Six missing after bridge collapses

Cars plunge into water off section of California Interstate 5

■ Gale-force Pacific storms leave at least eight dead, thousands homeless, 38 counties declared disaster areas.

Associated Press Writer

COALINGA, Calif. — Search teams flew over a flood-swollen creek in central California on Saturday to look for six people missing after a bridge collapsed and their cars plunged into the swirling waters.

One body was spotted before the search was abandoned because of threatening weather.

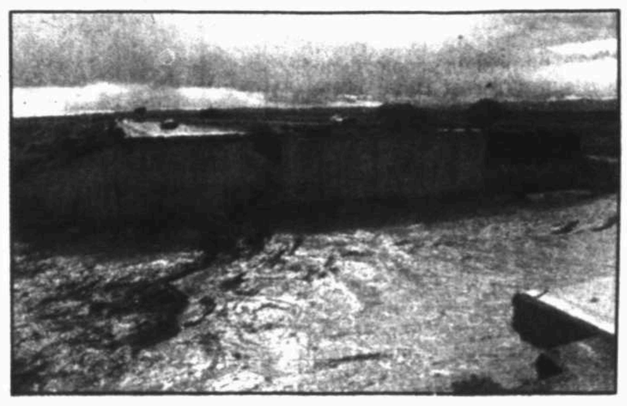

The 100-foot section of Interstate 5 sank Friday night as California endured another in a series of gale-force Pacific storms that have left at least eight dead, thousands homeless and 38 counties declared disaster areas.

Evacuations continued in Northern California's Monterey County, where the Salinas and Carmel rivers flooded, cutting bridges and stranding residents in low-lying areas. Rain subsided in the region as the storm moved south.

The I-5 freeway collapse near Coalinga closed a 10-mile section of the main artery through sopping farm land about 50 miles west of Fresno.

Abilene could provide clues for renovation of downtown

ABILENE — Abilene has something that many Midlanders want: life downtown.

In the last decade, downtown Abilene — once tarnished with empty sidewalks, boarded buildings and vacant offices and stores — has produced an eclectic mix of restaurants, stores, public buildings and other attractions.

A group of Midlanders — in their quest to revitalize downtown Midland — traveled to Abilene Thursday to view that city's success as inspiration for ideas.

Although the historic buildings of Abilene and the office towers of Midland may be comparing apples and oranges, there remains a common thread: a potential for revitalization coupled with a determination by city leaders and the community.

"We use any and every resource we can come up with," said Mike Morrison, director of economic development for the city of Abilene.

The beginning of downtown Abilene's revitalization can be marked by the creation of a tax increment financing district (TIF) in January 1983, according to Vicki Brown, downtown manager for economic development for the city of Abilene.

After the creation of a TIF, any property taxes collected on the property values above the amount

Mexican officials expect enraged reaction to new economic policy

MEXICO CITY (NYT) — Mexican officials are bracing for several months of rising social tensions and fierce political struggles as people throughout the nation react angrily to the severe economic shock treatment that the government hopes will pull Mexico out of its worst crisis in a decade.

Tough new measures imposed by the government on Thursday will mean that at least 500,000 people will lose their jobs over the next two months, officials say, on top of 250,000 who have already been let go in the first two months of this difficult year.

'They raise the price of electricity, of gas, of transportation... This country is rich, but it is governed by bad people.'
— Joaquin Abonce, locksmith

Thousands of businesses are expected to go bankrupt as the Mexican economy sinks into a recession that will last all year. Interest rates of 90 percent and higher on mortgages, credit cards and car loans will push many families into insolvency.

Millions of Mexicans awoke on Friday morning to find that gasoline prices had jumped a third overnight and electricity costs were up 20 percent. The government also plans to increase its value-added tax, a sort of national sales tax, by half.

The measures have already caused a wave of indignation throughout Mexico. "We need a capable government, not one that is always trying to hurt us," said Joaquin Abonce, 65, a locksmith who had just finished paying his monthly electric bill in Mexico City.

"They raise the price of electricity, of gas, of transportation, and then everything goes up. This country is rich, but it is governed by bad people."

Officials at the highest level in the government said the hardship caused by the new plan would add to the existing turmoil caused by investigations that implicate the government in two sensational

Force behind water-source development, Ivie, to retire

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

BIG SPRING — O.H. Ivie, the tenacious and "remarkably perceptive" engineer who has been at the forefront in developing water supplies for West Texas, is retiring this year as general manager of the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

Ivie, 70, has been involved in developing ground-water fields and surface water sources through three West Texas lakes since the early 1950s.

His most recent CRMWD project, in cooperation with Midland and other users and future users — such as Abilene and San Angelo — is the completion of the $194 million Lake O.H. Ivie and the 157-mile Lake Ivie pipeline from a lake near Ballinger to the Midland-Odessa area.

America must go overseas for oil, Conoco official says

By John Paul Pitts
Business/Oil Editor

America has an appetite for cheap energy that cannot be satisfied by its declining oil fields, and if it is to continue its present standard of living it must go overseas and deal with cultures with standards far different from its own, said R.M. Bob Irelan, district manager of Conoco Exploration and Production Division in Midland.

"As we look to provide oil and gas for this nation, it is obvious oil companies can't do it in this country, especially as long as government decides to keep us out of areas such as offshore California and Alaskan National Wildlife Refuge," Irelan said. "That is why we have to make deals with nations like Iran."

10 die in election violence in India

PATNA, India (AP) — An official whose jeep hit a land mine was among 10 people killed Saturday as one of India's most violence-wracked states held an election under heavy police and army guard.

Elections in Bihar state were delayed for a week while the government sent in 52,000 police and soldiers, but few were posted in the villages where violence broke out. More than 50 people have been killed during campaigning.

Preliminary results from states that voted last week indicated a setback for the Congress Party of Prime Minister P.V. Narasimha Rao in Gujarat and Maharashtra, two states they have been traditionally ruled.

The first two winners in Maharashtra, where the commercial capital Bombay is located, were from the Hindu extremist Shiv Sena group. Final results are expected today.

A strong showing by Hindu extremists could increase Hindu-Muslim tensions and heighten pressure on Rao to slow market reforms.

As voting began Saturday, a landmine blamed on left-wing rebels killed Magistrate D.M. Sharma and his driver in a jeep in southern Bihar, the United News of India news agency said.

In nearby districts, dozens of clashes broke out near polling booths, killing eight people, including a supporter of Bihar state's governing Janata Dal Party, Press Trust of India reported.

Bihar, one of India's most poverty-stricken areas, is sharply divided along caste lines. Wealthy upper-caste landlords and many politicians use private armies to settle political rivalries.

In Gaya District, an Associated Press reporter saw Janata Dal workers preventing supporters of other parties from voting in rural areas. Most of the government forces were deployed in towns and cities..

In northern India, more than 1,000 riot policemen took up positions on the streets of Aligarh after Hindu-Muslim clashes that erupted Friday after a Muslim man allegedly molested a Hindu girl killed five people and wounded 17.

Iraq opens oil conference, calls for end to economy-crippling sanctions

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Iraq opened its first international oil conference since the Gulf War on Saturday with an appeal for the lifting of U.N. sanctions that have crippled its economy.

The meeting, which has drawn more than 120 oil industry experts from 23 countries, is designed in part to signal that Iraq is ready to resume its place as a major petroleum producer.

But it also is a forum for Baghdad to express its anger over the U.N. embargo, imposed after Saddam Hussein's 1990 invasion of Kuwait.

The sanctions ban the export of oil, the nation's economic mainstay, making it difficult for Iraq to afford even basic imports. Prices have skyrocketed, putting meat, new clothes and medicine out of reach of most Iraqis.

"The U.N. Security Council must live up to its responsibilities, especially that Iraq has met its obligations under the U.N. resolutions," Oil Minister Safa Jawad al-Haboubi said at the opening of the two-day conference.

In a remark aimed at the United States and its allies, he added: "Those who still advocate the continuation of the embargo are running out of excuses, and they stand to be seen as abusing the power entrusted to them by the international community."

The Security Council is scheduled to meet Monday to review the embargo.

World leaders unite against poverty at summit

COPENHAGEN, Denmark (AP) — A parade of national leaders railed in unison against poverty at a global summit Saturday, but offered few hard promises to tackle the planet's worst ills.

In an array of languages and styles, leaders at the U.N. summit said poverty and unemployment threaten political stability. But many bristled at the United States and other rich nations for refusing to pay more to help the Third World.

"We move from one major conference to another, pronouncing with lofty intentions global action programs, but we never ... make available the means of implementation," said Malaysian Prime Minister Mahathir Mohamad.

"The developing world must not continue to be looked upon as a bottomless pit," he told the 193-nation summit.

The leaders used eloquent phrases to summon up the misery of poverty, while placing thinly disguised blame on one another.

Some 120 leaders, whose speeches will last all weekend, signaled a willingness to implement goals set out in a watered-down statement to be signed today.

The final document has been criticized for containing only vague commitments.

'Although financial aid is important, we must rid ourselves of the misconception that social progress can be bought with money alone.'
— Helmut Kohl
German chancellor

But the declaration also has been praised as the first step against some of the world's worst problems. Supporters say it will provide impetus and a road map for action for years to come.

President Nelson Mandela of South Africa called the gathering a success.

"The mere sitting together by the leaders of the world to address common problems is in itself, without any specific achievement that can be quantified, extremely important," Mandela said. "Sitting down to address problems cuts them down sometimes by 25 and even 50 percent."

The document outlines general goals for lifting more than a billion people from absolute poverty, educating more girls to become productive workers, lowering import barriers to Third World goods and erasing the debt of the poorest countries.

But developed countries — planning further cuts in foreign aid — essentially have tried to convince the Third World to do more on their own — and with less aid.

"Although financial aid is important, we must rid ourselves of the misconception that social progress can be bought with money alone," said German Chancellor Helmut Kohl.

"During more than 30 years of development cooperation, we have all learned that the key to success is help towards self-help," Kohl said.

In a meeting hall brimming with fezzes, turbans and gilded robes alongside pinstriped suits, U.N. Secretary-General Boutros Boutros-Ghali warned that "whole societies will be left by the wayside" without economic development.

Ukrainian President Leonid Kuchma called economic development a "guarantee of peace and stability, not only in (individual) countries but in the region as a whole."

Chinese Premier Li Peng said: "When a people has to endure prolonged destitution in abysmal existence, this often is the crucial factor that could touch off a social upheaval and even a violent conflict."

Danish Prime Minister Poul Nyrup Rasmussen urged cancellation of debt for countries strapped with huge loans, saying it was of "biggest importance" to developing nations.

The politically delicate suggestion got only lukewarm support. The final document makes debt relief voluntary, and so far only Austria and Denmark have cancelled loans totalling $266 million.

Indonesian President Suharto linked debt relief to progress in poorer countries. Pakistan's President Farooq Ahmad Khan Leghari said the Third World was being "straight-jacketed by the burden of external debt."

Francois Mitterrand, perhaps making his last appearance as French president at a global forum, encouraged his counterparts to take an active role in guiding the world's economy.

NATION

Heavy rains eased Saturday over Northern California and moved south, where flooding washed out a bridge near Fresno. Temperatures thawed in the East as arctic air moved out of northern New England.

The storm system in the West has drenched California with as much as a foot of rain in the last two days. Coastal mountains in Monterey County have recorded 20 inches of rain since Wednesday.

Record flooding covered major roads and highways in the Napa and Russian River valleys north of San Francisco Bay and San Jose. Mudslides closed parts of Highway 101, the Pacific Coast Highway.

In central California, a 100-foot chunk of Interstate 5 collapsed Friday night with several cars on it.

In all, the gale-force Pacific storms have left at least six people dead and thousands homeless.

At higher elevations of the Sierra Nevada, up to 6 feet of snow fell.

Southern California got record rains, with Bakersfield and Los Angeles reporting over 2 inches on Friday. Malibu reported almost 4 inches overnight and El Toro received almost 4 inches since midnight.

In the East, arctic air retreated from northern New England. A few spots in Maine reported morning lows in the minus 20s. The wind chill in Houlton, Maine made it feel like 25 below zero.

BRIDGE: Cars plunge into swollen creek from interstate were in the first two cars that dropped the 10 to 20 feet into the creek. The driver of the third managed to get out and hang precariously from a tree ..ntil he was rescued.

One horrified family tried in vain to stop cars from plunging into the river, said California Highway Patrol spokesman Dave Sigler.

"The occupants said they saw at least one red car ... go off in front of them," he said. "They stopped and tried to flag down two more cars who came up behind, but the others just went by them."

A car containing at least one body was spotted two miles downstream from the freeway collapse. But searchers couldn't get into the vehicle, and abandoned the effort for the day when more rain threatened.

"It will take days before the ground is dry enough to get mechanical equipment down there," paramedic Scott Davis said.

A highway patrol plane and a helicopter had used the closed freeway as a landing strip to survey the roiling, muddy waters of Arroyo Pasajero Creek. A search team in a four-wheel drive made its way along the banks.

Elsewhere, two cross-country skiers caught in a blizzard were found dead Saturday at the Heavenly Valley ski resort near Lake Tahoe on the California-Nevada state line.

The California National Guard earlier called for the evacuation of 400 people from the town of Tehama on the Sacramento River. But Mayor Ron Warner said city officials decided not to evacuate because the river level was dropping.

Officials in Monterey were evacuating hundreds of people from the town of Pajaro, where up to 3 feet of water flowed through the streets.

"It's not safe for people — some are standing on their roofs," said county official Rosie Pando.

She said bridges across the Carmel River have collapsed, isolating the community of Carmel Heights. "They have no phones — we don't know what's going on up there," she said.

Pacific Gas & Electric Co. officials said 64,000 homes and businesses remained without power Saturday night in the northern part of the state, and some are likely to remain dark through the weekend.

William Rukeyser of the state Office of Emergency Services said officials worried about unstable hillsides in Southern California.

Other victims of the storm included a person killed Friday in San Luis Obispo County when a car went off a road, officials said Saturday.

In Santa Barbara County, a man killed when a wall of water swept him out of his Sycamore Canyon home was identified as retired federal Judge Edward Schiff, 65, said police Sgt. Brian Abbott. Schiff's wife held onto the doorway and was rescued by firefighters.

Elsewhere in the county, authorities Saturday discovered the body of an 18-year-old woman who had tried to ford a creek.

A transient who fell asleep by a flood control channel in Los Angeles was found dead on a San Fernando Valley golf course Saturday morning after water rose and swept him away, police said.

Another person was killed when a car flew off the Pasadena Freeway and plunged into the rain-swollen Arroyo Seco flood control channel early Saturday.

Mudslides inundated large sections of Pacific Coast Highway in Malibu, damaging some roadside homes and blocking access.

More mud flowed through parts of La Conchita, but the tiny Ventura County town where nine homes were destroyed by a collapsing bluff a week ago did not suffer the massive slide authorities say is inevitable.

Blackouts hit some 17,000 customers in the Los Angeles area overnight, but most outages were fixed quickly. Freeway traffic became snarled as low-lying sections of roadway flooded.

Back in Northern California, some areas were recovering — slowly.

About half of 600 evacuees in hard-hit St. Helena along the Napa River were allowed to return home, but many elderly residents of the Vineyard Valley mobile home park weren't so lucky.

Most of the 233 units remain uninhabitable, said owner Richard McDonnell.

"There is a lot of mud, a lot of silt. It's slippery. It's very, very dangerous," he said.

In Santa Cruz County, 2,700 people were evacuated, most in farming areas around Watsonville. County residents had watched in horror as the San Lorenzo River rose to its highest point since disastrous floods in the early 1980s, but the worst appeared to be over Saturday.

David Keller, who picked a home in Felton along the river because he liked to fish, said he hadn't expected the fish to end up in his yard.

"I thought I could fish off my back deck every day, but I don't like to fish this much," he said.

EXPECT: Officials brace for people's reaction to new plan political murders and the social conflicts in states like Chiapas, where an armed rebellion that started 15 months ago has yet to be quelled.

And the same backlash could easily cost the ruling Institutional Revolutionary Party the four state governorships that are to be decided in elections this year. Last month, the party lost the governor's race in the state of Jalisco.

"Without a doubt, the economic crisis is going to cause enormous social pressure," said one senior government official who spoke on the condition that he not be identified.

The official said the public outcry would be great, and the demonstrations as well. But he said he did not think protests would necessarily be violent or would threaten the economic stabilization plan.

Compounding the government's problems are its own openness and an unwillingness to rely on the authoritarian practices of the past. Leading up to the new emergency measures, the government was unable to sign a sweeping social pact with business and labor, as it had done over the last seven years.

Unions and big business refused to put their signatures on an economic emergency plan that included painful tax and price increases, leaving President Ernesto Zedillo and his economic cabinet little choice but to proceed without them. Zedillo has tried to compensate for that lack of consensus by taking his message directly to the Congress and the Mexican people.

"We know our problems have to be faced with strict realism and without fantasies or false hopes," Zedillo said in a speech on Friday before one of Mexico's most powerful business groups, Coparmex. "We also know that we have to overcome this crisis in order to have a firm outlook of hope, growth and personal well-being."

OVERSEAS: Conoco official responds to criticism about Iran deal oil reserves in the Persian Gulf. Both Iran and Conoco operate in the shallow waters 80 miles offshore.

"Conoco doesn't endorse terrorism. Nobody does. But as long as we keep Iran isolated, they will always be terrorists," Irelan said.

He compared Iran to Dubai a quarter of a century ago.

"When we entered Dubai, 25 years ago, they were not quite as radical as Iran, but they certainly had their own standards. They still have their own culture, but little by little, we have seen the nation become a proactive nation and become friendly to Western culture. Little by little we made an impact."

Irelan noted that 10 years ago, no one thought that today the United States would be doing business in Russia — or China.

"We would hope that little by little we would be able to improve relations with Iran. That is something the State Department can't do. Generally, as you look around the world, our government-to-government relationships are terrible. Only business-to-business relationships are able to improve relationships.

"We like for every one to think like Americans, but they don't. We hope, however, to move them to a position where they can function in harmony with the rest of the world."

Irelan said for values to change one must be there, work with people and interface with them. "I think you are seeing a positive influence in Russia and it could happen in Iran as well."

Irelan said the U.S. State Department was fully apprised of the Conoco-Iran deal at every step, and had known about it from the beginning. "There were no surprises here," he said.

About the negative response from the White House — in which spokesman Mike McCurry said that the deal, while legal, "was not helpful to U.S. foreign policy" — Irelan said, "this is a political issue, the White House had to do what it had to do politically."

He said Conoco would have been very much remiss if it had let another oil company come in and develop the Iran reserves.

"There were several oil companies standing in the wings, waiting to join Iran in this development. It would have been wrong to bury the deal in the sand."

He said he could understand the emotional nature of the situation, because there were differences of opinion within the company as to whether or not Conoco should deal with Iran.

He said Iran is still in a state of unrest, with radical and moderate factions vying for control of the government, but both sides were looking for help in developing their infrastructure.

"There has been talk that the money Iran will make from the deal will go for arms, but I don't think it will."

He confessed that there is always a chance of losing money and assets when an oil company does business in a politically unstable area of the world, but that it was a risk that had to be taken.

"We had to walk away from assets in Libya."

Any company that operates in the global market should be apolitical and prepared to lose assets, Irelan said. "You never know who is going to wind up being a friend or foe. Vietnam and Russia were enemies for decades, now we are going back into both countries as business partners."

FORCE: Engineer behind water-source development to retire

world, we've kind of got to scratch for everything, particularly in the field of water," Ivie said last week. "It's just so scarce. Most of the ground water in West Texas is nonpotable. And that ground water that is potable and good quality is limited. It's not a renewal source like surface water. (Ground water or well water) is just like money in the bank; if you don't take it out today, it's there tomorrow."

The dearth of potable groundwater sources was an impetus in the development of the district's three lakes: Lake J. B. Thomas near Snyder in the 1950s, Lake E.V. Spence near Robert Lee in the 1960s and Lake O.H. Ivie, a 20-year project that covers 30 square miles near Ballinger in West Central Texas.

In 1966, Midland became a municipal customer of CRMWD by taking on Lake Thomas and later Lake Spence water. Midland then became a CRMWD partner in the planning and development of Lake Ivie and its Freese Dam beginning in the late 1970s and the development of the Ivie pipeline in the 1990s.

Beginning this year, Midland's only surface-water source will be Lake Ivie. The city has access to well water.

Odessan Charles R. Perry, who is on the CRMWD board, said last week at the dedication of the Midland-Odessa reservoir that "this lake and this pipeline could not have been built had it not been for Owen Ivie.

"There were too many challenges to overcome, and it was more than the board itself could do," Perry said. "When we all were concerned and didn't know what to do, he'd come up with a plan to get it done."

The 12-member board named the lake after Ivie as a monument to him and to his know-how and perseverance in developing the lake.

"He's focused; he's a very strong manager," Perry said. "He does control things very closely."

Joe Pickle, CRMWD's secretary-treasury, said Ivie is "a remarkably perceptive man and an individual with great tenacity."

Ivie persisted in pursuing the Ivie Lake project, which then was called the Stacy dam site and is the last of three lakes to be built on the Colorado River.

"He just persisted when everybody else said it was hopeless" due to political, environmenta, and special-interest pressures, Pickle said. "He kept going. On top of that, I think he knows where every nut, bolt and screw is in the entire system; he knows it from the ground up. He knows the water needs of West Texas. He is truly a remarkable man."

A committee of CRMWD board members — John Currie of Big Spring, John Fagin of Snyder and Richard D. "Dick" Gillham of Odessa — is to search for candidates for Ivie's successor. A vote of the 12-member CRMWD board — four members each from the three member cities: Odessa, Big Spring, and Snyder — will determine Ivie's replacement.

Ivie, then a 28-year-old civil engineer with the Fort Worth consulting-engineering firm of Freese & Nichols, joined the 1949-founded CRMWD in 1953 when Lake Thomas was being developed.

After CRMWD's first general manager, E.V. Spence, died in 1965, Ivie succeeded him and followed through with the completion of the Lake Spence project.

Under Ivie's leadership, the bulk of the CRMWD system — Lake Spence, the Lake Spence-Big Spring pipeline, Lake Ivie, the Lake Ivie-Midland-Odessa pipeline and the Ward County well field — has been developed.

"I have never known a man that is as totally dedicated to a job as Owen Ivie is to the proposition of getting quality water and plenty of it at the best possible price for an area the size of West Texas," said CRMWD President John Taylor of Big Spring.

The stimulus behind the creation of the CRMWD in 1949 came in the "enlightened self-interest" of J.B. Thomas, who then was the Fort Worth-based president of Texas Electric Service Co. (which later was merged into TU Electric).

Thomas was aware that "he couldn't sell anymore electricity in West Texas unless there were more people and more industry," Taylor said. "And there couldn't be anymore people and certainly no industry unless they could find some water, because everybody in West Texas was on well water."

By then, the water wells began to play out. "And most of the cities in West Texas were suffering from some form of water rationing," he said.

Afterward, Thomas commissioned Fort Worth engineer Simon Freese and Spence, who was past president of the Texas Board of Water Engineers (which became the Texas Water Commission and then Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission) to find a lake site to capture surface water on either side of the old Texas & Pacific Railway line.

The optimum site became Lake Thomas northeast of Midland along the Upper Colorado River.

"And, of course, at that time even Mr. Thomas, with his great vision, ... could not anticipate the Permian (Basin) oil boom and the phenomenal growth of Odessa and Midland, particularly," Taylor said.

The CRMWD, which built Lake Thomas for $10 million, had rejected an offer by the U.S. Corps of Engineers to build the project for $30 million.

Big Spring and Snyder are taking on fresh water from Lake Thomas, which, Ivie said, is producing some of the best water in West Texas but in limited quantities.

CRMWD's new focus will be on re-using water and "how to clean up non-potable water," Taylor said.

A major rainfall, similar to the rains that ended the seven-year drought in 1957, will be needed to rejuvenate and refresh Lake Spence, which now has a high salt content, Ivie said.

"We are constantly aware of what's available in the way of ground-water rights," Taylor said. "There will be no more surface reservoirs built in West Texas on the Colorado River. "There's no other river out here that we can build on. Any additional water will have to come from either ground water or from re-use and cleaning up non-potable water."

Well into the 21st century, the CRMWD will be exploring "ways to enhance the quality of the water we deliver," Ivie said. "That's a big job."

U.N. suspends airlift to Sarajevo

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina (AP) — The U.N. aid airlift to Sarajevo was suspended Saturday after a bullet hit a Red Cross plane, and the Bosnian Serbs closed roads into the besieged city after a sniper killed two Serb girls.

The airlift of food and medicine was to resume Sunday. But the Serb news agency, which reported Serb leader Radovan Karadzic's order to close roads out of the city, didn't say when they would reopen.

The Serb girls, aged 9 and 11, were killed near the Grbavica stadium in a Serb-held section of the capital, said U.N. spokeswoman Capt. Myrian Socachy.

"Both of them were killed by small-arm shots in the head," she said.

Snipers also wounded two people in government-held downtown Sarajevo.

Civilians have been allowed to use roads out of Sarajevo through Serb territory as part of a four-month cease-fire that is looking increasingly shaky. Peace mediators expect renewed fighting to break out when it expires May 1, if not sooner.

The governments of Croatia and Bosnia announced an alliance Monday against rebel Serbs in both republics. But instead of encouraging the Serbs to seek peace as diplomats hoped, the announcement only appears to be making both sides more belligerent.

"As far as our government is concerned, the cease-fire will not be extended," Bosnia's prime minister, Haris Silajdzic, said Saturday in Copenhagen, Denmark, where he is attending the U.N. poverty conference.

Asked whether he expected renewed fighting, he said, "Yes, I think so."

U.N. officials on Saturday reported hundreds of artillery shells fired and bursts of machine-gun fire near Bihac in northwestern Bosnia, as well as exchanges of gunfire and explosions in Sarajevo.

Killings strain U.S.-Pakistan relations

KARACHI, Pakistan — Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto, her government shaken by the killing of two U.S. consulate officials here Wednesday and a deadly mosque bombing Friday, visited Karachi on Saturday and vowed to adopt tougher tactics, including "ruthlessness when required" toward gunmen who have fostered near-anarchy in Pakistan's biggest city.

As Ms. Bhutto spoke, the coffins of the two slain Americans were draped in U.S. flags and driven to Karachi airport for a sunset ceremony on the airport tarmac that was attended by weeping family members and staff from the U.S. Consulate.

After farewell speeches, a Marine guard carried the coffins aboard a United States military transport plane for the flight to Washington.

Tensions in the city worsened overnight as television images of the bombing at the Shiite mosque Friday inflamed passions. With the death toll now at 13 from the bombing, and from an attack on survivors moments later by masked men with automatic weapons, crowds at funerals of the victims in the poorer sections of east Karachi stoned television crews and chanted anti-American slogans, apparently believing Shiite leaders assertions that the United States had inspired the attack because of its hostility towards predominantly Shiite Iran.

Although senior Pakistani officials said there had been no breakthroughs in the hunt for the Americans' killers, it became clearer during the day that the murders had struck at the core of the United States' fragile relations with Pakistan.

While the two countries have been working together in the search for the killers, to the extent of Pakistan allowing a 50-member group from the FBI to help lead the hunt, both governments have been barely able to disguise their mutual bitterness over the killings.

In Ms. Bhutto's remarks to reporters, after an emergency meeting with the city's top police and government officials, there were even hints that the Pakistani leader held the United States partly responsible for the attack on the consular officials.

Among other things, Ms. Bhutto cited the United States' past sponsorship of militant Muslim groups in Afghanistan that have spread weapons, drugs and Muslim militancy into Karachi, as well Washington's stepped-up pressures for a crackdown by the Bhutto government on Pakistani drug lords who have turned Karachi into one of the world's largest hero-in-trafficking centers.

Theories on the identity of the Americans' killers have centered on the possibility that the attack was ordered by Muslim fundamentalist groups, or by druglords.

"At the time of the Afghan war, the entire West landed over here and helped create holy warriors whose job it was to go into Afghanistan and fight the 'Holy War,' " Ms. Bhutto said.

"When the war ended, the West packed its bags and left countries like Pakistan, Egypt and Algeria to pick up the pieces and deal by themselves with these warriors they trained, who wanted new wars to fight."

For their part, American officials have said privately that the Bhutto Government and its predecessors, by doing little in face of the thousands of killings in Karachi in recent years by groups spurred on by ethnic, religious and criminal rivalries, helped create the climate of lawlessness that led to the Americans' deaths.

A hint of the estrangement over the killings came when Ms. Bhutto failed to attend the airport ceremony for the two slain Americans, Jackie Van Landingham, 33, of Camden, S.C., and Gary C. Durell, 45, of Alliance, Ohio.

Until the last minute, American diplomats were hoping that the Pakistani leader might attend, andleft a seat free at the center of a row occupied by family members of the two victims.

Instead, at almost the same time, Ms. Bhutto's official motorcade drove to another part of the airport, where the prime minister boarded her government plane for Islamabad, the capital.

U.S., China brace for trade disputes

BEIJING (NYT) — With one trade dispute over copyright piracy just settled, the United States and China each warned Saturday of a new confrontation over opening China to a broad array of American products.

The sudden threat of a new rupture in trade relations between Washington and Beijing was unexpected, and came as the U.S. trade representative, Mickey Kantor, arrived here for what had been billed as a conciliatory visit after weeks of brinkmanship over a threatened trade war to end copyright piracy.

Kantor, who is in Beijing for the formal signing of an agreement reached two weeks ago to end the pirating of American videos, computer software and other intellectual property, said at a news conference Saturday that he was also determined to enforce a 1992 agreement intended to reduce Chinese barriers to American computers, heavy machinery, agricultural products, textiles and beer.

"If that agreement is not adhered to," Kantor said, "I have no choice but to invoke" trade enforcement statutes authorizing him to impose sanctions on Chinese exports to the United States.

As of Dec. 31, Kantor said, China had stopped complying with the 1992 accord by suspending its program to lift quotas, licenses and other barriers.

The export of those American products to China could substantially reduce a $30 billion annual trade imbalance, which has grown to nearly half the size of America's trade deficit with Japan.

"I don't want to do it; I'd like to have the agreement fulfilled," he said.

American prepares for 'uncharted territory'

By Marcia Dunn
Associated Press

Twenty years ago this spring, three NASA astronauts journeyed to a place even more exotic and secluded than space.

They visited the Soviet Union's cosmonaut-launching site, hidden in the vast steppes of central Asia and never before seen by Americans — up close, that is. U.S. spy satellites had viewed it from afar.

Astronauts Thomas Stafford, Donald "Deke" Slayton and Vance Brand spent just one day at the Baikonur Cosmodrome in April 1975. The Soviets, ever stealthy, flew them in and out in darkness.

During that brief time, they got to crawl into the Soyuz capsule that would dock with their Apollo spacecraft three months later in orbit. They got to plant trees, one apiece, as cosmonauts do to mark their flights. They got to ride small Asian ponies and dine in a leather hut (the specialty was sheep's eyeballs, boiled and served lukewarm).

But they never got to see what was, as Brand recalled recently, "over the next hill": The Soviet military launch pads were off-limits to the astronauts.

Fast-forward to March 1995.

The Cold War is over, the Soviet Union is gone and NASA astronaut Norman Thagard is about to blast off on a Soyuz rocket from the Baikonur Cosmodrome, something no American has ever done. His destination is the Russian space station, where he'll spend three months conducting medical experiments on himself and two Russian crewmates.

Thagard, 51, is a licensed physician, as well as an engineer and pilot. He has flown on NASA's shuttles four times.

His Soyuz launch is scheduled for Tuesday. Two days later, the spacecraft carrying Thagard and cosmonauts Vladimir Dezhurov and Gennadiy Strekalov will dock with the Mir station. They'll return to Earth on space shuttle Atlantis, due to dock with Mir in June.

It will be the first docking of U.S. and Russian spacecraft since the Apollo-Soyuz linkup in July 1975, with space shuttle Discovery's close approach to Mir last month serving as the dress rehearsal.

27-year-old is muscle behind Limbaugh

By Rlichard L. Berke
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — To hear about "scandal lurking" in the White House, the "environmentalist "wackos" in Congress and the "self-important media elite" who report on both, millions of Americans turn to Rush Limbaugh.

And for his own political material, the wizard of conservative call-in radio turns to a 27-year-old who looks young enough to pass for a congressional page.

His name is Joel C. Rosenberg, and his title is director of research for The Limbaugh Letter, a monthly publication that is a part of Limbaugh's empire. But he does more than clip newspaper articles. He is the eyes and ears — and, on occasion, the muscle — of Limbaugh in the capital.

"Everyone who can't get to Rush on the phone calls up Joel and pleads with him to get Rush to mention their pet cause," said William Kristol, a leading Republican theorist. "That's his role in our nation's capital."

Burton Yale Pines, who was a senior vice president of the conservative Heritage Foundation when he hired Rosenberg as an assistant a few years back, calls him "a kid" but adds, "I've been at meetings of conservative activists, and they have paid extraordinary deference and have been solicitous of him."

From the Heritage Foundation's Capitol Hill headquarters, where Rosenberg retains office space even though he no longer works for the foundation, he faxes material to his boss in New York, home base for Limbaugh's syndicated radio and television programs, and telephones tidbits to him or his staff.

Rosenberg trolls the corridors of Congress, makes the rounds of conservative strategy sessions and, to pick up intelligence and "keep the Clinton administration guessing," even shows up unannounced at Democratic functions.

Compounding the influence of Limbaugh — whom associates say he worships — he sends congressional leaders excerpts from the broadcasting superstar's on-the-air ruminations.

Some conservatives ridicule Rosenberg, although not for publication, as little more than a glorified go-fer trading on the Limbaugh name. Certainly Rosenberg does not hesitate to exercise the power that his affiliation with Limbaugh grants him.

On more than one occasion he has dared to take on the House majority whip, Rep. Tom DeLay of Texas, at closed-door meetings of prominent conservatives.

Limbaugh and his staff are reported to be concerned that Rosenberg has been too confrontational in his dealings with lawmakers, but no one from the Limbaugh organization would agree to be interviewed about him.

Kit Carson, Limbaugh's chief of staff, would only confirm Rosenberg's title and say that neither he nor Limbaugh had any comment to make.

Nor would Rosenberg himself say very much. "I'm a behind-the-scenes kind of guy, and I like it that way," he said.

The Solution: Laser Surgery

Laser surgery can be an effective way to remove small varicosities (veins) on the nose & cheeks. These veins occur as a result of sun damage and other factors. Laser surgery offers a superior way to remove these with little to no evidence of surgery. No down time, fast healing, and excellent results are common.

Experts: O.J.'s defense just needs to cast doubt

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Some analysts have called it the "spaghetti-on-the-wall" tactic: Throw some and see what sticks. It's part of the defense's effort to cast doubt at every juncture in the O.J. Simpson murder trial.

"The defense does not have to prove it was a Colombian cartel that killed Nicole thinking they were killing Faye Resnick, that Mark Fuhrman planted the glove or that a conspiracy existed. They just have to raise doubt in these areas and let the jury decide," veteran defense lawyer Barry Levin said.

