County rejects hangar options

Scurry County Commissioners Court, meeting briefly this morning, turned down two options to purchase individually-owned hangars at the county's Winston Field.

Land lease agreements for hangars at the airport call for the county to have first-right-of-refusal before hangars may be sold to another party.

Commissioners said the estate of Bill Dennis is seeking to dispose of a hangar that is in need of repair. The court suggested that some individual may want to tear down the hangar for materials to save that expense for the owners.

Gayle Anderson also is seeking to dispose of a hangar and placed a price of $4,000 on it. Airport representative said the hangar is in good condition.

Two persons, Rodger Blackard and Bob Stanfield, met briefly to discuss setting of fuel prices at the airport. Commissioners explained that the policy of setting fuel prices when each load is delivered remains unchanged.

Commissioner C.D. Gray Jr. said he mistakenly agreed to a price change last week thinking that a new load had been received.

In the only other action item, the court approved three line-item transfers. The county judge had requested $300 moved from travel to repairs and another $350 from travel to lease rental.

In a non-departmental transfer, $2,500 was moved from bookkeeping to rural fire equipment for truck repairs.

County Judge Bob Doolittle presided at the meeting and commissioners attending were Gray, Roy Idom, Jerry Gannaway and Ralph Trevey.

Crime bill facing tough Senate fight

WASHINGTON (AP) — White House Chief of Staff Leon Panetta said today it would be "a disgrace to the country" if opponents of the House-passed crime bill are able to block its passage through a filibuster in the Senate.

The bill cleared the House 235-195 in a rare Sunday session, after key Democrats and moderate Republicans bargained until dawn and 3 a.m. the two previous nights.

It now goes to the Senate, where Democrats must find the same kind of help from moderate Republicans that rescued the $30.2 billion compromise in the House.

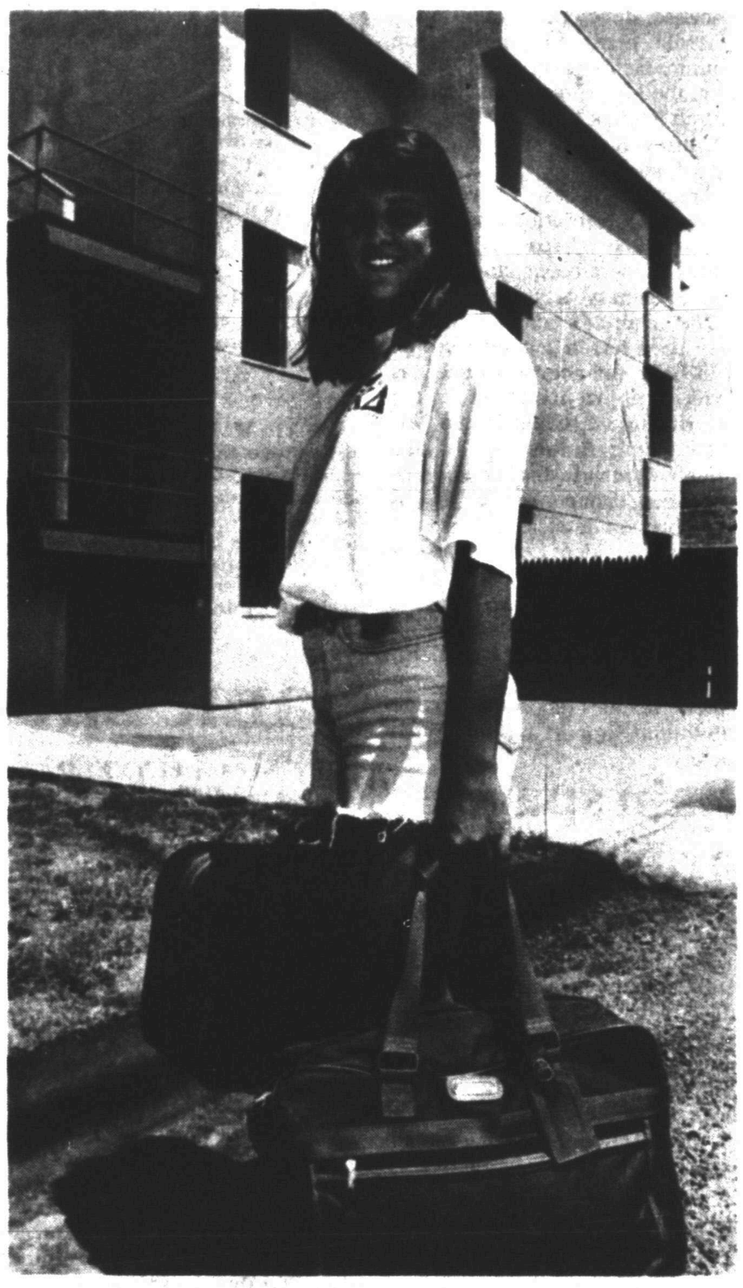

"I think the Senate is going to act to get this passed," Panetta said today, calling "the issue of crime the fundamental issue that most concerns Americans."

Panetta said on NBC that opponents "may try procedural blocks. They have the filibuster available to them. But I think it's going to be a disgrace to the country if the Senate at the last minute decides to filibuster a major crime bill."

Sen. Joseph R. Biden, D-Del., chairman of the Judiciary Committee, said debate should begin today on the bill designed to: help hire 100,000 new police officers; build new prisons; and, much to the consternation of the powerful National Rifle Association, ban military-style assault weapons.

With the outcome uncertain for hours, a crucial preliminary vote Sunday flashed the results of deals that cut $3.3 billion from the earlier bill, mostly from crime prevention programs.

Forty-two Republicans supported the motion to allow consideration by the full House, compared with 11 when a similar move failed 10 days ago.

Zedillo claims victory

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Ernesto Zedillo, the candidate of the party that has ruled Mexico for 65 years, declared victory today in presidential elections that his opponents charged were unfair.

With nearly one-fifth of the ballots tabulated, official results showed Zedillo of the ruling PRI party easily ahead with 47 percent of the vote. Diego Fernandez de Cevallos of the conservative PAN party was a distant second with 31 percent in the most scrutinized election in Mexican history.

While exit polls indicated Zedillo was likely to win, the election Sunday was considered a crucial test of Mexico's democracy and its stability after an Indian uprising in January and the assassination of a popular presidential candidate in March.

Turnout was sharply higher for Sunday's vote — 70 percent to 75 percent, compared to the last presidential election in 1988, when just 50 percent of the eligible voters cast ballots.

Despite the high voter turnout, protests erupted across the country over shortages of ballots that kept thousands more from casting votes.

"On this election day, there are no defeated. The most important victory is for democracy in Mexico. We all have a place in that," Zedillo said in a brief victory statement after the first results were released early this morning showing him with 47 percent of the vote.

Several hours later, the federal election institute released new numbers that showed Zedillo marginally increasing his lead to 47.25 percent. With 18 percent of the precincts counted, Fernandez of the National Action Party, or PAN, dropped a bit but remained in second with 31.18 percent.

Cuauhtemoc Cardenas of the leftist Democratic Revolution Party, or PRD, had 15.49 percent, down a bit as well. Six other opposition candidates trailed far behind.

Zedillo was little-known at the start of the campaign, thrust into the PRI candidacy by the assassination of the party's first candidate, Luis Donaldo Colosio, on March 23 in Tijuana.

Sales tax rebates up

Snyder's sales tax rebates for this month are 13.51 percent higher than the comparable payments for August of last year, according to information released by the State Comptroller's Office.

The city received $156,930.72, up from $138,243.39 received the previous August.

The report also noted that overall sales tax rebates to Snyder thus far in calendar year 1994 are 3.28 percent higher than for the comparable period in 1993. The city's total for the year is $947,416.68, compared with $917,285.03 for the comparable period last year.

August's city and county sales tax rebates are for taxes collected on June sales and reported to the Comptroller in July, as well as for taxes collected April and May.

Scurry County took in $65,276.94 for this month, a 2.48 percent increase from the $63,696.09 it received the previous August. For the year, the county has taken in $420,245.22 to date, or .59 percent more than for the comparable period last calendar year.

Tax rebates received by area cities for August included:

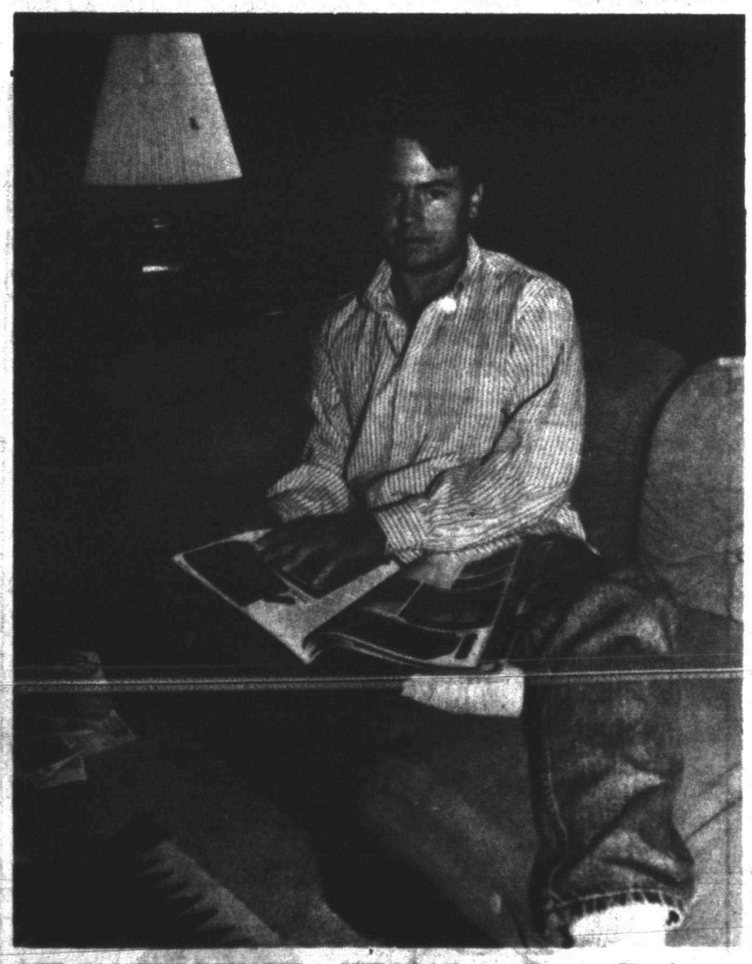

• Abilene received $2,166,906.05, up 5.72 percent from the $2,049,553.44 received for August of 1993. The year-to-date total of $13,035,702.24 is up 4.89 percent from the comparable total for 1993.

