Captors release video of colonel

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A pro-Iranian extremist group today released a videotaped message from a kidnapped U.S. Marine colonel calling on President Reagan to meet his captors' demands.

The 70-second tape from the Organization of the Oppressed on Earth was accompanied by a typewritten Arabic statement reiterating the group's claim that the hostage, Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, is a CIA agent.

The Arabic statement also warned Lebanon's mainstream Shiite Moslem militia, Amal, to stop searching for Higgins, 43, of Danville, Ky., who was abducted Wednesday near the southern port city of Tyre.

Amal, which continued its search today, has taken into custody dozens of members of Hezbollah, Lebanon's most radical Shiite group. Hezbollah, which is believed to be the umbrella organization for pro-Iranian groups holding most of the 24 foreign hostages in Lebanon, on Sunday declared support for Higgins' captors.

Hezbollah and Amal militimen clashed in a brief firefight Sunday. No casualties were reported in the half-hour shootout in the southeastern village of Ein el-Tineh.

In the videotape delivered today to a Western news agency in Beirut, an unshaven Higgins appears to be reading from a statement. The statement by Higgins says Reagan "has to take responsibility for the crimes he has committed against the oppressed people in the region."

In the statement, Higgins then lists the same demands his captors made when they first claimed his abduction Friday in a statement that called the colonel a CIA spy. U.S. and U.N. officials denied the spying charge.

The demands, as given by Higgins, are:

— Israel's withdrawal from the self-proclaimed security zone it carved out in southern Lebanon when the bulk of its army withdrew from Lebanon in 1985, ending a three-year invasion.

— The release of all detained Lebanese and Palestinian "mujahedeen," or holy warriors, from the Khiam detention camp in the security zone and in Israeli jails. An estimated 300 detainees are believed held at Khiam.

— An end to what they call U.S. intervention in Lebanon and to U.S. diplomatic missions to the Middle East.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz is to travel to the region this week to present a peace plan aimed at ending 10 weeks of rioting by Palestinians in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

The statement accompanying the videotape calls on Justice Minister Nabih Berri's Amal militia to call off its search for Higgins in southern Lebanon.

"We call on our brethren in Amal to understand the dangerous espionage role Higgins was carrying out, profiting from the U.N. observer role," the statement says. In an earlier statement given to a Beirut newspaper, the group said it was "lying in wait for any other suspicious American."

A decorated Vietnam veteran and one-time assistant to former Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger, Higgins heads a 76-man observer group attached to a U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon.

His abduction has stirred tension between Amal and Hezbollah, which has been challenging Amal's dominance in southern Lebanon.

Amal has rejected the kidnappers' charge that Higgins is a spy, saying in a statement that most abductions by extremist Shiite factions in Lebanon were motivated by a desire to extract ransoms.

Plane crash victims died on impact

EL PASO (AP) — A preliminary autopsy indicates the three victims of an El Paso plane crash were killed on impact, but that news comes as little comfort to the man who tried to save an 11-year-old boy from the fiery wreckage.

"But I'm doing a lot better," Chuck Espersen said Sunday night. "Somehow or another I'm finally coping. Yet, the effect on me has been profound."

Espersen, 45, a refrigeration contractor, rushed to the crash just before 9 a.m. Friday to try to pull Jesus Aaron Puentes from the burning twin-engine plane.

The plane had crashed onto an interstate access road as it was attempting to return to El Paso International Airport.

The boy's mother, Rosa Linda Puentes, 31, and the plane's pilot, Donald McCoy, 57, also died in the crash.

"On reflection," Espersen said, "when I finally got him away from the wreck, and gasoline was on him and he was burning, and after I splashed water on him, I saw that the back of his head was so damaged that I knew, really, that he wasn't alive."

Church leaves door open after confession

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — Church leaders left the door open for evangelist Jimmy Swaggart to resume his TV ministry after he delivered a tearful confession of sin and stepped down from the pulpit.

"I think he is a man of integrity. I think he made a mistake. I don't think it's a fatal mistake," Cecil Janway, district superintendent of the 2 million-member Assemblies of God, said late Sunday.

Swaggart did not describe his misconduct Sunday in his confession, which drew gasps and tears from his congregation. An overflow crowd packed his 7,500-seat family worship center after reports that church officials had been given photographs purporting to show Swaggart and a known prostitute going into and out of a motel room.

The Washington Post reported today, quoting a source who spoke to a Jimmy Swaggart World Ministries board member, that Swaggart said he did not engage in sexual intercourse with the woman but "paid her to perform pornographic acts."

The evangelist had confessed to a fascination with pornography stemming from his boyhood, the source said.

Cal Thomas, a columnist who once worked for the Rev. Jerry Falwell and has written about the evangelical movement, said the same thing Friday on ABC-TV's "Nightline." Thomas said he understood from sources inside Swaggart's organization that the incident was not sexual but "pornographic."

The evangelist was expected to meet this afternoon in Alexandria with the district presbytery, which Janway said would report its findings privately to the general council of the country's largest Pentecostal denomination, in Springfield, Mo.

"He confessed to specific incidents of moral failure," Forest H. Hall, secretary-treasurer of the Assemblies' Louisiana District, told Swaggart's congregation. "In the opinion of the officers of the Louisiana District, he has shown true humility and repentance and has not tried to blame anyone else for his failure."

Eleven months ago, Swaggart scathingly denounced fellow Assemblies of God evangelist Jim Bakker for committing adultery, comparing him to a cancer that had to be excised.

Swaggart, tears streaming down his face, said Sunday he would step down from the pulpit "for an undetermined, indeterminate period of time. We will leave that in the hands of the Lord."

He said he was cooperating with the Assemblies' investigation that will determine his future as a minister.

"I do not plan in any way to whitewash my sin or call it a mistake," he said. "I call it sin."

Swaggart, 52, apologized to his wife, Frances, who was seated behind him.

"God never gave a man a better helpmate, a companion to stand beside him," he said. "I have sinned against you and I beg your forgiveness."

After he finished, throngs of worshipers huddled around him for more than 20 minutes, holding hands.

Ministry officials refused to comment on who would take Swaggart's place or on the future of his television program, which is taped at his regular Sunday service and distributed in more than 100 countries.

Swaggart, a cousin of rock 'n' roll pioneer Jerry Lee Lewis and country singer Mickey Gilley, combined his singing and piano playing with old-fashioned, fire-and-brimstone preaching to build a ministry with an income estimated at $142 million in 1986.

The ministry reported spending $123 million in construction and land purchases from 1981 until last March for its Baton Rouge complex, which includes a Bible college. It also operates global missionaries and medical services and reported an annual payroll of $16 million last year.

Swaggart had worked last summer to develop an ethics code for broadcast ministries to stem a drop-off in donations caused by the sex and money scandal at the PTL ministry under Bakker's reign.

Apologizing Sunday to his fellow television ministers, his voice dropped almost to a whisper as he said, "I have made your load heavier. I have hurt you."

ABC News reported last week that another television evangelist, Marvin Gorman of New Orleans, was believed to have provided church officials photos linking Swaggart and a prostitute.

Last March, Gorman charged in a $90 million lawsuit that Swaggart had forced Gorman's ministry into bankruptcy by unjustly accusing him of numerous adulterous affairs.

Swaggert's fall from grace could prompt church housecleaning

By CECILE HOLMES WHITE
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — The Rev. Jimmy Swaggart's confession to "moral failure" Sunday may prompt a general house cleaning in the Assemblies of God but won't keep a core of faithful donors from giving money to television preachers, say religion scholars and local clergy.

"The PTL scandal hurt them," said Dr. David E. Harrell of Birmingham, Ala., author of a book on the Rev. Oral Roberts and another on Pat Robertson.

"It kind of drove the whole electronic church down to its core group of contributors and believers. I sort of doubt this will run those people off."

The Rev. Hubert Surratt, pastor of the 800-member A.G. Tabernacle, an Assembly of God church in north Houston, said negative fallout from Swaggart's confession may hurt his denomination and TV ministries.

"But, on the other hand, the long range effect can be positive if it's handled efficiently and properly," Surratt said.

A year ago, when fellow television evangelist Jim Bakker resigned after confessing to a sexual encounter with church secretary Jessica Hahn, Swaggart denounced him as a "cancer" that should be excised from the body of Christ.

Sunday, Swaggart resigned amid reports he was photographed with a prostitute and was being investigated by the Assemblies of God, the nation's fastest-growing denomination with about 2.5 million members. Church leaders will say only that Swaggart confessed to "moral failure."

But unlike Bakker, who shunned a church inquiry when he was defrocked, Swaggart is cooperating with church officials. That could allow him to return to his Baton Rouge pulpit, identified in a recent study as the nation's seventh-fastest-growing congregation, and to his multimillion-dollar TV ministry.

National Assembly of God officials in Springfield, Mo., where the church is headquartered, declined comment Sunday.

Swaggart's confession cannot help but cast Christianity and religion in a negative light, said the Rev. Dr. Milton Cunningham, pastor of Westbury Baptist Church.

He said it causes the lay non-Christian to doubt the integrity of the church. The success of any church depends on the accountability of its clergy, he said.

"I think these kinds of messages affect all religious institutions," said Rabbi Shaul Osadchey, president of the Houston Rabbinic Association.

"The impact of these kinds of incidents is to demonstrate how the issue of personal integrity is connected with the religious message being communicated. The message suffers when the deliverer is found to be conducting himself in immoral situations."

Wife's gift of kidney sparks controversy

DALLAS (AP) — Doctors say that before they allowed a woman to donate a kidney to her husband, they made sure she was not coerced into the donation and that she wouldn't hold the gift over her husband.

In an operation Jan. 21, doctors transplanted Margo Molthan's right kidney to her husband, Mike, whose kidneys had been weakened by renal disease over a 20-year period and failed completely in December. The transplant was the first time in Texas an organ was donated by a spouse, doctors said.

Doctors at Methodist Medical Center, the busiest kidney transplant center in the Southwest and sixth-busiest in the country, performed the operation.

The doctors said they studied a host of ethical considerations before performing the transplant.

"The workup included a complete psychological evaluation," said Dr. Richard Dickerman, the surgical director for the hospital's transplant program.

So far, Molthan's body has shown no sign of rejecting the kidney and he has returned to work as a furniture salesman.

"Mike will have to have a lot of patience and self discipline for the rest of his life," said Mrs. Molthan said. "People have told us, 'Now you two can never divorce.' If I leave, I might demand to take my kidney back."

In most kidney transplant cases, the healthy organ comes from someone who has just died with the same blood type as the patient. But Molthan was far down on the list of people needing kidneys and would have had to wait years while receiving dialysis treatments.

An optional source for kidney transplants is a relative, usually a sibling with the same blood type as the patient. A person has two kidneys but can function with just one.

Court rules Texas hospital must release donors' names

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today refused to let John Peter Smith Hospital in Fort Worth withhold the names of its blood donors from a woman who says her baby daughter contracted AIDS after receiving transfusions.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that the donors' privacy rights do not override Belinda Jackson's need to find out their identities in her wrongful-death lawsuit against the hospital.

Ms. Jackson sued the Tarrant County Hospital District in 1986, alleging that her daughter, Tristainne, died of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome after receiving blood transfusions in 1983 at John Peter Smith Hospital.

In pretrial discovery proceedings, Ms. Jackson sought to find out the identities and addresses of all blood donors whose blood had been used in the treatment of her prematurely born daughter.

Hospital district officials asked for permission to withhold the information, contending that releasing it would violate the donors' privacy rights and threaten the future availability of a volunteer blood supply program.

Pentecostals express sympathy for Swaggert

Associated Press

Pentecostal leaders and worshipers expressed sympathy, Jim Bakker offered advice, Tammy Bakker cried and Jessica Hahn said she was shocked after TV evangelist Jimmy Swaggart quit his pulpit because of a reported sex scandal.

Swaggart tearfully told his congregation in Baton Rouge, La., on Sunday that he would leave his ministry "for an undetermined, indeterminate period of time" because he had sinned.

Many members of the congregation gathered around Swaggart after the service to cry, pray and hold hands.

"I think he's truly repentant. And I think he's set a tremendous example for all of us of what true repentance is about," said congregant Evelyn Murray.

Swaggart said the future of his ministry was up to the Lord and officials of his denomination, the Assemblies of God, who reportedly were reviewing photographs purporting to show Swaggart and a prostitute entering and leaving a motel room.

Church officials and congregants praised the candor of the evangelist, whose broadcasts reach into more than 100 countries and whose ministry had an income estimated at $142 million in 1986.

Forest H. Hall, secretary-treasurer of the Assemblies' Louisiana District, said, "He has shown true humility and repentance and has not tried to blame anyone else for his failure."

Christian Broadcast Network spokesman Benton Miller said he was unsure whether CBN would continue to carry Swaggart's program.

Republican presidential candidate Pat Robertson, the former head of CBN, said he could not comment because he is "running so hard for president I really haven't had a chance to think much about it."

Bakker, contacted at his Palm Springs, Calif., home Saturday, said he and his wife, Tammy, were "kind of sick to our stomachs" over the news of Swaggart's problems and added, "Our heart goes out to them and their family.

"My advice to Jimmy would be don't do anything for about a month and just pray, and then make decisions. I made a very bad mistake by making decisions too quick," Bakker said.

Bakker resigned from his PTL ministry in March and later was defrocked by the Assemblies of God after admitting to a sexual encounter with Miss Hahn, a church secretary.

Mrs. Bakker said she cried when she heard about Swaggart's troubles. "I just felt like I didn't want anyone to suffer the way our family has had to suffer this last year," she said Sunday. "We love him and we're praying for him."

The Rev. Jerry Falwell, who took over the PTL ministry for eight months after Bakker left, said: "I am deeply saddened over this tragedy. With the credibility crisis in recent days involving Wall Street, the world of politics and the arena of religion, many sincere people have had their faith shattered."

Miss Hahn, who accepted secret payments from PTL to cover up her encounter with Bakker, said she expected Swaggart's troubles to affect contributors.

"When they turn on the TV, they're going to see a preacher and wonder if this offering is paying hush money or for a prostitute...I just feel bad," she said.

Miss Hahn said she had heard months ago Swaggart was going to be involved in the current controversy.

Preacher offers sympathy after Swaggert's confession

New York Times News Service

NEW ORLEANS — A subdued congregation in a New Orleans suburb wept along with its pastor, Marvin Gorman, who cried aloud Sunday morning after offering prayers and sympathy for his former colleague, and current adversary, the Rev. Jimmy Swaggart.

"My heart has been deeply saddened by the news of the past few days," said Gorman, a defrocked Assemblies of God minister who has been named in news reports as the person responsible for telling the church's officials that Swaggart, also of the Assemblies of God, had engaged in sexual misconduct.

"We are praying for the Swaggart family. We are praying for Jimmy, Frances, Donnie, Debbie and the children," Gorman told his attentive congregation. "And I would encourage all Christians to pray for them. No one knows the pain they are encountering more than the Gorman family."

Gorman made only a passing and cryptic reference to the $90 million defamation suit that he has brought against Swaggart and other Assemblies of God preachers and officials after his loss of church credentials.

As he ended his statement on Swaggart, the preacher said, "Due to the pending litigation of which I am involved, our attorneys have requested that we not comment further." The lawsuit accuses Swaggart of spreading false rumors of sexual misconduct by Gorman.

The suit was dismissed last year by a state judge who ruled that it concerned church matters and was thus outside the jurisdiction of the courts. Gorman appealed the ruling, and arguments are to be heard on March 3.

Before his downfall in 1986, Gorman had been at the forefront of the fundamentalist Christian movement in New Orleans, less famous and not as powerful as Swaggart, who is based in Baton Rouge, but highly successful nonetheless. Then came accusations of adultery and a loss of his church credentials in a preview of the events surrounding the downfall of another Assemblies of God evangelist, Jim Bakker, over sexual misconduct. Swaggart was also among Bakker's chief accusers.

Gorman lost his Assemblies of God church, which under his charismatic guidance had grown from a small congregation in an old neighborhood to a large complex with a school. It then had bought as Gorman's base a highly visible suburban shopping center along Airline Highway in Jefferson Parish.

Gorman's new independent church, the Metropolitan Christian Center, is in a former warehouse. Some 350 to 400 people attend at each of two Sunday services, according to a church member. At the first service Sunday, the church had room to spare, but it was packed at the later service.

Last September, the Gorman Ministries, which was in the process of buying a television station and which also owned real estate in the city, filed for protection under the federal bankruptcy laws.

SWAGGERT

Gorman, who admitted to "an immoral act" with a woman in 1979, is appealing the dismissal of his lawsuit by a judge who ruled it was a religious dispute that did not belong in court.

"My heart has been deeply saddened by the news of the past few days. We are praying for the Swaggart family," Gorman said, reading from a statement Sunday at the Metropolitan Christian Center in suburban New Orleans.

Bakker, who resigned from his PTL ministry in March after admitting to an extra-marital sexual encounter with church secretary Jessica Hahn, also had blamed Swaggart for bringing his misconduct to light.

Bakker and his wife, Tammy, attending church in the Mojave Desert community of Lancaster, Calif., said Sunday they were praying for Swaggart.

"We forgave all the people involved a long time ago," Bakker said. "We want to just see forgiveness and restoration for everyone."

PREACHERS

But Swaggart's fall will not hurt mainstream Christianity, said the Rev. Glenn Wilkerson, pastor of Cypress Creek Christian Church in the FM 1960 area.

"I think the average pastor in the average pulpit sees himself in a far different light than that in which Swaggart is pictured," Wilkerson said. "We're talking about folks that have an extremely high profile...I think while mainstream Christians would see this as a tragedy, I don't think it'll have much effect on local parishes."

Jeffrey Hadden, a sociologist with the University of Virginia and author of "Prime-Time Preachers" told the Associated Press that "Swaggart's confession could have a more devastating effect that the initial scandals involving Bakker."

"The implication and the rush to judgment that people will make is that they're all a bunch of scoundrels," Hadden said. "I'm not sure how the whole religious broadcasting establishment can live with this without really very devastating implications for all of them."

Hadden also said Swaggart's confession probably would increase the possibility of Congress' considering regulations for the industry that had just begun to attempt to regulate itself through the National Religious Broadcasters organization.

"But those negative effects will only be felt in the short term," said Dr Joe Barnhart, a religion scholar at North Texas State University in Denton.

"But not in the long term," he said, "because televangelism is an institution, and it's awfully hard to kill an institution. See, these are persons. Persons come and go, and institutions live on."

Court to rule on counsels law

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court today agreed to judge the validity of a federal law creating independent counsels to investigate alleged wrongdoing by high-ranking executive branch officials.

Setting the stage for a major constitutional decision, the justices will review an appeals court ruling that the Watergate-era law impermissibly gives presidential powers to the federal courts.

The justices' decision, expected by July, will affect the criminal conviction of former White House aide Michael K. Deaver and the stalled investigation of ex-Justice Department official Theodore B. Olson.

Their decision also could affect other investigations by special prosecutors appointed under the law.

The court also allowed special prosecutor Alexia Morrison to resume her investigation of Olson, granting her emergency request seeking such authority.

Morrison sought to set aside temporarily the effect of the Jan. 22 appeals court ruling that invalidated her appointment while the justices study her formal appeal.

In a separate order today, the high court rejected Marine Lt. Col. Oliver North's latest attempt to block an investigation of his role in the Iran-Contra affair.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that North may not halt the criminal investigation by independent counsel Lawrence E. Walsh by challenging its legality in a civil lawsuit.

North, fired as a White House aide after the diversion of funds from Iranian arms sales to the Nicaraguan Contra rebels was revealed, is a target of the grand jury investigation Walsh is conducting.

Indictments in the case are expected soon.

The Supreme Court on Jan. 19 turned away a previous attempt by North to sidetrack Walsh's investigation.

The justices at that time left intact a lower court ruling that Attorney General Edwin Meese III properly conferred authority on Walsh to conduct the probe.

A three-judge panel of the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals here ruled in Olson's case, by a 2-1 vote last month, that the independent counsel provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 were an unconstitutional encroachment of the exclusive power of the president to enforce criminal laws.

Under the law, a special court appoints independent counsels, or special prosecutors, at the request of the attorney general to investigate alleged criminal wrongdoing.

CRASH

Dr. Jose Ruffier, El Paso County deputy medical examiner, said Sunday that his preliminary autopsy indicates the three died of multiple trauma from the crash rather than burns from the subsequent fire and explosions.

"I know the man tried to save the child because the child was moving. But the child was dead. These people had trauma enough to stop their heart and brain functions, but still, some systems can keep your body moving," he said.

Espersen said that he has received numerous calls from throughout the country thanking him for trying to save the child, but one call from a Kentucky woman stands out.

"She told me that two of her daughters had been pulled from a flaming car crash by a man who didn't give his name. She said one of her daughters had survived but both would have died if he hadn't helped.

"She told me she couldn't thank him, so she wanted to thank me."

Espersen said, "You know, I'm not a hero, just another person trying to pay back a little of what the world has given me. I did what I did because I had to react.

"I think that when there are so many bad things in the world, it's nice to know there is love, too. I'm not part of an organized religion but I have a deep personal faith, based on the belief that survival of the human race depends on people being human to each other."

And Espersen said he is happy that what he tried to do may be making other people think more about love and caring.

"I'm a single parent and I know I've sure been hugging my son a lot since Friday."

COURT

Judge William L. Hughes Jr., who is presiding over the state court case, ruled for Ms. Jackson in late 1986, but later blocked any disclosure of the blood donors' identities so the hospital district could appeal.

A state appeals court also ruled for Ms. Jackson, and the Texas Supreme Court refused to hear the hospital district's appeal last Oct. 7.

KIDNEY

Doctors in the U.S. have only recently turned to considering transplants from living non-blood related donors, like spouses. The Molthans have the same blood type.

"I asked my doctor if a wife could donate a kidney to her husband," Mrs. Molthan said. "He said it's possible, though it had never been done in Texas."

Relatives of dead man convinced he was alive

REFORM, Ala. (AP) — Relatives of a man whose decomposed body was found about three weeks after his death apparently were convinced that he was still alive, officials said.

"I understand they were seeing a voodoo man," Pickens County Coroner Herbert Latham said of the deceased man and his relatives.

Pickens County Sheriff David Abston identified the dead man as Jessie James Latham, 42, not related to the coroner.

The body was discovered in a bedroom in a mobile home Wednesday by county health workers, authorities said. The coroner said the man had been dead about three weeks.

"He was pretty well decomposed at the time and the odor all around the trailer was pretty strong," Abston said. "Some of the kids playing in the yard were wearing face masks, like in an operating room."

The coroner said the dead man's relatives "tried to convince me that he was still alive, that God was dealing with him, that he was fine."

"This was a weird case," he said Sunday, a day after the body was buried.

The coroner said that although no foul play was suspected, he was awaiting hospital records from New York, where Latham had received some treatment, before announcing the cause of death.

The coroner said Latham apparently was aware he was suffering from a fatal disease. The autopsy did not reveal the exact disease, he said.

Timeline set on new Superpower treaty

MOSCOW (AP) — The United States and Soviet Union today gave their arms control negotiators one month to complete the key provisions of a new treaty to sharply reduce their strategic nuclear weapons.

The decision was taken as U.S. Secretary of State George P. Shultz wound up two days of talks in Moscow. He said negotiators in Geneva who have failed to make significant progress toward a 50 percent cut in long-range nuclear weapons were directed to report to him and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard A. Shevardnadze in Washington March 22-23.

Shultz also told a news conference the Soviets indicated they would be more flexible in handling emigration applications, except for those from people who have had access to state secrets.

Shevardnadze confirmed "categorically" that only those with information the government considers important to national security would be barred from emigrating, according to Shultz.

Earlier today, as he opened talks with Shultz, Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev pledged to achieve peace in Afghanistan and to try to reach a new nuclear arms agreement by spring.

"We will just have a good, frank conversation," the Soviet Communist Party general secretary said.

Shultz, who arrived in Moscow on Sunday, met until 1:30 a.m. today with Shevardnadze, then held talks with Premier Nikolai I. Ryzhkov before meeting Gorbachev.

In response to questions from reporters during a picture-taking session, Gorbachev said the Soviets would "do our best to achieve peace in Afghanistan and to have a nonaligned, neutral Afghanistan which would have good relations with its neighbors, with the United States and with the Soviet Union."

An estimated 115,000 Soviet troops have been in the country since December 1979, backing a pro-Moscow government at war with U.S.-armed Moslem guerrillas.

Gorbachev has promised to begin a withdrawal on May 15 if the Kabul government and Pakistan can agree on terms of a settlement by March 15.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz, right, speaks with refuseniks Ylena and Ilya Bezprozvani of Leningrad during an embassy reception in Moscow Sunday. The reception was held for Soviets who have been refused permission to leave the country.

On nuclear arms, Gorbachev said "there is still a chance" of an agreement to reduce U.S. and Soviet long-range nuclear weapons by the spring. The idea would be to have the pact ready for him and President Reagan to sign at a Moscow summit.

One of Shultz's aims in the Moscow meetings is to bring the two sides closer to an agreement to cut their arsenals of long-range nuclear weapons by 50 percent. Gorbachev and Reagan signed an agreement in Washington Dec. 8 to eliminate their intermediate-range missiles, which have a range of about 300 to 3,000 miles.

Shultz met for more than eight hours on Sunday with Shevardnadze, and called their three sessions on arms control, human rights and regional conflicts "very worthwhile."

Also Sunday, Shultz quizzed Andrei D. Sakharov about human rights, arms control and Soviet reforms and met with a group of Jewish refuseniks to underscore U.S. concern for human rights in the Soviet Union.

Sakharov said the Soviet Union has not yet made enough progress to merit holding an international human rights conference. "As a precondition for such a conference, I see the liberation of all prisoners of conscience, and the complete end of the war in Afghanistan," he said.

Sakharov, a physicist, helped develop the Soviet hydrogen bomb in the 1950s. He was exiled to the closed city of Gorky in January 1980 for speaking out against the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

Shultz told refuseniks and members of divided families who gathered Sunday at the home of U.S. consulate chief Max Robinson that "We are never content until all these cases are resolved in the proper way. No matter how discouraging it may sometimes seem, we will never give up."

The secretary of state, who travels to the Middle East next week, has questioned whether the Soviet Union can play a bigger role in that region of its human rights record and its lack of relations with Israel.

Daniel Ortega says more Contra aid means war

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega charged that U.S. lawmakers who are seeking to secure additional aid for the Contra rebels are egotistically toying with Nicaraguan lives.

Ortega said in a two-hour speech to the National Assembly on Sunday that, despite a Feb. 4 vote in the House of Representatives against a Reagan administration request for more Contra aid, "this chapter has not closed."

President Reagan, he said, will look for a way to get more money to the rebels by calling the assistance humanitarian aid.

"If the (U.S.) Congress approves that type of financing, it would be erasing the word peace that it wrote when it voted against the funds, and would be putting (in) the word 'war,'" Ortega said in the speech, broadcast over a government national radio network.

"That is the little game of Congress, a Congress where many interests, particularly egotistical, are involved and which is playing with life, hunger, security and the self-determination of the Nicaraguan people," he said.

The House voted against Reagan's plan to give the Contras a $36.2 million aid package that included about $3.6 million for weapons and ammunition to help them.

Democrats prevailed in the vote, 219-211, after the party's leadership promised members there would be a later chance to vote on a package of Contra aid for food, clothing, medicine and shelter only.

A group of Democrats, together with one or two Republicans who voted against the president's plan, have been trying to draw up such an alternative.