"I think they're doing what they have to do: find, explore and explain the weaknesses in the prosecution's case."

The danger in this tactic, however, is that the defense could lose the points with the jury if it perceives the theories as too strange or if the defense fails to back up its theories with any evidence.

Said Southwestern University law professor Myrna Raeder: "The defense has to take care because they can lose credibility with the jury if they go off on tangents that get shot down by the prosecution."

The defense laced its questions of prospective jurors with various theories and arranged well-placed media leaks, including the widely publicized New Yorker article suggesting Detective Mark Fuhrman planted the bloody glove on Simpson's estate.

Defense attorney Johnnie Cochran Jr.'s opening statement focused on a "rush to judgment" theme, saying authorities were so intent on nailing Simpson that they ignored leads that could have exonerated the former football star, who's accused of killing ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman.

He alleged police also botched the physical evidence, including blood and fibers, so badly that test results will be useless.

After hammering on those themes during the cross-examinations of several police officers — including a detective who acknowledged he miscounted the dime and penny found at the crime scene — the defense took its boldest gambit so far: floating the theory that the murders could have been committed by Colombian drug killers to send a message to Ms. Simpson's friend, Faye Resnick.

Without offering any proof, Cochran suggested during his questioning of Detective Tom Lange that Resnick lived with Ms. Simpson for several days last June, free-based cocaine in her house, and had no job for which to make money to pay drug bills.

The killings, Cochran said, were carried out with the telltale "Colombian Necklace," which he defined as the slitting of the throat from ear-to-ear.

Lange rejected a drug-kill theory, saying it instead had all the hallmarks of a rage killing or "overkill," and parts of Cochran's theory were ridiculed outside the jury's presence.

Nobody in U.S. or Colombian law enforcement, for instance, had ever heard of a "Colombian Necklace," which Cochran apparently confused with another form of vicious killing called the "Colombian Necktie." And nobody had heard of a "Colombian Necktie" killing occurring outside of Colombia or Miami.

Either way, the drug-hit idea, under the defense scenario, dovetails with the police frame-up theory, in which Simpson was victimized by rogue cops.

Enemy No. 1 in the Simpson camp's mind is Fuhrman, and the conspiracy theory likely will take full shape next week during Fuhrman's cross-examination by attorney F. Lee Bailey, who sounds almost giddy with anticipation.

Asked if the Fuhrman cross-examination will be the greatest character assassination ever mounted, as Fuhrman's lawyer has predicted, Bailey answered: "Hopefully."

As with the drug-hit idea, the defense likely will be trying to instill reasonable doubt, rather than present a well-supported theory, and the pointed suggestions that Fuhrman is a racist probably will be accompanied by little evidence.

Legal analysts said such questioning is not unusual and shouldn't hurt the defense. The problem, some analysts said, will come if the defense — or the jury — tries to merge the drug-hit theory with the rogue-cop theories, a combination that doesn't quite work.

"No doubt the defense is floating as many theories as it can. That's not typical. It is typical for lawyers to pick one theory of the case and then follow up that theory with as much evidence as it can produce," Loyola University law professor Stanley Goldman said.

Juvenile custody suicides: 'Public doesn't care until it's their kid'

EDITOR'S NOTE — About 2,100 Americans ages 10 to 19 kill themselves annually, but amid these youthful tragedies one subset raises special questions: those who manage to commit suicide while ostensibly under the state's care and protection, in juvenile custody.

Associated Press Writer

JANESVILLE, Wis. — The boy was only 12 years old, but he seemed even younger that day, in trouble again and locked in a jail holding cell. Curled on the floor, he cried. He begged to go home. He called for his mother.

Two days later, young John Willingham acted, tragically, more like an adult. Left unsupervised by child care workers for an hour and a half — contrary to detention rules — he tied a sheet to the frame of his bed and hanged himself.

"Sickening," one observer called the sixth-grader's death. "So tragic," said another.

What experts don't call a death like John Willingham's is unique — or even especially unusual.

Each year, authorities say, a troubling number of children kill themselves in juvenile custody, but the extent of the problem is shrouded by inadequate national reporting requirements and the stigma and legal liability the suicides carry.

The official death count is around 10 annually; some experts say the true number may be many times that, up to 100.

One youth was so desperate he swallowed a broken lightbulb, according to Donald Devore, an investigator who worked on a study released last fall by the Justice Department's Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention.

The national study found that only one-fourth of confined juveniles are in facilities that meet four basic suicide prevention guidelines.

Crowding, insufficient training and lapses in screening and monitoring of youths in custody help permit more than 17,000 acts of self-destructive behavior annually, it said.

Today's suicides in custody come at a time of growing public frustration about youth crime, and some say this fuels a creeping indifference about the handling of delinquents.

"The public doesn't care until it's their kid," said James Bell, a lawyer at the San Francisco-based Youth Law Center who has challenged detention conditions in California, Louisiana and Kentucky.

What kind of conditions? The kind that can aggravate suicidal tendencies: overcrowding, untrained staffs, and "dirt, filth, roaches, rats," Bell said.

Devore, administrator of the Division of Criminal Justice in Montgomery County, Pa., noted that 63 percent of those in juvenile facilities are black or Hispanic.

"When you've got this combination of public attitudes — apathy, a desire for a quick fix — and it's combined with this racial issue," he said, "I think people don't care."

No one in the Willingham family claims "Little John," as he was called, was an angel.

Even at his young age, he'd already had run-ins with the police here in rural southern Wisconsin. It was relatively minor stuff, everyone agrees: throwing rocks, fighting, acting up in school.

"He was more of a follower," says his uncle, Clyde Wilson, whose son often played with John. "Some of the guys with more experience on the street would use him to their advantage."

But things escalated last April, when John was among some kids accused of stealing a bicycle. Police picked him up at his house.

A Wisconsin Department of Corrections report following his death described John's inability to adjust to the juvenile section of the adult county jail. "He was continually acting out, creating a disturbance," wrote investigator Marty Ordinans.

On April 20, a crisis intervention worker was called and found the boy "huddled on the floor, leaning against the door, looking out the glass window, crying. John repeatedly stated he wanted to go home and that he missed his mother," wrote Ordinans, director of the state Office of Detention Facilities.

The worker concluded the boy was not suicidal.

But John continued to misbehave and, during a disciplinary hearing in his cell, was ordered "locked down" — separated from the rest of the juvenile inmates — for seven days. "John was very upset," Ordinans wrote.

That was around 12:30 p.m., on April 22.

At about 5:30 p.m., when John and another boy locked down could not join the other juveniles outdoors for recreaction, John pounded on his cell door in protest. Guards in the adult jail were on duty, but could not see him and the other boy.

Although cell checks were required every 30 minutes, no one looked in on John until 7 p.m., when the other inmates returned, Ordinans reported.

Then came a frantic radio call.

"I have a juvenile male who is hanging himself," a guard shouted after finding John "slouched in front of his bunk ... a bed sheet tied around his neck," according to a detective's report.

At a hospital, he was placed on life support machines; a family photo shows him swathed in sheets and connected to tubes.

He was brain-dead, doctors told his mother, but she couldn't believe it when she looked at his eyes.

"I didn't understand why there were tears coming out," she says, brushing the corner of her own eye. "I was talking to him: 'Wake up, Little John, it's Mommy. Mommy loves you. Wake up.'"

Finally, the machines were disconnected.

After the funeral, children in John's elementary school dedicated a plaque and a sapling in his memory.

CIA nominee withdraws; Clinton pushes for Deutch

WASHINGTON (AP) — Moving quickly to minimize damage from the administration's latest personnel problem, President Clinton nominated Deputy Defense Secretary John Deutch as CIA director on Saturday. Hours earlier, Clinton's first nominee decided to withdraw after acknowledging errors in helping a Filipino worker obtain a visa.

Deutch, a scientist known as a shrewd political adviser and demanding administrator, had resisted earlier Clinton overtures to take command of the CIA at a time when its entire mission is under review by a presidential commission. He relented during an Oval Office meeting Friday evening.

"In John Deutch, we have a dynamic, brilliant leader with all the necessary skills for this crucial assignment — and my highest trust and confidence," Clinton said in a written statement.

To ease Deutch's concerns that he would have limited access to the president as CIA director, Clinton promised to make Deutch a member of the Cabinet if he is confirmed.

"I appreciate the confidence the president has shown by selecting me," Deutch said in statement. "My only regret is the prospect of leaving the great military and civilian team in the Department of Defense."

The president's low-key announcement of the Deutch nomination offered a marked contrast to the crowded Roosevelt Room ceremony at which retired Air Force Gen. Michael P.C. Carns was nominated for the same job with fanfare only a month earlier.

Carns asked that his nomination be withdrawn late Friday after acknowledging he had failed to properly compensate a young Filipino who accompanied the Carns family to the United States in 1987. Carns said he was not aware of the error until last week, when he reviewed a copy of a contract signed by his wife. He said the contract falsely stated that Elbino Runas, the nephew of a family cook, had worked for the family in the Philippines and would continue to work for them in the United States.

"I believe these innocent errors may not be properly understood and will be exploited to question my competency and suitability," he wrote.

Carns added that the principal reason he withdrew was that unspecified "venomous and abusive accusations" were being put forward against his wife and children as part of a smear campaign.

White House press secretary Mike McCurry said the FBI report reached the White House at the start of last week and "there clearly were some problems" that would make it difficult to win Carns' confirmation.

McCurry insisted there was nothing wrong with the process by which Carns was cleared for nomination and said there was no way to anticipate the problems.

But Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee, criticized the White House's handling of the nomination and said the delay "has serious implications for U.S. national security."

"It's a little hard to understand how the White House did not know or pursue these issues long ago," said Specter, a potential GOP candidate for president. "All factors considered, we have another serious undermining of U.S. competency and credibility for the whole world to see."

However, Specter said Deutch appeared to be a good nominee. Sen. Bob Kerrey, D-Neb., vice chairman of the committee, called the selection of Deutch a "silver lining in this unfortunate episode" and predicted he would win speedy confirmation.

Clinton called Carns' withdrawal "our country's loss."

Clinton uses GOP 'extremist' views against them

By GREG McDONALD
Hearst News Service

■ News analysis

WASHINGTON — President Clinton has begun to play aggressive defense against the Republicans by attacking many of their proposals as "extremist," believing that the GOP is on the verge of overplaying its hand on a number of sensitive issues.

Armed with polling data indicating a discomfort among Americans about key elements of the Republican agenda, Clinton aides are confident that by using selective attacks on the GOP, they can set the tone for the 1996 presidential debate.

Administration officials believe it is possible to widen the gap between public opinion and the legislative priorities of conservative Republicans led by House Speaker Newt Gingrich of Georgia.

In fact, Gingrich — with his penchant for mean-spirited political rhetoric and zealous attacks on government — has become sort of a lightning rod for the Clinton administration, helping it determine "how far to push the envelope," as one senior official described it.

Clinton pollster Stanley Greenberg told reporters last week that the public sees Gingrich as "a bull in a china shop," a leader who often appears out of control and out of step with the vast majority of U.S. voters.

"I'm not sure that the public wants that bull in the china shop of Social Security and Medicare," Greenberg said, hitting on two of the programs that older Americans fear could be significantly affected by budget-balancing measures.

The depth of the public's uneasiness about tampering with Social Security and other popular entitlement programs hit home with Republicans recently, when their attempt to pass a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution failed in the Senate.

Polls taken before the vote showed a majority of Americans were in favor of the amendment until opponents raised the specter that the Social Security Trust Fund might be used to help erase the government's red ink.

Greenberg said the fight over the budget amendment helped the Republicans learn the hard lesson Clinton was taught last year during the health care reform debate — that most Americans want change but "are risk averse" to anything that could upset their own sense of security and well-being.

"They're watching (Republican leaders) who are throwing their elbows and seem quite confident they can make fairly radical changes without hurting people. I don't think that's going to be the perception out there," Greenberg said.

"I think people are nervous about the line on which they have been proceeding."

Greenberg and other Clinton advisers believe that the president can improve his own standing with the U.S. public by selectively attacking many major Republican reform programs. They caution, however, that the president must be careful not to appear as if he's unwilling to cooperate with the Republican majority on measures the public generally favors.

CLUES: Group from Midland travels to Abilene to study city's renovation before the TIF implementation, are designated solely for improvements in the district.

Abilene collects about $300,000 a year from the 100-block TIF district; the city collected as much as $1.9 million during oil boom times.

Naturally, the success of a TIF depends on a rise in property values in the district. Therefore, a TIF alone will not sustain life in a blighted area.

So what does?

"Everybody wants a magic solution. There's not one. That's why so many downtown revitalization projects fail," Ms. Brown said.

One clue to Abilene's success apparently has been the dedication to revitalization by the public and private sectors, including help from foundations.

Nevertheless, city officials acted as an impetus. "I think it's important the city has to show commitment," Ms. Brown said.

As the city made public improvements downtown, revitalization began to fall into place. The Dodge Jones Foundation helped restore historic buildings for non-profit organizations; private businesses saw the beauty — and potential consumers — and made investments.

"It has to be user-friendly. People have to want to be there," Ms. Brown said. "If you don't have people using it, it's just an empty building, however pretty."

And there are people in downtown Abilene, from those going out to dinner on weekdays to shopping on the weekends to attending Artwalk every second Thursday of the month.

Highlights of the "new" downtown Abilene include: the 65-year-old Paramount Theatre, restored by the owner and managed by a non-profit group; the old Windsor Hotel converted into housing for moderate-income elderly using private financing but taking advantage of tax credits and federal grants; the doubling in size of the Abilene Civic Center using TIF money; housing the Visitor's Center in the renovated Texas & Pacific Railroad depot; and businesses renewing buildings such as the Cypress Street Station restaurant.

Downtown development in Abilene hasn't ceased. Several groups — including the Downtown Association, the TIF board, the Cultural District Committee — work toward the on-going support of downtown.

"Everybody brings a different perspective but everyone is working toward downtown development," Morrison said.

Abilene officials emphasized the public/private effort and community support as keys to success.

"I guess the bottom line is try everything and keep what works," Ms. Brown said.

In Midland, a downtown revitalization steering committee — consisting of about 20 people — is considering in which direction to head their efforts.

'This shows what a community that makes up its mind to do something can do. And Midland has that same spirit.'

— Mike Canon, co-chairman downtown revitalization steering committee

About a dozen Midlanders — including city and Chamber of Commerce representatives — made up the group that went to Abilene.

"This (Abilene's accomplishments) shows what a community that makes up its mind to do something can do. And Midland has that same spirit," said Mike Canon, co-chairman of the steering committee and the chamber's volunteer vice-president for community development.

Canon said there are various possible directions Midland could take but didn't want to put any ahead of others. "At this point I'd hate to limit what might be done," he said.

Mayor Bobby Burns, co-chairman of the steering committee, agreed that the possibilities are open. "We've got to find something that fits the personality of our city," he said.

Despite the differences between the Tall City and Abilene's historic downtown, Burns noted some things on the tour, such as curb cuts for the handicap and two-hour diagonal parking to utilize space and ease in parking. Burns has, in the past, suggested looking into the removal of downtown parking meters.

City Council member Jose Cuevas agreed that the city should pay attention to smaller details such as shrubbery, lighting and cobblestone sidewalks to attract people and merchants.

"We need to give it that park-like atmosphere so it's enjoyable to go downtown," he said. "When pedestrian traffic increases so will the merchants."

But there's a much larger barrier to overcome.

"I think the first nut we've got to crack is the use of the large number of high-rise buildings," Cuevas said.

Suggestions from those interested in revitalizing downtown have included renewed office use, security housing for the elderly, retail businesses and tearing down some buildings and putting in a park.

As for funding possibilities for public improvements, officials plan to look at foundation and grant opportunities, and creation of a TIF or a public improvement district (PID). A PID imposes a set tax — through unanimous agreement by those in the district — to be used specifically for public improvements within the district.

It keeps more than memories alive.

Students go to state business contest

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Nine local students who are members of Business Professionals of America spent this weekend at state competition in Houston.

In the regional competition in San Angelo, Midland BPA students competed with about 200 youths from across West Texas. The winners of this competition flew to Houston Thursday for the State Leadership Conference of BPA and are competing with students from across the state.

The competition is said to be fierce at these events, explained Amanda Salcedo, who won first place at the regional level. "They said my name (as a winner), and I just said, 'no way!'" Ms. Salcedo said.

Lee High School students competing in Houston — and their categories — are Latrika Lee, spreadsheet applications; Tytanisha Price, database applications; Diana Madrid, information processing specialist; and Ms. Salcedo, keyboarding.

Midland High School contestants are Qiana Nolly, office specialist; June Munoz, banking concepts; Amy Stone, database applications; Leah Lynskey, spreadsheet applications; and Joshua Langohr, interview skills.

As the categories suggest, these contests involve many modern business and office skills with emphasis on computer usage.

The contests are hectic, timed events with about 20 students competing against each other for a winner's slot, explained Ms. Salcedo.

Winners of the state contest will advance to a national competition in Nashville, Tenn., Ms. Stone said.

BPA students work part of the school day in business offices to learn valuable work-related skills. Students will have a better idea of how the business world operates and what course to set for their lives, one student explained.

Teen constructs jet engine, takes first place at fair

By Gary Shanks
Staff Writer

Freshman Chris Harrington waited patiently for judges to make their decisions at Midland Christian School's science fair on Friday, but if nothing else, Harrington's project won first place for making the most noise.

Working at home and at his father's automotive shop, Mid-Tex Battery, Harrington successfully converted discarded steel canisters, bits and pieces of automobiles and the rotating vanes from a turbocharger into a fully functional jet engine.

"I've wanted to build this thing for a long time," Harrington said of his engine.

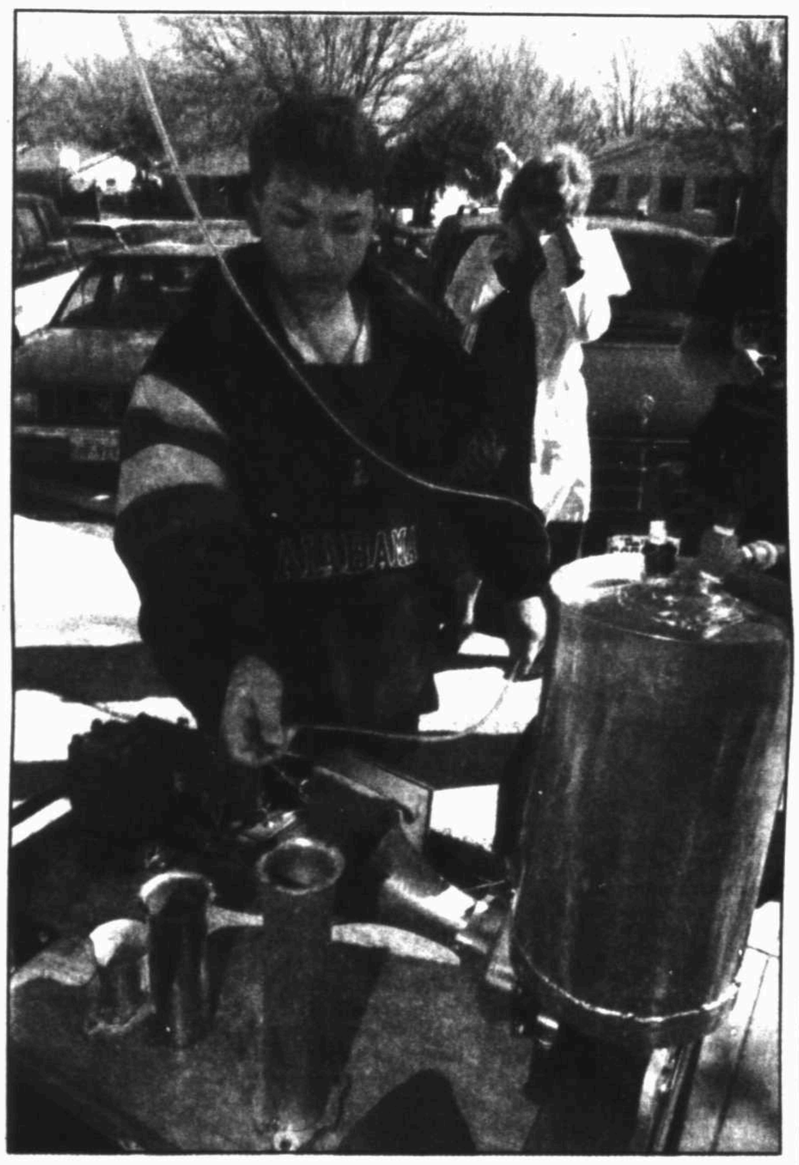

"He's always been interested in that kind of stuff," said Dave Harrington, who helped in the engine's manufacture. "Most of the work, by and large, was done by Chris," the elder Harrington said.

The tiny engine produces more than 18 pounds of thrust in a frightful whine that unnerved some Midland Christian faculty members when Harrington fired the jet motor. Since no sound-dampening device has been fitted to the engine's exhaust, the sound is very reminiscent of fighter-plane engines, which operate in the same general manner as Harrington's engine.

The ninth-grader has overcome several obstacles in the completion of his engine. The turbine vanes were originally designed to work using low-cost bushings to hold them in place, but the bushing were destroyed by the spinning vanes.

Solving problems like this added greatly to Harrington's vocabulary, since, like an engineer at McDonald-Douglas, he had to deal with "the gyroscopic stability of the rotating group" — meaning the lateral (sideways) forces generated by

Drug, alcohol abuse program sponsors golf tournament

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Golf enthusiasts looking to swing a club for a good cause may sign up for Teen Challenge's tournament set for April 24 at Green Tree Country Club.

Permian Basin Teen Challenge, a Christian-based program, offers outreach services and residential drug- and alcohol-abuse programs.

"What we offer is really a life control program. Drugs and alcohol are usually symptomatic of what's going on underneath," said Teen Challenge director Chuck Redger. "We try to make the Bible a workbook for living with a very practicable approach."

Redger said some young people have emotional problems, "a lot of anger and bitterness. And about 30 percent to 40 percent are dealing with issues of sexual abuse, which can have an impact even in adult years."

Although affiliated with the Assemblies of God Church, Redger said the organization is 90 percent interdenominationally supported. The local program is one of 120 Teen Challenge programs nationwide.

"We offer drug-abuse prevention programs in schools, have speakers, and a residential program, with 26 beds, which stays right at full," the director said.

Teen Challenge has Reentry House, a main facility building with a dorm and living area for 16 students, classrooms and a cafeteria; Bethesda Home to house 10 older students on a farm south of Midland; and the "prodigal's house," a livestock barn where hogs are raised for food and sold to help the ministry. The organization also has some housing for staff, an office building and Outreach Center for Kids' Clubs and tutoring.

Rabies outbreak continues

FORT WORTH (AP) — A rabies outbreak that started in the Lower Rio Grande Valley is slowly spreading northward, state officials say.

If the outbreak continues to spread unabated, the disease could reach the Dallas-Fort Worth area within two years, said Dr. Jane Mahlow, zoonosis control specialist with the Texas Department of Health in Austin.

"There is still a rabies outbreak out there," Dr. Mahlow said.

New rabies cases have been diagnosed in Howard, Mills, Nolan and Taylor counties in West Texas and Gillespie County in the Hill Country.

That brings to 40 the number of Texas counties that have reported rabies cases, Dr. Mahlow said.

Four South Texans have died from the disease during the current outbreak. Since 1988, more than 600 animals ranging from coyotes to cows have been diagnosed with rabies, according to state records.

Officials ordered a statewide rabies quarantine on Jan. 23, blocking the shipment of some wild animals and unvaccinated pets across county or state lines.

The quarantine prohibits shipping coyotes, bats, skunks, foxes, raccoons, hybrid mixes such as dog-coyotes and dog-wolves, and domestic pets older than 3 months that have not been vaccinated against rabies in the past 12 months.

Teams prepare for spelling bee

A maximum of 12 corporate spelling teams will compete in the annual Bee for Literacy, benefiting Midland Need to Read, that is scheduled for April 7 at Midland Center.

The bee will be held from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m.; a luncheon buffet is to be served. The public is invited. Tickets are $10, including cost of the lunch.

Entry fee for corporate teams is $500, which includes lunch for team members and official Bee for Literacy T-shirts. Each team consists of three members and in some cases one member is the company's chief executive officer. Cindy Turland, Need to Read president, said most of the teams seem to "have a lot of fun" with their bee preparations, conducting their own spelling bees in order to determine the three best spellers for their corporate team."

This year's bee chairman is Barbara Stoltz. John Deats will be pronouncer and Bill Dingus will again serve as master of ceremonies.

According to Ms. Stoltz, more prizes will be awarded to winners of the audience participation round this year. In this segment, audience members write down five words as

Child prodigies lose part of carefree childhood years

Ott

As I read the biographical data, particularly the part that said, "he began to study piano at the age of four and performed internationally as a soloist by the time he was 12," I didn't know whether to be terribly impressed or painfully sorry.

I mean, how ARE you supposed to feel about a child prodigy? The kid in question — and I don't even remember the name — is obviously wonderfully gifted in his or her particular field, but, at the same time, there is always that lingering fear that those so-called normal carefree childhood years will be lost forever, becoming nothing more than a figment of the imagination.

In other words, there is a trade-off for being brilliantly talented at such a young age. You become an adult before your time. You don't get to climb trees, or play baseball, or ride a bicycle, or roll around on the ground with a dog. There is no time for such childish activities. You must hone your marvelous skills so that your special gift to the world will not be wasted.

That is the price that must be paid.

Is it worth it?

Who's to say.

It is ironic, however, that the above-mentioned example involved a piano player. That's because the majority of the truly talented children most of us have been exposed to are piano players. Maybe not a Van Cliburn, but at least a kid who could play something more than "Mama's little baby loves shortening, shortening. Mama's little baby loves shortening bread" before reaching the ripe old age of 8.

In my old neighborhood, at least, that special ability did indeed qualify a kid to be known as a child prodigy.

But now that I think about it, my neighborhood had lots of child prodigies ... and not just piano players, either.

We had a 6-year-old female tap dancer, for example, who once performed an entire three-minute dance routine without once tripping, though she did have to stop halfway through the performance when it became obvious she had neglected to wear her tap shoes.

Then there was the 7-year-old boy who could do bird calls so accurately that darn near any human being, not to mention other birds, could almost, but not quite, figure them out.

And, finally, there was everyone's favorite ... the

Concealed gun legislation sparks uneasiness

AUSTIN (AP) — It's a vision that sends chills through cab driver Hannah Riddering: One day she takes a passenger the wrong way. Already irritable, he becomes enraged. He grabs his handgun and shoots her.

The man is not a criminal unlawfully packing a pistol. He has been licensed by the Texas Department of Public Safety to carry a concealed gun.

To some, the anecdote may seem farfetched. Ms. Riddering believes it will become reality if the Texas Legislature passes a bill to allow citizens to carry concealed handguns.

"It's not the bad guys that I'm worried about with this bill," says Ms. Riddering. "It's the ordinary, law-abiding, gun-toting citizen that worries me. The little old lady that gets upset because I'm taking a short cut with which she's unfamiliar and thinks I'm ripping her off.

"A person who is carrying a gun has a different attitude in terms of being willing or capable of settling things through reason. They have in the back of their mind the idea that, 'Well, I can always pull my gun on this guy.'"

Ms. Riddering's views are not shared by most state lawmakers.

The bill appears likely to pass both the House and Senate, where it's already been approved by the Senate Criminal Justice Committee, and Gov. George W. Bush has vowed to sign it.

If that happens, Texans could begin carrying handguns as soon as Jan. 1, 1996.

What would Texas be like if citizens could tote guns? The Wild West, with shootouts occurring not over a stolen horse but a fender-bender? Perhaps the streets would be safer and crime would decrease. Or maybe neither would result.

The idea of allowing citizens to carry guns is not unique.

Texas is one of only 10 states that prohibit carrying concealed handguns, according to Handgun Control Inc., a Washington-based group that lobbies for stricter gun control laws. Eight of those states have concealed gun measures pending in their legislatures.

Arkansas' governor signed into law a permit bill on Feb. 23. Lawmakers in Utah and Virginia also have approved such measures, both of which are expected to become law.

Twenty states allow carrying concealed weapons with a permit, but the applicant must meet special criteria, such as a job-related need. Nineteen states allow all non-felons to carry concealed guns with a license.

Only one state — Vermont — allows anyone to carry a concealed gun without a license or permit.

The Independence Institute, a conservative think-tank based in Golden, Colo., released a study last October that examined the murder rates in 14 states with handgun permit laws.

'It's not the bad guys that I'm worried about with this bill. It's the ordinary, law-abiding, gun-toting citizens that worries me. The little old lady that gets upset because I'm taking a short cut with which she's unfamiliar and thinks I'm ripping her off.'

— Hannah Riddering, cab driver

It concluded that concealed gun policies have not led to increased homicide rates. The murder rates declined in some states, although it cannot be determined whether handgun laws are the reason.

Florida's murder rate, which was 36 percent above the national average when the state enacted a gun permit law in 1987, fell to 4 percent below the national average in 1991, the study found.

When Florida lawmakers began debating the issue, opponents forecast vigilante justice and shootouts and warned that the "Sunshine State" would become known as the "Gunshine State."

"It just sounded like it was going to be a bad idea," said Charlie Wells, president of the Florida Sheriff's Association. "Maybe it's like electricity — until you have a little bit of understanding of it and you see it in theory and practice, you're a little bit afraid about it.

"What we have finally come to realize is that those people who will take the time to receive a proper license to carry a concealed weapon are not the people you have to worry about at all," Wells said. "They are truly law-abiding citizens."

Whether the law has helped fight crime, Wells couldn't say.

"Is it good? I just don't know how to measure that," he said. "It appears to me that one hell of a lot of citizens think it's necessary and think it's a good idea."

From October 1987 through November 1994, Florida issued 258,193 concealed weapons licenses, according to the secretary of state's office. Of those 431 were revoked, but only 22 involved using a firearm. There were 150,487 valid licenses as of Jan. 31.

Sen. Jerry Patterson, a Pasadena Republican sponsoring concealed gun legislation, said that if Florida hasn't had any problems as a result of its law, neither would Texas.

"Those who say that passing this bill will create a doomsday or blood in the streets ... are saying that Texans are uniquely violent compared to other citizens," he said.

Rep. Ron Wilson, House sponsor of the bill, said Florida's law also shows that only a small number of people seek gun permits. He estimates that 1 percent to 2 percent of Texans would apply for licenses.

"We're not talking about everybody running around carrying handguns," said Wilson, D-Houston. "We're not going to put any more guns on the street."

Opponents note that while Florida's homicide rate has decreased since enactment of the permit law, its violent crime rate rose 17.8 percent.

"For the last year that figures are available, 1992, Florida had the highest violent crime rate in the country," said Susan Whitmore, a spokeswoman for Handgun Control Inc., which is headed by Sarah Brady, wife of former Reagan press secretary James Brady, who was shot during a 1981 assassination attempt. "Concealed weapons are not the answer to fighting violent crime."

Ms. Whitmore cited an FBI study of 51 incidents in which 54 police officers were murdered. The study found that 85 percent of the officers did not fire their guns, and 20 percent died by their own firearms.

"These are among some of the most highly trained people in the world," she said. "I don't think those odds are very good for the average Joe or Jill who are out there thinking that carrying around a concealed weapon is going to make them invincible."

Polls show Texans are divided on the issue. Law enforcement officials also appear split.

Tarrant County Sheriff David Williams believes a permit law would "give the citizens a swinging chance of surviving."

But Farmers Branch Police Chief Jim Fawcett, legislative chairman of the Texas Police Chief Association, said, "Putting more guns on the street is not the answer."

Sen. Royce West, who opposes the bill, has proposed allowing voters to have their say in a statewide referendum.

"Before we break the seal on crates of shiny new guns, before we unwrap cases of sharp new bullets ... before we strap on six-shooters for our run to the 7-11, let's talk about it," said West, D-Dallas. "We need to put ballots before bullets."

precocious 5-year-old red-headed, freckled-faced lad who could wiggle his ears at the same time he was making crude noises by placing his left hand in his right armpit and flapping that arm in a rapid up-and-down motion, all the while shouting, "Eat more beans!"

All three children were enormously gifted, as you can no doubt tell, but in each case it took endless hours of hard work to reach that special level. They had to practice. They had to train. They had to sacrifice.

Was it worth it?

Only they can answer that question.

So I decided to ask. I placed a call to the precocious 5-year-old, who is now 41 and touring the great capitals of Europe showcasing his rare ability to make crude noises with his armpit.

I reached his mom — who had always been something of a doting stage mother — instead.

"He doesn't have time to talk to you right now," she snapped. "He's busy working on a new crude sound."

"So nothing's changed," I said.

"Are you kidding?" she replied. "If he can master this particular sound he has a great chance of getting top billing on his next tour. What do you think of that?"

Pretty impressive, I admitted.

"But all things considered," I added with just a hint of sarcasm, "I still prefer the tap dancer."

She slammed the phone in my ear. It figures. You know how touchy mothers of child prodigies can be.

PROGRAM: Teen Challenge sponsors golf tournament

(From 1B)

Students are in the Teen Challenge program for several phases. In the final phase of re-entering the community, they have two weeks to join a church and become an active member, must obtain full-time employment and pay $35-a-week rent to Teen Challenge in order to learn responsibility and budgeting.

Redger, who worked in San Francisco and New York before coming to Midland's Teen Challenge program in 1973, said, "We haven't missed New York a day since we left."

To raise funds for the program, Teen Challenge is seeking 40 golfers for the tournament. Individual golfers find participants to sponsor them for at least $1 a hole. Golfers raising $2,500 or more will receive vacation package prizes.

Interested golfers may attend a sign-up reception 7-8 p.m. Friday at 1501 Scharbauer Drive. The reception will include a graduate from Teen Challenge testifying about the program. Interested persons may call 687-0348.

FAIR: Teen takes first place with jet engine science project

the turbine blades and connecting shafts.

The 3,000-degree temperatures in the engine's "burn chamber" are kept from melting the metal chamber with "tangential air flow" that allows cooler intake air to circle the metal, leaving the hottest gasses swirling in the center away from the metal sides.

"He's using the same terminology they use at G.E.," said Midlander Steve Watlington, who served as a safety advisor for the project.

Harrington said he solved his gyroscopic stability problem by replacing the low-performance bushings with high-performance "needle bearings." These new bearings were donated to the house by a local automobile racing group, the elder Harrington said.

Like the bearings, many of the engine's components were donated. "When you see young people with aptitude, there's no limit to what businesses and people will do to help them," Dave Harrington said.

"I find it very refreshing when a young person is drawn to the sciences," Watlington said.

The younger Harrington spent a lot of time searching for parts to fulfill necessary functions. "He's got the ability to scrounge," Dave Harrington joked.

Chris Harrington's experiments with the effect of various shapes of air intakes for the engine won a first prize in his category. The youth is now looking into designing a forcing cone to maximize exhaust thrust on the engine.

Or perhaps even an afterburner, the young man explained with a grin.

Astronomers study some effects of exploded stars

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Like detectives piecing together clues to an ancient mystery, astronomers used Endeavour's ultraviolet telescopes Saturday to gauge the effects of a star that exploded 20,000 years ago.