• Andrews received $67,952.80, down 14.44 percent from the $79,423.37 it received in August of 1993. The year-to-date total of $485,799.90 is up .02 percent.

• Big Spring received $365,874.85, down 7.89 percent from the $397,242.86 it received in August of 1993. The year-to-date total of $2,295,110.20 is up 2.59 percent.

• Colorado City received $45,854.29, up 9.27 percent from the $41,963.49 received in August

Off-campus housing limited

Rental opportunities said to be meager

By JOHN McMILLAN
SDN Staff Writer

Western Texas College students age 21 or older who are still looking for rental housing in town may be facing a tighter overall market than they expected.

"There don't seem to be many (vacant) rental (units) at all in town," said Jackie Buckland, president of the Snyder Board of Realtors and a sales associate at Elizabeth Potts Realtors. "...The rental market is just real, real tight."

College Park Apartments, Western Crest Apartments, Field Crest Apartments, and Park Village Apartments Ltd. each reported last week having no vacancies. Windridge Village Apartments reported today having only one vacancy — a two-bedroom unfurnished unit.

Tommy Henderson, a WTC freshman and 1994 SHS graduate who is renting an apartment along College Avenue, said he found it "tough" to obtain suitable housing. "It took me about three weeks to find an apartment," he said.

Until he found his current apartment, Henderson noted, the four previous apartments he visited were either undesirable or, if he liked the apartment, taken by someone else before he expressed interest in renting it.

WTC requires its students to live on-campus until they reach age 21, unless they receive special permission. WTC offers dormitory or apartment housing on campus that can accommodate as many as 252 WTC students, a spokesman for the college said. The campus dormitory is fully occupied, a WTC spokesman said.

A recent increase in the number of employees at the Price Daniel Unit appears to be the primary cause of the local rental housing market being even tighter than last year's, Buckland noted.

Dolores Jones, owner/broker of Jack & Jack Realtors, agreed, saying that the overall number of vacant rental apartments and homes in town has declined 10 percent each year since the Price Daniel Unit was opened in 1989.

Of the 60 total individual homes or apartments that Jack & Jack Realtors leases in the area, only two — in both cases, three-bedroom houses — are currently vacant, Jones said last week.

At least two apartment complexes in town — the federally subsidized Kingswood Apartments and Eastridge Apartments — each reported having numerous vacancies for which college stu-

Vatican opposes population policy OK'd by Clinton

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — From the slums of the Philippines to the streets of Latin America, the Vatican is appealing to religious sentiment and national pride to sabotage pro-choice resolutions at next month's U.N. population conference.

It has directed its harshest attacks at the Clinton administration for reputedly promoting artificial contraceptives and access to abortion as fundamental rights for women.

"We hope to see a confrontation," Peruvian Bishop Miguel Irizar said of the U.N. Conference on Population and Development Sept. 5-12 in Cairo, Egypt.

The Roman Catholic Church's campaign has been most strident in the developing countries of Latin America and the Philippines, where it traditionally has wielded strong political influence.

Adopting the rhetoric of the revolutionary left, local clerics accuse the Clinton administration of "cultural imperialism," running roughshod over traditional cultural and religious values.

"The desired result (of population control) is always the same: to reduce the growth of the countries of the Third World so that the industrialized nations can continue to exploit them and dominate them as they always have," Boletim, the weekly of the Brazilian Bishops Conference, said last month.

Filipino clerics have used similar rhetoric in pastoral letters, speeches and countless sermons. About 85 percent of the 65 million Filipinos are nominally Catholic.

Catholic radio stations in the Philippines have portrayed the United States as a degenerate nation of abortionists, single parent households and sexual permissiveness.

On Aug. 14, Cardinal Jaime L. Sin, archbishop of Manila, told about 200,000 people at a demonstration against birth control that Filipinos must "expel from our midst a new type of cultural dictatorship" which promotes "the degenerate sexual mores prevalent in so-called developed countries."

While many Filipinos ignore church teachings on family planning, the government has assured church leaders that its delegation to Cairo will oppose any sanctioning of abortion.

Argentina is also expected to oppose any resolution condoning abortion, in part because President Carlos Menem needs church support in next year's election.

The church's campaign has even been felt in secular Europe.

In Italy, the abortion issue has divided cabinet members in the government of Italian Prime Minister Silvio Berlusconi. It also brought demands that the government keep its hands off Italy's liberal abortion law.

Polish President Lech Walesa, a longtime church ally, vetoed a liberal abortion bill. The Warsaw newspaper Zycie Warszawy said the Polish delegation to Cairo could not support any document which includes abortion despite substantial support within Polish society.

Lotto Texas

by The Associated Press

No tickets correctly matched all six numbers drawn Saturday night for the twice-weekly Lotto Texas game, state lottery officials said. The jackpot was worth an estimated $28 million.

The numbers drawn Saturday night from a field of 50 were: 2, 22, 27, 41, 42 and 46.

There were 192 tickets sold with five of the six numbers, with each ticket worth $2,081. There were 11,878 tickets with four of six numbers, with each winning $121. And there were 239,043 tickets sold with three of six numbers, with each worth an automatic $3.

Lottery officials estimate the jackpot for Wednesday night's game will be $40 million.

Rain spares prayer event, falls on rally

WEDOWEE, Ala. (AP) — About 200 members of the community — white and black together — sang "Amazing Grace" and prayed for an end to racial turmoil next to the charred hulk that had been their high school.

"The Bible tells us that racism is wrong. We're to love each other no matter what the skin color," said the Rev. John Duncan of the First Baptist Church of Wedowee.

Sunday's service was organized by 26 area ministers as a way to unify the small east Alabama town that was torn apart in February when school principal Hulond Humphries threatened to cancel the prom to prevent interracial dating.

After the service under threatening, rain-soaked clouds, workers resumed preparing portable classrooms at the school, which was gutted by arson on Aug. 6. Classes are due to begin Wednesday, two days behind schedule.

On Saturday night, a dozen robed KKK members gathered in Graham, 20 miles east of Wedowee, to burn a cross, but a thunderstorm broke as they began to light it. When the rain stopped an hour later, only half of the 20-foot-cross would burn.

Klan leader Nathan Thomaston said it was a recruitment rally, "It lets people around know we're here and in town if they want to join."

Husband Who's All Thumbs May Need His Head Examined

(EDITOR'S NOTE: Dear Abby is on a two-week vacation. Following is a selection of some of her favorite past letters from the early 1970s.)

DEAR ABBY: My husband has had three serious accidents at work in the past two years. I have quit asking him to do chores around the house because he is always smashing his fingers with a hammer, cutting himself, or falling off the ladder while changing the screens or storm windows. It's a good year when he hasn't had a couple of automobile accidents.

The doctor at the plant where he works suggested that he see a psychiatrist! Why? He isn't crazy.

HIS WIFE

DEAR WIFE: People who have more than their share of "accidents" could be subconsciously punishing themselves for unresolved guilt. And they need not be "crazy" to do so. I think the plant doctor planted a very sound suggestion in your husband's mind.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I have a problem that concerns my parents, myself and music. I am 13 and I hate taking piano lessons. My parents know this, but they are forcing me to take lessons anyway.

The lessons are expensive and I seldom practice, which makes it a waste of money, right? My mother says I am so unpleasant at home that I will have to continue taking piano lessons until my disposition improves. My father threatens me by saying that if I don't shape up, I will have to take piano until I am 18!

So will you please tell me, what is the point of taking piano lessons when it is only a waste of time and money?

HATES PIANO

DEAR HATES: There are two schools of thought on that. One: Even a child who "hates" music, and must be nagged, bribed and threatened to practice, can't help but learn something about music, which in your parents' view is better than no musical education at all.

The other school: Never force music lessons on a child. He or she will only grow to hate music. My view: Music lessons are like a vaccination. It's temporarily painful, but if it takes, it's worth it.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: I recently rented an apartment I have in my back yard to a 19-year-old boy with the understanding that he would be living there alone.

Since then, I have seen him with his girlfriend at 7:45 nearly every morning.

The girl is 16 and a junior in high school, so I assume he is taking her to school. The girl's parents are divorced, and the girl is supposed to be living with her father. Several other people have told me they have seen her coming and going from my apartment just like she lives there, and this has me upset.

Should I call her father and tell him what I suspect? Ask the boy I rented the apartment to if that girl is living with him? Ask him for the apartment and give him some other reason for wanting it? Or should I ignore the whole situation completely as none of my business?

LANDLADY IN L.A.

DEAR LANDLADY: Talk directly to the boy. After all, you and he did have an understanding that he would be living there alone. And their ages might also be a factor.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: What does it mean when a person puts a stamp upside-down on an envelope?

DELAWARE

DEAR DELAWARE: It could mean, "I love you," "I'm in a hurry" or "I need glasses."

* * *

Abby shares more of her favorite, easy-to-prepare recipes. To order, send a business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, More Favorite Recipes, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054-0447. (Postage is included.)

Same speeches retold on health care

By NITA LELYVELD
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — When senators began debating health reform more than a week ago, they promised drama, substance, history in the making. They said Americans would get excited and rush to tune in. For those intrepid C-Span viewers who actually do, here are a few viewing tips:

—Hear two speeches, you've heard them all.

For most of the debate, Democrats and Republicans have swapped turns giving lengthy opening statements on health reform. By now most have spoken at least once, some many times more. But that doesn't keep them from saying the same things, again and again.

Most Republicans call Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell's health reform bill a government takeover of the health care system. They say it offers more of a lot of bad things — taxes, bureaucrats, inefficiency — and far less of one good thing — choice. They say these things over and over and over again.

Democrats say the Mitchell plan is voluntary and isn't big government. And, just in case that doesn't convince anyone, they say people love government programs anyway.

