President in Switzerland for meeting with Assad

By FRANK CORMIER

GENEVA, Switzerland (AP) — President Carter arrived here today to meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad in talks the Syrian leader said he hoped would become a "turning point" in the search for a Middle East peace.

"I believe it is the year of hope for substantial progress," Carter said as he and Assad met briefly with reporters before beginning their discussion.

"We are greatly optimistic," said Assad, quickly adding that a "magic wand" was not at hand but that "obviously there is the will to look for a solution."

Before leaving London, site of a seven-nation weekend summit conference, Carter conferred with the leaders of Britain, France and West Germany and the four issued a warning on the status of Berlin.

They said that East-West detente would be seriously threatened if the Communists continue efforts to make East Berlin an integral part of East Germany, rather than a sector of a four-power city under the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union.

Upon arriving here Carter said "we hope to be back" later this year for renewed Geneva talks between Israel and her Arab neighbors.

It was not immediately clear whether Carter meant he personally would return to Switzerland for a Geneva peace conference or was simply referring to the fact that the United States and the Soviet Union are co-chairmen of the stalled conference.

A senior official aboard the President's jet disclosed on the flight from London that Carter would meet in Washington with Shimon Peres if, as expected, Peres becomes prime minister of Israel as a result of the May 17 Israeli elections. Peres, now defense minister, is serving as acting prime minister.

The official said such a meeting probably would take place very soon after the elections.

Carter was scheduled to fly back to London tonight and to attend a North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting here Tuesday before returning to the United States Tuesday night.

At their weekend summit conference here, Carter and the leaders of six other major industrial nations agreed to maintain the momentum of economic growth, try to keep trade free and make a joint study of ways to produce cheaper nuclear energy without producing raw materials for nuclear weapons.

Carter said his meeting with Assad and other Arab and Israeli leaders would put him "in a better condition to judge the areas of agreement...and disagreement."

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance said Assad's views "are going to be exceedingly important" in the formulation of the Carter administration's "final views" about what it can do to promote a settlement in the long-troubled region.

Geneva was chosen as neutral ground for the meeting after the 47-year-old Syrian refused to go to Washington to outline his views on how peace with Israel could be achieved. Carter has already met in Washington with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and King Hussein of Jordan, and meets there later this month with Crown Prince Fahd of Saudi Arabia.

Assad has repeatedly insisted that Israel must give up all the Arab territory it occupied in the 1967 war, and Israel is just as determined to hold on to some of the Golan Heights territory it seized from Syria, along with other strategic territory.

In what was regarded as a concession, however, Assad announced last week he was willing to discuss demilitarized zones between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Senior Israeli officials in Tel Aviv today expressed concern about Carter's intentions. "The specter of a forced solution is floating around," said one. "Until now we regarded the Carter administration as an unknown quantity, but we are starting to worry."

Earlier today, Carter met with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and then discussed Berlin at a gathering of the occupation powers — Carter, Giscard d'Estaing and British Prime Minister James Callaghan — and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

The four leaders had also been expected to discuss Carter's hopes of restraining international arms sales and other topics of mutual concern.

The other government leaders who met privately with Carter came calling at his door, but the American president drove 2.4 miles for coffee, croissants and conversation with Giscard d'Estaing.

American officials said the two presidents discussed Carter's push to curb international arms sales, the search for Arab-Israeli peace, East-West relations and European political developments. But contrary to expectations, they said there was no discussion of the joint French-British effort to win landing rights in New York for the Concorde supersonic airliner.

Giscard in an interview with NBC-TV's Today program said continued refusal to let the Concorde land at New York's Kennedy International Airport would upset the spirit of unity forged at the weekend summit because it would run counter to the principles of free trade and exchanges espoused by the seven-nation meeting.

President Carter arrives in Geneva, where he is to have talks with Syrian President Hafez Assad on the Middle East situation.

Hailstones hit Midland; twister seen near Lamesa

Midlanders rushed to put cars in garages Sunday night as a severe thunderstorm and hail hit the city.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal reported hail from one-fourth to one-half inch in diameter, scattered over a wide area of the Permian Basin. Hail up to 1¼ inches was reported in parts of Odessa.

Lamesa police reported a tornado on the ground three miles north of the city, but said no damage was done.

City officials in Midland this morning had received no reports of hail damage.

Power failed in parts of the city for a brief period, when lightning tripped power circuits, Texas Electric Service Co. spokesman Bill McGrew said.

Small hail also was reported in Lamesa and Crane.

The forecast for tonight includes a 40 per cent chance of more rain and there is a 20 per cent chance of rain Tuesday. Skies should be partly cloudy and weather humid through Tuesday.

The low tonight is expected to be in the upper 50s. The high Tuesday should be near 80. Winds tonight are expected to be 5 to 10 mph from the southeast.

Skies this morning were clear or only partly cloudy in Andrews, Lamesa, Big Spring, Stanton, Rankin, Big Lake and Odessa.

Heavy rain, marble size hail and strong winds struck the San Angelo area early today as thunderstorms spread northward out of the Lower Rio Grande Valley into West Texas.

Wind gusts of up to 45 m.p.h. were recorded near San Angelo at about 3 a.m.

Many areas of the state were under severe thunderstorm warnings during the night. Hail was also reported in West Central Texas.

Skies were cloudy over most of the state early today and temperatures ranged from near 50 in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the middle 70s along the gulf coast. Some early morning readings included 58 at Amarillo, 68 at Wichita Falls, 64 at Texarkana, 69 at Dallas and Austin, 67 at Houston, 70 at Corpus Christi, 65 at Del Rio, 59 at Lubbock and 54 at Dalhart.

Skies over the state were to be mostly cloudy today and scattered thunderstorms were forecast. Afternoon highs were expected to be mostly in the 70s and 80s with a few readings in the 90s expected in the Big Bend country.

Canal treaty talks resume after threats

By KENNETH J. FREED

WASHINGTON (AP) — Panama Canal talks today resume following sharp Panamanian threats and accusations that the United States is delaying a final accord.

Chief Panamanian negotiator Romulo Escobar Betancourt and his team arrived here Sunday for talks with U.S. negotiators Sol Linowitz and Ellsworth Bunker.

The new round of meetings will be held following threatening talk from Panamanian strongman Gen. Omar Torrijos.

In a Mexican news conference over the weekend, Torrijos was quoted as warning that if a new accord to replace the original canal treaty of 1903 is not completed, Americans in Panama will be "without water, without lights, without a canal and without gringos."

Keeping with what seems to be one of the most secretive operations in American foreign policy, U.S. officials had no comment. The Carter administration has steadfastly refused significant comment on any aspect of the treaty talks.

The new round of talks is the 15th extension of discussions stretching back to 1968.

Since the last round of talks ended in February, Torrijos and Escobar have made several angry statements about U.S. tactics.

Escobar, for instance, has said the U.S. negotiators quibble over every house and street to be given up, even though Panama has surrendered to several American demands.

Torrijos' major complaint deals with what he sees as President Carter's lack of commitment to completing the talks. "We have to have a definition from the government of Mr. Carter during this new round of negotiations," he said in Mexico.

When asked what he expects from the new talks, Torrijos expressed hope, but then voiced his threat about isolating the Canal Zone.

Torrijos was in Mexico to meet with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, who said completion of the talks "will condition future relations between the United States and Latin America."

In spite of the public dismay about a lack of progress, the Panamanians have acknowledged forward movement in several key areas.

Although U.S. officials have not confirmed all the details, it has been reported from Panama that the negotiators agreed to a treaty expiring in the year 2000, when Panama will take full control.

The reports also say the United States has won its demand to act as a co-guarantor of the neutrality of the waterway.

All that remains to be worked out in these areas is how much of the Canal Zone will be turned over immediately and whether this matter should be dealt with in the treaty or in accompaning agreements.

Compromise budget resolution desired

By JOHN CHADWICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House and Senate conference committee, divided on the issue of defense spending, may be near agreement on a compromise resolution that will establish a congressional target for federal spending for the 1978 fiscal year.

The Senate plans debate this week on proposals to make its anti-filibuster rule more effective. And President Carter's energy program and economic stimulus measures are among other matters on which Congress will be focusing its attention this week.

The Senate-House conference committee hoped to reach agreement later today on the compromise budget resolution, which will set spending and revenue targets for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

One key difference between House and Senate spending plans is over defense. The Senate approved spending $111.6 billion, which is $300 million less than Carter asked, but the House cut its defense figure to $109.9 billion.

Over-all, the Senate resolution projects a $63.5 billion deficit for 1978, while the House figure is $66.3 billion.

Meanwhile, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee appeared to be ready to approve President Carter's proposal to create a Cabinet-level Department of Energy. The committee's proposal is expected to provide for a sharing of power over natural gas and oil prices between the department secretary and a three-member regulatory board.

Under this compromise plan, worked out by senior committee members and the White House, the President would have the final say over price decisions if the energy secretary and the board disagree.

The House commerce energy and power subcommittee will devote the week to hearings on Carter's energy program. Opening testimony will be on plans to give tax breaks to people who insulate their homes.

The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee scheduled a mid-week hearing on the over-all energy program.

A housing bill on which the House began debate last week is slated for a final vote before the House moves on to a foreign aid measure. The housing bill includes authorization of $12.5 billion for community development bloc grants.

On Thursday the House is to take up a compromise version of the tax stimulus bill, on which agreement was reached with Senate conferees last week. The bill includes an average tax cut of $111 for some 46 million taxpayers who use the standard deduction.

The filibuster rules changes being brought up in the Senate would leave intact the present requirement for a three-fifths majority, or 60 votes, to put the debate-limiting cloture rule into effect. But it would curb the use of dilatory tactics after that.

In recommending the revisions, the Senate Rules Committee said that even after cloture has been voted it is possible through various delaying procedures to stave off final action on a measure for weeks.

Maggie's worry ends as she finds a home

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Maggie can stop worrying now. She has a home.

It's plain and simple: two time-worn rooms in the back of an old-fashioned church that's almost in the country.

She has a hotplate to cook her meals, a comfortable bed and a couple of chairs, and a reading lamp to study by.

And the bathroom is just down the hall.

This meek and unassuming soul has a place to stay.

"Oh, I am blessed," she said with the sweet sincerity of an innocent child. "Talk about somebody being blessed, I am blessed."

A few days before, she wasn't so sure that she would be.

Maggie, who's 70 and widowed, had to move out of the ramshackle place she had lived in for about five years. The old dingy house is to be moved and Maggie had to get out.

But it was home — that old rent house.

She had no place to go. And the income from her two pensions limited where she could go — assuming she could find a place.

She did. Rather, some kindly folks found a place for her.

Marion Fisher, who runs the Senior Citizens program here, heard of Maggie's plight.

Rent houses are hard to come by in this town, she said. Especially cheap ones. Maggie was paying $30 per month and bills; she couldn't afford much more.

Solution.

Mrs. Fisher recalled a rooming place for the unfortunate, for those good people who couldn't afford much. People like Maggie.

It was ran by the Rev. and Mrs.

Judge gives Hearst five years probation

By LINDA DEUTSCH

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Patricia Hearst, who pleaded no contest to assault and robbery charges, was given five years probation today by a judge who said she was no threat to society.

Superior Court Judge E. Talbot Callister acted after the prosecutor joined the defense in asking that Miss Hearst spend no further time in jail.

Callister said, "I don't think there is a heart in America that isn't full of compassion for the parents." He called Randolph and Catherine Hearst "good people who love their daughter."

Probation does not necessarily mean freedom for Miss Hearst, since she is under a seven-year prison sentence for robbing a San Francisco bank. She was freed six months ago on $1.25 million bail pending appeal of that conviction and the 9th U.S. District Court of Appeals is expected to rule soon in that case.

If her appeal is rejected, she could return to serve at least 14 months before being eligible for probation.

The slender, 23-year-old Miss Hearst stood surrounded by her attorneys as the judge pronounced sentence. All four members of her original defense team came to court for the sentencing. Her parents sat in a front row in the packed courtroom.

Callister told Miss Hearst she would have to make restitution to those whose property she damaged when she fired two machine guns in a wild, sporting goods store fracas May 16, 1974.

Miss Hearst spoke not a word during the procedings. She was hustled in and out of court under private guard.

Deputy Dist. Atty. Sam Mayerson said he felt that there had been too much effort by law enforcement "not to show favoritism to this defendant." Thus, he said, she stood the risk of being punished too harshly.

"It would be wrong to satisfy those who say there is special treatment for the rich by punishing this defendant inordinately," he said.

He declared: "There has never been another case like this and I sincerely hope there will not be again."

Both Mayerson and Miss Hearst's attorney, F. Lee Bailey, stressed that the newspaper heiress was a kidnap victim when she committed crimes. The judge said that was a mitigating factor in his decision and he had ample evidence that she would commit no further crimes.

HBF plans downtown building

In a ceremony dedicated to the late Bill Faudree, ground was broken this morning for a new five-story office building — One Marienfeld Place — at the corner of West Texas and Marienfeld streets.

The building is being erected by the HBF Corp., which also built and owns the recently completed HBF Building just across the street north.

HBF Construction, Inc., is the general contractor for the new $4.3 million building project. The Lubbock firm of Stiles, Roberts, Messersmith and Johnson has the architectural contract.

Harrell Feldt, president of the Midland Chamber of Commerce, presided at the ceremony. Congratulatory talks were given by Mark Martin, representing the City Council, and Midland County Judge Barbara Culver.

Larry Bell, president of HBF Corp., introduced Mrs. Bill (Harriett) Faudree, chairman of the board of the corporation, and other persons involved in the project.

Among those called to join him at the microphone, in addition to Mrs. Faudree, were Mrs. Bell; Dave Leonard, president of HBF Construction Co.; Charles Martin, president of HBF Management Corp., the organization of which was announced at the ceremony; Bob Messersmith, architect in charge; Murray Fasken, chairman of the board of The Midland National Bank, and Junior Blackwell, general superintendent of construction.

Those wielding gold-plated shovels in the ground-breaking, after a giant earth-mover had pierced the asphalt surface, included Mrs. Faudree, Bell, Feldt, Mark Martin, Judge Culver and Fasken.

ACCEPTING CONGRATULATIONS at the groundbreaking ceremonies this morning of the One Marienfeld Place Building is Larry Bell, left, president of HBF Corporation. Also shown are Murray Fasken, chairman of the board of the Midland National Bank and Mrs. Harriet Faudree, chairman of the board of HBF Corporation.

Bell, in his remarks, said the ceremony was being dedicated to the late Bill B. Faudree, "the man who had the vision and furnished the inspiration for the building program and who put it all together." Mr. Faudree died several months ago.

Bell also lauded Mrs. Faudree "who furnished the spirit and the inspiration" for continuing the program and for expanding it.

Bell commented that the building program is being done largely by "young people who believe in this community and who have unlimited faith in its future."

Council to eye brick, may consider pro tem

The mayor and council will wrestle with the problem of Mexican brick use in construction of residential homes as one of 40 items on the agenda for Tuesday's 1:30 p.m. City Council meeting.

Also to be considered is the election of a mayor pro tem.

Other key items in the session will be the consideration of a resolution authorizing the sale of a land tract at Air Park and consideration of appointments to various city boards and commissions.

Additional items for consideration on the agenda include:

— A resolution authorizing the purchase of property for the Downtown Exhibition Hall.

— A resolution accepting the bid for 200 animals.

— A resolution for approving an overrun on the joint project with Midland College for the construction of tennis courts.

— A resolution authorizing a refund of over-paid and double-payment of taxes.

— A resolution authorizing a refund of tax money inadvertently paid to the City of Midland in connection with the recent purchase of sanitation trucks.

The mayor and council have scheduled nine public hearings on zone change requests between 1:35 p.m. and 3:15 p.m.

They will hear a report from the high school committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce concerning the location of the more dangerous intersections in Midland along with some recommendations for improvements.

Worry ends for Maggie as she acquires a home

Amos Taylor of the Lighthouse Church of God in Christ. Years before, those back rooms had been used as a foster home.

Maggie talked to Mrs. Fisher.

And soon Maggie moved out there. Helping her on the move was Chuck and Cathryn Bowden, a Midland couple who sort of "adopted" Maggie.

She was happy with the two rooms. And she seemed double-pleased because of that hotplate the Bowdens gave her.

Maggie will have her own makeshift kitchen, such as it is. And she won't have to walk down the hallway and into the church kitchen, where others cook.

"I'm used to cooking in my own kitchen," Maggie said, "even if it's no more than a shack."

She felt blessed.

"Oh, it's just wonderful," she said.

The day before her move (she left most of her "junk" behind), Maggie walked around downtown Midland and paid her utility bills — the gas, light, phone and water bills.

"So I won't have no bad name by not paying my bills," she said.

"You've got to have a good name," Maggie said.

She does. And a good home to boot.

He said a warrant was to be issued today for the arrest of a suspect.

Services are pending at Branon Funeral Home.

At least three persons die in Amsterdam blaze

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands (AP) — Fire today swept a fashionabl Amsterdam hotel filled mostly with Americans and other foreigners, killing at least three persons and injuring about 30 others, police said. Two of the dead were women who jumped from top-floor windows of the four-story Polen hotel.

Neither the dead nor the injured were immediately identified. Police said there could be more bodies in the ruins.

The fire broke out around 6:40 a.m. while most of the 105 guests in the hotel were asleep. The flames spread rapidly.

Most of the guests were foreigners, and police said some of them were Americans.

One of them, Seymour Shapiro, 56, from Teaneck, N.J., said the fire had already swept through the building when his wife, Doris, woke him.

"We were on the second floor and when we got into the corridor there was a solid wall of fire," Shapiro said. "People were shouting and screaming, some were jumping from the windows, others were on fire. It was terrible."

Shapiro said he and his wife reached the first floor and escaped after forming a human ladder with two women.

Study of city's transportation needs slated by chamber force

By JIM STEINBERG

A definitive, community-wide study on Midland's transportation needs will begin soon, a Midland Chamber of Commerce official said today.

At present, members of the Chamber of Commerce transportation task force are re-examining data in previous transportation studies that have been compiled since 1958, John Ingram, chairman of the Transportation Task Force of the chamber.

"Since those studies things have changed in Midland. We have new industry, and have prospects of still more growth in the near future. And I think a study done by Midlanders, for Midlanders will be more sensitive to the needs of the community than one prepared by an outside group," Ingram said, explaining the reason for undertaking a new transportation study.

"The first part of the task force's work will include preparing and conducting a survey of Midland citizens that will encompass all phases of Midland's private and public sector," Ingram said.

"Before any determination of needs can be made, the task force must be convinced of the public's willingness and desire to support a transportation system. This survey, we hope, will show us how citizens feel about public transportation in Midland," Ingram said.

The survey is scheduled for completion by July 1, Ingram said.

"If we find there is no need for a public system, we will drop the subject and move on to other urgent matters," Ingram said.

Members of the task force in charge of preparing and conducting the inner city survey include Doug Henson, Ray Moudy and David Hoelscher. Herb Etheridge and Susan Edwards will be in charge of surveying Midland's business and industrial concerns located in the Industrial Park and Air Terminal areas.

Another phase of the group's work includes the development of specific proposals that can be made following the tabulation of survey results. Howard D. "Rocky" Ford has been charged with the responsibility of drawing up three proposals, one of which will be the recommendation endorsed by the task force with the remaining two proposals held as alternatives, Ingram said.

James N. Allison Jr. and Charles Priddy will work with Ford in the development of the group's proposal with special emphasis on available funding procedures, Ingram added.

Blame it on the cat

The power failure early Sunday which caused some Midlander's electric clocks to wake them an hour later than usual was caused by a wild ring-tail cat.

Bill McGrew, spokesman for Texas Electric Service Co., said the cat got into the high voltage switching gear at the Midland east substation on Fairgrounds Road.

Three circuits, providing power primarily for the eastern portion of the city, were affected, he said. Some parts of central Midland also were affected.

The blackout at Midland Regional Air Terminal Friday night, which caused five incoming commercial flights to be diverted, was not the result of a general power failure, but rather of internal problems at the airport, McGrew said.

Legionnaires set meeting

ODESSA — Legionnaires and auxiliary members of The American Legion Fourth Division comprising the 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, and 21st districts will meet here next Saturday and Sunday for their annual convention.

Registration will begin noon Saturday at The Inn of the Golden West, where all activities for the two-day convention will take place.

Fourth Division Commander, Harry Riggs of Plainview, will call the convention to order.

Legion State Commander C. G. McKinzie is scheduled to deliver the principal address during the convention.

A whole new game

Just how much water has flowed under the bridge in nine years is evident as delegates from the United States and Vietnam meet in Paris to discuss the loose ends remaining from the war in Indochina.

The United States, in 1968, was eager to discuss a final settlement. North Vietnam was the relucant bride, stalling over everything from the size and shape of the negotiating tables to forms and procedures. That was an agonizing period for the United States .... but Hanoi stalled and stalled.

In 1977 Vietnam is an eager bride. The United States is studying the proposed marriage contract through the eyes of a suitor once rejected.

This is as it should be. The United States lost 50,000 of its young men on Vietnamese battlefronts. Another 300,000 were wounded and some $150 billion in American treasure was expended.

The Vietnamese war left an indelible imprint on the course of this nation. It is only right that America examine critically any future relationships with Vietnam to be sure that we gain as much as we give. It not only is right, it is a must, insofar as we are concerned.

Four principal arguments are advanced by proponents of "normal" relations with Vietnam. They say:

1. The United States has an economic obligation to assist Vietnam to make up for the destruction which we wreaked on that country.

2. The United States has a humane obligation to help control the leprosy, venereal disease, tuberculosis and malaria — diseases which were aggravated by the war — and to assist 800,000 Vietnamese orphans.

3. A benign attitude toward Vietnam is in keeping with what Sen. Mark Hatfield calls "The new American posture" in the world. We are speaking more softly to many of our former enemies and we have even gone so far as to declare amnesty for the Americans who made bad personal decisions during the Vietnam war.

4. If we don't assist Vietnan it will turn to the Soviet Union and the American influence in Indochina will disappear.

All of these arguments are easily refutable. Suffice it to say that human misery and devastation are common in all wars — on both sides. Reparations are not based on these considerations, but on moral principles and on broad and enlightened self interest.

Morally, the U.S. owes Vietnam nothing. Yet we already have made some concessions.

If the U.S. is to extend political recognition and economic assistance to Vietnam, we must base our policy on American traditions of generosity, our belief in redemption of our perceptions of human rights.

Vietnam has a lot to answer for before it can tap the American wellspring of fair play. First on the list is accounting to our satisfaction of Americans missing in action. We also must receive assurances that the $2 billion in arms which Americans left behind in Vietnam are not being used to deprive people of freedom in Southeast Asia.

Further, Vietnam owes those in the world concerned with human rights an explanation of its "re-education centers" — a thinly disguised term for brainwashing — relocation of hundreds of thousands of Saigonese against their wills, summary justice, execution, torture and countless other breaches of basic political and personal rights.

The U.S. was at an emotional disadvantage in 1973 when the Paris peace talks convened. The war still was a vivid nightmare. The U.S. was humiliated and embarrassed, and our soul-deep concern for Americans missing in action gave North Vietnam an extraordinary negotiating lever.

It's different now. Our concern for the MIAs yet is deep and abiding. We do not think that any significant rapprochement with Vietnam is possible until this issue is removed.

Beyond that, the Vietnamese are the supplicants and the United States is the benefactor. It's a strong hand for the U.S. We must bide our time and stand firm on our terms.

