Ginsburg faces cable case query

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Douglas H. Ginsburg faces Senate questioning about his decision to supervise an administration effort that helped win First Amendment protection for cable television operators at a time Ginsburg had almost $140,000 invested in a cable company.

Financial disclosure statements indicate that at the time of the cable court case, Ginsburg's stake in Rogers Communications Inc. was by far his major non-real estate holding. His next largest stock holding was valued at less than $1,000.

An administration official close to Ginsburg said Sunday that Ginsburg did not discuss the possibility of a conflict of interest in the cable case with his superiors in the Justice Department or with ethics officers. Ginsburg discussed the situation with subordinates and concluded there was no conflict, according to the official, who spoke only on condition of anonymity.

"I certainly want to ask him about this," Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee on judicial nominees, said Sunday night. "Every judge has to avoid even the appearance of a conflict, so we should look into this."

■ Ginsburg's physician wife had performed abortions — 3A

Leahy said he would look to nonpartisan ethics experts to provide guidance on the matter.

Ginsburg, as assistant attorney general in charge of the antitrust division, supervised the drafting of a friend-of-the-court brief that the Supreme Court embraced in a 1986 decision likely to reduce government regulation of cable operators.

The 41-year-old Ginsburg, who sits on the U.S. Court of Appeals in Washington, will be the focus of intense Senate scrutiny following his nomination by President Reagan to fill the Supreme Court seat of retired Justice Lewis Powell Jr.

In 1986, Ginsburg was confirmed to the federal appeals court without senators' noting the coincidence of his investment and his role in the cable case. During confirmation proceedings, Ginsburg listed the cable case as among the 10 "most significant litigated matters that I personally handled."

Ginsburg, who initially declined comment, defended his decision to handle the cable case in a statement issued Sunday night.

Speaking on Ginsburg's behalf, Justice Department spokesman Terry Eastland said, "Mr. Ginsburg considered at the time the possibility of staying out of the department's participation in this case.

"Mr. Ginsburg decided that he could properly participate because the case before the court did not involve any company in which he had a financial interest," Eastland said. "He also concluded that he was not disqualified because of his ownership of stock in a Canadian company, Rogers Communications Inc....Mr. Ginsburg determined that the value of his holdings in Rogers would not be financially affected regardless of the outcome of the case."

Ethics experts said Ginsburg probably did not breach criminal conflict of interest statutes because the company in which he invested did not participate directly in the litigation.

Amendments part of 'Build Texas' program

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Texas' leaders want to partially discard the state's pay-as-you-go spending tradition by asking voters to approve the sale of nearly $2 billion in bonds for a variety of public and private projects.

Five of the 25 proposed constitutional amendments on the Tuesday ballot would authorize the state to issue up to $1.9 billion in general obligation bonds to pay for mental health facilities, prisons, public works and water projects, and agricultural development.

The bonds also would be used to help lure the federal government's proposed $4.4 billion atom smasher, the superconducting supercollider, if the research project comes to Texas.

The five propositions are among the constitutional amendments proposed in Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's "Build Texas" package, an ambitious program aimed at pulling the Texas economy out of its oil-riddled recession.

The bonds are necessary to help the state diversify and attract new industry, Hobby says.

"The Build Texas program is aimed directly at making Texas a better competitor," Hobby says. "The quality of life and our attractiveness as a state depend directly on the quality of our highways, our water and wastewater systems, our airports, our libraries and our parks."

Bernard Weinstein, an economist at Southern Methodist University, estimates the Build Texas program would provide more than 50,000 jobs.

The general obligation bonds would be the state's responsibility and would sell at a lower interest rate because they are backed by future state revenues. Repayment of the bonds would have first claim on state revenues.

Comptroller Bob Bullock has expressed concern over the amount of bond money being proposed, noting that the state already has an outstanding debt of more than $6 billion.

Following is a summary of the proposals, all of which involve general obligation bonds:

Proposition 6 would authorize the Legislature to issue up to $125 million in bonds to develop Texas products, provide venture capital for small businesses and help in agricultural production.

Proposition 7 would authorize up to $400 million in bonds for construction of local public works such as airports, parks, libraries, convention centers and jails.

Proposition 8 would authorize up to $500 million in bonds to help build or repair mental health and mental retardation facilities, prisons and correctional institutions for youths.

Five constitutional amendments deal with property taxes

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — When most state legislatures want to make changes in the tax code, they pass a law. But when Texas lawmakers want to change the way property taxes are collected, usually they must take it to the voters.

On Tuesday, Texans will vote on five proposed constitutional amendments that deal with property tax exemptions and increases. A clause in the 111-year-old Texas Constitution requires the popular vote.

"The Legislature shall not, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, pass any local or special law authorizing...exempting property from taxation." Another part of the Constitution says: "All real property and tangible personal property in this State...shall be taxed in proportion to its value."

Four of the proposed constitutional amendments on the lengthy ballot would exempt certain items from ad valorem taxes, which help finance county and city government, school districts and a host of special entities, such as water districts.

Proposition 11 on the ballot would restore the so-called Free Port exemption, which the courts recently found unconstitutional. For years, a state law exempted from property taxes many goods that were in the state for assembly, processing or temporary storage. But the courts said the exemption requires a constitutional change to be legal.

Under the proposed amendment, "goods in transit" would not be taxed if they remain in the state for 175 days or less. Oil, gas and other petroleum products would still be taxed.

Proponents say the exemption is needed because all of the states surrounding Texas give some sort of tax relief on goods kept in the state temporarily. "The bottom line is, are we going to be able to be competitive with the rest of the states," said Rep. Hugo Berlanga, D-Corpus Christi and the sponsor of the amendment.

Opponents say the tax break puts the squeeze on cities, counties and school districts that rely on the tax money earned from goods in the state temporarily for assembly or storage.

A clause in the amendment allows counties, on a local-option basis, to continue taxing goods in transit.

Undercover agents say drug cases 'especially dangerous'

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Four Midland "narcs" talked frankly about the everyday risks they face as hundreds recently mourned the death last month of a 21-year-old undercover North Texas narcotics officer whose cover was blown.

In a small city cemetery 30 miles south of Dallas, a funeral was held for George Raffield Jr., a Midlothian police officer who was slain Oct. 23.

Midlothian police have said Raffield was killed after two high school students, ages 16 and 17, discovered he was not a fellow student named William Moore, but an operative assigned to investigate drug use at the school.

Raffield was found dead the next day in a grassy field eight miles south of Midlothian. He had been shot twice in the head with a .38-caliber revolver, lawmen said.

The two suspects have been charged with capital murder and are in custody.

While the four Midland lawmen were reluctant to be interviewed for fear of their cover, they consented on condition that their names be withheld.

Two of the officers work undercover for the Midland Police Department, and two for the Midland County Sheriff's office.

Lawmen go undercover to buy drugs from people they hope to put out of business. It is a seedy, unsafe, lonely world, but it is the only time the law and the dope seller are "on equal footing," as one officer put it.

Officers here who had heard about the case said Raffield was working "deep undercover" — a long-term assignment where an officer actually takes on a new identity and infiltrates a club, a gang, or in this case, a school.

They remarked that the dangers faced in undercover situation are constant.

"You've got several people dealing here in town, that if you screw them, someone is going to come up missing," a Midland police officer, "Jack," said.

Jack and other officers agree that paranoia runs rampant among drug smugglers. They're scared about cops, about being "ripped off," about the next "score" — and that makes dealing with them especially dangerous, the officers say.

"I'm going to control the situation in a buy," sheriff's officer "Wayne" said. "Any dope deal, no matter how simple and easy, can turn around and go crazy at the drop of a hat.

"Ninety percent of dope deals don't go according to the plan. Planning is the number one thing in a dope deal."

Wayne came to the sheriff's office in 1986, and worked six months in deep undercover before anyone but Sheriff Gary Painter knew who he was. During that period — when he was bushy-bearded and sported shoulder-length hair — he and a part-time officer worked on heroin, speed, cocaine, marijuana, and LSD cases that resulted in 72 grand jury indictments.

"They were mostly hand-to-hand deliveries, some inside, some outside of the nightclubs around here," Wayne said. "It's a very scary situation. A very, very deep undercover operation should only be handled by a very experienced officer."

Monday not so blue for Wall Street traders

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street wavered uncertainly today after two blue Mondays in a row as the Dow Jones industrial average fell a marginal 0.83 points in the first 1½ hours.

The Dow industrials fell 508 points two Mondays ago in the worst decline in history and lost 156.83 points last Monday.

The dollar was off again today in New York, near postwar lows, raising the prospect of instability that could frighten away foreign investors, push up inflation in the United States and hurt economic growth overseas.

But the dollar's decline was not as sharp as it had been over past weekends and traders seemed unalarmed, said Larry Ryan, foreign exchange manager for European American Bank in New York.

"We're in uncharted waters here," Ryan said.

The Dow average fell 26 points in the opening minutes of trading today, then recovered. The Dow briefly rose 7 points ahead of last Friday's level, breaking the 2,000 barrier, before receding to 0.83 points below last Friday's level at 1,992.70.

The New York Stock Exchange opened as usual today in spite of a strike threat by clerks, whose contract expired this past weekend, said Richard Torrenzano, an NYSE spokesman. Talks broke off shortly before 3 a.m. and were to resume later in the day, said federal mediator Pat Hart.

As trading resumed overseas, prices gained slightly on the Tokyo Stock Exchange, while the dollar closed near a record low against the Japanese yen and fell against other currencies in Europe.

The dollar's drop affected early domestic trading in the bond market, where prices declined slightly and interest rates rose. Bonds have been particularly sensitive to weakness in the dollar because it can discourage foreign investors from buying U.S. debt securities.

The Tokyo Stock Exchange's Nikkei index rose a fraction of 1 percent today following a 2.5 percent rise in Saturday's half session. The Hong Kong Stock Exchange's Hang Seng index fell 1.6 percent.

Share prices opened lower on the London stock exchange this morning but partly recouped later. By early afternoon, the key Financial Times 100-share index was off less than 1 percent.

The dollar fell 0.97 yen against the Japanese currency despite heavy central bank intervention, closing at a near record low of 137.58 yen compared with Friday's close of 138.55 yen.

Today in New York the dollar was bid at 137.42 yen, flirting with its lowest levels since the establishment of modern exchange rates in the late 1940s. The dollar was down to 1.7178 West German marks in New York from 1.7290 late Friday.

The Dow Jones industrial average finished strongly last week, rising nearly 200 points, or 11 percent, in the last four sessions to close at 1,993.53.

Despite last week's strong finish, the value of stocks in the market as of Friday's close remained $656 billion below its peak of Aug. 25, as measured by Wilshire Associates, and the Dow was down nearly 730 points, or 27 percent, from its late-August peak.

On Saturday, traders worked about three hours at the New York Stock Exchange to catch up on paperwork from the unprecedented volume of trading since the Oct. 19 selloff.

Nonetheless, the NYSE and other exchanges, which operated with trading days that ended at 2 p.m. last week, probably will not resume their regular trading hours of 9:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. until Nov. 9.

But the NYSE, the American Stock Exchange and the over-the-counter market plan to get back to normal gradually by remaining open until 2:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday this week and until 3 p.m. Thursday and Friday.

Chicago's major futures and options exchanges said Friday they would follow the NYSE in phasing in normal hours for trading securities based on the stock market, such as stock index futures and stock options.

Torrenzano, an NYSE spokesman, said exchange officials feel "it's better to take a stepped approach so that operations continue to go smoothly."

He said that "assuming no unusual or significant market activity" this week, the NYSE should "begin to gear up to normal operations next Monday."

He said he had nothing to report about contract negotiations for about 1,300 clerks, pages and transaction reporters who work on the floor of the NYSE, at the New York Futures Exchange or at Securities Industry Automation Corp., a computer support concern.

"We have people in place to make sure the exchange can operate," he said.

Gorbachev blasts party critics as 'timid, impatient'

Gorbachev

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev today blasted his critics in the Communist Party leadership as too timid or too impatient and called for a moderate but determined course in rebuildng Soviet society.

In a nationally televised address marking the 70th anniversary of the revolution that brought the Communists to power, Gorbachev accused Josef V. Stalin of "enormous and unforgiveable" crimes and announced formation of a commission to resume the rehabilitation of Stalin's victims.

Under Stalin, who ruled the Soviet Union from 1924 until his death in 1953, millions perished in the forced collectivization of agriculture or were shot or sent to labor camps as "enemies of the people."

Gorbachev also pledged to search for a "palpable breakthrough" on long-range, or strategic, nuclear forces and space weapons when he goes to Washington next month to sign a treaty banning intermediate-range nuclear missiles.

The 56-year-old Communist Party chief praised the U.S.-Soviet agreement now at hand, but said it was agreed to in general terms during the second Reagan-Gorbachev summit in Iceland a year ago.

"The world expects the third and fourth Soviet-U.S. summits to produce more than merely an official acknowledgement of the decision agreed upon a year ago, and more than merely continuation of the discussion," he said. "That is why we will work unremittingly at these meeting for a palpable breakthrough, for concrete results in reducing strategic offensive armaments and barring weapons from outer space — the key to removing the nuclear threat."

His reference to a fourth summit indicated he expects Reagan to visit Moscow next year.

Gorbachev's two-hour, 41-minute speech to an assembly of Soviet and international socialist figures was his first appearance since the disclosure last week that Moscow party boss Boris N. Yeltsin had offered to resign Oct. 21 over the slow pace of Gorbachev's economic and social reforms.

The 56-year-old Yeltsin, a non-voting member of the ruling Politburo, has been among the most outspoken supporters of "perestroika," Gorbachev's program to restructure the Soviet state-run economy and society as a whole.

In an apparent reference to the dispute, Gorbachev said a taste for independence and responsibility should be inculcated in people who are hesitant about reform.

"Nor should we succumb to the pressure of the overly zealous and impatient," Gorbachev said. "It should be clear that one cannot leap over essential stages and try to accomplish everything at one go."

The party general secretary said the truth about Stalin had to be known.

"It is sometimes said that Stalin did not know of...the lawlessness," Gorbachev said. "Documents at our disposal show that this is not so.

"This is something we have to do," he said of re-examining Stalin's rule. "Even now, there are some attempts to turn away from painful matters...To make believe that nothing special happened.

"We cannot approve of this," Gorbachev continued. "This would be disrespect for the historical truth, disrespect to the memory of those who were innocent victims of the lawless and arbritrary actions."

In line with a Central Committee decision last month, Gorbachev said, the Politburo had set up a commission to re-examine Stalinism and that its findings wuld be taken into account by a special commission writing a new treatise on the history of the party.

Under the policy of "glasnost" or openness, instituted since Gorbachev rose to power in March 1985, Soviet historians have been cautiously re-examining the Stalin era.

Gorbachev's comments, however, indicated that any renewed campaign for destalinization under his rule would have definite limits.

He called Stalin "an extremely contradictory personality," though the dictator had made an "incontestable contribution to the struggle for socialism."

The breakneck industrialization policy pursued in the 1930s transformed the Soviet Union into a "truly great industrial power" by the end of the decade, Gorbachev said. "No other course could be taken."

Gorbachev said "excesses" had marred the elimination of private farming and the forced collectivization of agriculture that began in the late 1920s, but that it was "in the final analysis a transformation of great importance."

He indicated some of Stalin's victims were not entitled to rehabilitation. Leon Trotsky, Stalin's arch-foe who was murdered in exile in 1940, was an "excessively self-assured politician who always vacillated and cheated," Gorbachev said, quoting what he said was a judgment of Vladimir I. Lenin, founder of the Soviet state.

Gorbachev said orthodox Communists led by Stalin "safeguarded Leninism" in the 1920s from the mistakes of opponents, such as Trotsky, Grigory Zinoviev and Lev Kamenev.

He said Nikolai Bukharin, a foe of Stalin executed in 1938, failed to realize the need for rapid collectivization of the farms and industrialization of the cities.

Gorbachev spoke in the 6,000-seat palace of congresses, a modern glass-and-marble auditorium just inside the Kremlin wall.

In the audience were the 300-plus members of the Central Committee, 1,500 members of the Supreme Soviet, the nation's nominal parliament.

The address was broadcast live on state-run television, and the international services of official Radio Moscow broadcast a simultaneous translation in English and other foreign languages.

At 10 a.m., the hall erupted with applause as Gorbachev led the 12 other members of the ruling Politburo to their crimson-upholstered seats in front of a giant white marble statue of Lenin.

Those seated in the hall, including party and government officials from the Soviet Union's East bloc allies, listened in silence to Gorbachev's condemnation of Stalin, then applauded briefly.

In contrast, Soviet television showed them clapping loudly when Gorbachev lauded the successes of Stalin's industrialization and collectivization drives.

The speech marked the kickoff of weeklong festivities celebrating the Russian Revolution.

GINSBURG

However, because Rogers ultimately might benefit from the ruling, they said Ginsburg may have violated a presidential order forbidding actions which might create the appearance of a conflict of interest or of favoritism.

Legal experts speculate that among possible outcomes from the pending trial and subsequent appeal could be reductions in licensing fees, reopening some lucrative markets with existing exclusive franchises to competition, and allowing existing franchises to get out of agreements defining what programming they must carry and requiring them to serve unprofitable areas of a city.

On the other hand, companies with existing licenses might face new competition.

In any case, the ethics experts said Ginsburg should have consulted agency ethics officers for a ruling on whether he could participate in the case.

Justice Department regulations provide that where disqualification questions arise at Ginsburg's level, they should be referred to the deputy attorney general for a written ruling.

Toronto-based Rogers Communications has about 450,000 subscribers in Arizona, California, Minnesota, New Mexico, Oregon and Texas. The company is about the 20th largest cable operator in the United States, and when its extensive Canadian franchises are included, it ranks as the third or fourth largest cable operator in North America, according to company officials.

The Reagan administration's brief came in a suit involving the city of Los Angeles and Preferred Communications Inc., a cable operator.

"I was a principal participant in determining the government's position and supervised the drafting of our brief," Ginsburg has said of the cable brief.

The brief was signed by Ginsburg, Solicitor General Charles Fried and Jack D. Smith, then general counsel to the Federal Communications Commission. Fried and Smith said they were unaware that Ginsburg owned cable television interests.

Financial statements filed by Ginsburg show that at least as early as 1985 and continuing at least until Sept. 17, 1986, Ginsburg's largest investment, other than real estate, was in Rogers Communications. Ginsburg's only other stock investment was listed as less than $1,000 worth of shares in Charriott Resourses, a Canadian oil and gas drilling venture.

Last May 17, undercover officers conducted what Wayne described as a "damn near perfect" operation that resulted in the arrest of two men for attempting to buy 82 pounds of marijuana. But the deal almost was killed the previous evening, Wayne said.

"The night before, I saw a woman I know at a club," he said. "And she was with the guy I had been talking to about the dope. She kept looking at me, and I thought she was going to come over. See, she knows I'm a cop.

"I finished my drink and walked out. But I kept thinking about it, wondering if he knew, if he had seen me and she had told him."

The first time Wayne's partner "Billy," made an undercover drug buy, "I didn't think it was dope. I thought I got ripped off." However, the substance proved to be marijuana.

"You think about it (the Raffield murder) "and you think that it might be you," he said. "You've really got to watch yourself — always."

Because Midland undercover police officers have made about 30 drug buys in the last 60 days, a mention of the Raffield case — and the young age of the two suspects — elicits a quick response and a shake of the head from Jack, who has worked the streets for the last 18 months.

"We've got guys right now who are in their late teens — early 20s — who are big-time drug dealers," he said. "A lot of these guys, they think they are invincible. They think nothing is going to happen to them.

"A while back, patrol stopped some guys, and they were young. And they had an Uzi (Israeli-made firearm).

"And the high-level dopers — they can get these kids to do anything they want."

"Blake," who heads the police undercover effort, said working in a school, as Raffield was attempting to do, poses a special set of problems.

"It would be very difficult, because of the long-term aspect of it," he said.

"We go after the sources that are supplying the narcotics that are getting in the school system, but we try to avoid actual infiltration of the schools," he said.

"But that doesn't mean we won't ever do it."

TAXES

Ken King, a lobbyist with the Texas Association of Counties, said his organization will advise counties to continue taxing those goods if the amendment passes.

"Somebody's got to make up the lost revenue, and it's going to be the taxpayer," King said.

Berlanga also carried another proposed constitutional change, which will appear on the ballot as Proposition 10. The amendment would exempt from property taxes personal property not used to earn income. In practice, the exemption would be used for pleasure boats, recreational vehicles and private airplanes not used for business.

Supporters say most taxing units don't tax personal property anyway. "The average cost of a pleasure boat in Texas is only $2,500," Berlanga said. "It costs more to administer the tax than it brings in."

Berlanga's home county of Nueces and other coastal areas, especially Aransas County, have the most to lose. But this amendment also allow counties to hold a local-option election to keep personal property like boats on the tax rolls.

Proposition 20 would exempt from property taxes idle oil rigs in storage. This amendment would most affect Jefferson County and other areas near the coast.

Rep. Mark Stiles, a Beaumont Democrat who sponsored the proposed amendment, says oil rig storage companies shun Texas because of the high taxes. Drillers store their rigs out in federal waters or in Louisiana and other states with no or low taxes on idle rigs.

Under current law, taxes on a stored rig cost between $30,000 and $50,000 a year. "It should be considered an economic development issue," Stiles says. Any money lost by taxing entities would be made up in new business created in the rig storage industry, he says.

Opponents call it a selective exemption that could raise taxes on homes and non-exempt businesses. Also, they say, idle rigs shouldn't be exempt while other nonprofitable business inventories are taxed.

Proposition 3 would freeze school district taxes for people over 55 when their spouse dies. Current law prohibits increases in school taxes on a person's primary residence when they reach 65 years of age. Taxes on an elderly person's home can be raised if the person makes improvements to the residence or sells it.

Rep. Stan Schlueter, sponsor of the proposed amendment, says often a person's spouse dies and the surviving spouse must sell the house because the taxes are too high. Schlueter, D-Killeen, says the amendment will help people on a fixed income make ends meet.

Opponents argue that the exemption should be granted only to people who really need it. A wealthy person whose spouse dies should not receive a tax break, they say.

The last proposed amendment that deals with property taxes is Proposition 2. The amendment would allow rural fire prevention districts located in heavily populated areas to increase property taxes from the current limit of 3 cents per $100 valuation to 6 cents.

Local voters would have to approve the tax increase. Only rural fire prevention districts located wholly or partly in a county with more than 400,000 people would be allowed to have the six-cent rate.