Senators of both parties often tell sad stories about their own families, or at least about families in their states. They repeat these stories often, each time giving the impression they are baring their souls on the subject for the first time. Sometimes they even tell sad stories about their colleagues, like Sen. William Cohen, R-Maine, who on Friday said of Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, "No one knows more about pain and suffering."

—Beware of big talk of bipartisan compromise. It tends to center on the tiniest of agreements. Senators have been quick to congratulate themselves for unanimous or near-unanimous votes on amendments this week. And while the amendments will, for instance, expand rural health care, they do not touch at all on the key issues that divided the senators in the first place.

Votes on such divisive subjects as whether employers should ever be required to pay their workers' insurance, or whether taxes should increase, will not produce lovey-dovey speeches about working together.

—Just because one senator has made a point perfectly moments before doesn't mean another senator won't get up and say the exact same thing less well moments later.

On Thursday, the veteran Sen. Robert C. Byrd, D-W.Va., made the most eloquent of speeches, urging fellow senators to get down to business on health reform. He asked them to be financially realistic. He asked them to come together across party lines. He said what he said beautifully. Seconds after he yielded the floor, however, Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., got up and praised Byrd to the skies.

"That speech, which was only 20 to 25 minutes, has put in better perspective the problem this Senate faces than it could ever be put," Packwood said. Having said that no one could say it better than Byrd, he went on to say, "What the senator is saying is simply this: ...," a far less eloquent synopsis that rambled longer than Byrd's original 20 to 25 minutes.

Teen-age curfews working in suburban Houston towns

HOUSTON (AP) — Teen curfews are getting good reviews from several suburban towns that have enacted them.

During the past year, Pasadena, Rosenberg, Richmond, Humble and South Houston all have implemented curfews.

Missouri City, also in suburban Houston, adopted one just last week. The Harris County Commissioners Court also has agreed to study a curfew for unincorporated areas of the county.

While experts debate the benefits of such laws, officials in the cities that have them have noticed a drop in crime.

"It's been a wonderful tool for our city. We don't tend to see the graffiti we used to see," Richmond City Manager Glen Gilmore told The Houston Post. "They may have just gotten tired of spraying our town and left, but we'd like to think our curfew has had an impact."

In Pasadena, Mayor Johnny Isbell urged the City Council to approve a juvenile curfew after two teen-agers were killed in a late-night drive-by shooting on a city street.

Pasadena statistics show that major crimes — defined by the FBI to include homicides, sexual assaults, burglaries and auto thefts — have clearly decreased.

Between November 1993 and April, the first six months of the curfew, 4,618 major crimes were recorded in Pasadena. That's a 14.9 percent drop compared with the 5,426 major crimes recorded between November 1992 and April 1993.

Richmond's Gilmore said juvenile arrests have increased since the curfew was implemented in February, but he considers that as par for the course for most law enforcement agencies today and believes it has little to do with the curfew.

Missouri City police Chief Hank Howell said he's convinced a curfew will solve much of the juvenile crime problem, which has been on the rise the past two years in the quiet, mostly upper-middle-class suburb.

Disabled man, elderly don't get along

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A 24-year-old man who lives in a federally funded apartment complex for senior citizens and the disabled has sued the facility, alleging that a "gang" of elderly residents is trying to force him out.

Kelly Lew-Hanson is by far the youngest resident at the Hereford Apartments in Austin; his neighbors say he is disruptive and frightening and they want him out.

He contends that it's the older folks who have created a ruckus. He says they've heckled and harassed him for months.

Lew-Hanson and his mother, Siri Sophar, have filed a civil lawsuit and a complaint with the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, charging that apartment management has harassed Lew-Hanson and has discriminated against him.

A HUD spokesman told the San Antonio Express-News the Texas Commission on Human Rights is investigating Lew-Hanson's claim.

Officials of the complex gave Lew-Hanson an eviction notice in April. The document cited instances of cursing, throwing objects, hitting walls, screaming and scaring other tenants.

Lew-Hanson fought the eviction, but a court authorized the ouster. He appealed, but says he hopes to move voluntarily.

"I can't take it here anymore. I get a lot of dirty looks and they all talk about me," he said.

Lew-Hanson said elderly residents have taunted and spied on him. He described systematic pounding on the ceiling, disappearing belongings, unfounded police visits and cruel comments.

Some of the other residents have unkind things to say about him, too. They portray him as foul-mouthed, loud and disruptive. A 77-year-old resident said she's afraid he will become violent.

"He drinks beer and he smokes," said one woman, who asked to remain anonymous. Neighbors try to avoid him, she said.

Ms. Sophar agrees that her son has a temper and reacts poorly to stress, but blamed his problems on ignorance and a generation gap.

"I think it is harassment, plain and simple: prejudice," she said.

Ms. Sophar said her son occasionally must be hospitalized for monitoring and medication adjustments, but emphasized that he "never, ever, ever" has become violent.

Yvonne Trevino, manager of the apartments, refused to comment, but confirmed that Lew-Hanson is the only young adult living at the complex.

Robert Ray, attorney for the apartments, said it is a bad idea to try to put the elderly and the handicapped in the same complex. He called it a "noble idea" that works in theory but not in practice.

"The two groups don't necessarily mix," Ray said, adding that Lew-Hanson "tends to be somewhat voluble and loud and that bothers the other people here."

School improvement may be because of lower standards

HOUSTON (AP) — State education commissioner Lionel R. "Skip" Meno achieved higher ratings for Texas schools in the 1993-94 school year by putting less-stringent standards in place, a newspaper has reported.

The Houston Chronicle said Meno implemented easier standards so hundreds of Texas schools would stay off the national "low-performing list."

Test results last year showed dramatic improvement in Texas over the 1992-93 school year. But the Chronicle reported in its Sunday editions that Meno achieved the success from slipping state standards.

The Chronicle based its story upon a review of Texas Education Agency memoranda.

The newspaper reported that the number of schools on the "low performing list" category dropped 83 percent between 1993 and 1994, from 326 in 1993 to 55 last school year.

"Absolutely, there's no question" that the standards used in 1994 were lower than originally proposed, Meno said Friday. But he denied that last year's measuring stick was lower than 1993's.

"I don't believe 'back off' is the right word to use," Meno said. "If we had put that (the tougher standards) out there, I think we would have broken the backs of the people out there in the field."

Meno said the changes were needed because the 1993 evaluations "were seriously flawed."

Meno, whom Gov. Ann Richards appointed, had touted the higher scores as proof of school officials' hard work and evidence that Texas education is on the right track.

Copies of Meno's memos to his advisory committee of school superintendents show that between Dec. 3, 1993, and Jan. 5, 1994, Meno rescinded plans to hold schools to stringent performance standards in 1994.

Instead, he offered options that essentially allowed schools to ignore test scores in most grade levels and those of traditionally low-achieving student groups if there was no other way to show improvement.

Nearly all the changes in criteria were aimed at schools in the "low-performing" and "acceptable" categories; stringent standards were upheld for schools seeking the top two ratings of "exemplary" and "recognized."

That comes at a time when quality education is a key issue in Richards' race with Republican challenger George W. Bush.

Bush accused the commissioner of manipulating standards in an election year to make Richards look good.

"Playing politics with test scores is appalling, and it's not fair to the teachers and students of Texas, who are forced to try to measure up to an ever-changing set of standards," Bush said in a statement issued Sunday in response to the Chronicle article.

"I am shocked and angered that Ann Richards' administration not only lowered the standards during an election year, but also repeatedly tried to mislead Texans about what they had done," he said.

Chuck McDonald, a spokesman for Richards, said Sunday that Bush made "political accusations that are unfounded."

"It is unfortunate that George W. Bush wants to dispute and distort the one undeniable fact and that is that test scores in Texas have improved. More students have scored higher on different tests that at any other time in Texas history," McDonald said.

"Mr. Bush does not have a personal frame of reference to understand public schools in Texas," McDonald continued. "He cannot compare his own high school experience at a prep school in Massachusetts to what a Texas kid sees in Houston, Dallas, El Paso or any other part of this state."

Meno denies any of his changes were because of political pressure.

"It was strictly my call," he said.

One memo to Meno's advisory committee indicates that he altered the accountability criteria "as a result of recommendations made during December."

Meno said Friday that the recommendations were made by the school superintendents and teachers who thought the 1993 ratings had dealt them an unfair blow because unexpected standards had been applied.

Meno has maintained that had the 1993 standards been applied in 1994, 60 schools would have been on the "low-performing" list.

However, one Texas education group has indicated that the changes delayed for one year an expected rise in the number.

Meno does not challenge the 1993 estimates.

Slam down yourself

By Phillip Alder

Every beginner is told to pause before playing from the dummy at trick one. He should form a plan of campaign before continuing the battle.

You might think that experts never fall from grace in this respect, but you would be wrong.

Today's deal comes from this year's Camrose Trophy, an annual international series played between England, Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales. It was won by England for the sixth straight year, though not without a fright or two along the way.

With 30 boards remaining, Wales, playing against England, had a great opportunity to win for the first time. However, they let it slip away. And the final margin would have been greater but for today's deal.

The Welsh had stopped in four hearts, making five. The English were more adventurous. Three diamonds was a transfer bid; and four no-trump was quantitative, not Blackwood. South, despite having minimum count, took a shot at the slam.

The declarer won the first trick with his diamond ace and drew three rounds of trumps. Then he paused to assess the situation — too late.

The right line is to draw only two rounds of trumps, keeping an honor in the South hand. Then declarer plays off his three top spades, discarding one of dummy's clubs. A club to the ace, a club to the king and a club ruff follow. Now South plays a trump to his jack (or king) and cashes the club nine, discarding one of dummy's diamond losers.

In 51 Camrose series, England has won 39, Scotland 10 and England and Scotland have tied twice.

Mexicans paying respect to site of Colosio's murder

TIJUANA, Mexico (AP) — Dressed in black under a hot sun, Emilia Arangure knelt in the dust and prayed at the shrine to slain presidential candidate Luis Donaldo Colosio.

"I came to give my vote to Colosio," she said, tears falling down her lined cheeks. "Men like that don't deserve to die."

