Lebanese, Druse exchanging fire

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Lebanese troops and Syrian-backed Druse rebels exchanged heavy tank and artillery fire today near the U.S. Marine base. Israeli jets streaked the hills near Beirut as Israeli troops evacuated Christians from a besieged Chouf mountain town.

Marines fired on an American television news crew, wounding one reporter and a driver, when their car approached the U.S. compound at the wrong entrance.

One French soldier was killed overnight by shrapnel, and gunmen shot a French paratrooper in the back and killed him this morning.

Intermittent skirmishes between the army and the Druse flared into heavy fighting, with artillery, mortars, tank cannons and machine guns at daybreak and again at midday near British and U.S. military positions, state radio reported.

The radio said midday clashes spread to army positions and Shiite Moslem gunners in the southern suburbs of Beirut as well as to Lebanese troops and Syrian-backed Druse at the Dahr el-Wahsh mountain intersection of the Beirut-Damascus highway.

State-run Beirut radio said army positions in the beach resort of Khalde and the nearby hills of Aramoun "silenced" Druse mortar and rocket fire with a 40-minute barrage of artillery and tank cannons at 6 a.m. (11 p.m. EST).

Clashes broke out Wednesday about three hours after the U.S. battleship New Jersey turned its big guns on Syrian-held territory for the first time. The U.S. attack was in retaliation for Syrian artillery attacks on U.S. F-14 reconnaissance flights.

The Syrian Defense Ministry in Damascus said its batteries fired on the planes because Syria considers the flights a "new premeditated attack against our forces in Lebanon."

Israeli forces, evacuating Christian fighters and civilians, escorted a busload of refugees from the besieged Chouf mountain town of Deir el-Kamar, 12 miles southeast of Beirut. The Christians have been surrounded by their Druse enemies for three months.

A column of Israeli tanks and armored vehicles flying Israeli flags arrived to guard the operation, Israeli radio reported.

The Israeli army radio said 500 refugees boarded buses and would be driven to the Israeli-held port at Sidon and would sail from there to the Beirut area 25 miles to the north along the Mediterranean coast.

Meanwhile, Marine spokesman Maj. Dennis Brooks said a car carrying two reporters from WITN-TV in Washington, N.C., was fired on by Marines when the driver mistakenly approached the "old main gate" at the compound, which now is closed to all but Marine vehicles.

Brooks said reporter Joe Corcoran, 29, was slightly wounded by broken glass and was taken to the USS Guam for treatment. A bullet grazed the Lebanese driver in the head and was treated at a Lebanese hospital. Robert Perry, 52, WITN-TV news director, was uninjured.

Pilot's autopsy won't be made public soon

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

An autopsy report on the pilot of a plane that crashed Nov. 26 killing eight persons was being mailed this morning by the pathologist to Justice of the Peace Bob Pine, but once received by the county it won't be released immediately.

Area news media reported Wednesday that the unreleased autopsy showed pilot Keith Elkin, 29, suffered "hyper acute changes of contraction band necrosis," a type of heart attack. According to a Midland cardiologist, this means a part of the heart died but the condition isn't caused by panic.

Elkin was piloting a Beechcraft King Air B-100 carrying six members of the KOSA-TV news crew and one of the station employee's relatives back from covering high school football playoff games in Wichita Falls and Fort Worth when it crashed and burned about 2 a.m. Nov. 26 just east of Midland Regional Airport.

Dr. David Shneidman, the Midland pathologist who conducted the autopsy on Elkin, said early today he would have the autopsy hand-delivered to Pine, but later decided to mail it. He said his quotes reported Wednesday were unauthorized and he would not comment further on the unofficial details.

County Attorney Scott Henderson said because of a lawsuit involving the crash and the pilot, and the Federal Aviation Administration's investigation, he was checking with the FAA before releasing the autopsy "to make sure we don't get into any liability."

"I have to talk to the FAA first. If it's required to be released, we will," he said.

Investigation into cause of the crash is continuing by the National Transportation Safety Board. A spokesman with the NTSB in Washington, D.C., said a preliminary report did not determine the cause of the crash. Nor has the autopsy report of Elkin suffering a heart attack been officially ruled as a cause of the crash.

Dr. Joseph G. Rhode, a Midland physician and senior aviation medical examiner for the FAA who participated in the autopsy, said this morning that Elkin had a "silent heart attack with no symptoms several hours prior to the crash."

"He definitely had a heart attack. My speculation, and not the FAA's, is that it's only reasonable to conclude that in the absence of other evidence to the contrary, that it very likely could have caused the crash."

Georgia convict executed

JACKSON, Ga. (AP) — John Eldon Smith was executed today for the 1974 slayings of two newlyweds, becoming the second man put to death in the United States in two days.

"The order of the court has been carried out," said prison spokesman John Siler. Corrections Department spokesman David Jordan said the electrocution began at 8:08 a.m., was completed at 8:10 a.m. and a team of three doctors declared Smith dead at 8:15 a.m. after 2,000 volts of electricity passed through his body.

The 53-year-old former insurance salesman was sentenced to the electric chair after being convicted of fatally shooting his wife's former husband and that man's wife.

"He was calm, he walked to the cell on his own power. He made no movement after he was in the chair. He made no statement," Jordan said.

Outside the prison, 15 to 20 people demonstrated in favor of capital punishment, while 40 to 50 gathered to oppose it.

After an autopsy, the body was to be taken by the Rev. Murphy Davis, a Presbyterian minister active in opposing the death penalty, on behalf of the family.

Smith declined to order a special last meal and refused to pick his own witnesses for his execution at the Georgia Diagnostic and Classification Center in Jackson, about 60 miles southeast of Atlanta.

He became the 11th man executed in the United States since 1976, the fifth this year and the third in the last 16 days. It was the first execution in Georgia in 19 years.

A Louisiana man, Robert Wayne Williams, was executed shortly after 2 a.m. Wednesday for the slaying of an elderly supermarket guard.

The Georgia Pardon and Paroles Board rejected clemency for Smith on Tuesday. Georgia Gov. Joe Frank Harris has no power to commute a death sentence under state law.

Three corrections officers who volunteered for the assignment carried out the execution by pushing separate buttons.

BYU accepts 14-year-old student

OREM, Utah (AP) — A 14-year-old girl who has attended school "only a few weeks here and there" will enroll next month at Brigham Young University and receive a dean's scholarship, her family says.

Geraldine Hovenden said her daughter Amy had to undergo nearly three months of intense scrutiny by college entrance officials who wanted to determine her social readiness as well as her scholastic ability before allowing her to enroll.

The dean's scholarship will pay half her tuition costs, her mother said.

"She was found to be very balanced," said Mrs. Hovenden. "The examiners certainly did their homework and were very gracious and helpful.

Mrs. Hovenden says Amy was taught at home along with her eight, brothers and sisters.

"We decided to teach school at home nine years ago," said Mrs. Hovenden. "Amy has only attended public school a few weeks here and there."

Amy said she plans on taking general education courses at first, but eventually will major in music with an emphasis on piano performance and teaching.

"I feel excited and a little nervous," said Amy. "But I don't see any problem with being only 14. The other students are just people too."

Amy's father Alan Hovenden, a financial planner, said Amy has always been a high achiever. "She practices three to four hours on the piano every day," he said.

CIA warned Kuwait embassy of attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. Embassy in Kuwait was warned about one month in advance by the CIA to expect a terrorist attack, but failed to take enough safeguards to avert this week's truck bombing, intelligence sources say.

The bombing left six people dead. A seventh person died in one of five other bombings that rocked Kuwait on Monday.

One source said both the country and the target were predicted by the CIA in late October. The source also said that warnings to Marines in Beirut went largely unheeded prior to the Oct. 23 bombing that killed 241 servicemen.

"Once again we have a situation where a warning with substantial lead time was provided," said the source. But Marine officials have said the Beirut warnings were too vague to be helpful.

Two other intelligence sources confirmed that warnings were sent to the U.S. Embassy in Kuwait about a potential attack. One source said warnings also had been sent to U.S. embassies in Cairo, Egypt, and Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

The sources, all of whom spoke only on condition they remain anonymous, said some evidence exists that links the Kuwait bombing to Iran, but it is not clear that the attackers were operating on orders from the Iranian government. Iran on Wednesday denied responsibility for the attack.

A group called the Islamic Jihad or "Holy War" claimed responsibility for the bombings. Little is known about the group, but it is believed to be based in Lebanon and consist of fundamentalist Shiite Moslems loyal to the Iranian revolution.

State Department officials, who described the Monday attacks as "highly organized and orchestrated," predicted there would be retaliatory strikes against the group's main base in Lebanon if its involvement is proved.

Bombings 'trademark' of Iranians

By ALY MAHMOUD
Associated Press Writer

KUWAIT — Arab diplomatic sources here are convinced the string of bombings on U.S., French and Kuwaiti targets in the capital bears "the unmistakable trademark" of the Iranian Islamic revolution.

The blasts left at least six dead at the U.S. Embassy compound and one dead at the airport. In all, 84 people were injured at the six locations where the bombings occurred Monday.

The suicide driver of a truckload of butane gas cylinders and some 660 pounds of high explosives that burst into the U.S. Embassy compound was believed killed the moment his charge went off.

A mysterious group called the Islamic Holy War claimed responsibility, as it did in the devastating suicide truck bombings at the U.S. Embassy in Beirut April 18, the U.S. Marine and French bases in Beirut Oct. 23, and an Israeli military base at Tyre, Lebanon, Nov. 4.

The group's members are believed to be Islamic fundamentalists who follow Iran's religious and political leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

An Analysis

The Arab diplomats here, speaking on condition they not be identified, said they rejected Iran's claim that it was not involved in the Kuwait attacks.

"The Beirut and Kuwait terror bombings cannot be regarded as isolated incidents," one said. "They all carry the unmistakable trademark of the Iranian revolution — attacks by men seeking what their instigators describe as martyrdom."

He said he believed the motive for the attacks on U.S. and French targets was to "tarnish and belittle the image of the two powers and the West in general" in the Arab world with the hope of sparking broader anti-Western sentiment and subversion.

Another Arab diplomat said, "After Beirut, Kuwait has been a likely target for anti-American terror."

"The spate of bomb attacks was not directed exclusively against American interests in Kuwait, but it also was aimed at destabilizing Kuwait itself," he said.

He and other Arab diplomats noted that Iran in recent weeks has threatened to attack pro-Iraqi regimes in the oil-rich Persian Gulf region. Iraq has accused Iran of instigating the bomb attacks in Kuwait, vowing to select Iranian targets and hit them in retaliation, as it did Wednesday on six Iranian cities.

Despite its outwardly neutral stance, Kuwait has been one of Iraq's main financial backers since the start of the Iraqi-Iranian war more than three years ago. The pro-Kuwaiti government media has been outspokenly pro-Iraqi.

"The bomb attacks were the result of a carefully hatched conspiracy which was preceded by a wave of rumors," a government statement here said without elaborating.

Intelligence sources in Washington said the U.S. embassy was warned about a month in advance by the CIA to expect a terrorist attack, but failed to take enough safeguards. One source said warnings also were sent to U.S. embassies in Cairo, Egypt, and Riyadh, Saudi Arabia.

Khomeini on several occasions during the past three years threatened to "export" his Islamic revolution to the Gulf states. He also threatened to instigate Shiite Moslem minorities in these countries to mount campaigns of sabotage against their governments.

Hours after the attack on the U.S. Embassy, one American company evacuated its staff and dependents from Kuwait, according to local reports which did not identify the company. The embassy charge d'affaires, Philip Griffin, said the evacuation was not done at the embassy's behest.

"The sight of American diplomats, ordinary businessmen, dependents, scared and defensive as they are now, does not exactly correspond with the image of a superpower," said one Arab diplomat. "This, by itself, is a victory for terrorists and their instigators."

France messaged a token of support and sympathy to Kuwait. Kuwaiti Foreign Minister Sheik Sabah al Ahmed had cabled details of the blast to his French Counterpart Claude cheysson. Replying, Cheysson reassured Sabah that France regarded Kuwait as a friend, "a country of freedom and democracy by which France will stand."

"The attack on the French embassy will not discourage our determination to work with you for the sake of peace and justice," added Cheysson in his message, an account of which was distributed in Arabic by the Kuwaiti News Agency.

Court probe nets 10 indictments

CHICAGO (AP) — A bugged cowboy boot, FBI moles, a "Boy Scout" prosecutor and wired judges' chambers were all part of the plot as the biggest court corruption probe in U.S. history climaxed with the indictment of 10 men, including three judges.

"We cut across the entire operation and function of the system from full circuit judge down to clerk," U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb said Wednesday, announcing the indictments handed down by federal grand jury. More indictments may follow, he said.

They were the first charges stemming from Operation Greylord, a 3½-year investigation of corruption in Cook County's court system, the nation's largest. Webb said it was the most ambitious court corruption investigation ever attempted in the United States.

The charges included conspiracy, racketeering, extortion and mail fraud, and involved cases ranging from fixing traffic tickets for $20 to felony narcotics cases and such civil matters as accepting up to $30,000 for influencing divorce cases and trust funds.

Named for the ceremonial wigs worn by British jurists, Operation Greylord became public last summer when Brocton Lockwood, a southern Illinois judge who served a stint in Chicago's Traffic Court, disclosed that from 1981 until last summer, he was an undercover agent for the Justice Department.

He said he wore a microphone under his robe and carried a tape recorder in his cowboy boot while befriending crooked lawyers.

There also have been reports of FBI "moles" posing as corrupt prosecutors and reports that a "Boy Scout" former state's attorney, Terry Hake, became so disgusted with corruption he offered to go undercover. He worked with the FBI and posed as a shady lawyer to snare crooks.

AP Laserphoto

Announcing the indictment of three current and former judges, along with seven other men, is U.S. Attorney Dan K. Webb.

Officials reported up to 100 criminal cases were fabricated to ferret out corruption and bugging devices were placed in judges' chambers.

Just hours before the indictments were handed down, a police sergeant assigned to the courtroom of one of the indicted judges was found dead, apparently after shooting himself. The Chicago Sun-Times reported that Sgt. Roger Murphy, 53, was to have appeared Wednesday before the grand jury.

Indicted were Cook County Circuit Court Judges Wayne Olson and John M. Murphy — no relation to the dead officer — who were relieved of their duties last week after learning they were targets of the probe, and former Judge John Devine, ousted from the bench in June by a vote of circuit judges after being criticized by the city Bar Association.

Also indicted were a Chicago policeman, four attorneys, a deputy court clerk and a private citizen.

The indictments left legal experts questioning the tactics employed by law enforcement agents and its impact on a judicial system in which 322 judges and 21,000 licensed lawyers handle nearly 6 million cases annually.

Webb defended the practices used by investigators, saying, "It was critical for undercover FBI agents to develop the confidence of people in the courts."

"Today's indictments are specific accusations of wrongdoing on the part of specific individuals," said Chief Circuit Judge Harry Comerford. "In no way should they reflect upon the judicial system as a whole."

In Washington, FBI Director William Webster said Greylord demonstrates the bureau's "willingness to follow its leads wherever they take us, and that there are no safe harbors from investigation of corruption."

Eight of the nine indictments were returned by a grand jury that heard evidence gathered in Greylord. The ninth, naming a Chicago attorney, concerned courtroom corruption but was not a result of the Greylord probe.

One attorney, Thomas Kangalos, is a former assistant city attorney who vanished over three months ago and is being sought by the FBI. There were reports he has fled to Greece.

All the defendants except Kangalos were permitted to remain free on personal recognizance bond. A $50,000 cash bond was set for Kangalos, pending his arrest.

Webb declined to say whether the dead policeman was a figure in the investigation, saying only it was "a tragic event, something that should be left behind."

Devine, Olson, Murphy and attorney James Costello were charged with mail fraud, racketeering and extortion.

Also charged were: Dean Wolfson, attorney — racketeering; John G. Phillips, attorney — extortion; Kangalos, 36, assistant corporation counsel — racketeering, extortion and obstruction of justice; Ira Blackwood, 54, a Chicago policeman — racketeering and extortion; Harold Conn, 56, deputy circuit court clerk — racketeering and extortion; Alan Kaye, 33, private individual — racketeering, mail fraud, extortion and extortionate collection of an extension of credit.

Autopsy report, mailed to JP, won't be released immediately

Emphasizing that he was speaking for himself, Rhode said that Elkin may have suffered symptoms or that his heart stopped when he attempted to land the plane.

"But not having the total picture, we don't have a definitive answer yet," Rhode said.

Dr. Brian Mohr said the condition can occur in people who have had a long history of heart problems or in persons with no previous symptoms. "Some people have symptoms for years before this happens," he said of the hyper acute changes of contraction band necrosis.

"Someone could survive a heart attack in 1960 and maybe have pain intermittently for years. Then in 1985 he dies and has the necrosis. On the other hand, a sudden death is a very common initial presentation of the disease."

He said it was not possible for someone to die from this condition simply by panicking.

Elkin held an Airline Transport Pilot certification from the FAA. This rating requires the pilot to undergo a first class medical examination twice a year.

Bill Jiles of Texas Western Aviation, which employed Elkin, said he requires all his pilots to undergo the medical examination every six months and they all complied, including Elkin.

Pilots aren't required to have an electrocardiogram as part of their physical until they are 35, said Ray Terry with the FAA office in Lubbock.

One pilot told the Reporter-Telegram the medical exam includes tests for blood sugar, diabetes, blood pressure, vision, hearing and circulation. A pilot under 35 wouldn't have had an EKG unless the doctor suspected something was wrong with the heart based on results of the other tests.

Killed in the crash were KOSA news director Gary Hopper, 32, of Midland; sports director Jeff Shull, 25, of Odessa; chief engineer Bob Stephens, 47, and assistant engineer Ed Monette, 26, both of Odessa; production assistants Bruce Dyer, 26, of Midland, and Brent Roach, 24, of Odessa; and Hopper's brother-in-law Jay Alvin Price, 37, of Midland.

Annette Stephens, widow of Bob Stephens, has filed a civil lawsuit in 142nd Judicial District Court against the airplane charter service, aircraft's owner, manufacturer and pilot.

Reagan debates troop withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan says he will bring the U.S. Marines home from Lebanon if all authority collapses there, but that a premature withdrawal would renew "full-scale hostilities."

Apparently setting a limit on the conditions under which the 1,800 Marines in the four-nation peacekeeping force will serve, the president said Wednesday that "if there was a complete collapse and there was no possibility of restoring order, there would be no purpose in the multinational force."

The other condition for withdrawing the troops, Reagan said, would be the departure of all foreign forces — Syrian, Israeli and Palestinian — and a restoration of the authority of the Lebanese government.

In a report to Congress, Reagan said U.S. participation along with that of France, Italy and Britain in the multinational force had cost $42.5 million since Oct. 1. The toll of U.S. servicemen killed in Lebanon is 261, all but four tied to the peacekeeping unit.

"Premature withdrawal of the MNF would damage seriously the international credibility of the United States and its partners and call into question the resolve of the West to carry out its responsibilities to help the free world defend itself," Reagan said in the report, adding:

"Such action would certainly bring about a return to full-scale hostilities in Lebanon and regional instability threatening vital U.S. interests."

In an abbreviated news conference at midday, Reagan took steps to ease tensions with Syria, stating that "we want no conflict with Syria. Certainly, we're not there to enter into a war."

Battleship opens fire in anger for first time since Vietnam

WASHINGTON (AP) — For the first time since the Vietnam war, the battleship New Jersey has fired its mighty 16-inch guns in anger.

The World War II dreadnought, the world's only operational battleship, lobbed 11 of its 1,900-pound shells into Syrian positions southeast of Beirut on Wednesday after anti-aircraft fire and surface-to-air missiles were fired from that location at a pair of Navy F-14 fighters on a reconnaissance flight.

The 887-foot ship saw its first action since arriving off Beirut in mid-September to support the U.S. Marines who are part of a multinational peacekeeping force.

The firing came a day after Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger, calling the New Jersey "an awesome sight and spectacle," said the battleship "is not there just to cruise up and down" the Lebanese coast.

The New Jersey, launched in 1942, is one of four World War II battleships the Navy plans to bring out of mothballs.

The Iowa, now being refurbished at a Mississippi shipyard, will join the fleet in the spring, while Congress recently appropriated money to begin work on the Missouri. The fourth, the Wisconsin, would be recommissioned later.

While the New Jersey is not the world's largest warship — American aircraft carriers are longer and heavier — it has far and away the most firepower from its guns.

Just hours before the president spoke in the White House press briefing room, the battleship USS New Jersey fired its 16-inch guns at Syrian positions for the first time, and two other ships fired 60 rounds, in response to attacks on two F-14s on reconnaissance missions.

At the Pentagon, defense officials said the U.S. Navy commander in Lebanon has a free hand to retaliate against anti-aircraft attacks on American planes, as long as the attacks originate in Lebanon. They said Rear Adm. Jerry Tuttle has authority to decide whether to use naval gunfire like that from the New Jersey or air power.

The intensified military activity in Lebanon prompted three Democratic House members who previously supported the presence of the Marines in Beirut to call on Reagan to consider withdrawing all U.S. forces.

"The American people have little tolerance for further sacrifice of their young men to the hatred and ambition of others," Reps. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., and Les Aspin, D-Wis., said in a letter to Ragan. Rep. David E. Bonior, D-Mich., told reporters the Reagan administration through its air strikes and naval shellings "has pulled the rug from beneath the Congress."

Commenting on the Hamilton-Aspin letter, House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., said in a statement, "I like the letter."

But Pennsylvania Sens. John Heinz and Arlen Specter, both moderate Republicans, said the United States should keep its forces in Lebanon for the time being. "This is a time when we ought to be backing the president," Specter said.

Major storm blows snow into Midwestern states

By The Associated Press

A major storm blowing snow at near-blizzard ferocity shut down cities of the Midwest with chest-high drifts today and residents were warned to stay indoors as the wind chill plunged as low as 60 degrees below zero in places.

Four deaths had been blamed on the slow-moving storm, which built the total snow accumulation for 1983 to 64.1 inches today in Omaha, Neb., the most that has ever fallen that city in one year.

"It started out kind of slow, but it turned out to be a significant winter storm," said Bill Sammler of the National Severe Storms Forecast Center in Kansas City, Mo.

Elsewhere, dozens of rivers overflowed in the rain-soaked Northeast and in Oregon, where a police dispatcher called for "an ark to float away."

The Susquehanna River crested at almost 8 feet above flood stage at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., this morning, driving dozens of families from their homes, but there were no reports of serious flooding.

Heavy snow fell during the night from the northern Rockies across the upper Midwest into the Great Lakes region and the Ohio Valley, with about a foot reported at Marquette, Mich., and several more inches expected.

Subzero temperatures and 40-mph winds created near-blizzard conditions across the northern Plains.

In Fargo, N.D., many streets were blocked by snowdrifts and stuck cars. Police said outlying roads also were drifted shut and advised residents not to try to travel outside the city.

Omaha police said there were so many accidents that officers didn't have time to fill out reports. The Nebraska Highway Patrol asked travelers to stay off Interstate 480 on Wednesday evening.

Several tractor-trailer rigs jackknifed on Interstate 80 on Wednesday afternoon, blocking traffic in both directions.

Darrel Derby, the street maintenance supervisor in Lincoln, Neb., said winds built snowdrifts up to 4 feet high Wednesday in that city.

Because of the winds, he said, "We just have to keep coming back and doing them over again."

The blowing and drifting snow also forced many schools in eastern Nebraska to close for a second day today.

By Wednesday night 5 inches of snow had fallen at Des Moines, Iowa, and 4 inches in Centralia, Kan., and St. Joseph, Mo. The snow slowed rush-hour traffic in Kansas City, Mo., to "about 2 mph everywhere," said Barbara Gerlick, a police department dispatch supervisor. "We've got accidents all over the city."

Truck inflames man's desire

By SUSAN McCARY

SULPHUR SPRINGS (AP) — Most men (and quite a few women) can recall their first sight of a bright red fire truck under a Christmas tree or parked by a birthday cake.

Even long after experience has taught lovers of fire engines that firefighting is a dirty, dangerous business, the image of a fireman is still one of immense appeal — a little boy's dream that lingers in the man.

Not every little boy can grow up to be a firefighter, either as a professional or as a volunteer, but Tom Powell of Brashear found a way to "live the fantasy." He bought an "antique" fire truck.

Powell was living in Newport Beach, Calif., at the time he bought the 1949 Ford La France pumper truck about 19 months ago.

He rather sheepishly admits that he really doesn't know why he bought the truck. Although, he said, at the time he bought it, he rationalized the purchase as an advertising aid for his paint contracting business. "There was no logical reason to buy it. I just liked it. It was the kid in me, I guess," he said with a grin.

"SPARKY," THE fire truck, is a retiree from the Port Byron, Ill., Fire Department and owning him has been lots of fun, Powell said. Already the two, both in their early 30s, have had several adventures. Although "Sparky" has a special historical vehicle license from the State of California, it is in near mint condition, and all of the equipment it carries, with the exception of the ladder, is original.

The pair's latest adventures was making the 1,520-mile trip from Newport Beach to Brashear in Northeast Texas, most of it following Interstate 10 across the desert Southwest.

"Without really thinking, I started out across the desert at midday," Powell said. The "southern route" from California to Texas is notorious for its combination of inferno-like heat and steep grades that make for a grueling test for men and their machines.

"Sparky did just fine. At one point, the temperature gauge did edge over a little, so I pulled over to let him rest for a while, just to be on the safe side," Powell said of his super toy.

Without his accustomed air conditioning, Powell said, he was a little overheated, too. "But as long as we were moving and I had plenty of fluids to drink — you can sweat a lot out there — it was OK," Powell said of desert motoring.

POWELL'S MAIN CONCERN was not the heat or steep grades, but his fuel supply and the long distances between stations. "Sparky gets about seven miles to the gallon, tops, and has a range of about 140 miles at best," Powell explained. "When it is sometimes 100 miles or more between stations, even with a five-gallon can of emergency fuel, I couldn't ignore the gas gauge," he added.

Powell commented about the $261 it cost him for fuel on the 3½-day trip. "Although it was fun, I don't think I want to take any more long trips with Sparky," he said.

On the trip, Powell noted that drivers fell into three groups: those who did not appear to see the fire truck at all; those who almost wrecked their vehicles trying to see what or who and where the truck was going, and those who would stop or pull over or wave the truck by at an intersection.

"It was interesting to see the different reactions of service station attendants when I drove in," Powell said.

AP Laserphoto

Tom Powell of Sulphur Springs stands alongside his very own 1949 Ford La France fire truck. Powell bought the truck nearly two years ago in California because he "just liked it."

"Some would stare at us for a minute or two before they would come out but wouldn't ask any questions. Some would come right out and start up a conversation."

POWELL SAID he and Sparky took part in the Firemen's Muster and parade in Glendale, Calif.

There were about 100 pieces of firefighting equipment in the parade. They ranged from an antique pumper built in 1796 by a former apprentice to Paul Revere to huge, brand-new ladder trucks from the Los Angeles Fire Department, Powell said. He recalled that there were a few steamer-type pumpers in which they built a fire to build up the pressure. "It took about 20 minutes, but they were pumping water," he said.

"The Firemen's Muster, which professional or volunteer firefighting groups or owners of antique firefighting equipment may attend, is really fantastic. They have all kinds of competition between the groups, all just for fun," he said.

What else can one do with a fire truck besides fight fires or go to a fireman's picnic and parade? They are good for chili cookoffs, Powell suggested. And they are sure to attract all the kids in the neighborhood (even kids over 50), Sparky's owner pointed out.

In fact, Sparky's attraction to children caused Powell to investigate the possibility of taking it to birthday parties, but Powell said the cost of liability insurance and other factors make the venture too expensive. "But wouldn't it be fun to drive up to a bunch of kids and maybe pass out fireman's hats and take them all for a ride?" he said.

Powell still seems to be a bit bewildered and bemused by his ownership of the "ultimate toy." Although Sparky has become a good "friend," Powell said, "I still don't know why I'm keeping him or what to do with him."

Atheists say 'Merry Solstice' to all

AUSTIN (AP) — A lighted sign wishing "Merry Solstice" will be displayed at the American Atheist Center during the winter solstice in an effort to re-educate the public, says atheist vice president Gerald Tholen.

"The peoples of the world deserve to have their legitimate annual times of celebration returned to them...Religious mythologies played no part in the establishment of this historic natural event," Tholen said in a statement earlier this week.

He added in an interview that the sign would be put up on or about Dec. 22, whichever day is the shortest day of the year, and would remain in place until about Jan. 1.

Labor's new leader dubbed 'shooting star of socialism'

BRIGHTON, England (AP) — Neil Kinnock, new leader of Britain's opposition Labor Party, is an eloquent left-winger and Welsh miner's son, the hope of a socialist movement divided and demoralized by years of failure.

Dubbed the "shooting star of socialism," by the domestic press, Kinnock, 41, is one of the youngest politicians to head a major British party.

"If that's the criterion, John Kennedy would never have been president," Kinnock has said, dismissing criticism that he lacks government experience. He would replace Conservative Margaret Thatcher as prime minister if Labor regained power.

A redhead with a sharp wit and a broad smile, Kinnock has long been involved in leftist causes and has a working-class background highly respected by Labor's supporters.

He has portrayed himself as a pragmatist prepared to crack down on Labor's radical left, widely blamed for the party's steady demise and humiliating defeat in the June 9 general elections.

"I can work with anyone in the Labor Party who wants to win," Kinnock said.

He announced his candidacy after Michael Foot, 70, decided to resign as party chief following the June elections, Labor's poorest showing since 1918.

Whether Kinnock can put Labor back in office at the next election scheduled for 1988 is uncertain. But for Mrs. Thatcher, who regularly derided Foot as a rambling, weak intellectual, Kinnock is a much tougher adversary.

"She was conceited," Kinnock said of Mrs. Thatcher after she triumphed in the last election. "Now she thinks she's absolutely perfect."

It was the sort of jibe at which Kinnock excels, but critics charge he is better at oratory and insults than judgment.

"There is a view that while he may be an improvement on Mr. Foot, he's not quite good enough," said the independent Financial Times.

While castigating the Conservatives and the centrist Social Democratic-Liberal alliance, Kinnock came to the leadership acknowledging that to govern ever again, Labor must woo the middle class — "a party for haves as well as the have-nots."

Since June, he has notably moderated his fervor for unilateral nuclear disarmament and withdrawal from the Common Market. Many middle-class Labor supporters deserted the party in June because of its radical stand on those issues.

Imbued with the socialist traditions of the Welsh mining valleys where he was raised, Kinnock attracted national attention as Labor's education spokesman after the party's 1979 defeat.

He began a vigorous campaign against private schools which he regards as a foundation of Britain's enduring class system — "the very cement in the wall that divides British society."

Zimbabwe tries to resolve tribal customs with women's rights

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — Unmarried couples are granted divorces. Men who think they are divorced remain married in the eyes of the law. Wives find out suddenly that they are divorced.

Such predicaments abound in Zimbabwe as the young black-governed nation tries to resolve contradictions between tribal customs of male domination and new laws granting rights to women.

Six months ago, after a bitter political debate, Parliament approved a law dramatically increasing women's rights. The "Age of Majority Act" gave women over 18 the right to choose their husband and petition in court for divorce, alimony and custody of children.

That law clashes with tribal custom in which guardianship of a woman passes from her father to her husband. Traditionally, Zimbabwean women have been treated as minors. They have been prevented from doing business, renting a house or even spending money without the permission of their husbands.

The new act is still widely ridiculed in a society where customs have deep roots, especially in family matters.

In a traditional "family" divorce, the families of the couple gather in a circle to hear the arguments of both sides for or against a separation. Oral decisions by the family elders are final. If the consensus is for a divorce, the woman is returned to her father with only her cooking pots and clothes.

That also has applied to widows. The new act gives widows the right to go to court to inherit their husband's estate.

The Majority Act gives a woman the right to choose her own spouse even if other suitors offer her family more "lobola," a dowry paid by the man to the family of the bride. Lobola traditionally entitles a husband to ownership of his wife's fertility, and by custom it ensures that he gets custody of children in a family divorce.

In the past, the lobola payment amounted to a few cattle or goats. Now it city man can be required to pay as much as $4,000 to $5,000 for a college-educated wife.

Parliament refused to abolish the practice of lobola altogether, despite objections from women who took part in the black nationalist-guerrilla struggle against the white-minority government in what then was called Rhodesia.

Formal independence from Britain in 1980 brought a more equitable distribution of wealth and created a new black elite. Zimbabweans who have lived abroad, especially in Britain and the United States, returned with views that often conflicted with tribal customs.

