BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. ended 12 hours of talks Saturday aimed at averting war between Argentina and Britain over the Falkland Islands with no indication of a breakthrough.

"We're still talking," Haig said as he entered his downtown hotel after Saturday's second session of negotiaions at Government House. He declined further comment.

State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said he could not characterize the talks Haig had during the day and evening with Argentina's president, Gen. Leopoldo Galtieri, and other members of the ruling Argentine junta and Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez.

"Secretary Haig has kept President Reagan fully informed about every step of the process," Fischer said.

While the top-level talks were going on, more than 20 generals met at army headquarters to review Haig's efforts to cool tensions growing out of Argentina's April 2 seizure of the British-administered Falklands.

After the morning round of talks, government press secretary Rodolfo Baltierrez said, "They're searching for common grounds for agreement. There are some differences, but they're still working."

Participants have refused comment, and earlier Fischer said he was "neither optimistic nor pessimistic."

But the postponement of Haig's scheduled departure Saturday was taken as a sign that his second visit to Buenos Aires in a week was making some progress.

A 40-ship British armada is steaming toward the disputed islands in the South Atlantic that are defended by an estimated 9,000 Argentine troops. It is believed the British war fleet is about a week away.

U.S. Embassy personnel had been ordered to be at Eziza International Airport at 10 a.m. for Haig's departure and the U.S. delegation's baggage was loaded aboard the secretary's U.S. Air Force jet, which waited with turbines humming. But shortly after noon, the engines were cut and the plane's crew was ordered back to town.

An airport official, air force Lt. Col. Salvador Alaimo, said he was told the plane would not be leaving before Sunday. Haig arrived here Thursday.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher cut short her weekend at her country residence and returned to her office Saturday for talks with top ministers, a spokesman at her 10 Downing Street office said.

Government sources in Britain said indications were that Haig would not be flying directly to London from Buenos Aires as orginally expected but would go to Washington first.

They said Mrs. Thatcher's return to London did not signify any major developments in Haig's efforts and her meeting with the ministers was a matter of "stock-taking."

The British Broadcasting Corp. said Haig was pressing a plan for U.N. or other third-party administration of the islands, with a continuing Argentine presence and the return of expelled British officials, while an eventual solution was sought.

Asian leaders 'strong'

MANILA, Philippines — Visits with two strong men of Asia marked this week's phase of a brief Far Eastern trip that is now nearing an end.

President Ferdinand E. Marcos has ruled the Philippines for 16 years. Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew has ruled the city-state of Singapore for 23 years.

Both are widely regarded as the two most outstanding leaders of Southeast Asia.

base for British seapower in Asia.

Little more than a fishing village when it was founded in 1819 by Sir Stamford Raffles as a trading post for the British East India Company, its strategic site at the western entrance to the South China Sea had long made it a linchpin in the ambitions of several mighty civilizations that flourished in Southeast Asia. Indians and Chinese set foot in Singapore well before the Spanish and Portuguese. According to Malay history, a Javanese prince, driven ashore in a storm, established what he called Singapura, meaning Lion City. There are still a few places, such as Raffles Hotel, which retain what Somerset Maugham called "the flavor of the exotic East."

Under the somewhat authoritarian although democratically-based leadership of Lee Kuan Yew, who became prime minister in 1959 when Britain granted Singapore local autonomy prior to its complete independence in 1965, the city state of 226 square miles and three million-plus people has become one of the most prosperous countries in Asia, with a per capita income second only to Japan. A crossroads for aviation, shipping, banking, and commerce, it has developed electronic and other modern industries.

Prime Minister Lee attributes its successful development in part to the magnanimity of Britain in turning over the great naval dockyards and their skilled labor to his government.

"We went commercial with the docks in 1971," he told us. "It happened at a time of expanding international trade. We were off the ground by '73. We developed a diversified, modern economy."

Infant burned to death

"I don't want another house trailer," said grief-stricken Reyes Ramirez, grandfather of one-year-old Erica Ann Avila who burned to death in a fire that destroyed the family's mobile home on County Road 117 south of Midland Saturday morning.

The blaze broke out near a water heater in the southwest corner of the two-bedroom trailer shortly after 9 a.m., quickly engulfing it and a four-bedroom wooden addition. Ramirez said most of the 12-member family was watching television at the time.

Eleven of them — including seven other children — escaped safely before realizing Erica, who had been asleep, was not with them. "It was too hot to go back," said Ramirez, shaking his head as he stared at the burned-out shell of what once had been a home.

"It was just too hot. There was nothing that could be done."

The girl's mother, 29-year-old Mary Rosas Avila, was treated for shock as firemen poured water on the smoldering ruins, in front of which a teddy bear lay face down on the ground.

Firefighting efforts were hampered by high winds and firemen remained on the scene more than three hours. Justice of the Peace Robert Pine pronounced the little girl dead. Her body was taken to the Thomas Funeral Home.

Ramirez said the family had no insurance and would stay with relatives and friends until they could find a new home.

Americans living (and suffering) longer

part one

EDITOR' NOTE: This is the first of a four-part series examining the problems of the fastest growing segment of America's population — the elderly.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer

For 24 million Americans, the days aren't always sunny, and tomorrow may hint of deeper gloom.

But for others, the ages beyond 55 or 60 or 65 may indeed be the "golden years."

The elderly. In a time of awareness and fulfillment, or loneliness and despair.

The elderly — especially those over 75 — form the fastest growing segment of the American population. Increased medical knowledge has made it possible for persons to live longer, but perhaps to suffer longer as well, in physical, mental, emotional and spiritual ways.

Problems for the elderly are intense and growing. Finances. Housing. A fear of losing independence. Coping with lost spouses, lost careers, lifelong dreams which they suddenly realize will never reach fruition.

For almost half of unmarried women over 65, Social Security is the sole source of income, while for unmarried men the same age, 41 percent rely solely on the troubled program. And in an age of spiraling inflation, Social Security pensions sometimes do not even approximate the funds necessary for everyday survival, and as a result, many "retirees" must continue at least parttime work, or rely on savings or other pensions to get by.

However, savings, on the whole, do not appear to be a significant source of income for the elderly. Although 90 percent own assets, only a relative handful own assets of any great value beside their homes.

And, should a person more than 62 years of age need a job to supplement his social security income, he may face great difficulty. While the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1979 made it unlawful for non-federal employers to set a mandatory retirement age prior to 70 years, often the elderly enterjng the nation's work force may end up having to take a lower-paying job. And for those who live in rural areas, the lack of transportation, scarcity of jobs and isolation only add to the difficulties.

Healthwise, the years beyond 60 are times of possible distress. Some 15 to 20 percent of the elderly are subject to significant symptoms of mental illness. They are more likely to develop depression, organic mental disorders, mental reactions to medication and paranoia. More than a million elderly Americans suffer severe organic mental disorders, and another two million less severe disorders.

Five million of the 15 million households nationwide which need assistance are those of the elderly. One out of every three elderly homeowners and two out of every five elderly renters pay more than 30-35 percent of their income for housing. More than a million households of the elderly are within units with at least one major structural defect.

The Older Americans Act of 1965 states that the government would enhance opportunities for the aged to fund "suitable housing, independently selected, designed and located with reference to their special needs, and available at costs they can afford." This act, while addressing adquately the housing needs of the independent elderly, failed to take into consideration the necessity of social needs required by many of the elderly. Only 6 percent of the elderly, according to statistics, benefit from rental assitance through HUD programs.

Moreover, many elderly Americans suffer from a feeling of non-usefulness. While they have carried the load of society for decades, now, they often feel shunned, put aside as useless. In reality, the years of experience which they possess make them uniquely important to American society.

Older women, who compose 60 percent of America's elderly, encounter special problems. In 1980, there were 147 women for every 100 men in the age group 65 and older. The U.S. Census Bureau expects that by the year 2000 the ratio will be 150 to 100, and in 2050, 152 to 100.

Work options for elderly women are limited. Employers are reluctant to hire a woman after the age of 40. Often they have only a few years of work experience and education because of family obligations which in the past prevented them seeking fulltime employment.

Due to their longer life expectancy, older women have a greater likelihood than men of developing chronic health problems. Medicare covers less than 40

Justices opposed to tuition tax credits

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's plan to give tuition tax credits to the parents of children in private schools is likely to have a tough going before the Supreme Court even if it gets through an already hard-pressed Congress.

Reagan, fulfilling one of his 1980 campaign pledges, formally unveiled the plan last Thursday in an address to a Roman Catholic educators' group in Chicago.

"It's uphill, but I wouldn't rule out the possibility," Harvard law professor Lawrence H. Tribe says of the chances the high court would uphold the tax credits.

The key element in what would be a certain Supreme Court challenge to the credits is the constitutional ban on the "establishment" — or undue governmental favoring — of religion.

A majority of those benefiting from Reagan's plan would be parents of students in church-run schools.

The Supreme Court has struck down state tax-break plans for parents of private school students in New York and New Jersey, on the grounds they unconstitutionally aid religion.

"Special tax benefits ... cannot be squared with the principle of neutrality established by the decisions of this court," Justice Lewis F. Powell wrote in the New York case in 1973.

All five members of the majority that struck down the New Jersey plan without a written opinion in 1979 are still on the Supreme Court.

But, says Tribe, the Supreme Court may be persuaded this time around that its views on the establishment prohibition have been "too rigid."

"The court might show greater deference to Congress than to the states," he said.

University of Chicago Law Professor Antonin Scalia agrees that the court shows greater deference to Congress. Becayse it struck down the state plans doesn't necessarily mean it would invalidate a similar federal law, he says.

Scalia cautions that the court's decisions in "establishment" cases to date are "utterly muddled."

Generally, the court applies a three-part test in deciding whether a governmental action violates the required separation of church and state.

That test asks:

—Does the action have a religious purpose?

—Is its primary effect to advance or inhibit religion?

If the answer to any of the three questions is "yes," the court traditionally has outlawed the governmental action.

Jury deliberation begins in Mexia drownings case

DALLAS (AP) — Jurors began deliberating Saturday whether three Limestone County officers negligently caused three teen-agers to drown when a boat carrying all six capsized on a Central Texas lake last June 19.

Deputy Kenny Elliott, reserve deputy Kenneth Archie and probation officer David Drummond are charged with criminally negligent homicide, a misdemeanor, in the deaths.

Each faces a maximum sentence of a year in jail and a $2,000 fine for each of three counts.

Jurors also could find the suspended officers guilty on a lesser charge of violating the Texas Water Safety act, a misdemeanor punishable by a $500 fine.

The 14-foot motorboat contained no life preservers or running lights as required by state law. A small plate posted to one of the seats specified a passenger weight limit of 400 pounds.

The black youths had been arrested for investigation of marijuana possession at an annual Lake Mexia celebration of Juneteenth, which marks the day in 1865 that Texas slaves received word of their freedom.

Drowned were Carl Baker, 19, Anthony Freeman, 18, both of Mexia, and Steven Booker, 19, of Dallas.

Elliott and Drummond, who are white, swam back to shore. Archie, a black, held on to the overturned craft until he was rescued.

A guilty verdict on the negligent homicide charge required jurors to find that an "ordinary person" would be aware of a "substantial and unjustifiable risk" under the same circumstances.

Elliott was the lead officer but Archie and Drummond could be considered parties to his actions.

In final arguments Saturday morning, prosecutors claimed the officers perceived a danger when they removed handcuffs from the suspects and consulted with one another about how many trips were needed to ferry all six people to a command post across the lake.

"Drummond and Archie became negligent when they put their bodies in the boat," said special prosecutor Larry W. Baraka.

Defense attorneys contended the case should have been heard in civil court and blamed the media and Limestone County politicians for the case's elevated status.

They pointed out defendants already face two lawsuits filed by the victims' parents that seek a total of $8 million in damages.

Attorneys for Drummond and Archie said Elliott, as the boat's operator, was solely responsible for its safety.

Anti-interventionists march 'for survival' on Austin streets

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Nearly 3,000 people, some carrying signs, wearing flowers or blowing soap bubbles, paraded from the state Capitol to a nearby park Saturday in a "march for survival."

Marchers displayed the slogan "Bread not Bombs" on signs, T-shirts and flags, and chanted, "Money for food, not for war, U.S. out of El Salvador. Ronald Reagan, pay attention, we don't want your intervention." Others chanted anti-nuclear slogans.

Frances "Sissy" Farenthold, a former gubernatorial candidate, told the crowd, "We have a built-in dependency in this country on a war economy.

"It's pathetic what we plead for to fill human needs," said Ms. Farenthold, a Corpus Christi lawyer who lost in the Democratic primary race for governor in 1972 and 1974.

In 1972, Ms. Farenthold became the first woman in the party's history to be nominated for vice president. She garnered 420 votes before withdrawing in favor of Missouri Sen. Thomas Eagleton.

Morin jury advises death penalty

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — Jurors thought admitted murderer Stephan Peter Morin had enough chances to turn his life around, and that his conversion to Christianity should not save him from the executioner, the jury foreman said.

Defense attorney Pete Torres told jurors Morin was "the worst, he was the scum of the earth, he was a cancer of society," but deserved life instead of death because he had been born again and was truly repentent for the slaying of Carrie Marie Scott.

Jurors deliberated two hours and 15 minutes before deciding Friday that the man convicted of capital murder — the drifter wanted on rape, murder, and kidnap charges in five states — had had enough chances and should be put to death for Miss Scott's Dec. 11 slaying.

Jury foreman Floyd J. Labure said jurors did think it possible Morin had experienced a true religious conversion.

"I think that's more up to him and God," said Labure. "I think as far as I'm concerned he just had killed enough. We thought he had had enough chances in his life to correct himself before killing these people."

"We did all we could," said Torres. "If I could have tried it all over, there's not one thing I would have done differently."

Lead prosecutor Susan Reed told reporters she thought "bringing God into the courtroom was a sham."

"This man has made himself what he was and is. He made himself a mass murderer," she told jurors.

During her final argument she spread photographs of Miss Scott and other alleged Morin victims on the rail in front of the jury.

"They've brought God into the courtroom. They've tried to put God's law into man's law," she said.

"When Jesus was on the cross and the thief next to him turned and repented, Jesus said he'd be in heaven soon with him and God. But he didn't take him down off the cross," Ms. Reed said.

Morin has used people all his life, said Ms. Reed.

"I don't want to see God used by this man," she added.

Morin, 34, a native of Providence, R.I., was on the FBI's 10 most wanted list. He had been sought since 1976, when he was charged with raping and brutalizing a 14-year-old girl in San Francisco.

Although he pleaded guilty to the murder of Miss Scott, 21, state law required corraborating evidence before prosecutors could seek the death penalty.

Morin also has been indicted for the strangulation of Janna Bruce, 21, of Corpus Christi.

Morin, who came to court toting a red Bible, asked jurors Friday to spare his life.

He said he was "a person who had not met Christ till that fateful day...a person who had run and eluded the law for more than half his life." And he said his conversion showed the "birth of a new soul and the death of an old one."

Ex-Army general's burial set Monday

Handy died Wednesday at Brooke Army Medical Center. He was 90.

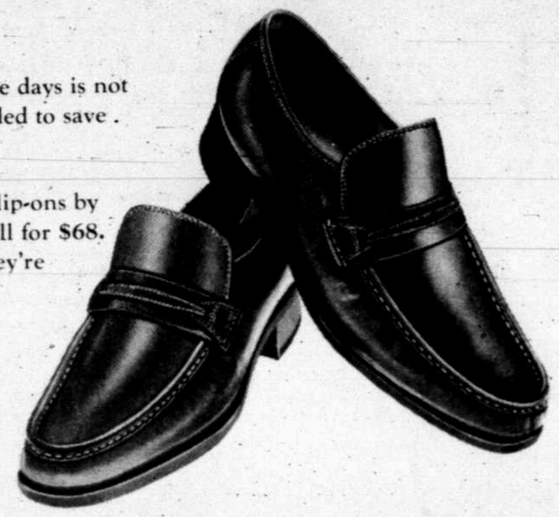

A memorial service was conducted Friday at the chapel of Fort Sam Houston, where Handy served as 4th Army Commander from 1947 to 1949.

Handy's military career began with officers training in 1917. He later served as a field artillery officer in World War I.

In 1920, he was a battery commander with the 15th Field Artillery at Fort Sam Houston.

Home almost heaven to ex-hooker

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A teen-age runaway given up for dead by her parents and forced into prostitution by a man who frightened her with tales of mobsters and police says "home is practically heaven compared to where I've been."

The girl testified a dispute with her parents over grades prompted her to run away from her East Texas home in October of 1980.

Her mother said she thought the girl was dead by the time police picked her up in December. She had been working for more than a month as a prostitute.

The girl testified that she always worked in front of the same bar, and said her customers paid the tavern proprietor $5 to use a back room for 15 minutes.

"I never would have imagined anything as horrible as what happened," she told the Austin American-Statesman in a telephone interview Friday.

Jurors deliberated four hours Thursday before recommending Jack Alvin Moore, 39, of Austin be sentenced to 10 years in prison for compelling prostitution. Prosecutors had sought the maximum penalty of 20 years.

The girl, who was 14 at the time, testified the man forced her into prostitution after telling her she was being hunted by police and mobsters.

She said she caught a ride to Houston with two truck drivers after she ran away and then took a bus to Austin. She said she met Moore on an Austin street after she had tried and failed to locate a friend who lived in Austin.

The girl testified Moore took her to a motel and raped her. She said he then convinced her that the truckers who had given her a ride were drug-runners for organized crime, and had robbed a convenience store and killed the clerk.

He told her that her fingerprints had been found in the truck, and that police and mobsters were hunting her, the girl testified. Moore also allegedly told her that her parents' home was being watched and their telephone tapped.

A police officer said he questioned the girl on Dec. 3, 1980, because she appeared young and "looked something like a clown," with pale skin, bright red rouge and black hair.

The girl's mother said Friday her daughter had returned to school, and has been on the honor roll all this year.

The girl had counseling for several months and still attends group sessions.

The mother said her daughter's story "wouldn't stop one kid (in her group) from running away. They would think she made dumb mistakes. It makes me so sad to see these kids. They think it can't happen to them."

The girl, now 15, told the newspaper, "That's the attitude I had, that it wouldn't happen to me, and sure enough it did."

state in brief

Board to consider insurance changes

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Administrative Council of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System, will meet June 3 to consider a request by the University of Texas System to deviate from the board's standards for group insurance policies for employees of higher education institutions.

The UT System is seeking to have a $200 deductible on group health coverage rather than the $100 deductible required by the board.

To make up for that difference, the UT System plans to provide long-term direct dental coverage and a $1 million lifetime maximum for recovery under the health policy. The current maximum is $250,000.

The request was presented to the council at its meeting April 8. The Coordinating Board staff will review the matter and make a recommendation to the council at the June 3 meeting.

The meeting will be held at the Bevington A. Reed Building, 200 E. Riverside Drive, Austin.

The council also will consider an application by Midland College to change its outpatient psychiatric coverage.

MC wants to change the coverage to pay 50 percent rather than 80 percent of the first $30 per visit.

The college plans to offset that change by providing dental coverage, increased life coverage and accidental death and dismemberment coverage, which are not required by the board.

Midland honor student cited at UT

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Mary Frances Witt, 4315 Nelson Road, Midland, was among 1,800 University of Texas at Austin students honored for their academic achievements Saturday at UT's Annual Honors Day Convocation.

The ceremonies, held in the Concert Hall on the UT campus, were to honor junior and senior students who have at least a 3.5 grade-point average.

Witt is among 64 students who were named Distinguished College Scholars for achieving a 4.0 grade-point average, or all A's.

The honorees represent the top 3.7 percent of the entire UT student body. In recognition of their achievements, the Main Building Tower was lighted orange on the evening of Honors Day.

Each student received a special certificate from UT President Peter T. Flawn.

Flawn also will present an Amoco Foundation Outstanding Teaching Award to a faculty member and two Presidential Citations for distinguished service to the university.

Nuclear project hearing suspended

HOUSTON (AP) — A licensing hearing on the troubled South Texas Nuclear Project has been suspended because one of three judges was removed from the hearing panel, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission spokesman says.

Houston Lighting & Power Co., the builder of the multi-billion dollar plant near Bay City, requested the delay Friday to allow NRC commissioners to review an appeals board decision removing Ernest E. Hill, hearing chairman Charles Bechhoefer said.

Utilities' hearing postponed by PUC

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Public Utility Commission has postponed indefinitely a hearing on an application by three electric utility companies to establish a procedure for approving payments to their affiliates.

The hearing on the applications by Texas Electric Service Co., Texas Power & Light Co. and Dallas Power & Light Co. was delayed to allow parties in the matter to work out a settlement.

Texas-New Mexico Power Co., Texas Municipal League and the cities of Waco, Odessa, Dallas and Fort Worth have intervened in the case.

The utilities are seeking to set up a procedure for approval of payments to affiliates in connection with the fuel cost factor tariff schedule of each company.

Hearing for bank drive-in office set

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Savings and Loan Department has set the application of First Savings and Loan Association, Midland, for a drive-in facility for the department's May 3 docket call.

If the application is protested at the docket call, it will be set for a full hearing.

If there is no protest, the application may be referred to Savings and Loan Commissioner Alvis Vandygriff for a decision without a public hearing.

Parental rights denied

HOUSTON (AP) — Ronald Clark O'Bryan, a Death Row inmate scheduled to die next month for poisoning his 8-year-old son, has lost his parental rights to his 13-year-old daughter.

Family District Judge Brent Burg terminated O'Bryan's parental rights on Friday, allowing the teenage girl, Elizabeth Lane, to be adopted by her stepfather.

O'Bryan was convicted of murdering his son, Timothy, on Halloween 1974 by lacing the boy's candy with cyanide. A state judge has ordered O'Bryan to die by injection on May 25.

Mexican nationals arrested

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A five-day crackdown on illegal aliens in the Austin area resulted in the arrest of 176 Mexican nationals, according to Border Patrol officials.

Five agents from the Cotulla Border Patrol station, about 135 miles southeast of Austin, arrested the aliens at construction sites, Intelligence Officer Victor Villarreal said Friday from his district office at Laredo.

Midland has 20 percent chance of rain

The dust may settle if the 20 percent chance for rain early today materializes, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The high today is expected to be in the mid-70s, with the low tonight in the low 50s. The high Monday should be near 80 degrees. Winds today will be out of the south, southeast at 15 to 20 mph.

Skies will be cloudy today and clearing somewhat tonight and Monday. The record high for today's date was 97, set in 1975. The record low for Saturday's date in 1980 was 37 degrees.

Senate to consider troop withdrawal

By W. DALE NELSON

WASHINGTON (A) — The Senate opens hearings this week on proposals embraced by both liberals and conservatives to bring home some of the 300,000 U.S. troops stationed in Europe despite warnings that it might further divide an already shaky NATO.

Sen. Charles H. Percy, R-Ill., chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, released on Saturday a report by the committee staff saying that "any significant withdrawals" would make NATO less cohesive.

"This study makes a convincing case that NATO...could easily be pushed into crisis if issues are not managed carefully," Percy said. "It is, therefore, a particularly bad time for Congress to consider any proposal to remove U.S. troops from Europe."

Despite the opposition of Percy and pressure by the Reagan administration not to open the subject, the Senate subcommittee on defense appropiations will hold hearings Wednesday and Thursday on U.S. global commitments, including troops in Europe.

Scheduled witnesses include Deputy Secretary of Defense Frank C.Carlucci and Richard Perle, assistant secretary of defense for international security policy.

The chairman of the subcommittee, Sen. Ted Stevens, R-Alaska, has questioned both the need and the cost of the U.S. commitment — $41 billion a year for the troops actually in place in Europe and another $90 billion support costs in the United States.

"We are not saying to walk away from it, but we are saying we should take a hard look to see if it has to continue at such a high level," an aide to Stevens said.

The idea of troop withdrawals is drawing support in Congress both from conservatives who believe Europeans are not doing their share and liberals who see it as a means of reducing defense spending.

It picked up more support when Western Europeans refused to impose sanctions on trade with the Soviet Union as requested by the United States following the marshal law crackdown in Poland last December.

The Foreign Relations Committee staff report said complete withdrawal of U.S. forces over a short period of time "would represent such a drastic shift in U.S. policy that its overall consequences would be catastrophic."

"The idea of partial or phased withdrawals does have appeal for some," the report added. "But in the current political climate, any significant withdrawals would be seen as punitive and would clearly provoke an angry, confused, and divisive European reaction that would severely harm NATO cohesion."

Meanwhile, Sen. Joseph Biden of Deleware, the ranking Democrat on the European affairs subcommittee, released a Library of Congress report which contended that a U.S. troop withdrawal could bring about a Soviet domination of Europe.

The report by the Congressional Research Service said troop withdrawals "could lead to an independent but neutral Europe, a fragmented Europe greatly influenced by the Soviet Union, or Soviet domination of the entire continent."

But the report also said it was "theoretically possible" that U.S. troop withdrawals would bring about a more united Europe allied to the United States and Congress should "examine with great care" any such step, it said.

The question of the U.S. troop commitment to NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, has been reviewed by Congress periodically since the late 1950s.

The last time was in 1973, when a coalition of moderate to conservative Republicans and Democrats defeated a troop-cutting amendment sponsored by then Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield, D-Mont.

Journalists arrested in Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Air force security officers arrested two Canadians and an American working for the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. in the southern port city of Comodoro Rivadavia Saturday, a military spokesman reported.

Col. Esteban Solis said John Axelson, 30, and David Wilson, 42, both of Toronto, and Tony Hillman, 34, of Chicago, were arrested while filming Argentine air force planes at the air base ouside the city 1,350 miles south of Buenos Aires.

He said the three were being held on suspicion of espionage, and if they were charged and convicted they could face up to eight years in prison.

Solis said the camera team was using a telephoto lens to photograph the aircraft, and they are now being held in the local magistrate's office.

He said they were among some 40 foreign journalists in Comodoro Rivadavia covering the Argentine-British dispute over the Falkland Islands about 250 miles east of Comodoro Rivadavia.

Copter sinks in Colorado River

LEE'S FERRY, Ariz. (AP) — A helicopter crashed and sank into the Colorado River Saturday, apparently killing three people and injuring a fourth, the Coconino County sheriff's office reported.

Three persons, believed to be members of a film crew, were missing and believed killed, said Darlene Shaffer, a sheriff's dispatcher.

The helicopter was under about 20 feet of water, Ms. Shaffer said.

One person injured in the crash, who was not identified, told authorities that three others were on the helicopter, said John Ritenour, chief ranger at the Glen Canyon National Recreation Area.

Ritenour said it appeared the helicopter hit a cable stretched between the two banks of the river.

Divers' efforts to reach the helicopter were hampered by darkness and the coldness of the river water, officials said.

Reagan still hopes to meet Brezhnev in New York

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan still hopes to meet Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev during a U.N. special session in New York in June despite the Soviet leader's proposal that they meet in a neutral country, a White House spokesman said Saturday.

"We do not interpret his (Brezhnev's) remarks as a rejection of the president's expressed hopes that President Brezhnev would come to New York in June and meet with him," said David Gergen, the White House communications director.

"We will be studying his remarks," he said.

Brezhev rejected Reagan's offer to meet in New York, saying a superpower summit should not be incidental to another forum. He suggested Finland and Switzerland, two neutral European countries, as possible sites for a meeting between the two leaders and suggested October as a possible time, according to Tass, the official Soviet news agency.

Brezhnev's remarks were made in response to a question by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda and distributed, in advance, by Tass.

National security adviser William P. Clark called Reagan at the presidential retreat in Camp David, Md., to tell him about Brezhnev's remarks, according to Gergen. Reagan had just delivered a nationwide radio address on the Soviet Union and nuclear weapons.

Gergen said in a statement, "Two weeks ago, President Reagan expressed his sincere hope that President Brezhnev would join him this June in addressing the United Nations Special Session on Disarmament.

"We have seen today's Tass report of President Brezhnev's statement to Pravda suggesting a summit meeting this fall," said the statement.

per cent of health care expenses, and the program covers only about 50 percent of the elderly who are at or below the poverty level.

The problems of the elderly are immense, and no one has all the effective answers. But authorities say the situation cannot be avoided, shunned, for the problems are such that everyone will be affected in some manner, either personally or through family or friends. Today's young are tomorrow's age, for man — fated to die — also is fated to grow old, if he lives long enough.

Man's body sent to Dallas forensic lab

The badly decomposed body of a man found in a pasture south of Midland Friday morning has been sent to a forensic lab in Dallas for positive identification.

The remains appeared to be those of a Spanish male who had been dead about two months, according to preliminary analyses by sheriff's department investigators who were called to the scene east of the Rankin Highway near the Lucky Lady Lounge about 9:40 a.m. Friday.

The man may have committed suicide, as his wallet and personal effects appeared intact and a .38-caliber handgun was found clutched in his hand. He had been shot in the upper body, according to deputies. It is not known how long it will take to establish the man's identity.

Editor's Report

Singapore one of the cleanest, most disciplined, crime-controlled major cities in Asia, the 58-year-old, Cambridge-educated, shrewd and sophisticated politician of Chinese ancestry said:

"We had to be severe. First, we had to educate the people, especially the young, teach them respect for law and order. Then we had to isolate the criminal minority and punish them swiftly and severely."

The prime minister shares the view of other Asian leaders that a strong American military presence in the Far East is necessary to deter Soviet aggression or coercion of the free nations of Asia. We have been told by almost every leader and diplomat with whom we have met on this trip that if America withdraws militarily from the Far East, most of the little nations, and possibly even Japan, would seek an "accommodation" with Russia, meaning they would, in effect, become satellites of the Soviet Union.

Since he stressed the importance of an American military presence in Asia, we asked him if, in event of a serious Soviet threat, he would be willing to make Singapore's naval and air bases available to the U.S. 7Th fleet. "Yes," he said, "providing the 7th fleet is credible." That put my dander up a bit and I asked: "Do you think America can be relied on?" "Yes," he replied quickly.

* * *

On leaving Singapore, we bid goodbye to my wife, Austine, who flew off to Paris where we will join her next week.

Arriving in Manila, we were welcomed at the airport by my long-time friend, Gen. Carlos Romulo, who has been foreign minister of the Philippines for some 30 years, during which time he served as president of the U.N. General Assembly.

Before we granted the Philippines independence, he served in our congress as the representative of his native land with the right to speak but no vote. Then House Speaker Sam Rayburn once told him he would rather he had the vote than the voice. I first met Romny, as he is known to his many friends and admirers, in the 1930's when he visited my father at San Simeon with Manuel Quezon, the first president of the Philippines. Although an eloquent defender of his country's interests, Rommy has been a great friend and soldier-statesman ally of our country. He waded ashore with Gen. Douglas Macarthur at Leyte when we liberated the Philippines from the Japanese occupation.

Internationally renowned for his dedication to freedom and democracy, Rommy's loyal support of President Marcos speaks louder for the good that leader has done his country than all the harping of our liberal press about the president's authoritarianism and alleged shortcomings.

We had booked into the Hilton Hotel in Manila, but on our arrival Rommy said President Marcos insisted we stay at one of the official guest houses, and so we were whisked away in a Mercedes with a police car and two motorcycle cops clearing traffic for us.

The Philippine Islands are, as you know, a republic, but when you are the guests of President Marcos the treatment is royal. The guest house turned out to be an old palatial mansion, with antique furniture, mahogany floors polished to a gleam, and potted plants and flowers just about everywhere. Smiling maids in immaculate white uniforms hovered around. I was ushered into what was called the King's Room while Joe got the Queen's Room, with a gauze and lace circular "mosquito" net hanging down from the ceiling over a very feminine-looking bed. Mine was a more somber, darker room with a 4-poster bed in which King Arthur or his knights would have felt more at home than I did.

We dined with Rommy and his attractive American wife, Beth, author of more than 20 books and former interviewer of famous personalities for the Reader's Digest. Next morning we met with Rommy at the foreign office, then proceeded to Malacanang Palace for an interview with President Marcos before he hosted a lunch in our honor, attended by American Ambassador Michael Armacost and Rear Admiral Richard Dunleavy, commander of our naval base in the Philippines.

I have long admired President Marcos for his incredible heroism in World War II when, as a young Filipino army officer fighting with the American forces, he was captured and tortured five times by the Japanese, and escaped each time. On the infamous "Death March" of the American soldiers from Bataan, he escaped only to learn the Japanese were executing ten Americans for every escapee, whereupon he gave himself up. Before the fall of Bataan, he, with four enlisted Filipinos, infiltrated Japanese lines to climb to a mountain plateau where Japanese artillery was butchering American soldiers below. With explosives and hand greandes, he killed the gun crews and destroyed the weapons before escaping with the loss of one man. In decorating him later with the Distinguished Service Cross, Gen. MacArthur said that without his valorous exploits, Bataan would have fallen three months sooner.

In establishing what he called "constitutional authoritarianism," the president said the aim of his "new society" was to end the rule of the oligarchs; to narrow the spectacularly wide gap between the very rich and very poor, and to impose limits on personal liberties to stop them from becoming antisocial license. Responsibilities were stressed as much as rights, and he imposed discipline and order on all aspects of public life.

He encountered bitter opposition from political opponents and rich families. Several attempts were made to assassinate him. He was accused of abusing his powers and allowing members of his family and friends to enrich themselves at the expense of the country. He was denounced for imposing martial law in 1972 and maintaining it for eight years. When he lifted it a year ago last January, critics contended he had retained all the powers he had under it.

The president told us he had imposed and maintained martial law because extreme rightists and communist guerrillas had created a virtual reign of terror. He also said that everything he did was in accordance with constitutional law. He said that if he allowed a return to the political anarchy that existed before he became prime minister, the Philippines would become communist "in a short time — we would end up being like Vietnam."

I believe him. I believe he is a patriot, trying to do his best to improve the lot of the great mass of the Filipino people, not a tyrannical dictator..

That's my personal opinion, but for the scoffers I will cite a report by the British Institute for the Study of Conflict, one of the most prestigious and impartial fact-finding organizations in the world.

"Martial law was a courageous decision, and events have justified it," the report said. "It would be easy to dismiss the new society as simply a military dictatorship, with a captive population groaning under its yoke. But that would be misleading. Apart from special groups like former politicians and journalists, Filipinos have on the whole been content with the regime. Were it otherwise, they would certainly have created trouble before now, because they are a tough and lively people and not easily kept down. He would not condone torture, but he would rather sacrifice legal principles than see dangerous men left free to menace the community."

No room for 'inn'-mates at county jails

EL PASO, Texas (AP) — County jails across Texas are bursting at the seams from ever-increasing inmate populations, causing financial burdens for counties forced to build new jails and creating security risks.

"There's no room in the inn and we've run out of stables," says Charles Newman, administrator of the El Paso County Jail. "I don't see any short-term solution to the problem, either here or anywhere else."

The result is overcrowding that sends counties into federal courtrooms to defend their jails, and pleas for more tax dollars to finance larger jails.

FORTY-THREE COUNTIES in Texas — including most of the metropolitan counties — are building new jails or renovating existing facilities. Fourteen others are planning new jails. Only 125 of the 243 operating county jails meet state requirements for space and facilities, says Jack Crump, a planner with the Texas Commission on Jail Standards.

Dallas County will open a 900-bed jail in September or October, Crump said. Harris County has nearly completed a 3,600-bed facility. El Paso, Travis and Potter counties all have new jails under construction. Bexar County is planning a new jail.

Meanwhile, the jails are full. Crump estimated that on any given day, there are about 13,000 inmates in the state's jails. The jails have about 16,000 beds, but corrections officials normally subtract 20 percent of those because jails are separated into different classifications — men vs. women, juveniles vs. adults, aggressive inmates vs. non-aggressive ones — and the jail population rarely fits those molds.

"If you subtract the 20 percent because of classification problems, it comes out about even," Crump said.

The rising jail populations derive from a variety of factors ranging from public resistance to higher taxes to a back-logged court system.

"First of all, the general population (in Texas) is growing," said Newman. "The economy certainly has something to do with it. Overloading the courts slows down the judicial process so people stay longer. Sentences have become a bit more severe recently.

"The county jail is sort of the middle of the pipeline. If the courts get clogged up, it puts pressure on the jail. If the prison system can't take our inmates, it puts pressure on the jail. We have no control over our intake and no control over our output."

NEWMAN SAID A federally funded study he chaired in the 1970s found that public ignorance of jail problems results in resistance to tax money being used to house lawbreakers.

"The basic problem is that nobody recognized jails existed until very, very recently," he said. "The public is like Rhett Butler. They just don't give a damn."

Lack of public concern is reflected in the difficulty county officials encounter in passing bond issues to build or renovate jails, said Sam Clonts, director of the Texas Association of Counties.

"Many counties have to take three shots at the bond issue before it will pass," Clonts said. "The public is certainly against criminals. They want them in jail off the streets, but they don't want to pay for it."

Adding to the public resistance is that funding for bond issues comes from property taxes, which also are the source of money for schools and cities, Clonts said. "It's a matter of too many people eating out of the same trough."

BUILDING JAILS IS an expensive proposition, generally costing $30,000 to $45,000 per inmate bunk, Newman said. That puts a strain on some counties' finances, even with the use of bond issues, and it does nothing to solve the immediate problem.

El Paso's new jail is a good example. County commissioners began considering a new jail in the early 1970s and the plans were stepped up after a federal court ordered the county to end overcrowding. A bond issue failed in the first election, but passed in a second after the courts exerted more pressure. The 1,000-bed jail is not scheduled to be completed until the summer of 1983.

While the grey concrete monolith of the new 11-story jail already has taken its place in the downtown skyline, little has changed at the existing jail since the court order, Newman said. "At the time of the lawsuit, there were 800 to 900 inmates in a jail designed to handle about 500. It ranges from 500 to 600 now."

Newman keeps a chart in his office that shows that the most inmates in the jail at once in 1981 was 485. The high day so far this year, earlier this month, was 588.

"I drew this chart only to 600 because we can't fit any more than that in here," he said. "With this curve, we'll blow off the top...

"It's like putting tigers in a cage. If you put enough of them in there, they'll start killing each other. The same goes with humans, except that humans are more imaginative in the ways they hurt each other."

Newman said he's worried, too, about the mental health of his staff. "The stress on the officers impacts on the inmates and the stress on the inmates impacts on the officers, and soon, we're all pretty upset and anything can happen."

Clements paroles Midland County woman

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN - A Midland County woman convicted of indecency with a child and theft over $200 in 1980 has been paroled by Gov. Bill Clements on a recommendation of the Texas Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Nine other persons convicted of crimes in the Midland area also were paroled by Clements, and one person had his parole revoked.

Elizabeth Jane Driver, who was convicted of indecency with a child and theft in Midland County on May 20, 1980, was paroled to Midland County after serving and earning three years and 10 months of a six-year sentence.

Marvin Gene Dunn, convicted of possession of marijuana in Ector County Oct. 5, 1981, was paroled to Ector County after serving and earning one year and five months of a two-year sentence.

Aaron Parra Lopez, convicted of burglary of a building in Ector County July 28, 1981, was paroled to Ector County after serving and earning one year and five months of a four-year sentence.

Lucinda Dora Peters, convicted of burglary with intent to commit theft in Ector County July 29, 1981, was paroled to Ector County after serving and earning one year and four months of a two-year sentence.

Kenny Martinez Ramos, convicted of theft by check in Midland County Sept. 30, 1981, was paroled to Tarrant County after serving and earning one year and four months of a two-year sentence.

Alcario Villa Rodriquez, convicted of delivery of heroin in Midland County Feb. 17, 1980, was paroled to Midland County after serving and earning seven years and 10 months of a 15-year sentence.

Benny Earl Taylor, convicted of burglary of a habitation in Midland County June 18, 1980, was paroled to Midland County after serving and earning four years of a five-year sentence.

Mark Kelvin Watson, convicted of theft over $200 in Howard County April 28, 1981, was paroled to Nueces County after serving and earning one year and 10 months of a four-year sentence.

Jimmie Lee Westbrook, convicted of possession of heroin in Midland County July 19, 1978, was paroled to Lubbock County after serving and earning seven years of an eight-year sentence.

James Rickey Williams, convicted of theft by check and two counts of theft over $200 in Andrews, Lamb and Terry counties, Oct. 16, Nov. 10 and Dec. 7, 1978, was released on mandatory supervision to Kerr County after serving and earning all of a seven-year sentence.

Jerry Ray Madry, convicted of forgery by passing, two counts of forgery and passing a forged instrument in Ector and Howard counties in 1971, had his parole revoked for unsatisfactory adjustment. Madry, who is serving a 10-year sentence, had been on parole since July 2, 1981.

Nursing home needs to change act

MCKINNEY, Texas (AP) — A Plano nursing home, decertified twice in the last two years by state officials, remains under a temporary restraining order mandating better patient care, officials said.

State District Judge John Roach signed an order last week ordering the Park Place Nursing Center to upgrade its facility and to keep its residents clean.

The order also requires that personnel properly treat bedsores, administer and record medications and treatments properly and maintain daily nurses' notes on patients.

The order came after members of an inspection team from the Texas Department of Health testified they observed numerous instances of patient neglect during two separate visits to the home in March.

The team's report said several patients were unclean, medication was dispensed improperly or was unavailable, syringes were used more than once and bandages were not changed properly.

The court hearing was prompted by a lawsuit filed against the nursing home by the state attorney general's office.

The lawsuit asks that a trustee be appointed to protect the "health and safety" of the patients at Park Place.

Roach will consider that request at another hearing on March 27.

Hal Nelson, legal counsel for the state health department, called the request for a court-appointed administrator an "extraordinary measure" that has been used by the department only twice in the past four years.

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Commissioner of Health Robert Bernstein has reopened the hearing on an application by Sterling County to operate a proposed municipal solid waste disposal site near Sterling City.

Bernstein granted the county a permit to operate the proposed site Jan. 15, but set aside that permit in order to receive additional evidence on upgrading the facility, the proposed lining of the landfill trenches and the groundwater table in the area.

A public hearing on the matter has been set for 9:30 a.m. May 4 in the District Courtroom, Sterling County Courthouse, Sterling City.

The proposed landfill would be located on 7.4 acres of county-owned land located 1.2 miles west of the intersection of U.S. Highway 87 and FM 163 in Sterling City and 960 feet north of U.S. 87.

Proof problems remain

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — The long-promised indictments in the killing of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. have been delivered, but prosecutors may have trouble proving the sensational charges against five jailed defendants.

Defense laywers expressed doubts the goverment can introduce much of the evidence, which they said was circumstantial and gleaned improperly through methods some of the defendants called "gestapo tactics."

The indictment accuses narcotics trafficker Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra of paying convicted hitman Charles V. Harrelson, 43, about $250,000 to assassinate Wood on May 29, 1979.

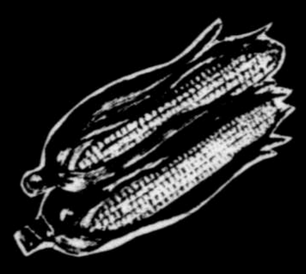

Grand jurors allege Chagra, 37, wanted Wood killed to keep the judge from presiding over Chagra's impending narcotics-related criminal enterprise trial.

Harrelson, 43, Chagra and his wife, Elizabeth, 28, and his attorney brother, Joseph Chagra, 35, were charged with helping plot Wood's death.

The Chagras, Harrelson, and his wife, Jo Ann, 41, also are accused of a bizarre conspiracy to obstruct justice by covering up Jimmy's and Harrelson's part in the killing, and plotting to break the two men out of jails.

Grand jurors also alleged Jimmy Chagra and Harrelson discussed killing witnesses and possible co-defendants, and that the Chagra brothers planned to finance escape attempts and bribe state officials with the profits of drug sales.

Body of bridge's last victim recovered

EAST CHICAGO, Ind. (AP) — Workers battling high wind and heavy rain used jackhammers Saturday to free the body of the last victim of a highway bridge collapse that killed 12 people and injured 19.

The body of Roberto Rubio of Whiting was recovered about 4:20 p.m.

Rubio was thrown from the bridge Thursday and plunged head-first into wet concrete, which solidified around his upper body.

Cleanup from the worst accident in this steel town's history was halted by a tornado watch Friday night, but resumed Saturday with tightened police lines to restrict sightseers.

Gov. Robert D. Orr visited the site about five hours before the body was recovered. "My heart goes out to all those people," Orr said as he walked around the area.

The governor said he was impressed by the length of the highway span that fell, about 600 feet, and by emergency workers who helped during the disaster. The span fell as concrete was being poured during construction. The cause of the accident is under investigation.

"There were an awful lot of volunteers who even risked their own lives to come here and be helpful in this tragedy, and I think it's appropriate for me to thank all of them for what they have done," Orr said. "It's unbelievable to see what I have seen here this morning."

Orr said two investigations, by the federal Occupational Safety and Health Administration and by an independent probe contracted by the State Highway Department to Construction Technology Labs of Skokie, Ill., are under way to determine the cause of the accident.

"I'm confident it will take quite a while before we have an answer," he said.

Asked whether negligence was involved in the collapse, Orr said: "Not that I know of. Whether or not there was negligence is something that will have to be determined by a thorough-going investigation."

Unborn child dies when mother shot

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A sheriff's deputy who allegedly shot a woman as she answered the door with a rifle in her hand, killing her unborn son, had made a false report of trouble at the home, authorities say.

The deputy, Robert E. Armstrong, was booked Friday for investigation of second-degree murder. The shooting victim, Dolores Young, 22, was reported Saturday in serious but stable condition at Santa Teresita Hospital in Duarte.

"It is our belief," said Sheriff's Capt. Robert Grimm, that Armstrong, 28, placed a phony disturbance call, giving the four officers an excuse to go to Ms. Young's house because Armstrong thought drugs were being sold there.

Grimm said no narcotics were found.

Because Ms. Young had a rifle when she came to the door at 2 a.m. Friday, Grimm initially said she might be charged with assault with a deadly weapon. The rifle was found to be unloaded, and Saturday, department spokesman John Radeleff said, "I don't believe she'll be charged."

Ms. Young shares the home with her mother and other family members. They said she picked up the rifle because she had no idea who was outside and was afraid.

When Armstrong, a 7½-year department veteran, saw the rifle, he fired his .38-caliber service revolver three times, hitting Ms. Young once in the abdomen and once in the chest, according to Grimm.

After the male fetus was pronounced dead in the womb and removed by Caesarean section, an X-ray showed a bullet in its head, said Dr. Rao Daluvoy.

Sheriff's homicide investigators questioned Armstrong and three other deputies but "their stories didn't coincide," Grimm said.

The three deputies with Armstrong apparently were "in on the ruse" and were relieved of duty but would not be charged, he said.

Armstrong was released Friday night on his own recognizance and probably will be arraigned Monday, said Radeleff.

"The motive (for the shooting) was apparently self-defense, because of the rifle," said Grimm. "But Deputy Armstrong's actions set in motion a series of events ending in tragedy."

Verlean Williams, Ms. Young's mother, said she was awakened in the bedroom by "some knocking on the door real loud."

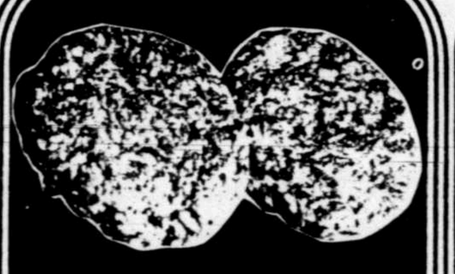

Getting up, Ms. Williams heard her daughter "ask a couple of times, 'Who is it?'

"I didn't hear anybody answer," Ms. Williams said. "They came in — two policemen," Ms. Williams said. "I guess she (Ms. Young) opened the door."

"When she opened the door, they pushed in," said Ms. Young's brother Mark, adding that the first shot missed his sister.

People pray for infant

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — About 80 people offered prayers at a rally Saturday for a severely retarded infant who was allowed to die and protested the system of government that allowed it to happen.

Carrying signs with slogans such as "Judges Play God" and "Babies Are People Too," adults and children braved a chilly wind and occasional drizzle while listening to the speakers.

The Rev. Greg Dixon, pastor of the Indianapolis Baptist Temple and national secretary of Moral Majority, said the courts have "set a dangerously new precedent in legalizing genocide" in the Bloomington case.

State Sen. James R. Butcher, R-Kokomo, called the death of the one-week-old baby "infanticide" and promised to introduce legislation that would prevent similar occurences.

THE SEVERELY retarded child died Thursday night after living less than a week while a legal fight to save him was about to reach the U.S. Supreme Court.

The infant was born, April 9 with Down's Syndrome, also known as Mongolism, which causes mental retardation and physical defects.

The child had a defect of the esophagus that prevented food from reaching his stomach. The parents, whose names were not released, ordered feeding by other means withheld, and the Indiana Supreme Court and two other courts upheld their decision.

Butcher linked the court decision to "the new religion of secular humanism" and what he said was a resulting "devaluation of the sanicty of life.

"What really bothers me is what would happen if a child is born with one arm," Butcher said. "At what point is a child less than perfect and allowed to die?"

THE PRAYER rally was planned Friday, said Kathy Nikou of Whiteland, chairman of the Indiana Committee for the Preservation of the Family.

The Central Indiana Christian Action Council called for an investigation of the hospital and the judges who ruled that the child should not be treated to be kept alive.

The organization issued a statement urging pressure be put on the medical community "to be the preservers of life they are supposed to be instead of the agents of death."

Prosecutors in Monroe County are looking into whether to press charges in the case.

But the attorney for the parents, Andrew Mallor, has said he doesn't believe a criminal accusation is possible.

MALLOR SAID three courts ruled the parents were within their rights to deny medical care for the baby.

Hawaiian protests military practice of shelling island

HONOLULU (AP) — A military exercise that called for shelling the island of Kahoolawe was scheduled Saturday, despite the efforts of a 67-year-old Hawaiian who reportedly paddled there on a surfboard to try to save relics of his ancestors.

Five years ago, the man's son was lost at sea in a similar protest.

"Our people will continue to look, but without a confirmed sighting, the schedule will remain as previously set up," said Navy Lt. Cmdr. Roger Copeland.

The Navy, which searched Kahoolawe on Friday and Saturday for Harry Kunihi Mitchell, refused to confirm statements by other members of a group called Protect Kahoolawe Ohana that the first practice bombing there was planned for Saturday. Ohana means family.

Copeland said the 300 Navy personnel on Kahoolawe were told to watch for Mitchell, who Ohana members said made the seven-mile crossing from Maui to the target island Friday.

Kahoolawe has many archaeological sites and has been placed on the National Register of Historic Places.

"I'll be there when they start bombing," Mitchell said in a statement issued Friday, "so the world will know how we, the Hawaiian Kingdom, have suffered under American rule."

The statement was released by Puanani Burgess, a spokesman for the Ohana, which Mitchell helped found.

Burgess said Mitchell decided to use a modified surfboard to reach Kahoolawe after the Ohana lost a federal court battle to block the annual war games and limit the shelling.

Participating in the Pacific military exercises are the United States, Canada, Japan, Australia and New Zealand.

Coast Guard Lt. Gary Dahmen said Saturday that the Coast Guard "confirmed Mitchell is on dry land and safe." They don't know whether he is on Kahoolawe or Maui, Dahmen said.

Maui police said they were unable to find Mitchell.

Their bodies were never found.

Kahoolawe has been used for bombing practice since 1945.

Reagan: U.S. must build up defenses

By TOM SEPPY

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Saturday the United States must build up its military defenses to seek agreement with the Soviet Union on reducing their stockpiles of strategic nuclear weapons and end "this threat of doomsday which hangs over the world."

In his third, weekly radio address to the nation, broadcast Saturday from his mountaintop retreat at Camp David, Md., Reagan said he welcomed the concern of those opposed to a buildup of nuclear weapons.

"Those who have governed America throughout the nuclear age and we who govern today have had to recognize that a nuclear war cannot be won and should never be fought," he said. "So, to those who protest nuclear war, I can only say, 'I'm with you'."

However, the president said the Soviet Union engaged in an unprecedented buildup of its conventional and nuclear forces during a period of the 1970s when the United States unilaterally restrained its own military defenses, thus altering the balance of power.

"IF STEPS are not taken to modernize our defenses, the United States will progressively lose the ability to deter the Soviet Union from employing force and threats of force against us and against our allies," Reagan said in a five minute address broadcast live to the nation.

"It would be wonderful if we could restore our balance with the Soviet Union without increasing our own military power. And, ideally, it would be a long step in ensuring peace if we could have significant and verifiable reductions of arms on both sides," he said.

"But let's not fool ourselves. The Soviet Union will not come to any conference table bearing gifts. Soviet negotiators will not make unilateral concessions. To achieve parity, we must make it plain that we have the will to achieve parity by our own effort."

Reagan said he would favor a nuclear freeze, as demanded by a growing number of state legislatures and communities across the country, if the United States and the Soviet Union were equal in nuclear ability. But, he said, they are not.

"We cannot accept any agreement that perpetuates current disparities," he said. "The current level of nuclear forces is too high on both sides."

He said the goal of any arms control negotiations should be to reduce the number of nuclear weapons. He said the Soviet has rejected bids by the United States on many occasions since World War II to join in reducing the number of nuclear weapons.

REAGAN SAID the United States is preparing a new position on reducing strategic nuclear forces.

"We will make every effort to reach an agreement to reduce the possibility of nuclear war," he said. "I invite the Soviet Union to take such a step with us."

Before Saturday's broadcast, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan chose from among two or three subjects he had in mind for his third live radio address to the nation. Reagan's choice was not known until he began speaking at midday.

Reagan's first address, on April 3, dealt with the economy. He interrupted his vacation on the Caribbean island of Barbados last weekend to speak in defense of cutbacks in college student loan guarantees.

Boston traffic resumes

BOSTON (AP) — Service resumed Saturday on the city's bus, subway and trolley lines as officials considered taking disciplinary action against some members of the Carmen's Union who participated in a one-day wildcat strike.

"Everything out there is running," Police Lt. Robert Cochrane said Saturday morning from a police station. "We could see the buses moving from here."

Members of the National Guard were sent home after patrolling empty transit stations during Friday's strike, which began when the 3,200 members of the union walked off the job without warning to protest the use of part-time drivers.

The strike was the carmen's first walkout in four years and broke off negotiations between management and the union, which has been without a contract for 16 months. After a late-night session Thursday, the union had assured the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority that there would be no strike, transit officials said Friday.

Paul DiNatale, an MBTA spokesman, said negotiations between union and management resumed Saturday. He also said the MBTA "is in the process of studying possible disciplinary measures against some members of the union."

"There has been some discussion of suspensions or possible firings," he said. "But it will have to be taken on a case-by-case approach."

Gov. Edward J. King described the strike, which stranded some 300,000 commuters, as "illegal...truly an outrageous action," and instructed MBTA management to seek $1 million in damages to cover costs of the walkout.

Commuters drove, walked, bicycled and, in a few cases, roller skated Friday in the mild weather, jamming city streets. To ease the bottleneck, state government and many businesses sent workers home early. The transit system arranged for private bus lines to add extra runs.

The MBTA sought a restraining order from Superior Court Judge Joseph Ford, who cited union officials Richard Guiney, John S. Weber and Paul Connolly for contempt of court for violating an earlier order prohibiting job actions.

The three men reportedly called the strike, the MBTA said, but union President John J. Gallahue said there was no official strike vote.

