Shultz does some Canadian fence-mending

OTTAWA (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz, striving to calm the often stormy atmosphere of U.S.-Canadian relations, is seeking Canada's support on another sensitive issue, trade with the Soviet Union.

Shultz was meeting with Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau and other Canadian officials today following his arrival Sunday and an hour-long session with Allan J. MacEachen, Canada's external affairs minister.

He was also to witness the delivery of the first of 137 CF-18 all-weather jet fighters manufactured by the McDonnell Douglas Corp. and sold to Canada for $2.5 billion.

Officials said Shultz's talks with MacEachen focused on long-term aspects of East-West relations and that the two skirted the divisive question of U.S. economic sanctions aimed at slowing construction of a Soviet Union's natural gas pipeline to western Europe.

Shultz's visit here was largely an exercise in diplomatic fence-mending.

One U.S. official described it as an effort to reverse an impression "that U.S.-Canadian relations are slipping out of control" because of differences on economic issues.

Richard Burt, the assistant secretary of state for European affairs, told a Canadian television reporter today that the primary goal of the Shultz trip is to make clear to Canada that the problems and relations between the two nations are receiving "personal attention at the most senior level."

The differences between the two countries on economic issues have been heightened by the recent difficulties both nations have encountered.

Canada is the largest U.S. trading partner, with a two-way annual trade of $92 billion.

But U.S. interests own nearly half of Canada's industry, and Canada has reacted with what the U.S. official called a burst of "economic nationalism."

In one of a series of steps, the Canadian Parliament created a Foreign Investment Review Agency to dictate new rules for investment from abroad. The step caused unhappiness inside the Reagan administration and among U.S. investors.

"We think it has impeded the free flow of goods," the U.S. official who requested anonymity said.

On the other hand, Canadian officials have made no secret of the fact that they are concerned over moves toward protectionism in the U.S. Congress. They fear restrictions which could, for example, hamper U.S. imports of Canadian timber and uranium and restrict or bar the access of Canadian truckers to U.S. highways.

Burt, whose responsibilities include State Department policy toward Canada, said the problems facing the economies of both nations create protectionist pressures.

"I don't think it's a get-even approach," he replied when asked about protectionist measures pending in Congress.

Canadians also have complained that acid rain, caused by air pollution south of their border, harms Canadian lakes and forests. That issue also is likely to be raised in the talks.

In the international field, Canadian officials have expressed fear that the "extraterritorial" attempt by the United States to enforce the pipeline sanctions by imposing U.S. law on overseas subsidiaries of U.S. companies could prove a damaging precedent.

No landslide vote foreseen

WASHINGTON (AP) — For 10 minutes, Democratic and Republican legislators at a League of Women Voters forum on Capitol Hill traded rhetorical flourishes — and little else — about unemployment.

The desultory dialogue last week prompted the moderator to interject: "I don't think the unemployed listening to us tonight really can take much comfort from this discussion so far."

The comment appears to reflect wide sentiment among American voters as the 1982 election campaign draws to a close. The lack of specific cures for high unemployment and a sluggish economy has kept voters from displaying any inclination to stampede toward either major party on Nov. 2.

As a result, Democratic and GOP officials say neither side will have a landslide to savor in congressional elections, nor humiliating losses to spend the next two years trying to forget.

Democrats still hope to remove enough Republicans from President Reagan's working coalition in the House to effectively derail the economic program that his critics blame for the 10.1 percent unemployment rate. This would provide a solid foundation on which the Democrats could build a presidential campaign for 1984.

Republicans, meanwhile, are fighting to minimize the historic tendency toward midterm congressional losses by the president's party. In the last 28 off-year elections, the president's party has suffered an average net loss of 39 House seats. A good showing by the Republicans would allow Reagan to stick with his economic and legislative agenda.

Despite some hotly contested races across the country, the consensus among political professionals is that there most likely will be a net Republican loss of eight to 15 seats in the Democratic-controlled House this year.

Nonetheless, while the overall House lineup of 241 Democrats and 192 Republicans, with two vacancies, may remain virtually the same, there will be plenty of new faces when the 98th Congress convenes.

On Nov. 2, there are 216 Democrats and 167 Republicans seeking re-election to the House. Of that number, 12 incumbents are facing each other in six races because of redistricting.

Of the 435 members:

—12 retired to run for Senate.

—5 retired to run for governor.

—1 retired to run for other state office.

—22 retired and are not seeking other offices.

—10 were defeated in primary bids for renomination.

—1 died in office.

—1 resigned.

Both sides have spent a lot of time and money pressing the economic issue.

Reagan recently told a campaign audience that the Democrats had nothing to offer on the economic front except a "blind return to big spending, big taxing, more regulations, meddling and make-work, more government coming through the windows, under the doors and down the chimney."

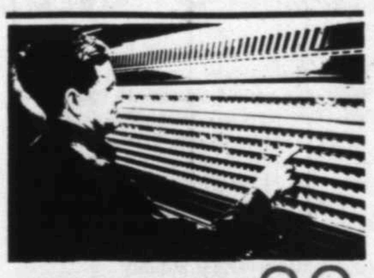
'Improvement' theme of JP campaign



election 82

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of an eight-part series examining the candidates and issues in the Nov. 2 election. Today's story deals with the race for Justice of the Peace, Precinct 1, Place 2.

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Republican Party candidate Bob Coonce is pitting his business and managerial experience, studies in criminology, and desire to "revitalize" the Justice of the Peace Office against the reigning JP, Robert H. "Bob" Pine, who has been on the justice's job for almost 18 years.

"He says it's time for a change," Pine said of his 46-year-old opponent, "and I don't think it's time for a change."

The JP race will be decided in the Nov. 2 general election.

Pine, 67, a Democrat, has held the office since Dec. 1, 1964, when the Midland County Commissioners' Court appointed him to succeed David M. "Doc" Ellis, his friend who died in office in 1964.

"HE ASKED ME if I wanted it (the JP's job)," Pine said of Ellis. "He knew he was dying, and asked me if I wanted his job when he passed away. I said 'no.'"

But after Ellis died, friends persuaded Pine, who then was in the office supply business, to seek the post.

The JP's post is a multi-faceted office, which handles "quite a bit of traffic-related cases," civil disputes involving up to $500, criminal matters and inquests. The JP holds examining trials, acts as a coroner, conducts inquests, issues search warrants, accepts charges in felony cases, reads rights to persons charged with offenses, set bonds, and, when time allows, performs marriages.

"I HAVE constantly sought to improve myself as a justice of the peace by attending the in-service training programs each year," Pine said. Those JP in-service sessions are held at Texas A&M University, Lamar University and Southwest Texas State University. Pine also serves on the Midland Council on Alcoholism, and is past president of the Downtown Midland Lions Club.

"I feel that my experience and training are vitally necessary to the Justice Court at this particular time," Pine said. "I hope to continue the work that I have been doing to the best of my ability."

Coonce said he would bring fairness and equity to the Justice Court.

"I feel that the position needs a responsible and fair person to guarantee the rights and obligations for the fair and equal representation in an impartial court," said Coonce, who has taken leave of his job as an "operating engineer" — heavy-equipment operator — to campaign for peace justice.

COONCE NOTED that his experience in business and management has come about through his ownership and management of rental property.

School boundaries to change

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The growth of an elementary school-aged population in the Midland Independent School District, which resulted in citizens approving the construction of two elementary schools in the April bond issue and two in the bond issue the previous year, also will lead to a change in the district's boundaries, according to Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school planning and construction.

Mailey, who will present recommendations on changes for the district's cluster system to school trustees during their regular meeting at 1:30 p.m. Tuesday in the administration building, said Thursday the rearranging of the district is a difficult project.

Although he couldn't comment on specific recommendations to be presented to trustees because they were incomplete, Mailey did point out several factors that had to be considered when re-grouping clusters.

Presently, the 19 elementary schools in the district are divided into six clusters of three schools each, with one cluster containing four schools.

"In 1975, when we began the cluster system, we agreed that Travis was naturally integrated," Mailey explained. "Therefore, we put them in the Bonham-West-Washington cluster." He added that Travis sixth graders attend Washington so they can become acquainted with other students who will attend junior high school with them.

During the spring 1981 bond election, Midland voters approved the building of a new school and a new building to replace the old De Zavala Elementary facility. The two new buildings, along with a school approved in the spring 1982 bond issue, are expected to be ready for classes by August 1983, resulting in 21 schools, including Travis, that will be divided into seven clusters of three schools.

Quanah Parker Elementary School, located at the corner of Norwood and St. Andrews, was approved by voters along with the new De Zavala building, which is being constructed near the former school. Both are expected to be completed by February 1983. Total contract, including change orders, for Quanah Parker is $2,342,279; the contract for De Zavala is $2,305,624.

In addition, one of two schools approved last spring is expected to be completed July 15, 1983, in time to open for fall classes. Budgeted cost for the school, which is being constructed on Whitman Drive, north of Bluebird Lane and about a half-mile west of Garfield, is $2,820,000. The school, referred to as the Bluebird school, will receive its formal name "sometime this winter, I hope," Mailey said.

The opening of the Bluebird school and Quanah Parker will change the present boundaries and clusters as well to hold an impartial court within the guidelines of the law," Coonce said of the office.

The challenger referred to the increasing criminal and civil case load in the court. For example, the court now handles civil cases involving up to $500 in litigation; the limit previously was $200.

"My goal is to increase the efficiency of the office, increase the rate of case flow and to have more open communications with the youth of Midland," Coonce said.

Coonce said that he sees a "vast potential for doing good with the youth of Midland, especially educating the youth about the duties of the justice of the peace and on the law and the penalities (for breaking it)."

SUCH AN educational program would help in "preventing crime among Midland youth," he said.

"I feel there's a need to revitalize the office," he said. In that regard, he cited the new energy and the awareness of public needs which he would bring to the office, and the "employing of modern business techniques for economy and efficiency."

"I believe I'm running a good, positive, aggressive campaign, and I'll continue to do so," he said. "I have the temperament for the job, and I like people. I like to treat everyone the way I like to be treated.

"I'm fair and impartial," said Coonce. "What I want now is a chance to prove myself to the citizens of Midland."

The job — JP for Precinct 1, Place 2 — Coonce is seeking will be paying about $28,000 in 1983; Pine's salary is budgeted at $29,340 next year, and his office budget is $86,566. Midland County's other Justice of the Peace, Republican Charlie Sprayberry, is not up for re-election until 1984.

PINE'S LAST opposition came in 1970, when Louis Salinas campaigned against him. "And I beat him in every (voting) precinct except three, and they were not really that bad," said Pine, who carried 24 of 27 voting precincts.

"It's interesting work," the justice said of his job. "You don't know all this stuff (criminal activity and violent deaths) is taking place until you get involved."

The peace justice reflected on some of the more sensitive aspects of his work: acting as a coroner and holding inquests into violent deaths.

"It's part of the job; it's not a pleasant job. You have to have a feeling for people who have survived, (particularly) the family. That's got to be your concern."

Pine has been living in Midland for 35 years; Coonce has lived here for 20 years.

International bridge reopens after mishap

NUEVO LAREDO, Mexico (AP) — Mexican authorities barricaded a gap in the metal railing on the International Bridge and reopened the span connecting the United States and Mexico that was closed when a truck crashed through the rail and plummeted 30 feet to the Rio Grande.

Three people were killed Saturday when the 18-wheel truck slammed into the back of a car, swerved, hit two pedestrians on the bridge and toppled upside down into the riverbed.

The Mexican army cleared the accident site late Saturday and the bridge was reopened Sunday, a Laredo police spokesman said.

Josefina San Juan Balderas, 50, and Rosa Casares Fraga, 53, were walking from Laredo, Texas to Mexico when the truck hit them. Mrs. Balderas was pronounced dead at the scene and Mrs. Fraga died in a Nuevo Laredo hospital.

The truck's driver, Julio Lujano, 24, of Laredo, also was killed. Authorities said he was crushed in the truck's cab when the vehicle landed upside down and partially in the Rio Grande.

The truck, which belonged to Villasana Co. and Forwarding Agency of Laredo and carried 790 cases of eggs, was traveling south on the Mexican half of the bridge at 11:50 a.m. Authorities said it slammed into the rear of a Thunderbird, authorities said.

The Thunderbird's occupants were not injured.

Sharon testifies in massacre hearing

JERUSALEM (AP) — Defense Minister Ariel Sharon said today that he authorized the Christian militia assault on two west Beirut refugee camps where hundreds of Palestinians were massacred.

But Sharon, testifying before a commission probing the Sept. 16-18 massacre, insisted that no Israeli official ever imagined the attack aimed at rooting out PLO guerrillas would lead to a slaughter.

He said he made the decision to let the Christians into the camps in consultation with Israel's chief of staff, Lt. Gen. Raphael Eytan.

Sharon said Prime Minister Menachem Begin was informed that the Christians were to take "certain places" in west Beirut, but that Begin was not told they would go into the Sabra and Chatilla camps.

Sharon said he did not inform Begin of the massacre when the defense minister learned of it Sept. 17 and could not reach Begin Sept. 18 because the prime minister was in the synagogue for the Jewish new year. Begin has made it known he only learned of the massacre from news reports the night of Sept. 18.

The commission members repeatedly questioned whether Israel should have anticipated a slaughter. Supreme Court Justice Aharon Barak recalled reading in the press that during a Cabinet meeting, Deputy Premier David Levy had raised concerns about a massacre.

"Didn't this light any red lights?" he asked. Sharon said Levy had been quoted out of context.

Supreme Court Justice Yitzhak Kahan asked what was known of Christian attitudes toward Palestinians. Sharon conceded that they wanted the Palestinians out of Lebanon.

Sharon rated the Christian militias as "a military unit in every sense." They were not "a bunch of hotheads, they are a very balanced establishment...."

Sharon said the Israelis invaded West Beirut early on Sept. 15 to prevent Palestinian guerrillas from exploiting the chaos resulting from the murder o f President-elect Bashir Gemayel and to entrench themselves in the city.

"Not in our worst dreams did we imagine the scenes of horror we would discover in Sabra and Chatilla," he said.

He said the decision to let the Lebanese Christian militiamen enter the Palestinian refugee camps stemmed from a policy of getting the Lebanese more involved in the war.

He disclosed a hitherto secret Cabinet decision of June 15, nine days after the Lebanon invasion began, whereby Israel would seek "to integrate the Lebanese forces into the fighting in Lebanon" in hopes of sparing the Israeli army excessive casualties.

Sharon's reference to Lebanese forces rather than the Lebanese army indicated he meant the semi-private Christian militias, he told the panel.

Sharon said a certain number of civilian casualties was to be expected.

Kahan asked whether a massacre also was to be expected. "No, no," replied Sharon. "But I would like to say here that we have a lot of experience in fighting in built-up areas. If anyone thought that in fighting in such built-up areas civilians don't get killed, he was mistaken...but I don't think anyone expcted the Lebanese forces to behave as they did."

The questioning also dwelled on the tricky issue of when the Israelis finally became aware that a massacre was going on. Much of the anti-Israeli protest over the massacre centers on the allegation that the Israelis stood by idly while the Palestinians died.

Sharon said he got his first inkling at about 9 p.m. (3 p.m.) Sept. 17, the day after the militiamen entered the camps. He said Eytan returned from Beirut and phoned him to say "civilians have been harmed beyond expectations."

"Was that a quote?" asked the investigators. Sharon said Eytan's exact words, as best as he could recall, were that the Christians "overdid it."

Sharon said Eytan told him that Maj. Gen. Amir Drory, commander of Israeli forces in Lebanon, had already stopped the killing, prevented Christian reinforcements from deploying and ordered all Christian forces to leave the camps by the next morning.

Why only the next morning? asked Barak. Sharon explained that this was a normal timespan for any military unit to pull out of a specific location, especially a densely-built area like the camps.

The commission opened its doors today for the first time since hearings began last week, allowing the press to watch as Sharon defended himself for 2½ hours against allegations that his government and army should have forseen the likelihood of a slaughter.

Sharon sat at a desk in a low-ceilinged lecture hall at the Hebrew University campus in west Jerusalem, fielding questions from the three-member commission — Kahan, Barak and retired Maj. Gen. Yona Efrat.

Sharon, whose political career is at stake in the inquiry, came well prepared with documents and photographs. Heavy security surrounded the building.

Sharon's wife Lily sat in the chamber, and Sharon occasionally would turn to her as he completed his replies.

Israeli news reports said Sharon insisted on testifying publicly before the judicial panel because he wanted to demonstrate that he has nothing to hide.

Eytan testified for four hours behind closed doors Sunday, a commission announcement said.

Eytan, accompanied by three aides, presented army background to the panel and then answered its questions, the commission announcement said.

Yitzhak Hofi, the former Mossad intelligence agency chief, testified last week in another closed session.

Wind, rains batter coast

By The Associated Press

High winds and heavy rain pounded the Virginia and North Carolina coasts early today, battering beaches and forcing some residents to be evacuated.

The winds neared hurricane force, producing floodtides. High waves tore at the beaches, and more than 3 inches of rain was recorded at Cape Hatteras, N.C.

Flooding prompted evacuations around New Bern, N.C., where winds gusting to 60 mph blasted the coastline.

Meanwhile, cold weather settled into the Northeast, and a cold front brought cloudy skies and a few showers to the West.

Rain and thundershowers were forecast for later today over the Pacific Northwest and into Nevada and Utah.

Search abandoned for boating victims

POINT PLEASANT, N.J. (AP) — The Coast Guard gave up its search today for three people missing in rough seas after a chartered fishing boat capsized in the Atlantic Ocean. Five bodies were recovered, including that of the captain, and 14 people were rescued.

Panicked passengers had dragged each other down and a man helplessly watched his son swept away when a wave hit the vessel Sunday.

"Basically, it was every man for himself," said Vincent Mezzetti, 40, of Warwick, N.Y., who — clutching his 15-year-old son — wriggled free of two clinging passengers after the 50-foot Joan Le Rie III tipped over in 6-foot seas Sunday.

"The sea was washing over us," said George Gsegnet, who lost sight of his son.

"If the people were in life rafts, we could hold some hope," said Coast Guard Petty Officer Greg Creedon. "But we don't believe the people were adequately protected...in the water, without life jackets."

The sea was buffeted today by gale-force winds and Lt. Jeff Fay said the Coast Guard didn't plan to resume the search today because it was unlikely anyone not rescued could have survived.

Gsegnet's son, Rainer Gsegnet, was listed as presumed lost, as was Thomas Smythe, for whom no age or address was available. The name of a third person believed missing was withheld, Fay said, adding that there was confusion about who was aboard the boat. "One gentleman listed as being on the trip may never have gone aboard," he said.

Rescue crews aboard three helicopters and four Coast Guard cutters ferried the survivors to land after the accident, which occurred eight miles offshore. Eight people suffered minor injuries while six were admitted to intensive care units at area hospitals.

Mezzetti said he and his son were able to stay afloat until they could climb aboard a door from the wooden fishing boat.

The two were picked up about an hour later by the Rio de Janeiro, the Brazilian freighter that radioed the first SOS to the Coast Guard at about 11:30 a.m.

The Joan Le Rie III had left Point Pleasant Beach, about 45 miles south of New York City, at 6 a.m., chartered by the Gaelic Cultural Society, an Irish-American social group based in Greenwood Lake, N.Y.

The day's bluefish fishing expedition had been cut short by seasickness and the boat was headed in.

"The boat was hit broadside (by a wave). In 10 seconds, the boat very gently rolled over," Mezzetti said. "There were five people on deck and the rest were in the cabin seasick. The waves backwashed everybody overboard."

"It was bloody cold," added Mezzetti as he stood in Point Pleasant Hospital, dressed in green pajamas and wrapped in a gray blanket.

Mezzetti said he was unaware that the National Weather Service had posted small craft warnings at 6:30 a.m, with winds in excess of 18 knots and waves over 4 feet. The Coast Guard said the water temperature was in the upper 50s.

Doctors said some survivors had body temperatures as low as 94 degrees when they reached the hospital.

Gsegnet and Mezzetti said the survivors, clinging to debris and life preservers, were pushed away from each other in the choppy waves.

"I drank a lot of sea water," said Gsegnet. "One guy came out and grabbed onto my leg and pulled himself up."

Gsegnet said he clung to a railing from the ship's bow until a life raft, still lashed to wreckage, floated by.

Poland's Archbishop Glemp arrives for talks with pope

ROME (AP) — Archbishop Jozef Glemp, Poland's Roman Catholic primate, arrived in Rome today for consultations with Pope John Paul II that are expected to focus on church strategy in the wake of the banning of Solidarity.

Glemp told reporters he was "a little more pessimistic" about the situation in Poland than when he visited Rome in July, adding "but in this world nothing is definite."

Although he had called off a meeting with Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski when the government outlawed the church-backed Solidarity labor movement, Glemp said a church-state dialogue still exists.

He said there was a "possibility" he might meet with Jaruzelski when he returns to Poland.

Glemp said he planned to stay about a week but would return home earlier should the situation become what he called "more agitated."

John Paul has assailed the ban on Solidarity and pledged that the Vatican and the Polish church would continue to support "the legitimate rights" of Polish workers.

Glemp had canceled a trip to Rome for the canonization of a Polish priest, Father Maximilian Kolbe, on Oct. 10, to stay close to developments in Poland. On Oct. 8 the Polish Parliament outlawed Solidarity.

Riots hit the Polish cities of Gdansk and Nowa Huta the week after the ban was approved by the Sejm, or Parliament, and one protester was killed in Nowa Huta.

Asked if he had any news on Lech Walesa, the interned Solidarity leader, Glemp replied, "poor man, he is always alone." He said he had no information on assertions by Walsea's wife, Danuta, that she had been strip-searched by police Friday after a meeting with her husband.

Glemp was met on his arrival by Polish churchmen in Rome and by Poland's Ambassador to Italy, Emel Wojtaszek.

Continued growth of schools will lead to boundary changes as bus routes, Mailey explained.

"How to bring about a reorganization of the cluster system with the least dislocation as possible and still maintain the cluster concept" is the most difficult aspect of incorporating the new schools in the district, Mailey noted.