If the U.S. will do this, the Paris talks give this country an opportunity to advance human rights for millions of persons, not only in Vietnam, but throughout Indochina.

HEMISPHERE REPORT:

Latin Americans work to maintain credit

By WILLIAM GIANDONI
Copley News Service

Latin America's foreign debt rose to an estimated $65 billion in 1976, but international bankers are unworried.

The Latin nations that are most heavily indebted are countries that boast relatively well-developed economies. That is to say they grow or manufacture items that can and are being exported and sold for the dollars they need to pay their obligations.

Not surprisingly, according to a study prepared by the Inter American Development Bank, Brazil and Mexico are the two Latin countries with the biggest foreign debts.

Brazil reportedly accounts for 32 per cent, or $20.8 billion, of Latin America's foreign debt, and Mexico, for 24 per cent, or $15.6 billion.

(The dollar figures are generally lower than estimates available from other sources, but that may be explained by the fact that there is often disagreement, even within a country, as to what constitutes the foreign debt.)

After Brazil and Mexico come five other nations. Argentina's portion of the Latin American debt was calculated at 9 per cent, or $5.85 billion; Chile, 8 per cent, $5.2 billion; Peru, 6 per cent, $3.9 billion; Colombia, 5 per cent, $3.25 billion; and Uruguay, 2 per cent, $1.3 billion.

Together the seven countries account for 86 per cent of the total.

While for the public record, international bankers profess not to be concerned by the size of Latin America's foreign debt, most of the individual countries are taking steps to slow its increase, as they consider it inflationary.

Mexico, for example, has let it be known that it plans to hold its new foreign credits down to $3 billion this year, in contrast with the $5.5 billion it obtained in 1976.

The hope is that inflation in Mexico will be reduced from 1976's 27 per cent to no more than 20 per cent this year.

Brazil also is tightening its belt as are Argentina, Chile and other countries.

Colombia, for example, recently revalued its peso, that is increased the dollar equivalent of its monetary unit, under certain circumstances, in order to ease the pressure of inflation. Colombia expects to earn around $1.5 billion from its coffee exports this year, more than 50 per cent more than in 1976. The new scheme provides that "exchange certificates" will be given those seeking to convert dollars to pesos. Unless the certificates are held for 30 days, they will be subject to a 10 per cent discount.

Of course, austerity measures, which include wage and price controls in some countries, are being protested by labor organizations and political groups.

By now, though, the opinion is widespread in Latin America that much of the blame for the economic problems the different countries face should be placed on the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC). The oil that most Latin nations have to import to fuel their industrial and agricultural sectors has quadrupled or more in price recently. That costs Brazil, for example, billions of dollars more each year.

Even Mexico, which has discovered vast new petroleum reserves in recent years, is finding out that the costs of putting the new fields into production have soared.

But such as Mexico's oil discoveries, though, are what make most of the Latin American countries good credit risks.

Too, the Latin nations generally seem to be convinced that they must maintain their credit abroad if they want access to the foreign funds that will speed their national development.

That is why the international bankers feel no cause for concern.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

The drug-dealing underworld

By JACK ANDERSON and LES WHITTEN

WASHINGTON — The subterranean world of the narcotics trade is populated with shadowy tycoons who are able to operate at all levels of commerce. They consort with cutthroats and prime ministers alike.

More often than not, the top drug dealers operate behind a screen of respectable businesses. But out of the back door, they deliver heroin shipments to fog-sheathed waterfronts, distribute satchels full of cash in high places and deal in death in the back alleys of the world.

A startling secret intelligence report describes how one of the world's biggest heroin rings, for example, is protected by Thai officialdom. Thailand forms the base of the notorious Golden Triangle, which produces a heavy flow of heroin into the United States and Western Europe. Thai Premier Thanin Kravichien has solemnly vowed to wipe out his end of this dirty business.

Yet the intelligence report charges that Thailand's top narcotics trafficker is on excellent terms with Thai officials. He is identified in the secret reports as Chang Kai-cheng, a man of many tentacles, who operates hotels, trucks and shops. But his biggest business, according to the intelligence document, is drug smuggling.

The document also alleges that his chief lieutenant, Chang Ching-chen, "has contacts with many Thai officials and .... takes care of Chang's narcotics business in Bangkok."

Chang Kai-cheng came out of China in 1949, settled in Burma for a spell and then, relates the intelligence report, "moved to Chaing Mai, Thailand, in 1965 and became a small narcotics dealer" But within five years, he clawed his way to the top and "became a prominent figure in the Thailand narcotics community."

Now he is reported to be "the head of the largest heroin distribution organization in Thailand," with "narcotics connections in Holland, Singapore, Malaysia and Hong Kong... a major violator suspected of being heavily involved..." Yet he poses as a respectable businessman and drives grandly about the streets of Bangkok in a white Mercedes.

The intelligence report listed his private telephone numbers, which we used to reach the startled Chang Kai-cheng in his Bangkok hideaway. Speaking through an interpreter, we got Chang to confirm the background information provided in the report. But he stopped cold when we brought up the subject of narcotics. He claimed not to know what we were talking about.

The secret report charges, however, that Chang "provides a major portion of the financial support and handles the shipment of narcotics from Bangkok to international markets."

Chang still masterminds "how the larger quantities of narcotics should be sold," according to the report, but underlings now take all the risks. U.S. and Thai agents have pinpointed the key men in his drug smuggling organization down to the license plates, phone numbers and bank accounts. Yet the government, we are told, has been unwilling to smash the ring.

The Thai embassy here insists there is no government protection of dope rings. "We are acting strongly against narcotic traffickers," a spokesman said.

Footnote: Meanwhile, Chairman Lester Wolff, D.-N.Y., of the House Narcotics Committee, is zeroing in on a new "French connection." It is dominated largely by Chinese who are moving Asian opium into the traditional French heroin laboratories near Marseilles. From there, according to a staff study, it may soon be reaching the United States, "in quantity" with the assistance of Chinese-American dope merchants.

CONSUMER CRUNCH: Sen. Wendell Ford, D-Ky., appears to be a slow-talking country lawyer. But he becomes deadly serious when he takes on the voluble chairman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, John Byington.

Ford has fired off a blistering private letter complaining that "I am sobered, disillusioned and deeply concerned ... and I am not satisfied with your performance as chairman." Byington has failed to act against numerous dangerous products, he charges, such as power motors, gas heaters, extension cords, sharp-edged toys and poisoned packages.

"The morale of the commission's employes seems to be at an all-time low ... Only 43 per cent believe the agency is doing a good job," Ford observed. He found it "appalling" that the agency takes over three months to determine if a product is hazardous.

Byington, who was appointed by President Ford last year, has travelled to Hong Kong, Japan, West Germany, Taiwan, Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands to explain the commission's work.

"There has been an over-emphasis on globe-trotting and speech-making .... and an under-emphasis on meaningful safety initiatives," Ford declares. "It is the bottom line of injury and death reduction which is important."

INSIDE REPORT:

Andy Young & Co.: an association of kindred souls

By ROWLAND EVANS And ROBERT NOVAK

Evans Novak

WASHINGTON — The only remarkable aspect of Ambassador Andrew Young's long speech to the Latin American economic conference in Guatemala City recently was its principal author: the Rev. Dr. Brady Tyson, last seen in Geneva two months ago declaring U.S. responsibility for subverting the former government of Chile.

After apologizing for that historically inaccurate admission of national guilt, Tyson dropped from sight. White House aides hinted that his Geneva performance was the beginning and end of his government service. In fact, Tyson has joined the United Nations mission as Young's Latin American adviser. To old hands in this region familiar with Tyson's well-established pro-Castro position, this is both puzzling and disturbing.

Tyson actually is quite compatible with Young's world view. Apart from inexperience and indiscretion, the ambassador to the UN represents the vanguard of leftist critics of the past generation's U.S. foreign policy who are slipping under the governmental tent into the Carter administration. While overall policy from the White House and the State Department maintains a basic anti-Communist posture, the erstwhile critics are taking over at lower levels — particularly in Latin American affairs.

Tyson maintains associations unprecedented at a high level in the foreign policy bureaucracy. Identified in the invitations as representing the State Department, Tyson will address a fund-raising dinner of the Fund for New Priorities in America in New York May 19. That organization for seven years has fought the level of defense spending which President Carter now seeks to maintain.

But Tyson's past, not his present, causes all the wonderment that he is now under the governmental tent. As a founder of the pro-Castro North American Congress on Latin America (NACLA), Tyson was in open support of the hemisphere's radical left rather than democratic left — for Salvador Allende's Socialists in Chile rather than the Christian Democrats.

Tyson was expelled for subversive political activity in 1966 by the right-wing government of Brazil after four years there as a Methodist missionary. Since then on the American University faculty he has been an activist on Latin American questions — for example, seeking to organize a 1970 student march on the Inter-American Defense College in Washington. So, when Tyson told acquaintances in 1976 that he had close contacts with candidate Jimmy Carter, the reaction was incredulity.

In naming Tyson to represent the U.S. at the UN Human Rights Commission meeting at Geneva in March, did you know that Tyson had been expelled by our Brazilian allies? "That would recommend him to me," Young told us. After Tyson's groundless accusation of U.S. complicity in the Chilean coup, Young did not grasp the opportunity to get rid of him but placed him at the UN mission in New York as a political officer.

In truth, Young's speech to retired foreign service officers April 22 shows affinity for the line long preached by Tyson: "There has been a tremendous amount of guilt and strain on American citizens to know that for years, their tax dollars have beep used not to develop, not to feed the hungry, but essentially as part of an apparatus of repression in many places on the face of the earth."

Andy Young's theme of national guilt is totally consistent with Brady Tyson's performance at Geneva. What's more, kindred souls are quietly, without announcement, joining them in the government.

Mark Schneider, who as Sen. Edward M. Kennedy's aide criticized Chile's military junta but not Cuba's Castroite regime, has become deputy in the State Department's human rights office. In prospect is the quiet transfer of economist Richard Feinberg from the Treasury to the State Department as a Latin American specialist for policy and planning; papers found in the briefcase of Orlando Letelier, the murdered Chilean Socialist leader, list Feinberg as the prospective secret co-author of a report by NACLA, Tyson's old organization (though, in fact, Feinberg decided against going through with it because of conflict with his Treasury job).

Will this transformation at low levels seep upward into policy formation? The Young-Tyson collaboration at Guatemala City has a little mild self-flagellation ("Too often, it seems to me, the United States has tried to take or preempt leadership in the hemisphere") but concentrates on windy declarations in behalf of human rights. Left unanswered is which rights they are talking about.

A recent interview in Cuba's Bohemia magazine with Sen. George McGovern reveals how admirers of Fidel Castro define "human rights." Radio Havana reported that McGovern praised "the Cuban Revolution" for guaranteeing the people fundamental human rights such as the right to eat, to work, to health, to housing and education" and "stressed that the American people need to understand that human rights are not limited to freedom of expression."

That is precisely the position taken over a decade of writing and speaking by Brady Tyson. He and less publicized newcomers to the foreign policy bureaucracy may soon apply a definition of "human rights" — popular in Havana but not in Buenos Aires, Santiago or Brasilia — more narrow and more materialistic than Jimmy Carter ever intended.

The Country Parson

by Frank Clark

"Having grown up, most folks wonder why they were so eager to do it when they were little."

Mark Russell says

The Supreme Court has ruled in favor of corporal punishment in the classroom. This prepares todays' children for life in the event they wish to go directly from the eight grade into Marine boot camp.

•

The Court ruled that students have no constitutional protection from corporal punishment; no matter how severe. So now it will be reading, writing and flogging.

•

The ruling protects teachers against student violence as they stroll into the classroom with the tools of their profession: notebook, pencils, ruler, bullwhip and thumb screws.

•

The Court ruled that the 8th Amendment only protects those who have committed crimes. So if a kid beats up the teacher, he's protected. But if his homework isn't tidy, he may have to walk barefoot over hot coals.

Nation said vulnerable

By NORMAN KEMPSTER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A 4-year-old decision to separate government civil defense planning from disaster relief programs has left the nation's population unprepared to cope with either nuclear attack or natural catastrophe, a congressional committee reported Sunday.

The sharply critical report, prepared by the Joint Committee on Defense Production, is expected to intensify the debate on Capitol Hill over the adequacy of U.S. efforts to protect civilians from the full horror of nuclear war. Concern over Civil defense, long a dormant issue, has been heightened by recent reports on extensive efforts by the Soviet Union to prepare itself against nuclear attack.

The committee, headed by Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), recommended reestablishment of a single Federal Preparedness Administration, reversing a 1973 reorganization which divided the program among three separate departments.

"The current state of the federal preparedness effort can be summed up in four words: dilution, proliferation, duplication and neglect," the committee said.

Two weeks ago, the House voted to increase by almost 50 per cent, from $90 million to $134.8 million, President Carter's budget for civil defense. The lawmakers expressed concern that the more ambitous Soviet effort, estimated by the Pentagon to cost as much as $1 billion a year, might be opening a "survival gap" that could give the Russians an edge in any future confrontation.

The committee said the nation could get more protection for its money by combining programs to deal with both wartime and natural disasters.

Sailor's traditional uniform may reappear

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. James Holloway, chief of naval operations, has just about decided to recommend a return to the sailor's traditional uniform of bell bottom trousers, jumpers and little white hats.

A recent Navy poll heavily influenced Holloway's thinking on how to resolve one of the most fractious internal issues in the fleet.

That official poll confirmed less scientific but clear indications that the new uniform of coats, white shirts, black ties and peaked caps is massively unpopular in the enlisted ranks.

The new uniform became compulsory nearly two years ago.

The Navy's sampling of opinion among more than 8,500 sailors produced a vote of about 86 per cent or 87 per cent in favor of restoring the old-style uniform.

Navy officials said sailors of all ratings were polled at major bases in San Diego, Calif.; Norfolk, Va.; Charleston, S.C.; Yokusuka, Japan; Rota, Spain, and Subic Bay, the Philippines.

Detailed results are not yet available, officials said, because experts are still analyzing replies to 36 questions asked each sailor. The questions sought reasons for opinions on uniform style, as well as views on personal appearance, uniform cleaning problems and related matters.

According to present indications, Holloway may approve the old-style uniform for the five lowest enlisted ranks.

That would leave senior petty officers with the coat and tie uniform, which was a cherished badge of distinction for them before Adm. Elmo Zumwalt ordered all enlisted men to wear it.

Rights stand taken

WASHINGTON (AP) — The liberal Americans for Democratic Action called on the Carter administration Sunday to end all aid to countries that disregard human rights.

While lauding the President's statements on human rights, the ADA said "words are not enough." The group, at its annual convention, said the Carter administration "must end all assistance that makes the United States a party, even indirectly, to violations of human rights."

All military aid, sales and training should be ended, the organization's platform urged.

The ADA also endorsed an end to corporate income taxes.

A convention resolution said all corporate profits should be allocated to stockholders, whether they are actually paid the dividends or not. The shareholders should then have to pay personal income tax this amount, the ADA proposed.

The convention supported Carter's proposed "gas-guzzler" automobile tax, but opposed using tax credits to promote solar energy expansion.

On Saturday, Sen. George S. McGovern, who was reelected president of the organization, accused Carter of concentrating on the administration's image instead of substance.

The South Dakota Democrat urged liberals not to be "content with labels, symbols and small consolations."

"We must not trade full employment for a town meeting," he told the convention.

South Africa black leaders ask Young entry

Agence France Presse

JOHANNESBURG — Several black South African leaders have urged the government to authorize the visit United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young plans to make here next month, The Black Daily World reported here Sunday.

The paper published the reaction of black leaders to the government's threat of barring entry to Young if he did not arrange the schedule through proper diplomatic channels.

Press reports said South African Foreign Minister R.F. Botha objected to Young's plans to meet black nationalist leaders here.

"Let him in, say black leaders," The World's front page read.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, premier of the Kwazulu Bantustan, who several weeks ago met with President Carter at the White House, said that he had personally urged Young to visit South Africa.

"What do they fear? Do they fear the talks in Vienna (between South African Premier John Vorster and U.S. Vice President Walter Mondale) are so brittle Young's visit might upset the applecart?" he asked.

"We would welcome a man of his status," said B.T. Nteso, secretary-general of the Soweto township's Black Parents' Association, adding that the government was "overreacting."

Saturday Botha announced that he had received an official note from the U.S. government concerning Young's visit, planned for June 19 and 20. The Pretoria government is expected to release a communique in a few days to set forth its position on the U.S. note.

The original schedule of Young's visit was limited to meetings with white business leaders such as Harry Oppenheimer, chairman of the Anglo-American Corporation, and to a university lecture.

According to observers, the main question is whether Young will still be able to meet with black leaders here.

A press report here Sunday quoted sources close to Young in New York as saying that the black ambassador had agreed to stick to the original schedule and would not meet with black leaders.

Peas hold key to operation

Agence France-Presse

ROME — A can of peas held the key to a leftist gun-running operation that has baffled police for years, it was reported here Sunday.

News reports said a cleaning woman made the discovery when she opened a can of vegetables in a hideout she was hired to put in order after a police raid.

To her surprise, the can was packed with a tiny handgun, ammunition and a flashlight — the type of gear used in several prison breakouts since 1974.

The hideout, the reports said, belonged to the militant People's Armed Corps, a paramilitary revolutionary group suspected by police of organizing the breakouts.

Arms impact reports criticized

By LEE LESCAZE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The congressionally mandated estimates of the impact of weapons programs on U.S. arms control efforts are inadequate and not in compliance with the law, according to a report made public Sunday.

In the foreword to a 414-page analysis of the Ford administration's arms control impact statements, Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman John Sparkman and ranking Republican Clifford P. Case call the statements "neither complete nor adequately analytical."

Arms Control and Disarmament Director Paul C. Warnke replies that he will play a central role in the preparation of future statements and will work to see that they comply with the spirit of the law.

In the two years since Congress ordered the executive branch to supply such statements, ACDA has not played a major role in preparing the statements, leaving them to the Pentagon, the Energy Research and Development Administration and the National Security Council.

"Unless a dominant voice," the report says, "is an impartial 'third' party which does not have a vested interest in the defense programs," the statements are likely not to be neutral.

Charles R. Gellner wrote the overall comments of the report, which was prepared by him and other analysts of the Library of Congress Congressional Research Service.

Congress ordered the arms control statements to be better informed when it makes decisions about development of weapons programs.

It conceived of the statements as an integral part of the Pentagon budget requests each year which would figure in the debate over weapons programs.

Instead the administration has treated the statements separately. "After they finish their budget request then they say 'Oh, now we have to do the damn impact statements,'" one congressional staffer said.

The report is an effort to increase congressional interest in the statements and to pressure the administration to improve its performance in preparing them.

Gellner cites the decisions to proceed with development and deployment of MIRV (multiple, independently targeted warheads) and cruise missiles as having had "a profound impact on arms control policy and negotiation."

He urges that the arms control impact reports would become more valuable if they were to compare a weapons system with the available alternatives in the earliest considerations of a new weapons system.

The report also criticizes the executive branch for overclassifying the impact statements that have been provided, thereby making it more difficult for Congress and the public to learn from the statements.

Both sets of statements that have been sent to Congress were done under the Ford administration.

Reported drug operation denied

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma state prison warden Richard Crisp said he has no knowledge of a drug ring that a newspaper says peddled drugs at the state prison here and at prisons in four other states.

But Crisp added, "this sort of stuff doesn't surprise me at all."

Crisp said there have been many attempts at smuggling illegal drugs through the mails to the prison here.

But because of staff watchfulness, "there's very little drugs inside this institution," Crisp said.

"We're not allowed to read letters so all we do is open the letter and shake the pages to see if there's any contraband," Crisp said. "We turn each page of a newspaper or magazine because one time we found two pages glued together and discovered 200 amphetamine pills. And another time marijuana was sent in a hollowed-out Bible."

Twelve guards at the state prison have been fired or forced to resign in the past year for smuggling, including the most recent case where a guard allegedly smuggled a pistol and marijuana into the prison.

Budget on agenda

The Midland Parks and Recreation Commission will discuss the proposed 1977-78 departmental budget at a meeting at 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the City Hall conference room.

Leaders conclude summit; Carter heads for Geneva

By FRANK CORMIER

LONDON (AP) — President Carter, ending a weekend of talks with the United States' chief allies, flew to Geneva today to meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad, a key figure in the search for a Middle East settlement.

Before leaving London, Carter conferred with the leaders of Britain, France and West Germany on the status of Berlin. The four issued a warning that East-West detente would be seriously threatened if the Communists continue efforts to make East Berlin an integral part of East Germany, ignoring that is is still a sector of a four-power city under the United States, Britain, France and the Soviet Union.

Carter was scheduled to fly back to London tonight and to attend a North Atlantic Treaty Organization meeting here Tuesday before returning to the United States Tuesday night.

At their weekend summit conference here, Carter and the leaders of six other major industrial nations agreed to maintain the momentum of economic growth, try to keep trade free and make a joint study of ways to produce cheaper nuclear energy without producing raw materials for nuclear weapons.

Carter said his meeting with Assad and other Arab and Israeli leaders would put him "in a better condition to judge the areas of agreement...and disagreement."

In Geneva today, the Syrian leader said he hoped his meeting with Carter would be a "turning point in the history" of Arab-Israeli peace efforts.

Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance said Assad's views "are going to be exceedingly important" in the formulation of the Carter administration's "final views" about what it can do to promote a settlement in the long-troubled region.

Geneva was chosen as neutral ground for the meeting after the 47-year-old Syrian refused to go to Washington to outline his views on how peace with Israel could be achieved. Carter has already met in Washington with Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and King Hussein of Jordan, and meets there later this month with Crown Prince Fahd of Saudi Arabia.

Assad has repeatedly insisted that Israel must give up all the Arab territory it occupied in the 1967 war, and Israel is just as determined to hold on to some of the Golan Heights territory it seized from Syria, along with other strategic territory.

In what was regarded as a concession, however, Assad announced last week he was willing to discuss demilitarized zones between Israel and its Arab neighbors.

Senior Israeli officials in Tel Aviv today expressed concern about Carter's intentions. "The specter of a forced solution is floating around," said one. "Until now we regarded the Carter administration as an unknown quantity, but we are starting to worry."

Earlier today, Carter met with French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing and then discussed Berlin at a gathering of the occupation powers — Carter, Giscard d'Estaing and British Prime Minister James Callaghan — and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt.

The four leaders had also been expected to discuss Carter's hopes of restraining international arms sales and other topics of mutual concern.

The other government leaders who met privately with Carter came calling at his door, but the American president drove 2.4 miles for coffee, croissants and conversation with Giscard d'Estaing.

American officials said the two presidents discussed Carter's push to curb international arms sales, the search for Arab-Israeli peace, East-West relations and European political developments. But contrary to expectations, they said there was no discussion of the joint French-British effort to win landing rights in New York for the Concorde supersonic airliner.

Giscard in an interview with NBC-TV's Today program said continued refusal to let the Concorde land at New York's Kennedy International Airport would upset the spirit of unity forged at the weekend summit because it would run counter to the principles of free trade and exchanges espoused by the seven-nation meeting.

Carter and the government chiefs of Britain, France, West Germany, Japan, Italy and Canada ended their two-day economic summit with a communique Sunday which said their "most urgent task is to create more jobs while continuing to reduce inflation."

They said they were committing their governments to meet the targets for economic growth they set previously to "provide a basis for sustained noninflationary growth" around the world. They also opposed protective tariffs.

U.S. Treasury Secretary W. Michael Blumenthal said the leaders pledged to stimulate their economies if it appeared they were falling short of their goals. The targets include 5.8 to 6 per cent growth for the United States this year, 5 per cent for West Germany and 6.7 per cent for Japan.

