

At 6 p.m. EDT, the storm's center was near latitude 28.9 north and longitude 83.9 west, 55 miles west-southwest of Cedar Key, where it had been since noon.

'Night Stalker' suspect arrested

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A man identified as the prime suspect in the 16 "Night Stalker" slayings was arrested Saturday after a mob chased and beat him when he pulled a woman from her car and tried to steal the vehicle, police and witnesses said.

Ramirez

"It's me! It's me! It's me! I'm lucky the cops caught me," the man, Richard Ramirez, shouted in Spanish as he was arrested, according to witnesses who talked to television station KNBC.

Police Friday had identified Ramirez, 25, as the prime suspect in the slayings and in 21 other night-time attacks since February that had spread fear throughout Southern California.

A mob gathered around Ramirez after he tried to steal a car from a woman who was waiting outside a market as her husband bought tortillas, police said. Witnesses said Ramirez tried to pull the woman from her car and then hit her in the stomach.

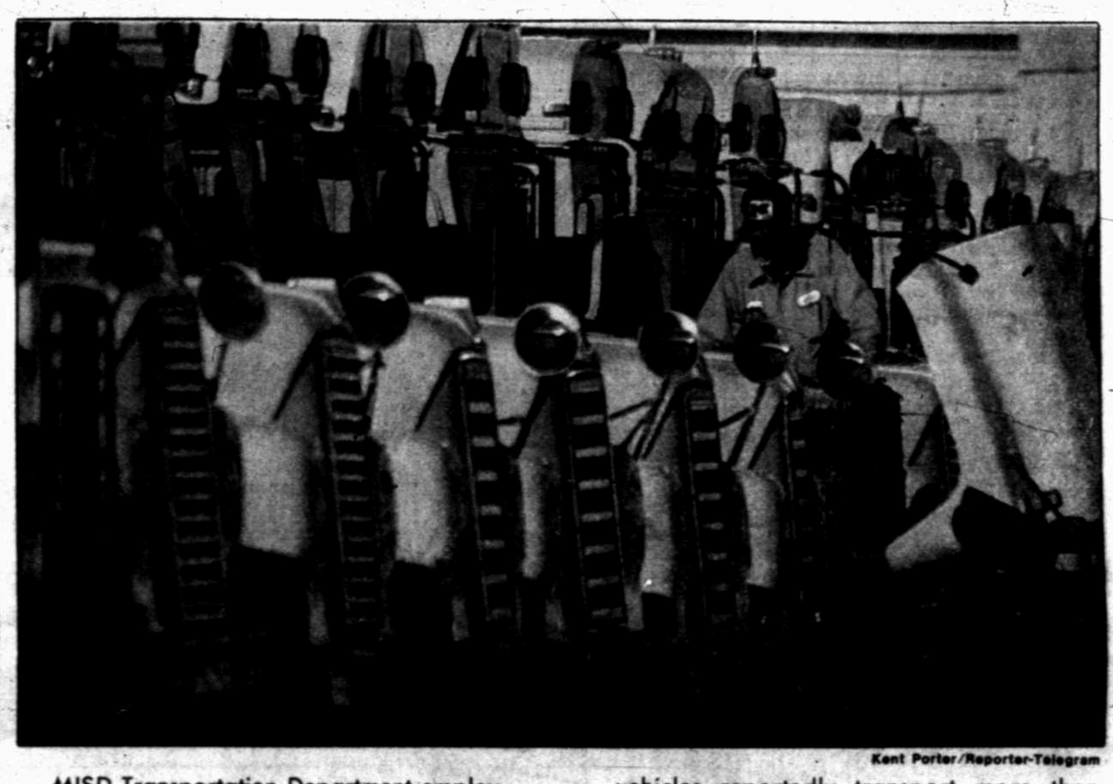

The woman, Angie De La Torre, 29, "recognized him right away. She screamed, 'It's the killer, the killer,'" said her brother, Juan Hernandez, 17, who witnessed the incident. Police had distributed a photograph of Ramirez.

"My brother-in-law took a metal stick from the gate and started chasing him," Hernandez said of Manuel De La Torre, 35. "He hit him in the head three times."

"We ran after him halfway down the street. We cornered him," said a man who joined the mob five miles east of downtown Los Angeles. "We just all gang tackled him ... and we just held him down."

Sheriff's deputies took Ramirez for questioning to the Hollenbeck Station, where a surging crowd of about 500 jeering people gathered outside, shouting "Kill him! Kill him!"

Buses readied for routes

By JULIE HILLRICHS

It's nearly back-to-school time, and those big yellow school buses soon will be taking to the street and highways.

With the increase in the number of vehicles on the highways, it is more important than ever that motorists be alert for the return of the school buses, a Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation spokesman said.

District Engineer W.A. Lancaster said, "Motorists have had a summer vacation of sorts, too, and are not accustomed to seeing the school buses pulling onto the highways or stopping to let school children on and off."

Holiday traffic death toll climbs to 22 by late Saturday

Associated Press

Two people drowned Saturday when their car ran off a Port Arthur-area road into a canal, helping push the holiday traffic death toll to 22 by Saturday night, officials said.

The Texas Department of Public Safety is predicting that 45 people will die by midnight Monday.

Last year, 41 Texans were killed in holiday crashes, and five others died later of injuries suffered in the Labor Day weekend accidents. The 78-hour holiday runs from 6 p.m. Friday through midnight Monday.

"I think we're off to a bad start," DPS spokesman David Wells said. "We have an added potential for more fatalities tonight and Sunday night, and when there's an increase of traffic homeward bound," he said.

To help motorists during the long weekend, the Texas Jaycees said they would operate more than 20 highway rest stops along interstates and other major highways.

The stops, with free refreshments, were to open at 6 p.m. Friday and remain open around the clock, shutting down at 6 p.m. Monday, the Jaycees said.

By Saturday evening, the death count from the DPS and local police had reached 22, including:

— Billie Crisp Hamm, 52, of Port Arthur, and Lauren Jaye Bushart, 2, of Willis died when their vehicle left Farm-to-Market Road 365 west of Port Arthur Saturday morning. Wells said Hamm apparently suffered a heart attack, the vehicle ran off the road into a canal, and both occupants drowned.

— Russell K. Hegwood, 24, of Dallas was killed in a one-car accident on Interstate 30 in Arlington when he struck a light pole about 6 p.m. Saturday.

— Vernis Wilson Wallace, 51, of Princeton, was killed in a collision on FM 75 in Princeton in Collin County Friday night.

— Emma Jean Richardson, 25, of Wichita Falls, was fatally injured when she was struck by a vehicle as she crossed a city intersection Friday night in Wichita Falls.

— James Paul Carter, 92, of St. Petersburg, Fla., died in a one-car accident Saturday morning about four miles west of Adrian on Interstate 40.

— Clarence Arnold Moore Jr., 26, of Pearland, died in a three-vehicle accident shortly after noon Saturday on FM 518 in Brazoria County.

— A 60-year-old Morton resident was killed in a two-vehicle accident seven miles south of Friona Saturday afternoon in Parmer County.

— Leon Clark, 41, and Ruby Reescano Young, 40, both of Cleveland, died when a train struck their van Saturday afternoon in Cleveland. Two other passengers were critically injured.

Parts of old bison skull unearthed in downtown Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — With the help of a screwdriver, paint brush and toilet paper, part of the skull of a 10,000-year-old bison was unearthed Saturday in downtown Austin.

However, paleontologist Ernest Lundelius was disappointed.

"Looks like there is only part of the skull there," the University of Texas professor said after digging for about an hour. "There's part of the brain case and a part of the horn core."

He said they would continue investigating the area.

Earlier this year, Lundelius and other experts had dug up bones, teeth and tusks from a mastodon in the excavation for a 22-story office building just a few blocks from Saturday's dig. Scientists said it was probably the second-largest discovery of mastodon bones in North America.

The piece of bison skull was discovered Tuesday by a workman with a shovel in the 23-foot deep excavation for a hotel-retail development by Southland Investment Properties.

"One of my laborers hit it and showed it to me and asked me what it was," said Tony Obera, a labor foreman at the site. "I told him: 'Hell, that's a bone.' "

The discovery area was roped off and Lundelius called.

Lundelius and John Buckley, paleontologist at Austin Community College, began the excavation by picking away rocks and sand with their fingers, a screwdriver and trowel.

They carefully they worked around the exposed bit of bone and behind it. Then they dusted off the exposed fragment with brushes and moistened it with toilet paer to keep it from getting brittle.

TV camera crews and reporters leaned over their shoulders. A number of schoolage boys and girls appeared, along with a number of other spectators.

In the background, bulldozers and drump trucks continued to roar in and out of the immense hole in the earth.

Lundelius said the bison was a contemporary of the mastodons, whose remains were found earlier nearby.

Highway priorities to be discussed

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Texas Highway Commissioner Ray C. Stoker Jr. of Odessa said Friday he will meet Sept. 12 with members of the Midland Chamber of Commerce transportation committee to discuss highway project priorities that relate specifically to Midland County.

Stoker said he attended a Highway Commission meeting in Austin Thursday during which the three-member body approved $100 million in state highway department funds for the maintenance and rehabilitation of existing farm-to-market roads.

"These funds are now available to communities, such as ours, as needed," he said, and will be in addition to the $300 million already available for use at the discretion of the highway district engineer.

Referring to the $100 million approved Thursday, Stoker said, "Those funds have not been available to West Texas and other rural districts for years." He attributed the availability of these funds now to the fact the Texas Legislature raised fees to cover the cost of maintaining and rehabilitating the state's rural road system.

"If vehicle miles were the only criteria used in determining allocation of highway funds, one can readily see that rural areas, such as West Texas, would be short-changed in the allocation of funds."

— Ray C. Stoker Jr.,
Texas Highway Commissioner

Stoker also noted he and the two other highway commissioners approved utilization of an allocation formula that will help insure less populated areas of the state, with many miles of rural roads, to get a fair share of highway funds available for allocation. Under the formula approved, he said, road miles in any given district will be a factor considered, in addition to the number of vehicle miles. "This is particularly important to areas such as West Texas," Stoker said, "because we don't have the number of vehicle miles as in larger urban areas in a given period of time.

"If vehicle miles were the only criteria used in determining allocation of highway funds," he said, "one can readily see that rural areas, such as West Texas, would be short-changed in the allocation of funds."

Stoker was appointed July 23 to a 5½-year term on the Texas Highway and Public Transportation Commission by Gov. Mark White.

Of his experience so far on the three-member body, Stoker said, "The commission has shown, in my judgment, a genuine concern for the highway system in the rural areas of Texas."

Satellite television may ease teacher crunch

By MICHAEL HOLMES
Associated Press

AUSTIN (AP) — A private satellite television network is starting two-way operations this fall in about 100 school districts in Texas and California, one way officials say may help ease teacher shortages.

Classes in computer science, advanced mathematics and foreign languages are among those being offered over the hookup to school districts and educational agencies. Advanced courses for teacher training also are available.

"The network is a way to help alleviate the teacher shortage and help students, particularly in small towns and cities where they can't find teachers to provide the courses needed to enter college these days," said Pat Tinsley of the TI-IN Network.

Ms. Tinsley said TI-IN, based at Webster, near Houston, began operations Aug. 5, offering service training for teachers.

The network is a big change from traditional, one-way, pre-recorded television classes, she said.

The network broadcasts programming that uses live teachers in the studio and an "interactive" connection that allows students in different classrooms to use cordless telephone sets to question teachers directly or engage in discussions with students in other cities.

"They're called on by name when they want to ask questions. Or the teacher can call on another student in another city and ask them what they think about the answer," Ms. Tinsley said.

Tests can be given via the satellite link, and all a school district needs to monitor the classroom is an adult volunteer, she said.

The satellite link also has been providing advanced instruction for teachers, something last year's school reform legislation required for Texas teachers who want to move up the career ladder to higher pay scales.

"If they want to move up the career ladder they have to take approved courses. But many teachers don't live in towns with colleges where they can take them," Ms. Tinsley said.

The instructional satellite system is a cooperative venture between TI-IN Network and the Texas Education Agency, which will monitor and evaluate the programming and provide studio facilities at its Region 20 Educational Service Center in San Antonio.

"It is the first system like this in the nation that's been specifically developed for public education," said TEA spokeswoman Terri Anderson.

The program is costing the state nothing, Ms. Anderson added.

"We are letting them use our facilities at the Educational Service Center in San Antonio to have their studios where all the instructors will be located," she said.

The individual school districts pay for the programming and equipment at a rate determined by daily attendance. The average first-year cost, which includes the satellite reception equipment, TV monitors and recorders, is about $15,000 per district, Ms. Tinsley said.

William Kirby, state education commissioner, said a system such as the TI-IN Network is a definite trend in education.

"This cooperative venture represents a move toward high-technology instructional delivery that is crucial to the future of public education," Kirby said.

"Through such 'distance learning' programs, educational opportunities can be equalized across the state by allowing school districts of all sizes to take advantage of high-quality instructors and programs," he said.

Wrestler Mike Von Erich in intensive care unit

DALLAS (AP) — A professional wrestler who contracted toxic shock syndrome after recent surgery is alive only because of his physical training, doctors say.

Mike Adkisson, who uses the professional name Mike Von Erich, was in the intensive care unit of Baylor University Medical Center with a 107-degree fever and had lost the function of his kidneys, hospital officials said at a news conference Friday.

"His training and the fact that he's in such good physical shape is probably the only reason he's still alive," said Adkisson's physician, Dr. William Sutker.

He said Adkisson apparently contracted the bacterial infection following an operation on a dislocated shoulder last week.

Toxic shock syndrome occurs most often in women, but the Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta says that when it occurs in men it is frequently associated with a wound.

About 40 die in train derailment

ARGENTON-SUR-CREUSE, France (AP) — A speeding overnight express train derailed on a curve Saturday and seconds later a mail train on the opposite track plowed into it, killing 43 passengers and injuring 85, police said.

Rail officials said the express, with about 300 passengers aboard, was traveling three times faster than it should have been going at the time because of trackside construction.

Many of those killed were British and Spanish tourists, the officials said. Ten of the injured were reported in critical condition.

Rescuers said some of the sleeper compartments, meant to accommodate four or six people, were compressed to a width of less than eight inches.

It was France's third major train crash in two months and its worst since 1972, when 108 people were killed near Soissons on a train that entered a tunnel whose roof had collapsed.

Police arrested the locomotive engineer of the express, which was bound from Paris to Port Bou on the Spanish border. They said the engineer, Jean-Yves Brisset, 37, would be formally charged Sunday with manslaughter.

A police spokesman, who demanded anonymity, said Brisset told investigators he neglected a temporary speed limit posted at a trackside construction site.

The express consisted of 14 sleeper cars and a locomotive. It jacknifed upon derailment, and two of the cars, where most of the fatalities occurred, were lying diagonally on the opposite track, directly in the mail train's path. The government ordered an immediate investigation of the entire safety system on the state-owned rail network, which carries nearly 800 million passengers a year.

Transport Minister Paul Quiles expressed his condolences to the victims of what he called "a disaster caused ... by an obvious human error."

AP Laserphoto

Rescuers examine train cars damaged when a passenger train derailed near Argenton Sur Creuse, France, and was hit by an approaching mail train.

"The responsibility seems quite clear," Quiles declared. "One man made a mistake. It is simply a tragedy."

Rescuers worked without letup cutting through wreckage to extricate the dead and injured.

More than half the dead remained unidentified in an improvised morgue in Argenton-sur-Creuse, a village of 7,000 inhabitants 188 miles south of Paris.

Henri Guicharnaud, French railways' regional director for central France, told reporters the express was traveling at more than 62 mph where it should have slowed to a maximum 18 mph alongside the construction site of a new signal block.

The scheduled average speed on the train's nightly 650-mile run to the southwestern tip of France is more than 75 mph.

Brisset noticed his error too late, Guicharnaud said.

"He slammed on his brakes and simultaneously switched on a flashing alarm signal in an effort to alert the driver of the oncoming mail train," Guicharnaud said. "Unhappily, by that time it was too late."

The stationmaster at Argenton-sur-Creuse spotted the express going into the curve at three times the permitted speed, but could not contact the other engineer, Guicharnaud said.

"Both trains were precisely on time and crossed exactly at the normal moment," he added.

The 15 railway and postal workers on the mail train were unhurt.

The Saturday wreck brought to 84 the number of people killed in French rail accidents in eight weeks. Nine people were killed when a train hit a truck on July 8, and 32 died on Aug. 3 in a head-on collision of two trains.

Rescuers on Saturday originally believed six bodies were trapped in the last of the crushed compartments to be opened. But when they finally pierced the tangle of steel more than 12 hours after the crash, they found the compartment empty.

The French national railway system promised full compensation for the victims.

The deputy director general of the French railways, Pierre Descoutures, said many victims were Spanish and British tourists vacationing in France or en route to Spain. Their names were withheld until their families were notified.

The two major labor unions in the French rail system issued separate statements blaming the accident on economy cuts imposed by the Socialist government of President Francois Mitterrand.

The Communist-led General Confederation of Labor said the disaster "demonstrates that the policy of financial balance at any cost is a real danger."

Shuttle crew 'jump-starts' dead satellite

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Discovery's spacewalkers "jump-started" a dead satellite Saturday and whooped with joy when the energized Syncom 3 flickered to life and snapped an antenna into place.

"Hot dog, look at that," exclaimed spacewalker Bill Fisher as the antennae whipped out from the top of the $85 million satellite.

Syncom 3 came to life after Fisher and fellow spacewalker James van Hoften wrestled the fully-fueled 7½-ton craft onto the space shuttle's robot arm and installed two boxes that replaced failed electronics on the satellite.

A second spacewalk on Sunday is needed to remove a battery pack used in the "jump start" and to release the satellite to orbit.

Saturday's space stroll lasted seven hours, eight minutes, a record for the American space program. The previous record, set on an earlier shuttle mission, was one minute shorter, said NASA spokesman Milton Reim.

Sunday's completion of the salvage job is expected to take another three hours, 55 minutes. The need for the second spacewalk will force Discovery to land before dawn Tuesday at Edwards Air Force Base in California.

The shuttle, launched last Tuesday, would have landed Monday had only one spacewalk been needed. During the mission, the astronauts have released three communications satellites — two on the day of launch and one on Thursday. They also are growing crystals in the cabin.

Van Hoften and Fisher fell behind schedule as they struggled to control the 14-foot, fully-fueled satellite before it was grasped by Discovery's robot arm.

"It feels a little more massive than what we trained on," van Hoften, nicknamed "Ox" because of his strength, admitted after holding the craft for almost half an hour.

The astronauts took turns holding the satellite until it was in the grasp of the robot arm. Television pictures beamed to Earth showed Fisher holding the Syncom 3.

Fisher, a physician who said before flight that this would be his first "bypass surgery", installed the equipment that routed power around dead electrical circuits in the spacecraft. He then hooked up a battery pack to revive a powerless command circuit, a technique similar to that used to jump start an automobile with a dead battery.

Four youths awarded medals for bravery

WASHINGTON (AP) — Gregory Delzer, a South Dakota high school senior who rescued two girls from the path of a speeding car, was named Saturday to receive the Young American Medal for Bravery for heroism or community service.

"I didn't really think I would get it because I'd heard of kids who'd done some really outstanding things," said the 17-year-old Delzer, one of four youths named to receive the medal.

The Lead, S.D., youngster was less fortunate than the girls he shoved from the auto's path. He suffered two broken legs and head injuries in the Oct. 12 incident.

"When I woke up in the hospital, I remember asking how one of the girls was because I thought she got hit," he said in a telephone interview. "Then, I thought about my legs since I like to play basketball."

The driver, who sped away from the scene of the accident, was later arrested and charged with drunken driving.

Also named to receive the medal from President Reagan in a White House ceremony were Richard Makinson, 17, of Pixley Calif.; Janelle Peery,18, of Cheyenne, Wyo., and Trevor Ferrell, 13, of Gladwyne, Pa.

The date of the ceremony has not been announced.

The medal program was established by Congress in 1950. A Justice Department committee selects recipients.

Recipients must have been no more than 18 years old at the time of their acts of bravery or community service. Nominations are made by governors and top officials of U.S. territories and the District of Columbia.

While camping with his family near Yuba City, Calif., Makinson, a diabetic, dived into a swift-running river to attempt to rescue two girls. Makinson, then 16, saved one but could not reach the second in time.

"I only wish I could have gotten there faster," he said. He said he was five to eight feet from the second girl when the current dragged her under.

Makinson said he is looking forward to his first trip to the nation's capital.

Miss Peery, the only female among the 1984 recipients, was cited for her "unflagging spirit." When she was 15, she was diagnosed as having bone cancer and her right leg was amputated.

Despite her handicap, she drives a car and skis with special stabilizers on her ski poles. She has begun teaching the technique to other amputees.

Ferrell collects and distributes blankets, clothing and food to the homeless of Philadelphia. He was 11 when he began his campaign to help the street people.

BUSES

on highways not separated by a median. The statute also requires motorists to stop if the school bus has stopped and displays a visual signal. The driver shall not proceed until the school bus resumes motion or the bus driver signals to proceed, except when the driver and the school bus are on separate roadways and where pedestrians are not permitted to cross roadways.

In an effort to increase school bus safety, the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation sponsors special schools for bus drivers and student passengers. A typical region trains upward of 215 drivers in safe bus driving operations each year. Last year, some 810 drivers and 70,000 students participated statewide.

And the training is paying off.

The transportation department of the Midland Independent School District provides service to most students who are enrolled in Midland public schools. Many students who participate in athletic programs in the secondary schools ride a school vehicle to events off the home campus. Others ride buses on field trips to theater, museum, scientific and library programs. Still, others use the school transportation service daily going to and from school.

Walter W. Washam, director of MISD transportation and custodial services, said the district transported more than 7,000 of its students to various activities in 1984-85. Its fleet of more than 125 vehicles logged more than 1.5 million miles with only a few minor accidents and one fatality.

"This is a multi-million dollar operation," Washam said. "That's why it's so important that we maintain the vehicles."

Washam commended drivers locally for their willingness to do what ever is necessary to ensure the safety of the vehicle and its passengers.

"They are so concerned with the safety of the vehicle. That's a key link to the reason why our system is as successful as it has been," he said.

According to Washam, all school bus drivers must be certified by the Texas Education Agency and a "School Bus Driver's Penalty Point System" is used in determining a driver's eligibility. Any person who as accumulated 10 or more penalty points shall not be considered for employment as a school bus driver.

The TEA is responsible for the development of a program for school bus driver training in the State, Washam said. This program was developed in cooperation with the Texas Department of Safety, Governor's Office for Traffic Safety, Education Service Centers and local school districts.

He added that instructional units of the driver training program are designed to promote competency and give drivers an overall view of the total transportation program throughout the State. The components include instructional units on driver image, defensive driving, safety and emergency, emergency equipment and procedures, first aid and loading and unloading children.

"When you consider that school buses traveled more than 3 million miles in Texas last year and there were only 11 fatalities, the record is pretty good," Lancaster said. "At the same time, the number of accidents is on the rise, primarily as the result of having more vehicles of all types on the highways.

"That is why it is so important that Texas motorists become aware that the school buses are about to return to the highways, and that they know the rules about stopping. Perhaps, with the motorists' cooperation and a little luck, we may reduce the fatality figure to zero this year," he said.

STORM

Earlier, it had moved east-northeast at 10 mph, and its eye had been expected to reach the coast somewhere between Crystal River and Cross City, on either side of Cedar Key, during the afternoon or evening, forecasters said.

Tides as high as 10 feet above normal along with up to 15 inches of rain were expected.

Roads were clogged as residents fled. "It's a madhouse," said a deputy in Pasco County, north of Tampa. Another officer, Sgt. Charles Troy, reported numerous traffic accidents and sporadic power outages.

"The indications are we've had a high evacuation response from different areas. We're getting indications it's as high as 95 percent at the beaches," said Guy Daines, Pinellas County civil defense director. The beaches stretch 30 miles along the county.

Tornadoes were reported in Leesburg in central Florida, where 32 mobile homes were destroyed, more than 22 others damaged and at least seven people injured, police Capt. Chris Giachetti said.

One tornado caused minor damage to two vehicles near the NASA space center's launch pad in Cape Canaveral, where space shuttle Atlantis is being groomed for its maiden flight.

The towns of Yankeetown and Inglis, southeast of Cedar Key, were evacuated. Chiefland High School, 28 miles northeast of Cedar Key, sheltered hundreds of residents. "We're the closest place to the coast that has a shelter," said Principal Terry Andrews.

STALKER

About 50 officers formed a human chain to protect the handcuffed Ramirez as he walked from the station to an unmarked police car for transfer to the main county jail. While at the station, Ramirez was booked for investigation of murder, said police Lt. Dan Cooke.

Ramirez was kept at the station for five hours as police awaited reinforcements to ensure his safety during the move, said Cooke. Two patrol cars and seven police motorcycles escorted the auto taking Ramirez to the jail.

Many in the crowd spoke of the fear they have lived under during the past months.

"He had all of us scared, with the doors and windows closed in such heat," said Efrain Mendoza, 44, one of the spectators gathered at the station.

The killer entered homes through unlocked doors and windows at night, bludgeoning, knifing, raping and shooting victims ranging in age from 16 to 83.

Most of the killer's attacks have been in Los Angeles County.

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

Texas political parties preparing for 'War of 1986'

AUSTIN — One thing already is clear about the 1986 congressional races: the Democrats want revenge for 1984, and the Republicans want to at least hold on to the gains they made that year.

And Texas' six GOP freshman congressmen are likely to come in some particular attention before the campaign season is over.

"I think this next election will be the key to whether there is a long-term political life for these people," State GOP Chairman George Strake, Houston, comments.

Strake adds that he thinks the election will answer that issue in favor of the Republicans.

"The Democrats are still stinging from 1984," Strake says. "They want to think it was Reagan, and nothing else."

"It's critical for our people to realize that we've got a real war on our hands, and to treat it as such."

Strake believes the new Republican congressmen are aware of that fact, and are working hard at keeping in touch with their districts, "being very good about town meetings and touching base with constituents."

Democratic State party Chairman Bob Slagle says the Democrats will be looking at challenges in attempts to take back the seats they lost last year.

That effort isn't very far along, he reports, because of the emphasis which has been put on the special election in the First Congressional District.

"We do expect to challenge in those districts that we lost," Slagle says.

"We don't intend to assume that those they won in the Reagan landslide are permanently theirs."

But Slagel also agrees with Strake that Ronald Reagan's coattails weren't the only thing that brought Republicans into office, and put Democrats out.

"There was some coattails effect," Slagle says, "but part of it was our fault."

"Some folks in Texas kind of got offended with us," Slagle says, partly from stands of the National Democratic party, and partly from behavior of Democratic candidates in Texas races — including the U.S. Senate race.

"We had our own candidates cutting each other up," Slagle comments.

"People may not believe what the Republicans say about us, but they tend to give more credence to what we say about ourselves."

"Really, it was hard for the Republicans to come up with anything to say about us that we hadn't said about each other."

And, Slagle says, there was a feeling that voters hadn't been "offered the best quality" through the Democratic selection.

The national ticket, he notes, was being perceived as "two Northern liberals," while Lloyd Doggett, the Senate nominee, "was laboring under the designation of being a liberal."

"We had some folks who got pretty mad at us...when you lose Sam Rayburn's home county for the first time in history, you know you've offended some folks."

But Slagle hopes the special congressional election indicates some Democrats who went over to the GOP in 1984 are "coming home."

One voter, he says, whom he talked with before the election, admitted to having voted Republican in 1984 for the first time ever — and threatened to do so again, Slagle says, beause he felt the Democrats "haven't learned yet."

Slagle says he feels he convinced the voter that the Democrats have learned — and that's the message that will be going to voters before the 1986 races.

Slagle sees the special election as a sign that the GOP inroads in Texas aren't as deep, or as permanent, as the Republicans believe — or profess to believe.

The GOP, he argues, spent over $2 million (about four times the spending by the Democrats) to back a hand-picked candidate supported by the best advisers the national party could provide, with backing from the White House House, and still lost.

"That sort of loss can't make you happy," Slagle argues.

Strake argues that in 1982, Gov. Mark White carried the same district by 62 percent, and that if the Democrats can't get better than 50.9 percent now for their candidates, the margin by which they won the congressional seat, "they're in big trouble."

"I'm disappointed we didn't win," Strake admits, "but the people in the district know they're capable of putting together a Republican organization. They see there's hope for the future."

And, Strake says, the GOP is continuing to work in building up its "infrastructure" in congressional districts which have been traditionally Democratic.

"We don't think there are any that are untouchable," he concludes. "We think we should have at least half districts."

Audiences respond to filmmakers drawn to Texas mystique

DALLAS (AP) — The Academy Award winner for Best Picture of 1927-1928, "Wings," was shot in Texas, and Hollywood has been going on location here ever since.

Filmmakers in ever-increasing numbers are drawn by a rich mystique, lower production costs and backdrops ranging from slick cityscapes to quaint country towns, from stark desert to steamy coast.

For the most part, moviemakers packed up their gear and headed home to Tinseltown once location shooting was over. But in the past few years, Texas has begun evolving into more than just a pretty face in the movie business.

A home-grown film industry is putting down slender roots on what has been grandly touted as the Third Coast. Scores of producers, writers, directors, performers and technicians now call Texas home.

"Illinois, Florida and Texas all do roughly the same amount of production work, but a substantial amount of ours is done by producers who are making their base in Texas," says Joel Smith, executive director of the Texas Film Commission. "Really, Texas is the only place where that is happening."

While the indigenous film industry is still quite modest, it boasts such Oscar-winners as producer Martin Jurow ("Terms of Endearment," "Pink Panther," "Breakfast at Tiffany's"), and writer Horton Foote ("Tender Mercies," "To Kill a Mockingbird").

Texas also is home to screenwriter William Wittliff ("Raggedy Man," "Country," "Black Stallion" and "Barbarosa"), director Ken Harrison ("Valentine's Day," "1918"), producer Ross Milloy ("1918," "Alamo Bay") and many others.

The roster includes such independent production companies as Fort Worth Productions, H.I.T. Films in Houston and Milloy's Guadalupe Productions in Austin.

"When I think about the Texas business, I think of individuals. I don't think of institutions," says Warren Skaaren, who helped found the film commission and now is busy on four screenplays for major studios. "I think we're just at the stage before the industry becomes consolidated around the gains made by individuals."

Unorthodox financing and distribution arrangements have been critical to many independent Texas productions.

"Any time you get out of the mainstream, you've got to be more innovative," say Joe Camp of Dallas, who produced the hit film "Benji."

Milloy negotiated videocassette rights and public broadcast rights for "1918" and "Valentines' Day." The money for Jurow's latest film, "Poppa Was a Preacher," was raised by the wife of a Dallas minister.

After "Benji" was turned down by every major distributor who saw it, Camp learned the distribution business from the ground up and handled the film himself. It grossed $31 million in 1975 alone.

"As long as production in Texas is tied to Hollywood distribution, the Texas film industry is not going to be really independent," Camp says now.

The emergence of a fledgling native Texas film industry has made it possible for many people to live and work in the state where they have deep ties, instead of Los Angeles or New York.

"I like it here," says Milloy, who grew up in Corpus Christi.

Las Colinas takes ten

By CANDICE HUGHES
Associated Press

DALLAS (AP) — As much as anything, the sound stages at Las Colinas are a symbol of the Texas film business.

The studio, part of mega-developer Trammell S. Crow's lavish planned community just outside Dallas, opened with a bang in 1982 when the hit film "Silkwood" was shot there.

It turned out to be a hard act to follow. Since "Silkwood," only a handful of feature films have been made at the Dallas Communications Complex.

But Joe Pope, president of the complex, rejects the notion that the studio has been a disappointment, despite the fact that it has yet to turn a profit.

"It basically was developed to be part of the local industry, not for Hollywood," Pope says. "It's symbolic to what the industry in Texas is going to be."

The Studio at Las Colinas, which has three sound stages, stays fairly busy with commercials, industrial films, some music video work and as a rehearsal site for rock stars preparing for tours.

"If we could keep the stages filled with commercials and industrial production, I'd probably prefer that," Pope says. "It's easier."

Pope says he mainly tries to attract the high-profile film work to "keep the Dallas image up" and keep busy the complex tenants, who range from caterers and talent agencies to recording studios and film labs.

"Clearly Las Colinas has become a highly visible symbol of the Texas film industry, probably more than it is due," says Joel Smith, head of the Texas Film Commission.

Smith also points out that even though Las Colinas has failed to attract many feature films, the movie business is flourishing on the so-called Third Coast. In 1983 and 1984, 60 features were shot on location in Texas, including three of the five Academy Award nominees for Best Picture in 1984.

Meanwhile, the Studio at Las Colinas lost about $1 million last year and it probably will continue to lose money over the next five years or so, Pope says.

"A development like this, by its nature, would incur some loss in a five-to seven-year term," he says.

Texas A&M frontrunner in veterinary medicine advances

A student at Texas A&M College of Veterinary Medicine checks on a palomino colt being treated for a dislocation of the knee joint in the right front leg.

AP Laserphoto

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — Texas A&M University, a school that prides itself in training warriors and engineers, also is part of an explosion in animal medicine that makes the one-stop family veterinarian seem almost quaint.

A movement toward specialization in veterinary medicine that would surprise even most pet owners has been taking place over the past 20 years. The friendly neighborhood vet, from all accounts, is not an endangered species, but veterinary medicine never will be the same.

Veterinary specialization "is here to stay and will continue to grow in all dimensions," said Dr. E. Dean Gage, associate dean at the A&M College of Veterinary Medicine.

National boards certify veterinary specialists in 14 categories, including cardiology, anesthesiology, radiology, dermatology, internal medicine and neurosurgery.

"There is simply too much to know, and the complexity of things about us is beyond the grasp or capability of any one person," said Gage, who practiced neurosurgery before becoming an administrator.

Gage said he knows of a Houston vet who performs only animal dentistry and that some people at A&M have expressed interest in animal acupuncture, even though there is no board specialty in the field and the university does not teach it.

The commitment to animal specialties rivals that of the human medical profession, with doctors of veterinary medicine spending a minimum of 12 years from the freshman year in college to reach the rank of certified specialist. And although medical doctors make more money, Gage said a veterinary specialist can expect to start at $45,000 to $55,000 and move up to an income of $65,000 to $80,000-plus a year.

Perhaps 5 percent to 10 percent of those who become doctors of veterinary medicine pursue advanced specialties, Gage said.

A&M began teaching veterinary science in 1876, and in 1916 established the School of Veterinary Medicine. It became the College of Veterinary Medicine in 1963, and is the only one in Texas.

The college has seven departments, and the total enrollment of 552 students is the largest of any veterinary institution in the United States.

Veterinary applicants take the same aptitude test as that given to students trying to get into human medical schools, and each year 138 students are selected from some 300 qualified applicants.

Gage said A&M undergraduates are not given preference, but for the past 20 years, all freshmen vet students have been Texas residents. This year's freshman class includes 67 males and 71 females, and history indicates that 98 percent of them will graduate.

Among the 200 A&M veterinary faculty members is one professor who teaches a class in the importance of animals to human mental health and also is available to console people who are distraught over the loss of a pet, Gage said.

The veterinary college centers on the Veterinary Teaching Hospital.

"One factor that has driven specialization for us — and it is also an enormous difference from human medicine, which has one species — is that we have all the species, and there's too much to know about the differences between the dog, the cat, the horse, the cow," Gage said.

STATE in brief

San Antonio regulates lyrics, concertgoers

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — City Council's efforts to regulate behavior and lyrics at rock concerts here smacks of the "crack-brained" furor over the alleged evils of comic books that swept the nation in the 1950s, a Texas Civil Liberties Union official says.

"And we all laugh about that now," Texas Civil Liberties Union official Gara Lamarche said. "Cracking down on rock lyrics seems to be the latest fad of the book-banning crowd. I think the whole thing is a little crackbrained."

But council can put an age limit on entry into rock concerts in private facilities, not just the Arena or the Municipal Auditorium, City Attorney Lowell Denton confirmed Friday.

In his special memo, Denton talked about regulating rock concerts in city-owned facilities, but he acknowledged later that the age restriction could be extended to private clubs or concert halls also.

Twins boom in Austin

AUSTIN (AP) — Doctors at Seton Medical Center did double duty this week. In less than 36 hours, five sets of twins were born in the hospital's maternity unit.

"It's not uncommon for us to have a lot of twins at one time in the nursery and neonatal unit, but it is uncommon to have that many twins born in 36 hours," said Linda McFarland, hospital spokeswoman.

Seven girls and three boys were born during the period from Tuesday morning through Wednesday afternoon.

The twin binge began about 4:30 a.m. Tuesday, when James and Janie Street became the parents of two boys.

About 7 p.m. Tuesday, Cynthia Bonilla gave birth to twin daughters. Twin girls were born to Robin Ferris about 2 a.m. Wednesday, and a son and daughter were born to Sherri Henderson about 10 a.m. Wednesday. Dennis and Marilyn Palmquist became the parents of two daughters about 4:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Appointments made

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White has appointed a district attorney for the 9th Judicial District in Southeast Texas and a new regent for the Texas State Technical Institute.

Peter Carter Speers III, 35, of Spring, currently assistant district attorney for Montgomery County, was named to the post that covers Montgomery, Polk, San Jacinto and Waller counties. He will serve until the next general election.

E.A. Aguilar Jr., 60, of El Paso, was named technical institute regent. Aguilar, a dentist, is a member of the El Paso Community College board of trustees and the development board of the University of Texas at El Paso. His term expires in 1991.

Nursing home sued

CONROE (AP) — The wife of a patient who died at the Autumn Hills Convalescent Center sued the center alleging her husband's death was caused by employee's negligence.

Rachel P. Ross filed the civil suit in state district court Thursday. The suit against the Conroe center claims that nursing home employees left Mrs. Ross' husband, Rollin, unattended in a strapped wheelchair on Sept. 23, 1984.

"They just failed to properly take care of the patient," said Buddy Hopkins, Mrs. Ross' attorney.

Ross manipulated his wheelchair past two nurses' stations, down two long hallways and out the back exit, where he tumbled down a flight of steps, the suit said.

Prosecutor named

BEAUMONT (AP) — A special prosecutor has been named in the case investigating a state district judge accused of tampering with records.

Criminal District Judge Larry Gist named Dane Whitworth to handle the case involving State District Judge James Farris on Friday. District Attorney James McGrath was removed as prosecutor Thursday at the request of a grand jury.

Farris is accused by Colorado lawyer Martin Blitstein of withholding a court document from him. Farris, however, denies the allegation.

The grand jury asked that McGrath be removed as prosecutor because they considered him to be a material witness in the case.

Increased state park fees effective today

AUSTIN (AP) — Increased fees for use of state parks have been approved by the Texas Parks and Wildlife Commission as a means of breaking even on operation of the park system.

The new fees, previously approved by the Legislature, are effective Sunday.

At its monthly meeting on Friday, the commission also set migratory game bird regulations for 1985-86 that call for a shorter duck hunting season because of fewer birds.

The commission unanimously approved an operating budget of $7.8 million for 1986, which was 7.7 percent more than 1985.

Executive Director Charles Travis of the Parks and Wildlife Department, said the department would end up with a revenue shortage of $897,000 in 1986 for operation of state parks without the fee increases. He said the shortage in 1987 would grow to $2.1 million.

However, Travis said, with increased fees for usage of parks, the department would have a balance of $2 million in 1986 and about $1 million in 1987.

The new schedule approved by the commissioners, effective Sept. 1, would not change the daily $2 per car entrance fee at state parks.

However, the annual entrance fee, good throughout the year, would increase from $15 to $25.

Rent of a "primitive" camping site, with only water available, would increase from $4 to $6 a night. Sites with electricity and sewer connections would increase more. Rent of cabins would go from $18 to $25 a night.

The commission approved a shorter duck hunting season after Bill Brownlee, migratory bird program director, said the number of birds had decreased as a result of nesting habitat loss and dry weather conditions.

Brownlee said federal surveys show the total number of breeding ducks is at the lowest point in the 31 years that surveys have been conducted.

In the eastern part of the state, the duck season was reduced from 60 days to 50 and from 83 to 65 days in the western part.

Bag limits under the 100-point system were reduced to five birds a day, compared with a maximum of about 10 last year.

The season for duck and coot in the eastern part of the state would be Nov. 2-5, Nov. 23-Dec. 8 and Dec. 14-Jan. 12.

In the western part of the state, the season is Nov. 9-Jan. 12.

The season for light geese in the east portion is Nov. 2-Jan. 26, or 86 days, the same as last year.

For dark geese, the season is Nov. 2-Dec. 8 and Dec. 16-Jan. 19, the same 72 days as last year.

In the western portion of the state, the season for geese is Nov. 29-Jan. 19, the same 83 days as last year.

The bag limit for geese is five, the same as last year.

The bag limit for quail was set at 12 with 36 in possession, the same as last year.

Florida citrus ban vital to keeping Texas fruit safe

AUSTIN (AP) — State officials want the U.S. Agriculture Department to continue banning shipments of fresh Florida citrus fruit to other citrus-producing states, saying the canker-infected fruit could wipe out the Texas industry.

"The canker control program has cost Florida growers untold millions in lost trees and lost sales....Texas has a responsibility to its citrus growers to ensure that we stay canker-free," Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower said..

Roger Mulder, TDA spokesman, said Friday the canker is a fungus which attacks citrus trees and fruit.

It was discovered in Florida over a year ago, and the USDA imposed a quarantine that prohibits shipping fresh citrus from Florida to other citrus-producing states. The ban hasn't affected shipments of frozen produce, Mulder said.

In a letter to U.S. Agricutlure Secretary John Block, Hightower said lifting the USDA quarantine is "demonstrably premature."

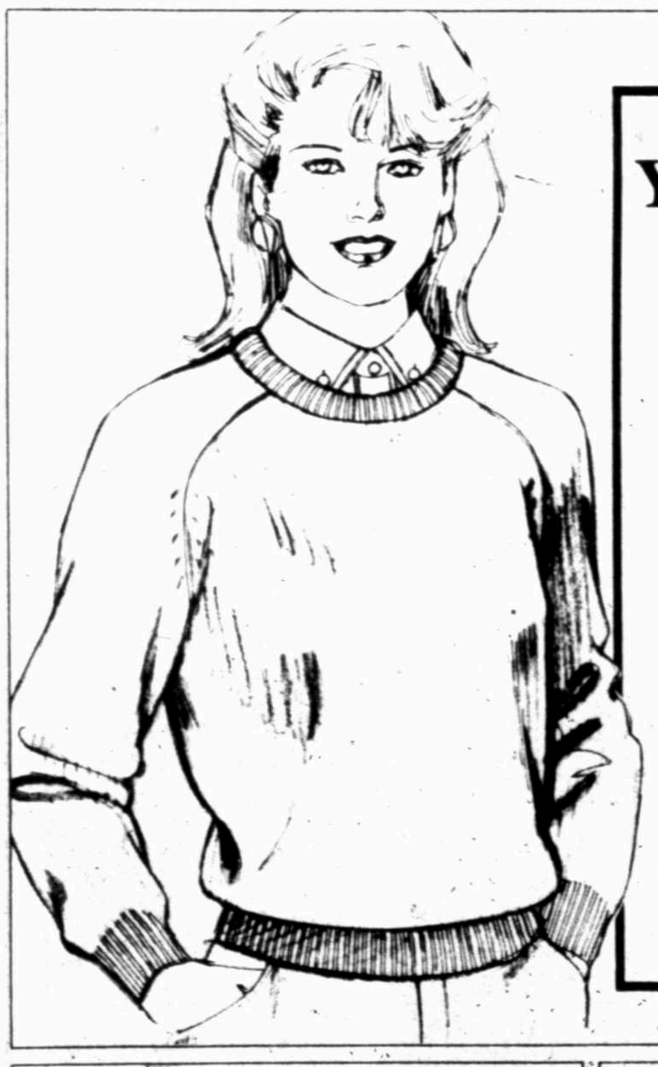

Block on June 25 proposed lifting the ban, but Hightower said a new canker outbreak was discovered at a nursery near Orlando, Fla., on Aug. 15.

"The only known treatment for canker is burning the infested trees. In Texas, the canker would result in destroying every citrus tree in the state since the Rio Grande Valley is such a compact growing area," Hightower said.

Mulder said the USDA has offered two proposals, neither of which pleases state officials.

One plan would allow Florida citrus to be shipped to all parts of Texas, "something we obviously don't want," Mulder said. The second proposal would allow shipment to part of the state, but not the Rio Grande Valley.

Politicians told to stay away from Farm Aid

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A benefit concert to help struggling American farmers will fall flat if politicians are allowed to decide how to spend the expected $50 million in donations, a farm group says.

About two dozen farmers from six states gathered Friday on Capitol Hill after a half-mile motorcade from Music Row, the heart of the city's music district.

The farmers from Tennessee, Texas, Missouri, Arkansas, Illinois and Florida said the crosstown traipse was designed to get entertainers to fight any attempts to let a panel of state agricultural directors help determine where the Farm Aid money goes.

"Don't give the money to the politicians. Politicians helped get us in this shape in the first place," said Ken Crego, a spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement, which represents agriculture interests nationwide.

The Beach Boys, Waylon Jennings and B.B. King are among the three dozen acts slated for the Sept. 22 show at the University of Illinois at Champaign to call attention to the debt-plagued farm community.

A police motorcade escorted the eight cars and a tractor from the parking lot of the Barbara Mandrell Country exhibit on Music Row to the steps of Legislative Plaza where the group held a news conference.

Spokesmen took turns at a small microphone to ask that farmers have a voice in how the concert earnings are spent.

"If they (entertainers) need to know how to help a farmer, they should come to a farmer," Crego told the gathering. "Go to a guy that's got dirt under his fingernails. He's been operating for the last 15 years on a deficit. He can talk economy with you like a Dean Witter accountant."

John Gott, a grain farmer from Pemiscot, Mo., said he is trying to keep his family farm going even though he continues to operate at a deficit.

"I'm 54 years old. I might not be able to cross my t's and dot my i's or speak good English, but I know farming. I can't go out and prepare myself now for some high-tech job," he said.

"We have farmed on hope. We plant the fields every year knowing our expenses are going to be more than our profits. But we hope somewhere, someone would do something to raise the price," Gott said.

Barbara Fairchild was the only entertainer to show up at the protest, but the country music singer is not scheduled to appear at the concert.

Miss Fairchild, whose best-known hit, "The Teddy Bear Song" reached No. 1 on the charts in 1973, said her roots on a family farm in Knoebel, Ark., help her empathize with the plight of the farmer.

"Without (the farmers), we wouldn't live the good life that we live. I would like to encourage the entertainment industry to see that the money goes where it's needed," she said.

The bevy of politicians who parade organizers said were expected to attend the news conference failed to show.

So did the large number of farmers and their tractors expected to rally around the cause.

"We don't have that many people here. But that's because they're out in the unemployment lines. These people will be too, soon," Crego said.

Carlos Welty of Culin, Mo., who said he was the national spokesman for the agricultural movement, said the group doesn't contribute money to politicians or political action groups because "we don't want to pay the politicians twice."

Reagan says he'll fight 'destructionism' of bills in Congress

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, equating protectionism with "destructionism," pledged today to fight any trade, tax or farm legislation that "does not meet the test of advancing America's prosperity."

In his weekly radio address, delivered from his ranch in the Santa Ynez mountains north of here, Reagan said the United States economy has created about 7.5 million jobs since 1980, despite mounting trade deficits.

"Let's challenge ourselves to create 10 million more in the next four," he said.

Reagan defended his decision this week rejecting quotas or higher tariffs on imported shoes, saying such protectionist measures entail "huge hidden costs."

"Instead of protectionism, we should call it destructionism," Reagan said.

Noting that "Congress is awash in bills calling for trade sanctions and retaliation," the president said: "If Congress crafts a depression-making bill, I'll fight it, whether it is tax, trade or farm legislation. Any tax hike or spending bill or protectionist legislation that does not meet the test of advancing America's prosperity must and will be opposed."

Reagan repeated, however, that his administration will employ "every legal recourse available to give American manufacturers a fair shake at home and open markets abroad."

Democratic Rep. Morris Udall of Arizona, delivering his party's response to the president's remarks, said Reagan was to blame for the mounting trade deficit, which he called "a loaded gun" threatening American jobs.

He said steps must be taken to reverse the trade imbalance "and if the president will not take action, Congress certainly will."

"If moderate and responsible steps are not taken soon, the trade deficit will claim still more victims, and next year, even more workers will be 'celebrating' Labor Day in the unemployment lines," Udall said.

Meanwhile, a U.S. diplomat is expected to be named within a few days to head the new government office that will provide logistical assistance to rebels who Reagan says are fighting the leftist government of Nicaragua because "there was no other choice."

The president issued an executive order Friday creating the Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office within the State Department to administer aid that Congress decreed should no longer be provided by the Central Intelligence Agency.

In another action on the eve of the final weekend of a three-week vacation, Reagan stepped into a threatened nationwide freight railroad strike, invoking a cooling-off law that delays any walkout for at least two months.

The threat of a strike arose Aug. 21 when the United Transportation Union rejected a Federal Mediation Service offer of arbitration. The White House, in a statement accompanying Reagan's order Friday, said, "The situation appears to the president to be extremely critical."

Reagan's order created a board to study the union-management dispute for 30 days, after which the parties will have another 30 days to study it and the union is barred from taking action until the deadline has passed.

Reagan said the new office dealing with Nicaragua will be headed by a government official whom he will designate. An administration source, speaking on condition he not be identified, said a State Department Foreign Service officer is expected to be named, probably next week.

Even though Congress refused to continue his original program of covert CIA backing for the Contra rebels, Reagan said the $27 million provided by the lawmakers "recognizes the serious nature of the conflict in Nicaragua and the desperate conditions which have forced people to choose armed opposition."

He said Nicaragua's Sandinista government had become so oppressive that "by 1982, significant numbers of Nicaraguans were compelled to pursue the last resort for civil resistance of bearing arms against the government because there was no other choice."

Reagan said that although the new office would be housed in the State Deparment and receive policy guidance from Secretary of State George P. Shultz, other agencies of the government woild provide advice, information and personnel.

But he ordered that no pesonnel of the CIA or Defense Department be assigned to it, in accordance with the congressional decision that limited aid to non-lethal supplies.

Reagan will return to Washington on Monday after a speech in Independence, Mo. The current holiday that will have brought to 209 days the total time he has spent at his 668-acre ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains since he became president.

He was last here in February. Reagan canceled a 10-day visit in July because of the seizure of American hostages in Lebanon.

Congress faces tricky balancing act this session

WASHINGTON (AP) — After a month-long recess, members of Congress will be trickling back to town this week for what promises to be an acrimonious autumn of struggle with politically painful issues.

The House convenes Wednesday to conduct routine business while the Senate is waiting until Sept. 9 to resume work.

Legislators are returning with their ears ringing from public demands for reductions in federal red ink, curbs on imports and pleas from farmers for relief from the worst agriculture slump since the Great Depression.

Meanwhile, President Reagan is set to kick off a national publicity campaign Monday to push his proposed overhaul of the tax code.

Added to all that is an expected veto confrontation between Congress and the White House over legislation to impose economic sanctions against South Africa's ruling white minority government, action legislators favor and the president opposes.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan., said he does not expect colleagues to return to work in a very good humor.

"It's always a little testy when you come back from a recess," Dole said "Members have been home, or they've been somewhere, and they've heard a lot of things and they've taken a lot of heat...a lot of questions were asked.

"So I would guess people would come back in sort of a feisty mood," he added.

As soon as they return, senators will be tackling a compromise measure imposing economic sanctions against the South African government. The House passed the measure 380-48 on Aug. 1.

The Senate also is expected to approve the measure by a wide margin, sending to the White House, where a veto is possible.

Legislators see sanctions as the best way to prod the Pretoria government to change its system of racial segregation, but Reagan is sticking by his strategy of seeking change through dialogue and persuasion.

Nonetheless, White House officials concede a presidential veto would be virtually certain to be overriden.

Despite the strong congressional sentiment for sanctions, various legislators said they heard little back home about the issue.

Rep. Mark D. Siljander, R-Mich., said he heard, "Nothing. I must say, and I don't mean to be obnoxious, but the only people who ask me about South Africa are the press."

Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., said he found "there is more feeling that we ought to just stay out of it...than I thought."

However, there was no doubt about the message legislators received about the federal budget deficit and the seeming inability to tame it.

"I think Americans consider the federal deficit as toxic as any of the chemical waste sites and they want something done about it and they want something done now," said Rep. Ron Wyden, D-Ore.

Before recessing on Aug. 1, Congress approved a compromise budget blueprint that fell short of hopes for a massive assault on future deficits.

The blueprint calls for Congress to come up with actions to cut the deficit by $55 billion next year, but congressional economists place the value of the recommended savings closer to $40 billion.

Deficit fever — along with continued veto threats from Reagan — is expected to spark fights over the 13 regular annual money bills that provide money for the government's operation.

The new fiscal year begins Oct. 1, but none of the bills has received final congressional approval yet.

While Reagan has pressured Congress on deficit reduction, his top economic priority has been the overhaul of the tax code, a focus that legislators have said is unjustified based on the reactions of constituents.

"You want to know what they're interested in," said Rep. Bob Traxler, D-Mich. "Not one person is talking about taxes. Not one. What they want to know, No. 1., is what in the hell are those crazies in Washington doing about the deficit."

Rep. Bill Emerson, R-Mo., said, "Are people jumping up and down and saying let's have tax reform tomorrow? No."

The legislators also say that trade has been just as hot a topic with constituents.

