Reagan stresses goals of November talks

By MICHAEL PUTZEL
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — President Reagan says he is going to the superpower summit in Geneva not just to meet Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev but for serious talks designed to "remove this threat of possible war or nuclear attack from between us."

But Reagan told a nationally televised news conference Tuesday night he doesn't regard his plan to develop a space-based nuclear defense as "a bargaining chip" and ruled out any negotiations that would limit research, development or testing of the so-called "Star Wars" system.

"I've not engaged in a propaganda game," Reagan said, accusing the Soviets of trying "to build an impression that we may be the villains in the piece and that they're the good guys."

The comments brought a sharp rebuttal today from the official Soviet news agency Tass, which accused Reagan of trying to justify an unconstructive arms control position by making "slanderous" remarks against the Soviet Union.

Asked if he would have to like Gorbachev in order to do business at the Nov. 19-20 summit meeting, Reagan said he wasn't planning to give the new Communist Party chief "a friendship ring."

He said he expects to find Gorbachev personable, as other Western leaders have, but added, "It isn't necessary that we love — or even like — each other.

"It is only necessary that we are willing to recognize that for the good of the people we represent, on this side of the ocean and over there, that everyone will be better off if we can come to some decisions about the threat of war."

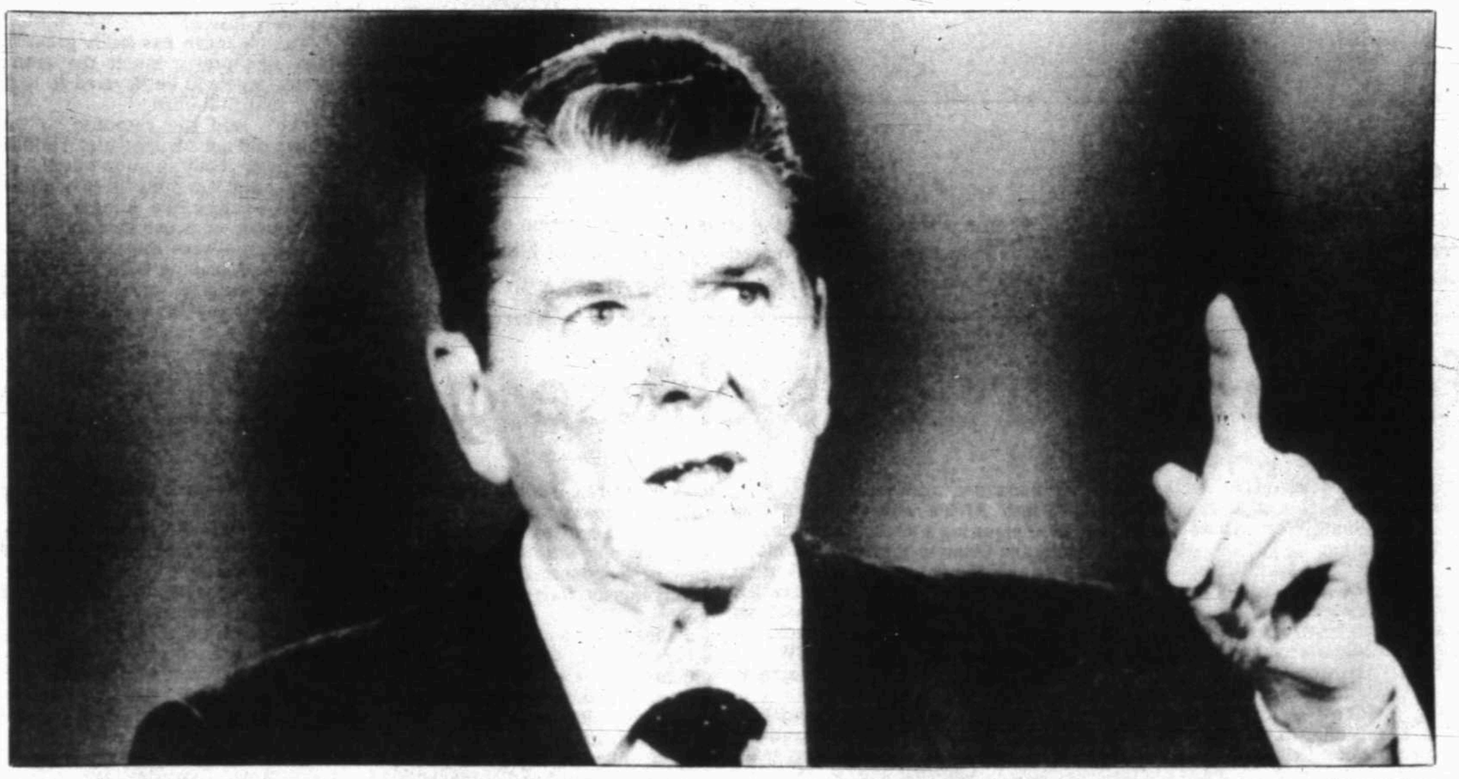

Also during the 37-minute question-and-answer session, the president's first such formal White House meeting with reporters in three months:

— Reagan rejected any major increase in government spending for AIDS research, saying the $126 million to be spent this year "has got to be something of a vital contribution," given administration budget constraints. He ducked a question on whether he would send a child to school with a pupil who has AIDS, saying, "I'm glad I'm not faced with that problem today."

Reagan said he felt compassion for an AIDS child who "can't have it explained to him why somehow he is now an outcast and can no longer associate with his playmates and schoolmates." But he added he can understand parents' concerns in the absence of unequivocal medical evidence that the deadly disease can't be transmitted between children.

— He denounced congressional proposals for trade restrictions to protect domestic industries from foreign competition, warning "a mindless stampede toward protectionism will be a one-way trip to economic disaster."

Tariffs, Reagan said, "would invite retaliation that could (deliver) an economic death blow to literally tends of thousands of American family farms."

President Reagan gestures during a formal news conference focusing on the upcoming Soviet arms summit.

— Defending his policies toward white-ruled South Africa, Reagan said being criticized by all sides in the racially torn nation indicates he "must be pretty near the middle."

"I think that when you're standing up against a cellophane wall and you're getting shot at from both sides, you must be doing something right," Reagan said of his recent decision to impose sanctions against the Pretoria government to increase pressure for abolition of apartheid laws.

Most questions dealt with U.S.-Soviet relations and the coming summit conference, which administration officials had sought to portray as a get-acquainted session unlikely to result in a breakthrough in the troubled superpower relationship.

"Maybe we were overly concerned," Reagan said, "but we were worried that there might build up a euphoria and that people would be expecting something ... of a near miracle to come out of that summit."

"We take this summit very seriously, and we're going to try to get into real discussions that we would hope could lead to a change in the relationship between the two countries — not that we'll learn to love each other, we won't — but a change in which we can remove this threat of possible war or nuclear attack from between us," Reagan continued.

Reagan said he had sent U.S. arms negotiators back to Geneva this week for a third round of talks without changing their instructions, and blamed the Soviets for the lack of progress toward arms control.

"We have offered at least six versions of a possible reduction and six different ways to enlist their interest in negotiating with us in a reduction of warheads," Reagan said. "They have come back with nothing ... We are waiting for them to say, 'Well, that number is wrong; let's try another number' or make a proposal of their own. And in spite of the language that has been used in some of the international broadcasts recently by leaders in the Kremlin, none of those proposals, nothing of that kind has ever come to the table for negotiations."

Contradicting reports he might offer to trade his strategic defense research program for Moscow's agreement to reduce the Soviet Union's nuclear arsenal, Reagan said, "I would rule that out."

Research on whether a defensive system is feasible "is going to continue," Reagan said, and it may one day involve development and testing of "Star Wars" weapons. But deployment of any defensive system designed to eliminate the threat of Soviet offensive weapons would be subject to negotiation, Reagan said.

But he compared the prospective defense system with military gas masks that armies kept even after chemical weapons were banned by international convention in 1925.

"We outlawed poison gas in 1925, but everybody kept their gas masks," Reagan said. "I think of this weapon as kind of the gas mask."

In its report from Washington, Tass said Reagan "made it clear" that the United States had no intention of discussing the non-militarization of space "in earnest."

Insurance rate increases requested

By STEVE LEVINE
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas automobile insurance industry Tuesday asked for a 4.7-percent annual increase in premiums for Midland, Ector and Howard counties.

At the same time the research staff of the State Board of Insurance called for a rate reduction. The board will hold hearings on the new rates Thursday morning.

With both auto fatalities and injuries up in 1984, the Texas Automobile Insurance Service Office requested a 10.7-percent increase statewide. In Midland, the annual cost of an average policy would increase $28 to $629. The group attributed $8 of that increase to the Legislature's decision to boost minimum required liability insurance coverage.

The Insurance Board staff has called for a 1.3-percent premium reduction statewide. Board spokesman Jon Ford said proposals for specific areas of the state would not be available until late Tuesday afternoon, but added, "Every territory will get a reduction under our proposal."

Under the industry plan, average ratepayers in Andrews, Winkler, Ward and Crane counties would pay an extra $39 per year, while motorists in Martin, Upton, Pecos and Loving counties would see annual premiums increase $37.

The group defined the average policy as one providing minimal liability coverage, $5,000 personal injury protection and collision coverage for a 1985 low-to-medium priced Buick, Chevrolet, Ford, Honda, Mazda, Nissan, Oldsmobile, Plymouth, Renault or Volkswagen not used in business with no male operator under 25 years of age and no female operator under 21.

"There is no doubt that the implementation of the mandatory seat belt use law will help reduce injuries and the cost of insurance," said Charles Wirth, chairman of the Automobile Insurance Service Office. But Wirth cautioned that several recent Texas Supreme Court decisions concerning payments in auto injury cases "will just as surely act to increase insurance costs."

Hance confident about governor's race

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Kent Hance is confident he is the one Republican of three announced candidates who can beat Mark White in the 1986 gubernatorial race.

A former U.S. congressman and a Lubbock attorney, Hance commented on his campaign to get the Republican nomination after speaking on the strength of the U.S. Constitution during a luncheon at Midland Woman's Club. The event was sponsored by the two local chapters of the Daughters of the American Revolution — Col. Theunis Dey and Lt. William Brewer.

Also in the race are former Gov. Bill Clements and U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler of Hunt. A poll released Tuesday reported Clements could win the GOP nomination, but Hance stood the best chance of beating White. "I think Clements will be in third place by election day," said Hance. He charged that White hasn't shown leadership, saying the state unemployment level has risen above the national rate for the first time in years.

"When things are going well, he (White) takes credit for it. When they're not, he blames it on President Reagan," Hance said.

At the luncheon, Hance told the crowd of 100-plus that only a strict interpretation of the Constitution "gives you the guidance the people who drafted it had in mind."

When the Constitution was written, the colonies faced numerous problems, among them no central army and no way to raise revenue. The odds were against the colonies on winning any war against Great Britain, he said.

"But they had faith and hope — hope always sustains — and the guidance of God. I'm sure the Divine Being was watching over this nation then and ever since then."

He looked at different national events since the country was formed that would normally have made other nations crumble: the War of 1812, the Civil War ("no other country that has been a democracy has had a civil war and stayed a democracy for another 100 years"), World War II ("People in some areas didn't know how their fellow soldiers were doing in other areas.")

It was the Constitution with its basic principles that carried the people through the times of war, according to Hance.

Interpretations have changed in the last 40 to 50 years, going from liberal in the 1960s to more conservative recently, according to Hance. He contended it's not just the judges who should hold a responsibility for strict interpretation, but also the legislators.

Compromise continues services for handicapped

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Permian Basin Mental Health-/Mental Retardation and the Midland Association for Retarded Citizens have reached a compromise agreement to share expenses to prevent the elimination of day services for handicapped persons now provided by the PBMH/MR Opportunity Center, Ray Unterbrink, executive director for MARC, said today.

Unterbrink said the organizations agreed Tuesday to continue operations at the center "provided that (PBMH/MR) pay half the cost of running the Opportunity Center and so long as we can produce the resources."

Regional officials of PBMH/MR in August announced the canceling of day services to handicapped children effective Aug. 31. The action, they said, was necessary to comply with new laws mandating that certain services be provided with state-in-aid funding.

However, news that funding to support day services would no longer be available came as a surprise to several of the 30 families with handicapped children who currently receive short-term respite care, parental guidance, assistance and support from those services, Unterbrink said.

The agreement, he said, will allow families "to rest a little easier in believing that the services will continue."

Key provisions in the proposal specify that the Opportunity Center will operate under the auspices of MARC while volunteers will be recruited and trained to supplement salaried staff to the extent possible, Unterbrink said.

In addition, PBMH/MR and MARC will join together to financially support day care services at Opportunity Center for the purpose of offering family support and short-term respite care to families who reside in Midland and Ector counties. Fees will be charged for services equal to, but not exceeding, fees charged in other local day care centers, while a sliding scale will be used to determine the actual amount charged to parents, he said.

Although not mentioned in the agreement, changes in the Opportunity Center will include the introduction of non-handicapped children to the program.

Unterbrink said the change will achieve a two-fold purpose.

First, it provides a "role model so handicapped children have non-handicapped peers in which to identify. They're not always seeing other children with handicaps," he said.

Secondly, "the non-handicapped children learn that their handicapped peers are not that much different than themselves," he added.

Unterbrink also said he expects to be able to expand hours of the Center to provide one or two evenings and weekend care.

Beryl Bentsen joins group seeking lyric labels

By KATHRYN BAKER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beryl "B.A." Bentsen, wife of Texas Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, says she is not expecting "moon in June," but has joined a group of congressional wives campaigning for warning labels on rock records that contain sexually graphic lyrics.

"Rock music, I think, has a wonderful beat," she said. "It makes you feel good, and you want to dance. I just wasn't listening to the lyrics."

Mrs. Bentsen said she got involved when Treasury Secretary James Baker's wife, Susan, asked her to sign a letter for Parents' Music Resource Center, a group of congressional wives seeking a rating system for record albums.

Objectionable lyrics, the group says, are written by artists ranging from obscure "heavy-metal" groups to top-selling hit-makers like Prince. They argue that most parents are not aware of what their children are hearing.

The Senate Commerce Committee has scheduled a hearing Thursday on the issue of rating record albums with music stars John Denver, Frank Zappa and Twisted Sister slated to be among the witnesses.

The issue was also discussed at a broadcasters' convention in Dallas last week.

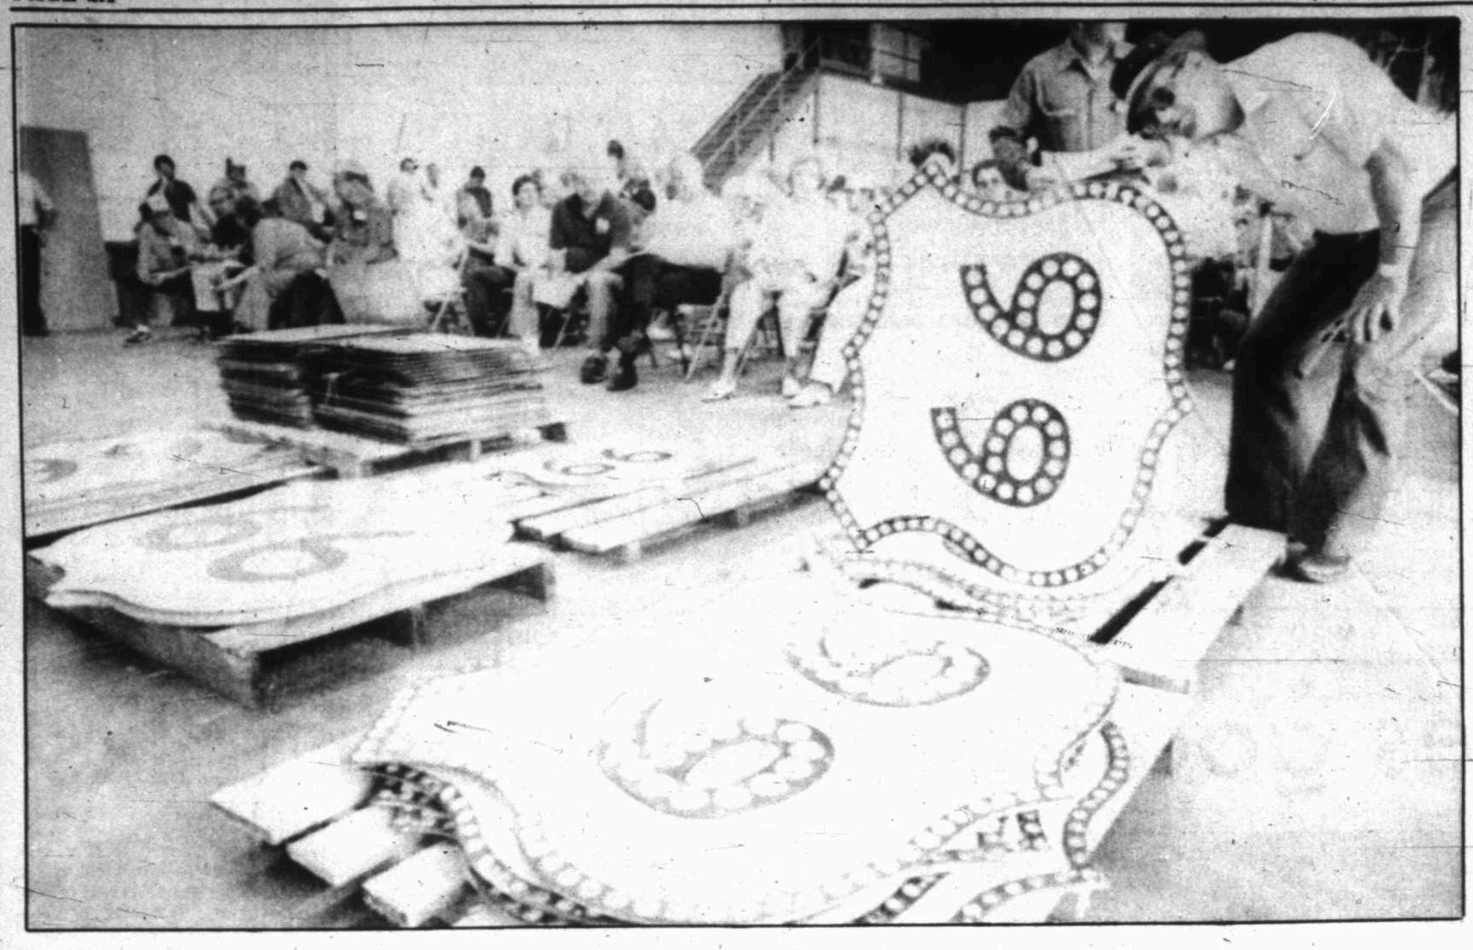

The Recording Industry Association of America has agreed to label selected albums "parental guidance, explicit lyrics," but the PMRC says that doesn't go far enough and seeks a rating system similar to movie ratings.

Some broadcasters and artists see the ratings as censorship.

Record manufacturers, Mrs. Bentsen said, "don't want to act as censors. That certainly isn't the goal of the group I'm involved with."

"I just don't kow of anything a consumer buys today blindly except rock music," said Mrs. Bentsen, who says she is a fan of Michael Jackson and Bruce Springsteen.

"We'll never get back to 'moon in June,'" she said, "but the tide is turning and I think we'll get back to nicer lyrics."

Comic characters latest 'recruits' in war on hunger

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK (AP) — A big-nosed beagle, a mild-mannered Yale graduate and a fighter pilot are among the new recruits in the fight against starvation, as more than 100 top cartoonists devote their Thanksgiving strips to world hunger.

Steve Canyon is the pilot, the Yalie is Michael Doonesbury and the beagle is Snoopy. Their respective creators — Milton Caniff, Garry Trudeau and Charles Schulz — are the moving force behind the Thanksgiving project.

"It's PR hype, but the world's PR hype...," said Caniff. "It looks like it's going to be a blockbuster."

So far, 114 cartoonists have enlisted in the project, including "all of the biggest names," and more are expected, said David Stamford, who edits Trudeau's books for Holt Rinehart & Winston.

"The response has been great. It looks like pretty much the entire comics page will be devoted to hunger," said Stamford.

Schulz said the response to the project did not surprise him. "I don't see why anybody shouldn't do it," he said, though it is not easy to handle a serious subject like hunger within the bounds of a comic strip.

"There's always the risk of being accused of playing with something that's so utterly serious...," Schulz said. "(But) any time you try to say something funny, you're risking yourself, aren't you?"

It is, however, the only medium available to cartoonists. "We got no place to go," said Caniff. "So we have to holler in our own pig pen."

Stamford said Trudeau — who had donated proceeds from his most recent book, a cartoon chronicle of the USA for Africa recording sessions, to African famine relief — came up with the idea, and called Schulz and Caniff.

In a letter, the three told fellow syndicated cartoonists they "could have their feature touch upon the subject of hunger, without being heavyhanded, in their own way, without changing the character of their strip," Stamford said.

Stamford said the idea is "not to turn the (comics) page into a polemic or tract.... The real power of the thing will be cumulative, with each artist dealing with the issue in his own way — with humor, as part of a continuing story, or whatever."

He said the cartoonists also hope to raise money for the cause. Newspapers will be asked to donate space on their comics pages for ads soliciting donations for USA for Africa.

And Stamford said every cartoonist who had agreed to join the project had also agreed to donate his or her artwork, to be auctioned with proceeds going to USA for Africa. Schulz said his strips sell for as much as $1,000.

South African-led troops chase guerrillas to Angola

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Nearly 500 South African-led troops split up into teams and pursued black guerrillas in southern Angola today, two days after soldiers and planes swept across the border in their second raid in 10 weeks, the military said.

In South Africa's segregated townships, police said crowds of blacks threw rocks and gasoline bombs at police in rioting that broke out in nine black and mixed-race areas. Police fatally shot a black man in one clash, they said.

Defense Force headquarters disclosed the first details of what they called a pre-emptive strike into southern Angola against guerrillas of the South-West Africa People's Organization.

SWAPO has fought since 1966 to end South African rule over South-West Africa, the former German colony also known as Namibia. The United Nations has called repeatedly for its independence.

The South African forces, including members of the local force it maintains in Namibia, were split into 12 teams of about 40 men each, pursuing members of a SWAPO battalion of 400 to 800 men, the military said. Air force planes carried out reconnaissance missions.

South Africa said the guerrillas were planning assaults on towns and military bases in northern Namibia.

The statement gave no indication of casualties or where the operation was taking place. South African troops last crossed into Angola on June 30 and July 1 to hit SWAPO bases. South Africa said 57 guerrillas were killed in that mission.

Cape Town's mixed-race townships were quiet a day after thousands of students, teachers and parents tried to reopen schools shut by the government on Sept. 6 because of rioting.

Police fired rubber bullets and tear gas Tuesday to break up groups of students and parents, and arrested 173 people who tried to defy the closure, a spokesman said. He spoke anonymously, following government policy.

Police headquarters in Pretoria, in a report listing overnight rioting incidents, said a police patrol opened fire on a group trying to firebomb police vehicles, and fatally shot a black man in Bethal, a black township 90 miles east of Johannesburg.

Thirteen months of anti-apartheid rioting have claimed at least 660 lives, according to government figures. A private monitoring group said more than 700 have died.

Crowds hurled rocks and firebombs in five black and mixed-race townships around Cape Town overnight, as well as in the township of Pingo in the eastern Cape Province, Johannesburg's Soweto township and Mamelodi outside Pretoria. Police said they made 25 arrests and that four people, including two policemen, were wounded in the rioting.

Police broke up a demonstration in downtown Johannesburg on Tuesday and arrested 17 members of a black union who were protesting a race-related dispute with a retailer, witnesses said.

The protest stemmed from the dismissal last Saturday of 27 union workers who staged a sit-in at Edgar's Store, the union said. The Federal Council of Retail and Allied Workers said the clerks were protesting insulting comments by a white supervisor to black workers.

Foreign Minister R.F. Botha said he was investigating allegations by the Mozambican government of continued South African support for guerrillas fighting to overthrow the country's Marxist president, Samora Machel.

Financing may have nixed land bids

By SHARON HERBAUGH

HOUSTON (AP) — Potential buyers probably didn't have enough time to secure financing for two pieces of prime real estate being sold to help finance the court-ordered construction of additional prison facilities, state Land Commissioner Garry Mauro said.

Texas prison officials offered to sell the 129 acres of property south of Houston for about $17 million, but got no bids.

"Time constraints were a serious problem, but there is no way to overcome that because we're under a court agreement," Mauro said.

About 6,000 acres of surplus prison land in Fort Bend and Harris counties is being sold by the Texas Department of Corrections through the state General Land Office.

State officials had hoped Tuesday's sale, along with another scheduled for November, would raise about $125 million to build a new maximum-security unit near Palestine and other smaller facilities.

Eighteen developers obtained bid packets required for participation in the sale. However, no bids were submitted for two tracts of land near the TDC's Central Unit in Sugar Land, about 20 miles south of Houston.

"There are always problems whenever you try to sell $125 million in real estate that has been in inventory for 100 years," Mauro said.

A 48-acre tract north of Texas Highway 90 required a minimum bid $5.5 million. An 81-acre piece of property fronting state Highways 6 and 90 and adjoining the Missouri Pacific rail line had a minimum price tag of $11.1 million.

Mauro said the offer probably will be "fine-tuned down a tad" but there will be no drastic changes.

"The price is real estate is only too high when there are no bidders," Mauro said.

But Dick Whittington, a Houston land broker, said the lack of interest in the land was a reflection on the area's energy-dependent economy.

"I think this seems to indicate that the level of economic activity in the Houston area is seen as being pretty flat," Whittington said.

In addition to the land offered for sale Tuesday, 11 tracts of more than 3,400 acres will be sold through sealed bids in November.

The property includues 2,024 acres in three tracts at the Jester Unit and 1,130 acres in six tracts at the Central Unit north of the Brazos River in Fort Bend County.

Also included are 297 acres in Harris County and an additional 22 acres in Fort Bend County.

The rest of the land could be sold next year, officials said.

HANCE

For this country to remain strong, Hance said it depends on the leaders and he looked at the qualities that make up leaders, citing vision, communication and persistence.

Vision, he said, is the ability to anticipate problems ahead of time. The late Egyptian President Anwar Sadat "is one of the five most impressive persons I've met," Hance said of his meetings with Sadat before his assassination. "When he came into power the Soviet Union had troops in Egypt and people had doubts about us giving aid to Egypt. But he had the vision and foresight to work out a treaty and agreement with their arch enemy, Israel."

Leaders must be able to communicate their ideas, according to Hance. "You can have the most brilliant idea, but if you can't communicate it no one knows about it. President Reagan has this element of being able to communicate and explain an idea."

Persistence to continue to push an idea even though it has failed in other times was another quality. Hance looked to Thomas Edison and Abraham Lincoln as examples of people whose persistence paid off.

"If anyone had lost seven elections in this day and time, it would be obvious to me that someone was not buying what I was selling," Hance said of Lincoln's losses in numerous elections before finally winning.

A strict interpretation of the Constitution in determining a policy on war is difficult, according to Hance. During the Vietnam Conflict, said Hance, Congress couldn't decide if it wanted to get completely involved "or to just kinda get in it."

In deciding foreign policy, the lawmakers need to also consider that if the ruling party of one country should be replaced, the people who replace those in power might be worse.

The Shah of Iran was noted for not allowing fair trials; "but Khomeini has cut down on court costs. He just executes them."

In Nicaragua the late Somoza was "not an administrator of the best government in the world. But the ones who replaced him are at least 10 times worse."

Throughout its 209 years in existence, the Constitution "has not changed and will not. Styles and values and fashions may change, but the basic principles and values outlined in the Constitution won't change," Hance said.

Correction

Figures reported in Sunday's edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram on the 1985 tax rate for the Midland College District were incorrect.

The correct taxes for the district should be $54.24 for a $60,000 valuation, $67.80 for a $75,000 valuation, $90.40 for a $100,000 valuation and $271.20 for a $300,000 valuation. The incorrect figures were supplied to the Reporter-Telegram by the Midland Central Appraisal District.

Prison transfer change proposed

AUSTIN (AP) — Voters on Nov. 5 will decide on a constitutional amendment that a state senator says could help curb the gang violence now plaguing Texas prisons.

The amendment would allow authorities to transfer troublesome inmates from Texas prisons to institutions in other states.

"Present law does not allow us to deal with prison violence by simply ridding ourselves of those causing it. The adoption of Proposition Six on Nov. 5 will allow us to do so," Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, said Tuesday.

Suspected German spies may have been warned by counterspy

BONN, West Germany (AP) — A secretary in the chancellor's office and her husband who fled to East Germany under suspicion of being spies could have been warned by a top counterspy who knew they were under investigation, security officials said.

Kurt Rebmann, the chief federal prosecutor, said Tuesday that Herta-Astrid Willner, 45, a secretary in Chancellor Helmut Kohl's office, and her 59-year-old husband Herbert had defected to East Germany and were suspected of being spies.

Government officials said Mrs. Willner had access to classified material, but they denied a report she may have seen secret information about the Star Wars missile plan.

The defection of the couple raised to six the number of West Germans who fled to communist East Germany and were subsequently accused of spying in the past six weeks. One of the six, Hans-Joachim Tiedge, was one of Bonn's top counter-espionage agents when he fled on Aug. 19.

Bonn security officials confirmed that Tiedge, who was responsible for Bonn's counter-intelligence operations against East Germany, knew the Willners were under suspicion.

They had left for a vacation in Spain on Aug. 12 and did not return, said Hans-Juergen Foerster, a spokesman for the federal prosecutor's office.

"When you look at the dates, you see Tiedge could have warned the couple" to flee, Foerster told The Associated Press.

The Cologne-based Express newspaper said Allied security experts complained to West German officials in 1982 that Willner, then a security expert for the Free Democrats, the junior partner in Kohl's coalition, was "posing too many questions to military attaches."

Herta-Astrid and Herbert Willner

West Germany's mass-circulation Bild newspaper said several counter-espionage officials had demanded increased observation of the Willners after Tiedge's defection, but were stopped by chancellory officials.

"We just did not have enough (evidence) in hand against her," Bild quoted one unidentified security official as saying.

Wolfgang Schaeuble, state secretary in Kohl's office, said in a television interview Tuesday night that Mrs. Willner "naturally had the chance to glance at minutes of Cabinet meetings, a few of them classified," but "few security-relevant" documents passed through her department.

West German radio earlier had quoted Bonn security sources as saying Mrs. Willner had access to information on the U.S. space-based Strategic Defense Initiative and a European high-technology project. Officials denied both claims.

Mrs. Willner, a 12-year employee of the chancellor's office, worked in the internal political section, said Foerster. Television reports said the section handled domestic, social, research and science policy.

Her husband worked in the Naumann Foundation, which is closely tied to the Free Democrats, according to Rebmann.

Axel Wernitz, an opposition Social Democrat who is chairman of the Parliament's Interior Committee, said the latest espionage case would cause "considerable damage" to West Germany.

It followed a string of spy probes that has rocked Kohl's conservative government, reached the president's office and resulted in the dismissal of Heribert Hellenbroich, the counter-espionage chief.

Chinese Communists hold historic meeting

PEKING (AP) — Communist Party delegates gathered today at the first special party conference in 30 years to promote a new generation of leaders and approve an economic blueprint for the next five years.

The conference is expected to approve replacements for 64 members of the policy-making Central Committee, including 10 Politburo members, and 67 from the Central Advisory Commission and Discipline Inspection Commission who retired two days ago.

There was no indication when the list of replacements would be announced.

The party newspaper People's Daily said the conference was a "valiant march forward" toward lasting stability in which the new technically qualified leaders would continue reforms begun by 81-year-old Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping in December 1978.

Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang opened the conference with a speech entitled, "Work together for a splendid future," and Premier Zhao Ziyang outlined draft proposals for the nation's seventh five-year plan, the official Xinhua news agency reported.

The meeting was presided over by Hu, Zhao, Deng, and the two other members of the Politburo Standing Committee, President Li Xiannian and veteran economist Chen Yun, the agency said.

Soldiers ringed the north gate to the giant Great Hall of the People as about 1,000 representatives from across the world's most populous nation arrived for the conference.

A soldier, traffic policeman and plainclothes policeman grabbed a Chinese man, twisted his arms behind his back and took him inside the building. It was not known why he was detained.

An editorial by the official English-language China Daily said of the conference: "It is an event of key importance in the political and economic life of the whole country at this stage of development."

"Despite minor snags, the economy is flourishing and people's lives are improving remarkably...A new five-year plan to further the reforms is called for urgently," the editorial said.

The plan for 1986-1990 is expected to set moderate growth targets after expansion of close to 10 percent a year in the 1981-85 plan.

Britain calls truce in expulsion war

LONDON (AP) — Britain called a truce in its war of expulsions with the Soviet Union today, saying it would not deport any more Soviets in retaliation for the latest ouster of six Britons from Moscow.

"We wish to draw a line under this affair," said Christopher Meyer, head of the Foreign Office news department. "We have no plans at present for further expulsions from London."

The Foreign Office statement came a few hours after the Soviets ordered out five British Embassy staff members and a journalist in the latest round of tit-for-tat expulsions triggered by the defection to Britain of the KGB spy agency's chief operative in London last week.

Meyer told a news conference Britain has "the firm intention" of restoring the British Embassy staff in Moscow but did not say when.

He denied the British decision amounted to a climbdown in the face of Kremlin defiance, calling this "a curious distortion of events."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher insisted the Soviets had lost out in the crisis that threatened to damage Anglo-Soviet relations.

Speaking to reporters in Egypt, where she is on an official visit, she said, "This shows the Soviet Union in a pretty poor light. They were caught red-handed and are now red-faced."

Nicaragua outlines case against U.S. before court

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Lawyers representing Nicaragua accused the United States today of running a guerrilla war to topple the leftist Sandinista government, and said U.S. officials had "concocted" claims that Nicaragua supplied weapons to rebels in El Salvador.

After four days of testimony before the World Court, the Sandinista government outlined its legal case today in an effort to prove that the United States has violated international law.

The 15-judge panel ruled in May 1984 that the United States must halt any military activities against Nicaragua.

A ruling in the case is not expected for several months. Formally known as the International Court of Justice, the court is the legal arm of the United Nations and has no enforcement powers.

The Reagan administration pulled out of the proceedings last January, claiming the court has no jurisdiction in the case and accusing Nicaragua of using the proceedings as a "propaganda forum."

"The United States government conceived, created and organized the mercenary forces," Harvard University law professor Abram Chayes claimed. He charged that the U.S. government equipped, trained and directed Contra rebels, and handpicking their political leadership to maintain control.

Chayes, arguing Nicaragua's case, said, "There has been direct combat support from the U.S. government to the mercenary forces."

"The United States military and intelligence personnel conducted direct attacks against Nicaragua leading to the destruction of the nation's oil supply system and the mining of its ports," he claimed.

Chayes was referring to actions against Nicaragua's primary oil pipeline at Puerto Sandino on the Pacific coast, as well as the destruction of its oil storage facility in the coastal city of Corinto.