BUILD

Proposition 19 would authorize up to $500 million in bonds to help bring to Texas the superconducting supercollider, a massive atom smasher the federal government wants to build to study gravity, radiation and the binding together of matter. The state would issue the bonds only if Texas wins the supercollider, which 25 other states also are vying for.

Supporters say the project would be a major economic boon to the state that gets it, creating thousands of jobs and attracting high-tech industry and research facilities. Opponents, however, question the practical application of the project. In any event, they say, the state can't afford to woo the project, in that it already has enough trouble paying for minimum state services.

Proposition 23 would authorize $400 million in bonds for the construction of water supply, water quality and flood control projects.

A related amendment proposed on Tuesday's ballot, Proposition 4, would allow the state to make loans and grants to help private businesses. The proposal, a companion to Proposition 6, would end more than a century's constitutional history that prohibited any use of public money for private enterprise.

Advocates say the proposed amendment would help stimulate and diversify the state's economy, increasing tax revenues and reducing unemployment. But opponents point to the historical prohibition and argue that public funds should never be used to support an enterprise with the sole purpose of providing a profit for private business.

Girl 'looks good' after five-organ transplant

PITTSBURGH (AP) — A 3-year-old girl who had been near death "looks good" after a five-organ transplant operation, and began moving her limbs today as she awakened from the experimental surgery, officials said.

"What her prognosis is now, it's almost impossible to say because I think we're on uncharted ground now," Dr. Marc Rowe, chief surgeon at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh, said Sunday after the nearly 15-hour operation on Tabatha Foster of Madisonville, Ky.

"Tabatha is doing very well now, taking into consideration that she's had a very large operation that went into the night," Rowe said. "She looks good."

The toddler, who has been in hospitals for all but two months of her life and has never eaten solid food, received a liver, pancreas, small intestine and parts of a stomach and colon during the surgery, which ended Sunday afternoon.

She was born with short gut syndrome, a deadly condition in which her twisted intestines interfered with blood circulation.

"She really had nowhere to go," Rowe said. "This child was at the end of the line."

Tabatha was in the intensive care unit today in critical condition, normal following transplants, said Lynn McMahon, a hospital spokeswoman.

"Tabatha had a very restful night," Ms. McMahon said. "She has regained consciousness since surgery. However, doctors are keeping her sedated so she can rest."

The girl began moving her limbs today as she awakened from surgery, and doctors were watching her closely for signs of rejection and to ensure that the organs were functioning properly, the hospital said.

"The first 72 hours are critical," the spokeswoman said.

Tabatha's parents, Sandra and Roy Foster, had seen Tabatha after the surgery and described her as looking great, according to Sue Cardillo, another Children's spokeswoman.

"They feel very good about everything. I think they are just kind of exhaling now," she said.

Surgeons removed Tabatha's spleen, which acts as a blood filter and can trigger rejections of transplanted organs, said Rowe.

In 1968, Children's Hospital's Dr. Thomas Starzl developed the multiple-organ transplant procedure, said Rowe, who watched Starzl and seven other surgeons perform the weekend operation and acted their spokesman.

Similar transplants have been performed only twice, at Children's in 1983 and at Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center in Chicago last year, but the patients died, said Ms. Cardillo. Recent advances in organ transplantation might mean success in this case, hospital officials said.

"There are risks involved technically in terms of making the connections with the transplanted organs to the recipients and there are dangers associated with rejection," Ms. McMahon said. "Since this procedure hasn't been done many times before, physicians themselves aren't sure what all the risks might be."

Although Tabatha needed only a small intestine and liver, it was easier also to transplant the pancreas and part of the stomach and colon, Ms. McMahon said.

Giving the five organs to one child did not raise ethical questions because only livers routinely are transplanted in children, she said.

"It would have been a question of saving one child who needed an organ or one child who needed five organs," she said.

Two days after Tabatha's birth, surgeons removed much of her small intestine, Ms. McMahon said.

The operation corrected the blood flow problem but prevented her from eating solid food, forcing her to rely on a nutritious liquid that in turn led to liver disease, Ms. McMahon said.

Ginsburg's wife did perform abortions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court nominee Douglas H. Ginsburg's wife performed abortions while a medical resident, but later decided "she did not want to do that any more."

A Justice Department spokesman confirmed over the weekend that Dr. Hallee Perkins Morgan, wife of the Supreme Court nominee, performed abortions during medical training at Beth Israel Hospital in Boston.

Terry Eastland, the spokesman, said she performed the procedures during her first year of residency in 1979-80 and agreed during the next year of training to assist on particularly difficult abortions. She has performed none since then, he said.

"She, like a number of doctors who have performed abortions, from her own experience, became persuaded that she did not want to do that any more," said Eastland.

Dr. Morgan currently is a full-time mother and is not practicing medicine, but Eastland said he did not know if she now opposes abortions.

W. Stephen Cannon, a Washington attorney who is serving as Ginsburg's unofficial spokesman, also confirmed a report in Sunday's editions of the Wilmington (Del.) Sunday News Journal that Dr. Morgan had performed abortions.

Cannon and Eastland both said they were unaware of Ginsburg's position on abortion.

The medical experience of Ginsburg's wife, said Eastland, is irrelevant to the nominee's qualifications for the Supreme Court and the spokesman doubted it would become an issue as the Senate debates whether to confirm Ginsburg to the court.

"I don't think it will, nor do I think it should," he said. "Let's bear in mind that the nominee is Doug Ginsburg, not Hallee. Certainly a professional woman can have her own view on a matter and one should distinguish those from the husband's."

Ginsburg married Dr. Morgan in May 1981 after he was divorced from his first wife in May 1979. The Ginsburgs have a 2-year-old daughter named Hallee Katherine Morgan.

Ted Kaufman, chief of staff for Senate Judiciary Committee chairman Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said he did not know if abortion would be raised as an issue in Ginsburg's confirmation hearings before the committee. Efforts to reach others associated with the committee were unsuccessful on Sunday.

From her Chicago-area home, Phyllis Schlafly, president of the conservative, anti-abortion Eagle Forum, said in a telephone interview that she was surprised to learn that the nominee's wife had performed abortions and said she was concerned that nothing is known of Ginsburg's position on the subject.

Asked if abortion might become an issue in the nomination process, Mrs. Schlafly said, "I don't know. You saw at the Bork nomination all kinds of things had a bearing, including what videotapes his family checked out." The Senate defeated federal Judge Robert Bork's nomination on Oct. 23.

Ginsburg's nomination is supported by the National Right-To-Life committee, according to committee president Jack Willke.

Willke said Saturday that the support is based on secondhand information from Ginsburg's associates. He said the committee cannot question candidates for judicial posts on their opinions about abortion the same way they question political candidates.

President Reagan nominated Ginsburg last Thursday to fill the seat of retired Justice Lewis Powell.

Group concerned over high-rate of C-sections

WASHINGTON (AP) — A public interest health group said today that approximately 455,000 babies were delivered by Caesarean section unnecessarily during 1986 in the United States despite heightened risk to the health of the mother.

Public Citizen Health Research Group, which is affiliated with the Ralph Nader organization, based its calculation on a finding that 24 percent, or about 906,000, of the estimated 3.76 million births in 1986 were by Caesarean section compared with a study that suggests the optimum rate would be about 12 percent.

"The national C-section rate has more than quadrupled in the last 16 years, rising uncontrollably from a rate of 5.5 percent in 1970," said the report being issued at a news conference today. It was written by Craig Tanio, and Drs. Marc Manley and Sidney M. Wolfe.

"Legitimate concern has been voiced about the rapid increase in C-section rates in the U.S. because of the increased risks of death and illness to the mother, the higher costs involved and the higher psychological toll on the mother," it said.

Nonetheless, the report concluded, "statements of concern and conferences on this problem by medical professional organizations appear to have had no effect whatsoever."

It said the three most important medical causes contributing to the rapid rise in C-section deliveries are continued use of "the outdated policy" of automatic repeat C-section for women who already have had one, overdiagnosis and overuse of C-section for abnormal labor and overdiagnosis of fetal distress.

Another possible cause, though undocumented, is the threat of malpractice suits. "Although the influence of this issue is not certain, it should be clear that the way to solve the malpractice crisis in obstetrics is not by practicing bad medicine and doing more unnecessary C-sections," the report said.

It called for state legislation to require hospitals to tell maternity patients upon admission their rates of initial and C-section delivery and said obstetricians should be required to attempt seriously a "trial of labor" in patients who have had C-sections "as often as it medically indicated.

The report also said hospitals should require a mandatory second opinion prior to doing any C-section that is not an emergency and that government and private insurance plans should reimburse physicians for vaginal and C-section deliveries at the same rate to remove financial incentives for unnecessary C-sections.

If present trends continue, the Caesarean delivery rate will exceed 40 percent by the year 2000, the report said.

The private research group picked 12 percent as the acceptable national rate of C-section deliveries based on studies by Dr. E.J. Quilligan, dean of the school of medicine and former director of maternal-fetal medicine at the University of California, Irvine.

In addition to national figures, the study took a closer look at 10 states and the District of Columbia, focusing still further on Maryland because its 26.6 percent C-section rate was the highest of any state. Only the District of Columbia, with a 30.1 percent rate, was higher.

It found that the C-section rate in Maryland hospitals ranged from 12.4 percent to 42 percent. "Individual physicians' rates...covered an even broader range, from a C-section rate of zero to 54 percent.

"Variation in patient profiles can only account for a small portion of these variations in C-section rates," the study said. "Most of these variations must be accounted for by different policies among physicians and hospitals."

The report said it found that for the period 1980-85, the increased number of C-sections fell into four major medical categories: repeat C-sections; labor progressing abnormally, usually because the baby was too large; the baby was in distress, or the baby was positioned to come out from the pelvis feet first.

Here are the C-section rates for the other nine states for which separate figures were available: California 21.6 percent: Colorado, 20.6 percent: Florida, 24.8 percent; Iowa, 19.7 percent; Massachusetts, 24.3 percent; New Jersey, 23.6 percent; New York, 24.2 percent; Washington, 22.2 percent; and Wyoming, 18.5 percent.

Robertson uses old-time religion in Bible Belt

By BILL KACZOR

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — A church choir sang "The Star-Spangled Banner" — all four verses — and two soloists belted out "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" and "God Bless America."

As the final singer, Bruce Goodrich, hit stride at a recent rally here for Republican presidential hopeful Pat Robertson, an audience of at least 800 stood, some raising their arms in the air.

"Amen," exulted Goodrich. "It's great to be an American."

This mix of religion and patriotism has been a hallmark of the former television evangelist's campaign in Bible Belt areas of the South, helping him set up a formidable grassroots organization.

"He has put together a network that is giving the establishment cold chills," said state Rep. Dave Troxler, a Presbyterian and one of very few elected officials or mainline Republicans in Robertson's camp.

"Pat Robertson is going to have armies of people in the South," predicted Paul Houghton, an Alabama Republican who supports Rep. Jack Kemp of New York.

Robertson, a native Virginian, said, "I understand the South and the Southern style of politics and I do believe the next president will be the candidate who makes the strongest appeal to the South."

Any doubts about Robertson's political savvy have been erased by a string of surprising finishes. A coalition of Robertson and Kemp forces overwhelmed supporters of Vice President George Bush in August 1986 in Michigan's preliminary caucus contest. Robertson nearly upset Bush in precinct caucuses in South Carolina last June. He pulled off a stunning upset by winning a straw poll of Iowa GOP activists in September.

He'll try to duplicate that feat at the Florida GOP convention Nov. 13-14 in Orlando.

Troxler predicted Robertson will win at least 35 percent of the straw ballots while the candidate himself set a slightly lower goal, saying Bush has an edge because convention rules give seats to party leaders and elected officials.

"If the vice president gets any less than 70 percent of the delegates...he can consider he's lost," Robertson said recently in Tallahassee.

Bush's Florida campaign director, state Rep. Richard Crotty, said Robertson is trying to exaggerate expectations for the vice president, a ploy that would allow Robertson to claim a strategic victory even if Bush wins the straw poll.

The GOP establishment in Florida is firmly committed to Bush from Gov. Bob Martinez, national co-chairman of the Bush campaign, on down. The vice president's son, Jeb Bush, is Florida's commerce secretary.

Several other Republican candidates have decided to forgo the Orlando straw poll, claiming it is "a stacked deck" in favor of Bush.

The Robertson campaign strategy focuses on seven states, according to his Florida campaign director, David Zachem. Michigan, Iowa and New Hampshire — the three earliest tests of political strength in 1988. South Carolina, Florida and Texas — three key states in the South with early March tests. And California, at the end of the long primary calendar with its June 7 contest worth 175 delegates.

Robertson is building an organization from the ground up, largely ignoring and being ignored by longtime party activists.

"By and large most of the people in the campaign here locally are novices in politics...(and) church people," said H.W. "Rusty" Powers, a Pensacola insurance agent getting his first taste of politics as Robertson's campaign coordinator in Escambia County.

A member of Liberty Church, a charismatic non-denominational faith, Powers said he first knew of Robertson by watching his "700 Club" television show. He said the Robertson campaign has "helped awaken a group of people who had kind of given the political field to others."

Troxler compared the Robertson campaign to that of former President Carter who received the first major boost in his drive for the Democratic nomination in 1976 by winning the Florida primary.

Scores of volunteers for the former Georgia governor traveled to Florida and other states to aid his campaign. Troxler sees a similar use of volunteers from the religious right by Robertson.

"They might not know the ins and outs of hardball politics but they are learning," Troxler said. "If they are willing to go door to door and they are willing to make phone calls I will take 100 dedicated workers any day over $100,000."

The Carter comparison also was made by Ken Connor, a Tallahassee lawyer, former chairman of the Florida Ethics Commission and evangelical Christian, who introduced Robertson at the rally here.

"I'm not a political insider," Connor said. "Jimmy Carter won without political insiders."

DLC has mixed success in 'centering' Democrats

WASHINGTON (AP) — When the Democratic Leadership Council set up shop in the wake of President Reagan's landslide re-election victory in 1984, its founders described it as a "way station" for Democratic elected officials disenchanted with the national party's tilt to the left.

From an initial membership of 40 governors, senators and members of Congress, the council has grown to encompass nearly 200 conservative and moderate Democratic elected officials, mostly from the South and West.

But while the membership gains have been impressive, Democratic political analysts say the council's success in moving the national party "back into the political mainstream" and de-emphasizing the role of party activists in the presidential selection process has been mixed at best.

"They've at a minimum been successful in getting their agenda in the dialogue (of the presidential campaign)," says Carter Eskew, a Washington-based consultant who helped manage the campaigns of several Southern Democrats who upset incumbent Republican senators in 1986.

"Whether they will be successful in having Super Tuesday completely reorient the presidential selection process, it's too early to tell," he said in an interview last week. "The early returns look as if Iowa and New Hampshire still loom as awfully important in that selection process."

The council has focused its attention on Super Tuesday, next March 8, when 20 states, mostly in the South, hold primaries or caucuses to choose more than 1,300 of the 4,160 delegates to the Democratic National Convention.

Former Virginia Gov. Charles Robb, chairman of the DLC, said the council has been trying, through a series of debates and issues forums in the South, to force the candidates to address broad national issues, rather than focusing solely on the special interest agendas of Iowa and New Hampshire activists.

That strategy, Robb said, is aimed at recapturing the South's "swing voters," the white, mostly conservative bloc that traditionally has supported local Democratic candidates — including many DLC members — but has voted Republican in recent presidential elections.

Juda Tyrnauer, 26, a Hasidic Jew from Monroe, N.Y., pumps diesel fuel at his kosher truck stop along Route 17 in Mahway, N.J., Thursday.

Truck-stop's owner lures customers with Orthodox approach

MAHWAH, N.J. (AP) — Juda Tyrnauer's truck stop offers plenty of gasoline, a hearty meal, new tires — and kosher snacks.

Tyrnauer says he began selling kosher snack food at his International Motor Plaza along busy Route 17 near the New York State border because he saw Hasidic Jews like himself traveling the corridor to work and vacation spots.

"Now they have a place to stop by, take a little coffee, a little nosh," the 26-year-old Tyrnauer said last week.

He has stocked a small shop next to his gas pumps with kosher soda, milk, cookies, potato chips, peanuts and ice cream.

But his trucker patrons do not go wanting.

"This is a business and service is the most important thing in the trucking industry," said Tyrnauer, who once owned two jewelry stores but gave them up when a friend asked him to join in a truck stop business in Jersey City.

Tyrnauer said he also sold diesel fuel wholesale until about two years ago, when he bought the truck stop here.

Tyrnauer, of Monroe, N.Y., said many of the region's Orthodox Jewish residents work in New York City and travel the Route 17 corridor daily.

In the summer, many Jewish families from New York City travel past his truck stop at the foot of the Ramapo Mountains on their way to weekend getaways in the Catskills.

"It's become a regular thing to stop with the family and take a little something, coffee and a nosh," particularly in the summer, he said.

For the trucker, Tyrnauer's 24-hour truck stop has the usual tire store, showers and a restaurant, where non-kosher food such as ham and cheese sandwiches are on the menu.

Tyrnauer said he likes the business because he meets people and because he likes to give the truckers service. "When you give service, you're able to make money," he said.

He recalled getting some advice recently from one trucker who made suggestions on how Tyrnauer could improve his windshield-washing solution. Another trucker said a gas pump was slow, and Tyrnauer set about to solve the problem.

John Tellier, a trucker from Woonsocket, Maine, is one of Tyrnauer's regulars, stopping three times a week.

"I stop for the food. It's real good here," said Tellier, who had just finished a dinner of spaghetti and meatballs.

Tellier said the truck stop is handy, and that it is one of the few in the area that offers services for truckers, such as truck service, showers, tires and food.

Tellier told Tyrnauer he should open a "gift shop," where truckers can buy items like soap and medication.

Tyrnauer said he plans to open one soon, and has plans for further expansion. He said he wants to open a motel for truckers and another kosher convenience store nearby on Route 17.

"This is very important — to have a place for all people to get everything they need," he said.

1787 Constitution Daybook

Associated Press

Friday, Nov. 2, 1787

PHILADELPHIA TODAY

The members of the American Philosophical Society received very encouraging news at their meeting today. The society's president, Benjamin Franklin, said he would donate an additional 100 pounds to the building fund for the new headquarters on the State House Square. Further, he offered to loan more money at the going rate of interest to assure the project's completion.

For several weeks there had been no activity on the Society's building. The construction budget was exhausted, and the members were trying to find an infusion of capital. Franklin's generous donation and loan were welcome indeed.

CONFEDERATION TODAY

Henry Knox, the secretary of war, wrote a letter of introduction for the Marquis de Chappedelaine, an officer in the French army. The Marquis wanted the letter as an entree to George Washington at Mount Vernon. (The Marquis arrived at the general's plantation on Feb. 13, 1788, and stayed for two days.)

William Samuel Johnson arrived at his house in Stratford, Conn., today. He had been attending the state's General Assembly meeting in New Haven. His visit was brief, however, for within a couple of days he would leave for New York.

RATIFICATION TODAY

The New York Daily Advertiser reported that New Jersey had passed a resolution the week before, calling for a convention to consider the new Constitution.

The Philadelphia Independent Gazetteer printed an article today under the title of "Foreigner I." The Pennsylvania Herald had rejected the same article three days earlier because the editors thought it was "written so inaccurately, that we cannot decypher the author's meaning." Even after 200 years, it was still difficult to understand the author's intentions. His purpose appeared to be to persuade the anti-Federalists that their efforts were not guided by reality. American trade had suffered under the present political system and its only hope for survival would come only by a stronger new government.

DELEGATES TODAY

The famous (or infamous) French doctor J.I. Guillotin wrote Benjamin Franklin. The letter was a simple introduction for two Frenchmen — a Mr. Saugrain and a Mr. Picque — who were sailing to the United States. (Guillotin's execution machine was not yet in use; it would first be employed in 1789.)

Another gentleman, who simply referred to himself as "Pilot," sent the description of a "variation globe" to Franklin and the members of the American Philosophical Society. His device could mathematically figure the magnetic variations in compass readings between the North and South poles and the Equator. He hoped to win the Society's award for the most useful invention.

LOOKING BACK

The Port of Philadelphia

The gentleman writing the article under the pseudonym "Foreigner I" was not very clear in the purpose of his message. However, he was clear in one area — that the United States needed a stronger government to encourage shipping. Perhaps he had some knowledge of the state of Philadelphia's port. The number of ships visiting the harbor had dropped dramatically in the past two years. In 1785, 692 vessels used the port; that number decreased to 596 in 1786; it was diminishing to 565 in 1787.

In part, the Philadelphia harbor was continuing to suffer the ravages of the Revolutionary War. The Cape Henlopen lighthouse, at the mouth of the Delaware River, was in a serious state of disrepair; navigation buoys and beacons in the river had been removed during the war and not replaced afterward. Perhaps most seriously, stakes with iron points — chevaus-de-frise — which were planted in the river to hole ships, remained as hazards to post-war shipping. Pennsylvania had engaged in a fairly comprehensive port improvement program to improve these problems, but the desired result of these activities — more shipping — was not happening.

At the base of the port's problems were issues that improvements could not help. First, shippers did not like to use the Delaware River entrance. Navigating the river was difficult, and it often was icebound during much of the winter. Less than 20 ships visited the port in December and January. Second, the demand for American-made products, goods manufactured in Philadelphia in particular, was almost nonexistent in Europe. And finally, Baltimore was replacing Philadelphia as a port city. Farmers found that shipping produce down the Susquehanna River was more economical than the overland route to Philadelphia and the Maryland port was more accessible and generally ice-free, making it more desirable for shippers.

Texas cited for good waste program

WASHINGTON (AP) — Four state programs to regulate underground disposal of hazardous chemical wastes meet or exceed government standards, but two run by the Environmental Protection Agency need improvement, a government report says.

The congressional General Accounting Office said Texas, Louisiana, Illinois and Oklahoma operated their Underground Injection Control programs properly in the 1985 and 1986 fiscal years.

However, the GAO report said the EPA's Region V office in Chicago failed to conduct required periodic inspections of waste wells in Michigan and Indiana, where the federal government has responsibility for the water-protection programs.

"The reason cited was higher priority work," the GAO said. "As a result, there is the potential that some wells may be operating that are not complying with program requirements."

Under the Safe Drinking Water Act of 1974, EPA and states given authority to administer its Underground Injection Control program regulate waste disposal in deep wells.

