A DIFFERENT STUDY METHOD. Four "senators" from Rochelle Lacy's Texas studies class hear testimony from Mary Braswell, 2701 Beech, on the advantages and disadvantages of solar power. Eight students are portraying senators in the mock hearings as part of an "energy game" developed for the classroom by Cabot Corporation. The students heard testimony this week from visiting experts and other students, and will begin hammering out a comprehensive energy bill Monday. The game will make the participating students aware of opposing viewpoints on energy as well as introduce them to legislative procedure. Students preparing energy plan

Senators Clayburn and Homestead look a bit cynical as the industry expert explains the advantages of solar power.

She says it is theoretically possible to heat homes exclusively with solar energy, and that with 50 percent of American homes on solar power, the country could be energy self - sufficient.

But a spectator can tell that these two senators are thinking ahead to the Energy Subcommittee's debate on energy policy next week, and that they are hoping to pull for the interests of their own fossil fuel producing states.

There are no television lights glinting off polished desks here, no harried secretaries and aides scurrying with sheaves of paper. Most of the senators wear blue jeans and athletic shoes, and they do their own research.

The scene is not a plush mahogany - and - leather meeting room in Washington, D.C. It is a Pampa High School classroom.

Members of Rochelle Lacy's Texas Studies class are participating in a contest sponsored by the Cabot Corporation called "The Energy Hearings." The students are simulating government hearings which will be followed by a debate Monday. The deliberations of their "committee" will result in a comprehensive federal energy policy in the form of a senate bill.

Eight students represent fictional senators from differing states with differing energy concerns at the hearings.

John Grimes is Will "Sunny" Wheelwright, a senator from a Pacific coast state that supports nuclear energy. Marty Cross is Henry Homestead, a young senator from a coal - producing state. Robert Knight is Robert Midland, a midwestern senator with an agricultural bent. Garland Allen is Thomas Corrigan, a liberal senator from New England.

Ried Sitwell is J.R. Clayburn, the committee's chairman, from a petroleum - rich state much like Texas. Miles Bateman is John D. Whitaker, from a coal - rich but money - poor state. Kim McCain is Claire Spencer, the only woman in the senate, from a "fiercely independent" New England state. And Gary Dabbs is David J. Gordon, a senator from the northeast with a predominantly urban constituency.

These roles are set up for the students in a series of guidebooks provided by Cabot, and the students are expected to do what senators (supposedly) do: compromise and argue to form a policy that will please both the country as a whole and their own states.

Other students in the class and visiting speakers act as executives in industries dealing with five primary energy sources: coal, oil, natural gas, nuclear and solar energy.

The information for the hearings is primarily from booklets provided by the Cabot Corporation. Because Cabot is an international oil and gas distributing company, with reported sales of $1.2 billion for 1981, one might question of the neutrality of the information they provide.

The booklets are not strictly neutral, but according to Lacy, who planned and coordinated the event, the materials "present both sides of the issues" instead of merely providing facts.

The materials were prepared by Cabot with the aid of curriculum planners, and tested on groups of high school students for readability. There is no mention of the Cabot corporation in the materials themselves.

After the deliberations of the committee, the bill will be submitted to an independent board of judges, who will compare it with similar results from other schools in different economic areas of the country. The judges will award the bill with the most equitable solution for the nation's energy issues.

Learning materials provided by corporations and businesses are not new to the classroom — we all remember "industrial films," exciting cinema with titles like "The Story of Tin" and "Canning and Bottling Today" — but the Cabot Corporation is making an unusually extensive effort to provide a solid addition to curriculum with its "energy game."

"A real need exists for young people to develop analytical skills for dealing with the energy issue and other relevant matters of the 1980s," explained John Cabot, senior vice - president of Cabot's energy group.

And classroom teachers may have to depend more on this kind of curriculum. Cabot's new classroom program comes in the aftermath of a cut in the Department of Energy's educational budget from $5 million to $1.7 million.

Thursday's testimony at the high school hearings was by visiting "industry expert" Mary Braswell, 2701 Beech, whose home is heated by 50 percent solar power.

Braswell gave a short history of solar power and explained the circulated - air system her family is using. The system is a part - time, do - it - yourself project, built at a 50 percent savings compared to commercial systems.

The consensus of the meeting seemed to be approval of solar energy, primarily as a supplement to older forms of energy production. But the final decision of the committee will depend on next week's deliberations, and on the predicted head - on confrontations between the honorable, but young, senators.

Pampa, Borger officials still discussing foul water problem

By JEFF LANGLEY
Staff Writer

Pampa and Borger city officials and officials from the Canadian River Municipal Water Authority met in Borger today to discuss the cities's foul lake water problem.

Officials held a similar unannounced meeting in Pampa Wednesday afternoon.

Pampa and Borger bosses are putting their heads together because the stinky drinking water problem has been traced to a lake water holding reservoir shared by both cities.

Officials believe the water's taste and odor problem is caused by actinomycetes, microorganisms, contained in the holding pond.

Since the water is shared, the two cities must agree on a plan of action before work to solve the problem can begin.

Solutions discussed Wednesday in Pampa included possible use of chemicals, draining and cleaning the holding pond, and growing cultures of hungry, "killer bacteria" to place in the holding tank to gobble up offending bugs.

In the meantime, both cities are not using lake water through city systems and are using 100 percent well water. Mayor Ray Thompson said Wednesday he favors staying on well water only, until the surface water taste and odor problem is solved, even if Pampa residents are asked to curtail water use.

Nine producing city wells can meet current demand, but they cannot handle peak demand during the coming warmer months. Thompson said residents may be asked to cut down on lawn watering and other uses of city water.

At Wednesday's Pampa water session, officials said no action could be taken until actinomycetes are confirmed in a laboratory culture. CRMWA General Manager John Williams said Wednesday that results of lab cultures for the bugs would be known Thursday.

But today, City Manager Mack Wofford, contacted at the meeting in Borger, said he had "no word from the lab" about confirmation of actinomycetes.

Water samples taken by the state health department last Thursday and Friday were released from the state's Austin lab today. Austin Engineer Charles Maddox said today the samples, which were analyzed on an emergency basis, showed "nothing was found to indicate a taste and odor problem."

Maddox explained that the Austin lab was not looking for organisms, but "organic compounds — chemicals."

He said a gas chromatograph scan for 129 "priority pollutants, carbon compounds" found nothing.

The Austin lab also ran a check for pesticides and herbicides and found nothing.

The Pampa News submitted a city water sample to a private Amarillo laboratory April 28.

The results from Dyess Testing Lab, a state - certified laboratory, were released today.

Dyess registered engineer Burl Peterson said the water sample submitted by The Pampa News from a faucet inside the city limits does have "a slight odor problem." "Stagnant would not be an improper word to use," Peterson said.

However, Peterson said the sample was safe for drinking and contained "no coliform organisms." The engineer contributed the city's problem to "the lake turning over" and said the city search for actinomycetes is probably on the right track.

Besides the search for living bacteria in the city sample, Peterson had the water chemically analyzed, an analysis similar to chemical checks conducted twice a year by the state health department.

The sample submitted by The Pampa News to Dyess Lab was taken after the city began mixing well water with offensive lake water.

Peterson said a chemical breakdown of the water sample was "typical for Meredith water" and indicated nothing unusual.

Diplomatic efforts fizzle, lull continues

Associated Press

A top Argentine official headed to the United Nations today to pursue a diplomatic solution to the Falkland Islands crisis, but Britain was skeptical of the effort and warned of more bombing. The Times of London said a British marine landing could come as early as Monday.

The Argentine official, Deputy Foreign Minister Enrique Ros, left Buenos Aires Thursday night for U.N. headquarters in New York to discuss possible ways to end the conflict that erupted April 2 when Argentine forces seized the Falklands from Britain.

Argentine Foreign Minister Nicanor Costa Mendez told a Buenos Aires radio station today that "certain hope exists" for finding a solution, but reiterated "all negotiations must lead inexorably to Argentine sovereignty" over the Falklands — a position rejected by Britain.

The Times of London said British military chiefs told the Thatcher government that task force commander Rear Adm. John Woodward "expects to be ready to send men of the Royal Marines ashore in force by Monday." There was no official confirmation.

British Foreign Secretary Francis Pym accused the Argentines of scuttling peace efforts and told reporters in London today that British warplanes will bomb the airstrip on the Falkland Islands capital of Stanley if Argentine troops repair the damage of two raids in the past seven days.

"If necessary we will bomb the airfield again," Pym said. He also refused to rule out bombing Argentine mainland airfields, although he said Britain did not want to do this. "But I would not want to exclude any possibility," he said.

Britain lost two more of its Sea Harrier jet fighters in bad weather off the Falklands Thursday, the British Defense Ministry said, and British newspapers speculated today they collided in the air after taking off on a combat patrol. This left 17 of the original 20 Harriers with the armada still operational.

Amid growing expectations the British will soon assault the South Atlantic islands, Pym told the House of Commons in London:

"If all endeavors to meet a sensible, reasonable and fair settlement fail, then regrettably nobody is in any doubt what we are going to do — we cannot allow the occupation of our islands to continue...Our resolve is undiminished."

Pym blamed Argentine insistence on sovereignty over the Falklands for the collapse of a U.S.-Peruvian peace plan that he claimed could have brought a cease-fire today.

He said Britain was pursuing the only surviving diplomatic option, a U.N. plan he described as having a "similar basis" to the Pervuian proposals.

Democrats jump on revised budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — No sooner did President Reagan endorse a budget plan put forth by his allies in the Senate than congressional Democrats jumped all over it as contemplating deep cuts in Social Security.

Accusing President Reagan of breaking his promise not to touch Social Security, Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd introduced an amendment Thursday rejecting the Republican-led Senate Budget Committee's call for a $40 billion reduction in the cost of the retirement program through a combination of benefit reductions and withholding increases.

The budget plan "is unfair, hasty and went against the president's promise that Social Security would be included in the safety net," Byrd said.

"This body has solemnly undertaken not to touch Social Security until the president's commission makes its recommendations," said Sen. Daniel Patrick Moynihan, D-N.Y.

He said a $40 billion cut would amount to an average benefit reduction of $1,111 over three years for each of the 35 million Americans now receiving Social Security payments.

But Richard Darman, White House deputy chief of staff, said the Social Security recommendations should not be characterized as cuts.

"It is simply a recognition of the fact that something must be done to solve the Social Security problem and we are assuming that, following the recommendations of the commission, something will be done," Darman said in a telephone interview.

He said the $40 billion might not come from cuts. "It is possible that amount of money could be raised either by changes in benefits for future recipients or some form of revenue changes or a program restructuring or management changes," he said.

The Senate Budget Committee completed action on the compromise plan Thursday night, sending it to the Senate floor for action. The 12-8 vote broke down along party lines. The committee outline calls for $667 billion in revenues and $779 billion.

Reagan told reporters Thursday that the new budget proposal would continue to protect the basic Social Security benefits.

The president said the savings "could come from a restructuring of the program" but did not explain how the reductions could be obtained without lowering benefits. Of the $40 billion "solvency recommendations" contained in the budget plan, Reagan said "that figure is a plug that is simply put in there."

Nation's unemployment highest in 40 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — Unemployment in the United States jumped to 9.4 percent last month — breaking the post-World War II record — the government announced today. Some 10.3 million people were out of work.

April's jobless rate was up 0.4 of a percentage point from the previous month, more than enough to set a record. Not since 1941, when the government began compiling monthly statistics, has unemployment topped 9 percent. In that year, the jobless rate hit 9.9 percent.

At the White House, presidential spokesman Larry Speakes called today's announcement disappointing and said, "We remain sensitive to the plight of the unemployed."

He said he could not predict how far unemployment would rise or when it would begin declining. "We're looking for signs of economic recovery by late spring-early summer," Speakes said.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., charged that the new figures show conclusively that Reagan's economic program has failed to do anything but "deliver pink slip after pink slip after pink slip to millions of decent men and women."

"Ronald Reagan's bread lines grew longer by 450,000 people," Kennedy said, adding that the "country is now harvesting the bitter fruits of a failed and unfair economic policy. ... Americans all over the country are losing their homes, their hopes and their pride."

One economist said the current high unemployment is the price of bringing down inflation and others, both in and out of government, predicted the rate will climb even higher before turning around.

Since last summer, when the recession that still plagues the economy set in, unemployment has risen 2.2 percentage points. In July, joblessness nationwide stood at 7.2 percent.

By March, joblessness had risen to 9 percent — equalling the post-World War II record set in May 1975, the high point of the last severe recession. Some 9.9 million people were out of work in March.

The continuing business slump hit that nation's manufactuers the hardest, with unemployment among blue-collar workers reaching 13.7 percent in April, a record. Unemployment among adult men, traditionally the most stable segment of the labor force, spurted to 8.2 percent, also a new high. Teenage unemployment shot up to 23 percent, and joblessness among blacks reached 18.4 percent, both records.

In addition, the number of Americans who were forced to accept part-time employment exceeded 5.8 million — the most since the government began keeping such figures more than a decade ago.

Last month, 453,000 Americans were thrown out of work, according to the seasonally adjusted figures produced by the Labor Department's Bureau of Labor Statistics. Total employment stood at 99.3 million, a decline of 152,000 since March, even though 300,000 more people were looking for work.

In remarks prepared for delivery later in the day to the congressional Joint Economic Committee, the bureau's commissioner, Janet Norwood, said, "Job market conditions continued to deteriorate in April. Employment in construction responded very weakly to the improved spring weather and factory jobs continued to decline."

Job cutbacks in construction and manufacturing accounted for most of the over-the-month decline, the bureau said. Construction employment was down 85,000 in April, and over the last 12 months, nearly one in 10 construction jobs has been lost.

At the same time, full-time workers continued to see their hours cut back. The bureau said the average workweek of production workers on non-agricultural payrolls in April was 34.8 hours, down 0.1 hour from March.

For specific segments of the workforce, the department reported:

—Adult men, 8.2 percent, up from 7.9.
—Adult women, 8.3, up from 7.9.
—Teen-agers, 23, up from 21.9.
—Whites, 8.4, up from 7.9.
—Blacks, 18.4, up from 18.0.
—Hispanics, 12.5, down from 12.7.

The highest unemployment figure ever was a 24.9 percent jobless rate recorded at the height of the Depression in 1933, when the nation's labor force was only half its present size.

Billy Graham in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Evangelist Billy Graham, whose fiery crusades have filled U.S. football stadiums, arrived in Moscow today and said "God and history may judge us all" unless religious leaders act to avert a nuclear catastrophe.

