Movie party

Midland police Sgt. Andy Glasscock, center, laughs as his wife, Lynne, cheers, at a scene from "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure." The couple attended a movie-watching party with friends at the Saddle Club Apartments.

McClures thought film accurate

Watching ordeal didn't upset Jessica

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

In the spirit of the Super Bowl and the Kentucky Derby, Midlanders gathered with friends and family before the television Sunday night to hoot, cheer and party.

But the revelry didn't surround a traditional American sporting event held in a faraway arena. The long-awaited ABC movie, "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," was television's spectacle to which almost every Midlander could find a tie.

Condensing 58½ hours of trauma into the 8 p.m. to 10 p.m. prime-time movie slot, the film recreated the dramatic rescue of the 18-month-old Jessica, who was trapped 22 feet below ground in an abandoned water well.

While many used the movie as a chance to throw a "Jessica party," Chip, Cissy and Jessica McClure sat quietly in their Greenwood home as vivid, painful memories of the near-tragic October 1987 accident came back to them.

"We thought it was real accurate," Chip McClure said this morning. "I think the spirit of the volunteers was reincarnated pretty well in the movie. They captured a feeling that everybody there could really relate to."

Mrs. McClure said the movie "was as good as it could have been," adding that the "to the letter" opening scene, when Jessica is discovered missing, brought tears to her eyes. She said Roxana Zal, who played her in the film, did an admirable job of portraying her.

But McClure said his casted counterpart, Will Oldham, only did a fair job of portrayal, and the movie character was a little too "scruffy."

While the film resurfaced painful memories for the couple, Jessica, who was "mostly interested" in watching, remained her happy self, Chip McClure said.

"It didn't upset her," he said. "She knew it was about her and it was about us."

Meanwhile, the beer keg and the soft drinks were flowing in the Saddle Club Apartments clubhouse in north Midland, where Midland Police Department officer Andy Glasscock, who was portrayed in the movie, and about 25 friends and family members viewed the movie.

The audience's silence was shattered by an occasional snicker, wisecrack or round of applause over a good — or bad — line.

Everyone, of course, applauded when Jessica emerged from the rescue hole.

However, louder applause came when Glasscock's character, played by Walter Olkewicz, spouted, "Somehow it doesn't matter whether we beat Odessa or not," referring to an upcoming football game. Even bigger was the response to Beau Bridges, playing Chief Richard Czech, when he said, "Let's go get a beer."

"I thought it was pretty good," Glasscock said after the movie. "There was a lot of it that wasn't portrayed right, but that's Hollywood.

"I think it portrayed Midland in a favorable light. The main thing is that there's a 3-year-old girl who's still alive today because of what everybody did."

Midland Fire Department Chief James Roberts said he liked the movie overall, although he may have been too close to the real thing to be a fair critic.

"I thought parts of it were very corny, but it depicted Midland in a good light," Roberts said. "No matter what they (movie producers) did, I probably wouldn't be satisfied.

"Some of it was accurate. Some of it was changed considerably for creative reasons."

Czech said he was pleased with the accuracy of the movie.

"I thought it was done very well," Czech said. "The whole movie looked pretty good. I have no complaints. It was better than I thought it was going to be."

Tedda McAnear, director of the Midland County District Attorney Victim Assistance Program, whose department was represented in the movie, said she hopes the film will generate interest in her organization.

"We need more volunteers and donations for crisis victims," Ms. McAnear said.

Cpl. Jim White of Midland police said he was impressed with the movie, especially its underground scenes.

"Obviously there was a lot of thought put into it," White said, adding that the actor who played him was a little off the mark, as far as appearance goes. "As a personal note, I would have rather been in a western."

Residents' reactions to film mixed

By CHRIS VAN WAGENEN
Staff Writer

Some of Hollywood's most knowledgeable movie critics were sitting in Midland, not the West Coast Sunday night, where reactions to "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," were understandably mixed.

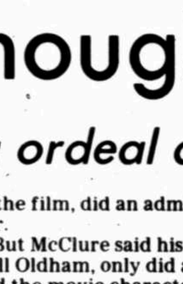

"I thought it was pretty accurate based on what I knew about it," said Wayne Butler, who like a number of Midland residents had his television set tuned in on the much-publicized rescue film.

Jessica McClure may fade from the limelight now, but not from the memories of those who followed the 58½ hour ordeal some 19 months ago.

Midlander Wade Emmert said other than grossly distorted accents, he too liked the movie. "They (Hollywood filmmakers) could have really dogged us, but they didn't," he said.

Blair

Emmert

Philbeck

Wiggins

But not all were in agreement. Aracely Renteria said she didn't care for parts of the made-for-television movie, which she said portrayed father Chip McClure poorly. "He (actor Will Oldham) just didn't act right," she said. "And, everyone knew this wasn't filmed in Midland."

The bulk of the movie was filmed near Los Angeles, although a few exterior scenes were shot in Midland.

Midlander Deanna Neal said she's glad the whole subject's been finally put to rest. "I thought the film was good, but I'm really glad this is over."

While Ms. Neal thought the film portrayed Midland in a good light, she said she felt a little uneasy about the friction the script created between the police and fire departments.

"That didn't happen, did it?," she asked. "I don't remember that."

Like others, Midland attorney Matthew Blair had mixed feelings about the two-hour movie. "I like to think we were a little more educated (than portrayed), but it's awful hard to cram 58 hours into two," he said.

However, Blair said the movie did correctly depict the spirit that existed during the rescue. "It tried to show a city on hard times...that pulled together. That's what was important. In the end, what mattered was that she (Jessica) was rescued."

Some, like Marty Golden, enjoyed certain characters portrayed, like Midland Fire Chief James Roberts. "I like that old man who played him...I thought it was a pretty good job."

Officers sign letter against martial law

BEIJING (AP) — In a stinging blow to Premier Li Peng, more than 100 top military officers signed a letter today opposing his declaration of martial law in Beijing, saying the army "will never shoot the people," sources said.

State-run television also quoted an officer as saying he had been told to withdraw his troops because of widespread popular resistance.

In central Tiananmen Square, the roughly 45,000 student protesters the troops had been ordered to disperse savored their latest victory after hundreds of thousands of people again mired troop convoys with roadblocks.

For a second night, masses of city residents had stymied the army, jamming major roads with public buses, trucks and garbage cans.

Students and citizens defiantly vowed to continue their struggle until Li and senior leader Deng Xiaoping resign. Many people believe Li acted on Deng's orders.

The people's mobilization was a severe blow to Li, whose declaration of martial law in the capital on Saturday has apparently backfired and strengthened popular support for a 10-day pro-democracy protest in the square.

The letter, sent to the People's Daily newspaper, mouthpiece of the ruling Communist Party, was a further blow.

Seven well-known military figures, including former Defense Minister Zhang Aiping and former People's Liberation Army Chief of Staff Yang Dezhi, wrote the letter, a source at the People's Daily said.

"As old soldiers we have the following demands," the letter said. "The People's Liberation Army belongs to the people. It cannot confront the people, even more so it cannot suppress the people and it will never shoot the people."

"To keep the situation from worsening, the army cannot enter the city," it said. The letter was signed by 100 other officers, said another source.

The letter and the inability to remove the students from the square called into question Li's hold on power and ability to control the army, which has yet to move against the protesters.

Two DPS troopers killed by truck while making DWI arrest

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — For only the third time in the history of the Texas Department of Public Safety, two officers have died together.

Two troopers who had stopped a suspected drunken driver were killed early Sunday when a tractor-trailer rig struck their patrol car, crushing the officers between the two cars.

The troopers died just before 3 a.m. one mile inside the Bexar County line, near the intersection of U.S. Highway 90 and Farm-to-Market Road 1604, said DPS spokesman Mike Cox.

Patrol Sgt. William Kuhnle, 36, and Trooper Ralph Zerda, 29, both stationed in Bexar County, became the 64th and 65th troopers killed in the line of duty since the Texas highway patrol began in 1930, Cox said.

The last time two DPS officers died together was July 7, 1974, when a trooper directing traffic in Baird was struck and killed by a passing motorist and his partner saw what happened and suffered a fatal heart attack.

Kuhnle

Zerda

The other dual trooper death came on Dec. 1, 1973 when two troopers in Athens were killed when their patrol car overturned, Cox said.

Manufacturer of steel to open local facility

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

Hirschfeld Steel, a San Angelo-based steel manufacturing firm, will open a Midland fabrication, sales and warehouse facility which will ultimately employ 75 workers it was announced today.

"We expect to become a major factor in Midland in the next few months," owner David Hirschfeld said today at the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Hirschfeld said he had been working with the Chamber to conclude plans to open the facility, which will be located in the 50,000 square-foot building of Central Texas Iron Work. The company operated in Midland from 1957 to 1986 and was purchased earlier this year by Hirschfeld.

The facility located in Midland Industrial Park will initially employ 25 and eventually 75 workers, with hiring to begin immediately. Most of the employees will be employed in fabrication, but Hirschfeld said truck drivers, warehousemen and salesmen would also be employed.

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair skies in forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Fair skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the middle 60s and winds will be out of the west 5-15 mph becoming southwesterly by midnight.

Tuesday will be sunny and hot with the high expected to be near 103. Winds will be out of the southwest at 10-20 mph.

Sunday's high of 103 was two degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 105 set for that date in 1953. The overnight low of 68 was twenty degrees warmer than the record low temperature of 48 set for this date in 1931.

STATE

Fog shrouded some sections of South Texas today while forecasters predicted a chance of rainfall in northern sections as a low-pressure system moved through the region.

The low pressure was centered over the Panhandle between Childress and Amarillo, while a dry line curved from the low's center across the South Plains into the Trans Pecos, the National Weather Service said.

Scattered patches of fog formed over parts of the Coastal Bend and in Southeast Texas. Skies were mostly clear over western and southwestern sections, except for high thin cloudiness.

Clear skies were also reported at a few spots in East Texas and over the Big Country around Abilene. Partly to mostly cloudy skies were common over the rest of the state.

Some late night and early morning cloudiness was expected, with fair to partly cloudy conditions through Tuesday.

A chance of mainly late afternoon and evening thunderstorms, some possibly severe, was forecast for the northeast section of the state, with widely scattered afternoon and evening storms also possible over the northern part of South Texas.

NATION

The nation's heartland was hit by a rash of thunderstorms today as a band of East Coast storms lost its punch.

Thunderstorms were clustered in northern Oklahoma, central and eastern Kansas and southern and central Missouri. Other bands of thunderstorms were moving out of eastern Arkansas into western Tennessee and northern Mississippi.

Showers and thunderstorms developing ahead of an upper level weather system were scattered across eastern South Dakota and southeastern North Dakota.

Thunderstorms that developed ahead of a cold front in the East produced severe weather in North Carolina Sunday evening and then weakened as they moved out to sea.

Showers developing ahead of the same cold front fell in eastern Maine and off the coast of Massachusetts this morning.

Dry weather prevailed across the rest of the nation.

Today's forecast called for showers and thunderstorms across much of the Mississippi, Ohio and Tennessee valleys and Gulf Coast states to Florida; scattered showers in northeastern New York state and northern New England; and rain spreading into the Pacific Northwest.

'Everybody's Baby' lacks scope of real-life event

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO

Although many Midlanders expressed anxiety about Jessica McClure's story being trivalized in the television movie "Everybody's Baby: The Rescue of Jessica McClure," most residents will breathe easier after viewing the story which remained true to its subject matter.

Before viewing the film, I wondered what on earth they could show us that millions of Americans hadn't already seen during the live coverage of the toddler's rescue. Were there actually people in America who didn't stay glued to their television sets during the ordeal?

The film tried to fill in the spots the viewing audience may have missed while coming into the middle of coverage. For example, no one knows what it was like for Cissy McClure when she discovered her baby daughter's predicament. Roxana Zal as Cissy is moving in her moments of hysteria when she realizes Jessica is in the well.

But other than that scene there was little insight offered into the McClures' turmoil. Character development fell by the wayside and "Everybody's Baby" concentrated on the plot surrounding Jessica's rescue. The filmmakers, who were concerned with authenticity, merely reenacted the events that a nation watched for 58½ hours.

Midland as a setting seemed like a mere backdrop, as if this could have happened anywhere in West Texas. It could have, but fortunately it happened where most of the equipment, drilling expertise, and generosity of spirit, was in our own backyard. There was nothing shown in Midland to give the audience a real sense of place.

The opening glimpses of Midland — empty lots and empty downtown streets — made me apprehensive that the film was going to reinforce the "ghost town" image portrayed by national news teams during the event. Sure, the economy was in a downturn, but the city was still populated — which brings me to my biggest complaint about the movie. Where were all the people? One of the early scenes in the film showed Chip McClure and another painter hearing the news about a baby in a water well on the radio. I liked that scene, it had a sense of docudrama. But there weren't enough human touches of people hearing and reacting to the news of Jessica's predicament.

The set (near Los Angeles) with the well had very few people on it compared to the actual scene on 3309 Tanner Drive. Children who came to pray, hundreds who donated food to the site, and even the reporters who maintained vigils at the Reporter-Telegram just answering the phone from well-wishers around the country were the types of telling details left out of the film.

Jessica's rescue was an international concern. I guess I just wanted to see the scope expanded from the backyard on Tanner Drive to encompass more of Midland — and Midlanders.

Despite its narrow scope, "Everybody's Baby" did have humor and drama, which humanized the rescue workers. The most dramatic moments belonged to Whip Hupley as paramedic Robert O'Donnell. His claustrophobic scenes in the tunnel, and his anxiety at pulling on the possibly severely injured Jessica were the most palpable in the movie. It showed the odds the workers were up against.

It was difficult to judge the acting talents of Rodney Wunsch, former KMID newscaster, who played himself. His dramatic moment was brief, but believable.

The final few moments, which may have been pure fiction, seemed the most endearing in the film. Fire Chief James Roberts (Pat Hingle) and Police Chief Richard Czech (Beau Bridges) ponder the miracle of the rescue. "I bet you we could walk on that water," Roberts says, and the two rescuers sludge — not once, but twice — through mud puddles.

In all fairness, "Everybody's Baby" did remain true to the spirit of Midland's volunteerism which captured the hearts of viewers worldwide. However, there were scenes on local television news stations that ounce-for-ounce packed more wallop than anything in the television movie. I'll never forget the look of joy on the face of one unidentified rescuer when Jessica was pulled from the well. He was a big bear of a man, and tears streamed from his eyes as he gazed heavenward and smiled, his shoulders shaking with sobs.

The suspense and intensity of those terrifying sleepless hours which stretched into days just couldn't be recreated in a two-hour film. However, filmmakers for "Everybody's Baby" announced that they intended to show: "A little faith, a little courage and a little girl who brought America together." They accomplished that mission, but so did many other local television stations at the time. It was the other workers who overcame every obstacle with "can do, will do," which stirred the spirit in most Midlanders, and this was also their story.

After all the bad press about disputes over the movie rights to Jessica's story, it was nice to see a film which tried to remain true to the incident. It was even better being reminded of 58½ hours when every Midlander was united in spirit. But most of us didn't need to be reminded; we have our memories.

JESSICA

But Midlander Lorretta Field disagreed. "Anyone who knows Chief Roberts, knows he wouldn't act like that," she said.

While Ms. Field thought the overall product was done well, she said she was sorry the film crews didn't take the time to show other sides of the city, including the downtown area.

"Maybe I'm just prejudice, but I thought they could have shown more...at least they didn't depict Texans as a bunch of idiots," she said.

Midlander Steve Horn said he didn't see the entire movie. "Just parts of it...but from what I saw, I thought it stuck pretty close to what went on," he said.

Of course, not everyone interviewed had their sets tuned in for the Jessica finale. Some either weren't in town or had other things going on, like Stan Gibbs. "No, I didn't watch it. I went to church," he said.

Still others, like Mayra Wiggins, attached some sentimental feelings.

"My husband was among the rescue workers," she said. "It (the film) didn't show much of Midland, but it was well done for two hours."

John Philbeck was a little more philosophical. "I think the fact that it showed how everyone pulled together was positive for Midland...this is what this city really is all about."

Bush encourages demonstrators to 'stand up for what you believe'

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush is encouraging demonstrators in China to "stand up for what you believe" and urging the Communist authorities to exercise restraint, saying he hopes pro-democracy protests do not result in bloodshed.

"I would urge the government to be as forthcoming as possible in order to see more democratization and to see a peaceful resolution of this matter," Bush said Sunday.

"We do support freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press and clearly we support democracy," the president said at a news conference in Boston with French President Francois Mitterrand.

The two leaders received honorary degrees and delivered commencement remarks at Boston University. Afterward, Bush returned to the White House and Mitterrand flew to Paris.

Bush's comments came as pro-democracy students occupied Tiananmen Square in Beijing in violation of martial law for a third day. Despite repeated rumors of an imminent military crackdown, the Chinese army had not moved to evict the protesters.

Bush, who served as U.S. envoy to China in 1974-1975, said, "I think this perhaps is a time for caution because we aspire to see the Chinese people have democracy."

He said he did not want to "exhort in a way that is going to stir up a military confrontation." Bush said it would not be appropriate for the leader of the United States to tell the demonstrators "exactly what their course of action should be."

However, he said he hoped the students would follow a peaceful course and "continue to fight for what you believe in, stand up for what you believe in — but beyond that I cannot go."

Former Secretary of State Heny A. Kissinger and other U.S. experts on Sunday endorsed the moderate course pursued by the Bush administration.

Emphasizing hopes for avoiding bloodshed, Bush said, "We revere the model of Martin Luther King in this country for his peaceful protest and so I might suggest a familiarization with that for the people in China."

King, an apostle of nonviolence, led the civil rights movement in the United States in the 1950s and 1960s. He was assassinated in 1968 in Memphis where he was lending support to a garbage workers' strike.

"I don't want to be gratuitous in giving advice," Bush said, "but I would encourage restraint. I do not want to see bloodshed."

He said it would be "sound advice" for students and workers to adopt "peaceful means of effecting change."

"I think that the president is saying just about all that can be said," Kissinger said on the ABC-TV program "This Week with David Brinkley."

"We do not want to incite to riot, partly because the consequences are unforeseeable in human terms, but also partly in terms of hardheaded American foreign interest," said Kissinger, stressing that anarchy in China would be bad for America.

"From a foreign policy point of view, we Americans ought to consider that if China leaves the game for a while because of domestic turmoil, it increases Soviet freedom of maneuver to a remarkable extent," he said.

Winston Lord, U.S. ambassador to Beijing in the Reagan administration, said Bush administration officials were "appealing to the authorities for restraint, and...they have made clear they are on the side of the students and political reforms." He spoke on the NBC-TV program "Meet the Press."

During his news conference with Mitterand, Bush also expressed optimism that a rift within NATO over short-range European missiles could be bridged before next week's summit of alliance leaders.

West Germany wants negotiations with the Soviet Union to reduce short-range nuclear weapons in the European theater, a step the United States opposes.

DPS

Kuhnle and Zerda had made a DWI traffic arrest and had requested routine registration information, then had requested a wrecker, Cox said.

"But when one of the dispatchers called them back with the registration information, they did not answer their radio."

The tractor-trailer rig, traveling westbound on U.S. 90, had veered off the road and struck the patrol car from behind. Kuhnle and Zerda, both standing between their vehicle and the suspect's car, were hit and died instantly, said Cox.

The force of the impact threw Kuhnle's body about 500 feet. The officers' car, which had been legally parked on the highway's improved shoulder, was destroyed, he said.

But the suspect, who had been placed in the car in a drunken driving investigation, sustained only minor injuries. Cox said he was treated and released from Wilford Hall Air Force Hospital for cuts and bruises.

Cox said no charges were filed against the suspect because "the only two witnesses who could place him behind the wheel were dead."

The truck driver, Ralph Walter Mueller, 51, of Tucumcari, N.M., was uninjured in the accident. He remains in Bexar County Jail, charged with two counts of involuntary manslaughter, Cox said.

Officers took a blood sample from the man, which was scheduled to be analyzed for alcohol content.

Cox said that it was ironic that alcohol could be a factor in both arrests.

He said that another state trooper came upon the accident and notified dispatchers.

"The sergeant had noted on his report a time of 2:40 a.m.," he said. "Between then and 2:56 a.m., an 18-wheeler westbound on 90 struck the DPS patrol car from behind. The two officers were standing outside their vehicle between their patrol car and the violator's car when the impact occurred.

"A DWI arrest started this and it is possible that DWI led to the tragic conclusion."

Kuhnle, who has been with the DPS nearly 11 years, was married and the father of three children.

Zerda, a DPS employee for nearly five years, was married and had one child.

Cox said the troopers are the first to be killed in the line of duty since Jan. 22, 1987, when a Texas ranger was killed while rescuing a small child who had been kidnapped in Llano County.

CHINA

Liu Binyan, a well-known Chinese reporter, claimed several Chinese provinces and eight government ministries, including the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, are refusing to support Li's government. Liu made his remarks in Missoula, Mont., to a group of Chinese students. His claims could not be independently confirmed.

The Communist government has not announced any resignations as a result of the crisis, although sources have reported that party head Zhao Ziyang offered to resign. The reform-minded Zhao has expressed clear sympathy with the students' aims.

Television news today quoted one military officer deployed outside the city as saying he had been ordered to turn back his convoy, "but we can't move," apparently because of swarms of people around it.

"We've got no food, no water, no blankets. But what we can't swallow is the wrongly placed blame" of creating the confrontation, the officer said.

The TV film showed a young boy giving water to a smiling soldier armed with an AK-47 rifle while hundreds of people surrounded the military vehicles.

On the square, the country's symbolic center of power, many students slept after a tense night of waiting for a military attack.

Others sang and danced, while some helped truck away garbage that had accumulated since the students began occupying the square May 13.

The students are demanding a dialogue with the government and democratic reforms including a free press and an end to official corruption.

During Mikhail S. Gorbachev's visit last week, more than a million people flooded the city center for two days in support of student hunger-strikers in the square. The weeklong hunger strike ended Saturday.

Students from outside Beijing continued to arrive at the square this morning to the cheers of the encamped protesters.

STEEL

A full inventory of steel has already been delivered to the new plant, according to plant manager George Thomas. The plant is expected to be fully operational within 30 to 45 days, when all the equipment has been installed.

One of the first projects the new Midland steel facility will be involved in will be a 37-story apartment complex in Atlanta. The plant is also expected to be involved in a $100 million contract to build a magnetic people-mover in Las Vegas, Nev.

Hirschfeld, a graduate of Texas Tech University, said a lot of space and time would be needed to fabricate the steel for the project which was developed from a German prototype and will be the first of its kind in the United States.

"I would expect the new Midland plant will be involved in some of the high tolerance switching apparatus for this project," said Hirschfeld.

While many of the contracts involving Hirschfeld Steel in Midland will be out-of-state, the owner of the company said about half of the contracts would come from the Permian Basin area. "We are looking for a surge in building in the Midland area," he said.

Hirschfeld Steel supplied all the steel in the construction of Clay-Desta Plaza and is currently providing steel for the Center for Energy and Economic Diversification.

The San Angelo company, which was founded in 1945 as Hirschfeld Welding, is involved in supplying fabricated steel for commercial buildings, industrial projects and bridges throughout Texas and neighboring states. Current contracts include hospitals in Los Angeles, Oxnard, Calif., and Dayton, Ohio.

Other facilities operated in Texas include a warehouse at Fort Stockton which sells steel to the Big Bend area, a sales and estimating office in Dallas, a sales office in Houston, and a fabricating facility in Abilene, which was also obtained in the purchase of Central Texas Iron Works.

