Trailer burns

In a bizarre turn of events, a trailer donated to a Midland woman to replace a previous trailer destroyed by fire was also destroyed in a blaze at 9 p.m. Friday evening.

Marie Wilson Kinsey of Midland lost a mobile home, located at 1135 County Road, in an Aug. 23 fire. The woman and her daughter, Karen Grant, were left with only the clothes on their backs following the initial fire. Statewide Mortgage of Houston, which recently acquired HSA Mortgage of Midland, donated a repossessed trailer to the mother and daughter.

The Midland Jaycees and the Midland Area Association of Life Insurance Underwriters each donated $300 towards repairs of the trailer home. It was delivered to County Road 1135 about 2:30 p.m. Friday. Midland fire fighters responded to the fire at 9 p.m. that evening.

According to Midland Fire Department reports, the trailer was blazing upon their arrival and the fire was contained. The trailer suffered major damage. Although arson is a possibility, the cause of the fire was still undetermined at press time, officials said.

Bush, Gorbachev seek common ground on Iraq

■ As American and Soviet leaders meet in Finland, the prospect of a joint declaration against his nation seems to have Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein upset.

By David Espo
Associated Press Writer

HELSINKI, Finland — President Bush and Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev arrived Saturday for summit talks spawned by the Persian Gulf crisis. Bush said he hoped for common ground against Iraq that would usher in a "more peaceful, stable and secure" post-Cold War era.

Gorbachev said it was important for the two men to cooperate to protect "positive trends" taking place elsewhere in the world.

Iraq's Saddam Hussein directed presummit advice to the two leaders, telling Bush the prestige of the United States would sink "if it were to slide into the abyss of war" and telling Gorbachev that siding with the Americans would increase world doubts about Soviet status as a superpower.

Saddam, in a statement read on Iraqi televison by a spokesman, said that as the two men weigh summit decisions, "the angels will be hovering above you on one side and devils on the other."

Bush's national security adviser, Brent Scowcroft, suggested later that the prospect of U.S.-Soviet unity on the Persian Gulf was upsetting Saddam.

"We hope it causes him to lose some sleep," Scowcroft said after a working dinner with Bush and other top aides.

The five-hour summit held out the prospect of an extraordinary joint declaration against Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. Also on the agenda for the hastily arranged meeting were sticky arms control disputes, the future of Europe and other traditional East-West concerns as well as possible aid to the Soviet Union.

In Saudi Arabia, a diplomatic source said Gorbachev came to Helsinki prepared to offer the Soviet maritime fleet to the United States to transport equipment to the Middle East and to withdraw the roughly 1,000 Soviet advisers from Iraq.

The month-old U.S. military deployment has been handicapped by the lack of sealift for materiel.

Here in Helsinki, the usual summit accoutrements were in evidence, from the extremely tight security to the Soviet, American and Finnish flags flying side by side by side. T-shirts showing the faces of Bush and Gorbachev superimposed on Saddam's visage were selling for $20.

Events in Persian Gulf cast new light on state campaign

By Rick Brown
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Two months shy of balloting for a new slate of statewide officeholders, an international crisis has diverted public attention and forced a new dynamic on the campaign, analysts say.

Texans have become more attuned to economic questions with the rise in oil prices, while their impulse to rally around President Bush, an ostensible homeboy, has zippered lips that might have broached criticism in other circumstances.

Nationally, the crisis has tended to divert public attention from a faltering economy, said Robert Lichter of the Center for Media and Public Affairs in Washington, D.C.

But in Texas, the situation is reversed, he said, as each rise in oil prices brings higher hopes for a recovery in the state's oil industry.

Candidates in both parties agree that the economic benefits will materialize only with a sustained period of higher oil prices, but whatever the outcome, "the public consciousness is being redefined just before an election," Lichter said. "It changes the issues."

Not only is Texas topsy-turvy in relation to the rest of the country, but the reactions of Texas candidates and party spokesmen also go against the expected grain.

City looks at minority promotions

■ Blaming the "buddy system" for imbalance in administrative position, Councilman Jose Cuevas introduces a recruitment program designed to help minority employees climb the city's ladder of success.

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Dedication, loyalty and hard work has paid off for at least one Hispanic employee who has climbed the municipal ladder to a managerial position.

Rumaldo "Ray" Navarro Jr., 40, started as an equipment operator with the city of Midland in 1982. Eight years later, Navarro has worked his way to assistant superintendent of the street department.

"It was hard work and being a dependable employee," he said of the reasons for his promotions through the years. "I looked out for the best interests of the city.

"You have to put a little extra in on your own to strive for that goal for yourself."

Other minorities hoping to ascend the city's corporate mountain, however, haven't had it so easy.

A lack of minorities and women in upper and middle management has resulted because some departments have used the "buddy system" to fill positions, Councilman Jose Cuevas said last week.

"They're getting people they know they can control and who do not question authority," Cuevas said. "That can be dangerous because it allows the management to build an empire."

A January survey conducted by the city shows that of the 79 administrative and managerial positions, only six, or 7.6 percent, were filled by Hispanics and one by a black. Six of the positions, or 7.6 percent, were filled by women, none of whom were minorities.

In comparison, the overall 908-member city work force was 27.6 percent Hispanic, 5.4 percent black and 66.6 female.

Cuevas said many of the minorities and women have been passed over when it comes time to hire department and division heads, superintendents and assistant superintendents.

"I've come in contact with a lot of city employees who feel that they have not been given an equal opportunity," Cuevas said. "A lot of the individuals, male and female, have college degrees and have been with the city for several years. They get bypassed."

But the city has decided to evenly spread the hiring wealth this year by implementing a minority recruiting

Remembrance of war

Two of the thousands of visitors who attend the Vietnam Veterans Memorial in Washington, D.C., each year take a rubbing of one of the 58,000 names etched into the black granite memorial.

Bungled U.S. policies still puzzle Vietnam vets

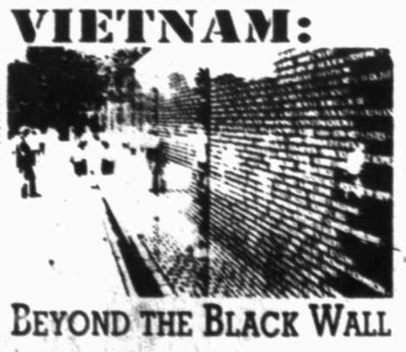

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

In Washington, D.C., overshadowing memorials honoring the dead, is a heated debate between corporate America and Congress on whether to lift a 12-year-old trade embargo against Vietnam.

Since opening its doors to foreign trade three years ago, the Vietnamese government estimates 5,000 business interests have set up shop in an area that still brings horror to some of the 2.7 million veterans who were part of America's longest running war theater — from 1965 through 1975.

Today, overseas multinationals such as British Petroleum and Royal Dutch Shell are developing petroleum reserves under an agreement that allows them a 99 percent stake in joint ventures.

Those projects and others, many involving Japan, prompted Fortune magazine to suggest six months ago that it was time to reverse U.S. policies toward Vietnam and normalize relations.

BEYOND THE BLACK WALL

U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia was the first overseas military conflict that caused blood to flow in American streets.

Now, as our nation faces the Mideast crisis involving the largest U.S. military deployment since the fall of Saigon 15 years ago, we examine the aftermath of the longest war in our history.

TODAY: For many of the 25,000 Vietnam veterans in the Permian Basin, the war won't go away.

If only the issues of Vietnam were so black and white.

If only it were a question of letting bygones be bygones.

In the Permian Basin — where an estimated 25,000 war veterans live today — Vietnam remains as tangled an issue as the jungles in which many served.

From the highly charged POW-/MIA controversy to questions surrounding U.S. government use of Agent Orange, the scars of battle have been slow to heal.

And if the tangible issues aren't enough, consider the intangible ones such as post traumatic stress disorders, the callousness of many Americans toward returning vets and political bunglings that led to Saigon's eventual fall to the Communists.

While war veterans may not agree on the pros and cons surrounding the U.S. involvement in Vietnam, they generally agree on one point: accomplish the objective.

"If you're going to fight a war, you fight to win," said Kerry Davis, chairman of the arts department at Midland High School and a member of the Army's 2nd/33rd Artillery Battalion, who left Vietnam in 1969.

Mother Teresa accepts 'God's will,' puts aside retirement plans

WORLD

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Mother Teresa, saying she was bowing to God's will, accepted re-election Saturday as head of her worldwide mission for the poor after nuns ignored her wish to retire and voted for her to remain.

Teresa

The vote was intended to choose a successor to Mother Teresa, but after the results were announced the 80-year-old Nobel laureate withdrew her decision to step down as superior general of the Missionaries of Charity.

"She hasn't changed her mind, but she was elected," said Monsignor Francis Gomes, who presided over the secret balloting. "She hoped that someone else would be elected."

Gomes said Mother Teresa had little choice but to accept the unanimous vote.

"In religious life, there is no personal desire. You have to accept God's will," said Gomes, the vicar general of the Calcutta diocese.

The Vatican said in a statement that it approved and gave its blessing to the decision. Mother Teresa declined to meet reporters, pleading fatigue.

After the vote she told the nuns, "If this is God's will, I will serve in the capacity in the best possible way," said Gomes.

Last March, Pope John Paul II bowed to Mother Teresa's desire to retire and accepted her resignation as head of the order she founded. He had rejected her earlier requests to step down.

The Yugoslavia-born Roman Catholic nun, known as the "saint of the gutters" for her work with the destitute and dying, suffered a nearly fatal heart attack a year ago. She returned to work but asked for retirement within a few months.

Mother Teresa was elected to a six-year term. The constitution of her order calls for a maximum two terms, but the pope has waived this clause in the past so Mother Teresa could remain in the post.

The election was held a year ahead of schedule because Mother Teresa wanted to step down.

Gomes indicated that the sisters were swayed by the new democratization of Eastern Europe and the opportunities to open new missions.

"The feeling was that with so much opening up in the Western world and in Eastern Europe, they need someone who can face the challenge," he said. He spoke to reporters in the garden of an institution for retarded women and children where the assembly was held.

Mother Teresa's decision to retire had raised questions about the future of the Missionaries of Charity. Church officials have said nuns on her six-member administrative council were capable but did not have her worldwide recognition.

Pope urges narrower gap between rich, poor Africans

KABGAYI, Rwanda (AP) — Pope John Paul II Saturday called for a narrowing of the gap between Africa's urban elite and rural poor and urged peasants in this infertile nation to redouble efforts to improve the quality of their lives.

Later, the military government announced a general amnesty to mark John Paul's visit and said it will cover all prisoners except those sentenced for "political crimes and corruption against the state."

The announcement broadcast on state radio said prisoners facing the death penalty will have their sentences commuted to life imprisonment. Life sentences will be reduced to 20 years, and sentences of 10 to 20 years will be halved.

Prisoners jailed for 10 years or less and all women and prisoners under the age of 18 will be freed, the announcement said. It was not immediately known how many prisoners will be affected.

In his speech, John Paul said Rwandan peasants, who comprise more than 80 percent of the population of 7 million, have the right to demand the same health, social and administrative facilities, including credit banking, as their urban counterparts.

"It is necessary to avoid widening the inequalities between the town and the countryside," he said.

The message in French was broadcast on state radio as John Paul's motorcade traveled to the small agricultural center of Kabgayi, 40 miles southwest of the capital, Kigali. Thousands of peasants gathered in shaded banana groves near villages along the route to see him. Many held small radios to their ears.

John Paul told listeners he believed the international community was duty-bound "to contribute to the development of the peasant world."

"Development projects must not deviate from their objectives or lose sight that they are for the peasants," John Paul said.

He said industrialized nations should pay a just price for primary produce from poor nations, as well as provide humanitarian aid when conditions are worsened by famine, drought or man-made calamity.

Today, John Paul leaves Kigali for the Ivory Coast, the last stop on a 10-day, four-nation African tour that has also taken him to Burundi and Tanzani.

Maj. Gen. Juvenal Habyarimana seized power in a bloodless coup in 1973. His government has been praised for its moderate pro-Western policies but has cracked down on internal dissent.

John Paul met with civil servants and academics Saturday and commended the government for maintaining civil harmony and good relations between church and state.

Later, he repeated his warnings about the danger of AIDS in this nation at the heart of the so-called AIDS belt across central Africa. He blamed sexual permissiveness for the epidemic and urged self-control.

"Fidelity and chastity, which are part of Christian marriage, reinforce self-control," he told a gathering of 25,000 young people at the Amahoro stadium in Kigali.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Via Associated Press GraphicsNet

Partly cloudy conditions likely

Today's forecast is for partly cloudy skies, with south winds 5-15 mph and a high in the low 90s, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport.

Tonight's forecast is for mostly fair skies and a low in the mid 60s.

Monday is expected to be mostly sunny with a high in the low 90s, the NWS said.

The high Saturday was 94, compared to the record high of 100, set in 1989. The record low for today is 53, set in 1956.

STATE

Cloudy skies and thunderstorms rolled over most of Texas Saturday, as hot, unstable air settled over the Coastal Plains.

In deep South Texas, some funnel clouds were spotted with thunderstorms that were active between Harlingen and Brownsville.

Afternoon temperatures in South Texas were in the 80s and 90s, but it felt much hotter as humidity levels pushed the heat index above 100.

The forecast for South Texas called for partly cloudy skies and hot days through Monday, with a chance of mainly afternoon and evening showers and thunderstorms. Lows each night in the 70s except for 60s Hill Country and near 80 coast. Highs each day in the 90s.

In West Texas, a band of cloudiness extended from the South Plains to the northern Permian Basin and west to the mountains. Small hail and heavy rainfall was reported in Kress in the Panhandle.

In North Texas, thunderstorms stretched from Texarkana to Abilene, cooling the high temperatures that had blanketed the region for most of the week. Rainfall was estimated around one-half inch to 1 inch under the heaviest showers.

The forecast called for partly cloudy skies through Monday, with scattered showers and thundershowers. Highs Sunday and Monday in the 90s, with lows in the 70s.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Illinois woman new Miss America

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Miss Illinois Marjorie Judith Vincent, a pianist of Haitian descent who wants to practice international law, was crowned Miss America 1991 early Sunday.

Miss Vincent broke into tears and smiled brightly as she given a suprise serenade of "There She Is" by Bert Parks, who returned to the pageant 10 years after he was fired as emcee.

Following her as second runner-up was Miss Tennessee Dana Brown, 25, of Memphis. Miss Texas Suzanne Lawrence, 21, of Humble was third runner-up. And Miss Louisiana Linnea Marie Fayard, 22, of Shreveport took fifth place.

Earlier in the pageant, Parks serenaded 29 former Miss Americas with a lip-synched "There She Is" that wasn't quite synched. A standing ovation greeted Parks, who neglected to mention at least a dozen of the former beauty queens he was to introduce.

Miss Vincent, 25, of Oak Park, is a third-year law student at Duke University who graduated from DePaul University in 1988 with a degree in music.

The dark brown-eyed brunette played Chopin's "Fantasy Impromptu — Opus 66" with dramatic flourishes and a light touch during the talent portion of the competition.

The 5-foot-6, 110-pound Miss Vincent performed in a rust satin embroidered coat detailed in gold cracked ice over a black sheath petticoat dress.

She wore a turquoise chiffon silk gown that was beaded with silver, white and varying shades of turquoise bugle beads, sequins and rhinestones. The gown also featured a sweetheart neckline with a keyhole opening in the back.

Miss Vincent, who came to the United States from Haiti when she was 3 years old, has said she wants to study international law and help in the economic development of the impoverished Caribbean nation. She speaks French and creole.

She said in a pre-pageant interview that she wants to speak out on the plight of battered women.

Miss Vincent was the only black contestant among the 50 this year. Last year's Miss America, Debbye Turner, also was black.

Bush and Gorbachev, accompanied by their wives, arrived seven hours apart to identical red carpet greetings from Finnish President Mauno Koivisto.

The summit will be their third as leaders of their countries.

Bush denounced Iraq sharply in his arrival remarks, saying it must be denied the "fruits of aggression." Gorbachev spoke in more restrained terms of the need to ensure that positive trends in the world are not "thwarted by any development." He did not mention Iraq or Saddam by name.

Both Bush and Gorbachev made it clear they were hoping to use the summit to continue the improvement in relations between their two countries.

"If you want to think of a complicated situation, shift the clock back several years and think about how difficult it would be to work this equation now, get the international support that has been gotten, but try to do it without the Soviet Union being a part of it," Bush said.

"Clearly I hope that we'll come out of this meeting tomorrow not with every difference ironed out but with a common purpose so that ... the United States and the Soviet Union will be seen by others around the world to be in accord in our determination to stop this ugly aggression," he added.

He called Gorbachev "not some adversary," but the leader of a country "with whom I think we're going to have increasingly productive relations."

"If the nations of the world, acting together, continue, as they have been, to isolate Iraq and deny Saddam the fruits of aggression, we will set in place the cornerstone of an international order, more peaceful, stable and secure than any that we have known."

He added: "Much is at stake and there is much the world stands to gain if we succeed.

Gorbachev said it was important for the two men to meet personally to "discuss the acute crisis in the Persian Gulf and a number of other issues" and to cooperate.

The White House took pains to minimize the chances for an arms control breakthrough at the summit, even though talks are moving slowly to reduce nuclear stockpiles as well as to cut conventional forces in Europe. "This is not a negotiating session," said one official.

Helsinki is no stranger to important international meetings. Finlandia Hall, where Bush and Gorbachev will hold a news conference after their talks, was the site for the signing in 1975 of an international accord on human rights.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III arrived shortly before Gorbachev after a trip to the Middle East to drum up increased support for the effort to isolate Iraq.

CAMPAIGN: Changing oil prices have role statment in the early days of the crisis making clear her support for the president, in contrast to verbal brickbats she offered in past years.

Said a Richards spokesman, Glenn Smith, "Clearly the president has taken this action in the best interest of all Americans, and Ann stands behind him, as all Americans should."

However, some Republicans, mindful of the uncertainty of the crisis' outcome, are not embracing Bush as fully as they might, despite increases in his already high poll standings.

"That can all change," State Republican Party Chairman Fred Meyer said candidly of the president's public support. In the long run, "You don't know how it's going to cut," he said.

Gorden Hensley, a spokesman for Midland entrepeneur Clayton Williams' gubernatorial campaign said his candidate is making a point in stump speeches to laud the president for handling the crisis well.

But on another level, Williams continues to run negative television advertising that attacks Richards for "ridiculing" Bush when she keynoted the 1988 Democratic National Convention, Hensley said.

Richards' past comments "do not reflect the sentiment of the voters of Texas," Hensley said, but Smith thought the Republican spokesman should lighten up.

An oft-quoted phrase from Richard's speech characterized Bush as "born with a silver foot in his mouth." The president later gave the state treasurer a miniature silver foot, which she wore the last time he addressed the Texas Legislature.

"A little political humor is not going to hurt anybody," said Smith, who added, "I would hope no campaign would cynically exploit the crisis and the fact that American soldiers are in the Middle East risking their lives."

Seemingly lost in the shuffle is the question of additional state revenue that could materialize as part higher oil prices and a re-revving of the state oil industry.

Comptroller Bob Bullock, himself a candidate for lieutenant governor, has estimated every dollar increase in the price of oil adds $50 million to state coffers.

But he also has warns that the additional revenue probably won't materialize in time for the next session of the Legislature in January, when lawmakers face an estimated $3 billion budgetary shortfall.

Hensley said his candidate is running on a platform of no new taxes, which won't change whether the price of oil goes up or down. Williams is "looking at the Austin bureaucracy as an outsider just like the taxpayers do," he said.

Another Richards spokesman, Bill Cryer, said his candidate is running on a platform of no new taxes based on the state Treasury's own estimates, which indicate the state tax structure will provide an additional $3 billion to the next Legislature.

A second issue which the crisis has brought to the fore is the need for a national energy policy, which would have maintained Texas' production while lessening national dependence on foreign imports.

The Democratic and Republican candidates for Texas Railroad Commissioner, Bob Krueger and Beau Bolter, say oilmen with whom they visit on campaign stops invariably mention the issue, and they both claim to have championed the cause for many years.

"If oil is worth dying for in the Middle East, it's worth drilling for in Texas," said Krueger.

Beyond the political sparring, some operatives, especially those working on campaigns in down-ballot positions, say the crisis has forced them to search for slow news days to get their message to the public.

"All the campaigns ... are internally very aware of the situation in the Middle East," said Mark Sanders, spokesman for the Republican Rob Mosbacher, candidate for lieutenant governor and Bullock's opponent.

Such attention to timing is important when a candidate could look foolish exposing the sins of his opponant on a day when American lives are threatened overseas.

On such days, the public "really doesn't care to take the time to listen to politicians," Sanders said.

A coup Sanders thought the Mosbacher campaign had scored came this past week when an apparent three-day break in the Middle East action allowed the candidate to capture headlines over frivilous spending in the State Comptroller's Office.

The jubilation was short-lived, however, since the opening also allowed Bullock to counterpunch with lists of frivilous purchases in the Department of Human Services. Mosbacher is chairman of the board that oversees the state welfare agency.

Bullock spokesman John Bender questioned Sanders' analysis, guessing instead that the proximity of Labor Day, the traditional start of the campaign season, had a greater roll in opening up news pages to more political news.

CITY: Recruitment program being initiated

Councilmen have approved budgeting $23,000 for a program which would include statewide recruiting tours, computer software to keep up with minority applicants and the formation of a board to oversee the efforts.

The funding will cover the expense of recruiting visits to colleges and universities around Texas, Cuevas said. "We want them to know Midland is interested in young, aggressive minorities," he said.

Information on minority graduates interested in a career in municipal government will be filed in computer banks. The potential applicants will be tracked so they can be contacted when a job opens.

In addition, the city will advertise for minority applicants in the media and municipal trade magazines.

Meanwhile, Mayor Carroll Thomas has been asked to appoint an advisory board of three council members and two citizens. The board will target areas that need increased minority representation and monitor efforts to recruit minorities and promote those within city ranks.

Cuevas said the plan became a necessity after the past year's attempts to field minorities fell short. The problem came to light during a summer council retreat in 1989, he said.

"We could tell we had a problem," Cuevas said. "The management and department head staff were made up of anglo males.

"There was a belief that minority recruiting could be done without setting up a committee, but a year later we felt we had the same problem."

David Hunter, personnel director, said he was aware that minorities were low on the hiring lists in some departments.

"It's hard to tell to what extent it was happening," Hunter said. "That's why we need a system to keep track of the minority applicants hired."

Cuevas said the plan should start paying off soon, with minorities having the chance to apply for about a dozen managerial, professional and technical positions expected to be open during the 1990-91 fiscal year.

"The system of hiring your buddy, a neighbor, friend or a buddy on the softball team is broken now," Cuevas said. "We hope this will send a message to anyone who is a bigot or racist that his days are numbered.

"We're committed to see a gradual and effective change over the years for minorities and women."

Cap Rock Cooperative meets

Staff Report

More than 2,000 members of Cap Rock Electric Cooperative, Inc., met for the organization's 51st annual meeting in Midland College's Chaparral Center Saturday night. Johnny's Barbecue catered the event.

The organization, which formerly covered 13 counties in West Texas, is headquartered in Stanton. Cap Rock recently combined to include Lone Wolf Electric, headquartered in Colorado City. Now the cooperative will cover 20 counties, according to Peggy Luxton, communications advisor for the cooperative.

Directors were elected during the meeting. Incumbents re-elected were Roger Lange of Cap Rock District I, Sammie D. Buchanan of District II and Alfred J. Schwartz of District VII.

Cap Rock members passed several amendments to the Articles of Incorporation, according to Ms. Luxton. One of the amendments will allow the board to expand from nine to 11 members. The two new board members will be elected from the Lone Wolf Electric Cooperative.

Several door prizes were won at the meeting. Clarence Luxton won the ½-ton pickup truck.

WORLD in brief

Salvadoran leader testifies in case

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — President Alfredo Cristiani has testified before a court investigating the murders of six Jesuit priests, a case that has strained relations with the United States, a government official said Saturday.

Information Minister Mauricio Sandoval said in a telephone interview that Cristiani testified Friday.

Sandoval said he did not have further details, and that he did not know if Cristiani testified in his capacity as commander in chief of the armed forces.

Nine members of the armed forces, including a colonel and three lesser officers, have been charged in the murder of the priests, their housekeeper and her daughter last Nov. 16.

The massacre occurred during a period of tight army security imposed during a major rebel offensive.

Some U.S. congressmen have threatened to seek cuts in aid to the Salvadoran military because of alleged army efforts to cover up the killings and to block the investigation.

Remains to be returned

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Vietnam next week will turn over 20 sets of remains that may be those of Americans missing from the Vietnam War, a U.S. Embassy spokesman said today.

A U.S. military team will go to Hanoi, Vietnam's capital, to receive the remains Thursday and fly them to U.S. facilities for analysis, said spokesman James Williams.

It would be the largest return of remains since 28 sets were handed over June 21, 1989.

The United States withdrew from Vietnam in 1973, after losing almost 58,000 lives in a failed attempt to protect the South Vietnam government from the communist North Vietnamese. The communists won and reunified the country in April 1975.

Prince won't be at talks

JAKARTA, Indonesia (AP) — Prince Norodom Sihanouk, leader of the Cambodian guerrilla coalition, said Saturday he was too ill to attend peace talks this weekend among Cambodia's warring factions.

But Premier Hun Sen of the Phnom Penh government said he would take part in the talks, scheduled to begin today in the Indonesian capital, even if Sihanouk were absent. Hun Sen had earlier said he would not attend unless Sihanouk also was present.

"I don't know if Prince Sihanouk is really sick, or only (has) a diplomatic illness. It seems that I have to be the one to save the situation," Hun Sen told reporters Saturday.

The peace talks, originally scheduled to open last Wednesday, have been delayed because key leaders threatened to stay away unless their counterparts attended.

ONE VETERAN'S REFLECTIONS

What kind of hell did Vietnam have in store for me?

EDITOR'S NOTE: Terry Williamson, sports editor of the Reporter-Telegram, served with the U.S. Army in Vietnam from March 1970 until February 1971.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

THE BEGINNING

Everything should have been perfect 20 years ago, so why did I have this hollow feeling in the pit of my stomach?

Williamson

I was a newlywed of three weeks. The beautiful island of Oahu to the east was beginning to fade behind the right wing of the plane. A first release 1970 Woody Allen movie was flickering across the screen and a stewardess was passing out cold drinks.

In another time, another place, all would have been well with the world, but for me a nightmare's odyssey was just beginning. Destination: Vietnam. Occupation: Army infantryman. Length of Stay: One year.

This was not the honeymoon I had envisioned. My bride, left behind in Texas, would put her life on hold. Me, well, my life was in shambles, my thoughts turning to survival rather than planning a future.

But I knew I would survive. I had decided that on this plane. I was coming home. It seemed easy then, but I would later learn that survival in war is up to a greater being rather than a personal desire to survive. I was on a plane full of soldiers who all felt they were going to return home. Many didn't.

It struck me as odd that no one was laughing at the Woody Allen jokes and pratfalls. But then again, I wasn't laughing either. I wanted to cry, but being a soldier kept me from it. I later learned that crying, too, would become easy.

On this 22-hour flight to the unknown, I sat next to a private. I was 24 years old and a college graduate. He was 19 and had never finished high school. We didn't talk much, and when we did, it was only about trivial matters. It was like no one wanted to share his fears. Yet, we both knew that our thoughts were racing on parallel courses.

What kind of hell awaited us?

Wake island was our next stop. The pilot said we could see it off to our left before landing. I could cover up the whole island with my thumb. It was just a dot in a world of water. It was so small that the pilot almost dumped all of us into the floor while trying to land on the small runway.

After getting off the plane, I had a weird sensation. I could see water in all four directions and I was in the middle of the island. I couldn't help but think that so many had died for what was little more than a pile of sand in a vast ocean. Would I have to die for something as insignificant looking as Wake island?

We also had another refueling stop on Guam, our last stop before our final destination. Upon leaving Guam, I distinctly remember the pilot saying, "Next stop, Long Binh, Vietnam."

It seemed almost a cruel joke, but the private next to me gave reason for wanting to arrive.

"They say our year doesn't start until we get to Vietnam. Let's go ahead and get started," he reasoned.

Still, fear, bordering on panic, began to move in. No one told us what to expect upon arrival in Long Binh.

Would we have to duck when we got off the plane? Would the plane be shot at? We didn't have weapons, so how would we protect ourselves if these scenarios came to pass? Would someone be there to direct us to some safe haven?

These were questions that no one dared asked. But I knew all of us first-timers were thinking them. Would this be my first taste of combat?

In retrospect, these questions now seem quite silly. Long Binh was much like many military air bases I had seen in the states. We got off the plane, and in true military form, entered a series of long and slow moving lines for in-country processing. All of this normalcy made me feel quite at home — at least for another night.

All my fears, and some that I could never have dreamed, would be realized in the months to come. But for now my odyssey had begun without incident. I slept well.

Two days were spent in Long Binh, waiting for the Army to decide just where I would spend this year. Then the word came: Americal Division, Chu Lai, Vietnam. This, I knew, was the division of the My Lai Massacre. So, this was to be the start of becoming a soldier.

It didn't help any when some desk type said, "Williamson, you ready to go kill babies?"

I had found hell, at least in my own mind.

(From 1A)

'I've told people before that I wasn't a big supporter of the war, but I wasn't anti-war either. I didn't have problems (as to) why we were there. At the same time, I've felt you can't fight a war to a tie."

That view was shared by Sam Gray, an Odessa insurance agent and past president of the Odessa chapter of Vietnam Veterans of America.

"If we had been allowed to stay, we would have eventually won, but the government never had that in mind."

Gray, attached to the 25th Infantry Division at Cu Chi in 1968-69, said the answer of why the U.S. was in Vietnam continues to elude him.

"In the end the Communists ended up taking over South Vietnam. We just prolonged it. I don't really feel we accomplished anything over there."

Nor do most historians, who recorded the official endings of World War I, World War II and Korea, but left Vietnam an unfinished chapter in politics — a chapter that cost the lives of 58,022 American men and women.

"From a military standpoint, it disappoints me that so many American lives were committed to a process where victory wasn't sustained. Politically, we had no business being over there in the first place," said Tom Balderach, assistant director of the Vete. ans Administration Hospital in Big Spring.

Balderach, whose service with the 25th Infantry at Dau Ting and Tay Nin (1967-1969) remains classified, said he's still appalled by the brutality of the North Vietnamese Army and the Viet Cong (their South Vietnamese allies), who thought nothing of human life as they dragged innocent civilians into the war process against America.

'When we intervene in these countries, we alter patterns and relationships that have existed for centuries.'

— James Reckner, former senior military advisor to South Vietnamese Navy, currently at Texas Tech University

"Those people never really had a choice between democracy and communism," said Balderach, who like several people interviewed for this series has done extensive reading on the subject since his return.

James Reckner, a senior military advisor to the South Vietnamese Navy during two tours that lasted through 1972 and an authority on the Southeast Asian conflict at Texas Tech University, said it's disturbing how ignorant Americans remain about important issues surrounding the war.

Reckner, who teaches classes on the subject at both the graduate and undergraduate level, said Vietnam continues to elude today's generation. Most of his students can't even locate the New Mexico-sized country on a map.

"After awhile, I became frighteningly aware of just how little they knew, in general, about the mistakes we (the U.S.) made. That kind of ignorance will certainly lead us down the same road," he said.

Reckner sees a lot of parallels between Vietnam and the current Middle East situation now brewing in Saudi Arabia between the Americans and Iraq.

"Our policy makers had a superficial knowledge of the politics of Southeast Asia when they went into Vietnam. When we intervene in these countries, we alter patterns and relationships that have existed for centuries."

Reckner hopes the U.S. will seek the advice of true Mideast experts and academic authorities who are familiar with the culture, history and patterns of the area. "But somehow I think we're still flying by the seat of our pants. That was certainly true about Vietnam."

Veterans interviewed for this series said military and political actions — such as the Battle at Dien Bien Phu, the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, the Siege at Khe Sahn and the Tet Offensive — have been reduced in status through the years from human sacrifice to mere trivia.

And that disgusts people like Alton "Buster" Hill, a former U.S. Marine who in 1968-69 served in I-Corps at Quang Tri near the Demilitarized Zone, an area that separated North from South Vietnam.

Hill, a landscaper by trade, said he went to Vietnam full of energy and spirit and emerged a hardened soldier with a new outlook on life.

"Everything here is so materialistic. The people in Vietnam don't have anything. If they (today's generation) were to go over there and see that, I guarantee it would change them forever."

That sentiment would include attitudes toward their own country as well as basic human freedoms that veterans said most Americans take for granted.

238th District Judge John Hyde of Midland hopes he never again witnesses what he saw when he returned from Vietnam.

Hyde resented the anti-war movement of the 1960s, especially public figures who took part in that effort.

A member of the foreign claims division, Judge Advocate General Corps in Saigon in 1969, Hyde never served in battle, but understood the despondence that existed among the troops who made up the infantry.

"I think there was a feeling among all of us that the U.S. had turned its backs on the American solidier who was over there. I'm not sure how or why it happened, but somewhere along the way we lost our spirit."

Then, three years ago, the judge found his first evidence that Americans finally had begun to embrace the Vietnam veterans and what they stood for.

He recalled the parade given in honor of Jessica McClure, the toddler who gained worldwide fame after her rescue from a Midland water well in October 1987.

"There was a group of Vietnam veterans marching and as I recall they received one of the largest applauses I heard that day. That's when I finally knew."

But many veterans still have their doubts, particularly those suffering from post traumatic stress disorders.

For the thousands who remain shackled to Vietnam, professional counselors hope for acceptance so that troubled vets aren't viewed as armed, drugged-out psychotics ready to prey on society.

"For some of them, the war isn't over. We still have a lot of work to do out there," said Rich Burns, a readjustment counselor at the Vietnam-Era Veterans Outreach Center in Midland — one of 196 Vet Centers established by Congress in 1980.

Burns said it's estimated there are 400,000 to 500,000 veterans nationally who still need help but haven't sought it.

"We have a place for them at the Vet Centers. Some vets who have never talked about Vietnam to their wives or children, will talk about it here.

"You have to remember a lot of them served when they were 18. Mature-wise, they weren't equipped to deal with it."

Some veterans place that blame clearly on the military, noting the government did little, if anything, to prepare young soldiers for the anti-war movement that awaited them at home after the 36 hours of travel from combat zone to U.S. soil.

A number of veterans interviewed also questioned if America's current fascination with Vietnam is just a passing fancy that will die after the novelty of Hollywood wears off — a novelty they see as glorifying war.

Garza, who served as a Navy seaman until the American pullout in 1975, hopes that Americans will never forget the blood that was spilled in a war that truly was foreign to American troops.

"All I'm saying is, let's not forget the guys who died there. Remember them always for what they did."

Vietnam: Beyond the Black Wall
Readers Respond

In conjunction with "Vietnam: Beyond the Black Wall," the five-part series which begins today, readers are invited to express their opinions about U.S. involvement in that divisive war.

Did America learn anything from its 10-year-long entanglement in Southeast Asia? Has Vietnam forever changed the way the U.S. views overseas wars fought for "America's vital interests" and the veterans of those wars? As more than 100,000 U.S. troops swelter in Saudi Arabia, does the shadow of Vietnam influence decisions in Washington and Baghdad? What do you think?

How did U.S. end up here?

By Chris Van Wagenen
Staff Writer

For centuries, Vietnam has been a battleground.

The Vietnamese have warred among themselves as well as repelled invasions by the Mongol Empire, the Khmer Empire and China, which controlled the country from 200 B.C. through 900 A.D.

But it was the French incursion — first by Roman Catholic missionaries in the 1600s, and later by government troops in the late 1800s — that eventually would pave the way to U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

Colonizing what later became known as French Indochina was no easy task, as the Europeans soon discovered. It took the French 22 years to bring Vietnam under control, along with the areas of Cambodia (Kampuchea) and Laos.

French rule lasted from 1883 until June 1940, when — during World War II — Japanese troops landed.

The French didn't realize that nothing would be the same again.

Following the defeat of Japan in 1945, Chinese and British forces assisted the French in reestablishing their powerbase, but not before a once-banished revolutionary returned.

That rebel — Ho Chi Minh — set in motion the Revolutionary League of Vietnam, which later became known as the Vietminh.

In September 1945, Ho proclaimed Vietnam an independent state and announced the formation of the Democratic Republic of Vietnam (DRV).

Ho became the head of the Communist Vietminh and was supported in his effort by many non-Communists who did not want to return to French rule.

The conflict that ensued during the next eight years became known as the Indochina War. By mid-1949, the French announced the formation of the state of Vietnam, in opposition to the Vietminh. It was supported by the nationalist government and other Western allies, including the United States, while Communist nations backed Ho and his DRV government.

The Battle of Dien Bien Phu

In November 1953, France began building an army base around the village of Dien Bien Phu, located on the northwest border of North Vietnam. The base was intended to disrupt Vietminh army movements.

On March 15, 1954, about 50,000 Vietminh soldiers unleashed a ferocious attack on 10,000 French troops holding down the base. The Vietminh quickly destroyed the base's one airfield, leaving the French with no way to resupply. The outnumbered force resisted the Vietminh attack for 56 days, but — with heavy casualties — the French were forced to surrender on May 7, 1954.

That surrender led to the Geneva Conference, where it was decided to split Vietnam into two separate nations, with unification elections to follow in 1956.

The Beginning of the Vietnam War

It soon was clear that Vietnam's national government to the south wanted nothing to do with joining the north.

Shortly after the Geneva Conference, then ruler Ngo Dinh Diem announced the country would remain divided, declaring South Vietnam a republic.

In 1957, Vietminh living in the south began to rebel against Diem's rule. They became known as the Viet Cong.

During this period, the U.S. — which had backed the French with billions of dollars in aid to defeat the Vietminh (under both the Eisenhower and Kennedy administrations) — announced it was sending civilian and military advisors to the region. By 1964, these totaled 16,323 men.

During his tour of duty, Spannaus flew 222 missions over North Vietnam and Hanoi. He currently is executive director of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association.

Aug. 2, 1964: The Gulf of Tonkin Incident

Nine months after Diem's assassination, the U.S. exchanged its first fire with North Vietnam.

In the Gulf of Tonkin, 30 miles off the coast of North Vietnam, the U.S. Destroyer Maddox and its crew of 275 were attacked in international waters by three North Vietnamese patrol torpedo (PT) boats while on patrol. The Maddox was fired upon and returned fire, sinking one North Vietnamese PT boat.

The U.S. Destroyer C. Turner Joy soon joined the Maddox; together they fought off a second "unprovoked attack" two days later. The 3½-hour battle ended with the sinking of two more PT boats.

In response, President Lyndon Baines Johnson addressed the nation, stating renewed hostilities in the region had required him to order military forces to take action in reply.

"That reply is being taken as I speak to you tonight. Air action is now in execution against gunboats and certain supporting facilities in North Vietnam which have been used in these hostile operations."

Following that speech, the aircraft carriers Ticonderoga and Constellation staged air attacks at Hon Gay, Loc Chao, Phuc Loi and Quang Khe as well as on an oil depot at Vinh, where 10 percent of the country's oil reserves were stored.

Two U.S. planes were lost during the attack, two others hit.

One of those planes was an A-4 Skyhawk flown by Lt. Everett Alvarez, 26, of San Jose, Calif. Alvarez was forced to bail out. He would later become America's first prisoner of war.

Two days later, President Johnson was given overwhelming approval by both Houses of Congress — with only two dissenters — to take what ever action short of a declaration of war, to repel any and all aggression.

The event became known as the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution. The U.S. now had formally entered Vietnam.

1965: U.S. Marines land in Vietnam

It was Tet, the Lunar New Year when the Year of the Dragon ended and the Year of the Snake began.

Vietnam started the year quietly enough, but the calm didn't last long.

On Feb. 7, during the early morning hours, Spec. 5-C Jessa A. Pyle, a military advisor, was on watch at a sentry post in Pleiku, a city of 100,000 located in central Vietnam.

For Pyle, a veteran of the Korean War, a new battle was about to erupt. At 2 a.m., he opened fire on movement in the brush and was overwhelmed by a barrage of grenades.

The battle, though short — just 15 minutes — was intense. Pyle's efforts saved countless lives, but in the end eight Americans had died and another 126 were wounded.

The raid on Pleiku was the third major attack on Americans in Vietnam during a three-month period.

President Johnson, who had been urged to strike back, did so the next day, as fighter planes from the carriers Coral Sea, Hancock and Ranger plastered a military communications center at Vinh Linh, just north of the truce line.

After Pleiku, the battle continued to escalate. On March 8, 3,500 of the 9th Marine Expeditionary Brigade landed ashore at Nam O Beach, three miles north of Da Nang.

Massive air raids now were becoming an almost daily occurrence on military targets to the north, as were attacks by the Viet Cong. In one such attack on March 30, a 250-pound explosive device was set off just outside the U.S. Embassy in Saigon. Seventeen people were killed and 183 wounded, 53 of those Americans.

Johnson was outraged.

"This will only reinforce the determination of the American people and government to continue and strengthen their assistance and support for the people and government of Vietnam," he said.

July 28, 1965: Johnson Renews U.S. Dedication To War Effort

In a televised address, President Johnson let it be known that the U.S. would not deviate from its goal to protect Vietnam, a sentiment also expressed by his predecessor, President John F. Kennedy.

Johnson was a firm believer in the "Domino Theory": if Vietnam was allowed to fall to Communist forces, the rest of Southeast Asia would also land in their hands.

During a nationwide noontime speech, Johnson made clear his commitment to the Vietnamese people:

"Most of the non-Communist nations of Asia cannot, by themselves and alone, resist the growing might and grasping ambition of Asian communism. Our power, therefore, is a very vital shield.

"If we are driven from the field in Vietnam, then no nation can ever again have the same confidence in American promises or in American protection.

"We did not choose to be the guardians at the gate, but there is no one else. Nor would surrender in Vietnam bring peace, because we learned from Hitler at Munich that success only feeds the appetite of agression."

"I have, today ordered to Vietnam ... forces which will raise our fighting strength from 75,000 to 125,000 men almost immediately. Additional forces will be needed later and they will be sent as requested.

"This will make it necessary to increase our active fighting forces by raising the monthly draft call from 17,000 over a period of time to 35,000 per month and for us to step up our campaign for voluntary enlistments."

By year's end, U.S. involvement totaled more than 180,000 troops, compared to 23,000 advisers when 1965 began.

In that brief period, a total of 1,365 Americans had lost their lives, more than 5,300 had been wounded and 148 were reported missing or captured.

Souter expects tough questions from senators

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Supreme Court nominee David Souter's thin judicial record is turning out to be a challenge for senators who want to know what kind of justice he would make.

Souter, the reclusive 50-year-old bachelor who leaped from obscurity to win President Bush's backing for the U.S. Supreme Court, goes before the Senate Judiciary Committee for a key round of hearings starting Thursday.

His chances of winning confirmation depend largely on the answers he gives to senators on such controversial issues as abortion, privacy rights and affirmative action.

With a slim record of writings as a recently appointed federal appellate judge and, before then, as a New Hampshire state supreme court justice and state attorney general, Souter finds himself in a pickle that confronts other judicial nominees facing confirmation: they don't want to answer specific questions on particular cases, but they know a refusal to tackle controversial issues may lose them crucial Senate votes.

Already, liberal advocacy groups such as the Alliance for Justice and the National Organization for Women Legal Defense and Education Fund — which played a decisive role in defeating arch-conservative nominee Robert H. Bork in 1987 — are saying the Senate should reject Souter unless he delineates his views on abortion, women's rights and privacy.

Nan Aron, executive director of the Alliance for Justice, asserts that "the burden has shifted to Souter to demonstrate that he would uphold the guarantees of the Bill of Rights" because, she says, his record indicates hostility toward legalized abortion and individual rights.

Conservative organizations such as the Washington-based Coalitions for America paint Souter as a "conservative jurist passionately devoted to the rule of law."

Other conservatives are not so complimentary.

"This is not a man of great profundity," said Bruce Fein, a conservative legal scholar. "No one can read his (New Hampshire Supreme Court) opinions without thinking 'this is better than Valium for putting you to sleep.'"

In any case, the 14-member committee is likely to ask him questions about specific issues and about his philosophy.

Even though the crisis in the Middle East pushed him off the front pages last month, Souter spent a good part of August in New Hampshire appearing before a "murder board" — a mock committee composed of Sen. Warren Rudman, R-N.H., Souter's chief Senate backer, White House congressional liaison Frederick McClure and others.

The board reportedly peppered him with questions, many of them drawn from the transcripts of the Bork hearings, and critiqued his answers.

Tom Korologos, a Washington lobbyist brought in by the Bush administration to help shepherd Souter through the hearings, said the nominee so far has elicited nothing but "good vibes" from senators.

"It won't be a piece of cake, but he'll get confirmed," Korologos said.

On what responses Souter would give to tough questions, Korologos said: "There's 100 ways to answer a privacy question, 100 ways to answer a libel question. As long as you choose 99 of them, you're going to be alright."

Committee members also have been getting ready for the hearings.

Sen. Arlen Specter, R-Pa., whose vote was crucial in sinking the Bork nomination, spent a good part of August in Europe on Senate business and on vacation at the beach reading stacks of Souter's briefs and opinions, a staff aide said.

Eleven primary elections will decide lineups

Associated Press

Gov. Rudy Perpich is a non-stop booster of Minnesota and, not coincidentally, his own political fortunes in a tight gubernatorial primary that is one of 11 elections Tuesday to fill out the 1990 campaign lineup.

"We are without doubt the No. 1 state in the nation," Perpich tells voters as he campaigns to stave off a tough primary challenge from Mike Hatch, a former state commerce commissioner.

In other Tuesday primaries, Arizona Republicans will decide whether to endorse Evan Mecham's bid to regain the office from which he was ousted two years ago, while veteran politicians in New Hampshire and Vermont also are making comeback bids.

Jesse Jackson is on the District of Columbia ballot for the symbolic office of "shadow senator," his first bid for an office other than president. Voters in the nation's capital also will choose candidates in the race to succeed Marion Barry as the city's mayor.

Also going to the polls on the busiest day of the primary season are voters in Connecticut, Maryland, New York, Rhode Island, Utah and Wisconsin.

Only four states — Massachusetts, Washington, Hawaii and Louisiana — have yet to hold primaries. Runoffs are scheduled to settle contests in Oklahoma and Florida.

While the parties choose their nominees, independent candidates are playing an unusually significant role.

Former Republican Sen. Lowell Weicker is running as an independent and leading in the polls in the race for governor of Connecticut. Rep. John Rowland already has the Republican nomination for governor, while Rep. Bruce Morrison and state legislator Bill Cibes are competing for the Democratic nomination. Gov. William O'Neill, a Democrat, is retiring.

In the District of Columbia, Barry is running as an independent for a seat on the city council where he served before being elected mayor in 1978. Barry was convicted last month on a misdemeanor charge of possession of cocaine.

City council members John Ray, Charlene Drew-Jarvis and David Clarke, congressional delegate Walter Fauntroy and lawyer Sharon Pratt Dixon are the Democratic contenders to succeed Barry. Former police chief Maurice Turner is unopposed for the Republican nomination for mayor.

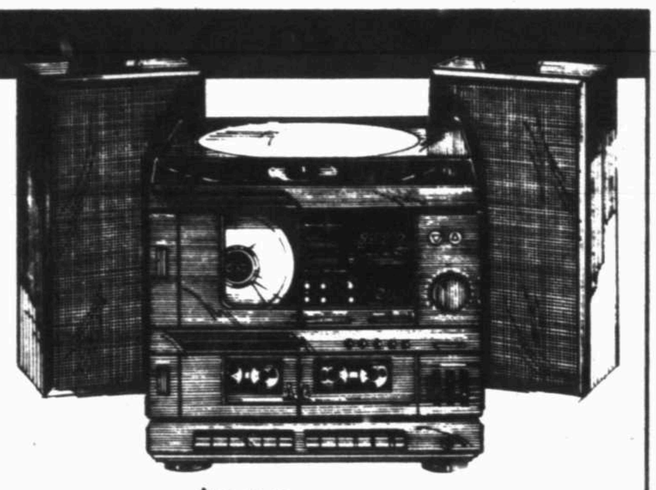

Jackson, who moved to Washington from Chicago a year ago and mulled entering the race for mayor, is one of four Democrats seeking nomination to become one of two shadow senators, whose job would be to lobby Congress to make the city the 51st state. Shadow senators lobbied Congress to win support for statehood for Tennessee, Michigan, California, Minnesota, Oregon and Alaska.

Perpich has served as governor of Minnesota for 10 years. He was appointed to finish the last two years of former Gov. Wendell Anderson's term in 1978 and then won election to the office in 1982.

Hatch has mounted a strong challenge this year, focusing on scandals involving two close Perpich associates and a perception that Minnesotans are looking for a change.

Oil states against windfall profits tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — The oil jolt from the Persian Gulf crisis has renewed calls in Congress for a windfall profits tax.

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., and Rep. Paul Kanjorski, D-Pa., have announced separate measures to restore the tax, which was repealed in 1987.

Kanjorski's measure directs the tax revenue to pay the government's cost of insuring depositors of failed savings and loans. He estimated last week that it would raise $15 billion annually.

Like Packwood's bill, Kanjorski's measure would impose a tax of up to 70 percent on excessive profits from oil sales. Packwood gave no estimate of how much money his measure would raise.

Both measures face stiff opposition from representatives of oil-producing states. They say such a tax discourages exploration and production at a time when the domestic industry should be trying to grow.

"With the crisis in the Middle East bringing home our dangerous dependence on foreign oil, the last thing we should do is penalize our domestic energy industry," said Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., who spurred repeal of the earlier tax.

He vowed to fight a new windfall profits tax, promising a filibuster if necessary.

"That legislation would make us more dependent on the Middle East and exacerbate energy supply scarcity," said Rep. Jack Fields, R-Houston, a member of the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

"We need to become energy independent," said Carlton Carl, spokesman for Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, who also is a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee. "Why not treat the problem rather than the symptom of the problem?"

Kanjorski's measure would not discourage oil exploration and production because it has lower rates for independent oil producers and new discoveries, spokeswoman Eva Malecki said.

A windfall profits tax was approved in 1980 to capture for the government some of the profits from oil prices that were driven up by the mid-1970s energy crisis.

The tax kicked in when the per-barrel cost of oil hit $19. The mid-1980s drop in oil prices left the tax moribund, but it raised about $78 billion during its lifetime.

The tax was repealed when oil was below $19 per barrel. Oil prices were hovering around $20 per barrel when Iraq invaded Kuwait last month. That shot spot prices above $30 per barrel and caused an immediate increase in the cost of gasoline.

Both Packwood and Kanjorski say they are responding to constituents who are angry about the sudden jump in energy prices.

"If oil companies are going to jack up the prices for Oregon's farmers, truck drivers and families, then the U.S. government should ensure that they can't keep any of these ill-gotten profits," Packwood said.

"We can no longer allow the oil companies to rip off the public," Kanjorski said.

Dukakis' staff studies plan by insurgent

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis' staff will assess the budget-cutting proposals unveiled by his rebellious lieutenant governor, but some observers said Saturday her plan won't solve the state's fiscal troubles.

Murphy, needing some life in her lagging campaign for governor, had raised expectations about her proposals by refusing to disclose them as long as Dukakis was still in Massachusetts. She said she was waiting for the former Democratic presidential candidate to leave so she could assume authority.

She will face two other opponents in the Sept. 18 Democratic primary, and public opinion polls put her well behind. Dukakis, whose popularity has dived, is not seeking re-election.

Among Murphy's steps were cutting management positions in each cabinet secretariat by 25 percent, as well as slashing by 10 percent the payroll of the Department of Administration and Finance.

Murphy said her proposals would save up to $150 million annually. Earlier in the week, Dukakis had ordered cabinet secretaries to find $150 million worth of cuts for the current fiscal year.

Dukakis refused to comment on her proposals Saturday. "I've got a very good team in place (at home) and I want to get on with this trip," he said in Bitterfeld, East Germany.

Dukakis administration officials said Murphy's numbers were misleading, and that her plan would realistically save only about $17 million this fiscal year.

"In terms of real dollar savings, it doesn't match up to the $125 million to $150 million which she says it is," said Stephen Crawford, a Dukakis spokesman.

"For people looking to an end to this yearlong nightmare, I don't think we saw it yesterday," said James Braude, head of the Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, a group that has supported higher taxes to help solve the state's fiscal woes.

Crawford said the governor's staff would assess Murphy's plans over the next week. Dukakis is scheduled to return Friday.

Dukakis had said he might cut his trip short if any action Murphy took threatened to hurt the state's stability. But after Murphy issued her orders, Crawford said he saw no reason for the governor to return early.

He noted that executive orders requiring payroll cuts would not take effect before Dukakis comes back, since such actions take 10 days to implement. Once the governor returns, he can rescind Murphy's action, but Crawford could not predict what action Dukakis might take.

Murphy's orders do not supersede the instructions Dukakis issued earlier in the week to make cuts, which means cabinet secretaries will still carry out those plans, Crawford said.

A spokesman for the Executive Office of Human Services said his agency would proceed with the spending cuts ordered by Dukakis.

"The secretary's strong position is that he works for Mike Dukakis," said Kenneth Schwartz, chief of staff for Human Services Secretary Philip Johnston.

While Murphy has downplayed the political aspects of her action, saying she was simply looking out for the state's well-being, Longabaugh acknowledged her supporters believe the campaign has gained ground from the episode.

"From a political standpoint, she looked like a leader, she looked like she was ready to act," he said.