The 63-year-old Southern Baptist minister came to the Soviet capital to participate in a conference of religious leaders opposed to the arms race. He also is scheduled to speak at Moscow's only Baptist church and a Russian Orthodox cathedral. No other details of his itinerary have been released.

Graham was met at Sheremetyevo-2 Airport by delegations of Russian Orthodox and Baptist religious leaders, and a representative of the state-run Soviet Institute of the United States and Canada.

In an airport statement, Graham said: "God is a judge, and God and history may judge us all if we fail to take action against a nuclear catastrophe. It is time also for religious leaders to meet and make whatever donations we can for peace in our era."

In an earlier stopover in Paris, Graham said he would conduct a quiet crusade during his visit to Moscow, the heart of Communist atheism.

Jail hanging ruled suicide

Justice of the Peace Margie Prestidge has ruled suicide in connection with a hanging Tuesday night in the Pampa city jail.

Prestidge said initial results from an autopsy performed on the victim by forensic pathologist Dr. Ralph Erdmann indicated suicide.

Prestidge said she viewed the body before the autopsy was performed and observed no unusual marks on the victim.

Bobby Culberson, 42, 217 Miami St., was found hanging by a shirt wrapped around bars in the "drunk tank" by an officer during a routine jail check, according to police. Police said the victim was discovered around 10:30 p.m. Tuesday.

Police said corporal Jess Wallace cut the shirt and called for an ambulance. Culberson was pronounced dead at Coronado Community Hospital.

Police said Culberson hanged himself about two hours after he was booked into jail.

A cellmate was asleep when the victim was discovered, according to police.

Quick action seen unlikely on school prayer, busing questions

WASHINGTON (AP) — Despite new declarations of Reagan administration support, proposals to restore prayer in public schools and prohibit busing for desegregation are unlikely to be approved in Congress this year.

Democratic opposition in the House, the likelihood of a liberal filibuster in the Senate and the press of other business seem likely to torpedo quick action on those issues during the 97th Congress.

Some Democrats said they believe President Reagan is seeking to use social issues like busing and prayer to turn voters' minds away from a faltering economy.

"He is appealing to the public to forget about economic problems and give their attention to things like prayer, abortion and the elimination of busing," said Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif.

Edwards is a liberal member of the House Judiciary Committee, which has jurisdiction over busing and prayer legislation. He predicted efforts to restore prayer and bar busing will fail in the committee.

On busing, Attorney General William French Smith said for the first time Thursday that he believes a bill in Congress to sharply limit the power of federal courts to order school busing is constitutional.

On school prayer, Reagan announced Thursday at a White House Rose Garden ceremony that he soon will propose a constitutional amendment to reverse the 1963 Supreme Court decision banning voluntary school prayer.

Reagan told a group of 100 conservative religious leaders, including Jerry Falwell of the Majority Majority, that he wants to "restore a freedom our Constitution was always meant to protect."

"No one must ever be forced or coerced or pressured zo take part in any religious exercise, but neither should the government forbid religious practice," Reagan said.

Religious values are "deeply embedded in our national character," Reagan said.

The president said "well-meaning Americans" have taken away the right to pray in school "in the name of freedom...For the sake of religious tolerance they have forbidden religious practice in our public classrooms.

"No one will ever convince me that a moment of voluntary prayer will harm a child or threaten a school or state," he said.

The president conceded it would be difficult to get such an amendment through Congress, where a two-thirds vote would be necessary in the House and Senate. Once through Congress the measure would have to be ratified by three-fourths of the state legislatures to take effect.

In New York City, the B'nai B'rith Anti-Defamation League asked Reagan to withdraw his proposal within hours after it was made, calling it "an ill-conceived and divisive attempt to undermine court rulings based on a cardinal principle of the Bill of Rights."

New York court rules church of the 'Moonies' mainly religious

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — New York state's highest court ruled Thursday that the Unification Church should be considered a religious organization for tax purposes.

In a unanimous decision, the seven-judge Court of Appeals said that the organization's primary purpose is "religious" — making the controversial church headed by Rev. Sun Myung Moon eligible for possible exemption from property taxes.

The court struck down several earlier rulings that had upheld the tax commission of New York City's denial of property tax exemptions on three pieces of property owned by the church, whose members are known as "Moonies."

The court said today that all earlier courts had been "arbitrary and capricious" in upholding the tax commission. In 1977, that panel had voted 4-3 to deny the exemptions because it decided that the controversial church was too "threaded with political motives" to qualify as a religious organization.

It said that the Unification Church has "sufficiently demonstrated" it is a church and that its "economic beliefs and activities (are) integral aspects of its religious doctrine and program."

The church, headed by Moon, a Korean, has headquarters in this country in New York City. It has had a long history of troubles with city, state and federal tax officials.

Moon is on trial in New York City on income tax evasion charges. Final arguments are set for Monday on prosecutors claims that Moon conspired to evade federal income taxes frrom 1973 to 1975 on $112,000 in interest from $1.6 million in bank deposits and $50,000 worth of corporate stock he received without payment.

Clements accuses White, Temple of 'deal'

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A Democratic candidate's announcement that he is withdrawing from a runoff was a "secret deal," but a Republican plan to replace nominees with stronger candidates won't be seen as a similar back-room maneuver, Gov. Bill Clements says.

At his news conference Thursday, Clements suggested that some kind of "consideration" changed hands between Attorney General Mark White and Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple before Temple dropped out of the Democratic runoff.

Temple announced Thursday that he would bow to party unity and give the nomination to White without a June 5 runoff. Temple had finished a poor second to White in Saturday's primary.

But Clements told a Capitol news conference the party unity explanation was "nonsense."

"I think they have done it on the basis of some special consideration and what I'm interested in is what was paid and to whom," Clements said. "There was a secret meetir g and I want to know what went on in the secret meeting and I want to know what consideration was between these two individuals."

Both Temple and White had said there was no meeting.

Nevertheless, Clements said he thought voters would view Temple's move as a "secret deal," and would feel "cheated" to his and the Republican party's benefit in November.

"Collectively, (White and Temple) have four feet between them, and I think they just shot themselves in all four feet."

But Clements insisted that Republican plans to replace two nominees with stronger candidates had "been discussed openly" and would not be viewed as a similar "back-room deal."

"The situation is entirely different," he said. "These were not serious candidates."

Donald Hebert, the Republican candidate for agriculture commissioner, has said he would step aside for a stronger nominee to run against Democrat Jim Hightower. Hightower defeated incumbent Reagan Brown in the primary.

But Millard Neptune, listed as the Republican nominee for state treasurer, has put a crimp in Republican plans by continuing to insist he is staying in the race. The 71-year-old Austinite would face the Democratic nominee, former Travis County Commissioner Ann Richards.

Mrs. Richards had expected to wage a runoff campaign against incumbent Warren G. Harding, who has been indicted on a charge alleging he had state employees do campaign work.

But Harding withdrew from the runoff Tuesday, saying he wanted to spare his family "hurt and grief" that a continued campaign would bring.

Judge blocks overnight apartment rental

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A judge has blocked the city from enforcing an ordinance that was designed to allow landlords to rent their apartments to World's Fair visitors but also to keep regular tenants from being evicted.

Judge Oris Hyder on Wednesday made permanant a temporary injunction he issued earlier. The ruling apparently means the city must redraw the ordinance before landlords can rent their apartments by the night. That practice is now forbidden by city zoning law.

On April 23, Hyder granted the temporary injunction after landlords of three apartment complexes filed suit challenging their denial of by-the-night rental certificates.

A World's Fair housing board set up by the ordinance had refused to issue the landlords certificates because former tenants said they had been unjustly evicted.

The judge's order has produced more questions than answers for landlords hoping to make big profits on rentals during the World's Fair, and for the estimated 1,500 tenants evicted earlier this year to make room for tourists.

As the law now stands, only the few landlords who were given zoning exemptions before the ordinance was struck down may rent their apartments nightly. And evicted tenants can take comfort only in knowing that landlords aren't able to make big profits with their former homes.

The council approved the temporary ordinance March 16 after reports that many long-time tenants were being ordered out of their apartments to make space available for the lucrative tourist rentals.

'Give John $100 and tell him goodbye'

WASHINGTON (AP) — By March 1, 1981, John W. Hinckley Jr. was to have a job. By March 30, the day he shot President Reagan, he was to be financially independent.

JoAnn Hinckley refers to those deadlines as "the plan," a last desperate attempt by a mother to help a despondent, suicidal son.

Mrs. Hinckley, the first defense witness in her son's trial, spoke Thursday of her own torment when a psychiatrist told her, as part of the plan: "Give John $100 and tell him goodbye."

Mrs. Hinckley's testimony from the witness stand was continuing today as prosecutors cross-examined her in the trial of her son, who faces possible life imprisonment if convicted of the attempted assassination of President Reagan and the wounding of three other men.

Several times Thursday, she cried in front of the jurors. When she did, her son shielded his face with his hand, appearing to cry along with her.

Her testimony started with a description of a shy boy in grade school, with few friends, who spent most of his time in his room. It ended with the sobbing account of a telephone call on March 30, 1981. It was from a Washington Post reporter, who asked:

"Did you know your son, John Hinckley, is the man they identified as shooting the president?"

Mrs. Hinckley testified about her son's decisions to enter and drop out of Texas Tech University over a seven-year period, his constant moving from one apartment to another, his inability to find a job.

As her son got increasingly despondent, he agreed to see Dr. John Hopper, a psychiatrist near his parents' Evergreen, Colo., home. One day, Hopper gave Mrs. Hinckley a prescription for getting her son back on his feet.

"You need a plan to set restrictions and deadlines. You should put this in writing and make John follow it," Mrs. Hinckley recalled being told.

She said that as part of the plan, John was to earn enough money to support himself.

"By March 1 (1981) John was to have a job," she said. "By March 30, he was to be out of the house living in an apartment on his own."

In fact, John W. Hinckley Jr. never spent March 1981 at the home of his mother and father, John Sr., a wealthy oil company executive.

On March 1, just after he started a job at a suburban Denver newspaper, Hinckley left his parents home.

"Dear Mom and Dad," he said in a note left behind. "Your prodigal son has left again to exorcise some demons. I'll let you know in a week where I am."

Iran says its forces reach Iraqi border

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Iranian troops plowed through three Iraqi defense lines today to reach the Iraqi border for the first time since the two nations went to war 19 months ago, Iran announced today.

Iran claimed the breakthrough came in its southwestern oil province of Khuzistan, scene of some of the heaviest fighting of the Persian Gulf war.

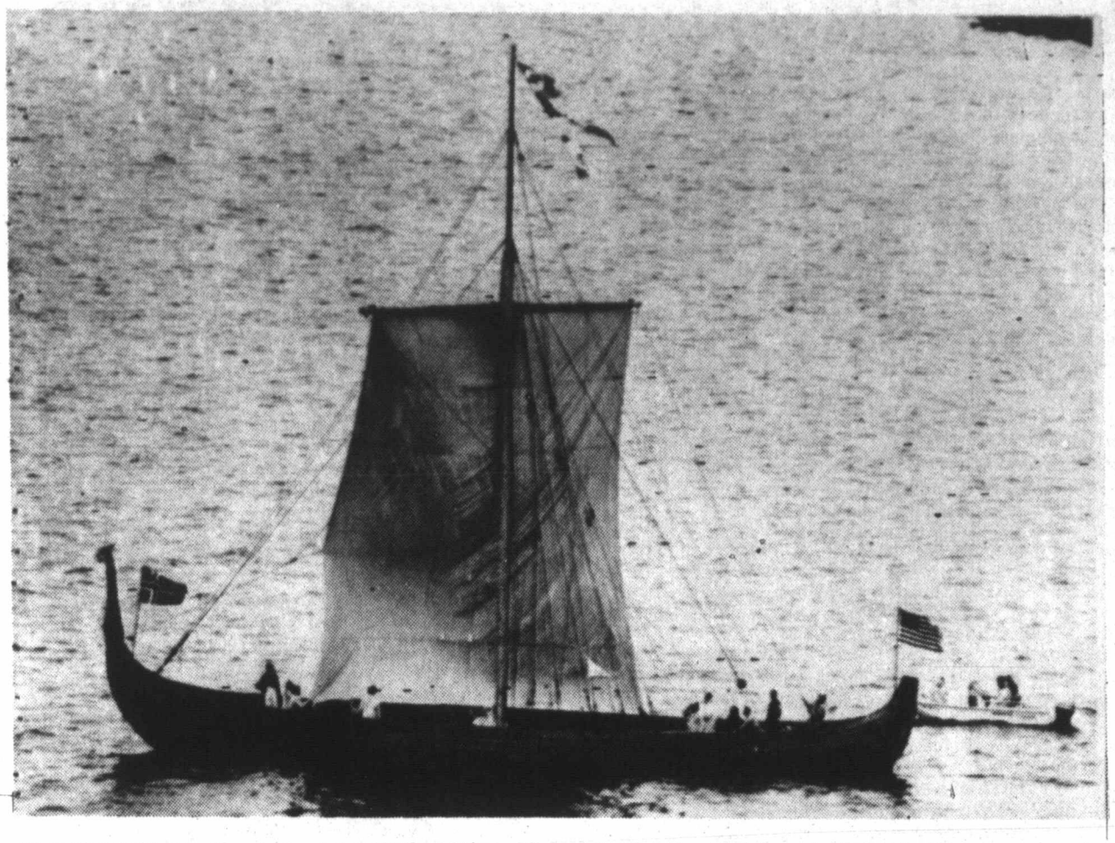

The Iraqi military command admitted Iranian forces mounted "a fresh offensive on all areas of operation at the southern sector of the warfront."

But an Iraqi communique claimed the new Iranian attack was "contained" and "fierce fighting is raging with all kinds of weapons and planes."

The latest Iraqi bulletin dropped earlier claims that Iraqi tanks and infantry were mopping up diehard Iranian troops trapped in a "pocket of death" west of the Karun River.

The rival claims, reported by the state-run media of the two warring nations, could not be independently verified. Both Arab Moslem Iraq and Persian Moslem Iran ban regular reporting by foreigners from the 300-mile battlefront.

Iran's official Islamic Republic News Agency (IRNA) said Iranian forces captured 116 square miles of Iraqi-occupied Iranian territory and gained control of a 22-mile strip of the international border between the two nations for the first time since the conflict broke out Sept. 22, 1980.

White and Clements will meet in November gubernatoral race

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Democratric Attorney General Mark White, who has snuffed out the gubernatorial hopes of two East Texas millionaires, now faces a battle with the crusty millionaire Republican governor he's been feuding with for several years.

The Democratic nomination was handed to White on Thursday when Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple, who ran second to White in Saturday's primary, pulled out of the race to avoid a bitter runoff.

