Businesses due insurance rebate

Policyholders owed $272 million in surplus workers' compensation funds

By Juan B. Elizondo Jr.
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Hundreds of the state's large and medium-sized employers overpaid for workers' compensation insurance and are due $272 million in refunds, according to state Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer.

The commissioner, who decided the refunds Friday, said returning the money to the companies is fair and could help their employees and customers.

As least 1,200 companies, and as many as 2,500, will get a share of the $272 million based on the amount of money they paid.

Attorney Scott Clearman estimated companies that paid $1 million in premiums would get about $170,000 back.

The surplus accrued from 1991 to 1994 in the now-defunct Texas Assigned Risk Pool. That pool, taken over by the Workers' Compensation Insurance Facility, was the last resort for companies that otherwise could not find workers' compensation insurance.

Companies getting the refunds held so-called retrospectively rated insurance policies. Under such agreements, the cost of the insurance is based on the number of claims made in the previous year.

TDI could not give an exact number or list of companies affected, but said it could be thousands, including Coca-Cola Bottling Group Southwest Inc. in San Antonio and Houston-based Wall Street Deli Inc.

Calls to attorneys for the companies were not immediately returned to The Associated Press.

In retrospectively rated policies, premiums are adjusted annually to account for new and ongoing claims.

Caroline Scott, TDI's top attorney, said the overpayments came after the pool ran short of money for several years. She said premiums collected eventually were far more than claims actually filed.

"I think it was incumbent upon the insurance companies to refund that surplus just as they would have expected to be paid a deficit," Bomer said.

Insurance companies argued that they should be allowed to keep the extra money because when the risk pool ran short of money, they assumed the costs.

Insurers also argued that it was legal-

Juice with a jolt

DALLAS — Feeling a little sluggish in the morning, but don't have time to put on a pot of coffee? The quick pick-me-up you need could be orange juice with a jolt of caffeine. Jim Hines, with Idaho-based Diehard Beverage Co., said he came up with the idea while sitting in a coffee shop one morning. He figured that he and others around him were drinking "exotic" flavored coffee because they didn't like the taste of regular Joe.

Anti-drug patrol on hold in areas in wake of shooting

McALLEN (AP) — Military anti-drug patrols have been suspended along parts of the Mexican border while authorities investigate the fatal shooting of a teen-age goat herder by a Marine, officials said Friday.

The U.S. Border Patrol's El Paso sector, which encompasses 189 miles of border in West Texas and New Mexico, is the latest to halt the use of military listening and observation posts along the border.

Sector spokesman Doug Mosier said the operations had been cancelled until authorities complete an investigation into the May 20 shooting of 18-year-old Esequiel Hernandez Jr.

Hernandez was shot by a Marine corporal on an anti-drug patrol in Redford, a town of about 100 people 180 miles southeast of El Paso.

The Marines contend Hernandez fired his .22-caliber rifle twice and was about to fire a third time when Cpl. Clemente Banuelos opened fire. Hernandez's family says he carried the rifle to protect his goats and sometimes shot at targets.

The Texas Rangers and the Marine Corps are investigating the incident, which raised questions about whether sending military personnel on observation missions is worth the risk.

Of the five Border Patrol sectors in Texas, El Paso and Marfa said they ceased military operations as a direct result of the Redford shooting. Del Rio and McAllen currently aren't using military patrols, while officials in Laredo wouldn't say.

The Marfa sector, which includes Redford, suspended military operations immediately after the shooting, said acting Chief Jerry Agan.

"We decided it would be prudent to suspend everything," said Agan, whose sector stretches 420 miles along the Texas-Mexico border.

In the Del Rio sector, Assistant Chief Warren Billings said his district's last operation with the military was two months ago. However, he said the 205-mile sector prob-

Producer prices down for a record sixth straight month

WASHINGTON (AP) — Inflation at the wholesale level fell for a sixth straight month in June — a record for the 50 years the government has kept track.

"For the foreseeable future, inflation is dead," said Paul Huard, a senior vice president for the National Association of Manufacturers.

The Labor Department reported Friday that the prices wholesalers pay for goods from melons to magazines edged a seasonally adjusted 0.1 percent lower last month, following monthly declines of between 0.2 percent and 0.6 percent since January.

The longest previous string of price declines since the government began tracking the Producer Price Index in 1947 was five in a row, from August through December 1952.

In spite of the fastest economic growth in a decade — which earlier this year made the Federal Reserve nervous enough about inflation to raise interest rates slightly — producer prices are declining at a 3.4 percent annual rate so far this year.

For consumers, the news means a favorable shopping forecast.

Retail prices have risen at just a 1.4 percent annual rate during the first five months of the year. The Labor Department's June report, due out next week, should show continued stability, according to Song Won Sohn, chief economist for Norwest Corp. in Minneapolis.

"Good news abounds all over the place," said Sohn. "We are clearly in uncharted waters and the only thing we can do is enjoy the combination of healthy economic

Curriculum OK'd at contentious board meeting

AUSTIN (AP) — A massive curriculum rewrite was approved by the State Board of Education at a rancorous meeting Friday in which efforts to amend the document were cut off, prompting threats of possible legal action.

"Hell hath no fury like a woman scorned," said board member Donna Ballard of The Woodlands.

She's one of six Republican board members who are backed by religious conservatives and voted against the Texas Essential Knowledge and Skills for English, math, science, health and social studies.

The first wholesale overhaul of education standards in more than a decade, it was approved 9-6 after board Chairman Jack Christie of Houston — also a Republican, but a supporter of the rewrite — cut off consideration of amendments to the measure.

Christi said the six were just trying to delay action on what he believes is an important document to raise academic standards.

Texas, UC law schools enroll few blacks in post-affirmative action era

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Sometimes in her classes at the University of California's Boalt Hall law school, Jennifer Madden would find herself catching the eye of a fellow black student.

"We could just look at each other and we'd have the same look," said Madden, one of 31 blacks who enrolled at Boalt in 1994.

She can't imagine what it's going to be like this fall, when only one black student is expected in the incoming class of 270 — the first group admitted since the University of California ended affirmative action.

"Being one of 31, I still felt that I had support and I had guidance. One — there's definitely a lot of implications," said Madden, who graduated this spring.

The vanishing black law student was a phenomenon at two other major law schools that dropped affirmative action this year — the University of Texas and the University of California at Los Angeles. As of July, Texas was expecting four black students compared with last year's 31; UCLA was expecting 10, down from 19.

Hispanic enrollment dropped from 28 to 14 at Boalt, 42 to 21 at Texas and 45 to 41 at UCLA.

In addition to the higher admissions standards, officials blamed the decrease on better offers from private universities, student concerns that they weren't welcome at the affirmative action-free campuses and fear of being stranded in a sea of white.

For a while, it appeared Texas would have just one black student this fall. But then Malcolm LaVergne withdrew his deposit and decided to go to Cornell University. Other blacks have since decided to enroll at Texas.

LaVergne, a Houston-area native who is graduating with honors from Stephen F. Austin State University, said the media scrutiny at Texas would have been too much to endure during the typically hellish first year of law school

"The situation I was going to be coming into was going

BORDER: Operations in El Paso, Marfa sectors affected

ably would hold off on any additional operations until the Redford investigation is over.

The 280-mile McAllen Border Patrol sector has not conducted any military operations since January, when an Army soldier in Brownsville wounded a Mexican national in self-defense, said spokeswoman Letty Valadez.

However, Ms. Valadez said operations had ceased because of a lack of need, not because of the shootings.

Laredo Border Patrol officials would not disclose whether military operations are currently under way along the 117 miles they patrol. However, Deputy Chief Richard Marroquin said they had no plans to stop using the military.

"We have evaluated any operations that we have had ongoing or are going to have in the future, and from it we have determined that there's no reason for us to suspend any operations," he said.

Bill Strassberger, a spokesman for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, which oversees the Border Patrol, said he did not know of any Border Patrol sectors outside of Texas that had ceased military operations.

In Arizona, a Border Patrol spokeswoman said there had been no changes regarding military assistance since the Texas shooting.

"They are involved in the same operations that they have been normally doing," said Sonya Ealey of the Border Patrol's Tucson sector.

Since 1989, all branches of the military have helped civilian law enforcement agencies on a variety of anti-drug missions along the border.

Military assistance must be requested by a local, state or federal law enforcement agency, said Maureen Bossch, a spokeswoman for El Paso-based Joint Task Force Six, which coordinates the military's anti-drug operations.

"If they decide they don't need military support, the operations stop," she said.

Joint Task Force Six has conducted more than 3,000 missions since its inception, and 575 of those were listening and observation post operations along the border, Ms. Bossch said. She did not know how many missions were ongoing.

Border Patrol officials noted that in some sectors where military patrols had been halted, soldiers continue to assist with other projects, such as construction and equipment maintenance.

PRICES: Wall Street reacts favorably to wholesale inflation news

Wall Street's reaction to the news was favorable, with the Dow Jones Industrial Average closing up 35.06 at 7,921.82.

Prices paid to producers of food fell 0.9 percent last month after a 0.4 percent increase in May. Beef and veal declined 1.5 percent as did poultry. Fish, pork, vegetable and fruit prices all decreased, with beet costs plunging 45.2 percent and blueberries, 50.6 percent.

In a second optimistic government report Friday, the Agriculture Department said bumper crops of wheat and soybeans are expected this year, including a winter wheat crop that will be 20 percent larger than last year.

Both retail and wholesale inflation numbers have been helped this year by declining energy prices, but energy costs at the wholesale level rose 0.7 percent in June after five consecutive declines.

Gasoline was up 0.4 percent on a seasonally adjusted basis; natural gas, 1.8 percent, and residential electric power, 0.2 percent. Heating oil, though, fell 5.8 percent.

Excluding the often volatile food and energy sectors, producer prices inched 0.1 percent higher in June after two monthly declines.

For the first half of the year, these so-called core prices that economists believe indicate the underlying inflation rate have fallen 0.3 percent at an annual rate. That compares favorably to the last half of 1996, when they rose at a 0.6 percent rate.

Last month, book prices fell 1.1 percent and household appliances were down 0.3 percent. Men's clothing also declined. But there were increases for computers, alcoholic beverages and trucks.

Prospects that the good news will continue were bolstered by the absence of inflation in the very early stages of production.

In June, there was no change in the price of intermediate goods after four monthly declines. Crude goods fell 3.3 percent, pulled down by a 15.4 percent plunge in crude petroleum, the steepest in 3 1/2 years.

"Basically, there is simply no pressure in the inflation pipeline," said Bruce Steinberg, chief economist for Merrill Lynch & Co. "We look for a stable inflation rate during the next year and would not rule out further disinflation."

An example of the three processing stages would be bread for finished, flour for intermediate and wheat for crude.

BOARD: Opponents to curriculum say they may seek legal action

(From 1A)

Ms. Ballard and other opponents say the document isn't rigorous or specific enough and that they were just trying to improve it. They said Christie, in parliamentary rulings including the one to cut off amendments, violated board rules.

"I think this is a violation of the people who elected us," Ms. Ballard said. "I will consider legal action."

Board member Randy Stevenson of Bullard, who also voted against the curriculum, said he would seek legal advice "to investigate the possibility of an injunction to force the board to reconvene and decide in a fair and proper manner what is best for the citizens and children of Texas."

Also voting against the curriculum were David Bradley of Beaumont, Richard Neill of Fort Worth, Robert Offutt of San Antonio, and Richard Watson of Gorman.

Several directed comments at Christie, who had a parliamentarian present to back up his rulings. Bradley told Christie, "Your ignorance of the law seems to be your best defense, and that doesn't fly."

Christie said if there is a court challenge, he believes his rulings will "easily stand up in court."

"I got experts to back up any decision that I made. I don't have all the answers, but I know where the experts are that do have the answers," he said.

Asked about the sometimes harsh tone of the meeting, Christie said, "I don't think it was nastiness. I think it was more just some political maneuvering. ...

"Some of the members that made some of the accusations ... they've had three years to make these changes. We've had some of the brightest people in this state and nation putting together these higher standards for the children. So to wait until the last hour to challenge the three years of work, that's political," he said.

Board member Will Davis of Austin, a Democrat, said, "There are nine of us that want to get about the business of Texas education ... and there are a minority of us who want to frustrate that and stop it from happening."

Others said a number of changes have been made to the rewrite in recent days, so it wasn't out of order for more amendments to be offered.

Concerning the charge of political maneuvering, Ms. Ballard said, "They shut down debate. ... Who's being political?"

Offutt said he believes concerns brought up by conservatives about the document over past months have led to changes strengthening it. But he said because it still needs further change, he wouldn't vote for it.

Education board members already had approved a new curriculum for geometry, Algebra I and II and enrichment courses, including fine arts and career and technology. The curriculum, which forms the basis for statewide tests and the adoption of instructional materials, will begin being implemented in the 1998-99 school year.

TAAS survives federal inquiry

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas' largest student achievement test has survived a federal inquiry into allegations that it discriminates against minority students. But the way state officials handle the test will remain under scrutiny through the year 2000.

After almost two years, the U.S. Department of Education ended its review of the Texas Assessment of Academic Skills with a 15-page agreement that offers few changes in the way Texas administers the test.

The agreement avoided the issue of whether the test is discriminatory and instead affirmed Texas Education Agency policies, many of which are state law.

"We did not make a determination on whether the test was discriminatory or not," said Taylor D. August, Dallas director of the Office of Civil Rights Southern Division.

"We found it easier for everybody to try to work collaboratively and not create an adversarial relationship. We worked out an agreement to resolve the complaint making that allegation," August said.

The decision was applauded by state education leaders but fell short of expectations for at least some minority leaders.

The complaint, filed by the Texas branch of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, alleged that the achievement test has a discriminatory impact on black and Hispanic students and those of limited English proficiency.

It cited a "disproportionate" number of minority students who have scored poorly or failed the test and who have been denied high school diplomas by failing to pass the exit-level TAAS required for high school graduation.

TAAS tests measure reading, writing and math skills of Texas students in grades three through eight. The exit-level test, which is required for graduation, is first administered to 10th graders, but students have eight chances to pass before graduation.

LAW: 38 percent fewer blacks applied to UT law school this year to be cameras in my face, probably. Reporters all around asking all these questions, 'What's it like being the only black?'" he said. "It's not a situation I wanted."

Race-based admissions at the Texas law school were banned by a federal appeals court ruling, while the University of California system voted in 1995 to eliminate racial preferences. The policy first took effect with graduate students entering in 1997. It won't apply to undergraduates until 1998.

With race disallowed as a consideration in admissions, Texas and the University of California are free to take into account such factors as a student's socioeconomic background or any individual hardships.

Nationally, law school applications from all races dropped about 9 percent. But the drop-off was steeper for blacks and Hispanics.

At Boalt, 27 percent fewer blacks applied, 304 vs. 414, and 24 percent fewer Hispanics, 355 vs. 467. Of those, 14 blacks were admitted, down 81 percent from 1996, and 39 Hispanics, down 50 percent.

This fall, 38 percent fewer blacks applied to UT's law school, 225 vs. 361, and 14 percent fewer Hispanics, 306 vs. 354. Of those, 11 blacks and 34 Hispanics were admitted, down from 65 blacks and 70 Hispanics last year, drops of 83 percent and 51 percent.

Enrollment is not complete, so the makeup of the classes could change.

At Boalt, all 14 of the black students admitted declined to attend. The one black student who is coming had deferred enrollment from the year before.

Texas and the University of California would not release the names of any of the blacks admitted.

Behind the statistics is the question: How will this play out in the classroom?

Boalt third-year law student Marvin Peguese said he believes everyone loses. He recalled one class discussion about the family of a domestic violence victim that had tried to sue the city for not providing adequate police protection but was stymied by a court ruling that the city was not liable.

"That would have been the end of that discussion had not some of us been there to say, 'No, we've lived in these communities and sometimes the police don't show up,'" said Peguese, who along with two other blacks in the class argued that the ruling could be challenged, perhaps under equal protection laws.

Those against affirmative action say the figures bolster their argument that racial preferences papered over a flawed educational system.

"That really is the story — that we have been giving such huge preferences based on skin color that it kind of masked the fact that we have such a long way to go in the K-12 system to get black kids prepared for the competition," said Ward Connerly, a black businessman and member of the UC Board of Regents who led the effort to repeal racial preferences.

Those in favor of race-based admissions say scrapping affirmative action knocks out the most effective remedy to decades of discrimination — and blocks the pipeline of future black and Hispanic lawyers and law professors.

"It's scandalous. It's scary," said Eva Paterson. A civil rights lawyer in Northern California, Paterson, who was admitted to Boalt under affirmative action in 1972, is getting a distinguished alumni award next month. "Pretty ironic, isn't it?" she said.

"It's hard to believe that the Class of 2000 would have one or no African-American students," Peguese said. Referring to the tumultuous 1957 desegregation of a Little Rock, Ark., high school, he said: "Even Little Rock had nine."

Plane crash site search shows no sign of bombs

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Crews searching a rugged mountainside where an Air Force warplane crashed plan to keep looking through the weekend.

The teams searched Friday for four 500-pound bombs and other munitions that were on board the A-10 piloted by Capt. Craig Button. They also looked for clues to the cause of the April 2 crash on the 13,365-foot Gold Dust Peak in central Colorado.

One team focused on the rock cliffs believed to be the place where the plane crashed into the mountain. Another was going over a lower point where a snow field meets the cliffs.

The plane crashed into the near-vertical mountain peak after Button, who was stationed at Laughlin Air Force Base in Del Rio, Texas, veered off from a routine training mission in Arizona, 800 miles away.

So far, crews have found smaller munitions, pieces of the plane's hydraulic system and fuselage, charts from the cockpit, and the mangled remains of the jet's forward-mounted Gatling cannon. Searchers also have found human remains.

Bomer called it unfortunate that the process took so long. He added, though, that the delay and other circumstances should not "stand in the way of property rights of the policyholders."

The decision goes into effect in about two weeks. Insurance companies will have another six months to calculate each company's refund and return the money.

Bosnian Serbs accuse NATO-led forces of overstepping authority

PALE, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — Bosnian Serbs posted extra guards and took other steps Friday to protect their senior officials, determined to thwart any more attempts by NATO forces to snatch indicted war crimes suspects.

One suspect, a Bosnian Serb accused of transporting Muslim prisoners to Serb torture centers during the war, woke up Friday in a prison cell in The Hague, Netherlands, after being captured in a first-of-its-kind raid by the NATO-led forces in Bosnia.

Bosnian Serbs were angry about the raid Thursday that led to Milan Kovacevic's arrest and accused the peace forces of overstepping their authority. Another suspect, Simo Drljaca, was killed during the raid in a shootout with British troops.

However, Momcilo Krajisnik, the Serb member of the three-member Bosnian presidency, stopped short Friday of threatening retaliation and instead urged his people to stay calm.

Security forces were increased around Serb leaders, who have decided not to travel outside Serb-held territory to meet with international officials, said Dragan Kapetina, deputy defense minister of the Serb substate.

Meanwhile, thousands of Serbs in the towns of Prijedor and Banja Luka rallied to protest the raid and Drljaca's death. Many in both cities held candles aloft in a silent salute.

Though not wanted by tribunal authorities, Krajisnik refused Friday to attend a meeting in Sarajevo of the country's three-member presidency and top international envoys. A Western diplomat said he cited security concerns. The meeting was moved to the Serb stronghold of Pale instead.

After the session, Krajisnik complained the NATO peace force had "overstepped its authority" and "annulled the good cooperation we have had."

But he urged restraint. "We will advise our army, police and people to stay calm," he said. "We must not dramatize this situation and direct it towards further divisions."

Krajisnik also expressed concern over "secret, private lists" of indicted war crimes suspects. In addition to the 77 publicly indicted suspects, the U.N. war crimes tribunal has said some indictments are being kept secret so the suspects can be caught off-guard.

"We hope we will overcome this problem too. There must be no mystery about those lists because it would cause panic," Krajisnik said.

The Bosnian Serbs' wartime leader, Radovan Karadzic, — who has been indicted twice by the U.N. tribunal — has installed extra security at his Pale headquarters. Townspeople say he has surrounded his house with land mines.

Karadzic also sleeps in different places to avoid nighttime raids, they said.

Kapetina said Friday the operation against Drljaca and Kovacevic showed the NATO-led peace force had changed its mission, and Serbs should demand an explanation.

But the commander of the NATO-led peace force, U.S. Gen. William Crouch, denied the force's mandate had changed and said his troops would continue to detain any indicted war crimes suspect they encounter.

The peacekeeping force "will also use its rules of engagement, as it did when one of my soldiers was shot and returned fire," Crouch said. A British soldiers was shot in the leg in the shootout that broke out when Drljaca resisted arrest.

The NATO force's orders bar tracking down war crimes suspects, but allow their capture if soldiers happen upon them. The rules allow plenty of room for interpretation, however, and the capture was an obvious effort to take more aggressive action.

Even though it did not target Karadzic and his former military chief, Gen. Ratko Mladic, Thursday's operation delivered a strong warning that NATO no longer will turn a blind eye to the continued presence and power of such major suspects.

Western nations worry that unless war crimes suspects are brought to trial, the Dayton peace agreement could collapse and new fighting erupt when NATO-led troops leave Bosnia next year. The troops were deployed as part of the accords that ended a 3 1/2-year war and split the country between the Serbs and a Muslim-Croat federation.

Drljaca and Kovacevic were indicted on charges of complicity in genocide for their actions in 1992, when non-Serbs in the region were rounded up, expelled or killed.

According to New York-based Human Rights Watch, Drljaca helped set up and run prison camps where inmates were allegedly interrogated, tortured and killed.

Kovacevic allegedly oversaw transport of Muslim prisoners to one of the camps, the human rights group said.

Hun Sen pushes ahead with takeover

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Coup leader Hun Sen defied world pressure and pushed ahead Friday with his takeover of Cambodia, undeterred by a cutoff of aid that has kept the desperately poor country afloat.

Cambodia relies on foreign aid for more than half of its national budget.

The United States, Japan and Germany halted aid to Cambodia to punish Hun Sen for shattering the government created in 1993 elections, the result of the most costly United Nations peacekeeping mission in history.

Cambodia's Asian neighbors showed their displeasure with Hun Sen's violent weekend coup by taking back their invitation to join the regional trading bloc.

"In the past, we were also subjected to an economic embargo," said Hun Sen's spokesman, Khieu Kanharith. "We will not die, and development will continue, though it might be slow."

But cooler heads were already tallying up the damage. Meas Samith, spokesman for the Public Works Ministry, said the government and country could "absolutely not" survive.

The cut-off of even minimal aid will have far-reaching impact in Cambodia, where many of its 10 million people live hand to mouth. The country has never recovered from the deaths of 2 million people during the brutal 1975-79 rule of the Khmer Rouge.

Meanwhile, threats of full-blown civil war by deposed Prince Norodom Ranariddh's supporters receded after his allies — former Khmer Rouge guerrillas — denied him crucial help in battling Hun Sen's forces.

Ranariddh and Hun Sen had shared power as co-prime ministers in an uneasy coalition before the violent coup.

Foreigners continued to flee battle-scarred Phnom Penh, with Australian military transports ferrying out about 500 people from the Cambodian capital.

More than 2,000 U.S. Marines left Okinawa, Japan, on Friday for military training in the South China Sea, but also to be ready to help evacuate Americans. Hundreds have left by charter flights since Wednesday.

Despite an oppressive air of sadness, the capital returned to life Friday, with many shops reopening after closing Monday during widespread looting.

Victorious soldiers, ribbons tied to their gun barrels, paraded around the capital in stolen motorbikes and cars as Hun Sen maneuvered to try to give his new government a stamp of legitimacy.

