Spring Plowing Scene—Somewhere in France

Better any day than the old hand-shoveling method of trench digging is this modern steam shovel technique, shown in use recently on the Western Front. Of course it hasn't completely replaced the pick and shovel, and the mud and water are the same as ever.

TWO CABINET MEMBERS WILL VISIT TEXAS

WASHINGTON, Mar. 22.—Two high democratic officials will visit Texas soon, it was revealed here today. Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes is to visit the state next week, and Postmaster General James A. Farley, a candidate for presidential nomination by the democratic party, is to attend post office conventions in the state.

Ickes announced that he would visit the state to help organize the third term democrats and to see if he could secure part of the Texas delegation to the convention at Chicago pledged to President Roosevelt.

Ickes stated that neither Garner nor Farley had a chance to win the democratic nomination, and that Paul V. McNutt would not win the nomination.

Farley did not attach any political significance to his visit, merely stating that he was to attend conventions.

When asked by a reporter if he thought the depression would return a republican president, Farley replied, "I do not think we will have a republican administration."

Drawing Texas school teachers from all levels of the educational system, elementary through college, the conference centered around the operation of the University's Health Workshop.

Already a part of the University's curriculum study program, the workshop consists of pamphlets, books, periodicals, films and charts touching on the health education problem as related to a pupil's various courses. Miss Jeanie M. Pinckney, bureau director, told delegates.

Speakers during the two day meet were Dr. Rosalind Cassidy, Mills College, Calif.; Dr. Augusta F. Bronner, Judge Baker Guidance Center, Boston, Mass.; Corrine Nash, Waco public schools; Helen Corubia, Tulsa public schools; Tom Blackwell, Jr., Lytle public schools; Dr. William Healy, Judge Baker Guidance Center; Dr. J. Man Is Shot After Attempted Burglary

SAN ANTONIO, Mar. 22.—Man Belex, believed to be from Los Angeles, was near death today after a policeman shot him as he fled from the scene of an attempted burglary.

SEA WARFARE IS INCREASED BY BOTH SIDES

The British admiralty announced today that 12 British and neutral ships had been sunk in the past 48 hours by a concentrated and renewed Nazi raid on British shipping.

In the meantime Britain started a new phase of her blockade against German shipping, by torpedoing a German freighter, loaded with iron ore from the Scandinavian countries, bound for Germany. The ship was sunk in Danish territorial waters, only eight miles off the coast of Denmark. All members of the German crew were rescued by Danish coast-guardsmen.

Sinking of the Danish steamer Algiers, with the loss of one woman and one seaman, the total death toll from the sea warfare has reached 45 in the past two days.

The admiralty also accused Germany of attacking unarmed merchant vessels without warning. The British trawler Star of Pence, is believed to have rammed and sunk a German submarine in the North Sea when the vessel struck the submarine's upper structure.

Jugoslavia Now Is Country to Watch

Word from foreign press correspondents is to watch Jugoslavia, where the next big European turmoil is expected to break out.

Hints are that a new political party in Jugoslavia is trying to divide the country, and that the movement is being silently approved by both Italy and Germany.

It is rumored that a civil war, which would give Germany the excuse needed to march into the country to protect her minorities, is expected to break out at any time.

Confidence Vote For New Cabinet Of France Is Weak

PARIS, Mar. 22.—The French parliament today gave a weak vote of confidence to the new cabinet formed by Premier Paul Reynaud.

Premier Reynaud formed the cabinet at the request of President Albert LeBrun after the resignation of Premier Daladier. The 22 members of the cabinet were presented to President LeBrun yesterday, and to the chamber of deputies today, when Premier Reynaud's 250-word address drew mild applause.

The Reynaud cabinet, pledged "only to fight" received only 268 favorable votes in the chamber of deputies with 156 against and 111 failing to vote, indicating it was little more popular than the Daladier cabinet.

THREE DIE IN BLAST

LONDON, Mar. 22.—Three persons were killed today in an explosion at an engineering works near Woolwich.

NYA To Establish Six Texas Units For Air Mechanics

AUSTIN.—Youth in Texas will have a chance to learn the fundamentals of an industry fast becoming one of the foremost in the country when the National Youth Administration establishes six Junior Aeronautical Mechanics Units April 15, according to J. C. Kellam, State NYA Administrator. These units will be located at Waco, Marshall, Fort Worth, Canyon, Houston, and Ranger.

In keeping with the exploratory character of NYA, this basic course will include the elementary phases of nine types of aviation training, theory of flight (aerodynamics), mechanical drawing, sheet metal work, welding, fabric work, surface finishes, plating, foundry practice, and radio. The State Administrator said the program is designed to be flexible enough to allow the qualified youth an extra measure of training in any one of the specialties in which he shows interest and proficiency.

"It is conceded by employment experts," said Kellam, "that three industries—aviation, air conditioning, and radio—will, during the next decade, assist materially in relieving unemployment in the United States. Aviation alone has an immediate and enormous demand for many kinds of skilled workers. In addition to the element of national defense, commercial airlines will require replacements and additions. According to a survey made by a National Aeronautical Group, U. S. airlines are carrying only a fraction of their potential passenger transportation demand."