"It was a tense situation that just boiled over," Gallahue said.

The officials were headed for jail, but the arrest order was dropped when Gallahue issued a statement urging employees to return to work.

Group lets families of murder victims vent feelings

By EILEEN PUTMAN

SCARSDALE, N.Y. (AP) — John McHale's daughter was strangled and dumped in a garbage heap. He will never forget that day, or his anger, or that the killer was never caught.

The body of Maurice Moriarty's 24-year-old son David was found beside a highway on Good Friday last year. The Mamaroneck, N.Y., family marked this Easter quietly, awaiting trial of his alleged killers.

For Joan Garland, it's been five years since she found her 20-year-old daughter Bonnie bludgeoned to death by a jealous boyfriend. But the pain is fresh.

Murder took a life from each family, and the survivors say they are victims too. They meet to share their anger and loss, to talk of things others don't want to hear.

"You find out very quickly that people feel uncomfortable," said Mrs. Garland, who lives in Scarsdale, N.Y. "You can drive all the people away by talking about it. This is one place where people can take listening."

"A lot of people out there could care less who's murdered as long as they're OK," said Moriarty.

And Ken McHale, brother of the slain Eileen McHale, said, "People act like they're afraid to bring it up because it'll remind you. They think you've forgotten it."

For help, all three families turn to Families of Murder Victims, a group of some 15 people who meet regularly in this New York City suburb. At the meetings, survivors learn to rebuild their lives by first expressing their feelings.

"We're full of hatred and we're full of love," John McHale said at a recent meeting.

"You just get so sick to your stomach. You're broken-hearted, plus the anger," said Moriarty, a burly maintenance supervisor from Tarrytown, N.Y. "You're inclined to lash out at the first person who oversteps his boundaries.

"My wife wouldn't come tonight," he said. "She's very depressed. I'm here to get the steam out of me. I feel good when I talk. We don't talk about it at home."

The McHales have no target for their anger, because police don't know who killed 21-year-old Eileen in September 1980 and left her body in a garbage-strewn lot in the Bronx.

"In the beginning, we came just to vent our feelings. As bizarre and horrible as our personal tragedy was, there was a feeling of you didn't have a tragedy when you heard the other person's tragedy," said Ken McHale.

"You're entitled to lay your guts on the floor because you've been through the mill," said John McHale. "No one is going to say you're wrong."

The survivors' anger spills over to the police and others they say treat them callously.

The McHales, for example, were asked to look for Eileen's killer among mourners because police suspected she knew her attacker and might have injured him in a struggle.

"So when we shook hands we had to look and see if there were any scrapes on them. Everyone we shook hands with was a potential suspect," said Ken McHale.

Moriarty is angry because a newspaper published a former employer's allegation that his son was involved with drugs. And he said police told him he likely won't be told when the two men accused of bludgeoning his son to death come to trial, because "you're not involved."

The Garlands weren't allowed to attend the trial of their daughter's killer, and prosecutors told them not to talk about the case for fear of jeopardizing it. The boyfriend was convicted of manslaughter.

The families' group began meeting in December and is a spinoff of a non-profit organization the Garlands created with state aid to provide referral and other services to crime victims.

New York and some other states pay compensation to crime victims, sometimes from funds created by fining criminals. But such fines can be difficult to collect.

Legislation pending in New York would require judges to base sentences on the impact of the crime on a victim. The state would also be required to provide occupation rehabilitation for disabled crime victims.

"If criminals are entitled to rehabilitation, certainly the crime victims are," Mrs. Garland said. "But look at television, the cops and robbers shows. Criminals are always underdogs and they're always innocent. The victim is a non-person."

Moriarty said he feels Families of Murder Victims is useless unless it expands and uses members' anger to help others.

"The thing to me is, what about the family next door who it's going to happen to next? What can we do to help them?" he said. "...They need to know there's help for them now."

> "In the beginning, we came just to vent our feelings. As bizarre and horrible as our personal tragedy was, there was a feeling of you didn't have a tragedy when you heard the other person's tragedy...

Murderer wins award for letter

DENVER (AP) — A 44-year-old inmate convicted of shooting two policemen and killing a father of four will receive a Freedoms Foundation award for an angry letter about the seizure of U.S. hostages in Iran.

The foundation, based in Valley Forge, Pa., annually honors individuals who by their words or deeds exemplify the American way of life.

Nancy De Lauro, the awards chairman for the Denver chapter of the foundation, said she knew about Hayward Lawson's record. But she said his letter to the editor of the Denver Post stood out from the hundreds of items written after the release of the hostages.

Lawson's letter, published Feb. 7, 1981, expressed anger at Iran for holding the hostages.

"When our flag was burned and a third-rate nation raised clenched fists against our president, my anger rose. When the United States was called 'the great Satan,' I wanted to scream out, 'You dirty bastards — I'm buried in prison here in the United States and I wouldn't trade my fate with the very best of your lot!'"

Lawson is serving a term of 25 years to 40 years at the Colorado State Penitentiary for shooting two Wheat Ridge policemen during a burglary attempt and stealing a woman's car at gunpoint during the getaway in September 1973.

When that term is up, he will start a life sentence for bursting through the door of a Lakewood home during a robbery attempt in January 1973 and shooting to death a father of four before escaping with about $10.

His trouble with the law began when he was a teenager and includes numerous burglary arrests and a jail escape from Missouri.

Ruth Schilgen, a foundation spokeswoman, said she was not aware of Lawson's murder conviction, but that she knew he was "a serious criminal."

"We were a little nervous about awarding a prisoner," she said. "Our jury awarded it to him, but we were not going to make any news about it. We were going to give it to him quietly."

"When the jury is judging something, they look for the quality of it," said Ms. De Lauro. "They don't care if he's in prison, and it shouldn't make any difference."

Lawson won't be able to join other Colorado recipients, including Gov. Richard Lamm, in attending the awards dinner Wednesday. A high school teacher who has become acquainted with Lawson will accept the award for him, said Ms. De Lauro.

Bay of Pigs commando ordained

MIAMI (AP) — A man who stormed the beaches of Cuba along with 1,400 other commandos at the Bay of Pigs became the first black priest ever ordained by the Catholic Archdiocese of Miami on Saturday, the 21st anniversary of the ill-fated invasion.

Sergio Carrillo, 48, was one of the CIA-trained commandos captured when Cubans trained in the United States invaded their homeland to overthrow Fidel Castro but were repulsed. President John F. Kennedy publicly took responsibility for the Bay of Pigs incident.

The Cuban-born Carrillo, a veteran of the failed Brigade 2506, said the two days — Saturday and that day 21 years ago — "are two days I could never erase from my life."

Carrillo said devotion to the Catholic faith and patriotic fervor have guided his life for as long as he can remember.

"At the time of the invasion, I had a civil responsibility. At that moment, I was a soldier. Now, I serve God," he said.

Carrillo, a slightly built man with specks of gray in his hair, traced his revolutionary activity to the 1950s era of Fulgencio Batista. Carrillo belonged to an anti-Batista student group in Havana.

During the first year of Castro's regime, Carrillo taught agrarian reform to people in the mountains, but met with resistance from men sent by Castro to teach communal agriculture.

The government eventually issued a warrant for Carrillo's arrest. But he took advantage of the confusion in the early days of the communist revolution, obtained a passport and fled to Miami in 1960.

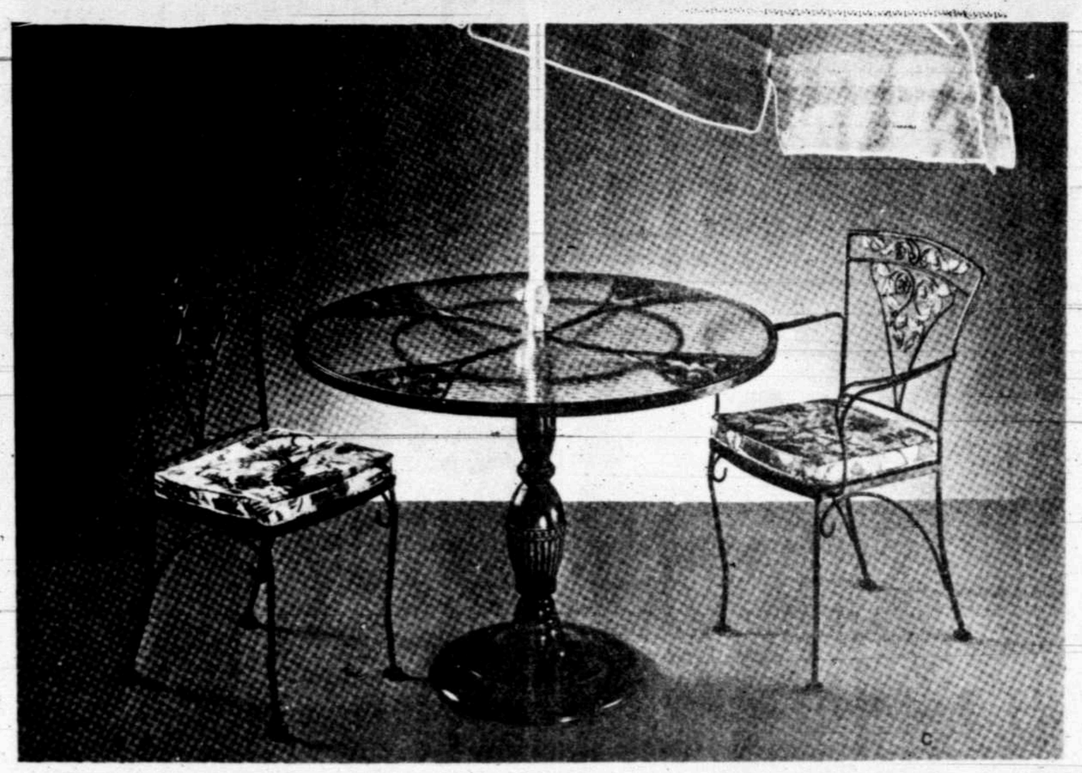

"I came with the idea and the contacts to join the movement to liberate Cuba springing up in Miami," Carrillo said.

The Cuban exiles in the movement called themselves Brigade 2506, he said. Exiles working for the CIA recruited and sent the Cubans to be trained at a camp in Guatemala.

Carrillo was in charge of a 12-man mortar squad and graduated as a paratrooper.

He was among 1,300 men captured in the three-day battle at Giron Beach in April 1961. He served 20 months in the Havana prison Castillo del Principe and was released after negotiations between Castro and Kennedy.

Former judge not to be disbarred

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A former state appellate judge should not be disbarred or disciplined because of the marijuana conviction that forced his resignation from the bench, the Bar of California says.

The State Bar Court Review Department voted last week to drop an investigation of Paul Halvonik. The state Supreme Court generally follows such recommendations.

The high court had asked the state bar to decide whether Halvonik, 43, was guilty of moral turpitude. A review committee later decided he "did not willingly participate in or condone" the growing of marijuana at his home.

Halvonik and his wife, now practicing law together in Berkeley, were arrested in 1979 after police spotted marijuana plants while investigating a burglary report.

PLO spokeswoman to speak at Harvard

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The American Indian Law School Association at Harvard has invited a Palestine Liberation Organization spokeswoman to a conference this week, sparking protests by Jews.

It would be the first speech by a PLO representative at the university, according to The Harvard Crimson, the student newspaper.

Deena Abu-Loghod, information coordinator for the PLO mission to the United Nations, was asked to take part in the Indian group's conference on indigenous people's rights.

The Harvard Jewish Law Students Association has urged Jewish alumni to protest the speech, said association secretary Denise J. Karlan. She said Ms. Abu-Loghod "has a reputation for hooking into these types of conferences and using them as a forum for PLO views against Israel."

Cookie-selling Girl Scouts to be escorted

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — The abduction and rape of an 8-year-old girl selling Girl Scout cookies has prompted Eagle scouts and older Boy Scouts to volunteer their help as escorts.

Steve Lalonde, a Boy Scout spokesman, said Girl Scout officials were notified of the boys' willingness to accompany girls on cookie sales after the April 3 assault on a Brownie scout as she sold cookies at a convenience store.

No arrests have been made. Cookie sales end Monday.

"Sales have not been going well because parents are reluctant to let their children go out on the streets," said Allison Douthitt of the Girl Scout Council.

Minister claims civil rights violated

KANSAS CITY, Kan. (AP) — A black minister has filed a $40 million damage suit claiming his civil rights were violated because he was jailed while police investigated what turned out to be a phony plot to kill a dozen Fort Scott leaders.

The Rev. Earis B. Hopkins of the Shilo Baptist Church in Fort Scott said in the suit filed in U.S. District Court on Thursday that he was held for three hours, and was not allowed to call a lawyer. He was not charged.

Several Fort Scott residents were taken into custody last August after a jail inmate described a plot to kill city leaders. No charges were filed, and the inmate later acknowledged he lied to "rally" fellow blacks and warn a "handful of rich men."

City Attorney Bob Farmer declined comment on the lawsuit.

Undersheriff says he was illegally fired

MONROE, Mich. (AP) — A 27-year veteran of the Monroe County sheriff's department claims he was fired in violation of the state's "Whistle Blower's Protection Act" for investigating the department's No. 3 man.

Police say murder mystery may take long time to solve

By PAUL MOSES

NEW YORK (AP) — Four bodies, each shot in the back of the head. A bankrupt diamond corporation under federal investigation in an alleged $6 million fraud. A missing woman.

Those were the true-to-life components of a mystery that unfolded in New York last week, a mystery that came to public attention with the killings of three CBS technicians.

The veteran CBS employees — Leo Kuranuki, Robert Schulze and Edward Benford — were gunned down Monday about 6:15 p.m. on a rooftop parking lot overlooking the Hudson River docks. Police say one person — who they won't identify — managed to hide under a car, surviving to describe the slaughter.

As police tell it, the technicians chanced on the abduction of 38-year-old Margaret Barbera, who had been controller of Candor Diamond Corp. The killer asked the men, "What did you see?" pushed the woman into a white Volkswagen van, then hunted down and killed the three men.

Miss Barbera's body was found Tuesday in a lower Manhattan alley. It was disclosed she had pleaded guilty 18 days earlier to a federal conspiracy charge and had agreed to testify for the government in a grand jury inquiry of alleged fraud at the diamond company.

Who would want Miss Barbera dead?

She was "an innocuous little girl," said her attorney, James Coley. Frightened but strong-willed, he said she was "trying to do her best."

The U.S. Attorney's office refused to accept her into the federal witness protection program or to assign her an FBI guard, Coley says. U.S. Attorney John Martin denies it.

Was Miss Barbera's murder connected to the inquiry into fraud?

"There was nothing in my files to give me any reason it was not," Coley said in a telephone interview Friday.

Documents filed in U.S. District Court show Miss Barbera agreed to testify in an investigation of the diamond company's president, Irwin Margolies of Greenburgh. She admitted a role in sale of allegedly phony invoices for non-existent diamonds and jewelry to a financing company.

An attorney for the diamond company, Henry Oestereicher, testified in bankruptcy proceedings that Margolies told him last July that Miss Barbera demanded $100,000 to return diamonds she allegedly removed from the company. He said Margolies was angry and threatened to "kill her or break every bone in her body."

Margolies has repeatedly refused to discuss the case with reporters.

What does it all add up to?

Detectives from the Manhattan Midtown North Precinct say they're employing legwork, a traditional and effective tool, to solve the puzzle. But they say no one should expect a quick solution.

They're looking for the killer's van. They're interviewing friends of Miss Barbera, neighbors, anyone who might have been near the parking lot.

Roy Garcia, 32, is a former Tuscon, Ariz., policeman whose $3.6 million personal-injury award was instrumental in the city of South Tuscon's decision to seek financial reorganization. He has yet to receive any money from the 2-year-old judgment and he and his wife Susan don't know how long it will take.

Award owed former policeman breaks town

By ARTHUR H. ROTSTEIN

SOUTH TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — A crippled former policeman who won a $3.6 million award that is pushing this community into bankruptcy court says he used to receive public support, "but recently the emphasis seems to have been more with the troubles of South Tucson."

Roy Garcia sits in a wheelchair and wonders if this one-mile-square enclave of 6,500 residents will pay the money awarded him by a Pima County Superior Court jury.

Garcia's problems began more than three years ago when he helped the South Tucson police force arrest a barricaded gunman. He was shot in the back by a stray bullet fired by another officer, and his spinal cord was severed.

"I haven't seen a cent," the former Tucson policeman said in an interview Friday. "The jury made the award, I didn't. Two courts upheld it."

South Tucson, which had only $100,000 in liability insurance at the time of the 1978 shooting, appealed the decision to the state appellate and Supreme courts. It set no money aside toward paying the judgment and lost each appeal.

ON MONDAY, it will file a petition in U.S. Bankruptcy Court seeking financial reorganization under protection of federal bankruptcy law. City officials say that's the only way they can forestall paying the judgment, which, with interest, now totals more than $4 million.

The City Council voted 7-0 Friday to authorize bankruptcy specialist Lowell Rothschild to file a petition seeking the appointment of a trustee to work out a plan for paying creditors.

City officials say they wil be able to provide normal services for residents and called the reorganization effort a measure "to protect ourselves from our creditors and formulate a plan" to pay our debts.

South Tucson City Manager Richard Kaffenberger says he believes a settlement could have been reached but Garcia insists "they've never made any offer."

"The debt that they're trying to seek protection from, this judgment, is different than a debt that's incurred by a business," said his wife, Susan.

Meanwhile, Garcia stays home or spends several days a week volunteering at his children's school while his wife works at a local hospital. "It's sort of a role reversal," he said.

GARCIA'S MEDICAL bills have totaled about $200,000 so far and have been paid by worker's compensation through the city of Tucson. That coverage will end when he eventually receives money from South Tucson, and he cannot obtain medical insurance, he said.

Carter may participate in autonomy negotiations

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — Former President Carter says he may travel to the Middle East to join negotiations on Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, according to an interview in the today's joint editions of The Atlanta Journal and The Atlanta Constitution.

Carter also said he thought the Reagan Administration's failure to take a more active role in the Middle East has jeopardized the continuation of the Camp David peace process and has contributed to current tensions between Egypt and Israel.

Predicting Israel's scheduled withdrawal from the Sinai will take place "without a hitch" on April 25, Carter said he may become personally involved in the second phase of the peace process — the negotiations on Palestinian autonomy.

"I'll use my influence, whatever it is, to continue the process. Particularly in Egypt, and I think to a major degree in Israel. I'm still trusted," Carter said. "As a private citizen working in a proper way, I'll use my influence if a time of trouble comes."

The former president said his involvement, which may include several trips to the Middle East, "will not be governmental in nature."

When asked what role the United States will play after the transfer of the Sinai, Carter replied, "I'm presuming that your question refers to the Reagan-Haig administration. I don't know."

"Evidences of good faith and common understanding and ease of communication and so forth haven't been realized," he said. "And those things need to be implemented in their entirety, maybe before we can hope to have a final resolution of the West Bank, Palestinian-Israeli security question.

"Now there's a tension and an absence of trust and good will that existed when Begin and Sadat and I were embracing each other and clasping hands (after signing the Camp David accords in September 1978)," he said. "That time is gone — maybe not permanently."

After Israel withdraws from the Sinai, the next step in the framework for peace established in the Camp David accords would be negotiations for Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip, a phase that will be "traumatic for Israel," Carter said.

"The Israelis need all the support and reassurance that we can give them. And they also need to know that the next step is crucial."

Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau smiles as Queen Elizabeth II signs his country's constitutional proclamation in Ottawa Saturday. About 30,000 people came to witness the event.

Queen signs 'truly Canadian' constitution

OTTAWA (AP) — Elizabeth II, queen of Canada, proclaimed a new constitution Saturday in the largest and most diverse nation of her realm, saying the document is "truly Canadian at last."

About 30,000 people crowded between the gothic edifices of Parliament Hill to watch the British monarch sign the proclamation, ending a legal anachronism whereby all changes in the old constitution had to be made by Britain's Parliament.

Canada still accepts the English queen as sovereign, and she is represented by a governor-general appointed on the advice of the Canadian prime minister.

"It is one of the quirks of history that over a century should have passed before Canada obtained her own constitution, formulated by Canadians and approved by her own Parliament," she said.

"But the years have not been wasted and a great nation has grown up in this magnificent land."

As the queen spoke here, Quebec Premier Rene Levesque led about 12,000 marchers through Montreal, waving blue-and-white Quebec flags instead of the red Canadian Maple Leaf and shouting, "Non au Canada Bill."

The French separatist government in Quebec rejected the constitutional compromise and boycotted the Ottawa celebrations as part of its campaign for independence.

"Although we regret the absence of the premier of Quebec, it is right to associate the people of Quebec with this celebration because, without them, Canada would not be what it is today," Queen Elizabeth said.

She expressed pleasure that a new charter of rights and freedoms attached to the constitution explicitly protects the rights of women, the disabled and native peoples.

Until now, the Canadian constitution has been the British North America Act of 1867, although Canada became a fully independent member of the Commonwealth in 1931.

Although Britain was willing to transfer constitutional authority, Canadian politicians were unable until now to agree on procedures for making amendments and on the wording of a bill of rights.

Finally, last November, Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau struck a bargain with the premiers of the nine English-speaking provinces.

"For more than half a century, Canadians have resembled young adults who leave home to build a life of their own, but are not quite confident enough to take along all their belongings," Trudeau told the crowd at Saturday's ceremony.

"It is my deepest hope that Canada will match its new legal maturity with that degree of political maturity which will allow us all to make a total commitment to the Canadian ideal."

Queen Elizabeth presided over the ceremonies from a gilded throne, seated under a red-and-white canopy adorned with the royal crest. At her side sat her husband, Prince Philip.

Flags of Britain, Canada and the 10 Canadian provinces streamed in the wind from hundreds of poles and lampposts. The U.S. Embassy, directly across Wellington Street from the ceremony, flew the Canadian Maple Leaf for the first time along with the Stars and Stripes.

Afterward, the queen walked among her subjects under the shelter of an umbrella, stopping frequently to chat with the excited spectators, some of who threw her flowers.

"I think it's terrific," said one spectator, Diana Gatrill of Ottawa. "I hope my children remember that when they were 4 and 6, they came and saw the constitution proclaimed."

"It's nice to think we're our own boss," said C.S. Rutherford of Colborne, Ont., a 90-year-old World War I veteran who wore his Victoria Cross proudly on his chest.

Canadian rights bill resembles U.S.'

OTTAWA (AP) — Canada's new constitution replaces the British North America Act, which bound Britain's remaining North American colonies into a confederation in 1867.

Added to the old document are a formula for future amendments and a charter of rights and freedoms that resembles in some ways the U.S. Bill of Rights.

Until now, the Canadian Parliament had to submit a request to Britain whenever it wanted to amend its constitution — most recently to reform the old-age pension system in the 1960s.

The new constitution can be amended by vote of Canada's federal parliament and seven of the 10 provincial parliaments — providing that the seven provinces voting to amend include at least 50 percent of Canada's population.

The provinces that do not approve an amendment may then "opt out," rendering the change null within their borders. This provision raises fears that the Canadian constitution will become a bewildering patchwork, with only legal experts knowing which parts apply in which provinces.

The provinces can also decide that some provisions of the charter of rights and privileges simply do not apply within their boundaries.

The 34 sections protect such things as freedom of expression, freedom of religion, the right to be secure against unreasonable searches, the right to be presumed innocent until proven guilty, and the right to be free of racial, religious and ethnic discrimination. But all those rights could be overturned locally by a vote of a provincial legislature.

Queen Beatrix of the Netherlands and her husband, Prince Claus, arrive at the Patrick Henry airport in Newport News, Va. Saturday. The queen was to tour Williamsburg, Va. Saturday and spend the night in the colonial town. She is scheduled to address Congress Wednesday.

Stoessel says withdrawal should go as planned

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Deputy Secretary of State Walter J. Stoessel and Egypt's foreign minister expressed optimism Saturday that Israel will withdraw from the last of war-conquered Sinai as scheduled next Sunday.

"I continue to be confident — on the basis of my talks here and in Jerusalem — that the existing problems will be resolved satisfactorily and that the Israeli withdrawal from Sinai will take place as scheduled" April 25, Stoessel told reporters after meeting with Foreign Minister Kamal Hassan Aly.

Aly said in a statement on Cairo radio: "Israel's fears that Egypt may adopt a different policy toward it after April 25 are based on weak arguments and in fact are groundless."

"The relations with the Arabs will not be at the expense of peace with Israel," Aly said.

Neither Stoessel nor the Egyptians would disclose what their talks included, but they had been expected to discuss differences between Egypt and Israel over where their border will lie in certain spots.

"All problems will be resolved through negotiations," Aly said.

Israel has alleged that Egypt violated the U.S.-sponsored peace treaty by preparing facilities for more troops than allowed in Sinai and by allowing Sinai Bedouins to smuggle arms to Palestinians in the occupied Gaza Strip.

Egypt has denied the allegations.

Stoessel, who arrived here Friday from talks with Israeli leaders in Jerusalem, is to meet with President Hosni Mubarak on Sunday before returning to Jerusalem.

The Israeli government, beset by unrest among the 1.3 million Palestinians in the occupied lands and by domestic opposition to the Sinai withdrawal, has sought assurances that Mubarak will follow Anwar Sadat's peace policies.

Mubarak, chosen by Sadat as his successor, has been offering such assurances since a nationwide television address in which he announced Sadat's assassination Oct. 6.

But Mubarak's improved relations with other Arab countries have raised fears in Israel that Egypt will realign itself with the Arab camp.

Beatrix expected to speak mind

THE HAGUE, Netherlands (AP) — Queen Beatrix, on an official state visit to the United States this week, is a constitutional monarch who often speaks her mind in public. Government sources here say a joint session of the U.S. Congress will get a piece of it Wednesday.

Queen Beatrix, 44, also is known as a stickler for court protocol and respectability. Last month she gave a reception for municipal officials and told the married ones that spouses were welcome but that single ones were not to bring girlfriends or boyfriends.

She was scheduled for a tour of colonial Williamsburg, Va., after arrival in the states on Saturday.

In her address to Congress on Wednesday, she is expected to continue the Dutch tradition of queenly outspokenness begun by her grandmother, Queen Wilhelmina, who broadcast resistance pep talks from London to the Nazi-occupied Netherlands during World War II.

A government source close to Queen Beatrix said she would bring up "serious" issues during her 18-minute address, including "differences of opinion" in the 200-year-old U.S.-Dutch alliance.

In an interview published last week in the weekly Elseviers Magazine, Queen Beatrix was quoted as saying that "a genuine fear of war and the threat of a nuclear holocaust in Europe" has caused strains within the Western alliance.

"Europe is striving for a more independent position in the world," the queen said. "At the same time we are trying to create political unity within Europe itself, which will be a long and difficult process, adding to a more critical attitude towards the United States."

The queen's week-long tour, although draped in the ceremony of the U.S.-Dutch alliance bicentennial, is intended primarily as a visit to the Netherlands' No. 1 strategic ally, the government source said.

Although her speech was written by officials in the center-left government of Premier Andries van Agt, Queen Beatrix had substantial input, according to the source, who asked not to be identified.

Her congressional address comes at a time when tensions have surfaced between the two economic and strategic allies over such issues as U.S. policy in El Salvador and nuclear rearmament in Western Europe.

The queen's tendency to say what she thinks threatens a replay of the last time a Dutch monarch spoke to a joint session of Congress.

Her mother, Queen Juliana, raised eyebrows in 1952 by criticizing the U.S. role in the Cold War with the Soviet Union.

Queen Beatrix's regal style and tendency to "call them as she sees them" has at times alienated the Dutch, but has also evoked their admiration.

Her marriage to Claus van Amsberg, a former World War II German soldier and West German diplomat, was accompanied by riots in this nation where the wartime Nazi occupation is an ever-present memory.

During their visit last month to West Germany, Queen Beatrix said publicly that the Netherlands will never forget the wounds it suffered at the hands of Nazi Germany during World War II.

Squatters in this housing-scarce nation rioted over the cost of her 1980 coronation, reported by Dutch newspapers to have cost about 25 million guilders ($10 million).

Her renovations of royal residences, reported to cost about $40 million, further provoked activists.

Sinai withdrawal 'no longer in doubt'

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Senior Israeli officials said Saturday that Egypt has rectified peace-treaty "violations" and Israel's final withdrawal from the Sinai on April 25 "is no longer in doubt."

The officials, who declined to be identified, said Egypt had withdrawn military units and installations that Israel had claimed were not permitted in the limited-forces area of the eastern Sinai mapped out in the 1979 peace treaty.

Israel Television said an American U-2 reconnaissance plane would photograph the area Sunday and turn the pictures over to Israel and Egypt.

The officials said that on the eve of the last scheduled Cabinet meeting before the withdrawal, most ministers were confident the alleged violations were being corrected and the final withdrawal would take place on deadline.

They said Prime Minister Menachem Begin had concluded that the dispute over a small patch of territory at the southern tip of the future Egyptian-Israeli border was "technical, not political," and would be solved.

Ferry capsizes

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A 20-foot ferry carrying four times the passengers it was allowed capsized in a canal Saturday and all 60 people aboard were feared drowned, police said.

They said the ferry was carrying laborors from an iron-rod factory to their homes across the Ismailia Canal, six miles northeast of Cairo. They said the boat was allowed to carry only 15 passengers.

Brezhnev suggests alternate summit meeting time, place

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev on Saturday rejected President Reagan's offer to meet in New York during a special U.N. session in June, saying a superpower summit should not be incidental to another forum. He proposed they meet instead in a neutral country in the fall.

At the White House, communications director David Gergen said, "We do not interpret his (Brezhnev's) remarks as a rejection of the president's expressed hopes that President Brezhnev would come to New York in June and meet with him" during a special U.N. session on arms reduction.

He said Brezhnev's remarks would be studied but Reagan "remains hopeful that President Brezhnev will come to the United Nations this June and meet with him then."

Brezhnev mentioned Finland and Switzerland, two neutral European countries, as possible sites, and suggested October as a possible time, according to the official news agency Tass, which announced Brezhnev's response.

Brezhnev's remarks were made in response to a question by the Communist Party newspaper Pravda and distributed, in advance, by Tass.

It was the 75-year-old Brezhnev's first major statement since he disappeared from public view March 25 after a four-day visit to Soviet Central Asia.

Brezhnev later was reported by unofficial Soviet sources to have been hospitalized and then released. He was variously said to be suffering from exhaustion, a heart ailment or a stroke, but the Soviet Foreign Ministry said he was on a regular winter rest.

His statement Saturday simultaneously answered Reagan's proposal and indicated that he considers himself in good enough health to meet the American six months from now.

Reagan had told reporters in Washington April 5 that he would address a U.N. disarmament conference in New York in June, and suggested that Brezhnev do the same.

Asked if he would like to meet with Brezhnev after the U.N. arms control sessions, Reagan said then: "Naturally, a head of state is here in our own country. I would very much think that he and I would have a meeting."

However, Brezhnev told Pravda that Reagan's offer had "left rather a vague impression" on him and said he thought the meeting had a better chance of success if it was not held in conjunction with other international forums.

"It is understandable that a meeting between the president of the United States and myself must be well-prepared and held in a solid way, not incidentally in connection with this or that international forum," Brezhnev said.

Rescue satellite planned

MOSCOW (AP) — The United States, Canada and France are joining the Soviet Union in a multi-million-dollar joint satellite project to help find plane crash survivors and people lost at sea.

Planners, who met here last week, say hundreds of lives could be saved every year once the system is operational. The first satellite is to be launched this summer.

A Western expert said the system will enable monitors to pinpoint almost instantaneously the location of a downed plane or a disabled ship, instead of spending hours searching for it.

"THE new system should take the 'search' out of search-and-rescue," he said.

According to the Soviet press, 350 to 400 large ships sink every year on world sea lanes, including some that simply disappear with their crews without a trace.

The project is expected to go ahead as planned, despite major political disagreements that have led to a cutback in scientific exchanges between the United States and the Soviet Union. Organizers from the four countries, including a 19-member U.S. delegation, said their talks had gone well.

The Soviet Union is scheduled to send its first rescue satellite into orbit in July, and a U.S. satellite, with French and Canadian equipment on board, is expected to be launched early in 1983. A 15-month test period is anticipated, but an expert said, the satellites could play a part in saving lives as soon as they go into orbit and ground stations are working.

The head of the American delegation, Tom McGunigal of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, said the United States had allocated $29 million for the first phase of the project; France set aside $22 million; and Canada about $13 million.

THE HEAD of the Soviet delegation, Yuri Zurabov, declined to specify how much the Soviets had spent when asked by a Western correspondent.

The two satellites, designed separately, will be able to operate effectively together, planners say, even though Americans involved in the work say no exchange of technology was involved.

The satellites are to be equipped with special receivers and sent into a low orbit, where they will be able to "listen" for distress transmissions from ships and planes equipped with radio beacons. Such radio beacons are already mandatory in all large American vessels and all U.S. planes

Some critics of U.S.-Soviet cooperation have charged that the Soviet Union has used technology provided by the United States to develop new weapons systems which the United States has had to match at great expense later.

IT IS also continuing despite a slowing of joint U.S.-Soviet scientific work following the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan in December 1979, the banishment of dissident leader Andrei Sakharov in January 1980, and the declaration of martial law in Poland four months ago.

Following the martial law decree, President Reagan announced that the United States would not extend U.S.-Soviet agreements covering space, energy and science and technology. The three agreements expire by July.

Gandhi plans to visit U.S. in July

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will visit the United States in July at the invitation of President Reagan, she told reporters Saturday. The U.S. Embassy confirmed the visit and said a date would be fixed later.

Chinaman sentenced to death

PEKING (AP) — A Chinese man was sentenced to death Saturday for killing a fellow passenger after an argument over smoking on a bus, the Peking Evening News reported.

The paper said Chang Chien-li and Chen Ta-yu cursed the bus conductor when asked to stop smoking March 25. When Chen got off, another passenger tried to reason with him but then Chang got off and stabbed the passenger.

First German test-tube baby born

ERLANGEN, West Germany (AP) — A 27-year-old woman has given birth to West Germany's first test-tube baby, the Erlangen University obstetric clinic reported Saturday.

The baby, a 9-pound, 13-ounce boy, was delivered Friday and is doing well, the clinic said. The baby's parents were identified by only by their first names and last initial — Sandra and Peter W.

The world's first test-tube baby, Louise Brown, was born in Britain in 1978. The procedure involves taking an egg from the mother, fertilizing it and then reimplanting it in the mother's womb.

Separated twins reported well

PEKING (AP) — Twin girls who had been joined from the breastbone to the navel were reported doing well Saturday, three days after doctors surgically separated them, according to the official Xinhua news agency.

It said the two were born March 2 to a 25-year-old Shanghai area woman.

Khadafy planning visit to Greece

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khadafy will make an official visit to Greece from April 30 to May 2, a government spokesman said Saturday.

The spokesman said Khadafy will be the guest of President Constantine Caramanlis. He will also have talks with Socialist Premier Andreas Papandreou.

It will be Khadafy's second oficial visit to a European country this year. In March he went to Austria.

Police arrest bombing suspects

BOLOGNA, Italy (AP) — Police arrested four suspects in connection with the August 1980 terrorist bombing that killed 85 people at the Bologna railroad station, judicial sources reported Saturday.

Italian newspaper reports said the four belonged to right-wing extremist groups and were picked up Friday in raids in Rome, Milan and Bologna.

Commission gives refugee figures

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — The United Nations High Commission for Refugees said Saturday that 4,424 Vietnamese boat people arrived at East Asian and Southeast Asian ports last month.

The agency also said 8,050 refugees were resettled in March, and that the caseload for the region dropped from 223,108 at the end of February to 221,124 in March.

Control tower fire reported minor

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A short-circuit caused a fire in the control tower at Cairo's airport Saturday, but officials said air traffic was not affected.

The officials said the fire, in the power plant area of the tower, was "put out within an hour."

France reports jet sale to India

PARIS (AP) — The Defense Ministry announced Saturday that a letter of intent has been signed between France and India for the sale of 40 Mirage 2000 jet fighters.

The $794 million sale agreement calls for the aircraft to be built in India.

Negotiations for the aircraft sale had been going on since an Indian military mission visited Paris in October. The letter of intent, the ministry said, was signed April 8 in Paris. The statement by the Defense Ministry said the Mirage sale was the first stage of a program of Franco-Indian industrial cooperation.

Two rioters killed in India

NEW DELHI, India (AP) — Police shot and killed two rioters and wounded two others Saturday after a politically ambitious movie star whipped up a crowd with a speech on language rights, authorities said.

The rioting erupted in Bangalore and spread to the town of Chitradurga, where the deaths occurred. Both cities are in Karnataka state.

The violence flared after film idol Raj Kumar told a rally that the Kannada language should be used in all classes in Karnataka, and that he was ready to die to make the government accept the demand.

Some schools in the state now teach subjects in English and some in Hindi, although the majority of instruction is in Kannada.

Officials positive about reaction

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration does not expect China to withdraw its ambassador or downgrade relations with the United States to retaliate for the sale of $60 million in U.S. military spare parts to Taiwan.

"They have issued a strong protest and made it public, and we think that is all they are going to do," said one knowlegeable official who asked not to be identified.

The source said the nature of the Chinese protest indicates that reports that China would bring home its ambassador and reduce the level of relations with the United States are "obviously not correct."

And he said the United States believes the reasons that impelled the Chinese to accept closer relations with the United States still exist and likely will stand in the way of any early or serious downgrading of relations.

East-West strategic considerations, including a possible threat from the Soviet Union, have been at the center of the developing U.S.-Chinese relations.

Sources on Capitol Hill say they have been informed that the Chinese ambassador, Chai Zemin, likely will return to his homeland soon. They note that Chai has been in his present post for four years and that a rotation of ambassadors has been expected for some time.

There is no indication that Chai's departure is in any way linked to the decision to sell Taiwan the spare parts it needs to maintain its aircraft and other systems, the congressional and administration sources say.

Congress has 30 days to act on the administration's request to sell the spare parts to Taiwan. It will be approved unless both houses of Congress reject it.

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio., said last week that Congress is unlikely to override the decision to sell the spare parts. But he said future weapons sales might face stronger opposition.

China said Wednesday that it objects to the spare parts sale as a matter of principle and "an infringement on China's sovereignty." It restated China's claim to Taiwan as an integral part of Chinese national territory.

However, the official Chinese news service, in a relatively mild statement, cited the American assurance last December that the sale does not involve weapons and that the sales decision was made before President Reagan met with Chinese leaders in Cancun, Mexico last October.

And it noted that the United States has promised not to sell any weapons to Taiwan while US-Chinese talks on the issue continue in Peking.

The Chinese government, the news agency reported, has taken the attitude "of not allowing such a thing to be repeated again and seeing how the other side behaves."

The current sale involves spare parts and other supplies for U.S.-designed aircraft that have been in Taiwan's inventory for many years.

U.S. officials maintain that Taiwan has a legitimate need for the spare parts and that providing them is consistent with the Taiwan Relations Act of 1979.

However, the Peking government maintains that such sales are inconsistent with the U.S. decision in 1979 to recognize Peking as the rightful government of all of China, including Taiwan, and to sever diplomatic relations with Taiwan's Nationalist Chinese regime. The United States has maintained "unofficial" ties to Taiwan since that time.

Peking views the issue as a test of U.S.-Chinese relations and as interference in internal Chinese affairs.

The issue is complicated by domestic politics in the United States.

The Reagan administration and many congressional conservatives contend that the Taiwan Relations Act compels the United States to help Taiwan maintain "a sufficient self-defense capacity."

DON HARVEY, REALTORS

ARE PRICES DROPPING?

Your house is on the market for two months and you have no buyers. You decide to drop your asking price $5,000 and out of the blue comes one good prospect after another. Does this mean that real estate prices are dropping? The answer is no!

The market value of homes in most communities is not dropping. But ASKING prices are dropping because buyers today will not pay outragiously high home prices and high mortgage rates.

If a home doesn't sell today it is usually because: (1) the asking price is far above the market value or (2) the seller is demanding a huge down payment and refuses to help finance the buyer's purchase.

There is a huge buyer demand for affordable houses in most communities. Prices are not dropping. The seller who asks for a price many thousands of dollars over the true value is actually doing a disservice to himself. Bonafide prospects won't even bother to look at the house. They'll pass it up for another which is priced more realistically.

Thatcher returns to London to talk

LONDON (AP) — Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher cut short a weekend in the country late Saturday to return to her office in London for talks with key ministers on the Falklands crisis.

Spokesmen said Mrs. Thatcher's return did not signify new developments as U.S. Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. continued his efforts in Buenos Aires to find a peaceful solution to the dispute that erupted April 2 when Argentine forces seized the Falklands.

Mrs. Thatcher went to her official residence at No. 10 Downing Street for a meeting with Foreign Secretary Francis Pym and Home Secretary William Whitelaw. One spokesman described the conference as "stock-taking."

Government sources said the indications late Saturday were that Haig will not be flying directly to London from Buenos Aires as originally expected here but will go to Washington first.

The Defense Ministry, meanwhile, said Argentine warships are keeping clear of the British-declared war zone around the Falklands.

Mrs. Thatcher had spent the day at Chequers, the country residence of British prime ministers 30 miles northwest of London. Officials said she had time for a walk and kept up with information on the Falklands and "other business that goes with being the prime minister."

The British Broadcasting Corp. said Saturday that the United States is pressing for United Nations or other third-party administration of the Falklands, with a continuing Argentine presence and the return of expelled British officials, as a temporary measure.

BBC said the key issue appeared to be sovereignty over the islands, 250 miles off Argentina's southeastern coast and 8,000 miles from here, and ruled by Britain for 149 years.

The Defense Ministry said so far no Argentine warship had breached the 200-mile war zone Britain declared around the South Atlantic islands.

"We're absolutely firm on that one," said a Defense Ministry spokesman, who asked not to be identified.

"I'm not releasing details of Argentine vessels' positions. But none is in the zone...and knowing Britain's resolve and capabilities, we very much doubt they will make an effort to breach the zone," the spokesman told The Associated Press.

Britain imposed the blockade zone last Monday. It is thought to have four nuclear-powered, hunter-killer submarines in the zone, with the lead vessels of a powerful British armada about a week away.

The Defense Ministry declined comment on whether it based its certainty that Argentine vessels were not in the blockade zone on U.S. intelligence reports.

But U.S. officials denied reports that the United States was giving Argentina intelligence on the approach of the British fleet toward the South Atlantic colony, even though other kinds of intelligence were supplied in keeping with U.S. efforts to remain even-handed.

The U.S. Embassy in London said the United States was not giving Argentina satellite intelligence. In Washington, State Department press officer Anita Stockman said the United States was not providing Argentina with any military intelligence "about British activities in the Falklands dispute."

Britons' patriotism resurges world over

EDITOR'S NOTE: The Falkland Islands crisis has aroused a surge of nostalgia and patriotism among Britons living in former British colonies. London correspondent Mark S. Smith has put together this sampling of reports from AP bureaus.

LONDON (AP) — When word reached the bar of the Singapore Cricket Club that a British armada was sailing to retake the Falkland Islands, Malcolm Smithson, one of the British regulars, raised his glass and solemnly declared: "Gentlemen, this means we are at war."

In the former outposts of a once globe-straddling empire, Britons are rallying Around the Union Jack as their mother country risks a military showdown over the windswept South Atlantic archipelago Argentina seized on April 2.

From the British High Commission in Salisbury, Zimbabwe, to the yacht club in Dar es Salaam, capital of formerly-British-ruled Tanzania, the Falklands invasion is a launching point for heated debate over morning newspapers, afternoon tea or evening cigars.

"They had a bloody nerve," said Michael Robinson, an expatriate teaching in Kenya, another of Britain's former African possessions. "i may be an old-fashioned Brit, but I believe we should blow them out of the water."

In New Delhi, capital of what once was the jewel of the empire, a resident British businessman said, "It was a blow to our national pride."

"It wouldn't have happened in Queen Victoria's time," said a longtime British resident of Singapore.

Some Britons abroad note, however, that it's no longer the Victorian era, and that Britain has been pushed around plenty since then and just may not have what it takes to hang on to even the shreds of the empire.

"The sight of the Royal Navy steaming out on an 8,000 mile odyssey...brings no sense of confidence that it will achieve the desired result," said the South China Morning Post. The conservative, British-owned newspaper is published in Hong Kong, which Britain administers under a perpetual lease, parts of which are up in 1997.

Writer won't be charged

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — Denmark won't prosecute a leftist writer arrested last November in an espionage case, Justice Minister Ole Espersen said Saturday.

Espersen also ordered that investigations not be expanded beyond the writer, Arne Herloev Petersen.

Petersen, 38, was held for three days after his arrest as Danish security agents searched for evidence in his house on the central Denmark island of Funen.

He was accused of accepting money from a second secretary in the Soviet Embassy, Vladimir Merkoulov, to finance leftist causes in Denmark such as peace demonstrations and advertisements espousing the declaration of a nuclear-free zone in the Nordic region.

Merkoulov, alleged to have been an agent of the KGB secret police, was expelled shortly before Petersen's arrest. The embassy denied Merkoulov had violated Danish law.

Espersen's written decision did not explain why Petersen would not be prosecuted. It merely outlined the types of activities in which the writer was alleged to have been involved, including the spreading of what the U.S. State Department calls "disinformation."

The Reagan administration claims Soviet officials regularly spread half-truths and lies to further Soviet policy, usually without letting the Soviet involvement be known.

When arrested, Petersen was accused of having met 23 times with Merkoulov over a period of 18 months.

Regime purges 59

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law regime purged 59 more officials for improper execution of duties, inability to carry out assignments, breaking laws and in some cases drunkenness, the official news agency PAP said Saturday.

The latest batch included a provincial governor, four deputy governors, a mayor, 13 rural administration chiefs and 40 other local officials, PAP said. About 1,020 officials have been sacked since martial law was imposed Dec. 13.

Parker's 'grand' smash stakes Rebels to victory

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

When Midland Lee's Chris Parker crossed home plate in the second inning, he was greeted by the entire Rebel team. His home run, a towering blast over the left field fence, was the team's first since District 5-5A play got underway and it was the first grand slam Coach Ernie Johnson can remember in about five years.

"It was nice," said Johnson about the base-cleaner. "You don't get many of those in high school. I tried to remember when the last one was and it goes back four or five years. Maybe longer than that. I wasn't sure it was going out when he hit it but it sounded nice at the crack of the bat."

"It (the pitch) was about belt buckle high and it looked like a basketball coming in," said Parker about his first ever grand slam. "It was a fastball, down the middle."

Parker's grand slam gave the Rebels a 5-0 lead and set the pace for a 6-1 5-5A victory over Odessa High.

The first run of the game came on a throwing error by pitcher Brad Cowan in an attempt to throw out Scott Page at first, alloweing Dennis Matta to score and sending Mike Mercurio to second (Matta and Mercurio singled to reach base).

Cowan seemed to settle down after the error and managed to get Lane Marks to ground out back to the mound and then struck out Bart Ryan. Barry Blackwell took a walk to load the bases followed by Cowan's fastball to Parker for the big lead.

The Bronchos cut the lead to 5-1 in the third inning when Mike Cruz reached first base on a single, moved to second when Rudy Castillo walked and came home on David Olivas' RBI single. Lee hurler Kerry Robertson got Michael Benavidez and Abel Mendoza to strike out to end the inning, stranding two on the base paths.

The final run of the game came in the fifth inning when Parker reached first on a walk in a one-out situation and went to second on Scott Ullom's single. Parker moved to third on Ray Longoria's grounder to shortstop Abel Mendoza who threw out Ullom at second but Cruz' throw from second to first to end the inning with a double play was wild and Parker came home.

Odessa High threatened in the seventh inning when, with two outs, Robertson started having problems with control. He walked two batters before Johnson pulled him out of the game for Bryan Willis who walked the first batter he faced to load the bases but struck out Benavidez to end the game.

"I was real proud of Kerry today," said Johnson who promoted Robertson from the junior varsity squad because of improved performance and gave him the start against OHS. "He was tired (in the seventh), he was giving out. I was surprised when he got two strikes on the last guy he faced. I like to give the pitchers a chance to go the distance, but I'm not going to fool around.

"I think Bryan only walked the first guy because the mound was in such terrible shape. Kerry tears it up when he pitches and it wasn't in that great of shape when we started."

The Rebels played good defense against Odessa High, committing only one error, but their hitting was still weak with only six hits in 25 at bats. At the plate, Parker had one hit in one trip for four RBI's and scored two runs to lead the Rebels.

"We're not getting too many extra base hits, we're not getting too many hits," said Johnson. "We had some extra base hits in pre season but we've been having trouble in district play. That's not a characteristic of one of my teams. Usually they start playing good when District starts and then improve. We haven't done that this year."

The win gives the Rebels the same start they had in the first half of the 5-5A race when they beat the Bronchos 6-3, and that's 1-0. Overall Lee is 12-11 and will take on San Angelo, 0-1 and 10-14 on Tuesday at Lee Field. The game is scheduled for 4 p.m.

Bulldogs pounce on Permian, 5-3

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

ODESSA — The Midland High Bulldogs found some unusual ways to score runs and played superlative defense to start the second half of the Disrtict 5-5A baseball race with a 5-3 victory over Odessa Permian here Saturday.

Of their five tallies, the Bulldogs had two unearned runs, scored once on a wild pitch, once on a squeeze play and the last run they litterally stole.

Jose Carrasco started the game with a double off surprise starter Craig Steen. Carrasco moved to third on a wild pitch but could not score when Jim Gunnels grounded out to shortstop. Peter Galindo laid down a perfect squeeze bunt, forcing catcher Mike King to make the play away from the plate as Carrasco snuck in behind him. Galindo was thrown out at first base on the sacrifice.

THE UNEXPECTED play seemed to shake the Panthers as they proceeded to give up two more runs with two outs in the inning. Tim Davis grounded to shortstop Brian Hart who made a throwing error on the play. Benny Ozuna walked and Daniel Castaneda singled to score Davis from second. Faustino Granado drew another free pass to first base and Hipolito Zarate followed with a single to drive in the third run of the opening stanza. Steen struck out Joel De La Garza to end the first inning nightmare for Permian.

The Panthers came back with a vengance in their half of the first as lead-off hitter Bobby Carasco opened the game with a single and scored on Marty Martinez' double. But Bulldog starter Billy Miles settled down and retired the next three batters to end any hopes of a quick recovery.

After going scoreless in the top half of the second, the Midland defense came up with the first of five outstanding plays on the day.

WITH ONE out, Kirk Strahan hit a looping fly ball to right field. The wind kept driving the ball toward the foul line but De La Garza, running for what seemed eternity, stayed with the ball and made the catch while stretched to the limit of his five foot-eight inch frame.

In the fourth inning, Gunnels and Galindo led off with back-to-back singles against reliever Bruce Hollander. Davis hit a ground ball to third baseman Rex Lambert for what appeared to be the beginning of a double play. But Gunnels stopped on his way to third, avoiding the tag, and forced Lambert to run to the bag for the force out. The little delay by Gunnels killed any chance at a double play.

After striking out Ozuna, Hollander suffered some control problems. First he hit Castaneda with a pitch then threw a wild pitch as Galindo scampered home with Midland's fourth run of the game.

While the Panthers were playing erratically the Bulldogs were displaying individual and team skills which seem to escape most high school teams. With two outs in the botton of the fourth Lambert hit a sharp grounder back to the box that careemed off Miles' glove. Backing up the play, second baseman Granado backhanded the loose ball and made an off balance toss to first, throwing out the runner.

In the fifth inning King hit a sharp grounder down the third base line which Castanedo stopped from getting into left field with an off balance backhand stab. Picking up the ball with his bare hand Castanedo righted himself and rifled the long trow to first, getting the runner by a step. The play proved to be important as the Panthers scored two runs in the inning to pull within one, 4-3.

MILES, SUFFERING from a pulled back muscle, walked the next two batters. Eddie Bizzell then hit a sharp grounder that was destined for left field. But shortstop Carrasco seemed to sprout wings as he dove to his backhand side to glove the ball, stopping the runner from scoring.

With the bases loaded Koy Stribling hit a sacrafice fly to deep center field, scoring Carrasco from third. Miles walked Stace Gaddy to load the bases again. It was now pitcher versus pitcher as Hollander came to the plate. Miles ran the count to 3-2 but Hollander fouled off the next two pitches and finally got the walk, forcing in a run from third.

As though he owed something to his teamates for their fine defensive effort Miles struck out Strahan to kill the bases loaded threat.

IN THE final stanza Casteneda led off with a single and James Pitts, the pinch runner, moved to second on a fielders choice. Zarate bounced one back to the mound which Hollander picked up and threw to third trying to get Pitts. The throw was late and Midland had runners at the corners with one out.

On the next pitch, Zarate broke for second base, King threw to first base and a rundown began. As first baseman Martinez threw to Stribling, covering second, Pitts started toward home. Stribling turned and threw to the plate but the throw was a little high and Pitts slid under the tag for the final run of the game.

Bulldog mentor Tim Whalen said he was pleased with his teams performance, "You know we were pretty pitifull the first half. Now maybe we can hold our heads up again."

Ronk sinks Cubs in ninth, 8-5

Amarillo's Gold Sox struck for three ninth inning runs and an 8-5 win to drop the clutchless Midland Cubs into last place in the Texas League West Division at Cubs Stadium Saturday night before 537 well-bundled fans

The Cubs simply haven't been delivering with men on base and Saturday night's game was a case in point. Midland left 14 runners on base, bringing their total to 46 for the series, now tied at 2-2, and 59 for the last five games. Amarillo, in contrast, stranded just two runners.

Third baseman Jeff Ronk delivered the big blow in the ninth, a two-run single off lefthanded reliever Mike Thompson that put the Sox ahead 7-5 after Midland had rallied for three runs in the eighth to pull even.

Joe Scherger, hitting a homer for the third straight game, delivered a three-run blast over the left field fence to climax a five-run fourth inning that wiped out a 2-0 Midland lead.

THE FIELDING of third baseman Fritz Connally, who may not be long for this league with the kind of glove work he has shown in this series, kept lefthander Tom Spino out of trouble in the first and second. Then, it all blew up in face of the southpaw from Chicago in the fourth when his control deserted him. He walked three, gave up a single to Gerry Davis and had his woes compounded by a couple of battery miscues before Scherger homered.

That seemed to be plenty for righthander Steve Stone, who had limited the Cubs to seven hits and fanned nine with a deceptive curve and sneaky fast ball, going into the eighth.

Carlos Lezcano blooped a single to short center, Jim Payne drew his second of three walks and Dave Owen delivered a two-run single, his fourth hit of the night and seventh in his last eight at bats. That brought on Jim Coffman, who faced five batters and walked three, but still got the win by being in the right place at the right time.

WHEN THE Cubs threatened in the ninth on Lezcano's leadoff double and a walk to Payne, Mike Couchee relieved to pick up his second save in two nights.

Midland and Amarillo play the rubber game of their five-game series at 6 p.m. tonight with Neal Bryant going for the Gold Sox and Jon Perlman the probable starter for Midland. Bryant had a 10-8 record at Reno last season while Perlman spent most of 1981 at Iowa and finished the season in Midland.

Amarillo made the most of its seven hits while Midland with 10 hits and nine walks were a study in futility, leaving the bases loaded in the fourth and eighth.