In a surprise decision stemming from the disclosures of payoffs by Lockheed and other multinational corporations, the summit also called for a ban on irregularities and improprieties in international trade.

"We believe," said Carter, "the time has come for international control and prohibition against illegalities, bribery, extortion and other actions that have sometimes been condoned in trade, commerce and banking."

Hailstones hit Midland, twister seen near Lamesa

Midlanders rushed to put cars in garages Sunday night as a severe thunderstorm and hail hit the city.

The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal reported hail from one-fourth to one-half inch in diameter, scattered over a wide area of the Permian Basin. Hail up to 1¼ inches was reported in parts of Odessa.

Lamesa police reported a tornado on the ground three miles north of the city, but said no damage was done.

City officials in Midland this morning had received no reports of hail damage.

Power failed in parts of the city for a brief period, when lightning tripped power circuits, Texas Electric Service Co. spokesman Bill McGrew said.

Small hail also was reported in Lamesa and Crane.

The forecast for tonight includes a 40 per cent chance of more rain and there is a 20 per cent chance of rain Tuesday. Skies should be partly cloudy and weather humid through Tuesday.

The low tonight is expected to be in the upper 50s. The high Tuesday should be near 80. Winds tonight are expected to be 5 to 10 mph from the southeast.

Skies this morning were clear or only partly cloudy in Andrews, Lamesa, Big Spring, Stanton, Rankin, Big Lake and Odessa.

Heavy rain, marble size hail and strong winds struck the San Angelo area early today as thunderstorms spread northward out of the Lower Rio Grande Valley into West Texas.

Wind gusts of up to 45 m.p.h. were recorded near San Angelo at about 3 a.m.

Many areas of the state were under severe thunderstorm warnings during the night. Hail was also reported in West Central Texas.

Skies were cloudy over most of the state early today and temperatures ranged from near 50 in the mountains of Southwest Texas to the middle 70s along the gulf coast. Some early morning readings included 58 at Amarillo, 68 at Wichita Falls, 64 at Texarkana, 69 at Dallas and Austin, 67 at Houston, 70 at Corpus Christi, 65 at Del Rio, 59 at Lubbock and 54 at Dalhart.

Skies over the state were to be mostly cloudy today and scattered thunderstorms were forecast. Afternoon highs were expected to be mostly in the 70s and 80s with a few readings in the 90s expected in the Big Bend country.

Canal treaty talks resume after threats

By KENNETH J. FREED

WASHINGTON (AP) — Panama Canal treaty talks are resuming here following sharp Panamanian threats and accusations that the United States is delaying a final accord.

Chief Panamanian negotiator Romulo Escobar Betancourt and his team arrived here Sunday for talks with U.S. negotiators Sol Linowitz and Ellsworth Bunker.

The new round of meetings will be held following threatening talk from Panamanian strongman Gen. Omar Torrijos.

In a Mexican news conference over the weekend, Torrijos was quoted as warning that if a new accord to replace the original canal treaty of 1903 is not completed, Americans in Panama will be "without water, without lights, without a canal and without gringos."

Keeping with what seems to be one of the most secretive operations in American foreign policy, U.S. officials had no comment. The Carter administration has steadfastly refused significant comment on any aspect of the treaty talks.

The new round of talks is the 15th extension of discussions stretching back to 1968.

Since the last round of talks ended in February, Torrijos and Escobar have made several angry statements about U.S. tactics.

Escobar, for instance, has said the U.S. negotiators quibble over every house and street to be given up, even though Panama has surrendered to several American demands.

Torrijos' major complaint deals with what he sees as President Carter's lack of commitment to completing the talks. "We have to have a definition from the government of Mr. Carter during this new round of negotiations," he said in Mexico.

When asked what he expects from the new talks, Torrijos expressed hope, but then voiced his threat about isolating the Canal Zone.

Torrijos was in Mexico to meet with Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo, who said completion of the talks "will condition future relations between the United States and Latin America."

In spite of the public dismay about a lack of progress, the Panamanians have acknowledged forward movement in several key areas.

Although U.S. officials have not confirmed all the details, it has been reported from Panama that the negotiators agreed to a treaty expiring in the year 2000, when Panama will take full control.

The reports also say the United States has won its demand to act as a co-guarantor of the neutrality of the waterway.

All that remains to be worked out in these areas is how much of the Canal Zone will be turned over immediately and whether this matter should be dealt with in the treaty or in accompaning agreements.

Compromise budget resolution desired

By JOHN CHADWICK

WASHINGTON (AP) — A House and Senate conference committee, divided on the issue of defense spending, may be near agreement on a compromise resolution that will establish a congressional target for federal spending for the 1978 fiscal year.

The Senate plans debate this week on proposals to make its anti-filibuster rule more effective. And President Carter's energy program and economic stimulus measures are among other matters on which Congress will be focusing its attention this week.

The Senate-House conference committee hoped to reach agreement later today on the compromise budget resolution, which will set spending and revenue targets for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

One key difference between House and Senate spending plans is over defense. The Senate approved spending $111.6 billion, which is $300 million less than Carter asked, but the House cut its defense figure to $109.9 billion.

Over-all, the Senate resolution projects a $63.5 billion deficit for 1978, while the House figure is $66.3 billion.

Meanwhile, the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee appeared to be ready to approve President Carter's proposal to create a Cabinet-level Department of Energy. The committee's proposal is expected to provide for a sharing of power over natural gas and oil prices between the department secretary and a three-member regulatory board.

Under this compromise plan, worked out by senior committee members and the White House, the President would have the final say over price decisions if the energy secretary and the board disagree.

The House commerce energy and power subcommittee will devote the week to hearings on Carter's energy program. Opening testimony will be on plans to give tax breaks to people who insulate their homes.

The Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee scheduled a mid-week hearing on the over-all energy program.

A housing bill on which the House began debate last week is slated for a final vote before the House moves on to a foreign aid measure. The housing bill includes authorization of $12.5 billion for community development bloc grants.

On Thursday the House is to take up a compromise version of the tax stimulus bill, on which agreement was reached with Senate conferees last week. The bill includes an average tax cut of $111 for some 46 million taxpayers who use the standard deduction.

The filibuster rules changes being brought up in the Senate would leave intact the present requirement for a three-fifths majority, or 60 votes, to put the debate-limiting cloture rule into effect. But it would curb the use of dilatory tactics after that.

In recommending the revisions, the Senate Rules Committee said that even after cloture has been voted it is possible through various delaying procedures to stave off final action on a measure for weeks.

Maggie's worry ends as she finds a home

ROUSTIN' ABOUT with Ed Todd

Maggie can stop worrying now. She has a home.

It's plain and simple: two time-worn rooms in the back of an old-fashioned church that's almost in the country.

She has a hotplate to cook her meals, a comfortable bed and a couple of chairs, and a reading lamp to study by.

And the bathroom is just down the hall.

This meek and unassuming soul has a place to stay.

"Oh, I am blessed," she said with the sweet sincerity of an innocent child. "Talk about somebody being blessed, I am blessed."

A few days before, she wasn't so sure that she would be.

Maggie, who's 70 and widowed, had to move out of the ramshackled place she had lived in for about five years. The old dingy house is to be moved and Maggie had to get out.

But it was home — that old rent house.

She had no place to go. And the income from her two pensions limited where she could go — assuming she could find a place.

She did. Rather, some kindly folks found a place for her.

Marion Fisher, who runs the Senior Citizens program here, heard of Maggie's plight.

Rent houses are hard to come by in this town, she said. Especially cheap ones. Maggie was paying $30 per month and bills; she couldn't afford much more.

Solution.

Mrs. Fisher recalled a rooming place for the unfortunate, for those good people who couldn't afford much. People like Maggie.

It was ran by the Rev. and Mrs.

Patty Hearst scheduled for sentencing today

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Six months after her release on $1.25 million bail and almost three years since she surfaced here as "Tania" with machine gun in hand, Patricia Hearst faces possible return to prison.

Miss Hearst was scheduled to be sentenced today on assault and robbery charges for firing two machine guns at Mel's Sporting Goods store in suburban Inglewood on May 16, 1974, to provide cover for escaping Symbionese Liberation Army "comrades," William and Emily Harris.

The convict heiress, a kidnap victim who joined forces with her revolutionary abductors in 1974, pleaded no contest April 18 to charges. The judge noted that this was tantamount to a plea of guilty.

The potential sentence for the 23-year-old newspaper heiress ranged from as little as straight probation to as much as 15½ years to life in prison.

"We are going to ask for leniency and understanding from the court," said her Boston attorney, Al Johnson.

It was believed that a probation report submitted to the judge last week recommended a light sentence or probation, and the district attorney's office has stressed that the judge has wide discretion in setting a penalty.

Even probation would not necessarily mean freedom, since Miss Hearst is under a seven-year prison sentence for robbing a San Francisco bank. She was freed on bail pending appeal of that conviction, and the 9th U.S. District Court of Appeals is expected to rule soon in that case.

If her appeal is rejected, she could return to serve at least 14 months before being eligible for probation.

At her San Francisco trial last year, Miss Hearst insisted she had fired out of fear instilled by the terrorist SLA. But the Harrises, at their trial, said they gave her no orders and the gunfire was so surprising that they had to duck to avoid being hit.

The Harrises, convicted of kidnaping and robbery but acquitted of Miss Hearst's six machine gun assaults, are serving sentences of 11 years to life in state prison. They are awaiting trial in Oakland on charges stemming from Miss Hearst's Feb. 4, 1974, kidnaping.

Since her release from prison last November, Miss Hearst has lived with her parents and a platoon of bodyguards in the San Francisco area.

Panel to study nuclear policy

By DON COOK
The Los Angeles Times

LONDON — Differences with President Carter over international nuclear policy at the seven-nation summit meeting were successfully muted Sunday by turning the whole complex problem over to a special study group which is likely to take well over a year to come to any final conclusions.

"This was the most divisive and the most difficult question that we addressed," the President acknowledged in a brief talk with a few newsmen after the conclusion of the summit meetings.

"It was a subject that they have always agreed previously not to discuss because nations have their own autonomy and sensitivities. I think it is very significant to get the group to support publicly a study of this question. We suggested the study and after the long debate all the other leaders felt it was a good idea."

Initially a special top-level committee of experts from the seven nations will take up as a matter of urgency an analysis of the dangers of nuclear proliferation. This is to be completed within two months, together with agreed terms of reference for a much more far-reaching and complex technical study on the entire nuclear fuel cycle problems.

It is probable that other nuclear exporting countries such as the Soviet Union will be asked to join in this part of the exercise, which will deal with uranium supplies and enrichment, reprocessing of nuclear fuels, problems of storage and waste, and the development of fast-breeder reactors fed by plutonium fuel. This study will take at least one year and probably longer.

One month ago the President startled and upset practically every other country which is interested in nuclear power development by announcing that the United States was suspending all work on nuclear reprocessing and slowing down development work on fast-breeder plutonium-fed reactors.

Reprocessing separates plutonium from enriched uranium in spent nuclear fuel rods, but the plutonium can then be used to make nuclear bombs. The President's revised American policies are aimed at checking the spread or availability of plutonium in the world.

But Great Britain, France, West Germany and Japan are all committed to nuclear programs involving both reprocessing and plutonium reactors. A major international row has been building up ever since, as nuclear authorities in one nation after another have declared their opposition to the American stand and the necessity and determination to press ahead with both reprocessing and plutonium use.

"We have about 12 or 15 nations referred to as threshold countries," President Carter told correspondents. "Those are ones that have not yet acknowledged that they have explosive nuclear capability. But we think they either do or will very shortly. How to deal with those countries, what kind of action to take, if we supply them with nuclear fuel as Canada did India, what should we do if they create an explosion?

"So it is a very difficult question and it is one that they have avoided, apparently, in years gone by, but it will be addressed this year."

There will be no change in the restrictive case-by-case American policy of close controls over nuclear fuel exports while this study is going forward. Secretary of State Cyrus R. Vance told a press briefing that on fuel exports "each country will take care of that decision which it will have to make according to its own view of the matter."

After a hold-up of nuclear shipments lasting almost a year, the United States released a fuel shipment to the European Common Market which has long been on the order books on the eve of this summit meeting.

Council to eye brick, may consider pro tem

The Mayor and Council will wrestle with the problem of Mexican brick use in construction of residential homes as one of 40 items on the agenda for Tuesday's 1:30 p.m. City Council meeting.

Also to be considered is the election of a mayor pro tem.

Other key items in the session will be the consideration of a resolution authorizing the sale of a land tract at Air Park and consideration of appointments to various city boards and commissions.

Additional items for consideration on the agenda include:

— A resolution authorizing the purchase of property for the Downtown Exhibition Hall.

— A resolution accepting the bid for zoo animals.

— A resolution for approving an overrun on the joint project with Midland College for the construction of tennis courts.

— A resolution authorizing a refund of over-paid and double-payment of taxes.

— A resolution authorizing a refund of tax money inadvertently paid to the City of Midland in connection with the recent purchase of sanitation trucks.

The Mayor and Council have scheduled nine public hearings on zone change requests between 1:35 p.m. and 3:15 p.m.

They will hear a report from the high school committee of the Midland Chamber of Commerce concerning the location of the more dangerous intersections in Midland along with some recommendations for improvements.

Amos Taylor of the Lighthouse Church of God in Christ. Years before, those back rooms had been used as a foster home.

Maggie talked to Mrs. Fisher.

And soon Maggie moved out there. Helping her on the move was Chuck and Cathryn Bowden, a Midland couple who sort of "adopted" Maggie.

She was happy with the two rooms. And she seemed double-pleased because of that hotplate the Bowdens gave her.

Maggie will have her own makeshift kitchen, such as it is. And she won't have to walk down the hallway and into the church kitchen, where others cook.

"I'm used to cooking in my own kitchen," Maggie said, "even if it's no more than a shack."

She felt blessed.

"Oh, it's just wonderful," she said.

The day before her move (she left most of her "junk" behind), Maggie walked around downtown Midland and paid her utility bills — the gas, light, phone and water bills.

"So I won't have no bad name by not paying my bills," she said.

"You've got to have a good name," Maggie said.

She does. And a good home to boot.

Reports say trio robbed widow first

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — One of three men being investigated in the shooting death of a wealthy widow told police he and two companions stole $817,000 from the millionaire recluse in January, according to published reports today.

The Indianapolis Star also quoted detectives as saying that one other member of the trio moved his entire family "lock, stock and barrel" Saturday without leaving a forwarding address.

The pajama-clad body of 86-year-old Marjorie V. Jackson, reportedly the last immediate survivor of a family that traced its lineage back to President Andrew Jackson, was found early Saturday by firemen who fought a blaze at her home. Authorities believe the suspects might have started the fire. She had been shot once in the abdomen with a .22-caliber pistol, Marion County police said.

Authorities also discovered more than $5 million in cash, mostly in $100 bills, in the cluttered, ranch-style estate — $2 million of it in a garbage can in the bedroom, the rest in toolboxes, closets and a vacuum cleaner bag.

According to the Star, Lt. Robert W. Kirkman emphasized that the theft admission was made orally, during an interview on Sunday. No formal confession was signed, he said.

Lamesa man fatally shot

LAMESA — A Lamesa man was pronounced dead Sunday night at a Lamesa hospital after having been shot.

Robert Gonzales, 25, was shot with what appeared to be a .22 caliber bullet in the yard of his home at 1505 S. 2nd St., police chief Lee Bartlett said.

Bartlett said two bullets were fired from approximately 245 feet away. Gonzales was struck once in the chest and pronounced dead at 7:47 p.m. at Medical Arts Hospital, Bartlett said.

He said a warrant was to be issued today for the arrest of a suspect.

Services are pending at Branon Funeral Home.

Receiving a Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute medal from John J. Redfern Jr., center, are Lee High School junior Amy Bechtel, left, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert W. Bechtel, and Midland High School junior Erle Wright, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred S. Ford will be honored with the Truman award

KANSAS CITY (AP) — While he was President, Gerald R. Ford bowed to no one in his admiration of Harry S. Truman. Other admirers of the 33rd President planned to return the favor.

Ford was in Kansas City to receive the 5th annual Harry S. Truman Good Neighbor Award today for stepping in against a "background of presidential collapse and the disarray it had wrought" and putting the nation back on course.

The occasion was the 25th annual Truman birthday luncheon, held this year one day late. Truman was born May 8, 1884.

Ford was here a year ago, passing through in the midst of an early campaign swing to help dedicate a Truman statue in nearby Independence, Mo., and to visit the former president's aged widow at her home a few blocks away.

And, of course, he was in Kansas City in August, to win the Republican party's nomination.

"By word, deed and example he brought the people back into the government and the government back to the people," said the award presented by the Eddie Jacobson Memorial Foundation. "For all he has done, history will accord him the honor due him."

In a quarter century, the Truman luncheon has grown from a small gathering of friends to a prestigious affair attended by more than 400 people. Until his health began failing at his 80th birthday, Truman was a regular guest. Truman died in 1972, but the luncheons continued.

The first Good Neighbor Award, in 1973, was presented to the late Chief Justice Earl Warren, who had taken an active part in the board of trustees of the Truman Library.

Blame it on the cat

The power failure early Sunday which caused some Midlander's electric clocks to wake them an hour later than usual was caused by a wild ring-tail cat.

Bill McGrew, spokesman for Texas Electric Service Co., said the cat got into the high voltage switching gear at the Midland east substation on Fairgrounds Road.

Three circuits, providing power primarily for the eastern portion of the city, were affected, he said. Some parts of central Midland also were affected.

The blackout at Midland Regional Air Terminal Friday night, which caused five incoming commercial flights to be diverted, was not the result of a general power failure, but rather of internal problems at the airport, McGrew said.

Midland vicinity social service leaders to meet

Social service and activities directors from throughout the Midland area will meet Tuesday in the Department of Public Welfare conference room, 3701 N. Big Spring St.

The midwest chapter of the group includes Andrews, Big Spring, Fort Stockton, Crane, Kermit, Lamesa, Seminole, McCamey, Stanton and Pecos.

Coffee and registration will begin at 10 a.m.

Speakers will be Ann Marie Dunn of Odessa, with the State Commission for the Blind, who will speak on techniques of working with the visually handicapped; Ken Wolf with Mental Health and Mental Retardation, who will explain MHMR services; Charlotte Windecker of the Department of Public Welfare, showing a film describing reality orientation, and Dr. Henry Page, speaking on "A Positive Approach to Aging."

Question and answer sessions will follow each speaker's presentation.

Rosemary McLaren, Permian Lodge activities director and group secretary-treasurer, will host the meeting. Leona Armentrout, Terrace Gardens activities director and group president, will preside.

At least three persons die in Amsterdam blaze

AMSTERDAM, The Netherlands (AP) — Fire today swept a fashionabl Amsterdam hotel filled mostly with Americans and other foreigners, killing at least three persons and injuring about 30 others, police said. Two of the dead were women who jumped from top-floor windows of the four-story Polen hotel.

Neither the dead nor the injured were immediately identified. Police said there could be more bodies in the ruins.

The fire broke out around 6:40 a.m., while most of the 105 guests in the hotel were asleep. The flames spread rapidly.

Most of the guests were foreigners, and police said some of them were Americans.

One of them, Seymour Shapiro, 56, from Teaneck, N.J., said the fire had already swept through the building when his wife, Doris, woke him.

"We were on the second floor and when we got into the corridor there was a solid wall of fire," Shapiro said. "People were shouting and screaming, some were jumping from the windows, others were on fire. It was terrible."

Shapiro said he and his wife reached the first floor and escaped after forming a human ladder with two women.

When firemen arrived, said one official, many guests were on the roof or at windows screaming for help, and "some people jumped before we arrived with rescue nets."

Minorities fill more federal jobs, study says

By LAWRENCE FEINBERG
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The number of blacks and other minority group members in high-paying federal jobs is continuing to increase rapidly, the U.S. Civil Service Commission reported Sunday, even though overall federal employment has declined.

At the top of the federal service ladder, the number of minority employes holding jobs that pay over $20,000 a year (in grades GS12 and above) increased by 15 per cent between May 1975 and 1976, the commission said.

Since 1973, the number of minorities in these jobs has climbed by 39 per cent, the commission said, while the number of whites in them has risen by just 6.1 per cent.

Minorities now account for 7.1 per cent of the government's top civil servants, (in GS 12 and above) compared to 5.5 per cent in 1973 and 2.8 per cent in 1970.

A spokesman for the Civil Service Commission said the new figures show that the government is making "steady progress" in increasing the number of black and other minority employes in good jobs and that affirmative action programs to recruit and upgrade them "are working."

He noted that some critics have charged that the change at the top levels hasn't been fast enough. On the other hand, he said, some white employes have complained that they are now victims of "reverse discrimination."

The number of government jobs held by women is covered in separate reports which have shown sizeable increases in the number of women in top civil service ranks over the past few years.

According to the new report on minorities, the total number of federal civilian employes fell last year by 13,296 to 2,424,772.

Even so, it said, the number of minority group workers increased by 2,801 to 21.1 per cent of the federal work-force.

Blacks accouned for 15.9 per cent of all federal employes. In addition, 3.4 per cent were Spanish-surnamed, and about 1.9 per cent were American Indian or Oriental.

According to the Census Bureau, non-whites and persons of Spanish origin now comprise about 17 per cent of nation's working-age population (16 to 64), with blacks making up 10.5 per cent of the total.

Among blacks, there was a 14 per cent increase last year in the number holding top federal white-collar jobs, but a slight decline in those in blue-collar jobs, the Postal Service, and in the very lowest ranks of white-collar civil service.

Nevertheless, blacks still comprised 20.1 per cent of the workers in GS grades 1 through 4 (earning from $5,800 to $10,800 a year) compared to just 3.4 per cent of those in the super-grades 16 to 18, earning from $39,629 to $54,410. In 1973, though, blacks made up just 2.5 per cent of the super-grades.

Committee says nation vulnerable

By NORMAN KEMPSTER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — A 4-year-old decision to separate government civil defense planning from disaster relief programs has left the nation's population unprepared to cope with either nuclear attack or natural catastrophe, a congressional committee reported Sunday.

The sharply critical report, prepared by the Joint Committee on Defense Production, is expected to intensify the debate on Capitol Hill over the adequacy of U.S. efforts to protect civilians from the full horror of nuclear war. Concern over Civil defense, long a dormant issue, has been heightened by recent reports on extensive efforts by the Soviet Union to prepare itself against nuclear attack.

The committee, headed by Sen. William Proxmire (D-Wis.), recommended reestablishment of a single Federal Preparedness Administration, reversing a 1973 reorganization which divided the program among three separate departments.

"The current state of the federal preparedness effort can be summed up in four words: dilution, proliferation, duplication and neglect," the committee said.

Two weeks ago, the House voted to increase by almost 50 per cent, from $90 million to $134.8 million, President Carter's budget for civil defense. The lawmakers expressed concern that the more ambitous Soviet effort, estimated by the Pentagon to cost as much as $1 billion a year, might be opening a "survival gap" that could give the Russians an edge in any future confrontation.

In a written statement issued in connection with the joint committee's report, Proxmire said, "Budget increases for mismanaged federal preparedness programs are tantamount to throwing good money after bad ...It would be sheer folly to pour additional funds into the present three-headed bureaucratic monster."

The committee said the nation could get more protection for its money by combining programs to deal with both wartime and natural disasters.

