FLIGHT TO PARIS TAKES 33 1-2 HOURS

Crowds Cheer Brave American Flier

LINDBERGH'S MOTHER IS VERY HAPPY

DETROIT, May 21. (AP)—"That's all that matters,," in these words Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, mother of Captain Charles Lindbergh, expressed her relief when informed that her inteprid son had arrived safely at Lebourget flying field, France, after an epochal flight from New York.

Universal Service Special Cable Dispatch

LE BOURGET FIELD, PARIS, May 21.—Swooping down from the skies in a magnificent landing, cheered to the echo by thousands of welcoming Americans and French residents, Captain Charles Lindbergh, the intrepid "Flyin' Fool" from St. Louis, Mo., landed here tonight at 10:22, Paris time, completing his marvellous non-stop flight across the Atlantic ocean from New York to Paris, a distance of approximately 3600 miles.

Lindbergh's time was 33 hours and 30 minutes. He maintained an average speed of 107 1-2 miles an hour.

The gallant Missouri boy was pulled bodily from his plane, the "Spirit of St. Louis," almost before the plane had glided to a standstill. Lindbergh was raised on the shoulders of his admirers and carried away in triumph to the accompanment of shouts and cheers from thousands and thousands of specators.

Pandemonium reigned when the silver-gray "Spirit of St. Louis" approached, her single engine humming and purring as sweetly as any airman could wish. Shouts and cries of welcome rent the air and for the time being, the populace went crazy.

Every precaution had been taken to ensure a safe landing for the brave American youth. Signal lights had been placed and a group of mechanics and field men were ready to render Lindbergh every assistance.

"Le Fou Volante," Hero of Hour

"Le Fou Volante" was the hero of the hour. News of his safe arrival spread rapidly to all sections and many impromptu celebrations were staged, as the people gave vent to their emotions and sang the praises of the boy who has written another chapter into world history.

The American boy-aviator pulled his helmet from his head and smiled. He did not talk. There was no occasion to.

Twenty thousand people crashed through the wire mesh fence at Le Bourget field and raced half a mile across the field to where the crowds were milling about the victorious aviator. The people went wild. Flags were waved, songs were sung, cheers were shouted, and the carefully planned reception went by the board.

"It's he," was the great cry, and even the French enthusiasts cried: "America forever. Vive L'Amerique."

Hats were smashed, costumes torn, suits ruined, but the temper of the crowd remained unchanged. It was a wild, warm, welcome, with everything in the nature of welcome that the French knew.

Great Crowd Jams Air Field

Women, crushed by the crowds, fainted here and there. They were carried to the side-lines" and the outbursts continued.

Police tried, but were unable to control the mobs. It was Lindbergh's day and all day at that.

Some conception of the crowd may be gleaned from the the fact that it took Lindbergh's escorts 20 minutes to get him through the mob to a place where there was a breathing space.

Lindbergh was placed at once in Ambassador Herrick's limousine and as police and soldiers cleared the way the big car, with its heroic occupant, moved through the airport area into the streets, headed for Paris.

A newspaper correspondent reached Lindbergh's plane.

"My God, doesn't anyone speak English," said Lindbergh.

"I do," said the correspondent.

Whereupon Lindbergh grabbed the correspondent by the ear and held on for dear life.

The newspaperman had some difficulty in opening the plane door, because of the crowds. He asked Lindbergh what he wanted first.

"A drink," was the prompt reply.

Lindburgh's voice was slightly weak and husky.

Camera Smashed In Rush

"Marvellous! "What a man!" were some of the comments.

Cameramen bore the brunt of the reception. Their cameras were trampled under foot and smashed to smithereens as the mob surged back and forth. No pictures of the actual arrival were taken.

In half an hour, Lindbergh was conducted to the office of the airport commander. He appeared on the balcony with American ambassador, Myron T. Herrick, saluted the crowds and mumbled a few words, which were undistinguishable.

A French woman stood before the balcony, weeping. "Come out again," she cried.

The crowds continued to storm the commander's office, begging for a chance to shake Lindbergh's hand.

The aviator left at 11:05 p. m. in Herrick's limousine. He was followed by huge crowds, and appeared pal eand haggard after the first excitement was over.

The sight tonight at Le Bourget will ever live in the memories of those fortunate enough to witness it as the most colorful spectacle in recent years.

French aviation clubs were ready, and a number of planes went out to greet the lone American flier and escort him to his field. Parachute rockets and Velie gun lights were fired at intervals, to guide the traveller safely, and the wholehearted spirit of co-operation with the man who has won the heart of la belle France was evident.

American Ambassador Myron T. Merrick had maintained a long vigil on the flying field, waiting to welcome his country's brave representative in the epochal flight. Merrick was one of the first to grasp the youngster's hand and greet him in true, American fashion.

The reception committee, composed of leading Americans and French representatives from government and aviation circles, was on hand, too. But plans and procedure were lost, to a great extent, in the wild burst of enthusiasm and excitement which greeted the successful ending of the great flight.

Troops were on hand, but even these could not repress the welcome of the crowds, which miled about here and there, anxious to catch a glimpse of the famous airman, and shouting themselves hoarse.

"Such a man should succeed," said one of the Paris papers, commenting upon Lindbergh's hop-off at New York.

Success Crowns Flier's Daring

Such a man did succeed, and the French populace acknowledged his success in a way that astonished even themselves.

All afternoon, the roads from Paris to Le Bourget were jammed with traffic, a distance of approximately seven miles. Cars streamed along, held up sometimes for four or five blocks. At the gates of Paris, they stopped to declare their gasoline before proceeding to the aviation field. Extra "octroi" or municipal customs men, were placed at the gates to help in relieving the congestion.

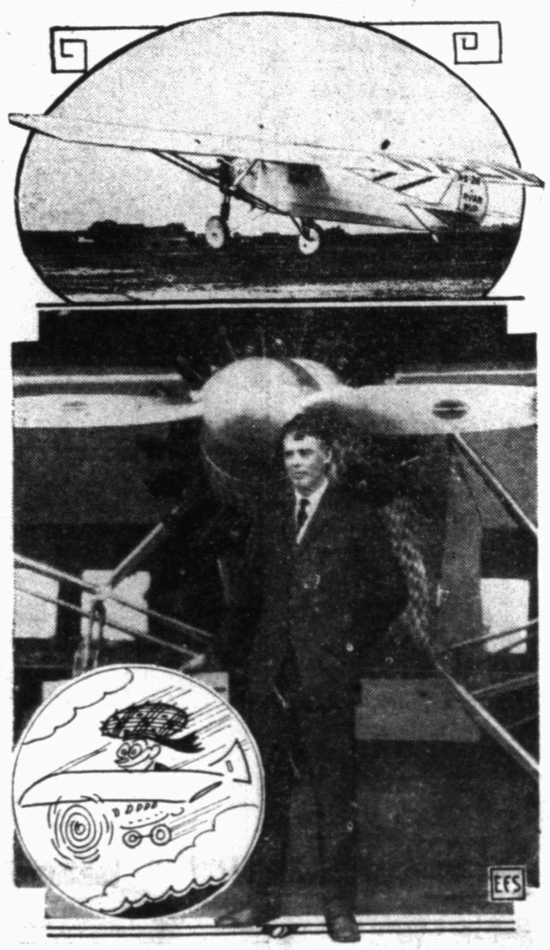

Huge crowds, enjoying the Saturday afternoon "English week-end," were in evidence everywhere.

At Le Bourget field, which is divided into a vivil and military area, soldiers detailed from the military side kept order and the crowds from breaking through the staunch mesh barricade which divides the field.

American tourists flying from Paris to London were greatly delayed on the road to the field by the dense automobile traffic and, arriving at the field, had to be escorted to the Paris to London planes by soldiers, so immense was the crowd.

On the far, or military side of the field, air squadrons had been detailed, ready to meet Lindbergh and escort him to his landing stage.

Plane In Which Lindbergh Conquered Atlantic Cost Only $7500 For Its Construction

CHARLES A LINDBERGH, AND THE $7500 MONOPLANE IN WHICH HE MADE SOLO AIR VOYAGE ACROSS THE ATLANTIC.

The "Spirit of St. Louis" has never been identified as to nationality, but now it appears to be Scotch. No Irishman would ever attempt what a St. Louisian did.

In a relatively small monoplane, Charles A. Lindbergh flew across the Atlantic from New York to Paris. That, however, is not all the story. The plane cost only $7,500, less by many thousands than any ever built or planned for such a hazardous and material-testing flight. Local fanciers of airplanes have called Linbergh's plane "The Scotchman," because of its cheap construction. "Cheap" does not imply faulty or haphazard construction, but indicates, rather, that an expert flier and an airplane company have found they can construct an airplane for trans-oceanic flights without calling upon the millions of some foundation for aid.

Cheapest Plane Yet.

Lindbergh's St. Louis associates paid $7500 for the plane and added about $5000 for special equipment; larger gas tanks, special oil tanks and lines, instruments of navigation and the like. Fundamentally, however, it is the cheapest plane ever turned out for such a journey.

The plane was called on to out-do Commander Richard Byrd's flight over the North Pole. Byrd's giant monoplane carried three motors. Any one of these would have kept it aloft by disposing of part of the disposable load.

Lindbergh's depended upon a single 220-horsepower motor to pull his little ship through the air for a time of 34 hours!

Coast to New York.

The flier's New York-Paris dash in reality was a San Deigo-Paris flight, for he flew from that Pacific coast city to New York, making only the one official stop at St. Louis for the plane to be christened.

Quite alone, he was cooped in the small cockpit where he figured out his position during the 30-hour grueling race. The cockpit is covered by a window, which protected him from possible storms.

Lindbergh planned and expected to make Paris in about 28 hours. So confident of his success was he that he carried no radio sending apparatus, although a collapsible boat served as part of his equipment.

Pins Himself Awake.

The Ryan monoplane, the building of which Lindbergh supervised at a factory here is slightly larger than the stock model of the same make. Except for size and special care in building, it is the counterpart of dozens of others seen along western airways every day.

"How will you keep awake?" many people asked the fliers every day visitors were admitted to the airdome.

"Coffee and a pin," he remarked laconically.

The pin part of it may sound like a joke, but he carried several quarts of hot coffee.

New Yorker Objects To Nickname Of "Flyin' Fool" For Lindbergh

NEW YORK, May 21. (AP)—Newspaper offices have received numerous telephone calls from persons who complained that it was not proper to call Capt. Charles A. Lindbergh the "flying fool."

Among those protesting use of the "pet" name which was given Lindbergh by companion aviators at Kelly Field, Texas, where he trained, was C. George Crawford, New York real estate man.

"Every time I see that phrase 'flying fool' I get sore," Crawford said. "I know it's only a nickname and that no harm is meant when they call the boy that, but it does not sound right. Anybody that can do what he's doing is no fool."

Meantime, however, the nickname has preceded Lindbergh to France and in Paris he will be greeted, cable dispatches said, by the phrase "fou volant."

Lindbergh Took Only Five Sandwiches As His Food Supply For Ocean Flight

NEW YORK, May 21. (AP)—Like a boy bound for a day's picnic, "Lucky" Lindbergh took five sandwiches to see him through to Paris.

B. F. Mahoney, the 26-year-old president of the Ryan Air Lines builders of his plane, "The Spirit of St. Louis," today told of the young flier's food supply.

"He is carrying two ham sandwiches, two roast beef sandwiches and one hard boiled egg sandwich. I had to press the last one on him. He said four would be enough.

"He carried two canteens of water, about four quarts in all, but no coffee or liquor. I had a thermos bottle filled with coffee, but he refused to take it. He never drinks or smokes."

As reserve rations he took small cakes of highly concentrated food sufficient for one week. The plane had a device for making water out of the moisture of one's breath.

Injured Flier Still Under Hospital Care

FORT WRTH, May 21. (AP)—Robert Leslie, 25, Dallas, who with Stanley Cosden, 21, son of a wealthy New York and Tulsa, Okla., oil operator, was injured in an airplane accident here Friday, was still in a hospital today, suffering from nervous shock. Cosden was discharged from the hospital when it was determined he had sustained only cuts and bruises. The plane struck a tree when making a forced landing.

Lindbergh Grins As He Tells Story

By CAPTAIN CHARLES LINDBERGH

Special Cable Dispatch

(As Told to Universal Service By the Daring Trans-) Atlantic Aviator.)

PARIS, May 22. (Sunday)—The trip was no picnic. Though the weather reports were optimistic concerning the Atlantic crossing, I met fine weather over Newfoundland but nasty, foggy, sleety weather for about 1000 miles, the worst of which was last night.

I flew at different heights, ranging from 100 to 10,000 feet, but couldn't avoid the sleet and ice for clouds—often too high or two low.

Tired? Well, not very, although, of course, I couldn't sleep much. Often I found myself dozing, and had to keep myself awake.

All the same, both myself and my plane could have gone on a much longer trip. Indeed, I don't hesitate to say that personally, I wouldn't mind doing another 3000 miles right away. Which doesn't mean that I will fly back to America. That trip will be done in a liner and decidedly after a rest and a holiday in Paris.

It's His First Trip To Europe

This is my first trip to Europe and although I have made it quickly, I don't intend to hurry my holiday in the same ratio.

As to my impressions, what can I say? It was just flying and I knew my bus would carry me and the bus seemed to know my confidence in it and went on purring fine. I had no trouble at all locating land, in fact, I hit Ireland pretty near where I had planned. That, of course, is partly luck, as every navigator will tell you.

Once over Ireland, it was nothing to cross over the channel but when I hit Cherbourg, I was somewhat nettled—However, I took a chance and, helped by daylight, which accompanied me until I was about 20 minutes from Paris, I had no great difficulty in keeping on the right course.

Then I was picked up by an immense searchlight, which, I take, was on Mount Vallian, and another circular one which, I understand was at the airdrome. The lights of Paris confused me somewhat and crossing the city was not easy. Without searchlights, I might have found it difficult to land comfortably.

All the same, I didn't intend to make mistakes at that stage of the game, so I circled the city a couple of times and finally headed straight for Le Bourget, which was then as clear as at noon.

As food, I took just light sandwiches and drank water. No stimulants of any sort, not even coffee or tea. I was not really uncomfortable for the want of sleep, but I could do with 12 hours sound slumber. I cannot say that it is hard work. One doesn't need to hold a plane as one holds an auto.

He Took Things Easy Over Atlantic

I took things easy and paid little attention to economy. Had I done so, the plane could easily have gone another thousand miles. As it is, I could go now another 500 miles on my own stock of gasoline. But flying and landing were not so hard, the getting free of the enthusiastic French crowds was a titanic work. As soon as the plane came to a dead stop, my natural reaction would have been to lie back at ease just for one moment, but when I saw that human avalanche breaking on the plane, I immediately realized that my fine bus would be smashed. So I jumped out of it and fell on the shoulders of the crowd. That's all.

My plans? Haven't any. Sleep first, quarts of water to drink, and if I can get some clothes quickly, a round of the Paris streets afterwards. At present, I owe these pajamas, dressing gown and slippers to Ambassador Herrick. But he says that his trousers will be too short for me.

You see, I started at short notice and I didn't get time to bring my London cutaway!

Battleship Obsolete Unit Of Defensive Armor

By GEN. WM. MITCHELL
Former Assistant Chief of the U. S. Army Air Service
Copyright, 1927, By Universal Service

MIDDLEBURG, Va., May 21.—The army and navy have blown the propaganda trumpets for their summer campaign. This time, these representatives of the bow and arrow period of national defense want to play with the old toys—the battleship and the seacoast cannon around New York. What few airplanes the country has left are safely shelved in Texas, and will not be used in the defense of the Atlantic coast.

This small number of airplanes, 30 or 40 in number, could sink and destroy the whole Atlantic fleet in a few hours with practically no loss to themselves, and with the expenditure of very little money.

Foolish Performances.

Think of what utterly foolish performance these army and navy maneuvers are! To begin with, if America is invaded at the present time, the only country capable of doing it across the Atlantic is England.

England owns Canada. She can fly her air forces straight across the Atlantic by way of Iceland, Greenland and Canada and supply them by submarines or by airships. The greatest distance over water by this route is only about 450 miles. If England were going to attack this country, she unquestionably would arrange with Denmark to use Iceland and Greenland as landing bases.

Arrived in Canada she could reach all the important centers in the triangle New York-Chicago-Washington within from four to six hours' flight. As there is no airforce, nor a department of aeronautics to handle it, nor officers in the government who know how to fight an air force, it would be a simple walk-over.

In this day and age, even if it were possible for a navy to come across the sea and land troops, the national guard of any of the state, equipped with machine guns and with ordinary artillery, could hold them off with the greatest ease. Surface ships at sea have lost their power as instruments of offense. The heart of a country lies away beyond the range of their guns.

Subs Alone Effective

During the war, submarines were the only vessels at sea that could inflict great loss on the enemy. The Germans, with an average of only 30 submarines at a time at sea, and with about 10,000 men engaged in submarine operations sank over 40 per cent of all the British merchant marine. They had reduced England to a point that threatened starvation when the Americans entered the contest.

Now the submarines are much more powerful. Modern ones are able to go clear around the world on one charge of fuel. They can carry cannon of any size; torpedoes, both for use in the water and in the air; they can lay mines, project gas attacks and can be used as tankers, ammunition ships and supply vessels for air forces.

The battleship today costs from fifty to seventy million dollars and an equal amount to maintain it and keep it in commission and work. During the war, battleships remained tied up in their harbors, carefully protected by nets to keep out submarines, guarded by aircraft, destroyers, submarines and cruisers. Whenever these Leviathans left their harbors, which was very seldom, they went at top speed to avoid the submarines and then came back just as rapidly.

No battleships sunk any other battleship during the war, and the American battleships never entered into combat with a hostile fleet.

$100,000,000 Per Ship.

Every time a battleship is built it costs the country over $100,000,000. For this sum from one to three thousand airplanes can be built and maintained, which would absolutely protect the United States from invasion across the sea or in the air.

He Scores Foppery

The submarine is the only naval instrument that can bring a good return in war. Submarines however, are not comfortable to live in. The admirals who have nice cabins, beds, dining rooms and reception halls in the battleships, do not like to put on dirty overalls and climb into the dark interior of a submarine.

They cannot smoke there, they have to walk around in a bent position most of the time, their beds are narrow, they must breathe foul smelling air, and when they go into the friendly port of another nation, they cannot walk the quarter deck and have flags flying and guns booming, as they do on the big ships.

Submarines Weak

Today the submarine is the weakest link in the United States navy, just as the tank is the weakest thing in the United States army. These are the modern instruments of war on land and sea, but who hears of them in the United States? Nobody.

The conduct of our national defense by the federal government at this time is the worst in our history. The army and navy bureaus know the value of propaganda, which they learned from Europeans during the war. They have their reserve officers and emissaries scattered about in practically all the journals in America.

The propaganda is ground out from Washington primarily for the purpose of keeping up the existing organization of things, with little regard for the protection of this country in international war.

The army and navy in the United States have no common head, they fight over every bone that drops from the legislative table in Washington, which may give one or the other more prestige, such as more money to spend or quicker promotion.

National Defense

What we need in this country is to have a single department of national defense under one cabinet officer, who will be charged with everything pertaining to the war-making power of the government, and under him to have four departments.

One, a department of aeronautics, which will handle all aircraft matters and remove aircraft operations from the army and navy, who have always made a failure of it wherever they have tried.

We should then have a department of the army, a department of the navy, and a department of munitions for purchasing all the major articles of equipment.

By this arrangement we would reduce the useless expenditures we are making now for our national defense, and concentrate upon the things that are needful.

We would like to take the people of the country into the confidence of those charged with the national defense; we would stop the propaganda of untruths which is disseminated continually by old officers of the army and navy, because it is all they know; and we would teach the American citizen what his part and responsibility is in keeping us out of war.

Glow of Publicity

When the average man reads about these army and navy maneuvers, which will soon fill the press throughout the United States he will probably experience a fine glow over the wonderful way the army and navy works to protect the country.

He might just as well reach up on his shelf and take down a book that describes the battles of the Egyptians, the naval encounters of the Romans and Carthaginians.

The present maneuvers have no more to do with modern national defense than the operations in our own revolutionary war, 150 years ago, which were fought in the same localities and under similar circumstances. Everything is now changed. The submarine and the aeroplane have changed sea power and methods as radically as the invention of steam and the old iron-clad changed everything in the days of the former wooden frigates of war driven by sails. Yet our old school warriors are this week conducting the old-fashioned war maneuvers or so-called war games, without the adequate new weapons that have revolutionized all warfare.

Navies On Decline

Navies as instruments of international war are declining rapidly in importance. Armies have been relatively in a state of arrested development since the invention of gun powder. Air power is the only developing and progressing instrument in national defense in the world today. It is not entering into the maneuvers for the protection of New York.

The few poor little airplanes that the army and navy carry around with them are not air forces, but merely little auxiliaries to these services, and designed to prevent the organization of a real air force in America.

THE PERFECT GASOLINE

Motor Essence, the product of an independent home institution is refined from the highest grades of local oil and distributed by independent dealers at no more than the price of inferior, ordinary grades of gasoline.

Three years ago the Iowa Park Producing and Refining Company, realizing the great need for a locally refined HIGH TEST MOTOR Fuel, set out to produce such a gasoline and after months of scientific research, unlimited experimenting and the expenditure of a large amount of money, a combination of ingredients was hit upon which has resulted in a HIGH TEST gasoline that ranks on a par with the world's foremost and recognized High Test Fuels.

—But we were not satisfied even with this achievement—we went a step further. We realized the equal importance of pureness of Gasoline as well as powerfulness and as a result, we offer in Motor Essence a HIGH TEST motor fuel that is 100 per cent pure, no artificial coloring to camouflage impurities, no unpleasant, poisonous odors. In short, Motor Essence is to Gasoline what distilled water is to water. It is perfect.

ARE YOU ROBBING YOUR CAR OF Speed and Power WITH INFERIOR GASOLINE

THE NEW HIGH-TEST MOTOR FUEL

It is important that car owners realize that fuel knocks in even old motors can be eliminated by the use of Motor Essence, a HIGH TEST Gasoline.

"Knocking" is an inherent characteristic of all Gasolines. What the average car owner has always called a "carbon knock" or a "spark knock" is merely a fuel knock, due to the high boiling points of low grade gasoline.

Motor Essence has proven its superiority and its worthiness of the name "The Perfect Gasoline" to the hundreds of motorists who are now using it regularly. "Ask the man who uses it."

There is something about this high test motor fuel that greatly improves the performance of any car . . . something that is hard to explain. Just drive by one of these stations listed below . . . fill your tank with Motor Essence and enjoy a motoring satisfaction you have never known before.

What Motor Essence Will Do For Your Car

1. It will eliminate knocking under all driving conditions.
2. It will give you more power on hills and bad roads or whenever more power is required.
3. It will increase acceleration and alert speed.
4. It will reduce vibration and wear and tear on your car in general.
5. It will give your car a smoother performance of operation.
6. It will reduce gear shifting.
7. It will save the expense of carbon removal.
8. It will give you more miles per gallon.

In fact, there is no end to the marked advantages of Motor Essence over ordinary Gasolines and the exclusive use of it will quickly convince you of its superiority.

MOTOR ESSENCE should but DOES NOT sell for more than ordinary Gasoline.

Approximately 400 delegates and visitors are expected to attend the sessions, Geo. H. Salter, executive secretary, announced Saturday night.

Other officers who arrived Saturday for the convention are: Mr. Kachel, president; George A. Wilson, Houston, first vice-president; Mrs. Mine Boone, Fort Worth, second vice-president; Sam Goodman, San Antonio, third vice-president; R. E. Newman, Wichita Falls, fourth vice-president, and R. M. Means, Dallas, fifth vice-president.

Addresses of Welcome

The convention will be called to order Monday morning by V. W. Thomas, president of the Wichita Falls Central Trades and Labor council. Rev. S. A. Barnes will offer the invocation. Rev. Barnes is the representative of the Ministerial Alliance to the State Federation convention.

Following the singing of "America," led by Sen. W. D. McFarlane, Mr. Thomas will make an address of welcome in behalf of the union labor of Wichita Falls, Hubert Harrison for the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce, and Mayor R. E. Shepherd for the city.

Response to the addresses of welcome will be made by Mr. Kachel, and the last speech on the morning program will be a greeting from the state of Texas by Lieut. Gov. Barry Miller. The meeting will adjourn at 12 o'clock.

Sessions of the convention to continue through Friday will be devoted to routine business, Mr. Slater announced, with several important measures of interest to the organization to be considered. The entertainment committee of the Wichita Falls Trades and Labor council has arranged a full program of entertainment features for the guests, with special programs each night.

Representatives of the various national organizations will address the assembly on Monday afternoon and reports from all officers will be heard. Committees will also be named at this time and instructed to report.

Convention Ball

On Monday night the annual convention ball will be given at Labor temple, free to everyone, and with the public invited. Several special numbers have been arranged for the success of the dance, it was said.

Tuesday afternoon will find the visitors in the irrigated valley where they will be escorted by courtesy of the local organization for a complete inspection tour of that section. Returning about 6 o'clock, all will meet at 7 o'clock in the convention tent for the annual banquet, scheduled to be one of the most elaborate affairs in the history of the organization, with P. B. Roberts in charge of arrangements and toastmaster for the occasion.

Those to address the convention at this banquet are: R. L. Haynie, newly elected president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce; Homer D. Wade, manager of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce; Congressman Guinn Williams, Decatur; Senator W. D. McFarlane, Graham, and George H. Slater, Dallas, executive secretary of the State Federation of Labor.

The Wichita Falls Municipal band will give a concert before the banquet starts, with special numbers during the hour. Four vaudeville acts have been arranged to follow the addresses.

Routine business of the convention will occupy the Wednesday sessions, and on Wednesday night the official motion picture of the American Federation of Labor, "Labor's Reward," will be shown at convention tent, free to all over 15 years of age.

On Thursday evening a special athletic program, featuring 36 rounds of boxing will be held with favorites of north Texas versus favorites of south Texas pitted in the arena. Delegates will be given tickets and the general public will be admitted at the regular prices, it was announced.

On Friday officers for the coming year will be elected, the 1928 convention city named, and all committee reports received.

All plumbers attending the Texas State Federation of Labor convention in Wichita Falls this coming week are to have an all-day outing at Lake Kemp on Wednesday, May 25, P. B. Roberts of the entertainment committee announced Saturday.

Major Averages .836 In Busy Week Of Conventions

Mayor R. E. Shepherd ran up an average of .836 in the "welcoming league" during the past week.

He had a possible six starts during the week but only had the opportunity of making a "hit" five times.

He made the "hits" when he welcomed to Wichita Falls the following conventions: Monday, West Texas Chamber of Commerce; Tuesday, Eagles; Wednesday, Carpenters; Thursday, Postmasters and Friday, Printers.

Saturday being an "off day," with no convention scheduled to start, Mayor Shepherd "struck out—for home and fireside."

MEET CLOSED BY CARPENTERS

Officers Installed at Last Session

The joint installation of officers of the State Council of Carpenters and of the women's auxiliary opened the final session of the state convention Saturday.

Officers Installed

Installation services were conducted by George H. Lakey, of Indianapolis, Ind., second vice president of the U. B. of C. & J. of America for the following officers: Carpenters State council: D. E. Mills, San Angelo, president; Ed Tull, Amarillo, first vice president; M. B. Menefee, Houston, second vice president; J. Rex Anderson, Dallas, secretary-treasurer; W. F. Cottingham, Corpus Christi; Tom F. Bays, Fort Worth; Felix Kelly, Lubbock; E. C. Adamson, San Antonio; A. W. Cox, Beaumont; F. W. Evans, Mexia, and Jim Coffman, Wichita Falls, members of the executive board. Of the women's auxiliary, Mrs. R. E. Roberts, Dallas, president; Mrs. M. B. McAfee, Houston, vice president; Mrs. P. E. Miller, Wichita Falls, secretary-treasurer; Mrs. W. H. Reynolds, Fort Worth; Mrs. L. D. Thornton, Vernon; Mrs. J. D. Odom, Port Arthur, and Mrs. Arnold Vogel, San Antonio, members of the state executive board.

Following the installation services, reports from the state officers were heard. D. E. Mills, San Angelo, president of the organization during the past year, and re-elected for the coming year, delivered a short address. J. Rex Anderson, Dallas, re-elected secretary-treasurer, outlined the accomplishments of the organization.

Rap Child Labor Enemies.

A resolution condemning the actions of politicians and others who are fighting the proposed child labor amendment to the federal constitution was adopted by the council.

Vice President Lakey of the U. B. of C. & J., made a short talk beginning at 12 o'clock. He discussed the fraternal features of the carpenters unions, and outlined the policies advocated by them.

The afternoon session opened at 2 o'clock with the final reports of the resolutions committee. Representatives from all other labor unions of the city, including the painters and printers who were also holding state conventions, were present for the final session of the carpenters, and greetings from each craft were delivered.

All visiting delegates and their families who are remaining here for the State Federation of Labor convention which opens Monday, will be entertained with a picnic and basket dinner at the Haven Park Sunday afternoon, by members of the local council.

PRINTERS ASK PRISON REFORM

Wichita Falls Man Named Vice President

George Wilson, Houston, was re-elected president of the Texas Allied Printing Trades council at the closing session of the state convention here Saturday morning.

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the council, four vice-presidents were elected, one to represent each craft of the printing trades organization. They are: John Callan, Austin, first vice-president; W. H. Black, Wichita Falls, second vice-president; Robert Carney, Dallas, third vice-president, and M. E. Shay, Galveston, fourth vice-president. William Mulhausen, Houston, was elected secretary-treasurer.

Department of Statistics

The creation of a state statistical department of the council was the principal business transacted at the morning session. A special department for the purpose of determining the number of employes, establishments and total resources of the printing trades of the state will be maintained, and a resolution was adopted, appealing to the international council for financial aid.

A resolution was adopted approving the bill now pending in the state legislature for the reorganization of the state prison board. Reports on the accomplishments of the council during the past year were given by the state officers. President George Wilson, in delivering his annual address, expressed himself as being very optimistic regarding the prospects for the coming year. He outlined the work of the allied printing trades since the beginning of his term of office. A report from Clyde V. Lancaster, San Antonio, secretary-treasurer, who was unable to attend the convention, was read.

Union Co-operation

John W. Hays of Indianapolis, Ind., secretary-treasurer of the International Typographical union, delivered the principal address at the afternoon session, which opened at 2 o'clock. The principal theme of his address was an appeal to members of the council to buy products bearing the union label. It is only by that sort of co-operation between members of the various unions that the policies advocated by organized labor can endure, he stated. Mr. Hays also discussed in a general way various problems confronting the unions of the various crafts.

Council officers were instructed by a vote of the delegates to purchase a suitable gift and send it with a note of regret to Secretary-Treasurer Clyde Lancaster of San Antonio, who was unable to attend the convention on account of the illness of his mother.

A resolution thanking Mayor R. E. Shepherd and the Rev. S. A. Barnes for their addresses, the citizens and business houses of Wichita Falls for the hospitality afforded, the management of the Labor temple for the use of the building, and the press of the city for publicity given to the convention, was submitted by the committee on thanks, composed of Z. M. Duckworth, E. V. Aten, H. C. Anderson and F. E. Hempel, and adopted by the council.

Artificial Respiration Saves Life of Youth

SARNIA, Ont., May 21. (AP)—Ten fellow employes, working in relays for 18 hours have saved the life of Harold Hedges, 21, by artificial respiration. Hedges was shocked by 26,000 volts of electricity while while working on a pole here yesterday. A safety belt kept him from falling. He was lowered to the ground by a block and tackle and rushed to a hospital where the 10 co-employes began their long effort to give him life. Late last night Hedge's breathing became normal and today he was resting easily.

TEXAN BACKS AL SMITH FOR U. S. PRESIDENT

Burleson Confident That N. Y. Governor Can Beat Coolidge

TALKS IN LONDON

Former U. S. Postal Chief Issues Statement In England

By H. H. STANSBURY

Universal Service Staff Correspondent
Special Cable Dispatch.

LONDON, May 21.—Albert Sidney Burleson of Texas, President Wilson's postmaster general for eight years, 1913-1921, today amplified his earlier endorsement of Al Smith's presidential aspirations with the prediction that the New Yorker would not only be nominated, but elected, and told why.

Burleson is in England, en route to Carlsbad for his wife's health. He said:

"The great mass of voters in the United States is ready for a change in the administration. Smith has a large popular following in the east. He will develop issues that will appeal to the west.

"Smith is sensible and moderate on the prohibition problem. The religious question will be dropped if a real democracy exists and he knows that it does."

Solon For 28 Years

This was the opening statement of the veteran politician. Burleson was a member of the house of representatives 28 years before he resigned to enter the Wilson cabinet.

The statements recorded here are cabled merely as views of an experienced democratic politician that will be of interest of members of both parties. Burleson continued:

"Smith is certainly the most available candidate for the democratic nomination. If he is the selection of the convention and given a running mate like Edward T. Meredith of Iowa, Henry Lloyd Byrd of Virginia or Pat Harrison of Virginia, I believe he will bring the national democratic party into power again.

"Smith's nomination would be certain except for the democratic rule that a candidate must obtain the votes of two-thirds of the delegates at the convention.

"Smith's policy and his fight to keep the vast water power resources of New York state out of the hands of private corporations has attracted attention in the west and northwest. There is no subject in which the people of the western section of the United States are most interested. The religious and prohibition issues will practically be forgotten by the time the final campaign gets under way.

Less Religious Bigotry

"I am personally of the opinion that there is less religious bigotry in the United States than we are made to believe. I am not a Catholic, but I came from the south where anti-Catholic feeling is supposed to be the strongest. But if I am a judge, Smith will get the support of the majority of southern states. He will also have the support of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Iowa, Montana, Arizona and Nevada in addition to a sufficient majority from the southern states.

"His chances in Illinois are excellent. He may even be able to carry Indiana in the final election."

It was suggested to Mr. Burleson that he hadn't taken President Coolidge and the splendid record of his administration into consideration. Burleson said:

Coolidge Sees Doom

"Mr. Coolidge has made a good republican president but the people of the United States are ready for a change. I believe Coolidge realizes this."

1,000,000 License Tag Sets to Be Purchased

AUSTIN, May 21.—Contract for 1,000,000 sets for 1928 automotive license plates, to cost about 12 cents each is scheduled to be let Monday by the state board of control here.