Although threatening to jail Ranariddh on treason charges if he returns, Hun Sen said he would welcome a new co-premier from the prince's royalist party. The offer is considered to be a fig leaf, because Hun Sen clearly intends to be Cambodia's sole rule.

A former royalist provincial governor tapped for the job returned from Bangkok, Thailand, on Friday and was escorted into the capital by Hun Sen's police and troops. Ton Chhay did not say if he would accept the post.

Two prominent royalists have died in Hun Sen's custody and others, including Ranariddh, are abroad in fear for their lives.

Amnesty International reported Friday that three close associates of Lt. Gen. Nhek Bunchhay, Ranariddh's toughest general, may also have been captured and summarily executed. Nhek Bunchhay is believed to remain free.

In an emotional plea, Ranariddh urged the U.N. Security Council on Thursday to deny recognition to Hun Sen's new regime and impose economic sanctions, a move that appeared unlikely.

Actress's memoir of affair with late shah an Iranian best seller

By Afshin Valinejad
Associated Press

TEHRAN, Iran — Ordinarily, even one of the many bedroom scenes recounted by a former Iranian movie star would have been enough for censors to ban her sensational bestseller.

But "Until Darkness" is no ordinary memoir. It's a kiss-and-tell account of Parvin Ghaffari's three-year affair with the late shah, still widely hated after his brutal regime was overthrown in the 1979 Islamic revolution.

Ghaffari has become the talk of the town in Tehran, where many Iranians still can't believe that the censors have allowed such racy passages: The actress describes the shah kissing her "on the mouth like an American movie star" and admiring her nude body after a night of love-making.

Newspapers were quick to criticize the Ministry of Culture and Islamic Guidance for allowing its publication, and printed some of the objectionable passages to illustrate their point.

But that only served to whet the appetite of readers, who snapped up all 10,000 copies of the Farsi-language book soon after it appeared in the shops this summer.

Although staid by Western standards, Ghaffari's descriptions of amorous encounters with the shah and his courtiers break all of Iran's strict censorship rules.

Whereas novelists and other writers have had problems even referring to married couples talking in bed, Ghaffari boldly describes losing her virginity to Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in 1946, after he separated from his Egyptian wife, Queen Fawzieh.

"He offered me a drink, then pulled me up from the chair and threw me on the bed. I felt the cool softness of the mattress on my back. Goodbye chastity. Goodbye innocence."

No doubt, officials gave the 180-page memoir the green light because of the way it portrays the late king of kings: "Stingy, possessive and lustful."

The shah, says the 67-year-old former movie star, liked to squander the nation's wealth, and was more interested in womanizing and throwing lavish parties than running his country.

'For a book to openly talk about passion, kissing, and lovemaking is rare in Iran. That is why this book sold out so quickly.'
— Mahin Rastin, housewife

Similar portrayals have been made in memoirs by other cronies of the late shah, including one — published by Iran's Intelligence Ministry — that recounts the monarch paying $1 million for one-night stands with Hollywood movie stars and French prostitutes.

Ghaffari's descriptions of the rest of the royal family are just as unflattering.

She says the shah's mother was a lesbian who encouraged the affair with her son, then vied with the shah for her affection. She portrays the shah's twin sister, Ashraf, as a degenerate nymphomaniac.

"For a book to openly talk about passion, kissing, and lovemaking is rare in Iran," said housewife Mahin Rastin. "That is why this book sold out so quickly."

Ghaffari, whose 12-year film career was confined to playing lead roles in 13 B movies, had been out of the public eye since after the revolution. She is still believed to be living in Iran, but there is nothing in her book to indicate where she is now or how she spends her life.

A women's magazine, Zanan, and the daily Kar-o-Kargar newspaper have questioned whether Ghaffari's account is credible.

Zanan, which noted that the book was published by the previously unknown publication house, Translation and Publication Agency, also questioned the value of publishing such a book at this time.

"The monarchy is finished and gone. What revenge does one want to take on it now?" it asked.

Hillary Clinton tells women how to preserve democracy

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — Hundreds of women from the former Soviet bloc rose to their feet three times Friday to hail Hillary Rodham Clinton, warming to her wisdom on how best to preserve a fragile, hard-won new democracy.

"The work of democracy is never finished," Mrs. Clinton told a conference of women from 19 post-communist countries.

She said the surest way to anchor democracy in countries blighted by decades of dictatorship was to build an inclusive society. Women play a key role, she added, by giving a "voice to the voiceless" and standing up for fellow citizens.

"We ignore the needs of all our people at our own peril," Mrs. Clinton said during her half-hour speech. "When we do not respect the dignity of others, we do not make the dignity of any of us safe from attack."

'We ignore the needs of all our people at our own peril. When we do not respect the dignity of others, we do not make the dignity of any of us safe from attack.'
— Hillary Rodham Clinton

Mrs. Clinton also announced an extra $3 million in U.S. funds for programs to promote women in business, politics and law in the region, where societies are undergoing an often brutal transformation to capitalism.

She drew especially warm applause when saying "the marketplace, which knows the price of everything, knows the value of nothing."

"(It) cannot reach the heart," she added.

Women's lot in Eastern Europe has not eased since the 1989 revolutions that overturned communist rule. The share of women in parliament — previously regulated by quotas in rubber-stamp communist legislatures — has fallen sharply. State budgets have been slashed, meaning kindergartens have closed, health care and schooling have worsened and pensions are low, Mrs. Clinton noted.

In addition, tens of thousands of Eastern European women have been working as prostitutes in the West, either for sheer survival or after being lured by false promises of a legitimate job. Many are abused by pimps.

Fielding questions, Mrs. Clinton was asked what she could do to protect Eastern European societies from the violence of American TV and movies.

Mrs. Clinton said she was "not hopeful" that much could be done, because violence sells — "people watch it." But she said it was a critical question in the modern dilemma between creating conscious citizens or unthinking consumers.

Among the other questions, read out by U.S. Ambassador to Austria Swanee Hunt, the first lady was asked what Americans could learn from Eastern Europeans.

She replied that she admired their tenacity, and noted in contrast that "we have many people who have gotten rather complacent in the United States."

"How you deal with democracy and its challenges will affect the United States and the entire world," she concluded, drawing a third standing ovation.

Before she spoke, Mrs. Clinton heard from three Eastern European women who told of their paths into politics or business after communism crumbled.

Yulia Berberyan from Bulgaria, mother of the three tennis-playing Maleeva sisters, spoke of how she fought to get out of the "big prison" of communist Bulgaria and get her daughters into international tournaments.

After the Berlin Wall fell in November 1989, Ms. Berberyan vowed she would serve her newly-free country. She headed the Bulgarian Union of Women and won a parliament seat last April for the anti-communist United Democratic Forces.

Vilja Aleknaite-Abramikiene of Lithuania recalled her 34th birthday in 1991, looking at the lights of Manhattan on her first trip to the West. Under Communism, the former music student had been barred even from traveling to neighboring Poland for competitions.

She now sits in Lithuania's parliament. She related, to Mrs. Clinton's amusement, that a well-known male doctor had warned her that women do not have the biological makeup for politics.

"Freedom and progress," the Lithuanian said, "do not come from silence."

Fire races through Thailand hotel killing at least 78

PATTAYA, Thailand (AP) — A kitchen fire raced through a 17-story luxury hotel in this sin-and-sun beach resort Friday, killing at least 78 people in one of the worst fires ever in Thailand. An American girl clutching her teddy bear was among those airlifted to safety.

Crowds on the sidewalk watched in horror as people screamed for help and waved towels from windows on the upper floors. One man jumped to his death from the 11th floor.

Police said 64 people were injured and more bodies may be inside the 450-room Royal Jomtien Hotel in Pattaya, a city 70 miles south of Bangkok on the Gulf of Thailand.

Many of the dead were found near emergency exits that had been chained shut to prevent guests from skipping out without paying, Interior Minister Snoh Thienthong said. The hotel had no sprinklers.

The fire began about 9 a.m. when a gas oven exploded in a first-floor coffee shop, immediately killing eight kitchen workers. About 200 people were in the hotel at the time.

Leaking fumes quickly fed the flames into conference rooms where employees of Thailand's electric authority and the local Pepsi Co. subsidiary were having seminars. They figured heavily among the dead.

Flames spread to other floors, spewing clouds of black smoke as the families of the conference members and other guests tried to escape. Many suffocated in hallways or internal fire escapes.

Among those trapped on the top floors was an American woman, Rochelle Stein-Sami, and her daughter. Mrs. Stein-Sami used a cellular phone to call a friend on the street, who told her helicopters were on the way.

One landed on the roof. Rescue workers let down a harness fashioned from a rope, which Mrs. Stein-Sami lunged at several times before grabbing.

With heavy winds whipping her about, the girl, still clutching her brown teddy bear, was lifted through the thick smoke to safety and bundled into a helicopter. Mrs. Stein-Sami followed.

A firefighter speaks to a colleague by radio in a burned-out room of the Royal Jomtien Hotel in the beach resort city of Pattaya 110 kilometers (68 miles) south of Bangkok, Friday night. Fire raged through the 17-story hotel, killing at least 78 people in the worst hotel fire in Thai history.

Later, in an television interview, the girl, who appeared to be about 10, said she wasn't scared.

"I wanted my mother to be safe. That was what I was worried about," she said. "It wasn't that scary. On the way up I bumped my head, but I was OK."

The television didn't give the girl's first name or say where in the United States she was from.

Her mother said there was no warning of any kind, not even smoke alarms.

"We're so grateful to the helicopters and all the people who helped us," Mrs. Stein-Sami said. "But we're so very sad that many people didn't make it out."

Rescue workers carried out dozens of charred, blackened bodies and lined them up on the pavement. The hotel owner's wife also died in the fire.

Police Maj. Gen. Kongbej Choosri, commander of the provincial police, criticized the lack of external fire exits, saying the internal escape stairs were deathtraps.

Pattaya's outmoded fire equipment could not reach flames above the fourth floor, Kongbej said. Fire trucks equipped with hydraulic buckets had to be called in from Bangkok, fighting through the city's legendary traffic.

Firefighters worked into the night as flames stubbornly flickered into life on the hotel's upper floors. Damage was estimated at $40 million.

Rescue workers used floodlights to search for more victims. Intense heat prevented them from staying in the building longer than 30 minutes. Many collapsed near the hotel swimming pool on emerging, gasping for air.

The hotel is one of hundreds of hotels lining the white sandy beaches of Pattaya, a popular resort with Thais and millions of tourists.

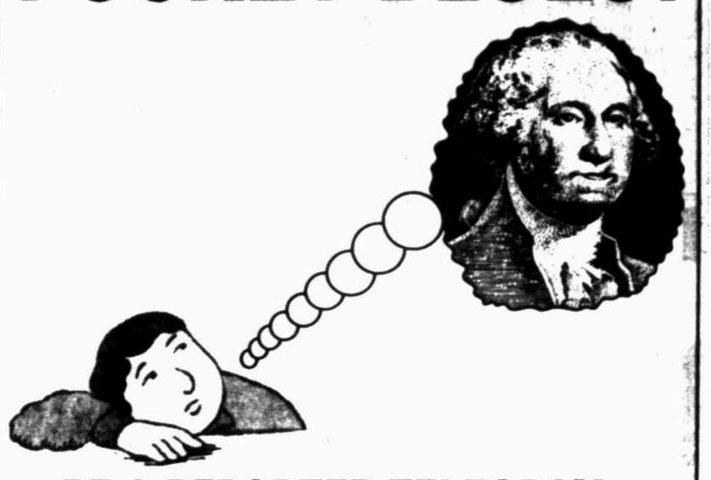

Despite a sprinkling of yachts and golf courses, the resort is mostly famous for its prostitution and drugs. Foreigners on so-called "sex tours" exploit readily available women, men and children.

Prime Minister Chavalit Yongchaiyudh earlier this year called Pattaya "Thailand's greatest source of evil."

Thailand has had a number of hotel and department store fires in recent years and experts say many buildings fail to meet basic safety standards.

In 1993, 188 people died in a fire at toy factory in the northeast where supervisors had locked emergency exits to prevent workers from taking breaks.

According to reports, James David Berry, 18, of 3417 N. Midland Dr., was arrested on charges of delivery of marijuana, possession of a controlled substance and unlawful carrying of a weapon. Bond was set at $11,000 for all three charges.

Permian Basin Task Force officers arrested the man at the Fiesta Foods supermarket on Highway 349 at 8:45 p.m. Thursday.

In another case, Texas Department of Public Safety officers arrested Juan Alfonso Lujan, 25, a resident at a local motel. Bethel was taken to the Midland County Detention Center at approximately 4 p.m. Friday. Bethel is being held pending a bond hearing.

Farmers Insurance accused of bilking customers

AUSTIN (AP) — Farmers Insurance is overcharging at least 4,000 auto policyholders hundreds of dollars each because they didn't have coverage before getting policies from the company, according to the Texas Department of Insurance.

TDI officials on Friday said they will send the allegations to state administrative judges later this year to determine whether refunds are in order.

"Starting July 24, 1996, Farmers began requiring three consecutive years of prior insurance to qualify for coverage at its lowest rates ... and two consecutive years to receive its next-best ... rates," the department said.

"Farmers violated TDI rules that prohibit insurers from considering an applicant's lack of prior insurance ... unless the applicant has driven without insurance in Texas for more than 30 days out of the preceding 12 months."

Mark Toohey, a spokesman for Farmers, said the company has not cheated customers and is complying with the rules.

"Our statistics show very strongly that folks that have had insurance — folks that abide by the law — are better drivers and are a better risk," he said, adding that they — not those who haven't had insurance — deserve the best rates.

> 'The ultimate solution is a no-fault law.'
> — Jerry Johns, president of Southwestern Insurance Information Service

Under state law, all drivers must carry at least liability insurance to cover damage they may cause to other people's property.

Jerry Johns, an insurance industry spokesman, said people who disobey the law generally aren't the best drivers.

But Johns, president of Southwestern Insurance Information Service, acknowledged that for some illegal drivers, not carrying insurance is a matter of cost and accessibility, not poor driving records. He said charging those drivers more than others could compound the problem.

"I think to some extent it does," he said. "What we feel like the solution to the problem is a strong no-fault law that addresses this issue."

In no-fault insurance policies, drivers don't carry liability insurance. Instead, every drivers' insurance covers damages to their own property, regardless of who caused it.

Texas lawmakers have not been receptive to the idea. Many drivers have said they should not be responsible for damaged caused by someone else.

"The ultimate solution is a no-fault law," Johns said. "There are band-aid solutions and we've tried those."

D.J. Powers, a consumer advocate, blamed Farmers and TDI for the overcharges. He said Farmers has been ripping off some customers for more than a year, and the department has dragged its feet in stopping it.

"This is a key issue for availability," said Powers, executive director of the Center for Economic Justice. "We're talking hundreds of dollars every policy period. These are people who bought insurance for a complete year. This is not the people who flagrantly disobey the law."

Lee Jones, a TDI spokesman, said the Nov. 12 hearing date was the soonest the department could get the issue before state administrative law judges.

They will recommend a resolution to Insurance Commissioner Elton Bomer, who will hold a separate hearing before deciding what action to take.

Supreme Court justice takes step toward bid for attorney general

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Supreme Court Justice John Cornyn has taken the first step toward a race for attorney general and a possible ballot box collision with former state GOP Chairman Tom Pauken.

The Republican judge on Friday filed papers with the Texas Ethics Commission designating a campaign treasurer.

In an interview, Cornyn said he would make a formal announcement of his plans later this summer.

"This is the essential next step in the process of looking at the race and something I had to do. I'm not there yet," Cornyn said.

He also said his decision had nothing to do with Pauken's presence in the race.

"I called him today and told him that. I told him I respected many of the things he's done for the Republican Party. It's nothing personal. It's something I've considered for some time," he said.

Mauro slams Bush early releases

AUSTIN (AP) — A top Democrat is criticizing Gov. George W. Bush after a report that Bush presided over the largest number of automatic, early releases of prison inmates in the state's history.

"After promising to end early release, George Bush has overseen the tripling of early release in Texas," said Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, who's considering a run for governor.

In 1994, Republican Bush used TV commercials and speeches to paint Democratic Gov. Ann Richards as soft on criminals. That year, 5,622 inmates were sprung from prison early through a process called mandatory release.

In 1996, two years into Bush's term, 15,726 offenders won mandatory release, The Dallas Morning News reported Friday.

Mauro said the governor knew that but didn't warn local residents of the situation.

"We have to stop this politics-as-usual demagoguery at election time and start addressing the issues that affect the way people live their daily lives," Mauro said in a written statement.

Ray Sullivan, a Bush spokesman, said the governor has kept his campaign promise.

Sullivan noted that Bush signed legislation that ends mandatory release for anyone convicted of any crime after Sept. 1, 1996.

Bush also pushed a bill in the recent legislative session that would have banned the process retroactively. The effort died after the U.S. Supreme Court unanimously struck down a similar Florida law.

"Gov. Bush said he would end automatic release, and he and the Texas Legislature did end automatic release for those convicted after Sept. 1, 1996," Sullivan said.

He said that Texas has increased the number of parole officers by 38 percent and will be using both electronic monitoring and "superintensive supervision of those who the U.S. Supreme Court said must be released.

"Today in Texas, prison terms are longer, parole approval rates are down dramatically and superintensive supervision will soon be in place," Sullivan said.

Under the state's mandatory release formula, when "good time" plus actual time served adds up to the full sentence, an inmate is automatically paroled.

In practice it means that inmates, who in most cases have been denied release by the parole board, can be automatically freed anyway after serving between one-third and half of their sentences, the Morning News reported.

Respected Baptist minister returns home to questions

By Lisa Holewa
Associated Press

ST. PETERSBURG, Fla. (AP) — The Rev. Henry J. Lyons left town as the respected leader of the nation's largest black denomination, a rousing preacher who raised enough money to reduce millions of dollars in church debt, the man President Clinton called for advice when riots left the city in flames last year.

He returned Friday to questions about his finances, his sex life and his integrity.

The reason: His wife, Deborah, was arrested during his church-related trip to Africa and charged with trashing and setting fire Sunday to an expensive waterfront home he owned with another woman.

"I have been slandered," Lyons, president of the 8.5 million-member National Baptist Convention USA, told a roomful of reporters, preachers and parishioners at his Bethel Metropolitan Baptist Church on Friday.

With his 49-year-old wife holding his hand and responding, "Amen," Lyons, 55, denied cheating on her or using church funds to finance a lavish lifestyle including a Rolls-Royce, two Mercedes and the $700,000 home.

"I categorically deny that Ms. Bernice Edwards and I were carrying on an affair," Lyons said. "I have been traveling, trying to get here for two days ... calling my wife every stop that I could."

Mrs. Lyons told deputies she tore apart pillows, threw around her husband's suits and set small fires at the home Sunday after finding a deed in his briefcase showing he owned the house with Ms. Edwards, a 40-year-old public relations specialist for the National Baptist Convention who was with him on the trip to Nigeria.

She drove back to her home and crashed her car into a palm tree in a neighbor's front yard. Firefighters put out the small fires in the home, which had $30,000 in damage.

Since then, reporters have found court documents showing Ms. Edwards was convicted of embezzling federal funds from a Milwaukee school for at-risk children. And Lyons himself, it was learned, was investigated in 1991 for federal bank fraud and paid $85,000 in restitution to the former Citizens & Southern Bank, according to the St. Petersburg Times.

"What is your problem?" Lyons, surrounded by members of the National Baptist Convention and local preachers, asked reporters.

AP Laserphoto

The Rev. Henry Lyons, right, pastor of the Bethel Metropolitan Baptist Church and president of the National Baptist Convention USA, gestures during a news conference alongside his wife, Deborah, Friday, in St. Petersburg, Fla. Mrs. Lyons was arrested earlier this week for allegedly trying to burn down a $700,000 home that the Rev. Lyons owns with another woman.

"What are you trying to imply — that blacks in this country cannot be successful?"

Mrs. Lyons, who was arrested Monday and released on $10,000 bail, pleaded innocent to the arson and burglary charges. Arson carries up to 30 years in prison.

Mrs. Lyons didn't address reporters Friday, but she told the Times the day after her arrest it was all a misunderstanding. She said she set the fires accidentally while picking up papers for her husband at the house, which she said she had known about all along.

Lyons also said that his wife has always known about the house, which he said the convention used as a national guest house.

Lyons left without answering questions. A spokesman, Lucius Gantt, said he would answer his congregation's questions privately and later give a full accounting to any reporters represeting local black newspapers.

"We're going to cooperate fully with the media that pleases our cause. If you have a problem with that, that's your problem," Gantt said.

Several members of his congregation who packed the hall and applauded Lyons said they were grateful he addressed the reports and believed him when he denied having an affair or misusing church funds.

"I think he was straightforward in his answers," said Trevor Davis, 38, of St. Petersburg. "Since we are all sinners, none of us can throw stones."

Lyons has called an emergency meeting of the group's board of directors Thursday in Nashville, the denomination's headquarters.

Although his term isn't scheduled to expire until 1999, the convention could move to oust him at a meeting in September.

Lyons won a heated race for his seat in 1994, and survived a legal challenge to the election. He promised to bring financial stability back to the convention, which had a $5.4 million mortgage on its headquarters.

Supporters say his rousing pleas helped reduce the debt to about $3 million.

Lyons' influence reaches to the White House. Last fall, Clinton called him when St. Petersburg suffered riots after a white police officer killed a black motorist and after a grand jury cleared the officer.

A rousing preacher, Lyons is known to interrupt his own sermons by shouting the phrase, "I'm doing some preaching now!"

"I feel a divine mandate to do something here," he told The Associated Press after his election. "Since 1966, I've dedicated my life to nothing more than this."

Child molester gets maximum 10-year sentence in case tied to three suicides

BALTIMORE (AP) — Peter Dudley Albertsen II molested two brothers he befriended while working as a lifeguard at a summer camp in 1985. For that, he received a suspended sentence and was told to stay away from the boys.

Instead, he stalked the boys for years and mailed one of them a pornographic video of children having sex.

Justin and Matthew Wilke later committed suicide, as did their father. Justin left a note in the carbon monoxide-filled car where he died that read: "I hate you, Pete."

On Friday, Albertsen, 35, received the maximum 10-year sentence in federal court for trafficking in child pornography in sending Justin the video.

U.S. District Judge William M. Nickerson called the sentence "unfortunately inadequate ... under the facts of this case."

Albertsen also received three years' probation, was required to register as a pedophile, get counseling and have no direct contact with children under 18.

Albertsen, who pleaded guilty in March and has been held without bail since his arrest last year, showed little emotion during sentencing. In a half-hour statement, he admitted no wrongdoing. Instead, he tried to explain his relationship with Justin and said that he truly loved him.

Albertsen told the court his own suicide attempt last December, when he stabbed himself in the chest, was equivalent to the pain he felt when he learned Justin died.

"I must say the pain associated with losing Justin is every bit as painful, if not more painful, then the physical stab wounds of the heart," Albertsen said.

Justin, 19, and his brother, Matthew, 22, separately committed suicide last year.

Prosecutor Andrew White, in pushing for the maximum sentence, said Andersen lacks remorse and remains unconvinced he did anything wrong.

"He thinks it is beautiful," he said, referring to Andersen's relationship with Justin. "This man right here is nothing more than a sexual predator."

Matthew and Justin Wilke met Albertsen in 1985 at a summer camp in suburban Baltimore when they were 11 and 9.

Peter Albertsen told the court his own suicide attempt last December, when he stabbed himself in the chest, was equivalent to the pain he felt when he learned Justin died.