"Among the most serious of recent trends is the tendency to make nuclear attack preparedness an entirely separate and distinct function from peacetime emergency preparedness," the report said. It added that programs to cope with such disasters as tornadoes and tidal waves "provide an excellent base for nuclear attack response."

As an added dividend, the committee said, a unified approach also would minimize the possibility that the Soviets might consider a nuclear-oriented program as a provocation. Some defense experts consider civil defense to be a destabilizing influence in the nuclear power balance because it makes one side potentially more able than the other to survive a nuclear exchange.

Defense Secretary Harold Brown has said civil defense is of only minor importance in the strategic arms balance because small increases in the power of offensive weapons could offset any advantage from survival programs. But the House vote to boost the civil defense budget suggested many lawmakers disagree with Brown.

Rights stand taken

WASHINGTON (AP) — The liberal Americans for Democratic Action called on the Carter administration Sunday to end all aid to countries that disregard human rights.

While lauding the President's statements on human rights, the ADA said "words are not enough." The group, at its annual convention, said the Carter administration "must end all assistance that makes the United States a party, even indirectly, to violations of human rights."

All military aid, sales and training should be ended, the organization's platform urged.

The ADA also endorsed an end to corporate income taxes.

A convention resolution said all corporate profits should be allocated to stockholders, whether they are actually paid the dividends or not. The shareholders should then have to pay personal income tax this amount, the ADA proposed.

The convention supported Carter's proposed "gas-guzzler" automobile tax, but opposed using tax credits to promote solar energy expansion.

On Saturday, Sen. George S. McGovern, who was reelected president of the organization, accused Carter of concentrating on the administration's image instead of substance.

The South Dakota Democrat urged liberals not to be "content with labels, symbols and small consolations."

"We must not trade full employment for a town meeting," he told the convention.

Students, police clash in Tokyo airport protest

By JOHN SAAR
The Washington Post

TOKYO — Rioting students attacked police with rocks and firebombs Sunday in a wild demonstration against the planned opening of Tokyo's new international airport. Day-long battles between 4,000 riot police and about an equal number of demonstrators — mainly radical left-wing students — ended with 33 arrests and hundreds of injured on both sides.

In the most serious clash with students for several years, police fired water cannons and tear gas volleys at crowds converging on Narita Airport, 40 miles east of Tokyo.

Despite their vizored helmets, shields and body armor, 125 police were reported injured and five of them were hospitalized with burns. A spokesman for the Anti-Airport League which organized a protest rally said 295 demonstrators were injured.

Students, farmers and other opponents of the airport were angered by police action Friday in tearing down two steel towers that had prevented any aircraft from taking off or landing at Narita since it was completed in 1973. Saturday, demonstrators burned rubber tires in a vain effort to prevent a Ministry of Transport plane from making the first-ever airliner landing. Protest leaders said Sunday they will thwart efforts to open the airport for commercial use later this year.

Violence began when hundreds of students broke away from the rally and started hurling rocks and gasoline-filled bottles from behind barricades. The police advanced behind armored anti-riot vehicles firing tear gas grenades.

Students set two cars afire at one point and aimed the cars driverless towards the police. One car crashed into a house and started a fire which was quickly controlled by the police-water cannon.

Sailor's traditional uniform may reappear

By FRED S. HOFFMAN
AP Military Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Adm. James Holloway, chief of naval operations, has just about decided to recommend a return to the sailor's traditional uniform of bell bottom trousers, jumpers and little white hats.

A recent Navy poll heavily influenced Holloway's thinking on how to resolve one of the most fractious internal issues in the fleet.

That official poll confirmed less scientific but clear indications that the new uniform of coats, white shirts, black ties and peaked caps is massively unpopular in the enlisted ranks.

The new uniform became compulsory nearly two years ago.

The Navy's sampling of opinion among more than 8,500 sailors produced a vote of about 86 per cent or 87 per cent in favor of restoring the old-style uniform.

Navy officials said sailors of all ratings were polled at major bases in San Diego, Calif.; Norfolk, Va.; Charleston, S.C.; Yokusuka, Japan; Rota, Spain, and Subic Bay, the Philippines.

Detailed results are not yet available, officials said, because experts are still analyzing replies to 36 questions asked each sailor. The questions sought reasons for opinions on uniform style, as well as views on personal appearance, uniform cleaning problems and related matters.

According to present indications, Holloway may approve the old-style uniform for the five lowest enlisted ranks.

That would leave senior petty officers with the coat and tie uniform, which was a cherished badge of distinction for them before Adm. Elmo Zumwalt ordered all enlisted men to wear it.

Holloway's recommendation will go to the new Navy secretary, W. Graham Claytor Jr., who normally can be expected to ratify the admiral's judgment on a matter involving morale.

South Africa black leaders ask Young entry

Agence France Presse

JOHANNESBURG — Several black South African leaders have urged the government to authorize the visit United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young plans to make here next month, The Black Daily World reported here Sunday.

The paper published the reaction of black leaders to the government's threat of barring entry to Young if he did not arrange the schedule through proper diplomatic channels.

Press reports said South African Foreign Minister R.F. Botha objected to Young's plans to meet black nationalist leaders here.

"Let him in, say black leaders," The World's front page read.

Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, premier of the Kwazulu Bantustan, who several weeks ago met with President Carter at the White House, said that he had personally urged Young to visit South Africa.

"What do they fear? Do they fear the talks in Vienna (between South African Premier John Vorster and U.S. Vice President Walter Mondale) are so brittle Young's visit might upset the applecart?" he asked.

"We would welcome a man of his status," said B.T. Nteso, secretary-general of the Soweto township's Black Parents' Association, adding that the government was "overreacting."

Saturday Botha announced that he had received an official note from the U.S. government concerning Young's visit, planned for June 19 and 20. The Pretoria government is expected to release a communique in a few days to set forth its position on the U.S. note.

The original schedule of Young's visit was limited to meetings with white business leaders such as Harry Oppenheimer, chairman of the Anglo-American Corporation, and to a university lecture.

According to observers, the main question is whether Young will still be able to meet with black leaders here.

A press report here Sunday quoted sources close to Young in New York as saying that the black ambassador had agreed to stick to the original schedule and would not meet with black leaders.

Peas hold key to operation

Agence France-Presse

ROME — A can of peas held the key to a leftist gun-running operation that has baffled police for years, it was reported here Sunday.

News reports said a cleaning woman made the discovery when she opened a can of vegetables in a hideout she was hired to put in order after a police raid.

To her surprise, the can was packed with a tiny handgun, ammunition and a flashlight — the type of gear used in several prison breakouts since 1974.

The hideout, the reports said, belonged to the militant People's Armed Corps, a paramilitary revolutionary group suspected by police of organizing the breakouts.

Arms impact reports criticized

By LEE LESCAZE
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The congressionally mandated estimates of the impact of weapons programs on U.S. arms control efforts are inadequate and not in compliance with the law, according to a report made public Sunday.

In the foreword to a 414-page analysis of the Ford administration's arms control impact statements, Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman John Sparkman and ranking Republican Clifford P. Case call the statements "neither complete nor adequately analytical."

Arms Control and Disarmament Director Paul C. Warnke replies that he will play a central role in the preparation of future statements and will work to see that they comply with the spirit of the law.

In the two years since Congress ordered the executive branch to supply such statements, ACDA has not played a major role in preparing the statements, leaving them to the Pentagon, the Energy Research and Development Administration and the National Security Council.

"Unless a dominant voice," the report says, "is an impartial 'third' party which does not have a vested interest in the defense programs," the statements are likely not to be neutral.

Charles R. Gellner wrote the overall comments of the report, which was prepared by him and other analysts of the Library of Congress Congressional Research Service.

Congress ordered the arms control statements to be better informed when it makes decisions about development of weapons programs.

It conceived of the statements as an integral part of the Pentagon budget requests each year which would figure in the debate over weapons programs.

Instead the administration has treated the statements separately. "After they finish their budget request then they say 'Oh, now we have to do the damn impact statements,'" one congressional staffer said.

The report is an effort to increase congressional interest in the statements and to pressure the administration to improve its performance in preparing them.

Gellner cites the decisions to proceed with development and deployment of MIRV (multiple, independently targeted warheads) and cruise missiles as having had "a profound impact on arms control policy and negotiation."

He urges that the arms control impact reports would become more valuable if they were to compare a weapons system with the available alternatives in the earliest considerations of a new weapons system.

The report also criticizes the executive branch for overclassifying the impact statements that have been provided, thereby making it more difficult for Congress and the public to learn from the statements.

Both sets of statements that have been sent to Congress were done under the Ford administration.

Reported drug operation denied

McALESTER, Okla. (AP) — Oklahoma state prison warden Richard Crisp said he has no knowledge of a drug ring that a newspaper says peddled drugs at the state prison here and at prisons in four other states.

But Crisp added, "this sort of stuff doesn't surprise me at all."

Crisp said there have been many attempts at smuggling illegal drugs through the mails to the prison here.

But because of staff watchfulness, "there's very little drugs inside this institution," Crisp said.

"We're not allowed to read letters so all we do is open the letter and shake the pages to see if there's any contraband," Crisp said. "We turn each page of a newspaper or magazine because one time we found two pages glued together and discovered 200 amphetamine pills. And another time marijuana was sent in a hollowed-out Bible."

Twelve guards at the state prison have been fired or forced to resign in the past year for smuggling, including the most recent case where a guard allegedly smuggled a pistol and marijuana into the prison.

'Battle of Seabrook' enters federal court

CONCORD, N.H. (AP) — While Gov. Meldrim Thomson claimed to be winning "the battle of Seabrook," attorneys for the anti-nuclear protesters were taking Thomson and other state officials to court on charges of mistreatment.

U.S. District Court Judge Hugh Bownes was scheduled to hear arguments today in a civil suit against Thomson and five other state officials. The suit claims the demonstrators' constitutional rights have not been protected while they have been in custody.

Trials for some of the protesters also were to resume today in Derry District Court. Seventeen persons were convicted last week and were fined $100 and sentenced to 15 days in jail. All but one of those appealed.

Thomson, who has vowed to push for convictions of the 1,414 demonstrators who were arrested on trespass charges at the construction site of the $2 billion Seabrook nuclear power plant, said Sunday that 562 of the protesters had accepted bail, most of them in the last three days.

"The demonstrators are weakening their resolve to clog the state's incarceration facilities and the courts," Thomson said.

A spokesman for the Clamshell Alliance, which organized the May 1 protest, said the group expected the number being held to drop at the end of the week because many of the demonstrators had to return to college examinations or work.

U.S. child health care a 'joke', says professor

By GEORGE A. SILVER
The Washington Post

Children get a pretty bad shake as far as medical care and health services are concerned, particularly in the United States, a country which makes so many sententious statements about the family and the future.

We have no children's or family allowance to maintain a secure level of nutrition and housing for families; nutrition programs for children are irregular and hardly adequate when available; school health services are a joke, and, despite increased expenditures, diminishing programs of well-baby care, pre-school health services and immunizations handicap case-finding and treatment and, of course, prenatal care.

The administration will soon introduce a bill called "child health program," which will increase the number of eligible children under Medicaid for examination and treatment by 1 per cent. Keeping in mind that the states have managed to examine and perhaps treat (records are not kept) less than 10 per cent of the eligible children in the eight years of operation of the program, this effort is hardly the occasion for cheers.

"Permissiveness" apparently is a national euphemism for neglect. Child abuse is said to be the leading cause of death inn-children under 5. While 200,000 cases were reported, estimates of actual incidence in a recent survey range as high as 1.5 million cases in this country. About 700 children a year are killed by their parents or guardians.

About 20 per cent of American children get little of none of the medical care they need; about a third are not immunized against diseases wiped out in other countries. Millions of children go to bed and to school hungry.

We don't know how many children who are hard of hearing or deaf are without hearing aids, because we don't do countrywide hearing tests or follow up those tested. We do vision tests, though, so we know that 17 per cent of children entering school at age 6 (650,000) have defective vision and in the school population of the United States (46 million) about 3 million who need glasses don't have them. These children with hearing and vision defects uncorrected will not, of course, do well in school; they will wind up at the bottom of th academic, occupational and social ladders.

Poverty exaggerates all these effects, but in health matters the well-to-do aren't so much better off. Black, brown and red babies die at a 50 to 100 per cent higher rate than white babies. True. But that's only a special case of failure to protect babies in this country. Our "Cbest" infant mortality rate is 50 per cent higher than the average Scandinavian or Dutch rates.

We have no designated child health system in this country. There is a "parental responsibility," which can only be discharged if there is a medical care system. There isn't, so children turn to their parents. Where shall the parents turn?

European child health care systems have an unusual feature — separate preventive services for children. These include specialized nursing care, little in the way of physician care in the preventive role and lots of home visiting to educate, examine, immunize and act as a primary care focus and referral point for a sick child.

In Holland, this system costs the country 9 cents a day per child, with part of the money from the family, part from the local community and part from the national government. Scrupulous record keeping results in follow-up on every child from birth through the school yeas. Neglecting a child's health need is treated like child abuse and may involve social agencies, the courts and ombudsman and even appointment of a guardian.

There are aspects of the Dutch preventive program for children which would need thorough exploration before being recmmended here. For example, prevention can be emphasized because there is also a comprehensive national health insurance system in place and every child can get treatment for illness or a handicapping condition. It would appear that prevention is difficult to impose without a curative system in place.

There's no secret formula that the Dutch (or Scandinavians or French or Finns) have patented for a child health program, but there are a few critical elements.

First, all children must be eligible and all children covered. If a system is geared for the poor alone, it rapidly becomes a poor system. Preventive services are needed by every child and every family.

Immunizations to prevent epidemic diseases; health education to assure proper nutrition and living habits; family health educational supplrt to put an end to epidemics of social disease — drug abuse, alcoholism, venereal disease, child abuse — are as much general community public health measures as chlorination of water.

Second, the services should be carried out by experts in the practice of prevention. We've tried for years to get physicians interested in prevention. It hasn't worked.

The preventive health worker should be more like the public health nurse in backgroud and training, with experience in preventive medicine, family and child care, health education. A British "health visitor" for example, has had nursing training, midwifery and public health training, sometimes with a dash of pediatrics.

A third necessary element is the participation of the family. Millions of parents and family members are involved in our school systems and, while we tend to be critical of the system, it is clear tht in those schools where the most parents are involved, the school tends to be better.

Perhaps we cannot have all the private neighborhood organizations for preventive services that the Dutch have, but we can provide these services for our children. Even where there are official agencies carrying out these preventive activities, we should insist on citizen boards and advisory groups to insure against bureaucratization and assure responsiveness to thmmunity.

Finally, children need preventive services from the beginning, which means prenatal services and observation and care all through pregnancy. (fixing overline).

Newborns and infants should have handicaps detected early. Pre-school children can get care from neighborhood centers, where all immunizations and examinations can be done, and school-age children preventive supervision and examinations in the schools.

I am amused when I hear how we are a "child oriented" society. Are we ready for a child health program that is meaningful? Preventive minded? Offering comprehensive care? Raising the level of health and longevity of the next generation? For less than we are paying now?

DEAR ABBY

Nobody knows trouble nose causing family

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My daughter (whom I shall call Ethel) is graduating from high school in June, so my rich sister sent her a check for $1,500 with a note, "To get your nose fixed, honey."

Now, Abby, Ethel's nose isn't that bad. She resembles my father, and his nose goes with his face. Some of Ethel's friends have had their noses fixed, and she's been after us ever since to get hers done. We kept saying we couldn't afford it. Now what can we say?

I am so burned up at my sister I can hardly see to write this. She had HER nose bobbed a few years ago and now she looks like Marlo Thomas, but I think her old nose had more character.

Abby, do you think my sister had the right to send our daughter a check for a nose job knowing how we fought against it? And should we let Ethel do it, even though we don't think she really needs it?—FAMILY NOSE FIGHT

DEAR NOSE FIGHT: Your sister should have kept her bobbed nose out of your family fight. But consider your daughter. HER nose doesn't have to go with her grandfather's face. And if a girl's character is in her nose, heaven help her.

If Ethel thinks she needs to have her nose bobbed, she needs it. Take her to a certified plastic surgeon for a consultation. He won't chisel needlessly.

DEAR ABBY: Whatever became of the old-fashioned, red-blooded verile male who could get excited about a lovable, feminine woman?

Lately, all the men I meet are either interested in other men, or practically impotent because the Women's Libbers have made them feel they're not needed for anything!

The last few men I dated sounded like they were all playing the same recording: It started with the alimony blues and ended with, "I don't want to get serious with another woman as long as I live!"

Abby, please tell me where to find a good old-fashioned man who's all man, and I'll go there tomorrow.—STATEN ISLAND

DEAR STATEN: Staten Island is loaded with them. Stand still, and one will catch up with you. They're all looking for a lovable feminine woman they can get excited about.

DEAR ABBY: Please say a word in your column about these extravagant weddings people put on. I understand such catered affairs run from $25 per person on up.

If the bride's parents spend $25 per guest, the invitee is obligated to buy a gift of the same value.

In our case, the wedding invitation our family just received will cost us $150 to accept.

At those prices, we would have considered it a kindness not to have been invited.—C.

DEAR C.: Where is it written that a guest must match the cost of being entertained by presenting a gift of equal value? A gift is always voluntary—never obligatory.

Shoe sizes come from barley corn

U. S. shoe sizing was developed in England during the 14th century. A measurement of one-third inch, the length of an average barley corn, represents the difference in whole numbered shoe sizes, Mrs. Becky Culp, area clothing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System, says.

Anti-abortionists being challenged for their rights under 'conscience law'

By PHILIP HAGER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — As an operating room technician for a Florida hospital, Valerie Smith was expected to help doctors and nurses perform abortions. When she refused, citing moral convictions, she received a 30-day dismissal notice and was admonished that if she couldn't assist in abortions she should get out of the medical profession.

Miss Smith went to court in Dade County, Fla., and, after some negotiating among attorneys, won a tentative agreement for reinstatement and a promise from hospital officials she would not be fired for refusing to help perform abortions.

The reason: Florida's "conscience law" — a law similar to provisions in 31 states (including California) and also in effect as a federal statute.

Enacted in the wake of recent decisions establishing new rights to abortion, conscience laws permit doctors, nurses, technicians and-or hospitals to refuse — on moral or religious grounds — to perform nonmedically necessary abortions.

The new laws — at least as they pertain to hospitals — have met resistance in the courts. And now their validity is nearing a critical test in the Supreme Court in cases presenting a clash between the right not to perform an abortion and the right to obtain one.

Thus far, lower courts have struck down conscience laws protecting public hospitals; told public hospitals that if their physicians refuse to perform abortions there are those who won't refuse; and, in one instance, said that a conscience law would not protect a private nonprofit hospital open to the public.

Those decisions have been welcome news to proabortion forces.

"We agree 100 per cent that individuals shouldn't be forced to perform abortions — that's not good for either the patient or the practitioner," says Karen Mulhauser, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

"But facilities (hospitals) present a serious problem. We don't believe a 'facility' can have a moral conscience...When hospitals can refuse abortions, particularly in nonurban areas, they can force women who can't afford to travel elsewhere to instead choose selfinduced abortions."

On the other side, antiabortion groups see conscience laws as protecting basic rights of individuals — and institutions — against being forced to perform acts they consider unnecessary and reprehensible.

They doubt there is a real shortage of available facilities — noting that over 1 million legal abortions were performed in the United States last year — and express dismay particularly with the decision holding that private hospitals must perform the operations.

"That's a pretty bad decision," says Patrick A. Trueman, general counsel for the Legal Defense Fund of Americans United for Life. "The theory behind it is that hospitals — even private hospitals — receive government funds and thus take illegal 'state action' by denying abortions....

"The theory behind conscience laws is that, rooted in the First Amendment, there is religious freedom — freedom of conscience — to refuse to perform abortions."

The laws' supporters say also that the statutes may become effective defenses against what they see as increasing pressure among some hospitals and medical schools to force doctors, nurses and students to accept abortion.

"There are pro-abortionists who would try to close the medical profession to those who do not want to perform abortions," says Robert M. Brake of Coral Gables, Fla., the attorney who represents Valerie

Attorneys expected to ask venue change

HOUSTON (AP) — Defense attorneys were expected to request a change of venue when the capital murder trial of Vernon Eugene McManus gets underway today in state district court.

McManus, 34, a former college assistant football coach, is charged in the last July 25 strangulation-beating deaths of Paul and Mary Cantrell. The bodies of the electrical contractor and his wife were found in their Baytown home.

Police claim the couple was killed in a scheme to collect insurance money.

Paula Cantrell Derese, 26, a daughter of the Cantrells, also was charged in the case. She has pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of murder and is scheduled to testify for the state in the McManus trial. She is to be sentenced following the trial.

Mrs. Derese entered her plea on the morning testimony was to have started. The plea came after two weeks of jury selection.

It required nearly seven weeks for attorneys to select a jury in the McManus trial. Then, on April 24, the day before the start of testimony, McManus disappeared and his blood-smeared car was found abandoned in east Harris County.

He was found six days later in Jacksonville Beach, Fla., and was returned to Houston. State District Judge I. D. McMaster revoked McManus' $50,0000 bond and ordered the trial to begin today.

Defense lawyers Don Smith and Mark Vela are expected to renew motions for a change of venue, claiming news stories generated by the flight from prosecution has made it impossible for McManus to receive a fair trial in Harris County.

However, prosecutors Mike Hinton and L. H. Stewart are expected to argue that the lengthy case should get under way.

The case became the first in Harris County under the new death penalty law to allow defendants to become free on bond. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals reversed the withholding of bond on Mrs. Derese and the state elected to allow bond for McManus.

If McManus is convicted he could receive the death penalty or a life prison sentence.

Mrs. Derese is scheduled to have her punishment assessed by State District Court Judge Joe Guarino after the McManus trial. Her punishment could range from probation to life in prison.

Jaworski says Nixon 'criminally culpable'

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski said as early as December 1973 he warned then-President Nixon's chief of staff, Gen. Alexander Haig, that Nixon was "criminally culpable" of involvement in the Watergate coverup.

Jaworski told KPRC-TV here Sunday that Nixon should have admitted to the American people during the recent television interview that he was guilty of criminal conduct.

"I told his (Nixon's) chief of staff...that, in my judgment he was criminally culpable and strongly recommended that Haig find as fine a criminal lawyer as he could find in the country to take a look at all the evidence—the matters he knew about, the matters I knew about—and have him advise Haig and the President as to whether the President was not criminally guilty," said Jaworski.

The Houston attorney stated flatly that Nixon "has not told the whole story" during the first of four televised interviews with British entertainer David Frost.

However, Jaworski was apparently of a different mind when he was appointed by Nixon to probe the Watergate matter.

"I wanted to believe he was innocent and thought he had been victimized by members of his staff," said Jaworski. "But I think he was conducting and carrying on with a number of these people, knowing that the situation was a grave one, trying to find methods of escape from the consequences of it."

Asked whether he thought Nixon was in on the initial planning of the coverup, Jaworski said, "Well, he participated in orchestrating it, yes. There is no question he knew very soon after. That's one reason there are erasures, one reason there are gaps in the White House tapes.

"From what I know about the matter...I had to come to the conclusion that he (Nixon) was guilty of obstruction of justice."

Doctor blames hysteria

ENID, Okla. (AP) — A doctor says hysteria was apparently the cause of a malady that struck about 26 members of a Texas high school band here Saturday.

The students had complained of upset stomachs, headaches and dizziness.

Authorities first believed that the students from Northwest High School in Justin, Tex., were suffering from gas inhalation, when they reported the symptoms while participatingin the Tri-State Music Festival here.