In the poor shantytown where the ruling party's original candidate was assassinated March 23, Election Day also was a day of pilgrimage.

Like Arangure, 72, many were sad they could not vote Sunday for Colosio, who had promised to bring badly needed help to Mexico's poor neighborhoods.

Throughout the day, people who voted at the outdoor polling spot walked across a rickety foot bridge over a stream to the site where Colosio was slain. A bronze bust of Colosio looked down upon the visitors.

At the base of the bust were masses of flowers and votive candles. Next to it was a wrought-iron cross hung with rosary beads and electric lights.

Magdalena Flores, 46, wiped her hand across a framed picture of a smiling Colosio to clean off the dust that builds up easily in the dry, steep canyon of Lomas Taurinas.

"It's a very sad day," Flores said. "Not only for me, but for everybody."

Flores said she voted for Ernesto Zedillo, Colosio's replacement as the candidate of the Institutional Revolutionary Party.

She said she mistrusts the investigation into Colosio's murder. A young mechanic was arrested and charged in the slaying, but many Mexicans suspect a plot.

"I feel it was a conspiracy," she said. "Do you think there's going to be justice for the killing? No, nothing's going to happen."

Children dressed in their Sunday best hung onto the arms of parents who lined up to vote nearby. Political banners hung from electrical wires and poles.

Claudia Murillo, 21, came by the shrine for the first time because she had to vote at the polling place across the road.

"I'm happy everything's so tranquil," Murillo said, her arm around her mother, Concepcion.

"We hope this vote will make a difference," Concepcion Murillo said. "The country can't continue the way it is — how it treats the poor people."

Armando Lopez, 24, a construction worker from Oaxaca state who recently moved to Tijuana, said he came to the shrine out of curiosity. He did not have the registration card needed to vote.

"We hope finally we can start to improve the country," he said. "He was a good candidate, someone we could trust."

Netters split weekend matches

Nailbiters.

That is the only way to describe this weekend's volleyball action as the Snyder Lady Tigers wrestled with Bronte and Plains.

In marathon matches, the Lady Tigers were able to scratch and claw for 15-10, 12-15, 15-12 victories over Bronte. But in a heartbreaker, Plains rallied to win 13-15, 15-9, 18-16.

"Our defense was great, we had some unbelievable rallies and the girls really hustled," she said. "I was pleased with their defensive footwork."

Grimmett said the team needs to work on offensive intensity.

"It seemed like we were too passive on offense," she said. "When we had the chance to really hit the ball, we didn't."

The offensive power that the team showed in last week's scrimmage was available in small bursts, but for the most part the hitters were absent, she said.

"I think we got too wrapped up in the other team's game plan," Grimmett said. "Plains was using the dink to their advantage, and instead of sticking to our power game, we started playing cautiously."

Service points won in the Bronte match were Sterling Cave 10 and 1 ace; Trisha McGrue 2 and 2 aces; Kelly Clay 8 and 2 aces; Haley Boaz 11 and 1 ace; Raechele Wemken 6 points; and Bianca Rocha 6 and 1 ace.

In the Plains match, service points were served up by Sterling Cave 5 and 1 ace; Trisha McGrue 1 point; Gina Miller 2 points; Kelly Clay 6 points; Haley Boaz 14 and 3 aces; Raechele Wemken 6 points; and Bianca Rocha 7 points and 1 ace.

The varsity will travel to Midland to take on both Lakeview and Midland High School on Tuesday at 5:30 p.m. The Lady Tigers are scheduled to play in Denver City this weekend in the Denver City Tournament.

In junior varsity action, the Lady Tigers handily defeated Bronte in straight sets 15-8, 15-8. Like the varsity, the junior varsity had trouble with Plains and dropped the match 16-18, 15-13, 15-11.

The freshmen teams played host to Denver City and Andrews with the Snyder "A" team splitting its matches. It beat Denver City 15-4, 15-0 and fell short to Andrews 9-15, 16-14, 15-12. The "B" team lost to Andrews 15-10, 15-6.

Baylor under investigation

HOUSTON (AP) — Federal authorities investigating the Baylor basketball program have issued a subpoena for Southwest Conference documents and convened a grand jury that has heard testimony from at least one former Baylor recruit, a newspaper reported Saturday.

The probe, which first focused on the circumstances by which former Bears star Jerome Lambert turned in a term paper at a junior college that was the work of someone else, has widened in recent weeks, the Houston Chronicle reported.

Investigators are examining correspondence-course credits obtained by four junior college players who transferred to Baylor, the newspaper said.

A source familiar with the case told the Chronicle that federal investigators are trying to determine if any activities related to the correspondence-course credits violated federal wire fraud statutes.

Last week, the U.S. attorney's office in Waco subpoenaed SWC documents pertaining to correspondence-course credits obtained by Shannon Brantley, Marcus Thompson, Tyrone Davis and Jason Ervin from Southeastern College of the Assemblies of God in Lakeland, Fla.

The four players were withheld from competition at Baylor last season after they attempted to use credits from the Bible college to become eligible.

Poe, Hunter III capture sixth SCC Blowout tourney crown

Bill Hunter III and Jack Poe of Sweetwater shot a blistering 59 on Sunday and finished with a final score of 124 to claim the Championship Flight of the 6th annual Men's Golf Association Blowout Partnership Golf Tournament at the Snyder Country Club.

The pair stole the weekend festivites by shooting a 65 on Saturday, good enough for an overnight tie with Snyder's Larry Anderson and Billy Brock. However, Hunter and Poe's tournament low round 59 in Sunday's scramble format was too much for Anderson and Brock, who placed second.

Anderson and Brock who finished third behind Snyder's to Randy Weaver and Matt Glenn last year, were able to reverse their fortunes this year by outdueling them for second place. Weaver and Glenn were this year's third place winners.

Other winners at the tournament included Joe Harris and Jimmie Bartlett, who finished with a two-day total of 134 for top honors in the President's Flight. First Flight winners John Williams and Clay Allen fired a 71-64--135 while Wade Lancaster and R.T. Henderson took the Second Flight with a 75-70--145. Mickey Neff and Keily O'Neil squeaked past runners-up Steve Rich and Rick Beard by shooting 79-73--152 in the Third Flight, In the Fourth Flight the father-son duo of Ted and Scott Crenwelge combined for a 87-73--160.

Smith, Cowboys ride Broncos 34-10

Everything else he did Sunday night against the Denver Broncos proved he has no shoulder problems, showed again he needs only a limited training camp, and demonstrated why he's an odds-on favorite for a fourth consecutive NFL rushing title.

Playing his first game since he was the Super Bowl MVP, Smith picked up where he left off by scoring a touchdown, setting up another and rushing for 110 yards on 21 carries in the Dallas Cowboys' 34-10 preseason victory over the Broncos.

Dallas offensive guard Nate Newton summed it up. "Emmitt is Emmitt. We've come to expect a high level of performance. But it still amazes me what he does."

Smith wasn't amazed. But he was satisfied.

"It was nice to get in 21/2 quarters," Smith said. "I thought the offense looked pretty good, particularly on that first drive when we took almost 10 minutes off the clock. We've been waiting to do that all summer with our first unit back together again."

The last time Smith suited up for a game, he scored two touchdowns and rushed for 139 yards in the Cowboys' 30-13 Super Bowl victory over the Buffalo Bills.

He looked that good against the Broncos.

On the Cowboys' first possession, Smith rushed nine times for 30 yards, caught two passes for nine yards and scored on a 1-yard run. Of the 17 plays on the 85-yard drive, Smith touched the ball on 11.

The second time Dallas had the ball, Smith gained 44 yards rushing and had a brief visit to the sidelines for some smelling salts from trainer Kevin O'Neill after taking a hard hit. Smith had runs of 4, 9, 9, 12 and 10 yards on the drive before Lincoln Coleman took over for a 4-yard touchdown run.

"I got snapped to the turf pretty hard," said Smith, who sat out the first three preseason games to rest the right shoulder he injured in last year's regular-season finale against the New York Giants. "I was kind of hazy there for a minute. It felt kind of weird."

Smith had 16 yards on a third Dallas drive before proving he was capable of human error by fumbling the ball away on the Denver 10.

He played on Dallas' first possession in the second half, then took the rest of the night off.

"I thought that little back we had out there did pretty good except for that fumble," coach Barry Switzer said. "We'll have to talk to him about that. He is something else."

For Switzer, this was his first chance to see the first-team offense intact as Smith and receivers Michael Irvin and Alvin Harper both returned to action for the first time this preseason.

"We performed like the Cowboys of the past. We let everybody know that nothing has changed in Dallas," Switzer said. "We challenged our offensive and defensive units to perform. We were ready for this game."

Denver coach Wade Phillips said numerous injuries in the secondary hurt the Broncos.

"We would have loved to have had Steve Atwater in there shadowing Emmitt," Phillips said. "We had some people trying to shadow him but they got stepped on. He's tough and made it tough on us out there tonight."

Kevin Williams' 79-yard punt return gave Dallas a 21-3 lead and delighted the announced crowd of 63,923 fans in Texas Stadium.

"I knew where the return lane was supposed to be, and I looked up and all the Denver players were knocked out of the way," Williams said. "I just turned on the speed after that."

John Elway finally got the Denver offense going with a 39-yard touchdown pass to Anthony Miller in the second quarter. Elway went 8-for-15 for 100 yards in a half of play.

"John looked good out there," Phillips said. "Miller has big-time speed. He can even outrun Elway's arm. John is getting used to having him out there."

Dallas' Troy Aikman completed 15 of 23 passes for 156 yards before Rodney Peete took over and hit tight end Coleman Bell with a 32-yard fourth-quarter touchdown pass to finish the scoring.

"I thought Troy was awesome out there," tight end Jay Novacek said. "He gets rid of the ball so quickly. Just about 90 percent of his passes are on target."

Jason Elam kicked a 38-yard field goal for Denver and rookie Chris Boniol countered with field goals of 24 and 47 yards for Dallas.

Dallas is 2-2 in the exhibition season and Denver is 1-3.

