The modern lines of the structures belie the underlying beginnings of the buildings on Main Street. Once the center of retail shopping since the birth of downtown Midland, the old stores have been renovated to give a new look of vitality and add office space at a nominal cost.

A change of face

By DORIAN MARTIN
Staff Writer

Once upon a time, retail stores flourished along the streets and avenues of downtown Midland. But, as the city grew and Midlanders moved to the suburbs, the stores followed, leaving behind vacant buildings.

Today, instead of tearing down these old buildings, developers are saving money and time by renovating them into modern-looking office buildings.

Several of these buildings are located along Main Street, not far from the towering high-rise offices that dominate Midland's skyline.

Red Roberts started the project at 206 Main St. with what was "just a glass building," remembered his son, Rod Roberts. "Main Street was kind of a gamble when he started it five or six years ago before the boom."

The idea spread to several other developers. After J.C. Penney and Woolworth vacated their Main Street locations, developers followed the older Roberts' lead in remodeling these buildings.

Why renovate instead of totally rebuilding?

"There are several reasons," said Tom King of Tom King Realtors, which specializes in commercial, industrial and development projects.

Renovating is best done "if you've got a building whose configuration will lend itself best to the land." According to King, the developer needs good dimensions so he can use space efficiently.

"THE SHELL OF THE building has to be salvageable," King added. Developers look for a fireproof construction and cured concrete which makes the building sturdy.

King noted, "If you went to a building like the old Crawford Hotel (which shattered while being destroyed to make room for the current City Hall, indicating a weak structure), the thing to do is to tear it down and start over."

In contrast, he pointed to the Woolworth building at 200 N. Main St., which now houses Geomap Co. The building was "only about the fourth one that I've remodeled," King stated.

The structure was a poured concrete frame with tile walls that "structurally were very sound."

After stripping the building, "all we had was a box there made out of good sturdy concrete," King said.

The building's separations between the ceilings and the next floor proved to be 16 feet, more than the mandatory 8 to 10 feet for new duct work. "If you didn't have room above the ceiling and below the floor to put the air conditioning ducts, that would be a consideration."

The developer also took the aesthetic quality of the finished building and its surroundings into consideration. Knowing that the Woolworth building had a horizontal configuration, King "broke it up with vertical windows" which also gave it a distinctive look when compared to other renovated buildings on the street.

Mideast peace plan presented by Saudi prince

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — In an interview published Saturday, Saudi Arabia's Crown Prince Fahd proposed a new Mideast peace plan, saying Arab states would recognize Israel's right to "live in peace" if Israel allows the creation of a Palestinian state. Israeli reaction was mixed.

Fahd, in charge of daily affairs in King Khaled's monarchy, also called for a new United Nations resolution for a comprehensive peace settlement.

He laid out his eight-point blueprint in an interview with the official Saudi press agency that was published in Beirut newspapers.

In Tel Aviv, Israeli Foreign Ministry spokesman Herzl Inbar said, "We don't have the Saudi proposals. We have only what we get from the media, and those are unacceptable proposals to us."

But Inbar said his was a "first reaction," and Israel would wait for more details. A spokesman for Prime Minister Menachem Begin said he was vacationing and could not be reached.

Israeli television quoted members of Begin's Cabinet as saying the plan was "a turning point." The unidentified ministers said Fahd's statement was the first time the Saudis have said they were willing to recognize the Jewish state. One minister was quoted as saying, "Indeed, the conditions are the most radical and are totally unacceptable to Israel. But the readiness to recognize Israel must be viewed as a fundamental change in the Saudi position."

In what some diplomats viewed as significant, Fahd's plan made no mention of the Palestine Liberation Organization which the U.S. and Israeli governments have refused to consider as a partner in peace negotiations.

"Perhaps the omission is to make it easier for the U.S. administration to support the sort of U.N. resolution he is suggesting," said one Western diplomat who declined to be identified.

Elsewhere in the interview, however, Fahd mentioned the "need for the American government to recognize the PLO because it is a fact and a reality and any comprehensive peace in the area must depend upon reality."

Fahd's proposal comes after Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's visit to Washington, where Sadat told President Reagan the United States should open negotiations with the PLO.

Western diplomats who specialize in Saudi affairs said the crown prince's package appeared designed as an alternative to stalled U.S.-sponsored Palestinian autonomy talks between Egypt and Israel. The diplomats requested anonymity.

The plan, a composite of proposals contained in previous U.N. resolutions, called for:

— Israeli withdrawal from all territory occupied in the 1967 Mideast war.

— Removal of all Israeli settlements in the West Bank and other occupied areas.

— Guarantees of freedom of worship for all relixious sects in the holy land.

— Recognition of the right of two million Palestinian refugees to repatriation and compensation for those who did not wish to return.

— A U.N. trusteeship in the Palestinian-populated West Bank of the Jordan River and the Gaza strip during a transition period of a few months.

— Establishment of an independent Palestinian state with the Arab sector of Jerusalem as its capital.

— Guaranteeing the right of all states in the area to "live in peace."

— Guarantees of any agreement by the United Nations or "some of its members," presumably the United States and the Soviet Union.

PATCO president seeks end of strike, beginning of talks

WASHINGTON (AP) — The president of the striking air traffic controllers union said Saturday it is time to negotiate an end to the nearly week-old strike because neither the union nor the government can win "a clean-cut victory."

Robert E. Poli, president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization said the controllers remained firm in their resolve Saturday, the sixth day of their strike, despite the Reagan administration's position that since the strikers had been fired there was no longer a strike.

"In other words, somebody has to come to an understanding that we sit down and say, 'Ronald Reagan you were right and Mr. Poli you weren't wrong,'" said Poli in a Cable News Network program. "Survival has to be an understanding to sit down and people have to give a little on both sides."

In Santa Barbara, Calif., Larry Speakes, the deputy White House press secretary, was asked if any negotiations are underway. "Not that I'm aware of," he said, "but I sure would not want to rule it out either way."

Poli said he has never said PATCO "will have a clean-cut win here, that we know that will happen. The administration also is acting like it has a clean-cut win — 'We've blown them away. They (the union) don't exist.'"

"We know better than that," he continued. "We're much stronger than that. The administration is very strong in their position. There has to be a meeting of the minds and an understanding so that both parties can preserve their dignity and come out with a reasonable settlement. I think there is a way."

Midland controllers planning appeal

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

Barry Vaughn, Midland's president of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization Local 428, spent Saturday at Lubbock headquarters with 14 other Midland PATCO controllers waiting for their notices of dismissal.

In the meantime, the Midland controllers joined other PATCO members nationwide in a blood drive.

Vaughn said Saturday night that his wife had received two envelopes in the mail from the U.S. Department of Transportation.

"I suspect that it's my notice," he said. "Up here (Lubbock) some of the controllers have received theirs — it sounds like that's it."

Vaughn said that the 16 Midland controllers will appeal the notices of dismissal. They have seven days to appeal, and the official firing should become effective in three weeks.

According to The Associated Press, Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis is referring to the air controllers' strike in past tense and has begun rebuilding the work force by replacing the 12,000 air controllers who left their jobs in an illegal walkout Monday.

Vaughn doesn't believe the Federal Aviation Administration's hiring of 321 applicants to replace the controllers will ease the situation.

"I don't honestly think this country's economy will allow time for this rebuilding," Vaughn said. "It takes too much time to train a controller. The salaries and training expenses (for a controller) are not economically feasible for this country whatsoever."

In Midland, Bill Hill, chief control tower supervisor, said Friday that the tower is staffed with eight controllers. Recently included are two from Lubbock who previously worked at Midland, and two PATCO members who returned under President Reagan's back-to-work deadline Wednesday. Hill added there is a "consideration for four military personnel to be assigned" in Midland.

"I was a military controller prior to my employment at FAA," Vaughn said. "I was surprised by what little I knew. I don't think those controllers (military personnel) will be able to be proficient. It would take at least six to

Labor trouble in mid-air

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST, JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

HEARST

SAN SIMEON — We have just gone through a week of labor trouble the likes of which I hope we never see again.

The illegal strike by 13,000 air controllers directly or indirectly affected the lives of millions of Americans, and will for a long time to come. Work and vacation schedules were disrupted, and hundreds of millions of dollars were lost.

The controllers understandably are concerned about their financial futures, and that of their families. Everyone agrees they work under terrific strain. As they watch those little lights on the radar charts high in their terminal towers, they have the lives of the nation's air travelers in their hands.

The monitors of mid-air transportation deserve sympathy and understanding, but so does the traveling public. This column is not taking any sides today, but it is my hope that in the end both the controllers and the pilots and passengers they so ably control will receive the justice they deserve.

Public opinion has a way of righting wrongs, which reminds me of some words of wisdom my father once uttered.

"Whatever is right," he said, "can be achieved through the irresistible power of awakened and informed public opinion. Our object, therefore, is not to enquire whether a thing can be done, but whether it ought to be done, and if it ought to be done, to so exert the forces of publicity that public opinion will compel it to be done."

President Reagan played a role in trying to decide what ought to be done last week. He, too, did not wish to take sides, but as the chief executive officer of this nation he had the solemn duty of reminding his countrymen of their obligation to obey the laws of the land. One of those laws says it is illegal for public employees to walk away from their jobs.

In a forthright statement, he said the controllers had taken an oath agreeing not to strike. The law says "an individual may not accept or hold

Reagan favors production of neutron warhead

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, reversing a controversial Carter administration decision, has decided to go ahead with the production and stockpiling of neutron warheads, the White House said Saturday.

The warheads for the Lance battlefield missile and an eight-inch howitzer shell will be stockpiled in the United States and will not be deployed outside this country.

The State Department, in response to questions about the decision, stressed that "production of these weapons is an internal U.S. government matter" and noted that "deployment outside U.S. territory is not involved." The statement said there were no plans "at this time" to deploy the weapons outside the United States.

In Santa Barbara, Calif., deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes confirmed that Reagan had made the go-ahead decision Thursday. He refused publicly to provide additional details about the decision.

Administration leaders are now in the process of telling U.S. allies in Western Europe about the decision, said the State Department. Western European leaders have generally opposed U.S. deployment of the weapons in their countries.

President Carter first supported the weapon and approved its manufacture and stockpile. Then, in 1978, he decided not to produce it, but instead permitted the weapon's key components to be built.

Today's Sports Section begins on Page 6B

The neutron warhead is a high radiation weapon designed to kill people without inflicting intolerable damage to surrounding structures. It carries twice the radiation but less than one-tenth the explosive power of a conventional nuclear weapon.

The intended purpose of the weapon, according to U.S. defense planners, would be to halt a Soviet tank attack in Central Europe, where the Russians now have an estimated 3-to-1 advantage in armor over NATO armies.

Reagan's decision came after a lengthy review of the entire neutron warhead question, a study coordinated by the National Security Council and including representatives of the Pentagon, State Department, and Energy Department.

Lawmakers debating redistricting

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas lawmakers, weary and short-tempered, worked late Saturday over the highly controversial redistricting issue in hopes of getting it solved by the special session's Tuesday midnight deadline.

House members began debate on several different plans to remap Texas congressional districts according to the 1980 census about 5:15 p.m.

The Senate, operating mostly with only two members present, technically stayed in session by recessing from time to time in hopes of receiving results of the House work later in the night.

The Senate approved its version of congressional redistricting in the first week of the special session that began July 13.

Earlier Saturday, the House accepted 93-51 all but one of several Senate amendments made to a property tax revision bill designed to east taxpayers' complaints about county-wide tax appraisals.

The amendment not approved, which the House wants settled in a conference committee, would not tax oil and gas in transit between the states or temporarily in storage in Texas.

In addition to Saturday sessions, both houses planned to return Sunday afternoon.

Congressional redistricting remained the No. 1 roadblock, but there was action elsewhere after Gov. Bill Clements on Friday opened the final days of the session to 13 other subjects.

The original five priority items, all passed over by the 1981 Legislature's regular 140-day session, included congressional redistricting, regulation of Texas doctors, property tax revision, creation of a water development fund, and repeal of the state property tax.

The proposed water fund, which must be approved by voters, was approved for the Nov. 3 ballot, and Clements signed the Medical Practice Act into law.

Still more work was needed Saturday on the other priorities.

The expanded agenda given lawmakers Friday — which may affect the final votes on redistricting — included measures to give the gasohol industry a tax break; issue $250 million more in veterans land bonds; raise the interest on those bonds; regulation of bingo games; regulation of psychotherapists; allow group insurance policies to cover alcohol and drug dependency; and money to fight the Mediterranean fruit fly.

Much of the talk Saturday centered on what would happen if this sepcial session does not redraw the 27 congressional districts, with considerable speculation that a second special session might be needed.

Clements said Thursday he had given "no consideration" to a second special session.

Clouds, chance of rain here through weekend

Lingering clouds and the slight chance of rain should remain in the Midland area today through Monday. The National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport predicted a 20 percent chance of precipitation today and Monday, giving the area hope for much needed showers.

No important temperature change is expected. Saturday's high was 89 degrees, a frigid day compared to the record high of 104 degrees set on that date in 1952. Overnight low was 70 degrees, a heat wave compared to the record low of 62 set in 1976.

High today and Monday should be near 90 degrees after an overnight low in the middle 60s.

Winds will blow from the south at a gentle 5-10 mph today.

No precipitation was reported in the last 24 hours, leaving the yearly total at 7.01 inches.

Heavy rain fell over the middle Atlantic Coast states, with 4.36 inches of rain at Philadelphia causing flooding of some streets and small creeks. Wilmington, Del., got 1.11 inches of rain.

Items reported stolen from motel

In criminal activity reported to Midland police Saturday, assorted unidentified items valued at $4,000 were said to have been stolen from a vehicle at the Best Western Motel, 1000 W. Interstate 20.

An employee of the Wes-Tex Supply Co., 3315 W. Stokes Ave., told officers two checks were taken from the company, and damage was done to a new car. Total loss was valued at $1,972.70.

Johnny Keith of 307 N. Calhoun St. reported a burglary in which a $600 air conditioner and $200 in $20 bills were taken.

a position in the government... if he participates in a strike against the government."

The president, who once was a member of a labor union himself, said: "If ever we feel that our oath of office need not be kept, how long would we have this society?" A far from "insensitive" Ronald Reagan told the controllers he took no joy in his firmness, but had to do his duty as he saw it.

A White House visitor by name of Gerald Ford said the president had "absolutely no choice" but to stand up to the strikers as he did. Interestingly, organized labor didn't use ex-President Ford's words but its actions meant about the same thing. Labor has chosen to studiously refrain from supporting the cause of the air controllers' strike. Some of labor's leaders voiced ritualistic comments about the issue. Practically speaking, they've given the strikers the air. The reasons why are conjectural at this point. Many thousands of union members are directly affected by the walkout, losing precious jobs themselves. In addition union leaders remember that the air controllers supported Reagan in his presidential campaign against their opposition. It's something to remember.

As we conclude the first working week of the strike, it's an eyeball-to-eyeball standoff. Nobody is blinking on either side. The federal government jailed five air controllers and fined the strikers' treasury so heavily that it may either tie up or wipe out entirely the $3 million fund of the Professional Air Traffic Controllers (PATCO). Around 70 percent of scheduled figihts have taken off and landed with varying delays. The government claims that 30 percent of 13,000 air controllers nation-wide returned to work. Not so, rebuts PATCO; claiming a trickle.

To gird for future emergencies, the government is accepting applications from eager young hopefuls, seeking to be trained in the arduous assignment of air traffic controllers. It says an avalanche of applicants are stacked up to try for jobs that can pay up to $39,000 a year. The strikers, whose leaders agreed on a package with our government last June that was rejected by the rank-and-file later, want top dollar at $59,000 annually, reduced work weeks from 40 hours and other emoluments.

The government, to show that it means to uphold the law, has been sending out dismissal notices by registered letter. But it isn't that easy to fire someone on the government payroll, even for those pulling an illegal strike. Dismissals can be taken to court, then appealed right up to the U.S. Supreme Court for a final decision. There also is recourse to civil service commissions if strikers want to go that route. The problem overall, alas, injures all of us.

Incidentally, it seems unfair to fault the president for taking a vacation at this time. Actually, presidents don't take vacations. Through the marvels of electronics, they are in instant touch with any situation that needs their attention.

So, fasten your seat belts for this one. Keep cool; no smoking.

eight months for them to become proficient with the equipment and the area under normally safe conditions."

In response to the report that two Midland PATCO members, Michael Janssen and Michael Fiddes, have returned to work, Vaughn said he was "disappointed and extremely surprised about one of them."

Meanwhile, unemployed PATCO members in Texas joined other union controllers nationwide in donating blood. AP reported that some controllers had heard that air shipments of blood were being delayed by the strike, and PATCO members offered to donate. According to PATCO headquarters in Washington, the union did not urge or coordinate the drive.

Vaughn said his local union had heard about the drive a few days ago, and confirmed the gesture was not instructed by the union.

"We're just doing it as a charitable effort," he said.

Vaughn added that the carpenter's union was donating blood in Lubbock and Midland's PATCO members decided to contribute Saturday afternoon to that city's drive.

Roberts, an architect, agreed. "If the integrity of the building is in good shape, you can have a lot of fun."

Another plus for renovating is the time element. "Naturally, it took us less time to get this building ready," King noted.

Financial reasoning also plays a big part in choosing to renovate. The Realtor explained, "If the property is over 20 years of age, there are tax benefits."

Renovating, according to Roberts, "gives a better return on your invested capital." And investors don't have to pay for the installation of city services.

"The city's already overstressed. When you go in and rehabilitate, you're saving the city a lot of work. He cited the theory that rehabilitation doesn't stretch areas which different departments, such as police and garbage collectors, have to serve.

"Anytime you rehabilitate these seedy areas, it's money in the city's pocket," the architect explained. The city also benefits from the increased tax base.

LENDING INSTITUTIONS, Roberts claimed, are more apt to give loans to renovators to keep the downtown vital. "The bankers...are probably going to be on your side."

Still, Roberts suggested, "Local lenders should encourage investors to do these things to aid the city."

Another incentive to renovate Midland's downtown area, explained Roberts, "is you're providing office area for the east side of town."

"In Midland, people are used to driving four miles to work," the architect said. "It's nice for the city to fill in gaps before it (Midland) spreads out too much.

"When you renovate an area, there are all these spin-offs (of new developments) that are going to take place," he stated.

And renovations keep the city looking youthful and appealing.

Midland's renovations are mostly on structures built in the 1950s. "It's like Midland missed the '60s and '70s because there was no economic growth," Roberts noted.

Many cities, such as Boston, have to consider historic value of their older buildings, but, according to Roberts, "We're not that old a town. This is a new vibrant city, so there's not much to worry about."

Do renovations pay off? "Oh, yeah," King exclaimed, "because of the cost of construction. It boils down to economics — do the numbers balance out.

"We probably saved 25 to 30 percent in the overall investment, but that's just a guesstimate."

HOWEVER, REBUILDING does have its advantages. "If you get one of the wrong configuration and get in there and find it's structurally unsound," then rebuild, King advised.

Old equipment also can be a reason to refurbish. "It'll cost you more in the long run."

However, "precluding all this is the consideration of whether it (the office space) is needed."

King also bases his decisions on the old economic principle of supply and demand. If the demand is good, he would tear down a building that ordinarily would be renovated to construct a 10-12 story office complex.

Odessa's downtown district is one example of King's demand theory. "The retail deserted downtown" just like Midland, but, according to King, Odessa "does not have the need for downtown office structures like Midland has."

In the center of that building is a wooden area where the first Southwestern Bell house was situated. King plans to put an atrium where this wooden area is to brighten up the inner offices and make an old building look modern.

Texas murder trial a tale of two men

Determined detective

When Houston Police Detective Johnny Bonds arrived on he scene in River Oaks two years ago, the medical examiner had already ruled the deaths suicide. But Bonds suspected murder and his persistent investigation led to the convition of Markham Duff-Smith.

By KATHY BAKER
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — Johnny Bonds was the son of a farmer; Markham Duff-Smith was raised in a fasionable neighborhood. Their lives became entwined in murder.

Now one is a hero and the other has been sentenced to death.

It all began two years ago because Police Detective Bonds was haunted by the slaying of a baby boy found dead in his crib, next to his teddy bear.

Bonds' digging overturned two mistaken rulings of suicide and solved the slayings of four people. Duff-Smith, a 34-year-old investor, was accused of arranging to kill the four so he could inherit his family's money.

"One thing about this case is, I was mad," said Bonds, 33. "I was mad at Duff-Smith. I was mad at the medical examiners. To think that somebody could do something this horrible and get away with it!"

Bonds was a homicide detective on July 6, 1979, when he was sent to investigate the discovery of three bodies — of Diana Wanstrath, 36, her 35-year-old husband, John, and their 14-month-old son, Kevin — in a home in the fashionable Memorial area of Houston.

Each victim had been shot in the head. Wanstrath was slumped in his chair; his wife lay in front of the fireplace. Kevin was face-down in his crib.

Bonds said he had seen many bodies during his seven years as a homicide detective, but he could not forget Kevin, and he vowed to find the baby's killer.

The case was closed after the Harris County medical examiner ruled that Mrs. Wanstrath shot her husband and infant son, then herself.

Bonds was troubled because there was no gun at the scene. Medical examiners said perhaps it had been removed by someone trying to save the family embarrassment.

Bonds did't buy it: "When they came down with that ruling, I thought, 'Well, why do I do this job?' "

Despite the ruling, Bonds continued to investigate. He was encouraged by phone calls from friends of Mrs. Wanstrath who said they did not believe she could be a murderer.

The one who got the lion's share of the money was Diana's adopted brother, Markham Duff-Smith. Bonds was suspicious when he met the brother the night after the bodies were discovered.

"He didn't show any emotion at all — very businesslike," Bonds said. "As soon as he left, we thought, 'There's something wrong. This guy doesn't react right.'

"We confronted the whole family after the funeral and told them, 'Look, all of y'all are making money off of this, and just about every one of you is a suspect.' And we asked them all to take polygraphs. By confronting all of them together, nobody could say no.

"So everybody comes in to take the polygraph, and Duff-Smith's the last one, and he's the only one that shows up with an attorney," Bonds said. "He's the only one who had a problem with the polygraph."

Bonds said he was then certain he was on the right track. He played a hunch and got the file on another unusual death in the family — the 1975 strangulation suicide of Duff-Smith's mother, Trudy Zabolio.

"By about July 24th (1979), I was convinced the Zabolio case had been murder, too," Bonds said.

The breakthrough came when an anonymous caller alleged Duff-Smith arranged Mrs. Zabolio's death. But all the caller knew was that there was a "middleman" who was a "realtor and coin collector."

Bonds, having nothing better to go on, began questioning Duff-Smith's business associates, asking each if he collected coins. A long shot paid off when Bonds asked the question of Walter Waldhauser Jr.: "He said, 'Yeah, how'd you know?' "

But Bonds still did not have any link to a "hit man." As a last resort, he dug through trash behind Waldhauser's house and found letters to Waldhauser from a prison inmate, Allen Wayne Janecka.

Janecka confessed to being the hit man in both the Wanstrath and Zabolio slayings and said he was hired by Waldhauser. Waldhauser agreed to testify against Duff-Smith.

The Harris County Medical Examiner's office changed the rulings in both cases from suicide to murder.

In April, Janecka received the death penalty for killing Kevin Wanstrath, and Duff-Smith was arrested in the Zabolio slaying. He was tried last week, and it took jurors 40 minutes to return a guilty verdict.

Prosecutors used the punishment phase to show Duff-Smith's involvement in the Wanstrath slayings, and jurors deliberated only 15 minutes before recommending the death sentence.

"This is a proud day for the Houston Police Department," Assistant District Attorney Mack Arnold said.

Lummis: From playing to managing 'Hughes'

By SHARON HERBAUGH
Associated Press Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — William Rice Lummis thought it was hilarious when his boyhood chums called their Monopoly game "Howard Hughes," a friend recalls.

They didn't realize at the time that someday Lummis would be called upon to take over the vast financial empire of his eccentric cousin.

And when he did, Lummis made the fortune even bigger than it was when the wealthy recluse died five years ago.

Today, Lummis, who bears a striking resemblance to Hughes at midlife, is involved in a long and complicated battle to keep the Hughes wealth, valued anywhere from $180 million to $2 billion, from falling into the hands of pretenders.

Lummis, 52, and 15 others with known links to Hughes on his mother's side will attempt Monday to convince Probate Judge Pat Gregory that they are related to the cousin they hardly knew.

Gregory, whose court declared Hughes a Texan two years ago, on Friday rejected 27 of 43 claims by people who failed to prove their legacy.

"It has been fairly well established that Mr. Hughes' mother had one brother and two sisters and the maternal heirs by and large are descendants of those three people," Gregory said.

Last month, Gregory ruled Hughes left no surviving wives, children, brothers, sisters or parents and no will when he died in April 1976 while en route from Mexico to Houston for medical treatment.

The July ruling set the stage for hearings to determine Hughes' cousins, and Gregory divided them into two categories — those related to Hughes' mother and those related to the tycoon's father.

The second phase of the trial — for maternal heirs — is expected to be mere formality.

The third and final phase — for paternal heirs — will be held before a six-member jury beginning Aug. 24 to weigh the documents of the four recognized paternal heirs and determine the validity of more than 500 claims by those who say they are distantly related to Hughes' father.

House approves bill voiding tax exemption for oil storage

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Texas House on Saturday passed legislation designed to wipe out a proposed property tax exemption for oil and other petroleum products transported into Texas for temporary storage.

The House gave final approval to House Bill 122, by El Paso Democrat Mary Polk, that would wipe out the tax exemption placed on property tax reform legislation in the Senate.

The exemption was added to HB 30 by Rep. Wayne Peveto of Orange, which overhauls the 1979 property tax reforms. The House voted to concur with other Senate amendments to that bill, but sent the oil exemption issue to Conference Committee.

Under the exemption, proposed by El Paso Sen. Tati Santiesteban, oil and petroleum products brought into Texas from out of state would not be subject to property taxation if they remain in Texas for less than 175 days.

County tax assessors would have the burden of proving the oil companies are not entitled to such exemptions. The exemption is expected to result in the loss of millions of dollars in taxes to local governments.

Polk said that federal law exempts such products in interstate commerce from taxation, but the burden of proof is on oil companies to show they deserve the exemption. Polk said her bill, which would supercede Santiesteban's amendment, would restore the present statute.

"The amendment put on over in the Senate was put on without the knowledge of a number of people," Polk told her House colleagues. "We need to pass my bill to make the correction."

However, Rep. John Bryant, D-Dallas, said House members should not think they have done away with the Santiesteban amendment by passing Polk's bill. If the Santiesteban amendment remains on HB 30, and Gov. Bill Clements should veto the Polk bill, the oil exemption would become law, Bryant said.

Polk, however, said it is better to have a "50 percent change rather than zero percent" to kill the oil exemption.

"If the House does concur (with the Senate amendments to HB 30), this bill needs to be on," Polk said.

Polk's bill still must go to the Senate for approval.

Opposing forces gathering votes for showdown of redistricting plan

AUSTIN, Texas (AP) — Speaker Bill Clayton's forces and leaders of Democratic Party loyalists collected votes Saturday toward an evening showdown on congressional redistricting.

Anxious to avoid a veto and to beef up conservative strength in the Texas congressional delegation, Clayton pushed a plan — similar to the Senate's — that raises GOP strength from five to seven congressmen.

Some said Clayton also was trying to draw 14th District lines that would give U.S. Rep. Bill Patman's seat to Republicans. Clayton denied it and said it would be a safe district for Patman.

Trade boycotts 'bad for business'

DALLAS (AP) — John V. James, tentatively appointed to President Reagan's Export Council, says the government should rethink trade boycotts of countries with poor human rights records because the policy is bad for U.S. business, a Dallas newspaper reported Saturday.

"We are turning business over to other countries because of some half-baked opinions," said James, who is the chairman and chief executive officer of Dallas-based Dresser Industries.

Dresser specializes in the manufacture and sale of energy exploration equipment. It does business in 168 international markets, and is the second-largest U.S. firm in South Africa, according to The Dallas Morning News.

Dallasites don't like summer flavor

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas' hot dry summers are not to many residents' taste, but they do give the drinking water more flavor — a touch of algae.

City officials say the tiny plants make the water taste like it's been strained through pine needles.

Blue-green algae grows lushly in Dallas-area lakes during the summer, aided by warmer water and the rays of the sun that beam to the floor of area lakes, said John Stacha, the city's assistant water director.

Long-time Dallasites are used to the peculiar seasoning, but many newcomers have called the Water Department to complain, Stacha said. The displeasing liquid is safe to drink, he said.

Say, do you serve elephant here?

Jewell, Bonnie, Harmon, Ronnie and the rest stuffed themselves with 800 pounds of fresh fruit and vegetables and guzzled 660 gallons of water. They lumbered from table to table and knocked food onto the ground. No one seemed to mind the mess. It was about what you'd expect from a bunch of elephants.

The Hyatt had invited the hungry beasts, performers with the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus, to a "trail ride and lunch" on the plaza outside the hotel.

Parents oppose high school hazing

MONT BELVIEU, Texas (AP) — Parents have threatened to "shoot some kids," but seniors at Barbers Hill High School continue to shave the heads of incoming ninth-grade boys in keeping with a 40-year hazing tradition.

"I've had 50 or 60 phone calls this week from parents complaining about the hazing rituals," said C.E. "Chuck" Morris, sheriff of Chambers County, southeast of Houston.

"But the hazing is still spreading like wildfire," Morris said. "Most parents want it stopped, but nobody will file charges, so there isn't a thing I can do." Morris said some parents have vowed to "shoot some kids" if seniors try to haze their freshmen children.

Hostages free, demonstrators aren't

WASHINGTON (AP) — The hostages are free and the demonstrators are under arrest following a brief takeover of Iran's only U.S. diplomatic outpost. At least three people were injured.

Opponents of Iran's religious leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, seized the Iranian Interest Section at the Algerian Embassy on Friday, sparking a melee between pro- and anti-Khomeini forces.

Demonstrators opposed to Khomeini's regime held about a half-dozen people hostage for about 40 minutes. Authorities said that at first they could not tell the captors from the hostages.

One man was shot and wounded during the takeover and was reported still in serious condition today at Georgetown University Hospital. Hospital officials said he refused to identify himself.

The man accused of the shooting — Akbar Nouchedehi, 27, of Alexandria, Va., an employee of the Iranian Interest Section — was charged Friday with assault with intent to kill, police said today. He was listed in fair condition at Sibley Hospital, which refused to release the nature of his injuries.

The FBI on Friday had said the name of the man who police believed fired the gun was Akvmar Noslohed.

Two dozen demonstrators face charges of destroying diplomatic property, a federal crime punishable by up to five years in prison and a $10,000 fine. FBI spokesman Larry Knisely said late Friday night that the FBI is conducting a joint investigation with District of Columbia police.

The third person injured, Mamood Kupai, was listed in fair condition at Georgetown University Hospital after being trampled during Friday's melee, police said. He and the unidentified man at the hospital were charged with illegally entering the Iranian Interest Section, police said.

Outside the interests section office Friday, some demonstrators shouted "Long live the people, death to Khomeini" as they were frisked and loaded into police vans.

Behind police lines, Khomeini supporters set up a counter-chant: "Long live Khomeini, long live Khomeini."

Twenty-two of those arrested, all of them anti-Khomeini demonstrators, faced hearings before a federal magistrate Friday night on charges of destroying diplomatic property.

Knisely said some of those arrested also may face local criminal charges, but added, "The primary jurisdiction rests on the federal level."

The demonstrators belonged to the underground Mujahadeen Khalq, the FBI said. The group is led by Massoud Rajavi, who masterminded the July 29 escape of ousted Iranian President Abolhassan Bani-Sadr and fled with him from Iran to Paris.

State Department spokesman Alan Romberg described the group as a militant Marxist organization that operated underground in Iran. Several of its members have been executed there, he said.

A man who identified himself only as Husein and told reporters that he was speaking on behalf of the demonstrators claimed later that similar protests had taken place peacefully in Europe and Canada.

"They did not go there to hold hostages. They were there only to expose Khomeini's regime," Husein said of the demonstrators.

Traffic was blocked off for about 20 blocks as police moved into the building to end the showdown.

Police and FBI agents led a group of about 30 people from the building. A police spokesman said later that they were students who were attending a class and had nothing to do with either of the rival factions.

The Iranian Interest Section is operated under the diplomatic umbrella of the Embassy of Algeria but is separate from the main embassy building. The United States has no formal diplomatic relationb with Iran.

Supporters of both Khomeini and the late shah have demonstrated repeatedly in Washington — and clashed on several occasions — since the shah was deposed in 1979.

Shuttle to be mated with fuel tank, boosters

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space Shuttle Columbia will be towed from its hangar to a cavernous vehicle assembly building Sunday for mating with its towering fuel tank and twin rocket boosters, officials say.

Technicians at Kennedy Space Center plan a three-week preparation schedule for the shuttle system in the VAB before moving the shuttle to a pad for the Sept. 30 launch of the second test mission.

Columbia returned here atop a Boeing 747 jetliner two weeks after its pinpoint landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., following its historic first trip into space in April.

The crew for the second flight, Joe Engle and Richard Truly, helped run Columbia through a series of tests in the Orbiter Processing Facility while it had about 1,200 of its more than 30,000 heat-protection tiles replaced or modified.

In the upcoming five-day mission, Columbia will carry a package of scientific instruments for the first time. The 16,000-pound payload, designed to survey earth's resources, has been installed in its cargo bay.

Another major "first" for the second flight is the testing of a 60-foot-long mechanical arm designed to deploy and retrieve satellites on later flights.

While in its hangar, the orbiter was sprayed with a waterproofing solution to help protect its thermal heat shield.

After Columbia is mated to the silo-like external fuel tank and twin boosters, technicians will conduct a major check of all systems.

Meanwhile, the astronauts will carry out simulations of orbital entry, orbital maneuvers, emergency procedures and earth re-entry.

Under the current schedule, the shuttle is to roll out to Launch Complex 39A on Aug. 26 for the final launch preparations.

Early in September, Engle and Truly will climb into the cockpit for a dress rehearsal of the launch countdown, duplicating as closely as possible all launch-day activities except fueling.

The final countdown is scheduled to begin Sept. 26.

Oh, and no clothes.

Participants in the 29th annual convention of the National Nudist Council here this weekend were eager to debunk stereotypes about their way of life.

"Dawn to dusk orgies. That's what the average public thinks," said convention host Bob Fields, who with his wife, Jane, is proprietor of Timber Trails camp. "It's a far cry from the truth."

Most outsiders find the nudity shocking at first, Fields said, but it doesn't take them long to get used to it.

"It's natural. It's a way of life. We're just regular people, except we believe in going nude sometimes," said Bill Murphy of New York City, president of the NNC.

In truth, there were quite a few clothes in view on an unseasonably cool night. To fend off the chill, many of the 100 participants wore towels, sweatshirts or T-shirts. One read, "Smile if you've gone naked."

"We wear clothes for protection, that's all," said John Basham of Indianapolis. "We feel basically that nudity or nudism is a natural thing, as opposed to clothes. Children normally are nudists to start with. We have to teach them to wear clothes."

Sensitive about appearing hedonistic to outsiders, the NNC does not permit drinking or "fraternization" at its meetings and bars the use of cameras except in certain restricted circumstances.

Families are asked to attend together. Singles often are discouraged.

"It's a non-erotic atmosphere," Fields said.

Nudism's image is hurt by pornographic magazines that bill themselves as nudist publications, said Jerry Keck, operator of a nudist camp in Newfoundland, N.J.

Pornography is antithetical to nudism, said Robert Walker of Hartford, Conn.

"We don't care for it. We don't like it. It's not the nudist way of life," he said.

Participants come to the four-day convention to renew old acquaintances, exchange information about nudist activities in other parts of the country and enjoy the swimming and volleyball.

Bank robber sentenced

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — Douglas Bruce Fenimore, who pleaded guilty to participating in what officials called the largest bank robbery in U.S. history, has been sentenced to 20 years in a federal prison.

In addition to the sentence in the $3.3 million robbery, Fenimore was sentenced Thursday to 10 years in prison for two jewelry store heists, officials said.

Authorities have recovered $950,000 of the loot taken last April from the First National Bank of Tucson in Phoenix, Ariz. They are still pursuing two other suspects.

Baby still missing

ATLANTA (AP) — The woman who stole a 12-hour-old infant from Grady Memorial Hospital can call a special telephone "hotline" to learn about the baby's medical needs, a hospital spokesman said Saturday.

"We feel she took the baby because, for whatever reason, she could not have a baby herself. We're working on the assumption that she intends to take good care of the baby," spokesman Mike Yelton said.

The hotline, (404) 588-3772, was connected Friday, Yelton said.

The missing baby, the daughter of Sandra and Bobby Alexander, had not yet been named when she was abducted from her mother's hospital room Tuesday morning.

Yelton discussed the infant's medical needs Friday over a simultaneous telephone hookup with doctors and administrators at 70 Georgia hospitals. The baby had not yet undergone routine blood testing for jaundice and other diseases when she was abducted.

Homicide chief Lt. B.L. Neikirk, whose division investigates abductions, said the search has been expanded into Alabama.

Retirement system turns a profit

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Administrators of Tennessee's retirement system turned a $13 million profit by taking advantage of a bidding war and selling 195,000 shares of Conoco Oil Co. stock to Seagram Co. Ltd. of Canada.

The system's chief investment officer, H. Swift Lipscomb, said Friday that the state sold the Conoco shares at Seagram's offer of $92 per share, a total of about $18.5 million.

Lipscomb said the retirement system's had been buying Conoco stock for five years at an average price of $30 per share. Lipscomb said the total cost was $5.8 million, "so any way you look at it, we made a windfall profit of about $13 million."

Testimony to begin

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Testimony will begin Aug. 18 in the federal murder-conspiracy trial of former Peoples Temple member Larry Layton.

The selection of a jury was completed Friday to hear the case against Layton, 35, who is accused of conspiring to murder Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif. Ryan and four others were shot to death on an airstrip near the Peoples Temple community of Jonestown, Guyana on Nov. 18, 1978.

CTA chief named

CHICAGO (AP) — The retiring head of the Burlington Northern Railroad has been named to run the financially troubled Chicago Transit Authority.

Mayor Jane Byrne on Friday appointed Theodore Schuster, an attorney, as executive director of the CTA at an annual salary of $70,000.

Michael Cardilli, a former city employee, was named Schuster's assistant with a salary of $68,000 and Joby Berman, currently the manager of external affairs at the CTA, was named chief administrator of the new Administrative Joint Commission at a salary $60,000.

Investigation sought

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Archbishop Charles Salatka says he does not believe robbery was the motive in the slaying of an Oklahoma priest who was gunned down in a rectory in Guatemala.

Salatka said Friday he has asked Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. to investigate the slaying of the Rev. Stanley Rother who was killed July 28 in Santiago Atitlan. News reports indicated three men arrested in connection with the slaying said they were robbing the building when Rother surprised them.

In a letter to Haig, Salatka pointed out nine Catholic priests have been killed recently in Guatemala.

Director resigns

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — The executive director of the Pontiac Silverdome has resigned after being charged with fraud for allegedly taking a vacation trip to Mexico in April 1980 at the city's expense.

Charles H. McSwigan Jr., 46, who resigned Friday, was accused of spending most of his time during the trip at a Pacific Coast resort with promoter Paul DiDio, Pontiac City Commissioner Tom Padilla men and three women who were not their wives.

He was ordered Tuesday to stand trial for fraud for allegedly falsifying an expense report. McSwigan had billed the city $2,047.65 for the trip, but repaid $1,452.68 in "personal expenses" two months later, according to testimony at his preliminary examination Tuesday.

'Rapture' date delayed

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — Fundamentalist leader Bill Maupin has once again postponed the day on which his followers are to ascend to heaven, saying the auguries that were to precede the event have not occurred.

Maupin declined to set another date for the "rapture," or ascension, "It sure isn't very far away," he said Saturday.

Maupin, who heads a group of about 50 followers of the Lighthouse Gospel Tract Foundation here, first predicted that the faithful would experience rapture on June 28.

When that deadline passed, Maupin said there had been a "slight miscalculation" and said the ascension should occur by noon Saturday.

This time, however, he hedged his bets, saying that it would first be necessary for Israel to capture Damascus, Syria and Lebanon and for someone from the United States to intervene in that holy war.

"The rapture is not the main thing I expected to occur," Maupin said. "When we first started, it was not so much the date of the rapture. It was making the people of the world aware of the events that precede the rapture. The events have not occurred."

Reagan taking precautions against disease near ranch

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan is taking precautions against bubonic plague, which was found last month near the mountaintop ranch where he is vacationing.

"The White House was recently advised by the county health department of the possibility of bubonic plague being in proximity to Rancho del Cielo," said a statement issued Saturday by the traveling White House. "Routine precautions as recommended by the county health department are being taken."

Those precautions include not handling wildlife and tucking trousers into boots, said Deputy White House Press Secretary Larry Speakes.

The plague was found last month in a wood rat less than a mile from Reagan's ranch in the Santa Ynez mountains about 20 miles from here. Bubonic plague, which claimed many lives in Europe in the Middle Ages, has not been found in the ranch area since last month, and Speakes expressed little concern over the president's safety.

Dr. Daniel Ruge, the president's physician, reported through White House press aides Saturday that he had been advised of the possibility of the plague before the president arrived here Thursday night. But no thought was given to canceling the trip.

Speakes said Reagan was taking "the normal precautions that his neighbors are taking." Asked whether there was any danger, the press spokesman replied: "If you disregard precautions, there's a possibility."

Reagan was spending the day horseback riding with his wife, Nancy, clearing brush from trails and piling wood.

A contingent of striking air traffic controllers planned to picket the gate outside Reagan's ranch on Saturday. But there was little chance the president would see them because the gate is four or five miles from his adobe home.

Asked whether Reagan would be informed of the picketing, Speakes replied, "Somebody may mention it, but it won't be any major briefing."