Albertsen, who worked as a lifeguard, befriended the boys and their parents, Don and Susan Wilke, who eventually allowed the pair to spend weekends at Albertsen's home. The abuse began when Justin was 11 and Matthew 13.

After keeping it secret for nearly two years, Matthew told his mother, and Albertsen was arrested in 1990. He pleaded guilty to abuse and received a three-year suspended jail term and was ordered to undergo psychological treatment and stay away from the brothers and other children.

Instead, Albertsen began to stalk Justin, writing him letters, leaving notes on his car and appearing at his high school graduation.

In 1995, while Albertsen was in Germany on a student visa, he mailed the video containing child pornography to Justin on his 19th birthday, along with a birthday card and two letters totaling 25 pages.

The sexual abuse and its aftermath destroyed the Wilke family, prosecutors said. (The boys' mother moved to Florida, has not been involved in the case and couldn't be reached for comment.)

The boys' father, Don Wilke, 56, committed suicide two days before Thanksgiving in 1995 by running a tube from the exhaust pipe into his car.

The following year, Justin and Matthew did the same. On Feb. 8, 1996, Justin was found in his car. On Aug. 15, 1996, Matt's body was discovered in his brother's car.

"For someone who says he loves these people that much, I don't know how he can say that. He's not human," Katie Watson, a friend of the brothers, said as she broke down in tears after the sentencing.

Senate approves nonbinding resolution for Bosnia pullout

WASHINGTON (AP) — Worried about a widening mission in Bosnia, the Senate pushed Friday to make sure U.S. troops pull out by mid-1998 as planned but left open the possibility of a continuing U.S. military role in the Balkans.

Intense lobbying by the Clinton administration averted a vote to cut off money for the troop deployment. Instead, the Senate passed by voice vote a nonbinding resolution saying the 8,000 U.S. troops in Bosnia should be out by June 30, 1998, and that European nations should provide the troops to any peacekeeping effort needed after that.

"We should send a message that our troops on the ground in Bosnia should be out by next June," said Sen. Carl Levin, D-Mich., ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, who helped craft the compromise measure. "We should do so in a way which will not undermine the flexibility of our commanders in the field. The funding cutoff was too rigid, too inflexible."

The funding cutoff is not dead, however. The House-passed version of the 1998 defense authorization bill includes the cutoff. This sharp difference with the Senate, which passed its version of the defense bill Friday, will have to be worked out in negotiations.

What emerged in the Senate debate was the possibility of a continuing U.S. presence in the Balkan region, minus the actual deployment of ground troops in Bosnia. Levin said his resolution would do nothing to prevent the administration from staging troops next door to Bosnia in Hungary and Italy, deploying warships in the Adriatic Sea, and deploying U.S. supply planes and intelligence agents and equipment to Bosnia to support a longer NATO peacekeeping mission.

Specifically, the resolution says a "follow-on force" to the current 31,000-member NATO peace Sustainment Force, or SFOR, in Bosnia may be needed. The United States "may decide to appropriately provide support" to that force, "including command and control, intelligence, logistics, and, if necessary, a ready reserve force in the region."

The resolution urges Clinton to gain congressional approval before making such a commitment.

Senators and House members frustrated by the skyrocketing costs of the Bosnia mission — now estimated at $7.7 billion — and by the continued political and ethnic unrest in Bosnia, pushed for the funding cutoff.

Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison, R-Texas, warned of "alarming mission creep" in the U.S. mission to Bosnia. And Sen. Russell Feingold, D-Wis., author of the funding cutoff proposal, complained of "dollar creep."

> 'A fixed withdrawal date will constrict U.S. commanders' flexibility, encourage our opponents, and undermine the important psychological advantage U.S. troops enjoy.'
> — Defense Secretary William Cohen and Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

The debate took place amid increasing tension in Bosnia following the arrest Thursday by NATO forces of suspected war criminals. The raid, which was led by British soldiers with U.S. logistical support, marked a sharp departure from the past cautious NATO posture toward arresting war criminals.

Levin said President Clinton would likely veto the defense bill if it includes the cutoff. Top Clinton administration officials argued against Feingold's funding cutoff.

"We strongly oppose a statutorily mandated withdrawal of the United States forces," wrote Defense Secretary William Cohen and Gen. John Shalikashvili, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, in a letter to lawmakers this week. "A fixed withdrawal date will constrict U.S. commanders' flexibility, encourage our opponents, and undermine the important psychological advantage U.S. troops enjoy."

A legislated withdrawal date, Cohen and Shalikashvili argued, would undercut troop safety.

Clinton gained a surprising ally in Senate Majority Leader Trent Lott, R-Miss., who spoke against the cutoff and lobbied colleagues one-on-one outside the Senate chamber. Lott argued that with NATO taking greater risks to nab war crimes suspects, now was not the time to criticize the Bosnia mission.

"I hope we will use the maximum amount of discretion in what we do in this area right now," Lott said.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., ranking Democrat on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, joined Lott in opposing the funding cutoff. Such a move could precipitate not only the pullout of the entire NATO force, a move European allies have threatened, but also a resumption of war.

"Could all the Bosnian horrors of ethnic cleansing, rape camps and shelling of innocent civilians and children re-emerge? You bet they could," Biden said. "In fact, if the international force withdraws ... you can be sure they all will return."

Air Force grants Kite discharge

WASHINGTON (AP) — An Air Force officer accused of having a relationship with an enlisted woman he later married is being allowed to resign rather than face a court-martial, the service said Friday.

It was the second time this summer that the Air Force has allowed an individual to leave rather face a court-martial on charges that put the service under scrutiny for its approach to relations between members of the enlisted ranks and the officer corps.

Air Force Secretary Sheila Widnall made the decision on 2nd Lt. William Kite, security police supervisor at Whiteman Air Force Base, Mo.. He will receive a general discharge under honorable conditions, an Air Force statement said.

No explanation of the Kite decision was given in the brief statement.

Kite had faced the possibility of a court-martial for two counts of fraternizing with an enlisted person and denying his relationship with her. He is now married to the woman, who has left the Air Force.

Kite's attorney, Capt. Joseph Cazenavette, had appealed to Widnall earlier to dismiss the charges against his client, but she had declined. Neither the attorney nor Kite was available for comment.

The Air Force has made headlines recently for its enforcement in certain cases of the policy that bars relationships between enlisted personnel and officers.

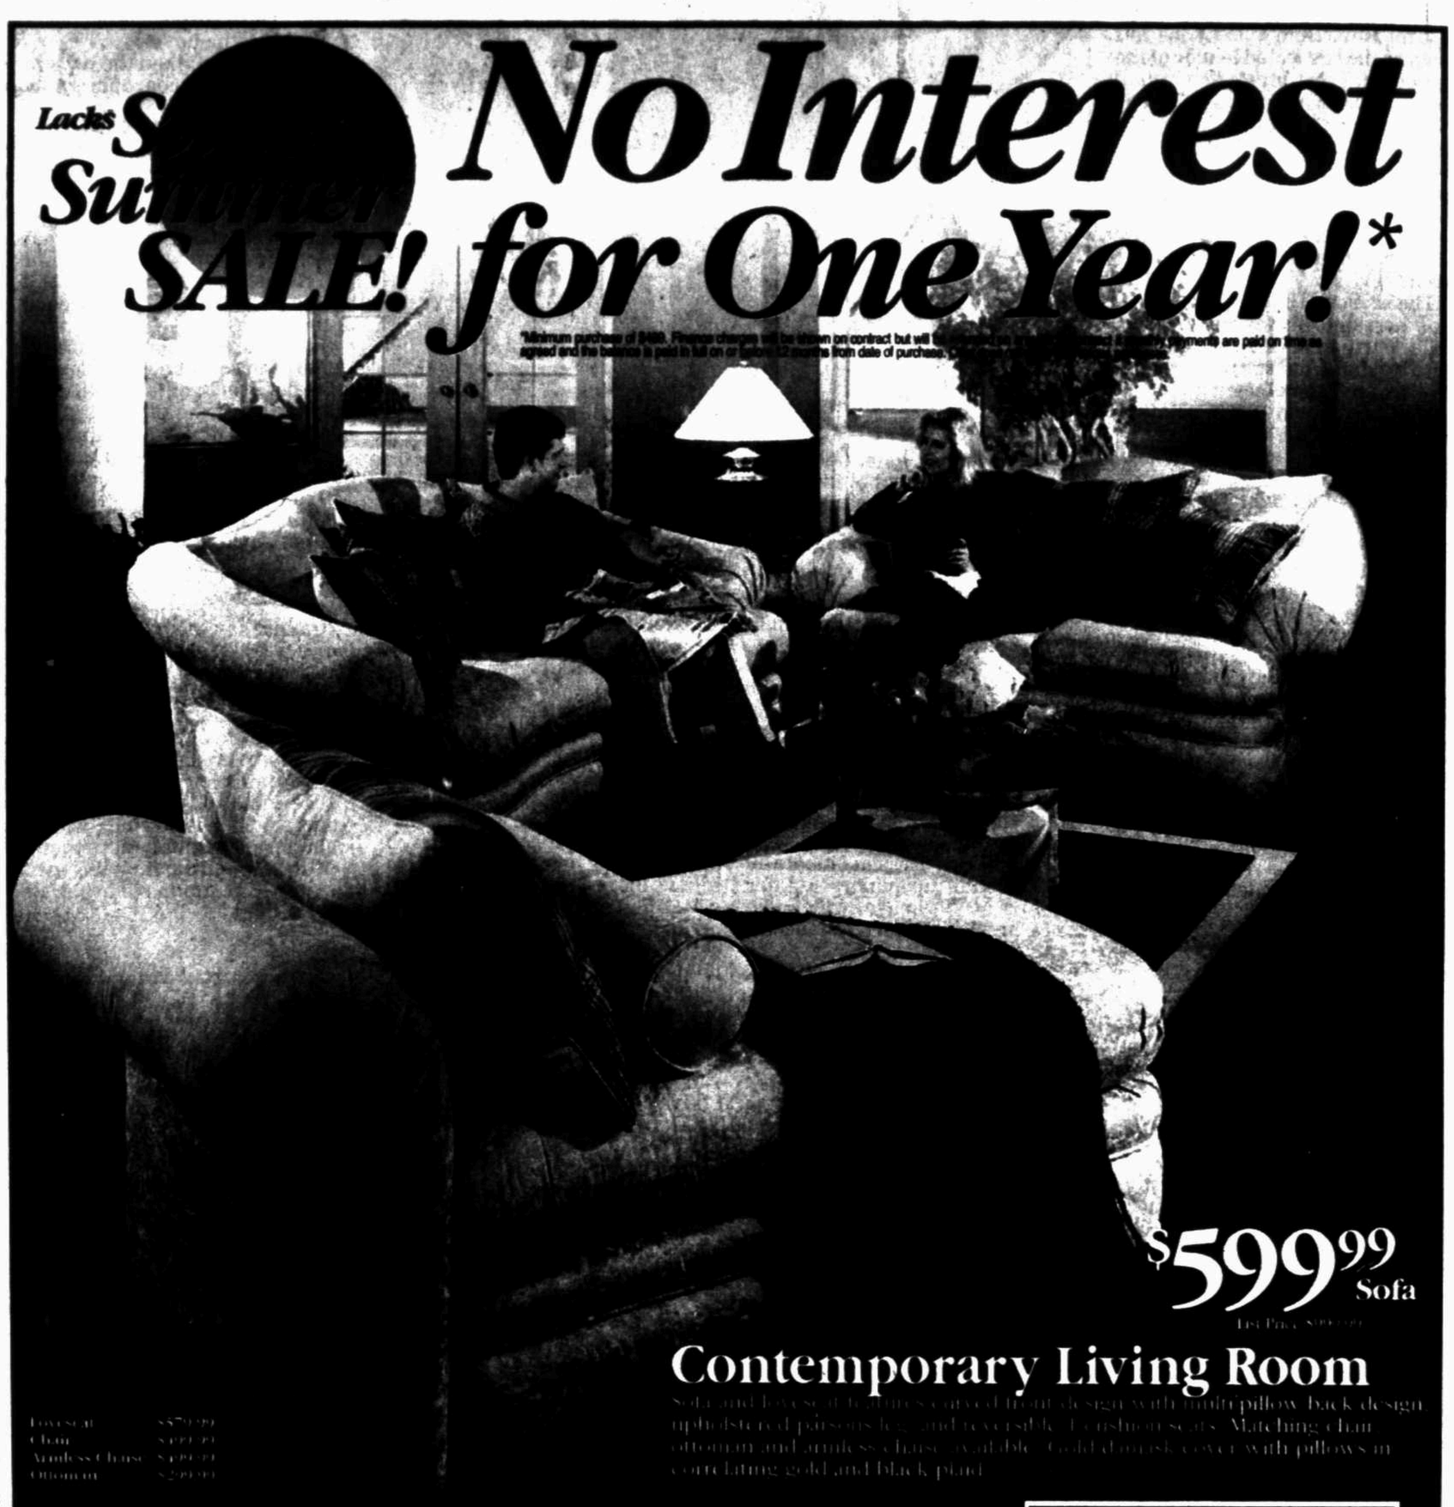

The Army bars such relationships when the two are in the same chain of command, and Defense Secretary William Cohen has called for a review of how all the services deal with the issue of fraternization.

The Kite case received special attention following the moves by the Air Force to court-martial 1st Lt. Kelly Flinn, the service's first female B-52 pilot, on charges of adultery, lying and disobeying an order.

Flinn also was given a general discharge, averting her court-martial, in May.

Lady Rebs honor

Two members of the Midland Lee softball team which reached the finals of the Region I playoffs last season earned selections to the Texas Sports Writers Association all-state team.

Junior outfielder Marcie Villa was named to the second team and senior pitcher Chrystal Smith was selected to the third team. They helped lead the Lady Rebels to a 23-5 mark for the season.

Both Villa and Smith were All-District 4-5A selections. Smith, who will pitch for Southwest Texas State next season, was also a third-team all-state pick in 1996.

Denton fourth

SEATTLE — Midland's John Denton is fourth after the fifth round of the PBA Seattle Senior Open Friday.

Denton, who won his lone senior title last year, made it to the final day of competition, placing in the top 5. Denton had a 42-game pinfall of 9,828 while working his match-play record to 14-10 over the five rounds.

Gary Dickinson was the top qualifier for Saturday's action, knocking over 10,142 pins. Jim Brenner, Avery LeBlanc, Denton and Gene Stus rounded out the top 5.

Hensley record

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Jimmy Hensley, who has labored through a yo-yo kind of season in the NASCAR Craftsman Truck Series, reeled off a record qualifying lap Friday to capture the pole position for the Link-Belt Construction Equipment 200.

Hensley, driving a Dodge Ram for retired NASCAR star Richard Petty, lapped the 7-16-mile triangular track at 103.160 mph. He'll be joined on the front row for Saturday's race by a Dodge driven by rookie Tony Raines, whose qualifying speed was 102.576.

Two Dodges have occupied the front row in a series race just once before, at Tucson, Ariz., in March.

The pair finished in reverse order on May 24 when Raines nipped Hensley at Odessa, Mo., for Dodge's first victory in the 3-year-old series.

Hensley erased Mike Bliss's year-old qualifying standard of 102.793.

Nicholas takes lead at U.S. Open

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

NORTH PLAINS, Ore. — As she walked onto the 18th green, the cheers echoed across the rural countryside.

"Nancy! Nancy!"

There is no doubt who is the crowd favorite in the U.S. Women's Open, and at the halfway point, Nancy Lopez is just one shot off the lead.

The only glaring blank spot on her Hall of Fame resume, a U.S. Women's Open championship, is well within her reach.

England's Alison Nicholas shot a 5-under-par 66 Friday to take the second-round lead with Lopez close behind, thanks to birdies on the final three holes.

Nicholas, who began the day five shots behind first-round leader Liselotte Neumann, had a bogey-free round on the par-71, 6,365-yard Witch Hollow course at Pumpkin Ridge Golf Club and was at 6-under 136 halfway through the biggest event in women's golf.

But it was Lopez who stole the spotlight with a 5-under 137, tied with Neumann and Kelly Robbins one shot out of the lead.

Juli Inkster matched Nicholas' 66 Friday and was tied with Deb Richard at 4-under 138. Dawn Coe-Jones, with a 4-under 31 on the back nine, shot a 3-under 67 and was three back at 139.

Annika Sorenstam, failing miserably in her bid to become the first woman to win three consecutive U.S. Opens, ended her two-round nightmare at 8-over 150. She missed the cut for the first time since the Jamie Farr Kroger Classic in 1994, a span of 62 tournaments.

She followed her 6-over 77 on Thursday with a 2-over 73 on Friday. Ironically, she ended her round with a birdie.

The field was cut to the low 60 scores for the final two rounds Saturday and Sunday.

Scores of 69 Thursday and 68 Friday gave Lopez her lowest 36-hole score in her 21 U.S. Opens. She has finished second in the event three times, most recently in 1989.

"I don't feel that I have to win a U.S. Open, but I would — more than anything — love to win the U.S. Open," Lopez said. "There's just something about winning the U.S. Open. I want to experience it. I want to walk up on the 18th green on Sunday and have a five-shot lead and be winning it. And I just can't even imagine what it would feel like."

At age 40, Lopez is enjoying a career renaissance. She ended a four-year drought earlier this year by winning the Chick-Fil-A Charity tournament, her 48th career victory.

At the beginning of 1996, she had thought about giving up the sport.

"I really was so bored with the way I was playing and I wasn't enjoying it," she said.

And she was overweight.

"The first tournament of the year, I tried on my pair of size 14 shorts. I couldn't get into them," Lopez said. "And that really made me mad. I said, 'I've had enough. I've got to do something.'"

She began working out and watching her diet. She's lost 39 pounds and says she is feeling better than she has in years.

"I feel like my game is the best it's been at a U.S. Open for a while," Lopez said. "I'm riding on confidence and the way that I'm swinging right now."

Lopez had an erratic round before her late charge Friday, missing a pair of 3-foot par putts that left her stuck at 2-under. But on three of the most difficult holes on the course, she mounted her charge and swiftly erased the six shots that had separated her from Neumann.

Lopez knocked a 4-iron within 10 feet of the cup, then made it for a birdie on the par-4 16th. Then she hit a 7-iron to within 10 feet for birdie on the 17th.

On the par-5 18th, she hit a tricky 57-yard wedge to within 5 feet. As she Andrews' Bob Gulley takes aim at the Par 3, second hole Friday at the Green Tree Jamboree. Gulley, alone, had seven birdies and one eagle en route to a first-round 63 for he and partner Mike Campbell.

Bill Gulley dominates Jamboree

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

When playing in a two-man, low ball tournament, otherwise known as a partnership, there is nothing like a good partner.

Friday at the Green Tree Jamboree, Andrews' Mike Campbell found that out. Because when the seven birdies and one eagle were added up, there was no better partner than his — fellow Andrews' resident, Bill Gulley.

The twosome took advantage of Gulley's hot streak to post an eight-under-par 63 and fire out of the gates with a two-stroke lead over two teams (Ron and Dub Huckabee, and Trey Womack and Bob Fedro) after the first round of the three-day event at Green Tree Country Club.

"Bill (Gulley) played a great round of golf," said Campbell, brother of former Midland College standout Chad Campbell. "This was my first (Jamboree), and it was fun to watch."

The twosome didn't have a really noteworthy start. Just a first-hole birdie by Culley was added with four straight pars to start the round. However, that changed when they reached the sixth hole. Culley birdied Nos. 6, 7, 9, and 12 to go with a chip-in eagle at the par-5, 10th hole. Going 6-under par over seven holes can build some serious momentum and can also leave the course defenseless.

"At that point (on No. 6), I has missed a three footer on three and we thought things were heading south," Culley said. "Then it turned around. I chipped in for eagle on No. 10, and it went downhill from there. We were 6-under through seven holes, and we took advantage of it."

Culley birdied 15, and both players birdied 18, leaving the team as the hunted going into Saturday's second round. The leader's spot is a position they will enjoy, but not exactly relish. They just couldn't be happier with the start.

"You don't want to shoot yourself in the foot," Culley said. "We wanted to stay in second or third and have a chance. It feels good to get off to a good start. There are some strong players in the field.

"Who knows? I once took a nine-shot lead into the final round at Seminole (at the Gaines County Open) and lost. I have learned that there is not a lead big enough to have until it is over."

Culley also knows that Campbell, a former two-time all-American at Abilene Christian University, didn't have one

Lewis set to defend title

By Tim Dahlberg
AP Sports Writer

STATELINE, Nev. — Before Mike Tyson decided to bite Evander Holyfield, Lennox Lewis was sure nothing could top the bizarre way he won his piece of the heavyweight title.

Oliver McCall was crying in the ring and had stopped defending himself when Lewis was declared the WBC heavyweight champion in the fourth round of their Feb. 8 title fight.

Lewis had the title, but in a way he felt cheated. His big moment was overshadowed by McCall's breakdown in the ring, and his win was a hollow one.

"I was denied my glory to a certain extent," Lewis said. "My main premise was to get the WBC belt, but I wanted to do it in a better fashion than I did."

Lewis (30-1) gets his chance to show his skills for the first time since winning the title when he defends it against No. 1-ranked Henry Akinwande in a scheduled 12-round fight at the Caesars Tahoe showroom Saturday.

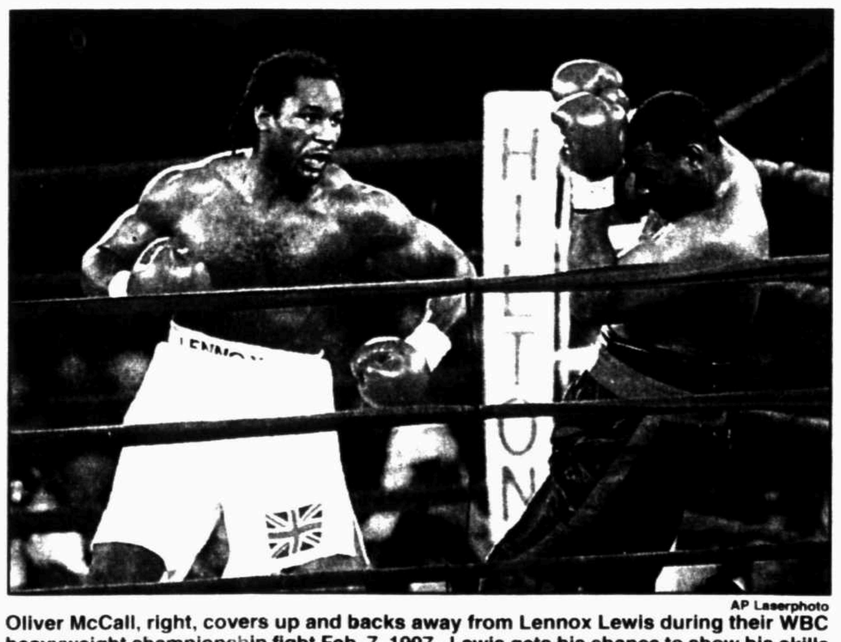

"I want to prove I'm the best heavyweight on the planet," Lewis said.

The fight matches two of the tallest heavyweights in the business — Lewis is 6-foot-5 and Akinwande is 6-7 — who have some other similarities.

Both are British fighters — Akinwande by way of Nigeria — and both have held titles in the past.

Only Akinwande is undefeated though,

Irabu fever hits Bronx

By Steve Campbell
New York Times News Service

ALBANY, N.Y. — The department of health is on notice. Doctors are standing by for instructions. The American League is poised to take emergency action.