Plates this year for the first time will be stamped "front" and "rear" and truck licenses will be stamped with the tonnage of the machine, thus precenting the registration of a heavy truck under a "light" license.

Moody Names Orr As Farm Bureau Director

AUSTIN, May 21. (AP)—Governor Moody today appointed John T. Orr, Dallas, as one of the three public directors of the Texas Farm Bureau Cotton association.

Orr is president and general manager of the association. The two other public directors to be chosen, respectively, by President T. O. Walton of Texas A. and M. college and the federal farm bureau federation, have not been named.

Four Boomed For Texas Governor If Dan Moody Doesn't Run

Atty. Gen. Claude Pollard, Houston

Speaker R. L. Bobbitt, Laredo

Rep. Lee Satterwaite, Amarillo

Lt. Gov. Barry Miller, Dallas

By W. G. KNEELAND

AUSTIN, May 21. — Awaiting definite confirmation of the candidacy of Gov. Dan Moody for United States senator instead of for re-election are announcements of at least four state officials for governor, according to reliable information to the Austin American-Statesman.

Lt. Gov. Barry Miller of Dallas, Speaker of the House R. L. Bobbitt of Laredo, former Speaker Lee Satterwhite of Amarillo and Attorney General Claude Pollard of Houston are the four almost certain to make the race for governor if Moody does not.

And, on the measures passed and appropriations made by the legislature during the present called session may depend Moody's future political aspirations. If his policies are carried out—if civil service of subordinate state employes is provided and if a correlated system of state highways is developed — Moody may remove the political uncertainty by declaring his intentions.

Tax Raise Issue

Much depends also on whether Moody can prevent the raising of taxes. Indications at present are that he can not.

None of the four aspirants for governor have any intention of seeking that office if Moody wants re-election. His second term will not be obstructed by them.

With the field left clear, however, there may be a scramble over the espousing of popular issues, and not the least of these will include taxation.

Income taxes, personal and corporate, may be included in gubernatorial platforms; while the reduction and gradual abolition of state ad valorem taxes as a means of providing revenue, may be sought. Work to that end has already been undertaken by Moody, and those seeking to succeed him will undoubtedly pledge themselves to further the program he has begun.

The levying of an income tax for state purposes is thought by many to be the logical and most fair way of carrying out the constitutional provision that "taxes shall be equal and uniform."

None of the four are saying much about revenues, nor are they discussing their future plans.

Bobbitt Not Handicapped

It is known, however, that each expects a treasury deficit to exist at the end of Moody's term, and each is figuring on some method of funding the government other than by ad valorem taxes.

Lieutenant Governor Miller, who served in the house of representatives before making the race for lieutenant governor, is silent on future political aspirations. He was elected to his present office during the upheaval of 1924, and served throughout the Ferguson administration. Delegates to the Texas farm-labor political conference, held at Dallas in March, 1924, drafted him for his present office, and did much to help elect him.

Lee Bobbitt, speaker of the house, is not necessarily handicapped by his residence, Laredo. Prior to locating there he had resided in Central Texas and is well known as a practicing attorney. His popularity in the house does not seem to be waning, although he can not depend upon the solid support of house members in the event he seeks the governorship.

Friends of Attorney General Pollard are responsible for his name being mentioned among the candidates for governor. Among themselves they have outlined a tentative plan of campaign, and are said to be ready to inaugurate it as soon as Moody's decision is known.

As for Rep. Lee Satterwhite, none of his friends figure him a candidate against Moody, but at the same time are of the opinion he will make the race if Moody does not. Satterwhite was speaker of the house in the 39th legislature, and as a house member during the 40th legislature he has opposed many administration measures.

Platform planks for the democrats of Texas to pass on in the gubernatorial race may include, besides general taxation methods, a definite stand on the proposal to tax university lands. The income tax measures, however, may be given the most attention.

It is not thought likely that former Gov. James E. Ferguson will take much part in the gubernatorial campaign, but will devote most of his energy to the senatorial conflict.

If Ferguson is not himself a candidate for the senate, and in the event that Moody seeks re-election, Ferguson may seek to bring out a candidate to oppose him. Otherwise he is expected to seek the defeat of Senator Earle B. Mayfield, either by his own candidacy of by supporting some one of Mayfields' opponents.

Miller and Bobbitt Strong

Miller and Bobbitt are figured among the strong candidates for governor. Satterwhite, from the Panhandle country, is not thought to stand as much chance as either of the other two. Pollard, also, is not as popular as a gubernatrioal candidate as he was for attorney general. Robert E. Thomason, now mayor of El Paso, ran for governor in 1920, and his defeat in the primaries is said to have been due largely to the fact that his residence was so far removed from the geological and population center of the state. Thomason was widely known, having served as speaker of the house.

For the most part, the gossip regarding the gubernatorial campaign is being based on probable issues and how they will be met, and the actual announcement of candidates is not expected until Moody's plans are known.

GUM WITH KICK

Slot Machine Yields Two-Ounce Bottles Of Liquor

Charges of possession and sale of intoxicating liquor were filed against Julius Kuehn and George Penn Saturday by Sam Spence, assistant district attorney, after the men had been arrested in a raid by Constable Frank Morgan.

A chewing gum slot machine containing several two-ounce bottles of liquor was among the seizures made in the raid, which was on a Seventh street confectionery. The chewing gum had been removed from the machine, and it was being used as a hiding place for the whisky, according to Constable Morgan.

KIRBY FIGHTS CIVIL SERVICE

Lumber Magnate Opposes Moody Program

AUSTIN, May 21. (AP)—Representative John H. Kirby, Houston millionaire lumberman, and director of the Texas Cattle Raisers' association, may become a house floor leader of opposition to state civil service, and the bill requiring bonding and inspection fees of butchers.

Both subjects have been submitted to the special session of the legislature by Gov. Dan Moody.

Kirby admittedly is opposed to the civil service proposition to choose subordinate state employes by examination and his attitude on the butchers bill leans to opposition.

"I was not consulted," he said, "regarding the butchers' bill. It was prepared without my consent, knowledge or approval. If I were to analyze it I would say it was of more benefit to the packing houses than to cattle raisers. I would say, too, that it might help give the packers a monopoly and put the smaller slaughterers out of business."

Kirby said the civil service proposal is "undemocratic" and may tend to provide for "perpetuity in office, together with possible pensioning of state workers at public expense."

Wichita Falls Men Show New Airplane

Wichita Falls is assuming new proportions in commercial aviation circles, especially in the sale of airplanes. The Browning Airport announced Saturday its appointment as distributor for the Alexander Eaglerock airplane.

R. A. French and R. M. Browning piloted one of the new models from Denver arriving in Wichita Falls Saturday noon.

"The Eaglerock plane is recognized as one of the best commercial and private planes. The plane is now being displayed at the Browning Airport on the Burkburnett road."

Mr. Browning and Mr. French made the trip against stiff head winds from Denver, in a little under nine flying hours. Both were high in their praise for the plucky Lindbergh who completed his perilous trip to Paris.

Texas Banker Found Dead by Road's Side

HUNTSVILLE, May 21. (AP)—Clifford Oliphint, cashier of Huntsville State bank, was found dead on a highway near here early today. Oliphint had been at the bank until closing time Friday. When he failed to come home, his wife reported it to officers.

Searching parties were organibed late last night and the body was found by a negro. It was lying near Oliphint's automobile about one-fourth of a mile from the city. There was a slight wound in the head, but the cause of death had not been determined.

AUSTIN, May 21. (AP)—Gov. Dan Moody's office today formally announced appointment of James Shaw, president of the City National bank at Taylor as state banking commissioner, effective September 1.

Shaw will succeed Chas. O. Austin. The fact that Shaw would be appointed was made known some time ago.

BOATS RUSHED TO RESCUE OF STRICKEN FOLK

Auto Truck Also Sent To Save Louisiana Refugees

PERIL IS GREATER

Rain Adds to Danger Of Flood's Gain In Area

BATON ROUGE, La., May 21. (AP) Unnamed parties tonight were attempting to cut the levee between Neita and Simmesport on the west bank of the Atchafalaya river opposite McCrea, scene of the principal fight to save the east side from inundation, according to a Naval radio message received here tonight from J. E. Pettaway, government engineer.

By Universal Service.

LAFAYETTE, La., May 21.—Trapped by onrushing water which has laid waste the heart of Dixie, 10,000 men, women and children in southern Louisiana today raced for havens of refuge. Panic-stricken by the great tide of water sweeping down upon them, "the greatest flood in history," the Acadians sent couriers to relief camps to rush aid for evacuation.

Dropping their derision for warnings of danger these people today were stampeding for safety. Their exodus was made more difficult by a steady rain. Fearful that the crashing flood waters will take a heavy toll of lives in the "sugar bowl" section, Secretary Hoover despatched every available craft to that section.

Boats Are Rushed

Boats were in rescue work in the upper valley are being rushed by train to southern Louisiana—to ply the sea of flood waters covering the finest farm lands in this state. People in St. Martin and St. Landry parishes are imperiled by flood waters from crevasses along Bayou Des Glaises and at Melville on the Atchafalaya river. Automobile trucks are being rushed to Lafayette from more than 100 miles away in Texas.

The Lafayette relief forces called a dozen towns for help and trucks by the hundreds rolled into Lafayette, all given without charge. Besides there are 250,000 head of livestock in the imperiled regions. Thousands of hogs, cattle, horses and mules are being drowned every day and the inexorable flood waters march victoriously to the gulf. The task of unscrambling the livestock when the flood waters recede promises to invite many disputes over ownership.

Many of the cattle bear no identification marks. Rainfall today over the Mississippi and Atchafalaya levees came as a severe blow to forces of men trying to check nature run wild. Already saturated and reeling under the pressure of the rivers, the levees now have the added burden of a steady rain.

Levee Work Halts

Work on the levees was next to impossible, so slippery was the ground. Fearful that the torrent would wash away the loose dirt and makeshift of bags of sand laid along the levees to meet the high water, river engineers added thousands to the levee forces in a desperate effort to hold the lines and protect millions of dollars worth of property.

Evacuation of Pointe Coupee parish began today. But the inhabitants were reported slow to believe that at any moment a levee along the Atchafalya or Mississippi might snap and unleash a torrent upon them. Hundreds of surf boats were scattered in that parish in preparation for eventualities. A crevasse at McCrea on the Atchafalya was expected momentarily.

BREAK IN ATCHAFALAYA LEVEE IS IMMINENT

By Universal Service.

NEW IBERIA, La., May 21.—A break in the levee at McCrea, on the east bank of the Atchafalaya is in critical condition and sloughing badly, according to a telegram received by Secretary of Commerce Herbert Hoover here late today. The message came from I. M. Cline, government meterologist at New Orleans.

If this levee breaks 75,000 more souls will be added to the number of homeless and the flood will take property toll of $10,000,000.

A driving rain is falling and waves are battering at the crumbling embankment where hundreds of men are trying to stop the water from breaking through.

The McCrea levee is regarded as the last bulwark holding back the Mississippi river from cutting its way through the Atchafalaya and possibly permanently changing its course to the Gulf of Mexico.

Houston Volt Victim Dies of His Injuries

HOUSTON, May 21. (AP)—J. C. Carter, 38, electrical worker, through whose body 33,000 volts of electricity passed Friday afternoon, died Saturday.

Doctors and nurses considered it remarkable that he lived 12 hours after the shock which, they said, usually is instantly fatal.

Carter, an employe of the electric light company, accidentally touched a piece of metal against a high tension line switchboard.

Building Boom Has Brought About Change In Real Estate Mortgages

By FRED R. RIPLEY

During the years since the war the United States has witnessed the most gigantic building boom of all time. The nearly $40,000,000,000 necessary to finance this greatest of all booms has come from the savings of the American people.

In more recent years an increasingly large portion of the financing of the multitude of hotels, apartments and office buildings, springing up in the large cities like mushrooms, has been accomplished through the sale of real estate mortgage bonds to investors. More than two million people, many of them wage earners, have purchased several billion dollars worth of realty bonds.

Since 1919 the amount of real estate mortgage bonds sold every year has multiplied sixteen times. During 1926 the total is estimated at $1,000,000,000. This sum is more than 10 per cent of the nation's annual savings.

With the failure some months ago of a large real estate mortgage house there has come a flood of articles in the realty bond situation appearing in many financial journals of the country. The gist of this comment is that all is not well with the real estate mortgage bond business; that abuses have crept into the situation. This, if true, would not be a matter for wonder in view of the astonishing growth of the business since the war.

Meanwhile, forces have been set at work to check and to correct any abuses that have developed. New York state officials are engaged in studying the problem and a bill has been introduced in the state assembly for a commission to investigate and report in 1928.

In Pennsylvania legislative action already has been taken. Remedies for the national situation are being sought by leading building contractors, investment bankers and realty mortgage bankers themselves, a committe headed by Franklin D. Roosevelt having been formed at the instance of the American construction council.

As a result of all this, there has been engendered a feeling of uneasiness on the part of the many thousands of holders of realty bonds. In the present series of articles an attempt will be made to show how the real estate mortgage bond business has grown up, what the abuses are that have crept in, and what remedies may be applied.

While it is true that remedies doubtless are needed ,sight should not be lost of the fact that real estate mortgage bonds have a sound and fundamental place in the economic and financial system. Moreover, their flotation in recent years has been an important contribution to the building boom and therefore to general prosperity. In some cases it must be admitted that the ease of this type of financing has led to excess in building operations.

Loans of money secured by mortgages on real estate have been known since the days of antiquity. In ancient Athens it was the practice to affix a tablet upon the mortgaged property. This tablet contained the names of the creditors and the amount of the debt.

Eventually, as debts grew, the nation bristled with mortgage pillars. In addition to his real estate the borrower in Athens could pledge for slavery his person or that of his wife and children. Out of this arose the necessity for the sweeping reforms of Solon. But while Solon relieved Athens of the odious weight of the mortgage pillars, he could not samp out the practice of real estate mortgages. That method of finance had a secure place in economic life and throughout the succeeding ages it continued to flourish. For many generations money loaned on real estate has been classed as one of the safest means for employment for funds.

From the borrowing of money by an individual for a home, it was but a step to borrow larger sums on great buildings in large cities. Before the war the money for use in such projects as hotels and office buildings, was supplied in the main by savings banks and insurance companies.

Then came the war, with its Liberty Loan campaigns — kindergarten lessons for investors. The post-war period found the country filled from end to end with millions of fledging security buyers. In addition there was an overflowing reservoir of investment funds resulting from the amazing prosperity and from America's possession of one-half of the world's monetary gold supply. Moreover, the end of the war found the country with a huge backed-up demand for construction of all kinds.

So we had billions of ready investors, billions of dollars pressing for employment, and a rushing need for new building of all descriptions to make up the war shortage. Out of this situation began to spread the popularity of the real estate mortgage bonds.

KEMP AND BLAIR TURN 2300 ACRE TRACT INTO MODEL FARM

Operators To Show Value of Diversification; Cotton Acreage Cut and 1000 Sheep to Be Purchased

Another chapter in the development of the Wichita Valley is being written 12 miles southwest of Iowa Park on the Blair-Kemp farm —where two progressive leaders of this section are, through practical demonstration adding to the wealth and value of the famous Wichita Valley agricultural district.

The farm itself comprises some 2300 acres of valley land bounded on the north and west by the Wichita river and lying adjacent to the famous K. M. A. oil field. The farm is owned and operated by Wiley Blair, J. A. Kemp and Edwin Blair, the latter now completing his law course at Yale. In every sense of the word it is an average farm and the things that are being accomplished on it and will be accomplished on it can be done on any tract in this entire district.

A Model Stock Farm.

"We intend to create a model stock farm," said Mr. Blair, "and in every sense of the word a practical stock farm. The soil is right, the climate right and conditions are perfect to enable us to demonstrate another profitable example of what can be done with our land. The first thing done in the actual operation of the farm was the reduction of the cotton acreage by some 80 per cent. On the reduced acreage we have in some 300 acres in sweet clover—20 acres in sorghum, 20 acres in pinto beans, 700 acres of sorghum grains, 130 acres in corn, 50 to 60 acres will be planted in fall potatoes, 30 acres in alfalfa and some 11 acres planted in the best Tom Watson watermelons. To sum up the farm proper it presents a perfect picture of diversification.

Sweet Clover.

"Mr. Kemp has demonstrated on his dairy farm, the practicability of the sweet clover crop. This crop has now a wonderful stand and is planted with oats. Sweet clover now stands from six to eight inches high and is making splendid headway. It is without doubt a wonderful forage and grazing factor in raising stock. Sweet clover is grazed for two years and then turned under to revitalize the soil. It is estimated that in fertiliazation value, an acre of sweet clover, after it has been grazed for two years and then turned under, is worth $50 in fertilizer equivalent. Thus while we will reap full benefit from the clover in fattening the stock and providing unusually good forage, we add to the value and productivity of the soil to the extent of $50 an acre.

Variety in Stock.

"We plan to purchase immediately 1000 head of the best sheep available and practical for this section. These sheep will be grazed and fattened during the summer, the lambs sold during the winter and the old sheep sold while fat in the spring, before the corn fed sheep are put on the market.

"We are making plans now to visit the famous 101 Miller Brothers ranch in Oklahoma and purchase at onece 100 fine brood sows.

"The recent investigations made by Mr. Kraft of the Kraft Cheese company which led to the decision to place a modern cheese factory at Wichita Falls should make every farmer anxious to improve and increase his dairy herd. We plan to buy 75 to 100 Holstein dairy cows. Cream will be sold to the various creameries, but not one bit of skim milk will ever leave the farm. Baby pigs will be fed and fattened properly and their market value greatly enhanced by the use of plenty of good milk.

No Tenants.

"We are not competing with the tenant farmers of the state on cotton, as this interview clearly shows —nor are we operating on the old fashioned tenant plan. Mr. Kemp and myself are the operators and we have a most efficient and practical manager in P. B. Thigpen who acts as foreman and manager. The families who live on this farm are more than tenants and the reward of their labor and efforts is far more material under capable supervision than under the old system. Families are provided with comfortable quarters and are leased not more than 25 acres of land. We make it possible for our families to own their own cows, chickens, pigs—in fact we furnish the stock and divide the profits with them."

The leasing system, replacing the old tenant basis of farm operation has been worked out by Mr. Blair and Mr. Kemp and should receive great recognition especially in West Texas where tracts are large and owners have been confronted with the unusually large losses from the present system.

"Our plan," continued Mr. Blair places the responsibility where it belongs. Every family living on our farm must make good before the farm profits. For that reason the farm manager or foreman, Mr. Thigpen, is in complete charge of the entire farm and supervises every movement. Men who live on the farm and work under our plan are subject to labor call two or three days a week. For this labor they receive regular stipulated wages and are therefore earning actual money in addition to the reward of their efforts on their own leased tract of ground.

Labor Supply Assured.

"You can readily see that the plans on this farm mean the absolute independence of the drifting or tramp type of labor. The use of the proper judgment in selecting the crops, the stock and the general plan of the farm program, tend to cut out and reduce one of the meanest bugaboos to farmers—the labor overhead. We will always have a full staff of competant and reliable men and at no time will we be in a position of having to allow crops or stock to suffer through lack of labor to meet any condition."

North Texas farmers should watch this farm and experiment with a great deal of interest as the various programs as outlined by Mr. Blair have a distinct bearing on the agricultural future of the Wichita valley.

Both Mr. Blair and Mr. Kemp are highly enthusiastic over the outlook for this new system of farming. Crops already under way show that the plan is successful and highly practical. C. C. French, industrial agent for the Fort Worth Stock Yards company spent Wednesday with Mr. Blair and Mr. Kemp on the farm in consultation over the selection of the proper stock. The selection of the animals will start at once, according to Mr. Blair and a short time will see one of the finest diversified stock farms in the south.

Mr. French, who is well acquainted in this section was warm in his praise of the venture. He was particularly impressed with the showing being made on the clover crop and stated that he considered it one of the finest things a farmer can plant today.

He said:

"Sweet clover not only chokes out Johnson grass and rids a field completely of it, but is invaluable as a fertilizer. Every farmer should know these facts and should realize the significance of them. One hundred pounds of sand will hold but 25 pounds of water; 100 pounds of clay will hold but 50 pounds of water, while 100 pounds of numous earth will hold 194 pounds of water. That is the most forceful way I know of explaining the value to the soil of ploughed under clover.

"Mr. Blair and Mr. Kemp are undertaking a splendid piece of work and I am glad to see them start off with a large herd of sheep. Other sections of the state cash in on the sheep and wool industry and there is no reason why this section with its wonderful water facilities should not head the list."

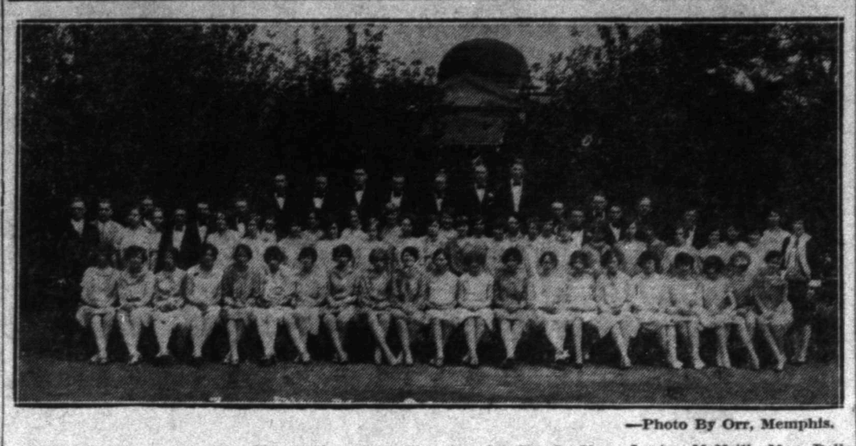

All Buildings Modern.

All the farm buildings, from the two main houses to the barns are thoroughly modern and splendid examples of economical farm buildings.

In one of the homes, Mr. Blair has installed comfortable living quarters for himself and party and plans to spend quite a bit of his time on the farm. He is highly enthusiastic over his country home quarters and plans to include every modern improvement. He hopes to spend a part of every week on the farm take an active part in the business. Edwin Blair, his son, who is now finishing his law course at Yale university plans to spend a part of the summer with his father. He is interested, with his father and J. A. Kemp in the farm.

"It is our intention," concluded Mr. Blair, "to thoroughly prove out the practicability of diversification and the various methods as I have outlined. As soon as we have done this, we plan to cut up this farm into small tracts of 20, 40, 60 and 80 acres and sell them to responsible farm operators on liberal terms."

INJURED YOUTH DIES.

FORT WORTH, May 21. (AP)—Louis Evans Boring, 22, died in a hospital here Friday night from injuries sustained in an automobile accident near Strawn Friday afternoon.

Seminole Field Nears March Production Peak

TULSA, May 21.—Greater Seminole made another climb, and is now near the peak of the latter part of March. For the 24 hours ending Friday morning the field consisting of Bowlegs, Earlsboro, Searight and Seminole city, made 360,108 barrels from 436 wells, an increase of 2,231 barrels over the previous day.

The gain is probably due to the use of air pressure. The oil is coming from wells on inside locations.

The movement to restrain the drilling of unnecessary wells under the plan of the Seminole operators who met here last Saturday is being generally adopted. Producers who did not attend the meeting have joined. There is only one company holding out, and its bearing on the situation will in no way effect the results as all of its operations are one inside acreage.

Cost to the state was about $350 per truck, each of which is worth some two or three thousand dollars, Commissioner Cone Johnson said.

RUNYON SAYS

Goldstein Is Back—
Again Title Contender—
Has Saved His Money—
Will Be a Stock Broker—
His Fight With Taylor—

By DAMON RUNYON
(Copyright 1927 by International Feature Service, Inc.)

Quietly and unostentatiously, little Abe Goldstein, former bantamweight champion of the world, seems to be beating back to a shot at his old title.

In Chicago recently he battled Buddy Taylor with such vigor that there was much squawking among the clients when Taylor was given the decision, and the newspaper writers said that such things should not be.

Taylor is accounted the best bantam in the Middle West, and is recognized in about 18 states as the champion. Goldstein had him down, and I gather from the newspaper reports that the very worst the New Yorker should have received is a draw.

Moreover, Goldstein has been winning very consistently lately, showing all of the form that made him one of the foremost fighters of the land at one time. It is said that he has overcome his worst fault, lack of aggressiveness, and is now walking in and belting away at his opponents like a good fellow.

His boxing class has always been admitted. He was schooled by Willie Lewis, the famous Old One-Two king, who transmitted his favorite punch in a somewhat milder form to his small protege. No sharper right hand hitter ever lived among the little fellows than Goldstein.

If he has abandoned his old waiting, cautious habit, I can easily see how Goldstein might regain his former title, though I never thought these cautious boys could alter their style until Michael McTigue turned from a rabbit into a roaring lion.

Abe Goldstein was always a better fighter than Michael McTigue any way you take him, but like Michael he was very, very conservative. Any time he hit an opponent with his right hand Goldstein was apt to drop his man, yet he was almost miserly in the use of his right. He hated to let it go.

They tell me that now he has become prodigal with it, a veritable spendthrift with his right hand smacks, and if that is true Goldstein ought to beat any bantam in the land. He has more class than any of them. He knows the meaning of a stiff defense.

Willie Lewis took Goldstein to the bantamweight title, but after Goldstein lost it to Cannonball Eddie Martin, Willie turned his fist to business. That was some time ago and little was heard of Goldstein until recently when he went under the management of Carlo de Costa, otherwise Charley Cook, the Coombah of West End avenue, who decided that the best thing for Goldstein was plenty of fighting.

The bantamweight situation is pretty well muddled up right now. The title has been in abeyance since Charley Phil Rosenberg was declared to have forfeited it for coming in overweight against Michael Garcia, otherwise Bushy Graham of Utica. Graham had a great chance to get a leg on the title that night, but he blew it.

Bud Taylor, with his western recognition, Tony Canzoneri, of New York, and little Goldstein seem to be the foremost contenders for the title now. Canzoneri probably will not be able to make 118 pounds before long. He is a growing boy. Goldstein is a natural 116 pounder, and is fully matured. The bantamweight limit is catchweights for him.

Goldstein has boxing brains. When he is making one of his real good fights he is an artist in the dear old game of hit and get away. He is a small sized Jack Delaney in the knack of smacking 'em with his right hand. I never could see any reason for caution in a puncher like Goldstein.

Incidentally, Goldstein hasn't been boxing for some years for nothing. He has about $100,000 tucked away where the moths and the rust cannot get at it, and he plans to become a stock broker when he finally hangs up the gloves. He spent his early boyhood in an orphanage and has known great poverty, and he is keeping the money he gets.

He is a mild, quiet little man outside the ring, of modest deportment, manner and attire. Only a slightly scrambled ear tips off his profession when he is in his street clothes. He has studied when he wasn't concerned with the affairs of the ring and has acquired education and polish.

It seems a long time ago that Goldstein was bantamweight champion, and yet he is still a young fellow—in his late twenties. He began early. He was contemporaneous with a coterie of great bantams. Joe Lynch, Little Jack Sharkey, Joe Burman, Pete Herman and others like that and the fact that he has outlasted them all and is fighting better than ever shows you that Abe Goldstein knows how to take care of himself.

I would not be surprised to see him regain the title. Anyone who can make it close with Bud Taylor must be quite a fighter, for I know Taylor can fight.

Athletics To Sign Longhorn Pitcher

BRYAN, Texas, May 21, (AP).—Neal Baker, pitcher of the Texas Longhorns, who broke southwestern conference records Friday when he won his twelfth conference game in a season, will become the property of the Philadelphia Athletics early in June. He said today he had accepted an offer made him last night. He is a senior of Texas University.

Baker will receive $2,500 for signing the contract. He is more than six feet tall and weighs about 185 pounds and has shown remarkable control.

He went to Texas from Terrill Military school. Yesterday's game was witnessed by Mike Drennan, scout for the Athletics and Walter Morris of the Dallas Steers.

WACO NUDGES OUT ON SPUDS

Wichita Falls Loses in 10th By 10-9 Score

WACO, May 21, (AP).—Waco moved into second place of the Texas League race by defeating the league-leading Spudders, 10 to 9, in a ten-inning game here today. The feature of the game was the hitting of Fitzgerald, who collected three home runs and a single in four trips to the plate. The Cubs hit both Payne and White hard, getting 19 hits. West, Cub centerfielder, got four safeties out of four trips also. Score:

The Spudders bounded away to a two-run lead in the first inning. Mann walked and went to third on Fitzgerald's hit past short. Lamb singled past third, scoring Mann and sending Fitzgerald to second. Jenkins singled to center scoring Fitzgerald and sending Lamb to second. Turgeon filed to left and Lamb was cut down at the plate.

Waco scored a run in their half of the first on a walk to Windle, a double by West and an infield out.

Wichita Falls scored three more runs in the third inning and knocked Caldwell from the box. Mann walked and scored when Fitzgerald drove his first home run over the right field wall. Jenkins followed a moment later with a home run over the same barrier.

Waco ran wild in the fourth inning and scored six times. Shires, Vigare, Walgamot and Miner singled in succession, Moore doubled, West singled and Pratt doubled to do the scoring.

The Spudders tied the score in their half of the seventh inning. Fitzgerald hit his second home run over the right field wall. Jenkins singled to left and wen to second when Vigare threw Turgeon's grounder low to first. Swenson singled past third, scoring Jenkins.

Vigare shoved Waco once more into the lead tin the eighth inning. Freeze walked. Windle sacrificed him to second and he went to third while Turgeon was tossing out Moore and scored when West doubled to right.

The Spudders tied the score once more in the ninth inning. Mann beat out an infield hit to short. Fitzgerald hit his third home run over the right field wall scoring Mann ahead of him.

Moore opened the tenth with an infield hit to short and went to second on a sacrifice by West. Pratt walked and Blackerby singled past second scoring Moore for the winning run.

HOUSTON, Texas, May 21, (AP).—Fielding in miraculous form behind the stellar pitching of "Dandy" Dick Whitworth, the Buffs Saturday trounced Jakie Atz's Panchers, 4 to 2, in a swell ball game. The Bisons beat Wachtel, moist ball artist, and one of the best twirlers the Texas League has known. Johnnie Kane and Ernie Orsatti turned in the most startling fielding plays.

CUBS LEAD LEAGUE

BROOKLYN, May 21. (AP)—The Cubs moved into first place here today, when they defeated the Robins by 11 to 6 in a wild second game o fa doubleheader, after which 30,000 fans who taxed Ebbetts field came dangerously close to staging a riot. Robinson immediately protested the contest, declaring the game was not called at 5:45 as agreed to by himself and Manager McCarthy of the Cubs, to allow Chicago to catch a train. The Cubs won the opener by 6 to 4, and the two victories ran their winning streak to six straight.

At 5:40 o'clock the Cubs went in to start the ninth and collected nine runs.

At the conclusion, Umpire in Chief Wilson was extricated from a threatening crowd with great difficulty by special police and several Brooklyn players. The final inning consumed more than half an hour, but Wilson held his stand on the ground that the inning began at 5:45 o'clock.

SPUDDERS TOP TEXAS HITTERS

Wilson and West Lead In Individual Walloping

By hitting safe in his 28th consecutive game Thursday, Turgeon of Wichita Falls was within nine games of tying the modern Texas league record set by Boone of San Antonio in 1922. His long run held him among the leaders but the actual top is held by Wilson, Waco, with 440 closely pushed by his teammate, West. West has the lead in hits, 56. Fitzgerald, Wichita Falls, and Martin, Houston lead in runs, scoring with 37 each, while Gross, Dallas, has run his stolen base total to 13 against 10 for Martin, Houston. Miller, Dallas, has an easy lead in home runs with 10 to Galloway's 7.

Wichita Falls leads in club batting, run scoring, and hits, Waco in home runs. San Antonio in stolen bases. Kiefer, Wichita Falls was still undefeated with a run of five victories. Love, Dallas, leads in strikeouts with 30.

.300 hitters in five or more games, club batting, and pitchers winning half or more games through Thursday follow.

G-R-R-R-R! RATHER LOSE TO ANY CLUB IN THE LEAGUE THAN . . . . .

Apparently welterweight wrestling "champions" are not the only athletes who ride bicycles. They do infer that S. Lewis and J. Stecher give this D. Schikat the merry run-around almost in the same spirit they do their d. dozens.

* * *

Which reminds it was in a bicycle race that the only reporter ever known to make any money made some. That lucky scrivener was Steve Stevenson, now our star news hound, who in the long ago dropped the pencil a moment and kicked aside the Underwood, donned cream-colored tights and rode to the championship of Pennsylvania, including Scranton, winning a bountiful purse of 100 solid smackers.

* * *

Habits of great men: H. Robbins (polo person), he likes to strut his okra up and down side-lines on Midnight, handsomer hoss, before admiring Sunday throng.

Can You Beat It?

Our aces are falling fast and all at once. G. Payne grabbed a blistering yesterday. The great Fussell took the count the other day and Harlem Joe Kiefer skidded under by a 5-4 shade Friday. Them are breaks we must expect from time to time. The law of averages had Curling Kiefer on the hip. Yes, ma'am, as they so coyly word it: Yuh can't win 'em all.

* * *

If, as the picture on the card shows, Mr. Schikat, the wrestler, holds 13 men on high at once, why not can he lift any one male living up and then drop him real hard like Charley Grip does some little fellows? Well, maybe he can.

* * *

Zero in sports: J. Tucker, Waco athletic author (we pull this one once every year in keeping with our vendetta sworn against Jinx back in the days Berry Whitaker was Texas university grid mentor, we were sports department of Austin paper and Jinx was nearest opposition).

* * *

Alluding to Waco, another sour scrivener down there reprimands severely for kidding Dell Pratt over matter of loud chin music and funny fact D. P. crossed wires on naming victory pitcher in last Cub clash here. But 'tis no fault of ours Dell was inaccurate anent the scoring technicality and Alex Metzler continues in the Sox batting order and manufactures those base knocks when somebody simpered Alex would be thrown in as excess baggage on a trade-in for Wilson, the Waco gardener bought by Hose.

In Waco Yesterday

When four home runs by our side, three of 'em by Fitz, fail to win and Petey Turgeon falls off his consecutive game hitting mark all in the same afternoon, one who loves little in connection with the Brazos village cannot wax very enthusiastic in praise for it, its ball team, its sports writers or any of its inhabitants. Somebody ought to cut off the water supply and start a large fire in the middle of the grandstand with rivulets of gasoline running from it to every important point in the town.