"Many people have one leg firmly entrenched in the old world and another in the new," said High Court Registrar William Chirambasukwa, who records all legal marriages and separations in Harare.

Americans run for tax shelters as year wanes

NEW YORK (AP) — In the waning weeks of the year, many Americans develop a case of tax-shelter fever.

And as financial experts unanimously agree, it can often prove to be a painful and costly affliction.

"At this time of the year, we urge extreme caution in selecting any tax sheltered investment," says William Brennan, publisher of a newsletter on tax matters. "There is simply not enough time for a proper evaluation from both a tax and economic standpoint."

"Some of the investments offered this late in the year are viable and will be beneficial in the right circumstances," adds the accounting firm of Arthur Young. "Others, however, are not. The annual year-end rush to obtain tax shelters sometimes clouds the true issues, and you must be attentive to the various risks-benefits involved.

Not so long ago, tax-shelter investments, in areas like real estate, oil and gas, cattle breeding and equipment leasing, were aimed mainly at wealthy people. But as inflation pushed more and more Americans into high tax brackets, they gained much broader appeal.

From about $1 billion in publicly registered funds in 1975, the market has grown to more than $10 billion this year, says Howard Slayen, tax partner in the Palo Alto, Calif., office of Coopers & Lybrand, accountants.

"Furthermore, total investment activity in this area is probably understated by as much as 50 percent since many investments are privately placed," Slayen observed.

It's a standard precept in personal finance that investors should plan their tax-shelter moves early in the year, when they have plenty of time to evaluate the deals available and consider which will best suit their individual circumstances.

But in the press of all the other business of life, it's easy enough to put off taking any action until the year-end deadline gets uncomfortably close. No one knows that better than people in the business of selling shelter vehicles.

"During the next few weeks, otherwise rational, conservative investors turn into easy prey for the army of tax shelter promoters," says Jay Goldinger, a broker at Cantor, Fitzgerald & Co. in Beverly Hills, Calif.

For those who are determined to get into a shelter before year end, Goldinger advises, "Beware of promotional hype. One of the most telltale signs of a questionable tax shelter is slick, multicolored advertising. Remember, it is the investor who ultimately pays for the expense."

One of the biggest hazards in the game right now is the militant approach the Internal Revenue Service is taking toward what it considers "abusive" shelters. IRS policy is that "every tax return identified as containing a questionable shelter be examined," notes Robert Stanger, an investment adviser specializing in tax shelters.

Of course, the experts note, many good, perfectly legal tax shelters exist that can withstand the most stringent IRS audit. But there are also lots of them that may cross the line into "abusive" territory.

Is Reagan re-election staff part of White House team?

By DONALD M. ROTHBERG

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan's re-election committee occupies the 6th floor of a spiffy office building across town from the White House, a distance that one day could seem miles too far to the Reaganites determined to control his 1984 campaign.

"We are one team," responds campaign spokesman James Lake when he is asked about the potential for conflicts between the re-election committee and the White House staff.

"I haven't seen anybody sharpshooting anybody else," he added.

Lake's optimism may prove correct. But it is worth recalling that it comes from a guy who was a victim of infighting during the 1980 Reagan campaign.

Lake was one of three top Reagan campaign aides fired in 1980, the day of the New Hampshire primary. The others were John Sears, the campaign manager, and Charles Black, the field director.

Sears was the real target. He lost out in a power struggle with such old line Reagan supporters as Edwin Meese III and Lyn Nofziger.

In those days the rivalry tended to be between the Californians who worked for Reagan when he was governor and the relative latecomers, like Sears, who had taken control of his presidential campaign.

Reagan's victory in 1980 changed the equation. As president he was surrounded by an executive bureaucracy that many conservatives felt was pushing him toward moderate Republican positions.

The villain of that scenario was James A. Baker III, White House chief of staff, a Texan who backed Gerald Ford over Reagan in 1976, and ran George Bush's 1980 campaign for the presidential nomination.

Baker has always seemed too moderate for some of the conservatives who consider themselves the real keepers of the Reagan philosophy and they have chafed at some of the appointments of people they considered Ford and Bush Republicans to key administration posts.

But the real test for many of those conservatives was the Reagan re-election effort and the question of who would be in charge. Would it be Sen. Paul Laxalt of Nevada, a close Reagan friend and unquestioned conservative, or would it be Baker?

The re-election effort has started even though Reagan hasn't definitely said he will run. His aides have said they expect him to run.

The answer to who would be in charge of the re-election effort seemed to be Laxalt, who was named general chairman of the Republican Party and the man in charge of the Reagan campaign along with Ed Rollins, who moved to the re-election committee from his post as White House political director.

Walesa takes on risky role

By BERNARD D. KAPLAN
Hearst Feature Service

PARIS — Western diplomats expressed belief earlier this week that Solidarity chief Lech Walesa has taken on a new and potentially risky role in Poland.

He is thought to have become the pivotal figure in a complex manuever between the Reagan administration and the Polish Communist regime which is designed to bring about a lifting of U.S. economic sanctions in exchange for political liberalization.

Walesa's surprise meeting in Gdansk last weekend with U.S. Charge d'affaires John Davis, as his wife was receiving the Nobel Peace Prize in Oslo in his name, is being interpreted here as a key event.

A leading French foreign ministery expert on Eastern Europe said, "It has made Walesa the privileged interlocutor between his country and the U.S. In effect, he is negotiating for (Polish leader Gen. Wojciech) Jaruzelski, the man who kept him under house arrest for so long. But, of course, he is also negotiating for the Polish people to try to obtain some form of normalization in Poland before it becomes too late."

The same diplomat added that Walesa's recent actions indicate clearly that he believes time is running out before the danger of a fresh Polish explosion.

The meeting between him and Davis could easily have been prevented by the Polish authorities. No encounter like it had previously been permitted. But this one came not only in the glow of Walesa's enhanced world stature as a Nobel Peace Prize winner but within days of his public demand that the Western powers call off the economic sanctions imposed on Poland following Jaruzelski's declaration of martial law two years ago.

The Solidarity leader's initiative contains several political and personal risks. Sources here said that it had not met with unanimous approval within the banned but still clandestinely active Polish free labor movement. Some voices in Solidarity are reported to have criticized him for allegedly "appeasing" the regime by his anti-sanctions declaration.

Government newspapers, meanwhile, have condemned both him and the United States. A leading official organ, Szeczpospolita, accused him of "insincerity" and President Ronald Reagan of engaging in a "plot" to bolster Walesa's prestige among ordinary Poles who had lost faith in Solidarity itself. The paper claimed that the American government was trying to free itself from the "fiasco of its sanctions (against Poland) without losing face."

Despite such attacks, the preponderant view among Western officials and Solidarity members now exiled in Western Europe is that the Jaruzelski regime is tacitly supporting Walesa's move.

Significantly, a recent White House statement that release of Polish political prisoners would be the key factor in weighing whether to lift sanctions got a positive reaction from the Polish foreign ministry. A spokesman in Warsaw interpreted it to mean that the Reagan administration had dropped other conditions previously set for abolishing the sanctions.

Walesa was said to be impelled by a growing sense of urgency. He reportedly believes that, unless positive action occurred soon, another period of upheaval followed by wholesale repression and a second declaration of martial law was virtually inevitable.

Word from Walesa's informal "brain trust" inside Poland is that Soviet influence on day-to-day affairs in the country is again growing. This is said to be due especially to Jaruzelski's present almost total dependence on Soviet economic help.

Readers can't tell if 'anonymous sources' informed or not

By MIKE FEINSILBER

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — Robert Maynard, who used to be a Washington newspaperman himself, was here the other night complaining about that ever-present Washington figure, that will-o'-the-whisper, the anonymous source.

You know him: he's the "informed source" who's "in a position to know" or "close to the secretary," "familiar with the secretary's thinking" or even "aboard the secretary's plane."

He's shy.

He speaks often, but always "on background" or "not for attribution." Sometimes he'll speak "only on condition that he not be identified."

He's often plural: He's "knowledgeable sources" then or simply "State Department officials."

Sometimes he almost goes completely underground, appearing by indirection in such phrases as, "It was understood."

Maynard, who is now editor and publisher of the Oakland, Calif., Tribune, said something happens to the news when it crosses the Rockies. It becomes skewed, bewildering, out of sync with common sense. And he fingers Mr. Anonymous Source as one of the troublemakers.

Maynard cited the reliance on unnamed sources as one of the chief reasons people distrust newspapers and he cites that distrust as dangerous, not only to newspapers but to democracy.

They're damaging because they destroy credibility. The reader can't evaluate the news if he doesn't know who put it out. He has to take the reporter's word for it that the source indeed is in a position to know what he's talking about — and, in fact, that there is a source, that the reporter just didn't make up his news.

A source who is quoted by name is putting his own credibility on the line. The news from an unnamed source is on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. An unnamed source can't write a letter to the editor or go on the radio or to another reporter and say, "Wait a minute. The paper got it all wrong."

Reporters worry about these things but journalism, like everything else, is complicated.

No reporter worth his salt would write a story without attribution if a source can be cited (except for the most innocuous sort of news such as, "The committee will meet next week," or news he saw with his own eyes, such as "the jury returned a verdict of guilty" or "the chairman pounded the rostrum with his fists.")

But, some sources won't talk unless reporters promise not to identify them by name. That happens often and it seems to be happening more often than ever.

Then the reporter has a choice of refusing to write the news (not quite fair to readers and unlikely to sit well with editors) or of writing the news without attribution (not fair, either) or of working the phones and trying to find a source who will give the news and allow his name to be used.

Fine, but often that fellow can't be found. Or a deadline arrives or suppertime comes and the reporter takes the easy way out.

Briefings are held every day all over Washington by high officials under ground rules that stipulate the officials can be identified only by vague titles like "senior administration officials" or "Pentagon officials." A reporter violates those rules only once; he won't be let in for the next briefing.

He can boycott to protest — and an occasional brave soul does — but everyone else will have a story his readers won't.

Sometimes sources refuse identification for self-serving reasons and sometimes for innocent reasons. Some press secretaries know, for example, that the senator will be unhappy if he sees the press secretary's name in the paper rather than the senator's.

Sometimes a bureaucrat calls a reporter with a piece of news that he thinks ought to be in the papers but that will get him in trouble if his name is attached to it. That's called a leak but it is not necessarily a self-serving leak: it might be a public-serving leak.

Sometimes, truth to tell, it is for selfish or competitive reasons that reporters don't give a source; they don't want other reporters to know who they're getting their news from. Or they know the source will be sore if, having spoken to one reporter, 30 others call seeking the same information.

Congress 'can't be trusted'

From Wire Reports

LOS ANGELES — Sen. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., earlier this week said a proposed constitutional amendment for a balanced budget must be adopted because Congress "can't really be trusted" to balance federal spending with revenues.

Wilson, testifying at a Senate Judiciary Subcommittee hearing here, added that the mounting federal deficit will bring a return to higher interest rates "that threaten to choke off a recovery that has very solidly begun."

The hearing was the first in a series by the subcommittee, chaired by Senate Judiciary Chairman Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, who plans to reintroduce his balanced budget/tax-limitation amendment before Congress early next year.

Hatch said the hearings were brought to California because of a proposed 1984 initiative calling on Congress to convene a constitutional convention to debate the balanced budget proposal. The initiative requires 450,000 signatures by February and, if approved, would make California the 33rd state to support the convention.

THE amendment, defeated earlier this year in the House, would place new restrictions on federal spending. A majority vote in both houses would be required to increase taxes to spend more than the nation's gross national product. The support of at least 60 percent of federal lawmakers would be needed to increase the national debt.

Wilson, one of nearly 50 senators to co-sponsor the amendment, said Congress must face the same limitations as state and local governments required to balance their budgets.

Noting that federal spending tripled between 1970 and the start of 1981, Wilson said that a steady increase in the national debt has left the country paying $131 billion-a-year in interest. In 1960, the government was paying less than $10 billion annually in interest charges, he said.

WITHOUT a requirement, Wilson said, "Congress cannot really be trusted to operate within a balanced budget." Otherwise, he said, federal lawmakers must weigh specific cuts or tax hikes with the wishes of voters "they are trying to please."

The proposed amendment was attacked as "unworkable" later in the hearing by Roy Ash, former director of the Office of Management and Budget for Presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford.

Ash said it would take four to nine years for the amendment to take effect. He added that the amendment, with allowances for increasing taxes and the national debt, could put more pressure on Congress to maintain spending for local programs.

He added that the amendment might push Congress into shifting other programs, like health care, to private business. "The costs would not stop, they would just be driven underground," he said.

Geter: Court issued 'my emancipation proclamation'

state

DALLAS (AP) — On the 477th day of a life sentence for armed robbery, black engineer Lenell Geter walked out of jail calling a court's order of a new trial "my emancipation proclamation."

The 26-year-old Geter said he was "extremely overjoyed" at his release Wednesday on bond. He was convicted of a 1982 fast-food restaurant robbery after five eyewitnesses identified him, but nine co-workers have said he was at work at the time.

"My primary concern now is to clear my name," said Geter, who has said the charges against him resulted only from racism and shoddy police work.

Geter was released from the Lew Sterrett Justice Center at about 3 p.m. after several of his co-workers from an aerospace firm drove to Dallas to deliver a $10,000 bond they raised through personal loans.

He got bearhugs from E-Systems Inc. employees Charles Hartford and Wendell Crom, who had orchestrated a campaign to secure his release and persuade prosecutors that they had the wrong man.

"I love them. I love them all," Geter said.

The new trial was ordered by an appeals court following news reports of his case including a report on CBS' "60 Minutes," and after prosecutors said new evidence had surfaced.

"This is my emancipation proclamation from the judicial system of Texas," said Geter.

"I'll always remember that time when they told me this morning that I was going to be released."

Geter was convicted and sentenced to life in prison for the 1982 robbery of a Balch Springs fast food restaurant 50 miles from his job as an engineer at E-Systems.

Geter was one of six black engineers whose pictures were circulated to Dallas area police officials after a Greenville robbery. Geter became a suspect, Greenville authorities said, only after an elderly white woman thought Geter looked suspicious because he frequented a city park after work.

"I haven't thought much about what I'll do," Geter told reporters.

"Maybe now I'll start planning for Christmas," he said, adding that he plans soon to marry his girlfriend and possibly return to work at E-Systems.

After his release, Geter met with his mother and went to a Christmas party sponsored by his attorney's office. He said if State District Judge John Ovard approves, he will go home to South Carolina for about a week to relax.

Geter said he believed the judicial system had worked, but his court-appointed attorney was not so sure.

"The system at that particular level did not work right," said attorney Edwin Sigel. "A man that was tried and wrongly convicted has been set free. He's not been completely cleared but he has been set free."

Ovard said he would set a trial date after the first of the year. Dallas County District Attorney Henry Wade has given Geter the option of taking a second lie detector test. If Geter passes it, Wade said he would drop all charges.

Geter said he and his attorneys have not yet decided whether to agree to the lie detector test. Geter took a polygraph test last May and the results were inconclusive.

Geter's roommate, Anthony Williams, was acquitted of a similar charge after the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People joined the defense of the E-Systems engineers.

Unidentified man berates Russian sailors

BEAUMONT (AP) — Officials have stepped up security at the Port of Beaumont after a man walked aboard a Soviet ship recently and berated the crew for their government's downing of a Korean airliner.

Guards said the unidentified man seemed harmless enough when they waved him through the port's main entrance on the morning of Nov. 17. He said he wanted to board the Kapitan Panfilov, a Soviet carrier in port to load grain at the Continental Grain Co. elevator.

By the time port and shipping officials learned that the man had gone through the gate, he had spent about two hours aboard the ship, gotten into his car and driven away.

But not before he had offended the crew, wandered the ship from top to bottom, and tape-recorded the entire episode, according to Seamen's Center Chaplain Bill Bauer, who spoke to crew members afterward.

"He was asking why they had come to America to buy grain after killing people on the Korean 007," Bauer told the Beaumont Enterprise, referring to the Soviet downing of Korean Airliner 007 and its 269 passengers over the Sea of Japan on Sept. 1.

"He left a real impression with the men. He was obnoxious and running them down. My impression was that he was basically calling them killers," said Bauer, who worries about what the Russian crew now thinks of Americans.

A man, describing himself as a resident of nearby Vidor and a Navy veteran, called the Enterprise about noon on Nov. 17 and said he had just finished a visit aboard the Kapitan Panfilov, the newspaper reported Wednesday.

The man told the newspaper he had gone out of curiosity and enjoyed himself. He said he asked crew members about the whereabouts of Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, who had in recent months not appeared in public. The sailors replied they didn't know, he said.

The man added several comments that were derisive of the intelligence of the crew members, saying on a scale of 1 to 10, they rated about a 2.

The newspaper said its reporter listened politely, then forgot about the phone call until port officials began stepping up security and restricting access to Soviet ships — blaming the visit of an unidentified man.

John Roby, spokesman for the port, was unhappy about the incident.

"It's kind of embarrassing to me to think there are people who do such things," he says, adding that guards will be more careful in the future.

Still, it's the captain of the ship who controls who can board his vessel, Roby said.

"Once you're on the gangway, you have to have permission from the captain to go aboard," he said.

Bauer said a good guess is that the Russians were too polite to throw him off the ship.

Though Soviet ships routinely carry a KGB political officer — called the commissar — who discourages defections and exposure to foreign ideas, even commissars don't like to get nasty, Bauer said.

From a stump in the backyard of Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's home, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, addressed the crowd at a hot dog luncheon. Glenn is on a fund raising tour through Texas.

Glenn: Lebanon conflict turned into battle between U.S., Syria

AUSTIN (AP) — Presidential contender John Glenn says the conflict in Lebanon has deteriorated from an international peacekeeping effort into a United States vs. Syria battle.

He said Wednesday that initial U.S. military efforts in the region were worthwhile but "our purpose there then became very unclear."

Glenn started the day in Houston and, with Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby as his host, moved to Austin for a news conference, reception at the Governor's Mansion and a $1,000-a-plate fundraiser.

At the Capitol news conference he said American troops are a target in the Middle East.

"We're the great Satan to some of the Islamic nations. We are the ones they like to target," he said.

The Democratic senator from Ohio said the U.S. should serve only as a part of an international force. It's ridiculous to think the U.S. forces can "restore the territorial integrity of Lebanon," he said.

"To think that 1,600 Marines sitting there by the airport can somehow provide an atmosphere where the Lebanese government can gain control of all of its own territory, and with 50,000 Syrians already in the country and several hundred thousand massed across the border, it's just not something that's going to happen," said Glenn.

"It's becoming gradually a Syrian-U.S confrontation. We've already had combat with them. We're so far outnumbered there it's only frought with the greatest kind of hazard if we keep that thing going," he added.

Glenn said he is the candidate most interested in peace.

Heater protects shuttle

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A "grungy-looking" space shuttle Columbia spent the night with a special heater attached to protect the craft's Spacelab and its delicate experiments from the chilly December air.

A Boeing 747 ferrying the shuttle to Florida landed at Kelly Air Force Base Wednesday night and was scheduled to leave on the last leg of its journey at this morning.

The shuttle-bearing jet took off from California's Edwards Air Force Base early Wednesday and stopped briefly in El Paso to pick up some fuel before heading for San Antonio.

The special heater, attached to the craft's rear was designed to stabilize the temperature inside the shuttle.

"It's grungy looking, but it flies great," said astronaut Gordon Fullerton, a member of the flight crew on the trip to Texas. "The flight was uneventful, but that's the way we like it."

Fullerton, who was being trained to fly the 747 ferry, termed the experience "unique and really exciting." He was a member of Columbia's crew during the shuttle's third mission in March 1982.

Star raised for Marines in Beirut

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Five San Antonio residents have rigged up a special "Christmas present" for the 1,600 U.S. Marines stationed in Beirut — an 8-foot shining star emblazoned "USMC in Lebanon."

The five-point star — fashioned from white-painted plywood, 42 light bulbs and red fluorescent tape — is visible for several miles north of downtown.

"We were thinking of the Marines in Lebanon when we built it," said 23-year-old Dude Hummer, who put up the star with four friends. "This is our Christmas present to them. I'm sure they'll appreciate it when they hear about it," Hummer said of the Marines. "We got satisfaction out of it. The whole time we were thinking of it, we were thinking of other people."

The star is secured halfway up a 200-foot antenna tower behind the home of Harold Palmer, who helped build it.

Mother Nature strikes house twice

GALVESTON (AP) — Hurricane Alicia ruined the roof of 91-year-old William Holt's house, but his stepson says he got the structure repaired just in time for a tornado to wreck it again.

Holt was not home when the storm stuck about 9:30 a.m. Tuesday, Stan Elbert said.

Elbert, a Houston resident, is still waiting for his insurance company to send him the settlement for the Aug. 18 hurricane damage.

Patricia Fleming said the tornado skipped over her house and struck Holt's. "I was on all fours looking for someplace to get," she said. "It's a toss-up whether the house shook more during this or the hurricane."

'Santa Claus' taken to hospital

HOUSTON (AP) — Houston police say a man claiming to be Santa Claus sat in a wheelchair outside the downtown police station for seven hours before sympathetic officers, unable to arrange shelter for him, got a mental health warrant which allowed him to be taken to a hospital.

Officer O.H. McKissack said he tried "all the missions in town" and several charity organizations but was unable to find someone to take the man, who police believe was jailed overnight Monday for public intoxication and released about noon Tuesday. "It's a crying shame that somebody, somewhere, somehow can't help him," McKissack said. "It seems like everybody's afraid to do anything."

Police said the man refused repeated attempts to identify himself and locate his relatives.

Dogcatcher couldn't kill animals

ROSENBERG (AP) — A dogcatcher who was reprimanded earlier this year for releasing five stray animals he was supposed to kill has resigned.

"It still bothers me to kill animals," said Daniel Barnshaw, animal control officer for this community, southwest of Houston.

But Barnshaw said his reluctance to kill animals was not the reason he resigned after two years on the job. He said he was taking a job with a Houston tool-making company that paid more money and was closer to home.

In February, Barnshaw was suspended for three days with pay and put on six months probation for releasing five dogs that were supposed to have been killed with injections.

Trial proceeds without defendant

LUBBOCK (AP) — Lee Roy Orana Licon's trial on a murder charge stemming from the death of his common-law wife's 2-year-old son is proceeding even though he failed to appear in court.

District Judge Robert C. Wright ordered Licon's $7,500 bond forfeited Wednesday and ordered testimony to get under way while officers began trying to locate the defendant.

Ambulance personnel testified Wednesday that Robert Hernandez, the son of Amelia Hernandez, was found injured on July 26, 1982. He had bruises on his body and appeared to have been burned on the genitals with a cigarette, they said. The child remained comatose in Lubbock General Hospital for more than five weeks, until his death on Sept. 1, 1982.

Texas man arrested in Colorado

BOULDER, Colo. (AP) — Boulder sheriff's officials say a Texas man has been brought to Boulder to face possible manslaughter charges in connection with the carbon monoxide death of a Longmont man.

Capt. George Epp of the Boulder sheriff's office said Thomas Charles Smith was arrested last week on a Colorado warrant in Pasadena, Texas.

Officials said an investigation showed Smith had worked on a heater at the Red Cliff Motel in Lyons prior to the day of Nov. 13 when Derek Shawn Parker, 18, was found to have died of carbon monoxide poisoning. Epp said Smith had been hired by motel owner Gary Connely of Longmont to move a natural gas furnace in the room from one part of the room to another. Epp said no provision was made to reconnect the heater's chimney flue, although Connely told officials Smith reported that had been done.

Woman's case reaches high court

AUSTIN (AP) — A woman who sued two companies because a type processor allegedly released poisonous chemicals into the air near her office desk will present her case to the Texas Supreme Court.

Margie Morgan sued Compugraphic Corp. and Solutek Corp. for $250,000, claiming that the processor was defectively relocated near her desk while she was on vacation in 1979. She said the chemicals forced her to seek medical treatment.

State District Judge Joe Burnett of Dallas on Dec. 2, 1981, entered a $200,000 default judgment for Ms. Morgan against Compugraphic after its lawyer failed to appear in court.

Emergency room just for children

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — A San Antonio medical center has started the first emergency room in Texas exclusively for children, complete with a special play area and brightly colored pictures of animals on the walls.

"Children need an environment that's not frightening to them," said Dr. Howard Britton, the medical director of Children's Hospital at Santa Rosa Medical Center. "Children are not just small adults."

The walls of Children's Hospital are splashed with bright greens, oranges, yellows and reds, and painted pictures of animals adorn the consulting rooms.

There's even bright animal decoration in the high-technology trauma room, where minor surgery can be performed.

A gazebo-like play area for the sick children — along with their brothers and sisters — boasts a carpeted pyramid and a giant color television that shows only children's programs.

"The basic difference is that the child is growing and developing," Britton said. "This is a physical growth and a social growth."

The lively colors and playful animals help deal with the emotional and social needs of the child, the doctor said.

The patients also come in a range of sizes — from infants to teenagers — so the equipment must adjust too, Britton said.

"We have five different-sized blood-pressure cuffs," he said. "We have to have them in different sizes because children come in different sizes."

The $625,000 facility is one of only 10 emergency rooms in the country specifically for kids, he said.

Guard fired

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — A Texas Department of Corrections guard has been fired for refusing to take a polygraph test in connection with the 1982 beating of a death row inmate, says Daniel V. "Red" McKaskle, interim prison director.

Jeffrey W. Langley, a sergeant at the Ellis Unit, was one of several officers linked to the Sept. 10, 1982, beating of inmate Paul Rougeau, 35, of Houston. Rougeau was convicted in the January 1978 murder of a Harris County deputy constable.

Prison officials have agreed to use polygraph tests for inmates and guards in investigations of brutality complaints.

Police investigate threat

NEW YORK (AP) — Police worked gingerly to remove two attache cases marked "bombs" from outside a Honeywell Inc. office building early Thursday after a anonymous caller said the company was being "hit ... because it is a military contractor," officials said.

In Manhattan, police sealed off the area around a mailbox in which the caller said a communique was to be found explaining the cases left in front of the office building in Queens. The mailbox was being considered a "live package," police said.

Police spokesman Sgt. Raymond O'Donnell said the entire block surrounding the Honeywell building was blocked off.

He said police were using a robot device to place the green cases inside a bombproof truck, in which the cases would be taken to a firing range for possible detonation.

The single-story building in a commercial area was empty when police arrived, he said.

At 60th Street and Amsterdam Avenue in Manhattan, police followed "normal procedure" in closing off streets around the mailbox, O'Donnell said. "We don't want anybody to get hurt," he said.

O'Donnell said no explosions had been reported.

At 11:33 p.m. Wednesday, an anonymous caller told United Press International that a bomb would go off at the Honeywell building at 11:45 p.m., police said.

GOP senator criticizing White House

WASHINGTON (AP) — It is hard to imagine a more scathing indictment from a foe, much less a friend: The charge that the White House is responsible for 9,000 deaths this year and will be responsible for just as many in 1984.

"It doesn't matter to them about the human component," the accuser says. "It doesn't even matter about the cost. It's really extremism, and it's wrong."

The issue: air bags vs. deregulatory fever.

The accuser? A political ally of the president: Mild-mannered John Danforth, Republican from Missouri, the only minister in the Senate. For years he has been crusading for air bags, saying, "It is the single most important thing we can do on highway safety. Its time will come."

AT A SEPTEMBER hearing before his Commerce subcommittee, Danforth's normal reserve evaporated when he heard Robert Tiernan, a Washington attorney, tell how his 15-year-old son Timmy lapsed into a coma after an auto crash on a rain-slick West Virginia mountain road, then died 536 days later. The boy could have been saved by air bags, his father was convinced.

Danforth gazed at the witness, and shook his head. "God bless you, Mr. Tiernan," he said. He traced administration efforts to dump a requirement for air bag crash protection in all cars not to bureaucrats, but directly to the White House.

The administration "has, by its action, taken on responsibility for deaths on the highway," he said. "It's ideology, that's all it is."

Christopher DeMuth, the official in charge of regulatory policy in Reagan's Office of Management and Budget, vigorously denies Danforth's charge and termed it irresponsible.

"IT'S SADDENING to see what is in fact a difficult and subtle issue characterized in such a way," he said. "The fact is, we're trying to do a good job on this."

He said government cannot be blamed for highway deaths simply because it has failed to require passive restraints.

"I don't want to compare it with the seriousness of traffic accidents, but are we responsible for the deaths of people who die falling down stairs because we failed to ban two-story homes?" DeMuth asked. "I suppose we could require everyone to stay home, then we wouldn't have any traffic fatalities."

He challenged Danforth's figure of 9,000 lives that could be saved by the bags, saying it is based on 16-year-old information that is statistically invalid.

The depth of feeling that emerged in the September hearing provides a clue as to why Danforth continues to lead the congressional fight for an air bag requirement after three years of frustration.

DANFORTH has introduced and pushed through the Commerce Committee a bill that would require major U.S. and foreign automakers to offer air bags as an option on their most popular car lines beginning with 1986 models. He and proponents like the insurance industry think the bags are a reliable, cheap way to save the lives of motorists who can't be persuaded to use existing seat belts.

The administration first delayed, then overturned, a rule requiring passive restraints — either air bags or seat belts that automatically wrap around car occupants — that had been a decade in the making.

DeMuth declined to comment on the rule itself, which is under a Supreme Court-ordered reconsideration. He conceded that there are people in the administration — including OMB Director David Stockman — who have been skeptical of air bags, but said that does not prejudge the outcome of the new rule-making process.

With safety technology, DeMuth said, the government sometimes does more harm than good through mandatory standards. When regulators announced their intent to have a passive restraints requirement, he said, "it froze the automobile industry's interest in trying any innovation on their own."

Frank S. Todd, corporate curator of birds at Sea World Park, inspects one of approximately 400 eggs he brought back from the sub-Antarctic area Tuesday. The egg he is holding and another in the incubator are beginning to hatch. Appproximately 250 of the eggs are penguins, the others are various species from the region.

Scientists hope to breed Antarctic birds in captivity

SAN DIEGO (AP) — Far from the chill of the Antarctic summer, a cadre of human "bird-sitters" watches over about 490 precious eggs that could be the beginnings of the world's first self-perpetuating colony of penguins and other Antarctic birds in captivity.

Some of the eggs should hatch in a few weeks, says Frank Todd, bird curator of Sea World.

Todd, two of his assistants and a Chilean scientist recently returned from a five-week expedition to Nelson Island, one of the South Shetland Islands group, during which they collected about 490 eggs representing nine species of Antarctic birds.

"With the exception of the gentoo (penguins), every species that we've collected has never been seen in North America," Todd said at a news conference Wednesday. "That provides tremendous opportunities for the public to see animals they would only see in the Antarctic, and it also provides tremendous opportunities for science."

The eggs were brought back inside incubators to a quarantine area near Sea World's $7 million Penguin Encounter exhibit, which houses the largest captive collection of penguins in the world.

The Antarctic egg project was initiated in 1972 in conjunction with the National Science Foundation Office of Polar Programs.

The idea, Todd explained, is to hatch the eggs in the Northern Hemisphere and thus do away with the difficult task of transporting live birds from their natural habitat for breeding purposes.

"If this works, I doubt that I'd ever move a live penguin from the wild again. It's much less traumatic to move an animal this way. There's no way man could find a better container than ... the egg."

A 24-hour watch is being maintained by a staff that, because of federal regulations, is barred from handling any of the other birds at Sea World.

"We have a cadre of volunteers and people we are bringing in from other zoos, people who are even taking their vacations just for the opportunity to be locked up in this building for two to three weeks."

More than half of the eggs are from chinstrap and gentoo penguins, with an incubation period of 35 to 37 days.

"They're about halfway through incubation, so in two or three weeks we'll know if it's going to be popcorn city in there," he said.

"There is no guarantee this is going to be successful. We've had some birds hatch already, but the bottom line is what's going to happen in two or three or four weeks. If we can hatch 'em, we can raise 'em."

In addition to the penguin eggs, the expedition brought back eggs from giant petrels, cape pigeons, blue-eyed shag, skua, kelp gulls, Antarctic terns and sheathbills.

Petrels have fared poorly in captivity, Todd said, but "if we're successful in hatching them, we're going to try to teach them as we're raising them to feed in specific ways in specific areas."

Skuas, he added, are "a gull-like bird. They're the ones who steal penguin eggs. So we're hopefully going to have some predator-prey relationships going on out there. If that happens, then it happens, because what we're trying to do is have a natural representation of the Antarctic ecosystem."