Hundreds toast Ellis renovation

NEW YORK (AP) — Politicians and celebrities at a black-tie benefit on Ellis Island rubbed elbows Saturday with corporate leaders who helped finance the restoration of the so-called Golden Door that received 12 million U.S. immigrants.

And, yes, the descendants of immigrants also dotted the crowd.

Denise Benmosche of Suffern, N.Y., waiting for a ferry to take her to the benefit, said she wanted to see what her father had seen when he first came to the United States.

"That's exciting for me to see where he actually first set foot in the United States. It's very emotional," she said.

Between 1892 and 1924, Ellis Island, which adjoins Liberty Island and the Statue of Liberty, was the Golden Door — immigrants' main port of entry for New York City. At its peak, the island processed 5,000 immigrants a day.

The U.S. government 25 years ago gave the island to the National Parks Service, stipulating that it become a national museum to honor those who entered the United States there.

"It's a great monument," said Lee Iacocca, chairman of Chrysler Corp., who spearheaded the restoration drive. "Half the country can trace its roots to here. The people who came here; they made the country. If you don't honor them, who are you going to honor?"

Rocket victim identified

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — Authorities Saturday released the name of the man killed when part of Titan 4 rocket erupted in flames after falling 100 feet from a crane.

The Kern County coroner's office identified the victim as Alan M. Quimby, 27, of Lancaster, Calif. Nine other people were injured.

The solid-fuel rocket motor ignited Friday when it was being moved at the Air Force Astronautics Laboratory, said Lt. Col. Jan Dalby. Nearby test areas on the Mojave desert base were evacuated.

A section of the 112-foot rocket booster ignited on impact when it fell while being maneuvered toward an outdoor test stand, Maj. Dick Cole said.

Titan 4s, built by Martin Marietta Corp., are considered the Air Force's primary booster for launching heavy payloads, particularly intelligence satellites. It is the nation's most powerful unmanned rocket.

The fire sent a cloud billowing over the base, but toxic hydrogen chloride was released in amounts too small to endanger anyone in the sparsely populated area, officials said.

Inmate killed in fights

PUNTA GORDA, Fla. (AP) — One inmate was stabbed to death Saturday and three others injured in a series of fights at the Charlotte Correctional Institution, prison officials said.

Guards quickly broke up the fights that began in the yard at the high-security prison, and no officers were injured, said state corrections spokesman Bob Macmaster.

"One inmate died, stabbed to death in an altercation with at least one other inmate," the spokesman said. "They had several other individual fights involving inmates at about that time or right after, and the guards moved in immediately."

Three other inmates were treated for injuries they suffered in the disturbance, he said.

The prison, located on the Gulf Coast 40 miles south of the Tampa Bay area, has been locked down, and all weekend visits canceled, he added.

Macmaster said investigators were trying to determine what touched off the incident.

Hemophiliac suit fails

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Three young hemophiliac brothers, who doctors say were infected with the AIDS virus through contaminated blood products, have lost their legal fight against two drug companies that made such products.

A federal judge cleared the companies of any responsibility because Ricky, Robert and Randy Ray couldn't specify who made the products they took for their hemophilia that exposed them to acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

U.S. District Judge Elizabeth Kovachevich granted the drug companies' request Friday and dismissed a 1988 case filed on behalf of Ricky, 13, Robert, 12, and Randy 10.

Without showing a direct cause of the damages, the family cannot sue for negligence, the judge ruled.

The Rays drew national attention in 1987 when they were shunned by the community of Arcadia and barred from school after their health problems became known.

Parents Louise and Clifford Ray sued the DeSoto County School Board in federal court and won an order from Ms. Kovachevich that the boys be reinstated.

Angry, frightened parents of classmates boycotted the elementary school. A week later the Rays' home was burned down in an unsolved arson. The family has since settled in Sarasota.

In April, doctors said Robert has full-blown AIDS.

PERSIAN GULF CRISIS

Bush, Gorbachev may discuss oil swap

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — President Bush Saturday raised the possibility of a unique superpower swap: American state-of-the-art oil technology for some of the Soviet Union's vast, untapped crude resources.

"I have no problem with that at all," Bush said en route to the Finnish capital for his summit Sunday with Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the third high-powered meeting between the two leaders.

"I would welcome the best in American know-how on oil production, drilling and seismic work going to the Soviet Union," he told reporters aboard Air Force One. "I think it is something we can work closely (on) with the Soviet Union."

Bush said he had mentioned the idea to the Soviet leader and that they might discuss it further at their one-day summit, which is expected to focus mostly on the Persian Gulf crisis.

Such an exchange could serve the needs of both countries.

The United States, with ample supplies of sophisticated petroleum technology, is thirsty for oil, even more so since the Persian Gulf crisis has shut off millions of barrels of crude to consuming nations.

But unlike West Germany, it doesn't have the cash to funnel into development projects badly needed by the Kremlin to shore up its sagging economy.

The Soviet Union, the world's largest oil producer, is desperate for the revenues, which would flow from an upgraded petroleum industry.

"It's a good trade," said Allen Sinai, chief economist at the Boston Co. "They have the resources, and we have the know-how."

John Lichtblau, chairman of the Petroleum Industry Research Foundation in New York, said, "It's definitely a good idea. There's nothing negative about it."

The suggestion comes at a time of a world oil crunch caused by the international embargo on 4 million barrels a day of Iraqi and Kuwaiti crude. The economic sanctions were imposed by the United Nations after Iraq invaded and occupied its tiny, oil-rich neighbor on Aug. 2.

Saudi Arabia, the world's No. 1 crude exporter, and other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have agreed to pump as much as they can to make up the shortfall. But analysts predict there still will be a gap on the market that could widen with colder weather in the coming months in the United States and other consuming nations.

Could Saddam be Antichrist of the Bible?

Associated Press

While called a power-hungry dictator by some and a warmonger by others, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein probably is not the Antichrist described in the Bible, some religious experts say.

"We hear stuff all the time — that maybe Saddam is the Antichrist," said Paige Patterson, president of Criswell College, a religious institution.

"We carefully urge our people not to get drawn into that," he said.

Biblical predictions say the Antichrist, the great adversary of Jesus Christ, is expected to spread evil globally before the end of the world. In the second coming, Christ would defeat the Antichrist in the ultimate battle between good and evil. The place for the decisive battle is known as Armageddon.

Some scholars predict that Babylon will re-emerge in the days before Armageddon. Saddam was in the middle of a decade-long quest to rebuild Babylon when he sent troops into Kuwait Aug. 2.

Evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong views the Iraq situation in apocalyptic terms.

"There are going to be horrible economic consequences for the world," said Armstrong, whose Church of God International is based in Tyler.

He predicts a global economic collapse, from which a united Germany would emerge as leader of a European confederacy.

Within the next "eight to 10 or 12 years," said Armstrong, the Antichrist will assume control of Europe and invade Israel with Arab help. But he said another leader, not Saddam, would assume the Antichrist role.

"I feel we're in the generation that's going to see it all," said Hal Lindsey, a Dallas Theological Seminary graduate and author of the 1970 book, "The Late Great Planet Earth."

"Zechariah prophesies the rise of Babylon again," Lindsey said. 'I believe this Babylon will be a powerful economic center."

In 1909, the Scofield Reference Bible by the Rev. Cyrus Scofield of Dallas, predicted the Antichrist would appear after Israel became a nation. Russia, he said, would join an Arab army in attacking the Jews, who would be aided by a European coalition led by the Antichrist.

Scofield said the Antichrist would be a charismatic leader who would restore peace and establish a worldwide but false religion. Later, Christ would return, defeat the Antichrist and reign on Earth for 1,000 years.

Are you currently making $30,000.00 or more per year? Would you like to be exposed to a unique money making opportunity, an opportunity which could enable you to make 30, 50, or even 100,000 dollars net per month, without quitting your present job? If your answer to these questions is yes, then we need to get together. I would like to introduce you to a low risk (less than $450) business that has virtually no limit in income potential and tax benefits.

This is not a get rich quick scheme. The opportunity offered here is based on a product that dates back over 60 years. The opportunity is a new addition to our story, for at the time the product was developed over 60 years ago, the intent was never to commercialize it.

Since the founding of the company in 1984, this opportunity has provided tremendous results to those who have taken part in it. The financial results now being experienced by some of our leading distributors exceed the incomes earned by major corporate executives in America today.

People from all walks of life are finding success in this industry. Corporate executives, office and factory workers, housewifes, as well as professionals from all fields of endeavor (attorneys, doctors & engineers) are joining this program, many of whom retire from their current jobs within as little as six to twelve months.

If you have the desire to become debt free, to generate lifestyle (the combination of money and free time), you are encouraged to attend a no-risk, no pressure, informative seminar being taught by Lemesa Veterinarian Dr. David Geeslin.

Dr. Geeslin is a 1978 graduate of the College of Veterinary Medicine, Texas A&M University. The no-nonsence manner in which this valuable seminar/opportunity session is presented will be memorable. As seating will be limited you are advised to arrive early.

Saddam tells world leaders to get out of gulf

Associated Press

Iraq's Saddam Hussein Saturday urged presidents Bush and Gorbachev on the eve of their summit to get out of the Persian Gulf crisis and let the Arab world settle the matter.

A U.S.-chartered flight of Americans from Kuwait, meanwhile, landed in the Jordanian capital just before midnight Saturday, then departed for Frankfurt, West Germany, with about 165 Americans who were flown into Amman on Friday, the State Department in Washington said.

They were to fly on to Charleston, S.C., and arrive today, the department said.

Saddam, in a statement read by an announcer on Iraqi television and billed as an open message to the U.S. and Soviet leaders, told them: "I am not saying to either of you ... what your decision should be."

But he said Bush and Mikhail S. Gorbachev should bear in mind that "Iraq's army did not invade either of your countries."

Saddam, whose Aug. 2 takeover of Kuwait set off the chain of events leading to the summit in Helsinki, Finland, described Iraq as a peace-loving nation and warned of dangers of the huge U.S.-led buildup of forces in the gulf region.

"God and history are witness ... that the foreign intervention is complicating matters and will not provide a settlement," he said.

In Helsinki, Bush and Gorbachev expressed hopes for a settlement to the Persian Gulf crisis, now in its sixth week.

Bush told reporters on arrival he hoped the summit would "strengthen our common approach to this unjustifiable act of aggression."

The Soviet president, arriving later, cited the "acute crisis" in the gulf. "I hope this meeting will be successful," he said.

Bush's National Security Adviser Brent Scowcroft suggested that the prospect of U.S.-Soviet unity on the Persian Gulf has Saddam on the run.

"We hope it causes him to lose some sleep," Scowcroft told reporters after a Saturday evening working dinner in Bush's hotel suite.

"We've put together a strategy that has a good chance of success without the use of military force," Scowcroft said, referring to the trade embargo against Iraq.

Asked whether Saddam was backing off, Scowcroft said, "I think he's maneuvering at present ... looking for a way out of his dilemma."

Iraq, meanwhile, sought to solidify its new rapprochement with Iran in an effort to get around U.N. economic sanctions.

Iraqi Foreign Minister Tariq Aziz is due in Tehran today for the first high-level visit in a decade. Tehran's Jomhuri Islami newspaper said in an editorial that Aziz would return to Iraq "with his hands full" if Iraq continues its conciliatory policy toward Iran.

This policy has included Iraq's withdrawal of troops from Iranian territory, its exchange of war prisoners, and its dropping of a long-standing demand for full control of a strategic waterway.

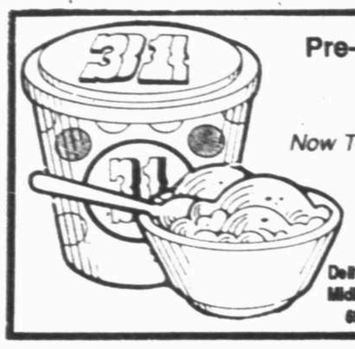

In Kuwait, two more embassies bowed to the pressure brought to bear by the Iraqi occupiers. Sweden and Norway evacuated their diplomatic staffs but insisted their missions technically remained open.

The Iraqis, who ordered embassies in the conquered emirate to close two weeks ago, have been backing up that demand with a cutoff of food, water, power and telephone service to the missions.

About 20 embassies, including the U.S. mission, remain open with skeleton staffs to symbolize their refusal to accept Iraq's annexation of Kuwait, and to try to provide some protection for their citizens trapped by the invasion.

Septemberfest weathers well

■ Septemberfest '90, the annual arts-and-entertainment event on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest, continues today from noon to 5 p.m.

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

Sultry West Texas skies did little Saturday to dissuade Midlanders from attending Septemberfest '90, being held on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest again today from noon to 5 p.m.

Even rain clouds did not persuade many to leave. As one man said pragmatically, "We'll just go inside." Apparently, many others felt the same way and when the rain hit around 6 p.m., people congregated inside the artists booths, under the food booth and inside the facility.

Buddy Gieb, Randy Johnson and his wife Michelle, waited out the mini-flood in an artist's booth where bird feeders were on sale.

"We felt we had to buy something to stay under their booth," Johnson said. "They were real kind and said we didn't have to."

Gieb quips, "We had to buy a bird house to have shelter."

Both agreed when Mrs. Johnson said, "We'll be back tomorrow."

Some artists closed down their stalls before the 8 p.m. closing time, while others stayed open.

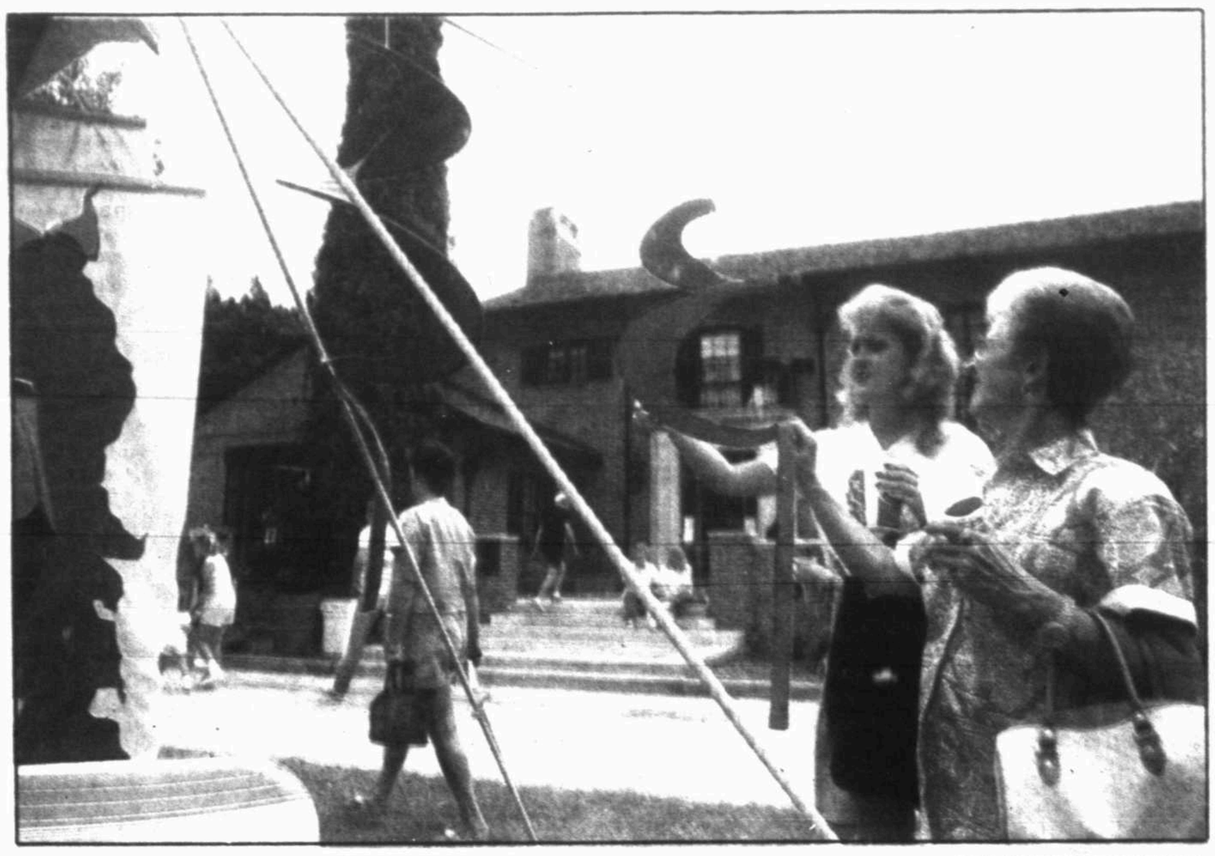

"We had, as of 6 p.m., stopped charging admission at the gate," said Lois Smitherman, chairman of Septemberfest. "People, believe it or not, were still coming in at 7 o'clock, and they are still serving food. It's unbelievable.

"Last year was our first year with the professional tents over the artists booths, and we had the tornado hit during the preview party," Ms. Smitherman said. "Septemberfest is known for strange weather."

In past years, Las Manos, the museum's auxiliary organization responsible for the annual event, used tarps over the artists booths.

This year, Septemberfest continued with the exception of the music festival, which features continuous live entertainment. When the rain came, the shade tent by the Showmobile — new this year — was packed with people.

Joe Mabee, chief of staff of the Confederate Air Force, stands next to his Curtiss P-40N Warhawk of Flying-Tiger fame. The pursuit (fighter) aircraft, which already was in production before the United States entered World War II, is representative of the combat aircraft in the CAF Ghost Squadron to be headquartered at Midland International Airport by 1991.

WWII theme chosen for new CAF facility

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The combined might of the Allied air power that "made the difference" in the World War II fight against the Axis powers will be represented at the Midland-based Confederate Air Force (CAF) by late 1991 — 50 years after the United States officially entered the war.

Along with the combat and support aircraft will be an expansive museum of artifacts from the 1939-45 World War II era and an outdoor motif reminiscent of a U.S. Army Air Corps airfield.

"We are going to have a World War II-type theme for the exterior of the museum," said CAF Chief of Staff Joe Mabee of Midland. "It could be sandbags and guns. It will look like a World War II air base headquarters."

The CAF General Staff approved the general master plan, rendered by Rhotenberry Wellen Architects & Planners of Midland, at the Aug. 18 joint meeting of the General Staff and the CAF National Steering Committee at Breckenridge, Colo.

"The hangars will be modern, but the headquarters building and museum building will follow the theme of World War II," said

Celiac sprue controlled by diet

Sufferers of gluten intolerance disorder must avoid many grains

■ A local group offers support, recipes and lists of prepared foods to 'celiacs' — persons unable to digest gluten — and their families.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Imagine a world devoid of doughnuts, barren of Big Macs, and you have a sense of what it's like to live with celiac sprue, a gluten intolerance disorder.

Celiacs, as sufferers are called, cannot eat foods containing wheat, barley, rye, buckwheat or oats because the gluten the grains contain causes vomiting, bloating, diarrhea and abdominal cramps.

Many undiagnosed celiacs make the rounds of doctor's offices for years before the disorder is discovered. About one in 2,500 people has celiac sprue.

"It's a mysterious, hard to diagnose illness because the symptoms are common to several diseases, including Crohn's disease," said Pat Gatlin, the president of the West Texas chapter of the Celiac Sprue Association .

Mrs. Gatlin suffered from dermatitis herpetiforms, an itchy skin condition marked by blood blisters, in addition to the gastroenterological ailments, before being diagnosed with celiac sprue 13 years ago.

Doctors performed a battery of inconclusive tests on her before putting her on a gluten-free diet to see how she responded.

Within a few months, Mrs. Gatlin's symptoms had cleared up. They have stayed in remission as long as she has remained gluten-free.

"The symptoms are bad enough that it's worth staying on the diet," she siad.

Dr. U.P. Rao, an Odessa gastroenterologist, said he has diagnosed two or three celiacs a year in the 11 years he has worked in West Texas.

He wrote his medical doctoral thesis on small bowel biopsy and said celiac sprue is easy to confirm if a patient is suspected to have it.

"I look for it when I see abdominal distention, a patient who eats but has no weight gain and when the usual tests for stomach and colon infections come back negative," Rao said.

He then runs a chemical profile on the patient. If he sees the patient's protein, blood fat and carotene levels are low, he suspects a malabsorption problem.

Although scientists have not found the exact cause of celiac sprue, Rao said studies suggest that the disorder, which affects men and women, is hereditary and related to a defective gene. He said the disorder often goes into remission during the teen-age years and during pregnancy, perhaps as a result of hormonal changes.

When the small intestine cannot absorb gluten, the protein that makes bread rise, it often is also unable to absorb other proteins, fats, carbohydrates, vitamins and minerals, leaving the patient malnourished.

Rao said a biopsy of an untreated celiac's small intestine shows shrunken and flat villi — the fin-

Dynagen has court date Friday in Odessa

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Dynagen Inc., which manufactures synthetic rubber from petrochemicals, will be in court next Friday to defend civil-contempt charges that its operations are polluting the air.

Dynagen, represented by Houston attorney James E. "Jim" Smith, will go up against Assistant Texas Attorney General David Preister at 9 a.m. Friday in Judge Tryon Lewis's 161st Texas State Judicial Court. Preister is in the Attorney General's Environmental Protection Division.

Dynagen, a subsidiary of General Tire, was ordered by Lewis — in a temporary injunction issued Jan. 17 — not to emit "any air contaminant in such concentration and of such duration that may tend to be injurious" to life and property.

The court cited 21 instances in May, June, July, August and September when Dynagen allegedly permitted the "emission of foul and offensive odors from its solar wastewater evaporation ponds."

The contempt-of-court hearing was ordered following Texas Air Control Board's monitoring of the plant and following vociferous complaints by people who live in the neighborhood of the Odessa plant. Dynagen is near Interstate Highway 20 and Grandview Avenue in south Odessa.

The residents complained of "stinky" and odorous pond emissions.

Dr. Neil Carman, an engineering specialist with the Texas Air Control Board (TACB) in Odessa, said that Dynagen has been issued permits by the Texas Water Commission (TWC) and by TACB to discharge wastewater into the ponds. Dynagen operates seven ponds covering 160 acres.

Part of the stench is that of hydrogen sulfide (H2O), a poisonous gas associated with the odor of rotten eggs.

"The water evaporates," Carman said. "The chemicals undergo biological decay. And the remaining residue that doesn't evaporate settles to the bottom as sludge," said Carman. "It's a huge sludge build-up from several inches to several feet."

The air pollution from the wastewater ponds comes from biological decay of organic matter and processed chemicals, Carman said.

The odor from a north-side pond, labeled 3A, has been "horrendous," Carman said. "They have since treated it" with chlorine dioxide, which is used in water-purification efforts, as a stopgap measure.

"It's a very temporary thing," Carman said. "Every summer, we've had complaints about the odor." The treatment is "just killing the bacteria" in the wastewater ponds but "isn't penetrating into the sludge." A clean-up of the sludge, he said, likely would cost millions of dollars.

Dynagen denies that it is creating a nuisance.

Last week, representatives of the Texas Attorney General's Office, Texas Water Commission,

My list of hobbies about as creative as my checkbook

It was one of those questions that always makes me cringe.

But there it was again, bigger than life, staring me straight in the eye. It said, "Please list your hobbies."

Ott

The question makes me feel so inadequate. The truth of the matter is, I don't have any hobbies. But if you fill in the blank with the word "none" people tend to think you are strange, or, worse, boring.

So, I fake it.

I put down activities I think will impress other people. Usually I start with golf, a sport that oozes with upper middle-class sophistication. Rich people play golf. So I quickly jot it down in the allotted space.

The only problem is, I hate golf. Well, that's not exactly true, either. I hate playing golf. The game itself is quite nice. It has lots of history, tradition and colorful figures from the past, men like Walter Hagen, Jimmy Demaret and Tommy Bolt. But playing the game is a different matter altogether. You sweat a lot, scratch your legs while trying to find the balls you duck-hooked into the mesquite and spend a week's salary replacing those balls you never found.

So forget golf. It's a stupid game, anyway. Only Republicans who wear silly-looking plaid shorts with black socks pulled up to their armpits play golf.

Next I put down "writing."

Again, it sounds good. "Oh," the person no doubt thinks. "Here's a creative person. He spends his leisure time writing. I wonder if he prefers poetry or short stories."

Yeah, right.

The last serious thing I wrote was a check at the grocery store. Granted, it was creative, but that had more to do with my own version of modern math than literature.

So I move on to my third choice — reading.

Like "writing," it has an intellectual ring to it, conjuring up images of a wise old man sitting in his den wearing a tweed coat with patches on the elbows, poring over the pages of War and Peace. That, I figure, is bound to impress others.

Perhaps. But usually they want to know what I enjoy reading. And, that's where the trouble begins. War and Peace it ain't. Instead, it usually is more alone the lines of supermarket tabloids that feature huge headlines about Vanna White being nude in the hot tub with a porn star.

OK, reading is out, too.

So where does that leave me? With no hobbies, that's where.

Well, that's about to change. As part of the new me, I have come up with a whole new list of extracurricular activities. They include:

■ Hanging out at the local bus station, begging for spare change.

■ Organizing a militant political group that will call for the immediate imprisonment of all TV evangelists who have the audacity to wear Rolex watches on the air while pleading with elderly people on fixed incomes to send them their last five dollars.

■ Wearing ragged clothes and playing the harmonica on street corners.

■ Introducing a correspondence course for Midland drivers that will teach them once and for all that when a sign says "One Way" with an arrow pointing west, that means they can't go east, especially if I happen to be going west.

■ Collecting all National Enquirers that have enticing stories about celebrity sex scandals on their front pages.

Hey, don't knock it 'til you try it. Besides, it beats reading War and Peace.

DEATHS

Virginia M. McGill

Virginia M. McGill, 81, a Midland resident since 1987, died Friday at a local nursing home.

McGill

Services will be at 1 p.m. Monday at the Ellis Chapel with Dr. James Denison of First Baptist Church officiating. Graveside services will be at 1 p.m. Tuesday at Sunset Park in San Antonio with Dr. Harry Lucenay of the First Baptist Church in San Antonio officiating. Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. McGill was born June 14, 1909 in St. Louis, Mo. She married Homer Hamilton in 1928. She later married Wiley McGill in 1954. He died in the 1970s.

Mrs. McGill was a member of the First Baptist Church of Midland. Prior to moving to Midland, she was a member of the First Baptist Church in San Antonio for more than 40 years. In addition, she was a member of Eastern Star in Boerne.

Survivors include one son, Dean Hamilton of Midland; two stepsons, F.M. McGill of Bakersfield, Calif., and Jim McGill of Dallas; one daughter-in-law and four grandchildren.

She was preceded in death by two sons, Daniel Hamilton in infancy and David Hamilton of San Antonio in 1986.

Lawrence L. Krizan

Services for Lawrence Lee Krizan, 71, of Midland were held Saturday at the Ellis Chapel with the Rev. Alan Williams officiating. Military services were held Saturday at the Miles Cemetery in Miles. The chaplain from Goodfellow Air Force Base in San Angelo conducted the military service. Ellis Funeral Home was in charge of arrangements.

He died Thursday afternoon at a Midland hospital.

He was born Feb. 28, 1919, in West to Victor and Mary Krizan. He graduated from Waco High School in 1937. He lettered in football for three years and played for the Cottonwood Comets Baseball Texas team at West High School. He moved from Waco to San Angelo in 1938 and enlisted in the Air Force in 1941. He was stationed in Biloxi, Miss., transferred to England and then Germany during World War II. Krizan was employed by the American Co., in San Francisco, then married the former Esther Pospichal on Sept. 6, 1947, in San Angelo.

Krizan graduated with honors from San Angelo Business College. He moved to Midland in 1949. He worked for Midland Hardware, Joe Dixon Drilling Co., Midland Memorial Hospital and was the controller for the Midland Petroleum Club for more than 20 years before his retirement in 1982.

Survivors include his wife, Esther Krizan of Midland; two daughters, Mrs. Charles (Marilyn Gay) Wallen of Flower Mound and Mrs. Alan (Dorothy Jean) Markell of St. Louis, Mo.; three sisters, Ruby Price of Clearlake, Calif., and Elaine Robinson and Evelyn Galvan, both of San Jose, Calif.; three grandchildren and numerous nieces and nephews.

Honorary pallbearers were George Socha, Don Price, Mel Galvan and Sterling Robertson.

The family requests memorials be directed to the American Heart Association or to the American Lung Society.

Ottie M. Dueitt

Services for Ottie M. Dueitt, 77, of Midland were held Wednesday at Carter-Adams Funeral Home with Rev. Jim Morrow officiating. Burial was in Ralls Cemetery. Local arrangements were with Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Dueitt died last Sunday at her home.

She was born in Childress and had lived in Ralls, Seminole and Houston before returning to Midland in 1971. She was a 25-year resident of Midland. Her husband, Leo Dueitt, preceded her in death.

She was a licensed vocational nurse for 45 years and was a Baptist.

Survivors include one son, Robert Whitaker of Midland; one daughter, Georgia Kubiak of Midland; one brother, Ray Shook of Dallas; three sisters, Lena Green and Daisy King, both of Ralls, and Ila White of Floydada; four grandchildren and eight-great-grandchildren.

Selicidad Flores

SHEFFIELD — Selicidad 'Lita' Yharte Flores, 64, of Sheffield and formerly of Ozona, died Saturday at a San Angelo hospital.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Monday at Our Lady of Guadalupe Catholic Church in Sheffield with burial to follow at 4 p.m. at the Lima Cemetery in Ozona.

Mrs. Flores was born April 22, 1926 in Alpine.

She was a homemaker.

Survivors include two daughters, Gloria Flores and Evagelina Flores, both of Sheffield; seven sons, Richard Flores of Lamesa, Valentine Flores Jr., of San Angelo, Johnny Flores of Plano, Rayneldo Flores of Dallas, Mario Flores of Ozona, and Alfredo Flores and Robert Flores, both of Sheffield; six sisters; six brothers and 32 grandchildren.

Bradley McQuerry

BIG SPRING — Services for Bradley McQuerry, 65, of Coahoma will be at 2 p.m. Monday at the Nalley, Pickle and Welch Rosewood Chapel. Interment will follow at the Coahoma Cemetery.

McQuerry died Friday at a Midland hospital.

Born June 18, 1925, in Tye, he married Dorothy Smith on July 14, 1950, in Midland.

He is survived by his wife; two sons, Gary McQuerry of Crane and Randy McQuerry of Baker, Mont.; one daughter, Delaina Swanson of Oklahoma City; his mother, Verna Bell of Balmorhea; and one sister, Elizabeth Cook of Balmorhea.

The family asks that memorials be sent to the American Cancer Society.

Marydell Matslet

PLAINVIEW — Services for Marydell Matslet, 69, will be held at 2 p.m. Monday in Lemons Memorial Chapel with the Rev. Sidney Parsley officiating. Burial will follow at the Plainview Cemetery.

Mrs. Matslet died Friday.

Born Dec. 22, 1921, in Dickens County, she married Ernest Matslet on Feb. 21, 1938. He died Dec. 2, 1989.

Survivors include a daughter, Carol McClure of Midland; a son, Bill Matsley of Houston; a brother, Lowell Sawyers of Mesquite; a sister, Dorothy Fahle of Borger; eight grandchildren and three great-grandchildren.

Walter Locker Sr.

A vigil prayer service will be recited by Sister Urbana of St. Ann's Catholic Church at 7 p.m. Tuesday. Funeral mass will be recited by Father Fred Nawarskas of St. Ann's at 9:30 a.m. Wednesday at St. Ann's Catholic Church.

Ellis Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

and Texas Air Control Board met in private apparently to discuss the Dynagen case. Officials there included Charley Sims, regional director of the TACB in Odessa; Jim Braddock, head of the TACB's legal division in Austin; Jim Haley, TWC legal chief in Austin, and William "Bill" Lockey, head of the TWC in Odessa.

Ken Scheible, a 46-year-old Dynagen maintenance mechanic, said that he has come up with a "whole fistful" of violations.

"It's mostly air," he said. "We've got some problems in those solar ponds," which, he said, are lined with plastic.

"One of the solar ponds won't hold its water level. They know it's leaking, and they won't do anything about it," Scheible.

Scheible's concern is to clean up the plant and its operation — not to close the plant. Dynagen, which supplies bulk rubber to tire companies in the United States, Mexico and Canada, produces black and brown rubber, colored by carbon black, and white rubber.

"I don't want them to shut down," Scheible said. "I make my living out there. I just want them to clean it up."

Light plane crash kills San Antonio couple

BAIRD, Texas (AP) — A single-engine plane crashed during heavy rain Saturday, killing a San Antonio couple, authorities said.

The single-engine Beechcraft crashed in Callahan County, about 20 miles east of Abilene, according to Texas Department of Public Safety trooper Jim Cook.

Cook said the victims were an attorney, 48, and his wife, 43, but said their names were being withheld pending notification of relatives.

CAF: WWII focus of museum's exterior

(From 1B)

The CAF site at Midland International Airport is on the airport's northwest quadrant and may, with options, take up to 70 acres.

The movement of the thousands of CAF artifacts and memorabilia from the current CAF headquarters at Valley International Airport at Harlingen in the Rio Grande Valley is to get under way late this week under direction of CAF Col. Bill Pounds.

Movement of the CAF aircraft, including those flyable and others in various stages of restoration, is to take place in 1991.

Meanwhile, the CAF will stage its AirSho'90 over the Harlingen airport on Oct. 12-14. Other than CAF air-power demonstrations by 1939-45-vintage aircraft, the air show will feature the U.S. Air Force Thunderbirds, precision-flying team, on Friday, Oct. 12, and Saturday, Oct. 13.

The World War II motif at the CAF's Midland site may be patterned after the U.S. Army Air Forces' Eighth Air Force in England, noted Richard "Ish" Ingram, who is director of the joint development of the CAF and its Air Power Heritage Foundation.

"That was the biggest flying effort of all," Ingram, a retired U.S. Air Force brigadier general, said of the Eighth Air Force, which dispatched bombers and fighters, such as the B-17 Flying Fortress, the P-47 Thunderbolt, the P-51 Mustang, and the P-38 Lightning, into raids on Nazi Germany during war. "They had 1,000 bombers in the air at one time."

Ingram, an avowed "optimist" who is fascinated by flight, spent 38 years in the Air Force "working on airplanes or flying them. I'm a big believer in airplanes.

"Aviation is just part of my blood," said Ingram, who is convinced that West Texas is "the right place for the Confederate Air Force.

"I've always believed it should be out of the Valley ... for the sake of the airplanes." Ingram cited the corrosive effects of the salt-water atmosphere of the Gulf Coast. "Corrosion is a major problem" for the 50-year-old airplanes.

The arid nature — low humidity and light rainfall — of the Midland area will contribute to the further preservation of the aircraft.

In its Ghost Squadron, the CAF has about 140 aircraft, including 90 airplanes on active flying status. Most are "front-line" bombers and fighters and, Ingram noted, reputedly make up the world's most complete collection of flying World War II aircraft from the Allied and Axis Powers.

"The Smithsonian (Institution) has just a ton of good airplanes," Ingram said, "but the beautiful thing about these (CAF) airplanes is that they fly."

With the continued and growing support of the CAI , "not only can West Texas be proud" to be the headquarters of the international CAF, but Midland will become a "Mecca of aviation not only in America but all over the world.

"It's going to really attract a lot of tourists," Ingram said. Additionally, the CAF headquarters will be an "excellent" site for aviation research. Research material will not only include the vintage aircraft but war documents and oral-history reports by World War II veterans, including air crews and support personnel.

The CAF hangars at Midland International Airport will include the old Windecker Hangar and two additional hangars, about 300-by-225 feet and 300-by-125, and large enough to hangar the Boeing B-29 Superfortress, the largest bomber to emerge from World War II.

The grand opening of the CAF Midland facilities during the week of Dec. 7, 1991, will include a five-day international symposium to tell the "why" behind the Japanese attack of Pearl Harbor on Dec. 7, 1941.

"We are going to have a five-day international symposium," Mabee said. "We are going to tell the 'complete why' of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor in great detail. We will reenact the attack."

And the CAF colonels are "the only people in the world who can do it," Mabee said of the reenactment. "There will be lots of symposiums on Pearl Harbor around the world, but there will be only one place where they will reenact the attack with real airplanes, and that's Midland, Texas."

Through 1996, the CAF will "reenact the great air battles of World War II, both Navy and Army," Mabee said. "Big things are going to happen. We're going to put Midland on the map."

EVENT: Museum's annual event will continue today

(From 1B)

"If the lightning had been very bad, it would have closed us down, but it was minimal," Ms. Smitherman said. "People come kind of casual and don't mind getting wet. The kids were out here playing in the puddles and loving it. The nice thing about Midland — it dries up real fast. We have one low spot, and that's it. It will be nice tomorrow. Weather permitting, we're opening tomorrow at 12 (noon)."

The annual fund raiser features works by artists from across the United States. This year's festival has 70 participating artists, five of whom are local — Mavis Murphy, Charlotte Seay, Jo Dufault, Leslie D'Allesandro Hill, all of Midland, and Odessan Jean Johnson.

"I've had a good day today," Ms. Murphy said. "We've had lots of people and everybody's having a good show. One of the Las Manos members told me this is one of the best crowds they've had. So what more can we say?"

In addition, the outdoor event features Kinderfest, a carnival for children of all ages, and food booths, some of whom are manned by local organizations such as the Morning Lions Club and the Midland Downtown Kiwanis.

Earlier in the day, the heat had been stifling.

"The people who are coming are hungry and thirsty," said the Rev. Alan Williams, chaplain at Midland Memorial Hospital and a member of the Midland Downtown Kiwanas. "We ran out of nacho cheese." He went on to say the chapter had re-supplied and increased their output.

As he turned to walk away, he said, "Remember, the Northside Lions Club has Bluebell Ice Cream. In six flavors."

GLUTEN: 'Celiacs' can't digest some grains

(From 1B)

ger-like projections from the intestinal lining that absorb nutrients.

"When you take the patient off gluten for three months and repeat all the tests, the patient is perfectly normal and the villi have come right back," he said.

Lois Newbold has been on the gluten-free diet for more than 20 years. She said she doesn't miss the breads and cakes that made her sick.

"It wasn't hard to wean myself off gluten because I felt so terrible on it," Mrs. Newbold said.

However, she said the scent of fresh-baked bread still makes her nostalgic.

"I grew up on a farm and my mother made yeast bread all the time. I still get memories in my tastebuds."

Mrs. Newbold believes she has had celiac sprue ever since she was a small, under-developed child who was susceptible to boils. But doctors were not widely aware of the disorder at the time and her condition went untreated for years.

"The doctors went through a process of elimination with me. They thought I might have cancer so they were going to do bone marrow tests on me, but first they tried me on a gluten-free diet. Three months later I was feeling so much better," she said.

Research during World War II popularized the benefits of the diet, Mrs. Newbold said.

"It became obvious that in Germany and Ireland, where people were doing without wheat flour to help the war effort and were relying on rice and other things, (celiacs') symptoms diminished.

"After the war, they came back to their old problems as food became more plentiful," she said.

Mrs. Newbold said improvements in prepared food products over the past 20 years have been a big help to celiacs.

"When I was first on the diet, there were no flour mixes to substitute for wheat flour and there were only a few places where you could get tapioca and rice flour. Ready-made foods just weren't available," she said.

Now health food suppliers market gluten-free products and the Celiac Sprue Association prepares lists of products that do not contain "hidden gluten" in the form of thickeners and binders.

"Really, it's a much more nutritious diet than the normal diet," Mrs. Newbold said. She eats a variety of fresh fruits, vegetables and broiled meats to get the nutrients she needs.

"The main problem is eating out and being on vacation," she said. "I have to ask to talk to the chef to find out what's in the foods. But I always know I can have a cottage cheese and fruit plate."

Runell Seale wonders if her six-year-old celiac twins will stay on their gluten-free diets once they're in school.

"T.J. adheres to his diet like an angel, but Lyndie sneaks food," she said. "I stress that it's a life-long thing."

The twins were diagnosed with celaic sprue when they were 15 months old after they suffered from constant diarrhea and failed to gain weight following a premature birth. They've been on the diet five years.

"I wasn't worried about cutting out bread because small children don't miss bread. You always see toddlers walking around with crackers in their hands; they ate rice cakes instead," Mrs. Seale said.

She joined the West Texas Celiac Sprue Association support group for emotional support and recipes.

"I don't have celiac sprue, nor does the rest of my family, but I cook gluten-free and I've become a real label reader for hidden gluten — it's everywhere, even in cherry pie filling," she said.

The year-old group, which meets on the second Saturday of each month in various Midland churches, has about 45 members from cities as far away as Lubbock, San Angelo and Abilene, as well as Midland and Odessa.

Mrs. Gatlin said she helped start the group because "You tend to feel like you're the only one (with the disorder).

"But you need some support with this, especially in the beginning because when you try to fix pancakes without wheat flour and they come out all tough and grainy, you think your life's ruined, that you'll never bake again," she said.

With a mixture of rice, potato, soy and corn flours combined with tapioca, vegetable gums and buttermilk, celiacs can make substitutions in most recipes calling for glutenous flours.

"We're here to prove there is life after wheat," Mrs. Gatlin said.

October is Celiac Sprue Awareness Month. Celiacs and their families are invited to attend the Oct. 13 support group meeting at 3 p.m. at Westside Church of Christ. For more information, call Pat Gatlin at 682-1646.

Beverly Shilling/Reporter-Telegram

Victoria Sperry of Midland Need to Read participates in a reading marathon to attract attention to the organization Saturday at Waldenbooks in Midland Park Mall. Tutors and students from the organization read books and chatted with passersby from 10:30 a.m.-6:30 p.m. The event honored National Newspaper Literacy Day.

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

People who can't read often try to hide their inability to make sense of the written word. Saturday members of Midland Need to Read sat out in public to call attention to literacy problems.

Tutors and students staged a silent demonstration in front of Waldenbooks as they sat and read favorite novels. They hoped to catch the attention of curious passersby and book browsers to let them know about Midland's program which aids adults who read at the fifth grade level or below.

"Of course we still help people once they pass the fifth grade level," said Patti Groce, executive director of Midland Need to Read. "Fifth grade level is just a guideline," she said.

Ms. Groce, a former English teacher, said she decided to get involved in teaching reading once she discovered that she had a high school classroom full of students who lacked reading skills.

"There I was — ready to teach Shakespeare and Chaucer," Ms. Groce said. "I wasn't prepared to find out that students couldn't read." She said there were many contributing factors to the students' inability to read. "Some students may have been ill for long periods of time, or their parents may have been migrants, constantly moving," she said.

Ms. Groce said that the students may also have undetected reading disabilities.

"Many people hide the fact that they can't read," she said. "They think that they are all alone and are embarrassed. It's especially easy for students to hide in a classroom. You can't hide in a one-on-one situation, however."

A one-on-one situation is what Need to Read offers adults with reading problems. Adult volunteers tutor participants individually.

Stella May, a tutor who has volunteered her services to Need to Read for nearly two years, said teaching people to read has been "a wonderful challenge." She said she is facing her greatest challenge of teaching a foreign-born student English as well as reading.

Midland Need to Read operates from the Midland College campus. It is a nonprofit organization and offers tutoring free of charge. It is designed for adults who cannot read above the fifth grade level. To seek assistance or volunteer as a tutor call 685-4572.

Are you currently making $30,000.00 or more per year? Would you like to be exposed to a unique money making opportunity, an opportunity which could enable you to make 30, 50, or even 100,000 dollars net per month, without quitting your present job? If your answer to these questions is yes, then we need to get together. I would like to introduce you to a low risk (less than $450) business that has virtually no limit in income potential and tax benefits.

This is not a get rich quick scheme. The opportunity offered here is based on a product that dates back over 60 years. The opportunity is a new addition to our story, for at the time the product was developed over 60 years ago, the intent was never to commercialize it.

Since the founding of the company in 1984, this opportunity has provided tremendous results to those who have taken part in it. The financial results now being experienced by some of our leading distributors exceed the incomes earned by major corporate executives in America today.

People from all walks of life are finding success in this industry. Corporate executives, office and factory workers, housewifes, as well as professionals from all fields of endeavor (attorneys, doctors & engineers) are joining this program, many of whom retire from their current jobs within as little as six to twelve months.

If you have the desire to become debt free, to generate lifestyle (the combination of money and free time), you are encouraged to attend a no-risk, no pressure, informative seminar being taught by Lemesa Veterinarian Dr. David Geeslin.

Dr. Geeslin is a 1978 graduate of the College of Veterinary Medicine, Texas A&M University. The no-nonsence manner in which this valuable seminar/opportunity session is presented will be memorable. As seating will be limited you are advised to arrive early.

Drug study offers promising results

Another of those surveys has been released concerning the drug problem in the United States, but this time the results are not depressing. On the contrary, William Bennett, director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy, called the findings "encouraging."

In a nutshell, results of the study by the National Institute on Drug Abuse found cocaine use down 46 percent since 1987 and marijuana use down 28 percent by teen-agers, a prime pool of candidates for drug use. But even more important was the trend in the statistics that cut across racial lines, showing that many more teen-agers appear to be turning away from drugs and even excluding drug users from their circles of friends.

In other words, more teens are starting to say, "I don't use drugs and I don't want to be your friend if you do."

Drug abuse never could be classed as strictly a socioeconomic problem. Now there is hard evidence that the "solution" will not result from the efforts of only one socioeconomic group. Gordon Black Corp., the market research and polling firm that conducted the study for the last four years, found a trend away from drug usage in all major ethnic groups — whites, blacks and Hispanics.

The report attributed the change to educational efforts and changing attitudes for an anti-drug trend. In effect, the study indicates that more of the nation's teen-agers are fed up with drugs and drug-users, which is an attitude all our society needs to adopt.

Although results of the survey may not have justified the enthusiastic response of James Burke, chairman of the partnership that funded the study and former head of Johnson & Johnson, in saying the study shows that "the nation is in the process of turning off drugs," it is an extremely heartening report that the nation is moving that way.

While it's wise to be leery of studies that contradict generally accepted "facts" such as this one, there are several reasons the Gordon Black Corp. study appears believable. One is the fact that it was not a poll, but rather a study conducted over the span of four years. Another was that the sponsors did not attempt to play down the fact that the nation does still have a very real drug problem with which to deal.

Burke said, "We still have a massive drug problem in this country. Millions of Americans are still using illegal drugs and many of them are in real trouble."

The obvious answer to what the survey reveals and other figures verify — such as the sharp decline in the number of cocaine-related emergency room visits at hospitals across the country — is that today's teen-agers are getting wise to the fact that the drug roller-coaster only leads to a dead-end of death or addiction. So they're changing their lives in a meaningful way — and not just through a personal decision to no longer use drugs. Teens are signing off on their friends who use drugs, too. Peer pressure in reverse, if you will.

Burke highlighted the most important finding from the study when he said, "There is a profound cultural shift occurring as Americans decide that using illegal drugs is no longer acceptable behavior in any regard."

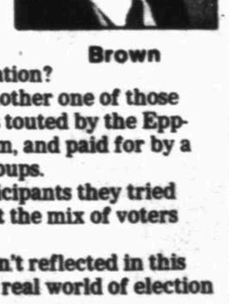

Using drugs never was acceptable. Now this nation needs to capitalize on this trend by encouraging all its drug users to "go straight."

Special interests needed just to make ends meet

AUSTIN — We might as well lock up the Capitol and sell it to Disney for a theme park.

That could be what state leadership had in mind anyway with their $150 million expansion and renovation. Are Gib Lewis, Bill Hobby and Bill Clements just trying to maximize the old building's value before the big sale?

Brown

Probably not, but the way we pay legislators — $7,200 yearly — surely must lead our senators and representatives to consider corporate and interest group sponsorship as a way to make ends meet.

Some already are doing it in subtle and not-so-subtle ways through the "friendships" struck with the hundreds of lobbyists that huant the Capitol halls.

After a fine meal in one of Austin's better restaurants, do you suppose your state legislator represents your interests or those of the Texas Chemical Council, your district's interests or those of the Texas Trial Lawyers Association?

This digression comes at the instigation of another one of those polls that have come out recently. This one was touted by the Eppstein Group, a Fort Worth opinion research firm, and paid for by a loose organization of trade and professional groups.

Poll designers said in choosing the 1,203 participants they tried to mirror actual election turnout instead of just the mix of voters who are registered.

That means if you don't vote, your opinion isn't reflected in this poll, just as your opinion wouldn't count in the real world of election politics.

The poll takers measured all sorts of variables — support for candidates in the governor's race, which tax is deemed "most fair," etc., etc. — but the shocker came on the issue of legislative pay raises and ethics reform.

This was the question: "If the Legislature were to pass a tough ethics reform bill, would you support a pay raise for state legislators to bring their annual salaries to $16,000 a year?"

Fifty percent said no.

Mind-boggling.

So I say Disney must have a spare Mickey Mouse we can stick on top of the Capitol dome to replace the goddess of Liberty.

Texas Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle talks of a day when the different legislative districts elected college students for representatives. They'd be in Austin going to UT anyway.

If we continue to pay the people who are supposed to be looking out for our interests so meargerly, we may wake up one day to find Anheuser-Busch, the Sea World people, have taken over.

In any case, there's this huge hole behind the Capitol right now, ostensibly dug for an underground annex, that would be just great for Shamu if filled with water.

JACK ANDERSON

What is really at stake in Mideast?

WASHINGTON — George Bush, still looking for "the vision thing," has yet to clearly enunciate the chief reason why he has committed troops to the Middle East. Bush has said he is there to reinstate the Kuwaiti royal family to power. But the message the American public has heard is that our men and women are risking their lives to keep the supply of oil flowing.

Anderson

If soldiers start coming home in body bags, either reason will sound hollow.

There is a vision behind the deployment, even if Bush doesn't see it. Saddam Hussein has handed Bush the makings of greatness.

Peace was breaking out all over the globe just a few months ago. It still is, and Bush has the opportunity to use that spirit of global cooperation in Kuwait. He has a once-in-a-presidency chance to create a new world order in which crises are solved through consensus and international law which, for the first time, a majority of nations are interpreting the same way.

Today's crisis, like the period following World War II, sets in motion forces that, by their very nature, depart from past patterns of behavior and could change the course of history in the Middle East. It can be used as leverage to bring the East Bloc, and even Israel, into a common cause with Arabs and the West.

Since the creation of Israel, there have been five wars between Israel and its Arab neighbors. In each case, Israel acquired Arab land and the United States didn't rush in troops to force the return of that land, as it has with Kuwait.

During the past 40 years, the plight of the Palestinians and the Israeli occupation dominated the Middle East. The debate focused on security for Israel and a homeland for the Palestinians. But the Iraqi crisis changes that. It requires a new look at the long-held Israeli contention, once seen as self-serving, that the real threat to stability in the region will come from inter-Arab fighting and not from an Arab-Israeli conflict.

America's national interests in the region have been defined by four primary objectives. The first has been to ensure the security and survival of Israel. The second, has been to ensure access to a reliable and steady supply of relatively cheap oil. The third has been to maintain good relations with Arab nations and seek a peace between them and Israel. The fourth was to keep the Soviets out of the region.

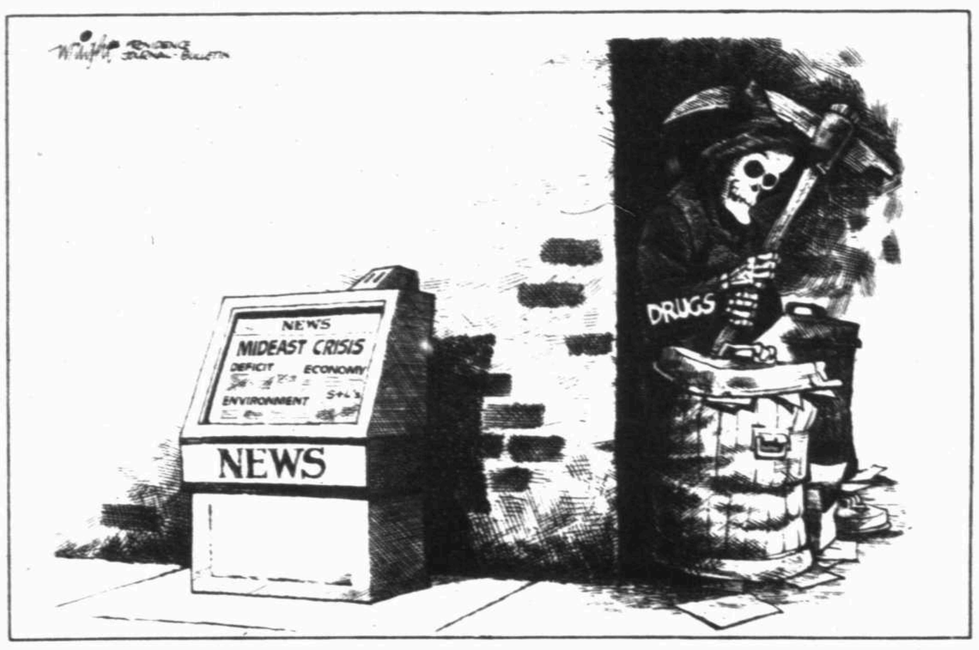

The fourth is nearly obsolete, and in fact the United States is now trying to get the Soviets into the area with military force since they are already diplomatically on the U.S. side.

The second priority, cheap oil, is not anywhere close to becoming an obsolete priority, but how high a price will the United States pay in lives to preserve access to oil?

There are many, particularly in the White House, who are privately and publicly saying that our highest priority is oil because it drives the world economy. While oil is important, it pales, in our view, before something else that hangs in the balance of this crisis.