Speakes said air safety remains the administration's No. 1 concern, adding, "We are fully satisfied it's as safe to fly as it ever was."

He said he didn't believe airlines had pressured the White Houseto negotite with the strikers, whom Reagan has fired, despite the airlines' financial losses due to canceled flights.

Speakes said the administration was "not overly concerned" about decisions by foreign air traffic controllers to sympathize with their American counterparts. "I don't think any flights have been halted," Speakes said. "It has not presented any major problem and does not at this time appear to be something that would increase."

David Pierce, environmental health supervisor for the county health department, was quoted in Saturday's editions of the Los Angeles Times as saying that residents of the ranch area had been warned about the bubonic plague.

"The danger is to make sure that proper precautions are taken to avoid any encounter with the rodent population," he said. "It is important not to handle any wildlife — whether healthy, sick or dead."

The disease often is transmitted to rats and mice by infected fleas. There have been reports that Reagan's ranch has a sizable fitld mouse population, but Speakes refused to acknowledge that.

The health department sent a warning letter to residents of Refugio Canyon, where Reagan's ranch and others are located.

Motel damaged

HAMPTON, N.H. (AP) — Fire damaged a four-story beachfront motel early Saturday, slightly injuring three firefighters and forcing the evacuation of 100 guests.

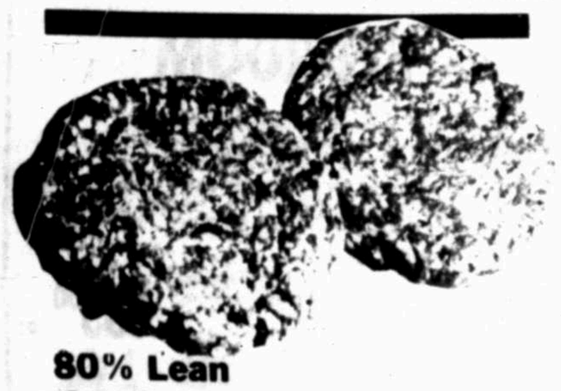

But although the fire, reported at about 4:20 a.m., burned for more than 2½ hours, inspectors said the wood-frame Spindrift Motel had only moderate damage.

Sadat says Israel must consider rights of Palestinians

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Anwar Sadat of Egypt, near the end of a six-day visit to the United States, said Saturday a realistic peace between Arab nations and Israel is impossible if Israel ignores the rights of Palestinians.

"Peace would be an illusion if we neglect the Palestinian people's right to self-determination and national dignity," Sadat said in remarks prepared for a speech at Georgetown University.

But Sadat said he is encouraged that the July 24 cease-fire in Lebanon may mark the beginning of a meaningful move toward peace by both Israel and the Palestinians. "The formidable barriers of fear and distrust have started to crack," he said.

He said Israel and the PLO should adopt a mutual and simultaneous recognition of one another, and said both Yasser Arafat of the PLO and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel took a step in that direction in agreeing to a cease-fire.

"When Yasser Arafat comes out before the whole world and says that we shall respect the cease-fire, and when Begin comes out and says, yes, we agree to the cease-fire ... This is the beginning of the mutual and simultaneous recognition," Sadat said.

Begin has insisted, however, his agreement on a cessation of hostilities, as he calls it, was withthe United States, not the PLO. He also said last week he would never deal with the PLO, calling it a "bloody, murderous terrorist organization."

Sadat said he doesn't intend that mutual recognition between Palestinians and Israel would substitute for the 1978 Camp David peace process agreed to by Egypt and Israel but that it should "save us time."

Sadat said Israel should recognize that "the Palestinians deserve a home," while the Palestinians "should recognize Israel in its borders and live and co-exist with it."

"if we can reach this now, it will ease the whole problem for all of us," he said.

Sadat, who was awarded an honorary degree by Georgetown, said he is returning to Egypt "encouraged that the president and the Congress and the people of the United States have a deeper commitment to peace in the Middle East."

During his visit, Sadat met with Reagan on three occasions. Reflecting his long friendship with the United States and its leaders, Sadat also has met with former Presidents Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon, and planned to go to Plains, Ga., Sunday for a private meeting with former President Jimmy Carter before leaving the United States.

Sadat has publicly urged the Reagan administration to talk to the PLO, and indirectly did so again in his speech. "We are asking all nations of the world to talk to the Palestinian people and their representatives, endorsing every cease-fire and encouraging a more stable Middle East," he said.

Reagan, however, has told Sadat he will live up to a 1975 commitment to Israel not to talk to the PLO until it recognizes Israel's right to exist behind secure borders.

Sadat also has urged the administration to support national liberation movements around the world, something the administration has indicated it won't do.

But Sadat didn't appear discouraged by the administration's responses, telling reporters, "I'm not coming here to make the United State change its policy in a moment or so. We are not dealing with each other on this basis."

Sadat said that in solving the problem of Palestinians he would not support an annexation of the Israeli-occupied West Bank into Jordan. One purpose of the Camp David process is to achieve autonomy for the 1.2 million Palestinians living in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Sadat said he isn't worried by the delay in the autonomy talks, which were interrupted last year, saying delay was necessary because of the elections in the United States and Israel.

But he said it is time now to "find the ways and means to start the peace process ...I have a certain scenario in my mind and certain dates, but it shouldn't be revealed like that because everything should be agreed on between the parties concerned."

Mexico's President Jose Lopez Portillo, right, prepares to review the Presidential Honor Guard with Cuban President Fidel Castro Friday after the two leaders arrived on the Mexican resort island of Cozumel for two days of private talks.

Polish, Soviet officials talk

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Soviet Union sent the Warsaw Pact's commander in chief to Poland Saturday for the fourth time this year in what was interpreted as an expression of mounting concern over the labor turmoil that the communist regime appears unable to halt.

Marshal Viktor Kulikov held talks with Premier Wojciech Jaruzelski, who is also Poland's defense minister, Gen. Florian Siwicki, the Polish army's chief of staff, and Soviet Gen. Afanasi Shcheglov, the Warsaw Pact representative in the Polish army, the official PAP news agency said.

"The participants at the meeting discussed the current activities of the united armed forces, including the issues pertaining to the combat readiness of the Polish People's Army, which is a reliable link in the defense system. The talks were held in a friendly, cordial atmosphere," PAP said.

Kulikov visited Warsaw three times previously this year, and it was presumed he was on the Baltic Friday when Soviet marines began a huge amphibious landing exercise in Soviet Lithuania, some 15 miles northeast of the Polish border. The maneuvers and Kulikov's visit were seen by observers as a stiff warning to end the unrest in this key Warsaw Pact ally.

The Polish government announced prior to Kulikov's arrival that strikers will be docked for last week's protests over food shortages, which it called a "direct attack" on the government that threatens to kill its policy of negotiating with unionists.

Lech Walesa, head of the independent union Solidarity, asked for national TV time to debate the government's chief labor negotiator, and Solidarity's spokesman urged a halt to protests until after union leaders meet in the Baltic port of Gdansk Monday and Tuesday.

Last week's protests included a walkout by nearly 1 million workers in the Silesian coal and steel region. Officials said the Silesian strike Friday cost the government 200,000 tons of unmined coal valued at $16 million. Coal is a vital hard currency earning export and is badly needed by the regime, already saddled with a $27 billion foreign debt.

Officials said the strikers were off the job in violation of an accord with the government and would not be paid. It was the first time officials had taken such a stand on wages since the end of a strike wave last August when agreement was reached on forming Solidarity, the first union free of Communist Party control in the Soviet bloc. Another accord was reached on negotiating with Solidarity in the fall.

Deputy Premier Mieczyslaw Rakowski, the government's chief labor negotiator, said the latest strike wave was "a direct attack on the government" which "puts a question mark on the expediency and rightness of adhering to the line of agreement" on negotiations.

"The government leadership has the impression that somebody has deliberately resolved to exacerbate the crisis in Poland," Rakowski said in a statement read to Solidarity leaders last Monday but only published in full Saturday.

Rakowski expressed "bitter disappointment" that he had been unable to form a relationship with the union and head off strikes in talks Monday and Thursday. He said "the time has come to set the bounds to activities of Solidarity."

"We simply demand of the Solidarity leadership a response to a fundamental question: is it going to accept constructive joint responsibility for the country, or does it want to persist with the role its now plays — regretably a destructive one."

He said although Solidarity had become "a lasting fixture of our life," tha "some Solidarity leaders have taken a road to suicide."

Janusz Onyszkiewicz, Solidarity's national spokesman, responded that it was the government that "dangerously aggravated tension in Poland," but he also called on all local Solidarity chapters to halt protest actions until national union leaders met in Gdansk and assess the situation.

Sadat to visit royal couple

LONDON (AP) — Prince Charles and Princess Diana will entertain Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and his wife at dinner aboard the royal yacht Britannia off Port Said next Wednesday, Buckingham Palace said.

The announcement Saturday was the first official word on the royal honeymoon since Charles and Diana sailed from Gibraltar aboard the Britannia a week earlier. They were wed July 29 in London's St. Paul's Cathedral.

Buckingham Palace broke its silence hours after the Britannia and the honeymooners sailed from the Greek Ionian island of Ithaca after a 17-hour overnight stay.

While anchored off Ithaca, the newlyweds' privacy was marred by hovering helicopters and gaping tourists in boats, local officials said.

Castro frustrated over exclusion from summit

COZUMEL, Mexico (AP) — Cuban President Fidel Castro told Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo that he was frustrated over being excluded from this fall's summit of industrialized and developing nations, Cuban sources said Saturday.

The sources, who requested anonymity, said Castro asked Lopez Portillo to help make sure Cuba is not isolated from Latin American politics, which he believes to be the Reagan administration's goal.

The leaders of 22 nations will meet Oct. 22-23 in the Mexican resort of Cancun, 32 miles north of this Caribbean island, to discuss the issue of distribution of the world's resources among rich and poor nations. President Reagan made his acceptance of an invitation dependent on Castro's exclusion from the conference.

The sources added, however, that Castro considers his exclusion from the conference a closed issue at this point. Three Cuban attempts to gain access to the conference have been rejected.

Castro arrived in Cozumel Friday for a two-day visit. The purpose was "to further strengthen the friendly relations that exist between the two countries," according to an official announcement.

Castro was the guest of honor at a dinner Friday night, where he praised Lopez Portillo in a brief toast as "an experienced man, so wise, so capable and so illustrious."

In an equally brief toast, Lopez Portillo said he had invited Castro to "know his views on contemporary problems." The two leaders met for two hours Friday afternoon, shortly after Castro's arrival by yacht.

The Cuban sources said Lopez Portillo also provided Castro with information on a still undefined joint plan by the United States, Canada, Mexico and Venezuela to help Caribbean and Central American nations economically as a way of stemming the violence sweeping the region.

The Mexican president insists that leftist-ruled nations, including Cuba, should not be excluded from the economic aid programs.

Pope will soon leave hospital

ROME (AP) — Pope John Paul II, slightly feverish but improving, sipped liquids Saturday for the first time since abdominal surgery three days earlier, and will leave the hospital in about a week, doctors said.

"All clinical data are positive and underline that the pope is well and is continually recovering," Vatican Radio said.

The pontiff underwent a one-hour operation Wednesday to restore normal functioning of his intestines, wounded in the May 13 attempt to assassinate him. John Paul is receiving the rest of his food intgavenously, doctors said.

After he leaves Gemelli Hospital, the pope is expected to rest for at least a month at his summer retreat at Castel Gandolfo in the Alban Hills south of Rome. He should be well enough to swim in the pool, said Dr. Emilio Tresalti, Gemelli's chief medical officer.

"He'll be the same as before, the same pope as before," Tresalti said.

Surgeons reversed an intestinal bypass performed after John Paul was shot in the assassination attempt in St. Peter's Square.

The bypass had enabled him to pass waste through a hole in his side, allowing the intestines to heal.

Death of another IRA hunger striker sparks more riots

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Irish Republican Army guerrilla Thomas McIlwee died Saturday on the 62nd day of his hunger strike in the Maze prison, sparking riots in Catholic areas of Belfast and Londonderry.

McIlwee, 23, was the ninth guerrilla to die at the Maze since the fasting campaign began March 1. His death came on the eve of the 10th anniversary of Britain's policy of jailing suspected terrorists without trial. Although the policy was abandoned in 1975, the anniversary is usually marked by riots.

Youths lobbed gasoline bombs and rocks at security forces in Catholic West Belfast after word of McIlwee's death spread. They were answered by a barrage of rubber bullets.

Police outside a precinct house in the Falls Road section, a Catholic neighborhood, were bombarded by rocks and debris from apartment rooftops. Nine people were arrested when police stopped a march in front of Belfast City Hall.

A German photographer was wounded in the leg. Police did not disclose his name and said it was unclear if the injury was from a rock or rubber bullets.

Violence also flared in Londonderry, near McIlwee's home town of Bellaghy. Hundreds of protesters and police clashed.

McIlwee was serving a life sentence handed him by a non-jury court in 1977. He was arrested in Ballymena, 20 miles north of Belfast, in October 1976, after a woman whose boutique he firebombed burned to death and a bomb exploded in his car.

That bomb blinded his left eye. His right eye was reported severely infected when he died. He also was said to suffer kidney failure.

A brief statement from Britain's Northern Ireland office said McIlwee "took his own life by refusing food and medical attention."

One week ago, Kevin Lynch, 25, starved himself to death, and a day later — Sunday — 25-year-old hunger striker Kieran Doherty died. McIlwee was cousin to Francis Hughes, second hunger striker to die in the fast.

All pursued five demands for easier treatment in prison laid down by IRA guerrilla Bobby Sands when he began the protest. Sands died May 5.

The demands, reiterated by guerrillas in a statement smuggled out of the Maze Friday, ask for the right to wear their own clothes, not work, associate among themselves, receive more visits and mail and have their sentences halved for good behavior.

Britain's refusal to relent was also repeated Friday by Northern Ireland Secretary Humphrey Atkins, who said guerrilla inmates would never be treated differently from others.

"News of Tom McIlwee's death following yesterday's arrogant statement from Humphrey Atkins is a tragic indictment," said Gerry Adams, vice president of the IRA's political front Sinn Fein. "Tom was a cheerful and courageous man who went to a premature death as a direct result of British intransigence."

Guerrilla movement reported flourishing

WASHINGTON (AP) — Civilian supporters of the Soviet-backed government of Afghanistan have become prime targets for assassination and resistance spokesmen have announced a 30-person "target list," a State Department situation report said Saturday.

The report notes that a prominent religious leader and a retired Afghan general recently have been assasinated and adds: "These assassinations starkly underline the dangers of associating with the regime."

Prominent among those singled out for assassination are persons who collaborated with the National Fatherland Front which the report said was formed to rally wider support for the Soviet-backed regime of Babrak Karmal.

The report entitled "Afghanistan: 18 Months of Occupation," was prepared by Eliza Van Hollen of the department's bureau of Intelligence and research.

It says that the guerrilla resistance to Soviet military intervention is flourishing despite tribal and ethnic rivalries.

And it said the anti-Soviet resistance has been successful enough that the various groups that comprise it "are unlikely to abandon their effort in the foreseeable future."

Nonetheless, the report said the Soviets have not been hurt badly enough to force them to end their intervention in Afghanistan anytime soon.

"Aggressive resistance tactics have forced the Soviets to involve themselves in military operations throughout the country on a daily basis," the paper said.

"Suffering from excessive concern with bureaucratic procedures and from a lack of zeal, Soviet forces have not been able to deal decisively with guerrilla ambush operations along all major roads and with expanded guerrilla operations against military and government targets," it said.

It asserted that Soviet attempts to seize resistance strongholds and to penetrate territory held by resistance porces have failed repeatedly.

As an example it cited what it said was a failed attempt in mid July to drive guerrillas out of the Paghman Mountains 12 miles northwest of Kabul, Afghanistan's capital.

Greek ship runs aground; Passengers taken ashore

PIRAEUS, Greece (AP) — A large Greek cruise ship ran aground on rocks about a mile south of the Aegean island of Patmos but all 497 passengers were taken ashore safely, a spokeswoman for the ship's owners said.

She said an attempt to pull the vessel Navarino off the rocks would be made over the weekend. The 17,392-ton ship ran aground Friday night during a Greek island cruise before returning to Venice, Italy.

The passengers will be taken to Rhodes or Athens, the spokeswoman for the Karageorgis Lines said.

Gabon air force jets crash

LIBREVILLE, Gabon (AP) — Two fighter jets of Gabon's air force crashed in almost impenetrable tropical forest, the military commander said Saturday. Rescuers were still en route to the site of the Wednesday crash.

Gen. Daniel Ba Oumar said a military detachment was cutting its way to the jungle crash site and it was not known if there were survivors. There were three people aboard the Mirage-5 jets, a French pilot instructor and two Gabonese pilot cadets.

The planes crashed on a training flight in the area of Ndjole, about 125 miles east of Libreville, capital of the former French African colony. Gabon, an oil-producing nation, received five of the jets from France last year.

Chinese discourage big families

PEKING (AP) — Some Chinese children suffer painful discrimination for not being an only child, letters to a major newspaper complained Saturday.

The letters to the People's Daily agreed with the policy of encouraging parents to have only one child to help curb population growth in this nation of 1 billion people.

They said, however, that the policy should be aimed at parents and the children should not have to suffer.

Three workers in Sichuan province wrote that children who do not have brothers and sisters are allowed to go to the head of the line for hospital treatment, receive more candy in kindergaltens and are given priority in admission to schools.

Albanians sentenced to prison

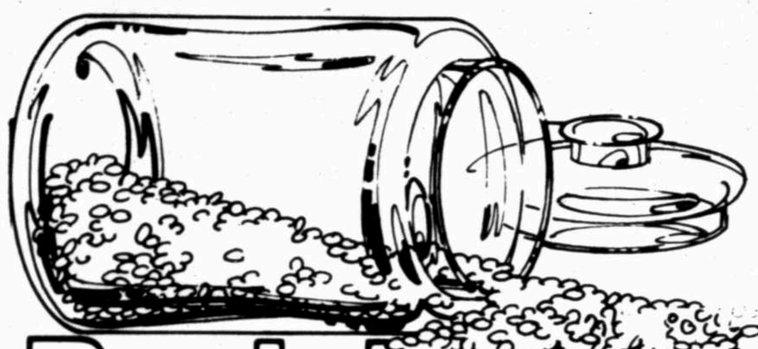

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia (AP) — Seven ethnic Albanians were sentenced to prison terms of from two to seven years Saturday in connection with nationalist riots last spring in Kosovo province, the official Tanjug news agency reported.

The latest sentences brought to 57 the number of persons sent to jail in a series of Kosovo-related trials over the last two weeks.

Tanjug said the district court of Pristina, the provincial capital, sentenced the seven as organizers of "hostile and counter-revolutionary" Albanian nationalist demonstrations May 5 in the town of Kacanik.

At least nine people were killed and more than 250 injured in the spring rioting. The government accused the rioters of trying to separate Kosovo from Yugoslavia and unite it with neighboring Albania.

Summer: A season of service

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

For some area youths summer is a time for lazy afternoons spent playing in the water sprinklers, riding bikes and, usually, becoming quite bored. But for one group of students, summer is quite a busy season.

These students, ranging in age from 14 to 21, involved in the Summer Youth Employment Program have been active in keeping up with summer school and part-time jobs. According to Kathy Bernstein, a summer counselor employed by the Midland/Martin county office of the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, the program here is very successful.

"The success is shown by the number of young kids in the program," Bernstein said. "After we've placed the older kids in jobs for a couple of summers they don't need our help anymore. They've had enough experience to find good jobs on their own."

Since the federally funded program began in 1965, the area has benefitted by having thousands of its youths employed. These students have provided tremendous services to various public and private businesses while earning extra incomes helpful to their families or in continuing their educations.

According to the SYEP manual, purpose of the program is to provide public service through part-time employment and stress both job experience and education as prerequisites to a successful future career.

"WE JUST TRY to give the kids actual work experience and get them to think about the future," Ms. Bernstein said.

CETA sends out brochures and advertises in the newspaper, and representatives go to schools with economically deprived students to tell them about the summer program. The students then contact the counselors who try to place them in jobs that suit their interests. Some of the jobs are developed in private businesses while others are with public businesses, such as day care centers, the United Way of Midland, Mental Health-Mental Retardation and the City of Midland.

The Home Repair Program is sponsored by the Human Relations Council. Two carpenters, Valentine Reyes and L.S. Littlejohn, locate elderly or handicapped persons whose homes are left over from the Christmas in April program and still need minor repairs. The men each supervise a crew of eight youths in the repairs. All equipment and supplies are furnished and the youths are paid.

CETA also has a program designed to give youths who have failed a course in the regular school year a chance to repeat the course in summer school. Youths are not accepted if they have played around during the school year or are just trying to get ahead in their classes. The problems must be legitimate and a recommendation from either a principal or a teacher is required.

This summer only two students participated in the program. The students attended summer school at Midland High School in the mornings and were placed at worksites in the afternoons.

ANOTHER PROGRAM designed to create greater educational and career opportunities for migrant and seasonal farmworkers is sponsored by CETA and takes place at Saint Edward's University in Austin.

To qualify, the student must have worked on a farm for a specified amount of hours during the past year. CETA sent four Midland students to Austin this summer.

The students were transported under CETA supervision to Austin where they lived on the Saint Edward's campus for the 8½ week program.

In the mornings, the students attended classes in math, English, history and reading. They were transported to various worksites in the Austin community in the afternoons to gain experience in their areas of interest.

All room, meal and health care expenses were paid by CETA. The students also received minimum wages while working 30 hours a week in the program.

The School of Architecture Summer Program also takes place in Austin and is only for students who have completed the 11th grade. CETA budgets $1,000 per student to attend the six week program. The program is designed to explain the broad range of skills and attitudes related to the profession of architecture through lectures, class work, informal discussions and field trips.

THE FOUR MIDLANDERS who participated in the program this summer lived in the Summer Academy residence halls located on The University of Texas Austin campus.

The classes met five days a week. Morning sessions included workshops in architectural drawing, building technology, history of architecture, studies of famous architects and their influences on the profession, design method and process, and surveys of fields related to architecture.

The afternoon sessions were devoted to a building design project which was compiled in a booklet form along with drawings done by the student to record the summer's experience. The students are given the opportunity to apply for acceptance into the University of Texas School of Architecture at the end of the program.

Summer isn't over yet for these students, though. There's one more thing to do.

The Summer Youth Employment Program's Award Banquet will be at 7 p.m. Tuesday in The Midland Hilton. Outstanding participants and the outstanding supervisor will be announced.

Bargain hunters going, going... to city auction

Wanna buy a firetruck real cheap? Have any need for an airport emergency crash truck? Well, does the city of Midland have a bargain for you!

The 1981 version of the city of Midland's annual auction is scheduled for Saturday at the Texas Municipal Garage on Carver and South Streets. Bidding will start at 10 a.m. and run until 1 p.m.

"This is really going to be a garage sale," explained Riley Brooks, the city's purchasing agent. But it won't be just any average sale — it'll be "high class," according to Hank Kirk, manager of fleet services.

Like any garage sale, the merchandise isn't brand new.

"It is either surplus or articles that are being replaced or updated," said Kirk. The city offices keep all articles on a retirement schedule and, he commented, "These units have come to their time."

Still, buyers should get good use from their purchases. "We can't give any warranties (on the goods)," explained Kirk, "but the schedule is such that there will be a lot of remaining time (for the customer to use the product)."

Age of the goods varies. The oldest item for sale is a 1958 powder and chemical airport crash truck, but there are also 1978 automobiles up for grabs. "I think we'll have more vehicles than we did last year," predicted Grant Walton, city finance director.

The city is also selling everything from hub caps and bicycles to typewriters and household appliances.

There's even a fire truck being put up for sale. Listed in inoperative condition and tagged for providing salvagable components, Fire Chief Raymond Lewis elaborated, "It's in good shape for the shape it's in."

Most of the merchandise will be on display throughout the week from 10 a.m. until 1 p.m. at the city garage, except for Saturday and Sunday. On the day of the auction, prospective buyers can get a birds-eye view of the goods until 10 a.m.

Sales will be "strictly by auction," said Kirk. "It's strictly what they want to pay — it's their choice." However, there will be an occasional minimum bid for certain items.

The auction will be conducted by Rene Bates, whom Kirk describes as "famous and colorful." Brooks added that Bates was considered "very professional in his work. He sells for many cities, counties and highway departments."

In 1979 the auction brought in $32,400 for the city. That sum increased in 1980 to over $33,600.

City officials have no way of knowing how much the 1981 auction will bring into the city's bank account, but they already know how they'll spend it. The money, according to Walton, "will be used to purchase new equipment."

People who take advantage of the bargains can pay by "cash or check," said Walton.

If vehicles are paid for by check, city officials at the auction will hold the titles until the check clears the bank. The buyer still will be able to drive his new purchase home because temporary license plates will be furnished. If paid for with cash, Walton explained, "We'll have the title ready that day."

The city of Midland opts for an auction over trading in its older equipment because "the city realizes more in the auction than trading in the equipment. That's why we have the auction with the idea that with the taxpayer's money, they'll realize more return with the auction," said Brooks.

Hank Kirk, manager of fleet services for the city of Midland, checks a title of one of the vehicles that will be up for sale in the city auction. Bidding will start at 10 a.m. Saturday at the city garage on Carver Street.

Remaining Midkiffs reunite at ranch

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

MIDKIFF — The Midkiff clan got together again down on the ranch. Some returned; others never left.

All told, six brothers showed up; once there were seven. Three sisters were there; once there were five.

Brothers Tyson, Thomas Oscar "Dick" Jr., Frank, Hunter, Sam Preston and Lige were in fellowship. Only Herd wasn't there. A farmer-rancher, he died at age 72 in 1971.

Daughters Nell Benedict, Dee Hanks and Gladys McDonald, all of Midland, joined in the annual celebration. Since departed are sisters Ann Jones, who died in 1979, and Jewell King, who died the following year.

The Midkiffs fellowshipped, which is to say they yakked and reminisced about the good and the bad in the good ol' days. They dined, which is to say they stuffed themselves with scrumptious vittles prepared by Frank's wife, Lou, and the other womenfolk.

Staff Photos by Ed Todd

Lige bears that out.

"I'm the seventh son of the seventh son, and the youngest of the bunch," said Lige, who figured he had something to brag about. "That's supposed to mean something; I don't know what."

He also came up with another observation, which may mean something: "All the sisters-in-law are alive, and all the brothers-in-law are dead."

And there was something else he was particularly proud of: Fay Wren Midkiff of Hawaii.

"She's the only cousin all of us got," boasted Lige. "(She's the) only (first) cousin on the Midkiff side."

Lige, who was born in 1920, drove down from Amarillo for the reunion on brother Frank Midkiff's 29-section spread.

Hunter, the oil man of the family, made the 30-minute drive from Midland to the reunion. Last year, 103 Midkiff clansmen showed up for the family affair. "That's grandkids and all," said Frank.

And then, last Sunday on reunion day, the Midkiff brothers and sisters got together. Frank looked about the ranch and spied brother Hunter moseying up to the ranch house just before dinner.

Once together, the brothers never seemed to tire of talking of the times past and of the first Midkiff coming to Midland County in the late 1800s.

"OUR DADDY came to Midland in 1895," said Tyson, the Rankin rancher who was born in Indian Territory in 1897 and who, at 83, is the oldest of the Midkiff lot.

Mother of the Midkiffs died 32 years later in 1972.

"She (Lilly) was born in Georgia and was raised in Indian Territory," said Lige. "She still had her Georgian accent when she died" at age 94.

One legacy left by T.O. and Lilly Midkiff is the ghost town, Midkiff, where a school and post office were established in 1902.

"That town over there was named after my daddy and mother," said Frank. His grandfather, John Rufus Midkiff, was Midkiff's first postmaster.

"There used to be Midkiff a long time ago," recalled Tyson. "That was in the horse-and-buggy days."

The community sort of faded away in the early 1900s. The town's name was rekindled about midcentury but on a different site. The original Midkiff was on a ranch in southeastern Midland County; the second Midkiff is in an oil field in northwestern Upton County.

That was in the 1950s, when the Spraberry Trend Area Oil Field was discovered. For awhile, the new boom town was called "Hadacol Corner" in northwest Upton County, but the town officially took on the name Midkiff at the insistence of Midland Postmaster Noel Oates.

"The government frowned on that patented medicine thing," Dick Midkiff said in referring to a brand of widely and wildly touted energy tonic, Hadacol, of the late 1940s and early 1950s.

THE MIDKIFFS LIVED on the ranch and in town.

"I used to know everybody in Midland a long time ago," sighed Tyson.

When the Midkiffs first rode into West Texas, the country was bare of a notorious shrub which has become a hardy hallmark of and cussed curse on West Texas ranching country.

"There wasn't no mesquite (then)," recalled Hunter.

The old-timers figure that the ornery mesquite got to West Texas by way of seeds in cattle hooves and dung. For years, the mesquite was well under control. But the ranchers changed that.

"When they killed all the prairie dogs," recalled Frank, "the mesquite came in (thick). They ate all the seeds."

At the time, the squirrel-like prairie dogs were vexing. They competed with the horses, cattle, sheep and goats for grasses. The 'dogs dug open burrows, and the livestock and horses often were tripped up by the holes or suffered broken legs. That naturally ticked off the ranchers and cowhands all around.

Of the six Midkiff brothers yet alive, four still ranch. Tyson ranches near Rankin; Frank has the spread around here; T.O. "Dick" ranches at Kerrville; Sam rides the range near Lamar, Colo. Brother Hunter is into oil in Midland; Lige, a retired insurance agent, works as a security guard in the Panhandle's Amarillo.

Next year, the Midkiffs plan on getting together again.

Chuckhole: It's more than unsightly

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

Chuckholes are like acne: unsightly and hard to get rid of.

They can also tear up cars and result in damage claims, as officials learned this week when former city police sergeant Jim McFadden lodged a complaint for $211 worth of damage he says his car sustained when it hit a chuckhole at the intersection of Alpine Street and Kansas Avenue the night of July 24.

In a registered letter to the city Aug. 5, McFadden alleges that the right rear wheel, tire and hubcap of the family's 1981 Buick were damaged as his son drove through the intersection and struck a hole that was obscured by water which had pooled up in the six-to-eight inch deep depression.

"The hole has been there at least two years that I know of from my work with the police department," said McFadden. "It's a recurring thing because the street is lower at that point and fills up with water. It just looks like a puddle — especially at night."

George Dunton has lived at 706 Alpine since 1966. He says he's called City Hall about the situation at least twice, and finally installed a wooden barricade himself the day after McFadden's car allegedly fell victim to the crater.

"It was too late to help Mr. McFadden, but I found an old barricade in the alley and put it up because we got tired of hearing cars thump as they ran through there," said Dunton. "You can hear them (from) the living room. It keeps you alert. To my knowledge, the city has never put up a barricade or sign."

Dunton isn't the only one who's complained. Sandra Merritt lives in a corner house almost directly across from the hole. An array of hubcaps decorates her front yard.

"I put them there for people to come back and pick up," she said. "We bought the house in February and have been trying to get the city to fix the hole ever since. They fixed it twice — once in May and then after (McFadden's) car hit it. But all they did was pour buckets of asphalt in on top of the water this last time. The hole is already forming again."

As of Friday afternoon, the makeshift repairs were losing their effectiveness. The hole stood two-to-three inches deep and there wasn't a barricade or warning sign in sight. Water from the sprinklers at nearby Lancaster Park trickled down the street and pooled up at the intersection. There was no way motorists could tell what awaited them beneath the gently lapping waves.

"We're not alone," said Dunton. "There are a lot of streets that go wanting. The city is probably short of manpower and there are a lot of other road projects to do.

"They usually dry it out before patching it. Not this time, though. I don't want to tell the city how to do things, but it seems like it would just take a little time and effort to tear it out, re-bed the street, resurface it and be done with it."

Officials are reluctant to talk about the situation because it involves pending litigation. Said a spokesman for the city attorney's office Friday: "I have no response, other than to say we're investigating the matter."

Contacted at home Saturday, Public Works Director Fred Baker said he didn't have access to the files and that it would be "impossible to comment until I know more about it. I'd need to ascertain the facts."

It's wet and wild

A hubcap-deep chuckhole lies in wait for hapless motorists at the intersection of Alpine Street and Kansas Avenue. One alleged victim of the hole has filed a $211 damage claim against the city. At left, a temporary barricade put up by a resident sits in the chuckhole, while a hubcap sits in a neighbor's yard awaiting its owner.

I would appreciate it if you could give me some information on a couple of things.

First: How can I clean some stains off an antique marble top table?

Second: Is there anyone in Midland who gives crochet lessons in the day time? I do not drive at night, so the ones out at the college leave me out. Thank you. — Mrs. J.M. Welsch

ANSWER: In The Reporter-Telegram's Hints from Heloise column (Aug. 4, 1981) the following information was presented on cleaning stains from marble.

It suggests that if the surface of the marble is merely etched, a good rubdown with a marble polishing powder, such as tin oxide, should take care of the problem. It also says this powder is available in marble shops.

"Organic Stains are those caused by wine, tea or coffee, fruit, tobacco, or colors leached from textiles or paper. Soak the poultice in hydrogen peroxide (20 volume) or full strength household ammonia.

"Oil Stains are caused by butter, milk, cream, salad oils, hand lotions, etc. Soak these in a poultice of amyl acetate or acetone.

"Rust Stains can be caused by flower pots or cans — any metal which rusts. Soak the poultice in a commercial iron rust remover to remove them. As the marble's sheen is usually dulled or even etched by this treatment, you will need to use the marble polishing powder afterwards."

If your table does not respond to these suggestions, have it professionally refinished.

As for crochet lessons in the day time, the Needlenook at 2207 N. Big Spring St. takes individuals for lessons during the day at no charge, if the student purchases merchandise from the shop. To arrange for classes call 682-8166.

I have been trying to get the city of Midland to pick up trash which was placed by the dumpster behind my house for the citywide cleanup campaign which began in the early spring.

I have checked with the Sanitation Department several times and have been told the trash would be picked up, but it is still there. Can you help? — F.Y.

ANSWER: A check was made by Answer Line with the city's Sanitation Department. We were told that the cleanup campaign started by the Midland Chamber of Commerce was turned over to the city. The collection of trash was started, but due to a shortage of equipment and manpower, the project was delayed. There also was a misunderstanding as to the time limit Midlanders had to contact the city for the removal of trash.

The department spokesman says addresses of persons who have contacted them about collection are on file, and efforts are underway to remedy the situation.

Someone alleged they are one and the same. Are they?

Your non-biased help is appreciated. — S.W.

ANSWER: A check with a local nurseryman revealed there is, to his knowledge, no relation between the two.

This was confirmed by Charles Green, Midland County extension agent — agriculture, who said "Agent Orange" and "Round Up" are not even in the same chemical family. The chemical used in Vietnam is a defoliant, while "Round Up" is a herbicide.

"Round Up," he said, has been used very successfully and with no problems to date. Green, who uses the herbicide himself, said that many farmers also are using it. He pointed out that with "Round Up" there is no danger of the chemical harming the soil. Meaning, it can be used around trees, etc., without the danger of it causing ill effects if watered into the soil.

Green did say it is important, as with all such products, to follow the directions on the container.

Proposed one-way street system

City Council

In the mind of the Midland City Council, there's only one way to go — on streets, that is. But before the council can switch certain streets in the downtown area to one-way, it will hear pros and cons from the citizens in a public hearing at 5 p.m. Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers.

That public hearing, however, will follow a second public hearing — also set up for 5 p.m. — on the proposed city tax rate of 39.5 cents per $100 valuation. During the July 28 meeting, the council said it would conduct the tax hearing before the session on one-way streets.

The one-way street idea isn't new. In fact, the council had decided to pair two sets of streets for one-way traffic in February 1979. But so many citizens and businessmen protested that the city backed off from the measure and threw the idea into a dark closet.

The idea was taken out and dusted off recently after a traffic consultant reported that some downtown streets, and especially Big Spring Street, aren't going to be capable of handling increased traffic by 1990.

Under the proposal, streets carrying traffic westward will be Louisiana Avenue, Illinois Avenue and Wall Street. Thoroughfares taking traffic eastward will be Michigan Avenue, Texas Avenue and Missouri Avenue.

Streets going one-way north will be Big Spring Street and Loraine Street. Traffic will be directed southward on Marienfeld Street and Colorado Street.

The one-way proposal also includes installing new traffic signals at various intersections to move the vehicles faster.

The tax rate of 39.5 cents could be officially adopted, or even changed to a different figure, during the hearing Tuesday. The council first had announced the tax rate for 1981-82 would be 41.42 cents, but dropped it during the July 28 session.

Part of that 20-plus percent increase in taxes will go to pay off a lawsuit and the rest will go for street repairs.

In other action, the city will consider accepting a bid from The First National Bank of Midland for the land on which is located the Midland County Public Library. The facility is owned jointly by the city and county, and the bid must be approved by both bodies.

When opened last week, it was revealed that First National Bank is offering $701,240 for the land and will throw in $5.5 million for construction of a new library elsewhere.

Also on the agenda, the council will hear a report at 10:30 a.m. from Communication Advisors, Inc. on a plan to upgrade City Hall's telephone system.

The panel will consider awarding a contract for 10 new buses for MidTran, the city's public transportation system. This will more than double MidTran's number of working vehicles. The system began in 1979 with seven buses.

In addition, the council will consider plans for remodeling the unfinished portion of the basement in Midland Center and authorize advertising for bids, and will look at bids for a diesel-powered fire truck to replace the one recently wrecked.

Zoning hearings will include requests by Northgate Joint Venture for smaller lots in the housing segments and by L.W. Bryant for a Planned District for a housing development. Action should be taken on Carlton Beal's request for a heliport on top of the BTA building at 104 S. Pecos St.

Other items include considering a proposed major street plan, hearing a proposal from the U.S. Postal Department for a substation system, establishing routes for hazardous materials and truck routes throughout the city, setting up an Industrial Development Corporation and amending an ordinance to allow disabled salespersons with permits to use freight loading zones.

County Commissioners Court

What to do about taxes, the library and precinct lines will be dealt with on Monday, when the Midland County Commissioners' Court holds two public hearings amid its regular meeting.

And the court is to make a decision on accepting The First National Bank of Midland's offer to, in essence, build a $5.5-million public library and to purchase the existing library property for $701,000.

The public hearing on adopting the county's 1982 budget of about $7 million and increasing the tax rate by 18 percent will be held at 1:30 p.m. Monday in the Commissioners' Courtroom in the courthouse.

The five-member court, who will convene at 10 a.m. Monday, also will reconsider the bank's $701,240 bid for the land on which the downtown Midland County Public Library and old American Legion-Summer Mummers Building rests and for the old parking lot to the immediate south. That offers extends to the city of Midland, which claims title to 2½ of the 12 lots comprising the half-block of library property.

The court is to further discuss accepting the bank's offer to contribute $5.5 million toward construction of a new three-story public library, which would harmonize with the bank's Eagle Plaza concept. Where the library now rests would be a park plaza.

The bank proposes to construct its Eagle Plaza, replete with one, and possibly two, 40-story buildings in the vicinity of the exisiting library at 301 W. Missouri Ave.

At 7 p.m. Monday in the Midland County Courtroom, the court is to hold a public hearing on redistricting the four commissioner precincts to conform with the Voting Rights Act.

Two plans, including one which places the predominantly black-Hispanic eastern part of the city into one precinct, have been proposed to replace the present precinct boundaries.

In other business, the court is to:

—Consider easement for railroad spur across County Road 119-West.

—Consider resolution authorizing a construction barricade and sign replacement program between Midland County and the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation.

—Consider Sheriff Dallas Smith's overtime payments to deputies.

—Consider accepting a plat of Section 26, Subdivision 2.

School Trustees

Midland Independent School District board of trustees' regular meeting will be Tuesday at 1:30 p.m. in the Administration Building, 702 North N St.

Agenda items include consideration of bids for construction of the Midland High School band hall, requests by the YMCA and the Greater Midland Football League to use school campuses for football programs, report on the development of policies and criteria for the promotion and retention of pupils, consideration of plans for providing health insurance coverage, consideration of possible procedures for selecting a name for the new elementary school in northwest Midland and a quotation of costs to replace the ceiling material in the large gymnasium at Lee Freshman High School.

Other items include a consideration of recommendations on meal prices for cafeteria operation and recommendations concerning bidding and reporting procedures for the food service operation.

Planning Commission

The Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission will meet 1:30 p.m. Wednesday in the conference room at the PBRPC office building at Midland Air Terminal.

The agenda includes a resolution authorizing Ernie Crawford, the executive director, to submit an application for $30,000 to the Department of Housing & Urban Development for the 1981-82 planning funds.

The commission also will consider a resolution accepting the review and comments of the Regional Development Review Committee on the application from Univestors and BMS Joint Venture of Odessa to HUD for an environmental review of the Colonial Hills subdivision in northeast Midland.

A final consideration will be a resolution granting permission to the Permian Basin Area Agency on Aging for the purchase of a 15-passenger van.

Allen Dwayne Hartley, pleaded guilty to burglary of a building on Sept. 21, 1980. Defendant sentenced to five years in prison and credited with 30 days spent in jail.

Probations

Daniel Cantu, pleaded guilty to aggravated assault by threat with a deadly weapon on April 12, 1981. Defendant placed on probation for five years and ordered to pay $1,785.15 in restitution.

Donald Anthony Martinez, pleaded guilty to unauthorized use of a motor vehicle. Defendant placed on probation under a deferred judgment for two years and ordered to pay $940 in restitution.