Temple had entered the race just before the filing deadline as a substitute for Tyler Sen. Peyton McKnight, an oil millionaire whose campaign fizzled.

White lauded Temple's action.

"He chose party unity over personal considerations, which is an act of courage and integrity that won't be forgotten by me or by Democrats throughout Texas," White said in a statement.

Temple told a news conference Thursday he got out because "judging from the tone of the campaign just ended, it's clear that the runoff could degenerate into a bitter contest."

"I cannot in good conscience embark on a course of action that would produce such devastating results for the Democratic Party — results that would absolutely contradict the reasons that brought me into the race in the first place," he said.

Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle commended Temple's effort to bring the party together for a November race against Clements.

"A continuation of the contest, one-on-one, might have been divisive. Certainly it would have been expensive," said Slagle.

Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, who ran third in the Democratic gubernatorial primary, also had kind words for Temple.

"He showed a lot of class," Armstrong said at a news conference.

Clements, a feisty campaigner itching for a battle, alleged assorted sinister motives to the Temple decision.

"I'm sure that the people of Texas that are interested in our election process, and particularly the Democratic Party, will be very disappointed. They will feel cheated by this action," said Clements. "For the first time in my lifetime we have a Democratic Party nominee with less than a majority and without going through the election process that had been agreed upon."

Space stations may produce x-rays, scientist reports

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Large orbiting space stations planned for the future may spontaneously generate enough electricity to create levels of X-rays dangerous to astronauts, according to a University of Iowa scientist.

Dr. Stanley Shawhan said at a briefing Thursday that an instrument flown aboard the space shuttle found that the craft generated electrical activity as it sped at orbital speeds through the plasma fields of outer space.

The electrical levels did not reach hazardous strengths because the craft was not large enough and was not in space long enough, Shawhan said. But he added that massive space stations planned by the National Space and Aeronautics Administration may face serious problems from the electricity.

"If you are talking about space structures that are miles in dimensions, then you're talking about electrical potentials that are kilovolts (thousands of volts)," Shawhan said. "With kilovolt potentials, you get deep penetration of charged particles and you also get X-ray production."

The scientist said the X-rays would be strong enough to expose film such as that used by dentists.

"Those X-rays could be dangerous for (space walkers) or just for living conditions," said Shawhan.

Electrostatic currents build up on the spacecraft in a manner similar to creating static electricity by shuffling one's feet over a carpet. If the static electricity, or field of electrical potential, is not harmlessly discharged in space, it can convert ions and electrons in the plasma field into X-rays.

Shawhan said the electrical potential created also attracts electrons and ions that flow back against the spacecraft with sufficient force to degrade some painted surfaces. The phenomenon could also cause short circuits in some electrical instruments aboard the craft, he said.

The comments came during a Washington briefing monitored here. During the briefing, several scientists reported preliminary results from experiments flown last March on the space shuttle orbiter Columbia. The scientists said the experiments proved that the space shuttle would be a valuable platform for conducting scientific studies in orbit.

FAA piecing together crash cause

CHARLOTTE, Texas (AP) — Federal investigators are trying to reassemble pieces of a twin-engine turboprop charter plane in an effort to determine why it crashed, killing all seven people aboard.

Eyewitnesses said the plane exploded in flight, but a federal investigator said Thursday that evidence gathered so far does not confirm that.

"I think what led people to believe (the plane exploded) is that when metal breaks in flight, it sounds like an explosion," said T.W. Finch, director of the Fort Worth division of the National Transportation Safety Board.

"There is evidence of some of the pieces of the aircraft separating before ground impact," Finch said.

The chairman of the safety board, James Burnett, flew from Washington Thursday to participate in the investigation of Wednesday's crash.

"There's nothing unusual in the chairman coming in to observe the investigation, particularly considering the number of people killed and the type of accident," Finch said.

T.O. Miller, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration's regional office in Fort Worth, said FAA and safety board investigators expected to make a preliminary report "in a day or so."

One of the victims, Dr. Brian Aynesworth of Waco, was enroute home from a Mexico fishing trip to bury his 4-year-old son, Victor, who died earlier in the day, friends in Waco reported Thursday.

Victor Aynesworth had suffered from cerebral palsy since birth and died of respiratory arrest, friends said.

Also killed in the plane crash were F. Michael Wood, 35, president of Pioneer Flour Mills in San Antonio; accountant Don Painter, 40, of Austin; Charles B. Richards, 40, a Waco stockbroker reported to be Wood's brother-in-law; Dick Hambleton, 35, A Central Freight Lines executive; Dan McDonald, a Waco auto store owner; and Lew Weaver, a Waco pilot.

Painter was a managing partner of Ernst and Winney accountants in Austin, which kept the books for McDonald's auto supply business, a spokesman for the firm said. The spokesman said Painter and several of the other people had made the Mexico fishing trip an annual event.

Farmer Roger Rodriguez, who was plowing a field about 400 feet from the crash site said he heard "an explosion in the clouds like thunder and we saw the wreck fall smoking to the ground."

Weaver, a retired Air Force colonel, worked for Texas Aero, a Waco-based company that furnished the pilot for the charter trip to Baja California, near Cabo San Lucas.

Energy consumption continues decline

RENO, Nev. (AP) — Oil and gas consumption in the United States will continue a steady decline next year, signaling "fundamental changes in energy use patterns" in the nation, a group of independent petroleum producers said Thursday.

Overall energy use should decline for the third straight year, while oil demand will decrease "for an unprecedented fourth consecutive year," according to a report issued by the Independent Petroleum Association of America.

The group, which is holding its midyear meeting here this week, said oil demand is expected to fall 4.5 percent in 1982, primarily because of the recession, energy conservation and a shift to other fuels such as coal and nuclear energy.

The association predicted that petroleum demand will strengthen as the overall economy improves.

Natural gas consumption is expected to remain near the 1981 level, while coal demand is projected to increase by 2.4 percent and nuclear power by 6.4 percent, the group said.

The report forecasts "more than ample supply capability" because of sluggish demand, but warned, "Military or political upheavals ... could quickly disrupt the world oil supply situation."

Domestic crude oil production is predicted to increase by 1 percent, or 90,000 barrels a day, largely due to new supplies flowing out of the Kuparuk field on the Alaskan North Slope.

A panel of energy experts told the wildcat petroleum association that worldwide crude oil prices should remain relatively stable throughout the 1980s — but that consumer prices probably will continue to go up.

Informer taken into custody, authorities say

TEXARKANA, Texas (AP) — Federal authorities have taken into custody an informer who told the Bowie County Sheriff's Department of an alleged contract offering to kill District Attorney Louis J. Raffaelli for $10,000, according to Sheriff Thomas Hodge.

A polygraph test showed the informer was truthful, Hodge said Thursday.

The sheriff commented in a prepared statement concerning the investigation into what is alleged to be a contract offered in February by a Texas businessman.

Hodge said the informant is being kept at an out-of-state location.

"The Bowie County sheriff's office first learned of a plot to kill Bowie County District Attorney Louis Raffaelli on February 22 from a person being held in the Bowie County jail," Hodge said.

"After receiving the information, the sheriff's department took the informant to Tyler, Texas where he was given a polygraph test by the Texas Department of Public Safety ... to determine the validity of his statement, the results showed he was truthful," Hodge said.

Hodge said the sheriff's department asked the DPS intelligence division and the FBI to take part in the investigation. A member of each group met with Rafaelli, "advising him of the investigation and the course of action to be taken," the sheriff said.

Rafaelli was out of town and unavailable for comment Thursday.

During the investigation, the informant was equipped with an electronic evesdropping device and sent to a meeting with the person who allegedly first offered the contract, Hodge said.

"On numerous occasions, the conversations between the informer and mediator were monitored by at least two different agencies," Hodge said. He refused to name the agencies.

In the taped conversations, the mediator told the informant he would pay him $10,000 for the contract, $5,000 "up front" and $5,000 to be paid after the hit, Hodge said.

Public campaign financing sought

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — A candidate who finished out of the money in the race for the Democratic nomination for governor has been joined by a citizens lobby group in calling for public financing of statewide elections.

Land Commissioner Bob Armstrong, who finished third in Saturday's primary, told a Capitol news conference Thursday that money plays too big a role in campaigns.

"I was disappointed that you couldn't run a campaign like I thought you could — on hard work," Armstrong said. "Money does have a lot to do with it."

Meanwhile, Common Cause issued a statement saying it is calling for public financing of statewide, non-judicial races beginning in 1986. The campaign fund would be financed by a 50 cents-per-voter annual appropriation and be administered by a state ethics commission.

Candidates would have to raise minimum "threshold" money before qualifying for public financing of their campaigns, the statement said.

Armstrong held his news conference shortly after Railroad Commissioner Buddy Temple announced he was dropping out of a June 5 runoff with Attorney General Mark White, who now is the Democratic gubernatorial nominee.

Temple said he was withdrawing for party unity, but some sources close to his campaign had been quoted as saying the combination of White's strong showing and the amount of money needed for the five-week runoff campaign prompted Temple's decision.

White raised about $1.76 million for the primary and Temple about $1.3 million. Armstrong raised about $634,000.

EVER STRIVING FOR TOP O' TEXAS
TO BE AN EVEN BETTER PLACE TO LIVE

Let Peace Begin With Me

This newspaper is dedicated to furnishing information to our readers so that they can better promote and preserve their own freedom and encourage others to see its blessing. For only when man understands freedom and is free to control himself and all he possesses can he develop to his utmost capabilities.

We believe that all men are equally endowed by their Creator, and not by a government, with the right to take moral action to preserve their life and property and secure more freedom and keep it for themselves and others.

To discharge this responsibility, free men, to the best of their ability, must understand and apply to daily living the great moral guide expressed in the Coveting Commandment.

1982's class of jitters-plenty of graduates

By ROBERT LeFEVRE

During the month of April, Americans had a bad case of the jitters: Nothing seemed to be going right. The highly touted victory for Democracy achieved by balloting in El Salvador produced a fresh onslaught of nerves. The discredited Christian Democrats and the highly profiled rightists found themselves having difficulties in trying to establish a new government.

In despair they abandoned the traditional smoke - filled halls and betook themselves out of doors where, according to Los Angeles Times reporter Lauri Becklund, they gathered under the spreading branches of the pito tree. Pito seeds, ripening in the April sunshine, fell upon the sombreros of those beleaguered adversaries and appeared to have a calming effect.

Salvadorans believe the seeds contain a tranquilizing agent and use them in their soup.

If the pito seeds were working in El Salvador, it was clear the rest of the world found them in short supply.

In the United States, bankruptcies multiplied almost hourly and some of the large and presumably unflappable corporations sounded like a loose jib in a gale.

Since Americans have long since abandoned coins and even currency as money (most have been writing checks based on other checks and have tried to use credit cards to maintain a balance), Atlantic Richfield (Arco) cut a bold new course for itself. It gave up its credit card operation, reduced prices and asked for a completely cash business.

The Soviet Union, meanwhile, was having its own case of jitters. The Russian bear, the lycanthropic Logos of the communist lunacies, began to look more like a sheep dog with a bad case of mange. Everything was going wrong.

The adventure of Afghanistan was proving to be a classic demomnstration of Lafer's curve. The more Brezhnev relied upon his troops, the less reliable they became. The same hair of the same dog, when tried in Poland, profused with the same resistance and resentment.

Meanwhile, Russian crops failed, credit was weakened and halfway between Moscow and Omsk, at a place called Kyshtym, new evidence found is way into Western intelligence circles that the Russian dump for toxic wastes had blown up, polluting a thousand miles of land and killing hundreds (or more).

It was now an abandoned Sahara with signs posted warning that lingering was lethal.

Tensions between Israeli and Arab have been headlines for so long that the slated pull - back of Israeli settlements in the Sinai seemed like old hat. Everyone knows that trouble seethes out of the Mid - east with the regularity of sunrise, and as tensions mounted, the flow of jitter sauce increased.

The newest nominees for the 1982 class of jitters were Britain and Argentina. At first it was hard to take the uproar over the Falklands as more than a rehearsal for a comic opera. But when hawkish State Secretary Gen. Al Haig was asked to mediate the dispute, most realized that while 600,000 sheep may not be a cassus bellum, the report of possible oil deposits are.

As the British fleet steamed (at reduced speed) across the last thousand miles of open water on its way to confrontation, the Argentines heated up the potential by airlifting men and supplies to those bits of land they call the Malvinas.

The airlift was an essential since it has been reported that Britain might have at least three atomic - powered submarines lurking in the vicinity. If Britain doesn't rule the waves, it may at least rule under the waves.

It was unthinkable that America would side with Argentina, if you were an Anglophile. But if you believed in the Monroe Doctrine and the Treaty of Rio, it was equally unthinkable that America would side with Britain.

Reagan, with Hollywood smile intact, stood squarely in the middle and tried to be all things to all comers — a task manifestly impossible for mortal man.

But Glorida Allred, feminist attorney, cast herself in the role of Jehovah for whom nothing is impossible, and sent a plague of frogs against her foe, razor tongued Sen. John Schmitz of Newport Beach, providing joy for newsmen of all media and a spate of publicity for her multimillion dollar lawsuit against Schmitz.

While all this was transpiring, Barry Koltnow, a staff writer for The Register, gave us all a message from another Gabor, this one neither Zsa Zsa or Eva, but a man named Gabe.

It seems that in our jittery world, Gabe (short for Gabriel?) has come up with a brand new business called "Heaven's Union." Forget Western Union; Gabe's enterprise provides the ultimate service.

If you wish to send a message to someone in the Great Beyond, just contact Heaven's Union. Gabe will put you in touch with a person on his death bed who is willing to become a messenger.

In private conference you can tell the person about to be whisked away just who your message is for and what the message is. The morbid mortal doesn't need to write it down; he just memorizes message and address and promises to deliver after the transition is complete.

There is no guarantee that the message will reach its destination. After all, there is still some uncertainty concerning the location of any addressee. You pay your money, and, hopefully, will feel better afterwards.

Back in the 1930s, Cab Calloway produced a hit record the lyrics of which seemed more attuned to the 1980's:

"If you want to be a jitter bug,
"First thing you do is get a jug;
"Fill it full of whisky, wine and gin
"And then begin:
"Grab a cup an start to toss, —
"You are drinking jitter sauce.
"Don't you worry; not much to it;
"All you gotta do is do it."

Happy space trip

It will be one giant leap for womankind when Dr. Sally Ride takes off next year on the seventh shuttle mission in the spacecraft Challenger and becomes the first American woman in space.

There will be an event of equal importance later the same year when Air Force Lt. Col. Guion S. Bluford Jr. becomes the first black U.S. astronaut launched into space, also on a Challenger mission.

