Samantha Smith dies in plane crash

AUBURN, Maine (AP) — Samantha Smith, the schoolgirl whose wish for peace led to a highly publicized tour of the Soviet Union as the guest of Yuri Andropov, was killed along with her father and six other people in a plane crash, her mother said today.

The Bar Harbor Airlines Beechcraft 99 turboprop plane crashed and exploded Sunday night in rain a half-mile from the Auburn-Lewiston Municipal Airport, authorities said.

At daybreak today, officials were still attempting to make positive identification of the six passengers and two crew members, but the mother of 13-year-old Samantha said her husband and daughter were dead.

"They haven't showed up anywhere else," Jane Smith said in a telephone interview from the family's home in Manchester. She visited the crash site, she said, adding, "It's just a pile of ashes."

Airline officials declined to identify any victims immediately. "We don't have any information to give out at this point," said marketing administrator Cheryl Lare.

The state's chief medical examiner, Dr. Henry Ryan, said he hoped to identify the eight bodies through dental records. He said most of the victims were badly burned and many were dismembered.

Most of the wreckage was unrecognizable, except for a tire dangling from a tree, a partially buried piece of the cockpit and a charred section of the tail. The plane had skidded for about 100 feet along a grassy area before going over an embankment and landing in a wooded ravine.

One resident of the area said the plane barely missed her house and sheared off the tops of tall pines in her front yard. "We heard the crash, then we heard a bang and the explosion," said Renette Gallagher, 59.

Samantha attracted worldwide attention two years ago when she wrote to then-Soviet leader Andropov expressing concern about the potential for nuclear war. Kremlin leaders responded by inviting the girl and her parents on a two-week, expenses-paid tour of the Soviet Union.

In her letter Samantha asked Andropov: "Why do you want to conquer the whole world, or at least our country?"

The Soviet leader replied in his invitation that his country wanted "nothing of the kind."

Reagan hopes superpower talks curb hostilities

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan says he will tell Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev the United States has no hostile intentions toward the Soviet Union but has "good reason to think" Moscow is bent on conquest.

The convalescing president said he hopes his November meeting with Gorbachev will help "eliminate hostilities and suspicion" between the two superpowers.

Reagan, nearing the end of a three-week vacation at his ranch in the Santa Ynez Mountains 30 miles north of this coastal city, was interviewed by telephone Saturday by representatives of Washington Broadcast News, WSB Radio in Atlanta and WRHC Radio in Miami.

Reporters obtained tape recordings of the Washington organization's interview over the weekend.

The White House said Reagan trimmed trees on the ranch Sunday, the first time he has done so since undergoing surgery for cancer of the colon on July 13.

Today, members of a San Francisco-based organization called Veterans Speakers Alliance planned a four-mile climb to the gate of the ranch to dramatize their opposition to the president's Central American policies. They said they would leave a message expressing their fear that the policies are leading toward war.

Discussing his planned session with Gorbachev, Reagan said the United States and the Soviet Union are the only two countries that could start a third world war or bring about world peace.

■Reagan was former FBI informant, Page 2A

"I would think that would be our task in history," he said, "and I am going to do my best to show and prove that this country has no intention of taking hostile actions against them and also that we have good reason to think that they do have such an intent."

"The Soviet Union has made it plain that they are embarked on an expansionist program; they believe in a one-world communist state, the world revolution," Reagan said.

"But at the same time you have to wonder if this is not based on their fear and suspicion that the rest of us in the world mean them harm. I think we can present evidence to show that we have no such intention."

"I hope that it won't be just a session of trying to reach agreement on specific issues, but that we can get right down to discussing problems between us and and agenda for the future, so that we can eliminate the hostilities and suspicion if that is possible," the president said.

Soviet officials, meanwhile, expressed doubt about the atmosphere going into the summit.

Father's grave unites sons who believed others had died

LONDON (AP) — A father's grave in a Jewish cemetery in Poland united his sons, who for 46 years believed each other had died at the hands of the Nazis.

The story that began a month ago in a Warsaw cemetery came to its joyful conclusion at a champagne party in London on Sunday night. Samson, Israel and Jacob Altman were together again, hugging, kissing and weeping.

On July 29, Samson Altman, 66, a semi-retired London cab driver, visited his father's grave in Warsaw. He was surprised to find it well-tended because Poland's once-great Jewish community has dwindled to a few hundred, and most Jewish graves have lapsed into neglect.

But what truly astounded Samson Altman was that his own name had been carefully daubed on his father's tombstone.

He asked the warden what it meant. The warden replied that a few years earlier a man from Sweden had visited the grave and had written the names of Samson and the rest of the Altman family on the tomb in black paint.

The father, who died before World War II, was the only member of the family to be given a proper burial. The rest, it was assumed, had died in the war and the concentration camps, he said.

The warden dug the gentleman's name out of his files. It was Jacob Altman, Samson's brother, living in the Goteborg area of Sweden.

"It seemed impossible. I thought Jacob was dead," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "I was so excited, I ran three miles to the post office to send a telegram to Jacob. They said it would get there in the morning. In my hotel, I couldn't sleep. I was nervous, weeping, pacing about the room."

"Next morning, no call. I couldn't eat. All I could do was pace up and down. Twelve o'clock, still nothing. Then finally, at 5 p.m. the phone rings, and a voice says in Yiddish, 'Shimsheh (Samson), where have you been? I haven't seen you for 46 years' It was Jacob, and we both started crying. He was still not certain, and he was checking me by asking me details — what was our father's name, how old was he, and so on. I told him, father was Mordechai, died at age 92, all the details."

From Jacob he learned that his brother Israel was also alive. The two brothers had settled in Sweden after spending World War II in Buchenwald and Maidanek concentration camps. Two other brothers, Shmulik and Yosek, a sister, Adele, and their mother Rosa, had perished.

Samson Altman had joined the Polish Free Army under British command and had reached Palestine. After the war he settled in London.

"For a long time I tried to find my family," he said. "Who didn't I write to? The International Red Cross, the Salvation Army, Jewish newspapers everywhere, the committee for lost people in Warsaw, and they all told me my whole family perished in the Warsaw Ghetto."

Two brothers, the sister and the mother were indeed dead, killed in the 1943 Jewish uprising against Warsaw's Nazi rulers. And finally, when the Red Cross in Warsaw told him once again in 1980 that none of the Altmans had survived, Samson gave up — until July 29, standing at his father's grave in Warsaw.

On Sunday night, Jacob, 70, and Israel, 75, arrived from Sweden for the reunion. At the airport, Samson was nervous again, peering down the arrivals corridor, fearful he would not recognize his brothers.

Iran's Kharg Island sustains heavy damage in second Iraqi bombing

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — Marine salvage executives said Iraqi jets inflicted substantial damage on Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal during their second bombing attack in 10 days, but Iran issued a statement today denying the claim.

Ships in the Persian Gulf near the stricken terminal radioed that the oil terminal sustained heavy damage in the attack Sunday, said one Gulf-based shipping executive.

"Kharg has been hit again by Iraqi military aircraft, apparently to aggravate an already unfavorable oil loading situation caused by the mid-August raid," said the source, who spoke on condition he not be identified.

A European salvage company executive said at least one of Kharg's three jetties had been closed for repairs from the first attack. Sources said it was too early to determine precisely how much damage the Iraqi planes caused.

In Baghdad, an unidentified Iraqi military spokesman said in a radio broadcast that eight 1,100-pound bombs were dropped on Kharg to "impede work on extinguishing fires resulting from the previous strike." He said all planes returned safely.

In London, Lloyd's Shipping Intelligence Unit said it had received no independent confirmation of the attack on Kharg Island, which is about 140 miles southeast of the Iraqi coast.

Iran's official Tehran Radio said today that Iraqi aircraft "infiltrated Persian Gulf waters and dropped a few bombs in the waters around Kharg Island, and immediately afterwards began extensive propaganda regarding their attack."

Iraqi warplanes first hit Kharg Island, which handles about 90 percent of Iran's crude oil exports, on Aug. 15.

Oil industry sources said that until that raid, Iran was exporting an average of 1 million to 1.5 million barrels of oil daily. Shipping sources in Bahrain estimated the attack reduced Kharg's loading capacity by 25 percent to 40 percent.

However, the Middle East Economic Survey, an authoritative oil review, said in this week's issue that the first attack on Kharg Island apparently did little damage, and that it did not affect Kharg's capacity.

Last February, Iraq warned international shipping companies to keep their vessels 50 miles away from Kharg in a bid to choke off Iran's oil exports and hurt its war effort.

Canoe floats to first place in Pecos race

PECOS, Texas (AP) — Organizers of the Pecos River Yacht Race had to scramble to find a section of river with enough water to float the contestants this weekend.

But after the event was moved to a 20-mile stretch of river awash from one of the Pecos' many agricultural dams, 30 competitors were able to sail everything from canoes to inner tubes to the finish line.

"Two weeks ago, the river was pretty low, but there was enough water. We weren't worried about it," said Pecos Chamber of Commerce President Rusty Wafer said Sunday. "But the day before the race we went out there and there was nothing, just a little trickle."

Wafer acknowledged that his idea for a race on a river that often runs less than a foot deep was "off the wall."

"This was going to be just a crazy thing to make money," he said. "I thought that we were just going to have 10 contestants."

The race netted $750 that will go toward the city's downtown historical district, Wafer said.

Wafer said many of the 30 contestants decorated their craft for the occasion.

One man outfitted his dinghy with a paddle wheel in the Mississippi Riverboat style, Wafer said. Another attached a tall mast to his inner tube and decorated the shaft with streamers.

Some serious contestants used lightweight canoes.

Siberian town dependent on others for its supplies

By SETH MYDANS
New York Times News Service

YERBOGACHEN, U.S.S.R. — When the eggs come in, there is almost nothing but eggs on the shelves of the tiny general store in this remote Siberian settlement. The unpaved streets are filled with villagers gingerly carrying home stacks of eggs on their cardboard trays.

When the pickled tomatoes are flown in, it is pickled tomatoes everyone buys. And when the liquor arrives, it comes in bottles of 180-proof alcohol, stronger and therefore more economical to transport than vodka.

This isolated village of hunters and trappers, set in the inhospitable forests of the Siberian north, is dependent for all but 20 days of the year on air transport for everything from bread to bricks.

Residents say that apart from forest animals and wild berries and mushrooms, Yerbogachen is self-sufficient only in potatoes, and that even these fail when the mid-August frosts come early.

Yet many longtime residents treasure their isolation and closeness to nature, and reminisce fondly about the days before television and daily airplane or helicopter flights brought the world closer.

Local officials say it costs millions of rubles a year to support this village of 2,000 people, which usually produces less than a million rubles worth of exportable furs a year.

They point out that the furs are doubly valuable, bringing in badly needed hard currency at Leningrad's twice-yearly auctions. But Yerbogachen is nevertheless an example of the lengths to which the central government goes in supporting the sparse and far-flung population of Siberia.

People here like to quote the 18th-century scientist and writer Mikhail Lomonosov, who said, "The power of Russia will grow forth out of Siberia." But although the region contains vast natural resources, most of them still lie untapped under the permafrost, as they did in Lomonosov's day.

As the Soviet government develops Siberia, building railway lines and carving out whole new cities, it offers incentives to workers to move into the region, and places a high priority on keeping intact the network of villages that are strung along Siberia's rivers.

Most residents of villages like Yerbogachen receive 20 percent or 50 percent additions to their base pay as compensation. Nevertheless, officials here said, the work force in the Irkutsk region, where Yerbogachen is situated, is dwindling slightly.

"A lot of people are leaving for the cities, but the government is trying to keep distant settlements open," said Khalim Gindulin, a seven-year resident who says he intends to remain. Gindulin is in charge of supplying Yerbogachen, and the alcohol that is sold here instead of vodka is known as Gindulinka because it is his not-altogether-popular idea.

"There's a village north of here called Ingarigda with 16 families, and they eat what we eat," he said.

"Let's say there's a logging village where they have cut down all the forest. The government thinks up some work for them and continues to supply them. And at election time they fly people around to these villages so they can vote. 'Here, it's Ivanov,' they tell the people. 'You want Ivanov, vote for him. If not, cross him out.' "

According to figures given by Mayor Anatoly A. Besmenov, more than 700,000 rubles a year is spent on transporting supplies to Yerbogachen, with additional costs going to basic essentials like warehouses. In addition, the entire social structure of the village, from schooling to medical care to pensions to paid vacations, is supported by the government.

Yerbogachen, like many Siberian settlements, is built on a high bluff overlooking a river. For much of the year, its river, the Nizhnyaya Tunguska, is frozen, and its broad, smooth bed is a highway for Evenk tribesmen with their reindeer-drawn sleighs and for hunters on their fur-covered snowshoes.

With the spring thaw, though, and the greening of the birches in the deep, black forests, the river rises rapidly, with a great rush of water that climbs up the bank to the very edge of the street near the general store.

As the thaw begins, Yerbogachen's annual supply of nonperishable goods is already on its way, first by train from the big cities to Ust Kut, more than 4,000 miles east of Moscow, in the heart of Siberia.

The supplies then travel up the Lena River, which is navigable four months of the year, to the town of Kirensk, and then 20 miles by truck to a village called Podvoloshino, where they are loaded onto barges for the four-day trip up the Nizhnyaya Tunguska to Yerbogachen.

But the Nizhnyaya Tunguska is open to navigation for only 20 days a year, from late May to mid-June, when the winter ice has broken and the runoff from melting snow makes it deep enough for barge traffic. If there are heavy rains in the autumn, the barges may be able to make an extra run.

During this feverish period, nine 200-ton barges ply the river night and day, and everyone from children to old folk, from hunters to Evenk tribesmen from the surrounding forests, pitches in to help.

The barges bring some 4,500 tons of dry goods, each managing two and a half turnarounds before the water level drops and they moor at either end of the route. It is not long before the winter has set in again, and the barges remain frozen in the ice, waiting for their next summer's run.

For the rest of the year, small AN-24 aircraft supply Yerbogachen from the regional capital of Irkutsk, hundreds of miles to the south, each bringing up to five tons of cargo at a cost of 430 rubles (about $500) a ton.

Scores of ships have been attacked, some in retaliatory raids by Iran. Iraq and Iran have been at war since Iraq invaded Iran in September 1980 over a border dispute.

Meanwhile, Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency said Iranian forces had punched about five miles inside Iraq. The dispatch, monitored in Nicosia, Cyprus, said the Iranians destroyed bunkers and three bridges over the Arvand River near Khanaqin.

The Iraqi spokesman in Baghdad said the Iranian report was "totally untrue. No (Iranian) enemy forces crossed the front line into Iraqi territory today," the spokesman told the official Iraqi News Agency.

The report by IRNA said Iranian troops went around four strategic heights held by the Iraqis to besiege other positions.

The Carpet Column
by Felix Welmaker CFS/RFI*

Most of today's carpets just won't wear out! But they will "ugly out", and some of them will do that a lot sooner than others! So, how do you go about selecting a carpet that will wear a long time, and be ATTRACTIVE as well?
Ask your dealer, your REPUTABLE dealer, about which carpet will best serve your needs and desires. A reputable dealer will ask you what you expect of your carpet, how long you would like to use it before replacing it, how you would like it to appear during its useful lifetime. . .and last, but only last, how much money you would like to INVEST (not "spend").

Back in the "olden" days, carpet manufacturers spent a lot of time and money testing carpets, before they were ever put on the market. These days, I wonder if SOME manufacturers pre-test their carpets at all, judging by the poor performance we have observed in some cases. Fortunately, those "some cases" are not from House of Carpets, because we do business with the same old manufacturers we did years and years ago, and they still test their carpets the old-fashioned way: tuftbind, pill fuzz, delamination, static, cleanability, burn resistance, and twist retention, to name a few of the tests they perform.

This may sound technical, but it's important to you, because you want your carpets to stay pretty a long time, and proper testing and research can make the difference!

For carpets that start pretty, and stay prettier longer, see your House of Carpets sales counselor. Store hours are 9 to 5:30 Monday through Friday, 9 to 4 on Saturdays. Phone is 683-3377

SMITH

She and her parents got VIP treatment during the tour three months later but she never met Andropov, who died Feb. 9, 1984. She was widely hailed by some as a symbol of hope for peace; others criticized her as being exploited.

The Soviet news agency Tass reported Samantha's death today, saying "she saw for herself the sincere desire of the Soviet people to live in peace and to prevent nuclear war."

Mrs. Smith said her husband and daughter were flying in from Boston after a two-week stay in England, where Samantha had been filming a part in the weekly ABC-TV action-adventure series "Lime Street," which was open Sept. 21. She played a daughter of an insurance investigator played by Robert Wagner and had been scheduled to appear in additional episodes.

"Samantha was a special girl. We fell in love with her the first time she walked on the set," Wagner said in a statement with series producer Jack Kaplan. "She brought a special touch to the work and she touched us."

After her tour of the Soviet Union, Samantha made dozens of TV appearances, traveled extensively in the United States, went to Japan to address the Children's International Symposium for the 21st Century, and wrote a book about the trip.

"Right now, I don't have to worry about going back to school next fall," Samantha said in an interview last week with the Bangor Daily News, "but I know that I'll miss seeing my friends during those five-minute breaks between classes. That's sad."

Samantha wrote to Andropov after seeing his picture on the cover of a news magazine.

"I said to my mother, 'You ought to write a letter to him.' She said, 'You should.' So I did," the girl said a year ago.

"I hope it's done some good for our country," she said of her trip. "Otherwise it's been a lot of fun traveling. I've even lost my airsickness."

Airline sales manager Steven Mason said it was raining at the time of the crash, but that the pilot was experienced and that it is a "very safe guess" that he had landed in Auburn many times before.

It was the airline's first crash in 17 years, he said.

The plane, which was delayed in Boston, was scheduled to land in Auburn, near Lewiston, the first of several stops on its way to Bangor. The other stops were to have been in Augusta and Waterville, said Mason.

Smith became role model for children

Associated Press

Samantha Smith, the plucky schoolgirl whose letter to Soviet leader Yuri Andropov led to a trip to the Soviet Union and international celebrity, became a role model for children and the focus of Cold War rhetoric between the two superpowers.

A plane that crashed Sunday near Auburn, Maine, was believed to have been carrying the 13-year-old girl and her father, Arthur, on a return trip from London. All eight people on board were killed, officials said.

The hoopla over Samatha's trip to the Soviet Union led to her landing a part in an upcoming ABC-TV adventure series with Robert Wagner, "Lime Street," which she had been filming in London.

Samantha was 11 when she wrote a letter to the late Andropov in 1983, asking him why he wanted to conquer the world and expressing her fears about nuclear war. He wrote back, inviting her and her parents to visit his country and judge for herself.

"It seems to me — and I take it from your letter — that you are a courageous and honest girl, resembling in some way Becky — Tom Sawyer's friend from the well known book of your compatriot Mark Twain," Andropov wrote.

During her two-week tour of the Soviet Union in July 1983, Samantha, her father and her mother, Jane, were accorded all the privileges of a visiting diplomat, although they did not meet with Andropov himself.

The family faced a throng of Western and Soviet reporters at every major stop of the trip. At a Moscow news conference winding up her stay, the fifth-grader said, "I've been treated really nice. I've gotten so many presents...

"Soviet people are really nice people. They're almost just like Americans."

Samantha Smith

Samantha said the highlight of the trip was the four days she spent at Artek Young Pioneer camp in the Crimea. She also met the first woman in space, Valentina Tereshkova and received a gold medal at the Bolshoi Ballet.

Upon returning home to Manchester, Maine, she was met with a limousine, given a key to the city by Gov. Joseph Brennan, and cheered by thousands in a parade. It was only the beginning of her celebrity treatment.

In the ensuing weeks, Samantha appeared on dozens of news shows, filmed three television specials, and was on "The Tonight Show" with Johnny Carson twice.

The girl was featured in political cartoons on American editorial pages, and Soviet radio poked fun at the intense publicity she was accorded on her return to the United States.

"What did she do to deserve all these honors? Did she fly to the moon or Mars or Venus?...No, she simply returned from a two-week expenses-free tour of the Soviet Union."

The state-run radio continued: "What did they expect us to do in connection with Samantha's visit? Start a Samantha Smith movement to foil the intrigues of U.S. imperialism?"

Some U.S. diplomats had voiced concern before her trip that she might be exploited by the Soviets for propaganda purposes.

In the two years after her visit, Samantha trekked across the nation for public appearances, visited Japan to speak at the Children's International Symposium for the 21st Century and wrote a journal of her experiences published last fall.

A year after the Soviet tour, Samantha's father said she had received up to 3,000 letters from children from over 100 nations.

"I hope it's done some good for our country," Samantha said in a July 1984 interview. "Otherwise, it's been a lot of fun traveling."

REAGAN

"I think Soviet-American relations are in jeopardy," said Dr. Georgi Arbatov, a member of the Soviet Communist Party central committee and director of the Institute on the U.S.A. and Canada, who appeared Sunday on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

On domestic policy, Reagan hinted strongly in the interview that he will not approve a recommendation by some members of his Cabinet that he increase the tariff on imported shoes to protect the American footwear industry.

"I am opposed to protectionism," he said. "You may help some particular industry, or some group of employees, with protectionism and you find you are doing it at the expense of some other industry or other employees. I don't think protectionism is the way to go."

The president is required to act by Sept. 1 because of a finding by the U.S. International Trade Commission that the domestic shoe industry faces serious injury from imports. An administration official, speaking on condition he not be named, said the president is expected to refuse to increase the tariff or impose quotas, but may take some other action.

The president declined to say whether he would veto legislation imposing sanctions on the South African government for its policies of racial segregation, but reiterated his belief that sanctions would hurt South African blacks by damaging the country's economy.

"So I can tell you I am standing back and looking with a kind of jaundiced eye at what may come to me, but then the final decision on whether to veto or not will depend on exactly what does hit my desk," the president said.

A bill calling for sanctions has passed the Democratic-controlled House, but the Republican-led Senate has put off action until after the August congressional recess.

The president also confirmed reports by administration officials that he plans to veto appopriations bills "any time they start to add in things that would increase the deficit."

White House: Old news that Reagan informant

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan was a confidential FBI informant in his acting days, a newspaper reports, but the White House says that news is nothing that hasn't been public knowledge before.

The San Jose Mercury News also said Sunday that during the FBI's first recorded interview with him in 1943, the 32-year-old actor told of nearly "coming to blows" with a person because of anti-Semitic remarks at a cocktail party. The FBI interview with Reagan, who at the time was in the Army Air Corps Motion Picture Unit, was part of an investigation into the person's suspected Nazi sympathies.

FBI documents the Mercury News obtained through a Freedom of Information Act request show that Reagan informed the FBI about suspected pro-communist influences in the Screen Actors Guild and other Hollywood groups.

Albert R. Brashear, deputy White House press secretary, said White House Counsel Fred Fielding told him the report has previously been public knowledge.

Brashear said the FBI told him that Reagan's involvement with the bureau was "very minor" and added, "I'm not sure this reference to confidential informant is quite what it sounds like."

Reagan and his first wife, actress Jane Wyman, told the FBI of actors they thought were members of a faction sympathetic to communists, the newspaper said.

Reagan has written in his memoirs that as president of the Screen Actors Guild, he tried to rid the union of communist influences.

FBI spokesman Manuel Marquez said in Washington that he had not seen the documents, but questioned calling Reagan an informant. "People give us information all the time," Marquez said.

The newspaper said the documents also showed Reagan criticized attempts to fire suspected communists from film work.

After World War II, the House Un-American Activities Committee held hearings on suspected communist influence in Hollywood. Reagan, elected president of the guild in 1947, testified that year before HUAC, that "There has been a small group within the Screen Actors Guild which has consistently opposed the policy of the Guild Board...that small clique referred to has been suspected of more or less following the tactics that we associate with the Communist Party."

But Reagan added: "I would hesitate to see any political party outlawed on the basis of its political ideology...However if it is proven that an organization is an agent of a foreign power...that is another matter."

RACE

The winner of Saturday's race was the Paris, Texas, team of Johnny Meredith, 38, and his 15-year-old son, Wesley.

The pair negotiated the 20-mile course in three hours and four minutes in a lightweight, orange canoe, Wafer reported.

The elder Meredith said that he had read about the race in a Dallas newspaper.

"I just thought it would be a nice thing to do on the weekend," he said of his decision to drive 500 miles to Pecos, a city of 13,000 people.

The original course, starting about five miles north of the city, had followed a winding path below the dam. The new starting point was moved up river about 15 miles northeast of the city.

Another contestant, Mike Parker, 27, of Odessa, called the course "a piece of cake."

Parker said the river water level "was the best we've seen it in years," adding that he and his partner "only had to get out and ford the river occasionally."

"It's good for Pecos, and it's good for the river," 37-year-old Reeves County rancher Kathy Harrison said of the race. "It may help us help the river."

And one other item of unfinished business, said Samson: "To have my name removed from my father's tombstone as quickly as possible."

STNP officials deleted vital data, paper says

HOUSTON (AP) — South Texas Nuclear Project officials deleted information about cost and construction problems at the plant from minutes of an important meeting, a project official said.

Jesse Poston, chairman of the project's management committee, told The Houston Post that critical information about a massive cost increase and construction delay were left out of minutes of two-day committee meeting in July 1978.

The committee minutes often served as the only public source of information about the status of the project, the Post said in a copyright story published Sunday.

The management committee includes representatives of the project's four owners: project manager Houston Lighting & Power Co., Central Power & Light of Corpus Christi and the cities of Austin and San Antonio.

Poston, who represents the San Antonio owner, said nine critical statements were deleted from the minutes because they were "premature, or not fully thought-out statements."

But three months later — in October 1978 — the committee publicly acknowledged problems at the plant for the first time, the Post said.

The plant under construction near Bay City in Matagorda County originally was expected to cost about $1 billion and start operating in October 1980.

However, current projections indicate the project will cost about $5.5 billion and begin operating in mid-1987, officials have said.

Shortly after a July 13-14, 1978, committee meeting, attorney Bert Schwarz wrote a memorandum to the committee about dropping nine statements from the minutes, the Post reported.

Schwarz is with the Houston law firm, Baker & Botts, which acted as secretaries for the committee.

The statements Schwarz cited in his memorandum were made by officials of HL&P; Brown & Root Inc., which was then the project's designer and builder; and Management Analysis Co., a California-based consulting firm hired to help eliminate problems at the project.

"In line with the suggestion of the management committee, the enclosed draft (of the minutes) does not include the following specific statements as to scheduled slippage and cost increase made at these meetings," the memo said.

Among the omissions:

— The project was at the time 12 to 27 months behind schedule;

— The cost of the project beyond the 12-month delay would increase for about $100 million for every additional six months;

— Management Analysis predicted the total cost of the project would be $1.7 billion if fuel was loaded in June 1981, one year later than the date given to the public and shareholders.

Poston confirmed the omissions, saying he did not report them to San Antonio city officials because they were tentative, the Post reported.

"Just for someone to come up and say, 'based on what we see now, this is what it's going to be' — that's not an item that we would come back and report," Poston said.

Poston said that, while he didn't recall the specific circumstances surrounding the meeting, the committee members "all go through this together" when minutes are revised.

The first public acknowlegement of problems at the plant came during an October 1978 committee meeting, when the published minutes said a "preliminary estimate" indicated an 18-month delay at the project and $2 billion overall cost.

HL&P spokesman Graham Painter said HL&P's board of directors would not be aware of the deleted statements if they were not in the committee's minutes.

Former Austin Mayor Carol Keeton Rylander indicated in sworn testimony that she never knew about the statements at the meeting.

She said she did not know there were any serious problems at the plant until a year after the committee meeting.

FAA says pilot error factor in two out of three mishaps

DALLAS (AP) — A Federal Aviation Administration report says that pilot error is involved in two out of every three fatal accidents involving major airlines, the Dallas Morning News reported Sunday.

The report also says "the percentage of accidents associated with operator error has been steadily increasing over the past several years."

Federal investigators are at a loss to explain why such mistakes occur, the News said.

Before the 1960s, mechanical failure accounted for most airplane accidents, experts said.

The report also noted that "existing accident and incident data do not show why pilots make errors."

Pilot performance "may be one of the last frontiers in aviation safety," said Jim Burnett, chairman of the National Transportation Safety Board.

"We have been more successful in dealing with problems that have to do with hardware than we have in dealing with problems that have to do with humans," Burnett said.

The FAA has begun work on what its officials say is the agency's most comprehensive examination of human performance in aviation safety.

The plan, scheduled for funding in 1987, promises its research "will influence nearly every aspect of air transportation, including safety, reliability and efficiency in general as well as commercial aviation activities," according to an internal FAA report.

"The weakest link in our system that we're operating now is the human judgment factor," said Dallas pilot Manton Fain, who was a flight captain for a major airline until April, when he reached the mandatory cutoff age for that position. He continues to fly as a flight engineer.