As fast as a 97-mph fastball can get from the pitcher's mound to home plate, Irabu Fever has reached epidemic proportions.

The carrier of this latest threat to public safety is Japanese pitcher Hideki Irabu. Despite New York Yankees owner George Steinbrenner's compulsion to seduce players he will come to loathe with suitcases full of money, there are no danger signs of Irabu replacing Kenny Rogers as the latest-model lemon in pinstripes.

Irabu made his major-league debut Thursday night at Yankee Stadium. The ripples of his presence in the Yankees pitching rotation already have turned into a tsunami.

Angels rally to beat Shreveport

Staff Report

SHREVEPORT, La. — After struggling with getting runners home for the better part of two nights, the Midland Angels took advantage of their opponents' wild arms Friday night.

The Angels tied the game in the top of the ninth against the Shreveport Captains on a throwing error then scored what proved to be the winning run the next inning on a wild pitch in a 7-4 10-inning victory.

The Captains had led the entire way, taking a 4-2 lead into the ninth thanks to solo home runs by Keith Williams and Armando Rios off Midland starter Fausto Macey.

The Angels began their rally in the inning when Tim Harkrider led off with a single and went to third when Keith Luuloa chopped a double down the left-field line.

Jed Dalton then hit a routine grounder to second baseman Jon Sbracco which scored Harkrider, but Sbracco threw wildly to first, bringing home Luuloa with the tying run.

In the top of the 10th, Aaron Guiel led off with a walk and went to third on Danny Buxbaum's single. Reliever Jeff Martin then uncorked a wild pitch which allowed Guiel to score from third. Buxbaum eventually came around to score on Jamie Burke's groundout and a sacrifice fly by Bret Hemphill to make it 6-4.

Harkrider and Luuloa then got a single and a double respectively to bring home an insurance run. They each got three hits batting at the bottom of the lineup.

Juan Alvarez (2-0) retired Chris Singleton with a runner on second in the bottom of the ninth and picked up the win for the Angels. Nick Skuse pitched a perfect 10th for his eighth save in eight opportunities.

Randy Betten drove in Midland's first two runs with a pair of singles.

The two teams take on each other again tonight at 7:35 p.m. with Andy Taulbee (0-4, 6.00 ERA) taking the mound for the Captains against Jarrod Washburn (9-8, 5.50 ERA) who has won four straight for the Angels.

IRABU: Pitcher takes on Cleveland next stripes apparently causes extreme posterior discomfort to innocent bystanders, because fans at Yankee Stadium kept rising from their seats and screaming deliriously Thursday night. Detroit Tigers hitters lunged and lurched in Irabu's wake. Yankees manager Joe Torre clearly wasn't feeling like himself, either, because he was smiling in the dugout during the middle of a game. Steinbrenner experienced an altogether different Irabu Fever symptom — a puffed-out chest.

For the record, the name is pronouced EAR-uh-boo, not ear-RAW-boo. Get it right, because there is going to be plenty of reason to say it out loud.

Irabu showed all the right stuff in a 10-3 victory against the Tigers. Surrounded by a circus atmosphere, Irabu resisted the Rogers impulse to perform like a clown. Irabu worked 6 2/3 innings, limiting the Tigers to two runs on five hits. He struck out nine batters — eight in the first four innings. When he departed, Irabu Fever symptons hit a crowd of 51,901 at once.

They stood. They screamed. And then many started to leave the premises, perhaps to seek medical attention.

To think, Torre had approached the game with the anticipation of a Clinton — Bill, Hillary, pick one — taking a lie-detector test. "We're anxious, anxious, basically, to get this first day over with," Torre had said earlier in the day. Now Torre and pitching coach Mel Stottlemyre undoubtedly can't wait for Irabu to take regular turns in a rotation that already features David Cone, Andy Pettitte and Dwight Gooden.

Irabu was as good as advertised — which, considering his billing as the Japanese Nolan Ryan, is saying something. Fastballs in the mid-to-high 90s. Splitters in the low 90s and high 80s, mixed with an occasional knee-buckling curveball. Storm clouds ahead for A.L. hitters.

As a rule, it is foolish to make too much of one performance in a sport measured by increments of 1/162. Considering the wait of the world that rested on Irabu's shoulders for his big-league debut, though, there should be no questions about his ability to handle a spotlight that makes Broadway look like a high-school play.

During his six-start, minor-league conditioning stint, Irabu traveled with an interpreter, a Yankees publicist and an acupuncturist/trainer. The Yankees gave out more than 300 press credentials without fully satisfying the demand generated by Irabu. The game was televised live during Japan's rush hour. The crowd was more than 21,000 higher than the Yankees' season average heading into the All-Star break.

Quite a fuss for a 28-year-old right-hander with 31 minor-league innings under his heavyweight belt. Then again, Steinbrenner had made sure there would be a fuss by signing Irabu to a four-year, $12.8 million contract. On Wednesday, Irabu and Yankees catcher Joe Girardi met at the stadium to work on some rudimentary communications. Still, Irabu found time that day to attend a reception in his honor at city hall.

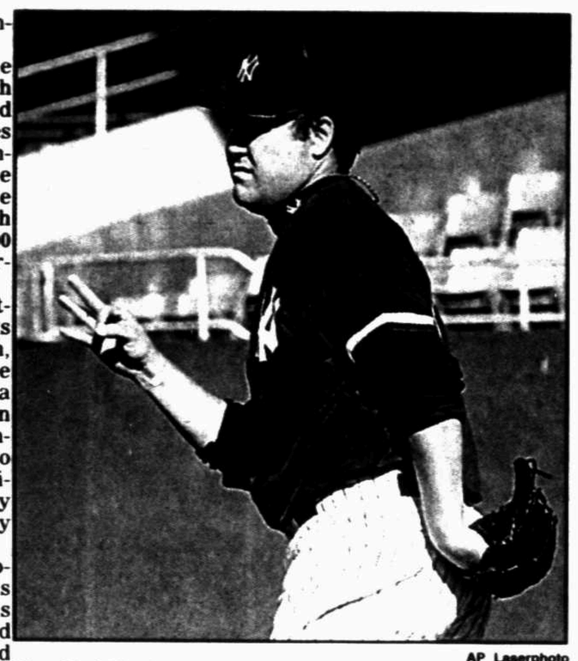

"If he's reading the papers, it's probably unfair to him," Girardi said. "He's not God. He's very human, and he's going to make mistakes just like David Cone does, just like Andy Pettitte and the rest of our pitchers."

Girardi had reason for caution, because there was a truly ominous omen Tuesday: The van transporting Irabu to Yankee Stadium clipped Steinbrenner's car in the parking lot.

Clearly, Irabu has what it takes to thrive in the Bronx Zoo. Irabu had the self-confidence necessary to buck the Japanese system, which called for him to become a San Diego Padre. He insisted he wanted to be a Yankee, period.

Talk about magic words to Steinbrenner, whose money couldn't buy the love or allegiance of Greg Maddux or Roger Clemens. Pitchers David Wells, Pettitte and Rogers, among others, groused about the need to add an unproven pitcher to the a team that won the World Series last fall.

"He wanted to be a Yankee from the start, and I admire that," Cone said. "I admire him standing up for his rights. I'm going to welcome him."

New York Yankees' pitcher Hideki Irabu signals to his teammate while taking warmup throws before the game against the Detroit Tigers on Friday at Yankee Stadium in New York. Irabu, making his debut yesterday, got his first Major League win as the Yanks beat the Tigers 10-3.

Acceptance came quickly enough. When Irabu polished off a 1-2-3 first inning by striking out Bobby Higginson and Travis Fryman, the first player to greet him in the dugout was Wells. Torre summoned reliever Jeff Nelson in the seventh inning, a cue for the crowd to give Irabu one last standing ovation. Irabu left the dugout for a curtain call, tipping his cap to the crowd. He sat down next to Wells, and the two teammates shared a laugh.

Irabu Fever has spread all the way through the Yankees clubhouse. Doctors are standing by.

LEWIS: Faces No. 1 contender for title with only a draw in 33 fights marring his record. He gave up the WBO version of the title to get in line to challenge Lewis for the more prestigious WBC crown, getting the fight by being the mandatory No. 1 challenger.

"I'm looking forward to being the WBC champion of the world," Akinwande said.

Coming just two weeks after Tyson was disqualified for biting Holyfield in their WBA title fight, Lewis sees his title defense as a chance to get the heavyweight division upright again.

Though most people in and out of boxing now consider Holyfield the true champion, Lewis claims he is a better boxer and puncher than the WBA champion.

"Holyfield can't say he's the best boxer on the planet," he said. "He's boxed Riddick Bowe three times and Mike Tyson twice. Yet he seems to put me by the wayside because he realizes I'm the man to beat him."

Lewis, who had been inactive for more than a year before beating McCall, previously had been given the WBC title when Bowe threw it in a garbage can in London. He was knocked out by McCall in their first fight, though, and has a reputation of a fighter who possesses a lot of talent but has trouble training and focusing for fights.

Against Akinwande, an akward defensive fighter, he must look good to regain some credibility.

"It's an opportunity for me to show my stuff," Lewis said. "I think the whole world will be watching. The fight with McCall people didn't get their money's worth and in the Tyson fight they didn't. They'll get their money's worth in this fight."

Lewis acknowledged that with Tyson out at least a year, there will be fewer big money opportunities in the heavyweight division. But he said it gives an opportunity to some promising fighters to make a reputation for themselves.

"People still want to see the sport, especially the heavyweights," he said. "You still have great champions out there such as myself and you have the up and coming superstars."

Akinwande, who lives in Florida, said he doesn't expect any bizarre endings to this title fight.

"I'll make sure that we work within the boxing rules," he said.

walked to the green, the big crowd erupted.

"You get a few chills up and down your spine," Lopez said.

It was the 17th green she had hit in 18 tries Friday, and she made the putt.

Nicholas, 35, had long since finished her round, having gotten up at 5 a.m. to make her early tee time.

"I'm not good in the mornings, so I really had to shake myself," she said. "I was very quiet for about an hour after I got up, because I couldn't cope with talking to anyone."

The two-time LPGA winner and past winner of the British, Swedish and German opens cleared out the early-morning cobwebs in a hurry, with birdies on the first, fourth and fifth holes, and another on No. 15. She capped her birdie spree by rolling in a 25-footer on No. 16.

Nicholas could have done even better, but missed birdie putts from 12 feet and closer on three holes. And on the par-4 eighth, her bunker shot for a birdie rolled over the hole before stopping 6 inches on the other side.

Neumann, meanwhile, admitted that nerves may have gotten to her.

"I know what it takes to win and I know how important this event is," said Neumann, who won the 1988 Open. "But I guess it's pretty normal to be a little nervous when you get into that position."

The lanky Swede had five birdies in the first 10 holes and was cruising along at 8-under before an ugly tee shot on No. 16 triggered her collapse.

"I just sort of let one bad swing get to me today," she said, "and it feels pretty disappointing right now."

It could have been worse. On No. 17, she smashed her approach shot over the green, but the ball hit a photographer and stopped.

"Thank God," she said, "because otherwise I think it would have been gone. That was a good bogey."

The course in the hills 25 miles west of Portland, with waist-high weeds and brush all around, does not allow for careless shots, Neumann said.

"If you can't drive it in the fairway," she said, "you're in a lot of trouble out there."

GULLEY: GTCC tourney continues today of his better days. Knowing that Campbell can bust out with a solid round today or Sunday, adds nothing but confidence.

"Mike is capable of something like this," Culley said. "We have to feel good about this without him playing well."

In the rear-view mirror of the front runners are the two groups, which each shot 65 playing in the same foursome. The Huckabees have won the Jamboree before and their bogey-less, 6-under start put them in the hunt.

"We are all right. We didn't give anything away and didn't hurt ourselves," said father Ron Huckabee, who had four of the team's six birdies. "It was a solid day. I was just tickled I played a little bit better for him (Dub). I played better today than I have for the whole summer."

The Huckabee's playing partners on Friday, Trey Womack and Bob Fedro, used strong finish to place them in the top 3. The pair put themselves in a bit of a hole with two, three-putt bogeys to go with four birdies through No. 14. But birdies on 15 and 16 and an eagle by Womack on 18 vaulted the pair up the leaderboard.

"We finished good," said Womack, whose was the top Midland golfer at the Texas State Amateur and West Texas Amateur. "We played sporadic at first and we came on well at the end. You want to be close after the first round. We are ready."

Bobby Welborn and Burl Fuller shot a 67 to take fourth while the teams of Doug Noah and Jim Cauthen and Nathan Foreman and Paul Neatherlin are tied with 68s. Three twosomes are tied with 69s.

OTHER LEADERS: Mike Johnson and Reece Boudreaux shot a 67 to take the lead in President's Flight. The teams of Jim Harrison and Jim Lassiter, Steve Pitts and Greg Pitts, and Steve Corson and Donny Winslow are tied at the top of the flirst flight with 68s. Sorenstam can't explain collapse

By Bob Baum
AP Sports Writer

NORTH PLAINS, Ore. — When her nightmare at Witch Hollow ended, Annika Sorenstam had no answers.

In position to make golf history by becoming the first golfer to win three consecutive U.S. Women's Open championships, she failed horribly, not even coming close to making the cut after Friday's second round.

"I'm going to go home and try to replay the holes in my head and try and figure out what's wrong," she said. "I really don't know what's wrong. Maybe I put too much pressure on myself. I wish I had an answer."

The calm, confident golfer who hadn't missed a cut in 62 tournaments — dating back to the Jamie Farr Kroger Classic in 1994 — shot an 8-over-par 150 on the Witch Hollow course at Pumpkin Ridge Thursday and Friday.

Any hope she had of making the cut as one of the low 60 scores ended with a double-bogey on the par-4 13th, when her 7-iron approach shot sailed over the green and landed in an environmentally sensitive wetlands area that had been deemed out of bounds.

She is just the fourth defending Open champion to miss the cut, and the first since Hollis Stacy in 1985.

Her competitors seemed shocked that Sorenstam wouldn't be around Saturday and Sunday. After all, the 26-year-old Swedish champion had won an astounding 10 of her last 40 tournaments since winning her first U.S. Open in 1995.

This year, she has won four times and finished in the top three an amazing nine times in 13 tournaments.

After her opening-round, 6-over 77 on Thursday, she vowed to come back strong. But she played even-par on the first nine holes Friday.

"I played great, better than I've played in a long time," she said of that front nine. "But the putts weren't falling."

She finished the day at 2-over 73.

She graciously showed up in the interview room to talk about how she felt.

"You know, luckily, life goes on. There will be a day tomorrow," she said. "I haven't missed a cut in a long time and I really don't know what to do on weekends. But I think I'll get over it. I've played really good this year, and that's what I've got to think about."

Sorenstam will be back next week for the JAL Big Apple Classic in New Rochelle, N.Y.

"One tournament is only one tournament, even though this is a very big one and a very important one to me," she said. "But I'll be back."

Sorenstam's 36-hole tally was unbelievable to those who had witnessed her remarkable consistency: four birdies, seven bogeys, one double bogey, one triple bogey.

"I know how to play this course. It doesn't seem like it, but I can feel it inside," she said. "I have to come back and play it. It's really a good golf course. I have a lot of respect for it."

Sorenstam ended her round with a birdie on the par-5 18th, showing, at least, that she doesn't quit.

"Yeah, that's a good way of looking at it," she said. "I didn't read the putt real well. I just went up and said it doesn't matter what I do and I made it. Maybe that's what I should have done all day."

Japan loves Irabu after win

TOKYO (AP) — Hideki Irabu left Japan a despised loser. All it took was a major-league win to again make him a beloved hero.

Before his highly successful debut Thursday night with the New York Yankees, many Japanese fans had called Irabu a spoiled "bad boy" brat. His widely publicized disputes with his former Japanese team upset many harmony-oriented Japanese.

But few seemed to remember any of that after his 10-3 victory over the Detroit Tigers in which he struck out nine and allowed only five hits in 6 2-3 innings.

His performance swept the front pages of newspapers Friday.

"Past problems blown away," the national Yomiuri newspaper said in its headline.

Television networks repeatedly showed footage of the game.

"I watched him from the beginning to the end," Masumi Kuwata, a starting pitcher for the Yomiuri Giants, said.

"I know he had troubles before joining the Yankees, but this is a world where talent counts."

Irabu's troubles with the Lotte Marines started over the team's exclusive agreement with the San Diego Padres. Irabu, his heart set on playing for the Yankees, refused to negotiate with the Padres for three months.

The Yankees finally obtained Irabu from San Diego April 22, signing him to a four-year, $12.8 million contract.

Atlanta Braves' base runner Chipper Jones scores on an Andruw Jones double as New York Mets catcher Todd Pratt takes the late throw during the fifth inning in Atlanta on Friday. The Mets won the game 9-7.

Hampton shuts out Pirates as Astros get fourth straight win

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — The Houston Astros finally are starting to play like they were supposed to all season. Unfortunately for the Pittsburgh Pirates, they are, too.

Mike Hampton, previously winless on the road this season and against Pittsburgh during his career, pitched Houston back into first place in NL Central by beating the Pirates 10-0 Friday night.

Derek Bell homered and drove in two runs during a 3-for-4 night as the Astros won their fourth in a row and shut out Pittsburgh for the second consecutive night. Darryl Kile's six-hitter Thursday in the Astros' 7-0 victory ended Pittsburgh's seven-game winning streak.

■ NL Roundup

Craig Biggio is 6-for-9 and Bell is 5-for-9 with three RBIs as the Astros have outscored Pittsburgh 17-0 in the first two games of a four-game series matching the NL Central's two top teams at the All-Star break.

"We're working on our run differential," Houston manager Larry Dierker said.

Pittsburgh, which unexpectedly led the division by a game at the break, fell back into a second-place tie with St. Louis, which lost in Chicago.

"We're soon going to have to put on football helmets," the Pirates' Kevin Young said. "Those are a couple of football scores."

Hampton (5-7) pitched a five-hitter for his second complete game victory in three starts — he also beat the Indians 6-2 on July 2 — after going 0-7 with a 5.83 ERA in his previous 11 road starts. He struck out four and walked one.

He had been 0-2 with a 5.92 ERA in 10 career appearances against the Pirates, who hadn't lost to a left-handed starter since June 2.

Just as importantly for the Astros, they swung their bats well for the second night in a row against a pitching staff that limited the White Sox and Cardinals to 14 runs in seven games immediately before the break.

"You tend to settle down (when the offense scores)," Hampton said. "You don't try to do too much, I just wanted to keep the ball down. We finished on a positive note before the break and we've carried it over. We're doing what we've been wanting to do all year."

The Pirates wouldn't blame the break for ruining their momentum — or, for that matter, Houston's pitching.

"I don't think you can blame (the break)," Jason Kendall said. "Both pitchers threw well, but we didn't hit when we had to."

Hampton constantly pitched out of trouble as the Astros nursed a 2-0 lead over the first five innings. He retired three batters in a row after Jose Guillen singled and Kevin Polcovich walked to start the third, including Tony Womack on a line drive to short that nearly sailed into left-center.

"That ball goes in the gap, maybe it's a different game," Pirates manager Gene Lamont said.

Hampton also stranded Kendall at second following his leadoff double in the fifth. The Pirates also left two on in the sixth.

Esteban Loaiza (6-6), a winner only twice in 11 starts, took the loss, giving up eight hits and five runs, three earned, over six innings. Two runs resulted from errors by Young, an excellent defensive first baseman making an infrequent start at third base.

Biggio, who was 4-for-4 Thursday, started the Astros' two-run first with a single and Jeff Bagwell reached one batter later on Young's run-scoring, two-base throwing error. Bell followed with an RBI single.

"The one thing we've talked about all year is we can't keep depending on Bagwell and Biggio game after game. They're not going to get it done every night," Dierker said. "So it's encouraging to see Bell and (Sean) Berry contribute. ... It's the kind of thing we've been waiting for all year long. You'd like to keep it going for a week or so and start to play with some confidence."

Berry had a two-run single in a three-run Houston sixth and Bell hit a solo homer, his sixth, in the seventh off reliever Marc Wilkins.

The shutout was Hampton's second of his career. He beat Atlanta 3-0 on May 1, 1996.

Mets 9, Braves 7

ATLANTA — Pinch-hitter Matt Franco's two-run double highlighted a four-run eighth that carried the Mets to their fifth straight victory.

New York overcame a 5-1 deficit against Tom Glavine for its 24th comeback win this season.

Fred McGriff hit a solo homer in the seventh that put the Braves ahead 6-5. But Bernard Gilkey doubled to start the Mets eighth and Todd Pratt drew a one-out walk.

Manny Alexander singled home the tying run and chased Glavine (9-5), whose three-game winning streak ended. Franco met reliever Brad Clontz with his two-run double to left-center for an 8-6 lead and later scored on Lance Johnson's single.

Cory Lidle (3-1) retired two batters in the seventh. John Franco gave up a run in the ninth but got his 22nd save.

New York's Edgardo Alfonzo went hitless in five at-bats, ending his 20-game hitting streak.

Expos 5, Reds 2

CINCINNATI — David Segui's two-out, two-run homer put Montreal ahead in the sixth inning, and Expos relievers pitched out of bases-loaded threats to preserve the victory.

Jim Bullinger (6-8) beat the Reds for the second time this season, giving up six singles and a pair of walks in 5 2-3 innings.

Ugueth Urbina pitched out of a bases-loaded, two-out rally in the eighth by striking out Curtis Goodwin, then got the last three outs for his 16th save in 19 opportunities.

The Reds lost their third straight. Dave Burba (5-9) allowed four runs on six hits in 6 1-3 innings to take his fifth loss in six decisions. He has won only once since May 18.

Phillies 13, Marlins 3

MIAMI — Rookie Scott Rolen went 3-for-4 with a three-run homer and five RBIs as Philadelphia snapped a 13-game road losing streak.

The Phillies, who had lost 10 of 11, scored a season-high 13 runs and tied their season high with 15 hits.

Curt Schilling (10-8) struck out 10 and walked three in six innings, the eighth time this year he has struck out 10 or more.

Kevin Brown (8-6) lost for the second time in three starts despite striking out nine, one off his season high. He lasted only five innings, matching a season-low, giving up five earned runs, two walks and two wild pitches.

Florida, which lost for the fourth time in five games, got a two-run double by Charles Johnson in the fifth, and a solo homer by Johnson in the ninth.

In the Phillies' eight-run ninth, Matt Whisenant walked the first three batters, giving up five earned runs without retiring a batter.

Cubs 7, Cardinals 1

CHICAGO — Jeremi Gonzalez gave up five hits over 7 1-3 innings and Sammy Sosa hit his 18th homer and drove in four runs as the Chicago Cubs defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 7-1 Friday.

Gonzalez (6-2) allowed one run, struck out four and walked four in his fourth straight victory and second straight against St. Louis.

In the first, Sosa walked and scored on Mark Grace's double off the left-field wall. Shawon Dunston hit the next pitch into the left-field bleachers for his fourth homer and a 3-0 lead.

Gonzalez opened the fifth with a walk, and scored on Sosa's single to left.

Mark Petkovsek relieved starter Matt Morris (6-6) to start the seventh and, with two outs, gave up a single to Doug Glanville and a walk to Brian McRae. Sosa homered into the center-field bleachers for a 7-0 lead.

Ray Lankford's 18th homer in the eighth accounted for the Cardinals' run.

Blijlevens wins 6th stage after Zabel is disqualified

MARENNES, France — The winner of the stage was placed last. Another top rider was thrown out of the race and another tested positive for drugs.

It was not a typical day for the Tour de France Friday.

■ Tour de France

Jeroen Blijlevens was declared the winner of the sixth stage after organizers took away Erik Zabel's apparent victory and placed him last for the stage.