Sites for both hazardous and non-hazardous industrial and municipal wastes beneath the deepest sources of underground drinking water are regulated as Class I wells. Four other classes, such as wells oil producers use for waste disposal or oil recovery, are regulated separately.

Under the UIC programs, inspectors monitor wells for federal compliance by checking reports from operators, making periodic examinations and conducting mechanical integrity tests to see that wells are free of leaks.

The GAO, the investigative arm of Congress, said it could document only two instances in the United States where Class I wells had contaminated drinking water, one each in Texas and Louisiana.

NATION IN BRIEF

Abducted infant now home

BALTIMORE (AP) — An infant abducted from his mother's hospital bedside in June was reunited with his parents over the weekend after the arrest of a childless woman accused of snatching the newborn to please her boyfriend.

Four-month-old Kendol B. Kernes was found at a Philadelphia shelter for the homeless Friday with Dorothy Jean Brown, 44, of Randallstown. She was charged with kidnapping and held without bond for a hearing Wednesday, the FBI said.

Kendol's mother, Patricia Nixon, was reunited with the boy Saturday night, and said her ordeal was "like a nightmare." Asked what punishment she hoped for her child's abductor, she replied, "Give her the chair."

Authorities believe Ms. Brown, a Baltimore Museum of Art security guard, took the two-day old baby from a bassinet next to his sleeping mother at Johns Hopkins Hospital on June 18 to please her boyfriend.

Ms. Brown was unable to bear children herself, FBI agents said.

Her boyfriend, 31-year-old Anthony Gilmore, was being held on $100,000 bail as an accessory after the fact, police said.

Will bank run continue?

PARKERSBURG, W.Va. (AP) — A Magnet Bank executive Sunday said he expects a normal day today after a $3 million run on the bank by panicky depositors.

Magnet Bank reported withdrawals of $3 million in three hours Friday at its four Parkersburg offices after rumors spread that the branches would close.

Lines stretched outside at two of the smaller offices, said Magnet regional vice president Lawrence Burdette said. "I think you can definitely call it a customer panic," he said.

Magnet kept its Parkersburg branches open late Friday and extended the hours of several of them again on Saturday. Burdette said he would not know until today how many customers returned to redeposit their money.

Magnet, which has 23 branches in West Virginia, on Tuesday reported third-quarter losses of $3.7 million, and losses of $10.7 million on the year.

HINCKLEY, Ill. (AP) — Two skydivers accidentally dropped the pumpkin they were passing to each other while 2,000 feet in the air, and police said the gourd crashed through a roof and landed in a surprised resident's kitchen.

No one was injured in the incident, which occurred on Halloween. The skydivers were charged with reckless conduct, police said.

"If you consider a pumpkin from 2,200 feet, it's just like a bomb coming down," said DeKalb County Sheriff's Deputy Gregg Williams.

China's premier elected head of Communist Party

Zhao

BEIJING (AP) — Premier Zhao Ziyang became head of the Communist Party today, capping a major leadership reshuffle that swept younger, reform-minded officials into the top echelons of power.

Deng Xiaoping, who stepped down from three top party posts the day before, was reappointed chairman of the powerful Central Military Commission, clearly indicating he will wield great power as China's senior leader.

Zhao was named vice chairman of the military commission, a crucial move in his drive to solidify power.

Zhao, who also is premier, was elected general secretary of the party Central Committee. He has been acting party chief since January.

Zhao and four others were named to a younger and more reform-minded Politburo Standing Committee, the core decision-making group in the party, which answers to the Politburo.

The appointments were announced at the first session of the new 137-member Central Committee, formed Sunday at the closing session of the 13th National Party Congress.

Deng, 83, who on Sunday retired as head of the Standing Committee and the Central Advisory Commission and as a member of the Central Committee, considered his move to the sidelines a major victory. He managed to take with him into retirement every leading conservative who opposed the pace and scope of his market-oriented reforms and open-door policy.

Zhao denied there was opposition to the reforms, citing unanimous approval of his report on reforms to the 2,000-member Congress.

"Can you say there is a reform faction and a conservative faction in China?...In that case the two factions already have merged into one," he said at an informal party today with Chinese and foreign reporters.

The other four on the Standing Committee include vice premiers Li Peng, Qiao Shi and Yao Yilin and Hu Qili, a member of the party Secretariat.

The party also appointed 17 people to full membership in the Politburo, the main policy-making body of the party. They included seven new members, including younger leaders known as strong supporters of Deng's reforms.

Hu Yaobang, who was ousted as party leader last January for failing to stop pro-democracy student demonstrations, retained his seat on the Politburo in a comeback for the pro-reform politician.

But Hu did lose his seat on the Standing Committee. Zhao was expected to be named formally as general secretary of the party, succeeding Hu.

Others to leave the Standing Committee were Deng and two 82-year-old conservatives — President Li Xiannian and economist Chun Yun. Zhao, 68, was the only one retaining his seat.

Zhao (Ziyang) has said he is more comfortable with economics than ideology...certain to continue Deng's experiments with capitalist-style marketing practices...

The average age of the Standing Committee dropped from 77 to 63.

Zhao and Hu Qili, 58, are the most outspoken proponents of reform among the five. Qiao Shi, 62, and Yao Yilin, 70, have been less vocal on economic issues, while Li Peng has been said to put more faith in central planning than other Deng reformers.

Li, 59, a Soviet-trained engineer, is the top candidate to succeed Zhao if he gives up the premiership at the next meeting of the National People's Congress, China's Parliament, in the spring.

The new Politburo is dominated by Deng reformers. They include vice premiers Wan Li and Tian Jiyun and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian. Among the new faces are Li Ruihuan, the innovative mayor of Tianjin and Li Tieying, head of the Economic Restructuring Commission.

Other new members are Song Ping, head of the Organization Department of the Central Committee and minister of the State Planning Commission; Qin Jiwei, regional military commander of Beijing, and Li Ximing, party secretary of Beijing.

Among the aging revolutionaries who lost their posts on the Politburo were conservative Peng Zhen, 85-year-old chairman of the National People's Congress; Marxist ideologue Hu Qiaomu, 75; army Chief of Staff Yang Dezhi, 78, and Standing Committee members Li Xiannian and Chen Yun.

Chen Yun was named chairman of the Central Advisory Commission, a 200-member body of elders formed at the 12th Party Congress in 1982 to ease the transition of aging leaders from power.

Zhao, who has been premier since 1980, is a leading proponent of reforms that have doubled national incomes over the past few years and helped lift millions of Chinese out of poverty.

Zhao has said he is more comfortable with economics than ideology. He is certain to continue Deng's experiments with capitalist-style marketing practices and push ahead with efforts to reduce the role of party functionaries in the running of government and business.

Nearly 2,000 delegates gathered for the congress, the first in five years.

American peace activist Paul Alan Fisher (wearing striped shirt) walks with rebel forces through the jungle of Nicaragua's Zelaya province after the Contras released him Sunday. An official of the Witness for Peace group said Fisher arrived in Managua Sunday night. He had been kidnapped by the Contras more than two weeks ago.

U.S. peace activist arrives in Managua

WORLD

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — American peace activist Paul Alan Fisher was back in Managua today, more than two weeks after Contra rebels abducted him while he was investigating reports of rebel atrocities.

"He's tired but healthy," Ed Griffin Nolan, director of the Witness for Peace group in Managua, said after Fisher arrived in the capital Sunday night. "We're really relieved."

Fisher, 41, of Mill Valley, Calif., was freed Friday in the eastern province of Zelaya and walked through jungles and mountains toward the town of Rio Blanco, about 120 miles east of Managua.

Members of Witness for Peace, a religious group that opposes U.S. policies in Central America, had planned to meet him in Rio Blanco and drive him to Managua.

Nolan said he believed that plan had been followed but that he did not have complete details of Fisher's return to the capital.

Fisher was abducted Oct. 17 near the town of La Libertad, in central Chontales province, while investigating reports of alleged atrocities by the Contras, which are fighting the left-wing Sandinista government with U.S. aid.

He had been traveling through the countryside since April with a 32-member group that was checking purported human rights abuses by the Contras.

The main Contra umbrella group, the Nicaraguan Resistance, initially denied from its Miami headquarters that its members had seized Fisher.

But the U.S. State Department on Oct. 21 said it was working for Fisher's "safe, immediate release" from the Contras.

A person claiming to represent the Nicaraguan Resistance called The Associated Press in Managua Friday and said Fisher had been freed to a person he identified only as "Jaime" near Paiwas, a city 150 miles northeast of Managua and about 40 miles northeast of where he was captured.

Fisher's mother, Celia, said Friday night the State Department called her at her home in Cleveland Heights, Ohio, to report the release.

Mrs. Fisher said late Sunday evening she was relieved to hear of her son's safe arrival in Managua, but she had not yet been contacted either by her son or Witness for Peace.

"That's great. I've been worried this whole time. I've lost seven pounds," Mrs. Fisher said. "The State Department has been wonderful. They've been calling, and they've really been trying to keep me up to date."

Iran's Rafsanjani says U.N. 'cheating us'

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Iran will accept a U.N.-sponsored cease-fire with Iraq only after "a decisive blow on the battlefield," a top Iranian leader declared.

"In our talks with the United Nations, we have told them the solution for ending the war. But as the time goes on, it seems that they are unreliable and that they are cheating us," state-run Tehran television quoted Hashemi Rafsanjani, the powerful Parliament speaker, as saying Sunday.

Iraq and Iran said their warplanes flew more raids against each other's oil installations Sunday, and a senior Soviet diplomat was quoted as telling Iranian officials that the Soviets want U.S. warships out of the gulf.

Rafsanjani, speaking to students of a Tehran military college, made Iran's harshest criticism the United Nations to date.

"It is obvious that they (the United Nations) have ill intentions," the television reported him as saying.

"The work on the international forums will come after a decisive blow on the battlefield," Tehran radio quoted him as saying.

Iraq cannot be trusted, the official Islamic Republic News Agency quoted Rafsanjani as saying.

"We are mistaken if we expect them to observe justice," he was quoted as saying.

Earlier, Yuli Vorontsov, Soviet first deputy foreign minister, met with Iranian Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati in what was believed to be an attempt to get Iran to accept the U.N. cease-fire resolution.

Iraq has said it could accept the cease-fire plan, passed last summer. But Iran has refused to commit itself until an investigation brands Iraq the aggressor.

Tehran contends Iraq started the war Sept. 22, 1980, when it invaded western Iran. Iraq says Iran ignited the conflict Sept. 4 when it shelled Iraqi border areas.

IRNA said Vorontsov told Velayati the Soviet Union "wishes to see the Americans pull out (of the gulf) and their ugly acts discontinued."

The news agency quoted Vorontsov as saying Moscow regarded the U.S. "military buildup" in the gulf and its Oct. 19 bombardment of Iranian offshore oil platforms "a threat to world peace and security, worrying many countries."

The U.S. Navy attacked two platforms at the Rostam oil field, in the south-central gulf, in retaliation for an Iranian Silkworm missile attack Oct. 16 on the U.S.-flagged tanker Sea Isle City at Kuwait. Seventeen crew members and the American captain were wounded in the Iranian attack.

The official Iraqi News Agency, monitored in Cyprus, said Iraqi jets carried out "a destructive raid" on oil installations at Omidiyeh and at the Barkan oil fields in southwestern Iran, "setting them ablaze with clouds of smoke rising from them."

It said Iraqi long-range artillery shelled the southwestern cities of Abadan and Khorramshahr on the disputed Shatt al-Arab waterway.

IRNA quoted officials as confirming the raids on Omidiyeh, in Khuzestan province adjoining southern Iraq. It said they hit a "non-military" area and caused damage but no casualties.

It said Iranian warplanes retaliated about five hours later with attacks on Iraq's Ain al-Zala oil complex northeast of Mosul. The raids caused "extensive damage," IRNA said.

Poll shows many Soviets favor disarmament

MOSCOW (AP) — A vast majority of Soviets favor eliminating nuclear weapons from Europe, but a sizeable minority fear such disarmament may be dangerous for their country, according to an opinion poll.

The survey, conducted by the French polling organization Ipsos from Oct. 1-12, indicated 52 percent of Soviets view the United States as a "declared enemy" of the Soviet Union.

But in answer to another question, 61 percent regarded relations with the United States as "not bad."

The Associated Press on Sunday obtained an English-language translation of the results of the survey, which was conducted for French television and the weekly news magazine Le Point.

For the survey, 1,000 Soviets between the ages of 18 and 65 who live in Moscow or within about 25 miles of the city were contacted by telephone and asked 65 questions.

Random telephone sampling is common in the West but rarely used in the Soviet Union. It is not known what percentage of the people living in the survey area have telephones.

The survey said 95 percent of those questioned favor the elimination of nuclear weapons from Europe.

In response to another question, 55 percent said the simultaneous destruction of Soviet SS-20 and U.S. Pershing 2 missiles in Europe would not be dangerous for the Soviet Union. But 31 percent disagreed, and 14 percent had no opinion.

The survey was conducted before the announcement of the Dec. 7 summit meeting in Washington between Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev and President Reagan in which the two leaders are expected to sign an agreement eliminating their medium- and short-range weapons.

The survey indicated 95 percent favored such a meeting.

Slightly more than half surveyed, 53 percent, favored withdrawal of Soviet forces from Afghanistan, where they are backing up the government in a guerrilla war. It said 27 percent supported staying in Afghanistan, and 20 percent did not have an opinion.

Another 55 percent said they were dissatisfied with the quality of health care in the Soviet Union.

Extremism haunts S. Korean change

South Koreans went to the polls in overwhelming numbers recently and endorsed a new constitution that provides for sweeping political changes and the first direct election of a president in 16 years.

The constitution, which goes into effect Feb. 25, 1988, the day President Chun Doo Hwan steps down, provides for a single, five-year presidential term. Chun has exercised broad powers since he seized control of the government in a military coup eight years ago.

Under terms of the new charter, which received more than 93 percent approval from the 20 million South Koreans who voted, the presidency will be stripped of the extraordinary powers the office once had. For example, the chief executive will no longer enjoy the prerogative to dissolve the legislature when that body proves inconvenient or unmanageable.

The constitution also introduces the right of habeas corpus, and guarantees the rights of expression, other civil liberties and collective bargaining for workers. The existing charter also embodies many of these rights, but in the past the government has proved unwilling to recognize them.

All in all, it was a splendid day for democracy in South Korea, with roughly 78.2 percent of the eligible voters taking part in the referendum. The vote capped six months of often violent political upheaval that resulted in President Chun's acquiescence to opposition demands for direct presidential elections.

South Koreans will go to the polls in mid-December to elect their new president. The race looks as though it will be every bit as tumultuous and vigorous as the campaign leading up to the vote.

Kim Dae Jung, the main opposition leader, has announced he will seek the presidency. He joins Kim Young Sam, who is no relation, in the lineup against President Chun's handpicked successor, Roh Tae Woo. The entry of Kim Dae Jung into the race seriously splits the opposition, which must be united behind one candidate if it hopes to prevail. Paradoxically, the adoption of the new constitution reflects well on the government and Roh, who was the political winner in the recent vote.

The extremism of the opposition, particularly its penchant for street violence and its attacks on Roh with eggs and debris, threatens to alienate the large, and rapidly growing, Korean middle class. The successful revision of South Korea's constitution could not have been accomplished without the support of the middle class.

Likewise, the opposition has no hope of winning the presidency if it fails to earn the trust of the middle class.

Don't give up voting

I respectfully disagree with your recommendation that the State Board of Education Referendum Proposition I, be appointed instead of elected. The reason for such approval is shallow and nonsensical. As a former member of the elective State Board of Education I feel qualified to address this issue and the implications of such action.

I was elected in 1982 from the 21st Congressional District, the largest in the state. I covered this district and informed people of my views on education and solicited their help, ideas and vote. The election vindicated my efforts to be justified, and even more satisfactory was the number of people who voted in this race for heretofore few people bothered to vote for candidates running for the State Board of Education. Yet you and the elitest reformers tell us the average citizen is too uninformed to vote and that a candidate's views are unknown.

I am the first to admit that there were many people in the 21st District more qualified than I, but they chose not to run; I did. The experience was a highlight of my life, for it enabled me to meet hundreds of wonderful people who shared with me their experience, strength and hopes.

What kind of person would run for public office that paid no salary, called for many hours of hard work, days away from home, business and loved ones, unless that person was committed and dedicated to better education?

Ross Perot and others have little regard for the common man; they much prefer those who belong to the right clubs, contribute large sums of money to political campaigns and politicians, or represent a special interest group, and please don't disagree for you only have to look at the makeup of the present state Board of Education. Ross Perot has stated that certain members of the old elected board believed the world was flat, a facetious statement I'm sure, but it is dishonest, and shows only arrogance on the part of a rich powerful man.

Good education cannot be obtained by buying the problems, it is obtained the old fashioned way — hard work by dedicated people who have offered themselves to the electorate who pledged their name and honor to serve if elected. This is the bonding process that binds candidates and people together. An appointed candidate will never have this bond.

I am not ready or willing to believe in the Divine Right of Kings by giving up my right to vote on who shall represent me on the State Board of Education.

Vote No on Referendum Proposition I.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Nov. 2, the 306th day of 1987. There are 59 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Forty years ago, on Nov. 2, 1947, Howard Hughes' huge wooden airplane, known as the "Spruce Goose," went on its only flight. Hughes was at the controls as the plane flew for about a minute over Long Beach Harbor in California. The 200-ton aircraft remains berthed to this day in Long Beach.

On this date:

In 1783, Gen. George Washington issued his farewell address to the Army near Princeton, N.J.

In 1795, James Knox Polk, the 11th president of the United States, was born in Mecklenburg County, N.C.

In 1865, Warren Gamaliel Harding, the 29th president of the United States, was born near Corsica, Ohio.

In 1889, North Dakota and South Dakota became the 39th and 40th states.

In 1917, British Foreign Secretary Arthur Balfour expressed support for a "national home" for the Jews of Palestine in a statement that came to be known as the Balfour Declaration.

In 1920, radio station KDKA in Pittsburgh broadcast returns from the Harding-Cox presidential election. Harding won with just over 60 percent of the popular vote.

In 1930, Haile Selassie was crowned emperor of Ethiopia.

In 1936, the British Broadcasting Corporation inaugurated public "high-definition" television service with a telecast from Alexandra Palace in north London.

In 1948, President Harry S. Truman surprised the experts by being re-elected in a narrow upset over the Republican challenger, Thomas E. Dewey.

In 1959, Charles Van Doren admitted to a House subcommittee that he had been given questions and answers in advance when he appeared on an NBC-TV quiz show, "21."

In 1962, President John F. Kennedy went on radio and television to announce that Soviet missile bases in Cuba were being dismantled, as promised by Soviet leader Nikita Khrushchev.

In 1963, South Vietnamese President Ngo Dihn Diem was assassinated in a military coup.

In 1976, former Georgia Gov. Jimmy Carter became the first candidate from the Deep South since the Civil War to be elected president as he defeated Gerald R. Ford.

In 1984, convicted murderer Velma Barfield became the first woman to be executed in the United States in 22 years as she was put to death by lethal injection in Raleigh, N.C.

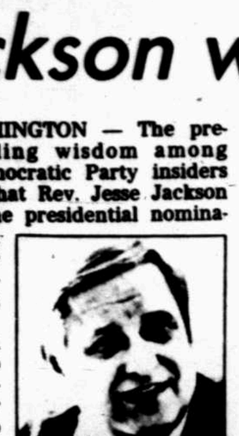
JACK ANDERSON

Jackson walking tightrope for support

WASHINGTON — The prevailing wisdom among Democratic Party insiders is that Rev. Jesse Jackson can't win the presidential nomination, but will arrive at the Atlanta convention next summer with enough delegates to be a kingmaker — or at least to extract concessions from the eventual nominee. Several party leaders have told us they believe Jackson hopes to be secretary of state.



Jack Anderson

Those close to Jackson, of course, insist he's dead serious about his candidacy, and believes the arithmetic of the primaries can make him the nominee. According to them, Jackson is counting on the enthusiasm of his supporters — and the fact that only about 14 percent of eligible voters turn out for the primaries.

One of Jackson's major problems involves Jewish support, without which any Democrat would be hard pressed to get the nomination. But Jackson does not want to alienate his long-standing allies within the Arab American community. In a recent interview with the liberal Jewish magazine Tikkun, Jackson made one of his first teetering steps across a tightrope he has stretched between these two political factions. Reaction was mixed among the Jewish leaders. They are still wary of Jackson's reluctance in 1984 to shed the support of Black Muslim Louis Farrakhan, who has denounced Judaism as a "gutter religion."

But his overtures to the Jewish community do not seem to be hurting him among his Arab American friends. In March, he was the keynote speaker at a conference of Arab Americans.

More recently, Jackson and some 20 Arab-American leaders met in Washington's elegant Radisson Park Terrace Hotel for a closed-door birthday banquet in honor of the black Baptist candidate. After the roast tenderloin, a fancy cake was brought in with the frosted inscription, "Happy Birthday, Mr. President."

Among the dignitaries present for the birthday bash was Jean Abi Nader, president of the National Association of Arab Americans. The event was organized by James Zogby, president of the Arab American Institute. It was a "small, private meeting," Zogby told our associate Stewart Harris. "It was a chance for people to hear Jackson five feet away," he explained.

Jackson didn't return our calls for comment. Zogby said the party conversation was "general," dealing with education, support for small business and similar topics. He said Jackson also repeated his Middle East policy: Palestinians and Jews must be more sensitive to the needs of each other. Palestinians have a right to self-determination, while Israel has a right to secure borders, Jackson told the group, according to Zogby.

Jackson has always bucked the political odds. He sees his role as that of a battering ram breaking down barriers. His friends say he draws his inspiration from the Bible, which he interprets as a chronicle of the underprivileged battling against the odds for their birthright, their homeland and their self-determination.

But Jackson is also a canny politician and an opportunist who realizes that he must somehow curb his inflammatory populist rhetoric and come to terms with the privileged classes if he has a prayer of becoming president. With that in mind, he has been restructuring his campaign speeches to be perceived as for America, rather than against it.

At the same time, Jackson must keep his enthusiastic followers fired up, so he can't tone down his rhetoric too much until the primaries have been won. The best he can do is soften it to the point where he doesn't actively offend Jewish voters and other mainstream Democrats.

Despite the fragile political tightrope that Jackson must tiptoe along, his charisma makes him a presidential contender to be reckoned with.

