A bad sign

ST. LOUIS (AP) — What was intended to be a simple gesture of international friendship has turned into a source of embarrassment for Missouri highway and economic development officials.

The multilingual sign they erected outside St. Louis' Lambert Airport to welcome foreign visitors was botched, in three of seven languages.

"Their intentions were definitely good, and I can understand how these things happen, but they should have consulted a dictionary," said Antonio M. Molina of suburban University City.

Molina said the Spanish welcome — "Bienvendos a Missouri" — should have read "Bienvenidos a Missouri." Molina should know — his father, the late Jose Molina, was the honorary vice consul from Spain, and his great-uncle, Jose Alvarez, held the post before him.

The German and French salutations also were misspelled or grammatically incorrect. "Wilkommen in Missouri" should have read "Willkommen in Missouri," according to James McLeod, professor of German at Washington University.

The French version, "Bienvenue a Missouri," should read "Bienvenue en Missouri."

"The preposition is wrong. People arriving here from France would laugh at the sign," said Jacques Chicoineau, a retired professor of foreign languages at Webster University.

The greetings in Japanese, Chinese and Korean were perfect, however. Oh yes, they also got the English greeting right.

Chimp's champ

Carson

ROYAL, Neb. (AP) — Johnny Carson didn't monkey around when a zoo in his native Nebraska needed help. He donated $55,000 to give Reuben the chimp new digs.

Northeast Nebraska Zoo has only one chimpanzee, but the donation from "The Tonight Show" host may be enough to acquire a female companion for Reuben as well as build a permanent primate exhibit, zoo officials said.

The 7-year-old chimp is housed in a fortified mobile home at the zoo in rural Royal, near Carson's hometown of Norfolk, but the monkey has grown too strong for his quarters.

Construction should begin next week on a new enclosure.

Iraq easily takes Kuwait

■ Iraqi invaders establish a provisional goverment in Kuwait and threaten to destroy the oil-rich state if action is taken by any of the many nations condemning the move.

By Stephanie McGehee
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT — Invading Iraqi soldiers quickly seized control of Kuwait on Thursday after two weeks of threats, and Iraq warned foreign governments it would turn the oil-rich state into a "graveyard" if they came to its aid.

The invaders, led by tanks and backed by warplanes, set up a provisional government. Diplomatic sources in the Persian Gulf estimated more than 200 Kuwaitis were killed or wounded, mainly from the government's Emiri Guard.

Kuwait's emir, Sheik Jaber al-Ahmed al-Sabah, fled to neighboring Saudi Arabia. Iraqi forces occupied all government buildings in the capital and moved south toward oil installations at Mina al-Ahmadi, officials said.

Iraq said its troops entered at the request of revolutionaries it said had staged a coup. Kuwaiti and other diplomats called the coup report a charade.

The move by Iraqi President Saddam Hussein brought worldwide condemnation and sanctions.

The Soviet Union, Iraq's biggest arms supplier, said it was suspending weapons shipments to Iraq. President Bush called the invasion "naked aggression." He froze control of Iraqi assets in the United States and blocked most Iraqi imports, including its most important revenue source — oil. Fellow Arab states, though, failed to take action.

Iraq responded by freezing repayment of Iraqi debts to the United States, the official Iraqi News Agency reported. The total size of the debt is unclear. Last year, Washington provided $1 billion in agricultural credits to Iraq.

Iraqi soldiers rounded up and moved "a few" American oil field workers from their work places near the border of Kuwait and their whereabouts are unknown, a State Department official said in Washington. The official, like many other sources, spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Pentagon earlier Thursday ordered an aircraft carrier into the region. Bush said military intervention was not under discussion, but later noted that if Americans in Kuwait "are threatened or harmed ... I have certain responsibilities."

About 4,000 Americans are in Kuwait. A White House spokesman said no reports surfaced of American casualties.

Kuwait, through its U.S. ambassador, appealed for U.S. military intervention.

Oil price may settle at $22, Hance says

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

Oil prices, as a result of the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait, will likely shoot up wildly during the next few days and then fall back to about $22 per barrel where they will remain for the next few months, Kent Hance, chairman of the Texas Railroad Commission, predicted Thursday.

Speaking to members and guests of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association at his first public meeting since returning from Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) meetings in Geneva, Hance said he was surprised at the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait Wednesday, and warned that the action could send oil prices up to $30 per barrel this year.

■ Dependence on imports called into question; Bush may tap into reserves; Related stories/7-8B

He said it all depended on how long the conflict lasted.

"If this proves to be a short-lived skirmish, prices will likely drop back down," said Hance, who predicts oil prices will climb to $25 a barrel within the next 18 months with or without a war in the Middle East.

Hance said he thought a conflict in the Persian Gulf had been headed off by a pledge from Kuwait to stick to its oil production quota. Iraq apparently invaded Kuwait because of a long-standing border dispute between the two countries that has nothing to do with OPEC oil production quotas, he said.

"It has only been two days, (since the accord) and that has not been very much time for cheating," Hance said. He noted that the addition of Kuwaiti reserves could make Iraq, and not Saudi Arabia, the new swing producer in OPEC, and that Iraq would be able to dictate oil prices — even $50 a barrel.

Action puts focus on energy needs

By James R. Owen
Reporter-Telegram Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Iraqi invasion of neighboring Kuwait sent spot oil prices soaring Thursday, rekindling calls for more domestic production and development of alternative energy sources to lessen U.S. dependence on foreign oil.

Spot oil prices jumped more than $3 a barrel after the invasion, from $20.40 to $23.62 — a 16 percent increase. Some energy analysts predicted that unless the Middle East flare-up is resolved quickly, oil prices in the United States could top $30 a barrel by next week.

Although the combined shares of the U.S. market for oil imported from both Iraq and Kuwait are less than 10 percent, there is concern over the possibility that Iraq might seek control of oilfields elsewhere on the Arabian Peninsula.

In June, the latest month for which figures are available, Persian Gulf oil represented 24.7 percent of total U.S. oil imports, according to the American Petroleum Institute, the trade group for major oil companies. A year earlier the figure was 22.2 percent.

"This might only be the beginning of it," said David Dwyer, an analyst with Energy Security Analysts, Inc., in Washington. "You could be looking at $30 oil, but it's really hard to say."

Other analysts were more cautious, however.

Cheryl Trench, executive vice president of the Petroleum Industry Research Council in New York, said, "We have resisted making price predictions all day long. The situation is so fluid that you can't really make a reasonable guess."

Comanche Peak 'events' not 'out of line'

■ Although TU Electric's nuclear power plant at Glen Rose suffered three "unusual events" last month, officials say that figure is in line with industry averages, especially during start-up stages.

Associated Press

GLEN ROSE — The lives of the workers trapped inside a nuclear reactor at the Comanche Peak nuclear power plant were never threatened by two "unusual events" at the plant last month, TU Electric officials said Thursday.

TU Electric officials told the Nuclear Regulatory Commission that the number of "unusual events," the lowest classification of an emergency at a nuclear power plant, was not unusual. There have been three unusual events at the plant since March.

"We're basically consistent with the industry average, especially since we're going through the initial start-up stages," said Jim Kelley, site manager of Comanche Peak.

TU Electric spokesman Dave Fiorelli said in March that there were 212 unusual events reported at U.S. nuclear power plants in 1988, most during start-up and early operations.

The utility received permission to begin low-level operations in February. Unusual events were declared March 12, July 26 and July 30.

Kelley said Comanche Peak engineers are considering new safety measures for the plant.

After the July 26 incident, Comanche Peak operators and planners spent two days reviewing emergency operating procedures, Kelley said. From that review Comanche Peak officials learned that some operators were confused about their duties during the emergency.

Kelley said steps will be taken to clarify emergency procedures. Officials will also consider lengthening training periods at each station.

Human error was blamed for the July 26 incident. The July 30 incident was blamed on an equipment malfunction. The reactors were inactive when the latest two incidents occurred.

The March 12 event occurred when an electrical component in the plant's control system apparently failed.

During the July incidents, workers were temporarily trapped inside the reactor. On July 30 it took 25 minutes to free them.

Engineers said the workers could have unlocked a safety hatch from the inside of the reactor but apparently did not know how.

In the latest incident, one of the systems available to add water to a reactor activated after low steam pressure caused a valve to open. Non-radioactive steam was released into the atmosphere.

Comanche Peak officials said they don't know when they will be able to start generating power again. NRC regulators have asked plant officials to write a letter addressing emergency lighting concerns and any actions the plant plans to take regarding personnel hazards.

"The number of items we've had are small. What's raised this to the level that it has is we've had two events in a relatively short period of time," Kelley said.

The reactor has been shut down since last Thursday. NRC officials said Thursday they were not sure when the plant would be able to go on-line again.

Emmy nominations catch some by surprise

LOS ANGELES (AP) — John Goodman's mother woke him up Thursday to tell him of his Emmy nomination, Angela Lansbury was whispered the news by her husband and Dana Delany thought a bagel and coffee was in order.

The pre-dawn announcement in the West Coast caught some stars asleep, others on the road or finishing movies. One actress was speechless after what she perceived as a snub by the Academy of Television Arts & Sciences.

Miss Lansbury, who has never won an Emmy despite numerous nominations for "Murder, She Wrote," was with her hairdresser when she learned of the nomination from her husband, Peter Shaw. He leaned over and whispered the news.

"I'm surprised and delighted. It's wonderful to know you're still up there and your performance is intact," Miss Lansbury said.

Leading the Emmys list with 14 nominations was the nighttime soap series "Twin Peaks," which revolves around junk food and murder in a Pacific Northwest lumber town. Co-executive producer Mark Frost was elated.

"I guess I feel like the quality of life in Twin Peaks got a little better today," Frost said. "I guess our chances of surviving are a little bit better."

The five nominations for Fox Broadcasting Co.'s "The Simpsons" left executive producers James L. Brooks and Matt Groening jubilant.

"I just don't know what to say," said Groening, the cartoonist whose "Life in Hell" strip appears in many alternative newspapers.

"I was in a sleepy, sweaty puddle when I found out. I was worried more about Kuwait," said Brooks, whose other Fox show, "The Tracey Ullman Show," received 13 nominations.

Susan Ruttan, nominated as best supporting actress for her "L.A. Law" work, said she was eager to attend the Sept. 16 awards ceremonies because "they are on my birthday. It will be a great party."

"Empty Nest" star Richard Mulligan, a two-time Emmy winner, was at home studying a script and eating strawberries when the telephone rang with the news of his latest nomination. "To be recognized by your peers is great," he said.

Roseanne Barr was missing from the nominations list for a second year as she expected, but her show "Roseanne" got two nominations. Earlier this week, she told interviewer Sally Jessy Raphael she had felt "snubbed."

"It really hurt my feelings," she said, adding she felt the "same thing" would happen this year.

She reacted Thursday through her publicist: "Miss Barr is resting her voice and is unavailable for comment," said Chris Hamblin.

"I think Roseanne and her show are the best things on television," said Miss Barr's husband-producer, Tom Arnold, from the couple's Malibu home. "It always takes the industry a few years to catch up with anything ground-breaking."

"Roseanne" co-star John Goodman's mother was watching the nominations announcement on TV in St. Louis when she heard her son's name called. She phoned him in Los Angeles and woke him up.

"I'm extremely happy. I did not get into this business to win awards but if somebody nominates me I'll take it," said Goodman, who was completing his latest movie "Barton Fink" before returning to the "Roseanne" set Monday.

Estelle Getty and Betty White were nominated in different categories for their roles on "The Golden Girls," but co-stars Rue McClanahan and Bea Arthur weren't on the list.

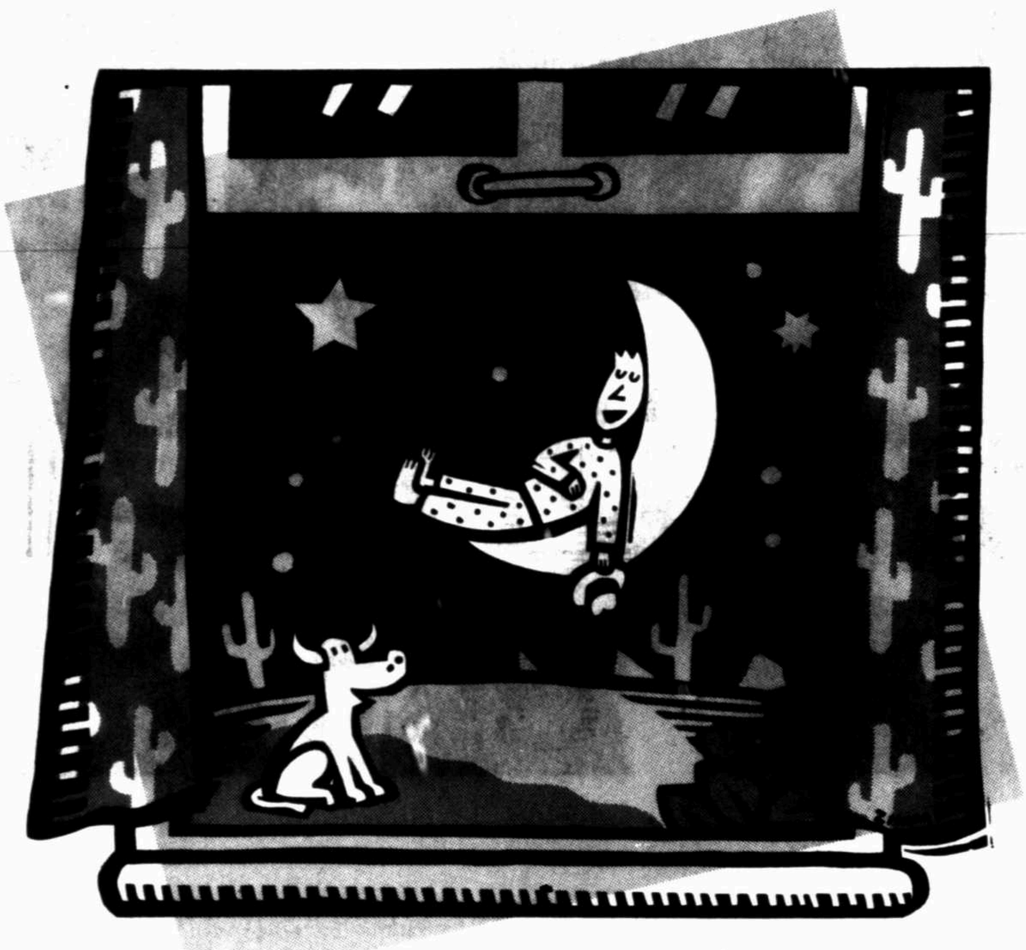
Now AmWest can give you something few banks can...



A good night's sleep.

Now AmWest has "DreamSaver"—a savings program designed to bring peace of mind to all those who worry about saving money.

Here's how it works: You tell AmWest how much you want to save every month, (as little as $25 if you like) and they'll deduct it automatically from a free checking account (that's right, free checking) and put it into a CD account. Keep your money there for a full 12 months and it will earn a high-interest CD rate. Take it out early, and you'll get a penalty — three months interest or $50.

So "DreamSaver" not only helps you save money on a regular monthly basis — it helps you keep your hands off it too. And with a little money in savings — a good night's sleep will come a whole lot easier.

Senate retains budget request for B-2 bomber

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Thursday left intact President Bush's 1991 budget request for the B-2 bomber but imposed restrictions on the $4.6 billion until critical tests on the stealth aircraft have been conducted.

By a vote of 97-2, the Senate adopted the amendment to the $289 billion defense bill as Republicans fought to salvage the aircraft and GOP leader Bob Dole argued that Iraq's invasion of Kuwait was the "wake-up call" against deep cuts in defense spending.

Earlier this week, the House Armed Services Committee agreed to halt production of the program at the 15 planes in development.

Shortly after approving the resolution, the Senate neared a vote on an amendment to stop production at six aircraft and another that would eliminate the two planes Bush wants in fiscal 1991 but would continue the program.

Opponents of the plane argued the cost of a single bomber — $865 million — is too costly when the Cold War has ended and the budget deficit has grown.

The approved amendment, sponsored by the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., and the panel's ranking Republican, Sen. John Warner of Virginia, calls for the plane to pass 13 requirements before about $2 billion in procurement money can be spent.

All total, the administration is seeking $4.6 billion for two B-2 bombers in the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1.

"I understand the case against the B-2. All of us are suffering from sticker shock," Nunn said on the Senate floor.

But the panel chairman, a B-2 proponent, argued that the plane is "indeed a revolutionary change in capability to conduct air warfare."

The House panel also slashed nearly $2 billion from Bush's request for the Strategic Defense Initiative as it adopted a defense package that chops $24 billion from Bush's Pentagon budget of $307 billion for fiscal 1991.

In the wake of that action, the Bush administration and proponents of the B-2 bomber were relying on the Senate to salvage its prized weapons programs.

Jurors begin deliberations in Barry trial

WASHINGTON (AP) — Jurors in Marion Barry's drug and perjury trial began deliberation late Thursday after six weeks of testimony highlighted by a videotape of the mayor of the nation's capital smoking from a crack cocaine pipe.

Prosecutors said Barry "lived above the law" and deserved conviction, while the mayor's lawyer urged the jury to acquit him, rejecting testimony from "facile liars" and "little Lucifers."

"No one can suffer any more pain or shame or hurt than me," Barry said outside the U.S. Courthouse. The mayor said he is "rather anxious, obviously, with the fate of Marion Barry in the hands of 12 people."

The jurors retired to begin considering Barry's fate after a night's rest. U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson read them instructions on the law covering the evidence they had heard. They include nine women and three men, 10 blacks and two whites.

Scoffing at suggestions by Barry attorney R. Kenneth Mundy that the once-popular mayor was the victim of a political or racial vendetta, Assistant U.S. Attorney Richard Roberts, who like Barry is black, said the government had merely exposed the mayor's fondness for illegal drugs.

"Marion Barry lived above the law, he lived one step ahead of anyone who was looking at him," Roberts said. "He lied to the public. ... The sad fact is, Marion Barry was out to get himself."

Roberts urged the jurors to remember the 10 government witnesses who have testified about Barry drug use and not join his "conspiracy of silence and deceit."

"Mr. Barry is asking you to shut your eyes, cover your ears, to close your mind," Roberts said. "Really, he's asking you to insult your intelligence by forgetting the facts."

Oklahoma, New Mexico seeking two fugitives

CLAYTON, N.M. (AP) — A search continued Thursday on both sides of the Oklahoma-New Mexico border for two men who fired at Clayton police during a car chase and then fled on foot at a roadblock.

Lt. Stewart Meyer of the Oklahoma Highway Patrol said the search was concentrated in New Mexico.

Two men in a gray pickup left an Allsup's store in Clayton without paying for gas around 1:26 a.m. Wednesday, police said.

Two officers pursued the pickup north of town. Police said the men fired several shots during the chase.

High in upper 90s expected

Staff Report

Today's forecast is partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers. Highs should be in the upper 90s with south winds of 5-15 mph.

Tonight will be partly cloudy with a 20 percent chance of thundershowers. Lows will be in the upper 60s.

Saturday will be partly cloudy with a high near 90.

The record high for Thursday was 106, set in 1944. The record low for today is 60, set in 1971.

STATE

A weak upper-level low pressure area over the Rio Grande Plains was the catalyst for continued heavy thunderstorms Thursday in South Texas.

Isolated to scattered showers and thunderstorms developed across much of North Texas.

The strongest storms produced flooding over parts of Val Verde County, near the town of Juno. Some highways were closed and under 4 to 5 feet of water about noon.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Senate approves SSC funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — The superconducting super collider ended its funding coast through Congress Thursday, winning $318 million from the Senate on a voice vote.

Proponents now say the budget summit, where administration and congressional leaders are trying to agree on an overall figure for 1991 government spending, is the only place funds could be cut.

Both Texas senators, Democrat Lloyd Bentsen and Republican Phil Gramm, are involved in the summit talks and have pledged to push for full funding.

"Barring some budgetary collapse that affects every program, we are in good shape on the SSC," Gramm said.

Gramm called the appropriation "another landmark in the building of the most important science project that will be constructed anywhere in the world in the last quarter of the 20th century."

The Senate appropriation was the same amount sought by President Bush and approved by the House. About $169 million will be used for construction south of Dallas near Waxahachie.

Much of the rest is to complete tests on superconducting magnets, the collider's main component.

The magnets will drive protons around a 54-mile underground oval. Scientists make the atoms collide, hoping they break apart and yield more clues to the fundamentals of matter.

"Land acquisition, on-site construction and basic research can now proceed on schedule," Bentsen said in a speech entered into the record of debate on the bill.

The Department of Energy, which is leading the project, is expected to release a final cost estimate Aug. 17. Previously, they agency has said collider would cost about $8 billion and be finished by 1998.

Last week, a group of physicists estimated the project would cost $8.6 billion by the time it is done in 1999 or later.

When first proposed, the super collider was estimated to cost $4.4 billion.

The collider received little opposition during the congressional appropriations process this year. But in May, the House, in an authorization bill, limited U.S. funding of the collider to $5 billion during the next five years.

The super collider was included in a $20.9 billion energy and water spending measure, which also contained nearly $3 billion for a new program to clean up nuclear contamination from weapons plants.

A House-Senate conference committee will have to iron out differences in their versions of the bill. But the super collider won't likely be touched since it is receiving the same in both bills.

ENERGY: Iraq's action stirs debate

(From 1A)

And in an apparent attempt to calm fears, U.S. Secretary of Energy James D. Watkins said "there are adequate supplies to cover current demand, and world inventories are also very high right now."

Fully half of U.S. oil supplies are now imported from abroad, prompting many on Capitol Hill and elsewhere to call for measures to bolster U.S. oil production. And members of Congress from oil-producing states such as Texas have warned that growing U.S. oil imports may invite new shortages or boycotts that could dwarf those experienced in the 1970s.

"This situation gives those of us who have been critical of national energy policy to say, 'We told you, folks,'" said Rep. Larry Combest, R-Texas. "The shortages of the '70s may end up being nothing compared to what we may be facing."

Combest and others have called for a number of strategies to boost U.S. oil production, including more tax incentives for new exploration and oil recovery, more generous oil depletion allowances and relaxation of federal bans on drilling offshore and in federally owned lands, such as the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge in Alaska.

"The American people should be asking themselves the question, 'Why are we concerned about what's happening in Kuwait and the Persian Gulf?'" said Rep. Jack Fields, R-Texas. "The answer is oil dependency."

Fields, who blamed "irresponsible environmentalism" for bans on drilling offshore and in Alaska, said that oil could be extracted from the ocean off California, Texas and Florida without significant environmental danger, "certainly no more than from oil tankers."

Rich Bechtel, an analyst with the National Wildlife Federation, an environmental group, said finding new sources of oil was not the answer, however.

"We ought to be developing a long-range energy policy that allows us to have all kinds of energy alternatives as well as energy conservation, and not be going into some of the rarest areas of the world for oil," he said. Non-oil energy sources include nuclear power and natural gas as well as so-called renewable sources such as geothermal, solar and wind energy.

But some industry analysts said that the climbing oil prices coupled with growing fear of an unstable supply of foreign oil may soften resistance to more widespread U.S. oil activity.

"It's possible that attitudes toward offshore drilling may now be looked at in a more favorable light," said Trench of the Petroleum Industry Research Council.

"We've had a long period without an international energy crisis, and we still don't have one yet," Trench said. "That has led to some complacency, if not among policymakers, then certainly among the general public."

She predicted that energy-conservation strategies would likely assume more prominence, and that there would be more pressure to change tax structures to provide more incentive for oil production.

Congressional sources said Thursday that the Iraqi invasion had not reached "the crisis stage yet," as one House staffer said. Until then, there appears little likelihood that Congress or President Bush would seek to enact drastic new domestic oil production initiatives.

But, said Rep. Lamar Smith, R-Texas, "this invasion should get the attention of the Congress and the administration for the need for the United States to begin producing more oil of its own."

"Our oil supply and prices are determined by a half-dozen OPEC oil ministers sitting halfway around the world," Smith said. "That's a dangerous and intolerable situation."

In Texas, Railroad Commissioner John Sharp observed that "Iraq just took over by force oil production that equals the combined production of Texas and Louisiana."

The U.S. has "500,000 gallons of foreign oil floating in Galveston Bay. Imported crude oil from the Persian Gulf is at its highest level in history. Our domestic oil producers are plugging wells and shutting in production at the highest rate ever.

"The Administration and Congress are still holding hearings on a National Energy Policy just like they were doing 20 years ago," Sharp said. "The enactment of an oil import fee and/or incentives to spur production of domestic oil is long overdue. The Enhanced Oil Recovery Serverance Tax Cut Bill that I wrote and passed through the last session of the Legislature has already identified over 100 million barrels of additional oil production. These incentives will work and it is time for Congress and the Administration to summon the political will to do what they have for 20 years known what is right.

"At the very least, Senator Bentsen's Peril-Point Bill should be passed immediately which gives the President the authority to take action on foreign imports," he said.

HANCE: TRC chairman in Midland

(From 1A)

The railroad commissioner — who has monitored OPEC meetings since 1988 — said he noticed that Kuwait had been unusually docile at the latest meeting of OPEC. Prior to the meeting Iraqi President Saddam Hussein had massed troops on Kuwait's border and threatened war on those who violated production quotas. Hussein has supported higher oil prices, while Kuwait has opposed higher oil prices.

"Kuwait is the 12th largest oil company in the world and is unusual in that it relies on downstream operations (refining and marketing) for most of its revenues, while other nations count mainly on production for revenues. For Kuwait, it is a different game," Hance explained.