Indian Gridsters Hold Final Rally

Closing the year with a survey of prospects for next year, football candidates of the Maroon and Gold of Wichita Falls Junior College Friday morning held a rousing rally with Coach Ludgate. Prospects for the coming year seemed encouraging with a number of last year's fighting team returning and a number of high school letter men for the first time planning to come to Junior College.

Plans were laid for the opening of a training season next September in order that the team might be prepared for a full schedule now being assembled by Coach Ludgate.

AMERICAN EAGLES SHOW WAY WITH BLUDGEON

Just why the American Eagles are leading the Wichita Falls Twilight league race is shown in the batting release this week of games through Wednesday. The Eagles have clouted the pill for a team average of .315 while the next heaviest hitters are the Panhandle Longhorns with a .247 figure.

Maddox of the Americans is the real batting leader with a percentage of .428 over 14 technical trips to the plate. Kellogg, Rounsaville, Hicks and F. Houseman, each up four times, have batted at a .500 clip. Lewis of the Americans and Hull of the Conocos each boast a swat average of .400.

Lewis of the Americans leads the base stealers with five.

Not a home run has been hit to date.

Meredith Leads Coyote Trackers

Nine Letters Awarded High School Team

Filmore Meredith, flashing 440-yard dash man of the Coyotes, has been elected the captain of the 1928 Coyote track team and nine letters were issued to the track men. Meredith will succeed Roy Porter to the task of captain of the team.

Those receiving their "W" for track were Captain-elect Filmore Meredith, ex-Captain Roy Porter, Maurice Allred, Bill Miller, Ross Saye, Clarence Powell, Raymond Mitchell, John Weiler and Ameel Kouri.

Meredith makes the third captain for next year under Bud McCallum that will be listed under the M's. Mitchell is the football captain, Mills the basketball captain and McCallum is the coach.

These will be the four big M's of the school next year.

"Slide, Kelly, Slide," Shows World Series

A great grandstand in New York, filled with thousands of yelling fans—and the two most famous baseball teams in America battling in grim earnest—this is the mighty back-ground for "Slide, Kelly Slide," Metro - Goldwyn - Mayer's new baseball picture now playing at the Olympic theater.

The recent world series furnished the setting. Cameras were sent from the studios and set up during the New York games, and William Haines, hero of the story, donned Yankee uniform and appeared with the New Yorkers against the St. Louis Cardinals, for the intimate scenes in the picture.

The new production, biggest baseball picture in history, is an intimate tale of life with a major league team, with Haines in the role of hero, Sally O'Neil, Karl Dane, Harry Carey, Warner Richmond, Junior Coghland, Eileen Sedgwick, and other noted players. Also some of the most famous baseball players in America make their screen debut in the picture; such men as Bob Meusel and "Irish" Meusel and Tony Lazzeri of the Yankees, Mike Donlin, world's greatest hitter and for years idol of the New York Giants, and others of note.

AGGIES BEAT VARSITY.

COLLEGE STATION, May 21. (AP)—The Aggies took the final game of the Southwest conference baseball season by defeating Texas university here Saturday, 3 to 0.

Coach Rothgeb pitched Hillen, the Aggie giant twirler, and he held the Longhorns to three hits. Reese and Forbes pitched for the Longhorns. The Aggies found the Longhorn twirlers for five hits and these were aided by four Longhorn errors.

This was the Aggies' only victory of the season over the Longhorns.

POLO CLUBS IN ACTION TODAY

Crucial Game of Series On At Call Field

Wichita Falls poloists and the hard-riding Woodson-Throckmorton cowboy combination clash in the final game of the series Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock on Call field. Each club has secured a victory, the cowboys nosing through for a 13-11 win Friday over the local crew.

Wichita Falls with its top lineup pitted against the cowboys today expects to give the combine a marry struggle for the laurels. Robins, Featherston, Goodman and Whyte probably will form the Blue array.

In Goodman, a youngster who has been improving rapidly, Wichita Falls boasts probably the most effective young player in the southwest. His older team mates are lavish in their praise of his ability and aver that with good fortune he may develop into one of the greatest players of the section.

Newark Club Buys Veteran Bentley

NEW YORK, May 21. (AP).—Jack Bentley, veteran southpaw pitcher, was sold by the New York Giants Saturday to the Newark club of the International League.

Bentley will pitch Sunday for the Bears against his old minor league team mates, the Baltimore Orioles, from whom he came to the Giants several years ago in a sensational $75,000 purchase transaction.

Bentley also played first base and spent part of last year with the Phillies in that position, but was returned to New York late in the fall at the waiver price.

SHARKEY SAYS HE CAN KNOCK OUT DEMPSEY IN FIVE ROUNDS

By JACK SHARKEY
Leading Contender for the Heavyweight Championship
Written Expressly for Universal Service.

NEW YORK, May 21.—I now want to fight Gene Tunney for the heavyweight championship of the world.

I think I proved I am entitled to this opportunity by the way I disposed of Jim Maloney. I promised to knock Maloney out and that is just what I did.

Tunney is now my objective. I shall cut the champion down when we meet next September.

Willing to Meet Dempsey

If Jack Dempsey wants to try a come back, I shall take him on before meeting Tunney. You can bet everything you have that I shall stop Dempsey quickly. I think Jack is all through. I saw him when he lost the championship to Tunney and unless he is 100 per cent better fighter than he showed that night it will be all over inside of five rounds if we ever meet.

I fought the Maloney battle according to plan. Many persons supposed I would start swapping punches with Jimmy at the bell in the first round. If I had done so I would have given Maloney a better chance of winning. He is a big, powerful fellow and can punch. I felt that the way to win was first to slow him down with left-hand punches.

What I did: In the first round, I opened a gash under his left eye. In the third round, I started his nose bleeding, while by the fourth session I had his lips cut wide open. I could feel Maloney weakening. He also slowed down a great deal.

Scored From Start

With less than 10 seconds to go in the fourth round, I landed the punch which turned the battle in my favor. It was a driving left hook to the body. Maloney fell forward under the power of the punch. I then crashed my right to the jaw. As Maloney fell to the canvas, I knew it was all over but the shouting. The bell saved Maloney for the time being. I measure Jim after the fifth round started. Once more a right to the jaw dropped him to the canvas. Again he got up without taking the benefit of any of the count.

I pulled my right back again. As Maloney came to the end, moved forward I landed with another frushing right to the jaw. That settled Jimmy.

I want to pay a compliment to the hard, aggressive battle put up by Maloney. His punches had terriffic power in the early rounds, but after I had popped him around for three frames with left handers he slowed down to a walk.

SAND LOT SLANTS

HEADS UP

The Twilight league has completed three weeks of playing and the American Refinery Eagles have kept their record clean thus far in the race. They have had great hitting, good pitching, and more than anything else they have played with their heads in the air.

* * *

GAME TODAY

This afternoon at 3 o'clock the Electrics and the Conocos clash in what should make a mighty snappy game. Both teams have been got off to a poor start this year, but they are now rounding into shape and are by no means out of the running.

* * *

Bill Andree or Eddie Kollman are both ready to step out and start the fireworks off on the hill. The Conocos look like a different team than the one that started so poorly in their first games.

* * *

The Panhandle Refinery Longhorns seem to have hit their stride at last and with all four teams going strong it should be a mighty close race.

* * *

Local fans can't get used to seeing Andy Taylor down. They have learned to look on the skipper of the Conocos as head and shoulders above the average field of Twilight league third basemen. This year Andy is just a shadow of his former self as a player.

* * *

It takes plenty of worry on the part of a man to manage a ball team, and especially one that is down in the lower berths at this time of the year. Andy has been paying too much heed to the needs of his team and not enough to himself. The fans know that it is in him and are only waiting for it to come out.

* * *

Right now the Twilight league has no better an all-around star on any of the teams than Frank Ramsey is with the Conocos. Ramsey is a veteran player in the league and one that is well known. He is fielding all over the outfield this year and hitting well. He is not a sensational hitter, but a good hitter in the pinch. He is leading the league in two-base blows.

* * *

The Conocos have added much strength to their club in the finding of Whiting and Ray for catching and third base. Then Jack Prince comes out with some mighty sweet pitching against the Panhandle club. Looks mighty rosy for the one-time Texhomers.

* * *

UH HUH

The other afternoon following the Electric-American game in which Shadie Hale had made three errors on short, Doc Kelly passed Shadie on the way out:

"Thought you told me you were too old to play ball, Shadie?" was the greeting passed by Doc.

"Well I proved I didn't lie by my work today," retorted Shadie with a broad grin going over his face.

* * *

Gerard Boone must have been running around with Pete Turgeon of late while the Spudders are in Wichita Falls judging by the way the little Conoco infielder has been romping about under pop flies in the last couple of games.

* * *

Boone snared three Friday that looked like they were far and wide out of his reach, but he got under them. Almost gave Frank Ramsey heart failure on one into left field, and scared Reid up with another out in short center.

* * *

Boone makes a few errors but he makes up for these with plenty of hustle. There isn't a better hustler in the league than Boone, and there are several there who are hustling.

* * *

Nobody in the league has hit a home run and the season is three weeks old. Wonder what would happen if they would go three weeks in the Texas league without any homers being knocked?

* * *

Looks like Mr. Cox of the Arbuckle company made a safe offer of one dollar to the first man that hit a home run into the left field slush pit. Hasn't one landed near it yet.

There has been one thing that seems to be the matter with the home run drives in Katy park. Every game played this year has been played with a stiff wind blowing in from left field. It would take a mighty drive to fight this wind into the slush pit.

* * *

They just can't quit the grand old game. Slim Kellogg was back on the job last week and on his first time up this year he got a base knock. Slim looks like the same old Slim. Nobody on the bases and anybody can get him out, but with a runner on the paths and ready to score, it would take Grover Alexander or George Washington Payne to get him out.

* * *

The American Eagles seemed to have taken a fancy to the old Texhoma team. They have Kellogg, Hale, Gordon, Johnson and Luphor. These five would ruin the Americans if they were taken away in a bunch.

* * *

Our most noble city athletes are falling by the wayside fast.

NINE WELLS ADD 5,350 BARRELS TO NORTH TEXAS PRODUCTION

ROXANA WELL IS SENSATION

Four Counties Furnish Big Wells of Week

By TOM TRULY.

Initial production approximating 5,350 barrels was aggregated by wells completed in North Texas the past week besides a number of smaller producers brought in. Young, Cooke, Jack and Wilbarger counties furnished the bulk of the new production with the Roxana Petroleum corporation's No. 12 Ford, Young county, taking first place among the producers.

In an old field where practically all acreage is tied up, the Roxana's gusher is important mainly for its size and the fact that it extends the deep Stovall lime of the South Bend field. Blowing in Thursday afternoon the well averaged 90 barrels per hour in the first 24-hour period. T-P Coal and Oil company also brought in a big well for South Young company at its No. 1 Donnel, near Eliasville and just north of the Stephens county line, which flowed 40 barrels per hour initially.

Well Drops Off.

Although making an impressive start the Panhandle Refining company's No. 20 McCluskey, another South Bend completion, fell off rapidly and at last reports was spraying about 150 barrels per day. It was the first rotary test drilled to the deep lime in that district.

Jack county's best completion was Leidecker and Holman No. 1 Holman in the Rice survey which extended the Buttram pool a mile and a quarter northwest. It swabbed and flowed at the rate of 200 barrels when drilled in. Some sizeable acreage deals resulted from this strike and three new wells are to be drilled near it.

Seaboard Oil and Gas company completed its No. 5 Cullers in the Sam Chairs survey and in the Buttram-Seaboard pool, as an estimated 100 barrels well from an approximate depth of 2000 feet.

Watchorn Oil and Gas company's No. 1 Williams in the B. S. & F. survey was drilling into the pay lime as the week ended with indications that it would equal the Roxana's well on the same fee which has been flowing for five years.

Chapman of Cooke.

The Chapman pool which is a southwest extension to the Hooser pool in North Cooke county, scored the two largest wells credited to Cooke county to date. They were Texas company's No. 2 Dennis and Kewanee Oil and Gas company's No. 1-B Dennis. The Texas company well flowed better than 800 barrels from six feet of sand topped at 1298 feet to cop the palm for Cooke county production. Kewanee's well, coming in two days earlier was at the time the premier well, flowing 600 barrels per day from the sand topped at 1287 feet.

Besides gaing its first refinery the Muenster pool scored several good wells which will aid materially in pushing Cooke county over the 2000 barrels mark in daily pipe line runs next week. Stroube & Stroube at No. 4 Koelzer, Oil Operators at No. 5-A Kleiss and Lynch and Stahl in No. 3 Lueke added a total of 500 barrels flush oil. Roxana completed a 100-barreler at No. 1 Walterscheid.

The most interesting event in Wilbarger county for the week was the completion of Gulf Production company's No. 3 Milner from sand at 1860 feet which made a big head behind a strong gas pressure and is now swabbing 170 barrels per day.

New Pool in Archer.

P. F. Gwynn and the Roxana Petroleum corporation opened up a new pool in Southeast Archer county in a region which has been drilled considerably with disappointing results but without leading to condemnation. Their No. 1 Ward Brothers in the R. R. Rainey survey, 10 miles southeast of Anarene is estimated good for 50 barrels on the pump from sand at 930-37 feet.

Knox county now apears to be in line to receive a spirited play which would doubtless be greater with a favorable market. Another location was made to drill in the southern part of the county by the Texas company which is already putting down one well near the Haskell county line. Unusual significance is attached to the striking of a second gas sand in the Humble Oil and Refining company's No. 1 F. F. Goode, south of Goree, which is now furnishing its own fuel from a sand at 1515 feet, the second since the well was spudded.

One explanation may be worth as much as another but close observers declare they see a better feeling among north Texas oil men. This is believed to be as much the result of confidence gained in the fact that the situation has not altered in several weeks as anything else. With evidence that things will not get worse it is characteristic of the real oil man to be optimistic enough to believe that better days are not far ahead.

Wichita and Archer Are Among Most Active Areas

There were 2823 operations in the oil areas of Texas during April, so the monthly report of the oil and gas division of the Texas Railroad commission discloses. In March there were 3216; in February 2716, and in January 2955.

Brown county led the state, as usual, with 273 operations—82 permits to be drill wells; 36 wells to be shot; 36 to be plugged; 60 producing; 33 dry, 25 plugged, and one gasser.

Wichita has second with 254; Archer was third with 215; Shackelford fourth with 185; Callahan, 160; Hutchinson, 157; Eastland and Young each had 92; Upton, 85; Coleman, 79; Wilbarger, 75; Milam, 71; Stephens 64; Crane, 57; Harris, 50; Howard, 49; Palo Pinto, 48; Cooke, Navarro each 47; Montague, 45; Jefferson, 43.

The summary shows 815 permits issued to drill wells on May 1, compared with 977 on April 1; 1000 on March 1, and 1109 on February 1.

Humble Is Below 1200 Feet in Semi-Wildcat

In the southwest quarter of section 19, block 9, H. & T. C. survey and some distance northwest of the Fluhmann pool in Wilbarger county, the Humble Oil and Refining company is drilling at 1250 feet in N. 1 B. W. Murphy.

Four Fields Decline But District Gains In Oil Runs During Week

While four districts in the Wichita Falls area were declining in daily pipeline runs the past week, the other eight increased to give the area a boost of 235 barrels.

Cooke county came within 100 barrels of hitting the 3000 barrel figure and the next report from that county is expected to show it well above 3000 barrels. Montague county also showed new life and gained 110 barrels.

Individual gains made by other fields were not significant. Archer and Wilbarger counties were the heaviest losers.

Daily runs by fields follow:

Field	Past Week	Prev. Week	Difference
Electra	16,095	16,060	gain	35
Burkburnett	12,056	12,036	gain	20

Panhandle Operators Get Results From Efforts To Curtail Output

AMARILLO, May 21.—Efforts on the part of Panhandle oil producers to restrict the output of the wells in the six counties constituting the Panhandle field were greeted with success the past fiscal week.

A loss of 1380 barrels was shown, the first decline in the Panhandle since the week of April 8. The field the past fiscal week averaged 134,099 barrels a day from 1241 wells, a gain of 21 new wells.

Only five counties show up in the summary, for Moore county's only well is again off. The storage facilities of Cadman and Martin at the No. 1 Sneed in section 68, block 3, of G. & M. survey, being full, the well was shut in temporarily.

Gains were made by Gray and Wheeler counties, the first showing an increase of 701 barrels a day, and Wheeler 62 barrels while the counties of Carson, Hutchinson and Moore revealed declines.

The summary follows:

County—	Daily output (bbls.)	No. of Wells	New Wells	New Output (barrels)	Per well average	gain (barrels)	loss (barrels)
Carson	13,605	133	2	1,100	102.29	...	828
Gray	9,916	135	5	1,450	73.45	701	...

Difference	1,380	21	2	975	2.99	545	629

The Panhandle field's estimated total output for the fiscal week is placed at 938,693 barrels, thus making the first 20 weeks of 1927 have an estimated production of 18,277,958 barrels.

Jno. Hooser and Associates Form Three New Oil Companies In Dallas

AUSTIN, May 21. (AP)—Three oil companies with capital stock aggregating $340,000 all fully subscribed and paid in and headquarters at Dallas were chartered today by the secretary of state for John W. Hooser, A. L. Beason and William E. Hunter, all of Dallas.

The Hooser Oil and Development company has 2500 shares at $100 each. It is to develop oil and minor leases and build and own pipelines and tanks.

The Hooser Royalty company is to "store, transport, buy and sell oil, and gas," and other minor solutions, also sand and clay, "with full right to engage in the oil and gas producing business." Capital stock is $50,000.

An oil drilling business is the purpose of the other company, the Hooser Drilling company, capital stock of which is $40,000.

JNO. HOOSER DISCOVERED OIL IN COOKE COUNTY

John W. Hooser, one of the organizers of the new companies mentioned above, was the discoverer of oil in Cooke county. He brought in his No. 1 August Hyman, near Bulcher, in July 1926.

He sold his Cooke county holding to the Kewanee Oil and Gas company several months ago for a reported consideration of $500,000.

MUENSTER GETS OIL REFINERY

F. & F. Moves Olney Plant To New Field

Munster, the little German community in North Central Cooke county which has been growing by leaps and bounds since oil was struck in the vicinity, is now getting its first refinery.

The F. and F. Fuel Oil company of Olney is moving its plant from the latter city to a new site on the Katy right-of-way at Muenster, in the heart of the present Cooke county production. Work of reconstructing the plant is already under way.

There have been numerous rumors of late that new pipeline facilities were being planned in Cooke county although as yet no definite announcement has been made by any of the companies mentioned.

The Humble Pipeline company is the only company at present with a line in the county, its four-inch system connecting with the Oklahoma trunk line. Cooke county's daily production averaged 2900 barrels the past week.

Three Archer Areas To Be Tested Out By Wells Just Starting

Three new tests which will be watched with more than the usual amount of interest were started in Archer county the past week. Two of the wells will test out wildcat territory in the southeast portion of the county and the other will be near the Gulf and Maer and Staniforth producers in the D. L. & C. survey.

Allday Oil corporation has spudded in its No. 1 W. L. Andrews, 783 feet from the north line and 233 feet from the east line of section 1804, T. E. & L. survey.

Bridwell and Heydrick are rigging up on a drilling location, No. 1 Sam Owen, 750 feet from the north and 150 feet from the east line of the west half of block 59, Jefferson county school land.

The Atlantic Oil Producing company is entering the territory opened up by the Plains Production company on its B. Z. Lyle lease. Atlantic is drilling below 500 feet at No. 1 L. F. Wilson, 150 feet from the north and west lines of the north 30 of the south 170 acres of the Day Land and Cattle company survey.

Clovis Well Shows Oil While Cleaning Out

AMARILLO, May 21.—Frio Oil company has employed Harry Steinberger of Skiatook, Okla., a well known wildcatter, to clean up the fishing job it has on at No. 2 Sanders, in the northeast corner of 11-5n-36e, northeast of Clovis, in Curry county, New Mexico. An examination shows two joints of 10-inch, a casing spear and part of the drill stem in the hole, and these are partly covered by 80 feet of eaves. Steinberger reports that the corrected total depth is 1229 feet and that some oil is oozing from the mud in the hole. Just where it is coming from, he does not know.

Caprock Oil and Gas company in No. 1 Leonard-Levers, in 11-16-32, on the Caprock in Lea county, southeastern New Mexico, was below 3670 feet in a brown sand. It was topped at 3260 feet. It is yielding some oil shows, says word from Roswell.

SOUTH PLAINS AREA.

The Douglas Oil company in No. 1 Boggs-Scroggins, in section 57, block 7, of H. & G. N. survey, in Kent county, of the south plains area, had a show of oil from 2195 to 2200 feet, according to word received at the Panhandle district offices of the company.

W. Texas Gains Four Wild Cats

SAN ANGELO, May 21.—Sixteen locations were made last week in this section of West Texas, bringing the total number for the last four weeks to 69. The only wildcat locations were one each in Coke, Reagan and Kinker counties, the others being in proven areas, eleven in Crane county and two in Upton.

Henshaw and Camp will drill in Reagan county 1320 feet from the southwest lines of section 14, block 48, university land, about seven miles southeast of Big Lake.

Winkler county's location was R. S. Matthews No. 1-D Cowden, 150 feet west of the center of section 7, block A-57, public school land.

Danciger Oil & Refining company will spud this week on its location for No. 1 Velma Burns in Coke county, 330 feet north and west of the center of Clinton survey No. 2.

Joe Bailey Bell Jr., Puts in Appearance

Joe Bailey Bell of the Gulf Production company's engineering corps was located at the Gulf headquarters Saturday and verified a report that he is the proud father of a four-day-old boy by name of Joe Bailey Jr. Besides getting along "just fine" the youngster is already showing signs of making a great football star and an even greater field engineer, according to his father.

South Knox County Attracts Another Test

Three miles northeast of the Humble's No. 1 Goode in southeast Knox county which is not yet 2000 feet deep and has already had two gas showings, the Texas Company has made location to drill its No. 1 B. L. Bowden two miles southeast of Munday. The location is 340 feet from the south line and 750 from the west of the Bowden 148-acre tract, section 115, block 46, H. & T. C. survey. The Texas Company is putting down another wildcat well several miles west of the new location.

Roxana Gets Started On Foard County Test

Foard county's most interesting test, Roxana Petroleum corporation's No. J. F. Matthews, located in section 3, G. C. & S. F. survey, has spudded in and is drilling at 350 feet.

GOOD SHOWING IN LLANO TEST

Winkler County Wildcat Is Week's Sensation

Special to The Record News.

SAN ANGELO, May 21. — Extension of the big production in eastern Pecos county 3000 feet east through the completion of Mid-Kansas and Transcontinental's No. 1C Yates for 215 barrels hourly from 1115 feet and improvement in the showing of Llano Oil company's No. 1 Scarborough in northern Winkler county, only 1 1-2 miles from the New Mexico line, were the week's high lights in oil in the Trans-Pecos and far western Texas. On the Edwards Plateau—that region between the Colorado and Pecos rivers, Dixie and Bryant-Atlantic each added a producer in southwestern Upton county. One of the week's failures was Simm's No. 1 Clark in Upton, which struck sulphur water at 1834 feet after running structurally high.

Texon-Marland No. 1 Harding which promises to open a new pool in west-central Howard county, 5 miles southwest of Big Spring, was cleaning out and being prepared for pumping after being shot with 200 quarts from 3158-88 feet, the hole bridging. Six feet deepening of Buel & Hagan's No. 1 McKenzie in Pecos count, another prospective producer, caused a cave-in on the tools at 2242 feet and fishing was underway. Previously there was 150 feet of oil and 750 feet of fresh water in the hole.

Roxana Buys Acreage.

The outstanding deal of the week was Roxana Petroleum corporation's purchase of a 51 per cent interest in the remaining acreage of the Llano Oil Co. in northern Winkler county, including the tract on which No. 1 Scarborough is located. Details were unannounced, the transaction not having been completed, although the sale was confirmed. After flowing a total of 231 barrels in a little over two days from a pay 3049-65 feet, Independent's No. 1 Hendricks, 660-feet western offset to the Southern Crude Oil Purchasing company's No. 1 Hendricks, Winkler county discovery producer, struck sulphur water in deepening to 3093 feet and this was being plugged off. Southern Crude's No. 2C Hendricks, southern offset to the discovery well, topped the line at 2721 feet, drilled to 2840 and made two million feet of gas.

In Crane county, oil stood 2-700 feet deep Wednesday in Magnolia's No. 5 Hardwick, drilled to 2950 feet in lime. Magnolia No. 9 O'Keefe was drilling in lime at 2880 feet, after obtaining a showing. Tidal No. H2 was swabbing at 3077 feet with 250 feet of oil in the hole and some water showing in Upton county Roxana No. 24 Bowen swabbed 40 barrels of oil in four hours from 2280 feet. No. 25 Bowen swabbed 98 barrels of oil in 24 hours. Dixie's No. 24 Burleson, western offset to Prairie's No 1C (Allie) Lane, a southeastern Upton county producer, made 40-barrel heads of oil Wednesday after drilling to 2015 feet, 38 feet in the pay.

Tests Spudded.

Tests spudded during the week included Texas Company's No. 1 J. M. Perry, three-quarters of a mile southeast of the 1C Lane and 330 feet from the northwest corner of section 3, G. C. & S. F. Ry. Co. survey, and Prairie No. 2C Lane, northern offset to the Texas' Perry and 330 feet from the northwest corner of its 30-acre lease. Bryant-Atlantic's No. 2 Baker in Upton county was considered good for 50 barrels or more daily on the pump after topping the pay at 2265 feet and drilling to 2325.

H. D. Camp, San Angelo independent operator, Thursday spudded a shallow test on the Anton Willeke place, seven miles west of San Angelo, 310 feet from the west line and 220 feet from the north line of section 4, Orphan Asylum survey. The Danciger Oil Co. spudded 3500-feet test Wednesday about seven miles north of Robert Lee, its No. 1 Byrnes, 330 feet north and west of the center of W. H. Clinton survey No. 2.

Well Runs Wild.

No. 1 Smith-Taylor was expected to be a producer within a few days in eastern Pecos county. This Mid-Kansas and Transcontinental test, three-quarters of a mile northwest of the discovery well, was shut down to move back the boiler after striking one million feet of gas at 1160 feet. No. 1B Yates, three-quarters of a mile north of the discovery producer, was pinched in through two two-inch lines, after increasing last Saturday to a rate of 500 barrels the first hour upon deepening to 1285 feet. The well ran wild for several hours before it could be brought under control and was pronounced by J. C. Ford of Tulsa, general superintendent of production for the Transcontinental, to be good for 450 barrels an hour. The six wells during the week gauged as high as 15,000, all pinched in to some extent. Their yield probably would exceed 20,000 barrels if opened wide, but this cannot be done for lack of storage and pipe line facilities, although there are four 55,000 barrel tanks and a score or more of 500-barrel tanks on the lease and a pipe line is moving out 10,000 barrels daily.

Standardizataion Of Drilling Equipment

A very interesting as well as instructive program has been completed for the semi-annual conference of special committees of the American Petroleum Institute on the standardization of drilling and producing equipment to be held June 15-17 at Colorado Springs, Colo., according to an announcement sent out by C. A. Young, director. The sessions will be held in the Broadmoor hotel in Colorado Springs.

Exploration Company Moves Rig to Cottle

Cottle county, just west of Foard, is soon to have another drilling well which will bring its total of active operations to two. The Exploration company is moving in a standard rig on its block south of Paducah and the test is to be No. 1 Richey, 330 feet out of the northeast corner of section 4, D. & W. railway survey. Sun Oil company is drilling the other test, it being on the Burnett ranch southeast of Paducah and drilling below 2400 feet.

—N Y STOCKS

NEW YORK, May 21. (AP)—Enormous accumulation of United States Steel and other high priced industrial, railroad and specialty shares brought out a heavy public demand in today's stock market, and a long list of stocks established new high records. Although profit taking late in the day trimmed many gains, an undertone of strength ran through the day. U. S. Steel, responding to buying encouraged by Elbert H. Gray's optimistic remarks on the industry and on the trade outlook in general, rose to 175¾, the highest figure for all times, and closed at 172½, an advance of more than a point on the day.

A scarcity of offerings as a result of the recent broad investment inquiry, was a factor in bringing about sharp upward movements in many stocks. The demand was broad, embracing practically every class of listed shares. Buying of certain railroad issues suggested important developments despite the disapproval by the interstate commerce commission of the Lorex southwestern merger plan. New 1927 maximums were attained by Western Maryland, Fox, Marquette, Missouri Pacific, preferred, and several others. New York Central also touched a new top, but later on realizing lost all its gain.

Farm Implement, Tobacco, and Public Utility issues were again in the van of the upward swing, new peaks being reached by International Harvester, Case Threshing Machine, Brooklyn Union Gas, International Telephone, International Nickel, as well as several others. Wright Aeroplane jumped five points as a result of aviation enthusiasm created by the Lindbergh flight to Paris.

Profit taking clipped 15 points off the recent gains of LaClede Gas and depressed Houston Oil nearly four points after an earlier advance to a new high at 142¾.

Foreign exchanges showed mixed tendencies. Spanish pesetas jumping 10 points to 17.61 cents and Japanese yen moving down 9½ to 46.37½. Demand sterling advanced slightly and ruled around $4.85¾, while French francs sagged ⅝ ofa point to 3.91 cents.

200,000 GREET DARING FLIER

Folks Jam Field Where Lindbergh Lands

By C. F. BERTELLI,
Universal Service Staff Correspond
Special Service Staff
Special Cable Dispatch.

PARIS, May 21.—After landing at Le Bourget at exactly 10:22 tonight, Captain Charles Lindbergh, the "Flyin' Fool," did not actually touch French soil until 17 minutes later.

Forcibly taken from the seat of his small, graceful plane, he was carried shoulder high by a frenzied crowd that, disregarding police and helmeted soldiers, broke down a six-foot barrier, invaded the aviation ground, and took possession of the American demi-god who, with his boyish face illuminated with a happy grin, had suddenly fallen from the sky into their midst.

Deafening was the cheering. The largest crowd seen in Paris since armistice night apparently made a tremendous impression on Lindbergh, who, blinded by a hundred searchlights, vainly tried to look around him for a familiar friendly face.

He Wants Drink.

"Isn't there anyone who speaks English?" he asked.

"Vive l'Amérique!" roared back thousands of feverish throats.

"Oh, for a drink!" Lindbergh hoarsely shouted. But the enthusiasm of thousands aroud him did not permit any speech.

"Hold him high! Hold him high!" everyone shouted. Women fainted and men were trampled in their eagerness to get near and see and touch the new idol.

Almost fainting himself, Lindbergh was finally rescued by a squad of police who with smart baton work succeeded in rushing the aviator to a limousine rapidly coming across the field.

Immediately all searchlights were directed toward the Aero clubhouse from the central top widow of which Ambassador Herrick was holding himself by one hand and perilously leaning out from a standing position on the sill. He was excitedly waving a sombrero.

Officials Greet Hero.

The entire embassy staff, Clifford Harmon, president of the Aviation league, high French officers, and representatives of all embassies met the aviator in the clubrooms.

The landing took place according to plans. Great preparations had been made by the war office and aviation authorities. They suceeded in their purpose.

No sooner had the official message come stating that the plane had been sighted at Cherbourg at 8:21 than the entire battery of searchlights started to play.

From far-away Mt. Valerian—Paris' main fort—an immense beam shot up, searching the heavens. From all other points of the compass other beams joined thus surrounding the landing field with a circle of light.

Rockets and starlights succeeded one another in quick succession, fired from the field itself. Special lights mounted on auto trucks flooded the turf.

Lindburgh landed away at the other end of the field, but in practical daylight.

Alights Gracefully

Alighting as gracefully as a dragon-fly, the silver-winged plane touched earth, came to rest, stopped.

Armed with special war office permits, the Universal Service correspondents were the first to reach the plane.

Crushed against its frame by the onrushing avalanche, the first arrivals were soon smothered and lost in the ebb and flow of the human tidal wave.

Directly after the short welcoming at the clubhouse, Lindbergh was spirited away by Naval Commander Wise. The party was rushed to Claridge's hotel where an apartment had been reserved.

Lindbergh's condition was such that he demanded imperatively a few hours of undisturbed rest. Under the circumstances, instead of being taken to the apartment at once, the flyer was taken to the American ambassador's residence where he immediately went to bed.

To Stay at Embassy

According to present plans, he will be allowed to remain at the embassy as long as he desires. Tomorrow he will be taken to the Claridge apartment, whic his filled with flowers sent by numerous admirers.

Latest calculations show that nearly 200,000 persons were present at Le oBurget field at 10 p. m. and that there were 40,000 automobiles there.

Fully two hours were necessary to cover the three miles separating Bourget from Paris gates. All along the route enthusiasm redoubled right into the heart of Paris, where innumerable toasts were drunk until morning.

By Universal Service.

NEW YORK, May 21.—Captain Charles Lindbergh won a sizable pot of gold when he dropped into a crowd of excitable Frenchmen and French women tonight.

Estimates of the size of the pot vary, but it may run something like this:

Orteig prize for first New York-Paris flight. $25,000. Estimated immediate income from other commercial sources $55,000.

Possible theatrical or vaudeville income $100,000.

Indicated total: $180,000.

Along Broadway tonight were many who declared that a little judicious exploitation might increase the commercial value of the flight to something beyond a quarter of a million. But Broadway did not know whether the "Flyin' Fool" would stand for such exploitation.

Painters Urge Legislature To Enact Law To Control Spraying Machine

Endorsement of the five-day week and a resolution asking the legislature to prohibit the use of paint spraying machines without precautionary measures to safeguard the health of the painters constituted the most important matters considered at the Saturday session of the Texas State Conference of Painters which opened at 9 o'clock in the Labor temple.

Committees Named

Four committees were appointed at the morning session to prepare suggestions in the matter of resolutions, laws, finance and legislation. Consideration of their reports was started Saturday afternoon, and will continue through Sunday.

The resolution relative to paint spraying was brought up in view of the fact that the average number of years a painter lives while using the device is but six, and no action has been taken in rectifying the menace, it was pointed out at the meeting. Favorable report was given on the local situation, as the spraying method is used in Wichita Falls only under certain prescribed conditions, it was said.