What is at stake in the Persian Gulf is how the United States solves problems in the new world. The role must be defined in a way that fosters consensus, cooperation and diplomatic solutions to crises — and resists the temptation to become a heavy-handed world police force.

RUSSELL BAKER

Mideast crisis dispelled a lot of problems

NEW YORK — Troubles get boring. They wear out their welcome. The savings and loan crisis had reached that stage. So had homelessness.

People were saying, "I know homelessness is terrible, but I'm tired of it." They were saying, "Sure the savings and loan catastrophe may bankrupt the country, but it's been around longer than February now and I've had it up to here."

Baker

When things reach this stage people need something to chase their troubles away. This is why the latest military expedition has been so refreshing. It has given us some new news.

Not good news. Good news doesn't perk people up. People say they want good news but they don't. For good news it's hard to beat the collapse of Communism and the end of the cold war, yet millions got bored with it overnight. Good news gets boring even faster than trouble.

What people really want is new news, and that's what Saddam Hussein's impetuosity and President Bush's military response have provided. The savings and loan problem has disappeared, as if by magic, the way headaches vanish instantly when exposed to the sponsor's tablets.

("My savings and loan catastrophe's gone! My savings and loan catastrophe's gone!")

It was new news that did the job, and not just on that tiresome savings and loan business. When's the last time you had one of those dreary conversations about the awful plight of the homeless? Not since the news hawks abandoned the grates for the desert, I'll bet.

Remember the budget problem? Of course you don't, and you're glad you don't, aren't you? You'd been told about that budget problem for so long that you were ready to scream with boredom, when, in the very nick of time, the problem ceased to exist.

("It's gone! My budget problem's gone!")

No longer must Americans plod tediously onward with their daily task of worrying whether the whole country might have to be pawned to Japan, or Germany, or maybe Korea. (Eventually maybe even to Vietnam, since it seems to be our old enemies-at-arms who end up with the big money.)

How did we make those awful old problems vanish? We took one Saddam Hussein and one Bush, and presto! the world was a new world, thanks to the miracle ingredient they contained: new news.

Sure it had once been fun to quake as the news recorded the daily swish of the dreadful Gramm-Rudman automatic budget-slashing ax coming closer and closer and closer, though after awhile it had got to be — what's that wonderful old expression? — incredibly boring.

And no wonder. Night after night, week in and week out, turning on the telly, picking up the paper, finding absolutely nothing new in the way of trouble — it brought the spirit to the breaking point.

Savings and loan, homelessness, budget, Japanese pawnshop, hideous Gramm-Rudman automatic slashing ax — one wanted to cry, "Will no one free us of these stale and tiresome old troubles?"

No, I do not believe that Saddam Hussein in faraway Baghdad heard bored America screaming and decided to bring us the new news we desperately craved. I believe him to be a man deficient not just in judgment and finesse, but also in the sensitivity required to realize how desperately we yearned to be unburdened of so much boring old news.

His adventurism probably just happened to coincide with the American public's need for something completely different. And yes, of course this refreshing new news is also bad news, and may become much worse news any day now.

Whenever the new news is military it tends to lose very quickly its power to refresh this difficult audience, whose short attention span might make it yawn at the imminence of doomsday itself after five consecutive nights of reporting from Doomsday Headquarters.

The last two American military expeditions, into Grenada and Panama, ended so swiftly that the news audience never had time to lose interest, much less get sick and tired of them. The one that preceded those two, however, kept audience attention focused on Vietnam so long that Americans still remember it as a nightmare when even news about something as tiresome as the savings and loan scandal would have seemed diverting.

The question is not how long people will continue absorbing news about sand and heat without feeling the need for some newer news. The question is whether some newer news will turn up to solve our Middle East troubles as effectively as our Middle East troubles have solved the savings and loan, homelessness and budget problems.

GEORGE WILL

Aggression not wrapped in a neat package

WASHINGTON — As U.S. forces, and policy, settle into the sand for a long stay, a question insistently asked is: Will we become "bogged down" there? The answer is: Of course, and that is good, or at any rate the least bad outcome.

Will

The alternative to being bogged down there is Iraq rampant there. That is, the alternative to being bogged down is not to have gone there.

A quick resort to force might have been satisfying, but catharsis is not an acceptable purpose of foreign policy. It might have been wise, but it certainly would have been no guarantee of a short stay.

One reason the Berlin Wall is down is that U.S. forces were "bogged down" in Europe 45 years after the war ended. It is now 483 months since President Truman committed forces in Korea, and the world is better because some U.S. troops are still there. For many years, concern for oil supplies, and for Israel's safety, have caused America to seek a permanent presence on the ground in the Middle East. To those who say we are now "bogged down" there, others reply: It's about time.

Many complaints and warnings about today's undertaking are coming from conservatives. They, of all people, should understand the impossibility of crisp, tidy ("surgical" is a favored adjective) historical action, particularly with the blunt instrument of military force. Still, many conservatives are sorting themselves into two camps —the overreachers and the underreachers.

The overreachers have the Wall Street Journal, which would like to "take Baghdad and install a MacArthur regency." Well, now.

Who would play MacArthur? He was a prickly, difficult genius, but a genius. And before he was installed in Tokyo, that city and many others (including Hiroshima and Nagasaki) were pulverized and the Emperor had led his people into capitulation and docility. Who will play that role in Iraq? Or are we to do in Iraq what we were spared the agony of doing in Japan: Take the capital, street by street?

Conservative underreachers say Iraq's aggression does not involve U.S. interests proportional to the current commitment. Such conservatives must answer questions they are used to posing to liberals about the use of U.S. power: If not here, where? If not now, when?

The very fact that Kuwait is a boutique nation, more a country club than a country, and no democracy, makes it a suitable subject for the point the Bush administration wants to make. There is no nonsense about the merits of the regime overthrown, none of the sentimentality and mythology ("Brave little Belgium") that has bedeviled policymaking in other conflicts. The point here is the nature of the aggressor, not of the aggressed against.

Twice in his congressional testimony last week, Secretary of State Baker referred to the current crisis as an "opportunity." It is "the first opportunity to limit" aggression in the post-Cold War context. It is an "opportunity to solidify the ground rules of the new order." For 45 years, conservatism has been schizophrenic, favoring strong, power-projecting, ambitious, interventionist, confident government in foreign policy but insisting upon demure, chastened government regarding domestic policy.

Jeane Kirkpatrick says, "With a return to 'normal' times, we can again become a normal nation." The rending argument between conservatives, like the argument between Hamilton and Jefferson and between Lincoln and Douglas, concerns nothing less than what this nation should be, normally.

SPEAKING OUT

Wake up! This war a currency event

By James C. Henry

A Midlander for the past 25 years, James C. Henry is a native of Oklahoma and graduate of the University of Oklahoma. He is president of a Midland petroleum company.

Come on, wake up America! We fought in two world wars and won them both. Where is that spirit? Remember the song, "We'll be over, we're coming over and we won't be back 'til it's over over there."

We are now engaged in a great battle, it is not with bullets but with dollars, yen and marks. The battle is to see which nation, which culture will survive. The battle is to see if America will remain American or will be owned by some nation whose interests are alien to ours.

Look at Times Square, is the Coca Cola sign still there? Who owns half of Texaco's refineries, who owns MGM, and this sell-out is just starting.

They say that it is now a world economy and nationalism is dead. Well, tell that to the Japanese. Japanese companies in the United States hire Japanese managers and discriminate against U.S. citizens. We don't do that. Japan closes their doors to U.S. goods and we open our doors to theirs. When are we going to realize that this can't continue. We must have laws to protect us from that. Other nations do, we are one of the few that don't.

But the way to win this war is not just through laws, even though they can help, but through old-fashioned, honest, frugal savings. We must quit spending more than we make; both on the national, business and personal level. We are being bought out by countries that save more than we do. We are selling American factories, office buildings and refineries to Japanese, Germans and English so that we can live high on the hog today. We are selling our independence so that we can have a higher standard of living.

The president and Congress must set an example. We don't need higher taxes, we need less spending. We need statesmen with the guts to stand up and say this or that welfare program must be cut. We need leaders that will tell foreign governments we can't support you anymore, you are on your own. And tell Europe and Japan that we are no longer going to spend billions of dollars on military spending so that their country will be safe. They are going to have to defend themselves.

Wake up America. We have a real war on our hands. Let's get ourselves a real leader like Churchill or Roosevelt. One that will say, "I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears and sweat" and will roll up his sleeves and will cut spending and balance the budget this year, not some year in the far and ever-receding future. And then maybe all of us will follow his example and start saving also.

We have won two world wars, there is no reason we can't win this one also.

"Speaking Out" columnists are invited to submit articles on subjects of their choice. They should be limited to 700 words or less.

Anglo-American solidarity a necessary ingredient

Editor in Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

LONDON — As President Bush and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev hold a crucial meeting in Helsinki today, there is growing fear here in Britain of a major Middle East war unless there is an appeasement deal that leaves Iraq's villainous tyrant, Saddam Hussein, in power.

Hearst

Shortly before we arrived, a front-page headline in one of the London newspapers read: "America resigned to war." That was news to us and, of course, exaggerated, but it reflects widespread concern not only in Britain but in Europe, the Soviet Union, Asia and the Arab world.

That is why the leaders of all those countries, except for our staunchest foreign ally, British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, want an appeasement deal that will leave Saddam Hussein in power if he gives up his brutal conquest of Kuwait and frees all the U.S. and other foreign hostages, including men as well as women and children. His price for that Byzantine bargain is remaining ruler of Iraq and getting a lion's share of Kuwait's rich oil resources.

If that happens, it will be a great disappointment to Bush and Mrs. Thatcher. With far more realistic wisdom than the other world leaders and U.N. Secretary General Perez de Cuellar, the president and Britain's courageous first woman prime minister know that if Saddam Hussein remains in power he will bide his time until most of the powerful U.S. forces are withdrawn.

Saddam Hussein has strengthened his military might with chemical and quite possibly nuclear weapons. He has urged the vast Islamic masses in the Middle East to mobilize for a Holy War to create a single nation under his domination and with control of most of the world's oil resources. We might then be compelled to send our forces back to the region under much less favorable conditions with the danger of far greater loss of lives than the Pentagon estimates we would suffer if war started this year.

Bush and Mrs. Thatcher hoped the removal of Saddam Hussein would deter future aggression by one nation against another and create a new world order of lasting peace, just as NATO preserved the peace of Europe and averted World War III for nearly half a century.

Those hopes have now been dashed, at least for the foreseeable future, by the decision of the other major powers, including France, West Germany, the Soviet Union, China and the moderate Arab nations to opt for a so-called "diplomatic solution" — meaning an appeasement deal not unlike the one Britain and France made with Hitler, for which Bush said recently "the world paid dearly."

To maintain world unity for the U.N.-approved economic embargo against trade with Iraq, the president reluctantly had to acquiesce to pursuance of a diplomatic solution. Although he originally opposed any discussions with the Iraqi regime until Saddam Hussein had withdrawn his forces from Kuwait and let the independence of that country be restored, Bush recently said the United States was willing to open a dialogue with Baghdad, adding that to achieve Iraq's withdrawal from Kuwait, "you have to talk."

The president will start talking, not to Saddam Hussein but directly to the Iraqi people. In an astonishingly clever move obviously intended to present a reasonable front to the world and lessen tension in the hopes of getting a negotiated deal, the Iraqi despot offered Bush a chance to broadcast an uncensored message direct to the Iraqi people.

The president swiftly accepted the invitation, which he described as a "real opportunity to explain" the purpose of the military buildup in the Persian Gulf. He will undoubtedly reassure the Iraqi people he wants not war but peace with the people and non-aggressive stability in the Middle East. While the Arab masses have been incited to hate the United States because of our support of Israel, listening to the president speaking directly to them in a friendly, rational manner will do more good than harm.

The most encouraging news in London since my arrival Wednesday night aboard the Concorde with Joe Kingsbury Smith, our national editor, and our wives Austine and Eileen, was the Churchillian-type leadership of Prime Minister Thatcher in winning British Labor Party support for a united stand that Iraq withdraw from Kuwait, rescind its annexation of that country and recognize restoration of its sovereignty. It was one of the greatest parliamentary achievements of her nearly 12-year term as a world leader.

LETTERS

Let's check up on Williams, Poss

Listed below are statements and questions that have been on my mind for quite some time.

Councilman Bill Williams is on record in favor of the proposed city tax increase. Would you be interested to know that his home and lot in Green Tree Addition, on Green Tree Boulevard, received an approximately 29 percent decrease in appraised value for the taxable year 1990?

This is a new home with taxes being assessed for the second year only. If I had received the same 29 percent decrease on my modest $40,000 appraised home, I might be for a tax increase also. This is public information — go take a look. Bill has no explanation as to how this decrease came about. Give Bill a call and check it out. Maybe he will give you the same explanation or something better. Bill also relates he never reads or pays attention to the official "Notice of Appraised Value of Property" transmitted to taxpayers from Midland Central Appraisal District. Can you believe this is the same man we have elected to look after our tax dollars?

Have you ever wondered how Dr. Jess Parrish, president of Midland College, and Ralph Way, past president of the board of Midland College, could allow Delmor Poss, Athletic Director of Midland College, and his wife, a teacher at Greenwood Independent School District of Midland County, to continue living in Big Spring in excess of 10 years, without ever contributing one dime in taxes to Midland County? Delmor, your boys finished high school years and years ago, so come on over and join the Midland Tax Payers Club.

C.M. Wyatt Jr.
Midland

Why don't we rank with other cities?

Like many Midlanders I was surprised to read in Money Magazine that Midland ranked 290 in the list of 300 metropolitan areas in terms of overall quality of living, dropping from 145 in last year's ranking. The rating included a number of factors such as finances, housing and jobs, health, crime, weather, leisure facilities, arts, et cetera.

Rather than dismissing the report out of hand or doubting its accuracy it seems to me that the Midland Chamber of Commerce and the city manager should determine why we are near the bottom of the list. What do other West Texas cities like Odessa, Abilene, Amarillo, El Paso, have that we do not have?

Obviously, this report may have some impact on the future growth of Midland in terms of attracting new industries. Instead of ignoring the report we should face up to it. One thing we might do is to reverse the trend of increasing our taxes in each of our tax entities.

Malcolm F. Slayter

Illegal radar use violation of rights

I take issue with your editorial of August 6 whereby you decried the use of radar detectors as a means of breaking speed limits.

It is my contention that the illegal use of radar equipment by law enforcement is a far greater problem in violation of rights than mere speed violations. This device has made tax collectors out of good law enforcement officers and in essence it is another "people control" measure used to fulfill tax quotas.

What do you propose as the the next measure of control? Ban the use of CB radios or outlaw the use of flashing headlight signals? Where does it end?

This is why it is such a pleasure to drive in California where you can actually enjoy the scenery instead of watching the speedometer.

I note that in this morning's edition (Aug. 24, 1990) you have an article entitled "Veterans' benefit handbook offered," which sets out in considerable detail the data available therein.

The article further states that this handbook is available from the Federal Reprints, P.O. Box 70268, Washington, DC 20024 at a cost of $7.95.

This identical publication is available from the Consumer Information Center-R, P.O. Box 100, Pueblo, CO 81002 for a fee of only $2.50.

Looks as if the Federal Reprints outfit has a pretty good racket going — over a 300 percent markup, by my figuring. Sorta hate to see you giving them so much free advertising.

Windfall profits proposal illogical

Now, from those wonderful people who brought you the S&L crisis, and an incomprehensibly large budget deficit punctuated with no real commitment toward solving either disaster we hear an all too familiar call from The Hill. Republican Sen. Bob Packwood from Oregon proposes a punishing "windfall profits tax" which will snare up to 70 percent of price increases on crude oil, transferring this capital to the national treasury.

Many of us have accepted reality in that liberal Democrats will always be antagonistic to our industry and our attempts to help satisfy national energy requirements. But to have a member of the party which purports to support free enterprise and private industry attack us in this fashion comes like a karate kick to the solar plexus.

It is impossible to make logical sense from such an irresponsible proposal. Also, it is unlikely that accurate information such as presented by John Paul Pitts (Midland Reporter-Telegram, Aug. 26, 1990), which places petroleum products pricing in historical perspective, will ever be acknowledged by hostile consuming state legislators, or made available to their constituents.

However, if the intent of Sen. Packwood and like-minded Democrats is to fire one last torpedo into the domestic oil industry, currently lying almost dead in the water, at least let them state openly what they are about.

Let them declare: (1) The "windfall profits tax" is grossly misnamed because it has nothing to do with profits. Rather, it is a punitive, regressive, gross production tax which is to be selectively applied to one segment of our economy. (2) The intent of this tax is to transfer capital resources to the national treasury although this may totally destroy the domestic oil industry. We accept full responsibility for the consequences of this action in that it assures that this country will be forever dependent upon foreign sources with respect to future energy needs.

Will this happen? Of course not. Ignorance is too blissful and duplicity is too politically expedient for these politicians to ever be so open and forthright. And that's the tragic hell of it.

Burns column just S&L finger-pointing

I'm responding to an article by Scott Burns entitled "Who's really behind the S&L mess" in Sunday, Aug. 26 newspaper.

The title might lead you to think it would be a well-thought-out study of the S&L mess. Not so! It is a poor effort to pin the responsibility on the Democrats (can't blame Jimmy Carter). It's the thinnest kind of misleading people by throwing some isolated facts without looking more deeply. The GOP would like to blame the scandals (HUD, S&L) on someone else and escape their responsibility. Burns is 100 percent — maybe 110 percent wrong!

Ronald Reagan led the GOP to a large victory in 1980. Because of his ability to make "The Speech," he was very popular. He came to office, he appointed only republicans to head and staff the government. This is important! He didn't choose any democrats as far as I know.

When Bush became president, he took charge of the country and appointed republicans who had contributed to his election! No democrats!

Deregulation wasn't the democrats' idea. It was the philosophy of the Republican Party. True, due to Reagan's popularity and clout, Congress went along with him. This was a mistake. They make government a tool for the republicans and the rich. His income tax change in 1982 was a Christmas present to the rich and powerful!

Congressmen are elected by the grassroots citizens and the people have supported democrats for many years, thank goodness.

Republicans, the strict interpretation supporters of the Constitution, have not once called upon Congress when a military operation was planned. The Constitution gives only Congress the right to declare war! The GOP leaders ignore this part of the Constitution!

Mr. Burns is a good Republican but a very devious and misleading writer! You should be ashamed! I haven't called him a liar, but he doesn't tell the whole truth!

Summer Mummers deserves praise

Theatre Midland's presentation of its 42nd annual Summer Mummers was indeed a real credit to its long list of most successful productions. I hated to see it close last Saturday, but am looking forward to the 43rd annual Mummers next summer.

I know I'll omit someone deserving praise, but I want to mention a few. Harry Harrison did an excellent job directing his masterpiece. All the double-cast actors were outstanding, the mummers band put out "more music" than a 20 or 30 piece orchestra, so zippy and tuneful. The state crews, set designers, light operators, bar crews, box office staff, ushers, bouncers, security officers, pop corn poppers and sellers, and any others connected with the long-running show — all were so pleasant, cheerful and helpful. Gladly, I tip my hat to each of them.

Cheers to Bruce Partain for his excellent film, the delightful Movieola, and to the Rabbit and Bathtub, and the jokes, satires and humor.

And here's to the Ohio — Wow! Some fun! Each and every act was so entertaining, even the ones that were absurd, under and/or overacted, sung, played or whatever. And who can ever forget our enjoyment of seeing the lovely Card Girls, again, wow!

Congratulations to everyone involved with this 42nd annual Summer Mummers, a masterpiece.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's Highlight in History:

On Sept. 9, 1776, the second Continental Congress made the term "United States" official, replacing "United Colonies."

On this date:

In 1850, California became the 31st state of the union.

In 1890, 100 years ago, Harland Sanders, the honorary Kentucky colonel who founded the Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant chain, was born near Henryville, Ind.

In 1948, the People's Democratic Republic of Korea, known in the United States as North Korea, was created.

Letters Policy

■ Letters to the editor should be no more than 350 words in length, written in good taste, and must be signed by the writer. They also should include home and office telephone numbers for verification purposes and the writer's address. Only the writer's name will be published. Ordinarily, only one letter per month per writer is allowed. Letters will be edited and no specific day of publication can be assured.

Views expressed are the opinions of the writers. By publishing letters, the Reporter-Telegram does not imply that information presented as fact is accurate.

Readers Respond

In conjunction with "Vietnam: Beyond the Black Wall," the five-part series which begins today, readers are invited to express their opinions about U.S. involvement in that divisive war.

Did America learn anything from its 10-year-long entanglement in Southeast Asia? Has Vietnam forever changed the way the U.S. views overseas wars fought for "America's vital interests" and the veterans of those wars? As more than 100,000 U.S. troops swelter in Saudi Arabia, does the shadow of Vietnam influence decisions in Washington and Baghdad? What do you think?

Letters received by Tuesday, Oct. 2, will be considered for publication in our new reader-participation feature, "Sound-Off!." They should be addressed to Anntoinette Moore, Associate City Editor, PO Box 1650, Midland, TX 79702.

The special community forum will be published Sunday, Oct. 7.

Smith presents 'radical idea' for reducing federal spending

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

In the midst of impending federal program cuts or tax increases, Rep. Lamar Smith, a San Antonio Republican, says he has a better idea.

Smith

"It may be a radical idea, but I recommend that we require all federal managers to cut overhead expenses by 10 percent," Smith said at a late afternoon news conference Saturday at Midland International Airport.

Smith said his proposal would result in a savings of $27 billion in the coming fiscal year.

"It's done routinely in business," Smith said, "so, why can't we do this in government as well." Smith added that he had the support of many members of Fortune 100 companies, surveyed by random telephone calls.

Smith said he advocates cutting costs such as supplies, communications, printing or travel expenses. "This proposal would not cut federal salaries, benefits or programs," he said.

The congressman said he was offering an alternative to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings cost cutting plan, which could result in required furloughs for federal employees.

Smith said it's time to try something new. "Washington decision makers sometimes march to a different drummer; the beat of politics doesn't always harmonize with the melodies of common sense."

He called across-the-board cuts "mindless." Smith also said he opposed forgiving foreign debts, especially Egypt's dept to the United States.

"I'm afraid if this administration forgives Egypt's $7 billion military debt then we will set a precedent," he said. Smith did, however, applaud President Bush's economic boycott of the Middle East. "We do have to consider the hostages," Smith said. "It's regrettable that the hostages are experiencing hardships. But, hopefully, the economic boycott will bring such discontent to Iraq that the people will rise up and oust Saddam Hussein."

Smith said, "The budget summit should adopt real and substantial cuts in federal government spending. The suggestion that the Middle East crisis and a tight economy dictates backing off our commitment to get control of government spending is wrong. It harms the effort.'"

The congressman said his proposal would save $141 billion over five years. "Government indirect costs next year are estimated to be $270 billion or $20 of every $100 the government spends," he said. "Reducing that $20 by 10 percent — or $2 — will save taxpayers $27 billion in 1991 alone."

Objectives 2000

The community goal-setting program for the 1990's, "Objectives 2000," has released its proposed objectives for review and discussion by the public. Both the Reporter-Telegram and KMID-TV assisted in distribution. After public input and committee revision, the Chamber's board will vote on final approval of the objectives in September.

Retail Rally

The Midland Business Council will sponsor a Retail Rally November 14 and 15 in Midland Center.

Dale Carnegie's Ron Bowman will present an entertaining and quick-paced program on the best ways for customer-contact people to treat customers well and earn more business for their employers.

Meet The Leaders

The Chamber's Education Committee is working with the Midland Independent School District and the Texas Employment Commission to set up a closed-circuit teleconference between business leaders and Midland's 8,000 secondary students.

Two For Two

The Chamber's Economic Development Division is batting 1,000 in Enterprise Zone application approvals.

Medi-Power Inc. and Fuel Harvesters were both approved by the state August 14 as Enterprise Zone Projects. Medi-Power is the parent company of Isotrol Systems.

The Enterprise Zone Project status can provide up to $1.25 million ($250,000 per year for five years based on $2,000 per job created) refund of state sales and use taxes paid on equipment and building materials purchased for use in the zone.

Will 1991 Beat 1990?

The Convention and Visitors Bureau (CVB) reports more than 8,400 delegates visited Midland in July and August, bringing the total for 1990 to 62,500. The economic impact of just July's 4,700 visitors is estimated to have been $5 million.

Five more bids were secured during August for future months. Already 33 conventions have been secured for October 1990 through September 1991.

The CVB says the new toll-free number gathered 107 phone calls in July.

LETTER FROM COLLEGE

MC Child Development Center has birthday

By H.A. TUCK

That's why there's so much excitement in the air around the college's Child Development Center. The center is observing its fifth birthday as part of the college's community role. A special Open House is being held all week. There will be cake, punch, and coffee on Wednesday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Tuck

Center director Rita Stotts and her staff of one secretary, four fulltime teachers and four to five student helpers look after a maximum of 52 children ages two through five.

The MC Child Development Center is somewhat different from most child care operations. It serves as a teaching center for students in education and child development classes, a training center for workers from area child care centers, as well as a child development center for children of faculty, staff, and students.

And one of the delightful bonuses for working at MC is looking out an office window and seeing the little ones, hand-in-hand, excitedly exploring flowerbeds or having picnics on the campus. Their tricycle parades draw scores of video cameras, and their Halloween visits are eagerly awaited.

It hardly seems possible, but we aren't registering for any academic session this week. Late registration for the fall semester ended last Thursday, concluding a process which started July 23. Now the Student Services personnel prepare for their impending move to the expanded Student Center Building ... followed with early registration starting Nov. 12 for the spring semester.

And while September in Midland is usually mild and just hinting of fall, it's the time to get some bargains on ski equipment during the annual Oshman's Ski Sale at Chaparral Center Wednesday through Saturday. Hours are 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. all four days, with free admission.

• • •

While you are on the campus, you might wish to take advance of the permanent free admission for the McCormick Gallery, located in the Allison Fine Arts Building. Currently on display are photographs by Charlie DeBus of Dallas and paintings by David Andersen of El Paso. DeBus is presenting some of his photographs from a huge work in progress called "Houses of God".

These are beautifully-detailed black-and-white photos of churches of all sizes and shapes found in Texas. Andersen's paintings are mostly large, vivid works which need to be seen to be appreciated.

The show remains on display through Sept. 30. Gallery hours are 1-5 p.m. Sunday, 8 a.m.-10 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 a.m.-5 p.m. on Friday, and 9 a.m.-5 p.m. on Saturday.

As part of the Petroleum Museum's DinoSafari that began in June and winds up in November, two performances of a "Mesozoic Musical" are slated at the Allison Fine Arts Building auditorium on Saturday. Performance times are 2:30 p.m. and 7 p.m.

As another part of the DinoSafari, MC faculty member Dr. Carl Frailey is leading a family excursion to a ranch near Coahoma on Saturday, Oct. 13, where he has discovered some real prehistoric fossil remains.

For information about either the musical or the field trip, please call the Petroleum Museum at 683-4403.

If you can't find something of interest from among the 19 courses starting this week through the Continuing Education Department then you probably aren't interested in anything. One of these should grab your interest, so read the list and then sign up. You have a choice of Bridge I, Cake Decoration I, Driver Education, Pilot Instrument Ground Training, Private Pilot Ground School, Calligraphy I, Working With Dried Flowers, Flight Instructor Ground Training, Health Unit Coordinator Training, Drought-Resistant Plants, Beginning Smocking, Spanish I or II, Woodworking I or II, Crochet, Introduction to Photography, Interior Decorating I, or Introduction to Videography.

Since I teach the photography class, I'm a bit prejudiced about which one to take. But any of them would be informative and fun. So just come to the Continuing Education Office in the Administration Building to register, or call 685-4518 for more information.

Ballroom dancing, first aid among short courses offered at MC

Staff Report

The Department of Continuing Education will offer seven short courses beginning the week of Sept. 17.

Courses are as follows:

"Ballroom Dance" will be taught by Roy Gonzalez on Mondays and Wednesdays from 7:30-9:30 p.m., Sept. 17 through Oct. 15. The basic rhythms, movements, and techniques used for ballroom dancing will be taught. Students will learn to recognize different types of dance music and receive instruction in the cha cha cha, fox trot, waltz, swing, rumba, mambo, tango, samba, and merengue. Course fee is $37.

Marion Kimberly will be teaching "Detach with Love" on Mondays from 8-9:20 p.m., Sept. 17 through Oct. 8. Is your emotional well-being dependent on the actions and reactions of others? Do you blame others for your own bad feelings? Students will become emotionally independent and learn to feel good about themselves regardless of what other are doing. No matter what, you can be happy and content. The course fee is $17.

"Financial Planning Seminar" will be taught by Lee Hobbs on Mondays from 7-9:15 p.m., Sept. 17 through Oct. 8. Few people plan to fail, but many fail to plan for financial security. A variety of important money management concepts and practices will be introduced. Specific investments topics will be discussed on generic basis. Course fee is $35.

"Medic First Aid" will be taught by Steve Forbes on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m., Sept. 18 through Sept. 27. The Medic First Aid program is a course designed to train individuals in adult and child CPR for certification or non-certification. This course also teaches the proper way of performing a secondary assessment in order to recognize various life-threatening illnesses and injuries so that the lay person may be able to manage or treat an injured or ill victim. The class is limited to 20 students. Course fee is $20.

"Co-Dependency" will be taught on Wednesdays from 7-9 p.m., Sept. 19 through Oct. 10. A four-week program on the family's recovery from addiction focusing on identifying dysfunctional relationship patterns and on developing tools for establishing healthy family relationships. Course fee is $17.

John Sheffield will be teaching "Beginning Flyfishing" on Thursdays from 7-9 p.m., Sept. 20 through Oct. 11. A four-week session designed for the beginner, this course provides basic flyfishing information and demonstrations of flycasting techniques.

Also included are safety practices, equipment suggestions, knots and flies, and tips on how to "read" the water/fishing holes. Course fee is $17.

Barbara Elliott will be teaching "Intermediate Swing/Push Dance" on Thursdays from 6:30-8 p.m., Sept. 20 through Oct. 25. Students will take the 10 basic swing/push steps and form patterns with them. They will learn five forms of whip variations, five releases from the helfnelson and basic neck wraps. Class is limited to 20 students and the course fee is $19.

For more information on these and other Continuing Education short courses come by the Office of Continuing Education, Administration Building or call 685-4518.

Serial killer may be stalking homosexual men in valley

Associated Press

The slayings of four men in as many months in the Rio Grande Valley has the area's homosexual community fearful that a serial killer may be stalking gay men.

Police say there isn't any evidence linking the four killings in Hidalgo County. But all four bodies of the male victims were found in brushy fields or canal banks.

Homosexuals say they believe they have become the target for attacks along the Mexican border.

"I'm really afraid somebody else will be killed this weekend," a gay businessman told The Houston Post, noting the bodies were found during or just after the weekend.

The man, who asked to be identified only by the pseudonym George, said, "It's too coincidental and it's all involving the same type of person. If it continues, I think we've got one (serial killer) on our hands."

The Hidalgo County Sheriff's Department has determined three of the victims had "a history of being involved in homosexual conduct," said spokesman Rene Torrez. The fourth case is under investigation by the Mission Police Department.

No arrests have been made in any of the cases:

— A 37-year-old McAllen man was stabbed to death May 14. The man's body was left inside his luxury car, which apparently was driven off a canal bank into a brushy area between McAllen and Mission.

— A 34-year-old man from Alton, just north of Mission, was found critically wounded May 22 beside a rural road near the Alton city limits. Authorities at first thought he was the victim of a traffic accident, but later found he had been shot twice with a 12-gauge shotgun before being run over by an automobile. The victim died four hours later at a hospital.

— The body of a 41-year-old Edinburg man was found near a canal bank north of McAllen on Aug. 19. An autopsy revealed the man was stabbed many times in the front and back torso and his midsection had been run over by an automobile, Torrez said.

— On Sept. 1, children playing in a rural, brushy area discovered the body of a 29-year-old Alton man propped against a tree. Police said he died of gunshot wounds to the chest. The victim also had been stabbed and disemboweled.

"Contrary to rumors circulating concerning these incidents, our investigations have not — and I underscore not — discovered any physical evidence or information leading to the determination that there is a serial killer targeting the homosexual community," Torrez said.

He said investigators see a possibility that the May 14 and Aug. 19 slayings may be related because of physical evidence which has not been made public. But he said there have been no connections made to the other cases.

A Mission police officer, who asked not to be identified, said he was working with the sheriff's department to see if there is reason to suspect a serial killer.

"At this time I am not prepared to say, yes ... or no, either. We're following leads daily," he said.

Two of the four victims were big men — 5-feet-10, 180 pounds, and 6-feet, 250 pounds.

The Lower Rio Grande Valley has already reported 58 homicides for the year, topping the 57 for all of last year.

The homosexual community in Hidalgo County is "running scared," George said. While men continue to frequent several area gay bars, George said few of them are unescorted.

"You just don't see many singles walking in the doors anymore. There's safety in numbers," he said.

Governor rededicates refurbished Battleship Texas

LA PORTE, Texas (AP) — Texans stood in glaring sun and 90-plus temperatures Saturday to welcome home an old friend.

The historic Battleship Texas, with a fresh coat of midnight blue paint, reopened to the public with unfurling flags and brassy fanfare at San Jacinto Battlefield Park Saturday after two years and more than $12 million in restorations.

Gov. Bill Clements said the ceremony to rededicate the nation's only remaining Dreadnought vessel and the only combat ship to have served in both world wars had special meaning in light of the crisis in the Persian Gulf.

Clements drew cheers when he said the event was important "not only to salute the USS Texas and all that she has done for the cause of freedom, but also to remember and pay tribute to the thousands of United States military personnel — indeed the many Texans — who are serving our country in the Middle East. It is this kind of valor, this kind of sacrifice, that has made our state and our nation great."

The Battleship Texas, which served during the D-Day Invasion of Normandy in World War II, attracted hundreds of Texans dressed in red, white and blue and many veterans wearing military caps to salute the return of the Mighty T.

"Today we rededicate this ship mindful that freedoms persevered by that war and all the wars that follow are never free," said Rear Adm. David B. Robinson. "Those freedoms are paid for every day with the same sacrifices made by the sailors who manned this ship 75 years ago — long hours, hard work, family separations and putting their lives on the line."

The Texas, originally built in 1912 and commissioned in 1914, was once the most powerful weapon in the world with five 14-inch guns capable of hurling 1,500-pound projectiles for 12 miles.

The ship, one of the Dreadnought class constructed at the early part of the century, saw battle in World War I and was refurbished in 1925 before seeing action in World War II's African invasion, the D-Day invasion at Normandy and the bombings of Iwo Jima and Okinawa.

The ship was decommissioned and berthed at the battlefield park in 1948. While the Texas attracted hundreds of thousands of tourists each year, it was rusting in its berth of mud and needed major renovations.

Sparked by a fifth-grade class of schoolchildren at Cypress-Fair Elementary School which began a fund raising drive, the Texas Parks and Wildlife service took control of the vessel in 1983 and began planning the refurbishing.

This year's Texas corn crop shows high aflatoxin levels

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Tests on Texas' $400 million corn crop have turned up the highest levels of the carcinogen aflatoxin in five years, Texas A&M University researchers say.

Forty to 60 percent of corn samples tested were found to have higher than allowed levels of aflatoxin, two surveys showed.

Researchers said there should be no health risk to humans because of checks the grain undergoes before it reaches market. But the economic loss to corn farmers could be substantial.

No dollar-amount losses have been estimated, although Carl King, president of the Texas Corn Growers in Dimmitt, said the threat of aflatoxin could reduce the price farmers will receive for their yield by five to 10 percent.

Two-thirds of the crop has already been harvested statewide.

"We have a serious problem. This is the most serious it has been since chemical analyses have been made," said Dr. Wendell Horne, a plant pathologist for the Texas Agricultural Extension Service. "Levels across the board are higher, and we are seeing more samples consistently above 20 parts per billion."

Twenty parts per billion is the maximum level allowed in food for humans and feed for some animal species.

Horne said a survey of 72 samples from the state's 35 top corn-producing counties showed 60 percent with levels of contamination greater than 20 parts per billion. That survey is about half complete, with most of the early results from South and Central Texas.

Another test by the Texas State Chemist's Office at Texas A&M, which regulates grain for animal feed, showed levels exceeding 20 parts per billion in about 44 percent of samples analyzed. That survey is about one-third complete, with 48 samples from 52 counties.

Those are the highest percentages recorded in Texas in the five years since chemical testing of corn began.

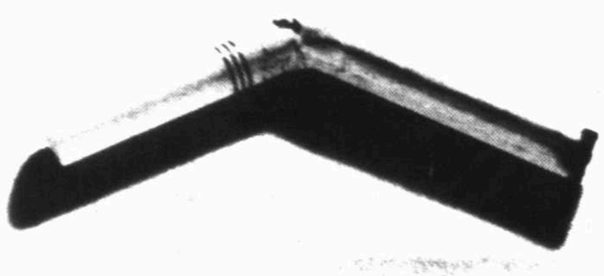

Aflatoxin is produced by a fungus which may attack corn, sorghum, peanuts and cottonseed. It often takes root in kernels of drought-stressed corn.

Sabatini grandly slams Steffi

■ For only the fourth time in 22 attempts Gabriela Sabatini defeats the world's top-ranked player, and along the way grabs her first Grand Slam tennis title.

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — She had more victories than most 20-year-old players could hope for, more endorsements, enough career earnings to last a lifetime or two, a shiny new Porsche, even a perfume named after her.

What she didn't have was a Grand Slam singles title, and she finally took care of that Saturday.

With a screaming forehand up the line to end a second-set tie breaker, Gabriela Sabatini of Argentina, a frequent foil in too many big matches to remember, won the women's championship of the U.S. Open, upsetting Steffi Graf of West Germany.

Sabatini

The score was 6-2, 7-6 (7-4 in the tie breaker), and it was just the fourth time in 22 attempts that Sabatini had defeated Graf, the world's No. 1 female player for the last 160 weeks. It was also the first of her victories over Graf that did not require a third set.

Cowboys activate Smith

■ Only three days after reporting, the Dallas Cowboys activate top draft pick Emmitt Smith and say he could see action Sunday against San Diego.

Associated Press

DALLAS — The Dallas Cowboys activated rookie running back Emmitt Smith on Saturday and said he "probably" would see action in Sunday's game against the San Diego Chargers.

Smith ended his 48-day holdout Tuesday, signing a four-year contract worth an estimated package of $5 million. It was the longest holdout in Cowboys' history.

Smith, the 17th player selected in the draft, set 58 records at the University of Florida. During his holdout, Smith reenrolled for classes to resume studies for his public recreation degree.

At the Cowboys' kickoff luncheon Tuesday, coach Jimmy Johnson said he was not sure if Smith would start Sunday. Smith, who had attended the Cowboys' quarterback schools and minicamps, said he had been running during his holdout.

Cowboys spokesman David Pelletier said late Saturday that Smith "probably" would see action during the Cowboys' season opener at home.

The Chargers are rated field goal favorites over the Cowboys who haven't won a regular home game since they defeated the Atlanta Falcons on Sept. 15, 1988.

Also Saturday, the Cowboys placed wide receiver Derrick Shepard on injured reserve. Pelletier said Shepard sustained a nagging hamstring injury during training camp.

Buck returns to center court

■ Steve Buck, a 1969 graduate of Midland Lee, enjoyed his time on the campaign trail, but he's also glad to be back home — and back on the tennis courts.

By Bill Grimes
Staff Writer

Last year at this time, Steve Buck was traipsing around Texas spreading the word about Mark White in the latter's ultimately unsuccessful effort to return to the Governor's Mansion.

Buck never knew whether he was going to be in Houston, Dallas, Austin, or smaller points. This year, it's different.

The 1969 Midland Lee graduate is teaching — what else? — government classes at his alma mater and also serves as the Rebels' tennis coach.

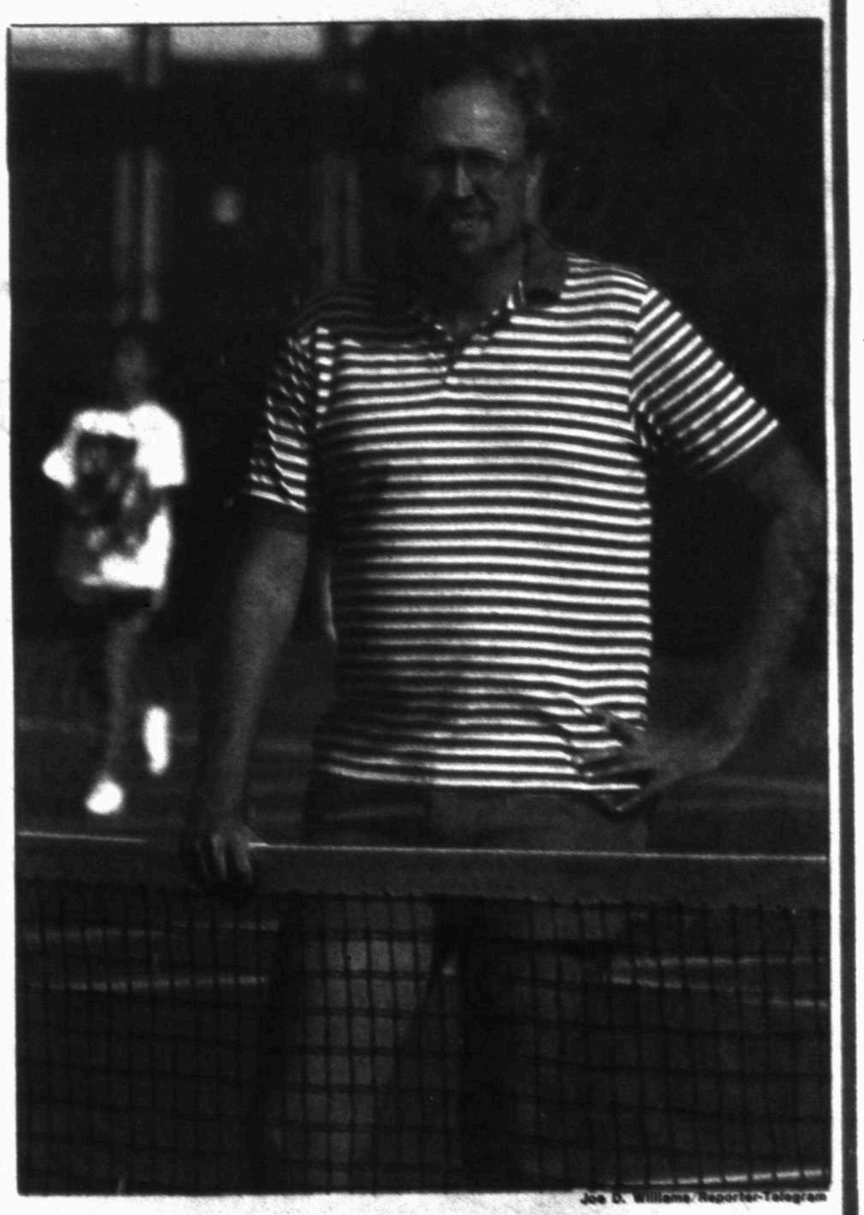

Buck is no stranger to competitive tennis, despite his recent experience in politics. After winning three consecutive district tennis titles at Lee, he was a two-time Missouri Valley Conference singles champ at North Texas State.

He returned to West Texas as head net coach at Abilene High for three years, before becoming a teaching pro at the Abilene Racquet Club. He then won six District 4-5A championships in seven years as the head coach at Abilene Cooper, including a state championship in 1982.

Buck has a dual match record of 171-17 in high school coaching, and his teams went to state nine of the 10 years he worked in the Abilene I.S.D.

Also, he has guided many, many players to college tennis scholarships,

Tennis anyone? Yeah, but not today

Patterson

We're in the midst of, lest you need reminding, one of the biggest weekends of the sports year. The start up of high school football, college football getting into high gear and the professional types finally playing for real. The pennant races in baseball continue to be hot, and the National Hockey League opens training camp (Only what, a week after last year ended?)

And then there's the U.S. Open, this country's premiere tennis tournament and, I would guess, second only to Wimbledon in stature and tradition.

("If it weren't fur that durned ol' tennis cloggin' up the sport pages," Bubba tells Ethel, "I coulda read about that big ol' Alabama-Miss'ippi game without havin' to turn the page. And who's this Andre guy anyways? Longhair pervert.")

Point is, tennis goes without a whole lot of recognition out here in God's land. And there's not a thing wrong with that, don't get me wrong. I love football. I love "Friday Night Lights" (but that's another story for another day).

But tennis, if you're a sports fan you've got to be in awe of the stamina tennis players possess. Anytime a tennis match is on TV, the TV is on at the house (except today when the Cowboys are on the same time as tennis).

Watching Boris Becker, the game's true gentleman, and Aaron Krickstein battle for over four hours the other day was amazing. That they are still standing after so much physical exertion is a testimony to there conditioning. They make athletes of most any other sport pale by comparison.

And there's John McEnroe. No one likes him, but everyone likes to watch him. McEnroe has no doubt zoomed the ratings through the roof for CBS. I've no proof, but would imagine his matches have been more watched than any other.

Sure, no one likes him. Especially not a short-tempered Long Islander like Mac who has no respect for anyone or anything. But you turn the TV up when he's on the sports highlights shows — just to see what stupid thing he's done today. It's just too bad he lost Saturday. (Wouldn't have watched him today in the finals, though. Not with the Cowboys on.)

At the other end of the spectrum, there's the simplicity and innocence of the sport, faultlessly displayed by Jennifer Capriati. America's latest sweetheart. Chris Evert, Tracy Austin, Mary Lou Retton in gymnastics, and now Jennifer.

The height of her game is a couple of years off, but again, she'll be watched every time she's on in the event she can pull the big upset. She never came close this year, losing big to Steffi Graf in the fourth round.

And then there's the story of the airport. The United States Tennis Center in Flushing Meadow, New York, is located at what seems to be the end of one of JFK Airport's runways. But this year, the USTA was successful in influencing New York Mayor David Dinkins and airport authorities to reroute air traffic, which has been a nuisance over the years.

It has been more enjoyable for the fans and less distracting for the players, but rerouting traffic at one of the world's busiest airports? That may have been going a bit far.

As drastic as it seems, it does go to show you, though, that there are other sports out there other than football. (Except today. At 3 o'clock. When the Cowboys are on).

'Horns nip Nittany Lions; Tech hangs tough

Associated Press

It was almost a perfect day for Michael Pollak.

On the positive side, the walk-on, whose previous college experience amounted to three kickoffs in two seasons, kicked three field goals as Texas beat No. 21 Penn State, 17-13.

Pollak, however, talked more about the 30-yarder he missed in the fourth quarter and the tackle he missed on Penn State's 95-yard return of the opening kickoff.

"It made me sick to my stomach to think of the one I missed. I just took it for granted," Pollak said.

Adrian Walker's 88-yard return of the second-half kickoff set up Texas' go-ahead touchdown. Walker took ball at the 6, ran straight up the field to the Penn State 45, veered right and was bumped out of bounds by Willie Thomas at the 6.

"I really wanted the touchdown," Walker said. "I was a little surprised it (the hole) was there. The first time, they did a good job. The second time I ran down there and found a big hole."

Chris Samuels scored on first down, and the Longhorns completed a 2-point conversion pass to go ahead 14-7.

Texas (1-0), attempting to rebound from consecutive losing seasons for the first time in 50 years, boosted the lead to 17-7 with 2:40 left in the third on Pollak's 20-yard field goal.

"I preach, preach, preach about the kicking game," Penn State coach Joe Paterno said after his 25th season-opener was spoiled. "Most first games are lost by the kicking game. I'm frustrated because I spent so much time on this. It was terrible."

Penn State rallied with a seven-play, 81-yard drive in which Tony Sacca completed three passes for 68 yards to make it 17-13 with 11:41 left. The Lions missed on a 2-point pass conversion attempt.

Texas blew a chance to pad its lead on a drive from its 32 to the Penn State 13 in the fourth. The drive died when Pollak kicked wide left on a 30-yard field goal attempt. Peter Gardere completed a 26-yard pass and Bill Brown ran 42 more in the drive.

No. 18 Ohio St. 17
Texas Tech 10

Jeff Graham returned a punt 50 yards for the go-ahead touchdown, and freshman tailback Robert Smith led a comeback that carried No. 18 Ohio State over Texas Tech.

Tech, a 10-point underdog, led 3-0 at the half and 10-3 late in the third quarter before Smith brought the mistake-prone Buckeyes back.

Smith finished with 86 yards rushing on 17 attempts, all in the second half. He also caught two passes for 41 yards.

During an 82-yard drive near the end of the third quarter, Smith caught one pass for 24 yards and had three carries for 49 more yards. He ended the drive with a 2-yard run to tie the game at 10.

Ohio State threatened on its first possession of the final quarter after an 11-yard punt by Tech gave the Buckeyes the ball at the Red Raiders' 34. But a 21-yard field-goal attempt by Tim Williams was wide to the right.

Tech was unable to advance the ball past midfield in its last three possessions.

The Red Raiders took a 3-0 lead on a 37-yard field goal by Lin Elliott in the second quarter as both teams struggled offensively.

Ohio State lost two fumbles and an interception and Tech lost two fumbles, all in the first six minutes of the second quarter.

Southern Meth. 44, Vanderbilt 7

Mike Romo threw a school-record six touchdown passes and moved ahead of Don Meredith on Southern Methodist's all-time yardage list Saturday night as the Mustangs outgunned the Vanderbilt Commodores 44-7 in their first meeting in 53 years.

It's Vanderbilt's worst opening loss in the 101 years the school has played football. The previous worst loss was 42-7 to Mississippi State last year.

Romo completed 31 of 41 passes for 342 yards. He's only the third quarterback in Southwest Conference history to pass for six touchdowns in a game.

Wood, Tway play another neighborly round

Associated Press

COAL VALLEY, Ill. — As next-door neighbors and college teammates, Willie Wood and Bob Tway played a lot of rounds golf together.

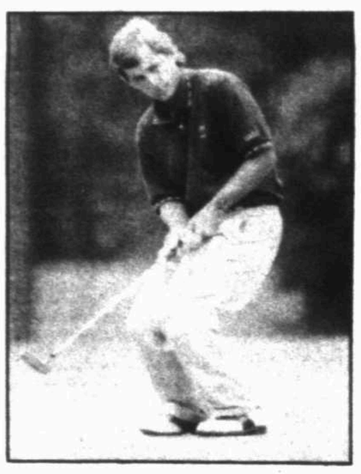

PGA

"I don't know how many hundreds of rounds we've played together," said Wood after he double-bogeyed No. 18 to fall back into the tie with his Oklahoma City neighbor and Oklahoma State teammate at 199, 11-under.

Two shots back were second-round leader Billy Mayfair, first-round leader Jeff Sluman, Jim Gallagher Jr. and Jay Delsing. Mayfair had a 71, Delsing a 70, Gallagher a 67 and Sluman a 65 at the Oakwood Country Club course.

It will seem like a frat outing for Sunday's final round when Wood and Tway finish in a threesome with Sluman.

Willie Wood

"Jeff and I are also friends. We went out to dinner last night," said Wood, who was cruising toward his second consecutive bogey-free round before he hit his tee-shot on the final hole out of bounds and had to settle for a 2-under 68.

"I hit it out to the right. My caddy said it was only a foot or two out," Wood said. "I re-teed it and hit it alright the second time."

Tway, who carded a third-round 67, said if he couldn't win the $180,000 first prize, he hoped Wood did.

"I'm pleased to see him playing well," Tway said.

"He has been more successful than I," said Wood, looking for his first title after more than six years on the Tour.

Early this year, Tway tied for fifth at Phoenix and tied for seventh at the Bob Hope Classic.

"I've tried to play consistent as possible and make birdies," said Tway, who finished just ahead of his friend Wood when he won the 1986 Westchester event.

A total of 23 golfers are within five shots of the lead.

Gallagher beat Mayfair in a playoff for last weekend's Greater Milwaukee Open title and the two will be together again in one of Sunday's threesomes.

Mayfair began at 10-under, one shot in front of Wood and Delsing, and two shots ahead of Tway.

Playing in the final twosome, Wood began with a birdie and he and Mayfair birdied the fifth hole. They made the turn tied for the top spot at 11-under, a stroke ahead of Delsing and Tway, playing directly in front of the leaders.

Wood, who shot a 63 on Friday, took over the lead with birdies on the 10th and 11th. He held a two-shot margin through the 17th hole, but then came the double bogey.

"It's the first time in six rounds that I've been in the 70s," said Mayfair, who has finished seventh or better in four of his last five tourneys. "I really didn't drive the ball real close. I seemed to struggle all day."

MHS dropped for a net loss

Staff Report

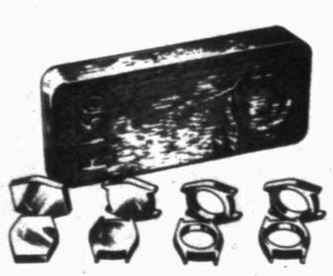

Midland High competed this weekend in the Abilene Invitational high school tennis tournament and lost both of its completed matches.

This tournament is used to help determine school team rankings for the fall season and of the 16 teams in the tournament, 13 or 14 will probably be listed in the Top 20.

MHS fell 12-6 to Wichita Falls and lost 14-4 to San Antonio Lee. Rain washed out the match with Wichita Falls Rider.

Midland High travels to Midland Lee at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday to open District 4-5A team competition. MHS will host Abilene High on Saturday while Lee travels to Abilene Cooper.