In Saturday's games, the Los Angeles Raiders beat the Rams 29-20, Tampa Bay downed Miami 29-14, the New York Jets edged the Giants 13-10, Indianapolis defeated Pittsburgh 17-14, Seattle beat Minnesota 30-19, and Buffalo topped Houston 18-16.

Raiders 29, Rams 20

Jeff Hostetler threw for one TD and ran for another as the Raiders dealt the Rams (0-3) their eighth straight exhibition loss.

Hostetler was 15-for-21 for 169 yards in the first half as the Raiders (3-1) scored on four straight possessions to build a 20-3 lead.

The Rams, trailing 26-3, rallied behind backup quarterbacks Chris Chandler, who threw a 7-yard TD pass to Troy Drayton, and Jamie Martin, who hit Sean LaChapelle for a 38-yard TD.

Buccaneers 29, Dolphins 14

Tampa Bay quarterback Craig Erickson shined in a game marred by penalties and fights.

Erickson was 17-for-24 for 181 yards and a 7-yard TD pass to Horace Copeland. Casey Weldon also had a TD pass, and Milton Mack returned a fumble 19 yards for a TD for the Bucs (2-1).

Dan Marino wasn't sharp for Miami (3-1), hitting just nine of 19 passes for 127 yards.

Jets 13, Giants 10

The Jets tied it on an 80-yard pass from Jack Trudeau to Stevie Anderson midway through the fourth quarter and won it on Nick Lowery's 38-yard field goal with 16 seconds left at Giants Stadium.

Anderson had five catches for 117 yards, all from Trudeau, who was 9-for-10 passing for 154 yards for the Jets (2-1).

Dave Brown was 14-for-22 for 99 yards and a 5-yard scoring pass to Howard Cross for the Giants (1-3).

Colts 17, Steelers 14

Majkowski was 10-for-13 for 197 yards, including a 28-yard scoring throw to Kerry Cash. Starter Jim Harbaugh was 1-for-4 with an interception.

Neil O'Donnell hit first-round draft choice Charles Johnson for a 3-yard touchdown pass in the first half, and ran one yard for the Steelers' other TD. He finished 16-for-25 for 159 yards.

Bills 18, Oilers 16

At San Antonio, Steve Christie booted a 48-yard field goal with eight seconds left as Buffalo continued its recent mastery of Houston.

Houston (2-2) got a 19-yard TD pass from Cody Carlson to Haywood Jeffires and three field goals from Al Del Greco, who has made 10 straight.

Frogs keep title hopes alive

TCU

FORT WORTH (AP) — Time is running out for Pat Sullivan and the pledge he made three years ago when he was hired to coach the Texas Christian Horned Frogs.

The former Auburn All-American and Heisman Trophy winner said he intended to take the Frogs back to the Cotton Bowl and win it when they got there.

With the Southwest Conference crumbling, Sullivan has at best two years to deliver on that heady vow.

Well, he's hedging a bit, but don't count him out.

"That does put a little chink in the armor," he laughed of the new timeline brought on by the breakup of the SWC and the muddled bowl saga.

"What I said, I think, was that TCU had gone to the Cotton Bowl before and there is no reason we can't go again; that we were going to build a solid house and that we'd be competing for the conference championship on a yearly basis."

With the oldest, wisest, biggest and most talented team in his three years, Sullivan's "house" looks solid and he cautiously concedes that his Frogs could be a force in the SWC title chase.

"This time of year," he smiled, "that's certainly our goal."

Nine offensive and defensive starters return from a 4-7 team that ignited midseason fireworks last year before a traumatic but familiar burnout.

"We were right in the thick of things until November," safety Manvel Hopes would grumble later. "We could have gone to a bowl game if we had won two of our last three.

"But we couldn't pull it off."

The Frogs dropped their final three games. In the last 10 years, they are 7-30 in November.

Sullivan expects the November miseries to diminish this year because of schedule changes and a stronger team.

"If we could get off to a good start and gain a little confidence, we could have a really good football team," he said. "I'm excited about this group. I think we're starting to earn some people's respect."

But even with a proven quarterback like Max Knake and 50 lettermen, winning early is easier said than done, Sullivan confessed.

"We've got a lot of players back, but we only won four games."

The Frogs open at North Carolina, travel to New Mexico and entertain Kansas before kicking off SWC activity at home against Texas and Baylor.

"By the time Oct. 1 rolls around, we'll know what kind of team we've got," he predicted.

He already knows about an offensive line led by Barrett Robbins, Bart Epperson and Boyd Milby that allowed but nine quarterback sacks last year.

Behind that line, Knake set several passing records and the Frogs averaged 350 yards per game. Knake's targets this year include flankers Chris Brasfield and Jimmy Oliver, tight end Brian Collins and wide receiver James Washington.

Ace running back Derrick Cullors, injured most of the 1993 season, returns along with Andre Davis, who led the team in rushing with 867 yards. Letterman Koi Woods is at fullback.

The defense, good but erratic last year, includes premier guard Royal West and tackle Brian Brooks, and four proven linebackers: Chris Piland, Reggie Anderson, Mike Moulton and Lenoy Jones.

The kicking game appears solid, if not great.

Sullivan sees Texas, Texas A&M and Baylor as the preseason favorites with the remaining five teams anything but toothless.

"I don't think it's out of the question for one us to get hot and be a factor in the race," he said. A championship, he added, would be a "great sendoff" for TCU to take into the Western Athletic Conference.

And time's running out at the Cotton Bowl.

Genetic evidence debate returning in Simpson case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Prosecutors and the defense are battling over what might be the most important evidence in the O.J. Simpson double-murder case: blood samples taken from the crime scene and Simpson's estate.

Simpson's lawyers claim the samples were grossly mishandled — perhaps badly enough that results of DNA testing should not be allowed in court. Prosecutors deny it.

A hearing on the blood feud was scheduled for today. Lawyers were to attempt to determine how much blood is available for testing and discuss the role DNA evidence plays in the case.

Judge Lance Ito was also expected to decide whether he will unseal the so-called mystery envelope, which Simpson lawyer Robert Shapiro handed over during an earlier hearing.

Speculation about the envelope has ranged from the suggestion that it contains the murder weapon to the theory that it holds tapes from surveillance cameras at Simpson's Brentwood mansion.

Simpson, 47, has pleaded innocent to murder charges in the slashing deaths of ex-wife Nicole Brown Simpson and her friend Ronald Goldman outside her Brentwood condominum on June 12. His trial is scheduled to begin Sept. 19.

According to CNN, tests on some blood samples taken from the crime scene suggest a genetic match with Simpson. But sources told The Associated Press that preliminary tests on drops found at the site did not match Simpson's blood.

The blood has been the focus of repeated pretrial arguments. In a letter to Ito, Shapiro complained that blood samples have been "compromised by mislabeling, cutting, switching and other discrepancies."

Prosecutors told Shapiro that the samples would be sent to a Maryland lab for testing to determine their genetic makeup, but some samples were sent instead to a state laboratory in Berkeley.

Defense lawyers claim they were deceived. Prosecutors blamed the error on poor communication.

Small-town cotton gin closes down

DRAW (AP) — For the first time in 70 years, the autumn cotton harvest here will be a silent one. Missing will be the purr of the cotton gin that kept this shrinking burg on the map.

Citing an off cotton crop and outdated equipment, the Draw Paymaster Gin has closed for this year's harvest, gin manager Bobby Mack Furlow said. And with $250,000 needed to update it, it's unclear if it will ever reopen.

"It didn't matter how loud (the gin) was, it was music to our ears," Pat Hensley, 73, told the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal during a break from his daily domino game in the modest gin office.

For 15 years, Hensley has spent mornings playing dominoes with his buddies at the gin. Before then, they met at the old gin office, built in the early '20s.

If the gin closes for good, the church will be the only non-residential building left in Draw, a town of 20 south of Lubbock.

At its acme in the '20s and '30s, Draw's population reached about 200. Shoppers could browse four grocery stores and buy from a local blacksmith.

The first major entity — the post office — closed in 1935, Hensley says, followed by the school in the early '40s.

"That really hurt when the school closed," says Fern Barnes, 70, a lifetime Draw resident.

Since then, Draw has slowly declined. "People went hunting for the big, bright lights," Hensley says. "They went to places like O'Donnell and Tahoka."

But the gin always kept Draw on the map. Farmers from miles around would haul in cotton. In 1988, the gin processed a record 10,800 bales. An aerial photograph on the gin office wall shows Draw clogged with cotton-packed trailers that year.

The office will stay open for "the foreseeable future," said Bill Quattlebaum, a manager with Southern Cotton Oil.

"The gin might reopen ... but historically it is just not economically feasible," he said.

But the locals aren't packing up their dominoes just yet.

"They have not given us a definite answer, and I think they will find a way to keep it open," Hensley says. "Heck, it never hurts to dream, does it?"

Your Birthday

Tuesday, Aug. 23, 1994

A more secure and independent you could emerge in the year ahead. The results might be very impressive in endeavors or enterprises you personally direct.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) A friend might ask advice from you today, but don't take it as an invitation to be too candid. He/she wants an endorsement, not criticism. Know where to look for romance and you'll find it. The Astro-Graph Matchmaker instantly reveals which signs are romantically perfect for you. Mail $2 to Matchmaker, c/o this newspaper, P.O. Box 4465, New York, N.Y. 10163.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) You and your mate might be operating on different wavelengths today where an important issue is concerned. It may be wise to postpone discussions about this matter until another day.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Do not volunteer to handle a critical matter for a friend unless you are positive that your aid will be helpful. There's a possibility you could make this situation worse than it already is.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) It's essential to be patient in complex commercial dealings today. Hasty or impulsive actions could cost you money as well as time.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) Someone lacking proper authority might make an important decision for you today that could have lasting effects. Be alert, so you can nip it in the bud.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Sometimes it's better to call in an expert rather than to attempt to repair something delicate yourself. Keep this in the back of your mind if anything expensive needs mending today.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be prepared to justify all the expenditures you make today if you're operating on an expense account or using household funds.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Persons with whom you're involved today may sense something is annoying you, yet the cause will be camouflaged. Your attitude won't mitigate the problem, which may result in a big bang.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Instead of looking for the good in others today, you may be intensely focused on their shortcomings and create complications where none need exist.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) It's best not to press friends to repay favors today. What you request might be small and overdue, yet they could find your demands irritating.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) In order to get your way today you might employ intimidating tactics on associates. Even if you accomplish your objectives, you're not likely to receive a standing ovation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Imposing your views and opinions on friends today could be a lesson in futility. They might agree with you externally, but internally they'll be singing a different tune.