"It will involve a shift of buses in the loading of schools," he added, explaining that many of the bus students affected will be those in the rural area.

While total enrollment projections for the 1982-83 school year were relatively accurate, school administrators were surprised by areas that ended up more student-populated than expected.

Although last year administrators looked to the west and northwest sections of the district for an influx of young students, those areas remained stable. Surprisingly, the southern rural section and the northeast section of Midland produced more students than expected, Mailey explained.

Originally, administrators were negotiating for a site west of Rusk Elementary School for the second school approved last April. During the last meeting of the school board, trustees gave approval to an addition of six classrooms for Rusk Elementary. According to board president Parker Humes, the addition would suffice for overcrowding in the western part of town. Mailey said another site will be chosen for the last school to be built from previous bond elections.

Labor stages march

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A rally expected to attract 15,000 people turned into the biggest labor demonstration in this city in 34 years as almost five times that many protesters marched, waved signs and chanted slogans blasting the Reagan administration.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland, one of several labor leaders who addressed the crowd, urged voters to turn Republicans out of office and "stand by all those friends of labor who've stood with us over the years."

Chanting "Jobs, Not Jelly Beans," the crowd, estimated by police at 70,000, marched up Market Street for three hours, then gathered in front of City Hall for speeches by Kirkland, Teamsters Secretary-Treasurer Ray Schoessling, Longshoreman President Jim Herman and Ed Asner, president of the Screen Actors Guild.

The labor leaders blamed President Reagan and his supporters in Congress for the 10.1 percent unemployment rate, and endorsed the Democratic candidates for offices ranging from state Assembly to U.S. Senate.

"This is a time for action that will not come again for two long years. Let us all pledge ourselves to make the most of it," Kirkland said as he endorsed Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. for the U.S. Senate and Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley for governor. He also backed the re-election bid of Rep. Phil Burton. All three are Democrats.

"We know they're on our side," said Kirkland. "We know equally well which side their opponents are on. When they speak, it's money that talks."

The crowd of carpenters, teachers, engineers, grocery clerks, newspaper workers, longshoremen, steelworkers, auto workers and other tradesmen cheered wildly as Schoessling urged them to "vote labor for jobs and justice."

"We are sick and tired of politicians who continually turn a deaf ear on labor, our interests and our complaints," said the Teamster chief.

Asner, whose union Reagan once headed, recently lost his own job when CBS canceled the television series "Lou Grant."

"Our goal for Thanksgiving this year is to have our turkeys on the table, not in Congress," he said.

Before the march, organizers had hoped 15,000 people would turn out. But police Sgt. Tom Tyrell said 70,000 people were in the parade. Al Lannon, a member of the event's coordinating committee, put the number at 50,000.

"It's a disgrace the way the Republicans are going right now. Even they can't deny that since they came in the rich have gotten richer and the poor have gotten poorer," said Jim Williams, a member of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers from San Jose.

Annual Labor Day parades were staged each September in San Francisco until 1950, when 50,000 people turned out. Sunday's march — more than a month after Labor Day — was the first such rally since 1950. The only Labor Day parades that drew bigger crowds were in 1937 and 1948.

Robber takes $475 from nuns

CHICAGO (AP) — A robber who explained he was unemployed and needed cash to feed his family took $475 from a convent, money the nuns had set aside for next month's bills, authorities said.

"We'll just have to trust in the Lord (now)," said a nun at Our Lady of Pompeii Convent after the robbery early Saturday morning.

Sisters at the convent said the man apparently got in through a first-floor window and ransacked a second-floor bedroom.

Paralysis doesn't necessarily preclude fathering of child

Dear Dr. Solomon: In saw a movie in which a Vietnam veteran had to use a wheelchair to get around, but he seemed to be able to have sexual relations. If a man is paralyzed from the waist down, can he still have children? — Jim, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Jim: Some men who are paralyzed from the waist down can have children. It just depends in large measure on the location and the extent of the injury.

Dear Dr. Solomon: When I was a kid about 50 years ago and I cut myself, my father would put iodine on the cut and it hurt like heck. He said it was good because that meant it was killing the germs. I don't see iodine being used so much these days, and I'd like to know whether it is still being recommended for cuts. — Jack, St. Petersburg, Fla.

Dear Jack: In the case you cite, father did not know best, but I imagine you could say the same thing for the doctors who practiced at that time. The specific answer to your question is that tincture of iodine kills tissue and therefore should not be used on open cuts.

Dear Dr. Solomon: My mother has been going to the same family doctor for about 30 years, and she has a lot of confidence in him. Recently she was told she has high blood pressure and the doctor prescribed some pills, which seem to be doing the job. However, I'd like my mother to get the best care possible, and I'd like to know whether you would recommend a specialist. — Mrs. A.H., Jersey City, N.J.

Dear Mrs. H.: There is an expression that goes, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it." If your mother is responding to the treatment prescribed by her physician, what more can you hope for? Successful treatment is successful treatment, no matter who prescribes it.

There is no reason why a general practitioner cannot manage a person whose blood pressure is well-controlled. Your mother's familiarity with the physician and her confidence in his abilities are additional reasons for letting well enough alone.

For S.C., Cleveland: I have seen obese patients that have Cushing's Syndrome. Fortunately, once the diagnosis is made the treatment is usually very effective. Then the patient can lose the excess weight. I will list for you the possible signs and symptoms I have seen in many patients with Cushing's Syndrome: Buffalo hump, moon shaped face, high blood pressure, thin skin, easy bruisability, purple streaks in the skin, blueish cast to the fingernails and toenails, mottled skin, discoloration of the skin, reddish color to the face, acne, hirsutism, male pattern baldness, very fine or very coarse hair, excessive skin infections, eyes that appear to bulge, fluid retention, muscle weakness, back pain, compression fractures, osteoporosis, depression, nervousness, irritability, emotionally labile, abnormal glucose tolerance test, diabetes, and low blood potassium.

Prior to the advent of therapy the natural history of Cushing's Syndrome was death within five years (average). Now with adequate treatment, most of my patients do quite well.

Father recalls twins' separation

By KEVIN McCULLEN
Associated Press Writer

CLINTON, Utah — Lisa Hansen flipped over a playing card and shouted, "I win!" at her blue-eyed twin sister Elisa, sprawled out beneath a color photograph showing the pair prostrate with their skulls fused together.

Their beaming father, David Hansen, sat next to them, recalling the pioneering surgery that separated the girls three years ago and has made their existence more normal.

"It's hard to imagine now that they were even joined together when they were born," he said. "When they were born, we never thought they'd get this far. It's amazing."

The twins were born Oct. 18, 1977, conjoined at the head, an event that might occur every 2½ million births, Hansen said.

Two years later, after 16½ hours of painstaking surgery in which physicians tied off sheared blood vessels and severed a small section of brain shared by the two, Lisa and Elisa were separated.

Therapy has followed, helping the blonde-haired girls combat slight paralysis on the sides of their bodies caused by removal of a tiny part of brain tissue.

Their recovery has varied. Elisa walks with a limp on her right side, but Lisa, on the verge of walking a year ago, has regressed.

Lisa, who also wears glasses, must crawl or get around in a specially designed orthopedic wheelchair. She undergoes therapy weekly, but the Hansens are uncertain if she ever will walk.

"It could be soon, it could be never," Hansen said. "No one really knows."

Both wear padded bonnets to protect the membrane-thin area on the tops of their heads where they have no skull.

The twins, however, have suffered no mental impairment, Hansen said. Both are enrolled in kindergarten, Lisa in a special education program at a Layton school and Elisa at a public school near their home in this community 30 miles north of Salt Lake City.

"They're both smart kids, but they're about a year behind because of the operation," said their 25-year-old mother, Patricia Hansen.

Their personalities also differ. "Basically, they have no similarities," Mrs. Hansen laughed.

Elisa, who strode about the family home bantering with several friends during an interview, is aggressive and outgoing.

"She's almost like a little dictator," said Hansen, who owns an ice cream distributorship. "She orders people around and it can be embarrassing."

Lisa, however, is more passive. "If you give her a book or her dolly, she'll be content for hours," Hansen said.

Lisa and Elisa enjoy each other's company, sometimes slipping into each other's bed at night to cuddle.

"If you punish one, the other one will come over and hug her," Hansen said. "It makes you feel like a heel."

The twins pass the time at home playing with dolls, their sister Shaylyn, 3, or entertaining dozens of friends who come to visit daily.

The Hansens say their daughters have been accorded a special respect from their peers and spared cruel stares or comments.

"I think the ignorance is more with people our age," said Hansen, who is running for Davis County Treasurer as a Democrat.

The Hansens also have formed a special friendship with the parents of two other Siamese twins in Chicago born after Lisa and Elisa.

Q.1—East-West vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠8752 ♡6 ◇QJ105 ♣A763
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ◇	2 ♠*	Pass	?

*preemptive
What action do you take?
A.—What has happened to the heart suit? It belongs to the enemy. If you pass timidly or make a half hearted raise to three spades, there is every likelihood that your opponents, who have by far the majority of the points, will locate their fit. Jump to four spades. Besides the fact that you might make that contract if there is a magic fit, you are increasing the preempt to a level where West will not know what to do.

Q.2—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠A1072 ♡7 ◇J954 ♣AQ95

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
3 ♠	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—You have the equivalent of an opening bid and partner has made a jump. Therefore, slam is in the offing. However, you cannot force the issue because you could have two or more fast losers in diamonds and partner's heart values won't be carrying their full weight. Inform partner of your interest with a cue-bid of four clubs, but go no further than four spades unless partner cooperates strongly.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AJ854 ♡6 ◇95 ♣109852
The bidding has proceeded:

West	North	East	South
1 ♡	Dble	4 ♡	?

What action do you take?
A.—Aggressive bidding by the enemy has disrupted the normal flow of communications for your side. You do not have much in the way of high cards but, opposite a takeout double, your hand has tremendous trick-taking possibilities. As a rule of thumb, when you have a 5-5-2-1 shape and partner has made an informatory double indicating support for both of your suits, bid twice as much as your point-count dictates. Here, a bid of four spades is well within your reach.

Q.4—North-South vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡A10654 ◇93 ♣KJ852
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	3 ◇*	?

What action do you take?
A.—Sometimes preempts accomplish their purpose—that's why people continue to use them. East's jump to three diamonds on this hand has made life difficult for South. South's hand just isn't good enough for a free bid at the three- or four-level. He should pass and hope that his partner can take some action. If it turns out that the opponents have talked you out of something, that is the price you occasionally have to pay for a sound bidding structure.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ83 ♡95 ◇82 ♣AJ1076
Partner opens the bidding with one diamond. What do you respond?
A.—Regardless of whether you play four- or five-card major suit opening bids, you should respond two clubs. Do not make the "cheap" response of one spade on a hand where you are strong enough to bid naturally. Besides, one spade may not be all that economical. If opener rebids two diamonds, you would have to show your second suit at the three-level!

Q.6—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠K95 ♡AQ62 ◇A7 ♣A1095
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	3 ♠	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—You don't know whether partner is interested in game or slam, and you don't really care. You could hardly have a better hand for him—all primes, control of every suit and a ruffing value. Bid four clubs. That establishes spades as trumps and at the same time shows a maximum no trump with first-round control in clubs. If partner is interested in slam, he will go on from there; if not, he will sign off at four spades.

Looking for safety

A Governor's Task Force on Traffic Safety has proposed sweeping changes intended to make it safer for motorists to travel the state's highways. It's about time; too many people die needlessly on Texas streets and highways each year.

Recommendations of the task force include such common-sense proposals as raising the legal drinking age to 21, banning drinking while driving, requiring child-safety seats for children under 4 years old, stricter penalties for those convicted of driving while intoxicated and returning to the requirement that motorcyclists wear helmets while riding.

The recommendations are not the result of an overnight study of the traffic safety problem threatening Texas motorists. Unfortunately much blood has been spilled to bring these recommendations to the forefront.

Society must bear the blame for the carnage on our highways these days. Texans have been too permissive with those who imbibe to the point of intoxication and then try to operate a vehicle, those who play "Russian roulette" behind the wheel of an automobile.

Figures from the Midland office of the Texas Department of Public Safety indicate just how tragic is the highway death toll. During 1982, a total of 4,701 people died on Texas streets and highways. The previous year saw 4,424 people lose their lives. And those figures address only the death toll, not the vast number of Texans and other motorists who bear the scars — mental and physical — of the traffic accidents.

While not all of the state's traffic deaths are directly attributable to drinking drivers, DPS officials estimate that "at the very least" 25-30 percent, and probably more, of the deaths involve drinking drivers.

It's difficult to say what will be the result of the task force's recommendations. It did recommend that the 1983 Legislature look at the traffic safety situation and take steps to make driving on the state's highways safer in a number of respects. We agree with that recommendation. For too long now our society has allowed the traffic safety situation to worsen with no meaningful effort being made to reverse the trend. Now it's time to get serious about stopping the highway tragedy in any way possible.

A new war on drugs

The crime problem has a national and international aspect that lies beyond the reach of state and local enforcement agencies which deal with only its most visible results. This is the traffic in illicit drugs and narcotics and the hidden network of smugglers and suppliers it supports.

We are pleased to hear President Reagan announce a new, concerted federal effort to attack the drug traffic. Its success could lead to a significant reduction in local crime and, equally important, a reduction in the human misery of addiction on which the drug trafficker thrives.

The president's plan calls for a group of federal "task forces," which will see federal investigators and prosecutors mounting a comprehensive strategy against major drug dealers within their assigned regions.

This is in line with a reorganization last year that saw the Drug Enforcement Administration incorporated into the Federal Bureau of Investigation. It is apparent Attorney General William French Smith has detected a fragmentation of federal enforcement efforts where drugs and organized crime are concerned.

Mr. Reagan will need congressional support in the way of a $200 million appropriation for staffing the drug task forces with new personnel. The effort will not have to make much of a dent in the illicit drug racket to justify that expense.

Our society pays and pays again for drug abuse and narcotic addiction — only beginning with the estimated $80 billion siphoned from the productive economy by the underworld. Add to that the losses from crimes committed by addicts to support their habits, and the welfare costs for families shattered by drug problems. We can well afford to spend a little more to go after the smugglers and wholesalers who make it all possible.

Another View:

A 'horrifying' thought

Douglas Fraser, the president of the United Auto Workers, has been warning for some months now that a strike against Chrysler Corp. this year could have "horrifying" consequences. That description does not seem inappropriate but neither, among the union rank and file, does it seem to be necessarily believed. By an overwhelming margin, the membership has rejected the contract that its leaders negotiated with the nation's third-largest auto maker, raising the prospect of a strike in which both the company and its workers could only come out losers.

The demonstrated unhappiness of the Chrysler workers stems from the absence of an immediate hourly wage increase in the contract submitted to them for ratification. Three years ago, with Chrysler on the edge of financial collapse, its employees agreed to wage and benefit concessions worth $1.1 billion to the company. Among other things, that left Chrysler workers with an earnings package about $2.60 an hour less than their counterparts at General Motors and Ford. Now those workers want to start reducing that differential.

The trouble is that Chrysler's cupboard still is pretty bare. Fraser knows that, which is why he reluctantly agreed to the contract the union membership subsequently rejected. As a member of Chrysler's board of directors, a position he won as part of the company concessions made three years ago, Fraser is aware of what the books show.

According to outside analysts, Chrysler could have an operating profit of $20 or $25 million this year, if it has a good fourth quarter. Chrysler, in the proposed contract, has offered to reinstate suspended cost-of-living pay adjustments and to make quarterly lump sum bonus payments to employees when future earnings allow. But it cannot, it insists, afford an hourly wage increase on top of this. And there, for now, matters stand.

The mood of Chrysler workers is understandable. They are earning less than others doing the same work elsewhere in the industry, and they resent it. But even with a lower pay package, the average Chrysler worker last year earned more than $20,000, considerably above the average for all industrial workers. Indeed, the very generous pay and benefit increases demanded by the UAW and agreed to by the auto companies in the past are in part responsible for the trouble American auto makers are in. High labor costs that have not been matched by gains in productivity have helped put the car companies at a competitive disadvantage with foreign cars.

A strike could cost Chrysler up to $45 million a week, erasing in just a few days its entire expected profit for 1982. A prolonged strike would simply be crippling. Chrysler has promised more to its employees when conditions warrant. If anything is clear, it is that a strike will not bring those conditions closer. A strike could instead assure that they will never be realized.

The UAW membership should think again about the sobering consequences of what they are considering.

CHARLEY REESE

Hypocrisy casts Israel as villain

It's certainly good to see Israel off the front pages for a spell. That poor little country catches heck. Let some Christians kill some Moslems and the world is ready to lynch Jews.

Charley Reese

The strange hypocrisy of the world which the massacre of the Palestinians in Beirut revealed is easily illustrated. From the first day, the identities of the Lebanese killers has been known, but no one has brought them to justice; they've all been too busy blaming Israelis. The only thing the Israelis are guilty of is believing that the Lebanese Christians wouldn't act like mad dogs on a legitimate mission of routing out PLO fighters who stayed behind and hid in the camps.

Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin is like an American college football coach with a losing team. Everybody in the world knows how to do his job better than he does and nothing he does is right as far as his critics are concerned. It is extremely unfair to a true statesman who negotiated the first peace ever in the Middle East and made enormous concessions in order to achieve it.

Begin's true problem is that he will not give away the store in order to please the fanatic, intransigent Arab sheiks who own the oil which some of our multinational oil companies sell. The sheiks pressure the oil companies and the banks and they in turn pressure the State Department which pressures Begin.

What most Americans do no understand, certainly not Ronald Reagan, is that when the Arabs say they want to solve the Palestinian problem, they do not mean simply establishing a Palestinian state on the West Bank. They mean eliminate Israel. The original United Nations partition plan set up a Palestinian state on the West Bank but the Arabs rejected it. From 1948 until 1967, the Arabs controlled the West Bank and they did not set up a Palestinian state or a federation with Jordan. They simply stood on the border and shot at Israelis.

If the Reagan Administration were truly interested in pursuing peace instead of profits in the Middle East, there is a simple way to do it. You just visit each Arab country and confront the head of state, in public with the TV cameras on him, and ask him: "Will you recognize Israel's right to exist behind some kind of borders? Yes or no. No double talk. Just answer the question." The answer will be no.

The only Arab leader who has ever said that was Anwar Sadat and as soon as he did, the Israelis made peace. The Israelis have been trying to make peace for 34 years; it's the Arabs, not the Israelis, who are intransigent and unwilling to compromise. Sadat, of course, was ostracized and finally murdered by his Arab "brothers" for the crime of wanting peace. Reagan's peace plan calls for Israel giving up the West Bank and half of Jerusalem, but the Arabs rejected it because it also calls for them to make peace with what's left of Israel. The cruel irony is that the only hope for peace is for the United States to put pressure on the Arabs, but this we have never done and will not do because of the interests of the banks and the multinational corporations.

Secretary of State George Schultz, fresh from the Bechtel Corp., which practically built Saudi Arabia, thinks he has a clever plan to force the Israelis to give away the West Bank and half of Jerusalem. It will never happen, not under Begin nor under any other Israeli leader. Moreover, poor Mr. Schultz is going to get his introductory course in Arab intransigence just trying to untangle Lebanon.

And while he's diddy-bobbing over there in something that doesn't really concern us, the crazy ayatollah in Iran is very likely to burn the Persian Gulf oil fields. In that case, we shall have to be careful that Reagan doesn't involve us in a war in the wrong place at the wrong time for the wrong reason.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Bigwig's play makes the taxpayers pay

WASHINGTON — When someone utters that famous stage line, "Tennis, anyone?" count on John W. Hernandez Jr. to spring into action — even if it means flying to San Francisco to play in a tournament.

Jack Anderson

This athletic zeal would be commendable if it weren't for one thing: Hernandez is deputy administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, and his tennis junket was paid for by the taxpayers. He even used a government car to get to the tennis match, and his minions pressed a reluctant EPA supply clerk into service as his personal chauffeur.

For the record, Hernandez did attend several meetings and delivered a speech during his San Francisco sojourn. It appears, however, that the tennis tournament was the highlight of his trip.

The story has a familiar ring to it. Veterans Administration chief Robert Nimmo resigned recently after the press exposed his illegal use of a government limousine and chauffeur, and the lavish redecoration of his private office in defiance of an explicit presidential directive forbidding such extravagance.

Other Reagan administration muckamucks have drawn deserved criticism for their tendency to treat their official positions like personal fiefdoms. Interior Secretary James Watt used Robert E. Lee's mansion in Arlington Cemetery for a couple of private Christmas parties. A lesser Interior poohbah used official trips to pursue his hunting-and-fishing hobby. EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch hired personal bodyguards and put her children's babysitter on the government payroll.

Hernandez' tennis tournament fits the same depressing pattern. An internal report by the EPA's inspector general tells the story. My associate Lucette Lagnado obtained a copy.

On Nov. 19-20, 1981, Hernandez was in San Francisco for the annual convention and tennis tournament of the National Association of Water Companies. Except for Hernandez, the I.G. investigators reported, all tennis players "were executives of privately owned utility companies."

Hernandez was the association's guest speaker on the second day of the get-together. This allowed the I.G. report to say that "all the tennis match participants, including Hernandez, mixed business discussions with recreation throughout the afternoon."

Hernandez was put up at the Hyatt Hotel on Union Square. The tournament was at the San Francisco Tennis Club about a dozen blocks away. But the EPA official evidently didn't want to tire himself out by walking, or endanger his forehand by hailing a cab.

A government car and driver were put at his disposal. A supply clerk named M.C. Toliver was recruited for chauffeur duty, even though, he later told investigators, he was "extremely busy ... (and) really didn't have time to assist in this manner."

Toliver was instructed to wear a suit and tie for his two-day stint as chauffeur, which also involved driving a "Mr. Williams" — presumably Jim Williams, an official of the Southwest Suburban Water Co., which was coordinating the tournament, according to the I.G. report.

Toliver's work piled up back in the supply room while he was dragooned into playing chauffeur for the Washington bigshot and his friend from the water company, but at least he got a bread-and-butter note from Hernandez the following month. The EPA official thanked Toliver for a "super job in transporting me around during my recent visit," and added: "I feel that the day was quite successful." Hernandez reportedly won several games.