He noted the irony in former combatants Iraq and Iran, who also supports higher oil prices, working hand-in-hand at the recent meeting of OPEC to achieve a higher target price of $21.

"Oil prices dropped in March, simply because there was too much oil in the world," Hance said. "There is more oil on the market now than at any time in the past eight years, because demand has been less than expected. But, if OPEC sticks to its quotas, it will be able to work off the surplus."

He pointed out, too, that Saudi Arabia was probably scared to death at this time, knowing that it could be next on Hussein's invasion list. It's unlikely that any Arab nation could defeat Iraq's powerful and seasoned million-man army, with 500 planes and 5,000 tanks, Hance said.

However, Hance does not expect the U.S. to invade Iraq or the U.S.S.R. to intervene in the Iraq-Kuwait conflict.

"There was a time when the Russians would have jumped right in the middle of this to see what they could make of it, but they are too besieged by internal problems at this time."

Adding a bit of advice, he noted that if Russia was having a difficult time moving toward a market economy, it might want to sell its oil industry to the private sector.

Commenting on other industry matters, Hance said the Texas Railroad Commission had been trying to work out an agreement with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service on the screening of oilfield pits. Robert Lee, regional director for the agency, has indicated that he would like all pits — even down to the size of a barrel — to be covered. But Hance says TRC has identified only 350 of 5,000 pits that might have oil in them.

"We won't let the Fish and Wildlife run over us. I hope they come to their senses," said Hance. "We have been trying to schedule a meeting with Mr. Lee for the past three weeks, but he has been too busy attending press conferences."

In other environmental matters, Hance said that oil spills were bound to increase as imports increase. He noted that, "more oil, more tankers, more spills." He praised Exxon for their cleanup in the Valdez spill, saying that some of the affected beaches were now cleaner than those on South Padre Island.

Hance warned the audience of mostly oilmen that the industry faced a serious crisis if there's a normally cold winter.

"We won't have the deliverability. There will be shut-offs." He called for more natural gas storage.

He also noted that he was pleased with a Federal Energy Regulatory Commission decision to permit a full hearing on the matter of the Iroquois Pipeline, which would bring Canadian natural gas into the Northeast market at a lower price than U.S. gas. "We don't mind competition, but we want a level playing field."

He noted that the TRC might be willing to participate at the Iroquois hearing if asked.

KUWAIT: Brother killed as emir flees to Saudi Arabia

(From 1A)

The Soviet news agency Tass reported out of Kuwait City that "a fight near the Soviet Embassy ... was short and fierce. ... A column of Iraqi tanks surrounded the palace of Crown Prince Prime Minister Saad al-Abdullah (al-Sabah) and shelled it for about half an hour from guns and machine guns.

"After Iraqis made sure there would be no more retaliatory firing from the palace, they drew up in a march formation and a column of tanks moved along the bank toward Salmiya, where several yacht clubs are situated."

Sheik Fahd al-Ahmed al-Sabah, a brother of the emir, was killed trying to defend the royal palace in Dasman, diplomats in the Persian Gulf confirmed.

The emir's radio station called it a "barbaric invasion."

"Under the leadership of the emir, we shall by God deter the invaders, purify our beloved country from their treachery and send them fleeing back," Crown Prince Saad said in a later broadcast from an undisclosed site.

In other developments:

■ The U.N. Security Council voted 14-0 to condemn the invasion and demanded immediate withdrawal of Iraqi troops. The vote carries no enforcement powers.

■ The State Department said Secretary of State James A. Baker III would fly to Moscow on Friday to issue a rare joint statement about the crisis with his Soviet counterpart, Eduard A. Shevardnadze.

■ The invasion created turmoil in world financial markets, with the price of oil, gold and the dollar rising steeply.

In Baghdad, the Revolutionary Command Council led by Saddam issued a statement saying Iraq intervened in support of "The Provisional Government of Free Kuwait." It said the government was made up of "revolutionary youths."

The provisional government announced through Baghdad's INA that it was dissolving parliament and would hold "free and honest elections" at a future date.

Iraq also warned foreign governments against coming to Kuwait's aid.

"Our armed forces will close in an iron rank against those who try to challenge us and will make Iraq and Kuwait a graveyard for those who launch any aggression," a statement on official Baghdad radio said.

Iraq began threatening Kuwait two weeks ago after accusing it of stealing oil from a border region claimed by both nations. It also accused Kuwait of depriving it of oil revenues by cheating on OPEC production quotas, thus driving down oil prices with plentiful supplies.

Texan among oil workers taken captive

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eight American oil field workers were reported missing near the border of Kuwait and company officials suspected they had been picked up by the invading Iraqi army, the State Department said on Thursday.

The whereabouts of the eight were unknown.

"Our embassy in Baghdad has asked the government of Iraq for information on the whereabouts of these six American citizens, reminding the government of Iraq of its commitment to respect the security and welfare of U.S. citizens," the department said in an unattributed statement.

Word of the detention came from a U.S. oil company for whom the eight worked, and the department asserted it was not at liberty to identify that company or any of the eight because of provisions of the Privacy Act.

A State Department official said the company reported the roundup by the Iraqis, but the United States has not been able to confirm whether that is what happened.

Texaco Inc. is the only U.S. oil company with operations in Kuwait. Texaco has 17 Americans among 800 employees working in the joint Saudi Arabian-Kuwaiti neutral zone, said spokeswoman Anita Larsen in New York.

The spokeswoman said all 17 had been reported safe earlier in the day.

Meanwhile, a Texas television station identified one of the eight as Charles Amos of Gilmer, an employee of Santa Fe Drilling Co. of California. Amos' family was notified by the State Department on Thursday morning, according to the report on KLTV-TV.

Trinidad government discounts Robinson's promise to resign

PORT-OF-SPAIN, Trinidad (AP) — A government official Thursday dismissed as "completely invalid" a resignation pledge that the prime minister gave to Moslem rebels who shot him during a six-day hostage siege.

The renunciation of Arthur N.R. Robinson's promise to rebels came one day after the extremists released their last 46 hostages and surrendered to authorities.

During the attempted coup and related looting, 30 people were killed and 150 wounded, according to government spokesman Gregory Shaw. However, that figure did not include bodies believed buried under rubble at the Parliament and police station.

Government officials in this Caribbean island off northeast Venezuela were struggling Thursday to restore order.

Soldiers and police combed the capital, Port-of-Spain, for car bombs. They evacuated about 3,000 people from their homes.

Security forces fired warning shots at looters still plaguing the capital, and a state of emergency remained in effect.

Soldiers reported scattered exchanges of gunfire, including a battle Wednesday night in the Champs Fleurs area. Some of the rebels' relatives were believed to be there.

Shaw said a regional security force of 300 led by a Jamaican colonel would arrive Friday "to guard installations, thereby freeing local forces to patrol." He did not specify which countries were involved.

The Venezuelan Embassy said in a statement its government was sending in a transport plane with 17 tons of food and medical supplies, with 13 tons of supplies to follow.

The Moslem rebels launched their revolt Friday by storming Parliament and broadcast buildings in the capital. They took 55 hostages, including Robinson and other government leaders, and rebel leader Abu Bakr declared his forces to be in control of the country.

However, the uprising never attracted popular support, and government forces surrounded the rebels and their captives. The standoff ended Wednesday with the release of the hostages and the surrender of 112 rebels.

Two Germanys agree on election laws

BONN, West Germany (AP) — The two Germanys signed a historic treaty Thursday for the first elections in a unified Germany since Adolf Hitler became chancellor in 1933.

Meanwhile, there was growing pressure for full unification well ahead of the Dec. 2 balloting, set in a treaty initialed by West German Interior Minister Wolfgang Schaeuble and East German State Secretary Guenther Krause.

The treaty, signed in East Berlin, retains a West German provision requiring parties to attain at least 5 percent of the national vote to gain representation in Parliament. This measure has effectively barrred small radical parties on the right and left from membership in the Bonn legislature.

Under the accord, however, small parties will be permitted to join the tickets of other, larger parties, a provision that will benefit East German parties linked to the large West German groupings represented in Parliament.

The biggest beneficiary was expected to be the German Social Union, a right-wing party linked to the Christian Social Union, part of Chancellor Helmut Kohl's governing coalition.

The clearest loser was the Party of Democratic Socialism, successor to East Germany's Communists, which no larger parties want to include. Gregor Gysi, who heads the former Communists, called the accord "election manipulation."

West Germany's Free Democrats, the junior partner in Kohl's government, suggested unification of the two Germanys should be moved forward to this fall.

Cornelia Schmalz-Jacobsen, the party's general secretary, told Die Welt newspaper that East Germany should join West Germany under Bonn's constitution as soon as possible, because of East Germany's severe financial problems.

"The quicker, the better — if possible on Oct. 14," she was quoted as saying in Friday's editions of the paper, made available early to other media.

Oct. 14 is the date set for East German elections that will create five state governments to mirror West Germany's federal system.

But another Free Democrat in the West German Parliament said the party only wanted East Germany to declare by that date when it intended to merge with the West.

"The idea is to give a statement early in October to make everybody clear that reunification will be definitely in December before the election," the source said on condition of anonymity. "It's a psychological moment, especially for industry so they can go forward and make their investments."

East Germany has yet to set a date for merger with West Germany.

East Germany's financial situation worsens daily as its companies make the difficult transition from communism to capitalism.

If government won't govern ...

Looters virtually waited in line to break into stores early this week in Chicago, during a siege of lawlessness which began after a generating plant fire left 40,000 customers without electricity.

The results were sobering — 49 people arrested on looting-related charges; numerous stores looted or vandalized; the number of police officers tripled in the affected area during the blackout and still unable to keep up with the looters. It was a taste of anarchy.

Police officer Rory Ohse said after the first night of looting, "They just lined up outside the stores, waiting for the police to leave. As soon as the police left, they came back. We couldn't keep up."

Ironically, Chicago Mayor Richard M. Daley downplayed the blackout, saying, "There is no need for a curfew. There is no call for the National Guard. It was only a blackout. There was no riot. There was no heavy looting."

Looters lined up outside stores and three times the normal number of police officers were put on duty — and still unable to keep up with the crime spree — and Daley doesn't believe there was a need for a curfew? There was, as he said, "no heavy looting." That gives us cause to wonder what he classifies as heavy looting — a crook in every store, perhaps?

Of course, it is up to the individual to maintain his personal code of honor at all times and to resist temptation when the opportunity for a deviation from that conduct presents itself. That isn't an easy course for many to follow.

Nineteen century English historian and politician Thomas Babington Macaulay noted that "the measure of a man's real character is what he would do if he knew he would never be found out."

Some of the looters in Chicago apparently didn't even mind being found out; they waited and did their looting anyway, almost as if to say, "There's nothing you can do to control us."

Even worse was the capitulation when Daley, the duly elected official charged with the responsibility to maintain civil order, failed to recognize what was needed in the particular situation or merely decided not to provide it.

That truly did signify bowing to anarchy.

Justice Marshall's type of court nearing extinction

Mr. Justice Thurgood Marshall reminds us — unintentionally — of what's at stake in attempts to turn the U.S. Supreme Court on its philosophical axis.

Murchison

I refer, of course, to the 82-year-old Marshall's widely publicized interview with Sam Donaldson, the interview in which he pronounced President George Bush "dead."

Marshall was grousing about the present court's supposed disregard of constitutional rights. Donaldson observed that the Constitution contained no right to abortion. True enough, Marshall blinked, but, "There are a lot of things that we have adjusted. It's just who's calling the cattle."

Truer words were never spoken: It's just who's going around in black robes, calling the cattle, tieing and branding them.

For 35 years, judicial cowboys like Marshall have been in the saddle. They have ridden roughshod over such limitations on government power as the Founding Fathers had set up, and to which previous Supreme Courts had deferred.

The Marshall gang and such saddle companions as they could allure from time to time didn't worry overmuch about what was written down on paper. Why, if the constitutional text didn't suit them, they'd simply "adjust" the Constitution to fit their conceptions. "Moo-o-o-o-o-o," the rest of us were supposed to murmur softly, gratefully.

The trouble was, "adjusting" the Constitution wasn't their job. On criminal rights, busing, school prayer, abortion, affirmative action, legislative reapportionment, and so on, the Supreme Court spoke to us of new realities, changed circumstances. We couldn't go on as we used to. Why? Because the court said we couldn't. Why did we have to listen to the court? Because circumstances had changed.

This circular style of argumentation closed off discussion, so far as court activists were concerned, but it failed to disguise the enterprise in which the court was engaged. That enterprise was the usurping of rights and privileges assigned to governmental bodies other than the Supreme Court of the United States.

Thurgood Marshall's arrogance — the president is "dead;" the court "adjusts" the Constitution — is breathtaking. Let's be grateful, nonetheless, for his frank display of the low regard in which he holds mere voters and lawmakers. He shows us why President Reagan did what he did — promote infinitely less-arrogant judges to the High Court — and why President Bush should follow as faithfully as possible in his footsteps.

Supreme Court justices should be high-minded, not high-handed.

Frequently it's asserted, by activist jurists and their apologists, that too much deference to legislators is dangerous. The Founders didn't give us a pure democracy — a thing they would have equated with mobocracy. If lawmakers ran the show, they might botch things worse than judges.

Of course that's not what we're up to today — transforming America into a plebiscitary democracy. Restoring balance between unelected judges and elected lawmakers is what we're up to. Remember the system of checks and balances we all learned about in school: no one branch supreme over the others?

There exist various techniques for curbing a runaway court, but the only one that seems to work is to change the faces on the court. Mr. Justice Marshall, shrewd old warrior of the court system, sagacious operator from both sides of the bench, knows what's coming his way. The Marshall gang, what's left of it, is becoming the Over-the-Hill Gang.

William Murchison's column is distributed by Heritage Features Syndicate.

Sin-tax hike would help bust budget

WASHINGTON — Higher "sin taxes" on alcohol and cigarettes are a deficit-buster that, according to the polls, more than 80 percent of Americans could live with. But overwhelming public support is no guarantee of overwhelming congressional support. Every two years, Congress listens to the people. Every day, Congress listens to special interest lobbyists.

Anderson

Federal excise taxes on beer have not been increased since 1951. One special interest lobby, The Beer Drinkers of America, is tailor-made to maintain the status quo. Its name conjures up an image of good-time guys — 500,000 members — who just want to preserve their right to keep and bear beer.

But the group might more appropriately be called the Beer Makers of America. Its membership is heavy with bartenders, bar owners and beer vendors, and it relies on contributions from the big brewers, including Miller and Anheuser-Busch.

The Beer Drinkers are a registered lobby, but the group hasn't filed any financial statements with Congress for a year (the statements are due quarterly). Maybe the staff has been too busy trying to stop sin taxes.

Earlier this spring, Capitol Hill was inundated with petitions from the Beer Drinkers warning against a tax increase.

Rep. Andy Ireland, R-Fla., wrote back to his constituents whose names were on those petitions. "Imagine my suprise," Ireland reported in a letter to his colleagues in the House, "when I began receiving letters from bewildered constituents." Some whose names appeared on the petitions claimed they had never heard of the Beer Drinkers of America. They favored an increase in the excise tax. And they were miffed that someone had signed their names.

Bill Schreiber, executive director of Beer Drinkers, told our reporter Paul Zimmerman that all the signatures were legitimate, and that the people must have forgotten that they signed.

Last year, the Beer Drinkers newsletter, "Heads Up," reported that the Congressional Budget Office opposed the tax increase too. But the CBO only gathers data for Congress. It does not take sides. CBO Director Robert Reischauer demanded, and got, a retraction from the Beer Drinkers.

Beer Drinkers, headquartered in Costa Mesa, Calif., describes itself as a non-profit consumer (no pun intended) organization. Schreiber says half of the group's support comes from consumers and the rest from the brewing industry.

But in the Beer Drinkers 1989 strategy, called a "Field Operations Plan," the emphasis is on attracting money not from beer drinkers but from beer sellers. The group set as its goal $200,000 from 400 beer wholesalers and $50,000 from 5,000 consumers paying $10 each in membership dues.

With George Bush's abandonment of his "no-new-taxes" promise, the Beer Drinkers launched a "major national member alert" in July. The goal is to get 200,000 people to write to Congress in protest.

No amount of complaining — especially if it comes from bartenders, beer wholesalers and brewers — will change the fact that higher taxes on beer, wine, hard liquor and cigarettes are a logical and popular way to raise revenues.

The benefits are hard to dispute. Drinkers and smokers will either pay the price or cut their consumption. If they pay the price, the budget is the winner. If consumption goes down, the burden on government health and social services is eased, and the budget is still the winner.

JUST LIKE OLD TIMES — U.S. military personnel are once again getting hazardous duty pay to work in Laos, and it's because of the same old war. The Pentagon recently put Laos on the hostile-fire pay list for the handful of personnel who go there on missions to retrieve the remains of American soldiers killed in the Vietnam War. The Laotian government has approved a few limited explorations of old airplane crash sites. And the search teams have found some of those sites still laced with land mines.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Fidel Castro isn't so averse to capitalism that it stops him from courting the U.S. tourist trade. But a tourist has to have a warped notion of a good time to spend it in Cuba — long lines, poor goods and substandard accommodations. To make the trip even more exciting, Americans risk breaking U.S. law. It's legal for Americans to travel to Cuba, but against U.S. law to spend dollars there. Castro has a long way to go before Americans will be telling each other, "For a good time, call Fidel."

CHARLEY REESE

Bush ought to be thinking damage control

George Bush has followed the breaking of his promise not to raise taxes by announcing that his administration has underestimated the deficit by about $69 billion.

Let us now consider the question of credibility.

Reese

In his acceptance speech at the Republican convention about two years ago, Mr. Bush said the following:

"I'm the one who won't raise taxes. My opponent now says he'll raise them as a last resort, or a third resort. When a politician talks like that, you know that's one resort he'll be checking into. My opponent won't rule out raising taxes. But I will. The Congress will push me to raise taxes, and I'll say no, and they'll push, and I'll say no, and they'll push again, and I'll say to them: 'Read my lips: no new taxes.'"

We now know, of course, that at least Michael Dukakis, whatever his other faults, was more honest and truthful than George Prescott Bush. Let's put aside, in this discussion, the issue of whether taxes are or are not needed and concentrate on the issue of credibility.

It seems to me that the great crisis in U.S. political life is loss of credibility, not just in Bush's case, but in general and at almost every level of political life.

Credibility — confidence on the part of the people that their political leaders are speaking truthfully — is far more valuable, more necessary to survival of freedom, than a solution to any fiscal or monetary problem.

Bush is at fault for not realizing that. If he did, then he would not shrug off his change of policy on taxes. He would go directly to the American people and apologize. He would offer a public apology to Dukakis. He would ask their forgiveness, thus salvaging some credibility, if not his original policy.

It is not uncommon for great men to admit mistakes and to ask for public pardon, but the puny media-creations we've been stuck with the past few decades are so insecure, and rightly so, that they dare not do it. What they fear is not to admit an error but that the public will realize that they are without convictions or philosophy. Empty suits who read other people's words placed in front of them. The truth probably is that Bush had no opinion about the necessity of tax hikes one way or other but merely adopted a position suggested to him as a campaign tactic.

Communication is the lifeblood of a free society, and when communication is poisoned to the point that people pay no attention to what anyone says, having been lied to so many times, then the very government itself is at risk.

But gross error as well as lies contribute to the loss of credibility. How credible is the Office of Management and Budget and Richard Darman? A few months ago they estimated the deficit at $100 billion. Now they say its $169 billion.

That is not just missing the bull's-eye. It is not even missing the target. It's missing the firing range. It's trying to bomb Berlin and hitting Prague. How can we now trust any figures or words that come from the Office of Management and Budget, so fat with accountants, economists and statisticians? If we are rational, we won't.

For too long we have ignored the warnings of men who didn't employ speech writers — men like George Washington, Alexander Hamilton, John Marshall, and Thomas Jefferson.

Over and over they talked, especially Washington, of what he called the "indissoluble union between virtue and happiness, between duty and advantage, between the genuine maxims of an honest and magnanimous policy and the solid rewards of public prosperity and felicity."

It isn't cash we're short of in Washington — it's credibility and honor.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

So what's new about mangling 'Banner'?

So Roseanne Barr took a fungo bat to Francis Scott Key's contribution to patriotic music before a major league baseball game in San Diego recently.

Nothing new there. Celebrities and would-be celebrities have been murdering our national anthem before sporting events for years. Nat King Cole even forgot the words once.

Grizzard

The worse such performance I ever witnessed came when country singer Johnny Paycheck was called upon to sing "The Star-Spangled Banner" before a football game.

Johnny Paycheck not only forgot the words, he also forgot the tune. What came out of his mouth and guitar sounded like a cross between Tex Ritter's immortal "Hillbilly Heaven" and "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."

What irritated me was what Roseanne Barr — who is to humor what a proctologist is to the medical profession — did after she butchered the anthem.

As the boos rained down on her for her singing efforts, she grabbed her crotch and spit.

"I was just trying to be funny," she said.

What she was trying to do is make fun of baseball players' tendencies to grab their crotches (or is it crotchi?) and spit a lot.

There are few things Roseanne Barr should know about baseball, and as a former crafty righthander (Newnan High — '62-'63-'64), I'm just the guy to tell her.

For instance, she probably never heard of baseball's infield fly rule.

That's the rule that says infielders must have their flies zipped at all times. Often, a shortstop, or even a first baseman, will find himself in violation of the rule and will have to reach down and take care of the matter in order to be in compliance.

Baseball players do not grab their crotches (crotchi) in order to be filthy or obscene.

I, of course, am not going to go into detail here, but players often have to make certain adjustments in the area of their persons about which we are speaking.

This necessity can occur after a slide, a dive for a ground ball, or falling down the dugout steps.

The fact that athletic supporters are not infallible and that baseball pants tend to be very tight are normally the culprits in this area.

When an adjustment in that area becomes necessary, a baseball player is quite uncomfortable and doesn't care if he might be on national television or not. He simply must have some relief before being called on to run again.

As far as spitting goes, a lot of baseball players chew tobacco when they play. What are they supposed to do, swallow the juice? Which would you rather see — a baseball player spit or throw up on the third base umpire?

In baseball you stand around a lot. After you've adjusted and checked your infield fly, there's not a lot left to do but spit until something happens.

The crotch of the matter is this:

Baseball is our national pastime. "The Star-Spangled Banner" is our national anthem. The other night in San Diego, Roseanne Barr became our national pig.

Grab a handful of that.

WORLD in brief

Peace Corps worker freed

BACOLOD, Philippines (AP) — An American Peace Corps worker freed Thursday after being held 50 days by Communist rebels said he was tired, happy and eager to get home.

Timothy Swanson, 26, of Cheyenne, Wyo., was handed over to a Red Cross team in a rural area on the central Philippine island of Negros, not far from where he was abducted on June 13.

"It's just great. It's just wonderful news," Swanson's father, Leonard Swanson, told radio station KRAE in Cheyenne after learning of his son's release.

"You feel like a whole big weight has been taken off," said his mother, Lynn Swanson.

President Bush, who met briefly with Swanson's parents when he visited Cheyenne on July 20, called Thursday morning with his best wishes, they said.

Soviets draft workers

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet government is drafting tens of thousands of soldiers, 10 to 15 percent of the nation's civilian trucks, and even the KGB to harvest a huge grain crop, the Soviet news agency Tass said Thursday.

It said the crop was so large it has overwhelmed the nation's ability to collect it all.

Soviet officials are so worried about losing any of the unexpectedly big crop that some suggested declaring a nationwide state of emergency, Tass said. Prime Minister Nikolai Ryzhkov rejected the idea Thursday.

The grain crop is now expected to reach 260 million tons. That's a mind-boggling figure for Soviets, whose previous record was last year's 211 million tons. No reason has been given for this year's rise in harvest figures.

The Soviets are already losing 2 million tons a day because they cannot harvest and store it quickly enough, said Vladilen Nikitin, head of the state food commission.

Soviet media have blamed shortages of fuel, trucks and storage space, as well as the centrally planned economy's inability to adjust to the demand. The country annually loses 20 to 30 percent of its food crop on the way to market.

Protesters continue

SOFIA, Bulgaria (AP) — The country's new non-Communist president pledged to work for more democracy, but protesters in the capital Thursday kept up their pressure on the governing Socialist Party.

The Socialists were also reportedly plagued by defections. In some cases, entire local leaderships quit the party.

Zhelyu Zhelev was elected Wednesday as the country's first non-Communist president in more than four decades. His supporters picked him as a compromise candidate in an effort to overcome growing political polarization as Bulgaria introduces greater democracy.

"It will be my basic endeavor ... to strengthen parliamentary democracy; to adopt, in the shortest possible time, a democratic constitution; and to implement the most important political and economic reforms," Zhelev said in an interview published in the daily Demokratsiya. The newspaper is put out by Zhelev's opposition party, the Union of Democratic Forces.

Asked about the most urgent tasks in coming weeks, Zhelev said, "First there must be active consultations between the key political forces toward creation of a strong, competent government."

Soviet crash kills 30

MOSCOW (AP) — All 30 people were killed when a small Soviet airliner crashed while bound for the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh, searchers told the Soviet news agency Tass on Thursday.

The wreckage of the Aeroflot Yakovlev-40 was found Thursday morning in the Lachin district of Azerbaijan, Tass said. The aircraft had been flying from the Armenian capital of Yerevan to Stepanakert.

The city of Stepanakert is capital of the disputed territory of Nagorno-Karabakh.

No official cause has been given for the crash. But the plane disappeared while flying in heavy fog over the mountainous region.