"These actions reflect policy decisions established at the highest level of the United States administration," said Chayes. "The purpose of this policy and actions have been from the beginning the overthrow of the Nicaraguan government" so it could be replaced by a government acceptable to the United States, he charged.

He accused the U.S. government of "concocting" the "myth" of an arms flow from Nicaragua to El Salvador in order to justify U.S. support for the Contras as a way of interdicting that purported weapons flow.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Lebanese palace hit by rockets, mortar fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — President Amin Gemayel's suburban palace was hit by rockets and mortars during fighting between Christians and Moslems, and a car bomb exploded at an outpost of an Israeli-backed militia in southern Lebanon.

Gemayel, a Christian, escaped injury in the the shelling Tuesday, which Christian radio stations blamed on Druse militiamen.

State-run television said 30 Christian militiamen and Israelis were killed or wounded, but an Israeli military source in Jerusalem said soldiers firing at the car blew it up and there were no casualties among the militiamen or Israelis.

Police said 18 people were killed and 88 wounded in fighting in Beirut and between pro-Syrian and pro-Palestinian militias in Tripoli.

The television report said the suicide bomber detonated his TNT-packed car at a South Lebanon Army militia position in the Israeli security zone in southern Lebanon.

Pro-PLO publisher killed

ATHENS, Greece (AP) - The publisher of a pro-Palestinian magazine was shot and killed today near the center of the Greek capital, police said.

An Athens security police spokesman identified the publisher as 37-year-old Michel Numari.

"Numari was shot just as he was going into the building. The gunman got away on foot," said the police official, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

Numari, a Palestinian who held a Jordanian passport, published the weekly Arabic-language political magazine Annanshra.

The magazine recently published an article claiming that 21 Syrian air force officers were executed July 21 after staging a failed coup against the Syrian president, Hafez Assad.

Reagan wooing Marxist

WASHINGTON (LAT) — Amid cries of anger from conservatives, the Marxist president of Mozambique arrived Tuesday for talks with President Reagan aimed at cementing growing U.S. ties and winning new aid for his leftist regime.

The administration's cordial relationship with Mozambican President Samora Machel flies in the face of Reagan's usual rhetoric on the Third World: In this case, the United States is supporting a Soviet-backed Marxist dictatorship against a pro-Western rebellion.

The United States is supplying Machel's regime with some $40 million in economic aid this year; Congress turned down an administration request for $1.1 million in military aid.

Reagan and other officials say Machel has helped U.S. attempts to calm tensions between white-ruled South Africa and its black neighbors, and that they hope he can be wooed away from his close relationship with the Soviet Union.

"For some time now, there has been an indication that (Machel), who had gone so far over to the other camp, was maybe having second thoughts," the president said at his news conference Tuesday night. "We think it's worth a try to let him see what our system is."

Ugandan rebels cut road

KAMPALA, Uganda (AP) — Rebels have built barricades cutting off the southwestern town of Mbarara and blocking traffic to Zaire, Burundi and Rwanda, according to reports in Kampala Tuesday.

They quoted truck drivers returning to Kampala as saying guerrillas of the National Resistance Army were turning back traffic at Lyantonde, 120 miles southwest of Kampala and 50 miles northeast of Mbarara.

Syria: U.S. reneged on hostage swap deal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Was there a deal last June to exchange the 39 TWA hostages for some 750 Shiite and Palestinian prisoners held in an Israeli prison?

Circumstances surrounding the end of the hijacking episode suggested some kind of informal understanding among Syria, the United States and Israel that such a swap was agreed upon.

An informed State Department official says Syria not only thought there was such an agreement but that the Syrians now feel the United States didn't live up to its end of the bargain.

"They said we had reneged on the deal, which we really hadn't," said the State Department official, who is in a position to know, but who spoke to a reporter Tuesday on condition he not be identified.

Syria complained that release of the TWA hostages was agreed to on the understanding that Israel would promptly release all of the more than 750 Shiite and Palestinian prisoners from Southern Lebanon it was holding in its Atlit prison. But some of the prisoners weren't released until 10 weeks later.

While maintaining there was never an agreement for Israel to release the prisoners, the official acknowledged that "we let the Syrians assume" there was one as "a way of getting action on the hostage release."

He said Syria, which aided in release of the TWA hostages on June 30, had said at the time it would also press for the release of seven other Americans kidnapped previously "as a matter of high priority." Those seven are still missing.

The official said it isn't known whether the release of the last batch of prisoners by Israel last week will prompt the Syrians to give assistance now. Officials at the Syrian embassy here could not immediately be reached for comment.

The official who told an Associated Press reporter of the discussions with the Syrians said U.S. officials aren't at all sure the Syrians could deliver the seven hostages. But he said it is better for them to be trying than not trying.

"Maybe they will be lucky," he added.

Since Israel had said it eventually would release the prisoners from Southern Lebanon anyway, the official said, "We told the Syrians we were confident Israel would release the Atlit prisoners." He said the timing of a release was mentioned, but the Syrians may have assumed it would be in a matter of days.

But he said that by mid-July, two weeks after the release of the TWA hostages, Syria concluded Israel wasn't going to promptly release all of the prisoners from Atlit and "told us they wouldn't help" with the other seven missing Americans. The Syrians communicated that decision to the U.S. Embassy in Damascus, he said.

The official, without being specific, said United States satisfied the demands of Syria and Berri for a commitment not to retaliate against the hijackers after the TWA hostages were released.

In this instance, the understandings have so far been respected as the administration has not undertaken any military retaliation.

The official said American diplomatic efforts to free the other seven Americans are at an impasse and have been since the administration tried unsuccessfully to link their release with the 39 airliner hostages. He admitted that was a long-shot at the time and that neither the Syrians nor Amal leader Nabih Berri, who had taken custody of the 39 hostages from the extremist Moslem hijackers, were in a position to deliver the seven.

The official said the administration does not know where the missing seven are, or who is holding them, but thinks the kidnappers are probably closer to Iran than to Syria, and that Syria must work through Iran in trying to obtain their release.

Reagan keeps chin up for tax system overhaul

WASHINGTON (AP) — A persistent President Reagan is keeping the pressure on Congress to approve his tax system overhaul, but even a leading congressional Republican warns that enthusiasm for the plan is so low it won't pass this year.

Reagan, in a statement at the beginning of his news conference Tuesday night, asked Congress to "work with me and not against me" to pass what he called a "fair-share tax plan lowering rates further."

The president departs today on another campaign-style trip to whip up interest in his tax reform plan with a speech on the Statehouse steps in Concord, N.H.

In his statement at the news conference, Reagan boasted of America's strong economy and chided other nations for not following his example on cutting tax rates.

"Opportunity is our engine of progress," the president said. "So I'm asking Congress to work with me and not against me to control federal spending, to pass our fair-share tax plan lowering tax rates further, open up closed markets overseas, and urge other nations to cut their high tax rates to strengthen their economies and ability to buy American products."

Reagan has visited 16 cities since Memorial Day to press his tax plan, but lawmakers say voters are more concerned about the nation's $150 billion trade deficit and the loss of U.S. jobs to overseas competition.

Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole told a group of aviation industry tax experts Tuesday that once the House approves a tax overhaul bill he will try to move it along in the Senate, but there most likely will not be enough time to pass a bill before pressure develops to adjourn for the Christmas holidays.

"I just don't see how we're going to do it this calendar year," Dole said.

"We find tax bill enthusiasm going up and down. Lately it's been pretty much on a level plane — not much enthusiasm," said Dole, recalling his visit last weekend to the Kansas state fair where talk of taxes was almost non-existent.

"Of the hundreds of people I spoke with, only two mentioned the tax bill — one said to pass it and one said to kill it. That seemed to be a pretty good test," he said.

The House Ways and Means Committee is to begin revamping the tax codes this week, but the process is expected to take a month or more.

Senate eyes cigarette tax to help smoke out deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee, searching for ways to cut the government deficit, is considering an extended tax on cigarettes and a fee of at least $1 for each person who goes through a U.S. Customs station.

The 16-cent-a-pack federal levy on cigarettes is scheduled to drop to 8 cents on Oct. 1, but the committee is likely to vote for a permanent 16-cent level as the House Ways and Means Committee has done.

The Senate panel is debating whether to raise the tax even higher and whether to earmark part of the money for health programs or subsidies for tobacco farmers.

The committee on Tuesday easily approved a package of spending cuts that would reduce the deficit by more than $21 billion over three years. The plan includes limiting increases in Medicare reimbursement for doctors and hospitals and moderating increases in Part B premiums that cover doctors' fees of Medicare patients.

But trouble developed when Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., the chairman, called for a vote on another initiative — one that would impose "user fees" on people who pass through Customs stations.

"After a century and a half of unguarded borders — we are now going to tax those people when they cross the border?" asked Sen. Daniel Patrick Mynihan, D-N.Y. "We are raising taxes without calling it taxes. We've had four years of that...."

Under the proposal, any person who walks, drives or otherwise crosses into the United States from Mexico, Canada or most areas of the Caribbean would be subject to a $1 fee. Those who enter from other countries would have to pay $2 each.

"We'll lose a lot more in taxes and trade than we would ever pick up" from the fee, said Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Why, asked Moynihan, should a Canadian have to pay a $1 fee because he drives across the border to attend a lodge meeting or buy a beer? "What service does he get?" he asked.

In addition to the per capita fee, the proposal would impose fees of up to $397 for commercial planes, ships and buses processed through Customs.

The Customs package would produce $1 billion over three years.

Other major parts of the committee's deficit-reduction plan would:

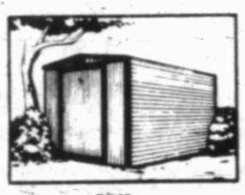

— Limit increases in Medicare Part B premiums, which elderly people pay to insure their doctor bills.

— Limit hospital reimbursements for treating patients under Medicare, the government and worker financed program of health care for the elderly. The committee estimates a three-year saving of $5.9 billion.

Opening lead: Queen of ♣.

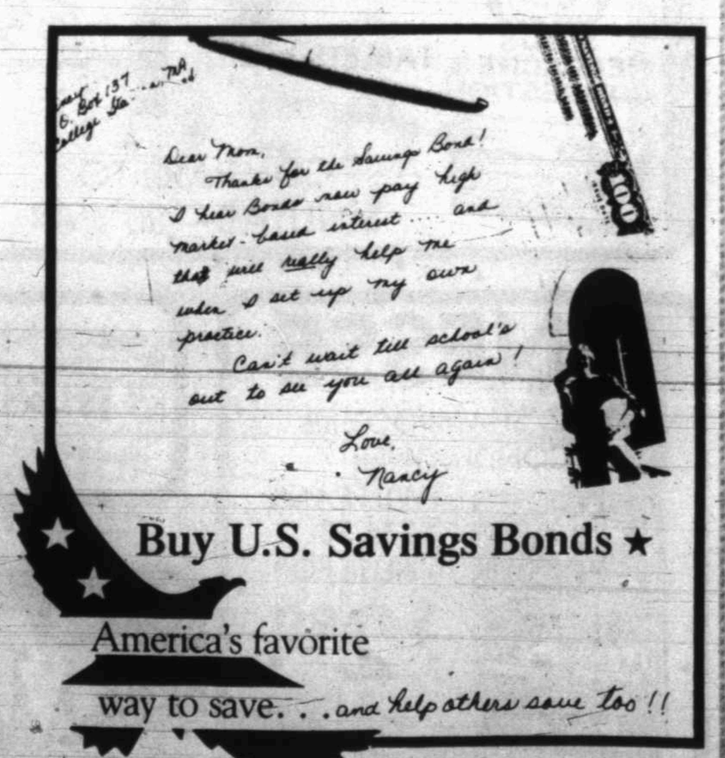

It is easy to take a seemingly simple hand for granted and relax your concentration. But that habit can be expensive.

We are not entirely happy with South's decision to open with a demand bid, even though his hand had great playing potential. He is a little light in point count and two-suited hands can be difficult to bid if the auction starts at the two-level. However, South needed little more than strong support for one of his suits, and he contracted for a small slam as soon as North raised his second suit, showing a four-card holding.

West led the queen of clubs and declarer wasted little time in going down. He won the club, drew three rounds of trumps, then started on spades. Only when West showed out on the second spade did declarer's predicament dawn on him—he had three spade losers and a club, and only the ace of hearts and one ruff in dummy to try to take care of them. That proved to be an impossible task.

While the 5-1 spade split combined with the 3-1 trump division was most unfortunate, declarer really had only himself to blame for going down. If spades broke no worse than 4-2, the contract was ironclad. Therefore, after winning the king of clubs declarer should first lay down the ace and king of spades. If both those cards live, then declarer can go about drawing trumps and claiming his contract.

As the cards lie, West can ruff the second spade, but declarer is still in control. Even should West return a trump, declarer can win in hand and ruff his three spade losers on the table—the queen of trumps is still in dummy to prevent West from scoring a second ruff. The ace of hearts takes care of declarer's losing club.

Musical Majority berates ratings

NEW YORK (AP) — John Cougar Mellencamp, Glenn Frey, Daryl Hall and John Oates have joined with other rock artists and music executives to fight a move to rate records and videos for sex and violence.

The Musical Majority, formed under the auspices of the American Civil Liberties Union, hopes to conduct a letter-writing campaign by music fans opposing any government ratings system.

"We are sick and tired of every extremist who wants to get his or her name in the paper using rock 'n' roll music as a whipping boy," chairman Danny Goldberg, a business manager and president of Gold Mountain Records, said Tuesday.

He said that while the committee sympathized with parents who worry about "outside influences" on their children, rating records would only "damage two of the most wonderful American traditions: freedom of expression and music."

• • •

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Rock musician Boz Scaggs is "going to resolve this battle" with authorities who charged him with drunken driving and driving without a license, Scaggs' attorney says.

An innocent plea was entered Tuesday for Scaggs by attorney Joseph Wiseman. The rocker was arrested Aug. 12 after allegedly running a red light. A police report indicated his blood alcohol level was .22, more than twice the .10 at which the law presumes a person driving under the influence, Wiseman said.

Scoggs, who was not in court, is set for a pre-trial conference Oct. 17, and another of his attorneys, Michael Stepanian, said, "He's a good guy. We're going to resolve this battle."

• • •

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Capt. John Testrake, the pilot of the hijacked TWA Flight 847 and one of 39 hostages held in Beirut three months ago, is relishing his return to routine life.

Passengers ask for autographs and reporters still seek interviews, but Testrake said, "I've almost resumed being a private citizen."

The pilot, whose plane was hijacked shortly after it left Athens, Greece, on June 14, said at a news conference Tuesday that he wasn't bitter at being held captive for 17 days.

"I have no regrets or thoughts of 'Gee, I wish I would have done something differently,'" he said, adding that he does regret the death of a Navy diver slain by the hijackers and that seven Americans remain hostage in Lebanon.

"I wish we could have arranged it so they could have come out as part of a package deal," said Testrake, who resumed flying regularly on Aug. 1.

• • •

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The government has returned Stevie Wonder to the airwaves, lifting a ban on his music imposed after the pop superstar dedicated his Oscar to an imprisoned anti-apartheid activist.

After a popular radio station played a Wonder tune on Tuesday, a spokesman for the South African Broadcasting Corp. said that although SABC objected to "blatant politicization of music," the six-month boycott had made its point. The singer dedicated his Oscar for best song from a movie to Nelson Mandela, the leader of the African National Congress. He is serving a life term for a 1964 conviction of planning sabotage.

• • •

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Robert Davis of Michigan and his wife, Marty, a correspondent for a syndicated TV news magazine, have been saved from a spicy conflict of interest, thanks to a conflict of schedules.

Davis was entered as a contestant in the Chili Con-Congress cook-off for members of the House and Senate as part of this weekend's 10th annual Chili Bull Contest in Washington.

His wife is one of the judges, and Davis lamented Tuesday that while he won't be able to compete after all, "It probably wouldn't be fair to enter. Her palate is so tuned to my chili."

Davis will be attending a Michigan Republican leadership conference on Mackinac Island.

Mrs. Davis will taste-test alongside White House Press Secretary James Brady, a three-time Chili Bull winner, and sportscaster Sonny Jurgensen, former quarterback for the Washington Redskins. Proceeds go to charity.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Comedian Joan Rivers couldn't get celebrity support for an AIDS benefit two years ago, but the incurable immune system disease has now ravaged a show business veteran and spawned fears of new blacklisting.

The entertainment industry will open its checkbooks for a black-tie "Commitment to Life" gala Thursday night at the downtown Bonaventure Hotel in hopes of raising more than $1 million to help battle AIDS.

Elizabeth Taylor will co-host the event with Burt Reynolds, Sammy Davis Jr., Shirley MacLaine and Burt Lancaster.

Entertainers have frequently rallied for causes, from anti-nuclear protests of the 1970s to famine relief in the 1980s, but creeping paranoia and actor Rock Hudson's battle with AIDS has galvanized support for this fight.

"These people with their visibility and recognition are wonderful educators," said AIDS Project Los Angeles Chairman Peter Scott.

Project spokesman Bill Melamed said the money will help support AIDS victims and fund education programs.

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Heart transplant patient Michael Drummond will stay in a special unit a few days while doctors seek the cause of a slight fever that dropped his condition from good to fair, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Hours after doctors upgraded Drummond's condition from fair to good Tuesday and made plans to move him to a regular hospital room, they found he had "a slightly elevated temperature," said University Medical Center spokeswoman Nina Trasoff.

Drummond's condition was downgraded to fair Tuesday evening and doctors postponed the move, Ms. Trasoff said. "They're doing this to monitor him more closely. They're not overly concerned by the low-grade fever, but they want to watch him to make sure there is no other indication of possible infection."

Drummond, 25, received the heart of Tarro K. Griffin, 19, a Lindale, Texas, traffic accident victim on Sept. 7. The transplant came nine days after doctors implanted an artificial Jarvik-7 heart into Drummond's chest to keep him alive until a human donor heart could be found.

• • •

NEW YORK (AP) — Steven Bochco, the deposed executive producer of "Hill Street Blues," says winning an Emmy award Sunday for the show he was forced to leave would be special, but he wouldn't consider it sweet revenge.

"It's not an issue of vindication," Bochco said in an interview Tuesday. "I don't think they asked me to leave because I was doing a bad job. I wouldn't feel creatively vindicated if I won."

The NBC series Bochco helped create five years ago has captured more Emmy awards than other dramatic series. It won for outstanding drama each year it's been on going into Sunday's Emmy show. Bochco thinks "Hill Street" deserves to win for the fifth consecutive time, but said "the general perception is that we've had our turn. There are some other good shows to choose from."

Larry Riley (l.) and Joe Guzaldo star in "Stir Crazy," a CBS series making its debut on Wednesday, Sept. 18. The new series is based on the Gene Wilder-Richard Pryor film about two friends who escape from prison, where they had been incarcerated for a crime they didn't commit.

Chemical concern

Practically no community is immune from the type of toxic chemical spill which occurred in San Antonio Saturday when a freight train derailed.

That's why communities should be prepared to deal with the unexpected at a moment's notice.

The potential for disaster was made apparent by the San Antonio derailment. The Southern Pacific train carrying toxic sulfuric acid derailed while crossing a railroad trestle, spilling between 100,000 and 200,000 gallons of the acid into the Medina River. With a few modifications, the same accident could have occurred in any community in the state or nation.

According to officials, the acid spill killed thousands of fish, caused the closing of a high school a quarter mile from the crash site and contaminated a rock quarry. In addition, at least seven workers cleaning up the spill suffered burns and some of them required medical treatment. An immediate estimate indicated damage resulting from the spill will easily exceed $1 million.

That's only the monetary estimate. Environmentally the damage resulting from the spill could be far more significant and long-lasting. Fortunately, San Antonio disaster relief officials were reacting rapidly to the toxic spill, dumping tons of lime into the river to neutralize the water.

Other communities should learn from the San Antonio experience and make their own preparations to be utilized in the event of similar accidents. There's ample opportunity for just that kind of spill today. Railroads carry vast amounts of toxic and hazardous materials. But so do transport trucks and even some aircraft. The potential for crashes that release deadly or environmentally-damaging substances is enormous.

Of course the transportation of such substances can't be stopped. Communities can designate particular routes for vehicles carrying hazardous materials, but transportation of such materials will continue — and even increase in future years.

For that reason, it's crucial that communities that haven't done so begin to make preparations to deal with future disasters now. That preparation could save lives and untold damage to the environment.

Letters from readers:

Raise 'Old Billie'

Wake up! People, wake up! Check your electric bill. First let me tell you what happened.

The Texas Electric Co. went down to Austin and asked to raise the price per KWH. The commission turned them down.

Then some "Jack-legged" lawyer (a lobbyist, I suppose) came up with the smart, unfair idea of charging the public for fuel they used to make the electricity.

Do we have to pay it? H— no! We don't have to pay it.

My bill this month was $99.39. The fuel part of it was $39.39. That's about 40 percent.

When the electric company first started charging for fuel, they showed the amount on the bill. People raised "Old Billie." So now what do they do? They print some figures on your bill. I call it shorthand and I can't read shorthand. The girls at the Texas Electric office are nice enough to mark it on my bill when I ask them to.

I read an article about some bookkeeper for some big corporation got tired of their dirty tricks. She started wising up the public. Her friend told her that she would get fired. She said, "I don't give a d—." She must have been a go-getter.

She continued to fight. She got a lot of support and finally got enough charges against them that it cost that company a pile of money. They had to reimburse the public plus pay a high fine.

Wake up, people, wake up! Raise "Old Billie," but not with the girls at the office because they can't help it. If you are going to pull a man's hair, you have to get him by the hair of the head. This is not just Midland; it's statewide. Let's go statewide.

Come on people! We can't lose. Let me hear from some of you.

Seat belts save lives

Recently you published a letter from a lady who asked the following question, "Why cannot the law be that you buckle up if you leave the city limits, whereby you would be going faster than in town?"

Please allow me to respond by pointing out two very important reasons for using a seat belt no matter how far or how fast one travels in a car:

1. Safety statistics have shown that the majority of automobile accidents occur within a 25-mile radius of home.

2. Speeds of only 25 miles per hour can still inflict fatal injuries in the event of a collision. Imagine being hurled through a glass windshield at that speed!

Also, while one may be driving at a reasonable rate of speed, this does not guarantee one can control the speed of the driver who may crash into your vehicle. One can even be motionless, waiting at a red light and still receive bodily injuries if struck by another vehicle. I know because this happened to me. Slow speed does not guarantee one's personal safety.

Finally, in response to those who claim that using seat belts is time-consuming, allow me to point out it takes no more time to buckle up than it does to close the car door. Is your life worth one extra second of protection?

Evidence abounds of American POWs

WASHINGTON — At the urging of anguished relatives, we've spent years investigating whether American prisoners are still alive in Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos. We're now prepared to announce our conclusion:

Jack Anderson

We are convinced that some Americans on the missing-in-action list have actually been held in bondage by their communist captors for more than a decade.

The latest top-secret reports identify one group of about two dozen who are believed to be doing "technical work" for the Vietnamese — repairing helicopters and other military hardware left behind by U.S. forces.

"Actually, there are more likely a hundred POWs still living there," said a key source in the Defense Intelligence Agency. He based this estimate on satellite photos, communications intercepts and human reports. "The evidence," he said, "is overwhelming."

This evidence may be forced into open court by a class-action lawsuit, which has been filed by a former prisoner-of-war and a Special Forces sergeant. They charge that federal officials have violated U.S. law by not aggressively seeking the release or rescue of live POWs still being held in Southeast Asia.

A tale of intrigue and betrayal rivaling the movie "Rambo" could unfold in a federal court in Fayetteville, N.C., the "company town" of the Green Berets.

Affidavits filed in the suit claim U.S. officials deliberately ignored or discredited reports of live POW sightings. One affidavit, by a Congressional Medal of Honor winner, even suggests that the Army tried to arrange the death or capture of the two plaintiffs in the suit.

A much-decorated former POW, retired Maj. Mark A. Smith, swears that while he was serving with the Special Forces in Korea he got information for the DIA from 1981 to 1984 proving that there were POWs in Southeast Asia. The information was gathered "by talking with agents in the Thai military, the Lao resistance, the Pathet Lao, the free Vietnamese, gun smugglers, gold smugglers, drug smugglers and anyone who could provide information."

Smith said he cross-checked reports of about 50 agents, most of whom had no knowledge of each other but who corroborated the others' testimony.

In April 1984, Smith learned that three POWs could be rescued from Laos the following month. But when he took this information to a U.S. major general in Seoul, Smith's affidavit said, "I was told that if I wanted to be a Lt. Col. in the Army that I should forget about the POW/MIA information ...."

Smith said when the general read the cover letters Smith had prepared, he "turned white, handed the briefing back to me and said, 'This is too hot for me to handle, big guy.'" Smith swore that the general advised him to "put the briefing paper through a shredder and forget the whole issue."

Sgt. Melvin C. McIntire, still on active duty, served in Korea with Smith and also made trips to Southeast Asia to gather information on POWs. "I learned of approximately 200 living Americans in Laos who were prisoners-of-war," McIntire's affidavit said. When he, too, reported on the POWs who could have been brought out in May 1984, he "was sent back to the United States six months early." He was later told that his and Smith's intelligence reports had been destroyed.

The Medal of Honor winner, Lt. Col. Robert Lewis Howard, now with the Special Forces in Germany, swore that he was told of live POW sightings in January 1984, in Thailand, when he "participated in a training exercise which I now believe was designed and intended to discredit the intelligence-gathering activity" of the Korea-based Special Forces unit.

The training mission "if completed as planned, could have resulted in the killing or capture of myself, Maj. Mark Smith, Sgt. McIntire and others by a hostile force," Howard swore, adding: "This could have had the effect of putting the American POW-/MIA issue to rest."

OOPS!: Officials of the beleaguered U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corp. recently drafted a document called "The Plan" to "convert a group of Western senators from neutrality to advocacy" of the rescue effort being led by Sens. James McClure, R-Idaho, and Pete Domenici, R-N.M. But Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., a lawyer and a critic of Synfuels, wrote to President Reagan pointing out that it's against the law for federal officials to try to influence members of Congress with written matter on pending legislative action. Synar even cited the pertinent section of the U.S. Criminal Code. Synfuels officials said "The Plan" was written by the staff but never implemented.

WATCH ON WASTE: The Alaska regional office of the Fish and Wildlife Service plans to buy a Cessna seaplane for use in the 8 million-acre Yukon Flats National Wildlife Refuge, figuring it will be cheaper than hiring the air taxi services of Donald Ross, a former wildlife service pilot. Ross vehemently disagrees. The Cessna 185 base price is $120,000, plus $25,000 for skis or floats, plus up to $40,000 a year for a full-time pilot. Ross, who has been earning about $15,000 for four months' work, says bitterly, "That plane is going to cost the service more than 10 times what they pay me."

MINI-EDITORIAL: Health and Human Services Secretary Margaret Heckler got a sour taste of male chauvinism recently in a Cabinet meeting. When she tried to bring up the plight of middle-aged widows and divorcees re-entering the labor market, her male colleagues laughed. We weren't aware that the problems of any disadvantaged group are a laughing matter. To his credit, President Reagan didn't join the boys in the guffaws.

FLORA LEWIS

Passing up Gorbachev dealing a mistake

WEST BERLIN — It is a wasteful exercise to speculate whether the Soviet leader, Mikhail Gorbachev, is ready to make real concessions to get an arms agreement that would include a ban on development and testing of "Star Wars" but not on research, or whether he is just cleverly harvesting a propaganda windfall. The tea leaves won't tell.

Flora Lewis

But there is an easy, straightforward test. It is to take him up on his hints. The United States can lose nothing by saying that it is prepared to make an adequate trade-off. Then if the Russians don't deliver in detailed negotiations, the United States need not either.

Incredible as it seems, there is still no White House decision on this crucial policy issue. In less than a fortnight the Soviet foreign minister, Eduard Shevardnadze, will be in New York and Washington, the important last plateau on the climb to the November Reagan-Gorbachev summit. The third round in the Soviet-American arms talks in Geneva opens next week.

But the Washington battle for the president's ear is still raging. Only last week Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger declared publicly that Star Wars is "not any kind of bargaining chip or negotiating chip," which clearly means no search for a deal.

Secretary of State George Shultz and his senior arms control adviser, Paul Nitze, are known to favor a trade if Moscow will make it good enough. There is no sign of Reagan's decision, although he has already publicly committed the United States not to go beyond research without negotiating.

There is very little time left, and no real preparation, for probing Gorbachev's intentions. It is evident that he feels under considerable pressure to make some vital decisions of his own before his Communist Party's Congress next February.

He is making long-range plans for the Soviet economy. If he concludes in the next few weeks that there is no prospect of an agreement with the United States with mutual concessions, he may commit his regime to a course that will not provide another opportunity for a decade.

That would mean renewed deterioration of Soviet-American relations well beyond Reagan's presidency, with no way of ever knowing for sure whether a real chance of improvement was recklessly ignored.

Europeans and others at a conference of the International Institute of Strategic Studies here make clear that America's alliances around the world would suffer. Gorbachev could be expected to exploit such a situation shrewdly. He has the time and the means. There are already signs that he considers openings to Western Europe and Japan, perhaps with dramatic concessions such as return of the four disputed Kuril Islands, as an eventual alternative if he has no "American option."

The extraordinary thing about the argument in Washington is that it hasn't even begun to address the questions of what terms the United States should consider a good, worthwhile bargain. It is still essentially about whether there is any point in probing for Gorbachev's minimum conditions.

That is the context in which to read the report about complaints from the United States negotiating team in Geneva that the Russians have been enabled to appear more flexible than the Americans at the arms talks. The administration contends that American negotiators have plenty of flexibility, but that the Russians have made no formal proposals to test them.

In fact, the American team has been instructed only to advocate and explain Reagan's missile defense program, not to explore what Moscow really seeks and will give in return. And it has been told to insist that the Soviet Union put its cards on the table first, without any hints of Washington's likely response.

That is not a way to find out if Gorbachev means business, nor to seek to influence the major long-range decisions that he will soon be making. And no decision from Reagan on United States policy will amount soon to a negative decision. So much is at stake if the chance to test the Soviet leader is thrown away. If it is seized, the only risk would be to discover that Moscow has something serious and useful to offer.

ART BUCHWALD

Suffering through crises in Paris is a lot safer

EDITOR'S NOTE: While Art Buchwald is on vacation we reprint some columns from the past.

Living in Washington during a time of crisis can be a very nerve-racking experience. Having gone through two dozen crises while living in Paris, I think I'm in a good position to compare the differences between the two.

Art Buchwald

For one thing, in Paris you rarely meet the people involved in a crisis. Occasionally you run into a French spokesman at a bistro, but for the most part the people working on a French crisis are complete strangers and unavailable to the foreign press. Therefore, since the crisis is being handled by people you don't know, you have the feeling the situation is well in hand.

But in Washington it's entirely different. Your next-door neighbor may be the person involved with the crisis, and you not only know him, but you know his kids.

The guy who is out there on Sunday painting his fence, or raking his leaves, is the same guy who is in charge of working out the master plan for the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The fellows you play poker with are in charge of decisions that could affect everybody. And it doesn't make you feel any better if you bluff one of them out of a hand.

In Washington your dinner partner could be the wife of an important official, and it scares you to wonder how much influence she has on her husband's decisions. And it isn't beyond belief that a congressman or senator in charge of world-shaking events could pinch your wife under the table. While this is human, it also scares the devil out of you.

In Paris there are no secrets when it comes to a crisis. As a matter of fact, there are so many crises going on that half the time you would never know you were in one.

But in Washington crises are built up slowly and dramatically. First, I know something is going on. I don't know what it is and my next-door neighbor has been sworn not to tell me. But I know he knows, and that's pretty spooky right there. Then I hear that something important is going to be done about something I don't know is happening. Key figures in government don't show up for dinner. Other key figures do show up for dinner. This is to confuse everyone. The Secretary of State catches a cold, the Vice President catches a cold, the entire Cabinet is sneezing. It's safe to say when the President catches a cold, Central America gets pneumonia. But that's all I know.

A newspaper friend calls up and says, "What do you know?"

You reply, "What do you know?"

He says, "I know it's big."

You say, "I hear it's tremendous."

"Who did you hear it from?" he wants to know.

"I can't tell you."

"That's the same guy I heard it from," he says. "I just wanted confirmation."

By this time your nerves are worn to a frazzle. Your wife wants to know if she can have new closets built. You tell her to wait until the President speaks. Finally the President speaks and you tell her she can't have her new closets. Then you have a crisis at home.

The main difference between a crisis in Paris and a crisis in Washington is that if you're an American in Paris and the crisis is serious, you know that the American government will evacuate you. But if you're an American stationed in Washington and the crisis takes a turn for the worse, you can be sure that nobody cares what the hell happens to you.

NATION IN BRIEF

Poison lab linked to Rajneeshee dissident

RAJNEESHPURAM, Ore. (AP) — Murder manuals and a laboratory where mice were poisoned have been found in the home of Bhagwan Shree Rajneesh's secretary, who led a "gang of fascists" fleeing the guru's commune, Rajneeshees say.

The discoveries, including a tunnel concealed by false shelves in a hidden room of Ma Anand Sheela's home, came Tuesday as authorities began investigating Rajneesh's allegations that his top aides tried to murder his close associates, poisoned restaurant food and burned a government office.

Sheela, an Indian citizen who was living in the United States as a resident alien, flew Saturday to Zurich, Switzerland, said Carl Houseman, Immigration and Naturalization Service district director.

Rajneeshees say a dozen sect leaders who fled, including the mayor and three council members, followed her to Europe.

Reading progress stalls

WASHINGTON (AP) — American school children at ages 9, 13 and 17 are all reading better than they were in 1971, but the progress in the elementary grades appears to have stalled, a government-funded testing agency reported today.

The National Assessment of Educational Progress also said that despite sizable gains for minority students, they still lag far behind the white majority, with the average 17-year-old black or Hispanic student reading only slightly better than the average white 13-year-old.

Six percent of 9-year-olds in 1984 — representing some 184,000 pupils — "could not do rudimentary reading exercises and are in danger of future school failure." Forty percent of 13-year-olds and 16 percent of 17-year-olds in high have not acquired intermediate reading proficiency. Only 5 percent of the 17-year-olds had advanced reading skills.

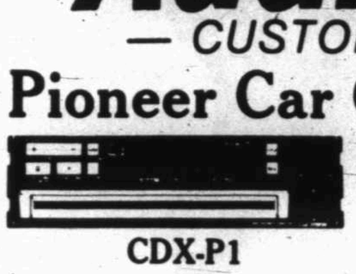

TV may watch Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — Baseball players have it. President Reagan has it. Even the House of Representatives has it. So why can't one of the world's most exclusive clubs, the U.S. Senate, have television coverage of its work?