50 years ago, World's Fair brought hope, technology

By JERRY SCHWARTZ

NEW YORK (AP) — In many a dresser drawer across the country, amid the faded snapshots and other keepsakes, there rests a plastic pickle, a souvenir of a splendiferous tomorrow that came and went.

Fifty years ago, in the interlude between the Great Depression and World War II, the pickle's owner had gone to Flushing, Queens to discover a sleek and glittering future had set up camp on 1,216 acres of reclaimed ash heap.

The visitor to the 1939 New York World's Fair came away with visions of televisions and superhighways, of nylon stockings and automatic milking machines, of man-made lightning and aerated bread — all this and a pickle pin, one of six million such souvenirs distributed at the H.J. Heinz pavilion.

They saw wonders like the Walker-Gordon Rotolactor, a revolving platform on which five cows were showered, dried with sterile towels and mechanically milked. They watched the 7-foot-tall Westinghouse robot, Elektro, and his "moto-dog," Sparko. They toured 200 buildings — each of them spectacular — 175 sculptures and 105 murals.

"Everything was unfamiliar — they were dazzled by what the future could be," says Barbara Cohen, author with Steven Heller and Seymour Chwast of "Trylon and Perisphere: The 1939 New York World's Fair."

That was the aim of the fair's organizers — that, and to bring tourist dollars to New York City. The city's business elite had been impressed by the 1933 Century of Progress fair in Chicago. They proposed a fair to mark the 150th anniversary of George Washington's inauguration in New York.

Grover A. Whelan, former police commissioner, head of a distillery and the bow-tied barker-boss of the 1939 World's Fair, said at the time: "By giving a clear and orderly interpretation of our own age, the fair will project the average man into the World of Tomorrow."

The symbols of the fair were two abstract shapes, at once classical and modernistic — the Trylon, a 610-foot spike, and the globular Perisphere, a theater twice the size of Radio City Music Hall which was home to Democracity, a multimedia depiction of the city of the future.

Radio commentator H.V. Kaltenborn narrated the six-minute show: "As day fades into night, each man seeks a home, for here are children, comfort, neighbors, recreation — the good life of a well-planned city."

The same theme was struck at the fair's most popular exhibit, General Motors' Futurama, where 552 moving chairs carried fairgoers past a diorama depicting the United States, circa 1960 — a place where seven-lane, radio-controlled highways directed teardrop-shaped cars at 100 mph.

In the future, the narrator said, cars would be air-conditioned. He was right. He said they would cost as little as $200. He was wrong.

"The land is much greener than it was in 1939...Men love their fields and gardens better and more wisely," Life magazine wrote of Futurama.

Spectators often waited in line two hours to see Futurama. But there was so much to do, and so little time!

They ran to the AT&T building to see the VODER, a speech synthesizer, and to enter the contest for a free long-distance call. They ran to the Dairy World of Tomorrow to meet Elsie the Cow. They ran to the DuPont exhibit to witness the wonders of nylon, Lucite and cellophane, and to RCA to see the first regular broadcasts of television.

AP Laserphoto

The 1939 World's Fair held in Flushing Meadows, N.Y., shown in this aerial view, covered more than 1,200 acres.

The home of tomorrow was highlighted at General Electric, which offered a kitchen with appliances that talked; at Westinghouse, which pitted "Mrs. Drudge," who did dishes the old-fashioned way, against "Mrs. Modern," who used a dishwasher; at Tomorrow Town, a collection of 15 model homes.

The fair was not entirely commercial — 60 nations opened pavilions in Flushing Meadows, including the Soviet Union — but there is no doubt that the World of Tomorrow was a world of salesmanship.

Writer E.B. White hoped to find "the field of honor" at the fair, but found instead that "it was merely Heinz jousting with Beech-Nut — the same old contest on a somewhat larger field, with accommodations for more spectators, and somewhat better facilities all round."

Others found fault with the fair's crowd-pleasing amusement zone, which featured a Parachute Jump and Billy Rose's Aquacade, as well as more tawdry diversions like sideshows and bare-breasted women — offered, of course, as educational exhibits on the lifestyles of Amazons.

The amusements took precedence in 1940, when it became clear that the fair was in trouble. With the advent of World War II, the Soviet pavilion and others closed. The Trylon and Perisphere were in bad repair, temporary structures that were not designed to withstand the weather.

More importantly, the fair was losing money. Most critics argued that the 75-cent admission fee was too high. A full day at the fair for two people, including meals, cost about $7 — a high tariff for the end of the Depression.

Man asks city for UFO landing pad

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — A councilman urged the city to construct a UFO landing pad to welcome extraterrestials. His colleagues quickly brought him down to Earth.

George Darden has a reputation for filing unusual bills, including one last year that would have outlawed sex in Metro Courthouse.

On Tuesday night, Darden asked his colleagues to show a little earthly hospitality to visitors from outer space.

"Many people have come to me expressing the fact that they are seeing these unidentified flying objects," he told the council's rules committee.

The committee unanimously defeated the resolution. The council later defeated it 27-1, with Darden the only supporter.

"You might live to regret this day," he told the council, chiding members for not taking his proposal seriously.

Councilman Tom Sharp suggested amending the bill to allow the landing pad be constructed only in Darden's district.

Councilman Charles French proposed giving UFOs access to the airport.

And Mayor Bill Boner said earlier that if the resolution passed, he would see if aliens would support a contract on a leaseback basis, although the currency exchange would be a dilemma.

Darden told reporters later he would build the landing pad himself.

Alonzo "Slick" Smith stands behind the counter of his barbecue restaurant in Muskogee, Okla. He and others there say Merle Haggard's song about the city is untrue but he is still proud of his town.

Muskogee, Okla., residents say Merle Haggard song not accurate

JULES LOH

MUSKOGEE, Okla. (AP) — According to Police Chief Gary Sturm, most of the robbings and thievings and shootings in this town, as in towns large and small across America, are accountable to the drug trade.

Whoa now, chief. Haven't you heard the song?

Anyone over 35 who owns a radio and has an ear for country music has to believe that if there is one drug-free zone anywhere in the land it has to be Muskogee, Okla.

Twenty years ago — has it been that long? — Merle Haggard, the songwriter and guitar picker, put Muskogee on the map as a place where true Americans lived and had their red, white and blue values well in hand.

Muskogee, he sang, during that era of protest, was where nobody smoked marijuana, burned draft cards or wore hippie sandals. Instead they waved Old Glory, pitched woo and wore manly leather boots.

Sing along with ol' Merle:

"I'm proud to be an Okie from Muskogee,

"A place where even squares can have a ball..."

What went wrong, chief?

"Well, the song didn't describe Muskogee then or now," Carl Sturm was saying the other day. Sturm and has lived here all his life. He was just out of high school when the song was sweeping the charts and making everybody in town a bit dizzy.

Sturm is indeed proud of his hometown and believes its people are as true-blue as any Americans.

But he shakes his head at the irony that Muskogee, of all places, would be singled out for the sake of a clever rhyme as the sort of town that might inspire a Norman Rockwell.

"Of course people smoked marijuana in Muskogee," he says.

"I didn't, but I knew you could buy it in bars and nightclubs around town. It was sold in matchboxes, $5 a box I believe. You could also get amphetamines and barbiturates.

"But marijuana wasn't grown around here. All that stuff was imported.

"I think Merle Haggard understood that Oklahoma has always been slow about picking up on trends from the East and West coasts. Even something as innocent as the price of gasoline. When gas went up to $1.25 in L.A. it was still 80-cents in Muskogee. When it got to $1.25 in Muskogee it was back to 80-cents in L.A.

"Today they've gotten around to growing some of the best marijuana in the United States near here — now that cocaine is big everywhere else.

"We busted some guys recently with some crack that the Los Angeles police department identified as coming from there. So now we have crack here in Muskogee, and it has become a major problem. We're catching guys setting up laboratories out in the backwoods."

"Gary's right," says Jim East, a boyhood friend of the police chief. "What we resented was being pictured as behind the times, although we were. We hated that song."

Jim East graduated in 1972, two years after the town fathers, perhaps sensing a national trend, finally merged the all-black Manual High School with the all-white Central High School into one, Muskogee High School. Jim East now is a reporter in Tulsa.

"Back then," he says, "the term Okie was a put-down, like hick or redneck. Merle Haggard changed that, I'll say that for him.

"But at the time, people taunted us with the song. I was on the Muskogee High wrestling team. I remember one out-of-town match that wound up in a fistfight when the other guys called us Okies from Muskogee. Sang it at us.

"When they put the damn song on the cafeteria jukebox we yanked the cord and shoved the box down a flight of stairs. When we heard that Merle Haggard was coming to Muskogee for a performance, we plotted to hide in the bed of a pickup and waylay him on Highway 69. We didn't, but I didn't go to the performance, either.

"We were prouder of Muskogee being the one-time stomping ground of Ma Barker and Pretty Boy Floyd and other bad people. That was its real heritage."

After 20 years, any bitterness over the song seems to have mellowed.

Now Muskogeeans traveling out of the state smile benignly when a desk clerk says, "Oh, a real Okie from Muskogee," being original.

"I used to tell people I was from Tulsa," says Jim East.

Now Muskogeeans regard The Song as something best forgotten from long ago, like a broken Indian treaty. It was, after all, just another episode in the life of a town that doesn't require a catchy country parody to define its personality and style.

Was Muskogee really the stomping ground of desperadoes?

"Yes it was," says Chief Sturm, "and take a look at this."

He took from a file cabinet a copy of "Men" magazine with a feature titled "Muskogee: Sin Mill of the Southwest." The story detailed wide—open gambling, bootlegging and prostitution.

The edition was dated 1953. That would have been four years after the feds put away Muskogee Sheriff Eddie Briggs, known as the kingpin of Muskogee's bootleggers, and two years after Leslie Scott was elected constable despite three arrests for running gambling operations.

Even during the '60s, Muskogeeans didn't seem to have much truck with reformers. In 1964 somebody dynamited Police Chief Earl Newton's car. In 1968 somebody shot up Police Chief George Spence's home. He quit and his successor was chased out of town along with the city manager and a reform-minded city councilman, whose music store was bombed. That was the real Muskogee.

"Here's another keepsake," Sturm says, fetching a device with dice enclosed in a plastic bubble. "It's called a jiggler. Hundreds of them were made in a garage here in Muskogee. We raided one place that had a 300-pound magnet under the dice table. Jigglers made sure nobody could switch the dice or even touch them.

"There's no more regular backroom gambling now, though. Too risky.

"Our criminals are more inept, too. Not long ago a couple of guys lay in wait for a big winner in a poker game, shot him, and got away with about 20 bucks. They reached in the wrong pocket. He had several thousand in the one they didn't turn inside out.

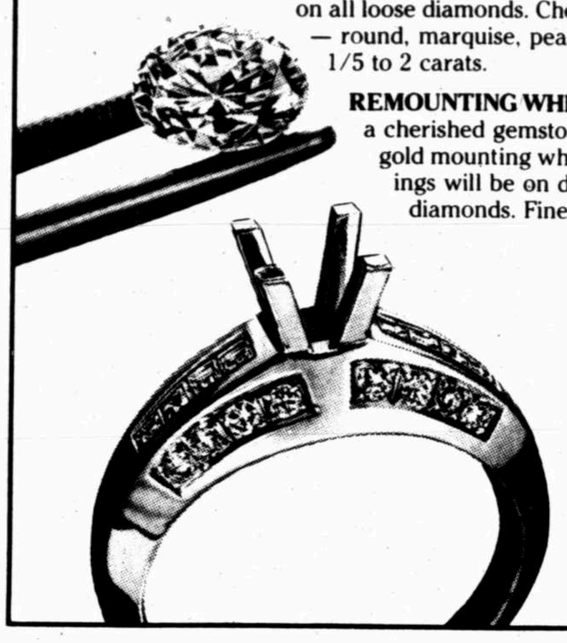

"As for prostitution, we closed down our last brothel last year. It was run by an old classmate of mine, John Lyman — a massage parlor in the Bambi Motel.

Six Americans, three Peruvians killed in crash of small plane

LIMA, Peru (AP) — A small U.S. plane used in Peru's anti-drug effort crashed in the Andes mountains, killing the six Americans and three Peruvians aboard, officials said Sunday.

U.S. Embassy spokesman Charles Loveridge said the plane went down Saturday afternoon, after it had left the jungle town of Tingo Maria. He said the wreckage was spotted Sunday morning.

Loveridge refused to provide the names of the passengers. But he said the dead Americans included a DEA agent, two helicopter pilots, the plane's pilot, a mechanic and a security officer from the embassy.

In Washington, Maurice Hill, a DEA public information officer, identified the dead DEA agent as Rick Finley, 36, of Fort Knox, Ky.

Interior Ministry spokesman Fernando Yovera said all nine on the single-engine plane died. He said the three Peruvians were a police captain, the 8-year-old son of a police commander and the chief of the U.S.-funded coca eradication program.

Yovera said the U.S. plane was flown by an American contract pilot, and Hill said it was owned by the U.S. State Department's International Narcotics Matters Bureau.

Yovera said there was no indication of what had caused the crash, but he discounted sabotage because of strict security controls.

American personnel in two Peruvian military helicopters from Lima were recovering the bodies Sunday, Yovera said. The effort had been suspended Sunday night until the morning, Loveridge said.

Yovera said the plane crashed in a remote area on the arid western slopes of the Andes, 65 miles northeast of Lima.

AP

Loveridge said rescue teams aboard helicopters had spotted the plane's wreckage and burned bodies scattered nearby. He said the plane was destroyed when it apparently slammed into a mountainside 15,000 feet above sea level and the largest piece visible from the air was the engine.

Loveridge said the last contact with the plane was when the aircraft passed over Huanuco, 185 miles northeast of Lima.

Tingo Maria is 240 miles northeast of the capital in the lush Upper Huallaga river valley, a jungle-cloaked region on the eastern slopes of the Andes.

The valley is the world's greatest source of coca leaf, the raw material for cocaine. The U.S. government has assigned several dozen agents to work with Peruvian anti-drug police in campaigns against drug traffickers in the violent region.

In addition to the plane, the U.S. government has supplied nine helicopters to Peru for the anti-drug fight.

Number of Britons in Moscow to be cut

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union said today it will cut sharply the number of British employees in Moscow, apparently in retaliation for the expulsions from Britain of 11 Soviets accused of espionage.

Britain said on Sunday that it secretly ordered the expulsion of eight Soviet diplomats and three journalists on Friday. On Saturday, the Soviet Union retaliated with an identical set of expulsions of Britons.

The Soviets took the diplomatic rift a step further today.

Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady I. Gerasmiov told a news conference that the number of Britons accredited in Moscow and the number of Soviets working for Britons would be reduced from 375 to 205.

The new limit for British employees would be equal to the number of Soviets now permitted to work in Britain.

The British Embassy had no immediate comment on Gerasimov's statement.

Gerasimov did not say how long the reductions would take, or who exactly they would affect.

In London today, the Soviet Embassy said Britain provoked the dispute with its expulsions on Friday.

Embassy Counselor Lev Parshin called the expulsion order "deplorable, unfriendly and provocative" and said it "remains to be seen" how the dispute will affect Anglo-Soviet relations.

He denied that the expelled Soviets had done anything wrong.

Britain on Sunday said its expulsions were legitimate, though it did not give details, and that the Soviet response was unjustified. Independent Television News radio said the Soviets had been caught spying on military installations.

Both countries expelled eight diplomats and three journalists and each was was given 14 days to leave.

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher told the British Broadcasting Corp. she was disappointed Britain had to expel the Soviets, but "we gave them the chance and they have not taken it and they have revealed their true nature."

She said Britain had hoped a new era was being ushered into the Soviet Union by President Mikhail Gorbachev, but "many things are still the same."

The rift came at a time of improved relations between the nations. The two leaders enjoy a good personal relationship, and Gorbachev received a warm greeting when he visited London in early May.

One of the expelled journalists, Sunday Times correspondent Angus Roxburgh, denied spying and said he was angry with London and Moscow over "being caught up in the latest diplomatic chess game."

"Why do the British have such a predilection for expelling Soviet spies? Presumably there are as many Russians engaged in 'impermissible activities' in West Germany, France or the U.S., yet expulsions from those countries are much rarer," he wrote in The Times today.

The other journalists expelled on Saturday, Jeremy Harris of the British Broadcasting Corp. and Ian Glover-James of Independent Television News, also denied improper conduct.

"I'm not guilty of any spying, lawbreaking or any impermissible activity," he said.

BBC's deputy director-general, John Birt, said the BBC would "vigorously resist" Harris' expulsion.

The British Foreign Office accused the Soviets of "incompatible activities," diplomatic parlance for espionage.

Foreign Minister Sir Geoffrey Howe called Britain's action "a measured action in respect of established misbehavior." Britain had "incontrovertible evidence" of wrongdoing by the expelled Soviets, he said.

Asked why the British government kept its expulsions quiet, the Foreign Office spokesman said, "We look at these on a case-by-case basis and in this case we decided not to initiate publicity."

The opposition Labor Party said Mrs. Thatcher's Conservative government had kept a "bizarre and inexplicable silence."

"The British public deserve a lot more information before they will accept that this is justified," said party spokesman George Robertson.

The diplomatic row was the biggest between the two countries since 1985, when both expelled 31 diplomats, journalists and other representatives. In 1971, Britain expelled 105 Soviets.

Kennedy attends Mass at Mexico City shrine

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy attended Mass in Mexico's holiest shrine and was mobbed by so many well-wishers afterward it took 20 minutes for him to reach his car.

Kennedy, a Roman Catholic, and family members traveling with him attended Mass at the Basilica of the Virgin of Guadalupe on Sunday.

Hundreds of people inside and outside the church surrounded the Massachusetts Democrat after the service to shake hands as security agents pushed some people away.

After church, Kennedy left for the southern city of Oaxaca, where he toured agricultural areas and met with farmers.

In the afternoon he returned to Mexico City to meet with Mexican human rights activist Rosario Ibarra Piedra, an unsuccessful candidate for the Revolutionary Workers Party in the 1988 presidential election.

The meeting was closed to reporters. However, local news reports said the pair discussed Mexico's $107.4 billion debt, human rights and Mexico's current labor problems.

On Saturday, the first day of Kennedy's four-day Mexico tour, the senator met with Mexico's attorney general and praised Mexican efforts to fight drug trafficking.

"Clearly we in the United States have to be willing to deal with the demand side of the drug problem. A lot more needs to be done," Kennedy told reporters after meeting with Attorney General Enrique Alvarez del Castillo.

Then he left to tour housing projects and medical centers with Mexico City Mayor Manuel Camacho Solis. Earlier, he placed a floral wreath at a monument in Chapultepec Park.

Kennedy also met with Special Olympics participants and encouraged support of programs to help the handicapped.

The senator is scheduled to lunch with President Carlos Salinas de Gortari today and is to return to the United States on Tuesday.

He is meeting with various leaders of Mexican opposition political parties and business leaders.

"Clearly we in the United States have to be willing to deal with the demand side of the drug problem. A lot more needs to be done."

Korean students call for expulsion of U.S. troops

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Radical students held campus protests and burned U.S. flags today to demand the expulsion of American troops from South Korea, and protesters armed with iron bars attacked police headquarters.

Radical student groups organized protests at 25 campuses around the nation, launching a week of anti-American protests to demand an end to Seoul's alliance with Washington. Students burned U.S. flags in Seoul and put up posters denouncing the United States.

"Drive out the Yankees," students chanted at the peaceful protests. Turnout was small with just a few hundred students taking part at several campuses in Seoul.

Police arrested 18 students armed with iron bars and firebombs who briefly occupied an office at National Police Headquarters in Seoul, officials said. The students smashed windows and tossed leaflets from the second-story office, but did not use the weapons, they said.

"Disband the torture and murder machine," students chanted before being overpowered by riot police.

Security was stepped up at U.S. diplomatic and military facilities with riot police standing guard. Nine busloads of riot police guarded the U.S. embassy in the center of Seoul.

Student groups called for a week of protests in Seoul and other cities to demand the withdrawal of the 43,000 U.S. troops based in South Korea under a mutual defense treaty. Radical leaders claim the United States helps prop up authoritarian rule in South Korea.

Other radical demands include an end to U.S. trade pressure to open South Korean markets to American imports. The radicals also want Washington to apologize for the bloody suppression of a 1980 uprising in the southern city of Kwangju.

"To win the true liberation of the glorious masses, let us put an end to the Roh Tae-woo regime and drive out the United States from this land forever," a student leader told a rally at Yonsei University in Seoul.

The uprising was put down by South Korean troops with the deaths of at least 192 people, but radical groups claim the United States masterminded the operation.

Dissidents and radical students are calling for the overthrow of President Roh Tae-woo's government. But the radicals lack significant public support due to their violent tactics and extreme views.

The dissidents contend the United States props up the Roh government to enforce its control over South Korea. Radical students contend U.S. troops are blocking reunification with communist North Korea.

South Korean and U.S. officials say American forces are needed to ensure the south's defense against the north. U.S. troops have been based in the south since north invaded in 1950.

U.S. officials have said American forces will remain in South Korea as long as they are wanted by the Seoul government and the South Korean people.

Roh, a former army general, took office in February, 1988 after winning presidential elections. The government has helped introduced broad democratic reforms.

Compromise time on minimum wage

The minimum wage bill approved by the House in line with a House-Senate conference agreement, and due for final Senate passage, is a political instrument unlikely to achieve enactment as law. It is almost certain to be vetoed by President Bush, and its backers do not have the votes to override. But the seeming futility of this exercise does not dismay legislators ostensibly striving to improve the lot of low-paid workers. These members of Congress are intent most immediately on scoring political points against Bush. First things first.

The bill destined for the president's desk would raise the national minimum from $3.35 to $4.55 an hour by October 1991, and permit a subminimum training wage (85 percent of the minimum) for the first 60 days of employment. Bush has promised to veto any minimum over $4.25 an hour (the present floor in California), and he would allow employers to pay the training wage to newly hired workers for six months. The House vote on final passage was 247 to 172, well short of the 289 needed to overcome the expected presidential veto.

Upgrading of the federal minimum wage is needed because it has not been adjusted for inflation since 1981. Some underpaid workers are falling woefully behind and high-wage areas are undercut competitively by lower payroll costs elsewhere in the country. Argument has swirled over how much to raise the minimum, and how fast, and whether a lower training rate is justified to open opportunities for the inexperienced. Republicans say the $4.55 rate backed by Democratic congressional majorities would eliminate 670,000 jobs across the country. No doubt higher minimums cause some employers to hold down hiring and job creation.

The differences of degree between Democratic and Republican thinking on the issue should have been compromised by now. That would have spared us the empty posturing and emissions of political piety that only will cloud a veto and override attempt. Afterwards, Congress and the president may at last come together on a minimum-wage updating that actually can become law and help workers at the low end of the pay spectrum to the extent it does not eliminate jobs. If that is not the final result, we will have to be satisfied with a political dialogue leading no place.

JACK ANDERSON

Beef imported by U.S. often not tested

WASHINGTON — Shoppers in supermarket produce sections have to think twice before buying fruit that may be tainted with unwanted chemicals.

Jack Anderson

Now federal auditors have uncovered a far more widespread danger in the meat department.

The top five importers of meat to the United States — Argentina, Australia, Canada, Denmark and New Zealand — don't always test their beef and pork for drugs banned in the United States. Some of the drugs have been outlawed for health reasons.