Nagorno-Karabakh is a mostly Armenian enclave inside the republic of Azerbaijan. It has been the focus of a bitter ethnic dispute that has left hundreds dead over the past two years.

Poor weather and rough terrain hampered the search for the aircraft, which had been carrying 26 passengers and four crew members, Tass said.

Rebel rivalry could extend Liberia's civil war

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is based partly on a pool report from journalists in Monrovia, including Associated Press correspondent Michael Goldsmith.

MONROVIA, Liberia (AP) — Rebels turned their backs on President Samuel Doe's troops on Thursday and prepared to fight each other, a source close to guerrilla leader Prince Johnson said.

Diplomats said the rivalry between Johnson and his foe, Charles Taylor, could prolong this West African nation's 7-month-old civil war for weeks.

Johnson's fighters withdrew Thursday from key positions they have occupied in central Monrovia.

That leaves the capital open to renewed occupation by Doe's soldiers, who massacred up to 600 men, women and children Sunday in an attack on St. Peter's Lutheran Church. Those killed were among thousands of civilians who have sought sanctuary at churches and embassies from tribal reprisals by troops and rebels.

Hundreds of civilians again started fleeing from the city Wednesday.

Only a few fighters of Johnson's Independent Patriotic Front were visible in areas of downtown Monrovia, which they captured from Doe's troops earlier in the week.

Gunfire broke out in parts of the city that were firmly under Johnson's control on Wednesday.

A big fire occurred in eastern Monrovia, but it was unclear whether the blaze was touched off by the fighting. The fire raged out of control because there is no longer a fire brigade in the capital.

Monrovia's 500,000 residents have been without running water, electricity and food supplies for nearly a month.

An American who has lived in Liberia for years and claims to be close to Johnson said the rebel leader was turning his forces around to confront Taylor's troops, who were advancing from behind him.

Like the other sources, the American spoke on condition of anonymity.

Johnson broke with Taylor and his National Patriotic Front in February and accuses his rival of being a Libyan stooge and a communist. Johnson has said he does not share Taylor's aspirations to lead Liberia.

Taylor appears to have the larger of the two rebel forces, but Johnson struck into the capital earlier in the bid to unseat Doe, who is holed up in his heavily fortified executive mansion.

"No faction has established clear superiority, and it's not at all clear that there will be an early end to the conflict," one diplomat said.

In the fighting since rebels invaded from neighboring Ivory Coast last December, about 5,000 people have been killed, most of them civilians.

The insurgents accuse Doe of corruption and human rights abuses. He has ruled this west African nation of more than 2 million people since taking power in a 1980 coup.

King's youngest daughter minister, holds law degree

ATLANTA (AP) — When the world last looked, Bernice Albertine King was a fidgety 5-year-old in white ribbons, piled sorrowfully in her mother's lap at her father's 1968 funeral.

Now, the baby daughter of the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. is a serene young woman, newly ordained as a Baptist minister and holder of doctor of law and master of divinity degrees from Emory University.

Ms. King, 27, is the only one of the slain civil rights leader's four children to follow her father's career and join the clergy. She has a long-range goal of starting a prison ministry that also would provide inmates with some legal counseling.

The broader goal of continuing the sweeping social change begun by her father is not on her agenda, Ms. King explains. But she understands why people would take her entry into the ministry as a sign that she intends to go in that direction.

"That's part of being who I am," she explains. "I've learned to live with that.

"My father was more concerned with sociology, the sociological reasons for behavior," she says. "I am more interested in the psychological. I like to analyze things, to look at how things happened to figure out why they happened."

Ms. King describes herself as an ambitious but private person. She carries herself with an air so coolly serious that friends often tell her she needs to lighten up.

Ms. King said she might begin to do that — after a summer of reading the Bible, studying for bar exams and interviewing for jobs with Atlanta-area law firms.

She was ordained and received both her law and divinity degrees all on the same day in May.

Part of her serious nature, Ms. King said, stems from soul searching in her early adulthood, when she "spent a lot of time running" from the religious calling she felt at age 17.

She thought briefly about a career as a television reporter. She participated in some anti-apartheid protests, went to jail after one of them. She also attended Democratic conventions, represented her church at Baptist assemblies and spoke before the United Nations.

But by the time Ms. King earned a bachelor's degree in psychology from Spelman College, she had a clearer idea of what she wanted to do in life.

She then enrolled at Emory and, in 1988, gave a trial sermon that whipped into a weeping frenzy the congregation at Ebenezer, the Baptist church presided over by both her father and grandfather.

At her ordination, the Rev. Joseph L. Roberts, Ebenezer's pastor and one of Ms. King's instructors at Emory, said she has "not only the oratorical gifts of her father but the sensitivity of her father."

Midland man in jail for alleged assault

Staff Report

A Midland man remained in jail Thursday night after being arrested for the rape of a 9-year-old Midland girl, police officials said.

Waymon Leonard Howard, 38, 713 S. Tilden St., was arrested about 2:20 p.m. Thursday in connection with the rape that occurred about 7:30 p.m. Wednesday.

Howard's bond was set at $25,000 by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe.

According to police, the victim was riding her bicycle in the 300 block of South Jackson Street when a man grabbed her and forced her into a vacant residence.

Once inside the kitchen area of the residence, the man allegedly sexually assaulted the girl.

The victim told police that the suspect displayed a small pocket knife and threatened to hurt her if she told anyone about the incident.

The victim was treated and released from Midland Memorial Hospital.

Howard was identified as the assailant by the girl from a photo line up, police said.

Ballet Academy fall classes cancelled

■ The president of Ballet Midland Academy says the 1991 schedule may have to be shelved.

By Georgia Todd Temple
Staff Writer

The doors of Ballet Midland Academy will be closed this fall.

"We will not have an academy this fall, and it's questionable whether we'll have an academy this coming year at all," said Lynn D. Durham Jr., president of the private non-profit organization.

Parents of Ballet Midland Academy students will be receiving a letter from the board in the next few days, Durham said.

"We will be going into a sort of retreat mode and bringing in an outside consultant to help us decide in what mode to continue," Durham said.

The Center for Non-Profit Management is the organization Ballet Midland is consulting with at this time, said Raye Ann Embrey, a member of the Ballet Midland board. The center provides different types of services to non-profit agencies.

Ballet Midland has asked the center for help in two specific areas, Mrs. Embrey said. The first is developing and redefining its goals and objectives. The second is a survey to assess the community support which exists for ballet in Midland.

Among the options being considered is for Ballet Midland to become a presenting organization, like Midland Opera Theater, which brings traveling productions to the community.

"It's doubtful whether we'll have any kind of season," said Durham, who refers to Ballet Midland as being in a period of "reorientation" and "reassessment."

"We were in much worse shape last summer than we are now, financially, but we were hoping that we would have a real viable program by this time," Durham said.

In August 1979, Ballet Midland hired Keith Martin as its artistic director and Martin's wife B.J. as the Academy's teacher. Both resigned this June.

"They are excellent instructors," Durham said of the Martins.

"We did well. We retired most of our debts. We don't have any excuses or complaints. We didn't have enough students for the academy, and we didn't have enough ticket sales for the productions."

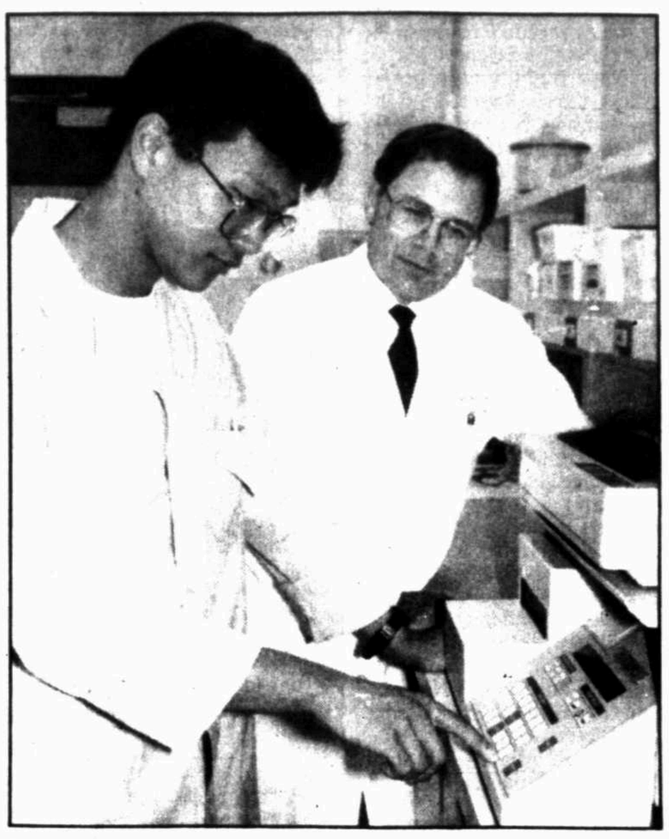
Durham said Midland is "just facing the same problem that other communities struggling to maintain a ballet program have faced.

"It's been controversial from day one whether Ballet Midland should have had an academy. The best ballet companies have some sort of teaching organization. It's very difficult to do that in a smaller city."

The ballet has received two grants for 1990-91 from Texas Commission on the Arts. One is for salary support for a general/business manager and the other was for operational expenses. Each grant is around $3,800.

When asked what the ballet would do about these grants, Durham said, "That's something else that we will have to look at."

Ballet Midland's board will meet later this month or in early September with outside consultants to explore what path the organization needs to pursue, Durham said.



Midland High School graduate Michael Leung assists Dr. Ralph Freedman in the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center Lab in Houston.

For many teen-agers, summer is the time to soak up some sun, play around the pool or take up part-time jobs. But for Michael Leung summer is a time for intense study and a chance to make his mark in original cancer research.

Leung recently participated in an eight-week biomedical program at the University of Texas M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston. He was one of 24 students selected from 250 applicants statewide to work along renowned scientists.

"High school students were treated as one of the faculty, as if we were part of a research team," Leung said. "We came into the lab and continued real research in progress."

Each high school in Texas was allowed to nominate one student for the program. Midland High School chose Leung, who said he was thrilled, since his sister had attended the university under the same program five years ago.

"I knew just what to expect," Leung said. "I knew what a great experience it would be."

According to Amy Chamberlain, M.D. Anderson Cancer Center spokesperson, students were selected on the basis of scientific aptitude, a record of high academic achievement, excellent moral character and an essay demonstrating the student's sincerity and interest in the program. The program is for high school students who have recently completed their senior year.

Leung, who completed several honors courses in science, said his science background garnered from Midland schools boosted his chance of being selected. Leung, who has been attending Midland schools since the fourth grade, has many courses of science under his belt, including biology, physics, chemistry and physiology.

A former MHS student council, computer club and National Honor Society member and Texas Excellence Award winner, Leung has set his sights on majoring in science at the University of Texas at Austin in the fall.

Despite his many achievements, the unassuming Leung laughs off the suggestion that he must be a "super achiever."

Odessa has its day in Midland court

■ At the Monahans Draw trial, witnesses suggest wastewater discharge into the draw is just one part of southeast Midland County's water problems.

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

Experts called by the city of Odessa testified Thursday that the city's water reclamation plants are not the sole or worst cause of water in Monahans Draw.

Environmental engineers attributed the spoiling of three Midland County residents' land to excessive rainfall and livestock during the third day of testimony in the Anderson-Gay versus Odessa civil trial.

The plaintiffs' attorney, Paul Bohannon, rested his case early in the day after asking civil engineer Steven Esmond about conditions in Odessa's South Dixie water reclamation plant.

Esmond, who was involved in the redesign of the South Dixie plant and the design of the East plant, said he visited South Dixie in 1989 and '90 and saw cobwebs, algae and non-functioning equipment in the chlorine contact basin.

The basin is the final step before treated water hits the draw.

James M. O'Leary, attorney for the city, led his experts through detailed descriptions of the water treatment process.

Matt Irvin, Odessa's wastewater plant supervisor, acknowledged that a skimmer in the contact basin had malfunctioned but said baffles and manual skimming by water plant staffers kept the area clean.

In response to the floating-condoms-in-the-draw evidence introduced Wednesday, Irvin said wastewater passes through five or six screens during the treatment process that should prevent such detritus from leaving the plants.

"Condoms, by the very nature of what they are, are impossible to absolutely keep out," he said.

Peggy Wells Glass, a private water and wastewater treatment consultant, said the plants were "fairly typical" in their operations.

She presented clear specimens collected Thursday morning from both water reclamation plant outfall pipes.

Asked about possible odors in the treatment process, Mrs. Glass unscrewed her sample jars and let O'Leary smell the water, which she said had a slight chlorine odor.

"When we were kids, the sewage was put in tanks and held, not treated, nothing like the plants we have now," she said.

"The effluent smell depends on the nature of the draw. Even primary-treated water is stabilized by 18 miles downstream."

Mrs. Glass explained that Odessa's wastewater is secondarily-treated for a cleaner end product. The process involves exposing the water to organics-consuming micro-organisms, some of which can cause foam in hot weather, she said.

She said it was far more likely that the murky, smelly water that flooded the plaintiffs' land acquired its qualities from the draw.

The livestock that wallows in the draw is a source of algae, which makes the water green and pungent, Mrs. Glass said.

Cattle manure is 10 to 20 times stronger than human waste, she added.

Then there's rainfall runoff, which washes agricultural fertilizers, urban trash and oilfield surfactants into the draw.

Draw water also comes from industrial discharges and groundwater seepage, she said.

Bohannon asked Mrs. Glass if she was saying that Midland landowners should have to "keep cattle from doing what they do" to accommodate Odessa's wastewater runoff.

Mrs. Glass said prohibitions against livestock had been levied in areas far worse than Monahans Draw, but as long as Odessa's plants stayed within their Texas Water Commission and Environmental Protection Agency permitted levels, only balance is required.

John F. Landgraf, a civil engineer with Landgraf Crutcher & Associates, testified that the draw water inundated the plaintiffs' property because the land is in a depression prone to flooding.

He said surveys showed Louise Gay's land is a playa or intermittent lake that lies 4 feet below the level of the draw. George Anderson Sr. and George Anderson Jr.'s land is 7 feet below the draw,

Defeating Smith will be uphill battle, Roberts says

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

The democratic candidate for 21st Congressional District of the U.S. House of Representatives, who stopped in Midland Thursday while on the campaign trail, criticized his Republican Party opponent for neglecting his constituents.

"(U.S. Rep.) Lamar Smith is not spending much time in this district ... he is not in tune with the concerns in this district," Kirby Roberts said, adding that Smith is more concerned with members of a country club than with working people.

Roberts held a town meeting in the County Courtroom at the Midland County Courthouse with a crowd of about 10 people.

The Democratic candidate spoke for about 10 minutes and then fielded questions from the crowd.

Roberts touched on a variety of subjects, including the various savings and loan scandals.

"Instead of sending kids caught with a little pot to bust rocks, we need to send a few S&L executives," Roberts told the crowd, which responded with applause.

Roberts also expressed a need to pass "reasonable regulations and reasonable laws" concerning the environment to protect West Texas from becoming a toxic waste storage area.

Roberts went on to critcize President Bush's tax raise.

"The people in this district are going to pay," he said, adding that the tax code needs to be rewritten on a graduated scale.

"I know I've got an uphill battle running against a wealthy incumbent," Roberts said.

Roberts campaign describes him as being pro-choice on the issue of abortion, against gun control, for a clean environment, for strong drug reform, and for promotion of Texas agriculture.

Roberts will challenge Smith in November's election.

Police detain photographer

EL PASO (AP) — An El Paso photographer and two members of a California television news crew were detained Thursday by Mexico's federal police who said they were trying to protect the three from angry Mexican journalists.

El Paso Herald-Post photographer Rick Kelley accompanied a film crew from KCRA-TV in Sacramento to Ciudad Juarez, Mexico, across the border from El Paso, said Ray Chavez, Herald-Post city editor. The Sacramento journalists were doing a story on border auto thefts for a program called "The West."

El Paso police have accused Mexican authorities of driving stolen cars.

Sorting it out

Midland Police Officer G. Lane questions Dale Sparkman, holding a bandage to her head, and Marcelina Brown, of Eastland, Texas, about an accident involving two pickups at Lamesa and Golf Course Roads about 11:45 Thursday. Brown, driving east on Golf Course Road and Luz Ramos, driving south on Lamesa Road, both claimed they had a green light. Ramos was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital.

DEATHS

Leona Mitchell

BIG LAKE — Services for Leona Mitchell, 76, of Big Lake, will be 11 a.m. today at St. Paul's United Methodist Church. The Rev. Charles Williams of San Angelo will officiate. Burial will follow at Sunset Memorial Gardens in Odessa under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Mitchell died Tuesday night in a Big Lake Hospital. She was born Sept. 15, 1913, in Hardeman County. She graduated from Quanah High School in 1931 and married Joseph Wayne Mitchell March 2, 1938. The couple lived in the Midland/Odessa area. Mrs. Mitchell was preceded in death by her husband in 1962. For the past 10 years she lived in Big Lake and was a member of the First United Methodist Church.

Survivors include four daughters, Harriett Berlin of Big Lake, Donna Elms of Manteo, N.C., Rena Beauchamp of Wichita Falls, and Jody Dortch of Midland; her twin sister, Lorena Horine of Mansfield; three brothers, E.F. Anderson of Duncanville, Rex Anderson of Clifton, and Wayne Anderson of Vernon; her 10 grandchildren, nine great-grandchildren; niece and four nephews.

Pallbearers will be Charles Allan Berlin, Darrell Berlin, Robert Berlin, Joe Del Ponder, B.W. Ponder, Darren Dortch and Brad Beauchamp.

Honorary pallbearers will be Chuck Elms, Charles Berlin, George Beauchamp, Larry Dortch, Terry Lundgren, Alfred Berlin and R.E. Hurst.

The family requests that memorials be sent to Reagan County Care Center, Big Lake, Texas 76932.

Roy Chamberlain Jr.

BIG SPRING — Graveside services for Roy Stephen Chamberlain Jr. of Big Spring will be 10 a.m. today at Fairview Cemetery, under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home. Bill Ward of Kingdom Hall of Jehovah's Witnesses will officiate.

Chamberlain died Monday in Lubbock.

He was born Aug. 25, 1952, in Engersoll, Ontario, Canada. His family moved to Snyder when he was a young child. He graduated from high school in 1970. He married the former Olga Gonzales June, 19, 1971, in Snyder. He was self-employed in Midland for 13 years.

Survivors include his wife, Olga Chamberlain of Big Spring; three daughters, Andrea, Angela and Anita Chamberlain, all of Big Spring; his parents, Roy H. and Coza Chamberlain of Midland; his brother, Mark Chamberlain of Springfield, Ore.; his sisters, Christine Moldenouer of Tucson, Ariz., Bonnie Ward of Snyder and Belinda Moore of Midland; and numerous nephews and nieces.

The family requests memorials be sent to San Juan Regional Medical Center, 801 W. Maple, Farmington, N.M.

M.J. 'Bo' Bodine

Graveside services for M.J. "Bo" Bodine of Midland will be 11 a.m. Saturday at Fairview Cemetery, under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home. The Rev. Truman Friday will officiate.

Bodine died Thursday at a local hospital.

He was born May 25, 1917, in Colorado City, where he graduated from high school. He married the former Daisy Davis Jan. 18, 1932, in Colorado City. He enlisted in the U.S. Army and came to Midland in 1936 after his honorable discharge. He operated the Crawford Coffee Shop and later worked as a chef for Midland Country Club. He was working for Midland County at the time of his death.

Bodine was preceded in death by his son, Arbrey Allen, in 1934 and a daughter, Janet Bodine, in 1933.

Survivors include one daughter, Linda Bodine Wooten of Midland; one brother, L.R. Bodine of Atlanta; one sister, Nila Pearl Ragsdale of Andrews; one grandson; one granddaughter; and numerous nieces and nephews.

The family requests memorials be sent to the American Heart Association.

Anne Jo Markle

MARFA — Anne Jo Markle, 80, of Marfa died at an Alpine hospital Wednesday.

Services are scheduled for 2 p.m. Saturday at the First Baptist Church with Rev. Pete Campbell officiating. Burial will follow at the Marfa Cemetery.

Mrs. Markle was born June 17, 1910, in Marfa. She was preceded in death by her husband, Norman Markle, in 1960.

Mrs. Markle was the second woman to graduate from the School of Pharmacy at the University of Texas. She was a pharmacist and homemaker, and belonged to Marfa History Club, Friends of the Library, the local chapter of the American Red Cross, Cowbells, Presidio Historical Society, Chi Omega Sorority and the Beta Sigma Phi Sorority.

Survivors include a daughter, Jo Anne McClurg of Midland; a sister, Clair Kelly of Marfa; and two grandchildren of Midland.

Faerine Quinn Mayes

Graveside services for Faerine Quinn Mayes of Midland will be 3 p.m. Saturday at Resthaven Memorial Park under the direction of Ellis Funeral Home. The Rev. J.B. Stewart of First United Methodist Church will officiate.

Mrs. Mayes, 88, died Thursday at a local nursing home.

She was born Sept. 24, 1901, in Pittsburgh. She married John C. Mayes in Brownwood. They moved to Midland in 1944 and established Mayes Electric in 1946. She was a member of First United Methodist Church.

She was preceded in death by two sons, Pete and George Mayes.

Survivors include two granddaughters, Carrie Mayes and Georgann O'Connor, both of Midland; three other granddaughters and three grandsons.

The family requests that memorials be sent to the First United Methodist Church building fund or to the charity of one's choice.

Milo Noble

Services for Milo Noble, 68, will be 2 p.m. Saturday at Greater Ideal Baptist Church. Interment will follow at Fairview Cemetery under the direction of Baker Jackson Funeral Home. The Rev. Ferguson will officiate.

Noble was born Dec. 25, 1922, in Rockwall. He married Billie Jane Lewis in October 1970 in Midland.

LEUNG: Aspiring scientist says golf can be frustrating at times

(From 1B)

"I would say I'm pretty focused," Leung said. "Anyone who applies themselves can do what I did."

Leung, who lounges around his house in a T-shirt and walking shorts, may look like the typical teen-ager. But once he begins talking about his scientific studies, his easy smile and casual demeanor take a back seat to his sharp intelligence.

Once Leung leaned forward intensely on his sofa and began earnestly explaining the theory of immunotherapy, and "attempting to amplify the expression of antibodies to bind better to cancer cells to produce cytotoxicity," it was obvious that he's serious about his work.

During his eight weeks of research, Leung studied alongside gynecologist Ralph Freedman, M.D. Ph.D.

"Dr. Freedman has the best of both worlds," Leung said. "He treats patients and does research. He may perform surgeries and cancer removals some days, but he is continuously thinking about future research projects."

Leung said Freedman, who served as the young man's mentor, has inspired him to consider specializing in gynecology.

"Some medical doctors finish their residency and then get a two-year fellowship and go into research," Leung said. The young man said he is also intrigued by the field of ovarian and cervical cancer research.

"I was also influenced by my father, who is a medical doctor," Leung said. "I am comfortable in the medical atmosphere."

Leung said he is also comfortable discussing his research.

"After making a poster presentation and slide presentation, we were required to write a medical journal style research paper," he said. "We attended a seminar on how to write the document — there was a strict protocol to follow."

Leung's paper, complete with computer graphs and references, is titled "Functional Studies of Cell Surface Reacting Human Monoclonal Antibodies in Ovarian and Cervical Carcinomas."

Although the title is a mouthful, Leung said long titles are necessary in journal documentation to allow doctors and researchers quick access to specific studies.

When not applying his knowledge to scientific studies, Leung says he plays the violin to relax. He also plays tennis.

"I've recently taken up golf," he said. "It's a frustrating sport, but fun."

Leung also described his summer academic pursuits at the cancer center as "intense, but fun."

"Working in the lab was like an 8-to-5 job," he said. "I'm only sorry that I didn't have longer than eight weeks. There is so much to absorb the first two weeks. By the time I really knew how to contribute to my lab, the course was over."

Leung said he was honored to attend the summer program, which is unique since it allows high school, rather than college students to attend.

"There are so many brilliant people at the center," Leung said. "There is a large concentration of medical schools — the University of Texas at Houston Medical School, Baylor and the Texas Heart Institute — near the center."

The college-bound teen-ager said he enjoyed the fact that his work "was clinical, rather than abstract, with definite applications."

"You have to appreciate what they are doing at the center," he added. "They are working for a noble cause. I want to be able to help people, too. It's very fulfilling."

Leung said, given the opportunity, he would be delighted to work another session at the center. "I don't know what else I would have done this summer," he said.

MHS announces band schedule

The summer schedule for members of the Midland High School band has been announced. Summer band will begin at 8 a.m. Monday.

Full band rehearsals will take place 8 a.m.-12 p.m., Aug.6-15, Monday-Friday, and 6-9 p.m., Aug. 16-23, Monday-Friday.

Section rehearsals are also scheduled, from 1-3:30 p.m. The brass section will meet Monday, Wednesday, Friday; Monday, Aug. 13; and Wednesday, Aug. 15. Woodwind sectionals are scheduled for Tuesday, Aug. 7; Thursday, Aug. 9; and Tuesday, Aug. 14.

Midland High School's band will be under the direction of a new band director, Billy Goff.

For more information contact Billy Goff, band director, Midland High School, at 689-1130.

TRIAL: Rainfall is channeled into Monahans Draw, expert says which is ill-defined on their property, Landgraf said.

(From 1B)

Both acreages are in the immediate spillway of Consavvy Lake, which is fed by Monahans Draw.