For more than a decade, Senate leaders have answered that question by saying the lure of TV cameras in their lofty chamber would lengthen debate, induce members to ham it up for the folks back home, and sometimes provide ammunition for political foes.

But that argument may crumble this year as more and more senators realize they could become media unknowns at a time when polls show 72 percent of Americans rely on television for news and House members are cable TV stars.

"I have said often before that the Senate is fast becoming the invisible half of Congress and that we cannot hold our own with the White House and the House of Representatives when it comes to news coverage," Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd told a Senate panel Tuesday.

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders may opt to stay indoors tonight as thunderstorms could return to the area, bringing with them strong winds, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Mostly cloudy skies and a 30 percent chance of thunderstorms are expected tonight with some locally heavy rain possible, according to forecasters. Strong southeasterly winds will blow at five to 25 mph, cooling temperatures to a low near 70.

The National Weather Service expects the possiblity of thunderstorms to decrease to a 20 percent chance Thursday as mostly cloudy skies continue. The high will be in the mid-80s as winds increase from the south at 20 to 30 mph by mid-day.

Tuesday's high of 89 was nine degrees below the record set in 1977. This morning's low was 22 degrees above the 1971 record of 47.

STATE

Summertime heat and humidity returned to Texas Wednesday as a moist breeze drove Gulf air across the state, the National Weather Service said.

Low clouds developed along the coastal bend and pushed northward into south Central Texas Wednesday morning while skies were fair from the Edwards Plateau and the Hill Country to the Red River.

The weather service said that high clouds spread through West Texas while isolated thunderstorms dotted the upper coast, the middle Rio Grande plains and the valleys of the Trans-Pecos.

The heaviest thunderstorms were south of Port Arthur and between 40 and 90 miles southeast of Galveston, the weather service said. Other heavy thunderstorms were about halfway between Marfa and Presidio while storms of lesser intensity were isolated from near Fredericksburg through the San Antonio area to Alice.

NATION

Thunderstorms rumbled across southern and eastern Florida today, flooding parts of the state, and snow warnings were in effect in three western states.

Heavy thunderstorms left as much as three feet of water in sections of Key West, the National Weather Service said. Flooding also was reported at St. Petersburg and Siesta Key.

Elsewhere, thunderstorms were scattered across southern Arizona and showers extended from western Montana across eastern Utah into northern Nevada.

A winter storm warning was in effect for heavy snow in mountains and passes of western Montana.

Bulldogs drop volleyball opener

By BOB BRUNDAGE

When the Midland High Bulldogs have trouble passing the ball around, things can get pretty rough. That was one of their problems Tuesday night as they lost the District 4-5A volleyball season opener to the Big Spring Steers at MHS Gym, 2-15, 15-11, 15-7.

"When we don't pass effectively, our offense doesn't work very well," said MHS coach Sonja Pittman. "Any time you let a good team like Big Spring jump out to an 8-0 lead, it makes it a lot tougher. In the first and third game, we couldn't pass the ball."

In the second game of the match, the score was tied a 7-7 when the Bulldogs started hitting their passes and playing inspired ball on offense as well as defense. The 'Dogs quickly opened an 11-7 margin and never let the Steers get closer than four points the rest of the way.

In the third and final game, Big Spring scored eight points from five different servers while the defense kept Midland High off track. The Bullodgs eventually slowed down the Steers' attack and countered with a small run of their own, but it wasn't enough to offset the Big Spring start. MHS only managed to pull withing six points twice but were usually seven or more down.

Pittman credited Big Spring setter Tabitha Green with causing a lot of the Bulldog troubles.

"They have a very smart setter," said Pittman. "They run a 5-1 system and she is in the front row and that allows for her to set or hit and she used that system very effectively against our defense. It's like on off-speed shot which she sends on the second hit and it was keeping our defense off stride. Most teams are used to one-two-three and over but she was sending it on the first and second hits, keeping us off balance."

Pittman expects the Steers to be one of the two teams in the district to gain a playoff berth this year. "Big Spring is definitely one of the strongest contenders in the district, which we knew going into the match."

Big Spring coach Susan Sharp also sees her Steers going into the playoffs this year but also added, "Midland High will be there too, I really think so."

Even despite the fact the Bulldogs lack the power hitting that seemed to characterize the Steers' attack?

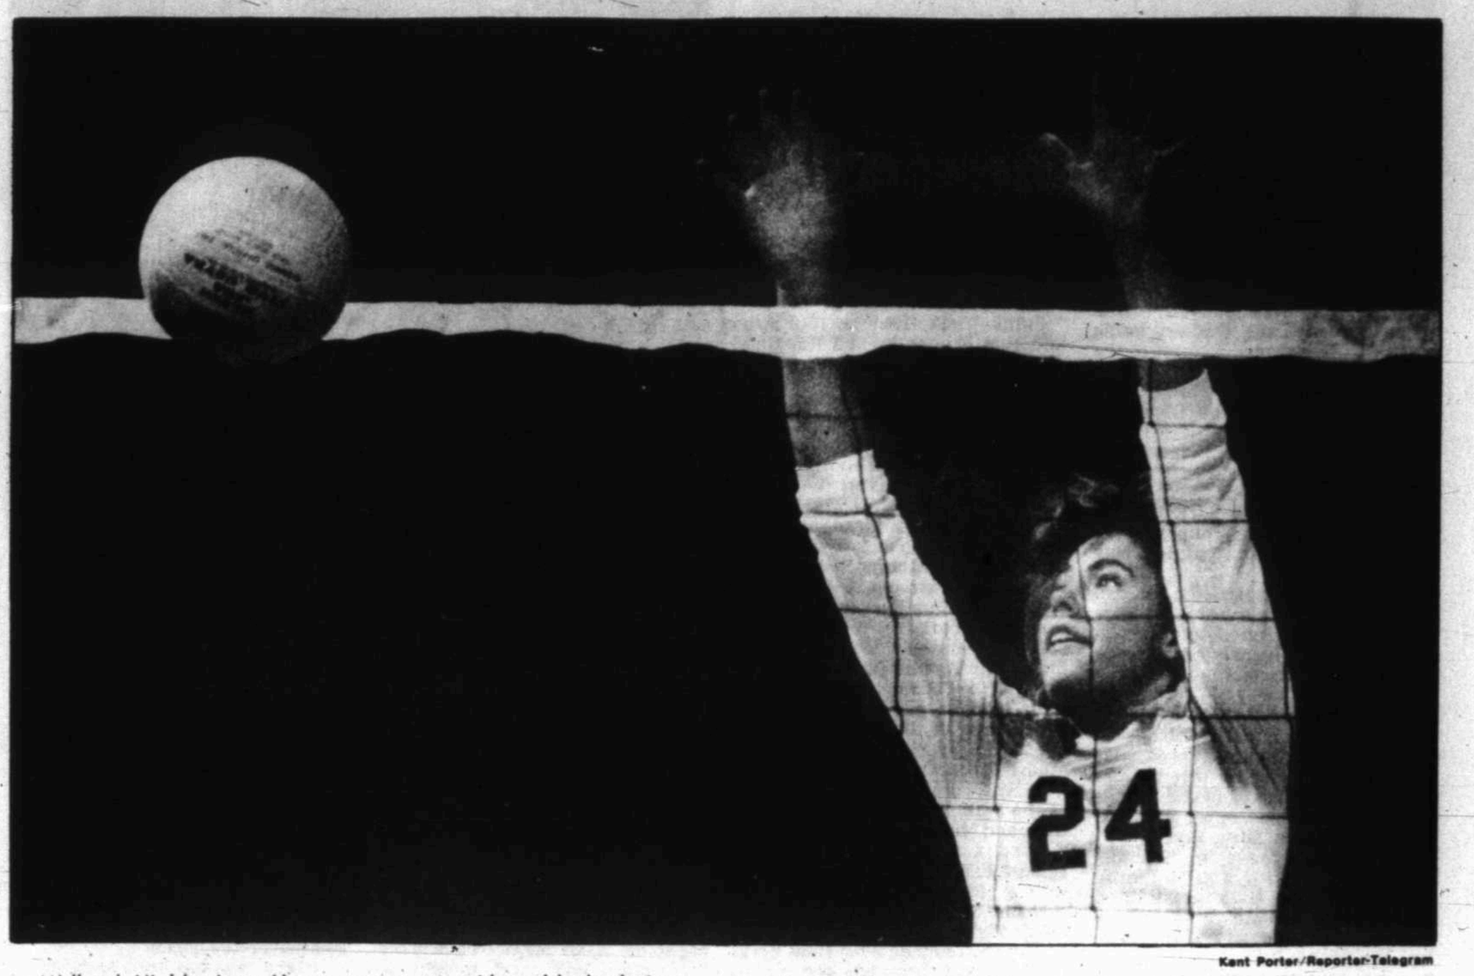

"Even so," replied Sharp. "They've got enough guts and that's what it takes."

With the victory, Big Spring improves its overall record to 14-6, 1-0 in district. The Bulldogs are still looking to reach .500, falling to 6-9 on the year.

IN ANOTHER district opener Tuesday, state semifinalist San Angelo roasted Midland Lee 15-3, 15-6.

The Bobcats are off to a slow start overall this year compared to last season when they didn't lose a game until the first round of the semifinals in Austin. With the win over Lee, San Angelo is now 12-5. The Rebels, also down compared 1984 when they were in contention for a playoff berth until late in the district season, are 5-11.

Abilene High got off to a fast start with a 16-14, 15-10 win over Odessa Permian in another league game. The result of the Abilene Cooper-Odessa High contest was not available.

Kent Porter/Reporter-Telegram

Midland High's Amy Hayes comes up with a block during District 4-5A volleyball opener Tuesday at the Midland High gym. The Bulldogs dropped their first district encounter to Big Spring in three sets.

Professional golf back to Midland

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Golf's Touring Pros come to Green Tree Country Club Monday for what is becoming an annual treat for Midlanders and GTCC pro Larry Bishop says lining up a field gets easier each year.

"We had the basic 26 golfers for the tournament 90 days ago," informs Bishop. "In fact, word has gotten around how much every one enjoys the tournament and this year it was a case of the golfers contacting us."

Bishop notes that although 30 pros have signed up, "as in all of these one-day tournaments there will be some no-shows and some who show up unannounced." But in the end, it pretty much balances out.

"The TPA also feels it is good for golf to have its members play in benefit tournaments between tour stops, so they are very receptive," Bishop points out. "Besides, there is $50,000 in prize money to be divided and each pro is guaranteed $1,500 for playing."

This year's Charity Pro-Am will be for the benefit of the High Sky Children's Ranch, a liason GTCC would like to make a regular thing.

The one-day tournament will come between the Southwest Classic (formerly LaJet) at Abilene's Fairway Oaks this week and next week's Texas Open in San Antonio.

The golfers begin teeing off at 8 a.m. or so and finish teeing off around 1 p.m. so it will be an 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. treat for the Tall City golf aficiondo.

A couple of former Midlanders and one current "Midlander" are scheduled for the tournament. John Adams and Bobby Nichols both got their pro starts out of Midland and Tom Kite currently represents GTCC on the tour.

"Tom is dedicated to the pro-am," says Bishop, "and Adams (whose father Bennie was pro at McCamey and later assistant pro at Hogan) has been a big help in promoting this tournament among the pros."

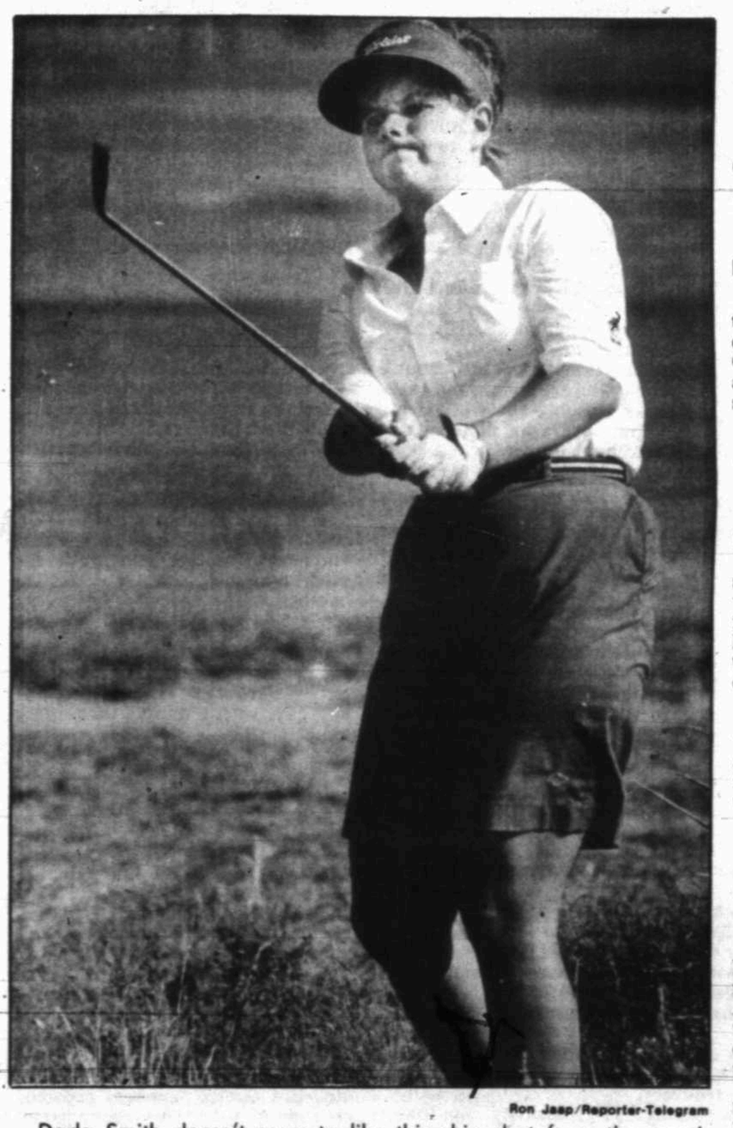

Also here will, be Doug Tewell, who set the PGA 18-hole round record at Cherry Hills, Colo., in August.

Tewell was just a few strokes away from quitting the pro tour after the Bay Ridge Classic in March of 1978. After earning $33,162 on the tour in 1977, he slipped to $16,629 and in early 1979, things weren't getting any better.

A friend encouraged him to "work as hard as you can the rest of the year and then see what happens."

What happened was that he won $84,500 in 43 tournaments. The year before his paltry winnings were accumulated in 113.

Britton clears first City hurdle

From Staff Reports

Defending champion Susan Britton cleared the first hurdle in her quest for a 14th Midland Women's City Tournament golf title Tuesday and is trying to increase her winning streak to 12.

In the match-play format, Britton defeated Marion Spears 5-4 to move into the semifinal round of the tournament where she will meet Mary Robinson, a 4-3 winner over DeDe Plank.

In the other half of the championship flight bracket, Ann Coombes, who was a golfer for and graduated from New Mexico State University last year, had the toughest match of the first round, edging Darla Smith on the 18th hole of play.

Coombes will face Jo Dickson, a 7-6 winner over Margaret Vann, today and the winner will advance into the final against the winner of the Britton-Robinson match.

In Monday's qualifying round, Ann Coombes and Jo Dickson finished one-two with Coombes firing a 78, three strokes better than Dickson. Britton, as the tournament defending champ, didn't need to qualify.

Coombes was also the winner of the long drive contest while Joyce Cramer won the chipping contest and Jo Ladaga low putts.

Jays, Royals win toss

NEW YORK (AP) — The Toronto Blue Jays and Kansas City Royals, respective current leaders of the American League East and West divisions, Tuesday won coin tosses to determine home sites for possible division tie playoffs.

American League President Bobby Brown first flipped a coin for the Eastern Division. Pat Gillick, the Blue Jays' executive vice president, called "heads" and won the home-park advantage in a possible playoff with the New York Yankees. The Yankees were represented by Woody Woodward, vice president of baseball administration.

A similar ceremony was conducted by conference phone calls with the Royals and California Angels, running one-two in the AL West. The Royals were represented by General Manager John Schuerholz while GM Mike Port represented the Angels.

MHS' Marcum tattles on self

Midland High quarterback Matt Marcum could have come out of last Friday's 19-13 victory over Andrews as an untainted hero. Instead, he choose to tell the truth, giving all of West Texas the "real" story.

The victory stands, but maybe there should be some kind of asterik beside this one in the win column. The "Wrong Formation Victory" is history, but no one really had to know.

Marcum could have played the role of hero to the hilt after passing for a 39-yard TD to Kenny DeLaGarza with 1:17 left in the game. Instead, he told the truth, which tells something special about this kid with an arm that is tearing up the passing lanes of Memorial Stadium.

ON FOURTH down and time running out on the Bulldogs in a 13-13 sisterly score with the Mustangs, Marcum pulled out the victory with the aid of DeLaGarza. But Marcum didn't seemed at all satisfied with the way it turned out in the post game lockerroom.

"You can't print what I was thinking at the time," noted Marcum. "I called the wrong formation in the huddle. I realized what I had done when we lined up and I looked over at Coach (Doug McCutchen) and he told me to go ahead and run the play. It worked out, but I made a bad mistake."

McCutchen was well aware of what was taking place on the field — "I had my heart in my throat when I saw the formation we were in, but we had to run the play. Tight end Bobby Williams was on the wrong side of the ball, but he saved the play because he recognized the situation and didn't go downfield. If he had, he would have been an ineligible receiver. DeLaGarza went ahead and ran his route and did a great job of getting in the end zone."

DeLaGarza didn't even know the Bulldogs were in a wrong formation. He just ran the route he was told and that's history, too.

Despite the way it was done, the "Wrong Formation" play worked like a charm. If Marcum hadn't said anything about it, this writer would have never noticed. Marcum may have been dressed down by McCutchen at some later date, but the world wouldn't have known.

Maybe this is why Marcum is leading District 4-5A passers with 423 yards in just two games. He's a bit of a perfectionist at heart. He wants to win, but he wants to win right.

FROM THE totals Marcum has posted in his first two 1985 performances, you wouldn't expect to see much improvement, but McCutchen says, "You're going to see a lot of improvement in Marcum as time goes along.

"For instance, Matt threw three interceptions in the first half against Andrews, and as a result, we don't score any points. I think it may be a matter of a lack of concentration. He didn't look for his secondary receivers well. He came back in the second half and did a better job of looking for the second recevier. He didn't have any interceptions and we scored 19 points. The game with Andrews was two totally different ball games."

Two things really impress you about the Midland High passing game. First, when Marcum has the ball on target — which has been often in the first two outings — the receivers catch the ball. Second, it's amazing that Marcum hasn't been sacked for a loss in either game.

You add up those factors and you have a passing attack. When MHS lost the likes of receivers Darrell Davis, Allan Foret and Darrin Thorpe for Marcum to throw to, you just knew the Bulldogs were going to have a rough time throwing the ball. However, DeLaGarza and Williams have caught 19 passes between them for 303 yards. DeLaGarza caught seven against Andrews for 115 yards, not to mention the "Wrong Formation" TD.

"DeLaGarza has been a big key in our passing game. He's made all the difference in the world. He's not big, but he's the type of kid who is tough as nails. He'll get right in your face and look at you in the eye," said McCutchen.

AND SINCE Marcum has not seen the sky from his backside, the MHS offensive line must be doing a good job. McCutchen agrees.

"In the second half against Andrews, anyone in the offensive line we called on did the job. We've got to have that and I've been pleased with the play there."

No coach likes the clock to countdown to 1:17 before you place a victory in your hip pocket. However, MHS could never seem to do that a year ago. It's a test of team character. The Bulldogs seem to be finding a way to win — and that's important at this stage of the season. It will help to kick the memory in gear when things are tight later in the season when the real games begin.

And as far as McCutchen is concerned, "I don't like to win that way, but it sure beats losing. I'd take one like that every week."

And so will we.

Yankees sliding out of AL race

Associated Press

Baseball Roundup

Five days ago, the New York Yankees had won 12 of 13 outings and were just 1½ games out of first place after falling as far as 9½ behind in early August. On Tuesday night, they continued to slide out of contention.

Darrell Evans hit two home runs and Kirk Gibson, Nelson Simmons and Lou Whitaker each hit one to support four-hit pitching by Dan Petry and Willie Hernandez as the Detroit Tigers defeated New York 9-1 and extended the Yankees' losing streak to five games, longest of the season.

Although first-place Toronto also lost, 6-5 to Boston, the Blue Jays maintained a five-game lead in the American League East.

The five home runs were the most ever allowed in a single game by Yankee starter Ron Guidry, 19-6. His previous high was four homers against the Minnesota Twins on May 28, 1982.

Petry, 15-11, who missed his two previous starts because of a sore right elbow, scattered four hits in seven innings. His only mistake was a homer to Don Mattingly leading off the fourth.

Gibson hit his 26th homer after two were out in the first for a 1-0 Tiger lead. Simmons followed later with his 10th, Whitaker with his 20th and Evans with his 32nd and 33rd — both deep into the upper deck.

Red Sox 6, Blue Jays 5

Tony Armas drove in three unearned runs with a fifth-inning homer that broke a 3-3 tie and lifted Boston over Toronto.

Trailing 3-2, Boston tied the score on a single by Rich Gedman and a two-out error by first baseman Cliff Johnson set up Armas' three-run homer off Dave Stieb, 13-11.

Dennis "Oil Can" Boyd went 7 1-3 innings and raised his record to 14-11.

Mariners 7, Royals 0

Phil Bradley drove in four runs with his 20th homer and a single and Matt Young pitched a seven-hitter as Seattle beat Kansas City.

The Royals, who maintained a two-game lead over California, dropped their second straight game at home after winning five of seven on their Western road trip.

White Sox 5, Angels 2

Harold Baines' three-run homer and RBI single supported Britt Burns' 18th victory and led Chicago over California.

Baines drove in the first Chicago run in the first and hit his 19th homer in the bottom of the seventh. Burns, 18-8, combined with Bob James to hold California to nine hits, including Brian Downing's 19th homer.

Orioles 6, Brewers 0

Gary Roenicke's two-run homer highlighted a five-run rally that broke open a 1-0 game in the eighth inning and Ken Dixon pitched a four-hitter for Baltimore against Milwaukee.

Dixon, 8-3, walked two, struck out four and retired 19 batters in a row for his first major-league shutout.

Indians 15, A's 8

Former Midland Cub Joe Carter drove in three runs with a pair of home runs and Andre Thornton drove in five runs with two doubles and a single as Cleveland outslugged Oakland.

Thornton has driven in 55 runs in his last 62 starts while Carter has five home runs in his last nine games.

Twins 7, Rangers 2

Frank Viola threw a four-hitter and Tom Brunansky and Roy Smalley drove in two runs each as Minnesota defeated Texas.

Viola, 15-14, registered his sixth complete game, while Brunansky hit his 26th homer in the third and doubled in a run in the sixth. Smalley doubled in two runs in the fifth.

Cardinals 10, Pirates 4

Ozzie Smith hit a three-run homer and Cesar Cedeno and Willie McGee added two-run shots as St. Louis beat Pittsburgh to stretch its lead in the National League East to two games over New York.

Joaquin Andujar, 21-9, scattered 10 hits to win for the first time in five starts as the Cardinals captured their sixth straight game. Smith hit his fifth homer of the season, and only the 12th of his career, in the second inning off starter Bob Kipper, 0-1.

Cedeno connected for his eighth of the season against Kipper in the fifth, and McGee's 10th of the season capped a four-run sixth inning against Larry McWilliams.

Phillies 5, Mets 1

Shane Rawley pitched a five-hitter, and Glenn Wilson and Ozzie Virgil led Philadelphia over New York.

Wilson had three hits and scored twice, and Virgil drove in three runs, two with his 19th homer of the season. Rawley, 12-7, is now 6-1 since the All-Star break.

Cubs 3, Expos 0

Dennis Eckersley and Lee Smith combined for a four-hitter and Jody Davis hit a three-run homer as Chicago Cubs snapped a five-game losing streak by beating Montreal.

Eckersley, 9-6, was working on a no-hitter until Razor Shines, pinch-hitting for Expos starter Floyd Youmans, singled in the sixth inning for Montreal's first hit. Smith relieved in the eighth to record his 29th save.

Reds 6, Giants 1

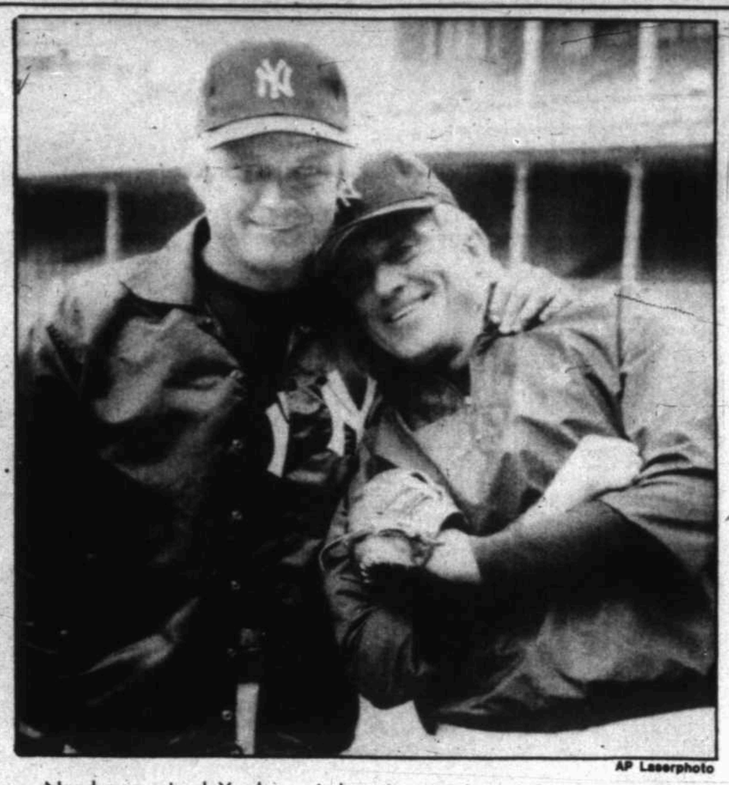

Andy McGaffigan tossed a seven-hitter and Bo Diaz drove in a pair of runs to lead Cincinnati over San Francisco and a sweep their nine-game season series at Riverfront Stadium.

The Reds have won their last 13 games at Riverfront against the Giants over the past two seasons. The Reds hadn't swept a nine-game home series since blanking the New York Mets at Crosley Field in 1963.

Astros 10, Braves 6

Glenn Davis drove in three runs and Houston scored three times in each of three innings to beat Atlanta and record its seventh straight victory.

Davis doubled home a run in a three-run third inning, hit a solo homer in the fifth and was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded in Houston's three-run sixth to lead the Astros.

Newly acquired Yankee pitcher Joe Niekro, left, clowns around with brother Phil Niekro, who will be seeking his 300th victory tonight against the Detroit Tigers.

Niekro seeks 300th victory

DETROIT (AP) — Phil Niekro hopes his 300th major-league pitching victory will come tonight because his team badly needs a win and his friends need to get back home.

Niekro, the New York Yankees' 46-year-old knuckleballing wizard, was thwarted in his first try for No. 300 last Friday night by the Toronto Blue Jays. The Yankees haven't won since and enter tonight's game against the Detroit Tigers five games behind Toronto in the American League East with only 18 games to play.

"I THINK that if we can get this 300 thing out of the way, it should help some of our guys get back to thinking about the pennant," Niekro said. "Maybe this will give us a lift, I don't know."

A victory would also satisfy Niekro's conscience.

"The one thing I feel bad about is the people who are coming out to see me break this big record," Niekro said. "There are a lot of folks who have been buying plane tickets, train tickets and hotel rooms to see me do this thing.

"The longer it takes, the more expensive it's going to be for all those people who are following me around. I'd like to get it over with for them."

That Niekro is within reach of 300 at all in his 22nd major-league season is a tribute to what he terms a sensible lifestyle.

"I try to take good care of myself," Niekro said. "I know what I have to do. I'm pretty selective about what I do and don't do. I think that's helped some over the years."

Niekro, who has been hounded by reporters and photographers since his 299th win, has remained calm — not always the easiest thing to do in New York.

"I'm known for that," Niekro said as he dressed Tuesday before a photo session with his younger brother, Joe, a 15-year veteran who was obtained by the Yankees from the Houston Astros on Sunday

"I don't get flustered very easily," the elder Niekro said. "I seldom get upset or anything like that.

"If I lose, I don't let it eat at me forever. It's not the end of the world or anything like that. The sun will still come up tomorrow and life will go on."

IF NIEKRO succeeds against the Tigers, he will become the second pitcher this year to join the exclusive 300 club. Tom Seaver, the veteran Chicago White Sox right-hander, joined the select circle last month. It would mark the first time in 95 years that more than one pitcher passed 300 in the same season.

The big reason Niekro has been able to last this long is the knuckleball, a pitch that's easy on the arm and next to impossible to hit. Yet the pitch may be on its way out of baseball.

"Once I get out of the game, my brother Joe and Charlie Hough (of the Texas Rangers) are all that's left," Niekro said. "I haven't heard of any guys in the minors throwing a knuckleball."

Baseball drug trial near end

PITTSBURGH (AP) — After threatening to subpoena a number of well-known players, lawyers for a Philadelphia man accused of dealing drugs to major leaguers apparently will rest their case after calling only Pittsburgh Pirates Manager Chuck Tanner.

The only other baseball figure still likely to testify in the federal cocaine distribution trial of Curtis Strong, 39, is former Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, according to sources close to the case who requested anonymity.

Defense attorney Adam O. Renfroe Jr. apparently was to decide early today whether to call Kuhn, who would be asked whether he ever alerted the FBI or other law enforcement officials to baseball's apparently serious drug problem.

Kuhn also would be asked whether baseball officials, as Cincinnati Reds outfielder Dave Parker testified last week, once instructed team executives to caution their players to stay away from individuals suspected of being drug sources.

The federal drug distribution trial recessed early for the second straight day Tuesday after Renfroe decided not to call St. Louis Cardinals pitcher Joaquin Andujar.

Renfroe apparently decided after a luncheon meeting with the pitcher that Andujar's testimony would have been of little benefit — and possibly would be harmful — to the defense, according to the sources.

Andjuar, the National League's first back-to-back 20-game winner since 1980, has been identified in testimony by former Cardinals teammates Lonnie Smith and Keith Hernandez as a cocaine user. Andujar has not commented on the charges.

Renfroe also decided not to call former Pirate slugger Willie Stargell after his attorney said that Stargell, now the team's first base coach, would invoke Fifth Amendment rights against self-incrimination if subpoenaed, the sources said.

Unlike the seven current or former players who have testified that Strong supplied drugs to major league players, Stargell would not have testified under a grant of immunity.

Stargell has not been linked to Strong in any testimony and his only connection to the case came when former Pirates Dale Berra and Parker said he once distributed amphetamines in the team's clubhouse. Stargell denied the charges.

Stargell also denied that he was contacted about testifying. "I haven't talked to anybody," he said. But Stargell replied, "I don't know" when asked if his attorneys had spoken to Renfroe.

Tanner, the first witness called by the defense, rebutted Berra's testimony that the manager specifically instructed the former Pirates infielder not to talk to Strong in a Three Rivers Stadium runway just prior to a game.

Cocaine, alcohol cause Twins to release Howe

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Relief pitcher Steve Howe, released by the Minnesota Twins after admitting his drug problem was to blame for his weekend disappearance, has promised to seek rehabilitation for both cocaine and alcohol-related problems, according to a published report.

The Minneapolis Star and Tribune reported today that Howe has an alcohol problem in addition to his admitted problem with cocaine. Earlier, the Twins had said there was no indication Howe had a problem with alcohol.

"I think everyone that participated in the decision-making process came to the same conclusions," Andy MacPhail, Twins director of player personnel, said Tuesday after a meeting with Howe and other club officials.

"Steve realized that this is what he needed to do ... We recognized the risks when we got involved in this. We knew that what's happened was a possibility. We hoped that the different environment would be helpful."

Howe, the 1980 National League Rookie of the Year with the Los Angeles Dodgers, was suspended for the 1984 season by then-Commissioner Bowie Kuhn for violating baseball's drug policies. He was released by the Dodgers on July 3 after failing to report for a game, the fifth such absence by Howe since 1983.

The Twins signed him Aug. 11, and Howe said then that Minnesota's relatively laid-back atmosphere would speed his recovery.

"I should be mad at him because he fit so heavily into my plans and I thought physically he was getting back to where he should be," Twins Manager Ray Miller told the Star and Tribune on Tuesday. "There was nothing I could do about it.

"There shouldn't be any sorrow from the general public because the guy had all the chances, had the world by his finger. But if you know the kid, it's different. I feel sadness."

Howe was unavailable for comment. Tom Mee, the Twins' publicity director, said Howe requested that the Twins not release his unlisted telephone number.

Howe disappeared last Thursday after an appearance on ABC-TV's "Nightline" show to talk about drug problems in sports. He asked team officials for permission to report late for Friday's doubleheader against the Indians due to an illness in his wife's family. But family members reported that Howe never showed up, and he missed games on Saturday and Sunday before returning to Minnesota on Monday.

Twins President Howard Fox said Howe's request for release came after a 90-minute meeting with Dr. George Mann, the director of the Twins' employee assistance program.

Finally, a Monday to look forward to.

Walking through world of Midland sports

Tyrone Thurman caught the winning touchdown for Texas Tech at Tulsa last week, but did you notice that another Midland Lee ex, Isaac Garnett, rushed for 62 yards and made the big first down that kept the final Raider drive alive...

Midland Angels outfielder Phil Stephenson, son of the Wichita State University baseball coach, needed three hits in the Midland Angels' final Texas League game to finish the season with a .300 average. Instead he got just two.

Phil, who belongs to the Oakland A's and started the season in the AAA Pacific Coast League before being shipped to Midland to log some playing time. He'd like to see the California Angels make a deal for him...

Former Midland Cub Shawon Dunston, now with the Chicago Cubs, is the '10' by which Midland Manager Joe Maddon judges all arms. "It's a gun. I never saw anything like it."

Joe isn't the only one, one baseball talent appraiser said he knows why Dunston was the No. 1 draft choice over Dwight Gooden in 1982..."He's got a stronger arm."

Shawon is the Dwight Gooden of shortstops...

If David Letterman ever lamps Houston Astros relief pitcher Charlie Kerfeld, he'll forget all about Atlanta's portly Terry Foster...

Former Midland College All-America Puntus Wilson is dickering with the Toronto club in the CBA while Chester Smith could wind up with a CBA team in Wisconsin, where he starred in college his last two years. Another member of that 1982 Midland College NJCAA championship team, Charles Johnson, also a juco All-American at MC, could wind up playing ball in England...

Wally Kleine, who is beginning his junior year at Notre Dame, did his summer weight work at the Midlander and Flex Athletic Center in shaping up for the current season....

Kevin Brooks may have been the Dallas Cowboys No. 1 draft pick, but linebacker Jesse Penn, out of Virginia Tech, may be the pick of the litter before the season is over...