Footnote: An EPA spokesman said that Hernandez traveled to San Francisco on official business. The tennis tournament, he suggested, was incidental. The spokesman claimed that Hernandez had been cleared of any wrongdoing by his immediate superior — EPA Administrator Anne Gorsuch.

The regional EPA official who authorized the car and driver, Sonia Crow, told investigators that Hernandez "had a very heavy schedule and, not knowing the area, it was the only way he could make all of his meetings."

Crow added that Hernandez had worked hard while in San Francisco, according to the I.G. report, "and if he used the government vehicle to get to a few hours of exercise, she had no objections ... In her opinion, the Inspector General's office has devoted too many hours already to such a 'petty' investigation."

TIMBER-R-R-R!: Kenneth Ford, a Northwest lumber baron ranked as the 43rd richest man in the country, would be the principal beneficiary of a bailout scheme being shepherded through Congress by Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Ore.

The legislation would let companies that hold long-term contracts to cut timber on federal land terminate them without penalty because of hardships they are suffering from the depressed state of the housing industry. They could then bid for government timber at a lower price and make a killing when business eventually picks up.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, managed to put a personal "hold" on the timber bailout, along with other last-minute giveaways being rammed through the Senate in the closing days of the session. He wanted to amend the bill to give relief only to hard-hit smaller timber companies. Hatfield, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, is expected to bring the bill up for consideration in next month's lame-duck session of Congress.

Ford, whose Roseburg Lumber Co. has almost 1.3 billion board feet of federal timber under contract in addition to its own gigantic reserves, was recently listed by Forbes magazine as personally worth half a billion dollars. His company would get $156 million in help from the bailout legislation — about 65 percent more than the next largest recipient of this corporate welfare, Boise Cascade.

Footnote: Hatfield's office pointed out that the timber industry is in shaky condition, and added that Ford has pumped some of his own money into Roseburg to keep it going. A Roseburg spokesman has said that without help, many federal timber contracts will go into default.

INSIDE REPORT:

Some fear Reagan's campaigning hurts GOP

WASHINGTON — Republican telephone tracking of voters in key congressional races the weekend of Oct. 16/17 showed serious Democratic gains, raising questions as to whether President Reagan's late campaigning is doing more harm than good.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

Some GOP political consultants believe the Republican slide is purely the result of economic hard times, a force that presidential intervention cannot deflect. But others believe Reagan is doing more harm than good, insulting the intelligence of voters by claiming that all economic woes derive from the Democrats. In milder language, one important consultant has conveyed those views to the White House.

The president's role is the subject of debate within the White House. Pollster Richard Wirthlin has urged restraint and contended that Reagan should be more "presidential" in his campaigning. But the senior staff has written Wirthlin off as a worrywart and forged ahead with hard-nosed partisan campaigning.

REAGAN NIXES FILM

Presidential counselor Edwin Meese III has refused Republican National Committee funding for the film, "Countdown for America," that spells out dangers of the nuclear "freeze" movement on the Nov. 2 ballot in nine states.

The 25-minute film, produced by the pro-defense American Security Council, is low-key but positive in laying out dangers for the U.S. in any nuclear freeze without iron-clad on-site inspection to guarantee Soviet compliance. Short of funds to distribute the film, the council proposed a partnership with the Republican National Committee to give it maximum pre-election exposure.

Meese brought the film into the White House, where it was viewed by top officials. The verdict: Despite the film's high quality, there would be no official help from the National Committee. No reason was given, but in fact the president decided the freeze issue had lost some of its punch and the film could hurt some pro-freeze Republican candidates.

LEHRMAN'S CALCULATED RISK

In a calculated risk, New York Republican governor candidate Lewis Lehrman is airing negative radio commercials spotlighting the frequent interrogation of the Democratic nominee for lieutenant governor, Alfred DelBello, before secret grand jury proceedings.

The risk: Attacking DelBello may offend Italian Republicans, who are faced with an all-Italian Democratic ticket of Lt. Gov. Mario Cuomo for governor and DelBello, Westchester County executive, for lieutenant governor. Republican demands that DelBello reveal the contents of his testimony were escalated by their inclusion in the radio ads.

The risk of losing Italian votes was balanced by Lehrman's need to take votes away from Cuomo. According to polls, Cuomo has failed to pull away but Lehrman has been unable to close the gap.

TEAMSTER TANGLE

Although local Teamsters in Peoria, Ill., are adamantly committed to the defeat of Rep. Bob Michel, the big union's threat to him is being neutralized by the House Republican leader's friends at Teamster headquarters in Washington.

At this writing, not one cent has been channeled from the Teamster National Political Action Committee to Doug Stephens, Michel's labor-backed Democratic opponent. Robert Barker, the anti-Michel president of the Peoria local, has engaged in one long-distance telephone shouting match with Teamster political director Dave Sweeney in Washington.

At stake is a maximum $5,000 contribution from the Teamsters that would help Stephens' desperate effort for an 11th-hour television offensive against Michel.

On Oct. 25, 1586, Mary, Queen of Scots, was sentenced to death.

On this date:

In 1936, Germany and Italy formed the Rome-Berlin Axis.

In 1951, negotiations for a Korean War armistice resumed at Panmunjom.

In 1971, the United Nations General Assembly voted to admit mainland China and expel Taiwan.

In 1973, the United States ordered its military forces on world-wide precautionary alert because of concern that the Soviet Union was planning to send troops to the Middle East.

Ten years ago: The United States agreed in principle to support a United Nations arms embargo against South Africa.

Five years ago: A storm that swept across the Fijis took 23 lives and caused heavy damage.

Lax security charged following reports that translator was spy

LONDON (AP) — Security at Britain's supposedly super-secret electronic spy center, a facility shared with the United States, is "just about good enough to fend off a well-meaning drunk," a retired employee was quoted as saying.

The charges of lax security, attributed to former employee Alex Lawrie in today's editions of the Guardian newspaper, followed a New York Times report Sunday quoting unidentified U.S. intelligence officials as saying a Soviet spy breached security at the Government Communications Headquarters in Cheltenham.

The Times, still quoting American officials, said British intelligence had determined that Geoffrey Arthur Prime, a former translator of Russian at the center who was charged last summer with espionage, was responsible for one of the longest and potentially most damaging Kremlin penetration of Western intelligence since World War II.

The report said Prime, 44, worked at Cheltenham from 1968 to 1977 and supplied Moscow with a stream of sensitive information indicating which Soviet codes had been broken in the West and which Soviet broadcast frequencies were being monitored.

Thus, the Times said, the Soviets were able to change their codes and frequencies to protect their secrets and may have used the monitored channels to supply bogus information to the West.

Britain's Home Office, which is responsible for domestic affairs, the Foreign Office and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's office all declined comment on the Times report.

Britain's terse announcement of Prime's arrest last July did not say who Prime allegedly had spied for, but the prosecutor said the charges were "of the gravest possible nature."

Because Prime is awaiting trial, British newspapers were barred from discussing the case and made no mention of Prime in picking up The New York Times' account.

The Cheltenham facility reportedly works closely with the U.S. National Security Agency and the intelligence gathering networks of Canada and Australia.

Although the British government has never officially acknowledged its existence, press reports have said Cheltenham's computers are used to break Soviet military and diplomatic codes and analyze military, diplomatic, international and commercial radio, telephone, telex and computer traffic.

Describing security lapses at the center, Lawrie was quoted by the liberal Guardian as saying internal security officers at Cheltenham, in western England, ignored warnings from the staff and were more concerned with ritual than efficiency.

"I always had the impression that the Russians knew a great deal more about GCHQ than I did," Lawrie was quoted as saying. "It's such a huge place. It's inconceivable that the information wouldn't get out. Infiltration seems to be par for the course."

Lawrie said he worked as a linguist with about 10,000 other staff members at Cheltenham for 22 years before retiring last December. He is now a councilman in that town, 109 miles northwest of London.

In one incident, he said a team of decorators, who did not have security clearances, were given the run of the center at night and rifled desks for cigarettes and books. Afterwards, he said, security officials told the regular staff that the security men were not responsible for personal possessions.

"We couldn't seem to get it through to them that this was a dreadful breach of security," Lawrie was quoted as saying.

Lawrie also claimed passes were not checked closely and one man got in with his wife's identity card.

An opposition Labor Party lawmaker zeroed in on the reported intelligence breach, saying he would ask Mrs. Thatcher to make an urgent accounting to Parliament.

"What we are concerned about is whether or not ... our national security is at risk," Laborite Ted Leadbitter told The Associated Press in a telephone interview Sunday.

A spokesman for Mrs. Thatcher said the prime minister would consider Leadbitter's suggestion.

"American trust in the British intelligence service is in jeopardy" the Conservative Daily Telegraph reported today.

It was Leadbitter's questions in Parliament that led to the 1979 exposure of Queen Elizabeth II's art historian Anthony Blunt as a Soviet spy.

Britain's intelligence services have been plagued oy allegations of treason and incompetence since the 1951 defections to Moscow of Guy Burgess, a British agent in Washington, and Donald MacLean, a high-level operative in London.

In 1963, Harold "Kim" Philby, then a British spy in Beirut, also fled to Moscow, apparently after being tipped that his cover was blown.

Later in 1963, Blunt confessed that he had been recruited as a Soviet spy during his years at Cambridge University. The confession was not made public until 1979.

Mrs. Thatcher ordered a yearlong review of British spy services in 1981 following allegations that the late Sir Roger Hollis, former head of Britain's MI-5 counter-espionage agency, was one of the Kremlin's top agents during the 1940s.

Ironically, the latest flap came as the government was celebrating the defection to the West of a man described in press reports as a senior member of the Soviet Union's KGB spy agency, Vladimir Kuzichkin. The Home Office said Kuzichkin, who last served as a vice consul at the Soviet Embassy in Tehran, Iran, was granted asylum in Britain during the past few days.

Chapman Pincher, an intelligence affairs reporter for the Conservative Daily Express, claimed today that British officials leaked details about Kuzichkin's defection to "offset some impending disaster," a reference to the Cheltenham affair.

Cheltenham center 'eyes, ears of West'

CHELTENHAM, England (AP) — The British government's Cheltenham espionage center, target of what press reports say was the most successful Soviet intelligence infiltration to date, is an important part of the West's electronic eyes and ears.

Nestled in the rolling Cotswold hills 1½ hours' drive west of London, Her Majesty's Government Communications Headquarters is the center of a worldwide network of spy bases, surveillance ships, planes, satellites and listening antennas. They provides raw material for intelligence analysts not only in Britain, but also in the United States, Australia and Canada.

Every day, according to published reports, its 10,000 employees sift through millions of words of intercepted tape recordings and transcripts from telephone, telex, television and computer transmissions from foreign military installations, government ministries and embassies, corporations and individuals.

The daily harvest of information is sent to Britain's MI-5 and MI-6 intelligence services, the U.S. National Security Agency, the Australian Defense Signals Division and the Canadian Communications Branch of the National Resource Council.

The National Security Agency, based in Fort Meade, Md., and considered the United States' most secret intelligence agency, also is involved in sensitive code-breaking work and monitoring of communications through a vast array of intelligence-gathering devices of its own.

Police won't say if body that of Irish kidnap victim

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Police found a dead man in a West Belfast alley early today, but refused to say whether it was the body of a Roman Catholic reported kidnapped by vengeance-seeking Protestant extremists.

"We have a missing man and we have a body, you can put two and two together," said a police spokesman, who would not elaborate. The spokesman, who was not identified under government ground rules, did not give the cause of death.

It was not immediately known when authorities would reveal the identity of the body, found in Belfast's Shankill Road district only hours after the midnight Sunday execution deadline reportedly set by the outlawed Protestant Ulster Volunteer Force for 48-year-old Joseph Donegan.

Anonymous callers, claiming to represent the Protestant terror group, were quoted by relatives as saying Donegan would die if the Catholic-dominated Irish Republican Army did not release a Protestant militiaman, Thomas Cochrane.

Earlier, in a rare show of unity across Northern Ireland's sectarian divide, the families of the kidnapped men joined in a broadcast plea for the lives of their loved ones.

Cochrane, a 55-year-old part-time sergeant in the mainly-Protestant Ulster Defense Regiment, was kidnapped Friday morning as he drove to work on his motorcycle in South Armagh, an area heavily infested by IRA guerrillas on the border with the Irish Republic.

Donegan disappeared hours later after leaving a neighborhood bar in Catholic West Belfast. A caller to a Belfast radio station said he was taken by Protestant extremists, and police said the abduction had the earmarks of a sectarian kidnapping.

"My mother and I are extremely concerned about my father's life," Cochrane's son, Glenn, said in a plea broadcast Sunday by a Belfast radio station.

"We appeal most earnestly for his release and also to the people who are holding Mr. Donegan, to do nothing which would jeopardize my father's safe return," he said.

The same radio station then broadcast a message from Donegan's wife, Eileen, who said:

"We are sitting here anxious and we just want them home...I beg of you, please, whoever you are, listen to me tonight. For if you could see me and my family, what we are going through, you would know the plight that we are in."

Canon Paidraigh Murphy, a leading Catholic cleric in Belfast, said an anonymous caller claiming to represent Donegan's Protestant captors set the midnight deadline in a phone call. He quoted the caller as saying Donegan would be killed unless Irish Republican Army guerrillas freed Cochrane.

Sources close to the IRA said a maverick band of militants from the organization's Provisional wing abducted Cochrane without the approval of their superiors. The IRA is battling to end British rule in the Protestant-dominated province and unite it with the mainly Catholic Irish Republic.

A guerrilla statement issued over the weekend said Cochrane, the father of seven, was being interrogated about "serious crimes against the nationalist (Catholic) people."

Donegan's journalist daughter, Anne, 23, said the Provisional IRA contacted her through a mediator from Sinn Fein, the movement's political wing, saying they were prepared to arrange Cochrane's release if he were still alive.

The mediator, claiming the intensive security search was preventing his group from getting in touch with the abductors, asked that the hunt be called off, she said.

Christie Brinkley doesn't worry about getting 'old and wrinkled'

NEW YORK (AP) — Christie Brinkley says she doesn't worry about getting "old and wrinkled" because she always will have things to do besides modeling.

Aging "is not my nightmare," she said in an interview in the Nov. 1 issue of People magazine. "It's just happening, little by little, day by day. It doesn't bother me because I have so many other things I want to do and those have nothing to do with the way I look."

Miss Brinkley, 27, who has been on more than 150 magazine covers and is working on a beauty and health book, said, "I can be a photographer and be old and wrinkled. I can be an artist, old and wrinkled; I can be an actress, old and wrinkled."

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Conductor Zubin Mehta and his New York Philharmonic brought a little harmony to the United Nations, where discord has been a frequent visitor.

Mehta observed the irony.

"One thought crosses my mind — that on such an auspicious occasion, you consider that we can play harmony and you can't," he told the cheering audience at the end of Sunday's "U.N. Day" performance, celebrating the 37th anniversary of the charter that established the world organization.

U.N. Secretary General Javier Perez de Cuellar observed earlier that 1982 was "a year when discord more often than not triumphed over harmony" at the world body.

The orchestra opened with "Sequoia," inspired by the giant California redwoods and written by Joan Tower, assistant professor of music at Bard College in New York City, and ended with "Pictures At An Exhibition," by Soviet composer Modest Moussorgsky.

The other composition was Beethoven's "Concerto in D Major for Violin," with Israeli-born Pinchas Zuckerman as soloist.

HOUSTON (AP) — Indian president Zail Singh will end his nearly month-long stay at the Texas Heart Institute this week to return to New Delhi, a spokesman says.

Singh, 66, who underwent bypass surgery Oct. 6 at the Houston hospital, will leave Friday, a spokesman said Sunday. Heart transplant pioneer Dr. Denton Cooley performed the operation.

Singh is "doing very well," said a member of his staff who asked not to be identified. "He will be leaving on the 29th and returning to New Delhi on the 31st after a day in New York."

Singh was elected president last July after serving as minister of home affairs in Prime Minister Indira Gandhi's Cabinet.

BALTIMORE (AP) — Archbishop William Borders, once denounced by homosexual leaders for opposing a local gay rights bill, has been cheered after celebrating Mass with a group of gay activists.

Borders, spirtual leader of Baltimore's Roman Catholic archdiocese, was among seven priests at the special Mass on Saturday night before about 200 members of Dignity, a group of homosexual men and women and supporters of homosexual rights.

Borders addressed the group with a serious face, but when he completed his sermon, sustained emotional applause helped him break into a smile.

"You, as members of Dignity, must always appreciate the reality that you are members of the total community of God's people on a pilgrimage through time," he said.

"I congratulate you on the support and community that you have rendered to each other," he told the group of activists from New York, Washington, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and Harrisburg, Pa.

Dignity's local chairman, Don Miller, said Border's participation "gives us strength as we try to intensify our ministry to gay persons in the city of Baltimore."

Times hit with 'poison Tylenol technique'

NEW YORK (AP) — The New York Times has asked police to help find out who delivered to newsstands a bogus newspaper insert slamming influential attorney Roy Cohn, Mayor Edward Koch and Republican gubernatorial candidate Lewis Lehrman.

The newspaper quickly confiscated about 6,000 copies of the publication, headlined "Profiles of The Times," Sunday after learning they had been delivered to news dealers Saturday night.

The Times printed a front-page notice to readers in late editions Sunday advising them that the pamphlet was unauthorized.

But Elliot Sanger, corporate relations manager for the Times, said some of the phony sections might have reached Times readers after newsstand operators, believing they were legitimate, inserted them in the Sunday edition.

"If we could find out who did this, we could try to prosecute," Sanger said. "It's an attempt to create a section that looks like The New York Times, and The New York Times is copyrighted."

"If we could find out who did this, we could try to prosecute," Sanger said. "It's an attempt to create a section that looks like The New York Times, and The New York Times is copyrighted."

In today's editions, John D. Pomfret, executive vice president and general manager, said the newspaper would pursue "this outrage in consultation with law-enforcement authorities."

"This is the poison Tylenol technique applied to newspapers," said Times spokesman Leonard Harris, referring to the insertion of cyanide in capsules of the pain-killer that led to seven deaths in the Chicago area.

Cohn, a counsel to the late Sen. Joseph McCarthy during his 1950s communist hunts, was the principal target of the attacks.

The section contained an interview, purportedly by ABC-TV's Barbara Walters, in which Cohn's McCarthy days, private life and jet-set clients were discussed.

"It is a total fraud. There was never any interview by Barbara Walters," Cohn said. "It's made up, top to bottom. They're masters of forgery, of fraud, there's no question about that."

Miss Walters also denied she had interviewed Cohn.

Cohn also figured in bogus articles about Koch and Lehrman. One claimed that Cohn engineered Koch's defeat in the September Democratic gubernatorial primary, which was won by Lt. Gov. Mario Cuomo. Another article said Lehrman made deals with Cohn and others to bring casino gambling and supermarket liquor sales to the state.

Cohn said he didn't know whether he would take legal action if the person responsible for the phony section is found.

"You always get down to the question when you're dealing with people this paranoid: Are you playing into their hands when you sue for libel?"

Cohn has been the target of previous published attacks. A bogus magazine called "Now East," distributed last year, contained attacks on Cohn, including cartoons implying Cohn was a homosexual. Richard DuPont, 48, later was convicted of harassment in that case.

A spokesman for Lehrman, John Buckley, said he didn't believe the bogus section had anything to do with the political campaign but was designed as an attack on Cohn.

The 12-page section also contained advertisements, apparently reproduced from other publications.

One advertiser, David Bates, executive vice president of a condominium company, said he paid for an ad in the real estate section of the Times and knew nothing about the bogus section.

'La Venganza Del Alamo' chili wins world chili cookoff in Los Angeles

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bill Pfeiffer got his private revenge for the Alamo and took home $25,000 this weekend, not bad work for a Texan who had to find a quick substitute for armadillo meat in his prize-winning chili recipe.

"I'm probably the most excited person you talked to all day," Pfeiffer said after his chili, called "La Venganza Del Alamo," won Sunday's 16th Annual World Championship Chili Cookoff at Universal Studios.

The San Antonio computer specialist received a $25,000 check from Anheuser-Busch Inc., the brewery that sponsored the contest along with the International Chili Society. Among many other things, the chili recipe calls for three cans of beer.

"Thousands of Texans will be excited when I go home," said Pfeiffer, who won the 1980 contest with the same recipe.

"It wasn't real hot, but it was real good," Universal Studios publicist Dan Lubin said of the award-winning red mixture. "It was real even, not terribly spicy and had an even kind of kick."

About 10,000 people turned out to watch 66 chefs from around the world work their chili magic with ingredients ranging from alligator meat to beef butts.

Pfeiffer, who paid tribute to Texas oldtimer Truett Airheart for his recipe, decided to release it to the world.

It calls for one tablespoon of oregano, two tablespoons of paprika, 11 tablespoons of chili powder, four tablespoons of cumin and four tablespoons of crushed beef bouillon.

Voters in four states to consider horse racing, video gambling

By The Associated Press

In four states where the riffling of Bible pages is more common than the shuffling of cards, voters will be thinking horse racing, blackjack and video gambling games on Election Day.

Gambling backers in those states — Montana, South Dakota, Minnesota and North Dakota — say it would be a boon at a time when agriculture, mining and timber industries are slumping.

But opponents, led by church groups, insist that recession or no, gambling is still the devil's work, breeding family problems and destroying the heartland's tranquil way of life.

North Dakota voters will decide whether to repeal a year-old law permitting pull-tabs and $2-a-bet-limit blackjack. Under that law, proceeds go for charitable purposes. If Measure 6 passes, only bingo and raffles would be legal.

Polls predict a close contest.

The gross income from this first year was $18.5 million, more than $17 million of which came from blackjack and pull-tabs, which are cards bearing concealed numbers. A gambler buys a card, pulls a tab to reveal the number and checks it against a posted list of winning numbers.

After state taxes and expenses, the remaining $11.4 million went to causes including public television, a multiple sclerosis foundation and the Fargo-Moorhead Civic Opera.