The kelp gull is a key factor in that plan, he said, because penguins inhabit the water and land, "but they're flightless. Now if we can put birds in the air, then we'll have activity in every strata and get more of a spectacle."

Although this is summertime in the Southern Hemisphere, it wasn't an easy five weeks, Todd said.

"Summer is a relative term," he laughed. "True, it never got lower than 23 degrees, but when you factor in winds of 90 knots, blowing snow and the like, the temperature becomes rather meaningless."

Todd said the group was careful to take eggs only from nests with two or more.

Churches vow tax resistance

SHINGTON (AP) — Fundamentalist church and school groups say the government is trying to tax and control religion with a law that will force all non-profit groups to pay Social Security taxes starting Jan. 1.

At a Senate Finance Committee hearing and a news conference Wednesday, church and school leaders pleaded for a delay in implementing the law. Some warned of massive tax resistance if their appeal is spurned.

"It's a tax on religion...." testified William B. Ball, a Harrisburg, Pa., attorney noted for defending church groups in constitutional clashes with the government. "Churches don't owe any social dues. Certainly the liberties of churches may not be constricted by a bureaucrat's or judge's idea of what is socially worthwhile."

Sen. Roger W. Jepsen, R-Iowa, has introduced a bill that would delay mandatory coverage of religious organizations and their employees for two years. The Social Security Administration estimates Jepsen's bill would cost the system $2 billion in revenue that could be collected.

Paul A. Kienel of La Habra, Calif., executive director of the Association of Christian Schools International, told reporters the new law will mark "the first time government will be reaching over Jefferson's wall of separation between church and state."

"Hundreds, maybe even thousands of church leaders and Christian school leaders across the country are going to resist this and be in the awkward position of civil disobedience and suffer the consequences," he predicted.

Sen. Thomas F. Eagleton, D-Mo., said the Social Security rescue plan was not "sacrosanct, especially where serious problems stand uncorrected." He urged Congress to delay coverage for religious organizations just as it recently did so for "retired" federal judges who remain on active duty.

The senior judges had protested that making them pay Social Security taxes would give them less take-home pay than if they retired completely.

But Rev. Charles Bergstrom, executive director of the Lutheran Council's office of governmental affairs, said Lutheran churches support Social Security coverage.

Churches have an "awkward history" of not providing well for their lay employees, he said, adding, "It was Jesus who said we are to render both to God and to Ceasar."

Utilities oppose sharing costs

WASHINGTON (AP) — Utility companies in western states, calling acid rain "a regional problem," are fighting legislation that would spread the cost of cleaning up that pollution among electric consumers across the country.

"It is just not fair. We have done our fair share" to combat acid rain, Evern Wall, president of El Paso Electric, said Wednesday.

"We believe acid rain is not a national problem," he said. "It is a regional problem."

Wall led a delegation of western utility executives to Washington for a round of briefings with members of Congress and reporters. It was their first step in an effort to block a number of measures now before Congress.

Several of the bills that would fight acid rain call for sharing the costs of controls on sulfur dioxide emissions among all electric consumers in the country.

One bill, sponsored by Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., and Rep. Gerry Sikorski, D-Minn., carries an annual price tag of $2.2 billion for controls on the 50 dirtiest coal-fired generating plants in the country — all of them in the East.

Partly because of the cost, Budget Director David Stockman and other presidential advisers are opposed to having the federal government pay for the cleanup.

Darryl Lindquist, 35, of Farmington Hills, Mich., got into the holiday spirit Tuesday after being laid off for 1½ years. Lindquist, dressed as Santa Claus took his sign to an overpass of the Lodge Freeway in Detroit to look for a job. He said he was going to stay home Wednesday and "see what kind of calls I get."

Consultant ordered to trial

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — A computer consultant accused of the homosexual killings of 16 young men, including a Marine whose body was found in his car, has been ordered to go on trial Feb. 6.

Orange County Superior Court Judge Luis Cardinas set the trial date after Randy Kraft, 38, pleaded innocent Wednesday to murder, robbery and mayhem.

Kraft, of Long Beach, has been jailed since his arrest May 14 when police stopped him for investigation of drunken driving. Prosecutors allege the killings occurred between 1972 and 1983 and that Kraft kept a "scorecard" of the dead men, many of whom were burned or emasculated.

Psychiatric tests ordered for thief

MORGANTOWN, W.Va. (AP) — Psychiatric tests have been ordered for a man who admitted stealing 1,863 books from eight libraries because he feared they could be used to design nuclear bombs.

The books, valued at $61,706 and covering physics, computer sciences, psychology and religion, were stolen from West Virginia University and from seven libraries in Pennsylvania, Lt. James Chedester of the university security office said Wednesday.

The man, who police would not identify except to say he did not have a college degree in physics, has returned the books, Chedester said. He said the man is not being charged while he undergoes tests to determine his mental competency to stand trial.

Groups say they won't give up

BOSTON (AP) — Legislators and citizens' groups trying to dilute the power of the leaders of the state House and Senate say they won't give up, even though the Massachusetts Supreme Court ruled their proposed referendum could not go on the 1984 ballot.

"The issue will not go away in 1984," Elizabeth Fay, director of the citizens' lobby Common Cause, said Wednesday after the court ruled the referendum illegal on grounds that it failed to propose either a law or a constitutional amendment.

Conservative and liberal lawmakers had gathered 100,000 signatures on petitions backing the referendum, which among other things proposed $20,000 cuts in the $65,000 salaries of the House speaker and Senate president.

Parents protest child's dismissal

MARION CENTER, Pa. (AP) — The parents of an unwed 17-year-old who gave birth last August are protesting her dismissal from the local high school's National Honor Society.

Arlene Pfeiffer, 17, and her parents appeared Monday before the school board to dispute a Nov. 9 letter telling her a faculty panel had ousted her for "failure to uphold the (society's) high standards of leadership and character," although it did not mention her pregnancy. The school board could reinstate Miss Pfeiffer.

The student's mother, Cheryl Pfeiffer, said she did not "condone my daughter's pregnancy," but that the girl faced up to the problem and "didn't run away."

'Leaders lacked authority'

DES MOINES, Iowa (AP) — State Democratic leaders acted without authority when they defied the national party and scheduled presidential caucuses a week before New Hampshire's primary election, says a suit by three maverick Democrats.

The Democratic National Committee had assigned Feb. 27 for the caucuses, with New Hampshire's primary scheduled for March 6. But New Hampshire moved its primary to Feb. 28 and Iowa officials decided to move their caucuses up to Feb. 20.

The suit, filed Tuesday in U.S. District Court, seeks an injunction barring the caucuses on Feb. 20 and says the national party might refuse to seat Iowa's delegation to the national convention if the state succeeded in bucking the party.

Climbers have easy challenge

SEATTLE (AP) — When Dick Bass and Frank Wells attempted the last challenge in their year-long expediton to the top of the tallest peaks on seven continents, they needed little more than a bottle of champagne.

The two, with Seattle cinematographer Rteve Marts, walked to the summit of Australia's 7,310-foot Mount Kosciusko on Tuesday to cap the "seven summits" expedition.

Climbing gear they had taken on other peaks wasn't needed on Kosciusko's gentle slopes to the summit.

Dan McConnell of Seattle, handling publicity for the climbers, quoted Wells as saying after the final mountain was topped: "The last summit was the easiest, but when we reached the top it was sad to think that our year of climbing in every corner of the world was over." The trio shared the bottle of champagne to toast the year's climbs.

Bass, 53, of Dallas, and Wells, 51, of Los Angeles, also reached the summits of South America's 22,834-foot Aconcagua, North America's 20,320-foot Mount McKinley, Africa's 19,340-foot Kilimanjaro, Europe's 18,10-foot Mount Elbrus, and Antarctica's 16,864-foot Vinson Massif.

Christian refugees begin evacuation

DEIR EL-KAMAR, Lebanon (AP) — Besieged Christian refugees freed in time for Christmas began evacuating this mountain town today under Israeli guard amid the jeers and taunts of Druse fighters who had surrounded them for three months.

Red Cross spokesman Serge Caccia said 500 civilian refugees were being taken out in 12 buses through largely Christian areas to the Israeli-occupied port of Sidon in southern Lebanon.

The civilians began their departure as some 2,500 Christian militiamen boarded Israeli trucks, heading down the winding mountain roads to Sidon under Israeli army escort. They were expected to return to militia headquarters in east Beirut by boat, a militia spokesman said.

As the militiamen passed knots of armed Druse, several fighters shouted obscenities and threw stones at them.

The refugees are the first to leave of more than 11,000 Christians trapped in this Chouf mountain village since fierce Druse-Christian warfare erupted after Israel pulled its forces back to the Awali River on Sept. 4.

As the first dozen busloads arrived in Jezzine, some 10 miles south, young children, fellow Christians, pressed red roses, sandwiches and small Lebanese flags through the windows of the buses. Church bells magnified by loudspeakers peeled through the streets of the village.

Israel's military command said in Tel Aviv that the evacuation was planned by the Israelis in consultation with the United States and with "the appeal, blessing and agreement of the Lebanese government."

The operation had become "doubly urgent" because of the approach of Christmas and worsening winter conditions, a communique said.

The command said the evacuation would take several days and the Israeli troops would remain until the evacuation was completed.

The communique gave the Israeli authorities credit for persuading the Druse to lift their three-month siege and allow the refugees to leave. It said the operation would last several days, with several hundred Lebanese policemen sent into Deir El-Kamar to keep the peace.

Israeli officials said the army was assisting the Red Cross in the operation as a humanitarian gesture. It was the first time Israeli forces have returned to the Chouf mountain region in force since withdrawing from the area to set up a new defense line further south.

Warsaw Pact representatives leave arms forum without resumption date

VIENNA, Austria (AP) — The East-West negotiations on reducing troops in Europe broke off today with Warsaw Pact nations refusing to set a resumption date. The Soviet Union said the date would be set later — but did not say when.

The talks were the last direct East-West arms forum to remain active following Soviet suspension of nuclear arms control talks in Geneva, Switzerland.

The 31st round of the Mutual and Balanced Forces Reduction Talks, which began in 1973, ended with a plenary session earlier in the day. Under normal circumstances, both sides would have agreed on a resumption date in January or February of next year after a Christmas break.

Dutch Ambassador Wilem de Vos van Stenwijk, addressing newsmen on behalf of NATO, said, "The Western side has proposed that we begin the next round of discussions on Jan. 26, 1984.

"We regret that the East has neither accepted this proposal, nor proposed an alternative date, nor provided any explanation for this procedure," he said.

The Soviet news agency Tass said a resumption date "will be agreed upon later through diplomatic channels," but made clear the talks had not been broken off indefinitely.

Tass charged that NATO countries at the talks "have not done anything" toward reaching a settlement "and continue sticking to their unrealistic, obstructionist positions."

It claimed Soviet bloc nations made significant concessions that should have been accepted.

In today's session, East German delegate Andre Wieland accused the Western side of obstructionism, according to a spokesman for him.

Wieland, speaking for the Warsaw Pact, said the Communist countries had, in 1983, made "important proposals" which would "make it possible to lead the Vienna negotations out of the dead-end street," said the spokesman, who declined to be identified.

The Warsaw Pact pullout from the generally deadlocked negotiations had been widely expected by observers. Earlier this week, however, Soviet delegation chief Valerian Mikhailov had given what appeared to be an assurance the talks would continue.

Last month the Soviet Union broke off talks on reducing medium-range missiles to protest the start of deployment of 572 U.S.-built Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in five West European countries.

Dynamite blasts cut electricity to half of Chile

SANTIAGO, Chile (AP) — A strong earthquake shook Chile early today, hours after saboteurs downed six major power lines with dynamite and cut off electricity to half the population.

No casualties were reported in either the quake or the explosions, which represented the most widespread sabotage in the decade of military rule.

No group claimed responsibility for the Wednesday night blasts. The government of President Augusto Pinochet has been the subject of growing popular unrest.

Police said three of the explosions toppled high-tension electricity towers in or near Santiago, while three more were blown up outside the Pacific port of Valparaiso. The 10 p.m. blasts caused a chain reaction of power outages in the two cities and a strip of central Chile 650 miles long, police said.

The 1:22 a.m. earthquake, centered 30 miles north of the capital, shook a similar area of central Chile, from La Serena in the north to Chillan in the south.

The University of Chile Seismological Service said the quake registered 6 on the 12-point Mercali scale, which measures the intensity of an earthquake as felt in a specific location.

The Interior Ministry reported no major damage from the quake.

More than 6 million people, over half this nation's population, were affected by the blackout, which lasted about two hours.

Cinemas and restaurants closed early, while hospitals, strategic public services and some hotels used emergency generators to continue operating. Most power was restored by midnight.

The leftist Revolutionary Movement, decimated but eliminated after the 1973 military coup which brought Pinochet, a general, to power, has in the past dynamited minor government targets. It was responsible for the August 29 assassination of the governor of metropolitan Santiago.

Most pepie in this Andean country, accustomed to earthquakes and limited blackouts, remained calm. But hotels reported panic among foreign guests during the tremors.

"Some Europeans and one man from Indonesia ran out of their rooms shouting, demanding to know what was going on," said Jose Acevedo, night manager of Santiago's Gallerias Hotel, where an adjacent multi-tiered shopping mall rattled loudly in the quake. "Most Chileans just rolled over and went back to sleep."

Iranian toll rises in missile attacks

NICOSIA, Cyprus (AP) — The casualty toll from Iraqi missile attacks and air raids against six Iranian cities rose today to 32 dead and more than 300 wounded, the official Iranian news agency said.

A three-day period of public mourning has been proclaimed in Iran's oil-rich southern Khuzestan province, where the six cities are located, the Islamic Republic News Agency said in a broadcast monitored in Nicosia.

Iraq announced Wednesday it had launched its attacks against the Iranian cities in retaliation for last Monday's string of bomb attacks against the United States and French embassies and other targets in Kuwait as well as for continuing Iranian bombardment of borderside Iraqi cities.

Iran, which has been at war with Iraq for three years, has denied any involvement in the Kuwait bomb blasts.

Responsibility for the bombings has been claimed by the Islamic Holy War, believed to be a Lebanon-based group of Moslem Shiite extremists loyal to Iranian ruler Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

The same group has also claimed responsibility for suicide truck-bombings in Lebanon, including the devastating Oct. 23 attacks against the U.S. Marine and French bases in Beirut.

Saad pledges to stop violence

KUWAIT (AP) — Crown Prince Sheik Saad Abdualiah vowed to "smash all saboteurs" as security forces stepped up their search today for those responsible for the bomb blasts that killed seven people and injured 84.

Saad, who is also prime minister, reassured Kuwait that this tiny, oil-rich nation on the Persian Gulf will remain an "oasis of peace and security."

"The security forces are determined to check violence with firmness irrespective of its sources," Saad said in a statement following an emergency Cabinet session. "We will never waver in confronting saboteurs and striking those who bear evil against our secure country."

As the crown prince spoke, round-the-clock security roadblocks were stopping motorists, gunboats of the Kuwaiti navy were patrolling the coast and soldiers standing watch on the beach.

A reporter traveling the six-mile route from the U.S. Embassy to the downtown area was stopped four times.

Armored vehicles reinforced the U.S. and French embassies, both among the six targets blasted on Monday, while army troops stood guard at the embassies of Iraq, Iran, Syria and Saudi Arabia. Units of special troopers surrounded the Shoaiba industrial center, another target of the attacks.

The strongest of the explosions, caused by a truck packed with 660 pounds of explosives and driven into the U.S. Embassy compound, left at least six people dead. Another person died at an airport blast.

Shortly after the almost simultaneous explosions, the government alluded without elaboration to a group which "carefully planned and executed the bomb attacks."

A group calling itself the Islamic Holy War claimed responsibility. It was the same group which said it carried out of suicide bombings in Lebanon, including the devastating Oct. 23 bombings of the U.S. and French embassies in Beirut. Arab diplomatic sources here are convinced the Kuwait bombings bear "the unmistakable trademark" of the Iranian revolution.

Iran has disclaimed any involvement in the blasts.

The pro-government newspaper Al-Anbaa condemned what it described as "terrorism in the name of Islam" and urged the government to combat it "without mercy."

The editorial, ascribing the blasts to religious fundamentalists, complained about a group of Moslem fundamentalists who, it said, were still forcing their way into public and university buildings to distribute cassette recordings that "advocate terrorism in the name of religion."

Walesa vows to appear at statue

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Nobel Peace Prize winner Lech Walesa, recovering from a fever that prompted him to ignore a police summons, vowed today to place flowers at a Solidarity memorial Friday "even if I have to crawl there."

But the founder of the outlawed Solidarity union said he may have to cancel plans to deliver an unsanctioned speech if security is too heavy around the soaring steel monument outside the Gdansk shipyard where the union was born three years ago.

Contacted by telephone at his Gdansk apartment, Walesa told The Associated Press he has refused to cooperate with communist authorities trying to arrange a new date for him to undergo interrogation on an unspecified subject at Gdansk police headquarters.

"Some lieutenant called this morning," Walesa said. "He wanted to set a new date for my appearance at the station. He asked how long my sick leave is, but I didn't tell him."

A doctor who diagnosed the flu signed a certificate Wednesday excusing Walesa, 40, from his electrician's job at the Gdansk shipyard for six days. Bedridden with a fever, Walesa skipped work Wednesday and ignored the police summons calling for him to appear at headquarters in the late afternoon.

"I'm still alive. I feel better. My fever is gone," Walesa said. "I'll be at the monument tomorrow even if I have to crawl there. I've got permission from city authorities to lay flowers between 3:30 and 4 p.m.."

Originally, he planned to give a speech at the monument shortly after 2 p.m., when thousands of workers pour out of the shipyard past the memorial at the end of the morning shift.

Authorities said last week they would block Walesa from speaking at the monument, which was erected three years ago to scores of workers slain Dec. 16, 1970, during food price riots.

"If there aren't too many police and there is an audience, I will speak," Walesa said.

Last Aug. 31, the third anniversary of Solidarity's formal recognition, police sealed off the monument but allowed Walesa to walk there to lay a wreath with several colleagues. He was barred from speaking.

Authorities have not said why they want to question Walesa. He was stopped 13 times and detained by police for two hours on the 270-mile drive home Tuesday from Czestochowa, where he placed his gold Nobel medal before Poland's holiest icon, the "Black Madonna."

Walesa said he told the lieutenant who contacted him today that police "behaved like animals on our way from Czestochowa."

"When they stopped us, They took our radio and a tape recorder without batteries," he said. "There was no tape."

Walesa has been detained several times since his November 1982 release from 11 months of internment under martial law.

Last Dec. 16, police seized Walesa at his home and prevented him from speaking at the monument by driving him around in a black Mercedes for nine hours.

It was to have been his first public address since being released from internment.

Ex-airline official confesses

CHESTER, England (AP) — A man who admitted killing his wife 22 years ago and hacking up her body has been found guilty of murder and sentenced to life imprisonment.

In what prosecutors said was a "supreme irony," former airline official Peter Reyn-Bardt, 57, confessed to police only after a man excavating peat near the cottage he once shared with his wife dug up a skull — which forensic tests later showed to be 1,600 years old.

Reyn-Bardt, who told police he married his wife as a coverup for his homosexuality, had pleaded innocent to murder, hoping for a lesser verdict of manslaughter.

Prosecutor Martin Thomas told the court in this northwest England town that Reyn-Bardt killed his estranged wife Malika, who was 32, between October 1960 and June 1961 after she demanded more money under threat of exposing his homosexuality.

Chung named Chief of Staff

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — The Presidential Office announced today the appointment of Gen. Chung Ho-yong as Army Chief of Staff, succeeding Gen. Hwang Yung-si, who's two-year term has ended.

Chung, 52, graduated with the class of 1955 at the Korean Military Academy to which President Chun Doo-hwan belonged. He was known to have played a key role in bringing Chun to power following the assassination of President Park Chung-hee in late 1979.

Floods kill two more people

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Floods along Malaysia's east coast have killed two more people in the area, bringing the death toll in two weeks of heavy rain to 17, officials said today.

The district hospital at Dungun on the South China Sea in Trengganu State, abou.' 187 miles northeast of the capital, has flooded and patients were being evacuated, a hospital spokesman said. Nearby Kelantan state has been isolated with all main roads closed to traffic.

About 19,000 people were seeking shelter in four states affected by the floods. Heavy rain caused by the northeast monsoon took 11 lives last year.

Ireland won't fund airport

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — The Irish government has announced a decision not to fund a half-built international airport for Roman Catholic pilgrims to a shrine to the Virgin Mary in County Mayo.

More than $7.91 million from the government and local sponsors has been spent on the airport project, begun after Pope John Paul II visited the shrine in the western village of Knock in 1979. Another $3.95 million is needed to complete the airport, but the government said Wednesday it would not go ahead with the project.

Supporters claimed it would not only bring pilgrims to the shrine, reputed site of an apparition of the Virgin Mary 102 years ago, but would bring business to one of Ireland's most depressed areas.

Pianist finds Beethoven music

ROME (AP) — An Italian pianist has discovered a previously unknown flute serenade by Ludwig van Beethoven, the Italian news agency ANSA has reported.

Carlo Alberto Neri discovered the work in a private library in the central Italian city of Arezzo.

Neri was quoted in an agency dispatch Tuesday as saying the work, which also calls for piano accompaniment, almost certainly belongs to Beethoven's early days as a composer.

Disease sweeps through village

CAGAYAN DE ORO, Philippines (AP) — A stomach ailment swept through a remote village, killing at least 21 pre-school children, a government spokesman said today.

The disease apparently originated in food served at a fiesta last week in the village of Kalangan in the San Fernando area of Bukidnon, 550 miles south of Manila on Minanao island, said Rofino Magbanua of the national media affairs office in Cagayan de Oro.

Magbanua said a government medical team was dispatched to the remote community, made up mostly of people from the minority Matigsalog tribe who live in makeshift dwellings without toilet facilities.

As of today, 1,224 people had been treated for stomach cramps, vomiting and diarrhea, he said.

Officials question ICAO findings

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — Transportation Ministry officials objected today to an investigators' report which said human error may have started the chain of events that ended with the shooting down of a passenger jet by Soviet fighters.

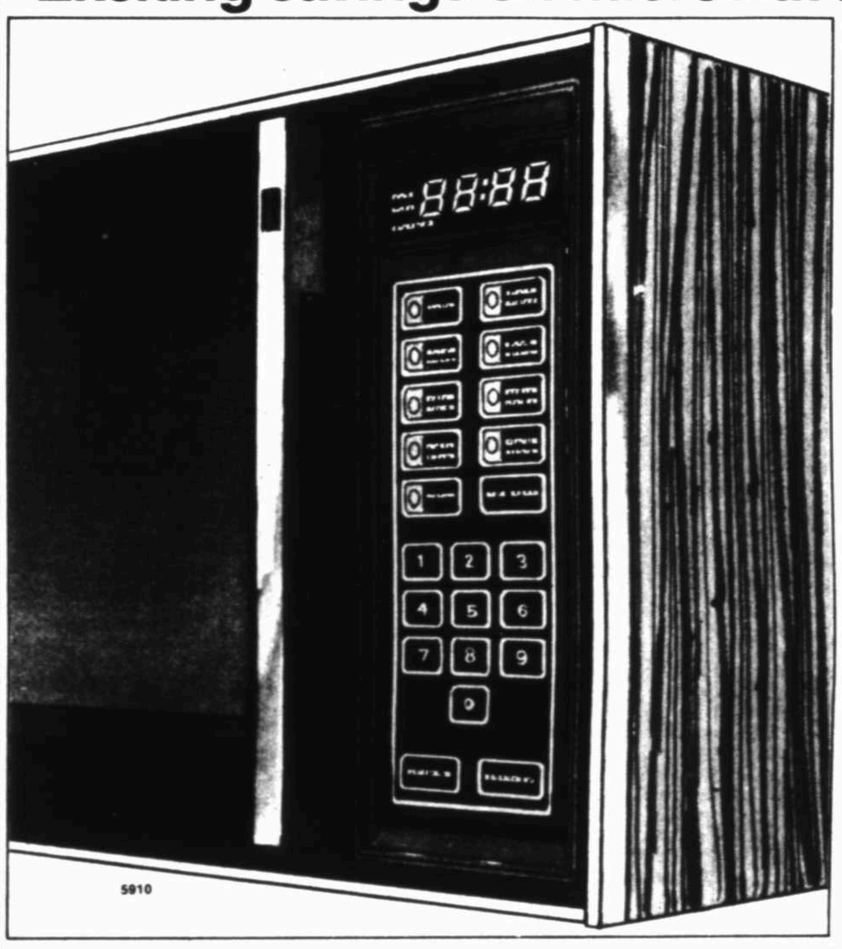

Investigators of the International Civil Aviation Organization, a U.N. agency, concluded that crew members of the Korean Air Lines plane may have registered the incorrect longitude in the plane's navigation system, causing it to stray off course. A report of their findings was made public Tuesday night in Montreal.

According to the report, a "finger error" in which a crew member may have punched 139 degrees instead of 149 degrees into the navigation system would have placed the plane in the vicinity where it was shot down.

But officials at the ministry's Civil Aviation Bureau said such an error would have put the plane more than 20 miles from the area.

Playing God

By declining to get involved in the case of Baby Jane Doe, the Supreme Court neatly sidestepped any number of touchy and difficult questions concerning what is appropriate action in the case of infants born with severe birth defects. What the court's declination said, in a deed void of comment, was that such decisions are properly left with parents. The decision was a wise one.

The critically ill New York infant became a national issue after right-to-life advocates and Reagan administration officials became involved. The question before the Supreme Court became a debate of whether the High Court should overturn lower court rulings that upheld the parents' wishes against a life-prolonging operation.

Baby Jane Doe's parents had decided against extraordinary methods to extend the child's life. Medical experts have said the infant, born with spina bifida or "open spine," an abnormally small head and excess fluid on the brain, could live into her 20s with surgery. Without it, they say, she'll only live two years at most.

The decision to withhold medical care that possibly could lengthen an infant's lifespan is a delicate matter. It isn't the kind of decision that should be made quickly or on minimal information. It is the kind of decision that requires much soul-searching.

And, of course, there are exceptions to the rule. Barbara Alvarez, a Midland woman born with the same medical complications as Baby Jane Doe, dealt with that subject in a Reporter-Telegram column last Sunday. She concluded that she was the exception to the rule and, as such, proof positive that medical prognoses on how a particular life will progress shouldn't be the only criteria on which decisions about medical care are based. As Mrs. Alvarez noted, pointedly, had her parents chosen to accept the prognosis given them 32 years ago, she might not be alive today, the mother of her own child.

So there are exceptions, a graphic reminder to parents of children born with severe medical complications not to give up on life too quickly. The overriding question in this case was not how parents should make their decision, but should the government become involved in such cases. The Supreme Court's decision not to get involved was correct because this was a family matter, not a government matter.

When a government involves itself that deeply in the personal lives of its people, it becomes dictatorial. The power to choose which babies should live also gives a government the assumed right to decide which babies should die.

That's playing God, and that's not the role of government.

Another View:

America's Scrooges

Internal Revenue Service Commissioner Roscoe L. Egger Jr. recently offered some good year-end advice to would-be last-minute tax savers. He said there were four factors that will guarantee a tax audit: "tax shelter, tax shelter, tax shelter, tax shelter."

With December a traditional advertising period for such tax savings promotions, the IRS is trying to discourage people looking for a fast buck because abusive tax shelters account for a large part of our nation's shocking tax loss.

Tax shelters are investments made to take advantage, through huge write-offs, of tax benefits in industries that the government is trying to promote for development. Some examples are real estate or oil and gas exploration. Financial analysts generally urge caution on tax shelters because the honest investments will require more than one month to build up any appreciable savings.

Last year, the IRS completed audits of 95,998 taxpayers who used "abusive tax shelters," assessing them $1.6 billion in back taxes. It also reportedly has approximately 350,000 other tax shelter cases involving both promoters and investors set for examination. The IRS announced the arrest of two men who attempted to bribe a revenue officer with $500,000 in return for the agent's assistance in solving tax problems the two had with a cattle investment scheme they were promoting.

Investment tax shelters aren't the only tax abuse. A similar ploy is to donate a gift to a charitable group, then overvalue the gift in order to claim an excessive deduction.

Altogether, the IRS estimates that the U.S. Treasury lost about $81.5 billion in unpaid taxes in 1981, which was more than that year's entire budget deficit of $65 billion. Most of that amount was attributed to individual tax cheats, not corporations.

Everyone suffers from such dishonesty. Tax cheating contributes to our national deficit, which in turn leads to higher interest rates, higher prices, fewer exports for other countries and loss of jobs. More IRS agents and computers will help fight the battle against tax cheats, but the best weapon is more honesty among American taxpayers.

The majority of Americans are honest when it comes to paying their taxes. And no doubt, they would rather think about something other than tax audits and the IRS at Christmas time. Still, the IRS high visibility campaign concerning shelters is timely because it is aimed at the real Scrooges in America.

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Army greasing skids for Meese

WASHINGTON — A year ago, White House counselor Edwin Meese III was quietly promoted to the rank of bird colonel in the Army Reserve. This sudden improvement in Meese's military fortunes, given its political overtones, outraged another reserve colonel who raised a squawk.

Jack Anderson

The Pentagon brass, always cautious in their derelictions, passed this hot potato to the Army's inspector general. He conducted a delicate investigation to determine whether "undue influence" had been involved in the promotion of President Reagan's right-hand man.

The still-secret IG report exonerates Meese himself of "any inappropriate actions." But the IG's investigators did concede that hallowed Army Reserve procedures were "misapplied, violated or ignored."

This has been confirmed by my associates Dale Van Atta and John Dillon who have just completed their own investigation. They found that Meese got a boost up the military ladder by pals in the Pentagon.

Though Meese wanted the promotion, which assures him a fatter pension, the brass hats appear to have wanted it even more, perhaps as a means of buttering up an influential White House official.

In fact, one Army source says that Meese's powerful Pentagon friends are already plotting to grease the skids for his promotion to general. If this works out, Meese's military reserve career would be distinguished by the kind of rapid promotion that is usually achieved only by active-duty officers in wartime.

Here's the chronology of Meese's rise in rank:

— June 1981: Meese spoke privately to Col. Joe Sullivan, a friend who'd served with him in a California reserve unit. Meese indicated he'd like to be in the Ready Reserves, which would give him a better shot at a promotion. But he stressed that no rules should be stretched in his behalf.

Sullivan relayed these tidings to his boss, Maj. Gen. William R. Berkman, who commands the Army Reserve and, coincidentally, also served with Meese in the California reserve unit. Together with other Pentagon brass, they agreed that the president's closest adviser deserved to be a full colonel.

All that remained was to work out the grand strategy. This required some quiet finesse. They had to find an assignment that wouldn't interfere with Meese's White House duties and an excuse to relieve him from mandatory attendance at the Command and General Staff College, which he wouldn't have time for.

The Pentagon strategists came up with an artful solution: Meese would be assigned as the Selective Service System's liaison with the Defense Department. Promotion requirements in that branch, it seems, are less stringent than in other outfits.

— July 1, 1981: Meese was assigned to the Ready Reserve at Selective Service headquarters, in the specially created liaison job. The position called for a full colonel. Meese's mandatory retirement date, incidentally, was less than a week away. With unaccustomed speed, the Pentagon paper work processors beat the mandatory retirement deadline.

— October 1981: Yet another Meese friend from the California reserve, Thomas K. Turnage, was appointed head of Selective Service, assuring that Meese's status — and his pending promotion — would not be disrupted.

— November 1982: Meese was recommended for promotion to colonel. The supposedly ironclad requirement of staff college graduation was waived by giving Meese "constructive credit" for his White House experience. Gen. Berkman and others notified the Army promotion board of this unusual dispensation while it was considering the promotion — an action that some military officials equate to tampering with a jury during its deliberations.

— At about this time, a technical problem was solved by backdating one document by more than a year, according to an Army source. This practice is not illegal, but it is unusual.

The IG investigation was supposed to bury the Meese affair, but Rep. Patricia Schroeder, D-Colo., learned of it and began making inquiries last August. The Army refused to turn over the IG report to her.

Meanwhile, my source says the move to make Meese a general is already afoot. A colonel who has been elevated to general is about to retire. When he does, there will be a general's job waiting for Meese.

Footnote: Meese declined to comment on the IG report but wrote Ms. Schroeder that "at no time did I request any favoritism or preferential treatment." This apparently is true.

POLITICAL POTPOURRI: Sen. Ernest Hollings, D-S.C., is often called the "Southern" candidate for president. But his wife, Peatsy, points out that there's another South Carolinian in the race: The Rev. Jesse Jackson. She adds, slyly, that Jackson was in high school when her husband was governor.