With the Chicago Cubs' starting rotation in sick bay for most of the year, it emphasizes that the Cubs haven't developed a pitcher in their farm system since Dallas Green's arrival. Lee Smith is from the Bob Kennedy, or earlier era, and you've got to go back to the Mike Roarke and Fred Martin days before Lee to find a pitcher from the system in the majors....

While most people naturally rave over the 95-plus mph fast ball of Dwight Gooden, it's the curve ball that impresses Joe Dumars. Dumars, the first round NBA draft pick who was recently in Midland for a benefit basketball game, got a chance to watch Gooden at Shea Stadium when he was in New York to play basketball this summer. As an ex-catcher of promise, Dumars was impressed by the scope of its break and "as if that isn't enough, it dips out of sight." Dumars predicts the $330,000 salary this year will be more like $2 million next year...

Basketball may be Dumars' sport, but get him talking baseball and it's not hard to figure what he'd rather be playing....

Former Midlander Price Courter reportedly will be coming back to Midland as golf pro, succeeding the retiring Rex Worrell. A one-time assistant at Ranchland Hills, Courter has been head pro at Snyder for the last few years...

You know that sign over in Stanton, "2,500 friendly people and a few old soreheads." I thought I'd found out why...those par threes at the Stanton golf course. That 290-yard third hole with man-made water on both sides creating a narrow entrance to the tilted green is the toughest in West Texas. Impossible to par...then someone informed that it should be tough to par, "after all it's a par four."

AP honors Hogs' Miller for defense

LITTLE ROCK, Arkansas (AP) — At the Universtity of Arkansas, defensive coordinator Fred Goldsmith hands out champion awards after each game.

"They mean, 'If everybody played like you, we'd win the game,'" Goldsmith said.

This week, one of the five went to linebacker Nick Miller. He was in on 11 tackles, including seven unassisted, as the 14th-ranked Razorbacks opened the season with a 24-19 victory over Mississippi in Jackson.

"He played one of his great games," Goldsmith said. "He was in on an awful lot of tackles. On a few, he had to make a heckuva effort jumping over people."

FOR HIS performance, Miller was named The Southwest Conference's Defensive Player of the Week by The Associated Press. Texas Christian quarterback Scott Ankrom was named Offensive Player of the Week after he accounted for three touchdowns in a 30-13 victory over Tulane.

Miller, a fifth-year senior, was in on the biggest play of the Mississippi game. Arkansas went in front 17-12 in the fourth quarter, but with less than five minutes remaining, the Rebels had fourth-and-one on the Arkansas 22. The ball went to tailback Nathan Wonsley.

"The old 'iso,'" Goldsmith said. "Their linemen were supposed to clear things out so the two lead backs could get on the linebackers.

"The tackle, David Schell stunted inside, beat a block and came up underneath the play and grabbed the back by the foot. Ravin (Caldwell) stunted inside and stacked things up underneath the tackle. He tried to jump over. When that happened, Nick him first and then Rickey (Williams).

"That's the big challenge, fourth and one, when everything is on the line."

Because of Williams and Erik Whitted, Miller and running mate David Bazzel can rest.

PRO-AM

In 1980, his earnings soared to $161,684 in only 17 tournaments while he has been over $100,000 the last two years.

In 1980, the Baton Rouge, La., native beat Jerry Pate in a playoff at Sea Pines Heritage at Harbour Town and the next week at the IVB Philadelphia Classic, stormed from 10 strokes back after two rounds to nip Kite at the wire.

Tewell's development as a golfer began in Stillwater, Okla., as a 12-year-old under the tutelage of Labron Harris, Sr. He attended Oklahoma State and graduated in 1971.

"I was steady all through school, but I didn't think I was good enough to play on the Tour, so I chose to become a club professional."

He didn't give the tour a try until 1975 when he won $1,812 in 201 tournaments, but ballooned in 1976 to $3,640 in 185 events....and, to be truthful, the Tour still looked like a mistake.

Gallery tickets will be available Sept. 3 to the general public and financial institutions throughout the Permian Basin and will be sold by High Sky Children's Ranch volunteers.

Sherrill asks SWC to investigate television report

DALLAS (AP) — Monthly checks of $300 apparently were issued throughout 1984 to Texas A&M sophomore quarterback Kevin Murray from a company account connected to an A&M alumnus, a Dallas television station has reported.

WFAA-TV also reported Tuesday night that there are questions about where the 6-2, 196-pound Murray got a white 1984 Datsun 600 ZX sports car that he reportedly received during the Christmas holidays after the 1983 season.

A&M head football coach Jackie Sherrill said late Tuesday, in a one-paragraph release issued by sports information director Tom Turbiville, that he has asked the Texas A&M faculty representative, A&M attorneys, and Southwest Conference commissioner Fred Jacoby to investigate the WFAA report.

"I have no further comment at this time," Sherrill said in the statement.

WFAA-TV identified the alumnus as Rod Dockery of Dallas. WFAA said Dockery refused to comment. Dockery has an unlisted telephone number, and the AP was unable to reach him Tuesday night.

Murray was freshman of the year and SWC total offense leader in 1983 with 164.3 yards per game. He suffered a broken ankle in the third game of the 1984 season and sat out the rest of the year.

He was recruited out of North Dallas High School by Texas A&M, but opted to sign a professional baseball contract with the Milwaukee Brewers. After playing in the rookie league, however, he got out of the contract and reported to Texas A&M for the fall semester in 1983.

In an on-camera interview with a WFAA newsman on the Texas A&M campus in College Station, Murray said he had no knowledge of the checks, another one reportedly made out to his parents for "a substantially larger amount," or the sports car with its $749-a-month payments.

"Were you driving a 1984 white 300 ZX?" Murray was asked.

"No," he replied.

"You weren't?"

"No."

Asked by WFAA newsman Gerry Orr if he knew Dockery, Murray said, "I had the opportunity to meet him once. That was at a football game."

Orr said, "There are people at Pelco, Inc., a company in Dallas, who saw you take delivery of a 300 ZX in December of 1983."

"Pelco?"

"Yes," Orr said.

"Is that in Dallas?"

"Yes."

"I have no idea."

WFAA-TV said Pelco was one of several companies under Dockery's control and was apparently involved in the car leasing business in 1983 and 1984.

WFAA said Orr showed Murray a copy of a three-page lease agreement with Pelco, Inc., on the sports car and asked him if the "Kevin Murray" signature at the bottom of one page was his.

"No. It's not. Somebody must have forged it. I've never seen it. This is not my handwriting," Murray said.

WFAA reported that a former A&M football player said Murray returned after Christmas break in 1983 driving the car and that campus security police at A&M confirmed the car was registered on campus in 1984. Campus police said they could not release the name of the owner because of the privacy act, the station said.

Told that former employees of Pelco had told the station of seeing numerous $300 checks made out in his name, Murray said, "Oh, my God. Is that right? This is new to me. This is new to me."

WFAA said its reporter was ordered off the Texas A&M campus after interviewing the 21-year-old Murray.

Larry French, identified by WFAA as a former employee of Pelco, signed the lease for the company, the station said. When contacted by the station Tuesday for comment, French refused to talk about the lease, WFAA said.

Dockery's ex-wife is listed as president of Pelco, the station said.

Another former employee, Brenda Reeves, identified French's signature on the lease and said she once accompanied Dockery on a trip to College Station to watch Murray play football.

Jarry Hopkins, identified by WFAA as a former employee of Dockery's in the accounting department of Pelco, told the station in a filmed interview that she complained of missing a check but found it several weeks later in French's office. It was a check for $300 made out to Kevin Murray, she said.

When she started to log the check into her books, she said, French grabbed the check out of her hands and said, "Just forget it. You never saw this."

After that, she began missing other checks, about one a month, but that she was told each time not to worry about them, that they would turn up sooner or later.

Several months later, Ms. Hopkins told WFAA, French handed her a blank check with a note to make it out to Kevin Murray for $300. There was no explanation what the check was for, she said.

On one occasion, she saw a check made out to Murray's parents for a much larger amount, she said.

BOWLING BEAT

Pyle, Reed pace bowlers

Randy Isenberg

Don Pyle's 241 game and 650 series and Gaye Reed's 230 game and 596 series both rolled-at Fairmont Park Lanes, paced bowlers reporting scores this past week.

Also bowling well during the week were David Griffin with a 256 game and 631 series at Fairmont Park, and Stacy Welborn's 213 game and 591 series at Dellwood Lanes.

Betty Redding and Vic Houston rolled 257 games inleagues at Fairmont and Pennie Poole rolled a 238 game in a league at Dellwood.

This week's column deals with league rules and statistics from the ABC rule book and the ABC Yearbook.

ABC Rules: Fouls: The foul rule is in effect after every legal dilivery and until a player is in position to make a succeeding delivery, regardless of whether the ball is in the pit or returning to the ball rack, the ball is considered in play at this time.

Time limit on Postponements: A league adopts a rule stating postponements must be bowled within seven days. A match cannot be bowled until three weeks later. What does the league do? The match should be bowled three weeks later. Many leagues have adoptes such a rule, but ABC has consistently held it is impossible to enforce. Often it is difficuld to get the two teams together or obtain lanes.

In so far as position nights are concerned, if a postponed match is not bowled, pairings can be made simply by setting up position standings on a percentage basis. ABC rule 112 states that postponements require 48 hours notice except in cases where an emergency exists. The opposing team captain should be notified

The two teams' captains, or if the match is bowled unopposed the team making up, has seven days to decide when the match will be bowled. If the team captains, or captain, does not decide within seven days, the league secretary may select a date for the team or teams to make the game up. All games must be bowled within seven days from completion of the half or completion of the league schedule.

Statistics and Oddities: In 1976, Leon Kloeppner of Milford, Conn., rolled 16 consecutive Brooklyn (left side) strikes. Twelve of those strikes occurred in one game for the only recorded Brooklyn 300 game ever bowled.

Life deals Dickey strange twists

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

"Life's got some strange twists," says Jim Dickey, who should know.

From 1975-77, Dickey was defensive coordinator at North Carolina. He became head coach at Kansas State on Dec. 20, 1977, and was sitting in a motel room in Manhattan, Kan., where he heard that Bill Dooley had resigned at North Carolina.

"The athletic director called me and said, 'I wish you were still here,' " Dickey recalled. "I didn't have any idea Bill was going to leave. He had turned down the Miami (Fla.) job the year before. I think I would have had a chance (at the job), but three or four coaches on the staff thought they should have had it."

Instead, North Carolina went outside Dooley's staff and hired Dick Crum from Miami of Ohio. Dickey remained at Kansas State, a long-time loser, where he resigned under pressure Sunday after posting a 25-53-2 record, including shocking losses to Wichita State and Northern Iowa this season. But his 1982 team went 6-5-1, only K-State's second winning season in 28 years, and played in the Independence Bowl, the school's only postseason appearance.

Dickey inherited a scandal-ridden program which had gone winless in the Big Eight for three straight years. Before he conducted his first practice, the conference stripped K-State of 22 scholarships over a three-year period for violations by the previous staff.

Rice's 'Controlled Chaos' adds no-huddle approach

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice Coach Watson Brown is continuing to tinker with his Controlled Chaos offense and his latest addition is a no-huddle approach to play-calling.

Brown says it helps the Owls control the clock, keep the struggling defense off the field and permit the opposition less time to adjust.

The maneuver didn't help much in the season opening 48-20 loss to Miami, but Brown says the no-huddle offense will continue to be a part of the game plan.

"Why do you huddle anyway?" Brown asked. "The only reason is so the other team won't know what the play is. Somebody started doing it way back when and now everybody does it just because everybody does it.

"If you can get a good enough system, why not just call the plays out at the line of scrimmage?"

The Owls now huddle only when they first take the field and during timeouts.

Owl quarterback Mark Comalander gets the play from a coach and backup quarterback on the sidelines. He also has an audible system.

"It sounds complicated but it isn't," Brown said. "Our kids have been doing it since day one. They are used to it."

The no-huddle system limits opposing defenses, Comalander said. Miami did not substitute during any defensive series against the Owls.

"It allows you more time to look over the defense," Comalander said. "And it really doesn't make us ay more tired."

A major problem with the system is the possibility that the signals could be picked up.

Air Force assistant Coach Rich Brown scouted the game for Saturday's game.

He was denied a request to leave the press box and get closer to the field.

Rice officials feared he might pick up the vocal signals from the quarterback and then tie them to the hand singles from the sidelines.

Prayer tossed out for CU football

By KEVIN SIMPSON
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

BOULDER, Colo. — Switching to the wishbone was Bill McCartney's idea. After three years of futility and only seven victories, the University of Colorado football coach might have been expected to make a few changes.

Some other changes in the CU program were not McCartney's idea: No longer will he ask his players to bow their heads in silent prayer before the Buffaloes take the field; no longer will he ask players to say grace before team meals; no longer will he share his faith while speaking to civic groups in his capacity as coach.

Those changes, instituted under pressure from the American Civil Liberties Union, may be more subtle, but they are no less controversial. In the wake of negotiations initiated by the ACLU, CU has issued a five-point reaffirmation of basic rules separating religion from the athletic program. More specifically, the guidelines are designed to keep McCartney's personal faith — he has described himself as a "born-again Catholic" — from influencing his football policies.

ALTHOUGH PRAYER has long been a part of football at public and parochial universities, the joint policy reaffirmation by CU and the ACLU will curtail it on the Boulder campus.

"It's really no different than the way they're doing it in a hundred different universities across the country," said McCartney. "I guess my feeling is that what we've been doing is really totally within the framework of what would be expected. We're not really doing anything to be investigated for. From that standpoint I don't really see a need for all this. I don't see that it's that big a deal."

Some students and faculty disagreed. Complaints about the overlapping of football and religion followed closely a similar complaint from CU's department of pharmacology and controversy over a motion to make prayer mandatory at commencement exercises. Hence ACLU staff counselor David Miller was moved to call the university "a hotbed of potential constitutional litigation.

"It's amazing what a group of administrators and regents can do when set loose on the Constitution," Miller added. "The image of Boulder as an enlightened community certainly doesn't carry over to the university."

A story last December in the Boulder Camera by reporter Janet Wiscombe set forth McCartney's strong Christian beliefs and quoted some players who speculated that those beliefs might have a bearing on the way McCartney ran the team. Jill Hanauer, a 24-year-old political science major, subsequently fielded a handful of complaints from faculty and classmates expressing opposition to any organized religious practices at a state university.

When her negotiations with university officials stalled, Hanauer called in the ACLU, which negotiated the policy statement released after meetings with CU legal counsel Ted Ayres, Athletic Director Bill Marolt and McCartney.

"Basically," said McCartney, "I recognize in issues like this I have a responsibility not to impose my feelings on those around me. And I haven't really imposed my faith on anyone. I'm not interested in creating any cont oversy."

NEITHER IS Marolt, who declined to comment beyond the university's one-page policy statement. Attorney Judd Golden, who handled the negotiations for the ACLU, said McCartney cooperated fully, which made for an outwardly amicable and tidy resolution. At first, Golden said, both McCartney and Marolt dismissed the quoted player protests as coming from complainers, a contention that has found support among players who date the rumblings from a frustrating, season-ending loss to Kansas State last year. Consequently, the ACLU approached the negotiations by simply addressing those practices the coach acknowledged.

According to Golden, McCartney said he conducted prayers during coaches' meetings, asked the offensive and defensive captains to lead prayers before team meals, instituted pregame prayer and closed speeches to civic groups and clubs with devotional material.

"All those things come from the coach's mouth and are certainly First Amendment violations," said Golden. "That's not the way things should go in public institutions."

Part of the ACLU's concern stemmed from religious beliefs expressed by McCartney while speaking in public as a representative of the university. One player, senior receiver Loy Alexander, said he heard complaints from fellow students who had listened to McCartney speak in dorms, fraternity houses or even classes, expecting to hear about CU football.

"I think some students were disappointed they didn't hear about football, but about his religious beliefs," said Alexander. "I never attended any of those talks, but that's what I heard."

Although religion has knelt on football's periphery for years, only about 10 CU football players belong to the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, according to FCA regional field representative and former CU assistant coach Dan Stavely. Stavely, who worked under several head coaches between 1963 and 1982, said religion hasn't been a factor in McCartney's choice of assistants or in determing playing time.

"That's a bunch of hogwash," he said. "Mac is a good Christian, there's no question where his heart is."

CC Miller's Clay gains 319 yards

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ
AP Sports Writer

Corpus Christi Miller running back Dennis Clay had a short workweek in last week's 56-20 victory over Corpus Christi King.

Clay scored from short-range and long-range and averaged 19.9 yards on 16 carries gaining 319 yards and scoring five touchdowns over three quarters of playing time.

Clay, a 5-9, 170 senior, earns mention in The Associated Press Schoolboy Honor Roll for his performance, which included touchdown runs of six, 11, 14, 85 and 95 yards.

Clay had 210 yards rushing at the half but said he wasn't interested in any records. "I just wanted to win the game, 300 yards didn't even cross my mind," he said.

Miller Coach Lee Allen said Clay had sprinter speed and good strength.

"He can use his speed to get in the open but he's got a lot of power too," Allen said. "He broke a lot of tackles on some of his runs."

The unnoticed offensive lineman didn't get overlooked at Denison following another outstanding performance by offensive lineman Phillip Pryor, 6-4, 280.

"The man opposite of Phillip has not made a tackle this year in two games," Denison Coach Marty Criswell said. "There's not a better offensive lineman in the state of Texas."

Pryor graded a near-perfect 90 percent in last week's game and was a member of last season's state championship team.

Refugio's Russell Joshlin played a big role in his team's 35-0 shut out victory over Odem. Refugio held the Odem offense to 36 total yards. Joshlin contributed to 18 tackles and had one pass interception.

When Laredo United fell behind La Joya 12-0 going into the fourth quarter, Dan Leyendecker took matters into his own hands. He caught a 23-yard touchdown pass, ran for touchdowns of five and 10 yards and caught a two-point conversion to lead his team to a 22-12 victory.

Leyendecker, a tight end, caught eight passes for 136 yards, all in the fourth quarter, and lined up in the backfield for his touchdown runs.

In other outstanding performances:

-In Port Arthur Austin's 40-0 victory over Kountze, 5-2, 123-pound Brian Hall contributed to his team's first four touchdowns on four possessions. He had punt returns of 27 and 24 yards to set up touchdowns and caught touchdown passes of 16 and 34 yards from quarterback Kenny Ford on the next two series.

-Plainview sophomore Willie Ansley rushed 138 yards on eight carries, returned an interception 63 yards for a touchdown, returned two punts 67 yards, caught two passes for 49 yards and added seven tackles on defense in a 31-7 victory over Lubbock Monterey.

-Asherton flanker Sigifredo Sanchez had a varied scoring performance in a 46-6 victory over Bruni. He scored four touchdowns on a 54-yard punt return, 38-yard interception return, 58-yard catch and 18-yard run.

-McAllen Memorial's Ricky Cortez rushed 205 yards on 31 carries in a 21-10 victory over Weslaco.

-Senior tailback Homero Gutierrez rushed 218 yards on 21 carries and scored on a one yard run in Rio Grande City's 13-0 victory over Laredo Martin.

-Hamshire Fannett's Anthony James had a pair of long-range touchdown runs of 58 and 53 yards and 190 yards rushing on 21 carries in a 20-10 victory over Beaumont Kelly.

-West Orange Stark quarterback Roderick Robertson his nine of 11 passes for 175 yards and touchdown passes of 52 and 24 yards in a 40-0 victory over Houston Westbury.

-Wichita Falls quarterback Bill Mercer ran for three touchdowns and passed for another in a 33-6 victory over Abilene Cooper.

Student playbook snatcher asks for reward

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP) — A University of Michigan student who sought a $1,000 reward for returning a lost Wolverine football playbook could be charged with extortion, authorities say.

The woman, identified only as a student at the Ann Arbor school, has been questioned and released, but Michigan still could press charges in the case, Ann Arbor police Detective Larry Drew said.

Dollar rallies

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar rallied against major currencies today at the start of what dealers predicted would be an erratic trading day prior to the release of new figures on U.S. economic performance. Gold prices fell.

In Tokyo, where trading ends before Europe's business day begins, the dollar rose to 242.05 yen from Tuesday's 241.25. Later, in London, it was quoted at 242.08 yen.

Other dollar rates at mid-morning, compared with late Tuesday:

—2.9085 West German marks, up from 2.8735

—3.3903 Swiss francs, up from 2.3740

—8.8650 French francs, up from 8.7750

—3.2695 Dutch guilders, up from 3.2405

—1,949.00 Italian lire, up from 1,933.50

—1.37885 Canadian dollars, up from 1.37700

In London, the dollar rose against the British pound. It cost $1.3332 to buy one pound, cheaper than the $1.34225 price late Tuesday.

Gold markets reported busy trading as the metal fell.

It opened in London at a bid price of $315.80 a troy ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $317. At mid-morning the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $316.50.

In Zurich, the bid price was $315.40, down from $317.45 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell $3.40 to close at a bid $316.15.

In New York Tuesday, gold fell $2.80 to close at $316.60.

Craddick warns of danger if oil prices drop

By MELLA McEWEN
Business/Oil Writer

"If the price of oil drops, the state of Texas is in trouble," State Rep. Tom Craddick told a meeting of the Permian Basin Section of the Society of Petroleum Engineers of the AIME, Tuesday.

"The budget is balanced to the penny. There's no way we can cut it. If the price of oil drops," he predicted, "I think we'll be called back into special session to work on a tax program."

He said that if a special session is called, legislators would probably be asked to either increase the severance tax, implement a state income tax, or increase the sales tax. He added that, in such an event, he believed the sales tax would be raised.

He told members that for each dollar the price of oil drops, the state loses $44 million in revenues, adding that, for accounting purposes, the state has set the price of oil at $25 a barrel. The current budget is $36.8 billion, and though it has jumped from 32 to 36.8 billion, Craddick said there have been a number of budget cuts.

"If we can make it through the year and a half to the next regular session, I think we'll see enough cuts in the budget that we won't need more taxes. The House is getting more and more conservative," he observed.

Tom Craddick

Reviewing the 1985 Legislative session, Craddick focused on the water plan, and the Stacy Dam project. He feels confident, he said, that the water plan now being proposed will pass in the next session. He is chairman of the House committee that wrote the plan, and of the conference committee that helped shape the final proposal. He added that he was pleased with Midland's response to the Stacy Dam project.

"If you look on the map, at the proposed reservoirs for the state in the next 50 years, the only major reservoir for West Texas was the Stacy Dam," he said. "The Lower Colorado River Authority had opposed it in court, and won. So we went to the Governor and told him 'You make the LCRA agree to the Stacy Dam, or we'll kill your water plan. That got his attention."

The average legislator, he noted, thinks the oil and gas industry is using most of the fresh water, when actually 77 percent of the water is used by agriculture. The proposed plan allows for protection of coastal waters, though he said the Audubon Society doesn't feel there's enough protection.

A rider in the bill allows for a $10 million low-cost agricultural loan program for installation of irrigation equipment that uses more water efficiently. If it's successful, Craddick said, and 2/3 of both Houses passes it, the bill allows for $200 million in bonds for the agricultural loan program.

Also included in the bill are provisions for desalination, developing more reservoirs and transmission lines and flood control. "I think it's the best bill we've put together in a long time, and I think it'll pass this next session," Craddick said.

Craddick termed the indigent care program passed in special session this summer "the worst boondoggle the state has ever gotten into." He said he doesn't see how the program can keep from mushrooming to perhaps $500 million by the next session. "You can't take programs, most of which are asking for more than $70 million, and cram them all into a $70 million program, and keep it from mushrooming," he said.

The other major legislation from the past session - fee increases for such things as a drivers license, marriage license, personalized license plates, state automobile inspections, Craddick termed a tax increase, though Gov. Mark White calls them fee increases.

There were only 15 bills passed that affected the oil and gas industry, Craddick said, when there's normally around 200 bills passed. Legislation affecting the oil and gas industry made changes in what's required on a royalty statement, and allowed a few procedural changes. Operators can now apply to the Railroad Commission for water permits before drilling, which the RRC will pass on to the Department of Water Resources. If the DWR doesn't respond in 30 days, the RRC can approve or disallow water permits before drilling. Also, legistion passed that says operators can't use fresh water if other sources are available, without RRC approval.

Looking into his crystal ball for the next session, Craddick predicted that the Legislature will pass a paramutual betting law and an open container law. He said there were enough votes in the House of Representatives to pass paramutual betting during the last session, but a rider was added to the bill requiring that minorities own 15 percent of the race track, that minority-owned companies do 15 percent of the repair and maintenance, and that all revenues from the paramutual betting go to welfare programs. "The bill lost by 54 votes," he noted.

Saudi Arabia ups its oil production

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Saudi Arabia Tuesday began a substantial increase in oil production, informed sources said, in a dramatic break with the rest of the oil cartel that is expected to force another sharp drop in world prices.

By Oct. 1, the additional Saudi production will reach 1 million barrels a day, raising its output to 3.5 million barrels daily, the sources said. The Saudis' action is seen by energy analysts in this country as an unprecedented attempt to force other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries to honor OPEC oil pricing agreements, now widely violated by discount sales.

If it succeeds, the strategy could push oil prices down by $2 to $4 a barrel by next spring, depending on the demand for heating oil over the coming winter, oil company officials said. That would be comparable to a 5 to 10 cent-a-gallon reduction in gasoline and fuel oil price. The current market price is about $26 a barrel.

There is an outside chance, however, that other OPEC producers will attempt to match the Saudi production increase, triggering an escalating price war that could cause world oil prices to plunge by $8 to $10 a barrel. A sudden drop of that magnitude could have dire consequences for some heavily indebted U.S. oil companies, for Third World oil producers such as Mexico, Venezuela and Nigeria, for the U.S. and European banks that have billions of dollars in loans outstanding to these countries — and to the fragile military balance in the Persian Gulf itself.

The change in Saudi policy, rumored in the oil industry since the third week in August, surfaced last Friday and over the weekend, following remarks by Saudi oil minister Sheik Ahmed Zaki Yamani to a private, high-level meeting of energy officials at Oxford, England. After second-hand versions of Yamani's comments leaked out, the OPEC news agency said Saturday he had warned the seminar of the dangers of a price war that could push prices down to $15 to $18 a barrel after the winter "if non-OPEC producers do not cooperate with the organization and we in OPEC do not discipline ourselves."

"The conventional wisdom is that the Saudis are bluffing and the markets are disregarding what Yamani is saying," said John C. Sawhill, a partner with the consulting firm McKinsey & Co. and former deputy secretary of the Department of Energy. "My view is that the Saudis are really serious this time . ... They're tired of being the bagman for the rest of OPEC."

"What he (Yamani) is saying is, if the OPEC members who are cheating (on established prices) don't stop and don't develop a sense of discipline, Saudi Arabia has the vehicle to increase its oil production and go head-to-head with anyone in a price war," said Peter C. Beutel, an industry analyst with Rudolf Wolff Futures Inc. in New York. "I don't think the odds of that happening are very great."

But the Saudis' action risks an escalation of strife in the Persian Gulf, Beutel said. Iraq is expected to begin shipping 500,000 barrels a day of oil through its new spur of the Trans Saudi pipeline next month, adding to the increased production from the Saudis and bringing additional pressure on Iran, another major Gulf oil producer with which Iraq is at war. Iran, like Iraq, needs oil revenues to finance the conflict.

Sources confirmed Tuesday that the bulk of the additional 1 million barrels of Saudi production will be sold to four American companies, Exxon Corp., Mobil Corp., Texaco Inc. and Shell Oil Co., although none of the companies would comment on the reports. The Saudis reportedly have negotiated "netback" contracts with the oil companies in which the price the Saudis will receive for their crude oil is determined by the market prices for gasoline, heating oil and other products made from the crude.

Because so much crude oil now is being sold at discount prices below the OPEC targets, market prices for petroleum products reflect the discounting. The Saudis' decision to peg crude oil prices to the market prices of oil petroleum products could result in a decline of up to $3 in the average price of Saudi crude oil, some industry analysts speculate.

That won't happen immediately, analysts added, because at the moment, the demand for oil products has picked up, boosting prices.

The immediate outlook for energy prices is made more uncertain by the unpredictibility of the demand for heating oil this winter.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Jobs resigns as head of Apple Computers

SAN FRANCISCO — Steven P. Jobs resigned Tuesday as chairman of Apple Computer Inc., severing his last ties with the company he co-founded in a garage in 1976.

The resignation followed a bitter dispute that arose last week when Jobs told Apple of his plans to start a new company and then abruptly informed Apple that he was hiring five of its employees to join him.

Apple officials, feeling betrayed by Jobs, have said they were considering forcing Jobs to resign his post as chairman and suing him for breach of fiduciary duty or theft of trade secrets. Jobs's resignation is seen by those close to him as an attempt to head off a forced resignation and as a peacemaking offer to avoid a lawsuit.

"I submitted my resignation in no uncertain terms," Jobs, said in an interview Tuesday night. He said he resigned because the Apple board had made his plans to start a company "into a very hostile situation."

'Obviously, I have great emotions about it," he said.

Jobs said he hoped to be able to work out some arrangement with Apple. "I'm 30," he said. "I don't think that it's Apple's right to keep me in the back room and sterilize me for the rest of my life. There must be a way for six people in blue jeans to co-exist with Apple."

Diamond Shamrock buying chemical plant

DALLAS (AP) — Diamond Shamrock Chemicals Co. announced Tuesday that it is buying the B.F. Goodrich Chlor-Alkali chemical plant in Convent, La.

The five-year-old plant employs 150 people and has a capacity of 800 tons a day. It produces a variety of chemicals, including some used in plastics manufacturing and the chlorination of drinking water.

Goodrich called the sale of the facility a "major milestone" in its program to divest itself of more than $500 million in assets.

Texans, Japanese discuss economic relations

TOKYO (AP) — Businessmen from Texas met with Japanese business leaders at the Japan-Texas conference Tuesday and discussed ways to promote economic relations, a Japanese official said.

Hideo Mochida, secretary general of the Japan-Southern U.S. Association, said a U.S. delegation led by James B. Gardner, chairman of Mercantile National Bank in Dallas, told the Japanese the current trade friction, stemming from Japan's huge trade surplus with the United States, must be settled as soon as possible.

Mochida said American and Japanese businessmen also discussed ways of expanding venture businesses between Japan and Texas.

"We had useful discussions. The purpose of the meeting is to exchange views on various problems, not necessarily to reach any conclusion," he said.

Electronic Data Systems Corp. wins contract

DALLAS (AP) — Electronic Data Systems Corp., the cornerstone of H. Ross Perot's fortune, has won a seven-year, $45 million contract to provide the U.S. Customs Service with an office automation system that will serve 500 border and international airport offices.

Company officials said the project involves replacing the existing office automation system and automating tasks now done manually.

Hodel sees delay in new offshore drilling talks

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — California congressmen have appointed a bipartisan committee to negotiate a new plan for oil drilling off the state's coast, but Secretary of the Interior Donald P. Hodel said Tuesday he expected no meaningful negotiations until after Congress considers proposals to limit or ban drilling.

Hodel, speaking to reporters before a Senate committee hearing on the issue, also indicated that he might try to reach an agreement on general energy-recovery objectives before proposing a list of specific tracts that he would like opened.

For example, he said, it would be useful for members of the committee to decide how much oil should be recovered under a new plan and then to propose sites that would reach that objective.

A previous compromise plan also was reached following negotiations over specific sites. Last week Hodel rejected that preliminary agreement, saying that the sites would have produced too little oil.

But he maintained Tuesday that the new discussions would benefit from the previous talks, declaring: "We're a long way from square one."

At the Senate hearing, Rep. Leon E. Panetta, D-Calif., said that legislation to put into law a modified ver-

Xenerex files for bankruptcy

DALLAS (AP) — Xenerex Corp., a struggling oil and gas company headed by the man who founded the LTV Corp., has filed for protection from creditors and its chairman has resigned.

James Ling, who once was an officer of LTV and who worked for months on a deal to refinance Xenerex's debt, stepped down as chairman Monday as the company filed for bankruptcy under Chapter 11.

Ling said the company had a reorganization plan and he resigned to avoid any conflict of interest.

"We just simply couldn't get it done on a timely basis," he said, adding that his resignation didn't preclude his coming back on the board of directors.

A company spokesman said the Xenerex bankruptcy petitions, which include the Matrix Energy and Delta Gas Co. units, were filed in Oklahoma City.

Xenerex has been a player in Oklahoma's Anadarko Basin, where slumping gas prices and high drilling costs have caused problems for a number of operations companies.

Last year Xenerex reported a loss of $7 million and liabilities of $32.6 million.

The company's failure to recapitalize is the most recent in a series of setbacks for Ling, who in the 1960s founded Ling-Temco-Vought, forerunner of LTV, one of the first major U.S. conglomerates.

AT&T to layoff 14 jobs in Basin

AT&T Information Systems has targeted 679 jobs at risk (subject to layoff) in Texas, and 14 are in the Midland-Odessa area.

According to an AT&T spokesman in Dallas, AT&T Information Systems Inc. employs 75 people in Midland-Odessa, and nine jobs in Midland and five in Odessa are at risk.

Hardest hit among Texas cities, in the massive nationwide layoff which was announced in August, is Dallas where 149 jobs have been targeted for elimination. Other Texas towns targeted are Houston with 81 jobs at risk; Austin with 41 jobs; San Antonio, 28 and Fort Worth 19, according to news reports.

Nationwide, 24,000 layoffs have been outlined, with most of the cuts expected to take place in New York, New Jersey and California.

Software firm develops Drilling Report System

By SUSAN LINDSAY
Business/Oil Writer

A Dallas software and data services firm has introduced the Daily Drilling Report System, a software module that notifies investors of field activity as oil and gas wells are drilled, to the Permian Basin.

HAL SYSTEMS AND SERVICES, INC. says the automated daily drilling log software speeds communications between drilling operators and the many people who have an interest in the well.

Seven general classifications of data are captured, covering topics such as survey, mud properties, drill bit and casing data. Reports can be formatted to contain all information relating to a well, only specified sections or any data not previously reported.

Achieving success through action steps is the objective of an upcoming seminar to be held in Midland. Fred Pryor Seminars will present HOW TO GET THINGS DONE from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. October 2 at the Midland Hilton.

Dean Herrington, seminar leader, will teach specific skills. These include 14 techniques for solving the procrastination problem, how to deal with interruptions and how to develop a personal action plan.

Registration for this one-day seminar is $165 per person. To register, phone 1-800-255-6139.

GENESIS PETROLEUM CORP., Corpus Christi, has successfully completed the Four Sevens Field wildcat discovery in Duval County.

Completed in the Yegua C formation, the well flowed 4.9 Mmcfd on an adjustable choke and averaged 140 barrels of condensate per day. Flowing tubing pressure was 4,334 psi.

A total of 40 net feet of pay sand has been logged for the well.

Genesis, as operator, controls 1,286 acres in the prospect area. At least two development wells will be drilled in the near future.