Dr. Ride is well qualified. She holds a doctorate in physics and she was a capsule communicator on the flight of the Columbia last month. During her conversations with the orbiting astronauts, Dr. Ride said she too would like to experience weightlessness in space. She's to get her wish.

The only woman in space thus far has been the Soviet Union's Valentina Tereshkova who orbited the earth alone for 71 hours in the Vostok 6 space capsule in 1963.

Lt. Cdr. Bluford received his pilot's wings in 1965 and later flew 144 combat missions over Vietnam.

Dr. Ride will be working with three satellites that are to be placed in orbit from the Challenger's cargo bay in April 1983. Lt. Cdr. Bluford will be working with communications satellites on the next space trip, in July 1983.

Dr. Ride and Lt. Cdr. Bluford are not being sent into space as a public relations gesture. They have trained intensely for their missions at Houston's Johnson Space Center, graduating in 1978. Since then they have undergone extended training as mission specialists.

We bid them smooth sailing through space.

'Lean and mean' for U.S. defense

The economy, the secretary of the treasury now admits, is dead in the water. And that's going to hurt national defense.

It was Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower who said, when he was president, that a sound national economy is the foundation of a strong national defense. It is as true now as it was then.

The economy is staggering. It doesn't matter who's to blame. The fact is that the federal budget deficit must be reduced before interest rates can come down. And interest rates must come down before the economy recovers.

Reducing the deficit by raising taxes is an option, but higher taxes would impede business recovery. Reducing the deficit by budget cuts is the better alternative.

And it is impossible to exempt the Pentagon from the impact of such budget cuts. That doesn't mean that defense spending will be reduced, only that it will not be increased as fast as President Reagan and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinbergr wanted to increase it.

A consensus is forming in the country in favor of defense budget cuts.

If America's business bosses want to cut the Pentagon budget — and 83 percent of them do, according to the Wall Street Journal - Gallup survey, we can't imagine that America's working people don't want defense cuts, too.

This poses a challenge to the Reagan administration and Congress — to make the cuts where they will hurt least. The task will take knowledge and it will take courage.

There is a pork - barreling in the Pentagon, just as there is throughout the federal government. Politicians, especially those in Congress, serve special interests of their constituencies ahead of the national interest. Because such huge sums are involved, the Pentagon budget is inevitably subject to the push and pull of lobbies more interested in profits and payrolls than in military preparedness.

Contracts for the purchase of expensive military equipment are always heavily lobbied, as heavily in the corridors of that five - sided building across the Potomac as in the halls of Congress.

But there is no effective lobby, outside the military for those bread - and - butter budget items that can make the biggest difference in defense readiness — money or training, for personnel, for ammunition and fuel.

Congress must cast a cold eye upon the Pentagon's own herd of sacred cows, and cull out the fattest, despite their golden horns. We need a defense establishment that is lean and mean, highly motivated and ready to fight.

Magic moments at stoplights

BY D. R. SEGAL

I have read somewhere that a man's car is an extension of his character — or maybe it said it is a phallic symbol. Come to think of it, I have heard it both ways.

An acquaintance of mine is a divorce lawyer who has waxed fat putting asunder what God hath joined together. He drives a spiffy little Mercedes Benz 450 SL convertible which, I should judge, fetches about $40,000 or more on the lot. It is a discretely sporty little car which says that the owner appreciates, and can afford, a bit of controlled hedonism but, for heaven's sake, nothing vulgar or obvious.

This little 450 SL is the only Mercedes Benz which does not remind me of an upholstered shoebox but there are 40,000 or more reasons why I never bought one. In this instance, I would say the car nicely defines the man: two solid and not inexpensive items.

On the other hand, I am somewhat acquainted with another fellow who drives around in the biggest and, by all odds, the most vulgar automobile ever created by those demented people in Detroit.

It is a large white convertible Cadillac which fairly reeks of bad taste and dreams unfulfilled. It is, obviously, the car of a Walter Mitty who does some grubby job while fancying himself as a dashing bloke on his way to the tennis court where a bevy of nubile dollies wait in hopes he will throw them a smile or permit them to buy him a can of balls.

This fellow is getting on in years, which makes him all the more pitiable as he pilots that cumbersome pile around the freeways and avenues, waiting for the Magic Moment to occur when he will turn into Elton John or Willie Nelson or some other impossibly romantic dude.

As if this were not ludicrous enough, it is his habit to play classical music on the expensive stereo system he's had installed in the great white giant, and that is not cool, man. I have known him to pull up at a stoplight, engine a - roar and stereo going full blast on something involving Zubin Mehta.

The other people at the intersection look rather as if they'd suddenly found themselves next to Barney Google riding Sparkplug (ask your Pa) and they floor it as soon as the light changes.

Not long ago this poor old fool told his wife that a kid in a Baja buggy had yelled at him, "I like your wheels!" arid that set him up all day. She did not explore, for his benefit, the aesthetics of Baja buggy owners and she was tempted to ask him why they hadn't traded, but she felt that would have served no good purpose and might have done violence to the viejo's self - image.

I think she was too easy on him. It is pathetic to see an elderly customer driving a relic automobile with red leather seats and white sidewalls; radio blaring, squinting into the sun. What does this say about the man? Dun't esk!

Our foreign policy bomerang

By PAUL HARVEY

Had it not been for you, we might be fighting in El Salvador by now. You vetoed it!

Our nation's diplomatic and military leadership did everything it could to involve us down there. "The communists are taking over Latin America!" we were told.

Now look. Despite all our intervention, that country has gone its own way anyway.

And it is not the far left that has taken over El Salvador; it is the equally or more ominous far RIGHT!

Had it not been for you, we might be fighting in El Salvador by now.

But despite persistent prodding by our secretary of State, every public opinion poll proved that Americans wanted nothing to do with Latin America's chronic squabbling.

The idea of sending troops was abhorrent. Even support for sending aid — to either side — was minimal.

Secretary Haig all but demanded that Uncle Sam draw a line in the sand and prove in El Salvador that America is not a paper tiger.

President Reagan, for the most part, remained properly preoccupied with stateside economic problems — with bringing inflation under control and hammering out an acceptable budget.

But Haig and some Pentagon brass sought to create a crisis atmosphere. "The Russians through Cuba are arming communists in our hemisphere and we must put a stop to it here and now!

The American electorate thought that focus was confusing our priorities.

Nonetheless our State Department did everything possible — under the guise of ensuring "free elections" — to get that country to elect Jose Napoleon Duarte.

Now look what's happened.

As surely as they ever have, Latin Amerians reacted against outsiders and El Salvador has put together a coalition government of extreme rightists.

And history reveals little distinction between a Facist government and a communist government; both are essentially dictatorships; neither respects individual rights.

And perhaps that is the only kind of government which could be effective in El Salvador.

We North Americans have not yet learned to respect the obligations implied by individual freedom; that we should expect them to is wishful nonsense.

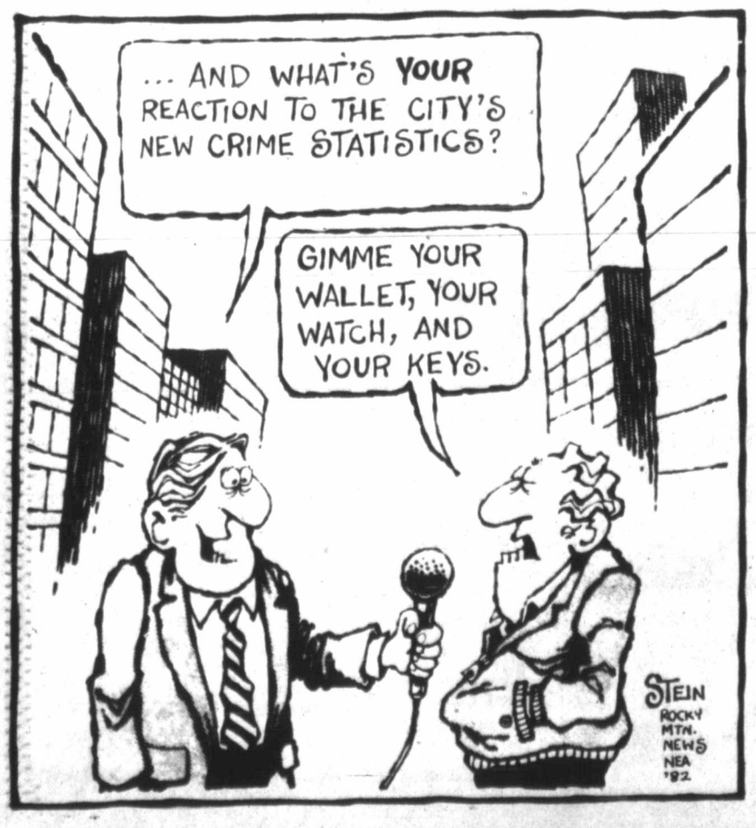

Now I'm going to tell you a little more that I know:

The United States has been courting Castro.

Instead of seeking surreptitiously to engineer his overthrow, we have sought, through third - parties, to encourage his allegiane.

We are offering to make it worth his while to turn his back on Moscow and make friends with the west.

And he's thinking about it.

Today in history

Today is Friday, May 7, the 127th day of 1982. There are 238 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On May 7, 1915, the Germans sank the British liner Lusitania off the Irish coast during World War I, and more than 1,100 people were killed.

On this date:

In 1777, the U.S. cruiser Surprise captured the British ship Prince of Orange in the English Channel.

In 1939, a military and political alliance known as the Rome-Berlin axis was announced by Germany and Italy.

In 1945, Germany made the final capitulation to U.S. Gen. Dwight Eisenhower at Rheims, France.

And in 1954, Dien Bien Phu was lost by French forces to the Vietnamese Communists.

Ten years ago: The United States pledged $100 million a year to help support a regular army in Thailand.

Five years ago: A broad general agreement on combatting unemployment was reached by Western and Japanese leaders at an economic summit in London.

One year ago: President Reagan won his first major victory in Congress when the House approved his 1982 budget plan by a vote of 253 to 176.

Today's birthdays: Actress Anne Baxter is 59 years old. Republican Congressman Pete Domenici of New Mexico is 50.

Thought for today: A straw vote only shows which way the hot air blows. — O. Henry, American writer (1862-1910).

SPEAKING OF SOAPS

TM TV COMPLEX, INC. OWNER CORP. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED

by Mary Ann Cooper

John Wesley Shipp who plays Kelly Nelson on "Guiding Light".

For your enjoyment, this week's column features an interview with John Wesley Shipp who plays Kelly on the "Guiding Light".

Q.: You play a very, shall we say, naive, type of individual.

A.: Very trusting. I like to say trusting.

Q.: Do you have a problem playing a character like that? Do you wish he had a little bit more streetwise smarts?

A.: If he did it would be a different character. I have enjoyed the character a lot. I came on as the character that was in the mind of the new writer like the new young leading man on a soap whereas other actors have had to suffer through trial periods. I felt like this role was really padded from the beginning so I wouldn't knock it by saying I wish it were another character. I do find him unbelievably trusting and naive at times but that is part of the character.

Q.: It doesn't seem to affect his popularity as far as with young teenage girls. I think that says something about the audience out there as far as what they expect to see.

A.: They like variety. I mean, not everybody has to be Luke Spencer and not everybody has to be Kelly Nelson, you know, I think that is a mistake that people make a lot of times. They say, well, this sells over here so everybody is going to do it. Then it stops selling because everybody is doing it. Someone has the guts enough to try something else and that sells and then everybody copies them.

Q.: Tell us a little bit about your new album and tell us about the album Images and is that still available?

A.: Yes. We did that on a limited release mainly through like soap magazines and to the soap public sort of to test the waters and we sold out our first pressing (which is kind of an unusual thing even on a major label) and so we are pressing ahead and starting work on a two sided single, first, and releasing that on a much larger scale.

Recap: 5/3 - 5/7
Preview: 5/10 - 5/14

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS -- Jack resents his father's take-over of the company. Luke patches up his relationship with Lorie. John takes a special interest in Chris.
SEARCH FOR TOMORROW -- Suzi leaves home. Jo appeals to Stephanie to persuade Brian to talk some sense into Suzi. The honeymoon is over for Sissy and Lee as Sunny comes between them again. Dane assures Travis and Liza that all danger is over.
THE DOCTORS -- Barney and Natalie threaten Billy with arrest for blackmail if he marries Nola. Billy showed Luke documents which prove Natalie was a prostitute in California. Billy plots with Katy to prevent Greta from getting full custody of Lee Ann. Theo and Greta discuss marriage.
THIS WEEK: Natalie is confronted by Luke. Jeff throws himself into his work.

PRIME TIME CORNER
KNOTS LANDING -- Gary and Abby's game is up when Karen and Lilimae spot them together in a lunchtime assignation; and Laura, believing that Richard is contemplating suicide, decides to move back in with him.

Val refuses to believe the rumors she has been hearing about Gary and Abby, until the night of the cocktail reception for the publication of her novel based on the Ewing family of Dallas, when neither Gary, who is expected, nor Abby, who is invited, shows up. Humiliated and outraged, she goes looking for him with murder in her eye.
DALLAS -- Even Miss Ellie seems to have lost all patience with J.R., which could severely hamper him in the custody fight for his son.

As J.R. prepares to challenge Sue Ellen for temporary custody of John Ross, his plans for discrediting her backfire. Meanwhile, Bobby desperately tries to find an adoptive child for Pam and himself as his wife's emotional stability declines to the extent she obviously needs medical help. Life is looking up for Cliff Barnes as he assumes the presidency of Wentworth Tool and Die and meets his stepsister, Katherine, for the first time. Ray, also, is enjoying his new rewards as a businessman but his wife shares his enthusiasm with a great deal of apprehension. The new Dr. Cooper saves a woman's life in an emergency procedure, but pride makes Mitch refuse the generous compensation offered by her husband, while his sister, Afton, asserts herself with J.R. but is forced to back down.

ON GUARD! Patrolman Oren Potter instructs Lt. Glen Cardin in use of the side handle baton. About three years ago, the Pampa Police Department made a change over from straight batons to the side handle baton. The side handle baton has proved to be more effective and efficient. Officer Potter is a certified instructor in the side handle baton and self defense and is responsible for the training of police officers. Officer Potter will be teaching a class in self - defense for women Tuesday evening at Clarendon College.

Defense course offered for women

A Defensive Tactics course for women will be conducted in the lunch room at Clarendon College at 6:30 p.m. on Tuesday, May 11. The course is free and sponsored by the Pampa Police Department.