Rangers nip Royals on single in last of ninth

Associated Press

ARLINGTON — Rafael Palmeiro doubled home the winning run with one out in the ninth inning Saturday night, giving the Texas Rangers a 2-1 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Julio Franco singled with one out off Royals starter Kevin Appier (11-6), his third hit and the third for the Rangers. Israel Sanchez came on to face Palmeiro, who spoiled the strategy with his double.

Texas' Kenny Rogers (7-5) was credited with the win after he blew a save in relief for Nolan Ryan, who blanked the Royals until the eighth in his quest for victory No. 303.

Despite suffering a split lip that required six stitches when he was struck by Bo Jackson's one-hopper in the second inning, Ryan allowed only three hits and struck out eight. He was relieved by Rogers after walking Bill Pecota to start the eighth.

Kevin Seitzer sacrificed and Jim Eisenreich's double tied the score. Franco's ninth home run leading off the seventh had given the Rangers a 1-0 lead. It came after Appier had retired 17 batters in a row following Franco's first-inning single.

The Rangers won their fourth in a row and the Royals dropped their sixth straight. Kansas City is 2-10 on a road trip which ends Sunday.

Ryan's lower lip was split in the second inning when Jackson's sharp one-hoper glanced off his glove and struck him in the mouth. Ryan threw Jackson out and continued to pitch with splotches of blood on his shirt and pants.

He walked the next two batters but retired Kurt Stillwell and Mike McFarlane on shallow fly balls to get out of the inning.

Ryan has 197 strikeouts for the season, three short of his 14th 200-strikeout season and seven behind American League leader Roger Clemens of Boston.

American

Athletics 5, Yankees 2

Oakland beat the New York Yankees for the 11th straight time this season as Rickey Henderson hit two home runs in the last two innings.

A win on Sunday will make the A's the first team ever to sweep a season series from the Yankees. In going 11-0, Oakland has outscored New York 55-9.

Oakland's sixth straight victory opened an 8½-game lead over second-place Chicago in the American League West, the A's largest margin of the season. The White Sox lost 3-0 to Toronto.

Scott Sanderson (15-9), 3-0 against the Yankees this season, gave up two runs and three hits in seven innings. They were the first runs surrendered by Sanderson in 20⅓ innings against New York this season.

Twins 6, Indians 1

Scott Erickson pitched a seven-hitter for his first major-league complete game, and Nelson Liriano reached base four times to lead Minnesota over Cleveland.

Erickson (5-4), called up from Class AA Orlando on June 21, held Cleveland scoreless until Candy Maldonado's seventh-inning homer. He walked one and struck out four.

It was the second straight time Erickson had taken a shutout into the seventh, only to lose it on a homer, but he won impressively both times.

Liriano tripled, singled, walked twice, drove in a run and scored twice for Minnesota, which has won six of seven.

Red Sox 10, Mariners 2

Boston began the day with a 5½-game lead over Toronto in the American League East.

Tom Bolton (9-2) pitched a six-hitter, struck out five and walked two. He was recalled from the minors on June 13 and moved into the starting rotation on July 17.

Rich Delucia, making his major league debut, shut out the Red Sox on four hits through 5 2-3 innings, but left after Greenwell's single in the sixth. Scott Medvin (0-1) walked Tom Brunansky, and Marshall and Danny Heep hit RBI singles that tied it at 2. Luis Rivera, batting just .220, followed with a line drive over left fielder Henry Cotto's head for a two-run double.

Wade Boggs got an infield hit and scored on Greenwell's double in the seventh. The Red Sox scored five times in the eighth on Carlos Quintana's two-run single, RBI singles by Greenwell and Brunansky and a run-scoring grounder by Ellis Burks.

Blue Jays 3, White Sox 0

Dave Stieb, making his first start since pitching a no-hitter, won his team-record 18th game and Kelly Gruber hit two solo home runs, leading Toronto past Chicago.

Toronto won its third straight and stayed 5½ games behind Boston in the American League East. The White Sox fell 8½ games behind Oakland in the AL West, their biggest deficit of the season.

Stieb (18-5) gave up six hits, struck out three and walked two in setting the club record for victories. Jimmy Key and Doyle Alexander also had won 17.

Orioles 5, Angels 4

Cal Ripken's bases-loaded sacrifice fly in the ninth inning gave the Baltimore Orioles a victory over California.

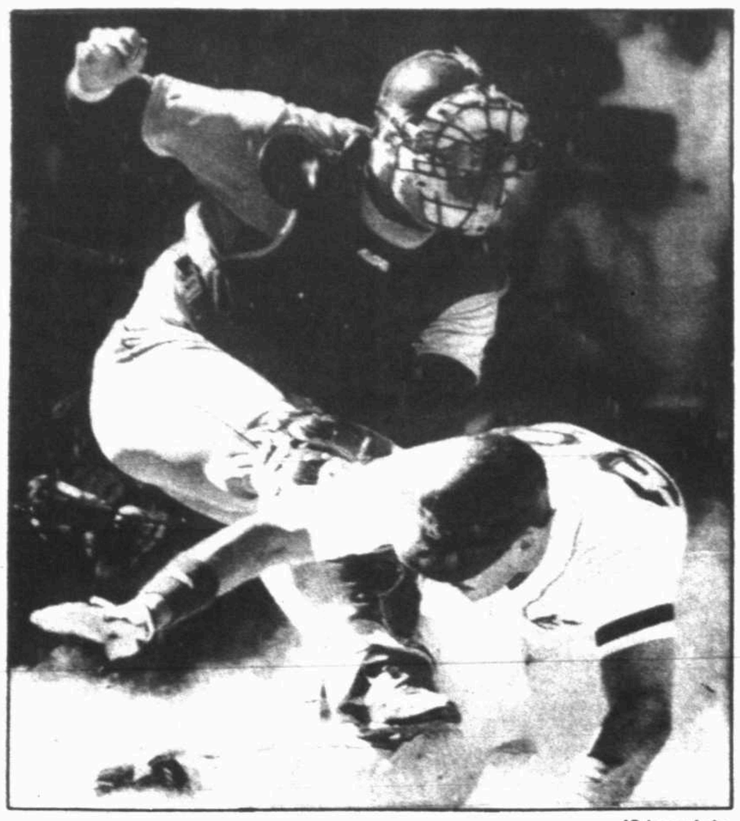

Brady Anderson opened the inning with a single off reliever Mark Eichhorn (2-5) and one out later Steve Finley walked. Pinch-hitter Joe Orsulak's single loaded the bases for Ripken.

Joe Price (3-3), the fourth Baltimore pitcher, retired all five batters he faced for the win. California starter Chuck Finley yielded four runs and nine hits in eight innings.

Brewers 5, Tigers 2

B.J. Surhoff hit a three-run homer and Jim Gantner singled three times to support the nine-hit pitching of Jaime Navarro as Milwaukee defeated Detroit and took over undisputed possession of third place in the American League East.

Navarro (7-5) has won his last four starts and the Brewers have won three straight. He went 8⅔ innings before newly acquired Julio Machado retired Milt Cuyler on a comebacker with two runners on base for his first American League save.

Drabek's 19th sinks Expos

Mets keep pace in NL East with 12-2 win over Phillies

Associated Press

PITTSBURGH — Doug Drabek became Pittsburgh's first 19-game winner in 11 seasons and Andy Van Slyke hit a two-run homer Saturday night as the Pittsburgh Pirates beat the Montreal Expos 6-1.

Drabek (19-5) won for the 11th time in 12 decisions, allowing seven hits in 7⅔ innings. Bob Patterson finished up as the Pirates won for the seventh time in eight games.

Van Slyke drove in three runs, Sid Bream added a solo homer and Drabek had two hits as the Pirates ended a three-game losing streak against Montreal.

Drabek, 2-3 against the Expos this season, won his fifth consecutive decision and lowered his ERA in his last six starts to 1.40. He has given up two earned runs in 22⅔ innings.

Pittsburgh's last 19-game winner was Jim Bibby (19-6) in 1979. The Pirates last 20-game winner was John Candelaria (20-5) in 1977.

Howard Farmer (0-2) made his third major-league start and gave up five runs and six hits.

Van Slyke's sacrifice fly gave Pittsburgh the lead in the first and he made it 3-0 in the third with a two-run homer, his 14th this season and first in 74 at-bats since Aug. 17.

Bream hit his 13th homer and first in 70 at-bats in the fourth before Drabek, batting .197, chased Farmer with an RBI single. Bobby Bonilla's fifth-inning sacrifice fly — his team-leading 102nd RBI — made it 6-0.

Mets 12, Phillies 2

Dwight Gooden pitched a five-hitter as the New York Mets beat Philadelphia and ended their longest losing streak of the season at five games.

Kevin McReynolds and Charlie O'Brien drove in three runs each as the Mets remained 3½ games behind the National League East-leading Pittsburgh Pirates, who beat Montreal 6-1.

Gooden (16-6) struck out 10 and walked two to win his fifth consecutive decision and for the 13th time in his last 14.

The Mets ended a six-game losing streak against left-handers, getting three hits and three runs in 3 2-3 innings off Bruce Ruffin (6-13). Ruffin walked four and seven Phillies pitchers walked 12.

Von Hayes hit a two-run homer in the first, his 17th of the season. But the Mets came back with three runs in the fourth, matching their total for their previous five games.

National

McReynolds doubled and Tom Herr's two-run single made it 3-2. Dave Magadan hit an RBI single in the fifth and the Mets broke open the game with four runs in the seventh. McReynolds hit a two-run homer off Tommy Greene, his 21st, and Charlie O'Brien and Gooden hit RBI singles.

New York made it 11-2 in the eighth on Darryl Strawberry's sacrifice fly and O'Brien's two-run double. Gregg Jefferies hit his 15th home run in the ninth.

Giants 2, Astros 1

Matt Williams hit his second home run of the game, a two-out shot in the 10th inning, that lifted San Francisco over Houston Astros.

Williams, who homered in the fourth inning, connected on a 2-0 pitch from Brian Meyer (0-2). Williams has 29 home runs and leads the National League with 107 RBIs.

Steve Bedrosian (7-8) pitched the 10th for the victory. Kelly Downs gave up just three hits in nine innings, but got a no-decision.

The Astros, who scored twice in the ninth inning Saturday to break a scoreless tie, this time tied the game with a run in the ninth. Eric Yelding led off with a single, stole his 54th base, moved to third on a groundout and scored on Karl Rhodes' sacrifice fly.

Downs gave up three singles, struck out one and walked one. He made his fourth start since being activated Aug. 10 following shoulder surgery, and retired 15 straight batters in the middle innings.

Cubs 5, Cardinals 4

Mark Grace's tie-breaking home run with two outs in the seventh inning after Ryne Sandberg homered to tie the game in the fifth led Chicago to a victory over St. Louis.

Grace's eighth home run came off reliever Ken Dayley (4-3). Rookie Dave Pavlas (1-0) got the victory after relieving Rick Sutcliffe in the sixth. Paul Assenmacher pitched two innings for his eighth save.

The Cubs scored three runs in the first but had to come back to tie it 4-4 on Sandberg's 33rd home run.

Cardinals rookie pitcher Omar Olivares was more successful as a hitter. He doubled home two runs in the second inning with his first major-league hit after St. Louis loaded the bases on singles by Pedro Guerrero and Rex Hudler and a walk to Jose Oquendo.

Reds 8, Dodgers 4

Eric Davis doubled three times and Cincinnati increased its National League West lead to 6½ games by beating Los Angeles.

Tom Browning (13-7) wasted a 3-0 lead but settled down and retired 13 of his last 15 batters. Browning allowed four runs and four hits in six-plus innings and Randy Myers pitched 2⅔ innings for his 28th save in 33 opportunties. Myers struck out his first six batters and finished a combined five-hitter.

Bobcats upend Victoria

Staff Report

AUSTIN — The San Angelo Bobcats, picked to finish last in the District 4-5A football race this year, scored a 27-20 season opening victory against Victoria in a neutral site game here Saturday afternoon at Memorial Stadium.

Morenz threw for two touchdowns and ran for two to count in all the Bobcat touchdowns. He also completed 10 of 27 passes for 144 yards. Steve Williams led the Bobcats with 50 yards rushing on 13 carries.

San Angelo will travel to Lubbock Monterey Friday. Monterey lost to Midland High, 7-3, Friday night.

After strong start, MHS spikers finish in fourth

Staff Report

SEMINOLE — The Lady Bulldog spikers fell to Pecos in the third-place game of the Seminole Invitational Saturday.

Midland High fell 15-0, 4-15 and 15-10 to the same team they defeated the weekend before in the finals of the Pecos Volleyball Tournament.

"We experienced some real peaks and valleys against them this time," said MHS coach Sonya Pittman.

The Lady Bulldogs defeated Lubbock Estacado 15-8, 15-10 to start the day, but Lamesa's ensuing 12-15, 15-5, 15-12 victory over MHS put the Lady Bulldogs in the third-place game.

Lamesa finished first at the tourney, followed by Big Spring and Pecos.

Sally Gibson of MHS was named to the all-tournament team. The next outing for MHS is the district opener at Midland Lee, Tuesday at 8 p.m.

Permian takes hold of Lady Rebs

Staff Report

SAN ANGELO — Midland Lee's Lady Rebels fell to Odessa Permian, 7-15, 4-15, here Saturday in their final game in the San Angelo Invitational volleyball tournament.

Lee will enter that contest with a 1-7 record.

"The girls have the talent and court skills to win, but they need to muster up some self-confidence," said Lee coach Elise Wheat.

BUCK: Back on his original turf

From 1C

and several of those players went on to turn professional, though none played in the U.S. Open this year.

Buck went back to North Texas as tennis coach in 1983, and moved up to assistant athletic director in 1986.

"You name it — I did it," Buck said of his tenure under three athletic directors at North Texas.

Tiring of the grind in Denton, Buck joined the White campaign as a consultant dealing primarily with the issue that killed White in his 1986 re-election bid.

"My major responsibility was handling education reforms, but I dealt with everything," Buck said.

But the job with White died when the ex-governor lost in the Democratic primary this spring, an event almost coinciding with the departure of long-time Lee tennis coach Bobby Connell.

It was a perfect fit, at least in Buck's eyes.

"This is one of the places that I really wanted to go," Buck said. "I love politics, and I would stay in politics forever.

"But if you think coaches have bad hours, politics is worse.

"You have to win and you'll stay up all night to do it," Buck said.

And since Buck has a wife and three children aged 10, five and two, he thought he had better get into something a little less time-consuming. And what better place to do it than his hometown?

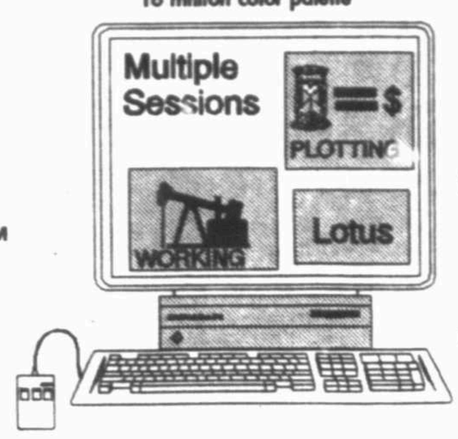

"I'd rather raise my kids out here," he said. Wife Peggy teaches third grade at Jane Long Elementary, where the two older children are enrolled.

Buck said Midland I.S.D. athletic director Jack Tayrien was a key in his retrun to Midland.

"Jack is super to work with," Buck said. "I think he wants to see good players in every sport."

HSU loses first game since '63

Associated Press

ABILENE — Dave Trompler threw three touchdowns to lead Austin College to a 38-19 victory over Hardin-Simmons, spoiling the school's first football game since 1963.

It also overshadowed a record day by freshman Danny Esqueda, who ran back four kickoffs for 221 yards and two touchdowns in his first crack at kick returning. The previous NAIA Div. II record was 193 yards (on six returns) by Mike Smith of Lewis and Clark College in 1986.

Austin College and Hardin-Simmons play in the Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association, but the opener for both teams didn't count in conference standings. Austin College led 24-13 at the half.

Angelo State upsets SFA

NACOGDOCHES (AP) — Darron Johnson returned the opening kickoff 99 yards for a touchdown Saturday night and Danny Keeton hooked up with Kenneth Washington for a pair of 66-yard scoring passes as Angelo State upset Stephen F. Austin 28-24.

Angelo State, ranked seventh in NCAA Division II, improved to 2-0, and Stephen F. Austin, the No. 2 team in NCAA Division I-AA, fell to 0-2.

Angelo State led 14-3 at the half.

Redshirt freshman Mike Goddard replaced Scott Barrick midway through the second quarter. He scored on runs of 4 and 1 in the third for Stephen F. Austin.

But Keeton responded both times with the long TDs to Washington.

Goddard was 17-of-38 for 197 yards, but didn't throw any touchdowns. Barrick was 3-of-6 for 27 yards and no touchdowns.

Keeton finished 11-of-21 for 220 yards and no interceptions.

SHSU loses in last seconds

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — Texas Southern quarterback Ronnie Toliver threw a 64-yard touchdown pass to freshman receiver Joe Rogers with 16 seconds left, giving the Tigers a 20-15 victory over Sam Houston State.

Bearkat tailback Curtis Thomas rushed for 110 yards on 27 carries, including a 5-yard touchdown that gave Sam Houston (0-1) a 7-0 lead in the first quarter.

Sul Ross loses at final gun

BROWNWOOD (AP) — Cory Fothergill's 36-yard field goal as time expired lifted Howard Payne to a 17-14 victory over Sul Ross State Saturday.

The kick capped an 80-yard drive and followed a 48-yard pass from Brian Janak to Keith Crawford to the Lobos' 19.

ETSU scores shutout

COMMERCE (AP) — East Texas State quarterback Bob Bounds threw for four touchdowns as the Lions ripped the East Central Oklahoma Tigers 42-0.

Bounds completed 16 of 21 passes for 241 yards along with the touchdowns. The Lions collected 367 yards total offense.

Races cancelled

Twin Cities Speedway was forced to cancel races Saturday night due to rain flooding the oval track.

The speedway announced that all Snap On Tools free tickets, meant to be used Sept. 8, will be honored at the raceway Saturday, Sept. 16.

The speedway is located in Midland County, off Coors Road between Midland and Odessa. The three-eighths mile asphalt oval track lies between Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

Miami No. 1? Not anymore, BYU says

Associated Press

Ty Detmer passed for 406 yards and three touchdowns as 16th-ranked Brigham Young shocked defending national champion Miami 28-21 Saturday night, only the third Hurricane loss in the last 55 regular-season games.

The lanky junior picked apart top-ranked Miami's feared defense with short, pinpoint passes, completing 38 of 54 throws, including a 7-yard TD toss to Mike Salido and 2-point conversion pass to Andy Boyce that gave BYU a 28-21 lead late in the third quarter.

Miami drove into BYU territory twice late in the fourth quarter, but both were halted by Cougars cornerback Ervin Lee. Lee intercepted a pass in the end zone with 6:28 left, and knocked away another Erickson pass on the BYU goal line with 1:49 remaining in the game.

No. 3 Auburn 38
Cal State Fullerton 17

Stan White threw for 324 yards and tied a school record with four touchdown passes in his college debut as No. 3 Auburn survived a lackluster second half and defeated Cal State Fullerton.

White, a redshirt freshman who won a three-man battle to succeed Reggie Slack, threw three of his touchdown passes in the first half as Auburn built a 31-3 lead. Another long scoring pass was nullified by a penalty.

White, who completed 21 of 35 passes, sealed the win with his final touchdown after the outmanned Titans had scored twice in the third quarter to get back into the game.

It was Auburn's sixth straight season-opening victory.

No. 14 Virginia 20
No. 9 Clemson 7

Terry Kirby ran for a third-quarter touchdown and Jason Wallace set up another with a 79-yard punt return, and No. 14 Virginia ended the longest active string of futility in Division I-A with a victory over ninth-ranked Clemson.

Virginia had lost all previous 29 games against its Atlantic Coast Conference foe in a series that began in 1955.

Nine of those contests had been decided by seven points or less, and Saturday's game, the ACC opener for both schools, appeared as if it would be another nail-biter.

But Virginia, which trailed 7-6 at halftime, broke it open with a pair of touchdowns early in the third quarter.

No. 10 Nebraska 60
N. Illinois 14

Leodis Flowers rushed for a career-high 124 yards and a touchdown, and quarterback Mickey Joseph accounted for two scores in his first start as 10th-ranked Nebraska beat Northern Illinois.

Joseph, a junior, rushed for 75 yards and a touchdown on 11 carries and completed four of 11 passes for 103 yards and a touchdown filling in for the injured Mike Grant, out with a knee injury.

Nebraska (2-0) jumped to a 16-0 lead in the first 10 minutes. Joseph scored on a 1-yard run and the Huskers picked up a safety when Pat Tyrance and Mike Croel tackled Northern Illinois quarterback Stacey Robinson in the end zone.

After the free kick, Nebraska scored on Joseph's 20-yard pass to tight end Chris Garrett.

Northern (1-1) bounced back with a 48-yard touchdown run by fullback Adam Dach and a 42-yard field goal by John Ivanic.

Sooners shrug off L.A. heat to upset Bruins

Associated Press

Tony Levy recovered two fumbled punts deep in UCLA territory, setting up a pair of first-half touchdowns as 23rd-ranked Oklahoma beat the 19th-ranked Bruins 34-14.

Mike McKinley ran 10 yards to score on the first play after Levy recovered Reggie Moore's fumble, breaking a 14-14 tie and giving Oklahoma a 21-14 lead with 7:19 left before halftime.

The Sooners led the rest of the way in winning the season-opener for both teams. The game was played in stifling conditions — the temperature on the Rose Bowl field was measured as high as 120 degrees.

Levy had recovered a fumble by Sean LaChapelle at the UCLA 6-yard line late in the first quarter to set up a 1-yard touchdown run by Kenyon Rasheed.

Oklahoma quarterback Steve Collins scored two touchdowns. He rushed for 85 yards on 12 carries while Rasheed gained 87 yards on 15 carries.

UCLA committed six turnovers in the game — the two fumbled punts and four interceptions.

It took UCLA only 2:33 to score as Brad Daluiso kicked a 30-yard field goal five plays after Brian Brown returned the opening kickoff 59 yards to the Oklahoma 40.

Daluiso kicked a 39-yard field goal just 2:37 later to make it 6-0. It came five plays after Dewell Brewer fumbled on Oklahoma's second scrimmage play and Stacy Argo recovered on the Sooners' 42-yard line.

No. 13 Alabama 24

Jim Taylor kicked a 52-yard field goal with 3:35 left as Southern Mississippi defeated No. 13 Alabama and ruined Gene Stallings' debut as the Crimson Tide's coach.

Alabama had two final chances, but Simmie Carter intercepted a deflected pass at the Southern Mississippi 40 to end the first one. With a little more than a minute left, Alabama moved from its 31 to the Southern Mississippi 40, where a desperation fourth-down pass went through the end zone.

"When you keep turning the ball over, the momentum changes," said Stallings, former Texas A&M and NFL Phoenix coach who succeeded Bill Curry, now the coach at Kentucky.

"We played pretty good early, but then we got whipped."

No. 17 Pittsburgh 29
Boston College 6

Pittsburgh's defense forced seven turnovers, including Doug Hetzler's pass interception for a touchdown, and Curvin Richards ran for 117 yards and a touchdown as the 17th-ranked Panthers beat Boston College.

Vernon Lewis blocked a punt for a safety and added an interception, and Louis Riddick had two of the Panthers' school record-tying six interceptions as Pittsburgh capitalized on Boston College mistakes for the second year in a row.

The Panthers (2-0) had four interceptions in last year's 29-10 victory over the Eagles and also had six interceptions in a 1977 victory over the Eagles.

MC linksters second at NMJC

Staff Report

HOBBS, N.M. — The New Mexico Junior College red team edged out the Midland College Gold, 286-287, and captured the top spot in the 54-hole NMJC Invitational here Saturday.

The Chaparrals, who feature two sophomores and eight frosh, also enjoyed a fourth-place team effort from their green squad.

Who goes there? It's the Phantom of the Oilers

Associated Press

Will the Phantom of the Opera attend Atlanta's NFL opener Sunday, now that Jerry Glanville is the Falcon's head coach?

When he was coach of the Houston Oilers, Glanville, who usually dresses in black, left a ticket in the name of the Phantom. He also left tickets for Elvis Presley and James Dean.

Should the Phantom show, he might be rooting for the visiting team, which just happens to be Houston. The Oilers now are coached by Jack Pardee, who had been at the University of Houston

The last time the National Conference Falcons opened a season against an American Conference team was in 1978 when they beat the Oilers 20-14 at Atlanta.

While Glanville and Pardee and three other coaches will be doing business at new stands this year, Chuck Noll will be starting his 22nd season in charge of the Pittsburgh Steelers. You can be sure he hasn't forgotten last season's opener, in which the Steelers lost to the Cleveland Browns 51-0 at home.

Although the Steelers rallied to make the playoffs, they ranked 28th in offense in the NFL. Sunday at Cleveland, the Steelers will have a new offensive coordinator — Joe Walton, the ex-head coach of the New York Jets.

Bubby Brister, who seemed to come of age as a pro quarterback late last season, will start for the Steelers. Bernie Kosar opens his sixth season with the Browns as the sixth-rated quarterback in NFL history.

San Francisco plays at New Orleans Monday night.

NFL Roundup

Broncos at Raiders

Denver has the best AFC opening-day record of 18-11-1 for a .621 percentage, followed by the Raiders at 18-12 (.600). Denver is seeking a fourth AFC title in five years. Art Shell begins his first full season with Oakland after guiding the Raiders over the last weeks of the 1989 season.

Eagles at Giants

Giants linebacker Lawrence Taylor, armed with a $4.5 million contract for three years and with three days practice after a long holdout, will be on hand for this night game. Philadelphia swept the Gitants the past two years.

Rams at Packers

Anthony Dilweg, who completed one pass for seven yards last season, will start at quarterback for Green Bay in place of Don Majkowski, who ended a holdout by signing Tuesday. The Rams have won the last three meetings between the two clubs.

Vikings at Chiefs

Minnesota will try to get off on the right foot on the road, where they werw only 2-6 last year while being 8-0 at home. Kansas City will be trying to pick up the momentum of a 4-for-5 finish in 1989.

Colts at Bills

Rookie quarterback Jeff George, the No. 1 pick from Illinois, will start for Indianapolis, which will be without Eric Dickerson until the seventh game this season because the unhappy star running back is on the reserve non-football injury list. The Colts haven't won an opener since 1983 and have lost eight of their last nine game against the Bills in Buffalo.

Seahawks at Bears

Chicago has won six straight openers, best in the NFC. Dan Hampton, the tackle who is a spark of the defense, will be back in action for the Bears after being injured for much of the 1989 season. Seattle certainly won't look the same without Steven Largent, the NFL's most proflific wide receiver, who has retired, and Curt Warner, the club's all-time lead rusher, who has gone to the Rams.

Cardinals at Redskins

Joe Bu[illegible] who was a Redskins assistant coach from 1981-89, will appear in Washington as the new head coach of Phoenix, which lost its last six games last season. Washington won it last five games in 1989.

Chargers at Cowboys

Dallas has the NFC's best season-opening record of 41-25 (.621), but the Cowboys, who were 1-15 in 1989, began each of the last three seasons with a loss. San Diego will be looking for some offense to help a defense that ranked sixth in the NFL last year.

Buccaneers at Lions

Vinny Testaverde will be passing for Tampa Bay, while free safety Bennie Blades will be one of the Lions' defenders trying to stop him. They were teammates at the University of Miami. Detroit won its final five games last season for their longest winning streak since 1970.

Dolphins at Patriots

New England, which has a 13-6 record against the Dolphins at home, will be trying to extend its AFC-best opening-game winning streak to seven under new coach Rod Rust. Don Shula is opening his 28th season with Miami.

Jets at Bengals

Bruce Co[illegible]let, a Bengals' tight end in 1969-76 and an assistant coach in 1981-89, returns to Cincinnati as coach of the Jets. Ten field goals this year would put Bengals kicker Jim Breech at the 1,000-point mark.

OPEN: Loss 'wholly unforeseen'

From 1C

now," Sabatini said in the moments after her victory at the National Tennis Center in Flushing Meadows.

"I just can't believe that I won this tournament. There are no words to explain this emotion," she said. "I've been training a lot to win it. I just can't believe this came true."

While the victory brought Sabatini the biggest payday of her young life, $350,000 — or $50,000 for each of seven matches at the Open — it validated one of the most important decisions of her life, to change coaches earlier this year, the day after she lost in the fourth round to Jana Novotna at the French Open.

It was a demoralizing moment, especially because she was a semifinalist at the French in three of the previous four years.

Her game under Angel Giminez had seemed to stagnate, so the decision was made to hire on Carlos Kirmayr, a former touring pro from Brazil with a mellow personality: he's a part-time drummer in a rock band.

It was Kirmayr who began teaching her the advantages of approaching the net without fear, the tactic that worked so well throughout the Open, as she registered straight-set victories over Kathy Jordan, Isabelle Demongeot of France, Sabine Appelmans of Belgium, 11th-seeded Helena Sukova of Czechoslovakia, Leila Meskhi of the Soviet Union and Mary Joe Fernandez, seeded eighth, in the semifinals.

"I was working with my coach very much to come to the net," said Sabatini, who was seeded fifth here. "I want to say 'Thank you' to my coach. We've been working together only two months now, and he already gave me a lot of confidence."

For Graf, the winner of nine Grand Slam singles titles, it was a stinging defeat and one wholly unforeseen, given the level of her play at the Open. She looked positively invincible, defeating Arantxa Sanchez Vicario in the semifinals, 6-1, 6-2, in a match that lasted only 54 minutes.

She had been looking for her 10th title to eradicate finally the memories of a troubling year, in which she had broken her thumb and lost two of the four titles she captured the year before (the French Open and Wimbledon). She had also endured surgery to repair a sinus problem and the allegations that her father had had an extramarital relationship.

Yet even as the final opened, it was apparent Graf's magic had diminished. Sabatini needed all of four points to wrest control of the first set, as she broke Graf at love. When she won the third game for a 3-0 lead, patterns began emerging.

Once Graf held serve for just the second time to trail, 2-5, she made four consecutive unforced errors in the next game to give Sabatini the set — just the second set Graf had lost in the tournament.

Graf raised the level of her play a bit in the early stages of the second set, even though it began as the first, with Sabatini breaking when Graf netted a forehand volley at 30-40.

But this time, she broke right back when Sabatini drove a forehand deep and dumped a backhand volley into the net.

Then, each held serve — shakily — to bring on the tie breaker.

Agassi shows a champ's heart

By ROBIN FINN
N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — He glows in the dark and clashes with daylight and is unembarrassed by his image-makes-the-man philosophy. But what Andre Agassi unveiled Saturday in his 6-7, 6-3, 6-2, 6-3 United States Open semifinal victory against the defending champion, Boris Becker, was a commodity he had pretty much kept hidden until now: a champion's heart.

"No question this match is probably going to do a lot for how people perceive me," said the 20-year-old native of Las Vegas, Nev., whose tendency to speak louder with his clothing and commentary than with hard-won victories had sent him into his third consecutive Open semifinal with a shaky reputation.

According to Becker, Agassi shed that reputation like a sorry skin by splicing and splintering the sidelines with beautifully concocted winners for the space of their 3-hour-4-minute confrontation on the stadium court.

"I haven't seen him play like this ever," said Becker, the 22-year-old West German who captured titles at Wimbledon and the Open last year but will leave 1990 without a Grand Slam championship to gild his resume.

"I think he hit everything into the corners for three hours. I think it was a really important match for him: he proved to everyone that he is a world-class tennis player."

Agassi's successful attempt to break through to an Open final on his third straight attempt here guaranteed that the tournament title would be contested by two Americans for the first time since 1979, when

John McEnroe defeated Vitas Gerulaitis.

Agassi reacted to his groundbreaking victory by sinking to one knee and assuming a pensive Rodinesque pose in the middle of the court. Was he lost in thought after deposing a four-time Grand Slam champion and gaining his second Grand Slam final of the year and his first at the United States Open, the only tournament he venerates?

"I was not trying to overspiritualize it the way some players do," Agassi explained. "I was just being thankful. I've always said the U.S. Open is in my mind the most prestigious tournament in the world."

AP Laserphoto

After Agassi's moment of communion with the sun-splashed court, he and Becker clasped hands and then draped their arms across each other's shoulders in a show of mutual respect.

Although Becker wielded a 3-1 advantage in career encounters with Agassi going into the semifinal, including a pivotal five-set Davis Cup victory where the West German recovered from a two-sets-to-none deficit, Agassi left this match comforted by the knowledge that he had defeated the world's No. 2-ranked player in two consecutive tournaments.

"I told him that he played unbelievable," Becker said. "Of course I'm disappointed to lose, but I lost to a better player."

Agassi's relentless recovery after frittering away a quintet of set points in the opening set put Becker in a crucible for the remainder of the match. If it wasn't Agassi's patient, perfect playmaking that daunted Becker, it was a curious accumulation of questionable line calls against him that caused him to lose his most precious weapon against the less-experienced player, his poise.

"The calls were terrible," said Becker, who lay down on the court like a child making a snow angel as he protested a call near the end of the third set. "Between the wind, the calls, and the way he played, I had a bad time today."

While the American lashed, bashed and battered from the baseline, darting around the court like a dervish, Becker found himself backed into an iron-clad and disadvantageous firing zone a full 10 feet behind the baseline.

Agassi applied his far-flung ground strokes like salt to a wound as Becker, already divorced by his serve, discovered he could not even retaliate with his second-best weapon, his volley.

"He was playing so long all the time that I couldn't come in," said Becker. "My serve was good, but it needed to be really good and it wasn't. His strength is hitting from the baseline and mine is serving well, and obviously that wasn't the case."

Becker dropped his serve nine times, an abomination for a player who earned the sobriquet Boom-Boom after his crushing serve earned him a championship at 17 in his Wimbledon debut.

The players dueled for 72 minutes and struggled through a 22-point tie breaker, the longest tie breaker at this year's Open, before Becker converted his fourth set point by serving wide to Agassi's backhand and picking off his weak reply with a forehand winner across the court.

The fitness-conscious Agassi, who has campaigned all year to build himself a stronger mind and body, said he would have been despondent had he lost such a close crusade a year ago.

"A year or so ago, I would have had to win the first set to go that hard after it," said Agassi, who improved his Grand Slam record to 30-9 and curtailed Becker's 12-match Open winning streak.

"Last year on the stadium court against Lendl, it just all felt much bigger than me. But I've matured. After the first set I knew it was a question of who kept the right frame of mind, whoever was going to keep the intensity."

McEnroe succombs to youthfulness of Sampras

Associated Press

NEW YORK — A new generation of American tennis boom babies, all grown up and bursting with power, pulled a coup at the U.S. Open.

Pete Sampras, bidding to become the youngest U.S. men's champion in history, ended John McEnroe's summer revival 6-2, 6-4, 3-6, 6-3 Saturday to reach the final against Andre Agassi, who vanquished defending champion Boris Becker.

Sampras, leaping like Michael Jordan on a dunk shot during two phenomenal overheads, disposed of McEnroe, the four-time champ, even more easily than he beat three-time champion Ivan Lendl in the quarterfinals.

"I had a great run," said McEnroe, 31, who believes he's playing again like a top-10 player after coming in unseeded. "I'm disappointed I lost to Pete, but he played really well. It's exciting to have the new guys, the youth, Andre and Pete. I think the two best guys, playing their best, are in the final. They deserve to be in the final."

Sampras and Agassi, products of the tennis boom in the 1970s and '80s and leaders of a group of young players hoping to fill the vacancy left by McEnroe and Jimmy Connors, will compete in the first all American U.S. final since McEnroe beat Vitas Gerulaitis in 1979.

Agassi was simply relentless and overpowering, coming back from a loss in a classic tiebreak in the first set to beat Becker 6-7 (10-12), 6-3, 6-2, 6-3 and reach the final here for the first time.

No shots in the tournament, though, were more impressive than Sampras' basketball-style smashes in the third set, both legs three feet off the ground and his racket high overhead as he creamed McEnroe's short lobs. Sampras called basketball his "second sport."

McEnroe, and struggling to reach his first Open final since 1985, won that set, breaking Sampras for only the second time in the match in the eighth game, but Sampras' legs had plenty of spring to carry him through in the fourth.

Sampras opened and closed the fourth set with aces — he had 17 altogether, plus 21 service winners — and wore McEnroe down with hustle and slick flicks at the net.

"I try to serve as hard as I can and as close to the line," Sampras said. "If it goes in, it's an ace, service winner or easy volley. My whole game revolves around how well I serve."

Leading 3-2, Sampras won the first point on McEnroe's service in the sixth game by running down a forehand half-volley and sending a backhand screaming down the line that McEnroe could only stare at.

McEnroe saved three game points before Sampras cashed in on the fourth, a backhand return crosscourt that whizzed by McEnroe.

"I always felt I could break him," Sampras said. "His serves were coming in heavy, but not very consistently. I got a lot of good cracks on his second serves."

While McEnroe ranted in typical fashion at officials and himself all match, sometimes smacking the court or missed balls with his racket, Sampras played in virtual silence, as if he were an innocent bystander.

"On the outside I'm calm and cool, but on the inside my heart is really beating and I'm really nervous," said the soft-spoken Sampras. "I try not to show any emotion to my opponent."

If Sampras, of Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., beats Agassi, he would be the youngest U.S. men's champion, at 19 years, 28 days, replacing Oliver S. Campbell, who won the title 100 years ago at 19 years, 6 months, 9 days.

No longer will anyone question Agassi's courage on the court. Forget the notion that he quits when he's down, that he's all fluff and cute stuff and can't handle the pressure.

Agassi, 20, came to play, shorn of beard but colorful as ever in his neon green duds, blond-streaked hair and dangling earring. He didn't curse and he didn't spit, as he did when he began this tournament. Instead, he pounded and pounded until Becker relented.

"I said to myself, just stay cool and play your tennis," Agassi said of his thoughts at match point. "I said, 'Keep doing what got you here.'"

CITATION BY PUBLICATION
THE STATE OF TEXAS

TO: ANTONIO S. EAGLE, Respondent,

"You have been sued. You may employ an attorney. If you or your attorney do not file a written answer with the clerk who issued this citation by 10:00 a.m. on the Monday next following the expiration of twenty days after you were served this citation and petition, a default judgment may be taken against you. The Petition of LORENZO LERMA LOPEZ and wife, VALERIANA LOPEZ, Petitioners, was filed in the 318th District Court of Midland County, Texas, on the 26th day of April, 1990, against ANTONIO S. EAGLE and ELIDA GARZA NIETO, Respandent(s), numbered 22642 and entitled 'In the Interest of AUTSIN MANUEL GARZA EAGLE, a Child.' The suit requests the 'Termination of the Parent-Child Relationship and Adoption of the Child'. The date and place of birth of the child who is the subject of the suit is JUNE 6, 1980, Midland, Midland County, Texas.

"The court has authority in this suit to enter any judgment or decree in the child's interest which will be binding upon you, including the termination of that parent-child relationship, the determination of paternity and the appointment of a conservator with authority to consent to the child's adoption.

Issued and given under my hand and seal of said Court at Midland, Midland County, Texas, this the 20th day of August, 1990.

FIRST IMPRESSIONS

The formal living area focuses on a mirrored and black marble fireplace in the left corner of the room.

An angled breakfast bar divides the kitchen and breakfast area.

By JILL HANCOCK

No matter which door a person chooses to enter this week's featured home — the customary front one, French doors off of the pool area or from the private patio into the master bedroom — the first impression will be a lasting one.

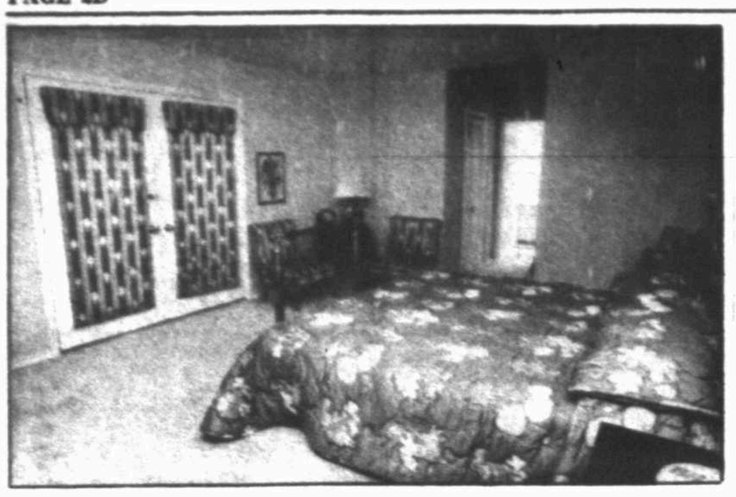

This MeadowPark home is situated on a private cul-de-sac and is surrounded by lush landscaping. The front entrance is highlighted by a leaded glass door with side panels and opens onto a tile foyer.

A private study or an informal living area is located to the right of the front door. Hardwood flooring, deep rose walls, tall windows and a wet bar are the amenities of this area. The windows frame the front and side yards. Two doors open to reveal a wet bar which is angled in one corner of the room. The bar has a U-Line refrigerator and glass shelves.

The decor in the formal dining room easily catches a person's eye. Two walls are lined in an Oriental fabric that has a black background. This dramatic fabric is enhanced by the Oriental rug which is placed on top of the hardwood floor. The other walls are painted a soft hue of yellow. A corner set of windows overlook the front yard. A door leads into the kitchen.

The foyer flows into the formal living room. A mirrored fireplace is inset in the right corner of the room. Black marble surrounds the opening of the fireplace and serves as the hearth. The walls in this area are painted a light shade of taupe and a high ceilings adds to the open feeling in this area. The back part opens onto a hall that is lined with windows and French doors. Two skylights also brighten the hallway. The doors lead onto the cover patio and pool. The back yard is lined with beautifully landscaped flower beds. This corridor leads to two bedrooms, to the left, and, to the right, into the breakfast room and kitchen.

The contemporary look of the home is also seen in the kitchen and breakfast area. The kitchen is lined with formica cabinets that feature off-white fronts with taupe inlays. A central work island includes a peach counter top and a skylight above brightens this functional area. The General Electric appliances include a range with a self cleaning oven, microwave and dishwasher. A breakfast bar, which can accommodate five bar stools, is angled into one part of the kitchen.

Also in this corridor is the sequestered master bedroom. A set of French doors provides access onto a very private patio that is lined with shubbery. The bedroom features a cathedral ceiling and includes a sitting area.

A hall leads from the bedroom, past two walk-in closets, into the master bath. A paper in shades of blue, pink, gray and mustard decorate the walls. The bath has two marble vanities, one which includes a make-up area and a built-in shower. Another appealing feature that any owner will enjoy is a dry sauna! A marble jacuzzi tub is placed under a stained glass window and is located across from the sauna.

The utility room is located next to the master bedroom. This large area includes a sink, storage closet and a place to air dry clothing. A door leads to the rear-entry, two-car garage with an automatic door opener. The garage also has a shower for swimmers and a work room.

Access can be made to the home's other two bedrooms from a hallway that extends from the study and from the corridor by the formal living room. Both bedrooms have walk-in closets and large windows.

A hall bath is conveniently located between both of these rooms. The bath has a marble vanity and the walls are highlighted by a taupe, peach, cream and white paper. The separate bathing area has a bathtub.

Chaparral, Realtors is offering this approximately 2,800 square foot home for $175,000.

Langston Realtors talk about...

How we 'show and tell' Midland

Langston

We are regularly called upon by professional firms, major and independent oil companies, and other community groups to assist in recruiting to Midland new hires, doctors, attorneys, directors in arts organizations, and other potential transferees. And we must say that sharing our city with others is one of the most enjoyable aspects of our business.

So what do we "show and tell" the potential new Midlander? Next week we'd like to write about the "show," a description of our two hour drive through the city, but this week we'd like to write about the "tell." In an often wordy but always enthusiastic and sincere description of Midland, we try to make four very important points.

First, we tell potential new citizens that Midland is a very caring city, where the frontier way of neighbors helping neighbors still abounds. The Jessica story is a classic example of this, but we also talk about the annual United Way Campaign with its ambitions, necessary and successful two to two and half million dollar drive. That's a gift of approximately $25.00 from every man, woman and child in the county. In fact, according to TEC statistics, Midland ranks #1 in the state for employees donations to the United Way!

Another outstanding example of "caring" Midlanders is that of the Abell-Hangar's truly unbelievable gift of a college education for every graduate of a high school in Midland County. There is not another community in this country (the world?) where every young person has the opportunity for one year of college, and, in most cases, two years by just completing successful freshmen terms!

Second, we tell others that Midland is cosmopolitan city. Our major oil companies bring us new citizens who have lived all over the country and often the world. Our world War 11 bombadier base, the largest of its kind, brought us thousands of young men from every state who fell in love with our friendly, warm community or our charming young ladies (or both!), and who elected to return to Midland after the war. Our citizen's broad business interests, social contacts, and love for travel regularly take them everywhere! We all know that if you want to see a Midlander, you just take a walk through Knightsbridge in London, lunch in SoHo in New York or ride the trolley in San Franscisco!

We personally will never forget our first trip to Europe when we walked into the Swiss House in Lucerne only to find John and Charlotte Seay holding the door open for us! Or several years later, the Christmas dinner shared with Gene and Fran Schutte and Paul and Eila Noel after running into them on the fringe of Hyde Park!

And just how does a cosmopolitan citizenry benefit our city? We think it results in a community of individuals who know the best, demand the best and are willing to support the best! Examples are everywhere: in education, in our symphony, museums, theatre, arts, and in out City of Midland Swim Team, Polo Club, city soccer fields. There just has to be something truly unique and outstanding about a city of our size who produces a president of the United States, Indy 500 winners, Kentucky Derby winners, gold medal olympic swimmers, the only children's theatre group in the United states invited to perform in New Zealand's theatre festival, the first symphony organization outside the Dallas area invited to play in the outstanding new Meyerson, the Thouvenal Strings who perform in the orient, the nation's leading cowboy/ranch historian, and so much more. We could easily fill the page!

Third, we talk about Midland as a clean city. Wide streets, lawns meticulously maintained a less-than-nurturing environment, clean alleys, neatly mowed and litter-free school grounds, an abundance of community parks, all of these attest to a community that appreciates and maintains a blue skyed, safe, inviting environment. Midland is truly, as only one of our favorite English friends could have described it, "a very tidy town!"

Finally, we tell others considering moving to Midland, that it is an exceptionally friendly city. Its citizens are appreciated and accepted not on the basis of who they are but what they do. One is judged on contributions to the community not on family ties or being born here. Everyone is welcomed in Midland, a city where and "Old Timer" is someone that has lived here Ten years! And everyone becomes a Midlander, where he or she becomes a volunteer at Casa de Amigos, drivers for Meals on Wheels, tries lout for the newest community theatre production, coaches a little league team, walks the neighborhood, attends church services, serves on a Chamber of Commerce Committee, does aerobics at the Y, opens a new business, joins the PTA, or a jillion other things. "Feeling at home" in Midland is only a week or two away for anyone new!

As initially stated, our "ambassador's tour of this city" is one of the things that we love to do, and feel we do best! If you are trying to recruit a new teacher, doctor, employee, director, business, attorney, etc. to our city, let us help. Our services are free, utilized by a large number of companies and professionals, and generously given. Just call me, our Relocation VP Richard Langston or any one of our Langston Realtors ambassadors!

Cook named salesperson for month by Dene Kelly, Realtors

Lynn Cook has been selected as the Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors' salesperson of the month for the third time this year. Since entering the real estate profession and becoming associated with Dene Kelly Realtors, Cook has become a successful and consistent producer in both sales and listings.

Cook moved to West Texas from St. Louis in 1969 and has been a resident in the Midland/Odessa area since 1977. He has a B.S. degree in Marketing and has 20 years experience in the advertising-/marketing field. He also owned and operated his own business for 15 years where he gained extensive experience in the management field. Cook is an active member of the Midland Board of Realtors, the Texas Association of Realtors and the National Association of Realtlors.

When asked about his successful frack record at Dene Kellys, Cook stated, "In this business a person must become dedicated to his clients and customers and be willing to put in long hours. Since I am somewhat of a work-a-holic, this is not a problem for me and has helped me to become successful in real estate."

Lynn Cook

Cook is also involved in Dene Kelly's "U-MARKET" program for those homeowners who want to sell their own home and save money. The "U-MARKET" program provides the "For Sale By Owner" with professional backup to make sure all the intricate details of a sale are handled properly and in the seller's best interest.

In looking to the future, Cook said he sees nothing but positive things for Midland's real estate market, as well as, his own personal success. For knowledge and professional service, individuals interested in buying or selling real estate are invited to contact Lynn Cook or any of the other experienced and qualified agents at Dene Kelly Inc., Realtors.

Upgrade lighting with minimum of expense, fuss

The Associated Press

Good lighting has emotional as well as physical rewards, according to an article in House Beautiful, and there are many ways you can upgrade your lighting with a minimum of fuss or expense, says the magazine.

■ Kitchen: If kitchen lighting is not directly over work surfaces, you're probably standing in your own shadow. If the room has one central ceiling fixture, you probably never have sufficient light on any work or cooking area. Here are some options:

Track lighting may be the easiest remedy; you can install it yourself. Placed directly over the edge of counters, it will provide essential task light for cooking and cutting surfaces. If you have an island work center, you can connect adapters to the track and mount hanging fixtures directly overhead.

Under-cabinet lighting, either incandescent or fluorescent, is another option. Incandescent can be easily and inexpensively dimmed. Always mount under-cabinet lighting as far forward as possible, away from the back wall, so light is focused directly on your work rather than behind it.

Consider over-cabinet lighting, if your ceiling is high enough. You can install individual fixtures or continuous lighting strips — incandescent, fluorescent or halogen.

Halogens offer white light and longer lasting bulbs, but will usually require a transformer for household use.

Build a cove or soffit around the upper reaches of your room and install small continuous-lighting sources that will provide uplight, which bounces off the ceiling.

Standard recessed fixtures are available that don't require ceiling demolition or special installation. They are called "install from below" or "old-work housing." The only problem may be feeding in the necessary wiring. Check with your electrician.

■ Dining room: If your dining room is like most others, it is lit by a single chandelier, placed dead center. If the dining table must share the room with a china cabinet or sideboard, chances are it is off-center from the chandelier.

Consider replacing it with surface-mounted or recessed ceiling fixtures. Or you can install several semi-recessed fixtures arranged in a square, circle or triangle pattern over the table.

Another option is to mount sconces on either side of French or sliding doors, a china cabinet, an important painting or a doorway leading to another room.

■ Living room: In addition to table and floor lamps, consider adding uplights that sit discreetly on the floor to light dark corners, highlight plants or create a warm glow behind a chair or table. Installing opaque shades on traditional lamps will cut glare without seriously reducing overall light.

■ Bathroom: The best way to light a bathroom mirror is by mounting one or more incandescent fixtures on the same wall as the mirror. If your present fixture is in the ceiling right over the vanity, you're getting a distorted mirror image with strong, unnatural shadows under your eyebrows and chin.

RIDING THE WIND

Imagine the feeling of snow skiing down a mountain as fast as you can. Now imagine that feeling, only picture yourself gliding on the water, totally in control of the movement of the wind in relation to yourself ... and when you fall it won't hurt.

"It's a lot of fun," said Munson, commodore for the Permian Basin Windriders Sailboarding Club. "It's like you're connected to the rig. You control all the mechanics sliding across the water."

Water? Sailboarding? This is West Texas right?

Probably the last thing many West Texans would expect to see are cars loaded with surf boards and sails. But for members of Windriders Sailboarding Club, it's standard equipment.

"That's the best thing about it. You can haul your equipment easily. I carry mine in my van," Munson said.

"All you need is a board, a sail, the wind and the water; and the wind and water are free," said James Welty, race director for the club and a private instructor of the sport.

Water? But guys, remember, this is West Texas.

"There are a lot of little lakes in the area that are good for sailboarding. It's not like having a big boat. It doesn't take a very big or a very deep lake for sailboarding," Munson said. "In fact, the little lakes are better for beginners. They're not very deep or wide; no matter how far they blow away, they can't blow very far."

Just exactly what is sailboarding?

Well, basically, it is a board which resembles a regular surf board that has an assembly to attach a sail — just like a sailboat — which is manned by one person and is wind propelled.

"It depends solely on you. It's a one-man sport," Wetly said. "Windsurfing is a point of balance. Everything is pretty much the relation between the board, the sail and yourself. If you do what your told, then you can't screw up."

Although some people who are unfamiliar with the sport might think it would be dangerous, Welty and Munson both attest to its safety.

Opera lovers' group travels to Santa Fe

By Marilyn McKnight Harrison

Twenty-two persons recently enjoyed the third annual Santa Fe Opera Trip sponsored by the Music Ministry of Midland's First United Methodist Church.

McKnight-Harrison

The group stayed at the historic Hotel St. Francis, located one block from the plaza, and enjoyed dining at many famous eateries, including La Tertulia, La Casa Sena, Pasqual's and Vanessi's. The unique shops and galleries of New Mexico's capital provided daytime entertainment.

Each evening before traveling out to the famous outdoor opera house, the group gathered for a preview of the opera they were to attend. These informative sessions were conducted by Jane Ward.

Operas seen by the group included "Orfeo ed Euridice" by Willibald Gluck and featuring the world famous opera diva, Marilyn Horne, and "Cosi Fan Tutte" by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. One of the leading roles in the latter production was sung by Midland native and rising opera star, Susan Graham, daughter of Betty and Floyd Graham.