PROBING FROM CUBA — A top-secret CIA report warns of a new Soviet menace emanating from Cuba. "The Soviet Navy has used the international airport in Havana for the periodic staging of pairs of TU-95 Bear D reconnaissance aircraft," the report states. "From Cuba, the aircraft have reconnoitered U.S. ships involved in exercises as well as carriers crossing the Atlantic." The flights, increasing in frequency, sometimes skirt U.S. air space — or even penetrate it on occasion. Under the SALT II treaty, Bears are considered "heavy bombers" or strategic nuclear weapons, and the CIA has told the White House it can't necessarily tell whether the Soviet planes are actually equipped with nuclear bombs — which they are capable of carrying.

MAIL-ORDER MAMAS — The importation of mail-order brides from Asian countries is booming, as lonely American men dream of spouses they hope will treat their husbands like kings. From only a few hundred a year in the 1970s, there are now an estimated 6,000 mail-order brides coming in each year. Many are from the Philippines, where hard times, unsettled conditions and a tradition of female subservience all contribute to the bridal boom.

MINI-EDITORIAL — A reader of evidently populist and ascetic tastes has suggested a tax hike with a vengeance: Slap a progressively punitive sales tax on pretentiousness or conspicuous consumption. Yachts, luxury limousines, multimillion-dollar homes, he argues, are bought mainly to impress the hoi polloi with one's wealth, so why wouldn't it be even more impressive if lesser mortals knew that the price also included a 50 percent luxury tariff? We doubt that such a soak-the-rich idea would get very far in the plutocracy that Congress has now become, but it would be amusing to hear the outcries.

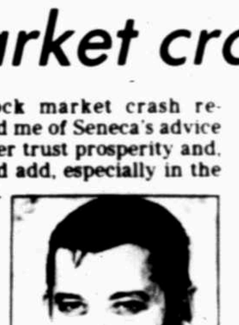
CHARLEY REESE

Market crash reminder of Seneca's advice

The stock market crash reminded me of Seneca's advice — never trust prosperity and, I would add, especially in the stock market.

The stock market is to the American economy about what the house take in Las Vegas is to the same economy. It tells you what the current psychological state of the money speculators is and not much else. Whether the market is up or down, bull or bear, it still has only the remotest link to the basic economy.



Charley Reese

That's because the price of stocks on the exchanges has very little to do with the condition of the various corporations and a lot to do with the games played by insiders and manipulators. Despite the fact that millions of Americans own a little stock most outstanding shares are owned or controlled by a tiny percentage of the population.

Only about 3,500 individuals out of 240 million, for example, exercise formal authority over half of the nation's industrial assets, nearly half of all banking assets, half of all assets in communications, transportation and utilities, and two-thirds of all insurance assets. The psychological state or the strategies of the big players is the causative factor in the behavior of the stock market. By the time the little players get involved, whatever is going to happen is already underway.

In addition to handling our debt about the same way, we resemble a Banana Republic in wealth distribution much more so than we like to admit.

For that reason, President Reagan was both right and wrong when he said the stock market crashed for reasons other than the basic economy. He was right about that. He was wrong when he said the basic economy is in good shape. It is not.

There's too much debt — public, corporate and private. There are too many jobs flowing to cheap labor countries. There's too much private wealth being eaten up by the public sector. There is too much consumption and too little savings. Interest rates and inflation are too high. Corporate productivity — and notice I said corporate, not worker productivity — is too low. American corporations are top heavy in administration and bureaucracy.

Whether the stock market soars or nose dives has no effect on these factors. These factors were all present even when the market was going up and up.

The losses suffered in the crash are real, however, as people who bought on margin have discovered and as people who used their stocks as collateral for loans have discovered.

These losses will be reflected in the economy because those people will have less money to spend or invest and probably less nerve. Even when the market goes back up, most of the losers won't benefit. The beneficiaries will be the insiders who sold at the top and are now buying the bargains.

Some people are saying the crash will bring people to their senses and make the politicians get serious about dealing with the real problems.

Hey, would you like a hot tip? That will never happen. There will be gestures and rhetoric but no action.

The gritty truth is the Democrats are so tickled about the crash they probably spread Crazy Glue on their faces before going out in public just to keep from smiling and laughing. A prosperous 1988 is the last thing in the world Democrats want to see. Republicans like to run against high taxes and Democrats love to run against recessions.

Republicans are not thinking about the economy either but what effect the crash will have on the 1988 elections and how they can deflect the Democrats' arrows and spears.

In the meantime, the most important factor, foreign policy and national defense, will be ignored by both parties as both subjects are usually ignored by the public.

It's probably appropriate, though not pleasant, that we will one day get blown to hell while our national leaders are quibbling over dollars and votes.

New movie gives sex attraction fatal twist

Fooling around (adultery and other such pastimes) is allegedly on the downswing because of the threat of AIDS and other sexually transmitted diseases.

But fooling around is sort of like gambling, drinking, close-dancing and eating chocolate-covered cherries.

Grizzard

No matter how dangerous, harmful or sinful any of these might be, there will always be somebody out there to continue such practices (see Hart, Gary; Bakker, Jim; and any number of fat people).

Today we address those individuals who still enjoy an occasional walk on the wild side as far as sex is involved and continue to fool around on their steady sexual partners, spitting in the eye of AIDS and all the other bad stuff that can happen to you for being unfaithful.

If AIDS doesn't scare you into a constant state of monogamy, then I have something that might.

Go see the new movie "Fatal Attraction" starring Michael Douglas and Glenn Close.

This movie may do more to put a stop to messing around than the threat of disease, divorce and financial ruin, and going to hell like Jerry Falwell says you will, combined.

Here is the story line of the movie:

Michael Douglas is a successful New York lawyer with an adoring wife, Anne Archer, and a cute daughter, who looks more like a boy, but let's don't get into that here.

While his wife and child are away from the city for a weekend, Douglas, at a business meeting, meets Glenn Close, who plays a brazen hussy perfectly.

They go to lunch together after the meeting. It's Saturday. It's raining. They drink red wine. They wind up in bed.

(Actually they wind up in all sorts of places, like the kitchen sink and an elevator. Don't go buy popcorn during these scenes.)

What happens next is a nightmare, first for Michael Douglas, and then for his wife and child, too.

Glenn Close takes the weekend and the fun at the sink and on the elevator much more seriously than does Michael Douglas, who still wants to be her friend, but nothing more.

This causes Glenn to go a little nuts. And not funny nuts either. Scary nuts. The kind of nuts as in "My God, she's got a butcher knife."

I don't want to spoil the movie by telling you too much, but there is a lot of blood, in the end, something absolutely awful happens to Douglas' daughter's pet rabbit, and just because somebody looks dead in the bathtub doesn't necessarily mean they are.

The message in the movie is simple. If you play, you might have to pay and pay dearly.

"I heard about that movie," a guy I know was saying. "I don't know if I want to take my wife or my girlfriend to see it."

I got news for you, pal. Go see the movie, but leave both your wife and your girlfriend at home.

You don't want to give either of them any ideas or your own rabbit might wind up in a stew.

Freed hostage on way home to South Korea

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — A South Korean diplomat freed last week after being held hostage in Lebanon for 21 months left for home today, where he was to be reunited with his wife, a South Korean official said.

Do Chae-Sung, "is relatively well," said the Geneva-based official, Ahn Myung-soo. He declined to provide specific information on Do's condition. Do arrived in Geneva on Saturday on a flight from Beirut.

Ahn told The Associated Press that Do left Geneva for Frankfurt, West Germany today. A Korean Airlines official, Sang Yoon-Lee, said that in Frankfurt, Do boarded a KAL flight for the 19-hour flight to Seoul.

Ahn said the 45-year-old Do has a wife waiting for him in Seoul, but he did not know whether the couple has children.

Do had been a second secretary at the South Korean Embassy but has been promoted to first secretary rank.

He was abducted at gunpoint by unidentified gunmen from a Beirut street on Jan. 31, 1986.

Do, interviewed in Geneva on Sunday by a group of South Korean correspondents, said he was recovering quickly from the trials of his captivity, but was feeling exhausted. The South Korean news agency Yonhap said the diplomat, wearing a blue suit and red striped tie, looked haggard and tired.

"I will be glad to see my family again," he said.

The diplomat did not answer some questions during the 15-minute interview, saying he did not want to talk about his family or other emotional matters because of the strain.

"I cannot stand tense circumstances any longer because my health is not very good. Please understand me. I am not that eloquent either," he was quoted as saying.

Yonhap said one of the first things Do did at the South Korean Embassy in Geneva was to have a traditional Korean meal.

The diplomat said the most difficult part of his captivity had been the endless time with nothing to fill it.

"Idling away 24 hours, 48 hours, one year, and then two years without doing anything," he said.

The South Korean government has denied reports that a $1 million ransom was paid for Do's release, but has not given any details on how he was freed.

News accounts of the interview with Do said nothing about who may have abducted him and gave no details on where he was held or under what circumstances.

Twenty-two foreigners, including eight Americans, are missing and believed kidnapped in Lebanon, with most believed held by Shiite Moslem extremists. In addition, Anglican Church envoy Terry Waite of England has been missing since January, when he vanished while on a mission to negotiate the release of hostages.

The longest-held hostage is Terry Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press. He was kidnapped in March 1985.

Ex-Quebec premier dies of heart attack

Levesque

MONTREAL (AP) — Former Quebec premier Rene Levesque, the gravel-voiced politician who led an unsuccessful campaign to make a separate French-speaking country out of the province, died of a heart attack. He was 65.

The chain-smoking Levesque died Sunday night at Montreal General Hospital. He was taken there from his home, where he had been dining with his wife, Corinne Cote-Levesque, and several friends. Ambulance technicians and doctors were unable to revive him.

Levesque, Quebec premier from 1976 to 1985, was "a great champion of Quebec's interests," Prime Minister Brian Mulroney said.

Mulroney and Levesque "had very different views about the kind of Canada they wanted," Mulroney spokesman Bruce Philips said, but Mulroney "admired Rene Levesque's profound respect for democracy."

In Quebec City, Premier Robert Bourassa said the province lost "one of its most illustrious sons."

"Mr. Levesque's entire political career had but one aim: Quebec's progress and development," Bourassa said. "A profoundly appealing and exceptionally gifted man, he will pass into history as one of our most determined and generous patriots."

As a Cabinet minister under Liberal premier Jean Lesage from 1961 to 1966, Levesque grew increasingly disillusioned because of Quebec's constant feuding with the English Canadian-dominated federal government in Ottawa.

"I felt like an Indian leaving his reserve each time I left Quebec," he said later.

Levesque broke away and formed his own movement in 1967, which became the Parti Quebecois a year later. The party advocated the secession of Quebec.

At the root of the movement was the belief that without autonomy, the French culture in Quebec would not survive. Eighty-two percent of Quebec's 6.5 million people speak French.

In 1970, separatist terrorists kidnapped British trade commissioner James Cross and provincial labor minister Pierre Laporte. Cross was released unharmed, but Laporte, a friend of Levesque's, was killed.

Ottawa countered by invoking the War Measures Act under which police arrested about 450 Quebec residents without charge. Levesque later wrote that the crisis supplied "as many reasons as I'd ever need for becoming a separatist."

It was under Levesque's leadership that a 1980 referendum was held in Quebec on the issue. He told Quebecers that by voting yes to a mandate to negotiate "sovereignty-association," they would take a step toward becoming in a fuller sense "maitre chez nous," or "masters in our own house."

Short, balding and tough, his straightforward style, husky and penetrating voice and heartfelt appeal to his fellow Quebecers won him widespread support, or at least respect.

Then-Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau and Levesque took their sparring to community halls. Trudeau argued the federal cause and Levesque countered by saying Quebecers' only hope for survival was to have the tools of a true nation.

The federalists carried the day with 60 per cent of the votes. Levesque wept with supporters and told them not to give up the dream of independence.

"It will come and we will be there for it," he said. "We have to swallow this one (defeat)."

Rocked by recession and lacking new ideas, the Levesque government watched Mulroney's Tories capture 58 seats in Quebec in the 1984 federal election with the offer of renewed federalism and a constitutional deal the province could sign with honor.

In a dramatic reversal, Levesque then came out for removing independence from his party's platform in the next election, saying the ideal of Quebec sovereignty should live on — but only as an insurance policy.

Party members ratified his stand by a 2-1 margin at a January 1985 convention, but not before 500 hardliners marched out.

Levesque resigned as head of the party that year under pressure from members of his own party, which had fallen to an all-time low in public popularity. Levesque's popularity, however, remained high.

Before entering politics in 1960, Levesque worked as a newspaper and broadcast journalist. He grew up on Quebec's Gaspe Peninsula, a member of a French family in a largely English-speaking town.

His first job was at a local radio station translating English news dispatches into French and reading them on the air. Toward the end of World War II, Levesque dropped out of law school and became a French-language broadcaster for the U.S. Office of War Information, traveling with the American forces through Europe.

He said later that he joined the Americans because he decided he would not fight with Canadian forces under the British crown.

Levesque spent his first year out of politics writing his memoirs. This year, Levesque returned to work as a broadcast journalist in Quebec, covering provincial politics.

His last public appearance was Friday night, when he showed up at a photo opportunity before a fund-raising literary dinner.

Reporters who talked with him said he seemed no different than usual. He was dressed in a rumpled grey suit, puffing away on a cigarette throughout the 30-minute session.

Levesque is survived by his second wife, Corinne, and three children, Pierre, Claude and Suzanne, from his first wife, Louise L'Heureux.

Canadian offers reward to doctor who can cure him

TORONTO (AP) — A Vancouver Island man is offering a $10,000 reward to any physician who can cure him of severe and constant facial pain that he says has destroyed the quality of his life.

Pierre Long of Sooke made the offer in a classified advertisement in the lastest issue of Canadian Doctor magazine, which is sent to about 30,000 Canadian physicians.

"The ad was a desperation move, nothing more," Mr. Long said in an interview. "I've been to every specialist possible, and nothing has worked. My GP agreed that even though it might be seen as sensationalism, at least it was worth a shot."

Dr. Craig Arnold, registrar of the College of Physicians and Surgeons of British Columbia, said he had never heard of a similar ad appearing before, and he hopes that no more do.

"The college has no control over whether ads like that are accepted, but frankly I am surprised that a medical journal would carry it," he said.

Refuseniks arrive in Israel

JERUSALEM (AP) — A 99-year-old Soviet Jew who waited six years for an exit visa and two former labor-camp prisoners arrived in Israel Sunday from the Soviet Union, after a stopover in Austria, Israel Army radio said.

Zalman Apterman of Moscow, who fought in the Russian army during World War I, will be 100-years-old in two weeks.

On the same flight as Apterman was another Soviet Jewish refusenik, Yevgeny Izenberg of Kharkov. Izenberg was arrested in March 1985 and sentenced to 29 months in prison for alleged slander of the Soviet state. His sentence was later reduced to one year.

On another flight was Vladimir Lifshitz, a Soviet Jew who was sentenced to three years of forced labor in March 1986 for anti-Soviet slander. Lifshitz, 46, first applied for emigration to Israel in 1981 and demonstrated in Leningrad for release from Soviet citizenship in 1984.

Lifshitz spent 14 months of his sentence on the Kamchatka peninsula in northeastern Siberia.

All three stopped off in Vienna, Austria, en route from the Soviet Union.

Man rams car into barriers

BERLIN (AP) — An unidentified man rammed his car into barriers in East Berlin early Sunday after speeding through Checkpoint Charlie in West Berlin, police said.

The man — who had blood on his head from the crash — was taken from the eastern control checkpoint on a stretcher by East German border police, West Berlin police quoted observers as saying.

The man's motives were unknown. The East Berlin side of the checkpoint was closed for about an hour following the 2 a.m. crash, West Berlin police said.

Ship on way to Nicaragua

MEXICO CITY (AP) — A ship filled with 500 tons of provisions, medicine and tools for Nicaragua has sailed the southern port of Acapulco, according to officials.

Manuel Arreola, a spokesman for the government Aid for Peace Fund, said the group collected the supplies since 1988 and would "create an important link between Mexico and our sister nation of Nicaragua."

He said the rented, Japanese-flagged vessel left Saturday and was headed for Nicaragua's Pacific port of Corinto.

VOTE YES FOR ENHANCED 911

Q What is the Enhanced 911 Emergency Communication District?

A The 911 Emergency Number Act (Art. 1432e of Vernon's Revised Texas Civil Statutes) enables Texas counties to organize an Emergency Communication District as a means of establishing and financing a computerized 911 emergency communication system. The new system is designed to improve emergency communications.

Q What area is included in the District?

A The Midland District serves Midland County. All cities and towns, as well as the unincorporated areas will be serviced, whether they are served by Southwestern Bell or not. All phone companies in the district will proved 911 service to their customers.

Q Who governs each District?

A Each District appoints a Board of Managers. Each Board has five members with two appointed by the City Council, two appointed by the County Commissioners and one from a volunteer Fire Department.

Q Will there be an election?

A Yes. On Nov. 3, 1987, all registered voters in the County will have the opportunity to vote "YES" to confirm the creation of the communication district and authorize the 911 emergency service fee to be charged.

Q How Much will the Enhanced 911 system cost me?

A Under the law the district can levy a service fee on the telephone bills of citizens within the county up to a maximum of 6% of your base telephone rate (not including long distance or other charges). Throughout Texas, the rate is about 3% which is estimated to be 27¢ per month for a residential customer. This cost is less than the cost of a cup of coffee or a candy bar.

Q How will the funds be used?

A Service fees will be used, under direction of the Board of Managers, to computerize the current 911 service. The new service will be called "Enhanced 911".

Q But why change from the present 911 system?

A Because there are vital differences in the current system and the "Enhanced" system. Differences that could save your life.

The current 911 system:
1. Is not computerized.
2. Routes all calls to a single public safety agency.
3. Does not display the caller's telephone number.
4. Does not display the caller's address.
5. Requires the caller to verbally give address and telephone number.

"Enhanced" 911:
1. Is a computerized service.
2. Automatically routes calls to the appropriate agency.
3. Displays the caller's telephone number and address.
4. Displays the type of phone (i.e. residence, business or coin).

Q How will Enhanced 911 work for me?

A In an emergency, no matter where you might be, you simply pick up any phone (including a coin operated phone — no coin is required) and dial 911 for help. Your call will automatically go to the responsible jurisdiction.

Q What if I diall 911 and then can't speak?

A Even if you cannot speak after dialing the number, the computer screen in front of the 911 attendant will show the phone number from which you called, and the address, so help can be sent even without voice contact.

Q Can children or the deaf and hearing impaired people get help through 911?

A Yes. Children can easily dial 911 and get help, even though they may not know their location. Calls coming from handicapped citizens with TTY/TDD equipment can be handled.

Q Is using 911 faster than dialing the operator?

A Yes. If you dial "O" for Operator—
1. You may get an Operator who is not even in the area. It can be an Operator 100 or more miles away.
2. That Operator has to determine which is the responsible agency for your emergency and then dial a 7-digit number for you.
3. A call to the Operator cannot be identified as an emergency and may ring many times before being answered.

Q Will response time be shortened with "Enhanced" 911?

A Yes. With the Enhanced 911 number, the time required to get an emergency call completed to the proper agency is significantly shortened. With Enhanced 911 a person simply dials that one number for all emergencies and calls are automatically routed to the proper agency. When number and address information is flashed on the computer screen the attendant answering the call can dispatch an emergency vehicle, even if the person placing the call cannot speak or be understood. Currently, address must be communicated and written down by hand, which slows the response time significantly.

911 Police • Fire • Medical EMERGENCY

Seconds count in an emergency! If you have a heart attack, a fire, a robbery, seconds often are the difference between life and death. 911, the nationally recognized emergency telephone number, is the fastest means of summoning help in a crisis. And now you and your family can have a modern, enhanced 911 system.

Q People say the 911 system saves lives. How does Enhanced 911 save lives?

A In an emergency, seconds count. Any time saved in getting help to you in an emergency may save your life, or the life of a loved one. Enhanced 911 is much more efficient and does save time, and it may save your life!

Q Is there a great need for Enhanced 911, and its benefits?

A Yes. In emergency situations, people are often confused, in shock, panicked, under stress. They are not functioning at their best and do not always think clearly. With Enhanced 911 you simply dial 911 for any emergency anywhere in the county and the emergency system is activated on your behalf.

Q What will happen when I use this "Enhanced" emergency system?
1. The 911 number is dialed.
2. The call is immediately identified as an emergency because the number 911 was used.
3. The phone rings at the answering point and an attendant trained in handling emergency calls answers the line.
4. The attendant determines the type of emergency and either dispatches help directly or, with the push of a button, establishes a three-way call between the caller, the attendant and the proper emergency agency.
5. The emergency agency dispatches assistance to the caller's location. Help is on its way. The entire process from the time the phone is picked up until help is dispatched takes only a few seconds with the Enhanced 911 system.

ON NOVEMBER 3RD VOTE "YES' FOR ENHANCED 911.

Foster-parenting way of life for this couple

By ROBERT MORRIS

VAN ALSTYNE, Texas (AP) — Imagine caring for a neglected or abused child for six months then giving him or her up for someone else to adopt; now imagine doing it 15 times.

That process has become a way of life for Jim and Vickie Christian of Van Alstyne. Beginning five years ago with a 4-month-old girl, the family has sheltered 14 unwanted children through the foster care program.

Their work was recognized recently when the state foster parents association conferred on the Christians its annual award, which signifies the best foster parents in the state.

According to Ed Wagoner, a representative of the county human services department, the Christians exemplify the highest degree of service to needy children.

In addition to family duties, both Christians actively work to develop the foster home program. He is a past president of the Grayson County foster parents association, and now serves as secretary of the state board, a position his wife previously held.

Her chief role is training potential foster parents to qualify them for taking in a child.

Wagoner says more foster parents are needed in Grayson County because the task is so demanding, and because the numbers of needy children are increasing.

"It's very emotionally draining," he said. Not everyone is suited to dealing with the constant emotional tug of war, and some people experience inevitable conflict when they have children of their own.

Because of this, the agency has a training program twice a year to recruit new foster families. Currently, there are 15 available foster homes, but the county has legal custody of 30 children. These children come from situations that threaten the child's physical or emotional health.

Foster families receive public money to cover medical costs for their young charges. They also receive up to $9.50 per day to offset some of the living expenses.

Although foster care seems to dominate the Christians' lives, they insist on making time for other interests.