Bull rider said gored in throat

LUBBOCK (AP) — A bull rider competing in a rodeo was gored in the throat after he was thrown, officials said.

Ace Hightower, 22, of Lubbock, was listed in critical condition Sunday at University Medical Center.

The accident happened about 9:30 p.m. while Hightower was bull riding at the C-T Rodeo Arena, witnesses said.

"He got bucked off, and for a split second the bull turned back and stuck his horn in his throat," said Dave Fox, who struggled to drive the bull from Hightower.

Fox said he and another bullfighter worked to get the bull away quickly because of the animal's temperament.

U.S. military learns lessons in Rwanda

KIGALI, Rwanda (AP) — Water pumps, bulldozers and plastic sheets for shelter may become the U.S. military's weapons of choice as it prepares for "humanitarian interventions" around the post-Cold War world, says an officer coordinating the U.S. relief effort in Rwanda.

Although late and limited, the now month-long U.S. assistance to this terribly stricken nation has scored successes. These, and unfortunate shortfalls, are what Col. Karl Farris will incorporate into textbooks for use in future catastrophes.

"The U.S. military is the only military ... that can get to a humanitarian crisis quickly and with sufficient resources to make a difference" anywhere in the world, Farris said in an interview Sunday.

The United Nations is not structured to move rapidly enough, said Farris, director of the U.S. Army Peacekeeping Institute in Carlyle, Pa., which trains soldiers for humanitarian missions.

The Clinton administration was criticized for responding too slowly to the vast refugee flows and aftershocks of tribal massacres that erupted in Rwamda in April. An estimated 500,000 people were killed in 14 weeks of civil war.

Reluctance to get involved stemmed from Somalia, where the United States did an admirable job of saving the country from starvation but then withdrew after 19 of its troops were killed and dozens injured in shootouts with clan militias.

But once the green light was given for Rwanda, Operation Support Hope moved fast.

Within 72 hours, a team flown from the Netherlands was pumping clean water to the refugee camp in Goma, Zaire, where some 43,000 died from malnutrition and such diseases as the water-borne cholera and dysentery.

Troops rapidly restored the war-torn capital's airport — vital to air-borne aid. Recently, nearly 30 aircraft have been bringing emergency aid every day.

Some of the 2,000 troops are also helping restore electric power and running water to the capital, Kigali. Last week, they helped fly in Ethiopian peacekeepers urgently needed to replace French forces who were pulling out of southwestern Rwanda.

There are no plans for the Americans to expand their mission or move into volatile zones like southwest Rwanda.

Clinton plays down blockade speculation

KEY WEST NAVAL AIR STATION, Fla. (AP) — A U.S. blockade of Cuba is "an option," Defense Secretary William Perry said today, but not one the Clinton administration is actively moving toward.

"It would take considerably more resources than we are deploying now," he said.

Perry flew to Florida to meet with Coast Guard and Navy officials braced for handling another wave of Cuban refugees.

Coast Guard officials said some 1,200 Cubans had been plucked from the Straits of Florida on Sunday and that as of midday Monday some 600 had been added to that number.

"If the trend continues, it'll be our busiest day yet," said one Coast Guard official, referring to the flood of refugees that began Aug. 1.

Perry and Miller said the Pentagon was prepared to house as many as to 10,000 Cubans at the Guantanamo naval base in southeastern Cuba, and possibly to open new safe havens in three other areas to keep the refugees from reaching U.S. shores.

"We don't know how long it's going to have to be kept up at this stage," Perry said of the Pentagon's effort.

Asked how long the 10,000 Cubans could remain on Guantanamo, which already houses 15,000 Haitians, Perry replied, "I would say indefinitely."

FOOD HANDLER SEMINAR

(Sponsored by the Scurry County Health Unit)

On Thursday, August 25, 1994, the Scurry County Health Unit will be sponsoring a Food Handler Seminar. This class will be held at Towle Park Barn. The subject matter will be discussed at three different times during the day, so that individuals may arrange their schedule to attend one of the three classes. The first class will be from 8:30 a.m. to 10:30 a.m., the second class will be from 2:00 p.m. to 4:00 p.m., and the third class will be from 7:00 p.m. to 9:00 p.m.

Bob Badger, R.S., Chief Sanitarian, Texas Department of Health, Region II, will be presiding over the seminar. He will be glad to answer any questions you may have following the end of the class.

The purpose of this seminar is to create a consciousness in the food handler, server, and utensil handler in public places of constant sanitary practices in storage, preservation, and serving of food and beverages.

All persons from restaurants, cafes, deli's, bakeries, managers of church kitchens, concession stand workers, temporary vendor workers, and any persons who are interested in food handling in public places are encouraged to attend.

Media has covered up satanic cults, people at rally say

GILMER (AP) — About 300 people have gathered in a rally protesting the lack of progress into the investigation of the 1992 disappearance and presumed murder of a local teen-ager.

Speakers at a "Justice for Kelly Wilson" rally held Sunday on the square of the Gilmer County Courthouse railed against satanic cults, which they say were involved in Miss Wilson's disappearance.

They also accused law enforcement agencies and the news media of being involved in a coverup.

Miss Wilson, 17, disappeared after leaving her job at a video store in Gilmer in 1992.

In January, a grand jury indicted Gilmer police Sgt. James Brown, the lead investigator on the case, and seven others in the assumed murder of Miss Wilson in the course of satanic rituals.

The state attorney general's office dismissed the indictments in March after taking over the case.

"In God we trust; in the A.G. we don't" read one sign in Sunday's crowd.

Cathy Carlson of Gilmer, the missing girl's mother, initially refused to believe that Brown could have been involved in her daughter's disappearance.

She said she changed her mind after: "I finally talked to the horse's mouth rather than it's rear end."

Apparently, she was referring to onetime special prosecutor Scott Lyford, who obtained the indictments against Brown and seven people, and Shane Phelps, an assistant attorney general now in charge of the investigation.

Miss Kelly's father, Robbie Wilson of Natchitoches, La., stressed that he was not involved in Sunday's rally. He and Ms. Carlson are divorced.

Wilson said he and his current wife "want to make it clear that we in no way support of condone the acts of this committee or this rally. We fully support the ongoing investigation by the attorney general's office."

Wilson added, "It really upsets me that they're using Kelly's name."

Police work four mishaps

At 7:48 a.m. Saturday, officers worked a two-vehicle mishap in the 1800 block of 39th Street. Involved were a 1991 Ford pickup driven by Edward Benitez of 1804 39th St. and a 1990 Mercury driven by Sandra West of 3306 Irving.

dents more quality.

Most WTC students who choose to live off-campus prefer to rent one-bedroom unfurnished apartments equipped with a stove, dishwasher, and refrigerator, Jones noted. Such apartments are "more affordable, and the unmarried sophomores can get by with less space," she said.

Citywide, the average monthly rent for a one-bedroom, unfurnished apartment in Snyder is approximately $185, excluding the rate for utilities, Jones said. Buckland estimated that citywide average rental rate at $200.

Fires threaten nearly 70 homes

KALISPELL, Mont. (AP) — A pair of fires roared uncontrolled and partially unfought through northwestern Montana today, advancing on nearly 70 houses and forcing dozens of evacuations.

"Primary residences and lives are threatened," said Ed Conley of the Federal Emergency Management Agency's regional office in Denver.

The worst blaze covered 12,000 acres in the Flathead National Forest, less than two miles from a 30-house development near Whitefish. Residents began leaving Sunday.

Creative writing offered at WTC

A creative writing class is again offered this fall at Western Texas College, giving interested individuals the opportunity to stretch their writing skills in both prose and poetry.

The course, English 230, meets Wednesdays from 6:30 p.m. to 9:20 p.m. and is taught by Bill McGlothing, assistant professor of English and a published poet.

This marks the third year the class has been offered. Student work is published each spring in the "Aquifer," the literary magazine published by the Communications and Letters Division at WTC.

The class is a three-hour elective and will transfer as academic credit to four-year universities. Works covered include poetry, short fiction, non-fiction, and drama.

A workshop atmosphere allows students to discuss their own work as well as that of others. "The class is for anyone who writes or who wants to," McGlothing said.

What will help drinking husband?

By Peter H. Gott, M.D.

DEAR DR. GOTT: I believe my husband has a severe drinking problem. He is a good husband and father, is not abusive and holds down a good job. So — on the outside — he looks pretty good. But he drinks at least six beers a night after work and on the weekends he can polish off a case by himself. He keeps beer hidden in the garage and in his car. I've attempted to discuss the situation with him and this only makes him mad. I love him but I'm having a hard time living with him.

DEAR READER: Your situation is not unique. Spouses are frequently frustrated by their partners' excessive drinking, especially since the drinkers seldom acknowledge that a problem exists.

The one important issue to consider is that you have no control over your husband's behavior — or his drinking. Until he wants to stop, the problem will continue.

Nonetheless, you are far from helpless. I urge you to attend an Al-Anon meeting. These support groups are composed of people whose loved ones drink excessively. Al-Anon members will show you ways of handling your husband's problem.

In particular, you can learn to avoid enabling behavior that encourages his drinking. Perhaps he may even be a candidate for an intervention, during which you and others who care about your husband can confront him about his drinking and assist him in getting professional help, such as medical attention, and/or through Alcoholics Anonymous, comprised of alcoholics whose sole purpose is to stay sober and help other alcoholics.

I might add that many readers wouldn't consider your husband's six to 12 beers a night to be excessive. After all, he continues to function at home and at work, doesn't he? This is incorrect and is a classic alcoholic defense.

This amount of alcohol is, from a medical perspective, too much for the body to handle. The liver can safely detoxify only about four ounces of spirits per day, or the equivalent in wine (two glasses) or beer (two or three cans). Chronic consumption that exceeds this limit will usually lead to liver disease (cirrhosis), heart disease (cardiomyopathy), inflammation of the pancreas (pancreatitis), and brain damage.