The Agriculture Department compounds the danger by using spotty inspection methods when the meat arrives in the United States. Customs Service records show that 163 million pounds of meat were imported into the United States in 1987 without the knowledge of the USDA's Food Safety Inspection Service.

Whose fault is it? The USDA counts on the Customs Service to tell it when foreign meat arrives, but that doesn't always happen. In some ports, Customs officials accept the promise that the importer will voluntarily submit the meat to USDA inspection. Fat chance if the importer has something to hide.

Our associate Stewart Harris has obtained an audit from the files of the USDA inspector general, which reveals there is no guarantee that the USDA always knows when imported meats enter the country.

Lester Crawford, director of the Food Safety Inspection Service, blames the Customs Service. But the auditors blame Crawford's agency. His agency is supposed to ensure that imported meats can pass the same tests applied to home-grown meats. If Crawford and the Customs Service have a failure to communicate, it is Crawford's responsibility to bridge the gap.

But while the two agencies bicker about who is to blame, millions of pounds of imported meat has sailed through unchecked. The USDA inspector general also faults Crawford's agency for refusing to trace where that meat has gone.

Sources tell us that Crawford was apoplectic when he first heard the results of the critical audit.

The news from the foreign suppliers is not reassuring. The inspector general found that testing of meat from the five top foreign suppliers does not always meet USDA standards. More than 85 percent of the 2.6 billion pounds of meat imported by the United States in 1987 came from those five countries.

At the time of the investigation, Argentina and Denmark didn't even test the cooked meat they sent to the United States to determine that it wasn't mixed with horse meat, rancid scraps or inedible parts such as testicles. Denmark has since begun testing to verify the species of animal and Argentina will soon begin species testing too.

Argentina did little or no testing for two dangerous drugs — albendazole and ivermectin. When Argentina did tests, the meat was not selected by accepted random sampling methods.

Denmark did not test for chloramphenicol, which is banned in the United States, or for drugs that control parasites. Danish authorities said there was no need for the tests because chloramphenicol is illegal there and anti-parasitics are under strict control.

Federal investigators found little testing was done for 149 drugs banned from use in the United States, but widely used in the five exporting countries. Most of the drugs are fed to cattle and swine only intermittently, but the auditors said the USDA should insist on the tests anyway.

Australia, Denmark, Argentina and New Zealand all treat turkeys with dimetridazole, a drug banned in the United States. But little or no testing is done for that drug on meat sent to American consumers.

The USDA has asked for additional testing for some drugs, but will let other procedures slide. According to an official FSIS response to the audit, those foreign test methods may not be the same as tests used in the United States, but they achieve the same results.

A MESSAGE TO MOSLEMS — Intelligence sources tell us that the Ayatollah Khomeini was sending a warning to Moslem writers in Iran when he pronounced a death sentence on British writer Salman Rushdie. Khomeini wanted to intimidate Moslem writers just in case they were tempted to criticize his rule. The word spread through the Moslem literary world that if Khomeini could threaten a foreigner, he would not hesitate to retaliate against a writer closer to home. The effect has been to give him unquestioned influence over all that is written and read in his country. Our sources say that is what Khomeini had in mind all along.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, recently came to the defense of House Speaker Jim Wright with a tasteless remark. "We're gonna win this," he said. "We're gonna circle the wagons and shoot the damn Indians." Maybe the word hasn't reached Texas yet, but that war is over. We don't shoot Indians anymore, nor do civilized people draw on insulting metaphors, even in the heat of rhetorical attack.

Peace spadework

Despite assurances of normalized relations, the Sino-Soviet summit has emphasized the serious differences between China and the Soviet Union over Cambodia. Although neither of the communist giants wants to prolong the expensive proxy war that has ravaged Cambodia for the last 10 years, each is finding much more difficulty in disengaging than in original involvement.

China is not yet ready to accept that its old foe, Vietnam, backed by the Soviet Union, is willing to relinquish all influence in Cambodia. The Soviet Union, in common with the United States and most other nations, fears a grab for power by the genocidal Khmer Rouge as the occupying Vietnamese army accelerates its unilateral withdrawal. The Cambodian question now vexes Sino-Soviet relations perhaps more than any other.

Moscow and Beijing agree on the need for an independent, neutral, and non-aligned government to take over Cambodia after the Vietnamese pullout. But their dissent stems from the form the new government should take. The People's Revolutionary Party of Kampuchea, which now holds power with Vietnamese and Soviet backing, is being challenged by the Khmer Rouge, which still has strong Chinese support.

Moscow supported Vietnam's invasion of Cambodia in 1978, and gave military and economic assistance to make continued occupation possible. China armed and supplied the opposing Khmer Rouge guerrillas but later helped to forge the rebel coalition headed by Prince Norodom Sihanouk after universal condemnation of the Khmer Rouge. As many as 1 million innocent civilians were slaughtered in a Khmer Rouge bloodbath between 1975 and 1979.

Although the fate of Cambodia will ultimately hinge on decisions taken in Moscow and Beijing, there is encouraging evidence that spadework for a peaceful transfer of power is now being undertaken by Cambodians themselves. In a remarkable turnabout, Premier Hun Sen and Prince Sihanouk, implacable enemies for two decades, are negotiating the formation of a non-communist, multi-party democracy far different from past Cambodian governments.

Even more remarkable, the Khmer Rouge has dropped demands for the formation of a combined Cambodian army with each of the four factions contributing 10,000 men. The rebel group now also favors a liberal democratic constitution, and is generally acting in what Prince Sihanouk calls a "more reasonable, more flexible" manner. Further talks between the four Cambodian parties will be held in Paris during July.

Despite the Khmer Rouge's apparent change of attitude, the continuing challenge for the United States and the West will be to prevent their seizing power unilaterally. Moreover, as Vietnamese troops adhere to a Sept. 30 withdrawal deadline, China must honor its earlier promise to withhold aid to the Khmer Rouge's well-armed 30,000-strong army.

The peaceful transference of power in Cambodia and the beneficial effect that would have on Sino-Soviet relationships depends largely on keeping the despised Khmer Rouge under tight control.

— The San Diego Union

CHARLEY REESE

U.S. shouldn't meddle in affairs of others

Manuel Noriega is a dictator, a crook, and a drug dealer. He is also one thing you and I are not. He is a Panamanian.

Charley Reese

I think that after 44 years of nearly 95 percent failure in meddling in the internal affairs of other countries, it's time for us Americans to demand that our government drastically change its foreign policy and live up to the ideals of our Republic.

A good beginning would be to abolish the Central Intelligence Agency. We need to collect intelligence information only in those countries that are our enemies, and the military and National Security Agency are adequate for that purpose.

We should also abolish the National Endowment for Democracy, which is another agency set up to meddle in the internal affairs of other countries.

You see, it's time that we began to act in a rational manner in setting national goals, on which, of course, our domestic and foreign policy should be built.

We need not be against communism — for communism as an idea is as dead as the pharaohs. The last true believers are professors in universities who scarcely know which planet they live on. It's of no importance to us and certainly no threat to us if some small country wishes to wreck its economy by practicing Marxism. Only if they ally themselves militarily with the Soviet Union or China, our two principal likely adversaries, should we act against them.

And in those cases, we should act against them openly, using our military forces. Covert action should not be used.

But short of a military alliance, formal or informal with the Soviet or Chinese empires, we should respect the sovereignty of other nations as, by the way, we pledged to do when we signed the United Nations Charter. More importantly, respecting the sovereignty of other nations was the cornerstone of our early republic's foreign policy.

Why should we send observers to watch the Panamanians steal an election? We wouldn't tolerate them sending observers to watch Chicago politicians steal an election. Suppose the Russians and the Chinese announced that they were going to send observers to monitor our next presidential election? We should not impose on another nation something we ourselves would not tolerate.

If the Panamanian people wish to put up with Noriega, that's their business. It's their country and their government and, thanks to Jimmy Carter and the U.S. Senate, their canal. Let's not use Noriega, who was the same man when the Senate ratified the Canal Treaty, as an excuse to undo our own blunders.

After abolishing the CIA and cleaning out all of the other institutional forms of meddling in other people's affairs, we should simply state to the world that people of other nations will never again have the excuse of blaming us for their problems. We shall have absolutely nothing to do with their internal affairs.

We will base our relationship on strict reciprocity. If they wish to trade, we'll trade. If they wish to hate us, we will kindly withdraw our offensive presence — totally, every American, every dollar, every diplomat, every penny's worth of trade.

We should, of course, eliminate foreign aid, for that, too, is a form of meddling, not to mention a waste of the taxpayer's money. Just as every dollar sent to a local school board is wrapped in federal regulations, so, too, is foreign aid wrapped in the presumption of our government's right to meddle in the recipients' internal affairs.

Let us be what we were intended to be: an open, free republic which minds its own business, offers friendship to any who want it, is willing to kick hell out of anyone who threatens us with force, but otherwise is content to leave other people to mind their own affairs.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

When you pull into Exxon, don't tell jokes!

I've been getting my car serviced down at Ernie's Exxon for years.

Ernie's a nice guy and a terrific mechanic. His assistant, Luper, who took one upside the head with a falling lug wrench several years ago, hasn't been exactly right since, but he may wash the best windshield in the service station game, a lost art.

Lewis Grizzard

Luper leaves no soapy streaks and will bear down and literally dig what's left of the late bugs that met an abrupt end on your windshield.

Ernie's regular customers even got together one year and gave Luper an entire set of new sponges for his birthday.

Luper was so moved he was unable to make an acceptance speech, so Ernie had to speak for him. "I think I know what Luper would say to all of you if he could. He'd say, 'How's that oil?' "

Speaking of oil, I've been giving Ernie and Luper the business since the Exxon oil spill up in Alaska.

I stopped in for a fill-up the other day. Ernie was under the hood of an '87 Chevy in the garage.

"Hey, Ernie," I said. "Look at all this oil that spilled out on your garage floor. What are you trying for, Valdez II?"

Ernie mumbled something as he fiddled with the carburetor.

"Hey, Ernie," I went on. "What's the wife cooking you for dinner tonight? Duck Valvoline?"

I managed to dodge the flying screwdriver just in time.

But I couldn't stop.

"Listen, Ernie," I continued, "you've got to admit Exxon really did it this time. First the skipper of the tanker is off the bridge celebrating Miller time and this lackey runs into Alaska.

"Think about it, Ernie. He ran into a state. An iceberg is one thing, but Alaska's the biggest state in the Union.

"I might understand running into Delaware or Rhode Island, but Alaska?"

"Look," said Ernie, "I had nothing to do with any of that. All I do is sell Exxon products."

"Whaddaya have on special this week — slightly watered-down 40-weight?" I asked.

I was cooking now. Sometimes I really crack myself up.

"Hey, Ernie. Hear about the four sea lions from Prince William Sound who started a singing group?

"No? They're calling themselves the 'Ink Seals.' Get it? 'Ink Seals.'

"How about this one? What did the Exxon skipper say when they told him there was a chance the ocean could catch on fire? He said, 'I'll have a Bud Lite.' "

I could see I was getting nowhere with Ernie, so I turned my attention to Luper, who was digging dead bugs off my windshield.

"I like your hair, Luper," I said.

Luper tends to slick it back a bit.

"What happened to you this morning? You run into a Vitalis tanker?"

"Hey, Luper, if you fell on your head, you'd skid 50 yards. I've seen greasy kid stuff before, but you're wearing the granddaddy. What are you doing, trying out for a part with the Ink Seals?"

With that Luper threw his sponge at me.

"If you want them bugs off your windshield," he said, "you can get them off yourself."

A Vitalis tanker. Some people obviously do not appreciate comedy genius when it hits them right in the face.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, May 22, the 142nd day of 1989. There are 223 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Twenty years ago, on May 22, 1969, as the astronauts aboard Apollo 10 orbited the moon, the spacecraft's lunar module separated from the command module and flew to within nine miles of the lunar surface in a dress rehearsal for the first moon landing the following July.

On this date:

In 1761, the first life insurance policy in the United States was issued, in Philadelphia.

In 1813, composer Richard Wagner was born in Leipzig, Germany.

In 1819, the first steam-propelled vessel to attempt a transatlantic crossing, the Savannah, departed from Savannah, Ga. It arrived in Liverpool on June 20.

In 1856, violence erupted in the chamber of the U.S. Senate as Rep. Preston S. Brooks of South Carolina used a cane to beat Massachusetts Sen. Charles Sumner.

In 1868, the Great Train Robbery took place in Indiana. Seven men held up the crew, detached the locomotive, and made off with $98,000.

In 1900, the modern Associated Press, which succeeded various regional news organizations that bore The AP name, was incorporated in New York as a not-for-profit news cooperative.

Bush hopes NATO dispute will be settled before meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush says the dispute over short-range nuclear weapons that has split NATO could be resolved before next week's 40th-anniversary meeting of the alliance.

"I think great progress has been made" in efforts to reconcile U.S.-West German differences over possible negotiations on the missiles, Bush said Sunday during a joint news conference in Boston with French President Francois Mitterrand.

"I think that we could well have this resolved before the summit," Bush said.

Still, the dispute remains a "vexing question" and "there are strong-willed people from strong countries, and they each have an opinion," he said after he and Mitterrand gave back-to-back commencement speeches at Boston University.

"One way to guarantee there will not be progress is to lock each other in, in public statements," Bush added.

The United States, after first opposing Bonn's suggestions for early U.S.-Soviet talks on reducing short-range missiles in Europe, has sent a counterproposal to West Germany agreeing to accept such talks in principle in the future, according to Secretary of State James A. Baker III.

However, the United States first wants to see the Soviets reduce their conventional-force edge, a position Bush reiterated Sunday.

In his commencement address, Bush said that "though hope is now running high for a more peaceful continent, the history of this century teaches Americans and Europeans to remain prepared."

Mitterrand, who has generally agreed with the U.S. position, said his role was not that of a mediator between the United States and Germany on the issue.

"Obviously, I'd be happy if views can be reconciled and I believe, I think, that they can be reconciled," he said.

Mitterrand, in response to a question, refused to agree with a statement last week by White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater that Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev was acting in a "drugstore cowboy fashion" in making a succession of arms-control proposals.

"I think that one must be wary of caricatures. Mr. Gorbachev is worth very much more than that," Mitterrand said.

In his own commencement speech, delivered in French and translated in segments to an estimated audience of 31,000 in Boston University's Nickerson Field, Mitterrand praised Gorbachev along with Bush and former President Ronald Reagan for their combined efforts to reduce the world's arsenal of nuclear weapons.

Mitterrand also called for all nations to join in framing "an emergency plan to save the environment. ... The death of the environment is our death," he said.

Bush, at the news conference, said: "I heard his clarion call for cooperative action on the environment, and I salute him for that."

Bush had entertained Mitterrand at his oceanside vacation home in Kennebunkport, Maine, for the weekend.

After the Boston University appearances, Bush bade the French leader farewell at a military departure ceremony at Boston's Logan Airport, where Mitterrand boarded his Air France supersonic Concorde for the return trip to Paris.

Bush then traveled to Greenwich, Conn., where he visited his ailing 87-year-old mother, Dorothy Walker Bush, for about an hour and a half. Mrs. Bush is recovering from a mild stroke. Bush returned to Washington Sunday evening.

In Boston, Bush met with his vanquished 1988 Democratic presidential challenger, Massachusetts Gov. Michael Dukakis. The two shook hands at a pre-commencement reception.

Dukakis, applauded vigorously by the hometown audience when he was introduced later in the stadium, also shared the dais with Bush during the commencement ceremonies.

In his commencement speech, Bush was sharply critical of recent comments by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze that the Soviets' "commitment to destroy SS-23 missiles under the (1987 treaty to eliminate medium-range nuclear weapons) may be reversible."

"The Soviets must surely know the results of failure to comply with this solemn agreement. Perhaps their purpose was to divide the West on other issues. Regardless, it is clear that Soviet 'new thinking' has not yet totally overcome the old," Bush said.

Shevardnadze made the comments in response to U.S. proposals to upgrade and extend the range of the American-built Lance short-range missiles, which are not covered by the treaty on intermediate-range missiles.

Britain, like the United States, has strongly opposed East-West talks on cutting NATO's nuclear battlefield weapons at this time.

Conservation groups gain support surge

Associated Press

The Alaska oil spill, last summer's beach pollution and reports of global warming have pumped new life into the American environmental movement, which is reaping a bitter windfall with each new catastrophe.

Officials of some of the nation's leading conservation groups say they have been inundated with donations and new members during the past year or so, especially after the March 24 spill of nearly 11 million gallons from the oil tanker Exxon Valdez.

Although environmentalists insist they aren't gloating over Exxon's misfortune, they can't hide a sense of vindication.

"This spill has just really presented an opportunity," said Lee Keller Reis, a National Wildlife Federation spokeswoman. "You hate to say, 'We told you so,' but it's a way to make a point."

The federation, the nation's largest environmental group, has added 700,000 members during the past year, bringing membership to more than 5.8 million, Ms. Reis said.

Although the organization cannot say how many members were added in response to the Alaska spill, it does know that donors have contributed $400,000 to an Alaska Fund established after the disaster, she said.

Ms. Reis said part of the fund will be used to pay for research into the effects of the spill and for lobbying against oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge.

The federation is among several groups that took advantage of the spill to send out direct mail appeals for contributions. One such mailing sent out by the Defenders of Wildlife was the organization's most successful ever, according to Carol Waite, the group's development director.

Defenders of Wildlife, which has 80,000 members, received $200,000 in response to its plea, Ms. Waite said. One woman sent in unsolicited about $1,000 in Exxon stock.

"I think that was just indicative of how angry people are over this devastation," Ms. Waite said.

Another group, the 285,000-member Wilderness Society, hasn't sent out an appeal for contributions related to the spill but has received about $50,000 in unsolicited funds, according to Rebecca Wodder, vice president for membership and development.

Other groups, such as the National Audubon Society, said it was too early to assess the impact of the oil spill on membership or contributions. However, Audubon spokesman Robert SanGeorge said the spill clearly would help.

"We're in the ironic situation where possibly the nation's greatest environmental catastrophe ever is causing this increased interest in environmental organizations," SanGeorge said. "It's a paradox."

He and other conservationists stressed that the upswing in sympathy for environmental causes began well before the spill. Most dated it to last year, when U.S. beaches were awash in pollution and a heat wave gave rise to concerns about global warming, which has been tied to air pollution.

Greenpeace estimates that it has been adding members at a rate of 50,000 a month since autumn and now has 1.35 million members. The Wilderness Society figures its growth rate has doubled during the past year to about 8,000 to 10,000 new members a month.

Contributions to the National Audubon Society were up 50 percent over the past year, according to SanGeorge.

Poll: Americans favor broad measures to curb pollution

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans would accept an array of encroachments on their lives to help clean up the environment, such as a ban on aerosol cans and mandatory refuse recycling, a poll has found.

The Media General-Associated Press survey of 1,084 adults found broad perceptions that environmental pollution is on the rise, and that government, businesses and average Americans are not doing enough to combat it.

Three-quarters of the respondents said laws against pollution in the United States are too weak, and majorities favored urgent government action, no matter what the cost, to protect the nation's drinking water.

Large majorities also supported strict pollution controls at all major oil facilities and at oil- and coal-burning power plants, even if those measures would raise the price of oil, gasoline and electricity.

Environmental concerns were heightened by the nearly 11 million gallons of oil spilled by the tanker Exxon Valdez off Alaska in March.

But the poll, conducted by telephone May 5-13, found concerns went beyond the issue of oil tanker safety.

The highest environmental priority was toxic waste disposal, in which 63 percent supported urgent action by the government regardless of the expense. Next was the related issue of the pollution of drinking water, with 52 percent favoring urgent action, cost aside.

On the issue of household waste, 20 percent said their communities now require them to separate and recycle glass, cans and paper refuse. Of the rest, an overwhelming 87 percent said they would support such a requirement.

Respondents also favored new steps against air pollution. Seventy-five percent backed a ban on household aerosol products; 60 percent supported a ban on charcoal lighter fluid; and 58 percent favored a ban on non-radial tires, which release more rubber into the air than do radials.

Those proposals are among the steps suggested for Southern California by a regional air quality board in March. Other measures in that plan won less support nationally: Respondents were split on parking restrictions in cities to discourage driving, and 59 percent opposed banning gasoline-fueled garden appliances.

Still, 72 percent supported strict pollution controls on oil-and coal-burning power plants, even if that would raise the price of power. Smokestack controls are another feature of the Southern California plan.

In an issue related to the Exxon Valdez disaster, 81 percent said new safety rules and emergency cleanup teams should be in place at all major oil facilities, even if that raised the price of oil and gasoline.

Responses were less certain on whether the federal government should issue new drilling permits. Forty-five percent opposed new drilling off the coasts of California and Florida, while about 35 percent favored new drilling there and 20 percent were unsure.

Opposition was greater to oil drilling in the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska, which also is being considered. Sixty percent were opposed and only about a quarter were in favor, with the rest unsure.

Overall, 72 percent said pollution appears to have increased during the past decade. And in a measure of its personal impact, nearly a quarter said they stayed away from the beach last year because of beach pollution.

Concerns about the environment crossed ideological and political lines. Residents of the nation's most densely populated areas were the most apt to see anti-pollution efforts as inadequate and to favor new steps.

Respondents indicated there was plenty of blame to go around for the nation's pollution problems. Forty-two percent said businesses are doing a poor job of keeping the environment clean and 36 percent said "only fair."

Similarly, 83 percent rated the federal government's environmental record as only fair or poor, as opposed to good or excellent; 71 percent gave a negative rating to their state and local governments' environmental records; and 79 percent said most Americans are doing only a fair or poor job of keeping the environment clean.

The poll, which had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 points, was conducted by the AP and Media General Inc., a communications company based in Richmond, Va., that publishes the Richmond Times-Dispatch, The Richmond News Leader, the Tampa (Fla.) Tribune and the Winston-Salem (N.C.) Journal, and operates TV stations WXFL in Tampa, WCBD in Charleston, S.C., and WJKS in Jacksonville, Fla.

Family has funeral for cult 'godfather'

MIAMI (AP) — The man called the "godfather" of a cult linked to at least 15 slayings on the U.S.-Mexican border was buried in a quiet ceremony with only family members and a handful of friends in attendance, a relative said.

The body of Adolfo de Jesus Constanzo, 26, arrived in Miami late Saturday night and was cremated for the funeral Sunday, Constanzo's brother Fausto told WQBA radio in Miami.

"It was always his wish to be cremated," said Fausto Constanzo, who revealed no other details about the funeral services and said only relatives and close friends were invited.

"It was a decision of ours to be so private," he said. "We don't want anyone there that doesn't belong there to curse the funeral."

Constanzo has been described as the leader of a sect that authorities blame for at least 15 killings outside the border city of Matamoros. Sect members have said some slayings were ritual killings while others were drug-related.

Authorities had sought Constanzo and his female companion Sara Aldrete Villarreal, 24, since the discovery of the first of the bodies on a border ranch in April.

Some bodies had been mutilated, with bones, brains and organs removed.

Aldrete and other sect members have said publicly that Constanzo ordered his own execution and the killing of his right-hand man, Martin Quintana Rodriguez, on May 6 when police closed in on their Mexico City apartment earlier this month.

New checkpoint opens

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — The U.S. Border Patrol's new checkpoint on Interstate 25 north of Las Cruces should be harder to avoid than the post near Truth or Consequences that it replaces.

The checkpoint, which opened Sunday, is about 20 miles north of Las Cruces. The old station was 75 miles north of the city.