Besides that, Congress must reauthorize a variety of federal farm programs that expire at the end of September.

Congress has been on a collision course with Reagan over farm policy.

Time haunts latest artificial heart patient

By LAWRENCE K. ALTMAN, M.D.
New York Times-
Washington Post News Service

TUCSON, Ariz. — As an artificial heart pumped blood through Michael Drummond Saturday, his surgeon, Dr. Jack G. Copeland, was facing a narrow window of time to replace the device with a human heart.

Copeland has said he would perform the transplant operation, if an organ becomes available, no sooner than Monday, because his patient needs a chance to recover from two injuries. One is the trauma of the implant operation Thursday; the other is the damage that has resulted from six months of heart failure.

But Copeland does not want to wait any longer than four weeks. After that, the removal of the normal scar tissue that forms around the artificial heart is more likely to cause bleeding and other complications in the transplant surgery and thus increase Drummond's risk of death.

In addition to these limits, Copeland faces the possibility of complications that could preclude a transplant.

Dr. William C. DeVries, who has implanted artificial hearts in four people, has said that for each of his patients there was a period of only a few days when they could have undergone a transplant.

DeVries said that once complications such as kidney failure and strokes developed in these patients, heart transplants were inadvisable.

Drummond, 25 years old, a former assistant manager of a supermarket, has suffered from six months of increasingly severe heart failure that has wounded his other organs, disrupted his body's chemistry and restricted his activity, often to just rest. Even eating became a chore.

Now the Jarvik-7 mechanical heart pumps oxygen-rich blood and nourishment through his body as effectively as his own heart did before it was destroyed by a viral infection. Drummond's fever disappeared Saturday after the medical team increased the amount of blood pumped through his body.

Copeland said, nevertheless, that he intended to remove the Jarvik-7 heart because he believed Drummond's best chance for long-term survival was with a natural heart.

"The longer the heart is in place, the more difficult things become in terms of probability that something bad is going to happen," Copeland said.

He said, however, that he might eventually seek approval from the Food and Drug Administration to use the artificial heart on a permanent basis. Copeland said he had told Drummond that the artificial heart would be made permanent if he suffered a serious complication.

Michael Drummond's father, Clarence Drummond, said at a news conference Saturday that his son was "scared but doing well."

His mother, Joan Drummond, said she had known "very little about the artificial heart" and was "dead set against them using it" but relented when there was no alternative but death.

"I wanted a live son," she said. She said her son told her, "I want to live, I want you to do it."

Clarence Drummond said a main reason for the family's reluctance to use the artificial heart was that it meant Michael would have to go through two operations.

"He would sooner have had a heart, a human heart," Clarence Drummond said.

NATION IN BRIEF

Does media attention help missing kids?

LOS ANGELES (CNS) — They smile at you from milk cartons, grocery bags, buses and television screens, the missing children who have unwittingly become another media phenomenon of the 1980s.

But as new outlets for the notices seem to open up each week, some experts wonder if the interests of the thousands of missing children are best served by frequent exposure.

"There is always a risk that people will become desensitized to any issue, particularly when you're dealing with advertisements," said Mary Kay Oliveri, director of Children's Mental Health Programs for the Coastal Region of the Los Angeles County Department of Mental Health.

"On the other hand," Oliveri added, "people may notice the child. But the real impact of the posters is a hard one to measure."

Swimmer, 50, triumphs

LOS ANGELES (AP) — At 50, Dale Petranech is the oldest person to swim the 20 miles to the mainland from Santa Catalina Island.

Petranech, of Camden, N.J., a disaster specialist with the Red Cross, completed the journey in 14 hours and 28 minutes despite constant fatigue and periods of disorientation.

"We ran into some fog and got disoriented," he said after he finished the swim Friday. "We didn't know where we were for a while there."

Asked if he ever contemplated quitting, he said, 'Yes. Constantly."

Cops don rubber gloves

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Police officers' use of rubber gloves as a precaution against AIDS while checking for underage drinkers at a gay bar has brought protests from homosexuals.

"I was outraged. I thought it was totally ridiculous....It's totally unnecessary," one young man said of the ID checks early Friday at The Downtowner Bar.

Police Chief Richard L. Dotson said officers were justified in wearing the gloves as a precaution against acquired immune deficiency syndrome. "This is a common practice around the country."

Three priests die in fire

STARLIGHT, Ind. (AP) — Three Roman Catholic priests died Saturday when a fire roared through a rectory and chased back firefighters who attempted to rescue the victims.

Killed in the rectory of St. John the Baptist Church were the pastor, the Rev. Richard Smith, 57, and two visiting priests from Beech Grove near Indianapolis, the Rev. William Fisher, 60, of St. Francis Hospital Center and the Rev. Kenneth Smith, 56, of St. Paul's Hermitage. Authorities said the Smiths were unrelated.

The men all died of smoke inhalation and burns, said Clark County Coroner Edwin M. Coots Jr.

Air bags promoted

WASHINGTON (NYT) — The California Assembly is challenging the Federal Department of Transportation's proposal to drop its requirement of automatic seat belts or air bags in automobiles if the states adopt laws requiring the use of seat belts.

The Democratic-controlled California Assembly favors having both seat belt laws and such passive restraints as air bags, which would automatically cushion the car's riders against a crash.

The lawmakers are delaying final action on a pending seat belt law until the Department of Transportation assures them that the law would not contribute to rescinding of the federal restraint requirement. The department has refused to give that assurance, and the legislature may adjourn next month without taking action on the bill, a legislative aide said Friday.

Computers take tests

ITHACA, N.Y. (AP) — Cornell University is using computers to cut the research time needed to decipher 2,000-year-old Greek texts.

More than 20,000 Greek texts and documents are being recorded on computers and cross-referenced in about two dozen categories. Classicists will eventually be able to search out a topic, such as Greek theater, and the computers will produce already translated texts on the topic that may shed light on a baffling phrase or word.

Poland shipped 10,000 AK-47 rifles to Nicaraguan contras, U.S. sources say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Nicaraguan resistance forces recently received a shipment of 10,000 Polish-made AK-47 rifles as part of a weapons deal worth an estimated $6 million, U.S. officials say.

According to one official, the shipment was sent from the Bulgarian port of Burgas and reached the resistance forces via a Latin American country hostile to the leftist Sandinista government. The country was not identified.

The official said the transaction was authorized by Polish authorities in a desperate bid to obtain sorely-needed foreign exchange. But other officials expressed skepticism that the Warsaw government would ever consent to such a deal.

As a member of the Warsaw Pact, Poland has given enthusiastic support to the Sandinista government and welcomed Nicaraguan President Daniel Ortega as a guest of honor at ceremonies last May commemorating the 40th anniversary of the end of World War II.

According to one official, Poland would never consider selling weapons to the contras because the Soviet Union, Poland's chief patron, would not permit it.

All of the U.S. officials who commented on the story spoke on condition of anonymity. The State Department and the Central Intelligence Agency declined comment.

A Polish Embassy spokesman, Andrzej Dobrzynski, dismissed as "rubbish" any suggestion of Polish government involvement in aiding the contras.

"It is so preposterous, it is undignified even to deny it," he said.

A U.S. official suggested that the weaponry might have been intended for a country friendly to Poland but was diverted by intermediaries to the Nicaraguan rebels.

Such diversions are not uncommon in international weapons trades. The United States itself was victimized two years ago when 87 Hughes helicopters were illegally sent to communist North Korea by a West German firm.

The most senior official contacted by the Associated Press said the weaponry reached the contras six weeks ago with the foreknowledge of Polish authorities.

"They are doing what is necessary to get cold cash," the official said, noting that Poland has a severe foreign exchange shortage. He said Poland probably received between $150 and $200 for each rifle. All were in mint condition, he said.

Poland has been attempting to reach agreement with its western creditors on rescheduling its foreign debt, which stood at $26.8 billion at the end of 1984 and reportedly is growing at an annual rate of $1.3 billion.

A Polish economic analyst, Jacek Mojkowski, wrote in a Warsaw newspaper in July that Poland's exports to the West totaled $5.8 billion last year, about half of what was needed to meet its debt payments.

Labor Day offers little cheer

By PETE YOST
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Labor Day 1985 finds American union leaders struggling to halt the draining away of their rank and file and surrendering on many fronts to employers' demands for concessions.

Pay raises for union workers have lagged behind non-union wage increases for nearly two years. And the switch recently has been occurring across the board, in the service sector of the economy as well as in economically depressed, heavily unionized manufacturing industries hard hit by foreign imports.

"Unions simply don't have the leverage," says Mark A. de Bernardo, manager of labor law at the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. "The card they hold is no longer trump."

"Organized labor is down to 17 or 18 percent of the work force; they've got far fewer guns there than in the past," says Richard Freeman, an economics professor at Harvard University. "Some of the younger union leaders would like to punch back, but it's clear the opportunity isn't there. They don't have the power to impose their will on the other side."

Labor's great hope of a year ago, electing a Democratic president, was dashed in a 49-state landslide for Ronald Reagan. Major strikes, labor's ultimate weapon, totalled just 18 in the first six months of this year, reflecting a downward trend that began in 1979, when there were 235 for the year.

DESPITE SOME shattering defeats, labor leaders say the worst is over and that the death knell for unions has been sounded prematurely.

"Our obituary has been written at least once for every one of our 104 years of history, and at least that many causes of death have been diagnosed — gleefully or sorrowfully, depending on the diagnostician," Lane Kirkland, president of the 13.7 million-member AFL-CIO, said in a Labor Day statement.

The enormity of labor's decline is reflected in its lowered expectations, scaled down in some cases to near-miniscule proportions compared to earlier days.

Pay increases of just about any size are touted as victories.

One long-time toiler at AFL-CIO headquarters pointed with satisfaction to this year's contract settlements without strikes at General Electric Co. and Westinghouse Electric Corp. The pacts included an agency shop clause, meaning all workers under union jurisdiction must pay dues. But the agreements also instituted a lower pay scale for unskilled new hires, who reach pay equity with the veterans after six months to a year on the job. There were improvements in the annual cost-of-living formula, but pay raises average 3 percent a year.

William Bywater, president of the International Union of Electronic Workers, said the settlements would be considered good contracts in most any year. But Robert A. Gough, senior economist at Data Resources Inc., an economic forecasting firm, says they reflect recognition by unions that labor's strength is waning.

"THESE TYPES of settlements, while they could be looked at as good, really don't hold a candle to those milestone contracts that unions negotiated over the past 10 or 15 years," said Gough.

A watershed event in the 30-year history of the AFL-CIO was its issuance six months ago of an unprecedented self-critical analysis concluding that organized labor is riddled with problems because it has failed to adapt to the needs of a changing work force.

Some see this paper as an outline of labor's strategy for recouping. But others see it in part as a cease-fire offer extended by a weakened warrior seeking accommodation with a powerful opponent.

The ball is in management's court, portions of the report seem to suggest, and companies can choose the course — cooperation or confrontation — while labor will prepare to deal with either.

If that's the message, the response appears to be confrontation:

— Companies that demand two-tier contracts that place new hires on a lower pay scale;

— Companies that threaten plant shutdowns or moves to the Sunbelt or overseas unless concessions are granted;

— Companies that file for bankruptcy to abrogate labor contracts.

"THERE IS A broad consensus that in certain industries union members have priced themselves out of the market, and there's probably some truth to that, especially in steel and autos," says Robert B. Reich, a professor of business and public policy at the Harvard University John F. Kennedy school of government.

"But from that it's a false leap of logic to conclude that the way to become more competitive is to reduce workers' wages. Our overall goal is not to be more competitive, regardless of cost, but to maintain or enhance our standard of living; competitiveness is just a means, not an end in itself.

"We're at a fork in the road," says Reich. "Management in many industries has not decided whether its strategy will be to reduce labor costs or enhance the value of the products they are providing. If they're primarily going to reduce costs, then I'm afraid they are going down the confrontational path."

The path of partnership, which many observers of the labor scene regard as a more desirable long-run course, involves profit-sharing and job security, bonuses linked to productivity increases and the surrender by labor in many industries of its hard-won system of rigid work rules and job classifications.

AFL-CIO head predicts resurgence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Organized labor has suffered serious setbacks and faces sizable problems, but will overcome them all, AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland said in a Labor Day statement issued Saturday.

The head of the 13.7 million-member federation of 96 unions says he sees resurgence, not decline, despite the fact that the American labor movement has lost 2.7 million members since 1980.

"There have been setbacks and there are enormous continuing problems," Kirland said. But he said that in some measure because of labor's troubles, "a new spirit of solidarity and confidence has been growing within our ranks."

The labor chief said that blame for the nation's unemployment and trade problems should be laid on the Reagan administration and American business.

"We find an administration dedicated to emasculating the federal government and to dividing the country, region against region, race against race, and rich against poor," said Kirkland.

"For five years since this administration took office, unfair employers who have never given up the dream of total control over the lives of workers have been reasserting their right to rearrange wage levels and redefine working conditions as they alone see fit."

He said that among the forces arrayed against labor is a National Labor Relations Board "packed with radical conservatives who...frustrate organizing, discourage collective bargaining and delay and deny justice to workers."

A "resurgent labor movement will lead the way" in correcting abuses, that include "state and federal agencies...blind to open violations of health and safety laws, prevailing wage laws and fair employment standards," the AFL-CIO president said.

He said some answers to labor's problems can be found in a report issued by the labor federation's executive council last February.

Goodbye (sigh), summer

By ROBERT BARR
Associated Press

The scenic lands of the West burned or were overrun by grasshoppers. In the Northeast, a drought kept swimming pools dry and lawns parched....The place to put your head this summer wasn't on the sand, but in it.

What was so hot about the summer of '85? In the season of escapism, there was no avoiding the darker, February side of life.

A hijacking in Lebanon and four major plane crashes made every trip look risky, and a "little friend" on the president's nose deflated the value of a bronzed hide.

The scenic lands of the West burned or were overrun by grasshoppers. In the Northeast, a drought kept swimming pools dry and lawns parched. A baseball strike. Killer bees.

The place to put your head this summer wasn't on the sand, but in it.

On the other hand, there was Live Aid, the trans-Atlantic rock festival with a heart; there was Coke Classic; there was baseball again.

A strong dollar lured Americans abroad, into unusually dangerous skies.

On June 14, a TWA jet with 151 people aboard was hijacked by Shiite Moslem extremists. One passenger was murdered. Thirty-nine men spent 17 days in captivity in Beirut, stars of terrorist TV talk shows which ended without further loss of life.

By August, however, 1985 was already the bloodiest year in civil aviation history. There were four big crashes:

June 23 — 329 died on an Air-India Boeing 747 in the Atlantic.

Aug. 2 — 135 died in a Delta Airlines L-1011 at Dallas-Forth Worth International Airport.

Aug. 12 — 520 were killed on a Japan Airlines 747 on a remote mountaintop.

Aug. 22 — 54 died on a British Airtours Boeing 737 at Manchester, England.

A bomb was suspected, but not proven, in the Air-India disaster; weather or mechanical failure apparently caused the other three.

A light plane crash on Aug. 25 killed Samantha Smith, the schoolgirl who caught a Soviet leader's attention with her plea for peace.

Still, people flew in record numbers. The odds of crashing, after all, are something like 500,000-to-one.

At odds of 6.1 million-to-one, New Yorkers went crazy buying tickets in a $41 million lottery.

President Reagan had a rough summer. On July 13, a section of his large intestine was removed, and tests confirmed that he had cancer. Doctors said they got it all, however, and that he was not threatened.

On Aug. 1, the White House press office confirmed that a patch of skin had been removed from Reagan's nose, but ducked questions about details. Four days later, Reagan confirmed that doctors removed a growth — "my little friend," he called it — which proved to be basal cell carcinoma, or skin cancer.

"All my life I've lived with a coat of tan," Reagan said, regretting that he now must avoid the sun.

Another disease — acquired immune deficiency syndrome — seemed to spread far faster than anyone's ability to understand it. AIDS had struck about 13,000 Americans since 1979, and more than half of them were dead.

The most prominent victim: actor Rock Hudson, who disclosed his condition after checking into a hospital in Paris.

The summer's hottest political issue was the turmoil in South Africa, where more than 600 people had died in a year of racial protests. The White House, with little to show for "constructive engagement," started counting votes for an expected veto battle over economic sanctions against the apartheid government.

After three dangerous leaks in West Virginia's "chemical valley," Kanawha County Commission chairman Douglas Stump called the incidents acts of God, but added, "certainly God hasn't been too good to this valley lately." In the worst incident, a leak of the pesticide ingredient aldicarb oxime on Aug. 11 at the Union Carbide plant at Institute, W.Va., hospitalized 135 people.

Thousands of firefighters battled forest and range fires in the West. Nearly 2.8 million acres have been scorched by 81,000 fires this year, according to the federal Interagency Fire Center at Boise, Idaho, mostly after June 27 in an exceptionally dry summer. In Idaho, some fires were blamed on farmers who were out to roast grasshoppers before their crops were all chewed.

The baseball strike amounted to a two-day rain delay, and any talk about fans staying home in disgust evaporated as soon as the stadiums reopened.

On July 13, Philadelphia's JFK Stadium and London's Wembley stadium overflowed with rockers at the Live Aid concert, a global television extravaganza which raised millions of dollars for African hunger relief. Bob Geldof, the British musician who earlier organized the all-star "Band Aid" recording project, said it shouldn't be so hard to get people to help.

"It's pathetic that the price of a life is a plastic record," he said. "But if that's the way it has to be, you have to use glamour."

Glamour, this year, was a pouty little package in tacky underwear who sang not quite like a virgin. Madonna got attention without even trying.

Madonna nude! Madonna nixed by co-op! Madonna's man punches photog! Madonna married!

No Madonna story today? Killer bees!

Four colonies of the Africanized bees were found in California, and beekeepers sacrificed dozens of hives inside a quarantine zone.

No issue, however, seemed to engage America so deeply as the cola wars, especially Coca-Cola's tactical retreat in bringing back old Coke along with the new.

"Some cynics say we planned the whole thing," Coke President Donald Keough said amid an explosion of publicity. "The truth is we're not that dumb, and we're not that smart."

Tribal president, white mayor lock horns over bootleg liquor

By BOB IMRIE
Associated Press

MISSION, S.D. (AP) — The Rosebud Sioux Tribe won its court battle to keep this town that sits on the tribe's reservation from selling liquor but the mayor won't let the town go dry. He's been convicted of bootlegging.

"Anybody that can bootleg liquor, I say more power to them," said Mayor Ray Fernen. "When the liquor store opens up, I won't believe in bootlegging one bit more."

Fernen said alcoholics among the 11,700 residents of the Rosebud Reservation will drink cleaning products and other dangerous chemicals if they can't buy liquor, which the mayor called "Indian medicine."

"Indian medicine is the drug that these guys need," he said.

But Rosebud Sioux Tribal President Webster Two Hawk said bootlegging only aggravates the alcoholism problem, and said the mayor, who is white, was disparaging Indians.

"There is no truth as far as I am concerned of alcohol being Indian medicine," Two Hawk said. "We never had it until the white man brought it to us. He is actually making fun of the Indian people, is what he is doing. He is degrading the Indian."

The liquor store on Mission's Main Street provided the town of 750 people almost $100,000 in annual revenue until a federal judge ruled last year that all liquor licenses are under tribal control.

After sentiment at a public hearing went against alcohol on the wind-swept reservation, where the unemployment rate is about 50 percent, the tribe refused to issue a license for the store, which closed Nov. 15.

Without its main source of income, the city dismissed its five-man police force, cut hours for other municipal workers and imposed a property tax and a 1 percent sales tax.

Without a legal supply of liquor, Fernen said many alcoholics have turned to drinking household disinfectants that contain alcohol.

"A lot of these people could give a damn less about these winos, but I do," Fernen said.

The mayor, who pleaded no contest to a bootlegging charge in June and was fined $88 plus $12 in court costs, said he's found dozens of punctured disinfectant cans in his grove of apple trees. At a rubbish pile on the north edge of town, it seemed every other discarded can was disinfectant.

"Maybe you can see what I am doing," said Fernen, 52, who faces a recall election in October. "This stuff will kill everyone or cripple them."

Fred Baker, administrator at the federal Indian Health Service Hospital in nearby Rosebud, had no statistics on the health effects of the liquor store's shutdown.

Imprisoned leader Mandela receives check showing support of U.S. senators

WASHINGTON (AP) — The daughter of imprisoned South African resistance leader Nelson Mandela has accepted a check from 14 senators to help rebuild her mother's health clinic, which was firebombed earlier this month.

Zenani Mandela Dlamini, at a news conference Friday with Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, thanked the lawmakers, raised her fist and said, "The struggle goes on."

She and husband Thumbumuzi Dlamini said they felt confident Mandela, if released from prison, would pursue a negotiated end to the racial violence.

"We don't want to believe he's hostile. We don't want to believe he's violent," said Dlamini.

Mandela is head of the banned African National Congress and, although he has been in prison for 23 years, is widely regarded as the most influential resistance leader.

Metzenbaum handed Mrs. Dlamini the $6,750 check on behalf of a bipartisan group of senators. The donation reflected the fact that "Americans of all political views have a deep sense of hurt and empathy" with the people of South Africa, he said.

Winnie Mandela's home and the adjacent free health clinic she ran were burned Aug. 13.

Mrs. Mandela accepted the senators' check but declined an offer of $10,000 from the State Department, saying she opposed the Reagan administration's refusal to take strong action against the regime and its apartheid policy in South Africa.

The senators donating money to the Mandelas included Metzenbaum, Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn.; Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; Dennis DeConcini, D-Ariz.; John Glenn, D-Ohio; John Heinz, R-Pa.; Daniel K. Inouye, D-Hawaii; Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan.; Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.; Frank Lautenberg, D-N.J., Claiborne Pell, D-R.I.; William Proxmire, D-Wis.; John W. Warner, R-Va., and Lowell P. Weicker Jr., R-Conn.

Each senator donated $500, except for Proxmire, who gave $250, according to Bev Anthony, a spokeswoman for Metzenbaum.

Teachers strikes stall schools across nation

Associated Press

The union leader for 19,000 public school teachers in Philadelphia on Saturday predicted a strike, while teachers continued to negotiate in Chicago.

Strikes continued in seven smaller school districts in Michigan, Pennsylvania and Illinois.

In Philadephia, where the teachers' contract was set to expire at 12:01 a.m. Sunday, no talks had been held since Friday night. The district's 197,000 students are to begin classes Tuesday.

Marvin Schuman, president of the Philadelphia Federation of Teachers, charged the school board with bargaining in bad faith and said he wouldn't resume talks "until there is evidence they are sincere."

"I have to feel they want a strike," said Schuman, a math teacher. "The chances of a strike now are 100 per cent."

The dispute centered on the district's demands for a longer work day and control over how teachers use a 45-minute preparation period.

"We are ready and willing to return to the bargaining table and work around the clock if necessary," said district spokesman William Thompson.

In Chicago, the 28,000-member Chicago Teachers Union has pledged to strike for the third year in a row if it has no contract agreement by Tuesday, one day before the scheduled start of school for 431,000 students.

The union and the school district remained at odds over a proposed two-year contract. Teachers want pay increases guaranteed in the second year, while school officials want an escape clause to avoid paying raises if money is tight. Talks resumed Saturday afternoon.

In suburban Chicago, talks between striking teachers and the 9,000-student Wheaton-Warrenville District 200 broke off about early Saturday, and were to resume Monday evening.

"There wasn't a whole lot of progress," said school board member Ronald McNichols. "They made us an offer and we made them a counteroffer, but there was no agreement."

Negotiators in Flint, Mich., planned to meet throughout the Labor Day weekend to end a strike affecting 29,000 students and 1,600 teachers in the state's second-largest school district, union bargainers said.

"We're feeling some pressure. We don't want the strike to continue into next week," said Hal Keim, president of Flint's Michigan Education Association local.

The Flint school board has proposed a 4 percent salary increase, while the teachers are asking for a 7 percent raise, the union said in a statement.

In Linden, Mich., where 111 teachers went on strike Wednesday, union and school board negotiators planned to wait until Tuesday before attempting to reach an accord.

Negotiators also took the weekend off in Beecher, Mich., where contract talks were scheduled to resume Monday to try to end a strike by 185 teachers.

Black riot victims buried in South Africa

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — About 50,000 mourners packed a stadium near East London on Saturday for the funeral of 18 black riot victims, and witnesses said clergy saved a suspected informer from being burned alive there.

Police watched from a distance but did not intervene as the vast crowd spilled out of the stadium in Duncan Village, hands clenched in black power salutes.

The mourners slowly marched to the cemetery, carrying the 18 coffins shoulder high.

The victims being buried included a 19-month-old boy, killed three weeks ago in four days of unrest in Duncan Village, near East London on the Indian Ocean. It was the first time East London's black area erupted during a year of violence elsewhere in South Africa that has killed more than 650 people.

During the service, a crowd put a tire around the neck of a black man suspected of being a police informer and prepared to set him alight. But clergymen led the man to safety, witnesses said.

Non-government sources report that about three-fourths of those slain in anti-apartheid violence the past year have been shot by police, and the rest killed in fighting among black groups and attacks against black police and members of government-backed township councils.

Duncan Village is not among 36 communities covered by a six-week state of emergency under which mass funerals and funeral processions on foot are banned.

The violence is directed against South Africa's system of racial segregation, apartheid, through which 5 million whites rule over 24 million blacks.

In Cape Town, an uneasy calm descended on black and mixed-race townships where rioting broke out Wednesday and persisted through Friday, leaving at least 29 dead.

The unrest started when police broke up planned marches to Pollsmoor Prison, where black leader Nelson Mandela is serving a life term for plotting sabotage.

Blacks and "coloreds," as mixed-race people are classified in South Africa, torched shops, erected burning barricades across roads and stoned police and private vehicles nearly non-stop until late Friday night.

Three mining companies meanwhile braced for strikes Sunday night by 60,000 black workers at seven gold and coal mines around Johannesburg after wage talks deadlocked.

Strikes were averted at 22 other mines that employ a total of 190,000 blacks when owners made last-minute concessions in a new contract offer. But Anglo Vaal Ltd, Gold Fields of South Africa and General Mining Corp. refused to boost pay increases ranging from 14 to 19 percent that they instituted in July after failing to reach agreement with the union.

The black National Union of Mineworkers had demanded a 22 percent raise in the average black miner's pay of 350 rand ($146) per month, which it said is one-sixth of the average white miner's pay.

In the past, even legal mine strikes have led to mass firings of strikers, sometimes provoking clashes. Union leaders warned that sympathy strikes were likely in the 550,000-worker industry if strikers were fired.

President P.W. Botha met in Cape Town with three visiting European foreign ministers for more than three hours, nearly twice as long as had been scheduled.

Jacques Poos of Luxembourg, Hans van den Broek of Holland and Giulio Andreotti of Italy also met several anti-apartheid activists, including black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu, the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner.

But the United Democratic Front, the largest activist alliance, refused to see the visitors, saying they had caved in to the white government by going along with its refusal to let them see Mandela.

In Lusaka, Zambia, a spokesman for the African National Congress guerrilla movement said the exiled group has agreed to meet South African business executives to discuss the country's future, time and place not yet set.

Spokesman Tom Sebina said the business people, whom he refused to identify, had approached the ANC and requested talks. The government banned the group in 1960 and refuses to negotiate with it unless it renounces violence.

WORLD

In South Africa white tourists wonder 'where are the riots?'

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — White commuters pilot their Jaguars and Porsches over the hills of Jan Smuts Avenue each morning. The smart cafes in Rosebank and Sandton are busy.

At downtown hotels, the Scottish salmon is always fresh and the cheese arrived yesterday from Paris. The gavel falls over Georgian furniture at Sotheby's auction house, and golfers suffer daily frustration on the testing ninth hole at The Wanderers.

South Africa's 5 million whites are carrying on, after almost a year of riots against their privileged position.

But linger after a dinner party, past joke time and the passing of the port, and the nervous whispers are heard.

This is the third time since 1960 that the white minority has faced persistent violent challenges to its domination over 24 million blacks. Since the latest unrest began a year ago, and a state of emergency was imposed July 21, whites have had to wonder: Is this it?

Thanks to the thoroughness of apartheid, an Afrikaans-language word for "apartness," most whites are never touched by the anger in black townships where the army and police fight nightly battles against youngsters with stones.

Rarely do white and black areas abut one another. One cannot just blunder into Soweto, the huge black township outside Johannesburg.

Miles literally separate the races. From a tall building in Hillbrow, the Greenwich Village of Johannesburg, the lights of Soweto are barely visible almost 10 miles away. Two expressways, sand dune-like mine dumps, a railroad, a mountain and two more miles separate Soweto from Johannesburg's posh northern suburbs.

These are neighborhoods where blacks deliver groceries on bicycles. "The boy" washes the car and "the girl" cooks.

Flight of capital has economy on shaking base

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — In the end, it may not be black rioters and overseas sanctions-seekers who prod the white government into political and social reforms. It may be hard-nosed foreign bankers.

After the value of the South African currency tumbled by 30 percent in two weeks, the government took the unprecedented steps Aug. 27 of shutting the stock market for five days and halting all foreign currency transactions in an effort to stop a flight of capital.

The rand plunged because some foreign bankers were calling in maturing short-term loans and refusing to renew credit to South African borrowers. At the same time, a number of large overseas firms were quietly selling off South African interests, sending more money out of the country.

The reason for the flight of capital, analysts agree, was the fear that more black unrest appeared likely because of seeming government intransigence on race reforms.

Even more than the rioting with its 650-plus deaths, the harsh reality of a battered economy has brought home to some of South Africa's 5 million whites the need to face up to black political demands for reform.

Four years ago, one rand bought $1.25. The currency market was frozen on Aug. 27 after the rand hit an all-time low against the dollar of 34.80 cents — about one-fourth its former value.

"Time has run out," Anton Rupert, head of the the giant Rembrandt agriculture and mining conglomerate, said in a speech. "This is the government's final opportunity to correct past wrongs and introduce the sort of reforms the country is strongly signalling it needs so urgently."

As the rand's value falls, the cost in rands of South Africa's $17 billion foreign debt has soared, raising doubts about the nation's ability to repay on time. Nearly $12 billion in routine loans to private companies, banks and the government are due within a year.

The figures are not dramatic in world terms, and until now South Africa has boasted of its excellent repayment record. But few anticipated the sudden calling in of loans or the end of credit.

The governor of the Reserve Bank, Gerhard de Kock, says South Africa can afford to repay about 400 million rand a month, or 4.8 billion rand a year.

But with the rand's value at 35 cents, 4.8 billion would be just $1.68 billion, far less than the debt unless it is "rolled over" or refinanced — a routine procedure in the past.

So the government was forced to step in with the dramatic five-day freeze on currency dealings and stock trading, while De Kock flew to London and Washington to try to repair the rand's shattered credibility and renegotiate the loan repayment schedule. There was speculation he would offer to swap some of South Africa's gold reserves in payment.

To make his task more difficult, bitter rioting broke out near Cape Town while he was away.

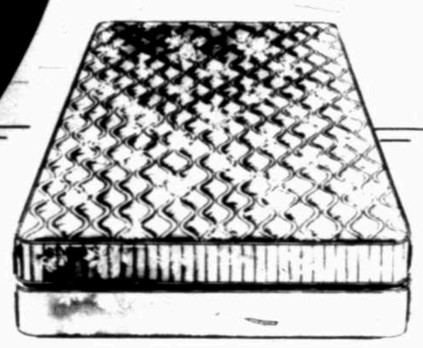

Business leaders acknowledged the need for some immediate emergency surgery to save the rand. But many joined Rupert in saying the long-term cure lies in political reform, not economic or financial treatment.

Gavin Relly, chairman of the powerful Anglo American Corp., South Africa's mining multinational, said, "As the causes for the run on the currency were not economic but political, any economic measures that the authorities may introduce will have no more than a short- to medium-term effect unless they are also accompanied by a new political dispensation."

On Sept. 1, 1945, Army General Douglas MacArthur signs the Japanese surrender papers on board the USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay. Behind him are Gen. Ernest Percival, left, and Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright, rescued Japanese prisoners of war.

WWII surrender recalled on anniversary

EDITOR'S NOTE: Associated Press reporter Spencer Davis was aboard the USS Missouri when the Japanese surrendered to the Allies on Sept. 2, 1945. Here is the story he wrote that day.

By SPENCER DAVIS
Associated Press

USS MISSOURI, Tokyo Bay — Two nervous Japanese formally and unconditionally surrendered all remnants of their smashed empire to the Allies today, restoring peace to a war-battered world.

Surrender hour was cool and cloudy, but the sun broke through the overcast 20 minutes later as General MacArthur intoned "these proceedings are closed."

Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu, who signed for the Japanese government, doffed his top hat and nervously fingered his fountain pen before he firmly signed the two copies of the surrender document — one for Japan, one for the Allies. Shigemitsu penned his name in English on one document.

Gen. Yoshijiro Umezu, for the imperial staff, also nervous, signed hurriedly; quickly stepped aside. A Japanese colonel wiped his eyes. All of the Nipponese present were tense and drawn.

Then MacArthur signed, deliberately, using five pens. The first two — silverplated especially for the occasion — he handed in turn to Lt. Gen. Jonathan M. Wainwright and to British Gen. Arthur Ernest Percival, who were forced to surrender Corregidor and Singapore, respectively, in the war's darkest hours.

Wainwright and Percival smiled; saluted snappily. They had been rescued only a few days ago from Japanese prisoner of war camps.

"It is my earnest hope and indeed the hope of all mankind that from this solemn occasion a better world shall emerge out of the blood and carnage of the past," MacArthur said.

The historic signing took place on a long table on the galley deck.

Minutes later, from the White House, where Japanese warlords once asserted they would dictate their own peace terms, President Truman broadcast:

"We shall not forget Pearl Harbor. The Japanese militarists will not forget the USS Missouri."

The 45,000 ton Missouri, which less than a month ago was blasting Japanese war industries with her 16-inch guns, had those rifles pointed skyward and her bow pointed toward the heart of Japan for the ceremony. Flags of the United States, the United Kingdom, China and Russia fluttered from the spic verandah deck.

Once there was a slight delay when it appeared someone had signed on the wrong line. Gen. Sir Thomas Blamey, representing Australia, signed the Japanese document first — by error — then shrugged as if it really made no difference now.

All Allied representatives were sober-faced, but obviously glad it's over. Soldiers, sailors and marines, some of whom had fought their way across the Pacific, hardly could hide a trace of exuberance on their serious faces.

MacArthur's hand shook slightly as he reached "Dou–" in his first signature. His face twitched but his voice was strong although he appeared to be under great emotional strain.

After the Japanese signed, he said dramatically, "Will General Wainwright and General Percival step forward while I sign?"

Wainwright, by his own request, was accompanied by his chief of staff, Brig. Gen. Lewis Beebe; his aides, Col. John Pugh and Lt. Col. Thomas Dooley, and his orderly-chauffeur, Sgt. Herbert Carroll. Percival was accompanied by his orderly.

Among U.S. naval officers present were Admiral Nimitz, who signed for his country; his chief of staff, Vice Admiral Forrest C. Sherman; Admiral Halsey; Vice Admiral John A. Towers, commander of naval air in the Pacific; Vice Admiral Theodore C. Wilkinson, who directed many amphibious landings under both Halsey and Admiral Thomas C. Kinkaid, commander of the Seventh Fleet; Rear Admiral Oscar C. Badger, commander of the task force which landed occupation troops, and Commander Maher, recently liberated officer of the cruiser Houston, lost early in 1942.

Lt. Gen. Robert E. Geiger, commander of Marine forces in the Pacific, represented the Marine corps, as Nimitz' guest.

U.S. Army officers present included Generals Spaatz, Kenney, and Eichelberger and Lt. Gen. Robert C. Richardson Jr., commander of U.S. Army forces in the central Pacific.

Several Americans recently liberated from Japanese prisoner of war camps also viewed the ceremonies.

Espionage affairs no 'novel' concept

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Espionage is a way of life for relations between East Germany and West Germany. Many experts say there's no way to stop it.

Trusted secretaries give away secrets to East German "Romeos" who've been wooing them for what they know, and occasionally powerful men in Bonn are toppled from office.

Espionage affairs like the scandal now plaguing Bonn are a predictable consequence of the division of Germany after World War II, according to West German officials, Western diplomats and analysts.

"It's relatively easy to spy here for the East Germans," said Joseph Dolezal, a spokesman for the Intra-German Relations Ministry. "There are no language differences. We have an open society and a relatively open immigration policy, especially for East Germans.

"We will never be able to stop it," he told The Associated Press.

Counter-espionage officials estimate that 3,000 people are spying in West Germany for Communist East Germany at any one time.

The periodic unmasking of East German agents has made West German history sometimes sound like spy thrillers by John le Carre, who indeed has featured the East-West German spy network in some of his novels.

Heribert Hellenbroich, the head of West Germany's chief intelligence agency, lost his job last Thursday over the latest spy scandal.

The discovery of the most notorious East German spy, Guenter Guillaume, brought down the government of former Chancellor Willy Brandt in 1974.

BUT THE SPIES have shaken the credibility of other governments from the first postwar chancellor, Konrad Adenauer, to the present one, Helmut Kohl, and caused lasting friction with Western allies who worry about sharing their secrets with Bonn.

Many people in Bonn refer to West German intelligence as a "sieve."

The latest spy scandal included East Germany's announcement Aug. 23 that top West German counterspy Hans-Joachim Tiedge had defected.

Tiedge is believed to have compromised West German intelligence for at least two years to come.

Yet, both Germanys have stressed their desire for no long-term harm to relations, perhaps indicating how accustomed both sides have become to the espionage game.

Bonn's intra-German relations minister, Heinrich Windelen, told reporters in late August that President Erich Honecker of East Germany was still welcome to visit Bonn.

The official East German news agency ADN said Aug. 22 that 168 West German spies have been caught in the last 1½ years, but that "only the level-headed policies of the (East) German Democratic Republic are to be thanked for the fact that this has not led to a serious strain in the relationship between the GDR and the Federal Republic of (West) Germany."

TIEDGE'S DEFECTION, the arrest of a secretary from President Richard von Weizsaecker's office, and the disappearance of three other people from Bonn have strained Kohl's coalition government.

But there is no indication that the government will fall, as it did in 1974 when a very bitter Brandt, father of the "Ostpolitik" treaties of drawing closer to the East, stepped down.

Guillaume, a personal aide to Brandt, was close enough to the chancellor to go on vacation with him in Norway in 1973. Among the documents that passed through his hands was a personal letter to Brandt from former President Richard M. Nixon.

Guillaume and his wife, Christel, had emigrated to West Germany in 1956 with the secret task of gathering intelligence on Brandt's Social Democratic Party.

Chancellor Adenauer was horrified in 1954 when the head of the West German Federal Intelligence Agency, Otto John, defected to East Berlin and appeared at news conferences there to denounce Adenauer's policies.

A few months later, John suddenly reappeared in West Germany, saying he had really been drugged with doped cognac and kidnapped by the East Germans.

THE WEST GERMAN Supreme Court did not believe his story and sentenced him to four years in prison. Now 76 years old, he is still trying to clear his name.

In 1961, a "mole" was found in the highest reaches of West German intelligence. It turned out that Heinz Felfe, whose job it was to track Soviet spies, was working for the KGB.

In the 1970s, the secretary-spy problem abounded. On Feb. 2, 1979, Ingrid Garbe, a secretary in the West German mission to NATO in Brussels, Belgium, was arrested for espionage.

The following month, no fewer than four secretary-spies who had worked in important government and party posts in Bonn and Brussels fled to East Berlin.

Karl Wilhelm Fricke, a journalist who has written a book about East German espionage, said dozens of West German women, particularly secretaries, have been targeted over the years by East German agents.

West German television in August ran special programs on how East German agents approach West Germans on vacation, in bars and cafes and even at car repair shops.

U.S. beefs up force in Mexico

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The United States will add at least 10 undercover drug agents to its force in Mexico, U.S. Ambassador John Gavin said.

Gavin said the additional Drug Enforcement Administration agents would arrive in Mexico by January to join a coordinated U.S.-Mexican crackdown against Mexico's powerful drug overlords.

WORLD in brief

British outraged by U.S. aviation official

LONDON (AP) — British officials and airlines have denied a U.S. aviation official's statement that they run Boeing 737 engines "to temperature limits," possibly causing engine cracks like those linked to an explosion and fire on a British Airtours jet last week.

Donald Engen, head of the Federal Aviation Administration, said in a television interview Thursday that British investigators had found cracks in some of the Pratt & Whitney JT8D engines used on Boeing 737s and that British airlines may not be able to detect such problems as easily as their American counterparts.

"I think that what they determined was they've been operating the JT8D to temperature limits (and) that they have finally begun to develop these cracks," Engen said.

In the United States, he said, the engines were operated differently "and we don't have the cracks the British have found."

The cause of the engine explosion and fire aboard the British Airtours 737 as it took off Aug. 22 from Manchester has not been determined.

Soviet bombers seen

CHICOUTIMI, Quebec (AP) — Two Canadian Forces fighters intercepted two Soviet bombers approaching 150 nautical miles off the coast of Newfoundland on Aug. 20, a pilot involved in the operation was quoted as saying in a report published Saturday.

According to the French-language newspaper Le Quotidien, Eric Matheson said he and fellow pilot Chuck Caron of the 425 Alouette Squadron at Bagotville were ordered to intercept the Soviet Tupolev Tu-95 bombers, nicknamed the Bear by NATO, at 30,000 feet over the Atlantic.

Soviet aircraft approach the Canadian coast regularly to test their own equipment and the reaction time of Canadian fighters.

PRI hurt in election

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The governing Institutional Revolutionary Party suffered its worst electoral setback in a decade in recent congressional elections, according to results released by the federal Electoral College.

The lower house of Congress opens its 53rd session Sunday with the Institutional Revolutionary Party in possession of 10 fewer seats. The loss was the worst for the party since political reforms were enacted in the 1970s.

Masked gunman kills Palestinian guerrilla leader in Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A masked man with a silencer-equipped pistol killed a senior Palestinian guerrilla leader in Sidon, police said Saturday.

It was the second killing in five days of a prominent PLO member in south Lebanon.

Elsewhere in the south, at Tyre, fighting broke out Saturday between the Amal militia and gunmen of the radical Hezbollah, or Party of God, who are vying for dominance of Lebanon's 1 million strong Shiite Moslem community.

No one was killed.

The violence flared at Tyre, 50 miles south of Beirut, as Moslem areas of Lebanon were shut down by a strike called by Shiites to mark the mysterious disappearance of their spiritual leader, Imam Mousa Sadr, during a 1978 trip to Libya.

In Sidon's Ein el-Hilweh refugee camp, the gunman killed Mustafa Kassem Khalife, 55, at his home Friday night, his family and police said. He was buried Saturday.

Khalife was loyal to Yasser Arafat, chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organization, police said.

Khalife's death came four days after another Arafat loyalist, Mohammed Shikhani, was killed. Four other Arafat supporters were killed in July.

No one claimed responsibility for Khalife's killing, which was seen as an outgrowth of factional feuding between Arafat's supporters and Syrian-backed PLO dissidents. PLO faction leaders met Saturday in an attempt to ward off further Palestinian infighting.

A statement issued by Arafat's mainstream Fatah group said Khalife was assassinated by "one of the agents of Americans and Zionists in...a plot aiming at creating conflict" among Palestinian factions.

Osama Saad, a leader of the Syrian-backed Popular Nasserite militia that controls Sidon, told Ash-Shiraa weekly in an interview published Saturday that his men have seized truckloads of weapons destined for Arafat's supporters.

Other Moslem leaders have claimed in recent days that Arafat has pumped millions of dollars into Lebanon to aid his loyalists.

Syria, once Arafat's ally, now bitterly opposes his efforts with Jordan's King Hussein to reach a settlement with Israel. Syria backs most of the dissident PLO factions opposed to Arafat.

Amal seeks to curb Arafat's effort to rebuild the power base in Lebanon he lost in Israel's 1982 invasion. Amal said it seized 30 Palestinian sympathizers this past week who were funnelling funds to pro-Arafat groups in the south.

Associated Press correspondents in Tyre said Amal gunmen fired into a crowd gathering for a Hezbollah rally to mark Mousa Sadr's disappearance. Hezbollah gunmen fired back, but there was no word of casualties.

The Amal command in Tyre said it wanted to disperse the crowd because it detracted from a similar rally in Baalbek.

The pro-Iranian Hezbollah emerged to challenge Amal during the Israeli invasion, which began in June 1982, when hundreds of Iranian revolutionary guards were sent to fight the Israelis in eastern Lebanon.

Hezbollah is widely believed to have engineered last June's hijacking of a TWA plane and the ensuing hostage-taking involving 39 Americans.

Thousands of Shiites gathered Saturday for the Amal-sponsored rally in Baalbek in the Syrian-controlled Bekaa Valley, Hezbollah's stronghold.

Among the speakers was Amal leader Nabih Berri, Lebanon's justice minister and minister for southern Lebanon.

A Berri bodyguard was accidentally shot in the foot, AP correspondents on the scene reported, but they reported no serious clashes at Baalbek.

MEMORIES DON'T SELL

If you are selling your home, remember that you are putting just a house on the market and not the pleasant memories you have accumulated there over the years. To the critical buyer, a house for sale is not yet a home and your fond reminiscences may not fit into the buyer's lifestyle. After preparing your house to show to its best advantage, step into the background. Leave all the selling to a real estate salesperson who is trained to be objective. The salesperson will have already gained all the required information from you. So let the salesperson alone conduct inspection tours and answer questions.

Your reason for selling may be important to you but a prospective buyer is unlikely to place any value on them. Don't let your reasons for selling overshadow the prospect's reasons for buying. Of course you'll be sad to leave your home, but push memories aside. If you allow sentiment to intrude when studying an offer to purchase you can lose not only your objectivity but the sale.

County forecasts

Midland, Ector, Glasscock, Upton, Reagan, Crane, Gaines, Andrews, Dawson, Borden, Martin and Howard counties: Sunday through labor day, sunny very warm days and fair and night.

Temperature should hit middle 90s

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair through Labor Day with high temperatures in the mid-90's, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

A low near 70 degrees is forecast for tonight with southwest winds at 5 to 15 mph through Monday.

The record high for Saturday was 104 degrees set in 1952 as compared to the 97 recorded Saturday. A record low of 56 degrees was set in 1955, still below the 69 recorded Saturday morning.

No precipitation is in the forecast and that leave the total for the year to date at 7.20 inches.

STATE

A late summer upper-air dome brought clear skies and scorching temperatures across much of the northeastern half of Texas Saturday.

By late afternoon, readings on the first day of the Labor Day weekend were at or above the 100 degree mark from the northern Hill Country into Louisiana and Oklahoma, the National Weather Service said.

Skies were fair from the High Plains across the Red River Valley, and partly cloudy elsewhere. No precipitation was detected anywhere in the state, and a light south wind did little to relieve the intense heat.

—By 4 p.m., Bergstrom Air Force Base near Austin recorded a temperature of 104 degrees, while several North Texas sites had 103-degree temperatures. More tolerable temperatures in the 90s were reported in much of west and south Texas. Galveston enjoyed a mild 89.

The forecast for North Texas calls for mostly clear skies with hot days through Monday. Afternoon highs will be in the upper 90s to low 100s, with overnight lows in the low to middle 70s.

South Texas can expect warm nights and hot afternoons through Labor Day. Highs will range from near 90 along the coast to over 100 degrees in the southwest. Overnight lows will be in the 70s.

Very warm days are also forecast for West Texas through Monday. Highs Sunday and Monday will be in the middle to upper 90s, and near 103 in the Big Bend. Overnight lows will be in the middle 60s to low 70s.

Hurricane Elena spread sheets of rain, high wind and scattered tornadoes across Florida on Saturday, forcing nearly 1 million people to evacuate, while thunderstorms dotted the northern Plains and Colorado warmed to record highs.

Dream houses grow in one area of city

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

No, the poor haven't gone away and won't.

Squalor hasn't been buried and won't entirely.

And, yes, Midland, despite its wealth, isn't one silk-stocking row after another.

Yet there is progress among the poor who want just a thread of that stocking.

"I'm struggling," said Paula Rodriguez, who at 45 is surviving on $3.75-an-hour wages as a waitress at a Midland retirement center. With that meager income, she is realizing a dream.

She bought an old stucco house for $500, paid four times that amount to have it moved from near downtown to a half-acre tract south of Midland. And now, she's paying $140 a month to buy the $9,000 tract and is saving to have her house improved. It's boarded up, bare of her own furniture, cracked from the move, is unliveable, but she's delighted in it.

"I think it's every woman's dream to have a home of her own," she said. "I can't see paying any more rent. You've got to get roots somewhere. I love my house. It doesn't look like much. It's not fixed up. It's beautiful. It's mine."

"IT MEANS A LOT to me to have a home," she said.

Paula Rodriguez, a fighter and a survivor, is under-employed.

"She's a go-getter lady," said Jerrie Westmoreland, Midland County's housing director. "I have a lot of respect for Paula."

Though a native of Big Spring, she ended up with a family and no husband in California, raised five children "by myself," and was employed in electronics as an assembly-line worker and quality-control inspector. She was making $1,500 a month when she left California for Texas last year.

"There's no jobs like that here," she said.

Her dream home was not there. Despite the relatively good wages in California, housing and living costs were far beyond her.

Today, while she is struggling and saving to repair her house, she is living in town with her sister, Juanita Ramirez, 37, in a former "windowpane" area in far south Midland. "I'm depending on the little income I have to fix it up," she said. "I'll get it done...with God's help and Jerrie's, too."

It was named a windowpane area, for it was an undeveloped "rural" section without city water, sewer and street services but was surrounded by the city. Today, the area has those services and has been annexed by the city.

Mrs. Rodriguez's sister, a cook at the retirement center, paid $1,000 for her stucco house and moved it on her lot. In the meantime, the family members united and tore down the dilapidated "little old shack" where they had been living and moved off the hull of a weathered and graffito-marred trailer house once attacked to the shack.

"IT WAS REALLY bad, but it did need fixing," recalled Mrs. Ramirez's sister. "The house looks beautiful now compared to what it was."

And compared to "what it was," the entire neighborhood in that former windowpane area bordered by or crossed by streets known as Carter, Goode, Francis, Fisher, Griffin and K is looking up.

Next door to Mrs. Ramirez's house, carpenters are building a $25,000 replacement house for Isabel Segura, 41, the women's sister, who for now is living in a motel with her family. The federal program, administered though the state, is paying the motel bill during the building. Mrs. Segura was a farm laborer until ill health kept her out of the fields.

"She comes every day and looks at it (the new house)," Mrs. Rodriguez said. "It's like a dream come true."

There are many dreams "come true" in the neighborhood.

Since the early 1980s when Betty Sheeler, under sanctions of the Midland County Commissioners' Court, became coordinator of the $1.6 million three-year federal project to upgrade the unimproved "windowpane" area, the area has been upgraded. Mrs. Sheeler resigned in 1983. Mrs. Westmoreland today is seeing the program toward its conclusion in that one former blighted spot in south Midland.

So far, the area has been improved by the paving and curbing of streets, the building of six replacement houses the overhaul of 34 houses in a rehabilitation program, the razing of condemned houses, the filling in of cesspools, the disposal of trash and junk, and the building of Taylor Park Day Care Center.

THE PRINCIPAL GOAL was to afford the low-income residents there "safe and sanitary" housing, Mrs. Westmoreland said.

"When you have an area that's not safe, decent and sanitary," she noted, "a disease breakout is possible."

"They had open cesspools that had been there for years," recalled the 36-year-old social worker. "They had trailer houses that had been moved in. They had no facilities for waste disposal. It was just running down on the ground. Many of the homes did not have functional bathrooms. We've put in many complete bathrooms."

The houses were re-roofed or resided, new electrical or plumbing works were installed, cesspools were closed and filled, and the houses were modified until they were deemed safe and sanitary.

One of the projects under construction is a replacement house for 69-year-old J.R. Bailey, and his wife, Essie, 67. Meanwhile, they are living in the same block-tile house they've lived in since 1951. But since the federal program came into their neighborhood, their living conditions have been improved.

"I never was as thankful for anything as I was that sewer," Mrs. Bailey said.

"That street (Griffin) out there was about the best thing that they did," said Bailey, a retired city service supervisor. Previously, the street was unpaved, dusty in the dry seasons and muddy when it rained.

"THERE'S NOTHING wrong with the neighborhood now but the (cars') dragging," he said.