Landgraf produced rainfall charts that indicated that 1986, with 30 inches of rain, was the wettest year in the wettest decade (the 1980s) on record. He said Monahans Draw's 600 square-mile drainage basin channeled that rainfall into the draw, which filled to capacity and flowed over onto the plantiffs' land.

He said it would take a ditch 8 feet wide by 8 inches deep to contain both wastewater plants' 5 million gallon daily outflow. The draw can contain 300 million gallons of water.

Bohannon questioned Landgraf's inclusion of the lands within a flood zone. Landgraf explained that they were classified as such by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, which can limit building permits in flood zones.

"But FEMA doesn't prohibit farming in a flood zone, does it?" Bohannon asked.

Landgraf said it didn't.

Frances Williams, a member of the Midland Naturalists Society, added a lighter moment to the proceedings when she described the Christmas 1980 visit of three white swans to Cassidy Lake.

The area she identified as the lake is on Mrs. Gay's property, bought in 1981.

Testimony continues today, with the city slated to produce several key witnesses, 142nd District Court Judge Pat Baskin said.

San Jacinto JHS band rehearsals set

Summer band at San Jacinto will start Monday, with full band rehearsals from 9:00 to 11:00 a.m. each day.

Percussion sectional practice will be Monday through Friday from 8:00 a.m. to 9:00 a.m. Trombones, baritones and tuba sectional practice is 11:00 a.m. to noon. Cornet sectional practice is 12:00 noon to 1:00 p.m. Flute and clarinet sectional practice is Monday, Wednesday and Friday 1:00 to 2:00 p.m. Horns and saxes will practice Tuesday and Thursday from 1:00 to 2:00 p.m.

Following is the San Jacinto Summer Band bus schedule:

At 8:10 a.m. Bus No. 1 leaves De Zavala; at 8:20 it leaves Crockett; at 8:30 it leaves Bowie; at 8:40 it leaves West; and at 8:45 it arrives at San Jacinto.

At 12:00 p.m. Bus No. 1 leaves San Jacinto; at 12:10 it leaves West; at 12:20 it leaves Bowie; at 12:30 it leaves Crockett; at 12:40 it arrives at De Zavala.

At 8:05 a.m. Bus No. 2 leaves Santa Rita; at 8:15 it leaves Fannin; at 8:30 it leaves Lamar; at 8:40 it leaves Houston; and at 8:45 it arrives at San Jacinto.

Grass clippings not good thatch, but good fertilizer

The Great Myths About Lawn Care

Myth 1

Grass clippings make thatch: Grass clippings simply do no contribute to thatch in any lawn. Thatch is a layer of dead plant tissue that can develop between the base of the plant and the soil surface. The plant tissue that builds thatch contains high amounts of lignin, but are high in protein and decompose fairly quickly once they are cut and fall down into the turf.

Kiker

Grass clippings contain about 5 percent nitrogen, 0.5 percent phosphorous and 2 percent potassium as well as smaller amounts of all the rest of the essential plant nutrients. When left on the lawn, these nutrients are eventually returned to the lawn. Clippings are truly an organic fertilizer.

Not all grasses are capable of developing thatch. Common bermudagrass is a variety that does not build thatch. Other grasses that can have thatch problems are the hybrid bermudas, St. Augustine and Zoysia.

Myth 2

Lawns need to be scalped in the spring: The removal of dead grass plant tissue by low mowing in the spring does not have any effect on the lawn. At least it doesn't have any effect agronomically. Some owners feel it is necessary to get rid of all dead grass as the lawn will get off to a better start in the spring. This is a completely unnecessary operation. The professional turfgrass managers do not scalp golf courses, parks, athletic fields or any other turf. This activity seems to only be associated with home lawn management.

Scalping the lawn is a very dirty and unpleasant job that has only served to add material to our already overcrowded landfills.

Myth 3

The cutting height of a lawn mower must be increased during the summer: Bermuda grass grows a little different than some other grasses. It tends to grow up on a stem and if not mowed properly the lawn can become very "stemmy." When that happens, you will notice all the leaves are on the top of the stem and it looks like a small forest. The lawn mower can cut this top layer of leaves off and the lawn is scalped. The scalping does not kill the lawn, but it is unsightly for a while.

This is not a problem when lawns are cut at the proper height and at the proper interval. For example, a common bermuda lawn should be cut at 1½ inches. If these lawns are cut every five to six days, scalping should not be a problem and there is no need to bag the clippings.

Myth 4

Lawns need to be cut higher during the summer: There are some turfgrasses like fescue, bluegrass and ryegrass that are very sensitive to high temperatures and higher mowing heights tend to keep these lawns cooler during the summer, but the grasses we grow, like bermuda, St. Augustine and buffalograss, almost thrive on high temperatures. The optimum or best growing temperatures for our grasses is around 95 degrees.

Myth 5

Phosphorous is needed for good root growth: Phosphorous is one of the 16 elements that a plant needs to grow properly and grass is no exception. Phosphorous is needed in fairly high amounts by plants that flower or produce fruit and since grass does neither, its phosphorous requirements ar low. An exception is that germinating turfgrass seed does respond to fairly high levels of phosphorous.

The real secret to good root growth is not the level of phosphorpus but the relationship between the amount of nitrogen and the amount of potassium the plant receives. As the level of potassium is increased in relationship to the amount of nitrogen, the plants tend to grow few leaves and more roots. This is basically why a 3 to 12 ratio between nitrogen and phosphorous and potassium is recommened.

Myth 6

Organin nitrogen is better than inorganic nitrogen: The turfgrass plant cannot directly use nitrogen in the organic form; it primarily uses the nitrate form. Nitrogen supplied in the ammoniac chemical or the organic form is converted naturally by organisms in the soil to the nitrate form.

Apple farmers have had to adapt

By Mary MacVean

MIDDLE HOPE, N.Y. (AP) — Nine generations of Cosmans, six generations of Clarkes and four generations of Crists have worked the land of the Hudson River Valley. Sometimes, their apple orchards have been bountiful; sometimes, they have not.

But generally, they have kept their problems to themselves. It is a measure of their fears for the future that they sought out reporters from the city to tour their farms and hear about their troubles.

"The last two or three years, apples have not made money," said Steve Clarke from Prospect Hills Orchard Inc. in Milton.

Consumers, and farmers, worry about chemicals. Farmers can get more money selling their land to developers than farming it. Competition from the Northwest and abroad is squeezing their apples off store shelves. And bad weather and pests, of course, never go away.

How do growers survive?

"We go from year to year and look at the future and hope we're going to be here," Larry Cosman said at his Mount Airy Farm in the hamlet of Middle Hope, where he grows 250 acres of apple trees.

AP Laserphoto

Farmer Larry Cosman examines a bug trap in a Marshall Macintosh apple tree on his Mount Airy fruit farm near Newburgh, N.Y., in June. The trap, placed by Cornell University, is to see if a pest called the verigated leaf roller is attacking the trees.

"I THINK the odds are kind of against us in the sense that progress will prevail sooner or later and push out some of the farms," he added later.

Not that the farmers are railing against progress. "We brought you up here to show we don't have our heads in the sand," said grower Jeff Crist.

Farmers are adapting by getting closer to consumers, like the pick-your-own orchards at Clarke's farm, and with dwarf trees, which can be planted more densely and pruned and picked more easily. They also are starting sales organizations that market fruit from a group of farms, and are selling directly to restaurants, at farm markets and stands, and abroad.

"Ten years ago, it was enough to know what was going on in the confines of your orchard. It's not enough anymore," said Mike Moriello of New Paltz, trying to be heard over Joe Porpiglia's water dump, which washes apples and sends them down to the waxer.

Not all have adapted. Some have sold their land, lot by lot.

"It's like they're treading water," said Elizabeth Ryan, who owns a 35-acre farm with her husband and is compiling oral histories of valley farmers.

"IN THE '60s and '70s, farmers sold their land, but they sold it to farmers. Now they sell it to big real estate," said Porpiglia, 60, as he looked out at farms that have been redeveloped for houses. "For sale" signs are interspersed among the apple blossoms.

Farmland preservation is fashionable, but Crist's wife, Joy, said that just saving land is not the point. "The emphasis needs to be on supporting and strengthening the farm business," she said.

That means more research and development, a good, steady labor force, and enough farmers so there's competition among businesses that support farms. "I don't see a lot of good, active farms going out of business," she said.

From the early 1800s, growers in the Hudson Valley shipped many fruits by sloop south to New York City and points beyond, including to South American countries now sending apples to the United States.

When Larry Cosman was a child, wholesale buyers from New York City would travel the valley, haggling with each farmer on his route.

In a 1938 booklet prepared for an apple blossom festival, growers noted they had "the best market in the world close at hand," partly because city consumers cherished the fruits of upstate farms.

COSMAN'S FATHER sold Happy Bee Apples, with cheery, old-fashioned stickers plastered on wooden boxes. Most went no farther than metropolitan New York.

In the 1930s, Ryan said, there were 500 farms in Ulster County, on the Hudson's western bank. In 1990, there are fewer than 200 family farms all along the valley, from New York City to Albany, a 140-mile stretch.

In 1986, Cosman, 43, abandoned Happy Bee, because he didn't have the volume to market his own label. Now his apples, a dozen varieties from 40,000 trees, are Hudson Valley apples, like his neighbors'.

"Sometimes you talk about it and get a little choked up," he said. "It's a family name. ... It's part of you. Farming is not really a job, it's a lifestyle. And most farmers live, eat and breathe what they're doing."

But the bottom line must prevail over sentiment. "It's an international business," Cosman said, and the Hudson Valley growers had to market their fruit together to compete with similar labels for Michigan and Washington state apples.

Though exports remain a small slice of the U.S. apple business — 13 million 42-pound bushels in 1988 — the Cosmans sometimes export 75 percent of a crop.

FOREIGN CLIMES seem very far away during a walk along Latintown Road in Ulster County. McIntosh and lesser-known types of apple trees spread out on all sides, looking as if nothing could touch the serenity.

But Alar did.

"If you grow apples, that changed your life forever," Ryan said.

"On an emotional level, it was a terrible upset. ... All those guys in Washington told us it was safe, and we believed them. We wanted to believe them," said the Cornell-trained pomologist, or fruit specialist, who did not use Alar on her farm.

Alar, also known as daminozide, is a growth regulator that slowed maturation and improved color and storage, making it easier to manage harvests. But even in February 1989, when the Natural Resources Defense Council issued its report linking Alar and cancer, few growers were using it, said Ulster County extension fruit expert Warren Smith.

Nevertheless, apple prices and sales fell. Growers still are trying to recover from losses estimated at $100 million.

Like consumers, Cosman said, farmers have a hard time figuring out which experts to believe. But they respond to consumers and to costs, Moriello said, and for chemicals, the cost has gone up 30 percent to 50 percent in recent years, even though he's using less.

SMITH SAID all the valley's apple growers use integrated pest management, a system that combines ecological, non-chemical methods and natural predators with chemicals, ideally fewer and fewer of them.

For these growers, migranes are reserved for coping with apple prices. Though supermarkets were selling apples for up to 99 cents a pound, Mike Moriello said he was paid 19 cents a pound wholesale.

Preliminary figures for 1989 show Washington state alone growing 119 million bushels for eating and processing, a glut that many growers say combined with the Alar scare for a disastrous year.

People come for miles around to get corn ground

STOCKMAN, Texas (AP) — Way out in Stockman, yellow corn grows tall and Horace "Scooter" Francis' corn grinder always is in big demand for residents hungry for homemade cornbread and cornmeal-fried fish.

"I just like foolin' with that corn because there ain't nobody else left to do it," he said of his corn-grinding operation. "You can make cornbread, and fry fish and hushpuppies with it. When my mama makes cornbread dressing, people will run three miles to get some."

Born in Stockman, Scooter was reared on the same farm which he says was in his family "since before the Titanic sank."

Each year he grows, harvests and grinds his own corn into cornmeal. He also grinds corn for farmers throughout Nacogdoches and other neighboring counties. "The only other corn grinder in the area is near Diboll," he said. "There's not many of them still turning and most who were have already passed on. I've been growing corn all my life. We get them from all over wanting me to make cornmeal."

When harvest begins in September, Scooter once again will crank up his tractor-driven corn grinder.

"The corn's got to be dry before you harvest it," he said. "Some of the guys get hungry and pick their corn too early. I've had my corn grinder 15 years. It takes two people to run it and it's hard work. This man in Sacul finally sold it to me without telling his wife. It almost caused a divorce."

On Saturdays during the fall, when residents travel in droves to have Scooter grind their corn, the job usually is more "a good time" than a chore.

LOCAL/AREA REPORTS

Robbery

Staff Reports

An undetermined amount of money was taken in an aggravated robbery of a local convenience store Wednesday night, police said.

According to reports, a man robbed the Taylor Food Mart, 2500 W. Front Ave., about 8:10 p.m.

The suspect entered the store, pointed a pistol at the clerk, Delores Barrientos, 20, and demanded money from the register, police said. The clerk complied before the robber fled.

The suspect was described as a white male, about 5 feet 2 inches tall, 160 pounds, thin built, with light short curly hair. He also had a mustache and a two to three day growth of beard.

Arraignment

A Midland man arrested Wednesday at Quinten's Walk apartment complex for exposing himself to residents there has been released from jail under a personal recognizance bond, officials said.

James M. Mysza, 24, was charged with three felony counts of indecency with a child by exposure. Bond was set at $2,500 for each count by Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, who also released Mysza on his own recognizance Thursday, jail officials said.

According to sheriff's officials, Mysza exposed himself repeatedly to women and girls at the complex since January.

Shooting

BIG SPRING — A 36-year-old Hispanic man was reportedly shot once in the arm by a .22-caliber gun between 11 and 11:30 p.m. Wednesday, police said.

Ramiro Lara of Big Spring told police that he was injured as a result of a drive-by shooting. However, an investigation revealed that it was not a drive-by shooting, police said. Circumstances of the incident are still under investigation.

Lara was treated at Scenic Mountain Medical Center.

Razing Texas' old bridges brings with it some regrets

By Arthur Hahn

BRENHAM (AP) — I saw in another newspaper recently that they're closing a bridge east of Dime Box.

Unless you know about this bridge, that news probably doesn't impact you much. But this is not your typical bridge. It's about 100 feet above the railroad tracks, and I don't remember how old it is.

All I know is that it's been there as long as I can remember. And as a kid, it was wonderfully scary when you crossed it, because the way across was paved with planks. Wooden boards that rattled when you drove across. When you made it across, you could go the back way to Deanville. In your mind, you could hear the boards cracking and you were never sure you were going to make it and you might fall 1,000, no, 10,000 feet to the bottom onto the railroad tracks.

That never happened, of course. No one ever fell through.

As we got older and started driving ourselves, sometimes we'd motor out to the bridge and park on the bridge for a few minutes, even though there were signs that strictly forbade that. Sort of tempting fate, but not really, if you know what I mean.

But for the last few years, schools buses have been rerouted to avoid this bridge because it wasn't deemed safe any more. And the old bridge is coming down, if it isn't down already.

There's something fascinating about bridges. If you've ever stood on the Royal Gorge Bridge in Colorado, you know what I mean. That bridge is a truly impressive piece of engineering, even if it does sway a bit from the wind. The Arkansas River below looks like a little piece of ribbon.

I've seen film of people who jump off a high bridge with pieces of elastic rope tied around their ankles. I forget what they're called, but I'd call them "thrill-seekers."

Back before they paved the road between our house and Lexington, there were two wooden bridges within bicycle distance, both wide enough for a single car. The Yegua Creek flowed under one of them, and it was a good place to fish.

The only problem was you had to keep one ear on the road so you could know when cars were coming and take appropriate action. Usually you could see the dust before you could see the car, but everyone had to drive pretty slow, so there was little leeway.

The problem was that when you had a nibble, you were reluctant to bring up your line until you absolutely had to.

But those bridges are long gone, and another one is going.

It's probably just as well. We wouldn't want anyone falling through.

Nineteen indicted for TEDs violations

HOUSTON (AP) — Nineteen Gulf Coast shrimp fishermen have been indicted on federal charges of failing to use devices that allow sea turtles to escape from shrimping nets, and the U.S. Attorney's Office says more arrests are expected.

The 19 were arrested after 31 dead turtles showed up on Texas beaches during the first 10 days of the 1990 shrimping season last month.

'Bluffs Reservoir closer to reality

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congress took another step this week to subject a 3,800-acre national wildlife refuge near Tyler to flooding for a proposed reservoir.

The House Merchant Marine and Fisheries committee approved a bill by Rep. Ralph Hall, D-Rockwall, that will take the land out of the control of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Environmentalists who oppose the measure say the refuge, which is along the Sabine River, is prime animal habitat and contains some of the best bottomland hardwood in Texas. State officials have also expressed opposition to the bill.

A local hunting club in 1986 gave the land, now known as the Little Sandy Wildlife Refuge, through an easement to the Fish and Wildlife Service. The service prevents any development, road-building, grazing or logging on it.

"What was done in this easement was wrong," said Rep. Don Young, R-Alaska. "It was wrong when it started. We're going to stop it today."

The land, about 30 miles north of Tyler, is part of about 40,000 acres the Sabine River Authority proposes flooding to create the Waters Bluff Reservoir.

The need for the reservoir is also disputed. Supporters say they have feasibility studies that say Longview and possibly Tyler could use the water. Opponents say other studies show the northeast Texas communities have five times the water they now use.

The dam for the reservoir would be built near Gladewater. The Sabine River would basically form the southern edge of the reservoir.

Tyler hospitals ban smoking

TYLER (AP) — There will be no smoking at two of Tyler's major hospitals following a recommendation from the county medical society.

Officials at East Texas Medical Center and Mother Frances Hospital said the ban took effect Wednesday and will include all patient rooms, lobby and waiting areas, hallways, restrooms and hospital entrance areas.

"So far, reaction has been positive said Carroll Roge, public information officer for both institutions. "The policy applies to all employees, visitors and physicians."

Some 1,100 Medical Center employees and 1,200 Mother Frances employees will be affected.

"We are hoping people are not inconvenienced by the new policy," said Dawn Jenich, Mother Frances community affairs director. "Our philosophy is that we're a health care provider, and we try to create a healthful environment."

Medical Center is allowing smoking on an outside covered porch on the east side of the hospital near the cafeteria. Mother Frances will have three designated smoking areas outside the hospital in two courtyards and at one entrance.

The policy is being enforced by mailouts to employees and posted signs.

The University of Texas at Tyler Health Center and Community Hospital of Tyler both allow smoking in designated areas, officials said. At UTHC, there is a special lounge and a vending area for smoking employees and visitors.

Sierra Club endorses Bullock, while Richards, Williams joust

AUSTIN (AP) — The Sierra Club, saying Republican lieutenant governor candidate Rob Mosbacher Jr. has shown insensitivity toward oil spills, Thursday endorsed Democratic contender Bob Bullock.

Ken Kramer, director of the Sierra Club's Lone Star Chapter, said Mosbacher has a financial interest in an oil barge business that was cited for spills and pollution law violations.

Mosbacher also was quoted last November as saying, "The saddest thing about the Valdez oil spill is that Congress found a renewed enthusiasm for oil spill legislation."

"This shows a serious lack of concern about one of the priority issues that Texas political and government leaders need to be dealing with," Kramer said.

Mark Sanders, Mosbacher's campaign spokesman, said the candidate's November remark meant that "management by crisis is not a good way to manage."

"There needs to be thoughtful, effective legislation proposed and passed, and not merely just government by headlines, government by crisis. That's what he was trying to say," Sanders said.

Mosbacher is an investor in Hollywood Marine, in Houston, Sanders said. But he said the company has "one of the best safety records in the industry."

In other political developments Thursday:

■ Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ann Richards issued what she said would be the first in a series of statements to "introduce the real Clayton Williams."

Her news release called the Republican a "junk bond wheeler-dealer whose big grin shows that he thinks he can do what has never been done: arrange a leveraged buyout of the state of Texas."

Ms. Richards' statement also accused Williams of being "a polluter of wide-open spaces who squeezes every nickel he can out of the land, water and air."

Responding, Williams' spokesman Gordon Hensley said the Republican had a solid environmental record and again blasted Ms. Richards for refusing to disclose investments the Treasury made in savings and loans between 1983 and 1986.

"As a rancher, cattleman and leader in Texas' oil and gas industry, Clayton Williams has an honorable environmental record, as proven by Mr. Williams' spending millions of his own money to clean up an oil well blowout in East Texas in 1980," Hensley said.

■ Williams told a meeting of the Texas Narcotics Officers Association that Ms. Richards hasn't given specifics on her anti-crime and drug plans.

He also said she is on the record opposing additional prison construction.

"Texans don't' want to 'study' the actions of violent criminals. Texans want violent criminals punished for their actions. You can't just talk tough, you have to be willing to do something about it," Williams said.

Responding, Ms. Richards' campaign spokesman Bill Cryer called the charges "typical Clayton Williams misstatements of facts."

Clements shelves microbes

■ After flying over the bay Clements says he thinks the "so-called oil spill has been greatly exaggerated." Texas Land Commissioner Garry Mauro is furious.

GALVESTON (AP) — Coast Guard officials took control of cleaning up a 500,000-gallon oil spill in Galveston Bay Thursday as Gov. Bill Clements cut back plans to use oil-eating microbes on the slick because he said the slick is breaking up.

Barge crews Thursday found some 20,000 gallons of oil remaining in a tank aboard a ruptured barge sunken in the Houston Ship Channel since a collision with a Greek tanker Saturday. The Coast Guard again shut down traffic in the channel to allow crews time to remove the fragile barge.

The Coast Guard took over cleanup efforts after Apex Towing Co., owner of the two barges damaged in the collision, neared its insurance liability limit.

"We call the shots now and we pay the bills," said Chief Warrant Officer Rick Meidt. But, he said, the Coast Guard will bill Apex Towing Co. for the cleanup costs.

State officials, who gained federal approval to use bioremediation to help clear delicate marshlands of a filmy, black oil, were stunned when Clements initially pulled the plug on their plans.

The governor, who flew over the spill area Thursday, said he thought the oil had dispersed too much for the microbes to be effective in most areas.

"I think that the so-called oil spill has been greatly exaggerated," Clements said. "We had difficulty finding any."

Coast Guard officials said Thursday the oil sheen has thinned to a 12-mile stretch throughout the bay, with heavier patches around Redfish Island, Pelican Island, Texas City Dike, Eagle Point and Port Bolivar.

"We're fortunate," Clements said. "We're blessed that it has turned out this way. It's not near as serious a problem as was first anticipated."

Environmentalists feared the spill would fulfill the "worst case scenario" for the bay, with its delicate estuaries and productive seafood businesses. The Texas Health Department closed the bay to all fishing early Thursday because of the oil.

AP Laserphoto

Texas Gov. Bill Clements visits San Leon, Texas, Thursday, and then said oil-eating microbes will not be used to battle the 500,000 gallon spill in Galveston Bay.

After Clements flew over the area Thursday morning, he told reporters he had decided against allowing state officials to use bioremediation to accelerate the cleanup in marshy areas. But he later reversed himself, allowing 100 pounds of microbes mixed with water to be pumped out onto two areas of Pelican Island, a spoil island adjacent to Galveston Island.

"It is so fragmented out there. There's no concentration of the kind of slick that you would address it to," Clements said of the microbes initially. Later he qualified his statements, saying, "this is not a proved technology and so I do have reservations."

Texas General Land Commissioner Garry Mauro was outraged by Clements' actions.

Shinoussa captain blames barge pilot for bay collision

HOUSTON (AP) — A Greek tanker captain on Thursday blamed a pilot for a tanker-barge collision that started an oil spill into Galveston Bay, and also said the pilot told him to lie about the accident to authorities.

Capt. Nikolos Fioratos testified in the second day of a federal inquiry into Saturday's collision between the tanker Shinoussa and two barges. The wreck resulted in a 500,000-gallon oil spill into the bay.

Fioratos said Houston pilot Raymond Fincher ordered the Shinoussa to travel too fast through the channel. Later, Fioratos said Fincher told him to tell authorities that the accident happened because the ship channel was too narrow.

When U.S. Coast Guard Lt. Cmdr. Robert Douville asked Fioratos whether he thought Fincher was suggesting the captain lie, Fioratos said, "That's correct."

Pilots are not affiliated with ships but are used to guide vessels between ports and open seas.

Fioratos said Fincher ordered the Shinoussa to travel at 14 knots.

"I questioned him, but he requested more and more speed," Fioratos said. Although he could have reduced speeds, Fioratos didn't want to argue with the pilot. "He told me he needed the speed to maneuver, so I gave it."

Fincher, who is not scheduled to testify until Friday, disputed Fioratos' claims outside the hearing room. He said the vessel was traveling "a little over 10 knots."

Fioratos and his helmsman, Mohammad Haque, both blamed Fincher for directing the vessel into the oncoming barges. But Fincher maintains Haque did not follow directions and "put the rudder the wrong way at a critical time."

"There is a disagreement about whether or not the helmsman responded to the order the pilot had given," Douville said.

The collision occurred as the Shinoussa and another tanker, the Hellespont Faith, passed each other going in opposite directions in the Houston Ship Channel. The Shinoussa veered off to the right to avoid getting caught in waves from the Hellespont, Fioratos said.

Then, Fioratos said, Fincher told the helmsman to turn back left.

It was then that the Shinoussa crew was able to see the barges, towed by Apex Towing Co., behind the Hellespont Faith, Fioratos said.

Fincher and Fioratos then gave the order to reverse directions "hard rudder right."

After the collision, Fioratos said Fincher blamed helmsman Haque for turning the wrong way.