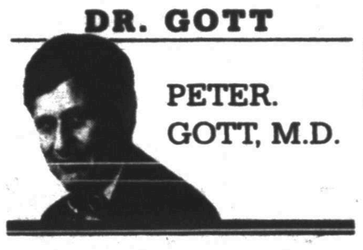

In addition, your husband's drinking pattern, such as hiding his supply of beer, is — I believe — clearly alcoholic.

So, rather than anger him by your persistence, lay off and go to Al-Anon, a resource that is available in most communities. Check your Yellow Pages.

To give you more information, I am sending you a free copy of my Health Report "Help II: Mental/Substance Abuse." Other readers who would like a copy should send $2 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped envelope to P.O. Box 2433, New York, NY 10163. Be sure to mention the title.

Pentagon said ordering big cuts in aircraft contracts

NEW YORK (AP) — The Pentagon is considering cutting or delaying most major aircraft contracts, The Wall Street Journal and Washington Post reported today.

Based on a memo from Deputy Defense Secretary John M. Deutch to members of the Defense Resources Board policy council, the papers said the cuts could come as soon as next month.

Deutch, the Pentagon's acquisition chief, has reportedly targeted:

— The Air Force F-22 fighter by Boeing, the largest planned U.S. procurement for a single weapons system

— The Army's Commanche, or RAH-66, helicopter, jointly in development by Boeing and the Sikorsky unit of United Technologies Corp.

— The Navy and Marines' V-22 Osprey, a versatile two-engine craft that can fly like a plane and land like a helicopter, in development by Boeing and the Bell helicopters unit of Textron Inc.

The cost of helping Cuban and Rwandan refugees, plus the fight against drug traffickers, has forced the Pentagon to find savings by delaying high-priced weapons, The Post said.

A spokesman for Deutch would not confirm the memo, the Journal said.

"You're going to hear a lot of screaming" by Air Force brass over delaying the F22s, The Post quoted an unidentified Air Force official as saying.

"This'll be a blow to the Navy ... and it's scary," a Navy official told the paper.

Defense contractors were less dramatic in their assessment.

"Obviously we're concerned, but we're not alarmed," said a spokesman for Lockheed, based in Calabasas, Calif.

In Seattle, a Boeing spokesman told The Journal the company is aware of the memo and they "don't know what it means" but are studying it.

Also cited in the memo were the Navy's Arleigh Burke-class destroyers and new attack submarines.

General Dynamics Corp., whose electric boat shipyard in Groton, Conn., makes submarines, told The Post a one-year delay would be bearable but a longer one could mean trouble.

Style threatens to overcome substance in Simpson case

LOS ANGELES (AP) — In the stage-managed, image-conscious court of L.A. law, where life often imitates art, style threatens to overpower substance in the case of O.J. Simpson.

Audiences have come to expect as fashionable an assortment of characters in real life as they once viewed every Thursday night on television. The Simpson double-murder case hasn't disappointed them.

"It reminds me of the show a lot," said Patricia Green, who wrote many scripts for "L.A. Law" during its seven-year run. "They can't edit the dialogue to make it as dramatic as we did. But both sets of attorneys are adopting the posturing that our attorneys did. They seem to want to be as interesting."

For the defense, there's the cool, soft-spoken Robert Shapiro, whose penchant for flashy ties and expensive suits belies his subtle, calculated courtroom demeanor.

Backing him up is Gerald Uelmen, a white-haired former law school dean whose professorial tone inspires respect, and Johnnie L. Cochran, the dapper, courtly advocate with a flashy personality.

For the prosecution, low-key Deputy District Attorney William Hodgman has taken a back seat, leaving the spotlight on Marcia Clark, an aggressive, fast-talking lawyer whose displays of anger contrast sharply with her understated look.

She favors dark suits and no jewelry — a move which gets the nod from fashion arbiter Mr. Blackwell, who says the court is a place for dignity, "not a place for some designer to show off their new line."

But can the scales of justice really be tipped by style?

"I've seen juries convict the lawyer," said Karl Fleming, who coaches attorneys in the art of courtroom behavior.

He recalled the time a gifted lawyer appeared in a red velvet suit. After that, jurors cared little about what the man had to say: "The defendant was on his way to the gas chamber."

Fleming's cardinal rules include no flashy jewelry, no wild clothing, no bizarre hairdos.

"You don't want your appearance to become an issue," he said.

The importance of courtroom theatrics surfaced last week during what should have been a routine hearing.

Shapiro asked the judge to hold Clark in contempt, accusing her of lying; Clark, her voice quavering with anger, demanded an apology.

"Both sides were playing to the camera," Loyola University law professor Laurie Levenson said. "Part of being a good courtroom lawyer is being theatrical. But being theatrical means knowing when to be low key and when to come on strong."

She classified Clark's performance as "overdone." Fleming agreed.

"You don't score points by coming across angry, judgmental and kind of mean," Fleming said. "I don't think anyone wants to be mean to O.J. Simpson. They want him to have a fair trial."

Simpson, charged in the slashing death of his ex-wife and her friend, has eased into a supporting role in court.

He wears sedate dark suits, carries a folder and spends most of his time jotting notes on a yellow legal pad.

"The prosecution in this case has to walk a very fine line, because the defendant is such a sympathetic character in spite of the charges," said Aviva Diamond, who coaches lawyers and executives in communication. "An overly harsh demeanor can work against their cause."

Diamond said defense lawyers need to paint themselves and their client in a "warm and sympathetic light." So far, they seem to be succeeding.

Experts seek cause of gas pipeline explosion in N.M.

JARALES, N.M. (AP) — Investigators continued to probe a mangled natural gas pipeline spanning the Rio Grande, searching for clues to explain why the 30-inch line exploded last weekend.

"Our immediate concern is to find what caused the incident," said Elaine McCasland, spokeswoman for Transwestern Pipeline Co. of Houston, which operates the line. "It will probably take some time to really assess this."

A metallurgist and natural gas experts arrived Sunday, one day after the blast rocked homes, leaked fumes and left a crater 20 feet deep and 75 feet across. McCasland said the group included about 10 experts and officials of Transwestern and its parent company, Enron Corp.

"These are very experienced people," she said.

The explosion occurred six miles south of Belen. The blast destroyed a trestle supporting the pipeline over the river and shattered windows in nearby buildings, said Valencia County Sheriff's Sgt. Tony Scazzero.

Authorities evacuated about 100 homes within a one-mile radius of the explosion for about five hours while crews worked to shut off the gas and secure the area. Roads were closed for eight miles around the site.

The most serious injury appeared to be a heart attack victim from a nearby home, Scazzero said. Rupert Garcia, 67, and two others were hospitalized in Albuquerque. One patient was treated for a back injury and the other complained of hearing problems, Scazzero said.

An unknown number of other residents suffered from nausea, vomiting and headaches as a result of leaking gas. Residents returned to their homes about five hours after the explosion and roads were reopened, Scazzero said.

Authorities had worried that lightning in the area could ignite the leaking gas, Scazzero said.

The pipeline transports about 750 million cubic feet of natural gas daily from West Texas to a distribution center in Needles, Calif. McCasland said the pipeline break wouldn't disrupt service in California because that state is served "by many pipelines of multiple suppliers of natural gas."

She said the pipeline was built in 1960 and had passed recent maintenance checks. McCasland said the explosion didn't cause a fire.

Environmentalists oppose federal strategy on ozone

DALLAS (AP) — Local and state officials fearing the loss of federal funds for transportation improvements have asked the Environmental Protection Agency to waive or delay rules on a major pollutant, nitrogen oxide.

Some areas, such as Dallas-Fort Worth and El Paso, want the EPA to also approve transportation plans that would result in increased nitrogen oxide emissions.

Other areas, such as Beaumont and Houston, are seeking temporary waivers freeing industrial sources such as power plants from nitrogen oxide controls.

They argue that cities can clean up the air just by reducing ozone's other ingredient, volatile organic compounds from vehicle fuel and other sources.

But environmental groups disagree strongly with the cities' argument that nitrogen oxide controls aren't necessary or may do more harm than good.

They argue that the government has no business neglecting a major component of dirty air.

Ozone, the nation's most common air pollutant, is created when sunlight cooks nitrogen oxide from unburned fuel and volatile organics from vehicles, factories, lawn equipment, some consumer products and other sources.

Ozone irritates lungs and poses extra risks to people with asthma or other breathing ailments.

Groups such as the Sierra Club, the American Lung Association and the Environmental Defense Fund want the EPA to keep up limits on nitrogen oxide because of ozone's health risks and the chance cities' clean-air plans may fail.

"More emissions is not a good thing," said George Smith, the Sierra Club's national air-quality chairman. "We feel that major reductions in both (types of pollutants) are going to be needed. The sooner we get on with it, the better off we are."

Nationwide, billions of dollars in planned transportation improvements could depend upon getting the nitrogen oxide exemptions.

Everett Bacon, principal transportation planner with the North Central Texas Council of Governments, said $74 million of planned transportation projects are at stake in the Dallas-Fort Worth area.

The 1990 Clean Air Act and EPA rules require local transportation plans to conform to clean air plans, meaning they can't make air pollution worse — but in the case of nitrogen oxide, many would do just that.

So far, the EPA seems to have been friendly toward cities' request for extra leeway.

Officials in the Dallas-Fort Worth area are hoping recent changes such as tougher emissions inspections in some counties will help reduce pollution emissions.

Chavis, free of NAACP, goes ahead with leadership summit

BALTIMORE (AP) — Declaring himself a free man, the ousted executive director of the NAACP blasted the organization's leaders as puppets of the corporate establishment.

"How can you have a freedom movement if somebody else is paying for your freedom?" Benjamin Chavis said at a rally Sunday night, surrounded by about 150 supporters, including Nation of Islam leader Louis Farrakhan.

"I am committed to the struggle of our people in a way that does not make one want to bend," he said. "Too many of our leaders have bent over."

"We love you," one woman called out.

"We are one," a man shouted.

Chavis was fired Saturday for what board members called an accumulation of problems during his 16-month tenure, including a $2.7 million deficit and his use of NAACP funds to settle a former employee's sex discrimination claim.