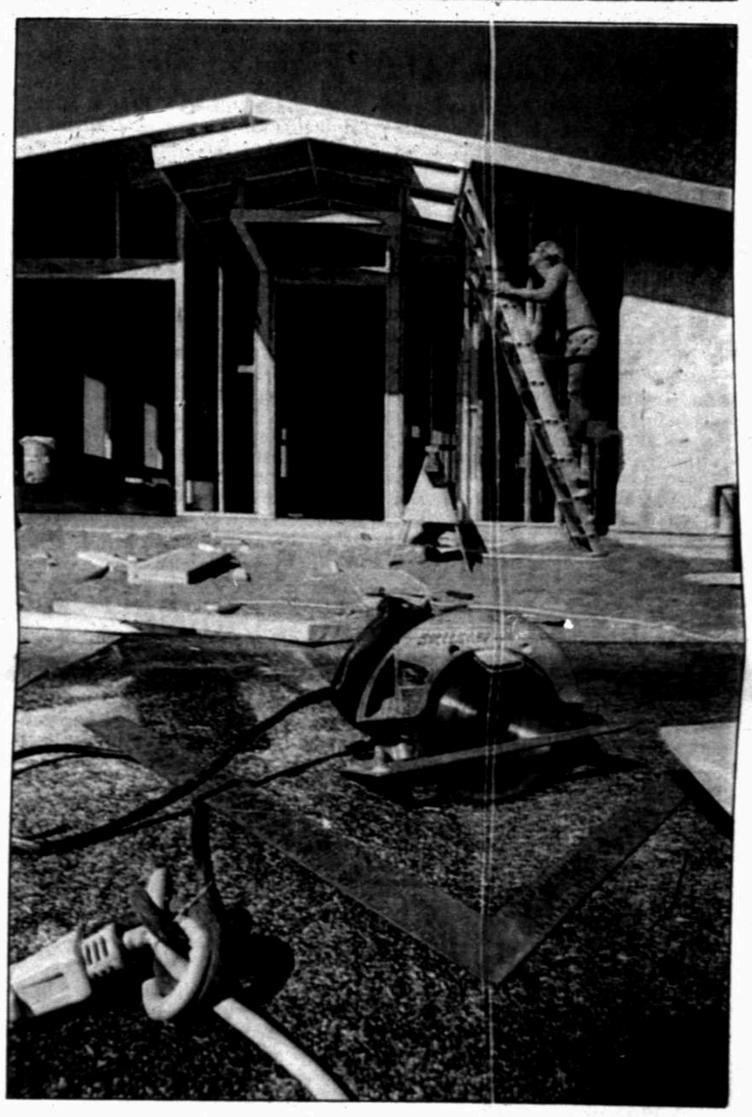

As the neighborhood was upgraded, Mrs. Westmoreland said she has "watched other people start taking pride and cleaning up."

"It's contagious," observed Mrs. Rodriguez, who told the Baileys they were "sure lucky" to be getting the new house on an adjoining lot they own. "I think it's beautiful."

Wheelchair course added to Windlands' exercise park

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

The legs may be lifeless, but the rest of the body isn't. For people confined to wheelchairs the idea aerobic exercising and jogging may seem ridiculous. But on Saturday at 10 a.m., the Parks and Recreation Department will cut the ribbon on a $9,500 Wells Fargo Gamefield Wheelchair Sports Course.

The course is located adjacent to the Petro Parcourse in Windlands Community Playfield at Dengar and Wadley streets. It also is near the Opportunity Center, which offers therapy to handicapped children, and the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens.

The sports course is a fitness program designed to sharpen skills for competitive wheelchair events as well as to provide general conditioning through warm-up, strengthening, and cool-down exercises.

"Our goal is to provide the disabled access to a genuine health, entertainment adventure," said Em Carnett, recreation superintendent.

"With health such a big thing now, the people in wheelchairs feel kinda left out," added Ronee Robinett, recreation supervisor.

The sports course is a fitness program designed to sharpen skills for competitive wheelchair events as well as to provide general conditioning through warm-up, strengthening, and cool-down exercises.

But now they have their own area, which is tied into the Parcourse, where they can gain points by "jogging" certain distances. The Wells Fargo Course is on a 50-by-50 foot concrete pad. A large colorful sign on the south end shows the location of each of the 10 exercise stations, how to get points and how to use the course as a competitive game.

There are warm-up exercises involving stretching, stations that test the person's maneuvering skills, chin-ups, pull-ups, jogging (or wheeling) around the Parcourse, and then cool-down stations for more stretching, for a total of 12 exercises.

"This course will build your strength, endurance and skills to the point where you will be capable of competing with the best," reads the instructions on the sign.

Like the Petro Parcourse, where the exercise stations are designed for people who jog on two legs and not in a wheelchair, the Wells Fargo Course divides its users into three categories: beginning joggers, runners in training and competitive athletes. More points can be gained for doing more of the exercises. Point range is 150 to 300 with the latter being the top level for competitive athletes.

Sampling the course early were Jason Creighton, 9, and his brother, Joey, 12, sons of Drs. Carolyn and Joe Rhode. The two boys wheeled between the tall wooden posts trying out some of the exercises. But after a while, they came up with a game of chase, wheeling around their own imaginary course in and out of the posts.

When asked if they were ready to go, Jason asked if they could stay and play chase awhile longer.

GARY OTT

That drink may not be best way to meet a lady

There are times when you are thumbing through a magazine that a headline will suddenly leap from the pages and demand that the story beneath it be read.

It happened to me the other day. It was in Esquire, a magazine I often buy but rarely enjoy as much as I think I should. The headline in question read, "How to Buy a Drink for a Lady."

The first couple of paragraphs contained five words I didn't know the meaning of, three cutesy alliterations that made no sense and far too many semi-colons for my taste and, as a result, I had no idea what the writer was trying to say, a common problem with me and Esquire. Then in the third paragraph the writer finally got down to cases. He wrote, in part:

"If you're going to be true to the convivial essence of drinking, then you'll understand that a proffered drink is, more often than not, an unacceptable introduction. There's an aggressiveness in it, presumptuousness, and innuendo, implied if not blatant. Drinking is above all friendly, and drinks are ill-used as bargaining chips or ingratiating wedges into a woman's good graces. Properly, drinks are not creators of ease so much as they are abettors of it; and truly, they're stokers, not kindlers, of fires. As a come-on, the offer of a drink is crude. Whatever suaveness it once had has been attenuated by overuse."

Interesting. Too bad the article wasn't written several years earlier. It could have saved a lot of men a great deal of money. All the while, they thought they were being suave and debonair by sending a strawberry daiquiri to the good-looking blond at the end of bar when, in fact, they were being perceived as rude, crude and sociably unacceptable.

Gentlemen need to know this kind of thing. But it should be carried a step further. If offering a drink to a stranger is not the proper way to meet a woman, then what is?

Good question. Unfortunately, as with most good questions, I don't have the answer. I do know some sure-fire methods not to use, however, and they are for the most part based on the peculiar behavior of certain individuals I have had the pleasure of witnessing in the past. You want examples? Fine. Here are some people you don't want to emulate if you hope to get past first base with that cute little thing you currently have your eye on.

— The "I'm so drunk I'm going to make a fool of myself" dude. If these people weren't so obnoxious you might be tempted to feel sympathy for them. But they are, so you don't. They obviously have no concept of what they are saying so, as a result, they offer up incredibly stupid and foul remarks, more times than not dealing with certain parts of the female anatomy. The women, understandably, are not impressed. Indeed, if stares could kill, these men would be endangered species. Too bad stares can't kill.

— The "I'm married but it doesn't matter" louse. These guys have one line and one line only. It is, "How about you and I going to your place for a nightcap?" Predictably, they generally end up at their place where they spend the next two hours trying to explain to their less-than-thrilled wives exactly how it was they got liquor breath by working late at the office. Any punishment they suffer is well deserved.

— The "I'm too cool to do this, but as a personal favor to mankind I will anyway" kind of guy. These people are easy to spot. They wear slacks with perfect creases and pullover shirts that have alligators on the pockets. Their hair is alarmingly neat and when they enter a room they don't say "hello," they just snap their fingers and point, which, for some unknown reason, is supposed to impress the rest of us. If a woman falls for that routine, I don't want anything to do with her.

— The "I'm so great I'm just going to sit here and stare at the wall while women flock around me" guy. These men actually believe their mere presence is enough to strike intense lust in the hearts of all females. In truth, they are pathetic figures who spend the bulk of the night sitting alone and staring at the wall, proving that sometimes you can be too laid-back for your own good.

As mentioned earlier, I am unable to provide any tips for guaranteed success in this field. But after consulting with an assortment of men, I can report two traits consistently topped their lists. They were:

1) Keep them laughing.
2) Lie through your teeth.

Rural house burns; Police probe several burglaries

From Staff Reports

The Midland Fire Department responded to a house fire early Saturday morning, but could find no owner.

The house, located half a mile east of Cottonflat Road, apparently was abandoned and was blazing when the firemen arrived. The 5:15 a.m. fire, which gutted the structure, was reported by Noel Rodriquez. More than 2,500 gallons of water were required to extinguish the blaze, which was put out at approximately 6:30 a.m.

Two business thefts were reported to the Midland Police Department, reports indicated.

Midway Motors, 2608 W. Wall, reported the theft of various tools and a tool box, with a total value estimated at $565. The theft, which occurred sometime between 2 p.m. Wednesday and 1 p.m. Friday, was reported by Billy John Williams, a service manager.

Patricia Sharnowski, 42, told police that a brown leather purse containing $200 cash and credit cards was stolen at the Playmate Club, 200 N. Lee. The theft occurred near midnight Saturday.

DREAM

"Bill Harral (the county's consulting engineer) built the streets," said Mrs. Westmoreland. "He has done an excellent job on that." Private building contractors were hired to build or repair houses.

The neighborhood, which Mrs. Westmoreland characterizes as having a fairly high grade of low-income persons, is just one of several bordered by the city's southeastern limits.

"We haven't gotten rid of all the junk. We ran out of money before we could do that."

Some areas are far more blighted than others and project an attitude of hopelessness. Mrs. Westmoreland will be seeking additional governmental grants to upgrade those areas and to help the people, such as Paula Rodriguez, help themselves.

"It looks much better," Mrs. Westmoreland said. "It's not a bad neighborhood, I'll tell you. The whole neighborhood has been revitalized."

It's a tribute to the poor trying to better their condition.

"Many people in Midland don't believe we have any poor," Mrs. Westmoreland said, "and we don't have as many per capita. That's entirely reflected in the economic status of Midland. The economic status of the poor in Midland is often overlooked. It's easy to overlook it when you see so much wealth."

Midland women attend meeting of American Legion Auxiliary

From Staff Reports

Wanda Scott, Joni Porter and Shirley Ott of Midland, members of the Woods W. Lynch Unit 19 of the American Legion Auxiliary, recently attended the Auxiliary's 65th national convention in New Orleans.

The American Legion Auxiliary is the world's largest women's patriotic organization with nearly one million members worldwide.

Among the highlights of the convention were addresses by Secretary of Education William Bennett and Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger.

Convention reports revealed that Auxiliary members had served a total of 6.5 million hours doing volunteer work and had expended over $16.5 million on the programs of the Auxiliary.

Membership in the American Legion Auxiliary is open to mothers, wives, sisters, daughters and granddaughters of members of the American Legion or of veterans who are deceased and were in service during the eligibility dates for Legion membership.

American contract considered

FORT WORTH, Texas (AP) — A union representing about 12,000 ground workers has voted to accept a new contract with American Airlines, three months after rejecting another pact, officials said.

American Airlines spokesman Joe Stroop said the company had been told the new, 42-month contract passed with more than 60 percent of the vote.

"We're very pleased," Stroop said. "It gives them a good wage and benefits increases and it gives the company added flexibility in terms of work rules and maintains our system of competitive market wages."

Final results of the vote will not be released until Tuesday, said Ed Koziatek, international vice president for the Transport Workers Union.

The union's American members include mechanics, fleet service workers, ground customer service employees, store clerks, reservation agents and meteorologists.

A previous agreement was narrowly rejected in May despite support from the union's negotiating committee.

"The major points in this contract that make it better than the one we rejected in May was that it corrected some of the inequities in the lower end (of the pay scale) and provided percentage raises for all employees," Koziatek said Friday.

COURSE

The course cost about $9,500 with $3,600 of that a grant from the National Fitness Campaign, sponsored by Wells Fargo Bank of California and the city of Midland. Ms. Carnett said the remaining money came from the city, which were operating expenses left over when the Doug Russell Pool didn't open on time earlier this summer and money that had been designated for the recreation program at Lee Freshman High School, which was later cancelled.

She had applied for the grant three years ago, but because there was no additional money in the city budget and no funds could be raised through private donations to meet the matching requirements, Midland didn't get the money. Ms. Carnett tried again this year and, with the matching funds in hand, was notified in March that Midland would receive the $3,600.

Members of the Downtown Optimist Club assisted with the concrete foundation and donated time to assemble and install the course stations. Those people will be honored also at the ribbon-cutting ceremony by being awarded caps and shirts imprinted with the Wells Fargo Gamefield logo.

Also assisting with the ceremony will be Jim Crawford, who works with handicapped children at the Opportunity Center.

Ms. Carnett called it a "freewheeling gamefield" and the Creighton boys proved that as they continued their game of chase.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

Fall semester classes , late registration begin Tuesday

By H.A. TUCK

Fall semester classes begin Tuesday, along with the start of late registration.

All the college offices are closed Monday for Labor Day.

About 3,000 students are scheduled to begin their studies, with several hundred others anticipated to register late. Those who didn't get to register last week should visit the Office of Student Services in the Administration Building between 8 a.m. and 8 p.m., except on Friday, when the hours are 8 a.m.-5 p.m.

Those planning to take as many as five classes must register no later than Sept. 10, while those who want to enroll in from one to three courses have until Sept. 18 to get signed up.

But the later you wait, the tougher it'll be to catch up on all the early assignments...so don't wait too long.

Congratulations to DOCTOR Celia Harris, a member of the Associate Degree Nursing faculty, who has completed work on her doctorate. She earned the Ed.D. degree from Nova University.

First exhibition at McCormick Gallery of the 1985-86 year opens Tuesday. It's a display of current photographs by Todd Walker of Arizona that we think you'll find very interesting. This exhibit remains up through Sept. 27.

Located in the Allison Fine Arts Building, McCormick Gallery is open from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Fridays, 10 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturdays and 1-5 p.m. on Sundays.

Admission to the gallery is always free.

The college-sponsored Adult Basic Education instruction resumes Monday. This is an open-entry program, so those interested can come in any time during the semester and receive assistance in studying for their high school equivalency diploma, the GED. The Adult Learning Center is located in the Occupational-Technical Building. The center is open from 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and from 8 a.m. to 8:30 p.m. on Tuesday and Thursday.

There's no charge for the ABE instruction, which is handled primarily on a one-to-one basis.

Business instructor Van Johnson has been selected as the outstanding collegiate business education teacher by District 18 of the Texas Business Education Association. The state's outstanding teacher will be named from among the 20 district nominees during the TBEA convention next month. This week and next week we'll be introducing the new members of the faculty and staff.

Dr. Julia Flaherty probably is familiar to some, since she began last spring on an interim appointment to teach history. She replaces Dr. Geraldine Box, who decided to retire.

Mary Bohnenblust also may be acquainted with quite a number of students. She joins the business department faculty fulltime after having taught part-time at MC. She received her B.S. degree from the University of Wyoming. In 1981, he was selected as an "Outstanding Young Man of America" by the U.S. Jaycees.

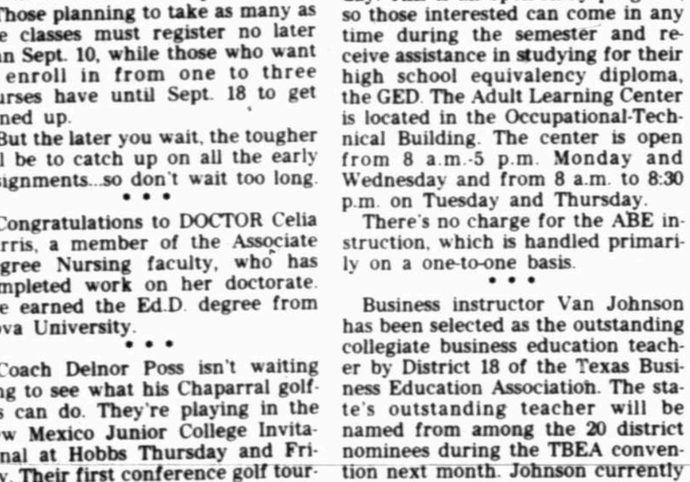

Dr. Camille Duchesne fills a position as Director for Community Services. She received her B.A. degree from Louisiana Tech, her M.Ed. from McNeese State, and her Ed.D. from East Texas State. She's been a public school English teacher, instructor at East Texas State, vocational project coordinator at Central Texas College in Killeen, and director of curriculum development and skills training at American Technical Institute, also at Killeen.

Katherine Favrot (pronounced without the "t") is Director of the college's new Child Development Center. She came here from the University of Tennessee Child Development Lab. She earned both her B.S. and M.S. degrees from the University of Tennessee.

MIDLAND CENTENNIAL 1885·1985

To the Citizens of Midland:

Thank you! The Midland Centennial Commission wishes to thank each and every Midlander who helped with, supported, or attended the CentennialFest celebration. It was a huge success due to you!

From the committee chairmen to the sub-sub chairmen; from the people who had booths, to the wonderful entertainers who performed night and day; and from the people who turned out bright and early to wave and cheer as the parade marched by, to the people who were volunteers doing everything from pouring Dr. Pepper in the hot sun to picking up knee deep trash at 7:00 in the morning--we salute you! You were the ones who made the Centennial celebration special for all Midlanders.

Midland, while boasting that it is an urban city, is also a real community. And it was as a community that we banded together to celebrate the pioneer spirit and brave determination that our ancestors had when they first settled in this wilderness land. We showed why Midland is still here and still strong and proud today. Through good times and bad, Midlanders always rally together to support our friends and our city.

On Friday night, July 5, when all of the CentennialFest booths blew down, Midlanders created one of the most positive events out of an almost hopeless situation. Many would have cried and shook their heads over this predicament- but not Midlanders. With hammers, nails, refreshments, just their two hands and a desire to help, Midlanders got out of bed and came from everywhere to work. In 2 hours and 45 minutes, over 200 Midlanders did what had taken two days to do the first time. It was an incredible sight to see, one that everyone there will always remember.

Midland, you sure celebrated your 100th birthday in style. Your birthday party will always be remembered as one of the high points in your history. And as we begin our next 100 years, we will always remember Midland as being a special community built by special people.

Sincerely,

Safety comes first

While it surely comes a little too soon to please the youngsters and the weather remains a little warm for football's heavy uniforms, the start of school is "just around the corner" for Midland's school-age young people. In fact, classes are scheduled to get under way next Tuesday.

It won't be long now before Friday night football games, P-TA meetings, school socials and late-night studying for tests are the order of the season.

The start of the school year brings a change in family life for a lot of Midlanders. After the carefree, lazy days of the summer months, suddenly mornings are consumed with getting youngsters out of bed, dressed, fed and to school in one way or another. It also means additional duties for Moms and Dads, who may be responsible for giving the younsters rides to and from school.

The early days of the school year are always hectic times, demanding on the time of parents and youngsters alike, and a bit nerve-racking to boot. What's more, city traffic typically increases heavily when the school year gets under way.

That's all the more reason for Midland motorists to exercise extraordinary caution when traveling to and from work, and particularly when driving around the various schools throughout the city. Motorists should pay particular attention to school crossing zones and bus loading and unloading areas. In those areas, children are likely to dart from between cars or buses into the path of automobiles. Midland drivers also should remember that school buses stop for railroad crossings and, periodically, to pick up or let off school children. Observing laws relating to safe driving around buses will greatly reduce the risk of a child being injured or killed.

Over the next several months the traffic danger in regard to children will be greatly increased. Accidents involving either pedestrians or bicyclists almost always result in injury or death. That's particularly tragic when one considers that with only a little effort most pedestrian or bicycle accidents are entirely preventable.

Sadly, the start of many school years is marred by accidents that are entirely preventable provided motorists — and youngsters — observe safety rules regarding travel to and from school.

Drive with extreme caution and help make this school year noteworthy for its lack of accidents.

Ban the book censors

What do "The Three Billy Goats Gruff," "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," and "Gone With The Wind" have in common?

They all are classics.

And they all have been challenged or removed from libraries during the past year. Their sins?

"The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," by Mark Twain, was challenged as a "racist" novel at a high school in Illinois.

"Gone With the Wind," by Margaret Mitchell, was challenged in an Illinois school district because it used the word "nigger." So was Joseph Conrad's classic, "The Nigger of the Narcissus."

"The Three Billy Goats Gruff," a children's classic, was challenged at an elementary school in Oregon because somebody thought it was too violent for children. Here's an especially gruesome passage:

"The Billy Goats Gruff want to go over the bridge for some grass.... Trip, trap, trip, trap, trip, trap. Big Billy Goat Gruff is on the bridge. Up jumps the troll. He says, 'I want to eat you up.' 'No, no,' says big Billy Goat Gruff, 'I want to eat you up.' Up goes the troll. He goes splash into the water. Trip, trap.... Big Billy Goat Gruff is over the bridge. Billy Goats Gruff have fun in the grass. They eat and eat and eat. We like it here, they say."

With violent books like that, children should be forbidden to go to the library. They actually might learn to read, to laugh, to enjoy books.

Library censors are becoming a virulent force. Soon, they'll be censoring that horrible nursery rhyme which portrays infant neglect:

"Rock a bye, baby, in the tree top;

"When the wind blows, the cradle will rock;

"When the bough breaks, the cradle will fall

"And down will come cradle, baby and all."

Let's sentence the book censors to a year of watching television.

Another View: Eliminate standards

In principle, federal construction standards for housing should be abolished to reduce costs and to encourage innovation, as the Federal Housing Administration proposes. In practice, merely eliminating the standards could jeopardize public health and safety and cause chaos in the building industry. Congress should allow the FHA to eliminate its standards, but should strongly encourage states to adopt life-safety codes as replacements.

The FHA standards apply to homes built with federal subsidies or with loans guaranteed by the FHA, the Veterans Administration and the Farmers Home Administration. Most building codes confine themselves to technical requirements that affect health and safety — requirements that some consumers cannot adequately understand. But the FHA regulations also set numerous aesthetic standards (such as on house colors, room size and configuration, etc.) that are arbitrary, unnecessary and add to housing costs.

In place of its own standards, the FHA proposes to defer to local building codes where they exist. In areas not covered by a local code, the agency would require that homes built under a federal loan guarantee comply with a model life-safety code, such as that developed by the Council of American Building Officials.

While the existing FHA standards may have shortcomings, relying on local codes would make matters worse. Many local codes are outdated, irregularly enforced and incapable of protecting health and safety. By virtue of their influence through FHA, FmHA and VA loan guarantees, the federal standards have provided consumers with important protection against such inadequacies. Repealing the federal requirements would eliminate that protection — and would put federal agencies at risk of insuring mortgages on substandard housing. Moreover, local codes pose a larger impediment to housing innovation than the FHA standards.

The solution lies neither with local codes nor with FHA standards, but with statewide adoption of model codes like that of the Council of American Building Officials. The model codes are regularly updated, allow adaptation to local conditions and encourage innovation. If Congress permits the FHA standards to be phased out, it should also prohibit local guarantees or housing subsidies in states that do not adopt and enforce one of the model codes.

JACK ANDERSON
Black Lung help isn't coming

WASHINGTON — Tomorrow's the day politicians pay their annual lip service to the American labor movement. This is fitting and proper, but it might mean a little more to someone like Carnell Rasnake if the politicians would match their words with action.

Jack Anderson

Mrs. Rasnake is the widow of a coal miner who contracted black lung disease and died last year from cancer. Her ordeal illustrates poignantly that the black lung benefits program established by Congress is not working the way it was intended to.

The law set up a Black Lung Trust Fund financed by a set fee on every ton of coal, paid by mine operators. The idea was to make sure black lung victims or their families would be able to collect benefits when coal companies either refused to pay judgments or couldn't because of bankruptcy.

But good intentions don't always make good law, particularly when the bureaucrats don't feel like enforcing it. Rep. John Murtha, D-Pa., has said the black lung program is "a classic case of the government's bureaucracy failing to act, failing to be responsible and failing to do its job."

Mrs. Rasnake, the coal miner's widow from Cleveland, Va., is trapped in the bureaucratic nightmare with no awakening in sight. Over the next several years —her attorney guesses it could stretch to 1993 — she faces a prolonged legal battle with her late husband's employer, Clinchfield Coal Co., a division of the Pittston Co. At stake is the $22,325 in settlements awarded to her husband between 1977 and 1980, plus $492 a month in widow's benefits that she began drawing recently.

Clinchfield Coal has appealed all the benefit awards — and if the company eventually wins, Mrs. Rasnake will have to pay the company back all the money she and her husband collected.

The odds that Mrs. Rasnake will get to keep the money she has been paid are not exactly encouraging. When her husband applied for black lung benefits in 1977 after more than 18 years in the mines, he won his case and was paid a total of $16,993. But the company appealed and won, stopping Rasnake's benefits in 1980.

Rasnake appealed to the Benefits Review Board and lost again. The appeal dragged out until April 1984. He died in July of that year. With the autopsy report as evidence, Mrs. Rasnake filed a widow's claim and was awarded back benefits of $5,331.80, plus the $492 a month.

But once again Clinchfield has decided to appeal the award. It is one of about 330 adverse decisions the coal company is fighting. "We win about 80 percent of the cases we litigate," a company spokesman told our reporter Diane Jacobs. "I think that tells you something."

The problems of individual claimants — and the coal companies too, for that matter — are exacerbated by the backlog of claims cases that resulted from Congress' 1977 decision to set up the trust fund financed by coal company contributions, instead of paying black lung victims directly from the Treasury.

This led to a re-evaluation of some 200,000 claims that had previously been rejected, and the review is still clogging the system. According to the General Accounting Office, there are now at least 21,000 cases in the backlog, with 5,000 more piling up each year. And because there are only 28 judges assigned to black lung cases, the GAO estimates that it could take 35 years to clear them up.

"Delay, excuse and complications have become accepted as the normal order of business," said Murtha. Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., suspects it's not just innocent incompetence at work. He calls it "a deliberate, three-pronged attack on the payment of benefits."

Surprisingly, a Labor Department official agreed with this unflattering assessment. He shifted much of the blame on other agencies involved in the program, however.

The official said the Office of Management and Budget ordered Labor to hold down the number of new black lung beneficiaries. Since 1978, the trust fund is some $2 billion in arrears in its payments to the Treasury, and OMB budget cutters want to keep the debt from growing any bigger.

As for the backlog of claims cases, the Labor Department official said that the Office of Personnel Management sets the rules for administrative law judges who review the cases — and OPM has refused to let higher-ranking judges work on the backlog.

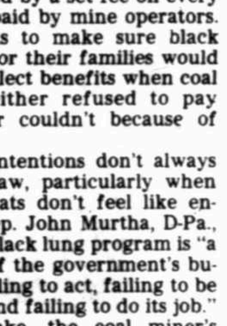

Two weeks ago, OPM relented and said it will allow higher-ranking judges to work on black lung cases. But the chief administrative judge at the Labor Department greeted this announcement with skepticism. He said any judge who agrees to handle the cases "runs the risk of being downgraded." OPM denies that this will happen.

Even the General Services Administration, the federal landlord, has added its bit to the bureaucratic mess. Though Congress has appropriated money for new staff to handle black lung appeals, there's not enough office space for all of them. Alteration of existing offices has been delayed, according to a GSA spokesman, because the agency "miscalculated the cost."

GEORGE F. WILL
Lucas model politician for era

DETROIT — Bill Lucas' manner is mild as milk. His speech is touched, as softly as by a Caribbean breeze, with the lilt of St. Martin's island, where he was born. This faint, musical inflection survived a Harlem childhood, during which both parents died within a year. His voice will resonate nationally next year when he tries to become America's first black governor. His attempt will have added drama because he was a Democrat until earlier this year, and now is running as a Republican.

George F. Will

Lucas is a 57-year-old with four grandchildren. He looks 45 and carries himself with the gliding grace of a distance runner, which he was in college. He has transmitted the discipline of the track to five children: a policeman, three doctors and one medical student.

Fresh from Fordham Law School, he joined Robert Kennedy's Justice Department, then became an FBI agent. He settled in Detroit. In 1968, the year after the riots, he became under sheriff of Wayne County, which contains Detroit and 2.3 million people — one-quarter of Michigan's population. It is the nation's fourth most populous county. He became sheriff in 1969 and served until 1983 when he became the first elected county executive, not bad for a man who says that few of the boys he knew in Harlem are still alive.

"I am," he says, "a fairly good judge of human nature, having spent my life on the streets." There is, he says, "nothing extraordinary" about his ideas for "an orderly society," such as: "If you keep doing something for people, they will continue to expect it." He believes that the form of discipline called patience is as important as intelligence. He runs a closely supervised youth jobs programs because "the ethics of work follow you all your life."

Even more than his words, his works cause Republican pulses to race. For example, by measures such as turning the county hospital over to private operation he cut the county's annual medical costs from $32 million to $4 million.

Changing political parties is a risky business, but less so for Lucas than for some. Not long ago a move from the Democratic to the Republican Party would have been perceived as going from something vaguely good to something narrow. Today the move can be portrayed, as Lucas does, as emancipation from "special interests." Besides, today the parties are more ideologically differentiated than they once were, and Lucas' ideas clearly establish him as a Republican, and a rarity.

Most black leaders of the old civil-rights groups now deny the principle that once animated those groups. It is the principle that race should be irrelevant to civic life and is inherently unacceptable as a basis for state action. These leaders have a vested interest in expanding what has emerged in the name of affirmative action: a racial spoils system of hiring quotas, minority "set asides" and the rest. Such leaders denounce blacks who deviate from the old orthodoxy that government action is the key to improving the condition of blacks.

Blacks especially, but all other Americans, too, suffer from the shortage of black leaders, especially elected leaders who will say this: The principal impediment to the improvement of blacks' lives is not racism; and changes in the behavior of individuals can do more than changes in government policy.

Those two propositions are true, as is this: Blacks in metropolitan ghettos face economic and cultural problems that would not be significantly less daunting were the blacks to become white.

Glenn C. Loury, a black professor at Harvard's Kennedy School, writes in The Public Interest that we live in the "post-civil rights" era. The principal challenge is the "internal problems which lower-class blacks now face." The problems are internal in the sense that they "involve at their core the values, attitudes and behaviors of individual blacks."

Nothing does more to perpetuate poverty than the disintegration of black families, and especially the conceiving of children out of wedlock. When two-thirds of the children born in a ghetto are illegitimate, that is a catastrophe that is not the fault of "society" and can not be corrected by Congress.

Political discourse has been impoverished by a black leadership class reluctant to focus on the values, attitudes and behavior of individuals. Lucas, a devout Catholic who is abstemious about alcohol and immoderate only about work, is eager to change the focus. That is why he became a Republican, and why he may be a paradigm of the right politician for the post-civil rights era.

ART BUCHWALD
Tourists are (un)happy travelers!

EDITOR'S NOTE: While Art Buchwald is on vacation we reprint some columns from the past.

As someone who has made a close study of tourism (there must be a cure for it), I believe I have isolated a certain type of tourist that for some reason has become more prevalent in recent years. This is the type of tourist who hates traveling.

Art Buchwald

While I've written in the past about individual tourists who hated traveling, I have discovered a new type of tourist who needs somebody else to hate it with.

There are couples now traveling who know before they even leave the United States they're going to hate it. But no matter how bad they think it's going to be, the reality is even worse than their wildest nightmares.

I met a couple like that not long ago. They had been touring Europe for a month and they were on the homestretch in Paris. When I caught up with them they couldn't decide which they hated more, Venice or Rome.

"Jane," the man said, "didn't like Rome, but I still thought it was better than Venice."

Jane said, "That's because Harry didn't have the experiences I had. I still maintain I'd rather spend four days in Venice than two in Rome."

"It was that bad, huh?"

Harry said, "Well, it wasn't as bad as Zurich."

Jane agreed. "We both hated Zurich. We didn't have any fun in Zurich at all. It was almost as bad as Copenhagen."

"You didn't like Copenhagen, huh?" I asked.

"Does anyone like Copenhagen?" Harry wanted to know. "Would you like to hear what happened to us in Copenhagen?"

"Not particularly," I said.

"We were terribly disappointed in Amsterdam," Jane said.

"Almost as disappointed as we were in Brussels," Harry said. "We couldn't wait till we got out of there and got to London."

"Which," said Jane, "turned out to be dreadful."

"The funny thing is," said Harry, "I hated it, but I thought Jane liked it, so I said I liked it."

"And," said Jane, "I thought Harry liked it so I didn't tell him I hated it. You can imagine our surprise when we discovered we both hated it. If we had known it at the beginning we would have left right away."

"But where would you have gone?" I asked.

"Not to Monte Carlo, that's for sure," Harry said.

"I don't know what anybody sees in that place," Jane said.

"You can have the entire Riviera as far as we're concerned," Harry added. "Just try to get a good dry martini on the Riviera. Just try."

"Well, what about Paris?" I foolishly asked.

"The worst," said Jane. "The people are so unfriendly and the prices are high, and I don't see what there is that's so special about Paris."

"Jane and I hate it," Harry said.

"You two seem to hate the same things," I said.

"Well, we know what we don't like," Jane said.

Harry said, "Europe's overrated. But we're glad we made the trip because now we can understand why other people don't like it either."

As I left the couple Harry was explaining to Jane why he didn't like the Arc de Triomphe, and Jane was telling Harry why she didn't like the Place de la Concorde. You couldn't find two happier people.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On this date:

In 1807, former Vice President Aaron Burr was found innocent of treason.

In 1878, Emma M. Nutt became the first woman telephone operator in the United States, for the Telephone Dispatch Co. of Boston.

In 1905, Alberta and Saskatchewan became the eighth and ninth provinces of Canada.

In 1923, Tokyo and Yokohama, Japan, were devastated by an earthquake that claimed some 150,000 lives.

In 1932, New York Mayor James J. "Gentleman Jimmy" Walker resigned following charges of graft and corruption in his administration.

In 1945, Americans received word of Japan's formal surrender. Due to the time difference, it was already Sept. 2 in Tokyo Bay, site of the surrender.

In 1972, American Bobby Fischer won the international chess crown in Reykjavik, Iceland, by defeating Soviet player Boris Spassky in their final match.

Seat belt law creates its own kind of fear

Bill Modisett

A female caller the other day had this bit of information concerning the new seat belt law that goes into effect today: It scares the hound out of her and she's attempting to organize a petition campaign to repeal the new law.

Hmm.

OK, I hate to say I told you so but, I did. The seat belt law is a multi-faceted bit of legal footwork that, statistically at least, will keep more people alive. Personally, I think wearing a seat belt and shoulder harness is a good idea. In fact, I've started wearing mine routinely. But I'm not going to tell this woman caller she ought to do the same. She's afraid of being trapped inside a burning car without being able to able to get the seat belt to release. I'm not going to even attempt to tell her that can't happen because it is entirely possible.

I do share the concern of a number of people who've called me at one time or another complaining that they, too, think wearing seat belts may help save lives but they just don't like being told they have to do it. Bluntly, the law grates on people, in this independent-minded region at least.

Maybe the law will help; I hope it will help save lives. But I have a sneaking suspicion it will be largely ignored and will come into play only in the event of court battles between insurance companies.

A lot of people have to be asking this question: If the government's going to tell you that you have to be strapped into a car, how long is it going to be before they start coming into homes telling people what they can watch on TV?

I'm certainly not in favor of a lot of the garbage being passed off as "art" on prime time television, but I'll be the one to determine what I watch, thank you.

When the government starts assuming it can make our lives a lot better — or safer — by controlling what we think, do and say, I believe it's time to start looking at ways of putting the government in its place.

Driving home the other day, I witnessed at least six — and maybe more — youngsters on bicycles weaving through heavy 5 o'clock traffic, across lanes, and not using a great degree of caution.

Fortunately, no accidents resulted, but I know that I dodged them and so did number of other motorists.

School's going to be starting in just another day or two, but I'm not certain whether that will make the problem any less prevalent.

There's no use blaming the parents; if they're typical parents they have their hands full simply paying the bills and putting food on the table. And parents can only exert authority so far. At some point, the kids themselves have to be accountable for their actions.

When I was a youngster, kids were taught bicycle safety and good "bicycle etiquette." As the encounter the other day shows, those principles of safe cycling have gone by the wayside.

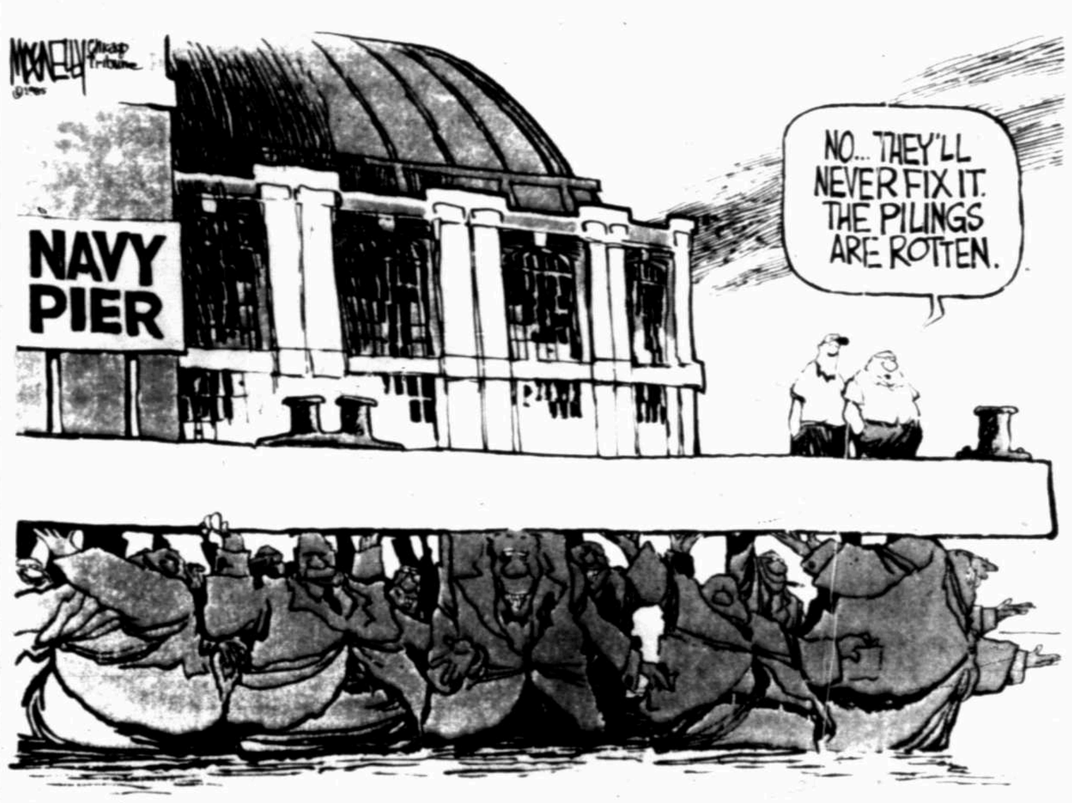

Make certain your children at least know the rules of staying alive when riding their bikes on public thoroughfares. You can only do so much as a parent to protect your children. Then the rest is up to them. But you should at least make them aware of safe bicycling rules.

Commendation given those who saved life

I would like to take this opportunity to commend four people for their immediate response in saving the life of a Midland man.

Thanks to these individuals; they gave this man a second chance to live. Responsible for this miracle are the following: Doug Daehling, Bill Goree, J.D. Luckie and Ron Shelnutt.

It is a blessing to know that someone was close by to help with the livesaving measures. I would like to thank these special people for all of their continuous efforts in giving life back to Ken Ivy.

West Texas lost great with death of Nix

Texas, especially West Texas, lost one of the all time greats in the recent passing of Hoyle Nix in Big Spring.

He had one of the finest dance-bands who performed for many years and thousands of people enjoyed his great style of music. Many well deserved honors were bestowed upon him during his lifetime. The large Baptist church in Big Spring where his funeral was held was filled to capacity including many of his friends from out of state. Surely the notice of his death could have been placed on a more prominent page than the Sport Section of the Midland Reporter-Telegram!

What an insult to one of the greatest fiddle players of our time. He will be sadly missed.

How could animal testing help humans?

Regarding your article dated Aug. 27, entitled Ector County officials hear opposition to sale of animals for research, it brings about several questions. First, how could animal testing improve the prognosis of chronic headaches? Have you ever thought of how science studies burns on aminals? They burn the animal first.

It would please me to share with any concerned individual information regarding actual animal testing supplied by the Society for Animal Protection Legislation for you to draw your own conclusion regarding animals used in research. Does it really hurt the animal?

I am against animal suffering for any reason. I don't understand how testing a dog or cat which walks on four legs and is covered in fur or hair can really benefit science for human benefit — vets don't recommend we feed animals what we eat, they claim their systems are different.

Have we who coldly murder unborn babies by the thousands really slipped to the level referred to in Matthew 24:12 (KJV) "Because iniquity shall abound, the love of many shall wax cold" — God loves the animals and we should too. I plead with you to spay and neuter your animals. An abundance of anything reduces its value to many. Protect those who cannot protect themselves.

Nineteen-year-old's opinion unfortunate

It was with sadness that we read your Africa story in last Thursday's paper. It is unfortunate that one 19-year-old, having spent seven weeks in The Gambia, has formed so many conclusive, negative opinions of the West African people. It is also unfortunate (and irresponsible journalism) that your paper put such a story on its fornt page. Reading of Miss Dyer's experience we were reminded of a foreigner we met several years ago who couldn't understand how we could tolerate living in the United States. She had driven through Detroit — once! We were thankful that we knew enough about the U.S. to take her opinion for what it was worth. However, most of the people who read your Africa piece have no first hand West African experience as a point of reference. Therefore, many of the erroneous statements made will be taken as fact.

Having spent a total of three years serving with the Peace Corps in Sierra Leone, West Africa, we would still not consider ourselves experts on the many people groups, languagues and cultures of the area. But, we did learn through our experience that where there is an unconditional love for the people one works with, there will be many fulfilling personal relationships, compassion, understanding and numerous bridges across cultural gaps.

Let us not form our biases and opinions from one brief encounter. Rather, let us take off our blinders and look at people of different cultures through eyes of love. We are so glad that we can blot out all of Miss Dyer's negative accounts with positive and hopeful ones from our experience in West Africa.

Watts letter raises hackles about Africa

If Marcelle Watts' attack on Dee Dee Dyer's commentaries on Africa was calculated to raise the hackles, then it was a successful job.

If Marcell Watts has been to Africa it would appear that she would have countered with her own observations. As she did not, one must assume that her convictions are not based on any personal knowledge but upon the pap that junketing Congressmen and screen personalities put out after two days of being wined and dined by political opportunists and psuedo leaders whose objective is stay only long enough to enrich themselves, go on a trip to allow some self-commissioned general to stage a coup and do likewise, and then seek asylum elsewhere.

Miss Dyer appears to be an astute and realistic young lady, not taken in by do-gooding idealists. Her commentaries could well be absorbed by those idealistic bureaucrats and other personalities who persist in sending aid to Africa in the form of complicated producer's goods which lie in rust and ruin.

Apartheid is an unwholesome thing. But it is an internal matter of South Africa and we should stop meddling in their affairs. Can we never learn. We meddled in Cuba during the Batista regime and look what we got. Castro and a mess in Miami. We meddled in Nicaragua nd cast out Somaza who had no evil intent toward us and look what we got and have.

The mayor of New York justifies our meddling by pointing to Nazi Germany as an example of what can happen if we do not do something in South Africa. But there is a big difference. South Africa is not attempting to conquer the world. She is trying to save herself from the same ruin that has happened to other African nations. One man, one vote will be the downfall of South Africa. Which would please the Soviets very much.

South Africa really a beautiful country

The last few days several articles have appeared condemning South Africa. A year ago my husband and I visited that beautiful country for two weeks, talking to blacks, Indians, whites both English and Africans. Our conclusions are very different from those expressed in your paper, on TV and in other publications.

We have also visited Egypt, Tunisia and Morocco, and found that Africa does not equal black, particularly in South Africa! Conditions there are the reverse of what happened in America. Whites encountered Indians and many were killed on both sides before the Indians were granted citizenship (well after we became a sovereign nation).

South African males may vote if white or Indian if they serve two years in military service without pay. Next year whites who hold dual citizenship of Great Britain and South Africa must declare themselves South Africans to live there. Blacks in apartheid have dwellings with water and sanitation, a right to a chance to work and an education. They have been used as cheap labor from other African states, in most instances in more primitive conditions than those in apartheid.

Gold and diamond mines as well as platinum and uranium are playing out and there is a decreased need for importing black labor, but the blacks continue to have large families, outgrowing their dwellings and causing unemployment problems. In our small group one Italian was stabbed in the neck, requiring nine stitches, by an unemployed black 17-year-old in a Cape Town mall!

Otherwise we saw wonderful animals and I particularly appreciated our black tracker who helped me see hippo in a hippo pond. Beautiful, modern cities with wonderful hotels and cafes — some of the finest we've seen in the 40 countries we've visited. The Cape of Good Hope and Indian Ocean are glories of nature as are anticlines, stinkwood and yellow trees.

We were told they didn't need us; they've always had to depend on themselves. South African Airlines is one of the finest in the world. South Africans voluntarily served with us in World War I, World War II, the Korean War and the Vietnam War.

What a nerve we have to criticize an ally with a problem when they're perfectly capable of solving their own problems.

There are reasons to be thankful

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

NEW YORK — For the great majority of American working men and women, there is reason to be thankful this Labor Day weekend.

A major study of President Reagan's domestic policies by the Urban Institute, a private, nonpartisan research organization, shows that the average family is better off now than in 1980.

Economic analysts in Washington predict no recession in 1986. Continued economic growth is foreseen for the rest of this year, probably at a rate slightly below 3 percent.

The fact the economy is not growing as fast as it did last year has been viewed positively by Wall Street. There was fear in financial and stock market circles that a too rapid growth could lead to an inflationary rise and a boom and bust scenario.

While the jobless rate rose rather sharply in July compared with its impressive drop in June, a Labor Department survey showed a rise of 300,000 in new jobs last month. In June, 460,000 Americans found more jobs. In May 890,000 new jobs were added to the economy.

While the 7.4 percent unemployment rate in July was still far too high, it was less than President Reagan inherited when he took command at the White House. Let us not forget this Labor Day weekend that his economic recovery program has created more than 6 million jobs since January, 1982, and that he also slayed the dragon of inflation.

Another encouraging development for which his recovery program deserves credit was the announcement this past week that the poverty rate declined last year to 14.4 percent, the largest one-year decrease in ten years. As the President said, that decrease is proof "the greatest enemy of poverty is the free enterprise system." While recognizing that the battle against poverty in this country is by no means over, he said the improvement in the poverty level last year does mean "that America, after a difficult decade, is once again headed in the right direction."

So I think optimism is justified this Labor Day, and, so too, are thanks to the working men and women who have helped bring about our recovery from the recession. We should all be grateful for the monumental contributions labor has made to the general welfare of our great nation.

Great and beneficial changes have taken place since Labor Day was established more than a century ago. Gone are the 12-hour work days seven days a week. Gone are the times when there was no illness and unemployment insurance, no obligatory severance payments for workers.

So let us all enjoy rest and relaxation this Labor Day. Let us also dedicate ourselves to support of our President so that he may continue economic policies that will bring down still further the unemployment rate, the poverty level, and the federal deficit.

FDIC probes wrongdoing at Hobbs bank

HOBBS (AP) — The Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. is investigating possible wrongdoing by management of Moncor Bank of Hobbs, which is the first bank in New Mexico to fail in the past 51 years.

"In every bank failure, it's not just the economy involved that caused the bank to fail," said John Anthony Vella, closing supervisor-auditor of the FDIC's liquidation office in Dallas.

"There's bad management involved in every bank failure," he said Friday night. "The FDIC will leave an investigative team to look into possible wrongdoing by management and the possible findings will be forwarded to the attorney general."

Moncor Bank of Hobbs was closed Friday after being declared insolvent by Michael Mancusi, senior deputy U.S. comptroller of the currency.

The FDIC, which insures member bank deposits up to $100,000 in the event of a closure, was declared as receiver.

Alan Whitney, corporate communications officer for the FDIC, said the bank failure was New Mexico's first in the history of the FDIC, which began Jan. 1, 1934.

"This is the 76th bank failure (nationally) so far this year, compared with 79 all of last year. It's also the third this week," he said in a telephone interview.

The closing followed Moncor Inc.'s filing Thursday for reorganization under Chapter 11 of the Federal Bankruptcy Code. Moncor, once the state's third-largest bank holding company, owns the bank in Hobbs and one in Roswell.

The Hobbs bank's nine offices will reopen Tuesday morning as United Bank of Lea County, Whitney said.

"It's a new state-chartered bank," he said. "It's owned by a new one-bank holding company called United Bancshares Inc."

Depositors at Hobbs Moncor "automatically become depositors of United Bank of Lea County," Whitney said.

LCRA water sales limited

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Water Commission has upheld its earlier ruling that the Lower Colorado River Authority must limit its water sales to protect a 1913 claim Austin has on Colorado River water.

The action came Friday after rice farmers, irrigators and officials from counties upstream and downstream of Austin testified in support of the river authority and against the city.

Candidate will address Labor Day celebration

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — David Hunsicker, Democratic candidate for the 21st Congressional District, will speak Monday at the Labor Day celebration here, it was announced by D.L. Willis, president of the Permian Basin Central Labor Union.

He is a resident of San Antonio with business interests as a realtor and builder of homes. Hunsicker is 46 and a Vietnam veteran. He flew 100 combat missions while serving in that war and later worked 4½ years at the Pentagon in Washington, D.C.

"Labor Day is the tradiional kick-off of political campaigns," Hunsicker said, "and I wanted to take this opportunity to meet with and get acquainted with the fine people in the Midland area and the western part of the district. I will be coming back a number of times in the course of the campaign."

Hunsicker and his wife, Janie, have a son and a daughter, who are college students.

The Labor Day celebration will start at noon in Floyd Gwin Park, West 10th and West County Road. The event will feature speakers, food, sack races and other games for the kids and a fiddlers contest. In event of bad weather, all activities will be moved into the auditorium.

Construction crews to begin work on Texas Avenue, Midkiff Road

From Staff Reports

The city of Midland will begin work on two sections of streets this week.

Construction on Texas Avenue between Pecos Street and Colorado Street will start Wednesday morning. Parking will be removed and traffic will be restricted from four down to two lanes. This is a street reconstruction project similar to one completed recently on Illinois Avenue, according to a department spokesman.

Construction on Midkiff Road between Neely Avenue and Wadley Avenue will begin Thursday morning. During the first phase of the project traffic will be restricted to one lane each direction on the west side of the road.

Motorists are advised to find alternate routes to avoid the congestion, if possible, according to the city spokesman.

Goat war hot at Brady cook-off

BRADY, Texas (AP) — "Goat war," complete with pill-flippers and tobacco spitters, raged mercilessly in the West Texas town Saturday, drawing more than 10,000 people to watch the festivities at the 12th Annual World Championship Barbeque Goat Cook Off.

"There's a goat war out there," said judge Bob "Tumbleweed Smith" Lewis, pointing to the smoky Richards Park campgrounds where 125 goat cookers barbecued their meat. "They're desperate and fighting among themselves."

But after cooking through a day of 102-degree heat, the spoils of victory went to Ronnie Horton and Richard Jackson of Llano.

Dealers help repair, replace seat belts

From Staff Reports

Midland New Car Dealers Association is offering seat belt repair and replacement at a reduced cost to help Texas motorists comply with the state law that requires front seat passengers in cars and pickups to wear safety belts.

Dealer members are offering the service during September and October, which should give those motorists time before the penalty phase of the law begins, to repair broken belts and to replace belts that had been removed.

Beginning today, Texas law will require front seat passengers in automobiles and pickups to wear safety belts.

The service is being offered as part of a statewide program initiated by the Texas Automobile Dealers Association, which represents about 95 percent of the franchised new car and truck dealers in Texas.

Most dealers can help oversized motorists get extended belts, which give added length to belts.

Members of the association include Honda of Midland, Midway Motors, Dotson Nissan, Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Sloan Brothers Buick, Friendly Pontiac, Rogers Ford, Berg Motor Co., Village Lincoln Mercury and Subaru-Saab of Midland.

Beginning today, Texas law will require front seat passengers in automobiles and pickups to wear safety belts.

Jimmy Carter's staffers have Plains reunion

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — More than four years after leaving the White House, Jimmy Carter and his wife Rosalynn were in the ex-president's hometown this weekend for a reunion of former members of the Carter administration.

"Most of you look better than you did four years ago," Carter quipped Saturday to about 75 of his ex-staffers, some wearing faded "Carter for President" T-shirts.

Under cloudy skies, Carter expressed concern about the effect of Hurricane Elena, which was over the northeast Gulf of Mexico, on the weather.

"So far the Baptists' prayers have worked," he joked. "We're going to turn it over to the Catholics this afternoon."

Jody Powell, Carter's White House press secretary, said more than 300 people were attending the two-day gathering, which was to include a softball game and fish fry Saturday and a barbeque and church service Sunday.

Since leaving the White House after his loss to Ronald Reagan in 1980, Carter has taught at Emory University in Atlanta and has written two books, while Mrs. Carter has written one.

"We're really busy and have some exciting things going on," the former first lady said.

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Secretly recorded tapes will serve as critical evidence against a priest accused of lying on behalf of Claus von Bulow, the socialite acquitted of twice trying to murder his wife, court papers show.

The Rev. Philip Magaldi is charged with perjury and obstruction of justice for an affidavit he signed corroborating a statement that Martha "Sunny" von Bulow and her son received packages of drugs, needles and syringes.

Von Bulow, who is traveling in Europe, has said he would be willing to testify at Magaldi's trial, which is scheduled to begin later this month.

The affidavit bolstered von Bulow's contention that his wife's temporary coma in 1979 and a permament one suffered a year later were caused by her use of drugs and alcohol. The prosecution contended that von Bulow caused them with injections of insulin.

The priest's affidavit said David Marriott of Massachusetts told him of the drug deliveries long before Mrs. von Bulow's comas and the charges against her husband.

But earlier this year Marriott recanted his statement, claiming von Bulow wrote it himself and coerced Marriott to sign it.

Marriott turned over tapes of conversations he had with Magaldi to authorities.