Other resolutions included endorsement of the individual drinking cup as a health measure; a campaign to educate the public on the merit of work done by skilled painters, and a drive to interest painters in small towns in membership in "locals" in their nearby larger cities.

To Elect Officers

Election of officers will be held either late Sunday afternoon or Monday morning, it was announced Saturday night.

The committees named are as follows: Resolutions, W. A. Goode of Dallas, R. C. Leader of Houston and R. E. Newman of Wichita Falls; laws, Charles C. Clark of Austin, H. D. Graham of Fort Worth, and Charles Withers of Vernon; finance, A. W. Schultz of Dallas, E. K. Stran of Galveston, and H. M. Crowe of Marshall; legislative, H. D. Graham of Fort Worth, W. A. Goode of Dallas, Charles Clark of Austin, R. C. Leader of Houston and M. H. Crowe of Marshall.

Officers here for the conference are Jack Banty, San Antonio; M. H. Crowe, Marshall, vice-president, and Charles T. Clark, Austin, secretary.

Stearns-Knight Motor Cars Added To Line Carried By Knight-Whippet, Inc.

Announcement was made Saturday by T. C. Boone, head of the Knight-Whippet, Inc., that the company has selected the Stearns-Knight automobile to head their list of motor cars. The Knight-Whippet Inc., has been appointed distributors for this famous automobile. In speaking of the new addition to the line Mr. Boone said yesterday:

"We are pleased indeed to make this announcement, for our selection of the Stearns-Knight was based upon the appreciation of the Wichita Falls motor public for a truly fine motor car. Those who know the Stearns-Knight know that there is no finer automobile in the world. That is a rather broad statement but a comparison of the Stearns Knight with any automobile made will bear out my statements.

"When the reorganization of Knight-Whippet, Inc., was made a decision was reached at that time to include, with our already splendid line of motor cars, the finest car we could obtain. And so, our selection of the Stearns-Knight line—a line of sixes and eights—fulfills our own ambitions. To those who say that we already have a full line, we say that there is always room at the top.

"I consider our line now the most complete in all West Texas. From the powerful economy Whippet, the sensible Willys Knights—the great sixes and the 70's, to the gorgeously beautiful Stearns—the line affords complete coverage of the American market."

ORCHID SHOP CHANGES HANDS

Jerome Bernstein Heads New Enterprise

Announcement that the Orchid Shop, popular ladies ready-to-wear establishment, is now under new ownership and management made public Saturday by Jerome Bernstein, new manager of the shop. Formerly owned by Dan H. Whittliken, the shop is the largest retail ready-to-wear concern in the U. S. comprising a chain of 17 retail stores and more than 50 independent departments.

According to Mr. Bernstein, a member of the new firm, the organization has unlimited buying power and opportunities. Independent buying offices in New York as well as Paris, scour the women's wear market for new style innovations, buying the same chic styles for Wichita Falls as are bought for the New York, Ft. Louis and Dallas stores. Special designers are also constantly at work to create new modes which are made special for the stores by the manufacturers.

Mr. Bernstein thinks Wichita Falls will profit by the new association.

"I have the assurance of every official in our organization that that Wichita Falls will be generously cared for with new style creations," he said.

"Being a new organization here we are anxious to show the women of northwest Texas that they can find any garment in Wichita Falls that they can find in Oklahoma City and Dallas, and for a price just as reasonable. Many of the style leading stores of the southwest are members of this chain and we have the same selection as they receive."

The shoe department, under the new general management of W. F. Ecton, will undergo a complete reorganization. Millinery is under the management of Mrs. W. C. Payne.

POLICE SEEK CLUE TO ORIGIN OF NOTE

FORT WORTH, May 21. (AP)—Police today were investigating the origin of a note which, atttached to a piece of metal weighing about two pounds and thrown through a window of a downtown building caused a near panic among about 250 persons attending a meeting of the ku klux klan here last night.

When the metal hurled through the window and resounded as it struck the floor, cries of "bomb" went up and there was a rush for the doors. Members returned later, when the supposed "bomb" did not explode.

The note, printed in pencil, contained the following warning:

"We will give you 30 days to get out or we will use twice as much dynamite on this building as we did on the klan hall. We are getting tired of you getting into other people's business." It was signed, "The Blacks."

The Fort Worth ku klux klan here was destroyed last November by fire, origin of which was never determined.

A reward of $500 was offered for information leading to identification of the person connected with the note.

Two Amarillo Men Held On Swindling Charge

Two men who came to Wichita Falls Friday night from Amarillo and registered at a local hotel were held in the county jail Saturday night pending the filing of charges of swindling resulting from the operation of a combination check and short change scheme on several Wichita Falls durggists Saturday.

Methods used by the men consisted of ordering merchandise from drug stores in amounts less than $2 and requesting that change for $10 accompany the order, according to a statement made to Sam Spence, assistant district attorney. Using the addresses of prominent apartment houses, one of the men would meet the delivery boy at the entrance and give him a check for the merchandise and change, according to the statement.

Working the first scheme on Jim Cassel's drug store No. 1 the check aroused the suspicion of M. W. Hatcher, manager, who called police and notified other druggists. After succeeding in the scheme with the Francis-Hobson drug store, the men were arrested by officers Fred Fountain and B. M. Newton as a delivery bo from Miller's drug store made a delivery.

Man Who Helped Build Lindburgh Plane Hurt

By Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, May 21.—Arthur G. Edgar, sales manager of the Ryan Aircraft corporation, the San Deigo concern that built the monoplane in which Capt. Charles Lindbergh flew from New York to Paris, "crashed" here today at a surburban airport. He had flown from the southern California city and was attempting to land when the accident occurred. Suffering from a fractured skull and unconscious, he was rushed to a local hospital.

Mother of Charlie Lindbergh Hopes That He'll Be Permitted to Sleep

Special to The Record News.

DETROIT, Mich., May 21.—In the hour of Charles Lindbergh's triumph, tonight, his modest little mother, Evangeline Lindbergh, thought first and mother-wise of his comfort.

"I hope they let him get right to sleep," she said.

That simple utterance typified what her attitude has been since the first moment her grinning hero son crashed into the world limelight. She did not react to the glory that was his and hers. She did not seem to bask in the reflected fame of his daring exploit. Nor did she consider for an instant the material rewards that will open t othem.

Evangeline Lindberg, prim little school teacher-mother, has tucked Charles Lindbergh in and kissed him goodnight from birth through youth. Tonight standing under the apple trees in her yard on Ashland avenue, she gave voice instinctively to the mothering impulse before all else.

"All I hope is that they let him get right to sleep."

Besieged by Visitors

All day Saturday Mrs. Lindberg's tiny white house had been besieged by throngs of curious well wishers. All day long she had denied herself steadfastly to visitors. She had repulsed newspaper men, and had hidden from her neighbors. Police had been stationed at her front gate to assure her some measure of privacy.

At 4:30 p. m. reporters stormed the gate with tindings of the successful landing of young Lindbergh. The mother met them in the garden among the tulips and apple trees. She knew what had happened. Frenzied blasts of river craft a quarter of a mile away, told her, she said.

"The greatest thing about this to me," she told Universal Service, "is the relief of knowing my boy is safe. I know how proud he must be at achieving an ambition that has filled his whole life for several years."

Mrs. Lindbergh is small. She looked almost girlish Saturday in a big flapping garden hat and an attractive green crepe frock. Her hair is fluffy, brown. Her cheeks were flushed and her eyes sparkled but she had herself well in hand. There was no hint of hysteria, not even a mistiness of vision.

Radiates Pride.

But although she preserved her poise, although there were no tears, she radiated maternal pride. It was pride mixed with bewilderment that people should bother with her.

She spoke precisely and her voice did not tremble, this brave little school teacher mother.

"Of course aviation has bound up Charles' heart and soul almost since he was old enough to understand anything," she said. "As for myself, it is only in these last few hours that I have been able to make myself comprehend what this world-wide interest in me, as the mother of Charles, means.

"I am deeply grateful to the tribute everyone is paying me as his mother but I hope I am not peculiar if I say that it does not mean so much to me. It is for Charles and that I want all the credit and glory.

"The blessed relief of his safety is enough for me. All I hope is that they let him get right to sleep."

Great All-Metal "Air Pullman" In Successful Detroit-Chicago Flight

By Universal Service.

CHICAGO, May 21.—With interest throughout the city intent upon the world-shaking non-stop flight of Captain Lindbergh to Paris today, thousands of Chicagoans were momentarily diverted by the successful test flight of a "palace car" from Detroit to this city.

The air-Pullman, with two pilots and seven passengers flew northward over Lake Michigan near the shore line at noon today, then south, to give the city a glimpse of the luxury car which had an hour or two earlier arrived in de luxe style

The passengers traveled in comfort, reclining at ease in parlor chairs, their feet stretched out over thick carpet, their cigars tapping off ashes on built-in ash trays, while the big plane sped through the air. The new airplane is called the "Standolind."

The passengers—officials of the Standard Oil company—left Detroit at 9:45 a. m. and after completing a non-stop tour over various cities along the east shore of the lake, hove over this city.

The plane is a big three-engine Ford-Stout all-metal monoplane, recently purchased by the Standard Oil Company of Indiana for the use of its executives.

Jones Files Resignation As Agent; Vernon Man Reports Here Monday

Situation relative to the appointment of a county agricultural agent was clarified Saturday when Guy Jones, who has been agent, filed his resignation with County Judge E. W. Nicholson.

Due to the resignation of Mr. Jones, the appointment of G. C. McGowan of Vernon, recommended by officials of A. & M. college as successor to Mr. Jones, will probably be made Monday, Judge Nicholson said.

The situation became muddled during the past few days, due to the announcement from Vernon that Mr. McGowan had accepted the position and the declaration of Judge Nicholson that it would be impossible for him to assume the office as Mr. Jones had not filed his resignation, and as a result the county commissioners' court could not make the appointment.

Mr. Jones announced his determination several weeks ago of resigning as agent. However, he did not file his resignation with the court. Due to his absence from the city, Mr. Jones was unable to file it until Saturday.

Mr. McGowan has been agricultural agent for the Farmers State bank of Vernon. He resigned this position, effective June 1, several days ago, to assume the Wichita county agency.

Bond Opponents To Wage Fight at Polls, Not In Court, Says Taylor

A fight at the polls and no court action, at least until the results of the election battle are determined, will probably be the course followed by opponents to the $1,050,000 bond issuance for the improvement of Wichita county roads, R. E. Taylor, attorney, representing a large group of citizens opposed to the issuance, said Saturday.

Mr. Taylor's statement followed the action of the county commissioners' court of Friday, calling an election on the road project for June 25.

The fight before the court by those opposing the calling of an election was led by Mr. Taylor.

Twenty-five polling places will be necessary for the bond election, Judge Nicholson said Saturday.

Designation of the places will probably be made Monday by the county commissioners' court, according to Judge Nicholson.

Wichita Falls Bids For Press Meeting

Invitations to hold the 1928 convention of the Texas State Press association in Wichita Falls were sent to each member of the organization from the Wichita Falls Chamber of Commerce Saturday. The association meets in El Paso on June 16 and 17, and it is believed the invitation will receive favorable action.

H. J. Adair, publicity manager and convention secretary of the chamber of commerce, will attend the convention, and several delegates are expected to go from here, it was said.

A prediction that the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, which convenes in Denver, Colo., next month, would be brought here within the near future, was voiced by P. E. Roberts, editor of the People's Press, simultaneous with the press invitation. Mr. Roberts will attend the Denver meeting and place application for the next convention that is held in the west, he said.

The Supreme Court or the Chief Justice thereof may assign any District Judge from any District in the State other than that for which he was elected, with all the powers of a resident District Judge of the District to which he is assigned, under such regulations as may be prescribed by the Legislature, or by the Supreme Court in the absence of such regulations enacted by the Legislature. ANNOUNCEMENTS

Card of Thanks 1

WE WANT to express our appreciation for the many acts of kindness, beautiful floral offerings, and words of sympathy extended to us in our recent bereavement and loss of little Theodore. Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Kreul and family; Mr. and Mrs. C. V. Davis; Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Claypool; Mr. and Mrs. I. J. Claypool.

SINCE it has pleased the all wise and Infinite Ruler of our universe to call from this sphere of labor into that higher and better existence, our friend, neighbor and Brother, P. A. Rogers.
Be It Resolved: That the Iowa Park Business Men Luncheon club bow in awe, wonder and submission to the decree of departure, grieved beyond words, at his going and remembering his many virtues since he was a friend to all. One who would clasp one's hand like a grip of steel and make you feel you were not in this world alone. A man who had time from his busy life to lend a hand for civic and community upbuilding and still had time for a friendly word at all times. In his going we should be reminded of the uncertainty of life, and if we wish to do a deed of kindness, do it now, as was ever his living example.
Be it Further Resolved, That our condolence and sympathy be extended his bereaved family in this their hour of deepest grief, and that a copy of these resolutions be furnished to the family and to the press.

Blowing Up Those "Busy" Legends About Bees and Ants

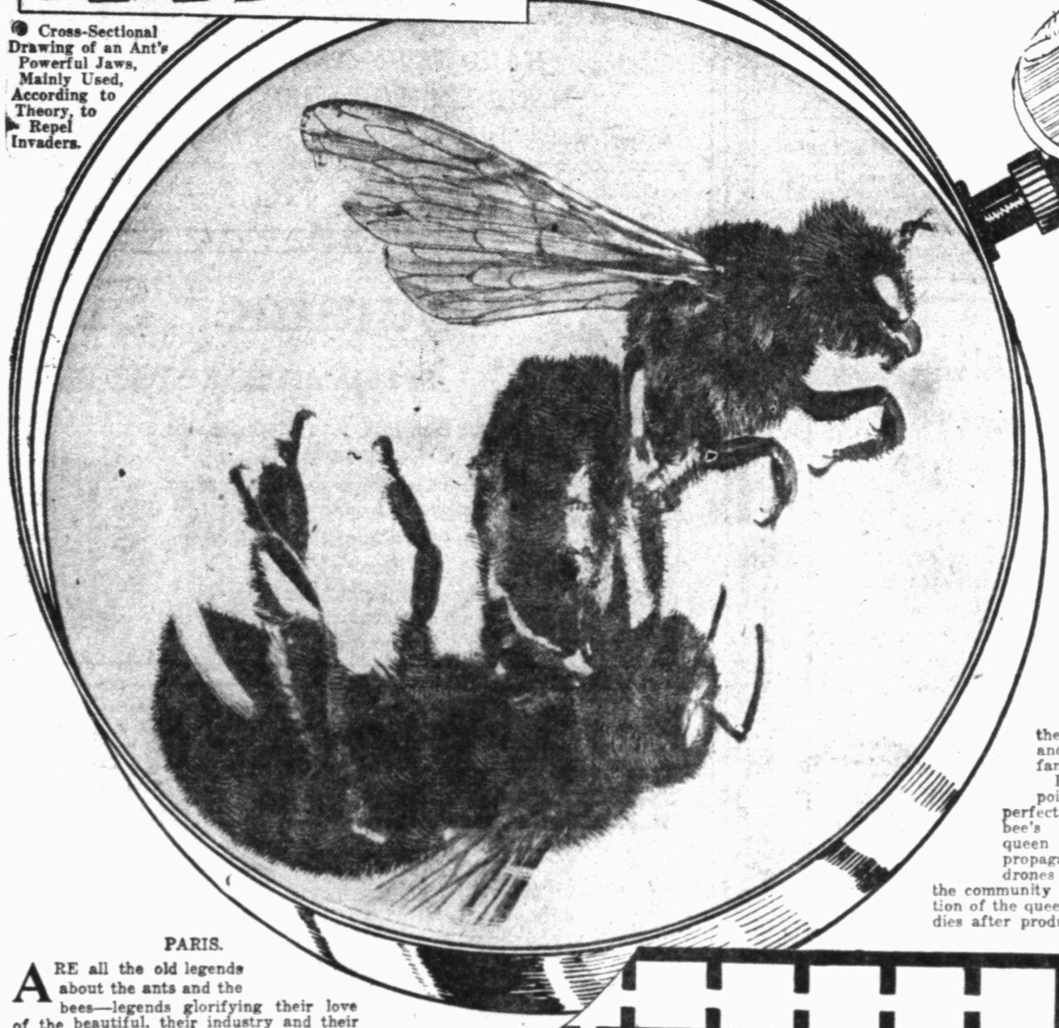

Stinging Challenge of One French Scientist to Another Who Claims the Insect World Originated "Perfect Socialism."

No "Brotherly Love" Here! Remarkable Magnified Photo of Two Bees in Mortal Combat. Note the Tail-Stinger of the Topmost Combatant, Which Has Just Dealt the Death Blow.

Cross-Sectional Drawing of an Ant's Powerful Jaws, Mainly Used, According to Theory, to Repel Invaders.

PARIS.

ARE all the old legends about the ants and the bees—legends glorifying their love of the beautiful, their industry and their perfect socialistic brotherliness—to be knocked into a cocked hat? Or are they to be permitted to remain, eternal stimuli to the young of perseverance, honesty, altruism and frugality?

Two of the world's foremost entomologists, J. G. Millet and Professor A. Bouvier, of this city, leaders in their particular branch of science, are at loggerheads on the point. Bouvier champions the ants and bees and those who glorify their virtues. Millet scoffs at them, calling them dumb fellows without the slightest idea of what it's all about.

Bouvier declares the ants and the bees are models of working communists, that their "organizations" are perfect beyond the greatest dreams of men, that they built up their communistic working scheme before civilization's dawn. Millet holds that their "communism" is not communism at all, but the ordered existence of a lower type of life devoid of any but purely physical processes.

He credits them with no more intelligence than the plants from which they derive their sustenance. Their so-called social gatherings, he says, are no more mental than the groupings of flowers. He points out that flowers bloom in common beds, and maintains that bees and ants are banded together by processes just as simple.

Bouvier, on the other hand, advances the theory that the ants and bees, particularly the latter, have a knowledge and understanding of the beautiful, and cites the fact that the bees go to splendid and fragrant flowers for their food. Millet says the bees seek only sugar and that they would pass by the most enticingly odorous plant for an old shoe if they found sugar in it.

Even the conclusions of the poetic Maurice Maeterlinck, who glorified the bees and the ants in his treatise on their wisdom and their altruism, is laughed to scorn by Millet, supported by experiments of his own, and additional research by Professor Felix Plateau, famous Belgian scientist.

"A bee does not know a good honey-flower from a bad one," says Millet. "There is no choice in what they do. It is purely the instinct of existence. A bee is likely to alight on a flower producing very little honey and neglect a much more fruitful flower a few feet away, because they have no means of determining which is the richest, or realizing that richness if they discovered it. Sugar is sugar to them. They take all of it they can find and do not care where they get it.

"There has long been a fallacy about bees and begonias. It has been pointed out that the begonia is a flower never bothered by the bees. Yet I took a begonia, smeared a bit of honey on one of its petals and a bee, alighting upon it, remained until all the honey had been eaten away.

"Another fallacy is that about the bees destroying their drones because the drones do not produce. The drones are killed for their honey, nothing more. A drone is filled with honey because he happens to be the type of bee that does not produce honey, but progeny. As soon as he is sufficiently sated with honey to attract the attention of his fellows, he is set upon and slain and the honey drained from his body.

"A bee doesn't know an artificial flower from a real one. Make an artificial flower and perfume it and you will find the bee visiting it in search of honey, or sugar. If you put sugar in the flower, the bee eats up the sugar and departs, fully satisfied."

In his book on "Communism Among Insects," Professor Bouvier takes an entirely different attitude. He explains the habits of bees in detail and credits them with having produced a perfect social body. He points out the mechanics of their honey-gathering and gives his reasons, learned by long study, for such processes.

Professor Bouvier has based his findings purely on comparative biology. He declares that man in all his government has the bees and the ants to thank for his political sciences. He points out that the bees and ants, in the earliest years of their existence, formed associations for the preservation of themselves and their young.

He, like Maeterlinck and Emil Fabre, another French entomologist and writer of note, advances the altruistically communistic theory for the gathering of these insects. He holds that the honey stored in cones and similar cells is to feed the community, not the individual bee that acquired it. The same general storehouse theory applies to wasps and other branches of the family, he holds.

Professor Bouvier points out that there is a perfect organization within a bee's hive. The so-called queen bee, he says, is the propagator of the kind. The drones have for their part in the community organization imprefination of the queen bee. This queen bee dies after producing some 60,000 larvae in a season, and the drones, he says, are slain because, after the fecundation of the queen, they are useless.

Such a programme as this, Professor Millet points out, would require an intelligence not found in the bees as he has observed them. He scouts the idea of communism or organization of any kind, although accepting many of the physical discoveries set forth by Professor Bouvier.

The ants, Professor Bouvier contends, have their communities organized to the minutest detail. He maintains that they even have volunteer armies—that their best fighters are always ready to resist attack and that these soldiers go to the danger point whenever such an attack impends. He also alleges that the ants have "meetings," that at these meetings rules are made for the conduct of their colonies and that there are decreed such punishments as death and even exile among them.

"The ants have a nationalization of offspring that is one of the most definite points in their organization," Professor Bouvier says. "The entire colony of larvae is protected and taken care of by the community and each member contributes its share for this necessity. Ants bathe each other in a regular, orderly manner and they show affection by gestures that can be observed by even the lay mind, provided the observation is sufficiently close.

"I have found that what we would term the political organizations of insects are far superior to our own and that their schemes of community government are much more workable than those under which we labor. So remarkable is their socialistic theory—and that of the bees as well—that our republican form of government appears as a prehistoric community beside it."

To all of which Professor Millet reiterates his dignified "pooh-poohs" and cites his experimentations with the shoe, the begonia and the artificial flower to prove his points.

There is yet another argument in favor of the intelligence of the bee to which Monsieur Millet may or may not advance a logical rejoinder. That concerns their extraordinary vision and the method by which they apply it in searching for food and supposedly guiding other bees to the hunting grounds.

A bee's eyes, close students of the insects report, are composed of thousands of lenses, as many as 40,000 to a single eye in certain types, it has been found. Not only do these lenses give an extraordinary range of vision, but it is claimed by some students that they enable the bee to see through solid walls and other obstructions that might otherwise impede their search for food.

Apiarists have discovered that a bee will leave its hive, rise straight into the air and, after circling around once or twice, fly on a direct or "bee line" to its hunting fields miles away. It is from this practice that the expression, a "bee line," to indicate an unswerving course, is derived.

It likewise is contended that bees leave a trail of scent in their wake to guide other bees to this hunting ground. Why this trail should be necessary if all bees have such remarkable visual equipment may be explained, to the disadvantage of the bees, by Millet or other bee-baiters of his school.

There is a theory among entomologists that the bee is color blind and that it has no notion what sort of flower it is selecting other than that it is productive of sugar. With this finding, Prof. Millet heartily agrees, but he does not attribute it to color blindness. Rather, he says, it is due principally to the general stupidity of bees as a lot.

The Millet theory of the bee's lack of intelligence is supported, to a degree, by the discoveries of apiarists who have attempted to simplify the matter of gathering honey and bring about a greater production efficiency. Apiarists have been attempting for many years to discover what color of flower attracts the bees most readily, but have made little progress. The Millet school contends that no color, or no type of flower attracts the bee because he is incapable of being attracted. Instead, they say, he alights on any flower or anything else that has the scent of sugar about it and sometimes even when there is no sign of sugar.

All these queer quirks of the productive little winged creatures have hampered the development of the honey-producing industry no little. While fields of flowers, supposedly rich in sugar yield, have been planted and developed by apiarists in the immediate vicinity of the hives, they have discovered, much to their chagrin, that the bees are as likely to fly past these fields and alight on a corn stalk as they are to settle down to "home consumption."

Another argument advanced by the Bouvier school of apiary observation and given the horse laugh by the followers of Millet, is the fact that bees will not attack men who come into frequent contact with them, but that they resent the intrusions of strangers and express this resentment in concerted attacks.

The Bouvier theorists attribute this discrimination to intelligence. The Millet contingent declare that the bees, being sleepy and lifeless half the time, are unaware of the approach of those skilled in handling them, or do not recognize their presence because of the ease of their movements; whereas those unskilled in such chores frequently strike nests of the insects and arouse them, thus causing the attacks.

Meanwhile, stirred to its depths by this sudden and unexpected controversy, scientific Paris has set afoot further experiments with those "little toilers," either to prove that they are no more "busy" than a champion pie-eater, or else to establish their "respectability" and industry in the winged world.

NASH DRAWS FINE OF $100

Jury Returns Verdict In Trial

Assessment of a $100 fine was the verdict of a jury Saturday in the case of George Nash, manager ofa chain grocery store in Wichita Falls, charged with aggravated assault on T. Eubanks, former employe of one of the stores.

Nash, whose trial started Friday, was accused by the state, reprerented by John Humphrey, assistant county attorney, and Ray Allred, special prosecutor, of striking Eubank over the head with the butt end of a revolver.

The aleged assault was said to have occurred in the grocery store managed by Eubank when Nash went there for the purpose of discharging(?) him, according to the evidence introduced in the trial.

Nash claimed that Eubank used abusive language and made threats of violence. Eubank denied the allegations.

Following the affray Eubank was charged wits disturbing the peace. The date of his trial has not yet been set.

NEW YORK, May 21. (AP)—There seems to have been a mistake in naval strategy. The Atlantic fleet sailed away with 30,000 gobs for a war game just before a gob in a real fight licked the tar out of a doughboy in reparation for walloping a marine.

Graduates Galore—
And Gifts For All—
A Busy Week—

Musical Activity—
Summer Time Lull—
Welcomed by Society—

GRADUATES galore and gifts afore! That's my slogan these bright May days, Kitty, for never in all my born days have I seen busier times with graduates than right now, when there are hundreds of these important young persons darting hither and thither, having so many parties that there is hardly room enough left for them to record these in their graduation books, and as for "gifts afore," these in the form of white gold wrist watches, platinum barpins set with diamonds, and automobiles—have been presented them and speeded up weeks afore the due of the commencement was even mentioned. I've heard of many costly presents, but know of only one downright sensible one, and that was a typewriter an uncle gave his bright young niece, who is just crazy over his gift. As for me, I have heard of so many dances, luncheons and bridge parties at the various homes and clubs (quite grown-up, you remark. I should say they are—no more dolls, skipping the rope and prisoners base—all lipsticks, vanities, bridge and balls now) until I wonder if the flood waters that are laying waste so many lands are not somewhat similar to the flood of good times that are embracing us in such a whirlwind of pleasure, that we'll have to take to the beach and build houses in the sand before we come down to earth and enjoy some of the simple things of life again.

• • •

AND all this follows one of the busiest weeks in the social life of Wichita Falls. For with more distinguished persons here for two days attending the West Texas Chamber of Commerce convention than has ever been in our midst before, we were all doing the very best we can to entertain them and maintain our reputation of being one of the most hospitable cities in this part of the state.

Festivities for graduates of the Junior college will begin Monday with a picnic on the Iowa Park road. Tuesday evening the class will enjoy a swim at Westmoreland pool, and Wednesday night will be "class nite." Thursday afternoon a theater party will be given at the Majestic and Friday, affairs will be concluded with a farewell banquet in the evening.

And on the same day, the high school graduates will begin their social program with a swimming party at Westmoreland where they will also eat luncheon. This will be followed by a theater party at the Majestic in the afternoon, and a lawn party at the Week's home in the evening. Tuesday will be observed as "Kid's Day" and beginning at 8:30 o'clock, members of the class dressed as kids will enjoy a street car ride through the downtown section, ending at the lake where a ride on all the concessions will furnish the amusement. Luncheon will be eaten out there and in the evening, the class play, "Applesauce" will be presented at the college.

No you could never tell that summer was in the atmosphere down this way, so far as social life in Wichita Falls is concerned, for so far we have not had a dull moment.

BUT after all I am not yet through telling you about the good times the high school group will have, for I do believe it remains for Wednesday to be the banner day. This is designated "Girls' Day." The entire class will meet at a ranch at 10 o'clock for horseback riding and other outdoor entertainment. At 2 o'clock all will start home and rest during the afternoon, and at night a group of the senior girls will entertain with an invitation dance at the Kemp hotel. This will be followed by a slumber party for the girls at Camp Noble, while the boys will have one at the Rod and Gun club.

Thursday morning the class will go to Lake Wichita for a german, and in the evening the annual treasure hunt will furnish interesting amusement. The farewell banquet on Friday night at the Wichita club will conclude the festivities.

WE know that Wichita Falls is on the map, musically speaking. But when the next two or three weeks are over the fact will be doubly impressed on our minds. For recitals of pupils reviewing their year's work are the order of the day or evening, and every date seems filled with events of this kind.

Saturday morning an artistic affair was given at the palatial home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Weeks which is wonderfully well adapted to any kind of entertainment because of the unusually spacious living room. The event was in the form of a lovely musicale and was given by a group of piano pupils of Mrs. John T. Burrus, teacher of the Dunning system, and the violin pupils of Ethel Allen Nelson.

In the group of those taking part were Catherine Weeks, Mary Louise Ruff, Roberta Lincoln, Joseph Rabinowitz, J. L. Staley Jr., William Luther Donnell and Homer Donohoo.

And then the recital given by Floyd Ard Thursday evening was of much interest to his friends and especially to local musicians who have watched with interest his wonderful development since his stay of almost a year in Vienna where he studied under the foremost masters of Europe.

And so on down the line are these recitals being announced until far in June when all activities cease sure enough for the long summer days of rest, relaxation and vacation trips that Wichitans enjoy at this time every season.

But we all grow tired of the same kind of entertainment and any change is always welcome, so the summer months are after all a pleasant time of the year and gayety means so much in the lives of all of us.

Austin School, Oldest In City, Has Strong And Enthusiastic P-T.A. Group

By MRS. CARTER McGREGOR
President Austin School P.-T. A.

The Austin school! To every old timer in Wichita Falls, co every man or woman reared here and educated in our city schools 15 years ago, this location has quite a historical and sentimental meaning. It has been with a great deal of pleasure that I was given the privilege of serving a school as P.-T. A. president on the very location that both my husband and myself received our grade and high school education.

It is also with pride that we can boast the oldest piece of school property in Wichita Falls and one that has served more generations than any other.

Co-operation Stressed

The Austin building was erected in 1913 and from the very beginning has had a strong and enthusiastic P.-T. A. Mrs. J. W. Lee was organizer, and for years our association has had such able leaders as Mesdames Sharp, H. F. Weldon, Goodner, Walter Cline, Ed Napier and Fred Barron. Although we have the largest ward school in the city, we are not able to boast the largest P.-T. A. membership, for it has never been our policy to stress membership. We feel that a vision is lost if co-operation between the teacher and parent to bring about the best interests for the child is not our aim. Our membership this year was 350, while our enrollment was over 900. Our dues were the minimum sum of 25 cents a year. Austin school had the first school cafeteria in Wichita Falls, it having been sponsored by the P.-T. A. This year we redecorated our room and added equipment.

The music department has also been a feature encouraged by our club. This year we have furnished the Junior orchestra, with little painted chairs. This orchestra is also the first of its kind in Wichita Falls and has served the community on several occasions with music of the highest type. Miss Madeline Wilson is in charge of this group of children. In a musical line we are proud to add that Floyd Ard was an Austin school pupil and in 1922 won the district cup for our school in the music memory contest. Our P.-T. A. has bought two pianos, one an $850 Baldwin, as well as three victrolas.

We have at different times equipped a rest room, a most complete library and furnished balls and bats for the school. Miss Stewart, our efficient principal, cooperates with us in every way. She finds that playground equipment is not fairly distributed among the children and also causes accidents, so we only use balls and bats. She is in close touch with all her pupils and on account of her keen interest, we are able to do a large amount of social service work.

Attractive Programs

We believe that our program chairman has solved a problem of attendance in having well rounded and short programs. We have a short devotional, a feature from the children and a main address. We always follow the programs outlined by the City P.-T. A. council. At present we are busy with the summer roundup, working with the Red Cross in lining up children of pre-school age for physical examination. We feel that if along with our work we can stress "a sound body is a sound mind," that our mission has not been in vain.

Needless to add that our organization has sent delegates to all state and district meetings, and we contributed $10 to the endowment fund.

She's Stop-Go Cat.

PORTLAND, Me. — Any town that's hard up for a traffic signal might be able to supply the deficiency by hiring Johanna, the mascot cat of the good ship Johanna Dybwad, now at anchor here. This remarkable animal, according to the tales of the ship's crew, noted for their veracity, has a red left eye and a green right eye. When anything goes wrong with the port and starboard lights on the Johanna Dybwad, the skipper just stations Johanna at the masthead and sea traffic rules are automatically observed, the truthful sailors say.

THE TWO MOST popular things in America—baseball and the moving picture—are combined in "Slide, Kelly, Slide," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest contribution to screen entertainment, now playing at the Olympic Theater.

One can see, not only a thrilling screen drama—but also the recent World Series, as the camera invaded the grandstands at New York and St. Louis, and crucial plays of the nation's baseball classic form dramatic highlights for the new romance of baseball, with William Haines, star of "Brown of Harvard," Sally O'Neil, Harry Carey, Karl Dane and other famous players.

It's home-run in entertainment! If you're not a baseball fan now, let "Slide, Kelly, Slide," make you one—it has slid into popularity all over the country!

WHAT to WEAR and HOW to WEAR IT

By LUCY CLAIRE
Special Fashion Adviser for the Smart Set

I grant you that these are strenuous days in which to live, for any faux pas made in the name of fashion are frowned upon and never excused. It is just in knowing what is right and then never deviating from this path.

For the woman who is at home, her greatest temptation is to slip into something that is handy the first thing in the morning and not give a thought to appearance until she is ready to meet a luncheon or tea engagement in the afternoon. Now, the great fault is that these handy things are never much to look at, for they usually represent a dilapidated frock intended for some other occasion.