"We didn't find any evidence of gas inhalation," said Dr. Cecil Reinstein. "We didn't feel they had a real illness. Apparently it wasn't that big a deal."

Dr. Reinstein said none of the students was hospitalized. All were sent home.

Senate turns attention to state spending bill

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Debate over how much Texas should spend on state government operations the next two years shifts today from the House to the Senate.

The Senate Finance Committee met early in the day to consider the House-passed general appropriation bill that finally cleared the House by 120-28 vote on Thursday after eight days of discussion.

The committee was expected to substitute its own version and then clear the state spending measure for Senate debate Tuesday.

The general debate session of the Senate today started off with a proposal to change the name of the Railroad Commission as pending business. Sen. Grant Jones, D-Abilene, thinks it should be the "Energy and Transportation Commission."

The House scheduled a 1:30 p.m. session while House leaders prepared for Tuesday's planned debate on teachers pay raise and retirement measures.

The House appropriations bill sent to the Senate totals $15.4 billion from all funds, leaving an estimated $1.1 million in state funds for other spending, such as public school financing and teachers pay raises and retirement.

The Senate Finance Committee has been holding in committee a Senate version of state spending that totals $15.6 billion, leaving $856.7 million for other spending.

There were numerous differences in the two bills including a 6.8 per cent state employes pay raise granted in the Senate bill compared to 3.4 per cent in the House bill.

After the Senate approves its general appropriations bill, the final version likely will be drafted by a 10-member conference committee negotiating the differences between the two houses.

And after the Senate completes work on the appropriations bill, it is scheduled to take up the House-approved $695 million public school financing bill, which also likely will end up in a conference committee.

Insurance probe said under way

DALLAS (AP) — Alleged irregularities within the jurisdiction of the State Insurance Department are being investigated a Travis County grand jury with assistance from the Texas Attorney General's office, according to The Dallas Morning News.

In a copyright Sunday story, the newspaper said among the probe targets are papers relating to the department's regulation of Great Commonwealth Life Insurance Co. of Dallas, which has been under state supervision since December 1975.

State Insurance Board Chairman Joe Christie said his department is "eager" to cooperate with any such investigation, but added that no one from Attorney General's office or the grand jury had contacted him concerning the probes.

"As I stated last year," Christie said, "the federal grand jury in Baton Rouge (La.) was investigating the Great Commonwealth Life Insurance Co. case. Any of our employes who have information of interest to any grand jury investigation should come forward at once and make this information available. I am confident this will be done."

Asst. Atty. Gen. David Pace confirmed his office has been "asked to assist the grand jury on a couple of different matters." Pace said further comment would have to come from the grand jury foreman.

Mass repeated

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Archbishop Phillip M. Hannan says he has no plans for immediate action against a Texas priest and more than 100 persons who participated in an unauthorized Catholic mass.

"Without the newpapers paying attention, it would have disappeared," Hannan said Sunday after Father Hector Bolduc held Latin mass again in a Kenner gymnasium. "The traditionist followers are less than one-tenth of one per cent of all Catholics."

Hannan had previously threatened Bolduc and his followers with censure after they had held the mass in Kenner on several other occasions.

Father Bolduc, a traveling priest, is a follower of a French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who has been censured by Pope Paul VI.

Air Force Academy pointing out pitfalls of unwise fuel use

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — The people shout for "more food," "more heat." World leaders watch as nuclear waste destroys the environment and supplies of fossil fuels run out.

A pessimist's vision of the future? The plot of a new disaster movie? No, it's all part of a computerized course at the Air Force Academy to teach students what could happen if energy and other resources aren't used wisely.

In the course, students play world leaders deciding uses of energy and other resources and then feeding the decisions into a computer.

The computer, which has information bbout fuel supplies, energy use, population increases and other factors, then tells the students what effects their decisions would have over periods of hundreds of years.

During a recent class, five students chosen to "rule" the world decided to maintain current standards of living. The computer told them their actions would exhaust world supplies of fossil fuels such as coal and oil in 145 years, while piling up huge amounts of atomic wastes.

Their classmates pretended to be the world's population, shouting "more food," "more heat" and "more cars," while red lights indicating shortages began to appear on a computer terminal.

"It is a psychological thing," said Capt. Bill Noll, the chemistry instructor who helped develop the computer program for the class.

"Being good politicians and world rulers, they want to keep the people from screaming. So the last thing they cut is the standard of living."

A second group of five cadets tried to maintain food production by cutting back on other areas but had little better luck. After 145 years, Noll said, "All we are doing is eating; everything else is gone."

A third group of students began an accelerated program to develop alternative energy resources and made cuts in automobile use, air conditioning, heating and other areas. The standard of living dropped considerably but food levels remained adequate and the environment stayed healthy.

Then, the computer told the students, as new sources of energy came into use the standard of living began to rise again. At 550 years, where Noll stopped the computer clock, the world's fossil fuel supplies had run out but new energy sources were able to take their place.

"We are doing very little to develop new energy sources," Noll said, and conservation is still not very popular. "Somehow we have got to turn this lifestyle around."

30 cent tax on coal would hamper efforts, Energy council says

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — A proposed 30-cent-a-ton tax on surface-mined coal would discourage the development of lignite in Arkansas and elsewhere, the Southwest Regional Energy Council says.

The proposal is in the land reclamation bill currently pending in the U.S. Senate.

The council adopted a resolution Saturday opposing the proposed method of levying the tax and of allocating the revenues from it.

The resolution was adopted at the suggesting of Arkansas state Sen. J. A. "Dooley" Womack of Camden.

Lignite has less heat value than coal, thus more tons of it must be mined to obtain the same heat value that a lesser amount of coal would have. This would force lignite-producing states to pay a disproportionate portion of the tax, the resolution said.

The resolution also said Congress should be interested in providing incentives for the gasification and liquefaction of lignite and coal rather than imposing penalties like the proposed tax.

Also Saturday, New Mexico state Rep. Bob Grant said President Carter's energy plan emphasizes conservation too much at the expense of providing incentives to provide more fuels.

Grant appeared to summarize the council's feelings. His statement was directed to Scott Bush of Washington, the deputy associate administrator for policy of the Federal Energy Administration.

Bush explained the president's program to the five-state panel.

Five or more legislators from Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, New Mexico and Oklahoma make up the council, which was formed two years ago to counteract the lobbying in Congress by the northeastern states.

Grant said higher prices for fuel wouldn't bring the decline in consumption that the President wants.

Kitimat appears to be best site for terminal

VANCOUVER, British Columbia (AP) — Kitimat appears to be the best site for a major oil tanker terminal on the British Columbia coast, a federal-provincial committee has concluded.

Termpol, a committee with representatives of seven federal government departments and the provincial government set up in February, released a report Sunday favoring the Kitimat site 400 miles northwest of Vancouver because no unusual navigational risk was identified.

The committee said the terminal, proposed by Kitimat Pipeline Ltd. to receive oil from Alaska and the Middle East, was acceptable from an engineering standpoint but more information is needed on the marine, weather and environmental aspects of the tanker route.

The assessment is to serve as a blueprint for proceedings at the federally-appointed Kitimat Pipeline Inquiry.

The committee report said further documentation and studies of fishery resources would not alter the committee's conclusion that the tanker route has an extremely high potential to disrupt fishing activity.

The committee also found that knowledge of seasonal distribution of marine birds along tanker approach routes to the proposed terminal is generally inadequate.

Air ports becoming Arab status symbols

The Los Angeles Times

SHARJAH, United Arab Emirates — Airports are rapidly replacing herds of camels as status symbols in the oil sheikdoms of the lower Persian Gulf.

They come with terminals, customs, long runways, control towers and, in some cases, even airplanes.

No longer is it enough to have a bigger Mercedes, a longer yacht, a more splendid palace. The sheiks have gone airport-mad.

They are blossoming like wildflowers after a rain from the desert sands of the UAE, a federation of seven sheikdoms the size of South Carolina with a population estimated at 750,000. There already are four international airports, with three more to come, plus three local airstrips.

To the observer, it makes little sense. The new airport here in Sharjah, which opened this year, is within taxiing distance of Dubai's 10-year-old one.

The pecking order will change somewhat when Sheik Rashid, the ruler of Dubai, gets his new airport. That again should make him top dog in the airport competition — until Sheik Zayed, the Abu Dhabi ruler and president of the UAE, gets his new airport. But Rashid's will be able to handle 2,000 passengers per hour when completed, a real source of pride at least until Zayed's comes into being.

All of this costs money — roughly $100 million per airport. But thanks to the oil boom, which has endowed the natives here — not including the great majority of residents, who are foreign workers — with a per capita income approaching $20,000 per year, money is not a problem.

It is not a problem even to the oil-poor sheiks, such as those here in Sharjah and in Ras el Khaimah up the coast. they can use political clout instead.

Sheik Sultan of Sharjah, for instance, is very close to Sheik Zayed of Abu Dhabi, partly because of his dedication to making the fragile federation work and partly out of their mutual rivalry with the independent-minded Sheik Rashid of Dubai. As a result, Sheik Zayed, who had an unspendable surplus of $1 billion last year, is happy to help Sheik Sultan.

Sheikh Saqr of Ras el Khaimah has no oil production yet, but he has strategic position. His principality lies on the Strait of Hormuz, the narrow opening separating the Gulf of Oman from the Persian (or Arab) Gulf.

Bumper-to-bumper commuters big problem in use of energy

WASHINGTON (AP) — At five o'clock on any week night, President Carter's energy planners can look out of their office windows at part of the problem they're trying to solve.

It's right there. Bumper to bumper, home-bound commuters inch along at peak inefficiency, burning much of their gasoline at a standstill.

That happens twice a day in every major city. Yet there is nothing in the Carter energy conservation program that seeks to entice people out of their automobiles and onto a bus or a subway.

The omission is the more puzzling because the administration's energy study illustrates the savings that could follow.

Transportation consumes about 26 per cent of the nation's energy, and about half of that is used by automobiles. If 40 per cent of U.S. commuters carried one additional passenger in their cars each day, it would save 2.5 per cent of total American oil consumption.

"In the long run, mass transit by bus and rail must play a significant role in reducing energy consumption in the transportation sector," the energy policy paper says. "Reliable, inexpensive mass transit is needed to serve existing, spread-out metropolitan areas."

That is a goal. At this point, there is no proposal to go with it.

In his energy address, Carter said the nation must not continue to drift along, with threequarters of its cars carrying only the driver "while our public transportation system continues to decline."

Carter said later that he thinks "there will be a substantial shift toward increasing use of the public transportation systems, rapid transit, as the price of the gas for automobiles goes up and as the price of fuel goes up."

But increasing prices is the punitive side of the program; what is lacking is an effort to promote more efficient mass transportation by making it an attractive alternative to the automobile.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams is beginning work now on a mass transportation proposal to be presented to Congress next year, but it will have to be far more ambitious than anything the government has done so far if it is to gain willing volunteers for bus lines instead of grumbling conscripts, forced from their cars by higher prices.

Energy adviser James R. Schlesinger said the government already is providing all the mass transit aid that can be used in the short term. He's right. Out of some $2.6 billion available during the fiscal year that will end Sept. 30, only about $750 million had been spent or committed as of March 31.

They will be installed at the society's annual awards dinner May 24, Don Causey, outgoing president, said.

Italy stopgap becomes money collecting item

ROME (AP) — Minichecks, the latest stopgap remedy for Italy's chronic shortage of small change, have already become collectors' items.

A 100-lire — 12-cent — certified check put out last year by Banco di Napoli in Reggio Calabria might get turned down by a wary newsstand dealer. But you could get as much as 250,000 lire — $283 — for it at current market prices among collectors.

"I have sold 200,000-lire-worth of minichecks already today and only 20,000-lire-worth of Roman coins," a coin dealer said during a busy Sunday morning at Rome's flea market. "The Roman coins are 2,000 years old, and these minichecks are less than two years old."

His stand is just one of a half dozen in the flea market doing a thriving business in minichecks.

The original idea behind the minichecks was to fill the gap caused by the government mint's inability to keep up with the demand for coins. The simplest chores had been immensely complicated by the search for change — producing the 50lire fare on the buses or to pay highway tolls, purchasing a newspaper or a cup of coffee, mailing a letter or buying an aspirin to deal with the other headaches.

Shoppers without change often returned home with a pocketful of bartered goods — a piece of hard candy from the coffee bar, a sprig of parsley from the market, a bandage from the pharmacy, an extra stamp from the post office.

To help solve the problem, the banks last year began printing minichecks in 50 to 300-lire denominations as certified checks or as checks against the accounts of specific customers. Soon there was a flood of minichecks to tatter in everybody's pockets.

Some judges questioned their legality and an undersecretary in the Treasury Ministry issued a widely publicized statement recently that the minichecks were of doubtful legitimacy.

This raised doubts in the minds of some merchants, who began refusing to accept the minichecks. But it created a boom business for collectors, and the craze is beginning to spread abroad, especially to West Germany, dealers say.

The latest minicheck catalogue on the flea market stands includes an editor's note which says the lack of endorsements as the checks pass from one person to the next "attributes to them the function of substitute money, reserved by law to the state and the Bank of Italy.

"This led to the intervention of some zealous functionary of the judiciary who put out warnings in regard to this money of necessity, to whom we owe our heartfelt thanks for the enormous interest raised in these bills."

Welfare system: Americans dislike it, but feel need to help poor

By WILLIAM CHAPMAN
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The important thing to remember about The American Way of Welfare is that there isn't supposed to be any. It was conceived in the 1930s as a sort of stopgap and has been with us ever since, but we still don't accept it.

The most that we will allow is that it is a temporary evil that somehow, someday, will miraculously disappear. The planners of the New Deal, without knowing it, laid down the basic program for what we now call welfare, but the last thing they had in mind was the permanent support of people who lack money. One of their slogans was, "A program for the poor is a poor program."

That concept was still alive last week when the Carter administration unveiled the murky outlines of a "welfare" program that basically is another in a long series of efforts to get people off the rolls and into self-supporting jobs. Steady employment, even at low wages, is its goal.

Ray F. Marshall, the Secretary of Labor, explained that the administration's plan would move people from welfare into public-service jobs and ultimately into private employment. It was essentially the New Dealers' dream, 40 years later.

The explanation for this attitude begins with how Americans collectively view the poor — with a mixture of compassion and distaste. Officially we recognize we must care for the needy, and so this year we will spend more than $60 billion specifically for low-income people.

But unofficially we regard poverty as an alien culture. It isn't part of the American Dream, in which everyone climbs determinedly into the middle class.

Frances Fox Piven and Richard A. Cloward, in their book "Regulating the Poor," trace a history of American "loathing" of people on relief. In our ideology, they observe, "the economic system is open, and economic success is a matter of individual merit (and sometimes luck)." It follows, therefore, that "those who fail — the very poor — are therefore morally or personally defective."

Such failure won't go on forever. The Bible tells us, "Ye have the poor always with you." But that is not the American Way. Our poor are supposed to go away.

THE ASSUMPTION that the poor and their despised dole will somehow disappear undergirds much of the welfare planning of this century. Programs for the welfare class were designed and tinkered with on the understanding that they would wither away.

That assumption was not attached to other social programs, such as Social Security or unemployment insurance. Social Security was constructed in 1935 as an automatic, self-perpetuating program to assist the elderly. It was not to be a program for the elderly poor; payments would go to rich and poor alike.

A minor, virtually unnoticed part of that 1935 act was something called Aid to Dependent Children, under which the Federal government would supplement the states' old "Mothers' Aid" programs.

The initial appropriation by the New Deal was $25 million for children rendered dependent by the death, desertion or mental incapacitation of a parent. New Deal planners had in mind the families of deceased coal miners. They assumed that problem would go away as widows were provided for in the new survivors' insurance program.

That didn't happen. This fiscal year, the Federal government and the states will spend nearly $10 billion on that little program's successor, Aid to Families with Dependent Children.

AFDC is "welfare," as most Americans see it, and it is in the history of that program that our attitudes show through clearly. By the late 1950s, as refugees from Southern farms began seeking assistance, it was clear that welfare wasn't going to wither away by itself.

Therefore, it was decided that it should be made to wither away. Almost every welfare "reform" program of the past 15 years, both humane and punitive, was designed with the idea that the welfare rolls eventually would be done away with.

In 1962 came the social-services approach, in which welfare recipients were to be inundated in professional care ranging from pre-natal medical aid to family therapy, all of it provided by a new corps of trained social workers. The poor were to be rehabilitated right up into the mainstream.

Abraham A. Ribicoff, then Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, declared that this approach would move some out of welfare entirely, make others independent and encourage all of their children to "grow strong in mind and body."

Not much really happened, however, except for a sizable increase in the number of people on the rolls. Between 1961 and 1967 they grew from 3.5 million recipients to 5 million.

THE NEXT PANACEA, ordained by a hostile Congress in 1967, was work. The rolls would be gradually emptied by requiring recipients to go to work, even though it was already recognized that a majority were families headed by women deserted by their husbands.

Those were the volatile years in Congress, when Sen. Russell Long (D-La.) was referring to the mothers as "brood mares" and suggesting that they were "filling up their homes with children" in order to get higher benefits.

The result of all the table pounding and punitive amendments was a continued increase in the number on the welfare rolls.

Nothing seems to wither away except the hopes of welfare planners. The reason is that the planners continue to think of welfare cases as people who, with a bit of prodding and incentive, ought to go to work, people who can be trained, educated, and motivated up into the mainstream. If they don't, something is wrong with them.

It is a fundamental misreading of the kind of people who are poor in the United States. A large majority of the poor are people not normally expected to work — children, disabled, mothers with young children. Another large proportion are people who do work but don't make enough money to escape being poor.

"Poor Americans either work full- or part-time, or are people no civilized society would compel to work," HEW Secretary Joseph A. Califano observed recently.

But there was another reason the welfare rolls rose rapidly in the 1960s: The poor, inadvertently assisted by the Federal government, wheedled, pushed, shoved, picketed, sued and agitated their way onto the rolls in record numbers.

In the tumult of the burning cities and militant protests, government (national and local) was forced to give the poor something to stem their rage, and the easiest thing to give them was easier access to welfare.

GREAT SOCIETY anti-poverty agencies were often in the forefront of the agitation, creating the curious situation in which a government devoted to reducing the rolls financed many of the lawsuits and storefront organizations that opened the rolls even wider. Down came the man-in-the-house rule, out went state residency requirements, and the word was spread to local administrators to lower the barriers and take all reasonable applications.

Authors Piven and Cloward believe that the government used welfare as the tool of appeasement for black welfare applicants, because it could not meet other social demands without alienating whites. They write:

"In other words, while the Great Society agencies often attempted to make gains for blacks in housing and health care and education and employment, resistance was stiff and sometimes virulent, for other groups in the cities had major stakes in these services and resources. But there were few other major groups in the cities with direct and immediate interests in welfare. (Giving welfare was also cheaper, at least in the short run, than building housing, for example.) Consequently, relief-giving turned out to be the most expeditious way to deal with the political pressures created by a dislocated poor, just as it had been many times in the past."

In the same period another welfare program — food stamps — began growing suddenly for the same reason as AFDC: a response to pressures in the streets. The food-stamp program in 1968 was a minuscule pilot plan to help the poor get good food at lower-than-usual cost.

That year the Poor People's March on Washington, led by the Rev. Ralph Abernathy, demanded free food stamps to eradicate hunger and mounted large-scale protests at the Department of Agriculture, which — then as now — administered the program.

Rodney E. Leonard, than an assistant to Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman, recently recalled the result of those pressures. Word had come from the White House to give something to the marchers — inexpensively.

"If the Johnson Administration was to do anything in response, it would be the Department of Agriculture," Leonard said. "We had to come up with a package which would allow the march to seem successful without raising the budget. We could maybe play around with $200 million, but no real big new programs. We had to come up with something that would let Abernathy claim that something had been accomplished. They were asking for free food stamps, but we knew Congress wouldn't swallow that.

"So when Freeman and I were going to the Hill in a car, I said, 'Let's set it (the purchase price) as low as we can.' I said we should lower it to 50 cents for the poorest. And so we did, and that was when the food stamps took off."

At the time food stamps were costing the Federal government about $115 million. This year the program will cost about $5.6 billion.

IT IS STARTLING now to look back on the mid-1960s and measure the changes in welfare, broadly defined to mean that array of government services and cash that go exclusively to people who are officially poor.

The Federal government and the states paid out $2 billion in 1967 for families with dependent children. They will pay $9.9 billion this year. Medicaid, which provides medical care for low-income families, was $1.9 billion then. Now it is $16.6 billion. There were no basic-opportunity grants to help educate college students from poor families. Nearly $2 billion will be spent for them this year.

Between 1968 and 1976, according to the Congressional Research Service, the benefits rose from $16.1 billion to $62.9 billion — an increase of 289 per cent.

In roughly the same period, the number of poor persons increased by 1.7 million, and their proportion in the population remained about the same.

Because each of the programs was planned separately, all fit together poorly, and the result is the widely proclaimed "welfare mess." Some argue that its shortcomings are minor and easily repaired. But built into the awkward system are gaps and inequities that affront common sense and scrape abrasively on our sense of social justice.

Some of the poor receive almost nothing; others can milk the system for considerable benefits.

The National Journal recently analyzed who gets what from the five major welfare programs and came up with a dismal tale of geographical inequity. In New Nork state, for example, $2,859 was spent from Federal state and local sources for every person with an income below the official poverty line. In Wyoming it was only $370. Regionally, only $784 was spent in the South per poor person, while in the Northeast it was $2,428.

THE REASONS for the inequities vary. Some states have tight application policies designed to discourage participation; some have been historically generous. Some states set high benefit levels; some set low ones. Some states try to conceal the fact that benefits are available at all; others advertise them extensively.

Leonard, who is now director of the Community Nutrition Institute, a non-profit consumer advocacy organization, estimates that nationally only about half of the people legally eligible for food stamps actually receive them. But in Massachusetts, which has a lively public information program, between 70 and 80 per cent of the eligible participate.

Also built into the network is a positive incentive to remain on welfare permanently, the very reverse of what two generations of reformers have intended. Of all the ironies in welfare, the most peculiar is the one that perpetuates a system everyone says is supposed to wither away. It simply is not to the advantage of many recipients to give up welfare and go to work.

The fact is that earning income on a job may make one ineligible for a much higher return of government cash and services. A family receiving AFDC benefits is automatically eligible for both food stamps and Medicaid, the total value of which could easily come to $6,000 or $7,000 in a northern state. A full-time job at the minimum wage (about $4,800 annually) would trip the wire on AFDC and in turn would lose the family its free medical care and low-cost food.

It also is widely accepted now that the AFDC rules do encourage the father to desert his family so that its members may be better cared for on welfare. The result is to create more female-headed families, the very opposite of welfare purposes.

A subcommittee of the congressional Joint Economic Committee found extensive evidence of this in a major study three years ago. It found that "a man with a wife and two children who worked at $2 an hour could increase the income of his family by an average of $2,158 annually by deserting them." That was the difference in AFDC cash and food stamps available to the mother and children if the father left home.

There are, too, cases in which the clever recipient can put together a variety of the welfare programs, earn a little money in a part-time job (but not enough to lose eligibility) and come off better than his next-door neighbor who works full time.

WELFARE REALLY isn't the "haven for the chiselers and rip-off artists" that former Treasury Secretary William E. Simon once denounced. But there are enough cases of welfare recipients getting more than workers to create some fierce hostilities.