Meanwhile, bumper stickers are appearing in Minnesota, North Dakota's eastern neighbor, that read "Another Taxpayer For Horseracing." If Amendment 3 passes, Minnesota would become the 31st state to permit on-track parimutuel betting on horse races. Foes are led by a Baptist church-based group called Citizens Alert for Liberty and Morality (CALM). Passage of an amendment in Minnesota requires a 60 percent plurality.

In South Dakota, Amendment D would clear the way for coin-operated machines, bingo, lotteries and cards in any city or county that voted for it in local elections. If the amendment passes, the state would set betting limits, and resulting fees and taxes would go to the state's general fund. Church groups oppose it, while tourism, hotel and motel interests especially in the western part of the state have banded together as Citizens for South Dakota to back the amendment.

An opposition leader, the Rev. Richard Ward of Rapid City, said: "I'm a native South Dakotan and just feel that having lived all my life here and appreciating the life style I certainly didn't think we need to open it up to casino-type, wide-open gambling."

But in Watertown, located in a portion of the state some call the "Bible Belt," a straw poll said 51 percent of those responding favored the limited gambling amendment, with 45 percent opposed and the rest undecided.

O'Neill may be released soon from hospital, spokesman says

BEDFORD HILLS, N.Y. (AP) — Film star Jennifer O'Neill could be released in a week from the hospital where she is recovering from a gunshot wound, a hospital spokesman says.

Police hope to question the actress today about the shooting Friday, which has been described as self-inflicted and accidental.

Miss O'Neill, who starred in "The Summer of '42," was listed in good condition today at Northern Westchester Hospital in Mount Kisco, where she was recuperating from a bullet wound to the abdomen.

The New York Post reported today that the accident occurred when the actress was cleaning a .38-caliber handgun.

"I just don't want to talk about it," Miss O'Neill told the Post when contacted at the hospital.

Miss O'Neill was brought to the hospital at 6:36 p.m. Friday after telephoning for help. She had been found in her bedroom, bleeding heavily.

She was out of the operating room by 8 p.m., said Armando Galella, a hospital spokesman.

Galella said Miss O'Neill's prognosis is "very good" and she may be released in a week to 10 days.

Detective Charles Sammann would not discuss why Miss O'Neill had the gun, who owned it, or whether it was registered.

Marilyn Reiss, a spokeswoman for Miss O'Neill, said the actress is a strong advocate of gun control but did not know if she owned a gun.

Police said the bullet passed through Miss O'Neill's body. The gun from which it was fired was recovered.

Miss O'Neill's 22-room, colonial-style mansion where the shooting occurred is surrounded by an eight-foot wire fence and guarded by several attack dogs. She lives with her husband, John Lederer; her daughter, Aimee, 15; and year-old son Reis.

Police initially said Lederer was downstairs when the shooting occurred. However, Officer Ed Collins of the Bedford Town police said Saturday night Lederer was "on the property, but not in the home."

Other people who were at the home at the time have been questioned, but police declined to identify them.

Crowd thins in scramble for second

The second place mob scene in District 4-5A was reduced from five scrambling teams to three Friday, but scanning the remainder of the schedule, the only two teams out of the playoff picture are Abilene and Abilene Cooper. And both could have a lot to stay about the race this weekend.

Midland Lee, San Angelo and Odessa are tied at 3-2 while Midland and Big Spring, wounded, but not necessarily mortally so after Friday night losses, are at 2-3.

The only thing for sure, however, is that Odessa Permian will be going to the state playoffs while, as for the rest, anything can still happen.

District 4-5A Standings

Season

Team	W	L	T	PF	PA
Odessa Permian	8	0	0	305	34
Midland Lee	6	2	0	159	95
San Angelo	6	2	0	144	100
Odessa High	5	3	0	97	60
Big Spring	4	4	0	66	96
Abilene High	3	5	0	91	148
Midland High	3	5	0	49	107
Abilene Cooper	2	6	0	124	184

District

Team	W	L	T	PF	PA
x-Odessa Permian	5	0	0	181	14
Midland Lee	3	2	0	73	65
Odessa High	3	2	0	71	41
San Angelo	3	2	0	57	65
Big Spring	2	3	0	37	78
Midland High	2	3	0	25	65
Abilene High	1	4	0	33	102
Abilene Cooper	1	4	0	79	135

x-Has clinched state playoff berth.

Last Week's Results

Midland Lee 8, Big Spring 7; San Angelo 13, Midland High 0; Odessa Permian 56, Abilene Cooper 14; Odessa High 20, Abilene High 6.

This Week's Schedule

Friday: Abilene Cooper at Midland Lee, Midland High at Abilene High, Odessa High at San Angelo, Big Spring at Odessa Permian. All games at 8 p.m.

WITH, AT WORST, a title-tie clinched, Odessa Permian has been relegated to the role of spoiler with its 5-0, 8-0 record and chances are will spoil things for Big Spring and Odessa, the Panthers final two opponents. The Steers and Bronchos also have San Angelo to contend with.

But if Odessa beats San Angelo this week, that should give Midland Lee a free shot at the No. 2 playoff berth, except.... The Rebels face Abilene Cooper this week and finish against Midland.

THE COUGARS have always been trouble for the Rebels and Coach Spike Dykes has to wonder whether Cooper will be the fangless feline that has lost four-out-of-five district games or the jungle cat that clawed Big Spring, 37-15. This was the same Big Spring team that almost beat Lee Friday night. The Steers had to miss a last period field goal and Lee had to score in the final two minutes and make a two-point conversion to pull it out.

Midland is the defensive titan that could be champ if its offense could move the ball as well inside the 20 as it does outside the 20. The Bulldogs aren't out of it, but catch Abilene, a long time nemesis this week and Lee in the final, a formidable finish.

The two playoff representatives from 4-5A will meet 3-4A foes in bidistrict and right now Lubbock Monterey, 7-0 and 6-0, and Plainview, one game back and heading for a showdown with the Plainsmen this week, are running one-two.

IN 4-5A LAST week, Walter Jones, promoted from the JV just last week, and Greg Woodberry were the heroes of Lee's win over Big Spring. Jones broke a 55-yarder with a third-and-six and 1:40 left and Woodberry ran over the vital two-pointer.

Gregg Thomas' 35-yard bomb to Derrick Campbell on a fourth down was the mortal wound that did in Midland for San Angelo. Mike Troglin geared Permian's 56-14 win over Abilene Cooper, breaking runs of 28, 32 and 10. Cooper did, however, become the first district team to score on Permian, a nine-yard run by Eric Tarr. In fact, Cooper and Permian were tied at 14 after the first period.

Odessa High's Howard Harris broke Abilene's back on the business end of a 68-yard scoring pass from Albert Cruz and then punched in another TD from the two in the Bronchos 20-6. Jim Cottingham also contributed to the OHS margin with a 68-yard run.

Strike Update

Day: 34
Games called off: 70
Games Canceled: 42

PROGRESS OF THE NEGOTIATIONS: Talks were indefinitely suspended Saturday, with federal mediator Sam Kagel returning to his home in San Francisco, 11 days after his role in the talks began. Owners representative Jack Donlan accused union chief Ed Garvey of refusing to bargain (a charge also hurled at the owners by the union) and held out little hope that talks would resume soon. Garvey was more optimistic, saying the talks could resume as early as Sunday night. Kagel said he was available for further negotiations if requested by the parties.

CHANCES FOR SETTLEMENT: The remainder of the season is in jeopardy, with five of the season's 16 weeks already having been affected by the strike. The league says only two of the five games can be made up. The union says the whole schedule and how it will be made up is a negotiable issue. League officials have said at least 12 games would have to be played to save the "integrity" of the season. Garvey insisted that Sargent Karch, counsel for the Management Council, had said the season could still be played in its entirety with the Super Bowl moved back into February. But Donlan disagreed.

DIFFERENCES: Prior to this round of negotiations, the owners had pledged $1.6 billion over a five-year period to cover salaries and benefits. Midway in the talks, however, Donlan said the owners were reducing their offer to reflect losses of revenues suffered during the strike. Management has repeatedly rejected the concept of a fund and of the union's related demand for a fixed percentage of TV revenues.

MONEY LOST SO FAR: After the first two weeks of the strike, the NFL received no revenue from the three major television networks. The owners are counting those two extra weeks of TV money as a loss because it is an advance against next year's television money. ABC, CBS and NBC were to pay the NFL $330 million in 1982, the first year of a five-year, $2.1 billion contract.

The players, who do not have a formal strike fund, lost between $24 million and $27 million in salary during the first two weeks of inactivity.

Ricardo Acuna puts everthing into serve...

Acuna defeats Molino

Survives fall over 6-foot fence

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

Chile's Ricardo Acuna had to come from behind and go over a fence Sunday afternoon to defeat Florida's Armand Molino in three sets to claim the United States Tennis Association Masters crown at the Racquet Club.

Molino broke Acuna's serve in the 12th game of the first set for a 7-5 win but fell behind quickly in the second 0-2 and 1-5 as Acuna evened the match with a 6-2 victory.

Acuna broke Molino's serve twice in the final set for a 6-3 victory to claim the match, but could just as easily have been knocked out of play while returning serve with a 3-1 advantage in the set.

WITH ACUNA leading 30-15 in the fifth game, Molino aimed for the far corner, a shot Acuna couldn't reach. He tried for it, missed and ran to the fence. Instead of hitting the barrier, Acuna went up and over (approximately six feet high), coming down on the other side and falling to his feet and then to his back. He stayed down for a few tense seconds and then popped up and retuned to the court — unhurt. Molino won the point and when he returned, Acuna's joking response was "it was wide."

"I had a bad experience with a fence about 5 years ago," said Acuna. "I reached out to hit a ball and suddenly the fence was in front of me. I tried to stop and my foot went under the fence where it got caught and I ended up with 10 stitches. This time I couldn't stop so I decided to go over. I didn't know I could jump that high."

While Acuna was going through his acrobatics, Molino was standing at the net watching the scene. "I was hoping he wasn't too badly hurt," said Molino and then added, smiling. "Maybe just a little hurt, it might have helped me."

Molino went on to win that game, but couldn't overcome the early lead and gave up match point when Acuna broke his serve with four straight points in the final game.

OF THE two players, Acuna has, by far, more experience. He has played on the Grand Prix tour (the major leagues to the USTA Satellite Tour's minors) and has been a member of Chile's Davis Cup team. He was competing in Midland, as well as on other Masters stops, to "build up my ATP points and my confidence."

He got a little of both with his victory, 19 ATP points for his national ranking and 35 circuit points. With confidence renewed, he's returning to Grand Prix play with his first stop being in South Amevica.

"If I play well, I'll earn more money and more points," said Acuna about the Grand Prix. "I can win as many points in one Grand Prix match as I can in five on the Satellite circuit."

Chaps hold Open House

With the season's opener looming a week ago, Midland College basketball fans will have an opportunity to mix with the national champion Chaparrals as well as the golf and tennis teams at the Al Langford Chaparral Center at 6:30 p.m.

The event will also tip off the reserved-seat ticket sales for the season. This year season-reserve seat tickets will be offered in Section J.

The evening will be capped by an MC scrimmage.

Coach Jerry Stone's cagers open the season at home next Tuesday against Cisco Junior College.

Returning this season are 5-6 Anthony "Spud" Webb, Dallas; 6-3 Rodney McChriston, Memphis, Tenn.; 6-5 Jerome Crowe, Garland; 6-3 Chuck Robinson, San Antonio; 6-7 Chester Smith, Dallas; and 6-4 Justin Morrett, Midland.

MC won the national title with a roster of fewer than 10 players after the Christmas break, a shortcoming that created some harrowing moments in the late stages of virtually every game, but Stone has been working with a 15-player squad in workouts that began back in early Sept.

Newcomers are Earl Wimbush, 5-8, Houston Yates; Ervin Williams, 6-2, Dallas Carter; 6-1½ Carl Warren, Houston Smiley; 6-2 Nate Bufford, Auburn, Ala.; 6-4 Robbie Swegler, El Paso Cathedral; 6-4 Preston Robertson, Midland; 6-5 Jackie Phinnessee, Bolivar, Tenn.; 6-5 Brian Essary, North Mesquite; and 6-9 Ernest Harris, Memphis, Tenn., Christian Brothers High.

Harris is the tallest player MC has ever had.

The Chaps have had a couple of scrimmages and last week faced Wayland College at the Chap Center. Wayland was bolstered by former all-WJCC center Victor Mitchell, but the Chaps still won five of the six 12-minute segements. The most exciting was the first in which MC trailed 19-11 with less than two minutes to play when Webb and Robinson sparked a come back that gave MC a 20-19 edge.

Free soft drinks and coffee will be available during the autograph, picture taking session Tuesday.

Turner bankrolls new pro league

By SCOTT OSTLER
The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

Ted Turner, your typical football fan, was standing on the sidelines enjoying the pre-game festivities, which consisted of Ted Turner shooting the breeze with a handful of sportswriters and broadcasters.

Like a lot of typical fans, Turner missed not having pro football, so he went out and bankrolled himself an entire new league, or circuit, or whatever you want to call it. He is the wallet behind the series of exhibition games featuring NFL Players Association strikers. This was Monday, the circus was in Los Angeles, and Turner was in the center ring.

I've never seen a man having more fun losing a half million dollars, which is how much Turner pays the union to let him televise each game. You couldn't pry the grin off his face with a crowbar.

"I like losing money," Turned chirped. "I wouldn't know what to do if I was making money. My company started making money, so I started the Cable News Network (a big money-loser)."

TURNER CONTINUED: "This is fun, it's like a dream come true! I always wanted to carry football games (on his super station) and they (the NFL) wouldn't let me. Now I've got 'em all. I'm king for a day!"

How long will he continue to bankroll the games?

"Forever! Till it's resolved. We're with the players till the end, giving 'em a little bit of leverage.

"I'm like Robin Hood. We're the little guys fighting the big guys. It's more fun, hiding in the forest, shooting an arrow and then running like hell. Rob from the rich, give to the poor."

I told Turner it seemed ironic that he had been antiunion during last year's baseball strike but now is a big union man.

"This is different," he grinned. "I don't think football players are getting a fair shake. They're making $80,000 or so and baseball players make a quarter million . . . I always said owners were overrated, anyway. You need someone to organize things, sure, but it's nothing to be tht big a cheese about."

TURNER, WHO once took over as manager of his Atlanta Braves baseball team, was asked if he might take this opportunity to appoint himself head coach of one of the NFLPA all-star teams.

"I'm not really qualified to be a football coach," he said modestly. "Managing is easy. You send a guy up to hit, he gets a base hit or he doesn't. Any dummy can manage."

Then Ted Turner, whose cash has wings, flew off to give a pregame speech to the troops.

There was little excitement in the stands and less on the field.

Most of the excitement was in the postgame locker room. The players whooped and hollered and saluted Turner and union solidarity. For a team owner, it wasn't a pretty scene.

Only a few days before, there hadn't been enough players to make up two teams. An emergency delegation of players was dispatched to San Diego to recruit some Chargers. Some Chargers had apparently feared management reprisals if they played, but finally several rallied to the union call and headed north.

Garcia suggests 'opposite' type as Tribe successor

By CHUCK MELVIN

CLEVELAND (AP) — Dave Garcia, a personable, stable baseball man, suggested during his final days as the Cleveland Indians' manager that his replacement "should have a personality that is the opposite of mine."

The man to whom Garcia was referring, and the man the Indians are trying to lure to Cleveland, is Billy Martin.

Volatile, unpredictable, but undeniably capable of putting fans in the ballpark, Martin is now in hiding, probably on a hunting trip. Friends say he is trying to recover from the shock of being fired by a major league club for the sixth time — this time the Oakland A's.

Martin, 54, showed up last Wednesday night, the night of his firing, at a Lake Tahoe casino, where his friend Box Car Willie, the country singer, was performing. The ousted manager drew a laugh from the crowd when he requested the Hank Williams' tune, "I'm So Lonesome I Could Cry."

"I feel Billy is misunderstood more than anything," said Box Car Willie, whose real name is Lecil Travis Martin (no relation). "Billy's career is a lot like Box Car Willie's: The fans love me, but the people in the industry sometimes don't want to accept me."

That seems to have been the case for Martin in Oakland. When he was signed by the A's to a five-year contract in 1980, the franchise was in a shambles. The team had lost 108 games and had drawn just 307,000 people to the park in 1979.

Martin quickly matched an exciting style of play to the young players in Oakland, and the A's started winning — just as Martin's teams had done in Minnesota, Texas, Detroit and New York. The A's also attracted a million more fans in 1981 than they did in 1979.

But this year, as was the case in each of Martin's previous managerial stints, his team slipped.

Late in the year, he reportedly became extremely moody, once tearing up his office and another time leaving the ballpark in tears.

It was that sort of problem that evidently led to his firing this year, just one year after he led the A's to a division title.

Arkansas, SMU on collision course in SWC grid chase

Arkansas and Southern Methodist took giant strides Saturday toward a possible Southwest Conference football showdown of unbeatens Nov. 20 in Texas Stadium.

The sixth-ranked Razorbacks beat Houston for the first time in five years and the first time ever in the Astrodome, 38-3.

The fourth-ranked Mustangs parlayed a freak touchdown pass play and another 100-yard rushing day by Eric Dickerson into a 30-17 victory over Texas in Austin before some 80,000 fans. It was only the second time SMU had beaten Texas in the past 16 seasons.

SMU remains a half game ahead of Arkansas with a 4-0 record to the Hogs' 3-0 ledger.

In other games Saturday, Texas A&M throttled Rice 49-7, Texas Christian bounced Baylor 38-14, and No. 1-ranked Washington finally outlasted Texas Tech 10-3.

AUSTIN — It was right out of Franco Harris' book on immaculate receptions.

Harris' catch after it bounced off an Oakland defender once sent Pittsburgh to the Super Bowl.

SMU hopes Bobby Leach's cloverleaf carom off Texas defender Jitter Fields sends the Mustangs to the Cotton Bowl.

With the game tied 10-10 in the fourth period, quarterback Lance McIlhenny's pass appeared destined to be intercepted by Fields. But the ball went through his hands, glanced off his shoulder pad and the shocked Leach dashed 35 yards to complete a 79-yard run-and-pass touchdown.

"I never saw the ball, I just felt it in my hands," said Leach.

"I should have never thrown the ball," said McIlhenny.

"That's one of the biggest breaks I've seen," said Fields.

SEATTLE — It took a tainted onsides kick to help the nation's No. 1-ranked Washington Huskies subdue the Texas Tech Red Raiders 10-3.

A Washington onsides kick with Washington leading 7-3 apparently was touched by a Husky player before it traveled 10 yards.

But Washington, which scored all of its points in the fourth period after Tech took a 3-0 lead, was allowed to recover the ball and went on to get a game-clinching field goal.

"You guys (reporters) know just as well as I do what happened," said Tech coach Jerry Moore. "A guy (an official) blows it because he's not in position. But there's no need coming down on those guys. They have a hard job."

Tech's Gabriel Rivera was largely responsible for gumming up Washington's offense.

He deflected three passes, sacked the quarterback once, and had eight other tackles.

Said Washington coach Don James: "That No. 69 (Rivera) was a good player ... He looked like superman. I can't recall anyone we've played having that kind of day against us."

FORT WORTH — For Texas Christian, it was a momentous weekend. The Horned Frogs beat Baylor for the first time in nearly a decade and hiked their record to 3-4 for the season.

So what?

Well, it marked the first time in coach F.A. Dry's six years in Froggieville that TCU has won more than two games in a given campaign.

And with a little luck, and another victory or two, he could be awarded an extension of a contract that is unquestionably in jeopardy.

Not since 1973 have the Frogs either (1) beaten the Bears or (2) won three games.

The 38-14 triumph produced such superlatives as these:

-Most points scored by the Horned Frogs at home against a SWC opponent since 1963.

-Three straight triumphs at home (Utah State, Rice, Baylor) has not been accomplished since 1971 (Texas A&M, Texas Tech and Rice).

'Ignorance is bliss', supposedly, when it comes to athletics

By BILL SHIRLEY
The Washington Post
and Los Angeles Times

Does intelligence make an athlete better? Or did Thomas Gray have athletes in mind when he wrote "...ignorance is bliss" and. "'Tis folly to be wise?"

Could Willie Mays have played baseball better with the IQ of a genius? Could Phi Beta Kappas with comparable ath-Erving, shoot better than Jerry West under pressure or throw a slider harder than Steve Carlton?

Historically, athletes have not been noted for mental world and some have won Rhodes scholarships. But Los capacity, although some have made it in the corporate day, say they do not interview many geniuses.

Usually, when athletes are reported to be intelligent or articulate, they are being compared with other jocks, not lawyers, professors, scientists or corporate executives. Some sportswriters call an athlete articulate if he speaks to them.

While the average athlete may be as intelligent as, say, the average sportswriter, there are many "dumb jocks" playing games with marvelous athletic skills. College coaches recruit, and professional teams sign, many athletes with inadequate skills in reading, writing and talking, knowing that incompetence in the classroom and low IQ scores do not have much effect on how well they play a game.

SOME EXPERTS believe that while intelligence is not necessary for athletic skill, it can be an advantage. But, surprisingly, many think athletes can be too smart for their own good.

The mental capacity of athletes is seldom discussed by coaches and managers, so it was surprising to read recently of a startling theory offered by Al McGuire, the former Marquette basketball coach.

"What it takes to be a great player, beyond raw talent," he said, "is self-centeredness and a certain numbness to the crowd. Super-intelligent people can't be superb athletes. They're too aware."

Sports Illustrated printed the quote, which was striking in its candor, under "They Said It," a feature of its "Scorecard" normally reserved for humorous comments.

Was McGuire quoted correctly? Does he really believe intelligence is a handicap in sports?

"I must have said it," the former Marquette coach said by phone for Milwaukee. "I'm never misquoted, just misunderstood."

But McGuire was not misunderstood this time; he meant exactly what he said. "This is just me," he said. "I know the subject is taboo and most people won't talk about it."

MCGUIRE talked about it. "I think the world is run by C students," he said. And with two seconds to go and the score tied in a championship game, he wants the C student on the foul line to take the shot. "Give me the C student and I'll win the championship ring," he said. "I prefer him to the one who sits at the head of the class."