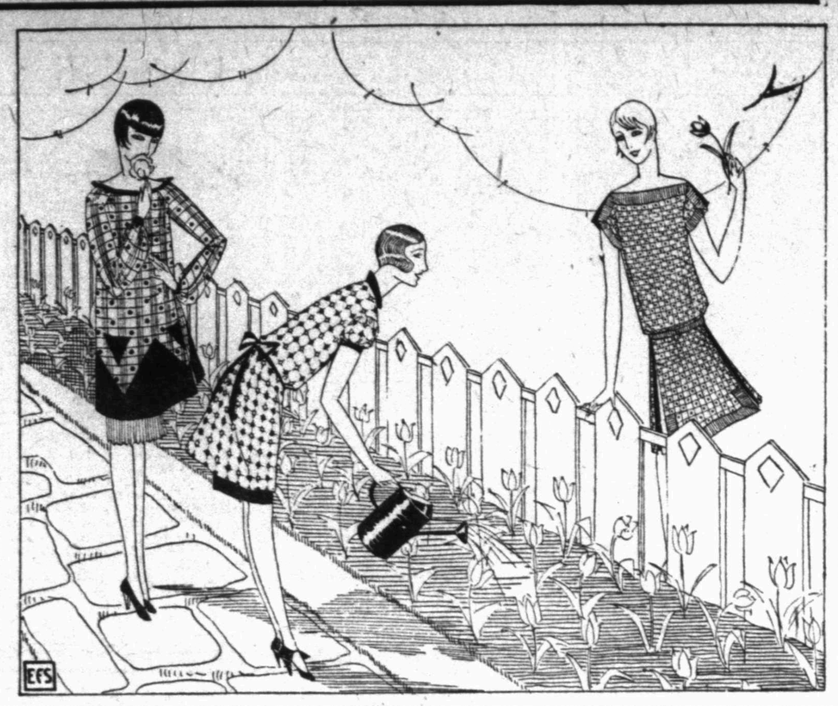

The little frocks which I have shown you today are tempting enough to make most women want a garden just so they can look like these young people. Smocks seem to have very suddenly become an American institution, for I see them everywhere — on trim looking young business women, on well groomed attendants in stores, and of course on all artists, although they can no longer claim them as their own. So why not for the early morning hours of the home as well? The smock at the extreme left is of brilliant green and white gingham and the deep hem and pockets are of plain gingham. It slips right over the head and may be worn the regular length of a dress or it may be a trifle shorter and worn over a slip. It looks so fresh and pretty and will launder almost as easily as a pocket handkerchief.

The little frock in the center is all pink and white from its plaid pattern to the tiny collar and bandings on the short puff sleeves. It fastens down the front—is so easy to get in and out of, and I think it is certainly most presentable.

The young woman standing on the other side of the fence is in a fresh, crisp, cool black-and-white polka dot patterned gingham. The straight, square neck line develops into little shoulder sleeves and the same idea of squareness has been repeated on the skirt. A narrow band of elastic encircles the waist and gives the outfit just enough shape to be becoming.

I think that every woman who is at home owes it to herself to have at least a half-dozen of these little outfits and, if necessary, a fresh one should be put on each morning.

HUSH ORDER BRINGS DIVORCE CRUSH.

LONDON — The recent act of parliament which prohibits the publication in newspares of verbatim evidence in divorce cases has brought about a tremendous increase in the number of divorce cases filed. Apparently England was simply filled with unhappy married couples, who hesitated to air their grievances for fear of the inevitable publicity previously given to lurid details of the testimony. Now that this handicap has been legally obliterated the divorce court judges are being compelled to work overtime.

FABLES OF EVERYDAY FOLK.

The Story of Gasoline Gertie.

Once upon a time there was a girl—Gertrude. She came of honest, though humble, parents, who worked diligently to bring her up in the way she should go.

Thus the father toiled from morning until night that she might get the best education to fit her for her work in the world, and the mother was the proverbial one whose heart and soul were centered in the well-being of her child. Every possible advantage was given to Gertrude.

While she was finishing her course in a business school she met some girl friends and became very "chummy" with them. The father of one of these young women owned an automobile, and Gertrude, on several occasions, was invited to join the family for a ride.

How she loved those rides! Sitting back in the luxurious tonneau, she fancied herself "a lady of high degree" and her imagination soared with the speedometer. It was indeed a joy ride for her.

She met others whose friends had automobiles, and at every invitation for a ride there was always her eager acceptance.

Now, this was all very well while she was under her parents' jurisdiction. But pretty soon she was ready for work and secured a job. Here she came in contact with all kinds of people. But always she sought to procure a gasoline buggy.

Autoing got into her blood and at the promise of a joy ride her head was turned. She indulged in flowing veils and in automobile talk. You would have thought her father was the original Ford. They began to worry at home.

When she would start out for one of these rides (and there are so many persons in every walk of life who own automobiles) her parents, with great misgiving, would remonstrate and beg to know all about the people with whom she was thus traveling.

But Gasoline Gertrude would wave them off with an "Oh, it's all right!" and insisted on being her own steering gear. But she had no great to start her in the direction against danger.

Thus she went on merrily, willy-nilly, careless of the company she chose. The only requisite for her regard was to be able to muster a machine. No matter how ugly a man, he shone in her eyes at the first sign of headlights.

Along came one who was not the right sort, who had a car but no scruples. His intentions were not honest. But the girl saw only his beautifully - painted limousine. There was a party planned with a few friends.

The girl was introduced to wine, which is usually a part of the joy car. The man said things to her that even in her startled senses sounded not according to her upbringing.

On the return journey there was an accident. The man at the wheel had imbibed too freely. It was lucky for the girl, although she sustained injuries that kept her abed for weeks. The whole shock, however, pulled her togethr.

Father put the emergency brake on Gasoline Gertrude—in time. And she saw how far her foolish desires had been drifting her. She therefore propounded this moral to the other girls:

"If you joy ride, be sure of your companions, for every automobile may become a soul-peril."

DIPLOMA LIST MADE PUBLIC

Seniors Conclude Class Work In Schools

Caps and gowns are the newest style in Wichita Falls today, as nearly two hundred graduates of the local high school and Junior college march down the aisles of the college auditorium, for the last time as students, in the baccalaureate services. Dr. Walter J. Johnson, presiding elder of the Methodist churches in this district, is the speaker for this occasion.

Week of Pleasure

Seniors in the high school and sophomores in the college met in regular classes for the last time Friday, adjourning for various social activities and fun. Picnics, swims, parties, dances, theater parties, and class programs fill the week very full for the popular eds and co-eds of the campus, from the opening event Monday to the midnight farewell banquet Friday night after the commencement exercises. High school graduates have special days worked into their program, such as "Kid Day" when all are required to wear kid costumes, and entertainment will consist chiefly of riding the merry-go-round at the lake, and "Girls' Day" when all dates will be made by the girls.

College seniors, finishing the last of their school days in Wichita Falls, have a week full of frivolity, with the traditional "Class Night" program as one of the features. Another feature will be the distribution of the annual, "The Wai-Kun" to all the students some time during the week.

School Musical Organizations Have Largest Membership

Musical organizations in the school have had the largest membership and perhaps the best training in the existence of the school. No college choral or orchestral clubs were organized, but the college students were invited to join the high school clubs. Miss Adelle Ray, sponsor and director of the Girls' Glee clubs, R. S. Riggs, director of the orchestra, and Alva Willgus, boys' director, have been those who have guided the work so efficiently this year. Hitherto, one person has taken all of the music for the school, but the innovation proved a real success.

A 36-piece orchestra, composed of violins, flutes, trumpets, clarinets, saxophones, oboe, trombone, melophone, drums, viola, 'cello, sousaphone, and piano, carried the red and black of Wichita High on several occasions throughout the year. The greater number of these performers represented the school at the state contest at Belton where they lost what was termed a glorious contest to San Antonio, the state champions, and their way was paid for by their programs and entertainments. Officers of this club for the 1926-27 term were: President, James Giddings; vice president, Bill Rogers; secretary, Wirva Lee French: business manager, Wilson Gray; director, R. S. Riggs.

Two Glee Club Groups

The Girls' Glee Clubs have two separate and distinct organizations, although with the same director, Miss Adelle Ray. Several enjoyable chapel programs have been given by one or both of these groups, the most notable of which probably was the Irish program on Saint Patrick's Day. Officers for the second period group are: Lorene Tucker, president; Catherine Weldon, vice president; Geneva Taylor, seretary-treasurer, and Lorene Tucker, accompanist. Third period girls elected as their leaders: Mildred Schaeffer, president; Louise Ramey, vice president; Virgie Mae Adams, seretary-treasurer, and Sylvia Smith, accompanist.

Members of Second Group

The last-named group has for its personnel: Frances Phillips, Evelyn Yates, Don Ruth Coffee, Ruth Parker, Maurine Abbe, Fannie Blank, Evelyn Brown, Vera Parker, Mildred Anderson, Sylvia Smith, Estelle Smith, Mary Huffhines, Alma Griffin, Mary Lawson, Amie Ruth Cowart, Daisy Marie Wratten, Hazel Clark, Pansy Cameron, Edah Jane Castner, Louise Haney, Nora McGehee, Lula Mae Moody, Evelyn O'Rorke, Grace Seitz, Virginia Tasker, Oda Thornton, Charlotte Trim, Sybil Wiley, Ona V. Young, Martha Johnson, and Aileen Muller.

A large number of these musicians belong to the Music club, a federation of all musical organizations into one, and a junior club of the local Musicians club.

LATIN BANQUET BRINGS REFORM

Club Wins Recognition In Many Lines

Carrying out the traditional custom of having the annual Latin banquet, and bringing in many reforms to the betterment of the club, the Latin club of 1926-27 won recognition in several lines. One of the largest and oldest clubs in the school, the organization is also one of the most useful to students. Latin plays, word study and various stunts featured the programs of the year.

Officers were: Mildred Schaeffer, president; James Earl Prothro, vice-president; Elizabeth Langfold, secretary; Howard Martin treasurer; Mark Walker, reporter; Hilda Masters, sponsor.

Spanish Club's Play Successfully Produced

Great success in the production of the annual Spanish club play, interesting programs at the club meetings, and some enjoyable social activities constituted a year of progress for the Junior College Spanish club, "El Circulo Espanol." Some programs in Spanish encouraged the study of conversational Spanish, and most of the activities were very helpful and conducive to the language study.

Miss Dolores Peavy headed the club for this year, with the following co-officers: Shirley Donnell, vice-president; Dorothy Reed, secretary; John Wolf, treasurer. THE CHEER LEADERS

By JAMES J. MONTAGUE

We haven't any cheer leader in our golf club any more. It almost broke the hearts of the governors to ask him to resign. But if he didn't most of the other members would, so they had to do their duty. He took it terribly hard at first, and threatened to go to court about it. He said he had been duly elected and qualified, and that if he had been left alone for another year he would have infused some real spirit into the club, as he could prove on the witness stand by any reputable and truthful witness. But when he was reminded that all six of the judges who would probably sit on his case had threatened to issue bench warrants for him as a nuisance, if they saw him at large on the course again, he gave in. He insisted that he was mistreated, but admitted that it was his own fault for trying to brighten the lives of a lot of dodos whose span of years had been criminally prolonged by the game of golf. So he is gone, but he will not be forgotten for quite a while.

Back slapping was the first method he employed to build a better and brighter golf club. He began it in the locker room, picking out the most solemn trust company vice presidents he could find, and no one is more dignified than a trust company vice president. He would walk up to one of them, and without asking an introduction whack them between the shoulders briskly and inquire:

"What are you shooting around in now, old top—about a hundred and eighty?" If he saw resentment written on the brow of the owner of the shoulders he would say, "My mistake, maybe you made a hundred and seventy-two this morning." Then he would look merrily around at the locker boy for an appreciative smile.

It was only because it is not the nautre of trust company vice presidents to continue conversations begun by strangers that he got away with this as long as he did. They made no responses to his sallies, nor did they complain of him to the governors. They just bore it with fortitude while it was going on, and avoided him as much as possible thereafter.

His next achievement was to organize a singing squad of men of his own age. The fellow could sing, and he could extract harmony from others. When the members came in from the course eager to talk to each other about their scores, there was always a quartette going in the corner, and it made so much audible. The cheer leader always kept the tune, but the others were not quite sure of it. To this day if you mention "Sweet Adeline" to any of the elder members of the club they will glare at you and mutter imprecations under their breath.

When the quartette had been suppressed at the order of the governors, little bright soul found amusement out on the course. If he happened to be playing ahead of a foursome of careful and evenly matched players he would lag behind till one of them drove a ball on to a hidden green. Then he would take the ball and drop it into the cup, and wait to hear the shouts of exultation which arose from the player when the ball was found there. But when this began to happen three or four times a day suspicion fell on him, and after that the course policeman kept an eye on him.

Another time he brought a trained dog to the course with him, and sicked the animal on the balls as they came rolling down the fairway. Of course a lot of caddies were berated at first for not finding the balls, but by and by somebody saw the dog making off with one of them. The discoverer was one of the cheer leader's enemies, and he spent a week tracking the dog. So the playful fellow got another warning from the governors.

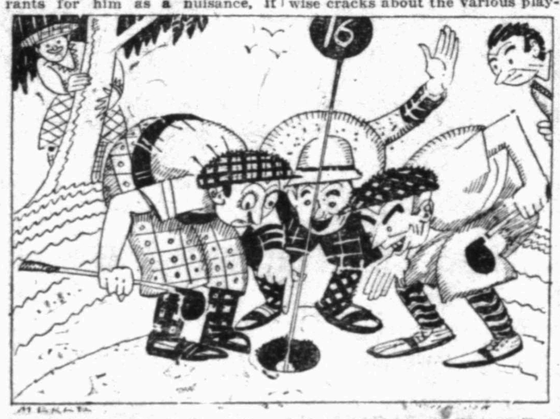

It was a mistake to give a man of this sort the editorship of the club publication, but the governors must have thought that this would keep him busy and out of mischief. For a time he devoted himself to wise cracks about the various players, and to distortions of their scores. This caused murmurs, but no violence. Then one day it occurred to him that it would be a bright idea to get hold of their pictures unknown to them, and print them over captons which indicated that the originals were professionals or amateur champions. One old gentleman with silvery whiskers was labelled "Bobbie Jones" and the caption went on to say that the whiskers were accounted for that he had been practicing so diligently for a big mate hthat he wouldn't take the time off to shave for three weeks, and that the whiteness of them was accounted for by worry at not being able to make more than two holes, in the 18, in one on each round.

The old gentleman never made any hole in under ten in his life, although he was an issiduous player. His wife hel dthat he was being ridiculed, and his husky forty-year-old son who was a member of another club came over to find out about it. Fortunately for the cheer leader he wasn't there on that particular day.

Another really good player was designated as the club's champion stroke counter, and to him the sentiment was ascribed that he did not care who played the shots as long as he could keep the score. Still another player, a man of blameless life and a teetotlar was pictured with a caption of "The man who never takes a drink—unless somebody else gives it to him."

These things ended the matter. Some of the lampooned players were disposed to be easy on the cheer leader, but not so their wives. The next governor's meeting was besieged with spouses and sisters and sweethearts, and there was nothing to do but make an end of the matter by demanding a resignation.

Perhaps it was just as well, for after all nobody ever belongs to a golf club for amusement.

He Would Take the Ball and Drop It Into the Cup, and Wait to Hear the Shouts of Exultation Which Arose From the Player When the Ball Was Found There.

College Writers' Club Has Successful Year

A weekly column in the Wichitan, school paper, contributions to the Wal-Kun, college annual, and social activities that reflected the enthusiasm of the members featured the second year of the existence of the College Writers' club. Poetry, a little drama, and quite a bit of narrative and descriptive prose made up the original contributions, and constructive criticism of contributions at each of the biweekly meetings helped to further the aim "to make higher standards of writing and encourage creative work among the students."

Mrs. Ruth Turner was club president; Dolores Peavy, vice-president; Morell Trevathan, secretary; Harriet Roe, treasurer, and Dorothy Reed, custodian of manuscripts for the last year, and Miss Eva Webb, of the English department, the sponsor. Members included: Isla Cothran, Eleanor Fleming, Ralph King, Rubye Faye Myrick, Raymond Nix, Mary Peters, Dolores Peavy, Dorothy Reed, Harriet Roe, Joyce Samuels, Ruth Turner, Morell Trevathan, Thelma Word, and Miss Eva Weber.

Seven open programs have been given for the entire student body, and those strongest members of the Speakers' club were the ones who so ably furnished orations and talks for the chapel programs. Representatives from the club won honors at the district and state meets in the various forms of speaking.

COOLIDGE TABOOS SPOKESMAN TITLE

President Coolidge has instructed the White House correspondents to attribute no more statements to the "White House spokesman," which is the thin figure of fiction the correspondents have created to represent the president. The correspondents will continue to see the president every Tuesday and Friday. They will continue to write questions on little slips of paper. The president will continue his practice of holding the bunch of slips in his hand, glacing at each in turn, and answering such as he sees fit to answer. But the correspondents will no longer rush away to file dispatches informing the country that the White House spokesman today said thus and so. Instead, they will infor mthe country that "it was learned on good authority" that the president feels thus and so.—B. A. Franklin, Electra News.

GOVERNOR SMITH WITHIN THE LAW

It is needless to point out that the obvious incorrectness of the claim that Governor Smith or any one else is engaged in unlawful practice in urging a change or even the repeal or any law. It is no more unlawful for Governor Smith to advocate a modification of the Volstead act than it was for Wayne B. Wheeler of the Anti-Saloon league to urge its adoption. Mr. Wheeler was then urging a modification of the laws of the country relating to the liquor traffice. Governor Smith was charged by this writer with doing nothing more than that at this time.—R. "Big Sister" Movement Commands Attention

Carrying out the three-sided triangle, "Health, Knowledge and Spirit," in the way that commanded the attention of every other club in the school, and easily the largest in membership of any other organization, the Girl Reserves of the college and high school finished one of the most momentous years in its history. The "Big Sister" movement was probably the most outstanding work of the club for this school session, although the service given to the poor commands much attention.

Social activities were carried out through the open programs, the occasional cafeteria parties and a week-end conference.

College Musical Club A Financial Success

A year of more financial success, better programs and greater fun than ever before is the boast of the Junior College and High School Music club. Space in both college and high school annuals was paid for, and the school was benefitted in many ways by the club.

Ira L. Cain Jr., president; Catherine Weldon, vice-president; Lorene Tucker, secretary, and Frances Phillips, treasurer, have been the officers to guide the club through the 1926-27 term. New officers for the next year have not been elected.

The club has the following members: Virginia Allen, Faye Barnett, Harriet Bradley, Cliftine Butler, Don Ruth Coffee, Anita Crocker, Hazel Dilstelhorst, Marie Dolman, Catherine Douglas, Juanita Erwin, Lewis Foster, Wilson Gray, Clifford Hall, Thelma Howle, Evelyn Huffman, Eunice Jenkins, Tom McCarthy, Orville Medford, Kenneth Mills, Faire Murphy, Mamie Parish, Evelyn Pederson, Crystal Plummer, Dorothy Rollins and James Moore.

Things That Aren't Written in Your Diploma

LIFE is a glorious future—on Commencement Day. From school or college young men and women come forth equipped through education to take up their chosen work—to win from the would the comforts, happiness, success it offers.

Your diploma, though, does not record the responsibilities, the obligations that are yours. The duties of doing worthwhile work, of "making good" in the field you enter, of setting an example for younger folks to follow—these are implied on Commencement Day.

KELLY SLIDES AT OLYMPIC

Baseball and Motion Pictures in Story

The two most popular things in America—baseball and the moving picture—are combined in "Slide, Kelly, Slide," Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's latest contribution to screen entertainment, now playing at the Olympic theater.

One can not only see a thrilling screen drama—but also the recent world series, as the cameras invaded the grandstands at New York and St. Louis, and crucial plays of the nation's baseball classic form dramatic highlights for the new romance of baseball, with William Haines, star of "Brown of Harvard," Sally O'Neil, Harry Carey, Karl Dane and other famous players.

Cast is Exceptional

Besides the famous screen players, the cast includes some of the greatest figures in professional baseball. The "team" in the picture includes Bob Meusel, "Irish" Meusel, Tony Lazzeri of the Yankees, all world series heroes, Mike Donlin, for years idol of the New York Giants and now a picture player, and others recruited from the leagues of different parts of America.

The spectacular world series contest is made the center of a gripping romance of a "bush league" player, who wins fame in the New York team, a role enacted by Haines.

Col. McCoy Makes Debut at Garden

The person or persons, who picked Col. Tim McCoy for a western film star should have a medal.

At least the screen has a new face and figure which radiates personal magnetism and doubtless will attract thousands of film fans who are tired of looking at some of the old types of western heroes who depend largely on six-shooters and horses to put them across.

McCoy goes through his scenes as though no camera were present to record them. It is not acting with him in any sense of the word. Rather, with him, it is business of dealing with Indians and soldiers just as he had dealt with both on the plains and on the field of battle.

This new western hero is the son of a former army officer and was reared among things military. In fact his own army record is not a mean one—having been the youngest colonel in the United States army and is now a brigadier general of Wyoming state militia.

In their search for a new western face M-G-M officials are said to have discarded all the available screen talent about Hollywood and taken up the search elsewhere. They found McCoy on his big Wyoming ranch—a gentleman rancher who had never dreamed of a career before the camera.

The next job was to persuade him to give up ranching and take up acting. His first screen appearance, in "War Paint," which opens Wednesday at the Garden theater, proves that M-G-M made no mistake. He is ably supported by Pauline Starke, Karl Done and a number of other well-known players.

Oil Field Picture Shown at Mission

Art Acord is certainly a fool for luck.

While making "Loco Luck," his starring vehicle which is now playing at the Mission theater, he was on location in the oil fields of Southern California.

The picture deals with romance and adventure in the oil fields and while not working before the camera Acord spent the time chatting with old-time oil men. From them he learned a great deal about oil prospecting and was filled with the fever to find an oil well of his own.

So when the picture was completed he and his director, Cliff Smith, went on a tour of possible oil fields. Previously they had spent their vacations prospecting for gold in the Sierras or working their mining claims. This time they tried a new game.

When they thought they had found a promising place they purchased an option and organized a small company among their cinema friends and sunk a well.

Regular fools for luck, they hit petroleum. There was no gusher but the well has been bringing in a tidy 800 barrels a day ever since and several other wells are being sunk.

ASSISTANTS NEEDED

AUSTIN, Tex.—A building contractor was troubled by neighborhood boys who had a habit of throwing bricks at a boiler, ruining the bricks and disturbing the neighborhood with the noise. Instead of hiring a watchman he engaged the largest boy at $10 a week to make the rest be good. After a few days the lad applied for an increase. "You see," he explained, "there's a couple of kids I can lick one at a time, but I can't lick the two together. So I'm paying them $5 a week to help me."

A terrible scream, a grinding of brakes as an unmanageable automobile swerves from a narrow road and goes over a cliff bringing distruction and death to its occupants, the scream was heard by a lone rider, Bill Clark by name who rode madly to the spot and froced his horse down the decline dismounted and offered every aid to the unfortunate and strange to relate in the family who went over the cliff one little life was spared, that of a child, no living relatives could be located and Bill played by Buffalo Bill Jr., in "Speedy Spurs" found that he had the care of a four-year-old infant on his hands, it is a most interesting and thrilling story and will be shown at the Gem theater today.

NORTH ADAMS, Mass. — Walter Patch, a farmer near here, discovered a four-legged chicken in a brood recently hatched on his chicken ranch. The chick was weakly and seemed likely to die, but Patch put it on a diet of dandelion wine, fed it with a medicine dropper and now the freak is so healthy that Patch has hopes of selling it to a circus.

RICH IS STAR IN STRAND SHOW

"Don't Tell The Wife" Holds Screen

Irene Rich, in her new Warner Brothers' picture, "Don't Tell the Wife," which comes to the Strand theater today, is cast as a sophisticated young Parisian matron, who, in a series of whimsically swift and amusing happenings finds her beloved and gallivanting husband has been led in a direction that is nearly astray through succumbing to the almost international preference for blondes.

The blonde in the case is Lilyan Tashman, the same Lilyan who was the lady who lived across the street in Lubitsch's "So This Is Paris." In "Don't Tell the Wife," she plays an unmarried flirt, whose preference seems to be for men who are already married.

In this case her bright and roving eyes light upon Huntley Gordon. But it is not her eyes that set him aflame. It is when he sees her blonde hair that he realizes there's a dance in the old boy yet. So they go and dance.

William Demarest, as a young man about Paris, which is decidedly more than a young man about town in any other town, begins to interest the wife (Irene Rich). They hit it off so well together that they decide upon a Paris divorce, for even Parisians get divorced in Paris.

It is at this juncture that the short, fat and merry Otis Harlan steps into the picture in the role of a Parisian magistrate. He decides to fix things for everybody. And he does. The result is that he fakes a divorce and then the two couples slip off on their honeymoons before he can stop them.

It is here, in the delicate handling of an extremely delicate situation that the Gallic finesse of the Austrian director, Paul Stein, saves the situation. He has turned out a comedy of frothy fun.

Wild Men Get That Way From Love, Majestic Film Declares

The principal character in "Love Makes 'Em Wild," which opened at the Majestic theater last night, is the kind of a fellow we all know. He might live next door. He might be a brother or a son. Everyone cracks jokes and he's the butt. However, romance comes into his more or less drab existence. Then . . . . well, see it for yourself. It's great entertainment —every moment of it.

Fox Films, producers of the picture are to be complimented on the fine cast assembled to enact it. Johnny Harron is the central figure, known as "Willie the Worm," in the Florence Ryerson story of that name upon which the film is based.

Albert Ray, in directing the film, retained all the humor of the story. J. Farrell MacDonald and Arthur Housman are involved in some scenes which are hilarious in the extreme.

Sally Phipps, a comparative newcomer to the screen, deserves a paragraph all to herself. She is, to be brief, a great little actress. She possesses everything that goes to make up success. If her future performances measure up to the one she gives in "Love Makes 'Em Wild," a glorious future is in store for her.

SKY ADVENTURES

By Captain Charles Nungesser. Printed in New York American and Transmitted by Universal Service

As I had an aptitude for flying I was soon after ordered by the authorities of the aviation school of Avord to go into training as an aviator. On March 22, 1915, they gave me a pilot's license No. 703. I wanted to go to the front at once, of course, but was refused. Each young pilot had to await his turn to get into action and he had to be letter perfect before he was allowed to pit his skill against enemy airmen.

My time was spent at practice in driving old planes between Avord and Bourget and other towns. On one of these trips through the air with an ancient Farnam plane, I was going along nicely, at an altitude of 2000 feet, when the propeller snapped off and I was compelled to volplane to the earth, where I landed with a heavy shock that tossed me out of the cockpit.

I had no time to pay attention to my bruises; I hastily adjusted a spare propeller I had been carrying and rising in a high wind I made Etampes, for which I had been heading, in 13 minutes. But my real flying career began on April 8 when I was sent to the front with some other aviators.

Soon as I reached Dunkirk I put my machine in order and was given a good mechanic named Ponchon. A great friendship sprang up between us at once, although he was a rough, uncouth and slangy fellow with a bad temper.

On April 11 we suspended several high-powered bombs under the plane, loaded our machine gun, and, armed with mausers and service pistols, we made a running start, and took off into the air. Launched on my first big aerial, adventure, I said:

"We are going to Ostende. I must learn the master touch of this dangerous work in a hot zone, for I intend to qualify as an ace."

My ambition was fired in the goal to reach the top of my profession as soon as possible. I had heard of some of the wonderful exploits of Guynemer and Navaire, the French aces, and I longed to follow their example.

Unfortunately, I was too self-confident of my initial trip. When we reached No-Man's land, near the enemy trenches and barbed-wire entanglements, I flew too low, in my anxiety to reach the boches crouching in th edugouts.

Ponchon had taken a hand grenade, and let it fly, but the sound of its explosion hardly began before the enemy's anti-aircraft guns belched out, and a swarm of shells roared upward, and burst.

Six large splinters of flying iron struck the plane, almost knocking it over. It spun around, banked and began to drop. Swiftly working the controls, I managed to straighten it out, put on the gas, and with our exhausts fairly thundering, I curved the machine up into the higher regions. Here our engine stalled, as it had been injured, and coming down we barely landed within the French lines.

That experience taught me caution but did not dampen my ardor, for we worked until far into the night getting the plane in perfect condition, and next day we were in the air again, looking for the enemy.

Our course carried us over Roulers, where a battery was lurking. We gave them one of our bombs and sped on to Houtulot with the rest of the No. 90 shells, and two boxes of steel darts, to try to silence their guns.

Two of the shells fell and exploded with force enough to shake our plane, and we let the darts drop in showers. They went into the bodies and heads of the outposts, as if driven by a six-inch gun. A volley of artillery shots came up at us without doing any material damage, but on the way back another shell fragment put our rudder out of commission, and we were forced to glide down behind our second line trenches for repairs.

That conflict seemed to alter my whole character. I was a changed man. I wanted to kill—kill—kill. I was continually in the air looking for victims, to glut myself with the blood of foes that I had learned to hate with a fierce intensity. It made me restless, uneasy, when I was not in the air hunting them. I had grown cunning. I learned night flying, and all the dangerous tricks of experts exercised in the sky.

The rumble of my motor was now heard every night over Cambrai and Bravelle, where I succeeded in wiping out a net of machine guns. (To Be Continued.)

A NEW TYPE OF THIEF.

LITTLE VALLEY, N. Y.—William Newton of this village awakened one night and thought he heard a noise in his garage. Grasping his gun he went out to investigate, but, finding no one, returned to his bed. In the morning he discovered that a young mountain ash tree and a young plum tree which had stood beside his garage were missing.

The Fable of the Long-Range Lover

He Hid Behind a Bill-Board and saw Her come out with a Human Weasel.

BY GEORGE ADE

One evening while at a Dramatic Entertainment consisting of 22 jazz numbers, a rising young lawyer looked across the Parquette and nearly blinded himself. He thought he had seen some Bambinos when he had attended college and hung around the Fem Sem, but the girl that he now beheld was in a class by herself. She made Cleopatra look like Martha the sewing girl.

The fair Unknown had a pair of Incandescent Headlights and a complexion like the sunset blush on a snow-bank. She was somewhat attired in a whipped-cream delicatessen delirium with mauve-colored calluses. When she fanned herself it could be seen that she had put some Jeweler out of the business.

It is very seldom that one sees anything of that kind except in the back part of a magazine.

Of course, she did not know that the opera glasses were being pointed at her. If she had known it, it would have annoyed her. It always annoys a young woman who has put on $1200 worth of Hurrah clothes to have a lot of strange men do the brazen up-and-down. The only thing that annoys her more is to have these same Rubber Specialists overlook her entirely.

When some 47 would-be Lady Stealers are giving a circus maiden the grand-stand eye, she has to be full of Aplomb if she can sit through it and not let on. The Unknown was still a bud, and yet she was thoroughly up in the part. She was unconscious of her own hit, and she was determined to keep on being unconscious.

Among the other things she wore that evening was a feather-weight escort who had Percy written all over him. He was one of these 90-pound wrap-holders who showed his teeth when he was pleased. He belonged out at Mother's Place, in the country, feeding the white rabbits. Every man who saw him snuggling up to the unknown hoped that he would fall down and break his leg.

The rising young attorney caromed on both sides of the aisle when he went out, for he was still looking at the dream. He hid behind a bill-board and saw her come out with the human weasel.

On his way to the boarding house he walked two blocks past the place. The unknown had him trancified. He imagined himself riding with her in a golden automobile through a grove of violets. There was a phonograph attachment under the seat and she was fighting to hold his hand. He came to just in time to save himself from walking into the river.

This attorney was an emotional young fellow. He had a high John C. Calhoun forehead and the yearning look of a genius who would like to trade a college education for something to eat. From the moment when the goddess flashed across his pathway, he was stung in eight different places. All during business hours he looked off into space without seeing anything in particular and he was thinking of her.

One day he saw her on the other side o fthe street. It made him google-eyed and he walked off the curb. Another time she zipped past him on a bus. Every time he spotted her, she looked at least 40 per cent better than the time before.

"I'm for her," he told himself.

Once he saw her coming out of a department store and she made the others look like the odds and ends of a rummage sale. He heard her rippling laugh and noted the filmy draperies clinging to the Miss America outlines, and then he was worse off than ever. A friend who was with his said that her name was Clarice. So he told his friend: "Any time that you read about Clarice being engaged, start in to drag the river."

When he hear dthat she had gone to a summer hotel, he trailed her and continued his long-distance worship. He was afraid to get too near for fear that he would curl up and have a spasm.

Who was he, a legal worm, that he should dare to crave a word from those rosebud lips or hope for a melting glance from those starlit lamps?

The best he could ask for was t osend her a box of long-stemmed roses and then go and let a train run over him and maybe she would condescend to attend the funeral. That, or else he could save her life in a bomb explosion and die with his head in her lap. All he wanted was a romantic finish that would leave a sad, sweet memory behind. He wanted a guarantee that she would think of him a couple of times and he would be satisfied to die any kind of a death that she might pick out.

While in this desperate frame of mind, he met Mr. Buzzer, the moving graphopone and he-vampire. When the unspeakable Buzzer said that he know Clarice and stood aces with her, the soulful attorney wanted to throttle him, for he could not believe that a real Diana would trifle with a cat-fish.

However, he accepted the opportunity to hold converse with the star of his soul. Buzzer led him around the long veranda and at last he stood in that radiant presence.

"Sis, I want you to know a friend of mine," said the well-known safe blower and social outcast known as Buzzer.

He stood entrailed for at least one-seventieth of a second, then Clarice got under way.

"Oh, Crickets! I spotted you at the The-ayter one night," she said. "I was there with Ollie Pozozzle of Minneapolis. Me and him come out just behind you. Say, wuzn't that show a bear? I'll say it was! I'll tell the world it was! When did you float into this dump? Huh? Oh, sure! The joint has got class butleave me tell you one thing, dearie, the prices are a fright. I'd pass away out here if it wuzn't for Mr. Buzzer. He steps some. I'll say he does! I'm going out to a road house tonight with he and a friend of his. You'd better ring in. I'll take you to a hot little Jane."

When they found the sentimental attorney in the wods an hour later, he was barking like a sealion and butting his head against the trees.

Build a Monument for Box

REPRESENTATIVE JOHN C. BOX of Beaumont is a Texas congressman. James J. Davis of Pennsylvania is the founder of the Order of Moose, labor commissioner in the cabinet of Coolidge and a native of Wales. Box is for shutting the Mexicans out of the United States. He is for the application of the quota clause of the immigration act. Davis is for shutting them out by the application of the quota and at the proper time he would cast aside the quota and adopt the selective system.

That is, if farmers were needed, he would go to the British Isles or the Scandinavian countries and pick real agriculturists for the American farms. If skilled workers were needed he would go to these countries and select the material needed under Old Glory. He would let all the Canadians in on the quota basis. He would shut out the Spanish American as the natives of south European countreis and Asia are shut out.