Traffic Deaths In February Increased

AUSTIN, Mar. 22.—State police reported today that 1940 traffic deaths through February totaled 266, an increase of 18 over 1939, and said that a record toll is expected this month because of a crossing crash at Alamo where 29 were killed.

SOLON LEAVES EASTLAND FOR CAPITOL WORK

Congressman Clyde L. Garrett of Eastland left at noon today to return to Washington where he will attend sessions of congress.

Garrett had come to Eastland primarily because of a libel suit against him and his secretary, J. W. Cockrill. The suit was dismissed voluntarily by the plaintiff, Thomas L. Blanton, after it had begun.

Because of many delegations who wished to see him, particularly on proposed WPA projects, Garrett was detained in leaving for Washington.

Prior to leaving, Garrett, questioned upon WPA rules which recently required sponsors to contribute 25 per cent of cost of projects instead of 15 per cent as heretofore, stated:

"It is to be regretted that such requirements, with unemployment so great and financial ability of the sponsors so limited, being made at this time particularly. The WPA sponsors in this and other counties are to be congratulated upon the splendid cooperation in sponsoring worthwhile projects which are to the end that the unemployed may be furnished employment."

"Knowing the financial straits in which the sponsors find themselves I marvel at their being able to provide the many projects they have."

"It is my feeling that in passing the works relief appropriation that it was not contemplated that unreasonable hardships would be placed upon the sponsors which are strenuously endeavoring to provide work relief for our needy people. The requirements and construction of the act have been placed by the national WPA administrator."

Congressman Garrett declared that it was believed congress would adjourn between May 15 and June 1. He said he would return immediately after the adjournment to the district and begin his campaign for re-election. He said his formal announcement would be made in newspapers in the near future.

Dr. Rainey's former connection and present interest in baseball make him the logical and ideal choice for the assignment, the committeemen said.

Cornelius Invites Public to Inspect Plant and Offices

The public has been invited to attend open house this afternoon at the new plant and offices of Victor Cornelius, Eastland businessman and owner of a patented theatrical poster service which is used by several hundred theatres in 40 states.

Located at 115 East Commerce street, the plant and offices of Mr. Cornelius are acclaimed by authorities as being among the latest and most modern anywhere.

Those who visit during the open house hours today, from 3 o'clock to 6 o'clock in the afternoon, will see the modern printing facilities which are necessary in the production of the posters, the manner in which the posters are prepared for shipment to all parts of the nation and offices where a staff keeps records on orders, shipments and other business.

The Cornelius theatrical advertising service is regarded as unique in that Mr. Cornelius conceived the idea and is responsible for its successful operation.

Testifying to the growth of the business is the fact that in the offices is a machine with which it is possible to send and receive Western Union telegrams.

Because of the large shipments of theatrical advertising posters, receipts of the Eastland Postoffice and American Railway Express company have increased considerably since the service was initiated.

Also housed in the modern building, of which there are two separate units although they are interconnected, is a music department operated exclusively in 15 counties by Mr. Cornelius. The music department is supervised by A. B. Cornelius.

Employees in the various departments are:

Printing—Joe Stephen, Glenn Graham.

Shipping—Eldress Gattis, Lowell Snyder, Clyde Pettit, C. W. Pettit.

Office—Mrs. E. O. Everett, Mrs. W. Q. Verner, Miss Gertrude Van Horn.

Music—A. B. Cornelius, Roger Moorhead, Orville Reed.

In addition to the force at Eastland, Cornelius employs several field salesmen to aid in the theatrical poster service sales.

Scaling Tariff Walls

Tariff walls are growing too high, state officials are gradually beginning to realize. The trouble is that the barriers work both ways. It's all right for a state to set up a formidable hurdle to make outsiders think twice before they try to mount it; but the walls are not only keeping outsiders from getting in—they are also keeping the natives from getting out.

The only conclusive and universally equitable way of removing ridiculous trade barriers that now pen in almost every state in the Union is to call a nationwide conference and to get the states to agree simultaneously on a new set of rules prescribed by authorized representatives. Ultimately, perhaps, that will come about.

In the meantime, however, the Public Administration Clearing House has noted a definite sectional trend to chop down the figurative fences that now bar the way for interstate commerce.

Two recent conferences helped untangle some of the snares of liquor traffic. In Chicago representatives of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan and Indiana talked over conflicting liquor control legislation. One immediate result was the promise of the Illinois Liquor Control Commission to check bottling of Illinois liquor in neighboring states. A similar meeting in Buffalo was attended by representatives of seven states.

At another midwestern conference, highway problems were ironed out and reciprocal agreements established between Iowa, Nebraska, and Minnesota. Other states represented at this meeting are still thinking the matter over.

An agreement to abolish license fees on trucks and trailers was recently reached between New York and Michigan. Trucks from either state may now move freely in the other.

Tariff conditions had reached a point where further complications were virtually impossible. Easing of some restrictions is almost inevitable. It is profitable for a state to restrict foreign vehicular travel or imports only so long as other states don't reciprocate. When the idea spreads, as it did, it brings chaos for everyone, offers no relief to the local business men whom it is designed to aid.

Constitutionally, a state may not impose a tariff. But the wall of restrictions that has been set up in almost every state is far more deadly than any tariff ever could be.