Tour leaders were Brad and Jane Kisner, directors of music ministries at First Methodist. They were accompanied by Jane's parents, Sara and Gordon Collins of Fort Wayne, Ind.

IN MEMORY of Ellen Gonzales, former ballroom dance teacher at Midland College and secretary in the Fine Arts Department, 12 persons met in July at Team Bank at the invitation of Helen Pogue to discuss the possibility of forming a ballroom dance club. Most of those attending had been students of Ellen. From that meeting, the Ballroom Dance Society of West Texas was formed.

At the second meeting in August, the size of the group increased to 28, and officers were elected. They are Neal Faulkner of Odessa, president; Frank Morgan, vice president; Novella Faulkner, secretary; Fred Landis, treasurer, and Helen Pogue, Charlotte and Newnie Ellis, Paddy and Charles Godwin, Marie and Ray Smith, Dorothy and Bobby Wheeler of Big Spring and Pat and Lee Niblett of Andrews, directors.

Plans are to hold a dance the first Saturday night of each month from 8 to 11 p.m. in the ballroom of the Petroleum Club of Midland. Paul Diveley's Easy Listening Combo is already booked to play for the October and November dances.

Helen tells us that Ellen was a gracious, delightful lady who made learning to dance fun. It was her dream that someday there would be a place available in Midland for all who wanted to dance to ballroom music, such as the rhumba, the foxtrot, the tango and the cha-cha.

WE RECENTLY had occasion to visit with Frances (Mrs. John) Walker and enjoyed hearing the interesting details about the California wedding of the Walkers' daughter, Freda Walker, and Bob Wagner.

The wedding festivities began on a Friday evening with a Cambodian buffet dinner for out-of-town relatives and guests at Sentong's Restaurant in Etna.

The following morning, guests were entertained with a Wildflower Tour in the meadows of Mount Scott in Trinity Alps. That afternoon, a wedding communion service was conducted at the Etna United Methodist Church. Former Midlander and harpist Eileen McClintock of Glendale, Calif., and the bride's girlhood friend, was among those providing the music.

Folliwing the wedding rehearsal at the Arboretum at Jennings Ranch, there was a dinner for the bridal attendants, relatives and 120 locals. A Southwestern theme was used in decorations, and a western band provided the music.

The wedding ceremony took place on Sunday afternoon at the Arboretum. The huge trees, which served as a backdrop for the event, were decorated with windsocks in the bride's chosen colors of pink and rose. A classical orchestra played before and after the wedding.

The bridal couple accompanied by the bride's mother, flower girl and two pages arrived in a vis-a-vis crriage pulled by a Clydesdale horse. Two coachmen and two footmen in grey uniforms and top hats aided the participants.

A dinner at the Conifer Inn in Fort James, Calif., was held that evening for relatives, out-of-town guests, including Midlander Gypsy Riddel, and local friends.

The wedding invitations, featuring caricatures of the bride and groom on the cover, were designed by Skip Hanna, an Etna rancher who illustrated a book authored by Freda.

SAILING: Water sport appeals to many

(From 1E)

"It's the safest water sport in the world according to international statistics," Welty said.

"I've never heard of anyone being seriously injured. I'm sure there's been some accidents, but the few I've seen have been minor. With sailboarding, there's no motors or boats, it's just you and the rig," Munson said.

And even though water seems scarce in this part of the country, Welty said that Texas is becoming a windsurfing mecca, and the Permian Basin club is the second largest organized sailboarding group in the state, the largest being in Corpus Christi.

The club began about four years ago and now boasts a paid membership of about 60 members with about 75 active participants, Munson said. But the club's mailing list tops 250 people.

Those on the mailing list receive a quarterly newsletter and notification of events. The costs of the newsletter and mailing are underwritten by Ski Skeller Sports.

THE CLUB is a nonprofit organization. "The main purposes of the club are to provide fun, to improve the (sailboarding) skill of each of our members and to promote windsurfing to the public. We want to make them aware that it is a safe, fun sport. We want the public to know what we're about," Munsun said. "That's the reason for many of our fun events, to promote the sport."

"It is really a well organized group. It sponsors three races a year that each draw about 25 to 40 racers and 50 to 80 spectators, depending on the weather," Welty said.

"The idea behind racing is to keep the organization up. People want to be able to test their skills. It's kind off like having a fast car.

— Les Munson
windsurfer

If there is no place to race it, you really can't test what it can do," Welty said. "The races are becoming bigger and better."

Although races are an important part of the club's activities, they are just one facet.

"There are more people in the club interested in sailboarding for fun than there are those interested in racing," Welty said. "Only about 30 percent of the members are interested in serious racing."

There are many club activities that are just for fun. "There are private parties and many of the members get together and take trips. They get groups together to go to places like Corpus or Aruba," Welty said.

ONE RECENT event sponsored by the club just for fun was the "No Wind Beach Party" at J.B. Thomas Lake, Aug. 25-26. The party was open to the public and about 35 people attended. Big Sport, via Ski Skeller, set up several rigs for beginners to learn the sport and several club members — including Welty, who is a sailboarding instructor — were available to work with beginners at no cost. Other activities included playing volleyball and horseshoes, and having a cookout. Some people attended for the day, while others chose to camp out over night and start sailboarding again the next day.

"We want to make it easier for people to learn," said Welty.

The club's membership is a mixed group of people. There are young and old, men and women, athletic and non-athletic, rich and poor. "The youngest I've ever taught was 9 years old, and you're never too old to learn," Welty said.

"Once you learn to control and utilize the wind, then you can use it to your advantage," he added.

Winds 5 to 10 mph are perfect for teaching and for beginning sailboarders, Welty said. Winds 12 to 20 mph are for those who have more experience and want to sail for speed.

The equipment needed varies based on wind conditions and amount of experience. Larger boards with larger sails are used for light air conditions, whereas shorter boards and smaller sails are for high wind conditions.

Welty recommended that a beginner try to buy moderate equipment that will take him a little beyond the beginner stages, equipment to use under standard conditions.

THE PRICE of the equipment also varies. "You can walk out of here with a complete set up for $450," Welty said.

"It's relatively inexpensive and it's easy to take anywhere," Munson said. He said he frequently checks with the National Weather Service and it the winds look good, he packs up his rig and heads to one of the nearest lakes after work some days for two or three hours of sailboarding. "I've gotten to be pretty good at predicting the weather."

"But you can make it (the cost) as extreme as you want," Welty said. "If you windsurf in cold weather, you'll need a wet or dry suit. ...In heavy winds, you'll need a helmet.

"If you are serious about racing, it's not cheap. You will need to have five or six boards to choose from. You will need equipment that is up to the standards of those you are racing against," Welty said.

"Sailboarding holds the world's speed record for a sail propelled sport of almost 49 miles per hour," Welty said.

"We started the West Texas Championship," two years ago, Munson said. And the group plans to sponsor the event again in April 1991 at Red Bluff Lake.

For those who might like to see what windsurfing action is all about, the next opportunity will be at the Coors Extra Gold Regatta Sept. 15-16 at J.B. Thomas Lake. The event is open to the public to watch the race or to enjoy sailboarding themselves on a portion of the lake away from the race course.

OTHER UPCOMING events include the Texas State Championship Sept. 29-30 at Lake Beltron and the Great Regatta Race Oct. 27-28 at J.B. Thomas Lake. All of these races follow United States Boardsailing Associaiton rules.

For more information about windsurfing, upcoming races or the Permian Basin Windriders Sailboarding Club, contact Munson at 687-7645 or Welty at 697-0427.

Traveling with children can be easier

NEW YORK (AP) — Car travel with children doesn't have to be a nightmare. Here are some hints from Family Circle magazine for a great vacation on the road.

- Involve the children in planning the trip. Let them help you send away for information from tourist offices.
- Keep necessary items such as diapers, pre-moistened towelettes, bottles, pacifiers, blankets and pillows close at hand.
- Make a "fun bag" for each child with games, books and a few surprise items in them.
- Pack plenty of snacks, avoiding salty and small items, for young children. Make an adventure out of mealtime by having a picnic.
- Schedule long-distance driving during the kids' naptime.
- Look for playgrounds and make stops there about every two hours. Know ahead of time where you will be staying and opt for a place with a pool.

Copley News Service

Fast food has never been known for doing a body a lot of good nutritionally, and it apparently does not do much for the faces of acne-prone people.

Dermatologist Harvey Arbesman of the State University of New York at Buffalo School of Medicine reports that the iodine content of a typical fast-food meal is 30 times higher than the recommended daily allowance. Iodine is known to trigger new acne and worsen existing cases.

Women surveyed about their most hated household chores

By Vince Kowalick
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — Women hate housework. No news there. But what kind of housework do they hate the most? Dusting? Washing dishes? Bathroom cleaning? They're all dirty and undesirable jobs. So who cares, right?

Well, an Ontario, Canada, cleaning-tools manufacturer, for one. Mallory Industries surveyed 100 women ages 25-60 at a Chicago focus group in June in an effort to evaluate attitudes of women toward cleaning and to promote company products.

Sixty-nine women considered waxing floors the dirtiest of household deeds. Washing windows was a close second.

The remaining chores, in order of their unpopularity, were: kitchen/stove/refrigerator cleaning, bathroom cleaning, dishwashing, vacuuming, laundry and dusting.

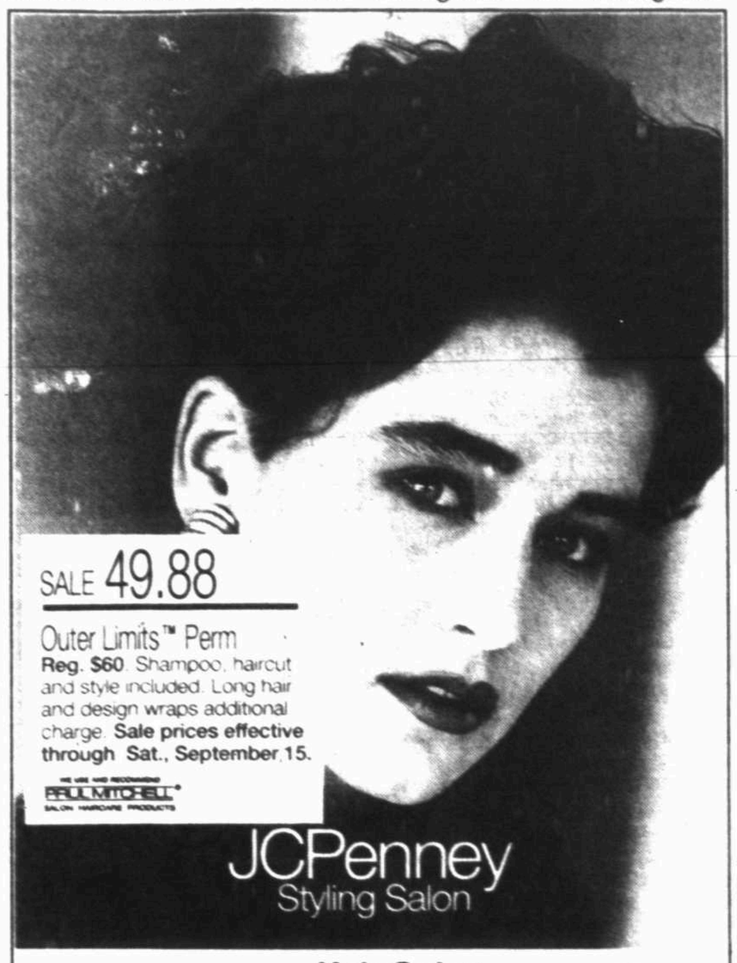

According to women surveyed, waxing floors and washing windows are the most hated because they are time-consuming, they put women at risk of accidents because of teetering chairs or shaky ladders and because cleaning tools often are ineffective.

The women surveyed also said that window washing was the least-performed chore, averaging about one washing per year.

"The bottom line was, 'I hate to wax floors and I hate to do windows,' " Mallory spokeswoman Cher Patric said.

Women have a statistical basis to back their dislike for window washing. More than 128,000 Americans are injured annually from falling off ladders, according to the National Safety Council in Chicago.

"We were trying to show them a better way to clean windows," Patric said. "Some of the women didn't know that you could use a squeegee in the house."

Here's another necessity for your apartment.

If you are living in an apartment or duplex, this may be the first opportunity you've had to experience the terrific benefits of having natural gas in your home. You will find that for heating your home during cold weather, for hot water, or for cooking, nothing beats natural gas for convenience, economy, and efficiency.

With cooler temperatures just around the corner, here are a few reminders from your friends at Energas Company on the safe and responsible use of natural gas where you live.

Your furnace needs an annual check-up.

Your natural gas furnace has been sitting quietly all summer, waiting for the time it's really needed. And like anything that's been idle a while, your furnace needs a checkup before it starts back to work. You may want to check with your landlord or apartment manager about arranging for an annual inspection by a qualified professional heating contractor. Once it's been inspected, your furnace should require very little attention the rest of the winter.

A closet isn't always a closet.

Your water heater or furnace is probably in a closet all by itself. And that's the way it should stay. As tempting as it may be, don't use the space around a water heater or furnace for storage. Even if these major appliances sit in the open, the space around them should be kept clear to insure adequate air circulation.

If you smell gas.

We hope that you will never have to deal with a gas leak. If you do smell gas, day or night, exit the building then call your local Energas office immediately. Do not flip light switches or use any other electrical equipment. Do not light a match or a candle. Do not try to find the leak yourself.

For more information.

Get a free folder from your landlord or apartment manager. Or call your local Energas office.

Natural gas is the best energy you can have in West Texas for any home heating job. Just set your thermostat, and have a great winter!

ENERGAS

We're proud to be your gas company

Infatuation, dedication make difference

By ANNA QUINDLEN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Each night for the last week, as I have gone out to walk the dogs or leave the trash at the curb, the boy and girl have been shadows in the doorway of the house next door. Even when it was raining, lightning bisecting the sky, they were there, entangled in one of those kisses that last forever, that end only when the oxygen supply gives out. One night the boy spoke as the dogs sniffed at the steps below. "Do you know how much I love this girl?" he asked, a rhetorical boast to a middle-aged stranger.

"Oh, God," I said, tugging on the leashes, and though the lovers might have thought my response indicated disapproval, it was really the shock of recognition, sharp and silver as the lightning. I remember being in love like this, entering into a state more like a tropical disease than a relationship, listening to one catchy piece of bubble-gum music over and over again and getting the same odd feeling in the stomach and the chest.

WHEN I WAS in high school the song was by the Beach Boys, "Wouldn't It Be Nice": "Though it's gonna make it that much better, When we can say goodnight and stay together." The big payoff. Not so much sex, at least for the girls, as a kind of mythical domesticity: napkins and matching place mats, unlimited kissing, no adults, flowers every day. What our parents referred to as playing house.

It's getting on to 10 years that I've been married. I'm not sure when I realized that reality was going to be both something less and something much more. Luckily many of us know that before we marry, or there would be even more disasters than we now suffer through, many more people packing away an expensive wedding album in some corner of the basement where, it is hoped, it will mildew.

When I was younger I tended to fall in love with just one thing: a kind of bravado, a certain smile. (The girl in the doorway, I am convinced, has fallen for blond hair and a crooked grin.) I even fell in love with a certain set of bony shoulders in a sport jacket years ago.

But unlike a lot of my friends, who went through more than a few Mr. Wrongs and have now settled down with Mr. Maybe, I married the person inside the sport jacket. And I held on like a dog with a bone to a love affair between a girl whose idea of awesome responsibility was a psych midterm and a boy who painted his dorm room black, long after that boy and girl were gone. I held onto what has been going on in that doorway long past the time when I was really too old to believe in magic.

TRUTH IS, I still believe in magic, and it's still there, although there's no point denying that it is occasionally submerged beneath a welter of cereal bowls, dirty shirts, late nights, early mornings and all the other everyday things that bubble-gum music never reflects.

But what I didn't know about marriage, the less magical parts of it, has become perhaps more important to me. Now we have history as well as chemistry. An enormous part of my past does not exist without my husband. An enormous part of my present, too. I still feel somehow that things do not really happen to me unless I have told them to him. I don't mean this nonsense about being best friends, which I have never been able to cotton to; our relationship is too judgmental, too demanding, too prickly to have much in common with the quiet waters of friendship. Like emotional acupuncturists, we know just where to put the needle. And do.

But we are each other's family. And while I know people who have cut their families loose, who think them insignificant or too troublesome to be part of their lives, I am not one of those people. I came late to the discovery that we would be related by marriage.

I once made a fool of myself in front of a friend in the emergency room of a small resort hospital after my husband's stomach and a bad fried clam had had an unfortunate meeting. "Are either of you related to him?" the nurse asked, and we both shook our heads until our friend prodded me gently in the side. "Oh, well, I'm his wife," I said.

THERE IS something so settled and stodgy about turning a great romance into next of kin on an emergency room form, and something so soothing and special, too. I suppose that is what I find so dreadful about divorce; lovers are supposed to leave you in the lurch, but your family is supposed to stick by you forever. "You can pick your friends, but you can't pick your relations," the folksy folks always say. Ah, but in this one case you can. You just don't realize it at the time.

What does it mean that I do not envy the two of them, standing in the doorway, locked together like Romeo and Juliet in the tomb? I suppose when I was their age I would have assumed it meant that I was old and desiccated. But of course what has really happened is that I know the difference now between the things that last and those that don't, between dedication and infatuation.

That doesn't mean I don't still get an enormous kick out of infatuation: the exciting ephemera, the punch in the stomach, the adrenaline to the heart. At a cocktail party the other night I looked across a crowded room and was taken by a stranger, in half-profile, a handsome, terribly young-looking man with a halo of back-lighted curls. And then he turned and I realized that it was the stranger I am married to, the beneficiary on my insurance policy, the sport jacket, the love of my life.

Younger wives of older men face challenges

By Ron Alexander
N.Y. Times News Service

Beliza Ann Furman was traveling around the country promoting Beliza, her line of beauty products for hands and nails, when she got the idea for Wives of Older Men. Mrs. Furman, 41, the wife of Sam Furman, a dentist 15 years her senior, discovered that other women married to older men were eager to share confidences and to get advice on the subject of age differences between spouses.

"There are special concerns — they're not problems, they're concerns — that are part of the older-husband, younger-wife scenario," Mrs. Furman was saying the other afternoon. "There was plenty to discuss beyond remembering to bring Rolaids along when you go out to dinner."

She founded WOOM after she had had two children and started writing a book, "Long Nails — At Last!" The first meeting of WOOM was in her Rumson, N.J., home last fall. The ground rule: an age disparity of at least eight years between mates. Thirty women showed up.

Today, Mrs. Furman boasts "an across-the-country" membership of more than 400. The Garden State-Big Apple-Connecticut group meets every other month, either in someone's home or a restaurant. Not infrequently their mates show up for food and talks by guest speakers on topics like finances, insurance and travel with children.

THE OTHER afternoon, a dozen or so regulars and first-timers gathered at Q.D. McGraw, a midtown Manhattan restaurant owned by Ralph Rosenblum, a silver-haired man who lives in Franklin Lakes, N.J., with Lucille Colantonio, 33 years his junior. The group came to eat a $30 lunch (main course: chicken, sole or steak au poivre), hear what two guest speakers had to say about personal appearance and spend an hour or so over their coffee reflecting on life with an older mate.

Two major issues, Mrs. Furman said, can be a lack of similar interests and a husband's concern about a second family.

"The fact that your husband grew up on Sinatra and you grew up on Elton John is easier to resolve than whether or not to have a baby," she said. "When you're in your early 20s you may think you don't want to have kids, but it in all likelihood, as your biological clock ticks away, you'll change your mind." That would be about the time, she said, when the older husband would be thinking about retirement.

"The last thing he'd want to worry about at that point in his life is how to pay for the education of an offspring."

"AT THE beginning of our relationship, my husband and I had to spend most of our time alone because people didn't take us seriously as a couple," said Ilene Hochberg of Manhattan, who is 25 years younger than her husband, Irwin.

"That only made our relationship stronger; we got to know each other better. Gradually they realized it wasn't mere whimsy, that my husband wasn't going through midlife crisis and that we truly loved each other."

Mrs. Hochberg, the creator of the magazine spoofs Catmopolitan, Vanity Fur, Dogue and Forbabes, added that her husband calls her "a woman with a mature mind but a young body."

"A lot of his so-called friends found me too young," Mrs. Furman recalled, "and I admit I found it somewhat strange to be going out with women who were older than my mother."

One woman recalled that her husband's first wife had called her a bimbo.

Ms. Colantonio and Mrs. Furman pursued the subject:

Ms. Colantonio: "A lot of those women are just jealous of younger women, especially younger women who are in a rewarding relationship. We're not bubbleheads and we're not gold diggers."

Mrs. Furman: "Actually, a lot of women will have to go to work when their husbands get older."

Ms. Colantonio: "The age difference is an excuse for the husband's first wife to say, 'Sure, that's why he left me.' But on the other hand, it would be a mistake to think we can let ourselves go."

Mrs. Furman: "Just remember, there's always someone younger out there."

DONNA MARGEOTES of South Orange, N.J., whose husband, Steve, is an executive at Adidas, said, "I didn't set out consciously to find an older man."

She and her husband have been married 12 years; their age difference is double that. "Age has never been an issue between the two of us," she said. "But when I saw WOOM on the Regis Philbin show I realized I wanted to belong to a support group."

Vivianne Arango has lived with her former boss, Bennett Weil, for three years. He is 29 years older than she, which attracted her to him. "He was set in his ways and I loved the security of knowing that what I saw was what I got," she said.

Rosenblum, owner of Q.D. McGraw's, came by to see how things were going.

"When I was young I was attracted to older women, but the older I got the younger I liked them," he said. "When I started going out with Lucille I felt uncomfortable; people thought she was my daughter."

His 29-year-old daughter by his former wife told him she did not approve of his new relationship, but said "give me time."

"It worked out," he said.

By Suzanne Schlosberg
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — The box had silver wrapping, white ribbon and a sticker from an expensive store in Beverly Hills. Inside, Sherrie Fisher thought, was a classy wedding gift — a china dish, perhaps, or a glass bowl.

It was a silver-plated doughnut holder.

"It was very bizarre, to say the least," said Fisher, who got married in April. "I just tossed it aside."

Despite the best intentions of gift givers, wedding presents often end up in the attic or back in the store they came from.

Newlyweds dislike about one in five gifts they receive, according to a new survey by MasterCard, but some local newlyweds say it's much worse than that.

"I returned at least 75 percent," Fisher said. Some of the gifts were duplicates, some were useless, and others didn't match her belongings.

Not only did she spend many hours returning gifts, Fisher said, but she also had to struggle with some creative thank-you notes.

"It's hard to be so thankful for something that you just don't know what to do with," she said.

Sandy Lee, who also married in April, recommends buying registered gifts.

"I used to think it was really tacky," she said. "But when you register, you do yourself and your guests a big favor. This way you get to receive something you really wanted, and it won't hide in the back of a closet, or wherever dead gifts go."

Lee said the gifts she liked best — apart from cash — were personalized items such as monogrammed picture frames or photo albums.

Wedding plans include mom's ideas too

By Susan Brock
N.Y. Times News Service

Briana Baker Morrison spent nine months and about $17,000 planning her dream wedding — one that included almost 300 guests, four bridesmaids, a string quartet, and a horse and carriage.

Her wedding went off without a hitch, but planning for the perfect day wasn't easy.

"Now I can look back and say it was a lot of fun," Ms. Morrison, 25, said of the May 5 event. "But there were days that I was in tears. At one point, I told my mother I just wanted to have 50 people. And she could pick her 25."

Planning a wedding with Mom can be both difficult and rewarding. Difficult because storybooks tell us wedding days should be perfect, and life never is. Rewarding because a wedding can let a young woman relate to her mother as a peer, often for the first time.

Wedding planning remains tough because mothers and daughters identify so much with each other, said Dr. Geri Scheller-Gilkey, an associate professor in psychiatry at Emory University Medical School in Atlanta. Mom may want her daughter to have the lavish wedding she never had. But the bride may want a simple ceremony. What happens when their visions clash?

BUDGETING IS the single biggest problem, wedding consultants say.

"A wedding is essentially an exercise in narcissism," psychologist Bettie Banks said. "If the bride was raised to think that her wedding day was the day when she was star of the show, there are going to be some problems."

Unrealistic expectations coupled with an all-too-real budget can cause tremendous tension. The cost of the average wedding is rising with the median age of first-time brides. Nationally, a wedding with a reception for 191 guests costs $13,021, according to Millie Martini Bratten, associate editor of Bride's magazine.

The median age of first-time brides is rising; it's now 23.6 years, compared with 20.8 years in 1970.

If the bride has been on her own for a while or this wedding is her second, the parents may be reluctant to pick up the tab. Other problems can arise when the bride is spending more than her family can afford.

"It's very touchy having to discuss money," said wedding consultant Jeanne Goldie. "But a lot of it comes down to serious financial discussion. The hardest thing is having to come up with that kind of money in such a short time."

For LaTeisha Riley Powell, 25, and her mother, Sarah Carter, budgeting was a key concern. In the nine months they spent planning the May 26 event, Ms. Powell and her mother perused the sale racks and looked for the best prices on a variety of wedding-related items.

"When you're planning a wedding, you tend to want everything to be perfect," Ms. Powell said. "But we really had to curtail our spending. She was the one to say, 'Did you check for anything less expensive?' "

MS. POWELL and her mother worked together to find creative ways to spend less. For example, Ms. Carter made gifts for out-of-town guests by buying well-priced items during the year and then, with her daughter, wrapping small baskets herself.

Here are some other common "tension traps" brides encounter, according to the experts, and some suggestions for handling them.

■ Heirloom clothing. "Mom's dress" can cause strife. The style may be unbecoming or the dress may not fit, but how can a daughter refuse her mother's offer?

"With any of these sentimental hand-me-downs, the bride has to do a lot of negotiating," Ms. Goldie said. "She needs to say what she'll accept and what she won't — without hurting anyone's feelings."

A solution: Use lace from the old garment to make a garter or a veil. Look for ways to combine "something old, something new."

■ Etiquette. One Atlanta bride wore a floor-length gown and traditional veil — while walking down the aisle in a pair of ruby red sequined slippers. Black and white weddings have also become popular among the younger set. Wedding consultants say most mothers still cleave to Emily Post and pastels.

Solution: Compromise is the key. Decide what's most important. Stick to that. Bend on other things.

■ GUEST LISTS. These pose problems when a bride feels she doesn't know the people invited to her wedding. If finances mean the guest list is limited to 100 people, who should come? As Ms. Goldie explained, "If the parents are footing the bill, they often want to invite their friends."

Solutions: Keep the lines of communication open. Grooms often get left out of mother-daughter discussions of who's coming. Set priorities before you plan and respect differing opinions.

■ Religious traditions. What happens when the bride and groom practice different faiths? Or when the bride and groom want to write their own vows?

Solutions: Using two officiators at the ceremony may satisfy both families. Also, look for an impartial outsider, often a member of the clergy, who could bring the two sides together.

Of course, brides and their mothers are apt to find other reasons to bicker — even when the point of dispute is small. One Atlanta bride wanted a chocolate cake, while her mother was adamant about traditional white. They reached a compromise on a white chocolate cake with white chocolate icing.

But psychologists say small details often serve as grounding points for much bigger issues.

In fact, the tensions that surround wedding planning arise as mothers and daughters cope with big changes in their relationship. Symbolically, at least, a wedding means a young woman is leaving the family nest.

"A WEDDING is really a rite of passage into adulthood," said Victoria Secunda, author of "When You and Your Mother Can't Be Friends: Resolving the Most Complicated Relationship of Your Life."

"Weddings are a wonderful opportunity because the daughter is becoming the mother's social peer," she said. "And even with all the highly charged emotions, planning for a wedding is a really great chance to heal a lot of old wounds."

Planning a wedding acts as a stage for playing out the anxieties that surround the marriage itself, explained Dr. Scheller-Gilkey.

"These fights that occur are part of working things out," she said. "Maybe they don't care what color the cake is. Maybe they just need to fight it out to increase their sense of separation. And that's normal."

Mid-life should be occasion for 'shower'

By Bill Tammeus
N.Y. Times News Service

For the past several years my wife and I have bought gifts for people to be honored at several kinds of showers — baby and engagement being the most common.

And we were happy to do that, too, because these events serve a useful purpose (unlike, say, the office of lieutenant governor).

Couples-to-be, after all, do need three or four sterling silver candle snuffers. I know I was grateful to get that many mumble-mumble years ago. It saved us money when we had to get a shower gift for someone else.

But now that I've reached a certain middling age (too old to-read small type but too young to agree to bifocals) I am persuaded that a Midlife Shower is exactly what people my age need.

For it's now that most of the stuff we own has given out, worn out, burned out or been thrown out. And at the most inconvenient time, too — just when our children have become money vacuums, sucking up thousands of dollars for everything from high-tech braces to low-tech college and from used cars to designer-logo headphones guaranteed to block out parental voices and other annoyances.

AS ADULTS, meanwhile, we 40-something folks are stuck with our late '60s hi-fi sound systems featuring 8-track tape players that still bleat out "Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Gospel String Ensemble Avec Moog Synthesizer" and "Johnny Mathis Sings Squishy Love Songs an Octave Above Any Note Petula Clark Ever Hit."

Our carpets are worn, our sofas sag and our mattresses are even lumpier than the people who sleep on them.

Our 12-piece place settings are down to 6.5 and our drinking glasses match the neighbors' set, only because the neighbors buy the same kind of jelly we do. Our pots and pans resemble the collection Johnny Appleseed toted around the country with him. Manufacturers haven't made parts for our small appliances since Richard Nixon was using 2 Live Crew language in the Oval Office.

People of this certain age own not a single item still under warranty. I, for instance, have neckties older than my children, who hardly live here any more.

We can't find our pencil sharpeners. Our knives are dull and mismatched. Our placemats are surviving shreds from some previous life when screaming day-glow peach was a color. Our sheets look like paint drop cloths.

It gets worse. Our electric razors have had heart transplants. Each of our clocks has at least one hand that sticks. Our tape measures have simply vanished along with the only decent hammer we ever owned. And our underwear is mostly of the bell-bottom variety.

CLEARLY WE need a Midlife Shower.

When young lovers are starting out, they really don't need all the stuff they get at a shower to make them happy. They can live blissfully on little or nothing for several years. Why, it usually takes months just to hit the credit limit on their MasterCards.

It's only when your ice cube trays have leaked for three years and your bread box has gray hair that you can appreciate how nice it would be to have a house full of new junk.

Imagine drinking from coffee cups that began their lives after — not before — decaf came on the market.

Think of owning cable-ready TV trays instead of the old black and white variety. And what a thrill it would be to have something more mature than a Jefferson Airplane psychedelic ash tray.

What age should someone be to get a Midlife Shower? About halfway between marriage and retirement, I think. If I had to narrow it, I'd say age 45. Or, even more precisely, 45 years and 8 months.

With enough notice, I probably could be free a week from Saturday.

DEAR ABBY

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: I am still steamed about something that happened in our city a few months ago. A 13-year-old kid stole a car, and while the police were chasing him, he plowed into another vehicle, killing three innocent people. This "child" was going 80 miles an hour, after midnight!

Van Buren

His name was not released because, evidently, there's some kind of law that prevents newspapers from publishing the names of juveniles who commit such crimes. Why they deserve to be protected is beyond me.

It later came out that this 13-year-old "child" had a record of eight felony charges, including three auto theft complaints in the last two years!

Abby, you have more clout than all the senators and representatives put together, so please print this and demand some reforms. — OUTRAGED IN TULSA

DEAR OUTRAGED: I, too, am outraged. I agree, a person with this kind of record should not be protected by a cloak of privacy. Perhaps the law should provide privacy for a juvenile's first offense. But after that, "children" who are big enough to commit adult crimes should be made to face the music, publicly ... the same as adults.

DEAR ABBY: I have worked in an office for the last 14 years, and a great deal of time has been spent answering phones and taking messages.

My biggest complaint is this: When people call and ask to talk to the boss, and I tell them that he's on the phone or tied up in a meeting, they always ask, "Do you know when he'll be free?" When I say, "I'm not sure; may I take a message?" I am invariably asked, "How long do you think he'll be?"

Abby, how do I know? It can be anywhere from 30 seconds to three hours — or longer.

Please inform your readers never to ask that stupid question, "How long do you think he will be?" — NO MIND READER IN MASSACHUSETTS

DEAR NO MIND READER: You unwittingly provided this excellent answer to that "stupid" question: "It can be anywhere from 30 seconds to three hours — or longer."

DEAR ABBY: The letter about the woman who left her dentures in the lingerie department of a store in Hoquiam, Wash., reminded me of the following incident:

Many years ago, I attended a dental convention in Las Vegas. It was around midnight, and I was doing a little light gambling at the craps table in one of the big hotels. The stickman passed the dice to the next shooter, who happened to be my associate's wife. As she received the dice, she sneezed — and her upper denture flew out of her mouth and landed on the craps table!

The quick-thinking stickman immediately removed HIS upper denture, placed it next to the shooter's denture on the table, and said, "Shoot, honey — you're covered!"

Everyone howled with laughter — even the losers. — LARRY BERNARD (RETIRED DENTIST), PORTLAND, ORE.

DEAR LARRY: Thanks for a wonderful day-brightener.

Recruits do battle against blubber

By Jim Michaels
Copley News Service

Robert Goodbred is hanging on the pull-up bar sweating. If he can bring his chin over the bar even once, he is on his way to being a Marine. If he fails, back he goes into boot-camp purgatory — the physical-conditioning platoon.

But after 45 days in the remedial outfit, Goodbred still cannot do a chin-up. What he lacks in strength, he makes up in spirit.

"I'll get it next week," he said shortly after failing again.

Goodbred, 18, a 198-pounder and 6 feet tall, is not alone. The military has one of the smartest, most disciplined forces in years. But recently the military has been faced with a problem that the services only now are coming to grips with: how to deal with a generation of couch potatoes.

Both the Navy and Marine Corps have recently instituted new programs in an attempt to stem the fitness problem and reduce attrition due to poor conditioning.

Even leaders in the Marine Corps, traditionally the most fit of the services, say they are seeing more overweight and under-strength recruits than ever before.

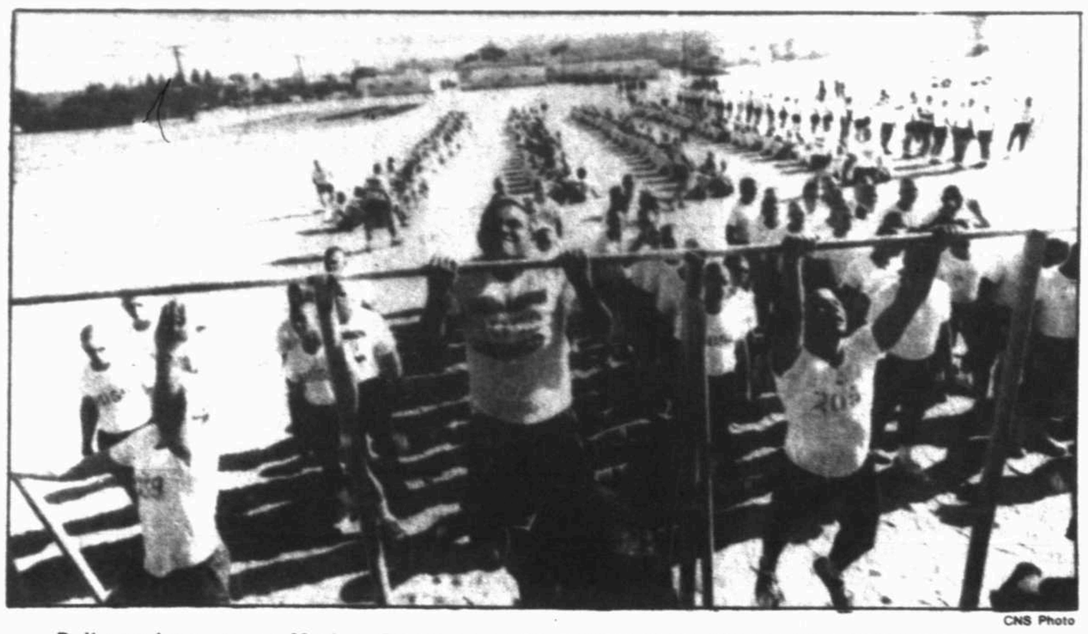

"How much worse are they?" asks Marine Lt. Col. William W. Kastner. "They're pretty bad. You ask them, 'How did you get so fat?' They say, 'Sir, I was a couch potato.'"

"They are coming in fatter," agrees Cmdr. Cory Whitehead, executive officer of the Naval Training Center, a Navy boot camp.

OFFICIALS AT the Marine recruit depot in San Diego, one of two Marine Corps boot camps, say that an average of 14 percent of the new recruits fail a basic strength test. To pass, a recruit must do a minimum of two pull-ups and 45 sit-ups and complete a one-and-a-half-mile run in 13½ minutes or less, a rate that amounts to little more than a trot.

In one platoon that recently took the test, eight recruits could not do even one pull-up.

"It's been very common that we've had between a 30- and 60-pound loss" for recruits during the three months of Marine boot camp, said Col. Bill Symolon, commander of the recruit-training regiment at the depot.

CNS Photo

At the Naval Training Center, an average of 20 percent of new recruits fail a test that requires a minimum of 25 sit-ups, 24 push-ups and a one-mile run in nine minutes or less. Out of an 80-man company, an average of six will have a body-fat percentage of more than 22 percent. A desirable body-fat percentage for a man is 18 percent or less, according to health experts.

With almost all recruits entering the service with high school diplomas, the services have come a long way from the post-Vietnam era, when some troops were functionally illiterate and disciplinary and racial problems were rampant. The military is now turning its attention to blubber.

BOTH THE NAVY and Marine Corps recently instituted programs they hope will help trainees overcome their fitness problems and prevent them from dropping out of training. Military officials say they lose some potentially good sailors and Marines because they are out of shape and cannot complete basic training.

"We cannot afford to (discharge) a sharp individual just because he was over-body-fat," said Senior Chief Petty Officer Tim Tooker, who is in charge of physical conditioning at the Navy's San Diego boot camp. "The problem is how do you keep him."

In June the Navy began addressing that problem through a program under which those recruits who are still more than 25 percent body fat, which the Navy considers obese, will be kept at the training center for an additional two weeks after recruit training in an attempt to shed the extra fat.

The Marine Corps, which has traditionally placed overweight Marines in a special physical-conditioning platoon, has begun to allow more unfit Marines to stay in regular outfits in the hopes their colleagues will provide the needed inspiration.

Kastner, a leathery battalion commander at the recruit depot, has been at the forefront of the new program. He said that keeping out-of-shape recruits with peers has cut down on attrition.

"THE STRONG help the weak," Kastner explains. Kastner said he places only serious fitness cases in the special physical-conditioning platoon, which can be like a treadmill, he said. The remainder stay with the normal training, receiving encouragement from their more physically fit peers.

Military officials blame the fitness problem on a sedentary society that pays only lip service to physical fitness. While the affluent may be running marathons and triathlons, the working class, which makes up the bulk of the enlisted troops, is watching too much television and playing too many video games.

Says Kastner: "We've got to take what America gives us. Our job is to make Marines."

At least that job is not as difficult as it was in the 1970s, when drill instructors went up against poorly disciplined troops, lacking in education and often with criminal records, who did not want to be in boot camp.

Unlike the problems of the past — drugs, racism and discipline problems — the couch-potato phenomenon is correctable — often within the duration of boot camp.

"All we're trying to do is energize these kids," said Symolon. "We're not trying to crack through a belligerent shell."

Edward Davis, 19, passed the initial strength test after spending more than a month in the physical-conditioning platoon. At 195 pounds, the 6-footer lost 70 pounds since joining the Marine Corps.

Deciding to enter the Marine Corps focused his energies and gave him something to work for.

"The biggest problem I had was in my mind," Davis said. "The only thing that changed is my desire."

Top reasons to be grumpy make list

By David Grimes
N.Y. Times News Service

Nothing makes me more miserable than people who are eternally cheerful.

So you can imagine the suicidal funk I was in after flipping through Barbara Ann Kipfer's new book, "14,000 things to be happy about" (Workman Publishing, $6.95). (Yes, the title's all lower case. Isn't that precious?)

You get the impression that you could sneak up behind Ms. Kipfer and smack her over the head with a board and she'd be happy about it.

I mean, if Ms. Kipfer wants to tell the world that she's happy about fuzzy slippers and ponies and sunsets and fresh-brewed coffee, that's fine. But when you've got 612 pages to fill with no paragraphs or punctuation, you're bound to get onto some shaky ground. At various points in her list, Ms. Kipfer claims that she is happy about:

- Generalissimos
- Reno divorces
- Dust
- Answering the phone with, "Joe's Pool Hall. Who in the hall do you want?"
- Anesthesia
- Bad dining hall food
- Leeks
- The realities of marriage
- Atrocious prices of movie eats

Call me a cynical guy, but am I missing something here?

When I get old, am I going to get all misty-eyed over the memory of stale, greasy, $4-a-bucket movie popcorn?

Can divorce make one's heart grow fonder? Do I need a new allergy to cheer me up?

No, I think what's happened here is that Ms. Kipfer has confused the things that she's happy about with the things that make her want to pick up a rock. She needs to write a new book and title it "14,000 Things to Be Grumpy About." (Note the capital letters). I've even come up with some suggestions of my own to help her get started:

- Cars that make a funny noise the day after you spent $300 getting the funny noise fixed
- Having to drive home from the beach in a wet, sandy bathing suit because there are no public bathhouses to change in anymore because of all the thieves and perverts
- Watches that say they're "water resistant," but aren't
- VCR operating instructions
- The first baseball announcer to describe a pitcher as having "good velocity and location"
- Real estate ads that describe a $150,000 home as "affordable housing"
- Ted Koppel's hair
- Checking account fees
- The Simpsons
- $250 electric bills
- The guk that forms at the top of ketchup bottles
- Garfield
- Plastic grocery sacks
- People who won't "gimme" a two-foot putt
- Missing a two-foot putt
- Waiting in line 1½ hours for a six-minute ride at Disney World

'Bird's eye' wooden

ATLANTA (AP) — When is a bird's-eye not a bird's eye? When it's formed on the surface of wood.

Common in sugar maples, wood with bird's-eye is used for decorative purposes in furniture and paneling.

TRAVEL

Northern Michigan offers rugged coastal escape

By Joseph Treml
Copley News Service

MUNISING, Mich. — Take a trip north — way north — until you run out of roadway and have to park alongside what the natives like to call America's North Coast.

Though most travelers invade this beautiful, and often desolate, Upper Peninsula countryside in the summer, anytime of year will do.

Most Michiganders know this Lake Superior shoreline, this Alger and Marquette County territory, to one extent or another. Many treasure it as a well-kept secret.

A seven-hour drive from Chicago, due north from Lake Michigan's shores at Escanaba, will land you in the middle of Hiawatha National Forest. From here, you can almost smell the coast.

Hiking, fishing and picnicking abound, and sightings of deer are as commonplace as the natural wonders.

For about $40 a night, you can buy a pleasant stay at the Timber Ridge Lodge, a new nine-cabin motel hidden on the side of a hill — and found only by close watching, being careful not to miss a couple of signs at the edge of dirt roads. About 10 miles southwest of Munising, the lodge sits deep in the woods over Hovey Lake.

A stone's throw away is the Buckhorn, an old, rugged-looking motel and restaurant that is a fixture in Hiawatha.

Timber Ridge's proprietors are still putting the finishing touches on their cabins, which are complete with kitchen facilities and small, wooden decks to the rear of each room.

THE SECLUSION is grand here in the off-tourist season, but even in summer, with many families rolling in, it is impossible to feel cramped.

Hiawatha National Forest is divided into two sections, an eastern forest that stretches between St. Ignace and Sault Ste. Marie and the 800,000-acre forest south of Munising.

The latter forest is only rarely interrupted by lodges, restaurants and houses privately owned before the federal government obtained the land in 1933.

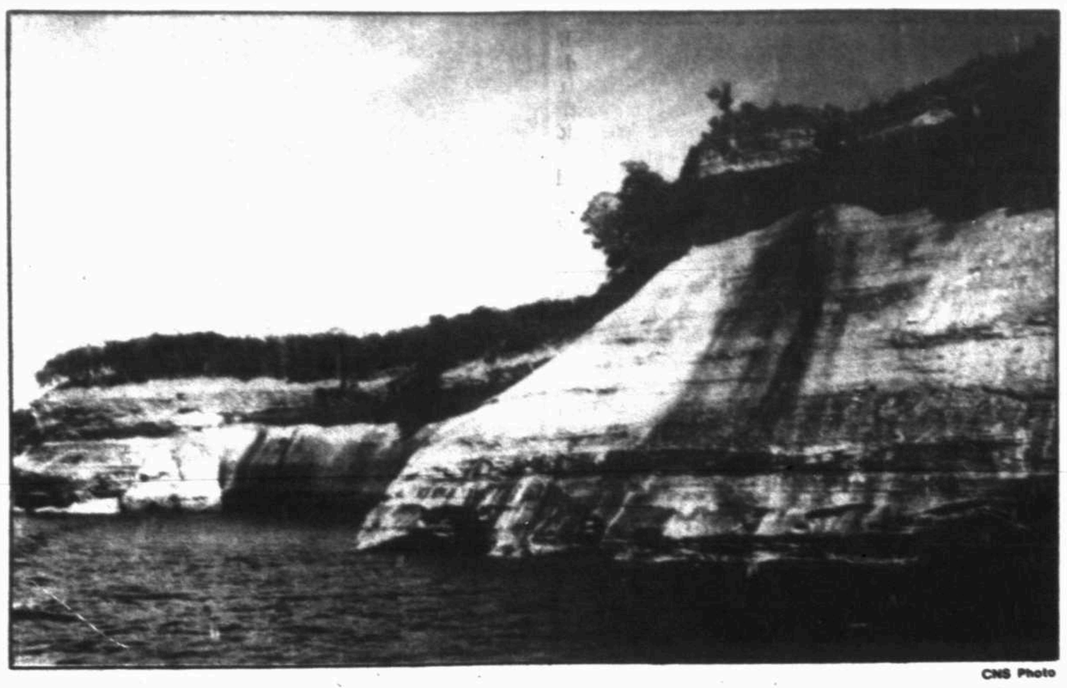

"There are no established activities in the forest, it's more adventurous," said Julie Fofbender, information assistant at the forest visitors center.

"You can do whatever you want, whenever you want ... hike, fish, swim, pick berries. You can still get away from it all in the forest."

Camping is big in Hiawatha, Fofbender said, and with so much acreage and sites the campgrounds are never full.

Pictured Rocks National Lakeshore on Lake Superior in Northern Michigan offers visitors a series of colored cliffs and rock formations.

ALGER, MUNISING and Wagner falls are the most familiar, particularly Munising, whose 60-foot steep flow shoots down from the tree tops. The water is reddish from copper deposits and tannic acid produced by decaying vegetation.

Alger Falls is wide and rolls gently westward off a hilltop near Route 28, leading into town. Wagner Falls is set back from the highway and winds scenically through trees and brush.

Exploring the rich maritime and logging history of the North Coast is interesting. The Grand Marais Historical Museum and Pictured Rocks Maritime Museum are nice stops for those who covet the history of the shoreline.

MARQUETTE, largest city in the Upper Peninsula, is a bit more civilized. Attractions in this college town, home to Northern Michigan University, include immense iron-ore freighters that arrive and depart from the north docks downtown on a regular basis.

Seven million tons of ore are still shipped each year from the aged docks.

And as you wind your way north toward Big Bay, catching glimpses of deep blue Superior between the pines, you will begin to understand why residents, like the Indians and fur traders before them, cherish the simplicity of America's North Coast.

Legend of ghosts lurks in haunted lighthouse

By Joseph Treml
Copley News Service

BIG BAY POINTE, Mich. — When we approached the orange-brick building and saw a scribbled note inviting us to enter the 94-year-old haunted lighthouse and make ourselves at home, I knew we had an unusual night in store on Lake Superior's shores.

Big Bay Pointe Lighthouse, 30 miles north of Marquette and just east of the tiny town of Big Bay, is accessible only by a winding, copper-soiled road.

The stretch on the way to the lake cuts through dense woods and is dotted only by a few setback houses whose residents parade their names in a folksy manner beside their driveways. It dead-ends at what is believed to be the only lighthouse serving as a "bed and breakfast" in the United States.

It is certainly the only one of its kind in the Great Lakes state, and that fact caught my fancy.

There are more than 100 lighthouses on Michigan's shoreline, but this is the only one where I could spend a night on my honeymoon. More fearful of specters than fascinated by them, I suspected this would be an interesting stay.

Through a private gate, which the lake winds appear to have blown open, is the lighthouse, perched up the road on a rocky cliff. For a moment you envision the mansion that Alfred Hitchcock's Norman Bates frolicked in — but only for a moment.

INSIDE, THE lighthouse seems more congenial. My wife and I wondered, however: Why are we the only people (as far as we can tell) who are fortunate enough to be here?

It was cute, quaint; the kind of place a new wife loves. Consider: rich wood and stylish architecture in each room; a large, romantic fireplace in the living room; and all the stitchery, animal sculptures, carvings and gifts (for decoration or sale) that Upper Peninsula locals can produce.

Most people in this thick neck of the woods, where jobs are hard to come by, are of amazingly simple means. When they are not driving a logging truck or tapping maple trees for syrup, they delve into a hobby.

And every artifact they ever made ends up on the first floor of this lighthouse.

But from a previous conversation I knew that the 62-year-old former schoolteacher and real-estate agent had purchased this state historical landmark five years ago and converted it to its present use.

"He makes the walls creak and the wind howl at night," Gotschall told me gleefully. "You can hear him wailing. I even blame the whistle in the coffee pot in the morning on Pryor."

Government regulations, historians explain, required Pryor to run to the foghorn house down the hill from the lighthouse every time a ship or boat passed by and sounded its whistle.

In less than ideal weather, ships' captains needed a return whistle to help them take accurate bearings on their ship's location relative to the shore.

At all hours, Pryor had to run down to the foghorn house to build a fire and work up enough steam to sound the whistle. I could just see Pryor moaning and cursing each time a vessel went by blowing its whistle.

And now I'm staying the night with this guy's ghost, who is probably still hacked off 90 years later.

Gotschall insists, however (and some guests have confirmed), that the ghost is of good nature. There is no record of his causing any heart attacks — or driving guests out.

THE SPIRIT is said to be very orderly and has been credited with straightening out books, turning off lights and closing doors in the lighthouse.

Gotschall says these deeds, as well as a report of the cellar shower running late at night, are unexplained.

My wife, curious, led the way up to the top of the lighthouse tower. Higher and higher we climbed on narrow, creaky, steel steps and past porthole-size windows.

We flung open a hatch to get to the lighthouse terrace, where the foghorn once blew and a beacon flashed. The Chippewa Indians called this big lake Gitche Gumee; most visitors today would utter a similar awe-inspiring phrase upon first viewing this sealike body of water from our vantage point.

Lake Superior commands the utmost in respect as its winds blow across this terrace. The entire grand Upper Peninsula terrain is at your feet. Perhaps the hundreds of acres of thick woods in the lighthouse's back yard have something to do with the feeling ...

Chilled but content, I knew that not even a malevolent ghost would intrude on us at this moment.

LATER, WE drove back into Big Bay and had dinner. We opted to eat at the Thunder Bay Inn where shooting pool, listening to country music from the jukebox and inexpensive food and drink are a way of life.

Big Bay residents still boast about the Lumberjack Tavern, a little bar at the south end of town. In 1958, the movie "Anatomy of a Murder," starring Jimmy Stewart, was filmed in and around the tavern.

The room boasts a cathedral ceiling, exposed brick walls, two double beds, a private bath and a splendid view of the north shore and dimming daylight beyond the mountains.

Despite our apprehensions, the ambience of the lighthouse was marvelous. A warm fire, music, popcorn and a glass of champagne made the evening.

Yet at one point I thought I glimpsed, staring in through the kitchen window, the faint outline of a man in a captain's hat. Then he was gone.

We don't believe in ghosts, of course. Still, we slept in front of the fireplace after that, and we left a couple of lights on. Just for good measure.

Working ranch welcomes cowboys

By Jack Reber
Copley News Service

A young boy's dream of becoming a cowboy dies hard.

Oh, it may get pushed to the background in the course of growing up, as school, marriage, children and career rearrange priorities, but the urge to saddle ol' Paint and round up some dogies is always there.

A great place to live out that fantasy is the Hunewill Ranch, near Bridgeport, Calif., in the eastern Sierra.

There are those who sit tall in the saddle, those who sit wide in the saddle and those who know the saddle only as the thing that keeps thumping your Levi's with a rhythmic tattoo as your horse lopes through fields dotted by wildflowers.

The Hunewill Ranch has no tennis courts, Jacuzzis, TV sets or telephones. This is a working cattle ranch, a real home on the range, and the emphasis is on riding horses.

Guests check into their cabins on Saturday, and for the next six days they spend a minimum of four hours a day in the saddle.

Riders are divided into three groups. The experts are called on to help move herds of Herefords from pasture to pasture, but when the work is done they enjoy long lopes over the ranch's 5,000 acres. Intermediate riders walk, trot and lope their horses, but the pace is easier.

THE THIRD group, called the buckaroos, doesn't advance to loping until the end of the week. This is the group for younger children and adults who don't crave thrills.