Astronauts pointed the shuttle instruments toward a supernova known as the Cygnus Loop so scientists can figure out how shock waves from the long-ago explosion are affecting clouds of interstellar dust.

That interaction is believed to be a major factor in how supernova remnants evolve into new stars.

The Cygnus Loop has been observed several times during the flight. It's so large that astronomers must focus on a different area each time and piece together the results.

There are several theories about what happens to celestial gas clouds when they're hit and heated up by supernova shock waves. The clouds might be crushed, ripped apart or simply evaporated.

"We're hoping to be able to discriminate between those three possibilities in this one case," said John Raymond, an astronomer working with one of the shuttle instruments, the Hopkins Ultraviolet Telescope.

Data from the telescope should tell scientists the temperature, density and chemical composition of the shock wave as it passes through interstellar gas.

Mission scientist Charles Meegan said about 180 celestial observations were made through the first 10 days of the flight. Astronomers have a menu of some 600 stars, galaxies, quasars and other objects to choose from before the shuttle's scheduled landing next Friday.

Also Saturday, the astronauts answered a few more questions posed to them on the Internet. By logging into a new NASA home page on the World Wide Web, computer users can get information on the flight and leave queries for the crew. A handful of the messages have been sent up.

One cyberspace traveler from Concord, Mass., asked what the spaceship smells like.

"Is it similar to an airplane cockpit or cabin, or what?" asked someone named Rich. "Is it like any of these: dorm room, kitchen, office, science lab, greenhouse? Thank you."

Shuttle pilot William Gregory said Endeavour "smells like different things in different places," the kitchen like a kitchen, the bathroom like a bathroom.

"The airlock smells kind of like a laundry room because that's where we put our clothes when we've worn them," Gregory said.

they are called out by the pronouncer. Perfect spellers of all five words win door prizes; those missing one word will have a chance to win through a drawing. Cost of participating in the audience spelling round is $5, which along with ticket sales and team fees, will go to Need to Read.

The agency provides one-on-one tutoring for adults who read at seventh-grade level or below. Currently, the program matches more than 200 adult students with trained volunteer tutors.

Funds raised during the bee provide the necessary reading and study materials for both students and tutors. Need to Read is located at Midland College and is a United Way agency. The college provides free facility use for training, office space and tutoring and has been a strong supporter of literacy efforts since the organization's inception.

Those wishing information on tickets or details concerning team competition should call the Need to Read office at 685-4572.

POLICE REPORTS

High-speed chase

Three juveniles were arrested Saturday night following a high-speed chase down Loop 250 that ended on a county road with the juveniles' vehicle overturning, according to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter.

Department of Public Safety troopers attempted to stop a car for speeding at about 9:15 p.m., Painter said. The driver sped up, turned off the car's lights and headed eastbound on Loop 250.

Painter said the vehicle exceeded speeds of 100 mph and ran several stop signs along the loop and County Road 60, on to which the car turned while traveling eastbound.

The chase ended at the intersection of county roads 1125 and 60 when the car overturned, Painter said. Two witnesses said the car bottomed out, sparked and then flipped over, landing on its top.

All three juveniles suffered only bruises and cuts, Painter said. "They were really lucky," he said. The sheriff said the youths, who are all about 15 years old, will likely be taken to Culver Youth Center. He said DPS troopers believe the driver was under the influence of intoxicants and he will be tested.

Houston officials plan entertainment complex

HOUSTON (AP) — City officials have unveiled plans to convert the Albert Thomas Convention Center into a $22 million western-theme entertainment facility due to open in August 1996.

"With an estimated 1 million visitors a year, Bayou Place will add vibrance and life to the downtown area," Mayor Bob Lanier said Friday.

The 150,000-square-foot center will house 13 nightclubs and four restaurants on two floors.

Planned attractions include a karaoke club, a sports bar, two pool halls, a nightclub, a 1950s theme club and a sing-along bar with dueling pianos.

Denim & Diamonds, a country and western club that's part of a national chain, will anchor the center, developers said.

"Whether you are a hard rock devotee or melody or country and western, it will all be there," Baltimore developer David Cordish said.

The frontier theme is included in designs for the exterior entrance of the complex. Plans call for lighted statuary of cactuses, covered wagons, longhorns and cowboy boots mounted on bright red poles high above the street level.

The project was conceived to give downtown a much-needed entertainment boost. But some neighbors of the future Bayou Place, located in the culturally rich theater district, questioned the benefits of so many bars in one place.

"Is this really the image for downtown?" said Allison Cowan, acting director of public relations for the Houston Grand Opera. "It's just like a great big mall."

In addition to the Cordish Co., key participants include Graham Brothers Entertainment Inc. of Odessa. The Graham Brothers own and operate Dallas Alley, which contains many of the same venues planned for Bayou Place.

Patrons will pay one cover charge and be able to get into any of the clubs or bars in the facility. Parking will be competitive because the new party hall will share existing, city-owned underground space with the theater district.

Cordish signed his redevelopment contract with former Mayor Kathy Whitmire. The deal, however, has been criticized by Lanier and council members who question its favorable concessions to the developer.

The 60-year lease arrangement requires Cordish to pay the city $50,000 in rent each year, plus 25 percent of the profits after a reasonable management fee is extracted.

If the project is 65 percent filled, Cordish will receive $900,000 annually that is expected to be raised in new parking the project will attract. If the parking revenues are not that high, the city will pay Cordish the difference.

The city also paid the $1.5 million for asbestos abatement in the facility, which is appraised at about $10 million.

The Cordish Co. has developed and owns similar complexes in Salt Lake City, Detroit, Niagara Falls, N.Y. and Charleston, S.C.

The convention center was built in 1965, but it has been closed for business since 1988.

Environmentalists ensure wildcats' safe passage

By Vivienne Heines
Corpus Christi Caller-Times

Kruse believes that the port's efforts to meet the needs of ocelots and other endangered felines has enhanced the $21 million bridge project, now awaiting federal approval.

KINGSVILLE — C. James Kruse, general manager of the Port of Brownsville, says his only face-to-face encounter with an ocelot was in a zoo.

But he has spent the past 18 months working with state environmentalists to ensure that the nocturnal wildcat has a safe and sheltered travel route at the port's first international bridge with Mexico.

The bridge, and possibly others along the Rio Grande, will give ocelots and other endangered wildcats their own rest stops and crossing areas. The rest stops are areas where foliage is planted to provide a place for the nocturnal cats to hide during the day. The crossings are culverts or crosswalks that would allow the cats to cross without becoming road kill.

Kruse believes that the port's efforts to meet the needs of ocelots and other endangered felines has enhanced the $21 million bridge project, now awaiting federal approval.

"Number one, it just makes things look better. Instead of a bunch of dirt, you have foliage. So it's better from an aesthetic viewpoint. From a practical viewpoint, it just provides an easier way for the cats to get through here than they had before," Kruse said. "The only ocelot I've seen is in the zoo. But they say it's a prime habitat area, and we want to make sure we don't keep them from moving through here."

Efforts to mate economic development — such as bridge construction — and protection of endangered ocelots and jaguarundis are the focus of a recently announced $37,000 research project along the border. State officials and a feline researcher from Texas A&M University-Kingsville are checking on how the wildcats will fare as more than a dozen new bridges are built along the Rio Grande Valley.

The bridges, part of planned infrastructure for the increased traffic generated by the North American Free Trade Agreement, extend along a six-county area on the border between Mexico and the United States. The area includes land being acquired for the Lower Rio Grande Valley National Wildlife Refuge, established to protect native habitats along the border.

State environmentalists, while acknowledging the need for industrial development, are concerned that the bridges will disrupt the nocturnal wanderings of the wide-ranging cats and further endanger their limited population numbers. In addition, a leading cause of death for the wildcats is being hit by motor vehicles. Among suggested solutions are the cat crossings.

"Our main concern is that bridges can cause an impediment to the wildlife corridor that exists along the river," said Dr. Art Coykendall, a biologist with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in McAllen. "In some cases, it just acts as a physical barrier. Many of the bridges that are built or are being proposed are at grade, or at ground level, and it just physically prevents wildlife from moving up and down the river."

Field work on the two-year project, to be conducted by researchers at the Caesar Kleberg Wildlife Institute of Texas A&M University-Kingsville, will begin in May, said associate professor Michael Tewes. Tewes, director of the institute's feline research program, said graduate student Clay Fisher will trap wildcats to collect biological information and samples, and to attach radio collars to the cats for information on their movements and habitat. If the elusive ocelots and jaguarundis aren't found, researchers will use bobcats instead, Tewes said.

Tewes, who worked with the Port of Brownsville to develop 10 proposed crossing corridors and two foliage-rich resting areas near their planned bridge, said similar crossing areas are already used for Florida panthers. "It's an attempt to have a win-win situation, where we can have the bridge development and at the same time, maintain the security of the endangered cats," Tewes said.

Slightly larger than a domestic cat, the jaguarundi has a weasel-like appearance and ranges in color from rusty brown to gray or black. Its normal habitat stretches from South Texas to South America. The ocelot weighs 16 to 25 pounds and is yellow with black spots, bars and blotches. Its habitat also extends from South Texas to South America.

Tewes estimated that there are 80 to 120 ocelots in Texas — mostly in the Rio Grande Valley — and even fewer jaguarundis. The secretive felines, rarely seen by humans, feed on rodents, rabbits and a few birds, Tewes said. They are nocturnal and prefer to dwell in dense brush or thorn shrubs — habitats that require the fertile soil found in the Rio Grande Valley area.

"They're nocturnal, they occupy that dense habitat and they tend to shy away from humans. All three of those factors reduce the likelihood of human-ocelot encounters," Tewes said. "We've caught ocelots on a number of ranches where the people there weren't aware of their existence."

Environmentalists say that in addition to the cats, more than 400 neotropical migratory bird species, hundreds of reptiles and an array of vegetation calls the Rio Grande Valley area home.

"The cats travel along corridors in the brush," said Lee Elliott, regional endangered species biologist for the Texas Parks and Wildlife office in Corpus Christi. "In the lower Rio Grande Valley, those corridors are largely confined to areas along the river. Development of bridge projects and the multitude of bridge projects that occur along the river is potentially contributing to breaks along the (oats') travel corridor."

Already, 95 percent of the native Tamaulipan thorn brush that once covered the area has been cleared for agriculture and urban development, leaving only 5 percent to support native species and animals. Coykendall has requested more research — such as this cat-crossing project — to better assess the environmental effect of bridge construction and related secondary construction. He has provided information about the potential impact of the bridges to the U.S. Department of State, which issues presidential permits for construction of international bridges.

"Normally, international bridges spur additional development, such as industrial development. It also creates additional highway development. So we have what we call secondary or indirect impact," he said. "We're not out to stop growth. We're not out to stop the construction of bridges or whatever. What we're looking for is alternatives that will allow these bridges to exist but also allow the wildlife to move through them."

El Paso residents have different outlook due to isolation

By Eduardo Montes
Associated Press

EL PASO — Texas Independence Day passes largely unnoticed around here. But holidays like Mexico's Cinco de Mayo are sure to get the celebrations rolling in the state's westernmost tip.

Is such behavior possible in a state that claims to value its tradition so much? It's not only possible, in El Paso it's probable. El Pasoans just don't seem to behave much like other Texans.

"El Pasoans even talk differently from people in other parts of the state," said history professor Charles Martin. "They don't twang like Texans."

There are good reasons why El Pasoans seem so different. Historically, the city has nearly always had closer ties to New Mexico and Mexico than it has to the rest of Texas.

In fact, it didn't even become part of Texas until 1850, 14 years after Texans won their independence from Mexico and after the republic was annexed by the United States, said Martin, who teaches at the University of Texas-El Paso.

Add to that El Paso's geographical remoteness, and an image of isolation begins to emerge — one that has in the past led some El Pasoans to believe the rest of the state doesn't accept or respect them.

"El Paso is totally isolated," said Carlos Jimenez, a 15-year El Paso resident. "I don't know if it's political. I don't know if it's (just) too far from everything."

The same feeling is prevalent in other remote areas, like rural communities in West Texas and the Rio Grande Valley, but seems more striking in El Paso because it's the state's fourth-largest city, with more than 500,000 inhabitants.

Perhaps political cartoonist Joe R. Lane best captured the feeling of isolation and disenfranchisement with a cartoon published in the El Paso Times last year.

The cartoon depicted a branching road with a sign reading "Entering the heart of Texas." One offshoot was labeled Left Ventricle — San Antonio; another said, Aorta — Austin. The last said Bypass — El Paso.

In the past, El Paso's perception of itself as a sort of unwanted stepchild has led to things like a promotional campaign launched several years ago that proclaimed "El Pasoans are Texans too."

It has also caused some rifts between city and state.

The most obvious came last year when state District Judge Edward Marquez began investigating whether criminal acts had led to a habitual underfunding of social services and highway programs in El Paso.

State officials actively fought the investigation, but the allegations did convince the Senate Finance Committee to convene an unprecedented hearing in El Paso to examine the complaints.

The two-day meeting resulted in a report that found El Paso and Texas' border communities in general have experienced "particular disadvantages in the historical allocation of state funding for certain services."

The report suggested changes to address the funding problem, a move perceived as a positive step for the city.

Meanwhile, city leaders are trying to help pull the city into the Texas mainstream.

Those efforts are slowly making progress, according to city leaders. But that still leave people's perceptions to be dealt with.

"Our own people still have somewhat of a less-than-good opinion of themselves," said Mayor Larry Francis. "They tend to have a poor opinion of our city and that's what we have to correct."

Jimenez has encountered that negative attitude at his store, which specializes in Texas souvenirs and is loaded with El Paso T-shirts and caps.

"They make fun of their own city," said Jimenez, an immigrant from Mexico. "(They ask) Where in the world do you think you are going to sell El Paso's name?"

Francis believes the poor perceptions will change as the city develops under aggressive initiatives to attract new businesses and improve the quality of life.

"It's just little things that build on each other. ... So when they see people coming into town they'll think, 'They came here, so maybe we're not so bad after all,' " said Francis.

Even then, however, there will be enough differences that El Paso will always be distinct and somewhat separate.

Like before, the city's economic realities leave it looking more toward its Mexican and New Mexican neighbors for commercial development opportunities than to Dallas or Houston.

An ongoing economic initiative has El Paso business leaders forming alliances with their counterparts in the wide swath between Chihuahua City, Mexico, and Albuquerque, N.M. and even on up to Colorado and Canada.

"It makes a common sense. We are closer to each other than to the other cities," said Manuel Ochoa, an official with the Greater El Paso Chamber of Commerce.

"We are so far from Houston and Dallas that we can't figure out how we can work with them on a daily basis as we work with Las Cruces, (N.M.), the way we work with Juarez (Mexico)."

The distances are daunting.

El Paso is right across the Rio Grande from Juarez and about 35 miles from Las Cruces, but at least a day's drive from Dallas or San Antonio.

In fact, El Paso is closer to New Mexico's capitol, Santa Fe (270 miles), than to Austin (580 miles).

It's in a different time zone that leaves it an hour behind the rest of the state.

There also are differences in environment and geology. The state flower, the bluebonnet, doesn't even grow wild in El Paso.

"No," said County Extension Agent John White. "We're a little too dry out here."

All of this has contributed to making El Paso less visible to other Texans, and led in part to the isolation, some residents say. Yet, they also point out that El Pasoans' attitudes haven't really helped things.

"We complain that they forget about us, but we also forget about them," said Martin, the UTEP history professor.

Notorious crime scene closes permanently

By Patti Muck
Houston Chronicle

SUGAR LAND — For murderers, it was the ideal dumping ground. The Brazos River Turnaround, just minutes south of Houston on U.S. 59, offered the isolation, darkness and convenience that criminals bank on.

Now the spot notorious for murders, rapes, animal sacrifices, drownings and other law enforcement nightmares, is closing forever.

Sugar Land police, backed with crime statistics, persuaded the Texas Department of Transportation to permanently seal off the Turnaround, considered one of the most dangerous locales in Fort Bend County. It had been temporarily closed to most traffic since October flooding.

"It was always a real hot issue for us," said Pat Whitty, the Sugar Land police community services coordinator. "Anytime there was a rape, murder or dead body, it was usually in that location, and there were gunshots left and right there."

In a letter to highway officials late last year, police cited 86 emergency calls at the Turnaround during a three-month period in 1994. They ranged from chemical waste dumping and abandoned autos to drownings and sexual assaults.

"I can't count the numerous bodies that have been dumped there," said sheriff's Lt. Mike Lorenz.

Before Sugar Land annexed the area in 1985, the Sheriff's Department worked all the crimes connected with the Brazos River Turnaround. After 1985, Sugar Land Police worked crimes under the bridge, while the Fort Bend County Sheriff's Department handled everything from the treeline back.

"It's had a stigma in law enforcement for years as the dumping ground for Harris County murders," Lorenz said.

Built in the early 1960s, the Turnaround was supposed to be a highway convenience — an area for motorists to turn around without crossing a grassy median and for emergency vehicles to make quick U-turns.

When the river was low, the Turnaround attracted fishermen, all-terrain vehicle enthusiasts, swimmers, target shooters and picnickers.

But the river at that spot is "not a friendly body of water with a nice friendly beach," said Sugar Land Police Chief Earnest Taylor.

"It's dangerous. There are steep banks and the water is swift," he said. "The fact it's closed down hopefully will keep people out of there. I don't think anybody, including the state, intended for that to be a park."

Jesse Garcia, area highway department engineer agreed. "The purpose of it was not a recreational area, and most of the people going back there were not fishing," he said.

The Texas Department of Trans portation will keep a maintenance area under the bridge, but it will be fenced and locked. Garcia said the area can be used for stockpiling materials and storing equipment.

Last week, construction crews started erecting permanent barriers at the access road entrance. Temporary barriers shut down the Turnaround after October floods sent the Brazos River spilling into the adjoining property and filled the roadway with silt and mud.

"We're glad it's gone," said sheriff's Detective Charles Gasser.

Most recently, he investigated the sacrifices of several chickens and a goat under the bridge. It turned out to be part of a religious ceremony, but the passer-by who discovered the gruesome leftovers — mixed in with women's clothing — panicked, thinking she had stumbled on human remains.

Racial preference amendment won't pass, Bullock says

AUSTIN (AP) — A proposal to make racial and gender preferences unconstitutional won't make it out of the Legislature, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock said Friday.

"That amendment hadn't got the votes to pass in the Senate, it hadn't got the votes to pass in the House," Bullock said. "From talking to the members, it's not a hot, top priority with anybody."

It takes a two-thirds vote of the House and Senate and voter approval in a statewide referendum to change the Texas Constitution.

The proposal offered this week by Sen. David Sibley, R-Waco, would forbid the state, counties, cities and schools from discriminating against or giving preferential treatment to a person because of race, gender, sexual orientation, color, ethnicity or national origin.

Sibley said it would apply in public employment, public education and government contracts with businesses.

In proposing the idea, Sibley said he believes affirmative action programs discriminate against whites.

Caucuses representing black and Mexican American legislators, along with other groups, called a news conference Thursday to condemn the proposal. One black legislator, Rep. Ron Wilson, arrived dressed in the hood and sheet of the Ku Klux Klan.

"It's a real two-edged sword," Bullock said of the proposal. "One, it says you can't discriminate because of these things, and the other it says you can't grant any preferential treatment to a person because of these things.

"It's just like a knife that's sharpened on both sides, it cuts both ways."

Bullock said he believes minorities and women continue to face discrimination.

"We all know that ... there are people that have been discriminated against in the past, and there are people today that are discriminated against," he said.

Sibley's office said Friday that public support for the senator's proposal had been strong.

"We've gotten over 100 phone calls and zero of them were negative," said Kirsten Dietz, Sibley's press secretary.

"They're from all over the state. The majority are supportive of this amendment and 'appalled,' 'disgusted' and 'disgraced' in regards to one of the Houston representatives' behavior," she said in reference to Wilson's action.

Rep. Nancy Moffat, R-Southlake, filed a similar measure in the House on Friday. The proposal mirrors Sibley's, except it deletes references to sexual orientation.

Ms. Dietz said Sibley also would delete those references from his legislation.

Men face sexual assault charges in computer sex ring probe

HOUSTON (AP) — Two Alvin computer store operators face additional sexual assault charges in a probe into an alleged computer sex ring.

Gene Howland, 41, and Daniel Van Deusen, 26, were being held in the Brazoria County Jail with bonds totaling $450,000 each.

The men are accused of luring two Brazoria County boys — ages 14 and 15 — to their home and business through operation of a pornographic bulletin board called "Lifestyles." The assaults occurred over a two-month period, investigators said.

Police say the charges are based on the two alleged victims. "Hopefully, we have no more victims, but we suspect there may be," said sheriff's Investigator Gary Stroud.

Howland and Van Deusen each were charged with two counts of aggravated sexual assault of a child when they were arrested in Alvin last week.

On Friday, both were named in two more similar charges filed by the county and two counts each of indecency with a child filed by Alvin police, investigators said.

Both police and sheriff's investigators are working on the case because they believe some of the alleged assaults occurred at the men's home outside Alvin, while others are believed to have occurred inside their business, Computer Connections, which is in the city.

Investigators said the two youths met the men after tapping into the computer bulletin board, to which at least 100 other teens from Brazoria and nearby counties also gained access. The bulletin board contains graphic stories and pictures and was brought to light in late February when an adult user alerted police that minors were tapping into it.

RRC oil incentives offer good model

Texas Railroad Commissioners Barry Williamson, Carole Keeton Rylander and Charles Matthews were in Midland recently to promote the commission's eight-point incentive package to revitalize the domestic oil industry.

Commission Chairman Williamson, a former resident of Midland said, "We are trying to use Texas as an experiment. We want to encourage other states to enact similar laws to help the oil and gas industry."

The commission's plan is a forthright attempt to revitalize the domestic oil industry by getting government actively involved in developing tax incentives designed to optimize oil production from mature and declining oil fields.

The plan to make the oil industry revitalization in Texas a model for the entire nation is noteworthy because:

1) As the leading producer of oil in the United States, Texas has the expertise and the technological edge on the rest of the nation.

2) Texas lawmakers comprehend more fully than most that the oil industry must have tax incentives in order to carry on drilling operations, develop oil fields and prolong their productive life.

3) The Texas Railroad Commission has a long track record of promoting new legislation essential for the successful operation of the oil industry. Thus, it is reasonable that this program would be a worthwhile "model" for such a program throughout the nation.

This is both a worthwhile and positive undertaking for the Texas Railroad Commission. It now is up to the Texas congressional delegation in Washington, D.C. to begin promoting this Texas "experiment" as a good and valid "case study" for a similar program of tax incentives at the national level designed to breathe life back into the oil industry nationwide. Through enactment of such realistic and reasonable incentives, the oil industry can be revitalized, oil imports reduced and this nation's energy security restored.

Legislators must craft juvenile justice

Forty. Four-zero. That's how many juvenile justice bills and resolutions are trotting around the state Senate. Representatives must shepherd a separate flock of related bills through their chamber. Without an overarching vision, Texas could have a statutory stampede on its hands.

Legislators will save time later by investing some thought now. They need to determine how these bills overlap and whether they confront the entire spectrum of juvenile offenders — from shoplifters to capital murderers.

The Texas Commission on Children and Youth laid out a thoughtful juvenile justice strategy — complete with funding requirements — in its December report. It had clear goals concerning juvenile justice: deterring offenders from later crimes by preventing delinquency and ensuring that first-offenders face tough sanctions; and guaranteeing that violent or habitual youth offenders receive stiff, certain punishments.

More Senate bills address the punishment issues. The bills expand determinate sentencing, which affects habitual and violent offenders. This form of punishment keeps a juvenile in a Texas Youth Commission facility until he or she turns 18. Then the youth can be paroled, kept at the commission facility or turned over to an adult prison. The bills suggest increasing the number of offenses that can trigger determinate sentencing, and establishing ranges of punishments for different crimes.

The Commission on Children and Youth estimated these changes could cost $56.5 million during 1996-97. The Senate's draft budget includes a $36.5 million increase earmarked for new Youth Commission beds. That's a good start.

But the new beds should represent the extreme end of a series of significant, progressive sanctions. Legislators must be equally concerned about what happens to less-serious delinquents. Earlier intervention can deter later crimes.

Progressive sanctions require a broad range of services and penalties, mostly in home counties. Those programs must be adequately funded and carefully evaluated. One police chief suggested a simple rule: divide juvenile justice money evenly between the Youth Commission and early intervention programs.

"You can never build your way out of a problem," said Richardson Police Chief Ken Yarbrough. "You have to put some resources in on the front end."

We couldn't agree more.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Sunday, March 12, the 71st day of 1995. There are 294 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 12, 1933, President Roosevelt delivered the first of his "fireside chats," telling Americans in a radio broadcast what was being done to deal with the nation's financial crisis.

On this date:

In 1664, New Jersey became a British colony as King Charles II granted land in the New World to his brother James, the Duke of York.

In 1912, in Savannah, Ga., Juliette Gordon Low founded the Girl Guides, which later became the Girl Scouts of America.

In 1925, Chinese revolutionary leader Sun Yat-sen died.

In 1938, the "Anschluss" took place as German troops entered Austria, completing what Adolf Hitler described as his mission to restore his homeland to the Third Reich.

In 1939, Pope Pius XII was formally crowned in ceremonies at the Vatican.

JACK ANDERSON

Gephardt tries to head off early retirement

WASHINGTON — During a private luncheon recently, House Minority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., proposed an early warning system to head off an expected rash of Democratic retirements before the 1996 elections.

Anderson

Gephardt raised the issue with members of his kitchen cabinet: nearly a dozen former House members and loyalists who are being tapped for political advice, fund-raising and candidate recruitment. The list includes former Reps. Dennis Eckart, D-Ohio, Romano Mazzoli, D-Ky., and William Ford, D-Mich.

Along with Rep. Martin Frost, D-Texas, chairman of the Democratic Congressional Campaign Committee, Gephardt is concerned about the morale of the old bulls in his own caucus.

Most of these veterans — including some former committee chairmen — are strangers to congressional life without the perks and power that come with being in the majority, and might retire rather than suffer another term under Republican rule. While Gephardt's allies awaited his arrival at a local restaurant, they jested that there was much to recommend life outside the House, and that serving as a Democrat today is akin to spending time in a "POW camp."

Those certainly aren't feelings Gephardt wants to see fanned. Retirements could put the goal of gaining 14 new seats and dethroning House Speaker Newt Gingrich out of reach. Republicans were greatly helped last election by 27 seats left open by Democratic retirements.

Gephardt and Frost fret about being caught flat-footed by retirement announcements. By creating what amounts to a tip line on Democrats who might be thinking about quitting, Gephardt and Frost hope to convince wavering members not to jump ship. The sales pitch: Give us a chance to win back the House.

Both men have already descended on the offices of Democrats who were considered possible retirees. They arrived to boost morale and to offer campaign contributions.

"We don't want anyone to retire, and we're trying to talk to them early to encourage them to run," Gephardt told us. "In many, many cases this has been a successful effort. We want to know about (retirements) early, if that's the case, and find a candidate in the district who can win it."

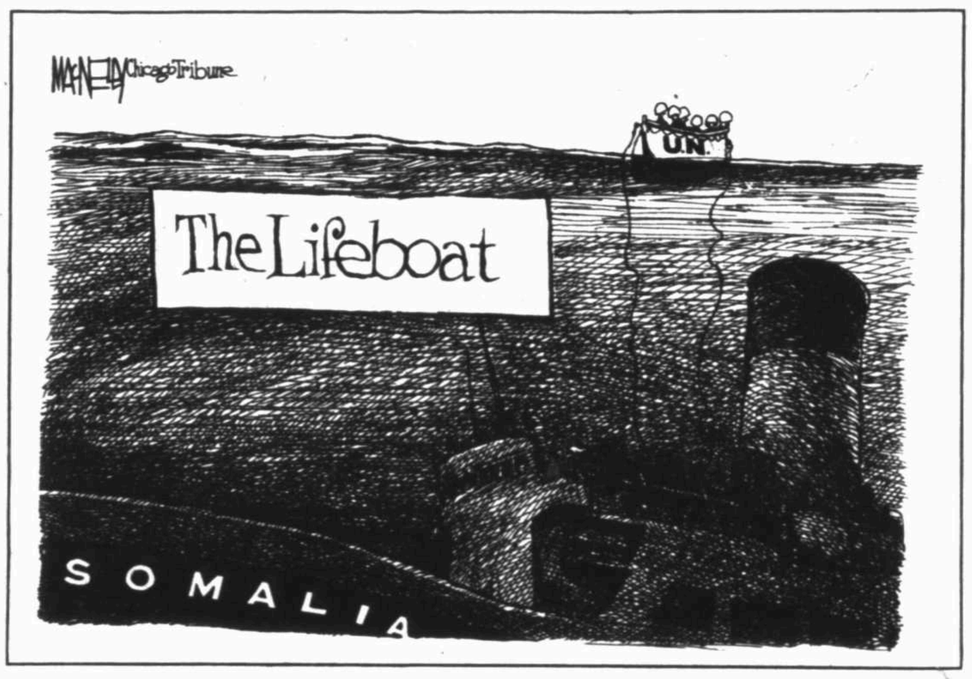

Despite inheriting a DCCC debt of $2.5 million, which means monthly interest and principal payments of $170,000, Frost exudes boundless optimism about his task. A sheaf of DCCC charts and graphs purport to show the weak links in the Republican landslide. Frost notes that 41 Republicans won by less than 10 percent. And the last two times Republicans won the House, in 1946 and 1952, they held power only two years.

"History is on our side," Frost says. "This place is basically up for grabs. With any breaks we can take it back."

Frost says some of those "breaks" are coming courtesy of Gingrich and his front-page gaffes. Noting some recently successful fund-raisers, he said: "Shall we say we've been mentioning Speaker Gingrich in our mail, and there's been a very strong response to that." Frost hinted that Gingrich might be inadvertently forestalling some retirements by his "radical" and "outrageous" behavior, which is helping to "start the juices flowing" for some older Democrats.

Members of the kitchen cabinet came away from lunch happy after hearing Gephardt discuss negotiations that could lead to a unified Democratic alternative on welfare reform.

GEORGE WILL

Clinton's feet don't seem to follow his mouth

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, toiling to re-reinvent himself, says he is rethinking racial policies and restraining Washington's overreaching. However, because of appointees he drew from among his party's unchastened and unreconstructed liberals, his administration's tendencies continue, regardless of his rhetoric.

Will

Consider the Justice Department's remarkably meretricious attempt to coerce two Arizona counties into racial gerrymandering. The attempt annoys some of its supposed beneficiaries, local Native Americans who understand something that Justice's social engineers either cannot comprehend or consider irrelevant: The change Washington wants to impose would be injurious to the Native Americans' interests.

Because population growth has produced crowded court dockets, Coconino and Navajo counties each want to add two elected judges. But because of past discrimination, since 1972 Arizona has been one of 16 states entirely or partially "covered" by a portion of the Voting Rights Act that requires it to seek Justice Department approval for all voting "changes."

Deval Patrick, head of Justice's civil rights division, insists that merely adding judges constitutes voting "changes." Actually, the only changes relevant to the section of the act that Patrick cites are voting process changes that cause "retrogression" in minority voting strength. By his tendentious reading of the act, Patrick imposes on the counties the burden of justifying their long-standing method of electing judges (in countywide elections) before implementing an increase in the number of judges.

Patrick's next intellectual somersault is to say that elections in the two counties "are characterized by racially polarized voting." The ostensible proof of this is that although Coconino and Navajo counties are 29 percent and 51 percent Native American respectively, no Native Americans have been elected to county offices under at-large voting. To remedy this supposed denial of "equal opportunity to participate in the electoral process and to elect judicial candidates of their choice," Patrick, sitting in his Washington office, proposes Balkanizing each county into judicial districts, one of which in each county would have a huge Native American majority.

Patrick's premise is a non sequitur: The absence of Native American judges proves that Native American voters have insufficient voice in judicial selections. Each of the following three facts refutes that.

First, there are probably fewer than half a dozen Native Americans in each county who have been members of the Arizona bar for five years, a legal prerequisite for judges. Second, tribal and federal courts have jurisdiction over almost all cases concerning Native Americans living on reservations (where 90.6 percent of Navajo County and 74.2 percent of Coconino County Native Americans live). Thus even if there were created a judicial district with a Native American majority that regularly elected a Native American judge, that judge would have few cases involving Native Americans. Third, in the past decade no judge has been elected in either county without winning more Native American votes than any other candidate.

This last explains the opposition Patrick's plan provokes among some Native Americans who actually live where Patrick seeks to rearrange things. By ending countywide voting and carving within the county a Native American majority district, Patrick's scheme might well produce a Native American judge (on a court to which no Native American has ever sought election). But the scheme would do so at the cost of eliminating the decisive influence that Native American voters currently have on all the countywide judicial elections.

Somebody in Washington decides that there is something wrong with the racial composition of the judiciary in two Arizona counties, and that therefore there must be something illegal about the judicial selection process, and suddenly neither logic nor the plain meaning of words or laws can inhibit the extremism of the diversity enforcers.

This skirmish in the federal government's ongoing assault on reason and Americans' sensibilities illustrates why when the president talks moderation, people everywhere will do well to remember this adage about judging a politician: Don't watch his mouth, watch his feet.

George Will's column is distrubuted by Washington Post Writers Group.

RUSSEL BAKER

Endless hours of trial could put viewers in coma

After many years of watching the most widely celebrated trial in human history, I slipped quietly into a coma. Johnnie Cochran objected. I was deeply flattered.

Baker

Cochran was the most brilliant defense attorney to put a leaden thumb on the scales of justice since Socrates argued his own case. Now he was objecting to my very own coma. Surely there were rich book possibilities here.

Judge Lance Ito dealt summarily with him. "Cochran," said Ito, "go eat your prunes." Marcia Clark objected that it was unfair to give dietary advice to the defense.

"Nuts," replied Ito.

"Perhaps Your Honor does not understand the situation," said Ms. Clark. "You are surrounded by the Los Angeles prosecutor's office und vill be annihilated unless you surrender by Christmas Eve."

Ito called for a 20-minute recess, which lasted three days. This led to 48 hours of commercials. During an intermission between arguments for headache nostrums versus denture adhesives, I was horrified to hear Greta van Susteren tell CNN that capital punishment was possible in cases like mine.

On Court TV, however, Fred Graham said I'd probably escape the death penalty by invoking the doctrine of habeas schmabeas. This ancient principle, enunciated by Cato the Younger with the permission of Sen. Robert Byrd of West Virginia, forbids executing anybody who slips into coma at a television trial lasting longer than three years.

Unfortunately, a CBS guest lawyer said the Supreme Court was sick and tired of both habeas schmabeas and Byrd's talk about Catos, whether Younger or Elder.

Then — possible salvation. A good woman, 30 years resident in Los Angeles, had an alibi for me. Though her Hispanic roots went back to the conquistadors, she testified in Urdu that I could not be in a coma because she had just spent the weekend with my lawyers, who told her I wasn't.