One debate in industry circles is whether the pilot should continue to have the primary say in most aspects of operating a flight, the News reported. The safety board recommended during the mid-1970s that the FAA transfer some authority from pilots to air traffic controllers in areas such as landings, but the aviation agency rejected the proposal.

Gary Babcock, a United Airlines co-pilot and the chairman of the human performance committee of the Air Line Pilots Association, said most pilots welcome the new emphasis on human performance research and aviation safety.

"In the last 10 years, pilots have really begun to address the situation," said Babcock. "We now admit that pilots make mistakes, that we're human like everyone else."

The News examined 25 fatal crashes, mostly involving major U.S. airlines, for a recent 10-year period. Pilot error caused or was a contributing factor in more than 80 percent of the accidents, according to NTSB records.

Couple spending savings to build school for handicapped children

SHERMAN (AP) — Bill and Joyce Wesson raised four kids of their own. Then they adopted four children with Downs syndrome. Now they're spending their life savings to start a school for handicapped children.

The two decided to start their own school after their success with JoAnna, the fourth of their adopted children.

When the Wessons adopted JoAnna eight years ago, doctors told them she would never progress beyond the level of a 4-month-old infant.

Today, at age 11, JoAnna is dressing and bathing herself, fixing her own hair and reading and writing at the first-grade level.

Now, the Wessons want to create the same kind of loving atmosphere for other handicapped children. And they plan to call it JoAnna's School of Learning Differences.

"Everybody thought we were crazy, but these children don't have anybody else," Mrs. Wesson said.

Bill Wesson, a production planner for Texas Instruments, is spending all his spare time helping build the school and raise money to operate it.

"We're not by any means trying to replace public schools, but these kids just kind of get into a gray area," he said.

The couple spent part of their savings on 32 acres of land and will use the rest to run the school.

"We bought the land out of 25 years savings," Mrs. Wesson said.

They convinced the seller to let them buy it at about a third of the appraised price. And they have persuaded a local contractor to build the 1,500-square-foot school at about half the estimated cost.

"He (Wesson) told me the whole idea he had planned and it sounded pretty good to me," said contractor Richard Merchant, who has been working 12 hours a day along with three of his employees to build the school.

But the building is just the beginning. The Wessons must now find two or three teachers willing to work for only $500 a month and parents who can afford $200 a month for tuition.

"By the grace of God, something's going to have to happen," Mrs. Wesson said. "Have you ever seen any teachers working for $500 a month?"

The couple said they got the idea for a private school after JoAnna had trouble adjusting to public schools.

Mrs. Wesson, who has a state teaching certificate, has been tutoring handicapped children for several years. She says patience and prayer are her secret ingredients for success.

"Some people think that's hogwash, but I've seen it work," she said.

The Wessons say they hope to open their school in September.

Soviet, U.S. officials disagree over 'spy dust,' 'Star Wars,' tough talk

WASHINGTON (AP) — Soviet and U.S. officials disagree over whether superpower relations will be hurt by "spy dust," tough talk by President Reagan and U.S. plans to test an anti-satellite missile.

Robert Armacost, undersecretary of state for political affairs, noted Sunday that while the two nations have "serious...fundamental" problems, they are negotiating agricultural, trade and cultural agreements and are planning to resume arms control talks next month and hold a summit meeting in November.

Asked if he thought the summit was in jeopardy, he said: "No, I don't...We see no reason to think about any changes in plans for the summit."

But a sharply differing assessment of superpower relations came from a man who frequently speaks for the Kremlin, Dr. Georgi Arbatov, a member of the Soviet Communist Party central committee and director of the Institute on the U.S.A. and Canada.

"I think Soviet-American relations are in jeopardy," Arbatov said Sunday as both officials appeared on NBC-TV's "Meet the Press."

They were interviewed in the wake of a series of Reagan administration criticisms of Moscow and the president's strong defense last week of his "Star Wars" strategic defense initiative.

Arbatov was especially critical of a U.S. decision to test an anti-satellite missile that will be launched from a jet fighter. U.S. officials say the Soviets already have their own anti-satellite system.

Arbatov said the planned U.S. test "is a new, very dangerous step in the arms race in that it endangers the arms control process because it is a part of the Star Wars concept."

Asked whether the test could hurt the planned resumption next month of U.S.-Soviet arms control negotiations in Geneva, Arbatov replied:

"If the U.S. goes on with further testing, then we can very well say, for the observable future, goodbye to the whole negotiation procedures. You never know which straw will break the spine of a camel."

The comments came in the wake of a series of U.S. statements and allegations of Soviet misconduct that have raised concerns about the Geneva talks and the scheduled November meeting between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

In addition to Reagan's speech and the test announcement, Robert McFarlane, the White House national security adviser, issued a pessimistic assessment about improvements in superpower relations.

Arbatov said he thought the U.S. actions were a response to Moscow's call earlier this summer — which was rejected by the Reagan administration — for this country to join in a moratorium on nuclear tests.

"This (call) ignited all the furies in Washington," he said. "I think it's OK for them to have a bellicose Russia, and they get furious if they see a peaceful Russia...It destroys somehow the image of an evil empire, which is the foundation for the whole arms race and for the whole policy of the United States at this moment."

Recent U.S.-Soviet summits

June 23-25, 1967—President Lyndon Johnson, Premier Alexei Kosygin meet in Glassboro, N.J., to discuss Middle East, Vietnam War and arms limitations; they resolve no differences, but agree to maintain closer communications

May 22-30, 1972—President Richard Nixon meets Kosygin and General Secretary Leonid Brezhnev in Moscow; they sign prenegotiated Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty I, freezing number of nuclear ballistic missile launchers, and agreements on trade, environment and prevention of hostile incidents

June 18-25, 1973—Brezhnev meets Nixon in Washington; they pledge to seek end to nuclear arms race and to avoid international confrontations

June 27-July 3, 1974—Nixon meets in Moscow with Brezhnev to sign limited interim pacts on nuclear arms, including agreement not to hold underground nuclear weapons tests of more than 150 kilotons

Nov. 23-24, 1974—In Vladivostok, President Gerald Ford and Brezhnev sign interim agreement for numerical ceiling on strategic weapons

July 30-Aug. 2, 1975—Ford and Brezhnev are among leaders of 35 nations meeting in Helsinki on European security; Brezhnev and Ford discuss strategic arms issues and report "encouraging progress"

June 16-18, 1979—President Jimmy Carter and Brezhnev meet in Vienna and sign SALT II agreement limiting number of strategic missiles and bombers; they also generally agree to hold regular summits

Peace Institute's supporters claim Reagan slow in appointing board

By DEBORAH MESCE

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supporters of a U.S. Institute of Peace are complaining that the multimillion dollar educational agency still isn't in operation, more than a year after being approved by Congress.

President Reagan signed a law last October requiring him to nominate a 15-member board of directors by April 20 this year. On Aug. 1, Reagan announced the first seven nominations, the only ones so far.

"It's a disgrace that we don't have the appointments," said Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Kan., one of the sponsors of the legislation. "I don't want to get into a heavy lawsuit with them (the White House), but we may have no option if we don't get the appointments."

The nominees must be confirmed by the Senate.

"I think what you've got here is something they (the Reagan administration) never wanted," Glickman said, referring to White House opposition to the institute, which received a $4 million congressional authorization. "They are probably hoping it will go away."

White House spokesman Dale Petroskey said all of the nominees were selected by the April 20 deadline but that the security clearance process has delayed submittal to the Senate.

"That's not in our hands," he said, denying that the White House was stalling.

The U.S. Institute for Peace was established by Congress as an independent institution to provide education and research on the causes of war and methods of maintaining peace.

The law, signed by Reagan, requires that 11 of the directors come from the private sector. It stipulates that the remaining four be officials of the State and Defense departments, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and the National Defense University.

"There's no question about the fact they are delaying," said Robert J. Conlan, executive director of the National Peace Institute Foundation.

"I don't think this issue is the A-number-one issue on the White House burner at any given time," he said.

But Conlan said it appears the institute is gaining in importance. He said he learned earlier this year the State Department was talking about putting Ronald I. Spiers, undersecretary for management, on the board as the director representing the State Department. But Max Kampelman, chief U.S. negotiator in arms control talks in Geneva, was finally selected.

"At first it seemed they were trying to sweep it under the rug," he said, describing Spiers as a career diplomat and Kampelman as clearly the president's representative. "Now they are getting to see the potential of (the institute) and not see it as a problem."

The other administration officials selected for the board included Kenneth A. Adelman, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, and Richard N. Perle, assistant secretary of defense for international security policy.

The four private-sector nominations were Sidney Lovett, senior minister of the First Church of Christ Congregational in West Hartford, Conn.; Richard John Neuhaus, director of the Rockford Institute Center on Religion and Society in New York City; W. Bruce Weinrod, director of Foreign Policy and Defense Studies for the Heritage Foundation in Washington; and John Norton Moore, director of the Center for Oceans Law and Policy and a professor of law at the University of Virginia.

Conlan said he was encouraged by Reagan's nominees so far, but "until you see all the players, you really can't judge."

'Night Stalker' shoots man, attacks woman

MISSION VIEJO, Calif. (AP) — Residents installed locks on their doors and talked about moving after a couple became what police believe were the 34th and 35th victims of a serial killer called the "Night Stalker" who is blamed for 14 deaths.

The curly-haired killer with stained and gapped teeth extended his trail of terror to Orange County, south of Los Angeles, on Sunday, shooting a man in the head as he slept and sexually attacking a woman, authorities said.

The shooting victim was in critical condition Sunday, a hospital official said.

"We do believe it is the work of the Night Stalker," said Orange County sheriff's Lt. Richard Olson.

The news sent a chill through other residents of the neat, middle-class neighborhood, about 55 miles southeast of Los Angeles.

"People...are pretty upset," said Steve Janovick, who was installing deadbolt locks on the doors of his home, two houses away. "I don't believe in guns. It's just too dangerous."

But neighbor Elsa Sorel, 80, said she had set a series of traps in her home, which is fortified with steel bars over windows.

"If he comes back, I'll probably kill him," she said.

The killer has been blamed for 14 slayings during 35 attacks over a 600-mile range from Mission Viejo to San Francisco, most of them in or near Los Angeles, since Feb. 8.

In the latest attack, the woman called police at 2:40 a.m. to say her boyfriend had been shot in the head and that she was sexually attacked by a man in their home, Olson said.

The man, William Carns, 29, was in extremely critical condition after surgery at Mission Community Hospital, according to a nursing supervisor who asked not to be identified. He was not expected to live, Olson said.

The woman, also 29, was treated at Saddleback Hospital and released in good condition early Sunday, said nursing supervisor Janet Pitione.

French government, agents cleared in ship bombing

WORLD

PARIS (AP) — A government-appointed investigator concluded today that neither the French government nor ranking secret service officials were responsible for the bombing of the Greenpeace boat Rainbow Warrior in a New Zealand port.

Investigator Bernard Tricot's report did identify as French secret service agents six people implicated by New Zealand police in the sinking of the environmental group's vessel. However, he said he believed they were innocent, as well.

One of the vessel's crew members was killed by the blast in Auckland harbor July 10. Two of six agents identified by Tricot today have been charged in New Zealand with murder, arson, and conspiracy in the case.

Three others presented themselves today at police headquarters in Paris and were released, officials said. The three had been among four people aboard the yacht Ouvea, who New Zealand police had been searching seeking in connection with the attack.

Tricot said the reasons to suppose the three were responsible for the attack "are not negligible." But "other considerations plead for their innocence."

"Everything I have heard and seen leaves me with the certitude that, at the government level, no decision was taken aimed at damaging the Rainbow Warrior," Tricot said.

"There is no reason to think (and there is strong reason to believe the contrary) that the DGSE gave its agents in New Zealand instructions other than those aimed at implementing the government directives," the report said.

The DGSE is the General Directorate for Internal Security, the French secret service.

Earlier today, official sources in New Zealand said today that the government had evidence suggesting official French involvement in the bombing, which they said had been passed on to the French government.

French newspapers have reported extensively on possible involvement in the bombing by France, but New Zealand's official reaction to the reports had been cautious.

Prime Minister David Lange of New Zealand, speaking today, did not comment directly on the report, but said there was evidence that would have a direct bearing on the credibility the Tricot report, "depending on which way (the report) went."

Without the evidence, the Tricot report would have the "potential to backfire" on the French government, Lange said.

Tricot's 29-page report was ordered by Socialist President Francois Mitterrand on Aug. 8 following allegations in the French press linking the sinking with the French secret service.

Mitterrand asked that the inquiry "establish the truth, specify the responsibilities and (do) that without limitations of any sort."

Ten days ago, Prime Minister Laurent Fabius appointed Tricot, a Gaullist, to conduct the inquiry.

The Rainbow Warrior was preparing to sail to a French nuclear test site in the South Pacific when it was sunk by two limpet mines, killing photographer Fernando Pereira, 36.

Within three days of the sinking, New Zealand police arrested a French-speaking couple carrying Swiss passports. New Zealand police have since identified the woman as French army Capt. Dominique Prieur, and Tricot's report concurred with that identification.

Tricot identified a man arrested with her who faces similar charges as Commander Maffart. The two have not entered pleas on the charges, and are being held in an Ackland jail until deposition hearings begin Nov. 4.

The three Ouvea crewmembers who turned themselves in today were identified by Trico as Roland Verge, with the DGSE for 11 years; Bartolo, four years with the DGSE; Andries, six years with the DGSE.

He provided no further identification of the latter two. All three worked with the service's frogman school in Corsica, he said.

The sixth agent was identified only as Dubast, who was in Noumea, New Caledonia, in June to assure that the Ouvea and its crew were not being watched.

"Although it is impossible...to speak with certitude on the reality of the actions linked to Commander Maffart and Captain Prieur, I believe, given my current information, in their innocence," Tricot wrote.

"That is also what I believe, given my current information," of the others, he said.

The report described their mission as following navigation in the South Pacific zone, advising the secret service of Greenpeace flotilla movements, and infiltrate a boat in upcoming Greenpeace protests.

Bus with Americans aboard hits truck

Dole

PEKING (AP) — A minibus in a motorcade of visiting U.S. senators slammed into a truck today, injuring at least eight people. None of the Americans, including Sen. Robert Dole and his wife, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole, was hurt.

The accident, about 14 miles from the Diaoyutai state guesthouse where the Dole delegation of seven U.S. senators was staying, happened towards the rear of the motorcade, which was heading to the Great Wall.

A Chinese truck, after pulling out from a curb on the opposite side of the road, made a U-turn into the path of the oncoming minibus.

The minibus, moving at about 60 mph, slammed into the side of the truck hurling the minibus' driver through the windshield and destroying both vehicles.

Chinese and several Americans traveling at the back of the motorcade helped pull bleeding victims from the wreckage.

Dole, R-Kan., said later he was not aware of the accident.

Officials in Dole's party said the six other senators in the group were Daniel Moynihan, D-N.Y.; Pete Domenici, R-N.M.; Daniel Evans, R-Wash.; Pete Wilson, R-Calif.; James McClure, R-Idaho; and William Cohen, R-Maine.

Spy scandal reaches president's office

BONN, West Germany (AP) — Authorities said today that the first suspect arrested in connection with West Germany's spreading spy scandal was a secretary who worked in the president's office.

Alexander Prechtel, a spokesman for Chief Federal Prosecutor Kurt Rebmann, identified the secretary who was arrested late Saturday as Margarete Hoeke. He said she worked for an aide to President Richard von Weizsaecker.

The Bonn government already was badly shaken by the news that Hans Joachim Tiedge, one of West Germany's top spy fighters, defected to East Germany. Intelligence officials planned to meet today to discuss rebuilding their operations, government sources said.

Chancellor Helmut Kohl was to meet with Interior Minister Friedrich Zimmermann to assess the political damage wrought by the scandal.

The arrest of the secretary marked the first time that the scandal has touched Bonn's executive branch.

Officials expect to make three other espionage-related arrests in the next few days, according to the Cologne-based Express newspaper.

The newspaper said counter-intelligence agents are monitoring the movements of three other Bonn secretaries round-the-clock. Officials declined to comment on the report.

The secretary was the fifth government employee sought in connection with the spy case. There have been no arrests in the other cases. Prosecutors were already investigating the counter-espionage agent, two government employees and a Bonn lobbyist.

The government employees and the lobbyist are missing and officials suspect they may have also fled to East Germany, according to Interior Ministry sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Government officials said Sunday that Interior Ministry security experts met over the weekend to discuss a reorganization of Bonn's intelligence agencies.

Zimmermann was angered by media reports that Hans Joachim Tiedge, the counter-espionage official who defected, was a debt-ridden problem drinker who should never have held a top espionage job, a Bonn chancellory official said.

The interior minister never was told that ranking intelligence directors knew Tiedge had personal problems, the official said.

"Zimmermann is furious," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity. "He feels he was not kept adequately informed."

On Friday, East Germany's ADN news agency reported that Tiedge had fled to East Berlin and asked for political asylum.

West German television, calling the spy scandal "the worst in the history of the republic," said Bonn officials first heard of Tiedge's defection from the ADN report.

Several West German media reports said intelligence officials were hastily arranging to bring home West German undercover agents operating in East Germany. The reports said officials were worried that Tiedge would expose the agents.

In Washington, State Department spokeswoman Anita Stockman said: "There will be a damage assessment among our NATO allies."

Government officials played down the political damage done by the scandal.

"This is certainly a difficult case," Zimmermann said on a weekly television news program. "But this will not harm the federal government itself."

Government sources who spoke on condition of anonymity said some Interior Ministry officials were demanding the resignation of Heribert Hellenbroich, the director of the West German intelligence service.

Until Aug. 1, Hellenroich headed the Cologne-based Constitutional Protection Office, which is responsible for counter-espionage work. Tiedge served as a department chief and worked for 19 years in the office.

Tutu's son arrested for allegedly swearing at white police officer

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police today detained the eldest son of black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu for allegedly swearing at a white policeman, and a press report said the younger Tutu was to be held for 14 days.

The witnesses said Tutu's son, Trevor, was at the Protea Magistrate's Court to observe hearings for youngsters arrested last week for allegedly boycotting schools in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg. Protea is part of Soweto.

Before the hearings began, Trevor Tutu made a remark about the suspects' youth and police took him to the prosecutor's office, where he was warned about speaking out in court, according to witnesses who spoke on condition they not be identified.

They said that as white and black police officers escorted Tutu back to the courtroom, he accused a white officer of hypocrisy and used an obscenity.

The South African Press Association said Tutu was put in Diepkloof Prison in Soweto and would be being detained for two weeks.

It was not immediately clear if any charges were filed against Tutu, whom associated said was age 29.

Neither the bishop, winner of the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize for his anti-apartheid activities, nor his wife, Leah, were at their offices or home to comment on the incident. Police in Soweto said they had no immediate comment.

Under emergency powers invoked July 21, detainees are denied access to their families or lawyers. Police say 2,197 people have been held under the state of emergency and 1,094 are still in cells.

Security police in Durban today detained Paddy Kearney, the white director of a church-supported service organization called Diakonia, said Archbishop Denis Hurley, president of the Southern African Catholic Bishops Conference.

Hurley, who is white, said in a telephone interview that he saw the police on entering Kearney's office, but was told to leave. He said the police seized Kearney's files and searched his apartment.

Diakonia is supported by different faiths and helps victims of anti-apartheid rioting.

Police said South Africa was "relatively calm" overnight. However, they reported that a police officer fired his handgun at a crowd of blacks throwing stones, "seriously wounding a black woman." The incident took place near Burgersdorp in northern Cape province.

Government buildings were gutted by deliberately set fires near Port Elizabeth, 610 miles south of Johannesburg, police said.

Satellite threat

President Reagan is correct to proceed with the next scheduled test of the new anti-satellite (ASAT) missile being developed by the United States, as he announced he will do after a required 15-day waiting period.

The development of this new weapon should go forward without interruption, but it is important that negotiations covering such weapons should be conducted simultaneously, with serious and sincere intent to reach agreement with the Soviet Union if possible.

Already the Soviets have an operational anti-satellite system, a crude affair compared with the U.S. prototype and a great deal less capable. But they have it and presumably are prepared to use it, in the proper circumstances.

It's hard to imagine what those circumstances might be. Any attempt to "blind" certain of U.S. satellites would be taken as a step directly into the abyss of total war between the superpowers. These are the surveillance satellites, euphemistically described in our strategic arms limitation treaties as "national technical means of verification." They are essential to detect violations of arms control treaties and to give early warning of the launching of rockets in a nuclear first strike. An attack upon them would be taken as a step toward such a strike. The appropriate response, without any ability to take similar action against the opponents' strategic surveillance satellites, might be to launch a first strike of our own.

But there are satellites for other purposes, such as communication, navigation, weather observation and the surveillance of the deployment of tactical forces, which might be shot down in a non-nuclear, conventional war without provoking Armageddon. If you believe a non-nuclear war between the Soviet Union and ourselves is possible, it would be essential to have the same or superior capability to shoot down their satellites of these types as they have to shoot down ours.

These speculations have an Alice-in-Wonderland quality, but so does much of the serious military thinking about the unthinkable in this nuclear age. We cannot shrink from the realities of the times. We must explore the regions of the possible, however original and bizarre they may seem.

Without question then, we must develop and test this weapon. And we can rejoice at its sophistication, which makes it a jewel of advanced technology, swift, sure and deadly compared with the blunderbuss of the Soviet anti-satellite weapon. No wonder the Kremlin is concerned.

But it would be better if we could reach some kind of agreement with the Russians to limit or ban the testing or deployment of anti-satellite weapons. The world would be a safer place without the technology for the superpowers to blind each other in space, because a blinded superpower would be like the blinded cyclops in his cave, roaring in anger and groping wildly in the dark.

Another View:

A collision course

The Reagan administration's policy of "constructive engagement" toward South Africa's white supremacist racial policies remains the most rational approach to helping that nation draw back from the brink of revolution. But negotiation is the key to any solution, and events in recent days have offered the president little encouragement from the government or moderate black leaders.

In a speech that was widely expected to feature liberalizing initiatives, President Pieter W. Botha vaguely proposed negotiating South Africa's political future with the country's disenfranchised black majority. The speech offered no specifics such as a timetable or the identity of the black leaders with whom the government would negotiate.

The Reagan administration was clearly disappointed that, while the Botha offer to negotiate was welcome, it did not detail reforms of apartheid, the government policy of racial segregation, that would lead to an end to the wave of violence that has cost 615 lives in the past year. "The (South African) government has labored and produced a cloud," said National Security Adviser Robert McFarlane.

Black moderates were understandably angry and disappointed that President Botha was not more forthcoming in responding to black appeals for human rights. But Bishop Desmond Tutu's decision to boycott a meeting between South Africa's president and interracial religious leaders to discuss the country's racial future only served to harden attitudes on both sides. Unless the Nobel Peace Prize-winning bishop has given up all hope of avoiding a South African bloodbath, he should continue the search for a peaceful settlement.

Certainly, President Reagan faces a very real moral imperative in seeking an end to South Africa's repugnant apartheid system. But he is also well aware of what is likely to succeed and what won't, and believes that economic sanctions as proposed by both houses of Congress will have little impact on a white-ruled nation rich in natural resources and self-sufficiency. Indeed, it is these rich natural resources, such as minerals, along with South Africa's strategic geopolitical position as a strong anti-communist nation that accentuates the dilemma in which the administration finds itself.

If President Reagan is forced to veto sanctions against South Africa, and Congress overrides the veto, he will be effectively disarmed in efforts to pursue a peaceful settlement. He must be permitted to work through diplomatic channels to persuade the South African government to let blacks, who outnumber whites 5 to 1, have equal rights. This might well be through a federation of non-racial states with universal suffrage which would let the whites continue to govern their own lives.

But before such a historic move could be made, both the government and black leaders must sit down in good faith talks and explore alternatives. And Congress should leave the Reagan administration free to act as honest brokers in efforts to draw South Africa away from what Mr. McFarlane rightly calls the abyss of massive violence.

Senators pushing boondoggle

WASHINGTON — For years we've been pointing out a surefire way to bring the federal budget deficit down: Stop costly pork-barrel projects before they get started.

Jack Anderson

That's exactly what the Interior Department tried to do last year to the Army Corps of Engineers' grandiose plan to build a pair of huge jetties at the Cape Hatteras National Seashore, a fragile strip of barrier islands running for 70 miles along the North Carolina coast.

The jetties were intended to keep sand from filling in Oregon Inlet, a channel used by fishermen going to and from the Atlantic Ocean.

Interior refused to grant the Corps of Engineers a land-use permit to build the jetties. But now North Carolina's two Republican senators, Jesse Helms and John East, have sponsored legislation that would override the department's veto.

Experts familiar with the plan predict that the jetties would turn out to be an environmental disaster. They also argue that even if the project did what the Engineers claim it will — which is debatable — the cost (more than $100 million) would far outweigh the benefits. And they accuse the Engineers of cooking the figures anyway.

Fifteen specific complaints were expressed in a letter to the Engineers by a top White House budget officer. Our associates Donald Goldberg and Corky Johnson obtained a copy of the letter. Here are the highlights:

— "Our review of the economic analysis prepared by the Corps of Engineers disclosed the use of inappropriate study methodologies, questionable assumptions and lack of documentation," the budget official stated. "The supporting data shows that the project costs will substantially exceed its benefits if more generally accepted procedures and reasonable assumptions are applied."

— The Engineers hyped the projected benefits by using the highest possible estimated cost of dredging, the alternative method of keeping Oregon Inlet clear for fishing boats, the official charged. "Using a more realistic assumption, such as the historical average dredging costs, would show the project to be uneconomic," the letter stated.

— The White House official was also skeptical of the Engineers' cavalier brushoff of environmental problems the jetties could cause. "We are concerned about the divergent opinions of the Corps and ... the team of coastal experts retained by the National Park Service, as to the environmental impacts of the project," the letter stated. "Should the project not work as modeled by the Corps, there could be significant adverse environmental impacts which could add substantially to the total cost of the already expensive project."

— In a parting shot, the budget official observed dryly: "We are concerned that submission of such a defective report may indicate that the internal review processes of your office and of the Corps are ineffective."

The Engineers, secure in their historical role as provider of pork for members of Congress, responded to the White House letter by haughtily dismissing the criticisms as "totally unsupportable."

But the Engineers may have a fight on their hands this time. In an Aug. 15 letter, William P. Horn, assistant Interior secretary for fish, wildlife and parks, reiterated the department's opposition to the Oregon Inlet jetties.

"Our continuing concerns about this proposed project have not been altered," Horn wrote. "(It) would result in permanent adverse impacts to National Park and National Wildlife Refuge lands under the jurisdiction of this department."

WHO'S NEWS: Twenty-five years ago, young Dorothy Godlewski surprised her father in Detroit with a long-distance birthday call from Moscow, where she was working as a secretary in the American Embassy. This past weekend, she was the one who was surprised — with a 50th birthday party thrown by several hundred friends here in Washington, where she's office manager of the President's Office of Consumer Affairs. Decorations included posters and buttons of Ms. Godlewski's face superimposed on the Statute of Liberty, in accordance with the party theme, "Save the Lady."

MINI-EDITORIAL: In its obsession with the seemingly indestructible drug traffic, Congress sometimes behaves as irrationally as the junkies it's trying to save. The House, for instance, recently slipped a provision into the Defense authorization bill that would allow Navy personnel to arrest dope smugglers overseas. Not only would this require extensive training in law enforcement for the sailors selected, but it would mean they'd have to be on call for long periods for any resulting court cases, instead of on duty with the fleet. All things considered, it would be wiser to leave the war on drug smugglers to civilian landlubbers.