Davis rode in the air from Muskogee to Wichita Falls to tell it to Texans that a monument as tall as that reared to the Father of His Country should be reared in Texas to perpetuate the fame of Patriot Box and that it should be a shrine for patriots through coming time. Now way down here in Texas there are thousands of planters and farmers and sheep and goat owners and heavy employers of labor in other industries who are compelled to rely upon Mexican labor. There is no where else for them to go.

They do not take kindly to the Box plan. They are hostile to the plan of the gentleman who was born in Wales. They cannot go to Canada for their seasonal labor and they are telling their senators and their congressman that the quota clause of the immigration act should not be changed. A determined effort was made to commit the West Texas Chamber of Commerce to the Box-Davis plan. Commissioner Davis made a powerful appeal to the convention. He made a powerful appeal for Texas to subscribe to the tariff tenets of the Republican party and the Coolidge administration.

He is a magnetic chap and a very persuasive talker. He was given close attention. What happened? No resolution whatever came before the convention with reference to Mexican immigration. There had been an effort to commit the organization to a policy opposed to the Box plan. This found powerful support. Then the committee on resolution let the Box proposition and the Davis plan alone and the convention bowed to the decision of the committee on resolutions.

Not a dollar was subscribed to the monument fund. Not a resolution of approval was voiced by the convention for Box of Beaumont. Texas senators and five congressmen were there. Boss Creager and his lieutenants were there. All alike, Democratic and Republican politicians, padlocked their tongues. They had nothing to say for or against Box of Beaumont or the man who came from near the little village in Wales where Morgan Jones of Texas and David Lloyd George of England were born.

The Man Behind the Plow

A NOTED lawyer of West Texas, R. W. Haynie of Abilene, is the new president of the West Texas Chamber of Commerce. His forbears came to Texas as members of the Stephen F. Austin colony. They aided in founding an Anglo Saxon-Celt community and civilization in a land that was Mexicon territory. President Haynie is a native of South Texas. He has a viewpoint of his own as to the possibilities of West Texas. He sees the man behind the plow ever in evidence. This is what he said in his speech:

"We must not forget that West Texas is primarily an agricultural region. We want factories and we are working to develop all natural industries within our borders, but the fundamentals of our prosperity are bound upon and on the land. They go straight back to the man behind the plow."

President Haynie's forebears broke land in Texas with the rude plows of that bygone period. He is for the man behind the plow. In his speech of acceptance he said.

"Manpower spells the future of West Texas and most of our manpower comes from the farm. In this day of increasingly smaller families in the cities we turn to the farm for the mothers of four, five and seven children. Life must be made more pleasant for them. They must be recompensed in some small degree for bearing the babies who will be tomorrow the strong men and women of West Texas."

Sure, and when the babies grow up and are stalwart boys and winsome girls they desert the farm for city life and the opportunities to be found in the centers of population. Manpower is all right, but this is the machinery age and machine-run farms are to be the farms of the future.

Cotton Average

A WELL known writer on cotton economics has let it be known that a fifteen per cent cotton acreage reduction has taken place in Texas this year. Is this true? West Texas, in recent years, has jumped into the forefront in the cotton belt of the south and southwest as a very large producer of the fleecy staple. Speaking of the acreage of 1927 in his annual address, Arthur P. Duggan said,

"The prospects are there will be no reduction of cotton acreage in the state of Texas this year in spite of all the diversification entreaties. It is very regrettable, for it looks like financial suicide for the farmers to plant a large acreage in cotton again with the tremendous carry-over and low prices. We have never missed an opportunity to beg and plead with the farmers to reduce their cotton acreage, to carry out the idea of more cotton on fewer acres and the live at home program." West Texas and Oklahoma in 1926 surprised the world by the acreage or rather additional acreage given to the production of cotton. Arthur P. Duggan is a very practical man. In his annual report he devoted considerable space to the new cotton picker of West Texas. Cotton growers everywhere are interested. They are invited to peruse this paragraph.

"West Texas has a tremendous advantage over other sections in the new method evolved this year of gathering cotton with the sled. This sled will be perfected and improved and cleaning machinery attached to the ginstands so that cotton harvested in that way will be good as any and can be classed as tenable. Due to the cheapness of harvesting and the saving over the old method of picking the sled is the most important discovery or achievement in connection with cotton since Whitney invented the gin. It is a West Texas product to be used by West Texas farmers and will add literally millions of dollars to the bank accounts of the agriculturists in our section. It is going to be exceedingly hard for farmers living on higher priced land where the sled cannot be used to compete with the farmers of our section in the production of cotton in the future."

If the sled picker is to do away with the hand picker in West Texas as predicted by Arthur P. Duggan, just what will happen to the cotton growing industry in sections where Duggan says the sled picker cannot be utilized.

Why the Delay?

GENERAL LEROY ELTINGE has recently been awarded a citation by the government for gallantry in action in the Philippines 28 years ago. Why didn't the government wait until the general had taken his flight over the invisible river? Red tape is a slow traveler. Death isn't.

ON THE TRAIL OF ROMANCE WITH KIT CARSON!

The famous scout volunteers to bring aid to General Kearney, who is besieged by Mexicans 30 miles from San Diego—Carson uses Indian tactics in crawling through the lines of sentries.—He and Lieutenant Beale suffer great hardships, but save Kearney from annihilation—Carson sees hard fighting with the dragoons in the war with Mexico—His horse falls and Carson is nearly trampled to death by his own forces in leading an attack—His perilous mission through hostile Apache country with dispatches from Fremont.

BY ARTHUR CHAPMAN.

Author of "Out Where the West Begins," "The Story of Colorado," "John Crewa," etc.

CHAPTER VIII.

Kit Carson and a companion, flattened behind clumps of sagebrush, peered breathlessly through the darkness while a Mexican sentry, not ten feet ahead of them, lighted a cigarette.

The war with Mexico had broken, and Carson and a young lieutenant had started on a desperate mission to bring relief to the beleaguered forces of General Kearney in California.

Kearney, marching westward to join Commodore Stockton at San Diego, had been all but overwhelmed by a superior force of Mexicans within 30 miles of his destination. The general himself was wounded, and the remnant of his command was hemmed in, with capture certain unless word could be sent to the American forces at San Diego.

Kit Carson, who was guiding Kearney's expedition, volunteered to attempt to get through the Mexican lines and bring aid. The Mexicans had posted three lines of sentries, to frustrate any such effort. Discovery seemed inevitable, but General Kearney knew that if anyone could lead such a forlorn hope successfully it was Kit Carson, backed by all his years of experience as an Indian fighter.

With Carson was a brave young naval officer, Lieutenant Beale. When they crept away from the American camp under cover of darkness, Carson and Beale carried their shoes tied loosely about their necks. Often they were compelled to worm themselves along, flat on their stomaches, and their shoes were soon lost. By utilizing many tricks he had learned from the Indians, in taking advantage of every possible means of concealment, Carson managed to bring Beale and himself through two lines of sentries. Then, just ahead of them, came a tiny spurt of flame as the sentry on the outer line treated himself to a smoke.

Carson and his companion were afraid that the Mexicon could hear the beating of their hearts, but the sentry gave no sign tha he had seen or heard anything suspicious. There was grim satisfaction in his face in the flare oflight which he had struck with flint and steel. The Mexican defenders of California had fought well and cleverly. They had cut off a large part of Kearney's command, and had inflicted heavy losses. The remainder of Kearney's men, including many wounded, were safely corralled, with water scarce and only mule meat for sustenance. In a few days, at most, they would have to surrender. Then Stockton could be cut off at San Diego, and Colonel Fremont at Los Angeles could be annihilated.

As the light flickered out, Carson and Beale anxiously awaited the sentry's next move. If he advanced a few paces he would surely find them. But, fortunately for the destinies of the American forces in California, the sentry turned his horse to one side, and the scout and his companion crawled past the final line of immediate danger.

Guided by the stars, the two Americans started across the rough, semi-desert country toward San Diego. Now they regretted the loss of their shoes, on account of the prevalence of the prickly pear, a flat-leaved cactus covered with small, needle-like thorns. Soon their feet were swollen and bleeding.

Inasmuch as they were traveling through enemy country, Carson was compelled to choose a circuitous route through the hills, where there would be the least chance of discovery. All the next day and until the following midnight they struggled on. Many times they saw or heard parties of Mexicans who were scouring the country for any foes who might have escaped from the trap in which Kearney had been caught.

When Carson and Beale finally reached the headquarters of Commodore Stockton at San Diego, the lieutenant was deranged and near collapse. The iron-framed Carson had been compelled to give much help to his companion during the last few hours of painful travel.

A relieving force, with a heavy piece of ordnance, was at once sent to the aid of Kearney. The Mexicans, fearing an attack in front and rear, withdrew and Kearney's rescue was effected.

It was two years before Lieutenant Beale fully recovered from the hardships he had undergone. Carson was himself in a few days. This exploit, in penetrating enemy lines under such dangerous conditions, stands high in western annals of heroism. It ranks with the similar feat performed later by four of General Forsyth's scouts in evading the encircling Indian forces and bringing aid from Fort Wallace when Forsyth was besieged at Beecher Island, near the present Colorado-Kansas line.

An unusual spirit of self-sacrifice had been shown by Carson when, on request, he had given up personal preferences and had joined General Kearney's command.

Carson had been with Colonel Fremont, "The Pathfinder," at the outbreak of the war with Mexico. Fremont, finding himself in a strategic position on the Pacific coast, had returned to California, from which he had been ordered by General Castro, before the beginning of hostilities. Colonel Fremont captured the Mexicon post of Sonoma, obtaining some small arms and several cannon. With Carson nominally a lieutenant, Fremont and his warlike explorers marched on Monterey, only to find that it had been taken by an American naval force.

Fremont's command was conveyed by ship to San Diego and joined Stockton in capturing Los Angeles. Fremont was desirous of getting official word to Washington, and he chose Carson as the bearer of dispatches. The mission was by no means a sincure. It meant that the dispatch bearer would have to travel through hostile Indian country, as the Apaches were on the warpath. But no one else was so well fitted for the task as Carson had traversed the southwestern desert several times. Besides, it fitted in with Carson's wishes, as he was desirous of visiting his family in Taos on his way to Washington.

With an escort of fifteen men, Carson started east on his perilous journey. The start was made on September 5, 1846, and Carson had promised that he would complete the trip in sixty days. The men were all well mounted, and equipment and supplies were reduced to a minimum. In fact, the little demand soon ran out of dried meat. There was no time to hunt game, and for many days Carson and his men lived on parched corn.

Carson had chosen a route which he figured would be reasonably free from Indians, and there were no signs of savages until the party reached some ancient copper workings in what is now Arizona. Here a large village of Apaches was discovered. With that boldness of action which so often marked his dealings with superior forces of Indians, Carson urged his men ahead, in the shelter of some timber, and suddenly appeared at the very edge of the village. Carson figured that escape would be impossible, and that the best plan was to put on a bold front.

The plan worked even better than Carson had dared hope. The Indians were surprised and alarmed when the soldiers appeared at the edge of their village. They thought a large party was about to attack them. But Carson, by use of the sign language, convinced them that his party was on a peace mission and desired to trade horses.

The Indians, still somewhat awed, brought up their ponies, and the soldiers' horses, which were showing the effects of the hard pace Carson had set through the desert, were traded for fresh stock. There was an amicable parting with the Apaches, and there is no doubt that Carson's quick action at the right moment saved his party from being wiped out.

Four days after meeting the Indians, Carson's men reached the farthest west of the white settlements, and food was obtainable. The march was continued rapidly until October 6, when General Kearney's command was met enroute to California. Kearney was overjoyed to meet Carson. He was in need of a guide, and circumstance had thrown the very man into his hands. He prevailed upon Carson to turn Fremont's dispatches over to Fitzpatrick, while Kit himself guided the little army of invasion on its way to California.

Though this arrangement was not to Carson's liking, he gave his consent. Fitzpatrick, who had been with Fremont and Carson since the first of the expeditions of "The Pathfinder," went on with the dispatchers, while Carson retraced his steps at the head of Kearney's commond. Nothing was more characteristic of the modest, self-effacing Carson than his setting aside of his personal wishes and the honors which would have come to him as the bearer of dispatches across the continent, to accept this new and dangerous duty under a commander who was a stranger.

He took up his task, though, in a way that earned the highest commendation from General Kearney, and also he was instrumental, as shown in his exploit with Lieutenant Beale, in actually saving the command from capture.

Early in December Kearney reached California, to find his way blocked by a large force of Mexicans. Fifteen men under Carson were sent forward to drive in the outposts. A fierce skirmish ensued and two companies of dragons were sent forward to help. The dragoons attacked the main body of the enemy, and in the fierce charge which opened the battle, Carson nearly lost his life.

Carson was in the front line of attack, and his horse fell. Carson was thrown heavily, but was not injured, but found himself directly in the path of the charging dragoons. The entire command passed over him, and his escape from death or serious injury was little short of miraculous.

Carson's rifle had been broken in two places. Seizing a gun and a cartridge box belonging to a dragoon who had been killed, Carson ran forward and joined in the thick of the fighting. It is probable that the fall saved his life, as the front line in the charge was entirely wiped out.

The Mexicans retreated, but put up a stubborn resistance at every vantage pointing along the trail.

Hearing of a large party of Mexicans enroute to Sonora, Kearney ordered a lieutenant and Carson to take a detachment and capture the outfit, as the Americans were in need of horses. The order was effectively carried out, but in following up the attack, Kearney's command was badly scattered. Mexican reinforcements had come up, and their commander quickly saw his advantage. Forty Americans were cut off, and of this number 36 were killed. General Kearney and nearly every other officer in the command was wounded. To add to the perilous position of the Americans, every one in the detachment in charge of two howitzers was killed, and one of the pieces was captured.

Badly shattered, and with many wounded to carry, Kearney's command moved on, Carson and 15 men being kept in advance as a scouting party. Mexican reinforcements were constantly arriving and finally the enemy grew so strong that it was impossible to continue the advance. Carson picked out a camp where there was water, but the Mexicans charged and drove the Americans back to a hill. In this position General Kearney's case seemed hopeless, and no doubt would have proved so had it not been for the hazardous exploit of Carson and Beale in bringing aid from the American naval forces at San Diego, as described.

Carson's experiences in the war with Mexico had been swift and exciting. He had not only acted as guide through hostile country, but he had engaged in hand-to-hand fighting and had headed one of the most brilliantly successful of "forlorn hopes," with the fate of an entire expedition dependent on his cleverness and coolness in emergency. But other demands were to be made upon his resourcefulness.

It was imperative to get word through to Washington. Once more he was to be called upon to cross the Indian-infested desert and prairies, in a cross-country ride which was to test to the limit his powers of endurance and his skill in outwitting savage foes.

HEALTH --and Diet

By Dr. Frank McCoy

A Series of Lessons on Food Combinations

As I explained in my last article, protein food, such as meat, fish, eggs, etc. cannot digest as well if used at the same time that starchy foods are used.

Protein is not digested at all in the human mouth any more than with a dog or other carnivorous animal. It is advisable to masticate meat well, because the taste is agreeable and the digestive juices of the stomach are thereby stimulated.

As protein food enters the stomach, it begins to mix with the gastric juice, which is especially prepared by nature to take care of this class of food only. Starches cannot be digested in the stomach, and if used at the same meal only interfere with the digestion of the meat, fish or other proteins. The starches, such as beans and bread, will absorb a good deal of the stomach juices, which only render them sour. Often not enough gastric juice is left to properly convert the meat into peptones, which is the only form through which it can be assimilated.

If the non-starchy vegetables are used with the meat, this does not interfere with its digestion. So a good plan is to use the cooked and raw greens with a meat meal and avoid all other foods, such as bread, potatoes, rice, macaroni, spaghetti and all of the starchy foods made from flour products. The harm that often comes from eating meat is caused by indiscriminate combinations with other foods, such as the starches that I have just mentioned.

The average person will do well to use about one-quarter of a pound of meat each day, preferably at the noon or evening meal. The combinations used with the meat should be just as simple as possible, consisting principally of such greens as spinach, asparagus, string beans, lettuce, celery, etc., with the possible addition of a small amount dried sugar fruit.

It is always advisable to use only one protein at each meal. For instance, if meat is used, cheese should not be used at the same meal.

1. Roast mutton, cooked spinach raw celery.

2. Salisbury steak, cooked asparagus, raw grated carrots.

3. Broiled fish, combination salad of lettuce, tomatoes, and cucumbers.

4. Dish of cottage cheese, baked egg plant, cooked parsnips, sliced cucumbers.

(In the next article, Dr. McCoy will explain how to use good combinations with starchy foods.)

Mrs. Wharton's Latest Novel Pours Acid Satire On Idle Society Women

"TWILIGHT SLEEP"

By Edith Wharton, published by D. Appleton & Company

Mrs. Wharton has always been known as a satirist whose opinion of human things was never very high; but in her latest novel she has turned her cruelest wit upon her favorite subject, the pretentious New York society woman, and has burned the poor, futile creature to a cinder.

Moreover, in "Twilight Sleep" Mrs. Wharton has written a novel whose implications are not confined to New York society, but the whole social fabric of the country.

The scene of the novel is New York, but especially of Sutton place (slightly disguised), that spot among the gas houses of the East Side that Mrs. Vanderbilt made fashionable by the simple process of setting up residence in a rebuilt house there. Toward the end of the tale the scene is transferred to Hollywood, where Mrs. Wharton throws the light of her satire on the movie colony there.

This is not to say that Mrs. Wharton had Mrs. Vanderbilt in mind, but she must have had in mind the men and women of Mrs. Vanderbilt's set.

Mrs. Manford in "Twilight Sleep" is one of those women whom her creator once described as "pursuing culture in bands, as if it were something dangerous." Not that Mrs. Manford thought it dangerous; on the contrary, she was a shallow though amiable optimist, who believed firmly that art, literature and religion can all be swallowed in capsules as an antidote to reality, and that by "thinking the best," unpleasant facts can be annihilated.

Being rich in her own right, and holding a high position in New York society, Mrs. Manford was able to cram her days to the bursting point with superficial activities of the most inconsistent kind. Having no sense of humor, she saw nothing absurd in presiding at a mother's meeting one day and a birth control rally the next. Even when she absent-mindedly delivered part of the speech intended for one audience to the other assembly, she quickly glided over the thin ice by pretending she had meant only to state objections for the purpose of refuting them. And being so busy, naturally she had very little time to give to her own family. Her daughter, Nona, had to make an appointment with Mrs. Manford's secretary to get a chance to speak to her mother.

Mr. Manford rarely saw his wife alone; they either went out to dinner or had guests every evening. There was also a son by a first marriage, Jim Wyant, and the divorced husband, Arthur Wyant, to whom Mrs. Manford gave one afternoon a month as part of her general scheme of well-doing. Arthur Wyant was the scapegrace member of an old New York family, ruined by drink and idleness; but Jim was a decent, sober young man, unluckily married to an entirely frivolous, brainless and very pretty girl, who found domesticity utterly boring, and who craved excitement as Arthur Wyant craved drink.

Nona was also intelligent and sound, but had no outlet for either her affection or her energy. Mrs. Manford, brightly benevolent toward the whole world, had neither time nor thought to spare for her family. Their home life had no center; Mrs. Manford's glittering "efficiency" and synthetic cheer was about as warming as a painted fire in an imitation hearth.

She was so busy doing things she had no time to be anything. She could give a dinner for 60 people perfectly, and always had the newest celebrities at her house, no matter how ill-matched they were. Her regular bishop must meet her latest Mahatma; and there were professional entertainers to avoid the need of congeniality among the guests. A party of six people would have been a very dismal affair in her house; she had no gift of intimacy.

When she went up to her country house she grew bored, herself, in 24 hours, unless occupied with building new green houses or installing a power plant of bustling about in some material enterprise. She might as well have run a large summer hotel. She could be kind in her way; when her secretary's mother was ill, Mrs. Manford paid the hospital bills ungrudgingly, but she drove the poor girl to death, keeping up to her endless schedule of things that didn't matter in the least.

For repose, Mrs. Manford went to all sorts of spiritual quacks, who taught her how to "concentrate" or "relax," according to the jargon of the moment. The whole object of Mrs. Manford's existence was to avoid either thinking or feeling, since either might involve pain or perplexity.

So she would not allow herself to perceive that her husband was drifting away from her, that her son's wife, Lita, was playing with danger in half a dozen different ways, that Arthur Wyant was working himself up to the pitch of drink-muddled courage which would lead him to murderous reprisal on the person he held responsible for Jim's unhappiness, and that Nona was left to bear the brunt of all the unpleasant facts and face a disillusionment which her youth did not fit her to coupe with.

The actual working out of these inevitable consequences is too intricately fascinating to spoil by recapitulation, and the climax is intensely dramatic, in a restrained way. In her new vein Mrs. Wharton displays all her old power. Undoubtedly this novel will be widely read and eagerly discussed through out the country, for its implications are not by any means confined to New York society; they penetrate the whole social fabric of America.

ROCKNE BUYS NEW VICTORIA

Famous Coach Purchases Studebaker Commander

Knute K. Rockne, famous commander of Notre Dame football teams, has purchased a Studebaker Commander Victoria for his personal use.

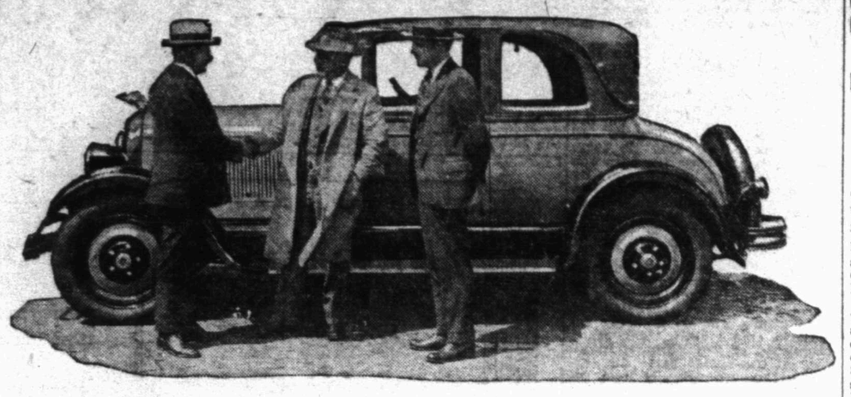

"I like the Commander because it has the same qualities that I seek in a winning football team," said Mr. Rockne. "It responds to the driver with the precision that a well drilled team shows when it leaps into action on the signals of the quarterback."

That the Commander lives up to its name in speed and endurance is evidenced by the records that were established when Harry Hartz, as leading pilot, drove the car 5000 miles in 4909 minutes at the Culver City speedway. For 81 hours and 49 minutes of continuous driving the Commander, a strictly stock enclosed car, maintained an average speed of 61.12 miles per hour. No such car had ever gone so far, so fast.

It is the Commander's claim that it will out-perform and out-live any car, six or eight, selling for $2500 or less. Proof of the Commander's climbing superiority was established when 33 nation-wide hill-climbing tests were conducted and supervised by motor club officials and automobile editors. In every test the Commander demonstrated its brilliant power.

Sixty-one fuel tests, held in different parts of the United States, established the Commander's exceptional economy. Supervised by automobile association and chamber of commerce officials and newspaper men, the Commander delivered an average of 17 1-4 miles per gallon of fuel.

Dealer Explains Fuel Economy In Use of New Dodge Manifold

"But if this new engine gives the car so much more power and so much greater acceleration, how can the car at the same time deliver more miles to each gallon of fuel?" This question, according to Bob Cornelluson of McFall Brothers, local dealers, is asked by many people who are visiting the display rooms to see the new motor which Dodge Brothers have recently announced.

"There seems to be a traditional belief among motorists," said Mr. Cornelluson, "that the buyer who selects a car on a basis of power and performance must, throughout the life of the car, pay for the gratification of his desire—pay in extra fuel expense for each mile traveled. There are, he believes, two ways of getting more power—making the engine larger or turning the engine faster.

"One of the outstanding reasons for the exceptional life and unusually infrequent need of adjustment which are widely recognized characteristics of Dodge Brothers cars is the fact that the engine makes several hundred fewer revolutions in driving the car a mile than are required of the engines in most cars in the same and even much higher price class. In designing the new motor, Dodge Brothers' engineers have provided both more power and greater economy without increasing engine speed or size.

"The gain has been accomplished largely by making important improvements in the carburetor, the intake manifold and passages and the cylinder head. The problem of securing the best results from the gasoline of today and the gasoline which will be sold next year and in years to come is quite different from that which has confronted the engineers in past years.

"Twelve years ago, when the first Dodge Brothers engines were built and tested there were 1,712,000 motor cars registered in the United States. There are today over 22,000,000. In order to produce sufficient fuel for the present and constantly increasing number of motor cars, trucks and tractors, the refiner has developed processes of extracting a larger number of gallons of motor fuel from each hundred gallons of crude oil, and the gasoline of today differs from each hundred day differs materially from that of 1913 and 1914. At that time it was considered good practice to surround a portion of the inlet manifold above the carburetor, or perhaps only a short section of the carburetor body above the throttle, with a jacket through which was circulated a small amount of warm water taken from the engine cooling system. With the more volatile fuel that day even this small amount of heat was a pronounced aid to vaporization.

"Dodge Brothers made a distinct contribution to the art when they designed an engine with the intake manifold entirely surrounded by the engine water jacket for the entire distance from the carburetor to the intake valve—a water heated manifold as it were. But heating to a thicker temperature than that of the cooling water is needed to secure the most satisfactory results from the fuel of today and from the fuel we may expect several years hence.

"If we could watch the behavior of gasoline in the carbureter and intake manifold by having these parts constructed of glass most of us would be surprised. We would learn that when gasoline is mixed with air in the carburetor while the throttle is well opened and the engine is pulling hard the gasoline, instead of vaporizing immediately and mixing thoroughly with the air, acts much like the water discharged from the nozzle of a hose. In other words the mixture resembles rain. Much of this liquid fuel strikes the walls of the manifold and runs along them like water on a plate glass window against which a hose is turned. Thus part of the fuel is vaporized and travels as vapor mixed with air—but a larger part is carried into the cylinder in liquid form. Even if the heat of the cylinder vaporizes it completely there is still the difficulty of having the quality of mixture very widely in different parts of the cylinder or in different cylinders.

"If the mixture is rich enough to fire properly where the plug is located it is too rich in other parts of the combustion chamber. The fuel in the over-rich portion of the mixture cannot be completely burned. Incompletely burned fuel with possibly some deadly carbon monoxide gas will escape through the exhaust pipe and muffler.

"In the new Dodge Brothers engine the mixture from the carburetor containing the desired proportions of gasoline and air passes through a short intake manifold, a section of which is heated by the exhaust to a temperature much higher than that of the cooling water.

"The first advantage of this construction is the increase in power acceleration and in smoothness of performance which comes from a more uniform and more completely vaporized mixture. A second advantage, and one of great importance, is that the engine in a remarkably short time after it is started "warms up" to such an extent that it develops full power and runs smoothly without the necessity of maintaining too rich a mixture by keeping the carburetor control button out. This gives a saving of fuel which, but for the exhaust heated section, would be wasted and it prevents in a large measure the dilution of oil which results when liquid fuel is drawn directly into cold cylinders.

"This explanation of what the engineers have accomplished may interest the mechanic and the owner who likes to know what makes the wheels go round—but after all the final test is the performance of the car and the remarkable increase in engine power which has been achieved.

"A surprise in increased power and acceleration and in added smoothness of performance awaits anyone who has not driven a Dodge Brothers motor car equipped with the new motor and an invitation to try the new car out is extended to everyone interested."

Low Up-Keep Chrysler Feature

Analysis of the causes which have made Chrysler automobiles in the three years of their manufacture among the most popular cars on the market reveals one—economy of operation—which has won favor with purchasers and has commended this make to buyers of every range of income.

Economy of operation has long been a leading requirement of automobile purchasers, especially of those of average means; and statistics show that the most successful manufacturers are those who produce a good looking, roomy, dependable and durable car, which will give real performance, without sacrificing the principle of economy.

"To make the cost of maintenance and operation as small an item as posible has been the constant aim of Walter P. Chrysler," said J. W. Frazer, Chrysler sales manager, in a discussion of this point, "and those who have driven Chrysler cars under all sorts of conditions tell us that he and his associates have succeeded in their purpose.

"If the economy slogan of an automobile is to mean more than a mere collection of words, two things are essential. Low gasoline and oil consumption on the one hand, and few replacements on the other hand. Considering the first of these points, we have always been kept advised of the remarkable records Chryslers have achieved in low gasoline and oil use. Before the advent of Chrysler in the automobile manufacturing field a six-cylinder car running as many as 20 miles on a gallon of gasoline was unheard of. Yet the Chrysler '70' has been doing it ever since that model was put on the road. The Chrysler '60' has been delivering 22 miles and more to the gallon right along. The Chrysler '50' tests have shown it to be capable of more than 25 miles per gallon of gasoline.

"It is the general opinion of Chrysler users, as their opinions are reflected in reports to us, that the Chrysler car, because of its study construction and the durability of its materials, is one of the most economical of all automobiles in upkeep and in cost of gasoline and oil its unique engine design gave it from the outset a lead over rivals, that even their strenuous efforts of three years have never been able to overcome."

Nash Canadian Sales Show Heavy Increase

April was the biggest single month in point of production and shipments in the history of the Nash light six plant. With daily shipments keeping pace with production, the Nash Racine plant was moving at high speed while both the Kenosha and Milwaukee plants were also active.

The first Nash light six was shipped from Racine in June two years ago, the plant having been bought by the Nash Motors company a year previously. Brand new machinery, thoroughly modern in design, was installed in the factory and because of heavy demand for the light six, additional equipment was installed late last fall to meet the steadily increasing demand. The light six series, like all Nash cars, is equipped with the seven-bearing motor.

Reports from the Nash factory show heavy increases in Canadian sales of Nash advanced six, special and light six models this year over 1926. The increase for April, 1927, was 103 per cent over April, 1926. More Nash cars were shipped to Canada last month than during the entire ear, 1923.

An analysis of Nash sales in Canada shows that in 1923 there was an increase of 44 per cent over the previous year, in 1924 this number was increased by 17.3 per cent, a small but consistent increase. Then in 1925, a much greater increase was recorded, topping the previous year by 63 per cent. This growth became even more rapid last year when almost three times as many cars were sold.

AMSTERDAM. — Princess Juliana of Holland added a new laurel wreath to her coronet the other evening when she saved her royal mother from embarrassment by substituting for Willem Royaards, one of the most prominent Dutch actors, at a royal reception. Royaards was taken ill an hour before he was due to fulfill an engagement to entertain the guests at a soiree at the royal palace. There appeared a huge gap in the program, but Princess Juliana stepped in, recited a number of classical and modern poems of Holland, and saved the day. The guests all said that the princess was wonderful.

MARMON APRIL SALES LARGE

Month's Output Breaks All Records For Company

Sales of Marmon automobiles during the month of April were the largest of any other month in the history of the company, reaching a total of 2567 cars, according to a statement issued by G. M. Williams, president of the Marmon Motor Car company.

In addition to the April sales, which represented a total value of approximately $5,000,000, the company has on its books shipping orders aggregating more than $20,000,000 for the large Marmon series 75 and the Marmon eight, Mr. Williams declared. This record volume of business is definite evidence of the unprecedented public acceptance of the new Marmon eight, as well as the large Marmon series 75.

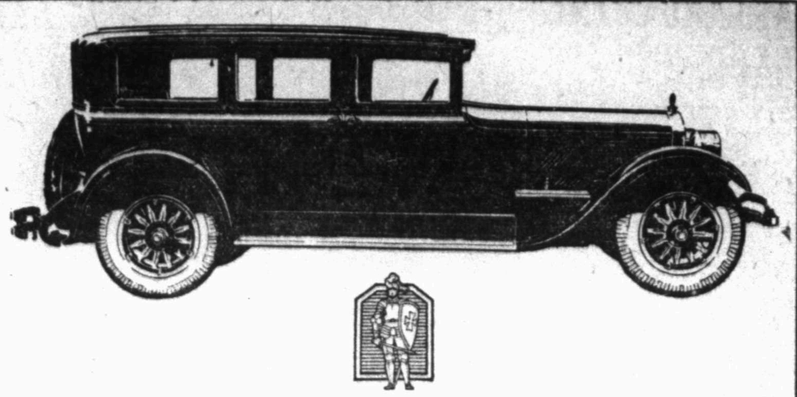

Mr. Williams announced the record business shortly after a meeting of the board of directors of the company, which declared the regular quarterly dividend on the common stock of the company and at the same time gave its approval to a further expansion in production facilities to meet the demand. At the present time production at Marmon factories is being maintained at well over 125 cars a day.

"Purchases of the large Marmon series 75 are being maintained at a record level, and the demand for the Marmon eight is living up to our highest expectations," Mr. Williams said. "More than 150 retail orders are being received daily for Marmon cars and reports from our distributive organization indicate that the volume will be increased for several months to come."

Expansion of the Marmon company since the new small eight-cylinder car was introduced early in the year, has been one of the features of 1927 automotive developments. New sales connections announced since the first of the year have more than doubled the distributive organization.

OAKLAND JOINS LEADER'S CLASS

In Two Years Company Rises Rapidly

DEROIT, Mich., May 21.—Jumping from the mediocre manufacturers in point of quantity to among the leaders in two short years with the aid of a $15,000,000 expansion program and public demand is another one of the romances of the automobile industry.

Besides that the expansion program was entirely inadequate. In the words of A. R. Glancy, president of the Oakland Motor Car company, builders of the Oakland and Pontiac, "We lose a staggering amount of business of this spring due to the lack of deliveries forced upon our dealers by our inability to supply them."

Oakland was taken over by Glancy several years ago when its production was less than 50,000 cars per year. His ascendency to the presidency of the company brought many wild rumors to rise throughout the industry as he had been known as a "doctor of sick companies." His record included the executive direction of 21 companies during the 34 years that he had been a "working man." Many of these had been liquidated because they were no longer financially profitable for the owners to operate.

When he was made president of the Oakland Motor Car company by the General Motors corporation, the factory was kept busy denying that it was about to be ended.

Pontiac Designed

On the contrary Glancy caused his engineers to design and produce the Pontiac, in addition to the Oakland line, and increase the production of the factory from 56,000 in 1925 to where this year it will build between 200,000 and 225,000 cars. He has virtually doubled the manufacturing space of the company.