"Why is this woman testifying in Urdu instead of her native Spanish?" asked F. Lee Bailey, the most dynamic defense lawyer since Perry Mason made a monkey out of Hamilton Burger once a week for 20 years on CBS.

"Rephrase your description," Judge Ito cautioned me. "You should say that Perry 'made hamburger out of Ham Burger once a week.'"

"I object," thundered Marcia Clark. "This constant dietary dialogue between the bench and defense counsel is outrageous."

"Oh, button your lip," said the judge.

"Anybody want to answer my question?" asked Bailey.

"Isn't it obvious?" I said. "Having lived in the U.S. for 30 years, the lady has forgotten her Spanish."

"But why does she testify in Urdu?" insisted Bailey.

"You're pretty dense for a hotshot defense lawyer," Ito observed. "If the lady spoke English she wouldn't need a translator. Then she wouldn't be able to drive all of us absolutely batty for an entire week."

"But, Your Honor," said Bailey.

"Overruled," said Ito. "You ought to eat more fish, Bailey. It's terrific brain food." And off he went to remove a female juror whose high-piled Passaic pompadour was obstructing the vision of three jurors seated behind her.

Alan Dershowitz phoned a year or two later when the trial resumed. "As your lawyer —" he said.

"Alan Dershowitz is my lawyer? The same Alan Dershowitz I saw in that terrific Jeremy Irons movie about Claus von Bulow is my lawyer?"

He said to cut the etcetera, as he was due on the Larry King show to demand the entire Los Angeles Police Department be indicted for letting me slip into a coma.

If that didn't get me off, he said, he was ready to demand that the Supreme Court be impeached for contempt of Cato the Younger.

Ito insisted I hang up the telephone, but suggested I urge Dershowitz to drop by the court some day as he might pick up some excellent dietary advice.

"Your Honor," cried Marcia Clark, "I object most vigorously to the court's constantly favoring the defense in nutritional matters and demand equal advice to the prosecution."

"Eat your heart out," said Ito.

We should praise Conoco's solution

A great deal of uproar has followed the announcement of a recent agreement between Conoco and Iran for the development of oil reserves off the coast of Iran. Our elected officials especially have been spewing forth indignant statements, the latest version of a 23 yearlong spate of industry bashing. The press has joined in the cacophony of righteous indignation over the involvement of a domestic producer with a sworn enemy. Another view merits consideration.

It appears that Conoco is merely reacting to the catastrophically depressed "free" oil market. This is the same "free" market that was manipulated to bring about the demise of the Soviet Union. Oh yes, a slight side effect of this manipulation was a multi-billion dollar savings and loan bail-out, courtesy of your friendly taxpayer. Not to mention the devastation and essential loss of a vital and strategically critical domestic industry. It's that same "free" market that justified the defense of a small monarchy in the Middle East at the cost of human life and umpteen billions of dollars, once again courtesy of you-know-who. For once our politicians deserve credit. They have clearly chosen to represent the will of the people, and that is the desire for cheap energy regardless of what it costs. The hypocrisy of our elected officials to speak of global markets, while at the same time standing lily-white before the camera and proclaiming that "we buy no oil from Iran," is particularly galling. This statement simply will not stand up to enlighten scrutiny. Yes, they think we are that dumb. Of course they are only feeding us a line most folks want to hear anyway. After all, who in his right mind could justify the bartering of human blood for cheap oil? In correctly interpreting the will of the people our politicians have traded off national security for dollar-a-gallon gasoline ($1.15 in Midland) so that we can drive to the mall to buy the latest "pogs."

Conoco is reacting in a free-market way to the devastation wrought on the domestic industry by 10 years of misguided manipulation and over-regulation from Washington.

Let's either praise Conoco for being creative in finding a solution to the cheap oil supply problem, or demand that our politicians put some "meat" into their criticism by doing something effective to stabilize and promote a viable domestic industry.

Punitive damages should be limited

I was glad to hear the U.S. House of Representatives is considering a bill (H.R. 956) that would reform the way our legal system awards punitive damages.

Punitive damages serve an important function by punishing guilty people for intentional conduct. But recently we've seen larger and larger payouts that seem inappropriate. And these punitive damage awards are over and above a person's out-of-pocket expenses (lost wages, medical bills) and other financial awards for pain and suffering, emotional distress and the like. This just drives up the cost of living for all of us.

H.R. 956 would bring some common sense back to the legal system by limiting punitive damage awards to three times a person's economic damages or $250,000, whichever is greater.

Our legal system needs to be changed. That's why I am going to let Congressman Henry Bonilla know I support this proposal.

We need to realize we are debtors

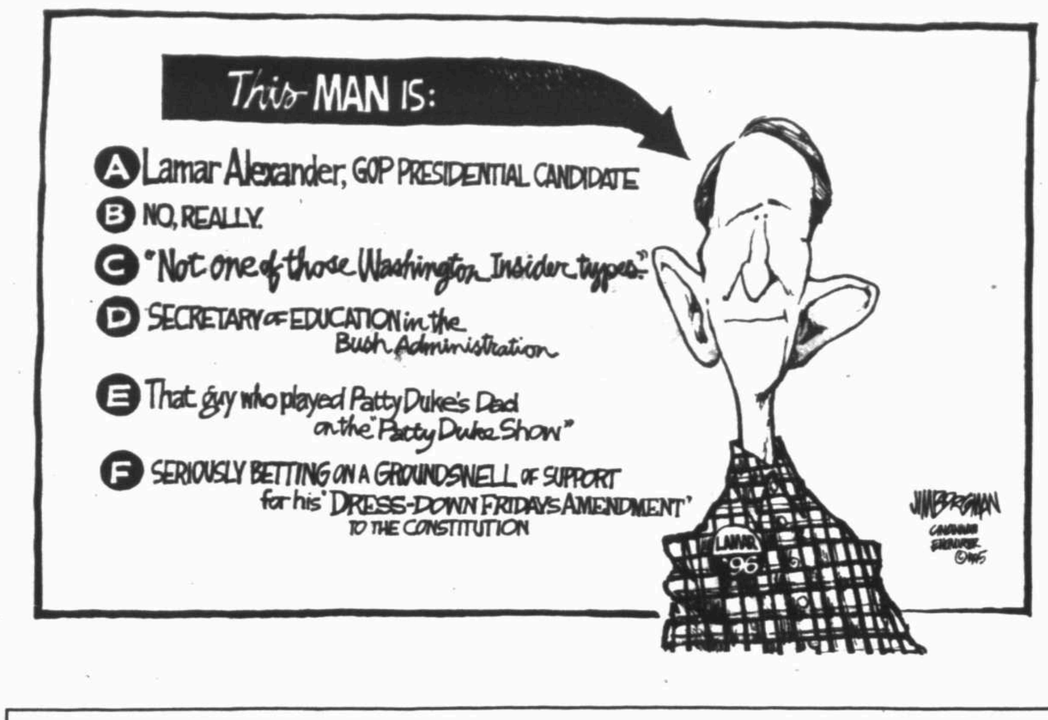

Thankfully, aging provides us an opportunity to do some reflecting. Almost 75 years ago, a beautiful little lady, Mrs. Hartsook, was my first-grade teacher. Across the intervening years, I have thought of her 10,000 times, and there have been hundreds of other teachers and professors to whom I am constantly indebted. This thought brings to mind a word of the aging Apostle Paul. He said, "I am debtor both to the Greeks, and to the Barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise."

Just recently, I came across the word of one Raymond B. Fosdick that was called "The Search For Unity." His first sentence got my attention, "The Bill of Rights will outlast Mein Kampf." He wrote this in 1941, so it was really prophetic. Thankfully. The Bill of Rights has outlasted Mein Kampf!

Most of what he wrote, however, was a reflection regarding our indebtedness to others. He pointed out that a Japanese scientist, Kitasato, isolated the bacillus of tetanus, an Austrian determined the value of transfusions, a Russian developed a shield against typhoid fever, an Italian, Grassi, learned how to protect against malaria, a Frenchman, Pasteur, elaborated a new technique against infection, an Englishman developed protection against smallpox, and that we are indebted to a Frenchman whose wisdom protects us from rabies. (With rabies abroad in Texas, perhaps we need to thank the Frenchman again, even now!)

Fosdick continues on, "from birth to death (we) are surrounded by an invisible host — the spirit of men who never thought in terms of flags or boundary lines and who never served a lesser loyalty than the welfare of mankind." Hopefully, we as a people, as Americans, as a multiculture of religions, as a multiculture of ethnic interests, as a multiculture of social ideals, and as a multiculture of political concerns will be able to reflect as prophetically and as wisely in 1995 as Raymond Fosdick was able to do before Pearl Harbor in 1941. Perhaps the future of Midland, of Texas, of the USA, of the Americas, and of our world may depend in part on our being able to say with Fosdick and with the Apostle Paul, "I am debtor...both to the wise, and to the unwise."

Community gives comfort in time of sorrow

When Julianne and I moved to Midland in August 1994, people welcomed us and made us feel that we were part of a caring community. We were happy in this city, and we looked forward to our life here. The incredible tragedy of Feb. 10, 1995, which cut short her life and plunged me and my family into a time of indescribable sorrow, has not changed my feelings about Midland. I am overwhelmed by the outpouring of kindness, generosity, and care that I have received. I want to thank those of you who have given me and my family so much comfort and who have sustained us and supported us as we have tried to cope with our profound loss.

The staff at the Midland Memorial Hospital established the Julianne Powell Memorial Fund that has helped to alleviate our financial burdens, and they have been unwavering in their emotional and physical support of me. Newnie Ellis and his staff extended not only professional comfort but also waived a large amount of the expenses incurred at the Ellis Funeral Home. The management of Quinten's Walk Apartments has been supportive and generous to me, and the neighbors there have been wonderful!

Members of the Midland County Sheriff's Department Crisis Intervention Unit and Sheriff Gary Painter helped to sustain me and my family during the ordeal of Julianne's disappearance and the subsequent search for her. In addition, they worked with other community agencies to organize and hold the beautiful Candlelight Vigil that meant so much to us. Mayor Bobby Burns has given of his time to help this community remember Julianne's life. Sgt. B.G. Johnson and members of the Detective Division of the Midland Police Department along with Al Shorre and his staff at the District Attorney's office have shown great care and extreme competence in pursuing the legal avenues that must be taken to ensure that justice be realized.

Rev. Tommy Potter, Rev. Bill Pennington, and members of the First Christian Church have provided spiritual succor and comfort to me and my family, and members of the other churches in this community have reached out to us as well. The presentation by the Goddard Junior High School Drama Club, the dedication of a planter at Santa Rita Elementary School, and the planting of a tree at Dennis the Menace Park have all provided tangible memorials that will ensure that Julianne's life and death will not be forgotten. My heartfelt gratitude goes to Delanna Fryar, Bob Watkins, Ms. Judy Schmidt, Ms. Chris Kelly, Ms. Nancy Fisher, the Santa Rita P.T.A. and students and Jimmy Patterson for the tireless energy they devoted to planning and providing these commemorative events.

Finally, I want to thank Sue Scott and the other staff members at the Midland American Bank who have been so helpful in facilitating the Julianne Powell Memorial Fund. In addition, I want to express my appreciation to those people who made contributions to that fund but whose names and/or addresses were not available to me so that I could send a personal note of appreciation.

I know you will understand when I say that nothing can truly ease the deep sense of sorrow and emptiness that I feel in the senseless murder of my daughter. But the comfort this community has given me will always bring a glow of warmth and love to me.

Handicapped people deserve access

To Messrs. Mulloy and Covarrubias regarding their views against corner curbing for handicapped access, when thousands of dollars are spent annually on city parks and greenbelt maintenance and decking out the city in holiday decor and other such aesthetics for the enjoyment of those who choose to enjoy them, do you then send up your hues and cries about "wasted monies"?

Nearly 20 years ago our lives were impacted by an 11-year-old child wheelchair-bound for a year. The obstacles we faced during that period ranged from difficult to extremely frustrating at best. There is no guarantee that a handicapped situation won't again touch our lives, nor for that matter the lives of any man, woman or child!

I raise no objection here to city monies spent on aesthetics, however, I would suggest that if one enjoys but one time a city holiday decor or a view or walk through a city-maintained park, why is it less important for any handicapped person to be allowed the dignity of simple access to a sidewalk?

MISD officers should be armed

I am writing about an issue I believe to be important. I hope after reading this letter that the citizens of Midland will also find it important and speak out in support of our school district's police officers.

It concerns me that our Midland Independent School District (MISD) police officers are unarmed, especially upon learning that students have been arrested both on and off campus with guns in their possession. The MISD police department has an evidence room full of guns and other illegal weapons that have been confiscated from MISD students.

These police officers are fully trained and licensed, just like Midland Police Department (MPD) officers. They are not to be confused with the campus security guards. I might also add that two of these officers have also served on the MPD. Our campus police officers risk their lives every time they put on their uniforms and go to work, just like any other policemen. And we ask them to do this unarmed? They renew their TCLEOSE license and test their skills regularly. In fact, on their annual firearms certification, the MISD firearms instructor holds his officers to a higher qualifying standard than the state requires.

The MISD policemen's jobs do not end when school is out. They are authorized to make arrests and traffic stops, which are sometimes necessary. Every traffic stop is unpredictable and a potentially dangerous situation. These men also rotate being on 24-hour call. Each of them has been summoned to a school security alarm going off in the middle of the night knowing there was an intruder inside that building. Entry must be delayed until MPD arrives, as it would be much too risky to possibly interrupt a theft or robbery in progress without proper protection.

If our MISD policemen were armed they could perform their tasks more independently and it would definitely be safer for them and the children they are committed to protect.

Please find out who your neighborhood school board representative is by calling the superintendent's office at 689-1000. Then encourage our school board to adopt a policy allowing our school police officers to be armed, for their protection and our students.

Readers' views on: Language

Separatist groups should not receive preferential treatment

America, from the beginning, has been a melting pot. Masses have come from all parts of the globe to be Americans, where English has always been the language of our nation. Recently, in our community, there have been two cultures that have become separatists.

Except for the Native American Indians, everyone in this country at one time or another, has had to adapt and accept English as the language of communication. It worked for 200 years. Why should this separatists group be given preferential treatment over the hundreds of other ethnic forces that make up the American population.

As for the reference that was made to Dianne Anderson concerning her learning to speak German, I do not believe Mrs. Anderson has any intention of moving to Germany.

Mrs. Lilly Baker
Midland

People need to learn language of country they choose to live in

The March 2 Reporter-Telegram reporting on the school board meeting brought to mind how much we need passage of English-only legislation. I do not think any school board should be required to listen to parents speaking in a foreign language regarding issues in a public school system in the United States of America.

House Bill 1005 has been submitted in the House of Representatives to make English the official language of the United States. I urge all people who feel this legislation is necessary to urge their congressman to vote for it.

I certainly favor helping young Spanish-speaking children learn English. However, if their parents also want to help their children learn English it is necessary they learn to speak the language of the country in which they have chosen to reside.

It's about time to get serious about brand names

Before I get to today's topic, which is mutant cereal in Canada, I want to apologize in a sincerely legal manner to JOC-KEY International Inc., which manufactures JOCKEY brand wearing apparel. Recently I received a certified letter from Charlotte Shapiro, a JOCKEY brand corporation attorney, noting that, in a column concerning the issue of whether or not you can eat your underwear, I had incorrectly used the official JOCKEY brand name in the following sentence:

Barry

"Waiter, are these JOCKEYS fresh?"

Ms. Shapiro points out that the word JOCKEY is an official trademark, not a generic word for underwear, and it must be used "as an adjective followed by the common name for the product." Thus my sentence should, legally, have read as follows:

"Waiter, there's a fly in these JOCKEYS!"

I am grateful to Ms. Shapiro for making me more sensitive to this issue, and in the future if I ever hear anyone misusing the JOCKEY brand name, I will make it my business to strike that person with a Sears CRAFTSMAN brand hammer.

Speaking of hard objects, I have here an alarming item from the oxymoronically named Canadian newspaper Northern Life. The article concerns a Sudbury, Ontario, woman named Dot Brousseau, who was pouring some Kellogg's brand CORN FLAKES cereal into a bowl when — please try to remain calm — out came a hard, fist-sized clump of CORN FLAKES all wadded together.

Like most professional journalists, I routinely investigate any documented case of breakfast foods spontaneously wadding together, so I contacted various news sources and I was able to determine that Canada does, in fact, have telephones. I then called Dot Brousseau and asked her for an update on the situation. She told me that she had received "several compliments" on the Northern Life article, and that a number of people had come over to view her clump, which she is keeping in a BAGGIES brand plastic bag.

She said that Kellogg's had given her some free products. "They're going to bend over backward to kiss our butt," she noted.

Speaking of scary consumer things, I have also received, from alert reader Ron Fusco, an article from the Dec. 27, 1994, edition of The Pacific Daily News. The top story on page one concerns a 13-year-old Guam boy whose NIKE brand shoes exploded. I am not making this up. The article quotes the boy's mother as saying that her son had jumped up to touch a beam in the garage when his shoes "seemed to explode, catching his jeans on fire."

I want to stress that this is just one isolated incident of NIKE shoes apparently exploding. We cannot conclude that all NIKE footwear explodes, even if we feel somewhat bitter toward the NIKE brand corporation because we are forced to purchase its absurdly overpriced products for our children.

Ha ha! I am joshing, of course. Just in case I may have misused or maligned any brand names in this column, let me conclude with this formal statement of apology to any giant corporate entity I may have offended: I'm really sorry, OK? So don't get your JOCKEYS in a knot.

GOOD NEWS FOR GROUP GIFT GIVERS!!!

When several of you go together to give a great gift instead of 6 or 10 "OK" gifts, The Canopy is happy to bill each person in the group a portion of the cost including the correct share for the card(s) and gift wrap. We don't care if there are 10 or 15 givers, and it eliminates the need for one person to collect from everyone else.

Don't you hate telling your best friend that you still haven't been paid for another best friend's gift? We don't mind telling people that at all.

Employers risk lawsuits by denying work to AIDS-infected employees

By L.M. Sixel
Houston Chronicle

HOUSTON — When AIDS sufferers who take ill are well enough to return to work, some employers won't let them — and those employers are risking lawsuits.

Most of the HIV/AIDS lawsuits filed these days involve employees who took medical leaves but found they weren't allowed to return to their jobs, experts say.

Either the employer says, "we don't want you anymore," or "we no longer have a job for you anymore," said Mitchell Katine, a Houston lawyer who represents several HIV/AIDS-stricken workers.

In one recent high-profile case, for example, one of Katine's clients wanted to return to Gulf Precision Industries after being treated for AIDS. The worker's boss asked employees to vote on whether he should come back, according to court documents. The court records show most voted no, and the worker — known only as John Doe — was fired.

The U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission sued Gulf Precision Industries, accusing the company of not accommodating Doe's illness as required by the Americans with Disabilities Act.

In an interview earlier this month, Houston plant manager R.M. Stribling acknowledged he asked employees if they wanted Doe to continue in his job as a precision grinder.

"They didn't want to work with him because skinned places are going to happen around here," said Stribling, adding that employees are always using bandages to cover nicks and scrapes.

Most of the time, employers aren't that straightforward. Companies are careful to use other reasons like the employee's work isn't very good, and that makes a disability-discrimination case hard to prove, said Jim Harrington, legal director of the Texas Civil Rights Project in Austin.

Typically, an employer doesn't want to deal with the medicial costs and absences of an employee infected with the HIV virus, so the worker is fired, said Terry Dworkin, professor of business law at the Indiana University School of Business in Bloomington. Only later do employers try to justify the firing by picking out instances that didn't seem significant at the time to build their case, Dworkin said.

Another big problem for AIDS sufferers are employers who try to cap health insurance benefits for specific illnesses. Even though the EEOC sues employers for instituting caps, employers continue to try it.

A grocery store employee who is infected with the HIV virus said it was a nightmare when he found out his health insurance was running out. His employer had a $25,000 cap per year for the treatment of veneral illnesses, with a $75,000 maximum, and the employer put AIDS/HIV in that category.

The home health service he depended on was demanding $45,000 for intravenous drugs and when he couldn't raise the money — his savings were already depleted — the drugs were cut off, said the employee, who asked not to be identified.

Doctors put him on oral drugs that weren't nearly as aggressive in treating infections, and — with bill collectors calling every day — stress worsened his medical condition.

He wound up with a brain fungus and a parasite that began eating away at his colon.

"I could have died because I was taken off the IV," he said.

With the help of a lawyer, it took a year to get the insurance reinstated.

At one time, employers could point to the H&H Music Co. case in which a Houston company argued — and convinced the U.S. Supreme Court — that its self-funded insurance plan should be able to cap the money it spends on AIDS diseases.

That was permissible before the Americans with Disibilities Act of 1990, but not anymore, said Jim Sacher, regional attorney for the EEOC.

The EEOC recently settled a case with an employer who put a $10,000 cap on AIDS benefits yet covered $1 million for other illnesses. The employer agreed to repay all the medical claims for an AIDS-infected employee, treat AIDS as any other illness in the future and donate $20,000 to an AIDS charity.

AIDS discrimination cases, which the EEOC is making a priority, makes up a surprising large percentage of Disabilities Act court cases, Sacher said. Nationwide, the EEOC has 35 Disabilities Act cases pending, and eight of them have to do with AIDS.

Although more and more workers are using the Americans with Disabilities Act to force employers to make the required "reasonable accommodations" for their disabilities, many employees remain reluctant to do so.

To take advantage of the law, an employee must notify a supervisor, preferably in writing, that he has a disability and request some sort of help to do his job, Katine said. Unless the disability's obvious — for instance, when the worker uses a wheelchair — if an employee doesn't mention the disability, then he has no protection under the Disabilities Act.

Texas overcomes late deficit for victory

By Denne H. Freeman

DALLAS — A drained and tired Texas coach Tom Penders said he has never played, coached or watched a game like the Southwest Conference tournament final.

"If this had been a Final Four game, they would be talking about it for years," Penders said. "I've never seen or been in a game like it. There were some amazing plays."

Reserve Carl Simpson scored six points and Roderick Anderson hit four vital free throws in overtime Saturday night as the Longhorns earned an automatic NCAA bid with a 107-104 Southwest Conference tournament victory over Texas Tech.

Texas increased its record to 2..-6 while the Red Raiders, who were conference co-champions along with the Longhorns, dropped to 20-9.

"If Tech isn't one of the top 30 teams in the country I'm going to start selling shoes," Penders said. "If they don't go to the NCAA it would be a real injustice. Other than North Carolina they are the most athletic team we've played."

Anderson hit four free throws in the last 30 seconds of overtime and Tech put up two long shots, failing to tie it at the buzzer.

"Simpson picked us up when we needed it," Penders said. "It was a game in which neither team would give in. But we made the plays and hit the free throws when we had to."

Tech coach James Dickey said he "felt" for his team.

"It really hurt to lose a game like this," Dickey said. "But Texas hit some huge shots when they had to hit them. It was

Lady Raiders jump out early lead in win

By Denne H. Freeman

DALLAS — This time the Texas Tech Lady Raiders weren't going to let a last-second shot beat them.

In the Southwest Conference tournament last year, a buzzer-beater by Texas inflicted a two-point defeat on Tech. On Saturday, Texas Tech routed Southern Methodist early.

Tech's Tabitha Truesdale scored 19 points and two other Lady Red Raiders were in double figures as they rolled to an 84-62 victory over the Lady Mustangs in the SWC tournament championship to earn an automatic NCAA bid.

Sixth-ranked Texas Tech upped its record to 30-3 and assured itself one of the high seeds when the committee announces the pairings today.

"We were determined the outcome wasn't going to be like it was last year," said Tech coach Marsha Sharp. "We wanted our title back. We did a good job of meeting the challenge all week as the No. 1 seed. We took it to SMU early."

This is the sixth consecutive year Tech has been in the NCAA tournament and eighth overall. It's their third conference title in four years.

Sharp said "this is the best defensive team I've ever coached" and that includes her 1992 national champions.

"If we can have a little luck and get hot then I think we have a chance to go the ODESSA - The Midland High girls may not be ready to take on District 4-5A track moguls Abilene High and Odessa Permian, but the mostly-underclassman Lady Bulldogs took advantage of their best weapons on Saturday to garner 68 points and a fourth-place finish in the 51st West Texas Relays at Ratliff Stadium.

Abilene won two relays and Farah Banks set two more meet records on the second day to power to 118 points. El Paso Burges was second with 84 while Permian was third with 78.

■ West Texas Relays

In the Class 5A boys division. Killeen Ellison outnumbered Odessa High to hold off a Broncho rally for a second straight WT Relays title, 96-94. Ellison was leading by 30 points going into the final two events - the open 1,600 and the 1,600 relay. But Ellison did not have any competitors in either of those races and Odessa had the top qualifier in each.

The Eagles pulled it out however when favored Daniel Carrasco, who had been ill all week, failed to hang on to his lead in the 1,600 and took second. That cost the Bronchos two points and even the Broncho winning mile relay's 20 points could not capitalize on a chance to tie for the team title. Permian was third with 61 while Midland Lee was fifth with 55.

In Class 4A boys, Canyon repeated as champion but not in the same division. The defending division 3A champion Eagles were moved to 4A this year by the UIL but it didn't seem to matter as they took it to defending 4A champ San Angelo Lake View by a score of 127-61. Andrews was 13th with 10 points.

Rebs squeak past Permian

If imitation is the best form of flattery, then the Midland Lee softball team must have felt feel pretty proud Saturday.

After all, Lee watched as Odessa Permian pitcher Shelley Reeves did her best imitation of Lee's senior pitcher Emily Hayes in Lee's 1-0 win over Permian, Saturday in District 6-5A action at the Bill Williams' Softball Complex.

■ 6-5A Softball

"That's the best pitching we've seen," Midland Lee coach J.C. Gotcher said after the victory. "I want to know where she's been hiding."

Reeves shut out the Lady Rebels for seven innings, striking out nine batters and leaving the others thoroughly confused. Reeves held the Lee ballclub, that came into the game hitting .320, to a .192 (5-29) mark.

Lee had only four hits in the first seven innings, but could not manufacture a run even with the bases loaded and nobody out as Lee had in the fifth inning. The performance by Reeves and her teammates made Lee wonder about Permian's 4-8 season and 1-3 district record.

"Permian played well," Gotcher said. "They ought to have a better record than they do."

However, things would change for Permian in the bottom of the eighth inning. With one out, designated hitter Marcie Villa stroked a single into left-center. After the Odessa Permian center

Lee girls pull off of repeat region swim title

■ Midland Lee depth too much for competition as Rebels grab region championship.

Howard Flowers put on his game face. Monica Stroman laughed off her first second-place finish of the year. And Ted Carson avoided the customary dunk in the pool for the winning coach.

In all, things turned out well for Midland swimmers Saturday at the UIL Region I meet. Midland Lee's girls defended their championship with 32 points more than second place Amarillo High. And with wins Saturday, Lee and Midland High will send five swimmers and a diver to state. Midland High will probably send Flowers and one or two boys relays to state with at-large berths.

In a fast meet that saw four records fall, El Paso Eastwood took the boys title when Lubbock High was disqualified for a false start after winning the 200 medley relay. Midland High's boys finished third, ending a five-year reign as region champs. And both the Lee boys and the MHS girls finished eighth.

"The whole region swam really well and I think the West Texas region is definitely improving," said MHS and Lee coach Carson, who was awarded region coach of the year in the girls division by the Texas Interscholastic Swim Coach's Association.

"It's been a fast meet," said City of Midland coach Brad Swendig, on hand to watch several of his swimmers compete. "A lot of these times that are second or third (this year) in past meets would have won."

Stroman, a Lee junior, set a meet mark in the 500-yard freestyle (5:11.56) in an easy win over the field. That helped make up for her loss to Fort Stockton's Quincy Adams in the 200 individual medley. Adams was eight-tenths of a second off her region mark set in 1994 of 2:07.32.

Stroman, who has qualified for this week's senior national championships in Minnesota, was not exactly heart-broken with the loss.

"Quincy is really fast and I was kind of glad her senior year for her to win," Stroman said through a smile. "I'll just wait until next year."

Stroman's time of 2:09.83 should be enough to include her among the eight at-large state meet qualifiers based on times from the state's eight regions. As

Alpine roars past Seminole for March Classic championship

By Stewart Doreen
Sports Writer

Repeat was the word buzzing around Christensen Stadium Saturday night as Alpine took the field in the finals of the West Texas March Classic.

So, it was fitting that repeat is what they did after the No. 1 team in the 3A defeated Seminole 12-2 to win the tournament for the second-straight year.

"It was a good tournament," Alpine coach Mike Pallanez said. "We put a lot of emphasis on the big game. That will help us out later in the year."

Alpine, 7-2 for the season, didn't exactly tear the cover off the ball early, but were still able to score five runs in the first four innings despite having only two hits. The Bucks were able to capitalize in those innings on Seminole mistakes, turning those mistakes into runs. The first two Alpine runs came off wild pitches and the second two runs scored after being walked to get on base.

The bats started to get warmed up in the third and fourth innings as Alpine got a RBI single from Danny Villanueva the third and a triple to deep center by Kevin Losoyn in the fourth that drove in two runs.

The fifth inning is where the Bucks would blow the game

Cyclones, OSU reach Big 8 finals

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Hurl Beechum hit two 3-pointers in overtime and finished with 25 points as Iowa State upset No. 2 Kansas 80-72 Saturday in a semifinal of the Big Eight tournament.

Jacque Vaughn, a 33 percent 3-point shooter for Kansas this season, had made one with 2.8 seconds left to tie the game at 64 and force the overtime.

The Kansas front line of Ostertag, Pollard and Raef LaFrentz, which had combined for 30 rebounds against Kansas State in the first round, had just 12.

No. 3 Kentucky 86, Florida 72

ATLANTA — Freshman Antoine Walker scored 11 of his 21 points in a seven-minute stretch of the first half when third-ranked Kentucky built a 19-point lead in an 86-72 victory over Florida in the semifinals of the Southeastern Conference tournament.

Kentucky's seventh victory in a row set up a championship showdown with No. 5 Arkansas, which beat No. 20 Alabama 69-58 earlier in the two-game sessions that drew a tournament record crowd of 28,966 in the Georgia Dome.

The Wildcats (24-4) went on a 30-9 run in the first half, starting with Chris Harrison's 3-point basket for a 16-15 lead with 9:50 remaining and ended on Walker's dunk off a steal for a 43-24 advantage 2:08 before the half. It was Kentucky's biggest lead of the game.

The Gators (17-12) made a few brief runs at the Wildcats, but never got the lead below 10 points.

With the Cats leading 71-53 with 6:36 to play, Dan Cross, who finished with 24 points, scored six in an 8-0 run that chopped the lead to 71-61 with 3:46 to play.

No. 4 North Carolina 97, No. 10 Maryland 92 OT

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Rasheed Wallace delivered two big baskets in overtime as fourth-ranked North Carolina advanced to the finals of the Atlantic Coast Conference tournament with a 97-92 victory over No. 10 Maryland.

The Tar Heels (24-4) will play Wake Forest, which beat Virginia 77-68 in the first semifinal. Wallace finished with a career-high 33 points, 23 in the final 25 minutes. He made 13 of 19 shots.

Maryland (24-7) had the final in its sights when Duane Simpkins sank a pair of free throws with 1:17 remaining for an 86-83 lead. Jerry Stackhouse, a 40-percent shooter from 3-point range, calmly sank a 3-point shot with 55 seconds left to tie the score.

Joe Smith drove to the basket to try and regain the lead for Maryland, but Wallace blocked his shot, and Dante Calabria slammed the ball off Johnny Rhodes' leg with 35.9 seconds left, giving possession to the Tar Heels.

North Carolina's chance to end it in regulation came down to Jeff McInnis' 10-foot one-hander from right of the lane with three seconds left. The ball bounced high off the rim and no one could control it before the buzzer sounded.

Maryland got it down to 95-92 following a Smith dunk with 50 seconds to go. After McInnis missed, the Terrapins worked for the final shot, but Simpkins missed a 3-pointer from about 21 feet on the left wing with seven seconds left. Wallace grabbed the rebound, was fouled by Smith and made a pair of free throws to seal it.

Scotty Thurman led the Razorbacks with 14 points, five from the free-throw line in the final 50 seconds, and started the decisive run with 15:25 to play, hitting a 3-pointer that put Arkansas ahead to stay at 38-36.

NEW YORK — Ray Allen scored 24 points and top-seeded Connecticut advanced to its first Big East tournament championship game since 1990 with a victory over Georgetown.

With neither team leading by more than seven points in an exciting second half, the Huskies took the lead for good at 76-75 with 2:29 to play on a dunk by Travis Knight off a pass from Donny Marshall.

No. 7 Wake Forest 77, No. 11 Virginia 68

GREENSBORO, N.C. — Randolph Childress scored 22 of his 30 points in the second half after dislocating a finger on his shooting hand as No. 7 Wake Forest advanced to the Atlantic Coast Conference title game for the first time since 1978.

No. 9 Michigan St. 97, Wisconsin 72

EAST LANSING, Mich. — Shawn Respert scored 31 points in his final home game to lead ninth-ranked Michigan State to a 97-72 rout of Wisconsin in the last Big Ten game in Jud Heathcote's 19-year career with the Spartans.

The game also was the final regular-season performance for Michigan State's "Fire and Ice" backcourt of Respert and Eric Snow.

Michigan State led by just 37-30 at the half, but broke the game open early in the second with a 20-4 that included two Respert 3-pointers.

That gave the Spartans a 64-40 lead with nine minutes to play. Michigan State continued to pull away, even getting a four-point play from Respert, and led by as many as 32 down the stretch.

No. 13 Villanova 90, Providence 75

NEW YORK — Kerry Kittles scored 29 points and No. 13 Villanova withstood a second-half rally from Providence in the semifinals of the Big East tournament.

The second-seeded Wildcats (24-7) will play top-seeded Connecticut, which beat Georgetown 88-81, in today's championship game, their first appearance in the title game since 1988. The teams split the regular-season series, winning on each other's home court.

Kittles, the conference player of the year, was held to nine points on 3-for-12 shooting in the semifinal win over Boston College and he struggled in the first half against the Friars, going 4-for-12 for 10 points. He finished 10-for-21 from the field and has six rebounds and six assists.

No. 18 Arizona St 103, No. 12 Arizona 98 (2 OT)

TUCSON, Ariz. — Mario Bennett scored 34 points and had game-saving blocks in regulation and double overtime in No. 18 Arizona State's 103-98 victory over Arizona, which played without suddenly ineligible Damon Stoudamire.

Bennett blocked a game-tying 3-point attempt by Corey Williams with 5 seconds remaining after the Sun Devils took the lead for good at 99-98 on Joe Zaletel's layup and Isaac Burton added two free throws.

Marcell Capers finished the scoring with two free throws.

The victory was the first for Arizona State (22-8, 12-6 Pac-10) at Arizona (23-7, 13-5) in 12 seasons, and its first season sweep over the Wildcats in the same span.

Bennett scored 27 points in regulation, 12 of them in the final 5:56, and added five in the first overtime. But with 17.5 seconds to go in the first extra period, he missed one of two free throws and Arizona tied it at 90-90 with 8 seconds remaining on a tip by Williams, forcing the second extra period.