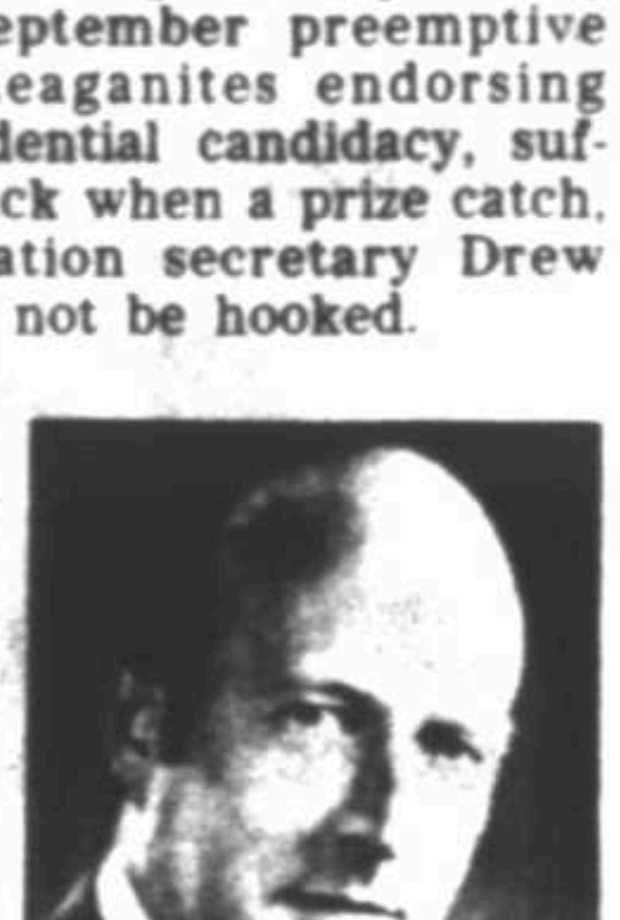
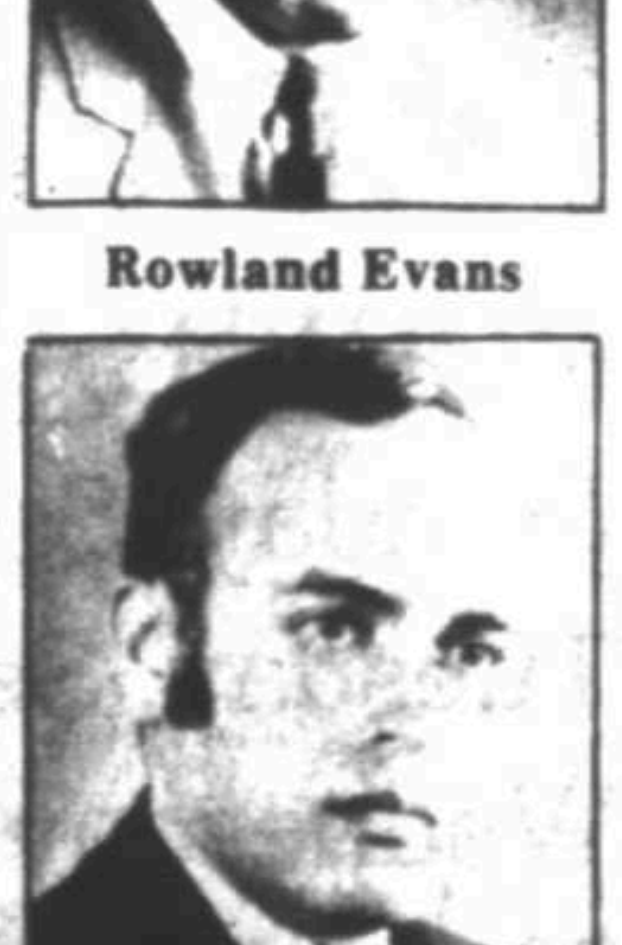
Lewis nixes Bush camp's plan

WASHINGTON — Political operatives of Vice President George Bush, planning a September preemptive strike by Reaganites endorsing Bush's presidential candidacy, suffered a setback when a prize catch, ex-transportation secretary Drew Lewis, could not be hooked.



Rowland Evans



Robert Novak

Many other Reaganites will be on the policy group to be unveiled for Bush's political action committee. But Bush agents had been particularly active in pursuing Lewis, even offering him the chairmanship. Lewis, a manager of Ronald Reagan's 1980 campaign after opposing him in 1976, is finishing a stint running Warner-Amex and ready to plunge back into politics.

He may finally end up with the vice president, but wants to keep his 1988 powder dry for now. The Bush camp has worked hard for a list so impressive that it might scare other presidential hopefuls, such as Rep. Jack Kemp, out of running.

CASEY VS. KGB

The Reagan administration's revelation of potentially cancerous yellow powder used by the KGB to track Americans in Moscow helped blanket the U.S. decision to conduct an anti-satellite weapons test only because of Soviet delay in issuing a visa for a medical expert to go to Moscow and explain the frightening information to the U.S. Embassy.

Speculation in Washington has been that the U.S. cleverly delayed revealing the yellow powder incident. In fact, the moment CIA Director William Casey established what the Soviets were doing he hurried to the White House to seek immediate U.S. remedial action. He called a top-level White House meeting for Aug. 16 to review the medical evidence he had just received.

At his California ranch, President Reagan ordered nothing said until the U.S. Embassy could be fully briefed. But when a visa was sought for the medical expert, the Soviet Embassy here denied it for 48 hours, with no explanation. That delayed the announcement until Aug. 21, the day after the anti-satellite test was announced.

BUSTING BUCHANAN

White House Communications Director Pat Buchanan's enemies inside the Reagan administration have used the Rev. Jerry Falwell's controversial trip to South Africa to portray Buchanan as once again a loose cannon who is hurting President Reagan.

A "senior official" has been quoted as saying Buchanan encouraged Falwell to speak out in behalf of the South African regime in words that were repudiated by the State Department. But in fact, Buchanan has not talked to the head of the Moral Majority for over two months.

He has, however, emerged as the strongest voice within the White House for vetoing sanctions. His memo to the president calls for him to cull the best from the sanctions bill, issue it as an executive order and then veto the bill.

HAMMERING NANCY

Pro-Soviet oilman Armand Hammer has opportuned Nancy Reagan to persuade her husband that if he plays his cards right at the U.S.-Soviet summit Nov. 19, he will win a Nobel Peace Prize. But the first lady is suspicious.

Hammer helped Nancy Reagan several years ago by raising big bucks to finance the Joffrey Ballet, which once included Ron Reagan Jr. as a dancer. He now tells her that if Reagan were willing to bargain his Strategic Defense Initiative away for Soviet missile reductions, the Nobel would be virtually guaranteed.

But even though Mrs. Reagan wants nothing more than to see the president go down in history as a great peacemaker, she always has been suspicious of Hammer. She listens politely, then informs national security aide Robert McFarlane and Secretary of State George Shultz exactly what the oilman-arts patron said. She does not allow Hammer to use her to lobby her husband.

REAGAN RIDES

The best sign that President Reagan is on the mend after cancer surgery is his intention, following Thursday night's Republican dinner in Los Angeles, to start riding again at his Santa Barbara ranch where he will be staying until Labor Day.

Horseback riding would put him far ahead of schedule for a normal convalescent his age. But the president has been particularly active since emerging from the hospital, engaging in vigorous debates with top officials.

Aides have found him more ideological than in past months, preaching the doctrines of the Reagan Revolution. During Cabinet debate over proposed relief from imports for the shoe industry, he has pointedly recalled the role of the Smoot-Hawley Tariff Act as a cause of the Great Depression.

CHARLEY REESE

Acts of men will keep nation free

In an old western movie, Eli Wallach was taking a bath in a tub full of soap suds when an old enemy appeared with a drawn gun. The man began to tell Wallach how much he was going to enjoy killing him. Then the soap suds explode as Wallach, who had concealed his pistol under the suds, shoots his foe. Peering over the edge of the tub at the corpse, Wallach says in the tone of an exasperated school teacher, "When it's time to shoot, shoot — don't talk."

Charley Reese

There is much wisdom in this cinematic parable that explains why the Soviet Union has more often succeeded in advancing tyranny than the West has succeeded in defending democracy.

When it's time to shoot, the Soviets shoot; we talk. Perhaps the Mongol mind of the Soviets instinctively perceives a truth the Western mind has abandoned — life is action.

We hike off to the jungles, intending to talk the village chief into becoming a Jeffersonian democrat. The communist wanders in, shoots the chief in the head, and replaces him with a man who understands that if he does what he's told, he won't get shot.

Human beings live their lives as individuals in particular, concrete circumstances. That's the way the world works. Abstract theories exist only in the mind. When the Soviets perceived a problem of East Germans fleeing to the West in Berlin, they built a wall. That solved their problem. We in the West talked about how the wall was bad public relations for communism and how it violated a written agreement. Our talk did not help a single German to escape from tyranny nor did it even chip a brick. The wall was real. Our talk was only dreaming.

When the Soviets saw their power being threatened in Hungary, Czechoslovakia, and Poland, they took physical actions to suppress the revolts. We talked. The Soviets maintained their power. We provided unneeded examples of impotence.

The Soviets build missiles. We talk. In Nicaragua, the Soviets send arms. We talk. In the field of human rights, the Soviets put dissidents in prison, psychiatric hospitals or shoot them. We talk.

The whole history of post war Soviet-American relations can be seen as a series of their actions and our talks. Only in those instances where we acted, instead of talking, have we succeeded in holding back the advance of tyranny.

So, to answer the question, "Why do democracies perish?" it's because the leaders of the democracies have abandoned the real, physical world for the dream world of the intellectuals.

President Reagan talks about the blessings of liberty and democracy. Soviet leaders take physical actions to preserve and advance tyranny. In all of Reagan's presidency, he has succeeded in actually defeating tyranny only once. That was when he acted by sending the armed forces to Grenada to remove physically a Marxist regime.

The world because it is a physical place occupied by physical beings operates on physical principles. Force is a physical principle and that's why force rules the world. The guy who said the pen is mightier than the sword was a whole lot more stupid than the one who said sticks and stones may break my bones but words will never hurt me.

Do you wish to know what the future holds? I'll tell you. The future will be controlled by those who act, not by those who talk. Unless we replace leaders who like to talk with leaders who can act, the Soviet Union will destroy the United States of America.

Neither freedom nor tyranny is an abstract idea. You are free if no one rules your life by physically coercing you to do what they want you to do. You are a slave when you cannot act as your own mind and conscience dictate except at the peril of your life.

Do you wish to know why America succeeded in the beginning and has been failing since 1960? The answer is because we swapped leaders who were primarily men of action for leaders who were primarily men of words.

I am not posing a choice between intellectuals and dumb men of action. I am posing a choice between men who can think and act and men who can only think and talk.

George Washington and Tom Jefferson, to cite just two examples, were men of superior intellect but they knew, like the character in the movie, that when it's time to shoot, you shoot — don't talk.

Charley Reese is a syndicated columnist for Sun Belt Syndicate.

Government's 'natural' family planning under attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — The government's special policy designed to help "natural" family planning programs work overseas is under attack by members of Congress and population groups who say it is unfair to women in the Third World.

At issue is the Agency for International Development's month-old policy that allows groups promoting "natural" family planning — the rhythm method — to refrain from telling women overseas about other birth control options, such as pills, condoms, interuterine devices and spermacides.

On the other hand, groups providing birth control devices are required to inform women about "natural" family planning, which involves abstaining from sexual intercourse usually for about two weeks a month during the woman's fertile period.

"It's a mistake," said Rep. John Porter, R-Ill., of AID's exemption for "natural" family planning facilities. "The principle that an individual would be offered the full choice of family planning methods has been part of the policy for a long time."

The policy switch could seriously undermine America's commitment to family planning overseas, Porter said, adding it would be challenged in Congress.

AID Administration M. Peter McPherson said the policy change was made to help "natural" family planning groups — opposed to birth control devices for reasons of religion or conscience — qualify for government money.

Without the exemption, he said, those groups believed they could not receive government funds because they would be obligated to counsel women about the range of available birth control techniques.

AID officials defended the new policy on the grounds it would increase birth control, particularly in countries where women oppose using various devices for religious reasons.

Any birth control, including the "natural" method, is better that no birth control, they said.

"You're treating one group differently from another and I won't argue that point," said Nyle Brady, head of AID's Science and Technology office. But he argued AID's policy of helping countries develop mechanisms "by which parents can have the children they want" now is enhanced.

The Planned Parenthood Federation of America, a group operating birth control clinics nationwide, says studies show the rhythm method is the least effective method of birth control.

Among American women who practice periodic abstinence, 24 percent will get pregnant within a year, the federation said. That compares with U.S. pill users whose chances of pregnancy are 2 percent, and condom-users, 10 percent.

Werner Fornos, president of The Population Institute, called "natural" family planning a "cruel hoax," and said it is difficult to regulate because it requires compliance from both partners.

AIDS victim begins seventh grade with telephone hookup to school

KOKOMO, Ind. (AP) — Ryan White had been looking forward to his first day as a seventh-grader at Western Middle School in suburban Russiaville.

But the 13-year-old will have to listen to his classroom lessons by telephone at home today, because he has AIDS.

After barring Ryan from school, Western School Corp. Superintendent James O. Smith arranged for a telephone hookup to the White's Kokomo home, to be paid for by the school, for the boy to monitor classes. Attempts to find a tutor for him failed.

School officials refused to allow Ryan to enroll in school because they feared other pupils could catch the deadly disease. Ryan, a hemophiliac who contracted acquired immune deficiency syndrome through a blood transfusion, has been out of school since December.

In each class, a teacher will assign a student to dial Ryan's phone number, making it possible for him to hear classroom activities. By pushing a button on the speaker phone, Ryan will be able to ask his teachers questions.

Ryan's mother, Jeanne White, said that although the phone system is "better than nothing," she was concerned about its effectiveness.

"I'm worried about visual aids. Anything they do on the blackboard he'll miss out on," she said.

Mrs. White said she would continue her fight against school officials and other parents who oppose Ryan schoolroom attendance. Although determined to have her son return to school, she said she would be reluctant to send Ryan into a classroom where he is not wanted.

"I hate for him to be out of school," she said, "But...I want him to go back with the people willing."

Asked if she thought such a willingness might soon exist among parents, teachers and officials at Western, Mrs. White said, "Right now? No. But hopefully the more we learn about (AIDS), the more these people will listen."

Studies have shown that AIDS is spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusion, but there is no evidence it is spread by casual contact. AIDS robs the body of its ability to fight infections. High-risk groups include male homosexuals, hemophiliacs and intravenous drug users.

Ryan's physicians and state health officials have said Ryan's condition did not threaten other students and have urged school officials to reconsider their decision.

Mrs. White and Ryan sued school officials earlier this month, charging that Ryan is being discriminated against as a handicapped person.

U.S. District Court Judge James E. Noland ruled Aug. 16 that the case must go through school channels before he can consider it. However, he retained jusidiction in the case.

Meanwhile, a 103-degree fever that had plagued Ryan for about two weeks had subsided Sunday night, Mrs. White said.

Justice Department releases death row data

WASHINGTON (AP) — Ten percent of the nation's death row inmates at the end of 1984 had a prior homicide conviction and one in 20 had been on parole at the time of the murder, government figures show.

The Justice Department, surveying the records of the 1,405 people who were under a sentence of death at year's end, also found that about two-thirds of them had previous felony convictions.

The total of 1,405 inmates, all but 17 of them men, represented the largest death row population since the government began tracking these statistics in the 1930s. A separate NAACP Legal Defense Fund survey, which included those sent to death rows through Aug. 1 of this year, showed that the ranks have swelled to 1,540.

During 1984, the Bureau of Justice Statistics said in Sunday's report entitled "Capital Punishment 1984," some 280 inmates entered death row.

Fifty-seven inmates had their death sentences overturned by courts, one had his sentence commuted and four committed suicide.

A total of 32 states held prisoners on death row at year's end, even though five other states had capital punishment statutes on the books.

The study found that all of those on death row had been convicted of murder, and that the majority — 57 percent — were white. Half of them were between the ages of 25 and 34, it said.

"In view of the continuing interest in the race data relating to capital punishment," the Bureau of Justice Statistics said in an accompanying statement, "the bureau compared for the first time the number of whites and blacks arrested for murder and non-negligent manslaughter from 1980 through 1984 with the numbers admitted to prison for these crimes, sentenced to death and executed."

It found that for each year, whites were "a somewhat higher proportion" of those sentenced to death than they were of all offenders arrested for murder and non-negligent manslaughter.

Altogether, it said, whites were an estimated 50 percent of those arrested for murder and non-negligent manslaughter during the five-year period and 58 percent of those sentenced to death. The study found that blacks were an estimated 49 percent of arrests and 41 percent of those sentenced to death.

The bureau said 21 people were executed in 1984, compared to only 11 executions across the country from 1975 through 1983.

Of the 21 executions carried out last year, eight were in Florida, five in Louisiana, three in Texas, two in Georgia, two in North Carolina and one in Virginia.

Colleges cater to students during orientation

Associated Press

For Harvard's 1,600 freshmen this fall, the fast track to success begins with a boat ride in Boston Harbor, pretending to be immigrants.

At the University of Kansas in Lawrence, no new student's education is considered complete without a crash course in "waving the wheat," a hand gesture used en masse by Jayhawks fans at football games.

The University of Colorado in Boulder offers book discounts to its 3,500 freshmen to get them to mingle with faculty.

At those three schools and others around the country, freshman orientation programs are mixing fun and outdoor activity with seminars on subjects like drugs, alcohol, roommate problems and homesickness.

While freshman orientation is hardly a new college rite, those activities have recently taken on added urgency for the schools themselves, quite apart from the benefits students derive.

Colleges desperately want students to feel happy and well-adjusted because they want to keep those students as paying customers for four years.

"Statistics, nationally, show that it's the first four weeks of school that determine whether a student remains at the university — whether they become comfortable with the environment," said Lovely Ulmer, University of Kansas' coordinator of orientation.

NATION IN BRIEF

Shuttle launch rescheduled

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With time fast running out on NASA's plan to salvage a dead satellite, engineers worked today to ready the twice-delayed launch of space shuttle Discovery for another try on Tuesday.

However, forecasters said the weather outlook for Tuesday was marginal and for Wednesday uncertain because of developing tropical weather in the Caribbean. If Discovery cannot get off the launch pad by Wednesday, NASA said it would have to abandon the satellite rescue effort because the target no longer would be in proper position for a satellite rendezvous.

After Wednesday, Discovery would be launched on a shortened flight, with the astronauts conducting other mission assignments, including the deployment of three commercial communications satellites. Although the rescue of the disabled $85 million Syncom payload is the glamour part of the mission, the release of the three satellites for paying customers has a higher priority.

Liftoff for a third launch attempt was set for 7:02 a.m. EDT Tuesday.

The launching was postponed for the second straight day Sunday when a spacecraft computer failed 45 minutes before the scheduled liftoff. A thunderstorm wiped out the first launch attempt on Saturday.

Black college aid rises

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration gave itself high marks for helping black colleges in a Department of Education report released today.

While federal financial aid for higher education has declined overall under the Reagan administration, the report says aid from 27 federal agencies to 100 traditionally black colleges increased to $620 million in fiscal year 1984. For the previous year, federal aid amounted to $606 million.

Education Secretary William J. Bennett said in a statement that the report "demonstrates the continued commitment of federal agencies to help these institutions."

Overall, black colleges received 5.7 percent of reported federal obligations for higher education, compared to 5.4 percent in 1981.

The report said the 1984 allocations represented a $75 million increase in financial assistance to black colleges since 1981.

Drought may affect foliage

MONTPELIER, Vt. (AP) — Drought conditions in northern New England are expected to cause the foliage season to start about a week earlier than usual, but foresters are divided on how the dry roots will affect the colorful blazes that lure millions of visitors from around the country.

"The colors will be there; they will just be a little early," said Jack Sargent, chief of forest protection in New Hampshire.

"My 20-odd years of work in the field seems to tell me, though, that in a dry year you don't have the brilliant reds or oranges, but you never know."

Pockets of land across New England have been hard-hit this year by lack of rain. Officials say some areas are suffering their worst drought since the early part of the century.

Engine glitch delays flight

CLEVELAND (AP) — A congressman aboard a United Airlines Boeing 737 flight that was delayed for 44 minutes after a valve in an engine malfunctioned disputes the airline's account of what happened.

Rep. Louis Stokes, D-Ohio, said the plane was taking off Sunday when the flight was stopped. A United spokeswoman said the aircraft was only taxiing.

Sunny skies, warm weather in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Tuesday's expected warm temperatures will give Midland's younger residents the opportunity to do some last minute sun bathing before the school year begins as sunny skies and highs reaching in the 90s are forecast for the area, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

The outlook for tonight calls for fair skies with a low in the upper 60s becoming sunny with a high in the mid-90s Tuesday. Winds will be from the southeast at five to 10 mph tonight, increasing Tuesday to less than 15 mph.

Sunday's high of 97 was six degrees below the record set in 1936. This morning's low was 16 degrees above the 1966 record of 56.

STATE

Mostly fair skies prevailed across Texas today, but a few thunderstorms had developed in northwestern sections of the state and rain was expected along the coast.

Before dawn, scattered rains dotted the Red River Valley between Vernon and Wichita Falls.

Low clouds were noted between Stephenville and Wichita Falls. Otherwise, fair skies were the rule across Texas.

Winds were mostly light and variable across Texas. Southerly breezes at 10 to 15 mph were noted over the Panhandle and South Plains.

The forecast called for isolated thunderstorms along the coast. Otherwise, fair to partly cloudy skies were expected through Tuesday. Showers and thunderstorms were forecast for Tuesday along the lower coast.

NATION

Rain dotted the nation from New England to the far West today while temperatures were as much as 10 degrees below normal in sections of the Plains and Mississippi Valley.

Showers and thunderstorms were scattered from northern Georgia across central Alabama to the upper Texas Coast; and from Lake Erie across northern portions of Ohio and Indiana and the southern Appalachians.

Rain and patchy dense fog ranged from southern New England across southeast New York, New Jersey and eastern Pennsylvania.

In the West, thunderstorms were scattered across western Oklahoma, southern Arizona and the region from western North Dakota across southeast Montana.

Today's forecast called for rain and thundershowers from the lower Great Lakes through the Appalachians and the Atlantic Coast states.

Gooden now 20-20

Youngest 20-game winner

Associated Press

Dwight Gooden is now a near-perfect 20-20 for the New York Mets.

On Sunday, the 20-year-old Gooden became the youngest 20-game winner in major-league history as he and the Mets beat the San Diego Padres.

"Winning 20 games means a lot to me," said Gooden, now 20-3, "but a World Series would too, and I think we can do it."

Gooden has won 14 straight games — his last loss was May 25 — and struck out four to raise his major league-leading total to 212. His earned run average of 1.78 is also the best in baseball.

The victory kept the Mets one game behind St. Louis in the National League East. The Cardinals beat Atlanta 5-2.

In other NL games, Montreal beat Los Angeles 6-1, Philadelphia shelled San Francisco 14-5, Cincinnati tripped Chicago 5-3 and Pittsburgh swept a doubleheader from Houston 9-3 and 10-9.

In the American League, New York beat Seattle 8-5; Chicago halted Toronto 5-3; Texas beat Kansas City 7-3; California defeated Detroit 7-1; Oakland routed Baltimore 10-4; Cleveland swept a doubleheader from Milwaukee 6-2 and 2-0 and the Minnesota at Boston game was rained out.

At 20 years, 9 months, 9 days old, Gooden is a little shy of a month younger than Bob Feller was when he won his 20th game for Cleveland in 1939. Feller was 20 years, 10 months 5 days old. The youngest previous National Leaguer to win 20 games was Christy Mathewson at 21 years, 1 month, 9 days old in 1901.

Gooden gave up three runs, one unearned, on five hits in six innings before being taken out for a pinch hitter.

"You know," said Mets Manager Davey Johnson, "Dwight has taken leads into the ninth inning twice, once here and once in Montreal, that we didn't protect for him. So, it's only fair we help him out this time. ... He's only human."

Darryl Strawberry drove in four runs for the Mets. He his his 20th home run of the season, a two-run double and an RBI single.

Cardinals 5, Braves 2

Kurt Kepshire allowed five hits over 7 2-3 innings and Andy Van Slyke homered to help St. Louis win its fifth straight game.

The loss was the sixth straight for Atlanta, which has lost 12 of its last 13.

Kepshire, 10-7, got relief help from Jeff Lahti, who got his fourth save. Rick Mahler, 16-12, took the loss.

Expos 6, Dodgers 1

Hubie Brooks went 3-for-3 and drove home three runs while Bill Gullickson pitched a five-hitter as Montreal ended the eight-game winning streak of Los Angeles starter Bob Welch.

Gullickson, 12-9, took a three-hitter into the ninth before the Dodgers got two hits and a run on Greg Brock's sacrifice fly. Welch slipped to 9-2.

Phillies 14, Giants 5

Juan Samuel and Von Hayes hit consecutive home runs in the fourth inning, and Glenn Wilson and starting pitcher Kevin Gross also homered as Philadelphia pounded out 10 extra-base hits in drubbing San Francisco.

The Phillies scored four times in the fourth inning, erasing a 5-4 deficit. Samuel's two-run, inside-the-park shot knocked out starter Jim Gott, 4-10, and Hayes hit reliever Mark Davis' pitch for another homer.

Reds 5, Cubs 3

Nick Esasky homered and singled and drove in two runs and Bo Diaz doubled home the tie-breaking run in the sixth inning that led Cincinnati past visiting Chicago.

Switzer fears OU schedule

By OWEN CANFIELD

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — The Oklahoma Sooners may be rated number one now, but Coach Barry Switzer says he wouldn't be surprised to see his club fall down the list.

The reason is not his team. It's the schedule.

"With the late start we've got, you can be fairly assured we'll not have played a game and fall out of the top spots," Switzer says.

Oklahoma doesn't play until Sept. 28 at Minnesota due to a schedule change. The Sooners were originally supposed to open two weeks earlier against third-ranked Southern Methodist, but the game was moved to Dec. 7 for television.

History also says Switzer is right. Since the AP began its preseason poll in 1950, only six teams ranked No. 1 at the start have won the national championship. Three times that team has been Oklahoma, in 1956, 1974 and 1975.

"It just raises the expectations of your fans. It creates so much anticipation and they feel so disappointed when it doesn't happen," Switzer said of being ranked No. 1. "They ought to know that unbeaten seasons just don't happen much any more."

OKLAHOMA received 23 of 60 first-place votes and 1,090 of a possible 1,200 points in the preseason poll, chosen by sports writers and sportscasters. Second-rated Auburn received 13 first-place votes and 1,027 points in balloting results announced Saturday night.

The late start means Oklahoma will be able to forego two-a-day drills, something Switzer said will be a plus.

"The players are fresher and you get more out of the practices," he said. "Two-a-days are a tremendous strain on the athletes."

He said, however, that he's worried about the Sooners' early opponents.

"I'm concerned about two games: Minnesota and Kansas State," he said. "I've said those two teams will have more of an advantage on us than Texas. When we play Texas it'll be their third game and our third game.

"But when we play Minnesota it'll be our first game and their third. They're liable to be 2-0 when they play us. Kansas State will have played four games. They might be 3-1 or 4-0 by the time we play them."

OKLAHOMA is expected to be strong defensively, with eight starters back from a team that last season ranked first in the nation against the rush and was second in total defense. The major question marks are the defensive secondary and quarterback.

Dorsett makes debut

Cowboys face Bears tonight

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Tony Dorsett makes his 1985 debut for the unbeaten Dallas Cowboys Monday night in a National Football League preseason game with the Chicago Bears.

"I'm in excellent shape," says the Cowboys' running back who missed 20 days of training camp before his contract was renegotiated.

Dorsett, the sixth leading rusher in NFL history, ended up with a five-year pact that has deferred payments well into the next century. He also is paying off the $412,000 he owes the Internal Revenue Service.

At one point during his holdout, Dorsett called the Cowboys' "double-crossers," but meekly apologized when he returned to camp.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry fined him $20,000 and held him out of last week's game against San Diego. He also has worked Dorsett hard in practice, getting him into a goal line scrimmage early this week.

"The contact was good so I must be in shape," said Dorsett. "I can't wait to get back into the starting lineup. I don't plan to hold anything back. If you get out there and try to keep yourself from getting hurt, you'll get hurt."

Ron Springs, Dallas' starting tailback against San Diego, has been moved to second-string fullback.

"I was driving a Rolls Royce," Springs said of his demotion. "Now I'm back to driving the same old Chevy with blackwall tires."

Dallas quarterback Danny White, who suffered a torn cartilage in his left ribcage, will not play, turning the starting duties over to Gary Hogeboom.

Kickoff will be at 7 p.m. CDT in Texas Stadium to accomodate ABC-TV.

The Bears received a big lift this week when middle linebacker Mike Singletary ended his holdout and reported to training camp.

The game will pit Chicago Coach Mike Ditka against his former boss, Landry.

Tension marks girl's first practice

ANNANDALE, N.J. (AP) — Elizabeth Balsley, already a winner in the courtroom, has begun the biggest battle of her fledgling football career — trying to win acceptance from her male teammates.

"I think they're going to ignore me for a while. I think eventually they'll accept me," she said after her first workout with the Hunterdon North Lions.

The tension was evident Saturday when Balsley, a junior-to-be who will be 16 on Thursday, came to practice after a New Jersey court affirmed the right of girls to try out for all-male teams.

Jeff DeAngelis, a 16-year-old sophomore fullback, was the first — and one of the few — to try to break the ice with the ertswhile wide receiver.

"I'd like to welcome you to the team. You've got guts. That's all I can say," DeAngelis said.

He explained later that "we're a team. She may as well get used to that. I guess if you're a football team, you've got to stick together."

Last week, state Education Commissioner Saul Cooperman affirmed the decision of Administrative Law Judge Daniel P. McKeown, who blocked enforcement of the school board's unwritten no-girls policy until a hearing is held next month.

Another district policy is that anyone who signs up for the team makes it, regardless of size or ability.

"I'm here. I'm going to stay here." said the 5-foot-5, 127-pound Balsley. Whether she plays, however, is another matter.