Palestinians observe 'Martyrs Day

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinians today held memorial services for the 61 Arabs killed by Israelis in anti-occupation violence, and Israel's attorney general ruled soldiers could not use force to punish or humiliate protesters.

Also today, hospital officials said a 14-year-old Arab boy was wounded in the thigh in the Gaza Strip.

The army reported an Arab was arrested after trying to attack an Israeli soldier with a knife in the West Bank town of Ramallah. It was the third such attack on soldiers in four days.

Leaflets distributed by underground Palestinian groups in the occupied territories called for demonstrations this week — beginning with memorial services on "Martyrs Day" today — to protest the visit to Israel by Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Army officials said the five-day visit, scheduled to start Thursday, might prompt an escalation in violence in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. "It's not organized or systematic, but outside events like the Shultz visit do affect the situation," an army spokeswoman said. She spoke on condition of anonymity.

Attorney General Yosef Harish sent a letter to Defense Minister Yitzhak Rabin saying soldiers may not use force as a means of punishment or humiliation, Israel radio reported.

Orders that call for such use of force are illegal, ruled Harish, who demanded Rabin issue appropriate instructions to the troops. Harish said many Palestinians have complained to him about abuse by soldiers.

In an army survey, 65 percent of soldiers questioned said they had witnessed rough treatment of Palestinians by troops, said the army's chief psychologist, Col. Shlomo Dover. The radio did not say how many soldiers were questioned.

Dover said 70 percent felt angry and frustrated by the situation in the occupied lands and said they thought using the army to break up civilian protests damages its effectiveness to fight a war.

Dover told Israel radio that 92 percent of the soldiers questioned expressed full trust in their commanders.

"We don't have problems with the motivation of soliders... not that they rejoice to do it, but it's an assignment that has been given to the army and that's how it is seen by the soldiers," he said.

Since the wave of protests began Dec. 8 in the territories Israel seized in the 1967 Middle East War, Israelis have killed 61 Palestinians. The latest fatalities were two men shot and killed by soldiers Sunday.

The government has spent $330 million, or 1 percent of the government's 1988 budget, in an attempt to quell the violence.

In one memorial services today, women marched to a cemetery in the West Bank village of Anabta to honor three residents who died in clashes with the army earlier this month.

A Molotov cocktail was thrown at an Israeli car in the West Bank town of Ramallah, but no one was injured, the army said.

In the Gaza Strip refugee camp of Jabaliya, soldiers clashed with protesters, and a 14-year-old boy was shot in the thigh, doctors at Gaza City's Shifa Hospital said.

In Gaza City, anti-American slogans painted in red on closed store shutters read: "No to the Shultz visit. Yes to the Palestinian government. Yes to the PLO."

The Palestine Liberation Organization has ordered Palestinians in the West Bank and Gaza Strip not to meet with Shultz, saying he is pro-Israeli and has rejected minimal Palestinian demands.

But local Palestinian leaders said today that they were trying to persuade PLO chief Yasser Arafat to lift the ban. U.S. officials met with several Palestinian representatives over the weekend to discuss the Shultz visit.

During his visit, Shultz will present to Israeli leaders a U.S. peace initiative calling for an international forum for direct talks on Palestinian self-rule and negotiations on a final settlement by December.

But Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir told European Jewish leaders Sunday night he objected to the hurried pace: "Any attempt to force the pace and shorten the period (of self-rule) would be a detriment to the very essence of the agreement."

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Give your best and that's what you will get back. A business project will turn the corner, filling your pockets with cash. Someone may try to entice you into a secret relationship. You will be happiest if everything is out in the open and strictly aboveboard. Learn from your friends' mistakes. You have a chance to collect on a promise. Be true to your dreams.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Check all the angles before making an important career or financial decision. Work on your own as much as you can. Choose professional associates for their ability, not just out of friendship.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do not try to impress others with a show of wealth. It will not go down very well. Refuse to waste time on fruitless business deals. Learn to accept people for what they are.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): News about a scholarship could relieve your mind. You no longer have to underwrite a college student's education. Take more pride in your accomplishments. Be flexible in the midst of change. Others applaud.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Your life's plan is being slowly unveiled. A windfall or inheritance comes at a terrific time! Invest wisely after consulting the experts. Make an agreement with yourself and then stick to it.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): A settlement is made in your favor. Be charitable to someone who is inexperienced. Modify your personal plans to go along with your loved ones' wishes. They will be very appreciative.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Investigate new investments early in the day. A stock tip could be a terrific money-maker. Check your insurance coverage, especially if there has been a new addition to the family. Build savings.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be objective about your limitations. A desire for freedom could conflict with your responsibilities. Needless expense can be avoided if you think before you buy. Romance speeds up. Know your own heart.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You and partner have a meeting of the minds. Use your ingenuity if money is tight right now. Recycling ideas will boost profits. Work to establish better rapport with your children.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Tokens of good will can have a terrific effect now. Be objective about meeting new challenges. Trust your intuition at important moments. Greater tact and diplomacy are the key to a happy relationship.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Tension causes someone to make mistakes. Your compassion will help ease a difficult situation. Try not to get involved in office politics or you could find yourself on the outside looking in.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Final plans are subject to change. An authority figure could prove indecisive. Use the extra time to explore other options so you will not be caught short. Partner is unusually supportive.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Let others know exactly where you stand. Your honesty will help you clear a hurdle. You will have to be assertive to cement a business deal. Welcome a challenge thrown your way!

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠KQJ954 ♡84 ◇762 ♣93

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Even though you have a rather weak hand, it is still your duty to steer the contract to the best spot. Bid two spades. That is regressive, promising little more than a minimum response and long spades.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠AQ52 ♡KJ1043 ◇85 ♣93

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You have enough for a move toward game. However, you cannot bid two spades—that would be a reverse and, by responder, would be forcing to game. Therefore, all you can do is make an invitational raise to two no trump—since you hold so much in the majors, partner surely has the minors well stopped.

1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—You are worth one forward-going bid, and this time it's obvious—bid two hearts. Responder's rebid in a suit ranking lower than his first bid is not forcing on this auction, but you must not overlook the possibility of a 4-4 heart fit.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠KJ1043 ♡AQ52 ◇85 ◇93

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
1 NT	Pass	2 ♡	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?

A.—Thus far you have shown no additional values—you would bid two hearts on a dead minimum two-suiter as well. To confirm that you have invitational values, rebid two no trump. That shows 5-4 in the majors since you bid spades before hearts, while protecting against the possibility that partner gave a false preference with only a doubleton spade.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠KJ73 ♡AQ5 ◇QJ7 ♣K102

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♠	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—Despite your excellent support for partner's suit, you still have a minimum no trump opening bid. Partner is expecting a hand something like the one you have—it contains no surprise except, perhaps, a fourth trump. Pass.

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠KJ63 ♡85 ◇K95 ♣AQ102

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♣	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?

A.—Whether or not you play fourth-suit forcing, you should take the same action now—bid two no trump. You have a stopper in the fourth suit. If that's what partner wants, your tenaces indicate that you should be declarer at a no trump contract.

Dudley Moore marries actress

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — British actor Dudley Moore, who staggered to fame as a lovable lush in the movie "Arthur," has married aspiring actress Brogan Lane, a week after his Valentine's Day proposal, his agent said.

Moore, 52, and Miss Lane, 28, were married Sunday by a justice of the peace at The Little Church of the West Chapel, said agent Lou Pitt.

Moore met Miss Lane six years ago on the set of the film "Six Weeks," according to publicist Paul Bloch. They were re-introduced three years ago at a restaurant and have been together since.

Moore's marriages to actresses Suzy Kendall and Tuesday Weld ended in divorce. It was Miss Lane's second marriage. Each has a son.

"The two hope to star in a film together in the future and are looking for projects," said Bloch.

Marlee Matlin

NEW YORK (AP) — Deaf actress Marlee Matlin is working with a speech pathologis to improve her speaking skills, according to People magazine.

Miss Matlin, who won an Oscar for best actress for her portrayal of a deaf-mute in "Children of a Lesser God," will be presenting this year's best actor award. She plans to say, "The envelope, please," rather than use sign language, the magazine says in this week's edition.

She also has a speaking role in the planned CBS movie with Anne Bancroft, "The Bridge to Silence."

"She needed a lot of work," said her speech pathologist, Dr. Lillian Glass. "Her voice was flat, monotone, and she talked too fast."

NEW YORK (AP) — Filmmaker John Waters says there are similarities between his first PG-rated movie and his 1972 midnight classic "Pink Flamingos," which is still outraging audiences.

"Hairspray," a comedy about an overweight girl who becomes a star on a local television dance show, makes its debut this week. Divine, the 300-pound transvestite star of "Pink Flamingos" plays the mother of the heroine of "Hairspray."

"I knew this was one of the few obsessions I ever had that would be palatable to (general) movie executives," the 41-year-old Waters said of "Hairspray" in an interview published Sunday in The New York Times.

"The sensibility and sense of humor in 'Hairspray' is the same of 'Pink Flamingos.' The difference is that I don't have the rage at 41. I'd be a jerk."

NEW YORK (AP) — In her "Saturday Night Live" heyday, Gilda Radner poked fun at people and just about everything else, but when she learned 17 months ago that she had cancer she found life was not as funny.

"Cancer is about the most unfunny thing in the world," Radner said in an interview in March's Life magazine. "But it doesn't have to mean you die."

Although Radner had lost much weight and hair during her chemotherapy, she has a new attitude today.

"Radner needs little provocation to yank up her sweater and show off her newly 'fat' stomach, and after eight months of baldness, her unruly brown hair (with a bit of gray at the temples) has grown back in a thick thatch," according to the magazine.

She has also stopped smoking and eats more wholesome food.

Twenty years ago, the average life expectancy of a patient with ovarian cancer was between six and seven months. It is still the most lethal of pelvic cancers, with less than a 30 percent recovery rate.

Although Radner, 41, will not be considered well unless her remission continues for at least 1½ years, she said "I think I've never been as healthy and as well as I am now."

She credits her turnaround to her excruciating medical treatment, which included surgery, nine months of chemotherapy injections and 30 radiation sessions.

Her 52-year-old husband, actor Gene Wilder, said: "Each time Gilda had to go through one more treatment, and she'd be vomiting and writhing in pain, I'd ask myself, 'How much can a human being take?'"

Had Wilder not been around, Radner is certain she could not have taken so much, the magazine said. Wilder has not worked since she was diagnosed.

Radner also credits meetings she's attending with the "Wellness Community," a cancer self-help group.

And she's working three hours a day on a book about cancer.

"That's what one of my favorite visualizations is about," she said. "Every day...I imagine myself sitting in Doubleday's, with people lined up to have me sign my book. I'm well. And I'm adorable."

ATLANTA (AP) — Mildred Seydell, a globe-trotting journalist who interviewed Benito Mussolini and covered the Scopes "monkey trial," died Saturday. She was 98.

Ms. Seydell, a resident of suburban Roswell, once said she "much preferred to set the stage for adventure rather than the table for dinner."

Her work as a writer and columnist for Hearst publications, including the now-defunct Atlanta Georgian newspaper, took her around the world.

She wrote "Talks With Celebrities," including an interview with the Italian dictator Mussolini, for Universal News Service and 27 Hearst papers.

She also covered for Hearst the 1925 Tennessee trial of John Scopes, a teacher indicted for illegally teaching the theory of evolution.

Ms. Seydell was a columnist for the Atlanta Georgian from 1926 to 1939, the year the paper closed.

She was born Mildred Woolley and in 1910 married Paul Seydel, a chemist she met while studying at the Sorbonne in Paris. She added an "l" to Seydel and used the name professionally.

WATERFORD, Va. (AP) — William Claiborne "Red" Hayes Jr., the NASA official who greeted astronaut John Glenn after his history-making flight in 1962, died Saturday. He was 63.

Hayes, who spent 27 years with the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, directed the at-sea recovery efforts that plucked astronauts from the ocean after their space capsules had returned to Earth.

Hayes joined the National Advisory Committee on Aeronautics in 1952 and was there when NASA was organized a few years later.

Hayes directed the recovery of astronauts Glenn, Scott Carpenter, Walter Schirra and Gus Grissom. He retired in 1979.

DALLAS (AP) — The founder of one of the largest family-owned grocery store chains in Texas, Marvin T. "Buddy" Minyard, has died. He was 79.

A longtime Dallas civic leader and founder of the North Central Texas Leukemia Society, Minyard died Saturday at a hospital following a heart attack.

Minyard started with a tiny grocery store in the 1930s and built it into one of the most successful privately held business chains in the region.

The illness of his first wife, Clairene, who died in 1966, thrust him into the battle against leukemia. He flew her to doctors all over the world after she was first diagnosed as having the blood cancer.

Commission races, constable on ballot

Among the races that will confront Midland County voters on March 8th are three nominations for county commissioner positions and election of a constable in Precinct 1.

The two incumbent commissioners seeking re-election are Durward Wright, a Republican in Precinct 1, and Scott Welch, a Democrat in Precinct 3. Both men have opponents in their primary races and will also face opposition in November's general election.

Commissioner, Precinct 1

Wright has served as commissioner in this precinct for 20 years and during that time has taken a leading role on the court in tackling major issues. A notable example is the jail bond issue recently passed by voters. It was a controversial issue and an incumbent commissioner facing a re-election race might not have wanted to become involved.

Wright didn't hesitate, however, and took the forefront in actually presenting this proposal intelligently and convincingly to the community.

His primary opponent, Michael Roadcup, associate pastor of Midland Baptist Temple, is interested in serving and exhibits great concern for seeing that the needs of all Midland citizens are well represented on the court. His interest underscores the type of community involvement that makes this political system great.

But Wright's experience and dedicated service is too valuable to lose. We strongly encourage voters to nominate him for another term.

Commissioner, Precinct 3

In the Democratic Primary, Welch will be seeking another term to his Precinct 3 seat. Welch often goes his own way on the court and it's not unusual to find him the lone dissenter on major issues. A good example is the recent jail bond issue, which he opposed practically from the outset. While we typically like to see a harmonious court on issues such as the jail, dissent in itself certainly is not deplorable and helps make the court responsive to the total county population.

The primary complaints against Welch's service so far are that roads in the precinct are not graded frequently enough and that the commissioner has not been receptive to complaints on the lack of grading or on flooding in low-lying areas. It's mainly for those reasons that Welch has attracted two primary opponents — Louisa Valencia and Petronilo "Pat" Ramirez.

Those two candidates make it known that they would stress those problem areas and, in that regard, it's obvious more attention needs to be given to those concerns.

We believe, however, that a commissioner has more responsibilities than single-issue concerns and support Welch's renomination.

Wollschlager, an independent petroleum geologist, stresses the importance of cooperation with the city and other governmental entities. In that regard he notes that to solve the problem of Monahans Draw's effluent, the county needs to work closely with Ector County.

He also stresses the importance of efficiency in government to keep taxes as low as possible.

Cox, owner of Cox Masonry, said he believes that his experience in business will help him to better oversee the road construction, maintenance, and other construction aspects of the commissioner's post.

The interest of both men in serving Midland County is highly commendable. We believe that Wollschlager's approach to working with other governments offers a viable proposal for solving some difficult dilemmas and we encourage voters to nominate him.

Constable, Precinct 1

Rice was appointed to the constable's post in August last year after former constable Tom McGinnis retired. Rice and Buzzell had both worked for McGinnis in the constable's office and, additionally, Buzzell was employed for some time in the sheriff's department.

Both men appear competent and qualified, and each exhibits a commendable enthusiasm for continuing to develop the constable's office. The one difference appears to be that Rice is in that position now and appears to have established a good operation serving civil papers, handling county rabies control cases and the other duties of the office.

In fact, Rice quickly instituted warrant service fees that have saved Midland County a significant sum of tax dollars already and he has increased deputy efficiency with a change to flexible hours.

Those comprise a commendable start in that important office and we encourage voters to support Rice's candidacy.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Feb. 22, the 53rd day of 1988. There are 313 days left in the year.

Today's Highlight in History:

On Feb. 22, 1732, George Washington, the first president of the United States, was born at his parents' plantation near Fredricksburg, Va.

On this date:

In 1784, a U.S. clipper, the Empress of China, left New York City for the Far East.

In 1819, Spain ceded Florida to the United States.

In 1865, Tennessee adopted a new constitution abolishing slavery.

In 1879, Frank Winfield Woolworth opened a five-cent store in Utica, N.Y. In 1889, President Grover Cleveland signed a bill to admit the Dakotas, Montana and Washington state to the Union.

In 1924, Calvin Coolidge delivered the first presidential radio broadcast from the White House.

In 1935, it became illegal for airplanes to fly over the White House.

In 1973, the United States and Communist China agreed to establish liaison offices in Beijing and Washington.

In 1980, in a stunning upset, the United States Olympic hockey team defeated the Soviets at Lake Placid, N.Y., 4-3.

Ten years ago: Egypt's President, Anwar Sadat, formally broke diplomatic ties with the government of Cyprus, after 18 Egyptian commandos were killed by Cypriot troops while attempting to storm a hijacked jetliner at Larnaca Airport.

JACK ANDERSON

Brock or Baker could control State

WASHINGTON — If the next president of the United States is a Republican, the secretary of state is likely to be either former Labor Secretary William Brock or Treasury Secretary James Baker.

Jack Anderson

Both are political moderates who would rankle the ultra right. And neither would allow renegade cowboys to run away with our foreign policy.

While the country concentrates on predicting who the next president will be, we asked our sources in the Republican Party and in the campaign camps of Sen. Robert Dole and Vice President George Bush whom their secretary of state would likely be.

The state post carries with it the pomp and circumstance of dealing with foreign leaders, the management of embassies abroad and a large bureaucracy at home, and the power and prestige of being the dean of America's foreign policy.

According to our sources, if Bob Dole becomes president, he will probably pick Bill Brock as his secretary of state. If Bush wins, Jim Baker is likely to become his foreign policy czar.

The two men are surprisingly similar. Both have served as Cabinet officers in the Reagan administration. Both let it be known to Reagan that they would rather have been secretary of state if George Shultz had ever resigned.

Neither is widely versed in foreign affairs, except in international economics. Both are considered moderate Republicans who, if they had the post, would be swimming upstream against conservatives led by Senate Foreign Relations Committee heavyweight Sen. Jessie Helms, R-N.C.

William Emerson Brock III is from a wealthy Tennessee candy-manufacturing family. James Addison Baker III comes from a long line of prestigious Texas lawyers.

Brock has paid his dues. He served as Reagan's labor secretary from 1985 to late last year, when he resigned to become Dole's campaign manager. Before that, he was the president's Cabinet-ranked special trade representative for four years. In that capacity, he developed a reputation for hard-nosed deliberations with the Japanese, tirelessly trying to open their markets to U.S. exports.

Brock is also a former senator and Republican Party chairman. He is credited as a major player in rebuilding the party and broadening its appeal during his 1977-1980 stint as chairman of the Republican National Committee. He is a canny, candid politician, now adroitly running the Dole campaign.

Brock has lately come into some competition. Alexander Haig's propitious withdrawal from the New Hampshire primary, and his endorsement of Dole, was timed to curry favor with the candidate and was probably a bid to secure a Cabinet position. Another man who might have his eye on the job is Reagan's present chief of staff, Howard Baker, a longtime friend of Dole's.

Jim Baker is as able as Brock. Insiders agree the Iranian arms-for-hostages deal and diversion of profits to the Nicaraguan contras never would have occurred if Baker had been chief of staff at the time.

Baker is an old Texas friend of Bush's and was his campaign manager during the 1980 presidential race. From 1981 to 1985, he was White House chief of staff, one of a triumvirate (with Edwin Meese and Michael Deaver) running the administration under the president.

The conservatives pegged him early as the most moderate of the three and he became the target of their mutterings. Others saw him as an invaluable "pragmatist" — the man who could talk sense to a president who needed to move from the far right to center.

Baker was the president's respected point man with both Congress and the media until he was tapped as treasury secretary in early 1985.

If either Brock or Baker becomes the next secretary of state, he will be the undisputed foreign policy boss. Both men have tight relationships with their candidates and would not abide a national security adviser stepping over them to the president.

MULTIPLE CAUSES FOR AIDS — One of the main puzzles about AIDS is why some victims also suffer a malignant tumor known as Kaposi's sarcoma. The tumor is present in almost half of the homosexual AIDS patients, but is rare in heterosexuals with AIDS.

Many researchers think the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) is the cause of AIDS, but it is not the cause of Kaposi's sarcoma, according to leading medical researchers. The HIV virus has been found in many parts of the body, but never in the Kaposi's sarcoma tumor.

We obtained a medical research contract from the Defense Department that shows the department is trying to find out where Kaposi's sarcoma comes from.

CHARLEY REESE

Racism's racism regardless who's the culprit

The following is a news release in which I have substituted only one word. I'll tell you which one later.

Charley Reese

"The National Conference of White Mayors will hold its annual convention in Philadelphia instead of Charlotte because Charlotte's voters ousted in November the city's white mayor. The conference had been set for Charlotte, but convention members voted in 1987 to hold annual meetings only in cities with white mayors."

Does that not strike you as a racist organization with a policy based on race? It does me. Of course the word I substituted was white for black. The story is about the National Conference of Black Mayors which really did cancel its Charlotte meeting because a black mayor was defeated and really does have a policy of meeting only in cities where there are black mayors.

There is, of course, a Black Caucus in Congress but no White Caucus. There is a Black Journalists Association but no White Journalist Association. The Black Journalists had a bitter debate in Atlanta after a Washington Post journalist, who happens to be black, reported Jesse Jackson's racist reference to Jews as Hymies. Many castigated the Post reporter, accusing him of being disloyal to blacks.

My point is simply this: 24 years after the passage of the 1964 Civil Rights Act which clearly envisioned a society in which race was not to be a factor, both black and white Americans are a long way from having answered all the questions raised by a multi-racial society.

More importantly, it is clear that blacks are more race-conscious than whites. There is nowhere in the United States even a single reputable voice advocating any kind of organization or position based solely on white skin. Even the idea of such a group or organization strikes everyone but a few isolated bigots as absurd.

Yet black organizations abound and blacks, as the above example indicates, continue to make decisions based purely and solely on race. I say this not in any judgmental way but simply as a point of information. Black politicians make racist remarks which would not be tolerated by white politicians.

It is inconceivable that a white presidential candidate in 1984 could have referred to Jews as Hymies and New York City as Hymietown and still be a candidate in 1988. It is inconceivable that a white presidential candidate could closely associate himself with a fanatic and racist fringe group, as Jackson has, and still be a candidate. The news media would destroy such a candidate simply by badgering him at every opportunity. Jackson, however, has been given a free pass.

If racism is bad, and I think it is, then all racism is bad. The present double standard in which white racists are condemned but black racists are not will lead to nothing but trouble down the road if allowed to continue.

There are several reasons for the double standard, none of them admirable. One is white paternalism, a form of racism itself. White paternalism holds that blacks really are inferior and that allowances have to be made for that. You see it, for example, in the attitude that says if a white South African abuses a black, that's a cause for outrage but if a black African abuses a black African, then that's nothing to get excited about. You see it in lowered entrance requirements. It pretends to be benign but is nevertheless racist. You might call it the plantation mentality.

Others, both black and white, simply exploit the race issue for the money or the votes in it. Business, which would marry the devil's sister to avoid any trouble that might cost it money, easily succumbs to blackmail on the issue.

It's wrong. To paraphrase Gertrude Stein, racism is racism is racism.

Conservative 'void' threatening Republicans

MANCHESTER, N.H. — An angered Sen. Robert J. Dole may think campaign pacifism by his managers snatched defeat from the jaws of victory here, but in fact he failed because he did not fill the conservative void.

Had Dole done so, he would be traveling a clear highway to the Republican nomination. Instead, he faces Bush in the Super Tuesday South primaries as an underdog with his message and his strategy no clearer than it has been any time the past two years.

But in his comeback here, Bush hardly pinned down the Right. With one, two or even three additional conservative candidates still in the race, the vice president's organizational and financial muscle no more guarantees victory in the South March 8 than it did here. The continuing conservative void, besides bringing uncertainty, threatens ultimate defeat for the GOP.

Superficially, Bush's campaign-saving victory here was a triumph of organization and tactics. On Friday morning just four days before the polls opened, the vice president was a loser. It was then that campaign manager Lee Atwater and media consultant Roger Ailes decided on a negative commercial branding Dole as a straddler and a taxer.

Rowland Evans
and Robert Novak

While Bush spread-eagled Boston television, Dole was silent. He had no time to prepare commercials, even to say that all of Dole's tax increasing bills had been supported as administration measures by the vice president. A justifiably uneasy Dole followed advice not to reinforce his reputation for meanness by responding to Bush's attacks.

But tactical efficiency will not cure Dole's problem. The failure to send the voters of New Hampshire a message that would confirm his triumph reflected his inability to sound a coherent message over the past year. Symbolic was Dole's inability in the last debate here to respond to Pierre du Pont's challenge that he take the no-tax-hike pledge.

The result on Tuesday was that here, as in Iowa, Dole captured the most liberal, anti-Reagan precincts even after consciously wooing the Reaganite vote. His base was the upscale, exurban areas near the Massachusetts state line that had voted for George Bush and Howard Baker in 1980. Had Dole expanded beyond this base into conservative backwoods Republicans, he would today be hailed as the prospective nominee.

Nor did Bush capture enough of the conservatives to transform a heroic comeback into a historic landslide. In the same debate where Dole could not take the anti-tax pledge, Bush — to the anguish of his staff — mouthed the old anti-Vietnam slogan of "Give peace a chance" and was rebuked by Rep. Jack Kemp.

Kemp carried the hardcore rural right-wing vote, but could not parlay it into a threat to the leaders by combining it with Manchester's blue-collar conservatives. They were captured by du Pont's endorsement from The Manchester Union Leader.

The most spectacular failure to fill the conservative void was Pat Robertson's. The momentum from his organizational efficiency in Iowa proved illusory. Here as elsewhere, he could not break into non-evangelical conservatives or even monopolize all the evangelicals.

On the contrary, New Hampshire proved a long step backward for Robertson on the road to political respectability. Besides confusing what his staff had been told about missiles in Cuba, and turning it into a self-damaging false alarm, he was giving interviews here suggesting that Social Security is a violation of the Fifth Commandment.

Robertson's Southern strategy in South Carolina March 5 and Super Tuesday three days later is to bring disaffected Democrats into the Republican primary and swamp the tiny base of the party's Southern regulars loyal to Bush. But he has yet to demonstrate broad appeal. As for Kemp's conservative positions, they are mostly unassailable, but he has not yet mobilized the Right — anywhere — as time and money run out. Nor has Dole's insistence that the budget deficit is his issue to stir up conservatives proved valid.

If the conservative void stays unfilled, George Bush may limp through the nomination process all the way to New Orleans with victories built, much as New Hampshire's, on tactics and organization. Whether he then would be prepared for the general election is another matter.