WILDLIFE

Dead Trees Valuable for Wildlife

I am sure that there are many people who never realized the great value that dead trees are to wildlife resources. It is true that these trees play a definite part in wildlife production on the farm. Most of the larger dead trees on the farm have many hollows in them for which many species use for reproduction. One incident was related by the Game Department a few days ago when a Texas farmer cut down a big tree. He got three opossums, each weighing seven pounds, five fat squirrels and twenty pounds of honey out of the tree. These trees also serve as a means of many wildlife resources to escape from their natural enemies.

Here Comes Sumner Welles Back From Europe

We have many birds that useput on a forest beautification program, in which all dead trees were removed from a forest. This destroyed the homes of many insectivorous birds that were controlling the insects on the live trees. This caused the birds to migrate to other places, where the living conditions were better. This act caused many of the large beautiful trees to go by the way of insects, and other trees died. By this time the birds were beginning to move back into the forests and the insects were again being brought under control; thus the forest began to operate normally again. This proved that the dead tree program of Germany was a big loss rather than benefit. From this one can see that dead trees have a definite value, and some dead trees should be preserved on every farm.

Newspaper's Annual School On Cooking Scheduled April 4-6

The greatest achievement one can aspire to in these modern times is doing whatever job is ours to do, not half heartedly, but skillfully and better than anyone else can do it. This same principle applies to woman's place in the home... there is no finer accomplishment than to be one of those women who takes pride in the management of her home and who is always seeking new ways to improve old methods in marketing, or cooking the daily meals.

So that it may serve the women of this community on a broader scope, the Eastland Daily Telegram and Chronicle have secured the services of Mrs. Gertrude Burbank, widely known Home Economist and Lecturer, to conduct the Happy Kitchen Cooking School, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 4, 5 and 6, at the roof garden of the Connell Hotel.

Miss Burbank's wealth of knowledge in running the home more efficiently will inspire every woman who attends the Happy Kitchen Cooking School. During the sessions many valuable suggestions will be given, including the proper equipment required in the modern kitchen to enable one to work efficiently and save labor. Little household hints will be divulged that will lighten everyday tasks. New economy cuts on marketing and planning will be discussed. New and appetizing menus will be given, enabling one to change up the order of old stand-bys that no longer tempt the jaded appetites of the family. The importance of different vitamins and how they affect the energy and well being of the family and many more helpful suggestions that will help each woman raise the standard of living in her own home. Something new is offered each day, so plan now to attend every day. The admission is free to the Happy Kitchen Cooking School.

Plan now to attend each and every session. Remember the dates are Thursday, Friday and Saturday, April 4, 5 and 6.

YESTERDAY: Steve tells Ann he is still in love with her, but she reminds him that she is a servant. Ann finds the cook has been buying large quantities of food, too much for use. She senses trouble. Late one night, Irene comes to Ann's room to chat.

CHAPTER XXVI

IRENE said, "When we met at the Athens Club party I had no idea that you were a bread-winner. You looked so ultra that night."

"I stepped out of type for the evening."

"I don't want to be nosey, but—your're different, Ann. Where is your family? Why are you a housekeeper—if you don't mind telling me."

"My parents are dead, they were killed in an accident. I don't know much about my father's people. Mother came from Seattle. Perhaps I have cousins and uncles and aunts out there. I never looked into it."

"Are you absolutely on your own?"

"Yes."

"I give you credit, Ann. I couldn't earn enough to buy a bowl of bread and milk."

"They talked on like two girls in the same walk of life. Irene said, 'Where's that good-looking man who was with you at the Athens Club?'"

"He's out in Moline, floorwalking a 10-cent store. Ann's face shadowed."

Watching her, Irene said, "I thought you two were in love."

"People like us can't afford to be in love."

"I'm having a lot of fun at the moment being in love," Irene confided. "Dad would throw a fit if he knew." She laughed delightedly.

"Steve Claybourne?" Ann asked.

"No. Jeff Furter—he's an orchestra leader," Irene sighed. "I'll get over it, but I hate to—he's a new kind of thrill."

"You're not going to marry him?"

"Goodness, no. I don't fancy myself as the wife of an orchestra leader. I'll marry Steve some day. We're not in love, but we go with the same crowd and like to do the same things. I'll marry Steve when I get around to it."

Ann laughed. "Does he know it?"

"Oh, I suppose he feels like I do, that we'll make a nice pair when we each want to be half of a pair."

"Would you care if he fell in love with someone else?" Ann asked, thinking of the conversation on the stairs the previous evening.

"No, I wouldn't care. We're both looking around a little."

might even fall in love." She got up from the bed. "I'd better be getting dressed."

ANN was ready for bed when the telephone rang. She waited for Rose to answer but, when the bell kept up its monotonous chant, she went to the upstairs sitting room.

"Mr. Temple's residence," she said.

"Ann? Steve talking."

"Hello, Steve."

"How'd you like to go for a cruise on the lake? It's a swellish night."

"Honestly, Steve, I'm too tired."

"It'll do you good. I'll have you back in an hour if you say so. The moon is not quite full, but tipsy."

"Are you, too?"

Steve laughed. "My state of intoxication is well in hand, lady."