No. 19 Oklahoma State 74, No. 16 Oklahoma 58

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Bryant Reeves broke out of a slump with 28 points and 12 rebounds Saturday while leading No. 19 Oklahoma State past No. 16 Oklahoma 74-58 in the semifinals of the Big Eight tournament.

In the finals today, the Cowboys (22-9) will meet Iowa State (22-9), which upset No. 2 Kansas, the conference regular season champion.

Ryan Minor, who beat Reeves in balloting for Big Eight player of the year, had 24 points and 12 rebounds for Oklahoma (23-8) before fouling out with 1:31 to play.

No. 1 UCLA 94, No. 25 Oregon 78

LOS ANGELES — Ed O'Bannon capped his five-year career at Pauley Pavilion with 24 points as top-ranked UCLA routed No. 25 Oregon.

UCLA (25-2, 16-2 Pac-10) avenged one of its two losses, an 82-72 Oregon victory in the Bruins' Pac-10 opener. UCLA's other loss was to California.

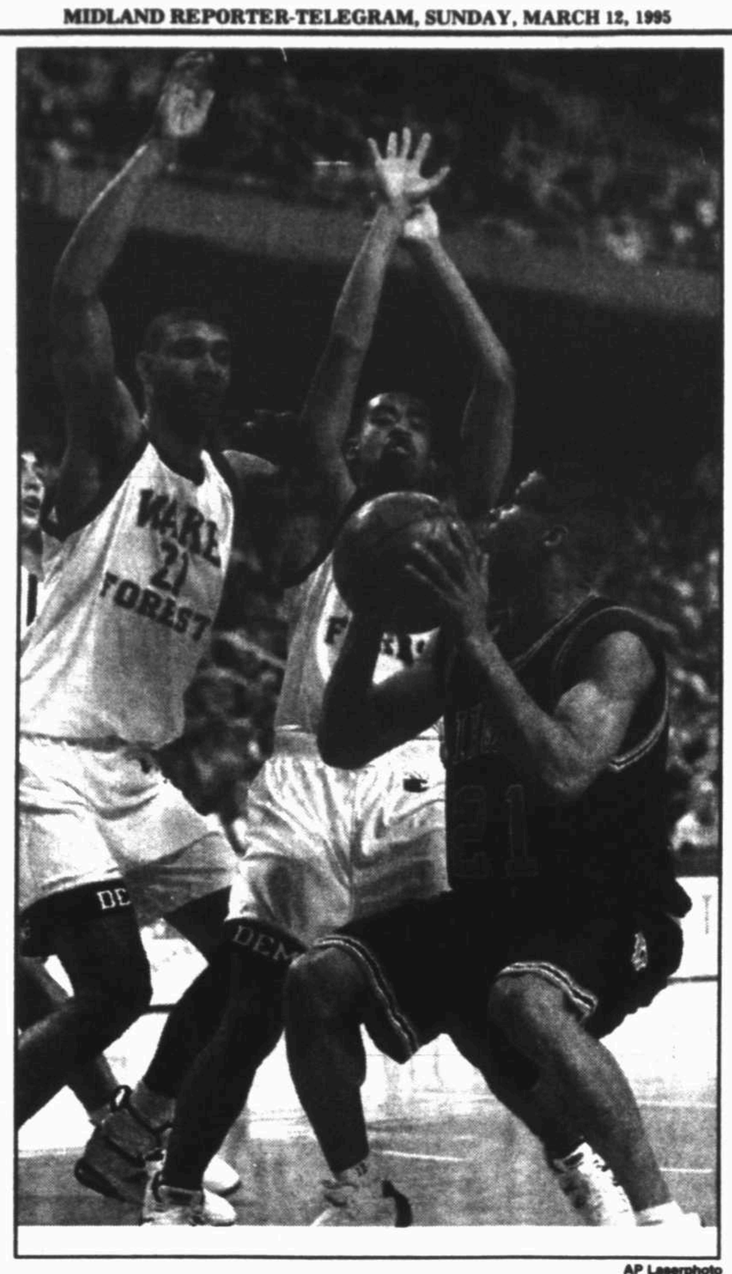

The Bruins dominated Oregon in all aspects and led all the way except for a three-point deficit early in the game.

O'Bannon hit a 3-pointer and then left the game with 4:48 remaining, pausing briefly to kiss the center circle before heading to the bench to a standing ovation.

No. 22 Utah 67, Hawaii 54

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Keith Van Horn scored 24 points and Utah's defense shut down Hawaii in the second half in the Utes' 67-54 win in the championship game of the Western Athletic Conference tournament.

No. 22 Utah (27-5) receives the automatic bid to the NCAA tournament.

whole route," she said. "We have the same ingredients we had two years ago which is experience and explosive players."

SMU, playing in the tournament final for the first time, posted a 20-9 record and the Lady Mustangs will await an at-large bid.

Coach Rhonda Rompola said "we just blinked an eye and we were down 20 points. Tech is great. They played flawless basketball basketball. They could do no wrong."

She said her team was too tense.

"Tech has more tournament experience and we were tight and tentative," Rompola said. "We dug ourselves a deep hole early."

Michi Atkins, the SWC Player of the Year, scored 18 points, and Noel Johnson had 13. Nikki Heath had eight points and 11 rebounds.

SMU was led by Kim Brungardt with 15 points and Jennifer McLaughlin and Kim Brandl with 10 points each.

It was over early for SMU.

The tournament-experienced Lady Raiders took control of the game quickly while it took the jittery Lady Mustangs 4:04 to score their first point.

Johnson's 3-point shot gave Tech a 9-0 lead. SMU finally got on the board with Brandl's three-point play but the Lady Mustangs couldn't handle the fast-breaking Lady Raiders who were led by the swift Truesdale and the athletic Atkins.

Tech rolled easily to a 41-23 halftime lead over the team it had beaten in the regular season 80-61 and 79-58.

SMU shot only 27 percent from the field in the first half and 31 percent for the game while Tech was 52 percent for the game. SMU had 28 turnovers which led to 32 Tech points.

a great showcase game."

It was, in fact, the first overtime championship game in the 19-year history of the SWC.

Terrence Rencher, the tournament MVP, scored 31 points to pace the Longhorns. Reggie Freeman added 24 and Anderson and Rick McIver each scored 12.

"Nobody thought we could do this," Rencher said. "Everybody thought Tech would win the regular season and the tournament. So we came on a mission. We were determined to win it. I'm tired of holding my tongue. I can say we're the best team now."

Jason Sasser led Tech with 28 points, Mark Davis scored 21 and Darvin Ham had 19. Lance Hughes added 15.

The Longhorns' Brandy Perryman hit a 3-point shot from the corner with 15 seconds left to tie the game at 92-all. Tech's Davis couldn't get off a clean shot at the buzzer and the game went to overtime.

"I was fouled but I can't fault the ref," Davis said. "They make mistakes. We can't get it back."

Tech rallied in the second half and built a seven-point lead at 82-75 on a basket by Davis. Sasser, who had only four points in the first half, sparked the Raider comeback with eight straight points. But Texas chipped away and sent the game into overtime.

The Longhorns shot a sizzling 63 percent from the field in the first half but could manage only a 47-41 lead over the Red Raiders, who shot 48 percent.

Texas led by as many as 14 points at 18-4. Tech made a run to get within a point but the Longhorns got four straight 3-point shots from Anderson, Rencher, Brandy Perryman and Reggie Freeman to take command at 43-30.

A 3-point shot by Davis spurred a 11-4 run for Tech to pull the Raiders close at halftime.

Tech and Texas split their regular season meetings with the Longhorns winning 82-68 in Austin and the Raiders returning the favor 96-87 in Lubbock.

fielder, Robin Goodpasture misplayed the ball, Villa advanced to second.

The next batter, junior Susanna Reed, laid down a perfect sacrifice bunt down the first-base line. The throw to first base went wide left off the glove of second baseman Jennifer Turner. That gave Villa enough time to round third and score the game's only run and end the game.

What gave the Lady Rebels the opportunity to win the game in the eighth was the pitching of staff ace Emily Hayes. Hayes, 8-0 for the season, gave up only three hits while striking out 17 batters. She needed only 98 pitches during the whole game and showed the dominance that makes her one of the more dominant players in the game.

Hayes has struck out 81 batters in 49 innings while allowing only one run on 11 hits.

Hayes, however, gives the credit to the defense behind her.

"I know when someone hits the ball, they will make the play," Hayes said. "It allows me to throw different pitches."

The win moves Lee's record to 12-0 for the season and 5-0 for district play. The Lady Rebels will meet another undefeated team, Abilene Cooper (6-0 and 4-0) Tuesday in Abilene. The Lady Rebels know that they have had a close game and that should help them the rest of the way.

"We have a pressure game under our belt," Hayes said. "The next one won't be as tough.

Bowe wins 'Hide' and seek game

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Riddick Bowe knocked down Herbie Hide seven times and stopped him in the sixth round to win the WBO heavyweight title Saturday night at the MGM Garden.

Bowe took his share of punishment in the wild fight, including several times immediately after he had knocked Hide to the canvass. But the victory, which came at 2:25 of Round 6, kept the 27-year-old in the heavyweight picture.

The 23-year-old Hide, a native of Nigeria living in England, battled back after the first six knockdowns. But when he went down for the seventh time from a left-right to the body and left-right to the head, the best he could do was to get to one knee as referee Richard Steele counted him out.

The previously unbeaten Hide, 214 pounds, outjabbed and outpunched the 241-pound Bowe during the first two rounds as Bowe appeared sluggish.

Just before the two-minute mark in the third round, Hide appeared to go down from a punch, but Steele ruled that Bowe had pulled him down. Hide, however, appeared to be hurt when he got up.

Bowe swarmed to the attack and knowed Hide down with a series of head shots. The defending champion got up at "eight," but then went down again from a right uppercut. The bell ended the round moments later.

Bowe continued the attack in the fourth round, knocking Hide down with a five-punch combination to the head. Hide went down again after a left-right to the head, but was up at "six."

Hide went down again at 1:08 of the fifth round from a left-right to the head.

Stanton's Stallings garners All-American status with 8th place finish

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Michigan's Kevin Sullivan beat Graham Hood of Arkansas in the latest meeting of the Canadian rivals to win an NCAA championship in the mile Saturday with the second-fastest indoor time ever by a collegian.

Jeremy Stallings of Stanton, a sophomore at the University of Florida earned All-America status with an eighth place finish in the 800 meter dash and the distance medley relay.

Stallings ran a time of 1 minute, 53.82 seconds in the 800 and the University of Florida distance medley relay team ran a time of 9:45.17 to finish eighth.

Sullivan, a sophomore, caught the senior in the homestretch to set a Canadian national record of 3:55.33 seconds.

Sullivan, who lost to Hood in the prestigious Millrose Games recently, covered the last 880 in a blistering 1:52.7.

Hood, the NCAA outdoor champion in the 1,500, also was below the old record of 3:57.89 set by Suleiman Nyambui of Texas El-Paso in 1979 at 3:55.72. Paul McMullen of Eastern Michigan, who was leading with 150 meters remaining, placed third in 3:58.21.

"On the last lap, I was far enough back that I could've been out of it. But, I also knew if I kept working the last 150 there was a possibility of catching those guys," Sullivan said.

Kentucky's Tim Harden sped to victory in the 55, becoming the first to win both the USA National championship and the NCAA title in the same year since world-record holder Lee McRae posted the double in 1987. Harden led from start to finish, covering the distance in 6.12 seconds.

Arkansas totaled 59 points, topping the combined totals of runner-ups George Mason and Tennessee which scored 26 apiece. Michigan and Illinois tied for fourth with 25, followed by George at 24.

Alex Papadimitriou of Texas El-Paso, who finished third in the 35-pound throw last year, won the event with an effort of 71 feet, 5 1/4 inches. Southern Methodist's Brian Murer was second for the second straight year.

■ NCAA Indoors

Michael Williams posted a victory for Manhattan with a 1:48.12 time in the 800, finishing more than a second ahead of Georgetown's Bryan Woodward.

Other men's individual champions determined Saturday included Tim Mack of Tennessee, who improved on last year's 11th-place finish by clearing 18 feet, 4 1/2 inches on his last attempt in the pole vault; Hrvoje Verzi of Georgia with a 54 5 1/2 triple jump and Baylor's Deon Minor, 46.00 in the 400.

In Division II, Abilene Christian won its third straight women's championship but had to settle for second in its bid for a third consecutive men's title. The Wildcats easily won their seventh women's title in eight years with 67 points. Adams State was next with 38.

Still no word on Jordan's plans

CHICAGO (AP) — There was no Michael Jordan for a second straight day as the Chicago Bulls held a pregame workout Saturday. There also was no formal announcement about his future and no end to speculation that he will return to the NBA.

"It's a tantalizing thing. You talk about the expectations not growing too great behind all this without something being said one way or the other," Bulls coach Phil Jackson said Saturday. "I don't think we can expect Michael to make a decision so rapidly after just coming away from baseball this week."

Jordan quit baseball Friday, clearing his way to come back to basketball.

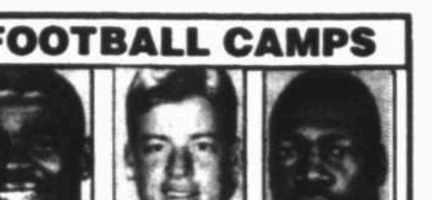

Chicago sports radio station WMVP quoted a "reliable source" close to the Bulls Saturday night as saying the team plans to announce Jordan will play his first game on March 24 against Orlando.

Jordan's commitment to rejoin the Bulls could include assurances that Scottie Pippen also is part of the team's future, according to one report.

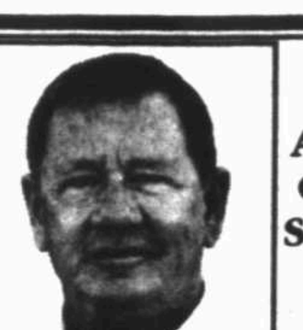

The Chicago Tribune, citing sources, reported Saturday that Jordan will ask owner Jerry Reinsdorf to keep Pippen beyond this season should Jordan decide to play in 1995-96.

Pippen, the Bulls' best player without Jordan but not their highest paid this season, has been unhappy all year, especially with general manager Jerry Krause.

Sudan captures boys title to go with girls trophy

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Jarrod Fisher scored 28 points and grabbed 25 rebounds as Sudan won the Class A state championship with a 74-71 victory against Calvert Saturday.

Fisher, a 6-6, 230-pounder who has signed to play football at Texas Tech, was unstoppable down low for Sudan (32-2), which also won the girls' championship last week.

Calvert, making its second tournament appearance, finished the season 33-5 and was led by Charles Schells with 17 points.

The outcome was in question until the final shot. After Fisher missed the front end of a one-and-one free throw attempt with 15.5 seconds left, Calvert's Terrell Hart launched a 3-pointer with eight seconds left that kicked off the rim to teammate Chris Merritt, whose shot from behind the arc fell off the front of the rim as time expired.

LaRue LaPoynor 60, Maypearl 56

AUSTIN — Dale Burk hit both ends of a one-and-one free throw attempt with 10.9 seconds left as LaRue LaPoynor withstood a 19-point fourth-quarter comeback and defeated Maypearl.

Maypearl made seven 3-pointers in the fourth quarter, overcoming a 46-27 deficit, and tied the game at 56 with 50 seconds to play. But Burk hit a driving layup for LaPoynor (31-4) with 35 seconds left and then took his first trip to the free-throw line with 10.9 seconds to go and iced the victory.

Trailing 58-56, Maypearl (34-5) went for the lead instead of the tie, but Micah Reed's 3-pointer with 23 seconds left bounced off the rim, as did a 3-point attempt by Jeremy Armstrong with 18 ticks to play.

Class 3A
Clarksville 87, Madisonville 69

AUSTIN — Jeff Runels scored 21 points and led five players in double figures as Clarksville used quickness and precision passing to run away from cold-shooting Madisonville.

Clarksville (34-2), runner-up in 1989 and 1991, won its first title in four tournament appearances.

Clarksville used swarming defensive pressure to create turnovers and then executed perfect passes on its fast break to set up easy baskets.

Class 4A
Port Arthur Lincoln 57, Austin Anderson 56 OT

AUSTIN — Dominic Hardie and Spencer Comeaux each hit pressure-packed free throws with the game on the line as top-ranked Port Arthur Lincoln knocked off second-ranked Austin Anderson in overtime.

Lincoln (35-3) won its seventh state championship in 10 tournament appearances by slowing the pace and never allowing Anderson (35-2) to get revved up.

Anderson, led by Kris Clack's 21 points, made a 10-3 run in overtime, pulling within 56-53 with 20 seconds left. But Comeaux hit the front end of a one-and-one free throw attempt with 7.8 seconds left, giving Lincoln a 57-53 lead and making meaningless a 3-pointer by Clack with two seconds left.

Hardie preserved the game for Lincoln in regulation, hitting a driving layup with 40 seconds left and then hitting both ends of a one-and-one with 14.5 ticks to go to give the Bumblebees a 43-40 lead.

Clack was fouled by Keith Harris while attempting a 3-pointer with 7.4 seconds left in regulation and calmly swished all three. After Harris barely missed a tip-in on a jump shot by Comeaux with two seconds left, the game went into overtime.

The battle of the two most high-powered teams in 4A was played at a snail's pace until the final minutes of regulation. Lincoln went into a four corners offense, forcing Anderson out of its zone and into a man-to-man defense.

Class 5A
San Antonio East Central 108, Dallas Carter 86

AUSTIN — Stanley Bonewitz led an offensive explosion with 36 points as San Antonio East Central remained unbeaten while claiming the Class 5A state championship with a 108-86 victory over Dallas Carter Saturday night.

The game figured to be a battle of laser quickness with the last team still standing declared the winner. It was just that.

Bonewitz, the final's most valuable player who has already signed with Texas Tech, led an attack filled with blind, behind-the-back passes and monster dunks. Carter's guards matched his every move for three quarters.

RELAYS: MHS girls finish fourth; Ellison captures boys division

(From 1C)

Wylie for the 3A-1A boys team title with 90 points. Brownfield won the 1,600 relay for second overall while Wylie was third with 71. Stanton was fifth with 48 while Greenwood was eighth with 40.

The Lady Bulldogs strength lies in the legs of a small group of sprinters and while they scored in only six events for the meet, four produced double-digit points for MHS. The Lady Bulldogs finished second to Abilene in both the 400 and 800 relays and took four total medals in the 100 and 200.

But the 400 relay title that eluded them irritated sophomore Tami Zachery.

"I took off too fast (on the anchor leg) and then the winner caught me," said Zachery, who was caught in the last 40 meters by Banks for the win.

But Zachery, along with sophomore Shelley Ray redeemed the loss by taking first and second in the 100 for 18 points. Zachery clocked a 12.11 seconds while Ray was timed in 12.13.

"That didn't make up for it but it makes me feel better," said Zachery. "I'm satisfied."

Midland (1:46.29) also took second to Abilene (1:41.58) in the 800 relay. Zachery also took second behind Banks in the 200 while Talitha Belcher was fourth.

The Lee boys were led by hurdlers John McAfee, Roderick Mayfield and Will Close. McAfee won the 110 hurdles in a personal-best 14.11 while Mayfield, McAfee and Close went 2-3-4 in the 300 intermediates.

McAfee, whose previous best was 14.17, said his high hurdle win was a smooth ride.

"It was smooth. I didn't hit a hurdle," said McAfee. "I got ahead on the fourth hurdle and I didn't see anybody at the finish."

Melvin Dunson was upset in the 100 meters after recording a prelim time of 10.67 on Friday by Permian's Jaquay Wilburn with a 10.76 on Saturday. Ellison's Jay Brooks was second with 10.78 while Dunson was third at 10.8.

The Lee girls got six points from Kendra Albus' third-place finish in the 800 (2:27.50). They also finished fifth in the mile relay (4:16.92).

Stanton's Jerele Lee, Leo McCalister, Cody Hirt and Eric Martel won the 400 relay in a time of 44.27 while Lee sprinted to a time of 10.18 to win the 100.

SWIM: Apperson among those wearing gold should Flowers' second-place time of 1:30.60 in the 100 back stroke and second place 1:58.46 in the 200 IM. Carson said Stroman, Flowers and the Lee girls 200 medley and 400 freestyle relays all have a good chance to make finals (the top six) at state March 24 and 25 in Austin.

Flowers loss in the back stroke was to perhaps the best high school swimmer in the event nation-wide. Lubbock High senior Tom Klement broke his own region mark in the final with a 51.46. He thinks Flowers will be the one challenging him at state.

"Howard had a good swim," said Klement, who lists Auburn, Texas, Angelo State, Texas A&M and Tennessee as possible schools he'll attend. "He'll be up there at state first or second. I don't know which one will be first and which one will be second but we'll be one and two."

Flowers, obviously not happy with a second-place finish to Klement in the 200 IM, looked especially intense just before swimming in his relays. He helped the MHS boys 200 and 400 free relays with times that could get them to state.

The Lee girls also got a win from Candice Apperson in the 200 free (1:58.28). And MHS' Sarah Vaughan won the girls diving for a state berth. Midland High's Carol Smead finished third in the diving.

The Lady Rebels 200 medley relay of Stroman, Apperson, Susie Carnett and Angela Sanchez set a region mark with a 1.54.72. And the Lee girls 400 free relay of Stroman, Carnett, Apperson and Lisa Wachsman also won.

"We wanted to break the record but it's been a long two days and people are tired," Wachsman said. "Last year we improved our time at state so I think we can do that this year."

Midland High's Blake Johnson swam well, making the finals in both the 100 and 200 free.

"He was sick at district and he came into this meet as a real sleeper because he was seeded low," Carson said. "He went 48.1 in that last (400 free) relay."

Odessa Permian's Terah Gisolo, who swims on the City of Midland club, won both the 50 and 100 freestyles for state berths.

Finals results from Saturday's UIL Region I Swimming and Diving meet at the Texas Tech Recreational Aquatic Center:

CLASSIC: Alpine team earns MVP accolade

open. Leading the inning off was Villanueva who smashed a ball off the left-field wall. Four more hits, four Seminole errors and seven runs later, Alpine had a 12-1 lead which would be more than enough for starter Richard Portillo (1-0), who only gave up four hits and two runs in the five innings work.

Seminole drops to 5-2 overall as Corey Jackson (2-1) took the loss in a little over two innings work.

"We talked about coming back after such a big win," Pallanez said. "Richard was able to mix his pitches and he was staying ahead of hitters."

The big game Pallanez is referring to is the 12-10 semifinal win over 3A's No. 7 team, Abilene Wylie.

In that game, Alpine was able to jump on Wylie for five runs in the third and fourth innings to take a 10-4 lead after three and one-half. After adding two more in the fifth, Alpine withstood a six-run fifth by Wylie to win the time-shortened game. Kevin Losoyn picked up his first win of the season in relief. Pallanez was pleased with the effort his team had in both games.

"We had timely hitting in both games," Pallanez said. "We were up for that game and were able to jump on them."

Greenwood (5-4) would take fourth place behind Alpine, Seminole and Wylie. The Rangers defeated Presidio for the second time in three days 9-8. Andy Watzl, who was named to the all tournament team, hit a grand slam and a double for the Rangers. Casey Otho went 3-3 from the plate. Greenwood's Chad Berry, 2-1, picked up the win in relief and Michael Womack picked up the save.

Complete Results from the West Texas March classic.

O'Meara gives four shots back, still leads Honda

■ Mark O'Mears leads Honda by three stroke despite losing four shots on the back nine Saturday.

The Associated Press

FORT LAUDERDALE, Fla. — Mark O'Meara, on the verge of slamming the door on any would-be pursuers, squandered four shots over the last four holes Saturday at the Honda Classic.

As a result, O'Meara, seeking to end to a three-year victory drought, will take only a three-stroke advantage into today's final round at wind-raked Weston Hills.

And Nick Faldo, the tall Englishman who won last week in Miami, is poised to pounce.

"If I play as good as I did on the front nine, it might sort of even things up and then we will just have to see what happens," Faldo said after taking sole control of second.

O'Meara, whose last American victory was his fourth Pebble Beach triumph in 1992, led by seven strokes when his diving, fairway wood second shot on the 15th hole plunged into the water.

It led to a double bogey.

A bogey from a bunker on the 17th also cost him, and Faldo made up one shot on his own with a 25-foot birdie on the 18th hole.

O'Meara needed only a hard-won round of par 71 to retain his advantage with a 204 total. That's 9-under on the windswept course that became a golfing nightmare for some of the world's finest players.

So did the slow pace of play.

"Basically we had to wait on every shot," O'Meara complained. "For twosomes, finishing in the dark is ridiculous.

It took O'Meara more than four hours to complete his round.

After the close of play, Glen Day was penalized one shot — turning a 71 into a 72 — for pace-of-play violations by PGA Tour officials.

But the weather — "about 30 miles an hour; at least a three-club wind," Faldo said — was the bigger problem.

"It's gotten tougher every day," said Faldo, who has played most of his golf in the gales of England and the storms of Scotland. This time, he was delighted to "get in at anything under par," he said after a 69 and a 207 total.

Others were not so fortunate.

Mark McCumber, winner of three American titles last year and among the second-round leaders here, bogeyed the first six holes he played.

Seve Ballesteros of Spain, holder of five major tournament titles and also in contention here, had a wildly erratic 76 that included eight bogeys and three birdies.

And then there was Mike Standly, in third place until he took a triple-bogey 6 on the 17th to drop from contention.

Ian Woosnam of Wales and Blaine McCallister, who grew up in the wind-scoured wastes of Fort Stockton in west Texas, shared third at 209. Woosnam shot 69 and McCallister 73.

Nick Price, the dominant player in golf for the past two years who is opening his American campaign in defense of his title here, fought his way to a 69 and was asic ashots back.

O'Meara's hooked 3-wood on the 15th was the critical shot of the windy day.

"It brought the field back to me," he said.

LPGA Ping

TUCSON, Ariz. — Dottie Mochrie didn't win more than $2 million in the last four years by shooting par golf.

Par was good enough, though, with 45-mph winds raking the Randolph North golf course in advance of a 20-minute downpour which did little to soften the debris-flecked greens.

Mochrie parred nine straight holes with a combination of yips-conquering putts and blown opportunities before making birdie on No. 18 for a 72.

The last putt got her back to 6-under at 210 and opened a two-shot lead after 54 holes of the $450,000 Ping-Welch's Championship.

Mochrie led Amy Alcott by a stroke starting out, and picked up a new pursuer when Caroline Pierce carded a 70 and finished at 212.

Alcott, who struggled early, birdied the last four holes to salvage a 73 and pull even with Pierce.

Cindy Rarick and Annika Sorenstam were three shots behind Mochrie, with Carin Hjalmarsson, Juli Inkster and Ellie Gibson, who matched Rarick's 67 for the day's best round, next at 214.

Mochrie reached 7-under for the second straight round with a birdie on the 140-yard sixth hole, but a bogey at No. 8 turned what had been a three-shot lead over Pierce to two. Then she began her string of pars — which included par-saving putts of 3 feet on No. 11, 5 feet on No. 15 and 6 feet on No. 17.

Her best birdie opportunities came on the par-5 13th hole, where she stubbed a chip shot from the fringe and two-putted from 30 feet; and the 14th, where a long putt stopped at the rim.

Pierce birdied the third, fourth and seventh holes, but three-putted the ninth and two-putted No. 12 after hitting her approach shot over the green. She came back with a tap-in for birdie on the 15th hole, putting on the pressure by getting within a shot of Mochrie.

Senior Dominion

SAN ANTONIO — Defending champion Jim Albus scalded the course Saturday in the Dominion Seniors tournament, then said it didn't matter.

"I'm leading right now, but the important thing is to be ahead after tomorrow," said the 54-year-old Albus, who has four Senior PGA Tour victories to his credit. "I wasn't happy with my start (a bogey on the first hole) but after that I started holing putts."

Albus, who started the day at 1-under-par, fired eight birdies in a 7-under-65 in the second round. That left him at 8-under 136 in the $650,000 event at the 6,814-yard, par-72 Dominion Country Club. He takes a one-shot lead into Sunday's final round.

Albus, ranked No. 7 on the 1995 money leaders' list, won the event last year with an 8-under 208. If Albus wins the tournament Sunday, he would be the first repeat champion since Lee Trevino in 1991-92.

At 137 are Dick Rhyan and Bob Dickson. Dickson, who shared the lead Friday with Lee Elder, shot a 70. Rhyan came in at 66. Elder, who opened Friday with a 67 dropped to 139 after shooting a 72.

Rhyan won the $15,000 first prize Saturday in the Super Seniors event for golfers age 60 and over. It was Rhyan's first Super Seniors title. The two- round Super Seniors is played as part of the main tournament.

Trevino (67), Jim Dent (67), the 1990 winner; and Chi Chi Rodriguez (68), the 1987 champ, joined Elder at 139.

"I was steady all day," said Trevino, the 1994 Senior Player of the Year. "I was not comfortable standing over the ball because of my neck (soreness). It's tough to see the line because I can't move my neck. But I played pretty good and the course is playing fast."

Moroccan Open

AGADIR, Morocco — Sam Torrance of Scotland took sole possession of the lead in the Moroccan Open on Saturday, though he could do no better than a par 72 in the third round.

The Ryder Cup veteran lost ground when he completed the first 9 holes in 3-over-par but, he had four birdies on the back nine, and finished the 54 holes with a 209.

Robert Karlsson of Sweden, who shared the lead with Torrance going into the round, shot a 73 over the 6,657-yard Royal Links and fell into a tie for second place with Mark James of Britain and Germany's Alexander Cjeka at 210.

James and Cjeka both shot 72, with Cjeka preserving his chances for a second victory in two weeks.

Britain's David Gilford carded a 69 to move two shots off the pace.

Golf Digest Collegiate Tournament

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — Oklahoma State maintained its lead Saturday and takes a 5-stroke advantage over Texas into the final round of the Golf Digest Collegiate today at Tournament Players Course.

The Cowboys shot a 2-over-par 290 to stand at 582. Texas, which was tied for seventh after the first round Friday, shot a 3-under 285 to move up to 582.

Graf needs 69 minutes to dispose of Huber

MIAMI (AP) — Steffi Graf, displaying no signs of her recent back problems, continued her mastery over German compatriot Anke Huber to advance Saturday to the finals of the Delray Beach Winter Championships.

■ Tennis Roundup

Despite the blustery winds that have detracted from the quality of play all week, Graf served six aces and had seven service winners in holding off the third-seeded Huber, 6-4, 6-4, in a 1 hour, 9-minute match that featured short, crisp rallys from the baseline.

Graf, the top seed who has won this tournament the past three years and five times since 1987 (when it was the Virginia Slims of Florida) will play the second seed, Conchita Martinez of Spain in Sunday's final.

Graf is 9-1 against Martinez, the reigning Wimbledon champion, but the lone loss came in their last meeting in the finals of the Virginia Slims of Philadelphia in November 1993.

"She's playing well on all surfaces," said Graf, who is 8-0 this season and yet to drop a set. "Obviously, I have to attack and be more aggressive."

Martinez advanced when Brenda Schultz, the fourth seed from the Netherlands, retired during the second game of the first set — trailing 0-1 — when she realized the tightly wrapped left thigh muscle she injured in the latter stages of her quarterfinals victory over Florenica Labat on Friday night wasn't sufficiently healed to continue.

Pete Sampras moves into finals at Indian Wells with win on Saturday.

Shultz became the 11th player to withdraw or retire from this injury-plagued tournament, including eight that would've been seeded.

"I gave it a try," said Schultz, who lives part-time in Delray Beach. "It felt better until she hit a backhand slice down the line to my forehand. I almost fell down."

Martinez, who strained her left hip during her quarterfinals victory over Kristie Boogert, said she felt fine during the curtailed match and is looking forward to playing Graf.

"I like playing Steffi," said Martinez, who lost to Graf in the 1992 final of this tournament. "I haven't played her in a long time. It's good for tennis that the top seeds are in the tournament final."

Graf, 25, playing in her second tournament of the year, is 8-0 against Huber, 20, who as a junior was labeled "the next Steffi".

"I never play my best game against her," said Huber, the 10th-ranked player in the world. "I don't know why, I play so stiff, I want it too much. Maybe, I have too much respect."

Graf, who was just three of 13 on break-points converted, was able to set up Huber with a punishing forehand that produced 12 winners and forced many of her opponent's 27 unforced errors. Graf doesn't feel Huber is intimidated by her any longer.

■ Auto Racing

HAMPTON, Ga. — What's happening to the Winston Cup stars this year?

Going into today's Purolator 500 at Atlanta Motor Speedway, some of the biggest names have yet to lead for a single lap in 1995.

That includes Dale Jarrett, Bill Elliott, Jimmy Spencer, Brett Bodine, Geoff Bodine, Kyle Petty and Darrell Waltrip.

The biggest disappointment probably is Jarrett, driving the Robert Yates Racing Fords in which Ernie Irvan, now recuperating from injuries, led all competitors in laps led in 1994 despite missing the final 11 races.

"Well, we're getting the most we can out of the car right now, but it's hard to overcome those (Chevrolet) Monte Carlos," Jarrett said. "We're disappointed not to have led any laps or done better, but this team is too good for us not to get it figured out pretty soon."

Actually, Jarrett's showing in Yates' Ford has been pretty good. He finished fifth in each of the first two races before a 28th-place last Sunday at Richmond relegated him to fifth in the standings, 122 points behind leader Dale Earnhardt.

"But we know people are expecting more of us because this team is capable of so much," Jarrett said. "Just remember, it's early yet and we're just getting to know each other. We'll be there before too long."

Gary Bradberry, who was rookie of the year on the ARCA stock car circuit last season, is finding it hard to get going in NASCAR's Winston Cup series.

The driver from Chelsea, Ala., has tried and failed to make each of the four events so far this season. On Saturday, Bradberry, driving a Ford for Jimmy Means, did manage to improve his qualifying speed from 179.346 to 179.876. But that fell short of the 180.367 needed to make Sunday's Purolator 500.

Bill Standridge, who had failed to qualify for any of the first three races, did make it this weekend, qualifying 36th among the 38 drivers who got into the field by way of time trials. Four others were added as provisional starters.

Two other drivers who failed to make Sunday's race, Kenny Wallace and Ben Hess, each have fallen short of qualifying for three of four events this season.

Coca-Cola announced Saturday it has become an associate sponsor of the Hendrick Motorsports car driven by 23-year-old Jeff Gordon.

The soft drink company joins Dupont, the primary sponsor on the Chevrolet Monte Carlo, on the multi-colored car.

"This is a great day for Jeff Gordon and Hendrick Motorsports," said team owner Rick Hendrick. "I think it's a marketing person's dream have the No. 1 brand in the world associated with the hottest young driver in motorsports today."

Gordon, who already has won two poles and one race in the young 1995 season, said, "It's a big step for Jeff Gordon. I'm really looking forward to the next year, couple of years, however many years."

Asked how long the sponsorship deal with Coke is for, Hendrick replied: "We have a lot of options and we hope it's for a long, long time."