The new post is on a wide plain between two mountain ranges.

"We chose this area because it's flatter, so we should be able to control walkarounds trying to avoid the checkpoint," said Ed Gerber, agent in charge of the Las Cruces Border Patrol Station. "There were just too many ways to get around the T or C checkpoint."

Gerber said another checkpoint 25 miles north of Las Cruces on New Mexico 185 is scheduled to open within the next month as a backup to the I-25 station.

The border patrol's El Paso, Texas, sector maintains six highway checkpoints and 12 stations in New Mexico and western Texas to control the flow of illegal aliens and drugs, said Border Patrol spokesman Doug Mosier.

Apprehensions of illegal aliens are down 26 percent this year, with the Border Patrol catching 82,775 aliens from October 1988 until April, compared with 111,627 in the same months in 1987-88.

But drug confiscations are up. The patrol has brought in $170 million worth of drugs since October 1988, $23 million more than the combined total for the last three years, Mosier said.

AIDS classes questioned

BOSTON (AP) — A Roman Catholic cardinal said an AIDS education program in the Boston public schools will increase students' risk of getting the disease, and has urged parents not to allow their children to participate.

In a letter read at weekend Masses in Boston parishes, Cardinal Bernard F. Law said the lessons planned for students in seventh throught 12th grades over the next six weeks "could place our children in danger, both moral and physical."

"The curriculum presents various issues of sexual behavior in a valueless, amoral context," Law wrote. "It admits a permissiveness in sexual behavior which is not acceptable to a great many citizens of the city, is certainly unacceptable for Catholics and which increases the children's risk of getting AIDS."

The schools plan to offer two 45-minute lessons stressing abstinence and shunning intravenous drug use as the best way to prevent AIDS. Instructors will tell students who are sexually active to use condoms. Parents who object may exempt their children from the classes.

Law warned that "students as young as 13 will...be given explicit instructions in the use of condoms. Sexual abstinence cannot be taught if at the same time detailed directions on how to use condoms are presented as an alternative."

He said the archdiocese will offer its own "value-centered" AIDS education program this summer.

New Jersey closes casino

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Roulette wheels came to rest and the last card was turned onto the blackjack felt at Elsinore's Atlantis Casino Hotel today as it became the first New Jersey casino closed under state order.

When dealer Stan Kowal dealt his last hand at 3:47 a.m., more state gaming regulators were in the casino than customers, and gamblers were saying "Good luck" to Atlantis employees.

The state Casino Control Commission last week determined the gaming hall's $144 million debt was too big a risk to the industry's integrity to allow continued play on Atlantis' three-tiered casino floor.

China demonstrators stage rallies across nation

Associated Press

Protesters in San Francisco started a "newslift" and East Coast demonstrators said they no longer recognized China's government as Chinese college students in the United States expressed support for the uprising in their homeland.

"If the present government is still in power when we return, we may suffer," said Liang Yongsheng, 38, a musicology student from Beijing studying at Stanford University. "There'll be a heavy shadow hanging over all of us. But we can't worry about that. It's too important for us to stand up and speak out now."

Rallies also were held this weekend in New York, Philadelphia, Washington, D.C., Houston, Chicago and Lawrence, Kan.

Students in the San Francisco Bay area have started using telephones and facsimile machines to send information to pro-democracy demonstrators in the Chinese capital. The effort, dubbed an emergency "newslift," began after Chinese government officials declared a news blackout late Friday.

"People there know far less about what's going on than we do," said Yu Tau, president of the Chinese Students and Scholars Friendship Association at the University of California at Berkeley.

The support from Chinese college students in the United States came as hundreds of thousands of students and supporters occupied Beijing's Tianamen Square for a third day today. An ultimatum issued by Premier Li Peng passed without any sign of a military crackdown.

In New York on Sunday, about 300 Chinese students delivered an open telegram to the Chinese consulate pledging support for protesters in Beijing and "our complete disobedience to such a hostile government."

"Lots of the students are crying...I feel like crying, too," said Dong Lu, a graduate student at Hunter College. "I feel so sad and so angry."

Three of the protesters met with Consul General Tang Uyu-Boo and delivered an open telegram on behalf of 10,000 Chinese students on the East Coast, Dong said.

"We no longer recognize the Chinese government led by Li Peng as a legal administration in China, and we pledge our complete disobedience to such a hostile government toward the whole Chinese nation," the telegram said.

A woman who answered the telephone at the Chinese consulate said officials had no comment.

Students in Beijing have led the largest uprising in the 40-year history of the People's Republic of China. The United States is host to about 40,000 students from that nation.

In Montana, a leading Chinese dissident said Li will be forced to resign by senior leader Deng Xiaoping.

Liu Binyan, a former high-ranking official at the People's Daily, said several Chinese provinces and eight government ministries, including the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, are refusing to support Li Peng's government.

Liu, an outspoken critic of corruption in government, was ousted from the Chinese Communist Party in 1987, but is still vice chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association. Liu said he remains in close telephone contact with top-ranking officials in the current government.

Anti-abortion protest attracts 40,000 people

Associated Press

Up to 40,000 people in St. Louis rallied to demonstrate their hope the U.S. Supreme Court will overturn the 1973 decision that legalized abortions, and more than 100 anti-abortion protesters were arrested in Cleveland.

In Pittsburgh, about 4,000 people sang and prayed, carrying balloons and placards during an anti-abortion rally in the city's Market Square. The protesters paraded through the downtown shopping area in a light rain Saturday during the 10th Annual Greater Pittsburgh March for Life.

The St. Louis demonstrators gathered at Kiener Plaza on Sunday without incident and no arrests were made, said police Lt. Roy Miller.

Organizers called it the largest anti-abortion rally in St. Louis. But several police officers at the scene and pro-choice supporters disagreed with the official crowd estimate. They said only about 5,000 to 10,000 demonstrators were on hand.

In Cleveland, 119 protesters were arrested Saturday outside of two abortion clinics. They were charged with aggravated disorderly conduct, resisting arrest and criminal trespassing.

Edward J. Heben Jr., a lawyer representing the protesters, said his clients planned to plead innocent to all charges today in Cleveland Municipal Court.

St. Louis demonstrators marched several blocks through downtown, some holding balloons and banners. One teen-age girl carried a sign saying, "Thanks, Mom!"

The "Show-Me Life" rally came several weeks after the U.S. Supreme Court heard arguments in a Missouri abortion case that could be used to overturn the landmark Roe vs. Wade decision that legalized the procedure in 1973.

The court is expected to announce its decision this summer in that case, Webster vs. Reproductive Health Services.

The Missouri law at issue, passed in 1986, declares that human life begins at conception. It restricts abortion by banning the procedure in publicly financed hospitals and by forbidding the use of public funds.

Marcos remains in critical condition

HONOLULU (AP) — Family and friends of Ferdinand Marcos were heartened by news that the former Philippines president was alert and responding to medication, an aide said.

Marcos continued to rally on Sunday, said a spokesman for St. Francis Medical Center, stressing that his condition remained very critical.

Marcos, 71, was undergoing kidney dialysis, had a respirator to help him breathe and was hooked up to a monitoring system, said Eugene Tiwanak, the hospital's assistant adminstrator.

Arturo Aruiza, a top aide who has been with Marcos much of the time since a surgical procedure was performed Thursday to prepare him for dialysis, said Marcos has shown the will to live.

"The will to fight, the determination, he has that," Aruiza said.

YMCA class teaches youngsters to swim

Oh, baby!

If you haven't heard about "Parents and Tots" swimming lessons at the Alamo YMCA, you're really missing the boat.

"Parents and Tots" — the water baby class — has been offered in Midland at the Alamo YMCA since the facility at 901 N. Midland Drive opened in 1979.

It was clearly ahead of its time.

"Parents and Tots" was born even before there was a nationally-endorsed YMCA program for parents and their children with uniformed aquatic guidelines.

The program continues to thrive.

"The major thing is the emphasis on above water (swimming) instead of underwater. Floating on the back and relaxing is the main thing," observed Debbie Erdwurm, aquatics director at the Alamo YMCA.

Parents and Tots is open to infants and toddlers — from ages 3 months to 3 years — and either one or both parents.

John E. Miller

Services for John Eldridge "Doc" Miller have been set for 1 p.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Chapel with Rev. John Rascoe, interim pastor of Alamo Heights Baptist Church, officiating. Interment will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Miller

Miller died at a local hospital Sunday morning.

He was born April 3, 1911, in Fort Oglethorpe, Ga. As a young child he and his brother and father moved to Texas and later to Midland. He began work with Elder Chevrolet and later with the old Midland Air Field during World War II. He became in the pest control business in 1957 and for many years owned and operated Doc Miller Pest Control. He married Mary F. Weatherred Oct. 31, 1936, in Penelope.

He was a member of Alamo Heights Baptist Church, a charter member of the Fraternal Order of Eagles, a former member of the Odd Fellows and was very active in the Christmas in April program.

Survivors include hia wife, Mary F. Weatherred Miller of Midland; one son, John David Miller of Midland; one daughter, Barbara White of Silver Valley, N.C.; four grandchildren; seven great-grandchildren and several nieces and nephews.

He was preceeded in death by his parents, Emuel and Maude Ellen Miller; one brother, Leonard Miller and two sisters, Edith Webb and Virginia Hudson.

The family requests memorials be directed to one's favorite charity.

Pallbearers will be Preacher Roberts, Weldon-Carden, Dell Truelove, Dozier Truelove, Jimmy O'Neil and Eulio Camarillo.

Honorary pallbearers will be Roger Vest, Dan Crowley and Jim Truelove.

Evelyn Weaver

Services for Evelyn Weaver have been set for 9:30 a.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Dr. A.J. Moreau of Trinity Presbyterian Church officiating. Graveside services will be at 5 p.m. Tuesday at Round Grove Cemetery in Erath County with the Rev. David Locke of Highland Baptist Church officiating. Arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Weaver died Sunday afternoon at a local hospital.

She was born Dec. 17, 1903, in Highland. She graduated from high school in Texoma, Okla., in 1921. She attended Jim Tarleton Agriculture College in Stephenville. She married W.H. "Bill" Weaver June 25, 1925, in Breckenridge. She, her husband and her parents lived in various oil field boom towns in Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and South America. She left South America in 1955 and moved to Pasadena where she remained until 1984 when she moved to Midland to be near her family.

She was a member of the Trinity Presbyterian Church.

Survivors include one son, Joe T. Weaver of Midland; 10 grandchildren and 23 great-grandchildren.

She was preceeded in death by her husband in January of 1984 and one daughter, Mary Foster, in 1978.

The grandchildren will be pallbearers.

Memorials should be directed to Cal Farley's Boys Ranch, P.O. Box 1890, Amarillo, Texas, 79174.

Jeane Dockrey Ward

Graveside services for Jeane Dockrey Ward of Midland have been set for 3 p.m. Tuesday at Resthaven Memorial Park with Tim Walker, adult education mininster at Golf Course Road Church of Christ, officiating. Arrangements are being handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Ward died Saturday afternoon at an Odessa hospital following a lengthy illness.

She was born Sept. 4, 1932, in Dunn and was reared in Odessa. She graduated from Odessa High School in 1951 and married the late Billy Ray Ward the same year. She spent most of her life in Midland and Odessa. She was employed with Midland Independent School District in the administration office from 1968 to 1973. She returned to that position in 1977 and remained until 1986 when she retired.

She was a member of the Baptist church.

Survivors include one daughter, Mrs. Don (Lisa) Sutton of Midland; one brother, Bob Dockrey of Odessa; one sister, Mrs. Joan Barrett-Smith of Midland; two grandchildren; five nieces and one nephew.

Ernest H. Jones

SAN ANGELO — Services for Ernest Herman Jones of San Angelo and formerly of Midland were held Saturday in San Angelo. Burial followed at Lawnhaven Memorial Gardens in San Angelo with Johnson Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

He died last Tuesday in San Angelo.

Jones was born Aug. 30, 1905, in Commanche County. He married Una Holden on Feb. 14, 1936, in Commanche County.

As a former resident of Midland, he was a member of First Baptist Church in Midland and was employed in the circulation department of the Midland Reporter-Telegram. He was a U.S. Army veteran of World War II.

Survivors include his wife; and one sister, Mrs. Rufus Everett of Austin.

Fidelas Nelson

Services for Fidelas "Fitz" Nelson of Midland will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with the Rev. Weldon G. Miller, pastor of Foursquare Church, officiating. Burial will follow in Resthaven Memorial Park.

Pallbearers will be Rodney Jobe, Paul Crawford, Jerry Jobe, Don Bizell, Lonnie Pugh and Jerry Fussell.

Mrs. Nelson died Thursday at a local nursing home.

Those who participate will find a swimming pool with the water temperature kept between 88 and 90 degrees. In addition, pH balance and chlorine levels are check hourly, according to Midland Metropolitan YMCA aquatics director Genie McCartney.

"If the water temperature drops, we postpone the class...strictly for the safety of the babies," she said.

Ms. Erdwurm stressed that the objective of "Parents and Tots" is to teach "water awareness; not structured swimming."

Infants and toddlers aren't forced to swim under water "until they are ready," she said, observing that when the time comes, the babies appear to be more eager to learn than if they hadn't taken "Parents and Tots" classes.

The Alamo YMCA also offers other water-related classes.

Co-ed adult swimming lessons, offered from 7:15 to 8:15 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday, are intended for those couples interested in exercise. Individual attention is given to the person who has never had swimming lessons. Advanced training also is available.

Tadpole swimming lessons for children, ages 3 to 5 years, is offered from 9-9:30 a.m. or 12:50-1:20 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 6:45-7:15 p.m. Monday and Wednesday and 6:45 to 7:15 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday. In this course, children are taught basic swimming skills along with water safety. Parents need not accompany their children.

Progressive swimming lessons for children six years of age and older are conducted in two-week intervals year-round, from 9:40-10:25 a.m. and 11:55-12:40 p.m. Monday through Thursday. Students learn proper breathing, endurance, stroke perfection and water safety at their own pace.

Arthritis classes, sponsored by the Arthritis Foundation, meet from 1:30-2:15 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday. In this series, persons suffering from arthritis may receive therapeutic treatment in the heated pool.

A special "Water...The Fatal Attraction," workshop, sponsored by the YMCA and the Midland chapter of the American Red Cross, will be conducted from 4 to 6:30 p.m. June 4. This workshop is designed to prevent accidents in private, backyard swimming pools.

Among the topics to be discussed are statistics related to the lack of education about the dangers of unsupervised pools, minimum safety standard and emergency procedures.

A Red Cross basic water safety certificate will be issued upon completion of the workshop, which costs $15 per family.

Fire damages vacant home

From Staff Reports

A fire that heavily damaged a vacant Midland home late Sunday was set, Fire Marshal Jerry Petree said today.

Four firefighting units were called to the scene of the blaze at 305 S. Mississippi St. at 11:17 p.m., according to the report. By the time firefighters arrived, the home was fully involved, the report said.

Petree, who was called to the scene, said it appeared the fire started in the basement, and was set.

The home was scheduled for demolition, according to the fire marshal.

Drag racing accident kills two

HOUSTON (AP) — A drag race along a narrow street ended in tragedy when the teen-age drivers lost control of their vehicles and plowed into a crowd of onlookers, police said.

Two high school students were killed and another was injured when they were hit, police added.

PLEASE RESPOND TO THIS SERIOUS PROBLEM

PETITION #2493

Madalyn Murray O'Hair, an atheist whose efforts successfully eliminated the use of Bible reading and prayer from all public schools 15 years ago, has been granted a Federal hearing in Washington, D.C. on the subject (F.C.C. The Petition, R. M. 249) which would ultimately pave the way to stop the reading of the Gospel on the airways of America. She took her petition, with 27,000 signatures, to back her.

If her attempt is successful (as her last one was), then all Sunday Worship service being broadcast either by radio or television will be stopped.

Madalyn is also campaigning to remove Christmas programs, Christmas songs and carols from the public schools.

You can help this time. We need one million signed letters to show the Federal Communications Commission that there are still many Christians alive, well and CONCERNED in our community.

Sign and mail the form provided. Please do not sign "Mr. and Mrs.", but sign individually. Let each adult sign one separately and send it in. Be sure to put Petition No. 2493 on the lower left-hand corner of the envelope. This is very important.

Please have this letter and petition photo copied and send it to ten people (friends and relatives) who will share our concern.

PETITION #2493

Gentlemen:

I am an American and proud of my heritage. I am also very much aware of the part Religious faith has played in the freedom we, as Americans, now enjoy. Therefore, I protest any human effort to remove from radio or television any programs designed to show faith in God or in a supreme being, or to remove Christmas songs or carols from the Public School System.

Sincerely,

City returns to nature's way to kill rats

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The New York City Parks Department, convinced there is more than one way to skin a rat, has a new plan to fight one of civilization's oldest problems by using boxes from which barn owls can fly nocturnal raids on rodents.

Twenty-five plywood boxes, 2 feet by 2 feet by 26 inches, will be placed in trees in four city parks this spring, to give the hundreds of barn owls who already live there a more congenial habitat, and encourage them to breed and be better rat killers.

"We don't even need an environmental impact statement," Parks Commissioner Henry J. Stern said Thursday. He said the department decided to try the plan because the millions of rats in the city have become increasingly resistant to the few anticoagulant poisons approved by the federal government.

"We have hundreds of owls which now nest in the same parks," Stern said. "By building these houses close to the places where there are rats, we'll bring the owls to the rats."

The four parks to be included in the test are Cunningham and Forest Parks in Queens, Central Park and Prospect Park. If the program works, it will be expanded.

Peterson's Field Guide calls barn owls "cosmopolitan" in their range, which stretches over temperate regions on all continents. It notes that the white-faced birds, which typically nest in families of four to six, are "effective mousers and take many rats."

Parks officials say that barn owls kill as many as three rats per night each, and that a nesting pair will take an additional two rats for each owlet.

The birds, which are 14 to 20 inches tall, emit a "loud rasping hiss, quite unlike the typical hooting of owls," so Stern said worries about noise complaints were moot. The owls can also sound a clicking note, and when alarmed, snap their bills.

Marc Matsil, director of the Parks Department's natural resources group, said similar programs have succeeded in national parks. The owls work mostly at night, killing their prey with sharp talons, "and they consume pretty much everything but fur and bone," he said.

In the parks where the owl boxes are placed, the department will also experiment with reducing the amount of rat poison used, Matsil said. If owls, hawks, falcons or other predators eat rats that have eaten poison, they too can die.

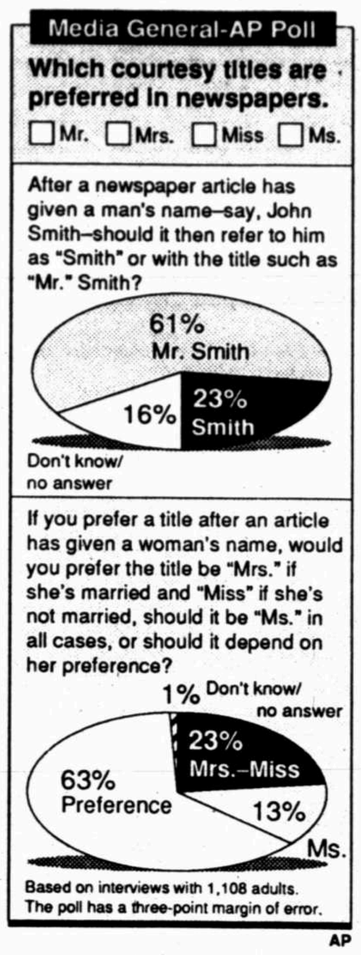

Stern said the rat problem in Central Park was especially acute. Picnickers and parks employees have reported being approached or chased by rats, which seem to have become bolder in their search for food.

Tobi Bergman, chief of operations for the park, said some people have speculated that an unusually dry fall may have increased the rat population there, but that complaints had recently fallen off.

Since December, the city has not been using any rat poison in Central Park, in part because of concerns about its effect on owls and other predators.

An animal protection group, Friends of Animals, has also expressed its concerns to parks officials about the use of poisons.

Poll shows Americans favor courtesy titles

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans say newspapers should extend courtesy titles to men and women alike, using "Mr.," "Mrs.," "Miss" or "Ms." on second reference, a Media General-Associated Press poll has found.

Sixty-one percent in the national survey said men identified in news stories should receive the title "Mr." on second reference, while 23 percent said the last name should suffice. The rest had no opinion.

Similarly, 66 percent wanted a title used in second references to women. Twenty percent favored just the last name and the rest had no opinion.

Among those who wanted courtesy titles for women, 63 percent said the choice of a title should depend on the woman's preference. Twenty-three percent favored using only "Mrs." or "Miss," and 13 percent wanted "Ms." used exclusively.

Of the whole survey, a 42 percent plurality favored giving women their preference of titles; 20 percent favored no titles for women; 15 percent favored using only "Mrs." and "Miss;" another 15 percent had no opinion; and 9 percent wanted "Ms." used only. The numbers are rounded.

The survey was conducted recently among 1,108 randomly selected adults, and had a margin of sampling error of plus or minus 3 percentage points.

All identified subgroups gave majority support for using titles for men and women and plurality support for giving women their choice of titles. More young adults and blacks favored titles; better-educated and wealthier respondents were more apt to oppose them.

There was little division between responses of women and men. Women were slightly more likely to favor titles for men — 64 percent compared with 57 percent — and two-thirds of each group supported titles for women.

The choice of "Mrs." or "Miss" only for women was more popular with older Americans; 34 percent of respondents over age 64 favored it, compared with only 14 percent of those younger than age 30. Conversely, 16 percent of the younger group favored "Ms.," but just 7 percent of the oldest group agreed.

Younger respondents were more apt than the oldest group to favor giving women their choice of titles, 69-57 percent, and more blacks than whites favored giving the subject her choice, 71-62 percent.

More of the most-educated respondents, those who had done postgraduate work, opposed titles for either sex. A third of that group wanted no title used on second-reference to women, for example; only 8 percent of those who had not completed high school agreed. The more-educated group also was more inclined to support giving women their choice of titles.

Respondents who said they read a newspaper daily — nearly two-thirds of the total — were a little more likely than less-frequent readers to support giving women their preference of titles, 66-58 percent.

Survey results based on random interviews

NEW YORK (AP) — This Media General-Associated Press poll is based on telephone interviews recently with 1,108 adults in the continental United States.

Phone numbers were selected randomly and interviews were conducted with the adult who had the most recent birthday, a random phenomenon.

The results were weighted to adjust for variations in the sample. The poll has a 3-point margin of error, meaning that if every adult American were asked the same questions, the results theoretically would be within 3 points of the poll's results, 19 times out of 20.

The error margin is larger for subgroups — 4 points, for example, for the group that favors courtesy titles for women.

There are other sources of potential error in polls, including the wording and order of questions. These are the questions in this poll; because of rounding, sums may not total 100:

1. After a newspaper article has given a man's name — say, John Smith — should it then refer to him as "Smith" or with the title "Mr." Smith? Smith: 23 percent. Mr.: 61 percent. Don't know or no answer: 16 percent.

2. After a newspaper article has given a woman's name — say, Jane Doe — should it then refer to her as "Doe" or with a title such as "Mrs.," "Miss" or "Ms." Doe? Doe: 20. With title: 66. DK-NA: 15.

3. (If with title) Would you prefer the title be "Mrs." if she's married and "Miss" if she's not married, or should it be "Ms." in all cases, or should it depend on her preference? Mrs.-Miss: 23. Ms.: 13. Preference: 63. DK-NA: 1.