Chun briefed Nixon on South Korea's relations with the United States and China and on his government's efforts to ease tensions with North Korea, officials said. Nixon also met separately with Korean Prime Minister Lho Shin-yong.

Angels end season in style, defeat Dodgers, 12-6

Heath replaces aching Davis, blasts grand slam

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Catcher David Heath wasn't even supposed to play Saturday night, but Doug Davis came up with an aching back. The results were disasterous ...for San Antonio.

Heath blasted a grand slam homer in the third and cracked out three other hits to knock in five runs as the Midland Angels closed out the Texas League season with a 12-6 win over the San Antonio Dodgers.

James Randall hit two homers to drive in four runs while Brian Hartsock walloped his 13th homer in a game that was not as close as the score makes it look.

SAN ANTONIO came up with four ninth inning runs off relief pitcher Julian Gonzalez, who relieved starter Ken Angulo in the eight.

Angulo became Midland's only 10-game winner, finishing 10-5. The Santa Clara product had allowed just six hits and one earned run when he left with two out in the eight, one run in and the bases load. Gonzalez got Ken Harvey on strikes for the third out, but then encountered a bumpy ninth.

There seems to be some debate over whether Angulo qualifies as a sidewheeling portsider or, as described by one imaginative writer, a "portly sidewinder". As far as the Dodgers were concerned, he was the latter Saturday night, fanning four and walking only three.

And before you go crazy over the suspense, yes, Billie Merrifield did extend his consecutive game hitting streak to 23 games with a line drive single to right center in the third. It followed a single by Mike Madril, which touched off a five-run inning featured by Heath's jackpot ($170) wallop a belt over the left field fence with Merrifield, Phil Stephenson, and Brian Hartsock on base.

RANDALL and Hartsock hit back-to-back homers to open the second off loser Mike Cherry, 2-7, to give Midland a 2-0 lead and, since the Angels never trailed, it was the second game-winning hit in a row for Randall. He also had the game-winner Friday with a double.

Randall also connected for a three-run homer in the eighth, a superfluous flourish, seemingly, that gave Midland a 12-2 lead, but it was a nice cushion when the Dodgers rallied for four runs.

And on defense, Randall again came up with a big defensive play in the fourth inning after the Dodgers scored an unearned run. With runners on first and third, the Dodgers misjudged both Randall's speed and arm. Sap came charging in on Bill White's fast-sinking liner to left and gunned down Harvey trying to scramble back to first for an inning-ending double play.

As for Heath, about the only thing he failed to do was triple. That would have given him a cycle to go with his slam. As it was, he wound up with two singles and a double for the night.

HALOCINATIONS—A Fan Appreciation Night crowd of 1,280 showed up for the season's final game to bring Midland's record-setting attendance to 125,149 for 66 home dates...The win gave Midland a 30-40 record for the second half and a 35-34 home record for the season-...And against San Antonio, the Angels held an 18-14 edge...The Dodgers' Jose Gonzalez was scheduled to report to Los Angeles for the final month of the season....Only Angel scheduled for Instructional League play in Mesa, Ariz., is Kevin Davis, but Mark McLemore probably will pllay winter ball in Puerto Rico-...Heath's 4-for-5 binge assured a plus .300 season since he entered the game with a .305 average....

'Dog attack led by returning offensive backfield

By BOB BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

The 1984 season was a learning year for Midland High under the guidance of first-year head coach Doug McCutchen. Not only did the Bulldogs have to learn the quirks of their new coach, but also his new system.

Learn his system the Bulldogs did, and they learned it quickly, quick enough for a 4-0 start in '84, 1-0 in District 4-5A. Then, the Bulldogs fell on hard times. They lost five of their final six games to finish with a 5-5 record, 2-5 in loop action.

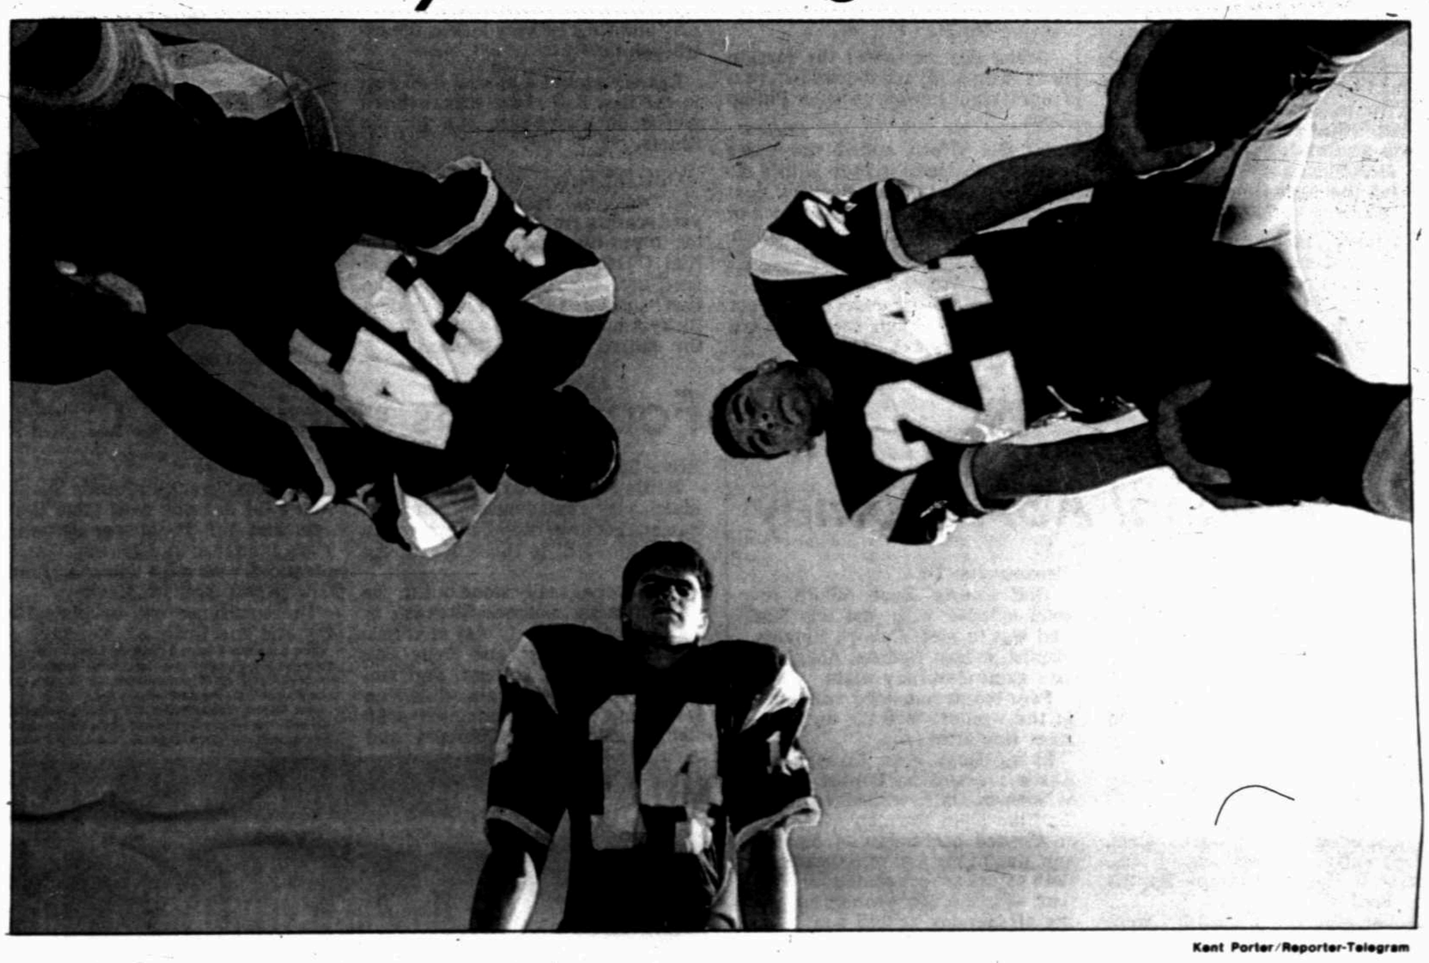

This year, the Bulldogs have spent less time learning the system and more time on conditioning and repetition.

"We feel right now like we've gotten off to an excellent start," said McCutchen. "We feel the team came out in excellent condition and they have retained a lot from last year."

The Bulldogs have also retained a lot of skill position talent to work with this year along with some top backup talent from the '84 sophomore squad that posted a 7-1 record.

Most notable among returnees is the offensive backfield where honorable mention All-District quarterback Matt Marcum and starting halfback Jake Madrid enter their final year of play. Joining the duo is letterman Mark Johnson, who saw a lot of playing time at halfback last year.

"So far this year, the big thing about Matt is he's more mature, more confident," said McCutchen. "We feel like he's got to be the mainstay for us to be productive. He has a natural throwing ability so he has the opportunity to be a great passer. We have to classify him as a good runner. He has adequate speed and does a good job of running that ball."

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

The punch in the Midland High attack comes from the backfield where two starters and a letterman are back for 1985. At quarterback for the Bulldogs is Matt Marcum (14) and he'll be giving the ball to halfbacks Mark Johnson (34) and Jake Madrid (24).

With the Bulldogs' veer attack, a mobile quarterback is a must, running the option pitch or bootleg can't be done from a crawl. Marcum doesn't have the speed of some of his backfield mates, but he has more speed than a lot of quarterbacks in recent MHS history.

Last year, Marcum (165, senior) completed 79-of-176 passes for 1,187 yards and nine touchdowns. He also added 91 yards on 57 carries for another TD.

Having two experienced halfbacks is only part of the reason McCutchen is anticipating a strong running attack this year. Along with Madrid (165, senior) and Johnson (175, senior), the Bulldogs have two juniors with the kind of break-away speed MHS has lacked for some time. The underclassman duo consists of Anthony Adkinson (135, junior) and Tyrone Oliver (135, junior).

"We feel like the running backs this year are stronger than last year," said McCutchen. "First, they have a better understanding of the system this year and second, we think Mark and Jake have the maturity as well as natural ability to be great backs. They both have good size and speed."

Madrid was Midland High's top running back last year with 125 carries for 585 yards and six TDs. Johnson had 40 yards on 12 carries.

Also out of the veer is a strong passing capability that McCutchen hopes to utilize, both to receivers and his backfield. Madrid was the No. 3 receiver a year ago for the 'Dogs behind All-District first team Darrell Davis and honorable mention Allan Foret, catching 16 passes for 194 yards and three TDs.

"We do throw to our backs and Jake proved himself last year," said McCutchen. "Mark still has to prove himself, but we feel both can do the job and move the ball upfield after they catch it."

And, about his speedsters, McCutchen said, "One thing they have nobody else has on the team is flat out speed. They're the two fastest players we've got. Both ran under 4.7 last spring in the 40. They give us added speed and maneuverability that we didn't have last year. Also added depth."

Greenwood's bid for 8-2A title has some strength

Area Football

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the last in a series of previews on area high school football teams. Today, a look at the Greenwood Rangers.

By ERIC SCHURER
Sports Writer

GREENWOOD — Don't expect the Greenwood Rangers to sneak up on anyone in the District 8-2A football chase this season.

Not after last season when they made a remarkably successful jump from Class A football into this competitive 2A district with a 7-2-1 overall mark, 2-2-1 in district play. The surprising Rangers even went into the last weekend of play with a good shot at making the playoffs, and that after many observers had predicted a dismal 2A debut for the Rangers.

In 1985, coach Joe Longley returns 14 letterman from last season's squad — seven starters on defense and six on offense — and the Rangers could make a serious bid for a playoff spot in what looks to be the ever-expanding school's last year in 2A before moving up another notch to 3A.

"WE'LL BE in the thick of it or we'll determine it for somebody again this year," Longley predicts. "And if we get the breaks, it could be us. I think the race will depend on who gets on a roll. You never know what will happen in a district like this."

One player who isn't coming back for the Rangers is tailback Roger Smith, who gained over 3,000 yards the past two seasons for Longley. This season's tailback, junior Brad Rose, will have large shoes to fill, but he will have a lot of help in Greenwood's "wing T" offense. Longley foresees a balanced attack with the workload being spread among a variety of offensive weapons.

Quarterback Chad Longley, an All-District performer in the secondary, returns to direct the offense after a fine junior season. Longley threw for more than 800 yards and 11 touchdowns in 1984 while completing better than 50 percent of his passes. The other returning starter in the backfield is wingback Abel Mireles.

FULLBACK GARRETT Mattison, a deceiving 135-pounder, could muscle his way to some big yardage this season. "He's well put-together, sort of like a miniature Hulk," Longley says.

The younger Longley will fling his passes mostly to junior wide outs Steve Popham and Mark Graham. Both are speedy enough to pose a deep, outside threat.

The front wall returns four starters including all-district left guard Steve Heryford a sturdy 150-pounder. Joining Heryford from last year's line are seniors Billy Malson, Rodney Hamilton at guard and center Brian Underwood. The tackle spots will be manned by Bobby Clark and sophomore Joey Sims.

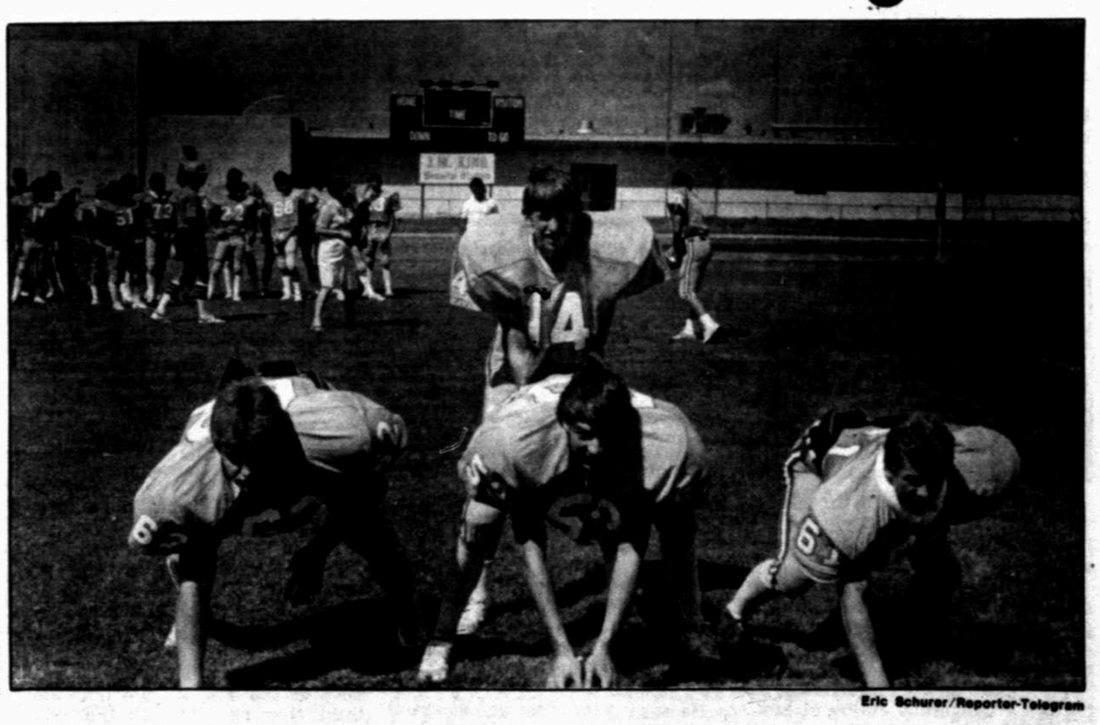

While the offensive squad looks to be dangerous enough, the Rangers could be even more imposing on defense.

"OUR DEFENSIVE unit should be the better unit," Longley said. "We have the potential to be a really good defensive team."

Backing up that claim at linebacker are a pair of heavy-hitting seniors, Rodney Hamilton and Heryford, a second-team performer on defense as well.

The secondary also looks strong with Longley acting as the quarterback of the defensive backfield. Graham is also a second-year starter and Bobby Clark steps into the third slot while three players vie for the vital "monster" spot.

Greenwood quarterback Chad Longley (14) should get plenty of protection this year with the likes of Rodney Hamilton (62), Brian Underwood (53) and Steve Heryford (61) in front of him.

MOJO one of two champs ranked No. 1 for 1985

Associated Press

Two defending state champions, Odessa Permian in Class 5A and Munday in A, are joined by Class 4A runnerup Tomball, Hempstead in 3A and Electra in 2A as the No. 1 ranked teams in The Associated Press preseason schoolboy football poll.

Permian, the perennial West Texas powerhouse, graduated all but five starters from its 1984 team, which shared the 5A title with Beaumont French after a 21-21 championship game.

But the Panthers, 15-0-1 last season, received 17 of the 22 first-place votes cast by the AP's panel of Texas sportswriters and sportscasters and took a strong hold on first place ahead of runnerup Conroe by a 200-157 point margin.

Converse Judson, 10-4, a quarterfinalist last season, ranked third in the preseason ranking, with Houston Yates and Temple rounding out the top five. Conroe, 10-4, lost to Dallas Highland Park in the quarter-finals.

Pokes close preseason with 20-10 win over Oilers

Cowboys perfect for first time since 1971

Associated Press

IRVING (AP) — Dallas quarterback Gary Hogeboom rifled a pair of 24-yard touchdown passes Saturday night and the Cowboys finished the National Football League preseason unbeaten for the first time since 1971 with a 20-10 victory over the Houston Oilers.

The game-winner came on a 24-yard scoring shot to rookie wide receiver Leon (Speedy) Gonzalez with 4:44 left in the third period. Gonzalez is a seventh round pick from Bethune Cookman.

Dallas' perfect preseason was 4-0 while the Oilers were 1-4. Only the Cowboys, the New York Giants and Washington Redskins compiled unblemished exhibition slates.

The Cowboys fell behind 10-0 in a first quarter in which they didn't produce a first down.

Tony Zendejas' 49-yard field goal and Warren Moon's 51-yard scoring pass to rookie Mike Akiu, a seventh round draft pick from Hawaii, put the underdog Oilers ahead. Moon later suffered a ripped nail on his right thumb and sat out the second half.

Dallas came back on a 34-yard field goal by Rafael Septien and a 24-yard Hogeboom to Tony Dorsett touchdown pass to tie the game 10-all at halftime.

Rookie linebacker Jesse Penn intercepted an Oliver Luck pass late in the fourth period to set up a 29-yard field goal by Septien.

Danny White, the Cowboys' starting quarterback, didn't suit out as a precautionary measure because of a rib injury.

Dallas is now 15-4 against the Oilers in the annual battle for Texas bragging rights and has beaten the Oilers seven straight times in the preseason.

The biggest defensive play of the night for the Cowboys came when free safety Mike Downs blocked Zendejas' 23-yard field goal attempt in the second period.

Two possessions later the Cowboys drove 80 yards to score on Dorsett's fine catch and run.

A crowd of 53,812 fans sweltered through 97-degree temperatures in Texas Stadium in the preseason finale.

Third string quarterback Steve Pelluer played the entire fourth period for the Cowboys after Hogeboom hit 13 of 25 passes for 186 yards.

The game marked the use of radio transmitters for the wide receivers and quarterbacks for the first time in an NFL game.

Bears 45, Bills 14

CHICAGO — Jim McMahon threw for 149 yards in the first half and Calvin Thomas scored two touchdowns as the Chicago Bears beat Buffalo.

Walter Payton rushed 13 times for 60 yards in the first half as the Bears won their first game of the pre-season after three losses.

Buffalo, which got two first-half touchdown receptions by rookie Andre Reed, was hurt by penalties as the Bills fell to 0-3-1.

The Bears took a 24-14 first-half lead, almost matching the 29 points they had scored in their first three games.

Matt Suhey scored on a two-yard smash on Chicago's first possession, and McMahon scored on an 11-yard bootleg the next time Chicago had the ball.

Buffalo's Vince Ferragamo hurled a 57-yard scoring strike to Reed to put the Bills on the scoreboard with 9:05 left in the half.

But Payton, whose fumble had set up Buffalo's touchdown, scored on a 6-yard burst up the middle in the next series.

Ferragamo and Reed hooked up for a 40-yard touchdown bomb on the next series, as Buffalo cut the lead to 21-14. Ferragamo finished with nine of 19 for 183 yards and two interceptions in the first half. Greg Bell rushed for 83 yards for Buffalo in the first half.

Kevin Butler added a 21-yard field goal for Chicago to close first-half scoring.

After a scoreless third, Thomas scored on a pair of 1-yard runs, and Anthony Hutchison scored on a 16-yard touchdown run for the Bears.

Jets 30, Packers 20

GREEN BAY, Wis. — Pat Leahy kicked three field goals of 24, 30 and 35 yards and Johnny Hector ran for two touchdowns Saturday night to boost the New York Jets to a victory over the Green Bay Packers.

It was the Jets' first preseason victory against three defeats. The loss dropped Green Bay's exhibition record to 1-3.

New York led 24-10 at the half after the Packers yielded the Jets 17 points. Green Bay's defense stiffened in the second half and the Packers' offense, led by reserve quarterback Randy Wright, began moving through the air.

Green Bay narrowed the margin to 24-16 on a 35-yard touchdown pass from Wright to wide receiver Phillip Epps.

Al Del Greco added the extra point, then made it 24-20 with a 42-yard field goal on the Packers' next possession, which followed a sack of New York's Ken O'Brien by defensive end Robert Brown.

But early in the fourth quarter, the Jets' offense recovered and got Leahy close enough for a 30-yard field goal to make 27-20.

With 4:04 left, Leahy kicked a 35-yard field goal to put the game out of reach, following up a key interception of Wright by cornerback Bobby Jackson.

Chiefs 17, Cardinals 13

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bill Kenney, never known as a runner, scrambled 28 yards to set up Ken Lacy's five-yard scoring burst Saturday night and spark the Kansas City Chiefs to a victory over St. Louis.

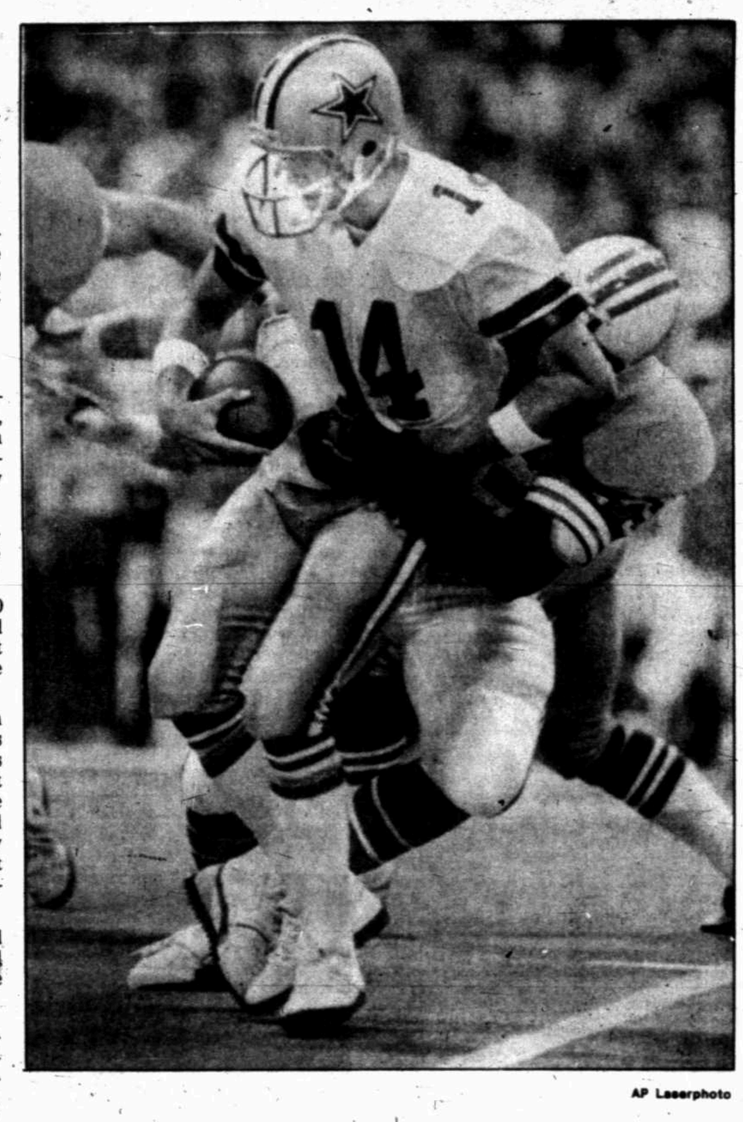

The Chiefs closed out the exhibition season with a 3-1 record. The Cardinals finished 2-2.

The Cardinals were leading 13-10 early in the third period when Earl Ferrell fumbled a Kansas City punt and Bruce King recovered for the Chiefs on the St. Louis 33.

Kenney, who passed for more than 4,000 yards two seasons ago but was slowed much of 1984 by injury, was forced out of the pocket on the first play. But, finding the left sideline almost deserted, he set sail toward the end zone and got to the 5. Lacy went over the middle on the next play and Nick Lowery kicked the extra point.

Lowery kicked a 36-yard field goal in the first half and Herman Heard scored on a five-yard run for the Chiefs.

Ottis Anderson uncorked a darting, weaving, tackle-breaking 18-yard scoring run in the second quarter to put the Cardinals on top 10-3. Neil O'Donoghue kicked a 37-yard field goal for the Cardinals in the first quarter and St. Louis rookie Ricky Anderson added a 34-yarder at the end of the second period.

Elliott one race from $1 million

DARLINGTON, S.C. (AP) — Bill Elliott wants nothing more than a fair opportunity to earn the first $1 million jackpot in auto racing history.

And Elliott figures his team has done everything possible to prepare for that shot in Sunday's Southern 500 Grand National stock car race.

"We've checked, checked and rechecked everything," he said of his intimidating Ford Thunderbird. "I think the car's working pretty good generally. Now, the main thing is if it works that way all day long."

The 29-year-old driver from Dawsonville, Ga., will be just one of 40 starters in the 500-mile race scheduled to start at noon, but he is starting from the pole and is the only one with the chance to win the Winston Million, the big prize put up by R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. for any driver who can win three of the "Big Four" Grand National events in a single season.

Elliott, on the way to nine victories in 19 starts this season, has won two of the big ones, the Daytona 500 and the Winston 500. A brake problem kept him from clinching the $1 million in the World 600 in May.

One local team remains in National ASA tourney

From Staff Reports

Four of the five local and area teams were eliminated Saturday during action in the National ASA Men's Church Class A Slow Pitch Softball tournament at the Bill Williams complex at Hogan Park.

Golf Course Road Church of Christ Grey was eliminated when they suffered their second loss, 20-13, to Harwood Temple Baptist of Bedford.

Also eliminated Saturday were Odessa's two representatives in the tournament. Golf Course Road Church of Christ White of Midland knocked Temple Baptist of Odessa out of the tournament with a 9-1 victory while Sherwood Baptist of Odessa was eliminated when they lost to St. Mary's of Brownsville, 7-6.

Golf Course Road White remained alive with just one lass and was to meet College Heights Baptist of East Gadsen, Ala., in a late game Saturday night.

Four teams remained unbeaten in the winner's bracket and will meet this afternoon.

Evangelical Free Church of Austin meets First Baptist black of Norman, Okla., while First Baptist Blue from Norman will take on Blessed Sacrement of Savannah, Ga., in the test of unbeatens. Both games are scheduled for 3:30 p.m. with the two winners squaring off Sunday at 8:15 p.m. in a game that will boost one of the teams into the finals Monday.

A pair of loser's bracket games kickoff today's action at 1 p.m. Starting action today, only 12 of the 28 teams that started the double elimination tournament will still be in contention.

Picks are never easy

The boss says I have to do this every year — pick the outcome of the District 4-5A football race before the teams ever play a game.

Personally, I think it takes a sadistic nature to do this sort of thing. I guess the boss likes to hear the snicker of football fans in the background.

Yes, I know all the magazines do it, but it's a dangerous outing at best. And it's even tougher this year, thanks to our friend H. Ross.

When picking 4-5A, you must keep in mind No Pass, No Play — which translates to No Play, No Win for prognosticators. Thank you, Mr. Perot or Gov. White or whoever is currently taking credit for this mess now.

You have to keep in mind that in six weeks, some athletes are going to go by the grade grave. That's just about the time Lee meets Permian and Midland High takes on Odessa High. That's critical.

A prognosticator must keep these facts in mind. It takes a lot more research to pick winners and losers. For instance, is the Permian quarterback taking advanced chemistry or basket weaving? Is Midland High's inexperienced offensive line taking a course load of English, advanced math and physics, or homemaking, introduction to sling shot shooting and advanced tiddlywinks.

Before you make a pick, you should check out the team IQ of Abilene High and the stress factor at Odessa High. Maybe it's Big Spring who has the league's brains.

I WAS wondering if Lee's Rebels would make the playoffs for the third year in a row, but Lee assistant coach Ronnie Stephens took me off the hook by discussing No Pass, No Play this summer.

He says, "The first six weeks is really not the problem in football because classes are just getting started and the difficult subject matter comes a little later. The problem comes around the 12th game when you are in the playoffs."

Now I don't know how fans translate that statement, but sports writers use those kind of quotes to take advantage, Backhanded Journalism 101. To me, that says Lee will be back in the playoffs, so the monkey is off my back.

And if Coach Stephens didn't mean that, I'm sorry. After all, it was Midland College's Ralph Sellmeyer who taught Backhanded Journalism when I was his student at Texas Tech. I owe everything to him. Thanks Ralph for the course.

So here goes for 1985:

1. Odessa Permian: Who can fight five championships in a row, the magazine polls, AP poll, Harris poll and a quarterback who is taking basket weaving.

2. Midland Lee: Isn't that what the coach said? The third edition of the New Tradition has a good home schedule, some Hogs who can pass every subject and Coach Stephens.

3. San Angelo: A lot of people are saying the Bobcats are No. 2 in the league, but the TV people aren't asking to televise their game with Permian.

4. Abilene High: The Eagles were salty at the end of 1984 and they think they can fly high this year. The problem is Permian in the first district game of the year and that has plucked the feathers of more teams than a chicken plucker.

5. Midland High: No one seems to be taking the Bulldogs seriously, but this is a real sleeper with a good early schedule. And the Dawgs all have new knee braces. If they can pass, they should stay healthy.

6. Odessa High: The Bronchos are better than last year, but the problem is everyone outside of Permian, Lee and San Angelo are better. The gap just hasn't closed enough on the top three.

7. Abilene Cooper: The Air Force arm of Doug Hadley is gone and that means the Cougars are grounded. They have a call in to the Army.

8. Big Spring: Everyone is saying that the Steers won't be walked on in 1985. They have a lot of returning starters, but last is last.

Lietzke, Sindelar share B.C. lead

ENDICOTT, N.Y. (AP) — Veteran Bruce Lietzke birdied the 18th hole Saturday to complete a 3-under-par round of 68 and catch Joey Sindelar for the lead of the B.C. Open after three rounds.

Sindelar, 27, who was tied with Lietzke and Brett Upper for the first-day lead, saw his three-shot edge evaporate in the last three holes of the round. The second-year touring pro from nearby Horseheads, N.Y., shot a 69 but bogeyed Nos. 16 and 17 to back into the tie at 7-under 206.

Mike Reid, Pat Lindsey, David Lundstrom and Jay Delsing were one shot back, with John Fought and Lonnie Nielsen at 208 in the chase for the $54,000 first prize in the $300,000 Professional Golfers' Association Tour event.

Delsing played steadily for a tour rookie, shooting two bogeys and a birdie the day after he tied the course record with a 62. But he never managed to find the putting touch he displayed on Friday.

Doug Tewell, the second-round coleader, shot 3-over-par 74 to drop back three shots into a cluster with Ken Green, Bill Glasson and Andy Magee at 209.

The damp greens of the 6,966-yard En Joie Golf Club layout were difficult for most of the field, with only 25 players producing sub-par rounds.

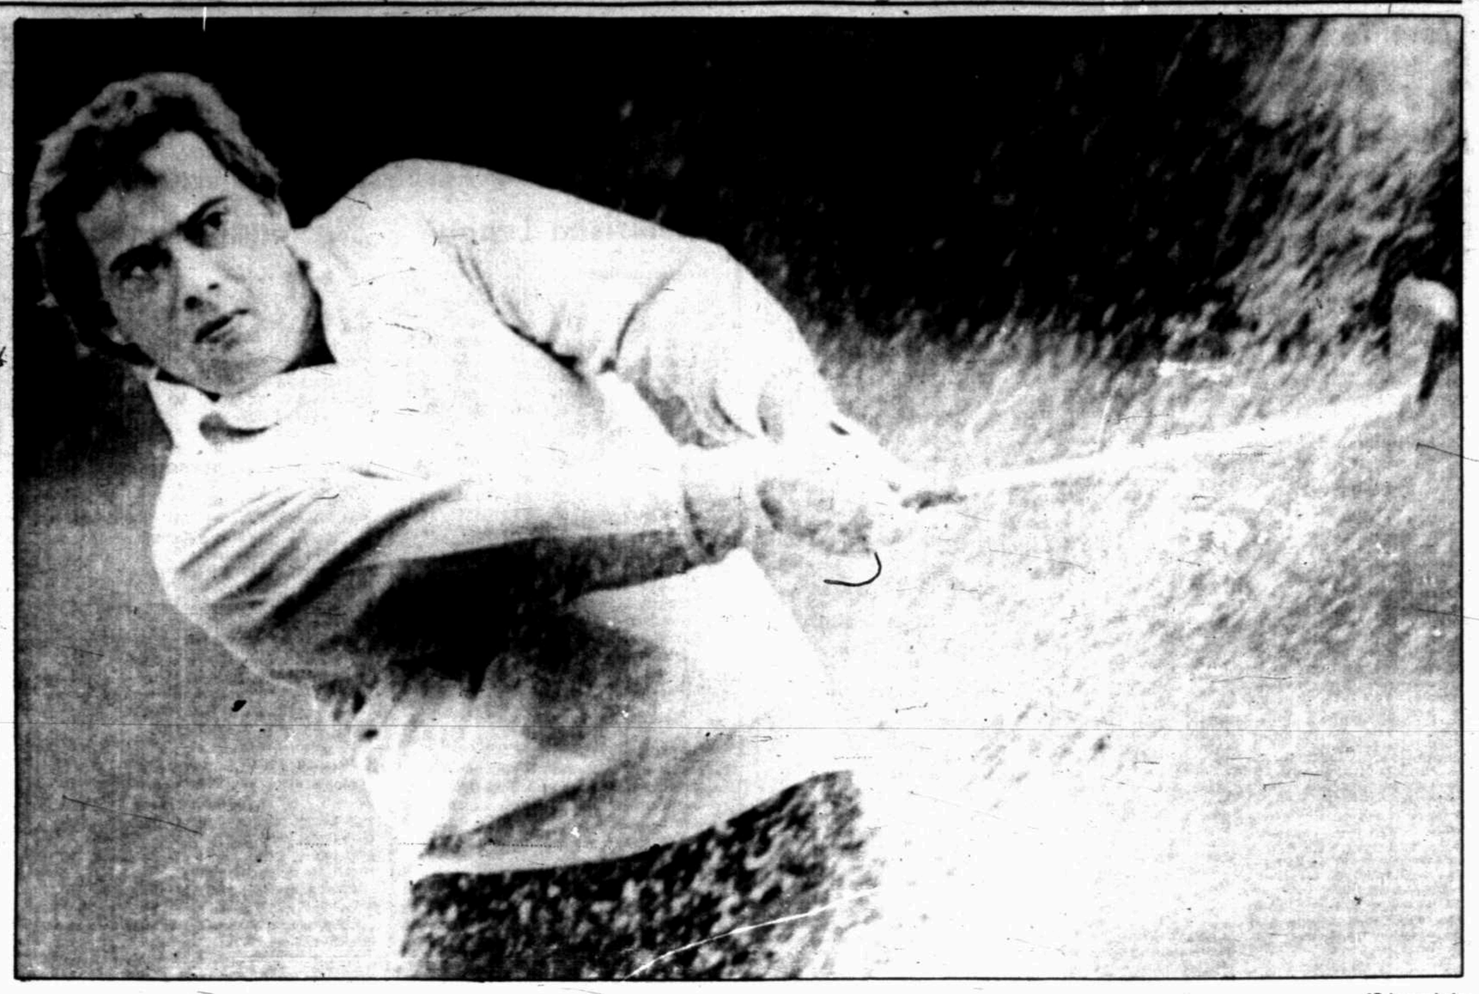

Of the 20 pros who had to play from one to three holes Saturday morning to complete the rain-delayed second round, Lundstrom fared the best, finishing his the last two holes for a second-round 68 and touring the next 18 in 69 shots.

Seventy-six players made the cut and remained in the tournament.

Lietzke, 34, a veteran going for his 11th title in 11 years, and Sindelar both birdied the 565-yard fifth hole. But Sindelar went ahead by two shots with a birdie on No. 7, a 200-yard par-3.

Lietzke, who hit all 18 greens in regulation, continued his steady play, rolling in a 20-foot putt for a birdie on No. 13 after a string of seven pars and sinking a 16-footer on the last hole.

Meanwhile, Sindelar went 9-under on the back nine with his fourth birdie of the day but gave back two shots with bogey-4s on consecutive par-3s when he two-putted from 15 and 18 feet.

Randolph doesn't get rematch with Verplank

WEST ORANGE, N.J. (AP) — Medalist Sam Randolph, denied a rematch with the man who beat him for the title last year, used a hot putter to score a 4-and-3 victory over Canadian Jack Kay Jr. in the semifinals of the U.S. Amateur championship Saturday.

Randolph, of Santa Barbara, Calif., will get his second shot at the national amateur title Sunday in a 36-hole final against Peter Persons of Macon, Ga.

Persons defeated fellow University of Georgia golfer Chip Drury of Brunswick, Ga., 3-and-1 in the other semifinal at the Montclair Golf Club.

But the big news Saturday may have been the completion of a suspended quarterfinal match that extinguished Scott Verplank's hopes of winning a second straight title.

The match between Verplank and Kay of Don Mills, Ontario, was suspended on Friday because of darkness, with the golfers even after 17 holes. When play resumed Saturday, Verplank bogeyed the 18th hole and Kay rolled in a 2-foot par-saver to win the match and end the Dallas resident's hopes for consecutive titles.

"It's kind of hard to start on the 18th tee, but we both had to do it," said Verplank, who will starts his senior year at Oklahoma State this week. "I guess he was just a little more ready to play than I was."

It also ruined the expected rematch between Verplank, the first amateur in three decades to win a professional tournament, and Randolph, the Walker Cup team member from the University of Southern California.

"I don't know if you would call not playing Scott a letdown or relief," said Randolph, 21. "Jack had beat Scott though and he was playing good play. I would have been tough playing Scott."

Randolph, who tied a record in qualifying at 134, took a two-hole lead after four holes as Kay bogeyed both the third and four holes.

Kay, the most valuable player on Furman University's golf team last season, twice got to within one hole on the front nine, but that was as close as he would get.

Randolph sank a 20-footer on No. 11 to remain 1-up after going into the trap. He went 2-up at No. 12 when Kay bogeyed and 3-up, sinking an eight foot birdie, at No. 14. He closed out the match by parring the 15th.

Randolph was 1-under-par when the match ended, while Kay was 4 over par.

Persons, who lost in the quarterfinals of this event to Verplank last year, and Drury seesawed the first nine holes and were even heading to the back nine.

King, Johnson fire 65s for Rail Charity Classic lead

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (AP) — Betsy King and Chris Johnson each shot 7-under-par rounds of 65 to share the lead after the first round of the $185,000 Ladies Professional Golf Association's Rail Charity Classic.

King put only five of her tee shots in the fairway and Johnson only six. Both players credited fine approach shots out ot the course's thick rough as keys to their rounds. King said luck and experience helped her fight her way through the thick rough.

"I didn't really catch that many bad lies," she said. "I was able to guess correctly how the ball was going to come out, (but) if I don't stay in the fairway the next two days, I'll be in trouble."

Both Johnson and King birdied seven holes on the 6,282-yard course. Six of Johnson's seven birdie putts were from six feet or less, while King needed only 25 puts to complete her round.

Therese Hession was in third place after one round, shooting a 66, while Dale Eggeling, Cathy Morse and Martha Nause are all tied for fourth, tallying first round scores of three-under-par 69's, in the 54-hole tournament.

"It was a neat round," Johnson said. "I hit the ball well, and I kept hitting it close."

King was the leading money winner on the women's professional golf tour last year and is sixth this year. This year's money leader, Nancy Lopez, shot a 1-over-par, and defending Rail champion, Cindy Hill is also one stroke over par.

Dallas Carter, San Antonio Clark, Aldine, Dallas White and Beaumont West Brook finish out the 5A top 10.

Tomball rolled to the state Class 4A championship game last season behind all-state quarterback Lance Pavlas, who returns this year along with running back Bubba Greely, who rushed for 2,219 yards last season.

Sweetwater, 12-1-0, placed second, followed by defending state champion Denison, which defeated Tomball 27-13 in the finals for an unbeaten 16-0 season.

Bay City, another perennial playoff team, ranks fourth prior to this week's start of the regular season, followed by Corsicana, Huntsville, Wichita Falls Hirschi, New Braunfels and Port Arthur Lincoln.

Hempstead running back Harvey Williams gained 2,976 yards last season in leading the Bobcats to the state quarter-finals, where they lost to Sweeny, 35-34. Williams returns for his senior season with the Bobcats ranked No. 1 ahead of Post, by a 205-170 point margin.

Navasota, 9-2-0, from the same District 24-3A as Hempstead, is ranked third, followed by Vernon, Bandera, Littlefield, Columbus, Waco Connally, Daingerfield — the defending champion — and Port Isabel.

Electra, 11-1-0, which averaged 46 points per game last season before losing to Mart 30-22 in the Class 2A regional playoffs, received 14 first-place votes and held a 192-147 point margin over runnerup Hamlin, 13-0-1.

Grand Saline, which returns all 11 offensive starters from last year's regional playoff team, ranks third on the 2A list.

MHS

Where the Bulldogs have a lot to discover is in the receiving game. They already know they have a quarterback who can throw the ball, but have no proven receivers back, losing Davis, Foret, and Darren Thorpe to graduation.

This year, Kenny De La Garza (150, senior), Bobby Williams (185, senior) and a trio of wide receivers are looked upon as their replacements.

De La Garza, who is starting shortstop for the MHS baseball team, will be at flanker and is in his "first year out," said McCutchen. "He's a tremendous athlete with tremendous hand-eye coordination and quick feet. He's one of the few who can come out lacking experience and step into a varsity starting position. He's got excellent hands. He's not real big but he's a tough blocker.

"Bobby Williams didn't play much at tight end last year because he was behind Darrell. But, he worked hard in the off-season as far as catching and blocking and we're expecting big things out of him."

McCutchen listed three wide receivers that should see a lot of action because that is the position the Bulldogs use to run in plays: Robbie Harkrider (145, junior), Steve Perez (150, senior) and Michael Eaden (150, senior). "All three will probably see a great deal of action."

The Bulldogs also have a lot of inexperience on the offensive line but have two players with excellent size on the right side. At right tackle, senior Phillip Speight comes in at 6-foot-4, 230 pounds while senior right guard James Campbell tips the scales at 205.

On the other side of center Robert Fortune (180, senior) the 'Dogs have Brian Debose at tackle (190, senior) and Marvin Mitchell at guard (180, senior). Of the four, only Campbell lettered last year. The other four were on junior varsity.

DEFENSIVELY, MHS is again strongest in the backfield with what amounts to three starters playing secondary positions.

Johnson and Madrid started for the Bulldogs last year and will hold down the cornerback and free safety slots while Ben Grimes (175, senior), a transfer student from Grand Prairie where he was a starter, is in at strong safety. De La Garza and Adkinson will be sharing the other cornerback slot.

"We feel like we're so much improved back there because we've been in the system for a year and have three people back there who were starters and know what they're doing."

Moving to the linebacker slot, the Bulldogs have a fourth starter back in strong side linebacker William Hernandez (195, senior). Steve Pruitt (185, senior), in the middle, and Bart Brown (165, senior), weak side, are both up from junior varsity ball.

The fifth and final defensive returning starter is end Brent Barton (190, senior) while Charles Comer (190, senior), from junior varsity, anchors down the other side. In the middle, Speight and Campbell have the starting nod, but McCutchen expects to run in Mike Mechler and Richard Triplett because "Phillip and James are starting on offense and we hope Mike and Richard can step in to spell them."

WHILE THE offensive and defensive units have their mixture of starters and rookies, the one area with the biggest question mark is the kicking game.

"We're where we want to be on offense and defense at this stage of the season but our kicking game is not like it should be," said McCutchen. "That is one big factor in our ball game that we need to work on."

As usual, McCutchen sees District 4-5A as a tough league to play in and, not surprisingly, he sees Odessa Permian and Midland Lee as the teams to catch this year.

"I don't think there's any doubt about it, Permian and Lee," said McCutchen. "They are the two teams to beat until somebody does it. Both have a good program going and both have a lot of kids coming back.

"I think the rest of the league will be closer than it was in '84. Odessa High, Abilene High and I think we'll be improved teams. San Angelo is a good football team, too."

Midland High, which won its scrimmage game against Lubbock Coronado Friday, opens the season at Memorial Stadium Friday night against Lubbock Monterey at 8 p.m. On Sept. 27, the 'Dogs open 4-5A play, traveling West to take on Big Spring at 8 p.m.

RANGERS

Mattison plugs the middle of the Rangers' 5-2 defensive alignment as the noseguard and junior Anthony Vega fills one tackle spot and Maison, Underwood and Sims will also see action on defense. Larry Scarrow and Steve Groeschel are also competing for defensive time.

"AS ALWAYS, this is going to be a tough district. Every Friday night you're going to have to come out and play good football or you're going to get beat," Longley said.

Greenwood faces just one 3A opponent in Ozona and one 2A team in Presidio in non-district play in 1985 while 1A foes Water Valley, Grandfalls and Rankin are also on the schedule.

Longley has tried to move his program along cautiously as they approach the 3A level.

"As things stand now, we'll be in 3A next year, but things can change," Longley said. "We're proceeding to get our program ready for 3A, taking things slowly just hoping we don't get overmatched once we get there."

Midland Christian loses to Grady, 3-2

From Staff Reports

The Midland Christian Mustangs ended its six-man football pre-season scrimmage session at the Midland Christian field Saturday with Grady winning the session by a narrow 3-2 margin.

Grady scored its winning touchdown with an 80-yard touchdown pass on the last play of the scrimmage.

Midland Christian scored one of its TDs on a four-yard run by Tony Corona. Corona earlier in the drive busted a run of 80 yards, but the TD was nullified on a penalty.

The other Mustang score came on a 60-yard run by Wade Emmert.

The scrimmage was between two evenly matched squads as the statistics show. Grady had a slight edge in first downs, 8-7; rushing, 177-173; and passing, 120-92.

Midland Christian opens its season under head coach Homer Jackson Saturday at 2 p.m. at home against Three Way.

You're too late, the March Flatlanders Ski Club Texas Week in Badgastein, Austria, March 1-9 is sold out.

Bob Haskell reports that all 50 slots at a bargain $890 per person are gone. No more are left.

ALBERT (BETO) Valles got the best of a couple of sailfish out of Acapulco last week, but the 150 and 130 pound catches were only consolation for the marlin he hasn't yet caught up with.

"I've fished from the Gulf to Hawaii," says Beto, "but I've never gotten that marlin I've been after for so long."

It took 40 minutes to land the nine-foot, one-inch 140-pounder and the 130-pounder, and 25 minutes for the nine-foot, 130-pounder.

Homer Bernard and Eddie Portillo, also Midland, took three-foot sharks. Both were young, but the teeth were sharp and strong....

THE HIGH Sky Bass Club held its August tournament at Oak Creek Lake with 26 members particpating. Twenty-one caught fish totaling 27.84 pounds.

Dean Armstrong again won the men's division with 6.60 pounds and also took big bass honors with a 4.74 catch. Bob Kirby was second with 4.49 pounds and Bud Baker was third at 2.16.

June Tucker's 2.59 pounds won the women's division. Tammy Armstrong was second with 2.43 and Lue Kirby had 1.63 for third.

Winners at Lake Spence in the July team competition were Lue Kirby-Tammy Armstrong-Dale Whisnant-Dean Armstrong with 10.66 pounds. Second, Bud Baker-June Tucker-T.E. Armstrong-Bob Knox, 7.28. Third, Grady Abernathy-Sandy Faulkner-Bob Kirby-John Nobles, 5.16 pounds.

The top 10 list after the August tournament: 1. Baker 447.144. T.L. Armstrong 440,72. 3. Dean Armstrong 421.04. 4. Bob Kirby 364. 5. Doug Yeargain, 360.72. 6. Steve Hill, 316,72. 7. Charles Erck, 284,96. 8. Jack Furth, 247,28. 9.Claude Bass, 246.96. 10. Dow Scott 237.12....

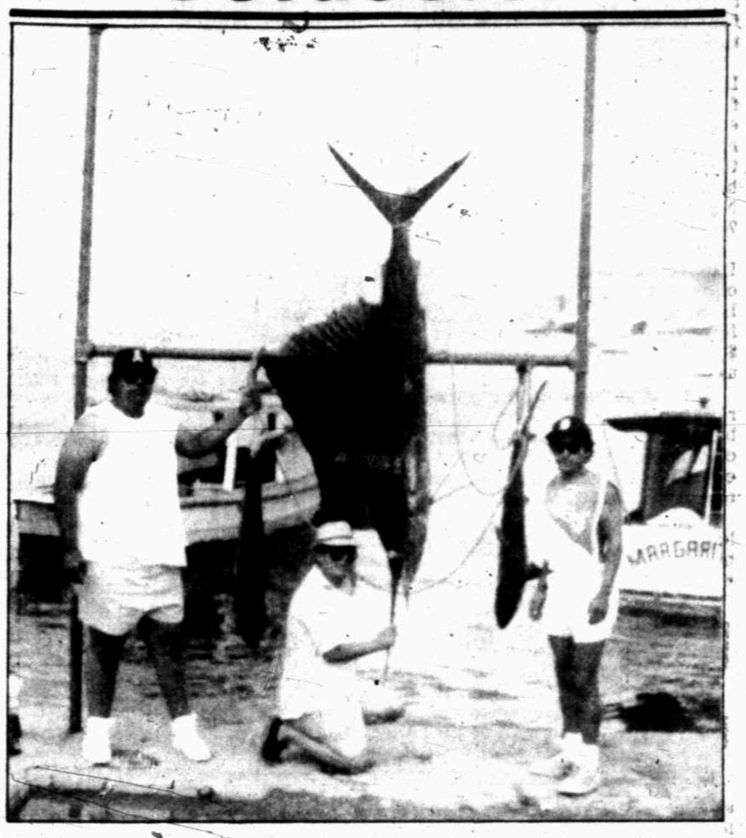

COLORADO CITY'S Bass Club will hold an open tournament Sept 8 at Lake Champion and Lake Colorado City. Headquarters will be at the Lake Colorado City State Park. A trophy will be awarded for the largest bass....

A COOL snap last week stirred up both fish and fishermen at Lake Spence with several large striped bass catches reported. Penny Spears of Carlsbad, N.M., had the week's biggest catch, an 18 3/4 pound striper.

Also active were crappie, catfish and small-mouth bass. Ken Gosnell, Midland, took a 2 3/4 pound small mouth.

At Lake Thomas, channel and blue cats were active on rod and reel and yellows were taken on trotlines with all kinds of bait. Crappie were biting along the rock areas in eight to 15 feet of water. Troy Carner, Big Spring, took an eight and 10 pounds....

TED BATTLES

Coaching can be hazardous to your popularity

It's over and I'm glad. Coaching one of these all-star games, like last week's Spud Webb scholarship benefit, the one with all those NBA stars, isn't the lark it seems.

In the first place the coach is presented a group of players blind. Truth is you don't really know who the players are until they show up and sometimes, like Thursday night in the Chap Center, some of these people didn't show up until 10 minutes after tip off. They did delay the tip off until they could suit up, however.

Still, what kind of a way is that to run a show? As coach I never even got a chance to run my team through a workout.

The afternoon of the game, the situtation was explained to one of my players, Joe Dumars. "What I am I supposed to do, Joe. I don't even know if any of these guys can play the game."

"Just sit back enjoy it and have fun," he tried to soothe, "Don't worry."

"What about substitutions?"

"Hey, no problem. When someone gets tired, He'll wave a hand and just send somebody else in," his assurance was comforting, but it didn't work out that way at all. By the end of the game, all the players who weren't playing, were mad at me. And most of those who were playing were upset for not having played enough.

AT 4:45 p.m. at the Holiday Inn, one of the promoters of the game assured that, despite the seeming disparity of the teams favoring the other coach, help was on the way. At this very moment, it was assured, Akeem Olajuwon was winging his way from Dallas, Houston or Tasmania, whereever he had been holding the clinics and would be on my team.

I protested, "But you promised me Lorenzo Charles."

I later found out that Skip Steinway, the opposing coach, had someone meet Akeem's plane and rush him off to Pecos and abandon him outside the gym.

Later at Chap Center, Steve Wykcliffe one of the behind-the-scenes operators for the game pointed out that Pam and Paula McGee, the Globetrotter-bound twins from USC, had been split up. Each team would have one. "The game really slows down when the girls go into the game, but the way they did it in Monroe (La.) last night, when Pam went in so did Paula....and they are really pretty good players, just not as fast as the men."