Arnold Packer, an assistant secretary of Labor, believes the resentment is intense and widespread. "There's no way that the Archie Bunkers of the world are not going to be hostile, when they're busting their tail in a cab for $10,000, when they see someone else getting $7,000 to $8,000 for doing nothing," Packer said recently.

"Not all people see it that way, not the upper middle class, anyway. If you're making $50,000, that sort of thing doesn't make much difference, but if you're making $6,000 and paying taxes to support someone making $7,000 it does. It's a lingering resentment, like the resentment that the middle class has of loopholes in taxes for the rich."

The Carter administration was sharply divided over what route to take to welfare reform, and the division was along familiar lines: cash or work.

HEW HAD FAVORED a cash-assistance plan that initially would have guaranteed the family of four a basic benefit of about $4,350 a year. The money would come from phasing out such existing welfare programs as AFDC, food stamps, supplemental security income and a low-income housing supplement.

There would be a job-training program and incentives to work, but they would be secondary. The important thing would be an equitable cash payment for the poor, most of whom would not immediately be expected to work.

The cash-assistance plan was anathema to others in the Carter administration, who saw it as more of the permanent dole. Packer, in the Labor Department, expressed his deep phiosophic reservations: "We can't just tell people they're a member of an underclass, and that all we can do for them is to make it less painful ... It's an alternative that I don't think we can accept."

Packer and others supported a plan that emphasized putting recipients to work. He would guarantee every family with children a job, public or private, and would insist on a strong work requirement for all AFDC recipients, including mothers whose children have reached the age of 12. With day-care ceners for the children, serious job training and jobs that lead to something better, he believes, many on welfare would want to work.

Some authorities believe that neither the cash-assistance plan nor the put-'em-to-work concept is the answer. Instead of such drastic overhauling, they favor an incremental approach of tinkering with the present system, which they believe is not as messy as critics contend.

Richard Nathan of the Brookings Institution, the spokesman for "incrementalism," notes the rapid expansion of most social welfare programs since the late 1960s and concludes that support for the poor has increased so much that nothing radically different needs to be done.

THE GROWTH of food stamps, he observes, put more money into the system for the poor and the near-poor than the most liberal version of the family assistance plan would have done. He believes that eliminating the purchase price for food stamps, thereby opening the program to the very poorest, and establishing national standards for AFDC benefits would plug the most glaring gaps.

Carter chose the substance of the Labor Department plan, with its strong bent for putting people to work. he emphasis the President said, is on jobs

As outlined by Marshall to reporters, any family with children will be assured of a job — a government-created job if necessary. Most of the other detais were missing, but the planners have plenty of time to fill them in. Carter said the plan won't be implemented for four more years.

That's probably just as well, because Congress seems unready to embark on any grandiose welfare revision. There is no consensus building. Senate Majority Leader Robert Byrd says there will be no welfare reform this year.

The Carter administration, devoted to balancing the budget by 1981, is wary of a program with a dig price tag. Governors and local officials don't want anything that doesn't take the cost burden off their backs. Aefare groups fear that any change is liable to hurt them in some way.

"On the surface, it seems people are pretty close together," ne veteran of welfare fights on the Hill said recently. "Everyone talks of some combination of jobs and cas . But when you get close, everything seems to fall apart. Everyone thinks his own goose is going to be cooked."

Schools plan pupil roundups

Three Midland elementary schools will have "roundups" in the next two weeks for children entering kindergarten or children who did not attend public school kindergarten who are entering first grade.

Pease Elementary School will have its roundup at 7 p.m. Monday in the school library. Bonham Elementary School will have its roundup during school hours Monday through Friday. At Rusk Elementary School, the roundup will be May 16 to 20 during school hours.

Emerson Elementary School had its roundup Friday.

Other schools will wait until August for pre-registration of all pupils new to the public school system, said Payton Cook, director of pupil personnel for Midland schools.

Schmuel Lev, a member of Israel's national bridge team, led the ace of clubs from the West hand. South ruffed and led the king of spades.

What should West do after taking the ace of spades?

West should apologize to his partner, because he has just given declarer the contract by taking the ace of spades too soon. If West leads another club, for example, South ruffs and leads his last trump. After drawing trumps South runs the diamonds, winning 11 tricks.

Lev avoided his embarrassing fate by refusing to win the first round of trumps.

CONTINUES TRUMPS

South continued with another trump, and Lev took the ace. A club continuation forced South to ruff with his last trump.

Now declarer couldn't get to dummy to draw the last missing trump. When South led diamonds, for lack of anything better to do, West ruffed the fourth diamond. Dummy overruffed, but the South hand was now dead. The defenders could win a club trick as well as two hearts and the ace of trumps.

DAILY QUESTION

Dealer, at your left, bids one diamond, and the next two players pass. You hold: S-54; H-K97; D-75; C-KJ8754. What do you say?

ANSWER: At rubber bridge, pass. You are willing to let declarer score 20 points blow the line since a part score of that size is less useful than a part score of 40 to 60 points. At tournament bridge, you might choose to reopen the auction by bidding two culbs, but you might choose to reopen the auction by bidding two clubs, but you might be sorry you hadn't passed.

Ingenious meter thieves usually pay up in the end

By ROBERT E. DALLOS
The Los Angeles Times

NEW YORK — Plenty of utilities wouldn't mind returning to the days before the turn of the century when homeowners fed coins into a meter to obtain their gas. The nation's utilities are getting ripped off to the tune of many millions of dollars annually be a relatively new breed of crook — the power pilferer or meter cheater.

His schemes range from the highly ingenious to cutting clumsily and dangerously into gas lines with tapes of garden hose or bicycle innertubes and bypassing the gas meter. Some people climb utility poles to tap street lamp power.

"Anybody who says his company doesn't have a problem hasn't looked for one," says Clarence F. Ecklmann of New Orleans Public Service Co. and chairman of the security committee of the Edison Electric Institute, a trade group.

"The problem of stolen gas is a serious one," says Edward J. Thompson, manager of the insurance and claim department of the Brooklyn Union Gas Co. "Fortunately, not all of our 1.1 million customers are stealing our product but the rate of theft of gas is reaching alarming proportions."

Other utility officials concur that the problem has been increasing in severity ever since fuel prices began to go through the roof, sending energy costs skyrocketing.

"The costlier electricity or gas becomes, the greater the carrot to do some stealing," says Robert B. Stevens, assistant vice president, central customer service of the Consolidated Edison Co. Inc., which serves metropolitan New York. "It's been a combination of the escalation in costs and a generally depressed economic climate."

Stevens says that for all last year Con Ed (back billed) customers $6 million after discovering thefts of service. But he concedes this merely scratches the surface, adding that theft of service is in the tens of millions of dollars.

Commonwealth Edison Co., which supplies 3 million customers in Chicago and northeastern Illinois, estimates that it has been bilked out of $5 million by business firms and individuals rigging meters.

Southern California Edison, which instituted an intensive campaign against such dishonesty by training its meter readers to recognize and report evidence of tampering, caught 1,500 offenders in the fiscal year ending July of 1976. With its meter readers acting as sleuths, it has been able to spot violations quickly.

"The most anyone can steal from us is a month's service," says one official.

A new mini-industry — dishonest entrepreneurs who act as utility cheating consultants, has come into being. They offer their services to small businesses such as restaurants, supermarkets and other commercial establishments and to homeowners. According to utilities, some take a "piece of the action," or a percentage of the monthly electric, gas or water bill savings. Others do their dirty work for a single fee.

According to the Edison Electric Institute, organized crime has become involved in some areas of the country.

In Chicago, for instance, about a third of those caught have been substantial commercial customers, the rest residential.

In February a New Jersey grand jury indicted 12 persons and 11 corporations on charges of defrauding Public Service Electric and Gas of more than $200,000 in a massive bill cheating scheme.

According to the indictment, a 29-year-old school teacher who once had been a meter reader for PSE and G masterminded the crime. It was alleged that between 1973 and 1976 he told numerous businesses — most were restaurants, bars and small food shops — that he could save them money on their electric bills in a manner that would go undetected.

He and his confederates received between 40 per cent and 50 per cent of the amount the businesses saved.

Just the other day two Consolidated Edison employes — an investigations inspector and a customer representative — were arrested on charges of helping defraud their employer of $450,000 by tampering with the meters of 10 supermarkets in the Bronx. They reportedly received $45,000 for their efforts.

Besides being technically qualified, these consultants know the operations of the utilities.

In Chicago, for example, a computer that monitors the Edison network usually is said to catch variances in electric meter usage of 35 per cent or more. Some thieves learned this and adjusted meters so that bills would be reduced by only 30 per cent.

When a utility becomes suspicious, it is able to check past usage profiles of customers from its own records. It can also tap into power lines from street poles before current enters the house. Any difference in usage indicates cheating.

Most utility thieves realize that they would get caught if their meter record no usage at all so they disable it only part of the time. In many areas the utilities make this all the more easy for them by setting a regular day every month that the meter reader comes around to check.

Some meter cheaters are so expert it takes years to catch them.

According to Thomas Peterson, supervisor of a field investigation unit of the Los Angeles Department of Water and Power, the world's largest municipal power utility, one man who lived above his store had bypassed his electric meter and hid the circuit behind a wooden board just under the roof. The meter seals were intact and the man was wise enough to allow some power to be registered.

When his electrical expertise was finally uncovered by an alert meter reader, he was successfully prosecuted and put on three years probation. He also had to pay the $1,000 it was estimated he had done the DWP out of in those six years.

He applied for and was granted restoration of electrical service, but Peterson says the man is now being watched a little more closely than other customers.

That's because this type of crime, according to the investigator, seems to foster repetition.

One man who was caught with a tampered meter in Los Angeles, according to Peterson, became so sophisticated the second time around that he wired a timer to his meter. When the lights went on in his house the timer would shut the meter off. When most of the electricity went off for the night, the timer would turn on the meter again so that only the lower use of electricity was gauged.

The Los Angeles Department also sends inspectors out at night to see if any one whose service had been cut off for nonpayment has his lights burning through an illegal hookup.

Actually, cheaters are robbing honest patrons. Rates are set by state utility commissions, permitting a definite percentage of revenues for company profits. Instead of the utilities losing the millions, other users are helping to pay the bills.

Most of the energy theft takes place in lower income urban areas. But it isn't confined to them and cuts across all socio-economic categories.

Utilities long ignored the practice. They feared that if they talked about it, it would give more people ideas.

Carter talks like tourist about visit to London

By EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

LONDON — The American tourist was describing the private, little dinner party he had just come from to some of his fellow countrymen here Saturday night.

"I think the whole Royal Family was there," he said. "I had a good place to sit. I was between the Queen and Princess Margaret, and across the table was Prince Charles and Prince Philip and the Queen Mother was there, too ..."

The tourist was Jimmy Carter, former peanut farmer from Plains, Georgia, who recalled that the only other time he had been in London he had to peer at Buckingham Palace "through the fence." Saturday night, they let him in through the front door, and if there was a slightly giddy, awe-struck tone to his recollections of the evening, there was good reason for it.

The President is being treated royally here. In a city where there are now seven heads of government and a press corps of more than 1,500 to report their summit meetings, he is the constant center of attention, the one the crowds turn out to see and to wave at.

He arrived here Thursday night, the newly-elected American President, still something of a stranger to his fellow "summiteers," as the seven are called here, and to the people of their countries. Through two days of weighty discussions on economic and related issues, Carter has left the unmistakable imprint of his style on this capital and from all accounts won a huge amount of good will for himself in the process.

Sunday morning he was up early to attend church services in the grandeur of Westminster Abbey, where he had to borrow money from an aide for the collection.

After the 40-minute service, the President had a tour of the building, taking the opportunity to press his guide, Bishop Knapp Fisher, for some official recognition of one of his favorite writers, the Welsh poet Dylan Thomas.

In the poet's corner of the Abbey, where some of England's greatest writers are entombed, Carter said that he thought Thomas should be similarly honored. Perhaps, the bishop replied, in time Thomas, who died in 1953 and was known for his public carousing, would make it to the Abbey "whatever his morals."

"I would like to recommend it," the President said. "I will pray for his soul if you will commemorate him."

Saturday afternoon, Carter did another characteristic thing. He walked to lunch, leading the other summiteers from No. 10 Downing Street, site of their meetings, across St. James Park to Lancaster House. The expected chaos when a President takes a stroll in public ensued.

"American security men flapped around their charge dementedly," the London Sunday Telegraph said in describing the scene.

The British press has been enthralled by all of this. Reports of Carter's tour of northeast England Friday with British Prime Minister James Callaghan included headlines such as "Mr. Carter wins hearts of the Northeast" and "100,000 Geordies greet Carter the charmer."

The American party with the President is clearly pleased with his reception so far, not only with the public reaction but to what has — and has not — happened in his private meetings with leaders from Western Europe, Canada and Japan.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said that Carter was in an exceptionally good mood as he passed the midway point in his first trip overseas since taking office.

"We've taken care of a number of things," Powell said, noting that a much-publicized possible personal feud between Carter and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt never materialized when the two met here Saturday. The meeting went so well, Powell said, that afterwards the President turned to an aide and said, "We can pack our bags and go home while we're ahead."

Sunday night, following the end of the two-day summit, Carter returned to Winfield House, the opulent residence of the American ambassador where he is staying. Smiling broadly, he told reporters he is "quite satisfied" with the results of the summit.

On Monday, Carter will turn his attention to Berlin and the Middle East. He will meet first with Schmidt, British Prime Minister James Callaghan and French President Valery Giscard D'Estaing to discuss the situation in West Berlin.

Asked about the meeting Sunday night, the President agreed with a questioner that the Berlin Wall "makes a mockery" of the four-power post-World War II agreement granting freedom of access throughout the city.

"I think the wall is a very dramatic indication of the hunger for freedom among people who live in Eastern Germany," he said. "And I don't know how to express any hope that it might be removed. Of course, we would like to see the wall torn down."

Monday afternoon, Carter will fly to Geneva for a meeting with President Hafez Assad of Syria to discuss the Middle East.

The good will that appeared to permeate the two-day summit that ended Sunday night was threatened only once. It did not involve any of the world leaders, but some members of the press. Sunday morning, several outraged American reporters attempted to organized a boycott of the bar in the Churchill Hotel press room to protest the one dollar per cup charge for coffee.

The boycott began to collapse Sunday afternoon and by Sunday night the bar was doing a brisk business, serving considerably more mixed drinks and beer than coffee.

Youngsters looking for summer jobs this year will find the labor market tougher than ever and their chances of success perhaps hinging on a combination of planning and old-fashioned luck.

The U.S. Department of Labor estimates that two and a half million young people between the ages of 16 and 24 went hunting for summer jobs last year. The department hasn't issued a firm estimate for 1977, but a spokesman said he expects the number of job seekers to match last year's total.

Herman Fishman of the Youth Services Bureau of the New York State Department of Labor said the summer job situation has gotten progressively worse every year and added that 1977 probably would be "a little more difficult than last year."

He said his office alone had requests from 20,000 youngsters looking for summer jobs last year and was able to help less than 10 per cent of them. This year, he said, he expects more job seekers and fewer positions. Fishman said there is no area where the demand for summer workers is bigger than the supply. "Getting a summer job is largely a luck situation," he said.

Both he and a federal spokesman agreed, however, that advance planning can increase your chance of success. "If you're just starting now, it's probably too late," said a spokesman at the U.S. Department of Labor.

One of the first things you should know is what you can — and can't — do. Federal law limits employment for youngsters and state laws may require work permits below a certain age level. When state and federal laws conflict, the one that provides the most protection applies.

Here are some of the highlights of the federal regulations as they apply to nonfarm jobs:

—Over 18: There are no limits on the kind of job you can take or the number of hours you can work.

—Sixteen to 18: There are no limits on the number of hours you can work, but you are barred from any job which the secretary of labor considers hazardous. (For details, contact the local office of the U.S. Department of Labor.)

—Fourteen and 15: You are barred from hazardous jobs and may work no more than three hours on a school day and eight hours on a non-school day, and no more than 18 hours in a school week and 40 hours in a non-school week. You are not allowed to work before 7 a.m. or after 7 p.m., except from June 1 to Labor Day when the evening hours are extended to 9 p.m.

—Under 14: Formal employment is severely restricted. You can deliver newspapers, perform in television, movies, radio and theatrical productions or work for your parents in a non-farm business owned solely by them.

Further details are available in a free, Department of Labor leaflet, "The Young Worker." Write to: Consumer Information Center, Dept. 534E, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

Machines sort mail

NEW YORK (AP) — Today, over 60 per cent of America's mail is sorted mechanically," says Fred T. Allen, chairman of Pitney Bowes, a manufacturer of mail handling systems and equipment. This represents a 25 per cent increase in mechanization since 1970, the result of Postal Service modernization.

A crew of 18 can sort up to 40,000 letters an hour using one letter-sorting machine — nearly double the amount the same 18 people could sort by hand.

"Facer-canceller" machines turn envelopes to their address faces, locate the stamps and cancel them electronically. A single machine can process 36,000 letters in an hour.

U.S. child health care a 'joke', says professor

By GEORGE A. SILVER
The Washington Post

Children get a pretty bad shake as far as medical care and health services are concerned, particularly in the United States, a country which makes so many sententious statements about the family and the future.

We have no children's or family allowance to maintain a secure level of nutrition and housing for families; nutrition programs for children are irregular and hardly adequate when available; school health services are a joke, and, despite increased expenditures, diminishing programs of well-baby care, pre-school health services and immunizations handicap case-finding and treatment and, of course, prenatal care.

The administration will soon introduce a bill called "child health program," which will increase the number of eligible children under Medicaid for examination and treatment by 1 per cent. Keeping in mind that the states have managed to examine and perhaps treat (records are not kept) less than 10 per cent of the eligible children in the eight years of operation of the program, this effort is hardly the occasion for cheers.

"Permissiveness" apparently is a national euphemism for neglect. Child abuse is said to be the leading cause of death inn-children under 5. While 200,000 cases were reported, estimates of actual incidence in a recent survey range as high as 1.5 million cases in this country. About 700 children a year are killed by their parents or guardians.

About 20 per cent of American children get little of none of the medical care they need; about a third are not immunized against diseases wiped out in other countries. Millions of children go to bed and to school hungry.

We don't know how many children who are hard of hearing or deaf are without hearing aids, because we don't do countrywide hearing tests or follow up those tested. We do vision tests, though, so we know that 17 per cent of children entering school at age 6 (650,000) have defective vision and in the school population of the United States (46 million) about 3 million who need glasses don't have them. These children with hearing and vision defects uncorrected will not, of course, do well in school; they will wind up at the bottom of th academic, occupational and social ladders.

Poverty exaggerates all these effects, but in health matters the well-to-do aren't so much better off: Black, brown and red babies die at a 50 to 100 per cent higher rate than white babies. True. But that's only a special case of failure to protect babies in this country. Our "Cbest" infant mortality rate is 50 per cent higher than the average Scandinavian or Dutch rates.

We have no designated child health system in this country. There is a "parental responsibility," which can only be discharged if there is a medical care system. There isn't, so children turn to their parents. Where shall the parents turn?

European child health care systems have an unusual feature — separate preventive services for children. These include specialized nursing care, little in the way of physician care in the preventive role and lots of home visiting to educate, examine, immunize and act as a primary care focus and referral point for a sick child.

In Holland, this system costs the country 9 cents a day per child, with part of the money from the family, part from the local community and part from the national government. Scrupulous record keeping results in follow-up on every child from birth through the school yeas. Neglecting a child's health need is treated like child abuse and may involve social agencies, the courts and ombudsman and even appointment of a guardian.

There are aspects of the Dutch preventive program for children which would need thorough exploration before being recmmended here. For example, prevention can be emphasized because there is also a comprehensive national health insurance system in place and every child can get treatment for illness or a handicapping condition. It would appear that prevention is difficult to impose without a curative system in place.

There's no secret formula that the Dutch (or Scandinavians or French or Finns) have patented for a child health program, but there are a few critical elements.

First, all children must be eligible and all children covered. If a system is geared for the poor alone, it rapidly becomes a poor system. Preventive services are needed by every child and every family.

Immunizations to prevent epidemic diseases; health education to assure proper nutrition and living habits; family health educational supplrt to put an end to epidemics of social disease — drug abuse, alcoholism, venereal disease, child abuse — are as much general community public health measures as chlorination of water.

Second, the services should be carried out by experts in the practice of prevention. We've tried for years to get physicians interested in prevention. It hasn't worked.

The preventive health worker should be more like the public health nurse in backgroud and training, with experience in preventive medicine, family and child care, health education. A British "health visitor" for example, has had nursing training, midwifery and public health training, sometimes with a dash of pediatrics.

A third necessary element is the participation of the family. Millions of parents and family members are involved in our school systems and, while we tend to be critical of the system, it is clear tht in those schools where the most parents are involved, the school tends to be better.

Perhaps we cannot have all the private neighborhood organizations for preventive services that the Dutch have, but we can provide these services for our children. Even where there are official agencies carrying out these preventive activities, we should insist on citizen boards and advisory groups to insure against bureaucratization and assure responsiveness to thmmunity.

Finally, children need preventive services from the beginning, which means prenatal services and observation and care all through pregnancy. (fixing overline).

Newborns and infants should have handicaps detected early. Pre-school children can get care from neighborhood centers, where all immunizations and examinations can be done, and school-age children preventive supervision and examinations in the schools.

I am amused when I hear how we are a "child oriented" society. Are we ready for a child health program that is meaningful? Preventive minded? Offering comprehensive care? Raising the level of health and longevity of the next generation? For less than we are paying now?

DEAR ABBY

Nobody knows trouble nose causing family

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My daughter (whom I shall call Ethel) is graduating from high school in June, so my rich sister sent her a check for $1,500 with a note, "To get your nose fixed, honey."

Now, Abby, Ethel's nose isn't that bad. She resembles my father, and his nose goes with his face. Some of Ethel's friends have had their noses fixed, and she's been after us ever since to get hers done. We kept saying we couldn't afford it. Now what can we say?

I am so burned up at my sister I can hardly see to write this. She had HER nose bobbed a few years ago and now she looks like Marlo Thomas, but I think her old nose had more character.

Abby, do you think my sister had the right to send our daughter a check for a nose job knowing how we fought against it? And should we let Ethel do it, even though we don't think she really needs it?—FAMILY NOSE FIGHT

DEAR NOSE FIGHT: Your sister should have kept her bobbed nose out of your family fight. But consider your daughter. HER nose doesn't have to go with her grandfather's face. And if a girl's character is in her nose, heaven help her.

If Ethel thinks she needs to have her nose bobbed, she needs it. Take her to a certified plastic surgeon for a consultation. He won't chisel needlessly.

DEAR ABBY: Whatever became of the old-fashioned, red-blooded verile male who could get excited about a lovable, feminine woman?

Lately, all the men I meet are either interested in other men, or practically impotent because the Women's Libbers have made them feel they're not needed for anything!

The last few men I dated sounded like they were all playing the same recording: It started with the alimony blues and ended with, "I don't want to get serious with another woman as long as I live!"

Abby, please tell me where to find a good old-fashioned man who's all man, and I'll go there tomorrow.—STATEN ISLAND

DEAR STATEN: Staten Island is loaded with them. Stand still, and one will catch up with you. They're all looking for a lovable feminine woman they can get excited about.

DEAR ABBY: Please say a word in your column about these extravagant weddings people put on. I understand such catered affairs run from $25 per person on up.

If the bride's parents spend $25 per guest, the invitee is obligated to buy a gift of the same value.

In our case, the wedding invitation our family just received will cost us $150 to accept.

At those prices, we would have considered it a kindness not to have been invited.—C.