Marathon plans additional wells in Yates field during rest of 1985

From Staff Reports

Marathon Oil Co. has applied with the Railroad Commission to drill 13 oil wells in the Yates field of Pecos County in the last several days.

According to Evans Turpin, Operations Engineering Supervisor for Marathon, the company is planning to drill about 21 more wells by the end of the year as part of a 180-well package for 1985. This package includes oil wells, CO2 injection wells and polymer-water injection wells. The company has drilled or is in the process of drilling 160 wells so far in 1985.

Three of the 21 wells will be involved in the gas injection or CO2 project in the field, Turbin said.

Nine wells are in Block 194 of the GC&SF survey. The No. 59C10 Yates Field Unit, with a proposed depth of 1,585 ft., is in section 26 of the block. The No. 29A28 Yates Field Unit, with a proposed depth of 1,421 ft., is in section 39 of the block.

Turpin said that plans next year call for a 140 well infield drilling program, which include production and injection wells.

Occidental tests South Piper limits

LOS ANGELES (SWN) — Occidental Petroleum Corp. has announced that the Southeast Piper prospect well, seven miles southeast of the Piper field in Block 15/17, was tested from two separate formations at a combined rate of 13,050 barrels per day and 29 4 million cubic feet of gas.

The discovery well, 15/17-13, was drilled to determine the easterly limit of the South Piper discovery, currently being considered for development. Data from the well, however, indicates that a separate accumulation has been found.

Further appraisal work will be carried out to determine the extent of the discovery.

Each formation is approximately 200 feet in thickness. The lower zone flowed gas at a stabilized rate of 24.7 million cubic feet and 3,850 barrels per day of 52-degree API gravity condensate.

The upper zone flowed at a stabilized rate of 9,200 barrels per day of 37-degree API gravity oil and 4.7 million cubic feet of gas.

Reagan's advisers to urge him to veto 'Superfund' law

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's top advisers will urge him to veto any new "Superfund" law using a broad-based tax to finance an expanded fight against toxic wastes, a White House official is warning Congress.

That warning — the most direct threat yet in the Superfund battle — came Tuesday as the Senate began debating a five-year, $7.5 billion Superfund bill opposed by administration because of its broad tax and its price tag.

Despite the prospect of a presidential veto, however, Sen. Robert Stafford, R-Vt., the bill's floor manager, vowed to continue the fight. There might be enough Senate votes to override a veto, he noted, adding: "I hope it doesn't come to that."

The heart of the legislation is a new value-added tax on large manufacturers. The levy, a form of national sales tax, was proposed by the Senate Finance Committee as a way of raising $5.4 million for toxic dump cleanups through 1990.

But Frederick S. Upton, assistant director for legislative affairs for the White House Office of Management and Budget, made clear the administration is against any broad tax for Superfund.

"The president's senior advisers will recommend that the president disapprove any legislation containing a value-added or other broad-base tax," Upton wrote to Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C.

The warning, described by Upton in a telephone interview as "standard veto-threat language" came with less than two weeks remaining before the expiration of the first five-year Superfund program, which was budgeted at $1.6 billion and has cleaned up only six toxic sites.

Congress is facing a midnight Sept. 30 deadline to pass a new Superfund law acceptable to Reagan or see a drying up of revenues for toxic cleanups nationwide.

A $10 billion House version of the legislation is awaiting action by several committees, including Ways and Means, which will write the tax proposals for that chamber of Congress. Leaders on both sides of Capitol Hill say they do not think a new law can be enacted by Oct. 1

Upton said the White House "strongly opposes" other features in the Senate bill, including its funding level. Instead of $7.5 billion, Congress should accept the administration's proposal of $5.3 billion, Upton said.

Lee Thomas, administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, has repeatedly said $5.3 billion is about the most EPA can efficiently and effectively spend battling toxic waste during the next five years.

Upton called for Senate rejection of a pilot program to provide $30 million a year to assist toxic dump victims and for approval of administration language that would limit the number of sites on which Superfund money could be spent.

The White House also is strongly opposed to provisions in both the House and Senate bills that would allow citizens to sue EPA for failing to perform any non-discretionary duty in its cleanup efforts, Upton said.

The veto threat was directed only at broad-based taxes, leaving the impression that the White House might accept a new Superfund larger than $5.3 billion if Congress can find another way to pay for it.

The bill value-added provision would affect manufacturers with more than $5 million taxable receipts, but specifically exempts unprocessed agricultural food and timber products.

So far, none of the major foes of a broad tax — business groups, the administration and Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole, R-Kan. — has proposed an alternative.

Dole said in a dissent to the Finance Committee report that although the value-added levy could start as means of paying for toxic cleanups, there "is no guarantee it will stay that way. The entire income tax system started out with similar limitations, and that did nothing to stop its expansion."

Stafford said he does not believe the Senate would be willing to pay for an expanded Superfund through general tax revenues or special borrowing — two ideas that have been batted around Congress without attracting much support.

"There will be a big fight over financing of Superfund," Dole said Tuesday shortly before the debate began. The first day's work on the bill consisted of opening statements by proponents and the approval of noncontroversial amendments.

Trade restrictions debated

Consumer debt increases

Associated Press

A Democratic proposal for a tax on imports has come under criticism from the U.S. trade representative and won praise from the president of the AFL-CIO.

At a hearing Tuesday before the trade subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter opposed a proposal to impose a 25 percent tax surcharge on imports from countries with large surpluses in trade with the United States.

He said consumers would wind up footing the bill for the tax through higher prices and that adoption of the tax on imports would be a declaration to the rest of the world that the United States cannot compete.

But Lane Kirkland, president of the AFL-CIO, supported the tax, saying the United States cannot compete with developing nations by forcing workers to take big pay cuts.

The Senate Finance Committee, meantime, unanimously approved a bill that could impose tariffs, quotas or other restrictions on imports of goods from countries that systematically block sales of American-made telecommunications equipment.

The United States also began talks with the Common Market in an attempt to extend an agreement that limits imports of major European steel products. The agreement is scheduled to expire at the end of this year.

In other economic news, the government said Tuesday that Americans borrowed $6.25 billion more in installment loans in July than they paid off that month.

The level of borrowing to finance personal purchases of goods and services was up from June but remained well below May levels, the Federal Reserve Board said in its report Tuesday.

The Federal Reserve said the July increase in installment debt was up slightly more than $1 billion from June's increase of $5.23 billion, but trailed the $9.04 billion upward spurt in May.

Installment credit refers to loans by financial institutions, stores and gasoline companies in which the consumer has the option to pay the debt in two or more installments.

Outstanding consumer debt totaled a seasonally adjusted $505.76 billion at the end of July.

Consumer spending has propelled the economy's rebound from the recession that ended in November 1982. But economists, citing the growing debt burden, have questioned whether the advances can be sustained.

Further clues on the economy's performance are expected with the scheduled release Friday of the Commerce Department's first estimate of the gross national product for the July-to-September quarter.

The gross national product, the market value of the goods and services produced in the United States, expanded at a sluggish rate of 1.1 percent in the first six months of the year.

Justice Department appeals ruling on Buffalo affirmative action program

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department, continuing its assault on court-imposed numerical hiring quotas, is appealing a federal court's refusal to overhaul an affirmative action program in Buffalo, N.Y.

At the same time, the department has taken the unusual step of asking a federal appellate court to disregard a ruling on this issue by a panel of the court's own judges.

In a court brief released by the department's civil rights division Tuesday, the department asked the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in New York to overturn a district court ruling in Buffalo.

That June 5 decision denied the department's attempt to delete numerical hiring goals for the Buffalo police and fire departments from a 1979 consent decree which settled an employment discrimination suit.

As has been the case in previous affirmative action court disputes, the department maintained that a 1984 Supreme Court decision stripped judges of their authority to order the use of race-conscious and sex-based numerical hiring quotas or goals, except when they specifically benefit victims of past discrimination.

The Justice Department has filed a Supreme Court friend-of-the-court brief in a similar case involving Jackson, Mich., which the high court is poised to consider in its fall term starting next month.

In the latest brief, filed in connection with the Buffalo case, the department reiterated its position that Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as interpreted by the Supreme Court in the so-called Stotts case last year, "prohibits a court ... from awarding affirmative equitable relief to non-victims of discrimination at the expense of innocent third parties."

The federal district court in Buffalo had concluded that it could not grant a motion to revamp the affirmative action decree because of another ruling by a three-judge panel of the 2nd Circuit.

In a 2-1 ruling in April, the appellate court panel interpreted the Stotts decision more narrowly than the Justice Department has interpreted it. The panel then concluded that nothing in the Stotts decision invalidated the use of numerical quotas and goals.

"This court, sitting en banc, should overrule the panel decision ...," said the latest Justice Department brief, signed by William Bradford Reynolds, assistant attorney general in charge of civil rights.

Americans' salaries highest in world

NEW YORK (AP) — Cooks earn the most in Caracas, Venezuela. Engineers and bank tellers do best in Jidda, Saudi Arabia. But overall, salaries are highest in the United States, according to a survey released today.

At the same time, some U.S. cities rank among the world's most expensive to live in, Union Bank of Switzerland said.

The figures, compiled by the bank during the first half of 1985, are contained in its sixth worldwide survey of prices and earnings in 49 major cities. New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Houston were included in the survey, "Prices and Earnings Around the Globe."

Measured on a scale of costs for 119 goods and services, Lagos, Nigeria, was the most expensive city to live in, with Tokyo and New York ranked second and third. They were followed by Abu Dhabi, United Arab Emirates; Manama, Bahrain; Chicago; Houston; Jidda; Oslo, Norway; and Los Angeles.

Lisbon, Portugal; Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; Istanbul, Turkey; and Bangkok, Thailand, were at the bottom end of the scale.

The study surveyed earnings in terms of weighted average hourly wages in 12 occupational categories. New York, Los Angeles, Chicago and Houston were the four cities with the highest average pay, the survey said without giving specific figures.

"The average worker in New York earns 42 percent more than a worker in Zurich or Tokyo and more than twice as much as the average worker in Paris," it said.

In terms of the world's best average take-home salaries for specific job categories, the survey found that teachers made $21,200 a year and department managers $52,900 in Abu Dhabi; engineers made $42,800 and bank tellers $29,400 in Jidda; and cooks earned $30,500 in Caracas.

People in the developing nations of Africa and Asia generally earned and spent less than those elsewhere, with pay lowest in Bombay, India; Manila, the Philippines; and Jakarta, Indonesia.

The glaring exception was Lagos, Nigeria, with a cost of living four times that of Bangkok, the cheapest city. Lagos was near the bottom in most of the dozen categories of wage earners in the study.

Goods and services in Lagos, exclusive of rent, cost $2,010 monthly, followed by Tokyo, $1,790; New York, $1,600; and Abu Dhabi, $1,580, the report said.

A medium-priced three-room apartment in Lagos cost $460.

Of the four U.S. cities studied, New York rents were the highest, averaging $1,050 monthly, followed by $750 in Chicago, $580 in Los Angeles and $530 in Houston.

The least expensive apartments were $100 in Bangkok, $90 in Buenos Aires and $80 in Jakarta, three cities at the bottom of the pay scale.

HODEL

sion of the compromise agreement would be introduced this week. If the compromise is not enacted, Panetta said that he and others would try to win an extension of what has been a four-year moratorium on drilling off most the state's coast.

No date has been set for new talks between the committee and Hodel. But the secretary said he believed that negotiations would proceed at best "desultorily" until the legislative efforts — which he expects to fail — are over, probably in a matter of weeks.

Under questioning by members of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, Hodel conceded that it is difficult to predict which sites will yield oil. In Alaska, for example, government and industry had predicted that certain areas would have great potential, only to learn that, after drilling, they were dry.

Congressmen from Texas and Louisiana, where there already is substantial offcoast drilling, have accused Californians of selfishly putting ahead their desire for attractive coastal views over the nation's energy interest.

But Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., told the committee that, unlike the Gulf of Mexico and the central Atlantic coasts, where the waters are shallow and rigs can be placed miles from shore, California's underwater coast falls off sharply. As a result, he said, oil companies want to drill closer to shore.

"Do not think we are aesthetic elitists asserting a special privilege," he said.

RALLY 'ROUND THE GRILL For Time-Saving Meals

Sunshine-filled days call for easy outdoor meals. After work or a full day at play, cookouts put the emphasis where it should be... on the fun.

On cookout night, make the house rule, "first one home start the grill." No matter what the menu, the most important thing to remember when barbecuing is to allow enough time for the fire to get started properly. The coals should have a light coating of gray ash before cooking starts. This generally takes about 30 minutes.

Kabobs are always impressive, belying the ease with which the ingredients are strung together to build a showy dish.

Grilled-to-perfection smoked sausage is only the beginning to a menu with flair.

Teamed with the fresh best-of-the-season vegetables, a long grain and wild rice salad will add new dimension to any menu.

Prepared-ahead Corn and Cabbage Wild Rice Salad and Mediterranean Wild Rice Salad paired with grilled-to-perfection smoked sausage kabobs makes an elegant, convenient meal. Perfect for busy weeknights, dinner is ready in no time.

MUSTARD-GLAZED SAUSAGE & VEGETABLE KABOBS

- 1/2 cup Dijon-style mustard
- 1 teaspoon dry mustard powder
- 1/2 cup honey
- 1/3 cup cider vinegar
- 1/3 cup firmly-packed light brown sugar
- 1 pound Eckrich Smoked Sausage, cut into 3-inch pieces
- Assorted fresh vegetables*

Combine mustards, honey, vinegar and brown sugar in small saucepan. Simmer, stirring occasionally, for 5 minutes. Thread sausage and vegetables on skewers. Grill, turning skewers occasionally, brushing sausage and vegetables with glaze, until done, about 10 minutes. Makes about 6 servings.

*Suggested vegetables include zucchini or yellow squash, pattypan squash, tomatoes, cherry tomatoes, green pepper, eggplant, cucumbers, corn-on-the-cob, mushrooms and onions. Larger vegetables should be cut into 2-inch pieces or smaller to allow for even cooking.

WILD RICE CUCUMBER SLAW

- 2-1/3 cups water
- 1 package (6 ounces) UNCLE BEN'S® Original Long Grain & Wild Rice
- 1 cup diced cucumber
- 1 large carrot, cut into 1/4 x 1/4 x 3/4-inch strips
- 2 green onions with tops, sliced
- 1/3 cup dairy sour cream
- 3 tablespoons milk
- 1 clove garlic, minced

Combine water and contents of rice and seasoning packets in medium saucepan. Bring to a boil. Cover and simmer until all liquid is absorbed, about 25 minutes. Transfer to bowl. Cover and cool to room temperature. Add cucumber, carrot and green onions to rice; mix well. Combine sour cream, milk and garlic. Add to rice mixture; mix well. Chill. Makes 6 servings.

BARBECUED SMOKED SAUSAGE

- 1 can (8 ounces) tomato sauce
- 1/2 cup chopped onion
- 1/3 cup packed light brown sugar
- 1/4 cup cider vinegar
- 1/4 cup catsup
- 2 tablespoons prepared mustard
- 1 clove garlic, minced
- 1/4 teaspoon pepper
- 2 pounds Eckrich Smoked Sausage, cut into 8 pieces

In medium saucepan, combine all ingredients except sausage. Cook over low heat for 5 minutes, stirring occasionally. Brush sauce over sausage. Grill, turning occasionally, brushing with additional sauce, until done, about 10 minutes. Serve with remaining sauce. Makes 8 servings.

CORN AND CABBAGE WILD RICE SALAD

- 2 cups water
- 1 package (6-1/4 ounces) UNCLE BEN'S® Fast Cooking Long Grain & Wild Rice
- 1/3 cup vegetable oil
- 3 tablespoons white wine vinegar
- 2 teaspoons sugar
- 1/4 teaspoon dry mustard powder
- 1 cup fresh sweet corn, cooked (about 3 ears) or 1 cup frozen corn, thawed
- 1-1/2 to 2 cups coarsely shredded green or red cabbage
- 1/3 cup diced red or green pepper

Bring water and contents of rice and seasoning packets to a vigorous boil in medium saucepan. Cover and simmer until all liquid is absorbed, about 5 minutes. Transfer to bowl. Cover and cool to room temperature. Blend oil, vinegar, sugar and mustard; stir into rice. Add corn, cabbage and red pepper; mix well. Chill. Makes 6 servings.

MEDITERRANEAN WILD RICE SALAD

- 2-1/3 cups water
- 1 package (6 ounces) UNCLE BEN'S® Original Long Grain & Wild Rice
- 1/4 pound green beans, cut diagonally into 1-inch pieces
- 1/4 cup vegetable oil
- 2 tablespoons red wine vinegar
- 1/4 teaspoon red pepper flakes
- 1 cup mushrooms, quartered
- 1/2 cup pitted ripe olives, halved
- 1/4 cup chopped onion
- 1 small tomato, chopped

Combine water and contents of rice and seasoning packets in a medium saucepan. Bring to a boil. Cover and simmer 15 minutes. Add beans. Cover and continue to simmer until all liquid is absorbed; about 10 minutes. Transfer to bowl. Cover and cool to room temperature. Combine oil, vinegar and red pepper flakes; stir into rice. Add mushrooms, onion and olives. Chill. Just before serving, stir in tomato. Makes 6 servings.

GRILLED BANANAS

- 4 ripe bananas, unpeeled
- 1/3 cup semi-sweet chocolate, peanut butter or butterscotch pieces or miniature marshmallows
- 4 tablespoons coffee, almond or other favorite liqueur (optional)

Peel back one section of banana skin. Lengthwise, cut a 1/4-inch portion from banana. Place bananas on squares of aluminum foil. Stuff bananas with chocolate pieces. Spoon 1 tablespoon of the liqueur on each banana. Replace peel over banana; wrap tightly with foil. Place on grill over ash gray coals. Cook about 5 minutes, turning occasionally. Makes 4 servings.

CONVENIENT GRILLED MENU HINTS

- For a quick, tasty glaze, use your favorite fruit jam, jelly or preserves. If desired, thin glaze with fruit juice.
- Smoked sausage remains juicy and flavorful when turned on the grill with long-handled tongs, not a fork. Likewise, it's best not to cut the sausage link lengthwise before cooking.
- Smoked sausage is ideal for quick, convenient foil meals. Requiring no pre-preparation, simply combine the sausage with vegetables, wrap tightly and place on grill.

TO PREPARE COVERED KETTLE GRILL

- Open all vents and leave open during cooking.
- Use less charcoal when preparing fire for kabob cooking. One layer of charcoal should be sparsely spaced so heat will not be too intense (approximately 40-50 briquettes)
- Heap charcoal in center of grill.
- Saturate briquettes with lighter fluid and wait a minute or two.
- Light briquettes in several places to start (leave cover off kettle while the charcoal is starting).
- When the briquettes have a light coating of gray ash (about 30 minutes) spread them into a sparse single layer.
- Put cooking grill in place.

'Homegrown' brandy a bargain

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

Brandy (or cognac, made in the French district of that name) is only one distilled beverage that has a kinship with wine. It is a product that is similar to wine because it is made from the same raw material — grapes — that wine is made from.

Moreover, its main attributes — elegant aroma and silky, rich taste — are similar to wine's attributes.

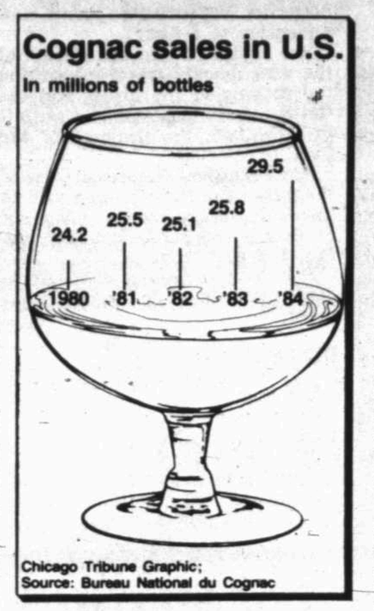

It was for some of those reasons that Jack and Jamie Davies began importing a special cognac from France some years ago. It was called Eclipse and the name of the maker was a closely guarded secret.

The Davies are owners of Schramsberg, the Napa Valley producer of one of the top lines of sparkling wines in California, and their interest in cognac stems from the fact that cognac is used as a topping element in fine champagne.

Over the years, it was clear to the Davies that buying cognac from France was the only way to get fine-quality brandy. The methods used in cognac were not often used to produce brandy in the United States.

Now Schramsberg and Remy Martin, the great cognac producer, have joined forces to make and market a cognac-style brandy from California, using California grapes and French expertise.

Actually, the joint project called RMS (for Remy Martin-Schramsberg) was formed some years ago. At the time, the announcement was met with a lukewarm response because at least three years would have to pass before the first product would be released. Now release is at hand, this summer. The product is called RMS California Brandy, and it sells for $18 a bottle.

The idea was to make a brandy in a unique style, not like cognac, but also unlike previous California brandies. That made this project different from those who attempted to emulate cognac in the past.

One reason the project has succeeded is because of the enormous amount of money — many millions of dollars — put into this project.

Remy Martin is a French company, and there are rigid restrictions on the use of money in France. The French government has limited the amount of money that may be taken out of the country, and thus Remy Martin felt it needed a way to invest some of its overseas-made money in a place other than France.

RMS became the vehicle. It is a joint venture of Schramsberg and Remy Martin-Far East, with the funds coming from profits made by the French firm's Far East operations.

The project starts with the expensive, time-consuming copper-pot stills that slowly distill fermented grape juice, reducing its essence into a pure, concentrated form. The resulting distillate is aged in new Limousin oak barrels for three years, then blended with minute quantities of varying vintages of brandy made the same way.

I have tasted RMS, and found that, unlike some California brandies, it does not have a sweetened taste. It is smooth and soft on the palate, and has a heady and youthful aroma. The overall sensation is complex — a fine first effort.

Last year at the Napa Valley Wine Auction, the first case of this wine was sold for $21,000 to Gerrett and Tatiana Copeland, wine collectors from Delaware. RMS clearly never intended for this product to sell for that kind of money, but was happy to get the publicity it generated.

Now the product has to live up to that billing, and fortunately the product is excellent. And instead of paying $1,750 per bottle for it, we can get it for $18.

Lemons, juice sharply refreshing

By OLIVIA AND
PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

In almost all countries where hot weather lasts for most of the year, lemons play an important part in the national cuisine. They are very high in vitamin C, calcium and potassium, and low in calories. For those on a low-sodium diet, lemons are a delicious way to liven up salt-free dishes.

Two of today's recipes are from Morocco. Agua Limon is a tart lemonade that is one of the most popular beverages there. Poulet aux Citrons (Chicken with Pickled Lemons) is our version of a recipe from the owner of Dar Magreb, an exquisite Moroccan restaurant in Los Angeles. To make Poulet aux Citrons you'll need to pickle lemons in salt water for about three weeks — but this recipe is so delicious and interesting that we decided to include it today.

Here are a few hints that will help any chef take advantage of lemons' versatility:

— Add a bit of lemon juice to rice or potatoes to enhance flavor.

— Add a tablespoon or so of fresh lemon juice to hot and cold soups — everything from chicken soup to vichyssoise.

— In recipes that call for grated lemon rind, or zest, use only the colored part of the rind, since the white portion underneath is bitter.

— For a great steak marinade, combine lemon juice, dry white wine, prepared mustard and soy sauce. Baste the steak while it cooks over charcoal.

— Lemon juice, butter and a dash of Tabasco make a great sauce for vegetables and fish.

— A tablespoon of lemon juice added to water in which vegetables are cooked will preserve the vegetables' color and enhance their flavor.

— Soaking lemons in hot water for a couple of minutes before squeezing them will make them release more of their juice.

We hope today's recipes will add some zest to your warm-weather cooking and help you stay cool during the dog days of summer.

AGUA LIMON
(Tart Moroccan lemonade)

2 tbsps. grated lemon rind
Water
½ tsp. sugar
¼ cup fresh lemon juice

In stainless steel saucepan, place 2 cups water and grated lemon rind. Brin to boil, reduce heat and simmer 10 minutes. Remove from heat and allow to cool.

In large glass container with tightly fitting lid, combine 2 cups water with ½ teaspoon sugar. Stir until sugar is completely dissolved and add water/lemon rind mixture and lemon juice.

Chill, covered, for at least 1 hour. Taste, adding a bit more sugar if desired (lemonade should be quite tart). Strain mixture and serve over ice.

Makes 1 quart.

POULET AUX CITRONS
(Chicken with pickled lemons)

1 3-lb. whole chicken with giblets
¼ cup peanut oil
1 tsp. olive oil
1 oz. butter or margarine
1 medium clove garlic, minced
⅛ tsp. saffron
1 tsp. fresh ginger root, minced
¼ cup finely chopped onion
1½ tbsps. fresh parsley, finely chopped
1½ tbsps. fresh coriander, minced (or 1½ tsps. dried, if the fresh herb is unavailable
3 ozs. black olives (tree-ripened, if available)
Skin of 2 pickled lemons (recipe follows)
Salt to taste
Parsley sprigs for garnish

In Dutch oven, place whole chicken, breast down, along with giblets. Add oils, butter, garlic, saffron, ginger, onion, parsley and coriander and enough water to reach one-third the depth of the chicken.

Bring to a boil, turn chicken breast side up and stir to mix spices. Place in preheated 450 F oven for 1 hour, or until meat separates easily from bones, basting every 15 minutes, so chicken is moist with sauce while cooking.

Add olives and pickled lemon rind and allow to cook with chicken a few minutes more. Taste sauce and add salt to taste.

Place whole chicken on platter and arrange lemon peel, giblets and olives on and around chicken. Stir sauce well and pour over chicken.

Garnish with parsley sprigs and serve with rice pilaf or other seasoned rice.

Serves 4.

PICKLED LEMONS

2 lbs. ripe lemons
1 cup rock salt
Water

Cut tip end off lemons and cut them in quarters, almost all the way through but leaving fruit in one piece. Place lemons in 1-gallon plastic container with cover. Add rock salt and enough water to cover by 2 to 3 inches. Place plate or other flat object over lemons and weight down with stone or other heavy object. It is critical that no trapped air be allowed to come into contact with lemons.

Cover container fairly tightly and allow lemons to pickle at room temperature for about 3 weeks, checking occasionally and adding water as necessary to keep lemons submerged at all times.

Formation of mold on top of water is normal. Lemons are ready for use when flesh becomes soft and skin detaches easily.

For use in recipe for Poulet aux Citrons, remove skin and discard flesh.

Tart cherries provide some tasty treats

By BETTY WILSON
Hearst News Service

Although tart cherries are produced plentifully, they normally aren't found in supermarkets. The reason: Tart cherries are so perishable that only 1 percent of the crop is consumed in season.

For home preservation, buy cherries by the lug, which weighs 22 pounds. Plan on 8 quarts of pitted canned fruit. When tart cherries are purchased frozen in a 30-pound tin, there are 25 pounds of cherries with 5 pounds of sugar added. Adjust recipes accordingly.

If you're looking for an easy method to preserve tart cherries, try juice. To make cherry juice, wash the fruit and crush it. Heat to simmering (185 degrees). Strain through a cloth bag. Pour off the clear juice and discard sediment. Add sugar, if desired. Use about 1 cup to 1 gallon of juice. Reheat juice to simmering. Pour into clean canning jars. Cover and process pints or quarts 5 minutes in a boiling water bath.

CHERRY COBBLER

2 cans (30-ounce) red sour cherries (5 cups fresh, pitted)
1 cup brown sugar
1 tablespoon cornstarch
¼ teaspoon almond extract
1 cup flour
1 tablespoon sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
3 tablespoons margarine
½ cup milk

Drain the fruit, reserving ½ cup syrup. Combine brown sugar, cornstarch and reserved syrup. Add the fruit. Cook, stirring, until the mixture starts to boil. Add almond extract. Keep warm.

Sift together flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Cut in the margarine. Add skim milk, stirring to moisten.

Pour fruit mixture into a 2-quart casserole. Drop topping by spoonfuls onto the mixture. Bake at 475 degrees for 20 minutes, or until done. Serves 6; 390 calories per serving.

CHERRY ANGEL DESSERT

8 cups (½-inch cubes) angel cake
1 can (21-ounce) cherry-pie filling
1 package (3-½-ounce) instant vanilla pudding mix
1½ cups milk
1 cup sour cream

Place half the cake pieces in a 9-inch square pan. Reserve 1/3 cup cherry filling. Spoon the remainder over the cake. Top with the remaining cake.

Combine pudding mix, milk and sour cream. Beat well. Spoon over the cake. Chill 4 hours. Cut into 9 servings. Garnish with reserved filling.

PORT WINE CHERRY MOLD

1 cup pitted dark sweet cherries
½ cup cherry juice
½ cup boiling water
1 package (3-ounce) black cherry-flavored gelatin
½ cup applesauce
½ cup port wine or fruit juice
¼ cup chopped nuts

Pour boiling water on the gelatin. Stir to dissolve. Add cherry juice, applesauce and wine. Refrigerate until slightly thickened, but not firm, about 1 hour.

Cut cherries in half. Stir cherries and nuts into the thickened gelatin mixture. Spoon into 6 individual serving dishes. Refrigerate at least 4 hours. Garnish with whipped topping or sour cream. Serves 6.

Chocolate soda comes back

New York Times News Service

CHICAGO — In Chicago, it was called the "chocolate phos," for phosphate. To New Yorkers, it was a chocolate soda.

Louis Schwartz's memory of the chocolate soda of the 1920s and 1930s is as rich as the syrup and as effervescent as the seltzer water used to make it.

Schwartz, who grew up in Brooklyn and the Lower East Side, recalls neighborhood candy stores with sliding windows and marble counters facing the sidewalk. There, for a nickel or less, he and his pals would each order a soda.

"There was something about the natural flavor of good chocolate fizzed before your eyes," he said.

"We'd first say it was a little too sweet, and get more seltzer," said Schwartz, a 66-year-old lawyer in Washington. "Then, we'd say it wasn't sweet enough, and we'd get more chocolate syrup. That way, we'd keep extending the drink."

While soda jerks and fountains are harder to come by today, the chocolate soda is making a comeback — and in a big way.

Earlier this year, the A.J. Canfield Co., a small Chicago soft drink bottler, parlayed a favorable newspaper article about its Diet Chocolate Fudge Soda into a surge in demand for the product.

Until January, Canfield's was casually shipping about 1.5 million cans a year of its "fudge" soda to a handful of Middle Western states. (Since chocolate spells calories, this 100 percent artificial, four-calories-a-can drink has only the aroma and simulated taste of chocolate.)

In the first seven months this year, the company has sold 101 million cans in 50 states, according to Alan Canfield, the company's vice president and grandson of its founder.

NOT TO be outdone, Canfield's competitors, from big Royal Crown Cola Co. to little Vess Beverages Inc. of St. Louis, have rushed nearly a dozen ersatz chocolate sodas into production. They are frantically trying to catch up with Canfield's chocolate soda blitz.

"This is a testimony not to chocolate, but to NutraSweet," said Larry Jabbonsky, the editor of the industry trade journal Beverage World, referring to the artificial sweetener that has helped fuel chocolate soda's growth in a land of acknowledged chocoholics.

NutraSweet, the brand name for aspartame, does not leave the aftertaste of the once-popular diet drink sweetener, saccharin. All the new diet chocolate sodas are sweetened only with NutraSweet.

The chocolate soda craze is even spilling into the courts. Mr. Canfield is suing at least four competitors who have used the word "fudge" in their drinks' names. He claims that the word is part of his company's trademark.

Don Schneeberger, the president of Vess Beverages, disagrees. "We feel that chocolate fudge is a generic term, like orange," he said. So far, a federal district judge in Chicago has sided with Canfield and issued a preliminary injunction against Vess using "fudge."

So Vess has pulled the word off its label and is marketing its product — in the St. Louis area, at least for now — as Diet Chocolate Chocolate Soda.

OTHER DIET chocolate sodas, with and without "fudge" in the name, are popping up daily. There's Diet Shasta Chocolate Fudge. Royal Crown is rolling out Diet Nehi Chocolate Soda along with a regular Nehi Chocolate Soda, replete with about 150 calories a can.

Even the Yoo-Hoo Chocolate Beverage Corporation, whose venerable Yoo-Hoo chocolate-flavored noncarbonated dairy drink seems to have been the first of the chocolate-flavored bottled drinks, and was promoted by Yogi Berra and other Yankees in the 1950s and 1960s, is joining in; its new product is Yoo-Hoo Diet Chocolate Fudge Soda.

And the White Rock Products Corp. of New York has hatched a deal with the Famous Amos cookie people to launch a threesome of diet chocolate sodas under the Famous Amos label: Diet Chocolate Sundae Soda, Diet Chocolate Cola and Diet Chocolate Rocky Road Soda.

Never mind that Famous Amos cookies have real chocolate in them. All the Famous Amos chocolate drinks will be artificially flavored, with only four calories to a can. The sodas' slogan will be: "The taste that made Amos famous."

While chocolate imitators battle for the low-calorie, "guilt-free" niche of the chocolate soda market, Sharon Corr is planning to make chocolate soda upscale and natural. Corr and her husband, Robert, own the Chicago beverage company, R.J. Corr Naturals Inc., which has been producing naturally flavored soft drinks for seven years.

After watching Canfield's success, Corr said she told her flavor house to give her "Godiva in a beverage" — a real chocolate soda, as rich and as sophisticated as Godiva chocolates, to tap the 75 percent of the United States soft drink market that doesn't care about its waistline when it comes to soda.

The result is White Chocolate Natural Soda, Dark Chocolate Natural Soda and White Chocolate Natural Soda With Raspberry. Each weighs in at about 140 calories a can. By Christmas, the Corrs expect to add a nonalcoholic White Chocolate Champagne, in a corked bottle, with double the carbonation.

"We're bridging all the gaps with the quintessential chocolate sodas," Corr said. "We're natural, very current and gourmet." The sodas are soon be distributed in the Chicago and Denver areas, according to Corr, along with select stores in Oregon and New York.

Wines add special flavor to vegetables

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

I have long known of Sam Sebastiani's California wine vineyards. But only recently I learned about the extensive vegetable garden of his wife, Vicki.

Mrs. Sebastiani, who writes about wine-vegetable cookery, grows more than a hundred herbs and vegetables.

"Tomatoes and squash are favorites in our home," says Sabastiani. "We grow 19 varieties of these two vegetables alone."

The Sebastiani garden is in California's Sonoma Valley, where the vineyards are located. Mrs. Sebastiani has acquired a name as author of vegetable recipes in which wine plays a key role.

"Wine has a flavor which adds character to your vegetable dishes," she says. "The natural flavor of the wine blends with the natural flavors of garden vegetables to give a new dimension to a dish."

She explained that the alcohol of the wine quickly evaporates during the cooking of the dishes and the flavor and aroma of the wine are left to accentuate the tastiness of the food.