"It is simply one dimension," Mrs. Christian says. "While it's very important, it doesn't inhibit other activities. We live our lives exactly as we would if we weren't foster parents except we include the foster child in those activities."

This caring attitude makes the Christians' home a haven for troubled children.

However, it isn't only the children who benefit from the Christians' work. Mrs. Christian insists that her own family has gained much from the experience.

That family includes 11-year-old Lori, 14-year-old Rita — both from Mrs. Christian's previous marriage — and Diane, their 5-year-old adopted daughter who started their interest as foster parents.

Some neighbors have criticized the Christians' work.

"They feel that we aren't treating our own children fairly," Mrs. Christian says. In fact, she and her husband at first were concerned about their children's feelings, but those fears were soon allayed.

"We discussed our participation with the children from the very start and they've always wanted to continue in the program," Mrs. Christian said.

Instead of threatening the family's stability, the Christians regard foster children as a beneficial influence.

"We feel that it has enriched our children's lives," Mrs. Christian says. "I feel that there are so many self-centered people in the world today and this teaches our children to help others in need, especially children."

She listed several reasons for the family's initial decision to enter the program and their continued support of it:

First, they have a great love for children; however, more important they saw an urgent need for foster parents in the area.

Although the couple is unable to have children together, the program enables them to have "more than most families ever could."

With foster care, the Christians can share a strong sense of family for those less fortunate.

"We both came from a lot of hurtful experiences in marriage and when we saw that our home was going to be healthy and happy we wanted to share it," says Mrs. Christian. "It's something I think we appreciate more than most people because of the experiences of the past."

Still, their devotion to foster care has overwhelmed them at times. Once, the family took in two younger boys even though Mrs. Christian's health was failing and a daughter was becoming a teen-ager. The circumstances were too much, so the family asked the agency to find another home for the boys. Still, the experience left the Christians with important memories, good and bad. For one thing, it taught them to avoid situations they can't handle.

IRS claims Hunts covered children's silver losses

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's $358 million tax case against the wealthy Hunt family of Dallas opened today with sparring between the Internal Revenue Service and the Hunts' attorneys over records regarding the family's ill-fated silvery buyout of 1980.

In a consolidation of eight cases being argued in U.S. Tax Court, the IRS claims Nelson Bunker Hunt and his wife, Caroline, covered millions of dollars of their children's losses when the silver market crashed in early 1980.

The couple had written off the money as bad loans, but the government contends that the transfers constituted gifts to the Hunt children rather than loans and that the Hunts are subject to gift and income taxes on the amounts transferred.

The IRS in 1985 disallowed $147.6 million claimed as a short-term capital loss by Nelson Bunker Hunt and his wife on their 270-page 1980 income tax return and is seeking in the neighborhood of $100 million in back taxes from them.

The IRS spent much of the morning defending subpoenas issued over the last two weeks seeking expert testimony on the Hunts' complex silver trading strategy.

The case has been under investigation for more than three years, and many of the recent subpoenas were quashed because they came too late in the trial proceedings.

Sitting in the court were Hunt and his wife, who used a plush lamb's wool cushion to ease the pain of sitting through the court proceedings.

Emerging from the opening round was the existence of several other cases against the Hunts regarding their silver fiasco. Much testimony from those cases has been sealed off from the IRS by the judges in the other cases.

The remainder of the taxes sought are charged against the Hunt children and their spouses Albert and Mary Huddleston, Thomas and Elizabeth Curnes, and Caroline Hunt.

The elder Hunts say in their court filings that they transferred $165.4 million to their children, all in the form of business loans that "became worthless" and were uncollectable.

They say they lent the money to help the children cover margin calls on silver futures when the price of silver began falling in January 1980 and that they made the loans because they believed in the long-term value of silver.

The tax court case is a prelude to the Hunts' silver trading case in which the Commodity Futures Trading Commission alleges they manipulated the silver futures market through a massive buyout of silver.

The 1980 silver crash resulted in at least a $1.3 billion loss for Bunker Hunt and his brother, Herbert Hunt. The two had bought a total of 59 million ounces of silver, estimated at one-third of the existing world supply.

The Hunt children began investing heavily in silver futures beginning in February 1979, when the precious metal was trading at $5 an ounce. As is customary in margin purchases, they were required to deposit only a portion of the total value of the futures as good faith security deposits. If the price of the commodity drops a certain amount, brokers issue "margin calls" to investors for more money.

Within a year, the price of silver climbed to more than $50 an ounce.

Conroe court reporter moves out of her office

CONROE (AP) — A court reporter whose startling testimony helped fuel defense claims that death row inmate Clarence Brandley didn't get a fair trial has moved out of her courthouse office, saying she was no longer welcome.

"I've gone through so much depression and tears, I'm anxious to get in my new office and try to go forward," court reporter Mary Johnson said Sunday. Ms. Johnson said she plans to open her own office.

During an evidentiary hearing for Brandley last month, Ms. Johnson said that state District Judge John Martin told her that her job depended on her testimony.

Ms. Johnson was a court reporter for Martin, who presided over Brandley's capital murder trial. Brandley was convicted in the August 1980 rape-strangulation of a Bellville teen-ager.

During the evidentiary hearing last month, a state district judge recommended that Brandley receive a new trial but a state appeals court has yet to review that recommendation. If granted, it would be the third trial for Brandley, 37.

Ms. Johnson testified Martin met secretly with a prosecutor about a matter affecting Brandley's appeal. She also testified the judge instructed her to keep quiet about evidence in the case that was lost a year after Brandley's conviction. Prosecutors speculated Ms. Johnson may have played a part in the disappearance, but she denied it.

Ms. Johnson, Martin's court reporter since his Montgomery County court in Conroe was created seven years ago, said she returned to her courthouse office a week ago and found the lock to her door changed.

She learned from her attorney she would remain on the county payroll, but would not longer work for Martin and would have to make arrangements with him any time she wanted to retrieve materials from her office.

"I just refuse to do it. Everyone else can come to the courthouse anytime they want. Why can't I?" Ms. Johnson asked Sunday.

A deputy sheriff greeted her when she first tried to enter her office two weeks ago but no one was present Sunday. Martin has declined comment on Ms. Johnson's situation, but Ms. Johnson said she understands why the judge doesn't want her to work with him.

Hank the Cowdog stories rope in readers

By MARTHA ASHE

CORSICANA (AP) — The lanky, bearded man with wire-rimmed glasses and decked out in blue jeans and cowboy boots stood before the 30 or so people in the Corsicana Public Library reading about dogs and coyotes and farm animals.

And to listen to John Erickson, author of the successful "Hank the Cowdog" books, the little critters walk and talk just like you and me. And they sing too.

Erickson was in town recently, reading from his books and performing the animal tunes with his banjo at Lincoln Elementary School and the Corsicana Library.

And while the children were obviously fascinated by the ex-cowboy-turned-writer who graduated from the University of Texas, the adults were delighted as much, if not more.

But according to Erickson, the books were written for adults in the beginning.

"The part with children was kind of an accident because I don't know anything about writing children's books," Erickson said. "I suppose I have a child-like imagination. And I don't know how you explain that.

"I don't know how to write children's books and I don't want to learn, because they respond so well with the way the books are now. I don't care whether they are children's books or not."

When Erickson started writing, he wrote several historical novels that never got published.

"They're still good and they will be published. With publisher's, it's just hard to get people's attention unless you happen to go on a yacht trip with Gary Hart."

Growing up in a small town in the northern part of the Texas Panhandle, Erickson wanted to get away from the small town and go to the bright lights of the big cities.

But he returned to his hometown of Perryton after receiving his bachelor's degree from UT, where he still lives with his wife and family, because he likes the "stability" of the small town.

"I think that the turbulance of the late '60s called attention to the good qualities of a small town."

Even though he graduated from the UT-Austin Liberal Arts Department's Plan II honors program, Erickson said he was not a good student.

"I was never a good student. I was a B student or below. I don't know what it was about me and school, but somehow I never made particularly good grades."

Hank was created in articles that were written "one time in 1981 when I was cowboying and broke, and we needed some money."

So Erickson asked a magazine published for ranchers if he could write articles, and the magazine agreed.

Erickson began his own publishing company and would go out and read his short stories to audiences for free.

"I had access to a marketing survey without having to pay for it. I would read a variety of short stories, but the ones they always came back for were the Hank stories."

The first of the Hank books, "Hank the Cowdog," was published in 1983 and eight others have come out since.

Diversity key for home furnishings

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

Home furnishings are currently showing greater diversity than ever before. No trends exist beyond the immense pluralism evident in the marketplace.

Contemporary runs neck and neck with traditional. All the cliches — international style, Southwest, American and French country, art nouveau and deco recyclings — continue to pop around. For every showroom at this summer's Western Merchandise Mart in San Francisco and in nearby interior design centers such as Showplace Square and Galleria filled with the latest in fresh, bleached-out or nouvelle peasant looks, there was another next door specializing in knocked-off Biedermeier. Or Chippendale. Or Louie Quinze.

CNS Photo

Soft fluid lines characterize this sofa.

The summer mart regularly introduces new home furnishing products that will be available to the consumer within the next few months. Be assured. If you wanted to put bleached pine in one corner of the house, a Victorian reproduction settee in another and tie the whole eclectic mix together with a piece of rustic twig or custom rag rug, this should be possible. But it would not give you the look of '87.

AS EVIDENCED in the millions of square feet of showroom space, manufacturers are pushing more complete custom looks than ever before. It no longer is enough to simply relate draperies to wall coverings and upholstery. In the newer scheme of things, furniture finishes, area rugs, accessory color and whatever else may come to occupy a room are designed as a complete custom package.

"What is happening in a great deal of design is that we are creating entire stage sets to act as backdrops for objects and people, whether the task involves storefronts or houses," said Howard Friedman, a San Francisco architect and designer who spoke at a seminar during the summer mart.

Heavy emphasis on furnishings and interior space, whether in residential or commercial developments, is particularly strong in the Sun Belt. "I wish I had the Orange and San Diego counties market," said one showroom representative. "The people in these areas are the ones really buying expensive new furnishings. San Francisco has too much old money — the people don't spend like the new rich. They keep the money in their pockets."

Among the pricey new furnishings being introduced are high-end modular sofas that sell for thousands of dollars. Especially soft and fluid were those designed and manufactured by Thayer-Coggin Inc., the American company that leaped into the contemporary market several seasons ago and quickly stole the show from a lot of European companies. The latest Thayer-Coggin pieces — lounge chairs, ottomans, dining chairs and modulars — are a contrast to the high-tech and crisp geometry of pieces showcased at the High Point, N.C., market last fall.

"Those classic tech pieces just don't pop anymore," said John Lee, national sales manager for Thayer-Coggin. "We are going toward a softer, more livable look this season."

THE NEW modular sofas have curvy backs and some special design elements that enable them to go with the flow of rooms. Fabrics are in soft ice cream colors, often shirred to further soften the effect.

Another unusual addition to the Thayer-Coggin line is a chunky, square cocktail table with four large spiral legs. Unlike many older table designs using metal and glass, this one is made in oak and oak veneer featuring a variety of pale, bleached finishes: white, natural, green and rosy pink.

Finishes — whether bleached, faux or painted — play an important role in today's home furnishings. Again, they are a method of achieving complete custom looks and complementing the neoclassicism of design and architecture. Another tie-in to architecture is the increasing availability of architectural moldings, some cast in brass or wood but more often in synthetics that can be painted or done in fancy finishes to suggest Tara or Monticello.

Fancy finishes also spill over into the accessories field. Lamp bases, vases, urns and even baskets in furniture showrooms come wearing lapis lazuli or other treatments striving for opulence.

Austin, one of the old accessory companies based in New York, has carried the custom look to several lines of theme figures and statuary — cast-iron cowboys and Indians to go with Southwest, American primitives with country, Deco and Art Nouveau with International style.

THE MIX of strong contemporary looks with equally strong period, or traditional, ones was best evident in showrooms this season in the new fabric and wall-covering lines introduced by leading companies such as Schumacher and Stroheim & Romann Inc.

Stroheim & Romann's bravest contemporary patterns are in the company's Jab collection. The patterns often are painterly in an abstract expressionist style or "Hollywood" in the blend of glittering lustre threads in the weaves. But some are modern takeoffs of traditional Old World tapestries. Outside Jab, Stroheim & Romann also adds to the new fall line with variations on its best-selling Winterthur Collection reproducing early American fabrics. Bright red and blue plaids are among those featured.

"But the Winterthur fabrics always sell better on the East Coast than in the West," said John Brittain, the showroom manager. "The East always designs more after tradition while Jab is very hot in Southern California."

William Klein, regional sales manager at Schumacher, said fabric choices follow the same pattern. "The East goes for traditional little prints and the West is always ready to experiment with light, fresh things like papers using air brush," Klein said.

Among Schumacher's debuts: "Reflections," a contemporary group using pastels in abstract patterns as well as geometric floral interpretations; "French Provincial," a casual line meant to go with country looks, and "Empress of China," a boldly colored series using Oriental motifs.

Jack Lenor Larsen's San Francisco showroom also debuted some highly individualistic fabrics, rugs and furniture as part of the fall line. Larsen, president of the American Craft Council, is featured in a textile show in New York at the American Craft Museum.

IN HIS new designs, geometrics continue to play an important role in patterns such as "Tuxedo" and "Oblique." Colors range from soft pastels and sand tones to vibrants from the palette of Gauguin.

In kitchens, marble, onyx and granite cabinet tops replaced ceramic tile in some of the snappier showrooms, including Siematic's. There, black marble made a striking debut in an otherwise all-white kitchen. Another Siematic happening: shiny polyester-finish cabinets in fire engine red. It hardly needs a siren or publicity campaign to announce itself.

From matchbooks to posters, most memorabilia collectible

■ "Close Cover Before Striking: The Golden Age of Matchbook Art" by Thomas Steele, Jim Hermann and Rod Dyer (Abbeville Press, 96 full-color pages, $19.95).

A few weeks ago in this column we looked into the world of phillumeny, or matchbook-cover collecting. As of September, this fascinating field, now considered second only to stamp collecting in popularity, received the glossy, full-color, hardcover treatment it deserves.

Divided into 13 categories, "Close Cover Before Striking" zeroes in on the areas of American culture particularly illuminated by matchbook-cover graphics, outstanding among which are World War I patriotic themes, diners, restaurants, nightclubs and hotels, the 1939 World's Fair and other expositions and streamlined train travel.

Of special interest to collectors: a useful specialist glossary, including everything from bobtail (a matchcover without a striker) to royal flash (a matchbook containing 40 lights).

■ "The Official Price Guide to Fine Art" by Susan Theran (The House of Collectibles, 874 pages, $19.95).

"The Official Overstreet Comic Book Price Guide" by Robert M. Overstreet (The House of Collectibles, 504 pages, $11.95).

"The Official Directory to U.S. Flea Markets (The House of Collectibles, 341 pages, $4.95).

Three new entries in the rapidly growing and indispensable "Official Price Guide" series put out by The House of Collectibles, two first editions and one revision of a perennial.

The latter is the 17th edition of Robert Overstreet's guide to comic books, long considered the bible in the field. The hefty new edition, at over 500 pages, is the most comprehensive listing of American comics ever attempted and, as usual, includes an informed and wide-ranging market report.

Susan Theran has taken on a more complex task in trying to nail down the entire fine art market, since there are so many variables, both aesthetic and otherwise, that move beyond the condition of a comic book. She has wisely limited herself to a compilation of works sold at American auctions from September 1980 through August 1985, thereby sacrificing, however, the significant impact of the London salesrooms.

The handy pocket-size first edition of "The Official Directory to U.S. Flea Markets" is filled with useful information. Listed alphabetically by state, and then by town within each state, it offers details on market days, hours of operation, admission and parking fees and even driving directions, followed by a description of the size of each market, types of merchandise available and other facts pertinent to its operation, booth rates and names and numbers necessary to contact the market operator. An invaluable resource!

■ "Doll Classics" by Jan Foulke (208 pages, available for $19.95 from Hobby House Press, Cumberland, Md. 21502).

This is a compilation of Foulke's four-volume "Blue Book of Dolls and Values" (the first three of which are out of print and increasingly rare on the second-hand market), with the addition of some new photographs. Well researched and larger in format than the originals, the present work provides expanded background data on French and German bisque dolls, china dolls, German, American and Oriental papier-mache dolls, wooden, wax and cloth dolls, as well as a comprehensive treatment of American composition dolls.

■ The May 29-31 auction sale held by Guernsey's in New York produced results of interest to collectors of movie posters, animation and circus art. Several world records were shattered, including that for a movie poster: $17,600 for a six-sheet "Casablanca." Other notable film graphic prices: $3,550 for a one-sheet "Casablanca," $3,300 for a rare six-sheet poster for "Yankee Doodle Dandy" and $4,230 for a French "King Kong" poster. The highlight of the animation section was a cel from "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," which brought $5,500, while the circus session yielded an 1891 poster at $4,670.

In mid-November, Guernsey's will hold an auction of the Forrest J. Ackerman collection of science fiction, fantasy and horror books, magazines, art work, posters, costumes and props.

Art deco's '30s-style glass block returns in '80s

By CAROL OLTEN
Copley News Service

Building materials come and go in cycles.

Just when it looks like marble has reached a plateau, along comes slate. The return to wood is followed by the rediscovery of Formica. Landfill dumps are filled with materials that quickly became pass.

Glass block, now the subject of an unprecedented revival, is a prime example. It had its first heyday in the art deco era, when the shiny surfaces and slick geometry fit the futuristic look of the late '20s and early '30s and enhanced the up-to-date, machine-style of the modern era. But when deco died, so did the block. The '50s saw something of a revival as block appeared in factories and bars. But then it died once more, only to arrive again in the '80s.

Glass block is now riding an unquestionable wave of popularity. Architects and designers are using it with unusual and often brilliant effects. Glass-block stairwells curl up new houses, a solitary glass block sitting at the top as a focal point. Glass-block ceilings allow rooms to be bathed in light but insulated against heat. There are glass-block windows — small ones in a simple quartet of blocks and huge ones stacked together to form a whole window wall.

A few tricky people have even created glass-block swimming pools and floors.

CNS Photo

Glass blocks, art deco's darling, are the subject of an unprecedented revival.

As part of the recent redesign of Sea World, a huge glass-block panorama glistens over the new Shamu Stadium. The penguins have some fancy glass block, too, in the nearby Penguin Encounter.

Glass block is even going into a remodeled jail. And it was used in a waste water treatment facility. Another glass-block encounter presents itself as you eat your burgers and fries at a McDonald's on one U.S. Navy base.

Meanwhile, complete glass-block buildings and exterior walls go up here and there. But the neatest use of block is in those places where you least expect it.

Recently, I stumbled onto a fabulous, but small-scale, use of block in a below-street-level yogurt shop called La Cremiere. In designing it, owner Dan Wray recognized immediately that he would need something spectacular to draw people down from sidewalk level. So he created a whole theatrical set in a glass-block bar, adding backlighting in four colors of neon. From the sidewalk, the entire shop glows like a piece out of "The Wizard of Oz." The soft, glowing colors and wavy patterns created in the block bar invite you in and encourage you to linger.

Backlighting with white light creates some shimmering spectacles, but interplaying it with natural light frequently produces a more striking design. Used this way, glass block looks clean, crisp and elegant. And something really sharp happens in design when a relatively cheap material (about $6 per block) is made to look as if it belongs in a palace rather than a bar.

One way to make block look elegant is to place it next to something that is genuinely rich. Designer Bonnie Sipe used glass block with marble in a recent bathroom remodeling of a '50s house. An elegant, rosy beige Italian marble covers the walls, and tiers of block form a shower wall while letting light into the tub area.

One of the prime uses of glass block today is for shower walls. It's semitransparent, but it lets plenty of light into small spaces — and it's easy to wash down.

The blocks also appeal to architects because they are hollow inside, made of two separate sections of pressed glass sealed together at high temperatures. They provide excellent insulation against cold and heat, good sound-absorbtion and high resistance to pressure. They readily meet many of today's code requirements.

Another important quality is the wide number of patterns and sizes now available. Traditional glass block could be awfully boring. But manufacturers today are turning out blocks in a multitude of motifs: geometrics, meteors, diamonds, waves, ribs and cross-ribs, trees, stars and the entire aurora borealis. Some also introduce color, soft amber or gold as well as bright blue, green and red.

The Japanese jumped briefly into glass-block manufacturing about a decade ago, but most block is made in old, established glass factories such as Weck in West Germany and Saint-Gobain in France. Pittsburgh-Corning remains the only manufacturer in the United States.

Despite the demand, there are few new factories because the process requires equipment that is expensive to maintain and operate.

None of this keeps the manufacturers from thinking of new ways to market block. Among the latest from Saint-Gobain: a child's bank. Savers can count their pretty pennies and watch them shine without shaking them out.

Defense against war toys sought

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Next month my son will be 6 and I will be giving a birthday party for him. Some of his kindergarten friends will be invited. They are very normal kids, and it is common to see one or two on any given day playing with war toys or wearing camouflage uniforms. My husband and I both feel very strongly that we don't want our children playing with those kinds of toys.

How do I get this across to the kids' moms (or do I say it at all) in the invitations and still not step on any toes? I don't want it to appear that a gift is required to attend the party, as it most certainly is not.

When my daughter turned 6, her kindergarten teacher gave her a toy gun in a pink holster! We were appalled; our daughter was delighted. I ended up taking her to the store for a more acceptable item, thanking the teacher, then getting rid of the gun on the QT as soon as possible.

Is there a tactful way of dealing with this beforehand without causing hurt feelings or an upset 6-year-old? Please answer quickly, because the time for me to be getting the invitations out is drawing near. — C.B. IN SPRINGFIELD, ORE.

DEAR C.B.: It would not be out of line for you to call the mothers of the prospective guests and tell them what you've written me. Let the mothers know that a gift is not mandatory, but if the child brings something, you and your husband are, in principle, opposed to war-related toys.

DEAR ABBY: I chose not to take my husband's surname as my legal surname when we married; instead I kept my "own" surname. This has caused some distress with both his family and mine. They claim not to know what to call me, or how to address letters to the both of us, or how to introduce us. The explanation I've given them follows (I have not used our real names):

My name is Susan Jones. My husband's name is Frank Hall. Those are our legal names. My title is Mrs. Frank Hall. A letter written to me alone can be addressed to "Susan Jones" or to "Mrs. Frank Hall." A letter written to both my husband and me may be addressed to "Susan Jones and Frank Hall" or to "Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hall."