DEAR C.: Where is it written that a guest must match the cost of being entertained by presenting a gift of equal value? A gift is always voluntary—never obligatory.

Shoe sizes come from barley corn

U. S. shoe sizing was developed in England during the 14th century. A measurement of one-third inch, the length of an average barley corn, represents the difference in whole numbered shoe sizes, Mrs. Becky Culp, area clothing specialist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, The Texas A&M University System, says.

Anti-abortionists being challenged for their rights under 'conscience law'

By PHILIP HAGER
The Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON — As an operating room technician for a Florida hospital, Valerie Smith was expected to help doctors and nurses perform abortions. When she refused, citing moral convictions, she received a 30-day dismissal notice and was admonished that if she couldn't assist in abortions she should get out of the medical profession.

Miss Smith went to court in Dade County, Fla., and, after some negotiating among attorneys, won a tentative agreement for reinstatement and a promise from hospital officials she would not be fired for refusing to help perform abortions.

The reason: Florida's "conscience law" — a law similar to provisions in 31 states (including California) and also in effect as a federal statute.

Enacted in the wake of recent decisions establishing new rights to abortion, conscience laws permit doctors, nurses, technicians and-or hospitals to refuse — on moral or religious grounds — to perform nonmedically necessary abortions.

The new laws — at least as they pertain to hospitals — have met resistance in the courts. And now their validity is nearing a critical test in the Supreme Court in cases presenting a clash between the right not to perform an abortion and the right to obtain one.

Thus far, lower courts have struck down conscience laws protecting public hospitals; told public hospitals that if their physicians refuse to perform abortions there are those who won't refuse; and, in one instance, said that a conscience law would not protect a private nonprofit hospital open to the public.

Those decisions have been welcome news to proabortion forces.

"We agree 100 per cent that individuals shouldn't be forced to perform abortions — that's not good for either the patient or the practitioner," says Karen Mulhauser, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

"But facilities (hospitals) present a serious problem. We don't believe a 'facility' can have a moral conscience...When hospitals can refuse abortions, particularly in nonurban areas, they can force women who can't afford to travel elsewhere to instead choose selfinduced abortions."

On the other side, antiabortion groups see conscience laws as protecting basic rights of individuals — and institutions — against being forced to perform acts they consider unnecessary and reprehensible.

They doubt there is a real shortage of available facilities — noting that over 1 million legal abortions were performed in the United States last year — and express dismay particularly with the decision holding that private hospitals must perform the operations.

"That's a pretty bad decision," says Patrick A. Trueman, general counsel for the Legal Defense Fund of Americans United for Life. "The theory behind it is that hospitals — even private hospitals — receive government funds and thus take illegal 'state action' by denying abortions....

"The theory behind conscience laws is that, rooted in the First Amendment, there is religious freedom — freedom of conscience — to refuse to perform abortions."

The laws' supporters say also that the statutes may become effective defenses against what they see as increasing pressure among some hospitals and medical schools to force doctors, nurses and students to accept abortion.

"There are pro-abortionists who would try to close the medical profession to those who do not want to perform abortions," says Robert M. Brake of Coral Gables, Fla., the attorney who represents Valerie

Attorneys expected to ask venue change

HOUSTON (AP) — Defense attorneys were expected to request a change of venue when the capital murder trial of Vernon Eugene McManus gets underway today in state district court.

McManus, 34, a former college assistant football coach, is charged in the last July 25 strangulation-beating deaths of Paul and Mary Cantrell. The bodies of the electrical contractor and his wife were found in their Baytown home.

Police claim the couple was killed in a scheme to collect insurance money.

Paula Cantrell Derese, 26, a daughter of the Cantrells, also was charged in the case. She has pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of murder and is scheduled to testify for the state in the McManus trial. She is to be sentenced following the trial.

Mrs. Derese entered her plea on the morning testimony was to have started. The plea came after two weeks of jury selection.

It required nearly seven weeks for attorneys to select a jury in the McManus trial. Then, on April 24, the day before the start of testimony, McManus disappeared and his blood-smeared car was found abandoned in east Harris County.

He was found six days later in Jacksonville Beach, Fla., and was returned to Houston. State District Judge I. D. McMaster revoked McManus' $50,0000 bond and ordered the trial to begin today.

Defense lawyers Don Smith and Mark Vela are expected to renew motions for a change of venue, claiming news stories generated by the flight from prosecution has made it impossible for McManus to receive a fair trial in Harris County.

However, prosecutors Mike Hinton and L. H. Stewart are expected to argue that the lengthy case should get under way.

The case became the first in Harris County under the new death penalty law to allow defendants to become free on bond. The Texas Court of Criminal Appeals reversed the withholding of bond on Mrs. Derese and the state elected to allow bond for McManus.

If McManus is convicted he could receive the death penalty or a life prison sentence.

Mrs. Derese is scheduled to have her punishment assessed by State District Court Judge Joe Guarino after the McManus trial. Her punishment could range from probation to life in prison.

The FAA said Trayer took a stewardess hostage with a razor and demanded the plane be diverted to Moscow. He was subdued when a crew member attacked him from behind with a fire axe.

Jaworski says Nixon 'criminally culpable'

HOUSTON (AP) — Former Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski said as early as December 1973 he warned then-President Nixon's chief of staff, Gen. Alexander Haig, that Nixon was "criminally culpable" of involvement in the Watergate coverup.

Jaworski told KPRC-TV here Sunday that Nixon should have admitted to the American people during the recent television interview that he was guilty of criminal conduct.

"I told his (Nixon's) chief of staff...that, in my judgment he was criminally culpable and strongly recommended that Haig find as fine a criminal lawyer as he could find in the country to take a look at all the evidence—the matters he knew about, the matters I knew about—and have him advise Haig and the President as to whether the President was not criminally guilty," said Jaworski.

The Houston attorney stated flatly that Nixon "has not told the whole story" during the first of four televised interviews with British entertainer David Frost.

However, Jaworski was apparently of a different mind when he was appointed by Nixon to probe the Watergate matter.

"I wanted to believe he was innocent and thought he had been victimized by members of his staff," said Jaworski. "But I think he was conducting and carrying on with a number of these people, knowing that the situation was a grave one, trying to find methods of escape from the consequences of it."

Asked whether he thought Nixon was in on the initial planning of the coverup, Jaworski said, "Well, he participated in orchestrating it, yes. There is no question he knew very soon after. That's one reason there are erasures, one reason there are gaps in the White House tapes.

"From what I know about the matter...I had to come to the conclusion that he (Nixon) was guilty of obstruction of justice."

Senate turns attention to state spending bill

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Senators began debate of a record $15.6 billion general appropriation bill today, just over an hour after it cleared the Senate Finance Committee.

The measure is the committee's substitute for the $15.4 billion two-year state budget bill passed by the House last week after eight days of debate.

"I hope to have this bill in conference committee this afternoon," said Sen. A. M. Aikin, D-Paris, finance committee chairman. He added he would fight any attempts to amend the bill on the floor.

Sen. A.R. Schwartz, D-Galveston, said he was worried because the House bill allowed only $35 a month for Aid to Families of Dependent Children, compared to $32 in the Senate bill. "This doesn't leave us much to work with in conference committee (which is supposed to concern itself only with House-Senate differences)," Schwartz said.

Aikin said he would consider AFDC changes in conference committee but he did not want an amendment to be offered on the floor.

The House scheduled a 1:30 p.m. session while House leaders prepared for Tuesday's planned debate on teachers pay raise and retirement measures.

The House appropriations bill sent to the Senate totals $15.4 billion from all funds, leaving an estimated $1.1 million in state funds for other spending, such as public school financing and teachers pay raises and retirement.

The Senate Finance Committee has been holding in committee a Senate version of state spending that totals $15.6 billion, leaving $856.7 million for other spending.

There were numerous differences in the two bills including a 6.8 per cent state employes pay raise granted in the Senate bill compared to 3.4 per cent in the House bill.

After the Senate approves its general appropriations bill, the final version likely will be drafted by a 10-member conference committee negotiating the differences between the two houses.

Doctor blames hysteria

ENID, Okla. (AP) — A doctor says hysteria was apparently the cause of a malady that struck about 26 members of a Texas high school band here Saturday.

The students had complained of upset stomachs, headaches and dizziness.

Authorities first believed that the students from Northwest High School in Justin, Tex., were suffering from gas inhalation when they reported the symptoms while participatingin the Tri-State Music Festival here.

"We didn't find any evidence of gas inhalation," said Dr. Cecil Reinstein. "We didn't feel they had a real illness. Apparently it wasn't that big a deal."

Dr. Reinstein said none of the students was hospitalized. All were sent home.

Insurance probe said under way

DALLAS (AP) — Alleged irregularities within the jurisdiction of the State Insurance Department are being investigated a Travis County grand jury with assistance from the Texas Attorney General's office, according to The Dallas Morning News.

In a copyright Sunday story, the newspaper said among the probe targets are papers relating to the department's regulation of Great Commonwealth Life Insurance Co. of Dallas, which has been under state supervision since December 1975.

State Insurance Board Chairman Joe Christie said his department is "eager" to cooperate with any such investigation, but added that no one from Attorney General's office or the grand jury had contacted him concerning the probes.

"As I stated last year," Christie said, "the federal grand jury in Baton Rouge (La.) was investigating the Great Commonwealth Life Insurance Co. case. Any of our employes who have information of interest to any grand jury investigation should come forward at once and make this information available. I am confident this will be done."

Asst. Atty. Gen. David Pace confirmed his office has been "asked to assist the grand jury on a couple of different matters." Pace said further comment would have to come from the grand jury foreman.

Mass repeated

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Archbishop Phillip M. Hannan says he has no plans for immediate action against a Texas priest and more than 100 persons who participated in an unauthorized Catholic mass.

"Without the newpapers paying attention, it would have disappeared," Hannan said Sunday after Father Hector Bolduc held Latin mass again in a Kenner gymnasium. "The traditionist followers are less than one-tenth of one per cent of all Catholics."

Hannan had previously threatened Bolduc and his followers with censure after they had held the mass in Kenner on several other occasions.

Father Bolduc, a traveling priest, is a follower of a French Archbishop Marcel Lefebvre, who has been censured by Pope Paul VI.

Planning to paint? Here are timely expert tips

By ANDY LANG
AP Newsfeatures

If you are thinking about painting the outside of your house, here are some things to remember:

Don't start unless you are willing to spend a lot of time in the preparation of the surface. This means removing loose dirt and dust; scraping and wire brushing blistered, peeled and scaled areas; priming any bare spots; countersinking all nails, priming with a metal primer and covering with putty; replacing any loose caulking, especially around doors, windows, utility inlets and exhaust pipes; getting rid of mildew; washing off excessive chalk, and dulling all high-gloss areas.

Begin painting the side of the house that is shaded at the moment. If possible, follow the sun around so that you are painting where the sun has already been. This will prevent the sun from drying out the paint too quickly, not to mention the fact that it's a lot more comfortable to paint in the shade.

While professionals sometimes paint across a house completely at each level, it is better for most persons to start painting at an upper corner of a house and work downward. The ladder then can be moved a few feet at a time as necessary. Paint only the portion you can reach comfortably without stretching. The ladder should be placed against the house so that the distance from its base to the house is about one-fourth the height of the ladder; thus, if you are using a 16-foot ladder, its base should be 4 feet from the house.

When painting, work in toward the wet area, always stroking or rolling on a dry section first and moving over to the paint that has just been applied.

You can prevent the most common problems with exterior painting — blistering and peeling — by reducing the amount of moisture in the house with the use of wall vents, an exhaust fan or a dehumidifier, by caulking any outside openings and being sure gutters aren't clogged.

Brand Loyalties Shaken By Taste Impact Of Low Tar Merit.

MERIT taste delivery switching high tar smokers away from age-old favorites.

There is a taste alternative to high tar cigarettes.

Modern technology created it.

Tests proved it.

Smokers are confirming it.

Today most MERIT smokers are coming from high tar cigarettes—many from brands they had been loyal to for years.

Yet they're switching to—and sticking with—MERIT.

The reason is a real advance in tobacco technology that resulted in a way to boost natural tobacco flavor without the usual corresponding increase in tar.

Air Force Academy pointing out pitfalls of unwise fuel use

AIR FORCE ACADEMY, Colo. (AP) — The people shout for "more food," "more heat." World leaders watch as nuclear waste destroys the environment and supplies of fossil fuels run out.

A pessimist's vision of the future? The plot of a new disaster movie? No, it's all part of a computerized course at the Air Force Academy to teach students what could happen if energy and other resources aren't used wisely.

In the course, students play world leaders deciding uses of energy and other resources and then feeding the decisions into a computer.

The computer, which has information bbout fuel supplies, energy use, population increases and other factors, then tells the students what effects their decisions would have over periods of hundreds of years.

During a recent class, five students chosen to "rule" the world decided to maintain current standards of living. The computer told them their actions would exhaust world supplies of fossil fuels such as coal and oil in 145 years, while piling up huge amounts of atomic wastes.

Their classmates pretended to be the world's population, shouting "more food," "more heat" and "more cars," while red lights indicating shortages began to appear on a computer terminal.

"It is a psychological thing," said Capt. Bill Noll, the chemistry instructor who helped develop the computer program for the class.

"Being good politicians and world rulers, they want to keep the people from screaming. So the last thing they cut is the standard of living."

A second group of five cadets tried to maintain food production by cutting back on other areas but had little better luck. After 145 years, Noll said, "All we are doing is eating; everything else is gone."

A third group of students began an accelerated program to develop alternative energy resources and made cuts in automobile use, air conditioning, heating and other areas. The standard of living dropped considerably but food levels remained adequate and the environment stayed healthy.

Then, the computer told the students, as new sources of energy came into use the standard of living began to rise again. At 550 years, where Noll stopped the computer clock, the world's fossil fuel supplies had run out but new energy sources were able to take their place.

"We are doing very little to develop new energy sources," Noll said, and conservation is still not very popular. "Somehow we have got to turn this lifestyle around."

30 cent tax on coal would hamper efforts, Energy council says

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — A proposed 30-cent-a-ton tax on surface-mined coal would discourage the development of lignite in Arkansas and elsewhere, the Southwest Regional Energy Council says.

The proposal is in the land reclamation bill currently pending in the U.S. Senate.

The council adopted a resolution Saturday opposing the proposed method of levying the tax and of allocating the revenues from it.

The resolution was adopted at the suggesting of Arkansas state Sen. J. A. "Dooley" Womack of Camden.

Lignite has less heat value than coal, thus more tons of it must be mined to obtain the same heat value that a lesser amount of coal would have. This would force lignite-producing states to pay a disproportionate portion of the tax, the resolution said.

The resolution also said Congress should be interested in providing incentives for the gasification and liquefaction of lignite and coal rather than imposing penalties like the proposed tax.

Also Saturday, New Mexico state Rep. Bob Grant said President Carter's energy plan emphasizes conservation too much at the expense of providing incentives to provide more fuels.

Grant appeared to summarize the council's feelings. His statement was directed to Scott Bush of Washington, the deputy associate administrator for policy of the Federal Energy Administration.

Bush explained the president's program to the five-state panel.

Severance tax makes sense says Krueger

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — U. S. Rep. Bob Krueger told Texas legislators today it would make sense for the state to increase severance taxes on natural gas since other states are boosting coal taxes.

"Gas is more precious than coal. If we are going to have to sell it at a reduced price to subsidize other parts of the country, the citizens of this state are entitled to some kind of trade-off," Krueger said.

His comment was in response to a question by Rep. Jim Nugent, D-Kerrville, who said roughly 30 per cent of the price of western coal being bought for Texas power plants consisted of severance taxes.

"At some point, a state that has provided so much energy for other states and will be paying such taxes (to other states) might want to look at a substantial severance tax of their own," Krueger said.

The legislature, however, is operating under a "no-newtaxes" edict from Gov. Dolph Briscoe.

Texas imposes a gas production tax of 7.5 per cent of market value, but legislation in the early 1960s to add a tax on gas leaving the state by pipeline was held unconstitutional by the state's courts.

Advocates of such taxes contended they could have been written in a constitutional manner but for amendments added at the behest of gas pipeline companies.

DST yields crude, gas

V-F Petroleum, Inc., Midland, No. 1 Hawkins, west offset to the Bend conglomerate opeer in the Old Glory, Northwest pool of Stonewall County, recovered free oil on a drillstem test in the Bend conglomerate.

Gas surfaced after 15 minutes, on the 15-minute preflow period on the test taken from 6,007-6,039 feet. It flared gas throughout the test, and recovered 4,623 feet of fluid, being 4,383 feet of free oil and 240 feet of gas-cut salt water. The sample chamber yielded 1,600 cubic centimeters of fluid, being 1,550 cubic centimeers of oil, and 50 cubic centimeters of salt water, plus 5.76 cubic feet of gas. The tool was open one hour on the second flow period.

Initial flowing pressures were 506-971 pounds and final flowing pressures were 855-1,188 pounds. Thirty-minute initial and two-hour final shut-in pressures were 1,064 and 1,188 pounds, respectively.

Operator was running logs and preparing to run 5½-inch production string at the project, which is bottomed at 6,039 feet.

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — The Texas Railroad Commission reported Monday that 18 wildcat oil wells and 24 wildcat gas wells were drilled in Texas during the last half of April.

The oil discoveries included eight in southeast Texas, three in South Texas, two in North Texas and singles near Refugio, in the Panhandle, East Texas, west central Texas and near Midland.

A total of 202 wildcat oil wells have been drilled this year, 11 more than a year ago.

WT areas gain tests

Attempt will be made to reestablish production from a pay zone in a Ward County field, and to extend a Winkler pool.

Also, a confirmer was completed in one Pecos field and an extender finaled in another.

Gulf Oil Corp. has announced plans to reenter and plug back to around 8,650 feet at No. 2 C. W. Edwards, et al, former Tubb, Waddell and Ellenburger well in the Janelle, Southeast field, and attempt recompletion from the Devonian zone to reopen that pay in the Janelle field.

The well, bottomed at 9,330 feet, spots 660 feet from south and 1,650 feet from east lines of section 16, block B-18, PSL survey, four miles southeast of Monahans.

Devonian oil pay was opened in the field in 1961.

WINKLER REENTRY

K. K. Amini, Midland, will reenter and attempt recpletion as a two-mile southwest extension to the Arenoso (Strawn detritus) field of Winkler County, at No. 1-16 Sealy & Smith, former lower Pennsylvanian well in the Monahans, East field.

It was completed in 1965 by Pennzoil Co. as No. 1-D Sealy & Smith.

It is 860 feet from south and 660 feet from east lines of section 16, block A, G&MMB&A survey, 17 miles southeast of Kermit.

PECOS ACTIVITY

Mobil Oil Corp. has completed No. 3-35 Vollmar as a second middle Clearfork gas producer and ¾-mile northeast extension to that pay in the Four C field of North Pecos.

It finaled for a calculated, absolute open flow of 480,000 cubic feet of dry gas per day, through perforations at 3,445-3,497 feet, following treatment with 6,500 gallons of acid.

Drilled to 4,100 feet, it is plugged back to 3,780 feet.

Location is 1,200 feet from south and 850 feet from east lines of section 35, block 9, H&GN survey, 7½ miles east of Imperial.

The discovery, Joe H. Warren No. 1 Williams-State, finaled in August 1975 for 2 million cubic feet of gas daily, through perforations at 3,435-3,596 feet.

Exxon Corp. finaled No. 2 Dow Puckett as a ⅝-mile northeast extension to Wolfcamp production in the Gomez multipay gas field of Pecos, 12 miles northwest of Fort Stockton.

It had a calculated, absolute open flow potential of 1.5 million cubic feet of gas per day, with gas-liquid ratio measuring 2,845-1. Gravity of the condensate is 54.5 degrees.

Completion was effected through perforations at 10,879-10,991 feet, following acid treatment with 9,500 gallons.

Location is 1,980 feet from north and 660 feet from west lines of section 70, block OW, Mrs. C. M. Foster survey.

Lea probe flows gas

Newbourne Oil Co., Midland, No. 1-E State Communitized, Lea County, N.M., wildcat, 16 miles west of Lovington, flowed gas at the rate of 810,000 cubic feet per day, plus 30 barrels of condensate and 30 barrels of load water in 24 hours.

The flow was through a 28-64-inch choke and 1¼-inch orifice, through perforations at 12,906-12,923 feet. The pay section had earlier been acidized with 3,000 gallons. Testing continued.

The test is 660 feet from south and 1,980 feet from west lines of section 6-16s-34e. Originally scheduled as Mark Production Co. No. 1-E State, the firm name recently was changed to Newbourne.

Gas strike for Edwards

Champlin Petroleum Co. has completed No. 1-50 Rocksprings as a Canyon sand gas discovery in Edwards County, one mile east of Rocksprings.

It gauged on potential test, a calculated, absolute open flow of 355,000 cubic feet of gas daily, through perforations at 3,589-3,676 feet, after a 6,000-gallon acid treatment.

Drilled to 6,329 feet, it has been plugged back to 5,374 feet, and has 4½-inch casing set at 5,419 feet.

Wellsite is 2,169 feet from south and 657 feet from east lines of section 50, block 2, B&B survey, 7½ miles southwest of the Pan-Gil (Canyon) field.

Edwards sector gains project

American Quasar Petroleum Co., Midland, will drill No. 1-5 Moody, a 4,000-foot wildcat in Edwards County, about 1¼ mile southwest of the Campanero, Southeast (Canyon) gas field and ¾ mile southwest of a 5,800-foot failure.

Drillsite is 660 feet from southeast and southwest lines of section 5, block A-10, TCRR survey, abstract 1288, seven miles northwest of Rocksprings.

Bumper-to-bumper commuters big problem in use of energy

WASHINGTON (AP) — At five o'clock on any week night, President Carter's energy planners can look out of their office windows at part of the problem they're trying to solve.

It's right there. Bumper to bumper, home-bound commuters inch along at peak inefficiency, burning much of their gasoline at a standstill.

That happens twice a day in every major city. Yet there is nothing in the Carter energy conservation program that seeks to entice people out of their automobiles and onto a bus or a subway.

The omission is the more puzzling because the administration's energy study illustrates the savings that could follow.

Transportation consumes about 26 per cent of the nation's energy, and about half of that is used by automobiles. If 40 per cent of U.S. commuters carried one additional passenger in their cars each day, it would save 2.5 per cent of total American oil consumption.

"In the long run, mass transit by bus and rail must play a significant role in reducing energy consumption in the transportation sector," the energy policy paper says. "Reliable, inexpensive mass transit is needed to serve existing, spread-out metropolitan areas."

That is a goal. At this point, there is no proposal to go with it.

In his energy address, Carter said the nation must not continue to drift along, with threequarters of its cars carrying only the driver "while our public transportation system continues to decline."

Carter said later that he thinks "there will be a substantial shift toward increasing use of the public transportation systems, rapid transit, as the price of the gas for automobiles goes up and as the price of fuel goes up."

But increasing prices is the punitive side of the program; what is lacking is an effort to promote more efficient mass transportation by making it an attractive alternative to the automobile.

Transportation Secretary Brock Adams is beginning work now on a mass transportation proposal to be presented to Congress next year, but it will have to be far more ambitious than anything the government has done so far if it is to gain willing volunteers for bus lines instead of grumbling conscripts, forced from their cars by higher prices.

Energy adviser James R. Schlesinger said the government already is providing all the mass transit aid that can be used in the short term. He's right. Out of some $2.6 billion available during the fiscal year that will end Sept. 30, only about $750 million had been spent or committed as of March 31.