It was dark in the sitting room and the moonlight made a puddle on the carpet. It would be gorgeous on the lake. The Temple gardens sloped down to the water's edge. A dock reached far out into the lake. Ann could imagine Steve's launch put-putting up to the dock in the silvery light. For a moment she was tempted.

Then, "Steve, try to understand. Mr. Temple and Irene and Blake are wonderful to me, but, after all, I'm not a member of the family. I have work to do and plenty of it. I can't go tooting off at this hour of the night—"

"Doesn't a housekeeper rate a boy friend?"

"Perhaps—after she gets her housekeeping under control."

"Then you won't go?"

"Not tonight, Steve. Thank you." Ann was not too pleased that Steve had asked her to slip out of the house for a midnight cruise. It clearly emphasized the difference in their stations. He seemed to read her thoughts.

"Don't think I'm trying to backdoor you," he said. "What I told you last night goes. If you don't watch out I'll ask John Temple for your hand."

"Steve—you stay in your own back yard and I'll stay in mine. That's the better way."

Ann laughed. "Does he know it?"

"Oh, I suppose he feels like I do, that we'll make a nice pair when we each want to be half of a pair."

"Would you care if he fell in love with someone else?" Ann asked, thinking of the conversation on the stairs the previous evening.

"No, I wouldn't care. We're both looking around a little."

THREE hectic days passed. Against terrific odds, Ann made progress. She decided on a new market and clipped Plunket's objections short.

"I could have both you and your uncle arrested for what's been going on," she said. Plunket retired to menacing silence. It was on the third night that Ann saw the cook whisk out of her room as she turned the corner in the second floor corridor.

"Plunket—" she called sharply. There was no answer and she was half inclined to believe that she had imagined the visit. Blake, home for a few days, dashed out of his room, begging for help with his dress tie, and Ann forgot the incident.

The following morning Mr. Temple came down to breakfast with a grievance. "My watch has disappeared," he grumbled, frowning and fumbling at his waistcoat pocket. "I know I had it when I came home last evening. Remember distinctly of taking it out of my pocket when I changed to tennis clothes before dinner."

"That's queer," Ann said. "I couldn't have got very far."

Rose, who had been serving the fruit, vanished into the kitchen. When breakfast was finished Mr. Temple asked Ann to ring for the maids. They came into the dining room, Rose and Beth and Plunket.

"Has anyone seen my watch?" Mr. Temple asked, scrutinizing each face in turn.

Rose and Beth shook their heads. Plunket looked meaningfully at Ann.

"I don't want to be suspicious," Mr. Temple went on, "but several things have disappeared around here. When I took my late wife's jewels to the bank I found that a two-karat diamond was missing. No one knew anything. The last time Irene gave a luncheon, two dozen salad forks could not be found."

He turned to Ann. "Please check the silver, Miss Brown. We'll compare it with my list."

She nodded and he continued. "I've overlooked these items, in case a belief that there was some reasonable excuse, but—I've pounded the table and his voice rose—"I'll be damned if my watch can get away without a fight. I've carried that watch for 25 years and I intend to carry it to the end of my days. If I don't find the watch on my dresser when I return tonight I'll send for the police. You may go."

Plunket stepped out of line. "May I see you alone, Mr. Temple, sir?"

"All right—in the library," he snapped.

Plunket gave Ann a long, expressive look as she left the dining room. She said apologetically, "I'm advising you not to let Miss Brown go upstairs until you see me."

All at once Ann knew what it was all about. She had been framed by Plunket and her relatives. It was their subtle way of getting rid of her.

"OUT OUR WAY"

Sound Wagon Has An Important Role In State Campaign

AUSTIN, Tex.—"Sound wagons" have become a familiar part of Texas political campaigns in recent years. Few candidates making a statewide campaign venture out without such equipment, which usually consist of music to attract crowds and loud speakers to carry the candidate's speech for several blocks.

Introduction of the sound wagon into Texas campaigns is credited to Chesley W. Jurney of Waco, sergeant-at-arms of the U. S. Senate. He was a candidate for congressman-at-large from Texas before the last congressional redistricting. He brought with him from the east a walnut colored sound wagon with his name and candidacy lettered upon it in elaborate style. The wagon and its sound got large attention but it failed to garner enough votes for Jurney who had been absent from Texas and was looked upon almost as a non-resident.

Others were quick to see the advantage of the sound wagon and the next campaign in Texas had several of them. The sound wagons were passed on from candidate to candidate as campaigns progressed. Several were equipped in the state for rental to candidates.

Next innovation was a campaign in a trailer. H. O. Johnson of Houston used it in a race for railroad commissioner. The trailer was one of the early tailor-made variety in Texas, fully equipped with sleeping quarters, a lavatory, kitchen and office. It, too, failed to elect the candidate using it. A motorcycle campaign was made by one district candidate, and former Attorney General William McCraw campaigned for governor in 1938 largely by airplane.

Many candidates had made trips by airplane before McCraw but he was the first candidate who was an airplane owner and pilot. One candidate campaigned with a dog and quit the race when the dog died.

The late Gov. O. B. Colquitt was credited with first using an automobile for campaigning in Texas. Pat Neff was first candidate to attempt to cover the entire state. He started in the fall with a Ford automobile and made personal visits to places that never had seen a governor-candidate before.