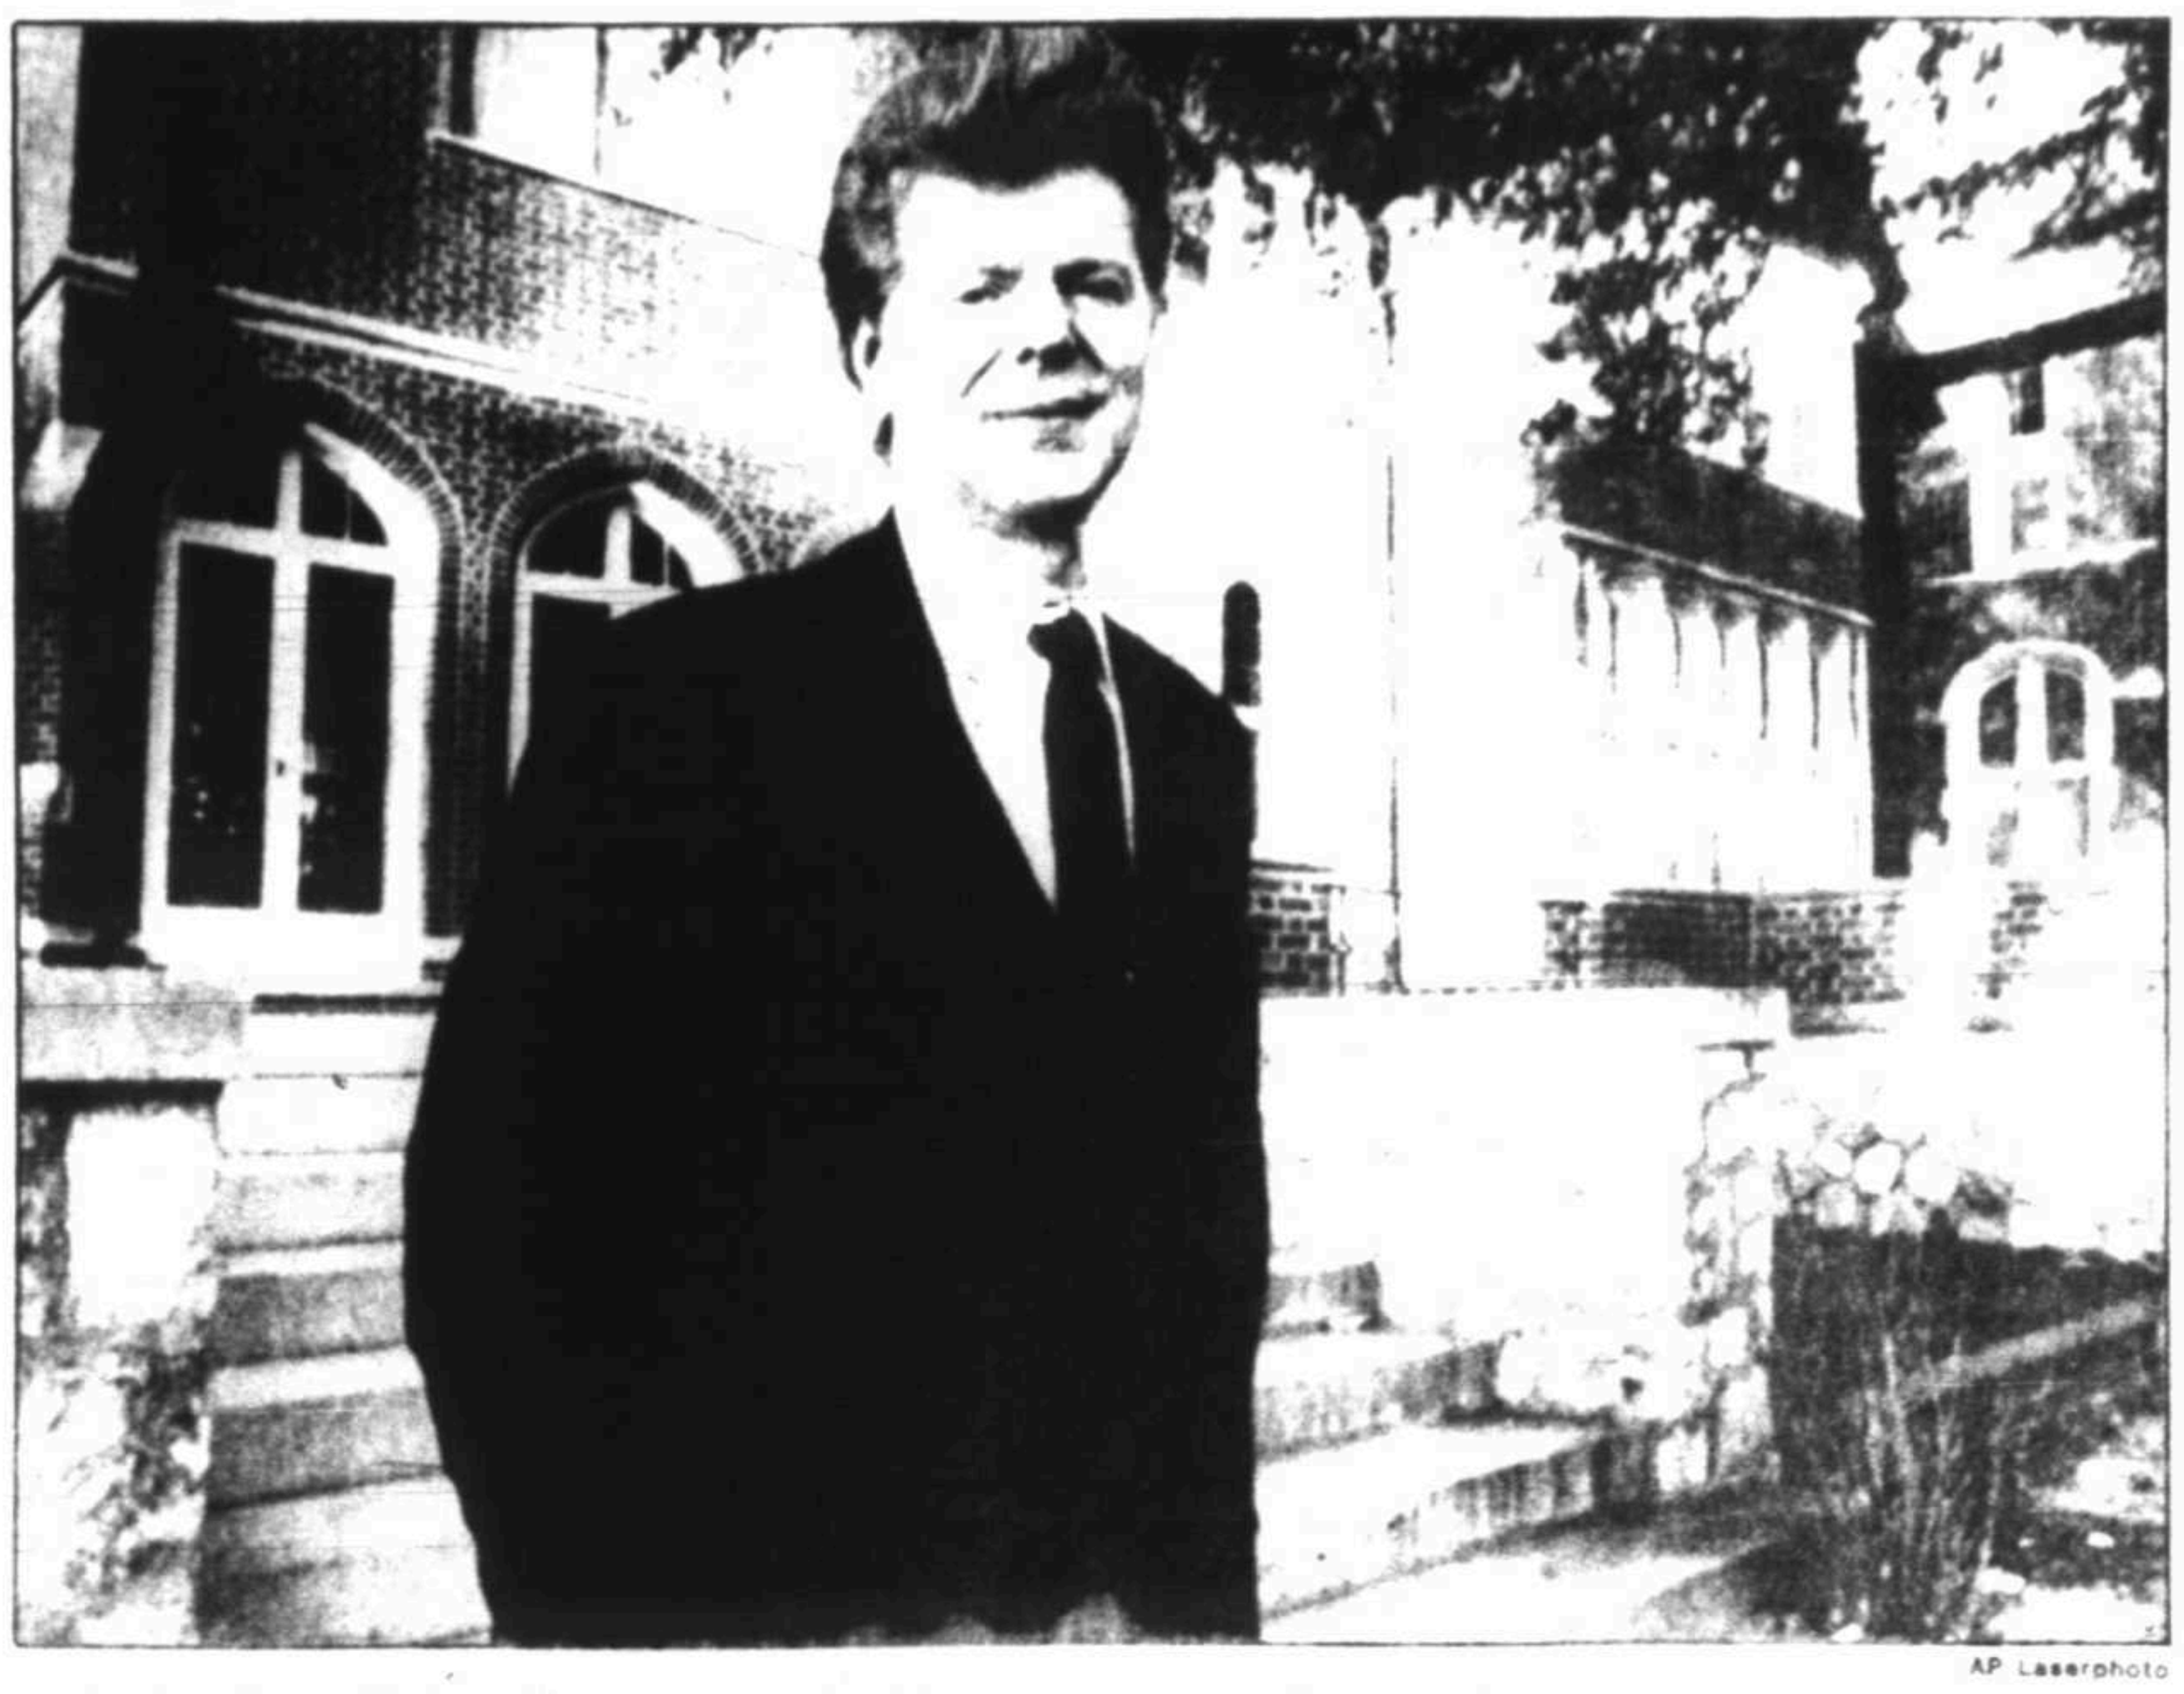
Van Cliburn steps back into spotlight



AP Laserphoto

Pianist Van Cluburn poses outside his Fort Worth home recently. Cliburn is slowly returning to the public spotlight after breaking a long, self-imposed silence in December with a performance at the White House during President Reagan's summit meeting with Soviet leader Gorbachev.

FORT WORTH (AP) — The American public next month will get its first chance in 10 years to see and hear pianist Van Cliburn, who says he stopped playing in 1978 because he needed a short rest.

Cliburn broke his long, self-imposed silence with a performance at the White House during a summit meeting in December, when Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev was visiting.

"I suppose I was waiting for the right moment to come along. The White House was it. This was something I couldn't have refused even if I had wanted to," Cliburn told the Dallas Morning News.

Since the performance, there has been a steady flow of offers for Cliburn, who said he would perform in Texas next season.

So far he has accepted only one offer — conductor Zubin Mehta's invitation to accompany the New York Philharmonic on its first tour of the Soviet Union in 15 years.

"I'm trying not to get too excited about it, but of course I am. I know I'm going to program the Tchaikovsky Concerto. I told Zubin I don't see how I could go back to Russia and not play it. What else I'll play, I haven't decided, because I'm not certain how many times I'll have to play on the tour."

Cliburn will appear as soloist with the orchestra in concerts in Leningrad and Moscow during May and June, 30 years after he won the Tchaikovsky International Competition.

At that time, the 24-year-old Cliburn was more than a pianist who had won a contest. The lanky Texan trumped the Soviets just months after they had trounced Americans with the launching of Sputnik, the first spacecraft.

In the years following his Moscow triumph, Cliburn established himself, playing hundreds of concerts each season. His recording of the Tchaikovsky Concerto No. 1 was the first classical LP to sell more than a million copies.

Last month, Cliburn joined a stellar group of performers who appeared before the Reagans at the inauguration of the Bob Hope Cultural Center in Palm Springs. The evening was videotaped by NBC and will be broadcast March 5.

His performance during President Reagan's meeting with Gorbachev concluded with the Soviet leader singing along as Cliburn played "Moscow Nights."

At his White House performance, Cliburn chose music of Brahms, Rachmaninov, Liszt and Debussy.

"I presumed there would be no time for encores. So when I finished, I bowed and was ready to go when the president got up and made some remarks. I responded to them, and little by little things got to be more relaxed and then downright folksy.

Beaumont murder shocks townspeople

PORT ARTHUR (AP) — Officials said little information will be released into the weekend murder of a popular Beaumont woman until after an autopsy report is completed, probably on Tuesday.

Susan Arnim, 41, was found dead in her home about 11:30 a.m. Saturday with one end of a 30- to 40-foot nylon rope tied around her neck. A 35-year-old Port Arthur man, identified as Marvin Edward Larry, was arrested about midnight Saturday in connection with the death.

Sgt. Charles Tyler said Larry was arrested by Beaumont Police at the Port Arthur Police Department at 12:05 a.m. Sunday. Larry was arraigned on murder charges by Justice of the Peace John Borne, who set bond at $100,000. Larry remained in the Jefferson County Jail on Sunday.

Officials said they believe Ms. Arnim died sometime in the early hours of Saturday morning.

Larry Sims, a close friend and neighbor of the victim, was telephoning friends to tell them of Ms. Arnim's death. He said Ms. Arnim was a bright, outgoing woman who probably knew half of the residents of Beaumont by their first name.

A senior engineer assistant for Gulf States Utilities Co., Ms. Arnim worked on the company's rate increase cases.

She also was active in the community organizations. She was a member of the Beaumont Community Players, active in the Boy Scouts and supporter of the American Red Cross, Sims said.

A single mother since a divorce 12 years ago, her 17-year-old son Aaron was her first love, Sims said, and being outdoors was a close second.

"She hated having a job in a building and wanted to spend every possible moment with her son outside," Sims told the Beaumont Enterprise.

James Blain, another longtime friend, said, "That was the most unusual thing about finding her home this morning. It was a gorgeous day. If she wasn't working, she was expected to be outdoors."

Sims said Ms. Arnim was just as comfortable changing the oil in her car as doing the town in a formal evening gown. She was proud of once serving in the mechanics pit during a "bomber car" race in Houston, he said.

She was an avid white water canoeist. A canoe instructor for the Red Cross and the Big Thicket Voyagers Club, Ms. Arnim last went canoeing two weeks ago at Village Creek. The fact that it was snowing that day did not stop her, Sims said.

Pointing to a photograph of Ms. Arnim christening her canoe "Tranquility" by pouring champagne over the vessel's bottom, Sims said, "That is the real Susan."

Black officers face dilemma

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Houston Police Chief Lee P. Brown says black police officers have to balance loyalty to their race with loyalty to the police force.

"Black police officers have a dual existence," Brown said Sunday at a St. Paul United Methodist Church luncheon honoring the San Antonio Black Police Officers Coalition.

He said black officers may be viewed with suspicion by other blacks who see police as instruments of repression. But if black officers try to address those concerns, their non-black colleagues may accuse them of disloyalty, Brown said.

"It's a unique dilemma for those of us who are black and in blue," he said.

To help ease racial problems, police departments must reflect the racial composition of the communities they serve, Brown said.

Safety in air travel is an important consideration for those who oversee air flights. Midland International Airport Air Traffic Manager Dave Gibson explained that the men and women who work in this profession are dedicated people performing a sometimes stressful job.

Locally, there are 12 fully-rated air controllers, with another 13 controllers who work in some phase of training to become air controllers. These persons deal with an air space up to 10,000 feet and 35 miles in radius from Midland International Airport.

On the average, they work with 270 separate instrument operations per day. Instrument operations include any flights entering, leaving, or traversing through the controlled space to which they are assigned.

Controllers work eight-hour shifts five days a week. Because traffic during the midnight to 6 a.m. time period is small, controllers are not on duty at that time.

Operations seem to run smoothly as one watches air controllers working.

Four youths suspected of stealing beer

From Staff Reports

Four youths are in custody awaiting charges following their arrest Saturday and the confiscation of dozens of cases of beer which had been reported stolen Friday from a local beer distributor.

The youths, three 17-year-old men and an 18-year-old man, were arrested Saturday at 4402 Mercedes Dr., after officers obtained a warrant to search the residence. At the home, they found 67 cases of beer valued at $770, and about 30 juveniles who were not taken into custody.

The discovery followed the burglary Friday of an 18-wheeler parked at the local Miller Beer distributor, West Texas Sales Company, 2000 Market St. Sometime between 7:45 p.m. Thursday and 6:30 a.m. Friday, someone broke the lock off of the vehicle and stole 136 cases of beer valued at more than $1,540.

Charges of burglary of a vehicle are expected to be filed, reports said.

Poll shows vice president's Texas hold strengthening

Associated Press

Vice President George Bush holds a strong lead in Texas following the New Hampshire primary, while Michael Dukakis leads a volatile Democratic race, according to a new poll.

The poll, co-sponsored by the Houston Chronicle and the Dallas Morning News, was the subject Sunday of copyright stories in both newspapers. The poll was intended as a gauge of voter sentiments following the nation's first primary in New Hampshire on Feb. 16.

The poll, directed by University of Houston political scientist Richard Murray, shows the March 8 Texas Democratic primary could prove to be a tight race between Massachusetts Gov. Dukakis, Missouri Rep. Richard Gephardt, the Rev. Jesse Jackson and Sen. Albert Gore of Tennessee.

"Under certain circumstances, any of these four candidates could win," said Murray. The poll indicated Colorado Sen. Gary Hart and Illinois Sen. Paul Simon were farther back in the pack.

On the Republican side, the poll indicated the Republican race to be much more settled, with Bush's victory in New Hampshire consolidating his position in Texas and adding to sentiments that he is electable, Murray said.

"The only real question is whether Bush can get all 111 delegates (in Texas)," said Murray.

In the poll, 736 voters were interviewed Feb. 17-18. The interviewees were among 1,020 people first queried for an earlier poll Jan. 3-12 about their preferences in the presidential nominations races.

The latest poll had a margin of error of plus or minus 4 percentage points.

Dukakis was the preferred candidate among 27 percent of Democratic voters. Twenty-one percent said they were unsure, 16 percent favored Jesse Jackson, 15 percent favored Gephardt, 11 percent favored Gore, with seven percent choosing Hart and two percent favoring Simon.

Among Republicans, 66 percent favored Bush, 12 percent favored Kansas Sen. Bob Dole, 11 percent favored Pat Robertson, and 10 percent were unsure.

Child in satisfactory condition

From Staff Reports

A three-year-old boy was injured Sunday afternoon when he was a struck by a car which passed near the park where the child was playing, police said.

Erbey Flores Urias, Route 13, Box 392, was listed in satisfactory condition this morning at Midland Memorial Hospital with injuries suffered in the 5 p.m. accident, hospital spokeswoman Sue Ristom said.

The child was playing in a playground near the intersection of Gist Avenue and Atlanta Street, when he wandered toward the intersection and stepped into the street, police said. He was struck by a car traveling eastbound on Gist, driven by 35-year-old Heustin Salinas Gonzalez, 1619 S. Terrell St., reports said.

Witnesses said Gonzalez' car was traveling slowly and could not have avoided the child, police said.

School named for shuttle commander Dick Scobee

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The widow of Challenger commander Dick Scobee told the 450 students of the school named after him that he would have been honored and humbled by the honor.

June Scobee flew in from Washington, D.C., to help officially open Scobee Elementary School on Sunday in the school's packed cafeteria. A graduate of San Antonio Harlandale High School, Mrs. Scobee met her husband when he was stationed in San Antonio with the Air Force.

"I think the future's in good hands with children like these," June Scobee said in between signing autographs for the students.

"I think Dick would be honored and humbled," she said. "He would say the children are the true heroes."

She was joined at the dedication by her husband's parents, who arrived from California.

During the ceremony, Mrs. Scobee offered the school's 450 students a challenge: "He always committed himself to get a job done. I challenge you to do the same."

After her speech, Raul Fernandez, president of the Northside Independent School District, officially dedicated the $3.5 million, 75,000-square-foot school.

The school opened in September for students in kindergarten through fifth grade.

Mrs. Scobee also offered a call for funds for enlargement of the Challenger Center for Space Education, which she serves as chairman. The center is a hands-on non-profit replica of a space station for children.

Based in Washington, the $30 million project is to have a satellite in Houston and eventual extensions in San Antonio.

"We have already raised $3 million," Mrs. Scobee said.

Monies for the project originally were sent by the public after the shuttle explosion.

"Dick Scobee showed us courage true and several more helped, too.

"Example set, the challenge met, with awesome loyalty.

"Remembered heroes set our course like them we want to be," the children sang.

Situated on 10 acres of land, the school is the nation's first to be named after the late astronaut. His old elementary school in his hometown of Auburn, Wash., was renamed in his honor following the accident.

A time capsule was scheduled to be sealed and buried at the school during a 2 p.m. ceremony today. The capsule will include a letter written by every student at the school.

Former NAACP president seeking U.S. House seat

DALLAS (AP) — The former president of the NAACP Dallas chapter, who resigned amid accusations of financial improprieties and policy violations, said he would run for the U.S. House of Representatives.

Ted Watkins, 36, admitted he failed to follow some of the civil rights organization's guidelines and pay bills but planned to continue volunteer work with the group, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Watkins submitted his resignation Friday and it was unanimously accepted by the board of directors of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"I resigned because I wanted to put the matters of the branch first — I was afraid that my opposition would put petty differences before the NAACP," said Watkins. "But I let everyone know that although I may not be president anymore, I'm always with them in the fight."

Some members of the organization had alleged Watkins, an accountant, failed to pay creditors, defaulted on a $10,000 loan used to pay for the 1985 national convention in Dallas and avoided NAACP procedures when soliciting donations.

"Sure, we didn't pay some of the bills but that's not all my fault — the board is responsible as well," Watkins said. "If you don't have the money, you don't have the money.

"As for defaulting on the loan, we never did," he said. "We always had collateral behind it."

Watkins was suspended, but he said the board found no basis for continuing the suspension. His resignation was accepted on the basis he not hold any elected position in the organization for seven years.

In 1986, Watkins ran unsuccessfully for the state legislature. He said he already has begun campaigning for 1990 election to a seat in the U.S. Congress.

Carthage authorities seize 163 pounds of cocaine

CARTHAGE (AP) — Three men were arrested and 163 pounds of cocaine worth an estimated $8 million was seized after the driver of a van agreed to a search of the vehicle, police said.

Bond for the suspects, believed to be brothers, was scheduled to be set today, said Panola County sheriff's dispatcher Joy Waldrop. The men were arrested Sunday after a traffic stop about two miles north of Carthage, and were held in the Panola County Jail.

Department of Public Safety spokesman David Wells in Austin said Alfredo Lopez, 32, and Alejandro Lopez, 25, both of Chicago, and Juan Manuel Lopez Picon, 23, of Queens, N.Y., were charged with aggravated possession of narcotics.

Wells said DPS officer Barry Washington stopped a Ford van about 2 a.m. Sunday for two traffic violations — failure to signal and failure to stay in lane.

He said the driver, Alfredo Lopez, agreed to a search of the vehicle.

AIR

Besides scheduling traffic for landings and departures, controllers also work with other airports to move traffic safely through West Texas skies.

Information is quickly passed between the radar operation room located in the lower portion of the Midland International tower and those who stand watch up top.

Day-to-day operations vary because of scheduled commuter airline flights and other small aircraft that may be flying in and out.

Even though past years were hard on air traffic controllers because of a strike at the beginning of President Ronald Reagan's term in office, there are several stringent requirements that prospective controllers must meet before he becomes a fully-rated air controller.

First, the candidate must spend 12 weeks in Oklahoma City at the Federal Aviation Administration's academy. Then , a candidate will spend 18 months to two years at a field training facility such as the Midland airport. At any point during this time a person can pass or fail any phase of the training.

'The Orphanage' shop all dolled up

By JOEL WILLIAMS

BISHOP (AP) — Nicki Bryan stopped playing with dolls years ago, and started working with them.

It can be an eerie experience walking into her store, The Orphanage, filled with merchandise that stares back. The shop features dolls, doll-related accessories, and little else.

Mrs. Bryan, 39, operates out of a drafty former train depot at the intersection of U.S. 77 and Farm Road 70 in Nueces County just north of Bishop. There she has thousands of little and not-so-little human figures of bisque, rubber, wood or plastic, lined up in display cases or crowded onto shelves and tables. The merchandise ranges from brand-new collectibles to century-old relics.

Her business, at its present location for five years, caters to the conventional children's population, as well as acquisitive adults who are accumulating dolls in ever-increasing numbers.

Yet a shopper won't find some of the pedestrian, well known varieties.

"It's such a strange thing," Mrs. Bryan said, before stopping to sell a sad-faced clown to a woman who said it was for a hospitalized daughter. "People buy dolls for strange reasons."

Sometimes, she said, it is to replace something they had as a child, while others use them to decorate their homes.

"A lot of them (adults) play with them," she added.

Mrs. Bryan said she had become a doll collector after she had gone away to college and found out her mother had given away all of her dolls.

"I just started looking for the dolls I had," she said. "You start looking for something like that and you get really involved."

"Even their furniture is expensive," she said, pointing out one 40-year-old doll bed listed in a collectors' catalog for $95.

One collector bought a doll for $42,000 at an auction last year, she said. But, she notes, collectors still find bargains all the time at garage sales. A woman who had bought a wooden doll at a garage sale took it to The Orphanage marveling at how expensive it was for $10, Mrs Bryan said. It turned out to be a turn-of-the-century Schoenhut valued at $400.

Another collector brought in a wooden Pinocchio doll from the 1940s, that cost $25 at a garage sale, but had a collectors' price of $250.

Yet she doesn't recommend buying dolls just for an investment that may end up selling for a loss.

"People that buy dolls for enjoyment will come out better in the long run," she said, "because they like what they've got and they'll keep it."

Names for the old dolls include the Dy-Dee Baby from the 1940s and 1950s, Armand Marseilles dolls of bisque and leather from the turn of the century, Madame Alexander from later decades and the Ginny dolls from the 1940s.

Some of the Ginnys bring up to $1,000, while a hard-plastic Davy Crockett by Alexander could be worth $500.

In a doll hospital in the back, she does repairs and keeps shelves spilling over with body parts that may come in handy someday. Patients include babies that need their faces repainted, and drink-and-wet dolls damaged after their inner rubber tubes deteriorated.

"You get a lot of grandmothers who want to buy a first doll, a really nice doll for their granddaughters, or they're starting a collection for them," said Mrs. Bryan.