Reserve sinks Lakers, 99-97

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Portland Trail Blazers, with a different hero in the first two games, proved a team can beat a man as they return he with a 2-0 lead over the Los Angeles Lakers in the National Basketball Association semifinal uyoffs.

Reserve guard Herm Gilliam pumped in 14 points in the final quarter, including the go-ahead basket with less than two minutes to go, as Portland edged the Lakers 99-97 in the second game at the Forum Sunday.

Gilliam had averaged just 4.8 points in this season's playoffs, but scored 24 in Game Two. In the opening game of the semifinals, Maurice Lucas scored 28 points, pacing a 121-109 victory. Sunday, Lucas was held to 16 points.

The teams travel to Portland for the next two games in the best-of-seven series. Game Three will be Tuesday night and Game Four Friday night.

"It was a hard, hard game to win, but a great effort," said Portland Coach Jack Ramsay. "We are going to enjoy both our wins in Los Angeles.

"We call Herm 'Little Trickster.' He is typical of the players on this team who can stay on the bench for games at a time and then come in and do a super job."

Also doing a super job before the 15,192 at the Forum was Lionel Hollins, who scored 22 points in the first half, helping Portland to a 54-51 lead. He wound up with 31 points, seven assists and eight steals.

"Hollins is some kind of player," said Ramsay. "I've been saying all season that he is one of the best, if not the best defensive guards in basketball. Now the whole nation knows via television."

Hollins scored the final point of the game with 11 seconds left on a free throw.

Kareem Abdul-Jabbar, the Lakers' leading scorer with 40 points—his fifth playoff game with 40 or more—took a 14-foot jumper with five seconds left. But harassed by three Trail Blazers' defenders, his shot hit the rim, bounced high and back onto the court toward the sidelines as time ran out.

Trail Blazers center Bill Walton scored 14 points, grabbed 17 rebounds and had two assists in the battle of former UCLA centers against Abdul-Jabbar. Kareem had 17 rebounds with one assist.

Coach Jerry West of the Lakers said, "Kareem simply cannot do everything for this club. It is too much of a burden for anyone to shoulder."

Cazzie Russell was the Lakers' second-leading scorer with 21 points, but he was scoreless in the fourth quarter.

Abdul-Jabbar hit 17 of 23 field goal attempts, but the rest of the team shot poorly.

Ledbetter tames Diablos, 10-2

Midland's Cubs scored six first-inning runs and then Jack Ledbetter made them stand up for a 10-2 victory over El Paso's Diablos at Cubs Stadium Sunday night.

The win gave Midland a 2-1 edge in the series going into tonight's 7:30 p.m. tilt in which Darrell Turner, 2-1,will hurl for the Cubs and Jim Dorsey, 3-0, will go for the Diablos.

Ledbetter's performance was noteworthy for several reasons. The 6-3 righthander from Clearwater, Fla., held El Paso, which had pounded out 32 hits and 28 runs in two previous games, to five hits over eight innings in levelling his record at 2-2. Both wins have come at the expense of the Diablos.

AND CHANCES are he would have gotten his third straight route-going effort if the game hadn't been delayed for 55 minutes after 4 ½ innings. Ledbetter showed no ill effects from the layoff, but got a final-inning assist from Byron Wilkerson.

Midland didn't exactly jump on starter Bob Lesslie, a Class AAA pitching veteran, in the first. Singles by Keith Drumright and Bill Huisman gave the Cubs base runners with two out, but then the ex-Kansas State pitcher from St. Louis became his own worst enemy.

Although walking only three batters in his first 15 innings this year, Lesslie equaled that on the next three batters and later added a fourth walk for good measure while Drumright finally knocked him out of the box with his second single of the inning.

DOUBLES BY Steve Stroughter and Jim Anderson in the third spoiled Ledbetter's shutout and Carney Lansford's run-scoring single in the fourth left the Diablos trailing 6-2.

Steve Davis' third homer, a solo wallop to left, in the fifth opened some daylight and then a walk and successive singles by Duane Gustavson, Aaron Randall, Davis and an infield out added two more runs in the sixth.

Joe Hernandez tripled and scored on a wild pitch in the seventh to give Midland its 10-2 margin.

Davis collected three hits for the Cubs, who raked four Diablo pitchers for 12 in all. Ledbetter even managed to shutoff outfielder Gil Kubski, who went 0-for-3 after collecting 20 hits in 31 trips against Cubs pitchers going into Sunday's game.

CUBS BRIEFS — Long-time Midland Cubs favorite Bill Huisman will call it a career after Tuesday's game, the final one of the current homestand. Bill has accepted a coaching job in Iowa and will report for duty Wednesday....When Gustavson singled in the seventh, it broke an 0-for-25 slump....Dorsey, 9-9 in the Texas League last year, was 2-1 against Midland....Jim Saul on Saturday night's thumbing: "All I said when I went out to the mound was, 'You've missed four or five calls tonight' and I was out of the game. I didn't cuss the umpire then and I haven't yet."...Lesslie pitched for two years at Albuquerque in the PCL, but saw no future in the Dodgers' organization and did not sign a contract and was released. He was picked up by El Paso and claims, "This is my spring training...and after a route-going first game, it has been rough."....

Ray's seige downs Ben

DALLAS (AP) — Ray Floyd showed why he will be professional golf's next millionaire soon because he wouldn't let himself surrender at the Byron Nelson Golf Classic Sunday when it appeared young Ben Crenshaw had bagged the $40,000 first prize with a spectacular eagle.

The 35-year-old Floyd said "I heard the crowd reaction when Ben made eagle at No. 15 but I just gave myself a subconscious kick in the rear. I could have quit but I didn't allow myself to quit. Then I made one helluva eagle."

Floyd made up five strokes in the final three holes with a cross-country 40-foot putt for an eagle on No. 15 and an 8 foot birdie putt on 17 for a final round two-under par 69 over the Preston Trail Golf Club.

Crenshaw, 25, folded on the final two holes, finishing bogey, bogey for par 71 with such miserable shotmaking that had him commenting: "I could hit better irons and tee shots when I was 15."

The victory for Floyd—his first of the year—put him in the World Series of Golf and on the U.S. Ryder Cup.

It also brought Floyd's lifetime earnings to $955,256 and "gave me and my wife a good start on paying for the home we're building in Miami."

Floyd's 276 total was 8-under par over the toughened up 6,983 Par 35-36 layout which featured briar patch rough and slick greens.

Crenshaw, who earned $22,800, was two shots back at 278.

"I'm just tickled to death ...I can't recall coming from that far behind on such a few holes," said Floyd. "Usually, I've been in the front and galloped to my other wins. I'm so tired I could drop."

Floyd, who came off a twoweek vacation, said "That eagle putt I made was the prettiest thing I've ever seen. I just told myself to keep hitting good shots and I might have a chance."

Crenshaw was crestfallen when he came off the final green, saying "I let my fans down and it hurts a lot."

He perked up somewhat by the time he made his way to the press tent, saying "after looking over the way I played I can't feel too bad with second place.

"I sure opened the door for Raymond and you can't give him an opening. He has worked hard on his game and is dedicated and he's one of my good friends."

Crenshaw, hoping for his fifth tour victory, said "I have to go to work on my game to get consistent. I never really had any confidence like the confidence I've had when I've won tournaments."

The free-swinging Crenshaw has a game marked by spectacular shots and equally stunning collapses.

"I'm going back to work and practice hard," said Crenshaw. "Maybe I'm gripping the club too hard or something but I'll work it out. It's fundamentals."

Asked if he thought he had the tournament won with his eagle on 15 which gave him a three-shot lead, Crenshaw wiped the blond hair from his brow and smiled "Not the way I was hitting the ball. I knew I didn't have a lock."

76ers eye NBA sweep

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Philadelphia 76ers Coach Gene Shue almost choked on a soft drink when he heard that Doug Collins was still shooting in the dressing room—with his mouth, not the ball.

"Right now our thoughts are on a sweep," said Collins, who shoots quick and talks in machine-gun style.

"We're trying to do it in four," he added.

Shue gulped at what coaches consider heresy—feeding the opposition propaganda. He could just see the Houston Rockets reacting to Collins' remark.

"Sweep?" asked Shue. "I'm worried only about the third game. You all know the respect I have for Houston. When they get hot, I haven't seen any team like them."

Three times Sunday the Rockets crawled back from deficits to look the Sixers in the eye. And three times Philadelphia left them running on a treadmill. Philadelphia won 106-97 and took a 2-0 lead in their best-of-seven National Basketball Association semifinal series.

Collins, who scored 20 points, labeled the 76ers a team of spurts, both good and bad. On the good side they scored 14 straight points in the first period and went on to build a 57-45 halftime lead. When the Rockets tied it 73-73 in the third, the Sixers ran off seven in a row for some breathing room. And when the Rockets battled back to within three, Shue's troops outscored them 14-6 early in the fourth quarter to wrap it up.

"But then there are the bad spurts," Collins lamented. "We go through streaks where we just don't do the things we're supposed to do. That's what happened in the third quarter."

The Rockets trailed by 12 starting the third, and with Rudy Tomjanovich scoring 14 and Calvin Murphy—the game's high scorer with 32 points—12 in the period, scrapped back to tie at 71-71. They trailed by just three at the third-quarter mark, 83-80. But the Sixers spurted again and it was all over.

Hollis Stacy claims first tour victory

ROSWELL, Ga. (AP) — "I feel like I've gone over a brink," says Hollis Stacy, six times a runnerup on the Ladies Professional Golf Association tour.

Miss Stacy finally claimed her first championship Sunday, overcoming a three-shot deficit on the final nine holes to edge veteran Joanne Carner by one stroke in the $50,000 Lady Tara golf tournament.

"I'm not complaining about the seconds," said the 23-year-old Georgian, who three times as an amateur captured the U.S. Junior title. "It's something you have to experience. You have to learn how to lose in order to win. You have to learn to cope with the pressure."

She shot the back side of the hilly, 6,197-yard, par 73 Brookfield West Country Club course in a sizzling five-under 32, and birdied three of the last four holes to fire a 70 for a 54hole total of 10-under-par 209.

"I didn't spoil my record," said Mrs. Carner, the defending champion who in 28 years of competition has never won consecutive tournaments.

The duo appeared headed for a playoff until Mrs. Carner bogeyed the par five 17th, driving into woods and later burying a shot on a downhill lie in a bunker. She then tried a snaky, 18-footer for a birdie on the finishing hole, missing by inches and settling for a 71 that left her at 210.

Miss Stacy, earning $7,500, started poorly with bogeys on the third and fifth holes, turning at two-over and trailing Mrs. Carner by three shots at the time.

Mets plunder Tulsa Drillers

By The Associated Press

The Jackson Mets plundered the Tulsa Drillers Sunday night 8-4 on the Drillers' home field but the Mississippians' fun didn't start until the ninth inning.

Righthander Steve Comer had managed to survive 13 hits and three Driller errors when he left the game with one out and the Mets Dave Lozano on base.

Relief specialist Mike Arrington came in and promptly walked Gene Menees, then gave up four staight hits to break a 4-4 deadlock, which gave the Mets their third straight victory over Tulsa. The Mississippians have now pulled within four games of divisionleading Shreveport in the Texas League East.

Jackson collected 17 hits to Tulsa's 15.

Meanwhile in Amarillo, the home team Gold Sox faired no better against visiting San Antonio, with the final 7-6 tally revealing a bit of a pitching duel.

But it didn't start out that way. Mitch Bobinger was shelled from the mound in the first inning by the Gold Sox, but fireman Marty Kunkler came in and pitched 6 23 innings allowing only four hits and no runs. Kunkler also fanned four hitters.

Marv Webb went four for five at the plate and knocked in four of San Antonio's seven runs.

Midland Colts rip Odessa

The Midland Colts won a semi-pro doubleheader from the Odessa Stars Sunday with 5-2 and 13-2 victories.

Mark Blau won both games for the Colts with a 14-inning mound stint to run his winning streak to 5-0. Blau has given up only eight runs in 32 innings. He pitched three and four hitters Sunday. Lupe Perez and Hoddie Garcia both had four hits in the twinbill as the Colts ran their record to 6-2.

Former Oklahoma star says everybody cheats

AUSTIN, Tex. (AP) — Former Oklahoma football star Billy Brooks says everybody—including his alma mater—cheats in college recruiting.

Brooks, 23, has bought a $68,000 hilltop house here after his rookie season with the pro Cincinnati Bengals.

The fast 6-foot-3, 190-pound receiver was heavily recruited after his senior year at Austin Johnston High School even though he had poor grades.

"SMU told me they could pull strings and get me in," he told an interviewer, "but there'd always be the chance somebody would find out. So I went to (Navarro) junior college one year, finished with a 3.85 (grade point average) and went to OU."

Because he has maintained business contacts in Oklahoma City—"I don't want to burn any bridges there,"—Brooks refused to elaborate on his own recruiting experience with Oklahoma.

He mentioned, however, in an interview with Danny Robbins of the Austin American-Statesman that he got:

—A free leather coat at a clothing store operated by an Oklahoma fan.

—A free watch repair job at a jewelry store run by another OU booster.

—A car loan on which he had to pay only $60 every two months.

NCAA rules state that "any student-athlete who receives financial assistance other than that administered by his institution shall not be eligible for intercollegiate competition."

He said he traded his Volkswagen for a sport-model Oldsmobile in Yukon, Okla., and the dealer, an OU fan, gave him $1,000 for the used car. The dealer, Brooks said, accepted the money as a down payment on the new car and arranged the financing himself.

"He (the dealer) liked OU football," Brooks said. "But I paid for the car. My payments were very small but I did pay for the car. The University of Oklahoma did not get it for me. I went to the dealer, said I needed a car and he helped me out."

Brooks also said he bought up books of season tickets and sold them for enormous profits, but he refused to say how much.

Although Texas recruited Brooks, he says Texas "talked to me like I was a little black boy with no other place to go. Texas didn't really offer me anything (illegal)," he said. They just talked to me in terms of certain advantages of going to Texas. Money? A car? Girls? A degree? I can't pinpoint it. But at the time I was a poor black guy from the east side of Austin. I thought in terms of bucks.

Braves continue loss skein

By The Associated Press

The staggering Atlanta Braves suffered their 14th consecutive defeat Sunday, dropping a 6-3 decision to the Chicago Cubs.

Bobby Murcer's two-run triple was the big hit in a fourrun Cubs rally in the third inning as the Braves' losing streak became the longest in the National League since 1969 when Montreal lost 20 in a row.

Pittsburgh, meanwhile, continued to streak in the opposite direction. The Pirates won their eighth straight and 13th in the last 14, defeating Cincinnati 6-4. Dave Parker, the leading hitter in the majors with a .421 batting average, ripped a tie-breaking two-run double in the seventh inning to key the winning rally.

The loss was the fourth straight for Cincinnati and left the defending world champions with a 10-15 record, 11 games behind Los Angeles in the National League West. The Dodgers game against Philadelphia was rained out. Montreal's doubleheader at San Diego also was washed out.

St. Louis turned in the National League's first triple play this season and used RBI-singles by Bake McBride and Keith Hernandez to defeat Houston 2-1.

San Francisco used three hits by Willie McCovey and a double and triple by rookie Terry Whitfield to down the New York Mets 4-2 in the first game of a doubleheader. The Giants completed the sweep, blanking the Mets 10-0 in the nightcap behind John Curtis in a game called after six innings because of rain.

Thurman Munson drilled four hits including a triple and home run and Graig Nettles slugged a three-run homer, leading a 16-hit attack that carried the New York Yankees to a 10-5 victory over the Oakland A's.

Rookies Mitchell Page and Wayne Gross homered for the losers.

Oscar Gamble's two-run homer backed the nine-hit pitching of Steve Stone as the Chicago White Sox defeated Cleveland 8-3. Andre Thornton homered for the Indians.

A pair of two-run homers by Willie Horton carried Texas to a 5-2 victory over Kansas City.

Bert Blyleven, 4-2, needed ninth inning relief from Darold Knowles and posted his sixth straight victory over the Royals since September 1975. He now is 19-10 against the Royals for his career.

A&M placed on probation

KANSAS CITY (AP) — Texas A&M University was placed on a one-year probation by the NCAA today for infractions in its basketball program, but the penalties include no sanctions.

The University was ordered instead to sever all relations, formal and informal, "with certain representatives of the University's athletic interests involved in the violations of NCAA legislations."

The "certain representatives," which were not named, may no longer aid Texas A&M's efforts in raising financing, recruiting or other athletic booster efforts.

The violations include improper monetary gifts to prospective athletes and the loan of an automobile to a student-athlete.

"The action of the Committee on Infractions has taken into account action already taken in this case by the Southwest Athletic Conference," Arthur R. Reynolds, chairman off the Infractions Committee, said in a prepared news release.

Carter talks like tourist about visit to London

By EDWARD WALSH
The Washington Post

LONDON — The American tourist was describing the private, little dinner party he had just come from to some of his fellow countrymen here Saturday night.

"I think the whole Royal Family was there," he said. "I had a good place to sit. I was between the Queen and Princess Margaret, and across the table was Prince Charles and Prince Philip and the Queen Mother was there, too ..."

The tourist was Jimmy Carter, former peanut farmer from Plains, Georgia, who recalled that the only other time he had been in London he had to peer at Buckingham Palace "through the fence." Saturday night, they let him in through the front door, and if there was a slightly giddy, awe-struck tone to his recollections of the evening, there was good reason for it.

The President is being treated royally here. In a city where there are now seven heads of government and a press corps of more than 1,500 to report their summit meetings, he is the constant center of attention, the one the crowds turn out to see and to wave at.

He arrived here Thursday night, the newly-elected American President, still something of a stranger to his fellow "summiteers," as the seven are called here, and to the people of their countries. Through two days of weighty discussions on economic and related issues, Carter has left the unmistakable imprint of his style on this capital and from all accounts won a huge amount of good will for himself in the process.

Sunday morning he was up early to attend church services in the grandeur of Westminster Abbey, where he had to borrow money from an aide for the collection.

After the 40-minute service, the President had a tour of the building, taking the opportunity to press his guide, Bishop Knapp Fisher, for some official recognition of one of his favorite writers, the Welsh poet Dylan Thomas.

In the poet's corner of the Abbey, where some of England's greatest writers are entombed, Carter said that he thought Thomas should be similarly honored. Perhaps, the bishop replied, in time Thomas, who died in 1953 and was known for his public carousing, would make it to the Abbey "whatever his morals."

"I would like to recommend it," the President said. "I will pray for his soul if you will commemorate him."

Saturday afternoon, Carter did another characteristic thing. He walked to lunch, leading the other summiteers from No. 10 Downing Street, site of their meetings, across St. James Park to Lancaster House. The expected chaos when a President takes a stroll in public ensued.

"American security men flapped around their charge dementedly," the London Sunday Telegraph said in describing the scene.

The British press has been enthralled by all of this. Reports of Carter's tour of northeast England Friday with British Prime Minister James Callaghan included headlines such as "Mr. Carter wins hearts of the Northeast" and "100,000 Geordies greet Carter the charmer."

The American party with the President is clearly pleased with his reception so far, not only with the public reaction but to what has — and has not — happened in his private meetings with leaders from Western Europe, Canada and Japan.

White House press secretary Jody Powell said that Carter was in an exceptionally good mood as he passed the midway point in his first trip overseas since taking office.

"We've taken care of a number of things," Powell said, noting that a much-publicized possible personal feud between Carter and West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt never materialized when the two met here Saturday. The meeting went so well, Powell said, that afterwards the President turned to an aide and said, "We can pack our bags and go home while we're ahead."

Sunday night, following the end of the two-day summit, Carter returned to Winfield House, the opulent residence of the American ambassador where he is staying. Smiling broadly, he told reporters he is "quite satisfied" with the results of the summit.

On Monday, Carter will turn his attention to Berlin and the Middle East. He will meet first with Schmidt, British Prime Minister James Callaghan and French President Valery Giscard D'Estaing to discuss the situation in West Berlin.

Asked about the meeting Sunday night, the President agreed with a questioner that the Berlin Wall "makes a mockery" of the four-power post-World War II agreement granting freedom of access throughout the city.

"I think the wall is a very dramatic indication of the hunger for freedom among people who live in Eastern Germany," he said. "And I don't know how to express any hope that it might be removed. Of course, we would like to see the wall torn down."

Monday afternoon, Carter will fly to Geneva for a meeting with President Hafez Assad of Syria to discuss the Middle East.

The good will that appeared to permeate the two-day summit that ended Sunday night was threatened only once. It did not involve any of the world leaders, but some members of the press. Sunday morning, several outraged American reporters attempted to organized a boycott of the bar in the Churchill Hotel press room to protest the one dollar per cup charge for coffee.

The boycott began to collapse Sunday afternoon and by Sunday night the bar was doing a brisk business, serving considerably more mixed drinks and beer than coffee.

Job-hunting youngsters could have tough time

By LOUISE COOK
By The Associated Press

Youngsters looking for summer jobs this year will find the labor market tougher than ever and their chances of success perhaps hinging on a combination of planning and old-fashioned luck.

The U.S. Department of Labor estimates that two and a half million young people between the ages of 16 and 24 went hunting for summer jobs last year. The department hasn't issued a firm estimate for 1977, but a spokesman said he expects the number of job seekers to match last year's total.

Herman Fishman of the Youth Services Bureau of the New York State Department of Labor said the summer job situation has gotten progressively worse every year and added that 1977 probably would be "a little more difficult than last year."

He said his office alone had requests from 20,000 youngsters looking for summer jobs last year and was able to help less than 10 per cent of them. This year, he said, he expects more job seekers and fewer positions. Fishman said there is no area where the demand for summer workers is bigger than the supply. "Getting a summer job is largely a luck situation," he said.

Both he and a federal spokesman agreed, however, that advance planning can increase your chance of success. "If you're just starting now, it's probably too late," said a spokesman at the U.S. Department of Labor.

One of the first things you should know is what you can — and can't — do. Federal law limits employment for youngsters and state laws may require work permits below a certain age level. When state and federal laws conflict, the one that provides the most protection applies.

Here are some of the highlights of the federal regulations as they apply to nonfarm jobs:

—Over 18: There are no limits on the kind of job you can take or the number of hours you can work.

—Sixteen to 18: There are no limits on the number of hours you can work, but you are barred from any job which the secretary of labor considers hazardous. (For details, contact the local office of the U.S. Department of Labor.)

—Fourteen and 15: You are barred from hazardous jobs and may work no more than three hours on a school day and eight hours on a non-school day, and no more than 18 hours in a school week and 40 hours in a non-school week. You are not allowed to work before 7 a.m. or after 7 p.m., except from June 1 to Labor Day when the evening hours are extended to 9 p.m.

—Under 14: Formal employment is severely restricted. You can deliver newspapers, perform in television, movies, radio and theatrical productions or work for your parents in a non-farm business owned solely by them.

Further details are available in a free, Department of Labor leaflet, "The Young Worker." Write to: Consumer Information Center, Dept. 534E, Pueblo, Colo., 81009.

Machines sort mail

NEW YORK (AP) — Today, over 60 per cent of America's mail is sorted mechanically," says Fred T. Allen, chairman of Pitney Bowes, a manufacturer of mail handling systems and equipment. This represents a 25 per cent increase in mechanization since 1970, the result of Postal Service modernization.

A crew of 18 can sort up to 40,000 letters an hour using one letter-sorting machine — nearly double the amount the same 18 people could sort by hand.

"Facer-canceller" machines turn envelopes to their address faces, locate the stamps and cancel them electronically. A single machine can process 36,000 letters in an hour.