"Ma" and "Pa" Ferguson in their campaigns for governor relied almost entirely upon railroads for their speaking tours. Former Gov. Dan Moody owned no automobile when he made his whirlwind campaign that ousted the Fergusons but he covered the state by car.

He would visit a community and speak. Some friend with an automobile would then whisk him to the next speaking place and there the same sort of arrangement would take place. The trip was made in every type of car from open model T Fords to the latest luxury cars. Neither Moody nor Ferguson used loud speakers but were heard by innuendo. To this day Moody's loud voice develops campaigning days.

As governor he's advised to "open the other than use long phone."

YESTERDAY: Irene Temple explains that she is in love with Steve, but will probably marry him eventually. Ann turns down a date with Steve. Ann dumps down on the servants. Mr. Temple's watch disappears. He questions the servants. The cook hints Ann may know something about the missing watch.

CHAPTER XXVII

MR. TEMPLE glanced at Ann, his keen eyes troubled. Suddenly she felt sick and frightened.

Mr. Temple said, "Ann, you and Plunket come to the library. Together, they followed him, Ann leading the way with her head high."

"Well, Plunket—" Mr. Temple began, nipping off the end of a cigar.

"I know where your watch is," Plunket said defiantly. "I been suspicious of Miss Brown ever since she came. More silver has disappeared from the dining room and I took the liberty of looking for 'em in her room. I found 'em right!" She looked smug and satisfied.

"Go up and look for yourself. Look in the bottom drawer of her dresser. Your watch is there and a roll of silver. I seen 'em with my own eyes."

Ann shook with rage. "I have never stolen a thing in my life, Mr. Temple. If your things are found in my room they were planted there."

Just at this moment, Irene, drowsy-eyed, wearing an exotic negligee, drifted into the room. "What's the excitement?" she asked.

"My watch has disappeared," her father explained. "Plunket says it's in Ann's—Miss Brown's—room."

"If it is, Plunket put it there," Irene said easily. "How do you know so much, anyway?" she asked of the cook.

"Well—"

"I know—you were snooping. That proves my point. You took the watch and put it in Ann's room."

Mr. Temple started for the door. "You two girls stay here. Plunket, take me to the drawer where you saw the watch." He strode up the stairs, Plunket panting behind him.

"She's a rotter," Irene said disgustedly.

ANN nodded. She felt chilly. It was no small matter to be accused of stealing. And she hadn't a doubt that Mr. Temple would return with the damning evidence. He did.

"You may go, Plunket," he said, placing a roll of silver on the table and fingering the watch. Ann stared at the watch.

"But that's mine," she said. "That watch belonged to my father. And this roll of silver, I bought the spoons, one by one, myself."

Mr. Temple stood before her. Gray hair looked into her white face. His expression was one of disappointment rather than blame.

"May I have it a moment?" Ann held out her hand and he gave it to her. She opened the back case. "See?" she said, handing it back to him. "My father carried that watch until he died. I've had it ever since."

Mr. Temple looked at the inscription. He took a pair of spectacles from his pocket and looked again.

"Well—" he gasped, his eyes darting to Ann's face and back to the engraving. Irene went to look over his shoulder.

"To Peter Temple on his 21st birthday," she read, repeating. "Peter Temple—But your watch says John Temple—I've read it a hundred times."

Her father asked abruptly, "Where did you get this, Ann?"

"As long as I can remember my father carried it."

"But your name is Brown."

"Yes, Peter Brown was my father."

"Peter Brown—" thoughtfully. "Where did he get this watch?"

"I don't know," she faltered. "My father made his living by—well, by gambling. Often he took things in payment of debts, watches and diamonds, once a yacht. I always thought he came by the watch that way. He sold the other things, but never this watch."

"Probably appreciated it," Mr. Temple nodded. He gave the watch to Ann. "Now the question is—where's mine?" he said.

As if the words were a cue for an entrance, Blake, slick in his uniform, came into the room.

"Borrowed your watch last night, Dad," he said. "Mine was on the blink. Hope you don't mind." The watch he handed over was exactly like the one Ann held in her hand.

"Well, I'll be—" Mr. Temple muttered. He held out his hand to Ann. "Forgive an old fool, will you?" he asked, smiling at her.

"Of course."

ANN was trying to reason it out. Plunket, snooping in her room, had seen the watch. When Mr. Temple came to the breakfast table with his grievance she evidently thought that events had played into her hands. She was probably convinced, at that moment, that her troubles with Ann were over. If the only knew it, Ann thought, they had only begun.

Mr. Temple started for the door. Irene caught his arm. "Wait a minute," she said. "Maybe Ann's father's real name was Temple. Maybe you're my cousin, Ann. We look alike—more than one person has noticed it. Oh, isn't this exciting—just like the third act of a play."

Mr. Temple's sharp eyes went from one girl's face to the other. "You two do look alike," he exclaimed. "Tell me about your father, Ann. Sit down, let's be comfortable."

"He was tall and dark, sort of dashing looking. He had the most charming manners in the world. He made mother and me love him in spite of ourselves."

"That sounds like Pete," Mr. Temple nodded.