4. How often do you read a newspaper — every day, every few days, at least once a week, or less than once a week? Every day: 64. Few days: 21. Once a week: 11. Less: 4.

Among those who wanted courtesy titles for women, 63 percent said the choice of a title should depend on the woman's preference.

Child catches fish literally 'as big as she is'

DULUTH, Minn. (AP) — Sometimes it takes a little nipper to catch a big fish.

Armed with her telescoping Fisher-Price rod clamped to her little tackle box, 28-inch-long Katie Miller nabbed a 27-inch walleye.

OK, she had plenty of help from her dad, Richard W. Miller. But the fact is that little rod, the one with the black plastic reel, hauled in this big 7-pound walleye to give 20-month-old Katie a successful fishing weekend.

Katie's mom, Anita, says the family was fishing Sunday night on the dock of their Island Lake home. Katie held the rod after her father cast into the water.

"My husband saw her line going out, and he said, 'Oh, she's got a fish!'" Mrs. Miller recalled.

"We got it in by the dock, and there was this great big swirl in the water. My husband said, 'Get the net!' Of course, we didn't have a net there. So, he got it under the gills and pulled it in. I'd never seen a fish that big."

Katie, who had become a spectator for most of this operation, evidently was pleased with her fish.

"She liked it," her mother said. "She touched it."

Katie's father had promised all along that he would have her first fish mounted. He was planning on something a little smaller.

"It's going to cost us $141 to mount this fish!" Mrs. Miller said.

Celebrants filled a hangar and a massive tent which extended from the hangar out into a field for the 1989 Round-Up.

The Saturday evening event will benefit the Midland Unit of the American Cancer Society.

Round-Up goes off without a hitch

Over $130,000 raised for American Cancer Society

By MYRA LEE SALCEDO
Lifestyle Writer

Although the wind went from breezy to gusty Saturday evening, the weather proved relatively calm in comparison to past years for the the American Cancer Society's 1989 Round-Up.

And along with the weather's cooperation, the event offered atendants plenty of food, and Ronnie Milsap who started his performance within minutes of the scheduled time. About 1,400 celebrants packed the Rich-Air Executive Hangar Complex to enjoy the event which raised approximately $130,000 to support service, education and research programs for the American Cancer Society.

Kathy Long, chairman of 1989 Round-Up, said, "We had a good crowd and everyone enjoyed Ronnie Milsap and Neal McGoy. We also raised more money this year on special events — blackjack, the photo booth and Bessie Bingo — than we have in the past."

The hangar, and a tent which extended from the area into a lot, were decorated in a Southwestern theme. Brightly painted boots, bandanas and cacti in shades pink and teal decorated tables. Jackie Perry, decorations co-chairman, said cloths for 250 tables were made. Brightly painted wooden cactus tucked into bales of hay served as direction markers on roads surrounding the hangar.

In keeping with the Southwestern theme, celebrants were attired in concho belts, fringed suede vests and jackets, cowboy boots, cowboy hats, denim and rhinestones.

Before Milsap's appearance, the weather was a big topic with attendees. Several previous round-ups have been plagued severe storms. Tom Perini, owner of Perini Ranch Restaurant and Caterers of Buffalo Gap, who has provided food for all the round-ups, said, "This round-up had the best weather I've ever seen, and we have experienced everything from sandstorms to tornadoes in the past."

Perini said, "There have been round-ups where the wind has blown the salad off the plates and sent cherry tomatoes flying across the room."

The event also featured an open bar, silent auction and games. Gene Sledge won a box of 10 Ribeyes for guessing the correct square in the cowchip Bessie Bingo game.

Judy Kyle successfully bid on a trip for two to Europe in the silent auction. Other auction items included a royal blue metallic BMW from Bronco BMW; a 1989 Cajun midnight blue and silver fishing and ski boat from Falcon Marine, Inc.; and a 1½ carat total weight diamond from Sam L. Majors.

Perini served a dinner of ranch roast ribeye steaks, pinto beans, salad and garlic toast, which was included in the $100 per couple admission fee. "We anticipated at least 1,400 people, and about 1,450 plates were served," Perini said. "We roasted 120 ribeye roasts over mesquite on site, about 1,300 pounds of meat, and also cooked 150 pounds of dry pinto beans."

Milsap, a three-time winner of the Male Vocalist of the Year Award from the Country Music Association, entertained the crowd with many of his hits and a medley of his most popular songs including "Day Dreams About Night Things in the Middle of the Afternoon," "It Was Almost Like a Song," "I Wouldn't Have Missed It for the World" and "There's No Gettin' Over Me."

Milsap said he "always enjoyed coming to Texas, especially for something so positive as Round-Up."

Round-up attendees began dancing during Milsap's second song. Following Milsap's performance, dance music also was provided by Neal McGoy until 1 a.m.

Gary G. Burnett was honorary chairman and Harriet Herd served as honorary sponsor chairman of the event. The Abell-Hangar Foundation was marshall sponsor. Sheriff sponsors were Jack and Frances Brown, the Fasken Foundation, Mr. and Mrs. James. W. Lacy, Joe and Beverly Pevehouse, Gene and Joyce Sledge (in memory of Steven Sledge), and Cy and Lissa Wagner.

Linda Powell was co-chairman. Pam White served as secretary, Jim Davis, treasurer; and Patty Flowers, assistant treasurer. Adivisors were Melinda Williamson, Judy Martin, Lissa Wagner and Denise Perkins.

Chairmen were Gary Burnett, Ms. Perkins, Mildred Loper, Leslie McCabe, Judy Priddy, Nancy White, Katy Hubbard, Stephen Floyd, Mark Earl, Laura Wettstein, Susan Wettstein, Susan Bryns, Jami Haest, Romae Bell, Karen and Ron King, Bob Landreth and Bryson Culver.

Other chairmen were, Craig Atchinson, Doris Minnix, Jackie Perry, Dennis Grub, Suzanne Smith, Nancy Dunnam, Lori Jons, Danny Kidwell, Caryl McKague, Eleanor Harper, Ms. Herd, Mike Sledge and Patty Chandler.

Agent used to detect cancer in liver

Associated Press

ROCHESTER, N.Y. — In the fight against cancer, researchers at the University of Rochester are taking advantage of the liver's ability to filter out foreign material from the bloodstream.

They are developing a contrast agent for use in ultrasound examinations of the liver. The agent, a suspension of very dense particles, lights up healthy areas, but leaves tumor regions dark, thus enabling scientists to find tumors more easily.

Tumor regions cannot absorb the particles (about a tenth the size of red blood cells) and so they don't reflect ultrasound as strongly as normal liver tissue.

DEAR ABBY

Announcements turn flunking senior into eager graduate

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Our son is a senior this year, but because he fooled around and skipped school so much, he does not have enough credits to graduate with his class. He plans to go to summer school to get the credits he is short, but he is not allowed to participate in the graduation ceremonies with the rest of his class.

The graduation announcements, thank-you cards, etc. had to be ordered months ago. (They cost me $75.) Since my son won't be graduating, I don't think we should send out any announcements. His grandmother thinks that we should go ahead and send them. His father says if we send the graduation announcements, a note should be enclosed explaining the situation.

My son wants them sent because of the money and gifts he might receive.

What do you think? — A TUG OF WAR

DEAR TUG: I think you should not send graduation announcements until there is a graduation to announce.

DEAR ABBY: You had a letter in your column from a young girl whose parents were divorced. She complained that her mom had to work two jobs because her father fails to send support checks.

Abby, please be fair and print this letter. It's from a daddy who DOES pay child support money, but Mom spends it on something other than the child.

In my case, my ex-wife sends our son to me whenever it suits her convenience. When the boy arrives (he's now 12 years old), his clothes are shabby, his shoes have holes in the soles, he wears no socks, and he carries a battered suitcase with underwear that's ready for the rag bin. My first job is get the boy a haircut and buy him some decent clothes and shoes.

Abby, something should be done about monitoring "Mom" to be sure that the support checks she receives are spent on supporting the child. — EQUAL TIME IN NEWARK, N.J.

DEAR EQUAL TIME: I received many letters such as yours. Read on:

DEAR ABBY: So, Daddy doesn't send the support money! Well, I am one daddy who has sent $2,000 a month for the support of my two children, but Mommy tells them that their father is a rich but stingy man who doesn't give her enough money to support them.

Abby, in addition to the $2,000 a month, I pay tuition and transportation to their boarding schools. (Mother does not work, but she sends the children to boarding schools anyway.)

At Christmastime, I give each child $1,000 for clothes, but they don't see a penny of it because their mother keeps putting off taking them shopping for the clothes. Last Easter, the children were put on a plane to spend the holiday with me, and they arrived looking like a pair of ragamuffins.

I am sure this letter could have been written by many fathers, so you can sign it ... DIVORCED DAD, ANYWHERE USA OR CANADA

The facts about drugs, AIDS, and how to prevent unwanted pregnancy are all in Abby's new, expanded booklet, "What Every Teen Should Know." To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Dear Abby's Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Pack-rat gene is hereditary

By AMANDA GRIFFIN
New York Times News Service

There's something of a pack rat in my children. All you have to do is look under their beds to be sure, but I don't do that very often.

I was reminded of this inherited tendency the other day when I tried to throw away what looked like trash. The saying, one man's junk is another man's treasure, was never more true than in this case.

It started when the 3-year-old caught me with the garbage bag, and through the almost sheer white plastic she spotted the red plastic fireman's hat she was given at a recent birthday party. "Why are you throwing away my hat?" she asked in her most offended voice.

Next, before the bag could even make it outside, the 7-year-old came and asked where his camouflage backpack was. I had been sure I was justified in throwing this item away because I had already held on to it six months longer than the zipper had lasted.

The final blow to the bag and to me came when the 6-year-old tearfully confronted me with the worn, dirty blue stuffed bear that I was positive no one would miss. "This is my favorite bear and I've been looking for it for years," she said, her tears adding drama if not conviction to her argument.

By then my skinny garbage bag held only crumpled tissues and old newspapers and was hardly worth the trip out to the can. I felt similarly deflated in my efforts to bring order and neatness to the house.

Now I know why so many mothers wait and throw away years of junk when the kids leave home for good. Even then it can be difficult. My old bedroom at home, which has become more generic over the years, still holds remnants of the past — a dried prom corsage, old lit books from high school and a motley collection of stuffed animals.

One of us, my mother or I, is having difficulty disassociating ourselves from the past. The gene for packratting must come from the mother.

I've learned my lesson, though. Next time I decide to clean my children's rooms, it's either going to be at 3 a.m., when they are at camp, or, better yet, when they're 30.

Reproduction of historic Spanish ship touring nation

BEAUMONT, Texas (AP) — The round little ship tied up behind Beaumont's City Hall at Riverfront Park looks like something that has come unstuck in time. It's a traveling anachronism that looks like a none-too-seaworthy sailboat with a glandular condition.

It's a reproduction of Sir Francis Drake's Golden Hinde, the ship he took around the world on a voyage of discovery and conquest that helped catapult England into mastery of the seas.

Today, it looks tiny and awkward, but 400 years ago it was the scourge of Spain and came home with enough Spanish loot to retire the national debt and make even cabin boys millionaires.

The original Golden Hinde fell apart long ago, but now the reproduction has sailed out of the musty pages of centuries-old books to make history something that students can see, touch and even smell. The first Golden Hinde sailed from port to port gathering gold and silver. The reproduction sails from port to port gathering students.

It will be in Beaumont for the rest of this month, then make a stop in Galveston before heading eastward on a trip that will end up in the Great Lakes in 1992.

First Mate Roderic Lance admits the Golden Hinde isn't exactly a candidate for the America's Cup races.

"She's quite slow and she can't sail very close to the wind," he said. "But in her day, she was considered a very fine vessel."

Just when and where the original Golden Hinde was built, nobody knows. It was called the Pelican when Drake set sail with a fleet of five ships from Plymouth in 1577.

As he worked his way west and south, Drake captured and looted several Spanish and Portuguese ships. By the time he got to the Pacific, he had lost or become separated from all the other ships.

Drake renamed his ship the Golden Hinde as he sailed it through the Straits of Magellan. It was named for the crest of Christopher Hatton, a friend at royal court and a sponsor of the expedition.

Hatton's crest featured a golden female deer, or hinde. The bright red and white hues that highlight the ship also are found in Hatton's crest.

Drake looted Spanish treasure ships at Valparíso and Lima and captured the big treasure ship as it tried to get to Panama with a cargo of gold and silver bound for Spain.

By then the Golden Hinde was heavily laden with what was then almost unimaginable wealth. Drake continued north along what is now the west coast of the United States, possibly looking for a route eastward along the long-sought and mythical Northwest Passage.

He turned south to look for a safe port to stop for provisions and repairs and found it at New Albion. Today historians think his port was Drake's Bay, a part of the San Francisco Bay system.

Drake continued westward, crossing the Pacific to the East Indies. He then sailed across the Indian Ocean, around Cape Horn and, in late 1580, returned to England.

His ship was so heavily laden with gold and silver that the gun ports were under water. Half of the 80 tons of loot went to Queen Elizabeth I, who had backed the expedition. Drake and his crew shared the rest.

Even lowly cabin boys and powder monkeys, only 13 years old when the ship finished the three-year trip, got 8,000 pounds — the equivalent of $1 million today. Crew members on the new Golden Hinde don't make that much.

"We pay them $75 a week and board and bunk," Lance said.

Most crew members, like 21-year-old Susan Lawson of Brownsville are spending about six months aboard.

"It sounded like an adventure," said Lawson, who is taking a break from her biology studies at Texas Southmost College. "It has been an adventure."

The ship's voyage from Brownsville to Corpus Christi was her first trip on a sailing vessel and Lawson admits she was seasick for most of it.

"I spent most of my time right out there on the gallery," she said, pointing to the balconylike walkway that juts out from the stern. On the original Golden Hinde, the gallery was the officers' head, or bathroom.

At sea, Lawson and the 15 other crew members sleep on pallets in the armory and gun deck, just as the original crewmen did. Conditions for the modern sailors are much better, however.

In Drake's day, nobody on board got fresh fruit or vegetables at sea and only officers got fresh meat from the small animals carried on board. Ordinary sailors ate salt meat and frequently vermin-infested hard tack biscuits.

"They did get to eat some fresh meat," Lawson and other crewmen tell groups of touring schoolchildren. "When they caught rats they would cook and eat them."

The modern food is much better, she said.

While in port the crew lives aboard the Sea Surveyor, a small motor vessel that accompanies the Golden Hinde. The cooking is done there. Most voyages are short enough that crews on the Golden Hinde take provisions in ice chests.

The reborn ship was commissioned by a group of San Francisco businessmen to commemorate the 400th anniversary of Drake's visit to that area.

It was built in England between 1971 and 1974 and has already gone around the world 1½ times.

Along the way it has been visited by thousands of students and people who want to take a glimpse into the days of the English sea dogs. It has been seen on television by millions more. One side was painted a different color so it could play two different ships in the mini-series "Tai Pan."

Lawson and other crewmen go barefoot and wear the simple canvas clothes of seamen of 400 years ago as they lead tours through the ship. Other times they mainly wear the clothes of sailors of today — T-shirts and jeans.

The new Golden Hinde is a little different than the original.

The biggest difference is the small diesel engine that gets the newer ship in and out of narrow channels.

The new ship is steered by a wheel on the main deck. The original had an oversized and sometimes dangerous-to-operate tiller called a whipstaff. A marine radio crackles with messages and offers instant communications while at sea.

The 18 cannons down below on the gun deck are just like the originals. They were much smaller than the guns carried by larger, less maneuverable Spanish ships, Lawson explained to a fifth-grade history class.

Bulls' Michael Jordan goes up for shot despite defensive efforts of Detroit's Rich Mahorn. Bulls took a 1-0 lead in NBA Eastern Conference Playoff finals Sunday.

They all look alike to Bulls

By WILLIAM C. RHODEN
N.Y. Times News Service

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Chicago Bulls continued their remarkable march through the National Basketball Association playoffs and Michael Jordan added to his growing legend on Sunday afternoon as the Bulls upset the Detroit Pistons, 94-88, in the opening game of the Eastern Conference final.

The Pistons had beaten the Bulls the last nine times they met and had not lost at home in 25 games. But Chicago, led by 32 points from Jordan and with intermittent contributions from Bill Cartwright, Dave Corzine and Craig Hodges, stunned the sellout crowd of 21,454 at the Palace. The second game of the four-of-seven-game series will be played here Tuesday night.

"I had a good feeling about the game," said Jordan, who said before the game that if the Bulls took the opener they might well win the series. "We got off to a good start and we got in a good groove. We caught them flat. Any time you catch a team on its heels, you've got to take advantage of it. We felt like it was the first series when we were the underdogs. We just can't get complacent."

The victory came less than 48 hours after an emotionally draining, last-gasp victory over the New York Knicks that won the semifinal series for Chicago. And there was some feeling that the Bulls, and Jordan in particular, might be too exhausted to battle the Pistons, who had swept two straight series and had been resting since May 15.

Instead, the Bulls stormed out of the blocks, building a lead of 24 points before settling for a 50-34 halftime lead.

Jordan, who averaged 37.5 points in Chicago's first 11 playoff games, was 10 of 29 from the floor Sunday and went through a spell in the second half in which he missed 11 of 12 shots. But each time he touched the ball, Detroit practically rotated its entire defense to stop him, leaving an opening for one of his teammates to exploit.

"Michael creates so much other stuff that he doesn't have to be hitting all the time," Hodges said.

Detroit finally got itself untracked in the second half and took a 74-73 lead with 8 minutes 33 seconds left.

But Jordan was simply too tough down the stretch and his teammates, continuing to play their complementary roles to perfection, burned the Pistons for every tactic they used to negate Jordan's influence.

"The big factor down the stretch is that we kept our poise and kept our composure," Jordan said.

Grunhard belt nips Tulsa, 3-2

From Staff Reports

TULSA, Okla.— Dan Grunhard's opposite field home run in the eighth inning off Marv Rockwood gave the Midland Angels a 3-2 victory over the Tulsa Drillers before 4,112 Texas League fans Sunday and it also gave the West Texans revenge, kinda.

Felipe Castillo blanked Midland 2-0 on a six-hitter at Midland May 9 and followed that up with a route-going 13-5 win in El Paso. Castillo wasn't around for the decision, leaving in the sixth inning as Midland rallied to tie, but the outcome represented satisfaction enough and gave the Angels a 2-1 lead going into tonight's fourth game of the five-game series.

TONIGHT, John Hoover, 1-0, goes for Tulsa and hard throwing Rich Morehouse, 0-0, takes another step on the road back from surgery.

Grunhard's home run led off the eighth and was his third of the season, giving Scott Lewis, 4-4, the victory. However, Gary Buckels pitched the eighth and ninth for his ninth save.

The Drillers took it down to the last out and a 3-2 count before succumbing. In the ninth Gar Millay reached first on third baseman Bob Rose's throwing error. He took second on catcher Mike Knapp's passed ball and moved to third on a fly ball. So with a runner on third and one out, Buckels retired Darrin Loy and Darren Garner on a couple of ground balls to shortstop Gary DiSarcina.

MIDLAND took a 1-0 lead in the first when Reed Peters doubled to open the game, dashed to third on a grounder to short and scored on Rose's infield grounder.

Tulsa tied it in the third when Loy led off with a single, moved to second on a sacrifice and third on a passed ball. An infield grounder plated the run.

The Drillers, leaders of the TL West, went ahead in the fifth as Garner walked, stole second and streaked home on Sammy Sosa's double.

Midland tied it in the sixth as DiSarcina singled, took second on Peters' sacrifice, but was cut down trying to advance to third on Grunhard's grounder to short. Rose walked and Grunhard scored on Chris Cron's bloop single to center.

Astros walk Bucs' plank

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Andy Van Slyke had four hits, drove in four runs and scored four runs and Neal Heaton won for the first time since last July as Pittsburgh pounded Houston 17-5 Sunday.

Van Slyke had two singles, a double and home run in leading the Pirates' 18-hit attack. Bobby Bonilla drove in three runs with a pair of hits, including his fifth home run.

The 17 runs were the most for the Pirates since May 9, 1979, when they beat Atlanta 17-9.

Utilitymen Craig Reynolds and Greg Gross both pitched for the Astros, allowing six runs.

Giants 10, Mets 6

NEW YORK — Terry Kennedy's pinch three-run double highlighted a six-run seventh and Kevin Mitchell had four hits, including his major league-leading 14th homer, as San Francisco rallied to New York.

Atlee Hammaker, taking over for reliever Jeff Brantley with two on and two outs in the sixth, retired the only batter he faced and improved to 3-3. Craig Lefferts pitched three innings for his seventh save.

Expos 3, Dodgers 1

MONTREAL — Bryn Smith, 4-1, pitched a four-hitter and Hubie Brooks and Mike Aldrete hit consecutive run-scoring doubles in a three-run fourth inning, leading Montreal past Los Angeles.

The Expos snapped a five-game losing streak.

Phillies 3, Padres 1

PHILADELPHIA — Steve Jeltz hit a two-run homer in the eighth inning to snap a tie as Philadelphia beat San Diego, breaking the Padres' five-game winning streak.

It was only Jeltz' second career home run, his first coming on Sept. 23, 1984. Jeltz went 1,357 at-bats before hitting number two.

Cardinals 6, Braves 1

ATLANTA — Third baseman Ron Gant's fielding error allowed the go-ahead run to score and Willie McGee hit a two-run single in a five-run 10th inning as St. Louis beat Atlanta.

Frank DiPino, 2-0, pitched 1 1-3 innings of one-hit relief, sending the Braves to their seventh loss in nine games.

Reds 7, Cubs 2

CINCINNATI — Eric Davis went 4-for-4 and drove in three runs and Rick Mahler pitched an eight-hitter as Cincinnati beat Chicago, snapping the Cubs' five-game winning streak.

Mahler, 6-4, struck out six and walked three en route to his third complete game of the season.

Mahler also had a bunt single to spark a four-run, fourth-inning.

After two walks in the fourth put runners on first and second with one out, Mahler dropped a bunt single to third. Starter Mike Bielecki, 3-2, threw the ball away for a two-base error, allowing one run to score. Chris Sabo, Ken Griffey and Davis followed with RBI singles to make it 4-0.

On finding right NBA 'dog and was Sunday Silence lucky

Battles

Usually by this time, a sentimental favorite has been picked, but this year it really has been a drab NBA postseason playoff series.

Everybody knows the Lakers are going to win. It's just a question of the victim.

Before it all started, the Cleveland Cavaliers and Utah Jazz had a special appeal about them. The Chicago Bulls had Michael Jordan, of course, but I wanted someone that would get past the first round.

CLEVELAND? Why would any one be interested in the Cavaliers?

Although not much serious heed is paid the NBA during its five and a half month exhibition season, the Cavs, it was rumored, were playing well and they were so bad for so many years....I know, it's not much of an excuse, but it's the only one I have.

Now, there was a little more logic to the Jazz. First, there was Karl Malone, who played here once, and the fact that I'd been to the Salt Palace, one of two NBA arenas I've been in, only it was to see a hockey game.

Then, the conference final with the Lakers last year. The Jazz were a coming team and couldn't wait for this year when they would grow up.

The Suns may as well be on the moon for all I know about them, and the Bulls had surprised the Cavs, but that would just make it that much easier for the Knicks to reach the conference finals, not having to play Cleveland.

NO ONE is going to root for a team that will be eliminated in the second round and, besides, the Pistons were too good for either of them.