What he didn't tell me was that "Debbie Rodman" was also a girl. So when Pam went out of the game five minutes into a period, Debbie went in for my team while Skip Piano substituted Karl Malone or Clyde The Glide. However, our team seemed to be staying close, so I kept one of the girls in all the time...a tactic that was to lead to dissension on my bench.

IF COACHING the game wasn't bad enough, there was abuse from the MRT photographers about my tie before the game. I tried to explain that it was silk and I had picked it up at Harrad's while the debris was being cleared out after the explosion. Shoot, they didn't even know where Harrad's was located.

As if that wasn't enough, Bill Clements, the KBJZ radio announcer who was handling the PA, asked for my college for the introductions and I told him and added, with the hope it would impress my players that I was supremely qualified, "the same college the coach of the 1985 NCAA champions, the team that beat Georgetown, attended."

Insane jealousy prompted the Governor to ignore that vital bit of information.

AS THE players huddled before the tip off, I was set to deliver my pregame talk, beginning, "Gentlemen...and ladies...you are about to play the most important game of your lives." Then it dawned, what if they come back next year?

Dumars had told me of the fantastic dribbling abilities of Larry Coleman of the Harlem Magicians. "That guy is amazing. When he begins, I just pull off so he has complete freedom to do his thing."

When Larry came to the bench after his first stint, I asked, "When do you go into your dribbling routine?"

"Well, I don't. The other guys think I'm trying to show them up. So rather than embarrass anybody..."

My team was up by five at half even without Akeem when Skip Baldwin, the guy on the other bench, decided to leave for a while. I protested to the officials and demanded a technical for the coach violating the restraining line, even if he'd left the building. "Not only that, with Steinway gone, it gives them an unfair advantage. My only recourse is to leave also to even things up. "

"You can't...we'll slap a bench technical on you," it was threatened.

It turned out to be the game's turning point, as I knew it would. With Slip skipped, it was almost as if the other team went into a phone both as Rice and came out SMU.

In addition, the abuse from the Mr. Ed, the PA announcer from KOSA or KCRS or whatever, continued unabated "There's no doubt about it, the Stadium Sports team's coach is the best dressed...." That was nice since I'd forgotten to bring my bench towel. And then "...even if it is 1934 vintage...."

That thoughtless crack cost me money. The Mrs. went out and bought a sports jacket the next day, "You haven't had one since the one you bought in Dublin...and that was 1975."

AND THINGS were just as bad on the bench. My players were complaining about the playing time I was giving the girls. "Hey, put the men in and let us put on a show," urged Coleman.

After the third quarter, Debbie and Paula were informed that they would play two minutes each in the final period. "You must be getting tired," I tried to cushion the news.

"Are you a sexist?" Paula demanded to know.

Although the team coached by the TV person won, I found out how bad a coach the other guy must be. During a delay, one of his players, Mookie Smith, pleaded, "I want to be traded to your team. Make a trade for me. Come on, you can have me for three players." I looked at three players on my bench. Paula and Debbie were sulking and Joe Dumars wasn't too happy either.

Play resumed before a deal could be consummated. But at least the men were in the game and we would quickly pull away. It didn't work out that way. It was our worse stretch of the night.

Two days later, I've finally figured out why the all-male team didn't work out. With one of the girls on the floor, Malone was preoccupied with playing tight defense against Debbie or Paula, he was never a factor. It was as though he were riding the bench. With the girls on the bench, the Mailman remembered what he was here for and delivered.

Dodgers get Madlock from Pirates

PITTSBURGH (AP) — The Pittsburgh Pirates traded infielder Bill Madlock to the Los Angeles Dodgers in exchange for three players to be announced later, the team said Saturday.

"It has become evident that the time has come for Bill to move on," Pirates General Manager Joe L. Brown said in a statement.

"His recent public and private statements indicate a lack of belief in the Pittsburgh Pirates and it is doubtful that he can provide the type of leadership that our fine young players need to, reach their potential," Brown said of the former team captain.

Brown referred to Madlock's criticisms of the Pirates' minor-league system and the team's performance, a team spokesman said.

Madlock had said Pittsburgh did not know how to develop players in its minor-league system, and when Pirates' Manager Chuck Tanner predicted the team would be a strong contender for the National League East title in two years, Madlock said "no way," according to spokesman Greg Johnson.

The trade put Madlock, who left the field Friday night after the Pirates' game in Cincinnati as a member of the team with the worst record in baseball, into first place as a member of the Dodgers, who lead the NL West.

"Bill Madlock has great credentials and we are excited about his addition to our club," Dodger Vice President Al Campanis said in a statement released Saturday. "We feel we have added some offensive punch to our lineup and at the same time added another veteran leader."

Campanis said outfielder R.J. Reynolds has been designated for assignment to make room for Madlock.

The trade had to be completed by Saturday in order for Madlock to be eligible for post-season play, because any player who changes teams after Sept. 1 is not eligible to play in the World Series or National League playoffs.

The three players from the Dodgers will be named as soon as waivers are secured for them, the team said.

Madlock, 34, was batting .251 with 10 home runs and 41 RBI in 110 games in 13 major league seasons.

Blue Jays snap tie in eighth to beat White Sox, 6-2

Associated Press

TORONTO — Lloyd Moseby snapped a 2-2 tie with an RBI triple and Rance Mulliniks followed with a home run as the Toronto Blue Jays scored four runs in the eighth inning to beat the Chicago White Sox 6-2 Saturday afternoon.

Tony Fernandez opened the inning with a walk, was sacrificed to second by Damaso Garcia and scored on Moseby's triple. Mulliniks followed with his tenth homer of the season and first RBI in his last 10 games.

Willie Upshaw drove in the Blue Jays final run with an RBI single.

Gary Lavelle, who took over for Doyle Alexander in the eighth, picked up the win to improve his record to 4-6. That made a loser of rookie Joel Davis, 1-2.

Yankees 10, Angels 4

NEW YORK — Mike Pagliarulo and Ron Hassey hit three-run homers and Dave Righetti and Neil Allen combined for 4⅓ innings of shutout relief as the New York Yankees defeated the California Angels.

The win kept the Yankees five games behind the Toronto Blue Jays in the American League Eastern Division race. The Blue Jays beat the White Sox 6-2.

Pagliarulo's fifth-inning home run, his 17th and fifth in his last ten games, came off loser Doug Corbett, 2-2 and snapped a 4-4 tie.

Hassey, who had four RBI for the game, hit his tenth homer in the sixth to cap the scoring.

Righetti made his earliest relief appearance of the season when he came on for Ed Whitson with two outs in the fifth after Ruppert Jones hit a two-run homer to knot the score at 4-4. Righetti, 11-7, hurled 2⅓ innings for the win and Allen came on to pitch the final two innings.

Twins 6-5, Red Sox 5-4

MINNEAPOLIS — Mark Portugal allowed only four hits in 5⅔ innings for his first major-league victory to lead the Minnesota Twins to a 5-4 victory and a sweep of their doubleheader with the Boston Red Sox.

In the opener, Ron Washington, whose sixth-inning error opened the gates to four unearned runs, lined a two-out, bases-loaded single in a two-run, ninth-inning Twins rally for a 6-5 triumph.

The nightcap was only the second big-league appearance for Portugal, 1-1, who was called up from the minors on Aug. 11. He permitted a run on a second-inning balk.

After walking Dave Stapleton in the second, the 22-year-old right-hander retired 13 straight batters until Wade Boggs and Bill Buckner stroked singles with one out in the sixth. One out later, reliever Pete Filson came in and he later allowed an eighth-inning, RBI single by Tony Armas.

Ron Davis pitched the ninth, allowing a two-run homer by Dwight Evans, his 19th. Davis got his 18th save.

In the first game, the Twins trailed 5-4 when Mickey Hatcher drew a walk from reliever Steve Crawford, 5-4, to lead off the ninth. One out later, Bush also walked.

Mark Salas grounded into a forceout at third before Mike Stenhouse singled to tie the game. After an intentional walk to Gaetti, Washington lined a single to right.

Bert Blyleven, 13-13, went all the way for the victory. He leads the majors with 20 complete games.

The Red Sox had taken a 5-4 lead in the seventh on a sacrifice fly by Dwight Evans. Boston had tied the game 4-4 in the sixth on Easler's two-out grand-slam home run.

With one out in the sixth and Blyleven working on a three-hitter, Boggs was safe on an error by Washington at second. Singles by Buckner and Armas loaded the bases and, after Rich Gedman struck out, Easler belted a 1-0 pitch for his 13th homer.

Tigers 4, A's 1

DETROIT — Tom Brookens and Alan Trammell hit solo home runs and Walt Terrell pitched 7⅔ strong innings to lead the Detroit Tigers over the Oakland A's.

Brookens hit his sixth homer of the season in the fifth inning and Trammell connected for his 11th in the eighth. Both blows came off rookie Tim Birtsas, 10-5, who lost to the Tigers for the third time this year. Birtsas gave up six hits in 7⅔ innings.

Terrell, 13-7, scattered eight hits, struck out seven and walked two. Randy O'Neal got the last out in the eighth and Willie Hernandez pitched the ninth, striking out the side, for his 28th save.

Kirk Gibson hit a two-out triple in the Detroit first and scored on a double down the left-field line by Lance Parrish.

The Tigers got an unearned run in the third. Brookens walked, stole second, went to third when a Birtsas pickoff attempt went into center field for an error and scored on Trammell's suicide squeeze bunt.

Mariners 6, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Gorman Thomas hit a pair of two-run homers and Mike Moore pitched a four-hitter as the Seattle Mariners defeated the Baltimore Orioles.

The Mariners, blanked by Baltimore pitchers in the first two games of the series, ended a streak of 20 scoreless innings in the first.

Thomas connected for his 27th homer after Phil Bradley singled with one out and was forced at second base by Al Cowens.

Mike Flanagan, 2-4, was chased in the second inning when the Mariners made it 3-0 on a double by Dave Henderson, a bunt single by Bob Kearney and a single by Jack Perconte.

Thomas, who was walked on four pitches in the third, hit another homer in the fifth on a 3-2 pitch from Sammy Stewart after Cowens led off with a single. Stewart balked home a ninth-inning run.

The Mariners, who had lost six of their previous seven games, collected 13 hits as everyone in the starting lineup hit safely except Jim Presley.

Moore, 12-8, struck out eight and walked two.

Rangers 6, Royals 4

ARLINGTON — Gary Ward had a home run and a triple and Don Slaught hit a game-winning homer in the sixth to lead the Texas Rangers to a 6-4 victory over the Kansas City Royals Saturday night.

Gregg Harris, 4-4, pitched 3 2-3 innings of one-hit relief, with six strikeouts, to pick up the victory. Starter Jeff Russell went 5 1-3 innings, allowing seven hits, three runs and striking out three for Texas.

Charlie Leibrandt, 13-7 was the loser.

Hal McRae led off the Royals' second with a single and reached second on Frank White's single before scoring on a fielder's choice and an error by Toby Harrah to put Kansas City up 1-0.

George Wright evened the score in the bottom of the inning with a solo homer, his 11th of the year. Wayne Tolleson doubled in the third to put Texas ahead 2-1, scoring Steve Buechele, who had singled.

Ward added another run for Texas in the fourth when he tripled and scored on Alan Bannister's single.

George Brett evened the score 3-3 with his 22nd homer. Brett scored along with Lonnie Smith, who had singled.

Brewers 10, Indians 8

MILWAUKEE — Paul Molitor, Robin Yount and Jim Gantner collected three hits apiece and drove in seven runs among them to power the Milwaukee Brewers to a victory over the Cleveland Indians.

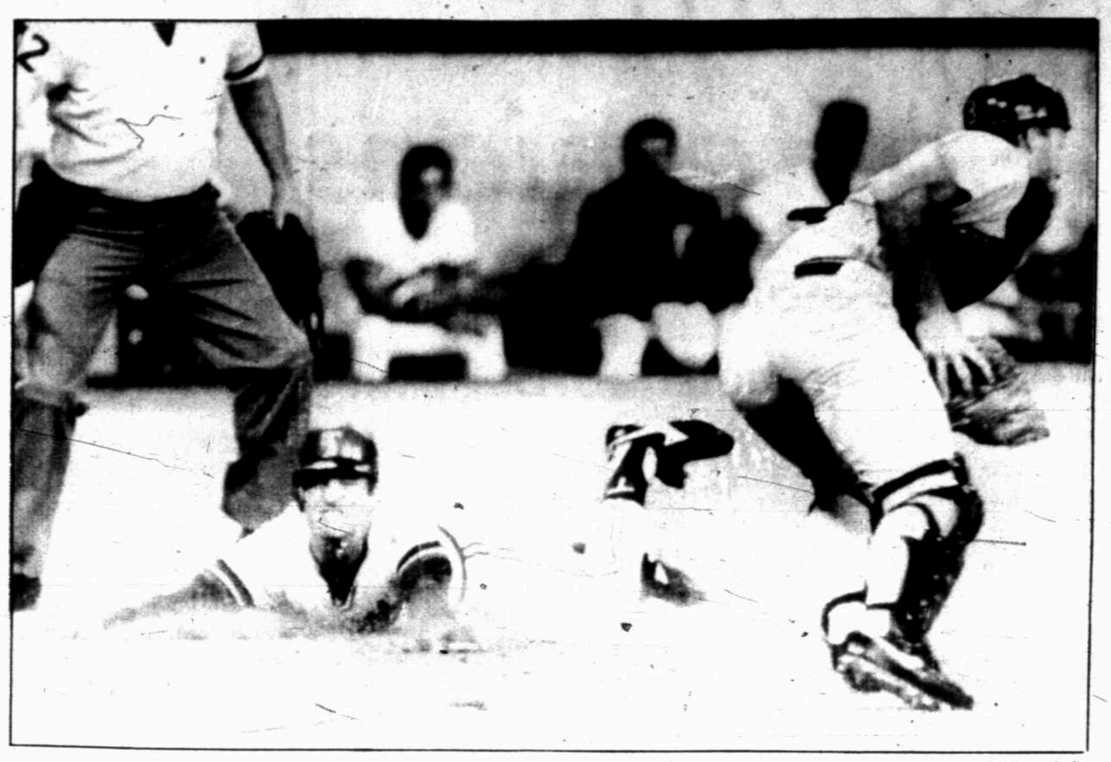

Ted Higuera, 12-6, scattered seven hits in tossing his fifth complete game. He struck out three and walked two in 7⅔ innings.

The Indians scored three runs in the ninth inning to make the game close. Brett Butler and Tony Bernazard had run-scoring singles off Rollie Fingers and Mike Hargrove had a pinch-RBI single off Bob Gibson, who got the last two outs for his 11th save.

After falling behind 2-0, the Brewers nicked Neal Heaton, 8-14, for three runs in the third. Gantner triggered the rally with a double and Ed Romero walked. Molitor, Yount and Cecil Cooper then delivered successive RBI singles.

The Brewers added a run in the fifth on an RBI single by Cooper and chased Heaton with a three-run sixth. Gantner singled home one run and Yount singled in two.

Molitor capped another three-run Milwaukee burst in the seventh with a two-run single.

Movie-star Chetta no longer swings, retires in the suburbs, without Tarzan

By PAUL DEAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

NEWBURY PARK, Calif. — What can I tell ya, kid? Here today, Newbury Park tomorrow. From banana splits at the Brown Derby to week-old doughnuts out of a rusty bucket. They stop knowing who you are the moment they forget what you used to be. That, kid, is the Hollywood Rule.

Especially for animal actors.

Even Chetta. A.k.a. Cheeta. Or Cheetah.

Whose movie career really has faded to the Los Angeles suburb of Newbury Park and one beer (generic, from Ralphs) a day while approaching (or departing) his 50th birthday without even the hint of a guest spot on "Love Boat." All of which is a far cry, more of a jungle yell, actually, from those swinging '30s and '40s when This Chetta appeared alongside The Real Tarzan (Johnny Weissmuller), The One and Only Jane (Maureen O'Sullivan) and The Original Boy (John Sheffield) and moviegoers whispered a common mystery:

In the absence of staples and starch, how come Tarzan's loincloth and modesty always remained on center? "I dunno. Chetta never had that problem." That's Tony Gentry talking. He's 78 and has trained more chimpanzees than Lassie had pups. On an industry level at least, Chetta has done more for Tony Gentry than Bonzo did for Ronald Reagan.

"HOW MUCH MONEY did he make for me? I dunno. A million? I dunno. Lots and lots, I guess. What do you say, Chetta? How much money have you made your dad?"

Chetta answers. Unblinking, 160 pounds of irritable bulk beneath sisal whiskers, he pinches Gentry's nose between two forefingers and ebony nails. He nibbles at a nostril. Very, very daintily. It's almost an adoring gentleness.

Gentry speaks his affection: "We traveled a lot of roads together, and y'know, out of about 50 chimps I trained to perform in the movies, there have been only three, mebbe four that were really special."

He ticks them off. There was Jiggs, who became the first Chetta, serving several Tarzan masters (Herman Brix, Johnny Weissmuller and Buster Crabbe) and one mistress — Dorothy Lamour, l'amour of the forgettable "Jungle Princess" (1936) and "Her Jungle Love" (1938). Both roles had a profound effect on Jiggs-Chetta. He died and is buried in the Hollywood Pet Cemetery.

There was Jiggs II. More Tarzans, more movies. When Genrty went to World War II, Jiggs II went to the Baltimore Zoo. It was an unpublicized move, Gentry says. Jiggs could have died there or been resold. Records of the '30s are a little skimpy, said a zoo spokesman. No mention of a Jiggs. "But you're telling me that we actually had Chetta here?" Colleen Hughes asked. "Wow."

There was no time for favorites in the '50s when Gentry bought, sold and trained guinea chimps by the hundreds for NASA experiments before sending a human mammal to the moon.

AND ALL THIS time — there was Chetta.

Chetta, no matter several dozen stand-ins, stung chimps and television impersonators, remains the oldest survivor of the role.

Today, Gentry and Chetta live out their twilight in a somewhat scruffy farm on a small parcel of land near Thousand Oaks, Calif.

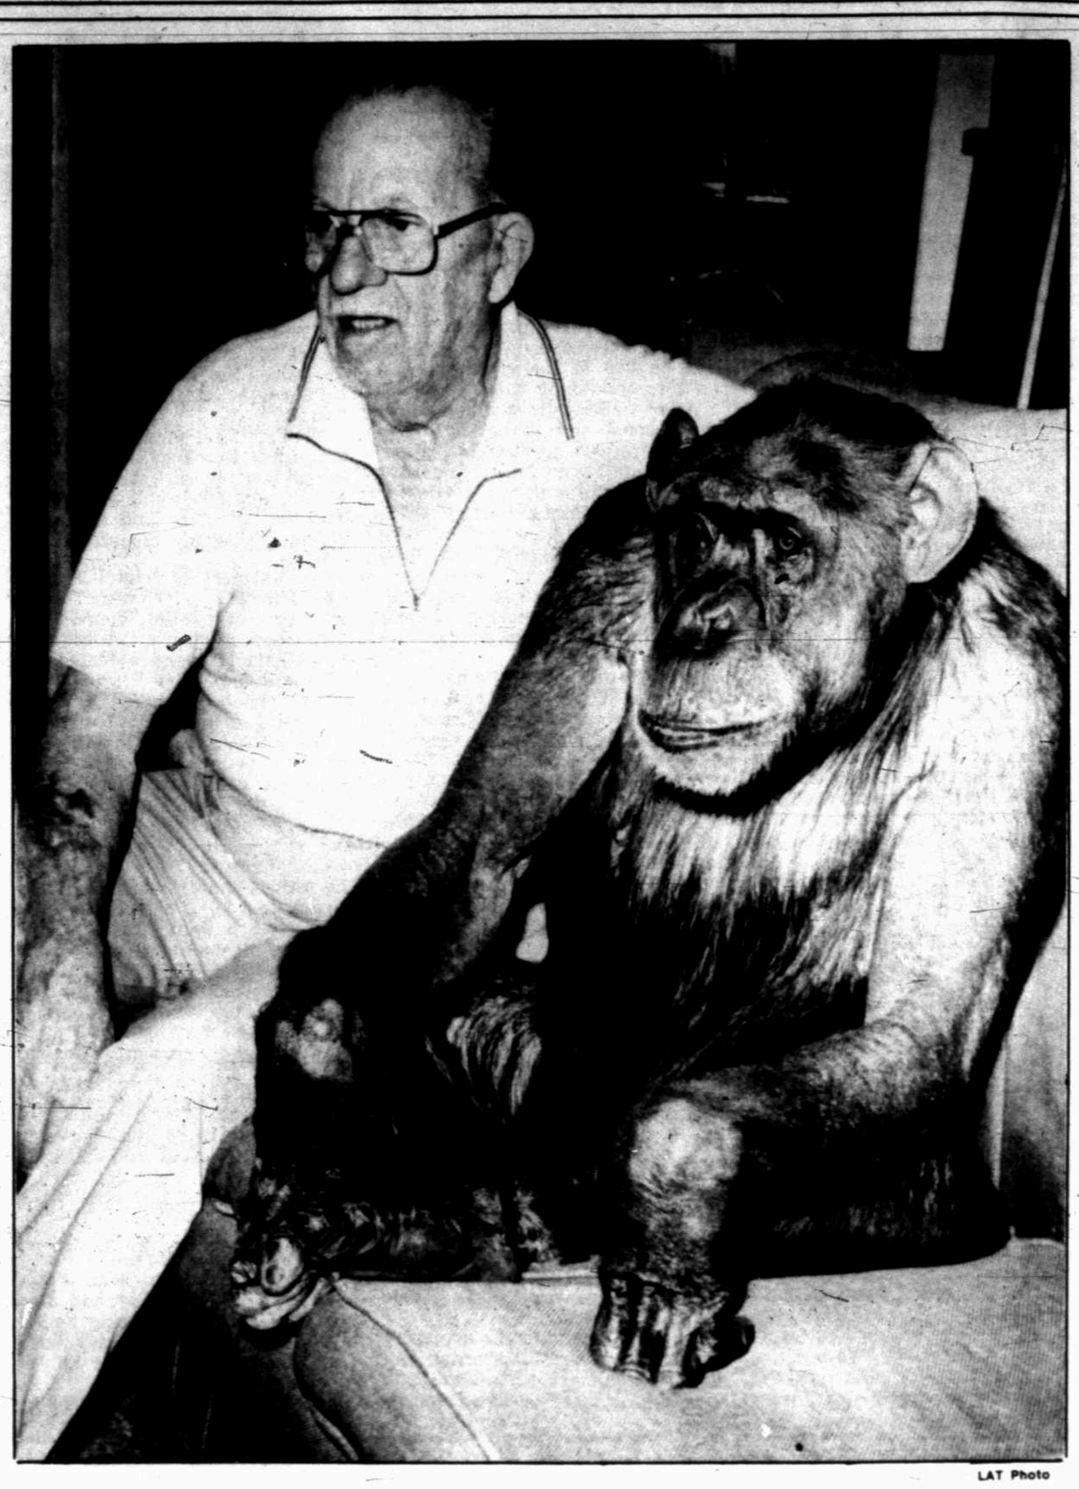

Chetta spends time out back in an old trailer that was once his mobile dressing room. He snoozes a lot, munches four squares a day and eats and drinks like people. On hot days he's allowed one cold beer. On cold nights he's tucked in with a shot of brandy.

Chetta is a house chimp. He watches television, and his addiction, no kidding, are the PBS animal programs. He has a bed alongside Gentry's and is toilet trained.

Yet it's a sad house crammed with the keepings from long-gone yesterdays. Mostly framed photographs. Chetta with Weissmuller. Gentry with Weissmuller and Lamour and Esther Williams and Arbuckle.

Gentry likes talking about the past. But sometimes it stirs too much. Then he realizes it will never be again. Then he cries. That's when he turns to Chetta. They are more than company. They almost are father and son.

"The old man and I are both retired," he says, "but we're having fun. And you know, he's got a personality that won't quit. He makes me laugh when Don Knotts can't make me laugh."

Police chief fits his role in historic town

Lonny Hurlbut, police chief of historic San Juan Bautista, Calif., dresses like an old-time Western sheriff, and the town loves it. His officers, however, wear uniforms on duty.

SAN JUAN BAUTISTA, Calif. — He looked like Gary Cooper in "High Noon" standing in the middle of this sleepy old town's main street.

Police Chief Lonny Hurlbut, 49, was wearing a black cowboy hat, an open shirt, black vest, faded jeans, cowboy boots. His .357 magnum rested in a holster hanging from his belt.

Hurlbut always dresses like an old-time western sheriff.

"I have a dress uniform with the stars and gold stripes. It cost me $400, but I never wear it," said Hurlbut, police chief at historic San Juan Bautista, population 1,400, for the last three years.

Shortly after he became chief, he dressed up like an Old West sheriff for a local fiesta. Townspeople at the time suggested he dress like that all the time. So he has.

"It fits this old-time town. It makes people at ease. I'm no threat to anybody. People love it," he said. "Everybody calls me Lonny. Kids come running over to greet me when they see me."

"When I go to police chief meetings, I dress like this. The other chiefs can't believe it. They call me the 'Cowboy Cop.'"

His mode of dress does fit in with the surroundings. The town, 90 miles south of San Francisco is the site of Mission San Juan Bautista, founded in 1797 and the largest of the California missions. It is also the location of San Juan Bautista State Park, which includes several historic buildings, vintage 1840s to 1860s, around a picturesque plaza.

The first Saturday of every month history buffs from all over the state come to the tiny town's state park for reenactments of events from California's past. The police chief often takes part, wearing his usual garb.

The other two officers and 10 reservists on the small force always wear conventional police uniforms when on duty.

"We're lucky to have Lonny as chief," insisted Mayor Ann Baccala, 74. "He walks the downtown streets every day talking to everyone he encounters.

"He is cordial and friendly. People like that in a small town. The kids are nuts about him."

Baccala said Hurlbut had an opportunity two years ago to double his salary and receive far greater benefits by going to work for Ford Motor Co. as a security supervisor.

At an emergency meeting of the Town Council packed with townspeople, the chief was asked to stay. He did.

"With that kind of emotional response from the people of San Juan Bautista, how could I react any other way?" he recalled. "I was paid $25,000 here last year. I could have made twice that at Ford, where I had worked for several years before. There's more to life than money."

He insists his officers introduce themselves each day they are on duty to at least one person in town they have never met before. That's 250 people a year.

Some in San Juan Bautista say Hurlbut ought to ride a horse while on duty.

"I learned how to ride a horse, so I could ride one in parades. But you don't do police work riding a horse, other than traffic patrols in big cities. Anyway, the town can't afford to feed and care for a horse," the chief said.

Weldon enchanted by position as caretaker of Hearst Castle

By WILLIAM S. MURPHY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SAN SIMEON, Calif. — When Deborah A. Weldon drives to work each day, the last leg of her route is up a spiraling five-mile paved road to a plateau where she can look down on one of the most spectacular panoramic views of the Pacific Coast.

As a boy, the future publishing magnate, William Randolph Hearst, observed the same view when his family camped here in tents on property they acquired at the foot of the Santa Lucia range. Later, at the cost of millions of dollars he built and furnished a castle that rivaled in splendor the great palaces of the monarchs of Europe. Much of the decor was medieval, and here Hearst maintained a baronial life style, entertaining his friends and vassals of his financial empire.

Weldon, 35, is the caretaker of the castle and its art treasures. Appointed regional director for the state's Department of Parks and Recreation last year, she heads a staff that reaches 300 during peak summer months at the height of the tourist season.

THE PUBLISHER died in 1951 at the age of 88. California acquired the castle and grounds from the Hearst family in 1958 and opened the estate to the public. It is now designated as the Hearst San Simeon State Historical Monument. Since that time, more than 16 million pepole have visited the castle with 20 percent of them coming from foreign countries.

Construction began in 1920, and Hearst and his family moved into the castle five years later. Architect Julia Morgan was responsible for carrying out Hearst's design ideas and work continued until 1937. The castle and its three adjacent guest houses contain 146 rooms. There is the 104-foot Neptune pool where Hearst swam daily unless the weather was inclement. On such occasions, he could use a spacious indoor Roman swimming pool.

One of Weldon's primary concerns is the preservation of the castle, ranging from the exterior of the buildings down to the last silver candelabra on the long dining table in the ultra-Gothic Refectory, which could have been the setting for a rousing feast by King Arthur and his mythical knights. All the household silver is polished on a regular schedule.

"WHAT YOU have to remember is that building was started more than 60 years ago," Weldon explained. "Time erodes the materials. On the south terrace, for example, we've recently replaced many of the ornate terra cotta and ceramic tiles. Some we had in storage. Others had to be duplicated by a manufacturer. Every day, someone dusts all the marble statues with camel's hair brushes, and washes them with distilled water. Another employee rows around the Neptune pool in an inflated boat cleaning the tiles."

The staff includes a housekeeper, custodians, gardeners, a building maintenance crew, electricians, an auto mechanic, tour guides and park rangers.

"I walk the grounds frequently," Weldon continued, "looking for cracked tiles, fissures in the walls and making sure the flowers are being watered. We're also very security minded. We have now added a canine corps to patrol at night."

Landscaping was a particular interest of Hearst who loved his gardens. From 500,000 to 700,000 annuals were propagated each year, timed so there were always flowers in bloom. No one was allowed to pick them. Hearst's favorites were camellias. There were 3,000 rose plants of 84 varieties to delight his guests.

Hearst was particularly fond of animals, and at one time there were 60 species of grazing animals and 30 varieties of such jungle inhabitants as cheetahs, panthers, spotted leopards, elephants and lions enclosed in a 2,000-acre compound. It was the largest privately owned zoo in the world. The menagerie is gone today, but descendants of the zebra herd may still be seen grazing over the green rolling hills. Deer may also be observed at close range by visitors riding buses to the castle from the reception center below.

POLISHING AND cleaning are not the only requisites for preservation of artifacts. "Take the tapestries," Weldon pointed out. "They represent some of Mr. Hearst's most valuable acquisitions. We remove them from the walls from time to time and rest them in temperature-controlled vaults."

In the Assembly Room on two long walls, there is a set of tapestries designed by Giulio Romano, an Italian artist and architect of the 16th Century, and woven by Flemish craftsmen around 1550. They depict key events from the Second Punic War between Rome and Carthage. These were purchased by Hearst in 1921 for $65,000.

Weldon holds a degree in landscape architecture. After working for a firm in England, she took a position with the state as an assistant landscape architect. Weldon was appointed to her present regional director's post last year.

Hearst bought most of the paintings at the castle during the 1920s. He favored Italian art, particularly canvases dating back to the 14th and 15th centuries. Many of the paintings have religious themes, but a number are of persons who lived during the era.

There are those who criticized Hearst for his lavish expenditures. One example was the time during the 1920s when he purchased an entire 12th Century Spanish monastery and had it dismantled, numbered and recorded for reassembling. Despite the protests of townspeople, it was shipped to New York and stored in a warehouse. The monastery was never assembled.

Weldon takes a different view. "It's a marvelous cultural legacy Mr. Hearst left for the public to enjoy," she said.

Air Force bombs UT-El Paso, 48-6

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — Quarterback Bart Weiss ran for a first-quarter touchdown and passed 60 yards to halfback Kelly Pittman for another as Air Force crushed turnover- and penalty-prone Texas-El Paso 48-6 Saturday in the college football opener for both teams.

Weiss' scoring run and his long pass to Pittman put the Falcons ahead 14-0 less than seven minutes into the Western Athletic Conference game.

Two subsequent UTEP turnovers set up Air Force field goals, and late in the first half A.J. Scott intercepted a Sammy Garza pass to set up another Falcon score — a 1-yard plunge by Randy Jones — for a 27-0 halftime bulge.

Pittman ran 10 yards for a third-quarter touchdown, and the Air Force second- and third-team offensive units each contributed another score in the second half. UTEP pass-interference, face-mask and personal-foul penalties contributed to the final two AFA scores.

Jeff Remo, UTEP's backup quarterback, got the Miners' lone score early in the final period. He ran 10 yards on a keeper with 12:18 left, but was sacked on the two-point conversion attempt.

The Falcons, their wishbone attack apparently in mid-season form, scored on their first three possessions.

After a short, 20-yard punt by UTEP's Henry Castellanos, Weiss ran 32 yards on the Falcons' second play from scrimmage, setting up his own 5-yard scoring run with 11:31 left in the opening period.

Another short punt, this one of 29 yards, gave AFA good field position again, and Weiss immediately hit a wide-open Pittman at the UTEP 30-yard line, and Pittman outran the Miner defense into the end zone.

Two plays later, Miner running back John Harvey fumbled at the UTEP 26, and Tom Ruby kicked a 31-yard field goal for a 17-0 first-period lead.

A fumble by UTEP's Vic Stagliano at the Miner 32 set the stage for another Ruby field goal of 27 yards in the second quarter.

Scott's interception was followed three plays later by Jones' score for the 27-0 lead at intermission. On the first play of that series, Jones caught a 30-yard pass from Weiss. He fumbled the ball forward 8 yards, where it was recovered by a teammate.

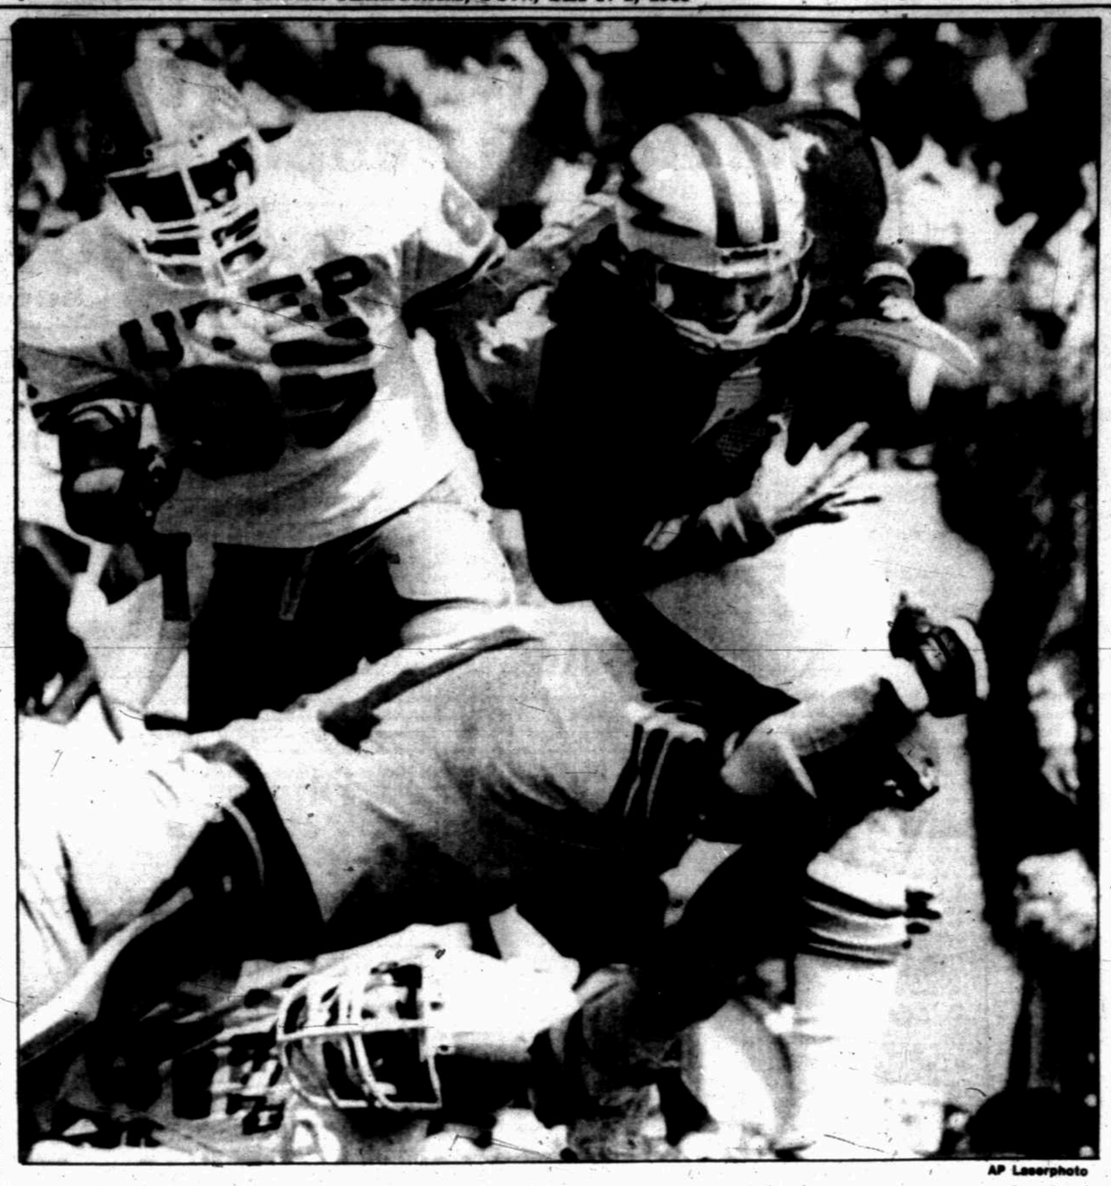

Hugo Castellanos missed a 37-yard field-goal try as time expired in the half. The Miners' only other scoring threat in the half ended just inches short of the goal line, when Garza was stopped on a fourth-and-one play.

Weiss unloaded a 40-yard pass to Ken Carpenter early in the third quarter, and Pittman followed with his 10-yard run for a 34-0 lead.

Another fumble by Stagliano at midfield set up backup quarterback Brian Knorr's 25-yard sweep around left end to make it 41-0.

The Miners put together their first sustained drive of the game late in the third quarter, reaching the AFA 29. They were forced to punt, but an Air Force fumble on the return gave UTEP possession at the AFA 26. Six plays later, Remo dashed for a score.

Backup fullback Grant Morris capped the scoring on a 2-yard run with 10:24 left.

Akers likes battle for starting QB

AUSTIN (AP) — Bret Stafford connected on five of eight passes for 62 yards and freshman Eric Metcalf had a 67-yard scoring run Saturday in the Texas Longhorns' first scrimmage.

Stafford, a sophomore from Belton, is in a battle with veteran Todd Dodge for the starting quarterback job. Dodge hit two of eight passes for 28 yards.

"I thought Dodge and Stafford both looked good," said coach Fred Akers.

Metcalf, the son of former St. Louis Cardinals star Terry Metcalf, also carried the ball twice for seven yards in addition to the long run. On defense, Akers praised middle linebackers Mark Petkovich, Britt Hager and Bobby Duncum.

The Longhorns open their season Sept. 21 against Missouri.

DALLAS (AP) — Junior tailback Jeff Atkins rushed for 102 yards on seven carries to lead the SMU first and second teams to a 24-0 victory Saturday over the scout team in a scrimmage.

The scrimmage was the last full contact work for the Mustangs before their season opener Saturday against Texas-El Paso at Texas Stadium.

The Mustang first and second team offense rolled up 232 yards rushing and 112 yards passing while the defense held the scout team offense to 66 yards.

"We still have a lot of work to do between now and next Saturday," said coach Bobby Collins. "We made too many mental errors today — fumbles, dropped passes, missed blocks."

Atkins is a junior from Fort Worth Eastern Hills. His competition, senior tailback Reggie Dupard, gained 93 yards rushing on 11 carries. Senior quarterback Don King completed four of five passes for 51 yards while his back-up Bobby Watters hit on 5-of-8 attempts for 61 yards.

Defensively, linebacker T.D. Briggs was credited with seven tackles and outside linebacker Rudy Harmon was credited with three quarterback sacks.

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice University's first offensive unit scored on six of its seven possessions to highlight the Owls' second preseason scrimmage Saturday.

"I don't think we've had a scrimmage here at Rice in which the first units were so dominant," said coach Watson Brown. "And I'm talking about both sides of the ball, both offensively and defensively."

Running backs Todd Jones and DeWayne Barnett were credited with impressive showings. Jones, a sophomore from Los Angeles, gained 112 yards on seven carries, including a 51-yard touchdown.

Barnett, a senior from Brenham, gained 80 yards on 10 carries with touchdown runs of one and two yards.

Rice opens its season Sept. 14 against Miami at Rice Stadium.

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Quarterback Greg Thomas led all rushers with 51 yards on 15 carries in Saturday's Razorbacks scrimmage.

Thomas was seven of 13 passing for 124 yards and a touchdown, and threw two interceptions. Running back Carl Miller was second in rushing, with 38 yards and two touchdowns on six carries.

"We wanted our second unit players to find out what it takes to execute when they are tired. This was a good lesson for them," said coach Ken Hatfield. "It's obvious they still have a lot to learn."

Nose guard Tony Cherico, tackle Calvin Williams and end Ravin Caldwell were singled out by Hatfield for their defensive play.

"Our defense played hard," he said. "Our starting defense didn't give up a touchdown or a long play."

Quarterback Mark Calcagni was 11-of-22 passing for 103 yards. Split end James Shibest caught four passes for 62 yards, and split end Donnie Centers caught three for 55 yards and a touchdown.

The Razorbacks return Monday for another preseason practice.

Florida State tears apart Tulane, 38-12

Associated Press

Sophomore Danny McManus threw for two touchdowns and ran for two more Saturday in leading 19th-ranked Florida State to a 38-12 college football victory over Tulane in a battle of Southern independents.

It was Florida State's ninth consecutive season-opening victory. Tulane, with Mack Brown making his head coaching debut, lost its season opener for the sixth straight year.

McManus, a red-shirt who threw only 10 passes last season, lobbed a 15-yard touchdown pass to freshman Phillip Bryant on Florida State's second play of the game.

He rifled a 22-yard touchdown pass to Darren Holloman in the second quarter to break a 7-7 tie and give the Seminoles a lead they never relinquished.

McManus capped his finest collegiate passing day with a pair of one-yard touchdown runs in the final period as Florida State pulled away. He finished with 14 completions in 19 attempts for 191 yards. He also had one pass intercepted.

Tulane kept it close only until halftime. The Green Wave tied the game in the first quarter on a 7-yard touchdown pass from Kim Karcher to running back Rodney Hunter, then got a safety and a 52-yard field goal from freshman Dwayne Clements to trail only 14-12 at halftime.

South Carolina 56, The Citadel 17

Quarterback Mike Hold threw for two touchdowns and ran for another as No. 17 South Carolina, boosted by its scrappy "Fire Ant" defense, mauled The Citadel.

Hold, who sat out most of the second half while his backups played, hit 6 of 11 passes for 128 yards. The 6-foot, 194-pound senior also ran for 43 yards, including a 10-yard touchdown scamper.

College Football

Thomas Dendy and Kent Hagood, the Gamecock's starting veer backfield, also saw limited action but together they scored three touchdowns and rushed for a collective 175 yards — Dendy picking up 89 yards and two of the touchdowns, and Hagood accumulating 86.

The Carolina defense, dubbed the "Fire Ants" two seasons ago for their swarming style of play, held The Citadel to minus-seven yards rushing in the first half while the Gamecocks ran for 251 and a game total of 440. The Bulldogs finished with 59 yards on the ground.

So intense was the Gamecock defense that left tackle Fitzgerald Davis was thrown out of the game in the third quarter after a fight.

Pittsburgh 31, Purdue 30

PITTSBURGH — Jim Everett threw incomplete on a potential game-winning, two-point conversion play with 49 seconds remaining as Pittsburgh withstood a 398-yard passing barrage by the Purdue senior to edge the Boilermakers 31-30.

Everett, completing 34 of 53 passes, fired a desperation 31-yard scoring pass to Ray Wallace after a key pass interference call on a fourth-and-17 play kept the Boilermakers' last-chance drive alive.

Everett then threw incomplete on a two-point conversion attempt, but Purdue was given a second chance at winning the game when the Panthers were again whistled for interference. Passing this time from the Pitt 2-yard line, Everett had tight end Jack Beery wide open in the end zone, but bounced the ball a foot in front of him with no Panther defenders in sight to preserve the Pitt victory.

Arkansas St. 12, NW Louisiana 10

Quarterback Dwane Brown scored on a one-yard run with 11:38 left in the game.

Northwestern built a 10-6 halftime lead on a 23-yard field goal by Keith Hodnett in the first period and on a four-yard touchdown run by John Stephens in the second period. The Demons grabbed another point on a kick by Hodnett.

ASU's first touchdown came on a 2-yard run by Rickey Jemison scored in the second period.

Cal 48, San Jose St. 21

California spotted San Jose State an early field goal, then rolled to six unanswered touchdowns on the way to thumping the Spartans. Ed Barbero, Dwight Garner and Brian Bedford each had two touchdowns in Cal's highest-scoring game in eight years. Randy Walker scored three late touchdowns for San Jose.

Astros hand Cardinals third straight loss

Associated Press

ST. LOUIS — Jose Cruz doubled home the tiebreaking run in the eighth inning and Bob Knepper pitched a five-hitter Saturday night as the Houston Astros beat the St. Louis Cardinals 3-1.

St: Louis lost its third straight game but remained in first place in the National League East, two games ahead of New York, which lost to San Francisco 3-2 earlier in the day.

With the score tied 1-1, Craig Reynolds opened the Houston eighth with a single off Danny Cox, 14-8. Denny Walling followed with a hit-and-run single, sending Reynolds to third, and Cruz hit his RBI double. Walling also scored on the play when left fielder Vince Coleman bobbled the hit for an error.

Knepper, 11-10, struck out three and walked none in his third complete game of the season. The victory was the fourth straight for the Astros.

Glenn Davis homered in the fourth inning to give Houston a 1-0 lead. The home run was Davis' 11th of the season and his second in two nights.

The Cardinals tied the game in the sixth. Ozzie Smith, who had three hits, led off with a double and took third on a groundout. Cox then hit a sacrifice fly that made it 1-1.

Cox gave up 10 hits in seven innings.

Giants 3, Mets 2

SAN FRANCISCO — Jim Gott and Mark Davis combined on a six-hitter Saturday, and the San Francisco Giants snapped Dwight Gooden's 14-game winning streak with a victory over the New York Mets.

Gott, 5-10, snapped a personal five-game losing streak with seven strong innings. He yielded one unearned run in the seventh and Davis worked the last two innings for his seventh save.

Gooden, 20-4, who not been beaten since May 25, allowed single runs in the first and second innings and went six innings, giving up six hits and striking out seven. His Major League-leading earned run average climbed to 1.81 and he now has 219 strikeouts to lead the majors.

The Giants opened the scoring in the first on Manny Trillo's one-out double, and Ron Roenicke's run-scoring single.

National League

They made it 2-0 in the second after Bob Brenly and Brad Wellman belted one-out singles. Gott sacrificed and Jose Uribe hit a run-scoring single to short.

Gott, winless since July 2, blanked the Mets until the seventh. Darryl Strawberry led off with a bunt single, went to second on Danny Heep's single and scored on first baseman Driessen's throwing error to second on Howard Johnson's fielder's choice grounder.

The final Giant run came on a sacrifice fly by Chili Davis in the eighth off Met reliever Roger McDowell.

Pirates 6, Reds 0

CINCINNATI — Bob Walk pitched a five-hitter and Tony Pena hit a three-run homer, helping the Pittsburgh Pirates break a 19-game road losing streak with a victory over the Cincinnati Reds.

Reds player-manager Pete Rose went 0-for-4 and still needs eight hits to break Ty Cobb's all-time mark of 4,191.

The Pirates had dropped five straight games and their last 19 on the road, leaving them three short of the major-league record shared by the 1890 Pittsburgh team and the 1963 New York Mets.

Walk, 1-1, threw five no-hit innings en route to his first victory in the major leagues since July 16, 1984, and his first complete game since July 27, 1982. He did not allow a hit until Ron Oester led off the sixth by grounding a clean single to left.

Phillies 5, Dodgers 0

Shane Rawley held Los Angeles hitless for 7⅓ innings and finished with a three-hitter as Philadelphia beat Fernando Valenzuela.

Rawley had retired 12 straight batters when, with one out in the eighth, Bob Bailor hit a high bouncer over the mound that deflected off the tip of shortstop Tom Foley's glove behind second base. It did not appear that Foley would have been able to retire Bailor had he caught the ball cleanly, and the play was scored a single.

Bill Madlock, acquired by the Dodgers from Pittsburgh earlier in the day, followed with an infield hit to third.

Cubs 5, Braves 4

CHICAGO — Ron Cey's tie-breaking, pinch-hit single in the 11th inning lifted the Chicago Cubs to a victory over the Atlanta Braves, snapping a four-game losing streak and handing new Atlanta Manager Bobby Wine his first loss in six games.

Shortstop Shawon Dunston beat out a bunt with out in the 11th and Bob Dernier walked. After Thad Bosley grounded out to advance the runners, Ryne Sandberg was walked intentionally to load the bases and bring on Cey.

Expos 7, Padres 1

Bill Gullickson pitched a six-hitter and Terry Francona and Vance Law homered.

Gullickson, 13-9, helped the Expos win for the seventh time in their last eight road games. Montreal, in third place in the National League East, moved within seven games of leader St. Louis, while San Diego remained seven games behind Los Angeles in the NL West.

Marino decides to return to Miami

MIAMI (AP) — Miami Dolphins quarterback Dan Marino ended his 38-day holdout Saturday, saying he wanted to return to the team before the start of the regular season "to be fair to myself and to a lot of other people."

The holdout had been acrimonious, with team owner Joe Robbie and Marino agent Marvin Demoff bickering through the press.

"I am returning to the team as of today," Marnio said at a Saturday afternoon news conference. "I can no longer let these circumstances with Mr. Robbie affect my personal life. I want to return because I feel a strong obligation to my teammates, my family and the fans of the Miami Dolphins," Marino said at a news conference.

Marino walked out of camp July 24 to protest lack of progress in the renegotiation of his current contract, which has two years left. He returns to the Dolphins without a renegotiated contract.

"I want to help my teammates work to have another great season. At this time I'm not being forced to return," Marino said. "This is totally my own decision. I expect a new offer from Mr. Robbie shortly, now that I have returned to the team."

Coach Don Shula said he was glad to have Marino back in camp, especially after Joe Pisarcik, the only backup quarterback on the team at the time, suffered a sprained shoulder during Friday night's 19-17 loss to the Atlanta Falcons.

"I'm obviously happy," Shula said. "It's too bad that it's gone on for so long. He looks in excellent shape and now we're just going to work him overtime to get him caught up with all the things he's missed."

The Dolphins' muddled quarterback situation became even more secure Saturday when last year's third-stringer, Jim Jensen, agreed to terms and ended his equally long holdout.

Marino, in the third year of a 4-year, $2 million contract, said he didn't want the renegotiations to carry over into the regular season, which begins Sept. 8 at Houston.

Shula said he wouldn't make a decision on whether to start Marino or Don Strock in the opener until later this week.

Marino said if he doesn't have a deal worked out this week he may play this year under his current contract.

"I love playing the game and I look forward to working toward a championship season," Marino said, adding that he does not regret walking out, even though he didn't accomplish objective.

"It's something that I felt was right at the time and I still feel was right," the star quarterback said.

He said his action helped him "find out where a lot of people stand."

Robbie stood firm throughout the holdout, refusing to negotiate until Marino returned to training camp. He responded to Marino's return by promising to restart the negotiations this week.

"I am happy for Dan, for his family, for the Miami Dolphins and for all of us," Robbie said in a statement. "We will resume negotiations with Dan within the next day or two. I have already called Dan to give him this assurance."

Marino, 23, threw for a National Football League record 48 touchdowns while leading the Dolphins to the AFC title.

He said he believes he could play in the season opener, but "that's not my decision."

Three tied for CUSGC lead

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — Ken Still, who finished birdie-eagle, Ben Smith and Lee Elder shared the first-round lead of the rain-shortened $200,000 PGA Citizens Union Senior Golf Classic on Saturday with four-under-par 67s.

Gene Littler, Charles Owens, Walt Zembriski, Harold Henning and Howie Johnson were one stroke off the lead.

Still sneaked onto the leader board with the strong close, highlighted by an eagle 2 on the 405-yard ninth hole, where he hit a 3-iron into the cup from 193 yards out.

He started on the backside and struggled to a double-bogey on his sixth hole, the par-4, 395-yard 15th.

UNION TEXAS PETROLEUM PLAZA

Energetic Beginnings

With an oil company already secured as a major tenant, a site purchased in Midland's growing northern business district and a unique design on the board, Coventry Development broke ground in June 1983 for Union Texas Petroleum Plaza.

Ron Howard, Senior Vice President of Commercial Real Estate Services for Coventry Development Inc., said in a recent interview, "A good developer is one who will try to make the market and his on desires mesh."