"Pete—that's what I always called him. He was educated and had been well reared. I used to think maybe he was the black-sheep of some nice family. Perhaps he got into a scrape and took another name."

"I'll say Pete got into a scrape, dozens of them," Mr. Temple laughed excitedly. "Good old Pete," he mused. "The most lovable rascal I ever knew. I was the conservative type and always stood a little in awe of him—where is he now, child?" he broke off to ask.

Ann told of the fire. "They got me out with a few things and the watch. They couldn't save Pete and Mother." It hadn't been so long since the tragedy and her voice shook. "I've been lonely without them," she faltered.

IRENE appealed to her father. "Do you think this Pete person was your brother?"

"It certainly sounds like it, my dear. Wait—do you remember if he had any identifying marks, Ann?"

"He had a scar over his right eye, he was left-handed—"

Mr. Temple sighed. "That's Pete. I remember when he gashed his head. The doctor took six stitches." He sighed again. "It almost killed me when my father disinherited him and bought him a one-way ticket to Seattle."

"He married my mother in Seattle, she was a kindergarten teacher."

Irene sang out, "But look, Dad—that makes Ann my cousin."

"By Jove, it does."

Ann got quickly to her feet. "Please—let's forget that. Just because Pete got married and had a daughter is no reason why anything should be different with us."

RYDER By Fred Harman

THE PLAYOFF..

BY JERRY BRONDFIELD
NEA Service Staff Writer

PERHAPS on the old theory that a new broom sweeps clean, James J. Dykes swapped Gerald Talker, a right-hand hitter, for Taft Wright, a left-hand thumper, and Rio Radcliff, who swings from the northside, for Julius Solters, who hits the other way.

Off their records it might appear Dykes is just where he left off last fall, but anyone suspecting any such thing doesn't know the little manager of the Chicago White Sox.

Dykes is the Ol' Clo'sman of baseball... and gets more out of castoffs than any other pilot.

A half dozen of his pitching regulars were passed on by other American League outfits—the outthaws, Thornton Lee and his Edgar Smith, and the right-handers, Jack Knott, Bill Dietrich, Marist Pete Appleton and Clint Brown, the finest relief worker in the business.

Detroit tossed in Mike Tresh in a trade and the youngster's catching was largely instrumental in landing the Pale Horse back in the first division in 1939.

The Boston Red Sox couldn't find a spot for Eric McNair, but Boob played plenty of third base and batted .324 for the Comiskeyes.

SO don't be surprised if Taft Wright plays right field acceptably and Julius Solters returns to the form which made him a feared hombre at the plate in 1935-36-37.

The White Sox haven't much right to finish higher than fourth, where they were last October, but they wound up third in '36 and '37 with a less formidable array than the one Dykes now commands in Pasadena, Calif.

Jack Hayes' knee, operated on for a second time last fall, only has to respond to complete a crack infield and give the White Sox their best attack since the Black Sox expose of two decades ago.

If Hayes, an ideal leadoff man and capable second sacker, turns out to be as spry as ever, he will be followed in the batting order by Joe Kuhel, Mike Kreevich, Wright, Luke Appling, Solters, McNair and the batterymen.

In addition to the players already listed, Dykes has Johnny Rigney and the still dependable 39-year-old Ted Lyons.

VALIE EAVES cooped '1 for Shreveport. Ed Weiland captured 18 for Henderson of the East Texas. Swift Orval Grove and towering Harry Boyles were called from Oklahoma City and St. Paul, respectively.

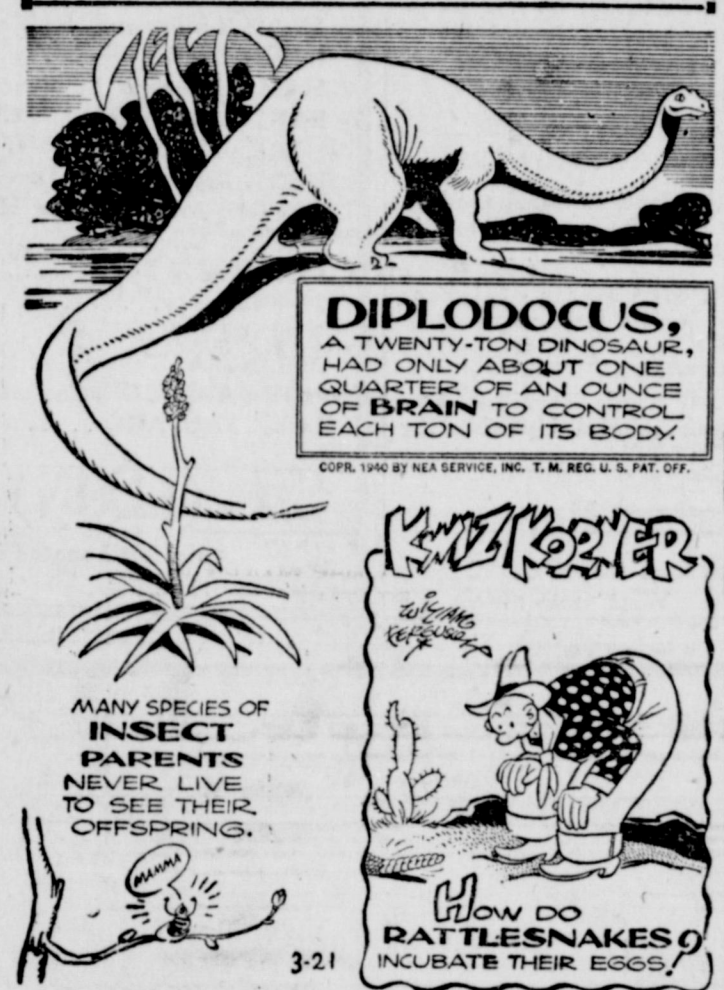

Ken Sylvestri is back from St. Paul, but the second string catching job may go to Tom Turner, who mixed in 39 extra base hits in compiling a .312 average with Houston.