But Fioratos said Haque followed orders.

GULF CONFLICT

Pipelines converge on loading jetties for tankers at Ahmadi, Kuwait. Iraqi troops invaded Kuwait shortly before dawn Thursday in a dispute over oil and borders.

Iraq's dominance risky for oil-importing nations

By Robert Burns
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Iraqi conquest of Kuwait has catapulted Iraq to the top ranks of world oil powers and poses new economic risks for the United States and other countries dependent on imported oil, private analysts said Thursday.

It was unclear whether the Iraqi invasion of its tiny neighbor at the northern tip of the Persian Gulf would slow or halt Kuwait's oil production, but the conflict seemed to signal an important shift in the balance of world oil power.

"Iraq being the dominant military power in the area could end up controlling ... a quarter of world oil supplies," said Christopher Flavin, a vice president of the Worldwatch Institute. "Just overnight it doubled its share."

By grabbing control of Kuwait, Iraqi President Saddam Hussein added about 94 billion barrels of oil reserves to his country's own 100 billion barrels. That makes Iraq second only to Saudi Arabia in world ranking for oil reserves, according to the American Petroleum Institute, an industry trade group.

The Saudis, traditional close allies of Kuwait, have 255 billion barrels of oil reserves.

The United States holds about 26 billion barrels of reserves. But U.S. oil production has declined rapidly over the past four years while consumption has increased. As a result, 50 percent of oil used in the United States is imported, and many experts say this reliance makes America vulnerable to manipulation of the oil market.

The top 10 U.S. oil suppliers are Saudi Arabia, which provides 15 percent of imports; Venezuela, 13 percent; Nigeria, 12.5 percent; Canada, 12 percent; Iraq, 7.6 percent; Mexico, 6 percent; Virgin Islands, 3.6 percent; and Britain, Angola and Algeria a combined 9.7 percent. Kuwait supplies about 2 percent.

Like Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates at the southern end of the gulf are vulnerable to Iraqi military might. The Emirates control about 100 billion barrels of oil reserves and were the recent target of Iraqi verbal assaults against excessive oil production by members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

President Bush signed an order Thursday banning U.S. imports of Iraqi products, including oil, and freezing control of Iraqi financial assets in the United States.

Oil prices on the world market jumped sharply in reaction to the Iraqi invasion, but Flavin and other analysts said the more unsettling implication of Saddam's action is his expanded clout in the gulf and his influence over future supplies.

The Saudis, the world's largest oil exporters and the No. 1 supplier to the United States, "are sitting there quaking in their boots" out of fear that Saddam might invade their kingdom or seek a voice in running their oil affairs, said Dillard Spriggs, president of New York-based Petroleum Analysis Ltd.

Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said the Iraqi army might not stop at Kuwait's borders.

"If Iraq succeeds, I believe that Saudi Arabia might be next — and then Saddam Hussein would have a stranglehold on the West's oil supply," Bentsen said.

Bush's chief economic adviser, Michael Boskin, told the congressional Joint Economic Committee that the U.S. economy was not threatened by the impact of Iraq's takeover of Kuwait, even if it led to a 25 percent jump in oil prices.

Boskin conceded that such a large rise in prices would cause some economic damage in the United States but said it would be more harmful to Japan because of its greater dependence on oil imports. Japan gets virtually all its oil from foreign sources.

Also on Capitol Hill, the Senate extended by one month Bush's authority to tap into the 580-million barrel Strategic Petroleum Reserve, an emergency oil storage system, in the event of a supply squeeze. The Senate action was not directly linked to the Iraqi invasion, but senators said the gulf crisis served to underscore the fragile nature of Middle East oil production and transportation.

"All of the OPEC countries — at least all of those in the Middle East — will be intimidated by Iraq," said Sen. J. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee. "Iraq will be able to set such prices as it wants."

Invasion brings reassessment

By Bernard D. Kaplan
Hearst News Service

PARIS — Iraq's invasion of Kuwait is already changing several assumptions about politics in the post-Cold War world, Western European officials said Thursday.

Even if Iraqi strongman Saddam Hussein eventually withdraws the army that has overrun Iraq's tiny neighbor, the outlook is for a prolonged period of aggravated unrest in the already unstable Middle East, these sources predicted.

A French foreign ministry official said that "the ambitions and personaliity of Saddam Hussein makes what's happened more than a regional conflict affecting the Persian Gulf alone."

The Iraqi leader's "recklessness" had led him to "the unprecedented step of attacking a fellow Arab state," the official said. "Until now, inter-Arab disputes, no matter how bitter, were confined to intrigue, propaganda and the occasional use of terrorism."

Never before, he pointed out, has "a Middle East Arab state resorted to open aggression against another Arab state."

According to Claude Cheysson, a former French foreign minister, Iraq's invasion not only threatens nearby states like Saudi Arabia, the United Arab Emirates, Oman and Qatar, but it also creates a "rather sinister climate for Iraq's longtime arch-rival in the Arab world, Syria."

Cheysson noted that "the Syrians can no longer feel certain that war with Iraq is excluded.

Paradoxically, he added, the same held true for Jordan, which has recently moved politically closer to Baghdad. "The new tension places Jordan in a delicate and precarious position between its two feuding neighburs (Iraq and Syria)," he said.

An Iraqi infantry brigade — about 6,000 men — has been stationed for the last two years in southern Jordan as a token of the two countries' solidarity.

The possibility that Saddam Hussein, eager to extend his power over the region, may try to put more troops in Jordan can't be ruled out, Cheysson said.

Until now, Syria, although opposed to Iraq's presence in Jordan, didn't take it too seriously. But the invasion of Kuwait could change its attitude, Cheysson observed, adding:

"Saddam Hussein has demonstrated he's prepared to employ force and risk war when it suits him. That's the new Middle East fact of life."

Israel also hasn't taken Iraq's presence in Jordan seriously but will do so now, he said.

An analyst at the North Atlantic Treaty Organization headquarters in Brussels noted that the latest Gulf crisis cast a different light on the post-Cold War withdrawal of U.S. forces in Europe.

"At the very least, a new period of extreme volatility in the Middle East can't fail to influence how fast American forces here are reduced, particularly in southern Europe," he declared.

The official, who asked not to be named, said the latest crisis could affect the controversy about whether a new U.S. air force base at Crotone in southern Italy is needed in view of the apparently diminishing Soviet military threat.

He added that the flickering power of the Soviet Union may actually contribute to instability in the Arab world.

Moscow has an 18-year-old treaty of cooperation and friendship with Iraq. Except for a brief hiatus during Iraq's 1980-1988 war with Iran, the Soviets have been a steady arms supplier to Baghdad.

But the Soviets also have been strong supporters of the Kuwaitis, signing several economic agreements with them and furnishng them with weapons.

"That didn't stop Iraq from attacking Kuwait," the NATO official said. "A few years ago, Soviet support for Kuwait and Syria, was a major restraining influence on Iraq.

"But Saddam Hussein has just shown that he no longer gives a damn about what the Soviets think. He figures they're pretty much out of the game."

Iraq's aggression against Kuwait and its unabashed saber-rattling in general present a complex problem for the United States, according to an Arab specialist here.

Hussein's bullying has awakened widespread antipathy and fear in the Arab world, said Edouard Boukany, a Lebanese-born lecturer in Arab affairs at the University of Paris.

But if the United States were to use military force against him, Boukany warned, popular Arab support would rally behind him.

He explained, "A U.S.-Iraq showdown would fan anti-western feeling to an explosive level in the Arab world. It would, he went on, "endanger pro-American regimes like Egypt's."

Saddam Hussein knows that and is counting on it, Boukany said. "He's virtually daring the Americans to act."

Bush given authority to draw on oil reserves

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate today gave President Bush an extra month's authority to begin pumping oil from the nation's Strategic Petroleum Reserve into the market should Iraq's invasion of Kuwait disrupt world oil supplies.

On a voice vote, the Senate passed a temporary extension of the Energy Policy Conservation Act that established the 580-million-barrel rainy-day stockpile of unrefined crude oil in response to the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo.

Without the extension, Bush's authority to start pumping oil from the reserve would have expired Aug. 15, while Congress is on vacation.

"The events in the Middle East today underscore once again the fragility of the economies of the Western world and the marginal supply of energy that fuels it," said Sen. James McClure, R-Idaho.

The stockpile, located in salt caverns along the Louisiana-Texas coast, contains oil worth $20 billion.

The administration and Congress have been battling for the past 18 months over whether to increase the stockpile's size to 1 billion barrels. Bush opposes the increase.

"The least we can do is to preserve the most important tool that we have constructed so far," McClure said. "It is important ... to take this emergency action on a temporary extension while we try to resolve larger policy questions."

The system could now replace 80 days of oil imports, according to the Senate Energy Committee. That cushion has fallen from 110 days in the middle 1980s because of growing U.S. dependence on foreign crude.

Arab League leaders fail to condemn Iraq's invasion

By Dalia Baligh
Associated Press Writer

CAIRO, Egypt — An emergency Arab League Council failed to publicly condemn Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on Thursday and adjourned its meeting for 24 hours as Arab leaders held urgent consultations on how to handle the crisis.

Kuwait's Cabinet affairs minister, Abdel-Rahman el-Awadi told reporters he asked the 21-nation Arab League to condemn the attack. He accused Iraq of using the "laws of the jungle."

President Hosni Mubarak and Jordan's King Hussein met in Alexandria and telephoned Iraqi President Saddam Hussein, President Bush, Saudi King Fahd and Yemeni President Ali Abdallah Saleh on the crisis. Hussein later left for home.

Sources close to the Arab League Council said its members agreed to convene an emergency Arab summit but decided to leave the when and where up to Arab leaders. The sources spoke on condition of anonymity.

The Council meeting of foreign ministers was convened in Cairo at Kuwaiti request hours after Iraqi military forces took over the small Persian Gulf state. Some member nations sent lower-level representatives.

Following its evening session, attended by Saadoon Hamadi, a member of the Iraqi Revolutionary Council, Foreign Minister Esmat Abdel-Meguid of Egypt told reporters the Council would meet again Friday.

Saddam promised Mubarak two weeks ago that he would not invade Kuwait in their oil dispute.

At Thursday's closed session, Hamadi reiterated Iraq's claim its forces entered Kuwait at the request of a Kuwaiti revolutionary group that had overthrown the government.

A conference source said several Arab foreign ministers replied that "they considered this to be an Iraqi invasion which is against all United Nations and Arab League conventions."

So far, only Lebanon's prime minister and foreign minister, Salim Hoss, has joined Kuwait in Cairo in publicly condemning the invasion — the first time in modern history one Arab country invaded another to take control of the government.

Hoss told reporters, "We do not see any justification for what happened, whatever the arguments and pretexts."

The invasion was denounced by the United States and other Western nations and by the Soviet Union.

The Arab League Council met early Thursday and then adjourned to await the arrival of Hamdoon. Iraq's ambassador to Egypt, Nabil Najm, sat in until Hamdoon arrived.

"The United Nation's Security Council has condemned the invasion and the issue is now being discussed within the framework of the Arab League and we hope that it will issue a condemnation within the hour and that Arabs stand against this invasion," Kuwait's Awadi said.

"Arab leaders must take the initiative and stop this bloodshed and return things to their normal situation. We also call on Iraq to withdraw its troops."

Hamadi told reporters upon arrival, "I see this meeting as unnecessary ... There is no government presently in Kuwait. There is a group which started the revolution and which will reveal itself shortly."

His comments were carried by the Middle East News Agency.

MENA said Kuwait invoked the 1950 Arab joint defense pact and asked the Arab League Council to dispatch a joint Arab force to "defend Kuwait against the invasion."

The ministers were in Cairo to attend the Organization of Islamic Conference's foreign ministers meeting.

Sanctions Against Iraq

Along with condemnation of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait, several governments have taken concrete steps to punish Iraq or keep it from seizing Kuwaiti wealth invested abroad:

U.S.
- ☐ Froze Iraqi assets
- ☐ Protectively froze Kuwaiti assets
- ☐ Halted most imports from Iraq, including oil
- ☐ Banned travel to Iraq by Americans

Soviet Union
- ☐ Suspended arms deliveries to Iraq

Great Britain
- ☐ Froze Iraqi assets
- ☐ Protectively froze Kuwaiti assets, including 10% interests in British Petroleum and Midland Bank

France
- ☐ Froze Iraqi assets
- ☐ Protectively froze Kuwaiti assets

(French arms deliveries to Iraq were already suspended because of payment arrears)

U.N. council demands troop withdrawal

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — The U.N. Security Council on Thursday swiftly condemned Iraq's invasion of Kuwait and demanded an immediate troop withdrawal, but a similarly swift move for U.N. sanctions was unlikely, diplomats said.

In an emergency meeting early Thursday, the Iraqi envoy told the council it had no business intervening. He said Iraqi forces were invited to Kuwait by a new revolutionary government and would withdraw once stability was restored.

Others dismissed the Iraqi explanation.

The 15-member council, the most powerful U.N. body, voted 14-0 — with one abstention from Yemen — to adopt a resolution calling the Iraqi action "a breach of international peace and security."

The terse, strongly worded resolution also urged Iraq and Kuwait to begin talks immediately to resolve their dispute. It said the council would meet again "as necessary to consider further steps to ensure compliance with this resolution."

But there was no mention of imposing sanctions against Iraq. Washington quickly froze Iraqi assets in the United States and blocked Iraqi imports, 97 percent of which are oil, while the Soviet Union blocked arms sales to Iraq.

U.N. diplomats indicated they wanted to await the outcome of Arab League efforts to mediate the dispute between its member nations.

The Security Council meeting was called at the request of Kuwait and the United States.

U.S. Ambassador Thomas R. Pickering told the council: "The United States has made clear that it will stand shoulder to shoulder with Kuwait in this time of crisis."

Pickering called the invasion "completely unprovoked" and scoffed at Iraq's claim it was summoned by Kuwaiti rebels.

"They invaded Kuwait and then staged the coup d'etat in a blatant and deceitful effort to try to justify their action," he said.

Kuwaiti Ambassador Mohammad A. Abulhasan appealed to the council to support his nation against Iraqi aggressors. He said he was appalled one Arab nation should invade another.

He later told reporters that his government was operating in exile but gave no details.

Iraqi envoy Sabah Talat Kadrat urged the council not to become involved in "an internal matter."

Prices soar

NEW YORK (AP) — Iraq's invasion of Kuwait shook financial markets around the world, sending oil prices soaring. The contract for September delivery of West Texas Intermediate settled at $23.11 per 42-gallon barrel, up 1.57 cents on the day and bringing its gain over the past three sessions to $4.47.

Contracts for delivery during October through December also advanced strongly.

Posting price for The Permian Corp. jumped $1.75 to $21.75 while Marathon Oil and Texaco Trading and Transporation saw their posting also reach $21.75.

Oil prices were boosted by the possibility the invasion eventually could affect output from the two nations or other members of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries.

Major U.S oil companies said they had small or no operations in Kuwait and did not expect infrequent crude shipments from the country to be disrupted because of the invasion by neighboring Iraq.

Texaco Inc. operates the only refinery in either country — a 50-50 joint venture with state-owned Kuwait Oil Co.in an area known as the neutral zone between Kuwait and Saudi Arabia.

Texaco spokeswoman Anita Larsen said Thursday about 80 percent of the refinery's 800 employees are Saudi nationals and are 17 American. She said operations were continuing despite the invasion.

Dollar rallies

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar rocketed higher Thursday after Iraq's invasion of Kuwait sent currency investors scrambling to a safe haven. But the buying frenzy faded in later trading and the dollar ended the day well off its peaks.

Gold gained strongly on world markets.

The dollar rode a roller coaster. The U.S. currency fell back to earth when dealers took advantage of the surge to sell and collect profits on their dollar holdings.

By the time trading was done in New York, the dollar stood at 149.30 yen, up from 147.30 yen Wednesday but below an earlier high of nearly 150 yen.

British sterling lost some ground against the dollar. A pound was quoted at $1.8545 late in New York, compared to $1.8652 late Wednesday. In London, the British pound fell to $1.8486 from $1.8550 late Wednesday.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6910 German marks; 1.3530 Swiss francs; 5.3320 French francs; 1,164.50 Italian lire; and 1.15128 Canadian dollars.

Gold for current delivery added $3.50 a troy ounce on New York's Commodity Exchange, settling at $376.80. Republic National Bank later quoted a bid of $376.90 a troy ounce, up $3.40 from Wednesday's 4 p.m. EDT bid.

Silver firmed also. On New York's Comex, silver for current delivery settled at $4.838 a troy ounce, up from $4.822 Wednesday.

Russians looking to barter in Basin

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The U.S.S.R. could soon be playing an expanded role in Permian Basin oil industry, thanks to the old-fashioned marketing concept of bartering.

A Soviet scientific delegation visiting the Permian Basin Wednesday said they were looking to sign more contracts for goods and services where bartering and joint ventures could be employed.

The group is already supplying components used in automation equipment marketed in the Permian Basin and may be looking to buy compressors and flare stacks and other equipment from Midland firms.

Included in the delegation were Max Slepyan, director general of a oilfield group which includes 17 divisions and 5,000 employees. Juri Litvinchuk, president of Nefteautomatika, an oilfield automation division and Yuri Aleseyevich, manager of a plant which manufactures flow meters and other control devices.

The entourage, which was accompanied by a translator provided by the Midland Chamber of Commerce, made stops at Exxon's Sandhills field to view field applications of oilfield automation, and at Hybon Engineering, where they inspected natural gas compressors for pos-

Senate OKs legislation raising oil spill liability

■ The Senate passes a bill designed to make oil shippers and oil companies pay for oil spill damage.

By Diane Duston

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate on Thursday unanimously approved oil spill liability legislation designed to prevent spills and ensure that shippers and oil companies pay for damage.

"I have worked for eight years on oil spill legislation to protect our coastlines," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine. "A key provision of the bill increases federal liability limits, but does not pre-empt stronger state oil spill laws."

The Senate voted 99-0 to accept the measure worked out last month by a House-Senate conference committee. The House is expected to vote on the bill Friday.

The only senator not voting was Oklahoma Democrat David Boren, chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee.

New GM Chairman Robert C. Stempel makes a point during a news conference.

By Doron P. Levin
N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Robert C. Stempel, the new chairman of General Motors Corp., promised on his first day in office Wednesday that the automaker would not pursue a strategy of reorganization like the one that caused turmoil in the world's biggest automaker in the 1980s.

Stempel succeeded Roger B. Smith, who retired Tuesday after a decade-long tenure marked by significant changes at GM, including the $5 billion acquisition of Hughes Aircraft, the $2.5 billion acquisition of Electronic Data Systems and the $700 million buyout of a dissident director, H. Ross Perot.

"Any growing organization has to adapt to a changing environment," Stempel said.

"We will have to be responsive, aggressive and progressive, but be assured that we are not going to take GM apart and start over again."

Meeting with reporters at GM's headquarters in Detroit, Stempel was flanked by six top GM executives, whom he re-

Local artist gets national attention with calendar

■ Norman Johnson's "Oil 'Bidness" cartoons will begin popping up across the country when the Vernon Company begins selling their 1991 oil calendar nationwide.

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

If you've been an avid reader and admirer of Norman Johnson's "Oil 'Bidness" cartoon, which has appeared in the Oil Section every week for the past three years, and have wondered when Johnson will release his first calendar, then your wish has finally come true.

Johnson, along with the Vernon Company, has put together a 1991 "Oil 'Bidness" advertising calendar that will be available for distribution nationwide. It will include previously published cartoons depicting life in the oil patch.

He noted that he has been asked several times about doing a calendar, but somehow it just didn't seem to work. "The minute I started marketing and left my drawing board, everything went to pot," he said.

Chuck Mundy, district manager for Vernon, a specialty advertising company, said that the idea for Johnson's 1991 oil cartoon calendar came out of suggestions from many of his clients.

"I've always loved the idea and I think it's something that's been sorely needed. All of Norman's cartoons involve current issues. When we came up with the idea we had to ask ourselves if this was something that could be sold nationwide. I really think everyone can relate to it," Mundy said.

The advertising calendars can be purchased in quantity with a company name, address and logo engraved on them. The Petroleum Museum will also be offering the calendars for $6.95 each after November 1, 1990.

A 1992 calendar is already in the works and will include oil cartoons that have never been published.

Collecting insider-trading restitution difficult

By Jane Bryant Quinn

NEW YORK — Remember Fred Lee? Dennis Levine? Martin Siegel?

If you're still not with me, let me add some names that may be more familiar: Ivan Boesky, Michael Milken, Drexel Burnham Lambert.

Quinn

All were guilty of some sort of securities fraud, especially illegal insider trading. All have been forced to disgorge their dishonest profits. Those funds will be used to repay investors who were defrauded. Disgorgement plans are drawn up by the Securities and Exchange Commission and approved by a court.

But, says Barry Goldsmith, the SEC's deputy chief litigation counsel, "It's easier to get the money than to get rid of it." What with the complications of trying to divide the money fairly, the ongoing court cases, and claimants coming out of the woodwork, no funds have yet been paid out to investors. Furthermore, qualifying for payments will be harder than you think.

The theory behind insider-trading restitution is that, had the sellers of the stocks known what the insiders knew, they would have hung on to their shares to earn higher profits. Hence, they were defrauded by the swindlers who were operating on inside information.

But you won't get paid just because you were trading the same stocks that the crooks were. You have to have sold certain, specific securities on the specific dates listed in the SEC's disgorgement plans.

If you kept your securities at your brokerage house in a "street name," only your broker may be able to tell you if you're eligible. "If you bought through the bankrupt Drexel Burnham Lambert, will the skeleton crew that's left there notify you?" asks James Newman, publisher of the Securities Class Action Alert in Cresskill, N.J.

However they get distributed, the disgorgement sums are huge.

The late, unlamented Drexel Burnham paid $300 million to the Treasury, as a criminal fine, and another $200 million into a fund for investors and other claimants. Another $150 million is still owing, which the SEC is pursuing in bankruptcy proceedings. "We expect to get the money," Goldsmith says.

When junk-bond king Michael Milken comes up for sentencing, he'll pay a $200 million fine to the government and $400 million into a disgorgement fund. To collect from that fund anytime during the first six years, however, an investor will have to get a legal judgment or settlement arising out of Milken's Drexel-related activities.

Of Ivan Boesky's $100-million give-up, half went to the Treasury to pay his criminal fine. The other half, set aside for investors, has grown to $63.5 million.

A plan disgorging nearly $30 million of Boesky's money was approved just last month. Trades in six securities are covered, on certain dates in 1985 and 1986. But all of these claimants are joined in class actions against Boesky, Goldsmith says. So the mechanism for distributing the money will be the lawsuit. The SEC has not yet filed a disgorgement plan for the rest of the Boesky fund.

Among the other pots of money that–some day–may become available:

■ More than $20 million, principally from Taiwanese national Fred Lee, who is now a fugitive from justice. It will eventually be distributed to people who sold any of 17 specified securities or call options on specified dates in 1987 and 1988, with the largest sum available to sellers of Staley Continental.

■ Around $14 million from former investment banker Dennis Levine. It would chiefly benefit investors who sold Nabisco Brands just before the merger with R.J. Reynolds was announced. But a recent court decision opens the possibility that a substantial part of this fund will go to the Internal

Analysis

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices sustained widespread losses Thursday in the heaviest trading of the year as news of Iraq's invasion of Kuwait jolted markets around the world.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials dropped 34.66 points to 2,864.60.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by more than 5 to 2 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 464 up, 1,211 down and 349 unchanged.

Stock prices tumbled in financial centers of the major industrialized countries following the overnight news that Iraqi forces had invaded and taken control of neighboring Kuwait on the Persian Gulf.

World oil prices surged upward on the news, propelled by visions of possible disruptions in the supply of oil from the Middle East. That, in turn, raised fears of increased inflationary pressures in the United States and other oil-consuming economies.

One of the few pockets of strength among U.S. stocks was the energy group. Texaco jumped 2½ to 66½; Amoco 2⅝ to 58¼; Atlantic Richfield 4⅛ to 135⅜; Exxon 1 to 53⅛, and Unocal 2⅛ to 33¼.

Among oil-service stocks, Schlumberger climbed 2¼ to 68¾; Halliburton 1¾ to 57⅜, and Baker Hughes 1¼ to 33¼.

QUINN: Disgorgement of funds will take time

(From 1C)

Revenue Service, to help pay Levine's $8.5 million in back taxes plus interest and penalties.

■ A $10.5 million sum from ex-investment banker Martin Siegel, for which no disgorgement plan has yet been drawn.

To find out if you may be entitled to share in any of these disgorgements, call your broker. If he or she is out of business, call Jim Newman's customer-inquiries number, 201-569-9783. Also, read the financial press: Lists leading to the lucky winners will be published when disgorgement is finally accomplished. And make sure that your stockbroker has your latest address.

There must be a better way, but offhand I can't think of it.

PLANS: New chairman promises more teamwork

(From 1C)

ferred to repeatedly as his "team."

During short remarks by Stempel and other executives the word "team" or "teamwork" was used 24 times, a pointed reminder of continuous efforts over recent years to soften the company's authoritarian style of management.

Stempel said that "the entire focus" of GM management was on improving customer satisfaction, noting that executives charged with monitoring quality and reliability now report directly to him rather than to lower-level executives.

With a few exceptions, GM's cars and trucks in North America trail Japanese models in most customer-satisfaction ratings.

He also said GM would try to remove layers of bureaucracy and give more decision-making power to lower-level workers.