Total expenditure authorized by the General Motors for the new Pontiac plant at Pontiac, Mich., was $15,000,000. Glancy has spent a million more and will spend an additional $2,700,000 during the next two years on a new forge plant that has already had the tentative approval of the parent corporation.

Today the Oakland Motor Car company is employing 7200 men in the factory and 1400 persons in the office. The Fisher Body company, a subsidiary of General Motors building Oakland and Pontiac bodies in Pontiac is employing 4500 persons.

Fisher will soon build a plant equal to the size of its present one to care for the present and increasing demand for bodies by these two lines of cars.

Three Factories

The automobile industry today pronounces the three Oakland and Pontiac factories, "the last word," in manufacturing plants.

The construction of the present Pontiac plant was said to be the largest automotive project ever undertaken at one time as well as the largest factory construction check awarded in the United States during 1926.

The routing of raw materials, their gradual transformation into motor cars and their turning over to the dealers and public is like a great river system. In remote corners of the plant resembling small rivulets the tiniest individual parts are manufactured and sent to the final assembly line on conveyors; the same is true of larger parts, motors and bodies.

Motors manufactured in the machine shop adjacent to the plant go into the giant factory overhead and are dropped into the chassis by means of an automatic conveyor. This operates at the rate of 100 motors per hour. The assembly line produces finished cars at the rate of 50 per hour. The motor surplus is stored in a reservoir above the assembly line so that no holdup of production in the motor plant can stop steady production.

Bodies come in on an overhead conveyor from the Fisher plant 1600 feet distant. They are carried on a conveyor that is 45 feet above ground. Railroad tracks of the shipping in and shipping out lines travel underneath.

Transfer Offices

Other motor car interest is centered in the transfer of the offices of the General Motor Truck company, and the Yellow Truck and Manufacturing company to Detroit. Reports are that the manufacturing activities of these two companies will soon be wholly moved to Detroit and Pontiac from Chicago.

Expected demand of Ford and Dodge will keep the steel industry active during the summer months of this year, say prominent steel authorities. Dodge is now in production with its six cylinder model which will sell around $1,650 and is finding an excellent demand for its new four. According to sales reports, Ford is expected to announce his new four cylinder car about July 1.

Reports in Detroit state that he will shut down his factories to tool up for the new model within a few weeks.

Actress Welcomes Oakland

Miss Margaret Livingston of Fox films gives C. E. Planck, manager of 100,000 mile Oakland car now touring country, a cordial greeting on his arrival in Hollywood.

Stearns-Knight One of Most Powerful Stock Cars in World

With a developed energy of better than 100 horse-power at its point of maximum efficiency, the motor in the new Stearns-Knight eight is one of the most powerful automobile engines in the world built as stock production.

The maximum speed of this car is also exceptionally high despite the fact that the car has not been built for racing speed and 85 miles an hour is readily made with no strain on the power plant.

The development of a Knight-motored car with this range of power and speed is not unexpected and it was logical that it should come from the F. B. Stearns company who have been known for years as the first exponent of the sleeve valve motor in this country.

In the European development of the Knight type of power plant, present motors include eights and twelves. Stearns is the first company to build a Knight motor in this country with more than six cylinders.

A feature of the operation of the Stearns-Knight eight is the smoothness of the motor at its point of highest power development.

The high power is obtained without any evidence of motor strain and, so far as the operator is concerned, there is no difference in the power sensation at thirty miles an hour and at the maximum speed at which the car may travel.

Among buyers of luxury cars there is a growing tendency to ask for and to expect high power, according to a statement issued by Stearns-Knight engineers.

It is said that the requirement for power does not indicate a desire to travel at high speed but the motorist who is accustomed to a luxury car knows that the usual ranges of driving speed are obtained with greater economy and comfort if they represent only a small fraction of the actual ability of the motor.

Oakland Colors Have Approval

A sweeping popularity of the fresh new shades and tints of blue and green recently announced for the greater Oakland six line, bears out the preference of feminine America for colors in motor cars to harmonize with the prevailing dominant color note of the latest creations added to her colorful wardrobe.

Just what the determining factor in color selection is, no one really ventures but it is significant enough that the popular colors of the Oakland six are in tune with milady's popular colors and that their selection is made by color authorities and a noted color expert, Capt. H. Ledyard Towle, who periodically travels to continental Europe to study the styles and colors of women's apparel.

The recently announced colors for the Oakland six are shades and tints of blue and green discreetly used in two-tone color combinations and trimmed with delicate striping applied to the respective body types.

The four-door sedan is finished in Cobalt blue on body, hood and wheels with striping of ivory white on body and wheels, and brown garnish rails. Upper structure, fenders and lamps are in black. The sedan has trouville blue on body, hood and wheels with ivory white striping. The top, instrument board, lamps, fenders, side-shields and radiator apron are in black.

The roadster finished in avalon blue over entire body and hood, striped with burnt orange. The natural wood wheels have burnt orange on spokes and hubs. Avalon blue colors the fenders, side shields, radiator apron, headlamps, tie rod, lamps and hood sills. The mouldings are in coronado tan. The sport phaeton continues with merrimac beige body and wheels and box elder green.

The landau sedan and landau coupe are finished in alpine green on body, hood and lamps. On the landau sedan, the upper structure is the same. The striping on both is in straw color and burnt orange, aberdeen green fenders, side shields, radiator apron, hood sills and headlamps, tie-rod make these two of the most colorful cars in the line. Both have walnut garnish rails, the landau sedan having the black instrument board panelled in walnut.

WHIPPET MAKES YEAR RECORD

Production At Willys-Overland Plant Large

When the one hundred thousandth Whippet rolled off the assembly line at the Willys-Overland plant today, John N. Willys, president of Willys-Overland, Inc., was on hand together with other executives of the company to receive the car.

The completion of this car was the subject of an unusual demonstration at the plant both among employes and officials since it set a new production record in the industry for a new car in its first year.

Mr. Willys commented on this new achievement as "a marked indication of the general popularity of this new type of automobile in all sections of the country."

Actual production work on the Whippet models was started by Willys-Overland on May 12, 1926, and the first of these new cars was ready for delivery late in June. By reaching the 100,000 mark in less than a year's production period, the Toledo manufacturer has accomplished a record outstanding in the annals of the automobile industry.

Increases in the models originally presented were made in September and again in January, while an entirely new sport roadster on the Whippet chassis is being introduced this month. The ready acceptance of the Whippet in all parts of the nation and the attenedant record sales is held responsible for the popularity of the Whippet cars.

At the same time the introduction of the Whippet model was made in this country it was shown in Europe where the reception accorded it was equivalent to the impression it made here. It is estimated that 14,000,000 people saw the Whippet in its initial week.

Following the introductory period, during which Whippet demonstrations in all parts of the country established new records of performance, the dealer organization of Willys-Overland developed at a rate greater than at any other time in the history of the company.

The Whippet was heralded as introducing an entirely new type of construction into the light car field and has been accepted as the initiator of the general trend toward lighter weight and greater mechanical efficiency which has characterized the most recent developments in the motor car industry.

The success of the original Whippet was the forerunner of a demand for the same general type of construction in a light six and this model was added to the Whippet line early in January of this year.

FITZ RECALLS TEXAS LEGEND

Days of Outlaw Sam Bass Inspire Story

By HUGH NUGENT FITZGERALD

AUSTIN, Texas, May 21.—According to newspaper rumor and corridor gossip Harry M. Graves of Williamson county will be named by Governor Moody as one of the aids of the court of criminal appeals. That is, he will be named as a member of the commission of appeals and George B. Christian will be given the second place. This reminds the writer that Harry N. Graves is a native of Williamson county and in his earlier years served as prosecuting attorney for the county. He is a close friend of the governor, a member of the state Democratic executive committee, he was a member of the first conference called to draft Dan Moody for attorney general and he was likewise in the first conference held in Texas to draft the attorney general for the office of governor, and is the nephew of the late W. L. Davidson for many years presiding judge of the court of criminal appeals.

Round Rock is in the county of Williamson. Sam Bass passed on in the city of Round Rock. There have been a thousand stories penned concerning the passing of Bass and many of the "eye-witnesses" agreed that Bass killed the constable of the town and then rode away to the thicket where he was found dying the day after the battle of firearms. One eye-witness gave the name of the constable as Moore. Frank Jackson was the companion of Sam Bass in the flight from the town. Bass was fatally wounded and could not continue the flight. Frank Jackson eluded his pursuers and buried himself in the wilds of the then Indian territory.

Time sped on fleeting wings and Harry N. Graves became the prosecuting attorney of Williamson county. In the musty old archives of the office of prosecuting attorney he unearthed the following unique indictment returned by a grand jury against Frank Jackson, fugitive from justice, for the murder of A. W. Grimes, the constable who was slain by the outlaws. This must be conclusive evidence that Jackson and not Bass killed the peace officer. In a note to the writer Mr. Graves gives the following forewerd to the indictment:

"Justice, though blind, never sleeps nor forgets. In testimony whereof I herewith inclose you exact copy of an indictment against the friend and companion of the notorious Sam Bass, Frank Jackson, which indictment from its antiquity alone should be taken to speak the truth. If words are but made in order to conceal ideas then this instrument is a success. But brushing aside its verbiage in modern jurisprudence it says that Frank Jackson did kill and murder A. W. Grimes on the 19th day of July, 1878, against the peace and dignity of the state. You will note that no mention is made of Sam Bass, his case, through nature assisted by man, having been transferred to a higher tribunal from whose edicts no appeals lies. This indictment, with its redundant terms and slow moving ideas, was penned laborously, so tradition saith, in the writing of Col. W. K. Makemson, who, together with the witnesses, has crumbled back into the cosmic dust from which he sprung. The indictment witnesseth the fact that the good men do dies with them; the evil lives long after them. It is interesting to me to note that at the time of the return of this indictment I was but a callow youth of one short summer and through the span of my long, long life, justice has patiently waited —is waiting still for a settlement of this old score and will continue to wait until the supreme arbiter metes out justice to whom justice is due.

H. N. GRAVES."

Col. W. K. Makemson was one of the leading members of the Texas bar. He was a life long Republican and never deserted the reservation in the darkest hour of the history of the Republican party in Texas. He was the party nominee for governor in one campaign and the leader of a forlorn hope in many campaigns. This is a copy of the indictment written in the hand of Makemson and returned by a grand jury in Williamson county after the killing of the constable, the death of Sam Bass and the flight of Frank Jackson:

In the name and by the authority of the state of Texas—The grand jurors of Williamson county in said state at the September term, A. D., 1878 of the district court of said county on their oaths in said court present that Frank Jackson with a sound memory and discretion and with force and arms in Williamson county, and state of Texas, on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1878, in and upon one A. W. Grimes, a reasonable creature in being, unlawfully feloniously wilfully and of his malice aforethought and with express malice did make an assault; and that the said Frank Jackson a certain pistol then and there charged with gun powder and leaden balls then and there unlawfully feloniously wilfully and of his malice aforethought and with express malice did discharge and shoot to against and upon the said A. W. Grimes; and that the said Frank Jackson with the leaden balls aforesaid out of the pistol aforesaid and then and there by the force of the gun-powder aforesaid, by the said Frank Jackson discharged and shot off as aforesaid then and there unlawfully feloniously wilfully and of his malice aforethough and with express malice did strike penetrate and wound the said A. W. Grimes in and upon the body and breast of the said A. W. Grimes, giving to the said A. W. Grimes then and there with the leaden balls so as aforesaid discharged and shot out of the pistol aforesaid by the said Frank Jackson in and upon the body and breast of the said A. W. Grimes mortal wounds of which said mortal wounds the said A. W. Grimes then and there instantly died—and so the grand jurors aforesaid upon their oaths aforesaid do say that the said Frank Jackson the said A. W. Grimes in the manner and by the means aforesaid unlawfully feloniously, wilfully and of his malice aforethought and with express malice did kill and murder against the peace and dignity of the state. True bill. Witnesses: Morris Moore of Travis county, and Simon Juda.

S. S. MUNGER.
Foreman of the Grand Jury

Speaking of literary curiosities or rather legal monstrosities, take it or name it as you will, the Makemson creation is handed on to the antiquarians. It should be preserved in the literature of Texas. There is a sequel to all this. As prosecuting attorney of Williamson county, Harry N. Graves was given a tip that Frank Jackson was in the land of the living, in the nearby state of Oklahoma. He fled to the Indian territory it will be recalled and in the flight of time the Indian territory and Oklahoma teritory became a sovereign state. In the late 70's after the murder of A. W. Grimes, the governor of Texas had offered a reward of $500 for the apprehension of the fugutive from justice.

Oklahoma officers refused to return Jackson to Texas unless the reward was paid in advance. Oscar B. Colquitt was governor. Grimes was slain in the year 1878. Colquitt is said to have ignored the request of Graves that the offer of the reward of $500 should be renewed and then paid for the return of Jackson to Texas. There the story ended. It is said the daughter of A. W. Grimes became the wife of a newspaper writer who edited and published a newspaper in Milam county for many years.

Who killed Sam Bass? The answer is "Who killed Cock Robin?" There is one thing certain, the man who drew the indictment and the grand jurors who returned it in the year 1878 had the evidence before them that Frank Jackson was the slayer of A. W. Grimes and that Sam Bass did not burn gun-powder at the Round Rock carnival in the long ago.

PARIS.—Tired of beauty, which is getting to be a commonplace in Paris, a group of young artists and litteratuers of the Montparnasse district have started and ugliness contest, which promises to be the sensation of the year. Headed by George Ohnet, the novelist, the movement has grown to include the whole Latin Quarter, and has adopted for its slogan the sentiment "Beauty fades, but ugliness remains." Now every homely man and woman in Paris is putting on airs.

Buy Tomorrow's Refinements In the Hupmobile Eight of Today

Fourteen Diffinguished Body Types—priced from $1945 to $5795 f. o. b. Detroit, plus revenue tax. Custom Bodies designed and built by Dietrich

WITH the swift progress that has recently taken place in eight-cylinder design, it was never so important to consider the engineering age of the eight you buy.

Product of the past two years, Hupmobile Eight is not merely abreast of the times, but actually ahead in many instances of current design in fine eight-cylinder cars.

You see the reasons for Hupmobile's undisputed leadership among straight-eights in slimly beautiful body lines, in absence of mere bulk formerly associated with high powered cars, in brilliantly smooth running qualities that spring from sane and simplified engineering.

As a single example, Hupmobile's eight-in-line motor is specially designed to take full advantage of the new anti-knock gasolines now sold everywhere and heralded as the greatest advance in fuels since the coming of the automobile. Faster pick-up, sustained smoothness, and more power from each ounce of fuel is obtained.

Modern design is likewise evidenced in such features as double plate dry disc clutch, thermostatic and manifold heat control, cam-and-lever steering gear, vibration damper, oil filter, air and gasoline cleaner—each engineered into the car as a contributory factor to smoothness, long life and economy.

Drive the new Hupmobile Eight after you have driven fine cars of equal or higher price. It will convincingly prove to you that more than $2500 for the finest eight performance and luxury is a needless expenditure—today or for years to come.

Look at This and Yawn. Victims of Insomnia, Used in Tests of a Sleep-Producing Device Invented by H. E. Guilhaumon, of Paris, Were Sent to Slumberland within Eight Minutes.

How to Banish Insomnia and Get Greater Benefits from Sleep

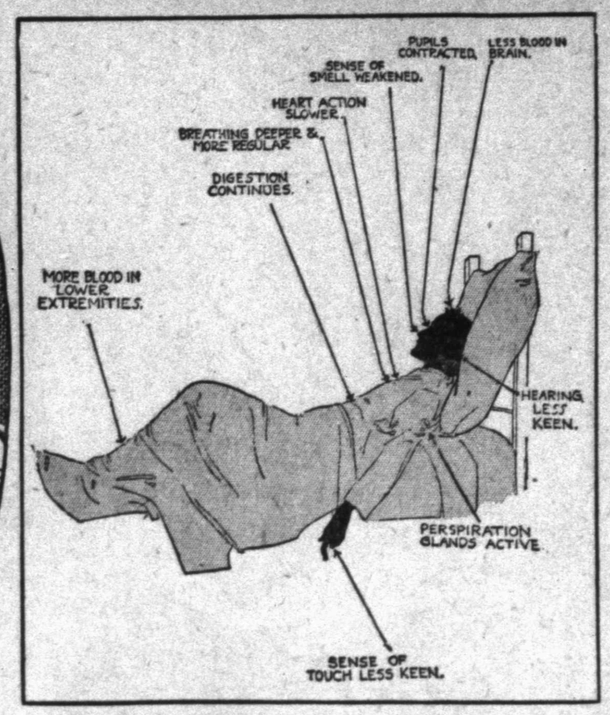

Diagram Shows What Happens to Your Body While You Are Asleep, as Discovered by Recent Laboratory Tests.

EXPERIMENTAL studies of sleep recently concluded, not only mark a definite step toward the solution of the mystery of slumber, which has baffled science from the most remote time, but also reveal how the loss of sleep affects the body and mind and show ways to banish insomnia and secure still greater benefits from the hours given to this form of perfect relaxation and rest, nature's "sweet restorer."

H. E. Guilhaume, an inventor of Paris, has perfected a sleep-producing apparatus which, he claims, is a cure for insomnia. In a number of tests sufferers from sleeplessness were put soundly to sleep in eight minutes. The device consists of a black band, containing a tiny blue electric light bulb which is put over the patient's eyes. A small electric vibrator is also an important feature of the device.

In one experiment conducted at the Mellon Institute in Pittsburgh and described in Hygeia, twelve healthy young men, eleven of whom were students, served as subjects for observation. They slept in a quiet, well-ventilated room, retiring at 11 p. m. and rising at 7 a. m. Each of the comfortable, single beds in which they slept was mounted on pendulum supports with ball and socket bearings and was connected with apparatus that was sufficiently sensitive to record the quick movement of a forearm or any movement of a whole limb.

The purpose of the experiment was to learn how activity in normal, healthy adults is distributed over the time devoted to rest and to compare these measurements with figures that have been obtained showing how strength returns as the result of sleep.

Each five-minute period in bed was treated as a time atom and was said to contain activity if any stirs of the sleeper were recorded within it. The rest-period was defined as the time from the middle of a five-minute interval in which activity occurred to the beginning of the next interval of activity.

The frequency of stirs among the sleepers was surprising. The popular conception of a restful night would probably be that the sleeper might change his position from four to eight times in eight hours, the average length of the rest period being from one to two hours. On the contrary, in 14,448 measurements, the subjects slept without stirring for an average length of only 11.26 minutes. In half of the observations the average length was less than five minutes. In only one of these thousands of observations was the rest period more than three hours.

It is evident that the average healthy person sleeps much less soundly—that is, with much shorter intervals without noticeable movement—than is usually supposed.

Another unexpected conclusion from these experiments was that the way a person sleeps is a definite personal characteristic. As a rule, the restless sleeper displayed short rest periods every night during the experiment.

Fatigue after a day of hard physical work in at least one observation was shown not to promote but rather to interfere with sound sleep.

There was, on the whole, a tendency for the least activity to be manifested in the first hour after the subject settled down to fairly steady rest, but steady rest was found to begin any time from ten minutes to two hours after retiring.

Some subjects rested more during the first half of the night; others during the last half, the first and last quarters, or the second and third quarters.

The difference between sound and unsound sleep has been measured in electrical terms by Dr. Curt P. Richter, of Johns Hopkins, with an apparatus showing the amount of electrical current passed through the body of subjects in different states of wakefulness.

Another investigator has discovered that the average sleeper turns over as many as thirty times during a night's rest, and tests by Dr. F. A. Moss, of George Washington University, have caused him to conclude that sleep is caused by a chemical change produced in the waking hours, resulting in a state akin to intoxication. Sound sleep removes the poison.

Both Dr. Jacobson and Dr. Nathaniel Kleitman, of the University of Chicago, believe that it would be unwise for everyone abitrarily to attempt to cut off two hours or so from his allowance for slumber. Their advice is "sleep all you can afford." Obviously, this does not mean prolonged napping, since hardly anyone can afford the time, and too much slumber produces lethargy. But if you are now devoting eight hours to sleep, your schedule is well balanced.

"One of the reasons why we have dreams is that higher centers of the brain are not completely at rest, leading to confusing interpretations of communications that arise from the lower centers," says Dr. Kleitmen in Popular Mechanics. "For instance, the bite of an insect may be felt as the cut of a sword or discomfort arising from eating pickles and ice cream may be interpreted as a weight on the sleeper's abdomen."

"Many persons complain that they cannot go to sleep because tunes keep running through their heads," Dr. Jacobson says. "What probably is happening is that they are whistling or singing the songs to themselves and making movements of the muscles of the lips and tongue. When these muscles are absolutely relaxed, the tunes are likely to cease. Repeated tests have shown that there is a direct connection between tenseness of the muscles and mental activity. When you think hard, you naturally scowl. By letting all of the muscles go, just doing absolutely nothing, you approach a way to shut off all the activity of the mind and sleep is the normal result.

"There are several kinds and degrees of sleep," Dr. Jacobson continues, "but none is as refreshing as that which follows complete relaxation. Even if it is not necessary for a person to become perfectly relaxed, there are several important matters which will help to gain more rest and benefit from slumber. Insomnia often results from too much activity, mental, muscular or both, during the day. The skilful person is the one who learns to do things successfully with the least general tension. Avoid emotional excitement, arguments, all games that are too absorbing and too close reading just before going to bed. Never read or talk in bed.

"Don't count sheep while attempting to fall to sleep. This apology for a method most often fails, but when it succeeds, it does not lead to restful sleep, which should be invited not by mental activity like counting, but by the cessation of all mental activity. Do not partake of huge meals or exciting drinks.

"Everyone knows the importance of exercise, but when done to excess, before retiring, it is likely to result in insomnia. It is best to intersperse your exercise with short rests so as to avoid becoming tired. One of the common mistakes made by parents who have small children is to 'show them off' to company before the youngsters' bedtime. This excites the children and often results in serious damage to the young nervous system.

"The proper occupation for adults before going to bed is not reading or animated discussion, but it is a good plan to devote an hour or so to doing little odd jobs in an idle way. This gives the mind and muscles time to calm down from the activities of the day.

"One of the frequent causes of insomnia is the drug habit. In the long run, even mild medicines given for sleep add to the sum total of sleeplessness. Drugs which produce sleep do so by poisoning a part of the nervous system, thereby leading to drowsiness. Sedative drugs are better avoided."

The kind of sleep and not the time devoted to it, is the important thing, Dr. Jacobson holds. It is possible, from six hours of sound slumber, to obtain the same benefits as might be derived from eight hours of sleep not so complete.

How SUGAR Is Used to FIGHT Germs of DISEASE

SUGAR has been found to be effective in combating disease and building up resistance against germs. One of the first uses for which sugar was employed was in the compounding of medicines. It was a staple article in the equipment of chemists' shops long before it came into general use as a food commodity.

In view of the long acquaintance of the medical profession with sugar, it is surprising that so little was learned until recently regarding its physiological action, and that it should actually have been unjustly accused of causing or encouraging various diseases, such as diabetes, rheumatism and cancer.

The latest discovery along this line was announced by Dr. Ralph Pemberton of Philadelphia, in a paper presented before the American Medical Association at Dallas, Texas. Speaking of diseases of the bones and joints, Dr. Pemberton said that the amout of sugar digested in the body has a well-defined relationship to inflammation of the joints. In more than sixty persons with disturbances of the joints he found a low tolerance for sugar. Dr. Pemberton believes that control of sugar digestion is a factor in the healing of such diseases. The condition is not the same as that which occurs in diabetes, but seems to depend on some changes in the circulation of the blood. Low sugar tolerance was produced experimentally in individuals by changing the circulation through the administration of drugs. By these studies it was determined that sugar taken in through the mouth passes by way of the blood to the fluid of the joints, and there is evidence indicating that it aids their resistance to infection.

As a parallel to the discoveries of Dr. Pemberton, the Carbonator notes that plant experts have found that sugar performs a similar service in the vegetable world. In studying the resistance of corn and wheat plants to fungus, Professors Dickson and Holbert, of the Department of Agriculture, have found that high sugar content is associated with such resistance.

Previous investigations have shown that sugar is superior to anything else that can be taken into the system in enabling the body to resist fatigue or to undergo long-sustained physical effort. Soldiers on the march and athletes participating in races and games are more refreshed by a few lumps of sugar or a cake of chocolate—containing a large percentage of sugar—than by any other form of food or drink.

Tradition is no less powerful in the medical profession than in other walks of life, and there are many practitioners who still cling to the belief that sugar, except in small quantities, is harmful. Only recently a prominent British surgeon condemned the building of beet-sugar factories in England on the ground that the people were eating too much sugar and thereby poisoning their systems. These attacks are never supported by statistical or scientific evidence. Repeated tests on men and animals have demonstrated that its consumption, even in large quantities, not only has no harmful effect, but is conducive to bodily health and mental activity. The fact that scientists are finding it helpful in warding off certain troublesome diseases is only one more step toward its recognition as the world's most useful food.

An EASY Way to LOAD Your PIPE

A POCKET tobacco box provided with an easy pipe-loading device has been recently perfected by Walter Bachne, of West New York, N. J. It is flat, to fit the pocket, and its lower end has a circular recess for insertion of the pipe-bowl when a fresh filling for the latter is required. In the center of the recess is a round hole.

A Twist of the Knob Releases a Spring Which Causes the Disk to Push Out of the Container a Quantity of Tobacco Necessary to Fill the Pipe.

Through the middle of the box extends a rod, the upper three-fourths of which is enclosed in a tube that contains a spiral spring encircling the rod. At the top end of the rod is a knob, and at its lower end is a beveled disk with a cutting edge.

Normally the spiral spring is held compressed and therefore under tension. But a twist of the knob with thumb and finger releases the spring, causing the beveled disk to push out of the box into the pipe, a quantity of tobacco sufficient to fill it.

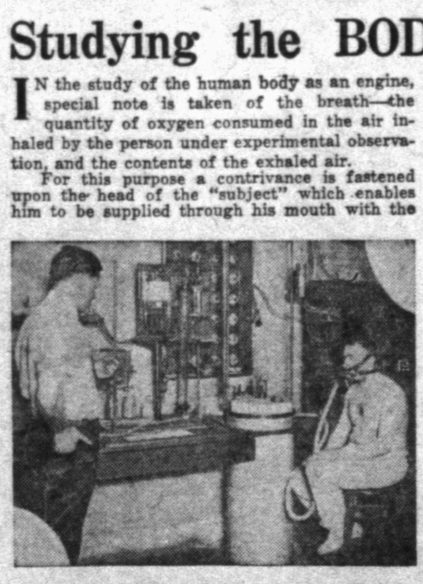

The beveled disk now occupies the round hole. A twist of the knob the opposite way causes the disk to cut off the tobacco in the pipe-bowl to a smooth surface, and at the same time compresses the spiral spring, putting it again under tension.

This accomplished, the user puts the box back into his pocket. When it is empty, he has only to open a door that covers one side of it in order to refill it.

Studying the BODY as an ENGINE

IN the study of the human body as an engine, special note is taken of the breath—the quantity of oxygen consumed in the air inhaled by the person under experimental observation, and the contents of the exhaled air.

For this purpose a contrivance is fastened upon the head of the "subject" which enables him to be supplied through his mouth with the air he requires, his nostrils being held closed by a clip. The air (supplied through a rubber tube) is used over and over again, but is kept continually freshened by the addition of oxygen, while the carbonic acid gas exhaled from the lungs is removed by passing the air through soda lime.

Testing the Bodily Effects of Vigorous Exercise Which Requires Rapid Breathing to Supply Sufficient Oxygen to the Human Machine.

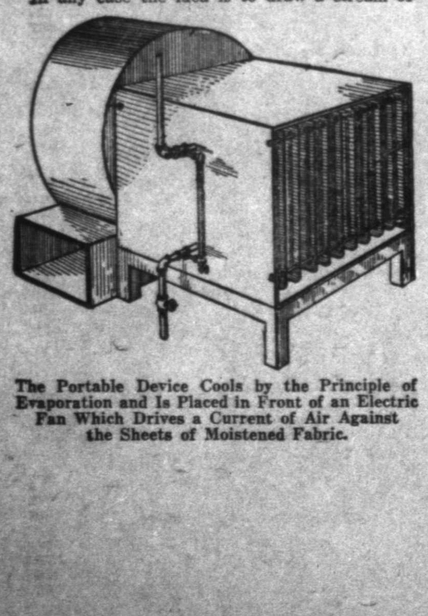

The exhaled air corresponds in a way to the smoke and gases emitted from a chimney, containing as it does certain products of combustion. It also carries much water; for a considerable amount of the water a person consumes is evaporated by the lungs and given out in the breath. That may be plainly seen on any cold day, when the moisture in the breath of people on the street, condensed by the low temperature, forms clouds of minute suspended droplets in front of their faces.

During sleep the breathing is much slower, and the quantity of water exhaled correspondingly less. Vigorous exercise requires rapid breathing to supply the lungs with sufficient oxygen, and much more water passes off with the breath than under ordinary circumstances. Hence a person who has been running hard, or playing a strenuous game of tennis, is likely to feel thirsty.

A Device for Cooling Your House

A DEVICE for cooling and humidifying the air of buildings has been newly patented by James R. Bulmer, of Fort Collins, Colorado. If made of small size, so as to be portable, it is available for use in dwelling houses, placed in front of an ordinary electric fan.

In any case the idea is to draw a stream of air through a box which contains a number of frames hanging vertically and parallel, each frame being a holder for a doubled sheet of fabric. The frames are suspended from two horizontal rods, and the sheets of fabric in them are kept wet—in the case of a large-sized machine, by a feed pipe which supplies the requisite water; in a small one, suitable for household use, by simple and obvious means.

The Portable Device Cools by the Principle of Evaporation and Is Placed in Front of an Electric Fan Which Drives a Current of Air Against the Sheets of Moistened Fabric.

The principle, of course, is that of cooling by evaporation. The stream of air drawn through the box by the fan (a large ventilating blower) for a building causes rapid evaporation of the water with which the fabric sheets are saturated. As a result the air of the house or large building is humidified as well as cooled.

Fire-Proof Glass for Windows

BUILDINGS are often set on fire by flames entering through the windows from outside. Hence the expedient, often adopted, of making windows fireproof.

The glass is made fireproof by wire net embedded in it. Though it crack into small bits, the net will hold it. But this will not suffice unless the window-frame can be counted on to remain intact, which means that it must be able to resist fierce heat, of course. But that is not enough. It must withstand, when hot, a deluge of cold water from the firemen's hose, without going to pieces by shrinkage of its parts.

How You Acquire a New Set of Brains Every Two Months

IF you live the allotted span of "three score and ten" years you will have had your brain renewed four hundred and twenty times, for your supply of gray matter is replaced six times yearly, according to a medical contributor to London Tit-Bits. "Each set," says this authority, "is different in quality from its fellows, due to various factors—diet being one of the chief. If, for example, you had a temporary liking for parsnips, the brain set that had the benefit of the latter would be a good one, for parsnips contain phosphoric acid. Peaches, which contain prussic acid, are bad for the brain.

"If, for three months, you ate large quantities of watercress and apples, your brain would be in first-class fettle. But it would get no benefit from carrots. The malic acid in strawberries is a fine brain-builder.

"Even the season of the year has its effect on the brain. The best sets are those that come in December or March. The worst are the August and October sets.

"Assuming that you began to think consciously at the age of five, then at thirty, if you have done an average amount of thinking, your "impressions" would number about 1,920,000,000. Those whose work is entirely mental would double those figures.

"A woman's brain is about five ounces lighter than a man's, but it is of superior quality."