Case Dismissed

Jack Friday, found guilty by jury of possession of an explosive weapon on Sept. 27, 1980, and, adjudged an habitual criminal, was sentenced to life in prison in 1981. Defendant released on parole in 1975. Later that year, defendant pleaded guilty to murdering Wayne Washburn on Aug. 16, 1975. Defendant once again sentenced to life in prison. The 'explosive weapon' case which netted the defendant his first life sentence in 1981 was dismissed on grounds that defendant Friday was 'effectively deprived of his right of appeal.' His defense attorney apparently had not sought an appeal, no statement of facts (court evidence) was ordered, and the court reporter at the trial in 1981 has since died and his notes are lost and/or untranscribable and the executive records of the offense have been stolen, destroyed or lost. Subsequently, the district attorney moved to have the case dismissed rather than to seek a new trial.

Indictments Dismissed

Ronald Rothenberger, indictment for theft of property on Oct. 23, 1979, dismissed. Defendant re-indicted.

Tim Whitehurst, indictment for criminal mischief on March 19, 1981, dismissed. Defendant is in Washington State. Evidence indicates that 'while there is evidence that this defendant had the motive and means to have committed this crime, there is no way to exclude every hypothesis other than the guilt of this defendant.'

Henry Sanchez, also known as Enrique B. Sanchez, indictment on two counts of indecency with child on May 28, 1980, and on Aug. 21, 1979, dismissed. Defendant was deemed legally insane when alleged offenses were committed.

Cleo Wright, indictment for unauthorized use of a motor vehicle on March 25, 1981, dismissed. Victim has signed an affidavit of non-prosecution and does not want the vehicle back.

Joe Dolores Duran, indictment for aggravated assault on Feb. 9, 1981, dismissed. Defendant found guilty by jury of indecency with child, was adjudged an habitual criminal and was sentenced to life in prison.

Sammy Busby, indictments for burglary of a habitation on June 5, 1980, and on April 16, 1981, dismissed. Defendant sentenced to two concurrent five-year prison terms for bail jumping in 1978 and for robbery on March 6, 1981.

Lucinda 'Cindy' Lang, indictment for theft of property on June 18, 1981, dismissed. Defendant re-indicted.

Teresa M. Flores, indictment for theft of property on May 23, 1981, dismissed. Defendant pleaded guilty to a lesser offense in Midland County Court.

Sandra M. Subia, indictment for theft of property on May 23, 1981, dismissed. Defendant pleaded guilty to a lesser offense in Midland County Court.

Convictions Set Aside

Lynn Swinford Talbot, successfully served two years of a two-year probation for criminal mischief in 1979. Defendant discharged from the court's jurisdiction. Indictment dismissed.

Ricky Don Parsley, successfully served two years of a two-year probation for criminal mischief in 1979. Defendant discharged from the court's jurisdiction. Indictment dismissed.

Charles Alsobrook, successfully served five years of a five-year probation for impersonating a peace officer in 1975. Defendant discharged from the court's jurisdiction. Indictment dismissed.

He calls Midland 'growingest' city

By BILL MODISETT
Staff Writer

Bill Bowen can see testimony of Midland's growth all around him. He can see it in the men and women who work with him, in the cars and trucks they repair and in the metal buildings that have sprung from the earth around them.

Bowen, director of the City Municipal Services Center and Garage, calls Midland "one of the growingest cities in the state." That it is.

Bowen, who's been with the city garage 23 years, retired July 31. He has some fond memories of his work with the city, but that all began a long time ago. He was working for the old W.L. Johnson Machine Co. in Midland in 1958 when it was sold, and he cast his lot with the city garage.

When Bowen began working for the city garage, there were only seven employees — himself, three mechanics and three service people. These seven worked on the city's 138 vehicles in one building, utilizing a budget of about $350,000.

Times have changed, Bowen noted, and the statistics reveal the Tall City's growth. There now are 25 employees, who work in the four buildings in the city garage compound. The annual budget for the facility is about $2.5 million and employees work on about 515 units — everything from city police cars to sanitation trucks to the vehicles driven by city officials.

Bowen ranked sanitation trucks as the most troublesome vehicles the garage works on, primarily because they suffer the roughest use due to the nature of the sanitation department's work.

But the biggest change in the last 23 years, Bowen believes, has involved police vehicles. Several years ago, Midland Police Department adopted smaller patrol cars. Bowen says the change to the smaller cars significantly reduced problems previously encountered with police vehicles. There's less maintenance, he noted.

The Denton native calls himself a "natural born mechanic and welder" who never had formal training. During his career he has specialized in diesel mechanics.

Bowen's replacement is Wm. "Hank" Kirk of Kokomo, Ind. Kirk holds a degree in marketing and journalism from Indiana University, and has been in this line of work for more than 25 years.

Bowen sees no way but up for Midland. "I don't see any limitations in the next 20 years," he commented.

And, he noted, the city has the leadership to be successful. "I think we have some of the highest qualified management that you could find."

Bowen and his wife, Julia, plan to remain in Midland and to "take it easy."

Col. Ron Raney, Texas Wing Commander for the Civil Air Patrol, presents a certificate of appreciation to Pauniece Oglesby, member of Southwestern Bell's Service Community Action Team (SCATeam), after the SCATeam donated a company surplus van to the squadron.

Van serves as vital link to communications team

The Odessa Composite Squadron Civil Air Patrol, an official civilian auxiliary of the Air Force which has assisted in search and rescue missions ranging from tornadoes to plance crashes, now has a more efficient means of communications during rescue missions.

The Midland/Odessa Service Community Action Team (SCATeam), a volunteer community service arm made up of area Southwestern Bell employees, secured an obsolete surplus company van and donated it to the squadron.

"We're going to use the van as a ground communications vehicle during our rescue missions so we can have air-to-ground communications," explained Tom Todd, squadron commander for the volunteer organization. "We're very grateful to receive the van. We'll really be able to put the vehicle to good use in the community.

"In the past our ground crew has had to travel by car," he continued. "Now we can station several of our CPR-trained cadets in the communications vehicle."

Todd added that the 50-member squadron has recently assisted American Red Cross and Department of Public Safety rescue efforts after plane crashes near Iraan and Alpine, and secured arrangements for a local cancer patient to travel to Dallas and receive treatment. The squadron works primarily in Texas, but has traveled to New Mexico on occassion.

Explained SCATeam chairperson Larry Theleman, "Our technicians are busy people and drive their vans pretty hard. There comes a time when the van is still in running condition, but it can no longer withstand our heavy driving load. We're just happy that we were able to give the van to a worthy group like the Odessa Composite Squadron."

Leadership Midland panel seeks participants for planning program

Leadership Midland, in its fourth year, is taking applications for the program, which is designed to give interested men and women with leadership potential the opportunity to develop their knowledge of the city.

The program, sponsored jointly by the Midland Chamber of Commerce and Midland College, was established to find and help develop future leadership for the city.

Forty individuals will be selected for the course, which will provide intensive training for leadership in areas strategic to the city's well-being.

Applicants who demonstrate management and/or leadership ability, show an interest in community affairs and have time and talent to offer the community will be eligible.

John Grimland, chairman of the advisory committee, said with the tremendous influx of new people and the quick tempo in Midland there is undoubtedly much potential for developing a pool of informed, aware persons who can become involved in the various areas of community service.

Participants in the program should be able to commit themselves to participate one full day on the second Thursday of each month for nine months. These sessions provide information on the city through lectures, dialogue between participants and community decision makers and tours of various community facilities.

Topics cover city concerns of regional economy, public education, decision-making processes, tools of leadership, cultural and recreational facilities and organizations, social and charitable agencies, government and criminal justice, housing and employment, problems of aging, poverty and youth concerns.

Applicants will be chosen by an anonymous admissions committee. Each individual selected for participation in Leadership Midland or that person's employer, will be asked to pay a fee of $275 for the program. Partial scholarships will be available on a limited basis for qualified applicants who may require assistance.

The applications must be returned to the chamber office, Leadership Midland Recruitment Committee, P.O. Box 1890, by Aug. 28. Successful applicants will be notified within two weeks.

Fernando to test AL's Jack Morris

CLEVELAND (AP) — Rookie sensation Fernando Valenzuela of the Los Angeles Dodgers and veteran Jack Morris of the Detroit Tigers were named Saturday as the starting pitchers for the 52nd All-Star baseball game, delayed nearly a month by the strike of major league players.

Managers Dallas Green of the World Champion Philadelphia Phillies for the National League and Jim Frey of the Kansas City Royals for the American League announced their starting pitchers and opening lineups for tonight's game as the baseball community gathered for a resumption of the season which was interrupted by the seven-week strike.

VALENZUELA and Morris had each won nine games before June 12, when the players walked out in a dispute with management over free-agent compensation.

Green said he would open with Phillies first baseman Pete Rose leading off. Rose tied Stan Musial's National League career rrecord of 3,630 hits the day before the strike began. He will be shooting for the record when the regular season resumes Monday night.

Behind the Phillies' first basemap, Green said he would bat shortstop Dave Concepcion of the Cincinnati Reds. Pittsburgh's Dave Parker will be in right field, batting third. Third baseman Mike Schmidt of the Phillies bats cleanup, followed by left fielder George Foster of Cincinnati and center fielder Andre Dawson of Montreal. Catcher Gary Carter of Montreal will bat seventh, followed by Los Angeles second baseman Davey Lopes and Valenzuela, or, as Green referred to him, "the state of Mexico."

Frey said the AL lineup would start with California first baseman Rod Carew, followed by second baseman Willie Randolph of the New York Yankees and third baseman George Brett of the Royals.

New York's Dave Winfield will bat fourth and play center field, followed by Ken Singleton of Baltimore in left field and Reggie Jackson of the Yankees in right field.

CHICAGO CATCHER Carlton Fisk, shortstop Bucky Dent of the Yankees, and Morris complete the AL starting lineup.

Green said he looked forward to his first All-Star managing assignment.

"For a guy who doesn't want to manage, a lot has happened in one year," he said. "This is special. It almost got away from me but we made it."

Green said choosing his 30-man squad was difficult.

"I've made some mistakes but I back off to no one on this club," he said. "It's a good one and I'm proud to be a part of it."

Frey said the American League team "could be a 45-man roster as far as I'm concerned. It was a numbers game. I've got a dining room table full of statistics. I picked the team basedon the performances in the first few months and I tried to do the best I could."

Green said he would use each pitcher on his staff for no more than one inning and that Tom Seaver of the Cincinnati Reds would follow Valenzuela.

Frey did not limit himself to one inning per pitcher and said Cleveland's Len Barker would be his second hurler. Earlier this season, Barker pitched the first perfect game in the major leagues in 13 years when he defeated the Toronto Blue Jays at Cleveland Stadium, site of Sunday night's game.

There was one roster change announced, with New York Yankees' reliever Rich Gossage scratched because of a bad shoulder and replaced by teammate Ron Davis.

Morris said he was surprised to be picked as the starting pitcher for the American League in his first All-Star appearance.

"It's probably the biggest thrill of my life, I'm all excited about it," he said.

Morris depends on three pitches: fastball, slider and changeup.

Brett, the AL batting champion and most valuable player last season, compared playing the All-Star Game after an eight-week layoff to coming back from a long injury.

Dodgers leave in first place

Rodas continues mastery over Cubs

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

The only goal Rick Rodas had at the start of the season was to "try to pitch respectable ball." After the San Antonio lefthander beat the Midland Cubs 8-4 with a route-going 11-hitter at Cubs Stadium Saturday night, he was probably the most respectable pitcher in the Texas League.

His win not only gave the Dodgers the series, 3-2, but raised his record to 13-3 for the season and it was his third win in four decisions against Midland.

Rodas also was the winner in that 34-8 massacre and blanked the Cubs 5-0 another time while Midland's lone win was a 2-1 squeaker.

MIKE ZOURAS led the Dodgers attack with four hits, including his ninth homer, while Leo Hernandez hit his 20th homer to open the fifth, which was the finishing blow for Midland starter Craig Lefferts. Lefferts walked the next batter and departed trailing 7-3.

Rodas experienced a shaky start, giving up three runs and six hits in the first three innings, including Mel Hall's 21st homer in the third. But the Cubs couldn't apply the finishing wallop when they had the lefthander from Sacramento, Calif., on the ropes.

"I COULDN'T get my curve over in the early innings and I was just trying to stay ahead of the hitters and keep the ball low," he said, admitting he had a little trouble adjusting to the mound.

But the season has gone better for Rodas than he ever dreamed after spending the entire 1980 season on the disabled list. Following a 12-0 season at Lethridge in rookie ball in 1979, "I developed a blood clot on my shoulder last year. They found I had an extra rib. So they operated to give the vein and nerve more room. When this season started, I really didn't know what to expect. I just wanted to pitch respectable ball."

He did get in 22 innings last fall at Scottsdale in the Instructional League and now is 25-3 since turning pro out of Sacramento City College.

THE CUBS, who now face Amarillo in five Cubs Stadium games, scored in the first when Javier Fierro doubled and Mel Hall singled. Carmelo Martinez singled, Fritz Connally doubled and Carmelo scored on a wild pitch in the second. Martinez was on third and Connally on second when Manager Ducky LeJohn ordered Randy LaVigne intentionally walked to load the bases, perhaps because it was the percentage move and perhaps he was influenced by the nine rbi Randy had in the series. Any way, it paid off, Rodas uncorned a wild pitch, but got Mike Shepston and David Pagel on strikes to end the threat.

HALL'S homer went over the scoreboard in left. Martinez then walked and Connally singled, but second baseman Steve Sax stuck out his glove and found Joe Carter's smoking liner to retire the side. And that was the last Midland threat until the ninth when LaVigne singled and Fierro drove him home.

San Antonio took the lead for good with a four-run, six-hit third and finally chased Lefferts in the fifth. Randy Clark came in and pitched four-hit, one run ball over the last five innings, but the Midland offense, which outscored San Antonio 52-40 for the series, couldn't solve Rodas.

Packers spill Dallas, 21-17

IRVING, Texas (AP) - Quarterback Lynn Dickey threw two first half touchdown passes and the Green Bay Packers beat back a Dallas rally Saturday night to earn a 21-17 National Football League preseason victory over the Cowboys.

Dickey completed 13 of 18 passes for 196 yards in the first half as the Packers built a 21-7 lead. It was Green Bay's first preseason victory in two years.

Dickey began picking on the Dallas secondary late in the first quarter. Finding James Lofton far behind cornerback Steve Wilson, Dickey completed a 49-yard pass to the Packer wide receiver to the Cowboys' 4-yard line.

On the next play, Dickey found running back Steve Atkins all alone for an easy touchdown pass.

The red-hot Dickey completed eight passes in a row during one stage of the second quarter as the Packers charged up and down the field against Dallas starters and substitutes alike.

A 25-yard pass to Fred Nixon and Nixon's 13-yard run on a reverse setup Eddie Lee Ivery's 2-yard scoring run to give the Packers a 14-0 lead with 3:37 to play in the half.

Cornerback Mark Lee intercepted a Glenn Carano pass and returned it 19 yards to the Dallas 35 to put the Packers in position for their third touchdown.

Dickey passed 27 yards to Lofton then flipped a 5-yard scoring pass to wide receiver Audra Thompson for a

Raider comeback defeats Atlanta

OAKLAND (AP) — Arthur Whittington ran 41 yards for a touchdown late in the third period, completing an Oakland comeback which gave the Super Bowl champion Raiders a 17-16 exhibition victory over the Atlanta Falcons Saturday night.

Atlanta, 0-2 in National Football League preseason play, drove to the Oakland 12-yard line late in the final quarter but placekicker Tim Mazzetti missed a 30-yard field goal attempt. Early in the game, Mazzetti missed an extra point attempt.

Midland girls win national title

HOBBS, N.M. — The Midland girls won the United Girls Softball Association National Division IV Tournament Saturday, but needed to play Virginia twice to do it.

In the championship game against Virginia, Midland, which had not lost a game, suffered a 4-1 defeat and had to play a second game later in the afternoon. Midland won the second battle 6-5 to win the title.

Two girls from the Midland squad were named to the All-Tournament team, Suzanne McGaha and Tonya Burton. Burton was the winning pitcher in the championship game.

In other tournament action, Odessa defeated Virginia 8-3 to win the Division III title.

Connally, Pagle fielding, hitting well for Cubs

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

A pair of players on the Midland Cubs are proving they have the talent to play in AA ball and maybe have a future in the AAA and possibly the Major Leagues. They protect the left side of the infield from opposing hitters and are making big contributions when they come up to bat.

They are third baseman Fritz Connally and shortstop Dave Pagel.

Connally, a native of Pasadena, Texas, played college ball for Baylor University and Pagel is from Blissfield, Mich., and was a star for Central Michigan University.

"Fritz Connally is relatively new to the game," said Cubs' manager George Enright. "This is his first full year in the pros. He's a big kid with a ton of potential and he can hit the ball out of just about every ball park he plays in."

And big he is. Connally stands 6-foot-3 and weighs 210 pounds, and with that size he can send the ball flying.

"He has more than one asset," said Enright. "He can hit and he can hit with power and he has very sure hands at third base in making the routine plays. That's something you don't see in every ball player that comes along. Some are weak at bat and great on the field and vise versa."

When asked what he felt was the strongest part of his game, Connally replied "hitting is probably my strongest and my fielding next. I don't run very fast, but I get by."

Since Connally's arrival in Midland, the Cubs have picked up a lot of steam and are battling the San Antonio Dodgers for the lead in the second half race and Enright credits a lot of that success to his third baseman.

"I really feel that when we acquired him, it did make the team solid," said Enright. "He came to us around the first of June and at that time the Cubs weren't fairing too well. I'm not saying that one man made the team turn around, but he did help make the difference."

"In the first half we weren't doing well and we weren't getting the great crowds," said Connally. "In the second half we're doing better and the crowds are better. Good Crowds."

Shortstop Dave Pagel, who is hitting at a .271 pace going into Saturday's game, also likes the crowds of the second half of the season.

"The people are good," said Pagel. "They pass the hat around after a player hits a home run and I've never seen that before. I like Midland. It's got by far the nicest field I've played on and the team sure has a great hitting lineup. No matter how far behind we are, we can catch up".

Pagel has been in the Cubs lineup a month and he's had to regain the feel of shortstop since the Cubs' organization had him working out at catcher for a year, a position that didn't work out well for him.

"I signed as a shortstop and played the first half of the season in the New York Penn League as a shortstop," said Pagel. "Halfway through the season, the Cubs decided to make me a catcher I and finished the season at that position. I went to the Instructional League in Arizona after the season was over. In Quad Cities, I wasn't doing real well so they decided to give me another shot in the infield."

And the return to shortstop has helped his game. "There's not as much mental strain at shortstop as there is at catcher," he said. "A lot of people think a catcher is just some big dummy they stuck behind the plate, but the catcher probably has more responsibility than any other player on the field."

Pagel feels the strongest part of his game is his "arm, according to the scouts. In college it was my hitting. I try to get every part of the game together, not just the part that I'm good at. You've got to make yourself a complete player."

According to Enright, the return to shortstop has been good for Pagel. "He's responded well and he makes all the plays defensively," he said. "He hit .220 in A ball, catching was a strain. We brought him up here and let him play the position he was familiar with and now he's hitting around .280 and that's in a higher league."

Nelson charges to PGA front

DULUTH, Ga. (AP) — Larry Nelson, a quiet little man from nearby Acworth, Ga., reeled off a string of three consecutive birdies on the way to a 4-under-par 66 and surged into 4-stroke command Saturday in the third round of the 63rd PGA national championship.

Nelson's exploits — performed before a huge, delighted gallery of friends, neigbors and relatives — and Jack Nicklaus' inability to generate anything resembling a move at the leaders seriously damaged any hopes the "Golden Bear" may have had of making a successful title defense in this, the last of the year's major tests of golfing greatness.

Nicklaus, seeking a record sixth PGA crown and 18th major professional title, could do no better than a 71 that left him at 210, even par and 8 shots off the pace going into Sunday's final round.

The 41-year-old Nicklaus was very much aware of the difficulties facing him in the quest for his first victory in 12 months.

"I'll have to shoot in the mid-60s tomorrow to have a chance," he said. "Whatever Nelson does is the dictating factor to the rest of the field."

Nelson, once an illustrator at an aircraft factory in the Atlanta suburbs, put together a leading, 202 total, 8 strokes under par on the Atlanta Athletic Club course, a difficult layout that plays much longer than its listed 7,070 yards.

His 54-hole total tied the record for PGA championship play, set by Ray Floyd in 1969.

Nelson, winner of four tournaments over the last 2½ seasons and gunning for the first major title in an unusual career, took command with a 20-foot putt on the 11th hole, the first of three consecutive birdies for the slightly-built, soft-spoken 33-year-old.

And, just as he began to move to joyous shouts and yells of his gallery, the other contenders began to fade and left the tournament in his hands.

In the end, only free spirit Fuzzy Zoeller, the easy-going former Masters champion, could keep him in sight. Zoeller, winner of the Colonial National Invitation earlier this season, birdied the 17th hole for a 68 that left him at 206.

Tom Kite, golf's steadiest, most consistent performer this season with finishes of seventh or better in 10 of his last 11 starts, and Andy North, the big guy who has finished second in his last two starts, were another stroke back at 207. North had an erratic 70 that included four birdies and as many bogeys, and Kite shot 69 despite a ball in the water that led to a double-bogey on the 15th.

Bob Murphy, who had led the first two rounds, slipped to a 73 and was tied at 208 with Greg Norman, Bob Eastwood and Vance Heafner. Norman, the white-haired Australian who challenged in both the Masters and U.S. Open, had a 68. Eastwood shot a 72 that included a hole in one, a 3-iron shot that found the cup on the 210-yard fourth. Heafner shot 70.

Jerry Pate, who won the U.S. Open on this course in his rookie year of 1976, couldn't keep pace. Four strokes back and very much in contention when play started under gray, threatening skies that occasionally leaked a drizzling rain, Pate matched par 70 and was at 209.

Some other scores: Bruce Lietzke 70-211, Ray Floyd 71-212, Hale Irwin 68-213, British Open champion Bill Rogers 66-213, U.S. Open title-holder David Graham 74-218.

Tom Watson, the current Masters champ and Player of the Year for the past four seasons, missed the cut for the final two rounds.

Watson hit one in the water on 36th hole, made double-bogey and completed two rounds at 148. The cut was at 147. It wasn't set until Saturday morning, however, when 23 players who were stranded on the course by a Friday night storm came back to finish their rounds.

Nelson, winner of the Greensboro Open earlier this year, was 1 stroke off the pace when play started and, with Eastwood making an ace on the fourth, remained one back when he reached the turn in 1-under-par 34.

Larry Nelson is all smiles after a birdie on No. 7 in the PGA Championship. He was on his way to a 4-stroke lead with only today's round left. He owns an 8-under par score of 202 to take complete control of the tournament.

Stacy holds LPGA lead

WHEELING, W.Va. (AP) — Hollis Stacy, overcoming a possibly disastrous 18th hole, fired her second straight sub-par round with a 70 Saturday for a two-shot lead over Kathy Postlewait after two rounds of the $125,000 West Virginia LPGA Classic.

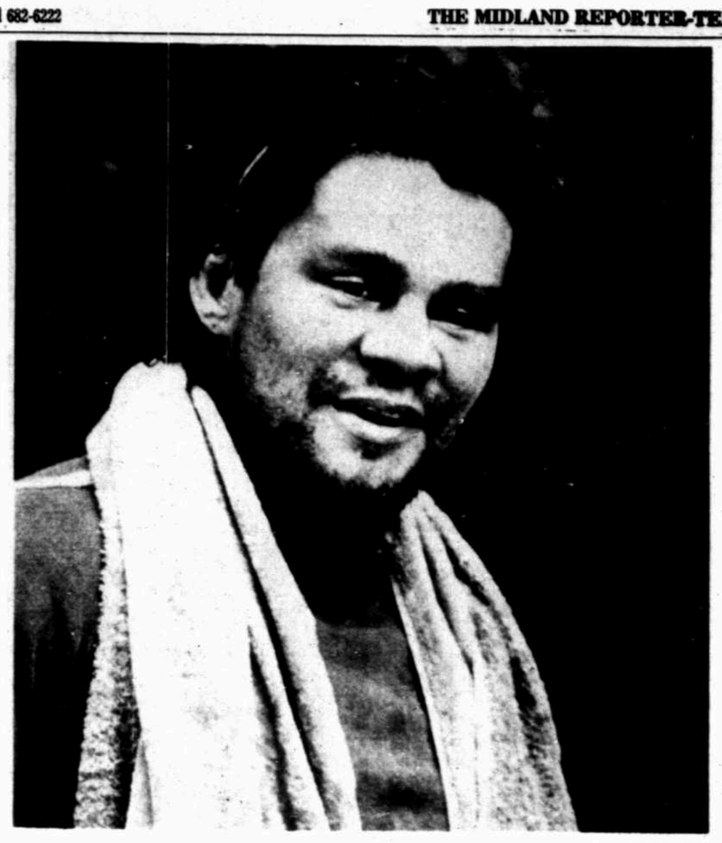

At one point during the second round, Stacy — with birdie putts of 10 feet apiece on the ninth and 10th holes — held a seven-shot lead over Postlewait. But on the final eight holes, Stacy lost two shots to par while Postlewait birdied three of the final eigmt holes.

Stacy held a three-shot lead over Postlewait going into the 18th hole, a dangerous 475-yard par 5 that was playing particularly tough because of a difficult pin setting on the front edge of the undulating green.

Putting from 20 feet for a birdie, Stacy's putt meandered down the green, rolled past the hole and wound up on thhe fringe of the green about 25 feet away from the cup. Stacy then played it safe, placing her par putt attempt to within two feet of the hole, then tapped home for a bogey.

Postlewait, who shot a 1-under 71 Saturday, missed a birdie putt from five feet that would have sliced Stacy's lead to one shot.

Boxer Roberto Duran says he only has to win to prove himself in today's bout with Nino Gonzalez in Cleveland. A stomach ache stopped Duran in his last fight with Sugar Ray Leonard.

Duran just wants a victory

CLEVELAND (AP) — Roberto Duran didn't look up from a magazine he was leafing through when a visitor asked, "Do you feel you have to prove yourself again because of what happened in New Orleans?"

"The only thing I have to prove is to win," said the man, who has won 72 times in 74 pro fights.

But, whether he feels he has to prove anything to the many fight fans who idolized him or to himself, Duran is not fighting Nino Gonzalez Sunday in the 9,000-seat Public Auditorium and on CBS-TV at 3:45 p.m. CDT just because he wants another victory.

His admitted goal is a third fight against Sugar Ray Leonard, even t rd has said he won't fight Duran again.

It was against Leonard last Nov. 25 in the New Orleans Superdome that Duran quit in the eighth round and lost the World Boxing Council welterweight championship.

Duran said stomach illness forced him to stop.

His action brought an avalanche of criticism and scorn down upon him. His utterance of "no mas, no mas (no more)" to the referee in New Orleans became a subject of jokes. The man called Hands of Stone was ridiculed as Heart of Jello.

In Panama, where he was a national hero, someone painted "Duran Traitor" on the wall of downtown Panama City building.

But Duran refused to hide. And he maintained that if he did fight again and felt the same way he would do the same thing he did in New Orleans.

"People booed me and criticized me, but I had no problems," he said before a recent training session. He also said he will have no problem regaining the intensity that made him such a feared fighter, the intensity that burned white hot the night he beat Leonard for the title in Montreal.

"I want to fight," said the man, who on the night he quit said he would never fight again. "At the time I said I was going to retire, I meant it," he said.

After New Orleans, Duran — who dominated the lightweight division (135-pound limit) in the 1970s — got heavier than usual. After winning the 147-pound class championship from Leonard his weight reportedly ballooned to 180.

The day after Duran's loss to Leonard, King said, "I don't intend to promote any Duran fights again."

Howe eyes revenge for snub

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston Astros third baseman Art Howe, not chosen for Sunday's major league All-Star Game in Cleveland although his .344 batting average leads the National League, figures getting even beats getting mad.

"Let's put it this way," Howe said Saturday when asked if he bore hard feelings toward Philadelphia manager Dallas Green, who will manage the National League team. "I'm looking forward to playing Philadelphia."

Howe led the league consistently before the 50-day strike began July 12. He was the National League's player of the month in May on the strength of a 23-game hitting streak and a .432 batting average for the month.

The balding infielder was actually snubbed twice. He was left off the computerized ballot used by the fans who vote on starters for the game because that list is made up months in advance.

Then Green failed to name him to the list of reserves.

"Green called me this morning and apologized," Howe said. "He said he'd made a mistake.

"But I don't think there's any excuse for that."

Green also called Astros manager Bill Virdon Friday.

"Green told me, 'I just messed up,'" Virdon said. "He said, 'I can't justify leaving Howe off the team. He deserved it. I can blame a lot of people, but it's my fault. I was probably making too many choices in too big a hurry.'"

Virdon quoted Green as saying he would pick Howe if there was any way he could change his roster. "But that's not possible now," Virdon said.

None of which comforts the 34-year-old Howe.

"One thing that bothers me is, if I don't make it this year, how can I ever expect to make it?"

Howe said he had no doubt the method of selecting all-star teams needs to be changed.

"I think everybody realizes that," he said. Among players fans named to start the game are the Los Angeles Dodgers' Dave Lopes, who is batting .169, and the New York Yankees' Reggie Jackson, hitting .199.

Baseball has not been very, very good to Howe. After a back injury ended his college football career, he programmed computers for Westinghouse and played sandlot ball.

A coworker took up his cause and contacted several major league teams, asking them to give Howe a tryout. The 22-year-old Howe went, he said, only "because my friend — his name is Bill Houser — had gone to so much trouble."

The tryout won him a place on Pittsburgh's lowest farm club and a salary cut to half what Westinghouse had paid him. He played six years of minor league ball before breaking into the majors in 1974 and going 0-for-9 in a doubleheader with the New York Mets.

Howe came to Houston as the "player to be named later" in a trade that sent veteran Tommy Helms to Pittsburgh. He played spottily as a utility infielder until getting a chance to start at third this year.

Now, Howe said, he is trying to forget about the All-Star Game.

"I've got to concentrate on the second half of the season, on winning the World Series," he said.

"This is just discouraging."

Shiaway St. Pat wins Hambletonian

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Shiaway St. Pat rallied in the stretch to score a neck victory over Super Juan in the fourth and final heat — a three-horse raceoff — Saturday to win the $838,000 Hambletonian Trot, which made its debut at the Meadowlands after 24 years in DuQuoin, Ill.

Driven by Ray Remmen, who also is his trainer, Shiaway St. Pat emerged from a record field of 24 to capture the 56th Hambletonian and $419,000 first prize for winning harness racing's most prestigious event.

Shiaway St. Pat, a gelded son of Tarpot Devlin-Patricia Sue and owned by the Shiawassee Farm of Durand, Mich., overtook Super Juan to complete the mile over a sloppy track in 2:02 1-5. He paid $4.40 to win. There was no place and show betting.

Olaf, who had won the first division, broke his stride and finished 10th in the third heat, and was third in the final. Driven by Carl Allen, he also broke stride at the start but gamely fought back and was in the lead with a quarter-mile to go before fading.

Shiaway St. Pat's victory ruined Howard Beissinger's attempt for his fourth Hambletonian victory. Beissinger, who drove Super Juan, had won the race in 1969 with Lindy's Pride, 1971 with Speedy Crown and 1978 with Speedy Somoli.

It was the seventh Hambletonian that was decided by a fourth heat, the last in 1976, when Steve Lobell won.

After Olaf, who finished 12 lengths behind second-place Super Juan in the last heat, scored a three-quarter length victory over Arnie's Aim in 2:03 4-5 in the first heat, Shiaway St. Pat took the second heat with a time of 2:02 3-5 for the mile. Shiaway St. Pat edged Banker Barker by 1¼ lengths.

Then the field was narrowed to 10, with the third heat raceoff pitting the top five in each division.

Shiaway St. Pat seemed to have the Hambletonian sewed up in the third heat before he was caught by the late-charging Super Juan, who beat him by a head in 2:01 1-5.

Jaeger destroys Ruzici for Clay Court crown

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — Teen-aged Andrea Jaeger, playing a steady and patient game from the baseline, defeated Romanian Virginia Ruzici 6-1, 6-0 Saturday for the U.S. Open Clay Court women's championship, her first major victory as a tennis professional.

"If you're going to win a match, you just go out and do whatever you have to do," Jaeger said of her constant high lobs against the frustrated Ruzici. "The last time I played her, I played stupid and she beat me. She likes to slug out every ball.

"I could have gone out and done that again and maybe it would have been a closer match, so why bother?"

Jaeger, rarely moving from the baseline, was in control throughout the match.

"In every game, the first couple of points are important," she said. "I just tried to win every point. I played every point like it was match point, because that's what you have to do to beat her (Ruzici)."

Ruzici saw things differently.

"Unfortunately, this was the most unattractive match I've played in my life," Ruzici said. "I tried absolutely everything."

Midland tennis duo eliminated

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M. — Midland's Sandra and Jill Bramlett, playing here in the Mother-Daughter Sectional Equitable Family Tennis Challenge, were eliminated in the first round of doubles competition.

Bum Phillips' new debut turns into 24-23 success

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Bennie Ricardo kicked a 35-yard field goal with 33 seconds left on the clock to give the New Orleans Saints a 24-23 victory over the Baltimore Colts in a National Football League opener for both teams.

The kick capped a bizarre fourth quarter rally that saw the Saints score twice on fumbled snaps as the Colts lined up to punt.

Earlier in the quarter, rookie linebacker Rickey Jackson recovered a fumbled snap in the end zone for a touchdown to put the Saints in position to win the game.

New Orleans got first-half touchdowns from running backs Toussaint Tyler, who scored on a 2-yard run, and Wayne Wilson, who swept in from 7 yards out.

It was a successful debut for new Coach Bum Phillips, previously the head man for the Houston Oilers.

The Colts had overcome a 14-9 halftime deficit with backup quarterback Greg Landry engineering two second-half touchdown drives for Baltimore.

The Colts' touchdowns came on a 3-yard run by rookie fullback Randy McMillan and on a 5-yard scoring toss from Landry to veteran running back Don McCauley.

Wright shines for Dolphins

BLOOMINGTON, Minn. (AP) — Rookies Brad Wright, a former standout at Midland Lee, and Tommy Vigorito combined on a 5-yard scoring pass and cornerback Ed Taylor returned an interception 28 yards for a touchdown as the Miami Dolphins opened their National Football League exhibition season with a 20-6 triumph over the Minnesota Vikings Saturday night.

The Dolphins, the first NFL team to report to training camp last month, completely dominated the ragged Vikings, who had been in camp just nine days.

Second-year quarterback David Woodley started for Miami and completed eight of 16 passes for 145 yards in the first half.

Wright and fellow rookie Jim Jensen, battling for the third quarterback spot behind Woodley and Don Strock, worked the second half for the Dolphins.

The Vikings, winners of the NFC Central Division last year, used their regulars for most of the first half, but fell behind 13-3 on Taylor's interception and a pair of field goals by Uwe von Schamann.

Cardinals stun San Diego

SAN DIEGO (AP) — St.Louis rookie quarterback Neil Lomax directed two fourth quarter drives to set up field goals by Neil O'Donoghue, rallying the Cardinals to a 12-10 National Football League exhibition victory over the San Diego Chargers Saturday night.

Defensive lineman Bill Acker preserved the victory, blocking Mike Woods' 33-yard field goal attempthat the final gun.

Sewells capture Father-Son lead

Ken and Kelly Sewell scored 108 points in the first round of the Midland Country Club's Father-Son golf tournament Saturday to take the lead by three strokes over Ray and Steve Whiteside, who had 105.

Walter and C.E. Boyd are tied for third with 101 points with Ed and Jeff Moses.

Walt and Doug Laufer, Wendall and Randy Lewis, Ted and Ted Jr. Fergeson, and David and Eric Griffin all are tied for the first flight lead with 85 points.

There was also a four-way tie for first in the second flight between Richard and Tommy Thomason, Boley and Mark Embrey, Bob and Charles Hover, and Ed and Ed Jr. Anderson with 76 points.

Lovie and Steve Chase lead the third flight with a 66 by one point over three other teams.

Carano took the Cowboys 70 yards in 7 plays to finally get them on the board.

Passes of 22 yards to Butch Johnson and 18 yards to Drew Pearson put the Cowboys on the Packer 12 where tight end Doug Cosbie roamed free to take the scoring pass from Carano with seven seconds to play in the half.

Dallas' second half points came on a blocked punt return for a touchdown by Everson Walls, a rookie from Grambling, and Steve Steinke's 49-yard field goal.

Giants romp past rushing Bears, 23-7

CHICAGO (AP) — Phil Simms' 26-yard touchdown pass to Tom Mullady and 4-yard touchdown runs by Doug Kotar and Scott Brunner led the New York Giants to a 23-7 victory over the Chicago Bears Saturday night in the National Football League exhibition opener for both teams.

Simms' only completion came in the first quarter to give the Giants a 6-0 lead. Otis Wilson deflected Joe Danelo's extra point attempt.

The Bears came back with a 94-yard drive capped by Vince Evans' 3-yard touchdown pass to Rickey Watts with 1:14 left in the quarter. Bob Thomas' conversion put the Bears ahead 7-6 for their only lead in the game.

Kotar's touchdown run came with 1:03 left in the half and Danelo's kick gave the Giants a 13-7 lead.

Danelo's 39-yard field goal early in the fourth quarter accounted for all the scoring in the second half until Brunner's 4-yard bootleg run with 2:31 clinched the outcome for the Giants.

Detroit scores late to nip Bills, 21-14

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. (AP) — Detroit Lions defensive end William Gay recovered a Buffalo fumble in the end zone Saturday as the Lions scored twice within 19 seconds late in the fourth quarter to defeat the Bills 21-14 in the National Football League exhibition opener for both squads.

Detroit came from behind twice, forging a 7-7 tie on fullback Bo Robinson's 7-yard blast in the third period and a 14-14 deadlock on a 1-yard plunge by Vince Thompson with 4:21 left in the game.

Earlier, Buffalo quarterback Joe Ferguson passed 24 yards to wide receiver Jerry Butler on a first-period touchdown and reserve signal-caller Dan Manucci hooked up with rookie Byron Franklin for an 83-yard score.

Gay, a 250-pound second-stringer, scored a rare lineman's touchdown after he crashed into Manucci and running back Robb Riddick while the two were botching a handoff.

Harris' three TD catches lead Bengals over Bucs

TAMPA, Fla. (AP) — Second-string tight end M.L. Harris caught touchdown passes of 8, 3 and 26 yards to lead the Cincinnati Bengals to a 24-17 victory over the Tampa Bay Buccaneers in a National Football League preseason opener Saturday night.

Fumbles by rookie fullback James Wilder, the Bucs second-round draft choice, set up two of those touchdowns — an 8-yard first quarter toss from Bengals quarterback Ken Anderson and a 26-yard scoring strike from reserve quarterback Jack Thompson in the third period.

Anderson, who played only the first quarter, completed six of seven passes for 96 yards and also hit Harris with a the 3-yard scoring pass.

Harris, a second-year pro from Kansas State and the University of Tampa, who came to the Bengals after four years in the Canadian Football League, had five receptions for 62 yards.

Stoudt's feet, arm lead Steelers to win

CLEVELAND (AP) — Cliff Stoudt, who has spent his five National Football League seasons in the shadow of veteran Terry Bradshaw, took advantage of the preseason spotlight by scoring two touchdowns and throwing for three more in leading the Pittsburgh Steelers to a 35-31 exhibition victory over the Cleveland Browns Saturday night.

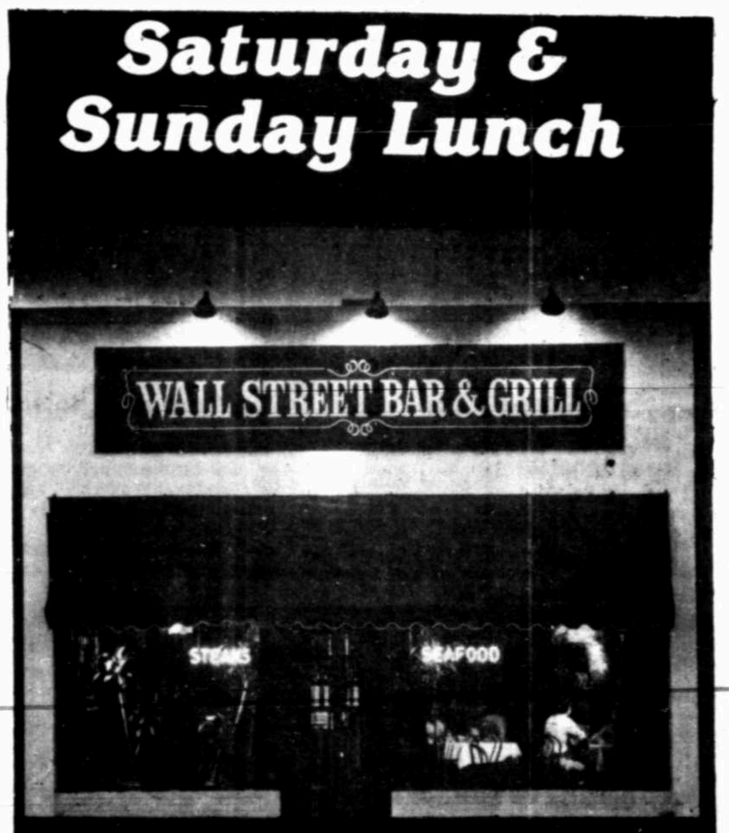

Stoudt, who grew up in nearby Oberlin, dazzled and disappointed the Browns' record preseason crowd of 78,610 by completing 14 of 19 passes for 228 yards in the same stadium where Sunday night's baseball All-Star game was to take place.

The outstanding Steeler offensive show was marred by news that veteran linebacker Jack Ham broke his arm in a third-quarter pileup near the goal line. It was not immediately known how long Ham would be out.

Stoudt directed an offense that collected 356 total yards before he gave way to third-string quarterback Mark Malone in the final period.