"I don't think she should play at all. Because of her size, she's going to get hurt," said 16-year-old George Cook, a junior lineman.

"I don't think she'll make it into the game," said Rory Alpaugh, 16, a junior free safety.

Greg Garneau, 17, a senior linebacker, added: "I think she's trying to make waves."

"It's not the Hunterdon North Lions. It's the Beth Balsley Lions," complained one player.

Wimbledon champ Becker third seed in U.S.Open

By BOB GREENE

NEW YORK (AP) — Flush from his latest victory, West German teenager Boris Becker goes into the U.S. Open Tennis Championships full of confidence and seeking his second straight Grand Slam title.

"At the moment, I rank myself No. 3 behind (John) McEnroe and (Ivan) Lendl," Becker said Sunday after he defeated Sweden's Mats Wilander to capture the ATP Championship at Mason, Ohio.

Wilander, the reigning Australian Open and French Open champion, is seeded No. 3 in America's premier tennis event, which begins Tuesday at the National Tennis Center. Becker, the surprising men's singles champion at Wimbledon, is seeded eighth.

Top-seeded is McEnroe, who is seeking his second straight U.S. Open title and fifth overall. Both the left-handed McEnroe, who suffered a subpar Wimbledon, and the confident Becker are scheduled to play their opening-round matches Tuesday, McEnroe taking on Israel's Shlomo Glickstein and Becker meeting Peter Doohan of Australia.

If the seedings hold, McEnroe and Becker will have their first career meeting in the quarterfinals.

Chris Evert Lloyd, seeded No. 1 in the women's singles, and Martina Navratilova, going after her third straight title, are scheduled to begin their drive toward yet another championship battle on Wednesday.

Other seeds to see action on the first day in men's play will be Wilander, No. 6 Anders Jarryd of Sweden, No. 10 Joakim Nystrom of Sweden, No. 12 Johan Kriek and No. 13 Tim Mayotte. In women's play, the group includes No. 3 Hana Mandlikova of Czechoslovakia, No. 7 Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, No. 10 Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, No. 12 Wendy Turnbull of Australia and No. 15 Carling Bassett of Canada.

Also scheduled to take to the courts on Tuesday will be Andrea Jaeger, attempting a comeback after taking almost a year off to recover from injuries, veteran Ilie Nastase of Romania and Guillermo Vilas of Argentina, the last non-American to win a U.S. Open singles championship, that in 1977 when the tournament was played on clay at Forest Hills.

"If I learned anything from the (1984 U.S.) Open, it is that confidence is the key to this game," said Robert Green of Boston, who reached the fourth round before falling to McEnroe.

Confidence is the key to Becker's game right now.

TED BATTLES

Holdout by Cecile B. DeMille

Tony Dorsett returns to the Dallas Cowboys' lineup tonight, and isn't it strange how the holdout super stars manage to solve their differences with management just in the nick of time and after all the heavy drudgery of summer camp has been left behind?

Last year it was defensive tackle Randy White, the human Manster, who went fishing while teammates broiled in the mid-summer heat. This year the list of missing included Eric Dickerson, John Riggins, Dan Marino, Bernie Kosar and a cast too numerous to mention. Kosar? Talk about your world wise rookies.

Undoubtedly, all have what they feel are legitimate beefs with their particular Simon Legree, but they know, management knows, the fans know that it's just a matter of time before the love of the game will bring them back to the playing field. "Love of the game" also can be defined as "Ye olde Weekly Paycheck."

But Dorsett's case is special.

The former Heisman Trophy winner from Pitt has never been an ordinary running back, and he wasn't your ordinary holdout.

You'd have thought Cecile B. DeMille had scripted and ochestrated Tony's absence. Dorsett even got the IRS into the act. At times, it sounded as though Tony might be headed for an Al Capone rap. Confiscated were his homes and paychecks, starting last fall no less.

You couldn't really blame Dorsett for holding out. It sounded like he played last year for nothing, never mind whose fault it might have been.

With all his troubles, Dorsett seemed like the classic argument for or against an agent, depending on whether he had one.

But the IRS was only the prelude.

If that wasn't enough to make the fans uneasy and steal headlines from baseball's demi-strike, things really got nasty when the shouting started. Tony and Tex Schramm sounded like a couple of guys who could never settle their differences.

At the appropriate moment, Dorsett demanded "Pay me, or trade me." And then, lo and behold, magically with Thousand Oaks fast-becoming another memory, everybody was apologizing and signing contracts like Tony couldn't wait to get back in uniform.

It was a pretty handsome settlement, multi-year, for a running back who is getting long in tooth. But unlike some of your other running backs around the league, Coach Tom Landry has spared the former Panther the punishment taken by others, although Dorsett long has protested that he doesn't get the ball enough.

Who knows. Dorsett may last as long as Riggins, even longer, since he doesn't nap under the table at affairs of state.

As for the IRS, if they want him, they'll have to catch him on the football field, and that's not easy to do.

Reds player-manager Pete Rose did not play, leaving him 12 hits shy of breaking Ty Cobb's all-time mark of 4,191.

Tom Browning, 13-9, pitched six innings for the victory. He leads the major leagues in victories by a rookie this season.

Pirates 9-10, Astros 3-9

Rick Reuschel pitched a four-hitter and drove in three runs with a homer and a double in the first game, and Sammy Khalifa singled home Pittsburgh's winning run in the second game with one out in the ninth.

White Sox 5, Blue Jays 3

Floyd Bannister won his first game in more than two months and Harold Baines hit a three-run homer as Chicago broke a five-game losing streak by defeating Toronto.

Yankees 8, Mariners 5

Dan Pasqua drove in four runs with three hits, including a three-run homer, his fifth, and an RBI double, and Don Mattingly hit a two-run homer as New York pulled within three games of AL East-leading Toronto.

The Yankees have won 10 of their last 11 games. Ed Whitson, 8-7, got the victory and Brian Fisher earned his ninth save.

Rangers 7, Royals 3

Pete O'Brien drove home four runs, three with a bases-loaded triple, and Toby Harrah knocked in three runs to power Texas past host Kansas City.

A's 10, Orioles 4

Dave Kingman and Steve Henderson hit two-run homers in the fifth inning as host Oakland beat nemesis Mike Flanagan.

Flanagan entered the game with a 15-4 record, including a 10-0 mark at Oakland Coliseum.

Rookie Tim Birtsas, 10-4, pitched a five-hitter. He gave up two homers to Lee Lacy and a two-run shot to Floyd Rayford with two outs in the ninth.

Angels 7, Tigers 1

Rod Carew and Bob Boone had RBI singles during a three-run sixth inning that erased a 1-0 deficit and sent California to victory.

Detroit made five errors, three by center fielder Chet Lemon. The game in Anaheim was played in 100-degree heat.

The Tigers committed three errors during the sixth-inning rally, and an error by Lemon keyed the Angels' four-run eighth.

Indians 6-2, Brewers 2-0

Tom Waddell pitched seven strong innings in the first game, and Ramon Romero and Bryan Clark combined on a six-hitter in the second as Cleveland extended its winning streak to four games, its longest this season.

Jerry Willard and Mike Hargrove each delivered two-run singles in the opener while Waddell allowed six hits.

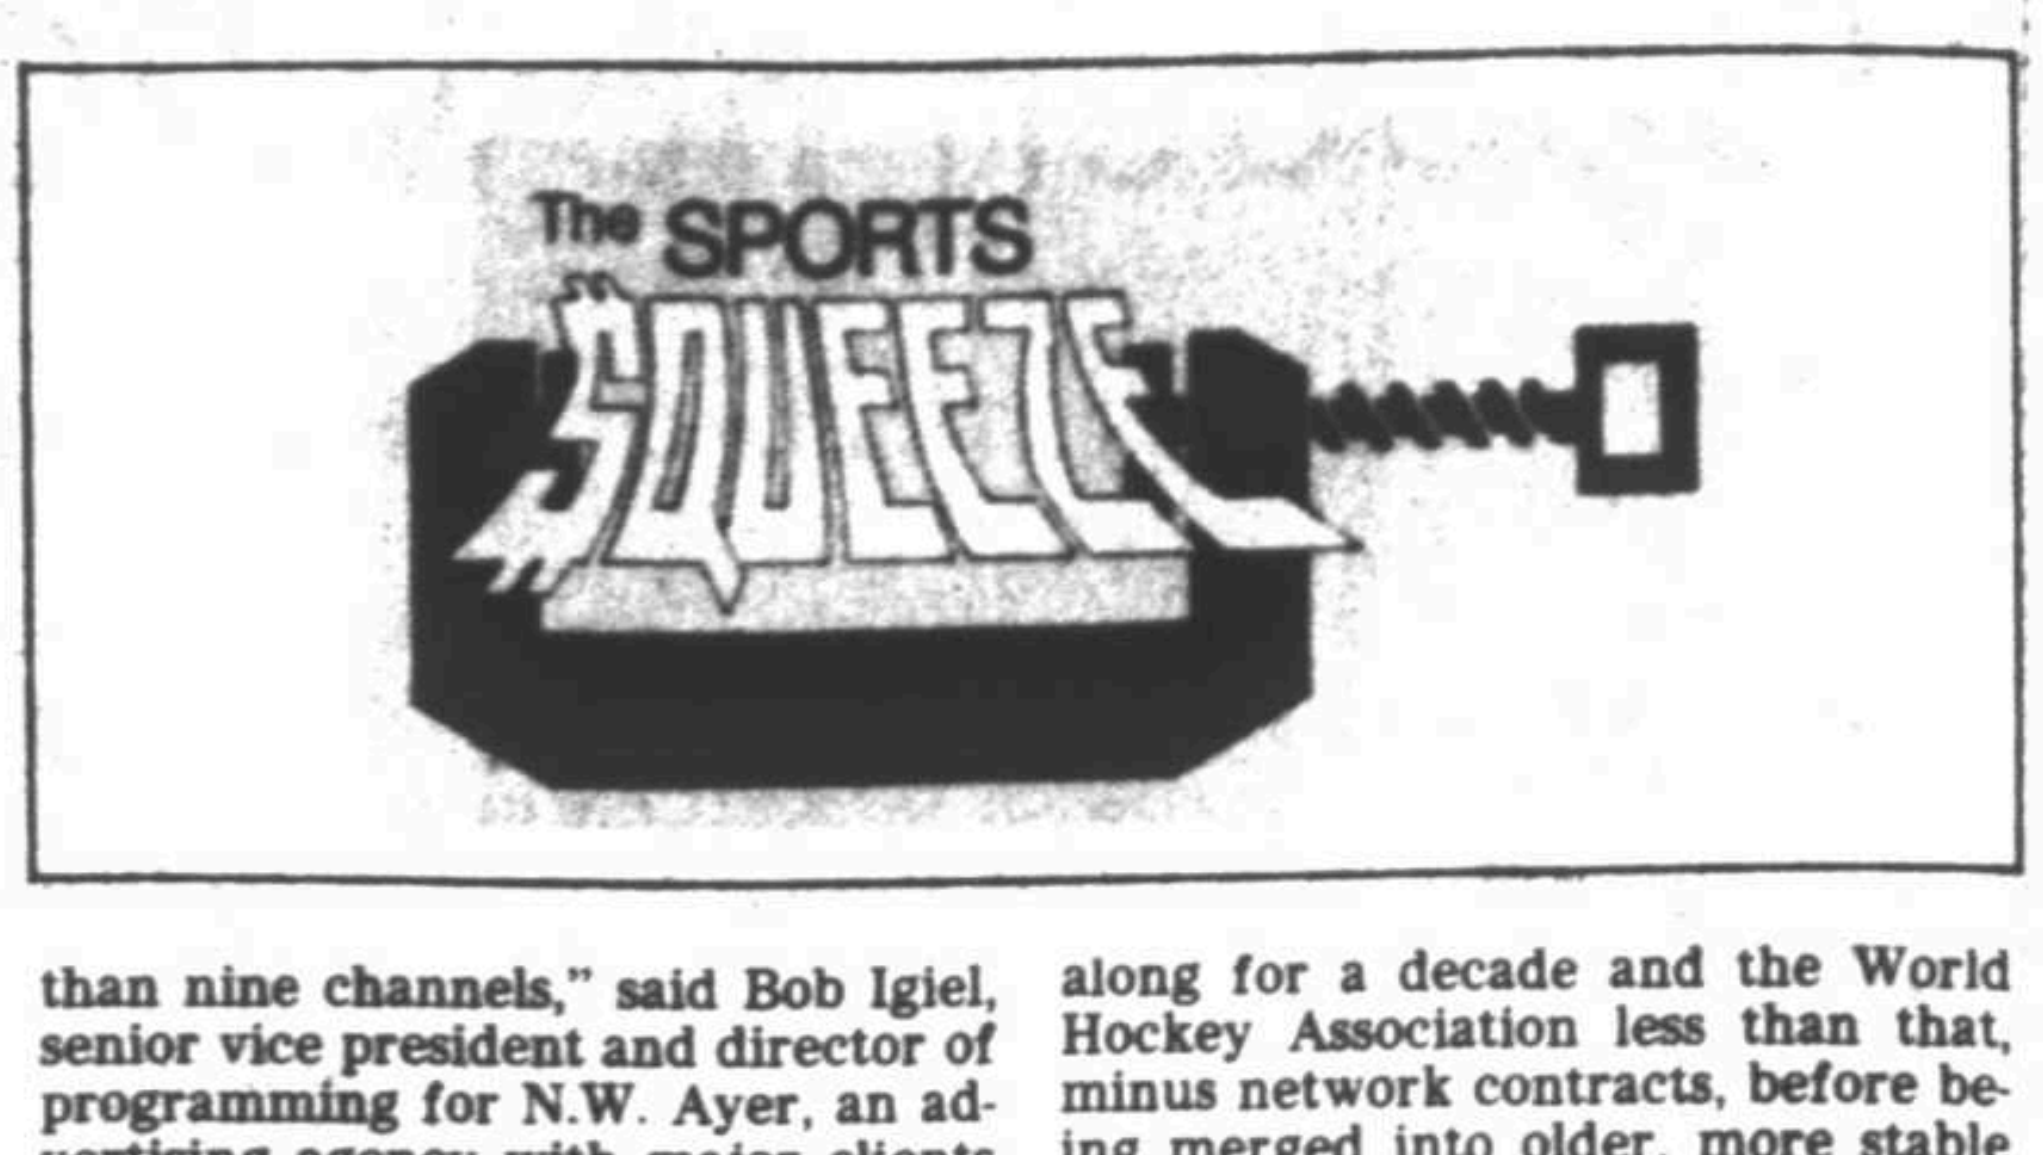
Averaged in millions of dollars

TV dictates the terms

It makes or breaks teams, sports

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer



Sports sells.

It sells beer, cars — and itself to the highest bidder.

And the highest bidder, television, calls the plays.

While network executives don't like to admit it, the promise of TV dollars often dictates when and where games are played and even how many.

Pro football used to be a Sunday afternoon diversion. Now, the National Football League schedules games every day of the week except Tuesday and Wednesday.

The NFL's postseason, once a one-game championship played in mid-December, is now more than a month of playoffs ending in late January with the Super Bowl and its $1 million-a-minute price tag for commercials.

THE GAME of the week in college football used to mean one national game or a few regional games shown by one network. Now it means dozens of games on dozens of channels.

Major league baseball, eyeing additional TV money, is expanding its league championships from best-of-five to best-of-seven and will play all seven World Series games at night this year.

Television's billion-dollar contracts even enter into negotiations between players and owners. They were major factors in pro football's 1982 strike and baseball's two-day strike this summer.

Boxing, repeatedly buried and resurrected, is all over TV, with multiple organizations and a profusion of weight classes taking their cut. And TV has become promoter and matchmaker, offering Olympians six-figure checks for six-round bouts which, minus the gold medals, might be worth only a few hundred dollars.

Local stations with home-team coverage and the networks have been joined by syndicated sports programming and cable networks, fragmenting the market.

"EIGHTY-three percent of the homes with televisions have more than nine channels," said Bob Igiel, senior vice president and director of programming for N.W. Ayer, an advertising agency with major clients as sponsors of sports programming. "More than 50 percent of the homes are cabled. Except for a few events like Monday night football, there's no such thing as a game of the week anymore. Just about any night or weekend, there's a game going on on some channel, and usually more than one — a lot more."

Ratings, which routinely rose each year, have leveled off or receded, with fans still watching but divided among so many channels.

Occasionally, TV fails to pump up interest in a sport. America got a look at the North American Soccer League in the '70s, yawned and turned elsewhere. Now the NASL is gone. The National Hockey League failed to gain national viewership in the '70s and remains a local and cable TV sport anchored in Canada and the northeastern United States.

But for the most part, if television smiles: success.

The United States Football League wouldn't have been born had ABC not bankrolled it, just as the American Football League would not have survived in the 1960s without NBC's checks.

Conversely, if television frowns: failure.

THE USFL is without a major network contract and its future is uncertain. The World Football League, without a major network contract in the 1970s, collapsed. The American Basketball Association struggled along for a decade and the World Hockey Association less than that, minus network contracts, before being merged into older, more stable leagues. And the International Football League, born two years ago, vanished almost simultaneously when nobody turned a camera in its direction.

Neal Pilson, executive vice president of CBS Sports, said it would be naive to say television doesn't have an impact on any sport it covers, "but it has both a positive and a negative impact. ... For every sport that might owe its success to television, I could probably point to one that has either failed or been damaged by television exposure."

And he insisted that television is not forcing sport to do anything.

"It almost invariably has the final control on scheduling, start times, how many games constitute a playoff, on whether a game is going to be in prime time," Pilson said.

"What television does is tell a league or a team, 'If you play at 4 o'clock, we will be able to pay you X. If you play at 8 o'clock, we will be able to pay you X plus Y.' ... It's not a coercive situation. It's a marketplace decision of the sports themselves on how they want to utilize television. You can't place a moral judgment on a business decision," Pilson said.

Jim Spence, the senior vice president of ABC Sports, which shares baseball's six-year contract with NBC, said his network "didn't go in and demand World Series games at night. It was baseball which said, 'Whatever you want, you can have.'

Million to Teleprompter

Associated Press

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. — Lord Derby of England, whose ancestors lent their title to the most famous thoroughbred races in the world, enjoyed a day for the history books when his gelding won what has been dubbed the Miracle Million.

Teleprompter, racing in silks that date back hundreds of years, won the Budweiser-Arlington Million on Sunday at makeshift Arlington Park. The track's grandstand and clubhouse, destroyed July 31 by fire, were replaced for race day by temporary stands and a small city of tents.

After the fire, the Arlington meeting was shifted to nearby Hawthorne Park while track officials prepared the damaged track for Sunday's race.

"There's no place on earth except in America that could have held a race like this under these circumstances," said Derby, whose Teleprompter was sent off as a 14-1 outsider in betting by a surprisingly large crowd of 35,651.

Teleprompter broke poorly, but quickly took the lead and stayed in front the rest of the way in winning the 1¼-mile turf test in 2:03 2-5.

Teleprompter turned back a late challenge by the favorite, Greinton, to capture the top prize of $600,000.

Flying Pidgeon finished third in the 13-horse field, followed by King of Clubs, another English invader.

Teleprompter paid $30.40, $11.20 and $6.60. Greinton returned $3.40 and $2.80 and Flying Pidgeon was $12.40 to show.

SMU begins 'get even' season

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Humbled Southern Methodist, having to live with probation jokes and the frustration of knowing it can't win the Southwest Conference football title, starts getting even against the outside world in September.

The Mustangs, placed on three-years' probation by the NCAA, open their season Sept. 9 in Texas Stadium against Texas-El Paso.

SMU then meets Arizona before it plunges into a full conference schedule against the other schools who have a goal the Mustangs don't have — the Cotton Bowl.

"We can go 11-0 and that's our goal," said lineman Joe Phillips. "We'll be close together now. We still have something to play for."

They can also play the spoiler.

Dutch Baughman, assistant commissioner of the SWC, says SMU's league games will count in the standings.

"Everybody in the conference has to play them (the Mustangs)," said Baughman. "We look at it this way — every time SMU plays a league team somebody wins and somebody loses."

SMU will also be on television this year and has a nationally televised date against Oklahoma on Dec. 7.

Other SMU TV games include Nov. 2 at Texas A&M and Nov. 16 against Texas Tech.

The Mustangs can't play in bowl games the next two years and will not be on television in 1986. Also, SMU will have no scholarships next year and only 15 to give in 1987.

SMU, the second winningest college football team in the nation over the last three years, could be a national power again.

Coach Bobby Collins will decide soon how many of his 15 freshmen to redshirt because of the depth problems the Mustangs will have in three years. The Mustangs will have only 65 scholarship players in 1987, 30 below the allowable.

The Mustangs have 13 returning starters, including perhaps the best one-two tailback tandem in the country in Reggie Dupard and Jeff Atkins.

Dupard, a senior, has rushed for 2,448 yards and 27 touchdowns. Last season he was the nation's No. 12 rusher with 1,160 yards and 16 touchdowns.

Also, the Mustangs recruited and signed the top running back in Texas, Bill Jones of Corsicana, a power runner with speed.

Don King, the Southwest Conference's all-conference quarterback, returns to lead a team that averaged 400 yards total offense per game last year.

The swift receivers include Jeffrey Jacobs, Ron Morris and Marquis Pleasant.

The Mustangs will have six senior starters on defense and seven senior starters on offense.

Collins has posted a 31-4-1 record since he came from Southern Mississippi in 1982.

SMU has accomplished what no other SWC team has ever done and that is to win 10 or more games in a season for four straight years.

Last year SMU was 10-2, including a 27-20 victory over Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl, and finished eighth in the final Associated Press poll.

Double bogey opens door

By BOB GREEN

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Roger Maltbie and Denis Watson agreed: Watson's double bogey-6 on the 14th hole was the turning point in the NEC World Series of Golf.

"That's probably where I won the golf tournament," Maltbie said. "That put me three shots ahead with four holes to go. Then it was just a matter of not losing your head."

He didn't.

Staked to that cushion, Maltbie cruised home, adding the flourish of a birdie on the 18th hole, and scored his second victory of the season Sunday.

He won this one, by far the most important of his 11-year career, with a front-running final round of 4-under-par 66.

His 72-hole total of 268 was 12 shots under par on the Firestone Country Club course and four in front of Watson, the South African who won this title a year ago and who, in 1977, caddied for Maltbie in the British Open.

"I'm happy to see all those things I taught Roger in 1977 are paying off," Watson said, tongue firmly planted in cheek, after his closing round of par 70 had produced a 272 total.

"That's the best I've played for four rounds," said Watson, who last season won three tournaments on the American PGA Tour.

"I'm very happy with my game," he said.

"Roger just played fantastic. It was his time to win today. I'll get my chance sometime later. And I think it'll be soon."

As to the critical 14th hole, Watson said:

"I screwed up. It was just one of those things. I just got a bit unlucky."

He also got three shots behind, too much to make up.

Maltbie, for the first time ever, went to the 18th green knowing he had it won "if I just don't have a heart attack," Maltbie said.

The victory, his second of the season after going through a 9-year victory drought, was worth $126,000 from the total purse of $700,000 and lifted Maltbie's earnings for the year to $351,724, almost three times his best previous season.

Tom Kite and Calvin Peete made late moves and came on to share third at 273. Neither was in the title chase. Peete had a closing 67, Kite 68.

Hal Sutton was next at 68-274. He once was within three shots of the top, was four under for the day and appeared to be on the move. But he, too, made double bogey — missing a sand shot over the green on the 15th — and dropped back.

Ray Floyd was next at 275 after the best round of the tournament, a 6-under-par 64.

U.S. Open champion Andy North, Larry Nelson, Australian Greg Norman and Gordon Brand Jr. of England followed at 276. North had a 65, Norman 67, Nelson 69 and Brand 72.

PGA title-holder Hubert Green and Tom Watson each had a 69 and were tied at 277.

Although he was not a factor in the tournament, Curtis Strange set a PGA Tour single-season money-winning record

Bradley beats Alcott in playoff

DENVER (AP) — Pat Bradley, six strokes off the lead as the last round began, birdied her first three holes Sunday, tied Amy Alcott and then sank a birdie putt on the second hole of a sudden-death playoff to win the $300,000 LPGA National Pro-Am.

Bradley shot a closing 4-under-par 68 for a total of 4-under 284. Her 6-foot birdie putt at the par-5 15th hole — the second hole of the playoff — gave her the victory as Alcott collapsed, needing six strokes just to reach the green.

The victory was worth $45,000 for Bradley, who is enjoying her most profitable and best scoring season ever.

Alcott, the third-round leader, recovered from a triple bogey on the first hole Sunday but then faded with bogeys at the 13th and 16th holes before forcing the playoff with a birdie at 18. Alcott had a final-round 74.

Lori Garbacz and Beth Daniel both finished one shot back at 3-under 285. Daniel closed with a quiet 69, making birdies on her last two holes, while Garbacz overcame a mid-round collapse and had a 73, also getting birdies at 17 and 18.

Val Skinner and Mary Beth Zimmerman were at 287, both closing with 70s, while Kathy Baker and Sherri Turner had 288 totals.

Bradley, who moved past Alice Miller into second place on this season's LPGA money list with $337,653, was 4-under for the day through seven holes. Repeatedly burning the hole with her putts on the remaining 11 holes, she could do no better than par, however. But it was good enough to tie.

Bradley drew into a tie with Alcott and Garbacz after the latter duo three-putted the eighth hole. Bradley finally went ahead after Alcott missed the green on the par-4 16th hole and made bogey, dropping to 3-under.

Alcott got back to 4-under, however, sinking a dramatic 10-foot birdie putt on the 18th green.

Hopkins paces Midland bowlers

Darrell Hopkins' 246 game and 687 series in the Civic Commercial Mens Summer and Vern Williams' 256-643 paced the men at Fairmont Park Lanes.

Carol Gibson rolled 233-615 to lead the Fairmoint women. Paul Cox led the Mens scratch trio league at Dellwood Lanes with a 248-848 (four games).

This week's winner on Pin Point Bowling was Ken Maisel with a total of 40 pins. Maisel also became the first bowler to convert a split when he felled the 5-7 combo.

Pin Point Bowling will be conducted Monday at 7 p.m. at Fairmont Park instead of at Dellwood, but will return to Dellwood for the finale on Sept. 2 at 7 p.m. Ten participants will be drawn from the audience to vie for the chance to win an all-expense paid trip for two to anywhere in the continental United States, Mexico or the Carribean.

Pin Point Bowling has a TV contract for the fall. International Exchange between Midland bowlers at Dellwood and Fairmont, and an AMF owned facility in Nice, France. Details are being worked out.

In the World Class Bowling Centers, the second annual Summer Youth tournament conducted this past weekend, the team of Keith Blake, Chad Sailor and Russell Barnes took top honors. Second went to Bill Scott, Robert Scott and Scott Meador and third to Ben Galley, Gregg Burns and Eric Fonte.

During the week, Davind Minihan rolled his first 200 game, a 211, at Dellwood. Minihan is 12 years old. Keith Blake, who earlier rolled a 694 series in the Wednesday Afternoon youth program, rolled a 721 series this past week. Blake, 16, rolled games of 224 and 225 in the tournament. Blake's other pastimes include boxing. His brother, Robin, was previously a No. 1 ranked boxer in the 140 pound class.

Dellwood will be the site for the Labor Day Classic Singles tournament, Aug., 30 through Sept., 2.

McLemore sparks Angels to victory

Associated Press

EL PASO—Midland's Mark McLemore drove in the tying and winning runs with a pinch-hit triple in the top of the ninth inning as the Angels beat El Paso 9-8 in a Texas League game.

It was only the second time this season that the Diablos, who have a 15-game lead in the Western Division, lost a game they led going into the final inning.

McLemore, who said he had pinch hit only three or four times in his career, drove home James Randall, who reached base on a fielder's choice, and Kevin Davis, who had singled.

The Diablos wasted home runs by Dave Huppert, Glenn Braggs and Alan Cartwright.

Shreveport used a 12-hit attack, including 11 singles, to down the Drillers. During a three-run charge in the first inning, Shreveport got RBI singles from Mike Aldrette, Alan Cockrell and Tom Francis.

Barry Lyons drove in a run with an RBI double in the third and then came home on a sacrifice fly to lead Jackson. Mark Dougherty drove in Arkansas' first run with a sacrifice fly in the fifth and then scored on a groundout.

Smith regains Tech eligibility

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech running back Timmy Smith, who led the Red Raiders in rushing last season with 711 yards in nine games, has regained his eligibility, school officials said.

Smith, of Hobbs, N.M., was declared ineligible last spring because of bad grades, but he passed 15 credit hours during the summer to become eligible again.

He worked out with the team Friday for the first time this year.

"The workout was just like another exam," the 6-0, 200-pound Smith said in reference to three final examinations he took at Tech in the past week. "I just hope I passed it."

Reds player-manager Pete Rose did not play, leaving him 12 hits shy of breaking Ty Cobb's all-time mark of 4,191.