The course will be instructed by Patrolman Oren Potter and will offer ladies some knowledge about basic self defense tactics and how to handle themselves in a situation where they may be attacked. In addition to slides and a discussion on available weapons, Officer Potter will demonstrate defensive tactics to lady volunteers.

Advance registration is encouraged. Interested persons may register in advance by contacting Jamie Lowe at the Pampa Police Department, 669-7407.

Lefors teacher retires

Long - time Lefors teacher, Norma Lantz, will retire this year after having taught 34 years in the local school system. She obtained her education in Lefors, with the exception of 2 years at Webb School, a rural school east of Lefors on the Morse Ranch. Having started first grade in the fall of 1931, she graduated from high school in 1942. She received Bachelor of Science and Master of Education degrees from West Texas State University and Library Certification from Texas Woman's University.

In addition to her career in the Lefors Independent School District, she was Extension agent in Hartley County, Home Economist for Southwestern Appliance in Amarillo, and taught one year at Hopkins School System at Bowers City.

Her teaching career at Lefors began as Homemaking teacher. She also taught 2nd grade and Junior High School Social Studies. The last 18 years, she has been High School librarian. Miss Lantz is a life member of Texas State Teachers Association, National Education Association, Las Pampas Chapter of D. A. R., Delta Kappa Gamma, Texas Heritage Foundation, and Kappa Kappa Iota.

Miss Lantz plans to pursue her hobbies of gardening, genalogy, reading and travel.

Old Tascosa's mystery woman identified

Somewhere in Old Tascosa's cemetery has lain for ninety - five years the remains of a lamented lady, a young pioneer woman of the Texas Plains. Since 1887 she has been the mystery woman and Panhandle history buffs have been in a quadry as to who she might have been, especially since her unusual but prominent obituary appeared in an early day news paper nearly a century ago. Although her name was known, nothing else was known about who she was. She has now been identified for the public although her idnetity has been known to one Texas writer for many years.

There is no marker at the exact gravesite at Old Tascosa (now Boys' Ranch), but Mrs. Charlotte Barker, a 27 - year - old mother is buried there. She was captured by the Indians when a small child and she carried the tattoo markings of a blue moon in her forehead throughout her life. She was only one of many who were captured and massacred along the Brazos during the 19th century, and the story of Charlotte and her ancestors makes one of the most fascinating stories yet to be written about the Texas frontier of the 1850's.

A new book recently prined entitled FORT BELKNAP SAGA written by a well - known historian, Mrs. Barbara A. Ledbetter, sheds new light on some historical frontier events at old Mobeetie and old Tascosa in general and on Mrs. Barker and her ancestors in particular. For nearly thirty years the writer has done extensive research about events surrounding the infamous Elm Creek Raid in Young County, Texas made by the feared Comanches and Kiowas in October of 1864. The tale about Charlotte is only a part of the broad narrative. The 24 chaptered book has already been heralded as an outstanding contribution to Texas frontier history.

Mrs. Ledbetter received her Masters degree at West Texas State University and she taught school for many years in White Deer. She has been writing and publishing for 25 years on Texas frontier history, but with her newest book, she has come up with a bombshell and a bonanza with one stroke of the pen. In this saga she chronicles the Kiowas' and Comanches' raid in Texas in 1864 and she chronicles the heretofore unknown biographies of those early frontier men and women who settled along the Brazos at that time.

The Saga begins in 1790 in the deep south with the birth of a male child to Negro slaves along the Watauga river and she follows that event up to and through thee 1920's. Her real characters lived, and most of them died, during the bloodiest days of Indian depredations in Texas. There are descendants of those frontier Angloes, Negroes, and Indians who will not know who they are until they read the Fort Belknap Saga.

Many Texas historians know the heroic stories attributed to the legendary Negro Britt Johnson, and this story plays havoc with those particular deeds of heroism. This narrative also sheds new light on the romanticised 1930 stories of the Kiowa woman from Mountain View, Oklahoma Mrs. Sain - toh - oodie Goombi who claimed to have been a white child captured in the Elm Creek Raid. Mrs. Ledbetter has proven beyond a doubt that the Kiowa woman was not the child from Elm Creek.

Panhandle residents will appreciate this new approach and refreshingly new material on the episode previously alluded to. The saga will find its place on the shelf of important Texana. This is truly Mrs. Ledbetter's MAGNUM OPUS.

Dear Abby

Rescued mongrel is rare breed indeed

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: "Be Kind to Animals Week" is in May, so I hope you'll publish this.

My husband and I went to the local animal shelter to get a pet. When we got there, we were shown 12 dogs. We were told they were all to be destroyed the next day. We chose a little Benji-type dog who seemed quite bright, expecting to train him. It wasn't necessary. He was completely housebroken, and trained to stay off the furniture and not to beg at the table. Another thing, he never seemed to bark. We didn't know if he had been trained not to bark, or if he lacked the ability to bark.

About a month after we got our little Skipper, he did something very special. It was about 3 a.m. Skipper jumped up on the bed, barked a little "woof" and began to scratch my arm. He had never done this before and it startled me.

It's a good thing it did because I was awakened out of a very groggy sleep to discover the house was full of gas! My husband and I were able to get out of the house. He went back long enough to shut off the gas. We held the doors open for several hours until it was safe to go back in.

Well, Skipper is still housebroken. He still seldom barks. But now I invite him to get up on the furniture and sit as close to me as possible. Does he beg at the table? He doesn't have to. He gets steak if he wants it!

PAT STREETER IN SANDUSKY, OHIO

DEAR PAT: What a beautiful story. Let's hope it inspires others to go to their local animal shelters and rescue a dog that could one day rescue them.

* * *

DEAR ABBY: Please tell "Nighttime Boxer," who awakened in the morning bruised and badly beaten for no apparent reason, to talk to his clergyman.

Both Jews and Christians recognize the authenticity of diabolic attacks, and there is responsible documentation on this subject. Please don't be biased. Any competent religious leader can recognize whether one needs to see a psychologist or an exorcist.

My best friend spent many years in a mental hospital with no lasting cure. (Everyone thought she was hallucinating.) After her release she joined a small church, and a year later she wrote to me, "At last the 'wolf' is gone. I am at peace with Jesus." She died peacefully in her sleep.

I know what I am talking about because she was my sister, and our whole family went through hell for over 10 years because we were told there was no such thing as diabolic attacks. Now we know there are.

BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN THERE: Your sister may very well have had a "devil" of a problem, but I would advise anyone exhibiting nocturnal violence to be examined by a physician to rule out the possibility of a medical problem.

WANT A JOB IN MANAGEMENT?

BARTLESVILLE, Okla. (AP) — Interested in getting a job in management?

Here are what four Phillips Petroleum vice presidents believe to be important qualities in a good manager:

— Being what you are and not trying to appear what you are not.

— Communicating clearly and concisely.

— The ability to develop people to levels of self-confidence and performance beyond their own expectations.

— Well-defined goals, with the ability to accomplish them.

A short history of measurement

WASHINGTON (AP) — Our measurement system, which has been evolving since the time of the Egyptians, came to us by way of the English.

Here, according to National Geographic, is how some of the measuring units began:

Foot — the length of Charlemagne's foot, modified in 1305 to be 36 barleycorns laid end to end.

Inch — the width across the knuckle on King Edgar's thumb, or three barleycorns.

Yard — the reach from King Henry I's nose to his fingertips, a distance also twice as long as a cubit.

Cubit — the length of the arm from elbow to fingertip.

Mile — 1,000 double steps of a Roman legionary. Later, Queen Bess added more feet so the mile would equal eight furlongs.

Furlong — the length of a furrow a team of oxen could plow before resting.

Acre — the amount of land a yoke of oxen could plow in one day.

Fathom — the span of a seaman's outstretched arms; 880 fathoms make a mile.

THE ROYALHEIRS will present an hour concert of gospel music 7 p.m. May 16 at Central Baptist Church, at the corner of Starkweather and Browning Streets.

The concert will include both favorite hymns and contemporary gospel songs.

Carlins to perform in gospel concerts

Dan and Fran Carlin will present concerts of gospel music Sunday through Wednesday at Lamar Full Gospel Assembly, Bond and S. Sumner Streets.

Concerts will begin at 7 p.m. Sunday and at 7:30 p.m. Monday through Wednesday.

The Carlins mix old - fashioned preaching with music, and perform on piano, organ and guitar. They have toured with "The Trinity Troubadoors" and have performed on television, radio and recordings.

Theologian urges greater activism for conservatives

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

Although Christian conservatives have moved into the public arena to fight for their causes, one of their leading thinkers urges greater activism, up to civil disobedience, to "break the authoritarian hold" of overwhelming secularism.

Its dominant control has been extended by the courts, education and the media through "every level of society," says theologian-philosopher Francis A. Schaeffer, and "we must do battle on every front."

In his latest, big-selling book, "A Christian Manifesto," published by Crossway Books, he says "it is not too strong to say that we are at war, and there are no neutral parties in the struggle. One either confesses that God is the final authority .. or that Caesar is Lord."

Schaeffer, 70, a Pennsylvania-born Presbyterian, has become an influential voice among evangelicals through his noted L'Abri communal study center in Switzerland, with branches in the United States and elsewhere, and through numerous books, films and lectures.

"A missionary to the intellectuals," Time Magazine called him.

He sees trends — permisiveness, pornography, barring of religious elements from public schools, abortion, disarray of morals and families — as symptoms of a more underlying "shift in world view."

He describes it as a narrowed "humanism," contrary to the country's religious predispositions, and which holds that "final reality is impersonal matter or energy," with man "having no standards outside of himself."

This view "with its lack of any final base for values or law always leads to chaos" and "then to some form of authoritarianism to control the chaos," he says, something he maintains is happening in the United States.

"Today the separation of church and state is used to silence the church," he says, and to remove religion from the public domain. "The way the concept is used today is totally reversed from the original intent."

Schaeffer contends the changed view has arisen gradually, almost unnoticed until recently, with the courts used to "force this totally humanistic way of thinking upon the entire population."

Religion roundup

WACO, Texas (AP) — Noted American historian Henry Steele Commager says a "split personality" in American religion is at the core of many church-state controversies.

He told a Baylor University conference that America's founders upheld two attitudes toward religion — an evangelical fervor leading to "private virtue" and an enlightened reason stressing "public morality."

But those two complementary attitudes have lost their balance in modern society, leading to a "double standard of morality" which assumes "only the private sins are represensible in the sight of God, not the public sins."

"This misconception has seduced us into tolerance of deep and widespread social injustices and inequities," he said.

LAKE JUNALUSKA, N.C. (AP) — The United Methodist Council of Bishops has urged a joint U. S.-Soviet freeze on nuclear weapons, saying "the threat of nuclear destruction looms larger than ever."

Bishop Finis A. Crutchfield of Houston became the new president of the council at its spring meeting, succeeding Bishop H. Ellis Finger Jr. of Knoxville, Tenn.

WASHINGTON (AP) — A United Church of Christ agency has urged members to prepare to deal with urban unrest in the face of widespread unemployment and economic depression in many business sectors.

Citing predictions of eruptions of violence in U.S. cities, the denomination's office of Church and Society urged efforts to help organize "creative, non-violent" ways to protest "hardships imposed on so many Americans by the unjust nature" of current U.S. economic policies.

NEW YORK (AP) — The "biggest campaign ever" is under way by religious stockholders to press social-moral issues at corporate meetings this spring, in many cases against nuclear weapons, says the Interfaith Center for Corporate Responsibility.

"We have more groups filing than ever before," says Tim Smith, executive director of the center, a clearing house for 17 Protestant denominations and 180 Roman Catholic orders.

It reports the filing of 67 proxy resolutions with companies involved with production or sale of weapons. The religious shareholders filing the resolutions own more than 175,000 shares worth more than $10 million.

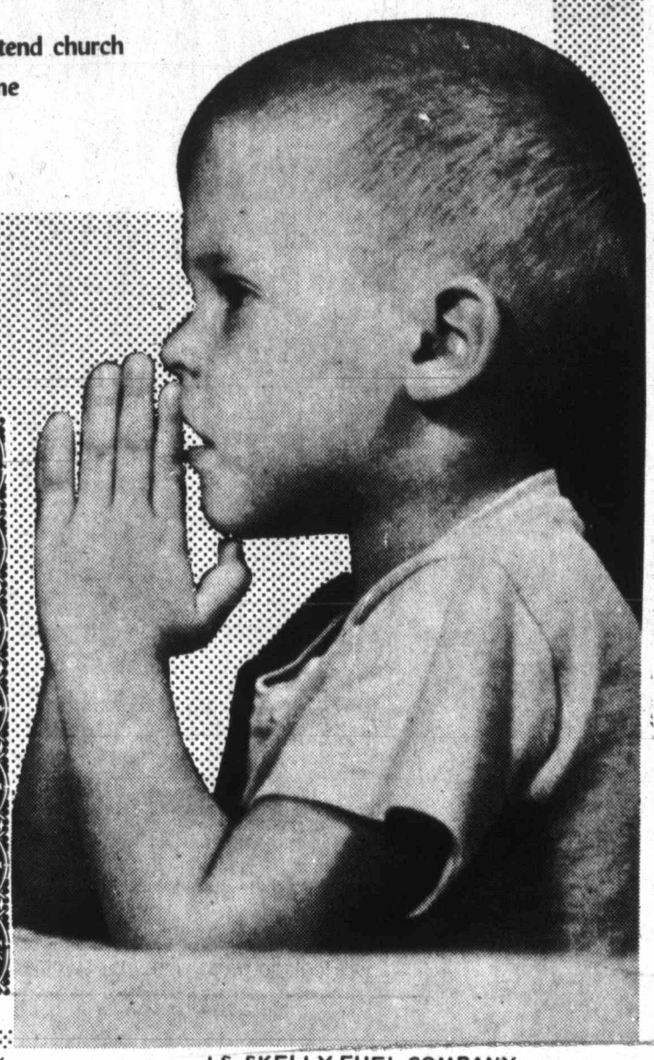

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — A Lutheran leader has proposed a new, more inclusive "ecumenical structure" that would embrace churches not now part of the national Christian cooperative organizations.

IN THE CHURCH OF YOUR CHOICE

...and God bless Mother

This little one is aware of his mother's tender care, and responds with love. It would be wonderful if all of us showed our love for our Mothers all of the time. Even if we have been a little neglectful, we have an opportunity to go all out this Sunday, and express to her our love and appreciation for her goodness to us. The Bible tells us to "Honour thy Father and thy Mother."

On this special Mother's Day attend church and share in celebrating this time with others.