But, she added, increasing numbers of men and younger women are beginning to share the same obsession with dolls in a growing network. Sometimes collectors call from thousands of miles away looking for a particular model.

"If you go to a doll show now, instead of it being 90 percent ladies over 60, now it's 40 percent ladies over 60," she said. "There are a lot of children with very expensive doll collections."

Mrs. Bryan, who keeps a Christmas tree up all year, said she finds the Cabbage Patch dolls unbearably ugly, but credits them with having a positive effect by making dolls more acceptable for boys and teen-agers.

Mrs. Bryan estimates she owns about 6,000 dolls, with very few duplicates. She says her husband spends as little time as possible at The Orphanage, and although her two daughters both like dolls, one would rather play with teddy bears.

Older families rule Washington social life

Associated Press

Real Washington society has little to do with transient politicians, but is ruled by the cave dwellers, an elite group whose families have lived there since it was a cow pasture.

Washington society has always placed a higher value on correct form and good manners than on political clout, according to an article in the current issue of Town & Country, and its members' lives are reminiscent of the small southern town Washington once was.

There have been invasions. In the late 19th century, wealthy industrialists from all over the country built palatial mansions in Washington, hoping the city would prove more socially open than Boston or Philadelphia.

Some of the newcomers, such as the McCormicks of Chicago and the Hearsts of California, were accepted. Others, like Perry Belmont of New York — who had married a divorcee — faced a long social noviate.

It was during Franklin Delano Roosevelt's New Deal that political leaders first took over the social spotlight. A social chasm, never discussed but universally recognized, opened between the cave dwellers and the "politicals."

From the 1930s to the 1960s, cave dweller society was ruled by the Queen Bees — Mrs. Bacon, Mrs. Beale and Mrs. Bliss.

It was said that on arrival one presented one's credentials first to Mrs. Bliss and then to the State Department.

Cave dwellers did not take kindly to the Kennedys, Letitia Baldridge, Jacqueline Kennedy's social secretary, recalled:

"You have to remember the Kennedys were the first young, entertaining couple in the White House since James and Dolley Madison. Everything they did was copied. Frankly, the cave dwellers were constantly griping because they weren't being asked to the parties."

Cave dwellers once found it was "unspeakably vulgar" to invite people to a party and ask them for money, but they have since relented and many Washington institutions exist thanks to their fund-raising and largesse, including the Kennedy Center, the National Symphony Orchestra and the Phillips Collection.

Gilbert M. Grosvenor, great-grandson of Alexander Graham Bell, is the fifth generation of his family to serve as president of the National Geographic Society, founded by his great-great-grandfather.

A veteran "extra man" described a typical party, whose ingredients have changed little in 50 years, this way:

"Guests always arrive promptly by 8 o'clock and there is always one man invited for each woman.

"Cocktails last for precisely 45 minutes and then dinner is announced. Usually 24 or 32 guests are treated to animated conversation and simple, but excellent, food served on splendid china. Men no longer retire for cigars and brandy as they used to, and everyone leaves by 11 o'clock. Of course, black tie is worn."

Gentlemen lunch at the Metropolitan Club; their wives gather at the Sulgrave Club, named for Sulgrave Manor, the George Washington family's ancestral estate in England.

Cave dwellers love their city. Ella Burling told Elizabeth L.F. Locke in Town & Country, "People say that Washington is a dowdy city. Well, it is and it doesn't bother us a bit." Huntington Block, noting the city's combination of fascinating people and charming village life, said, "Washington, for me, is the most supremely livable city in the country."

Items with history bought by enthusiastic collectors

Associated Press

Collectors are grabbing anything with a history these days. Never have there been so many events at which baseball cards, Bugattis and Bierdermeier furniture change hands.

Thousands of antiques shows, auctions, swap meets, flea markets, collecting societies and tag sales have sprung up, according to an article in a recent issue of House Beautiful, and they are attracting record numbers of browsers.

Many of the browsers turn into buyers who pay anything from two-to eight-figure prices.

The headlines focus on the big auctions in New York, London and Geneva, at which celebrities and dealers vie for the Duchess of Windsor's jewels, Vincent van Gogh paintings, a Gutenberg Bible and Versailles-quality furniture.

But the real proof of the collecting boom is the enrichment of the home. Walls are hung with folk portraits and Ansel Adams photographs, sideboards display blue-and-white Staffordshire teapots and pewter platters. American Indian blankets — or their mass-produced interpretations — appear as sofa covers.

Toys and jewelry top the list and during the last year toys and playthings have been sold for remarkable prices in shops and at auctions, especially in London.

A turn-of-the-century German teddy bear was sold at Sotheby's in London for $14,784, and two different late 17th century English wood and cloth dolls with painted moon faces brought even more. At Phillips one was sold for $43,560 and at Sotheby's another brought $101,863.

The big spending on art and antiques in 1986 and 1987 has its roots in a combination of the collecting urge and increased disposable income, not as a hedge against inflation, in the view of Lawrence Kudlow, chief economist at Bear Stearns & Co.

"In the '70s you would have blamed this on inflation, saying people are buying art as a hedge," Kudlow said. "In the '80s we haven't had any real inflation. I think you have to say it is all due to the remarkable creation of new wealth."

TCU professor rewrites Mother Goose rhymes

FORT WORTH (AP) — The tales of Mother Goose have lulled generations of tiny tots to sleep and brought smiles to their parents.

But Professor Barry Perlmutter thinks the lessons in some of the stories are a little bit too harsh — such as mice getting their tails chopped off and the little old lady who lives in the shoe beating her children and the baby falling out of the tree, cradle and all.

Perlmutter, who is a child psychologist and an associate family studies professor at Texas Christian University, has spent the last four years policing all the Mother Goose anthologies he could get his hands on.

"Jack and Jill went up the hill
To fetch a pail of water
Jack fell down and broke his crown
And Jill came tumbling after."

"Jack and Jill went up the hill
They ran and played for hours.
And when they tired they sat and talked,
And picked and smelled the flowers."

Perlmutter, 36, has his own book, titled "No More Nightmares in the Nursery: A Gentler Mother Goose." Or, it will be a book, if a publisher likes the 52 nursery rhymes that Perlmutter has rewritten so that nobody gets anything chopped off — even when the characters still eat everything in sight and don't pay back the money they owe.

WHAT WOULD make somebody do such a thing? Well, Perlmutter says he got the idea about four years ago when his daughter, Jennifer, who was only 2 then, began screaming in the middle of the night. Her father and mother had sung her to sleep with "Rock a Bye Baby." They came running to see what was the matter.

"She wanted to know what happened to the baby when it fell," Perlmutter recalls. "Was he hurt? Was he killed?"

Well, that child was so upset her father sat right down and changed the whole rhyme. Of course, it's the first one in his book.

"Rock a bye baby
Here in my chair.
You know that I love you
And I'll always care.
Mommy wants you to sleep
And Daddy does, too
So let's close our eyes now
It's nap time for you."

Well, that was nice. But that just got the professor started. And when other parents told him their kids were having problems with other bedtime tales, he scoured the libraries and looked up all the Mother Goose rhymes he could.

Perlmutter came up with 52 rhymes he found objectionable. That's 52 out of 400 or 500 in Mother Goose.

"Most of Mother Goose is good," he says. "There's just an element of Mother Goose that is inappropriate."

In Perlmutter's revisions, Taffy the thief becomes "Taffy my friend" and the stingy woman from Exeter becomes "the gracious hostess of Exeter."

In his introduction, he tells parents has tried to keep as close to the original as possible and keep the cadence the same, so the rhymes can still be sung.

PERLMUTTER IS not alone in his quest, according to Erin Gatherid, editor for young picture books at Bantam Books in New York. She says publishers receive — and publish — revisions and spinoffs on the classics "all the time."

"Of course, not everybody goes about it to take away violence, or to take away something that is no longer acceptable — bigotry or prejudice or racism," she said.

Apparently, the rhymes that have been perfectly fine for a few centuries as bedtime stories were never meant for children, according to Perlmutter.

Most of the tales are satire or spoofs on royalty and society, or morality rhymes or warnings to parents, he says. They were passed along in the oral tradition and just happened to wind up being collected as Mother Goose.

But, Perlmutter said, kids don't think like little adults and consider the happy outcome of a story. They fix on images, one at a time. And sometimes it happens to be the killer snail in Four and Twenty Tailors.

"The purpose (of nursery rhymes) is not to teach him to read or to know about the world, just to make him feel snug and comfortable with you."

A few more of Perlmutter's rewrites:

THREE BLIND MICE

Three blind mice,
Three blind mice,
See how they run!
See how they run!
They all ran after the farmer's wife.

Revised:

Three blind mice.

They all ran after the piece of cheese.
I gave it to them when they asked me please.
They ate it out by the apple trees.
Those three blind mice.

Cartoonist gives look at life

By JIMMY THORNTON
Copley News Service

William O'Brian said he is a serious artist who just happened to draw hundreds of cartoons for The New Yorker during his lifelong career of cartooning and book illustrating.

He said that while most people may have looked at his gags for 35 years in the literary magazine and gotten a chuckle or two, quite often the human condition behind the humorous drawings wasn't funny at all.

In fact, in some instances, it was sad.

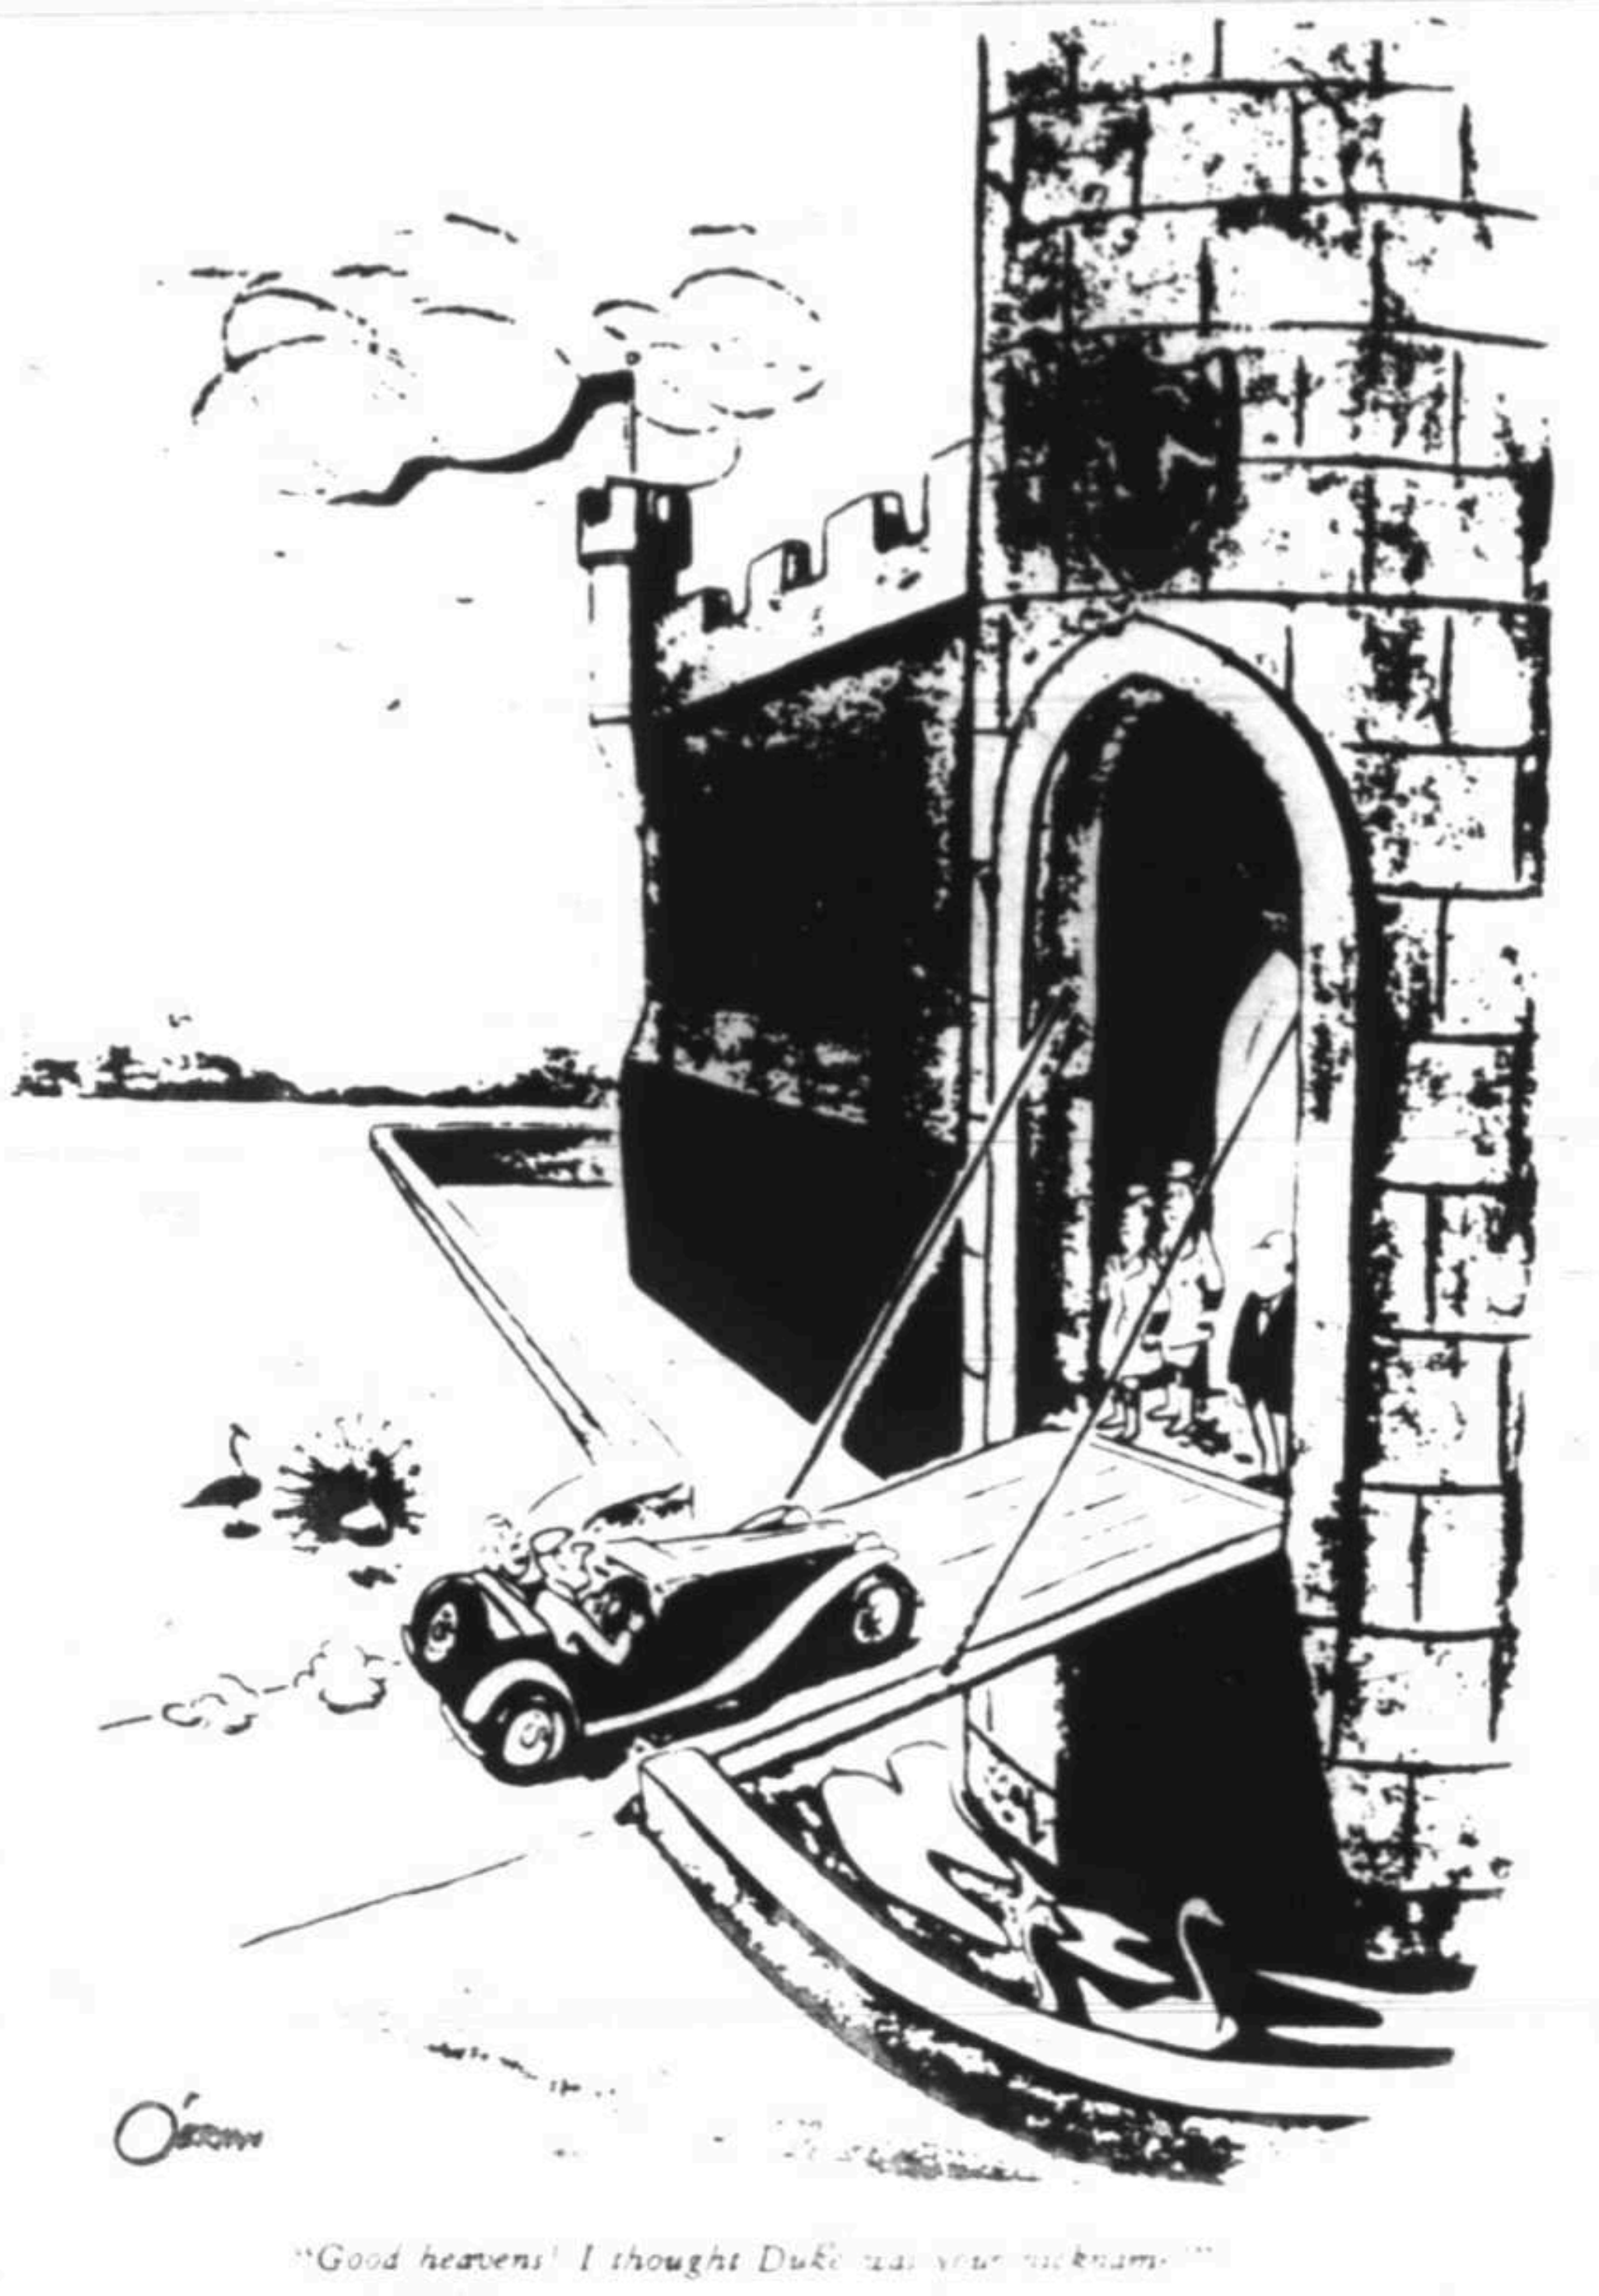
O'Brian, 78, a native New Yorker who grew up in Manhattan and lived most of his life in the Big Apple, today is a resident in a nursing home in La Jolla, Calif.

He has been retired for the past 10 years. He moved to California nearly two years ago after the death of his wife to live near his daughter.

On a sunbathed day recently, he reflected on the serious side of his funny craft.

"I originally wanted to become a sculptor," he said, explaining his decision as a teen-ager to study at the Art Students League in New York.

"But I discovered that sculptors are about as far down on the economic ladder as you can get. They were having to bum cigarettes from poets! And you can't get much below that."



"Good heavens! I thought Duke was your nickname!"

CNS Graphic

O'BRIAN DIDN'T crack a smile, which has been his style over the years. It probably drove some editors and writers to distraction when he mingled among New York's literati over cocktails.

"I have a long horse face and I look serious," he said. However, he said, even when he's joshing, especially in pen and ink, he's quite serious; so if people think he's serious, he probably is.

For example, he was dead serious about wanting to earn a living with his art.

"A good cartoon has something more than just a gag, or it should," he said. "It should make some sort of serious statement on the human condition or human nature."

His daughter compiled two large scrapbooks of his work. He keeps them on a shelf in his room.

One cartoon depicts a New York bum consoling another bum, and he is saying:

"Just because he didn't give you a dime doesn't mean he found you unlovable."

O'Brian looked at the cartoon, then said, "I suppose even a bum has some sort of pride in his condition."

He looked at another cartoon showing a small boy beaming among several snowmen he has built. His father, obviously a well-heeled New York executive, appears perplexed. Each snowman has a tiny mustache exactly like his own.

O'Brian said the cartoon no doubt would bring a smile; however, after studying it a moment, he said, "You might consider it sad."

O'Brian was a free-lance cartoonist; however, he was under contract with The New Yorker to give the magazine first choice.

HE DREW most of his cartoons in his Manhattan apartment's studio, making rough sketches on stacks of typewriter paper. He submitted his roughs to an editorial board, where the sketches were either accepted as drawn, accepted with changes to come or rejected. He sold many of the rejects to other magazines, including The Saturday Evening Post, Collier's and Playboy.

He said artists were paid by the number of square inches their work got in The New Yorker.

"The point is to try to get as much space as you can," he said.

For example, he recalled that one full-page layout of whimsy earned him more than $1,000. He said the pay over the years was sufficient for a comfortable living.

O'Brian said one two-page layout in the magazine led to a book contract with Random House Publishing, which produced a book of his cartoons. He also drew illustrations for Random House, including some for children's books.

O'Brian said he would like for people to regard his work as sophisticated, showing a "wry sense of humor."

In one cartoon, he depicts the battle of the sexes by showing a man and a woman entering a tunnel of love in separate Civil War warships, the Union Monitor and the Confederate Merrimac.

Generally, O'Brian frowns on the use of four-letter words in humor, referring to modern movies in particular.

"I don't want to give any namby-pamby impression about strong language," he said. "It's all right if it isn't boring."

HE SAID too often he finds the foul language he hears "boring," and that is the worst you can say about humor.

He takes pride in the fact that his work has universal appeal. He has seen his cartoons reprinted in French, German and Italian.

He lamented the fact that few people recognize his name.

"I never have had what they talk about in politics as name recognition. People are always asking me, 'What's Charles Addams (known for his macabre cartoons) like?' Or 'What's Peter Arno (the late cartoonist) like?'

"I don't think anyone has ever been asked, 'What's O'Brian like?'"

But he said his career was satisfying anyway. He appreciated the fact his family shared his type of humor.

Even so, he has had self-doubts.

"I don't like the idea that I've been deluding myself for years that something is important and it turns out to be completely trivial. In a way, I had times when it seemed like a kind of ridiculous way for a grown man to spend his time.

"But I know that's not so."

He didn't crack a smile.

DEAR ABBY

Abby's faithfulness survey released

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR READERS: Well, I asked for it. Last June (1987) I ran the following item: "Readers, I need your cooperation for an important survey. Question: Have you ever cheated on your mate? How long have you been together? You need not sign your name, but please state your age, and indicate whether you are male or female. Please send a postcard or letter."

My office was promptly deluged with not only postcards, but letters — some very long ones — explaining why they cheated, or why they didn't. (Mostly why they did.)

Several readers asked me to define the word "cheated." One man wrote from Portland, Ore.: "Would you call it cheating if the wife said, 'I don't care what you do as long as you don't bother me'?"

Others acknowledged open marriages: "I go my way, he goes his — no questions asked — so since there is no cheating going on, are we eligible for this survey?"

Another free spirit put it more eloquently: "My wife and I are very much in love. We are also sophisticated, mature adults who realize that as we travel along life's way, eventually we will meet others to whom we will be physically attracted, so rather than suppress the normal desire for sexual variety, we choose to express our healthy feelings openly — without denial or deception. Would you call this 'cheating'?"

Good question. And the answer is YES. In my view, when two people wed, they vow to forsake all others until death do they part — not until they meet others to whom they are physically attracted. And to break that vow is indeed "cheating."

Ten weeks into the survey, Marcia Smith, a reporter for the Dallas Times Herald called. "How's your survey coming?" she asked. I told her that we still had unopened cartons of mail stacked to the ceiling, and it was still pouring in. Then I added that although we were not tabulating cities or states, thus far, Dallas respondents appeared to be confessing their infidelities in greater numbers than the national average.

Well, the following day, the Dallas Times Herald ran a Page One story headlined: "DALLAS A HOTBED OF SIN, ABBY'S SURVEY FINDS."

Naturally, Dallas faithfuls came forward in droves, demanding to be counted. Soon a bale of mail arrived from the Dallas area, tilting the figures heavily in favor of the faithfuls. (You might call this stacking the deck — easily accomplished with a well-organized letter writing campaign.) One Dallas couple wrote: "Have a heart, Abby. It's bad enough that oil took a nosedive — now this! We've been together for 26 years, have been 100 percent faithful to each other, and nobody in our circle of friends is fooling around either."

Many readers asked why I was taking this survey. A Wisconsin woman wrote: "What will it prove? If the majority of married men admit to cheating, it will only comfort the cheaters, and encourage the faithful ones to cheat, too."

Another suggested that my survey would be flawed because in our culture it enhances a man's macho image to claim numerous sexual conquests, and, as Victorian as it may seem, it is not culturally acceptable for females to admit to sexual promiscuity.

Some of the letters I received were so funny, poignant and fascinating that reading them slowed down the tabulations.

Many couples married 50 years and longer sent their wedding anniversary pictures, proudly asking to be counted among those who "never cheated, never wanted to, never needed to and never expected to."

The results of this survey astonished me. I learned that we are a far more moral society than most people thought we were. This postcard came from Downers Grove, Ill.: "I'm 82 years young, male, married 56 years and never cheated, but like Jimmy Carter, I confess to having lusted in my heart a time or two."

From Chicago: "I'm 52 and female. Married 15 years. Never considered cheating, although I might change my mind if Paul Newman asked me."

So, my friends, everyone is not cheating, and I have the figures to prove it.