Riders are free to switch groups at any time, and the buckaroo group sometimes is the largest, particularly on those days when they're riding out to a stream for a swim or going on a splash ride, a series of mad dashes through a shallow pond that leaves everyone dripping and laughing.

There is no level trail on this route; in fact, there's no trail at all in many places as the horses pick their way up and down steep slopes.

The destination on our trip was a place called Frog Pond, a murky bit of stagnant water on a high mountain meadow. No one saw any frogs, but there were no complaints. Everyone was too tired and hungry after the grueling climb from the ranch.

Lunch was delicious, except for the apples, brown and battered after almost four hours of bouncing around in a saddlebag. We riders felt a bit like those apples.

The high point of the day came just before we began the return descent.

FROM A MOUNTAIN outlook, we could see all Bridgeport Valley, itself more than 6,000 feet above sea level, far, far below.

The Hunewill pastures stretched out before us. To the east, we could see the rooftops of Bridgeport, and, beyond that, the shimmering surface of Bridgeport Reservoir.

It's the beautiful setting that makes the riding so enjoyable. We visited in June, and the mountains rising from the ranch's back pasture still had snowy tops.

The pastures are irrigated by flooding, and you encounter water on every ride, whether it's in flooded fields, irrigation ditches or a rushing stream with water up to the horse's' belly.

The pastures were wet and green in June, and they were dotted with clumps of wild iris, like thousands of blue bouquets arranged on a giant green tablecloth.

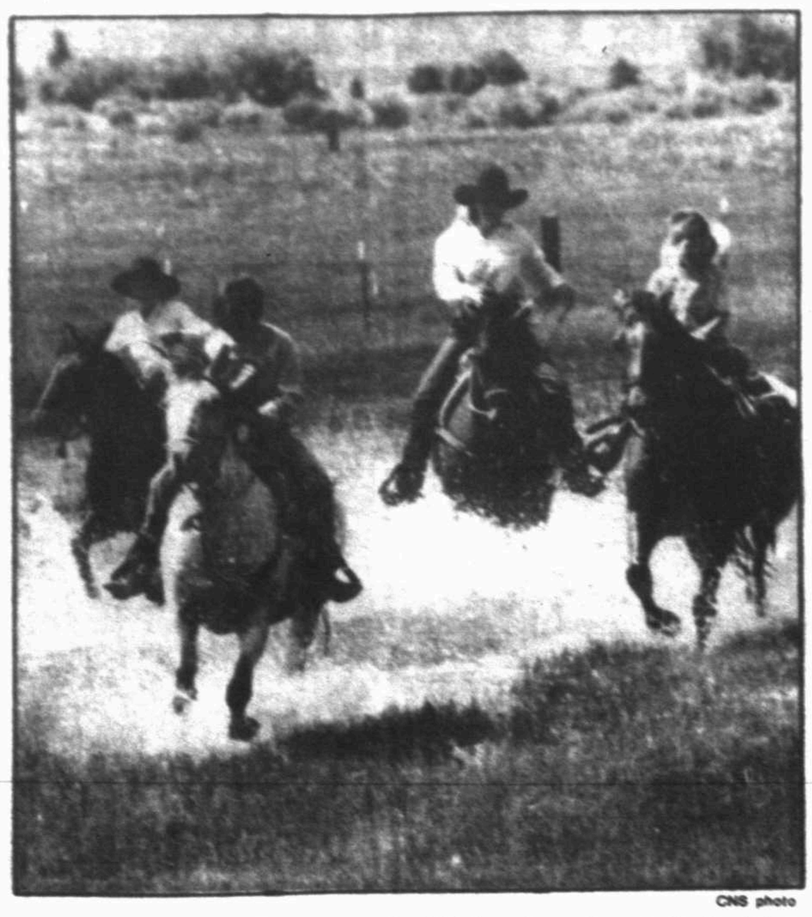

Riders wend through herds of cattle, keeping eyes open for wildlife. We saw deer, a coyote and marmots, and a mamma owl and her 6-week-old youngsters were roosting in the giant Lombardy poplars outside the ranch's dining room.

The dining room is a popular place with humans, too. The giant dinner bell sounds the wake-up call at 7 a.m. The next time it sounds, breakfast is served.

THE FOOD is plentiful and varied, and even finicky eaters find their appetites at the Hunewills' table. Dinner might feature fish, chicken or roast beef. Cookouts feature hamburgers and ribs barbecued beside a 25-foot-wide stream that roars as it pounds over rocks and fallen trees, almost drowning out the shouts of the children playing alongside it.

Friendships are forged quickly in this setting. The youngest guests find company with children of ranch employees, and the teen-agers will get up a game of volleyball that continues long after darkness has made keeping score pointless.

CNS photo

The Hunewill Ranch is strong on history. Napoleon Bonaparte Hunewill sailed around Cape Horn to join the great California gold rush in 1849.

He wound up here, near the northeastern corner of Yosemite, supplying lumber and firewood to miners at the boomtown of Bodie.

Guests are free to wander anywhere they like on the ranch, and it doesn't take long to discover there are antiques at every turn.

The dilapidated workshop, for instance, is one of the original buildings. One side is filled with modern power tools, in use the day I visited by workers building a new chuck wagon.

On the other side of the giant room are relics of the ranch's early days. My favorite was the blacksmith's station with the giant bellows, about 8 feet from tip to tip.

LENORE HUNEWILL is the matriarch of the 10 family members who work at the ranch. Her son, Stan, manages the livestock operation, which includes Hereford cattle, Morgan horses and a few llamas, sheep and pigs.

Stan is Napoleon Bonaparte Hunewill's great-grandson.

Most of the guests were repeat visitors, and by the second day they were being asked by curious first-timers to explain how each of the Hunewills is related to the others.

It wasn't nosiness so much as that there is a strong family here and that the guests — for a week — feel like part of that family. This is the country home that is part of every American's heritage.

So, please, don't call it a dude ranch. The Hunewill experience is much more than that.

Armchair travelers boosts book sales

By Edwin McDowell
N.Y. Times News Service

The travel industry is suffering from its worst summer in more than a decade, but travel books are enjoying a banner season.

In bookstores from New York to Newport Beach, Calif., guidebooks, maps, bilingual dictionaries, language tapes and books for armchair travelers are taking up the slack created by sluggish sales of other books.

No overall figures exist on either the total sales of travel books or the number published each year, but booksellers nationwide estimated that sales and titles have grown by as much as 30 percent in each of the last few years.

As a result, many booksellers are expanding travel sections, and bookstores devoted exclusively to travel books are no longer a novelty. Doubleday Book Shops, for example, just opened a new Travel Days bookstore in Denver this weekend, its third all-travel store within a year.

"Our travel book sales are way up," said Robert E. Grindle, senior buyer for the 41 Doubleday Book Shops. "People might not be planning to travel to Kuwait, but they're still buying travel books."

Even when there were terrorist scares in the past, with corresponding drops in foreign travel and sales of foreign travel books, the slack was taken up by increased sales of books about domestic travel, Grindle said.

Con Erickson, a spokesman for Rand McNally in Skokie, Ill., said this year has been one of the best at its travel bookstores.

"People may be cutting back on their travel plans," he said, "but those who are traveling are buying books to tell them how to get the best value, or maybe where to go next year."

It is still possible to buy the umpteenth guidebook on New York, Hawaii and Disneyland, but now there are guides to Indian reservations, as well as books for black travelers, the elderly and women traveling alone.

Prentice Hall, with an extensive list of travel book titles, appears to be the industry leader, but relatively small houses like Hunter Publishing also publish numerous travel books. Hippocrene Books publishes guides to more than 25 states and 60 countries.

Powell's Travel Store in Portland, Ore. sells many books about the Pacific Northwest.

"We also sell a lot of books about visiting Tonga and the Solomon Islands," said Bill McRae, the store manager. But he and other booksellers report that sales of guidebooks about China have plummeted since Beijing cracked down on democracy protesters last year.

Advertising in B&I pays off in two days

"As a new business, we have tried several different means of advertising, including radio. Nothing else seems to give us the response that advertising in the Midland Reporter-Telegram does. What has really given us the best response is our contract for articles and photos on the Tuesday Business and Industry pages.

Our first story generated 14 leads in just two days! That's pretty phenomenal in the very competitive home improvement industry. We expect to advertise on the Business and Industry pages indefinitely."

Neil Letkeman, owner Lifetime Siding
and Window Co.

No More Identity Crisis!
Area businesses from A to Z have known for years that advertising in the Business and Industry pages every Tuesday is a smart move. These well-read pages offer a unique format which combines feature articles, photographs and consistent display advertising. Your business is "in the news" and the rest is up to you!

Department offering variety of health services

Staff Report

Personal Health Services of the Midland City/County Health Department:

Pre-natal Clinic

The patients admitted to our clinic are given initial assessments and periodic follow-up visits by our physician and certified nurse midwives from Midland Memorial Hospital. Patients accepted by application only. Applicants are screened on Wednesdays at 1 p.m. and Fridays at 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. The clinic fee is $100.

Well-Child Clinic

Children of mothers from the pre-natal clinic, or any child referred by a physician, are seen weekly by the nurses for weight checks, counseling, education, etc., until two months of age. The children then visit our clinic at intervals of two months, four months, six months, one year and fifteen months for developmental assessment. The fee is $5 per visit. By appointment only.

Immunization Clinic

Mondays from 8 to 11 a.m. and 1 to 4 p.m. Included are vaccinations for pertussis, rubella, measles, tetanus, diphtheria, polio and mumps. The fee is $10, $12.50 for the month of August.

Tuberculosis Clinic

Clinic visits by appointment only. The TB skin test is $3. The TB clinic is $5 per visit.

Sexually Transmitted Disease Clinic

Monday through Friday 8 to 10 a.m. and 1 to 3 p.m. Testing is handled through our laboratory and medications are dispensed for persons having positive test results. The fee is $10, which includes a follow-up exam.

The Midland Health Department works closely with TDH concerning AIDS surveillance and offers HRIG III testing upon request.

Pregnancy Tests

Mondays and Wednesday only 8 to 10 a.m. Patients must have come to the Health Department prior to the test day for instruction and a sample container. Fee is $5.

ENVIRONMENTAL SERVICES

Health Permits

All food establishments in Midland County must have a current, valid permit to operate. Permits are renewed annually.

Businesses operating less than fourteen days, such as carnivals, fairs, etc., are issued temporary health permits.

Those mobile vendors who are selling fruit, snow cones, etc., must also have a permit.

Swimming Pool Permits

All public and semi-public swimming pools are permitted and inspected. Pool permits are $35.

Areas such as safe drinking water, private sewage disposal, food hygiene, swimming pool maintenance, citizen complaints, mosquito and fly control are some responsibilities of the environmental division.

Laboratory Services

Midland Health Department's lab serves 17 counties. Lab services performed in the region are: bacteria sampling from private, public and municipal water systems, venereal disease screening and functions for the pre-natal and well child clinics. Water samples are accepted for analysis Monday through Wednesday, 8 a.m. to noon and 1 to 3 p.m. The fee is $8 per sample.

MMH celebrating 40th year of service

Staff Report

Currently celebrating its 40th year of service in the Permian Basin, Midland Memorial Hospital has continued to improve and expand since the 75-bed hospital opened in 1950. Today, Midland Memorial is licensed for 272 beds, houses over 50 various departments and serves the community with a wide variety of high quality in- and outpatient services.

The Abell-Hanger Medical Pavilion, located one block south of the Hospital, was completed in September 1989 and quickly became home to several new outpatient services.

The Occupational and Physical Therapy Center provides outpatient therapy and rehabilitation for work-related injuries, while the Urgent Care Center offers treatment for minor emergencies and illnesses on a walk-in basis.

The Magnetic Resonance Imaging Center, a 3.5 tesla MRI, which is owned by a group of investor physicians, provides a state-of-the-art, non-invasive diagnostic tool to area physicians. The West Texas Pathology Laboratory, a regional medical lab, Smokenders®, a smoking cessation program, and Optifast®, a medically supervised weight loss program, are also located in the new Pavilion.

After years of planning and preparation, Midland Memorial Heart Care Program also opened in late 1989. Providing a complete range of surgical and non-surgical procedures, including bypass, valve replacement and arterial graft, balloon angioplasty and cardiac catheterization, the Heart Care Program offers Permian Basin residents the most advanced cardiac treatment right at home.

Supported by a highly skilled team of professionals and the latest equipment, the Heart Care Program recently announced the successful completion of its 100th heart procedure.

In May 1990, Allison Cancer Center began its 10th year of operation as a crucial part of the Midland Memorial program. In addition to providing the latest chemotherapy and radiation treatments, the Allison Cancer Center offers emotional support and guidance for its patients.

A variety of groups such as Candlelighters and I Can Cope provide a forum for discussion for patients and their families, while the Look Good, Feel Good Shop offers patients a comfortable atmosphere in which to address their special beauty needs.

Clearview Hospital, a free-standing chemical abuse and psychiatric care facility, was purchased by Midland Memorial Hospital in 1989. Clearview offers a family-oriented treatment program for individuals suffering from drug and/or alcohol addiction.

United Way funds many local agencies

Staff Report

Following are organizations that receive funds from the United Way of Midland.

■ The Midland-Lee Youth Centers, whose purpose is to provide a drug/alcohol-free center for the youth of the community. The centers, one located at Midland High School and the other at Lee High School, serve as an alternative to youth who need a place to go, instead of places that are illegal, physically and psychologically harmful and potentially dangerous.

The Youth Centers are open Monday through Friday for lunch, after school for free time and on weekends for dances, meetings and special events.

■ The Buffalo Trail Council, a voluntary association of citizens, includes representatives of organizations chartered by the Boy Scouts of Ame ica to promote scouting programs within 18 counties in West Texas.

Boy Scout programs and training opportunities are offered year-round. Programs are designed for boys first grade through high school and girls of high school age in citizenship, character development fitness and career development.

■ The Boys' and Girls' Clubs of Midland, established in 1964, meets the needs of youth from low income families on the south side of the city. The club's goal is to serve low-income, disadvantaged youth by providing leadership, character, health and career development programs while emphasizing social, cultural and educational growth.

The Clubs are open weekdays during the school year from 2:30-9 p.m. and from 9 a.m.-5p.m. Saturdays. During the summer months, the Clubs are open from 8 a.m.-5p.m. Monday through Friday.

■ The Midland Rape Crisis Center became operational in October 1979 after Midland police and sheriff showed an increase in the number of rape and sexual assault cases reported.

The Center has a 24-hour hotline, 682-RAPE, which is manned by trained volunteer counselors. The counselors are paraprofessionals with extensive training in counseling, medical, legal and law enforcement procedures.

■ The Palmer Drug Abuse Program (PDAP) offers a solution to adolescents and families who are willing to work to find alternatives to the conflicts, struggles and problems associated with chemical abuse.

PDAP provides community based outpatient adolescent substance abuse services for persons between the ages of 10 to 24 by means of intervention, assessment and individual and group support.

■ The Permian Basin Girl Scout Council, established in 1947, currently serves about 3,500 girls and 1,200 adult volunteers in 16 West Texas counties.

The purpose of the Council is to inspire girls with the highest ideals of character, conduct, patriotism and service so they may become happy and resourceful citizens.

Girl Scouts in the Permian Basin is open to all girls ages 5-17.

■ Community and Senior Services provides services in the areas of nutrition, health care, social isolation, limited mobility, teaching/counseling and other homebound/social programs.

Incorporated in 1982, CSS was organized as a result of First Christian Church outreach programs targeted towards the needs of the elderly.

Its objectives are met through such programs as Visiting Nurse Service, Elderly Nutrition Programs, Meals-on-Wheels, Weekend Share-a-Meal, Postal Alert, Midland Gold Product/Service Discount Program, Handyman, Grocery Express, Telephone Reassurance, Retirement and Pre-retirement teaching programs and Senior Center Operational Management Programming.

■ The American Red Cross has a mission to improve the quality of life, enhance self reliance and help people avoid, prepare for and cope with emergencies.

Over 500 volunteers locally assist Red Cross in providing armed forces assistance, disaster preparedness and relief assistance, health/public education and awareness, safety education, water safety education, chronic disease control and maternal and child health programs.

■ Family Services is a multi-purpose agency founded in 1953, which seeks to help families deal with the normal stresses of life. The agency's goal is to enable families, couples, and individuals to cope with their stresses through counseling/therapy.

Counseling and therapy classes are offered by Family Services as well as parenting classes through Parenting Anonymous.

■ Big Brothers/Big Sisters is an agency that serves single-parent children between the ages of 6-16. The program provides a child with a one-to-one relationship during the formative years. Volunteers spend two to three hours per week with a little brother or sister.

A Big Brother/Big Sister volunteer must go through a strict confidential screening process before he or she is matched with a child. Over 150 volunteers are utilized by Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Midland, helping to meet the needs of 350 children.

■ Casa de Amigos is an ecumenical Christian social services agency that is committed to improve the quality of life in Midland.

Casa strives to help people help themselves by assessing the human service needs of low-income families and by addressing those needs through a variety of programs, including planned activities for senior citizens, educational services for children and adults, diabetic services, glaucoma screening, podiatry screening, general health services, prenatal screening and referrals and dental services.

■ The Salvation Army is a religious and charitable organization founded nationally in 1865 and in Midland in 1949. One of its main goals is to assist persons in need.

Social services offered by the Salvation Army include family and individual counseling, financial assistance, prepared meals for the homeless, crisis intervention services, transient services, work therapy programs, day care services, disaster services and character building programs.

■ Midland Need to Read seeks to alleviate illiteracy in Midland County by pairing a trained volunteer tutor with an adult student who reads at or below the fifth grade level.

■ Petro-Plains Council of Camp Fire Inc. is a non-profit organization for girls and boys, kindergarten through high school. Emphasis is placed on small group interaction and quality relationships between the youth under the supervision of adult leadership.

■ The YMCA puts Christian principles into practice through programs that build a healthy body, mind and spirit.

■ Freewill Foster Home provides a foster home for abused, neglected, and hard-to-adopt children. A small, locally developed organization, the Freewill Foster Home confidentially locates the children and is in its second year of sponsorship by the United Way.

Chamber of Commerce focusing on diversification

Staff Report

The emphasis on economic diversification is gaining momentum at the Midland Chamber of Commerce. The chamber's Economic Development Division works with the city to keep Midland competitive in business recruiting.

The chamber's $2.3 million Forward Midland program and other industrial development efforts recently helped two California manufacturers relocate to the Midland Industrial Park.

These moves represent approximately 10 percent of all manufacturing relocations to the state in the first half of 1990, chamber officials said.

This information is used by companies considering relocation as well as by local firms needing growth projection data.

The chamber's Convention & Visitors Bureau (CVB) is extremely active bringing in "silent dollars" — those spent by tourists and conventioneers. Two recent softball tournaments drew more than 5,000 visitors and had an estimated economic impact of $1.1 million.

The CVB staff travels the country bidding on future conventions and meetings.

New tourism programs include a linguists' group to assist international groups visiting the Permian Basin. More than 40 volunteers speaking 16 languages are active in the group.

The relocation of the Confederate Air Force to Midland, scheduled to be complete by December 1991, will bring additional tourism and dollars — potentially doubling Midland County's current $30 million economic impact from tourism and conventions.

Chamber of Commerce volunteer committees offer members a variety of opportunities to "make a difference" in the community, said chamber chief executive Janna King.

Those committees are:

■ The Economic Development Division, which encompasses permanent committees and various task forces.

■ The Community Development Division includes standing committees for transportation, education and government affairs.

■ The Membership & Communications Division serves 1,600 individual and corporate members through membership development, membership services, image and public relations committees and the M-Squad.

Chamber ambassadors of goodwill, the M-Squad conducts ribbon cuttings for new members and representing the chamber at public functions.

■ The CVB, in addition to the linguists' group, relies on volunteer committees, including separate groups for tourism and conventions.

■ The Chamber Foundation oversees several community programs: resource development, raising capital for building acquisition; Midland Spirit, developing a national community spirit award program; Objectives 2000, coordinating long-range community planning programs; Leadership Midland, as training program for young civic leaders; and Airport Beautification, providing tree planting and other landscaping at Midland International Airport.

Guidelines for voter registration, change listed

Staff Report

In order to vote you must:

1) be a citizen of the United States.

2) be a resident of the county at the time of registration.

3) be at least 17 years and 10 months of age on the date the registration application is submitted to the voter registrar. You may NOT vote until 18 years of age.

4) not have been finally convicted on a felony unless two years have elapsed from the date of the completion of the sentence.

5) must not have been declared mentally incompetent by a final judgment of a court.

You may register to vote at any time, but applications must be postmarked or received by the registrar at least 30 days before an election in order to be able to vote in that election.

Your spouse, parent or child may complete and sign a voter registration application on your behalf if authorized by you.

The Midland County Voter Registrar's office is at 709 W. Washington, and the mailing address is P.O. Box 3434, Midland, TX 79702. If there are any questions regarding voter registration, call 688-1222.

Police unit offers bicycle registration

Staff Report

The Midland Police Department Community Relations Unit started its bicycle registration program in 1989. A thousand bicycle plates were purchased with donated money and are being used for such programs.

When a bicycle is registered, information is gathered identical to the information on a vehicle registration. It includes the name of the owner, address, make and model of the bike, color, etc.

There is a $2 fee for the registration plate. For those who cannot afford to pay, however, the plate is given free of charge.

For more information on bicycle registration, call Officer E.M. Camarillo at 685-7131.

Area attracts seniors, retirees

Staff Report

Among Midland-Odessa's many offerings is a tremendous appeal to senior citizens and retirees.

The area boasts a warm climate — even warmer people — minimal humidity, clean air, light traffic, cultural amenities, affordable housing and a relaxed lifestyle.

Seniors are also happy to find a variety of retirement complexes, senior citizen discounts and excellent health care facilities.

The Midland-Odessa Health and Retirement Endeavor (MOHRE) assists newcomers and potential retirees to the community. MOHRE was organized by the Midland and Odessa Chambers of Commerce and the Permian Basin Private Industry Council. The organization is one of the success stories of both communities, with a 21-member board from both Midland and Odessa.

MOHRE has a referral service which helps older residents and their families be aware of the board scope of services and activities available.

For more information, contact executive director Mary Larson, 561-5331, address is P.O. Box 60801, Midland, Texas 79711.

Clubs offering both social, community service activities

Staff Report

■ Junior League of Midland sponsors many community service projects, including Arkansaw Bear, Bedside Buddies, Children's Dental Clinic, Directory of Community Services, Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, Nita Stewart Haley Memorial Library and History Center Docent program, Hearthstone, Junior League Singers, Kids on the Block, Next-to-New Shop, Parents as Partners, Perinatal Clinic, Stand Tall, Teen Court and Woman to Woman.

The Junior League raises funds to support these projects through clothing sales at the Next-to-New Shop, and through presentation of the annual Charity Ball. This yearly black-tie event raises thousands of dollars to support projects which benefit the community.

■ Junior Women's Association's annual fashion show provides funds for different community services, including Midland Memorial Hospital's Pediatric Equipment Fund and Clinic of the Community Children's Ministry. Funds raised by the organization since 1977 have provided MMH with such equipment as a pulse oximeter to monitor blood gases, sleeper chairs and toys for hospitalized children to play with.

■ Chi Omega Alumni Association in Midland presents an annual fashion show to benefit various charitable organizations in the community. Recent beneficiaries have included Developmental Diabetes Center, Clinic of the Community Children's Ministry, Hearthstone and Permian Basic Center for Battered Women and Their Children.

■ Children's Service League of the Cerebral Palsy Center in Midland alternates its fundraising for the CP Center by presenting Beefeaters' Ball, a black-tie benefit dinner-dance and cattle auction, and a style show and luncheon in alternate years. The CP Center provides therapy and education for neorologically or orthopedically disabled children from throughout the Permian Basin area.

■ Special Children's League of the Developmental Disabilities Center presents an annual "Smash Fiesta" tennis tournament and fund-raiser dinner-dance each year to raise funds for DDC. Funds raised help support therapy and educational programs of the DDC, which was founded in 1984 to provide education and physical challenges for children with special needs.

YMCA child care centers located in several areas

Staff Report

Midland YMCA Child Development Centers are strategically located throughout the city in order to serve the needs of working parents.

■ The Central YMCA, located at 800 N. Big Spring, offers an after school program for children ages 6 to 12. Transportation is provided from all Midland public and private schools. A new feature offered at this location for the 1990-91 school year is before school child care. Call 682-2551 for more information.

■ The Alamo YMCA, located at 901 N. Midland Dr., offers an after school program for children ages 6 to 12. Transportation is provided from all Midland public and private schools. An early morning and late kindergarten child care program is offered for five-year-olds.

Transportation is provided from Midland schools for children attending early kindergarten. The late kindergarten program provides transportation to and from public and private schools. Call 694-2528 for more information.

■ The Northeast YMCA, located at 2301 Butternut (across from Lee Freshman High School), offers an after school program for children ages 6 to 12. Tutoring services are available for students who need additional help with their homework and schoolwork. For more information, call 682-8469.

■ The Midland YMCA Day Care Center, located at 815 S. Carver, provides all-day child care for infants and children to 12 years of age. Breakfast, lunch and a snack are provided. A pre-school program is also offered at this location. Additional activities are designed for all age groups at this location. Call 684-9027 for more information.

These programs are licensed by the State of Texas, and all caregivers are certified in CPR and first aid.

All Midland YMCA Child Development Centers provide safe, well supervised activities. A well trained, mature, responsible staff delivers these programs that maintain the quality and standards established by the YMCA.

Activities include sports, games, arts and crafts, swimming and gymnastics and much more.

The YMCA is a Christian organization where all program and activities are value driven. At the YMCA, the safety and well-being of your child is the first and foremost placed concern.

An emphasis is on fun while children share new and exciting experiences at the YMCA. Building self-esteem, developing leadership skills and enhancing the overall well-being of each child is an integral part of the YMCA Child Care program.

The mission of the YMCA is to put Christian principles into practice through programs that build a a healthy body, mind and spirit for all.

Animal 'adoption' offered

Staff Report

Midland Animal Control and Care Center, 1601 Orchard Lane, one block north of Front Street near Carver Avenue, welcomes citizens to adopt a pet from the shelter and save a life. Since all "adoptees" are required to be spayed or neutered to prevent future litters, even more animal lives are saved by never being born.

People who have a lost a pet are urged to visit the shelter to look for it. Pets wearing rabies tags are kept for 10 days and pets with no tags are kept for three days.

Pets who leave home with tags do not always arrive at the shelter with them. The Animal Control notifies owners of tagged animals, so it is important to let the office know if residents with tagged animals move or change phone numbers.

Lost pet information is not discussed over the phone since it would allow for a margin of error that could possibly result in the unnecessary death of a pet.

Visiting hours at the shelter are 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m., Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Friday. Thursday hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Saturday hours are from 10 a.m. to noon.

Dogs and cats are required to be vaccinated for rabies by the time they are four months old and must wear a city license tag at all times. Veterinarians sell the tag at the time the shot is given.

Ferrets are required to have a permit, which is obtained at the Animal Control.

All animals are required to to be restrained in a manner from which they cannot escape.

For more information, call 685-7420.

Midland College serving range of educational roles

Staff Report

Senior citizens master the computer, youngsters become acquainted with world politics, and thousands earn college credits along with new job skills.

Midland College provides a myriad of educational opportunities for Midlanders from first graders to mature adults. While the comprehensive community college can't be all things to all people, it serves tens of thousands each year from its lush 153-acre campus on North Garfield as well as its outreach programs.

Established as a separate community college in 1972, Midland College is governed by a nine-member Board of Trustees elected from within its district boundaries. Trustees serve staggered six-year terms without pay. The initial campus was acquired and built from a $5.1 million bond issue which paid for the land and seven buildings. Soon after the campus was dedicated in 1975, another bond issue for $6.3 million was approved for construction of two new buildings plus a building addition. Another building was finished in 1985, while a large addition to the Student Center is due for completion next month. The original campus of 115 acres was expanded in 1988 with the acquisition of 38 additional acres adjacent to the campus. The additional property remains undeveloped.

The role of the college is four-fold. It provides "university-parallel" courses for freshman and sophomores, mostly in the core subjects of English, foreign languages, social studies, mathematics, sciences, cultural studies, and the arts. Students in these areas usually are planning to transfer to universities for baccalaureate degrees. Midland College also provides extensive courses in occupational and technical training. This includes such areas as automotive and diesel technology, welding, printing, computer information systems, electronics, business studies, office education, drafting, heating/air conditioning, audio technology, child care, fire technology, nursing, respiratory care, radiography, veterinary technology, nursing (vocational and associate degree), and alcohol/drug abuse counseling. Continuing Education covers a broad spectrum. There are free classes for drop-outs needing to earn a high school equivalency diploma or to learn English. Some of these classes are offered off-campus and in other communities. More than 300 non-credit classes are offered each year, so thousands of residents can satisfy their creative needs, learn new crafts, upgrade job skills, or simply meet new people. Persons at least 55 years of age can enroll for College Classics. These are four-week courses offered several times a year. The classes usually meet in the afternoon. A single

Pops concerts launch musical season

Staff Report

The Midland Odessa Symphony & Chorale begn its 1990-91 season Aug. 25 and 26 in Midland and Odessa, respectively, with free outdoor pops concerts.

Filling a cultural cavity, the orchestra of Midland and Odessa merged to form the Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale in 1962. Over the past 28 years, the Orchestra, Chorale, Thouvenel String Quartet and the Lone Star Brass Quintet have performed 75-100 concerts annually. These concerts include vocal, classical and pops. The Orchestra consists of professional musicians who, according to MOSC General Manager Connie Linsler, also teach music lessons privately and in public and private schools. The Chorale is essentially an all-volunteer group of 100 singers.

The MOSC has a commitment to educating children in the area of symphonic music and is active in various educational programs. The Thouvenel String Quartet, Lone Star Brass Quintet and Chamber Orchestra hold in-school performances that provide both learning and entertaining experiences for approximately 15,000 students yearly. Prior to these concerts, teachers are given a video tape and teaching guide to familiarize students with terms and techniques employed by the musicians.

As well as opening youthful ears up to symphonic music, the Symphony & Chorale has also undertaken the task of reaching whole communities in the West Texas area. The family-oriented Outreach concerts make it possible for people of all ages to enjoy symphony music, thus reaching a wider audience.

The Symphony & Chorale is conducted by Don Th. Jaeger, Jaeger, entering his second season as the group's leader, began his musical career as an oboist. He studied at the Amsterdam Conservatory as a Fulbright scholar and at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria. In the Prague Spring International competition for woodwinds, Jaeger won a bronze medal. He served as a teacher, conductor and member of the Interlochen Arts Quintet. In 1969, he became the music director and conductor of the Midland, Michigan Symphony Orchestra. Jaeger helped found the Northwood Orchestra in 1979 and was designated its music director and coductor. He has also appeared with several orchestras including the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and the Antwerp Philharmonic in Belgium.

Assisting Jaeger in conduction is Robert Hunt. Hunt, also director of choral activities, joined the MOSC during its 88-89 season. He obtained a masters degree in musicology at Texas Christian University where he studied choral conducting. Hunt has worked with the Dallas Opera, the Dallas Symphony, Ray Price, Willie Nelson, Rich Little and Frank Sinatra, Jr. He has held the position of music director at the American Cabaret Company of New York where collaborated on numerous off-Broadway revues.

The Symphony & Chorale will perform at the Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center in Dallas Sep. 30 at 2:30 p.m. The performance will feature Van Cliburn International Piano Competition gold medalists Jose Feghali and Ray Votapek, and the Lone Star Brass Quintet will premiere the "Lone Star Fanfare," a piece commissioned by Ray Luke especially for this occasion. The show is sponsored by NCNB and tickets can be purchased at Rainbow Ticket Masters for $10 to $30.

Museums house art, historic items

Midland non-profit museums provide residents with the opportunity to view art and discover the history of the area.

Such establishments include the Museum of the Southwest and the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, the Nita Stewart Haley Memorial, the Midland County Historical Museum, the Brown-Dorsey Home, the Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame and Midland Central Fire Station Museum.

In addition, Midland has the Marian Blakemoore Planetarium, located in Haley Park.

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum, Library and Hall of Fame, 1500 Interstate 20 West, chartered in 1967 and costing $3.5 million to build, was conceived, designed, constructed and landscaped by local professionals to play tribute to the petroleum industry.

Funded entirely by contributions, it is the only museum of its kind in the Southwest with public education of and for the petroleum industry as a primary purpose of the museum.

Hours are 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. Admission is $3 for adults, $2.50 for senior citizens, $1.50 for children ages six through high school and under six are admitted free.

The Museum of the Southwest, incorporated on Sept. 25, 1965, under the auspices of Junior League of Midland Inc., was originally housed at 3201 W. Wall Ave. After moving to 26 Village Circle in September 1966, the museum moved to its current location at 1705 W. Missouri Ave. in July 1968.

The most recent addition to the Museum of the Southwest is the Fredda Turner Durham Children's Museum, which opened in June 1989 and houses participation exhibitions for children of all ages relating to art, archaeology and astronomy within its 10,000 square feet.

The Midland County Historical Museum, located in the basement of the Midalnd County Public Library, contains a collection of Midland historic artifacts including a 1909 map of downtown Midland. The museum has files on phases of Midland's development as well as mineral collections. Hours are 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. Saturday. For more information, call 683-2708.

UTPB offers upper-level, graduate courses

Staff Report

Established in 1973, the University of Texas of the Permian Basin offers junior, senior and graduate level course work.

With an approximate enrollment of 2,000, and an average age of 33, UTPB offers an educational opportunity to a more mature Permian Basin. This focus is additionally seen through the over 5,200 graduate students at the college.

The 600-acre campus on the eastern side of Odessa includes the Art Lab, Gym and Pool Complex, the Mesa Building and the Founders Building, a library with over 500,000 volumes and an on-line computer network. Students at UTPB take advantage of the many student resources on the campus including the Women's Center, PASS (Programs Assisting Student Studies) Office, Career Counseling Services, Subsidized Health Care, student housing, a campus bookstore and cafeteria, and the Center for Behavioral Analysis.

The university has academic divisions in Behavioral Science and Kinesiology, Business, Education, Humanities and Fine Arts, and Science and Engineering. These are supplemented by special programs at the university such as International Study, premedical and prelegal programs, and teacher certification.

Special options at the university include day and evening classes, ENCORE (classes given with no credit), self-paced instruction, internships, and independent study.

94 percent of the faculty at UTPB have their doctorates, while the remaining six percent are at the master level or are doctoral candidates. The student-faculty ratio is 15 to 1.

The university serves the surrounding community with the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification, Small Business Development Center, West Texas Study Center, meeting rooms available for rent, a catering service, and gym/pool memberships.

For more information, call in Midland 563-2400, and in Odessa 367-2100.

(From 12)

$25 fee covers as many classes as one person wishes to attend during a semester for College Classics. During the summer, there are special Kids' College classes for youngsters who have completed first through sixth grades. Students can take as many as three classes during each of the two two-week Kids' College sessions. During the summer of 1990, still another program was inaugurated. It's Teens On Campus, for those who have completed seventh and eighth grades. Special classes, both credit and non-credit, are tailored to the needs of local business, government, and industry demands.

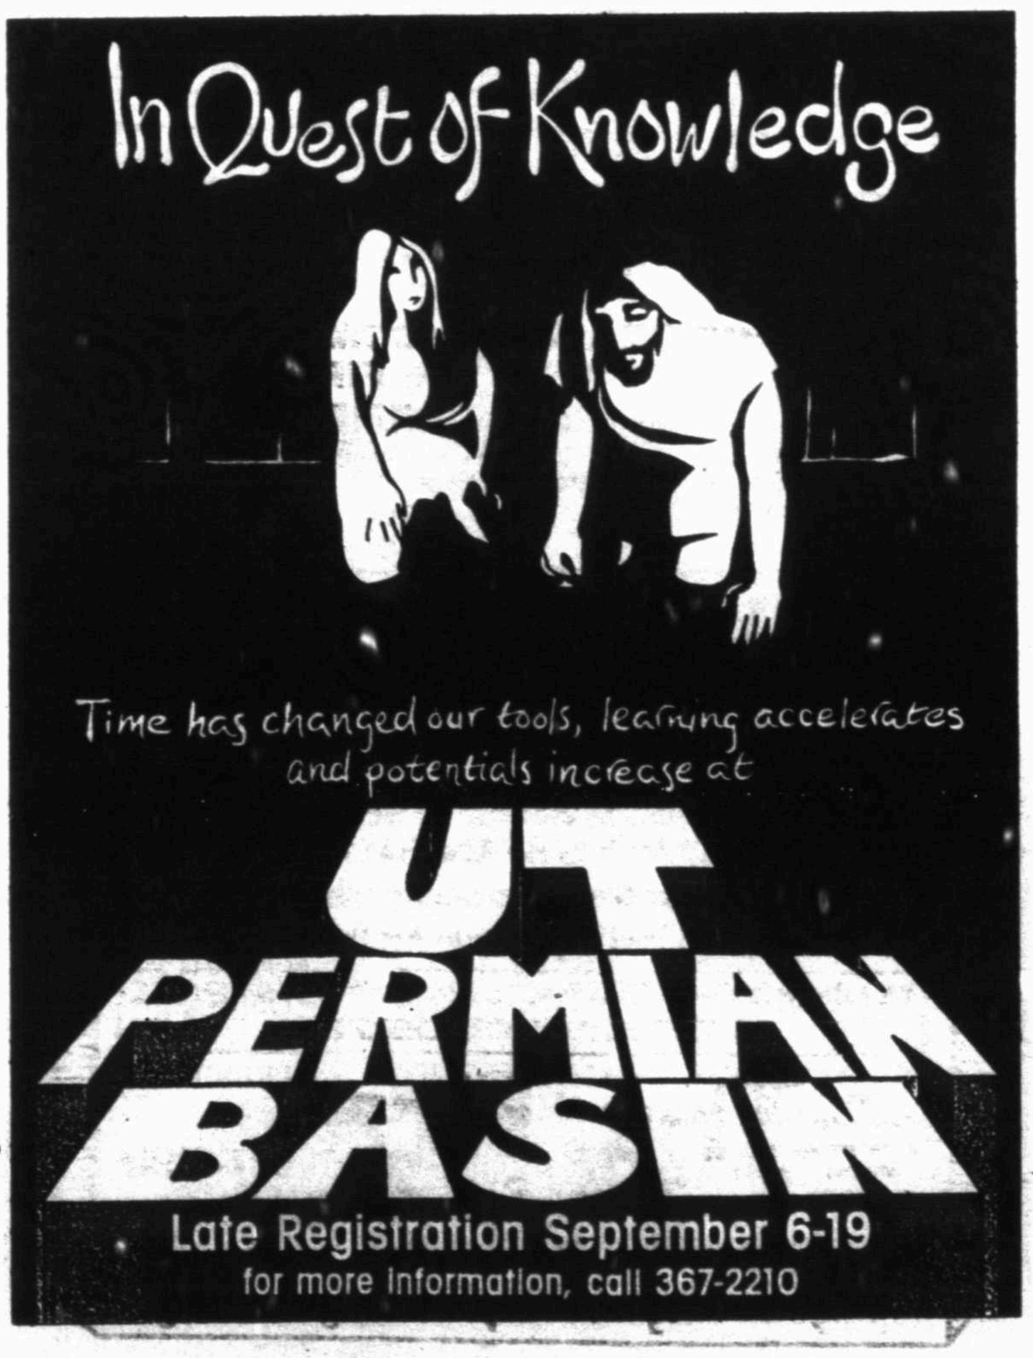

Midland College also operates a Business and Economic Development Center, with numerous low-cost seminars and workshops for would-be entrepreneurs or current business operators seeking more knowledge and better business skills.

The college is funded mainly from three sources. Approximately half of its operating budget is from state funding for its instructional programs, about 30 percent from local taxes, and the remaining 20 percent from student fees and other sources. Operating budget is about $12 million.

Chaparral Center is a 5,000-seat multi-purpose arena owned by the college. It not only is the home of the famous Midland College Chaparral basketball team, but also the home court for most Midland High and Midland Lee basketball games. Chap Center also provides a venue for national entertainment stars such as Tom Jones, Charley Pride, Reba McEntire, Wayne Newton, and such events as circuses, ice shows, religious conventions, charity balls, antique auctions, and car shows.

An annual exercise for basketball fans is trying to pick out the next star from the new players on the Midland College squad. For a decade, the Chaps have been providing "prime time" players for major universities and a few professional teams. But the success of the basketball team is just a portion of the winners produced through the MC athletic programs. The college articipates in men's basketball, men's golf, and men's and women's tennis. Midland College won a national championship the first year it competed in intercollegiate athletics. The Chaparrals captured the National Junior College Athletic Association's inaugural women's tennis championship in 1975. Nor was that a fluke, as they proved by successfully defending the title in 1976. Altogether, the women's tennis team has won the NJCAA title six times, including 1990.

Mexico oil

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Mexico announced it will continue exporting 100,000 barrels of crude oil more than normal every day until the end of this year to take advantage of rising world market prices caused by the Persian Gulf crisis.

About half of Mexico's crude exports go to the United States.

CUPERTINO, Calif. — A year after one of the most ballyhooed breakups in high-tech history, Adobe Systems and Apple Computer appear to have made up.

The two companies said they have signed a letter of intent to expand their technology-sharing agreement, under which Apple licenses Adobe software that controls how computers and laser printers create typefaces and graphics.

K mart fine

NEW YORK — K mart Corp. agreed Tuesday to pay $6 million in penalties to the U.S. Customs Service in a dispute over duties paid on inexpensive imported apparel, one of K mart's most important product lines.

The Customs Service said K mart defrauded the government from 1982 to 1986 by manipulating prices of merchandise covered by quota agreements. K mart was in effect able to get more merchandise at a lower cost into the United States, customs officials said.

In Troy, Mich., A. Robert Stevenson, a K mart spokesman, said the company had not intended to mislead the government. The dispute, he said, arose because of "disclosures that weren't in sufficient detail" for the Customs Service.

It's RUB duds

It's not cross-dressing, but it's crossing over something when Harley Davidson starts selling expensive biker duds to rich executives.

Harley is opening its first retail store in Kansas City, Mo., selling biker-inspired fashions under the brand name MotorClothes, with expectations of opening more stores across the country next year.

Tom Bolfert, Harley's director of advertising and promotion, says the company is riding the yuppie motorcycle craze — they're called RUBs (Rich Urban Bikers) — and the leather boom with its line of biker clothes.

Midland real estate market heats up

■ The Midland real estate market is experiencing a "mini-boom," which began prior to the Mid-East crisis, while northeast and west markets see values falling fast.

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

Long before the crisis in the Middle East began and oil prices soared to $30 a barrel, the Midland real estate market was enjoying a "mini-boom." But, now, that "mini boom" could get even bigger.

Roy Proctor, president of the Midland Board of Realtors, says home sales in Midland are brisk, but that the conflict in the Middle East has not yet contributed to the sales activity. He says that will probably come six to eight months down the road. As oil prices improve, local Realtors expect homes in Midland to sell faster, while increasing in value.

Oddly enough, this upward turnaround comes at a time when real estate agents in the west and northeast are seeing "For Sale" signs on front lawns longer than they did last year and housing prices falling fast.

"In the 1970s the Texas oil belt ran directly contrary with the east coast, and we have noticed softening in the market on both east and west coasts recently," Proctor said.

Housing prices in once hot markets, such as New England and California have dropped substantially in recent months according to a Wall Street Journal article. Westinghouse Electric Corp. reports that the average house takes 180 days to sell, up from last years 150 days while Midland homes are selling in only 126 days, 6 days less than August of last year.

Beverly Shilling Reporter-Telegram

Roy Proctor, president of the Midland Board of Realtors sports a "mess" of the classic "sold" signs. Real estate sales in Midland have improved dramatically in recent months and promise to get even better.

"The activity in Midland is very good, we are now seeing a final surge from the Chevron relocation out of Hobbs. The increase in sales started in November of last year. Activity was brisk when Texaco transferred from Midland to Denver, then got a strong shot in the arm when Conoco transferred into Midland and was further fueled when Chevron came in from Hobbs," Proctor said.

The Chamber of Commerce reported that home sales are up substantially from this time last year. 1,112 residential homes were sold through August of 1990 compared with 888 sold through August of 1989, which is a 25 percent increase. With the "mini-boom" taking place home values are pretty much even and just

Vegetable oil could help in energy pinch

■ The rapeseed, a plant that grows like a weed, could provide enough vegetable oil to replace some imported crude oil and clean up the air, say researchers.

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Imagine tractors and trucks running on vegetable oil and nylon 10 times stronger and lighter than steel.

It's all possible with the marvelous rapeseed plant, which genetic engineers hope will enter mainstream agriculture within the next few years.

Rapeseed, a cousin to the yellow mustard that fills suburban empty lots, produces a fat seed crammed with a thick, healthy oil.

One variety produces canola oil, the edible rapeseed oil that's winning the hearts of cholesterol-conscious consumers. Its industrial cousin could help America break free of smog-filled skies and a reliance on Middle East crude oil.

Today, industrial rapeseed oil keeps bread wrappers and garbage bags from sticking together and videocassette tapes from slicing themselves into bits. It's used in rubber pencil tips, perfumes and keeps peanut butter from separating. With some genetic tinkering, scientists aim to suit rapeseed oil for much more ambitious uses.

Dick Auld, a professor at the University of Idaho, one day envisions tractors across America using rapeseed oil instead of diesel fuel. He says diesel engines run just as well on an alcohol ester made from rapeseed oil, but polluting emissions dive by 70 percent. According to his preliminary data, the engines last just as long or even longer than those running on diesel.

"You could make certain industries energy-independent," Auld says. "Any farmer could set aside 10 percent of his land for rapeseed, and could be self-supporting."

Funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the Department of Energy, Auld is looking for biologically renewable sources of diesel fuel and ways to reduce farm dependence on fossil fuels.

Soviet oil production showing rapid decline

N.Y. Times News Service

Independent of the Iraq crisis, which has taken some 4.6 million barrels of oil a day off the world market, oil production in the Soviet Union has fallen by more than half a million barrels a day since last year, and it is likely to continue declining, according to analysts in the United States and Europe.

In a roundabout way this is amplifying the effect of the Mideast crisis on some importing nations, and even on the price of gasoline in the United States, experts say, because the regional markets for crude and products are inter-connected.

Soviet production is running lower by 500,000 to 600,000 barrels a day, or 4 to 5 percent, and exports are down about 250,000 barrels a day, according to the International Energy Agency, a monitoring agency for the industrialized nations; some put the export decline higher.

Part of the shortfall is made up by declining demand in the Soviet Union itself, which is in the grip of a recession.

In addition, early this year Moscow stopped its worldwide marketing of Iraqi oil, which it had received in exchange for arms shipments, according to experts.

Experts say Iraq produced that oil, estimated at 145,000 to 200,000 barrels a day last year, outside its OPEC quota, and its loss further reduces world supplies.

The Soviet Union's own exports will average about 3.3 million barrels a day this year, down from 3.7 million barrels a day last year, according to Robert E. Ebel, the vice president for international affairs of Enserch Corp., of Dallas.

Ebel, a former government intelligence officer, said that in 1988 exports reached 4.1 million barrels a day.

Eastern European countries that took about half the Soviet exports, paying for them through barter or in currencies that are not freely exchangeable on world markets, have borne the brunt of the export cuts, according to Western experts.

Some of that crude was refined and sold to Western countries.

They were also major users and processors of Iraqi oil, generally acquired by barter.

There is also some reduction in sales of Soviet crude to Western European countries that paid in hard currency, but Soviet oil income could still rise because the price per barrel is up sharply.

The Soviet Union is the world's biggest oil producer, but as an exporter it trails Saudi Arabia, the world's largest, which had an OPEC quota of 5.38 million barrels under the last agreement before the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait on Aug. 2. But it

Workers prepare pico de gallo in tubs at a central commissary Fajita Express utilizes to cash in on fast Tex-Mex.

Chain features fast-food fajitas

Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO — Apron-clad men hover over a huge grill, turning sizzling beef strips until the meat looks just right. A delightful aroma drifts through the air. Onlookers ponder their next meal.

It could be a South Texas barbecue, but it's not.

Instead, the scene comes from Fajita Junction Inc.'s central kitchen, where more than 20,000 pounds of meat is prepared each week for about 50 restaurants.

Financed by reclusive millionaire oilman Tom Turner Sr., the 15-year-old company believes it has found an upscale niche in the fast-food business.

"It's a different thing from a hamburger," said president Gerry Telle. "We feel like we have a tiger by the tail here."

Launched during the toughest of economic times in Texas, Fajita Junction founders quickly discovered Texans always seem able to afford a favorite ethnic food — especially in a fast-food setting.

Company executives, however, describe Fajita Junctions as more refined than other fast-food Mexican restaurants because of the large menu with more than 50 items.

"What separates us from them is we're more upscale. They don't even have an enchilada," Telle said. "I don't think they could even pronounce 'carne guisada' (a dish of seasoned beef tips).

"We're from San Antonio. We know what Mexican food is supposed to be like."

Fajitas originated in Mexico as a dish made from tough cuts of beef tenderized through marinating. More recently, cooks experimenting with Tex-Mex dishes have created their own versions — chicken and shrimp fajitas.

"There's no such animal as a chicken fajita. There's no such animal as a shrimp fajita. They're just bastardizing the word," he said, although Fajita Junction sells both beef and chicken fajitas.

Telle and other company officials say their secret is preparing food at a central kitchen, just as it would be done at a traditional sit-down Mexican restaurant.

At the Fajita Junction commissary in San Antonio, dozens of workers slice beef and chicken, knead tortilla dough, mash avocados and peel onions. They fry rice, stir beans and grate cheese.

"It's really a big kitchen," said Telle, who used to work with two different fried chicken chains.

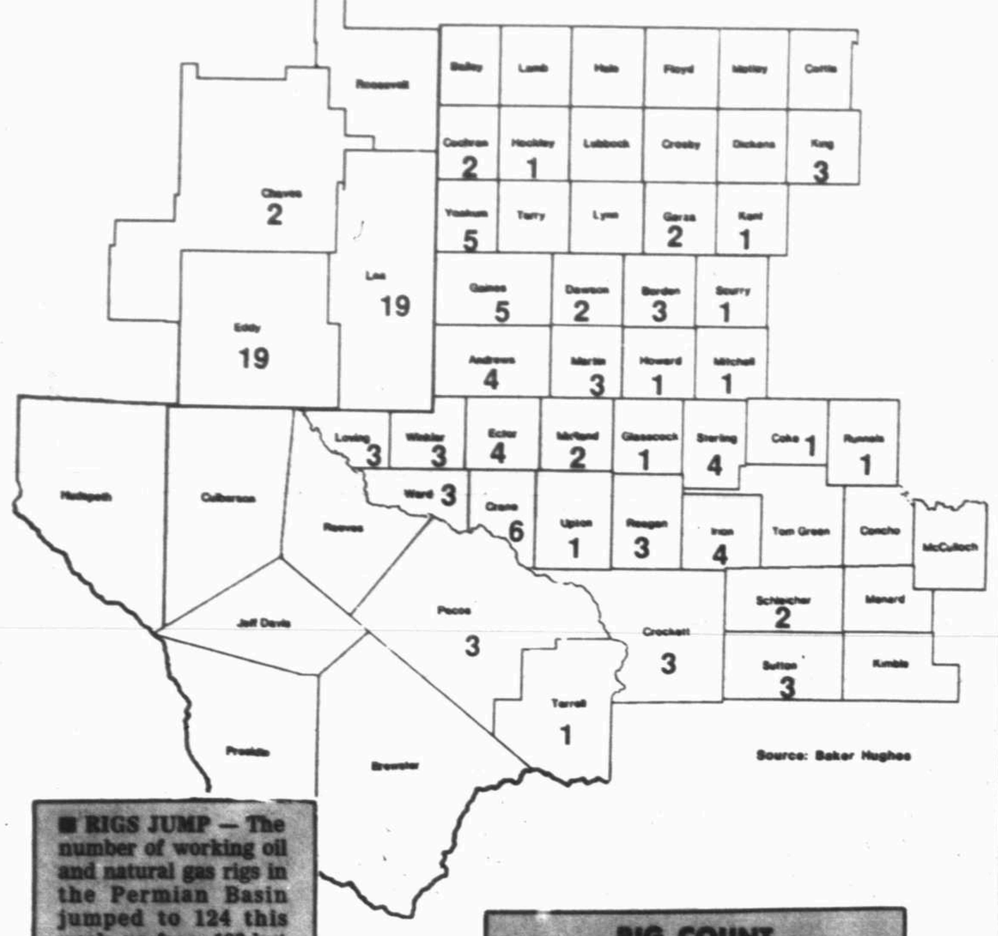

Workers store the food using a chilling process that keeps not quite frozen.

Then the food is shipped to approximately the Fajita Junction restaurants.

■ RIGS JUMP — The number of working oil and natural gas rigs in the Permian Basin jumped to 124 this week, up from 106 last week and 93 one year ago.

The United States rose again this week, climbing by 10 to 1,012, Baker Hughes Inc. reported.