"After looking at the images of the sprint of the sixth stage, the jury of commissioners has decided to put Erik Zabel to last place of the stage and fine him 200 Swiss francs ($137)," said Jean-Francois Pesheux, sports director of the Tour de France.

Zabel was disqualified for interference early in the final sprint.

Later, Pesheux said that Djamolidin Abdoujaparov of Uzbekistan tested positive after the second stage and was disqualified for the rest of the Tour.

Abdoujaparov, a powerful sprinter, originally was third in Friday's stage behind Zabel, then was moved to second after the disqualification.

The director of Abdoujaparov's team Lotto, Jean-Luc Vandenbroucke, confirmed the positive test.

"It is a delicate problem because he was controlled for two different products — a product of unknown origin and another product coming from a member of my team that I fired immediately," Vandenbroucke said.

"We had to react quickly because I cannot allow to work with some people who do things behind my back."

Another rider, Tom Steels of Belgium, also was thrown out of the race. for tossing his water bottle at another rider during the sprint finish.

It was the first time a rider was thrown out of the race for "a violent gesture," Tour de France officials said.

Steels, another of the top sprinters, was jockeying for position when he suddenly threw the bottle toward Frenchman Frederic Moncassin, who finished fifth in the stage. Steels, buried in the pack, was credited with finishing 124th before his number was taken down.

Zabel originally won the final sprint, beating Blijlevens of the Netherlands, Abdoujaparov and Mario Transveroni of Italy.

Erik Zabel of Germany waits for the official announcement after he was disqualified in the sixth stage of the Tour de France race between Le Blanc and Marennes, in western France on Friday.

The stage results were adjusted to show Blijlevens winning, Transveroni second and Micola Minali third. It was another flat stage dominated by the sprinters in a mass finish. Zabel won Tuesday's third

Royals lose 10th straight; Yanks blank Detroit

Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Royals lost their 10th straight game, one short of the team record, as Frank Thomas' three-run homer led the Chicago White Sox to a 6-2 victory Friday night.

■ AL Roundup

The loss was the second consecutive for Royals manager Tony Muser, who replaced the fired Bob Boone on Wednesday.

Muser did not have much luck with his very first trip to the mound. He brought in Mike Perez to replace starter Jose Rosado with two on and two outs in the seventh and Perez, an eight-year veteran recalled from Triple-A Omaha earlier Friday, watched Thomas hit his first delivery 427 feet for a 6-2 lead.

The Royals, who haven't won since June 27, are one defeat away from tying their club record of 11 consecutive losses in 1986. The White Sox won their fifth straight.

Wilson Alvarez (8-6), who hasn't lost since May 28, won his fifth straight decision. Rosado (7-5), the winning pitcher in Tuesday night's All-Star game despite giving up the NL's only run, got tagged for seven hits and five runs in 6 2-3 innings.

Brewers 3, Orioles 1

BALTIMORE — Ben McDonald pitched six hitless innings against his former team before leaving with a sore shoulder and ex-Oriole Jack Voigt homered as the Milwaukee Brewers sent Baltimore to its fourth straight loss.

McDonald (8-6) threw 99 pitches, facing one batter over the minimum before leaving with a stiff right shoulder. The only batter to reach base against him was ex-Brewer B.J. Surhoff, who was hit by a pitch in the second inning and immediately erased on a fielder's choice.

Rafael Palmeiro ended the no-hit bid with a one-out single in the seventh off Mike Fetters, who allowed three hits in 1 1-3 innings, including a run-scoring double by pinch-hitter Tony Tarasco in the eighth.

Ron Villone got two outs and former Oriole Doug Jones worked the ninth for his 21st save, finishing off the combined three-hitter.

Baltimore starter Jimmy Key allowed two earned runs, six hits and three walks in six innings. Key (12-5), who got married during the All-Star break, is 1-4 in his last five starts.

Yankees 3, Tigers 0

NEW YORK — Andy Pettitte extended his shutout streak to 22 innings, and Tino Martinez hit his 30th homer as the New York Yankees beat the Detroit Tigers for the ninth straight time.

Pettitte (10-5), coming off a six-hit shutout at Toronto, allowed six hits in seven innings, struck out four and walked one. His streak is the longest by a Yankees starter since Jimmy Key had 23 scoreless innings from April 5-21, 1993.

Martinez, who homered against Detroit for the second straight night, is tied for second in the majors with Ken Griffey Jr., one behind Oakland's Mark McGwire.

Jeff Nelson pitched a perfect eighth and Mariano Rivera a hitless ninth for his 28th save in 34 chances. The Tigers were shut out for the seventh time, tying them with the Yankees and Chicago Cubs for the major league lead.

Mike Moehler (6-7) pitched well but got in trouble early, allowing two runs in the first and a solo homer to Martinez in the third.

A night after Hideki Irabu drew 51,901 for his major league debut, just 27,135 showed up at Yankee Stadium.

Indians 5, Twins 1

MINNEAPOLIS — Fill-in starter Jason Jacome pitched five effective innings and Marquis Grissom hit a two-run homer, leading the Cleveland Indians past the Minnesota Twins.

Jacome (1-0) pitched in place of Brian Anderson, who was scratched because of a sore left elbow. In his second start of the season, Jacome gave up one run and five hits. He walked none and struck out one.

Grissom homered in the third off Rich Robertson (7-7). It was Grissom's third homer of the season and first since May 7.

Julio Franco led off the Cleveland seventh with a home run against Frankie Rodriguez.

Blue Jays 8, Red Sox 4

BOSTON — Toronto's Pat Hentgen pitched his league-leading eighth complete game, finishing off the Red Sox after the collapse of the Boston bullpen cost Steve Avery his first win since April.

Carlos Delgado matched his career-high with five RBIs, hitting a three-run homer in the ninth.

Hentgen (9-6) allowed 11 hits to snap a personal three-game losing streak. The defending AL Cy Young Award winner walked four and struck out two while allowing three earned runs.

John Wasdin (3-4) allowed four runs, one of them earned, on four hits in 1 1-3 innings. He spoiled a fine outing by Avery, who was making his second start since spending two months on the disabled list with a left groin strain.

Rocket makes return to Fenway Park

By Jimmy Golen
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Roger Clemens won't grab any dirt from the Fenway Park mound or take any shots at Red Sox management during his first trip back to Boston. He took care of all that before he left.

He hasn't come back to rub his 13-3 record into the face of those who said he was finished. The Rocket's revenge is on a much grander scale.

The three-time Cy Young Award winner, who spent the first 13 years of his major league career in Boston before a fallout with management led him to sign with the Toronto Blue Jays, wants the one honor still missing from his career, and the one prize Red Sox fans have sought for eight decades.

"What's my 13 wins do? We're a .500 ballclub," Clemens said while looking ahead to Saturday's start — his first against his former team.

"I've got 13 years of pitching, Cy Youngs, MVP, all this stuff. I've got a wonderful family and I'm extremely happy that my effort's somewhat keeping us afloat. But right now, we're not at the expectations of why I chose the city of Toronto."

He has indeed gathered quite a collection of individual honors: an MVP, three Cy Young Awards and as many wins in a Red Sox uniform as Young himself. He has led the league in strikeouts four times.

He set the major-league record with 20 strikeouts in a game in 1986. And then he matched it. More than a decade later. Just months after the Red Sox made him the offer that convinced him that they thought he was washed up.

He declared for free agency for the first time in his career and the offers rolled in. The Red Sox' proposal probably wasn't as insulting as he saw it, but it wasn't as competitive as they thought, either.

Toronto offered a three-year, $24.75 million deal — with reachable incentives that would activate the fourth season he sought. The New York Yankees said they would have beaten it if given the chance. But Clemens signed with the Blue Jays.

Some in Boston felt betrayed. Others felt Red Sox general manager Dan Duquette had botched the negotiations. Most agreed that the price was too steep.

But Clemens simply went out and pitched as well as he ever had. Asked if his league-leading 13 wins or 1.69 ERA might be salt in Duquette's wounds, Clemens said, "There are other things he needs to be concerned with. I think I'm the least of his worries."

That is true. Because regardless of what one thinks of Clemens, things haven't gone for the Red Sox this season without him.

Steve Avery, who was signed to be the new ace, has won only two games and spent much of the season on the disabled list. Mo Vaughn and Tim Naehring joined him there. Wilfredo Cordero missed nearly a month after being charged with assaulting and threatening to kill his wife.

In all, Boston was 17 1/2 games out of first place and last in the AL East heading into its series with Clemens' Blue Jays.

Perhaps that's why Clemens could seem so at ease Thursday, inviting reporters to a news conference at the team hotel, dressed up in a black pinstripe suit with his hair and goatee neatly trimmed. Despite prodding from the assembled media, he refused to reprise the shots at Duquette he fired so famously when he departed.

"I don't even want to go there. His first offer was designed to do what it did, and it served its purpose," he said. "I think everything's been well documented. The situation here had nothing to do with the city and the fans as to why I felt I was moving on. It happened, and I'm trying to be part of another banner."

Nicklaus trails by one stroke

■ Jack Nicklaus gets ready for next week's British Open by staying close to leader Larry Gilbert in Senior Players Championship.

By Harry Atkins
AP Sports Writer

DEARBORN, Mich. — Jack Nicklaus, showing he might indeed be ready for next week's British Open, shot a 5-under-par 67 in Friday's second round and trailed Larry Gilbert by a stroke in the Senior Players Championship.

Gilbert shot 68 for 135 and Nuicklaus was at 136. John Jacobs was another stroke back on the strength of a 66.

There were several at 138, including defending champion Raymond Floyd and two-time winner Dave Stockton. Floyd fired a second-round 68, Stockton shot 70.

Senior tour rookie Dana Quigley, a former New England club pro who shared the first-round lead with Gilbert, followed his opening 67 with 75 and was well off the pace at 142.

But all eyes were on Nicklaus, seeking his first victory since the Tradition in 1996.

Nicklaus got off to a rocky start, making bogey on the first two holes. But he got back into it with birdies on Nos. 3 and 6.

"This is probably the best position I've ever been in here," said Nicklaus, who won the championship in 1990 when it was played at nearby Dearborn Golf Club. "But I wasn't so sure when I started out.

"I said, 'Well, this is a good way to start! Bogey, bogey. Now, you're back in the middle of the pack.'"

An eagle on the 542-yard seventh got Nicklaus firmly into the hunt. He holed a 60-foot bunker shot for 3 on the hole.

Nicklaus birdied Nos. 10, 13 and 16 to reach 8-under with the par-5 17th and 417-yard No. 18 still to play. Disappointing approach shots held him to par on both holes.

Still, it was like old times as he marched up the final fairway to loud applause from the crowd on the hillsides of the Tournament Players Club of Michigan course. Nicklaus hit a 4-iron approach that was pin high, but about 25 feet to the right with a 4-foot, right-to-left break.

The crowd groaned as his putt stayed inches above the cup. But Nicklaus flashed his familiar smile as he tapped in for par.

"Sure, I hear the fans," Nicklaus said. "I know some people try to block everything out. But I've never done much of that."

Do the cheers help stir his competitive juices?

"During the last round, yes, you might feed off it a little bit," Nicklaus said. "But today it was just a nice noise that was there."

Gilbert, a former club pro from Kentucky, displayed an accurate iron game while following his opening 67 with a 68 over the 6,876-yard TPC course which Nicklaus designed. Only a lukewarm putter kept him from scoring better.

"I had a little bit of a wake-up call on No. 2," said Gilbert, who bogeyed the par-4. "I hit a little 8-iron about 18 feet, rolled it about 14 inches by the hole and missed it coming back. I said, 'You know, that's about enough of that.'"

Jacobs, who shot 66, said it has taken him a long time to get comfortable on courses designed by Nicklaus.

"I've always been a low-ball hitter, a hooker, and all of his courses are fading courses," Jacobs said. "But I'm learning how to play these kinds of courses now. I just made my mind up, hell with it, I'm just going to take my shot."

Winner of the championship will earn $270,000 of the $1.8 million purse furnished by Ford Motor Co., the sponsor.

DIVOTS: Tournament officials put a little temptation in the path of players by moving the tee up on No. 17, a 521-yard par-5 with water left and in front of the green. Most, however, played it safe up the right side. "Today is not the day to go crazy," said Schroeder, a former University of Michigan player. ... Bad luck on the 340-yard sixth hole kept Floyd from being much higher on the leader board. Floyd, the defending champion, knocked his ball in the water in each of the first two rounds. He finished with triple-bogey 7 during the first round. Friday, he came off a short approach shot and made double-bogey. Simple pars each day would have saved Floyd five strokes and put him at 11-under, instead of 6-under. ... Isao Aoki reached No. 17 in two, but needed three putts to get down. It was his first three-putt green of the week. ... Jimmy Powell's 67 was highlighted by a 31 on the front nine. ... Quigley, who birdied five of the final six holes for 31 on the back side during Thursday's first round, shot 38 on the final nine holes Friday. ... Hale Irwin, who leads the senior tour with four wins this season, shot 2-under 70 for 143. ... Nicklaus said the only thing that might bother him next week at Troon might be cold, damp weather which would bother his right hip. "I think my golf game's all right for Troon," Nicklaus said. "The question is whether I'm OK physically."

Lehman maintains lead at Loch

Associated Press

LOCH LOMOND, Scotland — Preparing to defend his British Open title, Tom Lehman took a two-stroke lead after three rounds of the Gulfstream World Invitational Friday.

Lehman shot a 4-under-par 67, while crawling behind a slow field and shrugging off a pesky Swede.

Leading by one shot and with his ball in deep rough after a wayward tee shot, it looked like Lehman would go into the final 18 holes tied with unheralded Pierre Fulke, who had made only two cuts in 11 tournaments this season.

Especially after he could only slash the ball 120 yards out of the thick grass onto the smooth fairway.

But his third shot from 115 yards put his ball only three feet from the pin and he made par while Fulke bogeyed. After rounds of 65-66-67, Lehman had a 15-under total of 198.

"It was a great day for golf," said Lehman, who defends his Open title next week 50 miles down the road at Troon.

"Trouble was it was like a snail's pace out there. Our officials would not let it be this slow or somebody would have had some fines slapped on them," said the American, whose round lasted more than five hours.

Fulke shot a 66 for 200 and former U.S. Open champion Steve Jones was third at 202 after a 68 that included only one bogey, at the 18th. U.S. Open titlist Ernie Els was fourth at 204 after a 65.

Forced to complete his second round because of a thunderstorm that delayed play for five hours Thursday, Fulke, who was seven behind Lehman at the start of the day, had a spectacular 1 1/2 rounds Friday.

The Swede, who awoke at 4:45 a.m. for a 6:45 start, birdied five holes in a row and was on pace to tie the course record before he bogeyed the 18th for a second-round 64.

That meant he went out again in the leading threesome at 1:10 p.m. with Lehman and Jones. The survivors of the cut went out in threes because of Thursday's weather problems and with the forecast of more rain.

Lehman saw Fulke wipe out his lead before responding with four birdies in a row, starting at No. 7.

With the cushion of a three-stroke lead, Lehman started with safe tee shots down the middle, while Jones and Fulke were spraying them around the course.

Fulke was zig-zagging the fairways and bogeyed the par-4 second with two wayward shots. But he began his run of four birdies in five holes with a second shot to the back of the green at the par-5 third and two-putted from 50 feet.

Fulke cut Lehman's lead to one when the Swede's shot from a fairway bunker finished only 15 feet from the pin for a birdie three. Lehman's second shot to the green rolled back into a ditch and he wound up with a five, his first bogey of the tournament.

At the 190-yard fifth, all three dropped their tee shots close to the flag. While Lehman missed, Jones and Fulke both rolled in theirs for birdies and Lehman's lead was gone.

Lehman began his birdie binge at No. 7 by rolling in a 30-footer. He had putts of eight and five feet to reach the turn in 34 and followed with a 25-foot putt at the 10th.

Keith Fergus takes second-round lead at Quad City

COAL VALLEY, Ill. — In 1987, Keith Fergus gave up competitive golf. Seven years later, at age 40, he resumed his career. Now he's leading the Quad City Classic after two rounds in a bid for his first PGA Tour victory in 14 years.

Fergus shot a 6-under-par 64 Friday to go 9-under for the tournament. He has a one-stroke lead over Ed Dougherty and Robert Gamez. Russ Cochran, David Toms and former University of Iowa standout Sean McCarty were another shot back.

Dougherty, who has won once in 23 seasons, outperformed playing partners Scott Hoch and Jeff Sluman — the top two money-earners in the field. Hoch, who just made the cut at even-par 140, is ranked sixth. Sluman is 24th.

Dougherty is playing well even though his left arm sometimes falls asleep as a result of a shoulder injury that has plagued him for a decade.

Schrader gets first pole in 2 years

By Mike Recht
Associated Press Writer

LOUDON, N.H. — Ken Schrader, who hasn't won a Winston Cup race in six years, won his first pole in two years Friday at New Hampshire International Speedway.

Schrader led the qualifiers for Sunday's Jiffy Lube 300 with a record 129.423 mph lap on the 1.058-mile oval.

■ Jiffy Lube 300

Bobby Hamilton was second at 129.375 and Ricky Craven, who set the record last year, was third.

"This is a car we haven't run this year," Schrader said of his Chevy Monte Carlo. "They ran it here last year and said they've had some of their best finishes with it. I've been wondering why we haven't run it, but it looks like it's a good one. It was good right off the trailer."

The pole is the 19th for Schrader, but his first since Pocono on June 9, 1995, and his first for the Skoal Bandit racing team he joined this year.

Schrader, who has four Winston Cup victories, but none since 1991, could use a good start and finish after only two top 10 finishes entering the second half of the season.

"We've got finishes that haven't been real impressive, but I think if anybody has been watching TV the last four or five weeks, they've seen this Skoal team is ready to go," he said.

But the results haven't been there. Five weeks ago, he had a sixth but hasn't been better than 15th in the last four weeks.

Owner and crew chief Andy Petree thinks this week might help turn things around.

"Our expectations are to get a top five finish out of here to help solidify this team," he said. "Our hopes are to win the race obviously, but we expect to run in the top five and finish in the top five."

But Schrader and Petree should be aware that no pole winner has won any of the four previous Winston Cup races at New Hampshire.

Last year's winner, Ernie Irvan, qualified 11th Friday, while series leader, Jeff Gordon, failed to qualify on the first day for the first time this season.

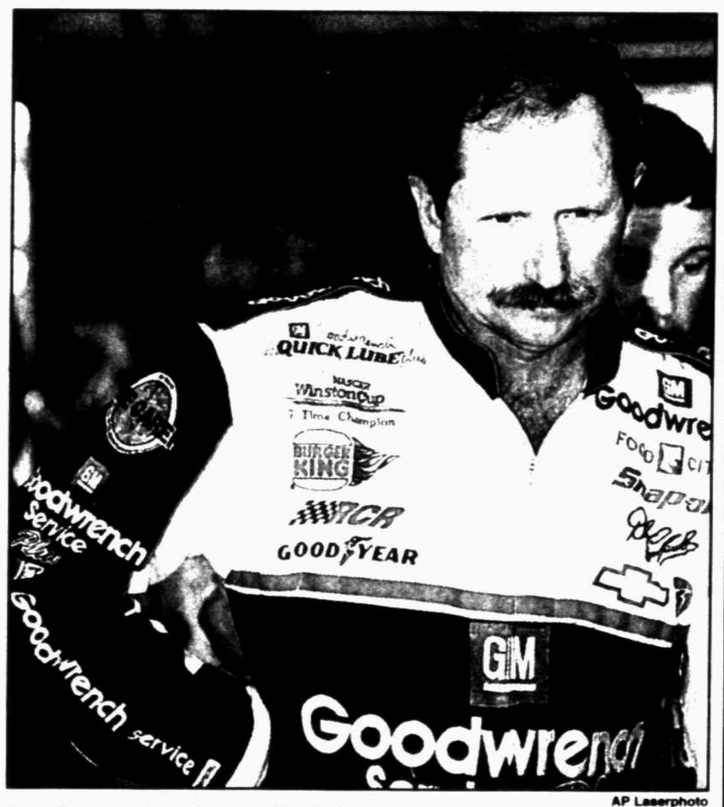

The only other driver among the top 10 in the driver standings who failed to qualify was Dale Earnhardt, who just missed at No. 26. He, Gordon and the others will get another shot Saturday on the second day of qualifying.

Ernie Irvan talked graciously Friday about being let go by the Robert Yates Racing team after four years, and said he's "wide open to any offers."

Although the season is only half over, Irvan said it's an advantage knowing now that his contract won't be renewed because it gives him a head start to find another Winston Cup ride for next season.

"I'm glad he made up his mind now," Irvan said after qualifying for the Winston Cup Jiffy Lube 300 at New Hampshire International Speedway, where he is defending champion.

However, he declined to say if he had been contacted by any teams, and if so, how many.

Bills' Bruce Smith holds out of camp

By Bucky Gleason
AP Sports Writer

FREDONIA, N.Y. — Bruce Smith opened training camp Friday working out just like the rest of the Buffalo Bills, only he was in Virginia while they were getting ready for their first practice.

The Defensive Player of the Year stayed at home on the advice of agent Leigh Steinberg after the Bills gave Smith a final offer worth $22 million over five years, including a $5 million signing bonus. Smith did not know how long he would hold out. He wants a bigger signing bonus.

"I'm not going to tolerate it," Smith told The Associated Press after lifting weights near his home in Virginia Beach. "I just wanted to be treated fairly and with respect so I can walk away with my dignity. I hope things will work out. The fans of Buffalo deserve better."

Smith, 34, is scheduled to make $2.2 million this season under a contract restructured two seasons ago when the Bills were trying to make room under the salary cap. Smith said the team promised him the contract would be reworked after last season. He rejected an offer made May 7.

"They want to get something for nothing and take advantage of me," Smith said. "I went overboard and did a favor for them by giving them cap relief. This year was not supposed to happen. This year would have never happened had I not been gullible — had I not believed that this management was going to be fair."

Bills general manager John Butler refused to discuss details of the offer, but said the team would stand firm. He said the promise made to Smith was that his contract would be reviewed.

"Bruce is under contract," Butler said. "The decision falls in his corner. I feel very justified in what we have offered and what we have done."

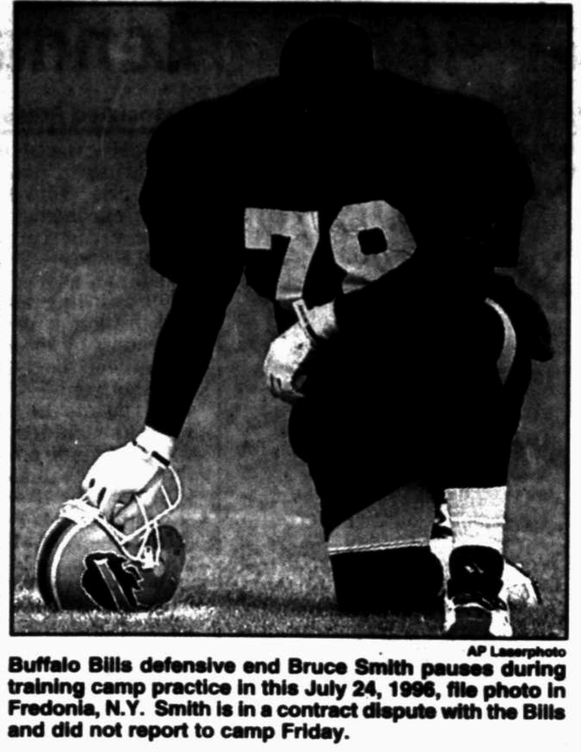

Meanwhile, the Bills signed running back Antowain Smith, their No. 1 draft choice. He received a five-year deal worth more than $5 million.