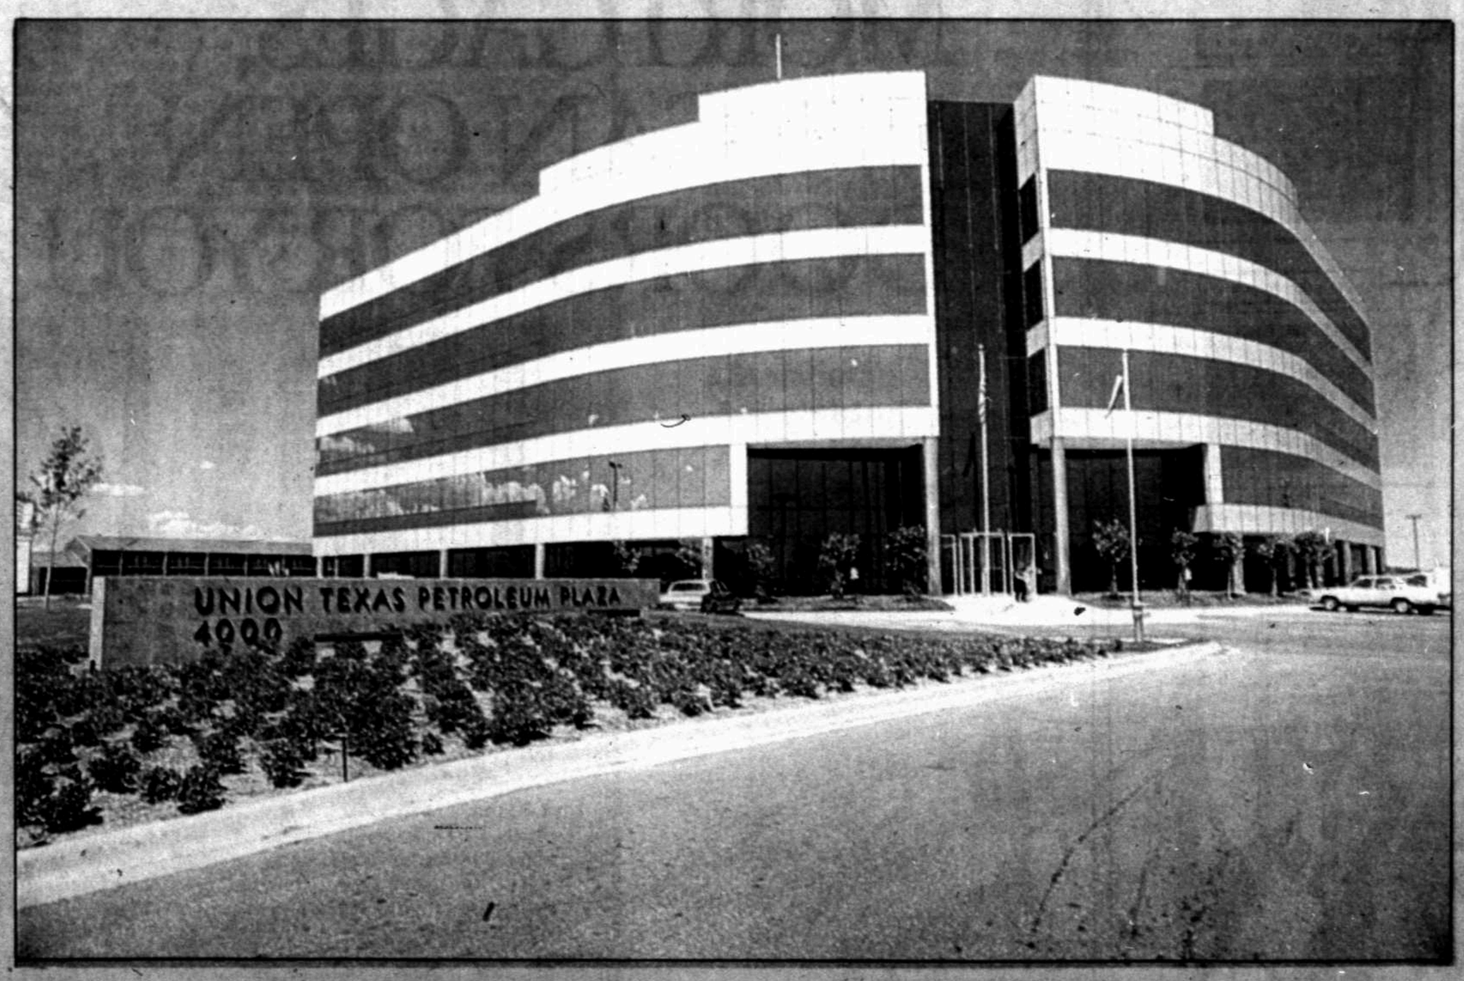

"Most of the time our projects commence through a need," he continued.

In 1983 the West Texas Division of Union Texas Petroleum was officing in an older facility in Midland and needed to expand to approximately 41,500 square feet in a different location, according to Howard. This certainly qualified as a need in the the minds of Coventry Development people.

After an analysis of Union Texas Petroleum's needs and Midland's growth, a site on North Big Spring Road near Wadley Avenue was selected for the new office facility and the purchase deal was sealed with a handshake. Howard said this decision was made, despite the fact that, "most people in cities with central business districts have a hard time cutting ties with the downtown area."

Bank of America recently approved dorne housing

Bank of America, has just approved the financing of geodesic dome homes, such as this. In a recent statement, the bank announced its intentions of making mortgage money available for persons wishing to purchase dome housing.

SAN FRANCISCO, Calif.–Bank of America, one of the largest bnaks in the world, and a major influence in the home mortgage field, recently announced a significant policy decision concerning the finanacing of residential geodesic dome housing.

In a communique to the country's largest dome home manufacturer–Monterey Domes of Riverside, California--the bank announced its decision to approve dome home financing.

Seen as a major boon to dome buyers and the dome home industry at large, Bank of America's Senior Vice President, Charles E. Reed, disclosed, "The Residential Mortgage Banking Group will be changing the underwriting guidelines to reflect the consideration of geodesic dome homes."

Reached for comment, a Monterey Domes spokesman noted, "Significant policy changes by Bank of Ameriea are precedent setting and are generally followed by the rest of the banking industry."

The spokesman further elaborated upon the impact of the bank's decision. "By chainging their policy to include dome homes, Bank of America has signaled to the rest of the finanacial community that dome housing is a viable investment. In effect, they are saying dome housing is an acceptable and financially sound form of housing.

"Up until now no large lender had a formal policy accepting dome housing. When a potential dome buyer wanted financing, it was basically at the discretion of the local lender. So if the local loan officer liked domes, fine, you were in. But, if he didn't, you were financially 'out-of-luck.'

"Now, with Bank of America's new policy guidelines, the local branches are being given the word from above that dome housing is approved."

The impact on the dome home industry should be significant. Dome homes, which are known for their energy efficient designs, low construction costs and beauty, will be all the more available and attractive to new home buyers.

In addition, since most dome homes are manufactured in kit form–for easy assembly by novice builders and contractors alike–people who want to save more by doing their own building can now look forward to a greater availability of financing.

Monterey Domes concluded by saying, "The dome home is one of the fastest growing and most popular new forms of housing. With Bank of America's new loan policy, geodesic dome housing's future is now brighter than ever."

OFFICE

Howard noted that the need for parking space and convenience to residential areas has forced many cities to develop a secondary business district. Union Texas and Coventry officials decided Midland had reached that point. The development of ClayDesta Plaza near Coventry's proposed site on Big Spring took much of the risk out of moving into Midland's new secondary business district.

The design of Union Texas Petroleum Plaza represented the combined efforts of the architectural staffs of Union Texas and Coventry. Vice President Charles Berg of Coventry served as the coordinating architect.

Berg said they knew they wanted a structure with a strong visual identity. After consulting a number of Midland businessmen who complained about neutrally-colored buildings, Berg said they decided to go with "something dramatic."

Blue, Union Texas' corporate color, was selected to give the glass building a distinct identity. Silver and white were chosen to complete the color scheme of the gracefully arced building. Thus, the sleek building is outlined in horizontal bands of silver, white, blue and black glass.

The curved face of the building is accented with a dramatically recessed main entrance.

On the east side, the building's two symmetrical wings form a shelter for a plaza with quiet fountains. The architects elected to place the shaded plaza area behind the building. They reasoned that tenants on the front of the building could look out their windows onto the activity of the city, while tenants on the back side of the office facility could enjoy a tranquil view of a fountain with lush landscaping.

Though the quiet fountains and greenery create a relaxing atmosphere, the architectural use of symmetry and diagonal lines accomplishes what might be termed an "energetic" design.

Inside, the two-story lobby is finished in black and gray granite. The floors are of a rough hewn granite, while granite planters exhibit a smooth surface. Glass block walls highlight the lobby area where plants line the pathway from the main entrance to the plaza.

Berg explained that each of the five floors have up to 20,500 square feet, free of most structural interruptions, to allow optimum space planning options.

Howard described the individual offices this way, "They're not 'cookie-cuttered-out.'" Some companies, like Union Texas Petroleum which occupies the fourth and fifth floors as well as a portion of third floor, chose a contemporary design. Others preferred more traditionally-styled furnishings.

Nine foot solid-core doors, stainless steel hardware, deluxe carpeting, mini-blinds and acoustical tile ceiling are standard, throughout the building.

Howard summed up the project in Midland's secondary business district. "This one was special... It was architecturally something that was different and accepted immediately by the city... What you try to achieve is not just architectural beauty but a profile of tenants that will lend stability. We are as proud of our tenants as we are of our building."

Median resale home prices from $47,000 to $135,200 in 2nd quarter

WASHINGTON——Median resale-home prices ranged from a low of $47,000 in the Buffalo-Niagara Falls, N.Y., metropolitan area to a high of $135,200 in the Greater Orange County (Anaheim/Santa Ana), Calif., area during the second quarter, according to the latest quarterly survey of 45 metropolitan areas by the National Association of Realtoars.

The median price reported for each area in the survey reflects prices of resale homes sold (regardless of size) during the second quarter within the metropolitan statistical area (MSA), as defined by the U.S. Office of Management and Budget. The MSA includes the named city as well as surrounding suburbs. Half the homes sold cost more than the median price, and half cost less.

Increases or decreases in the median home price for a metropolitan area may be due to a change in the size of homes sold, rather than a change in the price of similar homes.

The metropolitan areas of Louisville, Ky., and Detroit, with median resale-home prices of $51,000; Akron, Ohio, with a median of $52,200, and Indianapolis, Ind., with a median of $55,400, also ranked among the areas with the lowest median prices for a previously occupied home during the second quarter.

In addition to the Orange County area, the other metropolitan areas with the highest resale-home prices in the national association's second-quarter survey were: the San Francisco Bay Area, with a median of $134,500; the Boston area, with a median of $131,000; the New York, Northern/New Jersey/Long Island area, with a median of $130,000; and Santa Clara County (the San Jose metropolitan area), with a median of $128,000.

The Minneapolis/St. Paul metropolitan area median price of $75,200 and the Phoenix area median of $75,700 were closest to the nationwide second-quarter median of $75,300.

"While the median resale-home price nationwide increased 3.6 percent from the second quarter of 1984 to the second quarter of 1985, the annual change in median prices in the metropolitan areas surveyed varied widely," association economists said.

The bulk of the metropolitan areas in the second-quarter survey had annual increases in the median single-family resale-home price, with the majority experiencing price advances between 0.1 percent and 10 percent, survey analysts said.

Twenty-two metropolitan areas recorded price increases of 0.1-4.9 percent from the second quarter last year to the second quarter this year; nine had increases of 5-9.9 percent, and six had increases of 10 percent or more, according to the survey results.

Eight metropolitan areas–Birmingham, Ala.; Houston; Indianapolis; Los Angeles; Memphis, Tenn.; Phoenix, Ariz.; Portland, Ore.; and San Antonio, Texas–recorded declines in the median price of existing single-family homes sold during the second quarter this year compared with the median price of those sold throughout the metropolitan area in the same quarter a year earlier.

Of the six metropolitan areas experienceing price increases of 10 percent or more over the year-long period, five were located in the Northeast–Albany, Boston, Hartford, Conn., New York/Northern New Jersey/Long Island and Syracuse, N.Y.–where demand for housing is, in some cases, outstripping supply, putting upward pressure on prices, association economists said.

Orange County, Calif., was the only metropolitan area outside the Northeast experiencing a median resale-home price increase of ten percent or more from the second quarter last year to the second quarter this year.

The National Association of Realtors predicts that the nationwide median resale-home price will accelerate about 3.6 percent during 1985, slightly more than overall inflation. In 1986, a 3.8 percent increase is expected in the nationwide median resale-home price, and a 4.2 percent rise is forecast for 1987.

The National Association of Realtors, the nation's largest trade association, represents more than 650,000 members involved in all phases of the real estate industry.

A patio door is an excellent way to provide easy access to the outdoors while making it a visual extension of the room. When it's a wood sliding patio door that is properly glazed and weatherstripped, energy conservation is assured.

Wood patio doors slide or swing into savings

Replacing a worn-out, drafty, sliding patio door with a new, wood sliding or hinged patio door can accomplish more than one home improvement.

A new, wood patio door, says the National Woodwork Manufacturers Association, not only improves the appearance of a home, but gets rid of drafts and helps to conserve energy. Considering the savings in fuel costs that a properly-glazed and weatherstripped wood patio door can make, a new unit could pay for itself in fuel savings.

Another way to save money is to handle the installation as a do-it-yourself project. Many of the wood replacement units are available in sizes specifically designed to fit right into the rough opening left by the old patio door. Usually, the job can be completed without reframing or residing.

Only ordinary carpentry tools are required to complete the installation. Most patio doors consist of one stationary panel and one operating panel which can either slide or swing.

Available at local home centers, building supply stores or lumber yards, many wood patio doors are available with a protective exterior cladding that all but eliminates the need for periodic painting. All wood patio doors are equipped with precision-engineered hardware for smooth, noiseless operation.

Country look, contemporary style takes shape with shiny white wallcoverings patterned in bright blue, yellow, red and green - plus the warmth of golden wood cabinets and shelves.

Wallcovering gives finished look

Is your kitchen ready for a face-lift?

According to the National Association of Home Builders, most kitchens are remodelled when they're about 15 years old. By the end of this year, over 3 million of them are expected to get a new lease on life.

With new housing still out of reach for many Americans, remodelling of the most-used room in the house makes financial sense. And more and more dollar-conscious home-owners are expected to undertake do-it yourself kitchen projects this year - affluent households included. Even the upscale audience of House Beautiful is rolling up its sleeves. According to a recent survey by the magazine, over 50 percent reported they were planning a kitchen remodelling project involving at least some of their own labor.

Kitchens these days are multiple-use rooms - for more than ever, the kitchen is where the action is. According to noted kitchen designer Florence Perchuk, CKD, "The kitchen today functions not only as an area of food preparation, but as a dining room, sitting room, private office, computer area and workroom."

Perchuk, the only woman ever to become certified as a kitchen designer in New York City, added, "When I started out as a kitchen designer 18 years ago, avocado was the name of the game. But both colors and decorating follow fashion. Today we seem to be turning to a more formal and finished look. Americana is becoming more popular - and that can be Victorian, Colonial or virtually any American period style. Contemporary is also important, often interpreted with a country feeling."

For those who haven't the time, money or inclination for a major remodelling, experts like Perchuk advocate wallcovering as an effective means of changing the look of a kitchen. "And whenever possible, I use fabric-backed vinyl wallcoverings - especially when I am designing a kitchen in an old building," notes Perchuk. "They provide wonderful camouflage for walls that are old, marked or unsightly."

Whatever look you favor, you can find the basics to bring it off in a varied wall-covering collection. For example, a country-contemporary look can be acheived with a trio of patterns in bright primary colors on white, teamed with light golden wood for warmth. The division of the wall into three "layers" is a Victorian idea that works wonderfully with contemporary patterns. Wallcovered shutters add to the finished look. Result: a kitchen that is a delightful place to be in - whatever the action is.

Window treatments add comfort

Windows in your home can be energy disasters. Up to 30% of the heat in a typical home can escape through uncovered windows. Although this varies with climate differences, the right window covering can go a long way in preventing expensive heat loss through your windows. Surprisingly few people consider energy-saving potential when choosing window coverings.

Even though any drapery will form a barrier between the room and the window, creating improved comfort, only the right choice of material and correct fit will help energy savings.

Draperies that part in the middle are still the most common window covering. However, just hanging them on a traverse rod will not save you energy dollars. Maximum benefits come from a tightly woven lined drape that fits properly and is sealed at the top, sides and bottom when hung.

To seal the draperies at the top, install a wood valance that closes off the entire top, keeping cold air behind the drapery. Wood valances are often very decorative and can be covered to coordinate with the color scheme of the room.

Sides can be sealed by tacking draperies to the window frame. If the window is not framed in wood, magnetic strips attached to the drape and the frame are useful.

HALLEY'S COMET

Comet Mania and Marketing

Copley News Service

Halley's Comet, that frozen wanderer from the outer reaches of the solar system, will soon be making a return engagement on Earth's celestial stage.

Advanced reviews of this season's rerun have been anything but encouraging.

Nevertheless, the arrival of the prodigal showstopper can mean everything from dust to dollars, depending on the viewer.

To astronomers, the comet represents an ancient time capsule containing clues and memorabilia of our cosmic neighborhood's early history.

Satellites from Japan, Europe and the Soviet Union have been launched to grab once-in-a-lifetime closeup pictures of the comet, which last appeared in 1910.

The comet was observed in late July by astronomers at Palomar Observatory, and they found it wasn't as bright as expected.

Amateur stargazers with small telescopes may get their first — though admittedly faint — peek at the comet this month.

Later this year, it may be seen with the naked eye if you know precisely where to look.

Others are hoping to ride the comet's tail to greater riches, hoping that comet hype will help them sell T-shirts, calendars, pillows, bumper stickers, tote bags, tapes, pills and posters.

Halley will make its closest approach to Earth, some 39 million miles, on April 11.

"This is the biggest event for me in astronomy," said Randy Michal, 24, a California amateur astronomer who will be flying to Australia next fall for a closer look at the comet. "It's unlikely I'll see it again."

CARL SAGAN and several others already have published books, and a new novel by Fred Hoyle describes a lifeform inhabiting the comet whose goal is the prevention of nuclear war on Earth.

Dazzle or Fizzle over Midland?

By DAVID LEE FORREST

The coming visit of Halley's Comet may not be the most spectacular ever, but at least West Texans have the advantage of being in one of the best spots in America to see it, according to John Hicks, director of the Marian Blakemore Planetarium.

"Probably around the Fort Davis-Big Bend area is the best place in the United States to view it," he said.

"The further south you get, the higher it'll be in the sky" and easier to see, but Hicks noted, most of the U.S. further south than Big Bend — such as South Florida — tend to have more cloud cover, pollutants, artificial lights and water vapor to obscure viewing.

There will be two good times to watch for the cosmic voyager. The first will start around Thanksgiving and stretch into January.

"At that time, it can be easily seen with binoculars, if you get away from the lights of the city," Hicks said. "It will rise in the east about sunset and travel across the sky all night."

In late January, "it'll go behind the sun," Hicks explained, and won't be visible again until after it has swung around the sun and is outward-bound "around the first day of spring."

Please see COMET, Page 2F

There's also been an early run on telescopes. Some, bearing names such as the Comet Catcher and HalleyScope, have been specially manufactured for the occasion. The Comet Catcher, with a suggested price tag of $500, features a wide-angle, low-power lens. HalleyScope, on the other hand, has a zoom lens, which its manufacturer believes offers better viewing.

Despite the hoopla, there's a nagging feeling that Comet Halley (which rhymes with valley) may be this decade's version of comet Kohoutek, which in 1973 promised so much but delivered so little.

Dr. Raymond L. Newburn Jr., a scientist with the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., and director of the International Halley Watch, expressed his doubts during this year's annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Los Angeles.

The International Halley Watch is a cooperative of 900 professional astronomers from 47 countries and 400 amateur astronomers set up to organize studies of the comet. The group is believed to be the largest international program ever undertaken by astronomers.

"I'm afraid it's not going to be spectacular," Newburn said, "particularly in the Northern Hemisphere.

"It will look something like a detached piece of the Milky Way, not a searchlight in the sky."

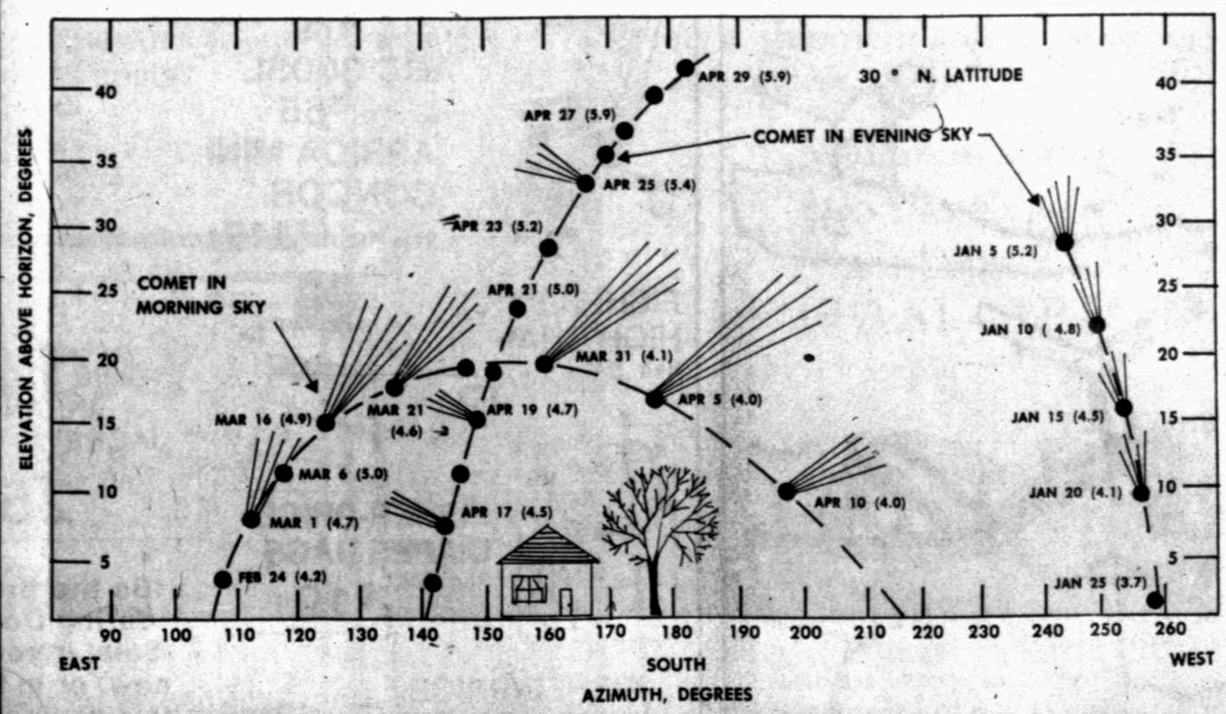

BUT NO other comet has the charisma of Halley's discovery.

It was Edmund Halley — mathematician, astronomer and adventurer — who at the age of 26 announced that a series of comets seen through the ages actually was the same comet, making a trip through the solar system every 76 years.

Halley died in 1742, 16 years before his theory was proven correct, when it was seen one Christmas night in 1758 just about where he said it would be.

Since then, Comet Halley has made two more appearances in 1835 and 1910, striking terror in some who thought they would be poisoned as the Earth passed through the comet's tail.

Please see HALLEY, Page 2F

This chart shows the position of Halley's Comet at sunrise or sunset in 1986 for an observer near 30 degrees north latitude (Midland is at 32 degrees). Beside the date, in parentheses, is Halley's apparent magnitude; the lower the number, the brighter the comet.

No one died, except for those who fell off rooftops trying to get a better glimpse of the brightly-lit spectacle.

Comet science advanced slowly in subsequent years. In 1950, astronomer Fred Whipple came out with the "dirty snowball" theory of comets, saying they were little more than frozen water and gases covered with dust.

Comets, believed to have been formed during the early days of the solar system, travel in huge elliptical orbits. When they come close enough to the sun, heat causes them to shed molecules of hydrogen, nitrogen and carbon. Solar winds blow these gases outward in a huge tail that can stretch many millions of miles into space.

A second tail, formed from gases streaming off in a fine dust, is blown away and reflected by sunlight.

Little else is known about these periodic visitors.

"The nucleus has never been seen," said Dr. Asoka D. Mendis, a research physicist whose interests include comets and asteroids. "It's always been shrouded in a dense atmosphere of gas and dust, and there's the solar radiation that breaks up molecules that are there.

"There's a long gap between from what you observe and to what you deduce."

But scientists such as Mendis hope to get a closer look this time, through the electronic eyes of five satellites.

Last December, the Soviet Union launched two satellites — the Vega 1 and Vega 2 — heading in the direction of Venus. By early March next year, Vega 1 should approach within 6,000 miles of the comet.

A Japanese satellite launched last January should come within 4.3 million miles of Halley on March 11, 1986, while a second satellite expected to lift off next month will come within 124,000 miles three days earlier.

EARLIER THIS month, the European Space Agency got into the act with its spacecraft, called Giotto. Equipped with a color camera that can be rotated 180 degrees, the satellite has been programmed to fly within 300 miles of the comet's nucleus.

"The satellite will be going by at tremendous speeds, about 70 kilometers per second," said Mendis, a co-investigator on both the Soviet and European space missions. "If it's hit by a dust particle at that velocity, it could cause a failure to the spacecraft, a misalignment that will throw it off course.

"For that reason, people are calling this a kamikaze mission."

One other spacecraft, launched by NASA in December 1983, will explore the tail of comet Giacobini-Zinner in September; if it survives this encounter, it will come within 20 million miles of Halley's comet by next March 28.

Earlier this month, elated scientists aboard the Challenger space shuttle said they had repaired a $60 million telescope aiming device that will be used next year to track the comet.

Mendis will travel to both Moscow and Darnstadt, Germany, in March to get the first closeup glimpses of the comet via satellite.

"I will have a fascinating opportunity of actually seeing the nucleus for the first time on Earth by a television screen," he said.

For the rest of the world, the view will have to come from earthbound telescopes or binoculars. Because of the angle of the comet's approach in relation to the Earth's orbit, that view is expected to be disappointing when compared to previous encounters.

ON OCT. 16, 1982, astronomers using the giant 200-inch telescope at Mount Palomar Observatory were credited with obtaining the first photographs of the comet on its return past Jupiter to the inner solar system.

Since then, the comet has been viewed only through photographs or special electronic detectors at the focuses of telescopes, with one possible exception: Stephen O'Meara, a 28-year old amateur astronomer and assistant editor of Sky and Telescope magazine, says he spotted the comet through a 24-inch telescope last January 23 atop Hawaii's 12,000-foot Mauna Kea.

The International Astronomical Union, a clearinghouse for celestial discoveries, says O'Meara's estimate of the comet's brightness was too faint for what the eye could be expected to see through a 24-inch telescope.

But others believe O'Meara saw what he said he saw.

"I consider it a reliable observation," said Stephen Edberg, an astronomer at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory and coordinator of amateur observations for the International Halley Watch.

O'Meara said the International Astronomical Union wasn't in a position to say whether his sighting was credible or not.

"We're not batting each other over the head over this," he added.

As for the sighting itself, O'Meara said, "It's something you wouldn't say in any way was dramatic, just a little dot of light which took a lot of persistence to see."

Yet, O'Meara knew the sighting went beyond its visual impact.

"I was ecstatic," he said. "It was very exciting."

COMET

Even though Halley will be closer to the Earth during its spring appearance, the comet will be less convenient for Midlanders to see during that pass, Hicks said, "as it's in the part of the sky that rises just ahead of the sun." The sun will rise not long after the comet peeks over the horizon and faint Halley will disappear in daylight's glare.

Because of the relative positions of the comet, Earth and sun, Halley "will not be an obvious naked-eye object" according to NASA's "The Comet Halley Handbook," but Hicks said Midlanders should at least be able to see it with binoculars, if they get well away from the city's lights.

Local stargazers will also have two opportunities to see meteor showers associated with Halley's Comet.

The Earth crosses Halley's long, elliptical orbit twice each year, sweeping up debris trailing the comet. These comet remnants shower into the atmosphere and burn up as "shooting stars."

The first meteor shower, known as the Orionid, will be on Oct. 20 and the next, the Aquarid, will occur May 4, 1986.

Hicks will be presenting a show on Halley's Comet, "In Search of a Comet," at the planetarium, located in Haley Park, today at 2 and 3:30 p.m. and on Wednesday and Thursday at 7:30 p.m. He plans to schedule this and another show, "Comet Halley: Once in a Lifetime," at regular intervals throughout the comet's visit.

Space administration designs homes for astronauts

Hearst News Service

Forget the palatial space stations of "2001," "Star Wars" and other futuristic film adventures. When Americans start living in space — possibly in 1992 — they'll be lucky to have a closet-size room to call home.

In an effort to make the cramped quarters as comfortable as possible, the National Aeronautics and Space Administration has James Wise, professor of environmental psychology at the University of Washington, to recommend how the permanently manned space lab should look and feel.

Toward that end, Wise is studying everything from submarines and arctic research outposts to prison cells and the cabs of long-haul truckers. Wise also is taking lessons from the Russians, who have had people in space for nearly eight months at a time. The longest U.S. space ride was the 84-day Skylab mission.

Wise must accommodate near-zero gravity, machines that create a din 10 times noisier than the average office, and toxic gases emitted by everything from carpeting to tabletops. Whatever he suggests will have to fit into five cylinders, each of which measures 35 feet by 13-1/2 feet on the inside. The crew's living space will be squeezed into two of the cylinders.

At a minimum cost of $40,000 an hour to keep each person alive in orbit, NASA wants to get the most out of space inhabitants. Over a typical three-month stay, the agency expects the crew to reach 90 percent productivity, compared with ground-based workers.

Wise's recommendations will help NASA choose among competing aerospace firms.

Halley's visits historic

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Writer

Part of the mystique of Halley's Comet is created by its approximately 76-year-cycle, which makes the comet's appearance in our skies a truly once-in-a-lifetime event for most people, something grandparents have told their grandchildren about since the dawn of time.

Comets have also always held a special fascination for mankind, often being interpreted by the superstitious as fearsomé omens of wars and plagues.

"In 1456, Halley's Comet frightened everyone in Europe so much," according to the 1975 World Book Encyclopedia's entry on "Comet," "that Christian churches added a prayer to be saved from 'the Devil, the Turk and the comet.'"

Halley's Comet is primarily famous because it is the comet 17th century astronomer Edmund Halley used to prove that many comets are frequent visitors to our little corner of the solar system, circling the sun in regular orbits.

Before this, comets had been been utterly mysterious objects that seemed to just unpredictably materialize in the heavens as ominious portents.

Among the historic events that have roughly coincided with the visits of Halley's Comet are:

— the death of Roman general Marcus Agrippa in 11 B.C.,

— the destruction of Jerusalem in 66 A.D.,

— the defeat of Attila the Hun in 451 A.D.,

— the Norman Invasion of England in 1066,

— the death of King Philip Augustus of France in 1222,

— the birth of Mark Twain in 1835. The famous writer also predicted he would die when the comet returned. Twain was right; he died April 21, 1910, when Halley's Comet was passing by the earth.

The following is a schedule for Halley's latest visit:

October 20, 1985
The Earth will cross the orbit of Halley's Comet and collide with debris trailing the comet, causing the Orionid meteor shower.

November 1, 1985
Halley's Comet will still be more than 100 million miles away, but should begin to be visible as a diffuse spot in amateurs' telescopes and binoculars.

December 1985 — Late January 1986
The comet will probably be in its best position for viewing by people living in the Northern Hemisphere.

February 9, 1986
Halley will make its closest approach to the sun, coming within 55 million miles of the sun's surface.

March 1, 1986
The comet will be swinging into its best viewing position for people below the equator.

March 6, 1986
The Russian unmanned space probe Vega 1 is scheduled to pass within 6,000 miles of the comet's nucleus.

March 8, 1986
Japan's small Planet A unmanned space probe will pass near Halley.

March 9, 1986
The Soviet's second unmanned comet probe, Vega 2, may swing as close as 1,800 miles from the comet.

March 13, 1986
The European Space Agency's unmanned space probe, Giotto (named after the famous 12th century Italian painter who included Halley in a fresco) will fly within 300 miles of the comet.

April 11, 1986
Halley will be at its closest point to Earth, approximately 31 million miles away.

May 4, 1986
The Earth will again cross Halley's orbit and comet debris hitting the atmosphere will create the Aquarid meteor shower.

Mid-May, 1986
The comet will fade and become too faint for the naked eye.

Summer, 2061
Halley's Comet will return once again for another visit.

Firm wants to put tourists in orbit

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Space, the final frontier, looks as if it may become a destination resort for the adventurous and well-heeled.

Society Expeditions, a Seattle-based travel agency specializing in adventure cruises, has begun planning the ultimate in out-of-this-world excursions: the luxury space vacation.

"Tourism will become the largest single industry in space during the next century," Theodore Charles "T.C." Swartz, the president and founder of Society Expeditions, predicts. "We believe the time is right to move ahead with our plans for 'Project Space Voyage.'"

In late April, Society Expeditions announced its plans to pioneer space tours. Since then, Bevis says, 3,000 would-be voyagers have expressed interest in the trip.

Comet treks planned

From Staff and Wire Reports

Those seeking better views of Halley's Comet will be on tours ranging from Fort Davis to Tahiti, with astronomer Carl Sagan offering his expertise on one spring cruise that has long been sold out.

Dan Dipert Tours in Arlington is sponsoring a trip to Fort Davis to view Halley from atop Mt. Locke, site of The University of Texas McDonald Observatory.

Besides comet-watching the five-day tour will include two days at the Prude Ranch in Ft. Davis, a night in Lajitas with sidetrips into the Big Bend area and a night in Del Rio. For more information call 1-800-772-5322.

On the more exotic sides, an 18-day Botswana trip, featuring a visit to Johannesburg and a canoeing trip through the Okavango Delta to see a great variety of wildlife, is scheduled for March 28-April 14. After a charter flight to the Tsodilo Hills, visits are scheduled to a Bushmen settlement and to the Pans Game Reserve to view the comet, and to the Victoria Falls in Zimbabwe.

More information is available from Mountain Travel, 1398 Solano Avenue, Albany, Calif. 94706; 1-415-527-8100.

In the Peruvian Andes, a trip from March 31 to April 13 includes five days of trekking on horseback in the Cordillera Vilcabamba range, chosen by an astronomer for high visibility of the comet. The journey, in the company of an English-speaking Peruvian guide and an American astronomer, also includes two days at Machu Picchu and a day of river rafting in the Incan Sacred Valley.

For more information, contact Breakaway Adventure Travel, 38 Newbury Street, Boston, Mass. 02116; 1-800-343-7184.

One fairly typical cruise package involves viewing the heavenly body from the decks of "the Love Boat." The Pacific Princess, known to TV sit-com fans as the Love Boat, will sail from Sydney, Australia, on Feb. 23 for a 28-day "Halley's Comet Cruise" to San Diego, Calif.

Astronomer Clifford Holmes will be aboard to present a series of lectures and slide presentations as well as conduct a nightly comet watch. The ship will carry some telescopes, but, according to Holmes, binoculars are all that viewers will find necessary and passengers who own a pair should bring them along.

On its way north across the equator, the ship will also make calls at Auckland, Fiji, Tonga, Western Samoa, Papeete, Bora Bora and Hawaii. For more information, contact Princess Cruises, 2029 Century Park East, Los Angeles, Calif. 90067.

'Kissing cousins' once common

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Kinship played an important part in nuptials in the mid-1700s and "kissin' cousins" often became marriage partners in colonial New England, says a professor of history at the University of Rochester.

Through an analysis of demographic information gleaned from property ownership records of East Guilford, Conn., John J. Waters found that in one out of four families, at least one child married a cousin.

Brothers and sisters from one family often chose mates from the siblings of another family. About 12 percent of the families Waters studied engaged in this marital exchange of siblings. Thus almost 40 percent of the families were related.

SMOOTH SURFACE FLOORING

Smooth surface flooring is being discovered today as a superb alternative to carpets and rugs. Smooth flooring not only looks good but also has practical merits. Plush carpeting is no longer the only route to elegance. A highly polished floor of herringbone parquet, a floor with a gleaming cover of black vinyl or white ceramic tile can each contribute a different and unique look of luxury. Shaggy textures are not the only path to informality. Quarry tiles, brick and slate ar wonderful anchors for a casual room. Smooth and textured floorcoverings hould be used in concert. This counterpoint of materials adds enrichment to the decorative impact of the room. It also makes it more comfortable and versatile.

Discover for yourself the fine service and quality work we provide at WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop, 685-0875. When beautiful surroundings are inportant to you, come to us. Have you heard...?

By MARILYN McKNIGHT HARRISON

"Adios Amigos" began the invitations to a Fajita Fiesta honoring Sharon and John Holman, prior to their recent move to Houston.

Held poolside at the home of Lucy and John Woodside, the party featured bright colors in the decor, including a striking combination of fresh and Mexican paper flowers on the serving table.

Also hosting the party were Linda Isbell, Shari and Bob Koziol, Coila and Jim Morrow, Sally and Jim Salners and Janice and George Thomas.

While living here, the Holmans and their daughters, Samantha, a freshman at Texas Tech, and Ashley, a seventh grader, were active members of the Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity. Noted for her civic work, Sharon was one of the founders of Hospice of Midland and also took an involved part in the Junior League.

EIGHTEEN OF THE 24 PARTICIPANTS in a UTPB-sponsored trip to Englafid and Scotland earlier this summer gathered for a fun reunion at the home of Doris and Van Howbert.

Highlights of the party were a slide presentation by Dr. Frank Samponaro, who along with his wife Marsha, led the tour, and an original poem by Mary Lou Cassidy about the trip's highlights. In addition, the group enjoyed viewing one another's photos and participating in a picture exchange. The host couple served wine and cheese during the late afternoon gathering.

A surprise guest was Diane May of Westport, Conn., who accompanied her mother, Shirley (Mrs. Wilbur) Rocchio, on the trip and was visiting her parents here at the time of the party.

The Samponaros conducted a similar trip to England two summers ago, and 12 of that group returned this year. Among the places visited were London, Cambridge, York, Windermere in England's lake district, Glasgow and Edinburgh.

OUR CONGRATULATIONS and best wishes to Sharri Pruett and Jim Ketcham of Odessa, who became Mr. and Mrs. in a small church wedding on Aug. 24, with family and close friends attending. Pastor Philip Feist officiated the 11 a.m. ceremony in the Midland Bible Church, with Sharri's daughters, Michele and Wendy Pruett, and Al Wells as the attendants. A reception and brunch followed at the home of Chris and Fred Newman.

Out-of-town guests included Jim's sisters and their husbands from New Mexico, Opal and Al Wells of Las Cruces and Leona and Charles Warner of Los Alamos.

Now at home in Midland, the Ketchams are looking forward to a ten-day honeymoon cruise to the Caribbean at a later date.

Chris and Dottie (Mrs. Norman) Barker entertained for Sharri with a lovely pre-nuptial coffee recently in the Barker home.

BAYLOR UNIVERSITY ALUMNI Gloria and Willie DuBose entertained with their second annual back-to-school party for Baylor students recently.

Party decor featured the school colors of green and gold, including candle torches lining the front walk to the home and helium-filled balloons on the patio. A Mexican buffet was served from a table decorated with gold mums.

Among the 30 students attending were incoming freshmen Angela Glossop, David Walvoord, Ann Nichols, Lisa Tilly, Joe Shuffield and Mike Cantrell, and transfer student Billy Sewell.

Assisting with the party were the DuBoses' children, Bryan and Denise, and their niece, Baylor student Stacia Spraberry of Lamesa.

A LUNCHEON at the Petroleum Club recently honored Jan Miller of Houston, bride-elect of Marvin Schiebout, executive vice president of RepublicBank First National Midland. Hostess for the lovely affair was Lori (Mrs. Mark H.) Wright.

Jan was accompanied by her matron of honor, Kathaleen Bauer of Dallas. The other guests were Letty (Mrs. Thomas J.) Wageman, Susan (Mrs. Rick) Michaels, Cheri (Mrs. Bill) Hill, Maggie (Mrs. David) Kling, Darlene Mertink, Sharon Goodyear and Gail (Mrs. Peter) Rowland.

The couple will live in Midland following a Sept. 7 wedding in Dallas.

MARY (MRS. DIEGO) CANO and her family recently traveled to Langtry for a surprise party and family reunion honoring her mother, Lorenza B. Cantu, on her 90th birthday.

The event, which featured a barbecue dinner, was held at the Langtry Community Building and attended by approximately 250 persons from throughout Texas and Oklahoma.

The day's festivities concluded with a slide show presentation of pictures of the Cantu family as they grew up in Langtry. The group presented "Mama Lencha" with a "buckboard" money tree.

The honoree, who now makes her home in Del Rio, is the mother of 12 children, and she has 55 grandchildren, 62 great-grandchildren and six great-great-grandchildren.

Company supplies science needs

BURLINGTON, N.C. (AP) — Nobody knows how many great medical breakthroughs have come from scientists who started out dissecting Carolina Biological Supply Co. frogs, but Dr. Thomas E. Powell III suspects the number is high.

"I'd wager that over one-half of the life-science Ph.D. graduates in the country have used some of our products at one time or another," said Powell, president of the world's largest privately owned supplier of science education material. "The science student needs many of our 33,000 items — from project Head Start all the way up through M.D. and Ph.D."

The company, which has been called the Sears Roebuck of biology, has sent its products mail-order to educators from Alabama to Zaire. The items in its 1,008-page catalog range from Abalone Shell to Zygospore.

Powell estimates the firm has 30 percent of the market in preserved specimens, which range from bacteria up to cats and giant toads. It also provides 6,000 types of prepared slides — and the microscopes to examine them.

The 420-employee company also sells chemistry and physics materials and has recently begun a line of consumer health goods.

Whiz Kid brings computer to tots

Copley News Service

There's another new computer on the block — and this one's for kids only. Little kids, ages 4 to 7.

This newest entry is a pre-computer computer — something to get the kids used to working with the real thing. It's called Whiz-Kid by V-Tech.

"My daughter was first introduced to a computer at her preschool," said Marsha Brown of Encinitas, Calif. "She isn't threatened by computers. Somehow the school's teachers made them seem fun, and she's ready for more."

Brown recently purchased the Whiz-Kid for daughter Amy, 5, and was pleased with how fast Amy and her friends took to the electronic teaching device.

"Computers have become the rule rather than the exception. It's no longer a matter of getting ahead in school, but rather one of keeping up," said Brown. "I don't want my daughter to end up in the first grade being left behind."

"Parents today realize that computers will play an important role in their children's futures," said Jack Hirsch, president of V-Tech. "Because our product is simple to operate and inexpensive, youngsters can learn about computers without either frustrating themselves or their parents."

Educators agree that computers will play an important role in a child's education. Susan Reese is director of Vocational Education and Applied Arts for the San Diego Unified School District. It's her job to oversee computer education for children ages 5 through 18.

"Children take to computers like ducks to water," she said. "By introducing them to computers at an early age, they don't have the fears of this new and sometimes complicated technology. They love it, and it turns out to be a positive influence in their educational lives.

"The schools don't have the luxury to allow a one-to-one computer experience, but if we had the resources, that's what we would do. At this stage, it's up to the parents to provide that added educational opportunity. Computers are very good for both young children and older students."

Educational electronics is one of the fastest-growing product categories on many toy and department store shelves, according to toy industry statistics. Sales have more than quadrupled in the past six months. The most popular are self-contained learning aids that draw upon electronic audio and visual features to help children learn math, reading and spelling — even logic, music and telling time.

Hirsch said that while the primary purpose of the new Whiz-Kid was to teach reading, spelling and math, the product is also designed to help children become accustomed to using a computer.

Marfa: Gateway to Texas history

In Marfa, all roads lead to the Presidio County Courthouse, left photo, which was constructed in 1886 from locally-available materials. Respect for local history is important in Marfa. The courtyard of the El Paisano Hotel, top right photo, shows this care in preservation. The Marfa-Presidio County Museum, bottom right photo, is a good place to start learning about the area's history, although many artifacts can be seen displayed in local businesses. El Paisano Hotel, bottom photo, was built in 1927 and named a Texas Historic Landmark in 1978.

In the Davis Mountains and Big Bend area of West Texas, the world moves at a slower pace. Cities are smaller, the area's ranching industry means neighbors may be far away and people are more likely to be friends, not just acquaintances.

The town of Marfa is typical of the area in its size — 2,466 as of the 1980 census — and lifestyle. Residents are likely to be friendly, even to strangers.

Marfa, located about 180 miles southwest of Midland in Presidio County, is not prosperous by Midland standards. According to Marfa Chamber of Commerce information, 75 percent of the area's economy is from agriculture, including cattle, sheep and goat ranching, and farming cantaloupes, onions and alfalfa. The other 25 percent of the economy is based on sand and gravel, livestock feed, newspaper, liquid feed, welding and water pumps.

The chamber also states that Marfa has but two financial institutions, Marfa National Bank and Stockton Savings, and that the closest airport is Midland Regional Airport.

Nevertheless, Marfa's citizens have pride in their community and all it has to offer.

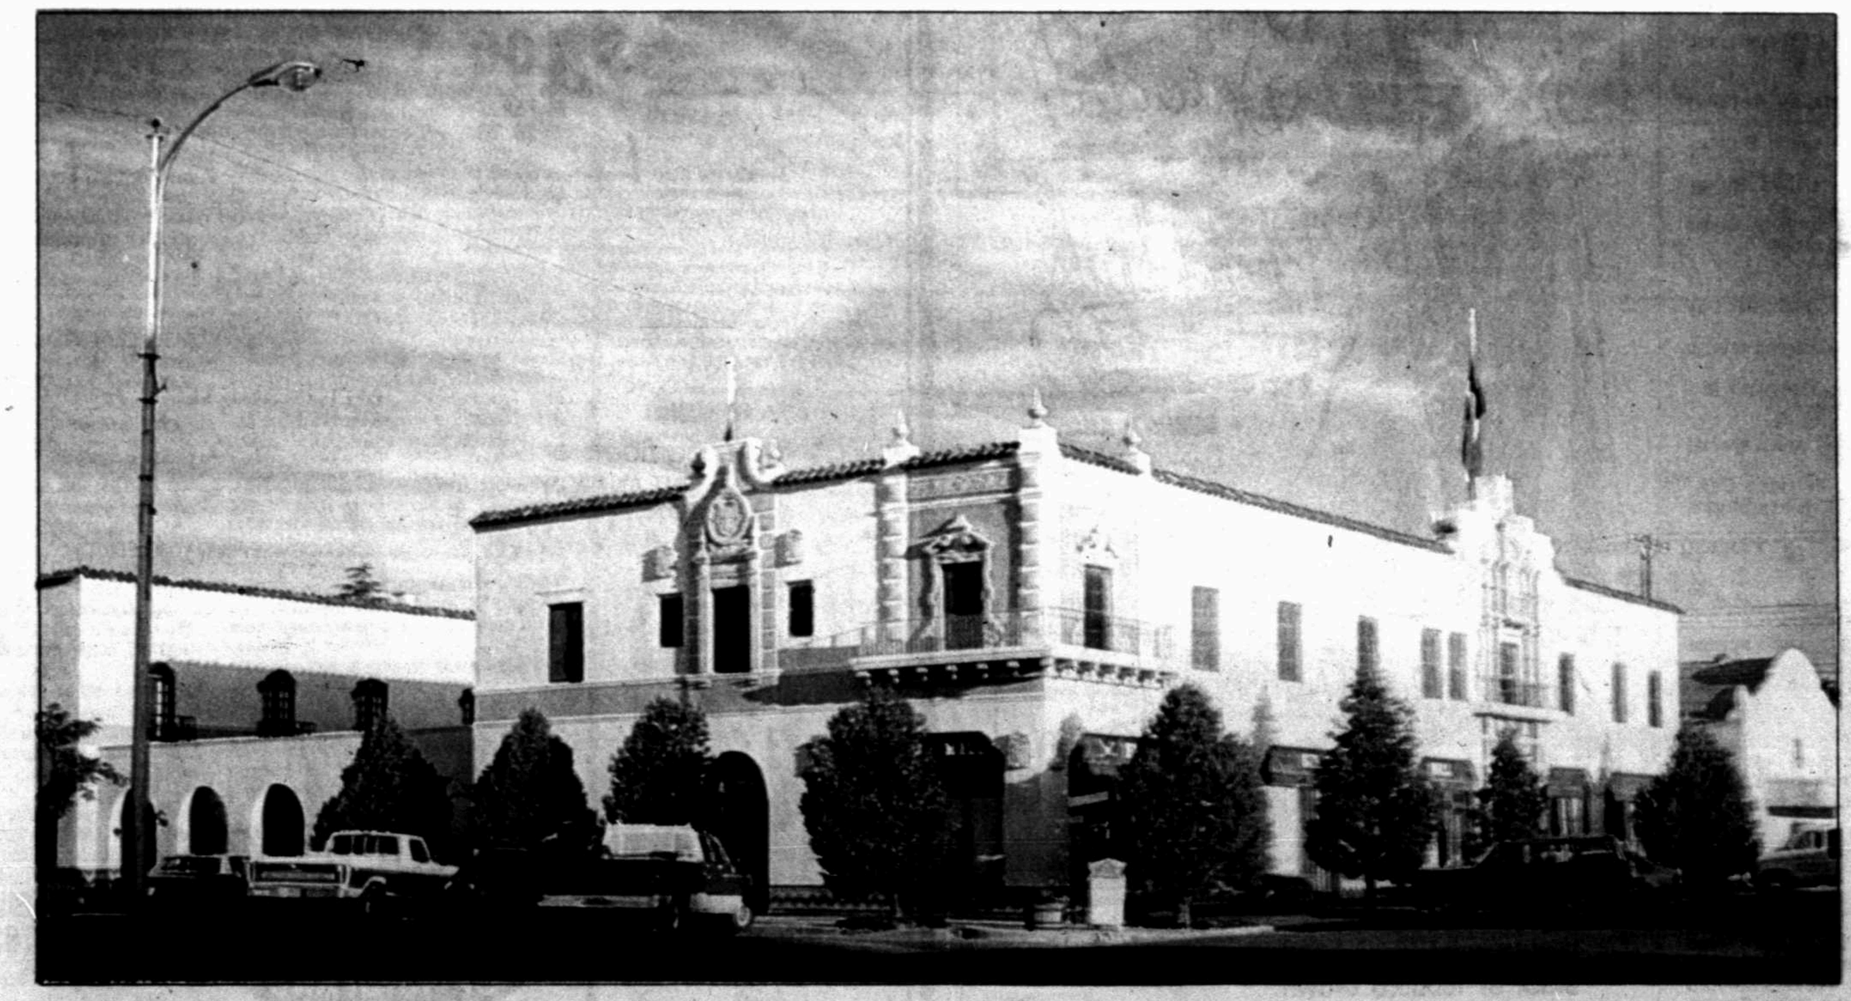

There's a sense of history in Marfa hard to find in some larger cities. Although newer homes exist on every street, many of Marfa's adobe homes have been occupied for 100 years. And while they may shows signs of age, most are well cared for and scrupulously clean.

It is not unusual to find historic artifacts, such as antique ranching equipment or Indian arrowheads, prominently displayed in local businesses.

Presidio County Courthouse, built in 1886 and constructed of locally-made materials, is in the heart of the city. The courthouse dome, towering above Marfa, can be seen for miles. Local legend says the statue of Justice which tops the dome had part of her scales shot away by a disgruntled man who felt he did not receive much justice in the Marfa courts. The courthouse has been awarded a state historic seal.

Surrounding the courthouse are several churches, many historic in themselves. Episcopal, Baptist, Methodist and Church of Christ are all within a block of the courthouse, and Presbyterian and Catholic churches are only two or three blocks away.

MARFA

According to a brochure furnished by the Chamber of Commerce, Saint Mary's Catholic Church was founded in 1885, First Christian Church in 1896 and First Baptist Church in 1902.

"At one time, years and years ago, I think this used to be called the City of Churches," said Darlyne Freeman, a native Marfan.

Marfa has a relaxed, small town atmosphere. In the business district, many of the buildings appear to have been in use for decades, including a five-and-ten-cent store which still has high shelves, wooden floors and cashiers who seen to know all their customers by first names. Perhaps the merchants can't afford newer buildings, or perhaps they and the other residents want to preserve Marfa's past. Whatever the reason, the city's downtown has a sense of continuity and a neighborly atmosphere.

The El Paisano Hotel, built in 1927 and renovated 51 years later, was recorded as a Texas Historic Landmark in 1978. In 1955, during the filming of the movie "Giant, the hotel was home to the film's cast and crew. Posters of the Elizabeth Taylor-Rock Hudson-James Dean epic still decorate the hotel walls.

Ms. Freeman fondly remembers the filming of the movie. She, along with about 30 other members of the high school band, appeared in the movie. "I was a twirler," she said. "That was quite a summer." Ms. Freeman's father, Bascome Webb, became friends with actor Chill Wills, and they, along with actor Monte Hale, enjoyed playing country and Western music together.

"They just got together and jammed," she said.

The Paisano is now a time-share hotel, but is open to the public on a limited basis. Carolyn Lee Rogers, manager, said persons interested in staying at the historic old hotel should call her by noon on any Thursday for reservations the next week. Her telephone number is (915) 729-3145 or (915) 729-4314.

Marfa has other sources of community pride besides its history. With an elevation of 4,688, locals claim it is "about the same altitude as Denver, Colo." The Chamber of Commerce lists Marfa's average temperature in January at 46°, and in July at 77.2°; the number of days its temperature is above 90° at 69 days; and the number of days the temperature is below freezing at two days.

Marfa also boasts two museums, Art Museum of the Pecos, which is currently experiencing financial difficulties, and Marfa-Presidio County Museum.

Marfa has two public parks, one public swimming pool (and three private ones), one public nine-hole golf course and eight tennis courts, four lighted, according to chamber information. Other facilities include two Little League fields, a rodeo arena, a baseball field and a football field.

Marfa is within minutes of the Prude Ranch resort, Fort Davis National Historic Site and McDonald Observatory, and within an hour or so of Balmorhea State Recreation Area and Big Bend National Park.

But for Midlanders, perhaps the best aspect of Marfa is its water. According to "The Child's Guide to the Permian Basin 1985," Marfa's water is 99 percent pure, flows from city-owned wells and is not chlorinated. Midlanders used to tap water that tastes as if it's piped directly from someone's swimming pool may find Marfa's water a rare treat.