Skeeter Webb will be a utility infielder along with Dykes himself, who is on the active list at 43.

Other infielders are Don Kolloway, Bob Kennedy and Frank (Seat) Metha, who earned his nickname by stealing 63 bases for Fort Worth—more than any Texas Leaguer swiped in 30 years. Kolloway hit .302 for Oklahoma City. Kennedy, 19 last August, was the youngest player in the Texas circuit, hit .284 and has a remarkable arm.

With the ball hawk, Kreevich flanked by Solters and Wright Johnny Rosenthal is the extra fly-chaser.

Foundation For Business Research To Be Organized

CHICAGO, Ill.—Plans for the organization of a foundation to do research work in the interest of private business enterprise were announced here today by George S. May, Chicago business man.

The organization, to be known as the George S. May Business Foundation, has been granted a non-profit Illinois charter and will open offices at once in Chicago and New York. Research engineers will be maintained in eighteen leading American cities.

In explaining the purpose of the Foundation, Mr. May said: "There is real need for a scientific, fact-finding study of the increasing problems which confront business management in its effort to earn profits under modern conditions. In the solution of these problems lies the fundamental solution to our national social problems, for our democratic institutions and our social welfare as a whole are dependent upon the success of business enterprise. We hope that our findings will serve in some degree not only as a direct aid to business men but as a constructive answer to the continual propaganda from sources opposed to the capitalistic system."

The Foundation, the announcement said, will be supported entirely by contributions from members of its Board of Trustees and its findings will be made available to business groups and educational institutions without charge. Subjects slated for early study include: bonus payment plans for supervisors and executives; modern methods of market analysis; the effect of public opinion on business; and the value of trade associations to business.

Saying a Mouthful Costs a Man $45

By United Press

EL PASO, Tex.—In case anyone wants to know, the price of "saying a mouthful" is $45—in Police Judge Dick Langford's court, at least.

A. H. Wells, who was in the south El Paso night spot when police arrested a woman, charging her with indecent exposure, found that out. The officers told Wells to go home to bed and be glad he wasn't arrested, too. Wells went home, but came back the next night with the avowed intention, according to testimony, of "giving that officers a mouthful."

He did, witnesses testified. Fine was $45.

Father At 50 Is An Honor Student Just 33 Years Late

RNO, Nev.—Howard Mason will get his university diploma 33 years late, but it will be a deluxe model, with all the fixings.

Mason, 50-year-old student who has two daughters who attend classes with him, has been elected to membership in Phi Kappa Phi, national scholastic honor society.

Mason, father of Dorothy and Elizabeth Mason, twin sophomores, was elected to the honor society, which is limited to the upper tenth of the students in point of scholarship, and carries a strong affidavit of campus activities and personality along with the election.

He began his college education in 1907 when he studied at Oklahoma A. & M. College. Mason will be graduated in May with a degree from the College of Agriculture. He said the reason for his enrolling at Nevada was his desire to broaden his education. He left Oklahoma in 1908 to do surveying work.

While studying at Nevada, Mason has carried a full-time course of study and has supported his family by doing part-time jobs. The daughters enjoy going to school with father.

Elizabeth is registered in the College of Arts and Science, while Dorothy is a pre-nursing student.

Leap Year Proves Flop At Gladewater

By United Press

GLADEWATER, Texas—As a marriage stimulant leap year is proving a flop! Or so thinks marriage license clerk L. H. Richardson.

"From the Gregg county office only 48 marriage licenses were issued during February."

"That was the worst February since I went to work here six years ago," the 265-pound clerk opined. "Even January, usually a lousy marriage license month, found us selling to 68 couples."

If Florida swimmers stumble over something, they needn't be too frightened. It will probably be nothing more than a scuttled Nazi boat.

Texas Health Week Designated For March 31 to Apr. 7

AUSTIN, Tex.—The week of March 31 to April 7 has been set as Texas Health, Clean-up and Safety Week by proclamation of Governor W. Lee O'Daniel.

Cities and towns will observe a week with special localized campaigns sponsored by local civic and governmental agencies in cooperation with the State Health Department, the State Fire Insurance Commission, and the Department of Public Safety, sponsors of the week on a state-wide basis.

Dr. Geo. W. Cox, state health officer, points out that the accumulation of winter's debris is a menace to the health of adults and children, and everyone is urged to observe clean-up week by removing this health hazard from their premises. Removal of these wastes is not only good housekeeping, but lessens the spread of diseases, particularly those affecting infants.