Had Bruce Smith accepted the Bills' proposal, he would be the highest-paid player in team history — but the bonus was well short of the $7.5 million given up front to Kansas City linebacker Derrick Thomas, who is 30.

Steinberg, who also represents Thomas, has a reputation of telling his players to be in training camp on time. But he told Smith late Thursday to stay home after negotiations stalled with Buffalo.

"We're moving in reverse," Steinberg said by telephone from Newport Beach, Calif. "Since (the May 7 offer), there hasn't been one meaningful move.

"They have made a new proposal, and it's a large amount of money," Steinberg said. "I don't want to minimize that, but it's not a fair offer. John Butler made it clear there would be no dialogue. In this occasion, they have breached the obligation to negotiate in good faith."

Buffalo Bills defensive end Bruce Smith pauses during training camp practice in this July 24, 1996, file photo in Fredonia, N.Y. Smith is in a contract dispute with the Bills and did not report to camp Friday.

The Bills' defense revolves around Smith, a nine-time Pro Bowl selection who was the 19th highest-paid defensive player last season. Smith has 140 career sacks, second all-time to Green Bay's Reggie White.

Smith's absence in training camp is not a major concern for Buffalo because his participation in preseason workouts has been limited for years.

Last year, he did not begin practicing until shortly before the season.

Aikman remembers high school teacher

By Jerry Fink
Associated Press

TULSA, Okla. — Quarterback Troy Aikman gives his high school typing teacher a passing grade.

The Dallas Cowboys star has nominated Jean Froman to be National Football League Teacher of the Year.

Winners of the competition, which includes five NFL Teachers of the Month as well as Teacher of the Year, are selected during the regular football season.

Apparently, Aikman was a legend on the keyboard before becoming one on the scoreboard.

"He was always so calm and poised," recalled Froman, 53, who taught Aikman Typing I and II in the early '80s at Henryetta High School.

Able to type 80 words a minute without mistakes, the football star won a regional typing contest sponsored by Oklahoma State Tech in Okmulgee in 1984. Froman thinks he could have been a pro — typist that is.

"He is such a perfectionist," she said.

After Aikman graduated from high school, he went on to the University of Oklahoma then to UCLA and finally to the Cowboys.

Froman, an Okmulgee resident and dean of students at Sequoyah High School in Tahlequah, left Henryetta to pursue a career in Indian education after Aikman went away to college.

Although she hasn't been in touch with him the past three years because of his busy schedule, they remain friends.

"It is an honor to be nominated by such an outstanding young man who has achieved the ultimate in success," Froman said. "He was certainly a winner in the classroom, too.

"The reward of education is seeing students like Troy reach their potential. He is one in a million, and having him in the classroom was indeed a pleasure.

Froman often counseled him and, once, before a football career had been decided upon, suggested he become an NFL quarterback."

Allure has Green Bay Packers worried

By Arnie Stapleton
AP Sports Writer

GREEN BAY, Wis. — If you think NFL quarterbacks tremble in the face of 300-pound defensive end Reggie White bearing down on them, imagine the little girl whom he accidentally stepped on last summer.

Jerry Parins, corporate security officer for the Green Bay Packers, remembers the scene with a grimace.

He was escorting White back from the team's Oneida Street practice facility during training camp. White, who normally drives so he can avoid the crush, was parting a sea of fans clamoring for his autograph when he stepped on a little girl's foot.

"That hurt that little girl," Parins said. "And Reggie felt so bad. That's one of the things that can happen."

And that's one of the things Parins and the Packers are trying to avoid this year as thousands of fans converge for the start of two-a-day sessions Sunday.

Mark Kanz, director of tourism at the Green Bay Area Visitor and Convention Bureau, said while up to 3,000 fans attended each practice session last year, about 5,000 were expected for each workout this summer.

"The first two weeks, we're really going to get hit," Parins said.

And some long-held traditions might fade if the crush gets too much. For years, local kids have let players ride their bicycles across the Lambeau Field parking lot in exchange for a chance to carry their heroes' helmets.

Because of the growing crowds, and in light of the 200,000 fans who turned out for the Packers' Super Bowl parade last January, the team has considered busing the players back and forth from Lambeau Field.

"I guess that was my thought initially," Parins said. "But we don't want to do that. It would be an unpopular decision."

Still, "when the numbers become so great and the players can't walk, then we'll look at alternative operations," Parins said.

Some measures already have been taken to ease the burden on the team, such as organized autograph sessions and increased police presence on Oneida Street, the six-lane thoroughfare that becomes a virtual parking lot during camp.

Also, a guarded parking lot has been set up near the stadium that allows players and coaches to come and go without having to go through hordes of fans, and a temporary fence has been erected near the locker room to give players some breathing room.

Newcomer Qadry Ismail, who left the Minnesota Vikings for the chance to catch passes from Brett Favre, said he got a feel for Packermania at a minicamp last month.

"In Minnesota, we might have five people clapping their hands: 'Oh yeah, go Vikings,' " Ismail said. "You come out here, this is a surprise. This is just a practice and you're looking at tons and tons of people."

Contributing to the carnival atmosphere is, well, something of a carnival.

Running until Aug. 3 across the practice field at the Brown County Expo Centre is "The Packers Experience," a spinoff of the "NFL Experience." It includes inflatable attractions and tests of skill for all ages.

"We're trying to give tourists another destination, somewhere to go between two-a-day practices," said Samantha Andrews, public relations coordinator for Promotion Management Inc.

John Spano out as owner of Islanders; Kurri to Avalanche

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dallas businessman John Spano has "walked way" from his commitment to buy the New York Islanders, NHL commissioner Gary Bettman said today.

■ NHL Notes

But, Bettman said the team will continue to play its home games next season at Nassau Coliseum in Uniondale, N.Y., and said he hopes a new owner can be found who would keep the team on Long Island. Spano, whose purchase of the team for $165 million was approved by the NHL's Board of Governors in January, has returned the team to John Pickett.

Spano, 33, was suspended by Bettman from day-to-day operations of the Islanders on June 17 after Pickett claimed Spano missed a scheduled $17 million payment required for the purchase of the team.

Bettman said Spano offered reasons why he didn't make the payment, but the commissioner said his role as arbitrator in the matter precluded him from any further comment on that aspect of the middled ownership question.

Asked why an investigation by the league failed to indicate Spano might back out, Bettman pointed out that about six banks which combined to lend the Texan $80 also had reason to believe he would meet his payment schedule.

Islanders general manager Mike Milbury said the team's business operations have not been affected by the ownership question.

Under Pickett, the Islanders regularly had one of the lowest payrolls in the league. This past season, they finished last in the Atlantic Division at 29-41-12, and failed to make the playoffs for the third straight year.

The team has played on Long Island since joining the league as an expansion franchise 25 years ago. It won four straight Stanley Cup titles to start the 1980s, but has suffered on the ice and at the gate for several seasons.

Avalanche Sign Jari Kurri

DENVER — The Colorado Avalanche signed right wing Jari Kurri, the highest scoring European player in National Hockey League history, to a free agent contract.

The 37-year-old Kurri played for the Anaheim Mighty Ducks last season, collecting 13 goals and 22 assists in 82 games. He added a goal and two assists in 11 playoff contests.

The Mighty Ducks said on May 23 that they wouldn't exercise a one-year, $1.5 million option on Kurri's contract, making the 16-year veteran an unrestricted free agent.

The Helsinki, Finland native has totaled 596 goals and 780 assists in 1,181 games with the Mighty Ducks, New York Rangers, Los Angeles Kings and Edmonton Oilers.

A seven-time All-Star, Kurri was a member of five Stanley Cup-winning teams with the Oilers from 1984-90.

Financial terms of the contract weren't disclosed.

Flyers sign Jamie Heward

PHILADELPHIA — The Philadelphia Flyers signed free-agent Jamie Heward and rookie Martin Cerven to contracts.

Heward, 26, appeared in 20 games this past season for the Toronto Maple Leafs, scoring one goal and four assists. He also played in 27 games for the St. John's Maple Leafs of the American Hockey League, recording eight goals and 19 assists.

The 6-foot-2, 207-pound defenseman spent the 1994-95 season as a member of the Canadian National team, scoring 11 goals and 35 assists in 51 games.

Cerven, 20, totaled 27 goals and 25 assists in 70 games for the Seattle Thunderbirds of the Western Hockey League this past season.

The 6-foot-4, 200-pound center was acquired by the Flyers from the Edmonton Oilers in exchange for a seventh-round pick in the 1997 draft.

Stanley Cup to make showing in Russia

DETROIT — The Stanley Cup is heading to Russia — next month.

The National Hockey League has approved a request from some Russian-born members of the champion Detroit Red Wings to bring the trophy to their homeland. Though the Stanley Cup has traveled to Germany, Finland and Sweden, it's the first time the prize is being sent to Russia.

The Stanley Cup is scheduled to be in Russia Aug. 16-18 accompanied by four of the team's Russian Five, center Igor Larionov, left wing Slava Kozlov, center Sergei Federov, and defenseman Slava Fetisov, a league spokesman said.

The only problem will be getting the trophy to Russia on time, the league said. NHL tradition says each player holds the cup for a day and Red Wings defenseman Jamie Pushor is scheduled to play host to the trophy Aug. 15 in Lethbridge, Alberta.

The Hockey Hall of Fame said it's trying to find a flight that'll get the Stanley Cup to Russia Aug. 16 in time for a charity hockey game Kozlov has organized in Moscow.

"Unfortunately, we don't have any red-eye flights from Canada to Russia," said Phil Pritchard, who's in charge of security for the Stanley Cup. "We're doing everything we can to get it there when the players want it."

Pritchard said he's working with the Russian police force to provide security for the cup.

Defenseman Vladimir Konstantinov, the other member of the Russian Five, won't make the trip to Russia. He remains unconscious and in serious condition after a June 12 crash where a limousine he was riding in swerved and crashed into a tree.

The Red Wings swept the Philadelphia Flyers, four games to none, to win their first Stanley Cup since 1955.

Bird-Pitino match-up fails to materialize; Cummings arrested for carrying concealed handgun in airport

Associated Press

MARIETTA, Ga. — The anxiously anticipated Larry Bird vs. Rick Pitino coaching matchup will have to wait another day.

Bird, coming off a successful NBA coaching debut with the Indiana Pacers the previous night, came up short Friday night, losing to Pitino's Boston Celtics, the team he helped carry to three NBA championships.

For the second night in a row, Pitino was a no-show. The new Celtics coach remained in Boston trying to iron out the details of a deal for center Dino Radja, which would free up $2.8 million in salary money for Boston.

■ NBA roundup

The Celtics, coached by assistant Jim O'Brien, were led by Eric Williams, who had 20 points to help beat Bird's Pacers 101-73 in the Atlanta Summer Shootout, a mini-tournament of four mostly rookie teams that ends Saturday.

In the second game, the Cleveland Cavaliers beat the Atlanta Hawks 77-75 on a 15-foot jumper at the buzzer by Carl Thomas, who finished with 10 points. Reggie Geary led the Cavaliers with 17 points. Atlanta's first-round draft pick, Ed Gray, led the Hawks with 12 points.

Boston's first-round draft pick, Ron Mercer, added 13 points, hitting 3-of-10 from the field. Mark Pope, like Mercer a former player under Pitino at Kentucky, led Indiana with 17 points and 10 rebounds.

Austin Croshere, the Pacers' first-round draft pick, was held out of Thursday night's 88-75 victory over Atlanta with a hamstring injury but played 24 minutes Friday and scored four points.

"I didn't shoot as well as I normally can, but I did a great job of going to the hole and getting to the free throw line," said Mercer, who was 7-of-8 on free throws.

"The more I play, the more comfortable I'll get," said Mercer, the sixth player chosen in last month's draft.

Although the opposition was the Celtics, a team he led for 13 seasons, Bird said the game was nothing special.

"Not at all. My career is over in Boston. It'll be fun to go back to Boston and play them during the regular season, but other than that, it didn't enter my mind at all," he said.

For the second straight night, Bird sat on the bench and coached, a rarity nowadays in these summer games. He drew loud cheers from the capacity crowd of 2,300 at the Life University campus in suburban Atlanta.

Celtics general manager Chris Wallace said Pitino is expected to join the team for Saturday's game against the Hawks, but was still involved in negotiations involving Radja and a possible deal with a Greek team.

Six first-round draft choices are here, five sidelined Thursday night with injuries. Only Mercer played, scoring 10 points in Boston's 85-75 loss to Cleveland.

Croshere and Gray played Friday despite injuries, but the other three did not. Chauncey Billups of Boston and Brevin Knight of Cleveland were out with ankle injuries. Derek Anderson of the Cavaliers is still in rehabilitation for a knee injury he suffered last season at Kentucky.

Cummings arrested

LOS ANGELES — Fifteen-year professional basketball player Terry Cummings, who was drafted by the Clippers franchise in 1982, was ordered to appear in court July 31 after his arrest on suspicion of trying to take a handgun into a Los Angeles International Airport boarding area, officials said Friday.

"He was going through the airport security checkpoint and a weapon was detected in his bag," said Stephanie Payne, a Los Angeles Police Department spokeswoman, of the Thursday night incident.

Airport police confiscated a loaded, 9 mm automatic handgun before booking Cummings on a misdemeanor charge at the Van Nuys jail. He was released on $1,000 bail.

Department of Airports spokeswoman Nancy Castles said Cummings admitted to officers, when confronted, that he was carrying a loaded gun without a license.

Cummings, a 36-year-old free agent who played last season for the Seattle Supersonics, was taken to Van Nuys jail for booking because he told officers he had a heart condition and that was the only jail with a doctor available, Castles said.

Castles said she did not know the destination of the 6-foot-9-inch National Basketball Association veteran, whose home is in San Antonio, Texas, or his reason for carrying a gun in his luggage.

The Federal Aviation Administration may initiate a civil investigation of the incident.

Castles said airport police periodically arrest people attempting to carry guns onto planes, and most often the suspects claim they were carrying weapons for their own protection.

Breeders' Cup rules change

New York Times News Service

Facing an uncomfortable situation in which many of this year's best thoroughbreds aren't eligible, the Breeders' Cup Friday changed its rules for supplementing horses who were not nominated to the program, effective with this year's races at Hollywood (Calif.) Park Nov. 8.

To be fully eligible, both the horse and its sire must be nominated when the horse is a foal. If the horse is not nominated, a fee of 12 percent of the purse is charged. If the sire is also not nominated, the fee is 20 percent. For the Breeders' Cup Classic, which carries a $4 million purse, it costs $480,000 to supplement the horse, and $800,000 if the sire is also not nominated.

DIABETES CENTER OF THE SOUTHWEST

Osteoporosis is a disease that gradually weakens bones so they become fragile and more likely to break.

The broken bones that result can lead to pain, height loss, difficulty moving around, a backbone that curves forward (sometimes called a "dowager's hump", and, possibly, permanent disability and dependence.

Many women feel that osteoporosis won't affect them, since they exercise, get enough calcium, and have no symptoms. But osteoporosis is a "silent" disease: women may have it for years and not find out until they break a bone.

Sam Bowie hired to be Wildcats' commentator

■ Former All-American center returns to Kentucky to provide basketball color commentary for Wildcats.

LEXINGTON, Ky. (Bloomberg) — Former University of Kentucky All-American center Sam Bowie will provide color commentary on Wildcat basketball radio broadcasts this season.

He replaces another former Wildcat All-American, Kyle Macy, who accepted the head coaching position at Morehead State for next season.

Bowie, 36, played three seasons at Kentucky and led the Wildcats to the Final Four as a senior in 1984. It was the first Final Four appearance since Macy led the Wildcats to a National Championship in 1978

"I'm just very pleased to have him," said play-by-play announcer Ralph Hacker. "Kyle Macy did an outstanding job, and they are from the same era. He has a great knowledge of the game, a great personality and he's a good communicator."

Bowie spent 11 seasons in the National Basketball Association after being selected second overall in the 1984 draft, after Hakeem Olajuwon of the University of Houston and of Michael Jordan of the University of North Carolina.

He ended his career as a player in 1995 and said he planned to stay "totally retired and not concentrate on a job." "Obviously I'm not doing it for the compensation, I'll be doing it because I want to contribute once again as far as UK was concerned," Bowie said.

Terms of his contract weren't disclosed.

He has very little experience as a broadcaster, although he worked part-time doing Trail Blazers color commentary after suffering a series of knee injuries during the 1987-88 and 1988-89 seasons.

Humor is hot in corporate America — pass the Play-doh

N.Y. Times News Service

Traci Mendez and her co-workers at Sprint posed with a duck and climbed a tree recently. Betty Kay and her office mates talked and wore clothes backwards during a monthly fun day at their conference call company.

Frolic on the job? Company-sponsored laughs? You bet.

Humor is fast becoming a serious business in corporate America, where many employees have been overworked, downsized, re-engineered and restructured so long they've almost forgotten how to smile.

Taking notice, the corporate world is searching for comic relief. Companies are spending thousands of dollars to bring in humor consultants — therapists, comics, healers and teachers who are finding gold in corporate frowns. And employers are sponsoring "fun at work" days, joy committees and other play times to try and keep the giggles going.

"We believe employees who have fun feel appreciated and come together as a team," says Sprint executive Margery Tippen. "That helps them be more productive and helps our customers."

Tippen organized Sprint's recent Fun at Work day, when 3,000 workers at regional offices nationwide divided into teams and raced to see who could take the zaniest photos of themselves. The day produced more than a passing laugh, says participant Mendez.

"This provided more of an open door, a comfort level with people," says Mendez, a marketing manager who now works closely with one of her teammates as a result of meeting that day.

To some, however, such organized fun smacks of treatment for the symptoms, not the diseases of corporate life.

"It's in the same category as giving people a certificate of appreciation instead of a pay raise," says Scott Adams, creator of the "Dilbert" comic strip that lampoons office life. "It's well-intentioned but kind of what you do because you can't deal with the fundamental problems."

After a decade of restructuring, American employees no doubt could use a laugh. Even in booming fields, workers are pressured by the pace of technological change and the threat of global competitors.

"If you're lucky enough to still have your job, it's most likely you have more work to do, you have to do things faster, have more skills," says Paul McGhee, a Montclair, N.J.-based psychologist who dubs his humor business The Laughter Remedy. Such stresses keep him in business, he says.

Paradoxically, a growing awareness of the wrong kinds of humor — racist or sexist jokes, innuendoes of harassment — also helps keep offices somber.

"We've gotten so caught up in being politically correct for everyone that people are afraid to laugh," says Martie Soper, a critical care nurse at Connecticut's Yale-New Haven hospital who attended one of McGhee's seminars. "You have to be careful."

A few companies, such as Southwest Airlines, are famed for their fun or informal atmospheres. Most often, they are led by chief executives who make play as much a priority as work.

But increasingly, other corporations are open to the message that laughter boosts morale, builds teamwork, releases creativity and even improves one's health.

At an appearance before hundreds of Pacific Bell managers, California humor consultant Matt Weinstein asks how many in the audience are depressed. Hands fly into the air. Then he roams the stage, pitching the benefits of laughter like a frenzied minister preaching salvation.

He asks the audience to stand up and introduce themselves to six others in half a minute, prompting a giggling scramble throughout the room.

In her seminars, Mikki Williams uses Play-doh to loosen up participants. Lynn Berger of Longwood, Fla.-based Lighten Up Ltd. wears duck and dog snouts during her talks and urges her audiences to sport them too.

To keep the laughs going, consultants urge workers to tell jokes, take humor breaks, or sponsor an ugly tie or shoe contest. Many consultants make follow-up calls, and say their advice is heeded a good deal of the time.

"If you don't use it, you lose it," says Berger, who says the success of her humor prescription often depends on top managers' acceptance.

"Sometimes it's a hard sell," she says. "Humor in the workplace sounds very frivolous. The people who hire us have to be able to justify why this is necessary."

Humor educator Allen Klein's work prompts such wariness that sometimes managers don't reveal what Klein will talk about until he's introduced, so employees don't avoid the seminar.

Yet companies nationwide are increasingly interested in the humor business.

The Humor Project, a Saratoga Springs, N.Y. humor services group, receives 20 requests daily from companies looking for humor consultants, double the number received three years ago, says founder Joel Goodman.

Five years ago, consulting firm Watson Wyatt and Co. was rarely asked to add humor when it designed human resource programs, says executive Paul Sanchez. At least half of the firm's clients ask for a dose of humor in their programs today.

And for many companies, the humor works.

Betty Kay, organizer of the monthly fun days at A Business Conference Call Inc. of Chaska, Minn., says the company's efforts have reduced stress and built more camaraderie at the office.

"We're learning to take work a little less seriously," says Kay. "You spend so much of your life working, you may as well have fun doing it."

New technique for checking heart attacks could save money and lives

Hearst News Service

SAN ANTONIO — Americans spend $10 billion in emergency rooms each year to determine if their chest pain actually is a heart attack. About 70 percent of the time, it's a false alarm.

A new study suggests that expanded use of a nuclear imaging technique called SPECT in the emergency room could slash those costs, as well as prevent some deaths among patients whose chest pains are inaccurately determined not to be serious, and are sent home.

"Because patients' symptoms aren't reliable ... and the standard electrocardiogram is unreliable in terms of confirming or ruling out heart attack, many patients — if not most — are admitted to the hospital for costly, lengthy evaluations to determine if they're having a heart attack or not," said Dr. Jack Ziffer, medical director of nuclear medicine at Baptist Hospital in Miami.

In addition, between 3 percent and 8 percent of patients are incorrectly sent home, and suffer a subsequent heart attack.

"All in all, this is an unsatisfying and imperfect solution," Ziffer said.

Results of the study were presented Monday at the 44th annual meeting of the Society of Nuclear Medicine at the Convention Center. Ziffer spoke to reporters at a press briefing.

SPECT, or single-photon emission computed tomography, involves the use of a short-lived radioactive isotope that is injected into the patient. A special camera is used to create three-dimensional computer images of the heart and its functions. The cost of the scan is about $700.

In an 18-month study, Ziffer studied 4,820 patients who came into the emergency center with chest pains. Not all required SPECT — 43 percent had clear evidence of heart problems and were admitted.

But the remaining 57 percent received SPECT, and 77 percent were discharged without an overnight stay. Results of the test were available in an average of 87 minutes.

Use of the scan resulted in an estimated $5.2 million in hospital charges to patients.

Those results were confirmed by two additional studies involving 147 patients at Lutheran General Hospital in Park Ridge, Ill.

There, the routine use of SPECT for chest pain patients in the emergency room saved the hospital an estimated $3,262 per patient discharged.

Researchers found that when SPECT was used, 46 percent of chest pain patients with normal EKGs were sent home, compared with 4 percent when SPECT was not used.

The same researchers used SPECT to predict which emergency room patients with chest pains would go on to suffer a heart attack or heart disease in the future, compared with traditional exams.

The traditional methods, which included taking a medical history, EKG and blood tests, predicted about half of future heart problems. SPECT predicted them all.

Mom peeved by son's ponytail clipping

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Eight weeks after a Little League coach clipped the pony tail from the head of a second-grade player — without his or his parents' permission — the boy's mother says she still hasn't been offered satisfactory compensation.

Exactly what that might be is rather unclear.

"I don't like money," said the mom, Audrey Sibblis. "I think we should do salt and shells. Let's go back to the barter system."

Nonetheless, she's talking about suing Joe Valverde, volunteer coach for the Phillies in the Pacific Little League. Valverde, in what he purportedly described as a friendly joke, clipped the 18-inch pony tail from Malcolm Sibblis during a gathering at a team official's house.