Suggestions offered to brighten winter's gloom

Associated Press

The dark days of winter are a good time to light up your life with change.

Everybody gets into a rut sometimes but, according to an article in the current issue of Cosmopolitan, here are some of the things you can do to pull yourself out of the dumps.

■ Call that cute guy in accounting and ask if he might be able to answer some tricky questions for you. After he does, offer to buy him a drink.

■ Volunteer at a hospital, soup kitchen, literacy program or similar project. Actively doing something for others will refresh your sense of self.

■ End antique friendships that are no longer rewarding. Be kind when you run into old acquaintances, but don't make dates with them.

■ Design your ideal bedroom. If you can't afford to have it all at once, start working toward it slowly — paint, buy one throw pillow, whatever.

■ Follow at least one news story very closely. Better yet, commit yourself to reading one news source every day. Your broadened sense of the world will be invigorating.

■ Tell someone when you are angry. Tension-filled air is wearying.

■ Dye your hair.

■ If you live alone, go the ASPCA or other animal shelter and adopt a cat. Two cats are even better. Pets not only offer companionship, but they provide the experience of being responsible to another living being besides yourself.

■ Start keeping a daily journal. You'll get to know yourself better.

■ Unplug the television set for a week and pretend it is out of order. You'll find that without it you've got to come up with more exciting activities.

■ Buy a local guidebook and search out parks, restaurants and neighborhoods in your city that you've never visited.

■ Get tickets to something you've never sampled before — opera, ballet, Chinese acrobats, sitar music.

■ Answer 10 help-wanted ads, even if your current job isn't too bad. Who knows what a few interviews could lead to?

■ Send him flowers.

■ Clean out your closets and toss everything you haven't worn in the past two years.

■ Write a poem.

■ Try the newest breakfast cereal in the supermarket instead of your old favorite.

■ Break away a little from the same group of "safe" office buddies. You need not drop old friends, but resolve to make one new friend a month.

Chaps host South Plains

From Staff Reports

Midland College will be striving to make South Plains College its fifth straight victim at 7:30 today at the Chaparral Center.

The Plainsmen will be the Chaparrals' toughest test since the New Mexico Junior College game a couple of weeks ago....or, at least, as tough as it was supposed to be.

You'll remember MC played its best half of the season in racing to an 18-0 lead against the WJCAC's second place team with less than five minutes of play elapsed.

At half, MC led 47-20. Of course, the second half, it was close, but, by then, it was too late for the Thunderbirds.

Coach Reggie Franklin would like to see more of the same tonight, but South Plains isn't likely to cooperate.

Coach Bob Maberry's bunch is on a roll of its own, coming off a 76-70 win over Odessa College last week. That was the Wranglers' first loss of the year in WJCAC and sets up a championship showdown with NMJC at Hobbs, N.M., on Thursday, the final night of the season.

The Chaps take a 21-6 record into the game while SPC is 20-6. More importantly, MC is 10-4 and SPC is 10-3 in WJCAC, so this game is for third place and a favorable position in the Region V tournament.

SIX CHAPs will be making their last regular season appearance in the green and gold. Stewart Barnett, David Martin, Nate Curvey, Billy Ray Smith, Herman "Skeeter" Henry, and Clifton "Slam" Jones finish off two years as Chaparrals. They also are hoping that their post-season play carries them to the national tournament for the second year in a row.

"The Chaparrals have really been a scrappy team this year, coming back from tough losses, injuries, and adversities. I hope the fans will come out for this game and for the regional tournament to salute these young men and their accomplishments," said Reggie Franklin, Midland College's first year head coach.

Gustafson 1st double winner

By JOHN NELSON
AP Sports Writer

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — Tomas Gustafson of Sweden set a world speed-skating record and became the Winter Olympics' first double gold medalist Sunday, while America still basked in the triumphs of its own two skaters.

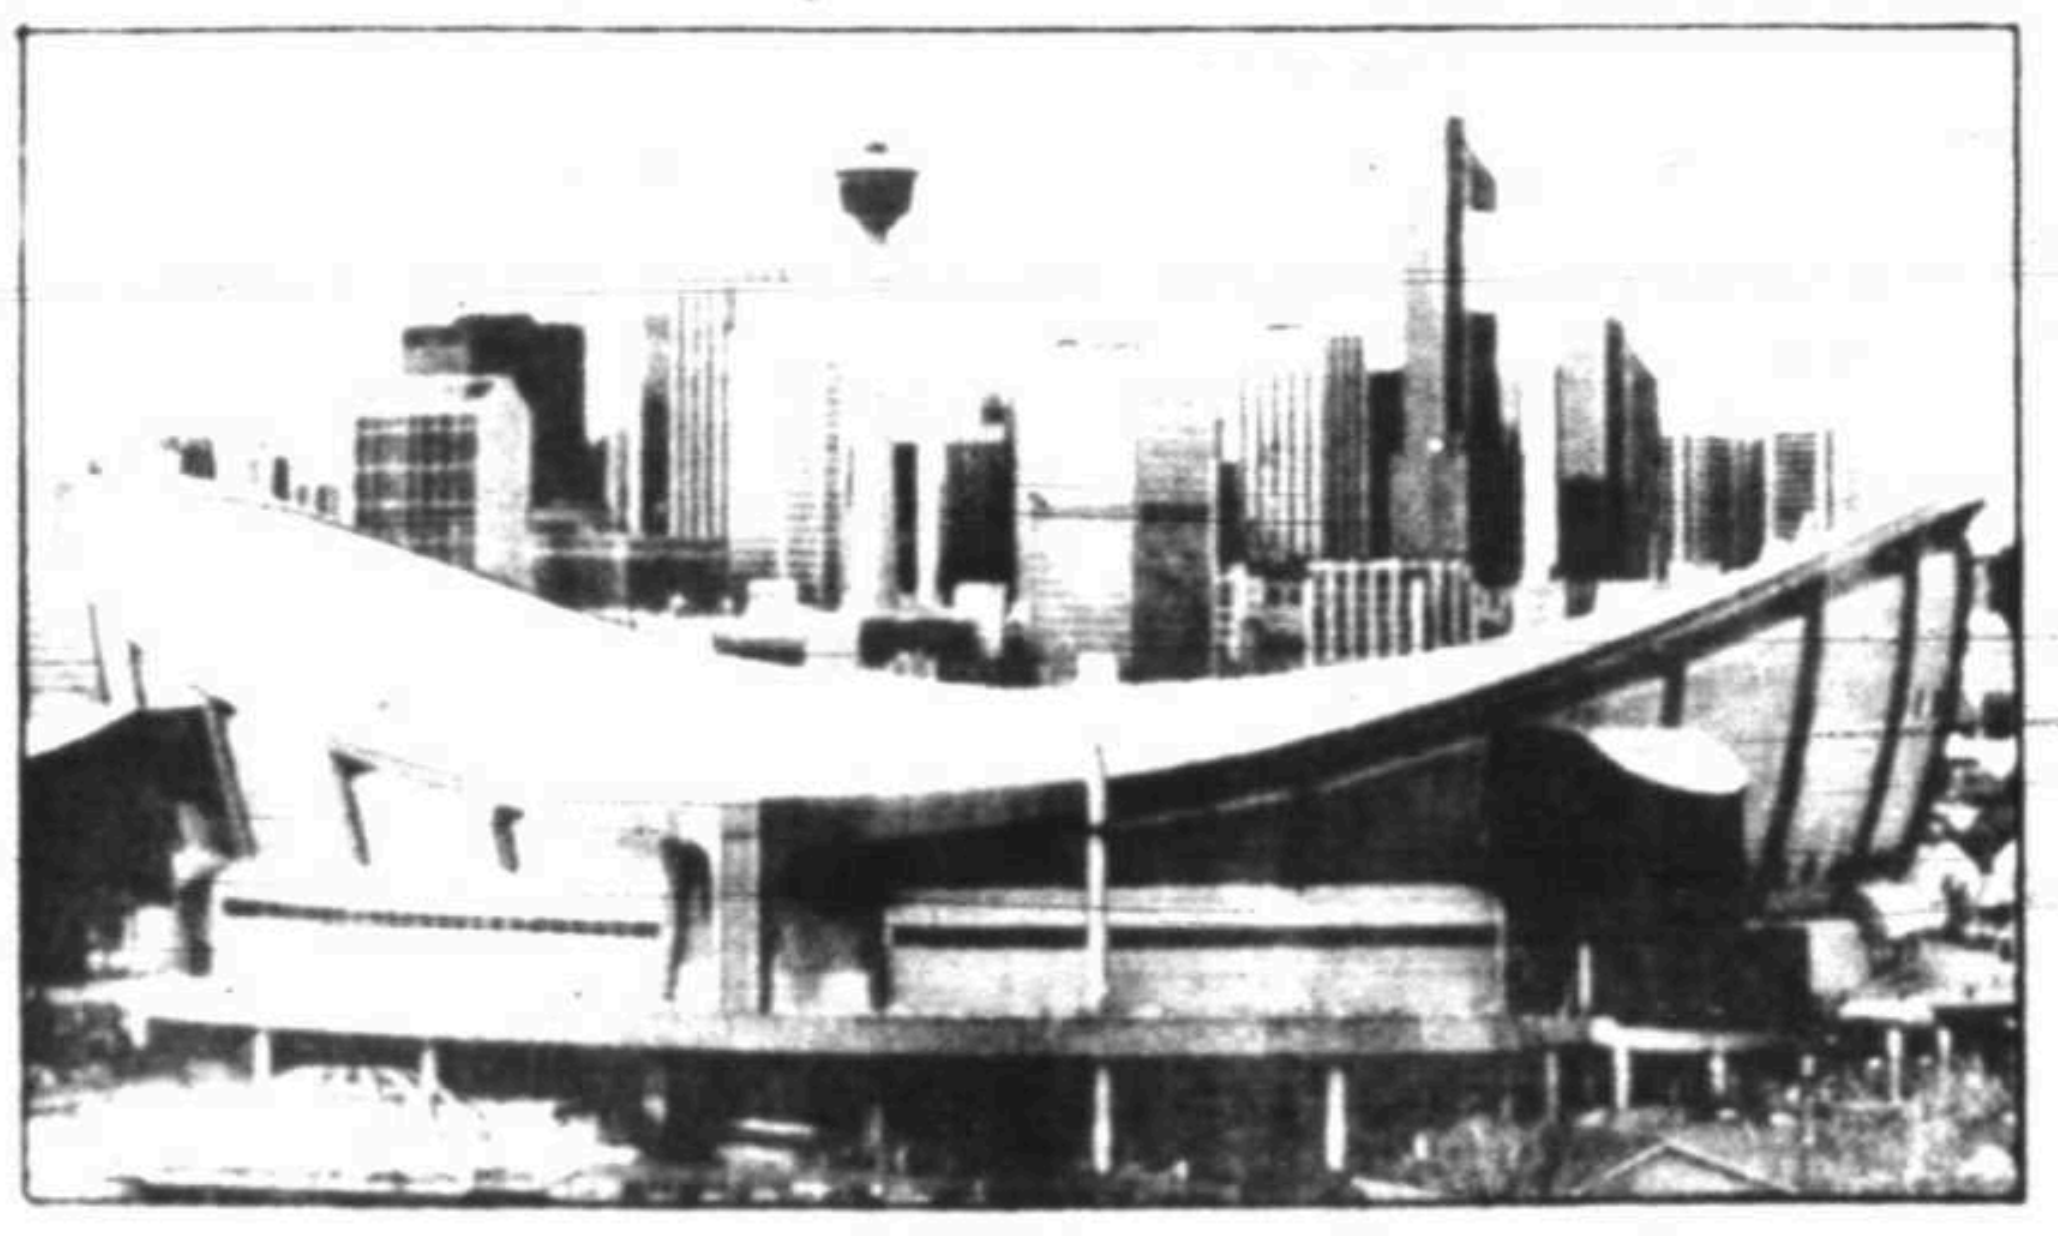
Franck Piccard won the super giant slalom and gave France its first ski racing gold since Jean-Claude Killy took Grenoble by storm in 1968. Anita Wachter of Austria won the women's combined.

With spring-like temperatures lingering in the Rockies, Brian Boitano and Eric Flaim were America's men for all seasons — Boitano with a gold in figure skating, Flaim with a silver in speed skating.

And, while Americans could not match the mighty Soviet bloc in medals, they at least had something to talk about besides the weather.

"I got one for the USA," Boitano said Sunday, one day after his victory. "The thought has occurred to me that if we leave with no more gold medals, at least we've got this one."

Flaim, who won his silver in the 1,500 meters, finished Sunday's 10,000 in fourth place — his third No. 4 finish at these Games.



Calgary's Saddledome...site of hockey and skating events.

THE SOVIET Union and East Germany have 26 of the total 66 medals at these Games, including 12 of 22 golds. The Soviets have 16 medals, East Germany 10.

Gustafson, a 1984 gold medalist in the 5,000, won at the same distance last Wednesday in Olympic record time and set a world record in winning Sunday's 10,000 in 13 minutes, 48.20 seconds. The old mark was 13:48.51 by Geir Karlstad of Norway.

"How do you describe happiness?" he asked after his first gold medal. "I will have to write a poem."

Piccard, who already had a bronze in the downhill, challenged Mount Allan's super giant slalom course where others showed caution on the icy, steep hill.

He got such a rough ride, he cracked his helmet open when he hit a gate near the start and slammed his poles into the snow at the finish, fearing the worst. But he was a winner by more than a second over Helmut Mayer of Austria, and he spoiled the return to action of downhill gold medalist Pirmin Zurbriggen and the debut of Italian ace Alberto Tomba.

"I HAVE done nothing compared to what Killy did," Piccard said. "I came here to live great moments. This is the biggest I have ever had."

The Soviets won another gold medal Sunday when their women's cross-country relay team prevailed, tying East Germany with six golds. Four of the Soviet golds are in cross-country skiing, where they have won nine of 15 medals offered so far.

America had three medals, and its hockey team tried to stay in contention for another one Sunday night in a game against West Germany that would decide the third and final team advancing from the B pool into the medal round.

The Soviet Union beat Czechoslovakia 6-1 in a rematch of the 1984 gold medal game, and Austria met Norway in the other Group B games.

Poland's best hockey player, Jaroslaw Morawiecki, became the first athlete to test positive for steroids from urine samples taken in the first week of the Games. Morawiecki was banned from the Games, and Poland had to forfeit a victory over France, costing it any chance of winning a medal.

America's next good chance for a medal is Monday when speed skater Bonnie Blair of Champaign, Ill., renews her rivalry with East German Christa Rothenburger in the 500 meters.

Gustafson beat Michael Hadschieff of Austria, a bronze medalist at 1,500 meters, by 7.91 seconds. Leo Visser of Holland, second behind Gustafson in the 5,000, won the bronze.

Karlstad, the former world record-holder, fell in the race and was near tears as he lost his chance for gold. He said he hadn't fallen in a race since he was 11.

"The ice was perfect," he said. "It was me. I was tired. All my chances are over. I'm empty."

From Wire Reports

LA JOLLA, Calif. — Steve Pate's a 6-foot birdie on the final hole for his second win of the season in the Andy Williams Open, breaking a tie with Jay Haas. Pate, 26, won this one with a final round 68—269.

Haas, winner of the Bob Hope Classic last month, played about 30 minutes in front of Pate and gained a share of the lead when he ran in a 15-18 foot eagle putt on the par-5 18th. Haas, who went to the putting green to practice for a possible playoff, remained in a tie until Pate dropped the winning putt on the final hole.

Douglass hangs on to win

TAMPA, Fla. — Dale Douglass led all the way, but struggled to a 74—210 to win the $300,000 Suncoast Seniors Classic, beating out Orville Moody, who closed with a 67, by two strokes.Ootwo-stroke victory over Orville Moody, who closed with a 5-under-par 67, the only sub-70 score of the final round.

Owls make Heels of North Carolina, 83-66

Associated Press

The Temple Owls and Purdue Boilermakers lived up to their billing as nation's top-ranked basketball teams Sunday.

No. 1 Temple did it the hard way, coming from behind in the second half on the road at Chapel Hill and routing No. 5 North Carolina 83-66. The second-ranked Boilermakers beat visting Indiana, 95-85.

In another game on Sunday, host Missouri, ranked No. 15, defeated Oklahoma 92-70.

"I was extremely impressed with Temple's second half," Smith said after North Carolina suffered its worst home loss in 13 years.

"I can't remember a half against us quite like it. They played defense and shot it in against what I thought was good defense."

The Owls, trailing 39-34 at halftime, scored 19 straight points to open the second half. Vreeswyk scored eight points and freshman Mark Macon seven points during the five-minute run.

North Carolina, which beat Maryland 74-73 Saturday, fell apart in the second half, making only 6 of 16 3-point attempts and committing 18 turnovers.

Macon scored 15 of his 19 points in the second half and Tim Perry added 17 points. Jeff Lebo scored 16 points and J.R. Reid 10 for the Tar Heels, 20-4.

No. 2 Purdue 95, Indiana 85

Todd Mitchell scored 21 of his 24 points in the second half and Troy Lewis had 22 points and a career-high 14 assists as Purdue retained possession of first place in the Big Ten Conference.

West Germany eliminates U.S., 4-1

CALGARY, Alberta (AP) — This time, the expectations were more realistic. The result, however, was the same.

At the Winter Olympics, where success is measured in medals and coming close is small consolation, the U.S. hockey team has fallen into the consolation round.

It had to beat West Germany by two goals Sunday night to have a chance, remote though it would have been, at a medal. Instead, it lost by three. A team that has had little trouble scoring goals went down 4-1.

For the second straight Winter Olympics, the Americans will be playing for seventh place.

"It's a disappointment, but the world won't end," U.S. Coach Dave Peterson said. "We'll all get up tomorrow and keep going."

The disappointment seemed deeper four years ago when memories were fresher and sweeter.

In 1984, another American hockey team went to Sarajevo, Yugoslavia, with a heavy burden. Some expected the United States to duplicate its stunning gold medal victory at Lake Placid, N.Y., in 1980.

Instead, it missed the four-team medal round and beat Poland 7-4 in the game for seventh.

This year, the pressure of repeating history was gone. The medal round was expanded to six teams, reportedly to give America a better chance of reaching it and arousing more interest among U.S. television viewers.

The medal round starts Wednesday. The United States plays Finland or Switzerland on Thursday. Again, seventh place will be at stake.

The B pool representatives will be the defending gold medalist Soviet Union, 5-0 after beating Czechoslovakia 6-1 Sunday, West Germany, 4-1, and Czechoslovakia, 3-2.

The United States is 2-3. Austria and Norway had a chance finally to win a game. But neither did, tying 4-4 Sunday to stand at 0-4-1.

The final A pool representative will be determined today.

Texas' Gustafson gets 1,000th baseball win

AUSTIN (AP) — Coach Cliff Gustafson of Texas became the third college baseball coach in history to record 1,000 victories as the Longhorns defeated Texas-Arlington 9-3 Sunday.

The victory in the first game of a double-header raised Texas' season record to 9-3.

Only former baseball coach Rod Dedeaux of Southern California and Miami coach Ron Fraser have won more games than Gustafson, who is in his 21st season at Texas.

The Gustafson years include national championships in 1975 and 1983 and 18 Southwest Conference titles. His all-time record of 1,000-215-1 represents the best winning percentage in college baseball.

"I was a little bit more excited than I usually am for a game this early in the year," Gustafson said after he was presented with a cake and a refrigerator.

"It wasn't just another game. It's been in my mind since the season began. Is it a relief? I think so," Gustafson said.

Gustafson told his team, 'Thank you for putting up with all this outside activity and attention I've been getting. I don't deserve it. You all do.'

In winning its third straight game against Texas-Arlington, Texas erupted for six runs in the fourth inning — three on a home run by third baseman Craig Newkirk, a .167 hitter.

Murray

Can a horse have a broken heart? Could Native Dancer even know the only race he ever lost was the Kentucky Derby?

Well, no. But, if ever a horse was entitled to a broken heart, it was a magnificent son of Pretense called Sham.

Sham was one of the most beautiful animals you will ever see, a glorious golden colt who, the trainers used to say, ran so high and so fast he didn't leave tracks. He won the Santa Anita Derby in race record time, only a couple of ticks off the track record. His 3-year-old career looked more like a parade than a campaign.

Then, he went to the Kentucky Derby and broke that track record, too. He went to the Preakness and, in effect, broke that record, too.

The trouble was, he didn't win either of those races. Because a horse called Secretariat broke those track records by more than he did.

In any other year, Sham would have been a statue in the paddock, a horse-of-the-year. He had the misfortune to come along the same time as a modern Man o' War, a wonder horse, or, what they call around the track, a "monster."

SENTIMENTALISTS will tell you Sham's great heart finally broke in the Belmont that year when he finally gave up the chase and let the "monster" win the race by himself, by a mind-boggling 32 lengths. Sham shuffled himself back to last and never raced again.

His rider, Laffit Pincay, was not to win his first (and only) Kentucky Derby for 11 years and the notion was, if the horse's heart wasn't broken, the rider's surely was — to say nothing of the owner's and trainer's.

Sham wasn't the only horse to chase a Triple Crown winner all the way to the last post. Pompoon was in all War Admiral's winning races in 1937, and ran second, second and sixth. Run Dusty Run chased Seattle Slew into history in 1977, running second, third and second in the three events.

But only one horse ever chased a Triple Crown winner to the wire in every one of the classic races. Only one rider ever did it.

ALYDAR had to be the unluckiest runner they ever loaded into a Triple Crown starting stall. Like Sham, he came along in the wrong year. Like Sham, he had his "monster," Affirmed. Unlike Sham, or Pompoon or Run Dusty Run, he was gaining on his rival with every race, narrowing the margin from 1 1/2 lengths (Kentucky Derby) to a neck (Preakness) to a head (Belmont).

He had the only rider ever to finish second in all three Triple Crown races. (In fact, Pompoon and Run Dusty Run had rider changes in their three efforts.)

Jorge Velasquez just surpassed the $100 million mark in purses won at Santa Anita this week, but it's possible, even at this late date, he would give a large portion of it back to have won the 1978 Triple Crown. Steve Cauthen and Affirmed entered racing's pantheon that year, the 11th and last Triple Crown winner. Alydar just became racing's most famous also-ran.

Jorge Velasquez (he prefers his first name Americanized to "George") later won his only Kentucky Derby on Pleasant Colony, but nothing can take the taste out of his mouth of the terrible disappointment of 1978.

"I loved that big old horse. He had a heart like a mountain," Velasquez admitted as he sat in a jockey's room at Santa Anita the other day waiting to ride his hundredth million-dollar winner. "Can you imagine losing the Kentucky Derby, Preakness and Belmont by a total of a little more than a length and a half? How snake-bit can you be?!"

AFFIRMED, he concedes, was a great horse. "I couldn't get by him. I could get to him. But not by him. It was frustrating."

But, Alydar was a great horse, too, he insists. "In the Preakness and the Belmont, Affirmed and him were running all alone — 7 1/2 lengths in front of everybody in the Preakness and 13 lengths alone in the Belmont. Those were match races. Alydar never quit, never stopped running. He'd run over a cliff for you."

ZURBRIGGEN, the overall World Cup leader, tied for fifth, while Tomba, who will be favored in the slalom, fell out of the race after the third gate.

"I can't hide I had been thinking of a medal today," Tomba said. "However, my morale is high because this was not the race I had to win. I am looking forward to the giant slalom and slalom."

Piccard's gold was the first in the Olympics for the French men since Killy won three golds in Grenoble before dissension ripped apart the team and destroyed it in the mid-1970s.

"I made lots of mistakes in the upper part, but by the bottom of the race, I was skiing better," Piccard said. "I was always trying to stay on edge and sharpen the curves."

Piccard, a non-winner in five seasons on the World Cup tour, chattered and churned his way through the course, ending in 1 minute, 39.66 seconds. Mayer was 1.3 seconds behind for the silver, and Lars-Boerje Eriksson of Sweden won the bronze.

Wachter won the gold in the combined based on her third-place finish in Saturday's downhill and second in Sunday's slalom. Swiss skiers finished 2-3, Brigitte Oertli winning the silver and Maria Walliser the bronze. Oertli won the slalom but was 11th in the downhill.

"I was so nervous when Oertli was coming down," Wachter said. "I knew the race was going to be decided by a few tenths of a second. I was certain of a medal only when I saw the scoreboard flashing my name."

The final two runs of the two-man bobsled were postponed until Monday by deteriorating track conditions, caused by temperatures in the 60s and windblown sand. Ianis Kipours of the Soviet Union was the leading driver after two runs, and East German sleds driven by Wolfgang Hoppe and Bernhard Lehmann were tied for second.

Four Soviet women, anchored by Anfissa Reztsova, skied to an easy victory in the 20-kilometer relay, beating Norway by 1:41.9. Finland was third after its anchor skier, Jaana Savolainen, fell with about a kilometer left. The United States was eighth in the 12-team field.

Boitano, of Sunnyvale, Calif., won the men's figure skating in a battle with world champion Brian Orser of Canada that was so close, a tie-breaker had to be used for the first time to decide an Olympic gold medal.

Flaim, of Pembroke, Mass., set a world record in the 1,500-meter speed skating event Saturday, but saw it erased six minutes later by Andre Hoffmann of East Germany, who won the gold by .06 seconds.

The Soviet couple of Natalia Bestemianova and Andrei Bukin was first after Sunday's compulsory portion of the ice dance competition. American champions Suzanne Semanick and Scott Gregory were sixth.

Lanier searches for that old magic

By MICHAEL A. LUTZ

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Manager Hal Lanier has spent a restless off-season trying to figure out how to regain the Astros' championship magic of 1986.

Lanier has even gone to his former boss, St. Louis Manager Whitey Herzog, for advice on how to handle temperamental Joaquin Andujar, a former Cardinal who has signed a free-agent contract with the Astros.

"I coached with Joaquin when I was in St. Louis, but I haven't managed him so I asked Whitey for some pointers," Lanier said. "He said the best thing to do is on the days he pitches, just don't even talk to him."

Lanier has been doing plenty of talking and planning in the off-season, trying to recapture the consistency that led the Astros to the 1986 National League Western Division title.

THE ASTROS pulled away from the division in 1986, but they fizzled in the final month of last season, winning only 11 of their final 37 games.

Lanier hopes a healthy Andujar, the addition of shortstop Rafael Ramirez and better hitting will produce a return to the contending days of 1986.

The Astros actually were in the race until they started their downhill slide on Aug. 25. Following a 5-2 victory over St. Louis on Aug. 24, the Astros were only a half-game out of first place with a 65-60 record.

But they lost their next seven games in a row and had two other losing streaks of five and four games en route to a 76-86 finish, 14 games behind first-place San Francisco.

"Nobody's happy with the way we played last year, especially in the latter stages of the season," Lanier said. "We need to get back to the consistency that we had in 1986."

The Astros also start the season with new General Manager Bill Wood, who replaced Dick Wagner. Wagner resigned last October after two controversial seasons and numerous disputes with Lanier.

"FROM WHAT I can pick up, the players are ready to put last year's disappointment behind them," Wood said. "The guys seem committed to getting back to the 1986 situation this year."

The acquisition of Andujar could make the Astros' already strong pitching staff even stronger and send Danny Darwin to a middle relief role.

Lanier also hopes for a comeback by Bob Knepper, who had an off-year as a starter last year, and another outstanding season from Nolan Ryan, the major league strike-out leader last season at age 40.

He's now 41 and no longer has the 110-pitch per game limit imposed on him by Wagner, who thought it helped Ryan's longevity.