Scherger had two of the Gold Sox' hits and twice forced Lezcano to make circle-worthy defensive plays to keep him in check.

Connally's full length dive to the line and throw to first robbed Davis of a hit. Then in the second, after Brian Greer singled, he smothered a bad hopper by George Hinshaw and started a double play.

As far as Sox third baseman Ronk is concerned, turnabout is fair play. His dive toward second in the third robbed Connally of his best chance for a hit.

'Staying Alive' is Texas motto

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

ARLINGTON, Texas — The success-starved Texas Rangers weren't even bold enough to have their own motto in the American League this year.

In 1981, it was "Coming Alive" which proved to be a blatant case of false advertising in their ensuing annual August dive.

After three consecutive games this season in which their pitching was pounded by Cleveland and the New York Yankees, press box pundits were suggesting "Staying Alive" as a theme.

Burt Hawkins, the Rangers' media relations director, has agonized for a franchise winner since 1937, first at Washington, and now at Arlington, pleading for just one pennant.

The Senators never earned one when Hawkins was a sports writer and in the 12 years he was traveling secretary.

Since the franchise moved to Texas in 1972, the closest the Rangers have come is five games back.

Hawkins has suffered through disgrace after disgrace and it doesn't bolster his confidence when he sees a balk, hit batsmen, dropped fly balls, mediocre pitching and sloppy baserunning which were on display during the Rangers' first home stand.

"Buddy boy, (Hawkins calls everybody 'Buddy boy') it could be a long season if we keep doing that, but you've got to remember the team we have out there hasn't played together very long," said Hawkins.

Manager Don Zimmer said, "It will take them a month to get things together. It had better not take them to July, though." Robinson has received a clear mandate to produce or else from the Ranger Board of Directors, who are demanding a competitive team.

Robinson has traded away second baseman Bump Wills and lifetime .300 hitter Al Oliver for the likes of Lee Mazzilli, Larry Parrish, and Doug Flynn.

The three newest Rangers have some weaknesses. Mazzilli, playing left field, has not been overwhelming with his arm; Parrish, moving from third base to right field, has already dropped one fly ball; and Flynn's bat has been silent.

To win, the Rangers' pitching must be dynamite. Texas can't afford Frank Tanana, Doc Medich and Rick Honeycutt getting bombed, which they did recently.

The Rangers hope, just once, to shake their reputation as malcontents and losers so they can get out of the shadow of the Dallas Cowboys of the National Football League.

"Whitey" White, who is a longtime handyman for Texas, said several years ago the Rangers should be so ashamed of the way they play that they "ought to back up to the pay window."

But Hawkins already knows what he would do if the Rangers won their first pennant.

"I'd have another round," he said.

There would be thousands of frustrated Ranger fans joining him.

Denver clinches NBA playoffs

DENVER (AP) — Alex English and Dan Issel scored 32 points apiece and Ken Higgs scored all nine of his points in the final six minutes Saturday night as Denver beat Dallas 130-124 to clinch its first National Basketball Association playoff berth in three seasons.

The Nuggets ended the regular season with a 46-36 record and will open Western Conference postseason action this week against an as-yet-undetermined opponent. Whether or not the Nuggets gain a home-court advantage in the three-game mini-series playoffs will depend on the outcome of two games Sunday — Houston at Kansas City and Los Angeles at Phoenix.

Denver led most of the way against the Mavericks but fell behind in the fourth quarter when Dallas' Elston Turner hit a jumper with 8:44 left to put his team ahead 104-103.

Later in the quarter, English and Higgs twice led 6-0 spurts by the Nuggets to hold off Dallas, which finished its second season in the NBA at 28-54.

Marie Lombardi dies

Mrs. Lombardi died early Saturday at John F. Kennedy Hospital here.

A resident of Manalapan the past seven years, she had been ill with a lung infection for several weeks, according to her son-in-law, Paul Bickham.

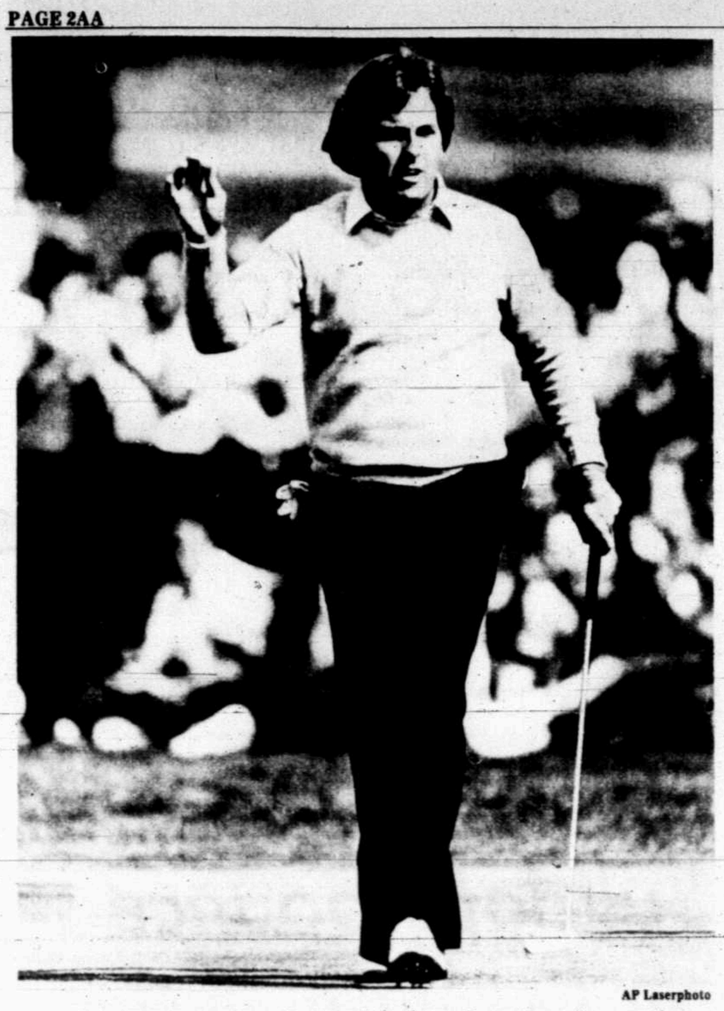

The former Marie Planitz was married to Lombardi for 29 years at the time of his death of cancer in September 1970.

Lombardi was known as an awesome taskmaster who built the lowly Green Bay Packers into a National Football League dynasty in the 1960s.

The trophy awarded to the winning team in the Super Bowl each year is named after Lombardi, and on many occasions Mrs. Lombardi participated in the awards ceremony. She also tossed the coin for one of the Super Bowls.

Shortly after Lombardi's death, Mrs. Lombardi, who called him Vin, said, "I have the envy of everyone who knew him. Every day, something happens that shows how much people miss him.

"You never heard Vin say, 'Where would these players be without me?' He never took the credit. He'd say, 'I'm responsible for how they perform on and off the field,' and when he'd be down on a player, he'd never mention the player's name."

Right behind him was Tom Watson.

"I'm leading the best player in the game by two shots," Wadkins said Saturday after he'd regained the lead with a back-nine burst that produced six birdies and a third-round score of 68.

"I don't think this thing is over with by a long shot. You know Tom is not going to back off, and behind him there are a a lot of people at 4 and 5 under par.

"At this stage, though, things are kind of in the leader's hands. If he goes out and shoots 66 or 67 (in the last round), it's pretty hard for anybody to catch up."

Watson agreed.

"It will take an outstanding round for me to have a chance," he said. "Lanny's a hard man to catch when he gets in front."

Wadkins pulled away from the elite field of only winners of PGA Tour events during the last year with a 32 on his back nine and, at one point, appeared poised to make a rout of it.

He birdied five of his first six holes on the homeward side of the 6,911-yard La Costa Country Club course, then bogeyed two of the last three.

"I just kind of got it rolling," Wadkins said, "and then I started knocking the flag down."

He completed 54 holes with a 207 total, 9 shots under par.

Tom Watson, who won this event two years in a row before being interrupted by Lee Trevino last season, matched par 72 in the mild, breezy weather and was second at 209.

"I got off to a poor start and just didn't do anything particularly well," said Watson, who won four consecutive Player of the Year awards before the streak was broken in 1981.

"Lanny is playing very well," Watson said. "It will take a supreme effort from me tomorrow for me to catch him. I'll have to play very, very well to catch Lanny. He's playing well and he's a hard man to catch."

Ron Streck was another shot back at 210 after a 68. Tom Kite, last year's leading money winner, had a 65 that ranked as the best round of the tournament, and closed up to 211, 4 strokes back in the chase for a $63,000 first prize.

"When you play the first two rounds in 146, you've got a lot of catching up to do, but I'm certainly in a better frame of mind," Kite said.

He was followed by U.S. Open champion David Graham and Fuzzy Zoeller, tied at 212. Graham included a hole in one, with a 5-iron on the seventh, in his round of 70. Zoeller had the same total despite a 4-putt double bogey on the sixth.

Trevino had a 74 and was at 217. Craig Stadler, winner of the Masters last week, shot 73 and was out of the title chase at 219.

Wadkins matched par over the front side and said he was "hitting a lot of good shots. It had to break soon, one way or the other. I either had to start making some birdies or it was going to catch up with me and I was going to start making bogeys. Something had to happen.

"Fortunately," he said, "the coin came up heads."

His birdie streak started on the ninth with a 15-footer. That was followed by a 40-foot putt that found the cup on the 11th and he 2-putted for birdie-4 on the 12th.

He missed a 6-footer on the 13th but made par, then dropped one of about the same distance after a cut, 3-iron shot on the 14th. A 9-iron left him only four feet away on the 15th and he made that for a fifth birdie in six holes.

But he drove into the rough and bogeyed the 16th, then got the shot back with a birdie on the 17th where, he said "I went for the throat." He hit driver off the fairway for his second shot, setting up a wedge shot to 3 feet. He bogeyed the 18th, missing the green.

Salazar heads lackluster Boston Marathon field

BOSTON (AP) — World record-holder Alberto Salazar, unbeaten at the distance, runs in his first Boston Marathon Monday as a strong favorite in an unexceptional field.

Only three of the world's top 10 rated marathoners have entered the 86th annual classic that has drawn 7,603 runners. Japan's Toshihiko Seko, who set a course record of 2:09.26 last year, is bypassing the event.

Interest will focus on a confrontation between the young and the old — the 23-year-old Salazar, who is running only his third 26-mile, 385-yard race, and the 34-year-old Bill Rodgers, a four-time winner of his hometown test of speed and endurance.

"There's world record potential for both men's and women's races," said Rodgers, who finished fifth in the 1980 New York City Marathon won by Salazar. "I think the women's field is the best one ever in the 12 years it's been an official entry in the Boston Marathon. It may be the best of any marathon."

The women's race is headed by Grete Waitz of Norway, another runner who competes in marathons infrequently but successfully. She has been in just four, winning the New York City Marathon in 1978, 1979 and 1980.

Waitz dropped out with an injury in the middle of last year's New York City Marathon, won by Allison Roe of New Zealand in a world-record time of 2:25.29. Roe, who set a course record of 2:26.45 in the 1981 Boston Marathon, is not competing here this year.

The course winds from Hopkinton, west of Boston, to The Prudential Insurance Co. tower in the city. It may be the last time that route is used.

Prudential, the race's major sponsor for 16 years, is withdrawing after this year to protest efforts to commercialize the marathon. Race director Will Cloney said the current finish line is "ideal" but probably will be changed next year.

MJBA sets registration

Sophomore and High Junior league (13 to 16 year olds) registration will be held at 5 p.m. April 22-23 with a make up day scheduled for 9 a.m. Saturday. Registration fee is $20 per player.

Tryouts are scheduled for 5 p.m. April 26-29-30. Sophomore (13-14) candidates report to Redfern Field in Hogan Park while High Junior (15-16) candidates report to Simon Field, Hogan Park.

Whitworth controls destiny with four stroke lead in CPC

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Kathy Whitworth fired a 1-over-par 73 Saturday to hold a comfortable 4-stroke lead entering the final round of the $150,000 CPC International women's golf tournament.

If Whitworth wins Sunday, it will be the 82nd victory of her LPGA career, tying the number of championships won by golfing great Mickey Wright.

Two-time leading money-winner Beth Daniel, who had sole possession of second place entering Saturday's round, shot a 76 to move into a three-way tie for the second slot.

Daniel tied at 2 over par with Patty Sheehan and Alice Ritzman, who shot the best round of the day of 68. Ritzman was also the only golfer in the field of 66 to shoot below par for the day.

Golfers were hampered by gusty winds and late in the day, play was suspended for an hour while a thunderstorm swirled around the Moss Creek Plantation course.

Second-year pro Kyle O'Brien fired a hole-in-one on the 15th hole, only the second ace in the CPC's seven-year history. The only other hole-in-one was recorded by Shirley Englehorn on the 17th hole during the first CPC in 1976.

Whitworth, who has been playing consistent golf throughout the tournament, said she will try to keep her game in control Sunday.

Daniel bogeyed three other holes and double bogeyed the second.

Aggies sweep Raiders

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Texas A&M's Bobby Taylor held Texas Tech to one hit in the first game as the Aggies rolled to a doubleheader sweep over the Red Raiders Saturday in Southwest Conference baseball.

Keith Wood was the losing pitcher.

Buddy Haney's two-run homer in the fourth inning paced the Aggies to a 5-3 win in the nightcap.

The Aggies stand at 30-15-1 for the year and 8-9-1 in conference play.

Rice Owls take pair from Frogs

HOUSTON (AP) — Rice shortstop Clint Welch doubled twice as the Owls whipped Texas Christian 12-3 Saturday to sweep a Southwest Conference doubleheader.

Rice raised its record to 32-21 on the season and 7-11 in SWC play. TCU dropped to 14-22-2 and 3-13-1.

The Owls roughed up four TCU pitchers for 14 hits in the second game. Mike Horn drove in three of the runs with a double and had five RBIs for the day.

Johnson's homer gives Rangers win

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Lamar Johnson belted a two-run homer in the sixth inning, leading the Texas Rangers to a 5-3 victory over the Milwaukee Brewers Saturday.

Frank Tanana, 1-1, yielded five hits before he was relieved with two out in the sixth by Steve Comer.

Comer pitched perfect relief until the ninth, when he loaded the bases on a walk and singles to Gorman Thomas and Mark Brouhard. One run scored on Robin Yount's double-play grounder, and Comer got the final out when pinch hitter Don Money lined to third.

The Rangers erased a 2-1 deficit in the sixth when Leon Roberts reached on a throwing error by third baseman Paul Molitor and Johnson slammed his first homer of the year off Bob McClure, 1-1.

Texas scored two insurance runs with two out in the ninth. Doug Flynn singled and scored on a triple by George Wright. Lee Mazzilli's bunt single scored Wright.

The Rangers took a 1-0 second-inning lead when Johnson doubled and scored when Jim Sundberg lined an apparent double to the left field corner. The Brewers appealed Sundberg's hit and won when first base umpire Darryl Cousins called Sundberg out for having missed first base, but the run stood.

The Brewers tied it 1-1 in the third when Larry Hisle, who had one hit in his previous 21 at-bats this year, lined his first homer of the season.

Red Sox snap loss skid

BOSTON (AP) — Glenn Hoffman capped a five-run first inning with a three-run homer, and the Boston Red Sox snapped a four-game home losing streak Saturday with a 5-4 victory over the Toronto Blue Jays.

Lansford, who had three hits in the series opener Friday, also had a pair of doubles to lead the Boston attack.

Tudor, 2-0, settled down after Toronto scored three runs on singles by Damaso Garcia and Garth Iorg, a triple by Jesse Barfield and Wayne Nordhagen's sacrifice fly. Mark Clear, who earned his first save, replaced Tudor and was tagged for a run in the seventh on a single by Willie Upshaw, a fielder's choice grounder, a single by Garcia and another fielder's choice grounder by Rance Mulliniks.

With a fifth-inning triple, Yastrzemski reached another career milestone, becoming the seventh player in major league history to gain 5,201 total bases.

Cabell sinks Yankees, 5-3

DETROIT (AP) — Enos Cabell had three hits, including a homer, and drove in three runs to back the 10-hit pitching of Jack Morris and Kevin Saucier as the Detroit Tigers defeated the New York Yankees 5-3 Saturday.

Cabell lined a solo shot into the lower left-field seats in the Detroit first — his second homer in as many days and the only two the Tigers have hit all season.

In the Detroit second, Tom Brookens beat out a bunt single, went to second when New York left-hander Tommy John, 0-2, uncorked a wild pitch, and scored on Alan Trammell's single. Cabell's two-out double drove in Trammell and Glenn Wilson, who had walked, to give the Tigers a 4-0 lead.

Kirk Gibson, Larry Herndon and John Wockenfuss started the Detroit third with successive singles to load the bases, and Gibson scored on Brookens' double-play grounder.

Willie Randolph led off a three-run New York sixth with a double and scored on Jerry Mumphrey's single. Bobby Murcer's one-out homer drove in Mumphrey ahead of him.

Morris, 2-1, who gave way to Saucier after yielding a lead-off single to Mumphrey in the eighth, allowed nine hits, struck out two, and gave up just one walk, an intentional pass.

Royals clip Tribe, 12-10

CLEVELAND (AP) — Amos Otis drove in five runs, including a game-winning, two-run double in the eighth inning, and the Kansas City Royals pounded out 22 hits in a 12-10 victory over the Cleveland Indians Saturday.

Kansas City trailed 10-8 entering the eighth. Jerry Martin led off with a single, moved to third on a double by Frank White and both runners scored on a single by pinch-hitter Willie Aikens.

Dave Frost lifted his record to 3-0 despite yielding two runs in 21-3 innings, and Dan Quisenberry recorded his fourth save with two innings of one-hit relief. Rick Waits, 0-2, one of three Cleveland pitchers in the eighth, was the loser.

Hal McRae hit his second home run of the season to give Kansas City a 1-0 lead in the second inning, and the Indians tied it in the bottom of the inning on Rick Manning's RBI single.

Downing hits two homers

ANAHEIM Calif. (AP) — Brian Downing's two solo home runs propelled the surging California Angels to their fifth straight win Saturday night, a 6-2 triumph over the Minnesota Twins, in front of an all-time Anaheim Stadium baseball crowd of 61,640.

Downing led off the game with a homer off Terry Felton, pitching in place of scheduled Twin starter Pete Redfern, who had been unable to shake the flu. Downing hit another bases-empty shot with one out in the sixth, boosting the Angels' lead to 5-1. The homers were his third and fourth of the season.

California right-hander Ken Forsch, 1-1, scattered 10 hits, allowing Minnesota's only run on a leadoff homer by Jim Eisenreich in the sixth. The blow snapped a string of 45 innings in which the Angels' staff had not allowed an earned run. Forsch walked three and struck out two.

The Angels took a 3-0 lead in the second. A one-out single by Rick Burleson, a double by Downing and a walk to Fred Lynn loaded the bases before Rod Carew singled home two runs.

A walk to Reggie Jackson, Bobby Grich's sacrifice bunt and Don Baylor's RBI-single made the score 4-0 in the fifth.

The Twins moved within 5-2 on Kent Hrbek's RBI single in the top of the eighth. The Angels got their sixth run in the bottom of the inning on an RBI single by Bobby Grich.

Toronto shortstop Alfredo Griffin lands on Boston's Gary Allenson after trying to complete a double play Saturday in Boston. Allenson was out, but Boston won the game, 5-4.

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball and Brooklyn. A marriage joined in 1890. Flourishing on the rough diamond of Ebbets Field, weathering slumps, celebrating pennants. Both sides willing to "wait 'til next year."

In 1957 came the divorce.

Owner Walter O'Malley packed up his team and headed for California. Brooklyn's Dodgers would forever play in a land of palm trees and surfers, their faithful fans reduced to rooting for teams in other boroughs and other states.

But state Sen. Thomas Bartosiewicz, Brooklyn-born and bred in the era of the Boys of Summer, envisions a Hollywood ending to this love story. He dreams of a new team playing in a new domed stadium in old Brooklyn.

"No one deserves a team more than we do," says the Democrat and leader of the bring-baseball-back-to-Brooklyn movement. "Being a Dodger fan taught me to be optimistic, and in true Dodger tradition, we're going to do it.

"Brooklyn has got to win one."

AN ARTIST'S rendering of a proposed Ebbets Dome sits on an easel in Bartosiewicz's office. It combines modern technology — an air-inflated dome — with touches of the past, including a red-brick front that suggests the facade of old Ebbets Field.

Bartosiewicz claims the dome, patterned after the Silverdome in Pontiac, Mich., could mean $80 million a year to Brooklyn.

"Realistically, we could have a facility ready for a major league team within three years," says Bartosiewicz, his patter quick and confident. "And that's construction and scheduling, ready to go."

The senator and his stadium have their detractors. Newspaper columnists, including some who covered the old Dodgers, have ripped the plan. And Borough President Howard Golden feels Brooklyn should concentrate on expanding amateur sports rather than chasing an elusive major-league franchise.

BARTOSIEWICZ shows naysayers a sack of mail, full of pro-Brooklyn baseball letters from 29 states, Canada, St.Croix, Mexico and Puerto Rico, proof of what he calls "a burgeoning national movement."

The letter-writers remember 1957, the final season for the Boys of Summer.

The effort to keep the Dodgers took many forms. Then-Mayor Robert Wagner estimated the city spent $200,000 on studies. A group of Long Island businessman tried to buy the team. Nelson Rockefeller offered to buy into the team and help with construction of the new stadium.

But in 1958, they were gone. Ebbets Field was leveled for an apartment complex, and Brooklyn...

"Brooklyn has never been the same since the Dodgers deserted and abandoned it," says Bartosiewicz. "When I was in college, people's eyes would light up when I told them I was from Brooklyn. Now, they look at you funny and ask, 'Why would anybody want to live there?'"

Flatbush Avenue has decayed, with burned-out buildings sharing space with public-housing projects. The borough, like the city it's a part of, has watched crime rates spiral as its population dropped.

Bartosiewicz, however, envisions the Dome as a step toward rebuilding Brooklyn.

"Do you know Brooklyn doesn't even have a hotel?" he said. "It's never needed one. But a new ballpark, bringing in different kinds of events, could get things rolling again."

"If there's anything I could do to help the senator, I would do it. I would love to get them back," say Saul Leisner, the auctioneer on April 24, 1960, when Ebbets Field was sold for souvenirs. "That was the saddest day of my life. They were a part of Brooklyn. When they left, it was like losing a part of your family."

LEISNER, NOW 72, remembers the thousands who poured onto Flatbush Avenue in hopes getting of a relic from the sacred stadium.

"If you know baseball, you know what devout fans Brooklyn had," he said. "There was so many Dodger fans waiting for the sale, most of them looking pretty bereaved. If we got a new team, it would absolutely rejuvenate the borough."

Brooklyn Community Board 13, whose 50 members voted unanimously to bring baseball back, has offered a site in Coney Island for the stadium.

"Why? Well, I'm an old Dodger fan, and I'd like to see it," says Herb Eisenberg, district manager for the board. "We support the Yankees, we support the Mets, and we can support a team in Brooklyn.

"You talk to anybody in the stream, it's all the same. They want a team back. It's Brooklyn, it's the Bums, it's baseball."

BARTOSIEWICZ says feasaoility studies, funded by a $30,000 appropriation from the state Legislature, are under way to find a site and financing for the stadium. He has talked with the National League and commissioner's office, and feels a new stadium "will make it impossible for major league baseball to deny us our team."

Golden, the borough president, also has spoken with baseball officials. He says bluntly: "I have to conclude that the prospects for bringing major league baseball back to Brooklyn are limited."

Bartosiewicz is undaunted. He spends much of his time working for a new stadium and new team, and dreaming of the day the game returns.

"We get the Dodgers' 1955 world championship banner from the Hall of Fame, and we unfurl it from the top of the dome for Opening Day," he says, envisioning the scene. "The stands are packed, and everybody's waiting, and the old Dodgers come out of the dugout to take the field in their old cotton uniforms.

"Then our Dodgers will have returned."

Rockwall romps

ALBANY, Calif. (AP) — Rockwall, a 40-to-1 longshot, may have earned a trip to the Kentucky Derby by racing to a stunning half-length victory over Water Bank in the 67th running of the California Derby Saturday at Golden Gate Fields.

The horse, owned by Nelson Bunker Hunt, had previous earnings of just $17,325 before winning the $200,000-added event for 3-year-olds. The winner's share of the purse was $129,200.

The lightly raced son of Cannonade, the 1974 Kentucky Derby winner, moved into fourth place going around the clubhouse turn, raced up to share the lead with heavily favored Journey At Sea down the backstretch, and then held off the closing charge of entrymates Water Bank and Cassaleria through the stretch.

Rockwall, ridden by Heriberto Valdivieso, carried 112 pounds and was timed in 1:483-5 for the 1⅛-mile race over a fast track. Backers received $83.60, $17.60 and $10.40.

Air Forbes flies for title

NEW YORK (AP) — Air Forbes Won chased Shimatoree for most of the 1⅛ miles, caught him 20 yards from the finish and won the $175,200 Wood Memorial Saturday at Aqueduct.

The victory by a neck sends Air Forbes Won on to the May 1 Kentucky Derby with four victories in four races, all of them this year.

Air Forbes Won, the 3-5 favorite with the crowd of 31,213, carried Angel Cordero over the distance in 1:51. He carried the Derby weight of 126 pounds, as did each of the other nine 3-year-olds in the race.

Air Forbes Won, owned by Edward Anchel and trained by Frank LaBoccetta, returned $3.20, $2.60 and $2.40. Dr. Rif'at Hussain's Shimatoree, ridden by Jeff Fell, returned $3.80 and $3.40, while Live Oak Plantation's Laser Light was $3.40 to show.

Air Forbes Won's dad, Bold Forbes, won the Wood Memorial in 1976 in the stakes record time of 1:472-5, then went on to win the Kentucky Derby and the Belmont Stakes. He missed the Triple Crown with a third place finish in the Preakness.

Our Escapade broke on top, but Shimatoree quickly took the lead in the short run to the clubhouse turn. Entering the backstretch, Shimatoree led Our Escapade, Air Forbes Won and High Ascent.

Who can stop Atlanta's Braves?

Canucks' Neale knows a good thing

By The Associated Press

Harry Neale knows a good thing when he sees it — and that's why he's not returning to coach the Vancouver Canucks.

Neale, who was suspended for 10 games by the National Hockey League for an incident with fans in Quebec, said Saturday that associate Coach Roger Neilson will stay behind the Canucks bench for the remainder of the teams's NHL Smythe division final series with Los Angeles. The teams are 1-1 entering Sunday's game in Los Angeles.

Vancouver, which had a 13-game unbeaten streak snapped Friday night in a 3-2 overtime loss to the Kings, has played extremely well under Neilson. The Canucks eliminated the Calgary Flames 3-0 in the first round of the playoffs.

Neale's decision not to return as coach simplyaccelerates the plans the Canucks had for next year, when Neale is to become the team's general manager and Neilson will take over as coach.

"Roger has been doing a masterful job and the team has been reacting to him in a very positive fashion," said Neale. "Why should I come back and screw it up?"

In the other three divisional final series games Friday night the New York Islanders downed the New York Rangers 7-2, the St.Louis Blues trimmed the Chicago Black Hawks 3-1 and the Boston Bruins whipped the Quebec Nordiques 8-4. The Bruins now lead their series 2-0, while the New York and the Chicago-St.Louis series are tied 1-1.

Games three and four of each series will be played Sunday and Monday nights in Quebec, Los Angeles, Chicago and at the New York Rangers' Madison Square Garden.

The Kings evened their series with Vancouver as rookie Steve Bozak scored his fourth playoff goal at 4:33 of the overtime session when a shot from the point by Rick Chartraw deflected into the net off Bozak's hip.

"It was near the end of a long shift and I was tired," said Bozak, who scored 33 goals during the regular season. "When the shot came, I had to turn away because someone was trying to check me. The puck deflected once or twice before it hit me in the hip."

Dave Taylor and Marcel Dionne had scored for the Kings in regulation, while Darcy Rota and Stan Smyl countered for Vancouver.

Boston continued its impressive play in downing the Nordiques for the second straight night as Rick Middleton scored a goal and added three assists. Barry Pederson and Bruce Crowder added two goals and an assist in the Bruins 40-shot outburst against Nordiques' goalie John Garrett.

"We're starting to peak at the right time," said Pederson. "We won the last two games of the regular season that we had to (to clinch second place in the Adams Division) and it just steamrolled into the playoffs."

"We have to work a little more," said Nordiques Coach Michel Bergeron. "We will have to play a little better."

Playing a little better is precisely what the two-time defending Stanley Cup champion New York Islanders did against the cross-town rival Rangers.

After being extended to five games by the Penguins in the opening round and dropping a 5-4 decision to the Rangers Thursday, the Islanders dominated Friday night. Duane Sutter scored two goals and Bryan Trottier and Denis Potvin added a goal and two assists apiece to lead the Isles attack.

"We made them make mistakes," said Islanders forward John Tonelli. "We were on top of them every step and they couldn't do a thing."

Rangers Coach Herb Brooks agreed.

"It was like being in quicksand," said Brooks.

"Now it's the best of five series and we have the home ice advantage."

Rangers' Burleson wins high jump with 6-10 ¼

MCCAMEY — Greenwood's Stuart Burleson set a meet record in the high jump Saturday in the McCamey Badger Relays Division I with clearing 6-feet-10¼, beating his personal best of the season by one-quarter inch.

He also finished first in the long jump going 20-feet-10 and first in the 110-meter high hurdles with a time of 15.42 to lead the Rangers to a second place finish with 90 points behind Rankin with 129.

In Division II, for Class AA and AAA schools, Kermit was the easy winner with 151 points followed by Stanton in a distant second with 761/5.

The Greenwood girls fared well in the Regional Qualifiers Meet (for all girls who qualified for regionals) with a third place finish. Coahoma won the meet scoring 83 points followed by Forsan in second at 56 and Greenwood with 51.

Shocking Steers continue to surprise in 5-5A loop

The surprise team of the first half race in District 5-5A play was Big Spring. The Steers went through league play with a 6-1 record to tie Abilene High for first place honors. Now they are out to prove that the surprises aren't over yet.

On Saturday, the Steers and Eagles met in Big Spring for the fourth time this season and for the first time AHS came out on the short end of the scoring, 6-3. The win over Abilene gives Big Spring 11 victories in the last 12 games with the only loss and more important has them 1-0 in the second half race.

Big Spring took a 3-0 lead after two innings of play with the final two coming in the second. AHS came back to score one run in each of the third and fourth innings, but gave up a run in the bottom of the fourth and two more in the sixth for a 6-2 lead. The Eagles were only able to score one in the final frame.

Adam Rodriquez, 6-2 on the season, went six complete innings for the victory before giving up the mound to Moe Rubio. Jay Tindall, who relieved Jeff Waits in the first inning, suffered the loss dropping his record to 8-2.

Elsewhere in the 5-5A, Abilene Cooper overcame a two-game league losing streak to post a 5-2 victory over San Angelo.

The Bobcats scored the game's first run in the first inning and held it until Cooper tied it up in the third, 1-1. San Angelo regained the advantage in the top of the fourth, 2-1, but gave up four runs in the bottom of the frame to end the scoring in the game at 5-2.

Billy Mitchell, 6-3, went the distance for the victory while Mark Smith, 4-5, suffered the loss with Zeke Barron coming in to relieve in the fourth.

On Tuesday, Big Spring hosts Midland High (1-0) while San Angelo travels to Midland Lee (1-0). Abilene Cooper takes on Odessa High (0-1) and Abilene High faces Odessa Permian (0-1).

McEnroe falls in upset as Borg gains finals

TOKYO (AP) — Bjorn Borg took Vincent Van Patten and Guillermo Vilas upset John McEnroe Saturday to move into the finals Sunday of the Suntory Cup tennis tournament.

Borg of Sweden, who announced Friday that he will not play at Wimbledon, where he has won five times, beat his American challenger, 5-7, 6-4, 6-3. Vilas won in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4, to complete a sweep of both American semifinalists.

Vilas of Argentina took the first set by breaking McEnroe's service in the first game. The Argentine broke the left-handeder's service in the third game of the second set and led all the way without being threatened.

"Everything was bad with me today," McEnroe said. "I think Vilas played better than me. I also think he hit better."

Fin & Feather

Even with artificial lures and baits, many fisherman still prefer to use live baits. The choices are varied and each fisherman has a favorite among worms, crickets, crawfish and minnows.

Most people perfer to buy live baits rather than try to dig them or seine for them.

Worms come in a variety of sizes with most being available commercially. The red wiggler is probably the most common for bream fishing while the large earthworm or night crawler is utilized extensively for catfishing and trotlining.

WORMS ARE normally easy to find, especially in barnyards and other areas where organic matter is present. Excess worms from a fishing trip can easily be saved for the next trip. Put the worms in a tub like container that has a screen covered bottom drain. Fill the container about one half full of soil and feed the worms by sprinkling cornmeal over the top. Keep the soil moist.

White grubs, corn earworms, bagworms and meal worms are used, but tend to ose fluid and shrink on the hook.

One exception to this is the bigger, tougher catalpa worm. Collected from the catalpa tree, they can orms are can be frozen for use throughout the year.

Grasshoppers, crickets, and roaches are popular for bream fishing, with crickets being the leading bait. Special containers are needed to prevent the baits from escaping and to make catching them easier.

The Cadillac of bream baits is the roach, which is seldom used any more. The preferred roach is not the small waterbug roach common in homes. The female is black without wings and the male is brown with wings.

Grasshoppers, crickets and roaches should be hooked by threading the hook into the tail and out the back.

BY ROD N. REELE

Black bass fishing continued its hot streak at Lake E.V.Spence last week and crappie fishing set the pace at Lake J.B. Thomas. Both lakes reported good catfish catches.

At Spence, Mike, Mary and Keith Land took three stripers to 5 1/2 pounds while Linda Christian, Odessa, landed a 3 1/4 pounder and Rachael Vandergriff took four blacks totaling eight pounds.

Variable weather has made for inconsistent fishing at Oak Creek Lake near Sweetwater. Gary Boyd of Sweetwater took the week's largest bass, seven pounds, 11 ounces. Ed Carter took 5-12 and 4-8 bass while Garland Wade had catches of 5-4 and 2-0.

Chaps beat OC, face NMMI next

ODESSA — Midland College finished its dual meet and conference tennis tournaments with a 13-2 victory over Odessa College here Friday, winning 8-1 in men's play and 5-1 in women's.

The women are 8-0 in WJCC matches and 12-11-1 for the year to lead NMMI 43-30 with 18 points to be decided in the final meet April 23 at Midland College.

The men trail NMMI 45-38 after a 7-1 WJCC finish.

One week after the conference meet MC will host the Regional Meet.

The Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Don't throw you TV set into the trash just yet — but do start thinking about it as a relic of the past. More than 170 million TV receivers now in use in the United States may soon be obsolete, because "high-definition" video is on the way, promising picture quality rivaling a movie theater's and sound as clean $s that produced on the best component stereos.

Early television broadcast standards were the best that contemporary technology — 1940s technology — could achieve. In the '50s, when color transmission was introduced, it was intended to be compatible with the existing black and white receivers. In short the very best receivers of today are based on technology fundamentally more than 40 years old.

The limitations of the current system are profound. Because the system allows for only 525 horizontal scanning lines, pictures can never be particulalry sharp, even on the best sets — nor particulalry large — it's hard to get decent pictures when the screen size exceeds 25 inches.

Another problem is the shape of the current screen, which is too square to display the full width of 35mm film, meaning tht TV can't handle the wide shots possible in cinemaphotography.

In the past few months, Japanese manufacturers egged on by the Japanese Broadcasting Corp. and closely watched by American networks, have started demonstrating what they claim will be the next generation of TV sets — movie-theater-shaped screens, pictures twice as sharp as those possible on current sets, stereophonic sound.

What will such sets cost? When will they be available for purchase? Nobody is quite sure.

A report on the prospects for high-definition TV, prepared for CBS by the respected Kalba Bowen consultancy firm, makes an admittedly "bold projection" that by the end of the decade more than 1 million American homes will be receiving high-definition video via cable, videotape and disc, and direct-to-home satellite braodcast.

The study sees 7,000 high-definiton sets in use by 1983 (costing around $2,400 per set), up to 125,000 by 1986 (at $1,000 per set) and to 1,280,000 (at $650) by 1990. By 1999, it predicts, 12 to 18 high-defintion channels and 29 million receivers will be in use.

Cable TV is "particularly suited" for delivery of high-definiton TV signals, Kalba Bowen said, but noted that the drawback at present is that up to five conventional video channels are needed to distribute just one HDTV signal (because the additional "information" required in the transmission requires much more frequency.)

Technical advances ought to overcome that handicap in a few more years, the consultants predict.

But high-definiton TV is already controversial: CBS and the National Association of Broadcasters think so much of the prospect that they have asked the FCC to freeze direct-broadcast satellite applications that don't propose to include high-definition service.

This idea doesn't sit well with the Washington-based Satellite TV Corp., a subsidiary of Comsat, which wants to launch direct-broadcast satellites in 1985. The Comsat unit thinks a delay to accommodate high-definition service would not serve the public interest.

STC president Irving Goldstein says he doesn't expect high-definition TV to become commercially feasible before the end of the '80s, and when it is introduced, it will be mainly "geared towards hotels, motels and convention centers as well as institutional users. It will be well into the 1990s before this technology will have any meaningful consumer application."

CBS, however, is unmoved. It is preparing to start experimental wide-screen broadcasting in San Francisco, perhaps as early as next year, in an effort to demonstrate the feasibility of high-definition TV. The project was disclosed recently at an HDTV demonstration put on to introduce official Washington to what CBS sees as the new threshold. The material, especially prepared for HDTV, included a football game and an experimental drama produced by Francis Cappola, the Hollywood producer who has embraced high-definition TV as the future wave of motion pictures.

April 23 & 24
His works have been on exhibit at the Boston Museum of Fine Arts, the Lincoln Center in New York, and the Institute of Contemporary Art in Boston. The Washington Post calls him, "an artist of the people."
Sidewalk Sam will reproduce the painting of an old master, in acrylic, throughout the two days. Come see this talented folk artist, "a pavement Picasso," as the Cleveland Plain Dealer called him, at Midland Park Mall.

Filling the coffers at Midland Community Theatre's "Sly Fox" production are, from left, Bill Kinder, area sales manager for Magcobar; Don Bachmann, the theater's executive director; and Robert Verner, area sales manager for Dresser Titan. The play, onstage in Theatre I through May 1, is funded in part by a grant for $10,000 from Dresser Titan and Dresser Magcobar. Reservations for the production may be made by calling 682-4111.

Sylvia will perform at the Midland Stardust, 1008 S. Midkiff St., Wednesday at 10 p.m. and midnight, with the club's doors opening at 7 p.m. Sylvia is well known to country fans for her recordings of "Drifter," "Tumbleweed," "Whippoorwill" and "The Matador." Tickets, priced at $7 in advance and $9 at the door, may be purchased at the Stardust.

Concerts association drive ends Saturday

Midland Community Concerts Association is conducting its annual membership drive through Saturday.

Admission to the five concerts is by membership only. This year's concert selections include Mary Jane Johnson, soprano; Jack Daniels, Original Silver Cornet Band; The Young Americans on Broadway; Rostal and Schaefer, duo-pianists playing from Bach to Bacharach; and John Gary, singer and entertainer.

Membership fee is $15 per adult ticket and $7.50 per student ticket, purchased through Midland's high schools. MCCA also has a reciprocity agreement with Community Concerts in Lubbock, Roswell, N.M., Carlsbad, N.M., and Hobbs, N.M.

Campaign headquarters is located at Knorr Furniture, No. 15 Plaza Center. Checks may be mailed by Saturday to the Midland Community Concerts Association, P.O. Box 4191, Midland, Texas, 79704.

Coppola sells studio

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Francis Ford Coppola, the filmmaker whose technical extravaganzas have pushed his Zoetrope Studio to the brink of bankruptcy, has put the company's Hollywood facilities up for sale.

The decision to seek public bids was based on Zoetrope's shaky finances and the "high demand for studio space," said Bruce Feldman, the studio's public relations agent.

Owners want a minimum $20 million but expect to get "considerably more" for the 8.66-acre property. Feldman called it "a fully equipped facility" with nine sound stages, editing and storage space that formerly comprised the Hollywood General Studios.

"By selling we can raise a large amount of cash to liquidate the large and expensive debt we're carrying, although even if we didn't have that debt we'd still be interested in selling," Feldman said. "It's an ideal time to sell — there's a high demand in Hollywood for studio facilities."

The sale will "in no way diminish Zoetrope's future film production or plans. We'll continue to distribute films under our own sponsorship," he said.

Feldman wouldn't comment on the amount of Zoetrope's debt.

Coppola, director of "The Godfather" series and "Apocalypse Now," sank $26 million into his latest romantic musical, "One From the Heart."

Nastassia Kinski as Irena in "Cat People," an RKO-Universal film, is irresistably drawn to the leopard's cage. Once she unravels the mystery, she too becomes like a caged animal.

'Cat People' draws on superstitions

This film year is rapidly shaping up as one of remakes and adaptations, from "Victor/Victoria," to "Cannery Row," "Deathtrap," "Whose Life Is It Anyway?" and now, "Cat People."

Based on the 1942 film classic of the same name, this problematic rendition of "Cat People" stars Nastassia Kinski, Malcolm McDowell and John Heard. Together they combine to skillfully flesh out a plot that draws heavily on the imagination and superstitions of its viewers for effect.

Appropriately set in modern-day New Orleans, a city with enough mystery to ensnare even the most resistant non-believer, the cat people roam at night, victims of themselves. They may stay with their fellow felines or, by killing a human being, return to human form. Once in human form only the act of making love will transform them into cats again and thereby the cycle of love and death is perpetuated.

If this curious-as-a-cat plot seems confusing, there is another loose thread in its weave. One way for the cat people to ensure their peaceful co-existence with man is by mating with each other — in this case, brother Paul (Malcolm McDowell) and sister Irena (Nastassia Kinski). The viewer is spared this coupling but is front row on several others, giving "Cat People" its solid R rating. Graphic violence might also be suspected in a film of this theme, and is, in fact, an integral and gory part as a zoo keeper loses his arm and life to Paul in leopard form.

A Review

Miss Kinski is perhaps the only actress working today who could have pulled this off — not only her physical resemblance is uncannily cat-like, but also her untraceable accent makes her as much a mystery as the character she plays. And she gets the only laugh in a curious scene in a bar where Irena has gone with Alice, a zoo worker. Alice urges Irena to discuss her sex life and Irena begins a 1980s defense of her virginity. Somehow this scene would not have played well in 1942, and even in 1982 is a bit forced, but gives Miss Kinski a chance at a nice comic turn while establishing Irena's subconscious desire to avoid human contact.

John Heard as Oliver is the properly possessed zoo curator who likes his women on a pedestal — where only Irena can climb — and Malcolm McDowell romps easily through "Cat People," probably to be best remembered for his gymnastic feats performed with feline ease.

There is a haunting voodoo theme by Giorgio Moroder and sets by Ferdinando Scarfiotti that are cinematic if not true-to-life. The zoo looks like those at the turn of the century, with tight, close cages, and the administration building interior is a labyrinthine metal jungle — so interesting it distracts. Both men have worked with director Paul Schrader before, in "American Gigolo," but this time the plot slights the individual efforts.

That fine line between what and real and what is not gets stepped on over and over, so often that the plot blurs and, along with it, the filmmaker's intent. Schrader has assembled all the elements for a first-class thriller, even incorporating an incredible transformation scene as Irena becomes a cat for the first time, but "Cat People" stays at a distance, too cool, too collected and, with the temperament of a cat, just observes.

Even the final scene — a hint of bestiality? — no, everything is under control, unlike the kind of haunting horror film that always leaves the return of "the unwholesome thing" as a potential force.

Odessa Civic Concerts closes

ODESSA — The Odessa Civic Concerts, sponsored by Odessa College, will close its 1981-82 season with an 8 p.m. Thursday performance by The Thouvenel String Quartet of Midland.

The quartet plays throughout the Permian Basin and has recently concluded a tour of New York. In May, The Thouvenels will perform a series of concerts in Vienna, Austria as part of the Vienna Festival honoring Viennese composer Ernst Krenek, whose quartets The Thouvenel String Quartet has recorded. Krenek composed a quartet especially for The Thouvenels, which was performed by the quartet in New York City at Carnegie Recital Hall in 1981.

Award-winning play in Lubbock

LUBBOCK — "Children of a Lesser God," recipient of the 1980 Tony Award, will play at the Lubbock Municipal Auditorium Saturday.

The play, written by Mark Medoff, deals with the events that happen when a hearing impaired and hearing person fall in love and try to build a life together. The current production, which stars Philip Reeves and Freda Norman, has been restaged by Jonathan Lee and is being produced by Marvin A. Krauss and Irving Siders.

For reservations and other ticket information call 1-806-742-3610.

MC faculty recital to be today

A Midland College faculty recital will be held at 2:30 p.m. today in the Allison Fine Arts recital hall. The recital features clarinetist Don Grant, accompanied by soprano Janice Archer and pianist Nancy Young Knapp. All are faculty members at MC.

Dr. Grant is director of MC's music instructional program. A reception will follow the recital. Both are free and open to the public.

MISD runoff candidates discuss issues

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

Overcrowded classrooms, salary demands, overbundance of paperwork and communication between school administrators and teaching staffs are issues concerning the two candidates facing each other in the April 24 runoff election for Place 6 of the Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees.

As candidates Joe Golding and Charleen Rosebery prepared for the final two weeks of campaigning, some 200 teachers in Midland public schools appeared at Tuesday's school board meeting to emphasize the need for the return of their full salary package.

Due to major cutbacks in the district's budget late last spring, board members decided to discontinue Social Security payments for teachers effective Jan. 1, 1981. While teachers have been receiving their half of the payments in their paychecks, the half previously paid by the district has been sitting in escrow.

One of three requests presented by teachers Tuesday pertained to the addition of the district's half of the Social Security payments into teacher salaries.

THE OTHER TWO requests were for the continuation of the complete state contribution toward salaries and the 32 percent above state schedule that is presently being used.

"I think that they (teachers) presented their arguments in a logical and business-like fashion," Mrs. Rosebery said, adding that she also felt it was important that the teachers turned out in large numbers.

"Sometimes there comes a point when representatives don't get the point across and numbers do," she said. "On any issue where they feel strongly, or members of the community feel strongly, it is very important for the board to know that that kind of backing and numbers are present."

Golding and Mrs. Rosebery both said they felt the requests made by teachers were substantiated. The Social Security payments should be reinstated as part of the teachers' full salary packet and not kept solely as a savings for the school district, they said. To the best of their knowledge, they added, the money had been untouched, waiting for board members to decide on an alternate retirement program in which to deposit the funds.

The other two salary requests made by teachers are the same as those recommended by MISD Superintendent Dr. James H. Mailey.

DESPITE THE RECENT publicity surrounding teacher salaries, both candidates said the previous issues still are important.

Overcrowding in schools and the high pupil-teacher ratio which creates discipline problems and teacher frustrations are main issues concerning Golding and Mrs. Rosebery. The passage of the school bond election April 3, which approved construction of two new elementary schools and additional classrooms, pleased both of the candidates.

"The overcrowding in schools creates a discipline problem," Mrs Rosebery said. "Crowds create situations of discord. It just makes it easier for the normal children's horseplay."

"Teachers are teaching classrooms in closets and blocked-off ends of hallways," Golding said. "We need to evaluate the growth of our town and project the needs of the educational system to meet this growth. But we don't want to overbuild.

"The school district needs to grow with the same growth as our town," he said. "What good are the classrooms going to be if we don't have teachers?"

KEEPING MIDLAND teachers in the classrooms is another concern voiced by the candidates. They said communication between the school board, administration and teachers should be strengthened, and the stess placed on teachers from an overabundance of paperwork and current evaluation procedures should be reduced.

"There have been three main reasons for teachers leaving our school system," Golding said. "Most teachers feel there is a lack of discipline, they are overburdened with excessive paperwork and there is a continual re-evaluation of teachers who have already proven themselves."

Teacher aids would be beneficial in helping teachers in the classrooms, Golding said.

"There are many retired teachers with knowledge and experience that could be used as volunteers in the classroom," Golding suggested, adding that many retired teachers would like to help instead of just being "put out to pasture."

"That would give teachers more time to spend with their students," he said.

THE EVALUATION process faced by teachers is considered demeaning to many teachers, he continued. "That has tended to leave teachers with a feeling someone thinks they are not adequately doing their job and it takes away valuable time that could be spent teaching," he said.

Teacher inservice programs and teacher recognition need to be strengthened, Mrs. Rosebery said.

— Joe Golding

"There is nothing worse than teachers coming in for inservice and coming away feeling it was a waste of time," she said.

She suggested that small things, such as providing child care for teacher inservices on Saturdays, would help teachers cope with the many demands placed on them.

"I really feel that the will to stay in the classroom can be drawn out by the seemingly little things we can do," she said.

Teacher recognition could help teacher morale, she added. "Some type of spotlight on individual teachers who have performed well would be way of recognizing teachers and their work," she said. "The board members should encourage that type of recognition."

"THIS KIND OF pointing out, selling the school to the community is very, very important," she said.

Mrs. Rosebery said she feels that her 23 years of experience in the educational field as a teacher, parent and school volunteer have qualified her to serve effectively on the school board. Having taught in schools in Washington, D.C., and in various districts in Arizona, she said she can bring the board insight from different school systems.

A Midland resident for six years, Mrs. Rosebery has served as a Bowie PTA board member, a Head Start Volunteer and a classroom volunteer. She presently is serving as a member of the Head Start Policy Council, the Board of Directors of the Permian Basin Center for Battered Women, vice president of the Human Resources Advisory Committee of the Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission, lector at St. Ann's Catholic Church and chairman of the Parent and Family Life Education program for the Bowie PTA.

Mrs. Rosebery periodically works as a public relations consultant. She is married to Richard J. Rosebery and has two children.

Golding, who is married to Patricia Linehart Golding and has three children, has served as chairman of the 1979 Christmas Parade and as a member of the Midland Jaycees and the Midland Downtown Lion's Club. He has coached in Little League soccer and basketball programs and is a high school Sunday school teacher at Holy Trinity Episcopal Church. He is the owner of Upstairs Downstairs and Golding's.

"IT HAS NEVER been more important to have a businessman on our school board than it is now," Golding said. "With our tremendous growth it is essential we have someone who understands the everyday dealings of a business."

He pointed out that the Midland school system is a $36 million business.

"My belief is that a school board member should have a broad background of experience and knowledge. He should be able to understand how complex it is to run a school system," he said.

Sensitivity to the needs of others, an awareness of current problems, tolerance and an unbiased responsibility to all schools are other characteristics important to a school board member, he said. A board member's primary purpose is to set policies and delegate the authority to carry out those policies, he added.

Upton County water battle expected to resume

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

RANKIN — Another encounter appears to be brewing between Upton County landowners, who don't want to pay for water they'll not be getting, and Rankin-McCamey city dwellers, who are running out of water.

This time, the conflict is over a proposed $19.5 million bond issue to pipe "good, sweet water" from fields southeast of Rankin in Crockett County and into the homes and businesses in the two towns of about 1,400 households. The two towns are about 15 miles apart; Rankin is about 55 miles south of Midland.

The Upton County Water District has not yet called an election on the proposal which, say the critics, would end up costing taxpayers $54.5 million in interest and principal over a 17-year period.

"Right now, there's not much we can do to stop it," said Midkiff rancher Odis Holiman, who is chairman of the 100-plus-member Upton County Landowners Association, which has made itself an adversary of the water district. "This thing (bond issue) is coming up so fast and quick."

Two years ago, the association fought a courtroom case — and the eminent-domain powers — to get landowners exempted from the taxing water district, which, they claimed, they would pay into and but not benefit from one iota. They lost on the homefront, lost in the state appellate court and then considered pooling additional resources for legal fees and taking their case to the U.S. Supreme Court; they didn't or haven't.

HOWEVER, HOLIMAN and his cohorts plan to campaign against the proposal via meetings to educate the 4,000 people in the county on what the water district and its attorney-adviser, John Menefee, are presenting to the voters.

The landowners, including farmers and ranchers and the non-resident landowners and oil royalty owners in Midland and elsewhere in the state, fear that they may be burdened with the taxes, get none of that "good, sweet" water for use outside the towns, and will end up paying for the town's water supplies.

The landowners, who recognize that Rankin and McCamey need water, contend that the city dwellers ought to pay for what they get. The townspeople, represented by Menefee, claim that the law of eminent domain provides for the survival of a city and its people and that Rankin, the county seat, and McCamey, an oil-boom town, are bound to do what they must for the well-being and survival of the people.

Water wells in the McCamey-Rankin area are running dry or are being fouled by brackish waters from the Pecos River, and, possibly, from oil fields.

On Tuesday in Rankin and on Wednesday in McCamey, the water district's legal and financial adviser, hydrologist, and engineer explained the proposal to the public. The plan calls for about 50 miles of water lines, a 1 million gallon water tank for Rankin and a 1¾ million gallon water tank for McCamey, a 500,000-gallon gathering tank near the field site and a 1 million gallon reserve tank to be built near Rankin. The Rankin supply line would carry 1,260 gallons per minute and the McCamey line would handle 1,132 gallons per minute.

THE FIELD, MENEFEE said, has about 80,000 acre feet of water, which, without being recharged, would last the two towns 70 years.

The bond program, described by The Rankin News as "without doubt the most ambitious program of its kind," would effect a tax rate of 35 cents per $100 valuation over a 10-year-period; the 1982 countywide valuations are about $800 million.

The bonds, according to the News, to which Menefee referred The Reporter-Telegram, would be sold at 13½ percent interest and would be retired in 10 years, reported the News. New production wells would be scheduled every five-year period through 2015. Construction cost through that year would run almost $17 million; engineering fees, $1.4 million; and legal fees and cost of court trials, almost $500,000; fiscal fee, $585,000, and notices, $95,000.

What the News and Menefee, whom the landowners, especially the more outspoken farmers and ranchers, are wary of and whom Menefee calls "the salt of the earth," did not reveal was this: The estimated ultimate cost of the undertaking would be $54.5 million and not just the principal sum of $19.5 million, said Holiman and Linda Dusek, secretary of the association and its first chairman. Both noted that the water district's bond broker, Jack Brown, said interest over a 17-year period — not 10 years — would amount to $35 million. Supposedly, the minerals — oil and gas — values would account for most of the taxing revenue to pay off the indebtedness.

"IT'S A FACT that the landowners will have to pay for that if the oil plays out," said an alarmed Mrs. Dusek, who farms with her husband Carlos in the Midkiff area north of Rankin.

"They say the oil companies will be picking up 95 percent of the tab," Mrs. Dusek said, "and I'm sure they are." But should Upton County voters approve the bond issue and should the price of oil continue dropping, then landowners may be paying more and more in taxes, particularly if valuations are raised, Mrs. Dusek noted.

The water district was formed in 1977 by an act of the Texas Legislature and as the towns of Rankin and McCamey were running low on water, good drinking water. Menefee helped draft the bill, which created the district.