EVERYONE IN THE CHURCH — THE CHURCH IN EVERYONE

The Church is God's appointed agency in this world for spreading the knowledge of His love for man and of His demand for man to respond to that love by loving his neighbor. Without this grounding in the love of God, no government or society or way of life will long persevere and the freedoms which we hold so dear will inevitably perish. Therefore, even from a selfish point of view, one should support the Church for the sake of the welfare of himself and his family. Beyond that, however, every person should uphold and participate in the Church because it tells the truth about man's life, death and destiny; the truth which alone will set him free to live as a child of God.

Heloise recycles ideas -- not letters

SAN ANTONIO, Texas (AP) — Heloise, whose helpful household hints reach 75 million readers in 11 languages, says she recycles ideas in her syndicated column, but never reprints columns or letters verbatim.

Ponce Heloise Cruse Evans said in a telephone interview from her San Antonio office Wednesday that when popular demand dictates that she run a recipe or hint again, she tells the readers the material has been published before.

She said that because of reader requests and because many people send in the same ideas over and over, some of the hints have been repetitious over the 24-year span of the column which was begun by her late mother.

Columnist Ann Landers announced in Chicago this week that she would discontinue a practice of re-running personal advice columns, letters and answers that had appeared in her column 15 years ago with only minor editing and without the knowledge of her syndicate editors.

Heloise said that editors at King Features Syndicate, which circulates her "Hints from Heloise," know that many of the ideas in her column have been recycled.

"Heloise is famous for recycling anything and everything and 'don't throw anything away,' so what's wrong with recycling a brilliant idea?" she said.

"An example is yesterday morning I was cleaning the kitchen counter and I thought, 'Oh, I wrote a column three or four years ago on cleaning kitchen counters and I need to re-turn that idea.' But I don't go and pull the same column and run it. I just rewrite the idea.

"It's not running an old column. There are just so many ideas. If you didn't read it that one day four years ago, why should you be denied learning about it because it was an idea that was in a column four years ago?"

She said she does draw on ideas accumulated over the 24 years she and her late mother produced the column, but never runs anything verbatim twice without telling her readers.

"When I write a column, what I call a headline, that starts off 'Dear Readers,' I will say 'four years ago mother printed a recipe on how to make Peking Duck and here it is again because you all want it so much. We've got so many requests..."

"I want people to understand, no, I don't recycle the same letter," she said. "But if it's the same idea or with a little bit of a different twist, we'll print it in a year or so, or more often, depending on if the readers want it.

Unproductive alliances which have impeded your progress will be severed this coming year and replaced by ones which are more worthwhile. Your new associations will be lucky for you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) One-to-one relationships could be a bit more testy than usual today. Be tactful with all you encounter. Someone could have a chip on his or her shoulder. Find out more of what lies ahead for you in each of the seasons following your birthday by sending for your copy of Astro-Graph. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20) Matters presently causing you problems should be resolved at this time. They're not apt to get any better. Don't let headaches pile up and overwhelm you.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Today, things of which you are supportive may not be looked upon kindly by companions, thus creating opposing conditions which could lead to confrontation.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) Steer clear of situations today where you know, going in, the odds favor your opposition rather than yourself. Don't invite unnecessary trouble.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) You won't appreciate having your ideas or procedures challenged today. You know from experience those who'll automatically criticize you. Avoid them.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Unfortunately, others may not treat you as fairly today as you would them if something of material value is at stake. Keep your guard up.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Your mate may be a trifle difficult to get along with today, so don't add fuel to the fire by bringing up issues which might rub your spouse the wrong way.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) Keep pace with your duties or you might create a serious logjam. Matters which should be basically simple could become quite complicated.

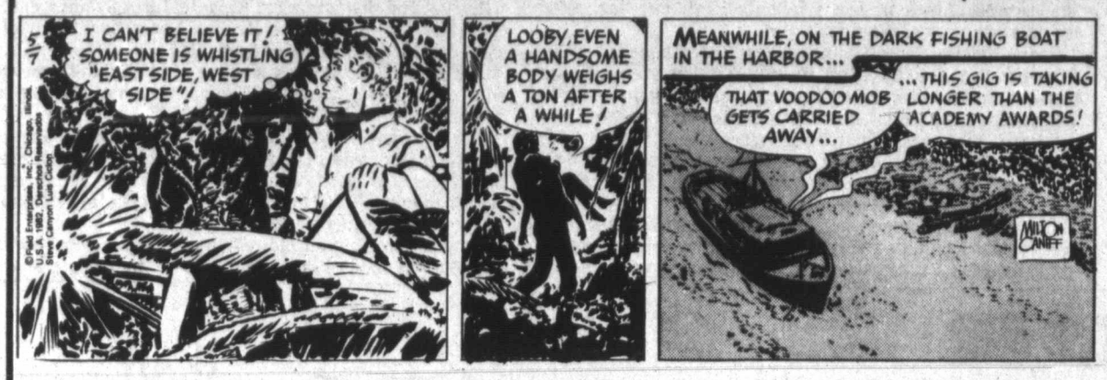

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) If you have a misunderstanding with a friend today, try to resolve the issue at once. If you let time go by the matter could fester and harm your relationship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Whether you choose so or not, the spotlight will be on you today. Wrong moves could hurt your image and standing with others. Put your best foot forward.

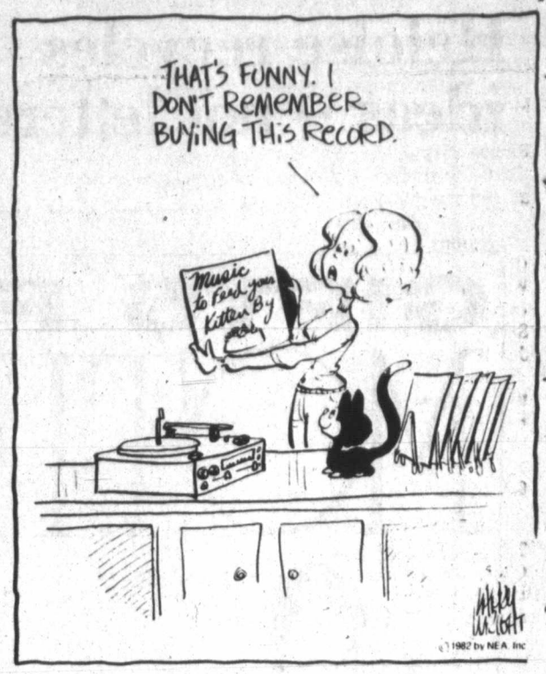

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Be careful what you say or put in writing today. There's a possibility it may later be used against you. State only what you wish repeated.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Be extremely careful in financial or business matters today. Any errors you make could prove serious and might be difficult to unwind.

Winners announced in youth center's spring tennis league

Forty-five players participated in the spring tennis league this year at the Pampa Youth and Community Center.

In the women's A singles competition, Jeanette Gikas defeated Carolyn Winningham, 6-4, 6-4, in a tiebreaker playoff for first place honors. Winningham placed second and Dot Stowers was third.

Patsy Staggs went undefeated in the women's B singles league to claim top honors. Second place was awarded to Jan Martin and Carolyn Kessel, who tied with an identical number of wins, as did Doris Holder, and Teri Popejoy was third.

Showing winning form in the women's A doubles action was Bobbie Buie, who took 11 of 12 matches to claim first place. Jeanette Gikas and Diane Brashears, who won second and third respectively.

Carolyn Kessel, Earnestine Moose and Diane Waters battled all season long to claim top honors in the women's B doubles. At season's end Kessel was on top, three matches ahead of Earnestine Moose and four ahead of Waters. Moose placed second and Waters was third.

In the men's singles division, Dan Popejoy claimed first place on the final week of play, defeating Mike Martinak, 6-2, 6-2, who placed second. Cal Barbaree and Lenny Diaz tied for third place.

Robert Adcock lost only one match all season to claim the first place crown in the men's doubles league. Joe Davis and Dan Popejoy tied for second and Lenny Diaz took third.

In the mixed league, Joe Davis claimed 10 match victories to win first place, followed by Mike Martinak, second, and Carolyn Winningham and Ruby Adcock, third.

League bowlers needed

More bowlers are needed for the summer leagues, according to Shirley Bryan at Harvester Lanes.

At least four bowlers are needed to fill Monday's Night's Men's Trio League, and there are several openings on the Women's Wednesday Night League, Mrs. Bryan said.

Mrs Bryan said there are also spots available on the daytime leagues. Interested bowlers may call 665-3422 for more information.

Bowlers are also reminded of the Pampa Merchants Classic, which is scheduled May 15-16 at Harvester Lanes. Entry deadline is May 13 or when 40 entries are accepted.

Texas League baseball roundup

By The Associated Press

Jackson's Jim Woodward clouted a grand-slam home run and Darryl Strawberry slapped a two-run homer in an explosive third inning as the Mets downed Tulsa 12-4 in a Texas League baseball game.

Jackson was trailing 4-1 after Tulsa's Dan Murphy doubled in the second inning to score three runs. But the Mets came alive on Strawberry's homer over left field wall, followed by Woodward's grand slam.

Jeff Bittiger, 3-1, took the pitching win for Jackson, and Daryl Smith, 1-3, took the loss.

In other Texas League play Thursday, Midland downed San Antonio 9-1 and El Paso smashed Amarillo 11-5.

Jennings in third-place deadlock

AUSTIN—Wheeler's Mona Jennings is deadlocked for third place in medalist action during Thursday's opening round of the Class 2A girls' golf tournament.

Playing in singles, Miss Jennings shot an 86 to tie with Paducah's Paula Weddle in the medalist race.

Janet Robbins of Three Rivers is the leader with an 81. Margaret Rice of Bullard is second with an 84.

Defending champion Ganado paced the 2A teams with a 367, while Big Lake was in the runner-up spot at 388. Paducah had a 399 to hold down fifth place.

The tournament is being played at Lions Municipal Golf Course. The finals are scheduled for today.

Sneed leads rain-delayed Houston golf tournament

HOUSTON (AP)- While others were having trouble just seeing the greens, Ed Sneed was remembering his off-season putting lessons.

Sneed, playing in the growing darkness at Woodlands Country club, snaked in seven birdies, including two from 25 feet Thursday to fire a seven-under par 64 and take the apparent first round lead in the rain-delayed $350,000 Houston Open golf tournament.

Sneed was the survivor of a seige of heavy thunderstorms and lightning that raked the course early in the first round and halted play for two and one-half hours. Twelve players, none a serious challenge to Sneed's lead, were to finish their rounds early today.

"I had the worst year in my nine year career last year," Sneed said. "It was a combination of physical and psychological problems. But I worked harder in the off-season on my chipping and putting and that part of my game is much stronger."

In addition to his string of birdies, Sneed scrambled to four par saving putts to preserve his round. "I had 11 one-putt greens, that is the story my my round. I don't think I hit the ball too well otherwise, but I just putted so well."

Sneed's hot putter gave him a one-stroke lead over recent New Orleans Open winner Scott Hoch, who shot a 1982 tour record 29 on the back nine and finished with a 65.

Hoch also finished his round in near darkness and blamed the lack of light for missing a 15-inch putt that would have given him a share of the lead.

"You could hit a shot but I couldn't read the greens," Hoch said. "I missed a 15-inch putt because I couldn't read the green. I putted where I wanted to but I missed it."

Hoch had nine birdies in his round, including seven over a nine-hole stretch before he lost concentration on No. 2.

"I missed a four-foot putt and lost my concentration," he said.

The miss cost Hoch a birdie and he bogeyed three of the next four holes before recovering with a 20-foot putt for a birdie on the final hole.

Worst April ever for Rangers

ARLINGTON, Texas (AP)- Ted Williams was the manager. The year was 1972 and the Texas Rangers almost went 0-for-September.

They lost 15 games in a row with a team that had a batting average of .217.

It was the first year of the franchise shift from Washington.

Just how far have the Rangers come?

Well, they've still never won a pennant, just finished their worst April in history, and going into Thursday night's game against Boston had lost 11 in a row and were 0-for-May.

However, the current team of such stars as Larry Parrish, Buddy Bell, and Jim Sundberg are more talent-blessed than the 1972 outfit which had such journeymen as Larry Biittner, Elliott Maddox and Dave Nelson.

So what has happened in the early part of the season to the Rangers, who currently reside in the cellar of the American League West?

A combination of poor starting pitching (the worst ERA in the league), critical defensive lapses, a "Who's-in-Left?" outfield, and poor clutch hitting has left the Rangers searching for answers.

For example, here are the ERA's of the starters: Rick Honeycutt (4.45 before Thurday night's game), Charlie Hough (5.79), Doc Medich (12.46), And Frank Tanana (5.16).

Each pitcher has given up as many hits as inning pitched.

The defense has averaged an error a game, including two that lost games on relay throws that went into the dugout in the late innings.

The Rangers traded hot young pitching prospects Ronnie Darling and Walt Terrell to the New York Mets for Lee Mazzilli then discovered he can't play left field.

Mazzilli is a centerfielder but can't play there because of the fast-improving rookie George Wright. And injured Mickey Rivers will be available soon.

The high-priced Mazzilli has been turned into a designated hitter but his replacement in left field, Billy Sample, has a less-than-average glove.

Right place, wrong date

Wednesday's Pampa News story on the Miami High Sports Banquet had the incorrect date listed. The banquet will be held at 7 p.m. Tuesday, May 11 in the school's west gymnasium.

Tickets are $7 per person and may be purchased at the Miami First State Bank, Miami High School or the Roberts County Tax Office.

Pampa High head basketball coach Garland Nichols will be the guest speaker.

MY BOTTLE IS BIGGER. Seattle's Gaylord Perry, right, sprays Bill Caudill with champagne in the locker room after Perry won his 300th game, beating New York, 7-4, Thursday in Seattle. He is the 15th player to reach the 300 mark.

NL roundup

Monday's homer lifts LA past Expos

SEATTLE (AP) — A champagne-drenched Gaylord Perry of the Seattle Mariners had just joined major league baseball's elite 300-victory circle and somebody asked him if his goal now was 400 wins.

Perry didn't let the implications of the question steal his moment of glory, though.

"At this point," the 43-year-old righthander said with a smile, "I'm just taking them one game at a time."

Perry became the big leagues' 15th 300-game winner Thursday night with a route-going 7-3 victory over the defending American League champion New York Yankees.

It was his third win of the season and second triumph in five days over the Yankees.

Baseball's oldest major league player may still have some surprises up his sleeve, though. And not just of the spitball variety, either.

"I don't think he'll stop at 300," said Mariners' President Dan O'Brien. "I won't be surprised to see him in spring training next year."

"I don't know," Perry replied when asked about his future. "I still feel I can win many games and help this club. I'll just finish this year out and go from there."

Of baseball's 26 big league clubs, the Mariners were the only team to give Perry a chance at 300 victories this season.