The starting quarterbacks ruled the first half, as Pittsburgh ran up a 28-14 edge. Cleveland's Brian Sipe completed 14 of 19 passes for 183 yards during the half, including touchdown strikes of 5 yards to Ricky Feacher and 21 yards to Dave Logan.

Cubs, Dodgers to no decision

Midland's showdown series with San Antonio amounted to a break-even affair with neither team exercising the domination it would have liked. That has to work to the advantage of the Dodgers, who will enjoy the home field advantage against the Cubs in the final five-game series of the season.

And it's vitally important that the Cubs do well in this homestand which continues with five games against Amarillo, starting tonight, for Midland finishes by playing 15 of its final 20 games in hostile ball parks.

HOWEVER, after the Dodgers-Cubs bloodletting at Cubs Stadium last week, it will be interesting to watch the developments this week. Will El Paso and Amarillo take advantage of the spent league pacesetters or will the thrill of the chase keep the Cubs and Dodgers going despite the exhausting toll taken by their hand-to-hand combat?

While most showdown series are dominated by overpowering pitching performances, that wasn't the case here last week when the Cubs scored 49 runs in the first four games and San Antonio tallied 31.

It's little wonder, however. According to Texas League statistics through August 3, the eve of the shootout in the West, San Antonio led the TL with a team batting average of .294 and Midland, coming off a slump during their 10-game tour of the East Division, was second with a .282. Both team averages were to climb during the series here. Neither team boasted impressive Earned Run Average credentials. Midland brought up the league's rear with a 4.97 and San Antonio was sixth with a 4.13.

Of the 17 .300 hitters in the league, Midland and San Antonio combined for nine of them. Every evidence indicated it would be a hitter's series, and it was...

CUBS CENTERFIELDER Mel Hall may not realize it, but he could give Midland its first Texas League home run champion since Karl Pagel in 1976. Hall has 20, which is just two behind league-leader Greg Brock of San Antonio. And Jack Upton isn't that far away as possible batting champion. Steve Sax, who dueled departed Tom Grant of Midland, during the early days of the season and has led most of the way, leads Upton by nine percentage points and a hot streak by Upton and a slump by Sax could make it close.

After his trip to Los Angeles for the Dodgers exhibition with Albuquerque Thursday night, Sax commented, in feigned amazement, that the ball doesn't carry worth a hang in Dodger Stadium and when the pitcher throws the ball, it seems to move a bit more than in Cubs Stadium. Sax was particularly impressed with the Dukes' Alejandro Pena and Ricky Wright. "Both throw hard, but Pena is faster, although Wright fanned Steve Garvey twice."....What's that mean, a couple of bullpen Valenzuelas on the way to the Dodgers for next season?...

After a slow start at the plate, shortstop David Pagel has boosted his average into the .270s, but the remarkable aspect of his performance since joining the Cubs has been his fielding. David was an all-conference shortstop at Central Michigan University, but he was converted to catcher midway through last season and that's what he played in instructional league and this season at Quad Cities until called up by Midland. Yet, he resumed at shortstop as though he had never been away.

Dallas Cowboys head coach Tom Landry is also getting himself in shape along with his NFL team. Landry has been running a tough training camp this summer — maybe with one eye on Philadelphia, who kept Dallas out of the Super Bowl last year.

Dallas has eyes glued to Eagles

An AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

THOUSAND OAKS, Calif. (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys' training camp this summer is dedicated to defeathering the Philadelphia Eagles.

Tom Landry doesn't announce this goal over the bullhorn during two-a-day workouts, but everybody knows the reason why they are here — to get back at the Eagles.

This camp, the Cowboys' 22nd, has been intense from Day One. The offseason workouts were perhaps the best in the club's history.

Running back Tony Dorsett, never one to endure the rigors of workouts in March, April and May, was a model for conditioning coach Bob Ward with frequent attendance.

Dorsett, you may recall, blamed himself for the Cowboys' loss to the Eagles in the National Conference championhsip because of a critical second-half fumble.

Dorsett, appearing larger and faster, has been so impressive he has the usually reticent Landry gushing praise.

THE COWBOYS are openly in contempt of the Eagles and what they claim are their high school ways. Statements by the Eagles after the victory that put them in the Super Bowl have the Cowboys in a slow burn. The remarks insinuated the Cowboys had been hoodwinked psychologically into thinking they were better than the Eagles.

"I don't care for Philadelphia for one minute," said Cowboys defensive tackle Randy White. "I don't like the little games they play ... like a high school team. All I know is that when we play them we'll be ready."

Already a Cowboys' poster has found its way into the Philadelphia locker room. It shows Harvey Martin, Ed "Too Tall" Jones, John Dutton, Bob Breunig and White with ominous, menacing looks. In the background, two tombstones are marked "Philly" and "LA."

White said he has heard about the Eagles' summer psyche.

"I haven't lost one moments's sleep over it," said White, looking ominous and menacing. "They can pin my picture in an 8x10 in front of every locker if they want to. No problem."

Altered flag races to greet baseball

By LARRY SIDDONS
AP Sports Writer

Major league baseball resumes its regular season Monday with radically altered championship races and hopes that the fans will forgive and forget after a seven-week strike.

The New York Mets and the Chicago Cubs, who had the National League's worst records when the players' walkout began June 12, open the "second season" with an afternoon game at Wrigley Field, ending 59 days and 714 games without regular-season competition.

Monday night, the other 24 teams join the race for a spot in the expanded playoff system spawned by the strike, the longest in baseball's history.

Pittsburgh is at Montreal, St. Louis at Philadelphia, Cincinnati at Los Angeles, Atlanta at San Diego and Houston at San Francisco in the other NL openers.

In the American League, the Chicago White Sox are at Boston, Kansas City is at Baltimore, Milwaukee at Cleveland, Toronto at Detroit, Oakland at Minnesota, California at Seattle and Texas meets the Yankees at New York.

Fans whetted their appetites for the resumption of the regular season in exhibition games over the weekend, and they get a chance to see the sport's best in action Sunday night when the All-Star Game, orginally set for July 14, is played at Cleveland.

When the strike interrupted the season, four tight pennant races were in progress. Philadelphia led the NL East by 1½ games over St. Louis; Los Angeles had a half-game edge over Cincinnati in the NL West; the Yankees led Baltimore by two games in the AL East, and Oakland was atop the AL West by 1½ games over Texas.

But when the season resumes, all teams will start from 0-0. With almost two months cut out of the heart of the summer game, the owners voted last week to split the season, declaring the teams in first place when the strike began as first-half winners and starting the second half Monday.

They also added a new playoff level, a best-of-five series between the first-and second-half winners of each division, with those four winners advancing to the league Championship Series. If a team wins both halves, it will play the club with the second-best overall winning percentage in its division in the first round.

Cubs nip Chisox in 4-3 exhibition

CHICAGO (AP) — Tim Blackwell raced home from second base with the winning run after an errant throw by shortstop Greg Pryor in the seventh inning, giving the Chicago Cubs a 4-3 exhibition baseball victory Saturday over the Chicago White Sox.

The Cubs got the winning run in the seventh when Blackwell beat out a slow roller to short, took second on a sacrifice by Jerry Morales and came home on Pryor's wild throw on Ivan DeJesus's grounder.

A crowd of 20,113, paying $5 each, turned out for the game, the proceeds benefitting the United Way-Crusade of Mercy.

Jays' Bobby Mattick likes free substitution rule

TORONTO (AP) — The rule is called free substitution and it brought a smile to the face of Bobby Mattick, the Toronto Blue Jays' manager.

"That free substitution sure seems like a damned good rule to me," said Mattick after the Jays rallied for three runs in the bottom of the ninth inning to edge the New York Mets 9-8 in an exhibition baseball game Saturday.

Trailing 8-6 entering the ninth, Alfredo Griffin led off with a single and scored on Lloyd Moseby's triple to left-center. Otto Velez doubled to the same spot, setting the stage for John Mayberry's game-winning single to center.

Mayberry, who hit a two-run homer in the third inning, was lifted for Ken Macha at the top of the fourth. But under the free substitution rule, Mattick was able to insert Mayberry back into the lineup for his clutch hit.

"It's important for us to have won these two games," said Mattick, referring to the Jays' sweep of the home-and-home series. "It proved to the players that they can come back and that has to help their confidence. I thought all along that we're a better ballclub than last year."

Tall tales about Mexico aren't necessarily true

"I'm just afraid to go into Mexico with my guns, airplane or vehicle." That's the statement we hear from sportsmen all the time. Some sportsmen have heard wild stories about planes being confiscated, guns taken away from U.S. citizens while in Mexico and people arrested for driving violations in Mexico.

You know the reason we hear all these reports is becuase, only the worst ever is heard. You very seldom hear about those hunters and/or fishermen who visit Mexico and encounter no problems. And, folks, there's thousands of hunters and fishermen who visit Mexico each and every year without the slightest problems. Those wild reports we do hear about are usually the ones who have done something wrong and should be arrested or guns confiscated.

OUTDOORS

SPORTSMEN, if you correspond properly to Mexico's rules and regulations and conduct yourself as you would in the United States, there's no problem hunting and fishing in Mexico. Aiplanes confiscated and guns taken away in Mexico simply don't exist in Mexico.

To help simplify matters somewhat, let's explain a few rules and regulations you must follow before fishing or hunting in Mexico.

SINCE WHITEWING season will be opening in Mexico in mid-August, it might be wise to begin immediate work on obtaining proper papers and documents before taking a gun into Mexico.

In 1980, the standard charge for processing the documents was $150. That normally included the license and gun permits of $100.

In order to obtain consulate letters and gun permits, you need a good-conduct letter from your sheriff or police department indicating you are not wanted for any felonies in the U.S. You need proof of citzenship to obtain a tourist visa. A current voter registration certificate, birth certificate or passport is sufficient.

A gun permit allows you to take two shotguns into the country. You may bring two boxes of shells for each gun. You can buy other shells at various lodges in Mexico. The 1980 prices were running about $7 a box. Licensed hunters can enter the U.S. wit a thred-day limit of doves.

Knowledge of Spanish is not necessary. Most lodges and Mexican guides have at least a working knowledge of English. And there's no problem crossing the border with languages. Most border officials on the Mexican side know the rules and regulations of bringing guns into Mexico. If all the paper work is up to par, crossing the border is as simple as crossing to go shopping.

BORDER TOWN shenanigans have given Mexico a bad reputation, at least along the Texas border. Once you are into Mexico's interior, though, the people are most friendly, curious and, for the most part very helpful to the foreign visitor.

Traveling to Mexico for the first time all alone is complicated. Only because you've never done this thing before. We would suggest that bird hunters go the first trip with an outfitter, those accustomed to catering to U.S. hunters and fishermen. A simple phone call or letter will give you all the detailed information on what to bring, what to expect and what conditions of either hunting or fishing will be.

Prices vary from lodge to lodge and outfitter to outfitter. Whitewing hunting varies from $100 per day to $200 per day. Some outfitters and lodges furnish transportation, overnight accomodations and other benefits while some just provide hunting. Depending on what you want, depends on what you get.

WE'LL LIST several lodges, clubs and outfitters that you may contact for the upcoming Whitewing season. This should help take some of the mystery of prices, rules and regulations out of your first trip to Mexico.

Hunters you may contact: Lago Vista, Box 308, Harlingen 78550 (512-432-7882); S&W, Inc., Box 937, Terrel 75160 (800-527-7642); Hacienda Alta Vista, Box 2186, Harlingen 78550 (512-423-2234); or Texas Sportsman Club, 8000 Broadway, San Antonio 78209 (512-824-5967).

To truly experience some of the finest wing-shooting in the world, try some Mexico whitewing shooting. Bag limits are generous, accomodations are generally excellent and memories of foreign hunting excitment is unequalled.

Forecast good for deer season

ROD N. REELE

Fall is lurking in the bushes, along with the deer season, and two mild winters in a row could make it one of the best in years, predicts Sports Afield in its August edition.

Five experts surveying the nationwide prospects come up with the following conclusions:

Southeast—Sound management and vast national forests will provide hunters with an estimated 5 million whitetails this year, and herds are expanding.

Northeast—Several states expect record harvests because of the mild winters. Herds in virtually every state have come through winter with high survival rates.

Midwest—Many states expect record numbers this year as well as a record number of hunting permit requests.

Southwest—Despite the drought, close to 3 million deer inhabit the south-central states and should be good this year.

West—A dry winter has kept herds from increasing, but officials says summer rains would improve prospects....

WHITE BASS were running at Lake Spence this week and numerous reports of good black bass, channel catfish and crappie catches were reported.

From Wildcat Fish A Rama Mr. and Mrs. B.J. Meason, Hamlin, took 18 striped bass to 14 1/2 pounds in a three-day assault while John Pitts, Abilene, netted 10 channels to 2 1/2. Mr. and Mrs. W.J. Mashburn, Abilene, took five stripers to 10 pounds. Dr. Buddy Alldridge, Dee Bridges and Dr. Bob Hampton, Sweetwater, checked in with 11 stripers to 7 1/2 and 22 white bass to two. From Wanoreck's Paint Creek Marina, Johnny, Blaine and Colby Lemmons, Midland, landed 169 white perch to 1 1/2 in three days of fishing with Pico Perch as bait. A.G. Harper, Goldsmith, reported 20 crappie from Skinny's Hillside and M.W. Chaney, Snyder, had seven stripers...

Ike Pate reports Oak Creek Lake near Sweetwater is returning to normal. For the first time since September, the creeks have stopped running and the lake is losing some water, which should be the forerunner of good bass fishing.

White bass, crappie, channel cat and bream are all being caught in good numbers. The crappie are drawing a lot of attention with the fish being caught considerably larger than they were a month ago.

Texas Stadium to host SMU next three years

DALLAS (AP) — Southern Methodist University has signed a new contract and will continue to play its home games at Texas Stadium for the next three seasons, university officials said.

The Mustangs moved from the Cotton Bowl in 1979 and, at the end of the three-year contract, SMU will have the option of continuing to use Texas Stadium as its home base.

The Ranching Industry... just another great part of Midland ...a great city!

Long before there were tall buildings, long before oil was discovered, Midland was settled by a breed of proud, tough, independent cattlemen. Today, the descendents of those early-day Midlanders may be found operating modern ranches, using modern technology along side of the sweat and hard work. Ranching in west Texas has changed greatly since the early days in Midland. But, some things will always stay the same, like the special sense of confidence and pride that every cowboy feels out on the range. It's that special independent spirit that has, and continues to make Midland great, and...at the First National Bank of Midland, we're working to keep that independent spirit alive!

Singer's star is rising

By MARY CAMPBELL
AP Newsfeatures Writer

Singer Phyllis Hyman has a new record album out, and she's in her first Broadway show, "Sophisticated Ladies."

"I don't remember consciously seeking this business," she says. "But friends say I always wanted it. I was probably telling them something I wasn't telling myself."

She has always been extroverted, Miss Hyman says, and usually feels upbeat. She likes to keep busy, does jingles, enjoys going on TV shows, is a spokeswoman for one cosmetics company and one hair color company.

She and the actor Michael Moriarty recently were on the same TV talk show and because of it, Miss Hyman has decided to take some acting lessons from him. She has seen, despite "Sophisticated Ladies" being a revue of songs by Duke Ellington and not a play, that the show business veterans in the cast know how to project.

"Michael Moriarty said he doesn't like the idea of acting by psychology," Miss Hyman says. "I've always been afraid of somebody tampering with my mental stability, or what is left of it. I don't want to reach back in the past to the most horrible thing that ever happened to me to get myself to cry. That's one reason I never studied acting before.

"I've met neurotic actors, and I don't want to be nuts. But he looked terribly sane to me.

"He said he thinks it is terribly sad for those of us who get into show business because we need applause. I had to agree. I don't need that in order to feel fulfilled. Or I don't think I do.

"There's kind of like a drive in me to make these accomplishments, to make myself happy and make others happy who've had a lot of faith in me. I pat myself on the back when I've done another new goal. I set new goals and go after them. I think the biggest pleasure I get is from knowing I've done something good for myself, worked hard and accomplished feats by my hard work, dedication and talent. Of course, you must have public feedback in order to know you're moving on."

Miss Hyman's recordings include "Phyllis Hyman," on Buddah, "Somewhere in My Lifetime," "You Know How To Love Me" and "Can't We Fall in Love Again?" on Arista.

Radio show keeps Indian language alive

ASHEVILLE, N.C. (AP) — A student and employee of the University of North Carolina at Asheville is using radio broadcasts in an effort to preserve the language and culture of Cherokee Indians.

"It's been a dream of mine, something that will give the language and the Cherokees a good reputation," said Jim Richeson, 33, himself the distant relative of a full-blooded Cherokee.

Once a week from a small, on-campus studio, Richeson is host for what he said is the nation's only regular radio show in the Cherokee language. He is a part-time student and full-time groundskeeper at the university.

He began his half-hour broadcasts about two months ago at WUNC-FM, the student radio station at UNC-Asheville. But because of the station's 10-watt power limits, the program was heard only in an area within about five miles of the campus.

The station recently received a grant that will enable it to boost its power to 100 watts, which will send the broadcast about 30 miles away but not far enough to reach the Cherokee Reservation in extreme western North Carolina.

"We still won't be able to reach the far-western counties where the reservation is and where most Cherokees in the state live," Richeson said. He plans to send tapes of his shows to stations in those counties for rebroadcast.

About 5,700 Cherokees live on the Cherokee Reservation. Membership in the Eastern Band of the Cherokee is 8,700.

Richeson became fascinated with the Indian way of life at an early age and read everything he could find on the Cherokees. He worried over the plight of what he had come to think of as his people — the discrimination, unemployment and poverty they faced.

He admitted he can carry on only a simple conversation in Cherokee, which he learned from reading and from two courses at Western Carolina University. Most of his guests on the show are Cherokees who speak the language fluently.

"I just ask them a few simple questions to get the ball rolling and they take it from there. They don't need much help from me," he said.

"That's where our hope lies if we want to save the language and the whole Cherokee way of life before it's too late," he said. "We have to instill a sense of pride in the young people. We have to make them proud to be an Indian."

Cherokee, a gentle, musical language, is not easy to learn. There are 85 characters, one for each sound of the language. Only a handful of Cherokee classes are offered in the entire United States, and most of them are taught in Oklahoma where the western Cherokee tribe lives.

Indian children were punished for speaking Cherokee in the public schools in the 1940s and 1950s, Richeson said.

"When you're made to feel inferior because of what you are, it's hard to feel any sense of pride in your way of life," he said. "That's what I'm trying to do here, to change people's perception of what Cherokees are, to show what positive thinkers they are."

Hooking his hobby

WHEATON, Ill. (AP) — Fay Fisher, 71, has two hobbies to occupy his retirement time — fishing and rug making.

"Hooking" is essential to both and a coincidence, he says.

Fisher's rug-making hobby paid dividends when he was recently employed by Phillips Products to make "rug" sales awards.

To buy, or not to buy

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

More money means more buying power. That's an obvious statement. What isn't clear is how to spend wisely.

Living in a consumer-based, constantly-hyped-to-buy society, perhaps makes the decisions even more difficult.

One avenue open to consumers is the world of art. Here again the public is confronted with questions. To buy or not to buy, coupled with when, where, what and, perhaps most importantly, why is the dilemma facing those who want to make smart money investments.

Some of these questions were answered by Nelda Lee, an Odessa appraiser and art dealer who said most of her clients are Midlanders.

"Naturally Midland is the leader (in art collections), but there are many fine collections being formed in Odessa, Big Spring and the outlying areas," Ms. Lee said.

ALTHOUGH THERE are a number of area residents whose collections are valued at over $1 million, she was hestitant to venture an estimate of the total value of art (paintings, sculpture and graphics at a retail value) in West Texas.

But she did say, "In this area (West Texas) most clients will fall between the $5,000 and $25,000 per single piece" investment category.

"When I talk with somebody about investing in art, I'm like a stock broker or an economic analyst," Ms. Lee said. "I have my personal judgment based on expertise in the field."

Ms. Lee's credentials are lengthy. Her educational background includes an associate of art degree in 1961 from Tarleton State University (where she was on the Dean's List), a bachelor's degree in fine arts from North Texas State University in 1963 (president of NTSU Art Educators in 1962), and graduate work on a masters in fine arts at Texas Tech University and at San Miguel de Allende Art Institute in Mexico.

FOR FIVE YEARS she was head of the Ector High School art department and an officer in the Texas State Art Education Association. A professional artist, Ms. Lee has been actively involved in the art gallery business since 1968.

Ms. Lee is listed in more than 100 Who's Who publications; serves as president of the Texas Association of Art Dealers; and was recently recognized by the American Society of Appraisers with its highest award, Senior Certification, after completing a course of intensive study and examination. This makes her the only certified art appraiser within 300 to 400 miles.

"You can speculate and you can be 99 percent sure, but there's always room for error," Ms. Lee said, laughing. So the number one requirement is "buy what you like regardless," she said, adding, "and what you can afford."

For those who say "I don't know anything about art," Ms. Lee recommended they "expose themselves to as many things as they possibly can, to as many types of museums as possible.

"Even though you don't think you like it; even if you don't understand what you're looking at," the important thing is to view as much art, and as many different types of art, as are available.

This is one of the ways people learn.

TO ELABORATE this point Ms. Lee told a story about an experience she shared with her mother several years ago when they were in a shopping center during an art showing. Before this time, both had shared many hours visiting museums and galleries wherever they went. Ms. Lee's mother had "never asked any questions."

"My mother, who has had no background or training in the arts, said, 'These are not very good paintings.' I asked her, 'Why?' and she said, 'I know good art.'"

Ms. Lee's mother attributed her knowledge to the many hours she had spent viewing art work and listening to her daughter talk about it.

Another suggestion is "take a college beginning art appreciation course, or if you can't take the course, buy the book."

Although it "may sound elementary," the book should include a discussion of primary colors and a color wheel. Gaining a knowledge of "what it takes to get different colors and "different intensities" is quite helpful in evaluating individual works.

As to what determines a work of art as a good investment, Ms. Lee said, "I have my own personal belief. I lean (emphasis on the lean) toward paintings by deceased artists.

"Seventy-five percent of the price with so many of your living artists is the hype advertising that goes into the pricing. You have to be very careful and ask, 'How much am I paying for the painting and how much for the promotion that goes into the work?'

"If an artist lives for 50 or 60 years and turns out only one painting a month, look how many that will be. I have known of artists that can turn out one every 24 hours," she said, adding, "One artist admitted to me privately that he did as many as six a day and his works sell for any where from $2,500 to $10,000.

"THIS IS NOT to say a living artist's work cannot be a good investment," Ms. Lee said. It is also important to buy quality pieces by a living artist rather than just any piece, she added.

"Here's the thing: If you're speaking in generalities, you pay more on the average for a deceased artist's work. For anything above $20,000 (single purchase price) that's where my leaning goes.

"If a client comes to me and says, 'I want to spend up to $5,000,' then that is a different market."

"But to pay $100,000 to $200,000 for work by a living artist? Well, how much more can the market bear?

"Frankly I've seen many $5,000 to $10,000 paintings that are a much better buy and a much better investment than $30,000 to $40,000 paintings."

Although she handles all types of art, Ms. Lee considers her speciality to be 19th century English Victorian. She said many 18th and 19th century American and European pieces are "very, very good from an investment standpoint and not necessarily good from an artistic standpoint."

As for where to buy, Ms. Lee recommended, "I can't think of any kind or classification of art you can't find in Texas. I know 75 percent of the art dealers in Texas and 50 percent sell western art and 50 percent don't."

At this point Ms. Lee told a story which exemplified the idea that unfortunately many Texans feel they have to go to New York to acquire art.

"I sold a Madison Avenue dealer a painting (that had been done in this area) and he sold it to someone from Midland. He thought it was amusing that we have so many people coming to New York to buy art work. He doesn't understand why Texans don't look around in Texas because that's where so much art work comes from."

Yet another New York dealer told Ms. Lee, "'If it wasn't for the Texas buyers, I'd go broke.'

"LOOK IN THE AREA (West Texas) first and then look in the state. A saying we have in the trade is, 'It's a heck of a lot more important to know the dealer than to know the art.'

"If you buy a piece of art from a Texas dealer and you become unhappy with it, not only do you have federal consumer laws to protect you, but you also have the state consumer laws."

It makes sense to ask a dealer certain questions, such as, "How long have you been in business? Give me some references, such as, who's your banker? Who have you sold to?" Ms. Lee said.

Ms. Lee stressed the difference between shows sponsored by museums, symphonies or other civic organizations and those where "people set up works in parking lots or in malls and just pay rent."

As far as the latter goes, "use simple logic," she said. "Logically, you're not going to find an 'investment' piece of art work for under $100 and most of the time under $500. Would you buy a car from someone coming through town? After all, if something goes wrong, how are you going to get something done?

"The most positive statement I can make about investing in art is there are never any positives, never any set rules and regulations. Everything is relative."

Antonioni alive, filming and depressed in Italy

NEW YORK (AP) — The director who brought you the trendy London fashion photographer in "Blow Up," the obsessed journalist in "The Passenger," and who painted grass and colored water in "The Red Desert," is alive, filming and depressed in his native Italy.

Michelangelo Antonioni, pushing 70 and frustrated by filming schedules and producer apathy, says his first movie in Italy since 1964 probably will be his last in the country.

"Shooting in Italy today is grotesque and insulting. Rome is the only town you film five days a week instead of six. Producers have vanished. Distributors have limited tastes. And the government doesn't care about movies," he said.

Antonioni's green eyes sadden at the scene. At present he is the only active moviemaker of Italy's classic Big Three.

Luchino Visconti died three years ago. His disciple Franco Zeffirelli is into opera and international television serials, and filming in Italy lies last on his list.

Lured by an explosion of private television stations which bought stocks of mostly American celluloid to fill air time, 35 million fewer Italians — a 12.5 percent drop — went to movie theaters last year.

Antonioni himself still awaits release of his controversial and technically revolutionary film, "The Oberwalt Mystery," which opened in England in July and will premiere in the United States next year.

"Oberwald" marked the first time in 16 years that Antonioni chose his one-time companion — actress Monica Vitti — as a star, portraying Empress Elizabeth of Austria.

So it was only natural for the next step to lead back to Italy, where in 1964 Antonioni and Vitti made "The Red Desert," won the Venice Film Festival prize, and capped a celebrated series of four films on the difficulty of communications among people.

Previously, "L'Avventura" (1959), "La Notte" (1960) and "The Eclipse" (1962), had already made Antonioni a favorite target for ecstatic art critics or enraged spectators who found his excursions into the uncharted areas of love and middle class indifference either arcane or boring.

In the meantime, Antonioni had never ceased to experiment. His "Blow Up" in 1966 helped start the sex revolution in films and gave him the Golden Palm award at the Cannes Festival. His "Zabriski Point" attempted to film a California love story against a background of 1968 violence, and was roundly flayed by critics who saw it as bad drama, and anti-American.

Invited in 1972 to make a documentary on China, Antonioni — one of the darlings of Italy's left wing — was raked by the Chinese for acting like a "social imperialist" with "an inveterate hatred for New China."

Antonioni says little about his current "Identification of a Woman," which he completed shooting in 18 weeks, mostly in Rome and Venice. It will now take another six months to cut it and synch it.

"Il maestro," as he is called, hints at a surprise science fiction finale, whose special effects he will rig up in the United States with filmmakers Francis Ford Coppola and George Lukas.

"The film is about a movie director and two women, one of them an aristocrat, the other a lower-middle class theater actress," he said.

"It is not a film about a movie director, like Woody Allen's 'Stardust Memories' or Fellini's '8½.' But they'll undoubtedly say I'm hiding behind that director. I don't care if they say that."

Baptists pass resolutions at meeting

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Delegates to a meeting of the Progressive National Baptist Covention Inc. have approved a resolution calling the Moral Majority "anti-poor and anti-black."

The 1,000 delegates, representing the 1.5-million member denomination of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., also passed resolutions opposing President Reagan's budget cuts.

During their meeting Friday, Dr. Benjamin Hooks, director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, denounced federal cuts in social programs and accused Reagan of "turning back the clock to pre-1930."

In his speech to the gathering, Hooks blasted the president's tax cut proposal as "unfair, inequitable and unjust." He called on blacks and poor people to use their voting strength wisely.

"He (the president) is sincere, but from our judgment he is sincerely wrong," he said.

Hooks objected to cuts in jobs programs, food stamps, hot-lunch programs and student loans.

Rehearsing a scene

Marianna Clore Blase, far left, Virginia Mayo and Oliver Seale rehearse a scene from the Country Squire Dinner Theatre's current production of "Janus." The show runs through Sept. 6, with performances Tuesdays through Sundays. Buffet dinner begins at 6:30 p.m. with the show starting at 8 p.m., except Sundays when the times are 6 p.m. and 7:30 p.m., respectively. Country Squire is located east of Odessa on Highway 80. Nixon offered deed to bar

FORT COLLINS, Colo. (AP) — Former president Richard Nixon was offered the deed to one of this city's oldest — and smallest — taverns if he showed up for a party celebrating the fourth anniversary of his resignation.

"He was nice enough to resign for us, so when I die, I'd like to give him the bar," said Gary Kimsey, owner of the Town Pump, a landmark that measures but 18 by 30 feet.

Kimsey said that each year since 1978 he has invited Nixon to his celebration marking the day the former president stepped down, Aug. 8, 1974, following the Watergate scandal.

NEW YORK (AP) — Sarah C. Churchill, granddaughter of the late Sir Winston Churchill and a Los Angeles art dealer, is being sued for allegedly misrepresenting some American Indian art works she sold.

American Stanhope Partners, owners of the Stanhope Hotel, has filed a suit in U.S. District Court here for the return of $11,872 the company says it paid the Churchill galleries for a set of 28 prints from what was said to be an original edition of American Indian art.

The Stanhope suit charged that the plaintiffs received an incomplete set, prints which were not original, and "simply illustrations from a book" with a value assessed at about $600.

Telephone calls placed to Miss Churchill's gallery Friday afternoon were not answered.

Nelda Lee

To buy, or not to buy

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Staff Writer

More money means more buying power. That's an obvious statement. What isn't clear is how to spend wisely.

Living in a consumer-based, constantly-hyped-to-buy society, perhaps makes the decisions even more difficult.

One avenue open to consumers is the world of art. Here again the public is confronted with questions. To buy or not to buy, coupled with when, where, what and, perhaps most importantly, why is the dilemma facing those who want to make smart money investments.

Some of these questions were answered by Nelda Lee, an Odessa appraiser and art dealer who said most of her clients are Midlanders.

"Naturally Midland is the leader (in art collections), but there are many fine collections being formed in Odessa, Big Spring and the outlying areas," Ms. Lee said.

ALTHOUGH THERE are a number of area residents whose collections are valued at over $1 million, she was hestitant to venture an estimate of the total value of art (paintings, sculpture and graphics at a retail value) in West Texas.

But she did say, "In this area (West Texas) most clients will fall between the $5,000 and $25,000 per single piece" investment category.

"When I talk with somebody about investing in art, I'm like a stock broker or an economic analyst," Ms. Lee said. "I have my personal judgment based on expertise in the field."

Ms. Lee's credentials are lengthy. Her educational background includes an associate of art degree in 1961 from Tarleton State University (where she was on the Dean's List), a bachelor's degree in fine arts from North Texas State University in 1963 (president of NTSU Art Educators in 1962), and graduate work on a masters in fine arts at Texas Tech University and at San Miguel de Allende Art Institute in Mexico.

FOR FIVE YEARS she was head of the Ector High School art department and an officer in the Texas State Art Education Association. A professional artist, Ms. Lee has been actively involved in the art gallery business since 1968.

Ms. Lee is listed in more than 100 Who's Who publications; serves as president of the Texas Association of Art Dealers; and was recently recognized by the American Society of Appraisers with its highest award, Senior Certification, after completing a course of intensive study and examination. This makes her the only certified art appraiser within 300 to 400 miles.

"You can speculate and you can be 99 percent sure, but there's always room for error," Ms. Lee said, laughing. So the number one requirement is "buy what you like regardless," she said, adding, "and what you can afford."

For those who say "I don't know anything about art," Ms. Lee recommended they "expose themselves to as many things as they possibly can, to as many types of museums as possible.

"Even though you don't think you like it; even if you don't understand what you're looking at," the important thing is to view as much art, and as many different types of art, as are available.

This is one of the ways people learn.

TO ELABORATE this point Ms. Lee told a story about an experience she shared with her mother several years ago when they were in a shopping center during an art showing. Before this time, both had shared many hours visiting museums and galleries wherever they went. Ms. Lee's mother had "never asked any questions."

"My mother, who has had no background or training in the arts, said, 'These are not very good paintings.' I asked her, 'Why?' and she said, 'I know good art.'"

Ms. Lee's mother attributed her knowledge to the many hours she had spent viewing art work and listening to her daughter talk about it.

Another suggestion is "take a college beginning art appreciation course, or if you can't take the course, buy the book."

Although it "may sound elementary," the book should include a discussion of primary colors and a color wheel. Gaining a knowledge of "what it takes to get different colors and "different intensities" is quite helpful in evaluating individual works.

As to what determines a work of art as a good investment, Ms. Lee said, "I have my own personal belief. I lean (emphasis on the lean) toward paintings by deceased artists.

"Seventy-five percent of the price with so many of your living artists is the hype advertising that goes into the pricing. You have to be very careful and ask, 'How much am I paying for the painting and how much for the promotion that goes into the work?'

"If an artist lives for 50 or 60 years and turns out only one painting a month, look how many that will be. I have known of artists that can turn out one every 24 hours," she said, adding, "One artist admitted to me privately that he did as many as six a day and his works sell for any where from $2,500 to $10,000.

"THIS IS NOT to say a living artist's work cannot be a good investment," Ms. Lee said. It is also important to buy quality pieces by a living artist rather than just any piece, she added.

"Here's the thing: If you're speaking in generalities, you pay more on the average for a deceased artist's work. For anything above $20,000 (single purchase price) that's where my leaning goes.

"If a client comes to me and says, 'I want to spend up to $5,000,' then that is a different market."

"But to pay $100,000 to $200,000 for work by a living artist? Well, how much more can the market bear?

"Frankly I've seen many $5,000 to $10,000 paintings that are a much better buy and a much better investment than $30,000 to $40,000 paintings."

Although she handles all types of art, Ms. Lee considers her speciality to be 19th century English Victorian. She said many 18th and 19th century American and European pieces are "very, very good from an investment standpoint and not necessarily good from an artistic standpoint."

As for where to buy, Ms. Lee recommended, "I can't think of any kind or classification of art you can't find in Texas. I know 75 percent of the art dealers in Texas and 50 percent sell western art and 50 percent don't."

At this point Ms. Lee told a story which exemplified the idea that unfortunately many Texans feel they have to go to New York to acquire art.

"I sold a Madison Avenue dealer a painting (that had been done in this area) and he sold it to someone from Midland. He thought it was amusing that we have so many people coming to New York to buy art work. He doesn't understand why Texans don't look around in Texas because that's where so much art work comes from."

Yet another New York dealer told Ms. Lee, "'If it wasn't for the Texas buyers, I'd go broke.'

"LOOK IN THE AREA (West Texas) first and then look in the state. A saying we have in the trade is, 'It's a heck of a lot more important to know the dealer than to know the art.'

"If you buy a piece of art from a Texas dealer and you become unhappy with it, not only do you have federal consumer laws to protect you, but you also have the state consumer laws."

It makes sense to ask a dealer certain questions, such as, "How long have you been in business? Give me some references, such as, who's your banker? Who have you sold to?" Ms. Lee said.

Ms. Lee stressed the difference between shows sponsored by museums, symphonies or other civic organizations and those where "people set up works in parking lots or in malls and just pay rent."

As far as the latter goes, "use simple logic," she said. "Logically, you're not going to find an 'investment' piece of art work for under $100 and most of the time under $500. Would you buy a car from someone coming through town? After all, if something goes wrong, how are you going to get something done?

"The most positive statement I can make about investing in art is there are never any positives, never any set rules and regulations. Everything is relative."

Antonioni alive, filming and depressed in Italy

NEW YORK (AP) — The director who brought you the trendy London fashion photographer in "Blow Up," the obsessed journalist in "The Passenger," and who painted grass and colored water in "The Red Desert," is alive, filming and depressed in his native Italy.

Michelangelo Antonioni, pushing 70 and frustrated by filming schedules and producer apathy, says his first movie in Italy since 1964 probably will be his last in the country.

"Shooting in Italy today is grotesque and insulting. Rome is the only town you film five days a week instead of six. Producers have vanished. Distributors have limited tastes. And the government doesn't care about movies," he said.

Antonioni's green eyes sadden at the scene. At present he is the only active moviemaker of Italy's classic Big Three.

Luchino Visconti died three years ago. His disciple Franco Zeffirelli is into opera and international television serials, and filming in Italy lies last on his list.

Lured by an explosion of private television stations which bought stocks of mostly American celluloid to fill air time, 35 million fewer Italians — a 12.5 percent drop — went to movie theaters last year.

Antonioni himself still awaits release of his controversial and technically revolutionary film, "The Oberwalt Mystery," which opened in England in July and will premiere in the United States next year.

"Oberwald" marked the first time in 16 years that Antonioni chose his one-time companion — actress Monica Vitti — as a star, portraying Empress Elizabeth of Austria.

So it was only natural for the next step to lead back to Italy, where in 1964 Antonioni and Vitti made "The Red Desert," won the Venice Film Festival prize, and capped a celebrated series of four films on the difficulty of communications among people.

Previously, "L'Avventura" (1959), "La Notte" (1960) and "The Eclipse" (1962), had already made Antonioni a favorite target for ecstatic art critics or enraged spectators who found his excursions into the uncharted areas of love and middle class indifference either arcane or boring.

In the meantime, Antonioni had never ceased to experiment. His "Blow Up" in 1966 helped start the sex revolution in films and gave him the Golden Palm award at the Cannes Festival. His "Zabriski Point" attempted to film a California love story against a background of 1968 violence, and was roundly flayed by critics who saw it as bad drama, and anti-American.

Invited in 1972 to make a documentary on China, Antonioni — one of the darlings of Italy's left wing — was raked by the Chinese for acting like a "social imperialist" with "an inveterate hatred for New China."

Antonioni says little about his current "Identification of a Woman," which he completed shooting in 18 weeks, mostly in Rome and Venice. It will now take another six months to cut it and synch it.

"Il maestro," as he is called, hints at a surprise science fiction finale, whose special effects he will rig up in the United States with filmmakers Francis Ford Coppola and George Lukas.

"The film is about a movie director and two women, one of them an aristocrat, the other a lower-middle class theater actress," he said.

"It is not a film about a movie director, like Woody Allen's 'Stardust Memories' or Fellini's '8½.' But they'll undoubtedly say I'm hiding behind that director. I don't care if they say that."

Baptists pass resolutions at meeting

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Delegates to a meeting of the Progressive National Baptist Covention Inc. have approved a resolution calling the Moral Majority "anti-poor and anti-black."

The 1,000 delegates, representing the 1.5-million member denomination of the late Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., also passed resolutions opposing President Reagan's budget cuts.

During their meeting Friday, Dr. Benjamin Hooks, director of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, denounced federal cuts in social programs and accused Reagan of "turning back the clock to pre-1930."

In his speech to the gathering, Hooks blasted the president's tax cut proposal as "unfair, inequitable and unjust." He called on blacks and poor people to use their voting strength wisely.

"He (the president) is sincere, but from our judgment he is sincerely wrong," he said.

Hooks objected to cuts in jobs programs, food stamps, hot-lunch programs and student loans.

Cicadas — not locusts — have long plagued American curiosity

By CHARLES W. GREEN
Midland County Extension Agent — Agriculture

Probably no other insect in the United States has caused as much curiosity and wonder as cicadas, often miscalled "locusts."

Early American colonists had never seen periodical cicadas. They were familiar with the Biblical story of locust plagues in Egypt, but were not sure what kind of insect the story referred to. When the cicadas appeared suddenly by the thousands, some of the colonists thought a "locust plague" had been visited upon them.

This confusion between cicadas and locusts exists today; cicadas are commonly called locusts. The term locust is correctly applied only to certain species of grasshoppers.

Periodical cicadas, commonly misnamed as 17-year-old locusts, are widely distributed over the eastern half of the United States. There are six or more closely related species. Three species occur mainly in the Northern states and complete their life cycle in 17 years; three or more species occur in the South and Texas and complete their life cycle in 13 years. This should not be interpreted to mean that the insect is seen only at 17- or 13-year intervals. The various populations are known as broods, and different broods emerge every year. In fact, 23 broods have been located and their appearance can be accurately predicted.

Common, or dog-day cicadas are closely related and similar in appearance. These cicadas are generally larger, appear later in the summer and have life cycles of 1 to 5 years. This appears to be the predominant type in West Texas.

Even when periodical cicadas are not confused with some other insect, their appearance in overwhelming numbers arouses fear that crops will be destroyed. But cicadas do not feed on foliage of any kind. If adults feed at all, they do so by inserting their beaks into bark and sucking juice.

Although adults cause no feeding damage, adult females do make injurious punctures in twigs and limbs of trees and shrubs. Using a curved, saw-like ovipositor they open a series of slits in small branches to make pockets into which 24 to 28 eggs are deposited. A single female may make as many as 20 pockets and lay up to 600 eggs. The injured twigs often bleed, die and break off.

Eggs hatch in six to seven weeks. The resulting ant-like nymphs drop to the ground and burrow through the soil to find roots from which they suck juices. Nymphs may be found from 2 to 24 or more inches below the soil surface. Toward the end of their underground life, cicada nymphs burrow upward to within an inch of the surface to await their proper time to emerge.

Adult emergence from the nymph skin takes place at night on trees, posts or buildings. The adult comes out of a split along the back of the nymphal skin. The light brown cast skin may persist for months if undisturbed. Adult emergence may begin as early as April and last though July. Adults live 5 to 6 weeks during which they mate and deposit eggs.