Tom Browning, 13-9, pitched six innings for the victory. He leads the major leagues in victories by a rookie this season.

Pirates 9-10, Astros 3-9

Rick Reuschel pitched a four-hitter and drove in three runs with a homer and a double in the first game, and Sammy Khalifa singled home Pittsburgh's winning run in the second game with one out in the ninth.

White Sox 5, Blue Jays 3

Floyd Bannister won his first game in more than two months and Harold Baines hit a three-run homer as Chicago broke a five-game losing streak by defeating Toronto.

Yankees 8, Mariners 5

Dan Pasqua drove in four runs with three hits, including a three-run homer, his fifth, and an RBI double, and Don Mattingly hit a two-run homer as New York pulled within three games of AL East-leading Toronto.

The Yankees have won 10 of their last 11 games. Ed Whitson, 8-7, got the victory and Brian Fisher earned his ninth save.

Rangers 7, Royals 3

Pete O'Brien drove home four runs, three with a bases-loaded triple, and Toby Harrah knocked in three runs to power Texas past host Kansas City.

A's 10, Orioles 4

Dave Kingman and Steve Henderson hit two-run homers in the fifth inning as host Oakland beat nemesis Mike Flanagan.

Flanagan entered the game with a 15-4 record, including a 10-0 mark at Oakland Coliseum.

Rookie Tim Birtsas, 10-4, pitched a five-hitter. He gave up two homers to Lee Lacy and a two-run shot to Floyd Rayford with two outs in the ninth.

Angels 7, Tigers 1

Rod Carew and Bob Boone had RBI singles during a three-run sixth inning that erased a 1-0 deficit and sent California to victory.

Detroit made five errors, three by center fielder Chet Lemon. The game in Anaheim was played in 100-degree heat.

The Tigers committed three errors during the sixth-inning rally, and an error by Lemon keyed the Angels' four-run eighth.

Indians 6-2, Brewers 2-0

Tom Waddell pitched seven strong innings in the first game, and Ramon Romero and Bryan Clark combined on a six-hitter in the second as Cleveland extended its winning streak to four games, its longest this season.

Jerry Willard and Mike Hargrove each delivered two-run singles in the opener while Waddell allowed six hits.

Troy Aikman, a 6-foot-3, 215-pound sophomore, is the Sooners' starting quarterback. Switzer says Aikman has the best arm ever at Oklahoma, but although Aikman had an outstanding spring passing the ball, he is virtually untested running the wishbone in a game situation.

TV dictates the terms

It makes or breaks teams, sports

By BRUCE LOWITT
AP Sports Writer

The SPORTS SQUEEZE

Sports sells.

It sells beer, cars — and itself to the highest bidder.

And the highest bidder, television, calls the plays.

While network executives don't like to admit it, the promise of TV dollars often dictates when and where games are played and even how many.

Pro football used to be a Sunday afternoon diversion. Now, the National Football League schedules games every day of the week except Tuesday and Wednesday.

The NFL's postseason, once a one-game championship played in mid-December, is now more than a month of playoffs ending in late January with the Super Bowl and its $1 million-a-minute price tag for commercials.

THE GAME of the week in college football used to mean one national game or a few regional games shown by one network. Now it means dozens of games on dozens of channels.

Major league baseball, eyeing additional TV money, is expanding its league championships from best-of-five to best-of-seven and will play all seven World Series games at night this year.

Television's billion-dollar contracts even enter into negotiations between players and owners. They were major factors in pro football's 1982 strike and baseball's two-day strike this summer.

Boxing, repeatedly buried and resurrected, is all over TV, with multiple organizations and a profusion of weight classes taking their cut. And TV has become promoter and matchmaker, offering Olympians six-figure checks for six-round bouts which, minus the gold medals, might be worth only a few hundred dollars.

Local stations with home-team coverage and the networks have been joined by syndicated sports programming and cable networks, fragmenting the market.

"EIGHTY-three percent of the homes with televisions have more than nine channels," said Bob Igiel, senior vice president and director of programming for N.W. Ayer, an advertising agency with major clients as sponsors of sports programming. "More than 50 percent of the homes are cabled. Except for a few events like Monday night football, there's no such thing as a game of the week anymore. Just about any night or weekend, there's a game going on on some channel, and usually more than one — a lot more."

Ratings, which routinely rose each year, have leveled off or receded, with fans still watching but divided among so many channels.

Occasionally, TV fails to pump up interest in a sport. America got a look at the North American Soccer League in the '70s, yawned and turned elsewhere. Now the NASL is gone. The National Hockey League failed to gain national viewership in the '70s and remains a local and cable TV sport anchored in Canada and the northeastern United States.

But for the most part, if television smiles: success.

The United States Football League wouldn't have been born had ABC not bankrolled it, just as the American Football League would not have survived in the 1960s without NBC's checks.

Conversely, if television frowns: failure.

THE USFL is without a major network contract and its future is uncertain. The World Football League, without a major network contract in the 1970s, collapsed. The American Basketball Association struggled along for a decade and the World Hockey Association less than that, minus network contracts, before being merged into older, more stable leagues. And the International Football League, born two years ago, vanished almost simultaneously when nobody turned a camera in its direction.

Neal Pilson, executive vice president of CBS Sports, said it would be naive to say television doesn't have an impact on any sport it covers, "but it has both a positive and a negative impact. ... For every sport that might owe its success to television, I could probably point to one that has either failed or been damaged by television exposure."

And he insisted that television is not forcing sport to do anything.

"It almost invariably has the final control on scheduling, start times, how many games constitute a playoff, on whether a game is going to be in prime time," Pilson said.

"What television does is tell a league or a team, 'If you play at 4 o'clock, we will be able to pay you X. If you play at 8 o'clock, we will be able to pay you X plus Y.' ... It's not a coercive situation. It's a marketplace decision of the sports themselves on how they want to utilize television. You can't place a moral judgment on a business decision," Pilson said.

Jim Spence, the senior vice president of ABC Sports, which shares baseball's six-year contract with NBC, said his network "didn't go in and demand World Series games at night. It was baseball which said, 'Whatever you want, you can have.'

Million to Teleprompter

Associated Press

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. — Lord Derby of England, whose ancestors lent their title to the most famous thoroughbred races in the world, enjoyed a day for the history books when his gelding won what has been dubbed the Miracle Million.

Teleprompter, racing in silks that date back hundreds of years, won the Budweiser-Arlington Million on Sunday at makeshift Arlington Park. The track's grandstand and clubhouse, destroyed July 31 by fire, were replaced for race day by temporary stands and a small city of tents.

After the fire, the Arlington meeting was shifted to nearby Hawthorne Park while track officials prepared the damaged track for Sunday's race.

"There's no place on earth except in America that could have held a race like this under these circumstances," said Derby, whose Teleprompter was sent off as a 14-1 outsider in betting by a surprisingly large crowd of 35,651.

Teleprompter broke poorly, but quickly took the lead and stayed in front the rest of the way in winning the 1¼-mile turf test in 2:03 2-5.

Teleprompter turned back a late challenge by the favorite, Greinton, to capture the top prize of $600,000.

Flying Pidgeon finished third in the 13-horse field, followed by King of Clubs, another English invader.

Teleprompter paid $30.40, $11.20 and $6.60. Greinton returned $3.40 and $2.80 and Flying Pidgeon was $12.40 to show.

SMU begins 'get even' season

By DENNE H. FREEMAN

DALLAS (AP) — Humbled Southern Methodist, having to live with probation jokes and the frustration of knowing it can't win the Southwest Conference football title, starts getting even against the outside world in September.

The Mustangs, placed on three-years' probation by the NCAA, open their season Sept. 9 in Texas Stadium against Texas-El Paso.

SMU then meets Arizona before it plunges into a full conference schedule against the other schools who have a goal the Mustangs don't have — the Cotton Bowl.

"We can go 11-0 and that's our goal," said lineman Joe Phillips. "We'll be close together now. We still have something to play for."

They can also play the spoiler.

Dutch Baughman, assistant commissioner of the SWC, says SMU's league games will count in the standings.

"Everybody in the conference has to play them (the Mustangs)," said Baughman. "We look at it this way — every time SMU plays a league team somebody wins and somebody loses."

SMU will also be on television this year and has a nationally televised date against Oklahoma on Dec. 7.

Other SMU TV games include Nov. 2 at Texas A&M and Nov. 16 against Texas Tech.

The Mustangs can't play in bowl games the next two years and will not be on television in 1986. Also, SMU will have no scholarships next year and only 15 to give in 1987.

SMU, the second winningest college football team in the nation over the last three years, could be a national power again.

Coach Bobby Collins will decide soon how many of his 15 freshmen to redshirt because of the depth problems the Mustangs will have in three years. The Mustangs will have only 65 scholarship players in 1987, 30 below the allowable.

The Mustangs have 13 returning starters, including perhaps the best one-two tailback tandem in the country in Reggie Dupard and Jeff Atkins.

Dupard, a senior, has rushed for 2,448 yards and 27 touchdowns. Last season he was the nation's No. 12 rusher with 1,160 yards and 16 touchdowns.

Also, the Mustangs recruited and signed the top running back in Texas, Bill Jones of Corsicana, a power runner with speed.

Don King, the Southwest Conference's all-conference quarterback, returns to lead a team that averaged 400 yards total offense per game last year.

The swift receivers include Jeffrey Jacobs, Ron Morris and Marquis Pleasant.

The Mustangs will have six senior starters on defense and seven senior starters on offense.

Collins has posted a 31-4-1 record since he came from Southern Mississippi in 1982.

SMU has accomplished what no other SWC team has ever done and that is to win 10 or more games in a season for four straight years.

Last year SMU was 10-2, including a 27-20 victory over Notre Dame in the Aloha Bowl, and finished eighth in the final Associated Press poll.

Double bogey opens door

By BOB GREEN

AKRON, Ohio (AP) — Roger Maltbie and Denis Watson agreed: Watson's double bogey-6 on the 14th hole was the turning point in the NEC World Series of Golf.

"That's probably where I won the golf tournament," Maltbie said. "That put me three shots ahead with four holes to go. Then it was just a matter of not losing your head."

He didn't.

Staked to that cushion, Maltbie cruised home, adding the flourish of a birdie on the 18th hole, and scored his second victory of the season Sunday.

He won this one, by far the most important of his 11-year career, with a front-running final round of 4-under-par 66.

His 72-hole total of 268 was 12 shots under par on the Firestone Country Club course and four in front of Watson, the South African who won this title a year ago and who, in 1977, caddied for Maltbie in the British Open.

"I'm happy to see all those things I taught Roger in 1977 are paying off," Watson said, tongue firmly planted in cheek, after his closing round of par 70 had produced a 272 total.

"That's the best I've played for four rounds," said Watson, who last season won three tournaments on the American PGA Tour.

"I'm very happy with my game," he said.

"Roger just played fantastic. It was his time to win today. I'll get my chance sometime later. And I think it'll be soon."

As to the critical 14th hole, Watson said:

"I screwed up. It was just one of those things. I just got a bit unlucky."

He also got three shots behind, too much to make up.

Maltbie, for the first time ever, went to the 18th green knowing he had it won "if I just don't have a heart attack," Maltbie said.

The victory, his second of the season after going through a 9-year victory drought, was worth $126,000 from the total purse of $700,000 and lifted Maltbie's earnings for the year to $351,724, almost three times his best previous season.

Tom Kite and Calvin Peete made late moves and came on to share third at 273. Neither was in the title chase. Peete had a closing 67, Kite 68.

Hal Sutton was next at 68-274. He once was within three shots of the top, was four under for the day and appeared to be on the move. But he, too, made double bogey — missing a sand shot over the green on the 15th — and dropped back.

Ray Floyd was next at 275 after the best round of the tournament, a 6-under-par 64.

U.S. Open champion Andy North, Larry Nelson, Australian Greg Norman and Gordon Brand Jr. of England followed at 276. North had a 65, Norman 67, Nelson 69 and Brand 72.

PGA title-holder Hubert Green and Tom Watson each had a 69 and were tied at 277.

Although he was not a factor in the tournament, Curtis Strange set a PGA Tour single-season money-winning record

Bradley beats Alcott in playoff

DENVER (AP) — Pat Bradley, six strokes off the lead as the last round began, birdied her first three holes Sunday, tied Amy Alcott and then sank a birdie putt on the second hole of a sudden-death playoff to win the $300,000 LPGA National Pro-Am.

Bradley shot a closing 4-under-par 68 for a total of 4-under 284. Her 6-foot birdie putt at the par-5 15th hole — the second hole of the playoff — gave her the victory as Alcott collapsed, needing six strokes just to reach the green.

The victory was worth $45,000 for Bradley, who is enjoying her most profitable and best scoring season ever.

Alcott, the third-round leader, recovered from a triple bogey on the first hole Sunday but then faded with bogeys at the 13th and 16th holes before forcing the playoff with a birdie at 18. Alcott had a final-round 74.

Lori Garbacz and Beth Daniel both finished one shot back at 3-under 285. Daniel closed with a quiet 69, making birdies on her last two holes, while Garbacz overcame a mid-round collapse and had a 73, also getting birdies at 17 and 18.

Val Skinner and Mary Beth Zimmerman were at 287, both closing with 70s, while Kathy Baker and Sherri Turner had 288 totals.

Bradley, who moved past Alice Miller into second place on this season's LPGA money list with $337,653, was 4-under for the day through seven holes. Repeatedly burning the hole with her putts on the remaining 11 holes, she could do no better than par, however. But it was good enough to tie.

Bradley drew into a tie with Alcott and Garbacz after the latter duo three-putted the eighth hole. Bradley finally went ahead after Alcott missed the green on the par-4 16th hole and made bogey, dropping to 3-under.

Alcott got back to 4-under, however, sinking a dramatic 10-foot birdie putt on the 18th green.

Hopkins paces Midland bowlers

Darrell Hopkins' 246 game and 687 series in the Civic Commercial Mens Summer and Vern Williams' 256-643 paced the men at Fairmont Park Lanes.

Carol Gibson rolled 233-615 to lead the Fairmoint women. Paul Cox led the Mens scratch trio league at Dellwood Lanes with a 248-848 (four games).

This week's winner on Pin Point Bowling was Ken Maisel with a total of 40 pins. Maisel also became the first bowler to convert a split when he felled the 5-7 combo.

Pin Point Bowling will be conducted Monday at 7 p.m. at Fairmont Park instead of at Dellwood, but will return to Dellwood for the finale on Sept. 2 at 7 p.m. Ten participants will be drawn from the audience to vie for the chance to win an all-expense paid trip for two to anywhere in the continental United States, Mexico or the Carribean.

Pin Point Bowling has a TV contract for the fall. International Exchange between Midland bowlers at Dellwood and Fairmont, and an AMF owned facility in Nice, France. Details are being worked out.

In the World Class Bowling Centers, the second annual Summer Youth tournament conducted this past weekend, the team of Keith Blake, Chad Sailor and Russell Barnes took top honors. Second went to Bill Scott, Robert Scott and Scott Meador and third to Ben Galley, Gregg Burns and Eric Fonte.

During the week, Davind Minihan rolled his first 200 game, a 211, at Dellwood. Minihan is 12 years old. Keith Blake, who earlier rolled a 694 series in the Wednesday Afternoon youth program, rolled a 721 series this past week. Blake, 16, rolled games of 224 and 225 in the tournament. Blake's other pastimes include boxing. His brother, Robin, was previously a No. 1 ranked boxer in the 140 pound class.

Dellwood will be the site for the Labor Day Classic Singles tournament, Aug., 30 through Sept., 2.

McLemore sparks Angels to victory

Associated Press

EL PASO—Midland's Mark McLemore drove in the tying and winning runs with a pinch-hit triple in the top of the ninth inning as the Angels beat El Paso 9-8 in a Texas League game.

It was only the second time this season that the Diablos, who have a 15-game lead in the Western Division, lost a game they led going into the final inning.

McLemore, who said he had pinch hit only three or four times in his career, drove home James Randall, who reached base on a fielder's choice, and Kevin Davis, who had singled.

The Diablos wasted home runs by Dave Huppert, Glenn Braggs and Alan Cartwright.

Shreveport used a 12-hit attack, including 11 singles, to down the Drillers. During a three-run charge in the first inning, Shreveport got RBI singles from Mike Aldrette, Alan Cockrell and Tom Francis.

Barry Lyons drove in a run with an RBI double in the third and then came home on a sacrifice fly to lead Jackson. Mark Dougherty drove in Arkansas' first run with a sacrifice fly in the fifth and then scored on a groundout.

Smith regains Tech eligibility

From Staff Reports

LUBBOCK (AP) — Texas Tech running back Timmy Smith, who led the Red Raiders in rushing last season with 711 yards in nine games, has regained his eligibility, school officials said.

Smith, of Hobbs, N.M., was declared ineligible last spring because of bad grades, but he passed 15 credit hours during the summer to become eligible again.

He worked out with the team Friday for the first time this year.

"The workout was just like another exam," the 6-0, 200-pound Smith said in reference to three final examinations he took at Tech in the past week. "I just hope I passed it."

JIM MURRAY

300-game winner? No way, Jose

To win 300 games in the big leagues, you need a fastball in the 100-m.p.h. neighborhood. You need a curveball that cracks like a whip as it crosses the plate and breaks sideways at least at a 90-degree angle. It helps if you pitch out of a black scowling rage and whistle the ball dangerously under the chin of any batter digging in and striding.

If you haven't got any or all of those things, well, then, you had better have this microscopic control that lets you put any pitch precisely where you want it, at precisely the velocity and trajectory.

Managers, you see, look for those things before they even let you draw a tryout uniform.

But what if your fastball is a soap bubble, or something that comes up there floating like a bottle thrown off a shipwreck in deep water? What if maximum velocity on your hard one is in the low 50s? What if your "out" pitch is a 25-m.p.h loiterer that gathers cobwebs on its way to the plate?

A PITCHER who showed up on the Milwaukee Braves' tryout list some 26 years o had those highly questionable pitches. What's more, he appeared to be of indeterminate age – the scouts guessed somewhere between 30 and 90 – and he had sad eyes and a tired expression. He looked like a guy who had watched a lot of homers disappearing over the center-field fence in his time.

When they watched him pitch, they could guess why. You didn't need a radar gun on his fast one. The "s" didn't belong in the word. His pitch came up there like a kid going to a Saturday night bath or a con to the electric chair. Catching it was like bobbing for apples. You could do it with your teeth.

They let him down easy. They sent him so deep into the minors you needed a dog and canoe to get there. Nobody would be looking for him anyway. Unless they needed batting practice.

Then, they noticed a funny thing about Niekro's pitches. They were not only hard to time, they were harder to track. They made more detours on the way to the plate than a dog with fleas. Sometimes, they seemed to disappear altogether.

At the very least, they did a Figure 8 on the way to the plate. It was as if they couldn't figure out a sure direction. Even when the batter hit them, they sounded like a rotten cantaloupe.

PHIL NIEKRO didn't exactly throw the ball, he just kind of let go of it, like shotputter. And let gravity take over. "You don't need a bat, you need a net," batters complained. "It turns into a butterfly halfway."

They called it a knuckleball for want of a better term. It wasn't. It was really a finger-tip ball. It was about as athletic as mailing a letter. It put no strain at all on the arm but a considerable strain on the catcher trying to plot its orbit.

It is a pitch not ordinarily perfected by a big leaguer until his arm is too tired to throw any other. But Niekro learned to throw it when he was in the sixth grade. His father, a coal miner, taught it to him so he wouldn't have to spend his life wearing a light in his hat.

It is an old man's pitch but Niekro learned it before he shaved.

You never really master a knuckleball. It's like mastering a grizzly. You more learn to live with it. Because it has no rotation, it is at the mercy of the wind currents – and gravity. It is a little bit like mailing a letter and hoping it gets there.

Control is not in the equation. The batter has no way of knowing where it is going because neither does the thrower. You just try to narrow the options.

Managers don't trust it. They prefer pitchers who get sore arms. They tolerate it in older pitchers. But Phil Niekro was throwing it in high school. He got so he couldn't throw more conventional pitches because knucklers lock up the arm from wrist to elbow.

IT TOOK Niekro six years to get his big league trial. Even then, the Braves ere skeptical. Twenty-year-olds don't throw knuckleballs. Twenty-year-olds throw heat.

They threw him in the bullpen. He started only two of the first 100 games he pitched. In seven years, he started only 5 of 177 games.

Even when he started 29 games at Denver in 1964 and he finished 21 and won 1 , no one was convinced.

Finally, after the Braves had moved to Atlanta and needed help in 1967, they handed Niekro the ball. He started 20 games, finished 10 and had an earned-run average of 1.87. Two years later, he started 35, finished 21, and won 23. "You sure you're 29, not 49?" they said.

Phil Niekro may have done more with less than anyone who ever played the grand old game. He has now won 296 games with a pitch that comes in so slow that not only can you count the stitches on the ball, you can read the league president's signature. You can do everything with it but hit it or catch it.

Only 17 players in history have won more games than Niekro. Only nine have struck more out. Only 11 have pitched more innings and only six have started more games.

He is a cinch to make the Hall of Fame. But he has never made a World Series. He is getting his big chance now with the Yankees, who are storming after the division leaders.

SENTIMENTALISTS think it may be his last chance. But in the 1978 All-Star game, sentimental National League Manager Tom Lasorda put Niekro in to pitch to one batter, thinking it might be Niekro's last chance. Eight years later, he could be facing Niekro in the opening game of the 1985 World Series.

It's certain the arm won't give out. Wrapping spaghetti around a fork puts more of a strain on it than throwing a strike. As for his age, Lasorda notes: "He looked 46 when he was 26. He has knuckleballed time."

To get to the Hall of Fame on stuff he admits moves only at 25 m.p.h. is a feat for the ages. They should put his plaque 25 feet in front of Walter Johnson's because that's where he'd have to release it in order for their pitches to get to the plate at the same time.

Bo Jackson makes Auburn the favorite in SEC race

AUBURN (AP)— Auburn has Bo Jackson, Maryland has Stan Gelbaugh and both teams have high expectations of ranking among the nation's top college football powers this year.

They will be among the strongest in the South, with Auburn heavily favored to capture the Southeastern Conference championship for the second time in three years and Maryland picked to win its third Atlantic Coast Conference title in a row.

Jackson, a 1983 All-American who was sidelined with a shoulder separation for six of Auburn's 12 games last year, has said he wants to surpass in one season the 2,517 career total yards he has attained in 27 regular-season appearances with the Tigers. College football's single-season rushing record is 2,342 yards, set by Marcus Allen of the University of Southern California in 1981.

GELBAUGH will be the quarterback on a Maryland team loaded with 49 returning lettermen. Gelbaugh, who started five games last year, passed for 1,123 yards and is expected to easily better that total in his senior season.

Among the area's 10 major independents, the best appear to be Miami of Florida, Florida State and South Carolina. The Division 1-AA Southern Conference also has three strong teams — Tennessee-Chattanooga, Furman and The Citadel.

Auburn Coach Pat Dye changed his offense from the Wishbone to the I during spring drills, primarily to get the ball to Jackson more often. Jackson didn't participate in the spring workouts, however, spending his time with the Auburn baseball team. He is considered a major league prospect as an outfielder.

Dye said that even though he has changed the offense, "We still want to be a running physical football team. We'll maintain our ability to run the triple option. I know some of the things we're doing are going to present some problems for defensive teams."

Coach Bobby Ross of Maryland said, "We return a good nucleus of a football team. It's a team of experience that will lead to some intense competition. Our season would never be a failure if we went out and played the way we expect them to play."

IN ADDITION to Auburn, the SEC features an outstanding team in Florida.

Florida won the 1984 SEC title, but later had the crown stripped because of NCAA probation. The Gators won't be eligible for this year's conference title, but could be in contention for the national championship. They finished third in the final Associated Press poll last season despite not appearing in a bowl game.

Of the eligible SEC contenders, Louisiana State, Alabama and Tennessee appear to have the best shots at beating Auburn. Georgia, winner of three successive titles beginning in 1980, is in a slight down cycle. There is some question as to how the team will react in the aftermath of Coach Vince Dooley's brief venture into politics.

For a month, Dooley considered running for the U.S. Senate, but decided late last month to remain at Georgia.

Auburn and Alabama each return 16 starters from last year, most in the SEC, with Mississippi State bringing back 15 starters, including 10 on defense.

Auburn has two All-SEC linemen back: defensive end Gerald Robinson and offensive guard Jeff Lott. Alabama also has a pair of All-Conference stars in linebacker Cornelius Bennett and defensive tackle Jon Hand.

The South

Florida must rebuild its offensive line, but the Gators have some proven backs in quarterback Kerwin Bell and runners Neal Anderson and John L. Williams. Alonzo Johnson ranks as one of the area's top outside linebackers.

LSU, LIKE Florida, has some spots to fill in its line, but the Tigers also have some gifted backs: quarterback Jeff Wickersham and running backs Dalton Hilliard and Garry James.

Tennessee's attack will be geared to Tony Robinson, who produced 2,089 yards of offense in winning the quarterback slot on the All-SEC team last year.

Maryland, 9-3 last year, has 18 starters back among its 49 lettermen, including two All-ACC defenders: guard Bruce Mesner and back Al Covington.

"We are talent-wise a little better than last year, but I don't know if it will be reflected in the won-loss record," Ross said. "It is very important that we get off to a good start."

With Clemson coming off probation and picked to finish second, the ACC will have eight teams officially in the race for the first time since 1970. Georgia Tech and Virginia are expected to grab the other two first-division spots in the league race.

Among the top talent returning in the ACC are quarterbacks John Dewberry of Georgia Tech and Kevin Anthony of North Carolina, wide receivers Terrance Roulhac of Clemson, Chuck Herring of Duke and John Ford of Virginia, offensive tackles Jim Dombrowski of Virginia and Joe Milinichik of North Carolina Sate, and defensive end Gary Baldinger of Wake Forest.

MIAMI, the 1983 national champion, is coming off a disappointing 8-5 season. The Hurricanes have nine defensive starters back, but lost quarterback Bernie Kosar to the National Football League. Kosar graduated from school early and is with the Cleveland Browns. Vinnie Testaverde will inherit his slot at Miami.

Dollar higher

LONDON (AP) — The dollar rose slightly against most major currencies in light European trading today. Gold bullion prices were also slightly higher in Zurich.

With banks in Britain, Hong Kong and Singapore closed for holidays, dealers in Frankfurt said they anticipated a session of slow, technical trading in a tight range.

In Tokyo where trading ends as Europe's business day begins, the dollar fell against the Japanese yen, closing at 236.40 yen compared with Friday's close of 236.45 yen.

The dollar was also slightly lower against Britain's pound sterling in European trading. It cost $1.40175 to buy one pound, more expensive than last Friday's closing price of $1.401.

But the dollar was higher against all other currencies. Other midmorning dollar rates compared with late Friday's included:

—2.7570 West German marks, up from 2.7500

—2.2575 Swiss francs, up from 2.2512

—8.4225 French francs, up from 8.3950

The only bullion trading was in Zurich where gold was selling at a bid price of $335.70 a troy ounce at noon, up from Friday's closing bid of $334.60.

Unocal seeks to refinance debt from takeover

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

Unocal said Friday it is negotiating with lenders to refinance the $4.1 billion debt it took on several months ago to ward off a takeover attempt by Texas oilman T. Boone Pickens Jr.

A spokesman for the Los Angeles-based parent of Union Oil said the company hoped to save a substantial amount of money by refinancing the debt at a lower interest rate. The average interest rate on the debt is 13 percent, costing Unocal about $430,000 a year.

Unocal said it could not estimate how much money it may save by refinancing, since the negotiations are preliminary. "This doesn't mean we're committed to doing it. It just means we're investigating it," said spokesman Mark Eversole.

Unocal said it is talking to a group of banks led by Manufacturers Hanover Trust. Unocal said a refinancing would involve bank loans and privately borrowed funds.

The giant $4.1 billion debt boosted Unocal's long-term debt by more than 350 percent to $5.27 billion, up from $1.12 billion at the end of 1984. Unocal Chairman Fred Hartley previously said heavy financing costs would force the company to reduce its exploration budget by $250 million to $2.1 billion.

Since Unocal issued the debt May 23, interest rates have fallen considerably. The prime rate, a benchmark rate for loans to major bank customers, has fallen from 10 percent to 9.5 percent. Herbert Hart, a San Francisco analyst who follows Unocal for S.G. Warburg, Rowe & Pitman, said if Unocal reduced its interest costs by 2 percentage points, it would save about $40.6 million after tax, or 35 cents a share. Last year, Unocal earned $700.4 million, or $3.50 a share.

Unocal issued the securities, worth $72 a share, in exchange for stock to top a $54 per share bid from Pickens, the Mesa Petroleum chairman. Pickens launched an unsucessful bid to take over the company this spring, but still owns a sizable block of stock.