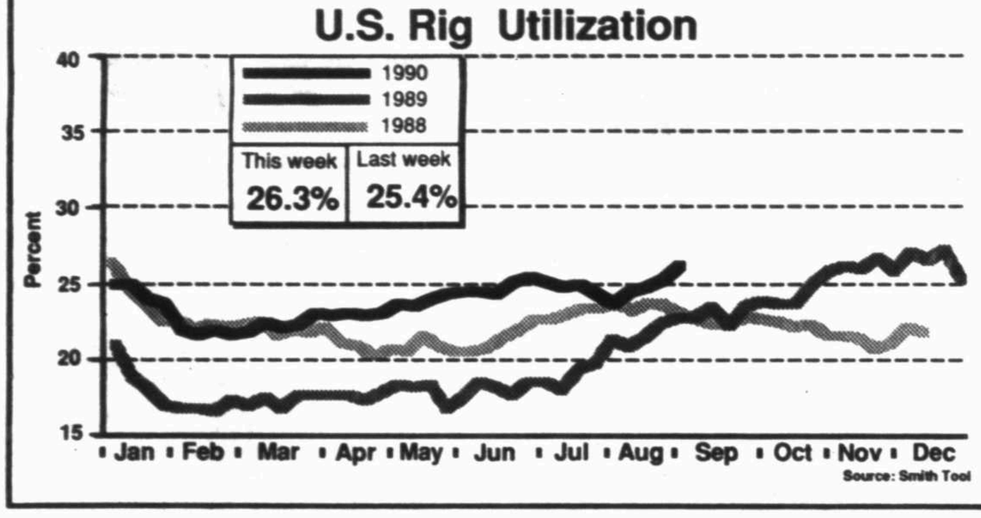

A week ago, the count had increased by 15 to total 1,002. The count a year ago this week was 936.

Among major oil-producing states, Kansas added seven rigs to its count, followed by California and Wyoming, which each gained five.

Europe less reliant on oil, gas

ROME (AP) — In Rome, gasoline has shot to almost $5 a gallon since Iraq invaded Kuwait. Many Swedes are paying $75 to fill 'er up.

But analysts say despite exorbitant price hikes, Western Europe will be less damaged than the United States by rising energy prices.

"The picture that I draw is of a Europe that is not as dependent on oil as it was at the beginning of this decade," said Peter Bogin, the assistant director for oil markets at Cambridge Energy Research Associates in Paris.

Oil and gas prices have increased worldwide since Iraq invaded Kuwait on Aug. 2. The price of a barrel of light sweet crude hit $30 in New York, following OPEC's decision to boost production to make up for lost Iraqi and Kuwaiti oil.

Analysts expect the oil crisis to push up inflation and slow growth in Western Europe. But there is little talk about an imminent recession, as in the United States. That's because of the factors in Europe's favor: relatively good economic health; a drop in oil use; and the cheapness of the dollar, the currency used for oil purchases.

Western Europe and the United States import about the same amount of crude oil per person, Bogin said. But in addition to the imports, Americans use an equal amount of domestically produced oil.

"We're gas guzzlers. That's the problem," said Paul Horne, an American who is chief international economist for Smith Barney International in Paris.

Europeans have always relied less on cars than Americans. With traditionally lower incomes, Europeans bought fewer, more gas-efficient cars. Many governments developed extensive train systems.

Western Europe was still hit hard economically by the energy crises of 1973-74 and 1978-80. But when gas prices started falling, many governments kept them artificially high through taxation, aiming in part to cut consumption.

Thus, even though many Western Europeans now are as wealthy as Americans, they don't buy cars that are as big or use them as much.

"People can't afford to run a Cadillac when the price of gas goes to a dollar a liter," said Jacques Michaux, the deputy head for oil and gas at the European Community's energy division. There are roughly four liters to a gallon.

In Italy, for example, the best-selling car is the compact Fiat Uno, which gets about 47 miles to the gallon at 55 mph.

The most popular U.S. car last year was the mid-sized sedan Honda Accord, which gets about 28 mpg on the highway.

In the past decade, Western Europe has also followed the United States in slashing its reliance on oil to produce electricity.

France, for example, has become the world's leader in reliance on nuclear energy, getting more than 80 percent of its electricity from nuclear plants.

England and West Germany have switched to coal to produce some of their power, while Norway exports electricity from its numerous hydroelectric plants.

MEETINGS

Steve Davison to speak to D&D

Steve Davison, former Chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce and a community leader will speak to the Midland Desk & Derrick Thursday on the role of the oil and gas industry in expanding economic development. Davidson is the owner of Allsafe Environmental Services Inc., and serves on boards of the Petroleum Museum, Permian Basin Area Foundation, and Forward Midland. The dinner meeting will be at 6:30 at the Midland Petroleum Club.

Horizontal allowable is SPE topic

Thomas A. "Buddy" Richter, Technical Hearings Examiner for the Railroad Commission of Texas will speak on: Horizontal Well Allowable Calculations, based on the new Statewide Rule 86.

Richter was the examiner that presided over the first Horizontal Drainhole rules in Texas and was instrumental in the fomalizaion of the rule. Richter began his career with TRC at Kilgore, where he became deputy director. He later became president of his own banking consulting firm, and was employed by the FDIC before returning to the Commission.

The meeting of the Trans Pecos group will be Wednesday, noon, at Mission Dorado. Cost is $12 per person.

Hispanic women set conference

The Women's Department of the Hispanic Chamber of Commerce will present its third annual Women's Conference on Saturday, September 29, at the Holiday Inn. The day-long affair will include breakfast, luncheon and fashion show. The keynote speaker will be Marita Cotero, author and owner of a data research firm in Austin. Yvonne Guaderrama, an El Paso lawyer, will speak on The Rights of Women.

SEPM sets workshop, field trip

The Permian Basin Section of SEPM is sponsoring a core workshop and extended one-day field trip which will examine the Capitan shelf margin of the northern Delaware Basin. Over 2,500 feet of continuous core will be displayed showing shelf margin and basinal strata of the Capitan. The core workshop will be held Friday, Sept. 28 at Midland Center, and the field trip to the Guadalupe Mountains will be the following Saturday and Sunday. For information call 683-1573.

AGA Conference, Exposition set

The 1990 American Gas Conference and Exposition will be held Oct. 29-31 at the Sheraton Boston Hotel. The exposition will include 260 booths and the meeting has 21 breakout sessions.

SPE sets three monthly meetings

Humphry

The Reservoir Study Group of the Society of Petroleum Engineers will hear N.V. Humphreys of Mobil discuss wireline formation testing Thursday at its monthly meeting. The meeting is set for 11:30 a.m. at the American Legion Hall. Cost is $7 per plate.

The Permian Basin Section of SPE will, also, meet on Tuesday, Sept.18 at a Community Relations Night and will feature a panel on groundwater contamination. Panel members include: Mark Henkhause, TRC; Bill Lockney, TWC; and Joe Reed of Geraghty & Miller. Attendees must RSVP by Friday. The meeting is set for 5:30 p.m at Ranchland Hills Country Club

The SPE Drilling Group will hear presentations on air and foam drilling from Mark Rankin of Pool Co. and Bob Grady of Exxon. Panelists will include: Dames Dalby, Ron Scandolari, and Ron Stacks. The noon luncheon meeting is set for Wednesday at the Midland Center.

Reservoir mapping WTGS topic

George Allen of Mobil Oil Co. Midland will speak to the West Texas Geological Society Tuesday on: Detailed Mapping of Reservoir Structural Geometry in Detached Shortened Fold Belts of the Ortega field area in the Girardot Basin of Colombia.

The meeting will be at Midland Center at 11:30 a.m. Cost of the buffet is $7 and reservations may be made by calling WTGS at 688-6775.

Ed Jones to address Landmen

Ed Jones, president and CEO of Texas Commerce Bank will address the Permian Basin Landmen's Association on Tuesday. Jones will be discussing the Confederate Airforce's move to Midland.

The meeting will be at Greentree Country Club, social hour at 6:30 p.m., dinner at 7:30 p.m. The cost is $15 at the door. Call 684-5411 for more information.

Consultants will speak to SPES

David Cooper and Keith Wood of the Cooper Network will speak to the Society of Professional Earth Scientists on Sept. 19. The topic will be money management. Cooper is a founding partner of the Cooper Network, a group of select financial consultants of Shearson Lehman Hutton, with over $500 million under management. Wood is a Midland consultant and partner in the network.

Two airlines to fly to Russia

N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Transportation Department granted permission Wednesday to Federal Express Corp. and Alaska Airlines Inc. to begin air service between the United States and the Soviet Union.

It was the first of several route decisions expected under an agreement the two nations signed in June.

Federal Express will carry only cargo on its new flights from New York to Moscow and Leningrad, while Alaska Airlines will carry both passengers and cargo between Anchorage and two Siberian cities, Magadan and Khabarovsk.

In the next few months, the department will decide which of several airlines will be given permission to fly all-cargo routes across the Pacific and which will be allowed to carry both cargo and passengers across the Atlantic to Soviet cities.

Federal Express and Alaska Airlines were the only airlines to apply for permission to fly the routes that were awarded Wednesday.

In contrast, nine airlines have applied for the North Atlantic routes, which will dramatically expand passenger service between the two nations.

Only Aeroflot and Pan American World Airways provide such service now.

The contenders are American Airlines, American Trans Air, Balitia Airlines, Continental Airlines, Delta Air Lines, Northwest Airlines, Pan Am, Trans World Airlines and United Airlines.

The Transportation Department will also choose later from three contenders

HOMES: Market heats up

(From 1G)

now beginning to increase slightly.

"About 900 homes on the market is a balanced amount, before prices start to go up. We are nearing equilibrium on the market," Proctor said.

As of September 7, 1990 the Multiple Listing Service reported that there were 1119 active residential homes on the market in Midland County. "In 1983 and 1984 there were 1800 homes on the market. Prices of homes in 1990 have increased only slightly," he said.

Proctor added that homes are selling pretty much evenly in each price range with the $60-000 - $80,000 and $100,000 - $150,000 brackets experiencing slightly more sales.

"I don't know the percentage of transfers versus in town moves, but it seems to be mostly transfers. Midland can expect two more major moves before year's end and they are oil related," Proctor said.

He noted that while about 80 percent of the businesses in Midland are still oil related the Kuwait invasion and increases in oil prices have not yet contributed to this "mini-boom." "The housing market lags behind the economic markets by at least six to eight months," Proctor said.

"Interest rates are starting to climb and we don't know where it's going to quit." He said percentage rates currently stand around 10 percent, but change several times during the day. "The time to buy is now, not wait to see what is going to happen, because chances are rates are on their way up," Proctor said.

FAJITA: Firm cashes in

(From 1G)

Local workers only have to cook the already sliced and marinated beef and chicken fajita meat.

Company officials say preparing the food in one place keeps quality, including amounts of spices, under tight control.

To keep up with changing Tex-Mex crazes, Fajita Junction experiments with new food combinations, said Tom Turkett, vice president of purchasing.

"Sometimes I'll just start playing with a recipe to see if I can improve the flavor on it," he said.

The company's most recent introduction is its puffy taco, a long-time Tex-Mex favorite in San Antonio.

Fajita Junction got its start in 1985 in an unlikely way.

Turner had turned a $350 service station investment in 1940 into a $2 billion conglomerate called the Sigmor Corp. He sold the company in 1983 to Diamond Shamrock, then began making other investments.

One of those was Fajita Junction.

Turner, chairman of the board of Fajita Junction, turned down interview requests from The Associated Press.

SEED: Provides energy

(From 1G)

He says that if farmers planted rapeseed on all the land set aside for federal crop subsidies, they could supply 6 percent of the nation's diesel fuel.

Rapeseed oil burns cleanly, powerfully, and doesn't contribute to the greenhouse effect. But at a wholesale price of $1.25 a gallon today, it's prohibitively expensive compared with diesel, which sells for 75 cents a gallon wholesale.

Auld aims to make rapeseed oil more cost effective, using conventional breeding and more technical means. He's growing whole plants from pollen spores, watching for the genetic characteristics he wants.

In a process called mutagenesis, he blows holes in plant genes with chemicals, hoping to carve away pieces that make anything other than the desired product. He hopes to come up with a rapeseed that is easier to grow, produces more seeds and has a higher portion of erucic acid, which contributes to the oil's lubricating quality.

Several companies see erucic acid as the key to opportunities in plastics, lubricants, and as a new nylon.

SOVIET: Production down

is ahead of Iraq, which had a quota of 3.14 million barrels, and Kuwait, which had a quota of 1.5 million.

The U.N.-led embargo has denied world markets the 4.6 million barrels a day from Iraq and Kuwait, but OPEC has authorized other members to produce more oil to try to make up the loss.

The United States is the second-largest producer, with about 8.5 million barrels a day of crude oil and condensates, but it also the world's largest importer, buying about the same amount it produces, in normal times.

Compared with these numbers, the Soviet declines are small, but they come at a time of tightness in the market.

Robert Mabro, director of the Oxford Institute for Energy Studies, said that the Iraqis had been paying for "arms, flour, tractors, whatever," and that none of the oil actually went to the Soviet Union; it was simply sold or rebartered.

Westerners are not sure why the barter stopped; one suggested that it was for a debt that had been paid off.

With demand heightened by tourism and other factors, Eastern European countries like Yugoslaving and Bulgaria, which were large users of Iraqi oil either through direct barter or through the Soviet Union, are importing refined products, adding to the pressure on Western European refineries.

Well-log course set

The Permian Basin Graduate Center will offer a course on Applied Petrophysics of the Permian Basin. It will be taught by Tim McGinley of Mobil Oil on September 17 and 18, from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 pm. Minimum theory will be discussed in the course which is set to increase a working knowledge of well logs.

Group raps safety of smaller vehicles

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pressure to save fuel could increase highway deaths, an auto safety group said Wednesday in reporting new evidence that small cars are less safe than bigger models.

The study by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety concludes that, on average, small cars are deadlier than less fuel-efficient autos, that Japanese cars are becoming longer and safer while American cars are becoming shorter and more dangerous, and that when a manufacturer reduces the size of a given model, the model becomes more dangerous.

In a broad study begun well before the Mideast crisis brought new attention to ways of decreasing U.S. dependence on foreign oil, the institute said safety too often is ignored in the debate over auto mileage standards.

Carmakers already are required to produce cars with an average of 27.5 miles per gallon for 1990 models. One legislative proposal would increase fuel economy 20 percent in passenger cars by 1995 and 40 percent by 2001.

"Fuel-economy standards create safety problems if they force automakers to make cars smaller in order to increase the average miles per gallon of their fleets," the institute said.

The organization, which is financed by auto insurance companies, researches a wide range of highway safety issues.

Institute President Brian O'Neill said there are ways to save more fuel without making cars smaller, including engine changes that put less importance on power and speed and measures that relieve urban congestion.

But carmakers say they eventually have to make cars smaller to meet the stringent mileage standards.

"I'm as good an environmentalist as the next guy, but I believe we have to look at the complete picture," O'Neill said.

Smaller cars are more prone to rollovers and damage that can injure occupants, the institute said, offering the following evidence.

—Based on an analysis of death rates and fuel ratings for 47 four-door cars, on average, for every one mile-per-gallon improvement in fuel economy, there is a 3.9 percent increase in the death rate.

—Overall, the death rate in the smallest cars on the road is more than double the rate in the largest cars: 3 deaths per 10,000 registered cars for the smallest cars and 1.3 for the largest in 1989.

—The frequency of damage claims for small, two-door cars is 35 percent higher than for large two-door cars.

—Among the 29 two- and four-door cars with the highest frequency of injury claims, 27 are small and two are mid-sized.

Kwik Kopy boasts Alamo campus

By Greg Hassell

HOUSTON (AP) — As you wind along Kwik-Kopy Lane toward Entrepreneur Way, six signs give warning that this is no ordinary corporate headquarters.

"Tomorrow Belongs to Kwik-Copy," proclaims one. "Nothing's Impossible at Kwik-Kopy," shouts another.

For those unimpressed by a few audacious placards, there is a western-style bunkhouse ready to house company guests.

"We like to do things differently out here," said Bud Hadfield, the 67-year-old founder and chairman of Kwik-Copy Corp. "We like to have fun."

Although the Kwik-Kopy campus looks like a corporate amusement park, the business conducted there is no laughing matter. Since Hadfield founded the company in 1967, it has grown to become the second-largest quick-printing franchiser in the nation.

Kwik-Kopy has 1,000 franchises spread across seven countries, generating more than $307 million in annual sales. Only California's PIP Printing is larger, with 1,160 stores.

Central to Kwik-Kopy's success is its mandatory training program, which brings all new franchise owners to the corporate campus for three weeks. Arriving from places such as Canada, England and Australia, many are unprepared for what awaits them.

"When we got here, we thought it was paradise — the sun, the swimming pool, the peaceful grounds," Englishman Ray Birks said of company's 131-acre headquarters, near Cypress.

What caught Australian Craig Stevenson's eye was not the sun, swimming pool or company tennis courts. It was the quirky architecture and those six signs heralding the company's greatness.

"We Australians are not very rah-rah about anything. So it looked really corny to me," Stevenson said. "My first impression was, 'What have I got myself in for?' "

What he was in for was a grinding dawn-to-dusk training routine. For three weeks, fledgling franchisees rise early and make their way from the bunkhouse to the Alamo.

Classes — usually containing six to eight students — start at 7 a.m. sharp Monday through Friday.

Students who arrive even one minute late find class has started without them.

"It's terribly important to train them right," Hadfield added. "We have three weeks to train them and get them ready to go into a business that is entirely alien to them. It's like a mission impossible."

There are three good reasons for buying a Kwik-Kopy franchise, said Nath Winfield, the company's training director: good training, good support after the new business gets going, and research and development of new products.

Kwik-Kopy's training sessions cover the technical issues of running a printing business, along with more general subjects such as accounting, computers and leadership.

Each week day, the classes last until about 6 p.m. Sessions last a half-day on Saturdays, and the students are free from classes only on Sundays.

Even then free is something of a relative term, because they are expected to plow through a three-foot-high stack of reading material.

"The courses are very, very demanding," said Elaine Birks, who is starting the business with Ray, her husband. "But they are definitely worthwhile."

So what makes an adult pay $45,000 for the rights to a Kwik-Kopy franchise, line up another $100,000 to pay the expenses of opening a business and then endure three weeks of camp life?

One lure is the fast growth of the 47 billion quick-printing industry. Rapidly changing technology has made the quick-printing process faster, better and cheaper. Improving technology has meant improving sales, pushing the number of quick-printing shops in the United States from 1,100 in 1969 to 26,000 in 1989.

In the past seven years, the number of quick-printing shops in the United States has increased 85 percent, says the National Association of Quick Printers.

That growth has shown signs of slowing, particularly in economically troubled regions of the country. Economic downturns in the Sun Belt and now in the Northeast have driven many small-business owners out of business. In Denver, for example, 40 quick-copy businesses threw in the towel in 1988 alone.

"The industry is maturing, and it is growing more slowly," Bob Hall, editor of Quick Printing magazine, said. "Companies like Kwik-Kopy and PIP Printing aren't the young, go-go companies they were a few years ago. They have grown up with the industry."

Kwik-Kopy's double-digit growth rate, when measured by the total number of stores, is history. But Hadfield does not lament its passing.

"We are not shooting for a big number of centers. We are shooting for big numbers in the centers," he said.

Companywide, sales have grown an average of 11.5 percent during each of the past five years. Sales have jumped from $177.6 million in 1984 to $307 million in 1989. Kwik-Kopy's corporate share of the revenues totaled $13 million.

The corporation is privately owned. Hadfield and his wife, Mary, hold 32 percent of Kwik-Kopy, a group of 47 investors owns 38 percent of the stock and company employees own the remaining 30 percent.

All but one of the Kwik-Kopy stores are franchises. The one company-owned shop is used primarily for research. Every corporate employee must spend one day each year working in one of the stores, "so they can understand what it means to run a printing shop and stand on your feet all day," Hadfield said.

If Kwik-Kopy is no longer a "go-go" company, that doesn't apply to its chairman. Bud Hadfield still keeps the pace of a man in a hury.

He arrives at his office around 3:30 a.m. weekdays and most Saturdays. Hadfield works for an hour or so, breaks for breakfast and a three-mile walk around the wooded campus and is back at his desk by about 6 a.m. His workdays usually conclude aobut 4 p.m.

After a journey through the merchant marine and a few other jobs, Hadfield learned about printing while working as a typesetter for a Massachusetts newspaper. It was there that he also grew tired of the fierce New England winters.

"I walked to work one day, and it was 20 degrees below zero," Hadfield said of his last days in Great Barrington, Mass. "I had enough of that and called my brother in Houston. He was very encouraging — he said the economy was so good that even I could get a job down here."

Hadfield arrived here on a Sunday in 1946. He landed a job in a downtown printing shop the next day and started work on Tuesday. Within eight months, he and his brother paid $1,000 to buy their own print shop. In 1967 he started to franchise the operation, which Mary Hadfield renamed Kwik-Kopy Corp.

To help establish a corporate identity, Hadfield paid an artist $7.50 to design a Kwik-Kopy logo. It's the same logo the company uses today.

"You talk about return on investment, isn't that a beaut?" Hadfield laughed. A shrewd deal still brings pleasure 23 years after the fact.

Hadfield leaves a heavy footprint at Kwik-Kopy, from his fascination with the Amrerican bald eagle to his fanatical attention to promptness. Employees talk of "Bud Hadfield time," explaining that it's wise to show up for 8 a.m. meetings no later than 7:50.

"They think he is God here," one student murmured.

As for the bald eagle, its image seems to be everywhere. Paintings, etchings, furniture coverings, stained-glass ornaments, statues, you name it. According to the last count, there are about 1,000 eagle images in the main office building.

"I have always been independent. I have no use for parasites, and the eagle is the antithesis of a parasite," Hadfield explained. "It fights for what it gets. The eagle is what America is all about. I have very litle patience with idiots who run us down; we are a great country."

Hadfield has not exhausted his supply of colorful ideas for decorating Kwik-Kopy's campus. He says the company's next building will be a replica of Independence Hall in Philadelphia.

He is hoping to get more cooperation than he did during construction of the Alamo replica, when the Daughters of the Republic of Texas refused to share blueprints of the Texas shrine. Undeterred, Hadfield sent company employees and their children to San Antonio to take hundreds of pictures of the Alamo.

The replica was designed from those photos, and construction started in late 1987. The Kwik-Kopy Alkamo was built from stone quarries in Mexico and looks strikingly like the original.

Although he is unsure of when it will be built, Hadfield promises to give the same attention to his Independence Hall.

"It will look exactly like it," he said. "I guarantee it."

Sam's bites into hotdog stand

DALLAS (AP) — A wholesale store chain is trying to put on the dog — the hot dog, that is.

Sam's Wholesale Club has set its sights on a hot dog stand operation that provides jobs for elderly, disabled and handicapped persons. The company has told Hot Diggity Dogs operators to remove their stands from Sam's.

But the Dallas-based hot dog stands may get a reprieve. Lawyers representing Sam's met with Scarlett Rabalais, Hot Diggity Dogs president, on Wednesday.

She said she obtained an agreement from Sam's to extend its deadline for removing the stands from Sept. 8 to Sept. 20.

"It looks hopeful," she told the Dallas Times Herald on Wednesday. "We will know more in the next couple weeks."

Office jokes should be tasteful

N.Y. Times News Service

Sheryl Spanier usually arrives early for staff meetings in the conference room at Lee-Hecht Harrison & Associates, a New York career placement firm where she is a senior consultant. She's rather petite — just shy of five feet tall — and likes to raise the seat of her chair before the others trickle into the room.

But one recent morning, she was running behind schedule. Upon entering the room, she found that all seats were occupied but one. It had been raised to her colleagues' shoulder level.

"They all roared with laughter," she said. "They thought they had played a great joke on me. I didn't mind because I knew it was done with affection."

When they work — and the butt of the joke is good-natured like Ms. Spanier — humor can build rapport, reduce stress and smooth communications, according to consultants, psychologists and comedians who profit from teaching organizations how to inject levity into staid corporate cultures.

But humor in the office is a risky business. A practical joke that flops can be hurtful and divisive.

Corporate comedians are more likely to surface in the less structured and more tolerant environments of small, entrepreneurial organizations than in larger institutions.

And they are usually showoffs. "A lot of organizations have their version of the class clown, which isn't necessarily a bad thing," said Malcolm Kushner, a communications consultant and author of "The Light Touch: How to Use Humor for Business Success." He added, "It's like on a baseball team. The guy who cracks up the clubhouse rarely gets traded."

But corporate clowns usually tone down the pungency of their jokes as they reach ever higher rungs of the organizational ladder. "Playing jokes brands one as a lowbrow, possessing a lampshade-on-the-head sensibility," said Kushner.

At technology-based companies, pranks — especially those that require technical skill — are often applauded. A group of employees at Sun Microsystems, a California-based computer company, stages an elaborate ruse each year on April Fools' Day, usually at the expense of upper management.

One year, employees took apart a vice president's office and reassembled it, afloat, on a nearby fish pond. Another year, they built a three-hole golf course in the chairman's office. "When people get together to pull a complex prank, it encourages greater camaraderie," Kushner said. "It stimulates creativity."

Jokes that humiliate or are physically dangerous are to be avoided.

Kushner cites the example of a security guard in Louisiana who died of a heart attack after being "kidnapped" by co-workers. "The acid test for a joke is 'What harm could this do?' " he said. "That question should always be asked before, not after, a joke is played."

Many office pranks fall into the category of hazing. At investment banks like Goldman Sachs and the Morgan Stanley Group, a popular ritual involves sending a phony memo from the managing committee to new analysts, charging them for all the personal phone calls they have made from the office.

At Saatchi & Saatchi, the advertising agency, account executives get a kick out of unscrewing a rookie's phone receiver and removing the microphone, forcing him to shout at the top of his lungs while clients protest, "I can't hear you."

Junk bond market is still soft

N.Y. Times News Service

Almost a year after the problems of the heavily indebted Campeau Corp. unleashed a huge selloff in "junk bonds," the market for these high-risk securities has not improved much. In fact, in August, these high-yield bonds suffered their worst one-month decline on record, although there was no evidence of panic-selling.

Last month, the Salomon Bros. High Yield Market Index dropped 3.87 percent, hitting an all-time low. It was particularly painful for junk bond investors who had been heartened by positive returns in May through July, when Salomon's index climbed 6.35 percent. The rally was sparked by a refinancing by RJR Nabisco, the largest issuer in the market, which included a buyback of some of its junk bonds. But no such event occurred last month.

"It's a very tough period for the marketplace," said Joseph C. Bencivenga, director of junk bond research at Salomon.

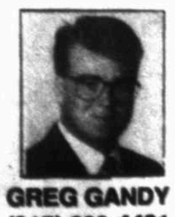

The market is so weak that underwriters have put off several new issues. Executives at Merrill Lynch Capital Markets, for example, had planned to sell $200 million of junk bonds for the Stone Container Corp. after Labor Day but delayed the offering indefinitely because of the "deteriorating market," Thomas W. Davis, managing director and co-head of the Merrill's High Yield Group, said Wednesday. Stone Container had planned to use the proceeds to repay some of its bank debts.

The new-issue market has virtually died. So far this year, underwriters have sold only $1.1 billion of publicly traded junk bonds to investors, down from $21.8 billion in the same period last year, according to the Securities Data Corp.

Unlike other declines earlier this year, the August lows were set in very quiet trading, dealers say. Although portfolio managers want to sell bonds, many are unwilling at the deeply discounted prices that have resulted from the nervousness over rising oil prices and recession.

But last month's declines in junk bonds did mirror one pattern that has emerged in this troubled market over the last year: Issues with the lowest ratings, triple-C, suffered the sharpest price declines, while the highest-rated issues dropped much less.

IBM rolls out mainframe line

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y. (AP) — IBM unveiled a new generation of mainframe computers Wednesday that it said would double the power of its most profitable machines and cement their position at the center of office computing.

The announcement, made at the company's U.S. mainframe factory, was billed as the most important rollout for International Business Machines Corp. in 25 years.

The success of the new machines is crucial to the world's largest computer company because it derives about half its income from mainframes and associated equipment and software.

The move was well publicized in advance, but industry experts were still impressed with the scope of the company's new strategy.

The announcement crystallized a new vision for how IBM believes mainframe computers should fit into today's decentralized computer systems, where desktop machines are almost as common as telephones.

"You saw it piecemeal before," said industry consultant Sam Albert. The new machines show that IBM intends the mainframe to be the "traffic cop" of computer networks, said Albert, a former IBM executive.

In addition to annoucing 18 new machines, IBM said it would provide systems that will allow mainframes to manage information on all sorts of computers throughout a company.

Such systems would address the growing concern of companies that too much information is spread among desktop computers that don't communicate well with each other.

The company said it also will provide products that will make it easier to connect non-IBM computers to a network of IBM machines.

IBM's new mainframes provide about twice the processing power of the three mainframe lines they replace and are priced from $70,480 to $22.8 million. The line is IBM's response to several Japanese mainframe makers that recently announced new high-end models.

On Tuesday, Fujitsu Ltd. announced a new mainframe it said would be the world's fastest. IBM dismissed that claim, saying it has provided the most powerful machines for years and will continue to do so.

The new computers are part of a model line IBM calls System-390. It is intended to be the successor to IBM's original mainframe line, the System-360, which was introduced in 1964, and the System-370, introduced in 1970.

Among the machines' advances are fiber-optic lines that, compared with the copper lines they replace, more than double the rate at which information can be transferred to the computers from the huge data-storage devices used with mainframes.

The fiber-optic lines, which transmit data as flashes of laser light, also allow the data-storage devices to be located several miles from the computers themselves, instead of several hundred feet with copper cable. IBM said that would give customers more flexibility in locating computer rooms.

IBM also will provide the means to link together up to eight of the new models to vastly increase processing power. This is the first time IBM has provided such a linkup.

In addition, IBM announced the first encryption device that can built into a computer. The optional coding device would be useful to protect the security of transactions such as electronic funds tranfers between banks, the company said. It also said the Central Intelligence Agency has expressed interest in the device.

IBM also said it will sell devices that can boost the power of the most powerful model of the new line to supercomputer status. Supercomputers are used for such calculation-intensive tasks as weather forecasting.

Business plans slight expansion

WASHINGTON (AP) — American businesses plan to increase spending for new plants and equipment just 5.1 percent over 1989, the smallest growth in three years, the government said Thursday.

Analysts said the Commerce Department survey shows that businesses remain leery of a softening economy and worried about falling profits.

The department said the survey found businesses planning to spend $526.9 billion for expansion and modernization this year, the fourth consecutive year of increased business investment.

But while the projected investment would top last year's record $501.6 billion, the 5.1 percent increase would be less than half of the 10.4 percent spending gain in 1989 and the lowest since a 3.1 percent advance in 1987.

Capital spending rose 9.5 percent in 1988.

The new estimate also is down from the 5.5 percent spending increase that businesses said they planned in the previous survey completed in May.

"It confirms the economy is sluggish and expectations for the future are that it will continue to be sluggish," said economist Thomas Runiewicz of the WEFA Group in Bala Cynwyd, Pa.

After-tax corporate profits, which rose just 1.5 percent from January through March, fell 0.2 percent in the second quarter and many analysts expect them to fall farther in the last half of the year.

Businesses often are reluctant to make capital investments as their profit margins weaken.

Runiewicz said the bulk of the survey was completed before the Persian Gulf crisis and added that higher prices and uncertainty after the Aug. 2 Iraqi invasion of Kuwait could cut investment spending even further. The survey was begun in July and completed in mid-August.

However, economists at Mitsubishi Bank in New York suggested in their current newsletter the crisis would have little effect on 1990 investments, "given that most of this spending is already set in motion."

Oil companies form spill group

BATON ROUGE, La. (AP) — A corporation formed by the oil industry to combat offshore spills announced Thursday it will spend $69 million for equipment in the Gulf of Mexico region, including two facilities in Louisiana.

The Marine Spill Response Corp. will establish a regional headquarters in Lake Charles and a station at Venice near the mouth of the Mississippi River, industry officials announced.

"This is great news for Louisiana," said Gov. Buddy Roemer. "This is a timely announcement since our own Oil Spill Task Force is working now to assess and evaluate resources to fight oil spills."

Louisiana is the nation's busiest offshore oil producing state, Roemer said, adding that "We're probably more vulnerable than any other state to an oil spill."

Louisiana's coast primarily consists of marshes which are rich breeding grounds for wildlife and fish.

The coastal area also is laced by 15,000 miles of pipeline and 3,600 oil well platforms.

In addition, the state's deep water terminal handles 15 percent of the nation's imported oil, said Roemer. "And our region is the import point for 65 percent of the nation's oil shipped by tankers."

The corporation plans to be fully operational within 30 months, said John Costello, a retired U.S. Coast Guard vice admiral who heads the new organization.

In addition to the Lake Charles regional facility, the network will include regional headquarters in the New York metropolitan area, Port Everglades, Fla., Port Hueneme, Calif., and Seattle, Wash.

The Governor's Oil Spill Contingency Task Force is now surveying the equipment and personnel available in the state to clean up oil spills, said Natural Resources Secretary Ron Gomez.The task force is expected to deliver a report Roemer by Oct. 1, and it is still too early to predict the full effect of the new corporation's plan, he added.

The regional headquarters in Lake Charles will have 64 full-time employees and will operate around the clock, said Larry Wall, spokesman for Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association. The MSRC will have contracts to use other cleanup personnel from throughout the Gulf region if necessary, he added.

Deep water oil port gets the green light

HOUSTON (AP) — An energy consortium has agreed to proceed with preliminary plans to build a deepwater port that would ease supertanker traffic in Galveston Bay, but a final decision on the project probably won't be made until next year.

Backers of the proposal, led by Phillips Petroleum Co., voted Wednesday to go ahead with detailed studies of the $1.2 billion project dubbed TexPort, which would be located 27 miles off Freeport.

The port would be capable of moving 2 million barrels of imported oil a day from foreign tankers to undersea pipelines already crossing the Gulf of Mexico. The oil would flow through the pipelines to utilities and refineries on the Gulf Coast.

"It looks favorable so far," said George Minter, a spokesman for Phillips in Bartlesville, Okla. "We're basically trying to get some things moving here. We're still very interested or we wouldn't have decided to move on."

The port would cut down on tanker traffic in Galveston Bay and the Houston Ship Channel, lowering the risk of accidents and oil spills, backers said.

They also said that any spills that do occur would pose less of an environmental hazard since cleanup crews would have a 27-mile buffer zone to contain the oil before it washes ashore.

Some 700,000 gallons of oil spilled into Galveston Bay after a tanker collided with two of three barges under tow by a tugboat in the Houston Ship Channel July 28. Earlier, 3.9 million gallons of oil leaked into the gulf after an a June 8 explosion and fire aboard the supertanker Mega Borg.

Minter said the 18 energy companies backing the project decided to proceed with plans for the port Wednesday after reviewing a $100,000 consultants' study that analyzed the projected revenue for the venture and the likely demand for its services.

The official declined to discuss the study's findings or name the consultant that did the work.

Officials also have refused to identify the other companies participating in the venture, arguing that some may drop out and others may join before construction actually begins.

Minter said the companies will spend the next six months drawing up more detailed financial models for the port and compiling the information needed to receive government approval of the project.

Minter declined to say how much the companies have invested in the port proposal so far, but he did say the cost is increasing as the studies continue.

SCOTT BURNS

Two ways to help grandchildren with college

By Scott Burns

Q. I am a retired widower with three married children. I have $200,000 in different kinds of assets, a house with no mortgage, and a paid-up life insurance policy for $80,000. I am trying to invest $1,500 to $2,000 a year from current income to benefit my four grandchildren who range in age from 10 months to 11 years.

Burns

Would it be wise to start an investment for each grandchild to help with college or should I continue to make investments and help them when they attend? If investments are your suggestion, what type would you recommend considering tax consequences? — J.S., Corpus Christi, Texas.

A. Given the costs of attending college and the age span of the grandchildren, dividing $1,500 to $2,000 a year among four grandchildren is likely to create more complications than assets. One thing you can do is to continue saving and investing for your own account, making the offer that you will help each grandchild, as appropriate, when the time comes.

A second thing you can do is make a gift of your life insurance policy to an Irrevocable Trust for the grandchildren. While there is no guarantee that you will die and the trust will be funded before the grandchildren attend college, it is a significant gesture toward helping with college expenses.

A third thing you can do is a combination of the first two. Take the money you were going to save and purchase a single payment life insurance policy. At age 65 you have a life expectancy of about 15 years. Depending on the company, $1,000 of premium will buy $2,500 to $4,000 of life insurance with a typical policy providing a little over $3,000.

If you die at expectancy, you will have enjoyed, in effect, a "return" of about 8.3 percent, tax free, on your "investment" in life insurance. If you die before expectancy, the effective return will be greater. While this is not a wonderful return, it is certain, it is committed, it has no difficulties with year-to-year taxes, and you would be hard pressed to find an investment vehicle that would produce the same results. Since you have ample resources, you don't have to worry particularly about the possibility that you will still be alive when some of your grandchildren are going to college.

You'll be happy about that... and you'll have money to give.

Q. I have followed your column for many months and am amazed by some of the questions, particularly those from people with several hundred thousand dollars, home paid for, a pension, CDs, etc., in addition to their Social Security but still asking for ways to increase their income!

I am 75, my wife is 68, and our combined Social Security income is $1,700 per month. I do not have a pension (was self-employed) but we have IRAs of $48,000 and a variety of other investments. I could raise about $340,000 in cash in about two weeks, excluding our home which is paid for.

I am not interested in stocks (I went down that road last year and lost $20,000). In my life I could make money and save some, but never learned how to invest it. The scars from the 1929 crash are still a grim reminder to me!

Where have I gone wrong? Is there anything I should do to correct my past mistakes? — W.Y., Corpus Christi, Texas.

A. What mistakes? You have avoided doing something you don't know how to do and did something you knew how to do — work. While you were doing it you accumulated enough in assets to put you in a category congressional researchers would classify as "rich." Without getting into a contest about what is "rich" and what isn't, you have managed to accumulate a net worth that is about 10 TIMES what the average American has.

Keep doing what you have been doing... and enjoy it.

Q. We are a 64-year-old retired childless couple. We own our home, have no debts, and are in good health. We have a total income from Social Security, pension, interest and dividends of $36,000 a year with the investment income being generated by about $250,000 in CDs, utility stocks, etc.

We also have two tax deferred annuities which will mature in May, 1991. Each was a $30,000 original investment which will grow to $85,000 at maturity for a total of $170,000. Should we (1) cash in the annuities on maturity; (2) take the $1,180 monthly payment on a joint survivor plan, ten years certain; (3) cash in one and roll over the second; or (4) take a $590 monthly annuity from one and cash the second? — T.V., Peoria, Ariz.

A. If you value money at 7 percent, the present value of 10 years of $1,180-a-month payments is about $101,600. This is the LEAST you would receive if you annuitized. If you lived to your joint expectancy of 22 years, your monthly income would have a present value of $158,700. Since the annuity will be worth less than the contract you have, my preference would be to cash in the contracts and pay the tax obligations on the accumulated interest.

I know that sounds horrible but even if you pay it all at the top tax bracket, 33 percent, you'll still net $133,700.

That amount won't produce $1,180 a month in lifetime investment income... but you don't need to maximize income. You can invest this amount and build a larger estate to benefit the charity of your choice.

TI executive gets the word on information

By Michael Morrison
Plano Star Courier

PLANO, Texas (AP) — Tucked away in a surprisingly small office at the Texas Instruments Spring Creek facility in Plano, John W. White goes about his business these days in a calm, deliberate approach.

White

"I'm very much a hands-on type manager," he said. "I like to know what's going on in the organization."

Without being told, few would realize that White, 51, heads a new entity, formed only a year ago, that is attempting to focus the work of numerous TI divisions consisting of more than 9,000 employees scattered around the world.

Yet White, a confident and self-described competitive individual, knows he's got a tiger by the tail. And he loves it.

"TI has given me an opportunity to do what I do best that is, manage organizations and building effective information systems," said White, president of the Information Technology Group (ITG) and a vice president of TI.

"It has given me a vehicle to reach my career objective of being an effective manager of a high-tech organization," said White, who also is considered the architect of the company's state-of-the-art global communications system.

TI officials say this new strategic business unit combines the company's skills in computing hardware and software.

Dallas-based TI wants the new entity to provide customers with products to improve their "productivity," one of those buzzwords of the '90s that is integrally linked to the impact of increased global competition.

"I think it is a survival issue for companies to have effective information technology solutions," said White. "And integrating them on an enterprise-wide basis is also a key and critical step."

"Our thrust with the Information Technology Group was to bring together factory automation, computer systems automation, peripheral products and, most significantly, software tools, to facilitate the development of these solutions," he said.

ITG's revenues account for the majority of TI's digital products category, which generated $1.024 billion in fiscal 1989.

The burgeoning information services, or technology, arena is expected to reach a $1 trillion market by the year 2000. The worldwide market will consist of computers, communications capabilities and an increasing penetration of software products.

TI officials say its computer-aided software engineering (CASE) product, known as the Information Engineering Facility, provides the best example of its strategy.

IEF is a software tool that enables management information systems to be developed more quickly, improves the quality of these systems and reduces maintenance costs.

Revenues from the IEF business have doubled annually for the past three years, and an increasing share of TI's revenues in digital products are expected to come from software and related services that offer the dual gems of high growth and high margins.

"We are convinced that the information technology sector is going to be a major business opportunity in the future," said White, "and we'd very definitely like to participate as a significant player."

White said the first phase in the ITG's formation, which focused on organizational and financial restructuring, is essentially complete.

However, the next step involves a restructuring of the ITG's technology, or products, and will probably take longer, perhaps another year or more, said White.

"The products aren't things that you can turn on a dime," he said. "Whenever you bring these large organizations together, it does take some time to get the planning completed and to execute some of the strategic thrusts that (TI) wants to put into place."

White is no stranger to the TI corporate environment.

Prior to being named president of the ITG, he served as senior vice president of Information Systems and Services, TI's internal management information systems division, which subsequently merged into the ITG.

White, who received an undergraduate degree in physics and math from Central Missouri State and a masters in math from the University of Kansas, joined TI in 1961.

Until 1969, he was a member of the Technical Staff, working on efforts such as radar systems simulation and military products software.

From 1969 to 1973, he held management positions in systems software development at Electronic Data Systems Corp. and Tres Utilities Systems.

White returned to TI in 1973 and served as manager of Information Services, where he was responsible for TI's worldwide computing-communications network.

In 1977, he became manager of Information Systems and Services, responsible for TI's internal management information systems along with computing-communications.

In September 1989, he got the opportunity to head up the newly-formed ITG.

"I felt it was a significant challenge for me," said White.

"The Whole Truth," by Anthony Robinson. Donald I. Fine. 316 Pages. $19.95.

By Frank Stilley
Associated Press

■ A Review

When a fictional murder mystery reads exactly like a true case, the story almost inevitably is a winner.

That's what happens with Anthony Robinson's new novel, "The Whole Truth." It puts Robinson into a class with the very best.

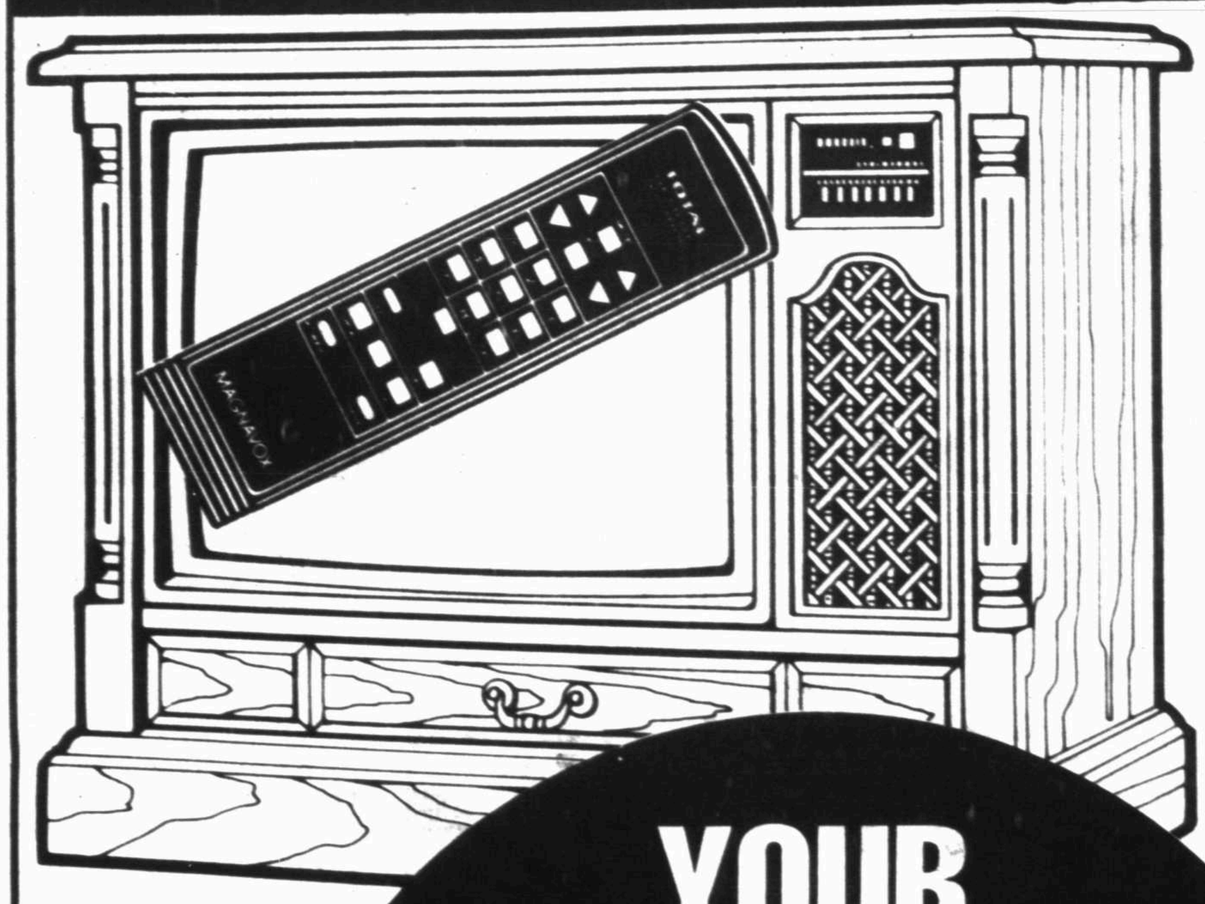

The story is quite straightforward, beginning with the murder and rape of the wife of a well-to-do company owner in a small town. Every single clue, and damning ones at that, point squarely to the husband.

From the start, however, the reader knows he is innocent. Nevertheless, he finally is put on trial and the odds seem hopeless. In time, there are a few clues as to whom the real killer is. Sharp readers will spot them, but characters in the book don't.

In court, the district attorney is determined to convict the husband. It will boost his re-election prospects greatly.

But just before the jury renders its verdict, things take a great many strange and unexpected turns. The windup is a real rouser.

'Blithe Spirit'

Joe D. Williams Midland Reporter-Telegram

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

ODESSA — "Probably Noel Coward is turning over in his grave right now because of some of the things we've done to his play," said Evelyn Jones, director of the Globe Theatre's upcoming production of "Blithe Spirit."

"But I think any great playwright and any great play can withstand different types of production. Some productions work and some do not. I happen to feel, and I think my cast and the production staff share this feeling, this one is going to work. It's going to be a delightfully entertaining evening for anyone who wants to attend."

Those changes include staging the production in modern times rather than in the early 1940s. And, Ms. Jones said, "Changing some references to some things that people in our part of the country and in our day and time don't really relate to."

Ms. Jones, who is from Monahans, also has chosen to draw broader humor than usual into this drawing room drama.

"Noel Coward's play is like most of his plays — fairly talky. It's primarily a lot of sitting around and talking. We have decided to take a little more physical approach to it.

"I think that's why it's going to come off a little funnier than other productions of this particular play might. It's got a lot of physical comedy, slapstick, but not to the point of it being farce."

She stressed that this production is family entertainment.

"Even though the younger kids might not totally understand the story, there's enough physical comedy in it to keep them busy," said Ms. Jones.

She encourages students to attend because "Blithe Spirit" is a classic and a good example of Coward's drawing room comedy.

"Blithe Spirit" is the story of Charles Condomine, a novelist, and his two wives: Ruth, his present wife; and Elvira, his first wife who happens to be dead. Through a zany psychic named Madame Arcati, Elvira materializes and proceeds to totally disrupt the Condomines' happy lives.

"I had a 12-year-old boy tell me — I had thought it but had never mentioned it to anybody — that the story about Charles Condomine whose first wife materializes through a medium is very similar to the recent movie 'Ghost.' I don't want to give people the wrong impression. It's not like that, but it has some similarities."

Another update in the production is the song which brings Elvira back to her husband's side.

"The song triggers the actual occurrence of the ghost. We've picked another song that we are using. I think people will be pretty surprised."

Even through the play is being staged in Odessa, few of those involved in the production are from Odessa. Cast members Andy Salcedo, Jennifer Helms, Kelly Newsom, Jo Hayes, Marty Cloy and Michael Trost are all from Midland; the lone Odessan is Jo Richards.

"Almost the entire production staff is from Monahans so we've brought Midland and Monahans together in Odessa with the exception of Jo," Ms. Jones said.

His music is what's important to Cab Calloway

"I was always terrible at remembering lyrics and so I'd just shout 'hi-de-ho' in place of some words. When I saw how people reacted, I just kept 'hi-de-ho-ing.'"
— Cab Calloway

By John Rogers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Don't bring up all that legend stuff with Cab Calloway.

He's not in the mood.

Yeah. He's been around. How many years now? Well, just say 60 if you need a number. But that's not important.

What's important is the music. It's what keeps the 82-year-old "hi-de-ho" king on the road and away from his home in White Plains, N.Y., much of the year.

It doesn't matter what town he's in anymore. Just find a spot and a band and he'll be there. He was in Europe in the spring. He's been all over the United States this summer.

"It doesn't mean anything to me, it's just part of the routine," Calloway said when asked if he was looking forward to two recent performances at the Hollywood Bowl. "If I wasn't here, I'd just be someplace else this weekend."

Sound harsh? Perhaps, but after all the guy is a legend, even if it bugs him to admit it. One could tell by the awe-struck looks on the faces of the musicians when he glided out on stage during rehearsal, just like one of those old black-and-white film clips from the 1930s.

One could see it again when he sang "Minnie the Moocher," and he held that last note on "St. James Infirmary" longer than a human being ought to be allowed to, when he swayed and strutted around stage like some nimble tightrope walker.

Those moves have slowed a bit since the '30s, a time when Calloway could have danced Michael Jackson or Mick Jagger into the ground. And maybe the hair is white and thinner now, the midsection thicker and that classically handsome face lined and puffy after eight decades of full-throttle living. But every bit of his voice is still there — and every bit of the style and grace that made the legend.

"Nobody," he answers tartly.

No, really.

"I don't know — it's been too long," he finally offers. As he does, he peers off into space as if to recall those wonderful days when jazz was king — those days of Louis Armstrong, Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Lena Horne and others. He worked with them all.

"No, I'll tell you who my heroes are," he finally says, wheeling around to face his interviewer. "My heroes are the notes, man. The music itself. You understand what I'm saying? I love the music. The music is my hero."

'No, I'll tell you who my heroes are. My heroes are the notes, man. The music itself. You understand what I'm saying? I love the music. The music is my hero.'
— Cab Calloway

Indeed, Calloway, who was born Cabell Calloway on Christmas Day in Rochester, N.Y., gave up a law career for music. His old Lincoln University classmate, Thurgood Marshall, stayed in school and made quite a name for himself on the U.S. Supreme Court.

"Yeah," Calloway says, smiling at the memory. "I went to high school with him, too. He's a good old guy.

"I was studying law and I got involved in music, so I put the law career down for music."

Any regrets?

"Nah. But it wouldn't matter much now, would it?"

The music started in earnest sometime in the '20s, when he became a part-time singer in Baltimore, and joined an all-male quartet in the revue "Plantation Days."

"Really, I don't remember," Calloway laughs when pressed for more specifics. "I don't want to remember. It's been too many years to want to remember."

But it was in 1930, he concedes, that he hooked up with another legend, Harlem's Cotton Club.

"They wanted a band up there to follow Duke Ellington and they picked me," he said.

He took the fabled old nightclub by storm. Soon there were not only concerts but hit movies such as "Stormy Weather" and "International House," and a string of Broadway shows. He also found time to get married and have children. His daughter, Chris, is a singer who has performed with her father in recent years.

And always there was the music: one big-band aggregation of brilliant musicians after another, each led by the dressed-to-kill dandy, the wild, leaping, gyrating band leader with the unbelievable voice. They cranked out such hits as "The Jumpin' Jive," "Reefer Man," "It Ain't Necessarily So." They created musical styles that everybody else copied.

They first did "Minnie the Moocher" in 1931. More than a half-century later, people sing it all over the place. Even those who don't know they know it sing the chorus: "Hi-de-hi-de-hi-de-ho."

"I needed a theme song and I knew 'Minnie' would be a good one," Calloway says of the tune he wrote about the "lowdown hootchie kootcher" with the heart as big as a whale. "It really doesn't mean anything."

But it made him the king of "hi-de-ho" and brought him success that didn't slow until the '50s. Even after that there were more movies and plays, but rock and other musical forms crowded aside the big bands.

Then The Blues Brothers came along. Comedians Dan Aykroyd and John Belushi took to the stage as cheap-suited, sullen-looking, ersatz rhythm and blues singers, mimicking the music they loved. When they put their act on the big screen as "The Blues Brothers" movie in 1980, Calloway went with them. He sang "Minnie the Moocher" and stole the show.

"I think a lot of the young people knew me," he says now. "They just didn't recognize me until 'The Blues Brothers' movie."