And Holiman conceded that Rankin and McCamey need good water, and he doesn't object to townspeople getting their due.

"It's just the method they're going after it," said Holiman, who surmised that Menefee and the five-member water board, headed by Billy Rankin, are trying to get passage of the measure with a minimum of hassle and interference. "They (townspeople) don't know what the score is. The county is going to go bankrupt."

"There's water available at a cheaper price," said Holiman. "We know something about water."

"I'll tell you what, you can sure buy bottled water cheaper than that ($19.5 million plus interest)."

Holiman said the landowners are going to try to defeat the issue.

"It's going to take some campaigning to stop it if we can stop it," he said. "We're going to give it a whirl."

DIALOGUE: T. Cullen Davis

Just after midnight on Aug. 2, 1976, said prosecutors, a man in black wielding a pistol walked into a $6 million Fort Worth mansion and brutally attacked four persons.

A 12-year-old girl died in the basement, a single slug ripping through her chest. Her mother, Priscilla Davis, estranged wife of a millionaire businessman, fell from a similar shot in the chest. She watched her lover die under a siege of bullets that riddled his body. Moments later, a family friend lay in the darkness outside the mansion, forever paralyzed from a slug that slashed through his ribcage and into his spine.

With the help of attorney Racehorse Haynes, Davis fought the state of Texas in a courtroom battle that proved one of the most sensational in history, and on Nov. 17, 1977, 12 jurors said T. Cullen Davis was an innocent man, free to go.

But nine months later, Davis found himself behind bars again — this time charged with contracting the murders of the judge in his divorce case and 14 other persons.

But the ensuing trial ended abruptly on Jan. 22, 1979, when a mistrial was declared after the jury became hopelessly deadlocked. The jury count stood: guilty, 8; not guilty, 4.

The re-trial ended definitively on Nov. 9, 1979 — when Davis once more walked out of the courtroom, an innocent man under the nation's judicial system.

He met evangelist James Robison in April 1980, and after receiving counseling, came into the public limelight again on May 4, 1980, when he made a public profession of faith in Jesus Christ at First Baptist Church in Fort Worth.

He had two "not guilty" verdicts under his belt. But whether Davis knew it or not, he was on trial again, this time before the highest tribunal of them all — the Almighty.

There were skeptics; there were believers. There were those who swore a guilty man had been set free, and there were those who were convinced an innocent man had been "set-up" and charged with the deeds of another.

During his trials in the state of Texas, Davis — admittedly spiritually lost at the time — maintained that he was innocent. But what does this man of controversy have to say in retrospect, from the vangatage point of one who now, he claims, "has Christ in his heart"?

In an exclusive interview with Patrick Dearen of The Reporter-Telegram on Friday in Midland, T. Cullen Davis testified before God and the world.

"I probably appreciate people more than I did before as individuals. That could've been one effect of having spent so much time in jail..."

"I couldn't figure out why all these thousands of people would be singling me out to pray for. And of course, I can see it now after it's all over."

"There's no doubt I had a great deal of ill feeling toward certain people who were trying to do me in. After becoming a Christian, I shortly ceased to think about it..."

Question: Do you come to Midland often?

Answer: No, not a lot. It's been quite a while since I've been to Midland. I've got business in both Midland and Odessa, and the last time I came out here was just to Odessa. But I'll be going by the business and looking into it while I'm here.

Q: Are you traveling around quite a bit, making Christian testimonies?

A: Yes, taking care of business and giving testimonies in churches or Full Gospel Businessmen's meetings or in some schools and Bible colleges.

Q: This is the one question I have to ask: You were on trial in the American judicial system, and you're an innocent man, under that system: You've become a Christian now, and your only judge is God. Are you prepared to still maintain your innocence before Him?

A: Sure.

Q: How did the overall experience, the courts, the jail, affect you personally?

A: Well, that's a tough one to answer. I probably appreciate people more than I did before as individuals. That could've been one effect of having spent so much time in jail — and not just the act of spending the time in jail, but the interest that so many people all over the country took in my case, took in me, or whatever motivated them. Their interest in me was deeply appreciated and that probably made me more appreciative or more aware of

(See DIALOGUE, Page 4B)

Changes made in planning department

A re-organization of the City Planning Department has enabled increased enforcement of various city codes which should produce the overall result of improving the appearance of Midland.

Code enforcement had been the responsibility of the Building Inspections Department, but demands from developments in Midland kept the division and its inspectors involved in regulating construction, limiting the ability to monitor existing conditions regulated by other city codes.

The recent move that put code enforcement in the planning division should "allow it to receive the attention we feel it deserves," said Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development.

A somewhat greater space availability in the Planning Department also contributed to the decision to re-organize the department. The code enforcement office now is operating with an administrator and one inspector with one more to be added soon, noted Hennessy.

"Since code enforcement has suffered from circumstances in the past, the task of catching up will take some time," he said.

Among the various codes which will receive increased attention by the section are those which relate to zoning.

ZONING REGULATIONS and districts are intended to promote the health, safety and general welfare of the city, he said. In addition, the codes are designed to lessen traffic congression, secure fire safety, prevent overcrowding and facilitate provision of water-sewer service, transportation, parks, schools and other public requirements.

Zoning, Hennessy added, also encourages appropriate use of land throughout the city consistent with a comprehensive plan.

In this area, violations are cropping up with the increasing number of businesses being operated in residential zones. According to the city code, no business may be conducted in residential zones, and no land in the city may be used for anything other than a single family residence until a Certificate of Occupancy and Compliance is received from the Building Inspection Department or Planning Department at City Hall.

A city code also deals with the problem of parked junk vehicles which include those that are inoperative, lack current license plates or state motor vehicle inspection stickers. Wrecked, dismantled or partially dismantled vehicles or those which remain inoperable for more than 120 days are designated as junk vehicles and are declared public nuisances, according to the code.

SUCH VEHICLES must be moved within 10 days after notice is received from the city of Midland. Owners of junk vehicles may have them removed at no cost if they sign owner's consent forms at the Code Enforcement Office.

Most common code violations include those which relate to building structures — adding on rooms, pouring concrete drives and sidewalks or paving parking lots without first obtaining a building permit from the Inspections Department.

Building permits also are required for adding carports, Hennessy noted. In most areas, a minimum of 20 to 30 feet is required from the face of the building to the front property line, not the curb.

Also in violation are those persons who live in travel trailers or mobile homes that are outside a mobile home park or a mobile home district.

The code further states that travel trailers which exceed 20 feet in length must be kept within a residential backyard, and the trailer should not be parked witin five feet of the side property line. Trailers can be parked on the street in front of houses for no longer than four hours.

Codes also require city home and landowners to clean and mow their property whether it be at a residence or a vacant lot. Sometimes, especially in cases of vacant lots, it is difficult to notify the property owner who is in violation, Hennessy said. However, the city will make every effort to contact the owner. High weed violations must be corrected within 10 days following notification from the city.

A SIMILAR PROCEDURE provides for removal of dilapidated or dangerous buildings. Following notification, the owner has 15 days to commence demolition or repairs. Owners also may have structures in violation demolished at no cost by signing consent forms in the Code Enforcement Office.

Another area of concern deals with use of signs, said Hennessy. All signs must have a city permit before they may be erected. There are numerous restrictions as to sign height, width and placement to avoid traffic view obstructions as well as clutter along the streets.

All temporary and portable signs also are subject to licensing, and must meet various requirements. Hennessy said portable signs are intended for temporary advertising only and may be displayed no longer than 60 days and removed for a minimum of 60 days before they may be displayed again. They may not be utilized to advertise for "help wanted."

Most city code violations are punishable for a fine not to exceed $200 per day for serious or flagrant violations, according to Hennessy.

Code enforcement would appreciate any help or assistance in pointing out possible violations, and would like to encourage those who are in violation to remedy the problem without action from the city.

For additional information or to report suspected violations, please contact the code enforcement office of the Planning and Community Development Department at City Hall, 683-4281, extension 239.

Individuals wishing to purchase tickets for two luncheons and two banquets scheduled during the West Texas Chamber of Commerce annual convention here, but not wishing to register for the entire convention, may do so at the Midland Chamber of Commerce Monday and Tuesday. Registration desk for the convention will open at 9 a.m. Wednesday at the Midland Hilton, convention headquarters.

Featured speaker at Friday night's dinner banquet at the Midland Country Club will be Nancy Hays Teeters, member of the Federal Reserve System's Board of Governors. Ms. Teeters will speak on "Monetary Policy and the Economy — Challenges of the '80s." She has served as staff economist for the Federal Reserve Board and formerly was assistant staff director and chief economist for the House Committee on the Budget. The banquet will be preceded by a 6 p.m. reception.

Thursday night's Cultural Awards Banquet will be held at the Hilton. Awards for outstanding cultural achievements are scheduled to be presented to four West Texans. A special program will highlight the evening. Reception is to begin at 6:30 p.m., with dinner to be served at 7:15 p.m.

Everett J. "Ebb" Grindstaff of Ballinger, incoming president of Lions International, will be the featured speaker at Thursday's luncheon at the Hilton. Grindstaff is chairman of the Upper Colorado River Authority and a long-time director of the WTCC.

Other speakers are scheduled to be heard throughout the convention, which runs Wednesday through Friday, including Ed Coltharp, WTCC's executive vice president.

Students accepted

ODESSA — Three University of Texas of the Permian Basin students recently joined another 21 students accepted into medical schools throughout the state through 1981.

Dr. Edwin B. Kurtz, professor and chairman of life science, said 60 percent of the UTPB students who have applied to medical and dental schools have been accepted. Traditionally, he said, only one of every three Texas residents who apply are accepted.

Edward D. "Ned" Furst, post-baccalaureate chemistry student, has been accepted to the Texas Tech Medical School. Furst is a transfer student from Southwest Texas State University in San Marcos.

Craig Daniel, life science senior, is a transfer from Odessa College. Daniel has been accepted by the UT Health Science Center at San Antonio.

Dan Cepero, life science junior, has been accepted by two schools of medicine, Baylor Medical School and Southwestern Medical School. He is a transfer student from both Odessa College and UT Arlington. He has not made a decision on which school he will attend.

Kurtz said that the application process of medical school takes anywhere from one and a half to two years and students go through rigorous screening. Admission is based on undergraduate grade point average, scores on national admission tests, local pre-professional advisory committee recommendations and personal interviews at prospective medical schools, he said.

"Medical schools are looking for students well balanced in all these areas," Kurtz said. "A deficiency in one area is enough to deny admission."

THE DECISION TO HAVE A BABY COULD SOON BE BETWEEN YOU, YOUR HUSBAND AND YOUR SENATOR.

For everyone who until now thought something like this could never happen. It has begun.

Last month, the United States Senate Judiciary Committee took an unprecedented first step toward depriving you of your most fundamental personal rights.

The right to have the number of children you want. When you want them. Or to have none at all.

They have approved the "Hatch Amendment" to the Constitution which will now go to the Senate floor. If this amendment becomes law, birth control choices might be limited at the same time your Constitutional right to choose an abortion is taken away.

Birth control such as IUD's and some forms of the Pill could be outlawed. Even when your pregnancy was due to rape or incest, abortion could be illegal.

Amazing as it sounds, this nightmare is becoming a reality.

New post created by Odessa PD

ODESSA — In what is probably a first for the department, Chief of Police Alan Stewart has announced the creation of a public information position and promoted Lt. Russell "Rusty" Baker to the post.

"To my knowledge, this is the first time the department has had a public information officer," said Stewart, who had been Chief of Police in Plainview prior to becoming chief of the Odessa force eight months ago. "We did it in Plainview and it worked well there.

"There are numerous news media in this area who talk to a variety of (officers). It disrupts us and results in conflicting versions of a story because of hipshot information. That's a disservice to us, the media and the public, and it often causes misunderstandings and hard feelings."

Baker has been on the force 26 years and was a sergeant in the detective division prior to his promotion Friday. His main function in the new post will be to gather and disseminate newsworthy information to reporters, said Stewart.

Noting the symbiotic relationship between police and reporters, Stewart added: "Over the years, my criticism of law enforcement agencies is their traditional tendency toward secrecy. The best way (the media) can help us is to get information to the public. We want the public to know what's going on.

"Lt. Baker is cordial and recognizes the importance of getting information to the media. He also knows what should not be passed on: something that might undermine an investigation or embarrass innocent parties.

"The public information officer position should be advantageous to both (sides) and thus improve the police-media relationship."

Discussion of plans leads Library Week observance

"Get to Know a Lifelong Friend — Your Library" is theme of Texas Library Week, which begins today.

And, perhaps by coincidence, helping launch the observance in Midland is Hoyt Galvin, a library consultant, who will discuss plans for the proposed four-story downtown Midland County Public Library at 8 p.m. Monday in the lobby of Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

Galvin, who heads up a library consulting firm in Charlotte, N.C., will be speaking at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Library, a volunteer group which helps to promote and enhance the library.

Galvin has been working on plans for the envisioned library since 1981.

He has spent more than 30 years as a public library administrator and library service leader and has been a library building consultant for the last decade.

Texas Gov. William P. "Bill" Clements Jr., in issuing a proclamation declaring this week Library Week in Texas, said that "The future of our state depends upon a well-informed public.

"Public libraries, as well as the libraries in schools and colleges and universities, provide both the information that Texans need and the information that makes their lives fuller."

area in brief

Businessmen seek bank charter

ANDREWS — Six Andrews and Brownfield business and professional men have filed an application to form in Andrews a National Bank to be capitalized with $3 million. The application has been accepted by the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency in Washington, D.C., and is now on file in the office of the Regional Administrator of National Banks in Dallas.

Filing the petition were James Arthur Bintz, Elvin Brownlee, Daniel Sullivan and Ernest Thornton, all of Andrews, and Sammy Spikes and Lewis Nance, both of Brownfield.

The proposed bank, to be located off North Main Street and just south of Mustang Drive, is to the chartered under the logo "National Bank of Andrews" or "Andrews National Bank," according to The Andrews County News.

The bank's application asks for 86,250 shares, of which 70,000 are to be issued, at a par value of $20 per share and a $40 per-share sale price. The $3 million capitalization is divided between $1.5 million capital and $1.5 million surplus.

Alpine to celebrate centennial

ALPINE — Alpine will celebrate its centennial Western style here Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

The four-day celebration will include a rodeo, parades, chuckwagon meals, dances, arts and crafts shows and food booths, a historical pageant and trail rides.

Leukemia 'Cure-a-thon' slated

ODESSA — An American Bicycle Association's "Leukemia Race for Life" on June 19 and "the Corporate Race for Life" will be among highlights of the Leukemia Society of America's Cure-a-thon Week on the week of June 14.

The ABA race will be on the ABA Roadrunner Track at West 16th and Chaparral streets. The race by the corporate man will be at Permian Mall.

Other fund-raising events will include demonstrations by the Odessa Boys' Club Judo Team and at the mall June 18.

Last year, the Odessa ABA chapter raised $5,000 for the Leukemia Society; nationwide, the ABA raised $220,000 for the society's research and other programs geared to find a cure for leukemia.

Those interested in biking for the society's benefit may contact Linda Worley at 367-3491 or 337-7989.

CAF to join Graham air show

GRAHAM — Confederate Air Force warbirds from the World War II era will rend the air with prop blasts and popping piston engines and the stacatto sounds of strafing today at a CAF Cactus Squadron CAF airshow at the Graham Airport.

CAF "Ghost Squadron" aircraft in the show include the North American P-51D Mustang, the Grumman Wildcat, the Chance Vought F4U Corsair, North American B-25 Mitchell, Lockheed P-39 Lightning and others.

Along with CAF colonels and colonels' ladies at the show will be Masajiro "Mike" Kawato, a Japanese Zero Ace who is credited with shooting down Greg "Pappy" Boyington in Boyington's Corsair. Kawato, who will be available for signing autographs, set a record flight in a single-engine aircraft by flying a 5,200-mile solo trans-Pacific flight.

Andrews sheriff's deputy hired

ANDREWS — Sam Jones, a former Andrews city patrolman, has been hired as a deputy to Sheriff Wayne Farmer.

Jones, 25, is a native of Lamesa and has worked in law enforcement in Levelland, Plains, and Henrietta.

individuals' problems than I used to be....

I was probably more self-centered before, which is the humanistic mind. That's what humanism is; it's self-centeredness. And I was probably more interested in my own pleasure before — you know, the me-first attitude.

Q: On a couple of occasions your fate rested in the hands of 12 people, and juries sometimes make mistakes. Do you feel that God was looking out for you and giving you perhaps a second chance to work for Him — rather than allowing something evil to befall you — even though you weren't a Christian?

A: At the time, no such thought occurred to me. I wasn't even thinking of God in the concept that He was guiding anything pertaining to my trials.

Q: Looking back, do you think He was guiding?

A: Yeah, looking back. And it probably relates pretty much to all those peole praying for me.... I'm talking about people I didn't know or (who) had never even seen me, writing and praying.

You know, that has to be something that the Lord, the Holy Spirit, was doing.... it's not something they just felt compelled to do. Why single me out, out of thousands and thousands? I couldn't figure out why all these thousands of people would be singling me out to pray for. And of course, I can see it now after it's all (over). Today I can see it.

Q: Are you encountering much skepticism around the country about your Christian conversion?

A: Well, even some of my friends were skeptics. Some people thought I was doing it for publicity, or some thought I was doing it to get some leg up on somebody else that had some civil cases against me, for some advantage I might get because of it. But...I don't have any skeptics among any of my friends now.

And the people that didn't know me, I'd say there's still some skeptics out there. They're just anti-Christian anyway. Most of them are anti-Christian. I don't think that there's any real good Christian skeptics at all.

Q: Someone once said that being a Christian is more than just saying you are; it's a life that reflects it. Do you think that your life over the last two years has made most of your friends think you're sincere?

A: I think a Christian has to act like it. I think that's not proof, but it's a good indication.

Q: How did you meet James Robison?

A: A mutual friend of ours called me up and wanted to know if he could bring James over to my office one day, and I told him come ahead. We spent some time — about half a day, as a matter of fact — in my office. He was talking about his ministry, what he was doing, how he thought that the country could be turned around — politically, mainly. And so I got to know James and liked his style. He has good style.

Q: How long had you known him prior to the day he came over to your house (to lead you to Christ)?

A: About three weeks.... He's going to make a big impact on the country here soon. I mean, he's made an impact, but he's even going to do more. He's going to be dynamite, I think.

Q: How about yourself? What's the future hold for you, as far as Christian work?

A: I'm not quite sure. The Lord, I know, wants me to help pull the body of Christ together, to work in harmony. And He's given me a prophecy to that effect; He's given me instruction to that effect. I don't know how He wants me to do it...I just know factually that's what He wants me to do. He said there were three prophets that have come into my life that He wants me to work with, getting them to work together. He wants me to be an adviser to the prophets.

Q: No one, I don't think, could go through the things you've gone through in your legal troubles without having some ill feelings toward certain parties. Now that you've become a Christian, have you managed to overcome those?

A: Before I became a Christian, there's no doubt I had a great deal of ill feeling toward certain people who were trying to do me in.... After becoming a Christian, I shortly ceased to think about it and no longer harbor any ill will or anything else toward any of those people that were doing this, that in my mind were just unfit to be where they were — be it (holding) public office or otherwise.

They were a thorn in my side, but I have overcome all that. I laid that aside a long time ago.

DEATHS

Mrs. B.F. Haag

Mrs. B. Frank (Velma) Haag of Midland died Saturday in a Midland hospital.

Services will be at 11 a.m. Monday in the First United Methodist Church sanctuary. Burial will follow in Fairview Cemetery.

Jessie R. Wiseman

Jessie R. Wiseman, 101, of 2800 W. Illinois Ave., died Friday. Services will be Tuesday at South Union Baptist Church in Maywood, Mo. Services in Maywood are under the direction of Ball-Coder Funeral Home of Ewing, Mo. Local arrangements are being handled by Newnie W. Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Wiseman was born Oct. 13, 1880, in Maywood. She was educated at LaGrange, Mo., College. She married the late William C. Lewis on Oct. 2, 1901, in Maywood. The couple moved to Chicago shortly thereafter, and lived there until his death in 1912. Mrs. Wiseman returned to Maywood and the family farm. She resumed her study of music at the Quincy, Ill., Conservatory of Music and taught many young people music in her community. She married Daniel Wiseman in 1926 and continued life on their family farm in Missouri. Wiseman passed away in 1958. Mrs. Wiseman was the church organist at her church for over 40 years and was very active in the American Red Cross during World War I. She moved to Midland in 1970 and was one of the earliest residents of Trinity Towers. She was a member of the South Union Baptist Church of Maywood and a member of the Daughters of the American Revolution in LaGrange, Mo.

Survivors include a daughter, Rebecca Lowe of Midland; two granddaughters, Constance A. Lowe of San Antonio and Victoria Lowe of Dallas; and a stepdaughter-in-law, Mrs. D.P. Wiseman of Maywood.

Olivia S. Perez

Services will be at 2 p.m. Monday at St. Joseph's Cathlic Church with the Rev. Robert Bush officiating. Burial will be at St. Joseph's Cemetery under the direction of Gilbreath Funeral Home.

She was born July 15, 1934, at Refugio County. She moved to Statnon 10 years ago from Westbrook. She was married to Pedro Perez Sept. 16, 1970, at Colorado City.

Survivors include her husband of Stanton; five sons, Joe Moreno, Ruben Moreno, Berado Moreno and Guadalupe Moreno, all of Stanton, and Robert Moreno of Lenorah; three daughters, Yolanda Flores, Biriginia Moreno and Mary Ann Perez, all of Lenorah; two stepsons, Alexander Perez of Tarzan and John Mike Perez of Midland; two stepdaughters, Aurora Gonzalez of Ackerly and Gloria Ybarra of Huntsville; four brothers, Romulo Salines, Merado Salines and Victor Salines Jr., all of Rochester, and Juan Salines of Falfurrias; two sisters, Rafejia Moreno and Trinidad Salines, both of Rochester; 11 grandchildren and 15 stepgrandchildren.

Jetliner comes to rest on one wing

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Continental Airlines jet landed with a blown-out tire and rolled to a stop on one wing at Mueller Municipal Airport Saturday night.

No injuries were reported on Flight 17, which was bound for El Paso from Houston, authorities said.

It was not immediately known how many passengers were on the plane.

Crew members noticed that a tire was blown on the left landing gear as it approached the airport around 9:30 p.m., a Continental spokesman said.

The crew notified the Austin control tower about the emergency, the spokesman said.

Rescue workers were standing by when the plane came in.

All the passengers and crew members were safely removed and planes continued landing on the runway, airport police officer Willie Green said.

I have a complaint against my lawyer. Where do I take it to besides him?

I hired this guy on E. Front Street last summer. He said it would only take a few days to take care of it. Since then I have called him. He is never in. But the person who answered the phone takes my number and says he will return my call, but he never does. I made an appointment to see him. He tells me I'll hear from him next week, which I never do.

This has happened more than once or twice. He sure took my $500 though. Does the bar association look into things like this? If so, I need to know where to write or call. Thank you. — D.M.S.

ANSWER: Bill Kerr, president of the Midland County Bar Association, requests that you contact him at 683-5291 for assistance. According to Mr. Kerr it depends on the type of grievance and circumstances as to which procedure to follow for adjustment.

A colleague at the office said he purchased a 20-year-payment life insurance policy, and a co-worker said he should have purchased a 20-year endowment policy instead. What is the difference? — J.L.

ANSWER: With both policies you pay the premiums for only 20 years, says The American Council of Life Insurance.

The 20-year payment policy then is fully "paid up" and will continue in force for the rest of your life. This can be helpful after you have retired and have less income to pay premiums but still want to maintain the coverage.

The 20-year endowment policy would have higher premiums, but after 20 years you would collect the full face value of the policy while you are still alive.

If you should die before that time, your beneficiary would be paid the full face amount. An endowment such as this would be valuable for a parent wishing to make sure money would be available for a child's college education, for instance.

Does the city charge for water used in putting out a fire? — B.P.

ANSWER: The Midland Fire Department says the city does not charge for water used in extinguishing a fire.

When can an autopsy be performed without permission of surviving spouse or next of kin? — F.K.

A coroner who has reason to suspect foul play in connection with a death has authority to order an autopsy to determine the cause of death, says the State Bar of Texas.

However, any other interference with a deceased person's body, without first obtaining consent of the surviving spouse or next of kin, is prohibited by law. Any unauthorized interference with a deceased person's body may provide the basis for a suit for damages filed by the person entitled to its custody.

Why can't jail prisoners be put to work picking up the trash along the streets and highways in Midland? I'm sure they would appreciate the exercise and Midlanders would have a cleaner town, with no tax increase or bond issue. — Mrs. J.H.

ANSWER: Capt. Roger Meurer of the Midland Police Department says there are several reasons why prisoners in the city jail are not used to collect trash on city streets and highways.

Generally, Meurer points out, prisoners in the jail are there on a short-term basis. The trustys in the jail, usually an average of eight a day, are engaged in general clean-up operations in the jail and on the jail grounds. Without this assistance, the city would have additional expenses.

Moreover, according to Meurer, if prisoners were used on city streets, there would have to be at least one guard accompanying them (more expense). There also is the possibility that civil rights of the prisoners would be violated and that some Midlanders might not want prisoners on city streets.

The city attorney's office says that use of the prisoners, who are considered innocent until sentenced, for trash collecting could be considered cruel and unusual punishment.

PBHS officials meet with accreditation committee

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The chairperson of the visiting committee for accreditation with the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools (SACS) met with Glen Walton, director of Permian Basin High School, Thursday and Friday.

Dr. Phyllis Benson, headmistress of Radford School in El Paso, was in town to assist Walton in the long and difficult process of accreditation.

"It's not a pencil and paper exercise," Ms. Benson said. "It is a very complex process."

The rest of the five-member visiting committee for accreditation will arrive in Midland to give their approval of the school after an extensive study in October. The committee will observe classes, interview administrators and teachers and review the school's self study before passing a decision.

Walton said the self study is very important to the school. "The central purpose of the self study and the accreditation process is to strengthen the confidence of the faculty," Walton said. "It isn't an investigation. It's an orientation."

The school has been active in its self study for the last six months. Walton said the process can take from one to one and a half years.

Once members of the visiting committee for accreditation give their approval to the school, it is submitted to SACS which will give the school formal approval during its regular meeting in December 1982.

Ms. Benson, who along with Walton, chose the members of the committee for accreditation, said the group has a variety of experiences.

The committee includes Sandra Maddox, Region 10 program coordinator, instructional services department; Dr. Paul Jungmeyer, academic vice president of McMurray College in Abilene; and James Milson, chairman of curriculum and instruction at the University of Texas at El Paso.

The self study, in which students, parents, teachers and board members participate, is divided into 12 sections. Ms. Benson said the results of the self study will include the identification of the educational needs of the students and how to best meet those needs, the clarity of the purpose of the school for the staff, an awareness of the strengths and weaknesses of the programs and an increase in the school's and community's confidence in the school.

Ms. Benson said the self study is important in strengthening faculty leadership and defining the goals of the school. "The professional development of the faculty is vital to a positive educational experience," she said. "They already have that and it will improve."

Typically, there is a tremendous increase in support of schools that have met the standards and criteria for accreditation, Ms. Benson said.

"The schools in Houston and Dallas (the model schools for PBHS) doubled enrollment when they received accreditation," Walton said.

Ms. Benson is a member of the Pan American Round Table, Association Teacher Educators, National Association for Supervision and Curriculum Development, director of the executive board of Pasa De Norte Unit TASCD, American Association of Elementary — Kindergarten — Nursery Educators, Day Care and Child Development Council of America, Southern Association for Children under Six, National Education Association and the International Reading Association.

She also serves as the vice president of Phi Alpha sorority, historian of the UTEP chapter of Phi Delta Kappa and Mortarboard advisor at UTEP.

Bell employees raise funds for Special Olympics

Members of Southwestern Bell's area community relations teams combined efforts to make May a special month for many of the area's disabled athletes.

The teams raised $337.50 from employee contributions and made a donation to the Area 18 Special Olympics, which includes representation from Midland-Odessa, Monahans, McCamey, Alpine, Fort Stockton and Big Spring.

The Special Olympics, which will be held in Austin in May, are designed to give disabled children the chance to compete in athletic events similar in nature to the Olympics.

According to George Ann Powers, Area 18 Special Olympics coordinator, and a special education teacher at Jane Long Elementary School, the money will be used to sponsor children to the Special Olympics and to purchase trophies, ribbons and other souvenirs to be used as prizes in Special Olympic meets throughout the year.

"This donation will help our program tremendously," Powers said. "You have no idea how much good it does these kids to get out and see the world and participate in these events."

"We're very happy to help out a worthy community program like the Special Olympics," added Sam Ogletree, district manager-community relations in Midland and the Midland-Odessa community relations team chairperson. "I am especially grateful for the solid support offered by our community relations team and employees."

Your electricity is costing more in 1982 mainly because the fuel to make it is costing more.

This year, we're paying more for fuels we use to make your electricity. This is partly because another low-cost natural gas contract has expired. But mainly it's because the price of all fuels keeps rising.

We don't make a profit on fuel; we charge our customers exactly what we have to pay for fuel. And we show the amount for "fuel" on your bill each month. The chart below shows an approximate increase in your bill this year compared to last year as a result of increasing fuel costs.

If you use (Kilowatt Hours Per Month)	Then your bill will increase about
500 KWH	$ 5.00
750 KWH	$ 7.50
1000 KWH	$10.00
1250 KWH	$12.50

At Texas Electric, we're trying to hold down fuel costs by using lignite coal — a cheaper fuel. And we're building a plant to use uranium, the lowest priced fuel available to us.

You can help hold down your bill by conserving at home. To learn how, please call us.

Election judge needed

An election judge for Democratic Party Precinct 205 is needed for the May 1 primary election, according to Darrell Smith, party chairman for Midland County.

Energy Club formed for 'young professionals'

Members sought by invitation; Facility may open in May

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

Membership is by invitation only. The invitation begins:

"The Energy Club invites you to become a member of a club designed to fill the needs of Midland's business and social leaders for a congenial place to meet with associates and friends. It will be a private club with a limited membership..."

It will be available to those 250 area residents, ranging in age from 25 to 40, who can afford $2,000 initial individual or family membership fees plus $40 monthly.

The place? 2800 N. Big Spring St. — once the home of Gianni's, and even further back Chesa Nuova. Starting May 1, it will be, after a major facelift inside and out, an exclusive private club — one which caters to the young professional set.

At least, that's the plan.

"We are trying to cater to the 25- to 40-year-old age group because we have a great number of younger people coming into town at this time."
— George Lawrence

IT'S BEING put into effect by some of Midland's concerned citizens.

"Several private citizens realized the need for a private membership club for the younger people because all the rest of the private clubs in town's membership rolls are closed — have been closed for quite some time," said club manager George Lawrence.

"We are trying to open May 1, but the date may slip due to equipment arrivals," Lawrence said.

"Membership is by invitation only. We are trying to cater to the 25- to 40-year-old age group because we have a great number of younger people coming into town at this time," he said. "After the initial 250, we are going to go up gradually in age. The maximun membership will be 500."

Those handling the membership drive include Roy Kimsey, K.M. Jastrow Sr. and Ted Lacaff. The general manager is Gudrun MacMaster.

"Gudrun and myself have between us 25 to 30 years club experience," Lawrence said. "We are doing everything in this club strictly with the membership in mind. Gudrun's husband, Richard, is the club manager at the Racquet Club. I have talked with Richard on several occasions about this club."

LAWRENCE, A member of the Club Managers Association of America and secretary treasurer of the local chapter, retired from the U.S. Air Force after 22 years of active service, much of which was spent in the club system. After leaving the NCO Club at Bitburg, Germany, in 1978, Lawrence was transferred to California, retiring in 1980 from the NCO Club at Reese Air Force Base in Lubbock.

The Energy Club "is a member of the Texas Restaurant Association. Both (organizations, the CMAA and the TRA) strive for excellence. The CMAA is geared toward clubs and keeping club managers aware of things in the industry.

"We are paying a little bit better wages than are being paid in the area and we are choosing our people selectively," Lawrence said. "Starting Monday through the opening of the club, we are bringing our people in for training sessions in exactly how we want things done at the club."

THE CLUB'S chef, Bryan Looney of Odessa, explained that he is "pulling in people he has worked with before." Although "you don't have the margin of profit that you once did because labor costs, utilities and food costs eat up a great deal of the profits," Looney said, "the (food service) industry (here) will have to pay more to get qualified help because, in most cases, people can make more working in the oil fields." Hiring and keeping trained personnel "has a lot to do with the quality of food the customer gets. If there's not somebody back there qualified to do the work, the customer's not going to get quality food."

Toward that end, the makeover plans include, "strictly sophisticated elegance in the dining room," with a more relaxed tone set in the bar, which has been enlarged to accommodate, at noon, a salad and soup bar and, in the evening hours, a piano player, Geanie Williams.

Valet parking will set the dinner mood, with serving hours being 6 or 6:30 to 10 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Lunch will be served from 11:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. The bar will open when the club opens daily and close around 1 a.m. Happy hour will be from 4:30 to 7 p.m.

AND THE menu? Dinner ranges from such common fare as chicken-fried steak, $9.25, to Steak Tartare, $8.25, generally not found on a West Texas menu. It also lists seafood, specialty vegetables, soups, dessert and among its appertizers is the well-known Texas favorite, nachos.

Lunch, ranging from $3 to $7, includes burgers, hot and cold sandwiches, omelettes and desserts. A chef's special, $7, will be served daily, plus several items on the menu are designed for the busy young weight conscious executive.

Besides installing backgammon tables and a private dining room able to accommodate approximately 15 on the main floor, the new management has converted the downstairs, which has not been utilized before, into a gameroom containing "shuffle board, video games and poker type tables."

The outside will also undergo an extensive redesign complete with landscaping for the seasons and a 7-foot high wall around the building and parking lot.

Staff Photos by Cody Bell

Leveling off

Ken Craft checks the level on the backgammon table he built and installed in The Energy Club, 2800 N. Big Spring St. A former restaurant, the building is being converted into a by-invitation-only club.

Pecan budding, grafting to be shown

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Our annual Pecan Budding and Grafting Workshop will be held at the former Semple Pecan Orchard at 4:30 p.m. Friday. This is a joint effort sponsored by the Extension Service and the Midland Pecan Growers' Association.

The location is one-half mile west of the Sandyland Pecan Shelling Plant, which is about 3½ miles south of IH 20 on State Highway 349 (Rankin Highway).

We will demonstrate the technique of patch budding and inlay bark grafting, both of which can be used to change the variety on pecan trees.

You can come, listen and observe, or, if you desire, try your hand at budding and grafting under the guidance of an experienced pecan propagator.

TRAINING AND EXAMINATION for licensing as certified commercial and non-commercial applicators of pesticides will be given in Midland Thursday at Hogan Park Activities Building, located adjacent to Cub Stadium.

Under provisions of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide and Rodenticide Act, known as FIFRA, first passed in 1947 and amended in 1972, pesticide sold within the state must be registered with the Texas Department of Agriculture and Environmental Protection Agency and classified either "restricted use" or "general use."

A "restricted use" pesticide may be used only by, or under the direct supervision of, a licensed certified applicator.

A commercial pesticide applicator is a person in the business of applying, or supervising, the use of a restricted-use pesticide on the property of another for hire or compensation. A non-commercial applicator is a person or government agency or department which wants to use restricted-use pesticides or the authority to demonstrate the use of restricted-use pesticides. City, county and state employees fall into this category.

The training will be conducted by Charles Neeb, area extension entomologist from Fort Stockton, and examinations given by representatives of Texas Department of Agriculture.

Training will start promptly at 8 a.m. on general background on agricultural chemicals with the general examination to be given just before noon. The applicant must complete this section before proceding to specific control categories.

Beginning after lunch, training will be given on ornamental and turf pest control, ornamental and turf weed control, right-of-way pest control and aquatic plant control. Examinations in these categories will require 1½ to 2 hours.

BEFORE DECIDING on what insecticide to use for controlling pests in your vegetable garden, you must first identify the pest.

Pesticides are often limited in insect control because they may control one group of insects extremely well, while being totally ineffective in controlling others.

Three pesticides currently are used widely by gardeners — carbaryl (Sevin), diazinon and malathion. Although they are effective against a wide range of chewing and sucking insects, each has limitations. For instance, Sevin does not control spider mites and malathion is not recommended for soil insect control.

Gardeners should exercise caution when using broad-spectrum insecticides because these chemicals can adversely affect non-target, beneficial insects, such as honeybees, lady bird beetles and praying mantis. When beneficial insects are destroyed, the possibility of increased pesticide use is greatly enhanced.

A pesticide with a narrow host range should be used when possible. An example of such a type of pesticide is the microbial insecticides, Bacillus thuringiensis, more commonly called B.T. It is designed to control cabbage loopers, armyworms, hornworms and several other larvae. B.T., sold under such names as Dipel, Thuricide and Biotrol, is effective, safe to use, does not harm beneficial insects, and does not require a waiting period before vegetables can be eaten.

Another specific pesticide in garden use is Kelthane. It's excellent for controlling spider mites and does not harm beneficial insects.

The best bet for the gardener in doubt about pest control is to read the product label, for it provides information about the pesticide and the insects it controls.

Midland County acres foreign-owned

AUSTIN — Three parcels — 892.8 acres — of agricultural land in Midland County have been registered as foreign owned by the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

The acreage is 0.1 percent of the county's agricultural land, says Texas Agriculture Commissioner Reagan V. Brown.

Foreign ownership of Texas agricultural land has increased from 0.5 percent in 1980 to 0.6 in 1981, according to the USDA, Brown says. Foreign-owned Texas land registered with the USDA is 792,408.2 acres valued at $884,859,162 acres.

"Land is a vital natural resource," says Brown, "and we should take steps to protect it if the acreage purchases by foreigners begin to mushroom," he says.

However, the commissioner says that the "worst threat now is in the conversion of prime farm land around large metropolitan areas to industrial or residential development." "That is a serious problem, whoever the owner may be. Solutions are also very controversial, because Texas have traditionally been against any type of land-use legislation."

"The best answers," says Brown, "is to make agricultural production as profitable as industrial and residential development, and that is what everyone in agriculture is working toward today."

Henggeler named irrigation engineer

COLLEGE STATION — Joseph C. Henggeler has been named agricultural engineer for irrigation for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service's Far West Texas District.

Henggeler

Henggeler, who is stationed in Fort Stockton, has experience in sprinkler and surface irrigation systems and in evaluating the efficiency of irrigation pumping plants. Before joining TAEX, he was employed by the Utah Power & Light Co. Before that, he was an irrigation and rice extension agent for the Peace Corps in West Africa.

AGRICULTURE

Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, TAEX director, said TAEX is "pleased" to gain Henggeler's service and expertise.

"The agricultural economy of West Texas depends heavily on efficient irrigation, and this will be the major emphasis of our educational efforts," he said.

Henggeler holds the bachelor's degrees in behaviorial science and the master's degree in irrigation science.

Texas A&M tries to be water center

COLLEGE STATION — Texas A&M University, which has the leading edge on agricultural education in Texas and has veterinary medicine all to its own, may be reaching out to become the nation's "water center."

"Water is the single most important item to the future of this state," says Fort Worth rancher Jay Pumphrey, who is chairman of Texas A&M University System's Agricultural Task Force, "(and) the time is right for Texas A&M to become the 'water center' of the United States."

The Task Force is made up of 67 agricultural and business leaders in Texas and is reviewing the A&M's six major parts: Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, Texas Forest Service, Texas Veterinary Medical Medical Diagnostic Laboratory, and non-academic programs of the College of Veterinary Medicine and College of Agriculture.

As did Pumphrey, Texas 2000 Commission director Victor Arnold headlined water as the "greatest single issue" in Texas.

"Water scarcity could disrupt the entire Texas economy," said Arnold, who heads up the commission, which was appointed by Texas Gov. Bill Clements to help Texans avoid crises and to make the most of the state resources.

Cotton situation to be discussed

LUBBOCK — Cotton farmers, ginners, marketing people and others interested in the cotton economy will be briefed on cotton-classing by instruments and will be apprised of the "overall cotton situation" in the 25th annual meeting of Plains Cotton Growers Inc. from 1:30 to 5 p.m. Wednesday in the Theater Room of Lubbock Memorial Civic Center.

Speaking on the classing system will be Jesse Moore, director of the Cotton Divison of the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Agricultural Marketing Service; Bob Hale, vice president for textile operations of the American Cotton Growers, and Jerry Harris, a farmer and ginner who is a past president of Lamesa Cotton Growers.

The Lamesa Classing Office in 1981 became the first such classing office to be fully operated by instrumentation.

Moore will talk on "Cotton Classing: Past, Present and Future." Hale will speak on "Utilization of Instrument Values for Spinning and Weaving," and Harris will talk on "An Overview of Instrument Classing at Lamesa."

Prior to the threesome's talk, National Cotton Council Vice President Earl Sears will speak on "Cotton in a Time of Trial."

Gary Ivey of Ralls is president of the PCG.

Warmer weather helps cotton planting

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Warmer weather returned to Texas this week, giving a boost to cotton planting in central areas and helping young crops already up, says Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

Young corn, grain sorghum, cotton and rice are making good growth in southern and coastal areas although rain will soon be needed for continued progress, he said in his weekly report on Texas agriculture.

Despite good early stands, crops in some areas have been plagued by rootworms, cutworms, birds and aphids. Heavy stand losses in some locations have made replanting necessary, he said.

While cotton planting continues in Central Texas and along the Upper Coast, corn and grain sorghum are still being planted in eastern areas. Grain sorghum planting also is under way in West Central Texas, and corn planting has started in the High Plains.

Land preparation and preplant irrigation continue in the Plains and Far West Texas, where irrigation of wheat and alfalfa remain active. The first cutting of alfalfa is about to be made in Far West Texas, Pfannstiel said.

Soil temperatures at the 4-inch depth continue to warm up and are now in their mid-60s to low-70s over southern, coastal and western areas, according to the Agricultural Weather Service. Readings in the Plains and North Central areas include Bushland, 55 degrees F.; Lavon Dam (near Dallas), 60; Lubbock, 61; Stephenville 63; and Waco, 56.

A good spring rain is needed over most of Texas to boost young crops, pastures and ranges, Pfannstiel said. Soil moisture is generally short in all but eastern and coastal areas and some parts of Central and South Texas.

Harvest operations continue in the Rio Grande Valley, with citrus, sugarcane, onions, watermelons and other vegetables moving to market. Onion harvesting also is in full swing in the Winter Garden.

PANHANDLE: Dryland wheat continues to suffer from lack of moisture; irrigated acreage looks good. Some corn planting has started. Preplant irrigations continue. Potato, onion and sugar beet stands look good. Alfalfa is suffering some damage from weevils. Ranges need moisture.

SOUTH PLAINS: Corn planting is active, with 10 to 15 percent of the acreage in. Land preparation and preplant irrigation continues. Onion, potato and sugar beet stands look good. Dryland wheat is in dire need of moisture. Ranges also need rain.

ROLLING PLAINS: Wheat is making excellent progress but will need moisture soon. Alfalfa is being irrigated. Cropland preparations continue; tight money situations are slowing fertilizer applications. Ranges are improving but could benefit from rain along with graze-out wheat.

NORTH CENTRAL: Some cotton planting has started. Corn and grain sorghum are up to good stands but recent cool weather has slowed growth. Wheat is heading and looks good along with oats. Livestock and forage conditions continue to improve; a little supplemental feeding is still under way.

NORTHEAST: Planting of corn and grain sorghum continues; recent cool, wet conditions have slowed operations. Wheat is making good growth along with pastures. Livestock are in good shape. Cleanup operations continue in the aftermath of recent tornadoes that destroyed some 50,000 broilers and numerous head of cattle.

FAR WEST: Preplant irrigation and land preparation continues. Alfalfa is being irrigated and the first cutting should start next week. Potatoes, onions and chile are being planted. Livestock feeding continues due to poor grazing caused by lack of moisture. Lambing continues, with an excellent crop in the making.

WEST CENTRAL: Some grain sorghum is being planted although recent cool weather has caused delays. Wheat is in dire need of moisture. Pastures and ranges are fair to good as are livestock conditions. Ranchers are marking lambs and shearing sheep. The lamb crop looks good. Some hay crops are being planted.

CENTRAL: Cotton planting is under way and ranges from 15 to 25 percent complete. Some grain sorghum is being replanted in Hill County due to poor stands caused by recent heavy rains and cool weather. Rust is severe on wheat in Bell County. Hay crops, pastures and ranges need rain. The peach crop may be lighter than first estimated.

EAST: Corn planting is nearing the halfway point while vegetable planting continues. Recent heavy rains have caused some vegetables to be replanted and cool weather has slowed growth. Pastures continue to make good growth and livestock are in good shape.

UPPER COAST: Most of the corn, grain sorghum and rice acreage has been planted, and cotton planting is nearing completion in some counties. Cool, wet conditions have hurt some early stands. Wheat continues to make good growth along with pastures. Hay crops are being planted.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Most young crops look good but could use rain. Cotton planting continues. Aphids continue to damage some young sorghum. Wheat is heading and would benefit from rain along with pastures and ranges. Home gardens are improving.

SOUTHWEST: Corn, grain sorghum and cotton are making good progress along with spring vegetables. Pecan trees are leafing out. Onion harvesting continues in full swing with stable prices. Livestock are in good shape although grazing is short due to dry conditions.

COASTAL BEND: Yellow sugarcane aphids have heavily damaged some 2,000 to 3,000 acres of grain sorghum in Lavaca County. Many sorghum and corn stands have also been damaged by birds, rootworms and cutworms. Rice planting is about 75 percent complete, with birds damaging some early stands. Birds have also damaged some wheat which is headed. Rain will be needed soon for pastures, ranges and young crops.

SOUTH: Young crops are making good growth, with early corn about 2 feet high. The sugarcane harvest stands at 31,800 acres. Harvesting of onions, watermelons and other vegetables is in full swing. About 13 percent of the grapefruit and 52 percent of the late oranges remain to be harvested. Pastures and ranges need rain.

Researcher would like to see allocation changes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Some authorities have been saying for years that the United States should pour more money into agricultural research if there is to be enough to eat in the future.

But some scientists also think it's time to overhaul the traditional method of allocating federal money so greater benefits can be realized.

One such advocate is Harlow J. Hodgson, assistant to the director of the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station, Madison, Wis.

The federal government's primary responsibility for agricultural research is vested in the Agriculture Department, specifically in the Agricultural Research Service, or ARS.

The head of ARS, Terry Kinney, observed recently that scientists will be hard-pressed to keep pace with increased demands for food in the future.

"And that means agricultural production will rely as never before on basic research and technology to overcome barriers such as soil losses on farm and rangelands," he said.

Hodgson told The Associated Press he agrees with Kinney and that agriculture "will need a revolution in new production technology" by the year 2000.

However, he said, ARS "is not doing a very good job of administering the funds they have" and should allocate more research funds to the North Central region.

The North Central region comprises Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, Ohio, South Dakota and Wisconsin.

Nurses are Special at Lubbock General

Nursing at Lubbock General Hospital is a two-way experience. It encourages you to give of yourself, and it rewards you with a unique fulfillment. Lubbock General Hospital nurses are not merely a part of one of Texas' finest medical centers. They are one of the major reasons that we are one of the finest.

The primary commitment of all our employees is excellence in patient care. As members of the health care team, nurses work closely with physicians, therapists, and technicians to meet the patient's total needs. Staff nurses do not do clerical work. They spend their time working directly with their patients, providing medical and emotional support, explaining medical problems, teaching patients to care for themselves, and responding to individual needs.

We believe that today's nurses are devoted to good nursing, and that it is our responsibility to help develop their potential. To this end, Lubbock General Hospital provides extensive and challenging programs in staff development and continuing education. In every clinical area, from Emergency to Neonatal Intensive Care, our nurses never stop learning.

We invite you to share in and contribute to our unique health care efforts.

Because we would like you to be one of our special nurses, Lubbock General now offers the most comprehensive benefits package on the South Plains . . .

Recruitment Incentive

In addition to the other benefits offered to the nurses of Lubbock General Hospital, we are pleased to offer the following recruitment bonus to all nurses beginning work at Lubbock General Hospital before June 30, 1982, and committing to employment for at least 12 months:

NITROGEN PUMP OPERATORS

TOUGH SHOES TO FILL.

Being a Nitrogen Pump Operator for The Western Company is a tough, dirty, demanding job. It means being on call 24 hours a day and working outside in all kinds of weather.

Experienced Nitrogen Pump Operators can help us maintain our position as the "PACESETTERS" in oilfield services. That makes them really valuable to us. It takes endurance, strength and dependability, and not everybody can fill those shoes.

Are you still with us? Here's what it takes to qualify:

- You must be at least 21 years old and have experience in Nitrogen Pump Operation.
- You must be able to pass our physical examination.
- You must have a good driving record.

Here's what The Western Company offers you:

- Excellent starting salaries commensurate with level of experience.
- The chance to progress as we grow.
- A full line of company paid benefits, including dental assistance.

Sure—we expect a lot from our Nitrogen Pump Operators, but that's because they're the kind of people who can stand up to a tough job.

To find out more about these opportunities in our Odessa District Office, please call (915) 683-2781. Only experienced people need apply.

Previous experience in well site geology, regional subsurface geological studies, oilfield delineation and exploitation would be advantageous.

Reservoir/Development Geologists Responsibilities in this area include conducting petrological studies aimed at defining depositional environment and diagenesis, relating log response and reservoir properties and predicting reservoir distribution in undrilled areas. A bachelor's degree in geology and previous experience in reservoir description and prediction work is required. Advanced degrees are preferred.

Sedimentologists Core description and environmental interpretation of either carbonate or sandstone-shale depositional sequences and relating depositional environments to regional geology is involved. An advanced degree is required.

Data Management Geologists Primary activities will include consulting and training exploration users on available application and machine mapping packages; and developing a Management Information System. Other duties involve collecting, editing and entering geological and geophysical data into data bases, and interfacing with your computer programming counterparts in the EXPEC Computer Center and with application users in the Geological and Geophysical Department.

Required is a bachelor's degree in Geology and a minimum of 5 years' oil industry experience with at least half of it in geological computer applications.

A sound working knowledge of programming is necessary in order to deal effectively with computer personnel.

Cartographers

We need Cartographers with a minimum of 7 years' geological and geophysical drafting experience and Senior Cartographers with a minimum of 9 years' experience. Seniors must be responsible, experienced lead personnel.

Geophysicists

Processing Analysts Requires 5 years' experience for work within a seismic processing team. You'll be responsible for parameter selection and quality control of results.

Senior Processing Geophysicists 5 to 10 years' experience required. You'll lead a processing team, and be responsible for analysis of seismic problems and processing solutions.

Geophysical Processing Supervisors You'll need over 10 years' experience, including responsible supervisory work in seismic processing. You'll be responsible for integrating/coordinating the work of several processing teams.

Interpretation Geophysicists General requirements include a degree in geophysics, or an equivalent combination of related degrees and experience.

Candidates should have a strong technical and geological orientation, plus good knowledge of seismic data acquisition, and the basic principles and techniques of processing.

Seismic Interpreters Requires 5 years' major oil company type experience, with a capability to assume responsibility for independent analyses.

Senior Seismic Interpreters Need 5 to 8 years' responsible independent interpretation experience, utilizing all types of exploratory data. You should be proficient in applying the most recently developed interpretational and seismic data quality enhancement technology.

Senior Geophysicists—Interpretation Supervisors Requires at least 8 years' experience in same areas as Senior Seismic Interpreters (above), but with supervisory experience. You should have demonstrated capability to supervise technical and imaginative geological/geophysical interpreters.

Senior Geophysical Specialists We need experts in seismic velocity measurement and analyses; seismic-stratigraphic interpretation; or data base analysis and mapping technology and application.

Research & Development Geophysicists

We seek geophysicists, physicists, electrical engineers and computer scientists with proven competence in one or more of the following: elastic wave propagation, wave equation methods, signal and image processing, forward and inverse modeling and interactive graphics.

You'll work on development and implementation of an integrated system of seismic data acquisition, data processing and interpretation designed to solve the most difficult and complex geophysical problems. There is close cooperation of geological, geophysical and R&D functions, with early field testing of newly developed R&D technology.

Candidates should have an advanced degree in geophysics, physics or related discipline, with at least 5 years' relevant work experience.

You Know It's Worth $2,000 To Become One.

The only thing stopping a lot of good truckers from becoming owner/operators is the tractor cost. That's why Aero-Mayflower developed a new tractor lease program. It's a way for owner/operators to get started. All it takes to begin is $2,000. As an owner/operator with Mayflower you'll get:

1. 56% of the line haul ($560 out of every $1,000.)
2. If the fuel goes up, so does your fuel surcharge.
3. Training (if you need it) at our expense.
4. Your own business with a very successful company behind you.

We'd like to tell you more. Call 1-800-428-1220 (in INDIANA call 1-800-382-1212) between 8 a.m. and 4:30 p.m. Eastern Standard Time.

5 YEAR-50,000 MILE UNMATCHED WARRANTY FROM DODGE

Today's customer wants a long lasting, trouble-free car with a warranty at least as long as they're financing on their car.

People shopping for a new car today, see many reasons as to why buy the other guy's car. "With one you get a factory rebate, buy your car here and receive free air conditioning; and some even offer to fill your tank." All this can be very confusing when you get right down to purchasing your new car.

Dodge feels that the best deal on any car is only as good as the automobile itself. That's why we're offering a 5 year-50,000 mile warranty on any passenger car. We are so confident about our product quality, we will stand behind it for the next 5 years or 50,000 miles.

Our three-part Customer Protection Plan means that we must continue to improve product reliability by doing the job right the first time.

5 YEAR OR 50,000 MILE WARRANTY ON POWER TRAIN COMPONENTS

On any Dodge passenger car purchased, we will provide at no additional cost, 5 year- 50,000 mile customer protection on the engine, transaxles, transmission and drive axles.

Dodge has made great strides in the quality control of each automobile. We feel we now have the best product in the industry including both domestic and import cars. And we'll prove it with our warranty!

We are taking big steps to meet your (the car buyer) needs, that's why we believe our responsibilty goes even further. For example:

5 YEAR 50,000 MILE NO-COST REGULARLY SCHEDULED MAINTENANCE PROGRAM

We will provide at no cost to you, a regularly scheduled maintenance program for all new cars sold.

This scheduled maintenance program will enable you to have your oil changed, fluids checked, belts adjusted and any other scheduled maintenance performed at no charge- Free for the next five years or 50,000 miles!

How can we do this? Dodge and other Chrysler products maintenance costs are up to $200 BELOW the competitors. Our low maintenance costs promt us to take this action as well as our confidence in our product.

But we will go even one step farther to stand behind our product.

5 YEAR 50,000 MILE WARRANTY AGAINST RUST PERFORATION

We will warrant all exterior sheet metal on Dodge passenger cars against rust perforating, again at no cost to you.

Dodge and the Chysler Corporation has taken extra care for body coating, no under coating is needed and no extra cost for the protection of your car.

We're not only telling the public that our cars are better than our competitors, we're backing this with the extended warranty which now leads the industry.