Still, it's all academic. The Lakers not only are going to win it all, but make it an appreciation farewell present to Kareem.

Saturday the Lakers took the next inexorable step toward that goal, beating the Suns.

Chicago, meanwhile, trumped Detroit's home court edge in the Eastern final by beating the Pistons in Detroit Sunday. In so doing, there was no sign that Michael Jordan is cooling off.

It took long enough, but, at last, I may have found a team for whom to root. Now, maybe, the playoffs will get interesting.

THOROUGHBREDS are a lot like heavyweights. No matter how good they look, you never know what you've got until he steps into the ring against a Louis, Marciano, Ali, Holmes or Tyson. All too often, it's a litter case.

I guess that's the way it is with Houston, of whom so much was expected.

Trainer Wayne Lukas was so enamored with Houston's lines, he bid a large fortune for the horse at the Keeneland auctions.

After the eighth place finish, it was felt that the wet track might have been a factor. Then, for the Preakness, the jockey was changed. Another plus was the shorter distance for Houston, who showed so much early foot in the Derby.

But again it was Sunday Silence with favored Easy Goer challenging. It was a classic finish and the only surprise was the TV crew didn't remark on a possible cause for a foul claim until it was made.

The undisciplined Sunday Silence was all over the track and jockey Valenzuela not only bumped Easy Goer, but might have whipped Pat Day a time or two.

Even Easy Goer turned his head and you could hear him in his best Gary Larson saying, "Hey, man, what's wrong with you?"

If it had been a hockey game, it would have brought a five-minute major. If it had been a baseball game, the dugouts would have emptied. If it had been an NFL game, there would have been offsetting personal foul penalties.

And if I had been on the review board....

Calgary's 4-2 win evens series

By HOWARD ULMAN

MONTREAL (AP) — The Flames finally found their first-strike capability. The Canadiens were second-best the rest of the way.

Calgary trailed 1-0 in each of the first three games of the Stanley Cup finals and lost two of them. But the Flames got the opening goal in Sunday night's fourth game and beat Montreal 4-2.

The best-of-7 series, tied at two wins apece, continues in Calgary Tuesday night. Game 6 will be back in Montreal Thursday night.

"It's nice to go ahead for a change," said Doug Gilmour, whose ninth playoff goal broke a scoreless tie with 8:04 left in the second period. "If you don't get the first goal, you always end up fighting back."

From the Flames' standpoint, the game had been frighteningly familiar to the 1986 series, their only other visit to the finals.

IN BOTH championship rounds, Calgary won the opener and lost the next two games. Montreal won the fourth game, 1-0, in 1986. The same result seemed entirely possible before Gilmour scored.

The Canadiens won the 1986 series in five games. But sparked by Gilmour's goal, the Flames ended, once and for all, the relevance of any questions about a repeat of their failure of three years earlier.

Montreal's Bob Gainey thought his team had gotten beyond its troubles in Sunday night's first period. The Canadiens were outshot 13-3 in that period and ended it by killing off 1:41 of a two-man Calgary advantage.

"We started to recover from our problems in the first period," Gainey said. "Then the first goal knocked it out of us."

Joe Mullen's power-play goal made the score 2-0 with 1:17 left in the second period. That enabled the Flames to play more defensively and the Canadiens were forced to attack, a style they're not used to playing.

"The key is to get a goal or two lead," Flames Coach Terry Crisp said.

"We turned up the heat near the end of the game and gave them opportunities," Gainey said.

MONTREAL'S Russ Courtnall cut the lead to 2-1 with 9:01 left in the game before Al MacInnis connected for Calgary with 1:38 to play.

Calgary was 36-4-4 in the regular season and is 11-1 in the playoffs when it scored the first goal. Its records when allowing the first goal are 18-13-5 in the regular season and 3-5 in the playoff.

Montreal lost its leads in each of the first three games but won two of them. Calgary never relinquished its advantage in Game 4.

Opportunism was the most important factor in Gilmour's goal.

He was coming out of the penalty box as Montreal's Bobby Smith, who didn't see him, was preparing to pass the puck across the ice. Gilmour stepped in front of the pass, intended for Chris Chelios, intercepted it on the center faceoff dot, broke in alone and beat goalie Patrick Roy with a 10-foot wrist shot.

Poll shows fame may elude Pete

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. (AP) — The dirt on Pete Rose's uniform may be more remembered than the dirt on his image when he comes up for a Hall of Fame vote in 1992, but he may not get the 75 percent approval required for induction, according to a Palm Beach Post survey.

The Post reported that it had contacted 68 Hall of Fame voters from the Baseball Writers Association of America, the official balloting body, to measure Rose's approval rating.

THOSE WHO had a firm opinion supported Rose's induction by a margin of nearly 2-1, even if it is determined that he bet on games involving the Cincinnati Reds, the team he manages, and he is suspended for life.

"He (Rose) would have to be guilty of homicide not to get my vote," Bob Verdi of the Chicago Tribune said. "Nothing would change my mind that he should go into the Hall of Fame unanimously and first-time."

HERE ARE the major findings of the survey:

— If Rose is suspended for life, 54.4 percent of the voters polled said they still would support his induction.

— That 54.4 pecent drops dramatically if evidence shows that Rose bet against the Reds, but 32 percent maintained that even that wouldn't make them vote against Rose.

— If Rose is suspended one year for betting on games other than those involving the Reds, that wouldn't be enough to stop any of the voters responding from supporting his induction.

— A sizable group, 16.2 percent of those contacted, declined comment, some because they wanted to wait until the findings of baseball Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti's investigation are made public.

In order to be inducted, a player must be named on 75 percent of the ballots returned. Last time, 447 voters participated. The Post's survey represented approximately 15 percent of that total and indicated that the 75 percent approval may not be present at this time.

Rose's supporters placed sole emphasis on his on-field accomplishments. He has more hits (4,256) and played in more winning games (1,972) than any player in major-league history.

Lynn leads Tigers to win

Associated Press

Fred Lynn hopes a two-run double that dropped between three fielders mean more than just one victory.

"It was like a door opening," said Lynn, who began Sunday with a .191 average. "You need something postive out of a negative sometimes. You need that door. I think we're on the upswing now."

Lynn had three hits, including the double, leading Detroit past the Kansas City Royals 4-2 for the Tigers' first three-game sweep this season. The double landed between shortstop Kurt Stillwell, left fielder Pat Tabler and center fielder Gary Thurman.

Dick Tracewski, managing the Tigers while Sparky Anderson is home in California recuperating from exhaustion, wasn't surprised to see the ball drop.

"That's why they call it the Bermuda Triangle out there," said Tracewski, who has led the Tigers to three straight victories in Anderson's absence. "On anything hit to short right field or short left filed like that, anything can happen."

Indians 2, Orioles 0

BALTIMORE — Rich Yett, 4-0-2, Scott Bailes and Doug Jones combined on a five-hitter and Cleveland scored two unearned runs in the second inning.

Blue Jays 9, White Sox 3

CHICAGO — Nelson Liriano had three hits, including a go-ahead double in the sixth inning, and Toronto swept the three-game series.

Twins 6, Rangers 1

ARLINGTON, Texas — Gene Larkin hit a game-tying single in the eighth inning and Carmen Castillo followed with a go-ahead double.

Francisco Oliveras, 1-2, won his first major-league game, allowing four hits in seven innings, striking out three and walking none in his second start. Juan Berenguer finished with hitless relief for his first save.

Angels 12, Brewers 9

ANAHEIM, Calif. — Claudell Washington homered twice and drove in four runs and Bill Schroeder hit his second career grand slam. Washington hit an RBI double in the first, a two-run homer in the second and a solo homer in the sixth, his fifth of the season. He also singled in the eighth.

Devon White homered for the fourth consecutive game. His eighth-inning homer gave him seven this season.

Kirk McCaskill allowed 11 hits and seven runs in four-plus innings. Dan Petry, 1-0, won for the first time since last June 10, when he beat Kansas City 1-0 on a three-hitter.

Yankees 6, Mariners 2

SEATTLE — Rookie Clay Parker pitched a five-hitter and struck out 10 in his third major-league start.

Athletics 5, Red Sox 4

OAKLAND, Calif. — Dave Parker snapped a tie with a bases-loaded single in a four-run fifth inning as Oakland beat Roger Clemens, 2-3.

With Oakland trailing 3-1, Tony Phillips hit an RBI single and Ron Hassey homered to snap an 0-for-25 slump. Luis Polonia's single tied the score and Parker singled in two runs, extending his hitting streak to nine games.

3-time champ just a spectator

By STEVE HERMAN

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A puff of white smoke and a groan from the crowd signaled the failure of Johnny Rutherford's dramatic last-ditch effort.

That left eight former winners in the record-setting, 33-car field for next Sunday's Indianapolis 500 and three-time champion Rutherford as part of the crowd of more than 400,000 that is expected to watch the 73rd edition of the 500-mile classic.

Qualifications ended on Sunday as two cars quickly filled the final spots in the lineup and four more got in by bumping cars that already had qualified at slower speeds.

The last of the drivers bumped was Rutherford, whose 213.097 mph qualifying effort from earlier Sunday was nudged off the board by Rich Vogler's 213.239 with less than 15 minutes left in the final day of time trials.

It is the second consecutive year that Vogler has been the final qualifier, bumping a former Indy winner. In 1988, he put a car into the field in the last moments, knocking Gordon Johncock out of the race.

"I hate to see that happen, but what happens happens in racing," Vogler said. "I know that Johnny Rutherford and Johncock are two people who kind of understand that. They've raced for a living for a long, long time. I don't know, maybe that means I'm gonna win this race some day."

Rutherford was hoping to earn his 25th start in the race, a number topped only by A.J. Foyt's 32. In fact, he was in one of Foyt's backup cars when he made it onto the 2½-mile oval less than 60 seconds before the gun went off to signal the end of qualifications.

If an attempt is started before the gun goes off, the driver can finish the four-lap, 10-mile run. Rutherford turned a reported 217 mph on his warmup lap, but the engine gave way in a billow of smoke seconds after he took the green flag.

The average speed for the field, headed by defending champion Rick Mears, is a record 216.588 mph, smashing the previous mark of 210.280 set in 1986.

Mears, who is favored to become the first repeat champion since Al Unser in 1971, will start the race from the pole position for a record fifth time. He broke his own one- and four-lap records on the first day of qualifications May 14 and will start on the inside of the front row with a 223.885 mph average.

Unser, a four-time winner, averaged 223.471 for a spot alongside his Penske Racing teammate in the middle of the front row. Brazil's Emerson Fittipaldi took the outside at 222.329 after a crash in practice kept Danny Sullivan, the third Penske teammate, from qualifying until the second weekend.

The former winners who will start the race are Mears, Unser, Sullivan, Foyt, Mario Andretti, Johncock, Bobby Rahal and Tom Sneva.

Four rookies also made it, including John Jones, Scott Pruett, Didier Theys and Bernard Jourdain, who was the slowest qualifier at 213.105 mph.

Bill Vukovich III, the rookie of the year in 1988, was the first qualifier on Sunday with a solid 216.698 mph only minutes after the track opened. Rutherford was next and John Paul Jr., attempting a comeback after serving 28 months in prison on drug-related racketeering charges, was the third qualifier of the day at 211.969, bumping Davy Jones from the lineup.

BULLS

Corzine, the 6-foot-11-inch center who scored 12 points off the bench, echoed Jordan's sentiments. "The big lead in the first half was nice, but the key to this game was how we held off their surge. Detroit is a confident team and when they made that comeback, I think that they were certain they were going to win. But we held our ground. That was the key."

Detroit outscored Chicago by 11-2 to start the fourth quarter and led, 74-73, after a layup by Dennis Rodman with 8:33 remaining. The Bulls regained the lead for good 19 seconds later on a basket by Scottie Pippen. After Hodges hit a 3-pointer with 3:41 left to give the Bulls an 87-81 lead, the Pistons could not get closer than 3 points for the rest of the game.

Hodges made 4 of 7 3-pointers and finished with 14 points. Cartwright had 10 points, Pippen finished with 14 points and 11 rebounds.

Isiah Thomas had a miserable day for Detroit. With Jordan guarding him full time for the first time this year, Thomas was 3 of 18 from the field and finished with 9 points.

"I just didn't have a feel for the ball tonight," said Thomas. "It was a combination of his defense and my not putting the ball in the hole; that's the bottom line. He was giving me some good shots — shots I hit all the time. I just didn't make them."

The Pistons, for their part, were stunned after the game though the general sentiment was that their own wretched play rather than the Bulls' effort had been their undoing.

"They were playing good, but we were playing badly," said Mark Aguirre, the Piston forward, who joined the team in February. "That first quarter was the worst we've played since I've been here."

Dennis Rodman, the 6-8 forward who usually guards Jordan, agreed. "He didn't beat us," Rodman said after repeated questions about Jordan. "We beat ourselves. This may help bring us back down to earth. It'll focus us. We'll go out there and break some arms, break some legs. We can't be down, 0-2."

Missions sink Captains

Associated Press

San Antonio's Dave Hansen slapped a two-run triple in an eighth-inning rally that lifted the Missions to a 5-4 win over the Shreveport Captains in Texas League baseball play.

Making his first appearance in a Missions uniform since being sent down from Albuquerque, Dave Walsh pitched an inning of one-hit ball to notch the victory Sunday.

With the Missions trailing 4-2, Wayne Kirby led off the eighth with a walk. San Antonio's Joe Kesselmark followed with a single but Kirby was thrown out trying to make it to third.

Then, Eric Mangham cracked a double to the right-field gap, with Kesselmark going to third. Hansen extended his hitting streak to three games. He rapped a shot to the wall for a triple, scoring both runners.

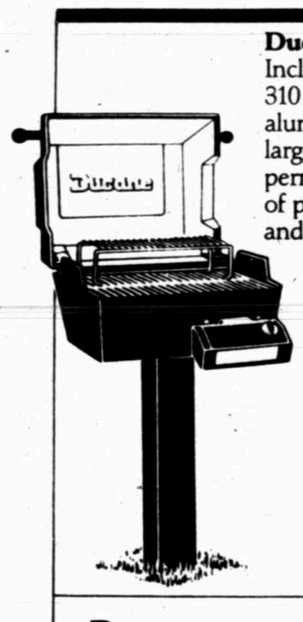

Following an intentional walk to Luis Lopez, Brian Traxler, pinch-hitting for Carlos Hernandez, hit a fly ball deep enough to center to bring in Hansen with the eventual winning run.

BALTIMORE — In the Belmont Stakes on June 10, Sunday Silence will try to become the first horse to win racing's Triple Crown since Affirmed in 1978.

Easy Goer will try to avoid becoming only the second horse ever to finish second in each leg of the series. The first was his sire, Alydar, who was second to Affirmed in all three races.

Sunday Silence, who beat Easy Goer by 2½ lengths in a dismal Kentucky Derby on May 6 and then outdueled him by a nose in a magnificent Preakness Stakes here Saturday, will leave for New York by van Monday.

The colt will be bedded down at Belmont Park in the stables of Richard Lundy, a former assistant to Charlie Whittingham, Sunday's Silence's trainer.

"He came out of the race just perfect," Whittingham said at the Pimlico stables Sunday morning.

"Not a cut or a scratch on him. I think the Belmont might be the easiest of the three races for him. He's got fewer horses to beat. He's tough. He likes to run and likes to win," he said.

Arthur Hancock III, Sunday Silence's principal owner, said he was more confident about winning the Belmont than the Derby or Preakness.

"I always thought that the one race he'd have the best chance to win was the Belmont," Hancock said Sunday.

"Our horse is bred to go the distance, and he's trained by a man who can train a horse to go a mile and a half better than anyone in the world."

Easy Goer, who was beaten as the odds-on favorite in both the Derby at 4-to-5 and the Preakness at 3-to-5, left Pimlico by van at 6:45 Sunday morning for his home base at Belmont Park.

"We'll try again," said Shug McGaughey, his trainer.

"I sure hope this doesn't turn out like Affirmed and Alydar."

TUESDAY, MAY 23, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Writers, composers and media people can look forward to an almost magical year. Accepting a leadership role and other responsibilities puts extra stress on you. Protect your health by eating a nutritionally balanced diet. This is not a time for frivolity or timidity. Put your best foot forward with influential people. The secret trial you have endured within a relationship will be resolved by October.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer and cook Rosemary Clooney, "Dynasty" star Joan Collins, Australian tennis great John Newcombe, comedian "Scatman" Crothers, boxer "Marvelous Marvin" Hagler, singer Helen O'Connell, big band leader-clarinetist Artie Shaw, baseball great Zack Wheat, actor Douglas Fairbanks Sr.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Refuse to be rushed into anything today. You will have to handle a workplace situation with kid gloves. Do not broadcast what you are planning to do. Consult people behind the scenes.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Expansive moves undertaken now will bring you an extra measure of success in the fall. A romantic relationship is enchanced by a truly loving attitude. Welcome an opportunity to travel.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Your earning potential gets a boost, thanks to events at a distance. Your perception of a relationship is right on target. Go easy where spending is concerned. Save money for future investments.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You finally find the remedy you have been looking for. You have neither the time nor the patience for the nonsense necessary to keep a failing relationship alive. Cut your losses.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Limit your social obligations until you have set financial matters straight again. A chance encounter could lead to the opportunity of a lifetime. Use your untapped potential to win big! Loved ones are supportive.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Financial security is an important goal, but so is a full family life. Prejudice may be rearing its head at work or school. Help others deal with it. Set a good example.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Extensive research may be necessary before you find a solution to a business problem. Seek better protection for your assets. Travel for fun this summer. New faces and places are a source of inspiration.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Spending time in the great outdoors appeals to you. Duty must come before pleasure if you seek success. Know your own priorities. Do not let others saddle you with their problems.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Make sure you consult experts before buying or selling real estate. Mate's ideas have a wonderful ring to them. Do some research before making a commitment. Check any financial figures twice.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Shore up your finances. Although you want people to like you, it is more important for you to know that you have done the right thing. Remain true to your ideals.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A long-cherished wish could come true. You are surprised by your own strength. A financial problem can be solved now that it is in the spotlight. Probe beneath the surface.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look to the future with confidence. You have both feet on the ground and your keen intellect propels you forward. Be right on the spot when an important decision is announced.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠AKJ1095 ♡J3 ◇876 ♣62
The bidding has proceeded:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ◇ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 3 ♣ | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?
A.—This is not a question of which game you want to play; it's a matter of whether there's a slam. Since partner might need reassurance about the quality of your spade suit, jump to four spades. That shows a very good suit with little or nothing on the side.

Q.2—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q94 ♡AJ7 ◇64 ♣AQJ98
The bidding has proceeded:

| West | North | East | South |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ◇ | 1 ♠ | Pass | ? |

What do you bid now?
A.—For his vulnerable one-spade overcall, partner should have a reasonable five-card suit and a fair hand. You have a very sound opening bid, and the combined assets should produce game. Jump to four spades.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠7 ♡AKQ5 ◇KQJ102 ♣873
The bidding has proceeded:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ◇ | 2 ♣ | 2 ◇ | 3 ♣ |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?
A.—Since there is a strong likelihood that partner is short in clubs, prospects for game are bright, and it costs nothing to investigate an alternative contract en route. The way the auction has developed, partner could easily have a four- or even five-card heart suit. Bid three hearts. If partner doesn't raise hearts, we would take our chances in five diamonds.

Q.4—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠K1095 ♡Q103 ◇K87 ♣K62

The bidding has proceeded:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| Pass | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What do you bid now?
A.—Your hand is worth more than 11 points in support of spades—your kings are undervalued in the point count, and your fourth trump must be upgraded 1 point. Despite your balanced shape, jump to three spades.

Q.5—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q10952 ♡8 ◇A982 ♣QJ7
The bidding has proceeded:

| North | East | South | West |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♡ | Pass | 1 ♠ | Pass |
| 3 ♡ | Pass | ? | |

What do you bid now?
A.—Ideally, you would like a bid such as three no spades to show a five-card suit and stoppers in the unbid suits. Since that is illegal, choose three no trump. The danger with three spades is that, if partner doesn't have three-card support, you could bypass your only makable game of three no trump.

Q.6—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KQ10 ♡853 ◇K105 ♣AQ82
The bidding has proceeded:

| South | West | North | East |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1 ♠ | Pass | 1 ◇ | Pass |
| 1 NT | Pass | 2 ♠ | Pass |
| 3 ◇ | Pass | 4 ◇ | Pass |
| ? | | | |

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's auction is game-forcing, so a pass is out of the question. Your duty now is to show him one feature of your hand that he does not know about—your good spade fragment. Bid four spades. You can't have four-card support because you didn't raise immediately.

Signed copy of 'Gone With The Wind' sells for $20,000

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A hard-bound edition of "Gone With The Wind," with signatures of 23 cast and crew members from the legendary MGM film, was sold for $20,000 at a Hollywood auction at the Ebell Theater.

Other remnants of Hollywood's heyday auctioned Saturday included a jacket worn by Elvis Presley and tap shoes worn by Fred Astaire, said Barry Vilkin of Camden House Auctioneers Inc.

"Some people buy from the heart when money's no object," Vilkin said. "Maybe that's another explanation why these things sell for as much as they do."

The 1938 edition of Margaret Mitchell's Southern romance novel belonged to actor Fred Crane, who played Brent Tarlton, one of the twin's vying for Scarlett O'Hara's affection in the movie's opening sequence.

The book was valued at $25,000 to $30,000.

Vilkin said at least 350 guests were on hand when a vest worn by Clark Gable in "Gone With The Wind" sold for $3,800, nearly double its estimated value. A Civil War coat worn by Gable went for $6,000.

Vilkin declined to identify the bidders.

"I think movies are a common denominator amongst all of us no matter what we do. We all have great memories," Vilkin said. "In Southern California, where the industry started...these things are thrown away. It's amazing the stories I've heard.

"One guy told me, 'My basement got flooded. That's where I had all the stuff stored.' I'm hoping to flush out the treasures that are out here before they get destroyed. We have so little of the vintage Hollywood of the '30s and '40s."

A bidder paid $9,000 for the black patent leather tap shoes worn by Astaire in "The Gay Divorcee," and someone paid $5,000 for a jacket worn by Presley in "Double Trouble."

A 126-page script from "The Wizard of Oz," dated July 5, 1938, sold for $15,000.

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Actor Martin Sheen is miffed at "certain irresponsible media personalities" for the way they reacted to his declaration as honorary mayor of this star-studded beach community.

Sheen shook up some of his neighbors by designating Malibu a nuclear-free haven for the homeless and aliens. On Sunday, he had more to say.

"I regret that my concern for the poor and the environment was so dishonestly misinterpreted and misused to perpetrate a cruel hoax on 4 million Americans who are already broken beyond any measure of understanding," Sheen said in a statement.

"I am deeply troubled and profoundly saddened by certain irresponsible media personalities who have abused their power to gain ratings by treading on misery and suffering."

Sheen's declaration last week was a bit ill-received.

Johnny Carson poked fun at it in his monologue on NBC's "Tonight" show, and the marquee at the Malibu Inn and restaurant briefly read "Dump Martin Sheen."

NEW YORK (AP) — Gumshoes trying to crack the case of why ABC's "Moonlighting" was canceled have at least two suspects — Bruce Willis and Cybill Shepherd.

The show's stars apparently spent much of their time arguing with each other and with the series' creator, Glenn Gordon Caron, said an ABC official quoted in this week's People magazine.

"They were working in a pressure cooker," said the official, who was not identified.