Still pending was a trade for a catcher to backup Alan Ashby. Ashby had his most productive season last year, but he needed more relief than he got from Mark Bailey and Robbie Wine plate in spring training. Lanier could return to platooning with Denny Walling.

Pitchers and catchers reported to the club's training site at Kissimmee, Fla., last week with the rest of the team scheduled to arrive this week.

The Astros' first spring game is March 4 against the Kansas City Royals. Their season opener is in the Astrodome April 5 against the San Diego Padres.

ANOTHER key for the Astros will be at third base, where Ken Caminiti showed promise last season. After a strong debut at the plate, Caminiti finished with a .246 batting average in 63 games with the Astros.

"The position is open," Lanier said. "It's not going to be given to Ken just because he ended up the year there."

Brian Boitano strikes Gold

Brian Boitano
...breaks drought

By MICHAEL JANOFSKY
N.Y. Times News Service

CALGARY, Alberta — With seconds to go in his freestyle program Saturday night, Brian Boitano let the world know exactly how he felt about his performance. His smile seemed to stretch from one side of the Saddledome to the other; his fists were clenched at his heart in triumphant joy.

He did not know then that his work over the last 4 minutes, 40 seconds had won him an Olympic gold medal. In figure skating, the value of one's scores are relative to those given other skaters. Five more competitors were to follow, including Brian Orser of Canada, the world champion, the Olympic runner-up in 1984 and the skater favored to succeed Scott Hamilton as Olympic champion.

But one look at Boitano, 24, a soldier in royal blue — his costume to match his music from the 1981 movie "Napoleon" — served as confirmation that what he had been saying for months was true: Skating his best under Olympic circumstances was his highest priority.

If a medal and a higher placement than Orser were to be his reward, so much the better.

"I had decided that it really didn't make too much difference whether it was going to be a gold, silver or bronze," Boitano said later. "When I got off the ice, I was thinking, that's it. And I was happy enough with that."

Before the thunderous applause subsided, he hugged his good friend, Lisa Schoeller; his coach, Linda Leaver, and his choreographer, Sandra Bezic, a former Canadian pairs champion. Then he disappeared into a dressing room, put on his Walkman and began removing his stage makeup and packing his equipment. He watched none of the remaining skaters.

Aleksandr Fadeyev, a Soviet skater, followed Boitano. Fadeyev was followed by Orser; a soldier in red whose confidence seemed to swell with the crowd's tumultuous welcome.

But within the next 90 seconds, the second soldier was wounded, by a slip coming out of a triple-flip jump. Two minutes later, he cut a triple jump to a double, far less impressive to judges. A minute after that, his work was over, and he skated off under another shower of applause.

The scoring was agonizingly close.

Each judge gives one mark for technical merit and another for artistic impression, which are added. In the case of ties, the skater with higher marks for technical merit prevails. Boitano had higher marks outright from three judges: the United States, the Soviet Union and Japan. Orser had higher marks from those from West Germany, East Germany, Canada and Czechoslavakia. The marks from the Danish and Swiss judges were tied, but both gave Boitano higher scores for technical merit.

Under the current system of judging, introduced in 1981, this was the first tiebreaker decided on technical merit for an Olympic gold medal.

The result reached Boitano through Christopher Bowman, the American who finished seventh. Bowman nodded yes. Boitano said no. Bowman nodded yes again. Boitano said no again.

"He's such a practical joker," Boitano said of Bowman. "When I realized he was serious, we grabbed each other and hugged."

During the medal ceremony, Boitano was flanked by Orser to his right and Viktor Petrenko of the Soviet Union, who won the bronze, on his left. Boitano and Orser are good friends, and the moment did not pass without a deep emotional reaction from both of them.

"I almost felt guilty feeling great," Boitano said.

Orser sensed his fate as he had skated off the ice. His radiance had abated. A look of disappointment had begun to intrude upon his confidence. He knew this was not his best long program.

"I thought for a moment I had won it," he said.

But he also knew that the slip on the triple flip and the decision to abbreviate the final triple axel had hurt him.

"Before I went into it," he said of the final jump, "I was feeling a little tired. I knew it was important to stay on my feet. At that point, I decided to do a double. Looking back, maybe I should have done a triple."

Boitano, on the other hand, completed his jumps, including eight triples, without a flaw. There was some question about whether he landed one of the triples on both feet. But that was intentional, he said.

"I didn't know his artistic scope, what he had inside emotionally," she said.

Montana 'good' after surgery

REDWOOD CITY, Calif. (AP) — San Francisco 49er quarterback Joe Montana underwent surgery on his throwing arm at Sequoia Hospital where he was reported in good condition, according to hospital officials.

Nursing supervisor Joan Stoney called Sunday's operation "routine" and "minor" but could give no other details.

Team spokesman could not be reached for comment. Calls to public relations officials went unanswered early today.

UTEP RALLIES— Wayne Campbell and Chris Blocker each scored 17 points to pace Texas-El Paso to a come-from-behind 72-66 WAC victory over Air Force Saturday. The Miners improved to 20-6 overall and 9-4 in the WAC. Air Force fell to 11-12 overall and 4-8 in conference

Michael Smith scored 17 points, all in the second half, leading No. 7 Brigham Young to a 72-70 victory over Hawaii Saturday in the WAC as Jeff Chatman scored 22 points for the Cougars, 21-2 and 10-1...

SCORING BEE— Bo Kimble scored a career-high 38 points to lead No. 20 Loyola of California, 22-3 and 12-0, to a 142-127 victory over Pepperdine Saturday, clinching the Lions' first WCAA title in 27 years. Loyola's 142 points were the most ever by a WCAC team and the 269 was the most ever in a conference game.

AUSSIE GOLF— Ian Baker-Finch scored a birdie 3 at the first sudden-death playoff hole Sunday to defeat Roger Mackay and Craig Parry for the Australian Masters golf championship. Finch had a final-round 73—283 while Mackay carded a 70 and Parry a 71.

MARTINA WINS ANOTHER— Martina Navratilova crushed Larisa Savchenko of the Soviet Union 6-1, 6-2 to win the Virginia Slims of California, winning all five of her matches during the tournament in straight sets and lost only 16 games. A strong serving performance, including four aces, was the key to her victory over Savchenko, the unseeded 21-year-old who upset three seeded players to reach the finals.

BOYS WILL BE BOYS— The Big East Conference doesn't expect to levy any suspensions against Pittsburgh and Georgetown players who have been involved in fights in two games this season, league commissioner Dave Gavitt said Sunday.

SCORING THE THREE PARTS OF THE EVENT

- Compulsory Figures (30%): Though these events are seldom televised, they make up 30 percent of the single skater's overall score. Basically, the skater must execute one of 42 variations of a figure eight (the specific figure is chosen in a draw just prior to competition). The skater must trace the figure perfectly, using each foot, and is judged for both grace and accuracy.
- Short Program (20%): The athlete, performing to a song of his or her choice, has two minutes to execute seven required moves. The skater is judged for composition, difficulty, style and originality.
- Free Skating (50%): This section lasts 4 minutes for women and 4:30 for men. Skaters must accomplish the following: one jump combination, one spin combination and one step sequence. The "Technical Merit" and "Composition and Style" of the performance are scored separately.

Should baseball put taboo tobacco?

By STEVE BERKOWITZ
Copley News Service

A READER ASKS: Should baseball ban tobacco?

Jim Leyland, Manager, Pittsburgh Pirates: Well, I'm going to get into a lot of trouble for this, but this is America. And the best thing about America is, it's a free country. And as long as tobacco is on the market and it's legal, I think a man should have the right to make his own decisions about his using tobacco.

Kent Tekulve, Pitcher, Philadelphia Phillies: Nope. If they ban tobacco it would eliminate one of my very few ways to get my uniform dirty. I keep tobacco around so I can make them clean my uniform at least once a week.

Ray Knight, Third Base, Baltimore Orioles: I'd have no problem with that. I've never smoked. I've never had a cigarette in my mouth. Never chewed. I've always thought of using tobacco as being a nasty habit. But still, people have their rights. There wouldn't be an America if we weren't able to make choices.

Doug Sisk, Pitcher, Baltimore Orioles: I don't mind the chewing of tobacco. But I despise cigarette smoke.

Milt Thompson, Outfielder, Philadelphia Phillies: I don't chew tobacco, so a ban wouldn't bother me. But people have rights. If players choose to chew tobacco, it shouldn't bother anybody when the guys are spitting on the field.

Tim Raines, Outfielder, Montreal Expos: It would be hard to ban. A lot of guys would probably go through rehabilitation centers for tobacco. I dip Copenhagen and I've been trying to stop. So far, stopping has been tough.

Tim Wallach, Third Base, Montreal Expos: Yeah, I would like to see a ban. Then I'd be able to quit — I'd have to quit. I would just as soon have it be that way.

Ken Howell, Pitcher, Los Angeles Dodgers: If guys want to use tobacco, let them do it on their own time. It's a bad influence on kids who come to the ball park and see their heroes chewing. Some kids already think that tobacco is part of the game.

Vance Law, Infielder, Chicago Cubs: Sure, I'd like to see tobacco banned. I hate to see my friends and teammates — which incidentally are the same — take chances with their health and lives.

Cecil Espy, Outfielder, Texas Rangers: No. I like to chew. It relaxes me.

Brian Holton, Pitcher, Los Angeles Dodgers: No, not at all. They should bring it in by the buckets.

Save our streams, conservationists rally

By BILL SCHULZ
Associated Press Writer

Conservationists, the fishing industry, state agencies and the U.S. Fish and Wildlife service hope to have the country's first National Recreational Fisheries Policy ready for presentation during National Fishing Week in June.

A loosely knit net of goals, policies, and objectives, the draft policy declares, "The nation's recreational fisheries provide significant benefits to our families, individuals, society and the national economy.

"These benefits depend upon achieving and maintaining healthy fish populations and their habitats."

"It is to demonstrate the resource is important, hopefully one we should try to maintain and to assure that our children continue to enjoy," said Gary Edwards, assistant chief of fisheries in the Fish and Wildlife Service.

"Basically, one out of five people fish," said Edwards, citing preliminary data from the service's 1985 outdoor recreation survey.

"The survey indicated the industry fishing supports is around $28.2 billion a year. A lot of people argue that is conservative and the figure is closer to $30 or $35 billion," he said.

The policy he said is an umbrella under which the Fish and Wildlife Service, as well as the state agencies which have the responsibilities of managing the country's fresh water fisheries, will develop their plans.

In addition, the policy "tries to apply to the individual angler, outlining the responsibility the angler has for these resources," he said.

The policy's guiding principles say fishing contributes "significant social and economic benefits to the nation," that recreational fishing depends on abundant fishery resources and that both governments and private industry have to work together to preserve fisheries.

The policy notes that despite all efforts to date, "fish populations and their habitats continue to decline."

Variety of fishing opportunities is as important as the quantity of opportunities, the policy says, and the nation should enhance and diversify fishing opportunities.

Quality fishing, however, may be still more important, the policy says.

Brett ready to end slump

Spring Training

Associated Press

George Brett is ready to break out of a two-year slump that has slowed him and the Kansas City Royals.

"I feel like I'm going to have a great year," Brett said after reporting early to the Royals' spring training camp. "I feel healthy."

Brett, bothered by injuries the past two seasons, batted .290 in both 1986 and 1987. It's the first time the .312 lifetime hitter has been below .300 for two straight years.

A knee injury and a rib cage injury last year kept Brett out of 46 games last season. He missed 42 games in 1986 with injuries to his right shoulder.

THE ROYALS also suffered and were unable to repeat their success of winning the 1985 World Series.

During the off-season, Brett repeated a workout schedule he used following the 1984 season. After the conditioning program, he batted .335 with 30 home runs and 112 runs batted in during 1985.

"I feel like I'm going to play 155 to 160 games," said Brett, who moved to first base from third base last year after coming back from the knee injury. "If I'm in the lineup, I'll know I'll have the type of year I had in '76 (.333), '77 (.312), '79 (.329), '80 (.390) and '85. And if I do that, I've been known to carry a ballclub."

Around the Camps

Hurst won a career-high 15 games last year, yet he went 1-7 after mid-August and was troubled by a tired left arm.

After the season, Hurst learned he had a virus with symptoms similar to mononucleosis. He had a temporary relapse in January, but says he may be OK now.

"I'm feeling pretty good, no real arm fatigue such as I felt at the end of last season," Hurst said Sunday after throwing from the bullpen mound for a third consecutive day at Chain O'Lakes Park in Winter Haven, Fla.

"Medication and rest seemed to take care of the condition, but then I had a relapse in January," Hurst said. "I think everything is all right again, but I'm going to be very careful I don't overdo it."

"He knows how he feels and what he can do and can't do, so he's kind of on his own," manager John McNamara said. "He's not restricted in any way and has done everything everyone else has done in our first three days here.

"I'm very pleased with the way he's thrown for three days in a row. It's very encouraging. Of course, it's much too early to make any evaluations, but we like what we've seen so far."

The Cincinnati Reds are also encouraged by what Mario Soto has done so far, although they're not counting on their former ace.

Soto, 18-7 in 1984, has been plagued by shoulder problems for two years. Soto's contract guarantees him $1 million this season.

Manager Pete Rose said Soto will get a chance at the fifth spot in the starting rotation if he is healthy.

Soto pitched briefly in a semipro game in his native Dominican Republic during the week and said he felt fine.

"Our scout there said he threw well and didn't have any pain," Reds general manager Murray Cook said. "That's extremely good news."

SMU gets another chance

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

SWC

In a Southwest Conference basketball season of faint-hearted frontrunners, the Southern Methodist Mustangs have a second chance.

SMU has sole ownership of first place for the second time this season after a clutch 87-84 overtime victory against the Houston Cougars while co-leader Arkansas suffered a 58-57 loss to Baylor in Heart O' Texas Coliseum.

SMU knows about the perils of playing in Waco having lost by 22 points there after getting the league lead several weeks ago.

SMU Coach Dave Bliss said he hopes the Mustangs learned their lesson the first time.

"We have a tough two weeks ahead and I just hope we can keep up with a bounty hunting type effort," Bliss said. "I know one thing. That victory over Houston is one we will treasure for a long time."

It will be a tough road for SMU.
m

THE MUSTANGS, who are 10-3 in SWC play and 21-overall, have to play two games this week before hostile audiences.

SMU is Texas Tech on Wednesday and at Texas on Saturday night. The Mustangs don't play at home again until they entertain Texas Christian on March 2.

Arkansas, 9-4 and 18-6, will be resting on Wednesday and hosting Rice on Saturday so the league chase is far from over.

In other league games on Wednesday, Baylor is at Rice, Houston is at A&M, and Texas is at TCU.

Baylor, Houston, and Texas are tied for third with 7-5 ledgers while A&M is 6-6, Texas Tech is 4-8 and TCU and Rice are tied for the all important eighth spot with 3-10 records. The last place team doesn't go to the league tournament.

IN OTHER games Saturday, A&M downed Rice 67-55 in Houston while Tech beat TCU 68-58 in overtime.

"Now maybe we can loosen up and play," Myers said. "We've been playing hard every game but we just couldn't get over the hump. We've been playing too tight.

"The 300 victories isn't that big of a deal. It was more important for us to win this game. We're still not home free as far as the tournament goes. I think we'll need to win some more games to get in."

Alydar was more than just a mount for the eighth race, Velasquez says. "He was like a pet. Some horses you just ride them and forget. But Alydar you could never forget. He tried so hard. He wanted to please you. It would break your heart what happened to him. I used to feed him sugar, and he would turn his head and look for it just like a baby. A lot of years later, when he was at stud, I went out to the pasture to see him and, when I whistled, he came running. He knew me!"

Alydar was the last of the great Calumet horses. The stable, once the Notre Dame of horse racing, had its last shot at the Derby, which it won eight times, and the Triple Crown, which it won twice, with Alydar. The Markeys, owners of the horse (Lucille Markey was the widow of Calumet founder and baking powder magnate, Warren Wright), were to pass away shortly.

JORGE Velasquez, who began riding in Panama at the age of 14 when he was a butcher's apprentice, once won 44 races in one month and won 438 races in his first full year in the States. He won a Kentucky Derby and a Preakness on Pleasant Colony (who was third in the Belmont). He has won Breeders' Cups, Coaching Club's Oaks, and Hollywood, Santa Anita and Florida derbies.

But it's human nature to pine for the love you lost, to curse the chance that was wasted, to toss at night imagining the putt going in, the kick going over the goal posts, the ball hitting the fence — and Alydar just nipping his nemesis at the wire. Jorge has won $100 million and some great races. But there are only 11 Triple Crown winners. And he's not one of them. By a length, a neck and a nose. And a heart. Slightly broken.

Senate takes up hunger in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Agriculture Committee Chairman Patrick J. Leahy is set to raise the curtain on hearings into the problem of hunger plaguing the nation's homeless and families living in poverty.

"I know that the budget pressures will remain with us all this year and for the foreseeable future," the Vermont Democrat says. "But America's future depends on its children. The wealthiest, most powerful nation in the world must once again resolve to eliminate hunger in America."

The hearings come as the government prepares to suspend distribution of milk, cheese, rice and honey to low-income households under the Temporary Emergency Food Assistance Program, or TEFAP, because stocks are depleted.

Leahy says a report will be released this week dealing specifically with the rural poor and that he intends to follow up with hearings on the overall extent of hunger in America.

TEFAP is best known as the program under which poor people were able to go to community action centers and other designated places in their neighborhoods to receive free allotments of powered milk and cheese.

It came into being in 1981 as the Reagan administration wrestled with enormous surpluses of agricultural commodities and the massive storage costs they entailed. Those huge surpluses have now been diminished considerably by price changes under the 1985 farm law that have discouraged excess production.

The Agriculture Department announced Feb. 12 that dwindling stocks will prevent TEFAP distributions of milk and cheese in May. Rice and honey stocks will be depleted by March distributions, USDA said. It said flour, cornmeal and butter distributions will continue as before.

"Cheese, nonfat dry milk, rice and honey distributions will be suspended when we have given it all away," said John W. Bode, assistant secretary of agriculture for food and consumer services. "When we get more, we will distribute it."

The department said that one in every seven Americans receives federal food assistance at some point each year at a taxpayer cost of more than $56 million a day. It said surplus foods amounting to 5 billion pounds worth more than $5 billion have been distributed under TEFAP since 1981.

According to figures compiled by the Senate Agriculture Committee, more than 15 million people have supplemented benefits they already receive from the food stamp program with TEFAB commodities.

But the panel says the 18 million people who were taking part in the food stamp program as of September represented no more than 60 percent of those living in poverty.

Leahy said he went to New York last week "to survey for myself the extent of hunger in our nation's richest city."

"As a senator, I have seen poverty in the Third World that was worse than any I have seen in the United States," Leahy said in a floor speech reporting on his trip. "But the sense of hopelessness that I encountered in the South Bronx was as deep as any that I have encountered in South America."

He said many families told him they "cannot buy enough food — even with food stamps — to feed their children." He quoted Christina Walker, operator of a food stamp hotline, as saying her organization receives thousands of calls from households that run out of food stamps.

"That they run out is not surprising," he said. "The average food stamp benefit is around 50 cents, per person, per meal — the maximum benefit is 81 cents per meal.

"Think about what 81 cents worth of groceries would look like — not much. What would happen if you spilled a carton of milk — or dropped a carton of eggs?"

Some individuals living in poverty are unable to obtain food stamps because they have no address, he said.

Each quintuplet hopes 'to be one' in college

FAR HILLS, N.J. (AP) — Sara and Amy Kienast glare at each other over feet propped on the dining room table and argue the finer points of rock 'n' roll music. They both like it, but Amy wouldn't be caught listening to REM.

And so it goes with the Kienast quintuplets: They are so much alike yet so different.

Sara, Amy, Abby, Ted and Gordon turn 18 Wednesday and hope the day marks the end of media-mobbed birthdays and the beginning of separate lives.

"We've been five all our lives. Now is our chance to be one," said Sara as her brothers and sisters nod in agreement. "We want to make a name for ourselves, by ourselves."

After years of press scrutiny, well-publicized financial problems and the suicide of their father, the quints are a steely bunch and proud of it.

They also are distinctly individual. Each plans to attend a different college and four have picked schools far from the spacious farmhouse in this New York City suburb where they grew up.

"It's about time," Abby said with a grin. "I've been with them for 18 years. I could make do without seeing their faces every day."

None plans to tell new friends he or she is a quintuplet.

"Why should we have someone look at us and think of four different people," said Sara.

The quints say their separation in the fall will be painless because they all live separate lives now.

"We basically have the same friends, but we don't hang out with the same people," said Amy. "On the weekends, we don't do things together."

The siblings say that all that sets them apart from other teen-agers is that there are five of them.

"We have the same fights, you know, that other brothers and sisters have. The girls are always taking my sweaters and stuff," Ted said to the protests of his sisters.

The quints gained worldwide attention when they were born Feb. 24, 1970, after their mother, Peggy Jo Kienast, took fertility drugs.

At first, many offers of help and endorsement opportunities clothed and fed the children. But financial pressures began a few years later and an anonymous source saved them from eviction by providing more than $115,000 to pay off mortgages and property taxes the Kienasts owed.

At that most difficult time, reporters and photographers camped outside the family's home, making the family angry.

"I really started to resent the media when dad died," said Sara. "There's a limit you can take.

"I understand now," said Ted. "They have a job to do and someone sends them out to get a picture and they have paychecks and families, too. But at the time it was too much."

Despite the unwanted attention, the quintuplets say they appreciated the cards and letters they received from around the world when their father died.

They also say they have put his death behind them.

"We couldn't dwell on it," Amy said. "Mom wanted us to get on with our lives."

Mrs. Kienast says she's looking forward to her children leaving home.

"I'm all for parenting and children, but I don't live through my children. I'm looking forward to this next step," she said. "You're worn out by their senior year."

The quints' birthdays — what Ted calls "press day" — have always been met by clicking cameras and a string of interviews. But this year will be different: The quints plan to go their separate ways.

Woman claims she was link between Kennedy, Mafia

NEW YORK (AP) — A woman who 12 years ago described having an affair with President Kennedy in the White House says her terminal cancer led her to admit another secret, that she was a conduit between him and the Mafia.

"Now that I know I'm dying and nothing more can happen to me, I want to be completely honest," said Judith Campbell Exner, 54, in an interview published in the Feb. 29 issue of People magazine.

"If I'd told the truth, I'd have been killed. I kept my secret out of fear," she said.

Exner said she arranged about 10 face-to-face meetings between John F. Kennedy and Chicago mob boss Sam Giancana while she and Kennedy were having an affair in 1960-61.

Exner said she witnessed at least one of the Kennedy-Giancana meetings, and repeatedly crossed the country carrying envelopes between Kennedy, Giancana and another mobster.

Exner first spoke publicly of her affair with the president in 1975, but told the Senate intelligence committee that year that Kennedy was unaware of her links to Giancana. Exner's name came up in Senate hearings into the Kennedy administration's attempts to use the Mafia to kill Cuban leader Fidel Castro.

Exner said she now was revealing the Kennedy-Giancana link because she suffers from terminal cancer and wants "to put my life in order so that I may die peacefully."

John C Ryan

Religious beliefs cost FBI agent his job, pension

PEORIA, Ill. (AP) — Five months after the FBI fired him, former agent John C. Ryan is grappling with a religious renewal that caused him to question his past, challenge his supervisors and lose his job.

Wholesale changes are taking place in the life of a man who was 10 months away from settling into a quiet retirement when he was dismissed Sept. 11.

After carrying a gun every day during 21 years of loyal FBI service, Ryan now is a pacifist who denounces the "immoral activities" of the FBI and the United States' involvement in Central America.

Ryan, 49, is selling his Peoria home, where he and his wife, Peggy, raised four children. And he's pondering a total change in lifestyle while searching for a way to support his family the next 12 years until he can collect his federal pension.

"It would be inconsistent for me to continue being a heavy consumer knowing how many victims the American lifestyle demands," Ryan said recently. "There's war in Latin America so we can continue to eat Big Macs, and I don't want to contribute to that. We're scaling down our lifestyle to a more simplified life."

His only income comes from speaking engagements and from teaching a sociology class at Bradley University. Legal fees to fight his dismissal have eaten $13,000 out of the family savings — perhaps part of the reason for the change in lifestyle.

Clad in sneakers and jeans, Ryan hardly resembled the man who spent two decades in foreign counterintelligence, investigating organized crime in New York and hunting fugitives like anti-war activist Daniel Berrigan.

His work twice won him commendations, but something was missing from his life. A devout Roman Catholic who once studied for the priesthood, Ryan started taking religious study courses about 10 years ago.

He earned his master's degree in 1985, and the transformation from a follower of J. Edgar Hoover into a pacifist began to mature.

It was then that Ryan knew his beliefs would conflict with his role as chief counterintelligence operative in the FBI's five-man office here. But he never really thought it would lead to his dismissal.

"Refusing an order was something I'd never done before, and I knew an act of insubordination would cost me some sort of disciplinary action," Ryan said. "I have religious beliefs they are bound to accommodate. There are office jobs, places I could work in the FBI. I wouldn't have to carry a gun.

"I think they overreacted in firing me. It was stupid. Look at all the notoriety it has caused."

Ryan's life is in turmoil, but he seems content with his decision to refuse an order to investigate an anti-nuclear group suspected of vandalizing 11 Chicago-area military recruiting offices.

"I really feel I did the right thing," Ryan said. "I don't know if I could have lived with myself had I done anything differently."

His firing occurred 10 months before his 50th birthday in June, when he would have been eligible for full retirement with 20 years service.

"I could have simply ignored the order, but I chose not to. I felt what we were doing was clearly investigating peace groups with the obvious intention of intimidating and harassing them. I thought the FBI was ill-advised to do this and I told them."

NATION IN BRIEF

MX missile war on again

WASHINGTON (AP) — The new Pentagon budget has reopened the bitter fight between Congress and the Reagan administration over the MX nuclear missile and how to build America's future arsenal of land-based atomic weapons.

And in the latest round — on a possible successor to the MX missile — past administration critics have gained grudging support from an unusual quarter — Defense Secretary Frank Carlucci.

Although he personally doesn't think much of the Midgetman missile, the congressionally designated heir apparent to the MX, Carlucci has agreed to request enough funding to keep the project alive until a new administration can make the final decision.

The budget sent to the Democratic-controlled Congress last week proposed $807 million to buy a dozen more of the 10-warhead MX weapons, along with $793 million for a new method of basing the giant missiles aboard trains.

The current plan is to put 50 of the weapons into silos on Warren Air Force Base in southeastern Wyoming. The Air Force also wants to build 50 more and deploy two each aboard 25 specially-built trains.

But Carlucci told the Senate Armed Services Committee last week that if it were up to him, he would put all 100 MX weapons on the trains.

That echoed criticisms by MX opponents, who claimed during a series of long fights in Reagan's first term that putting the MX into land-based silos would make the missiles vulnerable to a first strike by accurate Soviet missiles.

buccaneer — (noun) In the West Indies, native hunters used to cook meat on a grill which they called a "boucan." When French pirates invaded the islands in the 17th and 18th centuries, they practiced some very bad manners — plundering and stealing as pirates do — but they also adopted the natives' cooking methods. These invaders so became known as "boucaniers," or "buccaneers." Although they would surely enjoy the food, it would probably be best not to invite a gang of buccaneers to your next barbecue!.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The sister of the longest-held American hostage in Lebanon says U.S. officials display a double standard by working hardest to free the most recent captives.