— Lee Hart, the wife of Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., recently mentioned a personal incentive for supporting her husband's White House ambitions. "I've always hated the suburbs," she cracked.

GEORGE F. WILL

'Scarface': Lesson in child abuse

WASHINGTON — Whoever authored the prayer "God protect us from fire, steel and contemporary literature" should have expanded the list of menaces to include movies like "Scarface." Consider the dismemberment, by chain saw, of one drug dealer by another.

George F. Will

When the ratings board gave "Scarface" an X because of violence and vile language, the movie was jeopardized because many theaters will not show X-rated material. So changes were made. Now viewers do not see the chain saw make contact with flesh; they must be content with splattering blood. Even after such tinkering, the board sensibly favored an X-rating, but was overruled.

The board was created 15 years ago by the studios and theater owners to forestall local censorship ordinances. Its seven members are all parents whose job is to make empirical, not moral, judgments. It is a majoritarian institution, making educated guesses about community standards — about what entertainment most parents consider proper for children.

The appeals board, composed of movie-industry people, has often overruled the ratings board at the ratings board's request. The automatic-language rule requires an R when there are harsh sexually derived words. So the ratings board gave perfunctory R-ratings to "The Right Stuff" and "Terms of Endearment," and then asked to be overruled, and was.

In the last 10 years the ratings board has classified 3,500 films. Aside from pro forma language-rule appeals, the ratings board has been overruled just 12 times. Each time the rating was lowered. Nine times the issue was violence, three times sex. An X means children under 17 (18 in a few places) cannot be admitted; an R means they must be accompanied by a parent or guardian.

In classifying "Scarface" X, the ratings board unquestionably made a correct assessment of how most parents would judge the movie. Floating face-down, drowned in a bath of blood, is the corpse of what could have been a valuable movie about what drug money is doing to south Florida. To say that the movie is morally constructive because it shows the squalor of drug addiction, and because the bad guys get massacred, misses a large point, which is: Realism is no all-purpose defense in art.

Yes, even the chain-saw scene is not without basis in fact: The brutality in the drug trade is hair-curling. But it is unnecessary, and artistically lazy, to achieve impact by relentlessly dwelling on shocking things. What can be true of sex can be true of violence, too. Intimation can be more powerful than indiscriminate, pitiless detail. Within the restraints of 19th-century literature, Madame Bovary managed to have a moment as erotic in its way as episodes in today's explicit novels. Violence hinted at, but left at least somewhat to the viewers' imagining, should suffice.

Pamela Hansford Johnson has written: "Only a minority of people act out what they have seen (or read). But I believe a great number become desensitized by being exposed to scenes of, or ideas of, violence. I have seen the young become increasingly unshockable by the screened or staged display of cruelty. What would it be like if they met with the real thing? Such as Hitler's public humiliation of the Jews? Crowds excitedly gathered round old Jewish victims in Vienna. They were laughing. Are we preparing ourselves for a good laugh?"

About the young I, too, can attest. I remember 'Marathon Man," a serious movie but one involving torture with a dental drill. The most alarming thing was that my reaction (I nearly ran from the theater) was eccentric. The rest of the audience — like most movie audiences, mostly young — was unphased.

The principal worry is not that repeated exposure to depictions of cruelty will make persons act cruelly. Rather, it is that it will produce persons who can respond only to depictions of excess. A generation raised on what are known as "slash films" ("Prom Night," "Halloween," "Friday the Thirteenth," etc.) may become unable to enjoy subtlety, nuance or delicacy. That is, they may be rendered immune to art.

The ratings board deserves praise for taking gratuitous violence as seriously as degrading sex. But how will it rate things when the "slash-film" generation becomes parents? While the ratings board tries to conform to community standards, the movies are driving those standards steadily down.

The night I saw "Scarface," a couple brought their daughter, who was not yet 15. She must have found interesting the 175 uses (the official count, I am told) of what the Will boys decorously call "the f word." The ticket-taker, appalled by the movie, anguished about whether to warn the parents, and did not. Exposing a child to 170 minutes of torture, gore and obscenity is child abuse as serious as an act of physical violence.

Watt's for Christmas? No, Meese!

What are the Democratic candidates going to eat for their Christmas dinner? Most of them say they're going to pass up the usual game and have a nice big fat stuffed Meese.

"You mean a moose?" I asked one of them.

"No," he said, "a Meese. It's the poor people's tripe."

"What is a Meese?"

"It looks like a wild boar, with a very thick skin, large jowls and waddles when it walks. Its natural habitat is Washington D.C., where it feeds on fat cats and cheese. When it gets agitated it puts its foot in its mouth. Originally it wasn't fit to eat, but now it's our favorite dish. We all salivate when you mention the word Meese to us."

"How do you cook a Meese?" I asked him.

"The best way to cook a Meese is to truss it up and put it in boiling water. Some people prefer to skin it alive, but it's more fun to watch it simmer in its own juices."

"What do you do after you truss it up?"

"When it turns livid red, take it out of the water, and with a paring knife throw away the heart because it's hard as stone, and has no taste. Then you put the rest of the Meese on a large spit and broil it slowly over an open fire.

"While it's broiling prepare a stuffing. You can use bread crumbs, White House hash, chicken gizzards, lemon rinds, pig's feet, vinegar and lots of lard.

"You set the stuffing aside and pour salt all over the Meese, but be careful not to let it fall off the rack. You want to keep it on there as long as you can."

"How do you know when it's cooked?"

"Stick a fork into the hind legs every chance you get. Remember there is nothing tender about a Meese, so all you can hope for is that the fork can get through the skin.

"Once it does, take the Meese out of the fire and put it into the frying pan. The crust of a Meese is not to be believed.

"After frying it for 10 minutes remove it from the frying pan and put the Meese in the oven at 350 degrees."

"Don't you worry you'll overdo it?" I asked him.

"No. If a Meese can't stand the heat it will get out of the kitchen."

"Okay, so you've boiled it, broiled it, fried it and put it in the oven. Now what?"

"In an hour it should be ready to stuff. You put your hand inside and take out the windbag and place the stuffing inside of it, and then put the windbag back."

"What do you serve with it?"

"A Meese goes good with all kinds of nuts."

"What about gravy?"

"As far as the Democrats are concerned a Meese is all gravy."

"It doesn't sound very tasty," I said.

"Meese is an acquired taste. For many poor people it's hard to stomach. But when you're running against Reagan it's even more mouth-watering than a Wattburger."

"Okay, so that's your Christmas dinner. What do you eat the next day?"

"Meese hash, Meese with catsup, Meese with Tofu. A Meese is so fat you can live off it right up until election day."

"But if all the Democrats keep feeding off Meese, won't it become an endangered species?"

"Not if the Republicans keep shooting themselves in the foot."

"I think I'd have to be pretty hungry to eat Meese meat."

"Haven't you heard? There are no hungry people in America."

"Who said that?"

"Some turkey in the White House."

Art elite beats path to Marfa

By PATRICK MCDONNELL
The Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

MARFA — As Route 67 descends toward Marfa, the scene unfolds like a West Texas postcard: The range land slopes downward from distant mesas; cattle and antelope graze serenely; and, in the distance, the craggy black shards of the volcanic Davis Mountains tower over the landscape.

But within a mile of the town, the undulating pasture is abruptly interrupted by a line of eight-foot, bunker-like concrete blocks, appearing as if they were a long-forgotten construction project plopped down incongruously on the range.

The objects are far from forgotten. They are the centerpiece of a multimillion-dollar collection of modern sculpture — a contemporary Stonehenge — that is putting the small cattle town of 2,466 on the modern art map and attracting the art elite from New York and Europe.

"In a few years, Marfa will be a common name in art circles," Suzan Campbell, the collection's curator, says.

"It's of tremendous importance...virtually unique," says William C. Agee, a senior visiting scholar at the Smithsonian Institution's Archives of American Art in New York.

Since 1978, the New York-based Dia Art Foundation has spent more than $4 million in the Marfa area to assemble a wide-ranging display of abstract work by some of America's best-known modern artists, including Donald Judd (creator of the concrete blocks), Dan Flavin, John Chamberlain and the late Barnett Newman.

THE SPRAWLING, as-yet unnamed project, scheduled to be completed at the end of next year, was conceived as a bold alternative to temporary exhibits in museums and galleries. In Marfa, art works are being "installed" for perpetuity in spacious indoor and outdoor sites selected by the artists.

"I don't think everything should be temporary. Sometimes something should settle down," says Judd, an internationally renowned sculptor who moved to Marfa from New York 10 years ago.

Dia, a non-profit group, is headed by Philippa Friedrich, art-loving heiress to the multibillion-dollar Schlumberger Ltd. oil services fortune and daughter of Dominique de Menil, the Houston art patroness. Dia also has sponsored projects in New York, West Germany, New Mexico, Massachusetts and elsewhere.

"We want the same for Marfa as the art centers of Europe — a lasting place for the work of great American artists," Heiner Friedrich, Dia vice president, told a local newspaper.

The four men represented "are all enormously important artists," Agee says. "They're the most important artists of their generation."

The project is centered on 345 acres on the edge of town that formerly housed Fort D.A. Russell, a World War I era cavalry post abandoned by the Army in the 1940s. The old fort grounds accommodate eight Judd concrete groupings; seven more are to be added. The giant boxes, which each weigh 30 tons, are arranged in varying configurations on a pasture that is also home to a herd of several dozen antelope.

TWO GUNSHEDS on the post have been remodeled to house 100 of Judd's glimmering aluminum boxes, about a third of which have been set in place. In addition, six old barracks buildings will contain fluorescent light designs by Flavin, and another structure will house Newman abstract prints and lithographs.

The foundation has also purchased and renovated an old railroad storage building across from the post office in downtown Marfa. The structure houses works by John Chamberlain, who welds wrecked-car parts together and gives them names such as "Gondola Ezra Pound," "I, Mencius," and "Gone to Marfa."

Naturally, such goings-on have raised some eyebrows in Marfa, a town established 100 years ago as a railroad depot in the sparsely populated county that is twice the size of the state of Delaware and borders a desolate section of Mexico.

"Anybody who'd put concrete blocks in a pasture has got to be a little bit goofy," says Don Meador, 19, on his way to work at a ranch across the highway from the old fort. "Have you seen them squished-up cars in town? That's supposed to be art, too."

But project officials say that they have not encountered any hostility, possibly because the New Yorkers' investment has provided an economic boost to the isolated town.

The foundation has become one of Marfa's largest taxpayers and employs nine local residents full time. Merchants hope for a little tourist trade when the exhibit is opened to the public in late 1984.

"I DON'T KNOW exactly what they're doing, but I know they've spent a lot of money around here," says Mayor Bobby Martinez, who runs a grocery store. In fact, the foundation's propensity for paying more than top dollar for property touched off a small land speculation boom, as residents bought up long-ignored tracts with the idea of selling them at inflated prices to the artsy crowd from Manhattan.

"The town went crazy," Judd says. "We could have bought the whole town."

It was the strangest thing that had happened in Marfa since Judd himself arrived in town in 1973 and purchased a square block of downtown to convert into a home and art workshop.

He had left behind his loft in New York's SoHo district to find an uncluttered place.

"I like the visibility, the sparseness," Judd says of West Texas. "New York just gets to be too much; I can't stay there too long. It's too easy there to spend all your time like this — sitting around talking, not getting any work done," he says, motioning to a table covered with food and wine from a lengthy luncheon

Even before he started displaying his work, Judd's penchant for privacy and his construction of an eight-foot adobe wall around his property fueled local coffee chatter.

"There was some talk about late-night orgies," Judd says.

Judd, 55, speaks in a low murmur. Shirtless, he is dressed in baggy khaki shorts and sandals; his white hair is unkempt and his beard is streaked gray and black.

The adobe walls, which he says he built for privacy and "definition of space," enclose a complex of old one- and two-story storage buildings that have been renovated into a residence, studio and gallery. The grounds also contain Judd's extensive private art collection, a library, a swimming pool, a vegetable garden, chicken coops and a ditch where Judd intends to build a duck pond.

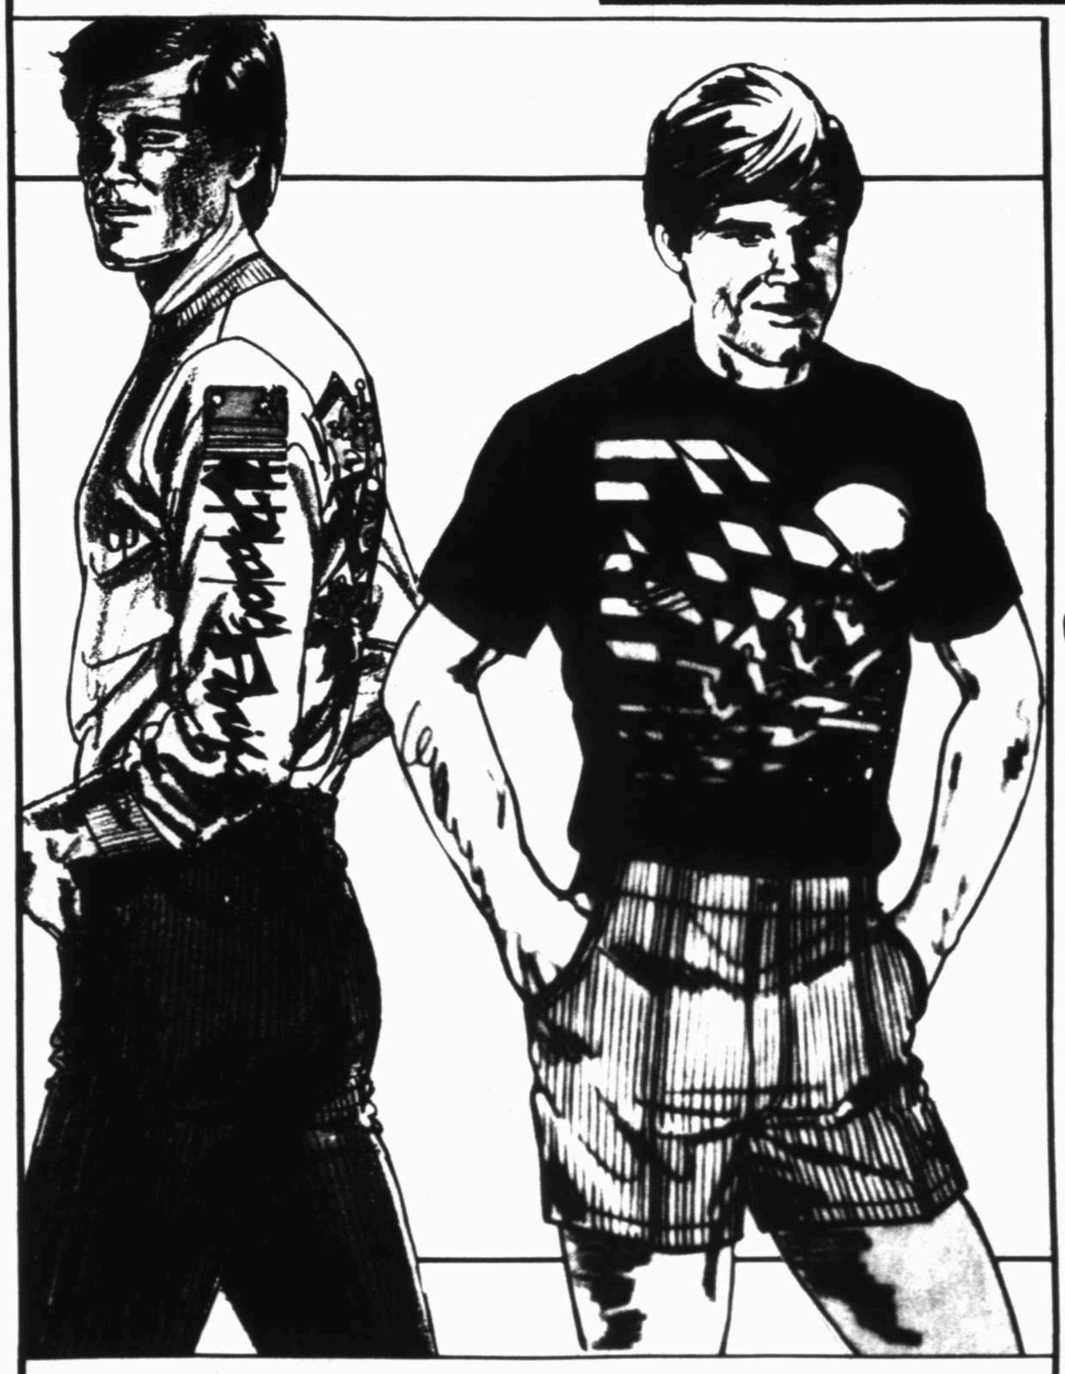

Judd says that he rises at daybreak each day and begins his work. Also at about that hour, Bob McKee of Odessa and a crew of concrete workers arrive at the old fort's pasture and resume fabrication of the huge concrete slabs that are Judd's creation.

"Being from this part of the country, I always thought an artist was a person who painted," says the lanky, Camel-smoking McKee, who sports jeans, a straw cowboy hat and cowboy boots. "I plum didn't understand this at first...But I'm proud to be part of it now. Hell, this part of the country can use some modern art."

Christmas cards bring out Scrooge

Mulligan's Stew

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

RIDGEFIELD, Conn. (AP) — Our first Christmas card of the year arrived two days before Thanksgiving from friends in Tasmania, an island south of the Australian mainland from whence come those sheep-eating devils.

They (the friends, not the devils or the sheep) must have sent it around Easter because it arrived by sea mail. One of the enduring miracles of Christmas is that you can remain fond of people who are that organized.

My mother often told us, about this time of year, that Eleanor Roosevelt always wrote all her White House Christmas cards on the day after the Fourth of July.

I don't know where she got her information, but some of it must have rubbed off. Mom always bought next year's cards at cut-rate prices in the big clearance sales the department stores held in the week after Christmas and invariably had all hers written by the first week in December.

Unfortunately, our operation around here has never been anywhere near that efficient. As late as Christmas Eve, with the carolers at the door interrupting our flow of thought, we are often found huddled before the fireplace, scratching away at a pile of cards and envelopes as crabbedly miserable as Bob Cratchit up on his high stool in Scrooge & Marley's counting house.

MY WIFE is scrupulous to the point of paranoia about returning the fire of anyone who directs a Christmas card in our direction, exhibiting the C.Y.A. mentality — Cover Your Address.

More than a decade ago, I was in the press contingent that covered President Nixon's historic trip to China. At Christmas we all received a card showing a White House decked in holly wreaths and snow, signed Richard and Patricia Nixon. My wife whipped out the shopping bag full of cards from behind the couch and asked if 1600 Pennsylvania Avenue was their personal or business address. We have been on their list ever since, or they on ours; I'm not quite sure.

In fact, for the most part, I don't know where our list came from. I think we bought it from a mail order house or a magazine that folded. There are names that I can only dimly recall out of the past, and some not at all.

"Who are the Shmendricks anyway?"

"Don't you ramember, dear, that boring man who played the sitar every evening on that Caribbean cruise we took on our 10th anniversary...and his pasty-faced wife?"

"They were the Shetlavs."

"Well, it makes no ifference. They sent us one."

CARDS THAT feature photographs of a large group of people arrayed before a fireplace or out on the lawn with the plastic reindeer become more of a problem each year as the nuclear family continues to break down into a cellular structure resembling an enlarged snowflake.

"Old Harvey sure looks as ugly as ever, but Faye has lost a lot of weight and must have had a facelift."

"That's not Faye. It must be Harvey's new wife."

"I thought they only had three kids. Who are Kim, Leslie and Sean?"

"Must be hers by another marriage, but they still got the same dog."

I stand in awe, if not exactly envy, of card writers who also send along a detailed, insightful chronology of the family's progress and problems during the past year. Some of these dynastic updatings are as complex as the "Forsyte Saga" and as scandalous as a daytime TV soap.

"After living with our Edgar for nearly 10 years, Lyda-Jane has decided to make an honest woman of herself and is returning to her husband. We'll know next week if Roger will be accepted back at school after the fire in the lab. Billy and Paul surprised us by getting hitched at the Badlands Punk Rock Concert last August..."

The trauma attending this seasonal scribbling was first inflicted on humanity in 1839, with the inauguration of the penny post in the second year of the reign of Britain's little round Queen Victoria, who did for Christmas cards what her husband, the German Prince Albert of Sace-Coburg, did for old tannenbaum. The Royal Family with some expert help from Charles Dickens, practically launched Christmas as we now know it: the holly and the folly and the feasting.

SOON THERE were humorous Christmas cards, like the one showing a stout old topper in a brocaded waistcoat sniffing the cork of his Christmas port, while a mischievous ankle biter in drop seat pajamas administers a hot foot to milord's buckled shoes.

Personally, I detest humorous Christmas cards, especially those defaced with gagging gags like, "When you hear the clatter of reindeer hooves on the roof, you know you've had too much egg nog again."

I also abhor dogs yelping out a holiday greeting, birds carrying holly in their beaks, and pandas, pussy cats, penguins, pumas or whatever performing anthropomorphic inanities. I much prefer Santa Claus, Christmas trees, covered bridges, horse drawn sleds, the Wisemen on their camels, overfed Pickwickian squires raising a toddy in toast, angel choirs, star-lit mangers — oh well, Ogden Nash said it best in a poem called, "Epstein, spare that Yule Log":

"OH, GIVE me an old fashioned Christmas Card,
With hostlers hostling in an old inn yard,
With church bells chiming their silver notes,
And jolly red squires in their jolly red coats,
And a good fat goose by the fire that dangles,
And a few more angels and a few less angles.
Turn backward, Time, to please this bard,
And give me an old fashioned Christmas card."

But don't expect me to get them out on time.

Railroad Commission ready to bite bullet

AUSTIN (AP) — The Railroad Commission earlier this week decided to seek federal funds to pay for a study on whether it would be feasible to build a high-speed rail system in Texas.

Railroad commissioner Jim Nugent told his colleagues that federal administrator John Riley of the Federal Railroad Administration had indicated last week that if Texas made application before Dec. 31, the state might get money for a study.

A legislative committee held hearings in 1982-83 to explore the possibility of building a system similar to Japan's "bullet train," according to a commission spokesman.

School can't use symbol

AURORA, Colo. (AP) — Snack food, OK. Video equipment, all right.

But an official high school of the 1984 Olympics? Hardly.

Even though they'll still be nicknamed the Olympians, the sports teams of Gateway High School in Aurora will have to quit using the five-ring Olympic symbol on athletic uniforms and publications by May 1986, according to the U.S. Olympic Committee.

The school discovered it had problems with its nickname, in use since 1972, when the publishers of Gateway's 1984 yearbook contacted school officials. They said Gateway could not use the symbol or the words "Olympiad" and "Olympians" unless they had permission from the USOC.

Reinhold Mattes, Gateway principal, then contacted the USOC through the school's attorney.

State Rep. Charles V. Brown intervened and wrote a letter to the USOC saying that a change could cost the school $150,000.

"Is the honor of using the Olympian name and symbol reserved only to those corporations who can afford to buy it?" Brown asked. "Doesn't a Colorado public school warrant a similar honor?"

F. Don Miller, USOC executive director, said earlier this week that the school may continue to use its nickname and may keep the symbols displayed on various structures where they are affixed permanently.

"The youth of Gateway High School and all youth of America are a cherished part of our reason for existence and our actions in this case have been tempered with that in mind," Miller said.

School officials have already made arrangements to remove the Olympic rings from the 1984 yearbook and Mattes said the students will soon decide on a new symbol for the school.

Trade record set

Trade between Norway and Sweden in 1983 reached $4.6 billion, or about $400 per person, a world record, said Arne Langeland, managing director of the Export Council of Norway.

It's more than just state championship

By TERRY WILLIAMSON
Assistant Sports Editor

Some monumental moments will take place Saturday in Texas Stadium besides the state Class 5A football championship. It is a game that three backs are looking forward to.

Of course, San Antonio Converse Judson star running back Chris Pryor has already set the Class 5A single season rushing record with 2,600 yards this year. Anything he gets Saturday against the Lee defense will just add to that record.

But Midland Lee has two backs that will be seeking rushing marks Saturday and they will be motivated as much as Pryor, maybe even more so.

LEE FULLBACK Isaac Garnett needs 69 yards to crash the 2,000-yard barrier, but that is not the only goal he can shoot for. Garnett's magic number is 106 yards. That total would give him 2,037 yards for the season, moving him into fifth place overall among the Class 5A single season rushing leaders in Texas football history.

If Garnett could nail down the 106 yards Saturday against the Rockets, he would move ahead of none other than the "Tyler Rose," Earl Campbell. Campbell had 2,036 yards rushing for Tyler in 1973.

The fourth all-time Class 5A rushing leader is Carl Roaches, the former Aggie who had 2,177 yards in 1973 when he played for Houston Smiley. Third on the list is San Antonio Lee's Pat Sheehan, who had 2,233 yards in 1965. Second is Craig James, the former Houston Stratford phenom who had 2,411 yards in 1978.

James was the overall leader in Class 5A until last weekend when Judson's Pryor had 258 yards against Houston Yates to become the all-time 5A leader.

"I would really like to get the 2,000, but it would be neat to pass Earl Campbell," said Garnett. "But I would like to win the game more than anything else. This is what we have worked for."

GARNETT BECAME Lee's first 1,000 yard rusher this year. The Rebels played football for 23 years without having a runner over the 1,000 yard mark. Players like Milton Jones, Jeff McGowan and Calvin Riggs all had over 900 yards in a single season, but none had been able to crash the 1,000 yard mark.

Now, Lee halfback Walter Jones is on the lip of the cup of becoming Lee's second 1,000-yard gainer in a single season. He has 981 yards after a 160-yard effort against Plano last Saturday. In Texas Stadium Saturday, Jones will need only 19 yards to reach the mythical barrier of 1,000.

"I would really like to have the 1,000-yard year," said Jones. "It looks like I might make it in this game. I should gain 19 yards."

Even though these are personal goals for Garnett and Jones, the Lee line seems to have taken up the crusade for them.

"It's really important to the line that Garnett gets his 2,000 and Walter his 1,000," said Lee offensive guard Coy Stewart. "It's one way you can measure the success of the offensive line and that's a goal for us. We really want them to get the yards they need. If they get the yards, we will win."

Center Allen Bell, tackle Tracy Sherman, guard Devoe McMillan and tackle John Bick have all said that they would like to see the two backs run wild this week. It's become quite a crusade.

Over 5,700 yards of offense could step off the field when Saturday's game is over. And that's just with three players.

DESPITE THE awesome totals being cranked out by these three players this year, none of them touch the all-time Texas high school rushing leader.

From 1951 to 1953, the star of stars on the Texas high school front rambled over football fields at a rate that will never be seen again. The name is Kenneith Hall, the Sugar Land Express.

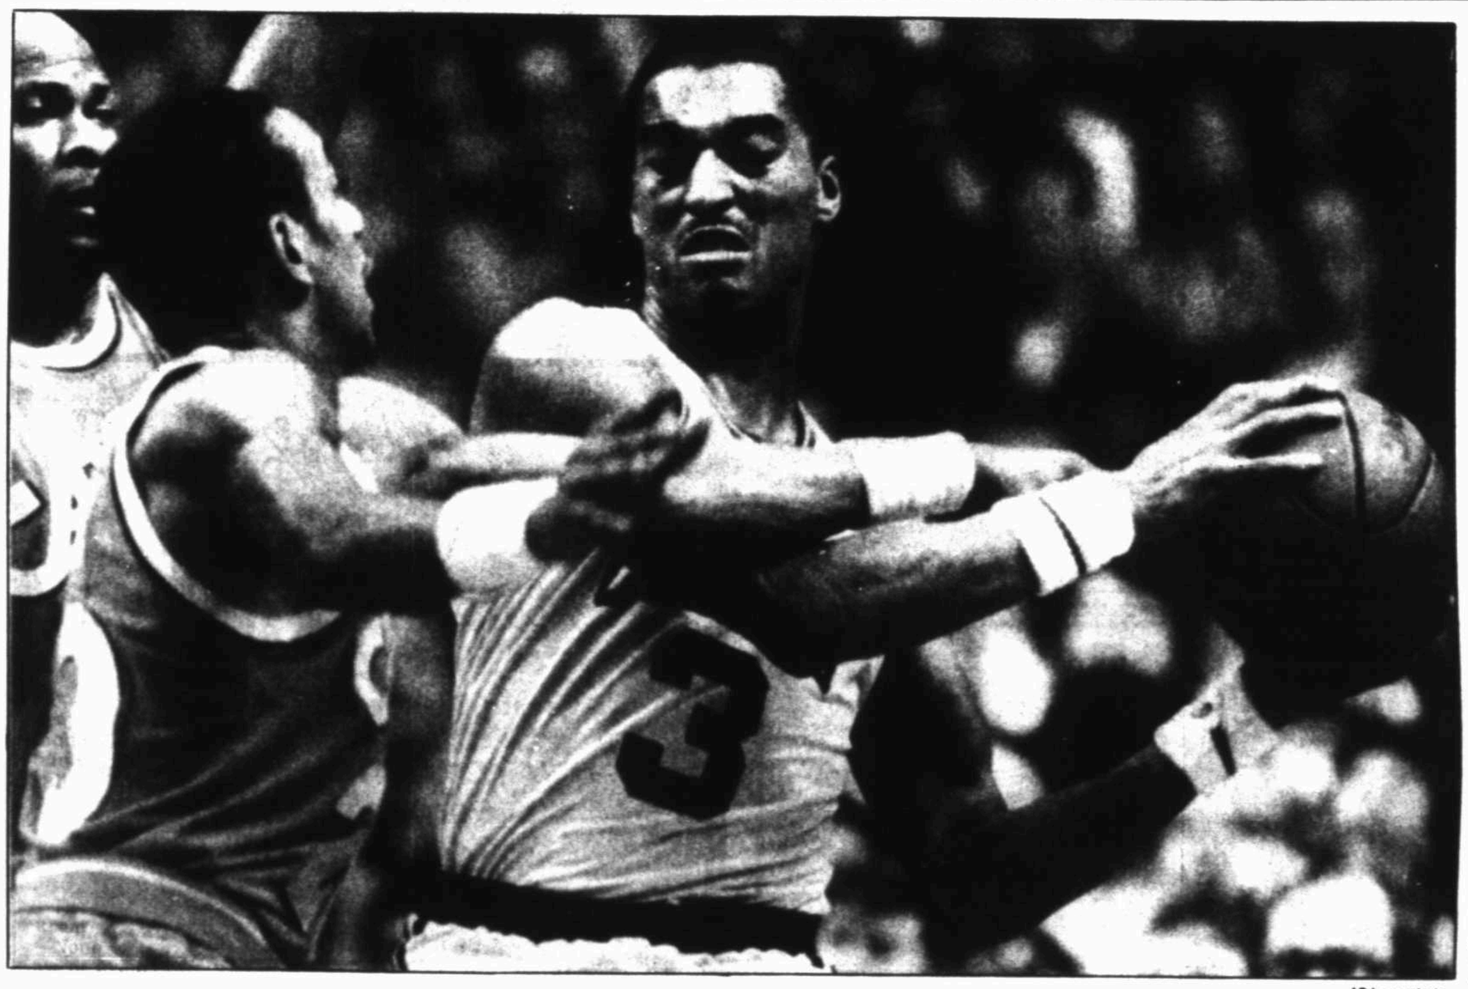

In 1953, Hall set the single season record for all classifications with 4,045 yards rushing in only 12 Class B contests. He had one game of 520 yards on just 11 carries.

Hall had 3,458 yards as a junior in 1952 and 3,160 as a sophomore in 1951. Hall's career rushing mark is 11,232 yards.

"When you look at Hall's totals, you just can't believe them," said Midland athletic director Gil Bartosh. "You have to stop and think about the fact that they didn't stop the clock for first downs like they do now and that it took only 12 games to win a Class B championship. That's averaging well over 300 yards per game. That's really some record."

Some other great Texas backs have been Billy Sims of Hooks with 3,080 yards in 1973, Bobby Mitchell of Big Sandy with 3,070 yards in 1973 and Big Sandy's David Overstreet with 3,032 yards in 1975.