Now that they recognize him once again, he's in no mood to slow down. He'll perform for the public, he says, "Whenever they want me."

Elwood P. Dowd Stewart's most popual role

— Elwood P. Dowd

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — James Stewart was talking the other day about one of his favorite co-stars, a 6-foot pooka named Harvey.

What's a pooka? It's an oversized rabbit, considered fictional by most folks, but very much real to Elwood P. Dowd in the 1950 movie "Harvey." The Universal Pictures comedy has been released for home video, along with a six-minute introduction by Stewart himself.

"Coming back in video — I kind of like the idea," he remarked in an interview at the Beverly Hills Hotel. "People can see the whole picture with no interruptions for anything.

With Henry Koster as director, the movie is all about Elwood, who is in his early 40s and shares a house with his older sister, Veta, and niece, Myrtle Mae. He is the most considerate of men, forever holding doors open and offering invitations for dinner, a penchant for martinis his only vice.

Why is he so happy? According to Elwood, he was walking down the street one evening when he encountered a large, white rabbit leaning against a lamppost and the two became instant soulmates. Elwood has no job — a large inheritance took care of that — and no sweetheart, but always has a wonderful time thanks to the towering and invisible presence of his dear friend, Harvey.

"Harvey and I have things to do," Elwood says. "We sit in the bars ... have a drink or two ... play the juke box. Very soon the faces of the other people turn towards me and they smile. They say: 'We don't know your name, mister, but you're all right. All right.' Harvey and I warm ourselves in these golden moments."

"I got into it after the war, quite by accident. I went to New York to see the play; Frank Fay had been playing Elwood P. Dowd for quite a while.

James Stewart

"During the intermission, the producer, Brock Pemberton, came up and asked what I thought of the play. I said, 'I just think it's the most wonderful thing I've seen in my life.' He said, 'How'd you like to play it?' I thought he was kidding, but I said, 'I'd love to.' In three weeks I was playing it."

After three years in the play, Fay wanted a vacation, and Stewart was delighted to substitute. Pemberton invited all the drama critics to cover the new Dowd. The result: "I've never gotten such bad reviews."

Stewart returned for another Fay vacation the following year. Again the critics were invited. "The reviews were even worse than what I got before," he said.

Undeterred, Stewart continued playing the role, and years later, when he was a better fit for the age of Elwood P. Dowd, he revived it in New York and London, with Helen Hayes as Dowd's dismayed sister.

Stewart discovered a regular pattern at the Saturday matinees. Parents would bring their young children, and inevitably in the first act one of them would call out, "Where's the rabbit?"

"That was always the biggest laugh in the play," he said.

Chase declared Stewart her favorite to star in the movie version of "Harvey," and a deal was struck. However, the actor had a certain reluctance.

'It seems that in the mail I've gotten for the past 10 years, almost everybody speaks of 'Harvey.' It's one of their favorite pictures...'I wasn't sure about the movie. To me the whole idea is that you have to convince the audience that there is a rabbit up there with you, and you're talking to him. With the movie you have no audience...But the thing is strong enough so it did work.'
— James Stewart

Elwood is among Stewart's most popular roles.

"In this world you must be oh so smart or oh so pleasant," Elwood says of his unflappable geniality, and that sums up the sweet comedy. Even Stewart has said his portrayal was too nice. He brought out more haunting aspects of Elwood in later appearances, including a 1972 television production.

Jimmy Stewart at 82 no longer makes movies, but he remains busy, flying around the country to receive honors, appear for worthy causes and to talk about his book, "Jimmy Stewart's Poems." The slender volume, containing a total of four poems, has sold 350,000 hardcover copies. The paperback, due later this year, is expected to zoom over 1 million, and Stewart has now recorded an audio version.

"I love the idea when people say, 'When's your new book of poems coming out?' It took me 20 years to write these four poems. When I write another book, I'll be 102 years old. So I think I'm going to leave the thing. This'll be my book of poetry."

SPIRIT: Cast members enyoing production

(From 1 H)

"I've thoroughly enjoyed working with these people from Midland," Ms. Jones said. "We seemed to kind of instantly enjoy each other. It was like we had known each other for a long time and working in community theater that doesn't always occur."

Since the cast is having such fun with this production, audience members will have a good time, Ms. Jones said.

In addition to teaching English, speech and theater in the Monahans school district, Ms. Jones directs the community theater productions there and was the director for "This West Texas Country," which was taken to Balaklava, Australia, Monahans' sister city.

Although they are not bringing a show, the Australians are returning the visit this month.

"They'll be in town on our second weekend, and I'm hoping some of them will be able to see 'Blithe Spirit.'"

Originally, Ms. Jones was asked to direct a show which, she said, "I found a bit racially provocative. I didn't think that we really needed to do that in this part of the country."

The production was "To Kill a Mockingbird."

Ms. Jones says she talked with the Globe's founder, Marjorie Morris, who had invited her to direct. Ms. Morris asked Ms. Jones what she would like to direct.

"I had prepared a list. When I got to 'Blithe Spirit,' she was very familiar with that play. One of the things that the Globe strives to do is produce classics — plays that are considered classics."

The play opens Thursday and will be on stage Thursday through Sept. 16 and Sept. 21-22. For more information or to make reservations call the Globe, 1-332-1586.

Ms. Jones finds "Blithe Spirit" a perfect choice for the Globe because the theater "was created to provide educational experiences for people in this part of the country as far as classical literature, dramatic literature is concerned."

"There is a pride about the Globe and about performing in the Globe that just kind of hits you between the eyes when you first walk through the doors.

"People come here from all over the world and when they're visiting in our Permian Basin area, that's one of the things that they want to make a point to see. While we were setting up for this show last month, there were people from Australia and from Canada who came over to look at the Globe.

"It's just a very interesting place to work. It's just a very interesting place to do theater. It's got wonderful acoustics and like every theater, it has its problems, but the spirit of the Globe is something that I think will endure as long as there is a Globe."

'Carousel' spun in 1945

YOUR HOROSCOPE

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Self-employed people will do especially well in the coming months. Paying more attention to the feelings of your loved ones will help you overcome any domestic problems. Observe the rules of common sense where your health is concerned. A change in attitude will make marriage more rewarding than ever. Social events are starred in early 1991.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actors Michael Keaton and Cliff Robertson, quarterback Joe Theismann, author Leo Tolstoy.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You get satisfaction from entertaining at home now. The cost will prove less than anticipated. You will end the month more popular and maybe more prosperous. Pursue romance tonight.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Spend some quiet time alone and you will be ready to make wise decisions about the future. Mate or partner is sympathetic. Bring sensitive issues out into the open. Candid conversation is welcome.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Pleasing yourself will be easy today! Family members are likely to go along with your ideas. Catch up on your reading about foreign countries. Plan a unique vacation for your whole household.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You could be asked to mediate a dispute between two close friends. Avoid taking sides. The Sunday paper yields good job leads. Romance will be happier if you devote more time to it.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Although impending changes may be a source of concern, eventually they will bring you greater success. You have the chance to view your life from a totally new perspective.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Those with children may be feeling the financial pinch. A sacrifice is well worth it. An older person has terrific ideas. Talk to someone about your mixed emotions.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A misunderstanding could prove expensive. Your high ideals show you the right path in romance. Pay more attention to details. You could find your dream house where you least expect it.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Complicated negotiations reach a turning point. Be willing to make concessions. Take advantage of trends. A platonic relationship intensifies. Spend more time with your family.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Yesterday's positive outlook lingers on. Be alert to any complications that develop in late afternoon or evening. Friends could be in a touchy mood. Avoid making snap judgments.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A neighbor may do something kind. Be appreciative but keep your distance. Distant affairs seem more vexing than usual. Stay in control of your temper to avoid an unpleasant confrontation.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You may find yourself involved with someone who is becoming very serious about you. Know your own heart. You may not want to make a serious commitment at this time. Be truthful.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A fairly carefree day should lie ahead. Trust your intuition. Self-improvement projects are favored, especially those involving philosophy and education.

Opening lead: Nine of ♣

One of the quickest and most accurate cardplayers we know is Britain's John Collings. It took him all of five seconds to find the winning line on this deal.

The auction was natural. West's double of two hearts was for penalties, showing long hearts, which suggested North would have no wasted values in that suit. Hence, South's slightly aggressive jump to four spades.

West led the nine of clubs, won in the closed hand. The king of spades lost to the ace, dummy playing the six, and back came the six of hearts. Since that was almost surely a singleton, declarer rose with the ace.

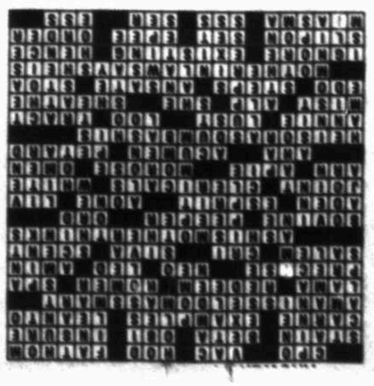

Everything pointed to East being long in the minors. Also, East had to have the ace of diamonds for the penalty double. That was all the information Collings needed to come up with a spectacular play.

Declarer cashed the queen of trumps, to which both defenders followed and on which the table's eight was jettisoned. Then came the four of trumps!

To everyone's surprise, East had won a second trump trick, but having the lead was not an unalloyed pleasure. With nothing but minor-suit cards left, East was forced to give declarer access to dummy. If the defender chose to exit with a club, declarer would get four discards on the table's clubs and lose only one diamond. A diamond exit would give declarer three club tricks and two diamonds. Either way, 10 tricks were sure.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Reception set for institute

ODESSA — A public reception honoring exhibits at the Art Institute for the Permian Basin is set for 2:30 p.m. today at the Institute, 4909 E. University Blvd.

The locally based Watercolor Horizons Group's annual juried exhibition opens today and will be on display through Sept. 22. Mackey Jackson, Watercolor Horizons' show chairman, chose native Texan and regionally noted watercolorist Nel Byrd as juror for the exhibit. Byrd is a signature member of both the Southwestern Watercolor society and Artists and Craftsmen Associated, a member of the Texas Watercolor Society and an associate member of the American Watercolor Society. The Watercolor Horizons Group is a collection of artists from the Permian Basin area.

In addition, a showing of watercolors by former Odessa and recognized architect Johnnie Fields remains through Sept. 23. In the paintings, Fields uses images of buildings and landscapes to explore structural and spatial relationships.

And, the Sixth Annual American Plains Artists Exhibition is showing through Sept. 22 at the Institute.

For more information call the Institute, 1-368-7222.

KISS

KISS members, from left, Druce Kulick, Eric Carr, Paul Stanley and Gene Simmons, will perform at Ector County Coliseum Sept. 20. Showtime is 7:30 p.m. Other acts on the venue are Winger and Vixen. Tickets, priced at $17, may be purchased at Endless Horizons, Odessa and Midland, and at the coliseum the day of the show.

Joe Ely in concert

Joe Ely returns to Dos Amigos for a Sept. 29 performance. Also performing will be guitarist Eric Johnson. Tickets, priced at $10 in advance and $12 at the door, may be purchased at Dos Amigos, Odessa.

Wurstfest planned

NEW BRAUNFELS — The Wurstfest Association of New Braunfels will hold its 30th Annual Wurstfest Nov. 2 through 11.

Located at the Wurstfest Grounds in New Braunfels, the festival will feature the entertainment of the Schorsch Pfeiler Band from Munich, Germany.

The schedule for the Wurstfest is:

Weekdays 5 to 11:30 p.m.
Saturdays 11 a.m. to midnight.
Sundays 11 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.

The Wurstfest will close at 10 p.m. Nov. 11.

To find the Wurstfest, exit IH35 at Walnut St. (exit 186), drive 1½ miles north on Walnut to Landa St., turn right and follow the signs to Landa Park. The grounds are inside Landa Park.

Jazz Classic slated

This year's performers include Randy Sandke, Warren Vache, Dan Barrett, Bill Watrous, Ken Peplowski, Flip Phillips, Lew Tabackin, Cal Collins, Dick Hyman, Derek Smith, Ralph Sutton, Phil Flanigan, Milt Hinton, Jack Lesberg, Jake Hanna, Butch Miles and Jackie Williams.

Checks are now being accepted. Seats are assigned on a first-come, first-serve basis. Each badge costs $125, covers all sets and may be used by more than one person, but not for the same set.

For more information write the Midland Jazz Classic, P.O. Box 4054, Midland 79704, or call 683-5208 or 682-5334.

Censorship display set

ODESSA — Big Red's Art Groupies, in cooperation with the Texas Humanities Resource Center, presents "The Bonfire of Liberties: Censorship of the Humanities," an exhibit of photographs, texts, drawings, printed materials, news articles, a display of censored books and a Walter Cronkite video commentary on the subject of censorship.

"The exhibition is intended to provide the public with information upon which intelligent attitudes, opinions and behaviors may be developed on the controversial subject of censorship of the arts," says a release from Big Red's.

The exhibit opens Saturday with a 2 to 5 p.m. reception and will continue through Sept. 27 at BRAG, 122 E. 52nd. For more information call 1-368-0739.

Group has new directors

James Cramer and Friends Dance Company announces interim directors Judy Coleman and Karen Keaton Scarcelli for the 1990-91 season.

The Midland-based company utilizes dancers from the Permian Basin and will continue to perform for community organizations and schools.

The theatrical dance company was founded in 1988 under the direction of James W. Cramer. Cramer will be spending this year dancing with Nevada Dance Theatre, a classical ballet company in Las Vegas, Nev.

Ms. Coleman and Ms. Crarcelli will share the responsibilities of teaching company classes, scheduling and rehearsing new and existing choreography and directing performances. For more information call 683-3445.

"Steel Magnolias" is on stage through Sept. 22 at Theatre Midland, 2000 W. Wadley Ave.

"Written by Robert Harling, the action takes place in a beauty parlor where Southern ladies really let down their hair," says a release from Midland Community Theatre.

The show, which is directed by Don Bachmann, MCT's executive director, is co-produced by Shell Foundation. Cast members include Mary Lou Cassidy, Loree Fitz-Gerald, Laura Keller, Sally Mogford, Jennifer Platen and Dana Ritter. George Robertson is the stage manager, assisted by Carolyn Sutton and Kay Brockman. Marilyn Allen is assistant director.

One matinee is scheduled for 2:30 p.m. Sept. 9.

First ladies display focus

The collection consists of paintings of the presidents and first ladies.

The exhibition also includes autographs, commemorative items and reproduction of the china used in the White House. The centerpiece of the exhibit is a half-size mannequin of the inaugural gown worn by Lady Bird Johnson.

This exhibit will be open to the public until Sept. 21 during regular museum hours, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., Tuesday through Saturday. There is no admission charge.

Septemberfest closing

Septemberfest '90 closes today on the grounds of the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave.

Sponsored by Las Manos, the Museum's auxiliary organization, Septemberfest features works by 70 artists from across the United States as well as Kinderfest, a carnival for children of all ages.

Continuous entertainment is provided and a variety of speciality food items from local eating establishments as well as sponsored organizations and clubs in the area.

Hours today are noon to 5 p.m.

'Play On!' tryouts set

ODESSA — The Permian Playhouse of Odessa announces auditions for the comedy "Play On!" will be held at 7:30 p.m. Sept 24 and 25.

"A perfect comedy for any theater group since it's the story of a theater group trying desperately to put on a play amid all kinds of maddening interference from its haughty authoress who keeps revising the script until almost opening night," says a release from the Playhouse.

Roles are available for three men and seven women of varying ages. Those interested in technical assignments are asked to sign up at auditions. For information, scripts and rehearsal schedules call the Playhouse, 1-362-2329.

Walne paintings at club

Walne

Her works include scenes from China, Hawaii, New Orleans as well as florals and abstracts.

Mrs. Walne's works have been featured at Theatre Midland, the Museum of the Southwest, NCNB Midland and Midland College where she continues her art studies.

Exhibit about scientists

"Organizing the Unknown: German Science and the American West," an exhibition from the Newberry Library Center for the History of the American Indian in Chicago, is at the Museum of the Southwest, 1705 W. Missouri Ave., through Sept. 30.

The panel exhibition presents the story fo German scientists, travelers, explorers and writers whose curiosity brought them to America.

Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday and 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday. The museum grounds are open today from noon to 5 p.m. due to Septemberfest '90.

Display satirizes war

ODESSA — "WAR-R-R POTS," an exhibit of ceramic pots and plaques satirizing the modern world's preoccupation with warmaking, are on display through Sept. 28 at the Odessa College Instructional Building Teaching Gallery.

The works were created by E. Barry Phillips Jr., associate professor of art at OC. Of the works, Phillips said they are from a continuing series designed to reflect "man's casual and comic attitude toward armed conflicts around the world."

Gallery art on display

Exhibition artists are Carol Bailey, Gary Bain, Travis Bechman, Ramah Bosecher, Cristi Branum, Pat Cowan, Paula Cox and Boyd Harris.

MOSC season scheduled to begin

Staff Report

The Midland-Odessa Symphony & Chorale begins its season this month.

The symphony presents a classical series, pops series, family concerts and chamber music by the Thouvenel String Quartet and the Lone Star Brass Quintet as well as special performances by the Symphony Chorale, the Pops Choir and the West Texas Youth Chorale.

Artistic director and conductor for the MOSC is Don Th. Jeager. Director of the chorale is Rob Hunt.

This year's classical season includes performances by pianists Jose Feghali and Ralph Votapek, Oct. 25 and 27; William Preucil Jr., violin, Nov. 13 and 15; Jacqueline Hofto, flute and accordian, Jan. 18 and 19; winners of the National Young Artists Competition, March 15 and 16; and Verdi's "Te Deum," April 19 and 20.

The pops subscription season features four concerts, Oct. 25 and 27, Nov. 29 and Dec. 1, Feb. 15 and 16 and May 10 and 11.

Each concert is performed in Midland and in Odessa.

In addition, the MOSC is performing at the new Morton H. Meyerson Symphony Center in Dallas at 2:30 p.m. Sept. 30.

For this performance, two Van Cliburn competition winners will join the symphony as soloists. Jose Feghali, gold medalist in the 1985 competition and Ralph Votapek, 1962 gold medalist, will perform Concerto for Two Pianos in D minor by Francis Poulenc and Concerto No.1 in C minor for Two Pianos by J.S. Bach.

In addition to the two piano concertos, the program will feature the world premiere of "Lone Star Fanfare" by Ray Luke, a work commissioned specifically for the symphony's Lone Star Brass Quintet and for the Meyerson performance; Symphony No. 2 (Mysterious Mountain)" by Alan Hovhaness; and Symphonic Metamorphoses of Themes by Weber by Paul Hindemith.

Weekend festivities prior to the Meyerson concert will include a gala reception at the Dallas Museum of Art featuring a unique presentation of jewels by Cartiers International known as the Panther Collection. At all events, the Midland-Odessa Symphony wine will be served, highlighting a partnership between West Texas business and the arts.

Bottled and produced by Cordier Estates Inc., of Fort Stockton, Ste. Genevieve has produced the Texas classic Series to honor the MOSC.

Tickets may be purchased through Rainbow Ticket Master outlets at a cost of $10 to $30. The performance is sponsored by NCNB.

For more information call the MOSC, 563-5269.

NBC wins latest Nielsen ratings battle

LOS ANGELES (AP) — NBC was the big winner in the latest network ratings battle, capturing seven of the top 10 shows on television.

The victory also marked NBC's 16th consecutive week as the top-rated network, according to figures released Wednesday by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

Overall ratings showed NBC far ahead with a 10.6 average. CBS placed second with 8.8, and ABC was last with 8.7.

The latest rankings show a marked difference from the two preceding weeks, when interest in the Persian Gulf crisis helped CBS newsmagazine "60 Minutes" win unprecedented, back-to-back No. 1 victories.

Sunday's show contained no updates on the Persian Gulf. "60 Minutes" spokesman Roy Brunett said the drop-off in viewers was caused by Labor Day travelers.

"I think the biggest reason was that it was a holiday weekend," Brunett said. "People just weren't watching television."

In the latest standings, "60 Minutes" plummeted to a two-way tie for 15th place with NBC's comedy series "Grand."

NBC's spinoff of the Academy Award-winning film "In the Heat of the Night," grabbed its highest ranking ever. The story of a white Southern police chief (Carroll O'Connor) and his new, black detective (Howard Rollins) was the No. 2 show.

Fox Broadcasting Co.'s young Bart Simpson suffered another staggering loss to veteran Bill Cosby on NBC.

A special repeat shown Monday night made "The Cosby Show" No. 5 in the Nielsen rankings. In its regular Thursday night time slot against "The Simpsons," Cosby was No. 11. The animated Simpsons finished in a four-way tie for 53rd place.

Dinosaur 'musical' to be staged at museum

The Permian Basin Petroleum Museum is sponsoring three free performances of "Dinosaurs, Dinosaurs: A Mesozoic Musical" Saturday in Midland and Sept. 16 in Odessa.

Two of the performances are set for 2:30 and 7 p.m. Saturday at the Allison Fine Arts Auditorium, Midlnad College campus. the last performance is set for 2:30 p.m. Sept. 16 at Bonham Junior High, Odessa.

"Taking us back to a time when those fascinating and enigmatic creatures ruled the earth, 'Dinosuars, Dinosaurs' is a show for the whole family," says a release from the PBPM. "This non-stop 40-minute show incorporates the best of Broadway theater in an educational format."

The show is a blend of science and entertainment which teaches sophisticated concepts of fossilization, evolution and extenction while the actor dramatizes five different species of dinosaurs.

Dinamation International Corp. in association with the Slim Goodbody Corp. of New York has produced this "enormously successful" show at museums across the United States.

According to Susan Shilling, program coordinator, Science Spectrum, Lubbock, "The Science Spectrum was delighted at the enthusiastic response to Slim Goodbody's presentation of 'Dinosaurs, Dinosaurs.' Small children, teen-agers, parents and grandparents alike joined in the fun — 'rapping' with Terrible Tyrone or exploring dangers with Mama brontosaurus. Chris' magnetic stage presence invited even the most cynical folks to dissolve in giggles and join in song and games."

Museum members may ask for preferred seating at either performance. For reservations call the museum, 683-4403.

Mary Wickes usually plays housekeeper

Wickes has appeared in nine series, five of them as housekeepers.

Wickes has kept house on television for Ronald Colman, Ezio Pinza and Peter Lind Hayes. She was the Irish housekeeper in a production of "The Canterville Ghost;" she was the original English nanny "Mary Poppins" in a 1949 special.

Her "Father Dowling" character, Marie, is the kind of role — crusty, outspoken, yet totally endearing — that Wickes has honed to perfection. Tom Bosley stars as the crime-solving priest Father Dowling, Tracy Nelson is Sister Steve and James Stephens is Father Prestwick.

Wickes said she sometimes gets letters from Catholic priests. "They always say, 'Boy, have we got somebody in the rectory like you,'" she said.

"She's no dope. She tells you what she thinks. She and Father Prestwick don't see eye-to-eye. He's apple-polishing the bishop, and she keeps him in line," Wickes said.

Occasionally, Marie — admittedly, a supporting character — gets to play a more central role in the detective work, and Wickes relishes the opportunity.

"I hope we can keep it up because it's fun," she said.

Of course, Wickes has played roles with a religious bent before — she played nuns in two movies with Rosalind Russell. She was Sister Clarissa in "The Trouble With Angels" and "Where Angels Go ... Trouble Follows."

But the bread and butter of her career has been maids, with an occasional sortie as a nurse.

She was Miss Preen, called "Miss Bedpan" by the intimidating Sheridan Whiteside, played by Monty Woolley, in "The Man Who Came to Dinner," on Broadway and in the movie, her first. She also played the role on radio and television with Fred Allen, Edward Everett Horton and Orson Welles.

She was a nurse in two series, "Julia" and "Doc." And she was the most decorated nurse in the Korean War in an episode of "M-A-S-H" written for her.

Her career has been a long one, and despite the maid-nun-nurse typecasting, a varied one.

She was only 18 when she graduated from Washington University in St. Louis and joined the Berkshire Playhouse in Massachusetts for seven seasons.

Her stage career has had many stops, including the St Louis Municipal Opera, where she's appeared in 14 productions; it is the topic of the master's thesis she is writing at UCLA.

"The Man Who Came to Dinner" was just one of five plays by George S. Kaufman in which she had roles; the dean of comic playwrights once called her "my favorite comedienne."

Wickes has appeared in 44 movies. The most recent is the as-yet-unreleased "Postcards from the Edge," the film version of Carrie Fisher's autobiographical novel which features Meryl Street, Shirley MacLaine and Richard Dreyfuss.

And she has been a television mainstay since the earliest days of the medium, a time she remembers with both fondness and discomfort.

The lights were so hot, she says, that "they used to give us salt tablets."

Some of her shows are still well-known — "Dennis the Menace" and "Julia," among them — but others have been buried by the sands of time: "Bonino," "Inside U.S.A. With Chevrolet," "The Peter Lind Hayes Show," "The Halls of Ivy," and "The Gertrude Berg Show," among them.

She remembers "Bonino," which lasted 3½ months in 1953: "Pinza played an Italian opera star, and I was his housekeeper. What else? Pinza had been in this country 26 years, but they had to translate the jokes into Italian for him before he could understand them."

She also has been a guest on other shows — "Make Room for Daddy," "Sesame Street" (she played the Plant Lady), "Match Game" and the various Lucille Ball shows.

She and Lucy were close friends, and says some of Lucy's off-camera adventures could be as funny as those on screen.

"Once Lucy and I went shopping — this was for real, not on the show," she said. "She brought the Marquis Chimps with her. One of the chimps was a baby in diapers and another was an alcoholic. Lucy was shopping for sheets, and we had these chimps parading along with us."

Trainer says chimp deserves star

By Suzan Bibisi and Kurt Sodergren
N.Y. Times News Service

NEWBURY PARK, Calif. — Cheeta, the top banana of the golden age of chimps, is a simian seeking his star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Ask him if he deserves it and the 56-year-old veteran of such films as "Bedtime for Bonzo," "Dr. Doolittle" and scores of "Tarzan" movies goes into a frenzied response of handstands, kisses, flips and lips pulled back in a gummy grin.

"I've done what I can" to get the chimp his own star, said Cheeta's 84-year-old trainer, Tony Gentry. He and Cheeta reside in a rural section of this Ventura County community, about 40 miles west of Hollywood. "I even offered to pay for it."

The stars cost $4,800 each and typically are paid for by the friends of the nominee.

Johnny Grant, chairman of the Walk of Fame committee, said last week that Cheeta was passed over for a star in June, but will be reconsidered next June. But Grant predicted competition will be stiff.

"You've got the hottest people going right now, as well as Cheeta," Grant said. "When you've got a Tom Selleck, a Tom Cruise and a Cheeta, it's difficult to get a star."

Cheeta, whose real name is Jiggs, is a veteran of more than 50 films, including scores of Tarzan movies with Johnny Weissmuller, Buster Crabbe and Herman Brix; "Bedtime for Bonzo," starring Ronald Reagan; "Dirty Work" with Stan Laurel and Oliver Hardy; and his last, "Dr. Doolittle" in 1967.

He also recently appeared on network television on "Prime Time Pets."

However, despite his credentials, he could compete next June with as many as 100 other nominees in either television or the motion picture category, Grant said.

A five-member committee chooses a total of between 18 and 20 stars each year in five categories: radio, television, recording, motion picture and live performance.

There are more nominations in television, motion picture and recording than in radio and theater, Grant said.

Stars are awarded on the basis of professional achievement and contributions to the community, Grant said, which might account for other animals, such as Rin Tin Tin, honored by the committee.

"Rin Tin Tin was one of the biggest war-bond sellers," Grant said.

Gentry said Cheeta, whom he calls his "little man" and with whom he shares daily beers and an occasional cigar, deserves a star just as much as Woody Woodpecker and Lassie, the other animals, cartoon and real, on the Walk of Fame.

"Personally, I'd like to see the 'old man' get the star," Grant said. "If I had my way, I'd be out there drinking a beer and smoking a cigar with him."

According to Susan Cox, an education coordinator at nearby Moorpark College's Exotic Animal Training and Management Center, which might one day inherit the chimp, the oldest chimp on record was a zoo animal who lived to be 55.

Trainer Tony Gentry watches Jiggs, a 56-year-old chimpanzee down a beer at his home in Newbury Park, Calif., recently. Jiggs, known by his stage name Cheeta, appeared in many of the Tarzan movies and was featured in "Bedtime for Bonzo" with Ronald Reagan. Gentry hopes to get Jiggs a star on the "Hollywood Walk of Fame."

Heston says he falls short of goal

By Diane Joy Moca
N.Y. Times News Service

LOS ANGELES — After nearly 40 years of starring in some of Hollywood's most elaborate and successful films, Charlton Heston tackles new roles with the same fervor that enabled him to carve his own place in film history.

"I find it constantly challenging, because I've never gotten it absolutely right yet, and I hope to," Heston said. "You always fall a little short of your goal in every scene. Some parts I've done many, many times. I've done five different productions of 'Macbeth,' and I hope to get one more shot at it."

He continues to hone his craft in yet another project, an original Disney film called "The Little Kidnappers."

Set in Nova Scotia at the turn of the century, the film stars Heston as a stern Scottish farmer who must care for his two recently orphaned grandchildren.

"I'm of Scottish descent on my mother's side, and the character reminded me of my great-grandfather, who I never met but heard a lot about," said the actor famous for portraying strong-willed men.

Heston not only welcomed the chance to play a rigid patriarch, he also looked forward to his first visit to Nova Scotia, where the film was shot "during the most beautiful time of the year (fall). The film really captured its beauty."

Although these attractions drew him to the role, the casting of the two children really convinced him to accept it.

"They offered me the part, and it was a good part, but I told them at the time: 'It really depends on the kids,'" he said. "With kids that young, whatever they are is what they are. It's not like directing a mature actor. If they are good, the picture will work. If the kids aren't right, Laurence Olivier couldn't make it work."

Eight-year-old Leo Wheatley and 5-year-old Charles Miller were discovered in England after an exhaustive search. This film is the first time either of them has appeared before a camera.

"I've never starred with children that young who were the center of the film. We all made the boys feel comfortable. The main problem with the little boys is to keep their focus during close-ups. Their attention wanders a bit," Heston said.

The story follows the young MacKenzie brothers (Wheatley and Miller), who are sent to Canada after their mother dies of a fever and their father dies fighting in the Boer War, which raged at the turn of the century between British and Dutch settlers in South Africa.

The bitter, lingering rivalries of this war carry over to the small coastal town where the brothers soon arrive to live with their aunt Kirsten (Leah Pinsent), their grandmother (Patricia Gage) and their grandfather James (Heston).

James MacKenzie's resentment toward his many Dutch neighbors causes Kirsten to hide her love for a local Dutch doctor (Bruce Greenwood of "St. Elsewhere"), and his fiercely unreasonable discipline disappoints the boys. Feeling rejected, the brothers discover an unattended baby and innocently decide to care for it themselves, hiding it in a secret cave. But the missing infant causes a town crisis that forces James to come to terms with his anger and his long-buried sadness over the death of his son.

Heston is just one of many veteran film stars who have starred in made-for-cable films in recent years.

"The cable companies offer an extraordinary window of opportunity (because they don't target the theatrical market)," he said. "As the cost of making feature films increases astronomically, the whole choice of the kinds of feature films that will be made is tied to the broadest possible demographic base — the 14- to 22-year-old audience. The parts for me aren't there. What am I going to do in 'Honey, I Shrunk the Kids' or 'Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles'?

"People ask me, 'Don't you ever think of retiring?' Most men retire to do something they have always wanted to do, like fishing. I've been doing what I always wanted to do, and I intend to continue."

Harpist Amy Lee plays for a crowd at the Art Institute of Chicago Tuesday. She has developed a loyal following by playing arrangements by groups such as Pink Floyd, Led Zeppelin and the Rolling Stones.

Harpist entertains diners with rock

By Jennifer Fulford

CHICAGO (AP) — It's only rock 'n' roll, but she plays it on a harp.

"I hate to play classical," says Amy Lee, who entertains lunch crowds at The Art Institute of Chicago with hits by the likes of Pink Floyd, Led Zeppelin and the Rolling Stones. "But when people request it, I get out my bag of Bach and my music stand and sit there, pluck, pluck, plucking."

Lee, 34, got tired of black-tie formals, Bach and lounge-lizard pop tunes like "Feelings" when she got hooked on rock as a teen-ager.

She has worked as a disc jockey and symphony musician, but her solo career took off after she performed rock 'n' roll during a 1981 jazz festival in Chicago. She was dubbed "The Angel of Rock."

"I remember I got a standing ovation for playing 'Stairway to Heaven,'" she said.

Lee looks the part of a rock angel. Decked out in bright colors, a short skirt, bold earrings and dark sunglasses, she taps her feet and sways as her fingers speed across the 6-foot, 47-string antique harp her father gave her when she was 7.

"The kind of music she makes should be paid attention to," said Alek Jakich, an inspector for the city of Chicago and a regular at the Art Institute's outdoor restaurant, where Lee has worked the last eight summers.

"When was the last time your heard Pink Floyd on the harp?" Jakich asked. "And it's great."

Playing rock is a switch from when Lee performed with the Northwest Indiana Symphony and the Twin City Symphony of St. Joseph, Mich. Being alone on stage is also a switch.

"I'm usually background music," the 5-foot-5 blonde said at a performance Tuesday. "So I decided, 'Why not play something I like?'"

That day, her songs by the Eurythmics, the Kinks and The Police got her a complimentary glass of wine from two women having lunch, praise from a mother visiting the gallery with her toddler, and applause after nearly every song.

"Once they hear the rock songs, then they want to request them," said Lee, who also performs in lounges and has her own jazz group.

Curtis says what he paints 'seems to burst out'

By Bob Thomas

LOS ANGELES (AP) — He stands in a verdant patio, touched by the dappled sunshine, and glances without a hint of indecision at an empty canvas.

"I never have any trouble with painting; it just seems to burst out of me," says Tony Curtis. "There is such a joy and an exuberance in it that I don't even think about what it should be or what it will be, until I start it. Once in a while, some object, some arrangement of flowers, some shapes, some colors will intrigue me, so I will copy them.

"I do a lot of sketches and a lot of drawing. But I do that to kind of inspire me. The ultimate experience is the painting."

Curtis is no Sunday painter. More than a hundred of his brightly colored canvases, reminiscent of the French impressionist Henri Matisse, have sold at prices ranging from $9,000 to $20,000. He has had six one-man shows.

The success comes at an opportune time in his life. After an acting career that has known immense fame as well as depths of alcoholic and drug despair, he seems to have found at age 65 an ideal existence. He is often hired for character roles in features and TV miniseries. Between jobs he paints, both here and in Hawaii or on film locations.

WHILE BUILDING a new house and studio, Curtis makes the Bel-Air Hotel his base in Los Angeles. He has a studio there, but on a warm summer day, he decided to paint in a patio with lush greenery and a burbling fountain. He paints swiftly, talking all the while.

"Since we're outside with a lot of green, I like the idea of doing flowers," he explains. "I like the combination of colors and shapes. So I think maybe I'm going to do a still life of some kind."

"I like this time of a painting, right now" he muses. "It almost has a way of expressing itself. It sounds a little hokey, I know, but it's almost as though the painting has a life of its own.

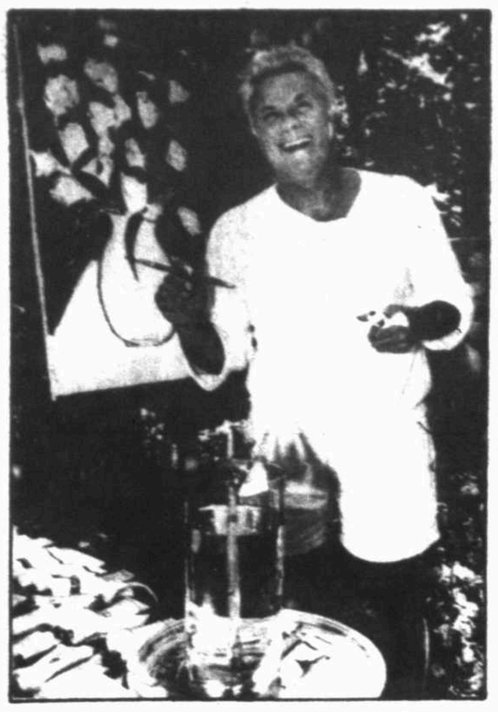

"No two paintings are alike. There are similarities, because I'm the guy who's doing it. ... I like flowers. The most appealing thing is the shapes and the combinations of the way they're put together.

"Matisse? I'm influenced by all the artists; they are all my brothers or sisters. When you stand before a painting by Matisse or Picasso or Braque or Monet, you got to realize that you stand in exactly the same space that they stood once. You know? If not magical, but there's a mystery about that space. These artists are telling you in silent language how to express your feelings."

CURTIS STANDS back from the canvas and nods his approval of the pattern. He immediately begins painting, squeezing gobs of bright paint directly onto his brush. No palette for him.

"There was a time when I used a palette," he says. "But I find this way of expressing myself with bursts of color is the most appealing for me. I like the way the strokes of the brush are coming out. The nice thing about working with acrylics is that it gives you the same feeling that oil does but you have to work much quicker. You know? It's the quickness that gives it action for me.

"I always do go back to paintings and finish off little areas that need more work. But these strokes now are setting the style and pace of the painting. This is a brand new experience for me. So I'm paying a great deal of attention to it now. Except for the bug that gets in the way."

AP Laserphoto

He waves aside the insect and continues splashing the background with layers of deep blue. To relieve the plainness of the background, he etches a series of single lines, using a special tool — a beer-can opener.

"Wherever I am, I always use the objects that are available," he says with a smile.

As he begins creating the flowers with brilliant hues, his deeply tanned face becomes more intense. He retains the handsomeness that helped make him a top star in the 1950s and '60s, first in potboilers ("The Prince Who Was a Thief," "No Room for the Groom"), then in first-rate films ("The Defiant Ones," "Some Like It Hot").

BORN BERNARD Schwartz, Curtis received most of his education as a gang member in the Bronx streets. An acting class in a settlement house turned his life around, and after Navy service in World War II, he returned to New York to work in summer stock and off-Broadway.

A talent scout brought him to Universal Studios where his looks made him a teen-age idol. With "Sweet Smell of Success" in 1957 he proved his worth as an actor.

Marital and career problems were partly responsible for his dependence on drugs and alcohol, which he kicked in 1983. He has since kept busy in television ("Fall Guy") and European-made films.

He has the same thick hair, now a distinguished white, that he had in his younger days. And the voice still reveals his Bronx upbringing as son of an immigrant tailor. As he continues painting, he talks openly of his personal battle.

"In a way, painting helps you silence yourself," he says. "Everything is so verbal. For a few minutes you can be quiet, and nothing is interrupting your feeling of living and the joy of it. You know, I'm a recovering alcoholic. I'm seven years into my recovery. This is a great help to me, a great gift that has been given to me. I don't know how else to say it.

"IT HAS given me such a great pleasure in life, helped me recover. Which is no easy trick. Recovery is not only from drugs and alcohol and substances, it is recovery from emotions. Hate, anger, envy, avarice, pain, fear. All of these are emotions, and they're all addictive."

Art has long been a passion for Curtis, who started with assemblages, collages and decorated boxes many years ago. Jan Stussy, an art professor at the University of California at Los Angeles, admired his work and invited him to attend courses on the campus.

"I absorbed it like a sponge," Curtis recalls. "I only had to do a lithograph once to understand the logic of it. From there on in, I was able to go off on my own."

He continues painting and talking and by the end of 40 minutes the picture is complete, except for a few touchups here and there. The artist stands back, nods with satisfaction and begins cleaning his brushes. Amazingly, his white pants and white sweater remain free of paint.

"There it is," he says. "It makes me feel good, and I appreciate you letting me paint for you, instead of just sitting around and telling you how great I was in all my movies."

Bedelia's roles have little in common

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Bonnie Bedelia, following roles in two of this summer's biggest box office hits, also stars in a race-against-time TV thriller about evidence that might free a man about to go to the electric chair.

Bedelia plays the widow of a slain policeman in the Home Box Office movie "Somebody Has To Shoot the Picture," which debuts Wednesday.

She also plays Bruce Willis' wife in "Die Hard 2" and Harrison Ford's wife in "Presumed Innocent."

"If I'd been in 'Ghost,' I'd be in the three biggest pictures of the summer," she said.

In the HBO movie, Arliss Howard, about to be executed for killing Bedelia's husband seven years earlier, requests that a burned-out photographer played by Roy Scheider photograph the execution.

Scheider reluctantly accepts the job. When the execution is stayed for 48 hours, an alcoholic ex-cop who was at the murder scene kills himself. Scheider finds an old photograph among his effects that refutes crucial evidence at the trial and indicates a cover-up might have taken place.

"Although Hannah has an affair with the photographer, this is not a love story," Bedelia said of her character. "This washed-up photographer comes to town and she's bowled over. She's been a widow for a long time, and sometimes it takes someone from the outside.

"She's a working-class woman, and he's famous. She even goes to the library to look up his work. They're not in love. It was just an impulsive thing."

Their fling is the backdrop for a complicated story that even Bedelia admits she had difficulty following. Director Frank Pierson used the opportunity to also examine the issue of capital punishment, which he opposes.

Robert Carradine plays the murdered policeman's partner, and Andre Braugher is a reporter. The screenplay was written by Doug Magee, a photojournalist who published a book on death row prisoners in 1980.

Pierson co-wrote the screenplay for "Presumed Innocent," but Bedelia did not meet him until he directed "Somebody Has To Shoot the Picture."

She said she didn't find her character to be as complicated as the story.

"She was a woman whose husband had been killed, and she had stayed in the town," she said. "I don't know why, but it wasn't important to the story. ... I don't imagine she was very well-educated. It wasn't a part that required a lot of delving. She was a simple person."

"If I'd been in 'Ghost,' I'd be in the three biggest pictures of the summer.'

— Bonnie Bedelia

Bedelia said her three recent roles, two wives and a widow, have little in common.

"In 'Die Hard 2,' she's an executive of a multinational corporation. Her husband's a cop. She probably makes five times what he does. She's left him. She's totally secure and confident. In 'Presumed Innocent,' she's a mathematician who's totally caught up in her work at the university. She's insecure and has deep-rooted problems stemming from her childhood. In the HBO movie, she's a manicurist married to a cop who was killed in his rookie year.

"'Die Hard' was a lark. It's not something you have to give a lot of thought to. It's not meant to be deep. It's bang-bang-bang. In 'Presumed Innocent,' she's an interesting person. She's very bright, but not very confident. She's insecure, and her husband gives her a lot of reason to be."

Bedelia grew up in New York, and made her acting debut at the age of 7. She had been in six Broadway shows by the time she was 17.

She appeared in more than a hundred shows during the heyday of live television drama and also worked in several series filmed in New York, such as "Naked City," "East Side, West Side" and "The Defenders."

Her career reached a low point in 1980 when she returned to work after her second son entered kindergarten. But in 1983, she played race driver Shirley Muldowney in "Heart Like a Wheel," a turning point for her.

In November, she will co-star with Billy Crystal in "City Slickers," a comedy about a group of city dwellers who sign up for a vacation cattle drive.

Winners in each age dvision — zero-4; 5-6; 7-8; 9-10; and 11-12 — will receive a pair of Reebok pumps.

In addition, the first participating 100 pre-entered will receive a participation trophy, the next 100 participating pre-entered receive a large single-topping 15-inch pizza from Pizza Hut and the next 60 pre-entered receive a school Coca Cola carrying bag.

The event also features the 1990 National Demolition Derby, sponsored by the Midland Suburban Lions Club; radio control race cars by RC Pro Shop; spectator drags, where audience members drive the car they drove to the raceway; and auto racing. The bicycle races begin at 1 p.m.

To enter the bicycle races pick up entry blank at local merchants displaying posters. For more information on any of the events or to enter the derby go by A Quick Signs, 2917 W. Industrial Blvd., or call 683-8541 or 563-5456.

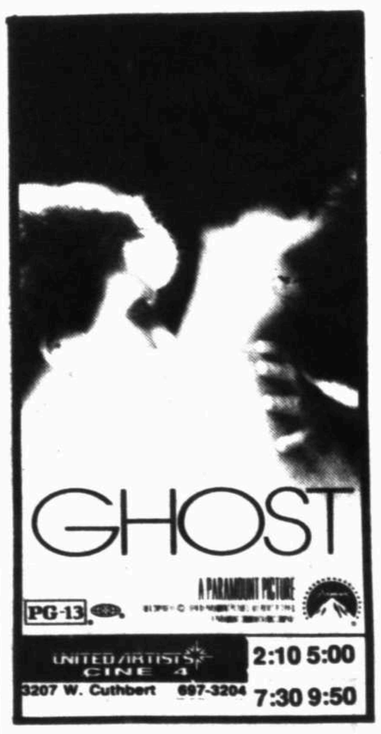

Twin Cities Speedway is located in Midland County, off Coors Road between Midland and Odessa. The three-eighths mile asphalt oval track lies between Highway 80 and Interstate 20.

Bradbury's lastest book mixture of mystery, fantasy

By Phil Thomas

NEW YORK (AP) — Ray Bradbury has rocketed men to the distant stars in his many novels and short stories — but he doesn't drive a car.

Bradbury

"I'll ride in a car only as long as I can cower in the back seat," says Bradbury, an amiable 70-year-old.

Nor does he care for airplane travel, having first set foot on a plane "only recently."

Why the aversion to modern transportation? "I've seen too many people killed in car accidents," he says. "When I was 15 I was sitting on a friend's porch and a car crashed across the street. I ran over and saw five people dying. That turned me off driving forever."

So it comes as no surprise that the narrator of Bradbury's latest novel, "A Graveyard for Lunatics: Another Tale of Two Cities" (Knopf), is "not a brave man. I have never learned to drive. I do not fly in planes. I hate high places. Elevators make me nervous."

Nor is it surprising that a long-ago car accident figures prominently in the novel's careening plot, which most successfully combines mystery with fantasy.

The narrator, an aspiring Hollywood screenwriter, is, of course, modeled on Bradbury. "He's me," says Bradbury. "Actually, there's a lot of autobiographical stuff in the book. I don't think I'll ever write my autobiography because my life is already in this book and the one that preceded it, 'Death Is a Lonely Business.'

" 'Graveyard' came about because of a real incident. I was sailing to Europe about five years ago and I passed a man on the ship with a horribly destroyed face. It looked as if it had been hit with a hammer and burned. I was so shocked I began to cry. I thought, 'My God, what must it be like to be with that face all your life?' I saw that man every day for four or five days, but I never found out who he was. He was a mystery to me. But he haunted me, he summoned all the dark things out of my mind. I began to write my book and the plot revolves around the man with the ruined face."

'Some people label me a science-fiction and fantasy writer. I'm not. I'm an idea writer. I write about anything that hits me. I call it magic realism.'

— Ray Bradbury

The book also is heavily influenced by Bradbury's lifelong love affair with the movies. "I've seen everything," he says. "My mother was a movie nut and she took me to the movies with her when I was 2 years old. Even though I was so young, I still remember them.

"Later, when I was 16, I saw as many as 18 films a week. Remember, they had double features then. I didn't have the money to pay to get in, so I would sneak in."

Bradbury, who lives with his wife in Cheviot Hills, Calif., continues to go to movies as often as possible as an adult, and he likes to watch his favorites over and over. "I've seen 'Lawrence of Arabia' at least 20 times and 'Moby Dick' about 40 times."

Which is understandable, since Bradbury wrote the script for "Moby Dick." "I'm very proud of it. It's not perfect, but I think it's very well done."

Although he has written a number of other film scripts, Bradbury says he doesn't want to do too many "because no one remembers who wrote a screenplay and I want to be remembered."

With 25 novels and books of short stories to his credit — "I have written 1,000 short stories and published 500 of them" — Bradbury has expanded his talents into other fields. He writes poetry, essays and plays, and has adapted two of his works as musicals and one as an opera. The musicals are "The Wonderful Ice Cream Suit" and "Dandelion Wine." The opera is "Fahrenheit 451."

He also writes the scripts for television's "The Ray Bradbury Television Theater." "I've written 42 so far, so if anything is wrong, I did it." Currently, he is putting the finishing touches on a book of short stories that draw from his experiences on a visit to Ireland.

"Some people label me a science-fiction and fantasy writer," Bradbury says. "I'm not. I'm an idea writer. I write about anything that hits me. I call it magic realism."

Hemingway myth will be studied

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (AP) — "Ernest Hemingway: The Man and the Myth" is the topic of a four-day conference to be held this fall at Washington University in St. Louis.

The conference, scheduled for Oct. 17-20, will address the Hemingway mystique.

The conference, which is sponsored by the university's Performing Arts Department, will feature the world premiere of Hemingway's only play, "The Fifth Column."

Douglas says writing like acting

By Bob Thomas

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Kirk Douglas, to whom nothing seems impossible, recently talked about why writing a novel came easily to him.

Douglas

"A novel is a natural extension of an actor. What does an actor want? He wants to play a lot of parts. When you write a novel, you play all the parts: old man, young man, ladies, women, children. It's fun. I assume that is how all novelists work; you play out the roles," he said.

"For 'Dance With the Devil,' I went to all the places. I visited the San Sabba concentration camp in Italy; I didn't even know there was one. I've been to the places I depict in Poland. The love scene on the beach in Portugal — I've been there. I even had a dog, a stray I called Blueboy because of his eyes; you could almost see his mind working. I transferred that dog to the concentration camp.

Douglas has acted in 75 films, produced a dozen, directed one and appeared in nine plays and several television films. He launched his literary career two years ago with his frank, best-selling autobiography, "The Ragman's Son." "Dance With the Devil" is his first novel. He's already working on another.

"It's a new venture, frightening; you wonder how people are going to react," he said in the offices of Bryna Productions (named for his mother) which are decorated with posters from his films and plays.

"You can't pass the blame by saying, 'The director screwed me up,' or the co-star or the cameraman. You stand or fall on what you did."

The reviews have been generally favorable, with a few carps here and there. The central figure of "Dance With the Devil" is a concentration camp refugee who becomes a successful Hollywood director. He denies his Jewishness, which is something that Douglas never has.

"I wasn't attempting to write a novel about myself; I already wrote an autobiography," he remarked.

"There are a lot of things about Danny that I can understand. I've known people who try to deny their background, whether denying they're Jews or pretending they came from nobility. That's pathetic. The theme that I want to hit on in 'Dance With the Devil' is that if you're not true to yourself, eventually it catches up with you. Every person sooner or later in life has to come to terms with who he is.

"I started 'Dance With the Devil' before I wrote 'The Ragman's Son.' When I did my autobiography, that was my attempt to come to terms with myself, which started with my writing the novel, strangely enough."

Douglas is a self-admitted scribbler. Whenever ideas for the novel come to him, he scribbles them down on yellow pads or tape-records them. Then someone transfers them to a word processor. "My son, Peter, who is an expert, tried to teach me how to use it, but he said, 'Dad, you're hopeless.'

"If I sat down to write, it would be stiff and pretentious. But when I scribble a scene or what a character says, I put it down and out of that it develops."

Except for J.D. Salinger and a few other reclusive writers, author notables are required to hit the road to promote the product on talk shows, author lunches and book signings. Douglas has mixed feelings about the chore.

"I hate that part," he said, adding, "I don't hate all of it. It's hard work going out, and you feel you are repeating yourself.

"What I like about the tours I have taken is the book signings, where you sign 300 or 400 books. For one moment you look at somebody and you say, 'Thank you.' You have a contact with somebody who likes your book, or likes your movies or says you have played a part in their lives.

"That's gratifying. I find that living out here, you become provincial in a way, isolated from the people that we're making movies for, or for whom you write a book. Even though your time is compressed, for a moment you have a contact. I like that."

In "The Ragman's Son," Douglas wrote of his birth in Amsterdam, N.Y., in 1916, to illiterate Russian immigrants, of his struggle to express his feelings in high school and college plays. His Broadway career was interrupted by Navy service, and after the war he came to Hollywood to appear opposite Barbara Stanwyck in "The Strange Love of Martha Ivers."

"Champion" in 1949 established Douglas as a box-office star, and he followed with a string of hits: "Paths of Glory," "The Vikings," "Spartacus," "Lonely Are the Brave," "Seven Days in May," all produced by Bryna.

And though many honors have been bestowed on him, including the Presidential Medal of Freedom and the French Legion of Honor, one prize has eluded him: the Academy Award. He has been nominated for "Champion," "The Bad and the Beautiful" and "Lust for Life." His son, Michael, has twice won the Oscar: for co-producing "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest" and starring in "Wall Street."

If his autobiography helped Douglas come to grips with himself, is he a different person now?

"I don't know that I'm different. I know myself better, I recognize myself better, and I like myself more. I think that's important," he said.

"When you're so involved in the world of make-believe, whether it's a novel or a movie, you have to always keep a grip on reality. I think that's important. Writing my autobiography helped me with that."

'Get Shorty' short on action

By Frank Stilley
Associated Press

Elmore Leonard's novels tend to run from hot to cold. "Get Shorty" fits more into the lukewarm category.

It features a melange of third-rate crooks and Hollywood characters, not one of whom is worth giving a hoot about.

■ A Review

The Mafia and shylocking figure in the plot to some degree, plus a spate of double crossing. But most of the story is nothing but endless guff about birdbrained ideas for making a movie.

All in all, the book is bedeviled by a puny plot, and is short on action and maddeningly long on windy yak-yak. Still, maybe it'll keep Leonard's legions from getting too restless until he can crank out his next one. Others: skip it.