THE MILEAGE THIS WAGON GETS LEAVES 34 OTHERS BEHIND. VOLVO DIESEL.

29 EPA EST MPG 37 EPA EST HWY These figures were turned in by the Volvo diesel wagon during recent EPA mileage tests which compared Volvo against the 34 other cars in its class. Including diesels from Mercedes and Peugeot. Volvo outdid them all. Of course, fuel mileage is just one advantage the Volvo diesel wagon has over the competition. See your Volvo dealer and he'll show you more.

*The Volvo diesel wagon with manual transmission and overdrive. Use these numbers for comparisons. Actual mpg may differ depending on speed, trip length and weather. Actual highway mpg will probably be lower.

*The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 12.5% for 90% loan-value. Interest will be charged at the most recent six-month Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5% rounded to the highest 1/4 of 1%, but not to exceed the maximum rate allowed by law. Payments on GPAM mortgages are graduated so as to increase 7.50% each year for the remaining four years. At the end of the first five year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 3.5. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principal exceeds 125%. At each 5-year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan.
ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 13.25% ON 90% LOANS.

A serene living environment just minutes from downtown Midland... with payment plans you will want to take advantage of

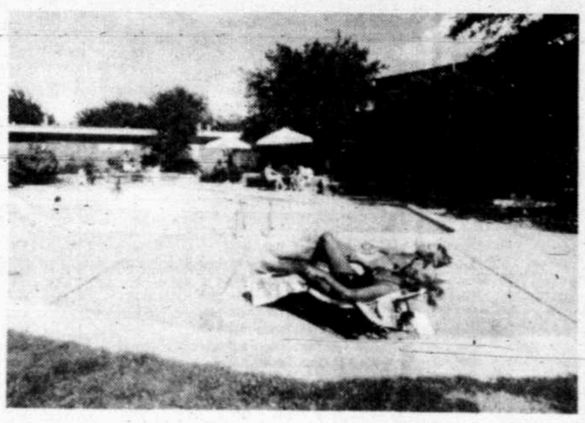

Come to our Open House this weekend

Saturday - 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. • Sunday - 12 noon to 5 p.m.

A secure townhome where you can relax with good friends...a beautifully landscaped inner courtyard with swimming pool...a serene living environment...and monthly payments for about what you pay in rent...These are the joys of living at lovely Town Plaza.

REBATES: Our new financing package allows you to become a proud homeowner in this attractive development. You will receive monthly rebates on your payments of $50 to $200 for up to 24 months.

Please come by and allow us to show you how our payment subsidy plan will allow you to become a homeowner in this day of spiraling interest costs and still keep your monthly payments in the range of what you now pay in rent. Units start at only $43,175.00.

WHEREAS, our nation is the land of liberty, where freedom has reigned for more than 200 years. Political and economic freedom have made the United States a nation unlike any other on earth, with more wealth enjoyed by more individuals. Individual freedom to build and grow has also given us our City of Midland, with its many homes, businesses and surrounding countryside; and

WHEREAS, One of the reasons that Midland has grown is Americans' right to private ownership of real property. Indeed, human freedom and opportunity have helped individuals to produce thriving industry and commerce here that created the good living that typifies our city. As citizens, Realtors observe Private Property Week annually to celebrate Americans' real property ownership rights; and

WHEREAS, this week the Midland Board of REALTORS is celebrating these rights, which have contributed so much to our community;

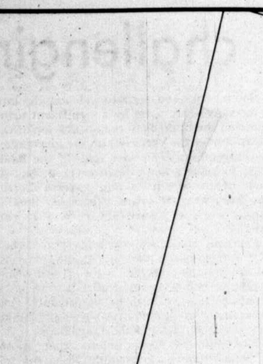

NOW, THEREFORE, I, G. Thane Akins, Mayor of the City of Midland, Texas, do hereby proclaim the week of April 18 -14, 1982 to be:

PRIVATE PROPERTY WEEK

in Midland, and ask all residents in Midland to join the Midland Board of REALTORS and other members of the National Association of Realtors nationwide in celebration of the rights of real property ownership, with the intent that this freedom will continue for posterity.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the City of Midland, Texas, to be affixed this 14th day of April, 1982.

Realtors honor C.E. Hogue

Founded in 1932, the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers has attained a national reputation for professional service to be public. During its 50 year history, courts, government agencies, lending institutions, developers, Realtors and the professional community have relied upon reports prepared by appraisers who hold Institute designations.

The Appraisal Institute has an intensive program designed to test knowledge, experience and judgment in the field of real estate appraising, and membership in the Institute is awarded only to those who have demonstrated their ability to meet these requirements. Upon qualification, members of the Institute are awarded one of two professional designations: MAI (Member, Appraisal Institute) is the designation earned by specialists who have proven their ability to appraise all types of real property. RM (Residential Member) is the designation earned by those specialists who have demonstrated competence in the appraisal of single family residences. All members must subscribe to the Institute's rigid Code of Professional Ethics and Standards of Professional Conduct.

C.E. Hogue, who is a charter member of the Midland Board of Realtors which was organized in 1947, was presented the Board's highest honot, the first annual Golden Eagle Award, for his dedicated service to, and leadership of, the Board.

Hogue has served on the Board of Directors for many years and was president of the organization in 1959. He served on the Professional Standards Committee in 1967-68. He has the coveted MAI designation of the National Association of Realtors. This designation requires many years of experience and study. Hoges has served three years as a director of the Governing Council of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers and was recently reappointed to this Council. He is now serving on the Ethics Committee of the National Association of Realtors' Appraisal Institute.

Clarence E. Nelson, who joined the Midland Board soon after the charter was recieved, was presented a plaque of appreciation for his splendid record of service and high ethical business relations thereby symbolizing the aims and ideals of the real estate profession. He was awarded a "Life Membership" in Midland Board of Realtors in 1976 and the "Realtor of the Year" award in 1972.

Nelson served as president of the Board in 1950 and has been a director of the organization for many years. He was chairman of the Professional Standards Committee in 1964-65 and again in 1972-73. He has obtained the highest designation of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers, SREA (Senior Real Estate Analyst).

Other award winners include Sara Branum, who recieved her CCIM (Certified Commercial-Industrial Member) designation.

Awards for achieving the quota of contributions to Texas Political Action Committee were presented to Betty Taylot, 1981 Chairperson and to the Midland Board of Realtors by Pat Knox, TREPAC Chairperson for 1982.

Midland Board of Realtors recently held their annual Awards Dinner for MLS members at Ranchland Hills Country Club. Dene Kelly, Board president, presented awards to Don Harvey, Patsy Bohannan and Betty Taylor for outstanding service to their local Board, State Association and National Association. They have served on the local Board of Directors and Committees for many years. Don Harvey is a director of the National Association of Realtors and was appointed by Governor Clements to serve on the Texas Real Estate Commission. Patsy Bohannon now serves as a director of the National Associaiton of Realtors. Betty Taylor was just elected vice president of Texas Association of Realtors' Region IV. All three of these members have, in the past, recieved the Realtor of the Year award.

Week celebrates right to own private property

Through the Constitution and the Bill of Rights, Americans enjoy many rights, including the right to free speech, to practice the religion of one's choice and to vote. One of the most important is the right to own property.

"That's what Private Property Week, April 18-24, is all about," says Dene Kelly, president of the Midland Board of Realtors. "Whether the board is announcing a new community service plan, hears a special dignitary or holds a free Homebuyers Seminar like many boards are doing, this is the week that Realtors especially salute all good things that go with the ownership of homes, farms and commercial properties.

"The concept of private property was not invented, however, by Americans. Instead it evolved from English common law which, in a large part, was patterned after ancient Roman law and it has stood the test of time and the courts.

In America, records show that concepts of land use are changing.

When moving, you're not alone

By PAT PAXTON
Broker, Langston Monarch Associates

So you're "On the Road Again?" Take heart, young America, you are not alone! It's estimated that each year over 34.5 million children under 12 say goodbye to friends and come to terms with being the new kid on the block.

If you find yourself in this predicament, here are some helpful hints that may make this move your best ever. Many of these ideas will be helpful to parents, so sit down with your folks and share this article with them.

It's hopeful that you'll be included early in the announcement of the move. This will give you time to adjust rather than time to worry. It's normal to be sad about leaving your old life behind, but helpful parents will point out some advantages of where you'll be moving.

There's an on-going debate about whether it's better to move during the school year or during the summer. Many kids find it "scary" coming during the school year because "everyone is already friends." However, summer moves can be hardest because so many kids have scattered on family vacations and at camp. A move between school terms or after the winter holiday may be the ideal compromise.

Be sure to let your teachers know as soon as possible about your move. Some teachers may allow you to have a going away party in the classroom with your parents supplying the snacks and drinks. A farewell party could be held at your house too. Take pictures of your friends and have an address book on hand for friends to sign. You may want to hand out pre-stamped post cards with your name and new address. That way you can get some mail your first weeks at the new home.

Do you have a pet that will be making the move with you? Discuss with your parents how the pet will be cared for during the move. On moving day you may want to be responsible for keeping the dog or cat out of the mover's way. If your pet will not be making the move, begin right away to find it a happy new home.

Participate in the weeding out process. Empty drawers can be a wonderful sight in your new home, just waiting to be filled with new treasures. On moving day perhaps your furniture and belongings can be last on the van so they can be the first to be taken out on arrival. Getting your room set up first will give you lots to do while your folks oversee the rest of the unpacking.

Financing often challenging

By MARGIE COLEMAN, Director
Chaparral Realty

Everyone is certainly aware of the challenging business of arranging home mortgage financing these days, but in a recent article in the Texas Realtor magazine, David Fair stated some very interesting ideas about the use of local banks as a financing source. Fair is an attorney and chairman of the board of Hexter-Fair Title Co. of Dallas and of Lawyer's Title Co. of Denton and writes often on the ups and downs of the mortgage financing field.

Since so many Texans are vitally interested in homebuying and homeselling, a discussion of Fair's assessment might be valuable to local residents.

Of course, many real estate transactions are completed through Savings and Loan companies, but if the differences between banks and other mortgage lenders are understood, so much the better. Fair declares that the most important distinction "is the practice by most mortgage companies and large S&Ls to 'pool' a certain dollar amount (say $5 million or $10 million) of virtually identical loans. This 'pool' of mortgages is then available for sale into the secondary financing market (e.g., FNMA)."

Fair points out that banks, as we all know, serve the financial needs of their individual customers and "very seldom have a 'pool' or group of mortgages with the same terms." In fact, many real estate loans made by local banks are tailored to suit the particular needs and financial abilities of the borrower, who is a customer of the bank. After all, who is more qualified to devise a flexible mortgage loan package for an individual borrower than his personal banker?"

Fair hastens to add that S&L bankers have proved their effectiveness through their record and that "if the abilities of the homebuyer or seller fits within a quoted program then it's advisable to go with it."

Banks favor particularly two things about mortgage loans: (1) Low loan-to-value loans and (2) relatively short-term mortgages.

Some banks, too, seem to welcome the interruption of a mortgage loan term by a significant principal reduction and the immediate reamortization of the remaining balance over the years left on the mortgage, Fair thinks. Because of this, Fair says that "if the Realtor's clients want to make a large down-payment (say 40 percent or more of the sales price) and prefer a shorter than average loan term (15 years, preferably less), a bank loan might work in a satisfactory way in the mortgage area."

Certainly there is a possibility that if the homebuyer is, for example, a person planning to retire in three years after the mortgage is set up and wishes to make a sizable principal payment at that time, but only "if the monthly payments can be significantly reduced at the same time," the homebuyer's personal banker should be talked to about a home mortgage loan.

Fair comments also on the fact that "another good use of bank financing is possible when the following two conditions apply at the same time: (1) The buyer can afford the higher monthly payments caused by the shorter term bank financing and (2) The seller is willing to carry some type of second lien financing."

America's strength lies in its basic freedom for citizens to own real property as guaranteed for everyone under the constitution.

We must remember that the federal, state, and local government also have rights that can sometimes supersede ours and affect our property because they are supposedly meant for the public good. We must be ever vigilent to see that these government bodies do not extend too far and erode those rights that belong to the property owner.

We must remember that erosions to property rights can come in the form of extensive Real Estate property taxes, unreasonable zoning ordinances, rent controls and other governmental interventions.

Check your home's energy efficiency

By RUTH YOUNG

In Texas everyone is familiar wit the old saw about weather that goes like this; "If you don't like the weather right now, stick around; it'll change."

For that reason when you are talking about energy saving points to consider in your home and you are in Texas, well, in one part of Texas it's reasonable to be interest in winter ideas and in another pat, summer ideas...but all at the same time.

Recently I ran across a rather simple and easy-to-use Ten Point Home Energy Checklist which I thought readers might like to have. The checklist was provided by the National Institute of Building Sciences and the U.S. Department of Energy.

The checklist:

1. Weather stripping. Look for air cracks around doors, windows and other openings, such as around pipes and ducts. Seal them by caulking or weather stripping. Heat and air conditioning escapt through cracks.

2. Thermostat. Set at 65 degrees in winter and at last five degrees lower when sleeping or away from home. Higher heating temperatures are recommended for homes with sick, elderly or infant members. Set at 78 degrees in summer. Consider a clock thermostat.

3. Water heaters. This is a major home energy user. Consider an insulation wrap. Tray a lower thermostat setting. Install water flow restrictors in showers and on faucets. They cut hot water use without affecting comfort. When replacing water heaters, choose energy efficient models.

4. Heating/cooling system. Clean or replace filters as needed. Close vents in unused rooms. Insulate ducts and pipes in unheated spaces. Consider devices which can increase the efficiency of your existing system. When replacing, choose energy efficient models.

5. Sunlight. Keep direct sunlight out in the summer; let it in during the winter. Drapes, shutters, awnings, shade trees, glass with reflective film and solar screens help.

6. Appliances/lighting. Fully load dryers and clothes and dish washers. Turn off unnecessary lighting. If replacing, buy energy efficient appliances and lighting. Look for appliance efficiency labels. Compare operating costs.

7. Attic insulation. Check to see if your attic has the recommended level of insulation, including the attic door.

8. Floors and foundation walls. Check for adequate insulation under floors, under basement, crawl spaces and foundation walls.

9. Windows and doors. Consider storm windows, doors or double-paned glass to keep heat and air conditioning inside.

10. Exterior walls. Consider adding insulation, particularly when remodeling or re-siding your home.

By JOE CAMPBELL
President, Lone Star Abstract & Title Co. Inc.

The question most often asked us in the title insurance business is, "Why do I have to buy a title policy? I know that title is good."

While it may be true that the seller in a transaction "knows" his title is good, many things could happen which could effect his title and prevent him from conveying good title to his property. We have all heard of the more common problems that can occur, but did you know that a defect in title can occur from forgeries in deeds and releases, undisclosed or missing heirs, wills not probated or misinterpreted, deeds by minors, deeds by incompetents, recording errors, falsificaton of records, deeds delivered after death of grantor or grantee or deeds by married persons who are supposedly single?

We in Texas can be very proud that the title insurance is highly regulated both by the State Board of Insurance and from within the industry. In Texas, our premium rates are set by state regulation and title related charges (closing fees, recording fees, etc.) are generally prohibited or strictly regulated. Due to the rigid regulations, the actual closing done in a title company office is also "insured."

Because of the acceptance of title insurance, most lenders require a mortgagee's policy of title insurance before lending money for a home mortgage. Generally, in Texas and Midland, sellers understand an obligation to deliver "clear" title to the buyer and unsually provide owners title policy coverage along with their deed.

The history of title insurance goes back to the mid-1800s when abstractors began to guarantee their abstracts and certificates of title. They set aside cash reserves to assure their capability to pay losses on these guarantees. As the country grew and more and more real estate transactions took place, much time was saved with "guaranteed titles." In 1874, the Pennsylvania Legislature passed the first title insurance act. In many areas even today, many people atill conduct their real estate transactions with the only evidnece being the abstract and attorney's opinion. While most attorneys are certainly competent to examine the title to property from an abstract, title insurance goes far beyond the attorney's capabilities in protection for the owner and lender.

So, you ask, "why title insurance?" Because it is the best protection available to insure against the loss of one of the most expensive purchases you will ever make...your home.

Tax deductions up for home ownership

While taxes on almost every purchase continue to rise, income tax deductions for home ownership have been increasing, according to Joane Franz.

The income tax laws allow home sellers to shelter resale profits by buying another home of equal or greater value. The time limitations were expanded last year to two years to buy or build another home. This benefits sellers who feel they will need more time to find a home and favorable financing. If the seller doesn t buy another home, the individual must pay capital gains taxes on the home's profit. But the capital gains tax rate was reduced last year from 28 to 20 percent.

The once-in-a-lifetime home sale tax exemption for a qualified home seller, age 55 or older, was raised to $125,000 from $100,000 last July.

Although homes appreciate in value each year, for tax purposes, many property owners, especially investors, want quick depreciation.

HOW

A poetic look at real estate today

BY NANCY GINZEL

In past years, they tell us
This business was easier.
Low interest and fixed rates
Made house-selling breezier.

But things started changing
Not too long ago
And money got tight
As I'm sure you all know.

So instead of just looking
For four bedrooms or three.
We scour the market
For a good equity.

"Assumption" is a key word
And "non-escalating."
Will the seller finance it?
The buyer is waiting.

Can he get a second?
Can they qualify?
We'll get it worked out
When they're ready to buy.

But it takes a good deal
Of buyer sophistication
To understand
Negative amortization.

Buy-downs and variables,
Roll-overs and wraps
Must be well-explained
To avoid mishaps.

Not to mention predicting
Next week's interest rate.
Will it rise? Will it fall?
Must we leave it to fate?

Some cynics even go
So far as to say
That Las Vegas or Reno
Are too far away.

"You can gamble right here
When getting a note.
You lock yours in.
I'll let mine float.

Hard decisions are part
Of the game plan today.
So get help from a Realtor
If you plan to play.

They'll guide you through
The entire process
And save you much
Confusion and stress.

So whether you're buying
Your very first home,
Or moving in, out or up,
Don't go it alone.

Call your Realtor.

Capital gains taxes can create some confusion

By PAT HOWARD
Carriage Co. Realtors

It's true that sometimes there's some confusion about capital gain taxes when you sell your home.

From a leading Texas Certified Public Accountants' newsletter recently came this statement:

"When you sell your home, any gain is taxable at favored capital gain rates. However, the computation of this gain can often cause questions. A recent Tax Court decision illustrated the need to keep accurate records relating to the purchase and improvements of personal residences to avoid this problem." (Roger C. Bayly, T.C. Memo 19810549)

The nwsletter continued: "As you know, profits from the sale of a personal residence are taxable, but may be deferred when you purchase and occupy a new residence within 24 months. However, if a new home is not purchased, the gain is taxed in the year of the sale.

"In this instance, a husband and wife purchased a home in 1964 for $11,000. They resided in the home until 1976, when they became separated and sold it. The net proceeds of the sale were over $38,000, which was divided evenly between them. During the period of time in which they owned the house, they made extensive improvements, including a three-room addition for which they received a home improvement loan of over $7,000. However, they spent additional funds for this purpose. The records pertaining to these improvements were missing, having been lost, stolen or destroyed.

"Since they had no records establishing the cost of the home improvements other than the home improvement loan, the IRS determined that their adjusted basis for the home was the total of their original cost plus the proceeds of the loan (about $18,000) and computed that gain on the sale to be approximately $20,000 (sales price less the total of the original cost and the home improvement loan), which gain was divided between them.

"But the Tax Court determined that there were additional costs for the improvements and estimated them to be about $9,000, so that the proper gain was about $11,000."

So, of course, what this newsletter writer was telling all us homebuyers and homesellers is that the inconvenience and expense of this case could have been avoided if accurate records had been maintained with respect to the costs incurred in connection with the purchase and improvements of the residence. The failure to do so resulted in needless controversy and could, at times, give rise to excessive income taxes.

Tax breaks available

By SARAH CROWE
Carriage Co. Realtors

At this time of year, many of us find our attention focused on ways to reduce our income tax payments. Homeowners enjoy particular advantages in tems of income tax deductions for interest and property tax payments.

It was in 1920 that Realtors nationwide helped convince the government that interest paid on home martgages should be a deductible item when filing with the IRS. Then in 1952 Realtors again were instrumental in helping pass laws that would allow home sellers to defer capital gains taxes on the sale of their homes if another home of equal or greater value is purchased.

It was during this time that fix-up costs and broker's fees were made deductible from the sale price when computing capital gains taxes.

Realtors needed for buying, selling

By JACK ZENGLER
Chaparral Realtors

Why do Realtors fell that a Realtor can do a better job of both helping clients buy or sell a home?

First of all purchasing a home may well be one of the biggest investments you will ever make. Therefore, we feel you should turn to a professional.

Although many people are aware of Realtors and their work, there are many others who probably do not know that not everyone in the real estate business is a Realtor. You see we are members of the National Association of Realtors and we must adhere to a strict Code of Ethics. This code was developed over the 70 year history of the association, one of the world's largest professional-trade organizations. Realtors serve the public 600,000-strong, with 125,000 offices nationwide.

One of the strongest advantages of being a Realtor is that we are constantly updated in our skills and knowledge by a network of newsletters, seminars and educational seminars.

The headquarters of the national staff is in Chicago with another large and active staff in Washington, D.C., where housing reports are developed and a large amount of Congressional watchdogging is done. In all legislative concerns of the Realtor there is always a basic dedication to protect the welfare of the nation's property owners.

Now when it comes to selling your home, what exactly does a Realtor do for you?

Because we know property values and because we feel you deserve top dollar for your properties, Realtors are trained to determine a fair market price. Because of our organization we know the territory. we may already have a list of property owners interested in just your type of property, whether it's a home, commercial development or a place in the country. When we bring a buyer to your home, we will be bringing a serious buyer, one that we have screened for ability to afford your place and for special wants in a property.

I am sure you can agree that to have a third party, the Realtor, showing your home, you will be left free from any emotional reactions you might have if the client asks a lot of questions. The Realtor is able to answer the questions straight to the point, in a businesslike manner. I think you can appreciate the work of the Realtor in preventing your being subjected to a circus of "lookers" tramping through your home.

There is a real art to selling. Your Realtor is a selling specialist. It is no time for amateurs. Of course, the Realtor doesn't just stop at the sale point. He or she will assist you in working out satisfactory financial arrangements because Realtors work with banks, savings and loans and title companies all the time.

One matter that I want to stress is that Realtors want clients to be satisfied with the professional service rendered. What is more satisfying to the Realtor than a recommendation to the clients' friends? Referrals are the name of the game.

Realtors encourage clients to ask questions if there is any matter that they still don't understand. It's a fact that we try to explain all the steps of a transaction, but it something is still puzzling, we want our clients to ask about it.

Say that you are a buyer.

You have driven around the city and the surrounding area, but you are having a difficult time choosing, wondering it you really know all the important facts about the area. Here is where the Realtor fits in so well.

Since he probably already has listings that fit the bill, yoy can cut the time spent on looking in an efficient manner. Many Realtors belong to a Multiple Listing Service which opens up a whole world of homes to you. And it opens up, too, the fact that other Realtors can help find just the right home for you.

Some choose to restore old homes

By MARY JO DRURY
Director, Adobe Realtors

Restoration of an older home can make sense, at the same time it can actually make dollars too. Every case of restoration is a different one, of course, but it is a fact that more and more young families are sold on the idea of buying in an older neighborhood and becoming part of a wonderful atmosphere (as well as appreciating the fact that trees and grass and shrubs are already well established.)

Buying an older house becomes a way of life. They aren't for everyone, that's for certain. Pipes may leak. Closets might be small and sometimes almost non existent. Wiring may not be adequate for today's appliances. The plumbing might be cantankerous. However, if you are an Old House Person, then you will gladly endure the headaches of redoing much of it.

Through the years Realtors have developed some special counseling for those clients who want to go the "older house" route rather than the brand new construction of subdivisions. Buyers will want to remember these basic consideration in buying a "house with character."

1. Weatherproofing. This includes roofing, flashing, gutters, siding windows, caulking and drainage.

2. Electrical and Heating Systems. Are they up to the building code or are the systems adequate?

3. Plumbing. It's smart to consider plumbing needs so that the house can measure up to each individual's requirements.

4. Foundation. If the client buys, he or she will probably want to correct the foundation if it needs correction first.

Real estate has its own language

By BILLIE PERRY
Broker

Every profession is guilty (or proud) of its own peculiar language. Everyone on the "outside" of a profession is often puzzled, confused, impatient or downright frustrated by terms being tossed about in conversation without care of real understanding.

Realtors care about being understood, but that doesn't mean that sometimes, they too forget to explain some of the terms they use so frequently with their clients. For that reason we're going to give the homebuying public a list of some real estate terms and their meanings, so they can understand them when they make any real estate transactions.

—"Anticipated value" is the expected value. Appraisers take future benefits into consideration when formulating a property's present worth.

—"Balloon Mortage" is a mortgage which provides for periodic payments that do not completely amortize the loan at the time of its termination. As a consequence, a larger final payment becomes due.

—"Blue Sky Laws" are intended to protect the inexperienced investor against fraud and misrepresentation in the purchase of securities or real estate.

—"Capital Recovery" is the return to investors of that portion of their property investment expected to be lost over an income projection period.

—"Capitalization Rate (Cap Rate)" is the rate of return, expressed as a percentage, that is considered a reasonable profit from an investment.

—"Cash Flow" is the usable cash after all expenses are paid.

—"Discounted Cash Flow" is the present worth of future annual cash benefits, usually considered in relation to equity investment.

—"Earning Expectancy" is the estimated future net earnings as a function of time, applied to an investment property.

—"Holding Period" is the period during which one has legal title and possession of a property.

—"Income Property" is property owned or purchashed primarily for the monetary return it will bring.

—"Leverage" is a popular word. Everyone likes to use it because it means the effective use of money. Usually accomplished by investing the least possible amount of capital when acquiring property in order that it may bring the maximum percentage of return.

—"Liquid Assets" ae assests that are immediately convertible into cash and therefore immediately available for liquedating indebtedness.

—"Maintenance Reserve" is an amount reserved to cover costs of maintenance. (Not too hard to understand, right?)

—"Negative Leverage" results when the cost of borrowing money (interest) exceeds the return the money would bring.

—"Operating Ratio" is the ratio of expenses to gross income of running commercial property or business.

—"Projection Period" is the period of time over which expected net operating income is projected for purposes of analysis and valuation — a presumed ownership period.

"Reinvestment Rate" is an obtainable rate of return for capital recaptured from a previous investment.

—"Risk Factor" is the portion of any given return or rate of return from capital invested in an enterprise that is assumed to cover the risks pertinent to the particular investment.

—"Syndication" is a grouping of persons or legal entities who combine to carry through some financial transaction or who undertake some common venture in a very flexible business arrangement.

March marked the second anniversary of Chaparral, Realtors and it has truly been a fantastic year. Our office has experienced tremendous growth in Sales as well as Size. We are proud of our dedication to "Professionalism". This office has eight million dollar sellers, two Directors of the Midland Board of Realtors, and two members of the Private Property Week committee.

All of us at Chaparral, Realtors want to express our appreciation for the support that Midland has shown us. We at Chaparral, Realtors look forward to serving Midland in the future.

Protest urged

Julio S. Laguarta of Houston, president of the National Association of Realtors, is leading a campaign to persuade homeowners and prospective buyers to support the Realtors' protest against the federal deficit and credit policies.

Dene Kelly, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, said here this week that "our board members believe that residents can help protest the record high interest rates which are keeping so many out of the home market. Laguarta's work before Congressional committees and even in meetings with the president show our concern that it is the government that is causing record high mortgage interest rates and the government is actually depressing the value of homes by about $25,000 for the average homeowner with its policies.

"Here's what we think: we believe that tax relief last year created incentives to divert funds away from home mortgages. We also think that the government is proposing to close down the self-supporting FHA, VA and GNMA programs that are necessary for many families to buy homes. And, we are convinced that the government is focusing on ways to help savings and loan banks at the expense of home ownership.

"Another thing that Realtors believe is that the so-called 'Housing Commission' favors the federal government's overriding state laws that limit increases on mortgages assumed when homes are sold.

Midland Realtor among those on state board

In 1939, the 46th Legislature enacted The Real Estate Dealer's License Act (called The Real Estate License Act since 1955) requiring that those who would act as real estate agents in Texas must first obtain licenses to do so.

The Act was administered by the Secretary of State until 1949 when it was amended to provide for a six-member Real Estate Commission charged with its administration.

The Act's major purpose is to protect the public in its dealings with real estate brokers and salesmen. The Commission's various programs are designed to accomplish that purpose by (1) requiring integrity and competency of those who are authorized to act as real estate agents; (2) disapproving applications for licensure if questionable background information is found; (3) withdrawing licensure privileges where a situation warrants; and (4) by causing prosecution of those who act as such agents without authorization.

The Legislature's continuing desire to provide protection for the public in its dealings with real estate agents is evidenced by amendments to The Real Estate License Act in 1955, 1963, 1967, 1971, 1975 and 1979. The Real Estate Commission presently consists of nine members. There are six "broker" members and three "public" members.

Don Harvey was appointed by Governor Clements to the Commission in 1980 for a six-year term. He was elected Secretary-Treasurer of the Commission for 1982.

The 1971 amendements provided for the establishment of a Real Estate Research Center in the Department of Agriculture at Texas A & M University.

Beginning in 1963, the Commission has approved and monitored courses of study offered in all areas of the state and has withdrawn its approval of courses which have failed to meet the Commission's standards or, after meeting those standards, have fallen below them.

Don Harvey

Bobby Trimble, recently recognized by President Reagan for his work in the Christmas in April program, was presented a check for the program by the Midland Board of Realtors.

Independent Realty Associates Receive Awards

Penny Wilhite
Tops Two Major Catagories

Penny Wilhite, Managing Broker of Independent Realty Associates, was honored recently by the Midland Board of Realtors with the two top awards in the category of non-residential sales. Mrs. Wilhite sold $4,100,000 in non-residential Midland real estate in 1981, making her top dollar salesman for the city. (She was also top dollar salesman for Midland in 1979). She also listed $4,500,000 in non-residential real estate that resulted in sales, making her the leading non-residential lister as well. She was also MLS Co-Op Champion for July, 1981, and she also sold over $2,000,000 in non-residential real estate in 1981 in New Mexico.

We don't know whether to applaud Penny for her "non-residential" feats or award her a Booby prize for the dubious honor of being "Worst Residential Salesman." In any event, if you have a personal residence to sell, don't call Penny. Call Nona.

Nona Orr
Multi Awards in Million Dollar Sales

Nona Orr can sell anything. Or list anything. Mrs. Orr was cited by the Midland Board of Realtors for million dollar performance in residential sales and million dollar performance in residential listings, and million dollar performance in non-residential sales. She also received an award for excellence in non-residential "unit" sales. (In 1980, Nona was the top award winner for non-residential sales).

Goodrich Heil
Co-Owner

Goodrich Heil, Nona Orr and Penny Wilhite are co-owners of Independent Realty Associates, a company formed in December, 1979 with the express purpose of offering professional brokerage service in the field of commercial as well as residential real estate. You will find that the Independent Realtors here are as comfortable selling a hotel as they are a home, and all are especially knowledgable in the areas of downtown real estate, undeveloped land and investor-type real estate.

Beverly Murphy
Million Dollar Awards

A new licensee in 1981, Beverly Murphy has already earned two million dollar awards. The Midland Board of Realtors awarded Mrs. Murphy Million Dollar Certificates for her success in residential sales and residential listings. Beverly is perhaps best known to the public as the on-site agent at Green Tree Canatex's Ninth Tee Townhomes, and she represents Canatex's non-residential properties as well.

A. J. Ashby-Thomason
Experienced Broker

Before moving to Midland in 1981, A. J. Ashby-Thomason was the top selling broker for her company in Colorado where she specialized in condominium conversions. Now a Texas broker, she has over six years' experience in residential and non-residential sales. Whatever your real estate needs you will be well represented if you choose A. J. as your agent.

Perrie Whalen
Champion in Training

You may remember her as the patient Mrs. Whalen, your child's seventh grade teacher at Alamo Jr. High. We know her as our newest licensee, the most humble Realtor in town.

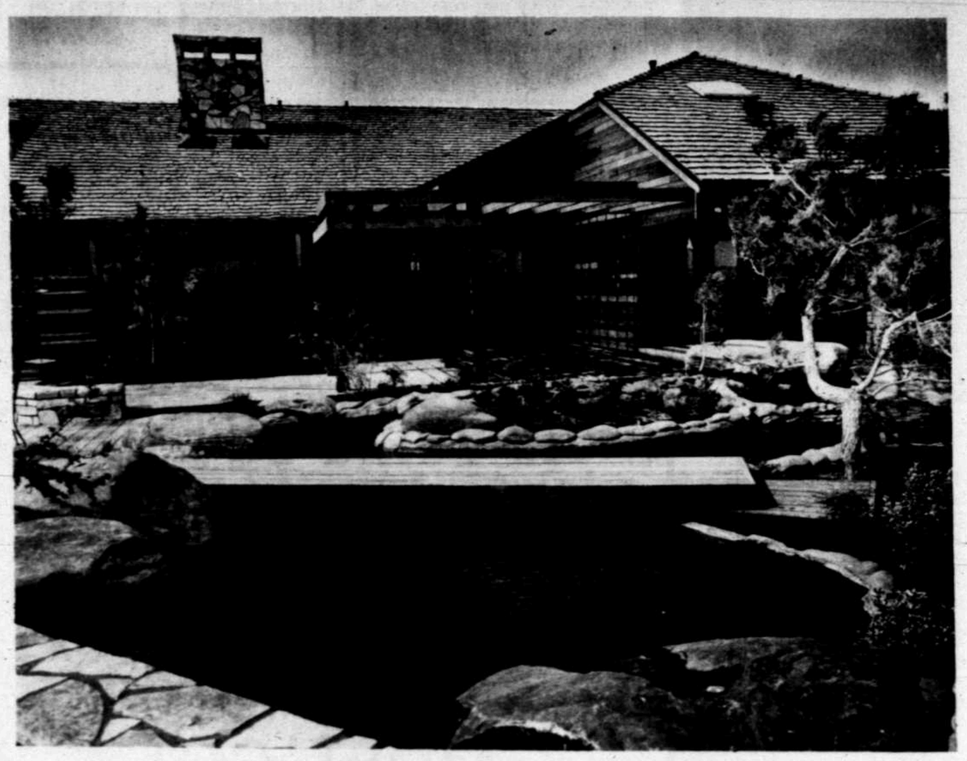

Perrie Whalen attacks the marketing of a mobile home site with the same enthusiasm as the listing of a 5 million dollar office building (both are current projects), and God sent her to all the award winners around here as a lesson in service and humility.

You'll enjoy working with the versatile Perrie---and she may do your personal color chart while she's showing you houses...or skyscrapers.

By WANDA MOUTON
Lifestyle Editor

The event will be from 1 p.m. to 5 p.m. April 25.

Proceeds from the benefit will go—as they have for the past two years—to the Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP). Over $7,000 was raised at last year's parade for PDAP.

The Woman's Club was one of the principal clubs responsible for bringing PDAP to Midland and is continuing to show their support through this fund-raiser.

Established in 1969, the club currently numbers 60 active members. Officers this year are Nancy Doss, president; Jane Malaise, first vice president; and Carlyn Stroman, second vice president.

Another main project of the club is the Story Hour held weekly at Midland County Library for three, four and five year olds.

The club also participates in the annual Dress-A-Live-Doll program through the Salvation Army.

Tickets for this year's Parade of Homes is available only through club members, or by calling chairmen Brenda Faught at 684-9798 or Kathy Dill at 694-0186.

Tickets are $5 and everyone must have a ticket, including infants and children.

The four homeowners who have consented to open their homes for the benefit tour include Mr. and Mrs. Jim Sales who live in the San Jacinto area; Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Prothro, Greentree Country Club addition; Mr. and Mrs. Harvy Langston, Saddle Club area; and Mr. and Mrs. Harold Wilson, residents in the Greentree Country Club area.

THE SALES HOME, only 2 1/2 years old, is built in Country French style. Mrs. Sales herself was principal designer, and had limited assistance from interior designer Charlotte's of El Paso.

Builder was H. Ray Stringer and designer was Patterson & Zimmer of Houston.

The three-bedroom, three and a half bath home also has two living areas. Color scheme of the 3,100 square foot home is blue, rust, gold and varying shades of brown.

In addition to directing most of the interior design of her home, Mrs. Sales is also responsible for the landscaping and wallpaper design.

The home has unique collections of dolls, steins and photographs from the family's past six generations.

The family is composed of the Sales couple and their two sons, Spencer, 13, and Wade, 14. Sales is president of Ten Oil Operating Co.

MR. AND MRS. JERRY PROTHRO are residents of a French Contemporary home in the Greentree Country Club area.

Mrs Prothro was designer of her home and has chosen to furnish it with antiques, primarily American, Victorian and English furniture.

The house was constructed in May, 1981, by Hail Builders. The 3,300 square foot home has four bedrooms, two and one half baths and two living rooms.

Features include an enclosed solarium and spa, colorful stained glass in the dining room and a unique antique collection.

The home is located on the 18th hole of the Country Club.

Color scheme of the house is dark green and tan in the master bedroom and, in the living and dining room, it is peach moire and stained wood paneling.

The couple has one daughter, Laura, 7, and a son, Evan, 21 months. Prothro is an attorney.

ALSO IN THE GREENTREE Country Club area are Mr. and Mrs Harold Wilson, who are residents of a contemporary style home designed with traditional flair.

The 4,000 square foot home is still under construction, but is expected to be completed soon.

This home was designed for energy efficiency. All angles and windows serve the purpose of air flow. Walls are built with 2x6 boards and the cooling system, built below the ground, uses a computer to monitor the house temperature.

Color scheme is in earth tones. Some windows will have specially made stained glass installed.

One of the most outstanding features of the residence is its outside pond with all the filters and cleaning system of a swimming pool. Landscaping was by Blue Haven of Midland.

Mrs. Wilson tossed a tennis racquet in the foundation when it was poured for good luck.

LIVING IN THE SADDLE CLUB area are Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Langston, residents of a townhome.

Square footage is 4,000 in the three bedroom, four and a half bath. It also has a living room, library, balcony, sitting room and guest house.

It too has been designed for energy savings, with four separate zoned heating/air condition systems which allow the Langston's to use only one when the whole house is not in use.

It was designed for living in one wing, with a separate wing for guests or children. It was also built for entertaining.

Interior designer is MoMo Laughlin of Laughlin Interiors. This is the third home which she has designed for the Langston's.

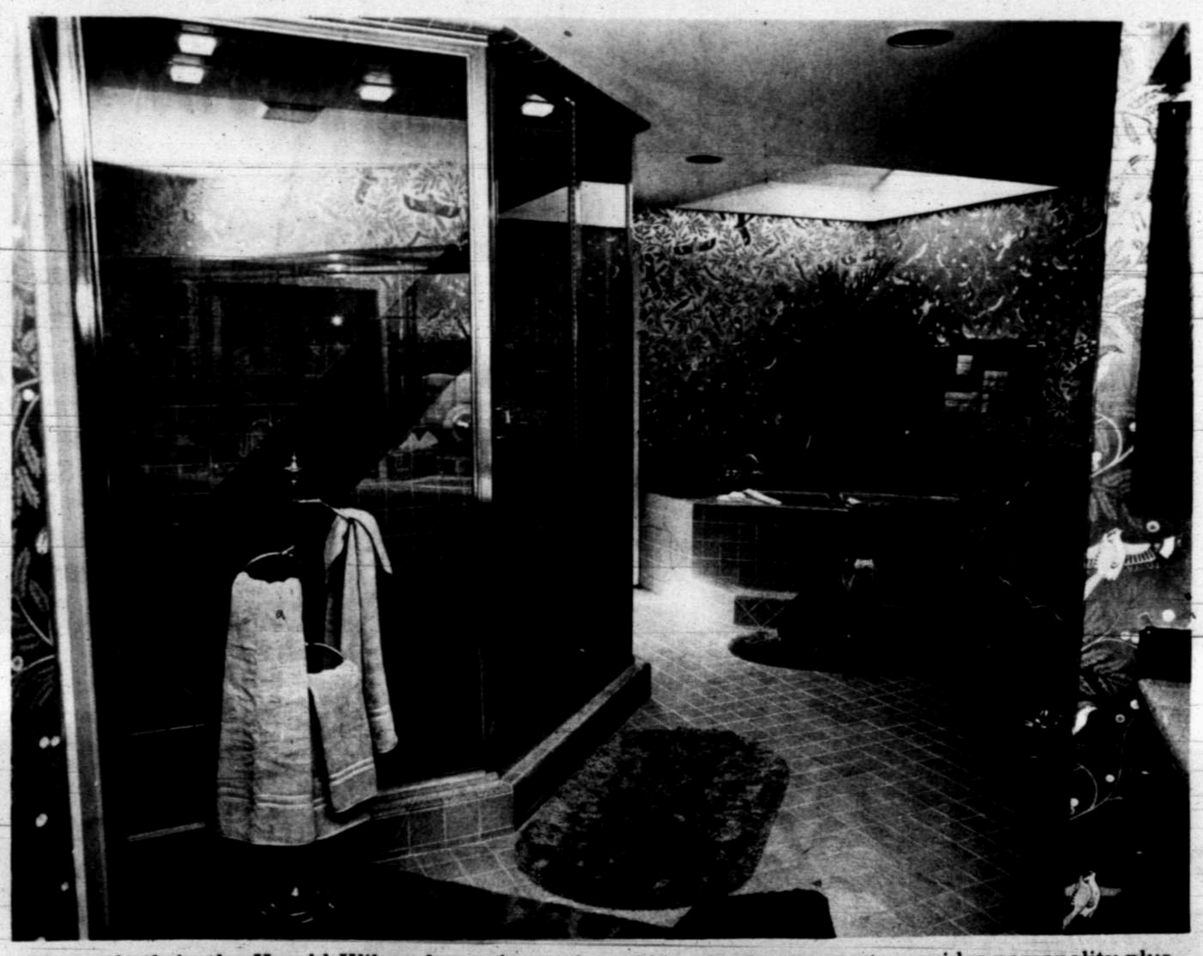

An unusual display in the townhome is the shell collection from Padre Island where the Langston's also have a home. Mrs. Langston has used needlepoint to pick up the shell patterns.

In addition to the shells, she also has a beautiful crystal collection. In the kitchen is a display of menus from famous restaurants throuoghout the world. The oldest is from Antoines in 1943. It was given by Mrs. Langston's parents and began her collection.

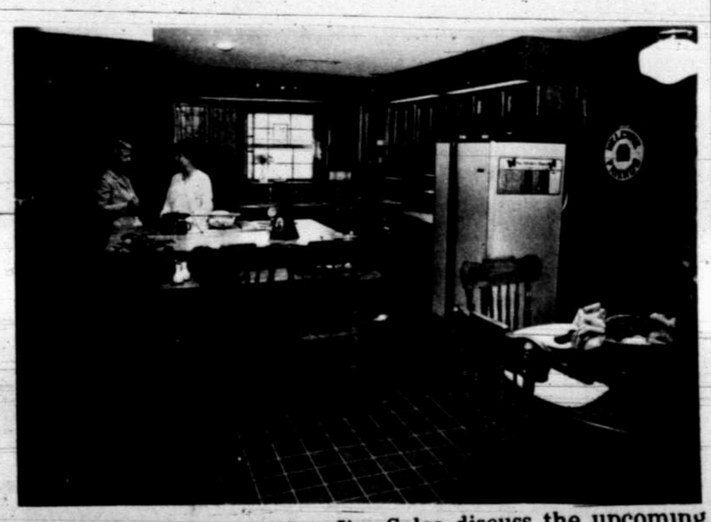

Langston is president of HMJ Construction. The couple has two daughters who are married and reside in Houston; one son attending The University of Texas; and another son who is currently working on his second degree at UT while his wife lives in Midland with their daughter, the Langston's granddaughter.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

DEAR HELOISE:

I always found sheet cakes hard to handle until I discovered this trick.

Measure your oven carefully and find a box you are sure will fit in it. Cut the box down so it's three to five inches tall, then split the corners down to the base.

Wrap string around the sides to hold them together and line the box with aluminum foil. Use the box as you would a cake pan.

This pan will hold batter made with up to three cake mixes (I like to marble mine).

When the cake is done, remove it from the oven, rack and all. Allow to cool, then loosen the edges of the cake with a knife, cut the string and open the sides, cutting them away from the box base.

Ice your cake on its own plate, and it's ready to decorate and serve. — Nan Worked beautifully! Really great when you need that oversized cake for a party. When the last delicious morsel is gone, just pitch the whole thing into the trash.

What could be easier! — Heloise

EXTRA CLEAN

Dear Heloise: Unpainted breadboards and cutting boards can be cleaned and lightened in color if, after washing with soapy water, you rub them with a cloth dipped in salt. — S. I.

GIFT WRAPPING

Dear Heloise: Here's a gift idea for wrapping a present for a baby or bridal shower.

Instead of using the conventional ribbon and bow, I used colorful coupons good towards various baby items (for a bride, you might use food discount coupons).

I taped the coupons together in a long strand and wrapped them around the package.

SALT SAVER

Dear Heloise: When I need salt for cooking, instead of removing the cap from the shaker so I can dip in with a measuring spoon and then end up spilling extra salt in the food or on the stove, here's what I do:

I keep salt in a small votive candle holder right on my stove and dip into it as needed.

Any fancy, small container to match your kitchen will do. — Jo Ellen Turner

BUTTON REMOVAL

Dear Heloise: To avoid cutting material when removing buttons, slide a comb under the button and cut the thread with a razor blade between the comb and the button. — Mrs. Dan Ottinger

TRAVELING KIDS

Dear Heloise: When children get bored on a car trip, I find it keeps them busy for quite awhile if we all take turns looking for things beginning with a specific letter of the alphabet, first A, then B, C, etc.

You'd be surprised how many things you can find for each letter and how much time you can use up keeping children occupied watching for names of things beginning with each letter. — Mrs. Earl Thomas

SHOWER CURTAIN SUB

Dear Heloise: Needing a shower curtain at a recent vacation rental apartment where linens were not furnished, I went to the paint department in a local discount store and purchased a clear lightweight plastic drop cloth.

I hung it over the shower curtain rod, half on either side, and ended up with a handy shower curtain for under $3 that can be used again next year. — Opal Miller

+++

Improvising often pays off. If it has for you, write Heloise, P.O. Box 32000, San Antonio, TX 78216, and tell her all about it.

DEAR ABBY

Visitors cause pain, not pleasure

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I am in my 89th year and in poor health. I live alone and seldom get out, so friends keep wanting to come visit me. I don't want to seem ungrateful, but, Abby, it is such a burden I would rather they didn't come.

Let me explain. A hostess is expected to offer her guest a cup of tea and perhaps a sandwich or some sweets. This imposes a hardship on me because I am badly crippled with arthritis and can barely prepare my own meals. I also have diabetes and never have sweets or bakery goods on hand.

I would be interested in hearing how other elderly and disabled people feel about having company. — NO COMPANY, THANK YOU

DEAR NO COMPANY: I know a person who handles visiting an elderly or disabled person this way: She calls and says, "I will come on one condition — that you do not lift a finger! I will bring the refreshments."

Then she arrives with a picnic basket containing a thermos of tea, an assortment of refreshments, cups, saucers, linen placements and napkins. All the hostess has to do is open the door and enjoy the company. Now wouldn't that kind of company be a pleasure?

DEAR ABBY: I am a 29-year-old divorced woman. When I was 22, I had a short affair with a very mature boy who was only 15. After that I discovered that I really got turned on by boys between the ages of 15 and 20.

Some older guys still turn me on, but most teen-agers are more manly than men in their 30s.

I would like to know if this is normal for a woman my age, or do I need to see a shrink? — CRADLE ROBBER

DEAR ROBBER: According to the most authoritative studies on sexual behavior, the male reaches his sexual peak in his teen years. And from then on, it's downhill.

DEAR ABBY: We have a precious new daughter-in-law. She and our son are head over heels in love. She has many fine qualities, but, Abby, her grammar is atrocious! For example, she says, "We seen," instead of, "We saw." And, "Him and me went," instead of, "He and I went."

I would like to correct her in a loving way, not for my sake, but for hers. She is barely 21, and if I could find a gentle way to correct her, I'm sure it would save my son a lot of embarrassment later on, because he surely must notice how bad her grammar is.

I don't want to mention it to my son because I don't want him to think I am finding fault with his wife. I have always had a wonderful relationship with him and don't want to do anything to alienate him or offend his wife. My husband feels as I do, and suggested I write to you. — A CARING MOTHER-IN-LAW

DEAR CARING: Don't offer your new daughter-in-law any well-meaning help by correcting her grammar. If your son is satisfied with his wife, and apparently he is, that's all that matters.

DEAR ABBY: Tell "Save the Fish" to cheer up. Next time her husband brings home a fish, let her think of all the smaller fish that would have been eaten later if her husband hadn't caught it, and of all the smaller fish that fish had already eaten.

In his autobiography, Benjamin Franklin relates how he resolved to be a vegetarian because he didn't believe living creatures should die so he could eat. Then he realized that fish eat each other regularly. He continued to eat fish. — SCARED MINNOW FROM PA.

Pennsylvania Dutch country has rich heritage in language

By MICHAEL RODDY
Associated Press Writer

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — The cute but awkward phrases that adorn the placemats of tourist restaurants in Pennsylvania Dutch country are not all that the language has to offer, according to a Pennsylvania State University professor.

Phrases such as "throw the horse over the fence some hay" and "pass me over the table some butter" are too literal translations of a language whose literature provides insights into country life in America during the 1800s, according to Earl C. Haag.

"Translation doesn't do the literature justice," Haag said. "These are stories about everyday life — nothing terribly deep — but just delightful stories about everyday occurrences."

Haag, a professor of English and German at the university's Schuylkill Haven campus, has written a new grammar which he hopes will make Pennsylvania Dutch literature more accessible to people who speak the language but can't read it, and to a few people who don't know the language at all.

But he admitted that the marketing prospects for his work don't bode well to make it a best seller.

"The usage has been shrinking, although I hope that a book like this will help to bring it back at least as far as the literature is concerned," he said.

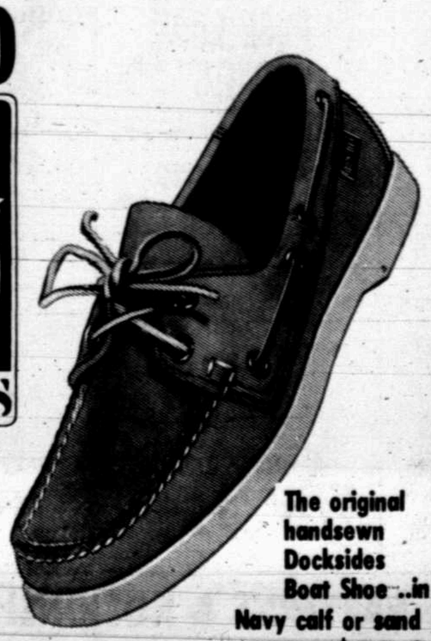

A count of the number of people who speak the language is hard to come by, but Haag said it was estimated 30 years ago that the language was spoken by about 300,000 people in Pennsylvania and the Midwest.

Although the language often is associated with the Mennonite and Amish people living in and around Lancaster County, Haag said members of the religious groups account for only 10 percent of the nation's Pennsylvania Dutch speakers.

The language, despite its name, actually is a dialect of German and is spoken by descendants of Lutheran and German Reformed settlers who came to this country from the Palatinate area of Germany, which is between the Rhine and France, Haag said.

Haag said reading Pennsylvania Dutch literature in the original language is important because the authors used a style of writing that loses a lot in the translation.

Jim Gillon and the Milwaukee Clipper

By MARK HEINRICH
AP Writer

CHICAGO (AP) — A full August moon bathed Lake Michigan, and the calm of the water was broken only by the gentle wake of the Milwaukee Clipper.

Jim Gillon was on his first lake cruise, alone on the deck in a whispering breeze with a cool drink in his hand, wondering about the ship, and imagining himself running it.

The ensuing decade saw Gillon sink into a morass of debt, and lose any illusion that he had latched onto the deal of a lifetime. But now the 40-year-old bachelor owns the steamer, and says he expects to float the dream he lives and breathes — a ship restored to pleasure-cruise shape.

"I feel that if I let her go, she'll come to a bad end," Gillon says from his Navy Pier office, several hundred feet from the moored steamer. "They (the other owners) would go in there and start ripping her apart and turning her into a floating nightclub, and then she's lost forever."

The 361-foot, six-deck steamer was built for the Pennsylvania Railroad in 1905, and christened the Juniata. The Juniata and two other steamers, the Tionesta and the Octorara, all named after streams in Pennsylvania, took passengers on swanky cruises between Buffalo, N.Y., and Duluth, Minn.

The Juniata changed ownership, and in 1940 was docked in Manitowoc, Wis., to be converted into a passenger and car ferry, with most passenger cabins necessary for long voyages eliminated.

The next year, the Juniata was rechristened the Milwaukee Clipper, and began making cross-lake runs between Milwaukee and Muskegon, Mich. Those jaunts continued until 1970, when the owner, the Wisconsin and Michigan Steamship Co., declared the vessel obsolete.

"I made my first call about buying her in October 1970," Gillon says, "and the vessel didn't come into my hands until June 1977 — it took me all that time just to get a deal together and find someone to help bankroll it."

Gillon, who had worked for the Pennsylvania Railroad, travel agencies and charter airlines in his native Indianapolis and in Chicago until then, formed his own lake tour business to make enough money to buy the steamer. He won't say what he paid.

After buying the craft, he had it towed to Sturgeon Bay, Wis., for overhaul. But Gillon says his financing jumped ship, and he was sued in federal court for almost $1 million in repair costs and mortgage payments.

Restoration was halted, and the litigation dragged on into October 1980, Gillon says, when a federal judge in Milwaukee ruled he could tow the vessel to Chicago and attempt to forge a business before the suit is resolved.

"She'd been allowed to deteriorate into very poor condition — there was a lot of topside water coming in through deck cracks," he recalls. "The boat was not properly closed up, and a lot of pigeons got in and died all over the place — the place was full of feathers — an incredible mess."

The venerable vessel also had been leaking ballast, and city workers had to help pump out the water and repair the hull.

But the boyish, bespectacled steamer buff was undaunted, forming a nonprofit group, the S.S. Clipper Foundation, to lure financing for restoration of the vessel, and oversee the work.

Contractors and volunteers, including Indiana University students and a Muskegon resident who served as a maintenance man on the vessel for 20 years, since have poured hundreds of thousands of dollars in repairs into the steamer, Gillon says.

The modernization continues.

Last summer, the ship was opened for on-board tours, and that attracted about 30,000 people in three months, Gillon says.

He says he hopes to inaugurate "2- to 3-hour cruises up and down the lake" in tandem with the opening of a redeveloped Navy Pier by the middle of this decade.

"It's difficult to understand the way I feel about the boat," Gillon says. "When people say negative things about it, I get very upset. I don't understand anybody who does not understand she's a treasure, a museum piece that deserves to be preserved."

Screen 'creates' a dining room

Copley News Service

Q. We have a large living room but no dining room in our apartment. I like to have rather formal, sit-down dinners when I entertain, so I miss a dining room.