Pickens at one time owned 23.7 million shares of Unocal stock, or 13.6 percent. As part of the agreement with Unocal, Pickens exchanged about one-third of his stock for notes worth $565 million. Only July 1, Pickens sold his notes for $589.4 million plus accrued interest. Pickens hasn't sold any shares since.

Icahn wins control of TWA

Financier gets majority of stock

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

NEW YORK — Carl C. Icahn, the New York financier who began moving nearly a year ago to win control of Trans World Airlines, announced late Friday that he had acquired a majority of the airline's stock.

An aide to the businessman said Icahn and his associates had bought an additional 1,142,269 common shares of TWA, giving them 17.5 million shares out of the approximnately 34.5 million shares outstanding. That brought his stake to 50.3 percent, up from the 47 percent he reported Thursday.

"It's his airline now," said one person — who asked not to be identified — involved in the takeover struggle that erupted when Icahn made known his intentions last May.

The news came after close of business Friday. Icahn, reached at his home, refused to discuss his plans but said he hopes to reach agreement soon with TWA board to formally support his bid for the remaining stock. Icahn has offered shareholders $24 for the TWA stock he does not control.

No TWA officials were available for comment and Texas Air spokesman Bruce Hicks said his company had no comment to make.

Icahn has not made clear his next move or intentions for TWA. There have been reports that he plans to fire the current TWA board of directors and replace them with his own choices. There have also been reports that he plans to sell the airline quickly or merge it with another company, perhaps even Texas Air.

In June, in an effort to thwart an Icahn takeover, TWA directors agreed to a merger with Texas Air Corp. That agreement, which includes Texas Air's offer of $26 per share of TWA, is still to be voted upon by TWA's shareholders. Since Icahn now controls more than half of the shares, however, there is no question about the outcome of such a vote.

Most observers, however, predict that Francisco Lorenzo, the chairman of Texas Air, will now negotiate with TWA and with Icahn to nullify the agreement. Sources say that Icahn and Lorenzo, who had been holding talks towards a negotiated settlement, are close to agreement.

Texas Air would not be left high and dry if it pulled out of the fight for TWA. For one thing, it stands to receive a large fee from TWA for breaking the merger agreement. It would also benefit from its option to buy 6.4 million shares of TWA at $19.625 per share. In addition, it could realize a substantial profit from sale of the 2.2 million TWA shares, or 6 percent, it already owns. TWA stock closed Friday at $22.375, unchanged from Thursday.

"Lorenzo has to drop it now," said the observer. "But he'll be well compensated for his troubles."

August pump prices drop slightly

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Retail gasoline prices dropped slightly in August, but dealers may be reluctant to pass onto consumers further savings from crude oil price cuts, an industry analyst said.

"Dealers have still not recovered lost margins that they ran into at wholesale runup" earlier this year, Dan Lundberg, publisher of the Lundberg Letter, said Sunday.

On Jan. 1, dealers' profit margin was 13.95 cents a gallon. Profits dropped to 11.69 cents per gallon, Lundberg said.

Even so, the consumer is enjoying a respite from rising gasoline prices, according to Lundberg's survey Friday of more than 17,000 service stations nationwide.

"(Retail) gasoline prices have dropped nationally by seven-tenths of a cent over the past two weeks, while wholesale prices have dropped by over 1.3 cents a gallon," he said.

California led the way in cut-rate gasoline with a number of self-service stations offering regular leaded fuel at 99.9 cents a gallon or less, Lundberg said.

But prices of less than a dollar a gallon also were common in Alaska, Phoenix, Ariz., Portland, Ore., Memphis, Tenn., Kansas City, Kan., and St. Louis, Lundberg said. Regular leaded gasoline at self-service stations is usually the lowest-priced fuel.

"These lower prices are definitely led by Arco, with hundreds of its stations below a dollar (a gallon), including some in the ranges of 98.9 (cents) all the way down to 95.9 (cents)," Lundberg said.

Arco's prices were followed by independent private dealers, with Exxon and Shell Oil within competitive range, he said.

Overall, average gasoline prices dropped to $1.226 per gallon nationwide, compared with $1.233 a gallon two weeks ago. At self-serve pumps, regular leaded fuel averaged $1.11 per gallon, regular unleaded cost $1.18 and premium unleaded was $1.31, Lundberg said.

Lundberg called the lower prices a "delayed final reponse to those crude oil prices that were dropping."

Pricing by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries has dropped more than $2 a barrel this year. Mexico has also cut the cost of its crude exported to the United States.

Steel institute says U.S. must get tougher

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration's program to help revive the domestic steel industry by curtailing imports will not succeed unless the United States gets tougher with Europe, says the American Iron and Steel Institute.

Institute President Donald Trautlein said the administration wrongly "rewarded" the European Community for a surge of shipments of 16 steel products into the United States in 1984 and so far this year.

In an Aug. 16 letter to Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, Trautlein said the "reward" came in the form of an agreement earlier this month in which the European Community said it would limit its U.S. shipments of the 16 products to 197,017 net tons for the rest of the year.

The United States should have clamped down harder, said Trautlein, who is chairman of Bethlehem Steel Corp.

Yeutter's office reported that during the first five months of the year, European steel shipments ran at a rate of 880,000 tons annually — 6.54 percent of this year's U.S. market. Trautlein said that figure was much higher than was contemplated when the two sides originally discussed the products in 1982.

Former Datapoint official sues company

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Fired Datapoint Chief Operating Officer John C. Butler has sued the computer manufacturing firm, claiming the company owes him more than $1 million.

Butler filed the petition Wednesday in federal court in Philadelphia as a counterclaim to a lawsuit Datapoint filed against him June 18. The suit seeks a jury trial, dismissal of Datapoint's suit and a settlement of more than $1 million.

Butler was hired as Datapoint's chief operating officer May 15 and fired June 7. In the countersuit, he contends his employment agreement called for severance and benefits if he was terminated.

"As a result, Butler is entitled to pay and benefits, pursuant to the terms of the agreement, with a value in excess of $1 million," his suit says.

The suit against Butler contends he was dismissed because he was working with Sam Wyly of NetAmerica Corp. to arrange a takeover of Datapoint.

In his suit, Butler denied those charges and claimed he is entitled to benefit status through May 7, 1988.

The petition also claims the planned buyout of the service division of Mohawk Data Sciences Corp. by a Datapoint subsidiary will benefit only Datapoint Chairman Asher Edelman.

Housing market continues stagnant

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — To understand why economists are becoming more pessimistic about the economy, it helps to know that Charles H. Sanford is giving out free curtains.

Sanford builds homes around the country, but recently some have not been selling well. So he decided Friday to lower home prices in a development in north Dallas by about $2,000 and to throw in free curtains with each purchase.

The Dallas market may be worse than most, largely because of the Texas oil business slowdown, but Sanford is not alone. Almost everywhere across the country, builders are finding that new homes are not selling well, so they are slowing construction of both houses and apartments. The housing market is stagnant, and a boom that seemed to be materializing early this year as mortgage rates dropped has dissipated.

"It was exciting while it lasted," said James M. Wooten, president of the Dallas-based Lomas & Nettleton Co., the biggest mortgage-financing company in the country. "It was bright, but it was brief."

And that is the reason for the pessimism about the economy. The anticipated surge in housing was supposed to be the dynamo of the rebound many economists had predicted for this fall. Now that home construction is desultory, many economists are scaling back their estimates of growth in the second half of 1985.

"The economy is in trouble, and we were looking for housing to give it a real boost," said James W. Christian, chief economist of the U.S. League of Savings Institutions. "That big lift just hasn't taken place."

That is not to say that home construction is in the same kind of rut as farming, mining and manufacturing. This will probably mark the third year in a row in which roughly 1.7 million private houses and apartments will be built — a solid level well above the trough of less than 1.1 million housing starts during the recession in 1981 and 1982.

On the other hand, construction is well below the peak of more than 2 million housing starts in 1978, when interest rates were higher than they are now, and rising. Rates have plummeted three or four percentage points over the past year, and that drop should have stimulated a wave of new-home purchases.

"The bloom is off the real-estate rose," said Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association of America.

There is a vicious cycle here, however. While the economy has been depending on a housing upturn, the housing industry likewise is looking to the economy for an upsurge.

"Unless the economy booms, I don't think we'll see a housing boom," said Frank M. Crossen, chairman of the Centex Corp., one of the country's largest home builders.

The torpor in housing and the slowing economy pose some difficult questions for the months ahead. Economic theory suggests that during a slowdown, interest rates drop and that gives a boost to purchases of homes, automobiles and major appliances, all of which are financed frequently by loans. Those kinds of purchases get the economy moving again.

But if house and automobile sales are slow now — and orders of durable goods dropped 2.4 percent in July, the Commerce Department announced Thursday — then what will snap the economy out of its lethargy? And if the economy does manage a rebound, might that not drive up interest rates, choking the already lackluster housing and durable sectors and nipping that revival in the bud?

No one knows the answers to these questions. But economists and builders have been groping to explain why housing sales and construction are not bustling as mortgage rates drop. They frequently cite four principal factors:

First, with the overall economy weak, families are reluctant to buy. Second, much of the pent-up demand for housing was sated in the past two years. Third, after running into problems in the past, lenders are tightening their restrictions on who qualifies for a mortgage. Fourth, a surplus of rental apartments is competing with houses for customers and has dampened enthusiasm to build new apartment complexes. Condominiums, in particular, are said to be overbuilt because a burst of enthusiasm for them has since faded.

Stock market loses

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market headed lower today amid lingering uncertainty over the economic outlook.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrial stocks dropped 4.25 to 1,314.07 in the first half hour on Wall Street.

Losers took a 6-5 lead over gainers among New York Stock Exchange-listed issues.

American Telephone & Telegraph was actively traded, down ⅛ at 21¼. Analysts quoted in the Wall Street Journal questioned how much benefit on the bottom line the company would derive from cost-cutting measures announced last week.

On Friday the Dow Jones industrial average inched up .22 to 1,318.32, giving it a gain for the week of 5.60 points.

Advancing issues and declines were about evenly balanced on the NYSE.

Big Board volume slowed to 75.27 million shares from 90.60 million in the previous session.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks slipped .08 to 108.49. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index was up .36 at 231.65.

Housing sales up, group says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of existing homes in July posted their largest increase in four months, climbing to the highest level in almost five years, a real estate trade group said today.

The National Association of Realtors said its monthly survey showed that existing homes were sold at an annual rate of 3.11 million units last month, following a 0.7 percent June increase.

The June-to-July rise was the largest since a 5.2 percent March gain and marked the fifth straight month that existing home sales have either risen or held steady.

The increases left the annual sales pace at its highest level since October 1980 when homes were sold at a rate of 3.21 million units.

Analysts attributed the gains to declines in mortgage interest rates. However, economists have been disappointed in sales of new homes, which actually declined in June by 0.9 percent, despite the continued fall in interest rates. The government will report on sales activity for new homes in July this Friday.

David D. Roberts, president of the realtors association, noted that the sales pace for existing homes in July was 11.5 percent higher than it was a year ago, pointing up the effect of the lower mortgage rates.

"With effective interest rates on long-term mortgages now below 12.5 percent, thousands of potential homebuyers and sellers who waited out the high interest period in 1981 and 1982 are entering the housing market," he said.

The survey found that the median sales price of a new home rose $1,700 in July to $77,900, 5 percent above the level of a year ago. The median price means that half the homes sold for more and half for less.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Was mutual fund with dividends of 12 percent bad investment?

By BILL DOYLE

Q. We invested in a mutual fund four years ago. The dividend checks we have received every month — amounting to 12 percent on an annual basis — have been fine and have paid our expenses. But we recently needed money and had to cash in 1,726 shares. We paid $7.50 per share when we made our purchase, but we received only $6.95 per share when we redeemed. That resulted in a $949.30 loss.

Have we made a bad investment?

Doyle

A. That depends on whether or not, in addition to dividends, the fund has been making capital gains distributions and if you have been reinvesting those distributions to buy additional shares.

If you have been reinvesting capital gains distributions, the total value of your increased number of shares could be higher than your original investment. At least, that could have been the situation until you redeemed the 1,726 shares. However, if the fund has made no capital gains distributions, the total value of your investment has dropped. A decline from $7.50 to $6.95 indicates a loss in share value of just short of 8 percent.

Of course, if yours is a "load" mutual fund, the commission of up to 9.3 percent you paid at the time of your investment could account for the loss in share value.

Considering the high dividend yield you mention, it's obvious you have invested in an "income" mutual fund — one whose investment objective is to provide high current income. Your fund has met that objective.

All things considered, it can't be called a "bad" investment. But it's certainly not all that great. Lots of other mutual funds have turned in better investment results.

• • •

Q. Do all mutual funds pay dividends monthly?

A. No. Although some do, others pay dividends quarterly, semiannually or annually. Mutual funds that make capital gains distributions usually do so once a year.

Before investing in any mutual fund, you should check the dividend and capital gains distribution schedule in that fund's prospectus.

• • •

Q. In August 1971, I purchased 143 shares of a mutual fund at a cost of $2,005. I have reinvested all dividends and capital gains distributions. My reinvestments total $5,266. That makes my "basis" for tax purposes $7,271.

I now own 1,013 shares with a current value of $9,421. So, if I redeem all my shares, I will have a profit of $2,150 — taxable as a long-term capital gain.

Have I received an adequate return on my investment?

A. Any answer short of a resounding YES INDEED would be very wrong.

Through reinvestments, the present value of your fund shares is 470 percent of your original investment. That's a 370 percent gain and, over 14 years, figures out to an annual 26.4 percent "total return."

• • •

Q. I recently came into a sum of money, which I plan to invest in a no-load mutual fund for long-term growth. Is there any source that provides the performance records of similar types of mutual funds.

A. There are a number. The two probably the best known are Forbes magazine, which provides an excellent mutual fund performance report once a year in an August issue, and Money magazine, which does it several times a year.

My favorite has always been Wiesenberger Investment Company Services. That fat manual, along with monthly and quarterly supplements, can be found in the financial reference sections of many large public libraries.

• • •

Q. All the reference books I have studied calculate only "income dividends" as a mutual fund's yield and do not include capital gains distributions. Why?

A. Because the income dividends come from the dividends and/or interest a mutual fund receives on securities it holds. That's income — yield. Capital gains distributions come from the net profit, if any, a mutual fund realizes from selling securities at higher prices than it paid. Technically, that's profit — not yield — and is figured into total return.

Drop in interest rates not coupled with significant housing start rise

NEW YORK — A big mortgage lender this week commented on an oddity in the housing market — a big decline in interest rates without an equivalent pickup in housing starts.

"Almost everyone who deals with housing knows that a significant decline in mortgage rates turns on sales and starts," said James Wooten, president of Dallas-based Lomas & Nettleton.

Why, he asked, didn't it happen this time?

A lot of sellers are asking the same question, but some merchants say they already have the answer. They say it's a buyers' market, something many young people have never seen in their adult lives.

In such a market the seller sometimes has to do handstands to attract buyers, and some of them are. Even so, buyers are sitting back and waiting for even better deals, just as they used to buy quickly to avoid higher prices.

It is a time of sales, discounts, price bargaining and the like, and it is occurring in many markets, including commodities, stocks, clothing, cars, houses and travel. It is a mood, a pervasive mood among consumers.

The latest survey of consumer attitudes by the University of Michigan, offers this explanation:

"The cyclical (price) peaks recorded in the 1970s were driven by an inflationary pscyhology, which created incentives to purchase in advance of the then escalating inflation rates.

"In contrast, the current recovery has been built on widespread reports of the availability of price discounts.

"It is now the positive appeal of discounted prices, not the negative pressures to act before further increases, that determines consumer reactions to prices."

As a result of these changes, says Richard Curtin, the survey director, "the availability of price and interest rate discounts has become the expected norm."

That norm was recognized within the past week by carmakers who lowered their financing charges to as low as 7.5 percent, almost half what some people paid just a year ago.

Home sellers hold open houses. Securities brokers talk about the low price-earnings ratio of stocks. Retailers, their profits shrunk, hold midsummer sales. Summer-home owners offer weekly rather than monthly rentals.

The situation is a consequence of many reasons, some of them interacting with each other.

Wooten, the mortgage man, observes that the generation now coming of age "is from the baby bust instead of the baby boom." He says that home sellers are suffering from a lack of young households.

In addition, he says, it is even possible that lower interest rates are causing purchases to be deferred.

"Now that rates have put detached houses within reach, some households opt to remain in apartments until they can save up the downpayment," says U.S. Housing Markets, published by Lomas & Nettleton.

The high value of the U.S. dollar in relation to other important currencies has helped produce the buyers' market. A high-value dollar makes imported goods less expensive, pressuring domestic producers to keep their prices competitive.

Abroad, however, the dollar buys more. Travel, for example, is an export, and the high-value dollar buys relatively more abroad. And, since so many people are traveling, some domestic resort areas are suffering for customers.

An important factor in making a buyers' market is the domestic and foreign overproduction of some basic commodities, including foods, which go into the manufacture of consumer products. The result: price competition.

The Michigan survey shows that buyers are aware of their advantage in the marketplace, even if they might not recognize all the reasons why.

States' seatbelt laws may not nix airbags

ATLANTA (AP) — Health and safety researchers say mandatory seat belt laws have been introduced in 47 states and passed in 14, but it's uncertain how many meet the government's criteria for canceling air bag requirements.

Last year, the U.S. Department of Transportation said it may scrap the requirement that all new cars are to be equipped with automatic passenger protection systems, such as automatic seat belts or air bags, by 1989 if before then states representing two-thirds of the U.S. population adopt seat belt laws meeting certain requirements.

Those requirements include mandatory seat belt use for front-seat occupants and a minimum $25 fine for violators.

Fourteen states have now passed seat belt laws — New Jersey, New York, Connecticut, Hawaii, Illinois, Indiana, Louisiana, Michigan, Missouri, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, Oklahoma and Texas — but "it's difficult to say whether any of the laws passed to date actually meet the minimum DOT requirements," Centers for Disease Control researcher Ken Williams said recently.

For instance, many of those states have set their fines at $20 — not the department's minimum of $25, he said.

Although the CDC has taken no official position, some health and safety researchers with the agency have suggested publicly that states pass seat belt laws that do not meet the department requirement so that the requirement for an automatic restraint system for all new cars will take effect as scheduled in 1989.

The states whose seat belt laws do not meet department standards have likely made "a very conscious decision" along those lines, Williams said.

The CDC said Thursday that every state but Idaho, Nevada and Kentucky either enacted or introduced legislation this year requiring at least some auto passengers to use seat belts.

STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE℠

HOW TO USE STOCKQUOTE HOTLINE

1. Call the StockQuote Hotline number listed below. A computer voice will answer and ask you for the Account Code.
2. Enter the Account Code, then depress the star key (*) on your telephone. The computer will then ask you to enter your Stock Code.
3. Enter the Stock Code for the stock you wish quoted, the computer will quote the Ticker Symbol; Current Price and Net Change from the previous day's close.
4. After the stock is quoted, the computer will ask you to enter another Stock Code. You have two options:
A. You may request the quote for another stock simply by repeating Step 3, or...
B. You may request additional information on the stock just quoted by once more depressing the star key (*) in which case the computer will respond with the Price, Net Change, Volume, High and Low. The computer will then ask you to enter another Stock Code (repeat Step 3).
You may enter up to 10 requests per call.

STOCK CODES

All Stock Codes are based on industry standard Ticker Symbols provided by your broker or available from any Standard & Poor's Stock Ticker Guide. Codes are made up of a series of two-digit numbers, each representing one of the letters in the Ticker Symbol.

To determine the two-digit code for any letter of a Ticker Symbol, remember: The first key to be depressed is always the one on which the letter appears. The second key is always a "1," "2" or "3" indicating that letter's position on its own key (first, second or third position). EXAMPLE: "IBM" = "43 22 61"; "SX" = "22 92." Remember to depress the star key (*) after entering each code.

Blue skies graced by snow-white clouds form a background as an aircraft passes over Sky Ranch Airport.

The airport community is in vogue in Midland simply because there are aviation enthusiasts who never tire of fancying airplanes and hanging around airports.

It seems they live, work, prosper or just survive to fly and to engage in "hangar talk." They are a congenial lot.

"I've just always been a country boy," said Ernie Webb, "and I've always loved airplanes. The fact I can tie the two together is the reason I'm out here."

"Out here" — out there — is Sky Ranch Airport, a private airport established in 1976 for public use by veteran flier Harold Vroman. It's a haven out in the boondocks several miles southwest of Midland and off Midkiff Road.

Webb, an advertising executive who operates Western Specialty Advertising, built his "heavily mortgaged" ranch-style house at the fly-in community in the early 1980s after Vroman laid out the landing strips. Today, Webb, who flies a Cessna 182, and his family are among about a score of families who live on the 200-acre airport. Most already have built hangars or garage-hangars to shelter their aircraft. Other are building houses and hangars. Houses, in the $100,000-and-up range, and private hangars parallel the 5,000-foot paved north-south runway and the 2,500-foot east-west dirt strip. Some houses are ranch style or traditional. Others are geodetic or hexagonal, such as Vroman's, or old-style Western Classic. The old Victorian-style Hill House, a former near-downtown Midland landmark and showplace, is anchored at Sky Ranch.

VROMAN, a 65-year-old pilot who has been in the flying and aircraft sales, service and charter business since 1951, and his late wife, Dorothy "Dot," set up Sky Ranch as an investment nine years ago. Vroman has logged 14,000-flying hours since 1940.

"I just wanted my own airport to start with," said Vroman, who owns a Beechcraft Bonanza.

Others saw what he was doing and latched onto Vroman's bandwagon.

"People wanted to start moving out, so I went ahead and gambled on it."

Survivors include his father, Arthur Miramontez of Big Spirng; four brothers, Louis Miramontez, Daniel Miramontez, David Miramontez and Arthur Miramontez Jr., all of Big Spring; and four sisters, Amelia Aguilar, Cecilia Muir and Delia Hernandez, all of Big Spring, and Eva Leos of Clovis, N.M.

Lillie Lawson

EASTLAND — Lillie Lawson, 87, of Victoria, died Saturday in a Victoria hospital.

Services were to be at 2 p.m. today at Bakker Funeral Home in Eastland with the Rev. Bob J. Cox of Temple officiating. Burial will be at Eastland Cemetery.

Mrs. Lawson was born Dec. 1, 1897, in Cherokee. She married Roy E. Lawson Nov. 24, 1919, in Brownwood. He died in July 1974. She was a resident of Eastland from 1922 to 1974, when she moved to Victoria.

She was a member of the First United Methodist Church in Eastland, Martha Darka's Sunday School Class, United Methodist Women and Eastland Art Club.

Survivors include a son, Royce E. Lawson Jr. of Midland; two daughters, Mrs. Wallace Hooper of Claro and Mrs. Bill Daffern of Victoria; two brothers, Clyde Cook of Fredricksburg and Milton Cook of Fort Worth; two sisters, Mrs. Rowland Eibland and Mrs. Earl Powell, both of Fredricksburg; six grandchildren; and five great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers were to be Cyle Lawson, Richard Hooper, Roger Hooper, Steven Daffern, Jack Daffern and John Chaffer.

Shirley Jean Atwell

BIG SPRING — Shirley Jean Atwell, 30, of Big Spring, died Friday in an Odessa hospital following a motorcycle accident.

Services were to be at 2 p.m. today at Nalley-Pickle and Welch Rosewood Chapel with the Rev. Bill Ballard of the Elbow Baptist Church officiating. Burial was to be in Trinity Memorial Park.

Mrs. Atwell was born Feb. 28, 1955, in Big Spring. She was employed with Cosden Oil and Chemical Co. for nine years. She was a Baptist.

Survivors include her mother, Margaret Atwell of Big Spring; a sister, Janet Harrington of Austin; and a grandmother, Irma Atwell of Big Spring.

Scott Carrasco, to left in top photo, stands near his car after an accident which occurred about 8 this morning at the intersection of Ohio Avenue and Marienfeld Street. Also involved in the accident was a Mercedes driven by Kelley Ellen White. No information was available from police at press time. At left, police are still investigating a hit-and-run accident which occurred about 5:10 p.m. Sunday at Ward Street and Loop 250.

From Staff Reports

A 27-year-old Midland woman was listed in critical condition in Midland Memorial Hospital this morning after a 12:01 a.m. accident on Highway 80, according to hospital and Department of Public Safety reports.

Jody Hudson Schlabs, 3609 Caldera, suffered internal injuries in the accident, which occurred when the 1985 Datsun she was riding was struck by a 1978 Dodge driven by Antoinette Johnson, 27, of Odessa. According to DPS reports, Ms. Johnson was westbound about 1.4 miles west of Midland when the eastbound Datsun, driven by 27-year-old William Greg of Midland, attempted to turn left in front of her, reports said.

Greg, 3600 N. Loop 250, and Ms. Johnson and her passenger, 23-year-old Diane Hendricks of Odessa, were treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital after the accident, a hospital spokeswoman said.

Listed in stable condition was Lorie Davis, 17, 4415 Northcrest, who was injured about 6:18 a.m. Sunday on the Loop near Garfield when she lost control of her car and overturned, according to police and hospital reports.

Expected to be released today from MMH was Sonia Atyia, 57, 4723 Spring Meadow. Ms. Atyia was injured about 5:10 p.m. Sunday in a hit-and-run accident on the Loop near Ward, according to police.

In other reports from law-enforcement agencies, an attempted burglary at a Midland mud company early this morning was foiled by a company employee, but as much as $50,000 worth of drilling mud may have been taken in previous burglaries during the past month, according to sheriff's office reports.

Steve Kelley of Buckeye Mud Inc., 2301 Francis, had noticed mud missing and suspected someone was taking it. He was at the company yard about 3:30 this morning when a truck pulled up and a man got out, reports said. When Kelley made his presence known, a shot was fired from the truck, which then left. Kelley was unhurt in the incident, which is still being investigated.

Helen Roe Potter, Route 6, Box 400, reported the theft of six mobile-home tires worth about $300. The tires were taken from under her mobile home sometime between Aug. 16 and Friday, reports said.

Also reported taken from under a mobile home were five mobile-home tires belonging to Lois Laverne Mitchell, County Road 1204 S. The five tires, worth a total of about $375, were taken sometime in the past year, reports said.

The Midland Fire Department reported several fires over the weekend, including a house fire Sunday at 607 S. Main which was set off by a burning couch in the yard. The fire, reported at about 7:30 p.m., caused damage to the wall and roof, and heat, smoke and water damage throughout, reports said. The cause was undetermined, and the names of the owner and occupant of the building were unknown, reports said.

Two cars were destroyed late Saturday night by fires, reports said. A 1971 Chevy Impala owned by Darral Castleberry of Odessa was a total loss after a 10:48 p.m. fire on West Highway 80, and a Datsun 280Z, owner unknown, was destroyed in the 4400 block of Briarwood about 10:27. The origin of the first fire was unknown, the second was set, reports said.

Marfa's modern art museum loses funding

MARFA (AP) — It was a bold concept: one of the world's largest outdoor displays of modern art, a monument to a lifetime of work by a renowned sculptor, a museum in the vast isolation of West Texas.

But after six years, $5 million and countless hours, the unfinished project is faltering badly, perhaps fatally.

"I am sorry I ever got involved," says sculptor Donald Judd, whose works languish in Marfa warehouses and adorn the sparse rangeland. "The misery has just been too much. I've spent a lot of time on this and I'm not getting any younger."

Judd and project's benefactors, the Dia Art Foundation of New York, are embroiled in a bitter funding dispute over the ambitious project to build a modern art museum in this town of 3,000 residents.

Judd, an internationally acclaimed sculptor, says the Dia foundation has cut back its funding, allowing the museum to deteriorate.

He also says he suspects the foundation plans to sell the museum and its art collection, which includes dozens of valuable works by him and other well-known modern artists such as Dan Flavin and Barnett Newman.

Officials of Dia, which is having financial problems, deny the charges.

Negotiations by two New York law firms intended to head off a lawsuit are stalled. Money is a sticking point. Judd says he needs $2 million more for maintenance and additional construction.

"This thing was supposed to be about art," Judd said. "It was supposed to be about art being public. Now it's really about neither of those things."

The project began in 1979, when the Dia foundation, which is known for lavishly funding esoteric projects, signed a contract with Judd to construct, supervise and design the project in his adopted home for a monthly salary of more than $17,000.

The project encompasses 345 acres and more than 150 pieces of art. It is centered at Fort D.A. Russell, once a U.S. Cavalry outpost.

Fifteen groupings of Judd's immense, plain gray concrete box sculptures sit in a pasture at the fort. Inside two renovated ammunition and weapons storage buildings are 76 of his aluminum pieces lined up in long, straight rows.

In downtown Marfa, an old wool warehouse has been turned into a gallery of sculpture by John Chamberlain, whose medium is crushed cars parts.

"It's world-class art out in the middle of nowhere," says Rick Hernandez, a Texas Commission on the Arts official.