The tongue-in-cheek detective series had its final episode earlier this month, after four seasons spiced with snappy repartee and double-entendres. It made a star of Willis and was a comeback vehicle for Shepherd.

But the show's real turnaround came with Shepherd's 1987 pregnancy, which plagued her with sickness and left her unable to work the show's long hours.

NEW YORK (AP) — Prince Philip says the dream of rebuilding London's Globe Theater began as a "slightly crazy notion" but will become a tribute to William Shakespeare.

Prince Philip

The effort to raise $33 million to recreate a replica of the theater, where the Bard made his debut as an actor, is a "grand scheme," the Duke of Edinburgh told reporters Sunday.

The prince was the guest of honor at a dinner where actor Sam Wanamaker and representatives of the Shakespeare Globe Centre finished a U.S. fund-raising tour. Wanamaker initiated the restoration project.

The prince said Wanamaker persevered over those who wanted to build houses on the site, adding that the idea was initially considered a "slightly crazy notion."

The Globe replica is scheduled to open in 1992 on Shakespeare's birthday, April 23. The original Globe was built in 1599; it was destroyed in 1613 when a cannon fired during a performance of "Henry VIII" set fire to the thatched roof. It was rebuilt in 1614 but torn down in 1644 for tenement housing. Today the site is an empty lot.

Winfrey

ATLANTA (AP) — Talk show host Oprah Winfrey received an honorary doctorate from Morehouse College and gave $1 million to establish a scholarship at the private men's college.

"The world awaits what you have to give," she said after receiving an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree during commencement ceremonies Sunday. "The pressure is on."

Ms. Winfrey said she established the Oprah Winfrey Endowment Scholarship Fund because she felt she should share her good fortune. She chose Morehouse because the students and faculty treated her warmly during a January 1988 visit, including sending her a sweatshirt, she said.

"I wear that sweatshirt like I know everybody at Morehouse," she said. "Now that I have this doctorate, people are going to have to get a special dispensation to talk to me."

The college is distinguished by at least one famous graduate, Martin Luther King Jr.

King's son, Dexter, also attended the school, which is the site the Martin Luther King Jr. International Chapel.

Earlier Sunday, Ms. Winfrey told the congregation at West Hunter Street Baptist Church, near downtown Atlanta, that she tries to keep a positive attitude because to do otherwise "damages your spirit."

Ms. Winfrey recounted stories from her youth while speaking to an overflow crowd, calling her life "a long journey from just a little colored girl to an African-American woman."

S&L bailout sidetracked by politics

By DAVE SKIDMORE

AP Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress and the Bush administration, once intent on rushing to the rescue of savings and loan depositors, have paused to wage an ardent battle over a seemingly arcane accounting question.

Should the savings and loan bailout be on-budget or off-budget?

One side — composed principally of House Democrats — wants to include bailout spending in the budget but give it a special exemption from the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law, to avoid the law's automatic spending cuts in the overall budget.

The other side — the Republican administration — is arguing for an off-budget plan that would borrow $50 billion for the bailout without counting it toward the deficit.

A third variation — pushed by Senate Democrats — includes the spending in the budget but loads all of it into the 1989 fiscal year ending Sept. 30. That indirectly evades Gramm-Rudman because the deadlines that could have triggered spending cuts for this year already have expired.

The terminology of the debate is obscure and the arguments confusing to nearly everyone but a government accountant. Occasionally the debaters throw in a jibe about dishonest accounting or the breakdown of budget discipline.

To the taxpayer, it doesn't seem to matter that much. All of the sides, after all, simply are proposing different ways of getting around the Gramm-Rudman law and no matter what plan is eventually adopted, the public ends up picking up most of the tab, upwards of $300 billion over 30 years.

But to the debaters, it matters a lot. Congressional Democrats think their position is important enough to risk being blamed for delaying S&L legislation and allowing the crisis to get worse.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady is threatening to recommend a veto of any bill with on-budget financing, inviting Democrats to tag the administration with a similar obstructionist label.

Publicly, the arguments run something like this.

Democrats: Our plan is cheaper. It allows the government to borrow at a lower cost. And, it's more honest because all of the S&L spending will show up in the deficit.

Republicans: Your plan destroys any spending discipline imposed by Gramm-Rudman. If adopted, Congress will be tempted to evade Gramm-Rudman to pay for any costly problem and that threat will scare the financial markets into driving up all interest rates, negating any savings produced by the on-budget plan.

Merging accounting firms ease layoff fears

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Moving swiftly to allay fears that a merger of their firms would mean closing numerous offices and laying off hundreds of people, the chairmen of Ernst & Whinney and Arthur Young & Co. said Friday that they expected actually to increase staffing after the two huge accounting firms combined.

"We have no intention of undertaking a rationalization that would include cutting a lot of people," said William L. Gladstone, Arthur Young's chairman, at a news conference at Rockefeller Center in New York held to announce the merger.

"Most of our people are involved with serving clients," said Ray J. Groves, Ernst & Whinney's chairman. "That doesn't change when you put two firms like ours together."

Nonetheless, both executives conceded that some staff reductions would naturally occur as the firms found areas of duplication.

They pointed to the research and training areas as being obvious candidates for pruning.

And even as total employment, particularly of highly skilled accounting and tax specialsts, grew, selective layoffs could occur, they suggested.

Increases in overall employment would result naturally from the firms' normal growth, they added.

The combined entity, Ernst & Young, would be led jointly by Groves, 53, and by Gladstone, 57.

The giant firm, which will be based in New York, will employ 70,000 people worldwide, working out of 500 offices in nearly 100 countries. They are expected to generate more than $4.3 billion in revenue this year, a total that would make Ernst & Young the world's largest professional services network.

Industry analysts expect the pact to receive the necessary two-thirds approval when the two firms' partners vote on the accord in June, though the merger could run into opposition from partners in Canada, where Ernst & Whinney and Arthur Young are fierce rivals.

People who follow accounting say the biggest selling point for the merger is that the two firms complement each other extremely well.

Sale of Eastern shuttle expected this week

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — The sale of the Eastern shuttle is expected to move closer to completion Monday, but it will not be known until the end of the week whether Donald J. Trump, the New York investor, or America West Airlines Inc. ends up with the Eastern asset, people involved in Eastern's bankruptcy proceeding said.

The sources said Judge Burton R. Lifland of the Federal Bankruptcy Court is expected to issue a conditional order on the shuttle sale Monday that would give America West until the end of week to arrange financing for its offer.

The bid could be as much as $90 million more than that in the agreement with Trump.

The agreement to sell the shuttle to Trump for $365 million is due to expire on Friday.

Thus, America West would have to show the court before then that it can finance the deal.

People involved in the case said the committee representing the unsecured creditors favored the sale to America West since it would bring a considerable premium.

Meanwhile, intense efforts were being made over the weekend to meet a deadline set by Lifland and David I. Shapiro, the examiner the judge appointed to try to find a way to revive Eastern.

"It's time to put up or shut up," Shapiro said last week at a court hearing, adding that anyone who wanted to be taken seriously should put at least $100 million in financing on the table by Monday.

People involved in the efforts to put together bids said that the only party that remained in the running was Joseph Ritchie, a major commodity dealer in Chicago, who in his initial proposal said he would be willing to proceed with a bid even if a deal to sell the shuttle had been reached.

America West, which has its hub in Phoenix and wants to expand in the East, has two offers on the table.

Under one, the shuttle would be sold for $415 million if Eastern also agreed to sell 10 of its Boeing 757's for $336 million.

Under the other, the shuttle would be sold for $375 million, but without the 21 planes included in the Trump deal.

The value of the planes has been put as high as $80 million, thus making America West's offer higher than Mr. Trump's.

Trump, however, has put together his financing and is ready to take over the operation of the shuttle by the end of this month.

The strike, which began in early March, has crippled Eastern's operations and forced it to file under Chapter 11 of the Bankruptcy Code.

The walkout has severely cut the shuttle's market share even though Eastern has been operating all of its shuttle flights.

The effort of a group of investors led by William Howard and Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. to buy the whole carrier, appears to have run out of steam, people close to the effort said over the weekend.

The sources said Howard's proposal was not well received by the creditors committee, many of whom were said to believe that it brought no new financing to restart the carrier, did not have an adequate business plan and did not treat the unsecured creditors well in terms of reimbursing their claims.

Under the Howard proposal, $125 million is the most that would be put into the deal, and it would be designated for the shuttle, which would become a separate susdidiary.

Thus, the sale of the shuttle, which is expected to be approved by the court Monday, would take a crucial piece out of the Howard plan.

The dollar hit a 19-month high against the Japanese yen Monday as the Bush administration seeks new ways to stabilize the currency.

U.S. seeking new ways to keep dollar stable

By PETER T. KILBORN
New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Worried that its policy to keep the dollar stable is floundering after more than three years of relative success, Washington is seeking new, more flexible alternatives.

The current approach relies primarily on promises the United States and its allies make to coordinate their economies and run them in mutually beneficial ways, with governments intervening by selling or buying currencies only as a tool to prevent unwanted turmoil.

But the promises have proved difficult to keep, so administration officials are now weighing a method that would allow markets more latitude to push the dollar up or down.

They attribute the new approach to the president's chief economic adviser, Michael J. Boskin, and the budget director, Richard G. Darman, the former deputy Treasury secretary.

Officials say that Darman and Boskin are trying to sell the approach to the Treasury, which manages exchange-rate policy and which has defended the status quo in its public remarks. The Federal Reserve is receptive to the idea, the officials say.

CREDIT CARDS

Some big banks raising credit card interest rates

New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — The cost of using a credit card is going up for many consumers.

Money center banks are raising the interest they charge on their credit cards — from less than 18 percent to almost 20 percent — and some regional banks across the country are following suit.

Although banks in Georgia cannot raise their rates above 18 percent, quite a few residents in the state will find it costlier to say "charge it" because they hold cards from out-of-state financial institutions.

"Credit cards are a nationwide product," said Jerry D. Craft, executive vice president of First Wachovia Corp. card services. "Nationwide consumer banking is here through credit cards. "There are many Georgia consumers who have seen their rate go up, whether they be variable or fixed, because they have out-of-state credit cards."

Craft estimated that about half of the credit cards used in Georgia are from out-of-state banks. In fact, he said, there probably isn't a state in this country where 50 percent of the credit card customers hold cards issued by banks in the states where they live.

Protestors return Exxon cards

HOUSTON (AP) — For the past two months, the employees who answer Exxon Corp. credit card inquiries have been under a state of siege with more than 17,000 canceling their credit cards to protest the Alaskan oil spill.

Workers at Exxon's Credit Card Center in Houston are wearing special gloves to handle oil-soaked letters. They spend hours piecing together torn-up credit cards in order to determine the account numbers that customers want canceled. They apologize on behalf of their company dozens of times a day.

The crisis is taking its toll throughout the Exxon organization.

Employees, confronted daily by criticisms of Exxon in the media and by friends and family members, are questioning their faith in the corporate giant.

"It's been deeply painful for every employee that I've worked with, talked with and met," said Larry Stockman, a psychologist on retainer with Exxon. "They feel devastated by what's happened."

Oil prices turn lower

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices headed lower after Friday's gain as traders prepare for expiration of June contracts.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, June contracts for West Texas Intermediate were down 15 cents to $20.45 at midmorning. The crude climbed 40 cents to close at $20.60 Friday.

The July crude oil contract slipped 6 cents to $18.74 a barrel. It will become the near-month contract Tuesday after expiration of the June contract today.

Jerry Samuels, a broker with Shearson Lehman Hutton Inc., said trading in the June contract was particularly hectic in the final minutes of the session.

Most of the activity was due to maneuvering by traders ahead of the weekend and before the final day of trading in the June contract, he said.

Uncertainty about what may occur at the June 5 gathering of OPEC members discouraged crude prices from moving sharply in either direction, energy traders said.

At the Vienna meeting, members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries will review their current output quota of 18.5 million barrels a day. There has been speculation that the ceiling will be raised.

Prices of refined petroleum products traded on the Mercantile Exchange moved slightly higher.

The June contract for wholesale gasoline, which rose 1.26 cents on Thursday, settled at 65.19 cents a gallon, up 0.66 cent.

Wholesale home heating oil for June delivery increased 0.51 cent to 48.06 cents a gallon. The contract had risen 0.41 cent on Thursday.

Dollar surges in heavy trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar surged in heavy European trading this morning and gold prices fell as much as $6.50 an ounce.

The dollar climbed above the key psychological barrier of 2.00 Deutsche marks for the first time since Dec. 19, 1986, and gained 4 cents against the British pound.

In Tokyo the dollar rose despite intervention by the Bank of Japan and closed 1.68 yen higher at 140.45, the first time the dollar has closed above 140 yen since Oct. 28, 1987. Later, in London, it was quoted at 142.55 yen.

In Rome, one trader attributed today's surge to panic-buying based on the market's perception that the Group of Seven industrialized nations could not agree on policies to stabilize currency rates.

Other dollar rates at midmorning, compared with Friday:
—2.0135 West German marks, up from 1.1995
—1.7985 Swiss francs, up from 1.7583

In London, the dollar gained against the British pound and was quoted at 1.5750 compared with 1.6190 late Friday, its best showing since August 1987.

The dollar's rise hit precious metals sharply.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $361.80 a troy ounce, compared with late Friday's $365.75. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $359.25.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.07 a troy ounce, down from Friday's $5.35.

Stocks climb past 2500 mark

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market swept ahead Friday, surmounting the 2,500 level in the Dow Jones industrial average with encouragement from falling interest rates.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials climbed 30.98 points to 2,501.10, extending its gain for the week to 71.40 points.

The last time the average closed above 2,500 was Oct. 13, 1987, when it stood at 2,508.16 six days before Black Monday.

Advancing issues outnumbered declines by nearly 2 to 1 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 1,032 up, 519 down and 461 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board hit a two-month high of 242.41 million shares, up from 177.48 million in the previous session.

The total was swelled by computer program-driven activity linked to a set of expiring options and futures on stock indexes.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Local API chapter to meet Tuesday

From Staff Reports

The Permian Basin chapter of the American Petroleum Institute will meet Tuesday at Green Tree Country Club. The meeting will begin with social hour at 5:30 p.m., followed by dinner at 6:30 p.m.

Guest speaker will be Harold Yates, technical advisor with Exxon U.S.A. His topic will be "The API Response to 1989 Federal Enviromental and Legislative Issues."

Cost of the luncheon is $15 per person.

Government posts record surplus

WASHINGTON (AP) — An unusually large surge in income tax payments helped produce a record $41.45 billion government budget surplus in April, three times the surplus posted in April 1988, the Treasury Department said.

The April surplus was fattened by a $68.53 billion bonanza in individual income tax receipts, up from the $53.33 billion collected in April 1988.

It was the largest monthly surplus on record, surpassing the previous high of $38.9 billion posted in April 1987 and far ahead of last April's $13.77 billion surplus, Treasury officials said.

Fed voted to hold interest rates, minutes say

WASHINGTON (AP) — Policymakers at the Federal Reserve in March voted to hold interest rates steady unless the slowing of economic growth proved inadequate to restrain inflation, according to minutes of the meeting.

The Federal Open Market Committee, noting early signs of a slackening in economic growth, voted 11-1 at its March 28 meeting to leave rates unchanged initially, it was disclosed Friday.

But most members felt monetary policy "should be adjusted more readily and promptly toward greater restraint than toward ease," the minutes said.

Experts: Bush S&L plan costlier than Democrats'

WASHINGTON (AP) — Financial experts called President Bush's savings and loan bailout plan a "banana republic" scheme that will cost taxpayers $30 billion to $50 billion more than a Democratic alternative.

A special task force of the House Budget Committee was told Friday the extra expense of paying for the bailout through 30-year, off-budget bonds to preserve the illusion of deficit reduction will likely be 10 times the $3.8 billion to $4.5 billion the administration has acknowledged.

Holly Farms accepts sweetened ConAgra bid

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Holly Farms Corp., seeking to resolve a six-month-long tug-of-war between ConAgra Inc. and Tyson Foods Inc., says it has accepted a sweetened $1.38 billion buyout bid from ConAgra that replaces a deal rejected by Holly Farms shareholders.

Holly Farms said Sunday ConAgra would acquire the Memphis-based rival poultry processor in a $74.81-a-share stock swap. The bid, worth a total of $1.38 billion at current stock prices, is significantly higher than the $1.1 billion agreement turned down at a Holly Farms shareholders meeting last month and than Tyson's $63.50-a-share, or $1.15 billion, all-cash offer.

Royalty owners plan fight for energy policy

DALLAS (SWN) — The nation's more than two million royalty owners are on the warpath again, over a crippled national energy policy that imperils national security and ignores thievery, according to an industry spokeman.

He said royalty owners are putting on warpaint for battle against federal inaction that ignores stealing from Indians and royalty owners and threatens national security by over-dependence on foreign oil.

"Not since they got hit by the Windfall Profits tax in 1980 have they been so united against the nation's energy policy," says James L. Stafford, Ada, Okla., newly-appointed president and chief executive officer, National Association of Royalty Owners, which is meeting here this week.

He says oil imports are now exceeding domestic production and the nation has suffered the worst oil spill in our hisotry, and yet, "we see terrifying evidence that our national energy policy is being increasingly dedicated to a dependence on imported oil."

"The Exxon spill, rather than spurring some effort to reduce imports by ocean-going tankers, looks like it may come back in the form of yet another tax on the nation's independent oil producers.

"That battered group may again be the sacrificial goat used by Congress to appease the environmentalists, rather than a logical move to tighten up rules on foreign tankers. Congress is again playing a borken fiddle to the wrong tune," Stafford charged.

Stafford said the royalty owners from 31 states attending the Dallas convention are also vitally concerned over the buy-out of energy assets vital to United States energy security by foreign nationals.

He said major refining centers in Louisiana and Texas have recently been purchased by foreign interests and "that puts our energy future on the auction block."

Stafford cited the recent Texaco-Saudi Arabian Oil Company merger as another major concern. "We are importing most of our oil and allowing foreign governments to gain a major foothold in our shrinking domestic oil industry," he added. "We urge a Congressional review of this trend."

Congressional charges of rampant crude oil theft from Indian lands and royalty owners also has NARO members putting on their war paint, adds Stafford.

"We have one oil-state U.S. Senator saying the alleged payment shortage doesn't amount to much and that it only affects a few bbls out of each 200-bbl tank, but stealing is stealing, whether it's oil or the Empire State Building," Stafford says, commending the investigation by the Senate panel probing suspected wide-spread under-reporting of oil runs.

In other action at the 400-delegate convention, NARO elected its first woman to chair the 5,000-plus member organization.

Lubbock CPA Mary Badgett, 56, also the second Texan to take the NARO helm, said she predicted a coming lease boom in natural gas, which would, she predicted, "create a whole new era in leasing that will require royalty owners to gear up with new strategies and new knowledge, otherwide they will be victimized."

She vowed that continuing education of mineral and royalty owners would be a priority in her two year term, aside from a continuing battle for fair play in the governmental and regulatory arenas.

Thrift's plan to leave FSLIC to be rejected

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — Federal regulators plan to reject a request by one of the nation's most profitable savings and loan associations to leave the savings industry's deposit insurance fund in favor of the much stronger fund that insures bank deposits, an official of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said Sunday.

The official said the agency was close to voting against an application by the Great Western Bank of Beverly Hills, Calif., to leave the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corp. for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The FDIC has been viewed as more attractive because it has more than $14 billion in assets, which can be used to cover losses from bank failures. By comparison, the FSLIC fund is effectively depleted as a result of the huge losses and failures in the savings and loan industry.

Great Western's application was considered to be the test case of whether regulators would allow an exodus from the savings industry's insurance fund.

The rejection, which had been anticipated because of the financial impact it would have on the future premium income of the FSLIC, is a clear signal that the government is going to do all it can to keep the healthy members of the FSLIC from leaving the fund.

"I think this shows that we are not going to give loose interpretations on who can and who cannot leave the FSLIC," said the bank board official, who asked not to be identified. "We plan on abiding by the letter of the law."

President Bush has introduced a plan to spend $157 billion over the next 10 years to sell or shut down more than 500 insolvent savings institutions and overhaul the regulatory system.

Under the plan, institutions would also be barred for five years from leaving the savings industry insurance fund.

The bank board official pointed out that the agency's Office of General Counsel had taken a strong position against permitting Great Western to leave the FSLIC and that the two sitting members of the board, M. Danny Wall, chairman, and Lawrence White, were expected to support the recommendation.

A spokeswoman for Great Western said the bank had not yet been notified by the bank board about a decision but expected a decision early this week.

Regulators and members of Congress have expressed concern that if a number of the largest healthy savings institutions leave the FSLIC, it could cripple the fund's long-term flow of insurance premiums and guarantee that taxpayers will have to pick up an even greater cost for the savings and loan industry bailout.

But Great Western and other strong institutions contend that they had nothing to do with the savings and loan debacle. These institutions point out that the savings and loan insurer charges higher premiums than the FDIC, and they say that puts them at a competitive disadvantage with banks and forces them to pay for the sins of others.

Landmark doesn't impress Hewlett, Packard

PALO ALTO, Calif. (AP) — The founders of Hewlett-Packard Co., the $10 billion computer and electronics giant, returned after 50 years to the garage where they started out for the dedication of the building as a state landmark.

It was in the wooden garage that William R. Hewlett and David Packard in 1938 parlayed $538 in capital and an audio oscillator into one of the world's leading electronics companies.

Their firm, which employs 87,000 people, is headquartered a couple of miles away in Palo Alto.

But after poking around the dark and dingy interior, Hewlett and Packard said they did not accept its billing as "birthplace of Silicon Valley," and were not eager to reminisce.

Packard, asked how did it felt to return after half a century, said:

"It makes me feel pretty old and decrepit."

"I feel the same way," said Hewlett.

Although both are billionaires, neither has thought about buying the property at 367 Addison Ave., which has become a favorite photo stop for touring Japanese electronics groups and young Stanford engineers.

"Why would we?" Hewlett said. "It's a bunch of junk."

Packard said it was the first time they'd been back to the garage since 1939. Packard and his wife rented the 1905-vintage wood-shingle house in front and Hewlett rented a cottage out back.

Hewlett, who is 76 today, and Packard, 76, have long retired from daily management of the company, though they remain its largest shareholders. Hewlett resigned as vice chairman of the board in 1987; Packard remains chairman.

Hewlett-Packard's success spurred the growth of the region around Stanford University that became known as Silicon Valley. The area got its name from the silicon wafers used to make most computer chips or semiconductors.

Hewlett said he doesn't think the garage should be called the birthplace of the valley.

"We had practically nothing to do with silicon and we weren't the first (company) in the valley," he said.

About half a dozen electrical products companies were in the San Francisco Bay area in 1938, Hewlett said, including a vacuum tube factory in nearby Redwood City run by Charles Litton. His company later became Litton Industries, a huge manufacturer of high-tech appliances.

A few hundred Hewlett-Packard employees threw a street party outside the garage, complete with balloons, a brass band and food kiosks, but neither of the founders seemed excited about the landmark designation.

"The only trouble is, you can't tear it down now," Hewlett said.

"I'm not very strong on reminiscing," said Packard. "I think we ought to be looking forward instead of backward."

The audio oscillator that the two started out with was a $79.50 model of a $400 machine sold by another company in the 1930s. The oscillator emits various frequencies, allowing the testing of sound equipment, telephones, amplifiers and talking pictures. Walt Disney bought eight Hewlett-Packard oscillators to help make the movie "Fantasia."