While declining to discuss current labor negotiations with the United Automobile Workers, Stempel acknowledged that the automaker was facing a five-day strike notice, delivered Wednesday morning, from a union local in Flint, Mich., representing workers at a plant that makes gas tanks. Rumors have been circulating that GM is planning to close the plant.

"We run very tight and don't have much of an inventory of parts," Stempel said.

"We need to sit down and work on the issues" to head off a strike.

Stempel has said his goal is 100 percent utilization of GM assembly plants in North America by the end of 1992, a statement that has raised speculation of further plant shutdowns. He denied that any closings were planned, other than those already announced.

Automotive experts estimate that GM plants are now running at 70 percent to 80 percent of capacity, which they regard as too low for solid profitability.

Stempel also said GM was interested in winning union agreement to three-shift operations, if it becomes necessary, an idea the automaker has used in Europe to lift capacity utilization.

BARTER: An agreement could help Basin, USSR

sible export to the U.S.S.R.

Agar Corp., a worldwide process measurement and control company from Houston, was host for the group. "We brought them to Midland to view automation applications, because Fairchild Systems of Midland is one of our top three distributors, and has extensive automation systems throughout the Permian Basin which incorporate our equipment," said Richard Clayden, president.

Agar, which sells about 60 percent of its products in the international markets, and the Soviets have formed a joint venture whereby the Soviets essentially barter labor for a finished product. Clayden says the product is a tank profiler which requires extensive machining and casting. "They send machined parts and castings to Houston. We then assemble the components, and apply the electronic and calibration applications, which are proprietary. The finished products are then sent back to the Russian factory where the tank profiler is marketed throughout the Soviet Union."

Clayden explained that the Soviets send enough components for 95 units, and Agar Corp. returns five finished units. "Most of the cost is in the electronics and programming," explained Clayden.

In addition to visiting Fairchild installations, the group also visited Hybon Engineering, an affiliated company to discuss the possibility of bartering crude oil for compressors. The Soviets also trade platinum, hides and diamond for services.

"It looks like the Russians have finally done a lot of their ground work and are now ready to form some ventures and sign some contracts to trade labor and crude oil for products and services," said Jim Woodcock, president of Hybon. Hybon manufactures compressor packages for oilfield applications.

He explained that the Russians need compressors and flares in their production facilities desperately. "I think there is some promise for doing business with the Russians," said Woodcock. "Our next step is to begin negotiations."

He noted that if the Soviets were to pay in crude oil that it would require a middleman to arrange for transportation and sale of the oil.

Woodcock noted that the Soviets trade crude oil for nearly everything. One member of the Soviet delegation explained that bartering was nothing new to the U.S.S.R., because it had been trading oil for wheat for 30 years.

BILL: Designed to increase liability to oil shipper, firm

(From 1C)

Boren was at the White House discussing the Iraqi invasion of Kuwait.

Congress pressed the liability bill after te Exxon Valdez tanker ran aground in Alaska's Prince William Sound on March 24, 1989, spilling 11 million gallons of crude oil along the state's coastline.

It was the nation's worst oil spill and prompted demands for tougher federal requirements on oil shippers and better preparation for responding to spills.

Major provisions in the legislation include:

■ Liability by shippers for up to $1,200 per gross ton of the tanker, instead of the current ceiling of $150 per gross ton.

■ Creation of a $1 billion oil spill response and clean-up fund, with the money coming from a 5-cent-a-barrel fee on both domestic and imported oil.

■ A requirement that all new tankers have double hulls and that most of the existing tankers be retrofitted with double hulls or taken out of service over the next 20 years. A small number of tankers will be given until 2015 to have double hulls.

■ Formation of regional response teams within the Coast Guard to deal with oil spills and a national response center where computers will hold lists of personnel and equipment that can be called upon after a major spill.

■ Increased research on oil pollution control.

■ A requirement that the government check driving records for alcohol-related offenses before issuing licenses to operate an oil tanker.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Early fund redemption protects capital gains

By Bill Doyle

Q. My mutual fund pays dividends semiannually and capital gains distributions annually. If I sell the fund shares I own sometime between the first and second payments, will I lose up to half a year's capital gains distributions?

Doyle

A. No. By unloading before a capital gains distribution is made you will receive a higher price for the shares you sell. The same thing applies if you sell before a dividend payment is made.

Technically, you don't "sell" mutual fund shares. You redeem them by turning them back to the fund.

On the "ex-dividend" date for a dividend and/or capital gains distribution, the amount of those payments automatically is deducted from a mutual fund's net asset value — the price at which shares are redeemed, unless the particular fund has rear-end load in the form of a redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge. Although some mutual funds levy such charges, thereby reducing the amount an investor receives by cashing in shares, many others do not.

Let's say you own 1,000 shares of XYZ Fund and that fund has a current net asset value of $20 per share. To keep things simple, we will assume that fund does not have a redemption or contingent deferred sales charge. If you redeem your shares today, you will receive $20,000.

Now, let's say XYZ Fund is going to pay a $1 dividend and a $1 capital gains distribution and goes ex-dividend to reflect those payments tomorrow. Net asset value will drop to about $18 per share.

If you redeem your 1,000 shares tomorrow, you will receive an $18,000 redemption check. But you also will get a $2,000 check for the dividend and capital gains distribution on your shares. Why? Because you redeemed the 1,000 shares before they went ex-dividend.

As a result, the total amount you receive will be $20,000, whether you cash in your shares before or after the dividend and capital gains distribution.

Q. Even after owning shares of a mutual fund for 12 years, I cannot understand the difference between dividends, capital gains distributions and the capital gain I am told I have on my investment.

A. We'll take them one at a time, after noting that a mutual fund sells its shares to investors and uses the money to purchase many different securities — stocks, bonds, etc.

The fund collects the dividends and/or interest paid on the securities it holds in its investment portfolio. After deducting its operating expenses, the fund passes the rest of that money along to fund shareholders as dividends.

The typical mutual fund does not hold the same securities forever. From time to time, it sells some and buys others. Some of the sales will be at higher prices than the fund paid; some at lower prices. If it has a net profit from those portfolio transactions, that money also goes to fund shareholders — as capital gains distributions.

Now, if you redeem fund shares at a price higher than the price you paid, you have your own capital gain. Of course, if you redeem at a price lower than your cost, you have a capital loss.

If you buy 1,000 shares at $10 per share and redeem those 1,000 shares at $12 per share, you have a $2,000 capital gain.

This gets a bit complicated if you reinvest dividends and capital gains distributions to purchase more shares. Every reinvestment increases your "basis" — cost for tax purposes. If, in addition to your original $10,000 investment, you reinvested $1,000 of dividends and $1,000 of capital gains distributions, your basis is $12,000. By redeeming all your shares, your capital gain or capital loss would be the difference between your $12,000 basis and the amount of your redemption check.

Oilers get QB

SAN MARCOS (AP) — The Houston Oilers obtained quarterback Don McPherson from the Philadelphia Eagles on Thursday in exchange for an undisclosed draft pick in the 1990 NFL draft.

McPherson was a 1988 sixth-round draft pick of the Eagles, following a career at Syracuse in which he was the Heisman Trophy runner-up.

Oilers general manager Mike Holovak said he would continue his efforts to sign backup quarterback Cody Carlson, a contract holdout.

Carlson has been the Oilers' backup the past three seasons.

McPherson was a backup for Eagles quarterback Randall Cunningham in both of his pro seasons, but he has never played in a regular season game.

Golf gets its own controversy

■ It's not one of the ills that have plagued other major sports in recent years, but racism became an issue in golf on the heels of Hall Thompson's remarks.

By Bob Green
AP Golf Writer

Golf finally took a hit.

It wasn't drugs, or gambling, or a strike, or a lockout.

It was racism — an issue that has surrounded other sports for so long it sometimes goes unnoticed.

It certainly had gone unnoticed in golf, a sport with few blacks playing as pros.

A real problem had finally slipped into the sedate world of lush green fairways and rapidly growing prize money where the shape of grooves on clubs passes for controversy.

Someone noticed that the PGA Championship was going to be played on a segregated golf course. It became an issue that will follow golf everywhere.

The furor surrounding the Shoal Creek Club near Birmingham, Ala., and the club's exclusionary membership policies, threatened the staging of one of the game's four major tournaments, the PGA national championship.

Moving the tournament, even canceling it, "were among the options considered," PGA executive director Jim Awtrey said.

But the threats of pickets and protests — and the flow of advertisers backing out of the tournament — ended last week when the club agreed to integrate.

A joint statement by the PGA, Shoal Creek and the Southern Christian Leadership Conference said the tournament would go on without protest Thursday through Sunday.

The whole affair started when a black Birmingham politician said he didn't think it was right that the PGA should hold the tournament at a segregated club.

It came to a head after Shoal Creek founder Hall Thompson confirmed that the club did not have black members and said it would not be pressured into accepting any. He later apologized for the remarks.

Meantime, Hall's comments brought protests from the NAACP and the SCLC, and several major sponsors — including Anheuser-Busch, IBM and Toyota — canceled their television advertisements.

But while the problem at Shoal Creek was settled, more problems remain down the road.

Golf's major organizations were forced to rethink their philosophy on the selection of courses for tournaments.

The most dramatic of these changes came at Augusta National Golf Club — host, sponsor and organizer of the Masters and a recognized symbol of the all-white private club. It said it will seek to include blacks as club members as early as this fall.

Other major organizations — the U.S. Golf Association, the PGA of America and the PGA Tour — said they have set, or are seeking to establish, policies

TV worries about issue

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC, the network that will televise the PGA Championship, still isn't talking about the Shoal Creek controversy.

CBS and NBC, obviously, are aware of the situation. CBS is broadcasting 17 golf tournaments this year and NBC is televising 20.

CBS has the most valuable golf tournament in terms of ratings: the Masters. Augusta National, the club where the Masters is played, doesn't have any black members but says it expects to start accepting blacks in October. CBS also takes over the PGA Championship from ABC in 1991.

CBS Sports president Neal Pilson says he thinks the organizers of golf tournaments will pressure the clubs to end whites-only membership.

"CBS has been assured by its golf rights-holders (PGA Tour, Augusta National and the PGA of America) that each is taking steps to ensure that all tournaments to be televised by CBS will be held at clubs which have non-exclusionary membership policies and practices," Pilson said Thursday in a statement.

"We will continue to monitor the situation closely but we believe these actions as announced by the PGA Tour, Augusta National and the PGA of America will satisfy our concerns," Pilson said.

Of the 20 golf tournaments on NBC, 17 are on municipal courses, NBC

Dickerson may soon end pout

■ The star running back of the Colts says his demands to be traded were not financially motivated.

Associated Press

Eric Dickerson has softened his stance and appears ready to return to the Indianapolis Colts.

Dickerson, disillusioned because he has yet to win a Super Bowl ring in seven pro seasons, had threatened not to play for the Colts this season because he didn't feel the team had a chance to win the NFL championship.

But Thursday he said, "I just want to play football. ... I'm ready to get back."

Dickerson, who is due to make $1.45 million this year with an option year left on his contract, has not reported to the Colts and has demanded to be traded.

He said the dispute wasn't financial but motivated instead by frustration at never having played in a Super Bowl — "not getting that ring."

He said he will remain home until something is worked out by his new agent, Leigh Steinberg, either a trade or a resolution of his dispute with the Colts.

Dickerson has rushed for 11,226 yards and holds the single-season rushing record of 2,105.

The closest Dickerson has come to a Super Bowl was in 1985, when his Los Angeles Rams lost 20-0 to Chicago in the NFC title game.

Now, he said he can't see the Colts getting to the Super Bowl for at least two years, and that's why he's been reluctant to report for training camp.

NFL Camps

Oilers

Houston obtained quarterback Don McPherson from the Philadelphia Eagles for a 1991 draft pick.

In two pro seasons, McPherson was a backup to Randall Cunningham, but never played in a regular season game.

When the Eagles recently signed Jim McMahon as a backup, McPherson said he wanted to be traded. Now, he will have a chance to play behind Warren Moon.

McPherson set school career records at Syracuse with 367 completions on 687 passes for 5,812 yards and 46 touchdowns. As a senior, he led Syracuse to an 11-0 record and a berth in the Sugar Bowl.

Packers

Fullback Brent Fullwood agreed to sign a two-year contract with Green Bay and end his holdout, his agent said.

Ulice Payne said the deal was reached after he, Fullwood and Packers negotiator Tom Braatz resolved differences on incentive bonuses.

Payne said he and Fullwood had been seeking bonus money based on the percentage of offensive plays that Fullwood was on the field, but the Packers were more interested in tying the incentives to yards gained and the two sides compromised, combining elements of both.

Reportedly, Fullwood's contract calls for base salaries of $500,000 this year and $550,000 in 1991, with roster bonuses of $10,000 for each year. He can receive $25,000 more each year if he has 250 carries or 1,000 yards rushing and another $25,000 if he participates in 65 percent of the team's offensive plays, and he will receive $10,000 if he returns 12 kickoffs.

Bears

Chicago can't wait to play its first exhibition game, so fans can forget about last season.

"We just want to get the season started because of what happened last year," rookie safety Mark Carrier said.

What happened in 1989 was the Bears went 6-10, missing the NFL playoffs after five straight NFC Central Division titles.

"We have to prove we're a better team than we were last year," Coach Mike Ditka said.

The Bears get a chance to start showing how good they are Saturday, playing the Cleveland Browns in the Hall of Fame game at Canton, Ohio.

Two other exhbition games will be played this weekend. Denver meets Seattle at Tokyo Saturday and the Los Angeles Raiders face New Orleans at Wembley, England on Sunday.

Redskins

Running back Gerald Riggs, Washington's leading rusher last season, agreed to terms.

Dallas quarterback Troy Aikman prepares to pass Thursday despite the impending presence of Houston linebacker Al Smith, who is being blocked by Cowboy guard Tony Slaton.

Dacus does it for Oilers

AUSTIN (AP) — Former University of Houston backup quarterback David Dacus' 13-yard touchdown pass to wide receiver Bernard Ford broke a 13-13 tie and the Houston Oilers went on to defeat the Dallas Cowboys 23-16 before a sellout crowd of 15,147 at Burger Center, a local high school field.

Ford, a member of the Cowboys last season before signing a Plan B free agent contract with the Oilers, made a diving grab in the end zone to break a tie.

Brian Lowe added a 38-yard field goal to pad Houston's lead to 23-13.

"Overall, we're where we want to be as a team," said Oilers coach Jack Pardee. "Even though Dallas made some big plays, we didn't give up a lot of touchdowns. Our goal wasn't to score 10 touchdowns. We wanted to get some long drives going and we did that."

The Cowboys effectively shut down Houston's run-and-shoot offense until Dacus entered the game on the Oilers' fourth set of 15-play series.

Dallas made a number of early mistakes against the Houston offense last Saturday, yielding two early touchdowns before the Cowboys rallied for a 24-24 tie in a scrimmage at San Antonio.

"We did a better job against the run-and-shoot than the last time," Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson said. "We've got work to do but I'm happy with what I saw. Some pass interference penalties hurt us."

Arkansas officials excited about SEC

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Frank Broyles was pumped.

He popped into the University of Arkansas sports information office late Wednesday afternoon, only an hour or so after the UA Board of Trustees had rubber-stamped acceptance of an invitation for the Razorbacks to join the Southeastern Conference. Broyles and Chancellor Dan Ferritor had sold the move in a matter of weeks, and displayed their enthusiasm for board members.

In the sports information office, Broyles spotted a television sportscaster and made him promise to deliver a tape of the presentation to the board. Broyles said he wanted to make several copies, "including one for posterity."

Before leaving the office on his way to answer call-in questions for television, someone pointed out a fax from the sports information office at the University of Kentucky.

It said simply, WELCOME!

Below was the SEC log with the 10 schools and a handwritten note to the side: "New logo sheets are on their way."

At the bottom was another message: "We're happy — Now the best conference is even better!"

Broyles got a copy to use on TV.

Shortly after he left, Sports Information Director Rick Schaeffer got off the phone with a colleague. People at Birmingham Arena, site of the 1992 SEC basketball tournament, had received more than a dozen calls from Arkansas fans wanting to know about tickets.

The UA board meeting was held in the Leflar Law Building. Up front, The board members sat behind name tags at a table. They faced a row of people that included Ferritor, SEC Commissioner Roy Kramer, Broyles and UA women's athletic director Bev Rouse. Behind that first row sat several coaches, including football coach Jack Crowe. Some legislators were across the aisle, on the second row, in a reserved section. A couple of rows were chock full of media members. At the back of the room was a bank of TV cameras. Interested observers lined the walls; metal folding chairs were supplied for some.

Board Chairman Jim Blair of Fayetteville began by saying he had called the meeting for the "76-year annual review of the athletic department" at the University of Arkansas.

Broyles, carrying a couple of blue SEC caps and a box of golf balls, slipped in during the opening remarks. After Broyles and Ferritor finished, Kramer began his spiel about the SEC and the Razorback tradition.

Before Kramer finished, the dancing Razorback was visible through a small window in a door behind the board.

At 1:46 p.m., Kramer finished reading the official invitation and shook hands with Ferritor. Thirty-one minutes later, it was official.

Blair gave each member of the board an opportunity to speak.

Dr. M.A. Jackson of Little Rock said he had the impression that Broyles thought the football program would have to improve to compete with the SEC teams.

Broyles said he couldn't remember any time during the past 33 years when the Razorbacks weren't competitive with the SEC.

TIDA race returns to Basin

Staff Report

The Texas International Drivers Association tour hits Twin Cities Speedway in Odessa for the third time this season Saturday.

Midland's Jay Watson will be shooting for his second straight win in the 100-lap race for late model stock cars. Watson drove his Race Engine Service Chevrolet Camaro to the win at Corpus Christi Speedway on July 21.

In addition to his win, Watson has finished second in four of the other seven TIDA races.

Other Permian Basin favorites include Midlanders Junior Robertson and Dean Anthony, as well as track record holder Bobby Blake, John Foster, John David Jr., Mike Pool and Mike Trigg, all of Odessa.

The track gates will open at 7 p.m. tonight for a practice that is free to the public.

TIDA qualifying will be at 6:30 p.m. Saturday, followed by the usual Twin Cities program at 8, and the TIDA feature at 10.

More than 28 entries are expected for try for a spot in the 22-car field.

Saturday admission is $8 for adults, $2 for children aged 6-11, and $15 for a pit pass. Children under six are admitted free.

From 1D

which will take into consideration membership practices of potential host clubs for their tournaments.

"It is something that must be done, and must be done now, not tomorrow," PGA Tour commissioner Deane Beman said this week from his office in Ponte Vedra, Fla.

"It is absolutely clear we have to take a second look" at policies and priorities," USGA president Grant Spaeth said in San Francisco. "Changes will be made."

The changes, in most cases, may not be readily apparent to the public, but it is causing consternation in private clubs across the country.

"Boards all over the country are meeting to consider what they're going to do," Spaeth said.

What it amounts to is this:

Private clubs have the legal right to exclusionary membership policies. But the major golf organizations now are saying — for the first time — "if you want to host one of our tournaments, you must give up that right and demonstrate to our satisfaction that your membership policies and practices are open and non-exclusionary in the matter of race, religion and sex."

Many of the great courses in the country — frequent sites for the PGA Championship and the major events staged by the USGA — have restricted membership policies or have restricted their membership without a specific written policy. To a lesser extent, the same holds true for PGA Tour events.

These clubs now are faced with the choice of either changing their membership policies or giving up their tournaments.

The tour is trying to determine the extent of the problem.

"To my certain knowledge, some of these do not have exclusionary policies or practices; they have had black members in the past; they just don't happen to have any at the present," deputy tour commissioner Tim Finchem said.

Beman said he estimated "a handful of clubs" that now host tour events would be affected. "We don't want to lose any of our tournament sites, but if it happens, so be it. It's that simple," he said.

TV: Execs offer mixed emotions

Sports spokesman Ed Markey said.

Ken Schanzer, the executive vice president of NBC Sports, says networks are in an unusual position.

"We cover events," he said. "We don't make choices as to where events are held.

Schanzer thinks that in the wake of Shoal Creek, golf tournaments at whites-only clubs will cease.

This Date in Baseball

1933 — Lefty Grove of the Philadelphia A's became the first pitcher since Aug. 2, 1931 — a span of 309 games — to shut out the New York Yankees, winning 7-0.

1948 — Cleveland's Satchel Paige made his first major-league start and went seven innings in the Indians' 5-3 victory over the Washington Senators.

1959 — The second All-Star game of the season was won by the American League 5-3 at Los Angeles' Memorial Stadium. Nellie Fox of the Chicago White singled in the deciding run in the seventh inning.

1961 — The Pittsburgh Pirates beat the St. Louis Cardinals 19-0 for the largest shutout score in a National League night game.

1969 — Pinch-hitter Rich Reese hit a grand slam to power the Minnesota Twins to a 5-2 victory over the visiting Baltimore Orioles and end Dave McNally's 15-game winning streak. His two victories at the end of 1968 had given him 17 straight.

1982 — California's Doug DeCinces hit three consecutive home runs in a 5-4 loss to the Minnesota Twins.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

FRIDAY, AUGUST 3, 1990

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: The career outlook is excellent for the months just ahead. A windfall or raise in October will make several nice "extras" possible. Count on romance to be especially exciting in December. Do not let your sentimental attachment to the past prevent you from dealing with the demands of the present. Family relationships will become more rewarding in 1991. You find a way to reconcile two feuding relatives as spring approaches.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Tony Bennett, actress Dolores Del Rio, actor Martin Sheen, novelist Leon Uris.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): New techniques can be introduced to lighten the workload. Computers will work for you, not replace you. Loved one gives you unexpected support. Make better use of your artistic talents.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Other people are drawn to you for unexpected reasons. Do your homework before making important presentations. A friend may supply inaccurate information. Form your own opinion.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Begin to rebuild your contacts by accepting a social invitation. New business could result. A member of the opposite sex seeks your attention. This person's intentions should be obvious!

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Rely on your own instincts. A business situation requires both patience and clear thinking. To win a legal dispute, settle outside of court. Share your plans with loved one.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A conflict at your workplace may be unsettling. Family concerns could interfere with a business venture. A stroke of good luck will improve your personal finances. Plunge into creative projects.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Anything done secretly may cause trouble. Be discreet. Read all agreements carefully before approving them. Patience is your strongest ally. A real estate venture provides financial gains.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Postpone issuing a decision until more facts are known. Keep firm control of your temper and money. A business trip is best postponed. Romance holds a delightful surprise.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your strong faith will help you face a major challenge. Your finest qualities rise to the surface. Be receptive to new ideas. Romance looks promising.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your employment situation may be changing. Stand back and watch: then make your move. Postpone travel. Be discreet, but act prepared to answer difficult questions.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Postpone making an important financial decision. Investigate stocks that offer greater returns. A younger person should not be scolded for an accident. Plan a special evening out.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The financial picture brightens. Your business enters a recovery period. Have faith in your ability to turn things around. A surge of energy will help you meet increased demands on your time.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Self-improvement projects could boost your earning power. The advice of a professional proves especially helpful now. Weigh your choices carefully. Give a loved one a second chance.

TODAY'S CHILDREN have a strong interest in staying in top physical condition. They will exercise regularly and enjoy participating in sports. Persistent and hard-working, these Leos will stick with a difficult task until it is done. Although capable of great patience, they tend to lose their tempers with people who seem lazy. Family-oriented and loyal, they go to great lengths to preserve their close relationships. Their stubborn insistence that they are always right could be a handicap sometimes.

The mistakes of experts are legendary, but none were more inelegant than this hand from the 1956 European Championship match between Italy and France. Sitting North-South for Italy were Pietro Forquet and Guglielmo Siniscalco; East-West for France were Roger Trezel and Pierre Jais.

You won't find out how to bid a hand containing two voids from any textbook. Forquet's bid of four spades is as good as any, and we can't quibble with Siniscalco's decision to look for slam—four no trump was a general inquiry and not Blackwood, and six diamonds showed a second suit. We are not sure that we would have gone on to seven spades with Forquet's holding.

Had everyone passed, the contract would surely have gone down a trick because of the bad trump break. However, Trezel elected to double, and now Forquet would probably have made the contract by taking a first-round finesse of the nine of spades, since the double surely marked the 4-0 spade split.

However, Siniscalco thought East must have a sure trump trick to double seven spades. Since he knew that Forquet had to have first-round heart control, and since the heart suit had been bid only once, he presumed his partner held the ace of hearts, so he ran to seven no trump.

The French doubled again, this time on firmer ground. There was nowhere for North-South to run, and South sat back helplessly as the defenders cashed the first six heart tricks.

Italy recovered from this disaster to win the event, and the next year defeated the U.S. to win the world championship.

Special concert honors Queen Mum's birthday

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles gave the Queen Mother a special 90th birthday present Thursday, a concert of specially commissioned music.

The concert by the English Chamber Orchestra, and a recording to be released by EMI, benefit the prince's charity, The Prince's Trust. The trust helps disadvantaged young people.

Charles commissioned one of the works by composer Patrick Doyle especially for his grandmother. The piece has a series of Scottish verses set to music and was sung by Scottish soprano Marie McLaughlin.

Besides the guest of honor, the Prince invited his mother, Queen Elizabeth II, his wife, Princess Diana, and about 300 others.

The Queen Mother turns 90 on Saturday.

BARCELONA, Spain (AP) — Madonna's chief bodyguard apologized for roughing up a newspaper photographer who tried to snap the pop star jogging along a busy street.

Security guard Marcus Johnson went to El Periodico de Cataluna's newsroom Wednesday to apologize to the photographer, Juan Valganon, the newspaper reported Thursday. Valganon was bruised in Tuesday's altercation.