Beyond that, board members feared Chavis was steering the organization off from the mainstream, moderate course it has held throughout its 85-year history.

Many members objected to Chavis' alliances with leaders such as Farrakhan, who has been criticized for anti-Semitic remarks.

The rally at Bethel AME Church followed a black leadership summit that the NAACP had called for its Baltimore headquarters, but postponed after Chavis was fired. Chavis went ahead with the summit.

The NAACP did not send a representative. The 60 or so participants met for several hours behind closed doors, and planned to meet again today and Tuesday.

After the meeting, Chavis positioned himself as the leader of a coalition that includes black nationalists and Pan-Africanists, and depicted his ouster as a struggle over the future of the civil rights movement.

"Between now and the end of this year, blacks will have to decide which direction the struggle should take," he said.

NAACP spokesman Paul Brock declined to respond today to Chavis' comments.

"I don't think there would be a response, simply because we don't need to get into a name-calling contest with anybody," he said.

The NAACP scheduled a news conference this morning to introduce its interim administrator, Earl Shinhoster.

Chavis told The Associated Press that he had not decided whether he will challenge his removal. He said he felt "relieved," not bitter.

"I feel a little liberated right now. I do not have a straitjacket on," he said.

The NAACP board also came under attack from other Chavis allies at the summit, which was attended by authors, educators, businesspeople and religious leaders.

Clarence Mitchell III, a former Maryland state senator whose family has long been involved in the NAACP, encouraged its chapters to throw out board members who refuse to make way for a new generation of leaders.

"A meeting of the board of directors of the NAACP is a geriatric conference," Mitchell said.

By firing Chavis, the board was "blatantly defying the best interests of the people and the will of the people," Mitchell said.

Farrakhan said Chavis "violated what those in corporate America and the rich and the powerful believe the NAACP should be."

Like Chavis, Farrakhan referred to the Ford Foundation's decision last week to delay awarding $250,000 to the NAACP.

"Corporate America and the foundations put so much pressure on the NAACP, people didn't vote their conscience, they voted their pocketbooks," he said. "Ben is free tonight. Ben doesn't have to answer to any board."

Gas prices rise by 1 penny a gallon

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Gasoline prices rose more than a penny per gallon at the pump over the last two weeks due to higher demand and increased crude oil prices, an industry analyst said.

The average price consumers paid for all grades of gasoline was $1.2495 a gallon, up 1.14 cents since the last Lundberg Survey of 10,000 gas stations on Aug. 5.

Scientists search for 'brown' clues

PORT ARANSAS (AP) — Experts agree that brown tide is causing extensive problems along the Laguna Madre on the Texas coast. But they can't seem to answer the many questions about the algae bloom situation.

More than 50 environmental scientists and conservation activists representing state and federal agencies, research institutes and conservation groups debated the problem for eight hours Saturday at the University of Texas Marine Science Institute.

"We are here because the management committee of the Corpus Christi Bay National Estuary Program was concerned enough to create a task force to address the brown tide problem," said task force chairman Bob Wallace Jr. of Corpus Christi, a member of the Coastal Bend Bays Foundation.

However, Saturday's symposium devised no apparent resolution of the key issue: Is brown tide an example of a naturally recurring cycle in the lagoon or is it a manmade disaster?

The symposium panel named a select steering committee to discuss actions for both the short and long term to confront the brown tide threat.

On the committee are representatives of the National Estuary Program, Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, Texas General Land Office, Texas Natural Resource Conservation Commission, Marine Science Institute, Texas A&M University-Corpus Christi and Gulf Coast Conservation Association.

One short-term action plan would focus on the problem of brown tide killing larval redfish and speckled trout at the fish hatchery of the GCCA-CPL Marine Development Center in Flour Bluff.

"The task will be to get the hatchery's production problem solved so it can be ready to supply fish for stocking the Laguna Madre if that becomes necessary," said Larry McKinney, director of the Parks and Wildlife Department's Resource Protection Division.

That would involve funding experimentation with organisms that eat the brown tide algae or viruses that kill it.

Another short-term plan is to seek ways to reduce additional clouding of lagoon waters from manmade causes, McKinney said.

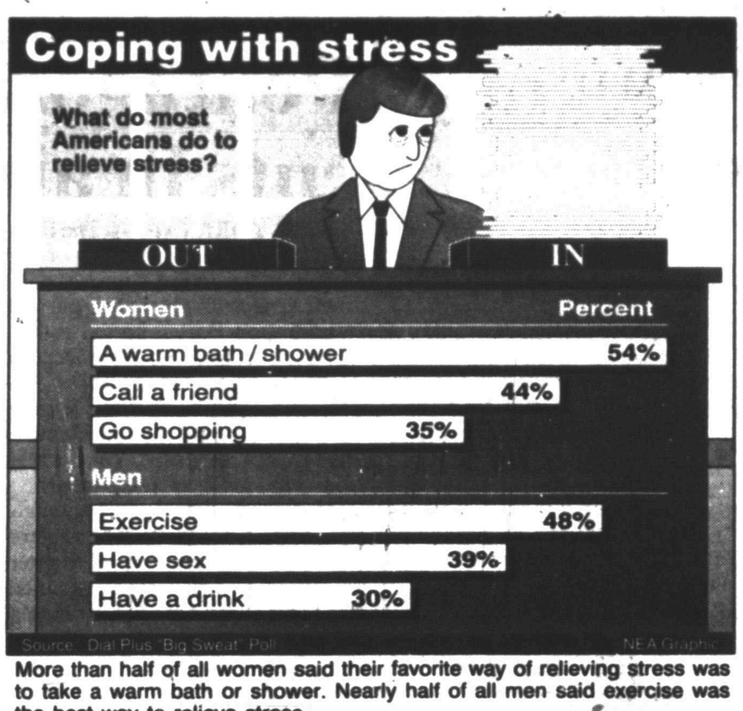

Traffic stop ends in big drug bust

VINTON, La. (AP) — A routine traffic stop led police to as much as $16 million in cocaine, the largest drug bust ever in Calcasieu Parish history.

Police discovered 105 kilos of cocaine after stopping a vehicle for reckless driving on Interstate 10 near Vinton Sunday. The street value of the haul is at least $8 million, but could be as much as $16 million depending on its quality, said Vinton Police Chief Dennis Drouillard.

Two men, believed to be from Colombia, were arrested. The vehicle isregistered to a Colombian in Kansas City, Mo.

Police officer Chester "Skip" Kowalski made the stop about 4:15 a.m. He said he stopped the silver Lincoln after it cut in front of an 18-wheeler truck, almost causing an accident.

More than half of all women said their favorite way of relieving stress was to take a warm bath or shower. Nearly half of all men said exercise was the best way to relieve stress.

Youth who stopped taking transplant medicine dies

MIAMI (AP) — Benito Agrelo died his way: at home with his family after a summer playing video games with his friends and watching his tropical fish.

The 15-year-old transplant patient died in his mother's arms Saturday, free of debilitating anti-rejection drugs, two months after going to court for the right to stop taking the medication.

"Mami, hug," Benito said, opening his eyes and embracing his mother, Armanda Agrelo. Then he smiled and took his last breath, said his sister, Ava Senra Agrelo.

"A few day ago, my mom told him that he was going to see Jesus before she did, and that when he sees him to give him a big hug for her," Ava Senra Agrelo said. "That was his hug."

Benito won the right to stop taking his medication in June, after the state Department of Health and Rehabilitative Services forcibly hospitalized him for three days — until a judge intervened.

Benito said he couldn't stand the medicine's side-effects — fierce headaches and irritablity — and wanted to die in peace. After a long visit with the boy, Judge Arthur Birken agreed.

"I'm tired of living in pain. I'd rather stay at home and live as close as I can to a natural life," Benito said at the time.

Health department officials later apologized.

Benito received his first new liver when he was 8 and his second in 1992, then decided last summer to cut back on anti-rejection medicine. In October, he quit taking the medicine altogether. He spent most of his last summer at home.

Two days before his death, he fell into a coma.

Circus owner: new worker may have spooked elephant

HONOLULU (AP) — A 9,000-pound elephant that killed its trainer and left a dozen spectators injured in the melee before fleeing through the city was probably spooked by a new circus worker, the elephant's owner said.

Apprentice groom William Beckwith, who had been working with elephants for just over a month, probably startled Tyke by walking too closely behind her, said John Cuneo, president of Illinois-based Hawthorne Corp.

Beckwith, 20, was injured when the African elephant threw him down, then tried to stomp on his head during Saturday afternoon's performance. Veteran trainer Allen Campbell, 37, was crushed to death when he tried to intervene.

"I don't think Tyke would ever hurt Allen if he hadn't been trying to protect this boy," Cuneo said. Beckwith was in fair condition today.

Spectator Ann-Marie Pesa said the attack spread panic through the Circus International audience.

"All of a sudden people started running away, children were screaming and we saw the blood," Pesa said.

A dozen people were injured as they fled the 21-year-old elephant, which broke through the arena's main exit and ran through the streets. They were treated and released. The elephant was cornered several blocks away and shot repeatedly. Workers from the Honolulu Zoo gave it a lethal injection after it crumpled to the ground.

"We really don't know why the elephant went on a rampage, as far as any organic disease," said Thomas Sama of the Department of Agriculture, which performed a necropsy Sunday.

The Hawaiian Humane Society began its own investigation. "We want to find out whether this animal was trained properly, not in a punitive manner," spokesman Mike Burgwin said.

Police shoot woman who threatened cat with knife

GRESHAM, Ore. (AP) — Police shot and killed a woman who was holding her cat at knifepoint in a grocery store on Sunday.

The woman came into the store with her Siamese cat and a knife and sat down in an aisle, said Sgt. David Lerwick, a police spokesman.

Managers placed rows of shopping carts at either end of the aisle, moved bystanders away, and called police.

Officers asked the woman to drop the knife and she began threatening to kill the cat, Lerwick said. The woman has not been identified.

The woman got up and began walking toward the officers, who sprayed her with pepper mace in an effort to stop her advance.

"She then raised her knife above her head and charged the police," Lerwick said.

One officer opened fire. The woman dropped the cat as she collapsed.