The tendency in that situation, McGuire said, "is for a player to tighten up like a drum. The average student would not be as conscious of the pressure as a Phi Beta Kappa. A good fourth-quarter player is not a Phi Beta Kappa."

McGuire's argument is supported by some who see no connection between mental and athletic performance.

"Intelligence can hinder a player," said Al Campanis, vice president, player personnel, for the Dodgers. "He would be too imaginative and would want to figure things out for himself. I would rather have a good common-sense athlete with quick reflexes."

Dan Quisenberry, Kansas City relief pitcher: "You can't be thinking about too many things. Relief pitchers have to get into a zone of their own. I just hope I'm stupid enough."

Dr. Richard Lister, a clinical and sports psychologist in Costa Mesa, Calif.: "In some athletes, intelligence can be an advantage, but in some it can be a hindrance."

Lister, who is studying the personalities of professional athletes to determine what characteristics contribute to their success ("Intelligence is one of the factors"), said intelligence gets in the way of performance when a smart athlete starts thinking too much. "He can outhink himself," he said.

An intelligent batter, for example, may calculate the wind, score, inning, pitcher, stadium and count to determine what pitch should be thrown. "But the pitcher may not be as smart as the batter and throws something esle," Lister said. By the same reasoning, he said, a smart pitcher may be fooled by a dumb batter.

"IT'S A tricky question," Lister said, "but I agree with McGuire; a super-intelligent kid will be conscious of all the variables that can go wrong in a pressure situation."

Dr. Laurence E. Morehouse, in his book "Maximum Performance," said, "When it comes to performance, knowledge is not always power."

What is necessary for a good performance, he says, "is a pure mind uncluttered by analytical thought" rather than "an analyst investigating in depth every component of performance." Such analytical probing, also known as paralysis of analysis, has ruined more golf scores than a fast backswing.

BUT TO others, including USC football Coach John Robinson, Arkansas athletic director Fran Broyles and San Jose sports psychologist Dr. Thomas Tutko, intelligence is an obvious plus for an athlete. And the Dodgers' Campanis said, "All things being equal, intelligence is a bonus."

Lister: "In the long run, intelligence is an asset. It is not necessary but I would prefer an athlete of above-average intelligence. He will not make the dumb play."

Tutko: "If I had a choice, I'd take the intelligent athlete. And the higher the IQ the greater the asset. A smart athlete is able to handle a spontaneous situation better."

Disagreeing with McGuire, Tutko said he would want an A student to take the final shot — "and think about where he will take it from."

Some athletes, Robinson said, can't adapt visually, some can't listen well and some are slow to react. "An intelligent athlete understands what you want him to do. The more intelligent he is, the easier it is for him to concentrate."

Some athletes compete better than others, Robinson said, "but that has nothing to do with intelligence."

Broyles said he coached many 4.0 and 3.9 students during his career, including at least 20 who went on to get medical degrees.

"Intelligence will help an athlete in football," he said. "Intelligent kids are more coachable. You can carry them further and create more exotic offenses and defenses to confuse your opponents."

Few professional teams seem to agree with Robinson and Broyles. Hardly any give tests for intelligence, preferring instead to concentrate on health, strength, speed and agility.

ONE OF the few teams that gives mental tests is one of the most successful, the Dallas Cowboys. The Cowboys have been criticized for giving players "personality" examinations which include questions to test their intelligence.

When track star Randalo Nehemiah was selling his services to the highest bidder, he told Sports Illustrated he was insulted when the Cowboys gave him the test, which included this question:

'Now I can stop worrying' Huskies James can go back to coaching now that Texas Tech scare is behind UW

By Associated Press

There's plenty of room at the top of the college football rankings, but it's getting harder and harder to stay in the chase.

"Now I can stop worrying about getting the team mentally ready to play. I can go back to coaching again," Washington Coach Don James said after the Huskies, No.1 in The Associated Press poll the last six weeks, had to come from behind in the final period to win a nonconference game from Texas Tech.

"As long as we won, we're 6-0, and that's what counts right now," said Pitt quarterback Dan Marino, who underwent another barrage of "what's wrong with the offense?" questions after the second-ranked Panthers struggled past Syracuse 14-0.

THIRD-RANKED Georgia, No.4 Southern Methodist and fifth-rated Nebraska also had their hands full. You have to go down to sixth-ranked Arkansas, a 38-3 winner over Houston, to find an easy game.

Georgia, normally a ground-oriented team, had to resort to a passing attack to rally from a 14-3 deficit and hold off winless Kentucky 27-14; and Nebraska squeaked past Missouri 23-19 as reserve quarterback Bruce Mathison engineered a 79-yard fourth-quarter drive for the go-ahead touchdown and scored the winner himself two minutes later.

Elsewhere, seventh-ranked Alabama got past Cincinnati 21-3 and No.9 Penn State blanked No.13 West Virginia 24-0, while eighth-rated Arizona State and No.10 North Carolina were idle.

In the Second Ten, No.11 UCLA outslugged California 47-31, No.12 Southern California trounced Oregon State 38-0, No.14 LSU squeezed past South Carolina 14-6, No.15 Notre Dame salvaged a 13-13 tie with winless Oregon, No.18 Clemson defeated North Carolina State 38-29 and No.20 Oklahoma beat Oklahoma State 27-9. Miami and Florida State, the 16-17 teams, were off.

Texas Tech led Washington 3-0, but quarterback Jim Hart fumbled and Husky defensive back Vince Newsome recovered at the losers' 32 to set up Jacque Robinson's 19-yard touchdown run with 9:35 left to play. Robinson, who carried 35 times for 203 yards, also galloped 63 yards to set up Chuck Nelson's 43-yard field goal.

PITT'S Marino tied an NCAA record at Syracuse by throwing a touchdown pass for the 18th game in a row — a 2-yard lob to Julius Dawkins late in the first period — and the Panthers then turned matters over to its rugged defense until Joe McCall's 1-yard TD run in the final period.

"We're satisfied, and the people in Pittsburgh should be satisfied," said Marino, who has been booed by hometown fans this season. Against Syracuse, he completed 24 of 38 passes for 227 yards, but was intercepted three times and has had 17 picked off this season.

Georgia scored all its touchdowns against Kentucky through the air, including a 64-yard screen pass for Herschel Walker's 43rd career touchdown, a Southeastern Conference record. John Lastinger also passed 8 yards to Norris Brown and 2 to Chris McCarthy for TDs.

Nebraska Coach Tom Osborne conceded that "things looked a little bleak" when the Cornhuskers trailed Missouri 13-9 in the fourth quarter and had quarterback Turner Gill on the sidelines with a concussion and running backs Mike Rozier and Roger Craig also banged up.

But Mathison took them on a 79-yard drive, with Mark Schellen scoring from a yard out with 4:46 remaining. Mathison darted 16 yards for a TD with 2:10 left, offsetting a Missouri touchdown pass in the final minute.

Second-string fullback Craig Turner scored twice on 1-yard runs as Alabama defeated Cincinnati for its 57th consecutive victory in Tuscaloosa, where the Crimson Tide hasn't lost since 1963.

Jon Williams' 4-yard run late in the first half and linebacker Scott Radecic's 85-yard interception return in the final period helped Penn State beat West Virginia for the 24th year in a row. Jeff Hostetler, who transferred from Penn State to WVU after the 1980 season, completed 19 of 37 passes for 250 yards, but couldn't get his team into the end zone.

"I'm disappointed, but it's just a football game and it's not everything in life," Hostetler said. "I will say Penn State is a class team. There were no personal fouls and they don't hit late. It wasn't like some of the things I have been exposed to this season."

UCLA'S TOM Ramsey completed 17 of 23 passes for 322 yards and two touchdowns as the Bruins beat California and tailback Anthony Gibson scored on two short runs in Southern Cal's rout of Oregon State.

Alan Risher threw first-half touchdown passes of 6 and 25 yards to Eric Martin as LSU struggled past South Carolina and Mike Johnston's 35-yard field goal with 11 seconds salvaged Notre Dame's tie with Oregon.

Cliff Austin and Jeff McCall each ran for two TDs to lead Clemson past N.C. State, while Oklahoma held Ernest Anderson, the nation's leading rusher, to 59 yards on 20 carries and freshman Marcus Dupree ran for TDs of 30 and 2 yards as the Sooners turned back Oklahoma State.

ELSEWHERE:

—Tom Tunnicliffe threw a school record six touchdown passes in Arizona's 55-7 rout of Pacific and Texas A&M's Gary Kubiak fired five, three to Don Jones, as the Aggies crushed Rice 49-7.

—Northwestern's Sandy Schwab set Big Ten marks by completing 45 of 71 passes for a school record 463 yards, but Michigan overwhelmed the Wildcats 49-14 as Steve Smith scored three touchdowns and passed for two.

Barber, Sikes tie in Seniors golf

HILTON HEAD ISLAND, S.C. (AP) — Miller Barber and Dan Sikes fired 3-under-par 69s and let the rain do the rest en route to a shared victory in the inaugural Hilton Head Seniors International golf tournament.

A partially completed Saturday round was rained out by a downpour which continued throughout Saturday night.

On Sunday tournament officials declared Barber and Sikes co-winners of the event.

The partial round Saturday was dropped and officials canceled the final round Sunday.

Barber and Sikes got $15,000 apiece of a reduced $112,500 purse. They led the pack at 138 Friday night. Don January was the first-round leader with 68, but shot a 72 Friday to fall to third, two strokes back.

January was awarded $7,500 for his third-place finish.

Four players were deadlocked at 2-under par 142 and earned $4,125 each — Julius Boros, Bob Goalby, Ted Kroll and Buck Adams.

Bethke holds off Newman to win

BRASELTON, Ga. (AP) — Doug Bethke held off a charge by actor Paul Newman on Sunday to defend his GT-1 national championship by winning the Champion Spark Plug Road Racing Classic at Road Atlanta.

Driving a Corvette, Bethke, of Acton, Mass., finished just 2.5 seconds ahead of Newman, who started at the back of the field and set one-lap records three times as he closed in on Bethke.

Newman, who won Sports Car Club of America titles at Road Atlanta in 1976 and 1979, qualified third in his Datsun 280ZX Turbo, but couldn't get it started as the field pulled out of the pits.

When he got going and pulled into the back of the 23-car field, Newman got rolling. He was fifth after six laps and third after 11.

He pulled into second place after 14 laps of the 18-lap race when top qualifier Frank Leary of Santa Clara, Calif., who was leading, dropped out with mechanical problems and Bethke took over first.

Waitz women's winner

Salazar wins marathon

NEW YORK (AP) — Alberto Salazar and Grete Waitz got what they wanted in the New York City Marathon — victory. And Fred Lebow, the marathon's director, got what he wanted — a close race.

In a tense finish, decided by a late surge by Salazar, the 24-year-old long distance star from Eugene, Ore., edged gritty Rodolfo Gomez of Mexico Sunday in 2 hours, 9 minutes, 29 seconds for his third consecutive triumph in the New York City Marathon.

WAITZ, 29, from Oslo, Norway, won the women's division for the fourth time in five years, in 2:27:14 — her first marathon finish since capturing the New York City event for the third year in a row in 1980.

Neither winner was close to breaking the world-bests — Salazar's 2:08:13 for men and New Zealander Allison Roe's 2:25:29 for women, both in this race last year.

Both, however, were very content to win. Salazar had suffered tendinitis in his left foot three weeks ago while training and had refrained from making a prediction on his time, as he had done in each of his two previous New York races.

"I'm not making any predictions, I just want to win," he said.

Waitz had the same idea after dropping out of last year's race near the 15-mile mark with shin splints and dropping out of the Boston Marathon in April with leg pains after leading past the 20-mile mark.

"I didn't want to go for any records," she said after winning easily. "I just ran for the victory. I was not concerned about the time. My goal was to complete the race."

LEBOW WAS more concerned with a close finish than with the men's and women's winners running faster than Salazar and Roe did in 1981.

"We have the records already," he said. "I would like to see a competitive race. The New York City winner never has been challenged."

He was challenged Sunday.

The confident Salazar got all he could handle from the dogged Gomez, who had been unbeaten in three marathons this year and had finished second in this race in 1980.

Both runners admitted they were in pain during the race, but both gutted it out to produce the first close finish in the race's 13-year history. Only four seconds separated them at the end — Gomez finishing in 2:09:33, his personal best.

"Halfway through the race, I had stitches in my side," said Salazar.

"The last three miles I had pains in my stomach," said Gomez.

"I didn't force the pace," said Salazar. "I had to lay back. I was nervous. I had to hang back and hope he didn't pull away from me."

Without "a rabbit" to set a fast early pace, Salazar took control of the tempo. But his pace was not nearly as fast as the record race he had run a year ago.

HE LED MOST of the way until Gomez forged ahead near the 18-mile mark. Gomez held the lead, opening what appeared to be a substantial margin, between the 19th and 20th miles.

But Salazar came back at him, catching him about the 21-mile mark.

Then, the two raced virtually shoulder-to-shoulder for nearly five miles, before Salazar literally left Gomez in a cloud of dust with about 600 yards to go.

The Mancini parable...it was made for the TV gang

PALM SPRINGS — There used to be this scene in the movies where the old-country father (Oscar Homolka?) would say to his firstborn: "All these years, I go down in the mines. I take a chance on black lung, coal dust, fire, cave-ins and explosions, and why? So that you won't ever have to do that, so that you can be somebody, a Paganini with the violin, a big shot on Wall Street, a Harvard man in the State Department. A very rich, important man."

A modern counterpart of this parable was Lenny Mancini. Lenny didn't go down in the mines for his brood, he went up into the ring. He didn't risk lung cancer or emphysema but he did risk nosebleeds, detached retinas, kidney and brain damage – and broken knuckles and jaws.

HE WAS only moderately successful, but that wasn't because he wasn't a good fighter; that was because there were so many good fighters in those days a champion had to climb over 1,000 good fighters, not a dozen.

The good news is that his son, Ray, did become rich and famous. The twist is, he didn't do it through Yale or Harvard or Carnegie Hall. He did it the way his father did. He, so to speak, went down in the same old mines. Or the same old ring. He didn't need to have "Dr." in front of his name, or the "Rt. Hon." or "Judge" or "Mr. Secretary." All he ever wanted was "Champ." He became a pug, too.

It's a heartwarming story, and the networks lapped it up. So did Ring magazine. And it illustrates as well as anything can the difference between the two sports eras. Papa fought some registered ring assassins for, probably, $500 a night. Dad fought in the Depression. The son fought in inflation. Dad fought in dingy clubs in dingier towns where they paid off in the dark. The son fights on ABC, where the check is always good.

RAY MANCINI became something of a cult hero in his native Youngstown. When I tell you his name is Boom Boom, I tell you all you need to know about his fighting style. The Orchid Man he ain't. No one ever called him Silk or The Phantom. Of course, he comes by it naturally. Papa was called Boom Boom, too. For the same reasons. "He never took a backward step," Boom Boom II says of his father. "But I will. I'm more scientific. He didn't know what a jab was. He was only 5-2."

Boom Boom the Younger didn't become a fighter because Boom Boom the Elder wanted him to. He became one because the original Boom Boom didn't want him to. "He told me what a hard, painful life it was. He said: 'Don't be dumb, don't fight.'"

Boom Boom Sr. knew what he was talking about. He lost an eye fighting. He never got a title shot even though he was ranked No. 1. "The other fighters' manager used to say, 'What do we need him for? What do you need with a headache?'" the son recalls proudly.

GROWING UP in Youngstown and hearing the family stories of how his father got jobbed out of his title chance, the young Boom Boom began to weave a childhood fantasy of restoring that title to the Mancini family. "If he'd become world champion, I'd of never fought," insists young Boom Boom. "I'd of said, 'Hey, my father was world champ!' It would have been enough for me."

The storybook ending was achieved, however, when young Ray won the WBA lightweight championship from Art Frias earlier this year. "I'm the first guy to win the lightweight title with a first-round KO since Tony Canzoneri did it (to Al Singer) in 1930."

Calvin Peete posts seven-stroke Pensacola victory

By FRED GOODALL

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — Calvin Peete stalked a pair of rookie leaders for three rounds of the Pensacola Open. But in the end, his quest for the $36,000 first prize became a battle between himself and the Perdido Bay Country Club course.

"I didn't really feel any pressure. With the wind and tough pin placements, I felt if I could beat the course, I would have a chance to win," Peete said Sunday, after firing a 6-under-par 65 en route to a seven-stroke victory in the $200,000 event.

"It's a confidence builder that you can go out on the last day and shoot a good score like that," said Peete, who captured his fourth PGA title of the season. "It gives you a feeling that whenever you're within four or five shots, you've got a chance."

Peete, who finished with a 72-hole total of 16-under-par 268, began the final round two shots off the pace set by rookie Hal Sutton.

Sutton faltered on the front nine of the par-71, 7,093-yard Perdido course, however, and never seriously challenged Peete after falling behind on the seventh hole.

"I felt I had good control of the my golf swing and I played aggressively," said Peete. "A lot of times that's the difference between being a leader and the man who is pursuing.

"Players have a tendency to try to protect their lead, while the guy who is behind goes out and plays his normal game," added Peete, who birdied two of the first three holes to pull within a shot of the lead.

Sutton, who became the most prolific money-winning rookie ever, shot a final-round 74 to finish in a tie for second with 1980 Pensacola Open winner Dan Halldorson at 9-under-par 275.

U.S. Open champion Tom Watson was among five golfers at 276, while defending Pensacola champion Jerry Pate led a group at 277.

Joining Watson at 276 were George Burns, John Fought, Mike Sullivan and Brad Bryant. J.C. Snead, Larry Mize, Pat Lindsey, Mark McCumber and rookie Steve Liebler, who led the first two rounds, were even with Pate.

It was the fifth career victory for Peete, who had already won the Greater Milwaukee Open, the Anheuser-Busch Classic, and B.C. Open earlier this year.

The triumph boosted his 1982 earnings to $317,361 and vaulted him from seventh to fourth among tour money leaders. Peete now has career earnings of $702,751.

Sutton, meanwhile, surpassed Pate's first-year earnings record of $153,102. He won $17,600 for his third second-place finish on the year to hike his winnings to $165,434.

Peete took sole possession of the lead when Sutton bogeyed No.7 and watched his advantage grow to three strokes when he birdied No. 8 and Sutton dropped his shot on No. 9.

The winner gradually pulled away on the back nine where he dropped birdie putts of 15 feet at No. 11 and nine-and eight-feet respectively at No. 12 and No. 16.

Peete's margin of victory equaled the largest on the tour this year, matching his triumph in the B.C. Open last month and Craig Stadler's victory in the Tucson Open.

Harry Deupree not your average street jogger

By TIM TUMLIN

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — An executive jogging through the neighborhood with business associates is commonplace, but there's no place in the velour warmup suit set for an athlete like Harry Deupree.

Even by the standards of most road racers, Deupree, a 44-year-old bank president, is tough.

"I've always just loved to run, period," said Deupree, who has 42 endurance races — including marathons and 100-mile "ultras" — to his credit, along with a triathlon appearance and a bit of rodeo riding.

Polio briefly paralyzed him at age 5. But by the time he was 16, Duepree was a high school wrestler, and running to build up stamina.

IT TOOK letters from three doctors to get him into the Marine Corps in 1960, vouching for him despite his imperfect vision, history of polio and a deteriorating spinal disk. Assigned to the Far East, he occasionally ran the 25 miles across Okinawa.

Back in Oklahoma with a captain's commission, he took a job as a management trainee at the Federal Reserve Branch Bank, giving up dreams of being a doctor and a missionary but taking up rodeo as a hobby.

AFTER A bad fall off a bull, Duepree gave up rodeo riding in 1969. "I broke my arm when I went off the right side of the bull and I got hung up in the rope. It never set properly," he said."It was kind of fun and I'll miss it, but I won't go back."

He became a commercial banker that year and was named president of the Allied Oklahoma Bank in 1975. Jogging stopped under the pressure of the job.

"That was the worst thing I could have done because I was coming home in a knot and going back in a knot," Deupree said. "I kept hearing that a long-distance runner isn't necessarily over the hill at 30 or 40. I kept thinking 'I've got to get with it.'"

That meant running for two months in 1977 before a 10-mile race that "liked to have killed me."

THE NEXT race was his first marathon, only two months away. "My knee problem from my rodeo days came up," he said. "I started walking at 19 miles and called it quits after two more." He finished his second marathon and in the next year completed a dozen more.

One doctor warned him to stop running and take up cycling to save his knees. Another said he should swim instead, to help his injured back. "I thanked them and went back running," he said.

Whatever drove him to rodeos and marathons led him to an event involving a two-mile ocean swim, 100 miles on a bicycle and a marathon — the Iron Man Triathlon in Hawaii.

DEUPREE bought a bike and a membership in the local YMCA and began training — 90 days before the race. "I got through it and was kind of pleased."

After Hawaii, another challenge: The Western States 100, a 100-mile run through the rugged Sierra Nevada.

Going into Sunday's finals, Acuna and Molino (ninth and sixth ranked in the tournament respectively) had never faced each other and Acuna thought "it was a difficult match. I've never played him before and I didn't know how I was going to play him. I was trying to just return his shots when he was up close and work in when I could to pressure him.

"I started playing good the first three games of the first set and then lost my concentration for awhile after that," continued Acuna. "A foot-fault call bothered me and I lost the next four games and he beat me in the first set 7-5. I should have won it. After that, I played pretty good."

MOLINO, WHO gave the experience edge to Acuna, wasn't exactly thrilled with his performance in the match. "I didn't think either of us palyed well the first two sets," he said. "There were a lot of unforced errors. We were both tight. I think Ricardo lifted his game real well after the first set and I lifted mine some. I thought his back hand was a little weak early in the match and tried playing to it and he proved me wrong. He hit a lot of strong serves and a lot of passing shots."

And what's in store for Molino after this tournament?

"I'm going to go to Colorado for a few days rest before returning to Florida," he said. "I'd like to do some high-altitude running if I can work up the enthusiasm for it.