Malcolm's mom immediately complained to Valverde — whom she described as "an excellent coach" — and to the league. She said the immediate resolution was satisfactory: Valverde said he would quit coaching.

But he continued to help the team on the field for another five weeks, before the league board placed him on temporary suspension.

"My husband and I were confident that within 48 hours this incident would be out of our lives, and it would be over," she recalled. "When I saw him (the next) Wednesday coaching my son, it was like he had lied to me."

Sibblis said a lawyer had suggested she try mediating the issue, but Valverde, of Stockton, Calif., has been unreachable.

While her son has come to terms with his shearing, "no one has addressed my loss," said Sibblis. "Every Sunday night I would braid my son's hair. It was something we did."

Her husband, also a volunteer coach on the team, has not been as distressed as she has, said Sibblis.

"He hates the fact that I'm doing this," she said. "It puts him in an awkward position on the team."

Now that Valverde is no longer coaching, she added, "other parents treat me as if I'm invisible. Some of them have been mean to me."

A Little League spokesman in Williamsport, Pa., said the league didn't have any rules governing hair length.

"I don't think Little League in its 58 years has ever had anything regarding hair length or style for girls or boys," said Lance Van Auken from the league's central office.

Orange juice with caffeine jolt could be new way to wake up

DALLAS (AP) — Feeling a little sluggish in the morning, but don't have time to put on a pot of coffee?

The quick pick-me-up you need could be orange juice with a jolt of caffeine. At least, that's what creators of a new drink are banking on.

Jim Hines, an executive with the Hailey, Idaho-based Diehard Beverage Co., said he came up with the idea while sitting in a coffee shop one morning. He figured that he and others around him were drinking "exotic" flavored coffee because they didn't like the taste of regular Joe.

"I really drank it just to wake up," said Hines, the Dallas-based senior vice president of sales and marketing.

He says he realized some people who drink coffee do it for the caffeine boost, even when it's hot outside or the middle of the afternoon.

So, he came up with the idea of adding caffeine to the other popular breakfast drink. The result was Juiced, which was introduced in March.

The concoction of juice concentrate and water has no artificial sweeteners, preservatives or added sugar.

A 10-ounce bottle has 140 calories, no fat and 33 grams of carbohydrates, the same as a comparable container of regular orange juice, Hines said. It also has just under 60 milligrams of caffeine.

By comparison, a 6-ounce cup of coffee brewed by the drip method typically has 60 to 180 milligrams of caffeine while instant coffee has 30 to 120 milligrams, according to the International Food Information Council Foundation.

Dr. Ray Sahelian, a nutritionist and family practitioner in Marina del Rey, Calif., calls jolting juice "a ridiculous concept."

"People are ingesting enough caffeine," he said.

Sahelian said there's no consensus on the long-term effects of taking high doses of caffeine, but studies have shown it can cause irritability, anxiety, high blood pressure, irregular heartbeat and slight thinning of the bones.

"Now, these often are due to excessive dosages, so I'm not concerned with someone drinking one or two cups a day or having 3 or 4 ounces of caffeine-laced O.J. But when someone is ingesting caffeine from multiple sources it can be addictive," he said.

Sahelian said some people are so sensitive that when they ingest caffeine in the morning, it can remain in their brain at night, keeping them from falling into a deep sleep. Consequently, they're tired and groggy in the morning, which means they'll probably drink some coffee to wake up.

"It can be a vicious cycle," he said.

Caffeine does have some benefits, Sahelian said. In small amounts, it can increase alertness and concentration. But he sees the proliferation of coffee shops and the development of new caffeinated products like juices and water as a bad trend.

"Our country is leaning toward becoming caffeine addicts," he said. "It's become the latest accepted drug of choice."

Hines said Juiced is obviously not for everyone, but it's a good alternative for people who already get their caffeine boost from coffee.

The company predicts $4 million in Juiced sales by next April and is developing new flavors.

Engineers in Houston pursue manned Mars mission

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — As scientists in California grabbed the world's attention by unveiling the latest pictures snapped by NASA's Mars robot, a small group of engineers in Houston quietly pressed on with their quest to put people on the red planet.

On the television set in the lobby of Johnson Space Center's Building 17 and on countless others, one of the scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory in Pasadena, Calif., was discussing newly released photographs taken by the Mars Pathfinder lander and the Sojourner rover.

Meanwhile, in the Exploration Office on the second floor of the building, Doug Cooke and Kent Joosten were working on ways to fly astronauts to Mars as soon as 2010.

"The Pathfinder landing and the rover actually moving around on the surface is very exciting," says Cooke, chief of the 12-member team. "When we see the pictures of the hills in the background with possible bands in them, we want to have somebody out there going to look at them."

Which is why Cooke and the other engineers and architects — most of whom were in grade school when Neil Armstrong walked on the moon — often work 10- to 14-hour days and on weekends in their cramped office, its desks strewn with computer-generated pictures of future Mars landers and rovers to be driven by people.

On Wednesday, Cooke presented his most recent plan for a 2 1/2-year manned Mars expedition to NASA Administrator Daniel Goldin.

It would work like this: two unmanned spaceships would be launched to Mars, one that would land and immediately begin manufacturing fuel from the carbon dioxide atmosphere and another that would remain in Mars' orbit. Two years later, six astronauts would embark on the six-month journey.

After 1 1/2 years of exploration, the crew would climb into the fueled vehicle and take off to dock with the orbiting one. The linked ships would carry the astronauts back to Earth.

"It's within reach," says Cooke, a bearded 45-year-old wearing a pin that reads "Mars or Bust." "Technically it's something that can be done."

"We tend to think that the serious work starts in a couple of years," adds Joosten. "The serious effort starts getting redirected after the space station is completed. That's when the resources get freed up to do the next thing we want to do, which everybody thinks pretty much is Mars exploration."

The first piece of the international space station was supposed to be launched late this year but won't be shipped up until June 1998 because of Russian financial woes. The station is scheduled to be finished in 2002.

The Exploration Office has its own financial woes.

Goldin is insisting the engineers figure out a way to send people to Mars for no more than $20 billion to $25 billion. Their latest estimate was about double that amount.

"It's a number that we're working on," Cooke said. "That number is pretty soft. It's a very rough estimate."

They're trying to slash the price tag by reducing the weight of the spaceships, thus saving fuel, and by using the martian atmosphere to produce fuel for the trip home — an idea yet to be tested.

As for winning approval for up to $25 billion, they're hoping to benefit from the success of Pathfinder, the discovery last August of a meteorite that some scientists claim shows evidence of ancient life on Mars and the current obsession with the red planet.

"The public awareness and support is important to ever really launch into an effort like this," Cooke says. "So it (Pathfinder) really is a big boost."

Besides cutting the cost, the Exploration Office faces several other big hurdles.

Goldin said last week the engineers still need to resolve safety issues and determine what the scientific payoffs of a manned mission would be.

"They're not there yet," he said.

Among the questions, says Joosten: "How can we make air? How can we make propellant? What's the radiation level for people? Is the dust toxic?"

The engineers will attach instruments they hope will provide the answers to a series of landers to be rocketed to Mars during the next decade.

To learn how to recycle air and water, researchers at Johnson Space Center have been spending weeks at a time in a sealed chamber to test equipment.

And further experiments for a future Mars mission are under way aboard the space shuttle Columbia. Astronauts are running tests on spinach, clover, sage and periwinkle plants to see if Mars-bound crews could grow their own food.

1969 PLYMOUTH SPORT SATELLITE

BY TAD BURNESS

Notice the chart on the accompanying illustration—with a listing of the wide variety of available Plymouth engines in 1969.

During the late 1960s, it was almost possible to have your very own, special made-to-order, one-of-a-kind car produced on demand at the factory because of the wide variety of available engines; transmissions; rear-axle (gear) ratios; model series variations; paint and striping choices; upholstery colors, fabrics, vinyls and patterns; and various extras including power accessories, etc. A car such as this 1969 Plymouth could emerge from the factory as a sedate family car or it could be a wild, leaping "screamer" bound for the drag races, depending on what was under the hood.

Because the Sport Satellite weighed just over a ton-and-a-half, with one of the hotter V-8 choices installed, it could really "get out and roll" when the pedal was to the metal.

Some of the highest-performance V-8s required premium (formerly known as ethyl) gasoline and were not in any sense economical to operate.

The late 1960s is an era fondly recalled by muscle-car enthusiasts, but the dramatic escalation in horsepower (0-to-60 pickup) and dazzling top speeds far past the 110-mph mark led to a greater public concern for safety and economy and a strict new set of standards by the time the 1972 model year came along.

Why did I say 1972? Because that was the year most American cars had their dampers turned down as far as horsepower and performance were concerned. Much of the decrease was created by tough new smog-control devices. It tasted like bad medicine at the time, but perhaps thousands of lives were saved because of fewer accidents and less smog in the air;

Lincoln Navigator packs limousine luxury in a wagon's format

By Bob Plunkett
Special to Midland Reporter-Telegram

TICONDEROGA, N.Y. — A curvy narrow road stretches northward through Silver Bay and Hague to Ticonderoga along the ragged western shore of Lake George, where in a first flicker of spring green the run-off of melting snow combines with a mist coming off the lake to create a slippery route ideally suited for testing the non-skid traction capability of a luxurious new full-size sport-utility wagon.

This vehicle is well armed to combat any type of terrain and weather, for it contains not only an all-wheel-drive system which distributed power selectively yet automatically to any of four wheels with grip, but also, with the simple flick of a dashboard switch, evenly balanced 4-wheel high or low ranges for venturing off pavement through dirt and mud — or residual Adirondack ice.

For power, the wagon packs a hunky V8 engine, plus an air-charged suspension system that levels loads and traverses road bumps or off-road lumps without disturbing riders ensconced in an elegant passenger compartment.

Four side doors and three rows of seats provide space for seven people, while a back bay stows luggage.

And those plush appointments: Soft leather and rich burled walnut trimmings, power-everything, and the deluxe option of seven audio speakers to envelop you in soothing stereo sounds.

This, indeed, feels like the cushy way to travel.

Examine the label on this new full-size sport-utility vehicle dipped in luxe and its mission becomes obvious.

Dubbed Navigator, this Lincoln aims to sate a narrow niche of the expanding sport-utility market — that luxury-conscious upper echelon who desire the go-anywhere capability of a vast 4-wheel-drive sport-utility which can tackle the rough-and-tumble off-road world as well as perform the seemingly contradictory duty of a limousine.

My first glimpse of Navigator occurred with its unveiling last December at Ford's headquarters in Dearborn, Mich., where Gary Haas, design director for all of the Ford light trucks, explained that the new Lincoln wagon rides on the chassis of Ford's revamped F150 pickup truck and is a direct descendant of the new Ford Expedition wagon.

That stunning front face of Navigator looks unique, though, due to its shapely molded composite hood capped by chrome glints of a bold turbine-vaned grille.

More chrome appears in flanking complex reflector headlamps and the twin foglamps mounted in bodycolor front bumpers, which Haas noted were styled to flow smoothly into side sculptured bodyside cladding underlined by etched running boards with indirect lighting.

At the rear, more chrome rings the license plate in a top-hinged door that adds pop-out window glass.

Inside, Navigator contains the conveniences and comforts of one of Lincoln's luxury sedans, and it scores as first in class to pose twin bucket seats in the second row.

It's also a dream to drive, even in Adirondack wilds.

My tests consisted of time behind the wheel in each of two editions that varied primarily in rear-wheel and all-wheel traction mode. Driving conditions ranged from Lake George's rain-slick pavement to dirt trails of an off-road route near Brant Lake, plus citified streets and freeways like I-87 that zips down to Albany.

Through these seat-time experiences spanning multiple days, Navigator with its spacious comforts and athletic personality captured a driver's respect. Despite full-size dimensions with wheelbase extended three yards and an overall length of 17 feet, it performs lively feats and is always easy to maneuver, even in a crowded parking lot.

Driver and riders perch high in Lincoln's form-fitting seats, and with generous expanses of window glass wrapping the cabin the outward visibility looks ideal. Yet the entire package measures only slightly more than six feet tall, so Navigator fits in the standard home garage, unlike some monster-size wagons.

One tester logged more travel time in a second-tier bucket, which has a large console separating it from an adjacent back bucket. Thanks to the long wheelbase, even with a six-foot frame I could cross legs with ease and ride in absolute comfor
Navigator also provides sure-fire safety equi nent — such as 4-wheel anti-lock brakes, and win airbags for front seat riders.

Throughout the cabin, car-like details for comfort and practicality may be found — from cupholders and multiple support handles to hooks and handy levers.

The highly functional dash design integrates easy-to-view and easy-to-reach instruments and controls in a system housing the dual airbags. It mounts through a unique cross-truck beam welded to frame for no-squeak durability.

Navigator's ride quality feels refined for a SW wagon, due to suspension components with short and long arm arrangement up front and a 5-link rear axle with coil springs and stabilizer bar. On pavement the wagon seems firm like a car, while offroad in the 4x4 through dust and mud alike it's still sure-footed and stable.

The optional Control Trac 4-wheel-drive device, employed for pavement ventures, automatically distributes traction to wheels with good grip. For off-road maneuvers, a 4WD high and low system locks the differential and applies torque evenly to all wheels.

A power mechanism of the steering system relates to vehicular speed so you get more assistance for turning the wheel at low speed, like in a parking lot, while at speed on the road less power is added so the wagon responds for turning with only a slight touch to steering wheel.

In the power department Navigator delivers

The 5.4-liter V8 hits 230 hp and musters high torque at relatively low engine speeds, which suits it well for towing a trailer weighing as much as four tons.

Ford's excellent 4-speed automatic transmission mates to Navigator's engine and shifts in unobtrusive manner.

For trimmings, Navigator varies only in traction mode, as both versions stock premium interior features, including leather upholstery. Options have been limited to special stereo sound equipment, a power moonroof, secondary climate control system, second-row 60/40 split bench seat, and larger 17-inch wheels and tires.

The price chart for Navigator begins at $39,950 for a 4x2, or $43,300 for the Control Trac 4-wheel-drive edition.

Lincoln, it seems, has crafted the ultimate sport-ute.

Buick LeSabre becomes the bargain buy as roomy family sedan

BERKELEY, Calif. — Buick's bargain-priced big sedan, LeSabre, looked slick and curvy as it stood on an asphalt test track overlooking San Francisco Bay. Except for three small boxes mounted below the front fascia, it seemed like a normal production number of the revamped 1997 vintage.

Yet this particular LeSabre was anything but normal because it contained experimental computer equipment, installed by engineers at nearby University of California at Berkeley, which enabled the vehicle to steer itself around a serpentine course laid out on the expanse of asphalt.

Buick builds a LeSabre that can steer itself?

That thought may sounds like science fiction, but the practical reality of automated freeways — with special lanes for cars which will drive by computer control at a constant speed while maintaining safe spacing between each vehicle — could become a reality in two decades.

And it will happen if research and testing from the National Automated Highway System Consortium moves forward, because the technology to create such automation is one by-product of this group, in which General Motors and its Buick Division have played a key role. By the year 2002, a final plan should be implemented, with actual automated highways perhaps ten years beyond that.

In LeSabre's steering demonstrations with this writer participating, a driver provided pedal commands from brake and accelerator but left hands off the steering wheel. Little cylindrical magnets, embedded in the track at meter-wide intervals, sent signals to three magnet sensors mounted beneath LeSabre's front bumper and then relayed this data to an on-board Pentium-powered computer which ultimately controlled the steering wheel.

Heading down the straight with acceleration to 40 mph, I had to work to keep hands off the wheel as we approached the first hairpin turn, but that wheel then moved seemingly with a mind of its own and managed to keep LeSabre right on track without tipping a single orange route cone.

In a test this summer along 7.6 miles of the I-15 freeway at San Diego, a caravan of LeSabres rigged with computers, magnetometers and sophisticated radar devices will demonstrate not only automated steering control but also pace, brake and space management.

Riding around the Berkeley test track, with LeSabre taking all of the work out of driving, prompted this tester to reexamine Buick's full-size family sedan after a year's absence. Even consumer versions that don't steer themselves add up to one of the year's best transportation bargains.

LeSabre projects a classy image and delivers luxury trappings but doesn't bust a budget to do so.

Previous issues of LeSabre scored as the line's best-selling label and most popular full-size sedan in America.

For a 1997 make-over, Buick's designers moved on conservative course to change LeSabre's appearance with subtle suggestions in clean lines achieved by flush-fit components for front oval grille, wrap-around halogen headlamp assemblies and a new body-colored terrace of protective plastic side moldings that deflect door dings.

Inside, front seats of the base Custom edition were reconfigured for comfort with new walnut-texture trimming applied to the instrument panel.

What makes LeSabre act so good?

The concept begins with a strong Buick platform that's torsionally rigid to hold rattles to a minimum, and long enough to stretch the wheelbase for a smooth ride sensation over road bumps and dips.

Then attach fully independent suspension to isolate vertical movement of each wheel, and LeSabre develops the uncanny ability to effect a smooth ride both on twisty routes as well as straight-line freeway paths.

Power-assisted rack and pinion steering produces quick responses when turning with or without the Berkeley experimental equipment aboard — and the power brakes with front discs and rear drums plus a standard anti-lock feature stop LeSabre predictably.

For power, LeSabre draws from GM s 3.8-liter pushrod V6 outfitted with multi-point fuel injection.

The output extends to 205 hp. and you'll feel strong torque for aggressive acceleration when needed.

In the Berkeley tests, I stomped that pedal to build speed quickly before the first turn, and LeSabre responded by pouncing across the pavement.

Fuel economy figures also look good. Official EPA numbers add up to 19 miles per gallon for city driving and as high as 30 mpg for highway cruising.

As far as comforts are concerned, the base LeSabre applies standard necessities like air conditioning and a tilting steering column, then adds power door locks, power windows, intermittent wipers and AM-FM stereo sound.

Custom's front seat arrangement consists of a cloth-clad front bench with 55-45 percent split, reclining backs and fold-down armrest.

Limited, the upscale trim level, builds on Custom's equipment with remote keyless entry, 6-way power controls for front driver and passenger seats and a front armrest storage compartment with built-in cupholders, electronic cruise control, exterior power mirrors, rear window defogger and dual temperature controls for climate system.

SATURDAY, JULY 12, 1997

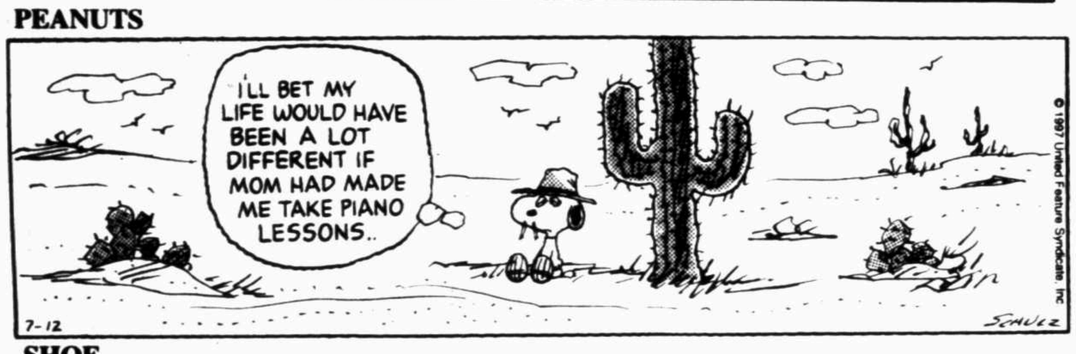

HAPPY BIRTHDAY for Saturday, July 12, 1997:
The unexpected prevails in your life this year. Establish security, and maintain direction. Career is demanding and might take more time than you wanted to invest. Roll with added responsibilities. An associate helps you create more of what you need financially. Examine your long-term needs, and make wise choices. If you are single, you will long for a deeper relationship. Because of your heartfelt intent, you can turn desires into reality. If attached, your relationship deepens. A special trip this winter could bring wonderful encounters or mark a new beginning. LIBRA is an anchor.

BORN TODAY
Comedian Milton Berle (1908), comedian Bill Cosby (1938), fitness guru Richard Simmons (1948)

ARIES (March 21-April 19)
★★★★ You are more of a curmudgeon than you realize. You have the best of intentions, yet cause upset. Let go of a heaviness. Reduce emphasis on responsibility, at least for the day. A friend adores the carefree you. Tonight: Let a party happen.
TAURUS (April 20-May 20)
★★★ You are more exhausted than you are aware. Even the Bull needs a nap once in a while. Slow down the pace. Get a home project under control. Make your day relaxing. Let a family member pitch in! Tonight: Get physical.
GEMINI (May 21-June 20)
★★★★★ You want to play more. Share your good intentions with others, in the most loving way you know. Caring abounds. A flirtation could get out of control. You'll need to make a decision before too long. Tonight: Listen to your instincts.
CANCER (June 21-July 22)
★★★ You are negative about work and an authority figure. Opportunity knocks on your door, once you relax your rigid attitude. A purchase for the house might cheer up the atmosphere. You might enjoy browsing. Tonight: Whatever happens is at your place.
LEO (July 23-Aug. 22)
★★★★ Don't let news trouble you. In fact, with your positive ways, things could turn out for the better. Others respond to your caring gestures. You don't want to let a partner know how much you like his quirkiness. Tonight: Do what you enjoy.
VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22)
★★★ Your more possessive side emerges over a money matter. Work on positive ways of letting another know just how much you care about him. It seems that another is in a sour mood. Go off, and do your own thing. Tonight: Indulge yourself!
LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22)
★★★★★ A lot going on is opening up doors. You question another's motive when he becomes difficult. There is much more in play here than meets the eye. A friendship could become a lot more. Tonight: A smile goes a long way!
SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21)
★★★ You need a day off from everything. Life has been unusually demanding. Allow yourself time to recharge. A boss or trusted friend might have something special to share with you. Take care of yourself first. Cancel plans, if necessary. Tonight: Do what you like.
SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21)
★★★★★ Find your friends, and make the most of this fun Saturday. A loved one is cantankerous; it might be best to bypass him for now. Fun, communications and a deep sense of caring allow you to see the big picture. Don't daydream about that trip; do it! Tonight: Go for it.
CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19)
★★★★ You are in the limelight; enjoy yourself and make merry. How you feel about a family member interferes with the moment. You will deal with feelings about a domestic matter when you are ready. A partner lavishes attention on you. Tonight: You are a force to behold!
AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18)
★★★★★ Be willing to adjust plans, should you hit a snag. Flexibility is needed the next few days. Open up to a greater sense of what is possible. A loved one coaxes you beyond your limitations. Examine desires, and go after your own. Tonight: Take off for a favorite fun spot.
PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20)
★★★★★ Close relating is normal for you. An exciting situation opens up with someone in your daily life. Remain optimistic, even if your checkbook feels under the weather. Discussions need to be open; let someone get to know you. Tonight: It's a romantic night for two!

Prayers interrupted at a Jerusalem mosque when Abdul-Jabbar enters

JERUSALEM — Kareem Abdul-Jabbar came to pray and wound up getting worshipped.

The solemnity of noon prayers at Al Aqsa Mosque was broken Friday by the unbridled delight of worshippers over the basketball legend's presence.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar is set to coach Israeli children at a basketball camp.

Children and adults surrounded the 7-foot-2 devout Muslim, lavishing him with kisses, handshakes, personal notes and copies of the Koran as he made his way to prayers at the mosque.

During prayer, worshippers struck up conversations with basketball's all-time leading scorer. He agreed to sign autographs after the service.