Peggy Say, who has unflinchingly worked for freedom for her brother Terry Anderson, said Reagan administration officials indicated recently that no progress has been made to win his release.

"I will not stand by and watch somebody else come out while my brother stays behind," Mrs. Say said in an interview broadcast Sunday on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation."

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent of The Associated Press, was abducted March 16, 1985. He is among nine Americans being held hostage in Lebanon, including recent abductee Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, who was kidnapped Wednesday.

Mrs. Say charged that a double standard exists in which U.S. officials actively tried to locate Higgins, but have not been as vigorous in trying to find her brother.

She added that the double standard is not new, and she cited U.S. efforts to free Americans held hostage in the hijacking of a TWA jetliner and the cruise ship Achille Lauro and the negotiations to win the release of journalist Nicholas Daniloff, who was arrested by the Soviets.

Reagan wants hostages out

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Sunday night that he wants more than anything else to get all the American hostages held in Lebanon freed before he leaves the White House.

"We're doing everything we can and exploring every avenue" to free Marine Lt. Col. William R. Higgins, who was kidnapped Wednesday near the ancient port city of Tyre, Lebanon, the president said.

Higgins heads a 76-man observer group attached to a U.N. peacekeeping force in south Lebanon. There are eight other Americans as well as 14 other foreigners missing in Lebanon.

"It is such a terrible situation and you're afraid you'll do something that will harm them (the hostages).

Pan Am strike talks break off

NEW YORK (AP) — The union representing 4,500 Pan Am ground employees in 14 cities vowed "guerrilla warfare" against the airline after talks in which management is seeking $35 million in concessions broke down.

The Pan American World Airways reservation clerks and other ground staff represented by the Teamsters continued working Sunday after the union's 12:01 a.m. strike deadline passed.

"We can strike any time we want," said William Genoese, director of the Teamsters airline division.

"We're going to pick our strategic time," Genoese said. Meantime, he said, Teamsters would attempt to disrupt operations through "guerrilla warfare," starting immediately.

"There's going to be trouble on the job," he said. "They're not going to correct anybody's errors, they're not going to help anybody, they're not going to do anything for anybody."

But a Pan Am spokesman, Jeff Kriendler, called Genoese "the jerk" and said his words were "completely ridiculous."

"Whereas the leadership may be at warfare with Pan Am, the rank and file are completely loyal to the company. It is not in their hearts to turn their backs on their customers," Kriendler said.

A federal mediator said both sides told him they would act on his request to reevaluate their positions.

"The board will stay in touch with the parties and there will be a resumption of negotiations at an early and appropriate time," said Walter C. Wallace of the federal mediation board.

Negotiations began late Saturday at Wallace's request, and continued for six hours past the strike deadline. When talks broke off Sunday morning, Teamsters leaders promised that union members — reservation clerks, customer service agents and other clerical staff — would continue to work.

The talks resumed in the afternoon at Pan Am headquarters here, but recessed after about a half-hour when the company rejected the mediator's call for arbitration, Genoese said.

Bank bailout denied

DALLAS (AP) — First RepublicBank Corp. took out full-page advertisements in today's editions of local newspapers to reassure depositors it was not involved in merger negotiations and to quell rumors of such transactions.

The advertisement is an open letter to customers of the largest bank holding company in Texas.

"During the past few days, there have been several articles and news stories about the current state of our bank," the ad says. "Many of the items reported in these articles have been misleading and some just plain wrong. Consequently, we feel it necessary to respond to these reports."

Since First RepublicBank reported a $656.8 million loss Jan. 19, rumors have spread about its ability to weather anticipated losses from its $3.9 billion portfolio of troubled loans.

Speculation spread to financial markets last week, sending First RepublicBank's common and preferred stocks tumbling and disrupting its system for raising deposits.

In 1986, cars in Wisconsin traveled an average of 12,317 miles, the highest average in the nation. The national average was 10,433 miles per vehicle per year. The state with the lowest average was New Hampshire at 7,387 miles.

Pump prices down for now

This graph shows which states have the highest milage and use the most gas. Texas was not in the top five.

Meanwhile motorists paid an average half-cent a gallon less for gasoline during the past two weeks than during the previous two weeks, but prices should rise soon, an analyst says.

The average retail price of gasoline fell to 96.12 cents per gallon since the Feb. 5 survey of prices at 15,000 gas stations nationwide, Trilby Lundberg said Sunday.

As of Feb. 19, the average for all grades and types of service including taxes was 96.12 cents, compared with 96.59 cents on Feb. 5, Ms. Lundberg said.

Dean, Owens go toe to toe

By KIT FRIEDEN
Associated Press Writer

DALLAS (AP) — Like the easy-going, down-home characters they portray in their television commercials, sausage kings Jimmy Dean and Jerry Owens don't give the impression they are fighting whole hog for the fattest share of the market.

It seems mostly a gentleman's competition for leadership in the breakfast sausage market between the two Dallas-based companies, whose officials praise each other's products as high quality.

Jimmy Dean Meat Co. ranks first nationally, while the regionally distributed Owens Country Sausage leads in Texas, according to both companies' most recent A.C. Nielsen Co. market share figures that exclude link and microwave sausage.

Each claims to be the leader in the Southwest region, however — although they decline to release those figures.

"They are formidable competitors. We continually go at it tooth and nail with each other," says Jerry Owens, chairman of the venerable, 60-year-old Owens Country Sausage.

Both Jimmy Dean and Jerry Owens personally pitch their products on TV. The two Texans speak with an easy drawl about home and family and hearty breakfasts.

Dean's celebrity status came almost 30 years ago when his "Big Bad John" country-western song hit the charts. He also hosted a television variety show.

Arkansas banks stay at home remain solvent

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Arkansas banks have kept their investments close to home, and Assistant State Bank Commissioner Ronny A. Clay says that may have kept them solvent during 1987.

Some Arkansas banks learned firsthand the dangers of straying too far from home. Many banks suffered from loans to energy and farm interests and some suffered from loans made outside their home markets.

Allegheny International takes Chapter 11

By ALISON LEIGH COWAN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — Allegheny International, the maker of Sunbeam and Oster appliances and Northern electric blankets, filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the United States Bankruptcy Code during the weekend.

But the company, which has secured a new $175 million credit line, does not expect any interruption in its businesses.

The filing was not altogether unexpected, according to bankruptcy attorneys and securities analysts who have followed the Pittsburgh-based company's tortured progress since its chairman, Robert J. Buckley, resigned in late 1986.

The resignation followed the publication of a Business Week cover story that reported instances of poor management and questionable business practices by several of its senior executives. Several shareholders suits followed as well as a lawsuit by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Buckley, who has an unlisted telephone number, could not be reached for comment, but in the past has denied any wrongdoing.

Since then, Oliver S. Travers Jr., the new chairman and chief executive, and Thomas J. Albani, the chief operating officer, have refined the corporate strategy of the unfocused conglomerate they inherited.

For instance, they sold 19 companies that were unrelated to consumer goods and shed foreign subsidiaries to focus on markets closer to home, thereby shrinking the company's sales in half, to about $1 billion. Those strategic shifts and a cost control program enabled management to trim the company's revolving debt burden from $664 million to $221 million.

Today, the company, which was founded in 1929 as Allegheny Ludlum Steel, focuses on consumer durable products such as its Hanson scales and Almet-Lawnlite outdoor and patio furniture, but the improvements came too late to avert the bankruptcy filing, outside observers said on Sunday.

Analysts for the most part have applauded those moves and do not criticize the current management. "All I've seen Travers do is what should have been done all along," said Gregory M. Drahuschak, an analyst with Butcher & Singer a regional brokerage firm in Philadelphia. "Unfortunately, it is coming too late."

Harvey R. Miller, chief bankruptcy attorney at Weil, Gotshal & Manges also was not suprised by the filing in light of the company's publicized management troubles.

"They had a basic cancer, and Herculean efforts might not have been able to overcome what happened to that company," he said.

Crude gains on technical factors

Crude oil posted prices opened at $16.58 today as posted prices remained at $16. Analysts predict prices will continue to drop as OPEC production swells.

Prices rose moderately late Friday, but traders said the rally was largely based on internal market influences and not linked to any outside news developments.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, the March-delivery contract for key West Texas Intermediate crude closed at $16.70 per 42-gallon barrel, up 25 cents from the Thursday close.

Among refined products traded on the exchange, wholesale unleaded gasoline rose 0.46 cent a gallon to 46.43 cents, and wholesale home heating oil rose 0.72 cent a gallon to 45.80 cents.

Much of the action was attributed to short-covering, a price-raising influence caused by traders who buy oil to replace borrowed oil they had sold earlier. Short-covering can raise prices sharply but it is generally a temporary trend.

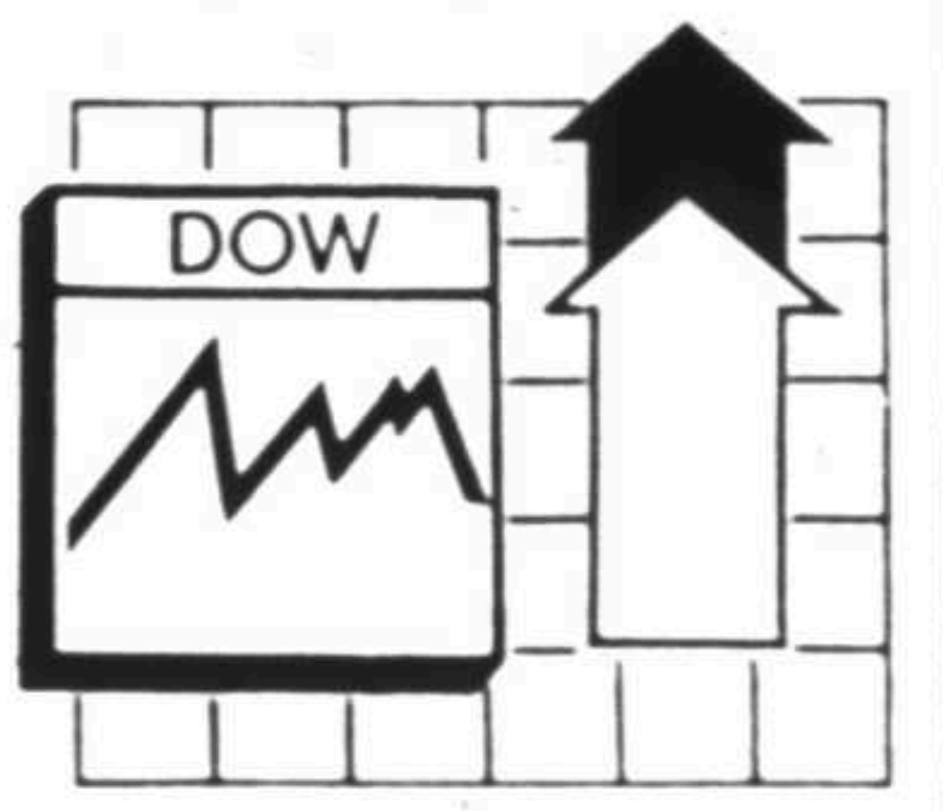
Stocks surge past 2,000 mark



NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market jumped ahead Friday on a late outburst of buying that pushed the Dow Jones industrial average past the 2,000 level to a six week high.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 28.18 points to 2,014.59, its highest close since it stood at 2,051.89 on Jan. 7. For the past week the average showed a net gain of 31.33.

Several analysts at major investment firms have lately grown a bit more optimistic about the outlook for the market, citing signs of strength in the manufacturing sector of the economy.

Buying interest has been evident in some manufacturing stocks and many of the smaller "secondary" issues.

Newton Zinder, an analyst at Shearson Lehman Hutton, said that encouraged traders to step in and buy before the weekend.

Brokers also said the market might have benefited from computer-program activity by professional traders involving an expiring stock-index futures contract.

Airline stocks were strong, helping to lift the Dow Jones average of 20 transportation stocks 19.28 points to 815.54.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market increased $25.82 billion, or 1.01 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks added 1.82 to 146.96.

Nationwide turnover in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 202.85 million shares.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Texaco stock rises on word of Pickens stake

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street sent Texaco Inc.'s stock smartly higher following word that T. Boone Pickens was seeking permission to buy at least 15 percent of the beleaguered oil giant, a stake similar to that already held by fellow corporate raider Carl C. Icahn.

Texaco, which has been reorganizing itself as it prepares to emerge from Chapter 11 bankruptcy protection, has been fighting efforts by Icahn — its largest shareholder — to strip the company of its anti-takeover defenses.

Company officials have feared that Icahn or another raider would try to take the company over and sell its assets to boost the value of their stock. Texaco stock closed Friday at $42.62½ per share, up $1.87½.

Trader charged with weapons possesion

FREEHOLD, N.J. (AP) — A Wall Street speculator has been charged with weapons possession and witness intimidation after authorities alleged he plotted an attack on convicted financier Ivan F. Boesky.

The arrest of John A. Mulheren, once a close associated of Boesky, marked the first public indication of potential violence in the insider trading scandal.

Mulheren, a general partner in the firm Jamie Securities Co., was arrested in possession of an Israeli-made semi-automatic rifle. He was ordered held in lieu of $17,500 after a hearing Friday.

Polaroid seeks $5.7 billion from Kodak

BOSTON (AP) — Polaroid Corp. said it has asked a federal court for $5.7 billion in damages from the Eastman Kodak Co., which was found in 1985 to have infringed on Polaroid patents in the instant photography market.

The request made Friday marks the latest development in a 12-year-old case that forced Kodak out of its $200 million-a-year instant photography business. A hearing is set for March 18 but a trial date has not yet been set.

Gillette to resist attempt to change board

NEW YORK (AP) — Gillette Co. said it would resist Coniston Partners' attempt to place four representatives on its board of directors, setting the stage for a battle that analysts say could end Gillette's lengthy fight to remain independent.

Coniston, which controls a roughly 6 percent stake in the consumer products maker, stated in a Securities and Exchange Commission filing Friday that it intended to nominate four candidates for the board seats up for election at Gillette's annual meeting in April.

Reagan defends policies to Congress

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan defended his tax and budget policies in an election-year economic report to Congress, saying his administration had turned economic despair into hope.

Reagan's seventh annual economic report issued Friday headed off accusations by Democratic presidential candidates that a $2.4 trillion national debt and record trade imbalances during the Reagan years had hobbled the country and eventually would reduce Americans' standard of living.

NBC agrees to sell five radio stations

NEW YORK (AP) — The National Broadcasting Co. said it had tentatively agreed to sell five radio stations to Emmis Broadcasting Corp., a privately-held concern based in Indianapolis, for $121.5 million.

HOG

His answer on how he got into the sausage business is his standard one — even in a telephone interview from his boat, the "Big Bad John," floating somewhere south of Miami where Dean is wintering:

"Had you ever seen my act, you would realize diversification was imperative. I was in the hog business in Plainview and the market fell out and we were losing out. Quality sausage was something I didn't think existed," said Dean, a remark sure to leave the Owens people aghast.

Dean founded the company with his brother, Don, in 1969. But the brothers waged a nine-year legal battle when Jimmy Dean made critical remarks about his brother's management of the company in the 1970s. Don Dean is no longer with the company.

In 1986, Jimmy Dean was ordered by a Dallas jury to pay Don $500,000 in damages for violating a 1980 agreement to keep quiet about his brother. A federal appeals court overturned that last year.

Owens attained his reputation selling sausage as his father, C.B. Owens, did before him. But from his appearance and manner, Owens could easily pass for a country-western star himself.

"Our emphasis is on our family's involvement (with the company) on a day-to-day basis and the family heritage and a history of reliability and consistency," he said, sporting a western-cut corduroy jacket, plaid shirt and thin gold chain around his neck.

Jerry Owens said it never really occurred to him to do anything but take over the family business, which started back in 1938 with the idea of using ham, loin and shoulder cuts in sausage — instead using it to "get rid of the trimmings."

While both companies are headquartered here, both are now owned by bigger out-of-state corporations that allow them to continue to market their products under their own brand names.

While Dean is distributed nationally, Owens is marketed from Arizona to Mississippi and as far north as Oklahoma and Arkansas.

In 1984, Jimmy Dean Meat Co. was acquired by Chicago-based Sara Lee Corp., which also owns other smaller sausage companies. Owens was acquired by Bob Evans Farms Inc. of Columbus, Ohio, in 1987.

"I think that's a big enough market that both are highly regarded in their respective areas. I don't sense that either one is out to murder the other," said Elliott Schlang, senior vice president of Prescott, Ball & Turben, an investment firm in Cleveland.

While both sausage companies' advertising harks back to home cookin' and simpler times, both also are venturing into more modern-day markets — with biscuits and microwave foods that are quick and easy to serve.

BANK

On Sunday, First RepublicBank chairman Gerald W. Fronterhouse issued an unusual statement denying the reports. The company "is not involved in merger or acquisition discussions with anyone. Also, we are not aware that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. is negotiating with any other parties regarding our company."

The FDIC, Fronterhouse said, has assured First RepublicBank "that its policy is to advise the institution before engaging in such negotiations."

The advertisement addresses three points: merger rumors, deposit safety and deposit activity.

"There have been several misleading newspaper stories concerning our bank's recent deposit activity," the advertisement said.

"Through mid-February, the corporation's average total deposits have only declined by approximately 4½ percent this year. More than half of the reduction was an expected decline in foreign deposits, with the balance due primarily to normal seasonal factors."

The letter encouraged First RepublicBank customers to call if they had further questions.

Brazil backs off no-pay policy

By ALAN RIDING
N.Y. Times News Service

RIO DE JANEIRO — When a slump in hard currency reserves forced Brazil to suspend most payments on its $113 billion foreign debt last February, the government felt confident that the moratorium would serve as a weapon for extracting a dramatically better deal from its creditors.

It was an objective shared by other Latin American debtor nations that were trapped in circles of endless debt restructurings. Yet, in the troubled times since the regional debt crisis began in Mexico in August 1982, no country had gambled so daringly as Brazil.

As a result, the attention of the entire international financial community was focused on Brazil in the knowledge that any concessions made to the Third World's largest debtor nation would eventually benefit many smaller and weaker debtors.

Now, only one year later, Brazil has abandoned this policy. Reverting to a more conventional approach, Brazil has agreed not only to end its moratorium but also to accept the once-treasonable idea of negotiating a domestic austerity program with the International Monetary Fund.

Why did Brazil's strategy fail? And what is the incentive for Brazil to end its moratorium when it must dedicate almost its entire trade surplus to servicing its debt rather than to domestic spending?

The country's new Finance minister, Mailson Ferreira da Nobrega, who was in the United States last week to explain Brazil's policy shift, has said he believes the moratorium was a mistake because it created economic uncertainty, discouraged investment and affected credit flows from abroad.

Other Latin Americans appear sobered by Brazil's experience. "It has demonstrated that the costs of a moratorium, such as cuts in credit lines and other losses, are greater than the benefits," said Jose Luis Machiea, president of Argentina's central bank.

The reaction of the Reagan administration, the IMF, the World Bank and leading foreign bankers, in contrast, has been one of relief, praising Brazil's reversal as evidence that the country's traditional pragmatism has once again triumphed and warmly welcoming the West's eighth largest economy back to the fold.

Although creditors are celebrating the apparent defeat of debtors' radical tactics, no new conditions for stable debt management have been created. Rather, Brazil has simply rejoined Mexico, Argentina, Peru and other debtors in what has so far proved to be a futile attempt to rebuild their economies while keeping up debt payments.

In fact, more than five years after the regional crisis erupted, perhaps the only significant development is that many American and European banks, having built up their reserves against losses, have now reduced their vulnerability to temporary suspensions of interest payments and even to defaults.

It became apparent last year that Brazil had overestimated the bargaining power it acquired by suspending payments on the $70 billion it owes to foreign commercial banks (the rest of the $113 billion is owed to national governments and international lending agencies). Rather than scrambling to appease Brazil, both commercial and government creditors quietly retaliated by reducing trade credit lines and delaying other loans. Some Brazilian officials put Brazil's loss during the moratorium at $1 billion.

New teen magazine proves plain-spoken

NEW YORK (AP) — Sassy is making a brash entry into the teen magazine market, promising a plain-spoken approach to sex, death and other topics it contends other teen magazines handle gingerly.

The first issue of the magazine, aimed at teen age girls, appeared on the newsstands last week and set the tone by asking on the cover: "So you think you're ready for sex? Read this first."

Under the headline "Losing your virginity," the story discussed questions like "Will I like it?" "Should I talk during sex?" "Will he know I'm a virgin?" and "How long will it take?"

Another story referenced on the cover of the premiere issue was "Three suicides: Stories you won't forget." In one of the recollections, the mother of a girl who killed herself described what happens in an autopsy.

"We are talking to them as peers just as they talk to each other," said Jane Pratt, the 25-year-old editor in chief of the magazine.

She said the staff develops story ideas by asking themselves what they wanted to know when they were 15 and no one wanted to tell them. In addition to the issue-oriented stories, the magazine also includes lighter topics such as how to flirt and what to do when you think your friends are talking about you.

He said his magazine has carried stories on delicate subjects involving sex but that it takes "a more responsible and educational approach."

Ira Garey, publisher of Seventeen, said his magazine handles similar issues "in a less provocative manner" than Sassy does and has built its circulation over 44 years to more than 1.8 million, tops among the teen magazines.

"We don't feel that gives us a reason to be critical of them, but ultimately it is left to the reader to make the decision," he said.

Sandra Yates, president of Fairfax Publications, said at least $10 million has been invested in the launch, that the initial circulation is 250,000 and that the goal is to reach a circulation of 1 million in five years.

Teenage Research Unlimited, a market research firm based in Lake Forest, Ill., estimates that there are about 13.7 million girls aged 12-19 and that the numbers have been dropping for more than a decade.

While an increase in the number of teen-age girls is not expected for several more years, their buying power continues to grow, making them a compelling target for advertisers.

Peter Zollo, a executive at Teenage Research, said teen-age girls made the decisions on spending $37.7 billion in 1987, up 8.8 percent from 1986.

Sassy is breaking with other teen magazines by taking condom advertising. Seventeen and Teen refuse to accept condom ads because readers may view them as having the implied endorsement of the magazines, Gorey and Brown said.

However, Sassy falls into step with the other teen magazines by rejecting cigarette and liquor ads.

Oddly, while other Latin American countries were waiting to benefit from any Brazilian breakthrough, the Sarney administration made no effort to mobilize other major debtors, such as Mexico and Argentina, to join in a coordinated regional action. Several times he even said Brazil was merely defending its own interests.

Thus, the greatest fear of foreign bankers — a regional default affecting an overall debt approaching $390 billion — never came close to being realized. While major banks were able to form a creditors' cartel through the so-called advisory committees that carry out successive debt restructurings, the banks have never had to face a debtors' cartel.

Eleven Latin American debtor nations did meet in Cartagena, Colombia, in 1984 with the idea of exchanging information and coordinating their policies. And at subsequent sessions they even issued statements calling for reduction of interest rates, resumption of credit flows and greater market opportunities for their exports. But they never debated a joint default.

One crucial reason was that the financial crises of the major debtor nations did not coincide. The separate cycles ran something like this:

—In 1984, when Argentina challenged both its creditors and the IMF, Brazil and Mexico believed their crises were easing and discouraged Argentina from defaulting.

—In 1985, when Peru unilaterally limited its debt payments to 10 percent of its export earnings, it was backed by none of the Big Three debtors and has faced ostracism by the international financial community.

—In 1986, when Mexico's economy was badly hurt by the slump in world oil prices, Mexico came close to suspending payments on its $109 billion debt, but Brazil and Argentina were confident that their own new stabilization programs would succeed, so they offered no support.

—In 1987, when Brazil suspended its payments, Mexico and Argentina had just reached new agreements with their creditors and preferred to watch Brazil's situation from the sidelines.

Yet while Brazil's experience appears to have demonstrated the perils of defaulting, above all for an emerging industrial power with complex international relations, the shadow of a joint moratorium seems likely to linger as long as debtor nations regard their debt burdens as the main cause of economic stagnation.

Renters should know rights say experts

By Chris Barnett
and Art Garcia
Copley News Service

Even though mortgage rates are dropping, home prices are climbing, forcing some 30 million Americans to rent the roofs over their heads and deal with landlords.

That can sometimes be an expensive headache if they do not know what they are entitled to, says a California professor specializing in landlord-tenant law. Renters who don't know their rights and can't afford a lawyer often get shafted in a showdown with the landlord, he adds.

Tenants' rights vary on a city-by-city, state-by-state basis but don't rely on some governmental agency to protect you, says Myron Moskovitz, professor of landlord-tenant law at Golden Gate University in San Francisco and co-author of a meaty, helpful paperback called "Tenants' Rights" (Nolo Press, Berkeley, Calif.). Beware of potential problems before you move in.

For instance, there are three types of rental agreements — a lease, oral agreement and written rental agreeement. Check your local laws, but generally even the oral agreement is legal and enforceable. Moskovitz notes that oral and written rental agreements are usually for tenants who want the flexibility of month-to-month living.

"This means you can move out — or your landlord can raise your rent — on 30 days' notice," says the law professor. Or sometimes you can be evicted with 30 days' notice unless local rent control laws force the landlord to show "just cause." A lease protects you and fixes the rent for a specified period of time, usually a year.

"Because the documents look so much alike," warns Moskovitz, "a lease could contain a provision that the rent be raised or the agreement terminated on 30 days' notice." That lease protects the landlord and shortchanges the renter.

Look out for provisions that can restrict you from finding another tenant to fulfill the lease if you have to move, or bringing in a roommate to perhaps help you share the rent. Beware of any waiver of your rights that make you responsible for repairs, or your right to "legal notice" (where you can be evicted on 24 hours' notice). Does the lease state that you will get 24 hours' notice before the landlord walks in to "inspect" your apartment?

Moskovitz points out that landlords can ask for a "holding deposit" if you like an apartment and want to check out others before you decide. However, if you settle on another apartment, the landlord is not legally bound to return your deposit.

"Be sure you really want the place before giving that kind of deposit."

And if you do take the apartment, agree beforehand, in writing, that the deposit is applied to your first month's rent. And get a receipt for that deposit.

Bond values drop with interest rates

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I keep reading that the values of municipal bonds go down when interest rates go up. I do not understand this. It would appear to me that, as interest rates rise, municipalities have to pay higher rates when they borrow money by issuing bonds. As a result of this, bond owners will receive higher interest payments.

Where does my logic break down?

Doyle

A. No place, if you are talking about bonds issued after interest rates rise. In that case, bond issuers do have to pay higher interest on newly issued bonds and people who buy those bonds collect the higher interest.

It is the values of bonds already issued and "outstanding" — owned by investors — that drop when interest rates go up and rise when interest rates go down.

Let's say you own a $5,000 face value 8 percent Swampville Township bond due to mature in 2010. You know you will collect $400 a year interest and be paid $5,000 when the bond matures, unless Swampville defaults on its debt.

Now, let's say Swampville issues more bonds on which it has to pay 9 percent interest, because interest rates are higher than at the time your bond was issued.

No investor who has both financial oars in the water will pay $5,000 to buy your bond from you, when he or she can get $450 annual interest by putting the same amount of money into Swampville's 9 percent bonds.

Your bonds will fetch a lower price in the marketplace. The market value of "Swampville 8s" has declined. So have the market values of all other fixed-interest investments. That's what is meant when you read that bond values drop when interest rates go up — and bond values rise when interest rates go down.

This applies not only to municipal bonds — those issued by states and their political subdivisions — but to all types of bonds, including corporate bonds issued by companies and U.S. Treasury securities issued by our federal government.