Madonna's "Blond Ambition" tour included three concerts in Spain.

Meanwhile Thursday in Italy, the Vatican newspaper criticized the country's state-run television network for broadcasting Madonna's Barcelona concert.

In a commentary, L'Osservatore Romano said the live broadcast of Wednesday night's concert violated "good sense, good taste and decency."

More than 50,000 people attended the show.

PRAGUE, Czechoslovakia (AP) — The Rolling Stones will play in Prague for the first time as part of festivities marking the country's freedom from communism.

President Vaclav Havel, who led last winter's anti-communist revolution, is a fan and wants to meet Mick Jagger and other members of the band, an aide said Thursday.

The concert is scheduled for Aug. 18, the last stop on the Stones' "Urban Jungle" tour.

The Stones will perform three days before the anniversary of the 1968 Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia.

The concert was scheduled then so "it could be a great celebration of freedom and the defeat of evil powers," said Jiri Ruzek, the show's Czech promoter.

NEW LONDON, Conn. (AP) — A philanthropist has given $1.4 million to Connecticut College to create a professorship honoring Nobel Peace Prize winner Elie Wiesel.

Elizabeth, the Queen Mother

The endowment creating the Elie Wiesel Chair in Judaic Studies is the largest gift in the private college's 79-year history, school officials said Thursday.

The money was donated by Jo Ann Hess Myers, a 1967 graduate of the school, who runs a private day school in Birmingham, Ala. She also directs the Fig Tree Foundation, a private philanthropy.

Wiesel, a survivor of a Nazi death camp, has crusaded for human rights throughout the world. He has written more than 30 books and is the founder of the Elie Wiesel Foundation for Humanity. He won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1986.

The college has formed a search committee to fill the post with a Judaic scholar, who is to develop a program including philosophy, government, history, sociology and religion.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A character in a "Doonesbury" comic strip clad in nothing but rope shows the art community's contempt for government funding, the strip's distributor said.

But some editors are wondering how readers will react to the strip due out next week.

The strip by G.B. Trudeau has the character J.J. uttering fragmented sentences laced with such provocative words as "ooze," "lubricate" and "hot juices."

J.J., with nothing but rope covering her private parts and a bucket over her head, gives her rendition of "performance art." But she makes no direct reference to sex acts.

"The way I read it, it's an attempt to show the lengths that the art community will go to thumb their noses at government grants," said Jack Morrissey, an associate editor at Universal Press Syndicate. The Kansas City area-based company distributes the strip to about 1,000 newspapers.

The strip apparently referred to controversy over National Endowment of the Arts funding, Morrissey said.

Torre tense, but happy after win

Associated Press

On his first night back, Joe Torre felt the tension.

"I was really nervous before the game," he said. "It's great being back but I'm still a little numb."

Vince Coleman's three-run double in the sixth inning led St. Louis past Philadelphia 4-3 Thursday night as Torre returned to the dugout after a six-year absence.

Torre was hired Wednesday to succeed Whitey Herzog, who quit on July 6. Torre hadn't managed since 1984, his final season with the Atlanta Braves.

"It's a period of adjustment for me and the team," Torre said. "I'm relying a lot on my coaches. We'll just take it nice and slow."

Bob Tewksbury (6-3) allowed two runs and eight hits in five innings and Lee Smith pitched two innings for his 18th save in 20 opportunities.

Cardinals center fielder Willie McGee went 0-for-3 with two walks, ending his 22-game hitting streak.

Phillies starter Jose DeJesus (2-3) gave up one hit in the first five innings, but singles by Todd Zeile, Milt Thompson and Jose Oquendo loaded the bases with one out in the sixth.

Reliever Dennis Cook struck out pinch-hitter Rex Hudler before Coleman lined his double to center.

"I'm just closing my eyes and swinging the bat," joked Coleman, who is 17-for-39 over his last 10 games, a .436 average.

"Seriously, I'm fortunate to be healthy and glad to be able to help the Cardinals win ballgames," he said.

Phillies manager Nick Leyva thought Cook's pitch was right down the middle.

"He didn't miss the mistake," Leyva said. "It was up and right over the plate."

Leyva said he took out DeJesus in the sixth because the rookie was tiring. DeJesus had a one-hitter entering the inning but had walked five in the game.

NL Roundup

Giants 3, Dodgers 1

Rookie John Burkett won his 10th game and the San Francisco Giants continued to gain in the National Lague West with a victory over Los Angeles.

San Francisco has won three straight games and eight of its last nine to move within 4½ games of first-place Cincinnati. The Reds lost to San Diego 8-5 Thursday night.

Astros 3, Braves 1

Pinch-hitters Carl Nichols and Casey Candaele each hit run-scoring singles in the seventh inning for Houston.

Bill Gullickson (7-8) won for only the second time in seven starts since June 24. He gave up one run and five hits in seven innings before Larry Anderson finished with one-hit relief for his fifth save.

Tom Glavine (6-7) gave up three runs and eight hits in 6 1-3 innings. He has an 0-5 career record against Houston.

With the score tied 1-1, Mark Davidson tripled to lead off the seventh. Nichols, batting for Franklin Stubbs, lined a single to right to give Houston a 2-1 lead.

Rafael Ramirez sacrificed and Candaele, batting for Gullickson, tripled to score Nichols.

Houston took a 1-0 lead in the sixth when Bill Doran doubled, took third on Ken Caminiti's single and scored on Glenn Wilson's groundout.

Mets 5, Expos 1

Darryl Strawberry broke out of a slump with a two-run homer and an RBI single and Frank Viola became the first National League pitcher to win 15 games.

Strawberry, who was 0-for-18, snapped a 1-1 tie with a run-scoring single off Dennis Martinez (7-8) during a two-run sixth inning, then slammed his 26th homer, tops in the NL, in a three-run eighth.

Pirates 8, Cubs 5

Bobby Bonilla drove in three runs with two home runs and a double and Andy Van Slyke and Barry Bonds hit two-run homers to leading Pittsburgh.

The victory kept the second-place Pirates one game behind the New York Mets in the National League East.

Van Slyke hit his 11th homer in the first inning after Jay Bell singled, and Bonilla followed with his 22nd homer. It was the third time this year the Pirates hit successive homers and each time it was by Van Slyke and Bonilla.

Van Slyke singled in the fifth and scored on Bonilla's double, before Bonds hit his 19th homer. Bonilla hit his second homer of the game in the seventh. It was the third time this season Bonilla hit two homers in a game and the seventh time in his career.

Padres 8, Reds 5

Joe Carter drove in five runs with a double and a home run to send Cincinnati to its ninth loss in 11 games.

Carter hit a two-run double in the first and a three-run homer in the second as San Diego took a 7-1 lead against Tom Browning (10-6), who lasted just two innings.

Dennis Rasmussen (8-9) ended his five-game losing streak despite giving up eight hits and five runs in 6 1-3 innings. Greg Harris relieved in the seventh and Craig Lefforts got the last two outs.

Expos may move if buyer not found

MONTREAL (AP) — Expos owner Charles Bronfman says "time is running short," and he isn't talking about his team's chances in the race for the National League East title.

Bronfman, who announced several months ago that he plans to sell the team he has owned since its inception.

Hill downgrades himself

Seniors

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — Dave Hill has named a list of contenders for the Paine Webber Invitational championship. He's not on it.

The list includes his brother Mike, Lee Trevino, Charles Coody, Bob Charles, Walt Zembriski and Chi Chi Rodriguez. Dave Hill says leave him out of it.

"I've been very erratic," said Hill, who tied for fourth in each of his last three tournaments. "My swing is very inconsistent and has been all year."

Which doesn't help Hill's attitude as he goes into Friday's delayed defense of his 1988 Paine Webber victory. The 1989 tournament was lost due to Hurricane Hugo.

The storm toppled trees onto the Quail Hollow Country Club course, overturning scoreboards and pretty much leaving the course unplayable. It made for an unceremonious end to the tournament's run at that course.

This year's tournament is at Piper Glen, a TPC stadium-style course which has helped to raise Hill's concern.

"I have no clue on this golf course," Hill said. "You can basically get an idea in the pro-am. I always liked Quail Hollow. I always had good luck with it.

"Everybody's in the same boat now."

Long hitters don't have an edge at Piper Glen, Hill said. The course measures 6,774 yards and plays to par 72.

Second year player leads

PGA

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Larry Silveira tamed the Tournament Player's Club course at Southwind with a course record 9-under-par 62 Thursday to grab a three-stroke lead after the first round of the St. Jude Classic.

Silveira, a second-year pro who started off the back nine, made the turn at 4-under 31 after dropping a 20-foot birdie putt at the par-4 18th and then turned in a string of four birdies in five holes beginning at the par-4 second hole.

The former University of Arizona All-American broke the previous record of 63 set last year at Southwind by Doug Tewell and Hubert Green with a two-foot birdie putt at the par-4 ninth.

Buddy Gardner, Rick Fehr, Nick Price and Chip Beck, the winner at last week's Buick Open, are three shots back.

Silveira, who failed to make the cut in 10 of 19 tournaments this year, had a best finish of 10th at the Deposit Guaranty Classic.

Korean golfer leads Boston 5

DANVERS, Mass. (AP) — Korean Ok-Hee Ku celebrated her 34th birthday Thursday with a 30-34-64 tournament record for a five stroke first round lead in the $350,000 LPGA Boston Five Classic.

Ku, who has been having her worst year in five on the pro tour and had missed the cut in her last three tournaments, shot nine birdies and a single bogey to break the tournament record of 65 set by Marta Figueras-Dotti in 1985 and tied in 1986 by Laurie Rinker.

The round, which matched Ku's best competitive round, put her into the lead at windy Tara Ferncroft Country Club as Dottie Mochrie at 34-35-69 and Cindy Rarick at 35-34-69 tied for second place.

Ku sank birdie putts ranging up to 27 feet and birdied four of the last five holes on the front side, finishing with a four-footer that gave her the record.

"My putting is really very well," Ku said through an interpreter. "Usually it is no good," she said

Orioles learn their lesson well

Associated Press

AL Roundup

Having received a valuable — if painful — lesson 24 hours earlier, the Baltimore Orioles proved that they had learned from their mistakes.

Cal Ripken drove in three unearned runs with a triple in Baltimore's four-run first inning and the Orioles went on to beat the Kansas City Royals 5-1 Thursday night.

It was the second straight night in which Baltimore scored four times in the first inning. On Wednesday night, however, the Toronto Blue Jays rallied for a 7-4 victory.

"Against Toronto, we got all excited and pumped up," Baltimore first baseman Randy Milligan said. "Tonight we were a whole different team with no mental lapses."

The pitching was better, too, as Dave Johnson, Joe Price, Curt Schilling and Gregg Olson limited the Royals to six hits. Johnson (11-6) left with two out in the sixth inning with a lower back injury after giving up only three hits.

"I had a little pressure to go out make that four-run lead stick," Johnson said.

"We sure didn't want to squander the lead this time," added Tim Hulett. "I think we learned a lesson against Toronto, even though it wasn't a good one to get."

All four first-inning runs were unearned as errors by right fielder Danny Tartabull and third baseman Kevin Seitzer opened the door for Baltimore to win for the 12th time in the last 18 games.

The uprising started with one out. Dave Gallagher reached second base when Tartabull dropped his sinking liner, Randy Milligan walked and Seitzer misplayed Ron Kittle's grounder to load the bases.

Ripken followed with a drive to right that eluded Tartabull and rolled to the wall. In his last five trips to the plate with the bases loaded, Ripken has three hits and eight RBIs. Prior to that, he was 1-for-17 in bases-loaded situations.

Rangers 5, Blue Jays 4

Steve Buechele singled home Ruben Sierra with two out in the bottom of the 11th inning to give Texas the win.

With one out, Sierra hit his second double of the game and Pete Incaviglia was walked intentionally. Pinch-hitter Mike Stanley flied out before Buechele lined a single through the middle off John Candelaria (7-4), the third Toronto pitcher.

Brad Arnsberg (5-1), the third Texas pitcher, picked up the win with 2 2-3 innings of scoreless three-hit relief.

White Sox 4, Brewers 3
White Sox 4, Brewers 2

The Chicago White Sox swept Thursday's twi-night doubleheader from Milwaukee, taking the opener 4-3 as two players making their major-league debuts, pitcher Alex Fernandez and first baseman Frank Thomas, made major contributions.

Chicago took the second game 4-2 as Melido Perez held Milwaukee to five hits in 7⅓ innings. Bobby Thigpen, who leads the majors with 34 saves, saved both games with a scoreless inning in each.

Mariners 7, Twins 2

Tracy Jones drove in Seattle's first two runs with singles and Alvin Davis homered as the Mariners beat Minnesota.

Minnesota's Brian Harper singled in three at-bats, extended his hitting streak to 23 games, longest in the American League this season and tying Philadelphia's Lenny Dykstra for the longest in the majors.

Harper also tied Kent Hrbek for the third longest streak in the Twins' history behind Ken Landreaux's 31 games in 1980 and Lenny Green's 24 in 1961.

Brian Holman (11-7) scattered seven hits in eight innings for his third straight victory.

Tigers 6, Yankees 5

Pinch-hitter Dave Bergman hit a fluke double with one out in the 14th inning and scored on Chet Lemon's triple to give Detroit the win.

Bergman's sharp grounder, which first baseman Kevin Maas was set to field, caromed off the first base bag into foul territory, where it was touched by a fan for a ground-rule double. Lemon followed with a drive to deep right-center off rookie Alan Mills (1-4), the fourth Yankee pitcher.

Clay Parker (2-1), who was traded to the Tigers by the Yankees earlier this season, was the fifth Detroit pitcher and earned the victory with 1 2-3 innings of two-hit relief.

Vote due on Hank

Associated Press

Yankees

NEW YORK — The partnership that owns the New York Yankees will meet Wednesday to vote on whether Hank Steinbrenner should succeed his father as general partner, according to a published report.

The 18 limited partners will meet in Cleveland at 11 a.m., The New York Times reported Friday, quoting a limited partner who was not identified.

"I haven't talked to everyone, but my own belief is the vote will be favorable for Hank," an unidentified partner was quoted as saying.

Hank Steinbrenner needs 67 percent of the votes in order to be approved as George Steinbrenner's successor. George Steinbrenner controls 55 percent of the team's stock and has been general partner since the partnership purchased the Yankees from CBS Inc. in 1973 for $10.2 million.

If elected by the partners, Hank Steinbrenner would then need approval from three-fourths of the other 13 American League clubs and a majority of the 12 National League clubs.

On Monday, commissioner Fay Vincent ordered George Steinbrenner to give up control of the team as of Aug. 20 for paying a known gambler to get damaging information on former Yankee Dave Winfield.

He will be allowed to consult on major business decisions, but he cannot participate in player deals or signings. He must ask Vincent's permission, in writing, to attend major league games if he intends to do anything but be an ordinary fan. He cannot, for example, sit in the owner's box or visit the clubhouse.

Gossage notches save in Japanball

TOKYO (AP) — Former major league reliever Rich Gossage picked up his fourth save Thursday as the Fukuoka Daiei Hawks edged the Seibu Lions 4-3 in Japan's Pacific League.Gossage pitched the last inning and limited the Lions to one hit.

Boomer Wells hit a three-run home run with two out in the top of the 10th inning and Donald Schulze pitched a two-hitter over the last 4 1-3 innings as the Orix Braves beat the Kintetsu Buffaloes 5-2.

Kentucky Derby winner put out to pasture

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS, Ill. (AP) — The way trainer Charlie Whittingham imagines it, Sunday Silence and arch-rival Easy Goer soon will have some great horse tales to swap.

They were supposed to renew their rivalry Saturday in the Arlington Challenge Cup. Instead, both are headed for breeding careers on adjacent farms at Paris, Ky.

Sunday Silence was retired Thursday because of a slight tear in a ligament in his left foreleg. The retirement of Easy Goer because of a chipped bone in his right front leg was announced July 18.

Sunday Silence will go to stud at Stone Farm while Easy Goer will be his neighbor at Claiborne Farm.

Orlando inks No. 1 draft pick

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Dennis Scott agreed to a five-year contract with the Orlando Magic Thursday, the first draft choice to sign so far.

Scott, a swing man from Georgia Tech, was the fourth player taken in the June draft.

"This is going to give Dennis a two-month head start just getting his feet wet," Magic general manager Pat Williams said.

"Dennis can come down here and get his living accommodations taken care of and start working with our conditioning people. He can start informal workouts with some of the other players and get to know them, so that when he comes to training camp in October he's not a pea-green rookie."

Wlliams said the contract was hammered out in two meetings and six phone conversations with Scott's agent, David Falk. Details of the deal weren't disclosed.

"We made our best effort to get the thing done early," Falk said, "to give Dennis maximum time to work with the coaches to get ready."

At the news conference, Scott presented his mother Elizabeth with a dozen roses.

UT hires new mound mentor

AUSTIN (AP) — Howard Bushong, who led Westlake High School to 11 district championships and two state championships in 12 seasons as head basketball coach, has been named pitching coach at the University of Texas.

Bushong, 37, was a backup catcher for the Texas baseball team from 1975-76 and served as a graduate assistant under head coach Cliff Gustafson in 1977.

SWC Baseball

"Obviously, I'm thrilled about returning to the University of Texas," Bushong said.

"I'm a Longhorn and it's been no secret that my lifelong dream has been to return to Texas to be an assistant coach. Coach Gus asked me if I would be interested in coming back and I jumped at the chance," he said.

Mullins' number seen once again

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Paralyzed defensive back Chucky Mullins hasn't been forgotten, and starting this fall his No. 38 jersey will be seen again by Ole Miss fans. It will be worn by a player chosen for his work in practice.

"This way we could keep that jersey always active for the fans and our players," Mississippi coach Billy Brewer said. "It will be a reward for an outstanding player to wear that jersey each season."

Brewer established the award after a suggestion by the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity, and made the selection for the first time in spring drills.

And this fall Chris Mitchell wears No. 38 during the season.

Senior-to-be Mitchell, a close friend of Mullins, will switch from the No. 29 he has worn since junior high school.

"Those are two players that became real good friends," Brewer said. "They rode back and forth to school together from Alabama and they have real good feelings for each other."

Mullins, 21, was paralyzed from the neck down from a neckbone injury when he hit a Vanderbilt player in breaking up a pass play last October. He's regained only slight movement in his arms.

"I'm so excited about it. I feel as long as I'm out there with that jersey on, Chucky will always be playing football," said Mitchell, a strong safety.

Mitchell and all the Rebels dedicated the 1989 season to Mullins. Ole Miss, which was picked for the lower half of the Southeastern Conference, finished fourth and was 8-4, capping its season with a 42-29 victory over Air Force in the Liberty Bowl.

Brewer and Mitchell were among Rebels who visited Mullins at the Spain Rehabilitation Center in Birmingham, Ala., this week.

"It really makes him feel good anytime people go by to see him," Brewer said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Son caught shoplifting

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: I have a 14-year-old son who I recently discovered has been shoplifting. Last December (he was 13 at the time) I caught him stealing a BB pistol from a local store. I took him back into the store and turned him over to the store manager. The manager did not call the police, but he gave him a stern lecture and forbid him to come back into the store without adult supervision. My son was very upset and vowed he would never steal again.

May

This week I discovered several items hidden in his bedroom that I suspected were stolen. When I approached him about them he admitted that he had stolen them, but that he had not shoplifted since being caught in December. He said that he had stolen that stuff over a period of several years. The items he stole were costume jewelry, a BB pistol, magnets and Nintendo tapes. These were all things that he apparently wanted but, he knew his father and I wouldn't buy him.

At this point I don't know whether to believe him as to if he is still stealing or not, or what to do about it if he still is. His dad and I make a medium income and provide him and his sister with a lot of nice things within reason.

I know that this is a crucial time in my son's life. He will be entering high school in the fall, and I want to do what is right. He is basically a good kid. He does not party or even really socialize a lot. He has a diverse set of friends who are all pretty good too. His shoplifting is done when he is in town with me or his dad, because he doesn't go into town with anyone else.

He has participated in football the last two years, but doesn't want to play in high school. His grades are average to low, but he always manages to do well enough in everything to pass. He is very bright and a hard worker in things that interest him. Right now we are experiencing the normal teenage problems of his talking back and thinking that his parents are the dumbest people alive. We try to tolerate all of this within reason.

Could you please advise me as to what would be the best approach and discipline for my husband and me to take at this time? We bought him a new 10-speed while he was away visiting his grandpa, and now we are unsure as to whether we should give it to him or not. We haven't taken it out of the box yet, but he is aware that we bought it. Any help that you could give would be appreciated. — CAUGHT

DEAR CAUGHT: I believe you handled the situation very well. All that I would suggest is that you approach the situation more as a "family problem."

Both you and husband schedule a meeting with your son (without your daughter) and tell him how you feel. Begin by telling all the things he does that you are proud of. Then tell him your problem — that you don't know whether or not he shoplifted the items before December. Since you don't know for sure, tell him you will believe him on this and be proud of him for not shoplifting since he promised not to. However, shoplifting is not permitted in your family, so something must be done with the items.

If you know where the items were stolen from, your son should go to the store and pay for the items (since they are "used"). If you do not know the sources, he could pay for them by contributing the money to a charity. In any event, he should pay for the items with money he has earned (either from a job or by doing chores, etc.).

Your son must have a method of paying for his misdeeds and then moving forward. Once he has paid for the stolen items, he could be entitled to the 10-speed. A final condition might be that you randomly search his room until the end of the year. These searches would stop if no more items were found during that time.

The objecive is to change the behavior. If his behavior doesn't change, I recommend that you seek professional help. For now, focus on complimenting and supporting his "new" behavior while allowing him to pay for the mistakes he has made.

Jim May is the director of the Family Wellness Center.

Booklet gives tips for healthier diet

Staff Report

The National Dairy Council's nutrition program to balance fat intake in the diet is available from the local office of Associated Milk Producers Inc./Consumer Services. AMPI/CSD is an affiliated dairy council unit of National Dairy Council.

This newly developed "do it yourself" method of lowering fat for life doesn't eliminate any foods and relies primarily on recommendations from the basic groups of foods: milk and dairy products, meat and protein substitutes, fruits and vegetables, and grain products. This program maintains that all foods are all right as long as you plan your fat budget. Fat intake is based on 30 percent of calories from fat, and will vary depending on your calorie requirements. Fat budgeting is the same as monetary budgeting.

For your free copy of the "Healthy Dividends" booklet, call (915) 684-5102 or write P.O. Box 5473, Midland 79704.

Self-esteem healthy attitude, report finds

By Tupper Hull
Hearst News Service

SACRAMENTO — Just when you thought it was safe to feel bad about yourself, there is another move afoot to improve your self-esteem.

California's Self-Esteem Task Force, made a national joke by the Doonesbury comic strip, officially went out of business last month. But its work, and the notion that a staggering array of social ills stem in large part from poor self-esteem, has slowly gained credence with a surprisingly large segment of America's political and business leaders.

"There's no stopping it," said Andrew Mecca, chairman of the now defunct task force. "It's a positive beacon of hope. And it's growing."

More than 50,000 copies of the task force's final report have been printed — five times the demand backers of the program expected when the 25-member panel was organized three years ago.

Several legislators have introduced measures to create all manner of self-esteem advisory panels, clearinghouses and demonstration projects. And the lexicon of self-esteem has made its way into 66 different pieces of legislation dealing with everything from teaching to taxes and authored by rock-hard conservatives and new-age liberals alike.

Assemblyman Tom McClintock, a Tehachapi Republican who occupies the far right wing of the Legislature, offered a bill to reform the state's juvenile justice system. Although it contained a number of tough sanctions against young lawbreakers, it also would have required juvenile halls to help delinquents raise their self-esteem.

"I get 50 requests a week to speak or otherwise help groups involved in self-esteem work," said Mecca, who is director of the Marin County-based California Health Research Foundation.

Since the California task force was formed in 1986, several states including Maryland, Virginia, Washington and Oregon have formed or are forming similar groups.

Perhaps more importantly, according to Mecca, businesses are taking a close look at esteem-building programs to boost productivity and reduce many of thei personnel problems.

Supporters of self-esteem programs will hold 12 conferences throughout the United States over the next 12 months, Mecca said. At earlier conferences, over 1,000 people attended and the majority came from private industries.

Organ donations declining

By Susan Duerksen
Copley News Service

The number of internal organs donated for transplant declined last year for the first time since surgeons began replacing damaged organs.

The drop is blamed on a peculiar mix of good news and bad. Seat belts and improved trauma care are saving more lives, leaving fewer accident victims as donor candidates. And the increasing risk of AIDS transmission is eliminating potential donors who are suspected of being infected.

In addition, doctors are, if anything, less comfortable than ever with the touchy issue, leaving families sometimes unaware of or misinformed about organ donation.

According to a national survey now being completed by the Association of Organ Procurement Organizations, the number of donors fell from 4,092 in 1988 to an estimated 3,996 in 1989.

The decline comes despite new laws and information campaigns that encourage donation. It comes as hospitals are rushing to open transplant centers, and as scientific advancements have made the replacement of kidneys and even hearts almost routine.

BUT WITHOUT donors, thousands of desperately ill patients languish on transplant waiting lists. Many die when their own diseased hearts, livers or lungs finally give out.

"Donation has been flat since 1986, and the rate dropped about 2 percent this past year," said Howard Nathan, past president of the procurement association. "It's a scary thing that we're going through right now, because the waiting list (for transplants) has grown tremendously."