Female cicadas do not sing; only the males sing or drum. Thus, the old adage, "Blessed are the cicada's lives; For they all have voiceless wives!" Sound is produced by two shell-like, inflated drums in the sides of the abdomen being vibrated by a special, strong muscle. Cicada singing may become incessant and loud, causing nervousness, irritability and auditory fatigue.

Control of cicadas is difficult. Small trees and shrubs may be protected by covering them with open-weave cloth, such as heavy cheesecloth or netting. The cloth or net should be put in place as cicadas appear and should remain until most of them are gone.

Carbaryl (Sevin) may be used on ornamental plants, shade trees and those fruit trees that are listed on the container label. Chemical treatment is most effective when carried out on a community basis. When only a few trees are treated in a neighborhood the effect is minimal.

One application of carbaryl will provide protection for five to eight days, depending on the degree of infestation and character of the surrounding area. Three to five applications are generally necessary where heavy infestations of cicadas are present throughout the area. High temperatures reduce the protection.

Prepare a carbaryl spray by mixing two pounds of a 50 percent wettable powder with 100 gallons of water. For one gallon of spray, use two level tablespoons of 50 percent wettable powder. Always read the label instructions before mixing insecticide spray.

Harvesting continues across state

COLLEGE STATION, Texas (AP) — Scattered showers across the state scarcely halted the grain harvest in South Texas and cotton defoliation and corn harvesting in the south and southwest, says Dr. Daniel C. Pfannstiel, director of the Texas Agricultural Extension Service.

A good sorghum crop is being harvested in South Central, Central, Upper Coastal, North Central and portions of West Central Texas, although sorghum yields are expected to be lower than at first anticipated because of lack of rain during the bloom and seed forming stages, Pfannstiel said.

Good cotton yields are being reported in South Texas, but only average yields are reported in Southwest Texas, where farmers are irrigating heavily. Excellent sorghum yields are reported from that area, but the market is depressed.

Excellent third hay yields are continuing in areas where rain has been adequate.

Good rice yields are reported in the Coastal Bend and Upper Coastal counties. Trial plantings of soybeans are nearing the harvest stage in the Coastal Bend and much of the crop looks good in other coastal counties.

AGRICULTURE

Crops are making excellent progress in the South Plains, portions of the Panhandle and Rolling Plains where rains have boosted the cotton crop and eased the need for irrigation of a good-looking corn crop. Sorghum and other crops also are doing well, despite a greenbug infestation.

A good peach harvest is nearing completion across the state, and the pecan crop is moving ahead with some insect control programs under way.

Reports from district Extension directors showed these conditions:

PANHANDLE: Soil moisture remains short despite recent rains. Corn looks good and cotton is fruiting well. Sorghum is in the boot to head stages. Insects are building up in all crops. Home gardens and fruit orchards are being harvested. Pastures need more moisture.

SOUTH PLAINS: Cotton prospects have brightened after recent rains, despite some aphid outbreaks. Sorghum and corn crops are moving ahead, with a control program for southwestern cornborer under way. Ranges are greener and livestock look good.

ROLLING PLAINS: Recent rains boosted cotton and hay, but pastures remain fairly dry. Most summer vegetable crops have been harvested and land is being prepared for fall seeding of small grains and gardens. Some pecans are shedding due to the weather.

NORTH CENTRAL: Hay crops and peanuts need rain. Corn is maturing rapidly, and a good sorghum harvest is under way. Some boll weevils and boll worms are being reported in cotton. Gardens and pastures all need moisture. Most peaches have been harvested, and the pecan outlook is good.

NORTHEAST: Moisture is short. Hay yields continue excellent, and sorghum is maturing rapidly. Cotton is squaring and setting bolls, and corn is maturing. Soybeans and pecans look good. The peach harvest also is continuing.

FAR WEST: Crops and ranges still are dry, with irrigation under way. Cotton is doing well, and a third cutting of alfalfa is being harvested in the El Paso Valley. Good cabbage yields are reported, and cantaloupes are being harvested in Reeves and Loving counties. Moderate to heavy infestation of black and yellow aphids are reported in pecans, while insects and birds are rushing the peach and apricot harvests.

WEST CENTRAL: Sorghum and hay yields are down due to dryness. Cotton is fruiting with light boll weevil and bollworm damage reported. Pastures are drying rapidly, with the possibility of grass fires increasing. Gardens are being hurt by the heat. Most of the peach harvest is complete.

CENTRAL: A good sorghum harvest is in full swing. Cotton is experiencing some serious damage from boll weevils and bollworms. Some second and third hay cuttings are under way, with below average quality. Irrigation of peanuts continues and pastures are declining.

EAST: Some third hay cuttings are under way, but grasshoppers and armyworms are creating problems. Corn is in good condition and soybeans are making good growth. Most summer vegetables are harvested and land is being prepared for fall plantings. Some infestation of scab and fall webworms now being reported in some area pecans. Late variety peaches are ripening and earlier varieties have been harvested.

UPPER COAST: Hay harvesting continues in full swing, also with rice, corn and sorghum harvests. Soybeans generally look good, although some fields are a disaster from earlier prolonged rains. Cotton is in fair to poor condition.

SOUTH CENTRAL: Cotton bolls are starting to open, and the sorghum harvest continues. Hay crops are being cut and baled, but pastures are beginning to show stress. Summer gardens are ceasing to produce and preparation is under way for fall. Peaches are nearly harvested.

SOUTHWEST: Heavy irrigation continues. Most ranges are brown. Excellent sorghum yields are reported, but the market is depressed. Corn and cotton harvesting has begun in southern counties, with yields excellent for corn but only average for cotton.

COASTAL BEND: Some cotton harvesting is under way and the crop is opening rapidly due to dry, hot weather. The sorghum harvest is nearing an end, with some stubble being turned under. Corn harvesting has started, with the outlook for good yields. The rice harvest is moving ahead, along with the hay harvest. Pecans are growing rapidly with spraying under way to control hickory shuckworm caterpillars.

SOUTH: The sorghum harvest is complete with good yields reported, and the corn harvest is in full swing. Harvesting of cotton is increasing with yields good on the early crop. Hay crops are continuing to produce, and most pastures have excellent grazing. Citrus is making good progress in the Rio Grande Valley, where insect control programs continue.

FARM-RANCH ROUNDUP

Horse theft case solved

FORT WORTH — Field inspectors for the Texas and Southwestern Cattle Raisers Association have solved a major horse theft case which involved at least 33 horses stolen in the Houston area in the last two months.

Twenty-seven of the horses have been recovered and returned to their owners.

Indicted on two counts of stealing horses was 19-year-old Milton Ray Oliver of Houston. Oliver was being held in a Houston jail on charges of felony theft of a horse trailer when inspectors broke the case.

Beef promoted

CHICAGO — Texas cattlemen who are concerned about increasing the current demand for beef and the prices they get for beef on the hoof, and they're "doing something about it," according to the National Livestock and Meat Board.

Last July 1, Texas cattlemen initiated a voluntary 25-cent beef market investment program by which money collected is remitted to the Beef Industry Council of the National Live Stock and Meat Board for national programs of research, education and promotion to increase the demand for beef.

The promotional program apparently is paying off.

Guidebook available

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The first comprehensive evaluation of farmland protection programs ever published in the United States is now available to the public, according to the National Agricultural Lands Study (NALS).

The 284-page guidebook, "The Protection of Farmland: A Reference Guidebook for State and Local Governments," is an in-depth analysis of state and local farmland protection program.

The work may be obtained by writing the Superintendent of Documents, United States Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C. 20402.

By LOREN BERGER
Lifestyle Writer

It was a rough year for Charles McNary (not his real name) of Odessa and his family. After pounding out a meager but steady profit as a garage shop owner for 27 years, 1980 brought a drastic setback to his business.

Customers were running short of money or not paying at all, the price of labor was increasing and interest rates on borrowed bank loans were skyrocketing.

McNary began to take out more and more loans to cover costs of shop equipment, utility bills and employee paychecks. His financial woes soon materialized into $40,000 worth of debts. "The telephone would ring every five minutes from people trying to collect their money," he said. "They were threatening to close down the business. I almost had a nervous breakdown."

But, in the long run, McNary had the last word.

His monetary worries came to an abrupt halt about four months ago when he filed bankruptcy under Chapter 13, otherwise known as the wage earners plan.

After court hearings at the U.S. Bankruptcy Court in El Paso, McNary was allowed to dismiss more than $27,000 in debts that went unclaimed by his creditors. Recent revisions of bankruptcy codes permitted him to pay $400 a month over a three-year period to those creditors who did file liabilities.

More importantly, though, he was able to keep his business and could tell those creditors who constantly hassled him to take a walk.

Before Congress revised the Bankruptcy Act in 1978, a debtor's only hope for relief was to file a straight bankruptcy or a Chapter 7. He then became vulnerable to creditors who could descend like a flock of buzzards and repossess his house, his cars, television sets and jewelry.

Secured creditors, attorney fees, court costs and taxes were paid first. What was left went to unsecured creditors on a pro rata basis. (Unsecured credit is granted against nothing more than the debtor's promise to pay, whereas secured credit is given against property that would be forfeited in case of default.) While many of the creditors remained unpaid, the debtor still had very little with which to get on his feet again.

Today, the slide into personal and small business bankruptcy has never been easier. After federal revisions went into effect Oct. 1, 1979, the pendulum has swung heavily in favor of debtors' rights. The basic theory which led to the liberalization of Chapter 13 was that easing a debtor's hardship would give him the financial ability to pay back a reasonable amount of what he owed.

Currently, there is greater freedom to repay less than 100 cents on the dollar — some plans in the Midland-Odessa area have been approved for three to four cents on the dollar, so long as they are proposed in "good faith." The debtor is put strictly on a cash basis and may pay back liabilities (secured creditors are given priority) to a bankruptcy trustee over a three-year period, or extend the plan to five years, if approved by the court.

Upon filing, the debtor falls under the protection of a "magic umbrella." A restraining order is issued against creditors preventing them from even talking to debtors or approaching co-signers.

Unlike a straight bankruptcy, Chapter 13 allows the debtor to retain possession of all property — including real estate holdings — and prohibits creditors from using the property as a means to enforce payment.

"The court takes you under its wing," said Robert Truitt, a Midland attorney and Chapter 7 trustee. "It prevents creditors from filing lawsuits, from going out and seizing your car in the middle of the night and from foreclosing on your house."

The only non-dischargable debts are child support, alimony and in some cases educational loans.

"A debtor must pay as much under a 13 as he could pay under a 7 (which in some cases may be nothing)," Truitt said. "So long as the plan is proposed in good faith, the court will approve it and allow it to stand."

The power of unsecured creditors to veto repayment schedules has been reduced — drastically. Chapter 13 throws a wall in front of them; it leaves them stuttering in mid-sentence.

"It's the best thing the federal government has come out with," McNary said. "You don't lose anything, you keep everything you have. Before I found out about Chapter 13, I seriously thought about just packing it up. I can see why a lot of people jump off bridges in this situation. Now, I feel I'm meeting an obligation in paying back some of the debts. I feel justified all the way."

While bankruptcy in the Midland-Odessa area has not reached the proportions it has on the east and west coasts, the number of local filings for the first seven months of 1981 — a total of 46 — has surpassed the 1980 total.

Some attorneys attribute the low filings to the high standard of living here, but they also claim there is little knowledge among lawyers concerning revisions in the code. Indeed, those that are aware of Chapter 13 are still scrambling to try to interpret the new laws.

"Chapter 13 is a sleeping giant. It is not something that has been exploited in the past," said Glen Halsell, an Odessa attorney who specializes in Chapter 13 filings. "A debtor used to wander around with his head in the sand until people left him alone. Now, Congress has made bankruptcy an irresistible choice."

Halsell recently advised a client to file a 13 after he ran up more than $5,000 in credit card debts.

"This person had about five credit cards, each of which he had overspent by about $1,000. He used that plastic money to the utmost."

In acccordance with Chapter 13 provisions, Halsell's client will be able to completely discharge the credit card debts if the court determines it is beyond his means to pay.

"When people come to me after they find themselves in a financial pinch, I tell them there's not any disadvantages in filing a 13," Halsell said. "I tell them there's nothing bad. The creditors won't be able to call or contact you. It's really a good deal. You can do the honorable thing and pay back your bills."

In modern times, bankruptcy is not an admission that you're a bad guy. Supporters of Chapter 13 assert the reforms were long overdue — a necessary response to the realities of modern life where divorce or medical bills can be devastating.

"I'm sure there's always somebody around who's skimming the top and taking advantage," said H.J. Rucker, another Midland attorney familiar with bankruptcy law. "But, it's mostly the unforseen that gets them in this shape. People apparently don't have savings accounts anymore and they don't carry enough insurance or hospitalization. Outrageous medical bills will put them in a bind. They're paying more for rent, they're paying more for food, they forget about the 18 percent interest on their credit cards and then all of a sudden....boom!"

"I'm sure there's always somebody around who's skimming the top and taking advantage. People are paying more for rent, they're paying more for food, they forget about the 18 percent interest on their credit cards and then all of a sudden...boom!"

— H.J. Rucker, Midland attorney

Larry and Martha Shanabrook, a Midland couple who recently moved to Golden, Colo. had a fairly affluent lifestyle until doctors told them she had a blood clot in her lungs. After a six-week hospital stay, the couple was confronted with more than $15,000 in medical bills. At the time they filed bankruptcy, their combined yearly income was more than $26,000. Larry, a geophysist, is now making more than that alone.

"At the time, we didn't have any hospital insurance," said Martha. "I went to an attorney and I said, 'I don't like the thought of bankruptcy, but is there anything you can do.' He suggested a 13."

The couple was put on a repayment schedule through which they doled out $200 a month to their creditors over a three-year period. A $10,000 educational loan that was only partially paid was completely dismissed simply because no one ever filed the claim. "That was the biggest shock of all," Martha said.

"It takes a lot for a person to walk into a lawyer's office and finally admit defeat, because that's what you're admitting when you file bankruptcy." said Dean Rucker, co-partner with his father, H.J. "You're saying, 'I can't do it anymore. I can't make it.' These people aren't looking for an easy way out. They need some chance to get on their feet again. That's what the bankruptcy act is there for."

It is this reasoning that has prompted consumer credit organizations and lending institutions to question the constitionality of Chapter 13. Credit leaders have organized across the country to protest the debtor's ability to duck bills he might otherwise pay.

A major complaint is that persons are using bankruptcy who do not need it. People are filing who have substantial incomes and assets, and often, had not been delinquent prior to drawing up their petitions.

According to a June 1980 article in Forbes magazine, bankruptcy is becoming almost as common as divorce. Statistics indicate the number of bankruptcies in 1980 totaled more than 335,000 — up 40 percent from 1979. The article pointed out that U.S. bankruptcy courts have redistributed $70 billion in liabilities and another $40 billion in debtor assets for a net loss to creditors of $30 billion.

In testimony before the Subcommitte on Courts of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, held April 3, experts claimed the current bankruptcy situation will cause "irreparable damage if it isn't addressed promptly and forcefully." In a recent issue of the Associated Credit Bureau's newsletter, major department store losses were brought to the forefront.

For example, J.C. Penney's bankruptcy losses were reported to have increased from $10.3 million in 1979 to $20.7 million in 1980, or 102 percent. For the fiscal year ending Jan. 31, 1981, Sears reported losses of $46.2 million. This was a 120.4 percent increase when compared with the fiscal year ending Jan. 31, 1980.

Testimony before the Subcommitee on Courts concluded that people are being rewarded for buy-now, pay-later binges. Said a representative from the Consumer Bankers Association: "Debtors have been given the ability, indeed even the 'right', to legally walk out on legitimate and payable debts."

Halsell agreed people are going unpunished for abusing their credit cards. Keeping up with the Joneses has never been stronger.

"There's finally been a realization that the credit revolution is not making this country any better," he said. "The gods of the marketplace have risen too fast. People are sick if they're not able to purchase certain things. They've been sold too many times over the television set."

Admitted one Odessa man who overdosed on credit to the point that his little house of cards collapsed: "You go and get yourself in debt just trying to keep up. If credit hadn't been so easy, I probably would not have had to declare bankruptcy."

Most local attorneys expect the record filings to continue nationwide and to gain more leverage in this area. Then, they predict America's work ethnic will reassert itself.

It has — at least partially — for Charles McNary, who is now barely breaking even in his garage shop. "Given a choice between sinking and swimming, I'd rather swim, even if it is a long way," he said. "But, if it comes to the point where I can't make these monthy payments, I'll just go right back and file bankruptcy."

Toastmasters promote better communication

Joe was a nervous man. His palms were sweaty, the blood was rushing to his head. He was dizzy, lightheaded, and oblivious to anyone around him.

Joe was about to make a speech.

If you're one of the many that go through this same misery when speaking before an audience, whether large or small, then you're not alone, according to John Slyker, an international director of Toastmasters International and member of the Pop-Up Toastmasters in Midland.

Speaking before a group with confidence is only one of the many objects of the organization, he said.

Slyker is only one of group who meets at 6:30 a.m. every Tuesday at Sambo's Restaurant. Other units in Midland include the Tall Town Toastmasters, the Permian Tostmasters and the Articuladies Toastmistress Club.

The non-profit organization is open to anyone over 18 years of age.

Main purposes of the club are the development of better communication skills through speaking, listening and thinking; and education through self-improvement, according to John D'Hooge, Pop-Up president.

The international group is active in 47 countries, is composed of over 4,000 clubs and has an excess of 80,000 membership.

Members are a varied type, with the Pop-Up group composed of members who are engineers, certified public accountants, geologists, pastors, pharmacists, mudloggers, insurance professionals and others.

One man said that the improvement he has made through Toastmasters has been a definite advantage to his job. This was evidenced by his job review which said that his communication skills had improved vastly over a year's time.

One member was to present a paper before a national convention. He was in a panic because he had never done anything like that before, and though he was confident of his subject, was unprepared to face a large audience. Membership in the club helped him reach thst objective.

One man who had been a member for little more than a year presented a talk on how to sell a specific product of which he had no knowledge. His background in Toastmasters, however, prepared him for the speech, which was such a success that he was asked to present it several more times.

"The club also participates in several projects, though personal development is really our main goal," explained Slyker.

He said that Toastmasters has a local Speakers Bureau in which members are available to speak on any number of topics before civic groups. The club also sponsors an annual Youth Leadership Course, a shortened communication course for young people under 18 years of age.

In addition, the club hosts a Speech Craft, a shortened course for persons over 18 who aren't Toastmasters.

Organization is one key to the international group's success. Though members and visitors are not pressured to make speeches, they are encouraged to do so. Each meeting has a brief session devoted to "table topics" in which volunteers give an impromptu one minute speech on a selected subject.

Speeches can be as simple as "The Ice Breaker," in which the objectives are to begin speaking before an audience, to help understand what areas require particular emphasis in speaking development, and to introduce the speaker to fellow club members. This speech can range from four to six minutes.

Another speech might be "Show What You Mean," in which objectives are to learn the value of gesture and body movements as part of a speech; to explore the diferent ways of using body language; and to develop a sense of timing and natural, smooth body movement.

Evaluations of each person are made by qualified persons and are based on criteria furnished in the Toastmasters book.

Persons interested in the organization should call D'Hooge at 684-7411 or 683-6823.

Carrots hardy

STREAMWOOD, Ill (AP) — Carrots are among the "hardiest and easiest to grow" vegetables. They even thrive when grown indoors in a plant container filled with sand.

Ample watering and fertilizing are important and a five-inch deep planter is sufficient, report the makers of Garden Scene planterware.

A crop is generally ready to harvest three months after planting. The carrot planted in sand can be pulled out with little risk of damage, an advantage when harvesting.

Products for the home

But during a recent week in July, she was in Chicago talking up a new measuring cup of her own design. This summer Dorothy Tuggle appeared in a new role — as a housewares manufacturer.

It may be one measure of the vitality and strength of the American housewares industry that it has a place for entrepreneurs like Mrs. Tuggle. With retail sales in 1980 of $35 billion, according to the National Housewares Manufacturers Association, housewares are big business. But the industry has been receptive to small-timers who believe they have built a better mousetrap and aim to build a business on the feat.

Mrs. Tuggle said she got her product idea while in the kitchen doing some baking. It is a plastic measuring cup in two parts. A removable base permits easier filling, leveling and ejecting of sticky ingredients such as peanut butter, molasses and shortening.

Marketing her invention was a family affair.

"My husband made a model for me out of my idea so I could test it. I found that it worked. So I decided to invest some money to produce the cup on a large scale," she said at the semiannual National Housewares Exposition in Chicago.

Her sister wrote her advertising copy. She took her own product pictures and she enlisted a friend to help staff her booth at the housewares show. At the show, she was one of 1,777 manufacturers, large and small. Though the exhibitors were varied, their aim was the same: to sell their products to enough of the 60,000 retailers and others who attended the market to stay in business.

Mrs. Tuggle estimated it cost her about $20,000 to reach the show — $11,000 to have a mold made so the product could be mass produced; $4,000 in other product development costs; $4,000 in advertising expenses, and about $1,000 for show expenses. She will consider her experiment a success if she can clear $5,000, she said.

Stories such as Mrs. Tuggle's are one reason a number of retailers find the housewares market interesting to attend. There is always an abundance of ingenious products to look at, to evaluate and perhaps to buy.

This summer's market proved that earlier generations had no corner on ingenuity, especially when it came to gadgets.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

Re-use your whole cloves

Dear Heloise: After paying over a dollar for a container of whole cloves, I hated to have to throw away the ones I'd used only once while baking a ham.

So, I put them into a strainer and, after rinsing them well and allowing them to dry completely on a paper towel, I used them again at a later date.

They did not lose their scent and flavor as far as I could tell. I stored them in a glass jar to keep them separate from the unused cloves. — Mary Lawicka

FALLING LEAVES

Dear Heloise: In the fall of the year, I put good old nylon net over my white rock bed to catch the leaves falling from the trees.

After the trees are bare, I lift the four corners of the net and shake the leaves and trash into a bag.

LONGER LASTING

Dear Heloise: My little boy adores those pocket cars and I have found a fast and effective way to make the kind that are metal and have painted designs on them last a little longer.

I apply a few coats of clear fingernail polish, letting each coat dry thoroughly before adding the next.

The paint doesn't chip off after being handled a few times. My son is thrilled to know that his special cars will not turn into old jalopies so quickly. — Happy Mom and Guy

A 'SODA' A DAY...

Dear Heloise: Put an aluminum foil container, or jar lids filled with baking soda in your closets, under sofas, chairs, beds, etc.

Fetal Alcohol Syndrome hard for physicians to recognize

By BARBARA HUSTON
Hearst Feature Service

The attractive young woman was in more trouble than she knew.

She was pregnant, she had heard about the fetal alcohol syndrome, and she couldn't stop drinking. She was drinking a fifth a day.

But Nancy O'Day (not her real name) wasn't quite convinced that fetal alcohol syndrome (FAS) was real. After all, her obstetrician hadn't mentioned it.

Nancy doesn't have a drinking problem, the obstetrician said firmly. She's never late for appointments, she's always well dressed and she never smells of alcohol.

But when Nancy's baby was born, it had the markedly delicate body, bridgeless small snub nose, thin upper lip and irreversible mental retardation of the classic fetal alcohol syndrome child.

Doctors recognize this birth defect syndrome. But few recognize the drinking madonna who gives birth to one. She goes to great lengths to hide her alcoholism and she's likely to look perfect.

The U.S.surgeon-general has warned that pregnant women should avoid even as little as one ounce once a day of alcohol or risk endangering the health of their unborn child.

The drinking mother-to-be may give birth to the one in 750 babies born with the full fetal alcohol syndrome, the only birth defect whose cause is known and which is avoidable.

If she consumes five or six drinks a day, there's a 50 percent chance her baby will have the less severe fetal alcohol effects (FAE), which include learning and behavior problems, and one or more of the FAS physical symptoms.

If a pregnant woman has one or more drinks a day, she doubles the risk of spontaneous early abortion or later miscarriage.

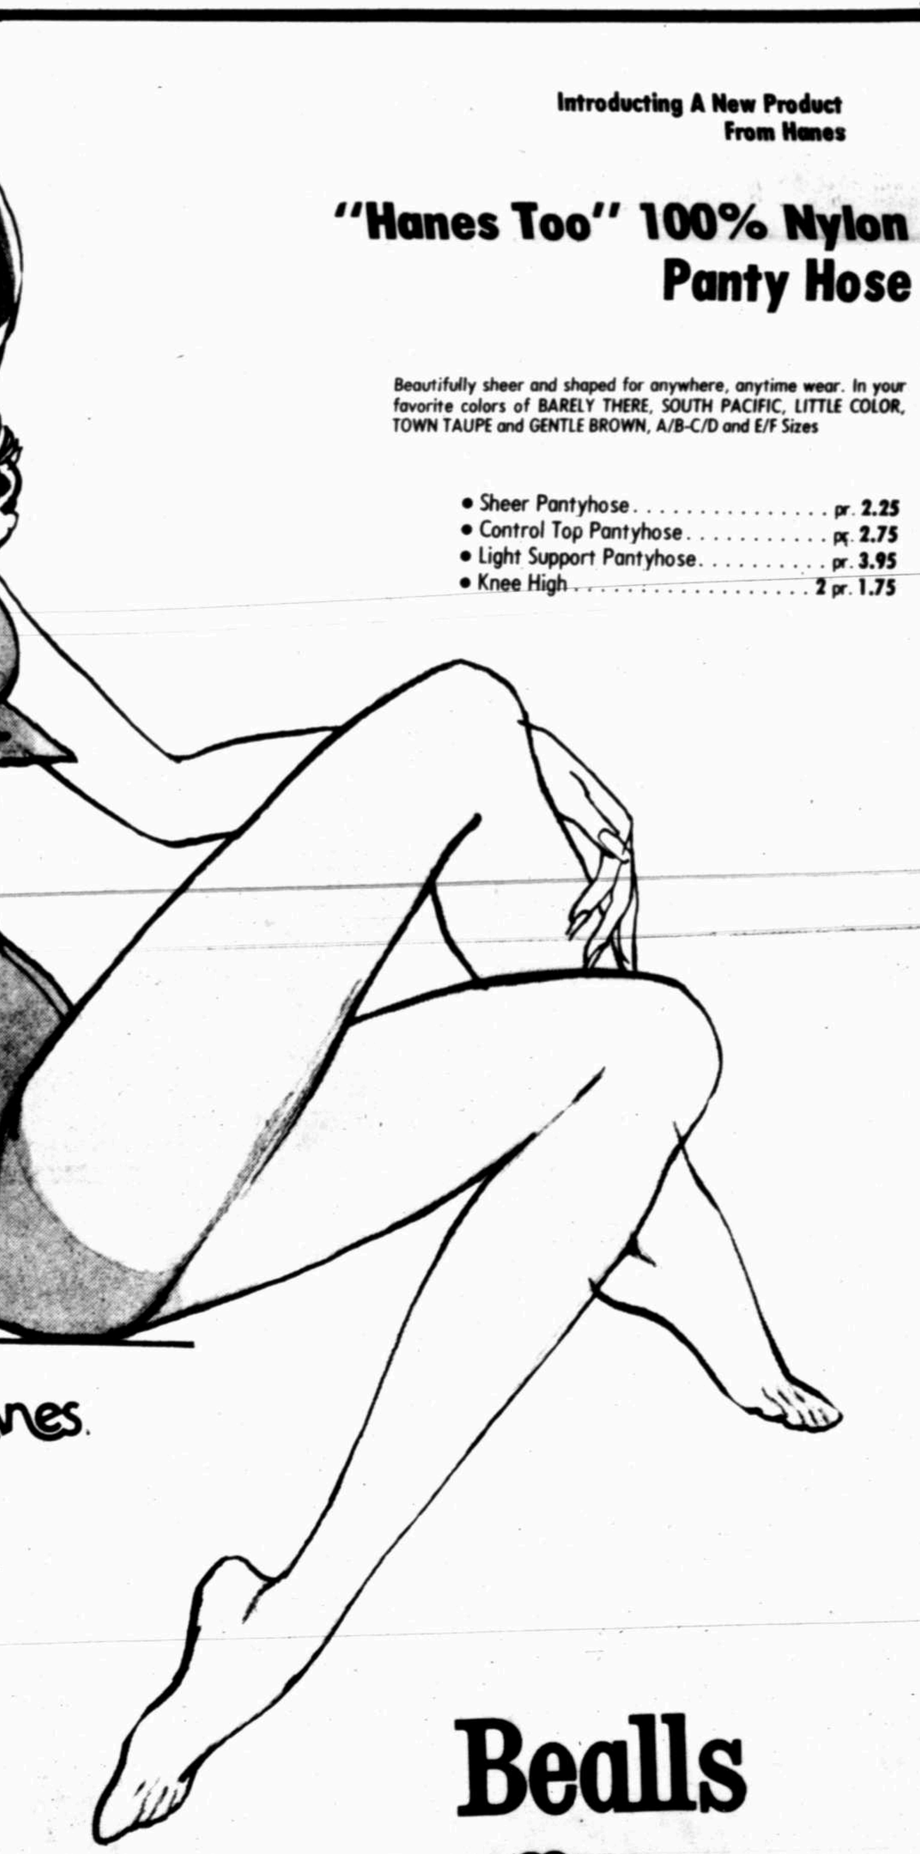

Treating childbirth and drinking in one patient actually treats two patients. A baby can be saved from fetal alcohol syndrome and a woman's alcoholism can be caught in its early stages.

Doctors are less aware of this double whammy than the mothers themselves. Doctors have never been trained to spot alcohol abuse until it reaches the late stages.

Alcoholism is a progressive disease so easily denied that it usually takes a crisis to open the eyes of its victim. If a pregnant woman discovers she cannot stop drinking, even though she may be harming her baby, that's a crisis.

Poll shows parents play too

LANGHORNE, Pa. (AP) — When Sesame Place opened here last year, it was planned as a playground where youngsters from 3 to 13 could flex their minds and muscles.

But a poll of parents taken during the first season showed that the older paying patrons wanted to take part in the activities, too. So most of the 42 elements at the park's part-futuristic playground have been adapted to accommodate adults right along with the kids.

Now they, also, can dive into a "pool" of 80,000 hollow plastic balls; punch their way through a forest of 6-foot lightweight punching bags or get a bird's eye view from cargo nets strung four stories high across the park. Adults also are invited to match wits with the collection of 60 computer games and hands-on science experiments which offer discoveries about light and sound.

Poor mathematical genius

STATE COLLEGE, Pa. (AP) — Srinivasa Ramanujan, who died some 60 years ago when he was 32, is considered to be one of the giants of 20th-century mathematics, said Dr. George E. Andrews of Penn State University.

Ramanujan, a poor Indian, created his own math formulas. In college, he was so single-minded toward math that he failed other subjects. He dropped out to take a clerk's job.

Pin up door knobs for easy painting

By AL CARRELL

Almost anybody can slap a coat of paint on a big flat surface, but when it comes to painting something little like a bunch of drawer knobs, some of us end up with painted fingers and smeared knobs. Mrs. H.A.J. sent me a snapshot of a gadget she made for spray painting drawer knobs. She uses a spring type clothespin for each knob. A section of coat hanger wire is cut and inserted into the coil part of the spring. Then the tip of each end of the wire is bent down at right angles. These tips are inserted into a hole punched in the bottom of a pair of inverted tin cans so the clothespins are suspended hanging down between the cans. The clothespins can hold the small parts for spraying and can be moved back and forth along the wire for access by the spray. You end up with a neat job plus no painted pinkies.

Dear Al: Even though I've never had to use it, I have a fire hose hooked up within my home just in case. It's a regular garden hose hooked up to the drain spigot on my water heater. Our water has so many chemicals that we have to drain sediment off of the bottom of the water heater tank about every three months. I decided to just leave the hose hooked up. Since the water heater is located in almost the center of the house, the hose would reach to any part of the house. I have also used an old bar-b-que glove as a handle on the hose since the water heats up the hose considerably. This glove is sewed in place. This might be a good idea for others if the heater is in the right part of the house. — J. McD.

Dear Al: When I reupholstered a couch, about half of the decorative upholstery tacks that I took out got bent. I'm like you and never throw away anything, so I saved all those tacks. I just found a use for them. I snipped off the decorative heads and glued them over screw heads on some lawn furniture I built. This is a lot better looking than the screw heads. Of course, I still have several dozen more bent tacks. — R.S.

A SUPER HINT — I guess anyone who has moved out of an apartment has their own method of patching holes left from picture hangers. One I just tried is to make a paste from shredded facial tissues and white all-purpose glue. This is sort of like papier-mache. When the holes are filled and it dries, which is in a very short time, it can immediately be painted over. I also experimented with using this patch in a loose screw hole. I inserted the same screw after the paste set up, and it is holding well. I wouldn't rely on it for holding a heavy weight, but for a cabinet hinge, it worked fine.

Dear Al: I had to make some repairs to my composition roof which is covered with white granules. I found that the patching compound available was black, and since the patches would be on the front of the house, I didn't feel the work would look too good. Then I came up with a brainstorm. I had noticed that there were lots of the white granules that had come off and collected in the gutters. I used a whisk broom and gathered as much of the white stuff as I could. Then as I smeared the black patching compound over the problem areas, I sprinkled the white granules into the patch. These were then pressed in, and I really came out with a pretty good-looking hidden repair. — R.R.Y.

Employees speak out

STAMFORD, Conn. (AP) — Keeping the pipeline open between employees and management is a goal for many companies.

One way to do this is with annual jobholders' meetings. Pitney Bowes, for example, has held these meetings for the past 35 years. They are face-to-face exchanges between top management and employees structured much like annual shareholders meetings.

A calling to nurse

By JOHN BOGERT
Copely News Service

LOS ANGELES — In a world where money talks and few people listen, in a time when power and ME are seemingly all, she and her kind stand apart.

Well, not exactly apart. A woman doesn't rise each morning and put in God knows how many hours tending wounds of passion and the needs of the sick and dying and come away unscathed.

Of course, Sister Barbara McAuley never expected to get through her work as a sister in the Little Company of Mary without facing the trials of life.

After all, the order was founded 104 years ago by Mother Mary Potter to care for the sick in England's industrialized Midlands.

And though the order has grown to 600 sisters running 44 health-care facilities around the world working, as does Sister Barbara, in highly technical medical specialties, the goal remains the same.

Trouble is, though you can talk to Sister Barbara about the realities of her work as a head nurse, the reasons for her work and dedication are as spiritually far removed from this world as her highly technical work is removed from the work of her order's founder.

The 10 sisters at Little Company of Mary Hospital have taken vows of poverty, chastity and obedience, making their life not unlike the lives of other religious women, but far different from the lives of most of their co-workers.

Some might even be shocked by the fact that their salaries are sent to the mother house in Chicago which in turn re-delivers to them a living wage and the wherewithal to run a communal lifestyle in the convent adjacent to the nearby Torrance hospital.

The contradiction here is that what may be judged a hardship by some of us is considered a strength to the sisters of the order.

"We get what we need to live on," says the Chicago-born Sister Barbara. "But money is not a big thing. Some of the work our sisters do has no great monetary value and some of our older sisters have long since put their working lives behind them, but in the community we don't look at it that way.

"The caring for one an other, the love, the support is what counts, the sharing.

"We go through the same common, ordinary struggles everyone else faces but here in our community we have women who have gone through it already and can help share the load."

The motivation is, of course, spiritual.

"Our founder saw men and women dying alone, away from the Lord. She had a special calling to help people to die with dignity and with grace."

And she says it was a calling, a drawing forward by the powers that be, that brought her from ordinary nursing student to sister.

"There were sisters in the nursing classes where I went to school and, therefore, a lot of social interfacing. I felt an immediate drawing toward them but I didn't let it be known until I did a lot of questioning.

"I felt a close kinship to Jesus and I wanted to do something for him and for people through nursing, I know this sounds very general and syrupy, but the feeling I got 17 years ago is what brought me here.

"As Mary stood at the foot of the cross ministering to her Son we, seeing his likeness in all of us, do the same."

Despite the goodness of her intent the world does not always meet her halfway. In fact, the going can get downright difficult.

"I am no longer shocked by the cruelty of life.

"In fact, I have grown up with it. Here we deal with every kind of human need. Many things remain submerged until hospital time and then people lash out or need someone to talk to.

"A sister is supposed to be compassionate. A sister also represents the church and God. Sometimes people have painful memories of the church or they're angry with God.

"The secret of staying fresh and staying compassionate in this work is to know when your own batteries need recharging, when you need to find yourself again.

"Still, I have to admit that man's cruelty assailed me at first, but in the last few years I've become peaceful inside. I've developed a different outlook and I believe all this somehow fits God's plan. I don't know how or why and I don't condone it. Life isn't always fair, but I feel called to prevail in any situation I come in touch with.

DEAR ABBY

Productivity of 'partnership' worries parents

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Our 26-year-old son (I'll call him Tom) came waltzing into our home one evening with his girlfriend (Gloria) on his arm, announcing to us that Gloria is three months' pregnant! They've known each other barely six months.

First of all, Tom is going to college full time and works only part time, while Gloria has a full-time job as a waitress. He can't even support himself, much less a family.

What floors us is they say they have no plans to get married now or after the baby comes! Gloria has been married twice before and isn't even fully divorced from her last husband. She refers to our son as her "pal," her "buddy" and her "best friend." No mention of love. They refer to their relationship as a "partnership."

They are trying to come up with a nice name for the baby — first and last! Gloria doesn't want it to have her husband's last name, and Tom said he doesn't want the baby to have his last name either, so they will pick a name they both like. Have you ever heard of anything so crazy?

Abby, we brought this boy up right, and his attitude is beyond us. We are able to help him financially, but he says he will not accept any kind of help from us.

Is this a new trend among young people or what? — GRANDMOTHER-TO-BE

DEAR GRANDMOTHER: If this is a new trend, I'm behind the times. If your son refuses any kind of help from you (at the moment), there is nothing you can do. Write again in seven months and let me know if he has had a change of heart. I'm betting he will.

(Getting married? Whether you want a formal church wedding or a simple "do- your-own-thing" ceremony, get Abby's new booklet. Send $1 plus a long, self-addressed, stamped (35 cents) envelope to: Abby's Wedding Booklet, 12060 Hawthorne Blvd., Suite 5000, Hawthorne, Calif. 90250.)

Decor score: Update your den

By BARBARA HARTUNG
Copley News Service

Q. I am trying to give our family room an updated look. We have an odd assortment of pieces of upholstered furniture in the room which creates a sort of cast-off look to the area. The family room is separated from the rest of our house and is used by three adults for lounging, entertaining, reading and watching television.

Please suggest some ideas for creating a pleasant room. We like rather traditional decorating but want some color in the room.

I have recently acquired a patterned rug — a cotton copy of an Oriental which I thought I would use in the room. Its colors are navy blue, red, cream, beige and brown. — W.P.

A. You might start by arranging the room in the most comfortable and functional way. Do you need space for your television and stereo and books? If so, consider the installation of some bookshelves for your entertainment center. Use the cream from your rug for the walls, reupholster the various upholstered pieces in either red or navy blue to give a cohesive look to the room and tie all of the pieces together. Drape your windows in fresh cream fabric — heavily textured if you don't need the privacy.

Q. I've recently seen rooms decorated wth bouffant window shades — variations of the Austrian shade. I would like to know how to make these. Do you know were I might find the directions? — E.P.U.

A. You should try to obtain a copy of "The Shade Book," by Judy Lindahl. This 122-page paperback tells how to make roller, Roman, balloon and Austrian shades, helping you visualize the process through many drawings. If you can't find it at your fabric shop, the author's address is 3211 NE Siskiyou, Portland, Ore., 97212. Price is $4.95

They grow weeds on purpose in Indiana

By JOHN M. DOYLE
Associated Press Writer

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Weeds. They strangle tomato plants, suck nutrients away from corn and soybeans and break the hearts of weekend gardeners.

Pesky growths like milkweed, foxtails, Jimson weeds and dandelions are raised on one third of an acre, says Dr. Tom Bauman, who admits that the idea of growing weeds on purpose "was primarily mine."

Bauman and a graduate student grow about 100 different varieties of weeds. Each has its own four-foot-square plot and is identified by its scientific and common names.

In fact, at Purdue they don't just grow weeds: They cultivate them.

"We do fertilize them. On occasion, we actually spray them with insecticide, but that's not very frequent," Bauman says, adding that he has to "weed the weeds" from time to time to keep them separated.

Why grow weeds when they abound in nature? Bauman, a weed specialist with Purdue's department of botany and plant pathology, says the weed garden is a valuable tool in teaching agricultural students, farmers and herbicide producers how to identify certain weeds at different times of the year.

"It's been a plus to have them growing outside to compare them, because some of them are quite similar," Bauman says. To that end, the Purdue weed garden has three kinds of thistles, six kinds of foxtails, four types of milkweeds, three varieties of morning glories and assorted types of nightshade, Jimson weed, cocklebur, velvet leaf and Johnson grass.

"We try to have the same weeds that are primarily found in Indiana," Bauman, 41, says.

The weed garden also comes in handy for illustrating textbooks and manuals on weed control, he says.

The expression "growing like a weed," doesn't always apply to weeds, Bauman says. "We have problems with the annual weeds dying out. Sometimes we have to go back and reseed.

"It's much more difficult than growing crops. You can get them (weeds) where you don't want them, but it's hard to keep them where you want them."

Another problem Bauman faces is keeping his charges from reproducing outside the weed garden. "We try to harvest all the seed off them, to prevent the weeds from growing."

Bauman, who has been at Purdue for five years, says weed control is a major branch of agricultural research.

"There's a whole journal put out six times a year by the Weed Science Society of America," says Bauman, whose own doctoral degree is in weed science.

In addition to the weed garden plot, Bauman also grows weeds in corn and soybean stands on the Purdue farm to see what they may do to crop yield.

"They compete with the crops for nutrients like moisture," he says, adding "there is some evidence that they can interfere with the chemistry of an emerging plant, but that's not well documented yet."

AT WIT'S END

Who is more heroic?