Collection of waste matter and trash in and about the home provides a breeding place for flies,

State Official to Visit XIT Reunion

DALHART, Tex.—Among honor guests at the fifth annual XIT Round-Up in Dalhart Aug. 5-6 will be Gov. John E. Miles of New Mexico and Raymond Huff, superintendent of Clayton schools and chairman of the New Mexico Board of Education.

Charlie Coombes, chairman of the general XIT committee, headed a delegation to Clayton Monday where special invitations were extended to Gov. Miles and Mr. Huff. "We'll be there," they said.

Gov. Miles was in Clayton to gain first-hand information of Northeastern New Mexico road problems and to attend a banquet arranged in his honor by Clayton Jaycees.

The annual XIT Round-Up is to honor those men and women still living who once worked for the three-million acre XIT ranch with which Texas in the 1880's paid for its $3,000,000 red granite capitol in Austin. Since 1900 the ranch has been cut into small ranches and farms.

I average 35,000 miles a year, so economy counts heavily with me. I've driven my 1940 Packard (my 53rd car) 17,460 miles in 6 months and haven't spent $5 on it, except for gas, oil and lubrication. Gas mileage is better than on small cars I've owned - averaging at least 17 miles to the gallon.

Eastland Men To Be at Funeral

W. C. Campbell and Steve Gilbert of Eastland will attend funeral services in Holliday, near Wichita Falls, Saturday morning of Edwin Thomas Michael, 49, one of four men burned in a blast that wrecked an oil pump station Thursday morning.

Processing Wool Started In Texas First Of The Month

AUSTIN, Tex.—Processing of wool in Texas, started on March 1 with the opening of a scouring plant in San Marcos, will be carried a step further on June 1 when a wool weaving plant begins operation at Eldorado.

Governor W. Lee O'Daniel today was in receipt of a report on the Eldorado plant which is being constructed at a cost of from $15,000 to $20,000.

This new concern will buy its scoured wool from the Cen-Tex Wool and Mohair Company's scouring plant at San Marcos, and will make woolen blankets, ties, and finished material in piece goods for men's suits and women's dresses, the Governor was informed.

Joe M. Christian, textile engineering graduate from Texas Technological College, and his father, J. B. Christian, are owners of the new plant.

Texas produced 77,290,000 pounds of wool and mohair last year. It is estimated that 60 per cent of this weight is represented in dirt and grease upon which Texas growers paid freight when sending the product to northern and eastern markets.

The scouring of wool in Texas is designed to eliminate that loss. The San Marcos plant which marked the culmination of seven years' planning on the part of H. C. and L. B. Rea of that city, will probably be able to supply wool to six plants of the size of the Eldorado concern, Gov. O'Daniel said.

WAR HITS STAMP COLLECTOR

Greater Reduction In Highway Deaths Could Be Effected

AUSTIN, Tex.—In releasing figures which show that there were 1583 traffic fatalities in Texas in 1939, the State Highway Engineer said this represented a slight decrease of 27 deaths over 1938, but a greater reduction could be effected in 1940 if drivers would make a special effort to drive correctly and safely. The Highway Department and various traffic organizations have worked diligently during the past year to teach safe driving and to install corrective measures for safety on the highways, but it seems from the number of deaths in 1939 that motorists have failed to cooperate as completely as they should.

The State Highway Engineer said that traffic accidents cost the motorists of Texas approximately $45,861,175 in 1939, and this alone is a tremendous loss to the State. He said the number of deaths resulting from traffic accidents was appalling, and expressed the hope that a substantial reduction may be effected in 1940.

Curie Element To Be Aid To Motors

AKRON, O.—Polonium, a rare element discovered in 1898 by the late Mme. Marie Curie which costs $2,000,000 an ounce, will be used in an alloy compounded for the electrodes of a new spark plug.

Sufficient quantities of the metal are included in the alloy to fill the air immediately around it with enormously powerful alpha rays, said to be the most potent ionizing rays known to science. Ionization of the air is expected to cut a better path for the spark, making it possible to start a motor more quickly, accelerate it faster and make its performance more economical.

Polonium is said to emit 4,000 times as many alpha rays as radium. Its use in spark plugs has been the subject of six years of research.

Mmes. Curie discovered the metal in pitchblende before she and her husband discovered radium. The element is named for her native Poland.

"Some conception of the enormous amount of energy radiated by polonium may be gathered by comparing it with the energy developed by a gallon of gasoline in the operation of an automobile," a research announcement said.

"Traveling at an economical speed an automobile will cover about 20 miles on a gallon of gasoline."

"An amount of polonium weighing the same as a gallon of gasoline would radiate sufficient energy, if it could be practically applied, to run the same automobile 1,000,000 miles."

Pin Lost 15 Years Unearthed by Wind

PALESTINE, Tex.—The H. A. Jenkins family of Palestine believes that blustery March winds which have swept this section for the past few days aren't so bad after all.

Fifteen years ago Miss Dorothy Jane Jenkins lost a gold pin which had been given to her by her parents. A long search failed to find it.

The recent winds shifted the topsoil just outside the Jenkins house, and at the foot of the back porch the pin was found. Members of the family have walked over the spot almost daily since the pin was lost.