Q. My husband and I have a large part of our assets in U.S. Treasury obligations and certificates of deposit, some of which will mature soon. We would like to have more income to meet the higher cost of living.

Would it be prudent to turn to bonds of non-nuclear electric utilities and telephone companies with AAA and AA ratings?

A. Yes, for straight income purposes. The bonds you are considering pay higher interest than the investments you now hold.

AAA- and AA-rated corporate bonds carry virtually no risk of default. You can buy them with confidence of collecting their stated annual interest and of receiving the bonds' face values when they mature.

Just be aware that, if you have to sell those bonds before their maturity dates, you might get less or more than the prices at which you purchase them — depending on their ups and downs in market value, as bond market values go in the opposite direction of interest rates. But the same thing can be said about Treasury securities. And there are loss-of-interest penalties for cashing CDs before maturity.

Q. Long-term bonds pay higher interest than short-term bonds. Does the risk factor increase with longer maturities?

A. Sure. That's the basic reason bonds bonds with longer maturities must pay higher interest.

However, if you buy high-quality bonds, the "credit risk," that there might be defaults, is almost nonexistent. But that might change over 20 or 30 years.

The "market risk," that the value of a bond might change in the marketplace naturally increases in line with the length of the bond's maturity. The adage goes as follows: The longer the maturity, the higher the yield and the greater the risk.

Regulators find new ways to sell troubled banks

By NATHANIEL C. NASH
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators are employing novel ways to sell billions of dollars in troubled banking assets, including the sale of so-called dirty banks.

The government has decided that if it can sell the entire operation of a failed bank — not just the healthy, "clean" loans and other assets but also the delinquent loans and foreclosed properties — it can save the time, resources, and headaches needed to liquidate the bad assets. In almost every sale, the government actually pays investors to take these sick institutions off its hands.

"We prefer to call these whole-bank transactions," said L. William Seidman, chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., which insures deposits at the nation's commercial and savings banks.

No matter what the terminology, Seidman said, the savings from selling 19 failed banks last year, plus other innovative methods of disposing of bad assets, kept the FDIC from recording the first operating loss in its history.

The quick disposal of troubled assets is a departure for an agency that once tended to hold on to them in hopes that their value would increase in better times. Though many bankers applaud the new approach, some are concerned that the FDIC may be "dumping" these assets on the market. Some bankers worry that if the FDIC liquidates its loans at fire-sale prices, it will depress the value of troubled loans in other banks' portfolios. But FDIC officials reject the dumping charge and say that their policy is to sell the loans only at current market value.

As bank failures have soared from 10 in 1980 to almost 200 last year, the FDIC, whose primary function is that of an insurance fund and regulator of small banks, has developed a gigantic new business — liquidating bad loans and selling foreclosed real estate and other assets inherited from the failed banks.

In a typical bank failure, the FDIC takes over the bank, removes management, and eliminates stockholders equity. Once in control, it removes all the bad loans, which generally caused the failure, and sells the remaining "clean bank," with its healthy loans and deposits, to the highest bidder.

The agency then must begin to liquidate the bad loans and other assets, one by one. This means trying to foreclose on properties, collect from bankrupt businesses and repossess automobiles. Not only does the process require thousands of federal employees, it generates hundreds of lawsuits.

So high has the bank failure rate been that the FDIC's assets under liquidation soared from $2.2 billion in 1982 to more than $11 billion last year, making the agency one of the largest liquidators in the country.

Such levels have pushed the government to develop other techniques for selling large amounts of bad assets. Besides beginning the sale of "dirty" banks, Seidman instituted a bulk sale program, in which an investor can buy millions of dollars of loans at a time.

This was perhaps best illustrated in a sale this month by the FDIC of the entire portfolio of its office in St. Joseph, Mo. From 21 bank failures in the state, the FDIC had amassed a portfolio of more than 2,500 loans and other assets with a book value of $70 million.

Stock Market Rallies

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices hovered in a narrow range today as traders awaited new signs of the outlook for the economy and interest rates.

Gainers outnumbered losers by about 7 to 5 in the overall tally of New York Stock Exchange-listed issues, with 778 up, 552 down and 520 unchanged.

Analysts said traders were looking ahead to congressional testimony Tuesday by Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board.

Several statistical reports are also due this week on such subjects as durable goods orders, the consumer price index and personal income and consumption.

Of special interest to Wall Streeters is the Commerce Department's revised figure for the gross national product in the fourth quarter of last year, scheduled to be issued Thursday.

The department earlier estimated GNP growth, after adjustment for inflation, at a 4.2 percent annual rate in the October-December period. Many analysts believe the new figure will be higher.

Economists at Smith Barney, Harris Upham & Co., for example, say it is possible that the report will show growth of 5.5 percent or more.

Polaroid rose 2¼ to 29¾ and Eastman Kodak dropped 1¾ to 40½. Late Friday it was disclosed that Polaroid was seeking to recover as much as $5.7 billion from Kodak in connection with violations of instant-photography patents.

Among other actively traded blue chips, International Business Machines rose ⅞ to 114¼. Exxon ⅛ to 42⅞, and General Electric ½ to 43¾.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks gained .12 to 147.08. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .58 at 280.74.

Volume on the Big Board came to 73.23 million shares at noontime against 80.38 million at the same point Friday.

WASHINGTON — Clayton K. Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, has privately warned an international conference of government ministers and business executives that the surge of foreign investment in the United States was creating a backlash here.

The warning was made at the World Economic Forum in Davos, Switzerland, earlier this month, according to two participants in the conference. Yeutter. now in Florida, could not be reached for comment, but his press spokesman, Roger Bolton, confirmed that the warning reflected Yeutter's views.

"Ambassador Yeutter has noted increasing concern about foreign investment in the U.S.," said Bolton. "The ambassador has noted that the decline in the value of the dollar has made U.S. assets more attractive to foreign investors."

Yeutter told the international conference that he was especially struck by concerns expressed by Malcolm S. Forbes, owner of Forbes magazine. Last month Forbes proposed creation of a presidential board that would be required to approve all foreign purchases of any significance, regardless of size.

"It's one thing for Japanese and Germans and others to buy U.S. government bonds to finance our huge trade imbalances with them," Forbes wrote in an editorial. "But it's a whole and totally impermissible other thing for them to use their vast billions of dollars to buy great chunks of America's big businesses or take over the high-tech, medical or other strategic, vital U.S. concerns."

Felix G. Rohatyn, a senior partner in the investment banking firm of Lazard Freres & Co., told the Economic Club in Washington last month that the government "may find it necessary to establish a legal mechanism to review potential foreign investments from the point of view of the national interest if they occur in highly concentrated industries or other sensitive parts of the economy."

Rohatyn continued, "No major industrial power in the world, certainly not Japan, not even Britain, allows foreign control of major strategic companies to be acquired without government approval."

Yeutter strongly opposes such proposals, Bolton said, as well as a House-passed measure that would require foreign investors to disclose their identity and holdings.

Foreign investment in the United States, most experts estimate, totals more than $1.5 trillion, of which $1.3 trillion has occurred since 1974.

VA drowning in foreclosures

HOUSTON (AP) — The Veterans Administration in Houston is drowning in a flood of foreclosed homes, many of which are stripped by their owners and remain vacant for long periods before being put back on the market, according to the Houston Chronicle.

According to a copyright story published in Sunday's editions of the newspaper, many former VA employees, property managers and congressional officials feel the problem is due to mismanagement.

But Ted Myatt, director of the VA's Houston office, said a flood of foreclosures and shortage of personnel is at fault.

"Here's a bunch of people who have been working under the gun in the most serious overloaded situation in the VA," Myatt said. "They've been working through hell the past five years."

The Chronicle reported that the swollen inventory of foreclosed homes is costing the agency millions of dollars.

Many homes repossessed by the VA remain vacant for more than year before being put on the market, while some homeowners are permitted to stay in their homes for months after foreclosure, the newspaper reported.

Some former owners strip their homes of appliances before turning them over, the newspaper said.

Bids for repair work are often inflated, and one VA staffer began his own home-cleaning service while still employed by the VA, and obtained three contracts from the administration, the newspaper said.

"This has to be run like a business, and it's not been run like a business," said Anthony Principi, Republican chief counsel and staff director for the Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs.

"We cannot wait for the economic situation in Houston to turn around, because it may never turn around," he said.

The VA backs home loans to military service veterans. If a homeowner falls too far behind in payments, the lender may repossess the home, and the VA may be forced to purchase it under the guarantee.

Of the VA's inventory of 21,000 repossessed homes in the United States, about 7,400 of them are in the South Texas area that includes Houston, the newspaper said.

While the VA is able to sell several hundred of the homes each month, it is adding 300 to 400 new homes to its inventory because of continued foreclosures, the newspaper said.

Dual-fuel cars could cut price hikes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Cars and trucks capable of switching from one fuel to another could discourage future oil price increases by foreign producers, the Energy Department says.

The department says dual-fuel motor vehicles in sufficient numbers on American highways would offer that benefit even if the foreign oil producers also supplied the second, non-petroleum fuel.

In the first of a series of reports planned for this year on alternate fuels, the department says enough twin-fuel vehicles would have to be in use to switch away from about 1 million barrels of oil a day.

The United States uses almost 17 million barrels of oil per day, a bit more than a third of it imported, and five-eighths of it devoted to transportation.

It would take a decade of spending several billion dollars a year to build the plants and distribution system necessary for significant switching ability to methanol or natural gas, the report said.

The department and many in the oil industry are worried that imports will account for 60 percent of supplies by the middle of the next decade. That would give the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries leverage it has been unable to exercise in the surplus-sloshed soft markets of recent years, because OPEC will then have the only spare production capacity available in the world.

The department promised more detailed reports on the experience of other countries, supply prospects, environmental effects and a cost-benefit analysis later this year. The most recent report was described as "context and analytical framework."

"Whatever strategy the country goes with has got to withstand cyclical swings in oil prices," said Scott Campbell, director of the office of policy, planning and analysis, whose staff did the work.

Though other approaches should be pursued, only methanol "appears at this stage of the assessment to be a fuel with clear potential for meeting a significant percentage of this country's transportation fuel demand in the short run," the study said.

The study director, Vito Stagliano, estimated that a dual-fuel car would cost $50 to $350 more in volume production. Ford Motor Co. already has produced several hundred.

To cut oil demand by 1 million barrels a day, the report estimated these needs:

—Ten new methanol plants each year for a decade, costing a total of $20 billion to $25 billion.

—Development of 10,000 to 30,000 alternative-capable retail outlets a year, with an eventual total of 150,000 stations costing more than $5 billion in all. No cost estimate was given for changing pipelines, barges and other distribution facilities to methanol.

—Methanol-compatible vehicles entering the motor vehicle fleet at a rate of 1.5 million to 8 million a year. There are more than 170 million cars, trucks and buses on U.S. highways now.

Except in emergencies, motorists would not use methanol unless it were "perceptibly less expensive ... more than two gallons of methanol are needed to provide the mileage obtainable with a gallon of gasoline.

"Nevertheless, it is conceivable that the very prospect of seeing large volumes of the demand for oil translate into demand for alternative fuels will in itself discourage future increases in oil prices," the report said.

Methanol is made most cheaply from natural gas. The report observed that although the United States is the world's biggest methanol producer, it has been a net importer since 1982, and Middle Eastern countries can produce at half the U.S. cost.

Middle Eastern countries could supply U.S. methanol needs economically, but "any increase in the total potential supply of liquid fuels in the world should tend to enhance U.S. energy security, because it would cause the world energy market to loosen up," the report said.

A methanol cartel that raised prices would call forth increased supplies from elsewhere, just as oil output expanded elsewhere in the 1970s after OPEC began steep price hikes, the report said.

Loan demand shows strong economy

By ROBERT A. BENNETT
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Judging by corporate loan demand at banks across the nation, the nation's economy remains strong, if spotty, with many smaller businesses particularly robust.

In interviews last week, many bankers said they were surprised at the continued strength of the economy in their own markets. Several bankers said such resiliency had made them far more optimistic about the economic outlook than they were after last October's severe stock market drop.

"If you had called me in June and asked if we expected 11.8 percent growth in the last quarter of 1987, I would have said no," said James D. Dixon, chief financial officer at the Citizens and Southern Georgia Corp., which operates throughout Georgia, Florida, and South Carolina. "Our planning has been for loan growth in the 8 percent to 10 percent range for 1988. We're experiencing greater growth than that right now." And right now is a time when loan demand is usually sluggish.

Dixon, like bankers elsewhere in the nation, attributed part of the increase in loan demand to the growth of exports, resulting from the lower value of the dollar.

"Manufacturing is coming back," he said. "Exports are helping the textile industry."

Economists regard corporations' loan demand as an important indicator of overall economic health. When business is brisk, companies generally need more credit to buy raw materials, meet expanded payrolls, add new equipment, and build plants.

But much of the present demand for credit appears to be from smaller companies, not large ones. Most of Citizens and Southern's corporate customers have annual sales of $100 million or less. Major New York banks would consider a company with $100 million in sales to be small.

Geographically, too, loan growth has not been even. It seems slowest in areas like the Southwest, which is in the middle of a steep recession.

But loan demand appears to remain strong among small to mid-size companies in the Southeast, the Northeast, the Midwest, and on the West Coast.

"Our loan demand is still brisk," said Robert A. Schack, senior vice president in charge of commercial lending in Southern California for the Security Pacific National Bank.

Part of the demand, he said, is for acquisitions among mid-size companies, part is for capital equipment, and part is for working capital. Schack said loan growth at his unit was between 15 percent and 20 percent.

Lynn Fetterly, who heads Security Pacific's nationwide commercial finance affiliate, said last week that his unit — which makes only secured loans — had just reviewed its outlook and concluded that there had been "no softening of demand."

He attributed part of the strength to the stock market's collapse. Because of sharply lower stock prices, he said, it has become harder for companies to raise money by selling stock, so they turn to borrowing. Also, he said, some banks are adopting more cautious lending policies. Companies that the banks have turned down often go to finance companies, where loans are secured, usually at considerably higher rates.

At the First National Bank of Chicago, William E. Moeller, executive vice president in charge of its North American banking group, said that loan demand by middle-market companies was fairly brisk.

"Appetite for middle-market loans implies a pretty good manufacturing rate," Moeller said, attributing the pace to the rise in exports.

But some bankers said they remained wary about the economy, despite fairly strong loan demand, and were cutting back a bit on lending, in case the economy founders.

In Providence, R.I., Thomas J. Skala, senior executive vice president of the Fleet National Bank, said loan demand was good but not as strong as it was six months ago. "Businesses are a bit more cautious," he said. "The optimism of our customers has been tempered."

Punk teens among mourners at funeral for Minnesota family

ROCHESTER, Minn. (AP) — Teen-agers dressed in punk fashions were among more than 1,000 mourners who packed a church for the funeral of four family members who police believe were hacked to death with an ax by a 16-year-old son.

Two bishops, nine priests and a monsignor presided over a 90-minute Mass Sunday at Pax Christi Catholic Church for Bernard and Paulette Brom and two of their children, 11-year-old Rick and 14-year-old Diane.

David Brom, a high school sophomore described as a gentle boy who wrote poetry but who also favored hard-core punk music, was charged with murder Friday in the deaths of his parents and younger brother and sister.

"We have no idea what all these things can mean," said the Rev. Syl Brown, Pax Christi's pastor. "They have left so many memories," he said of the Broms, active members of the church.

"We come here with a spirit of absolute loss. We have no idea what response we can make. But we can see the light their lives has given us," he said.

The service included readings by classmates of Diane and Rick, and presentations of symbolic gifts. Among the gifts was a high school basketball trophy given in memory of Diane, who had been a cheerleader for her school's basketball team.

After the service, about 100 people braved a raw wind at Calvary Cemetery for the burial. The family's oldest son, Joseph, 19, appeared stoic at the graveside. Joseph, who did not live with his family, has asked to be appointed guardian of David.

Authorities have not yet determined a motive for the slayings. Sheriff Charles Von Wald has said he understands that David had argued recently with his father about a music cassette. The Rev. Jack Krough, chaplain at Rochester Lourdes High School, said friends had recently heard David muse about wanting to hurt his family.

A favorite of David's, according to one friend, is the group Suicidal Tendencies. A song on their latest album describes "the maniac I'll meet. His love for me is like a father to a son. And now the maniac and I are one."

At Lourdes High School, teachers and psychologists are monitoring David's classmates for signs of depression.

"The difficult time is yet to come," said Dennis L. Gannon, a licensed psychologist who interviewed about 50 of David's classmates.

Some will sink into depression in 15 to 20 days, he said. Some will withdraw, while others will become unruly and irritable. Some will pull out of the depression in a few days, while others may sink deeper.

"Some of them will have a difficult time working this through," Gannon said. "They'll say things like, 'What's the use, what's the point of going on?' "

By MIKE FEINSILBER
Associated Press Writer

Political observers, trying to predict how the Pat Robertson wild card will play on Super Tuesday, are speculating that he'll win some Southern GOP primaries and come in second in others.

The former television evangelist, son of a Virginia senator, stands to pick up a bundle of delegates. Up for grabs on March 8 are 700 Republican delegates — more than half of what it will take to win the nomination.

But even seasoned political professionals are having trouble gauging the size of Robertson's following. Many evangelical Christians, his core of support, usually don't vote, especially in primaries.

"We've got seven phone lines and they're jammed with calls these days," says North Carolina GOP chairman Jack Hawke. "People are asking questions you just don't hear a lot — how is a precinct organized, how is a person registered. It leads me to believe they (Robertson supporters) are active across the state."

Robertson has rivals worried elsewhere.

"I think Robertson in Tennessee is going to do pretty well," said Tommy Harper, Tennessee campaign manager for Bush. A worker at Bush headquarters, speaking on condition she not be quoted by name, goes further: "Robertson is the one we are really worried about."

"Robertson will probably come in second in Georgia — if he doesn't come in first," says Georgia GOP chairman emeritus Bob Bell. "You don't know how many people are out there in the invisible army and how many will come out to vote. But they're committed with a burning zeal."

"You get the impression that Robertson followers, who have had phone banks working for several months, are identifying those needing to register," says Steve French, political director of the Alabama Republican Party. He sees no prospect of a Robertson win in Alabama, however.

"Texas is shaping up to be a Bush vs. Robertson race," says Bush's son, George Walker Bush, campaigning for his father in one of the states the vice president calls home.

"I think Bush's biggest competition in the South will come from Robertson," says political scientist Merle Black at the University of North Carolina. "It's not inconceivable that he could beat Bush in some of these states."

All told, Republican primaries will be held on Super Tuesday in a dozen Southern states — Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee and Texas.

Three states outside the South — Massachusetts, Missouri and Rhode Island — also hold Republican primaries, and Robertson is weak in all three. But he is well-organized in Washington state, which will hold caucuses.

Washington state GOP Chairwoman Jennifer Dunn says Robertson, Dole and Bush are too closely clumped to make a prediction. But Robertson chairman Bruce Hawkins brags: "We're not just going to take it, we're going to sweep it."

In Arkansas, where Robertson swept a straw vote at a Republican rally Jan. 23 with 60 percent, Kip Blakely, executive director of the state Democratic Party, predicts Robertson will win the primary. "I think it's his," he says.

"You take Hopkins County, a very conservative, Bible-Belt area which had a 16 percent increase in (Republican) registration from May to October," observes Stan B. Smith, political director for the Kentucky GOP. "You got to feel, if you put two and two together, that a lot of that is Robertson."

Robertson scored a strong second, behind Dole, in the Iowa caucuses, bumping Bush into a painful third-place finish. Then came New Hampshire, and Robertson finished last, with 10 percent of the vote.

In interviews with AP reporters in all the Super Tuesday states, officials from both parties and from the Robertson, Dole and Bush camps consistently made these points:

— Much depends on what happens on Saturday, March 5 in South Carolina. All hands agree that a strong Robertson showing in the state could give him a big boost three days later. Robertson claims he is ready to pull a stunner.

— Even the professisonals find Robertson's strength hard to gauge because so much of it comes from the evangelical Christian community that has sat out past elections.

"It's really tough to get a reading on Pat Robertson's support in Missouri because his forces do not travel in traditional Republican circles," says Tony Feather, executive director of the state GOP. "Maybe it's their strategy just to lay low."

"They are turning out people in precincts where we haven't had any organization before," says Hawke. Says his Democratic counterpart, Jim Van Hecke: "I think he's scared the established Republican Party to death."

In Oklahoma, registration officials note a surge of voters shifting from Democratic to Republican, and some say Robertson accounts for it. In Comanche County, 123 people switched registration this year; four years ago, the number was 29.

— In states where voters can choose which party's primary to take part in, Democrat Albert Gore, a Southerner appealing for conservative and moderate support, is likely to be hurt most by the drift to the Republican primary by those who feel a tug toward Robertson.

— Robertson will win many votes that would otherwise go to his fellow conservative, Rep. Jack Kemp. Hillard Selck, Missouri Republican chairman, says of Robertson and Kemp: "They'll wrestle around until one of them is eliminated."

— Robertson's claim nine days ago that the Russians have missiles in Cuba — swiftly disputed by the White House — is not hurting him among many voters. "The people who support him, they think it may be true," says Tom Coker, a veteran political operative for the Business Council of Alabama.

Baby with no brain potential transplant donor

LOMA LINDA, Calif. (AP) — A Texas baby born with nearly no brain was on life-support equipment today as a potential organ donor, after a similar infant was taken off life support machinery, officials said.

Both newborns, born with the birth defect known as anencephaly, or severely underdeveloped brains, were part of a controversial program at Loma Linda University Medical Center preserving brain-dead anencephalic infants for use as organ donors.

The practice has drawn fire from right-to-life groups charging cruelty, and from medical ethicists, who say it is questionable to keep the babies on life support when they have no chance at long-term survival.

Evelyn Keys, born Saturday in San Antonio, Texas, was flown to Loma Linda that night to be used in the donor program.

She arrived just hours after a child identified only as Baby John was taken off life support when a worldwide search failed to turn up any needy organ recipients matching his tissue type, said hospital spokeswoman Anita Rockwell.

Anencephalic babies usually die shortly after birth, and Loma Linda, where infant heart transplants have become routine, wants to establish a practice of sustaining such babies so their organs can be transplanted after brain death is certified by two independent physicians.

Hospital officials said removal of Baby John's heart valve was the first use of body parts from a U.S. anencephalic infant. Loma Linda previously transplanted the heart from an anencephalic baby declared brain-dead in Canada.

Baby Evelyn was born to Judy Keys, 22, and Airman Todd Keys, 21, of the 6993rd Electronic Security Squad at Lackland Air Force Base.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR CLASS I HAZARDOUS AND NON-HAZARDOUS INDUSTRIAL SOLID WASTE PROCESSING AND DISPOSAL FACILITY PERMIT

SHELL OIL COMPANY, P.O. Box 2352, Odessa, Texas 79760, has applied to the Texas Water Commission for a permit (Proposed Permit No. HW-50152-000) to authorize the continued operation of a Class I hazardous and non-hazardous industrial solid waste processing and disposal facility associated with its Odessa Refinery. A compliance plan (Compliance Plan No. CP-50152) which requires the permittee to comply with applicable groundwater protection standards is also being proposed for this facility. The proposed compliance plan also requires the permittee to perform RCRA Facility Investigations to determine the necessity of corrective action. The wastes to be managed at this facility are Class I and Class II industrial solid wastes including hazardous wastes generated as a result of production activities at the Odessa Refinery. Authorized wastes include API separator sludge, cooling tower sludge, bundle cleaning sludge, leaded tank bottoms, spent catalyst, contaminated filter media, unleaded tank bottoms, contaminated dirt, holding pond sludge, attapulgus clay, and caustic tank bottoms. The waste management facility consists of a land treatment unit comprised of six (6) treatment plots divided by earthen berms with a maximum area of 24 acres and a maximum treatment zone depth of 5 feet. The applicant is to secure and maintain in full force at all times a bond or other financial assurance to provide for proper and adequate closure of this facility.

The facility is located on a tract of land owned by Shell Oil Company, approximately 3 miles south of downtown Odessa and approximately one mile south of the intersection of IH20 and Grandview Avenue, in Ector County, Texas. This location is in the drainage area of Segment 1412 of the Colorado River Basin (North Latitude 31 degrees 49'05", West Longitude 102 degrees 19'20").

The Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission has prepared a draft permit and compliance plan which, if approved by the Commission, will authorize the continued operation of this facility under the terms described above. The Executive Director has also prepared a summary of the applicant's compliance history at the facility, copies of which are available upon request.

Legal Authority:
Section 26.028 of the TEXAS WATER CODE, as amended, Section 4(e) of the SOLID WASTE DISPOSAL ACT (Article 4477-7, Texas Revised Civil Statutes); 31 TAC Chapters 305 and 335 of the Rules of the Texas Water Commission.

This notice satisfies the requirements of the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA), as amended, 42 U.S.C. Section 6901 ET SEQ. and 40 CFR Section 124.10. The draft permit and compliance plan if issued by the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency (EPA), will implement the requirements of the Hazardous and Solid Waste Amendments of 1984, amending the federal Solid Waste Disposal Act, as amended. The Texas Water Commission and EPA have entered into a joint permitting agreement whereby permits may be issued in Texas in accordance with the Texas Solid Waste Disposal Act, Article 4477-7, V.A.C.S., and the Hazardous and Solid Waste Amendments of 1984, until the State hazardous program receives interim or final authorization under RCRA to administer the requirements of the HSWA. In order for the applicant to have a fully effective RCRA permit and compliance plan, both the TWC and the EPA must issue the permit and compliance plan. All permit and compliance plan provisions are fully enforceable under Texas law after issuance by the Texas Water Commission. The permit and compliance plan terms are also enforceable by EPA. EPA may participate in the informal public session of a public hearing.

The Commission will provide an informal public hearing session if a written notice of opposition and request for hearing is received within 45 days of the date of publication of the notice of application. The written notice of opposition and request for such hearing must be accompanied by a statement that an aesthetic, conservational, recreational or economic interest of the requestor is or may be adversely affected by the granting of the application. It is presumed that residents, property owners or individuals doing business in the local area meet this test. Any person will be allowed to make oral or written statements at the informal public hearing session. The Executive Director of the Texas Water Commission will consider any information submitted in making a final recommendation and will respond in its recommendation to the Texas Water Commission and subsequently in writing at the time the final decision is made, to any significant comments make at or in connection in the informal public hearing session.

No evidentiary public hearing will be held on this application unless an affected person who has received notice of the application has requested an evidentiary public hearing. Any such request for an evidentiary public hearing shall be in writing and contain (1) the name, mailing address and phone number or the person making the request and (2) a brief description of how the requester, or persons represented by the requester, would be adversely affected by the granting of the application. If the Commission determines that the request sets out an issue which is relevant to the permit decision, or that an evidentiary public hearing world serve the public interest, the Commission shall conduct an evidentiary public hearing, after issuance of proper and timely notice of the hearing. If no sufficient request for hearing is received within 45 days of the date of publication of the notice concerning the application, the permit will be submitted to the Commission for final decision on the application.

Requests for an evidentiary public hearing, and/or an informal public hearing session, and/or requests for further information concerning any aspect of the application should be submitted in writing to Duncan Norton, Assistant Chief Hearings Examiner, Texas Water Commission, P.O. Box 13087, Capitol Station, Austin, Texas 78711, Telephone 512/463-7875. Written comments on the application should be submitted to the same address within 45 days of the date of publication of the notice of application.