Abdul-Jabbar is on a visit to Israel. He is scheduled to coach Israeli children at a basketball camp.

LONDON — Prince Charles' lover Camilla Parker Bowles will not face charges in connection with an auto accident.

Camilla Parker Bowles will not be charged in auto accident.

Mrs. Parker Bowles, 49, had a glancing head-on collision June 12 with a car driven by another woman. Neither was seriously hurt. Mrs. Parker Bowles was driving to Charles' Highgrove Estate.

Police said Friday there was insufficient evidence to support any charges.

Mrs. Parker Bowles was divorced in 1995, after Charles confirmed longstanding rumors of an affair. Charles divorced Princess Diana last year.

TUCSON, Ariz. — Barry Manilow has agreed to donate $5,000 to an ear-disorder association to settle a suit by a judge who claimed a 1993 Manilow concert damaged his hearing.

Philip Espinosa, a 44-year-old judge on the Arizona Court of Appeals, said the loud music left him in "miserable condition" with a constant and permanent screeching in his ears.

The donation went to the American Tinnitus Association.

Espinosa said he wanted to prevent other people from suffering similar injuries. "Unfortunately in our society, large industries like the music business do not listen to you unless you file a lawsuit," he said.

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. — Feminist poet Adrienne Rich has rejected a National Medal for the Arts in a protest against government policies she said are widening the gap between the haves and the have-nots.

"When growing numbers of people are being marginalized, impoverished, scapegoated and beleaguered, I don't feel I can accept an award from the government pursuing these policies," Rich said.

President Clinton selects the 12 recipients on the recommendation of the National Endowment for the Arts. Winners meet the president.

The 68-year-old Rich, who has written 22 books, turned down the award last week.

"The radical disparities of wealth and power in America are widening at a devastating rate," she wrote. "A president cannot meaningfully honor certain token artists while the people at large are so dishonored."

In 1992, author Wallace Stegner and composer Stephen Sondheim declined the honor.

ASPEN, Colo. — Hunter S. Thompson, the substance-abusing gonzo journalist, has been excused from serving as a juror in the drunken driving case against singer John Denver.

Thompson, famous for books and a Rolling Stone column chronicling his pharmaceutical adventures across America, reported to court on Thursday.

He was immediately excused from service for medical reasons: a case of sciatica that he said makes sitting for long periods of time uncomfortable.

Denver, who pleaded guilty to a driving-while-impaired charge in 1993, is on trial in a 1994 drunken-driving case.

Thompson escaped drunken-driving charges himself in a plea bargain last April.

Ask Dr. Bombay

By Dr. Emilio Bombay
N. Y. Times News Service

DEAR DR. BOMBAY: Why should I have to back up my new hard drive when the manufacturer says that it has 300,000 hours "mean time between failures"? That's an average life of over 34 years. But wait. My OLD hard drive had 300,000 hours MTBF and it only lasted four years! Oh, man! I just measured my 15-inch monitor, and the screen is really only 13.25 inches across. And why should I buy an expensive stereo system when my $89 sound card lists specs that are every bit good as any $1,000 stereo, and my speakers have Mega Bass? Oops, I just listened to an audio CD on my computer, and it sounds like two tin cans and a length of string. I guess what I really need to ask is why hardware manufacturers are getting away with such blatant lies.
—Befuddled

DEAR FUDD: Are you OK now that you got all that off your chest? I know a really good rant always makes me feel much better, too. Well, that and the lithium.

But, back to your question about manufacturers. "Blatant lies" is probably a bit harsh. How about "sound marketing strategy" instead? After all, the terms are pretty much interchangeable, although the bottom-feeders in marketing divisions everywhere will claim that's just some perceptual dissonance on my part.

Did you really think they could sell their stuff if they came out and told you it was underpowered, too small, poorly designed and completely unsuited for the job it's supposed to perform, not to mention that it was assembled by child laborers Kathie Lee rejected as too unskilled? No, no, no, no, no! Their job is to make you feel good about what you're wasting your money on, so "caveat geekus." All right, let's look at the stuff that put you into such a righteous snit:

Yeah, a 300,000-hour lifetime sounds pretty fishy if you actually sit down and do the math. It's more like 30,000 or 35,000 for most drives. Let's give the manufacturer the benefit of the doubt, though. Maybe they used one of the calculators they make. C'mon, it's only one decimal place! Honest mistake.

But even if it was 600,000 hours, you ought to back up your hard drive to tape at least every week. Mark my words: The day will come — and this has happened to me more times than I can count — when you will spill your large frozen tropical adult beverage directly into the computer's works. When the sparks subside and the smoke clears, your drive will be dead, and so will you if you were depending on it to finish the quarterly report.

The measuring system for monitors is pretty much like the one we men use when we brag about the size of, uhhh, the fish we catch. You ought to automatically subtract two inches. Look for an asterisk or "VIS" (viewable image size) in parentheses somewhere. Your "15-inch" monitor has a tube that would measure 15 inches diagonally if you took off the case and poked around inside, but don't, because you'll wind up electrocuting yourself and your estate will try to sue me, tying up the legal system for years.

The viewable area is always going to be smaller than the tube size. You can also shave off another half-inch or so for the black border that appears around the edges. Yeah, I know what you're thinking, but the border counts as "viewable," too.

What kind of a doofus expects a computer to sound as good as a $1,000 stereo?

Opponents lash out at grand plan for Internet order

By Leslie Gornstein
N.Y. Times News Service

Plans for the first government for cyberspace have been drawn up. But they may never see the sun.

This is the Internet after all, and revolutionaries have already arrived.

"The way this document is written, these people control the Internet forever," said Andy Sernovitz, who is president of the Association for Interactive Media and who opposes the governance plan. "They spell it out pretty clearly. They are extermely paternalistic."

"They" are the Internet Society, or ISOC, a group of professionals formed to serve the interests of the cyberspace community.

ISOC, along with a few other Internet-related authorities, has floated a plan to bring order to cyberspace: a neater way to assign addresses, a better way to resolve messy trademark disputes.

An interim government is already in place, with a permanent ruling body expected to take their seats in the fall.

The problem, says Sernovitz, is that it shuts out the people at the heart of the Internet: its users, its access providers, its merchants.

"A consumer who feels wronged on the Internet has no say whatsoever," Sernovitz said. "This group is set up to rule so that they don't answer to anybody."

Proponents of the plan, naturally, see AIM a bit differently.

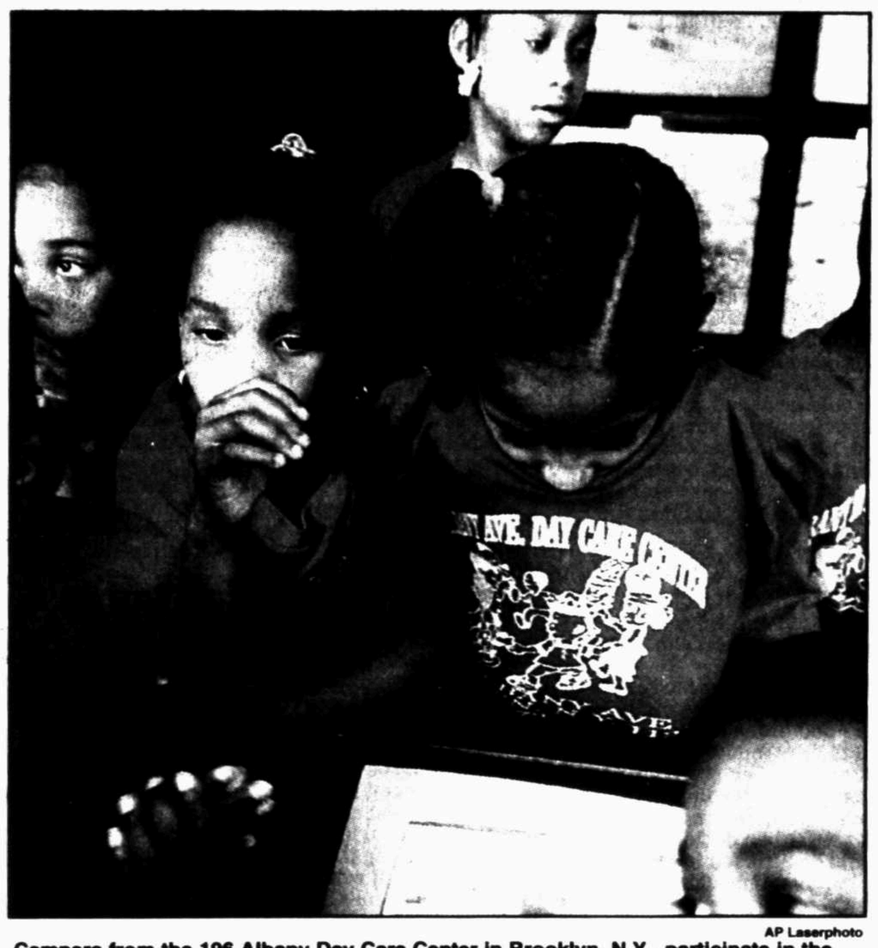

"They are loons," said Perry Metzger, a member of the temporary, ISOC-supported government. "If you have read the materials, you can tell on your own whether to take them seriously."

The wording of the plan — available at www.iahc.org — is often unclear. But it does suggest a panel of experts to oversee delicate matters, such who gets to use a trademarked name in an international forum like the Internet.

It all sounds very civil.

But AIM, made up of some of the biggest stars in the corporate galaxy, says it feels left out. Internet decisionmaking should be more "democratic," Ser-

Pathfinder site lands 150 million hits

By Heather Cocks
N.Y. Times News Service

The National Aeronautics and Space Administration has logged 150 million "hits" on its Mars Pathfinder Internet site since the spacecraft landed Friday, exceeding the agency's expectations.

NASA's Jet Propulsion Laboratory said the Pathfinder Web site, offering up-to-date photos of the Martian landscape, registered 30 million hits on Friday alone. Hits are separate requests for data from a Web site. The agency's previous one-day record was 5 million hits in 1995, when data from the Galileo spacecraft's flight through Jupiter's atmosphere appeared on the Internet, NASA said.

"We predicted (Web hits) would reach 50 million by this time," said Rich Pavlovsky, a spokesman for Pasadena, California-based JPL, which is managing the Pathfinder mission on Mars. "It's so much more than we imagined."

While NASA rigged up 25 Internet sites worldwide in preparation for the landing, higher-than-anticipated demand briefly clogged the Web sites, Pavlovsky said.

"We had to order some new hard-

Year 2000 problem spawns angst and more opportunities

"It could affect every one of us if you deal with or work for a company, or buy stuff from a company."

— Jim Keogh
Author, "Solving the Year 2000 Problem."

By Malcolm X Abram
N.Y. Times News Service

At 11:59 p.m. on Dec. 31, 1999, not everyone will be merrily ringing in the year 2000.

In every corner of the globe, people who own and run businesses, government agencies or any organization that relies on technology to process information will be anxiously hoping and praying the souped-up hardware and software they've spent years and piles of money perfecting doesn't grind to a halt.

This global anxiety springs from what has become known as the year 2000 problem, the millennium bug or simply Y2K. While anyone today can pick up a megabyte of RAM at a computer store for around $10, 24 years ago that same megabyte carried a $1,600 price tag. To save precious memory space and money, programmers reduced dates to six numbers (e.g., 09-03-70). It was a perfectly logical, if shortsighted, solution to the problem.

But as the 20th century gives way to the 21st, what's a perfectly logical computer to make of the date 01-01-00? Is that 1900, 1800 or

Card companies cast wide net for new customers

By Tim Oliver
N.Y. Times News Service

Like the fisherman who drops several lines into the water to improve his chances of landing the prized catch, credit card companies have for years cast a wide net for new customers by cluttering mailboxes with offers of low-interest-rate, no-fee and specialty cards.

The card companies have the advantage of being able to throw back (read: reject) the undesirables (read: bad credit or no credit history), and they are now doing so more aggressively. And some card companies are raising interest rates and fees and cutting back on bonus programs.

As a result, consumers are run-

Ruling to boost smut web sites, filter software makers

By Jon Swartz
San Francisco Chronicle

In the wake of yesterday's U.S. Supreme Court ruling on Internet pornography, two California industries are likely to see a boom: those who sell sin and those who sell salvation.

The decision gives the green light to red-light Web sites, as well as a reason for parents to buy filtering software to prevent their children from viewing online adult materials.

In California alone, the economic ramifications of the ruling could be staggering. Statewide, the adult entertainment industry is an $8 billion business.

Worldwide, there are tens of thousands of pornographic Web sites. Joked one Internet analyst, "It's one of the few businesses on the Net that makes money."

Now, unencumbered by the Communications Decency Act, which barred indecent and "patently offensive" materials on the Internet, a new wave of raunchy, hard-core Web sites could be spawned.

The law "stifled some of the smaller, raunchier business operations from getting into adult entertainment sites," said Michael Ross, a lobbyist for the California Adult Business Association in Sacramento. "They didn't know what to put online out of fear it might violate the bill. Now it's a question of how far can you go? A couple having intercourse? Or just a topless chick?"

Seth Warshavsky, chief executive of Seattle-based Internet Entertainment Group, one of the largest adult entertainment Web sites in the country,

Dear Amy: I heard that the e-mail about the kid wanting everyone to send him postcards before he dies was not really true. How can we trust anything on the Internet?—Jerilee, Carthage, MO
Dear Jerilee: A prank like that seems like it couldn't hurt anyone, but it creates a lot of useless e-mail and makes people not want to help when there really is something to be concerned about. People send out fake rumors, too, and to forward them on to your friends just makes the problem worse. You can see if it's true on Don't Spread That Hoax! at http://crew.umich.edu/~chymes/Hoaxes/Think.html You can read about other hoaxes and learn what to do about them.

Dear Amy: We have tried to download games to play off the Web, but we do not know how to get the plug-ins to work for us.—Grade2A Detectives, Dandridge, TN
Dear Grade 2A Detectives: Plug-ins and helper applications have to be installed in the right place in order for your browser software to find and use them. Go to http://home.netscape.com/comprod/upgrades/ and click on "Download Components" to check out the list of Netscape's downloads and helper applications page. Go to the home page of the plug-in or helper application for trouble-shooting advice.

CREDIT: Some sites offer valuable information on how to manage money

ning into trouble finding the type of credit card they want or even getting a card at all.

That is where the Internet can help. Several sites on the World Wide Web allow consumers to choose the specific features they deem important in credit cards.

While these sites do not charge a fee for this service, some require consumers to divulge personal information, especially when filling out online applications. And be warned, sending Social Security or bank account numbers through the Internet can be risky, since computer hackers might be able to break through the encryption and use that information.

Get Smart offers the best of the free card-finder sites. Created by former executives of Wells Fargo Bank and McKinsey & Co., Get Smart has a frequently updated, searchable data base of more than 800 cards from 100 credit and charge card companies.

The Card Finder page asks you to choose and rank the top five features desired from a card. Want a low-interest rate? Make it top priority. Airline miles or rewards important? Rank it second. And so on. To start Card Finder, the user only has to supply his ZIP code. Wait a minute and the site punches up a list of cards matching the desired criteria. Consumers can telephone, fax or apply online for many of the cards. Others will send an application in the mail.

The site also offers some valuable information on how to manage credit. An amusing feature is the Wild Cards page, where you can search for a specialty card. Type in "dog," for instance, and four cards pop up. The most interesting: MBNA Purina Gold Mastercard with a 17.4 percent annual interest rate after the first six months.

Get Smart says some of the cards offered at its site have annual interest rates as low as 4.9 percent, but the vast majority of them have rates starting at 11.4 percent (though many have low introductory rates). Do not expect to get a better deal than through conventional card offers — this is a free service. Get Smart makes money by charging card companies a fee whenever an application is approved; it accepts no advertising.

Ram Research Group takes a different approach. Its site is filled with blinking billboard advertisements indicating that low interest rates and quick approvals are just a mouse click away. The site's card finder takes you to a map of the United States; click on a state and see the latest credit cards being offered to residents.

RULING: New sites have sprouted up since decision fears the decision could "open the floodgates to all sorts of unscrupulous Web sites" hawking kiddie porn and bestiality.

"It's open season now," said Warshavsky, whose $20 million business showcasing live cybersex shows and pay-per-view movies over the Net registers 6 million visits, or "hits," a day. "As broad and as badly written as the CDA was, at least it forced many of the larger companies to set up barriers to entry. I fear that a glut of wildcat companies with no responsibility will surface."

They already have.

For every Internet Entertainment Group and Playboy site that requires photo IDs and a credit-card number for adult access, there are hundreds of sites that freely depict oral sex, bestiality and nude 14-year-old girls from Southeast Asia.

Some sites, one of which brazenly advertises free links to thousands of "uncensored, hard-core video clips and stills," have sprouted up since a federal three-judge panel in Philadelphia ruled key elements of the Decency Act unconstitutional a year ago. The sites charge for access to some of the more risque areas, but they serve up plenty of appetizers to hook curious onlookers.

Such online enterprises make even the grand dames of pornography shudder.

"The (Supreme Court) decision means absolutely nothing to us," said Eileen Kent, vice president of new media for Playboy. "We already had blocking mechanisms put into place. It is difficult under any stretch of the imagination to call the Playboy site indecent. Compared to what else is on the Net, we're pretty wholesome."

Computer companies that make online filtering, or "blocking," software also stand to make money as a result of yesterday's ruling.

Filtering software is used widely by parents and schools as a virtual cop to police the flow of unsavory Internet traffic. The programs, modeled after virus-protection software that shields computers from virulent bugs, prohibit access to explicit sites and block searches under keywords such as "sex" and "violence."

The most popular filtering program, Spyglass Software's SurfWatch, has shipped 3.4 million copies. A password activates the program, which bars users from visiting some 40,000 sites. If a user tries to call up a sexually charged Web site or type in a profane word, the image of a stop sign with the warning "Blocked by SurfWatch" flashes across the screen.

One of the strictest programs is Solid Oak Software's CYBERsitter, which bars more than 50,000 sites. It blocks references to "homosexual," "gay rights," "NOW," "fascism," drugs" and "illegal activities." Santa Barbara-based Solid Oak is endorsed by Focus on the Family, a right-wing religious organization.

"I'm sure we'll get our share of calls from concerned parents," said Jay Friedland, vice president of strategic marketing at Los Altos-based Spyglass. "Even if CDA was a perfect bill, it still did not apply to 40 percent of the world's sex sites, which come from outside the U.S."

Added a Solid Oak spokesman, "As long as sex sells, you can expect a good dose of morality to sell."

PLAN: Constitutional convention planned

novitz said.

The proposed plan gives ISOC and its associates all of the power, he said.

AIM plans to hold its own constitutional convention in Washington on Wednesday. But, Sernovitz said, ISOC has declined the invitation.

"They have told me that they don't consider us or our members at all relevant," Sernovitz said. "We are a group of 300 major new media companies, including Disney, Time Warner, IBM, Andersen Consulting, GTE."

But, Metzger points out, most AIM members remain unaware of Sernovitz's plans.

"None of their members actually support their actions," Metzger said. "Anyone can spend money and get good P.R."

Sernovitz himself conceded that he is still rallying member support.

AIM has trumpted its cause through its own Internet site (www.interactivehq.org) and an aggressive media campaign.

Under the ISOC plan, a user's e-mail address could disappear overnight if a provider's domain name — the "acme" in "www.acme.com" — suddenly gets awarded to somebody else, Sernovitz said.

A business may have spent millions to protect a trademarked name, only to see it turned over to some stranger halfway across the world, he said.

"In the end, people are going to be revolted at what has happened, and people will stand up and take back the Internet again," Sernovitz said. "What ISOC wants is for people to think that everything is fine."

Getting in touch with ISOC and its associates — spread across the United States, Isreal, Australia, Switzerland and other countries — can prove difficult.

Don Heath, the president and designated spokesman at ISOC, was visiting Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, last week and was unavailable for comment.

David Maher — ISOC's representative on the temporary Internet government — was in Italy on vacation. Attempts to reach him were unsuccessful.

But Metzger said that AIM will have a hard time succeeding.

"I don't see what they can concretely do," he said.

2000: Fixing problems within companies' data centers

How much trouble could missing two little numbers cause? Consider this: The mainframe computer that calculates your gas bill might charge you for 100 years of service. Your financial history could be wiped out when the computer at your bank gets confused, locks up, shuts down and attempts to reboot. These are, of course, worst-case scenarios, but the potential for catastrophe is real.

"It could affect every one of us if you deal with or work for a company, or buy stuff from a company," said Jim Keogh, author of "Solving the Year 2000 Problem."

Keogh believes many businesses underestimate the meticulousness and time needed to upgrade their computer systems. "Suppose they give you the assignment of reading every line in every book in the Library of Congress — then deciding if they would be affected by the century change, then changing them and republishing them and placing them back on the shelves. That is what it's like."

As the clock runs out, Y2K has spawned a cottage industry. According to Keogh, conservative estimates for Y2K conversion range from $50 million to $100 million for a large company, with the cost to the federal government estimated at $30 billion.

Because many of the older systems use old programming languages such as COBOL, FORTRAN and Pascal, old-time programmers are suddenly in high demand. "You have these guys leaving the companies they're with or coming out of retirement and charging these high prices," said Jim Woodward, senior vice president of Y2K conversion specialists Cap Gemini. "The problem is, you have the same amount of work to be done in less and less time, and most companies haven't even started or prices wouldn't be increasing like they have."

The Atlanta-based information giant Equifax began its Y2K program in 1995 and now has 13teams in six countries working full time on ensuring they are year 2000 compliant when the big ball drops in Times Square.

"We expect to have everything ready for the second quarter of 1998," said Lauris Nance, assistant vice president in charge of the company's Y2K plan. "So that anything that has to go in a year-end cycle can do so, and so we'll have '99 as a buffer for any problems and to assist our customers with any problems they may have."

Among the most difficult and time-consuming problems for companies are the myriad unforeseen complications that appear just as they think they are making headway.

Fixing the problems within companies' data centers is easy, Woodward said. "It's when you start looking at all the connected services to outside suppliers and government agencies and such that the size of the problem begins to show itself."

"We describe it as being like an onion," said Nance. "You peel off a layer and there's another layer and another. And the more you peel an onion, the more you want to cry."

MARS: Pathfinder site 'incredible' success

ware," he said. "It increased capacity to accommodate the rush of visitors to all the sites."

Pavlovsky said one of the most popular on-line activities is a virtual reality view of Mars from the perspective of the Sojourner rover, a remote-controlled vehicle used by JPL to navigate the planet. The game lets Internet users explore Mars by moving their Rover up to 360 degrees to the right or left.

Kate Delhagen of Forrester Research Inc. called the Pathfinder site "an incredible success," citing users' desire for immediate information.

"The Web page is an incredible success," said Kate Delhagen of Forrester Research Inc., a market research group. "It's proof that the Internet is the best venue for broadcasting data."

Introduction to the Internet

Monday and Tuesday Evening, July 14th and 15th
6:30 pm - 10:00 pm

This class will introduce you to the ins and outs of the Internet, and will focus specifically on the often vague answer to a very straight-forward question:

"How do I get on the Internet, and what do I do once I am there?"

This class will show you how to get on the Internet.

And, it covers the topics: What you need to connect; hardware and software considerations; SLIP and PPP connections; what is TCP/IP; finding a service provider; using software tools to locate information on the 'Net; using FTP, Archie, Gopher, Telnet; accessing Newsgroups; e-mail and mailing lists; how to access the World Wide Web; using Netscape, the most popular WWW browser; understanding URL's and Hypertext; and anti-virus protection.

Prerequisite: Basic computer and Windows skills