The same logic holds true when introducing us. A person may introduce us as "Frank Hall and his wife, Susan Jones," or "Susan Jones and her husband, Frank Hall," or simply as "Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hall."

I really can't see why there has to be so much confusion over what to call me just because I didn't change my name to Susan Hall. After all, I would never have changed my name to "Mrs. Frank Hall"; that is just a TITLE, which I may use regardless of what my legal name is as long as I'm married to Frank Hall. Am I right or wrong? — NAME AND TITLE

DEAR NAME: Right! If it's too complicated for those who claim not to know how to introduce you, simplify it by saying, "My name is Susan and I am married to Frank Hall." Period.

P.S. All social mail should be addressed to Mr. and Mrs. Frank Hall; your business mail to Susan Jones.

Thanks to excellent furniture reproductions, Sheraton hunt boards or Chippendale secretaries are available and, although not cheap, they are affordable.

With prices for antique furniture skyrocketing, collecting reproductions may be the only way to get the designs, says Better Homes and Gardens Traditional Home.

Before shopping for one of these historical copies, it's helpful to know the difference between the terms replica, reproduction and adaptation. The category the furniture falls in will make a difference in the price.

A replica is a line-for-line copy of a piece of furniture. Insofar as possible, the manufacturer uses the same materials and painstaking methods of construction as were employed on the original. A replica is the most expensive copy.

A reproduction is also a line-for-line copy of a specific antique. In some designs, liberties may be taken in construction or type of wood. Both reproductions and replicas are usually marked so they won't be pawned off as true antiques.

An adaptation emulates a certain kind of furniture. It may be very true to the original, or it may take liberties with the original design.

Texas City residents go home, but danger lurks

TEXAS CITY (AP) — Authorities advised continued caution as thousands of residents returned to homes evacuated after an industrial accident released a toxic cloud.

The 48-hour evacuation of about 3,000 people living near the Marathon Petroleum Co. plant was ended Sunday night by Mayor Emmett Lowry, who told residents at an emergency center they were free to go home.

Police advised residents the danger was not fully past.

"They can go home if they want to," said a police dispatcher, who refused to give his name. "As to us giving us the all clear, it has not been given."

The evacuation was ordered Friday after a crane accidentally dropped its load, rupturing pipes leading into a hydrofluoric acid storage tank. When the acid came into contact with air, it vaporized, sending a toxic cloud skyward, said Marathon spokesman Bill Ryder.

Emergency crews sprayed the cloud down with water, shut off pressure to the tank and began working to drain it of its remaining chemicals, Ryder said. The tank was emptied by 9:40 p.m. Sunday, he said.

"We gave them (city officials) our input, and we told them were are working to get that last bit out of there and they made the decision that it was safe to go back," said Ryder.

Progress of the cleanup operation was slow due to the delicate nature of the task, and numerous safety precautions.

"It is time consuming and with the precautions we are intent upon taking, it's a slow thing," Ryder said. "It's the amount of product, it's hard to move and the temperatures are causing us problems."

Ryder said pipes draining the chemical needed to remain chilled, posing a tricky problem.

During the weekend, about 520 people sought treatment for breathing difficulties and skin and eye irritation at AMI-Danforth Hospital, said spokeswoman Beverly Boase. Most were considered minor injuries.

Of the more than 100 admitted for treatment, only 31 remained in the hospital as of late Sunday, and all were in stable condition, she said.

Hydrofluoric acid, strong enough to etch glass, is used in the refinery as a catalyst to speed up separation of hydrocarbons into lighter products, such as benzene.

Austin man offers big sale on little cars

By KEN HERMAN

AUSTIN (AP) — What Nick Sucke wouldn't do for money, he is doing for love.

After years of turning down offers for his fleet of tiny, front-doored BMWs, Sucke is selling them so he can get married.

At age 35, Sucke has decided he would rather say "I do" than "Isetta," the nameplate on his four BMWs from the late 1950s and early 1960s.

"The only reason I'm selling them is to get married to the girl of my dreams," said Sucke, a cancer insurance salesman and former rock guitarist.

Sucke and Judy Roberts plan to wed in this month, if the cars sell.

Although the Isettas are BMWs, they are a far cry from the pricey, trendy BMWs now on the road. But like a shiny new BMW, an Isetta is an eye-grabber, largely because it is so small and because you climb in through a front door that is literally on the front.

Sucke has three Isetta 300s and an Isetta 600, a slightly larger model — complete with one rear door — that is called a "limousine" in the owner's manual. The "limousine" weighs 1,230 pounds. The smaller version weighs about 900 pounds.

In fact, Sucke and a friend demonstrated moving one of the 300s by grabbing the front bumper and lifting the car. Passers-by also think it's fun to lift an Isetta. That's why two of Sucke's cars are chained to a fence in the abandoned used car lot where they are displayed. He found one flipped on its side recently.

Austin resident Nick Sucke stands inside one of the four Isetta autos he is trying to sell so that he can get married. The attention-grabbing cars, made for BMW in the late 1950s and early '60s, have a door which opens from the front.

AP Laserphoto

"I had to do that once on the way back from Cedar Creek, Texas. I had an electrical intermittent problem. Two cars pulled over. They thought I had run off the road and flipped. They said, 'What's wrong?' I said, 'I think it's an intermittent,'" he said.

That's what Sucke loves best about Isettas — "the attention."

"I stopped at a Texaco once to get gas. This old, white-haired gentleman came over and just poured himself on me. He said, 'I bought one of these for my son but I only let him drive it on the sidewalk.'"

Sucke has a long list of potential Isetta buyers who have called, many of them female.

"They love them. They think they're so cute," he said.

On the whole, Sucke summarized the potential buyers as his kind of people: "If not eccentric, teetering on the edge."

Keeping an Isetta running can be challenging, and getting parts is a hit-and-miss deal.

"We sure don't have any," said a parts man at Austin's BMW dealer. "Parts really aren't available for them anymore."

Sucke depends on a parts pipeline that includes an Isetta club. All four of his cars are in what he calls "various stages of restoration." The blue 600 has fresh paint, a new interior and a $4,000 pricetag. The other three give clear meaning to "various stages of restoration."

Sucke's girlfriend likes the cars, but favors selling.

"We had all this cash sitting around just rusting," Sucke said.

The cars may go, but the memories will remain. What does it feel like to do 57 mph in an Isetta?

"You ever lean back in a chair and almost fall over and then catch yourself? It's like that, just like that," he said.

What happens when the uninitiated have to drive the weird, little cars?

Cisneros optimistic about son

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Mayor Henry Cisneros says medical experts have told the family their son is eligible for surgery to alleviate a seriously deformed heart.

Cisneros and his wife, Mary Alice, and their 4-month-old son, John Paul Anthony Cisneros, returned home from a trip to Philadelphia, where they consulted experts at Philadelphia Children's Hospital.

Tests were performed last Thursday by specialists considered the most experienced in the world in dealing with the complex heart defects afflicting the child. The boy was born with a life-threatening abnormal opening between the lower chambers of his heart.

The mayor said his son appears to have understood the good news about his health.

"He never looked better," the mayor said of his son Sunday afternoon, shortly after the family's return to the city. "He's acting like a little boy."

The mayor said he "quizzed the doctors hard" to determine if he was being hopeful or realistic. He said his son's future looks optimistic.

Computers may be used in I-30 condo trial

DALLAS (AP) — A mountain of court records expected to be generated as evidence in the Interstate 30 condominium trial could cause some defense lawyers to turn to computers just to track the data.

Jurors selected for the Dec. 14 trial will also face testimony from at least 100 witnesses and arguments from about a dozen defense lawyers.

Attorneys estimate the trial will last three to six months and will focus on seven people who were indicted on Oct. 7.

The defendants were accused of conspiring to set up a fraudulent network of $500 million in land and construction loans primarily for condominiums along I-30 in northeastern Dallas County.

Prosecutors said the seven are considered key figures in the government's three-and-one-half-year investigation. But the number of defendants and their multi-attorney defense teams created problems about where and when to hold the trial.

Dan C. Guthrie, one defense lawyer, joked that the space problems can only be resolved by renting a circus tent. He said courtrooms in the Earle Cabell Federal Building are too small for all the documents and people needed to try the case.

Other attorneys said they were worried that jurors could suffer information overload from the barrage of records.

But Assistant U.S. Attorney Terry Hart, lead prosecutor in the case, maintains that the problems aren't as great as defense lawyers contend.

Most of the government's records, contained in 250 three-foot wide filedrawers, must be shared with defense lawyers before the trial. U.S. District Judge A. Joe Fish was considering motions to postpone the December trial date for several months.

The judge set a Nov. 12 deadline for lawyers to propose suggestions on how to make sure everyone on the defense teams gets equal access to the records. Fish was also considering ways to increase space in the courtroom.

"If they took every bench out of the courtroom, there still wouldn't be enough room for everybody," Lubbock attorney Travis Shelton said.

Shelton, along with Dallas attorney Earl Luna, is representing former Mayor James L. Toler of nearby Garland, Texas, a developer alleged in the indictment as a key figure in the I-30 scheme.

Chargers beat Browns in OT, up record to 6-1

San Diego holder Ralf Mojaiejenko celebrates Vince Abbott's game-winning overtime field goal against Cleveland.

Associated Press

The San Diego Chargers, ticketed by many for last place in the AFC West this season, may get the last laugh against the rest of the NFL.

The Chargers, riding the momentum of a 3-0 record during the NFL strike, won their sixth straight game and improved their record to 6-1 with a 27-24 overtime victory over the Cleveland Browns Sunday.

NFL

"This was a great test for us," Coach Al Saunders said of the victory over the Browns, an AFC finalist last year. "It's exciting for all of us. We've made great strides from last year. But it doesn't mean anything where you are in November. It is where you are in December."

Saunders took over as the Chargers' coach when the team was 1-7 last season, and it finished 4-12.

San Diego trailed 24-14 late in the fourth quarter, but came back to tie the score in regulation and won the game in overtime on Vince Abbott's 33-yard field goal. The game-winning kick was set up by Vencie Glenn's interception of Bernie Kosar's first pass of the extra period.

"It's a tremendous uplift for this team," San Diego linebacker Chip Banks said of the victory over his former team. "It was very important for us to stay together in the fourth quarter and not crumble."

Of the Chargers' record, Banks said, "It's still early, but the attitude is right. The guys are coming together as a team. When you see that developing and the way everyone goes all out on the field, it's a good feeling."

THE 6-1 record is the best start by the Chargers since 1961, when they began the season with 11 straight victories. The Browns dropped to 4-3.

Abbott's game-winning field goal came with 2:16 gone in the overtime after Kosar was intercepted by Glenn, who returned the ball 30 yards to the Cleveland 20.

"The coaches told me to stay in the middle, so I was just back there," Glenn said. "He overthrew the ball and I just waited for it. Then I just ran, looking for daylight. I was trying to score, but really I was running scared."

"The easiest way to describe it is I made a bad play," said Kosar, who completed 24 of 42 passes for 298

Houston QB Warren Moon beat Cincinnati in more ways than one, diving over blockers and Bengal defenders for the winning TD...

Houston Moon rises over Cincinnati

Oiler quarterback sneaks victory from Bengals, 31-29

By JOE KAY
AP Sports Writer

CINCINNATI — With one plunge, Warren Moon exorcised the Houston Oilers' haunted history at Riverfront Stadium and left the Cincinnati Bengals feeling cursed.

Moon scored the winning touchdown on a quarterback sneak with 55 seconds left Sunday as the Oilers overcame a 15-point deficit in the last six minutes to stun the Bengals 31-29.

By winning at Riverfront Stadium for the first time since 1980, the Oilers took over sole possession of first place in the AFC Central Division with a 5-2 record — their best start since 1980, the last time they won the division.

The Oilers gained confidence with the dramatic comeback at the expense of the Bengals, a 2-5 team reeling from three last-minute losses.

"Fifteen points and we bounced back with what, six-something left? Hey, that's a championship club," said receiver Ernest Givins. "If that's not a championship club, what is a championship club?"

The Bengals were in position to get back into the division race behind Boomer Esiason's brilliant passing, until they succumbed to unexplainable last-minute mistakes for the third consecutive non-strike game.

...along with throwing a touchdown pass to receiver Jamie Williams against the defense of Bengal Emanuel King in a come-from-behind victory Sunday at Riverfront Stadium.

"I've never been a part of anything quite like that," Cincinnati receiver Cris Collinsworth said. "That was unbelievable."

In the last pre-strike game, the Bengals failed to run out the clock and lost to San Francisco. Last week, the clock ran out before they could get off a potential game-tying field goal in a loss to Pittsburgh.

The two unusual defeats resulted in sarcastic signs at Riverfront on Sunday, as fans reminded Esiason — the team's union representative — and Coach Sam Wyche of the clock failures.

Esiason turned first-half jeers into second-half cheers with a pair of touchdowns passes — a 47-yard toss to Eddie Brown at the start of the third quarter and a 3-yard pass to Anthony Munoz on a tackle-eligible play that put Cincinnati ahead 29-14 with 6:41 to play.

At that point, the Bengals felt they'd ended their two-game woes.

"You're sitting on the sideline congratulating the guy who just made the touchdown, Anthony, and you feel very secure," Esiason said.

"At that point you've got to feel like we've done our job, the game's over, let's get out of here," Collinsworth said.

The Oilers had other ideas.

Cowboy win could turn boos to cheers

By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

IRVING — The Dallas Cowboys go into tonight's NFL showdown with the New York Giants wondering how warmly they'll be received by the Texas Stadium fans.

"We're booed at home and booed on the road," said Cowboys' free safety Mike Downs. "The only difference in this game is that we didn't have to get on an airplane to play it."

Dallas cornerback Everson Walls said, "It could be rough out there but if we win, we'll probably be cheered and it looks like the Giants are the only team we can beat."

Dallas beat the Giants 16-14 in the final game before the strike.

The Cowboys are now 3-3 and trail the NFC East leading Washington Redskins by two games after losing 37-20 to Philadelphia last week.

Dallas was 2-1 in replacement games and won over the fans but the veteran players were booed upon their return.

The Cowboys had 17 players cross the picket line. The players held a closed door meeting this week to air their differences.

"We had to put the strike behind us and move forward," said running back Tony Dorsett.

Dallas player representative Doug Cosbie said, "A lot of guys were upset (over the picket line crossing) but I think that is behind us now."

Dorsett trade rumors flew during the week after the running back and Herschel Walker complained they weren't being given the ball enough.

Kenya's Hussein wins New York City Marathon

By BERT ROSENTHAL
AP Track Writer

NEW YORK — The little Kenyan city of Kapsabet has produced some of the world's outstanding distance runners, including Kip Keino and Henry Rono. Ibrahim Hussein can now be added to that list.

Hussein, 29, scored the biggest victory of his career Sunday, capturing the New York City Marathon in two hours, 11 minutes, 1 second.

"There's so many (great runners) from where I come from ... " said Hussein, who was born on the outskirts of Kapsabet, a town of about 30,000. "They know me as a runner (there), but now they might know me better because I won the New York City Marathon."

He won it in convincing fashion.

After seizing the lead from early pacesetter Pat Petersen shortly past the 14-mile point of the 26-mile, 385-yard test through New York City's five boroughs, Hussein held it the rest of the way with a series of surges that discouraged his closest opposition in the record field of more than 22,000 entrants.

"I was expecting those guys to move in," Hussein said about a large pack, including two-time winner Orlando Pizzolato of Italy, that had settled in behind Petersen. "I wanted to be fresh when they arrived."

They never arrived, at least not close enough to threaten Hussein.

They did arrive, however, just in time to catch Petersen.

With about 200 yards remaining, the tiring Petersen was passed by Gianni DeMadonna of Italy, the runner-up in 2:11:53, and Pete Pfitzinger, winner of the 1984 U.S. Olympic Trials, who finished third in 2:11:54.

Petersen wound up fourth in 2:12:03, and was followed by Tommy Ekblom of Finland in 2:12:31 and Pizzolato in 2:12:50.

Defending champion Gianni Poli of Italy dropped out after about 15½ miles, while four-time winner Bill Rodgers, 39, struggled home 55th in 2:25:01.

This was Hussein's third appearance in the New York City Marathon, and his first victory. He finished ninth in his debut in 1985 and was fifth last year. In his other two marathons, he won at Honolulu in 1985 in a course-record 2:12:08 and defended his title last year in 2:11:44, breaking his course mark.

Britain's Priscilla Welch, also making her third start in the New York City Marathon, scored her first victory in the women's division, clocking 2:30:17. It was the slowest by a woman's winner since 1978, when Grete Waitz of Norway won the first of her eight New York City Marathon titles in 2:32:30.

Waitz, the five-time defending champion, did not compete Sunday because of injury.

The 1981 woman's champion, Allison Roe of New Zealand, dropped out before the 10-mile mark.

Welch, however, did have the distinction of becoming the oldest woman's winner. She is 42 years, 344 days. The previous oldest winner — and the last American champion — Miki Gorman, was 42 years, 75 days, when she won for the second year in a row in 1977.

Verrazano Narrows Bridge is jammed packed Sunday for the the New York City Marathon.

French runners finished second and third, with Francoise Bonnet the runner-up in 2:31:22, followed by Jocelyne Villeton in 2:32:03.

But the race belonged to Hussein, a former Western Athletic Conference steeplechase champion at the University of New Mexico.

After falling far behind Petersen in the early going, when the determined American went out at a sizzling pace, Hussein gradually began to close in on him toward the halfway mark.

"When the race started, I was going to watch the guys who I knew were serious," Hussein said. "And Pat Petersen, I knew, was serious."

Petersen, the fourth-place finisher in 1984 and third in 1985, was eager to atone for a dismal 2:30:56 performance last year.

He bolted into a 35-second lead at five miles, and appeared ready to "steal" the race. But he got caught in the act.

"I went out a little too fast," Petersen said. "I got anxious at the start."

But Petersen added, "I've never been a patient person. I'm not going to start now."

"Last year was a total bomb," he said. "This year, I was psyched. I was happy until the last 200 yards. Then, I was just spent. I ran the way I wanted. I wouldn't do it any different."

Neither would Hussein.

He perfectly judged Petersen's early speed, before making his decisive move.

It was the second major marathon victory by a Kenyan in recent months. In September, Douglas Wakiihuru, competing in only his third marathon, was the gold medalist in the World Track and Field Championships at Rome.

Their compatriots, Keino and Rono, established their world-class credentials years ago. Keino won the gold medal in the 1,500 meters and the silver in the 5,000 in the 1968 Olympics, while Rono set four world records within a 90-day period in 1979.

Hussein came into Sunday's race extremely confident.

"Last year, I was too scared," he said. "I wasn't as confident as I am now."

He also said he "wasn't going to quit marathoning until I won the New York City Marathon."

The victory, which earned Hussein $25,000 plus a new car, will not mean that Hussein is quitting.

He plans to go for his third straight victory in the Honolulu Marathon Dec. 13.

"I'm a marathoner now," he said. "I concentrate on those races, because I run only two of them a year, and I want to run them well."

yards with two touchdowns and two interceptions. "They did a nice job on the pass rush. I had time. I probably should have just thrown the ball away."

Bears 31, Chiefs 28

Jim McMahon brought Chicago from behind for the second straight week, throwing two TD passes to Willie Gault in the fourth quarter after Kansas City led 28-14 on four scoring passes by Bill Kenney.

McMahon, who won his 24th consecutive game as a starter, completed 23 of 34 passes for 287 yards, including touchdowns of 25 and 38 yards to Gault. McMahon also threw a 28-yard scoring pass to Cap Boso in the first half.

The Chiefs led 14-0 on Kenney's TD passes of 29 yards to Carlos Carson and 15 yards to Jonathan Hayes, before Dennis Gentry returned a kickoff 88 yards for the Bears. Larry Moriarty caught a four-yard scoring pass from Kenney in the second quarter, and the Chiefs took a 28-14 advantage when Kenney hit Stephone Paige with a 43-yarder.

Colts 19, Jets 14

Albert Bentley, whose days as a starter are numbered because of the arrival of All-Pro Eric Dickerson, rushed for 145 yards as Indianapolis beat New York to keep a share of the AFC East lead with New England.

Jack Trudeau threw a 44-yard flea-flicker touchdown pass to Matt Bouza and Dean Biasucci kicked four field goals for the Colts.

Dickerson, acquired from the Rams on Saturday, rushed for 38 yards in 10 carries and gained 28 yards after catching a swing pass in the first quarter.

Saints 38, Falcons 0

New Orleans intercepted five passes by Atlanta quarterback Scott Campbell to post their sixth shutout in 21 years of existence.

AP Laserphoto

The Indianapolis Colts wasted little time putting their new weapon to use, running back Eric Dickerson.

Bobby Hebert completed his first six passes in two first-quarter scoring drives for the Saints. In New Orleans' first possession, Hebert completed three passes for 19 yards and also ran twice for 25 in an 80-yard drive he capped by hitting Mike Jones with a seven-yard scoring pass.

Dalton Hilliard later scored touchdowns on runs of five and 30 yards.

It was the worst loss for Atlanta since the Los Angeles Rams defeated the Falcons 59-0 in 1976.

Patriots 26, Raiders 23

Los Angeles rallied from a 23-6 deficit to tie the score, but Tony Franklin's fourth field goal, a 29-yarder with one second left, gave New England the victory in Bo Jackson's NFL debut.

The Raiders scored 17 points in the final 12 minutes, including Chris Bahr's 39-yard field goal that tied the score with 46 seconds remaining.

With five seconds left, Franklin's 34-yard field goal attempt failed, but the Raiders were penalized for being offsides. Franklin connected on his second attempt.

Dolphins 35, Steelers 24

Pittsburgh led 21-7 at halftime, but Dan Marino threw three of his four touchdown passes in the second half to bring Miami back.

Marino completed 25 of 31 passes for 332 yards, including scoring passes of 41 and 33 yards to Mark Clayton and 50 yards to Mark Duper in the second half. It was the 24th time in his four-year career that Marino, who also had a two-yard touchdown pass to Bruce Hardy in the second quarter, has thrown for more than 300 yards.

Redskins 27, Bills 7

Washington improved its record to 6-1 with an easy victory over Buffalo as Jay Schroeder threw two touchdown passes to Kelvin Bryant and the Redskins intercepted three passes by Jim Kelly.

George Rogers returned to the Redskins starting lineup after a shoulder injury and keyed the Washington rushing attack with 125 yards, while the Redskins defense limited the Bills to 21 yards rushing and forced four turnovers.