Please suggest some way to create a formal dining space without too much remodeling because we do not plan to stay here more than two or three years. — R.B.C.

A. Divide your large living room with a screen — it will perform the function of a wall and you can place furniture in front of it.

Design your screen so that it is wide enough to create the wall simulation. Plywood that is hinged and finished with molding works well and provides a substantial background for decorating.

Cover the plywood panels in mirror for a truly extraordinary look that will enlarge the space. Or invest less by covering your screen in an attractive wallpaper — a summery floral if that fits well with your decor or a tailored grasscloth which would introduce less visual drama.

If you use wallpaper, you can hang paintings and prints on the screen just as you would on a wall. The reverse side of the screen facing the dining room could be treated in the same mirror or wallpaper, depending on your dining room furnishings.

If you choose mirror for your screen you undoubtedly will be able to use the screen elsewhere in another home. If you choose wallpaper, you might need to change the pattern for your next place.

Q. We have a cathedral ceiling in our living room. It provides a lovely spaciousness, but the feeling is one of starkness because of the height of the ceiling.

Our contemporary furnishings contribute to the severe look of the room and the overall impression is one of coldness. Do you have a suggestion? — L.B.

A. La Jolla, Calif., designer Jain Malkin suggests the use of banners or hangings with tall rafters. She created a handsome touch in her design offices through the use of banners of solid cotton fabric in slightly varying shades of rose, hung from the wood beams.

Instead of traditional long banners, she fashioned short, wide ones that add a touch of color and excitement.

Q. I am having slipcovers made for a pair of sofas in my living room. The fabric has green and shrimp flowers (with a tiny touch of white and iris blue) on a golden yellow background.

I wish to paint my walls off-white. What should I use for draperies and what color should I choose for a new chair? The room is rather small, has wood floors and a number of wood pieces such as a secretary and tables. — N.W.R.

A. The most perky and dramatic choice would be a shrimp color for your new chair. This could bring your room alive. A second choice might be green.

For the windows, either flat Roman shades or bouffant shades would be suitable. Both are created in fabric and pull up from the bottom. If you have fabric to match your slipcovers, do the shades in a matching design. If not, choose solid colors from your print fabric. For example, you could use solid yellow cotton, trimmed in green and shrimp braid or gimp.

Lupus called 'the great imitator'

By LINDA YGLESIAS
Hearst Feature Service

Lupus is Latin for "wolf." But to the one million persons in this country who suffer from lupus, the word signifies a disease marked by a butterfly-shaped reddening over the bridge of the nose and the cheeks that resembles a wolf bite.

Eighty-five percent of its victims are females between the ages of 15 and 35, with most occurrences reported in women in their 20s or 30s. With 50,000 new cases diagnosed annually, lupus afflicts more people than muscular dystrophy, leukemia or multiple sclerosis.

In 1955, length of survival for 50 percent of patients diagnosed with lupus was four years. Today, 95 percent survive five years after diagnosis; long-term survival is reported to be almost as high.

The rash across the nose may denote discoid lupus, in which only the skin may be involved. But the disease can also develop into systemic lupus, where the immune system — which normally protects the body against illness — turns against some of the body's own tissues, causing serious illness or death.

The cause of lupus is as elusive as its symptoms are unpredictable.

A lupus victim might suffer from muscle aches, a hard-to-describe malaise, joint pain and fatigue. There might be fever, anemia, the disease's identifying rash, sores, hair loss, arthritis or menstrual problems. Vital organs are reportedly affected in 50 to 75 percent of the cases. Rheumatoid arthritis, kidney and heart disease, chronic pneumonia or pleurisy may be mimicked by lupus, making diagnosis even more difficult.

Lupus has been called "the great imitator" because its symptoms can suggest a variety of other diseases. And it often activates the diseases themselves.

Though the cause of lupus remains elusive, several factors are believed to be involved.

A virus may play a role, though lupus is not contagious. There is a slight tendency for it to be found in families; heredity may be a link. Immunal disorders and some abnormal genetic and hormonal factors also are believed to contribute to the disease. Rate of occurence is higher among blacks and Puerto Ricans.

In lupus, the kidnys are almost always involved; at least 50 percent of lupus patients have mild-to-severe kidney problems. Almost as many develop inflammation of the connective tissue that lines organs like the lungs, heart and the peritoneum around the abdominal structures. Sometimes the central nervous system may be attacked, causing epileptic seizures or personality changes.

But the lupus patient who is knowledgeable about the disease and its effects can live a relatively normal life. There most likely will be two or three annual episodes when lupus symptoms suddenly surface — flareups usually involving about a week or two of extreme fatigue, joint pain and fever. Between flares, there can be lengthy intervals when a patient might be able to function at about 90 percent of her prior capacity.

Aviator still missing after more than fifty years

By DAVID TOMLIN
AP Writer

COLUMBIA, S.C. (AP) — It's been well over half a century since Paul Redfern horsed his overloaded Stinson-Detroiter into the Georgia air and droned off on what was to be the first non-stop flight between the Americas.

It turned out to be a one-way trip into the annals of aviation mystery, and a story that remains a puzzle to this day.

Redfern, who built his first plane and his own airstrip as a teen-ager in Columbia, planned to fly 4,600 miles — nearly twice the distance that had just made Charles Lindbergh a living legend.

Film star Clara Bow and a crowd of eager Brazilians were ready to greet Redfern with colored pennants and street festivals in Rio de Janeiro at the end of the two-day flight from what is now Sea Island, Ga.

A Norwegian steamship captain spotted him off-course near Trinidad. Redfern, who did not have a radio, dropped a note from his airplane to the captain, asking him to point to the nearest land. The captain pointed the bow of his ship to Venezuela, and Redfern headed there.

Later, Venezuelan villagers may have watched his "Port of Brunswick" fly over Aug. 26, 1927, the day after he took off.

No one has seen him since.

But Redfern's memory remains alive in his hometown of Columbia, where he is still remembered as a shy, quiet youth who liked to wear an aviator's cap to school, and who spent all his spare time tinkering with airplanes.

Local historian Russell Maxey is convinced that the cotton field where Redfern started a flying business with his first home-built plane was Columbia's earliest airfield.

Maxey and Ruth Sanders, Redfern's 82-year-old sister, are trying to have a historical plaque erected at the site. But their efforts so far have been hampered by the absence of any proof that Redfern is actually dead — a state requirement for commemorative markers.

"He used to fly from here in Sumter in a sort of savannah, which was dry at the time," Mrs. Sanders recalled. "We may also put a marker there in the near future."

Headlines around the world bannered Redfern's disappearance. His grieving family helped finance more than a dozen search expeditions into the Amazon jungles.

There were tantalizing tales that the missing aviator had dropped from the sky into the hands of Stone Age tribesmen, who worshipped him as a captive god. But these stories were written off as cruel hoaxes.

"It was true," Mrs. Sanders said. "My uncle financed the man who claimed he knew where Paul was. He came to find out that the man was an imposter and was arrested for spending money my uncle had furnished him."

Mrs. Sanders believes her brother, perhaps blinded by bad weather, crashed into a mountain side in Venezuela or Guyana. Over the past two years, friends have been investigating the possible discovery of bits of glass which may have come from Redfern's open-cockpit monoplane. So far, nothing has come of it.

Mrs. Sanders thought of her brother when the Space Shuttle that bore the name of his hometown was launched.

"Late afternoon glare doesn't bother us anymore."

Molokai — Hawaii still calls

By PHILIP SOUSA
Copley News Service

MOLOKAI, Hawaii — Most evenings, the lights of Oahu twinkle like a cluster of lighthouses a mere 26 miles to the west across the Kaiwi Channel.

Content with their island's gentle pace and predominantly rural character, most residents seldom bother with the sight. But visitors do, especially after a couple of days here when they realize that the 20-minute air hop from bustling Honolulu is a journey back in time.

Least developed of the state's six major islands and originally the site of a leper colony, Molokai harbors what is left of old Hawaii. For one, its population of nearly 7,000 easy-going and mostly good-natured souls includes the largest number of native Hawaiians in the chain.

TRAVEL

Centuries-old fish ponds built by the early Polynesian settlers along the island's protected south shore, scores of tiny churches, remains of ancient temples and other vestiges of the past abound. And so do rugged cliffs, thick rain forests, sandy coves and other wondrous physical features the majority of which have yet to be disturbed by humans.

Molokai may lie within sight of Oahu and Maui, but it might as well be a world away. Just about everything here is unique. Above all, there is little to remind one that the 20th century might be approaching.

No traffic lights. No public transportation. And basically one paved highway linking the rolling fertile plains on the west end with the spectacular thrusting mountains and lush valleys on the eastern tip.

Near the sea on the south coast that faces Maui, sleepy Kaunakakai serves as the shoe-shaped island's business, social and cultural hub. The main street, Ala Malama, runs for about three blocks, its false-front structures reminiscent of a western movie set.

Islanders come to Molokai's only town to shop in stores that carry an amazingly diverse array of goods. Nearly everybody, a few informed visitors included, stops at the 66-year-old Kanemitsu Bakery, whose bread made with natural ingredients is renowned statewide. And here they gather during weekend nights for a little fun in the two or three spots around where there is music and drink.

Popular with locals, the Mid Nite Inn closes at 9 p.m. and is hard for outsiders to find because the owners refuse to replace the sign blown off the roof by a nasty wind 35 years ago.

Three of the island's five hotels — the Pau Hana Inn, the Molokai and the Molokai Shores — nestle nearby amid trees and flowers. Accommodations are mostly modest one- and two-bedroom bungalows with a setting and casual flavor that make up for the lack of push-button gadgets.

About 17 gently winding miles to the west, Molokai's only luxury resort, the Sheraton Molokai, sprawls over 29 landscaped acres along uncrowded Kepuhi Beach. The first name is the only feature this splendid hotel may have in common with other properties in the chain. The 292 handsomely appointed rooms and suites are housed in one- and two-story wood-frame Polynesian-style structures that blend into the natural contours of the site.

An 18-hole championship golf course, one of the few in the country built completely along a stretch of shoreline, starts practically at the edge of the hotel's large swimming pool. Three miles of golden-sand beach front the property, yet there are seldom more than a few guests on it. The golf links and the four night-lighted tennis courts, however, are usually well patronized.

Built in 1977 on previously uninhabited land, the hotel soon became a favorite gathering place for many residents. What draws them here is the Ohia Lodge, where live entertainment and excellent food and drinks are featured, and the adjacent Paniolo Broiler, which specializes in superb steak fare. The former occupies a cathedral-roofed pavilion with exposed wood beams and ceiling fans. Albeit a bit steep for most Molokaians, these are the two best night spots on the island.

Still barely at the edge of Hawaii's tourism picture, Molokai has long appealed to a small number of knowledgeable hunters seeking wild boar, deer, pheasant and other game birds. Also anglers aware of the amazingly fertile fishing grounds off the southwest and southeast coasts. Recent visitors, few such as they are, have included golfers, outdoor-minded types drawn by the many unspoiled valleys and mountains, and big-city refugees in quest of a soothing change of pace.

A dose of adventure should be included in one's baggage, along with casual clothes and comfortable walking shoes, when coming to this fascinating slice of Hawaii's outback. Thus equipped, a sojourn on Molokai takes on added dimension, a mere holiday becomes an experience to remember and one returns to the modern world certain to have spent time in a South Seas heaven thought to have vanished long ago.

While some of the options for exploration remain the province of experts, especially the practically uninhabited northeast or Pali Coast, most of the key sights can be reached via taxi, tour van or, better yet, rental car — and a little walking or hiking.

On the advice of a Honolulu friend familiar with Molokai, I opted for one of the neat compacts of Tropical Rent A Car, one of several companies with desks at the main airfield near the village of Hoolehua. For the 20-minute flight from Honolulu International Airport, my pal had suggested Royal Hawaiian Air Service, one of several small and large airlines flying here.

Both turned out to be good choices.

Royal Hawaiian's twin-engine Cessna 402s, which comfortably accommodate up to nine passengers, fly lower than the larger craft used by other carriers and thus offer superior views. Too, its expert pilots share their ample knowledge of the islands with their guests and often fly courses within sight of important landmarks.

And while only one paved highway with very short side spurs spans Molokai's 38-mile length and driving on unpaved roads is forbidden, a rental car allows for travel at will.

Interestingly, this island some consider primitive has two of the Hawaiian Islands' most unusual attractions: a heart-stopping mule trek that zigzags 1,660 feet down an awesome cliff to the neat hamlet of Kalaupapa, to which those with leprosy were once banished, and an 800-acre wildlife park, the only one in the state, where more than 300 antelopes, giraffes, oryxes and other exotic animals roam free. Part of and operated by the 67,000-acre Molokai Ranch, the reserve may be visited via the hourlong "African Safari" tours that operate several times daily Monday through Saturday from the Sheraton.

Kalaupapa, which sits placidly on an idyllic tongue of land that juts into the blue sea, can only be reached on foot over the same thrilling trail used by the muleback tours or by commuter airline from the main Molokai airport; one of them, Royal Hawaiian, has the only direct service linking the former leper colony with Honolulu.

About 120 former patients, their disease arrested, chose to remain when the state moved the treatment center to Oahu several years ago. Visitors over the age of 16 are welcome to this historic village originally established at a more rugged nearby location by the Hawaiian monarchy in the 1860s.

The once infamous spot gained wide recognition through the efforts of a young Belgian priest known as Father Damien who came for a brief visit in 1873 and stayed to give spiritual and physical aid to the sick until he too was felled by the disease 16 years later. He also built several of the many tiny churches scattered throughout the island.

One of Molokai's most arresting sights, Kalaupapa and the narrow peninsula on which it nestles, may be seen from a lookout atop a 2,000-foot cliff at the edge of 34-acre Palaau Park. A short but often moist trail carpeted with pine needles leads from the park's small parking area to the viewing spot. Nearby, a cluster of phallic rocks, including a six-foot image, stands as witness of the old Hawaiians' beliefs in pagan gods and legends.

About 20 miles from both the Sheraton and the town of Kaunakakai, the park entrance lies at the end of route 470, a short paved road off the main highway that climbs steadily past vast symmetrical pineapple fields; the world's largest rubber-lined reservoir; Molokai's other golf course, the nine-hole Ironwood Hills, and a few private homes.

For reasons no one knows or cares to explain, the main highway changes numbers around the main airport. But no matter, it still is the only way to reach the mostly virgin Halawa Valley with its majestic waterfalls, dreamy lagoon and splendid beach.

From Kaunakakai on east the heretofore smoothly paved and wide highway becomes rougher and narrower seemingly with the passage of every mile. Toward the end, numerous switchbacks add to the challenge. But the sights along this coastal section of the road — tiny sandy coves, ancient fish ponds, miniature churches, the nearby island of Lanai, the mountainous north shore of Maui, and some impressive surfing spots — coupled with time on Halawa Bay's crescent-shaped beach, a picnic at the adjacent small state park and the two-mile hike through the forest to the 250-foot falls more than make up for the sometimes difficult drive.

Along with the majority of the residents, the sensitive visitor hopes that progress can be delayed — if not arrested — so that only the twinkling lights of the neighboring islands signal the existence of a decidedly different world.

Only thus will Molokai's unique rural atmosphere, gentle pace and unspoiled beauty endure.

COME TO MOLOKAI — The gentle Hawaii of long ago still lies waiting under a tropic sky in many parts of the state. One of those places is the island of Molokai, where green hills and views of pristine coast, tiny villages and churches combine with posh resorts for the best of two worlds. There is something for everyone in Hawaii.

Tourism in Egypt

By STEVEN K. HINDY
AP Writer

ASWAN, Egypt (AP) — Idle horse-drawn carriages on the shady Nile promenade, single-sail feluccas tied fast to the docks, hungry, irritable souvenir hawkers — all attest to the slump in tourism that followed President Anwar Sadat's assassination last October.

Such inactivity is rare for high season in Aswan, the ancient trading city that is the site of the 4th century B.C. temples of Philae, the red granite quarries where the Pharaohs' artisans fashioned needle-like obelisks and other monuments that have found their way into many cities of the world; and the Soviet-designed high dam.

"Not good," is the way carriage drivers, black-market money dealers and others answer the question, "How's business?"

A West German guide on a Nile River cruise boat from Aswan to Luxor tells of a trip in January when 12 tourists had the 184-berth ship all to themselves and were served by an 86-member crew.

At the awe-inspiring Temple of Abu Simbel, built by the Pharaoh Ramses II about 149 miles south of Aswan and moved 17 years ago to escape the waters of the high dam's Lake Nasser, a tourist guide says 8 to 10 planeloads of visitors arrived daily this past Christmas season, compared with 14 a day the year before.

Aswan is unbearably hot in summer but in winter temperatures hover in the high 60's. With lush botanical gardens nestled in the Nile's dune-rimmed valley, Aswan is perhaps the most relaxed and quiet town in Egypt.

According to official figures, the Oct. 6 assassination in Cairo, 446 miles to the north, led to a 12 percent drop in tourism for the last three months of 1981, compared to the previous year. Up to then, the government had been boasting a 16 percent increase. The final figure for the year showed a 9.8 percent growth, to 1.376 million foreign visitors.

"Things are improving slowly, and I think (President Hosni) Mubarak's trip to the States and Europe will help a bit because that's where most of the tourists come from," said a U.S. diplomat who studies tourism.

The Western nations and Japan account for about half of Egypt's tourists, the Arab states for 40 percent. The rest are mainly from East European nations.

But the recovery has not been as quick here and a series of earth tremors in November and January did nothing to boost confidence.

Tourism, fishing and sugar-cane farming are the three pillars of Aswan's economy, and the first is most important. It also is one of the mainstays of Egypt's foreign exchange-starved economy. According to the latest figures, tourism brought $1.1 billion into the treasury last year, compared with $907 million in 1980.

These totals do not include tourist money traded on the black market, which pays as much as 25 percent more than the official rate. Western diplomats who follow tourism fear that the government's lastest effort to capture foreign currency in the banking system may backfire by discouraging tourism.

Korea — Land of the Morning Calm

By MURIEL W. BUCKLES
Copley News Service

SEOUL — The Koreans are a remarkable people. Consider the resilience, tenacity and courage they must possess to have been able to accomplish what they have.

Just a quarter century ago, Thomas E. Dewey, viewing the devastation wrought by the Korean War, said Seoul was even more thoroughly destroyed than was Berlin in 1945. And today the capital of South Korea is a vibrant, thriving city with a population of over eight million.

The city is surrounded by mountain ranges, leaving only a few sqaure miles of actual space for the city, but what a wealth of development is contained in that area — the national government buildings, educational institutions, businesses, homes, entertainment, modern hotels and a "smorgasbord" of shoppers' dreams come true — from the bustling markets such as Eastgate to luxury shops to underground shopping arcades. There is something for every taste and every pocketbook.

Restaurants offer a range of prices and cuisine also. You can dine in the excellent hotel restaurants such as the Ninth Gate at the Chosun and enjoy French cooking or get acquainted with the Koreans' favorite foods at family-type restaurants like the Muil Kalbi on Myukyodung Street, where a generous meal costs less than $3 per person.

Be sure to include at least one of these small restaurants in your itinerary. You leave your shoes at the door of the dining room, step up to the small room where you will be served. The floor is heated, which is comfortable, for that is where you sit to eat, on straw mats. The low tables have a hole cut in the center to accommodate the brazier on which the meat is cooked. Dishes of condiments and vegetables and rice are set out for you to help yourself — radishes, sea crab, several types of kimchi (this mainstay of the Korean diet, a preserved cabbage comes in many varieties, some mild and some not so mild) and raw garlic. Mr. Lee, our guide, recommended that we try the pungent vegetable: "Garlic eaten raw is very good for the health, especially for the man, I think."

The kalbi (barbecued short ribs) and bulgoki (marinated beef strips) are cooked at your table by a young lady who is very adept with chopsticks. There are lettuce leaves to wrap your rice in if you don't do too well with chopsticks yourself, remembering that the Koreans do not lift the rice bowl as do the Chinese and Japanese, but leave it on the table, making eating rice an experience in survival. Barley tea is the beverage, a mild tea with no discernible flavor, served lukewarm.

Seoul is blessed with many sites to attract the tourist and since it is so compact, it is easy to get around either on your own via taxi or by signing up at the major hotels for guided tours.

You will be sure to want to see the various palaces, including Toksukung Palace which has a poetic meaning — Palace of Virtuous Longevity — and the National Museum of Modern Art, both just across from City Hall. Kyongbokkung Palace, site of the impressive National Museum, is located just behind the Western-style Capitol Building. Less than a mile east you will find Ch'angdokkung Palace with the lovely Secret Gardens, where the former royal family lived.

If you do decide to look around on your own, you needn't worry about getting lost. As Mr. Bongchun Chang, executive vice president of the Korea National Tourism Corp. said, "You can always find someone who speaks English. English is taught from 7th grade in schools and they are lowering that to elementary school. The American soldiers being in Korea has had a great impact, so many signs are in English."

One-third of the Americans who travel in Asia spend at least some time during their trip in Korea and the government hopes to increase that number. It has proclaimed 1982 the "Year of Friendship" between that country and the United States and is sponsoring a series of events marking the establishment of diplomatic relations 100 years ago. And while 100 years seems a long time when thinking of the United States, it is just yesterday to Korea, whose Silla dynasty was founded during the days Caesar ruled Rome.

The Koreans are proud of their long heritage and ancient culture and their everyday lives reflect a kinship with the past. Amid the business suits and latest Parisian fashions, you see many people, young and old, proudly wearing "hambok," the traditional clothing — the women in graceful gowns that have short fitted jackets and long flowing skirts, the men in baggy pants cinched in at the ankles, a coat that ties to one side, and sometimes a horsehair hat with a high crown. Mothers still carry their babies on their backs, tied snugly in place with a quilted blanket arrangement in winter or a lightweight support in warm weather. Modern trucks crowd the busy streets, while men stagger under prodigous loads they balance on an A-frame strapped to their backs. The same industrious zeal is applied to the restoration of a temple as on construction of the subway that is scheduled for completion by 1986, in time for the Olympics that will be held in Korea that year.

The pride of heritage is evident at the museums and shrines, well attended by all ages, but especially noticed were the groups of well-behaved schoolchildren, mostly in uniform. In an orderly fashion, they crowded around cases of celadon pottery and bronze artifacts, scenic panels, calligraphy displays and Buddhas, copying inscriptions, taking notes and making sketches.

This interest in the past is nowhere more evident than in the Korean Folk Village, 30 miles south of Seoul. Not a museum, but a re-created village of over 200 years ago, life goes on as it did in the past with artisans, farmers and craftsmen working as their forefathers did, wearing costumes of that time. There are 240 buildings of authentic construction, farm homes, teachers' homes, storage huts, a wine press and brewery, outbuildings, village magistrate's home, all furnished in accordance with the status of the inhabitants. Signs in several languages, including English, describe the various buildings, the daily routine of the inhabitants, what crops they planted, etc.

KOREAN CONTRASTS — Some of the contrasts of Korean life may be seen in these two photos. The lady unrolling a bolt of Korean silk to show a customer works amid the bustle of busy Eastgate Market in Seoul. The two blacksmiths at the Folk Village 30 miles south of Seoul ply their ancient trade dressed in the costumes of their ancestors.

Knoxville to host World's Fair

By JERRY HULSE
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — S. H. (Bo) Roberts Jr. was in an expansive mood as he faced a hastily called press conference inside his World's Fair office here.

With radio and TV microphones strung across his desk, he joined reporters listening intently to the voice of his World's Fair cohort, Jake F. Butcher, booming over the executive speaker on Bo's telephone.

"Can you hear me, Bo?" Butcher cried excitedly.

"Sure can," replied Roberts. "Loud and clear."

Butcher interrupted. "Bo, we got them — Peru's signed!"

Smiling hugely, Bo Roberts, president of the 1982 World's Fair in Knoxville, spoke to reporters again: "Isn't this wonderful — isn't that wonderful news — South America's joined us."

Later, as the reporters filed out of his office, Bo Roberts still smiled. More than six years of exhaustive effort was paying off. The call from Jake Butcher was yet another testimonial that Expo '82 was being taken seriously. Altogether, 21 nations were now committed. They'd join a lineup of U.S. states and dozens of major corporations on opening day, May 1, in a spruced-up, formerly blighted downtown section of Knoxville that the local citizenry now calls Glitter Gulch.

Its theme, "Energy Turns the World," makes it a lively topic, although it's likely to be best remembered for the huge helping of entertainment its promoters are assembling: folk artists, jugglers, country and bluegrass bands, cloggers, storytellers and spiritual singers. They'll file in from the hills of Tennessee and Kentucky; others will filter in from Knoxville's own Mechanicsville neighborhood. There'll be hillbilly fiddlers and spiritual singers, folk sculptors and buck dancers. One thing they'll share: a spirited desire to make the South's first-ever World's Fair a rousing success.

Knoxville, an industrial-university town of 180,000, is pleasant, peaceful. Neat rows of white frame houses rise along its elm-shaded streets. Its citizens are mostly good-natured, fine people. They hunt and fish, read their Bible, speak with a Southern twang and seem content to keep the status quo. It's the sort of low-key, down-home place one envisions when conjuring up images of a laid-back Southern village. Sidewalks fold at sunset. The theaters frequently screen dated films. Folks passing on the streets are cheery. Unsophisticated, relaxed. That's Knoxville. Hardly the upbeat image one figures for a city soon to join the big time with a World's Fair.

It took nerve even to suggest the idea, but Knoxville's good old boys — business and political types — were determined. The result: The flags of 21 nations will flutter above the fairgrounds, a one-time slum area and dilapidated railroad yard geared for posterity. The result: Expo is being hailed as the greatest show ever to hit Tennessee.

On the flip side, Expo '82 has been beset with controversy from the outset. A local university professor repeatedly has accused local businessmen of using the fair for personal gain. Others lament the congestion, the crime, the pollution and the inflation they say the fair will cause.

But the thorniest problem concerns housing. There'll be plenty for fairgoers. It's the locals who are the victims. Already they suffer. To date, more than 1,000 residents have been evicted from homes and apartments by landlords lusting for the bonanza they taste already. One apartment owner hiked rents from $245 a month to $910 a week. Other landlords anticipate as much as $300 and $400 a night from fairgoers.

Dollar signs flash in the eyes of motel owners across town. Tom Jaynes, manager of the tacky Terrace View Motor Lodge in Knoxville's Kingston Pike area, flashed his business card the other day. It read: "Nightly rates $15.50 and up." Asked what he intended to charge during the fair, Jaynes shrugged. "Hunnert to a hunnert-twenty-five a night."

The Howard Johnson's Motor Lodge on Chapman Highway — its owner is installing 37 temporary modular units — will hike rates to $85 a night. That's more than double the current figure. The 150-room Vols Inn will turn $39-$45 rooms into $210 package deals. That's for two adults for two nights. Tickets to Expo are part of the deal. Even campground owners are doubling and tripling rates. Gouging of fairgoers won't be restricted to Knoxville, though. At a Best Western motel, 128 miles away in Georgia, prices will nearly double.

Hardest hit are Knoxville's handicapped, its senior citizens and students. They've been evicted by greedy landlords under the guise of "modernizing" the run-down rooming houses and apartments. George Arnold, 63, partially paralyzed, was evicted from his mobile home. A wheelchair victim was another casualty, and a handicapped, 66-year-old woman was turned out of an apartment she'd occupied for 16 years. She found another, but it cost her an additional $150 a month.

Meanwhile, the quick-buck artists have built modular villages that'll be torn down following the fair. Another entrepreneur is converting a huge tobacco warehouse into several hundred rooms. His asking price: $66 a night. No TV, no private bath.

Knox Visit, an arm of the tourist agency handling reservations, said any increases beyond 20 percent would be considered gouging, and an ordinance passed by the City Council is aimed at refusing rental permits to landlords accused of overpricing their properties. Still, neither action is expected to pack much muscle, although Knox Visit is steering fairgoers to reasonable properties.

So who else will profit from the fair? If you would believe its promoters, nearly everyone. They tell how Expo will generate $500 million in new business. More than 20,000 jobs is one plus, they say. (Earlier, they'd put the figure at 40,000.) Of the figure, 12,000 probably will be permanent. Several of the 54 restaurants operating on the fairgrounds will remain open after the fair. Other jobs are being generated by three new hotels: the 18-story Hilton, the 200-room Quality Inn and the 300-room Holiday Inn (the latter on the fairgrounds). Surprisingly, rates at the new hotels are cheaper than those charged at many of the town's scruffy motels: $88 a night at the Hilton, $75.50 at the high-rise Quality Inn, $69 at the Holiday Inn.

"We're looking beyond the fair when business returns to normal," Quality's Thomas M. Jackson said. "We want our guests to return." The town's leading hotel, the Hyatt Regency, boosted its rates only modestly. Said manager Paul Sherbakoff: "We've got to do business when this fair's history."

Expo's most vocal opponent is an angry University of Tennessee professor, Joe Dodd, who formed the Citizens for a Better Knoxville to oppose a multimillion-dollar bond issue to help fund the fair. Dodd considers a new high-rise office building on the fairgrounds "an unnecessary waste" and continues to trade shots with Jake Butcher, the fair's chief promoter, whom Dodd accuses of benefiting financially from the exposition.

Butcher, two-time defeated candidate for governor, is chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Knoxville's United American Bank, one of 43 lending institutions pumping money into the fair. Butcher, a friend of former President Jimmy Carter, got White House endorsement for the fair before Carter left the Oval Office. Already, locals are calling the Expo "Jake's Fair." City Councilwoman Bernice O'Connor declared: "He's going to own Knoxville!" Other critics contend that city officials, as well as bankers, will benefit from Knoxville's Big Show.

Still, there are dividends. A traffic bottleneck known for years as Malfunction Junction has been repaired. Old buildings are being spruced up. Already, millions of dollars are pouring into the city. Cobwebs are being brushed aside in once-dilapidated old buildings on the fairgrounds. The buildings are being painted and propped up. The old Louisville & Nashville Railroad Station has been transformed into a souped-up Victorian attraction containing restaurants and offices.

Knoxville's residents agree this will be more of a fun fair than a serious exposition. The United States and Japan will play baseball. It will be showtime in the other foriegn pavilions — Australia, Canada, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, the Republic of Korea, Saudi Arabia, the United Kingdom, the Hungarian People's Republic, Panama, the Philippines, etc. While they entertain fairgoers, the world's biggest Ferris wheel will spin overhead. Among other thrill rides: a double-loop roller coaster that "promises to scare the dickens out of everybody." There also will be stars: Johnny Cash, Debby Boone, Bill Cosby, Bob Hope.

It's to be Knoxville's biggest show ever. One thing's certain, of course: Knoxville never will be quite the same again. The promise comes straight from the mouth of Marc Grossman, the Hollywood flack hired to sell Expo to the world.

"Few wanted the fair in the beginning," Grossman said. "Everybody seemed happy with Knoxville as it was."

On May 1, that becomes history.

Potato stockpile up some

Inventories in major producing states as of April 1 were estimated at 77.5 million hundredweight, up 7 percent from a year ago but still 16 percent less than the supply of two years ago, the department's Crop Reporting Board said Thursday.

The 1981 fall crop of potatoes, which make up most of the U.S. supply, was about 281.4 million hundreweight, compared to 255.7 million in 1980.

However, that was down from 285.1 million produced in the fall harvest of 1979 and the crop of almost 312 million hundredweight in 1978, the report said.

Your horoscope

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, April 19, 1982

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Hollywood celebrities Dudley Moore and Jill St. John celebrate this birthday with you. Today is also the running of the famous Boston Marathon. Courtesy on the road and in the office is very important to your well-being this year. Exercise patience and self-control. Other people want to help advance your career but are sometimes put off by your desire to go it all alone. Show that you learn quickly and profit from your mistakes. Partnerships should be especially successful in the months just ahead. You renew an old romance and find it far more satisfying the second time around.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You make your point. Employers are willing to grant salary increases. Rejection by a member of the opposite sex is only temporary. Do not accept a challenge you cannot win.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do rock the boat a little! It will be good for both you and the system. Just be sure that you have done your homework. Romantic partner probably wants marriage.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Keep business separate from pleasure. Financial considerations lead you to make a mistake. Correct it immediately and seek a better solution.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your self-discipline pays off. Obstructions and delays keep you on your toes. Romance become more intense. Get your household and financial affairs in better order.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Learn how to play the game of politics or do not try to compete. Let your intuition guide you in personal matters, but base your business decisions on facts and figures.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A lost item reappears. You seem to be your own best critic, but strive too hard for perfection. Visit older person confined to hospital or home.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are attracted to someone of a different age group. Do everything possible to make this a happy day for your loved ones. Stick to work you can handle alone.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Give free rein to your creativity. Profits will zoom as a direct result! Attend to loved one's wishes, no matter how whimsical they seem.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Do not let a preoccupation with details cloud the picture. Double-check facts, figures. A mistake could send the whole budget down the drain.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Interruptions could slow you down at work today. Direct your energies toward one goal at a time. New career opportunities open up if you are patient and persistent.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An opponent is trying to divide and conquer. Maintain a steady course and follow your intuition, and you will eventually win. Cooperation helps you gain your objectives.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Personality conflicts must be reconciled before you can make a new project work. Start a dialogue with those who are on a collision course. Your patience will be rewarded.

Voluntarism makes it work

By NANCY MIERTSCHIN
Midland United Way Staff

Sarah McDonald had driven up and down Terrell Street from her communications job at Exxon to Starline Printers, passing Casa de Amigos often. Yet until she took on a volunteer post with the United Way, she had never thought about ways her communications skills could benefit the Casa.

Rodney Robinson found help from many people along the road from his father's farm to his position as a Midland business leader. Now, as a Salvation Army Board member, he has found a way to return that help by helping others maintain their dignity and attain some of their own goals.

Although the paths that brought Ms. McDonald and Robinson to volunteer involvement are diverse and the types of voluntary activity they represent are quite different, they agree helping other people makes them feel good about themselves.

RODNEY GREW UP near Greenwood, riding his motor scooter from pump to pump to tend his father's irrigation system before he was old enough to know such a vehicle was cause for great envy among Greenwood grade schoolers.

After high school at Stanton, he attended Colorado School of Mines on academic scholarship and wound up back in Midland in 1971.

"A lot of people helped me along the way," he explained, "and I'm glad to give back that help to others." And through his position as a Salvation Army Board member he has found a way to provide opportunities for others.

"We are seeing an influx of people seeking work in Midland. Many of them just need some interim help and then, when they get the jobs, they are willing to pay for what the Salvation Army provides."

For the past several months, the Salvation Army has been lodging an average of 38 men per night, almost double the number of bunks available there. Part of what Rodney and other board members do is find innovative ways to deal with this and other new situations.

AS RODNEY SEES it, the Salvation Army Board brings together men and women who share a sense of compassion and who are interested in what they can achieve as a whole.

The key, he says, lies in having more minds and more hands to help solve the problems brought to the Salvation Army.

And, he adds, the Salvation Army historically has dealt with a wide range of human needs other than a growing group of job seekers.

Its programs are aimed not only at clothing needy children at the Christmas season and providing baskets of food to indigent families throughout the year — without casting judgment — but at men and women who perhaps would have no other resources for a meal and a place to sleep, the kind of assistance he sees as a basic human responsibility.

Rodney became involved because he knew if he didn't address the needs he saw, someone would go unhelped.

He sums up his attitude toward voluntary participation as being the difference between dignity and welfare. By prompting voluntary solutions to common human problems, groups such as the Salvation Army and other United Way agencies can help people attain what they need for themselves, while preserving their dignity.

ALTHOUGH SARAH, who is personnel assistant and editor in Exxon's Division office in Midland, doesn't describe herself as heavily involved in volunteer activities, she is a person who finds ways to help beyond her specified volunteer roles.

She moved to Midland from Dallas almost 30 years ago to work for Exxon as a commercial artist and found she had developed a "real pride in Midland and what it's done."

At a suggestion from Exxon's Division Employee Relations Manager, Sarah began working last year with United Way's communications committee. Part of her volunteer role was to provide communications support to two United Way programs — Casa de Amigos and Big Brothers/Big Sisters.

During the year of that assignment, she saw the needs of the growing Big Brothers/Big Sisters program that extended beyond communications assistance and she obtained surplus office furniture and supplies from Exxon for the expanding organization.

Another part of the volunteer job was advising Casa on development of brochures and its broadcast and newspaper publicity.

Even though the original assignment ended several months ago, Sarah still stays in touch with "her" agencies, directing a recently transferred Exxon employee to Big Brothers/Big Sisters and dropping by Casa on her way to the printer to see how she can help.

"It helps me to help others and to help Exxon," Sarah explained. "And besides, working with these agencies gives me a front seat to see what the United Way does year-round."

Conversation with Sarah about volunteering seems to steer away from her and back toward Exxon's support of voluntary activities. "My volunteer work is on company time," she stressed. "It's great to feel I'm doing some good and helping Exxon too." And then she adds a list of examples of Exxon's community involvement — support of the Allison Cancer Center, leadership in United Way activities, and generally backing its employees' voluntary activities.

BUT SARAH'S volunteering actually began before Exxon's encouragement. Shortly after she arrived in Midland in the early 1950s, she began working with the Red Cross and soon was head of its disaster evacuation committee, a position she held for many years.

More recently, as a corporate representative, she attended a regional United Way volunteer conference, voicing some of Midland's concerns to United Way of America officers and sharing ideas with volunteers from other cities.

Brainstorming or picture-taking, Sarah McDonald has taken on a role in Midland only she could fill. And with his problem-solving abilities, Rodney Robinson too has found a special way to pass along a measure of help.

Other volunteers in Midland spend afternoons tutoring children who haven't quite mastered reading, or mornings taping books for the blind and physically disabled.

Some brave poison ivy and sunburn to spend a weekend roughing it with kids who wouldn't otherwise know the thrills of sleeping in a tent or cooking over an open fire.

Volunteer nurses provide that little bit of extra attention needed to assure a senior citizen keeps taking his blood pressure medicine.

Each of these people is unique in talent and motivation, yet together they represent the most unifying and constructive force at work in America — volunteers.

"It helps me to help others and to help Exxon. And besides, working with these agencies gives me a front seat to see what the United Way does year-round."

— Sarah McDonald

Volunteering American way of life

The roots of America's voluntary sector were born in 1727 in the mind of a man more famous for harnessing electricity — Benjamin Franklin.

Franklin and a few of his Philadelphia friends formed a mutual improvement society, called the Junto, which simply means a self-appointed committee. Members of the Junto met every Friday night in an ale house to discuss everything from politics to the city's problems — and what to do about all of them.

This was just the first of Franklin's community involvement projects. Volunteer fire departments, the Pennsylvania Hospital and the American Philosophical Society were all Franklin's brainchildren.

His ideas became the pattern for other American communities. By 1831, America had built the first society in history based on three sectors — political, commercial and voluntary.

Voluntarism cannot be claimed exclusively by America, but it certainly has developed to its highest level here.

The United Way, perhaps the most famous organization of volunteers in the world today, began in 1887 in Denver as a charity society started by two ministers, a priest and a rabbi. Similar groups begun in Pittsburgh, Pa., and Cleveland, Ohio, in 1908 and 1913 respectively, further laid the groundwork for the United Way as it is known today.

United Way volunteers are of different ages and incomes and from all segments of the community. Their responsibilities are varied — some are in the field working with the handicapped, day schools, nurseries, Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts, etc.; others are on allocation boards, carefully studying how much money different organizations supported by those who donate to United Way will receive. All care about the future of their communities.

People helping people has always been a part of the American way of life, but it has never been quite as important as it is today.

Recession, inflation and a slumping economy have put more emphasis than ever on the voluntary segment of this country. Non-profit programs throughout the country are being hit hard by budget cutbacks; volunteers can fill this gap.

This is the point President Reagan made recently when he cited the need for an increased emphasis on voluntarism. American society is unique; people have always rallied for a cause. Join the cause during National Volunteer Week, April 18-24.

Price is named Outstanding Girl

Karen Price, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Price, has been named Outstanding Girl for the month of April by the Midland Branch of the American Association of University Women. The award was presented at the April branch meeting in Trinity Presbyterian Church.

Miss Price, a senior at Midland High School, qualifies as an honor graduate with a grade point average of 4.06. She has been a member of the National Honor Society two years and has received three academic letters. She is a member of the MHS honors band, serving as treasurer this year. She has received three band letters and marched with the Flag Squad in the 1981 Rose Bowl Parade. She is a member of JETS, French Club, Drama Club and Student Council.

Miss Price was selected as queen of Westside Lions Club for 1981-82 year and has been named a Junior Rotarian. She has been a member of the Pickwick Players at Midland Community Theatre four years. She has served this organization as president, secretary-treasurer and board member.

She is a member of Grace Presbyterian Church and the handbell choir and youth choir of First Presbyterian Church. She works after school as an assistant secretary for Consolidated Petroleum Industries, Inc.

Miss Price is the recipient of the Academic Achievement Award from Texas Christian University, where she plans to major in technical theater next year.

The Midland Branch of AAUW selects an outstanding senior girl from a local high school each month of the school year. To be eligible, a girl must maintain at least a 3.5 grade point average and be actively involved in family, home, church, community and school activities. Nomination forms are available from AAUW members.

Microwave cooking aids slimming

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

Summer fast approaches. More sun and less clothing may cause you to become more aware of your figure after winter's bulky sweaters are shed.

Caloric restrictions and a health-conscious attitude about what you ingest are wise counsel for any season. And hearty cold-weather feasting may have left you feeling conspicuous on the beach so now is a good time to stick to a diet plan that makes you look good in that new string bikini, or those swim trunks with the racing stripe down the side.

There are many advantages to preparing your diet meals a la microwave. A minimum of oil or butter is needed, if any, to prevent sticking. Sauces can be eliminated or kept to a minimum. The cooking process itself causes foods to steam in their own natural juices, retaining vitamins and flavor.

With the aid of your microwave oven, dieting can be a creative culinary adventure, and the good results will be obvious when you don summer's figure-revealing clothing.

LEMON YOGURT SOUP

2 egg yolks
Juice of ½ lemon
1 tsp. cold water
½ cup chicken broth
Salt, white pepper
1 cup plain yogurt

Cook chicken broth in a 2-cup glass measuring cup two minutes, until boiling. Blend two tbsps. of hot chicken broth into egg mixture, seasonings to taste, add yogurt. Serve well chilled. Makes two servings.

ZUCCHINI BOATS

4 small zucchini
2 cups crumbled herb-seasoned stuffing mix
1 tbsp. butter
¼ tsp. salt
1 slightly beaten egg
2 tbsps. grated Parmesan cheese

Cut zucchini in half lengthwise. Scoop out center, using spoon,leaving ¼-nch shell. Chop scooped out pulp and place in glass mixing bowl. Add stuffing mix, butter and salt. Mix lightly. Cook, covered, in microwave oven for six minutes until stuffing mix is moistened. Stir in egg. Spoon into zucchini shells. Place on large serving platter. Sprinkle with Parmesan cheese. Cover with waxed paper. Cook in microwave oven eight minutes, until zucchini is tender.

COLORFUL FILLETS

1 lb. haddock fillets, cut into serving pieces
3 sliced green onions
1 cup sliced fresh mushrooms
1 cup chopped tomato
¾ tsp. salt
Dash pepper
⅛ tsp. basil leaf

Arrange fillets in 8x8x2-inch glass baking dish. Top withvegetables. Sprinle with seasonings. Cover with plastic wrap. Pierce. Cook 4½ minutes, until fish flakes easily with fork. There are only 118 calories in each serving of this fish recipe that serves four.

JAPANESE BEEF AND MUSHROOMS

1½ lbs. flank steak
2 cups mushrooms, sliced
1 tbsp. oil
¼ cup soy sauce
½ cup pineapple juice
2 cloves garlic, minced
½ tsp. ginger
¼ tsp. pepper
½ tsp. dry mustard

Slice steak on the diagonal, across the grain, ¼ inch thick. Combine all ingredients except meat in a 1½-quart lightly greased casserole. Cook in microwave oven six minutes. Stir in meat, cook two minutes longer until meat loses pink color. Serve immediately. Makes three to four servings.

LIGHT AND FRUITY TAPIOCA

2 cups skim milk
2 eggs
¼ cup sugar
¼ cup quick-cooking tapioca
¼ tsp. salt
2 tbsps. sugar
1 tsp. vanilla
2 cups sliced fresh fruit

Measure milk into 4-cup glass measuring cup. Separate eggs. Add ¼ cup sugar, tapioca, salt and egg yolks into milk. Blend well. Cook in microwave oven six minutes until mixture boils. Stir after four minutes. Beat egg whites in large bowl until frothy. Gradually stir in sugar, beating until mixture forms soft peaks. Beat in vanilla. Fold in pudding mixture. Cool. Spoon fruit into six serving dishes. Top with pudding. Serves six, with about 100 calories per serving.

Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens. Foods are cooked on HIGH (100 percent power) and uncovered unless otherwise specified

Checking pressure in tires for safety

By AL CARRELL

Self service at the gas pump can save you a few cents per gallon in most service stations. However, it often means that your car isn't getting any of the other services that the attendant used to perform. Even if you aren't the least bit handy, there are some things you can check on your car... and should for the life of the car, and maybe even yourself.

One of the easiest car checks to pass up seems to be tire pressure. Did you know that incorrect tire pressure is probably the single most common cause of premature tire failures. Incorrect tire pressure can also cost you gas mileage. And as your tires wear out, the car can become unsafe.

It takes only a few moments to check the tire pressure. So start making it a regular habit. Since the best time to check the pressure is when the tires are cool, it's really best to do this at home. That means you'll need to invest in a pocket tire gauge. This is not an expensive investment, but be sure to get a quality gauge. Your owner's manual will list the required pressure, or probably there is a sticker inside the door panel with the pressure requirements. Some tire manufacturers call for a different pressure than the car maker suggests. If that's the case, it's best to go with the tire maker.

If the tire is low, you can drive to the service station and add air. However, if you drive, the pressure will change because as the air heats up, it expands. What you should do is take the reading again when you get there, and then add the number of pounds the tire was low when you checked it at home. It's best though to have your own air supply. There are small models of such air canisters that are electric pumps that operate off your car battery through a plug into the cigarette lighter. This is a good item to carry in the trunk for emergency air on the road. However, I'm not impressed with the quality of those I've tried. As they have worn out, I've replaced them with sturdy foot pumps. Besides it's good exercise.

After you start checking the tire pressure on a regular basis, you may find that one particular tire is always a little low. This means a slow leak. The first thing to check out on a slow leak is the valve. This is done by removing the valve cap and using the saliva test. You just put saliva on a fingertip and cover the valve opening. If there's a leak, it'll start to bubble up.

The most common cause for a valve leak is a little gadget in the valve called the core. The core is threaded and screws in and out. The core could just need to be screwed in farther, and this is done with a small valve core tool. Often the valve caps have such a tool on the top. If yours are not that type, invest in the inexpensive tool or make one. Buy a valve stem for a tubeless tire (or get an old one from a dealer). Then add a valve cap like we mentioned.

If the valve core is faulty, it's an easy and inexpensive replacement. However, it must be done with care. Turn the core counterclockwise until air comes out freely, but don't remove it. If you remove it all the way with lots of air pressure still there, it can actually shoot the core out like a bullet, and it could do damage to you or something else. When the new core is in place, refill the tire.

As you check the tires, always inspect for abnormal wear. Many folks notice tire wear and only think about the fact they'll have to plunk out a lot of dough for new tires. Actually your tires could be trying to tell you about something else that is wrong with your car. If you spot abnormal wear, go to a tire specialist and let him diagnose the cause of the problem. Tire wear can tell you about misalignment, defective or worn ball joints, shock absorber problems, or problems with the brake system. It could also point out caster, camber, or toe-in problems. It might be nothing more than a wheel being out of balance. Whatever the problem, when your tires try to talk, it'll pay you to listen.

Remember that your tires are a very critical part of your car safety.

JELLY ROLL

1 cup sifted cake flour
¾ cup sugar
1½ teaspoons baking powder
½ teaspoon salt
¼ cup salad oil
3 large eggs, separated
1 tablespoon grated orange rind
1-3rd cup orange juice
¼ teaspoon cream of tartar
Confectioners' sugar
Strawberry jam

Into a medium bowl sift the flour, sugar, baking powder and salt. Add the oil, egg yolks, orange rind and juice; beat with a spoon until smooth. Beat egg whites with cream of tartar until they form stiff peaks; fold into egg-yolk mixture until blended. Turn into a 15 by 10 by 1-inch jellyroll pan that has been waxpaper lined, and the paper greased with unsalted butter. Bake in a preheated 350-degree oven until cake springs back when lightly touched — 12 minutes. Turn out on a towel covered with confectioners' sugar; peel off wax paper. Roll up from the 10-inch side in the towel; leave ends open and cool. Unroll cake and spread with stawberry jam; reroll. Just before serving, sprinkle with confectioners' sugar

Dangerous doctors

By JAMES NATHAN MILLER
(Special from Reader's Digest)

Three years ago, a group of whistle blowers in New York City forced the closing of Logan Memorial Hospital because it was providing bad medicine. Surprisingly, the people who blew the whistle were the one group NOT known for bearing witness against bad medicine: doctors.

They were members of the Professional Standards Review Organization (PSRO), set up by Congress to police the cost and quality of the Medicaid and Medicare programs.

Despite opposition from the medical profession, the PSRO system is the first effective weapon the profession has ever had to root out shoddy medical practitioners. But a strong lobby of doctors, supported by the Reagan Administration, is poised to kill the whole experiment.

A Menninger Clinic psychiatrist estimates that this "small percentage" could include as many as 50,000 doctors. As to how many physicians are simply incompetent or dishonest — nobody knows. A reasonable guess is that there may be 20,000 to 50,000 physicians who shouldn't be practicing or who should be doing so only under supervision.

In a California hospital, a nurse reports seeing a physician sexually molest an unconscious woman patient. The nurse is told to forget the incident.

In a New York hospital, two physicians perform an operation with trembling hands. Both are drug addicts. Though their condition is witnessed by members of the hospital staff over a period of many months, no one reports them to either legal or medical authorities.

Why, in the medical profession, is there so much cover-up? Two reasons: Legally, when a doctor turns in a colleague, he opens himself up to a libel suit which can drag through the courts for years, costing him a fortune. Socially, doctors tend to form tightly knit groups. They refer cases to one another, play golf together, sit on the same peer-review committees.

Moreover, every doctor fears that at one time or another, he himself may have made a bad mistake in treating a patient. Which brings us back to PSRO. Many experts believe that this new system COULD get rid of bad doctors. Here's how it evolved:

In the early 1970s, Congress was searching for ways to police Medicaid and Medicare. Leery of organized medicine's ability to police itself, the lawmakers came up with a new mechanism: policing groups that would be run not by organized medicine but by volunteer physicians. These were to be the PSROs.

To avoid the problem of doctors having to get tough with their golf partners, Congress gave the PSROs big population areas to rule over — the borough of Brooklyn, the whole state of South Carolina, etc. It also gave them the power to refuse payment whenever they found excessive cost or bad medicine.

Because it took half a dozen years to get PSROs financed and organized, they are only now beginning to show their potential. The PSRO that forced closing of Logan Memorial Hospital in New York is an example. Calling itself the New York County Health Services Review Organization (NYCHSRO), it oversees Manhattan's 27 hospitals and 13,000 physicians.

The heart of the operation is information gathering. Last summer, NYCHSRO began screening its computerized data on a medium-sized hospital in Manhattan after seeing a growing number of bad-medicine complaints. NYCHSRO then decided to closely investigate 123 cases handled by 11 doctors.

The report was devastating. In 84 of the cases, the quality of care did not meet "professionally recognized standards." NYCHSRO hearings are presently determining whether four of the 11 physicians should be recommended for sanction. The other seven doctors were notified that their practice was being watched on a case-by-case basis. And the hospital was ordered to come up with a new internal quality-control program to prevent such problems in the future.

Despite the successes of PSROs around the country, however, the experiment may be throttled. The Reagan Administration asked Congress to phase it out. And, though Congress refused, it did cut the system's budget by nearly 50 percent.

An important consideration for strengthening PSROs is cost. PSROs return to the government in canceled billings about what they cost — with quality improvement as a free bonus.

Help for the home buyer

By JAMES W. WOODARD
Copley News Service

"The problems facing first-time home buyers are among the most serious concerns in our nation today. I think the vast majority of your readers would agree."

That candid comment was expressed to this writer by a U.S. congressman who places top priority on helping those first-time buyers. And he's actively pursuing solutions to their problems.

Robert J. Lagomarsino, congressman from California (19th District), has formally prepared and introduced a new bill that would allow individual first-time home buyers to put aside up to $5,000 a year in a tax-free "down payment" savings account. Under his proposed bill, the prospective home buyer can deduct that amount from his income taxes.

The legislation (H.R. 5769), sets up "individual housing accounts," similar to "individual retirement accounts" (IRAs). It's a simple but viable way to help home buyers who don't have a large equity they can move from one home to another.

Couples could put aside up to $10,000 a year, tax-free, for use as a down payment on a home. Interest earned on the accounts would also be tax-free.

Lagomarsino is rallying increasing support for his proposed bill, which is now co-sponsored by 27 members of the House. It is currently being considered by the House Ways and Means Committee.

When introducing the bill to his colleagues, Lagomarsino made the following points: "The demand for housing remains very strong and, will grow substantially through the decade of the 1980s for first-time home buyers.

"Yet inflation and high interest rates have significantly reduced the number of first-time buyers in the market. A major hurdle facing those buyers is obtaining cash for the down payment.

"The Individual Housing Accounts bill is designed to create tax-exempt housing accounts to provide long-term financing for ths nation's first-time home buyer.

"If we are seriously concerned about the diminishing ability of America's families to purchase homes, this bill is a major step in reversing that trend.

"Owning a home is an important part of the American dream. This bill won't solve all the problems standing in the way of that dream, but it's a step in the right direction."

For more information on the proposed legislation, write to Rep. Robert J. Lagomarsino, 2332 Rayburn Building, Washington, D.C. 20515.

Q. Are there signs that home owners are having more serious difficulties in making their monthly mortgage payments?

A. Yes. The mortgage delinquency rate is rising. About 5.4 percent of mortgage loan payments are now at least 30 days overdue.

Inquiries are invited and may be answered in this column. Write: James M. Woodard, 825 N. San Marcos Road, Santa Barbara, CA 93111.

Lifestyle guidelines

The following are suggested guidelines for publication of stories in the Lifestyle Department of The Midland Reporter-Telegram:

Information for our Sunday pages must be in our office by 5 p.m. the preceding Tuesday; or two days before publication in a daily paper.

Engagement announcements must appear at least four weeks before the wedding date. Wedding stories must be submitted within a week of the event.

Engagements, weddings, anniversaries and club notices must be submitted in writing. All materials should include the name and telephone number of the person submitting them. The Reporter-Telegram has forms for engagement and wedding announcement stories.

We cannot mail pictures or forms to persons living within Midland. Pictures must be picked up in the Lifestyle office within one month after publication.

Only the bride's picture will be used with both the engagement and wedding announcement.