Rebel Notes: Since Lee is the visiting team Saturday for the 2:30 p.m. contest, Rebel fans are asked to enter Texas Stadium in gates one through four on the west side of the stadium...The game is being televised live state-wide for the first time in playoff history. KOSA-TV has purchased the rights for the Midland-Odessa area. Kickoff has been set for 2:38 p.m. because of TV. Bartosh said that Lee is quaranteed $8,000 for playing in the state championship contest and could earn more if the crowd is above 20,000...The Shamrock radio network broadcast may also be heard locally on both KBAT and KCRS radio stations. Both are planning pre-game shows Saturday and KCRS will have a post game show...Spike Dykes will be on KCRS' Sport Talk from 6 to 7 p.m. today..."Go Rebs" stickers will distributed by First City today and Friday at the bank's drive-in lanes and walk-in lobbies in First City Center from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Western State Bank is displaying a large Rebel flag...

Boston Celtic guard Dennis Johnson, right, reacts as he holds the ball away from the reach of Cleveland guard Geoff Huston in Wednesday's second quarter action of National Basketball Association play. Boston edged Cleveland, 110-108.

Sixers wear down Bucks, 115-93

By The Associated Press

When the Philadelphia 76ers play well for 48 minutes and their opponent plays well for just 42, it's virtually certain that the National Basketball Association champions will come out on top.

That's exactly what happened Wednesday night when the 76ers scored 20 of the last 24 points of the game in the final 3:21 en route to a 115-93 victory over the Milwaukee Bucks.

Moses Malone was especially effective down the stretch, scoring 10 of his 23 points in the final 2:52.

"We played an excellent ball game for 48 minutes and our fourth quarter was especially outstanding," 76ers Coach Billy Cunningham said. "Moses Malone finally broke out from the two guys who'd been guarding him."

Despite 34 points from Milwaukee forward Marques Johnson, exceeding his previous season high of 28, Bucks Coach Don Nelson was disappointed in his team.

"We ran out of gas in the last six minutes and our turnovers created scoring opportunities," Nelson said. "Take away the last six minutes and we played a very creditable game. Unfortunately, you've got to play 48 minutes."

NBA Roundup

Julius Erving played a tremendous game for Philadelphia, hitting 13 of 15 shots and scoring 29 points, including several soaring dunks.

"When you make these kind of field goals, they create excitement and they have a market value about them," Erving said. "I sometimes dream of floating out in space and sometimes the dreams seem so real."

"Doc was outstanding — he is playing like a 21-year-old recently," Cunningham said.

Andrew Toney added 21 points for the 76ers, while all-star guardSidney Moncrief had 11 for the Bucks.

The Bucks led after each of the first three periods and entered the fourth quarter with a 79-77 edge.

The Sixers finally regained the lead with 8:22 left on a dunk by Erving, putting them in front 84-83. Philadelphia never trailed thereafter but the game was still close with 3:21 to go, with Milwaukee trailing only 95-89.

But from there, the 76ers outscored the Bucks 20-4.

"Maybe we got tired," Johnson said. "We've been this way before where we've led for 3½ quarters, only to see other teams draw away. It's hard to pinpoint what happened. You have to give credit to their defense. They put on a spurt that we couldn't turn off."

Mavericks 117, Pacers 109

Mark Aguirre scored 30 points, his eighth straight game at or above that plateau, as Dallas handed Indiana its 10th consecutive loss on the road this season.

The Midwest Division-leading Mavericks also got 22 points from Jay Vincent, 21 from Rolando Blackman and 20 by Pat Cummings. The Pacers, who got 25 points from Clark Kellogg and 20 from Ralph Sampson, fought back from a 16-point deficit to trail 103-101 with 4:44 remaining, but Dallas held on to its margin down the stretch.

Spurs 129, Clippers 114

San Diego also stayed winless on the road this season as George Gervin scored 25 points and Mike Mitchell hit 11 of 15 field goal attempts for 23 points.

The Spurs led by at least eight points at the end of each period to hand the Clippers, who got 26 points from Terry Cummings, their 27th straight road loss dating back to last season.

Bullets 99, Hawks 96

Washington, which lost at home to Atlanta Tuesday night, turned the tables on the Hawks' court as Jeff Ruland scored 24 points and Rick Mahorn 20.

The Bullets never trailed after taking a 12-11 lead midway through the first quarter. Dominique Wilkins scored 25 points for Atlanta.

Celtics 110, Cavaliers 108

At Boston, Larry Bird, who missed two full games with a sprained knee, played 14 minutes off the bench and scored 13 points, including the game-winning basket with four seconds remaining.

The Celtics, who won their sixth straight, also got 30 points and 16 rebounds from Robert Parish. World B. Free had 30 points for Cleveland, who tied the score at 108-108 on a basket by rookie Paul Thompson with 28 seconds remaining.

Kings 105, Sonics 99

Eddie Johnson scored 33 points and played a key role down the stretch as Kansas City won at Seattle.

The SuperSonics trailed only 94-93 with 2:51 to go, but after Billy Knight sank two free throws for the Kings, Johnson grabbed a rebound and scored and then added a steal that led to a basket by Knight, giving Kansas City a 100-93 advantage with two minutes left.

Tom Chambers scored 28 points and Al Wood 24 for Seattle.

Precocious kid muddles picture

By SCOTT OSTLER
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

Ever try to talk sense to a kid? Forget it.

Like this Little Leaguer I ran into the other day. We got started talking about one of the few things our generations have in common, drugs.

"It's a shame about those Kansas City ballplayers," I said.

I was referring, of course, to the four Royals players, or ex-players, who got busted on cocaine charges. Three of them have been sentenced to three-month prison terms.

"Why is it a shame?" the kid asked.

"Well, kid," I said, "they got the shaft. Just because they're famous ballplayers, the judge put 'em in jail."

"Sure, kid, but the judge gave 'em a stiffer sentence to make an example out of 'em. Ever hear of the concept of equal justice under law?"

"Is that by any chance the same concept that applies when a judge lets a famous athlete off easy because he's a famous athlete? Wasn't there a college quarterback not long ago who got out of all kinds of traffic tickets because the judge was a fan?"

"OK, OK," I said, "So maybe sometimes athletes get off easy. But they shouldn't be expected to set an example for other people, for kids. Ballplayers are regular people, too."

"Yeah, they're regular people who get their pictures on Wheaties boxes and bubble-gum cards. Whether they like it or not, us kids pay attention to everything they do. Our pitcher has a look-up delivery like Fernando, our center fielder has a Derrel Thomas basket catch, and everyone on the team wears Dusty Baker wristbands and a Rod Carew headband."

"WAIT, KID. Are you saying that if Vida Blue snorts coke, you're going to."

"I doubt it," the kid said, "but it gets a little confusing. Like I know coffee isn't an illegal drug, but in school we're learning about the harmful effects of drugs like caffeine, how it can rob your body of vitamins and minerals and create a dependency.

"So I'm watching TV and I see a commercial for coffee, about how it makes you perform better, and there's Cincinnati Bengals quarterback Ken Anderson, under the influence of coffee, whipping a beautiful pass. Who am I supposed to believe? Ken Anderson or Mrs. Thornley?"

"Hey, don't worry, kid. Coffee won't kill you, and by the time you reach the age where you're exposed to real drugs, you won't be into Wheaties and baseball cards."

"What do you mean, wait? Guys on my Little League team smoke marijuana. Kids at school have drugs."

"At age 12? You gotta be kidding."

"Weren't kids doing drugs when you were 12, mister?"

"We were doing cherry sno cones, pal. I guess drugs are starting to filter down to the younger age brackets. But you can't blame that on big-league ballplayers."

"No, but it would be nice to have some role models. Hey, in music we've got Boy George and several popular heavy-metal groups who make Darth Vadar's army look mello. In movies we've got Cheech and Chong."

"They're bad influences, eh?"

"I don't know. They're not real. Ballplayers are real. They play the same games we play. They wear regular clothes and talk regular talk. You can hang around after a game and get their autographs."

"That's what I said, kid. They're regular people. They're not perfect."

"Then why shouldn't they have to go to jail when they break the law, like regular people do?"

"IT'S JUST not fair, what that judge did. He said. 'A sentence is needed here that will deter the defendant and others who regard Willie Wilson as an athletic hero.'"

"My dad says that when an athlete gets into the big leagues, he assumes a social obligation in proportion to his career rewards. He says we shouldn't expect 'em to be Boys Scouts, but that maybe trying not to set a bad example or give their sport a bad name isn't asking too much."

I was getting exasperated.

"But they're locking these guys up for three months, along with a fine!"

"Well, I've read that free time and lots of money are two reasons why a lot of athletes get into drugs. This should eliminate those two temptations."

Jack Elway faces rebuilding job

STANFORD, Calif. (AP) — Jack Elway's priorities as the new head football coach at Stanford University are building his staff, recruiting top high school seniors and junior college transfers, then transforming a 1-10 team into a winner.

But his real mission, as far the university and Athletic Director Andy Geiger are concerned, is to fill the seats at the football stadium next season and wipe out a projected $1.25-million deficit by the end of this fiscal year.

The athletic department, which ran a deficit of more than $500,000 in fiscal 1982-83, had a reported $2-million surplus when Geiger took over in 1979. An aggressive expansion policy, higher salaries and more scholarships wiped that out.

Last year, empty seats at football games reduced revenue at least $400,000 below projections, and the failure to get any games on television because of the poor quality of the team meant losses of another $200,000 to $400,000.

On the same day Geiger offered the coaching job to Elway, the athletic director advised the university's Board of Trustees of a plan to demote certain sports to second-class status and move others down to club level in an effort to stop the flow of red ink.

The plan, which would create three levels of sports at Stanford, would prohibit scholarships and overnight travel for men's crew, gymnastics, soccer, volleyball, water polo and wrestling, along with women's field hockey.

The university is counting on Elway to bring big changes in a hurry so other sports won't be threatened. However, he did not commit himself to instant success.

"There's no quick fix," said Elway, 52.

Released from the final year of his San Jose State contract, Elway signed a four-year deal Wednesday. No money details were released. His predecessor, Paul Wiggin, was fired during the season with one year remaining on his five-year pact.

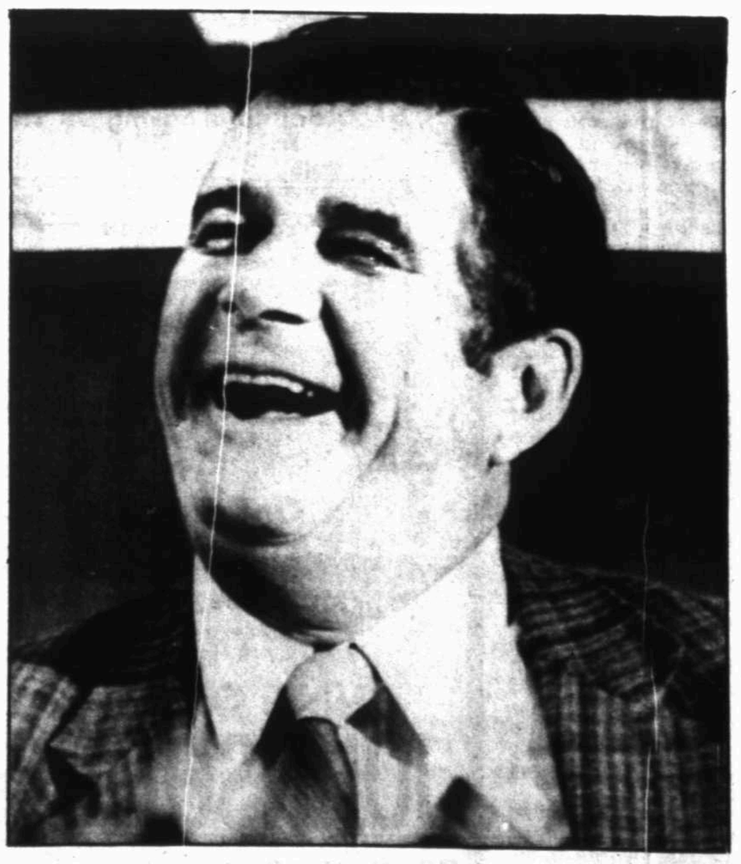

Wiggin had compained about the frustrations of not being able to recruit the best football players because of Stanford's high academic standards. Elway said he didn't think that would be a problem.

"It's obvious that we are going to attempt to recruit better athletes," he said. "I wouldn't be here if I didn't think this could be a first-class team."

Elway, father of former Stanford All-America quarterback and now Denver Broncos starter John Elway, leaves San Jose State after compiling a 35-20-1 record over five years. In his first season, 1979, he led the Spartans to a 6-4-1 record. Two years later, the Spartans won the PCAA title and played in the California Bowl.

San Jose State quickly named Elway's defensive coach, Claude Gilbert, to replace him as head coach. Gilbert, 51, also signed a multiyear deal.

Gilbert, who may lose many of his fellow assistant coaches to Elway, is a San Jose State graduate who was captain of the 1958 football team. He returned to the school three years ago after serving eight seasons as San Diego State's head coach, compiling a 61-25-2 record.

Gabe Rivera impresses doctors with attitude

HARMARVILLE, Pa. (AP) — Gabe Rivera faces the grim prospect of life in a wheelchair, but the Pittsburgh Steelers' rookie defensive lineman has impressed doctors with his attitude.

"He's an inspiration," said Dr. Gilbert Brenes, director of the spinal cord program at the Harmarville Rehabilitation Center near Pittsburgh.

"I have a lot of respect for people with these types of injuries because they have to fight every day. There is a process of adjustment. They will never accept the injury. Nobody does. But they adjust and do the best they can," he added Wednesday while giving an update on Rivera's condition.

"He is a little depressed, but that is not unusual to see. That is to be expected," the doctor said. "He is coping well emotionally."

Rivera, the Steelers' No. 1 draft choice this year, was paralyzed from the mid-chest down when he was thrown through the rear window of his sports car after it collided with another car on Oct. 20.

The 6-foot-2, 292-pound Rivera broke a bone in his spinal column, which compressed his spinal cord and caused the paralysis. He also suffered a broken bone in his right shoulder, broken ribs, a bruised lung and a bruised heart.

Police later charged Rivera with drunken driving, reckless driving and speeding.

"His chances of walking again are poor," said Brenes, who said Rivera still has pain and weakness in his right arm that is not related to the spinal cord damage.

"We're trying to get him as active as possible," the doctor added. "He has an excellent chance of recovering full power in his right arm. I see no problem for him to be fully independent."

Rex Dockery known as man who cared

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — Memphis State coach Rex Dockery, the victim of a plane crash that also killed three other men, was remembered by his players as a caring man who taught more than football.

"Knowing him has made a difference in our lives and has changed our lives for the better," said Memphis State quarterback Danny Sparkman.

He and other players took part in a memorial service Wednesday for Dockery, 41; assistant coach Chris Faros, 31; freshman defensive back Charles Greenhill, 19, and team booster Glenn Jones, 48, who piloted the ill-fated plane.

The service at the Mid-South Coliseum came two days after Jones' twin-engine plane crashed near Lawrenceburg, Tenn.

Jones was ferrying Dockery, Feros and Greenhill to a high school sports banquet in Lawrenceburg.

"When I go back and think about these men, I don't think about death. I think about life. They were so full of life," said Mike Omar, a three-year letterman with the Tigers.

The Rev. Paul Clunan, pastor of St. Louis Catholic Church, told the 1,100 people at the memorial that it was natural for them to wonder why God would allow such an accident.

"I don't know," he said. "Theology and the Scriptures give us no answers."

But he advised the mourners to remember that, "The Lord may close one door, but he always opens another."

Thomas Carpenter, Memphis State president, said Faros was a respected coach with a bright future, and he said Dockery taught his players good citizenship as well as football.

"He taught nobility and character," Carpenter said. "To know Rex Dockery was to love him."

The cause of the plane crash has not been determined and the accident is under investigation by the National Transportation Safety Board.

"These men are the best and brightest that we have to offer," said Charles Cavagnaro, Memphis State's athletic director. "Now we must strive to be the brightest and the best."

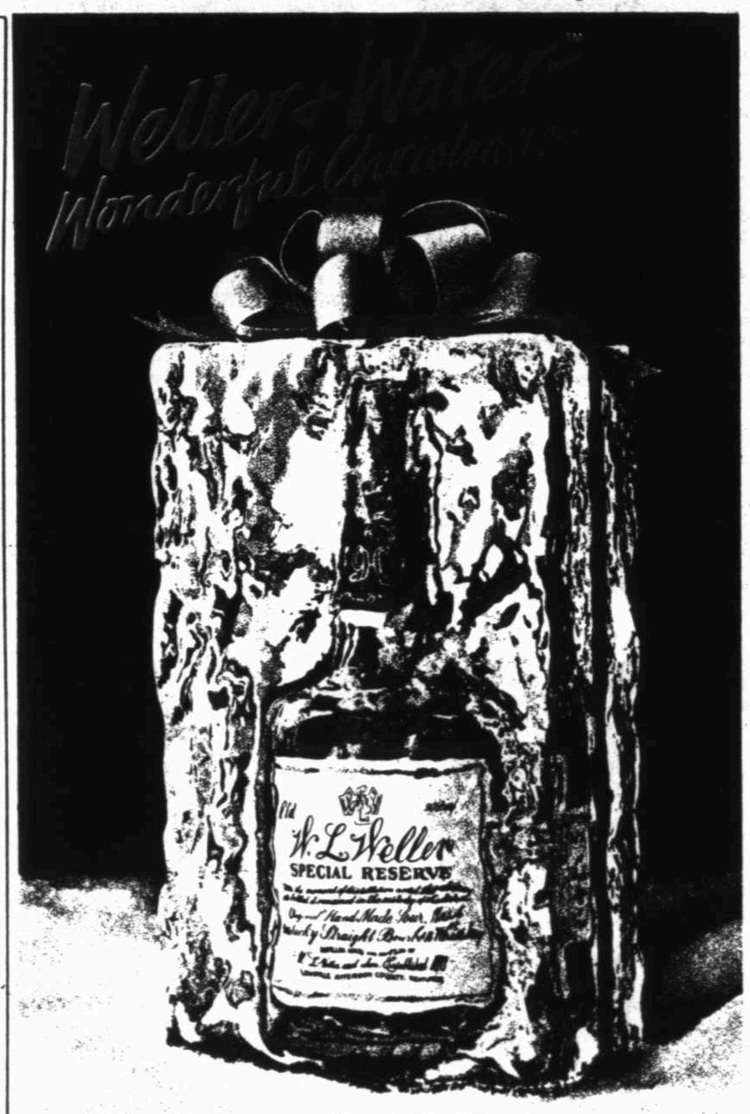

Greenhill, who had just completed his first season at Memphis State, was eulogized as a polite young man who didn't let star status turn his head.

A resident of Frayser, a Memphis suburb, he was a highly recruited high school player.

"He, who because of his natural ability could have been haughty, chose to be humble," said the Rev. Edgar Young of Frayser. "He will be remembered as a fine young man who never forgot to say good morning, yes sir, no sir, thank you."

Dick Owens, identified as a close &friend, said Jones was a good father and husband and an avid supporter of Memphis State football.

Dockery joined Memphis State at the end of the 1980 season and struggled through the next two years with records of 1-10.

Bright dies at age 53

EDMONTON, Alberta (AP) — Johnny Bright became famous as a black quarterback in a white man's game.

He was the object of blatant, merciless physical attacks on the football field and mentally painful prejudice off the field.

But Bright, who died here Wednesday, never believed he had to be second to any man. This belief made him a model for black athletes in the United States and one of the greatest players in Canadian Football League history.

He died of a heart attack at age 53 in University Hospital where was about to undergo a second operation on his knee to repair damage suffered during his 13-year CFL career with Calgary Stampeders and Edmonton Eskimos.

"IT IS a great tragedy," said Eskimos executive manager Norm Kimball. "Johnny was a great producer on the football field, a marvellous competitor.

"He's been a community leader, an excellent teacher and administrator, a leader of youth."

That was his nature. One of five sons of a Fort Wayne, Ind., steelworker, Bright wanted to succeed outside athletics but knew football was the necessary vehicle to that success.

So he became one of the best in the game.

At a time when there are only a handful of black players on football teams, Bright became one of Drake University's best and most versatile athletes. He was named Drake's football player of the century.

He was the subject of a series of photographs that won a 1952 Pulitzer Prize. The photographs show Oklahoma A&M's Wilbanks Smith viciously attacking Bright from the blind side on the first play of the game as the Drake quarterback stood watching the play unfold five yards ahead of him.

His jaw was broken and he was knocked unconscious, but on the next play Bright threw a 40-yard touchdown pass.

Don't mention Huskies to UCLA

By DAN McLEAN
Copley News Service

LOS ANGELES — If you want to get UCLA coach Terry Donahue hot under the collar, suggest his 6-4-1 Bruins do not deserve to go to the Rose Bowl.

Someone told Donahue Wednesday, during an early session with the media, that Penn State's Joe Paterno had suggested Washington is the best team in the Pacific-10 Conference.

(Nobody pointed out until later that Penn State will meet Washington in the Aloha Bowl.)

"All I can say in response to that is we're the conference champion and we beat Washington head-to-head," said Donahue, whose team faces 10-1 Illinois Jan. 2 in Pasadena.

THEN HE warmed to the subject.

"If the two teams had not met and had tied for the conference championship," he said, "some argument could be made. For example, last year (when UCLA was 10-1-1, including a Rose Bowl victory over Michigan), if we had tied Arizona State for the championship there could have been an argument, because the teams didn't meet.

"But we beat Washington (which went 8-3, but lost, 27-24, to the Bruins), I think we clearly played a tougher schedule, plus we played one extra conference game, which is not to your advantage.

"I think clearly we're the best team in the conference. If we played Washington again, I think we'd beat them again."

So, there. And, just in case his point hadn't been put across, when Donahue was asked if he'd prefer another opponent to the No. 4-ranked Fighting Illini he responded:

"I'd rather play a lot of other teams — maybe Penn State." He was smiling when he said it.

As coach of the Bruins, Donahue feels a little like Rodney Dangerfield's agent these days.

The media focus, inspired by a few unhappy coaches, on the abundance of bowls and the poor selection procedure of many, really has nothing to do with the Bruins.

That they earned the right to represent the Pac-10 after an 0-3-1 start (all three losses at the hands of top-10 teams) really is not subject to question. The Pac-10 champion goes to the Rose Bowl and the Bruins won the championship.

AND, DONAHUE doesn't expect his team to embarrass itself.

"I think it will be a great matchup," he said. "I think it will be a tremendous contest. I believe that."

The coach said he doesn't know that much about Illinois yet. "I know several general things but not a whole lot of specific things." But he does know the Illini's 10-1 record was no fluke.

"They might be the best team to come out to the Rose Bowl in a long time," he said. "They went through that conference (the Big Ten) undefeated; they're 10-1 and ranked No. 4 in the country with an outside shot at the national championship."

And, while Illinois Coach Mike White is known for his offensive philosophy, Donahue said there's no doubt Illinois won on the other side of the line of scrimmage.

"They won because their defensive football team played better than anyone expected them to play," Donahue said.

"They won with their defensive unit, although their offensive unit is where their notoriety comes from. This is far and away the best defensive unit we've faced (the Bruins scored eight points against Georgia and 10 against No. 1-ranked Nebraska)."

And the offense?

"They run a lot of single-back stuff," the coach said. "One place they do a good job is with their quarterback checking off. And they've established a very good running game. That's a difference from Mike White teams of the past.

"We obviously have our work cut out for us."

Donahue does admit to a home-field advantage for the Bruins, who are 8-1-2 (including the 1983 Rose Bowl Game) at home since moving there from the Los Angeles Coliseum for the 1982 season. But, he doesn't see it as that great.

"To me, the home-field advantage entails two things," he said. "It entails weather and crowd noise. I don't think the weather will be extreme either way. As for crowd noise, for the Rose Bowl it's usually split."

HE DID admit that familiarity (the Bruins will use their regular lockers) and the grass surface (Illinois played almost exclusively on artificial turf) could be factors.

Donahue sees it as a homecoming of sorts for the Illini, who have something like 18 players from Southern California, the majority having played at Pasadena City College. Plus, White previously coached at Cal.

Donahue was asked if the tough early schedule might be the reason UCLA eventually turned things around and won the conference.

Parity bugaboo hurts football

AP Sports Writer

The news is foreboding.

First we discover that nobody's watching Neil O'Donoghue and Bill Capece miss field goals on Monday Night Football. Now we find out that ratings for college football have dropped to the lowest point in a decade.

What is happening to America's Game, college version?

Final Nielsen ratings for college football gave ABC a 9.9 and CBS a 9.6 for the season, meaning that roughly one in 10 of the nation's television sets were tuned to college football on a given Saturday afternoon. That's a nine percent drop for each network and represents the first time in a decade that ratings have dropped to single digits.

Why? A combination of the things that have plagued National Football League telecasts — good fall weather that sent people outdoors; more cable television; the United States Football League, which has brought football to television year-round.

But most of all, it's same parity bugaboo that seems to have hurt the NFL.

Take a look at the nation's Top 20 teams.

Where are Notre Dame, Southern Cal, Penn State? What are all these Boston Colleges, West Virginias, Brigham Youngs, Air Forces and East Carolinas doing there? And the 3-4-5-6 teams in the country? Auburn, Illinois, Miami and SMU, with Alabama all the way down at No. 19.

Notre Dame-Southern Cal wasn't televised this year. Nor were USC-UCLA, Penn State-Pitt or Michigan-Ohio State. Instead, we got the likes of Boston College-Alabama the day after Thanksgiving. A good game between interesting teams, but the kind of game the nation's viewing habits probably haven't caught up to.

THE FANATIC will watch anything that moves. The casual viewer, the one who makes a difference in the ratings, wonders what happened to the Bear in the houndstooth hat and thinks of BC as those guys who always upset someone in the NCAA basketball tournament. What's a Doug Flutie? Bring on the Trojans and the Fighting Irish

Donn Bernstein, ABC's resident college football ratings expert, also points out that the networks are in the second year of a scheduling cycle — that is, schools are permitted a total of six appearances in two years to keep the nets from showing the Nebraska Game of the Week. By midway through the season, it wasn't necessarily the best matchup that was televised, it was the best matchup between schools that hadn't used up their appearances.

There's validity to that — good matchups between good teams can help as last weekend's Washington-Dallas shootout attests. Nationwide ratings were due out today, but early ratings in selected cities indicate that it has a chance to better the ratings record for a Sunday game — 25.1 for a New England-Dallas contest on Dec. 3, 1978.

But all this may be moot anyway.

If the Supreme Court upholds a lower court decision throwing out the NCAA's blanket contract with the networks and schools are free to negotiate their own contracts, we can get Notre Dame-USC ad tedium. That might be 2-8 Notre Dame against 3-7 USC.

But if the ratings are up, the networks certainly won't care one whit.

Interview of the week, maybe of the year: Howard Cosell, who for a year has declined to broadcast professional boxing, interviewing Sugar Ray Leonard at halftime of Monday night's Bucs-Packers game.

"Why are you coming back?" asks Cosell, who recently noted on "Sportsbeat" that despite his year-long absence from boxing telecasts, nothing in the sport has changed.

"Because a lot of people have been putting down boxing," replies Leonard to the man who has been putting down boxing.

Cosell takes no notice. Nor does he take any notice of Leonard's signoff:

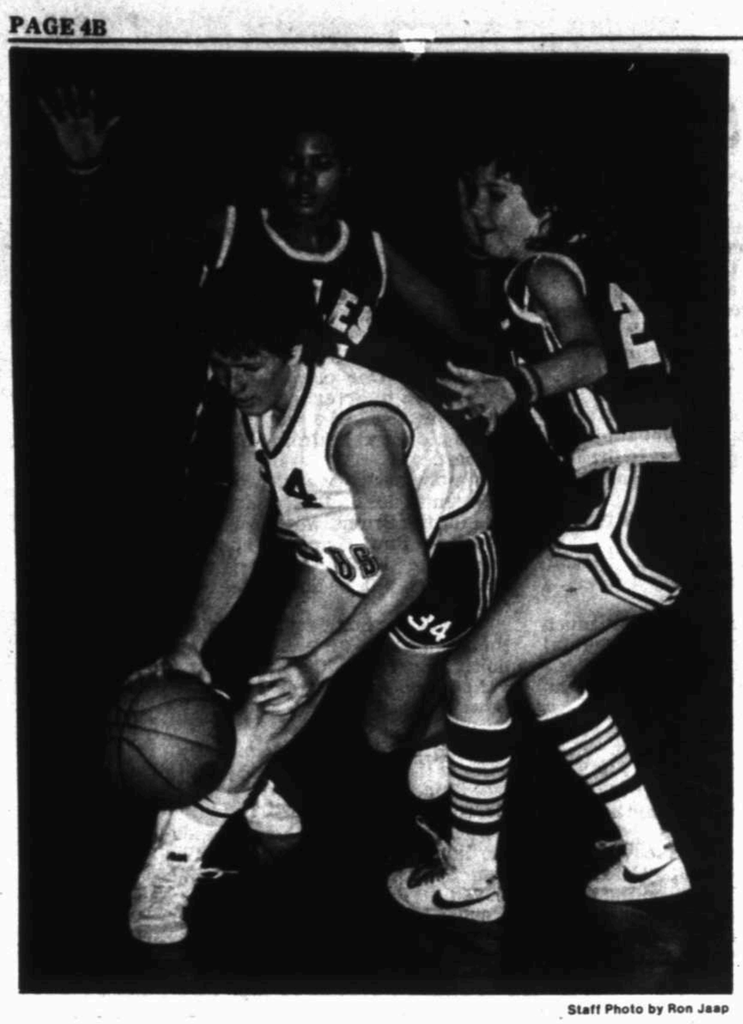

"See you at ringside, Howard."

Mahre twins skip Italy

COURMAYEUR, Italy (AP) — World Cup champion Phil Mahre and his twin brother Steve, frustrated by dry weather in Italy that has forced them to train on artificial snow, have left the World Cup circuit, apparently to concentrate on the Olympics.

U.S. team officials said the brothers were scheduled to fly home to Yakima, Wash., via Zurich, Switzerland, today.

The departure of the Mahres was seen as an indication that both were concentrating on February's Winter Olympics in Yugoslavia at the cost of spoiling their chances in this

Easler is excited about new team

BOSTON (AP) — Veteran slugger Mike Easler says he's looking forward to "a great affair" with the Boston Red Sox.

"I just want to fit into the lineup and help the club win ball games," the newest member of the Red Sox said Wednesday. "I think I can supply what they need."

Easler got his first look at chummy Fenway Park — and was delighted.

"I like it, I like it a lot," Easler said as he viewed the short left field wall and the easy-to-reach barriers in center and right. "It looks made to order for me."

Easler, acquired from Pittsburgh in a deal which sent southpaw John Tudor to the Pirates Dec. 6, flew into town to attend a Red Sox luncheon for the premiere of the club's 1983 "highlight" film.

He was greeted by slugger Jim Rice, who led the American League with 39 homers and drove in 126 runs this year. Despite a drizzle, Rice escorted Easler outside for a look at the field.

"He was with us for a couple of weeks in spring training in 1979, but there's no way I could tell anything from that," Rice said. "All I know is that he's got the numbers. He can hit, and hit with good power."

Easler, a left-handed swinger, was acquired to take some of the pressure off Rice, Tony Armas, Dwight Evans and other right-handed hitters with the Red Sox.

The Red Sox went into the market after going 46-65 against right-handed pitching and 32-19 against left-handers this year.

"He hopefully will help Tony and me and some of the others, but we can't think about that," Rice said. "The big thing in all this is that we still have to hit. If we don't, no one can help us."

Easler spent the 1978 season at Columbus of the International League, then was sold by Pittsburgh to the Red Sox.

Knaus leaves Texas Tech

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Texas Tech linebacker coach David Knaus has resigned to accept an assistant coaching position with the San Antonio Gunslingers of the United States Football League, according to Tech head coach Jerry Moore.

Knaus' appointment with the Gunslingers was effective immediately, Moore said.

"We hate to lose David," Moore said. "He has been a tremendous asset to our football program and I know that he will be an asset to San Antonio as well."

Knaus, who won all-conference honors for the 1973 Tech team that won the Gator Bowl, has been on the staff of the Southwest Conference school since 1980. He served as defensive line coach under Rex Dockery during the 1980 season and was moved to linebacker coach by Moore the next year.

Cavaliers, Pacers showing recovery signs in NBA

By The Associated Press

Although the results haven't started to show up in the standings, the Cleveland Cavaliers and Indiana Pacers have at least put words like "pride" and "renaissance" in their vocabularies.

Both teams are showing signs of recovery under new two-brother ownership — Mel and Herb Simon at Indiana and George and Gordon Gund at Cleveland.