"I need to play more. Ricardo has a lot of Grand Prix and Davis Cup experience. He's played in front of large crowds before. I need to play more and get more experience. It will come with time. I feel my playing has picked up a lot the last few weeks."

ACUNA ALSO made it to the finals in doubles Sunday where he and his partner Juan Ayla, also of Chile, lost in two sets to Sean Brawley and Gary Donnelly, 6-3, 7-5.

With the score at 3-2 in the first set, Brawley-Donnelly came up with the first and only break of the set in the fifth game when they broke Acuna's serve for a 4-2 lead. They won the seventh game to go up 5-2. Both team held their final serves for the 6-3 victory.

The second set was much tighter as it went to 5-5 before Brawley-Donnelly could break serve. Brawley smashed a high winner to win the 11th game and they came up with the match winner when Ayla's 30-40 service return was long in the 12th game.

Unionists may be sunshine soldiers

By DONALD WOUTAT
Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

DETROIT — It turned bitter cold here last week, the temperatxnorth winds made it seem even colder. In northern Michigan, there were 11 inches north winds made it seem even colder. In northern Michigan, there were 11 inches of snow.

It is no time to be walking a picket line, but tens of thousands of Chrysler Corp. workers will decide Tuesday in a referendum whether to begin doing just that on Nov. 1.

There appears to be little eagerness to strike the financially fragile auto company to begin with, and some union officials believe that the weather, the approach of the holiday season and the sight of unemployment lines might further cool any walkout fever.

"The weather and all that stuff will have a lot of bearing on it," said Joe Games, who left Chrysler's padlocked Los Angeles assembly plant in 1971 and is now president of the United Auto Workers Local at the Newark, Del., assembly plant. "People will not necessarily be voting their conscience."

But the militancy of the Chrysler workers, whose pay has been frozen for nearly two years, was underestimated earlier this month until 70 percent of them rejected a proposed labor contract with Chrysler.

This week's unusual vote was precipitated by Chrysler's declaration that it is willing to risk a strike rather than grant an immediate wage increase, the top priority of workers who rejected the tentative settlement.

RANK—AND—FILE workers will make one of two choices: to shut down the company's entire U.S. operations at 10 a.m. on Nov. 1 or to keep working until January, when another round of bargaining would begin.

While they will not say so publicly, the UAW's national leaders hope the workers will choose the second option. It is far from clear that the union could negotiate a better deal in January than it managed in September, but the delay is seen as a way to defuse a tense and difficult situation.

"Maybe both sides could benefit by putting it off. It's a cooling-off thing," Games says.

There is little doubt that a strike would have serious repercussions for Chrysler, which is poised for a financial recovery after its flirtation with bankruptcy but is dependent almost entirely on the state of the economy.

Analysts generally agree that Chrysler could survive a strike of a week or two, but even that brief a walkout could retard recovery. A long shutdown could be "ruinous," according to company Vice President Thomas W. Miner.

The widely held belief that a strike during economic downturns can actually benefit a company, by enabling it to trim costly inventories of products that are not selling anyway, does not appear to apply in the case of Chrysler.

THE COMPANY IS roughly breaking even, and still relies heavily on day-to-day revenues from the sale of cars and trucks to maintain its cash flow. Judging from production numbers and wholesale prices, Chrysler takes in more than $100 million a week from dealers buying its vehicles.

And while some union officials have pointed to Chrysler's 80-day inventory of cars as evidence that the company could stand a prolonged strike, those cars have already been sold to dealers. Thus a halt in production, the company and outside observers say, would immediately cut off most revenue.

"The stocks take care of the dealers up to a point, although before long they run out of certain cars with certain options and customers go somewhere else," says Malcolm Denise, a retired Ford Motor Co. labor relations vice president, who helped steer Ford through some long strikes.

"In the meantime, the company isn't getting any money. The biggest immediate problem for Chrysler is continued fixed costs with no cash coming in."

The company would almost immediately quit buying parts from suppliers, at a savings of about $75 million a week, and would stop paying the striking workers, at a weekly payroll savings of about $20 million, according to Chrysler figures.

Meanwhile, pension and other related personnel costs — the paycheck is only about half of Chrysler's total labor costs — continue during a strike. "A very substantial chunk is going to be with you regardless," Denise (pronounced De-nize) said.

IN PAST STRIKES, auto companies have tended to keep all their non-union employees on the job. But Denise commented that, given Chrysler's financial condition, "they might be forced to be less considerate of the non-strikers" to save more payroll costs.

One reason that Chrysler workers rejected the proposed settlement, union leaders say, was the existence of the company's much publicized $1-billion cash cushion. Union official Games, for instance, figures that Chrysler could have given the workers an extra $1 an hour at a cost of just $100 million, leaving Chrysler with $900 million.

Chrysler now says, however, that it could get its hands immediately on only about $600 million of that amount. The rest is tied up in foreign subsidiaries and to satisfy Federal Reserve Board minimum cash-on-hand requirements, to cover checks that have not cleared on any given day, and to cover daily expenses.

(Chrysler Chairman Lee A. Iacocca talks often about the company's $1 billion in monthly expenses and is fond of saying, "This isn't any peanut stand we're running here.")

As for the $600 million that is readily available, a Chrysler vice president says, "we don't have any credit anywhere. If we need a big chunk of change in a hurry, we can't go to a bank. Any way you want to define it, it's an insurance policy for the corporation and its workers."

As an example, he said the cash pool will be tapped soon, in an amount understood to be considerably less than $100 million, to buy back some dealership properties that Chrysler sold to raise survival money three years ago during its fiscal crisis.

COMPANY EXECUTIVES say nearly $100 million from the cushion was also used last summer as Chrysler's required contribution toward the sale to banks of $500 million in contracts owed to its finance arm — a step that boosted by about 10 percent the amount of money Chrysler had available to finance new-car sales.

Robert S. Miller, the company's executive vice president for finance, has said Chrysler could not have raised that money without evidence of its improved financial condition — and the cash reserve is the evidence, company officials say.

Union sources believe that Chrysler is uniquely vulnerable to a strike in another respect: It has about 3,700 UAW-represented technicians, many of whom are helping to engineer new products.

Basic money supply increases

NEW YORK (AP) — The nation's basic money supply rose $3.2 billion in the second week of October, an increase well above Wall Street's expectations. Interest rates rose and bond prices nosedived after the announcement late last Friday.

Although the Fed has said it will temporarily pay less attention to growth in the basic money measure, called M1, the latest increase brought its growth in the past two weeks to $10.3 billion.

Elliott Platt, money market economist with Donaldson, Lufkin & Jenrette Securities Corp., said that may have encouraged the Fed to postpone a cut in its discount rate, which is the rate it charges on loans to private financial institutions.

Platt and others said the main reason the Fed is paying less attention to M1 — cash in circulation plus deposits in checking accounts — is because of changes in deposit flows this month that were expected to disort the money aggregates.

Much of the latest M1 increase came from money that had been in tax-exempt All Savers Certificates, they said. More than $40 billion worth of certificatesare coming due this month, money that many people then placed in checking accounts while deciding where to invest or spend it next.

Delta reports quarterly loss

Delta Air Lines, for years the envy of the industry with low costs and high profits, reported its second quarterly loss this year, unprecedented in the company's recent history.

Delta said Friday that it lost $16.1 million in the quarter ended Sept. 30, compared with a profit in the year-ago quarter of $7.6 million.

"The loss in the current quarter is directly related to a 5 percent decline in passenger traffic, the result of the depressed economy and Delta's attempt to improve its passenger mile yield by offering a reduced number of discount seats," said Robert Oppenlander, the airline's chief financial officer.

In Delta's 1982 fiscal year, which ended June 30, its profit plummeted 86 percent to $20.8 million from $146.5 million the year before. It lost $18.4 million in the first three months of this calendar year, its first loss in 27 years.

Delta said in the July-September quarter, revenue declined 2 percent to $76.5 million and expenses were up 3 percent to $915.7 million.

Grain price likely to go lower

WASHINGTON (AP) — This fall's huge corn crop, coupled with continued weak demand, is likely to push farmers' prices for grain even lower than previously expected.

The Agriculture Department said Fridaythe average farm price of corn in 1982-83 is expected to average 10 cents a bushel less than economists had predicted earlier this month.

For a farmer whose corn harvest yielded 100 bushel per acre this fall, that would mean $10 less per acre than USDA had forecast previously.

A new supply-and-demand analysis said that U.S. corn inventories on Oct. 1 "were well above previous estimates" and that the domestic use of corn as livestock feed had not reached expected levels.

Corn is the nation's leading farm crop and is the major ingredient in animal and poultry feed.

European unemployment high

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — The number of unemployed in the 10 nations of the Common Market rose last month to 11.2 million, representing 9.8 percent of the labor force.

The monthly job report also warned that the jobless rate will surpass the 10.1 percent U.S. level unless European business revives.

The report Friday showed the worst unemployment rates since World War II, with 300,000 more people out of work than in August and 1.8 million more than in September 1981. Rates ranged from a high of 14.8 percent in Belgium to 1.3 percent in Luxembourg.

Unemployment climbed in eight of the 10 Common Market countries. The exceptions were Ireland and Greece, which already are among the poorest regions in the economic bloc.

The new rates included 13 percent in Britain; 10.8 percent in the Netherlands, 10.5 percent in Italy, 9 percent in Denmark, 8.9 percent in France and 6.9 percent in West Germany.

Christmas no time for strike

DETROIT (AP) — Chrysler Corp. autoworkers voting this week will reject a strike against the automaker because they don't want to be without their jobs during the Christmas holiday season, several local United Auto Workers union officials have said.

"If I had to guess, I'd say it will be either close to 50-50 or 55 percent to 45 percent not to strike," said Bill Gorman, president of Local 1331 in Van Wert, Ohio. "The workers will be facing the Christmas holidays and the expenses associated with it. I don't think any of us really want to strike."

"A majority will vote to go back (to negotiations in January)," agreed Paul Jeunnette, financial secretary of Local 122 in Twinsburg, Ohio. "The main reason for that is because the holidays are coming up."

Chrysler's 43,200 working U.S. autoworkers plus an uncalculated number of the 40,000 on indefinite layoff will be eligible to vote in the referendum Tuesday.

E.F. Hutton crew jumps ship

NEW YORK (AP) — E.F. Hutton Group Inc. says its chairman is outraged that three of the investment firm's leading analysts quit to work for competitor Bache Group Inc.

The three — Hutton's former director of research, Greg Smith; its former chief economist, Edward Yardeni; and a former vice president and portfolio strategist, Fred Frankel — quit Hutton Thursday and were at Bache's offices Friday.

Bache, a unit of Prudential Insurance Co. of America, is headed by George L. Ball, who himself resigned as Hutton's president in July to take the top job at Bache.

Off-system gas sales may harm Texas

AUSTIN — Natural gas sales by interstate pipelines into the Texas intrastate market, termed off-system sales, may curtail exploration for and development of natural gas reserves in the state and cause irreparable damage to the market.

That was one of several conclusions reached by the Railroad Commission after an extensive review of the effects of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission's off-system gas sales program which was implemented following the passage of the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978. FERC has asked for comments on whether the program should be continued, modified, or eliminated.

Because of the economic recession, fuel-switching and conservation, some interstate gas pipeline companies have developed a surplus of natural gas supplies. The off-system sales program allows these pipelines to seek new intrastate markets for the surplus gas. Those sales, however, cause harmful long-term effects, according to Railroad Commissioners Jim Nugent, Mack Wallace, and Buddy Temple.

In a sixteen-page document sent to Washington last week, the commissioners summarized testimony received from natural gas end-users, producers, pipelines, distributors, municipalities and others at a public hearing held in Austin Sept. 8.

The commission told the FERC that off-system sales pose a real threat to the ability of intrastate pipelines to provide their customers with an assured supply of gas at the lowest possible price over the long term. When off-system sales are permitted into an intrastate market which already has its own surplus of gas, a damaging chain reaction takes place.

Intrastate pipelines must reduce the amount of gas they take from producers. Producers then tend to reduce exploration for new gas and development of existing reserves. Producers also have a strong incentive to sell gas to interstate pipelines, which can offer to take more. That represents a loss of reserves (possibly permanent) which threatens the long-term ability of intrastate pipelines to supply their customers.

Texas customers, lured into replacing traditional intrastate gas supplies with lower-priced interstate gas, may find themselves without any gas at all in the future, according to the Commission. An increase in demand in the interstate market will interrupt the supply to purchasers of off-system gas.

Purchasers would then turn to the intrastate market for required gas supplies. However, intrastate supplies may not be available because of the damage done to intrastate gas acquisition programs in the meantime.

The Railroad Commissioners noted that since the interstate and intrastate markets are sensitive to movements of natural gas between them, the public interest is served only if off-system sales are evaluated for their effects on the nation's natural gas market as a whole.

FERC must consider the impact of off-system sales on intrastate markets, especially if the impact threatens the reliability of long-term supply in those markets, the commissioners said. That is, FERC must consider the effects of a proposed sale on markets at both ends of the pipeline before approving such sale.

According to the Railroad Commissioners, three criteria for approval should be met before FERC approves an off-system sale into the intrastate market.

(1) Purchasers of such interstate gas should demonstrate an actual physical need for the gas and show that no intrastate supplier is willing and able to supply the gas under terms and conditions required by the purchaser.

(2) The proposed sale should not adversely affect natural gas exploration and development in the intrastate market.

(3) The proposed sale should not increase or shift take-or-pay exposure from interstate to intrastate pipelines.

The commissioners also said that off-system sales should, by definition, be interruptible and less than one year in duration.

FERC has scheduled an informal public conference in Washington Oct. 20 to review its off-system sales policy.

AUSTIN — Railroad Commission Chairman Jim Nugent announced that 62 refineries in Texas processed 137,174,565 barrels of crude oil and hydrocarbon blends during July 1982. Through the first seven months of 1982, Texas refineries ran 882,958,962 barrels.

July's volume compares with 130,093,707 barrels in the same month a year ago, the Commission's Oil and Gas Division reported in its monthly recapitulation of Texas refinery operations. Inputs of crude oil and blends totaled 129,598,172 barrels in June 1982.

Texas refineries ran 103,139,235 barrels of crude oil in July compared to 105,638,490 barrels in July 1981 and 100,884,869 barrels in June 1982.

Products manufactured in July 1982 totaled 138,875,614 barrels, up from 127,595,917 barrels in the same month the previous year, and up from the 132,906,431 barrels in June 1982.

July 1982 manufacture of motor gasoline totaled 62,064,389 barrels, compared to 46,582,045 barrels in the year-earlier month and 59,107,381 barrels in June of 1982.

Texas refineries manufactured 11,569,142 barrels of home heating oil in July 1982 — an increase of 3,091,550 barrels from the year-earlier volume. June 1982 output was 12,115,502 barrels.

Braniff chairman looking for partners

DALLAS (AP) — Braniff International chairman Howard Putnam says he will "beat the bushes" to find partners willing to form a one-airplane, one-route airline offering Boeing 747 service between Dallas-Fort Worth and London.

"We don't know if it will be feasible," Putnam told the Dallas Morning News in a copyright story Sunday.

"But we're going to beat the bushes and see if we can find anyone interested in being an equity partner on the London route," he said.

The plan would be similar to the Braniff-Pacific Southwest Airlines joint venture announced last week, but would involve only one route and one airplane, Putnam said.

The eight-year joint venture with PSA — if approved by regulatory agencies, a bankruptcy judge, creditors and labor unions — would use about half of Braniff's 60 Boeing 727-200 aircraft on domestic routes. It would not use the larger 747s needed for the trans-Atlantic route.

"The only place I see another joint venture taking place — and I think this is a possibility — is with a 747," Putnam said. "There is still a London market therz that we have a right to. And there is no rule that says you can't have a one-airplane airline going to London and having its own name.

American Airlines now flies the London route under temporary authority from the Civil Aeronautics Board.

Braniff halted all operations and filed for bankruptcy protection in May, blaming fare price-cutting, soaring fuel costs and unprofitable routes for its $1 billion debt.

"We will keep working to reorganize until the court says, 'Stop. We are going to liquidate,'" Putnam said.

Braniff and PSA officials say they hope to have the new airline flying by Christmas, but they have declined to disclose which cities would be served.

The new airline would be separate from PSA and use Braniff employees and equipment, but would carry the PSA name.

Bank rescued by merger

DALLAS (AP) — Mercantile Texas Corp. acquired Lincoln Centre Bank N.A. Friday to rescue the Dallas bank from what federal regulators called an "emergency condition."

Peter Bartholow, senior vice president of finance at Mercantile, said federal officials approved the takeover after it was learned Lincoln Centre was the victim of unauthorized transactions that would have exposed it to substantial losses.

"There were deposit transactions that left the bank unsecure," Bartholow said. "In effect, it means that customers may have been authorized to draw against uncollected deposits with no prospect for the despoits to be covered or collectable.

"Conceivably, it could have caused the bank to fail without support," he added.

As of Sept. 30, Lincoln Centre had deposits of $25 million and stockhold-

William W. Wiles, secretary of the Federal Reserve Board, said in a statement that "an emergency condition exists" and that the Fed was asked by the U.S. Comptroller of the Currency to "consider immediate action on the application."

Efforts to reach Lincoln Centre officials for comment were unsuccessful.

Bartholow said Mercantile and Lincoln Centre officials had been discussing a merger before the unauthorized transactions were discovered.

He would would not say how the unauthorized transactions were discovered except to say they took place after Sept. 30.

Under terms of the takeover, Mercantile will pay $2 million in cash to Lincoln Centre shareholders. The stockholders also will have claim to any funds that might be collected in the unauthorized transactions.

Effective immediately, Lincoln Centre will operate under the name Mercantile Bank-North, N.A.

Mercantile, a multi-bank holding company with assets of $9.7 billion, took over Abilene National Bank Aug. 6 after federal regulators determined the bank was in "imminent danger of failure."

Mercantile officials said "problem loans" were behind the deteriorating financial condition of Abilene National and infused $20 million of capital into the bank.

Wild gas well kills itself

MORGAN CITY, La. (AP) — A fire on board a natural gas platform went out mysteriously Sunday after it blew wild and flared into a spectacular 300-foot torch for four days, a Chevron USA spokesman said.

"The fire went our about 9:30 this morning, apparently of its own accord," said company spokesman Newell Schindler. "Why, at this time, of course, we don't know."

The well, located in the Eugene Island Block 361, is about 90 miles south-southwest of Morgan City. It blew out early Thursday, forcing the 42 crewmen aboard the platform to evacuate in emergency capsules.

There were no injuries, but the well caught fire about noon Thursday.

Fireboats circled the rig and poured on cooling sprays of water, and Chevron called in Houston-based wild well fighters Boots & Coots to bring it under control.

A semi-submersible drilling barge was towed to the site Friday, and the plan weeks-long process of drilling a relief well to bring the blowout under control was proceeding on schedule.

"Meanwhile, in view of the fire being out, we're evaluating the situation to see if there are any other possibilities (for controlling the well)," Schindler said.

So far no assessment of damage to the platform has been made, Schindler said.

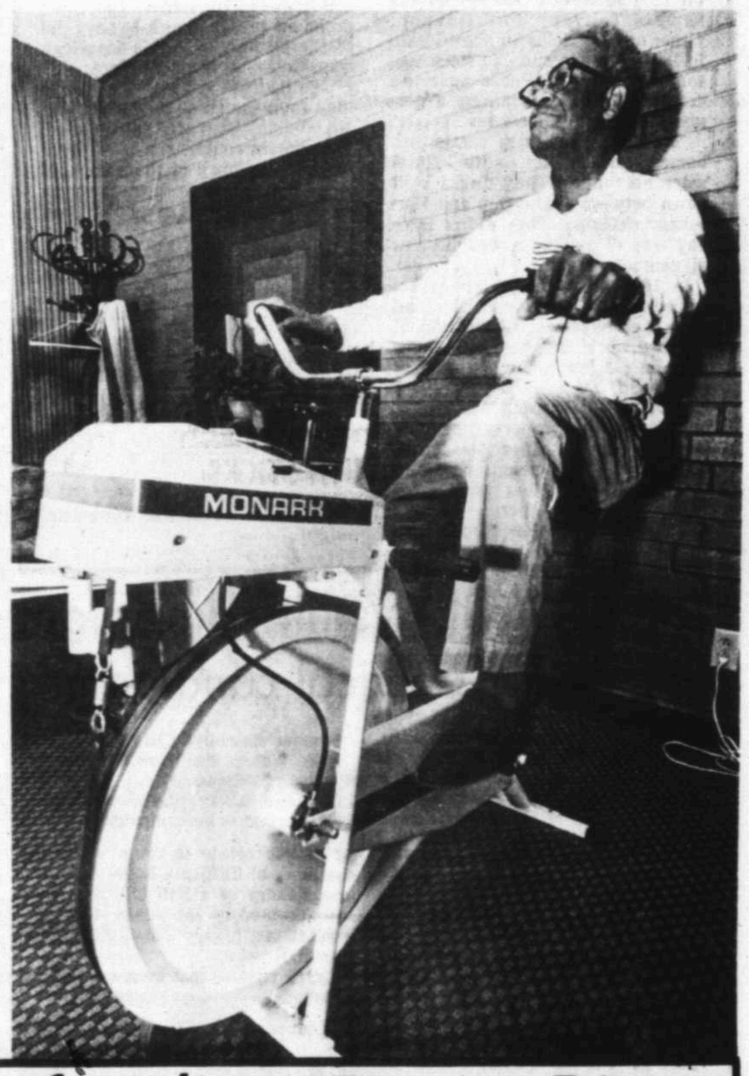
Nurse Ann Parker, left attaches a heart monitoring device to Geoffrey Green. The probes will record his heart beats during excercises. Green, who recently suffered a heart attack, is going through a six-month cardiac rehabilitation program at Dr. Brian Mohr's office. No matter where Dr. Mohr's heart patients are in his cardiac rehabilitation room, above, the patients are monitored for any irregular heart beat. The monitor can record heart beats of up to four patients. Ozie Hall, below, pumps the stationary bicycle at a steady pace as part of the structured exercises to bring his heart back to good health.