Pictures should be black and white, preferably glossy finish, studio portraits. Studio color pictures may be submitted, but they may reproduce poorly. Good reproduction cannot be assured when color prints are used. In general, snapshots are not acceptable.

There is no charge for publication of pictures and stories.

Understanding the thinking styles of others

By MILDRED HAMILTON
Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Spouses who understand each other's styles of thinking are more likely to celebrate silver or gold anniversaries. And company executives who understand thinking patterns can make employes both more productive and more satisfied.

In short, says Psychologist Robert M. Bramson — a veteran management consultant — individuals and groups can learn how to make fewer stupid decisions. "Most of us assume that others are like us, only defective. Or we think that we are dumber than others. Either way leads to trouble."

Bramson and former associate Allen F. Harrison have put together a program and refined it through years of testing. "It should help us," Bramson says, "to get along better with all those odd people who do things differently." They outline their theories in their book, "Styles of Thinking: Strategies for Asking Questions, Making Decisions and Solving Problems," published by Anchor Press-Doubleday.

Bramson explained that the need for more information on patterns of thinking grew out of his management consulting firm's search for programs to make organizations operate better and more effectively. "Or," says Bramson, "why is it that very intelligent managers make absolutely abominable decisions and then pursue them?"

"There are only five basic styles of thinking to choose from: the synthesist, the idealist, the pragmatist, the analyst and the realist," Bramson said. "If a person has high preferences in one or two styles of thinking and is given work to do that is best done by those styles, he will look and feel competent.

"However, given another kind of work, he will look and be incompetent — but not know it.

Bramson's wife, Susan, a former nurse administrator and nurse educator, is now writing a book with Bramson. "It has a working title, 'How To Run Your Home the Way You Wish Your Office Worked.' "Having a triple relationship with my wife as spouse, co-author and partner in my firm makes it important that we know who we both are and how to make the best use of our talents.

"She has high scores in three areas: pragmatist, idealist and realist. I am a synthesist-realist — a combination of the two opposite ends — so we have the realist style of thinking in common. We understand that each of us is convinced he is correct. When we do lock heads, we realize what is happening and move on.

Should a couple take a style-of-thinking test to determine compatibility before exchanging vows? "Yes. People are comfortable with those who think as they do, but are challenged by other types. Being comfortable can also lead to dullness and the danger of being bored. Having a difference can enliven a relationship. But you must understand that the strengths in the way you think can become liabilities unless you learn how to look at how your spouse thinks."

Kitchens of the future

By DONNA LEE
Hearst Feature Service

Have you ever left the house and then wondered if you turned off the oven?

With the kitchen of the future, you could call home and command the oven to turn itself off. And that's just one of the possibilities seen by home appliance manufacturing executives, who shared their views in a recent issue of Entree, a houseware trade publication.

The technology already exists to make an iron that will automatically turn off if no one has used it for several minutes. And there's already a talking microwave oven that tells how long to cook food.

John Daniels, vice president of research and development for Proctor Silex, told Entree that with the microprocessor chip — which is essentially a mini-computer — manufacturers can expand the capabilities of any appliance. It would be possible to produce one appliance that could act as a refrigerator, stove, clock, coffee pot, timer and message unit.

Consumers already own refrigerators that set the temperature automatically in response to load and outside temperatures. There is a kitchen computer with three timers and three alarm clocks; it converts metric measurements to American ones, has a recipe-enlarging mode and an on/off appliance control.

The body pays a high price for a bad habit!

There are myths about the use of tobacco and there are facts.

While commercialized aspects of tobacco associates it with a more masculine or feminine look of symbolic stature, the truth about tobacco is that the body pays a high price for a bad habit.

Many studies have indicated that one cigarette reduces the life of a habitual smoker by ten (10) minutes. That is an alarming fact!

Every time a person smokes a cigarette, his thinking process slows down, his teeth become more discolored, irritation of the gums and throat increases and the possibility of heart and circulation diseases become more prominent.

The potential of lung cancer is also increased, and fingernails become stained. With every cigarette, physical endurance and ability decreases.

The use of tobacco is the single most cause of death in the world today. Yet, it is extremely difficult for an individual to quit smoking.

This is where we can help!

Through the procedure of hypnosis, we have helped hundreds of people stop smoking. We can also help you.

Mothers and threats

By ERMA BOMBECK

No one can pinpoint the exact day the first threat was made by a mother.

As close as anyone can figure, it was around the time of Eve who said to her son, Cain, "If you don't stop making faces at your brother, your face will turn into a pillar of salt."

Whatever you think of threats and intimidation, it's a weapon that has worked for mothers for years and is passed on from generation to generation.

Your ten basic menacing threats are still being used today and are as successful as ever in instilling fear and mistrust in a child.

"If you don't keep your hand in the car, the wind will blow your hand off." Despite the fact that you never knew anyone personally who had a hand blown off, I've never met a child who wants to take that chance.

"You cross your eyes one more time and they'll freeze that way." There was a rumor once of a telethon for frozen eyes of children who played the odds and lost, but it's not documented.

"Don't you dare wash your hair after 8:30 or you'll catch pneumonia." Someone's grandfather died once from pneumonia. I couldn't believe he didn't know better than to wash his hair after 8:30.

"If you don't comb your hair, the rats will build a nest in it." Would it look any different?

"You keep playing with those matches and you'll wet the bed." I was 35 before I trusted myself to light the stove for dinner.

"Those who play with their gum get very sick." Do you want to tell your mother that makes no sense whatsoever?

"Drink coffee before you're out of high school and your teeth will turn black."

"Sit up straight or your spine will grow that way."

"Eat everything on your plate or I'm sending your food to the Armenians." I always wondered what the Armenians did with all those cold vegetables.

The universal threat was always, "You keep making faces and your face will freeze that way." I always wanted to laugh at that one until I remembered Lot's wife turning to salt as she left Sodom. I just knew she was horsing around!

New medicine for angina patients

By LEO BOWLER
Copley News Service

A new class of prescription drugs just authorized for general use in the United States has been used experimentally here for more than two years to alleviate pain caused by diseases of the heart and arteries.

Government approval of the drugs, called calcium channel blockers, has been hailed as the most important advance in the last 15 years in the chemical treatment of heart disease. They are expected to revolutionize the treatment of angina, the crushing chest pain afflicting many heart patients.

They are also expected to save lives, cut the need for coronary bypass surgery, and greatly improve the quality of life for many heart disease sufferers.

The drugs offer doctors a chance to control angina on a long-term basis, says Dr. George W. Dennish, director of special care at Scripps Memorial Hospital and a professor at the the School of Medicine, University of California at San Diego.

Dennish has been doing calcium channel blocker research for the past 10 years, and has directed a two-year experimental program involving treatment of patients with the drugs at Scripps Hospital.

Although calcium blockers were used in Europe for more than a decade, the Food and Drug Administration barred their use in the United States on anything but an experimental basis until this year.

To get the drugs, a heart victim had to be a patient at one of the centers certified by the FDA to use them. Scripps Memorial was such a center.

The recent approval means that any doctor can now prescribe the drugs for his angina patients. Involved are nifedipine, which is sold under the trademark of Procardia, and verapamil, sold under the trademarks of Isoptin and Calan.

"It's exciting news," Dennish says. "I'm going around the state (California) giving lectures to physician groups trying the get the word out."

Angina, Dennish explained, has two basic causes.

In one model, fatty plaque forms in the arteries, partially blocking them and keeping the proper supply of oxygen-rich blood from reaching the heart muscle.

This causes the heart to constrict or cramp. The lack of oxygen induces pain, described by many suffers as excruciating. If the heart muscle goes without oxygen for too long, a heart attack may occur, with injury to the heart muscle and perhaps death to the patient.

The other cause is lack of oxygen brought about by a spasm in an artery, which causes to to constrict and to reduce the flow of blood.

Many doctors think much angina is caused by a combination of both plaque and arterial spasm.

Movement of calcium ions into the heart or arterial muscle is necessary for a contraction to occur. If certain drugs — the calcium channel blockers — are present in the bloodstream, this movement of calcium is blocked and the contractions are controlled.

Many patients experience angina only during heavy exercise. Previously, nitroglycerin was administered to relieve acute symptoms.

Dennish said the calcium channel blockers are very effective in these cases, and many patients who could not exercise without pain can now do heavy excercise while taking the drugs.

April 18-24 is Secretaries Week

Mayor Thane Atkins has proclaimed April 18-24 as Professional Secretaries Week. He urged all citizens to recognize the efforts made by secretaries in the operation of industry, education, government and the professions, and requested that all business and industry join in giving secretaries due recognition, paying special attention to Secretries' Day.

Professional Secretaries' Day will be observed in Midland with a noon luncheon at the Midland Civic Center on Tuesday. The theme will be "Taking Charge of Your Life." Featured speaker will be John Slyker, vice-president of Water Technologists Inc. of Midland. He is a member of the board of directors of Toastmasters International. His topic will be "You are Better than You Are" — a further discussion of the self-motivating emphasis.

Bruno Hanson, Boss of the Year — 1981-82, will announce the winner of the Boss of the Year — 1982-83. This honor is based on the boss's professional and civic contributions, in addition to a statement from his or her secretary.

Joyce Lovett, Secretary of the Year —1982-83, will be presented at the luncheon.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Association's Energy Secretary of the Year award will be presented by Richard Gaddy, originator of the award in 1978. Secretaries for this award are judged on the basis of loyalty, efficiency and responsibility, in addition to conributions to the oil and gas industry and their community or church. The recipient will be presented with a plaque and $500.

For reservations call Carolyn Belew at 682-9779 or Nelda Timberlake at 682-1657.

Club to hold fashion show

Sakowitz will present a showing of spring and summer fashions for theMidland Country Club Ladies' Association Friday in the clubhouse. There will be a social hour at 11:30 a.m., luncheon at noon and the show at 1 p.m.

"Quiet evolution, not revolution, is the overall message for spring/summer (fashions) for 1982," says Robert T. Sakowitz, chairman of the board, president and chief executive officer of Sakowitz.

"Many women think little about their summer attire," he says. "There's a tendency to consider the hot-weather wardrobe in a different way from what is worn at any other time of the year. Why? Because women don't perceive themselves in their normal social or working element. They think in terms of being at their vocation under duress. They would rather be somewhere else. Because it's so hot, uncomfortable and humid, they feel there's no specific focal point for social attire other than 'undress.'"

He continues, "Hot weather fashion can be enjoyable, even exciting, when you know how to pare things down to their basic elements. Summer is item dressing. Taking a less-is-more approach, you look at the elements far more intensely, individually. So, you update last summer by adding a new item — a blouse, a short, a pant, a skirt, a sandal. Basics become especially important because of the economic consideration.

"Conquering the climate becomes all-important for several reasons. Foremost is personal pride, the desire to look your best so you can feel well about yourself. Secondly, the fact is that many gathering places, professional or social, are air-conditioned. Finally, there's the knowledge that the long, hot summer is truly that."

With basics, Sakowitz states, often it is the use of the different combinations of a color palette offered for a new season that transforms a silhouette into fashion, innovational and directional, infused with newness and appeal. The spring/summer silhouette is not changing that radically from the best currently offered for cruise and holiday. It's continuing, diversifying to accommodate different fabrics for warmer weather.

"Some of the liveliest prints today have bright shocks of color. A new tonal palette — royal, orange through the rust family, jade green, a shot of red — is interspersed in the prints. This color sophistication, while frequently interjecting newness into silhouette and cut, becomes a design signature to distinguish between all the creations, from Saint Laurent to Ungaro, Beene to Kasper," Sakowitz says.

Summer clothes can be investment items with versatility and long life.

"In the fashion show to be presented Friday, we've selected what we think will work with what you already have. What we've eliminated are the outrageous interpretations that involve too much fullness or silhouettes that lack control somewhere on the body, and therefore, the proper proportion, or ones that look almost tent-like because of the absence of control anywhere on the waist, hips or shoulders. The fashion directions introduced with this show are proof of what we promised — an evolutionary process designed to give you the best of investment dressing," he concludes.

Some solutions to lack of motivation

By WILLARD ABRAHAM
Ph.D.
Copley News Service

Q. I'm so sick and tired of the laziness of our 16-year-old son that I'm about to explode.

Television, the telephone, running around with his friends, eating and sleeping — that's his life. He is muddling through high school without doing any homework and never thinks about the future as it pertains either to college or to work.

What can we do to get him off his duff and into action. His two older brothers have never presented this kind of problem to us, and we find it so difficult to live with.

A. Lack of motivation and underachievement are factors that too often rear their ugly heads during adolescence, so you have a lo of company.

Solutions are hard to come by, but they can include:

— A tighter control on parental services and money (so the youngster starts accepting more responsibilities toward reaching greater maturity and independence);

— The assistance of his teachers and school counselor with whom you might discuss the problems (they might see productive sides of your son that haven't surfaced at home) and — A realization on your part that motivation doesn't come through parental nagging, pressure or impatience (it has to come from within — can't be imposed by even the brightest, most well-meaning parents).

A hobby that attracts, a girlfriend who encourages productivity and subtly (or directly) indicates she doesn't like slovenly behavior, a teacher who provides a role model — these too can help turn on the light of achievement.

It's interesting how many teenagers are like yours and how they manage to show a desire to reach acceptable goals in just a few years. Not all of them manage to get out of their teen-age "laziness," but the majority of them do.

Q. My mother is on the verge of senility, and one of the indications is her insistence on what she wants my children to call her. She insists on "Nana," and my youngsters think that is just plain silly.

When I was a child "Grandma" and "Grandpa" were good enough for my grandparents, and I just don't understand why she has to make such a fuss over a small thing like this.

If you can explain this ridiculous business to me, I'd appreciate it.

A. Just as in all attitudes and opinions any of us has, the way we see things is very real and important to us regardless of what anyone else may think. Our perception of what people say to us or how they look at us is very real and significant despite the fact that others may not (and usually are not) concerned or interested.

So it may be with you mother. "Nana" is what she obviously likes to be called. Perhaps if you had not become involved, or had actually supported her when she first brought it up, there might have been no issue. Your children would probably have accepted her choice without question.

Just one more thought: What relationship to senility is there in the factor of what each of us likes to be called? Nicknames, full names or terms of endearment are preferences many of us have — at all ages.

Image change for California port

By JOHN RICE
AP Writer

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Port wine is the after-dinner drink of elegant, Brtish gentlemen chatting amid the smoke of two-dollar cigars.

Unfortunately for the port industry, in the United States port also is preferred by grizzle-bearded, tomato-eyed winos.

"A lot of people have a negative image of port — they think of it as a wino wine," says Andrew Quady, one of several port makers trying to improve the quality and image of the California product.

In Britain and France, the robust, fortified Portugese wine is a prestige item. Connoisseurs will pay $30, $50 or more for fine vintage ports that have mellowed for 20 years or longer.

Well-to-do British wine lovers have a custom of laying down port at the birth of a son, "usually 140 gallons worth," to give to the boy when he reaches 21 — perhaps enough aged port to last a lifetime, Quady says.

"There's nothing else in the way of a red dessert wine that can compare with a port," says Leon Adams, author of "Wines of America." "Ports are an underappreciated thing in the United States."

Part of the reason may be the quality of much cheap California port.

"The wines often taste flabby to me," Quady says. "They just taste like they're sweet and they don't have any ... tang to offset the sweetness."

But David Ficklin, J.W. Morris, Quady and a small group of other California port makers are trying to emulate the quality — if not the style — of the great Portugese ports.

Many are turning to Portugese grape varieties — a path pioneered in 1948 by Ficklin Vineyards of Madera, which obtained its vines of tinta madera, tinata cao, alvarelhao and touriga from the University of California at Davis.

Like sherry, port is a robust, generally sweet wine fortified with brandy or other spirits. The high sugar and alcohol content of the wine give it a long life. Most port connoisseurs — the drawing-room variety, at least — prefer their ports mellowed by two or three decades of aging.

"If they are drunk too young, they tend to be too harsh," Quady says. "The tannin grabs you in the mouth ... but the fruit is nice."

But he says a good vintage port can be enjoyed with only five to 10 years of age.

Most ports are blended, mixing the mellow, older wines with the fruitier, more tannic — or puckery — new vintages to create a balanced, consistent product. That is the sort of port made by Ficklin, who says that traces of his oldest wines remain in his newest bottlings.

But Quady and others are exploring vintage ports, which contain grapes of only one year — great, good or bad.

"Ports are among the earliest wines produced in California," says Adams, who speculates they may have been produced in the 1830s by Jean Louis Vignes, who introduced the first French grape varieties to California in the early 1800s.

Ports were produced east of Los Angeles in the San Gabriel Valley and in the sprawling Cucamonga wine region before the turn of the century — possibly using a Portugese grape misnamed the troussou, Adams says.

With the end of prohibition in the 1930s, ports and other dessert wines — whose sweetness appealed to people inexperienced with wines — were the most popular.

The cloying, unbalanced sweetness of much of that wine gave it a bad name with experts. And the high alcohol and low price made it attractive to alcoholics — creating an unpleasant public image.

Ironically, the rise of the quality ports in California has occurred as dessert wine sales are "dropping like a stone," Quady says. Most attribute that to the growing sophistication of the nation's consumers.

Energetic woman makes cable business grow

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy and Business Writer

Two years ago, Linda Steward, a young mother of three who doesn't have a high school diploma, started her own business in a Midland garage, with just one employee.

Today she has 12 employees, a huge shop, numbers some of the major oil companies among her clients, and grosses a quarter of a million dollars annually.

As owner of Steward Cable Repair, which repairs seismic cables and geophones used in oil and gas exploration, she finds herself in a position many women with more education and fewer family responsibilities might envy.

"You have to have the ambition, and I was very interested in the work. This was a real big step for all of us," said Steward, a petite bundle of energy who worked for Dawson Geophysical for eight years as a supervisor of a cable repair crew.

Steward believes in doing one's best and that with training and ambition, a woman can do anything. She left high school two months before graduation to get married and become a doodlebugger, or seismic crew member. Since then, she has taken electronics courses and built up ten years of cable repair experience.

Although she is confident and ambitious, her success surprises her. "I never thought I'd be comfortable in a position like this, but it feels good," she said, surveying her office and 8,000 square-foot facility. In two years, the company has grown from two women working in a garage, to its present location in Fender Commercial Park off South Midkiff.

Last year it grossed just over a quarter of a million dollars. "We never had any backers and never have taken out a loan. We don't owe anybody a dime. Whatever we made, we put back into the business. It's so fantastic," Steward said. "It still amazes me."

But it wasn't the money that got Steward into the cable repair business; it was a desire to do something and do it well. She knew she could provide quality work in an area with big demand.

" I'm not a woman's libber by any means. I stayed home with the kids until they were in school and I felt comfortable leaving them."

One day while waiting to pick up her husband, Bill, who is a seismic crew supervisor at Dawson Geophysical, she watched Dawson's vice-president, Calvin Clements, repairing cable.

"I was just piddling around. I asked him if I could try it." Clements told her anyone who could sew as well as she would have no trouble with the intricacies of cable splicing and repair.

"I owe a special thanks to Mr. Clements. I had the ambition and he had the know-how to train me. He was just that type of person who gave me the incentive."

She began working for Dawson and also began moonlighting at night for clients Dawson had to turn away.

"I worked on my husband's field crew doing this type of work, and, with their approval, I did some moonlighting with companies in Lubbock. The crew would move around and somebody would need help, and I'd end up working nights."

The moonlighting evolved into a new business. In particular, she credits J.W. Clark, who was with one of the majors in Pecos at the time. The work he sent her way proved there was a big demand for cable repair service.

In the beginning, her sister-in-law, Pam Steward, who had been with Dawson as well, quit that company and worked in the family garage, getting the new business off the ground.

Both Linda and Bill continued at Dawson for eight to ten hours a day to support the fledgling company, and then, they would come home to put in time at night in the garage with Pam.

"Thanks to J.W. Clark, we worked all night. He gave us the big incentive to try our wings alone." This was in 1979. Steward's first two employees sometimes worked for free to get the company rolling.

Steward's husband has been behind the company all the way.

"We both own the business, but I run it; it's mine. But my husband is good for management advice."

At first Bill helped the women with the heavy cables, but today they have the equipment necessary to handle most any cable size, up to 1,500 feet.

The company currently employs only women, and they sometimes work double shifts and weekends to get the work out. Steward maintains they wouldn't let the company founder because they're trying to prove they can hold their own in a business usually run by men.

Steward doesn't employ just women on purpose, however. She has had some male employees in the past two years, but she said women are especially well suited for the job, which is tedious and requires a lot of patience and fine handwork.

"Pride has taken us a long way. We've been really down; we've almost gone under a time or two. This is a good time for us, though. In the past, our customers often bought new equipment, but now, they're taking care of the equipment they've got."

The company offers complete seismic cable and geophone repair, including replugging and splicing of the cables, some of which contain up to 102 pairs of wires.

The women also assemble circuit boards for equipment used on pump jacks.

Steward's crew of 12 can handle load cell and injection well cables, replacement of broken pins in most connectors, side panels for recording trucks, and builds scrambler plugs and adapter cables.

They also shoot molds or jackets, plastic or rubber covers which enclose the wires, in special sizes and configurations, coloring the compounds to any color the customer needs.

The company prepares geophone leader wire for field crew use, according to customer specifications.

It's the only company of its kind in this area. Most of Steward's 26 regular clients are major oil companies which used to send their cables to Denner or Houston, she said.

"We can repair their cables for what it would cost them in freight," with less down time for the equipment. "A lot of oil companies do this on location, but we can do more in a shop. Seismic crews spend millions of dollars on recording trucks, and unless they have good cables and good geophones, their money is down the drain and their records are no good.

"You just can't do the kind of work in the field you can do in a shop.

"We get the basket cases. If lightening hits, we've got the job."

The current downturn in the oil patch means her company isn't "snowed under", as it's been in the past few months, but that "we'll be comfortable." For Steward, who is ambitious but amazed at her progress, that's just fine.

Linda Steward, owner of Steward Cable Repair, Midland, shoots a polyurethane mold or jacket over a seismic cable. Steward's company has grown from a small business in the family garage to a major operation in two years. It's the only one of its kind in the area.

Shell opposes fee on imported oil

WASHINGTON (SWN) — Imposing a fee on imported oil would bedetrimental to consumers and the economy, Shell Oil Company has warned.

Shell made its remarks in light of increasing Congressional interest in an oil import fee, which some law makers support as a means to raise additional federal revenues.

Contrary to the contentions of some proponents of the fee, Shell believes that it would not result in anticipated increases in federal revenues, conservation, or predicted reductions in the nation's dependence on foreign oil. To the contrary, any benefits from the fee would be far outweighed by the negative effects it would have on consumers and the economy.

The most immediate effect of a fee, the company says, would be to raise domestic energy costs just when consumers were beginning to enjoy the lower prices brought about by conservation and the decontrol of oil. And not all consumers would be affected the same, Shell said.

Those consumers more reliant on oil for energy needs, such as the transportation and petrochemical industries as well as many utility and agricultural users, would be more adversely affected. There would also be regional inequities, those in New England, for example, would be particularly disadvantaged, since they rely more heavily on oil than those in other parts of the country.

Shell also pointed out that a fee would stand contrary to America's traditional advocacy of free trade and complicate negotiations with other countries in reducing their trade barriers, possibly even prompting reciprocal trade measures. A fee would also make American goods, especially petrochemicals and other goods and services produced by energy-intensive industries, less marketable internationally, since they would cost more to produce here than in countries with lower energy costs because they had no fee. This would have serious consequences for our balance of trade, Shell said.

A fee would also create havoc in the U.S. petroleum products markets, particularly gasoline, home heating oil, and jet fuel. If a fee were imposed only on imported crude oil, and not on imported oil products as has been discussed, it would make matters even worse, Shell contended. U.S. refiners, which are already operating at just over 60 percent of capacity, would lose more business to refiners in the Caribbean and in Rotterdam, for example. Importers would be encouraged to have their crude refined before it comes into the United States, and thereby avoid the tax. The result would be to take jobs from American workers in an already depressed industry, and give those jobs to foreign refiners.

An equally important concern, Shell warned, is what this turn of events could portend for U.S. national security. Dependency on foreign refined petroleum products has the same national security concerns as dependency on foreign crude imports. An over-dependence on either is dangerous in Shell's view.

Shell also disagreed with proponents of the fee who predict that it would substantially increase the search for domestic energy supplies. The tentative nature of such a tax, plus the volatility of foreign oil prices, would in Shell's view, have a dampening effect on any long-range commitment of major capital expenditures to search for oil and gas and the development of other energy sources in the U.S.

Permian Basin rig count rebounds

Where the rigs were last week

Last week, for the first time in several weeks, the Permian Basin rotary rig count took an upward turn. The tally reached 385, according to a survey by Reed Rock Bit Co. That's 17 more than were counted the week before last.

The figure for April 2 was 390. March 26 it was 401.

The International Association of Drilling contractors reports the national count last week was 3,509, down from 3,597 the previous week.

The IADC figures show 1,033 onshore rigs working across Texas last week. Another 121 were spotted in New Mexico.

Unique trailer hitch being manufactured in Midland

A unique trailer hitch capable of handling up to 15,000 pounds, designed and patented by a Minnesota blacksmith, is now being manufactured in Midland by Trom's Easy-Rider Hitches, a fledgling company owned by Ryan Reddell and Allen Trom.

The company makes and installs pickup truck bumpers with a spring-loaded hitch attached, which acts as a shock absorber when extra heavy loads are hauled over rough terrain.

"Normally when you pull a heavy trailer, you get a jerking action when you go over a bump or ditch," said Reddell, a Midland native. The flexible hitch makes it easier on the pickup's transmission and drive shaft. "It's safer because you're not as likely to lose the trailer on account of a ball breaking or the hitch breaking off, if there's a sudden jerk."

Both men worked previously for an equipment company in Odessa. When Trom drove from Minnesota to Midland earlier this year, he noticed all the heavy-hauling traffic on the road.

"I was noticing what everybody was pulling behind these trucks, with the oil field equipment and all, so I brought it up to Ryan. We just kind of decided (to start in business). We knew we had to establish a name and get people to know what we're doing."

Reddell said the two discussed the possibilities and felt a bumper with a flexible hitch would go over well in the area, "so we up and did it."

The unique feature is the hitch extending from the bumper, normally a stationary piece of iron, is flexible. The hitch will move up to four inches in or out.

The elder Trom designed the hitch for local farmers who were hauling up to 15,000-pound loads. "It became more and more popular and once a person got one, he didn't want to go back to anything else," young Trom said. The bumper is being used on grain elevator and gas company trucks and for horse trailers.

Reddell, salesman for the new company, which opened in March, said he intends to market the product throughout West Texas, especially to oil companies who traditionally haul heavy loads.

"We have sold a couple already and have committments for several more on order."

The bumpers take about 30 minutes to install and are easily transferable from an old truck to a new one, Trom said. He said he can build a bumper in about 10 hours.

The bumper features a recessed well for the license plate and is guaranteed for the life of the pickup. The company also makes headache racks and will do other small custom jobs for pickups.

Partners Allan Trom and Ryan Reddell, of Trom's Easy-Rider Hitches, install one of the new firm's flexible trailer hitches, which is capable of handling up to 15,000 pounds. The hitch was designed and patented by Trom's father.

Production fails to reach billion mark

AUSTIN — Preliminary figures indicate that Texas crude oil production amounted to 897,573,416 barrels in 1981, the third consecutive year the state's production failed to reach the billion barrel mark.

Texas crude output last year indicated a 3.6 percent drop from 1980's total volume.

The 1981 decrease reflected a slowing in the rate of decline in Texas oil output. Production in 1980 was down 4.9 percent from the previous year, while 1979 output decreased by eix percent from the preceding year.

Final natural gas production figures show that Texas oil and gas wells produced 6,733,042,031 Mcf of gas in 1981, down 3.8 percent from 1980's production of 6,997,891,217 Mcf.

Of the 1981 total production, 1,356,878,719 Mcf was casinghead gas and 5,376,163,312 Mcf was gas well gas.

Drilling set new records in many categories in 1981. Oil and Gas Division records show 24,998 new holes drilled in Texas, and 18.1 percent increase from the 1980 total of 20,490. The total reflects discovery and existing field wells for oil and gas, as well as service holes and dry holes.

At year end, oil completions stood at 15,627, up 21.2 percent from 1980. Gas completions totaled 5,454 in 1981, an increase of 2.3 percent from 1980's total of 5,331.

Drilling applications jumped 17.8 percent in 1981. A total of 47,940 applications were received compared to 39,442 in 1980.

Secretaries, learn to keep your employers happy

The Permian Basin Graduate Center announces two courses to be begin atthe PBGC Building, 105 W. Illinois, Midland.

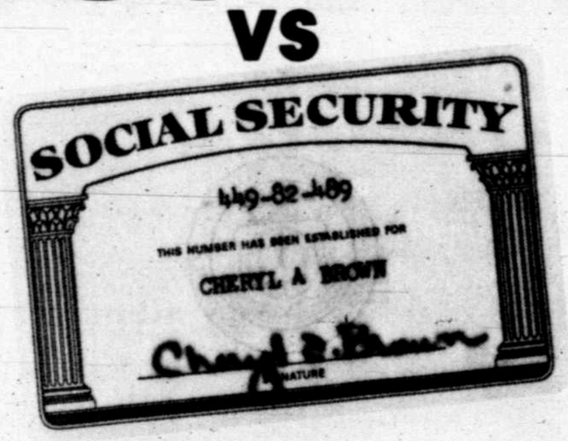

"Professional Development for Secretaries" will be held Wednesday, April 21, from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Anita Reed will instruct the seminar. This practical, results-oriented one-day seminar offers a most unusual opportunity for the secretary to enhance her career while keeping the boss happy. It will present the latest ideas in personal development, time efficiency, problem solving techniques, interpersonal relations, creative thinking and communication skills. The secretary new on the job or the experienced secretary who feels the need to develop organizational abilities and personal effectiveness will find the seminar full of useful ideas. Anita Reed is a dynamic, vivacious woman who developed and started conducting her success seminar in 1971.

Bosses, show your appreciation to your secretaries by sending them to this seminar on National Secretaries Day. Registration fee is $100.

"Oil and Gas Fundamentals - I" will be held three weeks on Thursday, April 22, 29 and May 6, from 7-10 p.m. Ed. C. Kettenbrink, Exploration Manager, Berry Petroleum; Jerry Moritz, Consultant, Meyer, Moritz & Co.; and Albert L. Stanford, Petroleum Engineer, Adobe Oil and Gas Corporation will instruct. This course is designed for office managers, secretaries, production clerks, and other personnel — especially those new to the oil industry. It will cover an introduction to the oil business, including exploration, drilling procedures, and production operations. Registration fee is $60.

For registration or further information, call 563-2311.

DALLAS (SWN) — Texas Oil & Gas Corp. (TXO) reported net income for the second quarter and first half of the current fiscal year set new records.

For the quarter ended February 28, 1982, net income increased 30 percent to $62,131,000, or $.65 per share, compared with $47,874,000, or $.50 per share, for the same quarter of the prior year. Revenues were $481,713,000, up 24 percent from $389,659,000 a year earlier.

Net income for the first six months of fiscal 1982 was $116,310,000, or $1.22 per share, up 32 percent from the previous year's first half level of $88,239,000, or $.92 per share. Revenues increased 25 percent from $733,796,000 to $916,076,000.

DALLAS (SWN) — Diamond Shamrock Corporation, a Dallas-based energy and chemical company, today reported that after-tax income from continuing operations, as expected, declined 52 percent to $29.1 million, or $0.47 per share, from comparable first quarter 1981 income of $60.8 million, or $0.97 per share. Net income for the quarter increased 27 percent to $64.7 million, or $1.04 per share from 1981 first quarter net income of $51.1 million, or $0.82 per share. Sales and operating revenues for first quarter 1982 were $791.1 million versus $872.7 million in first quarter 1981. The announcement was made by W. H. Bricker, chairman and chief executive officer.

First quarter 1982 net income includes an extraordinary gain of $35.5 million resulting from a previously announced exchange of Diamond Shamrock stock for outstanding Diamond Shamrock Sinking Fund Debentures. First quarter 1981 net income included a $9.7 million charge to reflect discontinued operations.

DALLAS (SWN) — Dorchester Gas Corporation announced earnings for the second quarter ended February 28, 1982, were $3,988,000 or $.22 per share on revenues of $201,007,000 compared to $6,631,000 or $.36 per share on revenues of $151,874,000 for the previous year's second quarter.

Earnings for the six months ended February 28, 1982, totalled $9,438,000 or $.53 per share on revenues of $429,306,000 compared to $16,000,000 or $.88 per share on revenues of $314,773,000 for the same period of fiscal 1981.

The decrease in second quarter earnings was primarily due to reduced profits from natural gas processing operations where both production rates and prices were lower. Refining margins were improved and coal mining losses were substantially reduced during the quarter while oil and natural gas production was higher.

Ike Lovelady Inc. has reported the following unaudited results for the first quarter ended January 31, along with the prior year conparisons.

Total revenues are $1,750,718, as compared to $777,800 of a year ago. Net income (loss) was $703,479, this year, as compared to $7,850 of the previous January. Net income (loss) per share was 41 cents compared to a year ago of 1 cent per share. Average shares outstanding were $1,721,867 for the quarter compared to $1,221,367 of the previous year.

Lovelady said the increased loss was due to increased activity and specifically dry hole costs and interest expense. Oil and gas sales increased to $1,238,000 as compared to $388,000 in the prior year and total assets increased to $22,551,000 from $13,674,000 in 1981.

OIL INDUSTRY NOTES

DALLAS (SWN) — Standard Oil Company (Indiana)'s overseas exploration and production operations "represent a majore success story, considering that we started from scratch only 25 years ago," according to Executive Vice President H. Laurance Fuller.

"Overseas production in recent years has accounted for roughly 30 percent of standard's total hydrocarbon production," Fuller told the Dallas Security Analysts Society.

Fuller cited Egypt as one of Standard's successful overseas operations. It is the company's largest overseas producing operation, with the bulk of the Company's oil production coming from seven offshore fields in the Gulf of Suez.

NEW YORK (SWN) — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp.'s proved reserves at the end of the most recent fiscal year were the highest in the company's history, Vice Chairman B. F. Clark told a group of investment professionals here.

Clark also said that the company is cutting its capital budget for the current year by about $44 million, from $409 million to $365 million. The budgets of the company's three operating units — exploration and production, transmission and processing, and real estate — will be reduced by approximately the same percentage, he said.

Clark said proved natural gas reserves as of January 31, the end of the company's fiscal 1982 year, amounted to 538.9 billion cubic feet, compared with 507.2 billion cubic feet a year earlier.

Liquid hydrocarbon reserves advanced to 109.6 million barrels from 92.5 million barrels a year earlier, he said. Comprising the most recent year's total were 90 million barrels of natural gas liquids and 19.6 million barrels of crude oil and condensate, compared with 73.5 million and 19 million barrels, respectively, a year earlier.

Clark said the current year's capital budget was reduced because of unsettled conditions in the oil and gas industry and their possible effect on cash flow from operations. Depressed natural gas liquids prices and uncertainty about government action on natural gas prices contributed to the decision to cut outlays, he said.

The budget will be re-examined later in the year in the light of economic conditions at that time, Clark added, noting that mid-year increases had been made in several prior-year budgets.

HENDERSON, Ky. (SWN) — Tri-State Synfuels Company, a partnership of Texas Eastern Corporation and Texas Gas Transmission Corporation Affiliates, announced today its intention to terminate a cooperative agreement contract with the United States Department of Energy. Discussions are in progress to mutually agree on the details of the termination.

According to Paul M. Anderson, President, Texas Eastern Synfuels, Inc., and Dennis L. Newberry, President, Texas Gas Synfuel Corporation, "The level of expenditures required of the partners to pursue the work program as contained in the cooperative agreement contract cannot be justified under present energy economic conditions. We are assessing the level of project activity that will be maintained subsequent to the termination of the cooperative agreement."

Anderson and Newberry are optimistic about the Henderson County area and said, "Henderson County will continue to be a prime site for a synthetic fuel plant."

DALLAS (SWN) — The Board of Directors of Triton Energy Corporation declared a regular 2-1/2 cent per share quarterly dividend on its common stock. The dividend is payable on June 17, 1982 to stockholders of record on June 3, 1982.

Triton Energy Corporation is an international oil and gas exploration and development company. The Company is actively involved in exploration projects in the United States, Canada, the United Kingdom, The Netherlands, France, Argentina, Thailand, Australia and New Zealand. In addition to its oil and gas interests, Triton subsidiaries conduct contract drilling operations in the United States and produce and explore for coal in Australia.

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (SWN) — Republic Resources, Inc. announced results for the first quarter ended January 31, 1982. Revenues were $4.3 million compared to $7.2 million in the same quarter a year ago. Net income was $743,000, or 10 cents per share, compared to $2.2 million, or 29 cents per share, in the quarter ended January 31, 1981.

John W. O'Donnell, Chairman of the Board, said the decline in net income was due basically to two factors. One was a management decision made at the end of fiscal 1981 to institute a provision for doubtful accounts under long-term research and development agreements. The provision is not reflected in the quarter ended January 31, 1981. Second, the decrease in revenues of approximately 40 percent in the quarter ended January 31, 1982, was due primarily to a significant reduction in the number of new research and development contracts consummated compared to the previous year, caused by economic downturns being experienced in many segments of the industry and the corresponding hesitancy on the part of normally active investors in research and development projects.

Notes receivable from contracts signed in the first quarter ended January 31, 1982, totaled approximately $3,724,000. Total interest income for the quarter was $299,597, an increase of approximately $34,000 as compared to the same period in 1981. As of January 31, 1982, the company had 1,140 acres of jojoba plantations, compared to 300 acres a year earlier, an increase of 840 acres during the 12 months.

Gaines leading crude producer

AUSTIN — Gaines County was the leading crude oil producer among Texas' 254 counties in 1981 with total output of 53,257,653 barrels, according to figures tabulated by the Railroad Commission's Oil and Gas Division for last year's hydrocarbon production.

The West Texas county nudged out Yoakum County which recorded production of 53,217,597 last year. Yoakum was the oil leader in 1980 with 60,771,167 barrels and in 1979 with 67,345,328 barrels.

Pecos County was the leading gas producer in 1981 with 402,237,131 Mcf down from 461,323,888 Mcf the previous year when it also led the state. The total includes both gas well gas and casinghead gas.

Other leading gas producers last year, in volumetric order, included Kleberg County, 237,647,896 Mcf; Winkler, 174,258,092 Mcf; Ward, 173,899,395 Mcf; Crane, 173,765,333 Mcf; Waller, 173,503,602 Mcf; Hemphill, 164,848,938 Mcf; Moore, 144,613,577 Mcf; Matagorda, 144,156,703 Mcf; and Panola, 140,479,500 Mcf.

Texas produced 6,733,042,031 Mcf of gas in 1981 against 6,997,891,217 Mcf a year earlier. Of the 1981 total, 5,376,163,312 Mcf was gas well gas and 1,356,878,719 Mcf was casinghead gas. Casinghead gas is gas produced with oil from an oil well.

Haidalgo County led the state last year in condensate production with a total of 1,576,827 barrels, down from 1,705,067 barrels the previous year when it also led the state. Second place went to Jefferson County with 1,525,283 barrels.

Crane County produced 128,566,529 Mcf of casinghead gas in 1981 to lead in that category of hydrocarbons output. Crane also led the state in 1980 with 122,093,885 Mcf.

Market is banking on retail spending

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

Once again, American consumers will lead the economy out of a recession — but this time the path will be different.

This summer, as inflation recedes and the tax cut and an increase in Social Security benefits boost income and consumers realize their debt situation is not burdensome, the burgeoning purchasing power will not go into autos and other very big-ticket, debt-demanding items, as in the past.

"The test of the recovery will come in the third quarter," said Otto Eckstein of Massachusetts-based Data Resources, Inc. "If the past — as exemplified by the large tax cuts of 1964 and 1975 — is any guide, retail sales will show a sizable response to the $33 billion personal tax reduction and the $12 billion increase in Social Security benefits. The typical individual tax reduction is not large enough to finance the purchase of an automobile, so the initial impact should come in such fields as clothing, shoes and appliances."

Indeed, the stock market is already counting on just such a scenario. Since the first of the year, retail department store stocks have been the second-best performing group of stocks — despite miserable earnings.

To be sure, there are negative signals coming from consumers — signals that suggest the recovery isn't likely to arrive before the summer.

The Conference Board's survey of consumer confidence is now at its lowest level in the 15-year history of the survey. Old patterns are being reversed: For example, two-income families are now behaving like one-income families. A research study for Chain Store Age General Merchandise Magazine done by Leo Shapiro & Associates found that 72 percent of dual wage-earner families say this is not a good time to buy — just a hair less than the 73 percent of one-income families who feel that way.

As studies by Manufacturers Hanover have shown, far fewer consumers can afford to buy and finance a home or car. Moreover, the high interest rates — and Reaganomics — have convinced consumers it's a good time to save and a bad time to borrow. A recent consumer poll by the ad agency Doyle Dane Bernbach reported that 82 percent of consumers said, "There is nothing worse than being in debt."

Clearly, such attitudes will inhibit auto, housing and big-ticket appliance purchasing. However, statistics reveal that the consumer — unlike corporate America and, of course, the government — is relatively liquid today.

"Let me tell you what is not causing today's ills — an overextended consumer," said Irwin L. Kellner of Manufacturers Hanover. "With the exception of autos and housing, people's aggregate ability to purchase goods and services is about as good as it has ever been. This is vital, because consumer spending accounts for two-thirds of our economy."

"For a variety of reasons — recessions, reduced purchases of autos and household goods and the aftermath of the 1980 credit controls — the percent of take-home pay required to service installment debt has fallen to one of its lowest levels in about 15 years," said Kellner. The percent of disposable income needed to service installment debt is below 15 percent. It was above 18 two years ago.

Kellner added, "Only 30 percent of retail sales are made today with the aid of credit. Two years ago, the percentage was nearly 40."

Kellner said consumers' household liquid assets (cash, savings accounts, money-market funds and Treasury securities) are at record levels. "Personal savings today are $120 billion — more than twice levels recorded as recently as five years ago," he said.

The inflation decline is what will pump purchasing power into pocketbooks: "The nosedive in inflation has been nothing short of spectacular," said Albert H. Cox Jr., president of Merrill Lynch Economics. "It has far exceeded the predictions of the doomsayers — a 2.4 percent rate last month, 3.7 over the last three months, 6 over the last six months. This bright picture, via its favorable impact on real incomes down the line, will be a major ingredient of economic recovery."

Gary Wenglowski of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs figures it this way: "The effect of 1 percent less inflation is equivalent to a $20 billion personal tax cut."

Summed up Lawrence Chimerine of Philadelphia's Chase Econometrics, "Consumer spending will continue to be erratic during the next several months, but will begin to accelerate later this year in response to additional tax cuts, continued modest inflation, a reduced debt burden and strong pent-up demand." He predicts that for the full year, real (inflation-adjusted) consumer spending will go up only 1.8 percent — but it will soar by 4.4 percent next year and 3.7 in 1984.

Most economists feel savings will also increase — and this will eventually help capital spending turn around.

So much for the statistics the economists use every day. There is still another factor: The underground economy. The best guesses are that the subterranean economy — the cash-and-barter network that the IRS doesn't know about — is anywhere from 10 to 25 percent the size of the total economy, or $300 billion to more than $700 billion.

This means consumers have more money than economists realize — and that underground money should help spur the economy, too.

Analyst suggest buying into the 'black-eyed' stocks

By HELEN L. CALL
Copley News Service

It is a transitional market with consumer stocks and interest rate play equities coming to the front. So much so that these may be overplayed, says John R. Groome, director of research for U. S. Trust in New York.

Groome likes to buy when a good company has a black eye because it is in a group that is getting the thumbs down treatment from investors. "The wholesale liquidation of the popular stocks of 1979 and 1980 is presenting excellent opportunities," he says. Those popular stocks are the energy and the high technology companies.

But looking elsewhere, Groome finds plenty to interest him in this market.

One is health care. Even though this was a healthy winter and prescription sales were down, that is not enough to slow the growth of medical care.

Retail stocks have been star performers, but their day is not over, says Groome. "They are a prime beneficiary of disinflation."

In spite of government efforts to reduce hospital costs, the profitability of the proprietary hospital business is in no doubt, according to Groome.

Food stocks have reacted to a level where their prices now look attractive.

Regional banks will benefit from declining interest rates, he says. Further, there is always the possibility of a regional bank being a takeover target.

Property and casualty insurance companies have done exceptionally well in recent markets and there is every likelihood that they will keep right on doing so, says Groome.

The pariahs of this market have been displaying "shocking" earnings disappointments, says Groome, and this has "led to a huge management-investor credibility gap." Such a situation provides opportunities to buy the best and biggest companies.

When the railroads start hauling less coal and more consumer merchandise, their recovery is imminent, says Groome.

Shelter issues, commodity chemicals, conglomerates — all present trading opportunities in selected issues.

Dean Witter Reynolds' selections for investors seeking income and appreciation are Borden, American Building Maintenance Industries, Citicorp, Exxon.

Electric utility stocks have been "shining stars," comments Nancy Fertig, utility analyst at Dean Witter Reynolds. Three types of buyers have been pushing up prices, she says. These are fundamental buyers, defensive buyers and interest-rate players. She favors the purchase of higher quality utilities for fundamental reasons, avoiding the risk of being caught by fast moving "fickle" traders. Among the utilities on her recommended list are Houston Industries, Duke Power, Central & Southwest, Pacific Gas & Electric.

Recent buy opinions have been issued by Bache for these companies: General Dynamics, Novo Industries, Browning-Ferris, Bairnco, Microdyne, Amdahl, Apple Computer, Oklahoma Gas & Electric, Public Service of Indiana, American Broadcasting, Allied Corp., Hospital Corp. of America, National Medical Enterprises, Computervision, Pizza Time Theatre, Nutri-Systems, Cipher Data Products, Intertec Data Systems.

Bear Stearns' purchase recommendations include these issues: Beverage Management, Manhattan Industries, Coleco Industries, Felmont Oil, Koss Corp., Crane, Handleman, Impell, Quadrex, Sun Electric, Vernitron.

Four attractive defense stocks, on the recommended list at First Albany are Matrix Science, Atlantic Research, Narda Microwave, EDO Corp.

Talk about depressed issues — can anything be worse than the big oils? Gerry Weiss at Investment Quality Trends says, "It is incredible to see top quality companies priced at three and four times current depressed earnings."

In this group are Exxon, Gulf, Mobil, Royal Dutch, Shell Transport & Trading, Standard Oil of California, Standard Oil of Ohio, Sun Co., Texaco.

It is even more remarkable, she says, to see such companies as Cities Service, Diamond Shamrock, Gulf Oil and others priced at a discount to their understated book value, making them attractive takeover targets.

Electronic banking is still waiting for revolution

By JOHN FARINA
Copley News Service

Electronic banking, forecasters once predicted, would make paper checks as extinct as the dodo bird.

It is estimated that last year, individuals, corporations and government agencies wrote between 40 billion and 50 billion checks, as much paper in 12 months as McDonald's has sold hamburgers in its 27 years.

"We actually encourage people to use checks," says Charles Pedersen, vice president of California First Bank in San Diego. "Check writing is here to stay.

"At the same time, we also realize that the increasing costs of check processing will becoming a bigger problem as time goes on."

That is why California First and other financial institutions are moving into electronic banking.

Though check writing will always play a role, bankers say electronic banking is poised at the threshold of what could become its great leap forward.

On an experimental basis, electronic fund transfers are flourishing in parts of the banking industry.

Pilot programs are under way throughout the country at financial institutions, permitting consumers to pay their bills by phone, by cable television, and by home computer terminal.

"Electronic banking offers a total money management system that checks do not," Pedersen said. "It is the reason electronic banking has a bright future, despite its slow start."

Government agencies are already electronically sending about 165 million Social Security and other payments directly to banks.

Insurance companies send and receive more than 12 million such transactions annually, leading private industry in substituting electronic payments for paper checks.

And retailers are looking ahead to point-of-sale electronic devices that would allow the store cashier to draw customer payments directly from customer banking accounts at the time of the sale.

Despite that convenience, David Rudnick, who runs New Jersey-based Rudco Industries Inc., one of the nation's biggest producers of checks, said the check industry will remain healthy.

"Electronics is growing faster, cash transactions are declining, and checks are somewhere in the middle," he said. "And while banks talk about electronic fund transfers, they also encourage people to start checking accounts.

"So there will always be a place for checks with individuals. The check is efficient and cost effective for individuals. It's also psychologically representative of the individual. It's not just an electronic financial statement.

"There are more than 200 million people in this country, and not all of them want to be wired to a central computer."

Check writing will not be eliminated or displaced, financial experts say, because:

— Many financial institutions and retailers will continue to prefer checks, even though 860 million of them bounced last year.

— Checks in some cases will be wedded to the electronic banking revolution, — Many people feel more secure with checks than they do with electronic transmissions.

We asked four local stockbrokerage firms for the following information:

What would the commission charge be to purchase 200 shares at $60.00?*

We requested no research, market advice or recommendations. . . only the execution of our order. The answers may surprise you.

Merrill Lynch: . . . . . okay, 200 shares. . . about $180. . .

Why such a difference between Little & Company rates and the others? Little & Company is an "execution only" broker. By eliminating a Research Department, commissioned salesmen and their related managerial staff and by streamlining operational procedures Little & Company is able to service self-directed clients at substantial commission savings.

Make a Christmas story

It's a Christmas story that should be told.

A retired man and his wife in Midland suffered through two cold winters without heat in their home. To fight the icy winter chill, they used only a small gas cook stove in their kitchen. Living on a total of $400 per month, they were unable to afford a new heating unit for their home, expected to cost $700.

But the love of Christmas shone on them when workers for Midland's Christmas in April program installed a new heater. The chill of winter was conquered.

Yes, this is a Christmas story. It is one of many Christmas stories that have been celebrated each April by volunteer workers taking part in the housing repair project for elderly and handicapped residents in the Tall City.

What began as a small repair project to alleviate human needs has now grown into a fulltime nationally-acclaimed program. Its benefits are showered onto needy Midlanders year-round now. But there still is the traditional one-weekend-a-year campaign in which a majority of the work is accomplished and this year, that work period will be next weekend.

The 1982 goal — the most ambitious in the 10-year history — is to repair 150 homes on a budget of $50,000 to $75,000. Fifty homes have already received plumbing repairs. But 15 of the remaining 100 homes to receive repairs this year are still to be chosen. Hundreds of volunteer workers will be needed to perform the repairs, but, as always, the greatest need is for contributions of money to buy the supplies necessary for the repairs.

Unlike other programs, there is very little administrative expense for Christmas in April. All the work is performed by volunteers and the organization's activities are directed by the volunteer board. And the old complaint about never being able to see the results of charitable causes simply doesn't hold water in the Christmas in April project. Volunteers and those who donate to the program can see the results.

Christmas in April is a commendable program because it is people helping people and, in turn, helping their community. It is seeing a need and taking action to alleviate that need. It is the embodiment of everything that is good about mankind.

Your participation is essential in making this celebrated program work each year. Whether your skill is painting a wall, repairing a fence, replacing a roof or virtually rebuilding an entire house, you are needed and wanted. And even if you can't participate physically but want to do your part, a financial contribution will be most appreciated. Just send your tax-deductible contribution to Christmas in April, P.O. Box 3744, Midland, Texas 79702.

Getting involved with helping those who cannot help themselves will give you the glow of Christmas. Take part in the program by calling 694-4907 to volunteer your services. Then go out next weekend and create your own Christmas story.

You'll be glad you did!

Take time to vote

When Midland voters go to the polls Saturday, as they surely should do, they will be asked to decide only one race — that one pitting Charleen Rosebery and Joe Golding for the Place 6 seat on the Midland Independent School District board of trustees.

A decision will be made, one in which you should participate because it will determine, to a degree, the course of board policy in coming months. Each candidate has waged their individual campaign admirably and both are to be commended for their participation in the great American political process. We truly appreciate that participation.

Our choice, as in the earlier election two weeks ago, is Mrs. Rosebery. In an editorial preceding that election, we noted she has been actively involved in Midland civic affairs, particularly in the League of Women Voters, the Bowie PTA and serving as a Head Start and classroom volunteer.

We still believe it is important to put another female voice on the school board to provide more balance.

But whatever your personal decision on Mrs. Rosebery and Mr. Golding, be certain to participate in the electoral process by taking a few moments to cast your ballot next Saturday. Only five votes separated the two candidates in the earlier election and your decision on whether to vote certainly could make the difference.

Take a part in the future of the school district and vote Saturday. Vote for whom you please, but please vote. The candidates have campaigned long and hard and are deserving of your interest and your action.

Another View:

Discipline for the GOP

"The Republicans have to get in line. It is imperative that our own troops be disciplined." So says Edward Rollins, the White House political director, in what sounds almost like the opening salvo in a drive to purge Republicans who don't support Reagan administration programs.

The president himself sounds not at all eager to fight this kind of battle. "No, I don't agree," he said Wednesday. "And I intend to support as many Republican candidates as I can in the coming election year."

The president may remember what happened when Franklin Roosevelt set out to discipline his troops by opposing anti-New Deal Democrats in the 1938 primaries: All but one of the targets of that purge won. Since then, no president has openly opposed congressmen of his own party. They may have sensed that in a battle between a single congressman and a president, even a popular president, the voters have an instinctive sympathy for David over Goliath.

Actually what Mr. Rollins is proposing is party discipline, not a purge, and it is not so very obnoxious. Why should the president's party spend its money and its time supporting candidates who don't support the president's major policies or who insist on ridiculing him publicly? Every political party has its priorities, and it is hard to see why anti-Reagan Republicans have any moral entitlement to be top Republican Party priorities.

The problem is that it is hard to find any Republicans these days who are not, in some significant way, anti-Reagan. Mr. Rollins, in the same interview in which he calls for more party discipline, also calls for a compromise on the budget "in the not-too-distant future," and says that the administration's position on the Voting Rights Act makes it a "symbol of racism" to many voters. These are not exactly the president's positions as we understand them.

On those issues, Mr. Rollins' views are widely shared in Republican circles. The president's budget has so few votes in Congress that the Democrats' strongest bargaining threat is to bring it forward for a vote. There was no concerted effort among House Republicans to cure what the administration now says is the major defect of the House-passed Voting Rights Act.

The administration's problem is not so much disloyalty on the part of panicky Republicans — though there is some of that — as it is its own failure this year to craft policies on major issues that can win the support of the great mass of Republicans and some Democrats besides. This is the first political responsibility of any administration, and only after it has been met does it make much sense to talk of purges or party discipline.

ART BUCHWALD

While South Succotash has been having a bad time of it, with high unemployment and suffering caused by the recession, the picture in North Succotash is entirely different.

Art Buchwald

This is what angered President Reagan recently, when he felt the TV networks were just dramatizing the worst aspects of his economic program. No one bothered to take a camera crew up the hill to North Succotash. If they had they would have found that Reaganomics IS working.

North Succotash, with its beautiful homes, manicured lawns, sumptuous country club and thriving shopping mall, is what the American dream is all about. And while the citizens there have to take their lumps with everybody else, they are not crying and blaming Reagan for all their problems.