Last spring, the Simon brothers, who are Indianapolis shopping center developers, bought the Pacers, rescuing them from years of absentee ownership and player sales and months of talk of the team merging, moving or folding.

The Simons' financial support enabled the team to lower ticket prices and aggressively promote the team under the slogan "Pacer Pride." Some 5,000 season tickets were sold, compared to 1,200 in 1982-83, when the club averaged 4,768 per game.

So far this season, Indiana has drawn a capacity crowd of 17,100 against Philadelphia, 16,650 against Detroit and 14,600 against Houston. Its average for the first 12 home games was 11,176, compared with 4,033 for the first dozen games last season.

"The city and the fans are behind us and it gives you a good feeling the owners are committed to the team," says Coach Jack McKinney, who was widely rumored to be leaving the Pacers after last season. "The only reason I stayed is the new ownership. They are solid men not in a hurry. And the city has responded to us so well, much better than we expected.

"Now we have a future to look forward to. Last year it didn't look too bright."

With a league-high five rookies, including Steve Stipanovich, the second pick behind Houston's Ralph Sampson, the Pacers are still struggling on the court, with a 5-17 record, including 0-10 on the road.

"I know we're not ready to win yet," McKinney said. "But I know we're going to improve and get better players. But it will be frustrating until we do that."

While Stipanovich is averaging less than eight points per game. Team leader Clark Kellogg, a rookie last season, is getting nearly 20 points and 10 rebounds per outing, while the other starting forward, Herb Williams, is close behind at 18.6 points and nine rebounds.

Cleveland, which passed Indiana in the standings last season with a strong finish after acquiring guard World B. Free from Golden State, has new uniforms, a new logo, a new slogan (Renaissance in Richfield) and some new fans, based on a near-doubling of season tickets over last year.

"The feeling last year on this club was indescribable," said Free. "The best word would be nonchalant. I heard the jokes about us and I didn't like them. I have pride. This year, the atmosphere here is more positive. We don't have a big center to compete with the other teams, but we have some of the best forwards in basketball."

Free again leads Cleveland scoring and is sixth in the NBA with a 25-point average. Cliff Robinson has matured into a solid forward, averaging 18⅛ points while placing among the league leaders in rebounds with nearly 11 per game.

The Cavaliers' record is 8-17, but they are 7-3 at home and finally won a game on the road last week after 12 straight losses away from Richfield.

"People realize that this year that we do have super talent and we're getting better," Free said. "I know our record doesn't look very good, but if you check we're playing some very good teams and we're not getting blown out. This year we're giving it our all."

"I can feel the change. We're more organized, more professional," said Robinson. "Last year, I felt kind of like an airplane over Russian — I waited for us to get blown out of the sky. It wasn't too good. It was hard to concentrate."

Center matchup no factor in Georgetown win

By The Associated Press

The game figured to be a matchup of centers — Franklin Giles of South Carolina State, the nation's second-leading rebounder last season, and Georgetown's 7-foot-1 Patrick Ewing.

As it turned out, neither played very much in a game that saw fifth-ranked Georgetown pull away in the second half for a 97-67 college basketball victory Wednesday night.

Giles got off to a quick start, scoring six points and grabbing three rebounds in the opening three minutes. But moments later, he picked up his third foul and sat out the rest of the first half.

Ewing, meanwhile, played most of the first half, scored 14 points and had seven rebounds. But, after banging his head while taking a charging foul, he was held out of the second half as a precautionary measure on the advice of the Hoyas trainer.

College Roundup

Georgetown led 43-36 at halftime and outscored the visiting Bulldogs 10-0 in the opening 96 seconds of the second half.

"When you lose someone like that (Ewing), the other kids start to do things that they don't normally do," said Georgetown Coach John Thompson.

Gene Smith, who added 13 points for Georgetown, said, "We didn't have Patrick to clog things up down the middle, but losing him helped our quickness."

South Carolina State Coach Percy Caldwell said Giles' foul trouble hurt.

"I don't like to complain about the officiating, but they got us into trouble early," Caldwell said. "We thought we could match up well on the front line. But when we have to go to our bench, we just can't match them man to man."

The reserves for the Bulldogs, 3-3, were outscored by Georgetown's subs, 42-19.

Top Twenty

Ninth-ranked Maryland, the only other Top Twenty team in action Wednesday night, routed Maryland-Eastern Shore, 104-69.

Maryland, 5-1, set the tempo early as Adrian Branch broke loose for a dunk off the opening tap. Ben Coleman scored nine of his 18 points in the opening eight minutes as the Terrapins built a 22-8 lead.

Len Bias and Herman Veal each scored 12 points for Maryland, which led 57-27 at halftime.

Unranked Teams

In other games, Troy Taylor sank a 32-foot shot at the halftime buzzer to give Ohio State its first lead and the Buckeyes went on to beat Tulane 80-57.

Soviet's hockey star Bykov charged with shoplifting

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A brush with the law may have cost one of the Soviet Union's most promising young hockey stars a chance to play in the Winter Olympics next February at Sarajevo, Yugoslavia.

A 23-year-old center on the Soviet national team, Vyatcheslav Bykov, was arrested Tuesday and arraigned on Wednesday on shoplifting charges. Police said he tried to leave a department store with $110 in women's and children's clothing.

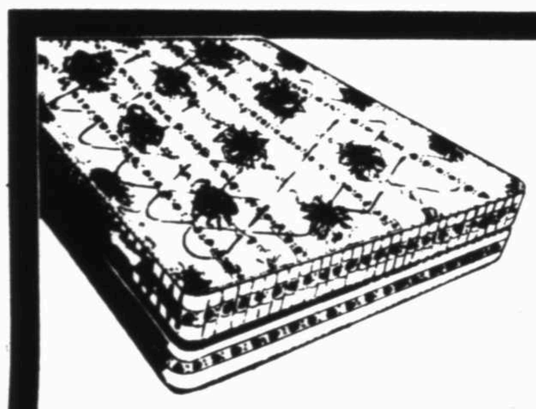

Trial was set for today. If convicted, Bykov likely would be given a suspended sentence, which would allow him to leave Sweden later this afternoon, prosecutor Anders Helin said.

Bykov, who plays for the Soviet Army team, is considered a potential star and appeared headed for a spot on the Soviet Olympic team.

After this incident, however, Bykov's future on the national team looked bleak, according to sources familiar with Soviet hockey. He is expected to face a stiff penalty when he returns to the Soviet Union, the sources said.

Visiting Soviet hockey players have been involved in several similar incidents in Sweden before. Three years ago, former Soviet great Vladimir Petrov was arrested in Goteborg after a wild downtown ride in a sports car. He later was released.

Bykov told police he intended to pay for the clothes at cashier near the department store's main entrance. However, when he was arrested, police found only 12 kronor, about $1.50, in his pocket.

New Redskins look keeps Dallas Cowboys looking

By GARY POMERANTZ
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — A common man with blackboard, chalk and a few of his favorite Mr. Goodbar candy bars is not supposed to be able to outthink the Dallas Cowboys' computer.

"Good coaching Sunday," somebody told Joe Gibbs Monday.

The Redskins' coach flexed an awshucks expression, a man on top of a league-best 13-2 mountain. Typically, he said, "Naaw. Good playing."

An interesting fact emerged, after Washington's 31-10 victory over Dallas had tied a Cowboys record for worst loss at Texas Stadium (21 points) and marked the Redskins' largest regular-season margin in the series:

The Redskins had frustrated the Cowboys before their first offensive play, even before the snap.

How? Washington surprised the Cowboys by changing its standard offensive set by adding a third wide receiver and subtracting a second tight end: Alvin Garrett started instead of Clint Didier.

DALLAS WAS in a confused funk.

"On that first play of the game," said Warren Simmons, the Redskins' tight end coach, "the Cowboys cornerbacks started yelling to the sidelines to (defensive coordinator) Ernie Stautner, 'Hey, they have three wideouts!' They didn't expect it. I saw that Ernie looked real mad. I saw him throw something down."

The results were devastating to Dallas. The strategy change was created, Washington coaches said, to open up the running game. By adding an extra wide receiver, the theory went, the Cowboys had to move their safeties back — away from run defense and away from the blitzing that had caused the Redskins so many problems in their 31-30 loss to Dallas in the season opener — to help on pass coverage.

This strategic deception paid immediate dividends for the Redskins. They took a 14-0 lead, scoring on their first two drives. On the first drive, quarterback Joe Theismann completed a 22-yard pass to wide receiver Charlie Brown, then netted 27 yards when safety Michael Downs interfered with Brown at the Dallas seven, setting up the first touchdown.

Anaylsis

On the second drive, Theismann completed a 22-yard pass to receiver Art Monk. As the Dallas safeties kept backpedaling and failing in pass coverage, running back John Riggins had more open space in the middle. Riggins was on his way to 89 yards and two short touchdowns on 27 carries. Simply, the Redskins' strategy was working.

The Dallas defense looked silly on those first two drives. When Theismann made a play fake to Riggins, safety Dextor Clinkscale ran forward, then back, then fell. This left Didier open for a 40-yard touchdown and a 14-0 lead.

Dallas tried to reverse its defensive futility. On the next few series, the Cowboys removed middle linebacker Bob Breunig on first down and replaced him with a cornerback, to keep up with the added receiver. Thus, Dallas went away from its vaunted flex defense to the pass-fearing nickel defense.

"Instead of having eight or nine guys near the line of scrimmage," said Theismann, "they only had seven. It opened up the running game for us even more."

SO THE Redskins kept running with Riggins. "We felt we had to run for at least 120 yards to beat Dallas," said Gibbs. Dallas had given up an average of 89 yards rushing per game before Sunday.

As depression and defeat settled upon Texas late Sunday, the Redskins had gained 166 yards rushing, running on 46 of 63 plays.

With the Redskins' offensive line, the Hogs, dominating the environs, Dallas returned to the flex on first down in the second half. No matter. The Redskins had won for the 16th time in 17 games in which they had run the ball 40 times or more.

Chalk one up for Gibbs, whose Redskins have now chalked up eight straight victories, 28 in the last 31 games. With a victory over the New York Giants Saturday at RFK Stadium here, they can chalk up the home-field advantage throughout the playoffs.

"It's amazing we're 13-2 and we haven't locked up the home-field advantage yet," Gibbs said.

If the Redskins defeat the Giants, their next road game would be either Jan. 22 in Super Bowl XVIII in Tampa, Fla., or sometime in the 1984 regular season. Such, along with a Christmas weekend bye, are the spoils for winning the division.

However, if the Redskins lose to the Giants and Dallas defeats San Francisco Monday night, Dallas would win the division by virtue of a better division record. And the Redskins would be reduced to playing in the wild-card game at RFK Stadium Dec. 26.

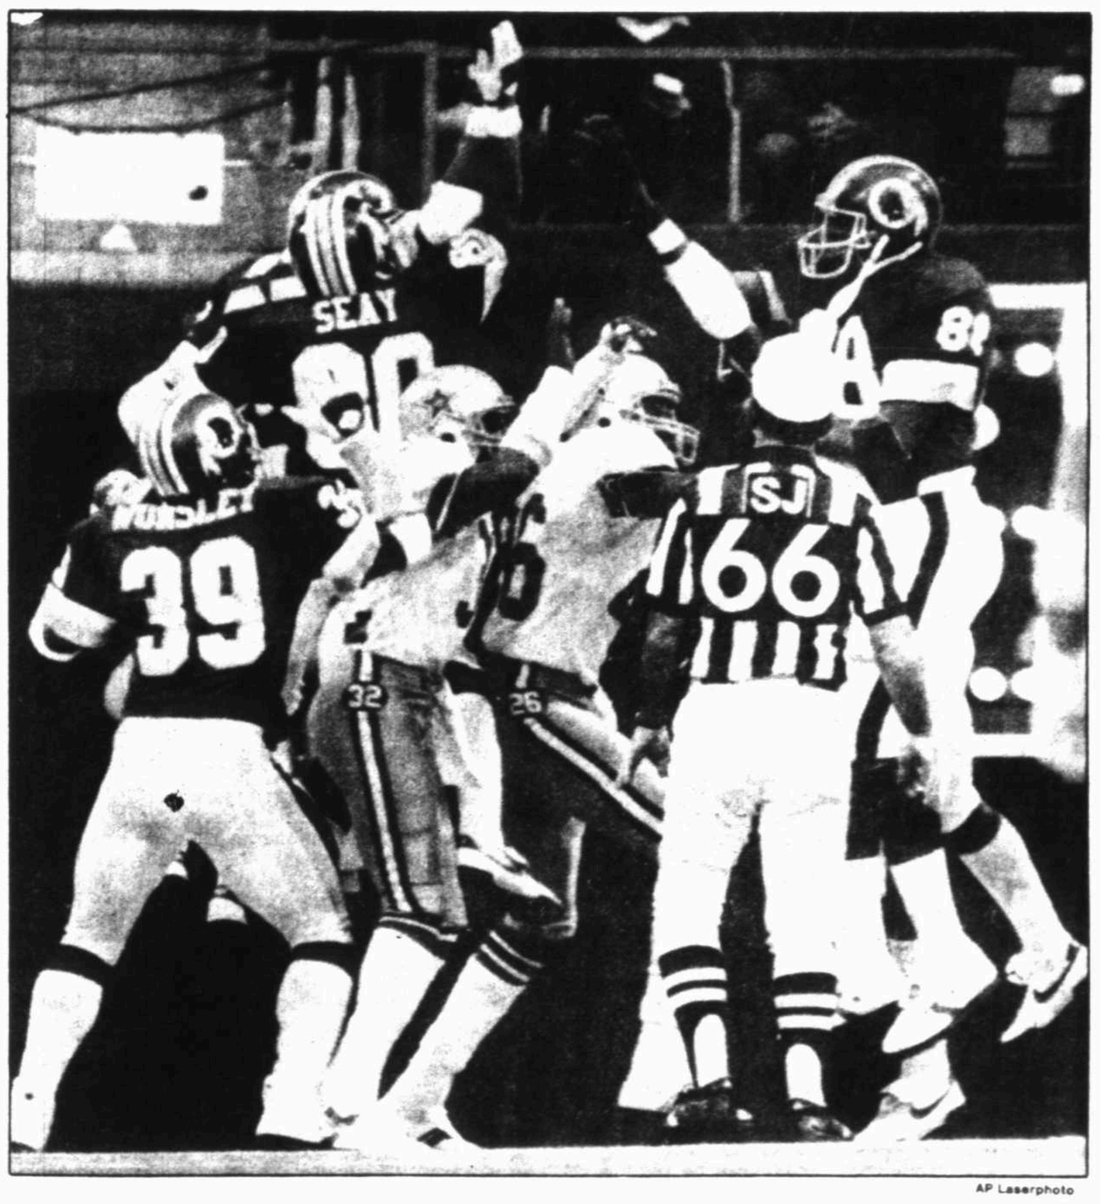

GIBBS KNOWS this, of course, just as he knows the Giants are 3-11-1 and have struggled all season. Neither Jeff Rutledge, who will start against the Redskins, nor Scott Brunner has been effective at quarterback. Already, the odds favor the Redskins by 15 points. Because of this, Gibbs has fears.

"I told our players today that the most important thing for us to do is understand our situation. A loss to the Giants would take away everything that last week meant," Gibbs said. "It would be natural for us to start listening to everybody pumping us up and start thinking we're a lot better than what we are. And that would take away the very thing that makes us good."

Other Redskins nuances and visions from Sunday's game escaped Monday.

Strong safety Curtis Jordan, who didn't expect to play on passing situations because of a broken right thumb, said that when starter Ken Coffey was forced to the sideline for a short time in the third quarter because of a hard hit, Jordan realized, "I knew it was either me or Coach Gibbs and I knew he hadn't been playing strong safety much at practice."

Defensive tackle Dave Butz said he could sense the confusion among the Cowboys' offensive linemen even before the snap on that failed fourth-and-one play from the Dallas 49 in the third quarter.

AP Laserphoto

Dallas defensive backs Dennis Thurman (32) and Michael Downs (26) attempt to disrupt an end zone celebration by the "fun bunch" of the Washington Redskins. Dallas lost the game 31-10, but Dallas coach Tom Landry said, "I think that's great. I don't care if they do it."

Writer thinks Redskins will erase the asterisk by Super Bowl victory

By Barry Lorge
Copley News Service

The Washington Redskins are going to win their second straight Super Bowl next month in Tampa and erase the asterisk — accomplished in season shortened by strike — that folks put on their 27-17 triumph over the Miami Dolphins last Jan. 30.

Trust me.

I have seen the light and it is burgundy-and-gold, like sunrise over the Potomac.

The Redskins have everything — talent, depth, poise, intelligence, coaching, resilience, killer instinct, and the exceptional esprit de corps that distinguishes great teams in the most warlike of sports.

Their offense is a precision instrument made up of parts in perpetual motion, as balanced and up-to-the-minute as a Swiss timepiece. The special teams are consistently good, and kick returners Mike Nelms and Virgil Seay are potential game-breakers. The defense would not embarrass its fans at the Pentagon. The one weak link — the secondary — is far from a fatal flaw.

It appears that the only setback with which the Redskins could not cope would be losing quarterback Joe Theismann. Backup Bob Holly has not taken a snap, even at the end of games won by five touchdowns, but Theismann is about as durable as they come. He started his National Football League career returning kicks and still occasionally runs like a halfback. He has scrambled for 214 yards this season and bounced up from tackles thunderous enough to crush a coach's heart.

I saw this team knock the Dallas Cowboys off their high horses Sunday and stomp them 31-10. Nobody humiliates America's Team by three touchdowns at Texas Stadium, leaving them bruised, abused and confused, the way the Redskins did.

They have the best record in the NFL, 13-2, because they are the best team.

Despite injuries that could have been damaging and demoralizing, the Redskins have won eight straight games, 28 of their last 31, 33 of 39 since a 0-5 start in Joe Gibbs' rookie season in 1981. They have won 13 of their last 14 on the road.

The Redskins need only four points in their regular-season finale against the New York Giants on Saturday to surpass the NFL scoring record of 513 points set by Houston in 1961. The multiple-look, infinite-option, one-back attack designed by Gibbs already has moved into second place, ahead of the 1981 San Diego Chargers.

If you look at the legendary teams of modern pro football, Gibbs has said often, they all had an outstanding big back, a defense that rattled bones, a quarterback who didn't make the costly mistake, and no glaring weakness.

Fullback John Riggins, who has scored touchdowns in 13 of his last 14 games, is the diesel that keeps the offense truckin'. Big Rig rolls best on the big occasion, as he demonstrated by shattering virtually every Super Bowl rushing record last January.

Theismann is the driving force. He is the National Conference's top-rated passer with 260 completions in 431 attempts for 3,541 yards, 27 touchdowns and only seven interceptions. No quarterback is more mobile or versatile at blending the running game, short passes and the occasional deep thrust.

The Redskins have a ferocious front four on defense, anchored by 300-pound left tackle Dave Butz, and linebackers who pursue their men like vigilantes.

'Boomer' Esiason thinks Duke's Bennett overrated

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Norman Julius "Boomer" Esiason will play his last game for Maryland on Saturday night in the Citrus Bowl against Tennessee. However, he may be thinking about quarterbacking the Gray team in the Blue-Gray game on Christmas Day along with Duke's Ben Bennett.

The record book identifies Bennett as major college football's all-time pass yardage leader with 9,614 yards (his 1,375 attempts and 820 completions also are records). Esiason, however, calls him "the most overrated quarterback in the country . . . in the world . . . in the universe . . . who ever played the game of football."

IF YOU think Esiason sounds bitter, stay tuned. Nicknamed Boomer because he kicked a lot before he was born and his father would ask his mother how little Boomer was doing, his opinions may cause a few sonic booms of their own.

—On not making the All-Atlantic Coast Conference team (Bennett did): "The ACC team is picked on statistics alone. The whole ACC has got Carolina on its mind — North Carolina, North Carolina State, Duke, Wake Forest. I can't explain how frustrating it is."

—Would he be surprised if Bennett were named the starter for the Gray team? "No, he's got everything else; they might as well give him that, too."

—On John Elway's refusal to play with the Baltimore Colts after they made him the No. 1 pick in last spring's National Football League draft and threatening to play professional baseball if they didn't trade him: "As impressed as I was with his playing skills, that's how depressed I was with his off-the-playing-field skills. He was a little too forward with the city of Baltimore. I don't see how anybody could turn down a city or turn down the NFL. It's like saying no to the president when he invites you to visit him."

ESIASON, WHO holds 17 Maryland offensive records, passed for 2,322 yards this season to 3,086 for Bennett, who threw 175 more passes. But Esiason finished 14th on the NCAA's pass efficiency chart, while Bennett was only 27th.

"I can only go by the games we played against him," Esiason said Wednesday. "The last two years he hasn't played well against Maryland. He threw three interceptions last year and this year our game broke a string of 17 straight games in which he threw a touchdown pass.

"But at Maryland we don't get the hype or national coverage some of us would have liked. I'd rather think of us as an independent school, not an ACC team. In 1981, we were 4-6-1 and got zip on the All-ACC team. Duke was 3-8 this year and had four guys on the team, including the most valuable player (Bennett).

"I can't wait to see how they're going to pick the starter in the Blue-Gray game. Maybe they'll just put us in a room together and see who comes out.

"He's not as tall as I am (6-foot-2 to 6-4), he's lighter (195 to 205), he's not as mobile and he doesn't play for as good a team as I do. I'm playing in three all-star games, so I must have done something right. I'm looking forward to getting around because I feel I got short-changed on the all-conference and All-America teams and I've got to satisfy myself."

Doesn't Esiason have any kind words for Bennett?

"He hasn't said too many kind things about me, but I did call him before their North Carolina game to wish him luck in his quest for the yardage mark. (Pause). When you throw 50 times a game (actually 42.6) you should have some yardage."

ESIASON, A left-hander from East Islip, N.Y., would love to play for the Colts — "It would be like a dream come true" — and plans someday to donate heavily to cancer research, the disease that killed his mother when he was 5 years old and grandmother.

"The people in Baltimore have been very warm and receptive to me," he said. "I went to a Colts game a few weeks ago and I was signing so many autographs I couldn't even watch the game. Last year, I was the grand marshal of their Christmas parade. People call it the 'Charm City,' and it's kind of charmed me."

Perhaps the most surprising thing about Esiason is that he has lasted in college to the point where he will graduate — almost certainly to pro football — come spring.

"There was no way I thought four or five years ago that I was going to graduate; now, it will be the most important day in my life. For some reason, everything's gone my way the last two or three years. It will be like a storybook ending."

Which wasn't the way it ended last fall for 10-year-old Mark Martino of Tampa, Fla., a leukemia victim, whose parents will be in the stands Saturday night cheering Esiason on.

"MARK HAD leukemia since he was 5," Esiason explained. "He came up to Johns Hopkins (medical center) and I learned about him through my girlfriend, who has family down here. I visited him and other little kids in the hospital six or seven times.

"Then, right in the middle of two-a-days, I got a call that he had passed away after a five-year battle with leukemia. Can you picture a 10-year-old boy, his whole body almost yellow, with no hair, severely chapped lips, bruises, tubes — so much pain.

"We showed him our highlight film and he refused his pain treatments because it would have put him to sleep. He endured the pain to see a 27-minute highlight film. That's the epitome of courage as far as I'm concerned."

Leonard can earn plenty in ring comeback

By BART BARNES
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Sugar Ray Leonard can probably earn at least $30 million in his first four fights after returning to boxing, including $15 million to $20 million to fight middleweight champion Marvin Hagler, according to leading fight promoters.

They say that Leonard, a former world welterweight champion, has lost none of his box office appeal despite the fact that he has not fought since he underwent surgery for a partially detached retina in his left eye on May 9, 1982.

"He is a super, super attraction," said Bob Arum, the president of Top Rank, a New York-based fight promotion company.

Said Dan Duva, president of Main Event, another fight promoter, "I think he would be bigger than he ever was. People have had an opportunity for the past two years to sample the rest of the so-called superstars in boxing so they have probably learned to appreciate him even more."

On Saturday, Leonard, 27, announced he was coming out of retirement after boxing six exhibition rounds at Andrews Air Force Base in Maryland. He said he planned to resume his career with a couple of 10-round non-title fights, possibly as early as February.

Dr. Ronald G. Michels, a Johns Hopkins University Hospital ophthalmologist who repaired Leonard's detached retina, said that Leonard's retina "was completely healed" and that there appeared to be no additional danger that the injury would reoccur.

"As best we could judge, the injured eye would be as strong as the other eye," said Michels. "If you have a full recovery and the tissues are well healed, our feeling is that probably there is no increased risk of a reinjury."

But Michels also said a detached retina is an injury that can occur without warning, and regular medical examinations would probably not indicate that a tear was imminent. "Either you have a problem or you don't," said Michels.

A retina is often described as being to the eye as a lens is to a camera. If uncorrected, a torn or detached retina can lead to blindness. In Leonard's case, he began seeing spots while training in Buffalo for a fight with Roger Stafford. That fight was canceled after Michels diagnosed the detached retina and recommended immediate surgery.

In announcing his return to the ring, Leonard said he intends to return to Buffalo and also to fight in Washington.

He denied that he is coming back to fight anyone in particular, including Hagler. Pat Petronelli, Hagler's co-manager, remained skeptical.

Fighting Hagler, said Petronelli, "is all Sugar Ray Leonard dreams about. It's the only thing on his mind. 'When are you going to fight Hagler?' This is what Ray hears constantly. This is what Hagler hears constantly.

Promoter Duva said a Leonard-Hagler fight could probably gross $50 million and that Leonard could probably walk away with between $15 million and $20 million.

Reagan's White House staff in midst of readjustment period

An Analysis

By JAMES GERSTENZANG

WASHINGTON (AP) — As President Reagan moves into his fourth year in office, the White House staff on which he has relied is in the midst of a period of readjustment.

Two senior officials are leaving the White House, the chief of staff reportedly flirted with the idea of giving up the brickbats of politics for the hardwood bats of major league baseball, and others are simply grumbling about the willingness of counselor Edwin Meese III to suggest that some people get their food on soup lines because they just don't want to pay for their meals.

Reagan's staff has throughout his tenure been the object of close observation.

Conservatives complain that it is divided among longtime Reagan supporters and newcomers to the Reagan fold who are diluting his conservatism. More moderate Republicans complain that it is divided among pragmatists and right-wing idealogues. Both the moderates and the conservatives, of course, are talking about the same people.

Whichever side is correct, one element remains: Reagan chooses to delegate authority to a great degree throughout the government. Thus, the makeup of his staff is particularly significant.

On Tuesday, when a U.S. Navy cruiser and a destroyer unleashed their fire on Lebanon, targeting positions that had fired on U.S. reconnaissance airplanes, Reagan was about to address a ceremony marking the start of Drunken and Drugged Driving Awareness Week. He did not know in advance about the firing. He let the commanders in Lebanon make the decision. A staff member reported to him after it took place.

The man who would have given him that news until recently was William P. Clark, an adviser of many years, who left the infighting and pressure of the White House, where he was Reagan's national security adviser, to become secretary of the interior. He was replaced by Robert McFarlane.

With the turn of the year, the president is losing Kenneth Duberstein, the congressional liaison chief who helped move the administration's budget through Congress and tax cuts and helped the president squeak by with countless other victories on Capitol Hill. Duberstein is taking a job as a private lobbyist.

David R. Gergen, a seven-year White House veteran of the Nixon, Ford, and Reagan administrations who has been the president's director of communications, flirted for months with the idea of making a final break from the White House. He has decided to split his time between Harvard University and the American Enterprise Institute. The latter was his business address during the Carter administration.

Now we come to James A. Baker III, the chief of staff, the target of criticism from Reagan's most right-wing allies, and a wealthy Houston lawyer said to be bored with his job, if not burned out. Baker has agreed to remain for the fourth year of the Reagan administration — after several days of intense speculation about whether he would become the next commissioner of major league baseball.

Referring to the pressures that the White House chief of staff and national security adviser face, day and night, one official found it "totally reasonable" that they would think of leaving.

"Every time something happens in the world, you get a phone call," he said.

In the view of this White House aide, the staff is displaying "the third-year syndrome."

DR. NEIL SOLOMON

Surgical procedure sucks up fat

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was reading a book where a person had an operation, and during the operation the surgeon removed some fat. Is there really an operation that a person can have to lose fat? — Della, Pittsburgh

Dear Della: There are surgical procedures to remove fat, but they usually required hospitalization for about three to four days. Now a surgical procedure called lipolysis which removes fat by suction has been developed in Europe.

The technique involves a small incision into which a long, hollow rod is inserted. The rod is attached to a machine that provides suction, and the fatty material is drawn up through the hollow rod.

In general the procedure is not recommended for anyone over 40 years of age. The tissue becomes less elastic as a person grows older, and the skin therefore does not tighten as easily and the results are not as satisfacotory.

Dear Dr. Solomon: With all the talk about advances in the treatment of cancer, I don't hear much about cervical cancer. It seems to me that few people die from it, and I have to believe that that means that treatment of it has improved. Is this assumption correct? — Sheila, Dallas

Dear Sheila: According to Dr. Neil B. Rosenshein, of the Johns Hopkins University School of Medicine in Baltimore, fewer women are dying of cervical cancer because fewer women are getting the disease. And the reason is that the Pap smear technique permits early detection. This has resulted in a decrease in mortality even though the treatment of cervical cancer is not any better than it was five or 10 years ago.

The availability of an effective screening procedure means that no woman should get cervical cancer and no woman should die from it, Dr. Rosenshein says.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I was interested in your recent question and answer on orphan drugs, and I wonder if you can give me an example of one. Have any orphan drugs come on the market recently? — Stanley, Port Arthur, Texas

Dear Stanley: As I have previously written, an orphan drug is one that has little commercial value because it is used by comparatively few people. For these patients, however, the drug can be extrememly important.

One orphan drug that has been developed, called lithostat, reduces the amount of ammonia in the urine of paraplegics. This, in turn, diminishes the possibility of kidney damage in these patients. The drug is estimated to have a potential market of only about 50,000 patients.

For Gertrude, Roanoke, Va.: If a hospitalized patient's malnutrition is not corrected, other forms of therapy may prove ineffective. For example, malnurished patients do not respond as well to chemotherapy or radiotherapy. They may also be more subject to infection and less amenable to physical rehabilitation efforts.

Big money to be made in art market

WASHINGTON (AP) - There's big money to be made in the international art market if you have a knack for knowing when to unload Chinese ceramics and buy 19th century oil paintings, a top American museum official says.

Stephen E. Weil, deputy director of the Hirshhorn Museum and author of "Beauty and the Beasts," offered an insider's look into the arcane world of art investment earlier this week when he discussed his book in a telephone interview.

His latest tip? "U.S. paintings have been doing remarkably well, but the big market for old masters is in England."

Weil's book, which was published by the federal government's Smithsonian Institution, examines the relationships among the world of art, the world of law, and the financial market.

The vagaries of the art market are traced through the Sotheby index, prepared by the Sotheby Park Bernet Group which includes some of the world's major art galleries and auctioneers.

To a knowledgable reader, the index is the art market's scoreboard. It lists items such as silver made on the European continent - a poor performer for investors - as well as English furniture, 19th century European paintings, and American paintings of the years 1800 to 1914.

The American paintings have been among art investor's best bets, and are now worth on average more than five times what they brought in 1975.

"C'mon...we're going home."
They trained together, fought together, and survived together.
Now, in the most important mission of their lives, they're going back to get their buddies who were left behind.

U.S.S.R.'s rock opera makes Western debut

PARIS (AP) — After three years of bureaucratic delay at home, the Soviet Union's first rock opera made its Western debut here in a loud and colorful clash of synthesizers, amplifiers and laser lights.

"Junon et Avos," a two-hour opera blending religious chants, punk rock and Russian folk melodies, has played to overflow crowds since it opened at Moscow's Komsomol Theater in 1981.

Ten years in the making, the opera was brought to Paris by fashion designer Pierre Cardin at his own expense. It opened last week at the Espace Cardin Theater.

Poet Andrei Voznesensky wrote the opera, inspired by a book on the Russian explorer Nikolai Rezanov given to him in San Francisco. Rezanov sailed to California in 1806 on a mission to "establish a bridge between Czarist Russia and America," as the opera puts it.

Voznesensky wrote the poem, "Story Under Full Sail," in the 1970s and then expanded it into the opera libretto.

French critics praised the opera, comparing its theme of unrequited love to "Romeo and Juliet."

Rezanov falls in love with Conchita, the governor's daughter, and seduces her. But Rezanov is Russian Orthodox, and Conchita is Catholic, so they cannot marry.