By ERMA BOMBECK

Ironically, the two events happened within a day of one another.

On the day before, five blind mountain climbers, one man with an artificial leg, an epileptic and two deaf adventurers stood atop the snow-capped summit of Mount Rainier.

It was a noisy victory for the tennis player who shared it with 14,000 fans, some of whom had slept on the sidewalks outside the club for six nights waiting for standing-room-only tickets.

It was a quiet victory for the climbers who led their own cheering, punctuated by a shout from one of them that echoed on the winds, "There's one for the epileptics." Two wouldn't have heard the cheering had there been any.

The controversy that surrounded the tennis player's frequent outbursts of temper was justified by pressure. "It's not easy when it's a one-on-one situation. You have to prove yourself."

There was a man who climbed the mountain who took 20 minutes to tie his own shoe.

There was a lot of rhetoric exchanged at Wimbledon regarding "bad calls."

At Mount Rainier they learned to live with life's "bad calls" a long time ago. The first man to reach the mountaintop tore up his artificial leg to get there.

Somehow, in all of this I see a parallel that all Americans are going to have to come to grips with. In our search for heroes and heroines, we often lose our perspective.

We applaud beauty pageant winners; we ignore the woman without limbs who paints pictures with a brush in her teeth. We extol the courage of a man who will sail over ten cars on a motorcycle. We give no thought (or parking place) to the man who threads his way through life in a world of darkness and silence.

The care and feeding of heroes is solely in the hands of the public. Not all winners are heroes. Not all handicapped people are heroes. "Hero" is a term that should be awarded to those who, given a set of circumstances, react with courage, dignity, decency and compassion. People who make us feel better for having seen or touched them.

I think the crowds went to the wrong summit and cheered the wrong champion.

Passion replaced by tenderness, according to French sociologist

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
European Correspondent,
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — The 1960s obsession with sexual satisfaction is a thing of the past. For young adults of the 80s, passion has been replaced by tenderness.

So says French sociologist Jean Duvignaud who claims to have made the discovery while researching his new book, "The French and Their Taboos."

"All of the sexual hangups of the sixties seem excessive and even slightly foolish to young people today," he said. "They're much more relaxed about it all than was the first generation of those who experienced sexual liberation.

"Most of the young people I interviewed found the intensity and anguish over the purely physical — or, as some of them put it, the mechanical — aspects of sex that was a common experience 20 years ago hard to believe. To them, it's like 19th century sentimentality to us — something out of an entirely different era that doesn't make sense any more."

Today's young adults, he explained, regard sex less and less as the most consequential aspect of life or of their relationship with a partner.

"The notion that if one fails to achieve orgasm, one is somehow failing to achieve a personal identity was axiomatic to the sexual liberationists of the 60s," he said. "When you tell that to young people in their twenties nowadays, they look astonished at first and then they break into loud laughter."

The search for the "perfect" sexual performance — the 1960s equivalent of the search for El Dorado — has been abandoned. Duvignaud says that it isn't that young adults don't want an enjoyable sex life. They are simply skeptical.

"They have grown up in a world where virtually anything and everything is easily available," he pointed out. "But, precisely because of that, they are more aware than their predecessors that the one thing which isn't likely to be available in sex or anything else is perfection."

That kind of view might have been expected to breed cynicism. In fact, Duvignaud believes, the opposite is true.

"It's a generation with a deeper interest in human relationships from a different standpoint," he said. "What used to be called 'tenderness' is making a comeback in force."

According to him, tenderness implies a feeling that relations should be based on long-term factors of compromise and adjustment.

"At one and the same time, it is both more practical and more romantic," he explained. "Those are the kind of young adults I met in abundance in the course of my researches for my book — practical romantics."

Because they don't expect to achieve some emotional height of sexual ecstasy, they regard "passion" as an emotion encountered in novels and old-fashioned movies but seldom, if ever, in real life.

"Passion is something the present generation just doesn't take seriously," he said. "And even if it did, in the great majority of cases, they would want to avoid it. They distrust it because, in their eyes, it is a distortion, a lack of honesty. To young people of today, honesty in relations is, far and away, the critical factor."

Duvignaud predicted that a "revolutionary change in the sentimental ambiance" is underway. Its fruits will be clearly seen before the turn of the century.

One result of it, he foresees, will be a marked decline in the divorce rate in advanced Western nations like France and the U.S.

"The expectations with which couples will enter into marriage are still going to be great," he said. "But they will be both more obtainable and, above all, less subject to blows dealt by the passage of time. That will mean fewer divorces."

Artificial fertilization largely a failure, according to medical association report

CHICAGO (AP) -- Despite the birth of the first "test tube" baby three years ago, artificial fertilization is still largely a failure, says an official at the National Institute of Child Health and Human Development.

In an article in the Aug. 7 issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association, Gary Hodgen reports although significant achievements have been made, "the rate of success is disappointing."

Since the 1978 birth of Louise Brown in England, less than 10 successful "test tube" births have been reported in the world. The failures are estimated to number in the hundreds, wrote Hodgen, chief of the pregnancy research branch of the institute in Bethesda, Md.

Nevertheless, Hodgen and other doctors indicate "test tube" researph is still in its infancy and may have a better success rate later.

In recent years, many patients have looked to the "test tube" baby approach as a possible solution for infertility.

The procedure consists of fertilizing an egg in the laboratory, then reimplanting it in the womb.

Hodgen said the method is ust one of many alternative solutions being studied and that in the future, a woman who is considered infertile may be able to select from various methods that will enhance her chances of pregnancy.

But at this point, Hodgen said, while many women are taking steps leading to "test tube" births, "an individual couple may have a small chance of becoming parents."

As many as a half-million women in the United States are infertile as a result of fallopian tube dysfunction, the report says.

Hodgen said many "test tube" births fail beca7se fertilized embryos grow properly for only 24 hours. After that, growth slows and prevents the normal development of all but a few of the implanted embryos.

Preparations underway for Annual Day luncheon, sale

Preparations have already begun for Annual Day sponsored by the Midland County Extension Homemakers.

The event will be Oct. 23 at the Midland County Exhibit Building, E. Highway 80.

Activities will include a salad luncheon beginning at 11:30 a.m. Luncheon tickets will be $3.

Primary feature will be club booths in which members will have handmade items and baked goods for sale.

The clubs also take this opportunity to show displays of their work done throughout the year and to exhibit club and council scrapbooks. 4-H members also assist in Annual Day activities.

Salad cookbooks composed of recipes for dishes at the luncheon and other recipes will also be available at a small charge.

Annual Day is the only fundraising event of the Extension Clubs and Council each year. Profits will be used for countywide extension homemakers activities, special projects and to send delegates to state and district meetings.

The individual clubs and the council have contributed to the Midland Crime Prevention Commission, Christmas in April program, Dress A Live Doll program, to needy families, 4-H scholarships, 4-H camp at Brownwood and other projects.

The Council is made up of six extension homemaker clubs whih meet in the daytime and three clubs that meet at night. This gives any interested person a choice of meeting times and dates. Members ages range from 20 to 80 plus.

Six or more people may form a new club by contacting the Midland Couonty Extension Office at 682-9481, ext. 433

By KARREN MILLS
Associated Press Writer

EDINA, Minn. (AP) — Putting aside her modesty to enter the Mrs. Minnesota contest was a small price to pay, Joan Sewall says, if it meant she could help save the lives of other women and make those women happier.

Mrs. Sewall, who had both of her breasts removed and reconstructed two years ago, was crowned Mrs. Minnesota for 1981 and tied for fifth place in the Mrs. America pageant in Las Vegas this year.

She said she didn't like the idea of beauty contests, but entered the competition because she had a message she wanted to get across and decided the competition would be the best way to reach a large audience.

Her message:

Women who face a high risk of developing breast cancer should know they have the option — although controversial — of having their breasts removed and rebuilt before the cancer develops.

And women who have their breasts removed and reconstructed, either as a preventive measure or because they have developed cancer, should know that clothing can indeed look great on them.

"I also wanted to show that age does not mean fat, cellulose and being put on the shelf," said Mrs. Sewall, a lithe, 46-year-old mother of three sons who stands 5-foot-8 and weighs 125 pounds.

"I was the oldest of all the contestants in both pageants," she said. "In Chicago, where the Mrs. Minnesota pageant was held, the average age was 26. In Las Vegas, the contestants ranged from 20 to 46."

Mrs. Sewall had a double subcutaneous mastectomy and reconstruction because she had fibrocystic disease and faced an extremely high risk of developing cancer.

"I felt for a time that no one would want to look at me again," said Mrs. Sewall, who worked as a model before her marriage.

But Mrs. Sewall is not a quitter. She resumed her modeling career, putting together a one-woman musical fashion show for presentation to women's organizations, conventions, luncheons, church groups or any other interested people. She works in cooperation with department stores.

Mrs. Sewell presented her fashion show in the talent competition of both the Mrs. Minnesota and Mrs. America pageants.

Not until the end of the fashion show does she disclose that she has had her breasts removed and reconstructed. And to those in the audience who didn't know beforehand, the disclosure is usually a big surprise.

Competing in the pageants wasn't easy for Mrs. Sewall, however.

"I have my privacy and my modesty. I had a very hard time wearing that low-cut bathing suit that everyone has to wear in the the swimsuit competition. I'd never wear anything like that normally," she said.

"But you put your toe in the water and you find that you can do it," Mrs. Sewall said, adding that she received strong support from her family and friends.

Mrs. Sewall is a veteran when it comes to knowing the importance of such support in a crisis.

She and her husband, Michael, found out 18 years ago that their oldest son, Christopher, now 22, is mentally handicapped.

"I didn't think I could handle it. It took several years. It's been a growing time," Mrs. Sewall said. "I've learned by having all these things happen that we all have our limitations in all areas."

Then, two years ago, she found herself facing another crisis — fibrocystic disease — which made her chances of developing breast cancer 2½ times greater than the average. She had many cysts in each breast, any one of which could have become cancerous. There were too many cysts to make biopsy feasible in determining if any of the cysts were malignant, she said.

"Normally, one woman in 11 will develop breast cancer," she said, "and 35,000 women will die of breast cancer in the United States this year."

Mrs. Sewall said she had consulted with several doctors before making the decision to undergo the controversial surgery, in which doctors removed the breast tissue, then inserted silicone bags filled with saline solution behind the chest muscle to form new breasts.

HINTS FROM HELOISE

DEAR HEARTS:

When it rains, it pours! Months go by and then, all of a sudden, it seems as if everyone comes up with the same problem or perhaps everyone just decides to write me about it at the same moment.

This time all the mail is about deodorant and perspiration stains on the underarms of T-shirts, blouses, shirts, and mostly men's undershirts.

No amount of scrubbing, soaking, threatening or cussin' seems to remove that crusty whatever that has taken over an otherwise clean garment.

What's causing it, you ask? Well, I in turn asked the SDA (Soap and Detergent Association) because if anyone ought to know, they should, right?

Well, dears, they had some pretty sensible ideas about what causes this dilemma, so I'll pass them along to you in hopes they will solve the mysterious problem which seems to be taking over the nation's laundry rooms.

The main culprit is probably water temperature. Now I know a lot of us in the name of conservation have resorted to using cold water to wash everything. That's fine. We need to conserve energy whenever possible but sometimes we just have to go back to our old ways to get a job done right.

Between perspiration and the many ingredients in deodorants, not to mention the numerous man-made fibers that no longer are 100 percent cotton, it's a wonder our whites ever get white again.

The SDA suggests that, when washing whites we use the hottest water safe for the fabric. Hot water is necessary to dissolve and break up the residue of the anti-perspirants and deodorants we use every day. Pretreating is also suggested to help eliminate the stains left behind.

If you prefer not to use hot water on some of your stained laundry, the SDA says remember that the colder the water, the more detergent you should use. Experiment and see what works best with the kind of water in your area. Hard water also plays a part. The harder the water, the harder your detergent has to work. Powdered water softener helps.

Did you ever stop to think that some areas have colder water than others too? Some have wells, or underground water reservoirs, while others get their water from lakes and above-ground storage tanks. That does make a temperature difference, so keep it in mind.

Hope these little tidbits of info from our good friends at SDA have shed some light on the subject and will help stop your washday blues. At least now you know you're not alone. — Hugs, Heloise

SIMPLE MATHEMATICS

Dear Heloise: The lady who wrote that she's always buying the wrong length shoestrings for her kids' shoes because she can't remember the right length, should try my tip.

Having sold childrens' shoes for two years while in school, one thing I learned was to multiply six by the number of lace holes on one side of the shoe. For instance, if there are five holes going up one side, five times six is 30, so you'll need 30-inch laces.

Just brush up on your sixes and you've got it made. Six times three is 18. — Jaclyn

Dear Heloise: Here's my favorite way to season popcorn.

After it's all popped, pour on melted margarine or butter, then sprinkle on one of those packets of cheese that comes in those boxed cheese dinners.

LANSING, Mich. (AP) — Parental pressure notwithstanding, most students feel they make their own career choices, reports a new study from the Michigan Department of Education.

In a survey focused on vocational education, 56.5 percent of the students queried said they were themselves the most "influential individual" in helping make a career or job choice. High-school guidance counselors had similar perceptions, with 42 percent believing students made their own choices.

Parents — traditionally credited with much influence over career choices of their offspring — rate as influential with only 16.7 percent of high-school students. Guidance counselors said parents were the most influential 34 percent of the time.

HPL's solar-powered pipeline guard

Sunshine protects an underground pipeline

By DAVID C. SODAMANN

The oil and gas locked in underground reservoirs beneath West Texas are a part of the nation's most valuable energy stores. There is another, potentially more valuable, even more abundant, energy source in the region however, that is, as yet, virtually untapped. It seems ironic that Houston Pipe Line Company, a division of Houston Natural Gas, is among the first to draw upon the supply.

Sunshine is, of course, what we're talking about. West Texas is one of the sunniest regions in the nation. The amount of energy beaming our way is of such great quantity, that our oil and gas reserves seem but a trifle in comparison.

When the energy purveyors at Houston Pipe Line were faced with a little "energy crisis" of their own, engineers realized solar power could help resolve it. Now, the sun is protecting one of their pipelines, near Barstow. It helps to prevent expensive, leak-causing corrosion.

Pipelines are HPL's biggest investment, said Don Love, the company's assistant corrosion control superintendent. It is important they be guarded against corrosion. "Cathodic protection" is the process that gets the job done.

"When a natural, direct electric current leaves a structure, through an electrolyte (moisture in the ground, etc.), it tends to take a particle of metal with it; and that is corrosion," said John Gutierrez, corrosion control superintendant. In the case of the pipeline, he said, "Steel wants to get back to its original form, which is rust, and this (corrosion) is the way it gets back."

That's the reason gold won't corrode," he added, "because you find it that way (as a stable, shinny metal)."

"If it were 100 percent dry, you wouldn't need any cathodic protection," he said.

Cathodic protection is a way of reversing the natural process of corrosion. As a part of the process, an electric current is forced to flow into the pipeline, rather than away from it as current naturally does, and the pipe cannot corrode as rapidly as it would if unguarded.

Pipeline engineers can take advatage of the fact that currents normally flow between different sorts of metals — the same principal employeed in flashlight battaries — and, by burying the proper kind of metal along a pipeline, cause currents to flow into the pipeline, reversing the process of corrosion. This system has a number of draw backs, however, when done on a big scale.

What is usually done is; a man-made alternating current is taken from power lines, changed into a direct current, and "pumped" into the ground along pipelines. This current flows into the pipe, controlling corrosion.

That is what HPL engineers planned to do near Barstow, but there are no nearby power lines to provide the "juice" for the protection system. An alternative had to be worked out.

Many years ago, wind powered generators were used in remote areas to power the protection systems, and HPL has started experimenting with them again, but a solar powered system was chosen for the Barstow-area line.

"It's an experiment," said Gutierrez. "We wanted to go ahead and try it once. We've been pleasantly surpirsed."

There isn't much to see at the site. There is a heavy metal cabinet containing common storage batteries — much like those in a car — and a panel of guages; and there is the solar panel, a glass affair — about the size of a sliding glass patio door — mounted at an angle in an aluminum frame. That's all there is; simple but effective. It's doing quite a job.

The solar panel is made of a number of photovoltaic cells — thin, glass-like wafers, about 6 inches in diameter — which cause electric current to flow through the panel's wiring when the sun shines on them. The electrical energy the cells produce is stored in the batteries. A small amount of the power is directed into the ground, where it flows into the pipe, preventing corrosion.

(An anode is something which releases current. Something that recieves current is called a "cathode". In this system, the "cathodicly protected" pipeline is the cathode.)

The anodes were placed in a strata that does not offer much resistance to electric current; so the current can move easily along the pipeline for a great distance, increasing the protected length.

In this way, the simple, solar-powered system guards about 20 miles of pipeline, with only a fraction of the energy it actually produces.

Pipelines are usually covered with an insulating coating that limits corrosion. But, during the pipe laying process, this coating becomes scarred and torn, leaving patches of steel exposed. If these areas corrode, holes in the line can develop.

The current from the solar panel flows along the piepline, in effect, searching for these holes.

"You're protecting the holes in your coating," Gutierrez said. "The 'holidays' they call them."

"The more current you put out, ordinarily, the more protection you have," Love said.

As only the holes are being protected, he explained, but a small amount of current is needed to protect the pipeline.

"The better the coating, the better the protection," love said.

A coated pipeline can take only a certain amount of current, Gutierrez interjected, and then, as a result of chemical reactions, the coating is popped by hydrogen gas bubbles. That is why only a fraction of the energy produced by the solar panel is being released into the ground.

"It (the excess capacity) won't go to waste," Gutierrez said, "because if they lay other pipelines off of this, we have a reserve here."

The battaries are an important part of the system, Gutierrez explained. "There's enough enery stored there to run about 10 days," he said.

"We could go directly from the solar panel," he said as he laughed, "if we could tell the pipeline not to rust at night!"

Even after going to all the trouble to install the solar sytem, Gutierrez, Love, and their staff, have no way of knowing certainly the thing is working exactly as its supposed to.

"There is only one way to make sure the pipeline is not corroding," Gutierrez said, "and that is to dig it out, and look at it."

"The perfect pipeline," Gutierrez concluded, "would be one made out of solid gold. It would never corrode!"

Conoco sale could lead to wave of other mergers

NEW YORK (AP) — Conoco Inc. is safely in the grasp of Du Pont Co., at a cost of $7.7 billion, and some people think that is merely the overture to a wave of mergers that will result in a significant consolidation of American business.

"Huge lines of credit must indicate mergers are in mind," said Ralph E. Bailey, the chairman of Conoco, pointing to credit lines ranging up to $6 billion that have been arranged in recent weeks by many companies.

One of the companies that lined up at the banks was Gulf Oil Co, which will fall from No. 7 to No. 8 among the largest industrial companies after Du Pont formally acquires Conoco sometime next month. Gulf obtained commitments from banks to loan up to $5 billion.

"Possibly events will force us" to make an acquisition, simply "from the standpoint of maintaining competitive growth," said Gulf President James Lee.

Whether that will happen depends in large part on the antitrust attitude of the Justice Department. Its approval of the takeover of Conoco, the nation's ninth-largest oil company, by the largest chemical company, indicated that the government will follow through on the contention by high administration officials that "bigness in business does not necessarily mean badness."

But the Justice Department may have sidestepped one aspect of the bigness issue. Its delay of a competing bid by Mobil Corp., the second-largest oil company, killed that bid without the department having to take a position.

In the terminology of antitrust lawyers, the Du Pont-Conoco was seen as largely a "vertical merger," since Du Pont is a major user of petroleum products to make plastics and chemicals. The administration clearly approves of such combinations.

A Mobil-Conoco merger was seen as a "horizontal" combination between competing companies, although their combined market shares were so small that Mobil stoutly maintained a takeover would not violate antitrust guidelines.

It probably will take another proposal of a combination of two oil companies to get a clear view of the Reagan administration's attitude, although Mobil is still pushing for a ruling on its merger proposal. It might get one, since the Du Pont deal will not be completed until after stockholders meet, a process that will take several weeks.

When Jimmy Carter was president, the Du Pont takeover of Conoco might have run into opposition since both companies had chemical operations and were at least "potential competitors" in many products.

But the only problem the new Justice Department saw was in a joint petrochemical venture between Conoco and Monsanto Co., a major Du Pont competitor. Du Pont ended up having to buy Monsanto's interest in that venture for at least $275 million, pushing the total cost of the merger up to $7.7 billion.

Ironically, one of the things that could cause a flurry of mergers is a section of the windfall profits tax that was supposed to close a merger tax loophole. When it takes effect in 1982, it will raise the tax bill of many merged companies by changing the treatment of inventories. Thus a merger that could come this year or next might be pushed up.

One thing the Conoco case showed was that large stockholders have little if any emotional attachment to a company. "Conoco has 70,000 shareholders," said Bailey. "Probably not more than 30 people determined our fate."

Those people ran the institutions — the pension funds, insurance companies, banks and pension funds — that held a majority of Conoco stock. They were willing to sell to the highest bidder, and that meant that as soon as a bid came up, Conoco was headed for auction.

Conservation equals 7 million barrel savings

By MAX B. SKELTON
AP Oil Writer

HOUSTON (AP) — An industry study indicates energy conservation could amount to the equivalent of 7 million barrels of crude oil a day by 1990 with only minor lifestyle changes and without abrupt social changes or political actions.

Or, the Shell Oil Co. study adds, the figure could move to 12 million barrels of oil equivalent with large lifestyle changes.

The study's objective was development of a realistic estimate of the potential savings the United States might reasonable expect to achieve from energy conservation by 1990.

For comparative purposes, 1977 was used as the study's base period, with researchers saying that year was "as normal a period as there has been in the past decade."

Comparisons to trends prior to the 1973-74 Arab oil embargo, they said, would be unrealistic.

"And there was no real trend established in the several post-embargo years, as the system attempted to adjust to the many changes that occurred," the study said.

Shell therefore took 1977 energy use rates, projected economic and population growth, social and political attitudes, and developed an emergy use profile for 1990.

The projections indicated that, without any particular effort to conserve, energy use would be expected to increase from the equivalent of 35.9 million barrels of oil a day in 1977 to 47.6 million barrels in 1990.

But, Shell said, the effect of new energy realities is evident.

"Pre-embargo estimates of 1990 energy demand were about 67 million barrels a day and, as recently as a year ago, estimates were at about 55 million barrels a day," the report said.

Shell identified a variety of conservation measures and estimated the energy savings that would result at two different levels of conservation effort, moderate and intensive, by comparing each with the 1977 reference case.

Under "moderate" conservation efforts, it was estimated energy use in 1990 could be held to about 40 million barrels of crude oil equivalent a day, 16 percent below that of 1977 and a daily savings of more than 7 million barrels.

"Energy use would grow at an average rate of slightly less than 1 percent a year as new energy saving technology comes into use," the study report said.

"The moderate case would require the adoption of available new technology at 'normal' rates, consistent with moderately increasing energy prices, historic investment criteria, and equipment retirement schedules. It would not require, or result in, abrupt social changes or political actions. There would be only minor lifestyle changes, with the old system remaining available to those whose values and or purchasing power allow or dictate it."

Under the "intenstive" level of effort, the study anticipates faster energy price increases and a much greater emphasis on conservation. Shell estimates such an effort could hold energy use by 1990 to about 36 million barrels a day crude oil equivalent, 23 percent below the reference case, and a savings of 12 million barrels a day. Such a level would be slightly above current usage rates.

"Energy use would grow at an average of only 0.1 percent a year under this much stronger pressure to conserve," Shell said.

"Available energy saving technology would have to be adopted at a near maximum rate that would involve early retirement of many capital equipment items. For this to heppen, both political and economic pressure for conservation would be great, with many conservation incentive programs. There would be large lifestyle changes, with very few retaining the old style."

Shell said it was once thought that energy use could not be reduced without reducing economic growth, "but the experience over the past decade has changed that view."

The study report said the amount of energy consumed for each dollar of Gross National Product dropped steadily in the last decade.

"The energy-GNP ratio was 62 in 1970, then fell to 58 in 1975 and 56 in 1978," the report said.

"During this period the GNP grew at an average annual rate of 2.7 percent. Thus, the economy can grow without a proportionate increase in energy consumption."

Shell expects the trend to continue in the 1980s as GNP grows about 2.5 percent annually and the energy-GNP ratio declines to near 45 by 1990.

But, Shell adds, there still is much debate over the amount of energy that will be needed and can be saved in the future and about the measures that should be taken to achieve various goals.

Rig count declines

The number of rotary rigs working the Permain Basin counties of West Texas and New Mexico, decreased last week, according to statistics provided by the Reed Rock Bit Co. The decline brings to an end the upward trend in the count observed in preceding weeks. The count as of Friday was 464. The week before, it was 471.

The rig count for Lea County, New Mexico, dropped below 50, for the first time in many weeks.

Figures released by the International Association of Drilling Contractors, indicated that 4,054 rigs were working nationwide on August 3. There were 1,493 working Texas — on and offshore — and New Mexico.

A year ago last week, there were 329 rigs making hole in the Basin.

Plan makes profit during merger

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Tennessee's retirement system took advantage of the bidding war for Conoco Inc. and sold 195,000 shares of the oil company's stock to Seagram Co. Ltd. of Canada — at a $13 million profit.

The system's chief investment officer, H. Swift Lipscomb, said Friday that the state sold the Conoco shares at Seagram's cash offer of $92 per share — about $18.5 million.

Lipscomb said the fund, which has assets of about $2 billion, has been buying Conoco stock for past five years at an average price of $30 per share. Lipscomb said the total cost was $5.8 million, "so any way you look at it, we made a windfall profit of about $13 million."

The Tennessee Consolidated Retirement System has a reputation as one of the nation's soundest, partly because of legislative control and its investment practices.

Du Pont Co. was the successful bidder in the Conoco merger race, paying up to $98 a share. Mobil Corp. entered the bidding at $120 per share, but Conoco preferred the DuPont offer.

The money from Tennessee's sale has been returned to the retirement fund for investment elsewhere. The interest is good for about $27,000 or $28,000 over the weekend.

The fund also earned dividends on the Conoco stock, but Lipscomb said there is no way dividends could provided sueh a windfall over a short period of time and the fund had little choice but to sell because the company was being sold.

Of the system's $2 billion in assets, about $1.4 billion is in bonds and $560 million in common stocks. Retirement-fund investors generally have concentrated on bonds because they are considered less of a gamble than stocks.

Environmentalist hail delay of offshore lease sale

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists are hailing a delay in the proposed sale of offshore oil leases for four California basins as a great triumph over Interior Secretary James Watt. But all they may have won is a 17-month reprieve.

Watt announced Friday that he was withdrawing four basins off the scenic northern California coast from a proposed 1981 lease sale until the Supreme Court settles a legal challenge to an earlier sale.

The action means that the earliest the leases could be rescheduled would be January 1983.

While Watt insisted the action does not represent a step back from an aggressive offshore leasing program, environmentalists praised the action as "a triumph of reason over dogmatism."

California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. said Watt's action was "a retreat and a backdown from the misguided policy o desecratingour pristine California coast."

The Sierra Club, which has collected 1 million signatures in the past four months protesting Watt's policies, said the controversial interior secretary "was forczd to his knees on this issue by massive public protests."

The four basins in dispute lie off some of California's most famous coastal areas — Big Sur, Point Reyes, Mendocino and Eureka.

Watt told a news conference Friday that he had decided to withdraw the 1.3 million acres because of an adverse ruling by U.S. District Judge Mariana Pfaelzer that involved 31 tracts in a fifth basin off Santa Barbara.

She ruled last month that Watt had violated the spirit of the federal leasing law by giving only "minimal" considerations to state objections.

Watt said any legal challenge to the sale offering for the four Northern basins would probably be referred to Judge Pfaelzer. For that reason, he said, he had decided to await a ruling on the Santa Barbara case by the Supreme Court.

But Brown, who filed the Santa Barbara challenge, said Watt was using a "legal cover for a political decision" that would delay any action on the northern California leases until after th5 1982 elections.

The California governor predicted, however, that the northern basins would never be leased because the state would be successful before the Supreme Court.

Watt predicted the leases eventually will be sold, saying the issue boils down to whether local residents should have the power to block a program that would benefit the entire country.

Helmaintained he had received no pressure from the White House to defer a decision on the the leasing issue, which had developed into a political hot potato with many California Republican leaders protesting that Watt's actions were hurting the party's chances in 1982.

The controversy arose last February when Watt reversed a Carter administration decision putting the four basins off limits to drilling activities. Former Interior Secretary Cecil Andrus had ruled that the amount of oil and gas expected to be found in the basins did not justify the risks to the staoe's tourist and fishing industries.

Watt said he was reviewing that decision because of President Reagan's strong commitment to expanding domestic energy sources.

Californians hail Watt for halting lease sale

By TOM EASTHAM
Hearst Feature Service

WASHINGTON — California congressmen today hailed as "a great victory for the people" Interior Secretary James Watt's decision to withdraw four disputed basins off the California coast from a pending sale of oil and gas drilling leases.

Watt's surprise announcement Friday temporarily rescued the controversial cabinet officer — and the Reagan administration — from political hot water over threatened drilling in 1.3 million acres of unspoiled ocean stretching hundreds of miles from the Monterey Bay to the Oregon border.

But Watt made clear he is willing to jump back into the controversy again if a legal cloud is removed.

Exultant critics in Congress refused to accept Watt's legalistic explanation for his action. Instead, they credited their own long and vocal opposition and mounting political pressure it brought on the secretary, the president and their party.

"He just caved in in the face of overwhelming public opposition, overwhelming scientific evidence, judicial opposition and congressional presure," declared a leading Watt critic, Rep. Tom Lantos, a San Mateo Democrat.

The reason Watt gave for deferring the lease sales was "a transparent face-saving device," chortled Lantos.

Denying politics was involved, Watt blamed "the chilling impact and loss of dollars to taxpayers" of a July 27 decision by Los Angeles Federal District Judge Marian Pfaelzer upholding California's claim to veto power over offshore projects that directly affect its shoreline.

The judge based her decision on the Coastal Zone Management Act of 1972, which gives the state authority to prevent such drilling if it finds it is not consistent with the state's coastal management plan.

Watt said he will appeal the ruling until the Supreme Court makes a final ruling on the issue. Until then, he said, the Los Angeles ruling "poses a clear threat to any decision made now" on the four northern basins and lawsuits would be a virtual certainty.

"What this really comes down to is whether or not federal lands owned by all the American people are to be managed for the benefit of all Americans or managed simply for the benefit of the few people who live in the area," Watt told a press conference.

Judge Pfaelzer's ruling specifically blocked leasing only on 150,000 acres in the southerly Santa Maria Basin of Lease Sale 53, north of Santa Barbara. But Watt said a legal decision is needed on whether the entire lease sale requires consistency with the state's coastal plan.

Thus he removed the Eel River, Point Arena, Bodega and Santa Cruz Basins from Sale 53, saying they could not again be included in a lease sale program before 1983 at the earliest.

"My feeling is this is the end of the proposal — not for two years but forever," declared Lantos. "Generations yet unborn will be grateful for this decision."

But Watt denied politics had played any role in his decision, and said the White House had brought no pressure on him to abandon the much disputed California lease-sale proposal he revived last February — after the Carter administration had eliminated the four basins from leasing.

Although he consulted with Reagan and the Cabinet Council at each step, Watt said, the postponement was his own decision and he had told the White House about it just a few hours earlier.

The California congressmen were quick to announce their pleasure with the decision — and to voice their own reasons for it.

U.S. acts to check Libya's Khadafy

By JAMES CARY
Copley News Service

WASHINGTON — The United States has taken dead aim at the North African nation of Libya in an effort to force a change in its conduct and head off feared Libyan sabotage of other nations in Africa.

State Department officials acknowledge they have undertaken this almost unprecedented effort to reverse the policies of Col. Moammar Khadafy, the mercurial Libyan leader, because they consider him dangerous and believe he has created what one official called "a very dangerous situation."

They stop short of saying they are trying to topple his government, although significant change may be impossible without such drastic action.

"It's not our business to force him out," one high-ranking official said. "But it is our business to modify Libyan behavior, if we can."

The official said intensive study of the issue began during the transition period between administrations last year and surfaced in a full-blown policy statement by Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee July 8.

In that statement Crocker accused Libya of pursuing a policy of subversion, unprecedented obstruction of U.S. interests and objectives, promoting and supporting international terrorism, invading the bordering nation of Chad, interfering in affairs of other nations through subversion and attempts to assassinate their leaders, stockpiling $13 billion in arms some fear are being pre-positioned for a Soviet rapid deployment force, and murdering Libyan nationals abroad who disagree with Khadafy.

"Khadafy has tried in every way he could ... to obstruct our efforts to achieve peace in the Middle East," Crocker said. "He has sponsored subversion from Africa to the Philippines. He has actively supported international terrorism, using assassinations abroad as an instrument of policy."

Libya is an Arab nation of 3 million people bordered on the east by Egypt, on the west by Algeria and Tunisia, on the north by the Mediterranean and on the south by Niger, Chad and Sudan.

Khadafy, 39, seized power in 1969 and has steered Libya on an erratic, highly nationalistic and intensely Islamic course, using Libya's oil wealth to help his friends and sabotage his enemies.

Crocker said, "His goals seem to be far-reaching, possibly to bring about the creation of an Arab-Islamic bloc including Moslems of Africa and the Middle East. Khadafy sees himself as the spokesman of this group. ... His first targets ... may well be the nations of ... Chad, Niger, Mali, Mauritania, Senegal and parts of Algeria. Thus, Libya's announcement last December of a merger with Chad (since modified because of Chad's objections) was no mere hyperbole. It was a real expression of Khadafy's expansionist goals to absorb his Arab and Moslem neighbors in a Libyan-dominated state."

U.S. officials say Libya's occupation of Chad set off alarm bells here. In 1973 Libya occupied northern Chad's mineral-rich Aouzou strip, which may contain extensive uranium deposits. It annexed the area in 1975. Libya entered Chad in force in October 1980 and by late that year had 7,000 troops there.

"Our main concern is the political subversion that can be expected to emerge from this new geographical position," one official explained.

"Libya is now in a position to exert pressure on Sudan, the Central African Republic, Cameroon and Niger.

"These nations are not in a position to drive Libya out. We are concerned that they may feel compelled to accommodate themselves to him."

A signal that such appeasement could already be under way was seen in the June 30 statement of the Organization of African Unity that failed to condemn the takeover of Chad and made Khadafy the host and spokesman for the next OAU meeting.

The State Department bluntly stated that Khadafy wasn't qualified to be Africa's spokesman to the world.

The United States is attempting to strengthen those neighboring nations most threatened by Libya's takeover of Chad.

It has increased its foreign military sales financing for Tunisia from $15 million annually in 1980 and 1981 to $95 million in fiscal 1982, including plans to provide 54 U.S. M60A tanks. Sudan's $25 million in 1980 and $30 million in 1981 has been raised to $100 million for 1982, and recent talks with the foreign minister of Niger here are expected to produce a reprogramming of aid to help that nation, now sorely hit by a recession.

All this has not been lost on Khadafy. In June he sent Ahmad Shahati, a senior Libyan diplomat, here to "see what the problem was."

Shahati was told the United States wants an end to Libyan support of international terrorism, withdrawal from Chad, abandonment of the effort to assassinate Libyan dissidents that has taken 10 lives so far in Rome, London and Athens, and an adjustment in Libya's claim to complete control over waters extending 200 miles into the Mediterranean.

"I'm just not going to be uncomfortable this summer."

Eastman Kodak planning to buy Atex computer firm

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — Eastman Kodak Co. said Friday that it plans to acquire Atex Inc., a company that builds computer systems used for editing and producing newspapers, magazines and other publications.

Kodak, the giant producer of photographic equipment and supplies, said that Atex, a privately owned firm based in Bedford, Mass., would become a wholly owned subsidiary of Kodak. Atex's shareholders must approve the deal, which is valued at about $77 million.

The transaction would involve the exchange of just under 1.1 million shares of new Kodak common stock, valued at $72 a share, for the oustanding stock held by Atex shareholders, Kodak spokesman Timothy D. Elliott said.

More than 100 newspapers in the United States use Atex systems as do such magazines as Time, Newsweek and National Geographic, according to an Atex official who ased not to be quoted by name.

The Associated Press reached agreement with Atex last April for the installation of an Atex 9000 computer editing system at the news agency's world headquarters in New York.

The $2.9 million system is to replace a number of smaller computers used by the AP in New York. The AP's domestic and international bureaus will continue to operate on their own computer systems independent of the New York system.

Kodak Chairman Walter A. Fallon said the merger will provide a "logical extension of technology and expertise in our service to the graphic markets."

Insurance rates falling?

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans are driving less, and that may lead to lower automobile insurance rates, a consumer group says.

The National Insurance Consumer Organization said Thursday that 11 states have agreed to consider the reduction in driving in recent years when they set auto insurance rates.

This is "a major victory for the insurance consumer," said Robert Hunter, president of the organization, which consumer advocate Ralph Nader helped found.

"It means that the old business-as-usual approach to outlandish auto rate increases may be drawing to a close," he said.

In January, all Americans eligible for IRAs

Move designed to take tension off ailing Social Security plan

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Beginning next January, all working Americans will be allowed to open up a personal tax-deferred retirement account — an investment opportunity now set aside only for those without an on-the-job pension plan.

Under the new tax law, all 99 million working Americans could set up an Individual Retirement Account (IRA) or a comparable Keogh plan if they are self-employed.

The measure, approved by Congress and awaiting President Reagan's signature, is intended to stimulate savings and reduce dependence on the ailing Social Security system.

Under current law, only people without group pension plans can open an IRA. But starting next Jan. 1, an estimated 45 million Americans covered by pension plans can start individual accounts, too, and those already eligible will be able to put more away each year without paying taxes on the money until it is withdrawn.

A MAJOR REASON for the change is to reverse a sharp decline in the nation's savings rate, one of the principal goals of Reagan's economic program.

However, it is not just coincidence that incentives to set up individual pension plans are being increased at a time when the administration is pushing to reduce future Social Security benefits, both to shore up the financially troubled system and to achieve budget savings.

"The primary reason (for the legislation) is to encourage people to make provisions for their own retirement income because we don't want to continue the burden on Social Security," said Norman B. Ture, undersecretary of the treasury for tax policy.

Congress, which is reluctant to enter the political maelstrom created by the administration's proposed Social Security cuts, appeared to act more out of concern for increasing personal savings so that more money would be available for investment and interest rates would come down. But the desire to reduce future pensioners' reliance on Social Security was also a consideration, congressional aides report.

CURRENTLY, THOSE ELIGIBLE to set up an IRA can place no more than 15 percent of their income in an account, up to $1,500 a year. The new law would let anyone deposit all of his or her income in an IRA, up to $2,000 a year.

A married couple with both spouses working can set aside up to $4,000 a year, providing each has a separate account with no more than $2,000 a year added. A couple with one working spouse can set aside up to $2,250 a year divided between two accounts, up from $1,750 under current law.

Self-employed individuals, who can contribute to their own retirement under a system known as a Keogh plan, also could increase their annual tax-deferred contributions. The current limit is 15 percent of compensation up to $7,500; the new law would retain the percentage figure but raises the dollar ceiling to $15,000.

The broadened incentives for both types of retirement plans will cost the Treasury an estimated $9.1 billion in lost revenue through 1986.

Tax-deferred pension plans, which first came into existence in 1975, have not been very popular with the public, but the administration hopes the new incentives will change that.

ACCORDING TO THE LATEST available IRS records, only 2.4 million people had IRAs in 1978, with the average account holding just $1,247. Another 627,000 people had Keogh accounts, with an average deposit of $3,178.

Thirty-seven percent of IRAs are held by people with incomes under $20,000 a year, 27 percent by people with incomes between $20,000 and $30,000 and 36 percent by people with incomes of more than $30,000, the IRS records show.

Most experts expect IRAs to appeal primarily to middle-income groups. Low-income people usually cannot afford to put savings away until retirement, and wealthy people would find little appeal in a plan limited to a $2,000 annual contribution when they could invest far larger sums in tax-exempt bonds.

Contributions to the retirement accounts and the interest that accrues in them are exempt from federal taxes until funds are withdrawn. Withdrawals cannot begin until a person reaches age 59½ or dies, in which case the account can be closed by heirs.

When a person turns 70½, withdrawals must begin at a rate that assumes the account would be emptied within the remaining years of the person's life expectancy.

If money is withdrawn early, the individual must pay a penalty fee equal to 10 percent of the assets on top of the regular income taxes.

HOWEVER, FOR PEOPLE in high tax brackets, congressional experts say, the additional interest that accrues from avoiding annual tax payments offsets the early-withdrawal penalty within five to eight years. In other words, even after paying the penalty, an individual could com3 out ahead by putting money in an IRA for up to eight years instead of in a regular, taxable savings account.

If an IRA is started next January, the penalty for early withdrawal could be offset through tax savings within three or four years because of Reagan's plan to cut tax rates by 25 percent over three years, according to the congressional tax lawyers. The reason for this is that the interest income would not be taxed until after the rates have been lowered.

Officials in the administration and Congress g their IRA's as temporary tax shelters rather than as long-term retirement plans, but they said few people are likely to withdraw funds early except in financial emergencies.

The law requires that a bank, insurance company or other financial institution serve as a custodian of an IRA to guarantee the account's long-term security. Some institutions charge management fees, but others do not.

There are no requirements that limit rates of return or how the money is to be invested except that the new bill would no longer allow rare coins, antiques, art objects and other "collectibles" to be used in lieu of cash contributions, as permitted under current law.

As an alternative to setting up an individual account, a person could receive the same tax benefit by contributing up to $2,000 a year to his or her pension plan, providing that the payment is voluntary and does not increase employer contributions in any way.

New tax law includes 'generous' break for upper-income savers

By OWEN ULLMANN
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — Upper-income savers will receive a generous new break over the next 15 months in the form of tax-free savings certificates created under the new Reagan tax law.