Mrs. Sebastiani discovered some of the dishes she features on a visit to the 12th-century Italian village of Farneta, where her husband's grandfather lived.

Here is a recipe for a vegetable dessert tart served by the local priest there:

DESSERT TART

2 cups all-purpose, unbleached, presifted flour
1 cup walnuts, ground fine
1 cup butter, chilled
Filling: see recipe

Combine flour and nuts. Add butter, 2 tablespoons at a time, and mix well in food processor until dough forms a ball. Spread dough in a pie pan to a thickess of approximately ⅛ inch along bottom and at least ¾ inch up the sides. Chill while making following filling:

2 cups coarsely chopped chard leaves (1 bunch)
2 cups grated zucchini (2 medium size zucchini)
1 cup golden raisins
8 leaves fresh basil, chopped
8 leaves fresh mint, chopped
¼ cup honey
4 eggs, beaten lightly
½ cup Chenin Blanc or Chardonnay

Preheat oven to 375 degrees. In large bowl combine all filling ingredients. Pour half filling into food processor or blender and puree briefly. Combine with non-pureed half of ingredients and pour into shell. Bake about 45 minutes or until filling has set and inserted knife comes out clean. Cool in pan 30 minutes before serving. Serve at room temperature.

NFL players, wives tackle tailgate recipes

Copley News Service

Good cooks and good sports across America are beginning to huddle around their tailgates. It's football season. And those pregame parking lot picnics can be a festive way to prolong family fun at the stadium.

First popularized as a way to include football "widows" in the "armchair quarterback's" passion, these tailgate buffets have become an occasion almost as popular as the game itself.

Lincoln-Mercury even has designed a special tailgate for its Sable wagon, featuring built-in cup holders and storage slots for picnic gear.

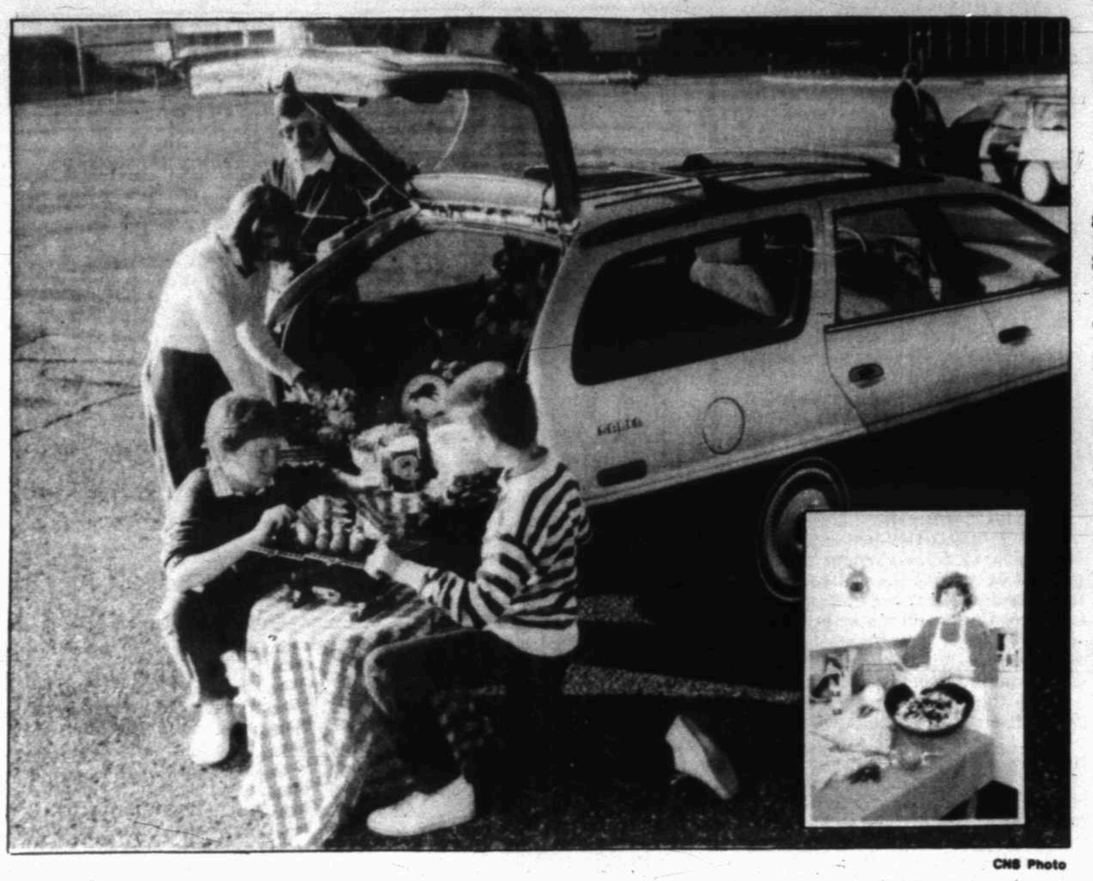

Whether it's drumsticks or caviar, the only rules-of-thumb for a tailgate menu are that it be tasty and filling — and easy on the chef.

Few people have had more experience tackling this assignment than National Football League players and their wives.

Today's recipes include favorites from Julie Haynes (wife of LA Raider cornerback Mike Haynes), Danny White of the Dallas Cowboys, Pat Grant (wife of Minnesota Vikings coach Bud Grant), Ken Sims of the New England Patriots and the Miami Dolphins' Lemon Bar specialty.

The dishes are easy to make, easy to pack, easy to eat and easy to bring cheers from the fans.

Rah, Mom!

Football season has arrived once again and one of the best ways for the entire family to go out and enjoy the game is to have a tailgate picnic. Julie Haynes, in the small inset photo, is the wife of the Los Angeles Raider's cornerback Mike Haynes and has her own winning recipe for a taco salad that should score points for any tailgate picnic.

Fowl play: Fast-food chains' chicken war heats up

Copley News Service

Some are calling it a case of fowl play, while others say it's simply a matter of competitive marketing.

It all started when food critics at several Southern California newspapers were greeted at their desks one recent morning by cardboard tubs imprinted with the familiar smiling face of the late chicken tycoon, Col. Sanders, and the distinctive logo of the Kentucky Fried Chicken company.

Most assumed that they were the beneficiaries of free chicken dinners — until they tore off the tops of the tubs.

Inside — instead of a spicy, breaded bird fried up a la the Colonel — was a foot-long rubber chicken.

No one has yet owned up to ruffling the feathers of the Colonel, the major force in the fast-food chicken industry, with more than 4,500 outlets nationwide.

But it's a sure bet that the perpetrator was striving for a piece of the fast-food chicken market.

The war to rule the roost is on. The initial skirmishing already has spawned at least two controversies: the merits of chicken over beef, and the quality of fried chicken over roasted or broiled chicken.

"We feel that the market is wide open," said Don Pierce, president of El Pollo Loco, a Los Angeles-based firm that offers Mexican-style broiled chicken. "People are burned out on hamburgers and beef, and they're burned out on greasy, fried chicken."

El Pollo Loco, as well as other chains, joins an already saturated fast-food chicken market that includes the long-standing dominant Kentucky Fried Chicken, as well as Pioneer Take-Out and Church's.

AND ARBY'S, which for years has offered strictly a menu of roast beef items, recently jumped into the chicken coop with roasted chicken sandwiches and chicken plates. This follows the successful diversification into chicken products by such hamburger giants as McDonald's, Burger King, Jack-In-the-Box, Wendy's and Carl's Jr.

The sudden flocking to chicken is a reaction to marketing surveys that indicate a change in dietary habits by many Americans, according to restaurant consultants and executives at various fast-food firms.

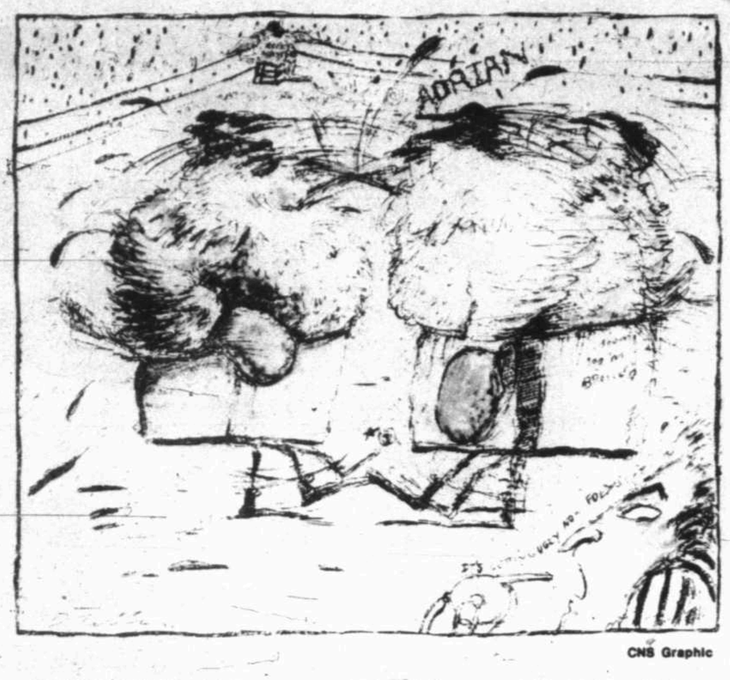

"Chicken is now perceived by much of the public to be more nutritious and healthful than beef," said a spokesman for Crest Enterprises, a Chicago-based company and one of the largest restaurant consulting firms in the country. "Chicken is also more economical. Consumers get a better value for their money."

Americans are expected to spend up to $45 billion this year dining at fast-food eateries, and more than 10 percent of that money will go to restaurants that exclusively offer chicken, according to estimates by Crest.

That's a 20 percent increase in the demand for chicken by the fast-food dining public over two years ago.

Thus, the battle for the chicken dollar has escalated into war. Witness the recent rubber chicken episode, as well as advertising campaigns by the so-called "natural" chicken restaurants — they broil or roast their product — as they attempt to beat their fried chicken competitors, especially the Kentucky Colonel.

An official at Natural Style Chicken Inc., a Los Angeles-based company, said that it's simply a matter of taste. When asked to compare fried and broiled chicken, he went right for the Colonel's jugular.

CNS Graphic

"THE FRIED chicken restaurants, like the Colonel's, have salty, greasy products, so salty and so greasy that sometimes it's hard to get a taste of the chicken," said the executive, who requested anonymity. "Our chicken, on the other hand, has a mellow, appealing quality to it."

Fried-chicken companies, which account for more than 75 percent of the fast-food chicken market, say the criticism is just so much chicken feed.

"Really, there's no way to combat the fact that there are more calories and fat in fried chicken than in broiled or roasted chicken. But we go for taste," said Andy Rosenberg, advertising manager for Pioneer Take-Out, which operates 300 outlets in four Southwestern states. "And I feel very, very confident that we'll come out ahead when it's a matter of taste, whether we're pitted against other fried chicken chains or the broiled/roasted chicken restaurants."

Billie Brown, manager of press relations for Kentucky Fried Chicken, said the fat and calorie content of chicken isn't that much of an issue with consumers anyway.

"It's taste that they're interested in," she said from the company's headquarters in Louisville, Ky. "And we have a unique, very good-tasting product."

Brown acknowledged that Kentucky Fried Chicken has recently felt the competition "increasing from all sides. Of course, we're the biggest and the best, so we're also the most visible target for these smaller companies. They feel that they have to come at us if they're going to make any inroads."

SHE SAID that the company was aware of the rubber chickens that had been distributed in Kentucky Fried Chicken tubs to newspaper food critics.

"We don't yet know who is responsible for this, but it's outrageous and in terribly poor taste," she said.

Despite the insistence of most of the fried-chicken chains that the "naturals" haven't yet had an impact on their businesses and that they have no plans to modify their product lines, at least one company — Church's — is experimenting with a broiled chicken product that it expects to begin marketing within a few months.

"It's chicken marinated for 22 hours in garlic, onions, herbs and spices, then broiled," said Burt Waggoner, Church's West Coast manager of operations. "It's delicious, and we're betting that the public will agree. We're just looking at the market and going with the flow of customer demand."

However, Church's — 1,500 outlets nationally — will continue to offer a food line made up mostly of fried chicken, Waggoner said.

The surge in the fast-food chicken market can be traced to Mexico in the early 1970s.

At that time, the leader, by far, in take-out chicken was Kentucky Fried, which had carved out more than 60 percent of the national market. Following far behind were such chains as Church's and the West Coast-run Pioneer Take-Out.

It was during this period that Mexican businessman Juan Ochoa founded El Pollo Loco (The Crazy Chicken, in Spanish), which initially was nothing more than a single-grill food stand in Guasava, Mexico.

OCHOA OFFERED broiled chicken served Mexican-style, with lots of tortillas, a variety of sauces and beans.

The idea caught fire and by 1981, when he opened his first stand in Los Angeles, there were more than 90 El Pollo Loco outlets throughout Mexico.

Ochoa last year sold the worldwide rights to his company, except in Mexico, to Denny's Inc., which today operates 38 of the shops in Southern California, with plans to expand to other parts of the state and country.

Most of the restaurants are situated in Latino communities, although El Pollo Loco is slowly reaching out to Anglos tired of traditional fried chicken fare.

"We've beaten the Colonel in most Mexican communities, so now we're going for the larger market," said company President Don Pierce.

A Kentucky Fried Chicken spokesman acknowledged that the company had attempted to counter El Pollo Loco's influence in the Mexican community in Los Angeles by introducing to one of its shops a broiled chicken product.

"It was a test that we abandoned after a few months because we found that there just wasn't much consumer demand," said Billie Brown. "We're holding our own in the market — Latino, Anglo or otherwise."

Kenyans debate raising game for food

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — The game liver mousse and gourmet cuts of gazelle meat served recently at a food festival are but a foretaste of a vast new supply of profits and protein, in the view of Kenyans who advocate game ranching.

Game ranches fence in wild animals that later are slaughtered for food.

Advocates view an experimental game ranch outside Nairobi as the prototype for a nationwide industry that would provide nutritious and reasonably priced meat.

They maintain the ranches also would counter the deterioration of rangeland by livestock and silence complaints that few Kenyans benefit directly from wildlife conservation.

To skeptics, however, game ranching is a concept that either would collapse because of inefficiency or create an unmeetable demand for game that would encourage an onslaught by poachers.

"No one should try to market game meat to the local population," said Nehemiah K. Rotich, director of the East Africa Wildlife Society. "That would be a total mistake. The demand could not be supplied."

Weighing both sides of the argument is the Kenyan government, which is interested in broader usage of wildlife and at the same time realizes that its lucrative tourist industry relies heavily on game preservation.

David Mbuvi, deputy director of the Wildlife Conservation and Management Department, said government experts are examining numerous proposals for game ranches, cropping and other programs that would increase consumption of game.

But he said the government has not decided whether it wants to move in that direction or preserve the status quo, under which wildlife is protected by a 1977 ban on hunting.

"The idea that wildlife should be a source of protein is a laudable one," said Sam Chemai, the Agriculture Ministry's chief veterinary research officer. "It should be cheap and accessible to the average man."

But Chemai said programs to boost game consumption would need careful monitoring to reassure wildlife conservationists and to guard against poaching and excessive slaughter.

Both government and private-sector experts say the existing game ranch, started 10 years ago by David Hopcraft, had proven itself profitable and provided valuable information for researchers.

But they note that Hopcraft had the advantage of implementing his program on his existing 20,000-acre cattle ranch less than 20 miles from his buyers at Nairobi's hotels and restaurants.

"To go into the wilds to try it would be prohibitively expensive," said Chemai.

Proponents of game ranching argue that the concept would be economically viable even in remote areas, with little investment required except for fencing and some type of slaughterhouse.

Hopcraft, a third-generation Kenyan who did postgraduate work at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., raises wildebeeste, impala, Thompson's gazelle, giraffe and ostrich, among other animals. His customers include specialty butchers in Nairobi and a popular restaurant called Carnivore where game is roasted on spits over an open fire.

He has argued in numerous speeches and papers that wildlife is far less expensive than livestock to maintain because it needs little or no water, is virtually immune to diseases from which livestock must be protected, and provides meat which is leaner than beef.

"The potential is enormous," said Phil Tilley, who has been managing the game ranch while Hopcraft visits the United States to study the feasibility of a comparable operation there.

Asked why requests to open other game ranches in Kenya have not been approved, Tilley replied, "It's a mystery to all of us."

"The government gives us the impression they're pleased with what we're doing, but neither do they seem to want to expand," he said.

Hopcraft touts game ranching as an ideal use for semi-arid lands.

Chicken, fresh herbs teamed together

By OLIVIA and PAUL BENSEN
Copley News Service

Recently we prepared a dinner that combined boned chicken breasts cut into bite-size chunks and served with linguiné. For the sauce, we used fresh basil and dill, some heavy cream, chunks of tomato and freshly grated Parmesan cheese. The fresh dill and basil were the key to the sauce's success.

We usually keep a basil plant growing in light shade on a screened porch, but at the time we needed some for today's recipe we didn't have a plant with any ready-to-pick leaves. A visit to a local specialty food store provided us with two healthy 8-inch-tall basil plants, which had plenty of leaves for the recipe.

Basil, incidentally, is one of the easiest herbs to grow — and one of the most forgiving if you neglect it. The more leaves you pick, the faster new growth comes in. If the soil in which a basil plant is growing becomes too dry, the leaves will droop and wilt. Even if the plant looks like it will never come back, within an hour or so after you water it the leaves will begin to perk up again.

CHICKEN AND LINGUINE WITH DILL/BASIL SAUCE

1 cup chicken broth
2 scallions plus ¼ cup thinly sliced scallions
2 whole sprigs dill, plus 1 tbsp. chopped dill
2 whole chicken breasts, boned, skinned and cut into bite-size chunks
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
¾ cup heavy cream
¾ lb. linguine (dry weight)
3 tbsps. butter or margarine
2 large ripe tomatoes, cut in chunks
6 fresh basil leaves, chopped
½ cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese

In large skillet with lid, place chicken broth, two whole scallions cut in thirds, and sprigs of dill. Bring to boil. Add chicken chunks and simmer, covered, until cooked through — about 5 minutes.

Remove chicken to bowl. Remove scallions and dill from broth and add salt and pepper to taste. Boil broth rapidly for about 3 minutes, until reduced to about ½ cup. Remove from heat and whisk in heavy cream. Keep warm over very low heat.

Cook linguine according to instructions on package.

While linguine is cooking, melt butter in large skillet over medium-high heat and in it saute tomato chunks for 2 to 3 minutes, until just soft. Add sliced scallions, chopped dill and basil, along with chicken and salt and pepper to taste. Reduce heat to very low setting — just hot enough to keep mixture warm.

Drain linguine and mix with cheese, cream/broth mixture and tomatoes and chicken in large bowl. Keep tossing until mixture becomes somewhat thickened.

Serves 4 to 6.

HERSHEY, Pa. (AP) — Cocoa, chocolate's most concentrated form, is a versatile cooking ingredient which is lower in both calories and cholesterol than regular baking chocolate, according to the Hershey Chocolate Co.

The chocolate company says cocoa is the only chocolate product allowed on the American Medical Association's heart attack prevention diet.

Woman with everything gains nothing from affair

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: A very dear friend of mine is having an affair with a married man. She divorced her husband of 14 years to be free for "Joe." Joe lived with my friend for a few months, then moved back home because his children "needed" him. Joe goes to my friend's place three or four mornings a week for coffee and sex. The rest of the time he is with his wife. Joe has given my friend some expensive gifts and takes her on some business trips, which is all she lives for. She's beautiful and smart and has everything going for her. I've tried to tell her she's wasting her time, but she says she loves Joe and he's worth waiting for.

I know you get lots of letters from women who are waiting for married men to leave their wives. Can you send me a few dozen? If I show them to my friend, she may see the light. Thanks. — ALL TALKED OUT IN DALLAS

DEAR TALKED OUT: A thousand letters wouldn't convince your friend. She's in love. And love is a mental condition; it doesn't respond to logic. A woman in love cannot learn from the experiences of others because she perceives her love as unique — unlike any other.

Occasionally a married man will divorce his wife and marry the other woman. So what does the other woman get? A man who cheats on his wife.

DEAR ABBY: Please proclaim a day in the near future for people everywhere to check their cupboards and refrigerators for plates, platters, trays, bowls, dishes — for whatever doesn't belong to them. In appreciation of someone's thoughtfulness, I do think we should promptly return the dishes to whomever they belong.

In case some of us don't know any better, you tell 'em, Abby! —DINAH, WHO WILL FEEL MUCH FINER WHEN FOLKS IN CAROLINA RETURN MY CHINA

DEAR DINAH: All right, I'm telling 'em. Now if only they can remember where they got 'em.

DEAR ABBY: I hired a self-employed contractor to install a swimming pool in our back yard. He arrived on the job with two helpers. One was his son who had brought along his child, about 3 or 4 years old. Neither the contractor nor his son knew where the little boy was or what he was doing half the time, and they spent a lot of time looking for him. Meanwhile I was paying $40 an hour for services that I did not receive. I couldn't even go shopping because I was asked not to lock up the house because the child needed access to the bathroom frequently.

A friend of mine had a similar experience. She called a plumber who arrived with a small child, who proceeded to take the house apart while the plumber was busy under her kitchen sink.

These men would not be able to take children with them if they worked in a factory or office, so why do they take them on jobs at homes? (The plumber's excuse: "I want to give my wife a break.")

Abby, what would you have done in my place? — TIMID IN LOUISIANA

DEAR TIMID: As soon as the contractor arrived with the child, I'd have told him to please take the child home and leave him there. He had no business bringing the boy in the first place — it was unfair to the child and unfair to you, but he had nothing to lose by trying. Moral: The timid will be taken advantage of unless they learn to speak up.

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) envelope to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Law would affect wine prices

By NATHAN CHROMAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There is no peace in the wine world today. Consumers, vintners, importers and wholesalers are at odds over California legislation that appears to restrict competition and maintain artificially high prices, such as $65 for a bottle of Dom Perignon Champagne instead of the current price of $35.

The bill in the California Legislature, SB 589, would require that any wine (or any alcoholic beverage) imported into California must come through an importer who has been appointed by the producer as its authorized agent for pricing and marketing that particular brand.

The bill's practical impact is to reduce competition by restricting the number of a brand's distributors and by requiring the importer and producer to engage a wholesaler and middleman to deal with the retailer.

While it may be hard to find compassion for wine enthusiasts who are willing to pay for Dom Perignon, the noted Champagne presents a classic case of what can happen when supply and price are controlled by an exclusive agent. All imports, even low priced ones, are likely to cost more.

A worrisome side effect is that California vintners may increase domestic prices if imports are increased. Plunging prices on European wines plus the ready availability of most Common Market wines to discount dealers caused many to reduce their prices.

JACK DAVIES, proprietor of Schramsberg Vineyards and chairman of the California Wine Institute claims that an objection raised by the bill's opponents is that the legislation interferes with the free market for wine and is inappropriate in a free enterprise economy. The reality he noted is that wine is perhaps the most regulated of all consumer products.

Davies explained: "The law tells me how to print my labels, which size letters I may use, what kinds of promotion I may employ, what ingredients I may use, how I may describe my wine, who I may have as investors, directors or officers ...." Moreover, he pointed out that the law requires him to pay an excise tax for every inventory location and collect among the highest excise taxes in the world on any consumer product.

"That is hardly consistent with free market principles," Davies said.

While recognizing the price concerns of the consumer, Davies feels the wine drinker's welfare is not best served by short-term consumer cost consideration, apparently the only serious argument raised by the bill's opponents.

Davies noted that wines are unique; that their individualism, developed over decades, should be protected for the benefit of the product and the consumer. He explained: "We're talking here about proper temperature control storage facilities, delivery vehicles, trained sales personnel and training support for retail clerks and restaurant personnel.

"THE DISCOUNT gray marketer, sometimes described as the Gypsy wholesaler, who 'cherry picks' outstanding wines, which generally sell themselves, performs none of these services and indeed they never offer full lines. In the short run, they don't need to. What about the long run and the damage that will inevitably be done to the brand and the consumer's interest at the same time?"

Another question Davies poses is that if the legitimate wholesaler is forced to cut corners to meet competition from the gray market in the short run, where do funds come from to reinvest in the product, ultimately for the benefit of the consumer?

If the only criterion is short-run price, inevitably all producers and marketers will have to compete on short-term pricing alone, resulting in forced quality cutting, product development and diversity that surely cannot be in the consumers' long-term interest.

Davies concludes with concern for his right as a brand owner to do with it as he pleases insofar as determining who shall market it and who shall not.

"In any part of the world," he said, "I ought to be able to determine the quality and competency of an agent-marketer entrusted with the task of distribution and sale of my product in which I have invested millions."

California State Attorney General John Van de Kamp and Allen Sumner, senior assistant, offer another view. They are concerned about the bill's creation of state-mandated monopolies to preserve promotional costs of designated distributors and to ensure quality control.

SUMNER SAID: "There has been no showing whatsoever that traditional trademark protections and the prohibitions against unfair competition are incapable of protecting legitimate business interests; nor has there been any explanation why far more perishable products are successfully distributed by other industries without statutory monopolies.

"Manufacturers already have extensive control over their marketing system and can, if they so choose, grant exclusive territorial agreements," he added.

"They do not need the state-mandated monopolies. The only problem is that artificial overpricing in America has made it possible for competitors to undersell the manufacturers' designated distributors. The bill's proponents can solve the dilemma they have created for themselves by simply charging California consumers the same prices charged in Europe."

Obviously, there are points on both sides of this consumer issue.

A key question in this whole matter seems to be who will control the price and the product?

Obviously, the ultimate primary source and price arbiter is not the legislature, or even a designated agent, but rather the consumer who may decide that the grape may not be for them after all and that life can be just fine without wine.

No matter which side wins, the consumer must still be wooed and pleased.

Bargains sparkle but sales go flat

Copley News Service

A paradox exists in the wine industry: There are more wine bargains than ever before, and yet Americans are not buying wine.

This leaves industry analysts confused and makes winery owners and grape growers angry. With wine consumption in America at a virtual standstill, many producers soon may be out of business.

Early in this decade, wine consumption in America was growing steadily at 6 percent per year, and there were even more optimistic forecasts.

Then a recession hit the entire alcoholic beverage industry in 1982, and even though the distilled spirits industry was hurt more than the wine industry, those who had invested so heavily in grapes, equipment and wineries began to struggle. And in that struggle to survive, the upward push of wine prices simply stopped. In fact, prices for premium wines began to decline.

A reason for that decline was competition: Prices for most French, German and especially Italian wines were dropping then because of the strength of the U.S. dollar.

A perfect example is Pouilly-Fuisse, once the darling of the nouveau riche in America. Demand drove its price to nearly $20 a bottle by the early 1980s, although it now has dropped back to the under-$10 level, which is where it ought to be.

Yet in spite of prices declining and production rising, Americans aren't buying more wine.

Intensified wine education efforts help to spur interest. Wine shops find they do well to conduct seminars at which fine wines are tasted. Also, wine cruises are popping up, giving captive audiences a chance to enjoy excellent wines. And more and more restaurants are featuring premium wine by the glass, which encourages people to try more wines.

And still wine sales are flat.

Yet the wines are better than ever. Here are a few examples:

— California's 1981 and 1982 Cabernets are showing just how good California wine makers have become. Many of the wines are very impressive.

— The 1981, '82 and '83 harvests in Bordeaux turned out to be the best three consecutive vintages in history, by some estimates.

— In California, Chardonnays of 1983 and 1984 are proving to be far better than vintages of the past, as wine makers learn tricks of the trade.

— Americans have made huge strides in producing fine-quality Pinot Noirs, Zinfandels and even Petite Sirahs.

— The 1983 harvest throughout Europe (especially in Germany and France's Rhone Valley) was marvelous, producing exceptional wines.

Good wine often just thrown away

By DAN BERGER
Copley News Service

You wouldn't throw away half a chocolate cake; you'd wrap it up and refrigerate it. So why do people throw out perfectly good wine?

Once, years ago, I had dinner at a friend's house. After the dinner was finished and we were leaving to move into the den to sit by the fireplace, my friend got up, grabbed the red dinner wine bottle and poured it into the kitchen sink.

He had acted so quickly that I had no time to leap into my discourse on the subject, but we got around to talking about it, and he admitted that he never realized all the things that can be done with a bottle of unfinished wine.

If the wine was pleasing and you might like to have some the next day, or in a few days, chances are it will be fine if recorked and stored in the refrigerator. The cooler the temperature the slower the deterioration of the wine, and most white wines will be fine for a day or two if kept cold.

Red wines that have been open for some time, or older red wines, likely will show some oxidation (the color tends to go brown, and the wine begins to smell flat and musty). But a number of things can help keep the wine at least until the next day, when you can try it again. (Sometimes younger red wines are actually better the second day!)

First, understand that air will ruin a wine faster than almost any other element, so the air inside the bottle should be replaced. Ideally, the wine should be put into a smaller bottle, recorked and then refrigerated.

Lacking a smaller bottle, I use sterilized glass marbles. Merely drop them one by one into the bottle until the air in the bottle has been displaced and the wine is up to about where the cork will reach when it is inserted.

To be sure, this makes a heavy bottle, but by displacing the air you will be protecting the remaining wine. And refrigerating it will keep the wine fresher.

Soup chilled for cool dinner party

By BETSY BALSLEY
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

There is really no excuse for a host at a party to be slaving away in the kitchen while everyone else sits around and enjoys good company. If you do all the work, certainly you are entitled to be very much a part of the fun.

Given that premise as a requirement for entertaining, how does one have the best of all worlds when having a party at home?

A buffet, of course, is the easiest way to serve a group. And if you can figure out a good way to make it a do-it-yourself buffet, so much the better.

There are numerous do-it-yourself parties that are easy to manage. One that is especially effective in warm weather is built around cold soups. Choose soups that are delicious as is, or that can be enhanced by adding other ingredients at the table.

If serving a large crowd, one way to expand on such a menu is to serve more than one type of soup. A favorite with my household is a curried apple soup that is accompanied by a group of traditional curry condiments — chopped chutney, coconut, chopped egg, chopped bacon, shredded chicken and chopped nuts. It can be placed at one end of a buffet table with all of the appropriate accompaniments around it, while a beautiful fresh gazpacho with an assortment of chopped fresh vegetables for toppings can be placed at the other end. In between, provide assorted breads and the dessert items of your choice. That way, your guests can eat what they want whenever it suits them.

The real beauty of this type of entertaining is that it truly is a do-ahead project. The soups must be made in advance in order to chill properly. And the serving will involve no last-minute pressure for they can be put out at your convenience. Just nestle the serving tureens, and any perishable accompaniments, in larger bowls filled with crushed ice and they will keep beautifully — at least until hunger pangs strike those present and they are ready to dine.

COLD YOGURT AND VAROUNK SOUP
(Yogurt-Cucumber Soup)

3 medium cucumbers
6 cups yogurt
2 tablespoons white vinegar
1 tablespoon olive oil
3 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon finely chopped mint
1½ teaspoons finely chopped dill
Salt
Ice cubes, optional
Assorted condiments: Cooked and chilled shredded chicken, bay shrimp, chopped crisp-cooked bacon, sunflower seeds, diced tomatoes, green pepper strips

Peel cucumbers and slice lengthwise into halves. Scoop out seeds by running tip of teaspoon down center of each half. Discard seeds. Grate cucumbers coarsely. There should be about 3 cups.

Place yogurt in deep bowl and whisk or stir until completely smooth. Gently but thoroughly beat in grated cucumbers, vinegar, oil, garlic, mint and dill. Season to taste with salt. Do not overbeat.

Refrigerate soup 2 hours or until thoroughly chilled. Place ice cube in each serving. Top with desired condiments. Makes 2 to 2 ½ quarts.

SOLID GOLD SOUP

½ cup minced onion
1 strip orange peel, 2 by ½ inches
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 tablespoon flour
2 cups sliced scraped carrots
2½ cups water
2 teaspoons sugar
¼ teaspoon ground ginger
¼ teaspoon ground cloves
1 ½ cups orange juice
Lemon juice
Salt
White pepper
¼ cup sour cream, whipping cream or yogurt
Finely chopped mint or chives

Saute onion and orange peel slowly in butter until onion is tender but not brown. Stir in flour, then carrots, water, sugar, ginger and cloves. Cover and cook gently until tender enough to puree, 10 to 15 minutes.

Whirl in blender until smoothly pureed. Blend in orange juice and 1 tablespoon lemon juice. Season to taste with salt and white pepper and additional lemon juice, if desired. Cover and chill several hours.

Serve garnished with dollop of sour cream sprinkled with mint. Makes about 1 quart.

CURRIED SOUP CALCUTTA

1 cup chopped onions
1 cup chopped peeled tart apple
½ cup chopped peeled carrots
½ cup chopped celery
1 tablespoon curry powder
½ cup butter or margarine
2 (10 ¾-ounce) cans condensed chicken broth
1 cup oats, uncooked
1 cup whipping cream
1 teaspoon lemon juice
Salt
Assorted condiments: Raisins, chopped peanuts, chutney, hard-cooked eggs, green onions, apple, crisp bacon or shredded chicken

Saute onions, apple, carrots, celery and curry powder in butter in skillet over medium heat about 10 minutes, or until vegetables are tender-crisp. Remove from heat.

Combine vegetable mixture, 1 can broth and oats in blender container. Cover and blend about 1 minute. Combine vegetable mixture, remaining broth, cream and lemon juice in large bowl. Mix well. Season to taste with salt.

Cover and chill 3 to 4 hours or overnight. Soup will thicken as it chills. If too thick, thin to desired consistency with ice water. Serve with assorted condiments. Makes about 1 ½ quarts.

ICED AVOCADO CREAM

2 medium avocados
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 thick slice onion
1½ cups chicken broth
1½ cups half-and-half
3 tablespoons dry Sherry
Salt, pepper
4 to 5 avocado slices, optional

Peel avocados and slice into blender container. Add lemon juice, onion and broth. Blend until smooth.

Add half and half, Sherry and season to taste with salt and pepper. Chill soup thoroughly and serve garnished with avocado slices. Makes about 1 quart.

GAZPACHO

1 end slice dry French bread
¾ cup garlic wine vinegar
3 cloves garlic
¼ onion
2 teaspoons salt
8 very ripe large tomatoes
3 large cucumbers, peeled
Assorted condiments: Chopped tomato, green onions, cucumber, green pepper, diced avocado or croutons

Puree bread, vinegar, garlic, onion and salt in blender. Place mixture in serving tureen.

Blend tomatoes and cucumbers and strain. Add to vinegar mixture, blending well. Chill 12 to 24 hours. Stir well before serving. Serve with assorted condiments. Makes 2 to 2½ quarts.

CHILLED SOUR CREAM SOUP

1 large onion, chopped
3 tablespoons butter or margarine
4 canned green chiles, peeled and seeded
1 cup milk
1 clove garlic, crushed
2 cups sour cream
Salt
Minced chives

Cook onion in butter until tender but not browned. Add chiles, milk and garlic. Heat through but do not boil.