The captain sails for Russia to seek dispensation to marry her, but dies en route from the Siberian cold.

Conchita, refusing to believe him dead, waits 35 years and enters a convent, taking a vow of silence.

The cast of 80, directed by Mark Zakharov, includes shaggy-haired youths in shiny black jumpsuits, festooned with stars and open to the waist. They throttle electric guitars as laser lights pierce smoke clouds.

In Leningrad and Tashkent, people spent days in line for tickets.

"In Moscow, tickets were so hard to find that an underground printer began counterfeiting them," Zakharov said. "He was never discovered."

A Soviet Embassy official estimated that 250,000 people saw the 100 performances in the Soviet Union.

The conservative daily Le Figaro headlined its review "Broadwaiskaia," and compared the opera's composer Alexis Ribnikov to Leonard Bernstein.

"It is neither rock nor opera, but rather an excellent musical comedy made in the USSR, which is quite surprising," said the music critic for Le Figaro.

"The Paris debut is a dream come true," Elena Chanina, the 31-year-old blond actress playing Conchita, said. It was her first trip to the West.

"Paris is like a poem for me," she said. "I wish I had more words to describe it. People have given me presents — these shoes, for example," she added, pointing to a pair of $14 ballerina slippers.

"There is so much to see and feel. Just going shopping is overwhelming — I don't know how to choose between all the different fruit juices."

A spokesman for Cardin said negotiations are underway to take the troupe to New York and San Francisco, as well as England and Japan, next year.

"The Soviets haven't yet said no, and that's a very good sign," he said.

Artist left drawing for silver screen

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The lure of the silver screen kept movie director David Lynch from finishing art school. But he's never stopped drawing and the results are being shown publicly for the first time in years.

"I would still keep drawing and painting if no one ever saw it, but this adds to it," Lynch said in an interview at the production offices for "Dune," the megabucks version of Frank Herbert's science fiction classic he is directing here.

"I'm a film director, mainly, but I've got an awful lot of urges for these sideline things," he said.

The "sideline" of drawing caught the attention of a photographer on the "Dune" set. The photographer contacted a friend who owns the Galeria Uno in Mexico's Pacific Coast resort of Puerto Vallarta, and the result is a show of 50 drawings. Most are abstracts in watercolor, pen and ink or pencil.

The show is Lynch's first since his student days at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts in Philadelphia in 1966. Lynch said he also has been approached about showing the drawings in Mexico City before packing up in February to go to Los Angeles for the final work on "Dune."

Lynch, 37, also attended the Corcoran School of Art in Boston and the Boston Museum School but never finished. As he tells it, he started doing animation in art school without any previous knowledge of film and made several short animated films.

This led to a grant from the American Film Institute. He made a 16 mm movie called "The Grandmother" and was admitted to the Center for Advanced Film Studies in Los Angeles.

"This took me away," he said. "I loved art school; I wish I'd done better."

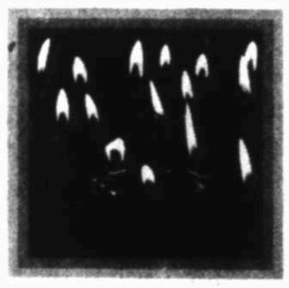

At film school he started work in 1972 on what became the midnight movie hit, "Eraserhead."

Lynch was nominated for Academy Awards for directing and screenwriting for his second movie, "The Elephant Man." Two years later, he was offered "Dune."

The tall Montana native is pale-skinned with light, wavy hair. Dressed in a black leather jacket, white shirt and tan slacks, he dismisses any suggestion that his success came quickly.

"It hasn't happened superfast, although I've been really lucky because the projects I've gotten are not the kind to come along all the time," the soft-spoken director said.

Lynch said he hadn't read "Dune" when approached by producer Dino de Laurentiis to make the movie, but he liked it enough to write the script as well as direct.

Holiday productions capture spirit

Christmas.

"Bah! Humbug!" says Scrooge. It won't come without the fanfare of presents, fandangles and a feast, claims the Grinch in Dr. Seuss' tale.

Both come to understand Christmas emanates from the heart.

For it is a time of giving and receiving love (agape), as it has been since the first Noel in Bethlehem. (The exact date of the birth of Jesus Christ is not known. Dec. 25 was set as the day to celebrate in A.D. 354 by Pope Liberius of Rome.)

Although today's commercialism at times colors this season's special message, some holiday presentations help lighten the shadows and, for Christians, reaffirm God's love.

Such was the case with The Episcopal Church of the Holy Trinity's first annual "Candlelight Carol Service," directed by the church's organist and choirmaster, Darryl Knapp.

The service, held Sunday past, included readings from the Bible; carols sung by the choirs — "Veni Emmanuel," "Now Tell Us, Gentle Mary," "O Little Town of Bethlehem" and "Birthday Carol;" those played by the handbell ringers — "O, Tannenbaum" and "Carol of the Bells;" and those by the choirs and congregation - "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing" and "The First Noel." Instrumentalists accompanying the singers were Troy Rodden, harp; Gloria Steelman, flute; and Trent Timberlake, guitar.

The red carpet and dark wood in the sanctuary at Holy Trinity lends itself to this type of candlelight service. From beginning to end, it was a memorable evening; one which included dessert, Wassail and an "around-the-table" carol sing.

Without a doubt, the highpoint of the evening was the performance of the Cherub Choir. The spontaneity with which they sang brought such joy to the audience, its members responded in kind. (It was the only applause given in a service in which none was expected.)

Among the Scriptures read during the candlelight service was one (Isaiah 9:6) familiar to admirers of German-born composer George Frederick Handel:

"For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Hearing these words brought back memories of being at Holy Trinity earlier in the season for Friends of Music's second annual "Messiah Sing-In."

Conducted by Knapp and Dr. Stanley Engebretson, director of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Chorale, the presentation sounded almost flawless.

Its success could be measured by the delight which kept registering on Engebretson's face. His countenance bore a succession of grins, each bigger than the last.

He had good reason to be so pleased. The production included soloists, singers from the Symphony Chorale and area choirs as well as players from the Midland-Odessa Symphony. And there had been no rehearsal.

Holy Trinity wasn't the only place Handel's "Hallelujah Chorus" could be heard this season. Saturday night, the Symphony Chorale gave its Christmas present to Midland by performing free at Midland Park Mall. From young to old, those who took time out from their shopping to hear, among other selections, "O Little Town of Bethlehem," "Silent Night" and Debra Patchell singing "O Holy Night," weren't disappointed.

Another favorite of the season is "The Nutcracker." This year's ballet, presented by Permian Civic Ballet, included a former Midlander, Cheryl Jones-Mitchell, in the role of the Sugar Plum Fairy. The principal male lead was danced by her husband, Gregory Mitchell. Of the two, Ms. Jones-Mitchell appeared to be by far the better dancer. Her Sugar Plum Fairy was gracefully performed.

Two factors this year perhaps combined to make this production the weakest PCB has done in the seasons I've been here (At no time during the Dec. 3 performance were the members of PCB together when they danced their ensemble routines).

The ballet is between artistic directors and Nancy Schaffenburg-Cross, co-director of The Schaffenburg-Cross School of Ballet, Dallas, who is filling in until a permanent director can be located. And the production was staged earlier than it has been in the past, allowing less time for rehearsal.

The performance had its charming moments. Principal dancer Michael Foutch has a strong stage presence. The Chinese routine he and PCB dancers Sully Hunt and Nancy Sumner performed was delightful.

For opera lovers, Gian Carlo Menotti's "Amahl and the Night Visitor" can be seen at 8 p.m. today in the Fellowship Hall at First Presbyterian Church.

This is the moving tale of the role three kings (played by Don McCartney, Jim Humphreys and Philip Taylor) and their page (Louis Kluck) play in the lives of an impoverished, crippled boy, Amahl (Jonathon Card) and his mother (Jane Clancy Debenport).

For those who've not seen "Amahl," it's a lovely tale and one loosely based on a miraculous experience of a boyhood friend of Menotti's.

Jonathan and Mrs. Debenport have strong, clear voices. And the dancing of Heather Olson and Maria Majors is captivating.

Completing the cast are the shepherds and their families that Amahl and his mother live among. Members of the Midland-Odessa Symphony and area musicians accompany the singers. The production is directed by Thomas R. Roberts, director of music at First Presbyterian Church.

This production's only dark note is the placement of the conductor and musicians. Since there is no orchestra pit, Roberts standing in the usual conductor spot in front of the stage means that for many in the audience the opera is viewed as though through a moving blindfold.

It seems appropriate that most of the musical presentations this season have been held in churches since music for Christmastime began with the musical prayers (litanies) of the Christian church. Still to come is this Sunday's 7 p.m. presentation — "An Old-Fashioned Christmas" — at Crestview Baptist Church. Set in the 1890s, the story is told through the eyes of a young girl.

Of course, part of the U.S. tradition at Christmas is reserved especially for children. Who would know that better than kids?

Friday and Saturday at 7 p.m. the Pickwick Players of Midland Community Theatre will present in Theatre Two, 2000 W. Wadley Ave., a collection of Christmas stories known collectively as "The Christmas Show." Reservations may be made by calling Theatre Midland's box office, 682-4111.

NBC taps five shows for mid-season changes

NEW YORK (AP) — NBC has gone to the creators of "The A-Team" and "Saturday Night Live" for two of the six new shows the network hopes will revive its failed 1983-84 prime-time schedule.

Third-rated NBC announced Wednesday it was canceling five shows, all of which had been in the bottom 15 of this season's prime-time programs. The expired series are "For Love and Honor," "Boone," "Manimal," "Mr. Smith" and "Bay City Blues."

NBC also announced that two other new shows, "The Rousters" and "Jennifer Slept Here," would be placed "on hiatus" and return in the spring.

Stephen J. Cannell, whose "A-Team" is NBC's only Top-10 hit, will offer "Riptide," Jan. 3. It's about two struggling detectives living on a yacht.

Lorne Michaels, who created the original "Saturday Night Live" in 1975, will assemble a new cast of sketch artists, including Buck Henry and Dave Thomas of "SCTV," for "The New Show," beginning Jan. 6.

"Legmen," another detective show, debuts Friday, Jan. 20. It's about two college students who assist a down-in-the-dumps private eye. Also in the action-adventure genre is "The Master," starting Jan. 20. It stars Lee Van Cleef as the only American proficient in an arcane Oriental martial art.

NBC will add another comedy-variety show, "TV's Bloopers, Commercials and Practical Jokes" on Monday, Jan. 9. This program combines all the formats that have been used as specials in the past. One week last May, ABC's "Life's Most Embarrassing Moments," finished first and NBC's "TV Censored Bloopers" was ninth.

NBC's only new comedy is "Night Court," starring magician-comedian Harry Anderson as an eccentric judge presiding over a Manhattan court. It debuts Wednesday, Jan. 4.

Through 11 weeks of the prime-time season, NBC has an average rating of 15.1 percent of the nation's TV homes. CBS leads with an 18.3 rating. ABC's average rating is 17.5.

Tennstedt conducts 'Fidelio'

NEW YORK (AP) — Klaus Tennstedt, considered by some to be Europe's "hottest" conductor, made his Metropolitan Opera debut Wednesday night in the season's first "Fidelio" — drawing everything from the music and eliciting an ending radiant with joy.

The orchestra played Beethoven's "Leonore Overture" more beautifully than we ever had heard them perform it. The enthusiastic audience applauded and bravoed so long at the end of the overture that Tennstedt had the orchestra stand twice.

Eva Marton, a native of Budapest, sang Leonore, who pretends to be a man, Fidelio. She also received much applause and cheers. In Act 1, her delivery was clear, strong and declamatory. She curses the tyrant who holds her husband a political prisoner and prays that she'll be strong enough to get him released. She has a job to do and proclaims it.

In Act 2, she allowed emotion to give her voice rich colors.

The other outstanding voice in the cast was Matti Salminen of Turku, Finland, as the jailer Rocco. His voice is deep and rich but also has an intrinsic "springtime" quality which makes it unusually attractive to listen to. Naturally, the two scenes with Fidelio and Rocco were especially effective in this performance.

Isaac predicts U.S. banks will struggle with 'tougher climate'

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's banking industry, suffering its highest failure rate in more than four decades, should find some relief next year from those financial troubles, a federal bank regulator says.

Still, regulator William Isaac predicts banks will have to struggle with a "tougher climate" than they had in previous decades because of widespread changes in the financial services industry and a less stable economy.

Isaac, head of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., predicted in an interview that approximately 50 banks would fail by the end of the year, which would be the most since the 60 of 1939.

There have been 47 failures so far this year, up from the 42 of last year and the 10 in each of the three previous years.

In addition, Isaac said, a record 631 banks are experiencing difficulties serious enough to land them on the fund's problem list, which requires close government monitoring. There were 369 on the list at the end of last year. The agency does not make public the names of its problem banks.

Isaac said the failed banks represent only a tiny proportion of the 14,800 banks that have deposits insured up to $100,000 by the corporation. No depositor has ever lost money in a bank or savings and loan association account that was backed by one of the federal insurance agencies.

"I don't like to see failures ... but I don't get unduly concerned about it because it's still by almost any measure a comparatively low failure rate," he said.

He also said that despite the higher cost to the FDIC of handling the failures, the assets of the insurance pool have surged from about $11 billion in 1981 to about $15 billion now.

Regulators had been expecting the number of troubled banks to grow even after the economy started recovering late last year from the lengthy recession. In the past, it has taken a year to 18 months for changes in the economy to be reflected in a decline — or an increase — in the number of banks on the problem list.

Indeed, Isaac said FDIC officials had predicted 1983 would be worse than it actually has been. He said the officials projected that 60 to 70 banks would fail this year and about 700 would be on the problem list.

With the economic upturn, Isaac said, "we should be getting near the peak of our problems for this economic cycle."

Still, he didn't expect to see the number of bank failures falling off sharply "anytime soon" and predicted the number might be only "somewhat lower" next year.

Isaac said banks will be facing a "tougher climate in which to operate" because of the more turbulent economic environment and the federal government's easing of some of its rules restricting the activities of banks and other financial institutions.

"If you give people more freedom, most people are going to make good decisions and are going to make money," he said. But without the government's protective rules, some managers "won't be able to handle that freedom" and their banks will wind up in trouble, he added.

Meanwhile, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board said 29 weak savings and loan associations have been merged with government assistance so far this year, off the record 47 of last year.

Bank board spokeswoman Martha Gravlee said an additional six S&Ls have been closed and their insured accounts transferred to other institutions. There was one such closing in 1982.

Nearly 90 savings and loans and savings banks have taken part in an aid program that Congress put into effect in 1982 for troubled thrifts. Under the paper-exchange program, thrifts receive promissory notes in return for certificates that bolster their net worth.

ICC temporarily sidetracks proposed merger of Southern Pacific, Santa Fe

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

The proposed merger of Southern Pacific Co. and Santa Fe Industries Inc., scheduled to have been completed Wednesday, hit a potentially troublesome snag as the Interstate Commerce Commission temporarily delayed the deal pending a review of jurisdictional questions.

The two companies — holding companies for the Southern Pacific Railroad and Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railway, respectively — were set to consummate the merger immediately after shareholders of both holding companies overwhelmingly approved the deal at separate meetings in New York Wednesday. About 97.7 percent of Santa Fe's shares approved the deal, while 93.5 percent approved at Southern Pacific.

However, the ICC's temporary cease-and-desist order, issued at the request of Union Pacific Corp. minutes before Santa Fe's meeting, could delay the combination at least for two weeks and possibly for months.

Santa Fe Chairman John J. Schmidt said that the longer the deal was delayed, the greater the chances were that it could eventually be derailed. "The potential of harm from this order is great," he said.

The ICC issued its order so that it could decide by Dec. 29 whether it had jurisdiction over mergers of railroad holding companies, spokesman Al Brown said. The ICC has definite jurisdiction over mergers of the railroads themselves. The expected approval of the railroad portion of the merger could take as long as 31 months.

But both San Francisco-based Southern Pacific and Chicago-based Santa Fe had hoped to merge their non-rail operations immediately, as long as they kept management of the Southern Pacific Railroad in an independent trust, separate from the Santa Fe railroad. This would be the first time that two holding companies have tried to merge while keeping their railroads separate pending ICC approval of the rail merger.

The merger of the railroads would create the nation's third-largest rail system, with 25,000 miles of track in 14 states stretching from California to Chicago and New Orleans. The companies, which had unsuccessfully tried to merge in 1980, said that the combination would allow them to better compete with the Union Pacific, which earlier this year merged with the Missouri Pacific and Western Pacific. Approval of the Southern Pacific-Santa Fe merger is expected in light of the ICC's approval of other major rail mergers in recent year.

Southern Pacific and Santa Fe contend that an immediate merger of their non-rail operations — which include extensive holdings of commercial and industrial property, timberland, pipelines and natural resources — would enhance efficiency and not affect the rail operations.

But in protests to the ICC, the Union Pacific, Missouri Pacific and Missouri-Kansas-Texas railroads contended that the merger of the holding companies should be reviewed on grounds that it could preempt ICC review of the railroad merger. They contended that although they were under separate management, both the Southern Pacific and Santa Fe railroads, in effect, would be managed with an eventual merger in mind.

"We're not necessarily opposed to the merger of the railroads if appropriately conditioned," Union Pacific spokesman Harvey Turner said. The Union Pacific has contended that the merged companies would neglect the Southern Pacific in favor of the Santa Fe, partly as protection in the unlikely case the merger was not approved and one of the railroads would have to be divested.

Coors orders alluring beer ads killed

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Serivce

DENVER — Conceding that some new Coors beer ads featuring bathing suit-clad women are "tasteless," Chairman William K. Coors of the nation's No. 6 brewer has ordered them killed.

"All I can tell you is my knowledge is that the whole series has been pulled — and if they haven't been pulled, I'm going to go down there and make sure they're pulled," Coors said Wednesday evening.

One of the ads shows the back of a woman wearing a revealing bathing suit. She is perched atop what appears to be a giant beer bottle, and a caption below proclaims "The best of the Rockies is yours."

A second ad, which was carried in Rolling Stone magazine, shows a similarly attired woman posed between two huge Coors beer bottle caps. It, too, advises, "The best of the Rockies is yours."

Neither ad shows an actual beer bottle or beer can — or any beer, for that matter.

Both ads are far from the Golden, Colo.-based brewer's traditional ads, which reflect a more conservative image — Rocky Mountain scenery or adventurous outdoorsmen, for example — of the company and its leaders.

The ad with the shapely model sitting on the large beer bottle was carried in the Colorado Daily, a campus-oriented independent newspaper published in Boulder, Colo., home of the University of Colorado.

Daily Publisher Timothy Lange ran the ad, but later wrote to William Coors to complain.

The ads, Lange said, are "depicting scantily clad women in provocative poses" and have drawn criticism that they "degrade women, that they focus readers' attention not on the product but on sex."

Lange also cited a high incidence of rape in the Boulder area and said there is concern that the ads "contribute to an attitude in our society that views women as pieces of meat."

Coors wrote back, telling Lange in part: "I can't agree with you more about the tastelessness and the impropriety of those ads." He also had assured Lange that the ads were "immmediately pulled and, of course, will never be seen again."

But as of late Wednesday afternoon, that message was not being reflected by the brewery's marketing personnel.

In fact, Mike Raymond, Coors brand director, and spokesman Whit Sibley pointed out that response to the Rolling Stone ad — which was offered as a full-color poster for anyone who cared to send in $2 — had been overwhelmingly positive. In only two days, more than 372 full-color posters of the young woman between the giant Coors bottle caps were ordered. One consumer, they said, had asked about buying 2,000 of the posters.

Letters in response to the ad depicting the woman atop the beer bottle ran 4-to-1 in favor of the ad, Raymond said. Of 42 letters received, Raymond said, 33 were positive.

But when asked about that one key letter that was not enthusiastic about the ads — the one from Chairman Coors to the Colorado Daily — marketing man Raymond replied, "My job is to try to do things that appeal to consumers, and I think the consumer response we got was overwhelmingly positive."

Raymond, who earlier characterized the Rolling Stone ad as an "arresting visual," said late Wednesday afternoon, "We do intend to run more ads using the same basic format" showing "physically fit people (including men) in surreal settings."

Then he added: "We do have to answer to management. Perhaps in the future we can do a good job of doing both."

Ford recalls many 1983-84 cars, trucks

DETROIT (AP) — Nearly 600,000 1983 and 1984 Ford cars and trucks are being recalled because of problems ranging from weak safety belt attachments to loose engine bolts, Ford Motor Co. says.

There have been no reports of accidents or injuries in any of the problems, Ford spokesman Mike Davis said Wednesday.

The largest recall, of 590,000 1984-model cars ad trucks, stems from a National Highway Traffic Safety Administration test showing vehicle shoulder-belt attachments above passengers and drivers do not meet federal load requirements, Ford said in a statement.

The recall affects 1984-model Ranger, Bronco II and Bronco light-duty trucks as well as most 1984-model cars except for four-door Tempo and Topaz cars and four-door and station wagon Escorts and Lynxes, the statement said. Some 1984 vehicles built early in the model year also are excluded.

"Even though the vehicles are being recalled, occupants should continue to wear their seat belts ... as the belts provide substantial protection in the event of an accident," John P. King, service engineeering manager of Ford Parts and Service Division, said in the statement.

Ford said 300,000 of the vehicles are at dealerships or en route to dealers. An additional 290,000 have been purchased by customers. Of that amount, some 37,000 are in Canada and 1,600 are overseas.

A second recall, of about 5,200 1984-model Ford Crown Victoria and Mercury Grand Marquis cars in the United States, stems from a faulty electronic engine control processor, the automaker said.

The processor may lack a gasket, which would allow moisture to get in the processor and affect engine performance, the statement said.

A third recall, of 1,658 1984-model Ranger trucks equipped with auxiliary fuel tanks, is due to the possibility that auxiliary fuel tank lines may have been damaged during installation, the statement said. Fuel could leak, creating the potential for a fire. Some 1,547 of the vehicles are in the United States and 111 are in Canada, the automaker said.

A fourth recall involves 192 1983-model Mercury Capri cars with 2.3-liter turbocharged engines. Ford said the cars' hoods may be too low, causing the throttle linkage to rub against the hood and not return to idle.

The last recall involves 39 1984-model F-250-350 series light-duty trucks equipped with 7.5-liter engines. Ford said incorrect front engine-mount bolts may have been used, which could result in engines detaching and a fuel-line fires.

MGF Oil announces settlement of drilling rig lease problem

MGF Oil Corp. announced Wednesday it and one of its wholly owned subsidiaries had settled a land-based rig lease in which the subsidiary was in default.

MGF Drilling-Midland had missed lease payments totaling about $243,000 and was also liable for about $1,209,000, the remaining lease amount which included the lease payments in arrears.

Under the terms of the settlement, MGF paid the lessor $110,000 cash, issued $460,000 in convertible notes for common stock, transfered the title of one drilling rig and allowed the lessor to take possession of another rig which was under lease. In return, MGF was released from its obligations under the lease agreement.

As a result of the settlement, MGF is no longer in default and is now current according to the terms of the contracts under whcih its 14½ percent debentures or bonds and 6 percent debentures were issued.

W. Phillip Marcum, MGF president, said although the action was small compared to other refinancing agreements, it was very important to the company's overall plan.

"This was an important piece of debt refinancing because it took us out of default on the 14.5 and 6 percent bonds. When you're in default it gives the bond holders the opportunity to accelerate and demand payments (interest). When you're out of default you're current.

"It was a small piece but yet it was a piece that if we hadn't gotten done, could have caused us some problems down the road,"Marcum added.

SPE international exhibition, 1986 meeting to be in Beijing

DALLAS — The Society of Petroleum Engineers has announced plans for both the International Petroleum Equipment and Technology Exhibition, as well as the International Meeting on Petroleum Engineering in Beijing, China, in March of 1986. The joint meeting and exhibition will be held in the 20,000 square meters of space in the Beijing Exhibition Center.

The International Petroleum Equipment and Technology Exhibition is being received by the China Council for the Promotion of International Trade. It will be the second multinational petroleum event to be staged in China. International petroleum product and service companies from the major oilfield manufacturing countries will display a broad scope of onshore and offshore equipment and services so vital to the development of China's resources.

In 1982, more than 300 companies participated in the exhibition, representing Canada, Denmark, France, West Germany, Italy, Japan Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, and the United Kingdom and United States.

The International Meeting on Petroleum Engineering will be jointly sponsored by SPE and the Petroleum Engineering Society of the Chinese Petroleum Society. It is expected to parallel the 1982 program featuring an 80-paper technical symposium with leading authors from China and other oil-producing countries covering the exploration, drilling, production and pipelining operations of the petroleum industry.

More than 150,000 delegates including senior oil ministry officials, oil industry managers, engineers and technical specialists from China's oil-producing regions attended the 1982 event.

SPE is a 53,000-member organization with operations worldwide, headquartered in Dallas. In addition to the Society's 59th Annual Technical Conference and Exhibition in Houston (Sept. 16-19, 1984), SPE manages the annual Offshore Technology Conference (OTC), the world's premier offshore event held in Houston. SPE also sponsors Offshore Europe in Aberdeen (Sept. 1985); the Middle East Oil Show in Bahrain (March 11-14, 1985); and the Offshore South East Asia Conference and Exhibition in Singapore (Feb. 21-24, 1984).

For further information contact SPE, 6200 North Central Expressway, Dallas, Texas 75206; telephone 214/361-6601.

U.S. automakers say sales higher; Report points to improved economy

By The Associated Press

U.S. automakers say early December sales of new cars rose a robust 21 percent from a year earlier, and a government report on business inventories points to further production and hiring gains.

The positive signs came as noted economist Henry Kaufman said Wednesday that interest rates and inflation are likely to climb in 1984, but will not slow economic expansion.

President Reagan, meanwhile, vowed there would not be a tax increase in 1984 and again chided Congress for not cutting government spending to reduce the massive federal budget deficit.

The six major U.S. automakers reported 173,062 cars shipped between Dec. 1-10 compared with 142,895 in the year-earlier period, when the economic recovery was just beginning.

The daily sales rate of 19,229 was the best for that period since 19,297 cars were sold each day in early December 1980.

Only Volkswagen of America Inc., which has lost sales because of the renewed popularity of large cars, showed a decline in early December this year — 28.7 percent.

General Motors Corp. said its early December sales rose 19.4 percent, Ford Motor Co.'s rose 29.3 percent, Chrysler Corp.'s gained 6 percent and American Motors Corp.'s climbed 23.5 percent.

So far this year, the automakers have sold 6,408,943 cars, up 17.6 percent from the 5,451,505 sold by this time last year.

The Commerce Department said inventories held by U.S. business rose 0.4 percent in October, as did sales.

Businesses cut back severely on their inventories as consumer demand for goods fell during the recession. October's gain, the fourth in a row, meant stocks were still 0.7 percent below year-ago levels, the report said.

The increase in sales was the seventh in the last eight months and put sales 13.4 percent above a year ago.

But economists said further production and hiring gains are in the offing because the inventory-to-sales ratio — measuring the number of months it would take to use inventories at the current sales pace — remained at 1.35 in October, equaling the record low set in June and hit again in September.

Robert Ortner, the department's chief economist, noted that though inventories have been growing in recent months, they have been growing slowly.

"That means inventory building is still mainly ahead of us," he said, "with very favorable implications for production and employment."

Kaufman, chief economist and vice chairman of the investment firm Salomon Brothers Inc., said there is "a fair chance" long-term interest rates, crucial for home mortgage borrowing and business expansion plans, could approach record levels in 1985 or 1986. He said the economy could slide then.

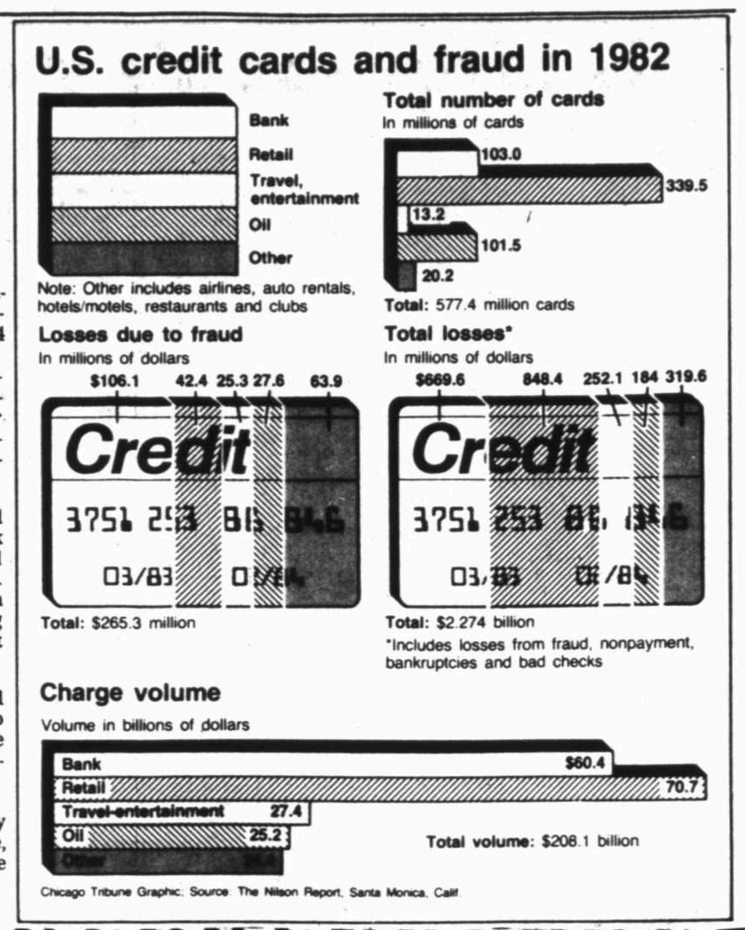

But Kaufman, who has a reputation for gloomy forecasts, told clients in his annual forecast that "1984 looks like a very good year."

He estimated economic growth — as measured by the inflation-adjusted gross national product, or total output of goods and services — would be 5.4 percent over 1984 compared with 3.4 percent this year.

Reagan, with some economists and members of Congress urging quick action to bring down the deficit, said he did not minimize the problem. But he said he was not shifting from his adamant opposition to using higher taxes to bring the budget closer to a balance.

The deficit, he said, stemmed from federal spending "taking too big a percentage from the private sector of the gross national product."

As for dealing with the deficit by increasing the government's income, Reagan said, "I can tell you there won't be any tax (increase) in 1984."

Aussie publisher pickin' on Warner

By The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

Australian publisher Rupert Murdoch disclosed Wednesday that he had increased his holdings in Warner Communications Inc. to 7 percent of the company's outstanding shares, spending $3.1 million to acquire 133,400 shares since Dec. 1.

In documents filed Wednesday with the Securities and Exchange Commission, a Murdoch-controlled company repeated its word two weeks ago that it did not have any current intention to seek to acquire control or to request a seat on Warner's board.

Warner's management, however, appears alarmed by Murdoch's accumulation of shares, which now totals 4.5 million.

Warner recently sought a meeting with Murdoch representatives to advise them that Murdoch's accumulation of stock "might adversely affect the company's relationships with certain of its creative personnel" as well as cast into doubt certain cable-TV franchises, according to the SEC filing.

Geoffrey Holmes, a Warner vice president, confirmed that Warner representatives sought a meeting on Dec. 9, and affirmed the accuracy of Murdoch's description of the session.

Holmes, in response to a question, identified a New York City cable-TV franchise as one that might be jeopardized by Murdoch's recent stock accumulation.

AT&T to dissolve Western

From Wire Reports

NEW YORK — In a move to streamline its organization as the Bell System breakup nears, American Telephone & Telegraph Co. said Wednesday that it would dissolve Western Electric Co., its manufacturing subsidiary, and integrate its business into a newly created unit to be known as AT&T Technologies Inc.

The step is the final restructuring move before the divestiture of AT&T's local phone companies on Jan. 1, and it is intended to help build a "new" AT&T, more responsive to the marketplace. AT&T also is realigning its operations into its seven major lines of business, a method used by many of its competitors to pull together research, product development and marketing into one focused effort.

Although several industry analysts applauded the move, others expressed skepticism that the reorganization will achieve its goal. Separate parts of the company such as Bell Laboratories and Western Electric, they say, have resisted past efforts to become more market-oriented.

As a result, AT&T has lost market share to competitors since the mid-1970s in important products such as PBXs and digital switches. Once the local Bell telephone companies are spun off and are free to buy products from competitors, these analysts predict, Western Electric's sales will shrink even further.