Program rehabilitates heart attack victims

Staff Writer

In the early morning hours Mrs. Green rubbed her eyes and sat up in bed, awakened by her husband's stirring. After 46 years of marriage, she knew something was wrong — she was frightened.

"The minute I woke up, I knew he was in trouble...the way he looked. It was 3:30 in the morning, so I called an ambulance," she said, recalling the night her husband was rushed through Midland's deserted streets to the hospital emergency room.

Dr. Brian Mohr

This week she accompanied her husband to the doctor's office. Sitting on the soft, crouched sofa, she stared blankly for a moment — remembering. She turned her head and said, "He thought it was indigestion. He had pain in his leg. I was scared."

She scanned the doctor's waiting room. This room is unlike the typical doctor's office, usually furnished with several straight back chairs and oversized lamps, illuminating dim, warm light. There are no polished-topped end tables piled high with old magazines.

Her fingers interlocked and she bowed her head.

"We've been married for 46 years. He'll be 68 next month," she said.

Lifting her head, Mrs. Green's eyes locked for a brief moment with her husband's. They both smiled.

The slender Geoffery Green gripped the handle bars on one of the four stationary bicycles that sit in a row adjacent to the sofa. His legs slowly pushed the peddles.

Across the room, blips of light recorded his heart beats on a monitor from the electronic device attached to his body.

"I couldn't believe he would ride that bicycle...so soon. I was really scared when Dr. (Brian) Mohr told us he would start the program this soon," Mrs. Green said.

Few people expect to have a heart attack. Then it happens and many emotions come to the surface.

For many heart attack patients, this is their first life-threatening illness and they have many concerns.

A chest pain or a flutter can send the heart attack patient into a panic.

"I used to re-admit one-third of my patients because of these concerns, but now with this program less than 5 percent are re-admitted," Midland cardiologist Dr. Brian Mohr said.

Mohr begins his patients on a cardiac rehabilitation program shortly after their hospital stay.

"At one time, it was thought that physical activity was not good after a heart attack," he said. "Patients stayed hospitalized for 21 days or more."

In 1978, Mohr said heart attack patients were hospitalized for two weeks; today their bed stay is about nine days.

"One week after they go home, they take a stress test and from that we start them on the rehabilitation program," he said.

Purpose of the program is to get the patient physically fit; then he gets back to work.

"Employers are anxious and afraid that this will hurt the patients," Mohr said, adding that they shouldn't be.

He said it is important that the patient not become a "cardiac invalid." Some patients interpret every sensation as a sign of heart disease and are afraid to get back to a normal life.

According to Mohr, 80 percent of heart attack patients recover and can return to a full, active life.

The cardiac rehabilitation program includes riding the stationary bicycle, rowing and walking.

At Mohr's office the patients are constantly monitored. If they feel a flutter

Damaged muscle causes heart attack

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Myocardial infarction is the medical term for damage to the heart muscle.

The damage occurs when a severe narrowing or obstruction develops in the coronary arteries, interfering with blood flow and decreasing oxygen supply to the heart muscle. As a result, a portion of the heart is damaged and will not function; this is a heart attack.

Dr. Brian Mohr, Midland cardiologist, said narrowed coronary arteries are usually the result of atherosclerosis, where small fatty layers deposit over time against the inside artery walls.

Atherosclerosis produces about 600,000 heart attacks a year, but doesn't necessarily lead to surgery or death. Mohr said 15 percent of heart attack patients who reach the hospital emergency room die.

An insufficient oxygen supply may resemble indigestion with a tightness or squeezing in the chest. A heart attack may produce discomfort in the arm, neck, jaw or upper back. Weakness, sweating, dizziness or breathlessness may occur.

This discomfort is called angina pectoris. Mohr said it may occur days, weeks, months or years before a heart attack.

A person's lifestyle usually determines, but not always.

Major risk factors include smoking, high blood presure and high cholesterol in the blood. Other factors are age, gender, stress, lack of exercise and obesity. Heredity and diabetes are also considered.

To have a healthy heart, Mohr said it is important to stop smoking, have your blood pressure checked, eat right and exercise regularly. It may not prevent a heart attack, but it will decrease your chances.

Horsehead Crossing took its toll on cattle fording Pecos River

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of a series on a fabled Pecos River crossing which proved perilous for man and beast alike.

By PATRICK DEAREN
Staff Writer
Copyright 1982, The Midland Reporter-Telegram

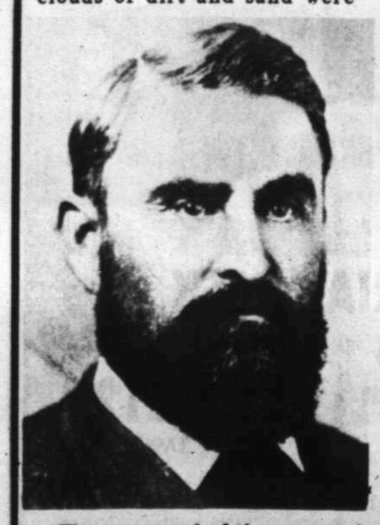
CRANE-PECOS COUNTY LINE — All Horsehead Crossing lacked in the late 1860s was the deep voice of Eric Fleming booming, "Head 'em up, move 'em out."

It was a time of dustiness along Horsehead during that decade, as clouds of dirt and sand were spawned by the hooves of thousands, perhaps millions, of beeves headed from the verdant pastures of central Texas up the Pecos to Fort Sumner, N.M.

Charles Goodnight and Oliver Loving were the most famous of the cattle drovers who made use of Horsehead Crossing, as they blazed a cattle trail to Horsehead and Fort Sumner in 1867.

But the skulls, as always, demanded their deadly toll.

Loving was wounded by Indians and died upon reaching Fort Sumner. Some 300 beeves dropped of thirst. Several hundred more were taken by Indians. The quicksands of Horsehead held fast to scores of others.



"The graveyard of the cowman's hopes" — Charles Goodnight in describing the Horsehead section of the Pecos River (from "Trail Driving Days," Scribner's, 1952, New York)

BY THE TIME Goodnight-Loving's first herd spilled out onto the greasewood plains from Castle Gap's terraced pass, desperation already reigned. The animals had been without water three days, and the stronger two-thirds of the herd became unmanageable when the waters of Horsehead were scented.

At the boundaries of Horsehead, the steers stampeded into the current.

"Those behind pushed the ones in the lead right on across before they had time to stop and drink," Goodnight recorded. "I was in the lead and as soon as they all cleared the river, I turned them back and they readily went in again, drinking as they swam back. They crossed in such volume and force that they impeded the current, and the water was halfway up the bank in a perfect flood."

The remaining 500 beeves also went mad when they smelled the Pecos.

"They were virtually crazy and would go either to the water or not at all," said Goodnight. "All hands on one side could not turn them. The point of the river for which they were headed was like a ditch, with banks from 6 to 10 feet high. When they reached the river they never halted, but poured right over the bank and the remainder of the horses with them."

COWBOYS WORKED for two days to save steers caught in the sands below, but by the time the remaining cattle were herded on up the Pecos toward New Mexico more than 100 cattle carcasses were left to join the horse skulls.

But Goodnight was not discouraged by his misfortune, and during the next few years he drove 250,000 beeves to Horsehead and beyond.

Andy M. Adams of Fort Union, N.M., sought to provide him competition in 1867, as he was awarded a contract to deliver cattle to Fort Sumner, where captive Indians were in need of nourishment. His misfortunes make those of Goodnight pale by comparison, as bloodshed and catastrophe accompanied all four of his herds.

The initial herd of 656 head reached Horsehead at 10 p.m., April 23, 1867, and by the time the sun had risen less than half the beeves remained. A war party had attacked, driving away 365 head.

Adams' second herd was driven away by Kickapoo Indians before Horsehead was ever reached. But it was his third herd, consisting of 1,014 head, which brought the most danger to its drovers.

AT 1 P.M. May 25, 1867, 150 Comanches drove away the entire herd at Horsehead Crossing and besieged the cowboys and Hoy's wife and children. Three men were wounded, as well as Hoy's wife. They holed up in the ruins of the Butterfield stage stand a quarter-mile north until the arrival of a gold prospecting party ended their ordeal.

The party of 100 men had left Coleman County May 1, 1867, looking for a gold vein in the "Sierra Nevada Mountains on the Rio Grande River," fellow prospector A. Whitehurst recalled in 1905. Upon their approach to the Pecos and the beleagured group, a most peculiar sight met their eyes: white-clad men fled downstream on horseback. They were Comanches, who had donned linen shirts they had stolen from a caravan.

The fourth Adams' herd met a similar fate. Some 150 Comanche and Kiowa warriors attacked at Horsehead Crossing, driving away the 800 beeves and forcing the drovers to take refuge in a sinkhole.

Spurred into action by such reports, the government began assigning guards to the Horsehead area. But Indian skirmishes continued. Just the following year, Comanches claimed 1,300 beeves from the Ben Gooch and Robert Casey herd.

But the true-to-life Gil Favors and Rowdy Yates continued to brave the ford with their longhorns, and 1874 proved to be the year the most cattle crossed: 110,000.

Famous — and infamous — personalities of the Old West followed

"We had to tie the wagon bed down to the running gears so it wouldn't slip off, wouldn't float off." — Cora Hollis Smith of Iraan, in recounting her numerous crossings at Horsehead

Hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, of longhorn steers were herded across Horsehead Crossing in the 1860s and 1870s, as drovers battled Comanches, quicksand and the deadly currents and sheer bluffs of the Pecos.

at their hooves: Buffalo Bill, Black Jack Ketchum.

AND TOO, CAME the settlers that helped make the land of the Pecos livable.

"My sister-in-law, Susan Belcher, her father was an Englishman, and he came back here way back in the 1880s," recalled Paul Patterson of Crane. "He was over here looking for work and they camped on the Pecos at Horsehead Crossing. Somehow he hobbled his oxen before they got enough to drink, and one of them went down there hobbled to drink and drowned."

One man who saw advantages in the land adjacent to Horsehead was Samuel Toliver "Tol" Dawson, father of Cora Hollis Smith of Iraan. In 1897 he began running stock seasonally along the Pecos near the crossing, while maintaining a permanent residence in Odessa.

"He had a bunch of cattle and horses," recalled Mrs. Smith. "There were no fences. They dug a well down between Castle Gap and Horsehead Crossing. They didn't have any way of getting a well besides digging it (by hand)."

In 1903 the four-section action forced Dawson to stake a claim, and with the collective cooperation of his relatives a 32-section ranch was born only a few miles southeast of Horsehead.

"Horsehead Crossing was half a mile above our property," remembered Mrs. Smith. "There was lots of water and lots of people drowned there. One fellow that worked for my daddy drowned there — he tried to cross it on horseback and something went wrong. There was plenty of quicksand too. I helped get many a cow out of that river bed."

MRS. SMITH married a horse wrangler in 1910 and they took up residence only a short distance from the crossing. Now, 72 years later, she stands alone as likely the only living person who crossed Horsehead in the old days.

"Wagons could get down (to the river) there — you couldn't see the banks 'cause the river was too full," she remembered. "We had a neighbor lived across there, and we had a cattle mixup (because) there wasn't any fences. We used to have lots of fun running our cattle back and forth across the river."

Horsehead presented the same problems to Mrs. Smith as they did to the earliest of Anglo-American travelers seven decades before.

"We tied the wagon bed down to the running gears so it wouldn't slip off, wouldn't float off," she detailed. "The horses could swim it — there wouldn't be much of them sticking up — but they'd go through there. We went across on wagon a good many times."

Mrs. Smith also said she sometimes came across old artifacts in the Horsehead vicinity.

"I never did find anything (of value); I never did look for anything," she said. "I guess we'd've found plenty if we'd've known what we were looking for."

Had she known, during those early days of the century, perhaps Horsehead's arcanums would not still loom unsolved.

Ann Parker, a registered nurse who supervises the cardiac rehabilitation program, instructs Walter Clingo how to operate his 24-hour heart monitoring device. Clingo will wear the device at home where his heart rate will be recorded during normal activities.

Heart attack victims up, about sooner

during exercise, the monitor is read and questions are answered.

The patients go to the office three times a week for the first three months and two times a week during the second three months.

Geoffery Green was on his second visit.

After taping the monitor device to his body, Green rode the bicycle and then rowed 20 times. His blood pressure was checked and he was under constant watch.

Another patient, Walter Clingo, was ready to wear a 24-hour ambulatory electrocardiogram, called the Holter tape. Wires are attached to the patient and the heart activity is recorded on tape in a box worn by the patient.

The tape is brought back to Mohr's office and "we analyze them at home while they are walking and sleeping — their home activities," Mohr said.

"This entire program makes them better patients," Mohr added.

Until a few years ago, there were no structured exercise programs for the heart attack patient. Mohr said some would exercise back to health and others wouldn't.

A common misconception is that surgery or death usually accompanies the heart attack. But, Mohr said, "very rarely do heart attack patients have heart surgery, unless there are complications."

He noted the rehabilitation program is not only used by his patients, but also by other physicians who put their patients through the program.

Orlando Mauldin is being treated for a broken leg sustained in the crash. He was a passenger on a motorcycle driven by 38-year-old John Joe Boyce of Midland when the accident occurred at 10:55 p.m. Saturday in the 3300 block of West Front Avenue.

Police reports indicated both vehicles were eastbound when Hickman's vehicle began moving to the right to make a turn at a motel and collided with the motorcycle.

Dallas Cowboys hit campaign trail for for political candidates

DALLAS (AP) — Some politicians are hoping that, for most Texans, their heroes have always been cowboys — at least the football-playing variety.

Some members of the Dallas Cowboys, faced with idle time in the wake of the pro football players' strike, have hit the campaign trail for various candidates.

For example, Gov. Bill Clements is a big beneficiary.

Billy Joe DuPree — chief of Athletes for Clements — staged a door-to-door precinct walk over the weekend. DuPree even gave other campaigners a pep talk.

"Let's get out there today and do a good job of what we have to do," DuPree told his fellow volunteers.

Political consultants told The Dallas Morning News that because of the Cowboys' image as winners and as being a team with "integrity," their help is a bonus to any candidate.

Mike Richards, the Republican candidate for state comptroller, likes to tell his campaign audiences that a factor in his deciding to run was when Cowboys Coach Tom Landry agreed to be his statewide chairman.

Landry also took center stage last summer when Clements staged a whistle-stop train tour through Texas.

Former Cowboys Cliff Harris and Charlie Waters also have traveled the state with Clements.

Clements admitted the volunteers are important to his campaign.

"People relate to them when the character of Cliff or a Roger Staubach or a Landry or a Bob Lilly is known and accepted by the public...that they support me, it says something," Clements said.

Harris stresses that he is now a businessman.

"I support Gov. Clements because I believe what he has done is good for Texas," Harris said.

U.S. Rep. Jim Collins, who is challenging incumbent Democratic U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, also proudly voices Landry's support of his campaign.

The Dallas Cowboys' cheerleaders also got into the act — for a while.

The National Conservative Action Political Committee attempted to use the cheerleaders' image in an anti-Bentsen television ad earlier this year. That ad was withdrawn after the Cowboys threatened legal action.

DuPree said he and Landry never talk politics.

"It's strictly football," he said.

Family-owned store to be razed

PINE SPRINGS, Texas (AP) — A 67-year-old woman, the last of a family of West Texans that has sold groceries and gasoline for 54 years at the foot of Texas' tallest peak, has been ordered to leave to make way for a new national park.

The National Park Service, which acquired the homestead and surrounding countryside in 1970 for the Guadalupe Mountains National Park, announced recently the family of Walter Glover, who settled down on a ranch in the area in 1920, had lost its last claim to the property.

Officials said the death of Glover's 89-year-old wife, Bertha, in August left them no choice but to follow the law and clear the site.

Plans now call for a bulldozer to flatten the dilapidated wood-and-concrete store that the Glovers and daughter Mary Hinson have operated for over five decades.

The eviction notice has saddened Mrs. Hinson and enraged some nearby residents who have made the old store a regular stopping place for coffee, tobacco and conversation.

"Life without Pine Springs and Mary is kind of like losing a sweetheart," cowboy Mike Capron told the Dallas Times Herald. "Everybody hates to see change because it doesn't always mean progress."

But area residents, as well as Mrs. Hinson, said the government's decision is legally sound and can be carried out unless an exception is granted.

The Park Service condemned and purchased 85 acres of Glover property when Congress authorized creation of the national park in 1970.

Glover was 91 at the time and federal officials agreed, after a short legal battle, to allow the elderly couple to remain on the homestead for the rest of their lives.

Although Glover died in 1973, his wife continued to operate the store until she suffered a fatal stroke on Aug. 13. Soon after that, Mrs. Hinson received an eviction notice.

Mrs. Hinson said officials have given her until Dec. 31 to clear out the store and another dozen old buildings located on the homestead. But she said she hopes the government can be convinced to change its mind.

Mrs. Hinson said she needs the $1,500 the store brings in monthly to car for her disabled 48-year-old daughter in El Paso. She hopes the Park Service will allow her to run the store as a government concession.

But Park Superintendent Bill Dunmeyer said the store cannot be brought up to federal standards — even with major repairs.

"No final decision has been made, but, so far, we plan to raze the building" Dunmeyer said. "If we elected to put money into it and let Mrs. Hinson or anyone else operate it as a concession, we're talking thousands and thousands of dollars. That's not feasible in these tough economic times."

Dunmeyer said a final decision on the Pine Springs store — located just over a mile inside the park boundary — rests with the park service's regional office in Santa Fe, N.M.

"Right now we're checking the situation to see if the Texas Department of Historical Preservation agrees (to the demolition) or not," said Melody Webb, regional historian at the Santa Fe office.

Ms. Webb said the demolition also would have to be approved by officials in Washington because the buildings are over 50 years old.

Stephen Mitchell, a Van Horn attorney who has been close to the Glovers since his boyhood, said he is trying to rally some high-powered help for Mrs. Hinson's cause.

Mitchell has requested that U.S. Rep. Richard White and U.S. Sen. Lloyd Bentsen ask the Park Service to give Mrs. Hinson a five-year lease to operate the store as a concession.

"She's 67 and has no other livelihood," Mitchell said. "I'm no structural engineer and obviously the building is not new, but the store's not an eyesore to a lot of people. I imagine it could be made structurally sound."

But Mrs. Hinson is not optimistic.

"I guess it's over and done with except for the moving," she said.

Man robs Rodeway Inn at gunpoint

ODESSA — A pistol-wielding man robbed Rodeway Inn of an undetermined amount of money early Sunday, according to Odessa Police Department officials.

Ken Davis, a desk clerk at the inn which is located at 2021 E. 2nd St., said the robber came into the inn about 4 a.m. Sunday, displayed a blue steel revolver and demanded money from the cash register. Davis said he complied and the man left the premises on foot.

The robber was described as 25 years old, 5 feet, 10 inches tall, 170 pounds with brown hair and a brown mustache. He reportedly was wearing a green sweatshirt with a hood, blue toboggan and beige corduroy pants.

Probe continues into man's death

STANTON — Martin County Sheriff's Department officers are continuing their investigation into the apparent murder of an unidentified 60-year-old male whose body was found about noon Sunday five miles north of Interstate 20 on FM 3033.

According to department reports, investigating officers first thought the man had been killed by a bullet wound to the back of the head, but further investigation led officers to believe a sharp instrument was used to deliver the fatal blow.

The man, described as white, 5 feet, 8 inches, 150 pounds with blue eyes, is believed to have been killed at another location. Evidence surrounding the body indicated he apparently was killed and then dragged to the location where he was found.

He was clad in light blue boxer shorts, a white T-shirt and white socks and was wearing a wedding band when found.

Sheriff Dan Saunders and Deputies Charles Sebastian and Mike Welling are investigating. Department reports indicate an autopsy will be performed and officers are still trying to establish the man's identity.

Soviet Union has dog difficulties

By JOHN P. WALLACH

WASHINGTON — It's a dog life in the Soviet Union — for dogs.

That is the conclusion of a new report by the Advanced International Studies Institute which cites a growing number of complaints by Russian citizens that more and more people are acquiring dogs merely to benefit from government subsidies that cut consumer prices on meat by as much as one-half.

Even worse, Sovietskaia Rossiia, a Soviet magazine, recently reported that since the price of world-famous Russian furs has skyrocketed, "a booming business" has been created by black marketeers illegally manufacturing dogskin hats and coats.

A hat goes for 200 rubles (about $260). "An enterprising salesman can sell four to five hats a day," the magazine reports. Most popular, it says, are hats made from "Irish setters and collies simulating red fox fur; German shepherds, simulating wolf fur; Pomeranians, simulating polar fox fur."

The pelts of larger dogs, it goes on, such as Saint Bernards and large collies, often are used to manufacture fur coats. Lured by enormous consumer demand, the dog hunters no longer are satisfied just to skin stray dogs, the magazine reports.

"They go for pets owned by people, sometimes shooting them in full view of the helpless owner," the article states. How is that possible? Apparently the "skin traders" are exploiting a generally hostile attitude toward "undisciplined pet owners."

In a problem not uncommon in other countries, the magazine admonishes the owners for allowing their pets to relieve themselves on the streets and in public parks and playgrounds and for "generally evading the responsibility to clean up after their pets."

Dog biting also has become a large problem. According to figures published by Pravda, the official Communist Party newspaper, at least 190,000 individuals reported being bitten by dogs in 1980. "An additional 500,000 report to have suffered a trauma after having been attacked by dogs," says the report.

This may represent another astonishing fact — that Russia's dogs are not being fed very well because the meat purchased at discount prices is being consumed by (you guessed it) consumers. You see, dog owners, the report states, benefit from subsidies totalling about $2 billion a year.

That means that if you have a dog, you are entitled to as much as 50 percent reductions on meat products, milk products as well as bread and cereals. This has caused a consumer revolt — among non-dog owners. One reader writing to Sovietskaia Rossiia called for "a decree to destroy all dogs."

Another wrote that "only service dogs are needed," declaring that pets should be done away with. "The others do not have the right to food, and consequently, to life," he contended, decrying the fact that pet owners are buying up "thousands of tons of food ... for unproductive animals."