Pour into blender container and blend smooth. Place sour cream in bowl and add onion mixture. Stir until smooth. Season to taste with salt. Chill thoroughly.

Serve sprinkled with minced chives. Makes about 1 quart.

Man eats shark: Port Aransas woman believes turnabout fair play

PORT ARANSAS, Texas (AP) — The word "shark" brings terror to swimmers, images of the movie "Jaws" to millions of Americans and visions of a great meal to Annette Reddell Hegen.

"If you're gonna catch it, eat it," says Reddell Hegen, who assembles seafood recipes for the Sea Grant College Program and Texas Agricultural Extension Service of Texas A&M University.

"It's really very good," she said.

Part of Reddell Hegen's job is to advise fishermen how to care for their catch and promote under-utilized Texas seafood species by devising recipes for consumer use.

Sharks fall into the under-utilized category.

"Lately, the main thing is to just teach people not to waste the resource," she says. "You're going to catch it. You're going to get your picture taken with it. Or you're going to win $2,000 for catching the biggest fish. Don't just dump it."

About 15 of the some 400 species of shark live in the Gulf of Mexico waters off the Texas coast, averaging from 3 to 7 feet long and under 300 pounds.

But sharks are bringing in only about 70 cents a pound to fishermen, making them not profitable commercially. In addition, only some of the varieties — mako, blacktip, sharpnose, silky and thresher — are best for eating, Reddell Hegen says.

A good shark will taste like a tender piece of pork. It has a firm texture and no bones. A bad shark will have an ammonia-like smell, meaning it was not properly handled after being caught.

Reddell Hegen has conducted blind taste tests in supermarkets around the state, discovering that people found shark compared favorably with very popular fish. It's the thought of shark, however, that must be overcome.

"I would try questioning two ways," she says. "'Would you like some fresh fish?' or 'How about a taste of some shark?'

"Very often with shark I'd get, 'Uh, uh, no thanks.' It made me wonder: 'Have you had it before and it tasted horrible or are you just totally freaked out?'"

Most people were freaked out. Some people didn't believe shark should be eaten.

"One lady spit it out. It was good until she knew what it was," Reddell Hegen says.

"People who are halfway open-minded would sample it," she says. "But no one would buy it unless they had tried it."

Among the 133 seafood recipes she has come up with since 1975 in a small kitchen in her Port Aransas office are Curried Shark, Shark Marseillaise, Charcoal Broiled Shark, Shark Creole and Shark Teriyaki.

"We've never had anybody in the taste test, if it's a good fresh item, reject it," she says. "It's great on an outdoor grill."

Creating the recipes — which then go to more than 600 retailers around Texas — is the favorite part of her job. She gets ideas from fishermen, acquaintances, marine agents, almost anyone.

"They give me the idea and I devise it and test it. There's no patent on recipes," she says.

Obviously, some people have acquired the taste for shark, she says. The Red Lobster seafood chain is featuring it as a "Catch of the Day" special item in some states. Major hotels in large cities also carry it.

Gary Graham, a Texas A&M fisheries specialist in Freeport, says fish researchers hope the Texas shark harvest becomes a commercial business in the future.

"It's not significant yet," he says. "The biggest problem is getting people to accept shark. It's got kind of a stigma."

Graham said even he was reluctant to try the meat.

"I had a hard time the first time. I'm as guilty as anyone else," he says.

Gear needed to haul in sharks is similar to that used for swordfish, according to Graham. Since swordfish are caught at night, fishermen may be able to make up for slow nights by reeling in shark during the day, he suggests.

"But the shark fishing industry is not here for now and it's a shame," he says.

One booming market, however, is among Orientals, who pay about $10 a pound for 6-to-8-inch shark fins and use the gelatinous material for delicate shark fin soup.

"Some shrimpers now are looking more for fins than for shrimp," Graham says.

Reddell Hegen doesn't have a recipe for the soup yet, but says she will come up with one if the industry requires it.

She fixes shark at home and considers it a treat to try someone else's preparation. But she's not likely to eat it in a restaurant.

"I prepare seafood at home better than a restaurant," she says with a laugh.

Squid meets its match with baked vegetables

By PHYLLIS C. RICHMAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The hamburger without its roll would hardly have qualified for the billion-dollar-sales club. And if ham and eggs had never met over an English muffin for eggs benedict, brunch would still be called lunch.

What is exciting about food — eating, cooking, discussing — is more than the ingredients. It is their combination that intrigues.

And like the burger and bun, some of the best dishes are combinations that once were served side by side, but then became ingeniously joined.

You'll find one in Tarpon Springs, Fla. — perhaps an unlikely place, but surely the hamburger sandwich and eggs benedict began nowhere more memorable.

Tarpon Springs, on the Gulf Coast north of Tampa, is exactly what you expect when you hear the term "tourist spot." It is touted as the largest natural-sponge area in the world, and its Sponge Docks — complete with Greek divers — are closely packed rows of souvenir shops, sponge sellers, Greek bakeries and restaurants. Noisy, busy, colorful and solidly commercial.

You'd hardly look to such a schlock strip for a great meal. But among those apparently identical Greek restaurants and bakeries I did indeed find a great dish.

Bill's Lighthouse restaurant, at the end of the docks, invented it and calls it nothing more original than Greek-Style Squid. Bill's Lighthouse has been there for nearly 25 years and is still run by the Rigas family, two brothers and a sister-in-law. The Greek-Style Squid has only been there two years.

"SEAFOOD IS usually served with a platter of tomatoes, olives, peppers, cheese, onions and cucumbers" in a Greek restaurant, said Stratos Rigas. And so was the pan-fried squid, which was pretty popular as both appetizer and main dish at Bill's Lighthouse.

Then one day, plain squid didn't seem to be enough. So they began to combine the garnish with the main dish for a little variety.

The whole family got into the game; they invented it together, said Rigas. "We all added our 2 cents to make it what it is," he said, proudly sharing credit with Theo and Maria Rigas.

That meant squeezing lemon juice and drizzling olive oil over the traditional oregano-scented, flour-coated fried squid, as they usually did when they served it.

But they also tossed the tomatoes from the relish tray into the squid, along with the olives, the hot peppers and the feta cheese, rather than serving them alone on the side.

And once that was done, the Rigas team decided to bake the dish for 10 minutes to meld the flavors and let the juices ooze together.

At Bill's Lighthouse, squid is pretty popular stuff. But in case it is not so fondly received at your house, the same dish can be made with other fried fish or seafood, perhaps shrimp or scallops.

BILL'S LIGHTHOUSE SQUID

4 pounds squid, cleaned and halved vertically
1 cup flour
1½ teaspoons salt
1 teaspoon pepper
3 teaspoons oregano
Oil for pan-frying
3 tomatoes, cut in wedges
3 pickled hot green peppers (pepperoncini), sliced
¾ cup Greek-style black olives
1 cup cubed feta cheese, or to taste
½ to ¾ cup olive oil
¼ cup lemon juice

Clean squid, halve them and pat dry. Combine flour, salt, pepper and oregano in a paper bag and shake squid in it to coat well (coating three times if necessary). Set aside for a few minutes.

In a frying pan, add oil to ½- to 1-inch depth and heat until quite hot. Add squid and fry over medium-high flame until golden, turning to brown both sides. If it spatters, cover with a screen as it cooks. Remove squid from pan and drain.

Put the squid in a baking pan just large enough to hold it all in one layer, about 9 by 12 inches. Top with the tomato wedges, the hot-pepper slices, the olives and the cubed feta cheese. Drizzle on the olive oil and squeeze the lemon juice over all. Bake at 350 degrees for 10 to 15 minutes or until the tomatoes are softened and the juices are oozing from the squid.

Serve hot or at room temperature, as an appetizer or main dish. Makes 6 main-dish servings, 12 appetizer servings.

Blueberry only recently domesticated

Hearst News Service

Sixty years ago, blueberries were a rare treat. They hadn't really been domesticated then, and many blueberry lovers had their secret sources, often deep in the woods where they'd pick the wild berries and bring them home to feast.

Wild blueberries grew over much of Northern Europe, and when English colonists first arrived in North America, they found wild blueberries in abundance. The berries were popular with East Coast Indians.

The first successful domestic strain wasn't developed until the beginning of the 20th century by Elizabeth White, a U.S. Department of Agriculture botanist, and F.V. Colville, who crossbred wild blueberries from the Pine Barrens of New Jersey. Today, most commercial blueberries come from New Jersey, Washington, North Carolina, Michigan and Maine. They need an acid soil, which rules out large portions of the country.

Blueberries are a treat for the diet-conscious, only 90 calories a cup, and they're so sweet they don't need sugar. They also are high in Vitamin A and potassium.

The North American Blueberry Council, a trade group, says blueberries will retain their peak flavor for two weeks — as long as they are dry. Don't wash them until just before you're ready to use them.

Freezing blueberries to eat later is simple. Just remove the cellophane top from the pint box and then wrap the entire container in plastic. Make sure the air holes at the bottom of the box are covered. If you bought blueberries in bulk, the council says they can be frozen in a layer on a baking sheet and then transferred to plastic freezer containers.

What makes blueberries so special is their versatility. They're great with cereal, in muffins, in a bowl with milk. They also make wonderful desserts.

One great traditional blueberry treat was "Maids of Honor" cake, served as the final course at wedding rehearsal dinners. Although the old-fashion cakes were elaborate and required several hours of preparation, you can make a delicious one in about 10 minutes using store-bought spongecake shells, ice cream and blueberries.

MAIDS OF HONOR CAKES

1½ cups fresh blueberries, rinsed and drained
6 dessert cake shells
½ cup evaporated milk
1 cup flaked coconut
Ice cream

Pour liqueur over the blueberries and toss lightly to mix. Refrigerate the blueberries. Brush the tops and sides of dessert cake shells with evaporated milk and then dip them in coconut. Place the shells on a baking sheet and bake them in a preheated 375-degree F oven for 10 minutes, or until the coconut is toasted. Remove the shells to a rack and let them cool.

To serve, place a scoop of ice cream in each shell and top with the blueberry-liqueur mixture. Makes six servings.

BLUEBERRY SKILLET SCONES

2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons cream of tartar
1 teaspoon baking soda
½ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon sugar
6 tablespoons butter
1 egg
½ cup milk (ice cold)
¾ cup fresh or dry-pack frozen blueberries, rolled in sugar

Into a large bowl, sift the flour, cream of tartar, baking soda, salt and sugar. Cut in the butter by bits and blend with the flour mixture until it is thoroughly mixed. Add the egg and milk to the bowl and mix until you have a soft dough. Do not overwork the dough.

Place the mixture on a lightly floured board and knead briefly into a ball. Roll or press the dough into a circle that is ¼-inch thick. Cut the dough into triangles. Divide blueberries among half of the triangles and top with the other halves. Press pastry edges to seal (Or form in egg rings to make them like English muffins.) Place the scones on a greased skillet that has been over medium heat for 5 minutes. Cook the scones for 10 minutes per side.

BLUEBERRY MERINGUES

3 egg whites, at room temperature
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
½ cup granulated sugar
1 cup fresh blueberries

In an electric mixer bowl, combine the egg whites and cream of tartar and beat at high speed until the egg whites are foamy. Gradually add the sugar and continue beating until the egg whites are very stiff and glossy, but not dry.

Fold in the blueberries.

Line baking sheets with brown paper and drop meringues by spoonfuls onto the paper, about 2 inches apart. Bake at 275 degrees F for 40 minutes or until meringues are firm but not browned. Makes about two dozen.

BLUEBERRY SHERBET

2 cups fresh or dry-pack frozen blueberries
¼ cup lemon, both skin and pulp
1 tablespoon lemon juice
2 egg whites, room temperature
½ cup sugar
1 teaspoon cinnamon
½ cup low-fat milk

Puree the blueberries, lemon and juice together in a blender. Beat the egg whites until they are stiff and gently beat in the sugar. Slowly fold in the fruit puree.

Pour the mixture into round layer cake pans and set them in your freezer until the mixture reaches the mushy stage (half-frozen), about 1-½ to 2 hours.

Remove the cake pans from the freezer and gently beat the mixture again. Pour the mixture into air-tight freezer containers and return them to the freezer until they are thoroughly set.

Before serving, remove the containers from the freezer and place sherbet in the refrigerator for 10 minutes to soften sherbet slightly. Makes six servings.

BLUEBERRIES AND MINT

1 cup sugar
1 cup water
1 pint fresh or dry-pack frozen blueberries
1 tablespoon fresh mint leaves (2 or 3 leaves)
½ cup lemon juice
1 cup whipping cream

Boil the sugar in water until it is dissolved and cool the sugar water slightly. Whirl syrup, blueberries and mint in a blender until the mint is very fine. When the mixture is cool, stir in the lemon juice.

Freeze the mixture until it is mushy and then beat it with an electric mixer until it is smooth. Whip the cream and fold it into the mixture. Freeze the mixture in a spring-form round pan until it is hard. Decorate the top with more blueberries.

BLUEBERRY GRANITA

In a 2-quart saucepan over high heat, heat 1 cup water and 1 cup sugar to boiling. Reduce the heat to medium and cook the mixture for 5 minutes. Stir 2 pints of blueberries, pureed, and 1 tablespoon lemon juice into the sugar mixture.

Pour the mixture into an 8-inch-square or round baking pan and freeze until it is firm, about 5 hours, stirring occasionally so the mixture freezes evenly.

To prepare for serving, cut the frozen mixture into small chunks and whirl in a blender just until the mixture becomes smooth. Makes four to six servings.

Blueberry desserts fast, easy to make

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

When a cook wants to take it easy there are some delightful desserts using fresh blueberries to prepare quickly and easily.

Here are a few blueberry desserts enjoyed at my house that may appeal to you.

The frosty purple-blue of the berries is perfect to use with the contrasting colors and flavors of cantaloupe and seedless green grapes for a fruit cup. For a special occasion, you may want to serve the combination with lemon, lime or pineapple sherbet.

Meringue shells from a bakery shop make a luxurious dessert when filled with whipped cream into which blueberries have been folded.

They look pretty when their tops are garnished with more berries and sprigs of fresh mint.

Bought angelfood cake — or a homemade one from the freezer — may be given similar treatment. Slice it into three layers and put them together again with blueberry-studded whipped cream.

Frost the whole cake with plain whipped cream and garnish with a generous amount of the berries.

You can have this ready well ahead of serving because it benefits from being chilled in the refrigerator for several hours.

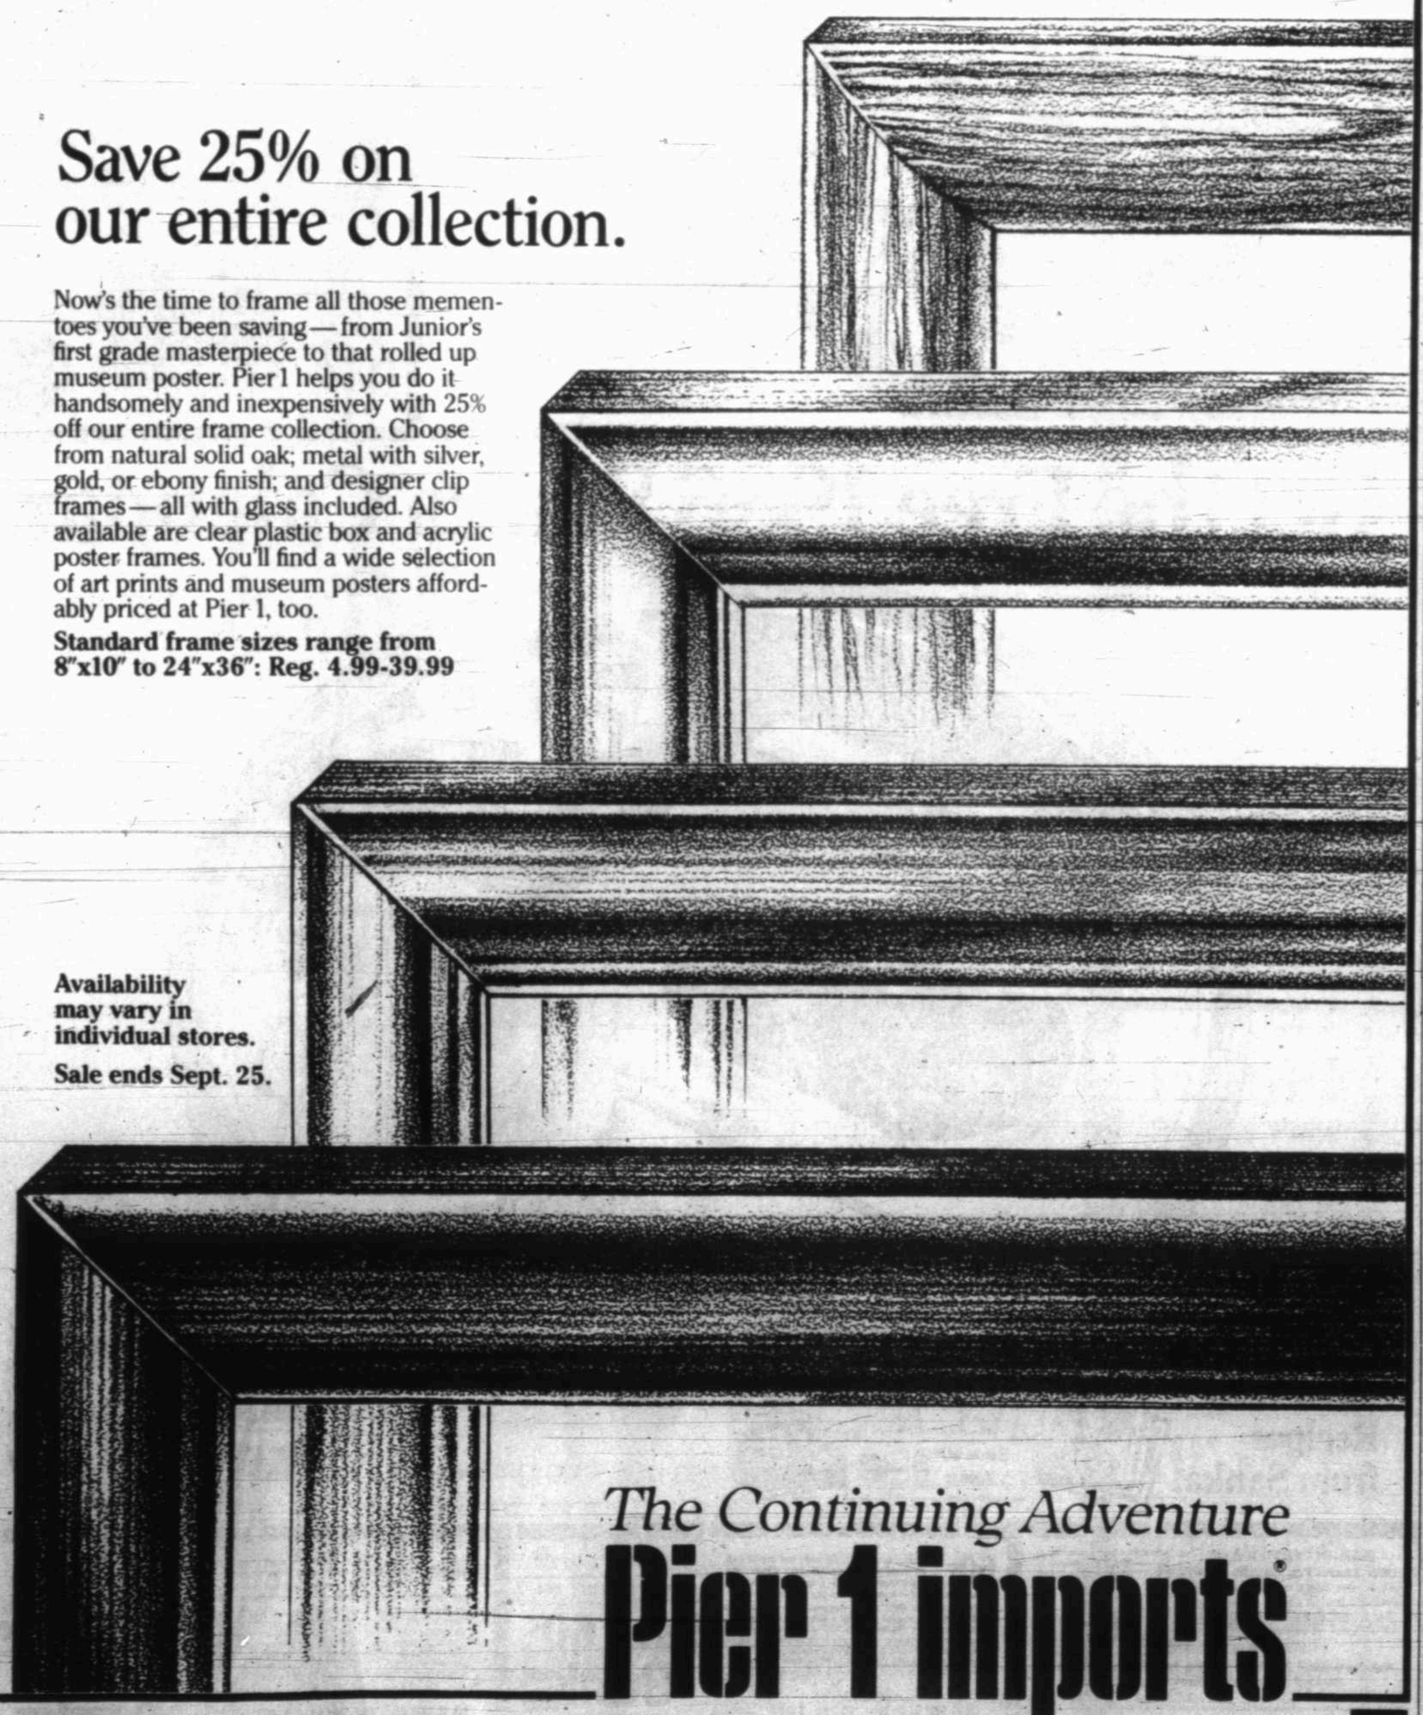

Last but not least, here's a creamy no-cook sauce to serve over fresh blueberries. To make it, beat together until blended 3 ounces cream cheese (at room temperature or cut into small pieces), ½ cup firmly packed light brown sugar, 1 cup sour cream and ½ teaspoon vanilla; cover and chill. (Makes 1¾ cups.)

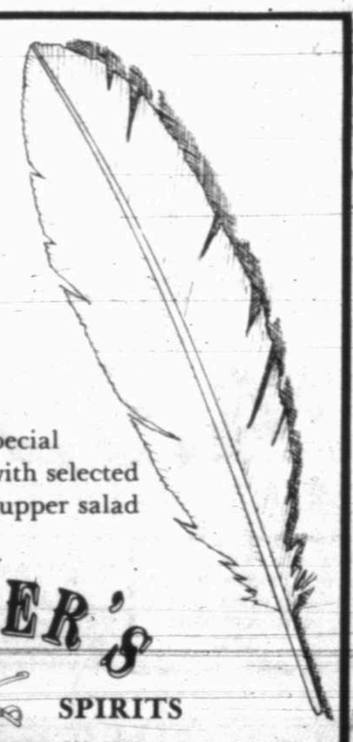

At serving time, fill sherbet or parfait glasses with blueberries and top with the chilled sauce.

Medicare freeze may mean decreased coverage

Ron Peterson

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

Midlanders who use Medicare may find themselves with decreased coverage over the next three years as a proposed "freeze" on rates plus inflation take their toll on government-supplied medical dollars, according to a hospital spokesman.

"The administration's (Department of Health and Human Services) proposal has been to freeze the Medicare DRG (diagnostic related groups) rates at the October 1984 rates for the next three years," said Ron Peterson, vice president of finance for Midland Memorial Hospital. "That means for the fiscal years ending Sept. 30, 1986, 1987 and 1988, we would be paid the same rates for DRGs as is presently being paid. And that doesn't count for inflation."

Peterson explained that there appears to be some question as to what course the freeze will take.

"The proposed freeze is an administrative freeze, not a congressional freeze," he said. "There appears to be some dispute over whether Congress wants to go that direction or not.

"It's one of those never-never kind of things," he added. "The HHS has been delegated the responsibility of writing the rules and regulations for the program. We kind of sit here waiting until final regulations are either written, approved by Congress or until no one says anything and then they become the law 'de facto,' so to speak."

MMH has taken the freeze seriously, though.

"We've budgeted for the increase (in amounts the hospital must pay for patients who cannot make up the difference) next year," said Peterson. "We assumed there was going to be a freeze."

MMH first learned of the proposal earlier this year.

"The first proposal was in May or June and the reason is obvious," he said. "To reduce expenditures."

Peterson explained that not only would a freeze be placed on existing rates, but a possible return to earlier rates could be put into effect.

"They're (HHS) saying that they're going to freeze the current rates, but at the same time, that the rates aren't quite right."

He further explained that HHS wants to "re-rate" current payments to 1982 rates.

"Everything is geared to an average cost per discharge, computed off the 1982 Medicare cost reports," said Peterson, who then gave an example how Medicare affixes rates.

"For example, 'minor skin disorders — age greater than 70 — with or without other problems, would have a 'weight' of .5909 percent to the average discharge cost computed from the base year."

"If the average cost of discharge was $1,000 (it wasn't, he said, it was higher), they would pay us $590.90," he said.

"For an amputation for endocrine, nutritional or metabolic disorders," he added, reading from a Medicare chart, "the 'weight' is 2.8360. This means they would pay us $2,830.60."

"What they are saying is they are going to freeze those rates at those weights — that's what they will pay us."

Peterson added that "more than likely, if the rates aren't quite right, they (HHS) will come back and adjust them down, not up."

"We don't know the full impact of it," he said. "What we do know is if inflation is 5 or 6 percent (we've assumed 5 percent in the budget for next year), that our contractual allowance will also increase by 5 percent."

The contractual allowance, he explained, is "the amount that is not covered by Medicare and that the hospital 'writes off.'"

Peterson indicated there currently are no concrete guidelines for budgeting for Medicare flucuations.

"Pure inflation is hard to measure in this business," he said. "Apples don't always equal apples. An in-patient visit consumes more (in costs) than an out-patient visit. Based on the volume increase that we've had over the last three years, you'd have to say our inflation rate has been offset by volume increase.

"The inflation has been pretty low," said Peterson. "Nationally, a few years ago, it was as much as 13 percent. It ran about 9 percent two years ago and it was at 6 to 7 percent last year. So, our factor we include is about right — everyone is projecting about 5 percent inflation this year."

Peterson indicated that the amount the hospital must write off will increase over the next three years accordingly, if the inflation continues at 5 to 6 percent.

Wrong man's arrest may cost county $100,000

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Joe Garcia is not Joe Garcia.

Midland County is being reminded of that in a federal lawsuit which possibly could cost the taxpayers here $100,000.

There's more than one Joe Garcia, age 42.

Three years ago, the Midland County District Attorney's Office pursued the writer of a $1,300 hot check, which was written in exchange for building supplies at McCoy's Lumber Co. in Midland.

A man identified simply as Joe Garcia of Big Spring had written the check, which was returned marked "insufficient funds" and then "account closed" from the Big Spring bank to the Midland lumber company. McCoy's had obtained the driver's license, date of birth and physical description of the man at the time the check was written.

Subsequently, Joe Garcia was indicted by a Midland County grand jury for felony theft and a warrant was issued for his arrest. He supposedly was in Big Spring, but the police there couldn't locate him.

"The warrant was in the computer and sat there the whole time," noted Midland County Attorney Mark Dettman. Dettman is defending Midland County, former Sheriff Dallas Smith, and Sheriff's Deputy Tim Rogers, who dispatched the warrant which ultimately ended in the arrest of the "other" Joe Garcia in Lubbock, in the civil lawsuit.

"SOMEHOW, THE Sheriff's Office received information that Joe Garcia was living in Lubbock," said Dettman, "and nobody in the Sheriff's Office can remember where the information came from." That was in 1983.

The Midland Sheriff's Office teletyped the warrant for Garcia's arrest to the Lubbock County Sheriff's Office, which in turn turned it over to the Lubbock Police Department. The police there were aware of the indicted Joe Garcia's date of birth, physical description and driver's license number.

"Some Lubbock police officers went to that (Garcia's) address about midnight and knocked on the door, and guess who opened the door? Joe Garcia," said Dettman. "He was the same height, same weight, same color of eyes, same birthday as the Joe Garcia they really wanted. He just had a different driver's license number." His name was Joe M. Garcia. The police noted the driver's-license discrepancy but nevertheless figured they had the right man despite protests and denials from Joe M. Garcia.

"So, the Lubbock Police Department went ahead and arrested him and took him to the Lubbock County Jail." Fourteen hours later, he was bonded out of jail and hired an attorney.

Joe M. Garcia subsequently drove to Big Spring, where the indicted Joe Garcia was known by the police there, and was recognized as not the Joe Garcia for whom the arrest warrant was issued.

"A short time later, the (Midland County) District Attorney discharged Joe M. Garcia from any responsibility" in the hot-check case. The case against the indicted Joe Garcia is still active.

JOE M. GARCIA and his attorney sued Midland County in state court and federal court. In federal court, he sued Midland County, Lubbock County and the Lubbock Police Department. U.S. District Chief Judge Halbert O. Woodward of the Northern District of Texas dismissed Lubbock County and the Lubbock Police Department from the suit. The state case is still pending.

Dettman, who will be defending Midland County, Smith and Rogers in the federal jury trial next week in Lubbock, said he is "not unsympathetic" to the plight of Joe M. Garcia. "But the county's position is that the taxpayers of Midland County are not required to pay $100,000 (in damages) in this case.

"In federal court," said Dettman, "a person can only recover damages if he was deprived of federal constitutional rights." This would include an arrest "without probable cause."

Janet Copeland, an assistant county attorney, will be assisting Dettman. Joe M. Garcia's attorney in the litigation is John Simpson of Lubbock.

Dettman said he is developing a two-pronged defense.

MC seeking bids on phone system

By JULIE HILLRICHS

Midland College officials say they have a public relations problem and the college telephone system is to blame.

The board on Tuesday authorized MC President Dr. Jess Parrish to seek bids to either lease or purchase a new telephone system "to relieve congestion on the switchboard and to give people calling in a much greater response time," according to trustee Reagan Legg.

Defense's case to begin in arson re-trial

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

EL PASO — Attorneys representing Ector County Commissioner Willie Hammond Jr. and former Odessa City Councilman Keith Weddel, on trial for the second time on federal arson-conspiracy charges, are expected to begin calling witnesses in their clients' defense shortly after noon today.

As the trial resumed Wednesday morning, government attorneys began questioning their remaining seven witnesses, having called a total of 13 witnesses when U.S. District Judge Lucius Bunton recessed the trial about 7 p.m.

John Petersen spent about two hours on the witness stand Wednesday morning undergoing cross-examination by defense attorneys. Peterson claims that, after at least three meetings with Hammond, one of which included Weddel, he arranged to have his brother, Lawrence "Cotton" Peterson, and Midlander L.C. Burditt actually torch the O'Michael Building, which was damaged by fire Nov. 25, 1981. The building, located at 301 N. Jackson, has since been remodeled and is known as Jackson Center.

The 13th witness late Wednesday was Jerry Taylor, an Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms explosives expert, who testified the fire was started by an incendiary device.

After the trial recessed, Warren Burnett and Travis Shelton, representing Hammond and Weddel respectively, criticized the testimony of prosecution witnesses.

Speaking to reporters, Burnett said they, referring specifically to testimony of the Petersons and Burditt, "are telling a slightly different story than they told before. Each contradicts the other." The Odessa attorney contended the three witnesses "change their stories every 30 minutes," and that "the government is stuck with a bunch of bad witnesses."

The crux is, Shelton said, they simply don't have any evidence against him (Weddel) to speak of.

Midland man sentenced to six years in prison for possession

From Staff Reports

A 26-year-old Midland man was sentenced Tuesday to six years in state prison for aggravated possession of cocaine.

"If you can't do the time, don't do the crime," Assistant District Attorney Jack Connors said during the punishment phase, urging the 238th District Court jury not to give Paul David Barrows probation.

Barrows had been convicted Monday of possessing three ounces of cocaine, which were found in his boot after he got off a plane at Midland Regional Airport. He faced a first-degree felony range of five to 99 years or life in prison, but since he had no previous convictions, Barrows was also eligible for probation.

The jury could also have assessed a fine up to $50,000, Connors said.

In other reports from law-enforcement agencies, a 52-year-old Fort Worth man was listed in satisfactory condition in Midland Memorial Hospital this morning after a Tuesday accident on Interstate 20 near Stanton, according to hospital and Department of Public Safety reports.

Edward C. Bruce was injured about 5:20 a.m. when the truck-tractor he was driving struck a 1982 Dodge pickup from the rear while the pickup was being towed by a 1975 Ford, DPS reports said.

Bruce's truck forced the pickup into the Ford, which swerved sharply left into the median, coming to a halt facing south. The truck then ran over the pickup, turning over on top of it, reports said.

Treated and released from Martin County Hospital were George Dixon, 27, who was driving the Ford, and Barbara Dixon, 24, both of Beaumont, Calif. Bruce was admitted to Midland Memorial Hospital in stable condition Tuesday with facial lacerations, but might be released later today, an MMH spokeswoman said.

The vehicles were heading west in the right lane about 4½ miles west of Stanton in Martin County when the accident occurred, reports said.

A fire in a trailer house on County Road 1140 near State Highway 158 was reported about 9:58 p.m. Tuesday. Heavy damage to the bedroom and smoke damage throughout the house was reported by fire officials, who identified the probable cause of the fire as a cigarette which fell on a stack of magazines. The house is owned by Bobby Putnam, Route 4, Box 4B, reports said.

A 1980 Chevy pickup valued at $4,000 was reported stolen sometime between Tuesday and this morning by Vonnie Wofford, 3408 Douglas, according to police reports.

Some Midlanders think Reagan should consult with Nixon

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

President Reagan has recently consulted former President Richard Nixon as part of his preparation for the November summit meeting with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Nixon was the first U.S. president to visit the Soviet Union and China. He resigned from the presidency in 1974 after a series of scandals beginning with the burglary of Democratic Party national headquarters in the Watergate office complex.

On Tuesday a random number of Midlanders was asked whether they thought Reagan should seek advice from Nixon.

Out of 14 people surveyed, eight said they thought Reagan should consult with Nixon. Three said Reagan should not be getting advice from Nixon, two had no opinions on the subject and one person said Reagan should resort to Nixon's advice on foreign policy issues only.

"Experience always gives the best point of view. Nixon knows what happened before. I think it's great he (Reagan) relies on old sources. That's the best way to find out from the past," said Paula Bell, a deputy for the County Clerk.

Lisa Nelson, who works with a local oil company, said, "Yes I think he should. Nixon probably wasn't the best president, but I think he has a lot of good points, especially on foreign policy."