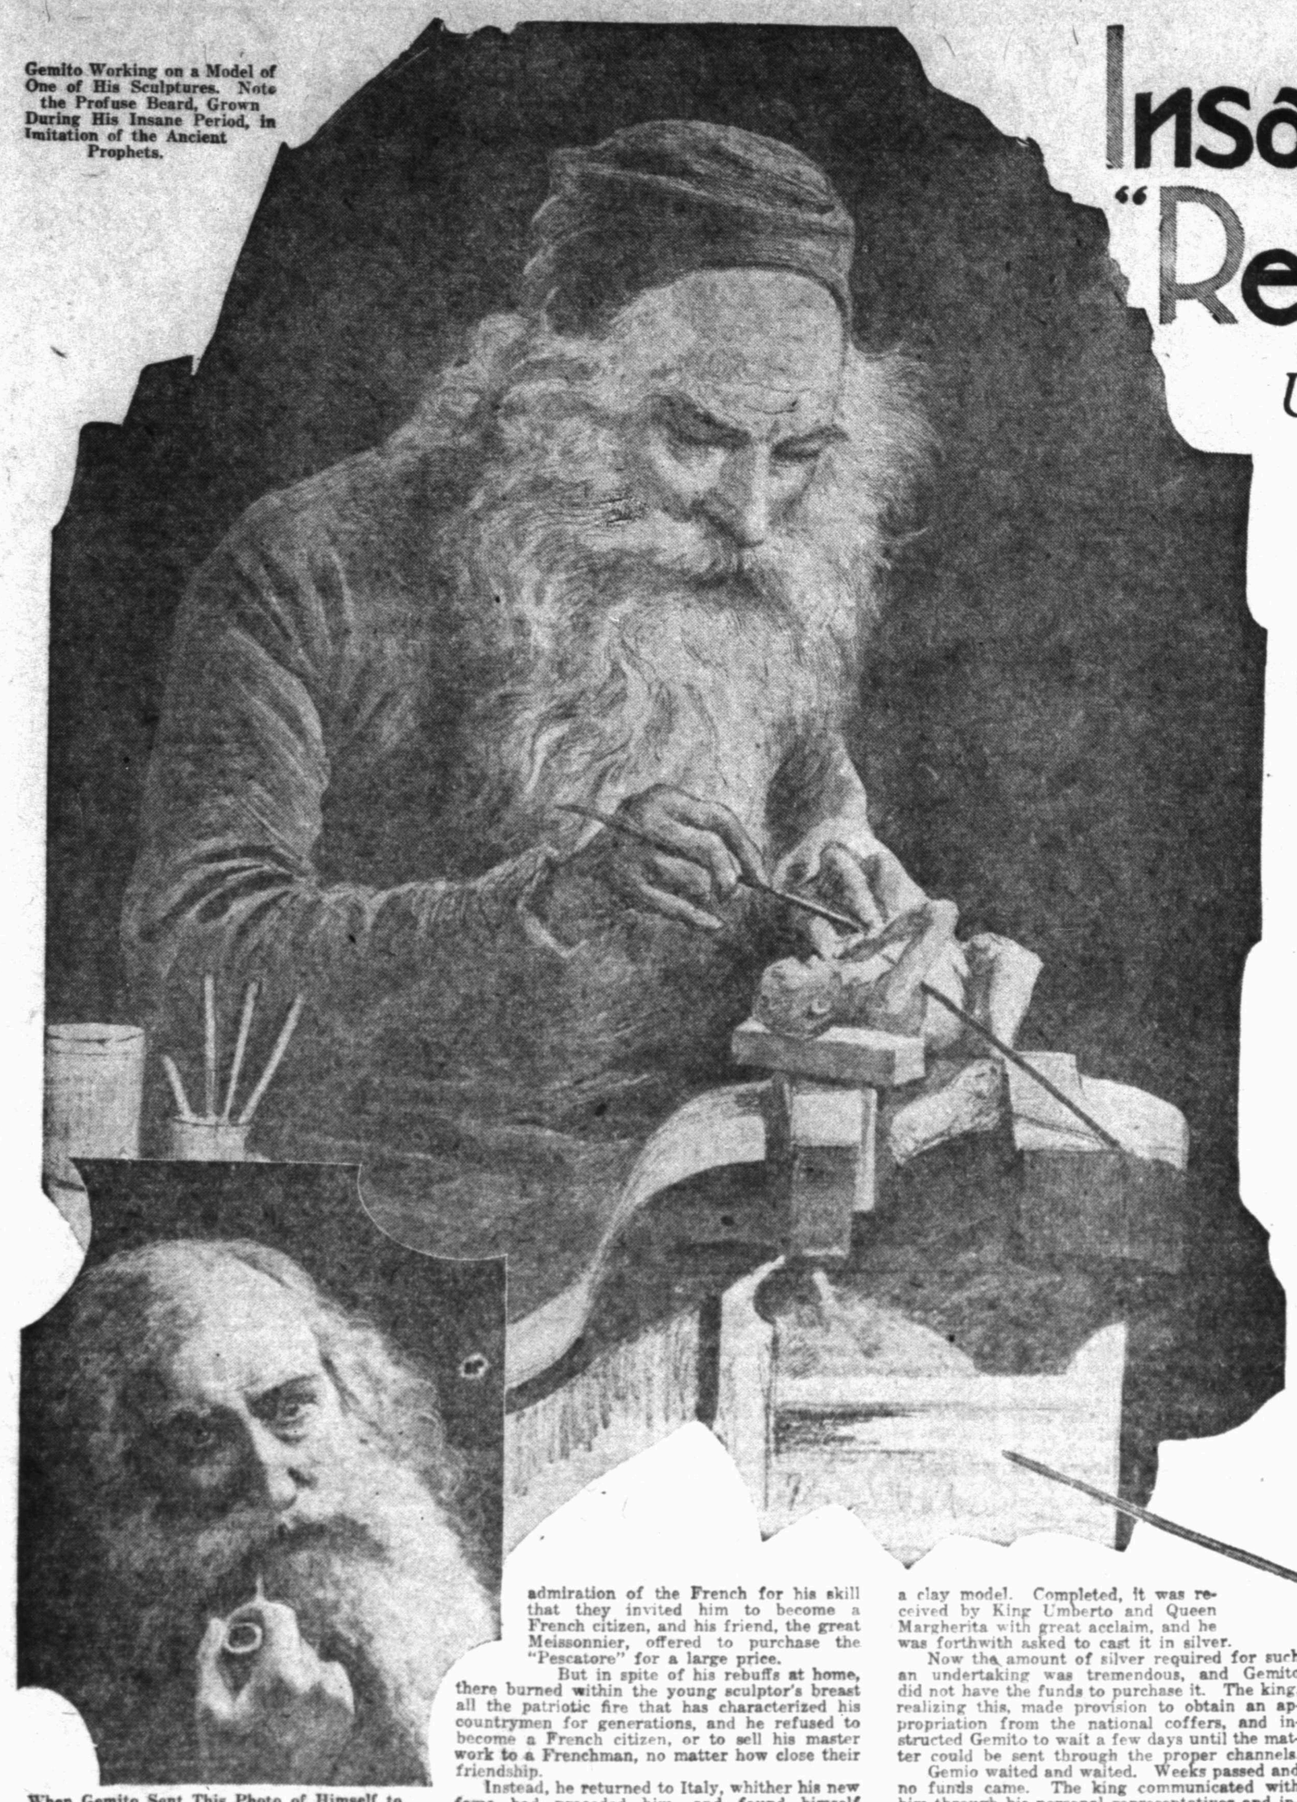

The Gravity Skate

THE new gravity skate now becoming popular with grown-ups as well as youngsters is an ingenious form of roller-skate that is propelled by the weight of the skater. With this two-wheel model, according to a contributor to the Pathfinder, 20 miles an hour can be readily covered over ordinary macadamized roads.

These new skates are operated by transferring the weight of the body from one skate to the other, the operator going through the same movements as if he were treading. The construction of the skate does the rest. The footpiece is attached to a steel shaft, which works up and down. As one foot is lifted the wheels remain on the ground, so that there is no great weight to lift. But when the weight of the body is put on that foot it drives the motor screw down through the propelling mechanism, which operates the rear wheel of the skate by a bevel gear.

Each skate is provided with a brake which is operated by the heel. The skates are attached to the feet like ordinary skates, but in addition they have a metal piece which extends as high as the calf of the leg and is held in place by a strap. The frame and wheels are constructed of aluminum.

Gemito Working on a Model of One of His Sculptures. Note the Profuse Beard, Grown During His Insane Period, in Imitation of the Ancient Prophets.

Insane 30 Years — "Re-born" a Genius!

Uncanny Come-Back of the Great Gemito, Who Emerged from a Mad House to Claim Fresh Fame, Fortune and Official Honors from Mussolini and the Royal Family of Italy.

When Gemito Sent This Photo of Himself to Mussolini He Painted Out the Pipe for the Quaint Sake of "Etiquette."

CELEBRATED as a great genius and compared to Michaelangelo and Donatello; driven to insanity by the failure of two cherished projects and then "reborn," more brilliant than before after thirty years in darkness—that is the weird history of Vincenzo Gemito, Italian sculptor.

In his rebirth of genius, Gemito is reaching heights that he never before attained, and he is experiencing the strange phenomenon of being a modernist thirty years after he had been a conservative follower of the old schools. He is receiving honors that should have been his through twenty-two long years.

Only recently he was waited upon by representatives of Premier Mussolini and given 50,000 lire, now amounting to approximately $5,000, as a national recognition of his contribution to Italian art. A short time before he had been presented to Italian nobility, who had, for a quarter of a century, been unaware of his existence.

In addition, he has produced, since his return to normal mind, a bust of Psyche that is said to be one of the most magnificent pieces of sculpture in the Italian galleries, and a figure called "Pescatorello" that has been called superior in imagination and execution to his famous pieces of the late nineteenth century.

Like a hand out of the long dead past, Gemito has entered the modern world of sculpture to combine the daring of the present generation with the soft grace and rugged strength of the masters of his first vogue. While the long period of blackness erased the memory of his earlier successes in the minds of most men, it did not blight the genius that flamed in his youth, nor warp the mind that had conceived so brilliantly.

Instead of destroying the technique of his hand or dimming the keenness of his mind, the thirty years of madness seemed to serve as a rest period, a period of transformation, during which his subsconscious self kept pace with the mad whirl of the world about him and his hand remained, as if protected by the unseen guardian of genius, as deft and firm as it had been when he first startled the world with the sheer rhythm of his executions.

It was in 1885 that Gemito first attracted international attention. He had become discouraged at his inability to receive recognition in Italy and had gone to Paris to visit a friend and to exhibit a piece called "Pescatore." The opus was an immediate success, and Gemito became celebrated overnight. So intense was the admiration of the French for his skill that they invited him to become a French citizen, and his friend, the great Meissonnier, offered to purchase the "Pescatore" for a large price.

But in spite of his rebuffs at home, there burned within the young sculptor's breast all the patriotic fire that has characterized his countrymen for generations, and he refused to become a French citizen, or to sell his master work to a Frenchman, no matter how close their friendship.

Instead, he returned to Italy, whither his new fame had preceded him, and found himself welcome as a national hero. He was doubly celebrated when it became known that he had saved the "Pescatore," and funds were advanced at once by the National Museum to purchase the piece and place it in the celebrated Bergello at Florence. There it stands today, occupying a place of distinction beside the masterpieces of Michaelangelo, Verrochio, Donatello and Benvenuto Cellini.

It was at this point in his career that the first signs of a break began to be seen. He was summoned to the royal palace by King Umberto when the soverign learned of his new fame, and, after much feting, was asked to make a table piece for the royal household. He suggested a piece to be known as "Trionfo da Tavola" and at once set about making a clay model. Completed, it was received by King Umberto and Queen Margherita with great acclaim, and he was forthwith asked to cast it in silver.

Now the amount of silver required for such an undertaking was tremendous, and Gemito did not have the funds to purchase it. The king, realizing this, made provision to obtain an appropriation from the national coffers, and instructed Gemito to wait a few days until the matter could be sent through the proper channels.

Gemio waited and waited. Weeks passed and no funds came. The king communicated with him through his personal representatives and informed him that there had been some difficulty in getting the appropriation through. Then Gemito learned that jealous contemporaries, having sought the commission from the king and having been rejected, had prevailed upon friends in the government's organization to block the appropriation.

The artist was so disappointed and dejected at this discovery that he went into virtual retirement. For days he remained alone, until he was waited upon with a request to make an enlargement of his bust of Charles V. of England, for the Ducal Palace at Naples. He protested that the piece did not lend itself to enlargement and that he was in no mood to work. However, the callers prevailed upon him to make the attempt in spite of his protests and he did so.

The enlargement completed, Gemito branded it a failure, even though it was accepted and placed. He continued to regard it as inadequate and to brood over what he believed to be a personal fiasco. This, added to the continued difficulty of obtaining funds for the "Trionfo da Tavola," preyed upon his mind tremendously, and in the end he filled his pockets with stones and went about the streets, stoning those responsible for the bust enlargement and those he believed to be behind the refusal to grant the "Trionfo da Tavola" appropriation. His actions amazed his friends.

Finally he threatened his wife and daughter and drove them from his home. His wife never returned, and died in 1907. So menacing did his conduct become that guards went to his dwelling one day and, on pretense of taking him before the king to receive the appropriation, took him to an asylum. He escaped, but was recaptured and returned to the place, spending approximately a year among the most repulsive lunatics.

Released at the end of a year, he went back to his home and his daughter returned to him. In 1909 his daughter met a young American and married him and the young man became a pupil of Gemito's, still devoted to art in spite of his deranged condition. So intense was the youth's interest in the old man and so strong did their bond become that Gemito began to show signs of returning normality.

For months they worked together, the old man becoming more and more interested in his work and the life about him. Finally he tried creative art again and produced, among other notable pieces, his "Pescatorello." After twenty years Fate was relenting and the artist of another day was beginning to see again the light of reason and to feel other living presences about him. The "Pescatorello" gave him a new lease on life and he plunged with greater vigor into his own work and his task of training his son-in-law.

His daughter, noting the change in her father, was so overjoyed that she resolved upon a bold step. She went to the Duchess of Aosta, one of Italy's foremost patronesses of the arts, and told her the story of her father's troubles, of his long suffering and madness and of his returning reason. She recalled to the Duchess' mind his fame in the late eighties and early nineties, and asked for aid.

The Duchess of Aosta, Whose Kindly Intervention and Aid Reclaimed Gemito from Insanity's Dark Horrors.

One of Gemito's Most Delicate Statuettes, "The Little Fisher," Revealing His Unabating Surety of Touch and Grace of Line.

The Duchess sent for Gemito. When she learned that the old man was unable to answer her summons, she went to him and took him to her palace in the name of the king. Although there was a new king now and Margherita was the queen-mother, Gemito believed that his long-awaited summons had come and his heart was glad. The Duke of Aosta received him cordially and conveyed compliments on his work.

With Gemito on this visit was his son-in-law, and the latter carried the completed opus of "Pescatorello." The Duke was so impressed with the work that he again complimented the aged sculptor and assured him of the king's added felicitations. In due time it was learned that the new king remembered the plans for the "Trionfo da Tavola" and that the queen-mother likewise remembered them. So the queen-mother asked that steps be made to carry out the work and, in addition, purchased the "Pescatorello," so pleased was she with its beauty.

With this encouragement from the royal household, Gemito returned to his work of rehabilitation with new ardor. He at once applied himself to the creation of certain works he had projected prior to his affliction. It seems that while his mind virtually was a blank during that long period of darkness, it had retained impressions of even the minor matters he had planned, thus enabling him to pick up his art where he had dropped it when disappointment and bitterness overcame his reason.

It was after these events that Mussolini learned of Gemito's new life and sent for him. The old man, too feeble to make such calls, sent his photograph, after first painting out the pipe he was smoking. Of this gesture, he wrote politely, but quaintly:

"Since I am going to the President, I must paint out the pipe. I cannot appear before the President smoking a pipe."

Mussolini at once ordered the present of 50,000 lire and other recognitions for Gemito. And, in order that there might be no delay of this recognition, such as took place when King Umberto attempted to provide the artist with funds for the "Trionfo," Il Duce sent word with the order for the treasury minister to make the award first and straighten out any complications afterwards.

Thus has Gemito, greatest of Italy's modern-day sculptors, climbed to the heights through the black cloud of insanity, and thus has Il Duce, by his warfare against red tape and governmental procrastination, saved for Italy's greater posterity the flame of Gemito's genius.

America's Newest Menace. Eating to Gain Glory

Mental and Physical Health Hit by Pathetic "Drum-Major Ambitions," Science Says.

But Spaghetti Champions, Oyster Faddists and Egg-Devourers Keep On in Their Desperate Contests.

When the Great Spaghetti-Eating Championship Was Decided, Jimmy Jeogh and Denny Paris Were Creditable Contestants.

Right—Miss Billy Pern, Normal, Pretty and Healthy, Holding Two Cups of Coffee for Would-Be Champs.

ARE you an "eating-contest" fan? Do you harbor a secret or avowed ambition to be the world's champion asparagus-devourer, or holder of the national strawberry shortcake - consuming record?

If so, you may face one of three contingencies: "trouble," psychopathically speaking, of course; insanity, likewise psychopathically speaking, or diabetes, therapeutically considered.

For physicians one and all declare many persons afflicted with tremendous appetites and the desire to gain glory by exploiting these appetites are what the sports reporters would refer to as "slightly balmy."

In only a few instances do such ambitions appear in normal human beings, they say. In most instances the competition is entered into in a spirit of jocularity and with no ambition to lead the parade of diners to the figurative tape.

The result of all this misspent ambition is a grave danger to the future of the ambitious, according to no less an authority on diet than Dr. Herman S. Goodman of New York City. And Dr. Goodman is adequately borne out by various text-books on the subject, including Gould and Pyle's celebrated "Anomalies and Curiosities of Medicine."

It is only within the last few months that this penchant for winning titles by means of assaulting the gastric system has become a fad. It all began when an obscure Westerner announced that he was claiming the coffee-drinking championship of the world by virtue of having consumed sixty-seven cups of coffee without coming "up for air." In other words, this youth, who lived somewhere in the Dakotas, had swallowed all this coffee without hesitating between cups any longer than was necessary to put down an empty goblet and pick up a full one.

Now it is generally understood, thanks to the reassurances of the medical profession, that moderate use of coffee, tea and similar beverages is not harmful to the human system, but taken in such quantities, any article of food or beverage might prove injurious to a delicate system.

Then came the spaghetti-eaters. After much comparison of individual standards and red tape, a group of the world's most famous spaghetti-eaters was turned loose on great seas of spaghetti. After they had consumed miles and miles of food, the contest narrowed down to three men, and in the end the honors went to Max Wolffian, of York. Neither of his nearest competitors were Italian, both claiming the blood of old Erin as their birthright.

After this exhibition, the matter of eating for titles began to assume some dignity. A Miss Kathleen Hayden announced that she was the world's greatest egg-eater, and her claims to virtuosity were rewarded with an opportunity to meet certain other pretenders to the egg-eating crown. The contest was held in the staid and dignified McAlpin Hotel in New York, where Miss Hayden was a guest, and when the other contestants had fallen by the wayside, puffed up like so many pouter pigeons, or poisoned Airedales, Miss Hayden was still eating.

When Miss Hayden desisted, it was found that she had consumed thirty-six full-sized hen's eggs in eighty-five minutes, and this was accepted as an unofficial world's record. Miss Hayden ate the eggs by sucking them through a straw, and, at the end of her championship effort, drank a cup of black coffee to guarantee a bit of stability for her perhaps protesting stomach.

Shortly after the egg-eating phenomenon had been blazoned in the public prints, another champion made his appearance. He gave the name of John McGinley, of Mauch Chunk, Pa., and announced that he was the world's greatest eater of hot cakes. His record, he said, was thirty-six cakes without a pause, but he had come to New York to break that record and receive some public recognition for his gustatory valor. He was given the necessary equipment, the hot cakes were made ready and he began. When he called quits, he had eaten four dozen flapjacks without a slip.

The last contest of note sponsored in New York as a national open meet was the banana-eating competition in which two New York lads, one from the East Side of Manhattan and one from the West, tied for the title. Both winners were comparatively young men, and both protested that they felt no ill effects from their contest. In fact, none of the champions in any of the contests would make public admission of any digestive distress.

But here is what Dr. Goodman has to say of the fad:

"The medical interest in these people who overeat at such contests as pie-eating, etc., is in the future of the contestants. The immediate poor results to health may have to do with the upset of the physiological responses to food. The contestants not only eat too much, but ordinarily eat too rapidly. Thus the stomach is overtaxed. If the food consumed requires partial digestion from the salivary glands, gulping to make up time may result in insufficient activity of the saliva."

Prof. Marcel Beutquen, noted French psychologist, of Rouen, sees another menace in the frd. He believes that anyone who would risk discomfort of the kind that comes with such overindulgence is the victim of a complex. He has the "drum-major complex" to a sad and dangerous excess.

Professor Beutquen believes, and by continued yielding to his obsession for personal acclaim may not only destroy his physical resistance, but impair his mental strength as well. A man is much more likely to become mentally depressed from such indiscretions than he is to become a physical wreck, the Professor believes.

"Almost every sort of contest requires some physical risk," Professor Beutquen points out. "Marathon running makes a cruel demand on the physical capacity of the contestant, as does any manner of long-distance running, rowing, swimming or even prize-fighting. But the demand is is genuine competition, a fine play of muscles and quick mental reactions in their endeavors. Nor, of course, do I condemn artists of any field who seek public acclaim.

"But I do ridicule the man or woman who offers his or her mental and physical safety on the altar of distorted ambition. Such a man or woman would be just as happy if permitted to march at the head of any sort of a parade clad in a gaudy uniform. Their ambitions are as insipid, pitiful and ridiculous as their actions."

Dr. Goodman's theory more than bears out Professor Beutquen's findings, although a bit indirectly. Dr. Goodman, in amplifying his purely medical diagnosis of the situation, says:

"If young persons go into these contests, not only do they suffer physically, but mentally. With continuous appearances in the public prints, their mental reactions are set askew and their heads become swollen, figuratively speaking, and they come to attach pointless importance to their achievements. Things like this have a serious psychopathic effect on young and old alike—particularly if they are of a mental order sufficiently immature to enter such contests and harbor ambitions along such lines."

A New York business man, who annually employs thousands of young men and women, has thus declared himself on such contests:

"If I discovered that a young man or young woman applying for a position with me was an 'eating champion,' or had championship ambitions, I would reject him or her at once. I would not hire them for even the most menial work. I have observed such specimens from time to time, and I have discovered that they have not the mental stamina to stand either responsible or hard work. Morally, they may be all right, and I have no doubt that they are, but they simply haven't the balance for business in any form. They are better off winning pie-eating diadems."

So great has been the outcry against such contests that there has been much agitation against their continuance, and in some cities health authorities are known to have issued orders against them. In few places are they permitted as public spectacles, and if the vigilance of the health societies and other organizations is successful, they may soon become as fugitive and hunted as the long-proscribed cock-fights.

The Gould and Pyle brochure on the freaks of medicine includes more than a little comment on the fad for eating, although it does not definitely limit its remarks to those who overeat competitively. On the other hand, it goes into some detail as to the conditions surrounding many cases which have attracted wide attention in the medical world. However, it sums up all forms of gluttony not usually apparent in the average, normal human being."

At the same time, these renowned authorities find much the same complex afflicting those who seek fame by long fasting. They maintain that no one in his normal senses will attempt too long a fast for publicity purposes, pointing out that it is destructive to health and the sign of a disordered and childish mind. They likewise deplore such fastings as a means of reducing, pointing out that they have a tendency to weaken the nervous structure.

The death of a celebrated and beautiful motion picture star as a result of injudicious dieting is pointed to as an example.

The result of this unfitness, they point out, is to leave the body of the diet addict an easy prey to obesity, the same being caused in almost all cases, not by the healthy condition of the organs, but by their inability to absorb the useful bits of food and throw off the useless elements.

When Record-Eating Became a Fad, Kathleen Hayden (Left) Distanced All Challengers in the Egg Contest.

"Canine Appetite" and Other Modern Food Fads

Bulimia, also called canine appetite, is an excessive morbid hunger. While sometimes present in healthy people, it is far more often found in children and unhealthy and is often a symptom of diabetes.

See Gould and Pyle's "Anomalies and Curiosities of Medicine."

"Overweight, brought on by eating contests and similar unnatural and unhealthful activities, is recognized today as a deterrent to long life. Life insurance companies raise their rates for overweight persons. Not only is it fashionable to be thin, but it is healthier."

Dr. Herman S. Goodman, noted physician and authority on diet.

*"The desire to occupy a place in the spotlight is far more prevalent among persons of a low mental order than among normal human beings. * * * Their ambitions are insipid, harmful and ridiculous."*

Test for a Strong Breath

HERE is a trick that will give you something to "blow" about and at the same time show your friends what a strong breath you have.

First, assert that you have sufficient lung power to drive your breath through thick glass and extinguish a lighted candle, and then proceed to prove it.

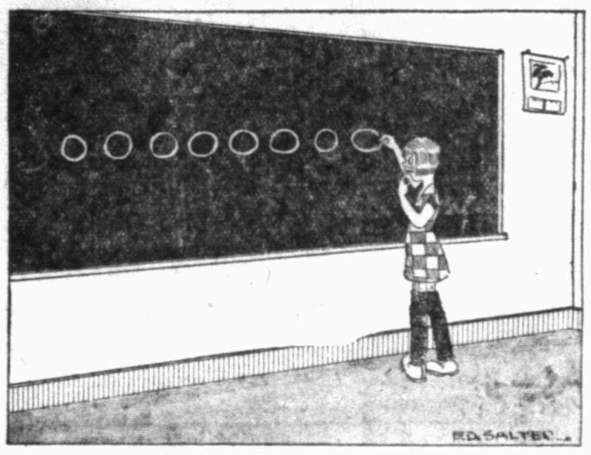

Secure a tall round bottle or glass jar like those used for packing jam. Light a candle and place it immediately behind the jar. Then face the bottle as shown in the illustration, take a deep breath and—BLOW!

Your breath appears to pass through the glass and extinguish the candle. In reality, however, it is parted by following the round sides of the bottle, reuniting at the back to blow out the burning candle.

Touring France in a Motor Car

What Am I?

I

I AM the beginning of eternity;
The end of time and space;
The beginning of every end,
And the end of every place.

II

I was fashioned long ago, yet made today.
I am always used while others sleep.
What few would like to give away
And fewer still to keep.

WITHOUT doubt, the best way to see France, or any other country for that matter, is to travel by motor car. Here is the route followed by a party of automobile tourists whose spokesman described their trip as follows:

"We arrived at Boulogne and headed for Caen, the quaint old town where Beau Brummel died. Thence to Rennes, Nantes and Poitiers. Then on to the vineyards of the Medoc, whose center is Bordeaux. Then north again to Orleans, ever famous as the home of Joan of Arc. Paris we reserved till a later date and headed for Rheims, then south to Montlucon and later on to Albi. North again, almost to the Swiss border, through Dijon and then south to Marseilles."

You can take the same trip by tracing the route on the accompanying map.

Walking the Chalk Line

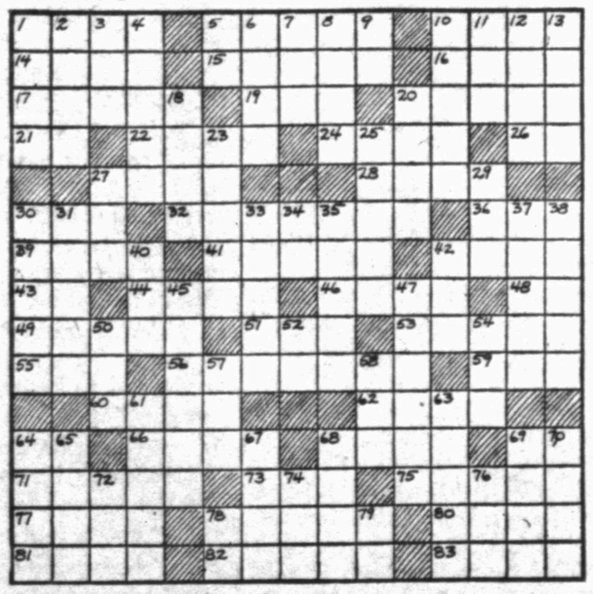

DID you ever have your parents or your teacher make you "walk the chalk line." Maybe you did not think it was so funny at the time. However, you really can make it a very amusing stunt.

With a piece of white chalk draw a long line on the floor, or in place of such a mark stretch a long white tape or string. Next tell one of your friends to stand on one end of the line. Then give him a pair of opera glasses and have him look through the large end at the line and try to walk on it. The glasses will make his feet appear to be so far away that he will go through all sorts of antics as he tries to keep his balance. You will think that he is trying to walk a tight rope and he may actually lose his balance unless you guide him by the elbow.

Can You Make a Diamond On the Square?

THIS puzzle looks so easy that it will fool nearly everyone. The problem is to make a diamond within a square.

Secure a piece of white cardboard large enough to enable you to cut eight one-inch squares out of it. Next divide four of the squares in half, cutting diagonally from the lower lefthand corner to the upper right, which will make a total of twelve pieces. The eight pieces forming the four halved squares are to be colored.

The puzzle consists of arranging the twelve bits of cardboard in such a way that they will form a square with a white diamond as the centre.

Lyda Thomson and her husband Eugene could give you a good idea of the life of a country general practitioner. A life full of hardship, wearing to body and soul.

Lyda and Eugene both looked forward to the days of specialization—to the chance that would come to Eugene to develop his specialty in one of the great city hospitals.

And the chance came, and found Lyda and Eugene—well, it found them ready to make their decision.

IF you wanted a good idea of the life of a country general practitioner you needed to hear Lyda Thomson's version of it.

She was married to one. Doctor Eugene Salpeter, Urbania, Missouri. The Salpeters lived in a rambling ten-room frame house in the center of the rambling town of about six thousand souls. The doctor's office was in the bulging left wing of the house and had a separate entrance from the side garden and two electric bells at the door, one over the other, marked DAY and NIGHT.

The ring of that night bell was the bane of the Salpeter household. It had brought premature wrinkles to Lyda Salpeter's pretty oval face and premature little areas of gray along the nice broad temples of Eugene Salpeter.

The roads surrounding Urbania were deep-rutted ones that froze treacherously in winter and oozed skiddily in summer. The farms were mean and scattered ones, and, to put it bluntly, the entire community was notoriously "poor pay". Money came hard in the little agricultural and coal-mining community and, as the saying goes, "went hard". And as usual, went hardest and slowest of all to the doctor.

Lyda, who had lived in St. Louis all her life and had married Eugene while he was a medical student there, frankly hated Urbania. With Eugene it was a little different. At least he had been born and reared in the community, and his father before him had had a shingle outside the very house he now inhabited with Lyda.

To Urbania, Eugene was one of its own. It made demands upon his time and vitality with all the manner of parent commandeering the time of its offspring.

Eugene belonged to Urbania just as his father before him had belonged and given his vitality, his time, his skill, indeed his life, to the community.

Well, Lyda's mind was made up to it that Eugene was not going to repeat the long career of struggle and deprivation that his father had suffered before him. Lyda was not going to permit herself to be pulled down into the nervous string of humanity that the crayon portrait above the parlor mantel suggested Eugene's mother to have been.

Lyda was forearmed and forewarned. So was Eugene, for that matter. These first years of general practice were nothing more than years of apprenticeship in his mind. Getting on their feet. Getting their start. Putting by a few dollars.

Eugene was constantly on the alert for opportunities. His application was in for a place on the staff of a Chicago Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital. Eugene wanted to specialize. There was money in specialization. The trend of modern medicine was entirely away from the general practitioner. Not only was it a dog's life, so to speak, but no up-and-coming scientist permitted himself any longer to scatter his interests, to say nothing of his energies.

Lyda knew a girl who had attended High School in St. Louis with her who had married a young throat specialist, and they were now living in Detroit on a twelve-thousand-a-year income.

Most city specialists of any standing at all, could count on a minimum earning capacity of six. And no night work. No night rides through miles of countryside. Lyda and Eugene detested that part of it. Usually Lyda, sooner than see Eugene drag himself out of the warmth of his bed and rattle the little Ford out of the garage alone, dragged herself out of bed also, into the first objects of clothing that came to hand, and accompanied him on his long, tiresome trips through the dead hours of the night. Sometimes there was a third party along. A frightened child. A husband torn with anxieties over a wife. The daughter of an old parent whose life was burning to its fitful end. They were tiresome, sometimes terrifying, journeys. Once Eugene had operated by lamplight on a girl who had been stricken with acute appendicitis on the eve of her wedding day. Lyda had held the anaesthetic sponge. Another time, a farmer had fallen down a well-shaft as he went out to tend a calf with colic and Eugene had set the broken legs down in the shaft with Lyda holding a candle against the wind. They were two young veterans, all right. And they had a sense of humor. Lyda could be bitter and full of anxieties for Eugene and the strain upon him, and Eugene could be the same for Lyda. Between them they berated the community. Derided the poor-pay. Detested the narrow environment. And schemed for escape.

Outwardly, they gave of themselves every inch. If Lyda complained to Eugene of the parsimony of a well-to-do villager, just the same she was on hand the moment one of those children fell ill or the wife sickened and needed some one about the house to help out.

Eugene would come home full of a loud and pretentious venom toward an old farmer who had beat him down on his fee and then turn around and respond to a three A. M. night call for a splinter in the old farmer's stingy palm.

One day the summons came. The Chicago hospital had sent for Eugene for a conference in regard to a possible appointment.

The Salpeters saw release ahead. Lyda was so sure of Eugene. So sure of his ability to impress the hospital board, once he had the opportunity to present himself for their consideration.

The Salpeters were to leave for the flying, and necessarily secret, trip to Chicago on a Monday. Eugene's appointment was for twelve o'clock in the committee room of the hospital.

At three o'clock Sunday morning there rang through the silence of the Salpeter house, the dreaded sound of the night bell.

As Lyda said of herself, she always slept with one eye open. On the ring of that bell she sprang for the night light.

"Eugene, who could that be? Surely Ella Bevins isn't going to play us false and have her baby before you leave for Chicago tomorrow!"

Ella Bevins was. There stood Eddie, her husband, at the door, distrait, dishevelled, thoroughly frightened.

The Bevinses lived six miles out on a lonely road that jutted off for the last two miles into little more than a trail. Heavy rains made that trail soft as jelly. With a blinding sleet falling, with Eddie Bevins sitting huddled and pale enough to need Eugene's services any moment himself and Eugene peering out into the blackness to try and keep the light car from careening on its side from skidding, it was as tense a ride as Lyda could remember in all the three years of their similar experiences.

The eighty-year-old mother of Ella Bevins stood waiting and wringing her bird-like hands as they finally slithered up. Three frightened youngsters ran clinging to Lyda's skirts. The cries of their mother, the terrible cries that pain tears from women as they bring life into the world, floated out into the quiet. At the entrance to the house, Eddie Bevins made good his promise and fainted quietly against the newel post. That left Lyda to half lift him into the house, while Eugene bounded ahead, giving short, terse orders to the old woman as he sped.

For seven hours, between them, Eugene and Lyda fought the battle over Ella. Seven ruthless hours of travail. Seven long, devastating, triumphant hours. At precisely the hour that Eugene was due in the committee-room of the Chicago hospital, he was placing a baby boy in the arms of his exhausted and nerveless father.

At dusk of that same day, weary, nerveless themselves, worn down, further exhausted by the skiddy, treacherous ride back to town, Lyda and Eugene let themselves into the office door of their home.

Luckily Edda, their pretty and faithful maid-of-all work, had a fire laid in Eugene's study, and a piping hot supper standing waiting on the stove. There were some advance forsythia of the season in a golden glow on the table and the spicy hot smell of Edda's ginger bread pervaded the house pleasantly.

It was home. Home into which two dead-tired people stumbled gratefully. It had been a stiff fight, well won. Taking off her hat from where it had left a long crease across her forehead, Lyda sank down limply on the couch, Eugene, with a great mock sprawl of his big figure, literally flinging himself at her feet.

"Well, girl, we missed out, but I'll wire Chicago. They've got to give me another appointment and understand that all's fair in love and surgery."

"Gad, it rather was."

"One doesn't often see the kind of thing we—saw in Ed's face when you gave him his kid and told him Ella'd pull through."

"Poor old Ed. It was great—pulling her through—for him—"

"Gene—it's rotten, this general practitioner stuff—I hate this dump—but Gene—now that we've missed out on the Chicago appointment—how about putting the thing off for another year—it isn't many get the close-up on life we got last night. Why—looking in on that scene—Ed's face—Ella's fight for life—the new kid and all—why, it was like looking in on a century-plant in the act of opening on the last day of the hundredth year—let's stick around Ed for another year—or two—or—three—"

"It's a dump, all right, Lyda, and heaven save me from general practice, but—but nothing would suit me better than sticking around at it for another year, old girl—or two—or—three—"