Johnny Benson takes a bow at the winner's circle of the Busch Light 300 Saturday in Atlanta.

Busch Light 300

HAMPTON, Ga. — Johnny Benson Jr. passed Ken Schrader with eight laps remaining, then pulled away to win the Busch Light 300 Busch Grand National stock car race.

It was the second Grand National victory for Benson, who also won last fall at Dover, Del. The win helped the driver from Grand Rapids, Mich., move into first place in the 1995 series points after four races.

Schrader, a Winston Cup regular and part-time Grand National performer, appeared to have the race well in hand, holding about a 10 car-length lead over Benson with 20 laps remaining in the 197-lap race at Atlanta Motor Speedway.

Traffic slowed Schrader, and Benson, slicing by the lapped cars, caught him with 10 laps remaining and took two laps to get around Schrader in the battle of Chevrolet Luminas.

"The guys kept saying, 'You're the fastest,' and I just tried to stay smooth and keep after it," Benson said. "I felt like we were strong enough to win it."

Benson went on to win by 0.47-seconds, about six car-lengths. He averaged a race record 145.767 mph in an event slowed just four times for a total of 18 laps.

Jim Bown finished third, and Tim Fedewa fourth. They were the only other competitors on the lead lap at the end.

Chad Little, who won the first two races of the year, slipped to third in the points, behind Benson and Terry Labonte, after his second straight engine failure. Little led four times for 110 laps, by far the most of any of the nine race leaders before going out with 31 laps remaining.

"You can't win races or championships when your engines keep breaking," Little said. "It's too bad. The car was really strong, but we've got to keep it running to the end."

US baseball team drops Pan Am opener

The Associated Press

MAR DEL PLATA, Argentina (AP) — The tango rang out and the "Ola" went around as athletes from 42 countries celebrated the opening of the biggest Pan American Games.

Argentina President Carlos Menem officially inaugurated the 12th version of the hemispheric games Saturday night in this fashionable resort city on the Atlantic coast.

For two weeks, more than 5,000 athletes will compete in 34 sports in a meet seen as a warmup for the 1996 Atlanta Olympics.

"I congratulate Argentina for offering the biggest games in history ... surpassed only by the Olympics," said Mexico's Mario Vasquez Rana, president of the Pan American Sports Organization.

A color guard in turn-of-the-century army uniforms opened the ceremonies with the 35,000-capacity Mar del Plata City Stadium still half-empty, as many ticket holders got stuck in traffic.

A chorus of boos greeted Menem as he entered the tribune of honor. He was joined there by Brazilian soccer great Pele, International Olympic Committee president Juan Antonio Samaranch and FIFA president Joao Havelange, among others.

The Argentine delegation then led the procession of athletes into the stadium, upstaging — alphabetically, if not diplomatically — Antigua. The crowd stood and applauded, waving small blue-and-white national flags as the stadium reverberated with chants of "Ar-gen-tina, Ar-gen-tina!"

The other delegations followed in a rainbow of flags and uniforms. The Cubans were almost somber in gray slacks and navy blazers. The Bermuda team wore — what else? — Bermuda shorts.

Latin passions also were on display. There were wild cheers for Cuba and Uruguay, boos for rivals Chile and Brazil, and a mix of both for the United States. The fans often did the wave, known in Spanish as the "Ola."

The 1,200-strong U.S. delegation was the largest ever at the games. In contrast, the Aruba delegation had just two uniformed athletes.

Closing the procession was a group of veterans of the first Pan Am Games, held in Argentina in 1951.

As balloons rose into the night sky, marathon runner Leonardo Malgor jogged into the stadium carrying the Pan American torch. As the crowd stood and cheered, he ran up through the grandstands to a white arch and lit the ritual flame.

Not everyone was happy, however.

"What an embarrassment. He's Uruguayan," said a disgusted Argentine fan.

Hundreds of students then took the field for a presentation that culminated with the formation of a huge heart, pulsing to the rhythm of the official anthem of the games, "Toda America," or "All America."

They were followed by gaucho dancers and an eclectic musical recital that brought together Vivaldi and tango accordianist Astor Piazzolla, the symphony orchestra and "charango" master Jaime Torres.

As a laser light show played over the darkened stadium, the performers poured back into the center of the field to salute the crowd amid a final blaze of fireworks.

There were no fireworks from the American baseball squad, which lost to Argentina in a stunning upset.

The St. John's baseball team, an also-ran in the Big East, didn't fare any better in the Far South, losing to Argentina 6-4. Baseball is almost a non-existent sport in the host country, which participated only in the first Pan Am baseball tournament, losing every game in 1951. Ezeiza Stadium is the only true baseball stadium in Argentina and there are no professional leagues.

"For us, this is a first. It was a big objective in the Pan American Games," said manager Carlos Siffredi, who has spent five years putting the team together and taking it around the globe to train. "It's been a long process and now there's a lot of pride. It definitely helped a lot to play at home."

Moments after that memorable result, the U.S. men's gymnastics team won the first gold medal of the games, edging Cuba, the defending champion, 551.150-550.900.

American slips for bronze medal

BIRMINGHAM, England — There was more crying than kissing Saturday in that well-lighted shark tank where figure skaters sit and wait for the judges' verdict.

The tears fell for a range of good reasons. For Nicole Bobek, the reason was disappointment. For Chen Lu, it was unbridled joy. For Michelle Kwan, the tears fell simply because her psyche needed some form of release in the wake of a more poised and technically precocious performance than any 14-year-old had a right to expect of herself.

Kwan would end up fourth in her second world championship. China's Chen, only 18 herself, would win the gold, France's Surya Bonaly yet another silver and Bobek the bronze, which was quite an accomplishment considering her two sequin-rattling falls in Saturday's decisive freestyle program.

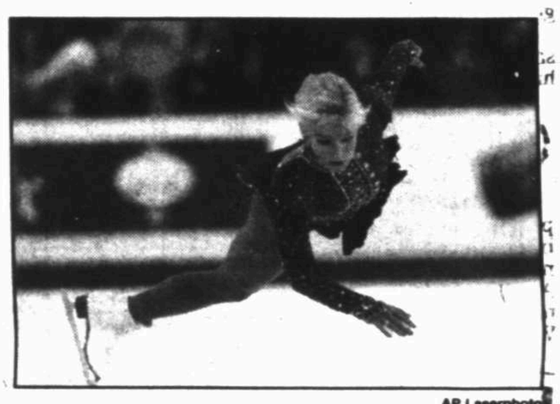

"I think third in the world is excellent," said Bobek's coach, Richard Callaghan. "And third in the world with two mistakes shows that minus those mistakes, she's got a great future."

For about two minutes, it appeared Bobek had a great present. In the lead after the short program, the 17-year-old Chicagoan skated second in the final group and immediately went after the toughest jump combination of the afternoon: a triple lutz-triple toe loop. Though she stepped out of the loop slightly, she was still on solid ice and followed it with another combination, a split into a triple toe, a double axel and her typically elegant display of footwork and spins.

But then Bobek, who had been so pulled-together all week, began to unravel. First, she went sprawling on her triple loop, a jump that had given her difficulty during the morning warm-up session.

Then, after drawing applause for her trademark spiral, she landed a single axel and followed it immediately with a triple salchow. This time, she landed with a very ungainly thud on her left knee.

It was the sound of a gold medal going elsewhere, and though Bobek looked teary and apologetic when her program concluded, she later could look back and be proud of herself.

Nicole Bobek of the U.S. falls on a jump in the final presentation of the World Figure Skating Championship in Birmingham, England, Saturday. Bobek won the bronze medal despite the fall.

A year ago, she failed to make it out of the qualifying rounds at the worlds. This year, despite having to cope with pre-championship publicity about her conditional guilty plea to a charge of home invasion, she enchanted the crowd and acquired some potentially valuable admirers among the international judges.

"I think this has helped a lot," she said. "I proved to a lot of people that all these things written about me didn't affect me, if that's what they wanted to happen."

Bobek's bronze medal was the third for the United States in these championships, coming after Jenni Meno's and Todd Sand's bronze in the pairs and Todd Eldredge's silver in the men's competition.

Atlanta runs low on time for Olympics

ATLANTA (AP) — Time and money are working against some projects that developers hoped to be ready for the 1996 Olympics.

Though major developments such as the Centennial Olympic Park and an expected Olympic project by the Atlanta-based Coca-Cola Co. seem assured, others are questionable.

With less than 500 days to go before the start of the Games, numerous developers are seeking financial backers and construction costs are rising because of the demand for expertise and materials.

The 96 Expo, for example, a proposed retail and entertainment complex planned for downtown Atlanta, still is lacking necessary financial commitments after more than a year of soliciting backers.

"Sponsors don't want to stick their necks out," Expo President Tom Tabor said.

Springtime Delights

Located in a quiet portion of Greentree North, this charming and elegant four bedroom home displays a distinctly European flair that elevates its design well above the average. Edwardian aspects such as the crown mouldings and high, arched-top windows, contrast with Southern elements like the plantation shutters to create a blend of styles that is reminiscent of grand European homes.

The kitchen, informal dining room and the family den make up the heart of this gorgeous home and the overall design reflects this. This suite of rooms is in direct contrast to the more formally designed dining and living rooms. Practically designed, with a two tier bar and tiled floors, the kitchen is as functional as it is elegant and it boasts a whole host of attractive features, such as the built-in wine rack. Fully equipped with state-of-the-art appliances, the kitchen offers dramatic elements like the inlaid tile accents which complement the white, background tile.

The informal dining area is unusual in that it is set into an oblique bay window. Offering views over the patio and garden, it is an integral part of the kitchen and provides a feeling of continuity, linking the kitchen with the family room. A great place to relax, the family room offers a wonderful fireplace and subtle detailing around the mantle which produces a very pleasant visual treat.

The elegant hardwood floor adds a touch of luxury to the formal dining room which also boasts elegant mouldings and crown mouldings.

The formal rooms of the house, the dining room and living room are sumptuously decorated and combine hardwood floors in the dining room with large, dramatic windows that provide a focal point to the rooms. The high level of dramatic impact is carried through into the master suite which offers the kind of amenities that one would expect from a house of this caliber. Separate shower and double tub, large walk through closets and double vanities are all present in the fantastic master bathroom which creates a feeling of peace and escapism.

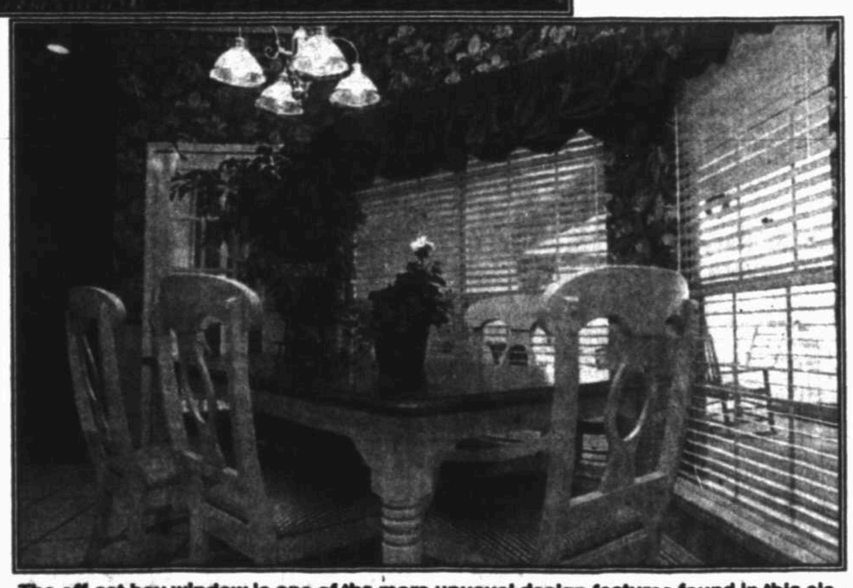

Listed at $176,600, this marvellous house offers a very high standard of living in an area known for its peaceful qualities.

For more information, or to arrange a private appointment to view the house, call Norma Pine of Chaparral Realtors, the listing agent at 686-7000.

The formal living room is a bright, airy space thanks to the three arched windows that also provide a spectacular focal point for the room.

The patio is a wonderful place in which to relax and enjoy the garden.

The off-set bay window is one of the more unusual design features found in this elegant house. Part of the kitchen suite, it has lovely views over the garden.

The family room leads off from the kitchen and breakfast area. with its fireplace and decorative trim it is a restful room with traditional proportions.

Value often lies in the eyes of the prospective buyer

Peggy Strong, CRS, GRI
Chaparral Realtors

Thinking of entering the real estate market? That's a big step and the best advice you can receive would be to view your home in the eyes of a prospective buyer. It is difficult to transform thoughts via a biased seller's point of view, but it is absolutely necessary to begin preparations for listing your home. Today we will begin this process in the street and cover only a small part . . . to the front door. Too often Sellers have come and gone through the garage door by habit, and little things have gone unnoticed. Get ready, here we go!

Many buyer never make it inside a front door to possibly a lovely home because the curb appeal is lacking. As Realtors, we stress that it is hard to judge a book by its cover, but nevertheless, many a buyer is lost at the curb. Therefore, as a transformed buyer, start the review of your home at the curb, or across the street. This is the first place to look for deferred maintenance, perhaps the lawn that needs sprucing up or just that droopy rain gutter! Trees and shrubs need to be trimmed, flower beds clean, and the lawn meticulously mowed.

It's a dirty subject but a real facelift might just happen with a little bit of soap on dirty windows! Buyers today desire "bright and shiny" and they don't mean just inside! Check the windows for cracks or fogginess. The windows will show up on the inspection report, so get a jump on it and remove this annoying issue.

The roof is always a major concern in real estate transactions. At the advise of your Realtor, you should probably have your insurance company or roofer (or both) check it out if a hail or wind storm has occurred since you last had it reviewed. Replace any missing shingles and address overall appearance for curling.

How does the paint look? Keep in mind that appraisers will also be taking this same inspection, and if paint is chipping they will possibly require repairs be made. A very old saying is that paint is $9 in the can and $900 on the wall. Professional repairs made before listing will result not only in a better net, but a faster one as well.

Armed with the knowledge that homes are bought with a certain degree of emotion, use every available tool at your disposal. One of the best tools is the use of color . . . from curb to alley! There is nothing more inviting or seem to say "WELCOME" than a breath of color in the front flower beds or a planter by the door. A good investment might be a new wreath. The front door is very symbolic of what is to come and as the first impression for all who enter, it should be dynamic. The sidewalk and porch should be kept swept clean, porch lights attractive, and the door itself needs to make a definite statement of perfection. A coat of varnish or new coat of paint will go a long way in getting off on the right foot!@ Don't be surprised if your Realtor suggests a prominent change. Drive around your favorite neighborhood and notice the dramatic entrances. A front door is the focal point and great care should be taken to insure the right result.

Next week we'll continue our journey in preparing your home for sale. Gig 'em!

Local agent awarded Accredited Buyer Representative designation

Joel K. Oldham, III
RE/MAX of Midland

Midland, 2/27/95 -- Joel Oldham, sales associate with RE/MAX of Midland has been awarded the Accredited Buyer Representative designation by the Real Estate Buyer's Agent Council (REBAC), a national organization addressing all aspects of consumer representation in real estate transactions.

Oldham recently completed the educational requirements for the national designation at an intensive two-day seminar held in Midland. Designees must also complete specified practical requirements and submit evidence of completed transactions in which they have functioned as a buyer's representative before being accepted in the designated program.

"Until very recently, the vast majority of real estate agents worked as exclusive agents of the seller", explains REBAC president, Charles M. Dahlheimer, "and most buyers are unrepresented in the purchase of a home. Today, there is a definite trend toward buyer representation, spurred on in part by the strong efforts of consumer advocates such as Ralph Nader and organizations such as the Consumer Federation of America and AARP. It is our purpose to provide a nationwide registry of agents who not only call themselves buyer representatives but who have had the training and experience to deliver the service ethically and professionally. That is our purpose of our designation program."

Oldham is affiliated with RE/MAX of Midland, and has also achieved the GRI (Graduate REALTORS Institute) designation.

REBAC was founded in 1988 and currently has over 4,000 members in all fifty states and Canada. Approximately twelve hundred REBAC members in forty-five states and Canada have achieved the Accredited Buyer Representative designation.

PERMIAN BASIN
OIL REPORT

SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1995 SERVING 54 COUNTIES IN WEST TEXAS AND NEW MEXICO

BRIEFING

The city of Midland provides a backrop to a pumping unit.

Prices retreat

Crude oil futures fell to a six-week low late this past week amid indications the nation's refineries are producing too much gasoline.

Prices retreated most of the week amid industry reports of higher U.S. gasoline inventories and refinery activity than most traders expected.

Late in the week, West Texas Intermediate for April delivery closed at $18.02 per barrel. The posted price was at $16.25 a barrel.

Natural gas futures closed at $1.44 per thousand cubic feet.

Poison pill

Turbine equipment manufacturer Stewart & Stevenson Services Inc. has adopted a "poison pill" to protect shareholders in the event of an attempted takeover.

The Houston-based company, a leading manufacturer of diesel and gas turbine powered equipment, said the plan is not being adopted in response to any specific, pending takeover threat.

The company's board of directors said it adopted the shareholder rights plan to try to assure all Stewart & Stevenson shareholders would receive fair treatment if a takeover were to occur.

Under the plan, rights will be issued to shareholders March 20 and will expire in five years.

Rig count down

Drilling activity was mixed during the week ended March 3, according to Baker Hughes Inc.

The Permian Basin rig count rose two to 113 for the week, above the year-ago level of 98.

Lea County, N.M. remains the most active in the Basin with 20 rigs.

Nationwide, the rig count continues to decline, falling 12 rigs to 684 for the week. A year ago the rig count was 743.

Among major producing states, Texas posted the sharpest decline, 15 rigs.

Vinson-Red Man

Sammons Enterprises Inc. announced that a definitive agreement has been reached to combine the supply division of its wholly-owned subsidiary, Vinson Supply Co., with Red Man Pipe and Supply Co., both headquartered in Tulsa.

The supply division of Vinson, through its seven branches, is a major distributor of valves, flanges, fittings and line pipe to the "downstream" portion of the petroleum and petrochemical industry. Red Man is a distributor of oil country tubular goods and other foil field products and serves through more than 30 branches, principally to the "upstream" part of the petroleum industry.

Sammons has long held a financial interest in Red Man and this consolidation lets red Man serve the entire market.

'Land down under' presents opportunity

■ More Midland operators are looking South for oil and gas activity.

By Mella McEwen
Staff Writer

Midland has long had a mineral fascination with Australia dating back to Tipperary Corp.; now it seems a new generation of Permian Basin oil operators are finding that the land down under is the land of opportunity.

A decade ago, Australia invited American tourists over for "a shrimp on the barbie."

At least two Midland companies were drawn down under, but it wasn't for the shrimp. They were oil companies, and they were attracted to the country's natural resources.

West Texas Oil & Gas has been active in Australia since 1988, according to James Butler Jr., vice president of the company. In fact, the company is active solely in Australia, though it holds some leases in the Permian Basin.

"We're active primarily in the Surat-Bowen Basin of Central Queensland," Butler said. "My father, Dr. James Butler, has been active in international exploration for many years and he found the area."

Even though working in a foreign country has its challenges, Butler said working in Australia has been pleasant.

The company "looks for petroleum of any kind," Butler said, noting that the company has so far drilled 10 wells and currently dewatering coalbed methane wells.

As an exploration group, Butler explained that the company was looking for new areas and the Permian Basin has been well-developed.

He added that company officials are well-pleased with their Australian operations, and anticipate expanding activity in Australia.

"For our group, there were more opportunities there than there were in West Texas," he said.

Illustrating Butler's point is the experience of Parker & Parsley, the Midland independent. The company reported that for the final quarter of 1994, prices for its Australian production averaged $17.29 (U.S.) per barrel of crude and $1.94 per Mcf of gas. For 1994, the company saw the average price of its U.S. production decline, with a barrel of oil averaging $15.40 - off 6 percent - and an Mcf of natural gas selling for $1.89, down 8 percent.

Parker & Parsley established a presence in Australia last yeare when it purchased Bridge Oil Ltd. of Sydney. With the acquisition, the company now has 11 percent of its reserves outside the United States in Australia.

Like West Texas Oil & Gas, Parker & Parsley now has holdings in the Surat Basin along with holdings in the Cooper Basin, Otway Basin and the Carnarvon Basin, an offshore basin which will supply gas to mining operations in the area.

From the Surat Basin, Parker & Parsley provides natural gas to the city of Brisbane.

The company just announced the discovery of natural gas and condensate offshore northwest Australia along with partners Phillips ZOC, a subsidiary of Phillips Petroleum; Oryx Energy Pty. Ltd., Bridge Oil

Gas demand will move up over 26 quads

■ Supply will meet growing natural gas demand; CNG market will not grow as fast as expected.

By John Paul Pitts
Business /oil editor

Despite soft natural gas prices, demand for the clean-burning fuel will continue to increase in all market sectors during the next 15 years, with demand rising from 21.7 to 26 quads by 2010, says a report released by the American Gas Association.

"That will be an increase of 19 percent," said Daniel B. Grubb, vice chairman of the A AGA Gas Supply and Demand Committee. And, natural gas producers may be called upon to build that market.

"Growth in traditional markets and in new markets will be driven by environmental goals and advances in end-use gas technologies such as gas cooling, cogeneration and natural gas vehicles," said Grubb, who also is president and COO of Southwestern Energy Co., Fayetteville, Ark. "In addition, we believe that sufficient natural gas supplies will be available at competitive prices to meet growing demand and that the industry will also continue to achieve the advances in gas supply technology needed to efficiently develop the national resource base."

Julie Stewart, a spokesman for AGA, noted that natural gas with all its benefits would not sell itself. "There is the general feeling that we have this giant captive market and natural gas will sell itself. That may not happen."

Stewart said producers had never advertised their product. "We would like to see them advertise natural gas," said Stewart.

Grubb said the AGA study, Gas Energy Supply and Demand Outlook 1995 to 2010, outlines the following growth in each market sector over the next 15 years:

* In the residential sector, gas demand is expected to grow 12 percent, reaching 5.7 quads by 2010.

*Considerable growth will occur in the very diverse commercial market, with an average growth rate of about 2 percent annually over the forecast period.

*The industrial market demand (not including cogeneration) is expected to grow about 11 percent, slowed somewhat by increases in efficiency. Within that sector, gas use by cogenerators is projected to increase 31 percent from 1994 to 2010.

*The electric generation market is expected to be consuming 3.9 quads of gas annually by 2010, an increase of over 22 percent.

*Natural gas demand in the transportation sector is projected to reach as much as 1.2 quads by 2010, divided about equally between pipeline compressor fuel and vehicle fuel. As many as 5 million natural gas vehicles are projected to be in operation by 2010, according to the study.

Growing gas demand, expected to reach 26 quads, will put many more pins on Permian Basin maps as operators drill to meet supply over the next couple of decades.

Conoco-Iran deal called a smart move

By John Paul Pitts
Business/oil editor

A vice president of a Permian Basin refining company has called Conoco's arrangement to develop oil fields for Iran a very smart move.

"I think it was very positive for Conoco. From a commercial stand point it was the right thing to do and will be one of the better international deals Conoco has put together," said Mike Mirbagheri, a vice president Holly Corp. and Navajo Refining Co. in Dallas.

Conoco announced last Sunday that it would enter into a billion dollar deal with Iran to develop its oil fields on Sirri Island, about 80 miles off the coast of Iran. The development is expected to result in production of 120,000 barrels a day within two years.

The business arrangement was quickly criticized by the White House and some members of Congress. Mike McCurry, White House press secretary, said the deal was not illegal, but would not be helpful to U.S. foreign policy, which is to put pressure on Iran to behave as a responsible member of the world community.

> 'The Europeans would have benefited greatly if Conoco had not executed the deal.'
> —Mike Mirbagheri, vice president, Navajo Refining

Rep. Lamar Smith and Larry Combest both expressed skepticism that the deal would not be in the best interest of the U.S., even though it might be legal.

If Conoco had not done the deal, Mirbagheri said there were two european companies including Total, standing in the winds ready to execute the deal.

The former employee of the Iranian Oil Co., under the Shah, said the europeans separate business from politics, and have been trading with Iran for years. "The Europeans would have benefitted greatly, if Conoco had not executed the deal."

Asked about the strong political opposition expressed for the deal by members of Congress and the White House, Mirbagheri replied: "I am not a politician, and have no desire to be a politician. I only know business. Politics is another issue."

The fact that others were standing in line to do the deal and Iran chose Conoco may be a signal that the Moslem country wants to get back into the world community and the good graces of the U.S., said Mirbagheri, who has been highly critical of Iran, but still maintains relationships with members of the Iranian Oil Company.

"It seems to me that the more you isolate Iran, the more difficult they are to deal with. Whether we like it or not, sooner or later we are going to have to deal with the Iranian government at

AGA, DOE project rise in gas use

HOUSTON---American Gas Association and Department of Energy (DOE) models both project that natural gas demand will grow and that field prices will increase about 4 percent per year above inflation until the year 2000, A G.A. President Mike Baly said today.

These near-term increases in field prices may occur as the result of market-based pressures to increase incentives to find and produce natural gas, Baly said.

Baly said it was "very significant that new natural gas consumption and supply projections by DOE and A.G.A. show substantial agreement that natural gas will play a growing role in the nation's energy future."

However, the one area in which A.G.A and DOE remain relatively far apart is in long-term natural gas field price projections. The latest DOE price projection for 2010 is 31 percent higher than the AGA projection, Baly said.

A.G.A.'s analysis and modelling process leads us to believe that field price increases like those projected by DOE after the year 2000 are unlikely to occur. We believe they are unlikely to happen because the nation has a huge natural gas resource base, and because there has never been a competitive commodity, energy or other, that has experienced the kind of long-term real price increase forecast by the government for natural gas, Baly said.

At a news conference releasing AGA's Gas Energy Supply and Demand Outlook: 1995-2010," Baly also released an historical comparison of A G.A. and DOE projections.

Baly noted that A G.A. and government projections on supply haven't always agreed. Since passage of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978, A.G.A. has consistently been more optimistic about natural gas supply than many government reports -- and I fight add that A G.A.'s more optimistic projections have been more accurate, Baly said.

It is gratifying that the once-sizable differences between the DOE and A.G.A. projections continue to shrink," he said.

In 1991, there was a 3 quadrillion Btu (quad) gap between the two projections for 2010 natural gas consumption -- with A G.A.'s projection of 25.2 quads being 12 percent above DOE's forecast of 22.5 quads. By 1995, the gap has shrunk to about a 2 percent difference between the A G.A. consumption projection of 25.9 quads in 2010, compared with 25.3 quads by DOE," Baly said.

In addition, Baly said, the 2.5 quad production gap for 2010 that separated AG.A. and DOE projections in 1991 has been reduced to about half a quad in the 1995 projections of future domestic natural gas production. A G.A. believes it is very important that experts in government, the academic world and in the industry agree that natural gas with play a long-term and growing role in the nation's energy future, Baly said.

Timor Sea Inc., a Parker & Parsley subsidiary, and Hardy Timor Gap Petroleum Ltd.

The discovery, the No. 1 Bayu, operated by Phillips, discovered gas and condensate in an upper Jurassic reservoir below 9,615 feet. Four drill stem tests were conducted over a gross interval of 459 feet. The four tests, each conducted through a one-inch choke, totaled a combined flow of 90 million cubic feet of gas per day and 5,250 barrels of condensate. The 10,443-foot well is located in 236 feet of water in the western portion of Block ZOCA 91-13, 185 miles offshore. The block is in the Zone of Cooperation A, an area jointly administered by Australia and Indonesia.

During the final quarter of 1994, Parker & Parsley's Australian holdings averaged daily crude oil production of 4,945 barrels and daily natural gas production averaging 23.6 Mmcf. Prices averaged $17.29 (U.S.) per barrel and $1.94 (U.S.) per Mcf.

Despite the decline in prices, the company's production in 1994 were the highest in the company's 30-year history, with daily crude oil production increasing 61 percent to 33,280 barrels and daily natural gas producing climbing 96 percent to 218.3 million cubic feet.

Parker & Parsley reports that its total proved oil and gas reserves in Australia are 12.8 million barrels of crude and 104.4 billion cubic feet of natural gas or 30.2 million barrel equivalents.

GAS: Demand needs promotion

(From 1E)

"We are seeing more growth over all market sectors now than when we did our projections several years ago, and despite claims to the contrary the CNG/LNG market is still alive."

The CNG market or transportation market has been revised downward, but AGA is still predicting that 5.2 million vehicles will be on the road by 2010. "That represents about 2 percent of the market," said Stewart.

She noted that with only 2 percent projected for CNG it would be a narrow niche market at the least, dominated mostly by fleet and over the road vehicles. "We won't be taking over the market in transportation."

Despite best efforts to warn the public that an impending Middle East crisis could freeze transportation, Stewart says AGA research has found not public interest in switching from cheap foreign oil. "There won't be any interest until the next gas line, and then it will be too late."

Still, Stewart says natural gas vehicles are good advertising for the industry, because they are on the road informing the public how clean natural gas is and how little it costs. She said the per gallon equivalent for natural gas was about 70 to 80 cents per gallon and that was incentive to keeping some fleets on the road.

On the supply side, Grubb said the AGA study estimates that the 26 quads of gas supplies needed in 2010 will be available at field acquisition prices that do not exceed $2.64 per MMBtu (in 1995 dollars).

Domestic natural gas production is expected to account for 85 percent or more of total U.S. gas supply, with lower-48 states production reaching 21.3 quads by 2010. But the committee also recognized that additional advances in gas supply technology are absolutely necessary in order to continue the efficient development of the gas resource base," Grubb said. "Natural gas imports will account for about 15 percent of U.S. gas supplies in 2010, because of their economic attractiveness. Imports from Canada are expected to reach 3.3 quads annually by 2005, while imported LNG may contribute up to 0.5 quads per year to natural gas supplies by 2010."

Grubb said that while the U.S. gas trade with Mexico will continue, net volumes will remain balanced, as gas moves in both directions at the border, depending on basic economic criteria.

The committee developed one primary scenario to forecast the natural gas supply/demand volumes presented in the study, Grubb said, which included many "business-as-usual" assumptions and trends dictated by foreseeable industry practices and government policies. Alternative gas supply and demand scenarios to the Base Case are presented as an appendix to the study.

The AGA Gas Energy Supply and Demand Committee is composed of 38 senior executives from natural gas companies, research organizations, consulting firms and the academic community, with staff support from the AGA Policy and Analysis Division.

The American Gas Association is a trade association composed of more than 275 natural gas utilities, pipeline companies and marketing and gathering firms in North America, which together account for more than 90 percent of the natural gas delivered in the United States. In addition, natural gas organizations from 25 countries around the world participate in AGA international program.

Texas needs sustainable energy policy

AUSTIN--Texas is now a net energy importer, and to meet the future energy needs of a growing state it must turn to renewable resources such as wind, solar and biomass, according to a report made for the Sustainable Energy Development Council.

Details of the report, called the Texas Renewable Energy Resource Assessment, were outlined by Mike Sloan, president of Virtus Energy Research Associates of Austin, at a capitol news conference Wednesday. The report was made public in conjunction with the Texas House of Representatives declaring this week to be Texas Energy Week.

The report states that "Texas is blessed with abundant renewable energy resources. In fact, Texas solar, wind and biomass potential ranks among the very best in the nation."

It adds that "many areas of the state have sufficient commercial quality resources to support large electric power plants, cogeneration, and alcohol manufacturing facilities using indigenous renewable energy sources. Together with the multitudes of distributed, small scale installations utilizing all types of resources, renewable energy offers exceptional potential to help meet Texas future energy needs."

The report also emphasized that such resources "could provide meaningful employment opportunities and stimulate local economies. The Texas Panhandle, with sizable wind, solar and biomass potential, is well positioned to reap rural economic development benefits associated with renewables. Even in the urban areas of East and Central Texas, distributed renewable energy systems can satisfy a large portion of local energy needs."

Land Commissioner Garry Mauro, co-chairman of the council, and Mark Rose, general manager of the Lower Colorado River Authority, offered supporting comments.

"Ever since Spindletop, we've always been proud of our fame as an energy producing state," Mauro said. "In the popular mind, Texan and oilman are virtually synonymous. But the fact is that Texas today is a net energy importer. That means we consume more than we produce. There is some good news, however, and a lot of it is described in this report.

"Texas is the No. 1 state in the country in terms of potential for renewable energy resource development. According to this report, Texas has enough accessible biomass to produce 30 percent of our annual energy consumption enough accessible wind energy to produce more than half again as much energy as our annual consumption, and enough accessible solar energy to produce 25 times the amount we consume every year," Mauro said.

Rose said that the LCRA realizes Texas' great renewable energy potential. With six hydroelectric plants on the Colorado River, the LCRA has been and remains the largest supplier of renewable energy in Texas.

"Kerrville, one of ou customers, recently completed the installation of a solar PV lighting facility at their city park," Rose said. "The LCRA is currently looking to the wind to continue its renewable leadership.

"The LCRA has joined Kenetech of California and the Texas General Land Office to bring a 50 megawatt (MW) wind plant to Texas. The LCRA is working to expand the project to 250 MW, some of which may be exported to other states," Rose said.

"In addition, just Monday, the California developer involved in this project announced the location of a major manufacturing facility here in Texas," Rose said

"The Texas Wind Power Project supports the reports finding that it is time to implement, not time to study," Rose said.

Mauro noted that the General Land Office has entered into an agreement with the Lower Colorado River Authority (LCRA) to produce wind power on Permanent School Fund land in far West Texas. The project will not only will produce additional energy for the state but will generate additional revenues for the fund, which helps finance pubis education in Texas.

"Developing renewable energy on private land means income for farmers and ranchers," he said. "Developing renewable energy in Texas means jobs for Texans. If just 25 percent of our energy came from renewables we would have a new $1 4 billion industry and more than 200,000 new jobs."

"In short, developing renewable energy resources will return Texas to our historic position in the front rank of the world's energy producers," Mauro said.

Recommendations in the report include: Establishing more wind and solar monitoring stations throughout the state; participating in federal-sponsored biomass programs; gaining a better characterization of the state's building stock and studying potential impact of "passive" strategies to heat and cool them.

Alternative fuels the future of Texas

Representatives of government, citizens' groups and industry gathered to commemorate Texas Energy Independence Day and announce the grand opening of a unique vehicle refueling station, dispensing only domestically produced propane and compressed natural gas (CNG).

The station is the first of its kind in Texas. Barry Williamson, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, said the event's theme of energy independence calls attention to the problem of increasing fuel imports.

"Dependence on foreign oil threatens the very freedom we Texans celebrate today," Williamson said in his remarks. As well as compromising national security, this dependence "contributes to our nation's trade imbalance and harms our domestic energy industry," he said.