Lisa Nelson

Ruth Dodd

Tricia Boyd

Musselman

Ruth Dodd, a homemaker, added, "Well, I don't see any harm in it. He (Nixon) did start something when he was in office and I think he had good intentions."

Ross Padgett, who works with an oil company, said, "Yes I think so, because Nixon made some pretty good policy decisions when he was in office and Nixon was a good colleague of the Russians."

Tricia Boyd, a speech pathologist, said Reagan should seek advice from Nixon, because, "Nixon was a good president and had a lot of experience."

U.S. Postal Service employee Donald Musselman said he thought Reagan should consult with Nixon and that, "I don't think he (Nixon) left in disgrace. I think it was a put-up job. There's no president that is pretty pink."

Lee Fisher, president of an oil field service company, said, "I think under the scenario we find our economy and world affairs in now, two heads would be better than one. But I don't know if Nixon's opinion would be better."

Those opposing Reagan going to Nixon for advice included Bud Sanders, who works as a consultant. Sanders said, "I think it would be a bad thing. Nixon had his chance and blew it. I didn't like Nixon when he was president. I didn't vote for him. Now he is probably not any better informed than any other citizen. Reagan is the one who has all the imput on what is happening now."

Mac Mather, a stockbroker, said he thinks it would hurt Reagan's image if he consulted with Nixon. "I think Reagan is his own man. He makes his own decisions. I think it would be bad for his image. Reagan is independent and strong. He appears to be his own person," Mather said.

Frank Morgan, a computer technician, said, "I don't think Nixon is qualified right now to give him advice at this day and time."

Odessa chamber asks ECISD board for tax zone

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Greater Odessa Area Chamber of Commerce representatives appeared before Ector County school trustees Tuesday night and asked board members to approve creation of a Tax Increment Zone.

Roy Allen, chairman of the Downton Odessa Development Committee, explained creation of such a zone would freeze taxable values at the current level and dedicate, for no more than 20 years, all future increases in taxable values to public improvements.

Allen noted that taxable values in the proposed area have been declining for about the past two years and expressed the belief the decline will continue unless positive action is taken to improve the area to attract businesses to the downtown area.

Generally, trustees said they favored creation of the Tax Increment Zone, although John Quisenberry questioned dedication of the proposed area for the maximum 20-year period, saying it's a very long time.

The presentation is the final one to be made to the several taxing entities in Ector County by chamber representatives before they return to the Odessa City Council to seek a resolution that would formally create the dedicated tax zone.

Allen explained that, under state law, the City Council is empowered to unilaterally create the tax increment zone. He added that in other cities where city governing bodies had acted unilaterally the concept was not successful because it did not enjoy the total community support required.

It is for this reason, he said, Odessa chamber officials have opted to secure the support of all county taxing entities. Allen noted Odessa College trustees and Ector County Commissioners Court members, as well as the City Council, have tentatively approved the proposal because they realize the potential benefits that may accrue.

Odessa chamber industrial development vice president Chuck Bernhard noted that while the taxable values would be frozen for a specific number of years, the various taxing entities would ultimately benefit from whatever increases occurred in the area because of improvement and development.

In other action Wednesday night, Ector school trustees brought the district's grading policies in line with state mandated procedures. In grades 1 through 12, all student grades will be rendered numerically, with 70 (a low D) mandatory for passing.

Board members also made two new appointments to open positions on the federal court-ordered Tri-Ethnic Committee, naming Marian White and Drew Crutcher to those positions. Mrs. White is the wife of David White, owner of Joe White Lincoln-Mercury, and Crutcher is a partner in the engineering firm of Landgraf and Crutcher.

Reappointed to the committee were Delma Abalos, the Rev. Roy Gentry and Dwane Tucker.

Ector trustees also approved a $250,000 capital improvements program, which Superintendent Bill Holm said is partly necessary to meet insurance requirements.

The projects enumerated include modernization of kitchen areas at several schools, lighting, sound systems, heating and air conditioning units.

The hiring of 20 new teachers was approved to help the school district meet overcrowding in classrooms produced by increased student population.

MC

The college purchased its current system eight years ago when student enrollment and the number of personnel was less than half the present population, Parrish said.

In addition, "two trunks (lines) are out," he said. "We don't even know when the lines are out because there's a continuous ring. It's become a tremendous public relations problem and I think it's actually deterring us in our work."

MC business manager Bob Phillips, said "Technology has caught up with us and it's just a matter of time before we have a major breakdown."

He added, that maintenance on the present system is virtually non-existant. "They can keep us going by patching, but they have to get the parts from some place else. In most cases, they don't even make those parts anymore."

Phillips estimated the cost of purchasing a "direct in-dialing" system somewhere between $75,000 and $100,000. Direct in-dialing would allow a person to dial offices direct without having to go through the college switchboard.

Phillips predicted that such a service would "eliminate 90 percent of our switchboard problems."

In other action, board announced it will host a combination open house and dedication of the college's Health-Sciences Center on Oct. 20.

Festivities will be from 1 to 6 p.m. with dedication ceremonies set for 4:30 p.m.

H.A. Tuck, director of public relations, said all campus buildings will be open for public viewing. Departmental demonstrations, concerts and other activities also are planned.

"We've gotten awfully good response from the (college community)," Tuck said. "We think it's going to be a very busy and exciting afternoon."

Odessa church to host diocese's new bishop

ODESSA — St. Elizabeth Ann Steton Church of Odessa is hosting a "West Texas Welcome" for Bishop Michael David Pfeifer, OMI, from 7 to 8 p.m. today at the Holiday Centre, 5901 E. Highway 80. A formal program will be held from 8 to 9 p.m.

The get-acquainted meeting is being hosted by the Midland-Odessa deanery. Pfeifer will be on hand to greet individuals as they arrive from 7 to 8 p.m. prior to the beginning of the formal program.

Pfeifer was notified in May of this year that Pope John Paul II wished to appoint him the fifth bishop of San Angelo. The formal announcement was made June 4.

Pfeifer's first assignment as priest was to the Colegio Vista Hermosa and La Purisima Seminary in Mexico where he remained from July 1965 to August 1967.

The Colegio and Seminary were two parts of a private Catholic school operated by the Oblates. The Mexican government put many restrictions on religious institutions in Mexico and such a private school was deemed necessary for the education of future priests. Pfeifer served as treasurer of the seminary and school and was president of a new grammar school section which he helped establish.

He was then assigned to one of his few placements in the United States in September 1967, that of associate pastor at St. Patrick's Parish, Houston. From February to July of 1968, he served in the same capacity at Our Lady of Guadalupe Parish, Brownsville.

In the summer of 1968, a new assignment awaited him in Mexico. In August of that year, he was appointed Mission Procurator of the Oblate Missions in Mexico, an assignment he held until May 1975.

As Mission Procurator, Pfeifer's task was to promote the missions. He traveled extensively during those years, looking for volunteers to work in the missions, raising funds in Mexico and the United States, and visiting the 100 Oblate missions in Oaxaca.

In July 1975, Pfeifer began another new assignment, that of Vicar Provincial of the Mexico delegation of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, with residence in Mexico City. He was the superior of the Oblate community of Mexico. He had charge of 245 Oblate priests and brothers working in Texas, Mexico and across the southern United States. He was still serving in this capacity in May.

GARCIA

"The Constitution doesn't guarantee that only the guilty will be arrested," Dettman said in quoting U.S. Supreme Court Associate Justice William H. Rehnquist in an opinion issued in a case similar to the Garcia-Garcia case. In that case, the "wrong" brother was arrested in a drug case.

"The Constitution guarantees merely that due process will be followed before a person is arrested or charged with a crime."

As far his second defense, Dettman said the arrest of Joe M. Garcia was "just a good-faith mistake."

"And public officials are guaranteed immunity from damages in federal court if their actions are in good faith," he said.

Dettman noted that the Garcia-Garcia case sprang from a "weird set of circumstances."

"The government is not perfect," he said. "And the government is responsible to do the best they can, but they are not required to achieve perfection."

Hispanic chamber to sponsor Fiesta in Park

From Staff Reports

The Midland Hispanic Chamber of Commerce will sponsor a Fiesta in the Park from 3 to 7 p.m. Sunday at Hogan Park.

Music will be provided by Topacio and Joe and the Jetliners. Karate demonstrations also are planned.

Families are asked to bring picnic lunches and their lawn chairs for the event.

TRIAL

Burnett described the trial as "an effort to hound this man (Hammond) out of office" and observed the investigation and previous trial had already forced former Odessa Mayor Bob Bryant out of office.

Peterson is an ex-convict facing trial, probably in October, on a burglary trial in Andrews County. His brother is already serving a 50-year prison sentence in connection with the same burglary. Burditt is an ex-convict currently on probation on a gambling conviction.

MC will offer 'Horse Seminar'

From Staff Reports

The Midland College Department of Community Services will offer a "Horse Seminar" from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday at the Midland County Arena.

The seminar is provided to persons interested in the psychology of horse training. Sessions will include psychology training, line driving and trail and packing.

A question and answer period will follow the seminar. The course fee is $8 for all 4-H members and $12 for non-members.

For information, call the Department of Community Services at 684-7851, extensions 147 or 216.

MEDICARE

"If inflation is 5 to 6 percent next year, our contractual allowance will increase by 5 percent. By the second year, it would increase 10.25 percent and if it increases into the third year, it would be 15.76 percent."

Peterson estimated that only about 50 percent of Medicare patients, which account for 30 percent of all patients at MMH, have supplemental coverage to the government insurance. Medicare currently accounts for 28 percent of hospital revenues, he said.

Officials hope rains flush out river contaminated by acid

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Texas Water Commission officials say they hope fall rains will flush out the Medina River and help return it to normal after a train derailment spewed 50,000 gallons of sulfuric acid into the waters.

Fish and plant life for at least six miles were killed and about a 10-mile stretch of the river was directly affected by the spill late Saturday, officials said.

Six monitoring stations were set up at different locations on the river to check the waters, which were neutralized with tons of lime, said Henry Karnei of the TWC.

Texas Department of Health officials warned against irrigation and cattle watering downstream for at least three weeks.

The agency also dispatched two men to monitor area wells, which so far have shown no evidence of contamination, Karnei said.

The derailment of the Southern Pacific train late Saturday sent 21 tankers loaded with the highly corrosive acid onto the banks of the river below.

At least 300 residents in a 1-mile radius were evacuated until early Monday.

Eight workers on the cleanup crew were taken to local hospitals after sustaining burns. One of them was taken in critical condition to the burn unit at Brooke Army Medical Center.

About 20 others on the cleanup crew suffered superficial burns and were treated and released at the scene Monday.

Southern Pacific spokesman Jim Johnson said workers began repairing the damaged bridge Tuesday and hoped to be finished by noon Thursday.

The acid, which was still bubbling on the ground in spots Tuesday, will have "positively no affect" on the Edwards Aquifer, said Augustine De La Cruz of the TWC.

The spill was over the aquifer but is not in the recharge zone of the water supply for San Antonio and four surrounding counties, he said.

The site also is above clay that is fairly impermeable, 60 feet of shale and layers of calcium carbonate, which would act as a neutralizer, De La Cruz said.

Cleanup workers dumped tons of lime into the river to neutralize the acid.

Tom Milligan, TWC spokesman, said too much lime had been deposited at a point about six miles downstream from the spill site and the pH level was up to 12 early Tuesday.

Normal level for the river is 7. The river had been down to a pH of 1 after the spill, officials said.

AMA seeking relief against increased suits

AUSTIN (AP) — The American Medical Association will be seeking help from Congress and state legislatures to get relief from increasing malpractice lawsuits and settlements, its president says.

"We feel that the system is not working very well," Dr. Harrison L. Rogers said Tuesday.

While American doctors pay some $2 billion annually in malpractice insurance fees, only 28 percent of that "actually gets back to the injured party who wins in court," Rogers told a news conference.

The Atlanta, Ga., physician said the AMA will lobby Congress for legislation that would provide financial incentives to states which adopt changes in malpractice lawsuit procedures.

"The AMA this year is going to introduce national legislation to encourage all states in the country to pass tort reform," he said.

"We're asking them to put limits on the total amount of pain and suffering (damages) that will be given. We're asking for limits on the statute of limitations (during which time someone can file suit)," he said.

Rogers, in Austin for several speaking engagements, said the number of doctors being sued for malpractice has risen from one out of 12 in 1979 to one in five last year.

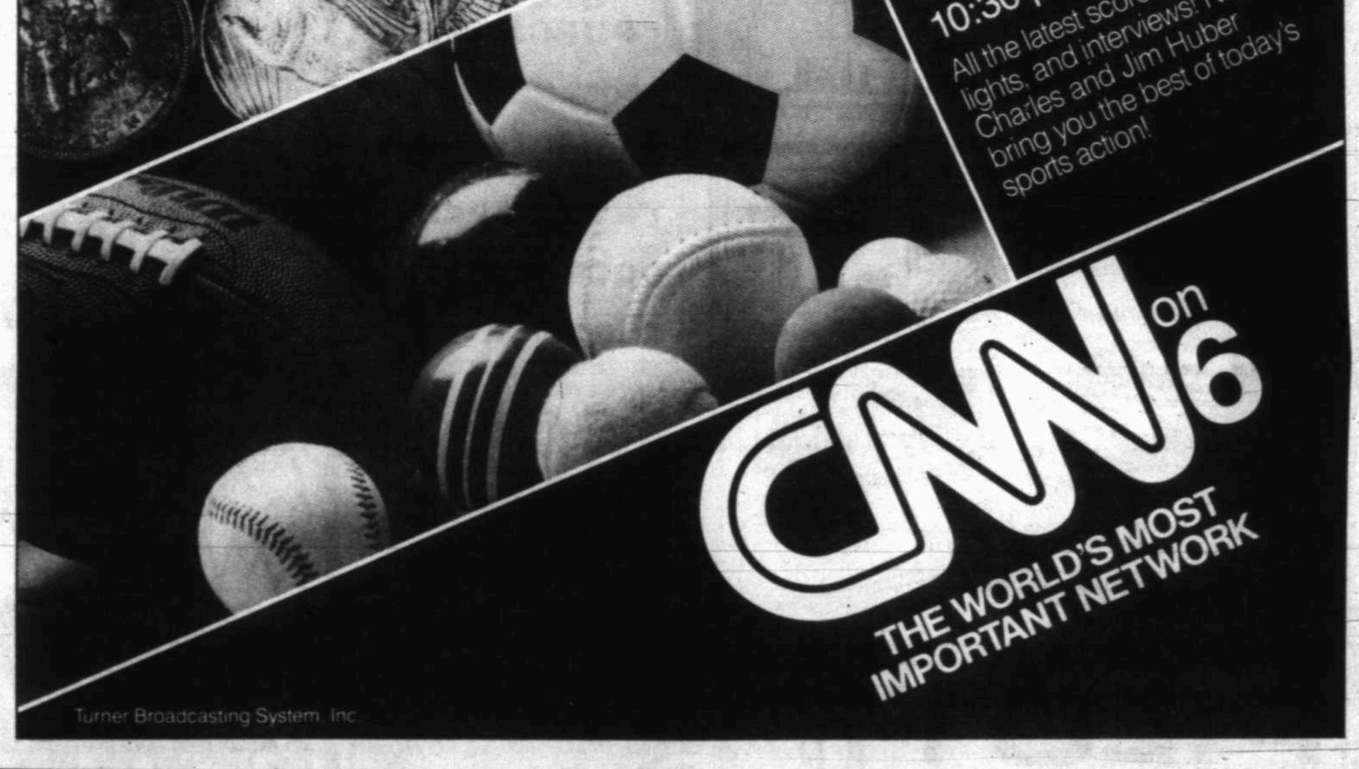

During that same period, the size of malpractice verdicts rose from about $40,000 to $350,000, he said.

"This represents a dramatic change. This affects how doctors provide service," he said.

Many doctors are forced to practice "defensive medicine," Rogers said, ordering tests and additional examinations which might not be absolutely necessary.

Doctors made a big push in state legislatures during the mid-1970s for limits on the amount of malpractice judgments.

Teen accused of killing family to be tried as adult

HENDERSON (AP) — A 16-year-old boy accused of beating his stepbrother to death with a baseball bat and then shooting and killing his grandmother and stepfather has been certified to stand trial as an adult.

Timothy James Brown was arraigned Tuesday on three counts of murder, and bond was set at $100,000 on each count, the Tyler Telegraph reported. The Crims Chapel teenager was moved from the Rusk County Juvenile Detention Facility to the Rusk County Jail.

Brown allegedly killed his three family members Aug. 20 because of a dispute over the use of the telephone and visits to his girlfriend's house. The victims were Kevin Brown, 11, Kenneth D. Brown, 35 and Eva Juanita Ray, 59.

Also on Tuesday, Brown went before State District Judge Don Ross set bond for Brown at $300,000 and ordered him moved to the county jail.

Johnson kicks off program

Lady Bird

HOUSTON (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson dedicated a water truck Tuesday to kick off a program aimed at planting 5,500 trees in downtown Houston.

"Houstonians are known by both their dreams and ability to get things down," the former first lady told a group gathered at Sam Houston Park in downtown Houston. "Already Houston stands as a dynamic testament of wonder and accomplishment."

"What a shining star it will be when trees for downtown Houston becomes a reality."

James Rylander, with the The Living Skyline program, said 5,500 trees are expected to be planted over a 150-block area in downtown Houston by April 1986.

He said $1.5 million is needed to complete the program and are asking private citizens to contribute.

Amputee wins damages

AUSTIN (AP) — An 80-year-old Austin woman who lost her leg from an infection that began after a podiatrist removed a calluus from her foot has been awarded $1.18 million in malpractice damages.

Bernice Hightower filed against Austin podiatrist B.L. Payne after doctors at Brackenridge Hospital were forced to amputate her infected leg in 1983.

She alleged Payne had removed the callus on July 5, 1982, in his office under "less than sterile conditions" and had failed to obtain her informed consent. Payne denied any negligence.

Ms. Hightower was treated for the infection by other physicians and spent a total of seven months in the hospital in 1982 and 1983, her lawyer said.

School to get donation

GOLDEN, Colo. (AP) — Adolph Coors Co. plans to donate $10,000 to each of seven predominately black universities, including Texas Southern University in Houston, to prove the brewery's commitment to aiding the black community, a Coors spokeswoman announced Tuesday.

Paula Pete, Coors' assistant national program manager, said presentation of the $10,000 checks will be made in New Orleans Sept. 26 to the college presidents or other representatives of the schools.

The other are universities are Fisk University, Nashville, Tenn.; Florida A & M University, Tallahassee, Fla.; Morehouse College and Spelman College, both in Atlanta; Grambling University, Grambling, La.; and Morgan State University, Baltimore.

"Coors is proud to be able to contribute to these outstanding universities in order to help enhance education for black students," said Ms. Pete.

Besides supporting educational institutions, Coors has expanded its commitment to the black community through other programs, Ms. Pete said. The other programs include stepped-up hiring and promotion of black employees, increased associations with black vendors and financial institutions, and contribution of at least $500,000 per year to the black community.

DRY SKIN
The skin is one of the body's protective systems. It is an important organ in that it helps to receive senses from external environment. You need to take care of your skin just like any other important system of your body. A common skin problem encountered by many people is Xerosis or dry skin.
Xerosis can be cared for in most cases by using mild soaps, moisturizers, preferable unscented; and quick warm showers rather than hot baths. In spite of the above measures sometimes dry skin will produce mild to severe itching and eczema in which case you should see your dermatologist before the problem becomes chronic. Do not use over the counter medications unless advised to do so by your physicians.

Former villagers pay their last respects

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WAHIAWA, Hawaii — They had come to say goodby, to pay final homage to their hometown, a small, sleepy plantation village that has outlived its usefulness and is soon to be razed by bulldozers.

They had come, these 750 young, middle-aged and old Japanese-Americans, from throughout the Hawaiian Islands, from many places on the mainland, to this obscure village on the island of Kauai hidden 87 years from the outside world by fields of tall sugar cane.

Among those paying their last respects to the village and a bygone era were many of Hawaii's political, business and education leaders, the progeny of illiterate, immigrant sugar cane workers who came here from Japan.

"We are here for our last glimpse of our beloved birthplace," a teary-eyed Jerry Hirata said at an emotional banquet during the three-day reunion held recently in Hanapepe and Wahiawa.

Hirata, a 37-year-old software computer specialist from Santa Monica, Calif., was an organizer of the reunion and master of ceremonies at the banquet. He grew up in ths village of 150 unpainted, company-owned frame dwellings. His mother and father were born in Wahiawa and have lived all but 14 years of their lives here. His grandparents, contract laborers brought from Japan to work in the McBryde Co. sugar cane fields, helped found the village in 1898.

"This is a journey home for all of us," Hirata told those at the banquet in the Hanapepe Buddhist church community building. "This is no ordinary reunion. Our roots are here. Our families are made up of those who lived and worked here in a passing era.

Shizuko Kato, 80, who came to the village from hirshima when she was 16, sang a song about picture brides like herself, a song that was sung by women working in the cane fields to relieve the monotony. After the song Kato recalled:

"I came from Japan alone in 1921 to marry a man I had never met. I worked 45 years in the sugar fields. Now I have two children, nine grandchildren, 13 great-grandchildren. My husband died 25 years ago."

ICHIRO IZUKA, 74, who now lives in Kahuku on the island of Oahu, remembers his parents being persuaded by an agent from the sugar cane company that Hawaii would be a paradise for the Japanese workers and "the work in the fields child's play. The agent preferred couples to single men, knowing their children would also be available to spend long hours growing and harvesting the cane," he said.

When Izuka was 10, he would spend 10 hours a day working alongside grown-ups and other children in the village, he said. "It was a tough life. It made us strong. It taught us how to survive."

No signs point to Wahiawa (pronounced Wa-he-a-wa), five miles east of Hanapepe along Halewili Road, although that is where the turnoff to the village is.

Wahiawa is reached by a narrow, winding, red-dirt road, not unlike scores of other similar no-name roads that disappear into sugar cane fields spread over much of this lush, tropical island-mountain rising out of the sea. Northernmost of the Hawaiian chain, Kauai is nearly circular, has a circumference of 125 miles and a population of 39,000.

The name of the village — a camp for men, women and children who in the past toiled long hours for little pay growing and harvesting sugar cane — never has appeared on maps of the island.

Today the village is in ruins, choked with weeds. Homes are in various stages of collapse, some completely caved in with roofs resting on the ground. The community's 1918 Buddhist Temple is abandoned, its walls and ceilings ripped apart by a hurricane two years ago.

Desks in the village Japanese-language school are jumbled one atop another in a corner. The tin-roofed community center stands empty.

One row of nine homes are still intact, occupied by plantation workers who will move on in a few weeks when what's left of Wahiawa is leveled and the land on which it stands plowed over to become another sugar cane field.

WAHIAWA IS typical of old sugar cane plantation camps that once existed throughout the 50th state. Thousands of laborers were recruited from Japan beginning a century ago to work in the fields.

It was Feb. 8, 1885 that the first party of immigrant laborers from Japan — 676 men, 159 women and 108 children — arrived in Hawaii on the steamship City of Tokyo.

They came to work 10 hours a day, six days a week in the cane fields, men received $9 a month, women $6 a month. In Japan, laborers at the time were paid 10 cents a day, less than $3 a month. The immigrants came planning to work a few years in Hawaii, save enough money to return to Japan and live a more comfortable life. Few returned.

Hawaii's two U.S. senators, Daniel K. Inouye, 60, and Spark Matsunaga, 68, are descendants of immigrant sugar cane workers. Inouye's grandparents were among the founders of Wahiawa. Matsunaga's parents migrated from Japan to work in a Kauai sugar cane plantation a few miles from Wahiawa.

Inouye flew from Washington to attend the reunion "to visit old friends," he said, and "to honor the grueling sacrifices of the early plantation workers, my grandparents and my father among them. The legacy of our ancestors will live on." While in Wahiawa, Inouye visited the home that his grandparents lived in for 25 years, a home his father lived in the first 20 years of his life.

Matsu Shimabukuro, 83, above, visits the abondoned schoolroom at a small sugar plantation village at Wahiawa, Hawaii, that once was home, but has outlived its usefulness and is destined to be razed by bulldozers. Sen. Dan Inouye, D-Hawaii, left, whose grandparents lived at this workcamp, talks with a group who have come to say goodbye to the village.

On a balmy Sunday morning, the third day of the reunion, the villagers gathered in Wahiawa to walk the streets of the collapsing homes, to remember, to attend services in the abandoned temple where the Rev. Koichi Miyoshi led prayers in memory of those no longer living who had called Wahiawa home.

Kamako Nakasone, 92, was the oldest at the reunion. "I have not left my home in Honolulu in years, but I could not pass this up. I come to see my old friends, to see the old camp," she explained.

She came to Wahiawa as a picture bride in 1912 to marry a man she had seen in photographs but had never met. She worked 20 years in the cane fields, in between having three children. One child died at 4. Her son, Henry, 65, is a widely known plant geneticist, a University of Hawaii professor of tropical agriculture. Her daughter, Kimiye Nakasone, 68, is an executive secretary in Honolulu.

"I WORKED IN the fields and later took in laundry, washing clothes for single men in the camp. We had no washing machines. We boiled the clothes in a big iron kettle, hit the clothes with a stick to get rid of the dirt," she recalled.

"During World War II, I did laundry the same way for soldiers stationed in a nearby army camp, charging 20 cents to wash and iron a pair of Khaki pants."

During World War II, unlike mainland Japanese-Americans who were removed to internment camps, those living in Hawaii continued to live in their homes.

Matsu Shimabukuro, 83, of Honolulu, spent several moments alone in the abandoned Japanese-language school, at one point resting one hand on a desk, her eyes closed in meditation.

Hirata, his two sisters, Adele Iwasaki, 40, of Lihue, Kauai, and Evelyn Masaki, 45, an elementary schoolteacher from Gardena, Calif., walked slowly through the ruins of the village with their parents, Fumiko, 65, and Sadao Hirata, 71, from Eleele, Kauai.

In a few weeks, the temple, school, community center and all the homes will be gone.

"It's sad," Hirata mused as the family sat on the steps of the house they lived in. "I dread the finality. To visit your hometown and know you will never see it again doesn't happen to too many people...."

Trailer park 'ticky-tacky' next to Walden Pond

By LLOYD GROVE
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

CONCORD, Mass. — The inhabitants of Walden Breezes are departing, one by one, their exits attended by artless ceremony. When a trailer is hauled away, revealing a rectangle of dead leaves, the remaining residents gather to stare as if at a patch of eternity. A moment of silence, and then Flora Haskett arrives with her rake.

"They don't bring in anybody to clean up the empty spots anymore," says Ms. Haskett, 72, a retired practical nurse. She has lived at Walden Breezes for the past quarter-century, a hundred yards downwind of Henry David Thoreau's famous pond. "That's why I cleaned up that spot there, this one across the way, and that one over there. I help any way I can."

She has tidied up after three farewells in the past six months. Her rake is poised for the departure of a fourth trailer, recently abandoned and awaiting the final tow.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, which owns the trailer park, runs it according to "the attrition plan." In the end there will be no trailers, no inhabitants, no exits. The laundry shack will be knocked apart, the stretch of asphalt broken up. The neighboring Concord town dump will be rendered a green hill. And then the breezes will be as sweet as they were when Thoreau walked these woods.

He wrote in his journal in 1841: "I want to go soon and live by the pond, where I shall hear only the wind whispering among the reeds. It will be success if I shall have left myself behind. But my friends ask what will I do when I get there. Will it not be employment enough to watch the progress of the seasons?"

It was largely to honor its native son that the Commonwealth of Massachusetts bought the privately owned trailer park in 1976 and closed it forever to newcomers. Only a two-lane blacktop separates it from the banks of the pond where — from July 4, 1845, to Sept. 6, 1847, in a cabin built from local pine — Thoreau endeavored "to live deliberately, to front only the essential facts of life."

"If Thoreau was alive today," ventures one resident, "he'd be living in a trailer."

"It's a paradigm of American culture," says James Gutensohn, commissioner of the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Management. "It's ticky-tacky right next to something of profound natural beauty and historical significance."

THE ENVIRONMENTAL managers hope to distill Walden Breezes to its Thoreauvian essence with a bulldozer. Eventually the five acres will become part of the Walden Pond state reservation, a gift from Ralph Waldo Emerson's heirs, among others. For now, though, the managers must wait. A condition of the 1976 sale granted each trailer-dweller lifetime tenancy.

"I did not want to see them thrown out on the street," says the erstwhile landlord, James Sliman. "They were old people."

He bought the property when he left the Army at the end of World War II, and lived there for three decades before selling it to the commonwealth. When he retired to Florida nine years ago, Walden Breezes was a community of more than 60 trailers, enlivened by visiting "travel trailers" and the promise of life on the open road.

Today there are 30 trailers going nowhere, not counting the outbound empty one.

"Everything," says Gilbert Bliss, state director of forests and parks, "seems to be going along very nicely."

Walden Breezes hovers at the brink of Route 126 like an aqua apparition — pale Landolas, ghostly Homettes, porcelain chipmunks, plastic flamingos. The "mobile" homes rest side by side on the spongy earth, swathed in coverlets of shade, surrounded by flower beds, kitchen gardens, weeping willows. The moan of somebody's television set, tuned to "Wheel of Fortune," is all but lost in the rustling of trees.

"What do you want? Rowdy?" asks Joe Thurston, the resident manager. "I'd like it if it was noisy. But most of the time it ain't."

Some of the last remaining residents of Walden Breezes, Mass., gather to talk about the fate of the trailer park near Walden Pond made famous by Henry David Thoreau. From left, Jim Swaffield, Henry Caswell, Flora Haskett and Thelma and Joe Thurston,

"He don't agree with me," says his wife Thelma, "but at our age, quiet is good."

They live in a spotless Roycraft, 10 feet wide by 45 feet long, where Thelma sits placidly at the kitchen table and Joe runs a damp cloth along the already pristine counter. When they met 30-odd years ago, she was working as a restaurant hostess at a hotel in nearby Concord. He was the hotel's maintenance man.

"I DON'T know, Joe was just a good person," Thelma says when asked what caught her eye. They were married and moved to the trailer park in 1954. Today they are both 81, although on wildly unequal terms. He is bright-eyed, robust, perpetually in motion. She is pained, short of breath, blind.

"We've got 43 people right now," Mrs. Thurston says. "There's eight single men — widowers — and nine single women. Two of them have never been married, and the others are widows. And then there's 26 married people."

"I'm gonna fool 'em all," says Thurston, his smooth pink face framed by a trim white beard. "I'm going to be around forever."

"I wouldn't mind if I went tomorrow," says his wife. Her eyes are obscured by mud-colored glasses. "I think it's nice to go to bed at night and close your eyes and never wake up again."

Her husband vigorously shakes his head.

"People don't want to go!" he shouts. "They say they do, but they don't. Everybody wants to live as long as they can. I want to be here to see what I read in a book there — that everybody's gonna be a nudist in the year 2000."

"Oh, Joe. Come on," says his wife. "There's nothing good-looking about a nude person."

Time at Walden Breezes runs in no particular direction. It rambles, doubles back upon itself, stops here and there at a pool of warm memory. Dangling his legs from the window seat of his squat, narrow Belvedere, Henry Caswell recalls the bass fishing, the community cookouts, the crowds of thirsty tourists at Jim Sliman's refreshment stand, the men of the trailer park gathering to play cribbage or ogle the bathers at the pond.

"You don't remember when Dempsey fought Willard, do you?" asks Caswell, 92, the oldest resident. "That was a long while ago. I was down in the parking lot there with an old Model T. We didn't have a radio then. We had the crystal sets. There was no trout in the pond then. It used to be all bass."

THURSTON ARRIVES with the morning mail, handing it in through the screen door. Caswell accepts it warily, muttering about his bills. When Thurston leaves, he says, "That's 'Bush.' " The nickname refers to Thurston's beard-old news by most standards, a novel attraction at Walden Breezes. "How do you like his whiskers?"

Caswell crinkles up his face. "I tell you, you get along in years, and it raises hell with you. This place in the winter is a bastard. You have to shovel snow. That's the hell of it. Lenny used to have a couple of boys to shovel the snow. But Lenny's boys — they've grown up now. I don't know if I'll last next winter here. I think so. I don't know yet. Maybe. I could reach 100 if I wanted to. I know damn well I could."

Before long 86-year-old Jim Swaffield, a bearlike native of Nova Scotia, shambles in without knocking and finds himself a seat. He is followed by 69-year-old Russell Bailey, a stoop-shouldered man with a moony smile. Caswell crooks an antic finger at them.

"We used to go down to the pond every year. Didn't we, Jim?" he says. "We'd go down in the fall of the year and get all the trout we wanted. I use a spinning rod but no bait. I use flies. There's some nice trout taken out down here. Fifteen-pounders. I never count 'em. I give 'em away most times."

"He's a fly man," Swaffield says.

Caswell snickers. "And he's a poor goddam fisherman, I'll tell you that. He's a terrible fisherman."

Whose trailer will be the last to go? The three men shake with laughter. The oldest laughs loudest.

"You come around next year," he says. "There'll be none of us around here. We'll be down in the hole."

The site of Thoreau's celebrated communion with nature, overlooking the big pond from a high southern bank, has all the trappings of a shrine. The cabin itself was moved and later demolished after he decamped, but the spot is marked by a pile of rocks, known as the Thoreau Cairn, and various inscribed stones. Acolytes and admirers come from far and wide to venerate these relics. The people of Walden Breezes, meanwhile, hang back and talk heresy — a few even daring to utter the blasphemy "Lake Walden," as if it were any old body of H2O.

"I THINK Thoreau was a man," says one of these, Flora Haskett, "who was just trying to escape from reality for a while."

"He was an alcoholic," claims Jeanie McCormack. "He was also a great lover of women of all kinds. He was a man that liked his night life. They say he was quite a guy."

"He didn't want to pay his taxes," says Thurston. "Today he'd be considered a bum. Was he really that great a writer? They make a hullabaloo about Thoreau, but I don't see them making so much noise about Emerson. Now Emerson was a writer."

"He was a bloody hippie, that's all he was," says Henry Caswell. "Emerson made him. You know that."

"Henry thinks he was a crook," says Swaffield.

"That's right. He used to steal the farmers' corn. Jesus, don't you put our names in the paper, saying he wasn't a big deal. They'll bury us down in Concord."

Anne McGrath flinches at the words "Lake Walden." They grate upon her ears. "Oh, horrible, horrible," gasps the silver-haired, flinty-eyed Concordian. She's ensconced in a reading room of the Thoreau Lyceum, where she presides over the Thoreau Society.

"I grew up with Walden Breezes," she says, "and I'm delighted to think that eventually it won't be there anymore. When you realize what an intelligent, well-educated person Thoreau was, and how sensible his ideas were, it makes it all the more ridiculous to have people say these things about him. These are the kinds of things that come out of the mouths of people who never read books. And believe me," she adds, lowering her voice, "we are surrounded by them."