The one-year certificates will go on sale only from this Oct. 1 until Dec. 31, 1982. Buyers will be able to deduct up to $1,000 in interest on an individual tax return and up to $2,000 on a joint return.

Interest rates would be equal to 70 percent of the prevailing rate on a 52-week Treasury bill. At today's rates, a certificate would bear 9.6 percent interest, which means an individual could invest up to $10,400 inlcertificates before reaching the $1,000 tax-free interest limit.

Banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions and other depository institutions authorized to issue the certificates must make them available in denominations as small as $500. Theoretically, that puts them within the financial reach of average taxpayers lacking the $10,000 minimum required to invest in higher-yielding Treasury bills.

BUT AS A PRACTICAL matter, only Americans in higher tax brackets will find the certificates more profitable than other savings plans that pay higher interest but are subject to taxes.

The savings and loan industry, the only driving force behind creation of the certificates, says some small savers in lower tax brackets will find the certificates more appealing than regular savings accounts that pay only 5½ percent interest.

Small savers also may prefer the certificates to the popular money market funds. Although these funds are now paying 17 percent for minimum investments of $500, they are not federally insured and interest rates vary from day to day.

There is no dispute, however, that the bulk of the certificates will be sold to upper-income groups.

Before the certificates would begin to pay off, a single taxpayer would need a taxable income — after deductions — of more than $15,000 in 1981 and $18,000 in 1982. A married couple would need a taxable income of at least $25,000 in 1981 and $30,000 in 1982. In terms of gross income, single people making more than $25,000 and couples earning above $40,000 are the likely buyers.

TO HELP OFFSET the cost of this new tax break — an estimated $3.3 billion in lost revenues to the Treasury — Congress is temporarily eliminating a tax break for regular savings. That has angered a number of congressmen who say small savers are being taxed to finance a subsidy for the affluent.

Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., recently assailed the certificates as "one of the most insidious forms of transfering wealth" from lower-income to upper-income savers.

According to some congressional estimates, affluent savers will get a $900 million tax break and the banking and thrift industries will receive a $2.5 billion break from the new l$w.

Under current law, taxpayers could deduct interest and dividend income of up to $200 on an individual return and $400 on a joint return for both 1981 and 1982. The new law ends that provision after 1981, replacing it with a deduction solely for dividend income of up to $100 for individuals and $200 for couples.

STARTING IN 1985, however, the new law will reinstate interezt deductions on all types of savings accounts, up to a limit of $450 on an individual return and $900 on a joint return.

The tax-free certificates pay off for people above the 30 percent "marginal" tax bracket — which refers to the rate at which a person's last dollar of income is taxed. The 30 percent figure represents the difference between the interest on a Treasury bill and the interest on a tax-free certificate, which is set at 70 percent of the T-bill rate.

Consider this example: A person in the 40 percent tax bracket could buy a regular 52-week Treasury bill yielding 14 percent interest, but after taxes the net yield is only 8.4 percent. If the person purchased a tax-free certificate, the net yield would be 9.8 percent.

A person in the 50 percent bracket investing in a money market fund that yields 17 percent, would net 8.5 percent after taxes. So the tax-free certificate would be a better investment.

But for a person in the 25 percent tax bracket investing in the same money market fund would net 12.75 percent interest after taxes, and thus would not find the certficate as appealing an investment.

IT SEEMS ALMOST no one in Congress or the Reagan administration is particularly fond of the savings certificate provision.

It was approved ostensibly to encourage Americans to save more and to aid the troubled savings and loan industry, but congressional and administration tax experts doubt either objective will be achieved. Instead, they say the certificates will provide a tax break for the affluent without doing much good for either savings banks or the general economy.

Administration officials have branded tax-free certificates as bad tax policy and members of Congress have expressed serious reservations about the legislation.

Yet the administration would not oppose the provision, which sailed effortlessly through Congress as part of the president's giant tax-cut ill. The reasn: the ailing thrift industry badly wanted it and Congress badly wanted to help the thrifts.

During their extensive lobbying campaign, the thrifts argued that their so-called "all-savers" proposal would reverse the nation's eroding savings rate and help lure badly needed home mortgage funds back into savings institutions, which are hurting because of high interest rates.

The infusion mf new funds for mortgage lending that the certificates will provide, the thrifts argued, will bring down interest rates, and that will benefit the public at large as well as the S&Ls.

But most other economists and tax experts contend the certificates will simply attract funds from other sources rather than increase overall savings.

A job worth doing ...

As the dust began to clear from the site of the tax cut showdown in Washington, D.C., this week, representatives of the oil industry (and, more particularly, the independent oil industry so vital to the Midland area) assessed their situation and surmised they came out of the scrap with more than they took in.

As Permian Basin Petroleum Association executive director Ed Thompson explained it at midweek: "It wasn't what we had hoped to have, of course." But he quickly added, "It's going to be an improvement for us."

The fight primarily centered on freeing the oil industry from tax-induced limitations and capital-restricting measures, and on returning the industry to the point at which it belongs — finding and developing more domestic reserves of fossil fuels.

Industry leaders are quick to point out that the major thrust of the lobbying effort in Washington was lost: The effort to get the percentage depletion allowance increased to 22 on a permanent basis. The percentage currently is at 20 and will drop to 15, Thompson noted, likely before the final chapter to this saga is written.

The percentages may not mean much to the ordinary man or woman with no capital invested in the oil industry. But for an independent oil company, those percentages represent a lifeline — the funds to reinvest in exploration.

While losing that major provision, both major oil companies and the independents did come out lightly ahead. The approved provision that will help the major oil companies is a reduction in the windfall profits tax from 30 percent to 15 at the end of a five-year period.

The independent oil producer will benefit from a stripper well provision which means all stripper well oil will be exempt from the windfall profits tax effective Jan. 1, 1983.

In addition royalty owners will receive Windfall Profit Tax credits in 1981 with two and three barrel-per-day exemptions from the tax set for 1982 through 1986.

Approval of these provisions in the tax cut legislation means the Midland-Odessa area likely will see some increase in oil activity over the next several years. And a great share of the credit must go to President Reagan, U.S. Rep. Kent Hance of Lubbock and members and officials of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association who have spent countless days in Washington in the past couple of months lobbying for these changes.

The changes are vital to the economy of the Midland-Odessa area, and to virtually every individual who lives and works here. A good thing is worth working for — and oil industry representatives reaffirmed that premise in the past couple of weeks.

As Thompson aptly noted, "Three weeks ago there were no provisions for any of this."

Midland's hallmark

Community spirit is one of those intangibles that truly can make the difference between a merely good community and a great one. Midland is fortunate in many respects to be endowed with a larger than usual helping of unexcelled community pride and a sense of oneness.

Such was exhibited recently when First National Bank of Midland, despite being unchallenged in its bid for the Midland County Library property on West Missouri Avenue downtown, went beyond the realm of ordinary business dealings by offering to contribute $5.5 million toward construction of a three-story county library building in the financial institution's Eagle Plaza, which will feature one and possibly two 40-story towers.

Needless to say, this most generous offer was greeted with notably little resistance. The deal likely will be sewed up in a neat package Monday.

No one is disputing the fact that First National Bank stands to benefit from such an arrangement by tax laws and the exposure and additional human traffic such an arrangement will generate. But neither is anyone likely to dispute the fact that Midland is in desperate need of a more adequate, more spacious, library facility and that this offer is in the best interests of taxpayers of Midland County.

This is not, of course, the only example of community spirit and pride exhibited by Tall City businesses and institutions down through the years. It is just one of the most notable and commendable examples in recent memory.

It's our hope this arrangement will prove mutually beneficial to the involved parties and all the residents of Midland County. It's an example of the fine community spirit we hope never ceases to be a hallmark of Midland.

Beirut bombing damaged support for Israel

By Jack Anderson

WASHINGTON — The Israeli air raid on Beirut, which killed hundreds of innocent Lebanese civilians, may or may not have dealt the Palestine Liberation Organization a serious blow. One thing is clear, however: It endangered Israel's traditionally strong support in the U.S. Congress as no other action has in recent years.

Like the Israeli raid on Iraq's nuclear reactor in June, the Beirut attack drew predictable protests from Arab sympathizers. The significant thing about the latest raid is the distress it caused Israel's friends on Capitol Hill.

Several members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee contacted Israeli officials here and abroad after the raid, pleading for undisclosed intelligence information that would help them explain the attack to their uneasy colleagues.

Few of these pro-Israel members made public statements of support for the decision to bomb Beirut. In private, sources told my associate Lucette Lagnado, the committee members expressed shock and annoyance at the action of Prime Minister Menachem Begin's government.

With the blessing of Chairman Clement Zablocki, D-Wis., two prominent members of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Reps. Tom Lantos, D-Calif., and Millicent Fenwick, R-N.J., flew to Jerusalem for a private meeting with Begin. They also met with several other prominent Israelis, including Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir and Jerusalem Mayor Teddy Kollek.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig had been told of the trip beforehand, and called Lantos to deliver a lengthy briefing before the legislators took off for Israel.

Here's what went on in the 90-minute meeting Lantos and Fenwick had with the Israeli prime minister:

— Begin seemed bewildered by the extent of the negative reaction in Congress, as reported to him by Lantos and Fenwick. He acknowledged, however, that he already had an inkling of the situation on Capitol Hill, having received an expression of concern over the raid from Rep. Jonathan Bingham, D-N.Y., a strong supporter of Israel.

— Begin revealed hitherto-secret intelligence information to explain his decision to bomb Beirut. He told Lantos and Fenwick he had known for several months that the PLO was emerging as a substantially different — and more dangerous — organization than the hit-and-run terrorist group it had been in the past.

He said Israeli intelligence had learned of arms shipments to the PLO from North Korea, Bulgaria, Libya, Syria and the Soviet Union. What's more, he said, the weapons included long-range rockets and artillery capable of penetratkng deep into Israel.

— Begin seemed genuinely upset at the two House members' repeated expressions of concern over the raid, and told them an anecdote to justify the bombing of uninvolved civilians. A Martian landed in Dresden shortly after World War II, Begin related. Gazing in horror at the sea of rubble that had once been a picturebook medieval center of culture, the man from Mars asked: "What barbarians did this?" In answer, he was told about the German air raids on British cities, Nazi destruction of whole villages in occupied Europe, and the atrocities of the gas chambers. The Martian said, "Now I understand."

— Begin told Lantos and Fenwick about the continuing exodus of Israeli residents from cities along the border with Lebanon because of PLO shelling. He cited the example of Naharya, a beach resort with a normal summer population of 15,000. It is now deserted, Begin said, because of the people's fear of PLO attacks.

The prime minister said the PLO shellings had seriously disrupted life for many Israelis, and used this in explanation of his decision to strike at the PLO headquarters in Beirut.

— When Lantos broached the idea of increasing the United Nations peacekeeping force in Lebanon by several thousand troops, Begin at first seemed unimpressed with the suggestion. But when Lantos continued to press the point, the prime minister promised he would take a closer look at the possibility of an expanded U.N. role.

— The two Americans asked Begin whether he intended to order similar actions against Lebanon in the future. Without responding directly, he told Lantos and Fenwick that one victim of a recent PLO shelling was a 68-year-old man who had survived Auschwitz and still bore the concentration camp number tattooed on his arm. 'How do you want me to react?" Begin asked rhetorically. Begin, who is also 68, was imprisoned himself as a young man in his native Russia.

— Before they took their leave, Lantos and Fenwick did succeed in extracting Begin's promise to uphold the ceasefire in Lebanon.

— The two members of Congress also managed to get another promise from Begin that may in the long run be more important, at least as far as U.S.-Israeli relations are concerned. Noting that the intelligence information he had disclosed was news to them, Lantos and Fenwick urged the prime minister to keep in closer touch with Congress.

They pointed out the practical value, in political terms, of keeping Israel's friends in Congress informed of the latest intelligence on the PLO. Obviously impressed with the seriousness of congressional concern over the attack on Beirut, the Israeli prime minister promised that he would pass on to Congress details on the PLO's activities in the future.

ART BUCHWALD

Economic woes making bankers cry!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Art Buchwald has gone to summer school for remedial supply-side economics. David Stockman told him he could not go unless he left behind some of his favorite columns.

The tight money market has caused a complete switch in the thinking of our nation's banks. There was a time when bankers were on their knees begging people to borrow money from them and everyone had a 'friend' at the bank down the street. But now the situation has changed, and it's getting harder and harder to get a loan.

Art Buchwald

The other day, a man I know walked into a bank in Washington and said to one of the assistant vice-presidents, "Hello, friend."

"I'm not your friend," the vice president said. "I have no friends."

"Don't you remember me?" the man said, "I was in here a year ago and wanted to borrow fifteen hundred dollars, and you said I could have three thousand because you liked the suit I was wearing."

"I remember," the VP said.

"And you told me any time I wanted any money to just walk in with a satchel and I could have it. Remember?"

"I may have said it. So what?"

"Well, here I am back again, and I just thought I'd like to have about five thousand to tide me over for six months or so. I brought my satchel with me, hah, hah, hah."

"I couldn't give you five hundred. What's the matter? Do you think banks are made of money?"

"Well, you don't have to get sore."

"Don't tell me not to get sore. Why can't you live within your means like everyone else? That's all people ever think about these days, borrowing money. Haven't you ever heard of thrift?"

"Gosh, I'm sorry. I didn't realize that borrowing was wrong."

"Of course not. You just think any time you run out of money, you can hop down to a bank with a satchel and say,'Fill it up'. Well, mister, I've got news for you. We're wise to people like you. If you can't make a go of it on your income, we're not about to help you over the rough spots."

"But there's a big neon sign outside that says, 'We Make Loan Any Time, Anywhere to Anybody'."

"That doesn't mean you," the VP said.

"Look, I've got collateral. I could put up my house against the loan."

"Well, isn't that a nice thing to do? You'd risk your house and the welfare of your family for five thousand dollars. Don't you have any shame?"

"I hadn't thought of it that way," the man said. "I have a car. Would you take that?"

"We wouldn't even take the Ford plant in Dearborn for five thousand dollars, if you want the truth. Now are you going to go quietly, or do you want to be arrested for disturbing the peace?"

"I just can't understand it. You are the same man I talked to a year ago, aren't you?"

"No banker is the same man you talked to a year ago," the VP said, wiping away a tear.

"Gee, I didn't mean to make you cry."

Now the VP was sobbing uncontrollably. "If you want to know the real reason you can't have a loan, it's that we don't have any money."

"That's awful," the man said. "Is there anything I can do?"

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 9, 1974, Vice President Gerald Ford was sworn in as the 38th president of the United States upon the resignation of Richard Nixon.

On this date:

In 1831, the first steam locomotive in the United States made a run between the cities of Albany and Schenectady in New York.

In 1945, U.S. planes dropped the second atomic bomb on Japan, destroying more than half the city of Nagasaki.

And in 1969, three men and two women, including actress Sharon Tate, were found slain in a secluded home in Beverly Hills, Calif. Charles Manson and several co-defendants subsequently were convicted in the case.

Ten years ago: at least 13 persons were killed in rioting in Belfast, Northern Ireland.

One year ago: Hurricane Allen, the second strongest in the century, began brushing the southern Texas coast, having already forced the evacuation of 250,000 people.

Today's birthdays: former democratic Sen. Herman Talmadge of Georgia is 68 years old. Catcher Ted Simmons of the Milwaukee Brewers is 32.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

Practitioners of 'informative terrorism' ignore truth

By William Giandoni

EDITOR'S NOTE: Columnist George Will is on a two-week vacation. His column will resume in this space when he returns.

"Informative terrorism" is what Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo calls it.

William Giandoni

By that he means the kind of destructive journalism that ignores what good the government may be doing, what progress the country is making and, what is more, how bright, in this case, Mexico's prospects for a better future really are.

By informative terrorism the Mexican president means the systematic emphasis on the negative.

Informative terrorism raged through Mexico in June and July. Perhaps significantly, it began to flare after President Lopez Portillo returned from his two-day visit to the United States in early June, declaring how well he and President Reagan had gotten along.

Two themes were repeated constantly. First, the worldwide oil glut that forced the Mexican government oil company, Petroleos Mexicanos, to cut its prices $4 a barrel, was provoked by the big U.S. oil companies to prejudice Mexico.

The other line was to the effect that large U.S. banks were keeping the "prime rate" of interest at 20 percent or more to entice Mexican capitalists to tranfer their funds to the United States so as to force devaluation of the Mexican peso.

Both suggestions border on the ridiculous.

Mexico is just too important to the United States. As Everett Ellis Briggs, acting deputy assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs, noted recently, Mexico is now the United States' third-ranking trading partner, after only Canada and Japan.

In 1980 U.S. exports to Mexico amounted to $15.1 billion, an increase of 53 percent over the year before. The trade balance between the two countries favored the United States by $2.6 billion.

That being the case, anything that banks or oil companies might do to undermine Mexico or the relative stability of the Mexican peso would cost the United States heavily in trade alone.

One Mexican columnist went to great lengths to explain that the difference between the 20.5 percent prime rate in the United States and the 31.75 percent Mexican banks were advertising was only apparent.

Taking into consideration the current rate of the sliding devaluation of the peso, a bit over 10 percent a year, the real differential between Mexican and U.S. interest rates is less than 1 percent, he wrote.

What he did not explain is that the prime rate is what U.S. banks charged their best customers for money they loan. It is not the rate that the banks pay their depositors. Savings rates range from 5.5 percent on passbook accounts up to around 15 percent on six-month money market certificates.

Wealthy Mexicans, who keep careful watch of the fluctuations of interest rates in the United States, would not be much influenced by what was printed on the subject in a Marxist-edited daily newspaper.

Why then was the article, and many other such, published?

Ostensibly it was part of a campaign to convince Mexican newspaper readers that the United States is employing "Informative Terrorism: A Weapon to Destabilize Us." That was the headline on one article that appeared in the Mexico City daily, El Dia.

In fact, though, the campaign seemed also intended to shake confidence in Lopez Portillo, to suggest that Mexico has become too dependent on its oil and natural gas exports, to insinuate that Lopez Portillo and the non-Marxists in his Cabinet have mismanaged the Mexican economy and endangered the peso.

That is just not the case. Lopez Portillo has braved the wrath of the vociferous Marxist minority in Mexico to try to correct mistakes in the country's 6-decade-old agrarian reform program. He has used Mexico's oil dollars to encourage industry and agriculture, to create the jobs and grow the food Mexico's 70 million people need. And he has been saying, since even before he became president, that devaluation of the Mexican monetary unit offers no solution to the nation's problems.

His, and Mexico's own, experience of the five years since August, 1976, when the peso was last slashed brusquely in value, should be enough to prove tha truth.

But the Marxists and others who practice informative terrorism are not interested in the plain truth.

Reagan Brown's re-election announcement 'in character'

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bueau

AUSTIN — To folks who know Reagan Brown, it comes as no surprise that the Commissioner of Agriculture picks up a biblical quotation to use in describing his plans to announce for a re-election campaign.

"We've kept the faith, we've fought the good fight," Brown declares in the words of the Apostle Paul, adding, "and we intend to press on and make Texas agriculture number one in the nation."

Brown plans to make a formal announcement on his campaign intentions around the end of the month, and says that he's confident that whether or not he has an opponent, he'll return for another term.

With characteristic optimism, Brown declares, "I feel right now I'm in the best political shape that any statewide politician could be in."

Whether Brown will draw an opponent remains to be seen, but at least two House members are reported to be considering races: Rep. Pete Laney, D-Hale Center, and Rep. Don Rains, D-San Marcos, both veterans in the political field.

But Brown thinks the only effect that an opponent would have is that he might have to raise a little more money.

"In the last election," Brown says, "we carried every county in Texas except 17, and we spent no money on television."

"Right now, we don't owe anyone and we have nearly $30,000 in the bank.... We expect to raise $300,000 to $500,000; and I can very easily make an adequate campaign on that."

"It would depend on who an opponent is as to how much money we will raise," Brown adds.

Brown was named to the commissioner's post in March, 1977, by Gov. Dolph Briscoe, whom Brown was serving as a special assistant on rural development and agricultural programs.

Brown went on to win election to the post in 1978, defeating Rep. Joe Hubenak, D-Roenberg, in a considerably better showing than in his first political effort — a 1952 race against Sam Rayburn, Speaker of the U.S. House of Representatives.

During his service with Briscoe, Brown was engaged in doing what he seems to do as well as any politician in Texas: going out and making speeches.

Brown claims — and no one disputes his contention — that he's spoken in every county in Texas, in practically every city, and to almost every organized group in the state.

Court of Criminal Appeals Judge W.C. Davis, who has introduced Brown at some of those speaking functions, has said that "anyone that considers taking on Agricultural Commissioner Reagan Brown will have to organize over 1,000 rural communities, make over 6,000 speeches, organize and speak to the County Judges and Commissioners Conference for 23 consecutive years, win the Progressive Farmers Man of the Year in Agriculture, and the Texas A&M Distinguished Faculty Achievement Award and have the best department of agriculture in the nation."

And, Davis says, "in addition, probably be loved and respected by more Texans than anyone I have every known."

Another statewide office holder has called Brown "deceptively simple," a jokester who presents a sermon which is partly patriotic, partly religious, totally Brown's and very well received by his audiences.

And while he cracks jokes with the Rotarians, or garden club, or corn growers, he also presents his message on personal commitment, service — and Texas agriculture.

At times, his enthusiasm seems almost out of control, as evidenced by the fact that he's missing part of a finger — sawed of, he says, while putting together a 4-H Club safety project.

Brown lost his temper ("regrettably," he said later) in a meeting in 1979 with members of the American Agriculture Movement, later having to apologize for an ethnic slur.

And there was another incident a year later during the National Democratic Convention, in which Brown and a Lubbock farmer were reported to have exchanged unpleasantries, apparently prompted by some political disagreement which became increasingly personal.

Since then, Brown has been busy with apparent attempts to smooth over his differences with the groups involved — and indicates he's been successful, noting that he's been honored by various farm organizations and other groups in recent months.

Brown also has enjoyed quite a lot of recent publicity for his efforts to assure that the Mediterranean fruit fly doesn't make it into Texas — winning favorable editorial comment for his stand — and he's been pushing the strong effort of the Texas Department of Agriculture in hiring minority employees.

Whether or not he gets an opponent, Brown will be continuing his rounds throughout Texas, just as he has since the time he began going out as an extension sociologist for Texas A&M.

And if he does get an opponent, it may be asking too much for voters to pick someone else over a man who, so it's been claimed, bleeds red, white and blue.

October's North-South summit may provide more aid, stabilize oil prices

By JOSEPH KINGSBURY-SMITH
National Editor, The Hearst Newspapers

WASHINGTON — One of the most important results of the North-South summit meeting in Mexico in October may be to give impetus to an international movement for close cooperation between the Western industrialized countries and the oil producing nations to provide greater aid to the developing world in return for stabilization of oil prices.

Food and energy are among the major subjects that will be discussed at the Mexican summit meeting of industrialized and developing nations that President Reagan plans to attend October 22 and 23.

Use of OPEC oil revenue for a major buildup with Western technology and skilled know-how of agricultural production in the developing countries is one of the principal objectives of the Agri-Energy Roundtable Organization of Washington.

A leading advocate of the Agri-Energy movement is Senator Jennings Randolph, D-W.Va, who attended the first roundtable meeting of agribusiness and energy people from the U.S., Europe, the Middle East, Africa and Latin American that was held in Geneva early this year.

With 150 million people in Africa alone facing famine this year, Senator Randolph believes the hunger demonstrations in Poland are a warning of widespread uprisings that could endanger world peace if a solution is not found to the problem of providing food for the world's population now growing at the rate of over 80 million people a year.

"If this problem gets out of control, and it is beginning to get out of control in some parts of the world, it will cause a violent breakdown of governments," the Senator told The Hearst Newspapers. "Mankind will be faced with widespread chaos and violence."

Senator Randolph, a member of the Human Resources Committee, thinks the decision of the oil producing (OPEC) nations to freeze prices until the end of this year provides an opportunity to seek an agreement on political and economic cooperation between the oil importing industrialized countries and the developing nations, including OPEC, which would assure oil supplies for both the industrialized and poor countries at reasonable and predictable rates in the future. He hopes steps in this direction will be taken at the Mexican summit meeting.

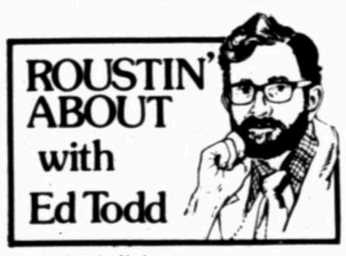

An advocate of the development of synthetic energy sources for the past 36 years, the senator considers it imperative that OPEC not attempt to block synfuel development in the oil importing countries, rich as well as poor.

"If the OPEC countries take the narrow view that alternative energy programs are a direct threat to a monopoly on oil prices and take action to prevent that development, they will impede not only our energy security, but their national security," he said. "It might become in our own self-interest to assure freedom of navigation in the Mideast for all nations.

"The connection between synfuels and the cooperative food-energy theme is vital. As we plunge into a new era of food scarcity and the development of alternate fuels, we must view the world's energy and agricultural economies as a single interrelated system.

"We stand today at a turning point in civilization. One hundred years from now — with a cooperative blend of resources and technology — many arid regions of the world could be green, food-producing and peaceful. New agricultural breadbaskets could be making famine obsolete and the world's industrial machine could be powered on cleaner-burning, renewable fuels."

Tomorrow for dreamers; Enjoy your life today

There is no tomorrow; it cometh not.

It is only a fantasy, a projection, a vision into the nebulous world of make-believe. It is out there, as if it were a mirage.

Tomorrow was made by the Creator to give procrastinators purpose in life. Tomorrow is their accomplishment; it is their vision. Tomorrow is their downfall; it is their excuse.

The unfulfilled tomorrows have led to much grief and sorrow. Yet, tomorrow affords vain and foolhearted hope to the optimist who never lives today and who bypasses the treasures of the moment.

"I never woke up in tomorrow, yet," mused Patrick Hooks, a fellow who never expected to be living today and who will always greet today with unexpected relish.

Kay Lyons said it more mundanely: "Yesterday is a canceled check; tomorrow is a promissory note; today is the only cash you have — so spend it wisely."

Love today for what it is. It is time by whatever measure: yesterday, today, tomorrow or the past, the present, the future. Today is all there is. Now.

All the yesterdays were but todays, just as all the tomorrows will be but todays.

If a soul had fulfilled all of those good intentions in the yesterdays, today would be rapturously fulfilling and no thought would be given to tomorrow.

But "doing it" today and not putting it off until some non-descript tomorrow looms is the certain way to discover joy in living.

"There are so many things that we wish we had done yesterday," offered Mignon McLaughlin, "so few that we feel like doing today."

Ah, that is the procrastinator's excuse; he waits and then wonders why.

The fears of times to come will be allayed by living today. Living will be its own reward.

"I am not afraid of tomorrow," wrote William Allen White, "for I have seen yesterday and I love today."

Buenas dias

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is a letter from Ben Glenn, son of Mr. and Mrs. Jack Glenn of Midland. Ben is a foreign exchange student with the American Field Services program in Panama City, Panama.

To The Editor:

Greetings from Republica de Panama! It's just a lazy Sunday afternoon here in Panama City. The sun's out now but it will probably rain two or three inches before the day is over. I've been in Panama for twenty-four days and no matter what those crazy Panamanians say, there just ain't nothin' to Panama but a Canal. I really am enjoying the change in cultures. The Panamanians are really easy going people. If they say they will see you at a party at 8 p.m., don't expect them before 9:30 or 10. They are seldom in a hurry and it's a nice change to be with a group of people that aren't as time conscious as Americans.

My "family" is very nice. My father's name is Rodrigo Mejia Andrion. He is an arquitecto and owns his own construction company. He also teaches classes at a university in Panama City. My mother's name is Cledia De Mejia Andrion. She used to teach Spanish at one of the schools somewhere in Panama. She is very nice and makes learning Spanish a little easier.

We spend a lot of time together and get along pretty well. He attends a private high school called Saint Augistine. He goes to school from 7:30 to 1:30 and must take Spanish, English, Chemistry, Biology, Physics, Analytical Geometry, Calculus, Philosophy and Religion. They don't have any electives or school clubs, just school. I've been there five times and will probably go a few more times before I leave. I found a church to go to, too. It's called First Baptist Church of Balboa. it is located in the former Canal Zone. I've met alot of people and I'm going to an island called Taboga with them Tuesday. I just returned from a camp called Cristo del Mar. It is located about 70 miles from Panama City and the campsite is about 200 yards from it's own beach. We went swimming every morning and afternoon and went for walks on the beach at night. Tomorrow, I'm going to the American Embassy and the British Embassy to make appointments to hopefully meet the ambassador from each country. Panama is full of historic places and ruins and I'll spend most of my time visiting those places. I am going to visit the canal in a few days an I hope the visit will be interesting. My brother wants to go get a Coke so I'll bring this letter to a close. I hope all the class of '82 is ready for the Senior year and is enjoying the summer.

Nothing new

To The Editor:

As far back as 1970 the FAA has had warning of the discontent of the air traffic control operators. Yet FAA has done nothing to bring about reclassification or upgrading of their positions. Fault must be laid upon the agency's management.

Notwithstanding the agency's lassitude, the air traffic control operators strike is no longer, as of Wednesday, a matter of their demands. The issue is whether a labor union is above the law and the government of the United States.

Those labor union officials who charge Pesident Reagan has broken an oath to them do not put the matter into proper prospectus. These people, the operators, are not members of a private industry labor union. They do not have the same rights as do members of a private industry labor union. They do not have the right to strike. That is prohibited by federal law. This they knew when they accepted employment. They have the right, as do all citizens, to "petition the government for a redress of grievances." Petition does not mean actions which are in violation of federal law or actions which deprive the people of the right to travel and con business by use of the airways.

Their actions are in defiance of the federal government and its laws. Their actions seek to overthrow those laws and are just as seditious in nature as any rebellious act seeking to overthrow the government. And so should they be considered.

It's encouraging

To The Editor:

It's encouraging to see articles such as Richard Orr's in the Sunday, August 2, edition. High time the citizens were made aware — even if we have to hit them in the nose with it — that police officers are paid bare subsistence salaries for risking getting their heads shot off every night so you won't get yours shot off.

But it isn't just money, you know, that's causing long-time cops to become landmen or roustabouts or small business owners or anything else, leaving behind a profession for which they are trained over countless hours and for countless taxpayer dollars. How many of you, except in extreme situations, will leave a job you love, a job that you know is essential to the well-being of thousands, a job you gave up a "normal" life to do, a job you've risked family life and your own life to do, a career for which you've trained and gone to school and sacrificed any hopes of becoming "comfortably wealthy" just to follow, for money alone? It couldn't be money that prompts a man to study, research, grind through paper and bureaucracy, dig up evidence at night or whenever from hostile witnesses, spend his days off in court, often without sleep, working with or against his sometimes $100 per hour counterpart, the attorney, for the equivalent of maybe $10 per hour, if he's lucky! We didn't take the job for money, and we aren't leaving the job for money. Or not money solely.

When a police department loses that many men in that short a period of time, could there be other factors involved besides money? If those men stayed a collective total of "114 years of experience" (or, I suspect, more than that), why are they leaving now? Did the cost of living always ridiculous in Midland on a cop's salary anyway, escalate 400 percent in the last six months? We doubt it. Could we look somewhere else besides at the pay scale?

What is that something that's gotten away from them, what is it that's causing them to walk out, en masse, from the Midland Police Department? Give them all a big fat raise and do nothing else about the conditions under which they work, and you'll still see them walk out. Let's take a look at other factors and see what we can learn.

And like the others before us, please withhold our name, too. Pity. It took us a long time to speak our mind and now we can't admit who we are. Because our family (and it is a family business because everybody suffers, everybody is involved, when only one cop is in the family) is one of those that chose to stay, despite situations beyond our control that make our job harder and our home life more difficult. And we don't want to make it worse than it already is, because we believe in what we are doing.

To The Editor:

As a reminder to Midlanders, the Midland City Council will hold the first of two hearings on Tuesday at 5 p.m. to consider the installation of a number of one-way streets. These streets are long-overdue and will be the greatest thing to hit Midland since the Arab oil embargo.

In 1978 we missed out on one-way streets because selfish business interests ambushed the council and shot the proposition down in flames. No one was there to speak for the system.

A "let George do it" attitude can once again cost Midlanders a modernized street system, complete with sequential traffic signals. If you cannot be at the council meeting at 5 p.m., you can still record your feelings on the subject by dropping in at City Hall anytime on Tuesday to register "for" or "against" any item on the agenda. You do not have to speak on the issue, but you will have cast a "vote" for your viewpoint. By far, your appearance in person at 5 p.m. would be most effective.

So, Midlanders, this is your chance. Circle the calendar, tie a string on your finger, or whatever trick you use to remind yourself to "do it" on Tuesday. Do not "let George do it" — he may be waiting on Henry to do it — and we will all be losers.

Equal time

To The Editor:

This letter may be too long for a letter to the editor. If so, just print it on the front page as equal time. Reading and hearing about how underpaid and how very dedicated the policemen are gets very tiring.

Believe me, a policeman with a wife and two children is not the only one that just barely make too much for food stamps or that could qualify for rental assistance.

I have raised a family of four on a little less than a policeman's pay. We have never gone hungry, been deprived of very many things, never received low rental assistance, food stamps, or free lunches at school.

My job has never furnished me with a car and free gas for my personal use. A second car would cost at least $200 a month, a tank of gas a week would amount to $100 to $125 per month, insurance would probably be between $50 or $60 per month. It seems that at least $375 per month could be tagged onto their salary in this way. They are probably never given a ticket while speeding down Illinois street to Midland Drive (as they do all the time), or parking illegally while waiting to pick up the wife or whatever. This saves them a little. The rest of us are made to drive around the block every how many times it takes.

Yes, the economy is booming, but it is booming for everyone, not just the policemen. They may not be able to "keep up with the Jones," but they can live decently on $22,200 a year. This was an insult to a lot of us in Midland that live on less and thought it was decent.

Even though Midland has more than its share of very rich people, there are even more that have to work for a living and can hardly feel sorry for someone that makes around $18,000 or $20,000 a year plus a car and all the free gas they need.

Our support

To The Editor:

In evaluating the three proposed plans concerned with county commissioner redistricting, The Mexican American Advisory Council in the interest of fair representative government supports plan two.

Plan two straightens current precinct boundaries, splits the tremendous growth of the current precinct four, and of special interest to us, it redistricts precinct two in such a manner as to place the east and south side of Midland into one precinct.

The needs, interest, and environment of the east and south population in Midland is such that effective representation can only be obtained by the election of an official from this section of the community.

The proposed plan two, which sections the east and south population of Midland into one precinct, allows this section of the community to elect a county commissioner more responsive to its needs.

The Mexican American Advisory Council supports redistricting efforts to accomplish more equitable representation We hope you and the county commissioners will consider plan two as the only viable alternative.

The fabulous Hunt brothers of Texas, who tried to buy all the silver in the world more than a year ago only to have the market collapse on them, aren't the only ones shedding tears today.

Silver merchants are crying, too.

Most buyers are disdaining silver products these days. Consumers are staying away from sterling flatware, coins and other silver products until they're certain prices are stable — or think they may rise again.

Among the three largest groups of silver users in the United States — photographic materials, electronics products, and silverware and jewelry — silverware has been hit the hardest. The film industry is a large user of silver, but since the per unit cost in a roll of film is so small, the industry hasn't been hurt very much.

Silver soared from a low of $7.70 a troy ounce in early March 1979 to a high in January 1980 of $50 — much of it due to wholesale buying by the Hunt brothers and fears of inflation. After a panic in March 1980, which sent prices plummeting to $10.80, prices climbed to the $30-$40 range toward yearend. Then, in 1981, prices declined to current lows of around $8.50.

Consumer reluctance to buy sterling, and other products, has irritated manufacturers. "Everyone's looking for a bargain," says Robert Wilson, president of Providence, R.I.-based Wallace Silversmith, manufacturer of the nation's most popular four-piece sterling silver setting, Grand Baroque.

Nevertheless, Wilson says, "Now that the price has been dropping, consumers have stepped back, waiting for it to go even lower. Their behavior is completely opposite to what they did when silver prices were rising. Then they wanted to buy before the price got any higher."

Denham Lunt Jr., head of Lunt Silversmith in Greenfield, Mass., concurs. "I'm pretty well convinced that people have seen prices decline, and they're still holding off expecting that they might get even lower. I think, however, we're at the bottom of the demand cycle."

Mark Goldberg, co-owner of Beverly Hills, Cal., based Superior Coin, a seller of investment-type silver and gold coins, notes this trend. "Six or eight months ago, when the price of gold went below $600 an ounce, we were selling 1,000 Kruggerands a day. Sales then declined to maybe 50 or 60 coins a day, and only recently we're starting to sell 300 to 400 coins.

"Our sales of silver coins are picking up because silver is a sensational investment right now gold has declined by half, to $400 from $800, but the price of silver has declined to a fifth of what it once was, to $8-$9 from $50. But as long as alternative forms of high yielding investments are available, people will hold off on silver and gold until they've been handed proof prices are low."

Industrywide figures confirm this pattern. According to the National Silver Users Association, industrial consumption was up 7 percent in the first quarter of this year compared with the same period last year. Walter Franklin, association president, points out that the increase was expected because consumption declined precipitously last year.

Some industry observers say that now, indeed, might be a good time to buy silver. Green's Commodity Market Comments, a newsletter, notes: "It is our expectation that consumption of silver this year will be 10 percent to 15 percent higher than in 1980, and that in 1982, consumption will increase drastically because of the proposed Olympic coins, the minting of which should start by the end of this year to beginning of next.... We expect a sustained move which should carry the price of silver to the $16 level within a reasonable time."

Fred Meyer, chairman and and owner of Geary's of Beverly Hills, among the largest retail dealers of silver flatware in the West, says, "I can't see silver going much below $8, if that. And even if it goes lower, it won't affect retail prices because the cost of labor, energy, transportation and overhead provide something of a built-in floor.

"If customers come in and ask if prices will go lower, we answer very cautiously."

'Banker's bank' reaction enthusiastic

By BILL KIDD
Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Independent Bankers Association of Texas reports an enthusiastic response to the proposed "Texas Independent Bank," the so-called "bankers' bank" granted a charter in June by the State Banking Board.

IBAT Executive Director Hagen McMahon Jr., recently returned from meetings throughout Texas with independent bankers, reports the bank has $10 million in "confirmed" capital subscriptions, with another $5-6 million indicated.

"We expect initial capitalization to be at $10 to $15 million," McMahon reports, which would make the charter the largest in capitalization for any new charter in Texas history and the largest capitalized bankers' bank in the nation.

Texas Independent Bank is to be domiciled in Dallas.

Stock subscription is being accepted from banks qualifying for IBAT membership, McMahon reports, noting that state-chartered banks may invest up to five percent of their capital and certified surplus, while national banks may invest up to 10 percent.

Banks may not, however, own more than five percent per bank of Texas Independent Bank, which plans to begin operations "probably the first week in January," McMahon says.

Initial services, he reports, will include participation overlines, bank stock financing, purchase and sale of "Fed funds" and, eventually, bank clearings.

The bank also plans to offer lines of credit to "some of the major corporations in the United States to pass through to smaller banks which otherwise would not be able to participate," McMahon says.

For example, he says, there could be a $50 million line of credit to Exxon through the bank.

Barry G. Smith, formerly president of Fort Worth Bank and Trust, has been selected president of Texas Independent Bank.

It's proposed that the 24 directors be divided, with one-third coming from banks with deposits of $25 million or less, another third from banks with deposits of $25-75 million, and the final third from banks with $75 million or more in deposits.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Sometimes you're stuck

By BILL DOYLE

Q. Please clear up the confusion about early withdrawal penalties on long-term savings certificates. You explained the penalty is now the loss of six months' interest and, before the rules were changed, the penalty was the loss of three months' interest plus a reduction of interest for the balance of the term of the certificate to the lower savings account rate.

You wrote that, when the rules were changed, banks and savings and loan associations "were given the option" of charging either the new penalty or the larger penalty in effect when the certificate was purchased. You said this could be done, "with the consent of the depositor." Naturally, a depositor will consent to the new, smaller penalty if the bank gives him that opportunity.

You advised a reader who had paid the larger penalty under the old rules to "go back and demand the penalty be changed." Suppose the bank or S&L refuses to go along with that "demand." What then?

A. Then, the depositor is stuck. He or she can't force the bank or S&L to use the new rules. They key words in the federal regulations are that banks and S&Ls have "the option" of levying withdrawal penalties under either the new or old rules. The depositor's consent comes into play only if the bank or S&L opts to use the new, lower penalty.

Judged by the bulging mailbag, a fairly large number of banks and S&Ls are applying the old penalty. Much of that mail comes from unhappy certificate holders, who vow to take their money out of high-penalty-charging institutions the first chance they get.

A batch of the letters say their bankers tell them the "law" requires the old penalty to be applied on certificates issued before the rules were changed. That's just not true.

Q. Why is it that only people who file "long forms" 1040 federal income tax returns can get a tax break on early withdrawal penalties from savings certificates? Why can't those of us who file short forms 1040A report this?

A. Because there's no place on Form 1040A to report an early withdrawal interest penalty. There is a special line for it on Form 1040. If you have an early withdrawal penalty, or any other "adjustment to income," you would be wise to file Form 1040. It's not all that much more difficult than Form 1040A.

Q. I am amused by your advice that, rather than keep the money in savings accounts and U.S. Savings Bonds, people go into high-yielding things such as 182-day and 30-month savings certificates and money market mutual funds.

After paying income taxes — both federal and state — there seems to be little extra profit in high interest and dividends. Your comments?

A. Gee! You had better take another look at this nation's income tax system. Our law-givers call it a "progressive" system — meaning the more income you have, the higher the percentage tax you pay. But the tax people never take 100 percent of your income. You always get to keep some of it.