00Gov. George Bush and Austin Mayor Bruce Todd sent proclamations declaring today Texas Energy Independence Day. Other speakers at the ceremony were Scott Polikov, Alternative Fuels Director, Texas General Land Office; Lisa Hannemann, Austin Clean Cities program coordinator; and Pete Kelley, chairman of the board of the American Lung Association of Texas. On hand to show support for alternative fuels were state and local officials, members of the Austin Clean Cities program, and propane and natural gas industry representatives.

Kelley said alternative fuels can improve the health of individuals as well as the nation. The Lung Association estimates that 3 million or more Texans are affected by lung-damaging smog, and a large percentage of smog-forming emissions comes from vehicles. "True Texas alternative - more fuels can reduce pollution in Texas cities," said Kelley, who is also president and chief operating officer of Southern Union Co.

some level, because they have such hugh reserves," he said.

"No matter how terrible it is, business is business. If there was a surplus of oil in the world, it might be different, but it is now a very balanced market."

He added: "Overall, I think Conoco did the right thing for its stockholders. This may be a window of opportunity to complete a good business deal and bring Iran back into the world community. The business deal could be a meeting ground for a new relationship with Iran."

Expanding business, Mirbagheri says, is one way to expand relationships.

Phillips "ambassadors" a hit in Odessa schools

Staff Reports

ODESSA, Texas — Need a way to make 80 junior high students pay attention? Try this: Make their Cheetos glow.

That's how Rod Bogan and Ruth Standifer of Phillips Petroleum Company catch the interest of Crockett Junior High Schoolers in Odessa, Texas. Bogan is Permian Basin staff director of drilling and production engineering. Standifer is East Vacuum production analyst in the Permian Basin.

They're part of Oilfield Ambassadors, a new effort by Phillips' Odessa employees to tell students about the contributions of the petroleum industry. Bogan participated in a similar program in Borger, Texas, as a part of a Society of Petroleum Education Program.

"Even in an oilfield area, like Odessa and Midland, we hear a lot of negatives about the oil industry," Bogan says. The Oilfield Ambassadors want to change that.

The ambassadors deliver two messages:

• The oil industry is vital to the economy and has an impact on virtually every aspect of life in modern society. "We point out that even a 100 percent cotton-cloth shirt is sewn together with plastic thread," he says.

• The industry has a good story to tell about the environment. "We explain that we are as committed to the environment as anyone, and that oil exploration and production can be done in an environmentally safe manner," Bogan adds.

The key is to make presentations fun. An ultra-violet "black light" causes many rocks that appear dull and colorless in white to glow brightly -- if they contain hydrocarbons. Lots of oohs and ahs come from the students. Will other things glow?

Stick some Cheetos from a student's lunch under the light and the cheese curls "fluoresce like crazy," Bogan adds with a chuckle. The students also get a look at drilling mud, well cores and other items to stir interest.

"We like to give them things to touch, feel, and smell so that they become an integral part of the program, " adds Bogan.

Bogan and the Odessa drilling and production engineering staff also have presented the program to high school students visiting Phillips as part of career day, sponsored by the Texas Alliance for Minority Engineers.

"But our target is the elementary schools," he says, explaining the program is just getting started. "Once students get beyond that level they're not as interested in what we're doing."

"We really want to make a positive impression regarding our industry -and get them interested in science, math, and technology," he adds.

Tide West revenues increase 24 percent despite lower prices for oil and gas

TULSA, Okla.—Tide West Oil Co. announced that its oil and gas revenues increased by 24 percent for the year ended December 31, 1994, compared to 1993, despite a decline in product prices. Oil and gas revenues for 1994 were $29.5 million, compared to $23.8 million in 1993. Pre-tax operating cash flow increased by 24 percent in 1994 to $20.7 million from $16.7 million in 1993. Net income in 1994 was $5.1 million, or 52 cents per share, compared to $4.0 million, or 43 cents per share, in 1993.

For the quarter ended December 31, 1994, oil and gas revenues were $6.9 million, compared to $7.6 million for the last quarter of 1993. Pre-tax operating cash flow was $4.4 million for the fourth quarter of 1994, compared to $5.5 million in the year-earlier period. Net income in the 1994 fourth quarter was $388,000, or 4 cents per share, compared to $1.6 million, or 16 cents per share, in the same period a year earlier.

Trading and transportation revenues for the full year of 1994 were $88.2 million, compared to $72.3 million in 1993. Related costs of trading and transportation were $86.4 million and $70.4 million, respectively, resulting in gross margins of $1.8 million and $1.9 million, respectively, in 1994 and 1993. For the fourth quarter of 1994, trading and transportation revenues were $13.3 million, compared to $24.1 million in the year-earlier period. Related costs were $12.8 million and $23.6 million, respectively, resulting in gross margins of $490,000 and $483,000, respectively, in the 1994 and 1993 quarterly periods.

Philip B. Smith, President, noted that during 1994, natural gas production increased by 40 percent to a record 14.1 billion cubic feet from 10.1 billion cubic feet in 1993, while oil production rose by 22% to 362,000 barrels, also a record high, from 297,000 barrels. However, average prices received declined during 1994 — natural gas by 15% to $1.66 per Mcf from $1.95 per Mcf and oil to $15.39 per barrel from $15.79 per barrel during 1993.

Tide West Oil Company is an independent oil and gas company focused on the acquisition and enhancement of producing oil and gas properties.

Elf Aquitaine, Williams Cos. sell Texasgulf to Canadian firm

N.Y. Times News Service

Elf Aquitaine S.A. of France and the Williams Companies announced that they had sold Texasgulf Inc., one of the world's largest producers of phosphate rock, to the Potash Corporation of Saskatchewan for $810 million in cash.

The sale signals a major pullback from Elf Aquitaine's long and costly entry into chemicals in North America. The French oil company had owned 85 percent of Texasgulf, with the rest held by Williams, a pipeline company in Tulsa, Okla., that transports natural gas and oil.

Potash, based in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, is the world's largest producer of potash. Both phosphate and potash are used in fertilizer.

Paul Ting, an oil analyst for Oppenheimer & Co., said the cash from the sale would strenghten the ability of Elf Aquitaine to finance its primary business, which is finding and producing oil and natural gas.

Elf Aquitaine has been one of the state-owned companies involved in the French government's drive toward privatization. The government has reduced its stake from 50.8 percent to 13 percent.

The company, which has other chemical units and a pharmaceutical business, plans to sell about $1 billion worth of assets this year.

Phillip Jaffre, the chairman of Elf Aquitaine, had said that Texasgulf would be put on the block because it did not fit well with the company.

Elf Aquitaine acquired Texasgulf in 1981 and spent heavily to upgrade its operations in solid and liquid fertilizers, animal-feed supplements and purified phosphoric acid.

Texasgulf, based in Raleigh, N.C., is a big producer of sulfur. With a price closely tied to the economic cycle, sulfur did well for Elf Aquitaine for a while but the last recession caused prices to fall and Elf Aquitaine took a large write-down in 1990 to reflect the reduced value of the unit.

John B. Parry, an analyst with John S. Herold, a securities firm in Greenwich, Conn., said that the price Elf Aquitaine received was fair and that the money could be used to expand the oil, gas, and specialty chemicals businesses.

"The division did not fit in well with their plan to be mostly in fine and specialty chemicals," he added.

Also, he said, the company needed the cash because it had been increasing its debt to maintain capital spending and pay its dividend.

C.E. Childers, chairman, president and chief executive of Potash, said the acquisition would broaden the company's fertilizer product line and virtually double its work force and assets.

Signals offer hope for geological jobs

HOUSTON (AP) — There are faint signals the job environment is improving for petroleum geologists and geophysicists, fields decimated as the oil industry repeatedly shed jobs in the face of uncertain oil and natural gas prices.

Upwards of 20,000 petroleum geologists and geophysicists lost their jobs over the last decade, the American Association of Petroleum Geologists estimates. A survey conducted by the Association in 1986 after oil prices plunged below $10 a barrel found that a quarter of the group's membership was out of work.

Things may be getting better now, thanks to innovations in seismic data analysis that have renewed interest in areas like the Gulf of Mexico. But the depressed state of natural gas prices could quickly kill that optimism.

"I think it's improving, I really do," Mike Ayling of MLA Resources, a Tulsa, Okla.-based executive search firm, told the Houston Chronicle in Tuesday's editions. "I run into people who are getting jobs. I have more openings myself. More companies are talking about expanded budgets ... The signs I see for the most part are positive."

That brighter mood could be found at the Association's annual conference at the George R. Brown Convention Center, where more than 6,000 geologists and geophysicists have gathered.

In the Association's employment center, companies recruiting help posted 20 job openings, with several companies interviewing on site. Meanwhile, job seekers had tacked up more than 80 different resumes detailing their credentials.

"I found the job postings pretty encouraging," said Jerry Watson, manager of regional interpretation services at Geco-Prakla and head of the Association's employment office. "That's probably the most favorable ratio at an AAPG convention in the last five years."

Texaco replaces more gas reserves than oil reserves on worldwide basis

WHITE PLAINS, N.Y. - Texaco Inc. announced that, on a worldwide basis for 1994, it added volumes to its reserve base equal to 111 percent of its combined oil and gas production, including equity reserves but excluding purchases and sales.

U.S. and international reserve replacement ratios were 90 percent and 141 percent respectively. The company replaced 120 percent of its 1994 gas production and 106 percent of its liquids production.

At year-end 1994, Texaco had 3.7 billion barrels of oil equivalent of worldwide\ net proved reserves consisting of 2.7 billion barrels of liquid reserves and 6.2 trillion cubic feet of net proved natural gas reserves, including equity reserves in affiliates.

"These solid results reflect Texaco's aggressive and focused strategy to find and develop reserves to replace production and grow shareholder value in the company," said Alfred DeCrane Jr., chairman of the board and chief executive officer of Texaco. "These figures complement last year's industry leading performance by Texaco in these key categories of reserve replacement."

On a five-year basis, from 1990 to 1994, the company's overall reserve additions averaged 107 percent of worldwide production. For the three-year period, 1992 to 1994, reserve replacement averaged 106 percent.

For 1994, worldwide finding and development costs were $3.54 per barrel of oil equivalent. The company's finding and development costs averaged $4.15 over the five-year period, 1990 to 1994 and $4.04 over the three-year period, 1992 to 1994.

Excluding purchases and sales, 78 percent of the worldwide reserve additions in 1994 were in the categories of extensions, new sands, new fields and enhanced recovery operations. These reserve additions were realized mainly from activities in the North Sea, the Partitioned Neutral Zone between Saudi Arabia and Kuwait, Australia, Indonesia and the United States.

Mitchell Energy replaces 171 percent of its natural gas reserves in FY1995

THE WOODLANDS, Texas — Mitchell Energy & Development Corp. replaced 171 percent of the natural gas reserves it produced in fiscal 1995—the seventh year in a row the company has increased its gas reserves. Over the past five years, the company has replaced 137 percent of the gas it produced.

The company also reported increased liquid hydrocarbon reserves and a reduction in finding costs to $3.82 per barrel of oil equivalent from the prior year's $7.54.

Proved natural gas reserves reached a record 685.7 billion cubic feet (Bcf) at Jan. 31, 1995, up by 58.2 Bcf, or almost 9 percent, from the level at the same time a year earlier. During the year, 141.9 billion cubic feet of gas reserves were added through new discoveries and extensions of existing fields. Almost three-quarters came from drilling and the remainder from newly booked but previously discovered gas, primarily in the Barnett shale, a complex trend underlying several North Texas counties. The company has pursued an aggressive development drilling program in the Barnett but had postponed formally recognizing some of the reservoir's reserves pending completion of internal studies.

"Because extended well performance data and lower completion costs have increased our confidence in Barnett shale economics, it is timely to begin adding these reserves to the proved category," Chairman and Chief Executive George Mitchell said. "We're fortunate to have a significant backlog of undrilled wells in our extensive North Texas lease holdings." Also contributing to the improved reserves and finding costs in fiscal 1995 were the refocusing of the company's exploration program and reduced wildcat spending, Mitchell noted.

Natural gas production also set a record for the company in fiscal 1995. At 81.8 Bcf, output was up 10 percent from the prior-year level.

The company's reserves of liquid hydrocarbons—natural gas liquids (NGL), crude oil and condensate—increased by nearly 11 percent in fiscal 1995. The increase was mainly due to a mid-year improvement in NGL prices that allowed the company to reinstate reserves that could not be counted at the end of the previous year because they were not economic. At the end of fiscal 1995, NGL reserves totaled 121.3 million barrels, compared with the prior year's 107.4 million barrels.

The gain in NGL reserves was partly offset by lower crude oil and condensate reserves, which declined to 14.3 million barrels from 15.3 million barrels at the end of the previous year. Half of the drop resulted from sales of non-core properties, while the remainder was due to a cutback in oil drilling due to low crude prices.

Of the company's 482 rigs, 399 are located on land in the United States, 22 are offshore in the Gulf of Mexico and 61 are in Argentina, Venezuela and Russia including two cantilever drilling/workover barge rigs. Dowell, Anadrill team completes first successful horizontal CTD job in Canada

HOUSTON - Shell's first well to evaluate the applicability of coiled tubing reentry drilling in western Canada has achieved results beyond expectations, according to officials at Dowell. The well was drilled jointly by Dowell and Anadrill for Shell Canada Ltd. in the House Mountain field, Alberta, Canada.

Dowell provided coiled tubing services and Anadrill provided all bottomhnole assembly tools.

A new horizontal section was drilled off of an existing vertical wellbore through 970 ft. of limestone, A rig was used to pull the tubing from the well, then a whipstock was set and the well drilled to the target zone. Once in the target zone, Dowell coiled tubing drilling equipment replaced the rig to drill the horizontal section in an underbalanced condition.

To conduct the coiled tubing drilling operations underbalanced, Dowell used a combination of brine water and nitrogen as the drilling medium. Penetration rates doubled when the underbalanced condition was attained, and the section was drilled in four days, rather than the 6-8 days originally estimated.

"These exciting results have prompted greater interest in CTD for underbalanced applications," said Mike Milligan, chief production engineer for Shell Canada Ltd.

Dowell and Anadrill perform coiled tubing drilling in western Canada for Shell Canada Ltd.

The Canadian CTD operation represents an extension of the deployment techniques and equipment applications that have proved highly successful for Arco on the North Slope of Alaska.

Dowell is the world's largest supplier of coiled tubing drilling services. Its core businesses also include well cementing and stimulation, and pumping and drilling fluids services. Anadrill's core product lines are directional drilling and MWD/LWD. Dowell and Anadrill are operating units of Schlumberger Oilfield Services, the leading supplier of services to the international petroleum industry. Schlumberger operations office, service locations and research and development facilities around the world.

Santa Fe Energy reports income for 1994

Santa Fe Energy Resources announced income of $17.1 million for 1994 with income to common shares of $5.4 million or $0.06 per share. As a result of non-recurring charges of $ 137.9 million related to restructuring and impairments in 1993, SFR reported a net loss for that period of $77.1 million with a loss attributable to common shares of $84.1 million or $0.94 per share.

James L. Payne, Chairman and CEO, said "The restructuring program we initiated in 1993 was completed in 1994 and our successes last year are early indicators of the effect of that program. Santa Fe Energy is now financially stronger than at any other time in its public history and, because of that strength, we have been able to increase our 1995 capital program to $190 million and accelerate the exploitation of the large inventory of development projects we identified in the restructuring process. Combine those factors with our substantially reduced cost structure and we are extremely well positioned to achieve our goals of increased earnings and cash flow growth in the years ahead."

The company's restructuring included an asset disposition program involving daily production volumes of approximately 4100 barrels of oil and 22 million cubic feet of gas, and a refinancing program which reduced the debt to total capitalization rate from 53% to 41 percent. The company's total cost structure was reduced by more than $1.00 per oil equivalent barrel of production which equates to a reduction of more than $30 million per year going forward.

Total production in 1994 was 32.3 million oil equivalent barrels, down approximately 6 percent from the year before, primarily because of the asset disposition program. Oil production for 1994 averaged 65,700 barrels per day, down from 66,700 barrels per day in 1993, and natural gas production in 1994 averaged 136.6 million cubic feet per day compared with 165.4 million cubic feet per day the previous year. Once again, the company extended its exceptional record of reserve replacement by adding 39 million oil equivalent barrels of proved reserves. At year end, SFR's proved reserves totalled 298.7 million oil equivalent barrels.

Oil prices recognized by SFR in 1994 averaged $12.41 per barrel compared with $12.93 per barrel in 1993. The company's realized price for California heavy crude oil averaged $11.31 in 1994, approximately 72 percent of the average annual posted price for West Texas Intermediate (WTI). This improved ratio is considered very positive in that, historically, heavy crude oil has sold for an average of only about 66% of WTI posted prices. Natural gas prices realized by SFR during 1994 averaged $1.73 per thousand cubic feet (MCF) net of a $0.02 per MCF hedging expense. During 1993, the Company realized $1.89 per MCF.

Pumping service firms allowed to merge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department approved a merger between two Houston oil field pressure pumping service companies after it was restructured to preserve competition in oil and gas production in the Rocky Mountains.

BJ Services, the third largest U.S. pressure pumping service company with 1993 revenues of more than $390 million, is acquiring The Western Company of North America, the fourth largest such company with 1993 revenues of more than $290 million.

Pressure pumping is used to complete oil and gas wells and increase the amount of oil and gas produced.

The department's antitrust division advised the companies that the merger raised serious antitrust concerns in the industry's Rocky Mountain region. To resolve those concerns, BJ Services agreed to sell pressure pumping equipment at its Brighton, Colo., facility to Nowsco Well Service Ltd., headquartered in Calgary, Alberta.

ICO Inc. acquires Kebco Pipe Services

HOUSTON — ICO, Inc. an international oil services company based in Houston, Texas, announced the acquisition of the operational assets of Kebco Pipe Services, Inc., a provider of testing, inspection and reconditioning services on oil country tubular goods in West Texas since 1981.

The acquisition strongly positions ICO regionally expanding revenues, as well as adding key personnel and additional inspection equipment to the company's production services operation.

ICO serves the petroleum industry by testing, inspecting, reconditioning and coating sucker rods and oil country tubular goods, basic tools used in drilling and production.

Reading & Bates receives merger bid

HOUSTON — Reading & Bates Corp. announced that it has engaged Morgan Stanley & Co. Incorporated to serve as its financial advisor with respect to the evaluation of the unsolicited merger proposal Reading & Bates recently received from Sonat Offshore Drilling Inc.

Reading & Bates is a New York Stock Exchange listed company, providing offshore drilling services throughout the world. Its wholly owned subsidiary, Reading & Bates Development Co., provides technical, construction and project management services and floating production systems to the upstream offshore oil and gas industry worldwide.

Dorchester Hugoton makes distribution

DALLAS — Dorchester Hugoton, Ltd. announced the partnership's 52nd cash distribution since its formation in 1982. The distribution of 17 cents per Unit for the first calendar quarter of 1995 is payable on April 21, 1995 to depositary receipt holders of record on March 31, 1995.

Atmos implements new Louisiana rates

DALLAS — Atmos Energy Corp.announced that it has implemented new rates which will increase revenues in the company's Louisiana service area by approximately 2 percent or $1.0 million annually, effective March 6, 1995.

This rate change is the result of the company's third annual filing under a rate stabilization clause granted to the company in September 1992 by the Louisiana Public Service Commission. This provision requires an annual rate determination to reflect changes in expenses, revenues and capital investments, and was granted for a three-year evaluation period. The company expects the commission to schedule a hearing on extending the rate stabilization mechanism.

Mesa "raider" seeks three for board

DALLAS (AP) — Mesa Inc. said it has been notified by Montana corporate raider Dennis Washington that he may nominate three members to Mesa's board at the company's annual meeting May 17.

Washington owns 4.5 percent of Mesa's outstanding stock, or nearly 2.9 million shares.

The Dallas-based natural gas company said a Washington representative has told Mesa the notice was filed only to preserve the right to nominate directors "if and when he chooses to do so," and Washington has taken no further action.

Washington's financial adviser, David Batchelder, a former lieutenant of Mesa chairman Boone Pickens, didn't immediately return a telephone call from The Associated Press.

Mesa said Washington indicated his three nominees to the company's eight-member board would be Batchelder and James Zehentbauer, both of San Diego-based Batchelder & Partners Inc.; and Dorn Parkinson, president of Washington Corp.

Daniel Industries rejects merger proposal

HOUSTON — Daniel Industries, Inc. confirmed its unequivocal rejection of Moorco International, Inc.'s proposal for a merger of the two companies. Daniel stated that the proposal had been carefully considered with the advice of its investment bankers and that Moorco was aware of Daniel's reasons for rejecting the proposal. Daniel stated that Moorco's public announcement of the proposal did not fairly present Daniel's reasons for rejecting the proposal. Daniel rejected the proposal because it is confident that its previously announced restructuring plan is the best course for the company and for the enhancement of stockholder value. The company intends to follow this course as an independent company with the firm belief that as the plan results in improved earnings and cash flow, the market will reflect the intrinsic value of the restructured company.

Coastwide Energy reports 1994 results

HOUSTON — Coastwide Energy Services, Inc., Houston, Texas announced net income of $1,217,000 on revenues of $41,160,000 for the year ended Dec. 31, 1994, vs. net income of $292,000 on revenues of $34,449,000 for the same period in 1993. Net income per common share was $0.51 in 1994 and $0.15 (pro forma) in 1993. Income from operations for 1994 was $1,994,000 as compared to $434,000 for 1993.

Through its subsidiary, Coastwide Marine Services, Inc., the company operates a network of shore bases along the Texas and Louisiana coasts. From these bases, Coastwide Marine sells diesel fuel, lubricants, chemicals and supplies and provides logistical support services to offshore oil and gas operators, drilling and workover contractors, marine construction companies, seismic companies and other businesses with operations in the Gulf of Mexico. Coastwide Marine's shore bases are used as a stocking and distribution point by a number of drilling fluid and oilwell cementing service companies currently active on the Gulf Coast.

Anadarko and partners test Algerian oil well

HOUSTON — Anadarko Algeria Corp., a wholly-owned subsidiary of Anadarko Petroleum Corp., and Sonatrach, the national oil and gas enterprise of Algeria, together with partners LASMO and Maersk Oil announced test results from the Hassi Berkine South (HBN-S) No. 1-B well, located in the Ghadames Basin on Block 404.

The HBN-S 1-B well was drilled to a total depth of 3,400 meters (11,155 feet) and encountered 26 meters (85 feet) of net pay in the Triassic interval. The HBN-S No. 1-B well flowed at a stabilized rate of 16,000 barrels of oil per day (BOPD) and 17.8 million cubic feet per day (MMcf/d) of gas through an equivalent 90/64-inch choke at 1,190 psi flowing tubing pressure. The well flowed 42 degree API gravity oil with no water, H_2S or CO_2. The gas/oil ratio was 1,112 standard cubic feet per barrel.

The HBN-S 1-B, located approximately 11 kilometers (6.8 miles) southwest of the HBN-1 and -2 wells which were announced in 1994, is the fifth successful exploration well the partnership has drilled in Algeria since 1989.

Key strategies boost profits at Exxon Chemical to new levels

IRVING, TEXAS — Exxon Chemical Company's recent record-breaking quarterly earnings of $417 million during the fourth quarter of 1994 are the result of key strategies that have contributed to outstanding achievements over the last five years. Registering its healthiest year since 1989, the chemical company's earnings in 1994 totaled $954 million, recording five consecutive quarters of earnings growth. "These results reflect effective implementation of chemical strategies in a rapidly improving business climate," Exxon Chairman Lee Raymond said.

Raymond, noting that the chemical business is cyclical, stated that five key strategies are guiding Exxon Chemical's performance and aim to optimize financial performance at each point in the business cycle. They include: Expanding profitable businesses, particularly in growing world markets; optimizing integration with Exxon's oil and gas refining and producing operations; continually reducing real costs per unit of production; strengthening and commercializing the company's proprietary technology; and continually upgrading the business portfolio.

As a result of these targeted strategies Exxon's chemical business has achieved the following results during the last five years:

- Prime product sales volumes have grown 13%.
- Sales in the Asia-Pacific region have increased by 24%.
- Real unit operating costs have been reduced by 22%.
- $3.6 billion has been invested in growing profitable businesses, and $500 million in non-strategic assets has been divested.
- In Baton Rouge, Louisiana, the company started up the world's first commercial plant using metallocene catalyst technology to make new types of plastics.
- More than $900 million has been committed to research and development.

The Asia-Pacific region is a major focus of the company's geographic growth plans. The area's Gross Domestic Product growth in excess of five percent per year represents the fastest-paced economy in the world.

Exxon interests are also expanding in Saudi Arabia, the lowest-cost, most competitive supply source for some of its key businesses in Southeast Asia.

In North America, major growth projects include expanding ethylene capacity at the Baytown, Texas Olefins Plant by 200,000 tons per year. The company has strengthened its position as the world's largest plasticizer producer with the start-up of a 100,000 tons-per-year ester plant at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, increasing worldwide plasticizer capacity to more than 600,000 tons per year. Construction also progressed to increase oxo-alcohol capacity at Baton Rouge. The 100,000 tons per year of additional capacity will be on stream during the second quarter of 1995.

Shell cites transformation in 1994

HOUSTON — The year 1994 marked a major step in Shell Oil Company's business transformation, President and CEO Philip J. Carroll said in the company's annual report.

"We know the changes in our industry, as well as the global nature of competition in every industry, mean that we can't win in tomorrow's world with yesterday's approaches. We also know that the winners will be those who can adapt faster than the competition," Carroll said.

He cited these examples of Shell Oil's pace of change and accomplishments in 1994:

- Continued improvement in operating performance in all three principal businesses (exploration and production, oil products and chemical products).
- A $600 million increase over 1993 (to $3.4 billion) in an already aggressive capital investment and exploratory expense program, aimed at profitable opportunities.
- Operational net income (which excludes special items) of $1,118 million, a 34 percent increase over 1993.
- Increased the company's dividend to reflect a more competitive return.
- Began implementation of a business model concept linking operating actions to financial goals.
- Designed a new system of corporate governance to support the business transformation.

MAKING TRACKS

Stephen Ramsey, "Stationmaster" of Stanton for the Twin Cities Model Railroad engineers and vice president of the club's youth division, fiddles with a replica Bicentenniel train.

Heath Ramsey, 11, places a truck on the highway as Paul Thomas, 13, Ryan, Davis, 12, and Adam White, 14, watch.

Members use houses and scenery that are to scale with the model trains to create a village-like scene for their model train layouts.

To help out, Urlin Hoovertaps nails down flush which holds the model train track of Steve Ramsey's N scale layout.

Nothing stirs the imagination in the same ways trains do.

In a practical and historical sense, the railroad has been a major factor in American culture, progress and economy for more than 100 years.

But "practical" has nothing to do with the imagination, and for just-plain-fun, nothing beats a train, according to members of Twin Cities Model Railroad Engineers.

This group of model train aficionados meets twice a month at members' homes in order to discuss, build and work with model trains. There is no age or gender limit for membership — anyone and everyone who is interested in model trains is invited to "come over and play."

In fact, Boy Scouts can earn merit badges for participating in the model train club, and 4-H members can earn county record book project credit.

Kenneth P. Grimaud, secretary/treasurer of the group, has been playing with electric trains since his father bought him his first one when he was 3½ or 4 years old. "My dad got a Lionel electric train," Grimaud said. "I still have it. It still works."

HAVE YOU HEARD?

Van Johnson speaks at symposium banquet

By Marilyn McKnight-Harrison

"But you're too young!" What words could be sweeter to a woman's ears than those, especially when they came from our childhood hero, World War II-era movie star Van Johnson. We were telling him how much we enjoyed his movies when he came back with that response. It has been some time since we were referred to in quite that way.

McKnight-Harrison

Mr. Johnson, now a resident of New York City, was the featured speaker at the Friday night banquet held in conjunction with the "Pilots & Poster Girls" symposium in Midland last weekend. It was hosted by the American Airpower Heritage Museum and Midland College.

Mr. Johnson entertained a crowd of approximately 350 with his experiences in movie making during the Second World War and in being a part of the home front's war efforts. "It wasn't easy, having to kiss Elizabeth Taylor, cry with June Allyson and swim with Esther Williams," he told the audience. "I was the only actor to fly 200 missions over June Allyson's dressing room," he quipped. Under contract to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at the time, he made four to five pictures a year.

Following his talk, film clips from many of his 125-plus movies were shown, among them the war films "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo" with Spencer Tracy, "Command Decision" with Clark Gable and "The Caine Mutiny" with Humphrey Bogart.

While we were waiting for the program to begin, we enjoyed a visit with longtime Midlanders Hazel and Carlton Daves, who attended as many of the symposium sessions as possible and said they were enthralled with them all. "It was our era," Mrs. Daves said. "My husband flew 33 missions in a B-24. He was scheduled to fly 35, but before then, the war had ended."

We could only begin to imagine the powerful emotions they and others were experiencing as they heard symposium speakers explore a war, described as "the defining event of the 20th century," in which they played significant roles.

A prime rib dinner catered by The Midland Hilton preceded Mr. Johnson's talk at the Confederate Air Force Hangar, and a dance featuring Big Band music by Top Brass followed his appearance. Robert Hunt, assistant professor of music at Midland College and music director-designee of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and Chorale, directed the group.

Life members of the Confederate Air Force and symposium sponsors were invited to a private reception with Mr. Johnson prior to the dinner.

Another highlight of the weekend was the appearance of Margie Stewart Johnson (no relation to Van Johnson), who spoke at a Friday luncheon at The Midland Hilton. Mrs. Johnson was the official U.S. Army poster girl during the war. Her talk was followed by a panel on "The Roles of Women in World War II." In addition to Mrs. Johnson, participants included Midlanders Geneva Monkress, Dorothy Rush, Barbara Perusek, Patsy Welmaker and Alice Coombes. Moderator was Deana Lusk, associate vice president of instruction at Midland college.

Mrs. Johnson was accompanied here by family friends, Pat and Ernie Moreno. The three are from Burbank, Calif., although Pat, whose maiden name s Aday, was raised in Midland.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO, American Field Service student Jochen Behrens received his diploma from Midland High School and returned to his native Germany. Recently, he came back to Midland for a visit with June and James Ormond, his host family during his nine-month stay here n 1969-70.

Flying in from his home in Fresno, Calif., to see Jochen was the Ormonds' son, Neil, whose idea it was to apply for an exchange student and who was a senior at MHS with Jochen.

In addition to seeing old friends, Jochen enjoyed touring the city, noting its many changes, and visiting the high school. He also had shopping lists to tend to, one from each of his four children.

One of the highlights of his visit here was a 25-year mini-reunion and dessert party at the home of Terry and Bruce Gilmour.

Among those stopping by to say "howdy" were the honoree's former teachers, Frances Walker, DeWayne Davis and Doc Dodson, who was accompanied by his wife, Gayle. Other guests included Berry Hamm of Dallas, Pam and Gary Stoltz, Anna and Glen Hoelscher, Gretchen and Scott Davis, Jesse (Mrs. Hugh) Gilmour, Vicki and Mark Leaverton, Barbara and David Koch, Sally Hurta, Heidi Goebel, George Goebel, Richard Floyd, and Jochen's host family.

Before retiring, Jochen was a pilot for 20 years in the German Air Force. Residing in Northern Germany in Niebull, he now is a contract pilot for the German military.

TRACKS: Big boys have little toys

(From 1F)

Model railroading is "something I've been doing for about 56 or 57 years," he said. "I added to that Lionel for a while."

For a long time he set up that original train set every year at Christmas, Grimaud said. Then, "about 28 years ago I started buying engines and cars..."

When he joined the Twin Cities Model Railroad Engineers about three or four months ago, Grimaud already had been a member of a model railroad club in Odessa, but that club had disbanded.

The current group, he said, gets together to talk about their favorite subject. "We discuss anything to do with railroads; we build model railroads."

Information from the club states that "Seminars, workshops and other training sessions concerning different aspects of model railroading will be conducted throughout the year. Layout plans, benchwork, scenics, wiring and model kit building are some of the topics that will be covered in these sessions. Some field trips to see other clubs' layouts and to area train and model railroading shows are being planned."

The group also customizes their model trains through a process called "kit bashing," which Grimaud said was taking a packaged railroad car kit and changing it to make the car look old and worn, just like real railroad cars look. That way, each member's set-up is his or her own.

"Each railroader is a little different," Grimaud said. "Most of us 'model' in a particular time zone. I started out ... in the 1940s through 60s; now I'm in the '40s through mid-70s."

Although each railroader is working with a different layout and a different time zone, as a club, the members "will work on an HO layout," Grimaud said. "HO is 1/87th of the original. Trains range from earliest to newest models."

More than 40 years ago, Grimaud's love of trains led him to get a summer job working for a railroad. A broken leg and a decision to go back to college ended his employment on the railroad, but he never forgot it. Through his years of service in the U.S. Navy, self-employment and working for others, and now into his retirement, Grimaud has maintained his interest in all things connected with trains, both models and the real thing.

He and his wife have ridden many trains, including the Silverton-Durango Narrow Gauge in Colorado, the Palo Duro Canyon "Sad Monkey," and trains in Spain, Italy and France.

In fact, anytime he has a chance to ride a train, he does. "I get on the small ones kids ride. I feel silly, but I do it anyway.

"I'll go a long way out of my way to go see something involving railroads."

With the building of interstate highways and jumbo jets during the last several decades, the railroad lost some of its economic clout. But Americans aren't willing to let the railroads die, and trains are making a comeback. Currently, "there are five companies in Texas operating full-sized trains," Grimaud said.

Even passenger service is returning. "My wife and I have been talking about taking Amtrak to California," Grimaud said.

But in the meantime, he has his model trains. "I try to base my models on photographs of actual engines or cars," Grimaud said. "Sometimes it's easy and sometimes..."

Well, "my wife says I'm too critical of my own work."

Whether it's the size or the noise or something else, Grimaud agreed that there is "a certain fascination to trains."

"The little boy inside just never gave up. Once it gets in your blood, it's hard to get it out," he said.

"In fact, none of us want to get it out!"

Fort Davis National Historic Site to sponsor 'From Retreat to Tattoo' walking tours

Staff Reports

FORT DAVIS — Saturday evening, Fort Davis National Historic Site staff members and volunteers will endeavor to "bring to life" events that took place at the post 110 years ago. The special evening, entitled "From Retreat to Tattoo," will consist of a series of walking tours that will take visitors to a number of furnished buildings.

There was much activity at the post in March of 1885 as the 10th U.S. Cavalry prepared to transfer to the Department of Arizona. The 10th's departure from Fort Davis was a notable event in the regiment's history. It was the first time that so many of the troops had been assembled in one place. At Camp Rice, near present day Fort Hancock, Troop I joined the march. The journey from there to Fort Bowie marked the only occasion prior to the Spanish-American War when the 10th was assembled in its entirety.

There was much anxiety as well as pleasure connected with the move. Lt. Mason M. Maxon, who served as both the Post and Regimental Quartermaster, was so displeased with the move that he threatened to resign. The lieutenant ultimately did not resign, and eventually looked upon his new assignment with satisfaction. Lt. William Davis Jr. looked forward to the move. At Fort Davis, he and Major Anson Mills were constantly at odds with one another. The change would have them assigned to different posts.