The decrease is partly due to the fact that there are fewer fatal accident victims, traditionally the largest source of donors, thanks to tougher seat-belt and drunk-driving laws and better emergency care.

In addition, the possibility of infection with diseases such as AIDS that could be transmitted to the recipient has excluded potential donors.

But the biggest problem is that national and state efforts to promote donation have failed to persuade American families to relinquish their loved ones' healthy organs in the hours after an unexpected death.

And often, families who might be willing are never asked, despite federal law requiring hospitals to offer the option.

"We're missing at least half, if not two-thirds, of the potential donor pool because we're not getting referrals from the hospitals," said Nathan, procurement director in Philadelphia. He said doctors and nurses often are reluctant to raise the issue with a grieving family, or fail to approach it with the necessary "timing and sensitivity."

DESPITE THE organ shortage, transplants also are becoming expected medical treatment. About 20,000 people now are officially waiting for organ transplants, and many more never make it onto the overcrowded waiting lists, according to the United Network for Organ Sharing, a federal regulatory agency.

Those who need kidneys can survive on dialysis, but at least a quarter of the others die before a suitable organ is found. Meanwhile, transplant centers with specially trained transplant surgeons often sit idle.

The shortage has prompted many procurement agencies to loosen their standards, accepting donations from people who previously would have been considered too old or sick, Nathan said. High blood pressure or even mild diabetes, for instance, no longer automatically exclude a kidney donor, he said.

However, he said anyone with a known history of high-risk behavior for AIDS — such as intravenous drug use or homosexuality — is likely to be excluded because blood tests for the virus aren't always accurate within a few weeks of infection.

Donors must be about the same size as the recipient, and have the same blood and tissue types. They must be brain-dead but with heart and lung support machines keeping the needed organs alive.

Traffic accident victims, who tend to be the youngest and healthiest people dying, have provided about half of all donated organs. But transplant coordinators now must turn increasingly to stroke victims and others as the highways become safer.

"The fatality rate overall is the lowest it has been in the nation's history," said Tim Hurd, spokesman for the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration. Motor vehicle accidents in 1989 claimed 45,500 lives, compared with 47,000 the year before.

HALF OF ALL traffic fatalities involve alcohol, Hurd said, and the number of intoxicated drivers has dropped in recent years because of stricter laws and "a social change in the way people think about drunk driving — it's much less acceptable."

In addition, 34 states now require the use of seat belts, which double the chance of surviving an accident.

Improved trauma-care technology, including rapid helicopter transportation to hospitals, also saves many more accident victims.

"The trauma system has resulted in decreased deaths," said Dr. Brent Eastman, trauma director at Scripps Memorial Hospital in La Jolla, Calif., and chairman of the American College of Surgeons' trauma committee. "I suppose one net effect is there are fewer people available for organ donation. Obviously, we'd like for there to be no organ donors" from violent deaths.

An estimated 15 percent of Americans have signed donor cards attached to their drivers' licenses announcing their intention to donate organs in the event of their death. However, such cards often are of little use, said Jim Cutler, executive director of San Diego's Organ and Tissue Acquisition Center.

"The card is legally binding, but we almost never get our hands on it," he said. "When someone is admitted to the hospital, the wallet is given to the family."

No donor card registry is kept, because signers must feel comfortable that they can change their minds at any time, Cutler said.

MANY FAMILIES still resist organ donation because of several common misconceptions, Cutler said.

"People are afraid the doctors are going to do something to hasten death to take the organ, or won't do everything to save their life," he said.

It is illegal for a doctor treating a patient and pronouncing death to also be involved with organ procurement, he said.

There also are repeated fears that the body will be disfigured or the family billed for the organ removal, both of which are unfounded, Cutler said. He has even had clergy explain to grieving families that Judeo-Christian Scripture says everyone receives a whole, spiritual body in heaven.

When a donor is identified, a computerized national waiting list is scanned for matching recipients, giving priority to cases of extreme emergency. Next priority goes to patients in the same region as the donor, according to severity of illness and time spent waiting.

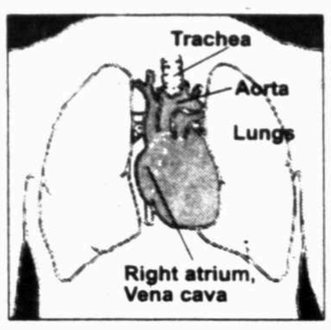
In the past three years, national and state laws have been enacted requiring hospitals to ask families about organ donation whenever a "medically suitable" patient dies.

Some transplant specialists now want to revise the law to require routine referral of all hospital deaths to the procurement agencies, and let those agencies determine the suitability of potential donors.

DOCTORS GENERALLY underestimate the suitability of patients, often wrongly assuming that a medical condition or age would disqualify them, said Dr. Victor Iacovoni, director of the intensive-care unit at Grossmont Hospital, San Diego.

Donors down, recipients remain

Organ transplants save lives, but the number of available donors is down considerably because of stricter seat-belt laws, better trauma treatment and fewer donors as a result of AIDS screening.



1 Donor organs should be the same size as the recipient's and the blood types must match. In both donor and recipient in a heart-lung transplant, cuts are made at the trachea, aorta and where the heart connects to the vena cava. The heart and lung connections are left intact.

2 The recipient is kept alive on life support. The main reconnections are between the tracheas, aortas and the right atria and venae cavae. Fewer reconnections have to be made upon insertion of the donor organs than in a heart transplant alone – boosting the success rate.

Some donation misconceptions

- Tranplants do not financially cost the donor, or the donor's family.
- Donor cards are legally binding but often are given to the family and are not available to transplant surgeons.
- Transplant procedures do not disfigure the donor's body.
- The treating doctor cannot be involved in organ procurement.

DEAR ABBY
Grieving grandma is thankful for Compassionate Friends

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for your recent article about grief in which you recommended the group called Compassionate Friends.

Van Buren

I found the group that meets here in Fresno the second Monday of each month, and it really helped to talk to others who have lost loved ones. I had never heard of them.

I lost my 17-year-old grandson in a tragic gun accident, and I am having a hard time coping with it. I also lost my mother, mother-in-law and several friends last year. The meetings have helped me to come to terms with those losses. God bless you for your help. — MRS. T. IN FRESNO

DEAR MRS. T.: My heart goes out to you and to all who have experienced the death of a child (of any age), which is one of the most tragic losses one can experience. For those who have never heard of "Compassionate Friends," it is a national self-help support group for people who have lost children from any age and any cause. They meet and find comfort in consoling each other. It doesn't matter how long ago — if you are still grieving, it will comfort you.

Compassionate Friends has no religious affiliation; people of all faiths (or none) may join. Contributions are voluntary.

To locate a group in your area, send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the national office: Compassionate Friends, P.O. Box 3696, Oak Brook, Ill. 60522-3696. If you can, please enclose a dollar to cover the cost of mailing.

DEAR ABBY: Recently, I was invited, rather unexpectedly, to a wedding shower for a young neighbor. I purchased a very nice gift and went to the shower.

When I got there, I discovered that the wedding was only two weeks away and that I was not invited to it — only to the shower. Among the many friends of the bride who were there, I met one other lady who looked a little uneasy, and after we had chatted a while, I learned that she had not been invited to the wedding, either. While everyone else was gaily discussing nuptial plans, she and I tried to be as cordial and polite as we could, but we both felt uncomfortable, to say the least. Please comment. — ZIP CODE 60558

DEAR ZIP CODE 60558: According to Emily Post, with whom I wholeheartedly agree:

"No one should be invited to a bridal shower who is not also invited to the wedding. It is extremely presumptuous to ask someone to a shower — meaning she must bring a gift — if she is not close enough to the bride or groom or their families to be included on the wedding list."

The bottom line: People should not invite strangers to showers. But if perchance they do, the strangers should not accept.

DEAR ABBY: Many times you have received letters from new brides who are pestered by family and friends who ask, "When are you going to start a family?"

All the women in our family give the same answer: "When we want one." After getting the same reply repeatedly, people stop asking. Also, it calls for no discussion, and it can be delivered straight to a busybody or with a smile to one's favorite aunt. In any case, it is 100 percent effective and leaves no hard feelings. — E.F. IN ORANGE, CALIF.

DEAR E.F.: Congratulations. You have just performed a helpful service that I'm sure will be appreciated by the many brides who are too polite to say, "It's none of your business."

CONFIDENTIAL TO "THE OLD PHILOSOPHER": "Keeping score of old scores and scars, getting even and one-upping, always makes you less than you are." — MALCOLM FORBES

Everything you'll need to know about planning a wedding can be found in Abby's booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." To order, send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Little League becoming big attraction

Associated Press

Little League baseball has become big time.

It's the largest youth sports organization in the world with even the Soviet Union interested in setting up a team.

Since the first Little League game 51 years ago, some 20 million youngsters have made Little League part of their lives, according to an article in the current issue of Town & Country, and some of the alumni are famous.

Former Little Leaguers include major-league stars Orel Hershiser, Carl Yastrzemski and Tom Seaver, as well as actors Tom Selleck and Danny DeVito, rock stars Bruce Springsteen and Huey Lewis, and politicians Sen. Bill Bradley and Vice President J. Danforth Quayle.

This summer four American teams will vie in the U.S. playoffs, while four "international region" teams — from Europe, Latin America, Canada and the Far East — do the same. The winning American and foreign players will battle for the world championship with 35,000 people expected to attend the final game.

There are now Little Leagues in 36 countries and it is poised to grow bigger in the years ahead.

"Baseball will be a gold medal sport in the 1992 Olympics," said Little League President and CEO Dr. Creighton J. Hale. "For a country to be competitive in baseball its players must begin the game as children. We expect 50 countries to be playing Little League baseball by 1995. Most recently, representatives from the Soviet Union contacted us about setting up leagues."

Little League also is expanding to include those who have been excluded in the past.

"Little League was originally formed for boys between the ages of 8 and 12. It now provides both softball and baseball leagues for girls as well as boys between the ages of 6 and 18," Hale said. "The next step is a Challenger Division for disabled boys and girls."

The fact that Little League has become big business led founder Carl Stotz to walk away from the business end of Little League Baseball in 1955. Stotz's Little League brainchild was born in Williamsport, Pa.

The first game was played on a sandlot June 6, 1939, with nine boys in baggy cotton uniforms representing Lundy Lumber opposing the Lycoming Dairy team. By the time the game ended, 23 to 8, Little League was born.

The first season, Stotz said, the league had only three teams. Three of the first season's games were rained out. An umpire quit in the middle of a game because of heckling from the crowd.

Fifty years later, Stotz now oversees 14-team The Original League Inc., founded in 1956.

In Stotz's backyard there is a structure that houses photographs of 1939's original teams, ancient baseballs and gloves, paintings of ballgames, lineups from the original season.

Alcoholism in elderly overlooked

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — A preoccupation with treating alcoholism in younger people has obscured a serious and neglected problem among old people in this country, experts say.

"Alcoholism in the elderly is drastically underdetected and undertreated," said Nancy J. Osgood, a Medical College of Virginia gerontologist. "We have a hard time thinking a person 85 years old could have an alcohol problem."

Ms. Osgood and officials of the Virginia Department for the Aging have developed what they say is the nation's first statewide program to detect alcoholism in the elderly.

About 100 two-member teams of volunteers will receive a day of intensive training from the state, and each team in turn will train 125 people. The first training session was in February; another is set for September.

The goal is to have 12,500 relatives of older alcoholics, older adults and social service and health professionals versed in the physical and psychological effects of alcohol and aging.

Delaware is setting up a detection program, using Virginia as a model, Ms. Osgood said.

Rita Albery, a public health adviser to the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, said the focus has been on alcoholism in younger people but not in older people.

"We've got to start paying attention to this population," she said.

STUDIES HAVE found that 2 percent to 10 percent of Americans over 65 are alcoholics, or 560,000 to 2.8 million people. But the statistics are misleading because the problem is largely undetected, said Ms. Osgood.

"The elderly don't usually come in contact with work officials or even with family members because they live alone," she said.

Many older people also grew up believing alcoholism was a moral issue — instead of a chronic disease — and that overcoming it was a matter of will power. This makes it hard for older people to seek help.

It's sometimes difficult for physicians to distinguish symptoms of alcoholism — such as memory loss and blackouts — from the natural aging process, Ms. Osgood said. Many physicians also are reluctant to recognize alcoholism in the elderly or to confront an older patient, she said.

Elderly alcoholics themselves can make diagnosis difficult.

"Alcoholics can hide it from anybody. It's a real hidden disease," said Ms. Osgood, who has written extensively on geriatric alcoholism, depression and suicide.

A more insidious barrier to detecting and treating alcoholism among the elderly is an attitude of "the bottle is the only thing they have left ... why take it away from them," Ms. Osgood said. "They're really the ones we should be taking it away from."

J. James Cotter, director for program development and management for the Department for the Aging, agreed.

"There is a tendency to use age as a justification for not seeking stronger intervention and providing help," he said.

TAKEN TO a further extreme, some people believe, "why treat it, they're going to die anyway," Ms. Osgood said. "It's a crazy kind of rationalization."

Among the clues to alcoholism in the elderly are repeated falls, gaps in memory, confusion, a flushed face, trembling, weight loss, extreme fatigue, incontinence, aggressive or abusive behavior and depression.

The goals of intervention are to allow a person to become aware of the problem, to build the alcoholic's motivation to recover and to help the alcoholic overcome fears of the disease and treatment. Intervention may take only a single meeting or many visits over a period of months.

An irony of the failure to detect alcoholism in old people is that they have a better treatment prognosis than other age groups, Ms. Osgood said.

Most geriatric alcoholism is related to a specific problem, crisis or stress related to aging rather than to a lifetime of drinking, she said.

Still, elderly alcoholics are more at risk for associated illnesses such as liver damage and gastrointestinal problems because their bodies are weaker.

Another physical threat is the sometimes lethal reaction between alcohol and prescription drugs.

Cotter said geriatric alcoholism will worsen as life expectancy increases.

"It's going to cost a fortune to take care of elderly alcoholics," Ms. Osgood said. "The drain on social services and the health care system in terms of money will be extremely high.

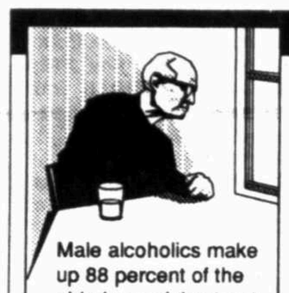
"The human cost in terms of quality of life" will be even higher, she said. Ms. Osgood said she believes the increase in elderly suicides is tied to alcoholism, although there has been no definitive research on the subject.

AS WITH geriatric suicide, alcoholism among the elderly primarily targets men. Male alcoholics make up 88 percent of the elderly who are receiving treatment.

"In our society men, more than women, have held positions of power, status and authority. So when they become old and lose their jobs and income and the status and power, they've got the farthest to fall," Ms. Osgood said.

Social history may also make alcoholism harder to spot among elderly women.

"I think ... we probably have many more women alcoholics than we've recognized because traditionally we haven't even had programs for women alcoholics," she said. "As a society we say nice women don't drink. We don't want to admit that our grandmother is an alcoholic."



Elderly Alcoholics

A preoccupation with treating alcoholism in younger people has obscured a serious problem among older Americans.

Male alcoholics make up 88 percent of the elderly receiving treatment for alcoholism.

2 to 10 percent of Americans over 65 are alcoholics, or 560,000 to 2.8 million people.

Living and aging well

Scientists studying aging offer the following checklist of habits that can promote longevity and an active old age.

The don'ts

Exclude:

- Smoking
- Alcohol and caffeine, or at least have them in moderation
- Salt
- Refined sugar
- Red meats

The dos

- Exercise. Even 20 minutes of aerobic exercise, such as walking, three times per week, it stimulates the immune system to fight disease better and it strengthens the heart.
- Eat vegetables and fruit.
- Wear seat belts.
- Develop skills for coping with stress. Unabated, stress triggers chemical reactions in the body that can harm organs.
- Maintain interest in ideas and thinking skills to promote mental agility.
- Maintain interest in people, pets and other endeavors that contribute to a sense of well being.

Copley News Service

Symptoms of alcoholism listed

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Here are signs of alcoholism in older people:

- Gaps in memory.
- Confusion.
- Aggressive or abusive behavior.
- Depression.
- Falling repeatedly.
- Having frequent automobile accidents.
- Neglect of appearance and hygiene.
- Talking about or attempting suicide.
- Neglect of home, bills and pets.
- A flushed face.
- Trembling.
- Weight loss.
- Extreme fatigue.
- Incontinence.
- Withdrawal from social activities.

Researcher finds pet ownership helps elderly health

WASHINGTON (AP) — Owning a pet can reduce an older person's need for medical services, according to a study.

Judith M. Seigel of the University of California at Los Angeles said elderly pet owners participating in her survey reported 16 percent fewer doctor contacts over one year than those without pets.

"Furthermore, pets seemed to help their owners in times of stress," she said.

Seigel's findings were reported in the June issue of the Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, published by the American Psychological Association.

She interviewed 1,036 Southern California residents 65 years old and older, speaking with them by telephone every two months, allowing them to miss no more than one interview in each six-month interval. The final sample contained 938 people, 345 of whom owned at least one pet.

Pets included dogs, cats, birds and fish.

The journal said pet owners and non-owners were comparable in racial-ethnic composition, gender composition, education, chronic health problems and other factors.

At the beginning of the survey, participants reported whether they had any "recurring or continuing health problems." They also indicated whether they had been affected in the previous six months by stress factors from divorce or death of a close family member or friend, to money problems or being the victim of a crime.

Seigel said she found that those who owned pets required fewer physician contacts — especially those initiated by the patient — than those who didn't.

The study found also that dog owners — who tended to spend more time with their pets — had fewer physician contacts than owners of other animals. She said data showed that dog owners were more attached to their animals than other pet owners.

Seigel said dog owners had 21 percent fewer physician contacts than non-pet owners.

Pet owners living under conditions described as high stress averaged 8.91 physician visits during the study period, while those who did not own animals averaged 10.37 doctor contacts, Seigel said.

She said 7.90 visits were averaged by pet owners living under non-stressful conditions, while those without pets with similar living conditions averaged 8.38 visits to a doctor.

Seigel said it appeared from the data that pet ownership primarily influences social and psychological functions rather than physical health.

Prime Time column debuts

Staff Report

A new Prime Time column will make its debut a week from today when Dr. Henry F. Page of Midland becomes a regular contributor to this page. His column will appear bi-monthly.

Page, whose writing involves humor and a common sense approach to the subject of aging, is medical director of Trinity Towers and Manor Park. An internist with a specialty in geriatrics, he has lived in Midland since 1971, coming here as an associate of Dr. Ralph G. Greenlee.

The former head of the Department of Research on Aging at Lankenau Hospital in Philadelphi, Page is a fellow of the American College of Physicians and the American Geriatrics Society. He has participated in two White House conferences on aging. He is a retired captain of the Medical Corps of the U.S. Naval Reserve.

Pageant seeks senior contestants

Staff Report

The Ms. Texas Senior America Pageant Inc. is seeking contestants for the 1991 pageant to be in January in Beaumont. The pageant is open to women 60 years old and older. Competition categories are evening gown, talent and interviews with the panel of judges.

The winner will receive an expense paid trip to Atlantic City, N.J., in April 1991 to compete in teh national pageant.

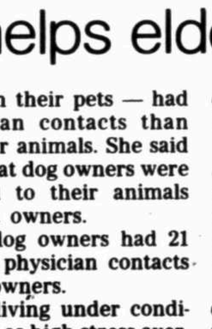
Deadline for entry is Nov. 1. Guidelines, information and entry forms can be obtained by writing Pageant Headquarters, P.O. Box 5514, Beaumont, Texas, 77726-5514 or by calling Martha Marlowe at (409) 833-6494.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Aging stereotypes need attitude update

By Steve Edwards

Many younger people are guilty of "ageism," a negative attitude toward aging and the elderly. Fear of growing old and dying may be the reason behind this type of discrimination, but stereotyped images of older people as "talkative," "senile" and "old-fashioned" are part of the problem.



Edwards

As people age, they begin to see things differently, but some of the old stereotypes may persist until they believe them to be about themselves. No wonder as we age, we become confused and uncertain about many things — including sex.

When we were younger, we believed that older people lost interest in sex. That image was fed by older people we saw on television and in the movies, who actually may not have had any resemblence to most seniors today.

Men tend to value physical performance in sex — "masculinity" — while women place more value on being "sexy." As they age, men tend to fear loss of masculinity, while women fear being less sexy, and both fear being unable to prove their sexual prowess.

However, research indicates that a healthy and meaningful sex life can be enjoyed well into the senior years, providing the participants are healthy and have no physical handicaps that prevent sexual fulfillment.

Although research has found that healthy people can enjoy sex well into their 90s, a happy and fulfilling sex life begins with your attitude toward marriage and sex. Previous research has shown that sexual desire does not automatically end with age, although younger people often think it does.

Some older people have no desire for sex, and prefer creative activities such as the arts, gardening, sports or remodeling their home. But others, who have a desire for a healthy sex life, should be able to enjoy, create and love without worrying that they are "too old."

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

'Twin Peaks' grabs 14 nominations for Emmy awards

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — "Twin Peaks," ABC's critically acclaimed yet mind-boggling nighttime soap opera of a Pacific Northwest lumber town, led the list of nominations Thursday for the 42nd Annual Primetime Emmy Awards.

A confounding, surreal saga of sex, violence and cherry pie, "Twin Peaks" drew 14 nominations, including outstanding drama series and drama directing for eclectic filmmaker David Lynch.

The Academy of Television Arts & Sciences gave 13 nominations to the yuppie attorneys of NBC's "L.A. Law," and 12 nominations each to the peacock network's bar patrons on "Cheers" and the acid-tongued TV journalists on CBS' "Murphy Brown."

"The Simpsons," the alienated cartoon family of Fox Broadcasting Co., collected five nominations, three for the animated series and two for its high-rated Christmas special.

Its nominations were for "outstanding animated program for programming one hour or less," where its competition includes Garfield and Charlie Brown cartoons.

The richly produced, but mediocre-rated "Twin Peaks" helped bring 95 nominations to ABC, tying it for first with NBC. ABC finished last in the 1989 nominations, a position held this year by CBS, with 73 selections.

The upstart Fox "weblet" earned 26, more than double the 12 nominations it received last year. Its contenders included "In Living Color," a satirical black sketch comedy show nominated for best variety, music or comedy series.

Kyle MacLachlan, the coffee-guzzling, pie-gobbling FBI agent on "Twin Peaks," was nominated for best actor in a drama series. Piper Laurie's portrayal of the diabolical Catherine Martell earned her a lead drama actress nomination for the same series.

Besides his directing nomination, Lynch also will compete in the dramatic series writing category and in music and lyrics. The latter is for a song he wrote with composer Angelo Badalamenti, whose haunting melodies give "Twin Peaks" its eerie backdrop.

Other nominees for best drama series were ABC's "China Beach" and "thirtysomething," and NBC's "L.A. Law" and "Quantum Leap."

ABC's top-rated "Roseanne" received two selections, one for co-star John Goodman as best supporting actor. Its star, Roseanne Barr, was snubbed again by academy voters, who ignored the controversial comic in last year's nominations. Barr's omission couldn't be blamed on the criticism she received for her screeching rendition of the national anthem at the San Diego Padre's baseball stadium last week. The academy's voting closed before her performance.

Six nominated shows won't be on television next season: Fox's "The Tracey Ullman Show," which earned 13 nominations, CBS' "Newhart," "Beauty and the Beast," "The Famous Teddy Z," "The Equalizer" and "Mancuso FBI."

One nomination went to the late Muppets creator Jim Henson, who was named for directing a variety or music program.

Richard Mulligan, winner of last year's best comedy actor Emmy, was nominated again for NBC's "Empty Nest." He will face Goodman, Ted Danson of "Cheers," Craig T. Nelson of ABC's "Coach" and child star Fred Savage of ABC's "The Wonder Years."

The best female comedy competitors are Kirstie Alley of "Cheers," Delta Burke of CBS' "Designing Women," Betty White in NBC's "The Golden Girls," Candice Bergen of "Murphy Brown" and Blair Brown from "The Days & Nights of Molly Dodd."

For supporting performances in a comedy, the choices are Woody Harrelson and Kelsey Grammer for "Cheers," Jerry Van Dyke in "Coach," Charles Kimbrough for "Murphy Brown" and Alex Rocco in "The Famous Teddy Z."

Supporting comic actress nominations also were given to Rhea Perlman and Bebe Neuwirth in "Cheers," Estelle Getty for "The Golden Girls" and Faith Ford of "Murphy Brown."

Other nominees with MacLachlan for best dramatic actor were Peter Falk of ABC's "Columbo," Edward Woodward from CBS' "The Equalizer," Robert Loggia in NBC's "Mancuso FBI," and Scott Bakula of "Quantum Leap."

Dramatic actress choices included last year's winner, Dana Delany, of "China Beach," Jill Eikenberry from "L.A. Law," Angela Lansbury for CBS' "Murder, She Wrote" and Patricia Wettig in "thirtysomething."

"L.A. Law" collected three nominations for supporting dramatic actor for Richard Dysart, Larry Drake and Jimmy Smits. Dean Stockwell was chosen from "Quantum Leap." Timothy Busfield, who has refused to report for work over a contract dispute, was nominated for "thirtysomething."

Sherilyn Fenn, who plays Audrey Horne on "Twin Peaks," was selected for best supporting dramatic actress. She will face Marg Helgenberger of "China Beach," Melanie Mayron of "thirtysomething," and Diana Muldaur and Susan Ruttan of "L.A. Law."