So, it pays you to put your money to work, earning the highest possible yield — even after taxes. This applies to federal and state income taxes — even local income taxes — if you happen to live where there is such a bite.

Q. I started to buy stocks recently and now receive annual and quarterly reports from the companies in which I have investments. I know nothing about reading these stockholder reports. Do you have a booklet, explaining how to read the reports?

A. I don't. But there are a number of such booklets. Ask the broker through whom you bought your stocks. Many brokerage firms pass out such booklets to customers.

If that fails, send $2.50 to Department D, New York Stock Exchange, Publications Section, 11 Wall Street, New York, N.Y. 10005. Ask for the "Investors Information Kit." You'll get a booklet called "Understanding Financial Statements" and other helpful literature.

Southwest adds flights

Southwest Airlines will increase its fall 1981 schedule, effective Sept. 9, 1981, by 21.4 percent over its fall 1980 schedule offering 2,211 weekly departures and making 260,898 seats available each week systemwide.

Service will be increased 50 percent over the current schedule between Houston Hobby and New Orleans with the addition of five roundtrip flights, increasing service between the close-in South Houston airport and the Louisiana city to 15 roundtrip flights each business day.

Service between Houston Hobby Airport and Dallas Love Field will be increased as well. Six flights will be added each weekday between Houston Hobby and Dallas Love Field increasing the daily flights to 62 Monday through Thursday and 66 on Friday. Southwest will also offer 16 flights each business day between Houston Intercontinental Airport and Dallas Love Field. The total number of departures between both Hobby and Intercontinental in Houston and Dallas Love Field will be 78 on Monday through Thursday and 82 on Friday. The additional flights increase Dallas/Houston Hobby capacity by 6 percent over the current schedule. Total Dallas/Houston weekly departures will be 511 and weekly available seats will be 60,298.

Southwest Airlines President Howard D. Putnam pointed out that the September schedule is the largest fall schedule in the carrier's 10 years of service, continuing Southwest's 1981 strategy of increasing service and capacity in its primary markets. The fall schedule is only a 2 percent reduction from the current summer schedule. Fall is a time when airlines traditionally decrease service.

Directors of Texas American Bancshares, Inc., recently declared a 5-for-4 stock split to be effected in the form of a 25 percent stock dividend and set the quarterly cash dividend rate at 30 cents per share. This new dividend rate represents a 13.6 percent increase in cash dividends per share after adjusting for the stock split. This increase, when combined with the increase in the dividend rate in January 1981, results in a 21.0 percent increase for the year.

The 5-for-4 stock split will be effected by a distribution to shareholders at the rate of one additional share of common stock for each four shares of common stock held and will be accomplished Aug. 31, 1981, payable to shareholders of record at the close of business on August 14. Approximately 1,581,000 new shares will be issued, increasing total outstanding shares to 7,905,000. Fractional share interests will be paid in cash.

"We are pleased to announce this stock split and the increase in our quarterly dividend," said Lewis H. Bond, chairman of the board. "Our dividend has been growing at a compound rate of 15 percent annually from 1975 through 1980, including a 5 percent stock dividend paid in 1978 and a 10 percent stock dividend paid in 1980, in line with our policy of increasing our dividend payout as our earnings continue to grow."

A PEAK EXPERIENCE

Rising above a ranchouse a thousand feet nearer sea level, Mitre Peak thrusts skyward 10 miles distant as a shaft of sunlight illuminates its rock face and leaves it standing aloof to the ridges which surround it. The noted landmark lies midway between Fort Davis and Alpine in the Davis Mountains.

ALPINE — I clung to the northern battlement of Mitre Peak with 500 feet of open space at my knees.

I was alone, and above loomed a foreboding parapet of sheer rock, while all that separated me from eternity was a two-inch crack into which the toes of my hiking boots were jammed.

Sweat streamed down my forearms, left my aching fingers slippery, unsteady against the fragile handholds. Every muscle in arm and leg was tensed, tiring, quivering under the strain. And tempting me from just 100 feet above was the summit, silhouetted against the blazing sun as though it were just as unattainable, unyielding, defiant.

Inexperienced, climbing entirely without aid, I could neither ascend higher nor skirt the awesome ridge to either side, and I sought the only alternative possible — retreat. But when I looked downward for the cracks, crevices, that had persuaded me to abandon the security of the jagged six-inch ledge twenty feet below and challenge the upper reaches of the escarpment, I realized too late what the experienced mountaineer always is aware of — the descent is far more demanding, treacherous, for the angles are dizzying, the foot and hand holds obscured by the climber's own torso.

To go as far as body and mind will allow, to push oneself to the absolute limits of physical, mental and emotional endurance so that all logic demands that not another step be taken — and then to take that step — is to live, say the wilderness philosophers. It is to enter a realm of consciousness which approaches the metaphysical, where, as though allowed a glimpse beyond an esoteric veil, a man is given a chance to tread upon unexplored territory of the human experience.

And in one grim realization, I knew I had hit the wall of self-limitation, shattered it with savagery and passed beyond, where every step was one deeper into an unknown, never-before-trodden world.

But as I summoned courage for the descent, I wondered if it was...to live, or to die?

TOWERING LIKE a vast pyramid 1,600 feet above the gully-slashed plateau and lesser ridgebacks of the Davis Mountains, the peak's gnarled crags and talus slopes resemble in all aspects a mitre — a pointed headdress worn by the hierarchy of the Catholic Church as a mark of office. And indeed some sacred quality seems inherent in the mountain, standing alone like a guardian midway between Alpine and Fort Davis.*

From a distance it is an imposing sight, 6,100 feet of dirt and rock thrusting skyward over ridges and lesser turrets, a triangular stalagmite of eons-hardened slag framed against the sky like a misplaced Easter Island monolith. From nearer, the individual spires and needles, the volcanic dikes and weather-smoothed precipices become delineated. Its base is moated by a sea of catclaws which rip, tear flesh and grotesquely twisted cedars hug rock bluffs, skirt awesome washes, their limbs warped as though savaged by killer winds.

It is a small Matterhorn without the ice, an obelisk with landslide areas strewn with boulders like bodies rotting on a battleground. A thousand formations — gutted by hollows, cleft by crevices — jut at seemingly impossible angles, lending an alien aura, a surrealistic atmosphere.

IT WAS MADE all the more so on that cold Thanksgiving day when the clouds descended, swirled about the upper reaches of the mountain, seized it with tenuous, greyish wisps. As we scrambled up the grassy knoll of tasajillo and loose rock, aiming for the unseen palisades above, the icy fog fell upon us, chilled us with a freezing mist that swept down our collars, gnawed at our marrow.

Scaling higher into the nebulous mass we reached the first gargantuan boulders and unearthly columns, wavy, contorted tombstones as though in a Karloff graveyard scene in which fog creeps upward from the ground. Below, a silvery sea had drifted onto the lowlands, engulfing lesser ridges and knolls, shrouding the ravine-cleft valley so that it existed only in memory, or not at all.

And above lay the first evidences of the might of the mountain, precipitous towers born of molten lava eons ago. Visibility was no more than 30 feet, and the rocks and bluffs had turned slippery in the moisture. The unknown loomed above, except for fleeting glimpses of pillars hovering over us like the embodiment of death with raised scythe.

It was difficult to see through the fog, impossible to determine a route up the escarpment, but easy to imagine the unimaginable, the ordinarily unthinkable. But it was not easy to turn back, to succumb to nature's wrath, for I knew that once again the mountain had conquered, and we had but survived.

THE MOUNTAIN HAS conquered more than climbers, say geologists — it vanquished the very crust of the earth, overcame countless eons of the forces of nature to stand as a monument to its own strength, endurance, defiance.*

Spawned by cataclysmic eruption of a volcano 36 million years ago, Mitre Peak is a geologic "intrusive," long-since exposed by the savagery of water and wind, according to Dennis Nelson, chairman of the geology department at nearby Sul Ross State University.

Mitre's genesis was as a mass of molten rock thrusting upward through the earth's crust which crystalized before it reached the surface, he said, leaving a huge mountain of igneous rock buried. Erosion gradually removed the softer dirt and rock from the immediate area, carving out the landscape about the harder geological matter, until all that remained was 1,600 feet of crystalized magma rising toward the clouds.

Its age, said the geologist, is consistent with other rocks in the Davis Mountains which have been analyzed with radiometric dating.

Surrounded by evidences of other extensive volcanic activity, including lava flows or "extrusions," the slopes of Mitre exhibit formations associated with its catastrophic origins. Along the northern flank protrudes a dike, another exposed intrusive which probably resulted when magma forced its way into a fracture of the bedrock caused by the awesome upthrust of the Mitre body. Cavities which gut boulders may be "vesicles," said Nelson, gas bubbles which exploded as the original magma cooled. The sometimes surrealistic spires, he added, are a result of the tendency of magma to crystalize in joints, fractured segments, which in turn control the way the body weathers.

While Nelson noted Mitre's aloofness to the Davis range with which it shares a common heritage — "it does seem to stand alone," he said — he indicated many intrusive bodies lie in the region. But none can match Mitre for sheer majesty, awesomeness.

"Why (an intrusive) is particularly exposed right there may be a fluke of erosion," he reflected.

NIGHT HAD fallen along the northern slopes of Mitre, and a crevasse-like chill swept down from the gnarled spires and scoriae above to crawl within the dark grotto yawning wide to the valley below. The January wind flapped against a plastic raincoat rudely stretched across the opposite opening several

(See CLIMB, Page 4G)

Two-thirds of the way up Mitre Peak, a climber pauses to reflect on the receding world.

POSITIVE THINKING

How to ride a storm

By NORMAN VINCENT PEALE

As a small boy, I spent the summers in the little town of Lynchburg, Ohio. In this village, situated in the southern part of the state some fifty miles east of Cincinnatti, I enjoyed some of the happiest and most carefree days of boyhood.

Near the house stood a huge tree, its wide spreading branches shading the lawn. Under it the relatives sat and talked on summer evenings and on sleepy Sunday afternoons. We all loved this great tree. Generations of the family had grown along with it.

One night after grandmother had finally succeeded in getting brother Bob and me to bed — and that was no easy job — a violent storm came up. The noise of the wind whirling and sighing around the house kept us wide awake. It was a powerful wind that seemed to reach down with fingers of steel, tearing up everything in its way, and sending ahead of it a deep, whistling sound from is vortex.

Mixed in the gale were flashing lightning and roaring thunder. The whole landscape lighted up in brief but brilliant flashes and vast sheets of rain hurled against our window. The house actually seemed to shake. We huddled together in fright under the covers — two little boys in a big bed way off in an upstairs room.

Peeking out from under the covers, I saw the great tree silhouetted against the window. It waved and tossed violently with the storm. Suddenly, I was transfixed with alarm, and cried out to my brother. "Bob," I sobbed, " that tree won't last out this storm. It will go down and smash the house and we'll lose both house and tree. Come on. We have to do something."

Just what we were going to do wasn't clear, but we jumped out of bed, barefoot, and scurried downstairs to where our grandmother was sitting, calmly reading by a keresone light. Good Methodist that she was, she had on her spectacles with those convex lenses, and was reading the Christian Advocate. She looked up at us in surprise, "Why, what's the matter?" she asked.

"The big tree," we excitedly exclaimed, "it's going to go down."

She looked thoughtfully at us over the top of her glasses, then bundled us in overshoes, coats and scarves and took us out on the porch into the storm. "You need to get acquainted with storms," she shouted above the tumult.

"It's good to get the feel of rain in your face. Isn't it fun to get out here in the wind. Always remember God is in the rain and He is in the wind. Now, look at that tree. Actually, it's having a good time with the storm. It yields to it. It doesn't fight it. It cooperates with it. It's playing with the storm. It's laughing with the wind, and the rain is giving it a good bath. Its roots are sunk deep in the earth. It will stand for a long time to come. So go to bed, boys. God is in the storm, and all storms ultimately pass."

Reassured and quieted, we went back to bed and slept soundly the remainder of the night. In the morning, we awakened to a different world, bright and shining and fair. Every leaf on the tree was washed clean. There stood the tree with the sunlight streaming down through its branches. We had seen God wash the world last night.

Well, that storm was over sixty years ago. And the tree stands there yet, only recently I stood beneath it and felt its trunk, strong and sturdy. It must be a hundred and fifty years old now. The storms of a century have surged around it, but still it stands.

The reason that tree has been able to ride out storm after storm is that, as my grandmother told us, its roots are driven deeply into the earth. As long as those roots hold fast, it does not matter too much how the branhes are swayed, or that some old ones crash down now and then. The tree is sound in its roots and in its heart, and so it masters storms.

If you want to ride out the storms in your life, send roots down deeply into those values that really sustain life — faith, love, hope and trust in God. And keep your heart strong and confident in the knowledge that a life built upon the rock of faith will endure. If these roots are firmly enough imbedded, nothing can shake you. You will live through life's storms, even the one that may be buffeting you now.

Real estate frauds run rampant

By HIDESUKE NAGASHIMA
Kyodo — Copley News Service

TOKYO — In Japan, an overcrowded island nation, space has always been at a premium and housing remains a national problem. Most Japanese still live in so-called "rabbit hutches," tiny houses or apartments unbecoming of the nation's economic successes.

Housing price inflation continues unabated, and there are jitters among countless potential home buyers helplessly watching real estate prices skyrocket. Victims of inflation psychology, many peope feel constant pressure to buy a home as soon as possible.

Amid the widespread jitters, frauds involving real estatedeals are rampant. Reports of gullible consumers bilked out of their precious savings by dishonest real estate agents are all too common in the Japanese press.

Real estate prices are indeed sky-high. A survey last year showed condominium apartments, typically small ones with three rooms, cost an average 22 million yen ($100,000) in big cities like Tokyo, and detached houses, usually not much bigger, costan average 30 million yen ($140,000). The prices are five to seven times the average Japanese household income.

The Tokyo Metropolitan Police Department recently cracked down on illegal trade practices by real estate agents, and found 71 companies in violation of real estate laws.

A police spokesman says, "One dealer advertised tracts of housing land for sale, which they said were only half an hour by bus from a suburban train station and were close to a bank and a shopping center.

"But in reality, the tracts were one and a half hours away by bus from the nearest train station and no less than 3.5 kilometers (two miles) away from the nearest bank and shopping center."

Proximity to a train station is perhaps the most important factor for urban and suburban dwellers in Japan, since most workers commute by train. Traffic congestion and parking space shortages in big cities make driving to and from work impracticable.

The amazing thing is that some people jump at a real estate "bargain" without even closely looking at it, and that's where dishonest dealers come in.

Another illegal tactic used to attract suckers is to use a low-price come-on which doesn't even exist.

Live warmer and help hold down your bills.

You may not feel quite comfortable at first when you set your thermostat at 80° or higher, but most people adjust very quickly to living warmer. At the same time, if you dress cooler and use a fan, you may not even notice the difference. But it will help hold down your electric bill.

DAWSON CITY, Yukon (AP) — Renovation of the Sluice Box Lounge has disrupted a macho tradition born of drunken days and freezing nights in this former gold rush town.

The pickled human toe that is the prime ingredient of the "Sourtoe Cocktail" is missing, apparently lost in the shuffle of renovations at the saloon.

The toe was sold to the Sluice Box a year ago to replace the original, which was swallowed accidentally on June 29, 1980, by Gary Young, a miner from Ladner, British Columbia, who took one gulp too many.

Up to that point, 725 brave souls had downed the cocktail — champagne poured into a beer glass containing the toe — and left the toe behind in a jar for the next customer.

Dick Stevenson, the Yukon riverboat captain who concocted the drink in 1973, said he believes the replacement disappeared Tuesday night. Manager Peter Jenkins said it may have been packed in one of the many boxes containing bar items, and he hopes it will be found when the boxes are unpacked after the renovations are finished.

The acquisition of the replacement toe ended a feverish hunt caused when Young "fell off his chair twice trying to get it (the cocktail) down and accidentally swallowed it (the original toe)," Stevenson said. "The next day, he said he had a bad case of heartburn, which was really toeburn."

Stevenson vowed to shoot off one of his own toes if he couldn't find a replacement — but reports that the establishment was in a pickle brought forth Alice Lawrence of Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta.

"It's way worse-looking than the old one," Stevenson said at the time. "It's big and red and ugly. Even I'm going to have a hard time not to gag."

The toe still bore its corn, but the tradition was upheld.

According to bar lore, the original digit — a big toe — was left in Stevenson's cabin about 50 years ago by a Prohibition-era rum runner named Louie Lykins, whose foot had been frozen. He shot off the toe with his rifle to prevent gangrene and pickled it in a jar of rum.

The drink was created in the tradition of the rough-and-tumble sourdough days when a bunch of customers at the bar in the Eldorado Hotel were whooping it up, and Stevenson revealed the existence of the toe on the mantle of his log cabin.

Satellite in network

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — A 4,100-pound military satellite has joined four identical units in a space network that lets the president and commanding officers in the United States communicate with remote units anywhere in the world.

The latest satellite was fired into space early Thursday aboard an Atlas Centaur rocket. Officials at the satellite control center in Sunnyvale, Calif., will begin testing the spacecraft Tuesday, and it is expected to be fully operational within two months.

The cost of the system is more than $2 billion, officials said.

yards distant, for the house-sized boulder was gutted from one end to the other as though by jagged, double-edged sword.

Readjusting ourselves in our sleeping bags against the ridged rock, we looked down upon the boulder-strewn side of the mountain, and beyond at the valley and plains shadowy in the distance. The moon was phosphorescence through a streaked nocturnal veil, then the clouds broke and the light cast a soft glow across the lowlands. Simultaneously, the wind seemed to die and from somewhere near coyotes began to yelp and howl, first a single one, then joined by a second and a third, until at last the entire pack wailed its challenge unto the heavens.

And in the darkness of our primeval shelter, a tranquility filled us, for their song was as beautiful in its own elemental way as any we ever had heard. We later would cherish those memories of peace, serenity, quiet rest, for the next day we were to climb again — and fail.

FOR MANY OTHER climbers — those who are aware of and seek the lesser challenge of the southeastern face — the summit is attained swiftly, without incident or danger. It is the traditional route of youngsters from Camp Mitre Peak, a Girl Scout ranch near its base which seems to share a special oneness with the mountain. Not only is each identified with the other by name, but according to legend, one formation along the slope is not the result of volcanic action, but rather signifies the Sleeping Maiden, who has in her charge the protection of the girls at Camp Mitre Peak.*

"As long as girls have been coming here," reflected the camp director, "there's never been a single one injured seriously."

At the summit, Girl Scouts maintain a primitive registry, a weather-beaten parchment of names and dates stuffed inside a rusty can resting in a tinaja. Other climbers have established registries of their own, and casual digging in the loose earth between boulders at the apex may unearth plastic film cannisters with hastily scrawled messages. While reflections by mountaineers upon attaining the summit of K-2, the world's second highest peak, have ranged from the deeply philosophical ("To seek to strive and not to yield") to the more practical ("How the heck am I gonna get back down?"), registry comments by amateur climbers who reach the vertex of Mitre sometimes speak wryly of realization of their own lack of experience.

"R. David Smith and John P. DeWitt scaled, explored, survived the night on (Mitre)," a climber confidently initiated an entry. Then the grim reality of the descent to follow subdued his tone. "And HOPEFULLY descended this same peak July 4-5, Year of our Lord, 1974 A.D."

That the "hopefully" successful descent proved prophetic is denoted by a later entry, dated March 30, 1975.

ON THAT BLAZING July day six years later we were concerned only with making the ascent — we would worry about the plunge downward only if it ever proved necessary.

Three times before I had confronted the mountain on its own terms; three times I had failed, including assaults on the north face, the western, and the northwestern. Now, forsaking those routes in which both experience and rock climbing equipment were necessary, I would skirt the base of the rocks and seek to ascend the southern wall, which heretofore had been a mystery, hidden behind a mile of igneous rock and dirt.

Beyond the briars which snagged our clothing, savaged our arms, we scrambled up a "freeway" of boulders, six-foot weeds and wavy grasses between needles, columns, cliffs which closed in on either side. At its terminus, a thousand feet above the surrounding terrain, we turned to face 600 feet of boulder piled upon boulder as though some giant hand had wrenched earth, flung it skyward, let it plummet.

The angles were such that we could see no more than 30 vertical feet above us, and once there, no more than another 30 feet. It would be a blind climb, with no possibility of determining a route beforehand. And the poetic words that delineate the invariable outcome of man's one-to-one confrontation with the unyielding forces of nature seemed to echo from the bluffs, reverberate off megalith and slag: "The wild must win in the end."

AND SLOWLY, we began to climb, Vibram soles scraping against eroded rock, gripping it; gloved fingers straining to reach cracks, pull 165 pounds skyward in defiance of the frightening tug of the depths below. We sought the security of a pinyon whose twisted limbs reached outward over precipice like ghostly tentacles hovering over a would-be grave, attacked a gully cleaving a fortification of rock in twain, faced bizzarely strewn boulders which left chimneys, chutes, crevasses that yawned temptingly.

The sky loomed nearer, and the world began to recede on all fronts — desolate plains an unfurled banner toward the sinking sun, Livermore and Locke a bastion to the north, a thousand feet of open space infinity at our feet — leaving in its wake, only solitude, utter tranquility. And just three hours from the moment we had stood at the base of the escarpment one-third of a mile below, we stood taller than a mountain, towered six feet above the megalithic summit whose lofty stature had marked the culmination of countless epochs of geological history.

And we were satisfied.

Animals (gasp) all in day's work

By CRAIG MACDONALD
Copley News Service

Everything looked peaceful when Dick Donnelly reported to work his first day as an installer for Pacific Telephone in Mission Viejo, Calif.

"The neighborhoods were well kept up, things were quiet, the sun was shining in all its glory," Donnelly said.

But he had no idea what was behind closed doors. On his very first call, Donnelly walked through a door into a backyard and came face-to-face with a coiled 15-foot python.

"I could feel my heart in my throat," he said, still a bit shaken when recalling the ordeal. Fortunately, Donnelly discovered the python was dead. It had been used as a high school science display!

"You never know what to expect," Donnelly said. "It can be startling on occasion."

Pat Boulger agrees. He recently entered a woman's backyard to repair a wire and routinely he inquired if she had any dogs.

"No, I don't," the woman responded matter-of-factly. He took four steps into the back yard and came to a sudden halt.

Slithering out of the bushes in front of him was a 6-foot alligator. As it lumbered toward him, Boulger hastily retreated to the house, venturing outside only after the 'gator was caged.

Installer John Allen was walking up a driveway in Laguna Hills, Calif., when he passed a pickup truck. Unexpectedly, a monkey leaped from the cab and bit through his pant leg.

Charles Johnson said he ran into a cat problem several years ago working in the Live Oak Canyon area. "There was a lady who had more than 20 cats," he said. "These cats hunted much of their food in nearby canyons and the felines weighed about 15 pounds each. If they grabbed you by the leg to play, it could be a touchy situation."

Pete Maris was installing a phone in a barn not far away when he was approached by a 2-foot miniature horse. His co-workers didn't believe him, especially when he mentioned the tiny animal began running a figure-eight pattern between his legs.

"I've seen lot of things in my time but nothing like that!" Maris said. "The trained horse was part of a show put on at fairs."

Although encounters with miniature horses, cats, monkeys, alligators and pythons occur on occasion, the main animals that installers come across are domestic dogs. Many canines tenaciously protect their territory, threatening to bite the phone repair person or installer, who enters a yard with tools hanging from the belt.

"The German shepherds and Doberman pinschers scare the daylights out of you, but it's the little nippers you really have to watch," said Bob Ruzzi, an installation supervisor. When he was an installer, he entered a certain back yard on several occasions without any problems from a small dog that eyed him closely.

"But as I left the yard a final time, the dog ran up and bit me from behind, tearing my pants. The moral of the story is don't take your eyes off a pet of any size!"

U.S. still satisfied with plans

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, after months of diplomatic talks and public wrangling, is still satisfied that Japan plans to increase military spending, officials say.

State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said discussions between U.S. and Japanese officials at the recent economic summit meeting in Ottawa, Canada "went very well and we are in accord with what they are attempting to do."

The Japanese cabinet in June sharply scaled down requests by Japanese defense officials for an increase in military spending, saying an increase of more than 7.5 percent could not be justified in next year's budget.

Interstate banking approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — Savings and loan associations in areas near state borders will now be able to provide their customers with automated teller machines and other remote services outside their home states.

The Federal Home Loan Bank Board unanimously approved the rule change affecting about 2,000 of the nation's 4,600 thrift institutions. One official said the move was aimed at benefitting S&L customers who live, work, shop and travel across state lines.

The board said the regulation will make S&Ls competitive with other depository institutions that permit such remote service units.

Delay keeps Titans in use

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Air Force will continue relying on Titan III rockets beyond 1984 to put its spy satellites into orbit because of a 14-month delay in launching the first military payloads aboard the space shuttle.

The Pentagon announced the delay last week, blaming it on a shortage of contractor engineering manpower at Vandenberg Air Force Base, Calif. The Defense Department had planned to begin using the shuttle to carry military payloads into space in August 1984. The new date is October 1985.

Influence visible

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has shown in his first 200 days in office he can mobilize the American people to get his way with Congress and gain the respect of foreign nations, White House counselor Edwin Meese III says.

But Meese told the International Platform Association, a trade group of lecture agencies and their customers, that the administration cannot afford to be complacent.

He compared Washington's political establishment to Alaskan sled dogs. "They may nuzzle your leg and lick your hand, and you can scratch their ears, but if you slip on the ice, they'll tear your throat out," he said.

Report on riots critical

LONDON (AP) — A parliamentary report on last month's street riots in Britain criticized the Home Office for taking what it called a "passive role of a spectator" on race issues.

"Far too many Asian and West Indian youngsters are unemployed, unskilled, unqualified and disenchanted," said the report, released Thursday by the House of Commons Home Affairs Committee.

If the problems are not corrected, the report cautioned, the nation could face more urban violence. It recommended programs to improve education and ob training for non-whites and recruitment of more minorities for the nation's police force.

Builder kidnapped

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras (AP) — Machine gun-toting bandits kidnapped a wealthy builder and forced him into a waiting cab, police said.

Herman Eyl, 41, had just backed his car from his home when two men and two women carrying machine guns accosted him, authorities said. Roadblocks were set up on roads into and out of the capital.

Terrorists executed

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Six Afghan terrorists convicted by Kabul's special revolutionary court of murder, arson, sabotage and "creating unrest" were executed, Radio Afghanistan reported.

The six were described as "hirelings" of China and the United States, the radio said.

The executions Thursday followed Afghan and Western diplomatic reports of an upsurge of urban guerrilla attacks in the Kabul area, particularly on officials of the pro-Soviet ruling party.

Seventeen other detainees were given prison terms ranging from one to 16 years for similar offenses, the state-run radio said.

Miner digs up wealth

CASTLEFORD, England (AP) — Yorkshire miner John Thompson set out to build a fish pond in his back garden. He planned it 3 feet by 3 feet, but ended up with a hole 17 feet wide and six feet down.

Up from the hole came 20 bed frames, a washing machine, railroad ties, porcelain ornaments, women's clothes, the skeleton of a dog, a dead parakeet in a box, two kitchen sinks and a four-door car with 73,000 miles on it.

The car still worked.

"We got the engine ticking over, but the body fell to bits when we tried to pull it out with a tractor," said the 48-year-old Thompson.

"I reckon the car had been there about 15 years. Someone must have dug a big hole, driven it in and covered it up," he said.

A neighbor said the previous tenant liked digging holes.

As for Thompson, he says, "I'm not digging any deeper. God knows what I'd find if I did. The hole just got bigger and bigger. Every time I stuck my spade into the ground I found something else."

Falwell's lawsuit dismissed

ROANOKE, Va. (AP) — A federal judge has dismissed the Rev. Jerry Falwell's $50 million lawsuit against Penthouse magazine, saying it was simply "an attempt to redress what is yeally his personal dissatisfaction" with the magazine.

U.S. District Judge James C. Turk ruled last week that the founder of the Moral Majority had failed to prove that an interview with him printed in Penthouse invaded his privacy or was "an illegal commercialization" of his personality.

Falwell, pastor of Thomas Road Baptist Church in Lynchburg, Va., sought to block publication of the interview in the March issue. Falwell was not immediately available for comment.

Many see prince wed

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC's coverage of the royal wedding attracted more viewers in the early-morning hours of July 29 than that of the two other major networks, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. show.

NBC had a half-hour jump on CBS and ABC, beginning its 7½ uninterrupted hours of coverage at 4:30 a.m. EDT. NBC averaged an 8.2 rating and a 36 share, according to Nielsen figures released Thursday. ABC was second with a 6.1 rating and a 24 share for its six hours, which began at 5 a.m. EDT. CBS had a 5.4 rating and a 23 share for its nearly six hours of coverage.

Merger praised

NEW YORK (AP) — The chairman of Conoco Inc. praised the merger of his company with Du Pont Co., but said other mergers would "not be in the best interests of the country."

"It would be a critical development to see the real oil and gas finders put out of business, and that's what it would amount to," Bailey said at a news conference.

It was his first public appearance since Du Pont won a three-way bidding battle for control of Conoco.

Judge won't block move

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — A federal judge, asked to block the transfer of 888 nerve-gas bombs from Colorado to Utah, says the transfer is "a matter of the executive and legislative branches of government."

U.S. District Judge David Winder refused on Thursday to block the transfer of the "Weteye" bombs, saying he didn't have jurisdiction.

The Women's International League for Peace and Freedom and the Utah Peace and Human Environment Institute Inc. had sought a temporary injunction blocking the move.

The Army plans to transfer the bombs from the Rocky Mountain Arsenal in Denver to the Tooele Army Depot in western Utah. The Army has refused to say when the move will take place, but Congress has ordered the bombs transferred by Oct. 10.

Advertising attracts black families to white neighborhood

DENVER (AP) — Parents in a predominantly white neighborhood have taken out newspaper advertisements urging black families to move in and help them battle a school desegregation plan.

If the campaign attracts enough black families, the parents say, their neighborhood might meet court-imposed standards for racial balance, allowing their children to walk to school.

"Thinking about moving?" said the one-column ad in the Denver Weekly. "We invite you to consider Harvey Park in beautiful southwest Denver, a family community (with) neighborhood schools, naturally integrated neighborhood."

Gretchen Palmer, a member of the group organizing the effort, said about 20 black families had expressed interest in moving to the area since the ad first appeared two weeks ago.

"I'm not certain a large number of blacks could afford to move out here," Ms. Palmer said, adding that the housing available ranges from moderate to upper income levels."But at least they'll know the community is here and that we have an open mind."

The newspaper, which circulates in northeastern Denver, has an almost exclusively black readership.

Ms. Palmer said she and other parents in the Doull-Denison Community Association were conducting a survey of 3,800 homes to check up on the ethnic-population figures used by the school board's ad hoc committee, which submitted the latest desegregation plan. It calls for busing.

The board committee proposes to close one of the two neighborhood elementary schools and bus children to a school outside the area for three of their six elementary-school years.

The ad hoc plan must be approved by the full school board and a federal judge supervising the school district's desegregation effort.

Under the plan, each school's white enrollment must fall within 15 percentage points of the district's white enrollment — now about 41 percent. According to ad hoc committee figures, the neighborhood schools fall short.

"If we could get more minorities moving into the neighborhood, that would be great," said Robert Lee, one of the parents in the community group. "And it would show we care about people, rather than just caring about the schools. We care about the neighborhood and the quality of life for everyone."

CONSUMER TIPS

By LINDA TRUITT
Better Business Bureau of the Permian Basin

When is a discount not a discount? All too often, warns the Better Business Bureau, noting the increase of complaints over "phony discount cards." Becoming aware of how they work may help many avoid getting caught by this scheme.

Most discounts and discount card plans are honest and legitimate, such as the Midland Gold Service Discount Program. They are a valid marketing tool for the merchant and an opportunity for the customer to save. But some unscrupulous businessmen have taken advantage of the goodwill created by these discount systems and twisted them into schemes.

Usually, the scheme begins with a letter to consumers, informing them that they have been specially selected and, therefore, eligible to receive certain merchandise at a high discount. The amount of the discount is frequently in the form of a "check," a certificate or a special card. In fact, the person receiving the letter could be one of millions who were mailed the offer.

Other versions that have gained results, unfortunately, are letters to high school seniors, college graduates and newlyweds. The offer may suggest that they were selected because of their excellent school records or their "standing in the community."

Students and newlyweds are targeted because they are less experienced shoppers and less likely to see through the scheme.

However "selected," the prospective customer would then be offered to test and keep or simply to buy merchandise at a hugh discount. In documented instances of this scheme, sewing machines and stainless steel cookware have been among the items offered at so-called reduced prices.

The "discounts" are so high that most shoppers would be skeptical if they encountered such as "opportunity" in a store. That's why the idea of being specially selected is used. It tends to dispel doubts, so more people take advantage of a one-time-only chance.

But who is taking advantage of whom? In cases examined by the BBB, no basis was found for the prices that the letters claim the merchandise is worth. The term "suggested manufacturer's retail price" is meaningless if the item isn't sold in stores at the claimed retail price. Chances are that original price is extremely inflated, so the discount can also be huge.

While misleading savings are the main problem with this scheme, it also has a history of consumer complaints for late delivery or non-delivery. The person who has already paid in full may wait many weeks for the merchandise to arrive by mail. All too often, he or she could have bought a comparable item somewhere else and had it immediately at a lower price, without a discount.

Not all offers that arrive in the mail or by telephone are fraudulent. But be sure to take steps to check out any such "special" offer before spending any money. Find out the reliability record of any company before buying, advises the Better Business Bureau. And shop around to verify that the offer is truly a good deal. Remember, the most effective means of consumer protection from deception is information, education and awareness.

Hearst trying to score more California papers

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The Hearst Corp., which owns the Los Angeles Herald Examiner and the San Francisco Examiner, is trying to buy more than 20 Southern California weekly newspapers and two dailies, it was reported today.

Hearst wants to acquire the newspapers, which have a total circulation of about 300,000, and then insert copies of the Wednesday Herald Examiner in the papers each week, the Los Angeles Times said.

"This is evidently an effort for the Herald Examiner to offer its regular advertisers a market saturation program in the parts of Los Angeles these weeklies serve," said John Morton, a New York-based newspaper analyst with the John Muir & Co.

Papers included in the acquisition would be the Huntington Park Signal and the Downey Southeast News, both dailies, and the weekly Compton Herald American, South Gate Press and the Bell-Maywood Industrial Post. All the weeklies are owned by Communities of the Los Angeles Suburbia Newspapers.

Other purchases would include the San Fernando Sun and the Valley View, circulating in the Granada Hills and Northridge area of the San Fernando Valley.

A subsidiary of The American Publishing Co. owns the other papers involved, which circulate in the Hollywood Hills, Studio City, Encino, Bel-Air, Toluca Lake, Sunland-Tujunga and Burbank areas and the Huntington Beach and Belmont Shores areas of Long Beach.

Publishers for two of the newspaper groups were not available for comment, the Times said. But Philip Horwith, publisher of American Publishing, said he has been negotiating with Hearst.

Hearst Corporation president names Benson Srere new executive assistant

NEW YORK — Benson M. Srere has been named executive assistant to the president of The Hearst Corporation by Frank A. Bennack, Jr., the corporation's president and chief executive officer.

Srere has been vice president and general manager of the King Features Syndicate Division of Hearst since February 1976. He will assume his new duties on September 7.

He is a member of the Board of Directors of Hearst/ABC Video Services, Inc., a joint venture of Hearst and ABC, Inc., formed to launch cable network programming.

He joined Hearst at Good Housekeeping magazine in 1956 as associate articles editor, and became a senior editor in 1960, and assistant managing editor in 1967. The following year, he was promoted to managing editor and held that post until 1972, when he became executive editor and vice president. In 1975, he was named editorial director and vice president.

Rare disease robs youngster of his youth

By CYNTHIA STEVENS
Associated Press Writer

ORKNEY, South Africa (AP) - Like most 8-year-old boys, Fransie Geringer is full of laughter, mischief and innocence.

But his young spirit is trapped in the body of an old man by progeria, or premature aging, a disease his doctor says will kill him before he reaches adulthood.

Bald and emaciated, with only 40 pounds on his 3-foot-8-inch frame, Fransie scampers around his family's small, fenced yard, climbing the naked trees with old looking but strong hands, and digging in the winter garden of orange and yellow daisies.

The only concession at playtime to his octogenarian characteristics at playtime are rubber-soled slippers that provide soft padding for his bent toes.

Dr. Martinus van Zyl, Fransie's pediatrician, said in a television interview that the cause of progeria, which can age its victims as much as ten times faster than normal, is not known. It usually is less severe, and it can appear in adults who aged normally as children.

The identifying characteristics are small stature, loss of hair, wrinkled skin and other signs of old age.

Fransie is energetic and suffers no handicaps in his daily activities. But he does experience severe headaches that cause the blood to throb visibly through his scalp.

His parents say he never complains — just sits in a corner by himself when he's tired or doesn't feel well.

Fransie is happiest when his 10-year-old brother, Paul, is home from school and lifts him onto the back of his black and yellow bicycle for a ride around the family's corner plot in Orkney, a dusty gold-mining town 105 miles southwest of Johannesburg.

Once he asked, "Why do I look so ugly?" Mrs. Geringer, 31, recalled, her eyes misting behind dark-rimmed glasses.

"What can I say? I say, 'No, you're not ugly. You're a very pretty boy.'"

When Fransie was a year old, his hair began to fall out and he failed to develop fatty tissue. The visits to specialists began.

Dr. van Zyl says his condition is "static." Muscle degeneration is not marked at this stage, and he doesn't have high blood pressure yet. But the doctor says his case is hopeless.

"Fransie can live to 16 or 17," he said. "Victims of this disease die of coronary heart disease. If he gets a coronary, he'll die, just like that." he said.

Herman Geringer, 37, a demonstrative father, expressses sadness because he can't take the child to Disneyland to see Pinocchio, his idol. But he works at one of the mines as a bangman, loading the men to go underground, and "I'm not a rich man."

"My aim is to make him happy and let him enjoy his life for as long as he's here for us," said Geringer. "That's all I care about.

"He likes to go fishing with me down by the river. He has his own fishing rod. And he always wants to have hair to go with me to the barber for a haircut."

When Fransie dies, "it will be very hard for me because he's very near to me. But if it's God's will, let God take him. We are happy God lent him to us."

Fransie is still being treated like a normal child. When he misbehaves, he's punished. His father pulls off his belt and puts the shy little boy over one knee. But because "there's nowhere to hit," Geringer quickly substitutes a rolled-up piece of newspaper for the strap.

Geringer said his son, who's now getting his permanent teeth, "knows his problem and is not scared of himself."

Every night he kneels, clasps his aged fingers and bends over a Bible on his bed to pray: "Dear Jesus, please make me big and strong."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Emotional pain can be cured

Dear Dr. Solomon: After 20 years of what both my wife and I considered a very good marriage, our relations have started going downhil. The reason is not difficult to find. My wife underwent surgery for breast cancer a few months ago, and since that time apparently has lost all interest in sex. When I try to discuss this with her, she says I can't understand what she has been through.

I have a great deal of affection for my wife and find her as attractive a woman as ever; but at 43 years of age I don't intend to start leading a celibate life. Moreover, if I do have an extramarital affair, I know it will mean the end of our marriage because my wife simply will not tolerate it. I feel as if I'm in a no-win situation and would appreciate any advice you might offer. — Mr. D.L.

Dear Mr. L.: The very real affection you express for your wife suggests that the two of you should be able to work things out. Your patience and understanding must mean a great deal to her even if she does not say so.

The kind of behavior you describe in your wife is not unusual for patients who have had surgery for cancer, whether male or female. The disease itself, as well as its treatment, may disrupt — or, in some cases, even make impossible — a patient's ability to engage in sexual relations. In some cases, too, the weakness and general debilitation experienced by these patients may lead to some degree of sexual dysfunction.

In your wife's case, the possibility of psychological obstacles as a cause of sexual dysfunction must be considered. Some patients who undergo breast surgery suffer a distortion in body image and sexual identity. The same holds true for patients with other types of cancer, particularly those that result in cosmetic changes.

Surgery around the head or neck, for example, may tend to alter a person's self-image and seriously interfere with his or her ability to be sexually intimate. A person who feels physically unattractive, even when there is no real basis for the feeling, may seek to avoid an intimate relationship. As you can appreciate, the reactions of others to the effects of the surgery also influence the patient's self-image.

The fact that you continue to find your wife attractive suggests the affection you feel for her, and is a hopeful sign that the problem can be resolved. People often tend to see themselves as a reflection of how they feel others see them, and your wife must be comforted to know that she is still attractive in your eyes.

I suggest the first thing you do is to ask your wife to discuss the situation with her oncologist (cancer specialist); some have been trained to counsel cancer patients who develop some degree of sexual dysfunction. Your wife may be helped simply by having the opportunity to discuss her concerns with an impartial, objective person. The oncologist may also be able to seperate whatever physical problems may be influencing your wife from the psychological ones. If the difficulty cannot be resolved on this level, a referral for more intensive counseling may be indicated.

Your concern and affection, in addition to 20 years of a very good marriage, should see you through this unhappy situation.

Food poisonings traced

ATLANTA (AP) — Raw milk and a dinner in Italy were the causes of two separate outbreaks of food poisoning, the national Centers for Disease Control reported today.

From November 1980 until July 1981, 18 people were infected with Salmonella dublin bacteria traced to raw milk from a Washington state dairy. The bacteria causes diarrhea.

On Sept. 20, 1980, 15 U.S. soldiers who ate dinner in a restaurant in Venice, Italy, developed gastrointestinal illness from Vibrio cholerae non O-1 bacteria. All the soldiers recovered within five days.

The Washington dairy produced 1,500 gallons of milk a day and sold 1,000 gallons unpasteurized, the CDC said. The raw milk infected with Salmonella came from one of three cattle herds used by the dairy.