"From Retreat to Tattoo" will begin 7:30 p.m. and the tours are scheduled at 20 minute intervals. Each tour will last approximately 45 minutes to an hour. The tours are free, but because each tour is limited to 22 visitors, reservations must be made in advance.

Visitors will be met in the Fort parking lot approximately 10 minutes prior to their scheduled tour and from there they will be escorted across the entrance bridge where they will "go back in time" to March 18, 1885. Participants should dress comfortably and be able to walk approximately 1 mile unassisted. Wheel chairs and baby strollers cannot be permitted because of limited lighting and the unevenness of the gravel and dirt walkways. For more information, or to make reservations, call Fort Davis NHS at (915) 426-3224.

In observance of National Women's History Month (March), a special exhibit devoted to frontier officers' wives is on display in the Visitors Center of Fort Davis.

The exhibit, entitled "Following the Guidon," acknowledges the wives of Tenth Cavalry Officers who followed their husbands from frontier post to frontier post during the Indian Campaigns. It focuses on the wives, who in the spring of 1885, followed their husbands to the remote forts in the Department of Arizona.

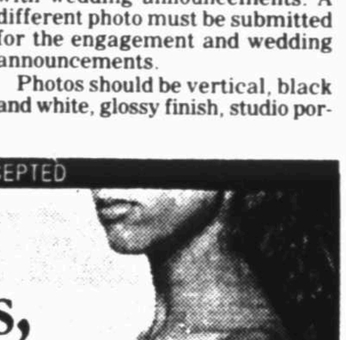

Congress, by designating an entire month to Women's History, provides a special time for us to recognize and celebrate the lives of women and to recognize their impact on the history of the United States. This year's theme, "Women Who Dare," is particularly fitting to remember the women who followed their husbands and the army during the late 19th century.

In addition to the exhibit, which will remain up for the entire month, a special display of publications on frontier women is set up in the Visitors Center. A 15-minute video, "Women in the West," is being shown in the auditorium. For more information on the special activities planned for Women's History Month at Fort Davis, call the Fort.

SEEDS FOR THOUGHT

Some grasses work better in Permian Basin lawns

By Deborah A. Benge-Frost

It's not a horticultural plant, but it is so closely associated to horticultural plantings that it deserves a little attention. It's turf grass, and it's wonderful in creating a pleasant surface for play, tying a landscape together, buffering the harsh, hot summer conditions and much more. When deciding what grass species to plant, careful consideration can pay off in terms of labor, water and appearance.

Benge-Frost

St. Augustine is not the best turf for the Permian Basin, but it has enough good characteristics that we find it in many area lawns. A course-textured grass that forms a dense, thick turf that can crowd out other grasses and weeds, given the right conditions, St. Augustine has a vigorous above-ground runner called a stolon that enables it to spread when water and nutrients are available. Unlike bermuda, these stolons are fairly easy to pull out of beds and landscaped areas. This warm-season grass is many times introduced into the landscape as shade becomes a problem. St. Augustine does have some shade tolerance, but still needs about 40 percent sunlight to remain healthy. This grass has a fairly high water requirement, falling just under tall fescue in water demands.

Besides water, the limiting factor with St. Augustine is winter cold. Low temperatures can take this grass out in a heartbeat, and does occasionally. Other problems to be aware of include susceptibility to brown patch, St. Augustine Decline (SAD), iron chlorosis, chinch bugs and grubs. The best variety for us is 'Raleigh' because of its cold tolerance and resistance to SAD.

There are a few St. Augustines you can establish from seed, but the best and most practical way is to start it vegetatively, from sprigs, plugs or sod.

Buffalo grass makes an excellent native grass lawn. This warm-season grass makes a fine textured, creeping lawn that spreads by stolon. It can be an extremely low maintenance grass, requiring minimum amounts of water. It can survive on as little as 10 to 12 inches of rainfall and has good cold tolerance. If you don't want to mow, fertilize or water a lot, this is the grass to have. This grass is not aggressive and is easy to remove from beds and gardens.

Now for the down side: buffalo grass has no shade tolerance and poor salt tolerance. If you over water and over fertilize this glass, your lawn will become a bermuda grass lawn. Watering should be done conservatively to prevent bermuda from taking over.

This native grass can be started from seed or vegetatively. There are some female selections that are being marketed, called 'Prairie' and '609'. Seed needs to be incorporated shallowly and rolled for good germination.

Zoysiagrass sounds like the miracle grass of the world, if you believe everything you read. Zoysia does make an excellent lawn if it is properly maintained. It is a warm-season, fine textured, dark green grass that is attractive, has some shade tolerance, good wear resistance, is usually weed free and cold tolerant. It isn't as drought tolerant as common bermuda, but not bad.

The limiting factor for zoysia is that it is extremely slow in establishing. It must be started vegetatively with plugs or sod. If you start it from plugs, you will not get a complete cover in one year. It takes two and sometimes three years. A couple of other disadvantages are that it needs to be cut with a reel mower and that the grass tough, requiring a sharp cutting blade. This grass must be cut frequently to maintain a uniform, attractive appearance.

If you want a zoysia lawn, order from a Texas source. Don't make the mistake of ordering from a northern source. Make sure the sod is in good condition when you receive it and don't skimp on bed preparation. Establishment is slow and weeds and other grasses can be a big problem during the long establishment period.

Bermuda grass is probably the best overall turf grass for our area. It is a warm-season, drought-tolerant, cold-hardy grass. This vigorous grass spreads by above-ground and below-ground runners called stolons and rhizomes. Because of this feature, it can be a terrible weed in beds, gardens and landscaped areas. It responds well to all cultural practices, including mowing, watering and fertilizing.

Bermuda offers several selections and hybrids. Common Bermuda is an excellent lawn grass that can be established from seed. A good selection of bermuda that is finer textured, darker green and has better wear tolerance than common is Texturf 10. It produces few seed heads and recovers quickly from stresses. Texturf 10 must be started from vegetative parts, sprigs, plugs or sod. Of the hybrid Tifway 419 and Santa Anna are good choices. Santa Anna has excellent salt tolerance. Hybrid bermudas are more demanding in water, mowing and fertilizing that common or Texturf 10. They too must be started vegetatively. New hybrids that can be started from seed include NuMex Sahara, Cheyenne, Guymon, Sundevil and others.

Bermuda grass is best established when the weather is consistently warm. Seed establishment needs the warm weather of late spring and early summer. Don't make the mistake of sowing bermuda grass or other warm-season grass seed too early.

Bermuda responds very well to frequent regular mowing. If you want to improve the looks of your lawn and reduce weed problems, this step can make a tremendous difference in turf quality. Fine textured, hybrid bermudas are best mowed with a reel-type mower. Common, Texturf 10 and some of the courser bermudas can be cut with a rotary mower.

Tall fescue is not a good grass for the Permian Basin because it has a tremendous water and maintenance demand. Tall fescue is a cool-season grass and a clump-forming grass, spreading very little. But it has some qualities that are hard to resist, including staying green year round and having good shade tolerance. It does very well under deciduous (drop leaves in fall) trees, but still requires about 40 percent sunlight to thrive. Its use should be restricted to shady areas and small amounts.

Tall fescue must be started from seed and fall plantings give the best results. Good seed bed preparation and seed rolling are very important in getting a good stand.

There are many different varieties, Rebel, Olympic, Hounddog and Avanti being a few.

These are some of the basic differences between the various grasses that will grow in the Permian Basin. Choose your grass species carefully. If you don't like working on the lawn, select a low-maintenance species. Don't be a slave to the lawn, don't over water and don't sacrifice the health of your trees for the sake of having the greenest lawn on the block. Remember, it takes a season to establish a lawn, but it takes years to establish a tree.

For more information on lawn care, contact the County Extension office. In Ector County, call 335-3071 and in Midland, 687-1351.

DEAR ABBY

Dempsey fans advised to take off gloves and write about stamp

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR READERS: The letter I published from Deanne Dempsey, Jack Dempsey's widow, soliciting help in promoting a commemorative postage stamp to mark the 100th anniversary of Jack Dempsey's birth, generated a flood of fascinating letters. Read on:

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I loved Mrs. Dempsey's idea of a postage stamp to commemorate the 100-year anniversary of Jack Dempsey's birth.

During the Depression years in the oil-boom town of Wink, Texas, the only important days of the year were the day we voted and the days when Jack Dempsey boxed.

Dempsey's boxing was more important than voting, because in all the oil fields, the roughnecks, tool pushers, drillers and crews would go home, bathe, shave, put on their best clothes, and go downtown to listen to the boxing match on the radio. (There was no TV in those days.)

When I was a child, all the men gathered at the Central Drugstore in Wink. There were so many, some had to stand outside to listen. It was the highlight for many of us during the Depression years. — LEON THOMPSON, KENT, WASH.

DEAR ABBY: I would like to encourage the Citizens Stamp Advisory Board to approve a Jack Dempsey postage stamp — preferably a 25-cent stamp — commemorating the 100th anniversary of his birth on June 24, 1895. It should be a 25-cent stamp, because that was the fee paid to the midwife who delivered him. — BOXING FAN

DEAR ABBY: I appreciated Mrs. Jack Dempsey's letter regarding her husband.

She failed to mention that her husband also served his country during World War II as a naval officer.

My late husband was Mr. Dempsey's secretary at the Great Lakes Naval Base in Chicago. He cherished the time he spent with this great man. — FLORENCE SCHLECT, MONROE, MICH.

DEAR ABBY: On Sept. 23, 1926, I bet my father that my hero, Jack Dempsey, would beat Gene Tunney and keep his world heavyweight boxing championship title. Alas, the following day, newspapers throughout the country had headlines announcing "Tunney Defeats Dempsey"! Dad made me take 25 cents from my Liberty Bell bank to pay off the wager I had lost. I learned early in life there is no such thing as a sure bet.

I am writing to Marvin Runyon, Postmaster General, L'Enfant Plaza, Washington, D.C. 20026, in support of a Dempsey postage stamp. — JOHN M. SLANSKI, SHELTON, CONN.

READERS: For the record: Gene Tunney successfully defended his world heavyweight boxing championship title against Jack Dempsey in a second title fight in 1927. It drew a record gate of $2,658,660. I suppose many U.S. citizens would enjoy licking a Jack Dempsey postage stamp, because the only man who licked Jack Dempsey was Gene Tunney.

To order "How to Write Letters for All Occasions," send a business-sized, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 to: Dear Abby, Letter Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447.

AT WIT'S END

Smile for the camera, but don't say 'cheese'

By Erma Bombeck

Bombeck

For years we've tried to get our family to pose for a smiling portrait by having them all say the word "sex" at the same time the camera clicks.

The results have been that all the men in the picture have their mouths formed in a circle from saying in unison, "What sex?" and all the women have their eyes rolled back in their heads.

Saying "cheese" didn't work either. We all looked like we were hissing at the camera.

With every family on Christmas cards, there is one kid who is not with the program. He hates the clothes he's wearing. He hates the family he's with. He hates his life. The only thing that might bring a smile is the announcement, "We're out of film."

This is obviously a global problem.

Beginning next month, Polaroid Corp. is bringing out a talking camera with three prerecorded jokes. In answer to the question you are about to ask, these are the jokes:

- "Cheese for me, cheese for you, everybody say cheezaroo."
- "Oh smile, you funny person."
- "I want you to say a heh-heh (nonsense word)."

Lines like that killed vaudeville. Also vaudevillians. They were probably responsible for the theaters reduced to rubble by demolition balls. You let your camera do those jokes, and you're going to face a group of people who look terminal.

The camera company anticipated this and is also including a chip that will record and play back your own one-liners.

It is not easy working your own living room. I write humor for a living, and all I get from my family is: "I've heard it before," "That joke is stupid," "Is this the one where you always forget the punch line?" or "Is the dog old enough to buy a drink?"

Last Christmas, I tried to get the family in the center hallway for a picture we could send on a religious holiday.

I opened the front door so we could be framed in a dramatic setting. Since it was raining, I put my yellow slicker with the red scarf and a yellow Paddington Bear hat on one of our guests and sent him out in the rain with the camera.

When I got the prints back recently, they were so bad my husband and I decided to send a picture of just the two of us framed in a wreath for next Christmas. He argued there wasn't enough light and he didn't know why we had to take a Christmas picture in March. He hogged the wreath so you couldn't see the good side of my hair; I told him this marriage wouldn't last until Christmas.

Students teach infant safety

Nursing demonstration pays off with more than a grade

By Elise Coombes

A young mother cradles her infant while a cigarette dangles from her mouth. As she talks on the phone her baby lies dangerously close to the edge of the bed. Later the mother leaves her baby unsupervised in the bath tub.

Fortunately, the young mother "who did everything wrong" was actually Midland College nursing student Michelle Provence and a rubber doll played the role of the baby.

Although the slapstick nature of this "skit" often drew laughter from the Coleman High School students who made up the audience, there was no question that they understood the seriousness of the topic when they answered questions at the end of the skit.

The 45-minute demonstration on Infant Safety presented in February to an audience comprised mostly of expectant and delivered mothers at Coleman was a learning experience for the high school students and for the Midland College nursing students who researched, planned and presented the material.

> "Part of nursing is teaching."
> —Ginger Cameron

The material, which had to be geared to an adolescent audience, included the skit, a video, instructional posters and demonstrations that included how to bathe a baby. The presentation was part of the nursing students' requirement for a Family Health and Reproduction course, but the payoff for these Midland College students was more than a grade.

"Part of nursing is teaching," nursing student Ginger Cameron said. The clinical experience for the students in the class had been mostly limited to brief visits with mothers at the hospital.

Planning and presenting the material on Infant Safety helped the students focus on individual concerns of first-time parents and on the problems parents face once the baby is home.

Midland College Nursing Instructor Pat Sullivan said she was pleased with her students' efforts—efforts that included research, creativity and problem-solving.

"This was a difficult topic because it was so broad, and the topic was pediatric-oriented so students had to do extra work to get material that was outside the scope of the class, Sullivan said.

The class had brainstorming sessions to come up with ideas and eventually broke the presentation into six topics: automobile safety, environmental safety, choking, bathing, feeding and household equipment safety.

The project was enhanced by a number of factors the students had not anticipated. There was class-wide enthusiasm that made the project fun.

"We had a blast," nursing student Sylvia Pearce said.

The nursing students also developed a respect for the young Coleman students. "It was a motivated group I didn't expect to find," nursing student Vicki Stapleton said.

Student Debbie Harkins was impressed with both the students and the Colemen facility.

"I was surprised to see that students are expected to do things right the first time," she said.

And, she was surprised "that the city had such a wonderful facility for pregnant teens."

The involvement with the students did not end with the presentation. When she could not find a car seat to demonstrate automobile safety, Harkins and her classmates bought a car seat that they later donated to Coleman's Lending Closet.

The response of the demonstration was "overwhelmingly positive," Sullivan said. Many of the Coleman students in the morning session attended the afternoon session. Some students not involved in the class attended, and the Midland College students ended up speaking to more than 70 Coleman students, both male and female.

These presentations, whose topics vary, are part of an on-going cooperation between the Midland College nursing program and Coleman High School.

Midland College nursing student Michelle Provence performs a humorous skit during an educational nursing demonstration prepared for Coleman High School students. In addition to having fun and gaining personal satisfaction, MC students fulfilled part of their course requirements in Family Health and Reproduction. These presentations are on-going and are co-sponsored by Midland College Nursing and Coleman High School.

ELISE COOMBES

'Classics' prof finds satisfaction teaching history

It was the Spring of 1989 when Will Morris, division chair of Social and Behavioral Sciences, taught his first College Classics course to 17 students.

The class was on World History, and he said he found the experience so satisfying that "I haven't stopped since." He teaches every College Classics session offered—two sessions each fall and three session each spring.

"What I get out of College Classics is the intellectual and personal stimulation of people who are really interested in what I have to talk about," he said.

Coombes

"There's a real exchange of ideas so there's my appreciation of what they've got and their appreciation of what I've got."

Administrative duties this semester mean that College Classics is the only opportunity Morris has to be in the classroom, and he makes sure the 40 students in his American History class get his full attention.

"In terms of preparation time for this one, two-hour class a week, I spend four hours a week," he said.

Without any set schedule, exams to take, papers to write or required reading, Morris said he and the class members can discuss anything they want to talk about as briefly or as in depth as they want.

"I pretend that I'm the textbook. Instead of just hitting the high spots we go into one topic into real depth."

So, for the four classes this spring, the class has covered the writing of the Constitution. He uses slides chosen specifically to illustrate his lecture material.

Morris does not hesitate to talk about why he continues to teach College Classics.

"It's a great ego booster," he said.

He also is certain about why College Classics continues to draw students.

"They get somebody who jokes with them, somebody who listens to them and takes their ideas seriously. This is why many students say the class is the high point of their week."

College Classics is an on-going program for local residents 50 years of age and older.

Session II continues after spring break, March 20-April 7. Session III runs April 10-13 and April 18-May 5 and includes courses such as Piano, Travel Trends and American History. For more information, call 685-4518.

MAA's spring show

Sculptress Ann Armstrong was overwhelmed when she first saw the 264 entries from 120 artists in Midland Arts Association's Spring Juried Show.

"There were so many entries and they were so good," said the Houston artist who is the juror for the show. "I almost didn't know where to start because I had to cut it to one third. I just had a terribly, terribly difficult time eliminating."

When she reduced the entries into a workable number for the show, she was struck by "the versatility of the area artists and how they are just first-rate, very mature artists and really know what they are doing."

The show — partially supported by the Texas Commission on the Arts and the Arts Assembly of Midland — will hang at the Museum of the Southwest through April 22. This juried show received more entries than the open show last spring at Midland College. That show had 230 entries. All were hung because the space was available.

"This year it's not — our hanging space was limited so she was only able to accept about a third of the entries," said Jan Williams, president of MAA. "So some really nice work — there just wasn't room to hang."

Also, this year, the show contained a variety of mediums allowing MAA to create additional categories.

"We ended up with enough pastels to have a separate pastel category," Ms. Williams said. "We've never had enough pastels to do that before. That's really a treat."

"I just saw some wonderful things in the pastel section," Ms. Armstrong said. Awards in the new category went to Merle Burleson, "For They Speak Not Peace," first place, and H.M. Hugh Campbell, "Oklahoma Landscape," second.

In all, the show features eight categories — watercolors, oils, photography, sculpture, drawing, mixed media, ceramics and pastels.

"It's a good show," said Ms. Armstrong, who is listed in "Notable Women in Texas" and has had one-artist shows throughout Texas, California and on the East Coast. "Every category, especially watercolor, is very strong. You have a lot of fine watercolorists here."

In the watercolor category, winners included Kymberly Munson for "Christopher," first place; Jan Jenkins Williams for "Hollyhocks," second; Joyce Jones for "Emma's Barden," third; and Lavoe Peeler for "Water Fantasy," Merle Burleson for "Fantasia" and Janet Haney for "War Weary," honorable mentions.

Please see SHOW/2G

Cecile Martin, first place, sculpture for "Turning Point"

Rebecca Wiggins, above, received Best in Show in the Midland Arts Association Spring Juried Show for her chess set, "Potters vs. Painters." The show remains on view at the Museum of the Southwest through April 22. Juror for Midland Arts Association's Spring Juried Show is Houston sculptress Ann Armstrong, right.

SHOW: Works to hang at museum through April 22

(From 1G)

"There were some beautiful oils," Ms. Armstrong said. "There were many, many wonderful works, but there were some that were just outstanding in every medium. The smaller categories like photography and mixed media there were not as many entries, but they were very good quality. And, sculpture and ceramics had a lot of variety as well."

Those receiving awards in the oils category were Helen Pogue for "Summer Solstice," first place; Barbara Carlyle for "Storm Over the Border," second; and Don Parks for "Pecos Mission," third.

"When I judge, what I try to do is to show the best of every style and of every medium knowing that there are many, many styles that don't appeal to me as a person or as an artist," Ms. Armstrong said. "Yet, they are excellent representatives of that style of painting or sculpture. I really try to show that and put those forth in the show."

Sculpture awards went to Cecile Martin for a bronze entitled "Turning Point," first; Barbara Reed for a ceramics piece entitled "Cactus," second; and both Nancy Dye for the ceramics entry "There Was an Accountant" and Jason Trussell for the metal entry "Damn Big Mosquite," received honorable mentions.

"The composition and the different disciplines of art are the same in almost every medium," said Ms. Armstrong, who has worked in several mediums. "The good things in a painting usually are found in a sculpture, usually by another name. So we look for the same things. And, of course, we look for excellence in whatever media it is."

Awards received in other categories included: photography — first place to "Market" by Kathryn Boone and honorable mentions for "Devotion" by Billie Mercer and "Chris' Office Equipment" by Peronneav Mathewes; mixed media — first place to "African Zebra" by Kay Smith and honorable mentions to "Fire Sermon" by Brandon Borchert and "Dragon Tracks" by Kitt Blair Beck; ceramics — first place to "Lidded Urn" by Boyd Harris and honorable mention to "Untitled No. 3" by Karen Hembree; and drawing — first place to "Enduring Heights" by Larita Billups and an honorable mention to "Psalm 121:5" by Jim Ford.

Best of Show went to Rebecca Wiggins for "Potters vs. Painters" chess set.

Other awards included the Award for Realism from the Paint & Palette Club, which went to Dorothy Baird for her "Blue Pansies" watercolor; the Merchandise Award from Silver's, which went to Rebecca Wiggins for her "It's One of Those Days" watercolor; and the MAA Purchase Award for the cancer wing of Memorial Hospital and Medical Center, which went to Herb Cooper for a landscape.

"Judging a show is only one person's opinion anyway," Ms. Armstrong said. "I like to see the versatility of the styles and media. And I put the best of those styles and media in the show. The show does not represent everything that is my favorite thing, but, when I pick winners, of course, it does represent my own likes as an artist and my own judgment of what is good composition, good color and good workmanship.

"But, the artists need to understand that it is really just one judge's opinion. It's real important for the people who entered the show to know that."

Those viewing the MAA exhibit — sponsored by Costal Management Corp., Elizabeth Locker, Henry Petroleum Corp., Jack Sherman Chevrolet, Norwest Bank Midland, Parker & Parsley, Permian Production Equipment Inc., Southwest Royalties Inc., Tom Brown Inc., and Yale E. Key Inc. — will have the opportunity to see Ms. Armstrong's work as well. Several of her pieces are on display in the adjacent gallery.

She became an artist because, she said, "I couldn't type."

"My gift was in art and probably in three-dimensional art, I had the greatest gift. And in pursuing that it just naturally evolved that I began teaching."

Ms. Armstrong has taught sculpting for a number of years and conducted a workshop working in clay while she was in Midland. However, in recent years she's had little time to teach. Much if her energy has gone into completing large commissions, including several for Oklahoma State University. She also has worked on a commission for the Houston Zoo — a huge Galapagos turtle with a small girl, in bronze, sitting on the turtle, holding her doll. In addition, she has been producing two extinct animals each year for the Brazos Valley Science Museum at Bryan.

"It's been enjoyable and it's been a challenge to get these things done and done on a deadline," she said. "In years past, I was teaching about 10 workshops a year. I didn't teach at all last year."

She is working on a book on sculpting with a polymer cement.

"The pieces that I did for Oklahoma State are out of that material," said Ms. Armstrong, who has plans to teach in June at the Hill ountry Arts Foundation in Ingram. "I also did an 8-foot by 21-foot wall out of this same material. And, it's wonderful. It doesn't crack. It's a sculptor's dream."

She has not always been a sculptor. "I started out as a painter, but over the last 25 years my sculpture has been my strongest suit," she said. "And so I've pursued that."

HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, MARCH 12, 1995

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Projects already underway will soon bear fruit. Sizable financial gains are possible by late summer. Your attitude influences how other people respond to you. Be positive in word and deed. Let go of old grudges. Romance brings new delights during the December holidays. Be considerate of an older relative's feelings. Business opportunities beckon early in 1996.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actress Barbara Feldon, singer Liza Minnelli, baseball player Darryl Strawberry, singer Al Jarreau.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Pay attention to your inner voice. Postpone making a major personal decision until you and your partner have talked things over. Recognize your strengths and weaknesses. Do not bury your head in the sand.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): The Sunday papers could yield a fine moneymaking idea or job lead. Follow up immediately by mailing your resume. A former flame re-enters your life. Romance really could be happier the second time around!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Home improvements will increase your property's value. Investigate the possibility of a do-it-yourself project. When someone goes out of their way to please you, show appreciation.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A desire to travel will be fulfilled in the near future. You may not be overly fond of your companions, however. Make the best of things. Never underestimate your abilities.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Take care of your financial obligations before purchasing luxury items. Others encourage you to accept responsibility for a group endeavor. A new relationship develops under unusual circumstances. Be more assertive where romance is concerned.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): An exhilarating day lies ahead! Even a partner's serious mood won't get you down. Guard your health. That worn-out feeling is often the result of too much activity. Scale down your workload.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A change of residence is not entirely out of the question. Survey the scene; you could stumble across a terrific location. A close liaison is under considerable pressure. Conforming to the norm may not appeal.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You should have plenty of energy to handle routine matters now. Your organizational skills will help you cut through red tape in a hurry. Winter sports can be invigorating. Bundle up against the elements.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Avoid scattering your energies too widely. A partner needs your support. Letting go of a current relationship will make room for a new one. Get involved in community life; your talents are sorely needed.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Restlessness and a serious desire for change could cause a break with the past. Hidden conditions could surround a love affair. Light physical activity is favored over more strenuous pursuits today. Focus on intellectual interests.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Broaden your mental horizons by reading about a fascinating new subject. Try visualization or imagery techniques to help deal with a long-time health problem. Participating in sports relieves tension. Give romance another chance.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Begin a journal to record your thoughts over the next month; keep it in a safe place. Sharing a beautiful experience with good friends recharges your batteries. You feel full of vim and vigor!

South's play to the first trick on this hand was quite correct in terms of the heart suit alone. It was completely wrong if the hand is considered as a whole!

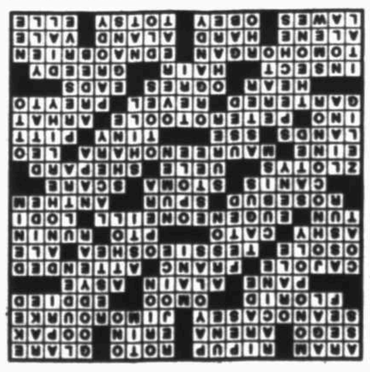

North's jump raise to three spades with 13 points in high cards wouldn't raise an eyebrow among those who play this sequence as forcing. Since queens and jacks are overvalued in the 4-3-2-1 scale, limit raisers should be equally content — the hand is not worth its face value. Regardless, South has ample to carry on to game, but too many losers to look for more.

West led the jack of hearts, covered by the queen and king and taken by the ace. Dummy was entered with the ace of clubs and the queen of spades was run to West's king. West found the superb defensive play of returning a low heart, which proved to be the only way to defeat the contract. East won the trick with the seven and shifted to a diamond. Declarer played low, West won with the queen and got out with a trump. Eventually declarer lost a trick to the king of diamonds for down one.

Before playing to the first trick, declarer should have worked out that the contract was secure if the losers could be limited to one in each suit except clubs. To accomplish that, East had to be kept off lead.

Correct technique is for declarer to play low from dummy to the first trick, then allowed the jack of hearts to win. Now declarer can win the heart continuation, cross to the table with a club and try the trump finesse. It loses, but declarer can win any continuation, draw trumps, then clear clubs, ending in dummy. Now the jack of diamonds is run. West can win, but is trapped in an endplay. A diamond return is into declarer's tenace, and any other suit allows declarer to ruff in dummy while discarding the remaining diamond loser from hand.

Despite his rising success, Texas filmmaker stays faithful to Austin

By Chip Brown
Associated Press

AUSTIN — Richard Linklater goes virtually unnoticed as he slips into the main library at the University of Texas in a sweatshirt and jeans.

There are those devoted followers of his movies "Slacker," "Dazed and Confused" and his current hit "Before Sunrise" who smile knowingly or introduce themselves.

But for the most part, the 33-year-old Linklater passes for any other UT graduate student.

He wouldn't have it any other way.

Linklater is one of the hottest independent filmmakers in the country.

Critics have generally given "Before Sunrise" thumbs up. And the movie, which stars Ethan Hawke and Julie Delpy in a whirlwind modern romance set in Vienna, was the premier of the Sundance Film Festival in Park City, Utah, in January.

Linklater was introduced at the festival by Robert Redford, who said, "Before Sunrise embodies the spirit of what independent film is all about."

"To have Robert Redford introduce you and say nice things about you goes a long way with the folks," Linklater said, laughing. "I think I could become a serial murderer and I would still look good in mom and dad's eyes now."

Despite the acclaim, Linklater is unaffected. He politely grew tired of the obligatory cross-country appearances to promote his movie, and relished returning to his rented apartment near the Texas campus, where he kicks around ideas with colleagues in his production company, Detour Filmproduction.

"If I have been away for awhile, I love coming back and seeing the tower (on the UT campus)," Linklater said. "I have always lived where I can see it.

"I like the energy in Austin. I visited here as a teen-ager and it seemed like a mecca in the south for creative people who couldn't afford New York or Los Angeles," said Linklater, who grew up in Houston and moved to Austin in 1984. "There are all kinds of different ambitions here."

Linklater's first two movies preceded a wave of other productions filmed in Austin, including "A Perfect World" with Kevin Costner and Clint Eastwood and the recent TV series "Texas Justice" starring Heather Locklear.

"Slacker," an experimental narrative looking at 24 hours in the lives of 100 characters, was shot in Austin in 1989 on a shoestring budget and was released in 1991. It now has somewhat of a cult following. President Clinton has frequently used the term "slacker" in describing idle youth.

"I wish I had the copyright and was being paid for it," Linklater joked.

Linklater's second major production, "Dazed and Confused" also was shot in Austin. It chronicled the American teen-ager in the 1970s.

And while "Before Sunrise" wasn't filmed in Austin, it was edited and put together in a local studio, an accomplishment Linklater touts with pride.

"I think it was the first major studio film finished in Austin," Linklater said. "I would like to see the postproduction end built up here."

Linklater premiered "Before Sunrise" at the Paramount Theater in downtown Austin, where he also convinced friend and director Quentin Tarantino to personally premier his Oscar-nominated movie "Pulp Fiction."

Linklater said he has already begun work on his next project, which will feature the true story of four brothers who robbed a string of banks from Texas to Canada in the early 1920s.

Young musicians become keepers of jazz flame

By Tom Piazza
N.Y. Times News Service

In the five years since the entertainment media began to note the revival of interest in traditional forms of jazz among young musicians, critics and fans have been arguing over the nature, worth and meaning of that revival.

To some, the young musicians have seemed the product of hype, gaining exposure that should have gone to older musicians.

Others see the youngsters' attention to what has been called the jazz canon as an attempt to halt the gears of artistic progress. To still others, the movement has represented nothing less than a jazz renaissance.

In a sense, what the jazz world has been experiencing — the controversy over the direction a new generation is taking, the anxiety over what to make of the past, the re-examination of values — is a collective midlife crisis.

How, the implicit question seems to run, should this art form negotiate the passage, begun in the 1960s around the time that rock-and-roll became a major industry, from being the coolest new kid on the esthetic and commercial block to a role as a mature, though still evolving, music with a body of recognized, classic work behind it?

For those of us brought up on late 1960s rock-and-roll, the question can be especially tricky. Outsider status and iconoclasm are the most meaningful expressions of identity in rock.

Yet art is always a dialogue between individual sensibility and inherited forms. True innovation is highly desirable, but, like happiness, it is a byproduct and not an end in itself. In any case, it rarely comes from those who operate without a strong sense of their genre's past.

While the arguments go on, young musicians continue to arrive, and what was a promising novelty in 1990 has blossomed into a scene richer than anything seen for nearly 30 years.

Musicians like the tenor saxophonists James Carter and Joshua Redman, the trumpeter Nicholas Payton, the altoist Wessell Anderson, the pianists Jacky Terrasson, Stephen Scott, Eric Reed, Peter Martin and Benny Green, the bassists Christian McBride and Chris Thomas and the drummers Winard Harper, Brian Blade and Leon Parker are only some of the best-known players on the scene.

In New York City, they play at clubs like Small's, Iridium and Visiones, as well as at more established venues like the Village Vanguard and Bradley's. In New Orleans, which is once again a hot bed of talent second only to New York, an amazing group of players is centered around the nightclub Snug Harbor.

Luckily, all this activity is being documented on an array of recent recordings that show just how much depth and variety there is in jazz today as well as some of the elements the young players are beginning to add to the idiom.

One of the most heralded debut recordings in recent memory is that of Terrasson, 29, a pianist who won the 1993 Thelonious Monk Competition and has served an apprenticeship with groups led by the drummer Art Taylor and the singer Betty Carter.

Terrasson is one of many very, very good young pianists on the scene today; among the others, Reed, Scott, Green and Cyrus Chestnut all have their own new recordings out, all of them excellent in different ways.

Terrasson's first recording as a leader, titled "Jacky Terrasson," has a startling freshness, due to the pianist's arresting harmonic sense and his willingness to contrast timbres, textures and especially dynamics.

Leon Parker has his own debut recording as well, entitled "Above and Below," on which he expands on some of the group concepts explored on Terrasson's set and draws an amazing spectrum of sound from a bare-bones drum set that includes only one cymbal.

He has a novel way of linking his bass drum rhythms to the bassist's rhythms, putting an unexpected funk accent under tunes by Thelonious Monk and turning "It's Only a Paper Moon" into a calypso.

One of the things that both recordings point to is the awareness among so many younger players of the importance of an ensemble conception to set off the individual players' solo statements.

Often the music they play involves not just straight-ahead swing, but funk, Latin and New Orleans second-line rhythms, set in an acoustic context that allows touch, timbre and attack to be delivered free of the limiting effects of electronics.

The bassist Christian McBride's debut set, "Gettin' to It," for example, which boasts a cast of young luminaries like Joshua Redman and the trumpeter Roy Hargrove, contains a variety of arranged interludes, backgrounds and varied ensemble textures.

Despite McBride's obvious affinity for the jazz sounds evolved in the late 1950s and early 1960s, the title track is a homage to McBride's avowed inspiration, the soul singer James Brown, on which the bassist digs deeper into the funk than many an electric bassist might.

Among the younger instrumentalists, Nicholas Payton, 21, a trumpeter who lives in New Orleans, truly stands out. He has received wide exposure with the drummer Elvin Jones, the pianist Marcus Roberts and the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra.

Payton possesses a gorgeous round, warm tone as well as an ability to articulate complex lines at rapid speeds with stunning precision. Best of all, his playing is almost completely free of cliches, and that is true of few musicians of any age.

Alto saxophonist Wessell Anderson, whose fine debut recording, "Warmdaddy in the Garden of Swing," was released last fall, is one of the most gifted of all the young players.

Some commentators complain that there are not yet any geniuses on the order of Charlie Parker or John Coltrane among the young crowd and imply that their attention to past statements in the form is inhibiting personal creativity.

But it is worth remembering that Parker and Coltrane both came along in periods when there were many musicians conversant with the basic language they spoke.