Packard couldn't remember how much rent he paid for the house and garage, but guessed it probably was less than $25 a month. The house, in what has become an upscale neighborhood, now rents for $1,650.

MERGER

Arthur Young has a commanding presence in Europe; Ernst & Whinney is a powerhouse in Asia. Both have well-developed North American practices.

Perhaps surprising for enterprises of their size, both firms said a primary reason for their merger was their need to grow — not only in terms of the geographic regions they serve but also in the number of specialists they employ.

They consider this growth essential to accommodate the complexity and global reach of their multinational corporate clients.

"International companies are living in a global economy," Groves said.

"The advantages of a merger like this are obvious to them since they are trying to do the same thing."

At the news conference, the two executives were barraged with questions about whether the formation of Ernst & Young would result in significant cutbacks, such as the closing of offices in the many cities where the firms overlap and the pruning of support staff.

When word of the proposed merger spread earlier this week, work at both firms slowed considerably as anxious employees began fearing for their jobs. Seeking to calm those fears, Groves and Gladstone said that cutbacks would be minimal.

Nonetheless, accounting industry experts said the possibilities for cutting costs had to be one of the factors driving the merger, if only because of the squeeze on profits that afflicts the entire industry.

"When the offices are merged, there will naturally be economies undertaken," said David G. Owens, president of the Owens Strategy Group, a Chicago-based industry consultant.

Douglas Carmichael, a former vice president at the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants who is now an accounting professor at Baruch College in New York, agreed. "I don't think either firm is being driven primarily by a desire to cut costs, but closing offices is inevitable whenever there is overlap," he said.

Ernst & Young's partnership ranks could also thin out. Of the two firms, Arthur Young is the smaller, with 829 partners in the United States compared with Ernst & Whinney's 1,276.

Although acknowledging that the comparison was not exact, analysts note that the recent merger of Mann Judd Landau, a mid-sized accounting firm, into the much larger Touche Ross & Co. resulted in the defection of a number of Mann Judd partners who did not like Touche's operating style.

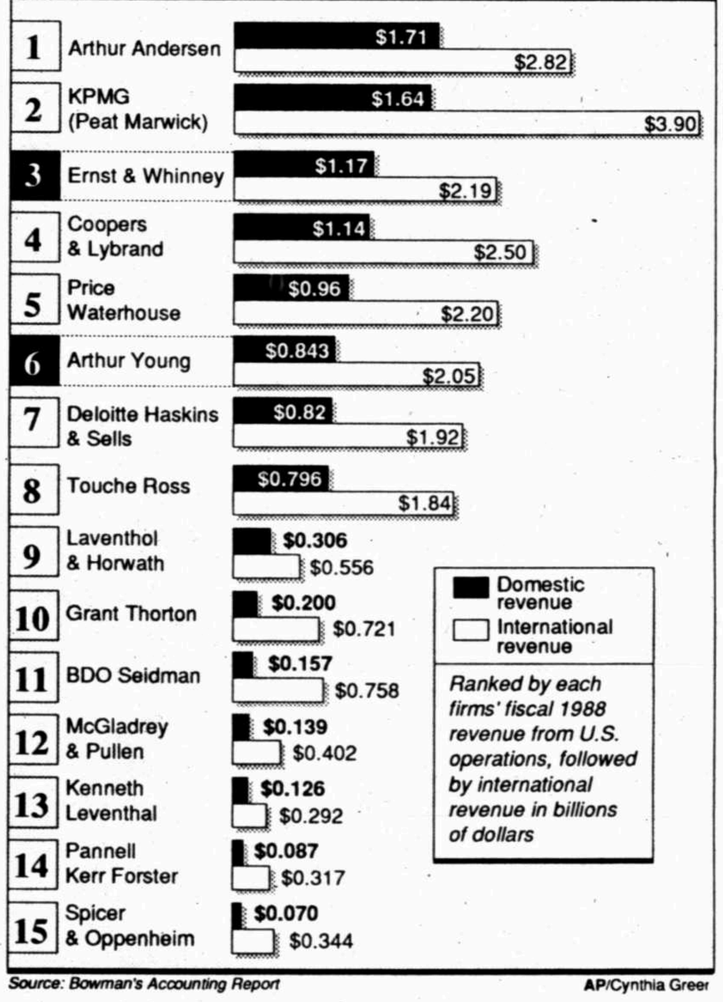

To the extent that Ernst & Whinney could emerge as the dominant force in the combination, analysts say some Arthur Young partners may quit if they cannot bring themselves to accommodate Ernst & Whinney's more centralized, hierarchical management approach.

Nor will the challenges stop there. Groves and Gladstone said their new firm would have more than enough work for two chief executives. In the past, however, attempts at joint management in industry have failed because one executive insisted on being in charge. Some people predict a similar outcome at Ernst & Young.

"There will be one firm that will come to dominate," said Roman Weil, a leading industry consultant and accounting scholar at the University of Chicago. "Co-councils have not worked since the fall of the Roman Empire."

Clients will also need to be courted or reassured.

POLITICS

But, the ardor of both sides has very little to do those arguments and very much to do with the constant dance of politics that surrounds the Republican effort to avoid getting blamed for any future tax increase and the Democratic desire to block further spending cuts.

George Bush got elected to the presidency on his "Read my lips, no new taxes" pledge and Democrats would dearly love to force him to mouth different words.

Democrats know there's an advantage to their plan beyond any savings it might produce. Even with the threat of automatic spending cuts removed, an on-budget S&L plan would embarrass Bush and increase the pressure on him to abandon his tax pledge.

The Senate proposal would add $50 billion to the 1989 deficit, ballooning it within range of the all-time record of $221 billion set in 1986. Not an auspicious start for Bush.

The House method, approved last Thursday by the Ways and Means Committee, adds only about $10 billion to the 1989 deficit but it inflates 1990 red ink by about $25 billion and the 1991 budget gap by about $15 billion, destroying any hope of maintaining an illusion of progress on the deficit.

The maneuvering between Congress and the administration has deteriorated now into a game of chicken, with each side trying to blame the other for holding up the S&L rescue and hoping in the end that neither side will be willing to scuttle the rescue over the budget question.

The next hurdle is the full House. Chances are good that an on-budget plan could pass there in early June. Then comes a conference committee between the House and Senate, where the Senate delegation will be led by Banking Committee Chairman Donald Riegle, D-Mich., an on-budget advocate.

Assuming the conference committee approves an on-budget plan, one last and major hurdle remains. Both the House and Senate would have to separately approve any conference legislation. And, because the bill will by necessity change the 1989 budget adopted by Congress, the Senate must pass the funding part of it by 60 votes.

RATES

Two of the biggest credit card issuers in the country — out-of-state banks — have just announced increases in card fees and interest rates. Chase Manhattan Bank raised its rate to 19.8 percent on some cards, from 17.5 percent. Manufacturers Hanover has said it plans to go to 19.8 percent on its standard card, up from 17.8 percent.

"These probably are the same money center banks that were dropping their rates a year, year and half ago, and they may be making adjustments, given the present economic environment," said George W. Varnell, senior vice president of the consumer credit division at First Union Corp. of Georgia.

"In Georgia, the rates, for the most part, have been more stable. There have been periodical adjustments based on operating costs. That may be the difference between the rates at the money center banks and the rates in Georgia," he said.

Of the nation's 100 largest banks and thrifts surveyed by Bank Rate Monitor, 24 of them are charging between 19 percent and 20.9 percent, according to Robert K. Heady, publisher of the North Palm Beach, Fla., weekly newsletter.

The average rate is 18.14 percent, he said.

Interest rates on credit cards are going up for a variety of reasons, bankers said.

Margaret C. Safford at Bank South said the cost of money banks use for credit card lending has increased throughout the credit card industry. Many banks are also increasing their charge-offs from fraud and credit problems, the senior vice president of Bank South's consumer credit division said.

Mary Marino, right, reacts to seeing a computer image of herself as to how she will look after 20 years of exposure to the sun. The computer was set up at a Dallas mall recently as part of a promotional campaign for sunscreen products.

Crystal ball foresees how person with sun-damage skin will look

DALLAS (AP) — How would you like to see how you'll look in 20 years?

Are you sure? Wrinkles and all?

Johnson & Johnson, which wants people to use its sunscreen products, has come up with a high-tech crystal ball: a computer similar to the one used by the FBI to age photographs of abducted children who have been missing a long time.

For Marla Kilday, 39, a high-tech photo image of what she'll look like in 20 years if she continues the same exposure to the sun was a shocker. But the health effects weren't uppermost in her mind.

"Oh, I better get a man fast," she said Friday as she studied the wrinkled face she may have when she is 59.

Ms. Kilday's mother, Maxine Jones, 63, was somewhat reluctant to have her image aged, but was philosophical after giving in. "Well, I will be 83, you know," Ms. Jones told The Dallas Morning News.

The Wrinkle Reality Test is part of a promotion campaign for Johnson & Johnson sunscreen products and was at a Dallas shopping center Friday.

Ms. Kilday, like others who dared to peek into the future, was first given a questionnaire to fill out. Among the questions were how much exposure she had to the sun, her tanning frequency and whether she uses a sunscreen.

The computer then took a picture of her face, her information was entered into the computer, and within a minute, a wrinklier image of her 20 years down the line appeared on the screen. The computer also provided a less-aged image of what she would look like in 2009 if she takes care of her skin.

"We've had some quite traumatic changes," said Dr. Alan Menter, a dermatologist and director of the Baylor Psoriasis Center. "The young people are the ones who are most astounded, and they are the ones...we need to get the message across to.

"This is a nice attempt to educate the public," Menter said. "It really gives them a vivid example of what they are going to look like in 20 years if they don't get out of the sun more often."

Monte Freeman, 20, wasn't intimidated by the 40-year-old wrinkled image staring him in the face.

"Those were the wrinkles of an 80-year-old," he said. "My dad is in his 50s and he doesn't have that many wrinkles."

Freeman was not one of the day's converts to Menter's advice to use a sunscreen daily.

"I like to get as much sun as possible," Freeman said.

Robert Boyd, 20, on the other hand, may have been convinced.

"Oh, man, that's rough," he said after seeing his image. "I rarely use sunscreen, but...after that, I'm seriously going to think about it."

Menter said he doesn't suggest that everyone stay indoors. But wrinkling can be reduced, he said, if people use a sunscreen while being exposed to incidental daily sun contact, such as when driving to work.

Group adding 57,000 acres to Big Bend National Park

STATE

DALLAS (AP) — A nationwide conservation group, in its quest to preserve some of the few remaining wild places on earth for future generations, is more likely to be found in a corporate boardroom than on a protest line.

The Texas Nature Conservancy on Saturday will give about 57,000 acres of land in the Rosillos Mountains to the National Park Service to add to Big Bend National Park.

"We do conservation the old-fashioned way — we buy it," said David Braun, state Nature Conservancy director.

Since its formation in 1964, the organization has undertaken 46 Texas land acquisition projects and preserved more than 200,000 acres of land.

"We are very businesslike," Charles Gandy, development director for the Texas Nature Conservancy, said. "We are kind of like the Trammell Crow of conservation."

The conservancy uses a team of staff biologists to identify areas where endangered species are found, said Braun. It has identified about 2,000 areas of biological interest in the state, and since 1984 has worked with the General Land Office of Texas to take an ecological inventory of the state.

When the conservancy determines that a piece of land is worth saving, it notifies owners that a rare or unusual species exists on their land. Sometimes, the owners donate the land to the conservancy, while some offer to sell it.

"The conservancy approach is compatible with Texans' approach — non-controversial and businesslike," Braun said. "Some Texans have problems with government regulations and like how we stay in the free market."

His organization is one state affiliate of The Nature Conservancy, an international nonprofit organization that preserves natural resources by gaining acreage through gift, lease, trade or purchase.

The Big Bend land was given to the conservancy by Ed Harte of Corpus Christi and his brother, Houston, of San Antonio in 1984. The Big Bend boundaries were not amended until 1987, when Congress passed legislation allowing the donated land to become part of a national park.

"We are very pleased," said Ed Harte of the land transfer. "For many years, it was the hope of my brother and me to get the land into Big Bend."

Harte, a former chairman of the National Audubon Society, said he and his brother turned to the conservancy to accomplish their goal "because that is the best vehicle to get in the National Park Service.

"They have more clout than two people from Texas."

Braun said the conservancy project, called the North Rosillos Mountain Preserve, is the largest ever in Texas and the second biggest in the country.

"We knew our ranch would never been good for grazing but it had a great many species of wildlife," said Harte, 66, former publisher of the Corpus Christi Caller-Times and now member of the board of directors of Harte-Hanks Communications. "We concluded that the best use was to put it into wildlife."

Group seeks suspension of officers

DALLAS (AP) — An anti-racism organization is calling for the suspension of two Dallas Police officers who donned Pizza Hut uniforms to arrest three black men who a white delivery woman accused of robbing and assaulting her.

Citizens Against Racism in Dallas, a coalition of clergy and community-based organizations, also has called for the firing of the delivery woman and her manager, and for a public apology from Pizza Hut Inc. officials.

On April 28, two white patrol officers arrested James Morgan and two friends, all of them black, after the delivery woman, Patti Murray, alleged that they assaulted and robber her.

The men were released without charges after 15 hours in jail.

Morgan and his friends denied assaulting Ms. Murray and said she probably concocted the story as revenge after they refused the pizzas.

The three men wouldn't pay for the pizzas because they had waited 90 minutes for the delivery, Morgan said. After about an hour, the men ordered pizza from another restaurant and both orders arrived at the same time.

The delivery man from the other restaurant said the men didn't assault Ms. Murray.

But about an hour after the incident, the two officers, wearing Pizza Hut uniforms, burst into the apartment and handcuffed and arrested the three men.

Machine-gun shoot draws hundreds

HELOTES, Texas (AP) — Passing around barbecue and bullets, about 100 gun owners riddled old automobiles, refrigerators and other targets with thousands of rounds.

Billed as "two days of live fire," the Hill Country Machine-Gun Shoot this weekend encouraged participants to "bring your .50-cal or just an M-11, or bring all you've got."

On Saturday, gun owners from around the state and local residents brought their favorite automatic and semiautomatic weapons for a sweltering afternoon of target practice that sponsors described as a family affair.

Wives brought their husbands. Fathers brought their sons. Spectators brought their coolers.

"I enjoy watching it," Kenneth Jenke said, preparing to film the event. "I'll show it to my buddies."

He yelled to be heard over the deafening chatter of machine gun fire that echoed across the range. Enthusiasts riddled old cars, refrigerators, washers, dryers, lockers and Coke machines with hundreds of bullets.

Others brought cameras and home video recorders. The event continued at 11 a.m. Sunday.

Walker Weathers, an attorney, hauled a 1942 M-3 halftrack — an armored military vehicle with caterpillar treads in place of rear wheels — all the way from Tyler.

"My interest is primarily in collection of World War II items," Weathers said. He also carted an 85-pound, .50-caliber machine gun and five other weapons to the event.

For those who didn't heed the BYOG (Bring Your Own Gun) message, organizer Bill Jonke had a supply of M-16s, Uzis, Ak-47s and other weapons on hand. Earplugs, a necessity, also were distributed to those who didn't bring their own.

"These things are fun," Ken Carter, a machine-gun dealer, said. "It's no different than a guy who likes to go out and race cars on the weekends, only it's a hell of a lot less dangerous."

Mike Hazel, 11, agreed that shooting firearms is exciting. But so far, his father hasn't let him touch anything hotter than the toy pistols, Uzis and Ak-4's — his favorite — in his room.

"I've been studying guns for awhile," he said. "I have string hanging from both of my (toy) rifles so I can hang them up and use them for wall ornaments."

Congress is currently debating legislation to block the sale of certain types of semiautomatic weapons. But most of those attending the shoot were adamantly opposed to any form of gun control.

COMPANION CORNER
The following ads have been placed by singles looking for non-romantic friendships.

LOOKING For Male Companion, between 20 - 30 years old. I am legally blind. Would like someone to help with driving me around town. I enjoy going out, going to concerts and other activities. Possibly full time. (MP-603)

FEMALE PERSONAL ADS
The following ads have been placed by females looking to meet males.

I'M 5'4", 127 lbs., green-eyes, silver hair and 62 years old female. I enjoy traveling, dancing, bridge, eating out, walking and movies. I'm a non-smoker, and non-drinker. I seek a male companion who enjoys these things and will attend Sunday church services. Send interests and phone number when responding. (MP-562)

I'M 35 years of age, divorced female, dark hair, amber eyes, 5'3", 100 lbs., love the rain, humor, romance & poetry. I'm a smoker, trying to quit. No problem getting dates, just tired of the bar scene. Want to meet 35-45 years old male, preferrably tall and slim. Tired of the games, need lots of hugs and T.L.C. Are you my soulmate? Respond with phone number. (MP-563)

80 YEAR old young lady in good health, gray hair, 163 lbs., who has a good sense of humor, enjoys life. Looking for man 80+ who likes the same things. Must drive. No smokers or drinkers. (MP-565)

I'M 5'2", blue eyes, 50 years old, Caucasian female, smoker, asthma, of varied interests from camping, fishing, C&W music, staying home and having quiet times. 55 and up respond. I would like to have a good old fashion dinner. Love to cook for a bunch. Please no drug users respond. (MP-572)

CAUCASIAN female, non-professional, not career oriented, just hard working "good ole girl" would like to meet a Caucasian "good ole boy" 42-52 for companionship and fun. I'm 46, 125 lbs., 5'6", very pretty. I'm a great dancer, fair bowler, enjoy camping, barbecues, and plain country living. Good sense of humor and honest. Are there any "good ole boys" out there? (MP-573)

ATTRACTIVE redhead, 38, homeowner, with only 1 son, looking for friendship, possibly more. I'm kind-hearted and loveable, I love to hunt, fish, and camping. I'm a social drinker & smoker. Looking for possible Taurus man. Send phone number and interests, all replies will be answered. (MP-575)

ATTRACTIVE 40 year old redhead, 5'4", 120 lbs. Secure, professional lady likes fishing, traveling, and doing things together. No small children. Would like to meet man 35-45. Please respond with phone number. (MP-577)

DIVORCED Caucasian female of 2½ years, 5'4", brown hair, hazel eyes and mother of one son. Wishes to meet male 28-40 who enjoys family gatherings, romantic evenings, and special fun weekends. I have a variety of interests. Must enjoy kids and be understanding. Looking for a good friend, perhaps more. Take things at slow pace. Please reply, take the chance. (MP-591)

FUN-LOVING, attractive, college-educated 42 year old female wishes to meet male sharing some of my diverse interests. Do you have a passion for dancing - C&W to ballroom? Do you enjoy the symphony, theatre, foreign films? Is a weekend of TV a turn-off? If so, tell me about you. No smokers, please. (MP-578).

56 YEAR old widow, Caucasian, blue eyes, brown hair, professionally employed, likes most music, movies, TV, traveling, eating out, some cooking, companionship, lakes, mountains, church going, occasional light drinks ok, no drug users, dancing, quiet evenings at home, togetherness. Old-Fashioned values, but not stale. Would like to meet gentleman with similar interests. (MP-597)

ATTRACTIVE, independent, professional, Caucasian female, 45, no children, who hates the singles scene, desires to meet sincere, intelligent, non-smoking male for lasting, emotionally supportive and fun relationship. I love dancing, traveling, theatre, and sharing candlelight dinners for two - sometimes cooked by me. I'm blond, 5'8", and slim. All replies will be answered. (MP-599)

SINGLE and attractive Hispanic female, 23, looking for the man of her dreams. I'm looking for a single Hispanic young man 21-26, good looking, no drug users please, someone to spend my life with. I enjoy dancing, going to the movies and just spending time with that special man. So if you're the one, please respond. All letters will be answered. (MP-600)

I'M 65 years old, like to fish, eat, cook, dance, some travel. I'm lonely, 5', 125 lbs., dark hair and brown eyes. Please respond. (MP-568)

ARE you looking for a help-mate? I'm over 60, a Christian woman looking for a mate. I'm a real home lover and want a companion who also needs love and togetherness. I don't smoke nor use drugs. My way is clean, decent and friendly. Would like to meet you, write me. (MP-593)

MY sunny disposition and wholesome attitude tell me the golden years can be the best. Tall, attractive blonde, smoker, mid fifty's, enjoys family, friends, cook-outs, outdoors in the summer, fireplace in winter, quiet evenings, walking, eating out, and fishing - desires friendship of a very special gentleman with open options to grow into love. Will answer your reply. (MP-595)

SINGLE Caucasian female, 29, blonde, blue eyes, 5'6", 115 lbs. Not looking for one night stand. Tired of bar scene. Looking for attractive, employed, single, or once divorced Caucasian male who likes most entertainment, fishing, camping, dancing, and movies. Seeking man 27 - 40, no drug users. Please respond with letter of interest. (MP-585)

69 YEAR old Caucasian, 5 ft. 4¼ inches, 125 lbs. People tell me I'm still beautiful. Would like to meet a gentleman with a good sense of humor for friendship. I enjoy dancing, singing, playing cards. Love to eat out. But do not mind cooking occasionally. (MP-582).

PETITE 5', 116 lbs, 54 years, Caucasian female. Looking for "Mr. Right", Caucasian male, age 47-55 years. A gentleman eager & willing to take loving care of a Lady for life. This Lady enjoys country living, gardening, fishing, hunting, bowling. Please do not respond if you are not seeking a serious relationship. (MP-587)

ARE you interested in old-fashioned honest dating? Interested in good conversations on many subjects? Do write me. Interested in happiness with another happy human! Interested in honorable permanent relationship! Are you interested in 61 year young Christian widow who's alive and breathing? Please, do write me. (MP-569)

ATTRACTIVE professional Caucasian, 36, wishes to meet a professional Caucasian non-smoking gentleman 30-46 who enjoys lots of TLC, warm conversation, camping, hiking, C&W music, travel to fun places, cozy evenings spent together by a warm fireplace, and have a consuming passion to be close to another person, enough to spoil each other outrageously. Please respond with letter and phone number. (MP-583).

DIVORCED Caucasian female 33, light brunette, blue eyes, 5'6", 115 lbs. Looking for attractive employed Caucasian male 30-40, who is honest, sincere, and with good morals. I enjoy movies, dining out, bowling, and would like to learn to dance. Social drinkers ok, but no drug users please. Respond with letter of interests and phone number. (MP-588)

MALE PERSONAL ADS

REFLECTING UPON OUR LOVED ONES...

Honor and remember your absent loved ones with a special message this Memorial Day.

"In Memoriam"

The memory of a great love is kept green forever. - Anon.

TO MOTHER
We do not forget her,
We love her too dearly
For her memory to fade
From our lives like a dream.
Our lips need not speak
When our hearts mourn sincerely,
For grief often dwells
Where it seldom is seen.
Love, Your Children

HUSBAND
God took him home, it was His will,
But in our hearts we love him still,
His memory is as dear today
As in the hour he passed away,
We often sit and think of him
When we are all alone.
For memory is the only friend
That grief can call its own.
We Miss You
Your Wife and Children

1x2 $13.70

FOR OUR YOUNG SON
Oh, say not that our little son is dead;
Believe instead,
That he has left his little trundle bed
To climb the hills,
Of morning, and to share the joy that fills
God's pleasant land of dreams.
Mommy & Daddy

TO OUR SON WHO SERVED HIS COUNTRY PROUDLY

1935-1965

Greater love hath no man than
To lay down his life for friends.
His kindness did not cease until
The day of dawn, April 9th, 1965
Now memory lingers to us