Judd, 57, moved from New York, where he owns a seven-story loft building in the trendy SoHo area, to Marfa in the mid-1970s.

He settled in, buying and restoring a square-block compound that now contains much of his private art collection, several residential buildings, a vegetable garden and chicken coops, all enclosed by a 9-foot adobe wall.

Grackles leave messy calling cards across state

HOUSTON (AP) — The Harris County Courthouse grounds were so thick with slippery, black bird waste one day a few years ago that building superintendent J.E. McCain almost closed down the place.

"It was so slick on the sidewalks that people couldn't even walk," recalled McCain. "I went and looked out my window and I could see people slipping."

The culprits were a flock of grackles, known formally as cassidix mexicanus. The large black, white-eyed birds rankle city dwellers and country folk alike.

In Houston and other cities, workers have tried to discourage grackles by firing at the birds from miniature cannons, hanging up plastic hawks, putting out rubber snakes and playing taped recordings of grackles in distress.

But most efforts alleviated the problem only temporarily. The grackle can be found in cities year-round. The male grackles usually stand watch in live oak trees, while the females gather food.

"There's absolutely no end to what they'll eat — trash, baby dovers, bugs, fruit, fish, milo, citrus, even carrion on the streets," said David McKelvey, an Austin animal behavior expert, who advises the University of Texas on controlling bats, grackles and pigeons.

"Both sexes make an incredible diversity of sounds, all of them disgusting at 2 a.m.," he said.

Home for chemically dependent women opens

From Staff Reports

ODESSA — Our New Beginnings, a recovery home for chemically dependent women, will hold its open house from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. Tuesday at 620 S. Grant St. in Odessa.

The newly-renovated facility, which has space for 10 women, offers a 90-day program to treat and rehabilitate women who have formed a compulsion for or an addiction to alcohol and other drugs.

Objectives of the program are to:

— Aid the female alcoholic toward recovery by providing a supportive environment in which sobriety can be maintained and a comprehensive program for continuing that sobriety.

— Ensure the woman's decreased dependence on public assistance and encourage the alcoholic woman to attend Alcoholic Anonymous meetings.

Our New Beginnings will be funded through community support; state, federal and foundation grants; and by individual clients.

The ONB program is divided into three phrases:

— Phase I: Classes will be taught on alcohol and alcoholism, nutrition and pertinent topics. ONB clients will be given access to health and social services.

— Phase II: Classwork will expand into such areas as communication skills, decision-making, assertion skills, high-school equivalency testing and job preparation training and involvement in AA meetings. The ONB women will be screened by the Texas Rehabilitation Commission.

— Phase III: Clients will be involved in individual and family counseling and with outside AA meetings. During this phase, the women clients will be working or in training for employment. Each client will be required to put a percentage of her wages in a savings account.

Fees for the women in treatment will range from $40 to $80 a week depending on each woman's ability to pay. Those who are unable to pay the charges at time of treatment will be asked to reimburse the home when they are able to do so. No fees will be assessed if the client is funded through another source.

"Before women can really become secure in their own recoveries, they must openly and comfortably acknowledge their own illness and recovery," according to ONB policy. In addition, they must "willingly" assist other women in the recovery process.

"It is through this individualized effort, that ultimately, the dual standards and attitudes (toward women alcoholics) of society will be overcome, and newer, healthier attitudes of openness and acceptance prevail."

The program was born in February 1983 in an effort to reach some of the estimated 15,000 alcoholic women in a 17-county area in the Permian Basin. Those interested in securing more information on the ONB program may contact Lynda Herbold at 332-4182 in Odessa.

Symphony presents 'Pops at the College' concerts

From Staff Reports

The Midland-Odessa Symphony presents the annual "Pops at the College" concert at 8 p.m. Saturday at Midland College's Beal Plaza.

This outdoor performance is presented free to the public by First City National Bank of Midland.

Now in its 12th season, Dr. Thomas Hohstadt leads the orchestra in a festive evening of "Pops from Around the World." Included in the program are German and Irish medleys as well as arrangements by Michael Jackson and Lionel Richie. An added dimension to the program will be the participation of over 50 Midland and Odessa Suzuki students performing two works with the symphony. The Suzuki program in Midland is directed by Mary Ann Seibert and the Odessa program by Virginia Huchton. Both are members of the symphony.

Food and beverages will be available beginning at 7 p.m. All are invited to bring a lawn chair or blanket and enjoy a relaxing picnic and evening of entertainment under the stars.

The program will be presented again at 8 p.m. Sept. 7 at the symphony's "Pops in the Park" concert at Odessa's Freedom Park. This performance is also presented free to the public.

Subscription tickets for this year's symphony concert season will be available for purchase at both concerts. The 1985-86 concert season begins Sept. 24 on Midland and Sept. 26 in Odessa with an all Tchaikovsky program featuring his romantic "Romeo and Juliet" and the famous "1812 Overture."

City readies for 'Hot Chinchili'

From Staff Reports

FORT STOCKTON — No matter what the weather, the Fort Stockton Roadrunner Chili Cook-off is expected to provide a "Hot Chinchili Weekend."

As many as 6,000 persons will participate in activities planned Saturday and Sunday at Beeler's RV Park, located on U.S. Interstate 10, about four miles east of Fort Stockton.

Sponsors promise a weekend of entertainment, including a cook's welcoming party on Saturday and performances Sunday by country western singer Ronna Reeves and the Coors Light Macho Band.

Food and game booths also are available for a $50 rental fee.

Sponsored by Menudo Association Inc. and Big Bend Coors, the chili cook-off was established in 1984 to promote Tex-Mex music and culture.

SKY

Vroman, a hyperactive person, has built seven T-hangars to shelter about 70 aircraft, including single- and twin-engine airplanes, and, with tie-downs, altogether provides space for 85 airplanes. The hangars have proved a profitable investment. He sold off select acreage in 1½- and five-acre lots for homesites and hangars. And each October, Vroman's Sky Ranch hosts a fly-in and picnic for pilots, their families and friends.

George Hannum, a retired reservoir engineer, and his wife built at Sky Ranch.

"I've got the hangar (for his 1956 Cessna 172); my wife has the house," he said.

"I'm as free as a breeze out here," smiled Hannum, who is the airport's security officer. "I'm careful about jackrabbits. I killed nine last week — nine shells, nine 'jacks.

"I don't care if you're a doctor or a plumber or whatever," he said. "We all have something (love of flying) in common. At Schlemeyer (Field in Odessa) or at (Midland) Air Park, they're airport bums," he quipped. "Out here, we are airport 'ambassadors.' I love it out here.

"WE'RE AWAY from the city. You don't have neighbors arguing with their wives," Hannum said. "It's so quiet, you can hear coyotes yelping in the morning. And there are quail all over the place."

Bill Jessup, a corporate jet pilot, is building his house and hangar at the airport.

"The closer to the runway you are, you're safer," he said. He reasoned that if a pilot is going to blotch up en route to the air field, he likely will do it prior to settling down in an embarrassing posture at the airport.

Bill Smith, who owns a pumping unit service company in Midland, hangars his North American Aviation 1946 single-engine Navion at Sky Ranch. He lives in town.

"I wish I did (live at Sky Ranch)," he said. "When this runway was dirt (in the late 1970s), I talked about it. She (his wife, Nona) wouldn't move out here. I'd love to be out here.

"Airports and fliers are a different breed of cat," Smith surmised. "They get along with one another. They won't steal from one another and that helps. There's just nothing like it."

Smith said he "had rather fly than eat."

"I don't know of anything I had rather do than fly. I dearly love it."

Paul Rutter, who hangars his single-engine aircraft at Sky Ranch, said Sky Ranch pilots always are ready to impart their expertise to help one another.

"LEARNING TO fly in West Texas is wonderful," he said. "You can always land. There's no where else you'll see such flat land. We have a great sky to fly in." The sky is rarely hazy or soupy, he noted. And once a pilot learns to land at Sky Ranch's relatively narrow strip, he can land safely just about anywhere, including, joked Rutter, landing straight-on on the width of wider runways such as those at Midland Air Park, Midland Regional Airport or Schlemeyer Field. Corporate aircraft, including twin-engine jets and turboprops, routinely land at Sky Ranch.

Johnny Rister, who also hangars his Navion at Sky Ranch, said he appreciates the "friendly atmosphere" at the airport.

Sky Ranch's friendly skies is evidenced by leisurely and aerobatic flying. South of the airport, aerobatic pilots, such as Pat Day, Ole Olsen, Richard Osborn and Gene Beggs, practice their precision maneuvers.

At the north end of the runway, Jack Bagwell operates his Aero Mod Service fixed-based shop, where he and his staff does airframe work, engine replacements, wiring, and customized exterior and interior design work.

"He's a nice person," Vroman said of Bagwell. "He's honest, and he runs a clean shop."

"It's ideal," Bagwell said of his Sky Ranch location. "We lose a lot of business because we're not at the big airport. We don't have high overhead, which allows us to keep our shop rates low."

Vroman said that the fly-in community at Sky Ranch is similar to those elsewhere in the Southwest.

"There's especially a lot of them in California," he said. "There's a few around Dallas. There are some around Tulsa (Oklahoma) that we know of...and at El Paso and Columbus, N.M."

Vroman said his wife, Mary, "likes the country" living afforded at Sky Ranch and the wildlife. "Mary gets the biggest thrill out of watching those quail," he said.

People who have a flair for aviation enjoy living at the airport just as seafarers feel a kinship with the ocean and water lovers seek out the beach, the surf and ocean blue.

"People like to get out (into the country) and have their own hangar and house."

MISD summer bands to perform

From Staff Reports

Students in secondary bands in the Midland Independent School District will perform summer concerts at 7 p.m. Tuesday and at 6:30 p.m. Thursday.

On Tuesday, bands from Midland High School, Midland Freshman School and San Jacinto Junior High School will perform downtown next to the Centennial Plaza.

On Thursday, Lee High School, Lee Freshman, Alamo Junior High and Goddard Junior High band members will perform next to the field house on the Lee High campus.

Ice cream, cakes, cookies and soft drinks will be served at both concerts. All Midlanders are invited. There is no admission charged and band boosters will be signing up new members.

Nannies: European tradition, new American career

CNS Graphic

Copley News Service

So long, Mary Poppins. Au revoir, au pair girl.

Welcome, American nanny.

She's generally young — in her 20s — schooled in the care of children, but chances are she won't do windows. If there's any doubt about that, check the contract. There's bound to be one.

About 20 nanny schools have cropped up around the country in the past two years, and business is booming.

The well-to-do always have been able to afford them, but more typical of the nanny employers these days are middle-upper-class families, where both parents often are working at high-paying, white-collar jobs.

These parents, frustrated by insufficient and often inadequate day-care programs, difficult immigration restrictions on au pair girls (foreign girls who do domestic work for a family in return for room and board and the opportunity to learn the family's language), and the lack of Grandma and Grandpa nearby to watch the little ones, have turned to a British institution that is becoming very Americanized.

THESE ARE WOMEN whose uniforms are not starched and stiff, with faces to match. Chances are, they don't even wear uniforms. They will, however, have had classes in everything from child nutrition to personal appearance.

The demand for nannies certainly is there. Joy Shelton, chairwoman of the American Council of Nanny Schools, said nationwide there probably are 150 to 200 jobs for every nanny. About 350 nannies have graduated from the schools since they opened.

The council is composed of a group of 11 schools around the country, and is designed to "promote the professionalism of the new American nanny and to set standards for emerging schools," said Shelton, who heads Delta College's nanny program near Saginaw, Mich.

Students at Delta's program pay a $996 tuition for a two-month training program. When they graduate, they can expect to go to jobs where they will earn between $175 and $365 a week — not including room and board, Shelton said. Paid vacation, health benefits and the use of a car often are included in the deal.

"THE AMERICAN FAMILY is realizing that children are their greatest natural resource, and they are willing to pay for better care," Shelton said.

"Most of our clients are dual-career professional couples who are in their 30s and 40s, and many of them are having their first children," said Kathy Parker, owner of the Development Center for Nannies in Phoenix, Ariz.

The California Nannie College in Sacramento was started in November 1983 by two women, one a math teacher, the other a marriage and family counselor. Thirty nannies graduated from the program last year. The college has a 15-week program, and the tuition is $2,000.

Like many nanny programs, "we won't accept just anyone who comes in off the street and says she wants to be a nanny," said Larry Uno, administrator of the college. "It's not the easiest thing to do."

Students have to have at least a high school education, be 18 years of age and have letters of recommendation, "which we follow up on," he said. They also must be willing to take a psychological test.

Previous child-care experience also is important, either by having worked in a day-care center or having "taken care of their own children," he said.

SIMILAR REQUIREMENTS hold true at the American Nanny Plan in Claremont, Calif., run by Beverly Benjamin, a professor of child development.

Students pay $1,200 for an eight-week course. If they pass the course — and not all do, Benjamin said — they then become employees of ANP, going off to their first jobs, and try to pass the next step: completing a six-month on-the-job probation.

ANP charges its clients $300 a week for its nannies; basically "leasing" them out to a couple for a specific amount of time, such as six months or a year. The nannies themselves receive $200 of that, plus room and board, Benjamin said. ANP uses the $100 to pay for the nanny's Social Security, workman's compensation and liability insurance costs.

Many families don't mind footing the bill. Nationwide, half of the mothers of children under 6 years work, and "the American family desperately needs reliable child care," Benjamin said.

The problem, at least right now, is recruiting nannies.

"It's very hard to get American women to do this kind of work," she said. "There's a real horror of servitude. Americans have been very aversive to the idea of servitude. What we're trying to do with nannies is create a new idea of co-parenting, a sharing of responsibility. With what we're doing here, we feel we can provide a real career option for American women."

ASSERTIVENESS TRAINING also seems to be part of every nanny training program.

"Europeans know what a nursery nurse is supposed to do, but Americans think a nanny is supposed to be a housekeeper, chauffeur and secretary," Benjamin said.

Benjamin said ANP's best clients — who live everywhere from Los Angeles to Dallas to New York — are not the old money families so much as couples who are in their mid-30s and "career professionals," expecting their first child.

Couple's search for perfect nanny goes on 'for months'

Copley News Service

For months, Roy and Penny Brooks searched for a nanny to take care of their first baby.

They talked to friends and scanned newspaper ads and articles to find a nanny, one who was properly schooled.

They finally found her, after contacting a nanny school in the Midwest.

The Brooks, both 35, are a couple that believes in planning ahead — and with good reason.

"It has been a very difficult search," said Roy Brooks. "Nannies are hard to get. We're lucky that we have one."

Larry Uno, administrator of the California Nanny College in Sacramento, says for every nanny the school graduates, there are 10 families waiting in line.

Joy Shelton, who runs Delta Community College's nanny training program, near Sagninaw, Mich., said 70 nannies have graduated since the program started two years ago. In the past six months alone, she has received 600 requests for nannies from families "all over the United States."

TRADITIONALLY, IT HAS been the very wealthy who can afford to have nannies. But the nanny market is opening up to a second group of families, said Shelton: The two-income family, "where women, like their husbands, have evening meetings and work, and where a day-care center is not adequate for that, nor is the person who comes to the home from 8 to 5."

"We're not rich," said Brooks. "We have a nice home, but by no stretch of the imagination are we rich."

Penny Brooks is a senior budget analyst for a gas and electric company. Roy Brooks is a professor of law at a university.

One of them could afford to stay home for a while, and the loss of income wouldn't hurt them, Brooks said.

"But it would not work well in terms of my or my wife's professional development," he said. "We both love our jobs. We spent a lot of years in school to get where we are. We have a responsibility to our baby, but also to ourselves."

The couple ruled out day-care centers "because of all the negative things we read and heard about them," Brooks said.

THE BROOKS ALSO considered hiring someone from a temporary employment agency, but were firm in wanting to have a "child-care specialist as opposed to a baby sitter."

"We wanted to eliminate the problems we discovered by talking to other individuals who had had people with problems ranging from being drug addicts to being well-intended, but who didn't know how to hold a baby," he said.

The couple liked the idea that nanny colleges not only teach nannies subjects like first aid and nutrition, but child development, as well.

"This is our first baby, and we must have read a half dozen books on child care," Brooks said. "The thing that came across in all of them is that the baby's emotional and intellectual development starts with the baby's first day of life."

And so, if Mom and Pop can't be there for those first few years to guide that development along, the Brooks want someone who can do the job as close to perfect as they hope they will be as parents.

BECAUSE IT IS a nanny's market, employers — parents — have to offer various incentives to get the nanny they want at the price they want.

Brooks said he found the salary range to be from $125 to $350 a week. The nanny the couple has hired will receive $150 a week, plus Social Security, workman's compensation and health benefits, which brings the total to about $200 a week, he said, not including room and board.

In addition, the couple is buying a TV set for the nanny to have in her room. She also will be entitled to three weeks vacation a year and holidays. At the end of the second year, if she is still with the Brooks, she will receive a vacation in Hawaii, expenses paid by the Brooks.

Brooks said such contract "sweeteners" are not unusual.

"There are other nannies who are offered cars and travel as part of the arrangement. You've got to be competitive."

ALTHOUGH THEY HAVE not yet met their nanny in person, they talked with her by phone, and also talked to the director of the nanny school, who said the woman graduated second in her class.

The Brooks will want their nanny to work from about 7 a.m. to 6:30 p.m., with nights and weekends off.

"You want your nanny to be fresh during the day," he said. "We'll get up at night, to take care of the baby. That's part of the parenting responsibilities that we should shoulder."

Nor will they expect the nanny to do any housework.

"You're really paying for a one-on-one engagement between nanny and child," he said. And the "big advantage of having a live-in," he said, "is that you don't have to worry about whether she's going to show up for work the next day."

DEAR ABBY

Popular teen now another highway tragedy

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Recently my 16-year-old son was a pallbearer at the funeral of his friend, Juan Carlos, also 16.

Juan was a fine boy, clean-cut, courteous, an honor student (second in his class of 132) and an altar server of his church. He was an only child — his mother was 45 and father was 51 when he was born. They loved this boy so much — he wasn't spoiled and had many friends.

Juan was driving a small car, a birthday present from his parents. He changed lanes and was speeding to pass a "slow" car. He was killed in a head-on collision with a truck. He never had a chance.

It could have happened to my son, or any other boy who took a chance and drove too fast. Please run your article, "Please, God, I'm only 17." It may save a young life. — BEVERLY GRAHAM, BROWNSVILLE, TEXAS

DEAR BEVERLY: Here it is, with my heartfelt sympathy to the family of Juan Carlos:

PLEASE, GOD, I'M ONLY 17

The day I died was an ordinary school day. How I wish I had taken the bus! But I was too cool for the bus. I remember how I wheedled the car out of Mom. "Special favor," I pleaded. "All the kids drive." When the 2:50 bell rang, I threw all my books in the locker. I was free until 8:40 tomorrow morning! I ran to the parking lot, excited at the thought of driving a car and being my own boss. Free!

It doesn't matter how the accident happened. I was goofing off — going too fast. Taking crazy chances. But I was enjoying my freedom and having fun. The last thing I remember was passing an old lady who seemed to be going awfully slow. I heard a deafening crash and I felt a terrible jolt. Glass and steel flew everywhere. My whole body seemed to be turning inside out. I heard myself scream.

Suddenly I awakened; it was very quiet. A police officer was standing over me. Then I saw a doctor. My body was mangled. I was saturated with blood. Pieces of jagged glass were sticking out all over. Strange that I couldn't feel anything.

Hey, don't pull that sheet over my head! I can't be dead. I'm only 17. I've got a date tonight. I'm supposed to grow up and have a wonderful life. I haven't lived yet. I can't be dead.

Later I was placed in a drawer. My folks had to identify me. Why did they have to see me like this? Why did I have to look at Mom's eyes when she faced the most terrible ordeal of her life? Dad suddenly looked like an old man. He told the man in charge, "Yes, he is my son."

The funeral was a weird experience. I saw all my relatives and friends walk toward the casket. They passed by, one by one, and looked at me with the saddest eyes I've ever seen. Some of my buddies were crying. A few of the girls touched my hand and sobbed as they walked away.

Please — somebody — wake me up! Get me out of here! I can't bear to see my mom and dad so broken up. My grandparents are so racked with grief they can hardly walk. My brother and sisters are like zombies. They move like robots. In a daze, everybody! No one can believe this. And I can't believe it, either.

Please don't bury me! I'm not dead! I have a lot of living to do! I want to laugh and run again. I want to sing and dance. Please don't put me in the ground. I promise if you give me just one more chance, God, I'll be the most careful driver in the whole world. All I want is one more chance.

Please, God, I'm only 17!

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Tuesday, August 27, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: A sobering experience strengthens your resolve and makes you a more valuable employee. A family member holds the key to a successful new career. Be open to suggestions. You may be overlooking something right under your nose. Patch up any domestic squabbles before they develop into something serious. A new era is dawning for business. Make a special effort to bring a big project in under budget. CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Mother Teresa of Calcutta, actresses Tuesday Weld and Barbara Bach, the Texas Rangers' premier third baseman, Buddy Bell, comedienne Martha Raye, singer Tommy Sands, film producer Samuel Goldwyn, President Lyndon Baines Johnson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You will have to go all out to win that promotion or new job you want. Find out exactly how something works before trying to repair it. Romance looks very promising.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A dazzling performance helps you move up the career ladder. Chase "the blahs" away with good company and a wonderful dinner. At work, focus on ways to increase productivity.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Today gives you a taste of what business will be like during the next few weeks. Stay calm and rely on your associates for help. Issuing ultimatums will work against you. Use persuasion.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Switching to high-tech services puts a company -- and your career -- on the fast track. The changes you make now could mean big savings later on. Be open to suggestions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A new plan could offer you extraordinary versatility in the financial area. Responsive answers serve you well. Concentrate on reducing business costs. An evening at home proves most relaxing.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A friend can help you improve business. Respond to inquiry and success will follow. A wonderful surprise could be just around the corner. Advertise your services in an original way.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Be flexible. Responding quickly to employer's needs will bring new financial gains. A romantic escapade is fun but may not lead to a long-term relationship. Be philosophical.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): You could be sitting on a powder keg at home. Defuse a potentially explosive situation. Try not to be so sensitive when someone offers constructive criticism. Travel gives you a new perspective.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): An evenhanded approach will produce the results you want. Extra money comes rolling in. Cut everyday expenditures in order to build savings. Distant events show new promise. Call a loved one.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Time is on your side. Play a waiting game if unsure what to do next. Your honesty is a tremendous asset. Stand up for your principles even if whistle-blowing looks risky.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Financial worries will grow unless you take immediate action. Find a way to make a payment before you receive another reminder. Romance is in bloom. Confide in those closest to your heart.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A closer scrutiny of your budget could help you get domestic life back on track. You can take pride in being loyal to a friend who is having problems. Love conquers all.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠5 ♡AK982 ♢AQ102 ♣A74

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Dble	Pass	1 ♠

What action do you take?

A.—Neither a heart rebid nor two diamonds would express the power and distribution of your hand. Your only choice is a double. Since partner has not yet bid, and since this is your first opportunity to make that bid, the double is for takeout.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠982 ♡AKJ104 ♢63 ♣A63

Your right-hand opponent opens the bidding with one no trump. What action do you take?

A.—You have splendid defense against a no trump contract and, since you will be on lead, there is no need to take any chance to steer partner in the right direction. An overcall of two hearts simply begs for trouble because you have no margin of safety. Pass.

Q.3—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠KQ5 ♡876 ♢Q7632 ♣KQ

Partner opens the bidding with two diamonds. What do you bid now?

A.—The question is not whether you can make slam, but whether you have a grand slam. To allow for orderly investigation, your first priority is to set the trump suit. Bid three diamonds. That will permit the rest of the auction to flow smoothly.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:

♠743 ♡KJ5 ♢Q542 ♣KQJ

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	2 ♢	Dble	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—Your side values combined with partner's removal of your penalty double suggests that he has opened a distributional hand with good spades. Your hand is worth a move, but don't even think of bidding no trump with your single stopper in the enemy suit—partner must be short in that suit. The correct action is a raise to three spades.

Q.5—As South, vulnerable, you hold:

♠J109852 ♡K6 ♢A1074 ♣A

The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	2 NT	Pass

What action do you take?

A.—With scattered honors, no trump might well be the place to play the hand. However, your hand is so unbalanced we suggest that you bid three diamonds to complete the description of your 6-4 distribution. Partner is free to pass three diamonds, correct to spades or persist with no trump. With a stronger 6-4 two-suiter, you should bid the four-card suit before rebidding your six-card major.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South, you hold:

♠J76 ♡KQ652 ♢K1063 ♣8

The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♢	Pass	1 ♡	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?

A.—This is the time to throw your point-count book out of the window. We have often remarked on the power of a double fit. This hand is a classic example. Bid four hearts. Anything less is asking partner to do what you should have done yourself.

Cosby thinks apartheid no laughing matter, refuses to bow to NBC censor

Bill Cosby

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Bill Cosby took his campaign against South Africa's racial policies to his top-rated television show despite objections from NBC, Newsweek magazine says in a cover-story profile of the comedian.

Cosby threatened to walk off the set 10 minutes before the taping of a scene in the season's premier episode because network censors objected to a foot-long sign Cosby ordered for the set that contained the words "Abolish Apartheid," the magazine said in its current issue.

The censors said the network could not appear to endorse a controversial position, Newsweek said.

"There may be two sides to apartheid in Archie Bunker's house. But it's impossible that the Huxtables (his TV family) would be on any side but one. That sign will stay on that door. And I've told NBC that if they want it down or if they try to edit it out, there will be no show," Cosby said.

The sign stayed up, Newsweek said.

Bob Hope

GREENSBORO (AP) — Comedian Bob Hope, singer Diahann Carroll, actress Cathy Lee Crosby, "Miami Vice" actor Don Johnson and former football star O.J. Simpson will be taking to the tube to help promote American-made textiles.

The five celebrities were hired to appear in television commercials promoting the textile and apparel industry's "Crafted with Pride in the U.S.A." campaign.

The first installment of the $33 million campaign is set to begin today in major cities across the United States, industry officials said.

Robert Swift, executive director of the Crafted with Pride council, said the campaign is to sell consumers on U.S.-made products rather than to lobby for protectionist legislation against imports.

WATERFORD, Conn. (AP) — Ray Bradbury, known for his futuristic novels, defends nuclear weapons as having "prevented a major war."

Bradbury turned 65 last week in Waterford, where he was turning "Fahrenheit 451" into a musical drama at the O'Neill Theater Center's Opera Music Theater Conference.

"The atom bomb is the most Christian thing we've ever invented," Bradbury said in an interview in Sunday's editions of The Day of New London. "I'm totally convinced it's prevented Russia from taking over the rest of Europe."

Bradbury's best-known books are "Fahrenheit 451," written 25 years ago, and "The Martian Chronicles."

SEATTLE (AP) — Lorian Hemingway, granddaughter of novelist Ernest Hemingway, has a new writing assignment from Penthouse magazine for a story on treasure hunter Mel Fisher.

Fisher recently found the main wreckage of Nuestra Senora de Atocha, a Spanish galleon that sank off Florida 362 years ago.

On the day of Fisher's discovery, Ms. Hemingway — whose first name comes from that of an Italian lake — was in Key West, arm-wrestling in a tournament at Sloppy Joe's bar.

"Two days after the galleon's hull was found, Hurricane Bob hit the Florida coast," she said. "The town went crazy. You could sense the superstition. A lot of people felt God was angry that the treasure had been disturbed."

There was a time when Ms. Hemmingway, cousin of actresses Margaux and Mariel Hemingway, did not even use the last name of her famous grandfather. But now, she said, "I'm not wary any more. Besides, it's a pretty name."

Rock Hudson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The condition of Rock Hudson, who is battling a case of deadly AIDS, has improved, but he will need ongoing medical care at home, a hospital spokesman said.

Escorted by friends, Hudson slipped out of UCLA Medical Center Saturday night to recuperate at home, said a hospital spokesman who spoke on condition that he not be identified.

"He was escorted by his staff and left in a private automobile," the spokesman said. "His overall medical condition was improved slightly since his admission on July 30. His condition was fair at the time of discharge."

Hudson, 59, had entered the medical center July 30 in serious condition.

Twenty-six days earlier, the actor arrived in Los Angeles on a chartered Air France jetliner and was flown by helicopter to UCLA.

Dale Olson, spokesman for the actor, was unavailable for comment or details on Hudson's sudden release. Messages left on Olson's telephone answering machine Sunday were not returned.

Hudson was treated for AIDS in Paris for six weeks last year with HPA 23, an experimental drug unavailable in the United States. But he was too weak to receive further treatments so he returned to the United States.

The star of the television show "McMillan and Wife," Hudson earned an Academy Award nomination for his role in the 1956 epic film "Giant."

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is a disease that cripples the body's immune system, leaving the victim vulnerable to infections and other diseases, including cancer.

AIDS is most likely to strike homosexuals, abusers of injectable drugs and hemophiliacs. It can apparently be spread by sexual contact, contaminated needles and blood transfusions, but not by casual contact.