Admittedly, traditional night life is almost non-existent in Marfa, but the city does have one drawing card no other location has — the famous Marfa Lights. These mysterious lights, seen about 10 miles east of Marfa on Highway 90, have been puzzling viewers since before 1883. Plainly visible to many at night, no source for them can be found during daylight. Many theories for the lights exist, including luminous gas, temperature inversion and St. Elmo's fire or static electricity. None have been proven. Local residents are said to prefer a legend about an old Apache chief who, becoming separated from his tribe as they traveled through the mountains many, many years ago, still roams the hills, lighting signal fires for his people.

In spite of its lack of big money, "there's a lot of civic pride in Marfa," Ms. Freeman said. " We're proud of our little town. We had about 10,000 people in town for three days" when Marfa celebrated its centennial in 1983. "A lot of people just opened up their houses."

Ms. Freeman said she "left here when I was quite young, and I could hardly wait to move back. It's a wonderful little town, full of good, friendly, wonderful people."

New York Times News Service

"Older people have never been younger." So begins the first travel book published by the 19 million-member American Association of Retired Persons, an organization that represents the interests of people 50 and older. The 270-page paperback, titled "Travel Easy" and subtitled "The Practical Guide for People Over 50," was written by the journalist Rosalind Massow. The book, priced at $8.95 for nonmembers or $6.50 to members of the organization, is a compendium of basic travel information.

With 13 chapters stretching from "Choosing a Destination" through "Doing Your Homework" to "All About Tours" and "Cruises — Leisure Afloat," the book includes two chapters — "Medically Speaking" and "Dentally Speaking" — provided by a doctor and dentist. Three appendices list state and national tourist and travel offices, furnish a reading list and display maps of key tourist sites.

"Travel Easy" is generally available at bookstores. It may also be ordered from the association's books department (400 South Edward Street, Mount Prospect, Ill. 60056; 800-323-5482; add $1.45 for shipping charges). New York Times News Service

Traveling between Fort Lauderdale, Fla. and Lucaya on Grand Bahama Island? Beginning in November at a date to be determined, there'll be a new service between them — via Boeing jetfoil, at a speed of 48 miles an hour, just above the water.

According to Seaflyte, Inc., operators of the new service, the jetfoil — with a capacity of 250 passengers — will be equipped with a computer to assist in stabilizing it for the smoothest ride, and it will also feature two enclosed decks, each with a galley for snacks and beverages.

The schedule calls for two round trips a day and three on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Round-trip fare is $95, one-way fare $48. Children under 12 travel at half price.

Further information is available from Dan Casey (c/o Port Everglades Port Authority, Post Office Box 13136, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. 33316; 305-943-0106).

AT WIT'S END

To solve profanity problem, make it required subject

By ERMA BOMBECK

Erma Bombeck

Cussing in children isn't a new problem.

There is probably not one person reading this who has not had his mouth laundered at one time or another and couldn't drink water for a week without an over-sudsing problem.

But with the amount of profanity on television, in books and layered in the atmosphere, it's a problem that isn't getting any better.

Actually, I find profanity boring. The same 28 or so four- and five-letter words are used over and over again. I can't remember when a new one was added. After a while, they lose their shock appeal.

But a group of mothers were talking the other day about how to get their children back to their first language: English.

You know, sometimes I cannot believe how innocent mothers are. You want your child to stop cussing? Then make him speak profanity correctly or not at all!

The first thing you have to do is make it a required course in school. You have to have four units to graduate: Basic Cussing I, Basic Cussing II, Creative Cussing and Conversational Cussing.

The first two years will focus on sloppy sentence structure. People who speak profanity tend to string along a list of words with no regard whatsoever as to the subject or predicate. Teachers can help. "Michael, I think you will find that 'tough' is no way to describe the obscene object you have chosen. If you are using 'tough' as an adjective, then you will have to substitute a more appropriate word to modify like biscuits or shoe leather."

For homework, he would have to copy down phrases from public restrooms and correct the spelling, the grammar and the punctuation. And every time she opened her mouth, her mother would admonish, "Sweetheart, you've used those two words again. If I've told you once, I've told you a million times, that is an incomplete sentence. I know it's a declarative, but you still must have a subject doing the action."

Kids must be taught that some cuss words can never be verbs or cannot be made into the past tense just by putting an "ed" on the end.

I'm telling you, four years of dissecting the same stupid 28 or so words are enough to take the shine off anything.

Don't be surprised if your child starts to use phrases like, "Stick it in your ear!", "I don't give a good riddly diddly toot," or "War is Cleveland."

DEAR ABBY

Political terms bring response

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: It all began when I ran the following:

DEAR ABBY: A friend gave me these definitions of the various forms of government, and I thought you might want to share them with your readers:

Communism: You have two cows. The government takes both of them and gives you part of the milk.

Socialism: You have two cows. The government takes one and gives it to your neighbor.

Fascism: You have two cows. The government takes both cows and sells you the milk.

Nazism: You have two cows. The government takes both of them and shoots you.

Bureaucracy: You have two cows. The government takes both of them, shoots one, milks the other, then pours the milk down the drain.

Capitalism: You have two cows. You sell one of them and buy a bull.

Abby, what happens in a democracy? — MRS. J. McC.

DEAR MRS. McC.: In a democracy, everyone has two cows, then a vote is taken and whatever the majority decides to do, you do, and that's no bull!

Did I get letters! Read on:

DEAR ABBY: Our founding fathers did not establish a democracy; they established a republic. Let's use the two cows to illustrate the difference:

In a democracy, you have two cows. A vote is taken among all the people, 99 percent of whom never saw a cow; they think milk comes from the supermarket. Whatever the majority decides you should do with your cows, you do — unless the government pays you not to raise cows, shoots one, milks the other one, and pours the milk down the drain.

In a republic, you have two cows. You can sell one and buy a bull, have one or both cut up into steaks, or sell both and move into a condominium because under a republic each person has the inalienable right to do whatever he darn well pleases to do with his property. And that's no bull either. Around here, we call it liberty. — JON A. HOLIDAY, HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.

DEAR ABBY: I hate to contradict your definition of democracy, but everyone in America does not have two cows. A more accurate description of how the system works would be: You have two cows, one neighbor has 10 cows and another neighbor doesn't have any. The government takes one of your cows and uses it as collateral to get a loan. It uses one-third of the money for "defense" — to protect your remaining cow — gives one-third to a foreign government to keep it from going communist, and spends the other third on research to find out why your neighbor's 10 cows aren't worth as much as your two were.

Then the government milks the cows, makes cheese and gives it to the poor people, who would rather have a cow. — BARELY MAKING IT

DEAR ABBY: In a recent column, a reader compared communism, socialism, Nazism, fascism and capitalism.

Abby, comparing such terms is like trying to compare pizzas to piccolos. "Capitalism," "socialism" and "communism" are economic systems; they are not forms of government.

The terms "democracy" "monarchy," "dictatorship" and "anarchy" refer to forms of government — they have nothing to do with the economic system.

England, for example, has a limited monarchy as a form of government, and socialism as an economic system.

I hope this clears up the confusion. — C.R.M. IN MISSOURI

DEAR C.R.M.: It does. Thanks for the political science lesson. Let's not pursue this 'til the cows come home. I think we've milked them dry.

(For Abby's booklet, "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Surgeon warns cosmetic operations leave scars

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — "My marks and scars I carry with me," John Bunyan wrote in the Shepherd Boy's Song.

So do some people who have undergone cosmetic surgery.

Face lifts, tummy tucks, and breast implants and reductions, while often improving appearance, leave serious scars that fade but last a lifetime, Dr. Ruben Ballesteros said Friday.

"It's not just like a trip to the beauty parlor," Ballesteros, a slim, young Baltimore plastic surgeon, told a group of primarily middle-aged women gathered at Washington's Convention Center for a seminar on cosmetic surgery at Health Care Expo '85.

But Ballesteros also stressed that cosmetic surgery can help correct deformities such as unevenly sized breasts, help repair damage from cancer or significant weight loss, and greatly ease the physical suffering of women whose breasts are too large and who have abnormal deposits of fat in the abdomen and hips.

Even vanity surgeries, such as face lifts, may significantly benefit a patient by improving appearance and self-confidence.

But operations that involve incisions mean scars. Face lifts, for instance, beside making the face look 5 to 10 years younger, leave approximately four-inch scars on the sides of the face.

The scars are the result of two separate incisions that start at the temples near the hairline, run down in front of the ears and taper back into the hairline. These cuts allow the skin to be pulled tighter across the face and neck. The excess skin is removed and the incision is closed with stitches.

Ballesteros said that much of the scar is hidden by the hairline. Many women effectively camouflage the scars in front of the ears with their hair style or with earrings, he said.

But in the slides Ballesteros showed of profiles of women who had the surgery, the scar was visible to the eye looking for it.

How bad the scar looks often depends on the patient's type of skin, Ballesteros said. In slides he showed of patients, some of their scars were smooth and hardly noticeable. Others, especially tummy-tuck and breast-reduction patients, had scars that were conspicuously wrinkled and discolored.

Tummy tucks, in which excess skin and fat are removed from the midsection, produce scars that run all the way across the belly just above the pubic area. Ballesteros said the incision was low enough to be covered by a bikini.

Surgery to increase the size of the bosom leaves scars just underneath the fullness of the breasts and may be hidden by the breasts lapping over them.

Sometimes because of internal scarring from this surgery the breasts will become "as hard as a rocks."

Ballesteros called the scarring left by surgery to reduce the breasts "formidable." The operation leaves scars around the nipples, underneath the breasts and on the sides.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kansas, daughter of 1936 presidential candidate Alf Landon, is the only female in the U.S. Senate.

The senator is a lady

— farm-owning, corn-raising, straight-shooting Kansas lady

By Jack Carroll
King Features Syndicate

The senator is a lady. A Kansas lady. A farm-owning, corn-raising, straight-shooting Kansas lady whose arrival in the nation's capital may be the most noteworthy trip out of that state since Dorothy got on the tornado express.

Nancy Landon Kassebaum — a Republican in her second term, but according to her own priorities, first and foremost a mother — has joined the most exclusive men's club in the country. The senator is a lady; the fourth in history, the first to take national congressional office without having a husband precede her there.

Citing names like Carrie Nation and populist Mary Ellen Lease, she calls her election in 1978 and re-election in 1984 just the most recent example of the Midwestern woman's political power.

"It goes back to the pioneer women, who were very much a part of the farming, keeping the homestead rolling. The first all-woman city council was Kansas in the 1800s. And our state constitution guaranteed women the right to vote in local elections," she says in her Capitol Hill offices.

Her success has not merely been the inevitable product of destiny. Influential, with seats on Relations, Commerce and Budget committees, Kassebaum directs policy concerning everything from the future of Amtrak to the aid to rebels in Nicaragua. She also takes highly publicized stands that run counter to the president's platform, including a controversial pro-abortion stance.

"I never think of myself as one of the most powerful women," she says, deflecting the suggestion of governmental muscle. "I think that would be very foolish. For me, being a senator is a great honor. I look at those others who had to struggle years to accomplish this, and I really feel humble since I didn't have to do that."

In fact, Kassebaum had to do very little other than be born. The daughter of Kansas' favorite son, Alf Landon (presidential candidate of 1936), the Wichita homemaker's only political position before Washington was on the school board in her small suburb of Maize.

The first 43 years of her life were as corny as, well, Kansas in August: She married in college, had four kids, baked bread, worked on local charity drives and held on to "Landon" as a middle name. She denies now that that reflects any unspoken political aspirations throughout her homemaking years.

But when she finally decided to enter the fray — after separating from her husband — the moniker provided enough cachet to hand her the win.

"I could not have done this if my children were younger," she says, reflecting on her mid-life entry into the arena her father played with such prowess four decades earlier. "When my children were growing up, I always had an interest in public issues. I would campaign for other candidates, taking the children door to door. But for me it was a question of the right time."

Even now, Ms. Kassebaum misses the domesticity her busy schedule precludes. "Political life takes a personal toll on a man or a woman. You're constantly going, too much sometimes. We do it to ourselves to some extent. We feel we have to be constantly involved or people won't think we're doing anything. That's unfortunate. I'm hoping that men and women who are coming along in politics are really willing to say 'This is off limits. I'm saving some time for myself.' "

BETWEEN THE LINES

Q. Every week I watch "Saturday Night Live." I very much like Martin Short. Could you tell me about him?

Dawn Pahl
Centreville, Mi.

A. He's 34, from Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, and, not surprisingly, he was always very funny and inventive. He used to improvise and tape record a comedy show in his bedroom every week. (He really, though, wanted to be Frank Sinatra, he admits.) He went to McMaster University where he majored in social work, something his friends never understood, and acted in school productions.

In his senior year, he landed a role in the Canadian production of the musical "Godspell," which led to a stint as host of a rock variety show, and then to Toronto's Second City troupe in 1977. He and best friend Eugene Levy, also of Second City, rented a house in Toronto that soon became headquarters for Second City-ers past and present. Dan Aykroyd, Gilda Radner, Dave Thomas and Paul Shaffer (now on "The David Letterman Show") could usually be found hanging out there and it stayed in the family when the two moved out: John Candy promptly moved in.

Martin Short

In 1982, Martin moved up to the TV outlet of Second City, SCTV, and as a result of his success on that show, was deluged with offers, including a holding contract for "Saturday Night Live." He decided to try his luck in Hollywood, however, and soon landed roles on two short-lived series: "The Associates" and "I'm A Big Girl Now." The "SNL" offer then became firm, so he moved east and has scored, as you prove, a major success on that show as well.

Now, though, given the dubious status of the show, as we go to press, it's unlikely that if he does come back with it, possibly in January, he'd be able to do a full season, according to his agent. Currently, he's working on a special for Showtime that should air by the end of the year.

He's married to actress Nancy Dolman and they have an 18-month-old daughter Katherine.

Q. I always enjoy watching Jack Carson in those 1940's Warner Brothers movies. Whatever became of him. Is he still alive?

L. Hammond
Newfoundland, Canada

A. No. He continued with his career and was rehearsing a stage production of "Critics Choice" set to open in Andover, N.J., when he became ill in August of 1962. In October, while undergoing surgery for another condition, he was diagnosed as having liver cancer. He died on January 2, 1963 at home in Encino, Calif. He was 52.

Q. Please tell me if Pierce Brosnan is leaving "Remington Steele." I've heard that he is.

Ginny Graham
Midland, Tx.
Clara Lipton
Trenton, N.J.

A. We asked one of his reps and the answer came back: "He has no intention of leaving whatsoever." Suffice to say, you'll see him next season and in different locations. The first episode takes place in London. He has made a foray into movies, though; it's called "Nomads" and is due for release. The talk also persists that if James Bond movies continue in production and Roger Moore is replaced by someone younger, he is at the top of the list.

Pierce Brosnan

Q. I think Nicolas Cage is fantastic. Can you tell me what else he's been in and what he'll be in next? Also, a little bit about him.

D.H.
Trenton, N.J.

A. He's 20, from Long Beach, Ca., a self-proclaimed "loud mouth" and class clown who got kicked out of elementary school for his pranks. His first acting role was at 10, he figures, when he pretended that he was his tough, out of town cousin to get a bully on the school but to stop picking on him.

By 15, he'd decided to become professional about it and enrolled at the American Conservatory Theater in San Francisco. His big break, though, was in a Beverly Hills High production of "Oklahoma" in which he was spotted by an agent.

He didn't have to go too far for his first movie role. His uncle Francis Coppola cast him in "Rumble Fish." Because of that famous connection and name, though, he sensed resistance from casting agents so he changed his name to Cage and the roles came pretty easily.

He's had leads in "Racing with the Moon," and "Birdy." He returned to Uncle Francis' fold for "The Cotton Club"

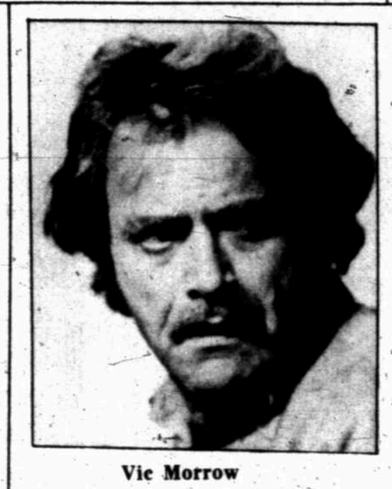

Janet Leigh

Q. I recently saw Janet Leigh in "On Our Way" on TV and she looked awful. How old is she?

Arlene Marzano
Oak Lawn, Ill.

A. She's 58 and what you may have found objectionable are the lines in her face, which she freely admits are there and doesn't seem to mind. She'd rather have them than plastic surgery, she explains.

Regarding "On Our Way," there's still a chance that it may be picked up as a midseason replacement. In the meantime, she seems to be achieving a good deal of success as an author. Her memoir "There Really was a Hollywood" has gotten great reviews and is due out in paperback in the fall. She's also working on a novel now.

Vic Morrow

Q. Over the years, I've written to various columns asking about the career and personal life of Vic Morrow but no one ever responded. Could you please provide some information?

M. Fortini
Springfield, Ore.

A. He was born Feb. 14, 1931 in the Bronx, the son of a labor organizer. At 17, he quit school and joined the Navy. Following his discharge, he attended Florida Southern College on the G.I. Bill, studying pre-law and spending his extracurricular time with the Drama Club.

He attended Mexico City College next but when his G.I. funds ran out, he went to work in the theater at the Erie (Pa.) Playhouse and the Hilltop Theater in Baltimore. He returned to New York in the early 1950's, enrolled at Paul Mann's Actors Workshop and for two years, he studied acting while supporting himself by driving a cab.

He made his movie debut in "The Bad News Bears." He was also a director of both plays and films, such as the 1970 Italian western "A Man Called Sledge" starring James Garner. He was most famous, though, for his starring role in the series "Combat."

As you undoubtedly know, he was killed on July 23, 1982 while filming an episode of the "Twilight Zone" movie. The trial stemming from that accident begins in January.

NANCY

Still, for herself right now, Washington is a long, long way from Kansas. "Politics is a lonely life. And particularly in the Senate. I think on the whole we're 100 loners. I keep in very close contact with the children. And sometimes when I go home at night, I like to just read a good mystery book."

Of course, as with many high-powered government figures, when Ms. Kassebaum saves some time for herself, it usually means she gets to do her research, briefings and official reading at home instead of in her offices.

Her work on three of the most congested committees in Congress demands constant cramming. But the broad scope of issues the responsibilities expose her to stimulates her. "Budget has been sort of a smorgasbord, and given me a real opportunity to get interested in so many things. Defense for example. I got interested in chairing the defense reform caucus from my budget work."

In other words, interesting work led to more interesting work. But Ms. Kassebaum is realistic about what she can accomplish and knows about the law of diminishing returns. "One of our problems here is getting on too many committees. We spread ourselves too thin."

A go-getter and a pragmatist, Kassebaum has earned a reputation for diligence, independence and persistence. Those who have followed her political life find in her both the spirit of compromise and fortitude of her own beliefs. Her stand on abortion, for example, has not been unassailed by her constituents, yet she has maintained it despite its potential for hurting her politically.

She says, "I don't know that a stand on a sensitive issue is ever popular, because there are always people pro and con. So I announced my position on abortion when I was running for Senate — I knew it was such an emotional issue and I didn't want anyone to be misled.

"I'm not pro-abortion, but I think at least there should be more options. We need to accept the responsibility of preventing abortions by preventing unwanted pregnancies, not by a constitutional amendment. I think it will be a long time before it's resolved. And while people may resent bitterly my position, at least they know I have been up front on where I stand."

The senator is no iron-clad ideologue, though. "Tolerance" is her key principle, she says, and it's a byword she says she wished held more sway in the political area. "We shouldn't just focus on a narrow cause to be our be all and end all. We have to accept that sometimes to achieve progress we must accept progress."

In her own frame of beliefs, she says she's currently undergoing a major option change regarding legislation limiting how long officials could hold public positions. "Since I've been here I have changed my views on a constitutional amendment limiting tenure. Even for the president, once you pass the limit, you are automatically a lame duck. I never thought I would see it, but that's what's happening now. No matter how strong Reagan is, eventually people will say his time is over."

Nancy Kassebaum

If recommendations limiting senators' terms to two had been adopted, she herself would not be able to run again. "For senators I think 12 years is enough, but I don't want to impose it constitutionally. I don't want anyone to think of me as a lame duck."

Even if, as Ms. Kassebaum says, Reagan's entered a lame duck period, she says he has already achieved in his first term enough to earn him a significant place in history. "I have enormous respect for the president," she says, not just mouthing Republican platitudes, but authentic warm feelings for the man.

"I admire very much his ability to restore a great deal of vitality to the presidency. That renewal of assertiveness — both domestic and foreign — will be what he is remembered for. It came at a very good time: after Vietnam and Watergate and the Carter administration. We were feeling downtrodden and diminished."

That said, the lady from Kansas admits the man from California may not be as contemporary in his thinking about women as she would like. Personally, she enjoys basking in the accessibility to his charm that her position allows her. But, when speaking candidly, she admits he treats her differently because she is a woman.

She says, "I think the president would find it very difficult to tell me as a woman senator that I was being a damn fool. Which he would not hesitate to say to any of my colleagues. He comes from that background; he would find it hard to use the same arm-twisting. My dad still finds it hard to believe there's a woman in the senate."

Especially during the election, the perception that the president did not particularly understand women's issues spread to the point where it stood as a potentially dangerous political explosive. Ms. Kassebaum says she always thought the "gender gap" was a media creation and, despite her personal experience with Reagan, that he "has a great respect for women."

Her confidence in his success with the nation's women led her to take a bold move at convention time that was greatly misinterpreted in the press.

"The convention planners were trying to struggle with the whole impact of the women's vote, of Geraldine Ferraro. So they wanted to have the women up front. They wanted to turn the first night of the convention into a sort of Ladies' Night."

They invited, urged and coaxed Ms. Kassebaum to attend. Her refusal, in some precincts, was interpreted as a sign of withholding support from Reagan. "I just didn't think it was good for the party. Besides, I had a re-election campaign of my own to run in Kansas. The press were reporting any story they could, so they went after it."

Anyone who knows the Kassebaum style would understand she doesn't create public stand-offs. Low-profile by nature, she operates from within not by staging events or flashing her personality.

That manner, however, can be something of a political liability. "I'm personally non-flamboyant. I sometimes wish I had one-liners, but I don't. I don't cause an audience to stand up and cheer when I speak, I don't throw a hatchet through the crowd.

"That has always led to the question of whether I'm going to be tough enough. A huge part of politics is being noticed. There are a lot of egos out there; that's really a part of Washington and you have to have a certain amount of that."

So while she bemoans her lack of personal flamboyance, she's kidding herself to think she doesn't generate an aura — strength and assurance radiate there. Like a seasoned politician, she has also learned to turn her weaknesses in to strengths.

"Women more than men in politics have to be very much themselves. On the whole, we're under a microscope, we're doubly scrutinzed and doubly criticized.

That doesn't put the senator above scrutiny, by any means. She recalls a recent interview phone-in show appearance with Sen. Joe Biden on which matters of great national interest were to be discussed. "A call came in from Kansas about my hair, and I said. 'Gosh, Joe, do you get calls about your hair?' "

But the senator from Kansas is a lady, and a well-adjusted confident one at that. A figure whose decisions affect the disposition of millions and the lives of millions, she's merely amused at the idea of having her success judged on the basis of her hairdo. "You've got to have a sense of humor or you don't survive with any enjoyment in politics," she says.

Ungainly 'Godzilla' walks again

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

The starring monster in "Godzilla 1985" is portrayed by a complex 1.2 ton, 16-foot-tall, 32-foot-long computerized robot containing more than 3,000 parts, according to New World Pictures.

If that's true, somehow this supposedly sophisticated wonder of technology still manages to look uncannily like a guy in a shoddy rubber suit stomping on a cheaply-made scale model of Tokyo.

The best part of "Godzilla 1985" is the cartoon short that precedes the actual feature film. This little gem of animation — with the unlikely title of "Godzilla Meets Bambi" — was made by Marv Newland several years ago and is the hilariously definitive tiny parody of Godzilla movies.

Unfortunately, it's a shock to go straight from the funny "Godzilla Meets Bambi" to the deadly dry and straightforward "Godzilla 1985."

Godzilla movies long ago descended into self-parody.

The first 1956 "Godzilla" was not a half-bad monster movie for its day. Actually, the original Japanese title was "Gojira;" for American release the title was changed, English was dubbed in, 20 minutes of Japanese footage was cut out and some new American-made scenes with Raymond Burr were made and stuck in.

The film, using Godzilla as a symbolic fire-breathing dragon representing the city-smashing horror of nuclear weapons which only the Japanese have experienced, was successful enough to spawn a whole army of sequels.

The quality of the series, however, slides continually downhill over the years. By 1976, with "Godzilla vs. Megalon," the films were so painfully bad that only hardcore camp fans could stand to sit and giggle their way through them.

Wisely, "Godzilla 1985" pretends all those other bad Godzilla movies were never made. Its plot is structured as though it were the first and only sequel to the original "Godzilla."

Unfortunately, the film retains many of the bad points of those other Godzilla films, including poor dubbing and laughable special effects. During one scene, in which Godzilla is strafed by jet fighters in Tokyo Bay, the audience can even see the wires that the model planes slide down toward the water on.

All of this might be made at least marginally bearable if the film were being played for laughs, but the film remains dead serious. Even Raymond Burr, who reprises his role from the 1956 film, looks numbly somber while delivering his dumb dialogue.

Sadly, the only comic relief character in all of "Godzilla 1985" is a Japanese thief and his best line is "Run for your life; and let's do lunch sometime." Maybe it was a funnier joke in Japanese....

"Godzilla 1985," rated PG for tons of patently fake and unconvincing mass destruction, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

'Teen Wolf' not howlingly funny

Michael J. Fox, hot off his success in one of this summer's few really big hits, "Back to the Future," can't heat up "Teen Wolf."

"Teen Wolf" is the werewolf entry into what seems to be a minor revival of old horror movie characters. This summer has also seen the return of the vampire in "Fright Night," of Frankenstein in "The Bride" and of Godzilla in "Godzilla 1985."

"Teen Wolf" is a high school comedy very, very loosely inspired by the old late show flick "I Was a Teen-age Werewolf." That unintentionally funny 1957 movie is now mainly memorable for marking Michael "Highway to Heaven" Landon's film debut in the title role.

Fox plays a small-town high school student, who's something of a klutz and is a notoriously unsuccessful basketball player. His life changes abruptly when he discovers that the little problems with his voice changing and hairiness aren't normal adolescent growing pains, but rather the first symptoms of lycanthropy.

It seems his dear old dad just hadn't gotten around to telling Fox about an ancient family curse.

It doesn't turn out to be much of a curse for Fox, however; as a werewolf, he somehow turns out to be quite a successful party animal.

He's not a mean, nasty cannibalistic-type werewolf, you understand. Instead, he's an agile, powerful basketball-playing werewolf who has quite a way with the women.

But, as Fox's chief rival tells him during the course of the film, "underneath all that hair, you're still a dork!"

The bulk of "Teen Wolf" devolves into an inoffensive but relentlessly dumb little homily about how Fox's character should be happy with himself just the way he is.

There's absolutely nothing wrong with this premise but the meandering screenplay is dull and the conclusion is utterly predictable.

There are a few genuine bits of wit scattered about the movie, but, on the whole, "I Was a Teenage-Werewolf" — which wasn't even supposed to be funny — remains the more amusing film to watch.

"Teen Wolf" isn't howlingly bad, but even the powerful influence of a full moon wouldn't make it into much more than a small dog of a comedy.

"Teen Wolf," rated PG for strong language and sexual innuendo, is now showing at the NorthPark Cinemas.

Permian Playhouse will open with 'Cabaret'

ODESSA — "Cabaret," the multiple prize-winning Broadway musical success that launched one of the major song-hits of the 1960s, will be the opening presentation of the 1985-86 season at Odessa's Permian Playhouse. The production will run from Sept. 12-28.

Opening on Broadway in November 1966 and continuing until September 1969, "Cabaret" won all three of the "best musical of the year" awards in its first season — Tony Award, N.Y. Drama Critics' Circle Award and Outer Circle Critics' Award. when the show was presented in London, it won London's Variety poll and the Evening Standard poll as the best musical of the year.

Based by Joe Masteroff on John van Druten's 1952 play "I Am a Camera" and Christopher Isherwodd's 1938 book of "Berlin Stories" which inspired van Druten, "Cabaret" is a tale of tarnished innocents abroad in a land with no time for innocence, Berlin in the years just before Hitler came to power. Music is by John Kander and Fred Ebb.

Linda Waltz (Sally Bowles) and Kent Smith (Clifford Bradshaw) will portray the outsiders cast up in the events taking place in the glitter and frenzy of Berlin in those days. Miss Bowles is a restless, reckless English girl trying to believe in her singing talent and Bradshaw is an American hoping to become a writer and fatalistically drawn to her.

Their young romance is echoed by a middle-aged couple. William Stebbins (Herr Schultz) will be seen as a Jewish shopkeeper who deludes himself that the Nazi movement is no threat to him, and Frances Heltzel (Fraulein Schneider) will act the part of a sadly resigned romminghouse keeper who whim he hopes to end his loneliness.

Rogers Tilley will be seen as the clown-faced Master of Ceremonies of the cabaret where much of the musical's action occurs, a place symbolizing the sleazy debauchery of the time, when people were trying to ignore the evil rising on the horizon. It is he who acts the smirking host of the decadent revels and sings the leering, acridly tuneful welcome to the night club's life, in three languages.

Gerik Powell (Ernst Ludwig) will be seen as a fantically devoted Nazi.

Others in the cast will be Marc Slattery, Kristin Collinsworth, troy Moody, Arwayne Bishop, Casey Matlock, Jeffery Hawkins, David Houston, Sidney Armentrout and Nancy Johnson. The Kit Kat Club girls will be played by Patricia Reid, Jennifer Williams, Shawn Cole and Margaret Young. Ashley Cooper, Dominic Lopez, Scott Innes, Mark Gard and Jack Harding will play the waiters and male dancers.

The production is directed by Coy Sharp. Vocal direction is by Ronald Bennett and choreography by Cherry Jones. Costumes are designed by Kerry Pell.

Museum displaying Bodmer prints

'Journey Through America' engravings seen

The Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., major exhibition of the fall, "Karl Bodmer's Journey through America," is up through Nov. 3.

In 1984, the museum acquired the complete portfolio of hand-colored aquatint engravings by Bodmer which illustrate the book "Travels in the Interior of North America" by Prince Maximilian of Wied, Germany.

"The funds to acquire this important collection of prints were raised locally from individuals in the community who support the collecting goals and educational philosophies of the museum," says Sue Devine, acting director and curator of the museum. That support coupled with a generous grant from HNG/InterNorth, Inc., has made the current exhibit possible.

This exhibit features Bodmer's entire portfolio of 81 hand-colored aquatint engravings, three original watercolors on loan from the joslyn Museum, Omaha, Neb., and artifacts from museums around the country. These artifacts include ceremonial clothing such as leggings and headdresses, children's attire, objects such as richly beaded saddle bags, cooking utensils, jewelry and other items similiar to those Bodmer would have seen on his journey.

"This is one of the most important exhibitions held at the museum in recent years," Ms. Devine says. "We are fortunate to own the Bodmer engravings and we are grateful to HNG/InterNorth, Inc., for providing us with the funding we needed to make this a truely excellent exhibit."

In 1832, Prince Maximilian embarked on a journey up the Missouri River to study the flora, fauna and native Americans who inhabited the region. In order to document his journey and maintain accurate records of all that he saw, he commissioned Bodmer, a young Swiss artist, to accompany him. Bodmer made sketches and watercolors to supplement Prince Maximilian's written observations.

Maximilian published this account in the 1840s and circulated it around Europe in three languages. After World War II, Bodmer's original watercolors were rediscovered in Maximilian's ancestral home in Germany and shown throughout West Germany and the United States.

"Recognizing the value of the collection as an irreplaceable historic and ethnographic record of life on the American frontier, HNG/InterNorth, Inc., purchased the complete set of Bodmer's watercolors in 1962," says Ms. Devine.

The watercolors were placed on permanent loan at the Joslyn Art Museum. In 1984, to commemorate the 150th anniversary of the expedition, HNG/InterNorth, Inc., sponsored an exhibition of Bodmer's watercolors entitled "Views of a Vanishing Frontier."

Organized by the Joslyn Art Museum, this exhibition traveled to major museums across the United states including the Amon Carter, Fort Worth, the Fine Arts Museums of San Francisco, M.H. de Young Memorial Museum, San Francisco, Calif., the National Museum of Natural History/Smithsonian Institution, Washington, D.C., and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, New York, N.Y.

The importance of Maximilian's journey lies in its fortuitous timing. Two years before the party arrived, hostility was still very prevalent between white traders and Indians. The situation had improved by the time of Maximilian's visit, and he was able to closely study formerly hostile tribes. Five years after the expedition, a smallpox epidemic nearly decimated the Mandan tribe which Maximilian and Bodmer had studied and recorded extensively.

Bodmer's depictions of the landscape, vegetation, Indians and artifacts are remarkable in their accuracy," says Ms. Devine. "The Landmarks he painted and sketched along the Missouri River, such as Citadel Rock and the White Castle formations, appear in his illustrations much the same as they look today."

Docented tours of this exhibit may be arranged by contacting Sue-Ann Goodman, curator of education, at 683-2882. Exhibition posters commemorating this special exhibit will be available for sale in the museum shop. Museum hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. There is no admission charge to view exhibits at the museum.

United Spiritual Singers

MAA offers noon concerts at downtown bank's plaza

Midland Arts Assembly is presenting a series of Wednesday noon concerts at RepublicBank First National's plaza during September. Concert dates are Wednesday, Sept. 18 and 25.

Performing this week will be Rochelle Rabouin and The United Gospel Singers.

Ms. Rabouin played Jewel in Midland Community Theatre's production of "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas" and performed locally with pianist Cy Roland in the duet "Just Friends." She also sang during last fall's September concerts as well as the Celebration of the Arts. Both annual events are sponsored by Midland Arts Assembly.

"There was nothing allowed in our house but jazz music," Ms. Rabouin says of her childhood days. "My father was a jazz musician during the jazz era. When he married my mother, he went into the Army because he knew he'd have to have a steadier income."

Ms. Rabouin sings jazz.

Organized in 1972 by Odell Niblett, the United Spiritual Singers have several goals, among them, "to spread the good news of Christ by ways of praise" and "to become proefssional contemporary Christian recording artists." The group recorded a 45 rpm record in 1984 and is working on an album "Shine."

Members of the USS are Darlene McMaryion, president; Curtis L. Butler, music director; Earline Cornish, treasurer; Janice Butler, secretary; Laura Butler; Debra Hearne; Otis Butler; Ivan Shumate, keyboard; Allen Hunt, drummer and percussionist; and Larry Lewis, bass and lead guitar.

The group participates in community events such as Celebration of the Arts, Pancake Jamboree and Septemberfest as well as performing in numerous churches. USS has provided backup vocals for various groups in the recording business in gospel and secular music.

Wednesday's performance is free. Those attending are welcome to bring lunch and enjoy this outdoor concert.

Sonny Carter to discuss NASA at Odessa's Presidential Museum

ODESSA — Commander Manley "Sonny" Carter of the NASA space program will speak about his experiences and training to become an American astronaut at 2 p.m. Saturday, at the Presidential Museum in Odessa. The visit is in conjunction with the exhibition Aeronautics and Space: The NASA Story, a collection of 85 color photographs which document the history of NASA.

Using slides and "space-age" artifacts, Carter will talk about his experiences with training for weightlessness and space experiments as well as a discussion on the developments made by NASA since its beginning in 1958. Carter recently completed training and evaluation programs to qualify as a mission specialist for upcoming space shuttle flights.

"We're very excited and quite honored that Sonny was able to take time out of his busy schedule preparing for his mission on the space shuttle to be part of the museum's special program," Valerie Christensen, director of the Presidential Museum said. "I can't think of a better way to learn about space and the shuttle than from an astronaut who's been there."

Reservations to hear Carter are being taken on a first come, first serve basis and may be made by calling the museum at 332-7123. Admission is $2 for non-members. Members are admitted free.

The Presidential Museum, located at 622 N. Lee Street in Odessa, is open Tuesday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

GOREN BRIDGE

BY CHARLES GOREN AND OMAR SHARIF

DEAR MR. GOREN

Q.—We had a major disaster when partner held this hand:
♠Q1054 ♡AJ652 ◊KQ73
I opened one spade and partner jump raised to three spades. I tried Blackwood and, when partner showed two aces, I bid a grand slam. Since we were missing the ace of trumps, this was not an unqualified success. I am sympathetic to partner's argument that, if he doesn't show his void, he might miss a makable slam. What we missed, though, was winning a big rubber. Please comment.—H.K., Brooklyn, N.Y.

A.—The trouble with treating a void as an ace is that you are not sure whether it is a "working" void or whether, as here, it is opposite an ace in partner's hand and you are missing an ace somewhere else.

When you have a void or two fast losers in an unbid suit, you should not initiate Blackwood. Your hand is better suited to a cue-bidding sequence. But what about those cases where partner asks for aces and you have a void?

Easley Blackwood suggests in his book that, when the responding hand holds a void, he should make the bid he would have made had he held no void, only one level higher. Thus, with no ace and a void, respond six clubs rather than five clubs; with one ace and a void, respond six diamonds, etc.

That is all well and good. However, you often still won't know whether or not the void duplicates one of your aces. Therefore, I recommend another method.

With a void but no ace, sign off in five clubs—you cannot afford to venture to slam because you can't be sure your void is "working." With one ace and a void, jump in your void suit if it is lower in rank than your trump suit; if it ranks higher, jump to the six-level in your trump suit. With two aces and a void, respond five no trump.

Therefore, on the hand shown, partner would jump to six clubs in response to Blackwood to show a void in clubs and one ace. Had the void been in hearts, he would respond six hearts.

Now let's assume that the agreed trump suit is hearts and partner has a spade void. He cannot jump to six spades since that would commit your side to a grand slam when you could be off a cashing ace. So instead partner would jump to six hearts to show one ace and a void in a suit ranking higher than the trump suit. In this case, it could only be a spade void.

Multiple marriages make mighty forests of some family trees

By KAY MARIE PORTERFIELD
King Features Syndicate

Thirteen-year-old Jenny was prompted to draw a family tree by her custodial father's recent third marriage. She needed some way to keep track of all her relatives, step-relatives and ex-step-relatives. The cast of characters had become too unwieldy to handle without a chart.

There was Ian, her mother's first husband, the man she married in college, long before Jenny's dad (husband No. 2) arrived on the scene.

Jenny had never met Ian and had only seen two pictures of him. But even though her mom seldom mentioned him, Jenny wondered what he was like and why the marriage had ended.

There was Gregory, her mother's current husband (No. 3). Two years after the divorce from Jenny's dad, he'd become her stepfather.

During visits with her mother, Jenny had managed to get to know Gregory some, but she still had mixed feelings about him.

There were Gregory's two children who lived with their mother. Because their visitation schedule was different from hers, Jenny saw them only at Christmas and for two weeks during the summer.

THEY TALKED SO MUCH about their mother, Lucinda, and their new stepfather, Josh, that Jenny felt as if those two were vaguely related to her, too.

There was Kathy, the woman Jenny's father married right after his divorce from her mom. Both Dad and Kathy felt it was important for a stepkid to love her stepmom just like her biological mom. Jenny tried and tried, but was never able to.

When Dad and Kathy broke up after two years of marriage, Jenny was relieved not to have to try any longer.

There was Simon, Kathy's son from a prior marriage. He was a brat, Jenny thought, and she didn't miss him a bit.

There was William, her half-brother, who was born right after Dad's and Kathy's divorce. He was still too little to visit them and Jenny was often curious about what he was really like.

Now there was Anne, a new stepmother. Jenny felt reluctant to get close to her because she wasn't sure whether this marriage was for keeps. At least Anne wasn't bringing any more children into the marriage. But what if she decided to have some with Jenny's father? She'd have to get a bigger sheet of paper for the family tree.

SHE WAS ALREADY running out of space and she hadn't even drawn boxes for her ex-step-aunt Susan, the artist, who still sent her birthday presents or for her step-grandparents on both sides who seemed to pretend she didn't exist.

Her project was useless. Just as soon as she got her family all down, Mom and Dad would divorce and remarry again and she'd have to start all over. In frustration Jenny crumpled her paper into a ball and tossed it into the trash.

Far from being the child of glamorous, jet-setting parents, Jenny lives in the suburbs with her teacher father and visits her mother, who is a nurse. Neither is her confusing situation unusual. Currently about half of all marriages in this country end in divorce, and 85 percent of those people remarry within five years after their decrees are final. Second marriages tend to fail at a rate of 60 percent.

According to Carol Prescod, editor of the professional newsletter, "Marriage and Divorce Today," as many as three-quarters of those divorced people marry for the third time.

Even though there's been very little written about the topic, serial marriages have become the trend of the '80s. While some experts decry the high rate of multiple divorce and call this trend an unhealthy one, others feel that Americans are simply a marrying people. We may be fed up with a specific marriage or with specific marriages, but we still believe in the institution.

"For me, it's a compromise," says Dale, a real-estate salesman currently into his third marriage. "I'm a one-woman man, so part of me is really pushing for monogamy. I crave the intensity of a committed one-on-one relationship with a woman.

"Then there's the other part of me that suffers from what I call the Playboy syndrome. I want adventure and self- fulfillment. It's impossible to imagine spending the rest of my life relating to one other person."

"Being able to walk away from bad marriages and try again means I have a bigger chance at happiness than I would if I was either a swinging single or a 'til-death-do-us-part spouse."

EXPERTS AGREE THAT while medical advances increase our lifespan and divorces remain relatively simple to obtain, the remarriage-go-round isn't going to stop in the near future. Women's independence is a contributing factor in the rise of serial marriages; affluence has an impact too. Young upwardly mobile professionals can afford to divorce, remarry, divorce again and support the children from those alliances.

Some people opt for serial marriages because they have unrealistic expectations of what marriage really is. When the romantic fantasy starts to fade, they seek out a new partner to rekindle it.

Others don't develop the coping skills necessary to make marriage work. They seem doomed to repeat the same relationship mistakes over and over again without learning how to cope.

At least one lawyer sees multiple marriages as phases people go through. According to Jeroll Silverberg, the vice president of the American Academy of Matrimonial Lawyers, there are four types of such marriages.

THE FIRST USUALLY takes place in college; it doesn't last very long and often there are no children.

The second marriage is for childbearing.

The third may be a protest against middle age; this one tends to be very short.

The last type of marriage Silverberg describes is a mature relationship with both partners being comparable age and marrying primarily for companionship.

"I feel like after years of searching and taking wrong turns, I've found the man and the marriage for me," says Pat, who has been married to her third husband for six years now. "I've grown and matured and changed. I've learned from my mistakes. What was I supposed to do? Say, 'I'm sorry, I can't marry you because I was married twice before'?

"I'm happier than I've ever been before and my kids are doing fine, but I still don't admit to everyone, even to fairly close friends, that I've been married so often. There's still a stigma. 'Wow, she must really be screwed up' is written all over their faces."

IN SPITE OF THE FACT that divorce is readily accepted in our society and that more and more people are marrying three and even four times, serial marriages often garner negative reactions.

"I'd have no hesitation dating a woman who'd been married two or three times, but I don't think I'd want to get serious with one," says Brad, a Denver insurance adjuster who has been divorced three years. "It's probably a stupid prejudice, but I'd wonder what was wrong with her."

Not all concerns about involvement with partners who have two or more failed marriages in their pasts are so vague. It takes money, time and energy to run two households, and even more to run three or four households.

Couples who remarry once must learn to accept that when children from a former marriage are present, they aren't autonomous. The children's other parent has input into the marriage relationship. When the exes double, triple or quadruple in number, so does the potential for trouble.

Whether because of prejudice or prudence, people who have been divorced twice often find themselves at the bottom of the pecking order at singles' functions. "I don't feel like a two-time loser," exclaims George, a self-employed contractor in his 50s.

"I do get the impression that everybody needs someone else to look down on. Maybe we make people who are smarting from the pain and rejection of their first divorce feel superior."

Shelly, a paste-up artist for a small community newspaper, feels that her two former marriages sometimes brand her in the eyes of dates as a "fast woman."

"The ironic thing about it," she explains, "is that in both instances I married because I was brought up to be a good Catholic girl. I didn't feel comfortable with one-night stands or with living with a man.

"Sex outside of marriage was a no-no and so I married the wrong men because I was infatuated. If I'd been a fast woman, I probably wouldn't have married in the first place."

WHAT ABOUT THE children from these marriages? Are they all as confused and frustrated as Jenny? Because the serial marriage trend is new, there have been no long-term studies of its effects on children or on the adults involved.

Certainly there are parents who produce children in every marriage they enter into. Others may have children in their second or third marriages. Some excellent parents have been married three times and some incompetent parents remain in their first marriages.

It's possible to find warm and happy families in third and fourth marriages and cold and unhappy original families. Snap judgments aren't always accurate.

It is fair to say that multiple remarriages can make life more difficult for the children involved. Apart from the adjustment problems and issues children face in the formation of any stepfamily, multiple remarriage may raise new and unsettling dilemmas.

While a stepfamily is never quite the same as a biological one, children do form attachments to stepparents, and stepsiblings. The hurt and loss when these ties are severed can reopen a child's emotional wounds from the divorce of his or her biological parents.

Back to school: Rite of passage can be hazardous to your health

By JENNIFER TOLBERT ROBERTS
King Features Syndicate

There comes a day every summer when it dawns on parents that summer vacation has gone on quite long enough and it is time the children were getting back to school. Though I have heard unconfirmed rumors of families who have held out until the Fourth of July, most parents I know come to this realization by, say, June 10.

During the long weeks that stretch ahead, we imagine in our foolishness that it will be a sheer delight to all concerned to get our young ones packed off merrily to school at the end of the summer.

Alas, very little in life affords sheer delight, and getting the children back to school is no exception.

It starts, of course, with clothes. There is nothing quite so cold in an otherwise steamy late summer afternoon as the stares bestowed on the childless by those who have spent their days slogging through the jungles of shopping malls in search of the winning combination for opening day — a day about which your daughter has informed you that she will be forced to commit ritual suicide at age 11 if she is seen wearing so much as one single stitch of clothing that has ever before graced her body.

And not only this. God forbid such a lowly individual as Mom or Dad should presume to voice an opinion in the selection of clothing. God forbid.

More probably your offspring's remarks will focus on the imminence of their demise should they be reckless enough to appear in school wearing so much as a tie clip recommended by one of their parents.

When your son has five times replied to one of your helpful fashion hints with the words, "I would die, do you understand, I would absolutely die," you are entitled to point out to him cheerily that this dramatic contingency would spare you the further trouble of outfitting him. (You do this, however, at your peril, since he is then likely to begin obsessing about whether he wants to be buried in the pink Polo or the yellow Izod.)

There is also the matter of paper, pens, pencils, folders (with brads and pockets), report covers, rules, compasses, protractors and the like. In vain do you seek to persuade your daughter that no biology teacher in America can possibly expect her to come to school armed with more school supplies than will fit in her Uncle Wolfie's pickup truck.

Woe to the parent who dares to doubt that instantaneous execution will befall the negligent sophomore who fails to turn up in Mrs. Alabaster's algebra class with seven different kinds of graph paper.

There is a drugstore in Richardson, Texas which offers an ice-cream cone with every $2 expended on school supplies, and rumor has it that one of Mrs. Alabaster's more paranoid pupils clocked in at 23 chocolate and 16 vanilla.

Nor should it be imagined that your troubles are over once you have actually sent your little charges off immaculately groomed bearing 16 different map colors and papers that prove they have been inoculated against everything from swine flu to Saturday night fever.

Oh, no: Your troubles are just beginning. Where there is school, there is the class project, and in no time at all you will find yourself lying on your back under the glass coffee table reporting on the volcanic activity of the mini-Mount St. Helens you and your child have so laboriously crafted in the wee hours you once preferred to devote to sleep.

Try to remember these moments when parental rage compels you to call down curses on your children's heads. Do not monkey around with vague imprecations like, "I only hope your children will cause you as much grief some day as you have caused me." That is baby stuff.

No, far better to go straight for the jugular: "May your seventh-grader be assigned a scale model of a hemp farm." These well-chosen words go directly to the heart of the matter.

It is when school is in full swing, moreover, that it becomes easiest for you to fill the role of which you were intended by nature, to wit, that of chauffeur. For the re-opening of school also heralds the resumption of the car pool.

Now it is true that some American children have learned to deal with those embarrassing eccentrics who are their parents with a certain detached amusement as long as there are no others present. Show me a child, however, who will tolerate the foibles of its parents in front of its peers, and I will show you a child who is plotting to overthrow the Constitution of the United States.

The very first week of school, consequently, it is made clear to you in no uncertain terms that as you drive you are to keep your mouth shut and your eyes fixed firmly on the road ahead of you.

Indeed, all forms of levity in the car are strenuously discouraged. You are not to ring out with a hearty "gesundheit" every time a member of the pool mentions Hatshepsut, and still less are you to reply to laments like, "I lost points on the Caribbean geography" with requiries like "Jamaica mistake?"

Oh, no. Your mission is to drive, and only to drive. Alas for the poor children who are growing up before that great lifesaving invention of the future, the invisible parent; but if they have yet to enjoy the invisible one, the very least they consider themselves entitled to expect is an inaudible one.

And then finally the inevitable happens. One rainy morning there is a power failure and the alarm does not go off. You rush out in your bathrobe at the last minute, followed breathlessly by your child who has forgotten all schoolbooks.

"Oh, rats," begins the lament. "I've forgotten my 'People, Places and Things.' "

"Yeah, me too, and the quiz is first period. What're we gonna do?"

Within a matter of seconds, all eyes are staring at the back of your neck.

"We could ask"...

"Yes?" you smirk. "Something you want to know?"

"Uh... well... you think you could just tell us the first sentence of the Declaration of Independence?"

"I thought I wasn't allowed to talk in the car."

"This is an emergency."

"All right," you concede grudgingly. "We the people...."

"That's the Constitution," snaps little Heather whatsername.

"Oh. Yeah. Right. Sorry. Uh, four score and... uh...."

"Gettysburg Address."

You are beginning to panic.

"Uh... let's see... it was the best of times, it was the worst...."

"Tale of Two Cities," the entire pool shouts in unison.

"How come if you all know so much, you don't know how the Declaration of Independence starts?"

The sad fact is, however, you do not seem to know either.

"That's all right," your child says glumly. "Probably somebody in the parking lot'll know."

Spindletop oil fortune could be 'con game'

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — Claims to a supposed multi-billion dollar oil field fortune are likely to produce nothing and some would-be heirs are victims of "a con game," West Virginia and Texas officials said this week.

Hundreds of would-be heirs hoping to share the reputed fortune of oil baron James Meadows have flocked to southern West Virginia courthouses in efforts to find a lucky lineage. Legend has it that Meadows died forgotten in a Texas mental hospital in 1939, leaving billions of dollars made in the Spindletop oil field.

"Everybody likes a good myth and a good cowboy story, and Texas is good for that," said Patty White, Texas' assistant director of unclaimed property. "I really think that it's someone taking advantage of a lot of people."

In some places, meetings have been called by individuals offering to help settle the estate, and some have offered to work for only a share of the earnings.

But state officials say people who are asked to put money up front stand a good chance of losing the money they already have.

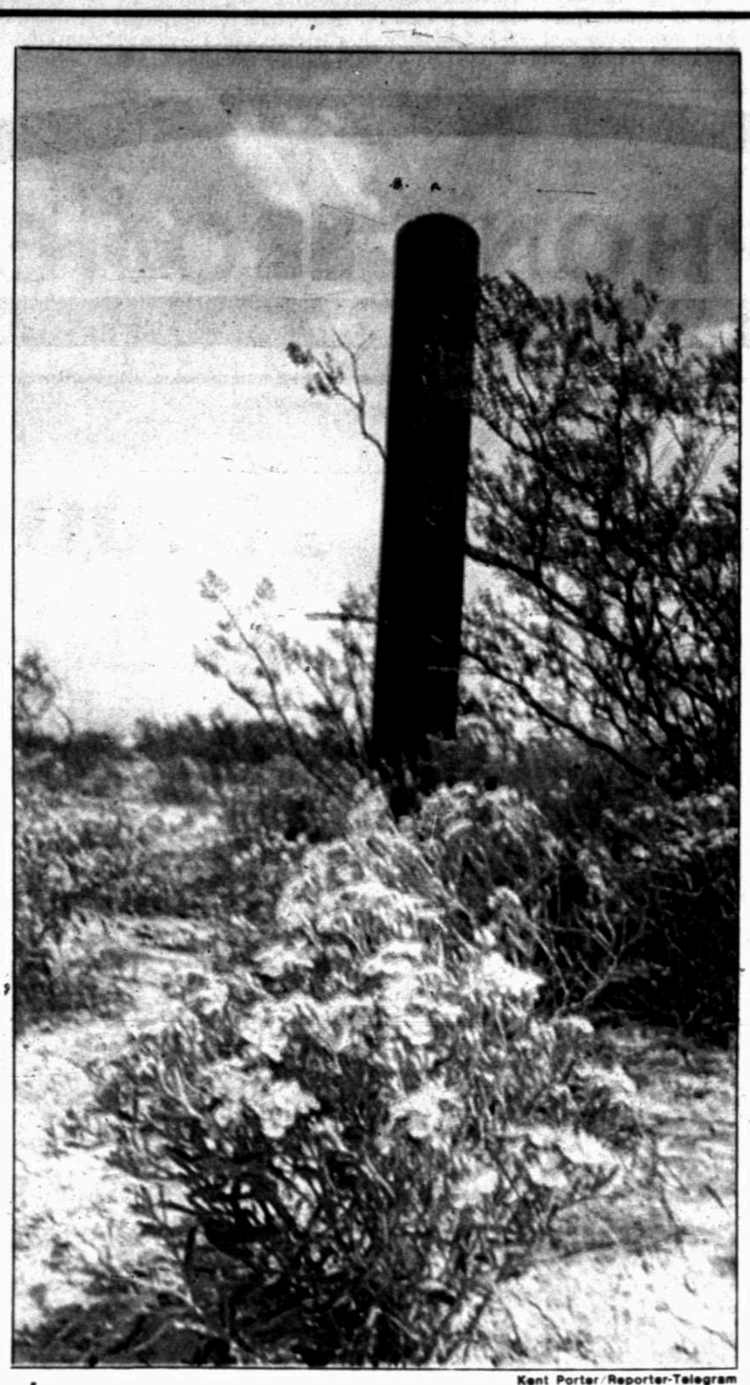

"It appears that someone picks up this idea, this myth, and uses it as a con game," said Cameron Haught, director of West Virginia's unclaimed property division. He said would-be heirs should be wary of people who "ask for donations so they can track down other heirs."