They got their reward Wednesday night. Perry drew 27,369 fans to the Kingdome, where the Mariners have drawn only one million fans in just one of their previous five seasons.

"It was the greatest win in Mariner history," said a jubilant Rene Lachemann, who celebrated his first anniversary as Seattle's manager. "This kind of media attention can mature a club. It was similar to a World Series out there."

O'Brien, 52, is the man responsible for bringing Perry here. Perry and O'Brien formerly were together with the Texas Rangers, where O'Brien served as president for five seasons before resigning in 1979.

"Gaylord," said O'Brien, "is one of the best competitors in major league sports or any sport for that matter."

"He's a dream for a club," Seattle veteran Richie Zisk said. "He makes every pitch like it's his last pitch."

"How do you fool batters with an 82 mile per hour fastball?" asked Perry's Thursday night batterymate, Terry Bulling. "But he seems to do it, doesn't he?"

AL roundup

Perry's 300th tops AL action

By HERSCHEL NISSENSON
AP Sports Writer

While Gaylord Perry was making it a night to remember with his 300th victory, it was one that four other American League pitchers would like to forget.

— Jim Palmer of the Baltimore Orioles, seeking his 250th triumph, faced only three batters before leaving with a stiff neck Thursday night as the Orioles pounded the California Angels 9-2.

— Doyle Alexander of the New York Yankees, a 7-3 loser to Perry and the Seattle Mariners, suffered a broken knuckle on the little finger of his pitching hand when he punched the dugout wall after surrendering five runs in the third inning, four of them unearned.

— Cleveland's John Denny yielded only three hits, but two were RBI singles by Dan Meye Meyer and Rickey Henderson and one was a homer by Dwayne Murphy as the Oakland A's won their seventh game in a row, downing the Indians 4-2. Denny allowed only one hit after the second inning and retired 20 of the last 21 batters he faced.

— And Boston starter Bob Ojeda, three outs away from the five innings necessary to be the winning pitcher, was yanked by Manager Ralph Houk with a 4-2 lead and the Red Sox went on to defeat Texas 5-2, the Rangers' 12th consecutive setback.

In the only other American League game, the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Minnesota Twins 6-3.

But the night belonged to Perry, in his 21st big league campaign and at 43 the oldest player in the majors. He scattered nine hits, several of the infield variety, in becoming only the 15th pitcher to win 300 games.

Perry, who was released by the Atlanta Braves last year and pitched his way onto the Mariners in spring training, doffed his cap, exposing his bald head, and threw kisses to the crowd of 27,369 in the Seattle Kingdome as he left the field.

"It was great," said a champagne-drenched Perry, who walked one and struck out four. "It was like the last game of a World Series out there. It was very exciting. I had pretty good velocity tonight. I had enough to straighten a few guys up."

Perry blanked the Yankees until Ken Griffey homered in the sixth inning. By that time, the Mariners had a 5-0 lead, scoring five times in the third inning with the help of an error by catcher Rick Cerone.

Jim Maler opened the Mariners' big inning with a triple and scored on Bud Bulling's single off Alexander's glove. Julio Cruz sacrificed and Cerone threw the ball away as Bulling took third and Cruz went to second.

Manny Castillo's bloop single scored Bulling and the runners advanced to second and third when no one cut off the throw from the outfield. Alexander retired Bruce Bochte on a pop fly and fanned Richie Zisk, but Todd Cruz rapped a two-run single and scored on a triple by Al Cowens.

Perry wins No. 300

SEATTLE (AP) — A champagne-drenched Gaylord Perry of the Seattle Mariners had just joined major league baseball's elite 300-victory circle and somebody asked him if his goal now was 400 wins.

Perry didn't let the implications of the question steal his moment of glory, though.

"At this point," the 43-year-old righthander said with a smile, "I'm just taking them one game at a time."

Perry became the big leagues' 15th 300-game winner Thursday night with a route-going 7-3 victory over the defending American League champion New York Yankees.

It was his third win of the season and second triumph in five days over the Yankees.

Baseball's oldest major league player may still have some surprises up his sleeve, though. And not just of the spitball variety, either.

"I don't think he'll stop at 300," said Mariners' President Dan O'Brien. "I won't be surprised to see him in spring training next year."

"I don't know," Perry replied when asked about his future. "I still feel I can win many games and help this club. I'll just finish this year out and go from there."

Of baseball's 26 big league clubs, the Mariners were the only team to give Perry a chance at 300 victories this season.

They got their reward Wednesday night. Perry drew 27,369 fans to the Kingdome, where the Mariners have drawn only one million fans in just one of their previous five seasons.

"It was the greatest win in Mariner history," said a jubilant Rene Lachemann, who celebrated his first anniversary as Seattle's manager. "This kind of media attention can mature a club. It was similar to a World Series out there."

O'Brien, 52, is the man responsible for bringing Perry here. Perry and O'Brien formerly were together with the Texas Rangers, where O'Brien served as president for five seasons before resigning in 1979.

White House, Democrats are squabbling anew

WASHINGTON (AP) — Angry congressional Democrats and the White House are arguing about whether the compromise budget produced by Senate Republicans will hurt 35 million elderly and disabled Social Security recipients.

President Reagan said Thursday that the plan to trim $40 billion from Social Security spending is simply a blueprint aimed at bringing solvency to the financially troubled system.

Reagan, in a question-and-answer session with reporters in the White House Rose Garden, said the new budget will continue to protect the basic benefits of Social Security recipients.

Richard Darman, White House deputy chief of staff, said the Republican spending plan endorsed by Reagan doesn't mandate taking $40 billion away from current recipients.

"It is possible that amount of money could be raised either by changes in benefits for future recipients or some form of revenue changes or a program restructuring or management changes," he said.

Democrats, however, saw the situation differently.

Elsewhere on the hill Thursday, partisan politics resulted in an 8-7 rejection by the Senate Banking Committee of a Democratic-sponsored bill to provide up to $696 million to aid unemployed homeowners facing loss of their homes.

In environmental matters, House members from the Midwest and Northeast proposed legislation to impose a 30-percent tax on domestically produced crude oil. The tax would raise an estimated $17.9 billion this year, with three-quarters of it helping reduce the federal deficit and the rest going to states for economic development and energy conservation programs.

Meanwhile, the Senate Environment Committee unanimously approved revisions in the Clean Air Act sanctions that can be imposed on areas failing to meet national health-based air pollution standards. Lawmakers said the revisions balance calls by industry for a weaker law and demands by environmentalists that the act continue to contain strong protections.

In a squabble pitting pesticide makers against environmentalists and labor unions, the House Agriculture Committee endorsed a bill proposing sweeping changes in federal regulation of pesticides.

The measure would restrict the rights of states to impose stronger regulations than those issued by the federal government. Stripped from the bill was language permitting people to sue in federal courts over illegal pesticide use.

Leath praises Reagan's move on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has taken a big step toward ending the budget logjam by accepting the proposal of the Senate Budget Committee, says Rep. Marvin Leath of Texas.

"It was a good, positive step," said Leath, a Democrat from Marlin.

His views coincided with other conservative Texas Democrats, members of the "Boll Weevil" faction whose support is considered pivotal for a budget bill to win House approval.

"Where you had both the president and the Democratic leadership refusing to face the truth, you've got at least one facing the truth now, with the president accepting the idea there's no way to control this budget without addressing both revenues and entitlements," Leath said Thursday.

The budget proposed by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., head of the Senate committee, is "not a great deal different" from the concepts the Boll Weevils have been pursuing, said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas

"We were encouraged by the action of the Senate Budget Committee and the president's response. It was an important step in the right direction," said Stenholm, of Stamford, chairman of the conservative Democratic coalition.

"We strongly encourage the House leadership of both parties to make a similar effort," Stenholm added.

He said his group is continuing to work with Rep. Jim Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, toward a bipartisan approach that will meet the nation's needs.

However, Democratic leaders strongly criticized Domenici's budget proposal, which was approved Wednesday night in his Senate committee by a 10-9 vote that strictly followed party lines.

"Those who have been wanting the president to move first, well, he has now," Stenholm added.

"My prediction is, absent our leadership taking some initiative of coming up with a responsible budget, I am going to come down on the side of whoever does. Right now, that's the president," Leath said.

Criticism by Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill and House Majority Leader Tip O'Neill of Domenici's proposal came while Jones sought to work into his committee bill a "shopping list" the Boll Weevils gave Democratic leaders two weeks ago.

"My understanding is that the Jones and Domenici budgets, and the figures we're using, are not really that far apart," Leath said.

"It does seem incompatible, considering the criticism from the leadership, but I think you've got two extreme situations — what the speaker is saying and, I guess, what (Sen. Jack) Kemp is saying," Leath added.

"They're both wrong. There's a middle ground that both sides of Congress will come down on, and we hope Jim Jones is in the middle ground."

Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, of College Station called Domenici's budget proposal "an important first step in the right direction" and expressed sorrow that Democrats on the Senate Budget Committee all opposed it.

"We clearly are going to have to have bipartisan support to pass it in the House," said Gramm, the Democratic sponsor of Reagan's budget legislation in 1981.

Domenici's bill, Gramm said, "would truly be a low-interest, high-growth, job-creating budget. At the same time, it is going to be a tough budget to pass, politically, but it's exactly the type budget the American people need."

Gramm has been a leader in the movement to cut the increases in entitlement spending.

"After inflation, the salary of the average worker in America did not grow at all in the 1970s. At the same time, entitlements was growing by 8 percent, after inflation in real terms," Gramm added.

"It's that type of transfer, from those who are pulling the wagon to those riding in it, that has brought about the major threat to our system."

The Boll Weevils are almost unanimous in wanting to retain the third year of the tax cut — a 10 percent slice scheduled to go into effect on July 1, 1983. However, most say they would be willing to accept some adjustment.

On the other hand, O'Neill and Wright have gone on record as saying the third year of the tax cut must be repealed.

The leadership also opposes substantial cuts in entitlement programs and wants more cuts made in defense spending.

"I'm not going to vote for a cut in defense spending unless the commander in chief recommends it. He's closer to it than we are," said Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Texas, of Rockwall.

Existing safety regulations cannot prevent disasters, expert reports

HOUSTON (AP) — Existing safety regulations are not enough to prevent offshore disasters like the collapse of the Ocean Ranger rig, a Canadian safety expert says.

"The technology we have now and with which regulators are comfortable has been developed out of the marine shipping industry," said C. Peter Benedict, president of Safety Offshore Services Ltd. of St. John's, Newfoundland.

"However, it is not adequate for current frontier-area drilling operations," he said.

Benedict made his statements Thursday at the closing session of the Offshore Technology Conference, the largest annual trade show for manufacturers of oil industry equipment.

Officials said a record 108,161 visitors from 90 countries attended the four-day convention.

The Ocean Ranger, a semi-submersible drilling rig which sank earlier this year in a severe storm southeast of St. John's, Newfoundland, demonstrated the magnitude of potential offshore hazards, Benedict said.

"It is now obvious that there must be improvements in abandonment procedures and survival techniques for frontier offshore drilling operations," he said.

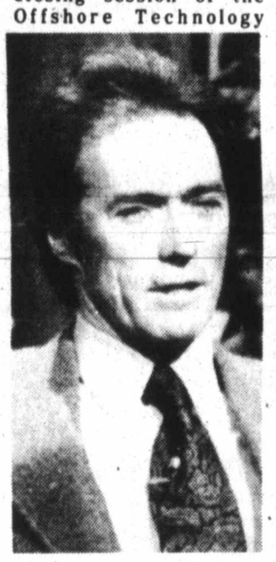

"Evacuation is rarely necessitated under optimal environmental conditions," Benedict said, "and traditional techniques developed for conventional shipping have proved to be inadequate in hostile conditions."

However, he added, the collapse of the Ocean Ranger claimed more lives than all offshore accidents in that area of the North Sea between 1970 and 1979.

Statistics showed 74 people lost their lives in that 10-year period, while 84 workers died when the Ocean Ranger capsized.

What caused the Ocean Ranger to collapse still has not been determined, and invesitgations are continuing in the United States and Canada.

"Control by regulations is slow to form and difficult to change," he said.

Names in the News

LANCASTER, Calif. (AP) — A 53-year-old man who looks like country and western star Willie Nelson and even bears the name, has pleaded innocent to charges of impersonating the singer, forgery and writing bad checks, authorities said.

A girlfriend brought William David Nelson of Westminster, Colo., to the Antelope Valley sheriff's station Wednesday where he was arrested, Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Chuck Laine said Thursday.

The man entered a plea that day in Antelope Municipal Court to two counts of forgery, one count of false impersonation for financial gain and writing checks against insufficient funds.

"He had everyone convinced in Lancaster that he was Willie Nelson, and according to the detective that arrested him, he looks like Willie Nelson," said sheriff's Sgt. Arthur Robinson, who said the bad checks totaled $22,000.

Detective Jerry Wolf said the man bought a $17,900 car for the woman at a Ford dealership Monday but the check didn't clear.

So the woman brought Nelson to the station, said Laine, and "an investigator went down to the parking lot and arrested him."

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The National Enquirer is again the target of a celebrity suit, this one an exploitation charge from Clint Eastwood.

Eastwood is suing for $10 million, claiming the weekly tabloid "used his name and likeness to exploit sales without his consent," his lawyer, Howard King, said Thursday.

The actor objected to a cover story last month saying he was involved in a love triangle with singer Tanya Tucker and actress Sondra Lock.

"What we are alleging is that the article...was untrue and was not newsworthy in any event," King said. The suit was filed Wednesday in Superior Court.

Enquirer lawyer Irving Younger said Thursday that "the evidence to support the story is more than enough to meet any legal standard, and I suspect that Mr. Eastwood knows it, because he has not sued for libel."

'Huck Finn' ban rejected

HOUSTON (AP) — School board trustees have denied a request by several black parents to ban Mark Twain's novel, "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," which the parents contend is degrading.

Trustees of the Spring Independent School District unanimously agreed Thursday night that the novel should remain in the curriculum.

One parent, Dora Durden, complained in February that the term "nigger" used thoughout the book was humiliating to black students.

James Crews, principal of Westfield High School, appointed a committee of two teachers and a librarian to investigate the complaints. The committee recommended the district continue to use the novel.

Mrs. Durden and another parent, Joseph Malveaux, later asked the school board to place the book on the optional reading list.

District Supt. Gorden Anderson appointed a committee of 11 parents, students and educators to review the request.

On March 22, the committee released a report that favored keeping the book in the curriculum.

"It is a profoundly moral book; it is an outstanding selection for protraying regional dialect, customs, traditions, attitudes characteristic of the middle 1800s and is useful in teaching a variety of literary devices such as satire," the report said.