Soviet law provides that only municipal dogcatchers and "special brigades of communal and veterinary services" have the authority "to hunt down stray animals." But this, according to the magazine, is a law more honored in the breach than in practice.

Red Star, Russia's military newspaper, for example, reported on Sept. 9 that a certain major used dogs as "target practice, shooting them from his apartment's balcony in front of the military town's population, including children."

Above all, it is the special privileges enjoyed by dog owners however that are having their effect on the rest of the population. Indeed it may have become more profitable to have a dog than to have a child.

"Considering the cost of water for baths, gas for preparing meals and state-supplied veterinary care," a Trud article complained, "dog and cat owners make out better than families with children." They have to begin to pay for water, gas and other services "at the time of a child's birth."

"Thus," the newspaper concludes, "it is hard to justify continuing the privileges enjoyed by pet owners in comfortable city apartments."

Maryland canal town considered for capital

By LINDA DUFFIELD
AP Writer

WILLIAMSPORT, Md. (AP) — This sleepy little western Maryland town once was considered for the nation's capital.

But it lost out to Washington, D.C. — which is just fine with the 2,500 folks who live here today.

"They like it the way it is now," said Melvin Kaplan, who has spent his 73 years in Williamsport. "It is the best place in the world. We are a very historic-minded place because we feel in this area."

The C&O Canal Park Service is planning to turn a stretch of the Chesapeake and Ohio canal at Williamsport into a major tourist attraction.

According to Vic Stanton of the C&O Canal Park Service, the potential for the are a becoming a major tourist attraction would depend, in large part, "on how the town would want to sell it. It is up to the town, what they want to do."

Stanton said the historic structures on the canal would be restored if federal funds come through, including an aqueduct and a turning basin.

As for the town, Kaplan said people there don't mind a few tourists, but are against over-commercialization of the area.

"They are not interested in that at all," he said. "They don't want Willismsport to become a Gettysburg or Harpers Ferry.

"We welcome tourists, but we don't want all these various kinds of shops and those kinds of things," he added. "We want them (tourists) to come and visit and enjoy themselves, and when they have had enough of Williamsport, they can leave with good tidings."

Located along the Potomac River at what is now the intersections of Routes 11 and 81, the town had its heyday between 1850 and 1924, when the operation of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal turned it into a busy river town.

The canal ceased operations following a flood in 1924, but the town and its residents still bear the imprint of the day when barges filled with coal and other products made the 185-mile trek between Cumberland and the Georgetown area of Washington, D.C.

"There is one thing about Williamsport," said Kaplan, who is president of the local C&O Canal Club. "You don't tell Williamsporters what to do. You ask if they will go along with you and do things."

That attitude, he said, is the town's heritage from the canal workers.

"The old canal boatmen were strong-minded about boating, and a lot of people were descended from these boat families," Kaplan said. "And the people who came here just came from way back in the pre-Revolutionary War days and they just grew up with this."

Williamsporters are nothing if they aren't individualistic. Voters do not register as Democrats and Republicans for local elections. Instead, they have the choice of signing up as members of the Progressive or Citizens parties.

Another indication residents are set in their ways came in 1979, when the town forced the mass resignation of its Historic District Commission, created two years earlier to preserve the town's historic landscape.

Newspaper accounts at the time report more than 800 citizens signed a petition calling for the abolishment of the panel after its members refused to approve a request by a resident to put siding on the front of his house.

"They (commission members) didn't know how the town felt about these things," said Kaplan. "If they had appointed some of the older people to the committee, things would have been a lot better and the historic commission would still be in operation."

Antietam Battlefield, the site of the bloodiest single-day battle of the Civil War, is also in Washington County, as are other areas laden with the history of the War between the States.

Burn holes' first aid

By BETTY W. KINSER
Copley News Service

What happens when a careless smoker burns a hole in your favorite suit jacket? Well, you can try to convert him or her to a non-smoker by threatening to push the cigarette up his or her nose, but I doubt if that would mend the hole in your jacket.

Now is not too soon to start hoping that, if someone does burn your jacket, it falls in a "mendable" spot.

On or near elbow: No problem. Cover with suede or leather elbow patches. This will, of course, sportify your jacket, but that is better than a jacket you can't wear except in the dark.

On the lapel: If the weave of the fabric is loose and nubby, you can snip a patch from the underneath side of the lapel or from the hem allowance and use it to mend the hole — if you are neat about it. Or, if the hole falls in the right place, you can always wear a lapel pin or flower. (Not good if you happen to be male!)

Sleeve near hem: Consider cuffing the sleeves with a contrasting or coordinating fabric. The same fabric can then be used to trim collar and lapels.

Other cures:

— Collar and lapels can be removed altogether and the raw edges bound with fold-over braid.

— Pockets can be removed (on some fabrics) or made smaller.

— Yokes can be replaced with suede ones or ones made of other "trim" fabric.

— Jackets can be shortened and-or made a little trimmer by taking in seams.

— On some jackets appliques may be used to cover burned spots, but do be discreet. The applique must "fit in" with the jacket and must be in a plausible location. An applique of a teddy bear on the seat of your jacket would make people question your fashion tastes or your sanity.

Moral: Don't throw away a good piece until have have explored all the possibilities of a cover-up.

Family Services of Midland names John Young new executive director

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

John Young has been named executive director of Family Services of Midland, effective Oct. 1. "I'm Executive Director/Practioner," he said, "which means I do counseling as well as administration of the agency. I'm an administrator/supervisor/counselor." Family Services of Midland is a participating agency in United Way.

Young received both his BA degree in psychology (1964) and his MA degree is psychology (1967) from The University of Texas at Austin. He received a Master of Social Work degree in 1978 from the University of Michigan at Ann Arbor.

Young has served as a caseworker with the Texas Department of Human Resources. During his eight years with DHR, he provided direct services to clients in four different programs: 1. general casework services, 2. a DHR/Vocational Rehabilitation project, 3. Child Welfare, and 4. the EPSDT medical and dental screening program.

Since 1979 Young has been a counselor with Family Services of Midland. In addition to providing individual, marital and family counseling to both adults and children, he has taught Family Life Education and workshops.

Young said his career objectives were "to address community needs on the broader level of program development and administration as well as on the more focused level of clinical casework with individual clients and families."

Concerning Family Services of Midland, Young said, "The primary service remains and will continue to be individual, marital and family counseling with adults and children."

All counseling done at Family Services of Midland in confidential. The agency uses a sliding-fee scale based on family size and income. "We help people deal with such life problems as marital or parent-child conflict, divorce adjustment, depression, confusion and major life changes," said Young. "Problems relating to the individual or family are of major concern to our staff of qualified and experienced counselors. Our effort with people and their concerns is to help bring about growth, change and more satisfying lives."

"In balancing our individual, marital and family programs, we have personal education and development programs, and will be offering workshops such as Stepfamily Survival, Effective Parenting and Divorce Adjustment," he said.

In explaining these workshops, Young said, "Stepfamily Survival addresses the specific problems involved in step-parenting. Those problems include such distructive myths as 'instant love,' 'step is less,' 'there is no differenace between first and second marriage families.' In addition, it addresses interpersonal problems such as divided loyalties, sense of loss, discipline and 'How do you maintain a good marital relationship when there can be so much disagreement about the children and when the children demand so much attention?'"

Young explained Effective Parenting by saying, "Usually childhood misbehavior has four causes: the child is seeking 1. attention, 2. power, 3. revenge, or 4. pity. In this course we try to identify where the child is coming from and how parents can develop a relationship not based on these four factors. We learn how to engage in giving the child encouragement, actively listening to the child and helping the child solve his or her own problems, giving the child clear 'I-messages' on what we want, and learn how to employ natural and logical consequences. The goal of the course is to help you help your child to learn self-discipline, self-motivation and self-assurance."

Dr. Bruce Fisher's book, "Rebuilding: When Your Relationship Ends," is the basis of the course on Divorce Adjustment. "The focus of the course is divorce can also be a beginning," Young said. "We can use the pain of divorce to finally focus on and deal with a lot of personal issues that we never stopped to deal with before, and which were probably a part of the root of the divorce. It's a way of cleaning house, so that finally we are better prepared to live a fulfilling life on our own, or are free to enter a new relationship with a better chance of success."

He said if anyone is interested in taking any of these courses, please call Family Services at 683-4241.

"We can also contract with churches or other groups to provide these programs," he added.

"The direction that I want the agency to take is for us to address the life cycle of both the individual and the family," said Young. "We will be developing workshops and programs dealing with children, young adults, marital communication, effective parenting, problem of teenagers for whom listening and 'I-messages' are not enough, divorce adjustment for both divorced people and their children, programs for stepfamilies — both parents and children, and additional life stages of individuals."

Young said he would also like to see the agency offer self-help groups — "Mutual self-help groups that can provide a lot of things individual therapy can't provide, in the same way individual therapy can provide things group therapy can't provide."

YMCA offers course

Personal Skills Mapping will be available beginning Nov. 1 at the Positive Lifestyle Center at Central YMCA. The Personal Skills Map is a major breakthrough as a guide for individuals, couples and groups to use to further develop their skills and potential for healthy and creative living, according to Charles Silverman, program director.

Developed in a six-year research program, the PSM is a positive self-assessment instrument that provides helpful information on current skill strengths and suggests directions for growth and change, Silverman said. A person or company can assess skills in areas such as time management, decision making, stress management, sales orientation, commitment, assertion, growth motivation and others. It is also a guide for students concerned about career/life planning.

DEAR ABBY

Trick-or-treaters can take the money and run

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Halloween will soon be here, and despite all the publicity about children who have been victims of poisoned candy and apples with razor blades, thousands of youngsters will be out "trick-or-treating" again this year.

I pray you will print this suggestion: Instead of handing out candy or fruit, get several rolls of pennies from the bank, and when the youngsters show up, drop two or three pennies into their trick-or-treat bags. The kids will get a kick out of counting their money when they get home, and their parents will rest a little easier.

This may not solve the problem entirely, but it might help. — MARY B., CHARLESTON, S.C.

DEAR MARY: Good suggestion. And regarding this trick-or-treat business: In the good old days, youngsters would tour their own neighborhoods to show off their Halloween costumes and receive a modest treat.

In recent years, however, gangs of older kids have gone all over town demanding booty in exchange for "protection" against having one's garbage cans overturned, windows soaped, eggs thrown and property vandalized. This is blackmail! Law enforcers everywhere have had to swell their ranks in order to protect citizens.

In these crazy times, young children should not be out alone at night unless accompanied by an adult.

DEAR ABBY: I have a very good friend who always brings her 4-year-old son along when she comes to play bridge at my home. The boy interrupts when adults are talking, runs around the house making as much noise as he can, walks on my furniture and is generally a nuisance. I've tried to keep him amused with toys, color books, TV, etc., but he wants to be where his mother is.

When he misbehaves, his mother meekly asks him to "stop" — but he pays no attention to her.

I don't think it's my place to discipline the child, but I am at the end of my rope. What do you suggest? — FRUSTRATED HOSTESS

DEAR FRUSTRATED: Ask your friend to please get a sitter and leave the boy at home. Explain that the child is bored in the company of adults and he misbehaves to get attention. If your friend continues to bring the boy, don't invite her back until the boy grows up.

DEAR ABBY: I met this guy I'll call Ritchie one night. He said he was 24. (I'm 20.) I really fell for him hard. We dated for about a week. He told me he lived at home with his parents. Then when I tried calling him, his father answered the phone and called Ritchie, but when I said, "Hello, Ritchie? This is Terri," he hung up the phone.

I have tried calling him several times since then, but as soon as he hears my voice he hangs up on me. The last time I said, "Please don't hang up, I want to talk to you," but he hung up before I even finished the sentence.

What could the matter be? If I did something to upset him or make him angry, I wish he would tell me. We were getting along great together. I can't figure it out, can you? — OUT OF IDEAS

DEAR OUT: You are "out" all right, and better off for it. In any case, Ritchie has given you a very clear message: He doesn't want to talk to you, which I think says it all.

Doctor advoctes treating snake bite by removing affected tissue

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Medical treatment for snake bite sometimes can be more dangerous than the venom from the bite, says a Galveston doctor who suggests a new treatment for victims.

Dr. Ted Huang, a researcher and practitioner on the plastic surgery staff of the University of Texas Medical Branch in Galveston, says the traditional treatment for snake bites — using a horse serum — causes a high number of serious side effects.

Huang favors treating the snake bite as a surgical emergency rather than a medical problem. He says he has successfully treated patients by simply removing the tissue that has become affected by the snake venom.

"We don't give the patient any antivenin serum," he said. "We remove the hemorrhagic tissue," or tissue where the venom has caused bleeding.

Using this technique on 206 patients between 1970 and 1979 has resulted in no deaths and only one amputation — the tip of a finger that had been struck by the fangs of a cobra, Huang says.

"The death rate from snake bite is small," he says. "As a result, we should focus our attention more on avoiding disability."

He says that left untreated, only one snake bite victim in 5,000 will die.

"If you inject 8,000 victims with horse serum, three of them will die as a result of allergic reaction," the doctor says.

Horse serum for snake bite is produced by immunizing a horse with a small amount of snake venom. The serum, of antibodies produced in the horse's blood, is extracted and injected in human victims of snake bites. The serum neutralizes the venom.

But Huang said, "The allergic reaction is very high to the serum...You take care of the bite and then you have to take care of the reaction to the treatment."

Dr. Lawrence Guzzardi of York, Pa., head of the toxicology division of the American College of Emergency Physicians, strongly disagrees with Huang's views.

He said Texas physicians are the only ones in the whole country who routinely treat snake bite with immediate emergency excision. The rest of the country, he said, uses antivenin serum and amputations are rare, only about 5 percent of the patients. Huang says amputations approach 30 percent with the serum treatment.

Guzzardi did not criticize the Texas treatment, noting "the Texas school may be right," but he noted that doctors "in the other 49 states use antivenin (serum)."

He said snake bites are so rare that it is difficult to get good studies that clearly reflect the proper treatment. As a result, said Guzzardi, "of all the controversies, the one that has produced the most fire is snake bite."

Huang says most snake venom attacks the clotting factor in human blood, causing bleeding. One patient, he recalled, was so severely affected that he required 57 units of blood during his treatment.

But such extremes can be avoided with prompt surgical attention, he says.

Life-threatening effects of a snake bite can be averted if the patient undergoes surgery within 60 to 90 minutes of being bitten Huang says. The effects depend upon where the victim was bitten, how much venom he received and the type of snake.

"By three hours (after a bite), the patient is usually either very sick or very well," Huang says.

He estimates there are an average of 800 to 1,000 snake bites a year in Texas and about 25 a year end up at the Galveston hospital.

Rattlesnakes and copperhead bites are the most common, with water moccasin a particular hazard in swampy areas, Huang says.

Jean Chris, who has fished the Kuskokwim River in Alaska for as long as she can remember, hangs salmon out to dry at the fishing camp.

'Subsistence is life'

NAPAKIAK, Alaska — Each spring, for so many springs that no one really knows how long, the people of Nunapitchuk have come by boat to their tiny fishing camps on the Kuskokwim River near here to catch the salmon that sustain them year-round.

Janet Chris, who says she has forgotten her age, has done it for as long as she can remember. "A lot of people," she says as her ulu knife flashes over a day's catch, "depend mostly on fish for food."

Carl White has done it for almost all of his 63 years, fishing the Kuskokwim and sharing his catch with those too old to come here. This year, however, others share with him.

It is subsistence, an ancient way of life, thousands of years old but still practiced in Alaska. And, Carl White says simply, "Subsistence is life."

In the cycle of the seasons, subsistence for the people of Nunapitchuk may mean fishing, hunting or trapping, but so important is it to thousands of rural Alaskans, mostly natives, that the state and federal governments have established special subsistence laws to protect it. When fish or game are scarce, for example, commercial and sport activities may be halted to ensure ample food stocks for those dependent on them.

But now a mainly urban group of Alaskans, claiming that such laws discriminate againt them, have placed on the state's November ballot by petition a measure repealing the state's subsistence laws. They claim that subsistence hunting and fishing could deplete and even destroy wildlife populations.

SUPPORTERS OF THE subsistence laws say the move threatens the life and the way of life of Alaskan villagers. It puts rural Alaskans against the far more numerous urban population, a division with racial overtones because most of those the subsistence laws benefit are native Eskimos, Indians and Aleuts.

The battle is being joined at a time when rising costs, particularly for fuel, may force some remote villagers still closer to the land for their food. And at a time of sweeping change in a state that is increasingly urbanized, the vote may well determine whether an older way of life will survive.

"What's happening across the board in Alaska is change," said Jane Angvik, a member of the Anchorage Municipal Assembly and the leader of the campaign to defend subsistence laws. She calls the laws "a public statement that the state of Alaska supports that subsistence life style. To repeal that law is to say we will let the trend of all history take its course so that in 50 years there won't be a life style like that."

Don Mitchell, a lawyer for the Alaska Federation of Natives who has worked for subsistence laws, added, "This vote in November is going to decide what Alaska is going to be for the next few years, what values we'll share, not native or urban or rural, but as Alaskans. It's a referendum on what people in town want things to look like."

"WE'RE NOT OUT TO TAKE away, we're out to protect," replied Sam McDowell, the former president of the Izaak Walton League in Anchorage and now the leader of Alaskans for Equal Hunting and Fishing Rights, the repeal sponsors. He denies that the vote in November will threaten rural residents.

"The only time subsistence lifestyle is threatened," he said, "is when there's a snowstorm and they can't get to the post office to pick up their government checks."

McDowell contends that the laws discriminate against commercial and sport activities and undermine fish and game management that ensures future stocks. "The aboriginal man," he said, "is no conservationist."

The state's subsistence law dates to 1978 and, in effect, provides that when fish and game supplies are reduced, sport and commercial fishing or hunting may be curtailed to allow subsistence fishing and hunting to continue. But it also allows subsistence to be curbed or eliminated as well, if necessary.

"In no event is subsistence allowed to threaten (future) use," said Dennis D. Kelso, director of the state's Division of Subsistence. "The fear that subsistence will gobble up everything else is kind of overblown. In times of resource shortage, subsistence users are only the last to be cut out."

It is unknown how many thousands of Alaskans are tied to subsistence to some degree. Many scattered communities along the coast, on the rivers or astride game migration routes are where they are only because they are close to plentiful food supplies.

THE PEOPLE OF NUNAPITCHUK, for example, dry, smoke and store much of their salmon catch to sustain them through the long winter. "It's always on the table, every meal," Janet Chris, who speaks Yupik Eskimo, said through a translator. "If there is no fish, people would starve."

But most villagers are tied to the state's dominant cash economy as well. Part of their annual salmon catch is sold to seafood processors. The money pays for staples, electricity, some luxuries, home heating oil, clothing and goods that help support their subsistence activities — guns for hunting, motors for boats, gasoline to power them, nets and so on.

"It's impossible to live life without cash," says White. "Subsistence replaces (some) cash. Everything is sky high and that makes it much harder to live an easier life."

"It (cash) makes life more comfortable," says Larry Chase, 26, whose life is divided between a job in nearby Bethel and fishing here, "but we still need subsistence."

But McDowell contends that subsistence is a threat to Alaska's bounty of fish and game, which is under increasing pressures from the state's growing, outdoors-oriented urban population. He said subsistence laws preclude scientific management of fish and game rsources, an assertion that Kelso and others reject.

"WHAT RIGHT," MCDOWELL asked, "does anyone have to destroy the resources of the Last Frontier?" He cited investigators' claims that subsistence-hunted polar bear hides have been bartered for cocaine. "They're going to totally annihilate the polar bear in the name of subsistence," he charged.

The cocaine allegations involve a handful among thousands of subsistence users. Other charges have involved illicit walrus ivory sales or slaughter of caribou.

McDowell also says the laws illegally "give to one and take from another." He adds, "I am pro-equal rights. Subsistence is causing conflict and division among the people of Alaska and foreclosing Americans' rights to the future enjoyment of Alaska's fish and game."

If the referendum is approved, it will allow fish and game regulations to distinguish only between sport and commercial activities, and forbid the state from enacting any fishing and hunting regulations based on "past use or past dependence."

"What are you going to replace (subsistence) with?" Jim Magdanz, a state subsistence officer, asks, "In village after village, there is nothing."

"Whatever the outcome," says Magdanz, who works with those who rely on subsistence, "the entire burden rests on the villages. The entire state will be determining the quality of life in the villages.

"The stakes are all here."

STATE AND FEDERAL OFFICIALS — including Secretary of the Interior James G. Watt — have warned that repeal of the state subsistence laws could lead the federal government to take over fish and game management in large parts or all of the state. The 1980 Alaska lands bill passed by Congress sets out subsistence requirements for state management of fish and game on both state and federal land.

Alaskan natives fought hard for that provision, and the implications of a repeal of state law can only be guessed at.

McDowell dismisses the possibility of a federal takeover and says he also wants to eliminate federal subsistence laws.

"We're going to get rid of all priority subsistence laws, federal and state," he vows.

"If all these laws fall away," says Mitchell of the Alaska Federation of Natives, "the competing demands will end up in a classic case of over-harvest."

Whichever side prevails, the repeal effort is likely to exact a painfully divisive toll on Alaska. Says Mitchell, "It's going to be a very bad situation for all Alaskans to try to put their state back together."

The first year's payment and buyer qualification will be calculated equivalent to a rate of 8½% for 95% loan-to-value. Interest will be charged at a rate of 13½% for the first 6 months of the loan. After the first 6 months interest will be charged at the most recent 6months Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. Payments on these mortgages are graduated so as to increase the principal and interest payments 7.50% each year for the next 4 years. At the end of the first 5 year period, the graduation in payments will cease. A new payment schedule will be computed using a variable rate mortgage to amortize the remaining balance over the remaining 25 years of the mortgage based upon the then current Treasury Bill rate plus 4.25%. The 7½% maximum increase can be more if the original loan principle exceeds 125%. At each 5 year anniversary date, the payment may be adjusted to allow the remaining payments to fully amortize the loan. ANNUAL PERCENTAGE RATE APPROXIMATELY 14.28%