Broncos 34, Lions 0

Denver blanked Detroit for its first shutout since 1984, and John Elway ran for two touchdowns and passed 35 yards to Vance Johnson for another.

The Broncos scored on their first three possessions for a 17-0 first-quarter advantage and kept the Lions in their own end of the field, allowing them to cross midfield only four times.

Seahawks 28, Vikings 17

Dave Krieg passed for three Seattle touchdowns before being knocked out of the game in the fourth quarter against Minnesota.

Krieg passed 27 yards to Steve Largent for a touchdown that gave the Seahawks a 21-10 lead 3:46 into the second half. Krieg also passed four yards to Daryl Turner for a first-quarter touchdown and 30 yards to running back Curt Warner for another score in the second period.

49ers 31, Rams 10

Joe Montana completed 21 of 30 passes for 294 yards and three touchdowns, two of them in San Francisco's 17-point second quarter against Los Angeles.

With the score 7-3 after one quarter, Montana threw touchdown passes of 17 yards to Mike Wilson and two yards to John Frank and Ray Wersching kicked a 22-yard field goal in the second period for a 24-3 halftime lead.

Buccaneers 23, Packers 17

Steve DeBerg drove Tampa Bay 84 yards for a touchdown to open the second half and threw a scoring pass to Gerald Carter a minute later to break open the game against Green Bay.

Leading 3-0 at the half, the Buccaneers moved 84 yards on 11 plays, with DeBerg hitting passes of 12 yards to Calvin Magee and 12 and 20 yards to Mark Carrier. Jeff Smith's one-yard run capped the 5½-minute drive.

Eagles 28, Cardinals 23

Randall Cunningham's third touchdown pass of the game, a nine-yarder to Gregg Garrity with 40 seconds remaining, lifted Philadelphia over St. Louis.

The Eagles drove 70 yards in eight plays to the winning touchdown after falling behind 23-21 with 1:50 left on a touchdown pass from Neil Lomax to Robert Awalt.

Philadelphia led 21-6 in the third quarter, but Lomax, sparked St. Louis' comeback with a 14-yard touchdown pass to J.T. Smith.

Aguirre's 36-point effort paces Mavs past Nuggets

FORT WORTH (AP) — Sunday night in their exhibition finale, the Dallas Mavericks finally displayed the type of fastbreak offense coach John MacLeod's been seeking as the Mavs scored a 128-118 victory over the Denver Nuggets.

Mark Aguirre scored 36 points to lead Dallas, which closed its exhibition schedule with a 3-4 record. Denver slipped to 5-3.

"We played the fastbreak a lot better," MacLeod said. "We got the ball to the open man."

MacLeod said his team still has some improving to do before they open the regular season Friday night at home against the Utah Jazz.

"I don't think we're ready to open the season but we took a big step," MacLeod said. "We've got to crank it up on the energy level a little more.

"When you play like we did last year people are going to be ready for you. We have to play at a greater intensity level than we did last year to meet the challenge."

Denver Coach Doug Moe also thinks his team has to improve before its opener.

"We threw the ball away too many times and we just made a million mistakes," Moe said. "We were just not ready for the onslaught.

Watson ends slump in San Antonio

By BOB GREEN
AP Golf Writer

SAN ANTONIO — Curtis Strange won the PGA Tour's money-winning title. Paul Azinger won Player of the Year. Tom Watson won.

"He's back," Azinger howled as he watched Watson's 6-iron tee shot on the final hole nestle in close to the cup Sunday in the Nabisco Championships of Golf, the final official event on the PGA Tour schedule.

"You can write it: he's back. It's great for him and it's good for golf," Azinger said.

"I'm about the happiest guy in the whole world," Watson said after he successfully battled his own quivering nerves and brought an end to a non-winning string that went back to July 1984. "After three years of frustration, three years of questions, three years of dealing with the questions and frustrations, dealing with the internal questions ..."

Watson, once golf's greatest player but a deeply frustrated struggler for three long years, let the sentence trail off unfinished.

But those questions and frustrations came to an end in his scrambling, struggling, 2-under-par 68 that gave him a 268 total and a two-shot victory over Chip Beck on the Oak Hills Country Club course.

It also gave Watson $384,000 from the total purse of $3 million, almost 10 percent of the total distributed on the PGA Tour this season. The prize money was broken down into $2 million for the tournament and another $1 million for the Nabisco Grand Prix of Golf, which also ended in this event.

For Watson, however, the money didn't really matter.

"The money never was a factor. The victory is much more important. That's what I'm out here trying to do, win golf tournaments," Watson said.

It was very important to others, however.

There was Strange, who finished dead last in the 30-man field but remained first in the Grand Prix standings. He won a total of $207,000 and took his second money-winning title with a record total of $925,941.

The title he wanted, however, eluded him. His 293 total, 13 over par, knocked him out of the Top 10 in scoring average, reduced his point total and handed the Player of the Year title to the disbelieving Azinger.

"Are you sure? I didn't think I had a chance," Azinger asked.

"It's tough," said Strange, who had led the Player of the Year standings since August. "It's tough to swallow. I'm embarassed."

Azinger finished second on the money-winning list at $822,481, far ahead of the record $653,296 won by Greg Norman last year.

Watson led all the way in acquiring his 32nd Tour triumph, a total that does not include his five British Open titles.

But it wasn't easy.

He was armed with a four-shot lead on the back nine before, he said, "the nerves took hold."

"The pressure was getting to me. I felt it. When I was winning a lot, in this position I'd be expecting to win. This time, I was hoping to win," Watson said. "I was nervous. I was pacing like a leopard in some hunter's gunsights."

Spurs nip Kings, 135-131

SHELBY, Mont. (AP) — Johnny Dawkins scored 24 points and Alvin Robertson added 20 as San Antonio edged Sacramento 135-131 Sunday afternoon in a National Basketball Association preseason game here.

Robertson, a 6-foot-4 guard, fueled a third-quarter rally as the Spurs outscored the Kings 40-29.

He and Dawkins combined for 14 points in the period, which erased a 5-point halftime deficit. Robertson also had 9 rebounds and 9 assists.

The San Antonio victory overshadowed a fine all-around performance from Sacramento forward Otis Thorpe.

The 6-11 forward scored 35 points and added 13 rebounds and 2 blocked shots.

Veteran guard Reggie Theus added 28 points for the Kings, while Harold Pressley scored 22.

Sacramento led by as many as 13 points in the first quarter as Theus scored 10. However, the Kings went three minutes without scoring early in the second period, and the lead evaporated.

Cowboys go from 'America's Team' to nobody's team

DALLAS (AP) — The proud nickname of "America's Team" has been drowned out in a chorus of jeers lately as fans have fallen out of love with the Dallas Cowboys.

"I almost feel like we should move out of the city and go somewhere we are appreciated," said running back Tony Dorsett, who was booed on the field after he crossed the picket line.

A Dallas Morning News telephone poll last week showed that 57.1 percent of the 266 people polled said they liked the Cowboys less since the National Football League players' strike; 65.1 percent blamed the change on the walkout, players' attitudes or players' salaries. Only 4.5 percent blamed the bad feelings on management.

About 24 percent of the respondents said they were negative toward the team before the strike.

The survey, which had a margin of error of plus or minus 6 percentage points, also showed that Dallas' other professional teams, the Mavericks and Sidekicks are becoming more popular.

Explanations for how the city's love for the Cowboys went on the rocks include the marketing and success of the replacement players, the fact that Dallas is a non-union city, frustration with the team's showing over the last three years and some harsh comments made during the strike.

In the past, Dallas was proud of the Cowboys as the team racked up five Super Bowl appearances in the 1970s and three NFC title game appearances in the early 1980s.

Team President Tex Schramm says the relationship between the team and its fans is a love affair.

If that's true, 1984 saw a trial separation when Dallas missed the playoffs for the first time in 10 years, 1985 saw a reconciliation with the NFC-East title and 1986 was the first rumble of divorce when the Cowboys had their first losing season in 22 years.

"This city is geared to support a winner. And people here are geared to knock down, ridicule and step on a loser," said Drew Pearson, a former Cowboy.

Cowboys fans attended the two home replacement games 100,000 strong. They booed quarterback Danny White and Dorsett, who both crossed picket lines. Fans complained they had come to watch replacement quarterback Kevin Sweeney and felt cheated when Coach Tom Landry started White.

Despite the rift between team and fans, Dallas wants to take its team back, Pearson said.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ952 ♡73 ◇A82 ♣K95
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—In light of the fact that you have a minimum opening bid, you would like to bid two spades to slow the auction down. However, in this sequence that strongly suggests a six-card spade suit. Therefore, we prefer a raise to three clubs.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ952 ♡73 ◇A82 ♣K95
The auction has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Yes this is the same hand as above, but the fact that partner has responded in diamonds makes a difference. Now there is no inference to be drawn about a spade rebid, since the diamond response stole most of the bidding space. Nevertheless, we still prefer the raise of partner's suit, but by a slender margin over two spades.

Q.3—As South vulnerable, you hold:
♠AQ952 ♡K95 ◇73 ♣K82
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—It depends on your methods. If you still bid in the old style, where the two-over-one response is not a game force, a rebid of two no trump would tend to show about 14-15 high-card points. Therefore, you would be forced to rebid two spades. If, however, you play the modern style, two no trump describes your hand perfectly.

Q.4—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK98542 ♡95 ◇AQ103 ♣
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Obviously, a slam will have good play if partner has a heart control. Since Blackwood won't answer your question, you have to use a cue-bidding sequence. Bid four clubs, your cheapest first-round control. That will also serve to reveal possible duplication of values.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK98542 ♡95 ◇AQ103 ♣
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	4 ♡	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—Things are working out nicely, and it does no harm to check out grand slam possibilities. It's time to cue-bid your other first-round control—five diamonds.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AK98542 ♡95 ◇AQ103 ♣
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♠	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	4 ♡	Pass
5 ◇	Pass	6 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—With his six-diamond cue-bid partner has promised second-round diamond control (probably the king), but has denied second-round heart control by bypassing the second cue-bid in that suit. Therefore, a grand slam must be a poor proposition. Bid six spades.

Prince Charles calls wife British army's 'most glamorous colonel'

BERLIN (AP) — Prince Charles called Princess Diana the British army's "most glamorous colonel" as the royal couple began a weeklong West German visit amid press speculation at home that their marriage is in trouble.

Charles, 38, and Diana, 26, smiled and waved Sunday as they stepped off their plane. They were greeted by West Berlin Mayor Eberhard Diepgen and then went to city hall for a reception.

"My wife is the most glamorous colonel in the British army," Charles said while he and Diana were shaking hands with some people in the crowd.

Diana has the honorary title of colonel-in-chief of the Royal Hampshire Regiment, which has units stationed in West Berlin. The princess smiled at her husband's comment.

Their itinerary called for visits to Bonn, Cologne, Munich, Hamburg and Celle.

ELAT, Israel (AP) — Sylvester Stallone laughed off a close call he had with a helicopter on the set of "Rambo III."

Stallone

"I suppose if it had gotten any lower I could have saved the cost of a haircut," production spokesman Tom Gray quoted Stallone as saying Sunday after the helicopter missed his head by a few inches. Stallone ducked just in time and escaped unharmed, Gray said.

Gray said the scene called for a French-made Puma helicopter to buzz Stallone as explosives went off and fire flared around the actor.

Gray said the pilot was supposed to fly the copter about 6 feet above Stallone's head but misjudged the distance because of dust and flames.

Rambo III is scheduled for release in the summer.

MIAMI BEACH, Fla. (AP) — Guitarist Ron Wood, joined by "Miami Vice" television star Don Johnson for a showing of Wood's artwork, is keeping busy without the Rolling Stones.

"I give it a couple of years before we work together again," Wood said Sunday of the Stones, the venerable rock 'n' roll band he joined more than a decade ago. "But I'm very hopeful about that."

With star singer Mick Jagger highlighting his solo career, the Stones aren't providing any work for Wood.

Wood displayed his woodcuts, etchings, charcoals, watercolors and silkscreens at the former Arlington Hotel, which will open with a musical performance by him in mid-December as the oceanfront "Woody's On The Beach."

His drawings depicted celebrities, mainly rock stars. There was a sketch of Johnson, who made a quick appearance, at the head of the display. Wood played on Johnson's 1986 album.

ESTES PARK, Colo. (AP) — Explorer Will Steger, who completed a dogsled trip to the North Pole last year, is now aiming to reach the South Pole by the same method.

Steger

Steger will make the official announcement of the 1990 Antarctica expedition Dec. 1 in New York, he said Saturday at a meeting of the Explorer's Club, an international group of several thousand adventurers.

The stakes are high, he said. "Your travel in the Arctic or Antarctica is almost literally on your hands and knees," he said. "It's a very humbling environment."

"You have to make your life out of it. And it's a great thing to dedicate your life to," the 43-year-old Minnesota native said.

In addition to himself, the Antarctica expedition will include a Russian, an Englishman, a Canadian, a Japanese and a Frenchman, he said.

The international roster is aimed at raising awareness of environmental and political concerns that Antarctica will pose to the world in the near future.

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC, which already has announced plans to cut 200 jobs, will eliminate 500 more next year, according to a report published today.

Network executives proposed the cuts Friday in a 1988 business plan presented to General Electric Co., which owns NBC, according to The New York Times.

NBC, which has nearly 8,000 employees, has said it will dismiss 200 members of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians, which struck June 29. Its members were scheduled to return to work today, but NBC News already has fired some, said the Times.

About half of the immediate 200 job cuts would be from NBC News, the report said.

After the initial 200, a review could lead to 150 more union job cuts by the end of December, the newspaper said.

Wall Street's new buzzword: Contraction

By JAMES STERNGOLD
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — Wall Street, shaken by the turmoil in the stock market, is slamming the brakes on what had been the greatest boom in American financial history. After a decade of unprecedented growth, fueled by a huge flow of profits, a new word is working its way into the financial lexicon: contraction.

A strangely exuberant, magical era of soaring bonuses, bull markets, an endless flow of billion-dollar deals, multimillion-dollar fees and wholesale migrations from the nation's best business schools to securities houses appears to be coming to a close.

"You're talking about more than fine-tuning at this point," said Edward J. Lill, a former securities industry consultant and now the chief financial officer of E.F. Hutton & Co., which announced on Friday that it was laying off 40 people in its municipal bond department. "This is real downsizing. The word for it industrywide really is contraction."

For more than six months Wall Street leaders have spoken of slowing down their torrid growth pace in anticipation of some cooling of the markets and of the takeover fever.

There had even been some layoffs before Black Monday, Oct. 19, as some firms sought to trim their bloated ranks after doubling or even tripling in size over the last five years. The market collapse rattled managers who were unprepared to deal with such huge numbers of people in hard times.

They were shaken even though the Dow Jones industrial average partly recovered last Thursday and Friday, after falling by 508 points on Oct. 19 and remaining volatile until the rally.

"After what we've been through, you have to look closely at all of your costs and see how you can keep them down," said Max C. Chapman Jr., president of Kidder, Peabody & Co. "And your costs are mostly people." Kidder, Peabody announced earlier last month that it was laying off 150 of its staff.

Whether this also means that the unusually tough influence the securities industry has come to exercise over corporate America will wane remains to be seen. Not all firms will contract by the same amount, and some executives say some departments will grow while others shrink as they seek to build businesses where they feel they have some competitive advantage.

The next tangible measure of the contraction will be year-end bonuses, which are generally announced internally at the major securities houses near Christmas. The discreet envelopes are unlikely to call up visions of European sports cars and second homes on the beach as they have for so many of the past five years.

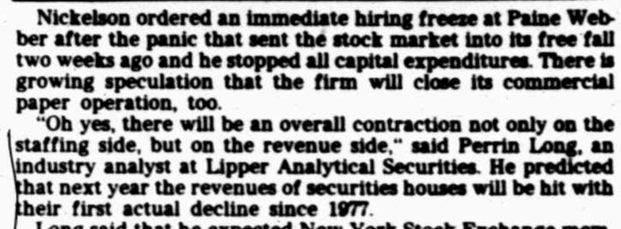
"I wouldn't think that a 50 percent cut would be out of order," said Peter A. Cohen, the chairman of Shearson Lehman Brothers.

Senior executives of other firms, ranging from Goldman, Sachs & Co. and the First Boston Corp. to Kidder, Peabody and Salomon Brothers, agreed that bonus checks were likely to reflect sharply altered expectations about the future.

"What you're going to see is that the best people might do as well as they did last year, the middle people will see a significant decline, and the people at the lower end are going to see major hits" to their bonuses, said the head of investment banking at one of Wall Street's top firms who asked not to be identified.

On Wall Street, the annual bonus is more than the embellishment of six-figure incomes. This one-time payment traditionally makes up from a quarter to three-fourths of an investment banker's total income.

Donald E. Nickelson, the president of Paine Webber Inc., said: "The old rules are off. We're in a new mode."



Nickelson ordered an immediate hiring freeze at Paine Webber after the panic that sent the stock market into its free fall two weeks ago and he stopped all capital expenditures. There is growing speculation that the firm will close its commercial paper operation, too.

"Oh yes, there will be an overall contraction not only on the staffing side, but on the revenue side," said Perrin Long, an industry analyst at Lipper Analytical Securities. He predicted that next year the revenues of securities houses will be hit with their first actual decline since 1977.

Long said that he expected New York Stock Exchange member firms to generate $52.5 billion in revenues this year, compared with $50 billion last year, but he forecast a slip back to $50 billion in 1988.

Market drop scrambles tax plans

NEW YORK (AP) — There isn't likely to be any recession this year in the business of giving yearend tax advice to investors.

With stock prices hitting new highs and then taking a record-breaking drop all in the space of a few months, many active investors have a lot to sort out — and not much time to do it in, since the Dec. 31 deadline for tax-planning maneuvers is less than nine weeks away.

On top of that, people are still coming to grips with the changes in the rules mandated by the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

For instance, there used to be a way to finagle with gains on stocks sold in the last five days of December, putting them into either the year just ending or the new year to suit your own circumstances.

No more. All transactions conducted through the close on New Year's Eve count for 1987.

The traditional advice of the experts is to get your accounts lined up early — say, at the beginning of October — to avoid the last-minute rush.

But after the stock market collapse in the latter part of October this year, a good many investors who did that may find their circumstances greatly changed.

In all kinds of financial weather, of course, the idea of yearend strategies is to minimize your tax obligations without deviating unduly from your overall investment plan.

"For example, if a tally of all your trading results shows you are in a net capital gain position, consider recognizing capital losses to offset this gain," says the accounting firm of Ernst & Whinney.

People with net losses, the firm notes, can deduct up to $3,000 of them each year against their other income. Losses exceeding $3,000 can be carried over to future years.

These rules apply not just to stocks, but to most other financial assets. Thus, a paper loss in, say, a municipal bond mutual fund could be used to offset part of a gain from the sale of a stock earlier in the year.

To realize a mutual fund gain or loss, you don't have to redeem it for cash. A telephone switch into a money market fund in the same fund family accomplishes the same result.

What if you want to realize a loss but also want to stick with the investment? You can't sell the investment and immediately buy it back again (the Internal Revenue Service calls that a "wash sale").

But you can move, say, from one mutual fund to another with similar objectives. Or you can stay with the same fund if the selling and buying are done at least 31 days apart.

Advisers have been recommending that investors consider waiting until 1988 to cash in any gains on investments held for six months or less, since the top tax rate on short-term gains and other ordinary income drops from 38.5 percent this year to 28 percent (33 percent for some high-earning taxpayers) next year.

With the selloffs that have hit both the bond market and the stock market since late summer, however, a lot of people have no short-term gains to worry about.

Big losers turn litigants in aftermath of crash

DALLAS (AP) — Angry investors who lost money in the stock market's crash are turning to lawyers for help in an attempt to recoup some of their losses, authorities say.

At least two lawsuits have been filed against brokerages since the crash and lawyers, brokers and stock exchange officials say these may be just the beginning of an avalanche of suits likely to be filed in the coming weeks.

"People lost money," a Dallas broker said. "It puts them under tremendous pressure psychologically. It's like sliding downhill when you can't stop."

"They want to do anything they can to retrieve their mistakes and they definitely want to blame someone else," the broker added.

Since Oct. 19 when the Dow Jones industrial average fell 508 points and in the days of volatility that followed, many investors lost heavily because trades were not completed promptly or not at the prices they ordered. In some cases, stop orders designed to limit losses could not be honored because values plunged so fast.

Although no suits have been filed in the Dallas-Fort Worth area since the crash, lawyers and regulators say it's just a matter of time.

"We've received five times the number of complaints we normally get," said Marion Antley, a consumer affairs specialist in the Fort Worth regional office of the Securities Exchange Commission. "A lot of people are upset and say they want something done about it."

Economy still in recovery

From Staff Reports

The local economy isn't booming, but is continuing a steady recovery, according to economic indicators released by the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Economic Development Division.

Employment showed the most dramatic improvement in September, with the unemployment rate plunging 34.40 percent and total unemployment dropping 33.85 percent, compared to 1986 figures. At the same time, total employment grew 4.81 percent while the total labor force remained steady at 52,200 people.

Hardest hit continues to be commercial construction, with only one permit issued by the city in September. New commercial permits issued to date are down 52.9 percent over the same nine month period last year.

Residential permits recorded a healthy increase, with 183 being issued so far in 1987 — up 22 percent from the 150 issued in the first nine months of 1986. New residential valuations also up — 30.27 percent over January to Septemebr last year.

Bank deposits stood 2.69 percent above year-ago levels. Local banks had $1.5 billion on deposit at the end of last month. Savings and loans saw an even larger increase, holding 14.45 percent more deposits.

Utilities also continue to hold steady, with water, gas and electrical connections slipping less than one percent.

Thrift executives: Recovery at least three years away

DALLAS (AP) — A majority of chief executives from Texas savings and loans institutions say it will take at least three years for thrifts to return to satisfactory levels of profitability and net worth, a survey shows.

More than 80 percent of thrift executives made the assessment to the Dallas Morning News in a survey of S&L leaders. Many blamed a grim economy for their problems.

In the survey results, published today, almost 60 percent admitted that the reputation of their industry had been severely damaged.

About the same number say the recently approved three-year, $10.8 billion bailout of the S&L insurance fund will be inadequate to clean up after failed thrifts around the nation.

"I wouldn't even want to begin trying to come up with a dollar amount," the chief of one Dallas S&L that is struggling but still relatively healthy told the newspaper. "It's indeterminable. I don't think there's enough money to do the job."