As of Thursday, AIDS had struck 12,599 people in the United States and claimed 6,338 lives since 1979. The national Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta began keeping track on June 1, 1981, and traced back to 1979.

Funnyman John Candy loses his cool when his canine companion joins him and his swollen leg in the backyard kiddie pool in a scene from Paramount Pictures' comedy, "Summer Rental."

Rising stars headline TV movie

New season holds intriguing casting choices

By LEE MARGUILES

Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Madolyn Smith and Tom Berenger have been set for the leading roles in "If Tomorrow Comes," a six-hour miniseries that CBS is producing from the novel by Sidney Sheldon. Smith and Berenger play thieves who fall in love, then get involved in a major crime caper that brings them into conflict with an investigator played by David Keith. The project is filming in Los Angeles, New Orleans, England, France and Amsterdam.

• • •

Shari Belafonte-Harper and LeVar Burton are starring in a Halloween movie for ABC called "The Midnight Hour." It is billed as a comedy-thriller about what happens when a 300-year-old ghost shows up at a costume party. Also in the cast are Dick Van Patten, Kevin McCarthy, Jonelle Allen, Lee Montgomery and Jonna Lee.

• • •

Hal Holbrook, David McCallum and Ray Sharkey are starring in a TV movie for NBC that also will serve as the pilot for a possible series about American spies working in London during World War II. It is called "OSS," as in Office of Strategic Services. According to the network, the show will focus not only on the war-related activities but also on "life in London during the blitz, Anglo-American relations and big-band music."

• • •

Ron Reagan Jr. has gone to work at ABC and now President Reagan's other son, Michael, has landed a TV job, too. He will be a reporter on a new syndicated series that premieres in October, "All About Us," hosted by Ron Hendren. The magazine-format series will report on human interest stories.

• • •

People: William Katt, son of actress Barbara Hale and the former star of "The Greatest American Hero," has joined his mother in the cast of "The Return of Perry Mason," a TV movie that will air on NBC this season. He'll play Paul Drake Jr., son of the character originally played by the late William Hopper.

• • •

Mary Ann Mobley has replaced Dixie Carter as Conrad Bain's wife in "Diff'rent Strokes," the veteran comedy series that is moving from NBC to ABC this fall.

• • •

Burt Reynolds is directing a show for the coming "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" series on NBC.

• • •

As in years gone by, Johnny Carson will celebrate his anniversary as "Tonight Show" host with a two-hour special in prime time, during which he'll show clips of favorite segments, spotlighting his 23rd year. The program is due to air on NBC Sept. 29.

• • •

Jade Chin, a 10-year-old girl from Vancouver, has landed the title role in "The Story of Linn Yann," a TV movie for ABC about the girl who, three years after fleeing her native Cambodia, won a spelling contest in the United States. Kieu Chinh will portray the girl's mother, and Wayne Rogers and Mary Kay Place will play the couple who opened their home in Chattanooga, Tenn., to the refugees.

Fall films aim for moviegoers weary of teens and screams

By BOB THOMAS

Associated Press

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Film lovers of America, weary of teen-age science projects and rampaging avengers, can find solace in the fall movie menu. It contains the hope of movies with appeal to the adult mind.

Any season that offers "Agnes of God" with Anne Bancroft, Jane Fonda and Meg Tilly can't be all bad. The Columbia Pictures version of the hit Broadway play will be released in September.

The studios traditionally flood the summer market with movies that appeal to the out-of-schoolers. After Labor Day, theaters offer fare with broader interest and some with Academy Award possibilities. Autumn is the time of the "platform release," when prestige films open in a few key cities, then spread outward.

Here are some of the more promising attractions:

—"Plenty" with Meryl Streep and Sting in the David Hare play.

—"Marie," starring Sissy Spacek as the Tennessee parole commissioner who blew the whistle on corruption.

—"Eleni," starring Kate Nelligan and John Malkovich in the real-life story of New York Times reporter Nicholas Gage's search for his mother's Greek past.

—"Sweet Dreams," Jessica Lange and Ed Harris in the tumultuous life of the late country singer Patsy Cline.

—"After Hours," an offbeat Manhattan comedy by Martin Scorsese ("Raging Bull") with Griffin Dunne, Rosanna Arquette and Teri Garr.

—"Mishima: A Life in Four Chapters," a study of Japan's cult leader, directed by Paul Schrader and presented by Francis Coppola and George Lucas.

—"White Nights," combining the disparate talents of Mikhail Baryshnikov and Gregory Hines.

—"Jagged Edge," Jeff Bridges and Glenn Close in a courtroom drama.

—"Lady Jane," a story of the brief marriage of Lady Jane Grey to Henry VIII directed by Trevor Nunn ("Cats").

—"Target," Arthur Penn's adventure about a young man (Matt Dillon) who discovers that his father (Gene Hackman) is involved in a spy plot.

The fall season also offers promise of a more adult approach to comedy. After the failure of "Brewster's Millions," Richard Pryor returns with his self-directed "Jo Jo Dancer, Your Life Is Calling." Glenn Close, Mandy Patinkin and Ruth Gordon star in "Maxie," about a 1920s flapper who invades the body of a San Francisco housewife. Judge Reinhold ("Beverly Hills Cop") tops a stellar cast in "Head Office," hijinx in the executive suite.

There will be action-adventure aplenty:

—"To Live and Die in L.A." with William Friedkin directing a Secret Service adventure that may recall "The French Connection."

—"Commando" with Arnold Schwarzenegger and plenty of action.

—"Remo: The Adventure Begins," Fred Ward and Joel Grey in a thriller based on "The Destroyer" novels and directed by Guy Hamilton of the James Bond films.

—"Flesh and Blood" with Rutger Hauer as a mercenary soldier in 16th century Europe.

—"Blue City," Judd Nelson and Ally Sheedy in a Ross McDonald mystery.

But despite the emphasis on adult fare, the young audience won't be neglected.

"My Man Adam" concerns a 17-year-old (Raphael Sbarge) with a consuming ambition to become a TV anchor man. "Odd Job" concerns five college buddies who get into the movie business. "Better Off Dead" relates the joys and sorrows of teenage love, with John Cusack ("16 Candles") as the frustrated lover.

Two new films will arrive early for the climactic holiday season: "Santa Claus: The Movie" (Dudley Moore, John Lithgow) from the makers of "Superman"; and "One Night Before Christmas" (Mary Steenburgen, Harry Dean Stanton) from Disney.

Also due this fall: "Creator," with Peter O'Toole as an ecccentric professor who clones his long-dead wife; "Joshua Then and Now," James Woods and Alan Arkin in a Mordecai Richler story; "Silver Bullet" with Gary Busey trying to save a town from a werewolf attack; and "Rocky IV," in which the legendary fighter takes on a Soviet fighter in the ring.

Dallas money gathers art, gathers scorn of artists, critics

DALLAS (AP) — When H. Ross Perot rode into New York with his financial six-shooters aimed at the Museum of the American Indian, some New Yorkers took offense at the boldness of the Texan's ploy to move the museum.

Yet Perot's bid was only one of a series of recent moves in the art world designed to bolster Dallas' cultural clout.

Although Dallas' effort to transform itself into a mecca of culture and art is not unique, its exuberance and seemingly endless supply of money often are. Moreover, in its zeal to acquire what is great in art, the city has sometimes alienated local artists and outraged the established art world.

"Texas doesn't believe in solving its problems with its minds. It solves them with its hands and its pocketbook," observes author and historian A.C. Greene. "In Texas, we just don't respect people who think; we respect people who do."

The purchase of one of the priceless Magna Charta copies by Perot, who then turned around and offered $70 million to the neglected Indian museum for a new home, is typically Texan some say.

The billionaire founder of Electronic Data Systems handled the purchase as efficiently as the dozens of business deals he yearly strikes. A friend had suggested to Perot that the United States should have one of the rare copies. So Perot put up $1.5 million and gave it to the National Archives.

ENTERTAINMENT

However, Perot's offer for the Museum of the American Indian enraged New Yorkers. The collection of American Indian artifacts is heralded as the most impressive in the world. In New York, it has been relegated to a space so small in upper Manhattan that only 4 percent of its treasures can be displayed.

"I keep telling people in New York that I'm not the enemy," said Perot. "My advice is very simple: Build a museum up there and the problem will go away. Shouting about it is not productive. Raising money is productive."

Harlan Crow, a partner in Trammell Crow Co., brought objects once held by such historic figures as Thomas Jefferson from the National Museum of American History to Dallas. The exhibit was free to the public.

"It cost money to have these things happen, and if our style is not appreciated...it's an irritating thing to me," said Crow.

"I do sort of agree that Dallas is trying to buy culture," said artist Jack Mims, who's won critical acclaim for his mythological, earthy paintings. Criticism from local actors, musicians, artists, writers and others who have made art their life and Dallas their home is often harsh. They say they feel shut out, that Dallas only respects what outside experts have already approved.

Yet the ability of Dallas' wealthy and prominent to import art of international significance expands the city's cultural offerings.

Arkansas River dares kayakers to accept the challenge

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

SALIDA, Colo. — Deglen O'Drisceoil, 20, of Dublin, Ireland, was drenched by towering waves as he maneuvered his 13-foot kayak through the treacherous Cottonwood Rapids on the Arkansas River.

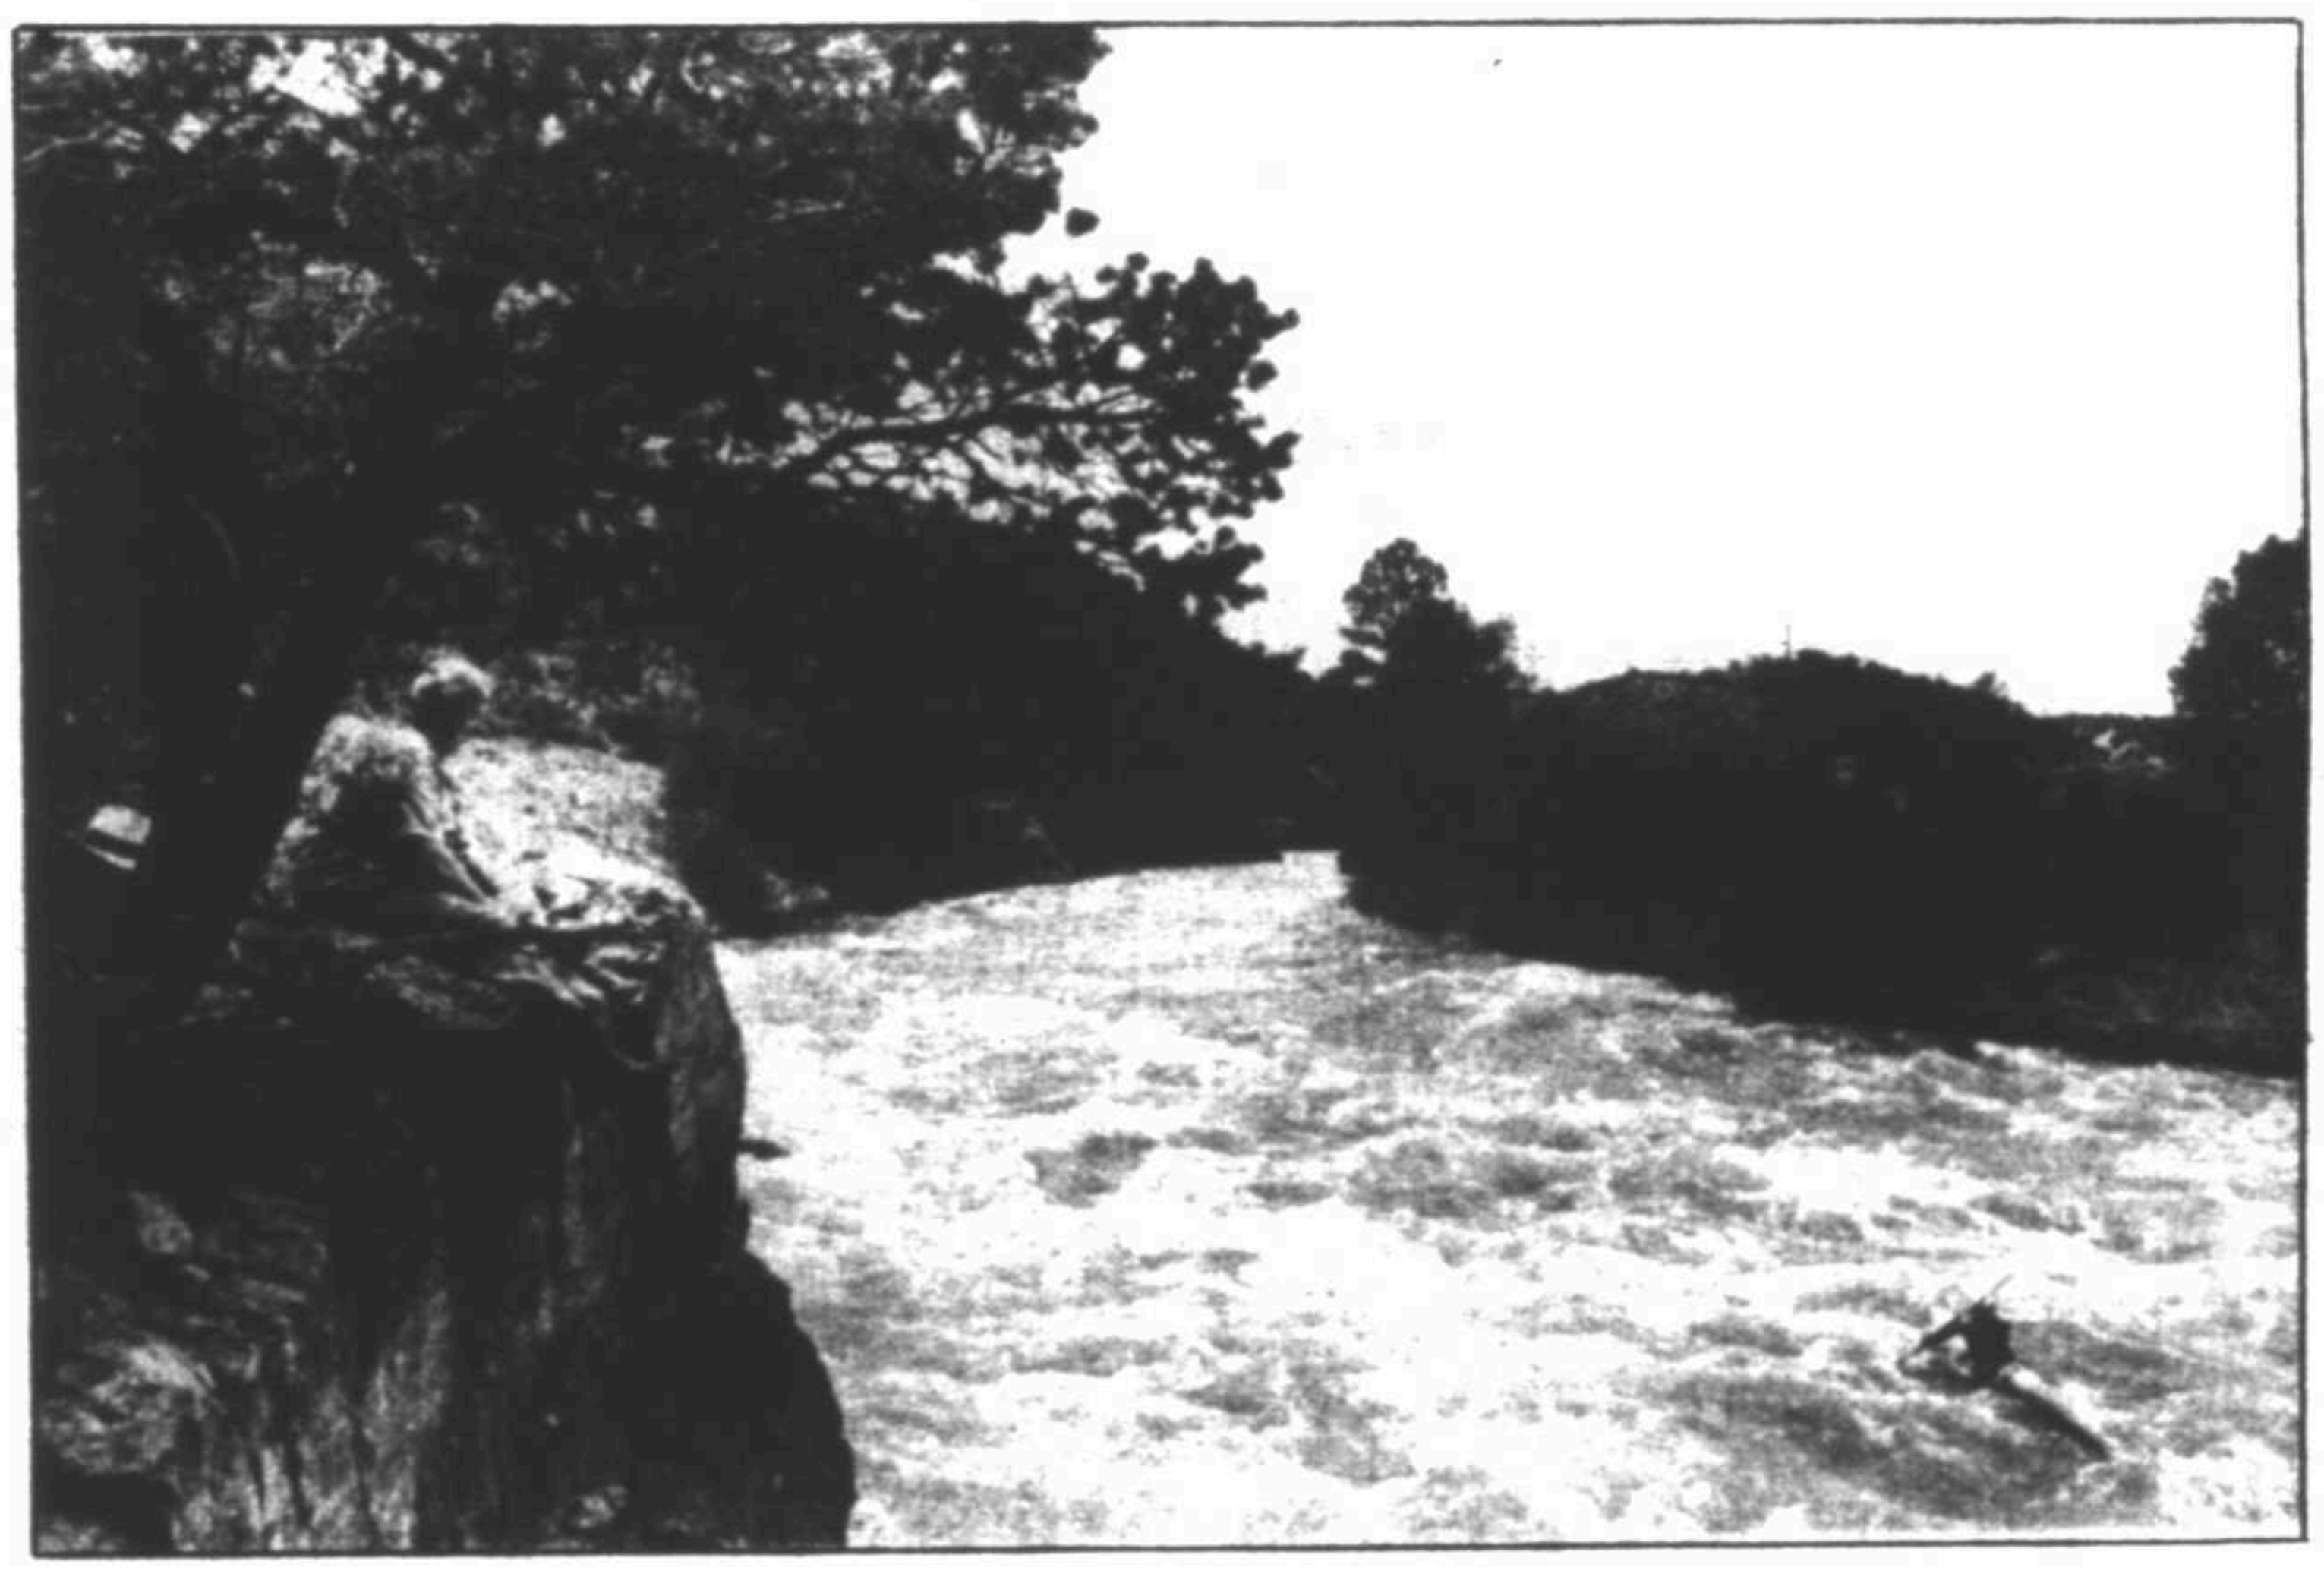
A few hundred spectators watching from atop huge boulders along the riverbank whooped it up, yelling, clapping and cheering.

O'Drisceoil fought every inch of the way through the violent, churning river, doing everything in his power to stay afloat. His face was contorted as he attempted to make it through this final hurdle in the toughest, longest, oldest, down-river kayak race on earth.

They call it the FIBArk — First In Boating on the Arkansas — and this was the 37th running of the 26.7-mile race down the swollen Arkansas River from the old mining camp that is now Salida to the small town of Cotopaxi.

Melting snows feed hundreds of streams that pour into the Arkansas River, giving 30 of the world's leading Kayak racers one of the wildest rides of their lives.

O'Drisceoil, one of three members of the Irish National Kayak Team competing in the race, made it safely through the rapids. The rest of the course — four miles downriver to the finish line at the Cotopaxi Bridge — was comparatively simple.



A spectator watches the live, roaring action of kayakers on the Bear Creek rapids during the FIBArk race.

LAT Photo

O'DRISCEOIL FINISHED 12th in 2:06.15, completing the course without being thrown into the bone-chilling waters.

"I've kayaked throughout Europe, in the Alps of Germany, Switzerland and Italy," he said, "and there's nothing that can compare to this race."

European championship Kayak races are only 4.9 miles in length in rivers not nearly as hazardous.

Winner of this year's FIBArk was Andy Corra, 24, of Durango, Colo., a member of the U.S. National Kayak Team, who finished the course in 1:55.35, the third-best time on record. Five of the eight members of the U.S. team were in the race.

Corra, a student at Fort Lewis College in Durango, spun around in the Cottonwood, the most feared and powerful of the 25 raids on the river, but managed not to spill. Others were not as fortunate.

Chris Byars, 45, competing for the 10th time, was sent flying out of his kayak and barely missed the rock walls of the canyon. Undeterred, he climbed back into his kayak without help and completed the race.

TWO OTHER kayaks entered the rapids, spun around and almost collided. Then, they flipped simultaneously, spilling David Scheuerman, 26, of Vail, Colo., and Arney McCoy, 18, of Salida. Safety divers leaped into the river to rescue them, but they came up on their own and went on to finish the race.

McCoy's mother, Cheryl, 40, was among the 300 spectators on the pile of boulders flanking the raids. "I was scared to death. I was afraid Arney and Dave were never going to come up. I had never seen Arney race before. Never seen him go through rapids," Cheryl McCoy said as she greeted her son at the finish line.

The competitors know the dangers of the river. Just the day before, one of the divers, Bill Taylor, a 25-year-old former Navy frogman, drowned while swimming in the annual eight-mile safety diver race.

Taylor's head slammed into a submerged cottonwood tree two miles into the race. He was knocked unconscious and drowned before he could be rescued.

A DOZEN members of the Puebla-based Colorado Gypsy Divers sport diving team — 10 men and two women — have served as safety swimmers at the FIBArk every year for 20 years. If any of the kayakers run into trouble and need help, divers stationed at the more treacherous rapids go to their assistance. Taylor's death was the first at a FIBArk event since a kayaker drowned in the competition 25 years ago.

Four of the 30 contestants in this year's race were women, three of them members of the West German Women's National Kayak Team.

They did well in the FIBArk race, too. Karen Wahl, 21, a bank receptionist and the world's No.1-ranked woman kayaker, won the women's race in 2:02.46; Andrea Hotzendorfer, 22, a secretary, finished in 2:04.32; and Dagmar Volke, 24, 1983 world champion finished in 2:04.39.

Several hundred people watched the kayakers paddle down 26.7-mile course. They sat in cars and pickups above the riverbank, on rocks, and on foot and vehicle bridges. Some picnicked.

KAYAKERS ROWED and were carried by the rushing waters through open meadows, narrow rock-rib canyons, through tiny mountain towns, Wellsville, Swissvale, Howard, Coaldale and finally Cotopaxi, named after an Ecuadorian volcano by a 19th century winner who mined in both Colorado and South America.

The skills of the experienced competitors such as Anderson boaters were especially tested at the bigger rapids, Barrel, Slanting Rock, Badger Creek, Whitehorse, Tin Cup, Red Rocks, Railroad, Cottonwood.

At Salida, the elevation is 7,200 feet. At the Cotopaxi Bridge where the race ends, it is 6,300 feet. The race began on a warm sunny June day. By the time the kayakers reached Cottonwood rapids, there was thunder, lighting and rain.

There are thousands of kayakers in this country, but only 760 are members of the American Canoe Assn., kayakers who race in sanctioned events such as the FIBArk. The rapids and the length of this race are so strenuous, so demanding, that only the very best enter.

Kayaking for sport began in the southern portion of Germany around the turn of the century.

By the end of World War II, whitewater kayaking competition was well developed throughout Europe. The first world championship kayak slalom was held in Switzerland in 1949.

National park balances on fault line

By CHARLES HILLINGER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

PINNACLES NATIONAL MONUMENT, Calif. — Two National Park Service rangers stood beneath the gigantic boulder wedged inside a narrow canyon. They were checking it for any movement.

"What a time for an earthquake," joked Steve Debenedetti, park resources manager.

Every week since October, when the caves were reopened after being closed for 19 months, rangers at Pinnacles National Monument 60 miles southeast of Monterey have been monitoring a network of boulders that form the roofs of two caves in the park. The rangers use a highly accurate measuring device called a tape extensometer.

Quarter-mile-long Bear Gulch Cave and 300-foot-long Balconies Cave were formed over the centuries by an aggregation of differently shaped boulders sliding down narrow canyon walls and wedging against each other near the canyon bottom.

When a boulder about six feet in diameter fell from the ceiling of Balconies Cave in March 1983, the Park Service sealed the caves with iron gates. It was the first time in 75 years — since establishment of the monument by President Theodore Roosevelt — that part of a roof of one of the caves had collapsed. No one was hurt.

THE HUGE ROCK was jarred loose during a three-day storm. Seven inches of rain pelted the park, and streams meandering through the caves became rushing torrents.

Authorities feared that other rocks and boulders might fall, particularly since the caves sit on top of a particularly active segment of the San Andreas Fault, and earthquakes occur here frequently.

"We seriously considered sealing the caves permanently," said Edward R. Carlson, the chief ranger. "But the caves are the highlight of the national monument. The caves are what bring people here. We received hundreds of complaints about the closure."

About 50,000 visitors to the monument each year use the trails in the caves, some sections of which have to be crawled through. Other parts of the caves open into large rooms.

After the decision was made to reopen the caves, a seismograph was installed at the park visitors' center.

IF SEISMIC activity of 2.0 or greater on the Richter scale is noted, all the critical points in the cave are immediately measured. If significant rock movement is detected or high water conditions exist, the caves will be closed until conditions are stable, Carlson said, adding that the monitoring program will continue indefinitely.

Stability of the caves is not the only source of concern for rangers at the Pinnacles National Monument.

They are also upset about an exploding population of wild hogs that are "rooting up monument trails and tearing apart plants," according to Debenedetti. And, rangers say, local ranchers insist on grazing their cattle on monument land.

"Our mandate is to manage the park in its natural state; we're not in the business to manage this resource as a ranch," Debenedetti said.

TO COPE WITH the animal problem, the park service wants to erect a 23-mile, $556,000 wire fence around the monument. But the plan has met with opposition from other government agencies and from local citizens. The San Benito County Board of Supervisors recently voted to oppose the fence.

"The fence would be a plain waste of taxpayers' money," said Supervisor Rocky Lydon, who until his retirement was a farm adviser for the University of California. "That fence isn't about to stop hogs. Hogs will dig holes underneath it, go through it."

Wild hogs were introduced into California in the 1920s by a private hunting club.

Don Pine, a wildlife biologist for the California Department of Fish and Game, and David Howell, area manager for the U.S. Bureau of Land Management, contend that the fence would harm the local deer population. Adult deer, but not fawns, would be able to jump over the fence, they said, and the young ones would starve or fall prey to coyotes.

Pine said the park service should either allow hunters to shoot the hogs, have dogs drive them out of the park or trap them.

But the park service's Carlson said hunting wild hogs in a national monument would provoke the same kind of public reaction as did shooting wild burros in Death Valley and the Grand Canyon.

Some critics of the park service have suggested that rangers round up and sell any cattle that wander on national park land if the neighboring ranchers are unable to care for their own animals.