White said the West Virginians are the latest in a long line of Spindletop hopefuls.

"Something like this surfaces every so often," White said. "The last time it surfaced, the name everybody was looking for was Humphrey. This time it's the Meadows, and we had inquiries on that name before."

Meadows and Humphrey family members did hold claims in the Spindletop field, but Texas banks and the state do not have any of their unclaimed holdings, White said.

"If an estate is left and no heirs and no administrator can be found, it is turned over to the state of Texas — and there is nothing," White said. "I don't know where it could be."

Tourism pushes into Texas' second largest business

EDITOR'S NOTE — Long recognized for its vast oil and gas fields and fertile farm and ranch lands, Texas in recent years has discovered a new and lucrative natural resource: tourism. It's suddenly become a dynamite business, overtaking agriculture and ranking second only to energy and petrochemicals.

By MIKE COCHRAN
Associated Press Writer

CORPUS CHRISTI, Texas (AP) — From a balcony atop a high-rise luxury hotel, Larry Todd pointed to the sparkling waters below and exclaimed: "Just look at that!"

A fleet of sailboats rode the soft coastal breeze along the shoreline and a flock of seagulls chased a pleasure boat across the bay, squawking and begging popcorn from passengers.

Tourists poured in and out of the waterfront hotels and restaurants, and motorists streamed down Shoreline Boulevard toward the sandy beaches of Padre Island.

"I'd take that image of Corpus Christi Bay and show it to any city in America or the world," sighed Todd.

As the new executive director of the Texas Tourist Development Agency, he will use just such Texas images in the high stakes, fiercely competitive battle for national and international travel dollars.

Big, big dollars.

Todd said Texas reaped $13.5 billion in travel revenues last year, should do marginally better this year and could hit the $16 billion target in 1986 when it celebrates its 150th birthday.

That's a realistic projection because the last session of the state Legislature committed several million dollars in hotel-motel tax funds to the agency along with revenues from the sale of Sesquicentennial items.

Those monies will be used to advertise and promote both the Sesquicentennial and tourism in 1986.

"We're excited about getting the money to go out and sell Texas and compete with other big spenders like Florida, Alaska and New York ... and compete we will," Todd said.

Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Suzan Conder

The birthday bash was the buzz word in this sundrenched coastal city last week as Todd came to town to address the conventioning Discover Texas Association, a unique private-sector organization dedicated to tourism development.

The statewide, 500-member DTA serves as a dynamic and vital marketing link between the tourist agency and a sister group, the travel and information division of the State Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

"We lend support to state agencies and do those things that they can't do," explained one member.

Along with the Texas Tourist Council, a private sector lobby group, the organizations have brought Texas from 23rd to third in tourism revenue, behind only California and Florida and a length or two ahead of New York.

Before the Texas Tourist Development Agency was chartered in 1963, Texas was suffering a steady decline in travel receipts. Ranking 23rd, its total travel receipts that year was less than $500 million.

The turnaround has been dramatic.

Wheat producer goes against grain

Farmer builds multimillion-dollar company

HEREFORD, Texas (AP) — In 1960, Frank Ford was a wheat farmer who decided to go against the grain.

Opposed to selling wheat to the Soviets, Ford decided to develop a new market for his crop. The company he founded to meet that market's demands, Arrowhead Mills Inc., is now one of the nation's largest producers of organically grown grain and whole foods.

"When I started, I just envisioned a one-man operation with one truck," Ford said. "It took seven years to break even. After 10 years, we started growing."

Ford started Arrowhead Mills 25 years ago, using an old rail car and one small milling building. He delivered the two products he offered then — whole wheat flour and corn meal — in an old pickup and trailer he bought together for $500.

Now, the multimillion-dollar Hereford-based company offers nearly 300 whole food products, ranging from its No. 1 seller, peanut butter, to pancake mix, cereal and cooking oil.

"I knew I was going to create a market," Ford said of the early days. "I was against selling wheat to the Russians. I wanted a market for the wheat I was producing and I went out to make one. Tenacity was always one of my strong suits."

Ford continued to farm when he first opened his company, but would "get caught up and begin making swings through the country. I would just go out there and find the customers," he said.

He also built homes while back in Hereford to pay for the "serious financial losses" during the company's first years.

When the nation began to pay more attention to nutrition and health, Ford said business began to blossom.

"Around 1970, people began to realize that fiber was important. People began to demand that food be grown on fertile soil by farmers who respected the land," he said. "When that happened, my business began to pick up."

Arrowhead Mills, which employs about 65 people, lab-tests all its products, which are produced with no chemicals, Ford said.

"And, we buy food from only the farmers we know are growing it organically," he said.

The company does its own trucking and currently sells to about 60 distributors and about 6,000 supermarkets, food stores and bakeries nationwide.

Ford, who no longer farms, said he became concerned about farmers' dependence on herbicides and pesticides while attending Texas A&M University. He was convinced the chemicals weakened crop strains, broke down resistance to disease and polluted the food chain, and he set out to prove himself right. He became one of the country's first "organic" farmers.

KWES leading area radio station

By DEANNA NEAL
Business/Oil Writer

Midland-Odessa may be in the heart of "kicker country," but it's rock music dominating the airwaves in the Petroplex, according to a recent radio marketing survey, which measures market share for radio stations.

Midlanders are not much different from the rest of the nation when it comes to radio listening habits concludes the latest report by Birch Radio Inc. of Dallas, one of the nation's leading radio market research firms.

Larry Gorick, spokesman for Birch Radio Inc., says the typical Midlander listens to the radio on an average of two to three hours daily, and for the most part its rock and roll, followed by country & western.

Birch Radio, Inc.'s quarterly summary report gives a listing of each of the Midland/Odessa area's stations, both AM and FM, as well as each station's share of the 6:00 am. to 12:00 pm. listening audience.

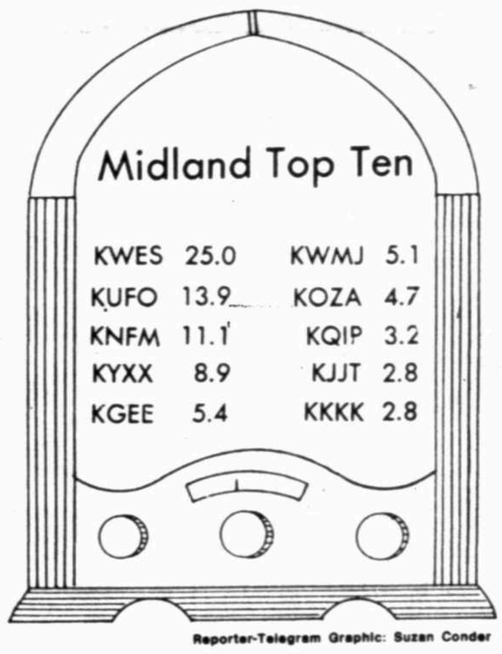

The area's leading station was KWES, an FM rock and roll station, with 25 percent of the audience, aged 12 and over. The second highest share of the Midland/Odessa listenership tunes in to KUFO, also a rock and roll station on the FM dial, with a 13.9 percent share. The third highest rating was 11.1 percent for KNFM, a country western FM station.

The poll is taken from 1,549 households, randomly selected in the area. "It is fairly representative of the people who are daily radio listeners," said Gorick. "We call a home and ask for the number of residents over age 12. One time we may ask to speak to the oldest, another time to the third oldest," he added. "Every age group has a chance to answer the 15 to 20 minute questionnaire," Gorick notes.

Of the 1,549 people polled, 12.8 percent were teens, 12 to 18, and 5.6 percent were age 65 and over.

Other conclusions drawn from the Birch survey are:

- Most radio listeners tune in between 7:00 pm. to 12:00 pm. From 6:00 am. to 10:00 am. is the second most popular listening hours.
- Country western music has peaked and its popularity is ebbing, nationwide, as well as in the Midland/Odessa area.

Reporter-Telegram Graphic: Suzan Conder

- 67.5 percent of the 12-18 age audience listens to rock and roll music.
- Contemporary music is on the rise and enjoying increasing popularity all across the U.S.
- Those stations lower on the dial, particularly with AM stations, are the most frequently listened to.
- FM stations have almost doubled their audiences from a year ago, while AM stations are on the decline.
- Daytime stations that don't sign on by 6:00 am. are falling way behind in the ratings.
- Live-announced stations fare much better than automated stations. People seem to like knowing there is a real live Dee-Jay talking to them, not just a tape.

No change expected in travel insurance

OMAHA, Neb. (AP) — Even though this has been the worst year ever for airline fatalities, but the largest sellers of travel insurance say no significant change in demand for the insurance is expected.

Tom O'Connor, assistant manager in media relations for Mutual of Omaha, said demand for his company's travel insurance has increased an estimated 10 to 15 percent since three plane crashes killed more than 700 people earlier this month.

But the demand is likely to decline in a few weeks, O'Connor said Tuesday.

"Once (an air crash) is no longer a really current event, sales revert back to normal," O'Connor said.

A spokesman for The Travelers Companies of Hartford, Conn., another major seller of travel insurance, also said he doesn't expect any long-term effect. Alan Fletcher, administrator of public relations, said he has no figures, but "historically there has been a slight increase in sales (of travel insurance after an airplane accident), but then it levels off again."

Mutual, which sells its insurance at airport counters, from vending machines and through travel agents, has a potential liability of $2.5 million from the Air-Indian flight that crashed into the Atlantic Ocean June 23, O'Connor said.

Mutual also has received claims with a potential liability of $1.1 million from the Aug. 2 Delta Air Lines L-1011 crash in Dallas that killed 134 people, O'Connor said.

Payroll police no answer to discrimination

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce is on its "high horse" again, leading a crusade against the controversial theory of comparable worth in the job market. It is a crusade that should be the concern of every employer and employee in the nation.

The comparable worth theory in essence is this: Unrelated jobs can be deemed "comparable" and equal wages declared for the jobs. Job evaluations or studies can determine jobs of comparable worth and thus identify discrimination in the job market.

It appears that proponents of comparable worth in Congress would like to see the theory first applied to all federal jobs then applied to the private sector through subsequent pressure and legislation.

Early in August, these advocates of the theory nearly succeeded in passing the Equitable Pay Practices Act of 1985, H.R. 3008. Action on the bill was halted by a small group of Represenatives who discovered the hook in the legislation and postponed action on it until September. Thinly disguised as a mere study of federal pay equity, the bill would have in effect lead to the establishment of a new bureaucracy — the Federal Payroll Police, according to writer Virginia B. Lamp.

THIS FEDERAL PAYROLL POLICE would have extraordinary powers to enforce its own political bias, subpeona payroll records from employers and set wages. The U.S. Chamber warns that the clear winners if such legislation were to pass would be the federal bureaucrats, lawyers, job evaluation specialists, union officals looking for new dues-paying members and a small number of women. The listed losers are taxpayers, consumers, employers, the already-backlogged courts and most women who want to be paid on merit and not gender.

The Chamber says that the ultimate loser would be the economic productivity, efficiency and international competitiveness of the U.S., which has been the actual catalyst for the advancement of women in the economy for the past two decades.

The organization, which is the watch dog for U.S. business interests, pointed out that a similar study conducted by the State of Washington ten years ago resulted in a comparable worth lawsuit and a multi-million dollar back-pay judgment against the state that is still under appeal. The State was held to have subscribed to the concept of comparable worth simply by doing the study.

While the methods of the comparable worth crowd may be questionable, their intentions are quite noble. They want to end the statistical gap between male and female wages. They reason: Women, on average, earn only 64 percent of what men earn. Since no one can explain this historical disparity, employers should be presumed to be discriminating.

IT IS A SIMPLISTIC assumption that does not hold up, because of conflicting data. Much of the disparity can be traced to two historical and obvious facts. One, women have traditionally entered a narrower range of occupations than men. Two, women traditionally place a high priority on children and family responsibilities. Also, women work fewer hours than men. Whereas the average woman works only a 36-hour week, the average man works 44 hours per week.

This is not to say there is no discrimination between the wages of men and women, only to say that discrimination is not the only reason for the historical wage gap. Certainly some of the gap is the result of discrimination, but much of it is natural, the result roles played by men and women in society.

There is little doubt that wage discrimination in our society should be addressed. The story of the secretary who practically runs a company on a day-to-day basis, but earns only 25 percent of a do-nothing executive's salary are real, and widely circulated. Albeit, what the comparable worth people are proposing is not the bureaucratic cure they would have us believe, but another ailment even worse than the discrimination problem.

The concept would put the highly subject task of determining employee merit, value, and worth in the hands of arrogant, federal bureaucrats. The consequences are too gruesome to even consider.

Trend-setting jewelry show closes, threatens future events

DENVER (AP) — The semi-annual Denver Gift and Jewelry Show, which sets the trend for Christmas and vacation season gift offerings in western states, closed this week with a cloud brewing over future shows.

A split has developed between the Texas-owned Denver Merchandise Mart, where the show has been presented, and Hixson Trade Shows Ltd., of South Pasadena, Calif., which has managed the show for the Merchandise Mart the past 25 years.

This week the Mart nnounced to its exhibitors that the Mart would "sponsor, promote and direct its own gift and jewelry shows commencing in March 1986." The 1986 show dates were given as March 1-4 and Aug. 23-26.

Meanwhile, Hixson notified exhibitors "Trade Shows Ltd., will hold its scheduled 83rd Denver Gift and Jewlery Show in the spring of 1986." Exhibitors were told the dates would be the same as the Mart show.

The show attracts more than 350 exhibitors and an estimated 8,000 buyers. Items they order become the jewelry and other gift items displayed by department stores at Christmas and the souvenir items sold during the tourist seasons.

Darrel Hare, general manager of the Mart, purchased in 1981 by Southmark Corp., of Dallas, said Hixson's contract expired this year and "we plan to promote and control our own gift shows."

"There is more business in the gift industry than any time in our history," Hare said. "We see a tremendous growth in this area and want to be able to control our own destiny."

The Mart has about 600,000 square-feet of exhibit space with 50 permanent employees and 400 to 500 temporaries for an annual payroll of $1.25 million.

Bob Hidalgo, oprations manager for Hixson, said Hixson will continue presenting the shows in Denver as it does in Los Angeles and Honolulu.

He said the site for Hixson's shows next year in Denver has not been decided.

Basin rig count posts small decline

The rig count for the Permian Basin posted a small decline this week, falling one from last week's 274 total. The U.S. rig count also made a slight drop, falling by five to post a 1,940 rig total.

Locally, Midland County lost one working rig to bring its total down to 14, while Ector County showed no change this week, remaining at 15 rigs. Glasscock and Martin counties also remained steady, with counts of five and nine respectively.

Andrews County continued to be the strength in the Basin rig count, gaining four rigs to mark this week's highest count in the area with 31. Other gains were seen in Garza County, up by four, and Eddy County with a three count increase.

Pecos County continued its four week long trend of decline, dropping two more for a count of 15 rigs at work. Terry Count in District 8A also reported a two rig decrease and Concho County in District 7C lost its only remaining rig, leaving no drilling activity there.

Nationally, Texas was the big contributor to the low count, losing a total of 21 rigs for a total of 634 this week. That compares to last week's Texas total of 655. Other state's losing rigs were Louisiana, Utah, Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Oklahoma recorded the biggest jump this week, increasing by six, while Colorado showed a five rig advance.

Totals for the Basin one year ago were at 340, while U.S. totals last year were at 2,395.

This year could finish out as one of the most dismal of the decade, with less than 20,000 wells drilled in the first six months. Year-end drilling, however, could restore levels to that of late seventies.

Fewer rigs

Five fewer rigs were drilling on wildcat and development wells in the Permian Basin according to Smith Tool. One rig was picked up in the wildcat column while sixs rigs were dropped from development projects. Rigs working in the 5,001-7,500 ft. category picked up six rigs while rigs making hole between 10,001-12,500 ft. dropped six. Overall rig utilization in the Basin decreased only .9 percent. In the U.S. exploratory rigs dropped 21, 40 fell from the development ranks and 50 were dropped from the total active rig count.

Trend-setting jewelry show closes, threatens future events

DENVER (AP) — The semi-annual Denver Gift and Jewelry Show, which sets the trend for Christmas and vacation season gift offerings in western states, closed this week with a cloud brewing over future shows.

A split has developed between the Texas-owned Denver Merchandise Mart, where the show has been presented, and Hixson Trade Shows Ltd., of South Pasadena, Calif., which has managed the show for the Merchandise Mart the past 25 years.

This week the Mart nnounced to its exhibitors that the Mart would "sponsor, promote and direct its own gift and jewelry shows commencing in March 1986." The 1986 show dates were given as March 1-4 and Aug. 23-26.

Meanwhile, Hixson notified exhibitors "Trade Shows Ltd., will hold its scheduled 83rd Denver Gift and Jewlery Show in the spring of 1986." Exhibitors were told the dates would be the same as the Mart show.

The show attracts more than 350 exhibitors and an estimated 8,000 buyers. Items they order become the jewelry and other gift items displayed by department stores at Christmas and the souvenir items sold during the tourist seasons.

Darrel Hare, general manager of the Mart, purchased in 1981 by Southmark Corp., of Dallas, said Hixson's contract expired this year and "we plan to promote and control our own gift shows."

"There is more business in the gift industry than any time in our history," Hare said. "We see a tremendous growth in this area and want to be able to control our own destiny."

The Mart has about 600,000 square-feet of exhibit space with 50 permanent employees and 400 to 500 temporaries for an annual payroll of $1.25 million.

Bob Hidalgo, oprations manager for Hixson, said Hixson will continue presenting the shows in Denver as it does in Los Angeles and Honolulu.

He said the site for Hixson's shows next year in Denver has not been decided.

Basin rig count posts small decline

The rig count for the Permian Basin posted a small decline this week, falling one from last week's 274 total. The U.S. rig count also made a slight drop, falling by five to post a 1,940 rig total.

Locally, Midland County lost one working rig to bring its total down to 14, while Ector County showed no change this week, remaining at 15 rigs. Glasscock and Martin counties also remained steady, with counts of five and nine respectively.

Andrews County continued to be the strength in the Basin rig count, gaining four rigs to mark this week's highest count in the area with 31. Other gains were seen in Garza County, up by four, and Eddy County with a three count increase.

Pecos County continued its four week long trend of decline, dropping two more for a count of 15 rigs at work. Terry Count in District 8A also reported a two rig decrease and Concho County in District 7C lost its only remaining rig, leaving no drilling activity there.

Nationally, Texas was the big contributor to the low count, losing a total of 21 rigs for a total of 634 this week. That compares to last week's Texas total of 655. Other state's losing rigs were Louisiana, Utah, Pennsylvania and Wyoming.

Oklahoma recorded the biggest jump this week, increasing by six, while Colorado showed a five rig advance.

Totals for the Basin one year ago were at 340, while U.S. totals last year were at 2,395.

Bank Secrecy Act helping to fight illegal cash transactions

Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — The Bank Secrecy Act has emerged as one of the government's major tools against drug dealers and organized crime. The 1980 law requiring financial institutions to disclose large cash transactions was enacted in an attempt to keep track of criminals' cash proceeds.

"Drug transactions are made in cash, and eventually that cash goes through a bank," Arthur Siddon, a Treasury spokesman, said. "We think the act is very important in enforcement."

The announcement of $2.25 million in penalties against Crocker National Bank for noncompliance with the act stemmed from an audit by the Comptroller of the Currency. It turned up 7,800 violations of reporting laws – more than six times the number of violations found in any previous case.

"The extremely serious nature of Crocker's violation warranted a substantially more severe penalty than in prior cases," said John Walker, assistant secretary for enforcement and operations.

The investigation produced "systematic and pervasive" failure to report required information. But Walker said it produced no evidence that bank officials deliberately sought to launder money. He said the penalty against Crocker resulted from noncompliance at various bank units and branches going back to 1980.

In June, four New York banks were penalized for failing to comply with the disclosure law. Chase Manhattan Bank was fined $360,000 for 1,442 violations. Manufacturers Hanover Bank was fined $320,000 for 1,393 violations. Irving Trust was fined $295,000 for 1,242 violations. Chemical Bank was fined $210,00 for 857 violations.

In February, the Bank of Boston paid $500,000 in civil penalties for 1,163 violations involving $1.22 billion. In addition, felony charges were filed against one of the bank's employees for reporting violations.

The Bank Secrecy Act requires financial institutions to report within 15 days all currency transactions in excess of $10,000. The Currency Transaction Reports are correlated at Treasury's Financial Law Enforcement Center in Washington. It uses the reports to investigate and develop leads in drug trafficking, organized crime and tax evasion.

The act carries civil and criminal penalties. Criminal violations are punishable by imprisonment of as much as five years and fines as high as $250,000. Civil penalties range up to $10,000 per violation.

Since 1975, banks or employees have been convicted of financial reporting violations in 38 cases. In 25 of them, the bank itself was convicted. In 15, bank officers or employees have been convicted. There are 100 open cases that have been referred to Internal Revenue Service for possible criminal prosecution.

Since the widely publicized Bank of Boston case, 60 banks have problems with complying with the secrecy law.

Using leads developed with the disclosure reports, the Treasury Department has charged since 1980 that 19 money-laundering operations involved $3 billion in criminally-gatherered proceeds. The Treasury Department also reported 6,316 indictments and 2,537 convictions based on the information.

Checks go out in largest consumer settlement ever

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. (AP) — The first checks were distributed Tuesday in the $75.5 million settlement of a lawsuit accusing a utility and four natural gas producers of conspiring to fix prices.

The settlement, reached out of court last year, is believed to be the largest ever in a consumer class action antitrust lawsuit, said Tony Leanord, who is in charge of check distribution.

The first 20,000 checks, totaling more than $26 million, were mailed this week to residential customers of Gas Company of New Mexico, said Leonard, head of the Brewer Class Distribution Project, which was set up to handle the settlement.

About 264,000 checks are to be processed by the middle of next week, Leonard said. The refund is being distributed in two phases, with consumers scheduled to receive a second check in early 1986.

Refunds will vary from a few dollars to several hundred dollars, depending on how much natural gas a customer used between June 30, 1976, and April 12, 1984. The refunds are expected to go to about 350,000 current and past Gas Company customers.

The checks are the result of a lawsuit filed in 1979 against Southern Union Co., which formerly owned Gas Company; and natural gas producers Supron Energy Corp., Southland Royalty Co., Conoco, and Consolidated Oil & Gas.

The lawsuit was made a class action in early 1981, and called the Brewer class after the name of the first plaintiff listed in the case, Sheila Brewer, a teacher in Gallup.

Leonard said there is no average refund, but estimated that a gas customer who has lived in the same house for the entire period covered by the settlement could expect a refund ranging from $100 to $200.

Some checks could be as small as $1 to $20 for people who were customers of the utility for only a short time, he said.

Gene Gallegos, lead attorney in the lawsuit, said the distribution marked a "particularly satisfying day for me."

PBGC offers 5 classes this fall concerning oil

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer courses in land, petrophysics and data contouring and computer graphics.

TOURISM

"It's a dream job now," said Todd, 45, who until recently served as director of programs for the Texas Department of Public Safey.

"My job is to show what an exciting place Texas is ... and to market what we've got."

What "we've got" is lots, including variety, insists Jim Battersby of San Antonio, president of Discover Texas.

"There's the tropics of the Rio Grande Valley, and the Gulf Coast from South Padre to Port Arthur," he rhapsodized.

"There's East Texas with its pristine forests and lakes and West Texas with Big Bend, the Guadalupe and Davis Mountains. There's the dual cultures of San Antonio and El Paso and all the border cities.

"There's the urban sophistication of places like Dallas and Houston. There's history and Western culture and the mystique of the Old West."

HE SOMEHOW overlooked the rugged Texas Panhandle and the magnificent Hill Country, not to mention Billy Bob's, the Fort Worth honky tonk that's only slightly smaller than Delaware.

Nor did he touch on the state's No. 1 tourist attraction, Six Flags Over Texas, the theme park in Arlington between Dallas and Fort Worth.

The park drew 2.3 million visitors in 1984 and Six Flags executive Bruce Neal, here for the convention, said attendance is up a bit this year.

"On July 4, we had 27,000 people in our place, another 42,000 were next door watching the Texas Rangers and there were thousands more across the road at Wet 'n' Wild, White Water, the International Wildlife Park and the Southwestern Wax Museum," he said.

"That's a hell of an impact, even on an area as big as Dallas-Fort Worth. And if you start talking about jobs, that's something else. We've got 200 on the permanent staff and 2,500 seasonal employes.

"That's a bunch of jobs."

Indeed, state tourism figures indicate that the travel industry in 1983 not only brought in 35 million visitors and produced $13.7 billion in revenues but also provided jobs for more than 250,000 Texans and a payroll approaching $3 billion.

The Texas gold rush has enabled tourism to overtake agriculture as the No. 2 industry behind energy and petrochemicals, and such optimists as State Rep. Ralph Wallace of Houston contend the state can beat out Florida and California in the travel dollar sweepstakes.

Citing recent legislative successes for funding, and the opportunities of the pending statewide birthday gala, Wallace told conventioneers:

"Now is the time for ... Texas to ascend to its rightful, its inevitable and its destined place as the No. 1 travel destination state in the country."

All of which makes one wonder where these visitors come from.

"More than 50 percent come from 10 states," said Todd, citing figures that showed the largest percentage come from Oklahoma.

The Sooners, with 8 percent, were followed in order by Illinois, Minnesota, California, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Iowa, Wisconsin and Kansas.

AT THE SAME time, France provided the most foreign visitors, roughly 540,000, followed by England, Mexico, Germany and Canada.

"The important thing is that the tourist dollars generated are clean dollars, brought in from elsewhere, and will turn over three or four times" said Tag Taggart of Traders Village in Grand Prairie.

"Clean" dollars are defined by some as those that require no new taxes, no new laws and no new industry.

Taggart, a former chairman of Discover Texas, said Texas is the only state with the private and public sectors working hand in glove to develop tourism.

"We are the envy of the rest of the United States in that regard," he said.

Competing states were quick to note the successful program and labeled the cooperative effort simply the "Texas Plan."

According to DTA's new chairman, Gary Dalton of Houston's AstroWorld, "The Texas Plan is a whole industry getting together to promote Texas."

In 1970, Texas had 21 million out-of-state visitors. Last year there were 37 million.

During that time, DTA membership rose from 16 to more than 500 and today includes all the major tourist attractions, festivals, chambers of commerce, convention and visitor bureaus, hotels, motels, resorts, restaurants, campgrounds, airlines, advertising agencies and travel-oriented media.

"In other words, we speak for the private sector," said Battersby. Sometimes rather cleverly, one might add.

AWARE OF declining state oil and gas reserves, Discover Texas unveiled its new slogan last week:

"Tourism...the New Texas Crude."

People Express 'bulletproof' to takeovers after reorganization

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — The chairman of People Express Airlines Inc. says the upstart carrier is "bulletproof" to unfriendly corporate takeovers following a reorganization approved Wednesday by shareholders.

No one has announced plans to try a takeover of the innovative airline, but the transfer of its ownership to new holding company makes such a "raid" nearly impossible, Chairman Donald C. Burr told stockholders at a recontinuation of their annual meeting.

The creation of People Express Inc. will also allow the fast-growing airline to expand, possibly even into areas outside air travel, Burr said.

"We're not about to let Ichan come in," Burr said of Carl Ichan, the New York millionaire who acquired a majority interest in Trans World Airlines earlier this month.

"We don't have to spend a great deal of time worrying and wondering whether somebody's going to buy our company," Burr added.

The annual meeting was adjorned Aug. 1 to give shareholders time to consider the reorganization plan designed to protect against a takeover by increasing the number of employee-held shares.

People Express, which reported second quarter earnings of $13 million, is one-third owned by its workers. Another third is held by financial institutions, and the balance by the public.

The second-quarter earnings were the best ever for the innovative carrier now flying to 49 cities in the United States, Canada and Europe. Three destinations, New Orleans, San Diego and St. Louis, were announced Tuesday.

Following the shareholders' meeting, the airline's board of directors approved a 5-cent divided on each share of common stock. Preferred stockholders will receive 66 cents a share. Both dividends are payable Oct. 15.

The airline's common stock, traded over-the-counter, closed at 14⅛ a share Wednesday, down from 14⅞ at the close of trading Tuesday.

Officials say the airline's success and growth make it vulnerable to unfriendly takeovers.

Under the reorganization, employees and other stockholders will receive stock in the new holding company equal to 10 percent of their current common stock, Burr said. However, the new stock will carry 30 votes a share, vastly increasing stockholders' ablity to protect against a raid.

"It puts us in an unmistakably strong position ... a bulletproof position," Burr said. "It is a very historic time in the history of People Express."

The reorganization is a precaution, since officials report there is no current bid to take over the airline.

"We are not under, as of today, any threat of attack," Burr said.

Hinting at plans for even further expansion, Burr said holding company ownership "allows us a great deal of flexiblity to do what we need to do in the deregulated airline industry."

The company has announced no such plans. But future acquisitions need not be air-travel related, said company spokesman Russell Marchetta.

PBGC to offer course in rifting

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer a course in rifting on Wednesday, September 4, from 7:00 to 10:00 pm. at the Center.

"The Initial Phase of Rifting — Permian Basin Example" will be presented by Dr. Jack Elam. He will explain why the sequence of events involved in rifting has been almost universally misinterpreted by plate tectonicists.

This has been caused by the lack of a good type locality that could be studied using hard data only. The Pennsylvanian rifting in the Permain Basin is proposed as such a type locality because there is little or no overprint of earlier or later deformation to confuse the researcher.

A thermal event created the Delaware-Val Verde-Marfa triple junction and the associated producing anticlinoria as well.

There are a large number of deep fields, and the dense well control allows one to map this type of deformation easily in three dimensions without having to rely on second-order seismic interpretations.

Dr. Elam maintains that it is no surprise that detailed mapping indicates a sequence of events identical to those that could be predicted using a proper theoretical model of the earth.

Dr. Jack Elam

The fee for the course is $100 and further information can be obtained by calling 683-2832.

FARMER

Tall and tanned, Ford's respect and concern for the land is shown not only in his work as a producer of whole foods, but also in the way he lives his life, which lately has become devoted to fighting the government's selection of the Panhandle as a potential site for the nation's first high-level radioactive waste repository.

The Department of Energy announced last December that a nine-square-mile area of Deaf Smith County, of which Hereford is the county seat, was one of three "preferred sites" for the controversial dump.

Although a final decision on where to place the repository is at least five years away, Ford and other residents already have mounted a strong protest to the Deaf Smith County site.

And Ford said, Arrowhead Mills customers have joined the battle.

"Consumers are furious about it. They're writing letters to the DOE, complaining," he said, adding that in that respect, the dump currently is "affecting us positively."

Ford speaks passionately about his company and the importance of whole foods in people's lives, but he becomes even more fervent when talking about the nuclear dump.

"It's insanity," he said of the DOE suggestion that the Panhandle could be a home for the dump. "It's pure insanity — I-N-S-A-N-I-T-Y.

"But we intend to win the battle. I know we're going to win. It's just a matter of how much money they want to waste before we do," he said.

That conviction is typical of Ford, who says he believes in his goals and in his business.

"I believe very thoroughly in what we sell, and I eat it," he said. "I believe that herbs and vitamins are important too, in addition to a whole natural food diet and exercise."

And the 52-year-old former farmer urges people to avoid "junk food," which he listed as refined flours and sugars, and excessive fat and sodium.

Ford has authored a natural food cookbook, "The Simpler Life Cookbook," which has sold more than 650,000 copies. His wife, Marjorie Winn Ford, is the co-author of another natural food cookbook, "The Deaf Smith Country Cookbook."

"Good natural food cooking is less expensive and saves on health care costs," Ford said. "It also tastes better."

Now chairman of the board of Arrowhead Mills, Ford said his future plans are to continue producing as many natural foods as possible.

"We're always testing something new, trying something different," he said, citing one of the company's latest products — "Grainstay" — as an example.

"'Grainstay' is a cereal. It's like "Grape Nuts," and we know it's going to do well for us," he said.

"People are learning more each day about how important their diets are," he said, "so we'll keep trying to provide them with natural foods. That's always been our purpose — to sell clean, whole foods."

Tenneco drilling 'deepest well ever'

HOUSTON (SWN) — Tenneco Oil Exploration and Production is drilling a wildcat in Federal waters south of Mobile Bay that could be the deepest well ever drilled in the Gulf of Mexico.

Tenneco plans to drill the Viosca Knoll 117 No. 1 well to a total depth of 24,500 feet to test the Norphlet Formation. The well is approximately 55 miles south of Mobile, Ala., in 115 feet of water.

The site is 20 miles south of the Mobile Bay area where several significant discoveries have been made in recent years from the Norphlet Sandstone.

Tenneco Oil operates the wildcat through a farm-in agreement in which Tenneco will earn 37.5 percent working interest from Ocean Drilling and Exploration Company, Murphy Oil USA, Inc. and Santa Fe Energy Company, a Santa Fe Southern Pacific Company. Texoma Production Company, a unit of Midcon Corp., retains its 25 percent interest in the well. Ocean Drilling and Exploration, Murphy Oil and Santa Fe each retain 12.5 percent interest.

Tenneco Oil is a division of Houston-based Tenneco Inc., a diversified company with business interests in oil, natural gas pipelines, shipbuilding, farm and construction equipment, agriculture, land managment, automobile parts, chemicals, minerals, synthetic fuels and insurance.

For each $1,000 principal amount of the 8-1/4 percent Notes, the Company will issue $1,000 principal amount of 18 percent First Senior Subordinated Notes due March 1, 1989 ("18 percent Notes"), plus 65 shares of common stock. The Company said that 84.5 percent in principal amount of the 8-1/4 percent Notes had been tendered. The Company said that it had waived the condition that at least 85 percent in aggregate principal amount of the 8-1/4 percent Notes be tendered.

The new 18 percent Notes and common stock will be issued as soon as practicable to holders who tendered their notes.

Use of automation grows in industry; so does its problems

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — A robot cart carrying precious loads of silicon wafers glides along a marked path and stops automatically in front of a storage rack. A robot arm swings out, gently lifts the delicate cargo and delivers it to a storage bin. The human worker who once performed the simple but routine chore now controls the electronic deliverymen with a computer.

Meanwhile, at a secretarial school, future executive secretaries have moved far beyond simple typing and filing. Now, they hone high-technology skills on word processors, computers and popular business software programs.

And at a semiconductor company, designers of tiny microchips have traded their drawing boards for computer terminals, which they use to electronically "draw" brightly colored representations of intricate circuits.

These scenarios are but a few examples of a revolution that's sweeping the work place. From retail stores to banks to oil companies, automation is changing — indeed, redefining — a host of job descriptions from "manager" to "production worker" to "chief executive officer."

Some jobs are disappearing altogether; others are being created. Such a work place shake-up is posing new problems for management — from training employees to use the new technology to avoiding displacement of workers as automation takes over many routine tasks.

Behind the rush to automate are growing fears that the United States is falling behind other countries that have used technology to rapidly boost productivity. Department of Labor statistics show productivity in the U.S. private business sector grew to an annual rate of 3.2 percent last year, up from 2.7 percent in 1983. But record trade deficits, intense international competition and the lure of cheaper labor overseas all underscore the United States' need to increase productivity even more.

"The real enemies to auto workers and our nation's factories are low productivity and foreign competition," said Walter K. Weisel, president of the Robotics Industries Association.

Technology is now regarded as the savior of aging plants and a vehicle for boosting white-collar productivity. In fact, Congress' Office of Technology Assessment projects that by the year 2000, about 85 percent of all U.S. workers will be wearing a white collar, producing services rather than goods.

The OTA analysis says many jobs in declining industries are either being replaced by automation or disappearing. Jobs in the manufacturing, farming and private household service sectors are shrinking most rapidly.

So far, however, the most obvious impact of automation is in traditional work places — the office and the factory.

The impact of computers in the office is felt at almost every desk. Office workers — from the chief executive down — are discovering that their jobs and the skills they need have changed drastically in recent years.

The instigator of the revolution in the office is the personal computer. Personal computers have proliferated in offices. At the end of 1983, fewer than 8 percent of U.S. office workers had personal computers, according to William Ablondi, vice president of Future Computing, a Dallas industry analyst. By the end of the decade, that percentage will have grown to about 40 percent, he predicts .

Texas Instruments, for example, has almost a one-to-one ratio of computers and terminals to telephones, says Tom Ellis, vice president of marketing in TI's data systems group. And the company has about 36,000 telephones. This ratio, he says, should remove any lingering doubt about the pervasiveness of computers in the office.

In fact, personal computers have changed the whole concept of the work place at some companies. A growing number are offering flexible schedules and telecommuting — allowing certain employees to work at home on personal computers, that can communicate with the home office.

Top-level executives also are watching their jobs go through a metamorphosis. Trinet, an information services subsidiary of Control Data Corp., found that a third of 100 top executives in Fortune 500 companies personally use computers for business decisions. The survey found regular computer usage among top executives rose dramatically to 35 percent in 1984 from 8 percent only two years earlier .

Many of those top executives seek outside help in learning to use computers, fueling demand for computer seminars such as those sponsored by Arthur Young & Co. for seniors executives

Some observers say they are seeing an erosion of middle managers as lower-level employees become adept information handlers and communicators. Secretaries, for example, are taking on added responsibilities with the advent of computer technology.

"The secretary today is a manager of high-tech equipment," says Jan Rabb Friedheim, director of the Executive Secretarial School, a career training school based in Dallas. "And it's not just word processing. A third of our graduates on the job are involved with computers in a serious realm."

Friedheim says she has noticed the elimination of one organizational rung. "It's that college graduate hired as a middle manager to do reports and data collection," she says.

Deregulation makes cable companies attractive

By GERALDINE FABRIKANT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — If Warner Communications Inc. and the American Express Co. had attempted to sell Warner Amex Cable Communications as recently as three years ago, they would have been hard pressed to find a buyer.

Gone were the euphoric days when cable system operators envisioned a host of new pay-TV services to add to their existing monthly fee income. Instead, many media companies found themselves losing money after investing heavily to lay cables in new markets.

Nowadays, however, cable operators have good reason to be optimistic. Rate deregulation has made the business more attractive; companies are getting increasingly sophisticated in marketing cable services to consumers, and the years of heavy investment are coming to an end.

The real proof of the changed picture is that cable operators are hot acquisition candidates. Three major companies, Time, Tele-Communications and Viacom International, for instance, have bid for Warner Amex. This week, Capital Cities Communications agreed to sell its cable operations to the Washington Post Co. And Storer Communications, which owns cable systems, recently found itself courted by both Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., which specializes in leveraged buyouts, and Comcast Communications.

Cable properties, previously the least attractive media investment, are suddenly being courted almost as aggressively as television stations and newspapers.

"I think our dollars are best spent in cable," said Terrence A. Elkes, president of Viacom International, a diversified media company. He added, "Margins on broadcasting will be squeezed because of all the competition, but margins on cable will grow."

Elkes noted that many TV stations are selling for 12 times cash flow or even higher, while cable companies, with approximately the same operating income, are selling for about 10 times cash flow. "If you figure that the operating margins for cable are likely to increase, it is a better buy," Elkes said.

One media executive who asked not to be named said that his company had decided on a cable acquisition because it offered steady cash flow, a clear franchise and a lower price than what TV station owners were asking.

Viacom's strategy is symptomatic of the changing perception of cable's future. It currently is the 11th-largest cable operator by number of subscribers, down a notch from the end of 1984. It owns four TV stations, produces television programming, including the highly successful "Bill Cosby Show," and has an interest in Showtime, the pay-TV service, and another cable service, Lifetime.

Elkes said that his company bid for two of the TV stations that Capital Cities put on the market earlier this year in order to accomplish its merger with the American Broadcasting Companies. But Viacom was outbid in both cases.

"We're still interested in television stations," Elkes said. "But unless you're buying an underachiever, where you can make significant improvements, it is difficult to make it work. A lot of the pricing is too high."

So for Viacom, as for other media companies, cable operators, such as Warner Amex, are now good targets.

Time and Tele-Communications were disappointed in their pursuit of Warner Amex when Warner Communications earlier this month agreed to buy from American Express the half of the cable operator that it did not already own. Warner will pay $450 million for the half interest.

If the deal goes through, Viacom has offered to buy either the half interest from Warner — less certain assets — for $450 million or Warner Amex's two-thirds stake in MTV Networks Inc. Viacom would pay $310 million for the holding in MTV, which owns the successful MTV: Music Television cable service.

Like many cable companies, Warner Amex's financial health has improved. In 1983 it had a net loss of $99 million, with debt of $852 million. Last year's loss dropped to $25 million, with debt of $552 million.

Many of Warner Amex's franchising costs are behind it. The company has sold off such problem systems as the one in Pittsburgh, and it is expected to break even this year.

Eager bidders see the value in acquisitions, particularly of large companies such as Warner Amex. The larger an operator, the greater its ability to cut costs and increase sales.

The cost savings are most apparent in programming. Operators share each subscriber fee with the pay-TV services, such as Home Box Office and Showtime, and pay several cents per subscriber for advertiser-supported services.

Credit unions fight proposed Federal taxes

By BILL KIDD

AUSTIN — Credit unions in Texas have been holding a series of meetings throughout the state as part of national efforts to fight proposed Federal taxation of credit unions.

Texas Credit Union League officials say that while the U.S. Treasury proposal would exempt credit unions with under $5 million in assets from taxation, other proposals could result in taxation of all credit unions.

League officials have been working to involve all 1,178 Texas credit unions in the Victory on Tax Exemption Status (VOTES) program.

The basic message being preached by the credit union officials is that since credit unions aren't set up to create profits, but for service to members, taxation would deplete reserves and force credit unions to eliminate many services provided members, or to start charging more for services.

They note that some public officials feel that the tax-exempt status of credit unions has allowed them to grow faster than banks and savings and loan associations over the last 20 years, to where larger credit unions are essentially equivalent to other financial institutions.

But, they argue, the original intent of Congress was that consumers would receive advantages from credit union membership—and say it's ironic that the success of the movement has now resulted in attempts to reverse those benefits.

The State Board of Insurance approved an increase of 30.7 percent in worker's compensation rates, for all classes and coverages combined, effective Oct. 1.

SBI staff members had proposed an increase of 27.5 percent, with a negative profit loading of 7.2 percent, while the National Council on Compensation Insurance had proposed an increase of 40.8 percent, with a loading of plus 2.5 percent.

The 30.7 percent increase is expected to result in an overall $577 million increase in premium over current rates—or $77 million more than under the staff proposal.

Agriculture and banking representatives are warning that there appears to be no quick relief in sight for hard-pressed farmers and ranchers, and rural banks and businesses tied to agriculture.

Texas Department of Agriculture cites the "deadly combination" of low farm prices, high interest rates and declining land values in the continuing farm credit crisis.

John Shivers, president, Independent Bankers Association of Texas, says the current situation is forcing many of the 1,200 banks IBAT represents to look closely at loan applications from even the banks' best agricultural customers.

Lenders and agriculture officials say improved farm prices, under changes in national farm policies and through increased exports, are the long-term solution to the problem, but warn that in the short term, there appears to be little relief available.

The Air Control Board holds a public hearing at 7 pm. September 9 in Austin on proposed changes to regulations on permits for new or modified facilities which may emit air pollution.

Among the changes being considered is requiring special consideration to long-term and short-term effects of contaminants or odors on students attending schools within 3,000 feet of the facilities.

Other changes involve public notice requirements, posting of signs at locations where facilities are to be constructed, and changes in provsiions on trench burners (often used for destruction of materials near construction sites).

Written comments not presented at the hearing will be received by the ACB until September 10.

The changes are being made in response to modifications of Texas' clean air statutes made by this year's legislation.

Texas Department of Banking is expecting 40 or more applications for foreign bank offices when new legislation takes effect later this month.

SB 746 by Senator Don Henderson, R-Houston, provides for foreign banks to establish offices in Dallas and Harris counties, under the supervision of the Department of Banking.

Department officials, at a meeting of the Banking Section of the State Finance Commission, reported interest has been received from banks in Europe, Asia, and Africa regarding setting up such offices.

Another change going into effect in Texas banking laws will permit banks to establish a drive-in/walk-up facility 20,000 feet from the main building. Maximum distance under current law is 10,500 feet.

The new facilities aren't permitted in "any city or town which...has a population less than...5,000...and in which a bank is already located" the bill states.

Toyota moving from subcompacts to luxury cars

DETROIT (AP) — Toyota Motor Corp. will move increasingly into the market for larger, more expensive cars as its current customers get older and as new companies move into the subcompact segment, a company official says.

Bob McCurry, senior vice president of the subsidiary Toyota Motor Sales USA Inc., said Toyota is outgrowing the subcompact car class which launched the company as a world automotive power.

In the next several months, cars from South Korea and Yugoslavia will debut in the United States. In the next few years, imports from Taiwan and Mexico also are expected, further crowding a market where profit margins are low.

"We see the subcompact as a questionable market. There's going to be a real shootout down there," McCurry said in an interview Monday. Toyota will keep making cars subcompacts, but will increase its attention on larger, more upscale models, he said.

"The lower-priced luxury market is growing now and will grow bigger," he said, citing the growing popularity of nameplates such as BMW and Jaguar.

The base for this move will be the Toyota Camry, a sporty compact which the company has decided to build in the United States, McCurry said.

Toyota, Japan's leading automaker, announced last month that it would build an assembly plant in the United States, following the lead of Nissan Motor Co. Ltd., Honda Motor Co. Ltd. and Mazda Motor Corp.

Mitsubishi Motors Corp. also is looking for a plant site, having narrowed its choices to Illinois, Indiana, Ohio and Michigan.

Toyota executives in Japan have formed a special task force to narrow the list of sites, he said. The company has received proposals on 30 to 35 sites.

McCurry, who worked for 28 years as a top official of Chrysler Corp., said Toyota won't turn to its U.S. executives for guidance until most of the site selection work is done.

"They will ask our input when they get down to the last two or three places," he said. "They're being very thorough. My hope is that it would be by the end of the year."

Asked what areas might meet Toyota's standards for a parts supplier network, favorable labor pool and location, he replied: "I would recommend the Kansas-Missouri area, Texas maybe, the Carolinas, Tennessee."

However, McCurry emphasized that he was speaking in general terms and that the places he mentioned didn't constitute a list of top sites.

Toyota operates the Chevrolet Nova car assembly plant in Fremont, Calif., which it owns jointly with General Motors Corp. Toyota dealers eventually will get 50,000 Toyota Corolla cars a year from that plant.

Video tape dealers urged to sell more

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Lena Horne was there with her marvelous teeth. Mary Lou Retton brought her muscular legs and her giggle. Madonna and the late Bishop Fulton J. Sheen made appearances, too on videotape. Even though the personalities were different, the message was unanimous: Sell, sell, sell.

America's videotape dealers, who rent and sell prerecorded movies to millions of videocassette recorder owners, are here this week to devise a strategy to change consumers' viewing habits: They want us to buy tapes not rent them.

The convention, sponsored by the Video Software Dealers Association, has attracted about 6,000 retailers, manufacturers and distributors plus celebrities promoting their latest music tapes, exercise tapes, wrestling tapes, and how-to-tune-your-car-at-home tapes.

The association estimates that 50 million videocassettes will be sold in the U.S. this year, representing revenues of nearly $2 billion.

And Hollywood, which once relegated videotape sales to the "also-ran" market, has now conferred upon it "little darling status," said Arthur Morowitz, an executive of the New York-based Video Shack chain.

The sales of cassettes makes up about 20 percent of the videotape industry market, Morowitz said, and is a figure the studios would like to raise because they depend on volume sales for profit.

So retailers are being told, "It's better to sell. You make more more money on a transaction," Morowitz said.

Amidst the discussion on pricing, RCA-Columbia Pictures Home Video stirred up some outrage by pricing its October release of "Ghostbusters" at $79.95, just about the limit for a single tape.

"It's dirty pool," said one California retailer. "We need promotional prices to bring in the crowds for Christmas, and this doesn't help."

But RCA-Columbia defended its pricing. "All of our first-run titles have sold successfully under our pricing policy," said Fritz Friedman, senior marketing manager for RCA-Columbia.

Drawing an entourage of admirers was Olympic Gold metalist Mary Lou Retton, on display to tout "Funfit," a series of exercises aimed at children. ABC Video hopes "Funfit" will grab the coattails of Jane Fonda's best-selling "Workout" series.

Madonna was not to be seen on the floor, but her picture was. Luke McCoy of Top Ten Video in Los Angeles said that his company already has orders for 50,000 copies of "A Certain Sacrifice," a porn film Madonna made when she was only 20. Her co-star, Jeremy Patt, was never heard from again.

Flare reports net earnings

Flare, Inc. and Seismic Reflection, Inc. reported net earnings of $236,000 (3 cents per share) for the fourth quarter of fiscal 1985, as compared to a loss of $1,114,000 (13 cents per share) for the three months ended June 30, 1984.

Operating revenues for the quarter were $1,540,000, an increase of 17 percent over last year's fourth quarter amount of $1,312,000. General and administrative expenses for the three months ended June 30, 1985 were $354,000, a decrease of 35 percent from the last year's fourth quarter amount of $547,000.

Overall, for the year the company reported a net loss of $742,000 (11 cents per share), including non-cash operating charges of $3,590,000, as compared to a net loss of $369,000 (5 cents per share) for fiscal 1984, which included non-cash charges of $4,926,000. Operating revenues for the year were $5,037,000 as compared to $7,970,000 for 1984, a decrease of 37 percent.

J.D. Faircloth, president, noted that despite the weak economic operating environment the company's cash flow for the year remained fairly strong totalling $2,402,000, as compared to $4,689,000 for 1984. As a result of the positive cash flow, the company applied $1 million to its bank indebtedness in June, reducing such indebtedness to $1.625 million.

Shell breaks ground on coal plant

HOUSTON (SWN)–Groundbreaking ceremonies have been held by Shell Oil Company and its partners to mark the beginning of their new coal gasification demonstration plant.

The plant will be the first in the United States to make synthetic gas using the Shell Coal Gasification Process. The Shell process is the result of extensive research and development programs carried on over the past 13 years.

"Some of the features of our process stand out from other technologies, and we think that these advantages will ensure the success of our prototttotype plant," said Roy Gerard, general manager of Shell Development Company, which will operate the facility.

"The Shell technology enables us to process a wide variety of coals with high efficiency," Gerard said, "and it is expected to be cost-competitive as well as being very environmentally sound. This investment is another example of our commitment to develop energy resources for the long term."

When completed, the demonstration plant will consume 250-400 tons of coal daily and produce synthetic gas and steam which will be used within Shell's Deer Park complex.

The Shell process converts a variety of coals including high-sulfur bituminous coal and lignite into a medium-Btu gas. The gas can be used to generate electricity, as an industrial fuel and as a feedstock for chemical and oil products.

Partners in the plant are Shell, Lummus Crest Inc. and the Electric Power Research Institute. The demonstration plant is expected to provide the design, engineering, operating and environmental data necessary to build large commercial plants.

Completion of construction and startup is planned for early 1987.

May Energy announces its distribution

DALLAS (SWN) — May Energy Partners Ltd. has announced a $.375 per unit cash distribution to unitholders of M y Energy. The record date for the distribution is September 12, 1985, and the distribution will be payable on September 27, 1985.

The current distribution is $.125 per unit less than previous quarterly payments of $.50. This reduction is the result of unexpected declines in oil and natural gas prices related to properties owned by May Energy as of December 31, 1984 and further reductions in the demand for natural gas.

"The company previously announced plans to continue quarterly $.50 per unit distributions through 1986. This plan was based on oil and natural gas prices and production levels existing at that time. Continued decreases of oil and gas prices and demand for natural gas have adversely affected May Energy's cash flow which forced the reduction of the quarterly distribution," said Charles E. Ramsey, president and chief executive officer of May Petroleum Inc., May Energy's general partner.

A mid-year analysis of May Energy's 1985 cash flow has just been completed which reflects the impact of the unexpected market conditions. May Energy's estimated 1985 operating income (net cash flow) is now expected to be from $2.60 to $2.80 per unit said Ramsey.

"Because of the possiblity of 1985 operating income being $2.60 per unit, we believe the best long-term interests of May Energy will be served by revising its quarterly distribution to $.375 per unit.