"Schools have a responsibility to present a variety of points of view and the use of one book or another does not mean the school promotes that point of view."

Monday's homer lifts LA past Expos

SEATTLE (AP) — A champagne-drenched Gaylord Perry of the Seattle Mariners had just joined major league baseball's elite 300-victory circle and somebody asked him if his goal now was 400 wins.

Perry didn't let the implications of the question steal his moment of glory, though.

"At this point," the 43-year-old righthander said with a smile, "I'm just taking them one game at a time."

Perry became the big leagues' 15th 300-game winner Thursday night with a route-going 7-3 victory over the defending American League champion New York Yankees.

It was his third win of the season and second triumph in five days over the Yankees.

Baseball's oldest major league player may still have some surprises up his sleeve, though. And not just of the spitball variety, either.

"I don't think he'll stop at 300," said Mariners' President Dan O'Brien. "I won't be surprised to see him in spring training next year."

"I don't know," Perry replied when asked about his future. "I still feel I can win many games and help this club. I'll just finish this year out and go from there."

Of baseball's 26 big league clubs, the Mariners were the only team to give Perry a chance at 300 victories this season.

They got their reward Wednesday night. Perry drew 27,369 fans to the Kingdome, where the Mariners have drawn only one million fans in just one of their previous five seasons.

"It was the greatest win in Mariner history," said a jubilant Rene Lachemann, who celebrated his first anniversary as Seattle's manager. "This kind of media attention can mature a club. It was similar to a World Series out there."

O'Brien, 52, is the man responsible for bringing Perry here. Perry and O'Brien formerly were together with the Texas Rangers, where O'Brien served as president for five seasons before resigning in 1979.

"Gaylord," said O'Brien, "is one of the best competitors in major league sports or any sport for that matter."

"He's a dream for a club," Seattle veteran Richie Zisk said. "He makes every pitch like it's his last pitch."

"How do you fool batters with an 82 mile per hour fastball?" asked Perry's Thursday night batterymate, Terry Bulling. "But he seems to do it, doesn't he?"

Perry's 300th tops AL action

While Gaylord Perry was making it a night to remember with his 300th victory, it was one that four other American League pitchers would like to forget.

— Jim Palmer of the Baltimore Orioles, seeking his 250th triumph, faced only three batters before leaving with a stiff neck Thursday night as the Orioles pounded the California Angels 9-2.

— Doyle Alexander of the New York Yankees, a 7-3 loser to Perry and the Seattle Mariners, suffered a broken knuckle on the little finger of his pitching hand when he punched the dugout wall after surrendering five runs in the third inning, four of them unearned.

— Cleveland's John Denny yielded only three hits, but two were RBI singles by Dan Meye Meyer and Rickey Henderson and one was a homer by Dwayne Murphy as the Oakland A's won their seventh game in a row, downing the Indians 4-2. Denny allowed only one hit after the second inning and retired 20 of the last 21 batters he faced.

— And Boston starter Bob Ojeda, three outs away from the five innings necessary to be the winning pitcher, was yanked by Manager Ralph Houk with a 4-2 lead and the Red Sox went on to defeat Texas 5-2, the Rangers' 12th consecutive setback.

In the only other American League game, the Milwaukee Brewers beat the Minnesota Twins 6-3.

But the night belonged to Perry, in his 21st big league campaign and at 43 the oldest player in the majors. He scattered nine hits, several of the infield variety, in becoming only the 15th pitcher to win 300 games.

Perry, who was released by the Atlanta Braves last year and pitched his way onto the Mariners in spring training, doffed his cap, exposing his bald head, and threw kisses to the crowd of 27,369 in the Seattle Kingdome as he left the field.

"It was great," said a champagne-drenched Perry, who walked one and struck out four. "It was like the last game of a World Series out there. It was very exciting. I had pretty good velocity tonight. I had enough to straighten a few guys up."

Perry blanked the Yankees until Ken Griffey homered in the sixth inning. By that time, the Mariners had a 5-0 lead, scoring five times in the third inning with the help of an error by catcher Rick Cerone.

Jim Maler opened the Mariners' big inning with a triple and scored on Bud Bulling's single off Alexander's glove. Julio Cruz sacrificed and Cerone threw the ball away as Bulling took third and Cruz went to second.

Manny Castillo's bloop single scored Bulling and the runners advanced to second and third when no one cut off the throw from the outfield. Alexander retired Bruce Bochte on a pop fly and fanned Richie Zisk, but Todd Cruz rapped a two-run single and scored on a triple by Al Cowens.

White House, Democrats are squabbling anew

WASHINGTON (AP) — Angry congressional Democrats and the White House are arguing about whether the compromise budget produced by Senate Republicans will hurt 35 million elderly and disabled Social Security recipients.

President Reagan said Thursday that the plan to trim $40 billion from Social Security spending is simply a blueprint aimed at bringing solvency to the financially troubled system.

Reagan, in a question-and-answer session with reporters in the White House Rose Garden, said the new budget will continue to protect the basic benefits of Social Security recipients.

Richard Darman, White House deputy chief of staff, said the Republican spending plan endorsed by Reagan doesn't mandate taking $40 billion away from current recipients.

"It is possible that amount of money could be raised either by changes in benefits for future recipients or some form of revenue changes or a program restructuring or management changes," he said.

Democrats, however, saw the situation differently.

Elsewhere on the hill Thursday, partisan politics resulted in an 8-7 rejection by the Senate Banking Committee of a Democratic-sponsored bill to provide up to $696 million to aid unemployed homeowners facing loss of their homes.

In environmental matters, House members from the Midwest and Northeast proposed legislation to impose a 30-percent tax on domestically produced crude oil. The tax would raise an estimated $17.9 billion this year, with three-quarters of it helping reduce the federal deficit and the rest going to states for economic development and energy conservation programs.

Meanwhile, the Senate Environment Committee unanimously approved revisions in the Clean Air Act sanctions that can be imposed on areas failing to meet national health-based air pollution standards. Lawmakers said the revisions balance calls by industry for a weaker law and demands by environmentalists that the act continue to contain strong protections.

In a squabble pitting pesticide makers against environmentalists and labor unions, the House Agriculture Committee endorsed a bill proposing sweeping changes in federal regulation of pesticides.

The measure would restrict the rights of states to impose stronger regulations than those issued by the federal government. Stripped from the bill was language permitting people to sue in federal courts over illegal pesticide use.

Leath praises Reagan's move on budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has taken a big step toward ending the budget logjam by accepting the proposal of the Senate Budget Committee, says Rep. Marvin Leath of Texas.

"It was a good, positive step," said Leath, a Democrat from Marlin.

His views coincided with other conservative Texas Democrats, members of the "Boll Weevil" faction whose support is considered pivotal for a budget bill to win House approval.

"Where you had both the president and the Democratic leadership refusing to face the truth, you've got at least one facing the truth now, with the president accepting the idea there's no way to control this budget without addressing both revenues and entitlements," Leath said Thursday.

The budget proposed by Sen. Pete Domenici, R-N.M., head of the Senate committee, is "not a great deal different" from the concepts the Boll Weevils have been pursuing, said Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Texas

"We were encouraged by the action of the Senate Budget Committee and the president's response. It was an important step in the right direction," said Stenholm, of Stamford, chairman of the conservative Democratic coalition.

"We strongly encourage the House leadership of both parties to make a similar effort," Stenholm added.

He said his group is continuing to work with Rep. Jim Jones, D-Okla., chairman of the House Budget Committee, toward a bipartisan approach that will meet the nation's needs.

However, Democratic leaders strongly criticized Domenici's budget proposal, which was approved Wednesday night in his Senate committee by a 10-9 vote that strictly followed party lines.

"Those who have been wanting the president to move first, well, he has now," Stenholm added.

"My prediction is, absent our leadership taking some initiative of coming up with a responsible budget, I am going to come down on the side of whoever does. Right now, that's the president," Leath said.

Criticism by Speaker of the House Tip O'Neill and House Majority Leader Tip O'Neill of Domenici's proposal came while Jones sought to work into his committee bill a "shopping list" the Boll Weevils gave Democratic leaders two weeks ago.

"My understanding is that the Jones and Domenici budgets, and the figures we're using, are not really that far apart," Leath said.

"It does seem incompatible, considering the criticism from the leadership, but I think you've got two extreme situations — what the speaker is saying and, I guess, what (Sen. Jack) Kemp is saying," Leath added.

"They're both wrong. There's a middle ground that both sides of Congress will come down on, and we hope Jim Jones is in the middle ground."

Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas, of College Station called Domenici's budget proposal "an important first step in the right direction" and expressed sorrow that Democrats on the Senate Budget Committee all opposed it.

"We clearly are going to have to have bipartisan support to pass it in the House," said Gramm, the Democratic sponsor of Reagan's budget legislation in 1981.

Domenici's bill, Gramm said, "would truly be a low-interest, high-growth, job-creating budget. At the same time, it is going to be a tough budget to pass, politically, but it's exactly the type budget the American people need."

Gramm has been a leader in the movement to cut the increases in entitlement spending.

"After inflation, the salary of the average worker in America did not grow at all in the 1970s. At the same time, entitlements was growing by 8 percent, after inflation in real terms," Gramm added.

"It's that type of transfer, from those who are pulling the wagon to those riding in it, that has brought about the major threat to our system."

The Boll Weevils are almost unanimous in wanting to retain the third year of the tax cut — a 10 percent slice scheduled to go into effect on July 1, 1983. However, most say they would be willing to accept some adjustment.

On the other hand, O'Neill and Wright have gone on record as saying the third year of the tax cut must be repealed.

The leadership also opposes substantial cuts in entitlement programs and wants more cuts made in defense spending.

"I'm not going to vote for a cut in defense spending unless the commander in chief recommends it. He's closer to it than we are," said Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Texas, of Rockwall.

Existing safety regulations cannot prevent disasters, expert reports

HOUSTON (AP) — Existing safety regulations are not enough to prevent offshore disasters like the collapse of the Ocean Ranger rig, a Canadian safety expert says.

"The technology we have now and with which regulators are comfortable has been developed out of the marine shipping industry," said C. Peter Benedict, president of Safety Offshore Services Ltd. of St. John's, Newfoundland.

"However, it is not adequate for current frontier-area drilling operations," he said.

Benedict made his statements Thursday at the closing session of the Offshore Technology Conference, the largest annual trade show for manufacturers of oil industry equipment.

Officials said a record 108,161 visitors from 90 countries attended the four-day convention.

The Ocean Ranger, a semi-submersible drilling rig which sank earlier this year in a severe storm southeast of St. John's, Newfoundland, demonstrated the magnitude of potential offshore hazards, Benedict said.

"It is now obvious that there must be improvements in abandonment procedures and survival techniques for frontier offshore drilling operations," he said.

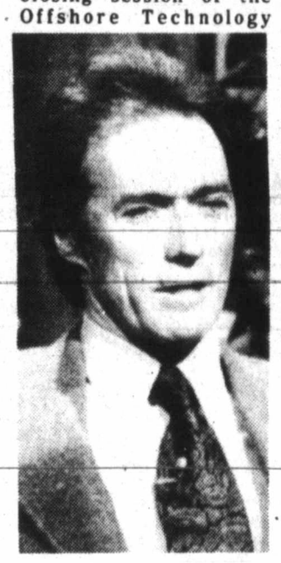

"Evacuation is rarely necessitated under optimal environmental conditions," Benedict said, "and traditional techniques developed for conventional shipping have proved to be inadequate in hostile conditions."

However, he added, the collapse of the Ocean Ranger claimed more lives than all offshore accidents in that area of the North Sea between 1970 and 1979.

Statistics showed 74 people lost their lives in that 10-year period, while 84 workers died when the Ocean Ranger capsized.

What caused the Ocean Ranger to collapse still has not been determined, and invesitgations are continuing in the United States and Canada.

"Control by regulations is slow to form and difficult to change," he said.

Names in the News

LANCASTER, Calif. (AP) — A 53-year-old man who looks like country and western star Willie Nelson and even bears the name, has pleaded innocent to charges of impersonating the singer, forgery and writing bad checks, authorities said.

A girlfriend brought William David Nelson of Westminster, Colo., to the Antelope Valley sheriff's station Wednesday where he was arrested, Los Angeles County sheriff's Sgt. Chuck Laine said Thursday.

The man entered a plea that day in Antelope Municipal Court to two counts of forgery, one count of false impersonation for financial gain and writing checks against insufficient funds.

"He had everyone convinced in Lancaster that he was Willie Nelson, and according to the detective that arrested him, he looks like Willie Nelson," said sheriff's Sgt. Arthur Robinson, who said the bad checks totaled $22,000.

Detective Jerry Wolf said the man bought a $17,900 car for the woman at a Ford dealership Monday but the check didn't clear.

So the woman brought Nelson to the station, said Laine, and "an investigator went down to the parking lot and arrested him."

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — The National Enquirer is again the target of a celebrity suit, this one an exploitation charge from Clint Eastwood.

Eastwood is suing for $10 million, claiming the weekly tabloid "used his name and likeness to exploit sales without his consent," his lawyer, Howard King, said Thursday.

The actor objected to a cover story last month saying he was involved in a love triangle with singer Tanya Tucker and actress Sondra Lock.

"What we are alleging is that the article...was untrue and was not newsworthy in any event," King said. The suit was filed Wednesday in Superior Court.

Enquirer lawyer Irving Younger said Thursday that "the evidence to support the story is more than enough to meet any legal standard, and I suspect that Mr. Eastwood knows it, because he has not sued for libel."

'Huck Finn' ban rejected

HOUSTON (AP) — School board trustees have denied a request by several black parents to ban Mark Twain's novel, "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," which the parents contend is degrading.

Trustees of the Spring Independent School District unanimously agreed Thursday night that the novel should remain in the curriculum.

One parent, Dora Durden, complained in February that the term "nigger" used thoughout the book was humiliating to black students.

James Crews, principal of Westfield High School, appointed a committee of two teachers and a librarian to investigate the complaints. The committee recommended the district continue to use the novel.

Mrs. Durden and another parent, Joseph Malveaux, later asked the school board to place the book on the optional reading list.

District Supt. Gorden Anderson appointed a committee of 11 parents, students and educators to review the request.

On March 22, the committee released a report that favored keeping the book in the curriculum.

"It is a profoundly moral book; it is an outstanding selection for protraying regional dialect, customs, traditions, attitudes characteristic of the middle 1800s and is useful in teaching a variety of literary devices such as satire," the report said.

"Schools have a responsibility to present a variety of points of view and the use of one book or another does not mean the school promotes that point of view."