The reason I know all this is that my cousin Walter lives in North Succotash, on Peach Tree Lane. This year, he sold his family's umbrella factory in South Succotash to United Discount Industries, a conglomerate out of Houston, who bought it, not to make umbrellas, but because Cousin Walter had a $5 million tax loss carryover.

Once the deal was made, United closed down the factory, putting 500 people in South Succotash out of work. It was one of these unemployed men that the TV networks interviewed, which gave the country the impression everyone in Succotash County was hurting. Had they interviewed Cousin Walter they would have realized that things were not half as bad as the TV news shows make them out to be.

Over lunch, by the swimming pool, Cousin Walter said he had just met with his accountant, and he wouldn't have to pay any taxes this year.

"That's wonderful," I said. "How did you manage to do it?"

"First I traded my stock in the umbrella factory for stock in United Discount so I didn't have to pay any capital gains. Then I took my salary from United and went into a real estate tax shelter in Columbus, Ohio, with several guys from the club. Since the first five years was all interest, we could deduct the profits from our oil well investments."

"Everyone in North Succotash does. That's what makes it such a nice place to live."

Cousin Walter introduced me to his next door neighbor, Charley Deegan. Charley had stopped by to ask Walter for a campaign contribution for Congressman Floogle of their district.

"We got to help Floogle," Deegan said, "because he's on the House Ways and Means Committee and he's fighting the do-gooders in Congress who want to withhold taxes on stock dividends and interest at the source. I've never declared a dividend in my life and I'm not about to start now."

"That's how we are in North Succotash," he told me after Deegan left. "When someone is in trouble we don't ask any questions."

The phone rang and Walter answered it. I could only hear his part of the conversation. "You say if we buy the building we can depreciate it over 10 years and then sell it at a profit to the original owner? ... It's perfectly legal? ... Okay, I'm in. But I'm going to have to sell some All Savers Certificates to raise the cash, so don't expect my check before Tuesday."

"Another loophole?" I asked.

"Some people might call it a loophole. But the tax breaks we get in North Succotash will eventually trickle down to South Succotash, and provide jobs and goods for the country. The trouble with South Succotash is that they won't give Reagan's economic plans a chance. The recession will never bottom out if everyone keeps yelling for a free lunch."

"Reagan knows it and you know it, but how do you persuade the people in South Succotash that the administration has their best interests at heart?" I asked.

"I don't know how you do it, but I know how you don't do it. You don't put a guy on television every time he loses his job."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Pentagon shipping arms to sway elections

WASHINGTON — The United States is dedicated to promoting, not preventing, free elections. Our government put on a big show, for example, of encouraging and supporting this month's balloting in El Salvador. Yet at the same time, the Pentagon was engaged in a quiet little military plot of its own to prevent a free election in the Dominican Republic.

Jack Anderson

The Pentagon brass are rushing arms to their anointed Dominican strongman, Gen. Manuel Lachapelle, who has reportedly vowed to seize power if the left-of-center candidate appears likely to win the presidential election next month.

State Department specialists tell me that Sen. Jorge Blanco, the candidate who worries Gen. Lachapelle so, is not the Castro-style leftist the general makes him out to be. As the choice of the party now in power, Partido Revolucionario Dominicano, Blanco is favored to win the May 16 election.

"He's a kind of Willy Brandt," explained one expert who analyzes Dominican politics for the State Department. He told my reporter Jon Lee Anderson that Blanco was "a slightly left-of-center Social Democrat." Yet the State Department — though it doesn't buy Lachapelle's Red Scare — is either unable or unwilling to intervene in the Pentagon plot.

There's little doubt that a military coup is what Gen. Lachapelle has in mind. His two Washington representatives have made this chillingly clear. Both are Dominican-born U.S. citizens: Cesar Ballester, a retired U.S. Army major, and Dr. Morris Rubin, a respected psychologist. They have been making the rounds from the Pentagon to Capitol Hill trying to expedite the shipment of weapons to the general's 5,000-man infantry brigade.

In an astonishing letter to the State Department's Dominican desk officer, William Craft, the general's two friends state pretty plainly how the U.S. arms will be used. They write: "Dominican military leaders assured us that they know who the communists are, where they sleep, who their friends are and where their support is coming from. What the military is pleading for is the necessary materiel to equip one light infantry brigade before the May elections."

Evidently worried that members of Congress might be squeamish about U.S. support for a pre-election bloodbath, Gen. Lachapelle's emissaries have tried to terrify the lawmakers with the specter of a Red regime 75 miles from Puerto Rico.

In a letter to Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., Ballester and Rubin explain that the reason the U.S. weapons are needed — and needed in a hurry — is that the Dominican military "may be outgunned by a bunch of communist vandals who are determined to cause trouble during the elections."

Actually, competent sources tell me the only evidence of "communist vandals" during the election campaign has been some anti-American graffiti scrawled here and there and the presence on the ballot of a small coalition of leftist parties calling itself the "anti-imperialist popular union."

In a letter to President Reagan, Ballester and Rubin add a new dimension to the communist threat. They report that military leaders "indicated to us that they are fully aware, and have evidence of communist infiltration and arms coming through Haiti, sponsored by Cuba and Russia."

After invoking the president's two favorite bogeymen, Ballester and Rubin gravely warn that the Dominican military will "find themselves outgunned by a group of communist vandals who are trying to disrupt the orderly election process." The two then go on to suggest that the Dominican army — that is, Gen. Lachapelle — knows how to deal with those who would disrupt an election.

"They have discussed with us very important and viable plans they can implement to deal with the communist threat, if they get some American help," Ballester and Rubin told the president, adding ominously: "They want to take preventive action now."

All this alarmist talk could be dismissed as harmless if it weren't for one thing: The Pentagon has apparently swallowed the Ballester-Rubin line.

A Pentagon source has confirmed that the Dominican arms shipment, which was already in the pipeline, is in fact being rushed to the island nation as Gen. Lachapelle has requested.

In Pentagon terms, the weapons heading for Santo Domingo are a modest arsenal: 1,200 M-16 automatic rifles, two cargo helicopters, three A-37 Bravo attack jets, one PTF-23 patrol boat and spare parts.

But in a country half the size of Indiana, with a population of 5.5 million, the U.S. weaponry could be a big help to troops roaming the countryside executing suspected "communist vandals" — which is apparently what Gen. Lachapelle is thinking of doing.

If he fails to eliminate or terrorize enough alleged leftists with his new American guns, and Jorge Blanco still looks like the winner, the U.S. armaments would also come in handy for a Lachapelle coup. "The general has said he'll take over if Blanco looks like a strong candidate," Dr. Rubin told my reporter.

In defense of their campaign as "private American citizens" to encourage a takeover by the military, Ballester and Rubin claim reassuringly that "the Dominican Army is well known for its loyalty to democratic principles." How this squares with their general's pledge to seize power if the basic feature of democracy — a free election — doesn't seem to be going the way he likes, Lachapelle's representatives did not say.

Dr. Rubin emphasized instead the urgency of the arms shipment. "The U.S. has got to move on this thing," he said. "It's a matter of hours and days now."

Unfortunately, someone in the Pentagon agrees. A source told me the Pentagon is "beating its own deadline" on the shipment of guns to the Dominican Republic.

GEORGE F. WILL

Nation's potholes bounce conservatives, too

WASHINGTON — In 1980, Republicans rebelled against the iniquity of the 55 mph national speed limit and denounced it in their platform. Democrats laughed. Republicans swept the West, where folks don't take kindly to the feds slowing down a fella's pickup.

George F. Will

But today there are stretches of the Interstate Highway System where traffic creeps at 30 mph because of potholes and crumbling pavement. What is the Republican administration going to do about these and similar problems?

If Drew Lewis, the secretary of transportation has his way, taxes will be raised. I mean, revenues will be enhanced. That is, costs will be recovered by, er, augmenting "user fees." Principally, Lewis wants a four-cent increase in the federal tax on a gallon of gasoline.

Only the gallantry I learned at my father's knee keeps me from hooting when Republicans devise euphemisms to avoid saying "tax increases." But Lewis has a point about the gas tax being a user fee. He proposes raising $4 billion annually from the four-cent increase, and another $1 billion from other user fees, primarily on heavy trucks. About $1 billion would be dedicated to mass transit capital investments.

This last provision, although perhaps justifiable, muddies Lewis's argument. The lofty morality of user fees — what makes them noble, whereas tax increases are yucky — is that users of a service should pay for it. But, if so, mass-transit users should pay for mass transit with their fares. Lewis is nothing if not nimble, and he argues that highway users should pay with "user fees" some of the costs of the mass transit they do not use, because highway users will benefit from more adequate highway capacity when more folks are using mass transit.

Oh, well. Lewis is not only secretary of sophistry, he is also secretary of transportation. And the transportation system has problems that are more serious than Lewis's casuistry about user fees.

It has been well-said that maintenance, as much as original construction, is a measure of a society's vitality. It also is a measure of maturity, of the willingness to make timely provision for the future.

The Interstate Highway System is not yet completed, but 10 percent needs resurfacing immediately and almost half will need major repairs by 1995. Even a three-year deferral of repairs can triple the cost — not even counting inflation. In the next 15 years, 216,000 miles of other roads in rural areas will need at least resurfacing. (An Arizona county recently tore up 250 miles of paved roads and put down gravel because that was cheaper than repairing the potholes.)

The design life of a bridge is 50 years. Seventy-five percent of America's bridges are more than 45 years old. Forty percent are judged deficient. It would take $60 billion just to eliminate the backlog of needed bridge repairs.

It would take $6 billion just to replace transit buses that are more than 15 years old. New York City would need $110 billion over the next decade just to rehabilitate its transit system. It also must resurface much of its 6,000 miles of streets (and must repair most of its 2,400 miles of water system and 6,100 miles of sewer system).

Gasoline cost 31 cents a gallon in 1959, when the tax was last raised (to four cents). The price of gasoline has quadrupled, highway construction costs have risen 300 percent, and the four cents are worth less than one cent. A gas tax proportional to four cents on a 31 cent gallon would today be 16 cents on a $1.24 gallon, double what Lewis wants it to be.

Conservatives rightly describe indexing of tax brackets as a cure for "surreptitious, unlegislated" tax increases. They should, therefore, describe what has happened to the gasoline tax since 1959 as a "surreptitious, unlegislated" tax cut.

There are today many varieties of liberalism and conservatism, with interesting similarities and incongruities, rather like the Synoptic Gospels. Keeping track of them requires an intellectual micrometer. But unless I have missed something, there is not yet an ideological difference between conservatives and liberals regarding potholes. Whites and blacks, Jews and gentiles, WASPs and ethnics — we are all against bridges falling down.

But many conservatives have not come to terms with this fact: Private life — including private enterprise — depends on a publicly provided physical infrastructure. It is not optional; neither is it inexpensive. It illustrates this fact: A substantial portion — perhaps 80 percent — of public spending is not really a subject of serious disagreement.

TODAY IN HISTORY

On April 18, 1906, an earthquake shattered San Francisco, touching off fires that almost destroyed the city. About 700 people died.

On this date:

In 1942, U.S. bombers led by Lt. Gen. Jimmy Doolittle attacked Tokyo and other Japanese cities in World War II.

In 1949, the Republic of Eire was formally proclaimed in Dublin.

Changing views on 'sovereign immunity' can prove costly

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — That "the king can do no wrong" has been a fundamental principle of English and American law long before William Blackstone took up his quill.

But the concept of "sovereign immunity" has been changing over the years, and some of the changes are making public officials and public employees nervous — and may end up costing taxpayers some money.

Retaining the concept, it has been argued, is necessary because the government, with its "deep pocket," would otherwise become the target of numerous frivolous or fraudulent lawsuits.

In recent years, however, the chances of a public employee or official being sued have increased considerably, and that situation has come under study by a subcommittee of the Public Servants Standards of Conduct Advisory Committee.

That panel reports there are "four general factors" which have led to the increased number of lawsuits.

First, it says, is the "publicized success of some plaintiffs" under federal civil rights statutes, along with the "erosion of the immunity of state and local officials."

Second is the increased reluctance of many state courts to uphold a "blanket application of immunity" for public officials, it comments.

Third is the increased media attention given public employees at all levels in connection with their duties and responsibilities — and the fourth "relates to the indemnity provisions by which the government pays the judgment entered against a public employee."

At the moment, according to Attorney General Mark White's office, some 1,650 lawsuits are pending against state officials and employees (those figures don't include lawsuits against only state agencies).

Many of those lawsuits — perhaps

AUSTIN NOTEBOOK

900 of them — relate to prisoners, the attorney general's office reports.

The Department of Public Safety has 119 lawsuits pending against the agency of DPS employees, Director Col. James Adams reports.

DPS personnel drive 48 million miles annually, and have an accident rate of 4.6 per million miles (the third best rate among the nation's state police agencies), he comments.

The main problem with those lawsuits from the standpoint of DPS, Adams says, is the $100,000 per person, $300,000 per occurrence limit on the state's liability.

"We do have have some accidents," Adams says. "Some of the accidents end up in lawsuits, and those suits can go well beyond $100,000 in liability."

If a DPS trooper is responsibile for an accident Adams says, the state should be liable — and should pay for the damages, without any limit on the liability.

But, he stresses, it should be the state, and not the individual employee, since the employee is acting as an agent of the state.

Some of the other suits involve, for example, wrongful arrest.

"An officer may think he has probble cause for an arrest," Adams says, but that case could end up with a 5-4 decision by the U.S. Supreme Court that there wasn't probable cause — and the officer could end up with a lawsuit against him.

That officer, Adams argues, should be protected, "if he was acting in good faith, and in a reasonable belief that his actions were lawful and proper."

The situation has resulted in a bit of a morale problem, Adams says, but adds that "I don't want to overstate that."

But while DPS troopers haven't been stuck with any judgments against them individually in recent years, that doesn't mean it couldn't happen, he notes.

And with a $500,000 lawsuit pending against him, Adams observes, "a person does have a natural concern as to what the outcome would be...."

El Paso attorney William B. Hardie, Jr., who chairs the Subcommittee on Public Employees Concerns of the advisory committee, feels state employees often operate with a "fear of the unknown," because they aren't sure if the state will back them up in the event of a mistake.

There must be, Hardie feels, a balancing of the need to protect the employee with the right of an injured citizen to collect damages from an erroneous action by that employee.

The state, Hardie says, can't assume all liability — particularly where an employee or official is guilty of wanton or malicious conduct.

The subcommittee notes that there is no neat, clear overall solution which would appear likely to solve the problem.

The best solution, of course, is for the king not to do any wrong. But kings frequently have been notorious for doing just that — and in the end, it's always the king's subjects that have to pick up the tab.

SPEAKING OUT

New one-way streets leave driver in the dark

By CAROL ANN MILLER

A Midland legal secretary, Carol Ann Miller moved to the Tall City five years ago from Houston.

It all started with a simple little trip to my mother's house. It was also the first time I had traveled Louisiana Street since the traffic engineer — or whoever he was — declared it one-way headed west.

I crossed "A" Street, heading in the right direction, and found myself squeezed into a little half-sized "right turn only" lane that is less than one block long. I could not change lanes in the traffic, so I turned right, circled the block and tried again. Same thing.

"Something has to be wrong with those little yellow stripes," I thought, but the traffic was too thick for me to figure it out. I just went home.

Later that evening, I tried again. This time I remembered that if I am in the middle, straight-ahead lane east of "A," I will end up in that absurd little right turn lane west of "A." So far so good. I got to my mother's house, although I left a totally confused pickup, whose driver obviously didn't remember how to maneuver across "A," circling the block, trying to get out of "right turn only."

Coming home was another story. For one thing, it was dark.

"Now you know you can't see in the dark," my mother said, "so I am going to drive you down Michigan and show you how to cross "A" Street."

"Mother!" I protested, "I have been driving Michigan for years."

"Not like it is now," she insisted, and pushed me into her car.

One block from "A" Street, I began to see what she meant. Someone (a drunk in a wheelbarrow wielding a dripping paintbrush?) has attempted to paint traffic lanes, with dubious success. The two right-hand lanes are wide enough for four cars. The left-hand lane could only be deemed an afterthought. It is hardly big enough for a small compact car.

Furthermore, the yellow lines (loosely interpreted) are smudged. Zig-zagging across them are dotted lines in random patterns. Somewhere in the middle of all this is a brief stroke where apparently the wheelbarrow tipped over and the painter inside lost control of his brush.

I had to admit it. Mother was right. I'd never have made it in the dark.

They call it progress. Midland's traffic problems had increased faster than the city could handle, and someone paid someone else a very high price to come here and solve them. Now we have short strips of one-way streets painted with lanes that appear to be divided into car sizes: luxury, standard, compact and bicycle. None of them match up with each other for street crossing.

It's a good thing our traffic lane planner didn't try to fix the traffic lights downtown. Everyone knows it is virtually impossible to drive through Midland without stopping for almost every traffic light on the way. You can watch them for blocks, turning red with an almost uncanny ability to sense the most crowded street, and back it all up.

We could take a lesson from another town. Anyone who has had the privilege of driving through the little town of Rankin has observed a very special phenomenon. Its one traffic light seems to know when a car is coming, and courteously turns green to accommodate. I have never had to stop in Rankin. Neither has anybody else I know.

And so I offer this suggestion to urban Midland, city of confusion and chaos and uncooperative traffic lights and 5:00 backup. Could we hire the traffic engineer who runs Rankin's stoplight to come and run ours? I'll bet he's even got a friend who could repaint some of our yellow lines. I know I'd sure get to my mother's house more easily. Even in the dark.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A Spud nut

To The Editor:

My recent trip to Hutchinson, Kansas, for the NJCA Basketball Tournament was most exciting and during that time I met and talked to many local Hutch people, especially youth.

Naturally, I wore my "Chap" Booster Club wind-breaker to all games and after Midland's first game and all games thereafter; scores of kids inquired about my "I'm-A-Spud-Nut" fan club badge, in regard as to where they could get one. On several occassions, I conversed with a pre-teenage boy, who turned-out to be Coach Jerry Stone's cousin from Hutch. He impressed me from the beginning, so I promised him and his friend that upon my return to Midland, I would send them a couple of Spud-Nut pins.

Immediately after returning home from attending the "SUPER" Chaparral Appreciation Night and Banquet, I wrote this kid, Jim Jackson, a letter and enclosed copies of the banquet program, sports coverge souvenir and two Spud-Nut pins.

I'm in receipt of the following letter from Jim, which reveals what kind of impression our coach, team, college and fans left on Hutchinson, Kansas, for your consideration:

Dear Mr. Wyatt and Midland:

I was totally thrilled to receive your letter and other items. I too am proud of my cousin Coach Jerry Stone. He's come up here so many years without bringing his team and I could tell he was just aching to coach a team here. Finally, on one Sunday afternoon, I was outside playing basketball and my mother yells from the house and tells me to come in, (actually I thought I was in trouble again). When I got into the house she told me that Jerry is bringing his team up to the tournament. I just about fainted with joy.

I told one of my friends that my cousin's team from Texas was coming to Hutch to "WINN" the tournament and that they had a guy named "Spud" who was 5'6" who could jam it. My friend laughed in my face....until the first tournament game.

Having all y'all up here in our neck-of-the-woods was one of the most important and thrilling moments in my life. Being a Midland fan was one of the most exciting things to happen to me ever. My only regret is that it ended all too soon.

I wish I could have been there at your banquet. I'll bet it was special. Even though I don't know you well, I feel that I have a friend in Texas. I hope you all come back next year and after that as well.

I've been to the tournament for as long as I can remember and I can't remember a team coming here to Hutch and grabbing the hearts of the people as you people did. Nor have I seen a team backed by such wonderful people.

Jerry told me his idol was my dad and now he's my idol. I'm glad he's my cousin. I'll always be thankful for the things you sent me and I'm glad I've met such wonderful people. Lots of luck in all you do. See you next year.

Poor premise

To The Editor:

I saw a political advertisement on television the other day where a Texas gubernatorial candidate said that if he were elected, he would see to it that no man who regulates the utilities will ever accept contributions from those whom he regulates. I am not striking the man but the premise of thought upon which he tries to persuade the constituents of this state.

How is our democratic society based? Upon the ideals of uncommon men striving for a common purpose. These men were not saints, they were the elites of the society, but they acted as men of conscience and honor might act. A human's character is shaped by the parameters which dictate day to day life and, by the ability to step above those limitations. Regardless of who the authors of our body politic were, their thoughts and actions were greatly dictated by their surroundings; the voices of their peers and the pressures bearing from interest groups. Yet they still formed a masterful government.

Government in the United States of America regulates many, many things today from the federal level and the grass roots locals. And as long as our laws allow corporate entities the right and obligations of the individual, these corporate entities possess the entitlement of political contribution. If a person is fortunate enough to be entrusted the care of the populace by the populace, he must recognize all... and treat all by the laws under which he governs. Opposition to this ideal is clearly in variance with the laws at hand.

If any elected official wishes to refuse contributions from those people directly affected by his regulatory powers, the right is undeniably his. Bear in mind, however, the restricting, or regulating if you will, select citizened individuals who wish to contribute to political goals is not the right of any elected official or any power behind the throne. Together with this thought, regulating the acceptance of contributions from the constituency again represses the rights of those individuals who wish to contribute.

Take care those who listen to and those who forward any ideas of repression.

Tax free loot

To The Editor:

April 15 again and lots of folks are being stripped of a year's savings to pay an oppressive income tax while Mr. Tip O'Neill calls for more taxes.

In Zaire, it is reported, there is wide spread graft and corruption in the government and such, it is also reported, is encouraged by its president.

Now it is that Mr. O'Neill, et al, have voted themselves a $75 per day living allowance. That, boys and girls, is $27,375 of annual tax free loot.

What do you call that, Mr. O'Neill?

Letters may be on any subject, but should not be slanderous or defamatory. They must be signed by the writer and must bear the writer's correct mailing address and a telephone number at which the writer may be contacted during the day, either home or office.

For valid reasons, at the discretion of the editor, the name will be withheld but must be included in the original letter.

Writers should be as concise as possible and the right to condense letters is reserved.

Letters must be received by noon Thursday for Sunday publication. If necessary, the latest received may be held for publication the following Tuesday or Thursday.

They should be addressed to: Letters to the Editor, The Midland Reporter-Telegram, P.O. Box 1650, Midland, Texas 79702.

Civic pride

To The Editor:

Midland is really fortunate to have such an outstanding sheriff's department. I had the opportunity to observe Sheriff Dallas Smith and his deputies solve a case last week that really made me proud to be a member of a community with such a fine county law enforcement department. The case involved a missing five-year-old girl and foul play was not being ruled out.

Within two hours, from the time the case was first reported to the sheriff's department, the little girl was safely returned to her parents and a suspect was in custody. A special thank you for a job well done by the officers involved in the investigation; Sheriff Dallas Smith, Deputy Jim Phipps, Lt. Bryan Cook and Captain Richard Stratton.

These men are a true credit to their profession and an invaluable asset to this community.

The qualifications

To The Editor:

This letter is written as a followup to Kay Maley's article appearing in your Sunday, April 11, edition referencing Charlene Rosebery's candidacy for school board, Place 6.

The runoff election on April 24 for this board position is so important and should be brought to the attention of our Midland voters over and over again to urge them to get out and vote!

I have personally been associated with the Committee to Elect Charleen Rosebery from the initial stages. I have learned during this campaign that our school board members have a tremendous responsibility to this community, and that each candidate deserves a voter's thorough evaluation in the decision-making process which determines how one votes.

I firmly believe that Mrs. Rosebery's (1) 8½ years teaching experience plus service on various educational committes, PTA Board and as a classroom volunteer, (2) the commitment to public education with two children enrolled in public schools since-kindergarten, (3) the representation she offers to all taxpayers whether they have children in or out of the school system, (4) the time she has to devote to this demanding job, make her the outstanding, experienced and qualified candidate.

Amended notion

To The Editor:

Word is out that the Balanced Budget Amendment, S.J. Res 58, will come to a vote in the full Senate soon, within a few weeks.

The amendment is misnamed. It requires only that any future deficit spending be approved by three-fifths of both houses of Congress, instead of the simple majority required at present. The amendment may be waived in wartime.

It also forces Congress to vote specifically on any tax increase that is faster than economic growth. In the past, inflation has caused tax rates to rise automatically ("bracket-creep"). Such back-door taxation makes a mockery of the Constitution.

The nation needs this amendment very much. Nothing less will force the federal government to face economic reality. Senator Bentsen is a co-sponsor of S.J. Res 58, but Senator Tower is not. I ask all concerned citizens to write to both of these gentlemen, asking their support of the resolution.

Get rid of them

To The Editor:

After WWII many Nazis fled to Argentina, so after 40 years they became in control of the government in Argentina with the same tactics they employed in Europe. We had better get the Nazis before it is too late.

Let us here in the U.S. give the freedom of Falkland where it belongs. Is our government going to do what is right or let the Nazis start all over again. Get rid of them!

"Our cost of living wouldn't keep going up if we could get along with what our grandparents did."

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

When you're walking in downtown Midland and thinking about where you're going and what you'll do when you get there, you rarely think about manna from heaven or from anywhere else.

A morsel of manna, spelled m-o-n-e-y, suddenly appeared on the people-crowded sidewalk off Wall Avenue near noon one day last week and forthwith presented a brief study in ethics. What do you do about or with several wind-whipped $20 bills? The money notes, save for man's inordinate interest in the folding stuff, would still be scooting down the street or lodged in a drainage grade or made into nesting material by some home-building bird were it not deftly picked up.

Well, three or four casually-dressed young men, who perhaps were heading to lunch or work, readily spotted the new bills near the entrance of an office building, hastily glanced around as if to detect the source of the manna and to see if others might stake a claim on the loose cash. None did.

However, ol' Roustin' About, who was on the scene, felt an instant call to responsibility, eyed a bill getting away from rest of the drifting cash, reached down by the curb, snatched it up, and promptly handed the bill to one of the fellows who already had grabbed hold of the other bills. Now, it appeared obvious that none of the fellows knew from whence the money came; they were yakking for some time about "Wonder where it came from?" or "What do we do?"

No one rushed up in the few decision-making moments to lay claim to the bills. So the cash went into the fellows' pockets; they walked off and resumed their business or play.

To the young men, what to do with the money may have become an academically ponderable case. Maybe not. Perhaps they viewed the windfall as their good luck. They could share the money, give it away to "a cause" or spend it at will. If that's a dilemma, they'll have to deal with it.

The point? Well, Roustin' About in a sense averted any responsibility and will never know how he might have handled the case of the wind-blown money; his conscious was not immediately bothered, as he simply handed a bit of the manna to someone else, let it become their problem or fortune, and knew it very well at the instant.

In a sense, he was just as responsible for the money as the other fellows, who, for the time being, ended up with it. But the responsibility is still there and is not absolved. What do you do with new-found cash that's not yours?

Too much talk

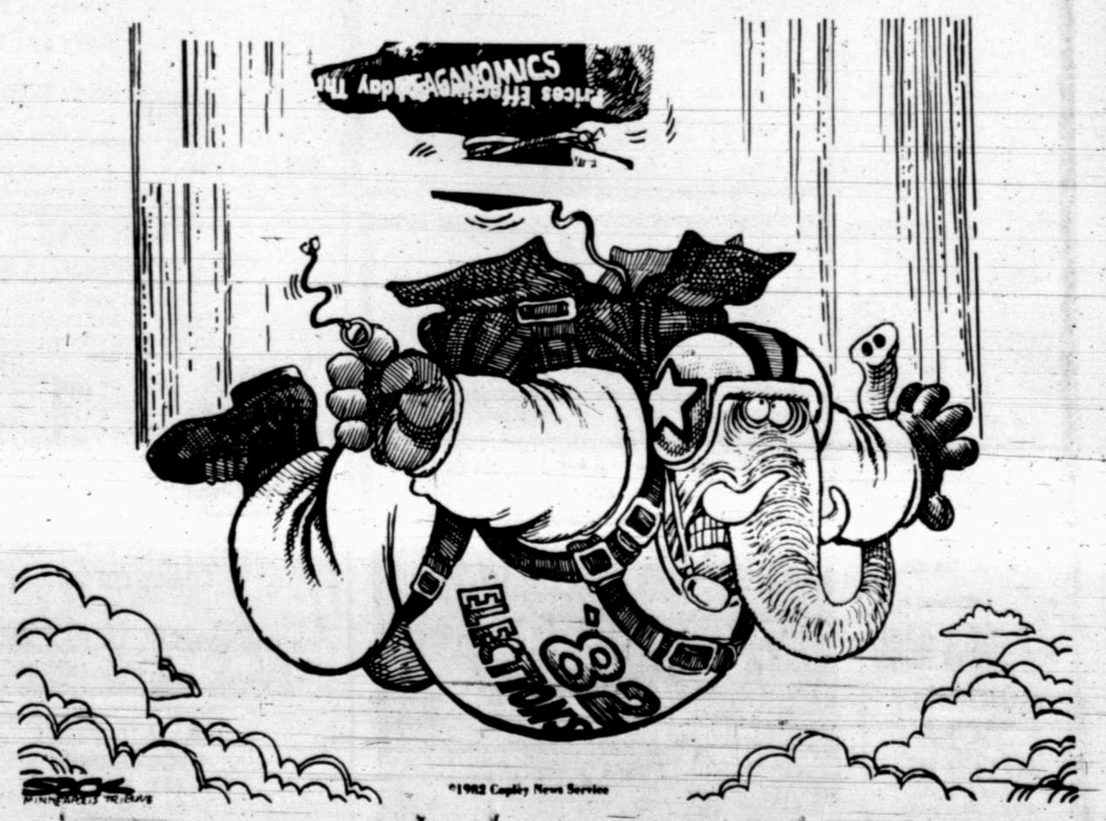

To The Editor:

I have heard many parents, friends and teachers express their dissatisfaction in the present Midland School System, but as shown by the percentage of voter turnout for our last election, there is more talk than action. We need to make our voices heard in the upcoming school board election for Place 6.

It is important that we carefully regard the qualifications of the two candidates running rather than any other extraneous factors. To improve our school system, the school board needs an individual who has both experience as a teacher to understand their needs and concerns, and has been active in the PTA, thus also being aware of the parents concerns. Charleen Rosebery is the only candidate that meets both of these necessary qualifications.

She has also worked to improve our city by being active in many community organizations. We need to take action by voting for Charleen Rosebery on April 24.

Tom and Saeed Mir of FAST COPY — The Printing House, 33 Plaza Center, and their wives are ready to furnish quality printing with fast and personalized service.

When you need Fast Copy...

Easily one of Midland's most handsom new shops, FAST COPY — The Printing House, at P33 Plaza Center, opened for business in August 1981. It is the realization of a long-time goal of brothers Tom and Saeed Mir, who came to the United states in 1977 from Bangalor, India, to study business.

Saeed brings a background in sales to the joint venture, gained during his former years in India, from a year with Sears & Roebuck in the U.S., and from time spent working in the insurance field. Tom was a senior sales representative for Facit Asia in Bangalor. After coming to this country, he worked in sales with Minolta Business Systems and Monroe Calculators in Chicago and with Monroe. He later joined BJ-Hughes, Inc. as a sales trainee. Tom holds a B.S. in banking and accounting, while Saeed has his BS in science. Both men have been trained by and have worked extensively with Bob King at Midland College, whose help they very much appreciate.

While Saeed "minds the store," concentrating on the inside applications of printing, Tom will be calling on businesses and supervising pickup and delivery.

Fast Copy is uniquely located. There are no other printing establishments in the areas serviced by Plaza Center. Not only do they offer quality printing with fast and personalized service, but they offer it where it is needed — near the intersection of Wadley and Garfield Streets. Customers can also call Fast Copy at 686-8608 for pickup and delivery anywhere in Midland.

Fast Copy's equipment is the latest and the best. The mInolta Copier does letter and legal size work on one or both sides of practically both sides of practically anything — card stock, transparencies, NCR paper, etc. Everything needed for high quality offset printing is presnet in the Mir's orderly work room, including the efficient padding, folding and collating machines.

Among printing services offered at Fast Copy are business cards, letterhead, envelopes, business forms, NCR forms, flyers, price lists, resumes, rubber stamps, engraved nameplates and award plaques. Personal and business stationary, wedding invitations, announcements, and Christmas cards can be selected in the comfort of Fast Copy's very lovely reception room.

Visit or call Fast Copy between the hours of 8 a.m. and 6 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Saturday for quick, reliable printing service — they use a little MAGIC!

Moran completes Oklahoma gas discovery

HOUSTON — Moran Energy Inc. has completed its Hagen No. 1 well approximately six miles west of Gage in Ellis County, Okla.

The well tested at the rate of 1.35 million cubic feet of gas per day.

Gas came from four sands in the Lower morrow formation perforated from 9,345 to 9,363 feet.

****

Sanchez-O'Brien Oil & Gas Corporation announced a new field discovery in the West Anahuac area of the Upper Texas Gulf Coast.

The new well, the Sanchez-O'Brien-B. B. Rogers No. 1 flowed gas on tests at 1.071 million cubic feet per day and condensate at 12 barrels per day from the Vicksburg Formation.

HOUSTON (SWN) — ARCO Oil and Gas Company has begun production from five platforms in the Gulf of Mexico, it was announced today by O. Glenn Simpson, president.

The West Cameron Block 205 field was placed on production Feb. 23, and is currently producing gas at a rate of 35 million cubic feet per day and oil at a rate of 300 barrels per day. Additional platforms are required to develop the reserve. A gas production rate of 90 million cubic feet per day and oil production of 700 barrels per day is expected in the fourth quarter of 1982, increasing thereafter as additional platforms and pipeline capacity becomes available.

In early March, ARCO Oil and Gas Company placed in production platforms on West Cameron Block 249, West Cameron Block 601, and West Delta 63 with production estimated at 60 million cubic feet per day.

In April, the North Padre Island 967 "A" platform commenced production. Anticipated rate from this facility is 12 million cubic feet of gas per day.

FORT WORTH (SWN) — American Quasar Petroleum Co. has completed its Brown Unit No. 1 at North Perrin in Grayson County, as an oil discovery in the Cordell sandstone (Pennsylvanian age).

On a six-hour production test the Sherman Basin well flowed at a daily rate of 1,148 barrels of 36.1-gravity oil plus 610,000 cubic feet of gas through perforations between 9,608 and 9,624 feet.

****

DALLAS (SWN) — Triton Energy Corporation announced its Australian subsidiary, Crusader Oil N.L., has tested a new oil discovery in the Surat Basin of Australia.

On an open hole drill stem test, the Yellowbank Creek No. 2 well flowed oil to surface in 16 minutes from a 21 foot interval between 6,006 feet to 6,027 feet in the Triassic Showgrounds Formation. During a second flow period, the 51 gravity oil flowed to a measuring tank at the rate of 64 barrels in one hour through a 3/8-inch choke at a surface pressure of 580 pound per square inch for an equivalent daily production rate of 1,536 barrels per day.

This exploratory well is approximately seven miles south of the Thomby Creek Field, both of which are located on the Rocky Creek (West) Block, ATP 145P, in southeastern Queensland.

****

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) — Magic Circle Energy Corporation has announced initial test results on the Marquis-Rayner No. 14-A located in the Anadardo Basin in Custer County, Okla.

The well tested 20 million cubic feet of gas per day from the Morrow-Chester formation at 14,100 feet.

****

DALLAS (SWN) — American Public Energy Company announced it has reached an agreement with Hunt Oil Company of Dallas, Texas, granting Hunt Oil a seismic option on a major West Texas leasehold block held by AMPECO.

The property covers approximately 15,000 acres of the Clayton Ranch in Borden County located approximately 25 miles north of Big Springs, Texas.

The agreement, currently being formalized by the two companies, provides that Hunt Oil is to conduct seismic operations on the property, the results of which will be made available to AMPECO. Seismic operations have already been begun by Hunt Oil and will be completed by early summer. At that time, Hunt Oil will have the right to earn a major working interest in the leasehold by drilling exploratory wells in which AMPECO will retain a carried working interest.

The Clayton Ranch leasehold lies immediately south of a recent Ellenburger oil discovery by Getty Oil Company made at a depth of approximately 10,000 feet. Currently, under an agreement signed earlier this year, Hudson Resources is drilling a well located on another portion of the Clayton Ranch leasehold held by AMPECO. Hudson will earn a working interest in a designated area if the initial well is completed as a producer. AMPECO will retain a carried working interest in the Hudson well.

****

HOUSTON (SWN) — American National Petroleum Company reported that the State Lease 10090 No. 1 discovery well in offshore Plaquemines Parish, Louisiana (West Delta Block 25) flowed 780,000 cubic feet of gas per day.

****

HOUSTON (SWN) — Blocker Energy Corporation disclosed the company's contract drilling operations currently are being impacted by the decline in demand for drilling rigs.

"We have seen some slippage in rig utilization levels and margins have been squeezed in selected areas," said John R. Blocker, chairman and chief executive officer. "As a result, the company is likely to report a net loss from operations for the first quarter even though we expect improvement in the second half of the year.

"With a recent commitment to increase our corporate credit agreement to $170 million, internal belt-tightening, and a reduction in our exploration and production risk exposure, we will be in a good position when market conditions improve," he added.

****

DALLAS (SWN) — Crawford Energy, Inc. reported an oil discovery in Hardeman County, Texas. The company said that its Denison No. 1 well, six miles northeast of Quanah, tested at the rate of 888 barrels of oil and 164,000 cubic feet of natural gas per day.

The well was completed in the Mississippian formation with perforations at 8,830-8,836 feet.

DALLAS (SWN) — May Petroleum Inc., a Dallas-based independent oil and gas exploration and production company, announced it has filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission a registration statement to exchange interest in eighteen May Drilling partnerships formed from 1973 through 1979 for units in a new partnership in which May will serve as general partner. It is anticipated that the limited partnership interest of May Energy will be publicly traded. The exchange will be treated, generally, as a tax-free exchange for the participants electing to accept the offer.

The purpose of the formation of May Energy is to provide May participants with the maximum liquidity of their investments while continuing their ownership in oil and gas reserves and an opportunity for greater capital growth through future property acquisitions and exploration activities.

In addition to the formation of May Energy, the registration statement contains an offer for cash and promissory notes to par-ticipants in certain partnerships up to an aggregate of approximately $58 million. The offer of cash and notes will fulfill May's obligation for annual repurchase offers in certain of the May Drilling Partnerships.

The offering is planned to commence in mid-May but the timing is subject to approval by certain federal and state regulatory agencies.

Commercial Bank joins automatic teller network

Texas American Bancshares Inc., a Fort Worth-based bank holding company which owns Commercial Bank & Trust Co., has officially joined the statewide Pulse automatic teller machine network.

Pulse, the largest ATM network in the country, now includes more than 345 financial institutions and 14 major processors in Texas and Louisiana. TAB's Doughboy network includes 17 banks and 38 ATMs, all of which are now part of Pulse.

Customers of Commercial Bank & Trust Co., can now go to any other Pulse ATM throughout the system and get cash withdrawals, transfer funds and receive balance information. Customers must have an automatic banking card issued by their own bank and a personal identification number.

Texas American Bancshares was one of seven original major Texas financial institutions which formed the basis for Pulse in February 1981 by agreeing to participate in a shared ATM network through a non-profit organization called Financial Interchange, Inc.

The other six institutions were InterFirst Corpoation of Dallas, First City Bancorporation of Houston, Allied Bancshares of Houston, Cullen/Commerce Bancshares of Houston.

By June, more than 545 financial institutions with 650 ATMs are scheduled to be on the Pulse system, and it is expected that Pulse will eventually include more than 1,600 financial institutions in its regional network. Interconnections between Pulse and other regional networks may eventually include more than 1,600 financial institutions in its regional network. Interconnections between Pulse and other regional networks may eventually provide nationwide banking convenience for its cardholders.

RRC grants six pipeline permits

AUSTIN — Six permits to operate new pipelines in Texas were granted by the Railroad Commission in March 1982.

Through the first three months of this year, the Commission has granted 26 permits to operate new lines. For the same period last year, 36 permits were approved.

Two of the permits in March were for gathering pipelines, two were for trunk transmission lines, and two were for other purposes.

Four of the newly-permitted lines will transport gas, while one will move crude and another will transport petroleum products.

Champlin Petroleum Co., Corpus Christi, products, Nueces County; Wesco Pipe Line Co., Denver, crude oil, Terry Countuy.

Trunk transmission lines approved:

Link Systems, Inc., Dallas, gas, Harris County; Liberty Natural Gas Co., Dallas, gas, Grayson County.

Other lines approved:

Estate of S.H. Killingsworth, Longview, gas Cass County; Southwestern Public Service Co., Amarillo, Lamb County.

Museum admissions up in March

Admissions at the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Midland, were higher in March than in any previous month in the museum's history. The total reached 7,051, and if non-paying visitors, such as small children, were added the figure would have been more than 7,500.

The highest previous month, with 5,933 paid visitors, was recorded in February of this year. Estimated total visitation in February was 6,239. Prior to that, the record was in July 1978.

Museum figures show that visitors in the first quarter of 1982 numbered 32 percent more than in the same months of 1981.

Museum director Homer Fort attributed most of the gains to the popularity of the building's new North Wing and to the Population growth of Midland and Odessa. Also, he said, the museum's reputation continues to spred throughout the country, inducing more travelers to stop for visits.

Based on experience in the first quarter and on group reservations into the summer, the museum may wind up 1982 with more visits by school children and by chartered buses carrying tourists than in any previous year, Fort speculated.

Committee to consider changes in compensation system

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Possible changes in the Texas worker's compensation system — including whether to increase benefits to injured workers — are to be considered by a legislative advisory committee being established by the Industrial Accident Board.

IAB Executive Director William Treacy says the panel will include representatives of the insurance industry, management, labor, trial lawyers and health care providers.

"The purpose is to consider any improvements that are necessary to the work of the system in Texas," Treacy explains, "and to suggest any legislation that is necessary."

Treacy says the IAB itself will not be "overly suggestive of any legislation," since the agency doesn't like to recommend "any matters of public policy."

He says the problem of determining "reasonable and necessary medical costs is in much need of being addressed," along with whether to raise the $154 per week maximum benefits rate.

IAB also faces the problem of an increasing workload as Texas continues to grow, Treacy notes.

The agency anticipates a five percent increase in its workload this year, he says and that continuing growth is straining the IAB's ability to keep up with its workload "and to try to provide greater service to all parties involved."

Credit Union Commissioner John (Pete) Parsons has recommended to the Credit Union Commission that it delay seeking a ruling by Attorney General Mark White regarding subsidiary corporations of credit unions.

Parsons says the National Credit Union Administration has begun to liberalize its rulings on subsidiary corporations, and he feels the Credit Union Department may issue a regulation on them under the "conformity provisions" of the Texas Credit Union Law.

Those provisions allow State-chartered credit union to be given prowers granted to Federally chartered credit unions.

The commission voted at its February meeting to seek an opinion from White on the question, but Parsons says the ruling would affect only one credit union at present.

The commission also voted to seek a ruling on issuance of securities by credit unions; that opinion request is expected to go to White within a week.

The State Board of Insurance has decided to appoint a new advisory committee to deal with the long-standing attempt to draft a "simplified" homeowners policy — a move which apparently will prevent the proposal from being presented at SBI's June 2 hearing on property insuarnce rates and regulations.

the original advisory committee began its work in February 1977, and presented some recommendations that August, but the proposal encountered opposition from the SBI staff.

Those recommendations have been taken up again at various times, but no agreement was ever reached on them.

One of the main problems has been the difficulty of simplifying language without causing changes in coverage.

Some staff and industry officials have argued that it is impossible to change the language without causing such changes — and an impasse has resulted.

SBI has approved an average 7.5 percent increase in comercial auto insurance rates, effective June 1.

SBI denied a request by the Independent Insuarnce Agents of Texas to reclassify all civic, charitable and welfare organization buses as school buses for rating purposes.

The State Securities Board reports the volume of filings for new securities being offered in Texas remains high, with the first seven months of the current fiscal year running $6 billion over the amount for the comparable prior period.

Money market funds continue to make up a good portion of the offerings, Securities Comissioner Richard Latham says, with oil and gas offerings also a major portion.

The board plans to meet May 14 and expects to consider a proposal being prepared by the North American Securities Administrators Association for a standardized limited offering execmption intended to supplement an exemption recenly adopted by the Securities and Exhcange Commission.

The board also continues to monitor efforts by State Bar committee which is drafting an overhaul of the Texas securities law, and which, in current drafts, proposes to eliminate the merit regulation feature now included in the Texas act.

Politicians, economists agree $100 billion deficit intolerable

By VIC OSTROWIDZKI
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — America's politicians and economists agree that the $100 billion plus deficit projected for the 1983 federal budget is intolerable and must be reduced.

Only in that way, they say, can interest rates be brought down and can confidence be restored in the national economy.

What they can't seem to agree on is how this deficit came about and how to go about getting it down to a more manageable size.

One possible source of revenue all sides are zeroing in on at this time is the $5-a-barrel oil-import tariff.

The proposal seems to be picking up steam and has won support inside and outside the administration, especially since such a tariff could be instituted without violent consumer resistance at a time when oil prices are falling.

An exception is the New England Congressional Caucus which feels an oil import fee would place "an enormous and inequitable burden on our region" by adding energy costs for area's consumers. Congressmen from the Middle West, which has just endured one of the worst winters in history, tend to concur in that sentiment.

But, even if it is approved, the import tariff is not a cure all for the deficit because such a levy, according to the Congressional Budget Office, would raise only between $11 billion and $13 billion in 1983.

So the deficit problem cannot be solved with this sort of patchwork quilt solutions.

Unchecked, all sides seem to agree, the deficit could well further fan the flames of pessimism and alarm that have already swept through the government and the business, industrial and financial communities.

What all sides also seem to be saying is that there must be a bipartisan solution to the deficit that is both honest and convincing.

If nothing is done, the pessmists insist, recession will bloom into depression, and once that happens there won't be money to pay for anything.

While economists, both in and out of government, discount the likelihood of the U.S. economy slipping into a depression, the public holds a much gloomier view.

The latest nationwide poll conducted by Fingerhut-Granados Opinion Research found that nearly two-thirds of the American public believes that current unemployment, high interest rates and the deficit will push the economy into a depression in the next year or so.

The fact that the interview sample by the Washington-based pollster, whose customers include th federal government, the AFL-CIO and members of Congress, was drawn only from those likely to vote in congressional elections could spell real trouble for Republicans seeking office next fall.

Some critics cast the blame for the nation's economic ills and huge deficits on the Reagan three-year, 25 percent across-the-board tax cut. Others feel the tax cut contributed to the deficits but must not be be blamed solely for the nation's economic problems.

Then there are those who insist that the weakness in autos and homebuilding, the product of persistent high interest rates, fed through the economy – bringing with it sagging profits, reduced personal income and a drop in tax revenues.

Still others blame the deficits on the growth in individual benefits in entitlement programs, including food stamps and welfare, and a boost in defense spending.

Another school insists the problems were caused by inflation.

The result: a nervous money market, high long term interest rates, delays in economic recovery and potential deficits which are worsening week by week.

The solution? President Reagan and his congressional allies are opposed to delaying the tax reductions enacted last year — insisting the move will only ease the pressure now on Congress to reduce spending.

Business leaders, such as Charls (cq) E. Walker, chairman of the American Council for Capital Formation, has suggested new taxes on oil and natural gas.

Theodore Brophy, co-chairman of the Business Roundtable, has recommended a "stretch-out" of the 1983 tax cut and new levies on consumption.

John Albertiner, president of the American Business Conference, has even asked Congress "to examine all corporate tax benefits in its search for additional sources of revenue."

Larry Speakes, Reagan's deputy press secretary, said Tuesday the administration is "listening to all advice."

"Ideas have been offered, suggestions made, discussions are going on," Speaks said.

"But there is no agreement as yet," he quietly added.

ENERGY CONSUMPTION

Americans may have no reason to be gleeful about how well they have learned to conserve energy — not if the Department of Energy statistics are correct.

The latest warning from the Department's Energy Information Administration is that although U.S. petroleum consumption will decrease by .4 percent in 1982, it will increase by over 5 percent in the first half of next year.

The projections are based on the assumption that the economy will resume growth in the second half of this year, with real Gross National Product rising 4.4 percent.

To make sure the U.S. doesn't run out of oil, the administration has been building up the Strategic Petroleum Reserve to where it now contains 250 million barrels of oil, more than double the amount in storage when Reagan took office.

By 1990, the reserve is expected to have 750 million barrels in storage to protect the country against future oil embargoes or similar drastic interruptions in petroleum supplies.

A 750-million reserve, designed to draw down at a maximum rate of 4.5 million barrels per day, would last about six months during a major supply interruption.

ENERGY BOOKLET

A booklet for state level education policymakers who are concernerd with preparing students and citizens to understand the complex, ever-changing energy situation, has been published by the Education Commission of the States. It is free of charge. Copies may be obtained from the State Energy Education Project, Education Commission of the States, Denver, Co.

TAXES

Today, we are reminded, is tax day. Americans are required by law to file their income tax returns on April 15. However, it will be May 5 before they finish earning the money to pay for their federal, state, and local taxes, according to economists at the Tax Foundation. The good news for U.S. workers is that this year the day falls three days earlier than it did in 1981.

To "observe" the day, the Libertarian Party will hold tax protests at main post offices in 151 cities across the U.S.

The Tax Foundation economists also say that inflation and bracket creep have continued to take their toll on the taxpayers. Based on the latest data from the Treasury Department, the top 50 percent of earners paid 94 percent of the federal income tax bill in 1980, up from the 93 percent burden they were carrying in 1975. The income tax bill for the year totaled $248.4 billion, with $233 billion paid by the 47 million taxpayers with incomes at or above the median level of $12,815 per return.

PAYROLL TAX A BURDEN

Payroll taxes are a greater burden to small businesses than any other type of tax, according to a just-released study by the nation's largest small-business organization.

The study, commissioned by the National Federation of Independent Business, shows that taxes on labor constitute more than 50 percent of the total federal and states taxes small businesses must pay.

Department store stocks may herald bullish future

By DONALD C. BAUDER
Copley News Service

If, as conventional wisdom tells us, the stock market moves in advance of the overall economy, then the market is counting on an upbeat consumer pulling us out of the recession by spending on little things — not the big debt-intensive things of the past, such as autos.

During a period when consumer spending and income have been dismal, retail sales have been sick and the stock market has been dyspeptic, department store stocks have done very, very well.

Such a performance cannot be based on current news. It has to be based on expectations of future news.

For the month of February, the department store stocks were the second-best performers among the industry components of the Standard & Poor's 500, rising 8.61 percent. For the most recent 13 weeks, these stocks have been fourth best among more than 80 stock groups, rising 6.26. And during the past year — during a period of stock market turmoil — the department store stocks have gone up almost 19 percent, fourth best.

"During the first quarter of this year, when the S&P 400 was down 9.4 percent, the Paine Webber composite of 43 retail stocks was up 5.3 percent. For March alone, with the S&P 400 down 1.1 percent, our retail index was up 4.8," said Stuart M. Robbins of Wall Street's Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins.

That outstanding market performance came during a quarter when retailers' earnings were down, down, down. When all the reports are in, "the earnings shortfall could be significant — 25 to 40 percent," said Jeffrey B. Edelman of Wall Street's Dean Witter Reynolds.

The market is looking forward optimistically to several things, noted Robbins: "The consumer has reasonably reliquefied," he said. Moreover, the retailers' product costs at wholesale "are more favorable than they have been since the oil embargo back in the early 1970s." Similarly, retailers' wage costs are also more favorable than they have been for almost a decade.

"Despite their weak first-quarter earnings, and despite the run-up these stocks already have had, and despite a longstanding bias we've had against retail stocks, we see a strong cycle for retail stocks over the next 18 to 24 months," said Robbins, adding a caveat "There is no question there will be profit-taking, particularly as a result of terrible first-quarter earnings."

"Still, we feel the Street has not grasped the meaning of what could happen positively in 1983," he said.

Among department stores, Robbins recommends May, Federated, Allied Stores and Carter Hawley Hale. Among more specialized stores, he likes Nordstrom, H.J. Wilson and Best Products. Dean Witter's Edelman likes Associated Dry Goods, J.C. Penney, Petrie Stores, Service Merchandise, Tandycrafts and Zayre. David C. Taylor of Wall Street's Bache Halsey Stuart Shields said, "It's true that the consumer won't be spending so much on the big-ticket items such as autos. It's also true that retailers' costs are very favorable. Despite the stocks' recent large advance, we expect appreciation potential in a range of 30 to 70 percent for many of these issues over the next 12 to 18 months."

Like Robbins, he wouldn't be surprised to see "near-term plateauing or correction" — but that might be an opportunity to buy.

Taylor prefers Allied Stores, R.H. Macy, May Department Stores, J.C. Penney and Toys "R" Us.

Toys "R" Us is the Street's favorite specialty retailer. It rang up a stunning 31.1 percent sales gain in last year's fourth quarter — leading Merrill Lynch's Jeffrey M. Feiner to calculate that Toys "R" Us now has 9 percent of the U.S. toys market. In that quarter, earnings were up even more — 41.4 percent.

For the last five years, the company's earnings have been compounding annually at 37 percent: "We continue to believe that earnings will rise by about 24 to 25 percent a year during the next three to five years," said Feiner, who considers Toys "R" Us a strong buy for the long pull.

Of course, not everybody is bullish on retailers. Steven G. Einhorn of Wall Street's Goldman, Sachs believes we're in a new environment — mainly because consumer spending has been so weak for so long. "The quick succession of the 1980 and 1981-82 recessions renders retail stock investment somewhat less attractive than has been in the case in the early phase of previous recoveries," he said.

Residential price decline could create deflationary situation

By DAVID W. DEITCH
Hearst Feature Service

NEW YORK — Only one development could create a deflationary situation comparable to the 1930s, say Merrill Lynch analysts. That would be a collape in residential real estate prices. The most susceptible region is California, where much speculation has taken place.

••••

Is speculation rising? The average price of the 20 most active stocks last week fell to $29.89 from the $35 range, with 16 percent of the total volume versus 13.5 percent the previous week. The yield spread between industrial stocks and high grade bonds was a record 6.84 percentage points — favoring bonds, of course.

••••

Feminization of the labor force: Last year, 52 percent of all working-age women were in the labor force, up from 43 percent in 1971, notes Standard & Poor's CreditWeek. The labor participation rate for men dropped to 79 percent from 82 percent. Because the proportion of women is up and the average age of workers is down, the labor force is said to have "less stability."

••••

Bond financing clues: The volume surges for new international bond issues in the first quarter. The March municipal bond volume is a record, but new issue corporates remain lackluster. Corporations have got to refinance short term debt with long bonds if the economic recovery is to occur.

••••

Deficits don't matter anymore. The recession gets big enough to crack short term credit demands, says Bob Parks of Moore & Schley, Cameron & Co. Widespread economic retrenchment causes slower rates, despite upside pressure from record budget deficits.

Bank credit remains tight and could become even tighter in the next few weeks. But money market pressure should flatten out by late this month and on into May. It won't stop the global deflationary momentum, but it could have a big upside impact on security markets.

••••

The market looks better. The Professional Tape Reader stays long-term bearish, but sees more upside potential over the intermediate term. This service likes airlines, gambling stocks, restaurants, retailers and textiles.