Statewide, more than one-quarter of S&Ls are insolvent, officials say, and Texas thrifts as a group have a negative net worth. Some large cases of alleged fraud and mismanagement caused the Justice Department to launch what it called the largest banking fraud investigation ever.

The newspaper's research department conducted a telephone poll from Oct. 7 to Oct. 19, contacting each of the 281 thrifts listed in the 1987 Texas Savings & Loan Directory.

Those responding were promised confidentiality. Chief executives from 206, or 73 percent, of the institutions responded, and another 15 thrifts refused.

Thrifts' single biggest problem, in the view of CEOs, was the Texas economy. When asked to name major factors that created the S&L industry's crisis, 82 percent mentioned general economic conditions and 35 percent answered industry deregulation of interest rates and types of lending.

Publisher tops Forbes' small business list

NEW YORK (AP) — Value Line, a New York-based financial publisher, took the top spot in Forbes magazine's 1987 ranking of America's 200 best small companies, the magazine said Sunday.

Second was Seaman Furniture, a New York-based retailer, followed by Franklin Resources, a fund-management company based in San Francisco.

Forbes said it evaluated more than 5,000 companies nationwide with sales between $1 million and $315 million for its ninth annual ranking of small companies.

The average return on equity for Value Line, which publishes profiles of corporations and industry groups, amounted to 70.8 percent over the past five years and 68.5 percent over the past 12 months, the magazine said.

BUSINESS BRIEFS

Economists agree reducing deficit crucial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economists ranging from former Nixon adviser Herbert Stein to liberal John Kenneth Galbraith are offering the same advice on what to do after the stock market crash: Reduce the federal budget deficit and interest rates.

Galbraith, an adviser to Presidents Roosevelt and Kennedy, said Friday that an effort to cut the deficit "may well be important as a support to financial and international confidence."

"The dollar should be allowed to decline as far and as fast as it will" to push down interest rates and stimulate the economy, agreed Stein, former chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers under President Nixon.

British government props up new BP stock

LONDON (AP) — Trading in British Petroleum Co. PLC shares began after the government promised to hold a floor under them, but underwriters still stood to take a loss as prices and interest in the new offering remained low.

The new partly-paid BP shares began trading Friday and closed at $1.48. The Bank of England stood ready to buy them back at $1.20 a share.

Underwriters had agreed to buy the BP shares from the government at $2.08 each with the expectation they would be able to resell them to the public at a profit.

DOT overrules USAir merger objections

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department approved the $1.6 billion merger of USAir and Piedmont Airlines, overruling an administrative law judge's recommendation that the merger would reduce competition in some areas.

The agreement, approved Friday, will create the nation's fifth-largest air carrier and will combine two of the industry's most financially successful airlines.

Grim humor thrives as Wall Street tries to forget

Smiling eases traders' woes

By GLENN KRAMON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — On Wall Street, the rumor was that Merrill Lynch had adjusted its investment portfolio — to 50 percent cash and 50 percent canned goods.

On bumpers around the country, the latest sticker proclaims, "My Other Porsche Is For Sale."

In Miami, production is said to have begun on a new movie, "Rambo Gets a Margin Call."

And what do you say to an investment banker? "Fill 'er up."

Such is the rather grim humor that has emerged on the trading floors and in the conference rooms of investment firms in the past two weeks.

Of course, for the many investors who have lost hundreds, thousands or even millions of dollars, the stock market plunge is hardly a laughing matter. But the nature of black humor is that it surfaces in the most trying times. You either laugh or cry.

Wall Street seems to generate more than its fair share of this kind of humor. It had a field day with the foibles of Gary Hart and the tragedy of the space shuttle. "You got 27 one-liners in 10 minutes," one investment professional said.

The difference this time, though, is that the market's collapse has hit closer to home. Many traders and analysts said the jokes have been far scarcer.

"When bad things happen to other people, you have a lot more jokes," said Edward E. Yardeni, chief economist at Prudential-Bache Securities. "But when it happens to us, it's not so funny."

Still, almost all those interviewed this week volunteered that they had heard a few good jokes, although they admitted that many were too tasteless to print.

Much of the humor deals with the selloff's impact on high-flying investors.

"How many investment bankers can you fit into the back of a pickup?" goes one. "Only two — you have to leave room for the lawn mowers."

Some are dusted off from previous crises and given a fresh spin. Leigh S. Curry, an institutional salesman at Paine Webber Inc., offers this one: "A woman walking down Wall Street sees a frog that begs, 'Kiss me and I'll turn into an arbitrager.' The woman refuses. 'Not a chance,' she says, putting the frog into her purse. 'A talking frog might be worth something.'"

A year or so ago, that one circulated with an Oklahoma oilman in the title role.

Perhaps the most frequently heard joke of the past two weeks: "What do you call a Harvard MBA? Waiter!"

Other jokes deal with the turmoil's effect on securities firms themselves. For example, the rumor on Wall Street is that two huge firms, Shearson Lehman Brothers and Paine Webber, plan to merge. The new firm would be called Shear Paine.

The layoffs at Salomon Brothers earlier this month prompted this glum joke: "What's the difference between Salomon Brothers and other Wall Street firms? About two months."

Politicians have also come under fire from Wall Street's wits. One joke speared Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., the Delaware Democrat who withdrew from the presidential race amid disclosures that he lifted portions of his speeches from other politicians. Biden's anodyne comment on the market panic: "We have nothing to fear but fear itself."

Not surprisingly, much of the humor deals with the morbid stereotype of distraught brokers taking their own lives:

What do they ask you when you want a room at the Hyatt? "Is it for sleeping, or jumping?"

Why haven't more brokers taken the plunge? "You can't open the windows."

What is the precipitation probability? "Rain, 30 percent, brokers, 70."

And how do you get a broker down from a tree? "Cut the rope."

There are also old favorites, reemerging for a return appearance:

"What's the best way to make a million in the stock market? Start with $2 million."

Indeed, the most recent Wall Street one-liners are really nothing new. After the Crash of 1929, the jokes sounded much like today's.

"I have an uncle working on Wall Street," goes one golden oldie, "He used to have a corner on the market. Now he has a market on the corner."

And: "Get my broker, Miss Jones." "Yes, sir. Stock or pawn?"

Yuppie-bashing favorite pastime of New York elite

By ELIZABETH KOLBERT
New YorkTimes News Service

NEW YORK (NYT) — First came the horror stories of young stockbrokers too poor or shaken to order radicchio and warm goat cheese salads at their favorite track-lighted restaurants.

Then came the jokes: What's the difference between a 28-year-old arbitrager and a pigeon? At least the pigeon can still make a deposit on a BMW.

By now, it seems, it is open season on yuppies in New York City. (For camouflage, some are rumored to be scratching the Ferragamo signatures from their shoes.)

Recently, some of the more trenchant observers of the New York scene were invited to indulge in a little yuppie-bashing. They seemed eager to oblige.

"It's fun to look into their eyes in the subways," said E. Graydon Carter, co-editor of Spy magazine, which has made just about every identifiable group in the city an object of its biting sarcasm. "It's nice to see the overdogs getting their ears clipped a bit."

Carter predicted, however, that brisk sales in such yuppie essentials as compact disks and imported appetizers would continue apace.

"Dove bars will still sell well because they're cheaper than a trip to Kenya, which they all seemed to take on weekends," he said. "You have to remember that these people are compulsive spenders."

"I've never seen anything like the gloating possibilities," said the author Tom Wolfe.

There is, however, a down side. "It was nice to see expensive restaurants packed with downy cheeks," he recalled. "It added a kind of peachy glow."

Now that yuppie-bashing is apparently in, there is some question as to whether it, like being a yuppie, will become so in that it will be out. Then, of course, there is also the question of whether yuppie-bashing was ever not in to begin with. After all, who but a mother could really love a 26-year-old who had brought home a $350,000 Christmas bonus?

"The notion that yuppies were ever admired or celebrated just isn't true," said the writer Calvin Trillin. As proof of this, Trillin pointed to a column that he had written in 1985, in the heady days when a college senior could still reasonably hope to make a million dollars by the time he or she was 30.

"Yuppie is obviously a derogatory term," Trillin wrote at that time. "If it weren't, why would so many people use the phrase 'crawling with yuppies?' I have used that phrase any number of times myself, and I can assure you that I meant it in a derogatory way every single time."

Surprisingly, even some self-confessed yuppies recently were expressing satisfaction that the days of Chardonnay and roses seemed to be coming to an end.

"It's almost a relief to read the yuppie age is dead," said Marissa Piesman, co-author of "The Yuppie Handbook" and a lawyer in the state attorney general's office. "How many interesting new restaurants can you eat at?"

For those, however, who were mourning the passage of an age in which "having it all" seemed to some a noble goal, Wolfe offered consolation.

"If you're young and unscrupulous," he said, "there's always been a place for you in New York."

Money market funds only winner from panic

By CAROLE GOULD
New York Times News Service

The rout on Wall Street has produced at least one clear winner: money market funds. "Panic in the equity markets creates a flight to safety, and money funds are one of the few groups to benefit from the general market turmoil," said Glen King Parker, publisher of Income and Safety, a Fort Lauderdale, Fla., newsletter covering fixed-income investments.

Two weeks ago, skittish investors moved $9.64 billion into taxable money market mutual funds, a record one-week inflow, with most of that money coming from sales of shares of mutual funds that invest in stocks. The total assets of the money funds rose to $256.84 billion, also a record, according to the Investment Company Institute, an industry group. Last week, the funds took in $1.16 billion more. Many banks have also been experiencing a surge of deposits in their money market accounts, which pay market rates of interest.

Money funds — there are 410 taxable ones and 155 that are tax-free — are diversified portfolios of short-term money market securities offered by brokerage firms and mutual fund companies. They differ in such features as minimum investment amounts and check-writing privileges. But the overriding difference is the type of assets they buy for their portfolios. This creates different yields and levels of risk.

Even so, the degree of risk in any money fund is very small. Though there are gradations of quality in a portfolio, fund managers trying to increase yields generally lengthen the maturities of their holdings rather than lower their quality. This strategy produced the only instance in which the public lost money in a fund — several years ago, one now-defunct fund extended too far and was caught in the spiraling interest rates of the early 80's. Shareholders lost 7 percent of their investment.

Investors can check the maturities of the various funds in the financial pages of newspapers. The average maturity is about 40 days. Parker recommends asking questions if the term extends beyond 100 days.

The funds typically invest in a mix of Treasury securities, negotiable certificates of deposit, commercial paper and other highly liquid, short-term securities. "The safest thing in the world to own is a Treasury bill," said John Markese, director of research for the American Association of Individual Investors. As a fund increases its other holdings, the yield rises, but so does the risk. Last week, funds that invested solely in Treasury obligations yielded 5.77 percent, said Susan M. Cook, editor of Donoghue's Money Fund Report, a newsletter that surveys the funds each week. Funds that also invested in gvernment agency paper, like obligations of the Federal National Mortgage Association, yielded 6.29 percent.

The riskier funds buy top-rated paper of banks and corporations, as well as Eurodollars (deposits at offshore branches of domestic banks and foreign banks that accept American dollars), Yankee dollars (deposits at domestic branches of foreign banks) and various lower-rated paper. The most aggressive funds yielded 6.75 percent, almost a full percentage point more than those buying just Treasury bills.

At the other end of the earnings spectrum are the tax-exempt funds. Last week, they offered an average tax-free yield of 4.44 percent.

Yields may also reflect different administrative costs. While money funds have no sales charges, investors are well advised to check the prospectus to see that the fund's expenses are in line. Expenses of 0.5 percent to 0.75 percent of fund assets are considered reasonable. Anything higher than that — there are a number of funds whose expense ratios approach 1 percent, Markese says — should be avoided.

Another factor is size. "Unlike the equity funds, size appears to be an advantage for money funds" in generating higher yields, Mr. Parker said. The Merrill Lynch Cash Management Account is the largest, at $18 billion, he said. The next biggest are Merrill's Ready Assets Account, Fidelity Cash Reserves and Dreyfus Liquid Assets.

Then it becomes a question of services. Minimum initial investments range from $500 to $50,000, with most funds requiring $1,000 to $2,500. Most funds do not allow investors to write checks below a certain amount, typically $500. However, some permit checks for $250 and a few, like the Capital Preservation Fund, have a $100 minimum. While many funds allow unlimited check-writing, some have monthly limits of 15 or 20. And some allow investors to switch by telephone from money instruments to equities within a family of mutual funds, a feature that is particularly important when the market is moving rapidly. Also, some of the funds permit investors to wire deposits from their money funds directly to their bank accounts.

Shaken investors who are now unwilling to accept any risk, however small, might prefer to keep funds in a bank money market deposit account. Authorized by Congress in 1982 to allow banks to compete directly with money market mutual funds, these accounts are insured for up to $100,000 by the federal government.

Given the current market turmoil, should investors transfer their money market accounts from brokerage houses to banks because of that insurance? "I see no real gains from doing that," said Markese of the investor association. Even in a worst-case scenario in which some companies would default on their commercial paper, the funds would experience only marginal losses, if any, Markese and other experts said, because of diversification and the short-term nature of their holdings. Compared with bank money accounts, "there's more risk in the funds," Markese said, "but not enough to worry about."

Moreover, the bank money accounts generally yield about one-half percentage point less than the money funds because the banks' cost of doing business usually exceeds that of the funds, said A. Michael Lipper, president of Lipper Analytical Services, which tracks mutual funds. Sometimes the gap widens even more: two weeks ago, the bank money accounts yielded 5.68 percent while the money funds brought in 6.70 percent.

Bank customers can write three checks a month without a service fee. Monthly maintenance charges should average no more than $8 to $10 and may be waived if other accounts are maintained. But additional charges may be imposed — or the interest rate cut — if the account balance falls below minimums that range from $500 to $2,500. A growing number of banks now charge customers who close out their accounts within three to six months, said Robert K. Heady, publisher of The Bank Rate Monitor in North Palm Beach, Fla. And ask about fees for wiring in deposits. Some banks may charge as much as $10 to $15 for each transaction.

Some of these restrictions do not apply to interest-bearing checking accounts that banks have also offered in recent years.

Consumers: Heating oil supplies low'

WASHINGTON (AP) — U.S inventories of heating oil are "dangerously low," according to a group affiliated with consumer activist Ralph Nader.

The Energy Information Administration's weekly report, released Thursday, showed that wholesale inventories of distillate oils, primarily home heating oil and diesel fuel, are 19 percent less than they were on the same date a year ago.

"This is dangerously low. This is the second-lowest inventory at this time of year in 30 years," said Connie Rogers of Buyers Up.

Cotton farmers reap benefits of weather

LAMESA (AP) — The price of cotton has doubled in just one year due to a devalued dollar, improved exports and increased domestic demand, and that's only part of the good news in West Texas.

Farmers say a near-perfect growing climate up to harvest time this year has left them in tall cotton. Disastrous 1986 weather left many farmers no choice but to plow over their fields, and they had to replant after heavy June rains wiped out an early crop.

"There's really a dramatic story with the cotton industry in Texas this year," Bill Gruben, senior economist with the Federal Reserve Bank in Dallas, said.

"Prices are up, yes. But there's also the risk the Southern High Plains farmers took this year, replanting in June and risking bad weather later," Gruben said.

The prime cotton region's production is expected to approach last year's statewide total.

"Production-wise, this is probably the best crop I've had in five years," Val Stephens, whose family farms near Lamesa, said. "Price-wise, it's the best since 1978. And it gets a West Texas farmer excited to see prices and production up like this."

Cotton production statewide this year is projected at 3.9 million bales, up 54 percent from the 2.5 million in 1986, according to the Texas Agricultural Statistics Service in Austin. U.S. cotton production is projected to increase 38 percent to 13.1 million bales.

Officials estimated yield per acre in Texas at a record 440 pounds, growing by about 25 percent from last year's 353 pounds per acre.

Lamesa merchants said they were already seeing the economic effects of an improved harvest, even before the crop was in. City sales tax receipts are up and the sales of farm implements has increased.

For the first time since 1979, Norman Stewart, president of the First National Bank of Lamesa, was projecting an increase in agricultural lending for next year.

The surge in the cotton price resulted from a number of complex market changes. Officials said the apparent key factor is a drop in the dollar that made U.S.-grown cotton more marketable.

A provision in the 1985 farm bill, allowing exports to dip to world market levels or below, was also praised by economists. The government compensated growers for the price decline with additional supports.

The result has been a jump from exports of 2 million bales in 1985-86 to 6.7 million bales during the current marketing year, said Carl Anderson, an economist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Government officials predicted U.S. cotton exports should continue to rise to about 7 million bales this year.

That translates into renewed profits for the Stephens and other Texas cotton farmers, as long as the crop is delivered.

"Come this time of year, you can't drag things out," Jesse Stephens, Val's father, said. "And you can't count your cotton till it's ginned."

Jamaican women killed in tropical storm

MIAMI (AP) — A tropical depression weakened today after its rains lashed the northwest Caribbean and left two dead, three missing, and some 1,000 people in shelters after their homes were flooded in Jamaica.

The National Weather Service late this morning dropped a tropical storm watch posted Sunday for the Florida Keys, but forecasters warned that small boats should stay in port from Key Largo southward.

"The rains are pretty well detached from the system, and the rainfall has diminished quite a bit with this whole system," forecaster Randy Lascody said.

The depression's highest winds were 35 mph and its storms dumped five inches of rain as far north as Tavernier in the Upper Keys, forecasters said.

At 7 a.m. EST today, the poorly defined depression was estimated to be centered at latitude 21.4 north and longitude 81.3 west, or about 140 miles southeast of Havana. It was moving northwest at 9 mph.

The depression's storms dumped as much as five inches of rain in its wake, causing widespread flooding in southeastern Jamaica that was blamed for the drownings of two women who were crossing rivers. An 8-year-old girl was injured when a live power line fell into a flooded street, officials said.

Scores of other Jamaicans were forced to take shelter in schools and churches when overflowing rivers and streams flooded their homes. Several bridges collapsed, and extensive damage was reported to roads and crops. Damage estimates were incomplete.

Some 1,000 people today were still in schools and churches where they took refuge. Three people were missing, authorities said.

The parishes of Clarendon and St. Catherine, in the southeastern part of the English-speaking Caribbean island, were hardest hit.

Prime Minister Edward Seaga, who toured the affected areas Sunday, said the tropical depression had caused considerable damage and estimated the final tally would be similar to that from flooding in June 1986 which caused about $25 million in losses.

The 14th tropical depression of the season, which formed Saturday, also brought heavy rainfall to eastern and central Cuba and parts of South Florida and the Bahamas.

A watch went into effect at midmorning Sunday for the middle and lower Florida Keys, including the Dry Tortugas, to alert residents that tropical storm conditions could affect them by late today or early Tuesday.

If the depression's winds top 38 mph, it would become tropical storm Gert.

Poles remember their dead on All Saints Day

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Candles glowed eerily on the tombs of war heroes, plane crash victims, writers, athletes, ordinary citizens and even communist party bosses Sunday as millions of Poles remembered the dead on All Saints Day.

The broad lanes between lavishly decorated graves at Warsaw's 200-year-old Powazki Cemetery were elbow-to-elbow with elderly, solitary people and extended families, hurrying to the tombs of loved ones.

Young scouts hawked memorial candles.

All Saints Day is a national holiday in this communist but predominantly Roman Catholic country, and the custom of honoring the dead has roots in folk traditions that predate Poland's acceptance of Christianity 1,000 years ago.

Highways and train stations were crowded with travelers, many going long distances to visit relatives' graves. Police politely coaxed drivers along to east-traffic jams near the larger cemeteries.

Hundreds of Poles singing patriotic songs gathered around a stark stone cross erected three years ago at Powazki to honor the 4,000 Polish army officers whose bodies were found in a mass grave at Katyn in the Soviet Union during World War II.

The monument, keeping with official Polish and Soviet histories, blames the Nazis for the killings. But most Poles and Western historians believe the Soviets committed the crime.

There have been hints that the official histories may be changed. Recently sanctioned articles in Poland and the Soviet Union have referred to Katyn as a "blank spot" in history that should be corrected.

Flowers covered the monument's base, obscuring its disputed inscription, "To the victims of Hitlerite fascism." Someone placed a sign in front of the monument that read: "The truth will come out."

For the first time, an army honor guard — two young soldiers holding bayoneted automatic rifles — stood at attention in front of the monument.

"I can't believe my eyes. They never mounted a guard before," said Stanislaw Krycinski, 70, whose father was among the officers killed at Katyn. "I told my wife and son that one day we'll be able to read the truth on the monument."

Despite the presence of the soldiers, the crowd sang a religious song with the words, "A free fatherland restore to us oh Lord," and some flashed the V-for-victory sign of the banned Solidarity trade union federation.

A few hundred yards away, honor guards also were posted and candles burned on the tombs of Poland's postwar communist leaders, Wladyslaw Gomulka and Boleslaw Bierut. Few people stopped at those graves.

NOTICE TO OWNERS AND DEVELOPERS OF RENTAL HOUSING

Midland County Housing is inviting rental property owners and developers to submit proposals to participate in a Section 8 Moderate Rehabilitation Program in Midland County. Funds for this rental assistance program are provided by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development. Note: There is no funding presently available, nor is there any guarantee funding will be made available in the future.

The landlord's cost of rehabilitation must equal or exceed $1,000.00 per dwelling unit. If HUD funding is approved, the program will provide a guaranteed rental income sufficient to cover debt service (acquisition and rehabilitation costs), normal operating expenses, and a reasonable return on the developers investment.

The Authority will welcome proposals designed to accomplish the following:

1. To encourage the preservation of existing housing stock through rehabilitation of dwelling units which are basically sound but require repair or replacement of some building components.

2. To provide affordable housing to families by rehabing two and three bedroom units.

3. To provide for rehabilitation of the most units in a contiguous complex or single neighborhood.

4. To provide for the highest dollar amount of rehabilitation per unit while keeping the project financially feasible.

5. Use of local sub-contractors and job placement for local residents.

6. Management policies designed to keep the unit up to standards and make the units a safe, decent and sanitary place to live.

7. In addition, all eligible applications must meet HUD criteria for the Moderate Rehabilitation Program.

The Authority requires compliance with all applicable Federal and State statues and regulations regarding affirmative action, equal opportunity, and non-discrimination.

Interested Owner/Developers may request packets at the Midland County Housing Office, 218 W. Illinois, Room 108, Midland, Texas on November 5, 1987. Proposals must be returned on Friday, November 20, 1987.