AT&T Technologies, to be headquartered in New Jersey, will be led by AT&T Vice Chairman James E. Olson, who also will continue to retain his corporate title. Donald E. Procknow, now president of Western Electric, will become the subsidiary's vice chairman and chief operating officer.

The new entity will be one of two major AT&T subsidiaries after Jan. 1, and will account for about $24 billion in revenue, $20 billion in assets and 250,000 employees. The other is AT&T Communications, which is made up principally of AT&T's long-distance operations.

Under AT&T Technologies' aegis are the telecommunications giant's most competitive businesses — network systems (the switching systems used by telephone companies and countries), consumer products, international operations and technology systems (components and electronic systems, computer and software systems and federal systems).

Bell Laboratories will be integrated into the subsidiary's operations as the research and product development arm of the various lines of business, but will retain its basic-research function as well, Olson said.

Finally, AT&T Information Systems, which develops products for business and industry, will report to the newly created subsidiary, although it must continue to operate at arm's length from the rest of the company under the Federal Communications Commission's Computer Inquiry II order.

Western Electric's sales have been falling since 1981, when they hit $13 billion. Edward M. Greenberg of Sanford C. Bernstein & Co., a New York investment firm, estimates that sales will be $11.7 billion this year. The company's problems have led to plans to close three plants, which eventually will affect about 14,000 employees.

Last year a hefty 80 percent of Western Electric's orders flowed from Bell System companies. But this year the soon-to-be-independent companies already have demonstrated considerable independence. They have awarded contracts to TIE Communications Inc. of Shelton, Conn., Nippon Electric of Japan, and Northern Telecom of Canada, among others, and some analysts expect that trend to accelerate.

Working their way to fitness

Employees of J.W. Humbard Co. Wednesday completed a strenuous 11-week physical fitness program. Their employer, who financed the program, said it resulted in decreased absences, increased production and improved morale.

Employees exercise on company time

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The young woman on the machine in the weight room was sweating.

As she struggled with the bar, a group of people around her shouted encouragement. When she pulled the bicep curler to her chest for the final time, J.W. Humbard, 57, smiled.

He stood in his sweats, a towel draped around his shoulders, and proudly watched his employees as they grinded away on the machines Wednesday, the culmination of an extensive physical fitness program that spanned 11 weeks.

It was rough, said some of the 36 J.W. Humbard Co. employees who participated in the program. But the results were worth it.

Humbard got increased production, decreased absences and improved morale from his staff, which varies in age from 19 to 58.

They were given two hours a week from work to put in at The Midlander. And 24 of them got the entire day off Wednesday to participate in the J.W. Humbard Olympics.

Some lost weight and others won cash prizes.

"So many of my older employees had blood pressure problems," said Humbard, owner of the geological, geophysical and petrophysical consulting company. "The rates in the hospital kept going up on us and the attendance record was going down. All those areas have improved."

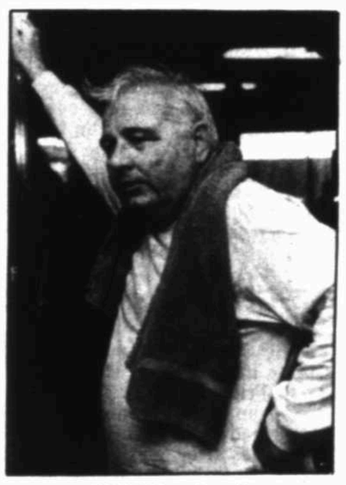

Humbard, who suffered from heart problems, said he realized how important physical fitness was, both physically and mentally. Many other companies also have begun providing fitness programs for employees.

"I think it's the way to go," Humbard said.

Those employees who elected to participate in the fitness program (all of them) were let off work at 4 p.m. twice a week. "Then they were supposed to put in an hour of their own time — but most ended up doing something every day," he said.

"They all say they enjoy one another at work more and they have fun laughing at each other and sweatin' it out over here. They look forward to coming here."

Consultations with The Midlander staff on percentage of body fat, exercise prescription, diet counseling and the particular weight goals of each employee were conducted, according to Vicki Bailey, director of women's fitness and aerobics.

J.W. Humbard

Points were accumulated at each visit, depending on the difficulty of tasks completed.

And Wednesday, Humbard and 24 of his employees garnered more points by participating in four of five fitness and fun events including situps while holding a ping-pong ball on a spoon in their mouths; Cheetah's Challenge, doing 12 correct repetitions on leg extension, bicep curl and pullover machines; swimming two lengths of the pool with a ball between their legs; an agility run through tires; and a one-mile run.

Cash prizes were given by Humbard to those with the most points and those who lost weight, stopped smoking or met other goals.

His employees can continue to work out at the health club on the company's membership — in anticipation of another program to be held in conjunction with the spring picnic, he said.

"We want to make it a continuous thing, an incentive," he said. "In my generation, we weren't into the health fad. But I think we need to think in terms of their (the younger employees') generation.

"And hopefully, we will have happier and healthier employees."

Odessa's Teen Court receives rave reviews

By LAWRENCE BUDD
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A jury of high school students sentence a young defendant to 10 hours of community service and jury duty for a traffic violation. Soon afterward, the violator is paying his debt to society by tending to animals at the Ector County Animal Shelter.

Since November, the Teen Court program has been offering juvenile offenders this unusual alternative to the usual consequences of a traffic offense or low-degree misdemeanor.

Only the judge is an adult in Teen Court. All other participants, from bailiffs to lawyers to jurors, are true peers of the young lawbreakers.

The brainchild of the Junior Service League and administered by Natalie Rothstein, this program is getting rave reviews from the agencies which put those sentenced to work.

Since beginning to accept referrals in early November and holding the first court session Nov. 15, 76 traffic cases have been referred to Teen Court and 44 cases have been heard.

Last week's court juggled seven jury panels to adjudicate 20 defendants in 27 cases.

While teens taking this legal route do avoid that first "black mark" on their records and any fine that could have resulted if they had chosen the traditional system, Ms. Rothstein suggests that the juveniles do in fact repay their debts to society.

Pointing out that traffic offenders are committing a crime against the community, Ms. Rothstein said, "They are paying back the community in court and service."

As part of most sentences, the defendant must join his peers in the jury box and stand judgment in future cases.

"There is a method to that madness. It gets them involved in the right side of the system," said Ms. Rothstein.

"In the Teen Court program, the youngster is held accountable," she said. Panels have assessed up to 15 hours community service and jury duty as a sentence for what would have likely resulted in little more than a fine through the other courts.

Defining the court atmosphere as "friendly but firm," Ms. Rothstein said "The kids are pretty tough on each other, but fair." Judge Ken G. Spencer, a retired district judge from Crane who presides over proceedings voluntarily, has yet to overrule the sentence decided on by the young jurors.

"When they come in as defendants, you see one kind of person," she said.

After serving jury duty, "There's such a difference in those kids, it's tremendous," said Ms. Rothstein, "They seem to stand taller and feel better about themselves."

While offenders make up part of the jury panels, the remaining positions are held by students at Odessa and Permian high schools who chose to take part in the proceedings. After attending an orientation session and proving to Spencer and Ms. Rothstein that they can fill the role they seek, these students get first-hand experience in legal proceedings.

Local United Way volunteers honored

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

United Way of Midland volunteers who labored to help the organization score its "remarkable achievement" of $1.8 million for 1984 and donors were recognized Wednesday in a luncheon in the Midland Hilton.

The funding was remarkable, said United Way's Executive Director Bob Cornelius, because it exceeded the $1.7 million goal when the economy was struggling to recover and businesses were striving to survive in the economic downturn which followed the boom.

"There were a lot of obstacles in this campaign," Cornelius said, "and they were overcome for a lot of reasons." Among those reasons was the motivation of "The Red Head," Dan Mendell, the 1983 campaign chairman, who, Cornelius said, assured him: '"Don't worry about it; we're going to make it.'"

Among those cited were 288 organizations and individuals who donated to the cause.

Twenty-one organizations and individuals who gave an average of $100 per capita were inducted into the newly-formed Century Circle. Seven organizations, which pledged $75 to $99.99 per capita, were given the Gold Award. The Silver Award was given to 39 campanies and organizations which gave $50 to $74.99 per capita. The Bronze Award was awarded to those who donated $25 to $49.99 per capita. And another 128 groups were given the Thanks-to-You Award for achieving "significant" increases.

Cornelius recognized volunteers, such as the 14 loaned executives whose role was to drum up interest in the campaign and in the services of the United Way agencies. He cited those who gave "character and life" to the campaign; the news media which publicized the campaign; the "marvelous Mary Whiteman," the United Way's communications director, and the speaker bureaus.

Planner discusses outdoor recreation with PBRPC

Staff Writer

The board of directors of Permian Basin Regional Planning Commission Wednesday heard Joel Seffel, rural planner with Texas Parks and Wildlife Department, discuss an update of the Texas Outdoor Recreation plan and took action on eight resolutions.

"One of our main jobs," said Seffel in regard to TPWD, "is to develop TORP." He added the department has divided the state into five regions, of which he handles the West Texas region, where he gains input from officials regarding the recreational needs of persons.

A major problem in West Texas he has been made aware of, Seffel said, is inadequate funding.

"The recession has put a strain on many local government budgets," he said.

A second problem, Seffel added, is vandalism to existing facilities and its threat to proposed facilities.

"Almost every city in Texas, regardless of size, has difficulty with vandalism," he said.

A third problem, Seffel noted, is lack of recreational water, water "necessary not only for water-related activities but for camping and picknicking, since people like to be around water."

Several causes lie behind the water problem, he said, including drought, pollution, drainage, development, scarcity and inadequate access.

Seffel noted that the state Legislature last spring passed several pieces of major legislation regarding recreation, including a bill continuing the Local Park Fund indefinitely. Established in 1979 for a four-year period, the fund has provided 100 percent grants to urban areas for development of state parks. Now, 20 percent of that fund is earmarked for grants in rural areas if federal funds are not available.

The Legislature, he said, also passed legislation which will allow counties to set and collect fees for county recreation facilities, services, sales or rentals.

He noted that a public hearing concerning the second draft of TORP will be held in Austin Jan. 3-5.

In other action, the board:

— Passed a resolution accepting the review and comment of the Regional Development Review Committee on the grant application from State Department of Highways and Public Transportation for proposed reconstruction of West Yukon Road and West County Road in Odessa.

The DHPT has proposed reconstruction of Yukon Road from U.S. 385 1.1 miles west to West County Road. It will involve the acquisition of additional right-of-way to allow for four lanes with a continual left turn lane and cost $452,000. Charles Webb noted that the road carries 3,200 vehicles daily.

West County Road, meanwhile, may be reconstructed from near 16th St. 1.3 miles north to the Kermit Highway. It would cost $913,000. Webb said that road carries 17,000 vehicles daily.

— Adopted a resolution, minus a request for $10,000 to purchase a van for Pecos Center use, on a grant application from Community Council of Reeves County to the United States Department of Health and Human Services for Head Start Programs.

The application originally was for $60,000 to be matched with $12,000 for renovation of Saragosa Center and funding of substitute teachers.

— Adopted a resolution that accepted the review and comment of Regional Development Review Committee on a grant application from City of Coahoma to Texas Department Community Affairs for a planning grant under Texas Community Devveopment Program.

Coahoma is requesting $22,000 to develop a water distribution system plan.

— Adopted a resolution accepting the review and comment of Regional Development Review Committee on the grant application from City of Iraan to Texas Department Community Affairs for a planning grant under Texas Community Development Program.

The grant is for $10,250 to fund a study of the feasibility and cost to improve and upgrade the city's existing wastewater collection system and wastewater treatment plant.

— Adopted a resolution accepting the review and comment of the Regional Development Review Committee on a grant application from City of Kermit to Texas Department of Community Affairs for a planning grant under Texas Community Development Program.

Kermit is requesting $25,000 to conduct a study of the city's wastewater collection and treatment system in an effort to determine and plan for future growth and needed improvements.

Things to ponder when there's nothing else to say

Dud.

This is one of those moments when there's nothing to say. Blank. Zilch. Poop. I don't have doodle-e-squat.

It's as if everything there is to say has been said, and there's no more.

The world must be coming to an end.

I sit here, in a slump, before this lagoon-green "terminal," which has already died a thousand times. I feel singularly weak but compulsive and queer (in the old sense, please, and no offense).

Strange. It's as if death faces death. There's no communications, no dialogue, no intelligence, no vital signs. Thud. All is languish and without reason.

I hit a key, and all this wired-up terminal does is mock me. It does nothing original. It's just there. It's a parrot but without the brightly-colored feathers and the constant yakking. It does hum. It has no need for an old newspaper; when it seeks relief, it just dies.

By way of saying nothing, I can say that this ol' terminal has keeled over in a drunken stupor o'er and o'er. It does a passable imitation of an old drunk. Just like a drunkard, when it "dies," it's down and out.

Give me an old junky typewriter any ol' time to churn out words and ideas. It mocks, too. But, by font, it'll take a pounding and a licking and survive. This computer terminal is fragile and insensitive, though. And, as you must know, it is fickle and subject to change.

I gaze as if mesmerized into this dark, forlorn, void screen before me. It must be a black hole. But I dare not enter, for I might not return to see what happens to this scurrying, scampering, world of men, women, beasts, machines and computers inanely traveling the same circuits to nowhere. Besides, I'm curious about this rambling piece with which I'm toiling in the stupor of an old fellow who grows weary from being 39 so often.

I think, maybe, I think. And this thought occurs: Try to write something meaningful and refreshing — if there are such things at certain hours of the night. Here's a few things to ponder:

—Relationships. Beware, lest they go kaputt and zap you.

—Memorable moments. Forget them. They'll return.

—Forgettable moments. I either wish I could forget them or wonder what they were.

—Memorable characters. They fade in and out like a mirage.

—Idle thoughts. There's an idea, if the devil doesn't plagiarize them.

—Travelogue. Write about what? The black hole, this bleak, mocking screen now before me?

No.

—Let's go to Europe and conjure up some romance. Failing that, let's meander over to Podunk and check out the scenery. How about staying put and going into reverie?

—Try rebelling. Writers like to write about idealistic rebels and disillusioned conformists. Get out of step with the conformists of the world. That would be something to write about. Attain financial success. Be proud and rich and seek nobility. Let your marks be posh offices, country club memberships, townhouses, dark limousines, Learjets, travel and pomp. After all that, then refuse to wear a pin-striped suit to the office and a tuxedo to a formal ball or to another uppercrust society event wherein propriety, pretense, and money are synonymous.

Failing that, I'll pick up a knapsack and hit the road, Jack.

Then, I'll sleep off the insanity and start afresh.

Good idea, huh?

"The teens are the authority and the establishment," she noted. More than 800 students signed up and about 125 have completed the orientation making them eligible to participate.

None of the participants can serve in Teen Court unless they have passing grades in school. "It's extra work. We don't want them missing out on what's really important."

The Teen Court is patterned after the system used in Grand Prairie. Any defendant between 10-16 years old can qualify. No Teen Court system has been developed in Midland.

A traffic violator can volunteer, while misdemeanor offenders are referred by the Juvenile Probation Office.

In traffic cases, the traditional punishment is a fine. Juveniles charged with misdemeanor theft, public intoxication or other low-level misdemeanors would likely not be prosecuted otherwise, but in the juvenile officer's opinion, would benefit from the Teen Court experience.

Should defendants feel the punishment is too severe, they can elect to reject the sentence and opt for the traditional channels.

The basic concept the program operates on is that juveniles are less likely to break the law again when they are sentenced by their peers. Data gathered from other programs across the country supports this concept.

While gaining a more complete understanding of the law, the youngsters also get a preview of potential careers in the legal system. The participants get the opportunity to serve as defense and state attorney, juror, bailiff or court reporter as the roles are interchanged.

"Many of the kids who have sent in letters (lobbying for their desired role) are interested in getting into law," said Ms. Rothstein. Community service sentences have resulted in the defendants continuing their work after their sentence has been served.

Ted Campbell, director of the Ector County Library, had one offender that volunteered after completing the sentence. Recalling no problems with the juveniles, Campbell said "They've been very good, most mannerly."

Past experiences in West Memphis, Ark., seeing juvenile offenders washing windows in jail uniforms have prompted Campbell to place the youngsters in areas where they can learn about libraries.

"I thought that (the kids washing windows in jail uniforms) was a bit much," he said.

Another agency that puts these youngsters to work is the Ector County Animal Shelter.

"It puts them in better touch with what the laws are concerning animals," said Coy Willis, director of the animal shelter, "The majority of them have enjoyed coming out here and working off their time."

Other organizations, including the Odessa Police Department, the Ector County Parks and Recreation Department and the Permian Basin Rehabilitation Center, also participate in the program.

Danny Vanderburg, director of juvenile probation, said he is taking a "wait and see attitude." "It probably has some value if it's done properly," he said.

But Ms. Rothstein is convinced her program is a good one and feels it would work with more serious juvenile crimes. "It is working in Denver," she said.

"I'm not saying we're ready for that," added Ms. Rothstein, suggesting that the program has succeeded in its present function at this early stage in its development.

United Way volunteers honored at luncheon

"You never get unless you ask," Cornelius said.

In considering the "economy and financial situations" of the year, United Way President Harrell Feldt attributed the campaign's success to the "the special city (which is) made up of special people...who made the goal in a very difficult year."

Similar to Cornelius, Feldt lauded Mendell as an "imaginative, creative, special person, and, besides all that, a good guy."

"The success of the United Way campaign," said Mendell, "depends entirely on the generosity of the companies, chief executives, employees, professionals and individuals who live and work in Midland. However, they wouldn't give if they weren't asked."

Mendell noted that more than 700 "well organized and dedicated people" mounted the campaign.

He recognized the campaign's solicitors, the section chairmen, the recruiters and the "campaign cabinet" — the leadership team — and the United Way's 1984 president, Paul Rea.

Mendell honored Joe O'Neill, the 1983 campaign vice chairman and the 1984 campaign chairman. "The vice chairman is the campaign's utility man," said Mendell. "At one time or another, he is liable to be called on to play every position on the team." He noted that O'Neill organized the loaned-executive program and pilot campaigns. "I couldn't have done it without him."

In introducing his four unit chairmen, Mendell likened them to "four Tom Landrys." Landry, coach of the Dallas Cowboys football team, is "the man on the field who makes it happen. I was lucky enough to have four Tom Landrys working with me this year."

He cited:

—Jane Wolf, chairman of the public and professional unit, which raised 108 percent of its goal and 22 percent more than last year. Midland's "most important resource (is) not oil but people," she said.

—Bob Southerland, chairman of the industry and commerce unit, which raised $417,000. That unit, which was close to $80,000 "in the hole," had to raise $80,000 new dollars just to break even. "Bob Southerland took on this tough assignment and got it done," Mendell said.

—Larry Turner, chairman of the oil and gas unit, which raised 105 percent of its goal and 13 percent more than last year. "The oil and gas industry is the backbone of Midland," said Mendell. "If our campaign was to succeed, the oil unit had to succeed."

—Larry Bell, chairman of the special support unit, which achieved 137 percent of its growth and 44 percent more than last year. The Belled unit "produced truly extraordinary results this year," said Mendell. The unit includes the more than 1,200 inpendent oil and gas operators in Midland, retirees, foundations and special gifts.

"This was truly a unique year...for our community," said Bell.

Attempted hijacker was supected before he boarded

HOUSTON (AP) — An ex-convict from Cuba who allegedly tried to hijack a Pan Am jetliner four months ago was suspected of being a "possible hijacker" before he boarded the plane, a prosecutor says.

Alfredo Ayala, 29, is charged with attempted air piracy and interfering with the duties of a flight attendant.

The federal court trial ended Wednesday after one day of testimony. Defense attorney Tom Berg called no witnesses and conceded that Ayala was involved in the incident.

But he told the jury, "There is doubt as to whether he formulated the wrongful intent to commit the very serious crime of air piracy."

Prosecutor Michael Brown said Ayala was targeted by Federal Aviation Administration profile as a "possible hijacker" when he bought a one-way ticket on Pan Am Flight 925.

The Cuban national, who has told authorities he served two years in Cuba prisons before immigrating here in 1980, appeared subdued as his jury trial began Wednesday.

Ayala speaks no English and listened to testimony with the help a Spanish-speaking interpreter.

Edward O'Meara, a Pan Am financial controller, testified that Ayala's boarding pass bore the letter "P" — meaning he fit the FAA profile of a hijacker.

Attempted murder charge filed

ODESSA — Gerald Leon Hardin, one of the suspects arrested in the Dec. 9 drug bust in which two law enforcement officers were wounded, has been charged with attempted capital murder for his part in the shooting.

Charges were filed in Municipal Judge Otis Moore's court Tuesday and the warrant was served on Hardin in the Ector County Jail Wednesday morning. Hardin and Janna Denise Matheny, 23, have already been charged with possession of cocaine with bail set at $100,000. Bail has not been set on the new charge.

Hardin, 23, lived with Ms. Matheny and her husband, Michael Grant Matheny, in Odessa. Matheny was killed in an exchange with police, sheriff's deputies and Department of Public Safety officers at the La Quinta Inn at 5001 E. Highway 80 at 3 p.m. Friday.

Hardin was apprehended after a high-speed chase several miles from the motel after escaping from the scene. Before his escape, reports indicate he exchanged fire with an undercover DPS officer.

Ms. Matheny was apprehended at the motel. Her husband was killed and two officers, Phil Harrold, 25, of the Odessa Police, and Gerald "Jim" Dixson, 23, of the sheriff's department, were wounded. Both officers have since been treated and released.

The Ector County grand jury is expected to review the charges Thursday and consider indictments on Ms. Matheny and Hardin.

Five men charged with possession

ODESSA — Five men were arrested in an Odessa motel Tuesday afternoon after an anonymous tip to Odessa Crime Stoppers led Department of Public Safety officers to the suspects. They were charged with possession of 13 pounds of marijuana and small amounts of other narcotics.

Crime stoppers received the tip Monday about the location of the marijuana and the information was passed on to the DPS' Midland office. A joint investigation by the DPS, the Odessa police and Texas Alcoholic Beverage Commission officers led to the arrests.

Arrested for possession of the marijuana valued at $6,000-$7,000 were Michael Richard Aldrete, 28, of Odessa; Manuel Guadalupe Molina, 18, and Luis A. Molina, 26, both of Sunland Park, N.M.; and Armando Lujan, 22, and Tommy Sanchez Ramirez, 23, of Anthony, N.M. Officers said small quantities of ionamin and percodan were also found at the scene.

Bond was set at $1,500 each by Municipal Judge Jay Dwell.

Police waiting for autopsy report on couple

Police are awaiting an autopsy report to determine what killed a northside couple whose bodies were found in their home late Tuesday morning.

The couple was identified today as 34-year-old David L. Rankin and 30-year-old Lurie Rankin of 205 Club Drive.

Police said there was no sign of forced entry and that the house was locked when they arrived in response to a request that they check on the couple's welfare. It is believed the couple died sometime over the weekend.

Services for Lurie Rankin are pending at the Cason-Monk Funeral Home in Nacogdoches. There will be no public services for David Rankin.

Both families request that memorials be directed to the Christian Science Reading Room. It is not known when the autopsy report will be completed.

Donors give UT million-dollar reason to celebrate

AUSTIN (AP) — The University of Texas at Austin is celebrating its 100th birthday with a checkbook example of how to acquire the best and brightest faculty.

With the approval of the Legislature, UT-Austin has matched dollar-for-dollar about $42 million in private birthday gifts since Sept. 1, 1980. The matching monies come from what is called the Available University Fund, the millions of dollars in interest earned on the Permanent University Fund — about $2 billion in oil and gas revenues.

This means almost $85 million has been set aside for endowed faculty positions in three years. An additional $10 million has been made available for faculty funds in 1983-84, and the program for accepting pledges — for matching — has been extended to Aug. 31, 1985.

"When I talk to people in the Northeast, they're very worried about getting support from their legislatures just to continue to function," said Shirley Bird Perry of the university's development office. "Not only are we getting the support, we're also very fortunate in that we're in a state in which a lot of people continue to have money to give for private purposes."

Three years ago, UT-Austin had 110 endowed faculty positions. Now, 606 of the school's 2,000-member faculty hold endowed jobs — those whose salaries are supplemented with gifts.

Ms. Perry recalled in an interview that university president Peter Flawn had hoped three years ago to double the school's 110 endowed faculty positions, "and I viewed that as a fairly stiff, tough goal."

UT-Austin surpassed that goal by the end of December 1981, and Ms. Perry said that in this centennial year of 1983, "you have had a lot of activities, and you have more people who are really just simply more prone to give."

Any endowment created before Dec. 31 carries the popular centennial designation, and Ms. Perry said giving money to the university has become "kind of an 'in' thing to do."

Here's what private money, matched by the university, supports:

$500,000, endowed chair;
$100,000, endowed professorship;
$50,000, teaching fellowship;
$50,000, visiting professorship; and
$20,000, endowed lectureship.

UT-Austin has 78 endowed chairs, 333 professorships and 195 other endowed faculty positions.

The money figures are minimum amounts, and some gifts, such as those honoring the late chairman of the university Board of Regents, Austin lawyer Frank Erwin Jr., surpassed $1 million. Erwin chairs were established in government and state government, in addition to the creation of seven Erwin professorships.

Donations come from various sources, and in all sizes.

A telephone call from former Texas Longhorn football star Walter Fondren of Houston informed Ms. Perry of a $1 million contribution from the Fondren Foundation. A young lawyer on campus for a reunion of former student leaders pledged $20,000.

An anonymous donor gave $1 million for a chair in computer science, which, according to Ms. Perry, was a factor in Austin's persuading Microelectronics Computer and Technology Corp. (MCC) to locate here.

She said UT-Austin matched the $1 million donation, and the donor said, "I think when you have two stars like this that you need some other stars in your galaxy. I think we ought to fund four $250,000 professorships."

"The university said we will do everything we can to raise the four $250,000 professorships," said Ms. Perry. "Then when the MCC project came along, we also decided to extend to 10 the number of $100,000 professorships in computer science.

Americans moving to farms, study shows

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — The urban migration has ended. Now, Americans are moving out of the cities and back to the farms and small towns, a Texas A&M study concludes.

As a result, rural America is being reshaped rapidly, said Dr. William Kuvlesky, a sociology professor who has studied rural lifestyles extensively.

"It is time we took a new, fresh look at rural America and what it is becoming," he said in a report released by Texas A&M.

He said statistics show that, between 1970 and 1978, almost three million more people moved out of metropolitan areas than moved in and three-fourths of all non-metropolitan counties in the United States gained population.

"This complex transformation of truly great historical significance is taking place with little public notice and unbelievable lack of concern," Kuvlesky said of research done for the National Institute for Work and Learning.

The growth in rural or non-metropolitan areas, especially those near large cities, is greatly changing the nature of many communities with an increasing number of them and their residents feeling the pressures and influences of metropolitan life, he said.

Racquetball lessons to be offered

Parks and Recreation Department will be sponsoring racquetball lessons at the Courthouse and Spa of Midland, 1012 Andrews Highway, during the Christmas break from school.

Nancy Steorts, chairwoman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, displays some toys the commission considers unsafe.

Warning given on cordless phone, toy dangers

NEW YORK (AP) — Cordless telephones, one of the most popular electronic gadgets on store shelves this season, can cause serious hearing damage to careless users, the government's top product safety regulator says.

Nancy Harvey Steorts, chairwoman of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, issued what she called a "consumer alert" as she stopped in New York on a nationwide tour to promote safer toys.

She also praised toymakers for what she called their dedication to safety, while cautioning parents that they bear the chief burden of making certain that toys are safe for the children who use them.

The commission has received numerous complaints and about 20 reports of hearing damage blamed on cordless telephones, Mrs. Steorts said. About 3 million are expected to be sold this year, and all except those of one maker — whom she would not name — ring by making a loud noise through the earpiece.

When a user is holding the phone to his head and is not expecting the loud ring, hearing loss can result, she said.

A user who answers the phone must be careful before placing the phone to his ear to move a switch from "ring" to "talk" to cut off the loud noise, she said.

Mrs. Steorts praised members of the Electronics Industries Association, a trade group, for agreeing to put warning stickers on the phones.

"If the information campaign doesn't work, we'll have to look at some change in the product itself," she said.

In the case of both the telephone and toy industries, Mrs. Steorts said she strongly prefers to seek voluntary action by manufacturers rather than have the commission impose new regulations.

"The toy industry really cares," she said as she stood amid a roomful of products chosen to illustrate various hazards. "The toy industry has worked very closely with us to create a safer marketplace."

Toys were involved in over 123,000 injuries that required hospital emergency room treatment in the 12 months ending in September 1982, she said, compared with 146,000 a year earlier. The agency reported 17 toy-related deaths in 1982, compared with about 35 in 1981.

Mrs. Steorts said that despite a decade of regulation, the nature of the toy industry "puts the burden on the parents." A toy that is appropriate for an 8-year-old, like a gun that shoots suction-cup darts, could kill a 3-year-old if used improperly, she said.

Holly's holiday history long

Copley News Service

Decking the halls with boughs of holly is a long-standing tradition at this season and there is an entire industry devoted to delivering this fetching greenery directly to the consumer and to retail outlets across the country. Few of us are fortunate enough to have a holly tree standing in our own backyard, ready to deliver its berried splendor to brighten the festive season.

Holly is an evergreen in mild winter areas of the continent and has been used for decorating during dark midwinter days since pagan times. The druids protected it carefully, believing holly would protect them if they sheltered the spirits they thought dwelt in its prickly branches.

In their turn, the Romans dedicated the holly tree to Saturn. His feast, the Saturnalia, was celebrated from Dec. 19 to Dec. 26. amd the temples were adorned with the berried branches of holly during this time. The time for celebrating Christ's birth was chosen to coincide with this feast as a means of Christianizing the pagan feast.

While the early Christians frowned on the holly's pagan connections, it seems they wished to continue its use as a decoration at a time of year when flowers were scarce and other evergreens often difficult to obtain. Thus many legends arose around the holly to link it with the Christmas story.

One of these legends told of Mary laying the baby Jesus under a holly bush while Herod's soldiers pursued the holy family fleeing to Egypt. The holly, previously leafless in winter, immediately put out thick dark green leaves armed with sharp dagger-like points to hide and protect the infant.

Another legend told that the crown of thorns had been made from prickly holly branches, its scarlet berries being the drops of blood that fell from the Savior's brow. And so the holly was given many new names — holy tree, holy thorn, Christ's thorn and holy bush. Eventually, in this way holly became a legitimate Christian tradition.

If your family becomes the fortunate recipient of a box of holly, you'll find numerous ways of putting it to use as a festive decoration. Holly may be used as part of a dining table centerpiece, or placed like evergreen boughs behind pictures or on tops of bookshelves.

We're all familiar with the meaning of a sprig of mistletoe but tradition also has it that if holly is hung on the center of the front door or in some place of honor indoors, no quarrels or angry words will be heard there throughout the year.

If you have access to a tall, pyramid-shaped branch of berried holly, it may be used as a novel substitute for a Christmas tree, perhaps for a child's room. Securely planted in a suitable container, preferably in damp, clean sand, the holly tree can either just display its scarlet and green beauty or be lit with tiny fairy lights or miniature candles.

Another old tradition, popular in Victorian times, is to stick sprigs of holly into large potatoes. A firm, round potato can have a slice removed to provide a flat bottom in which it will sit steadily. Then the potato is pierced all over with short, berried twigs, for an attractive centerpiece. One or two small, festive-looking candles may also be inserted.

Such candlesticks have traditionally been placed by uncurtained windows during the twilight time of the Christmas season, their golden flames being symbols of the Light of the World.

This ritual originated in the early Christian church, where lighted tapers were referred to as Candles of Kindness.

AIDS rise tapers off

DALLAS (AP) — Treatment for AIDS is improving and the rise in new cases in New York City is tapering off, but a cure for the deadly immune system disorder may be years away, federal health officials say.

"We are dealing with a problem that will continue to plague us for the coming decade," Dr. William Foege, director of the national Centers for Disease Control, told a convention of the American Public Health Association.

Still, he said high priority given the disorder that has caused 1,102 deaths in 2,678 diagnosed cases has raised hope of a "rapid breakthrough" in treating or controlling acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

A possible plateau in the number of new AIDS cases in New York indicates that homosexual and bisexual men may be protecting themselves from its transmission through sexual contact, said another CDC official, Dr. Anne Hardy.

Ms. Hardy, a member of CDC's task force on AIDS, said most of the identified AIDS cases have been around New York City, San Francisco and Los Angeles. New York has been notified of 45 new AIDS cases each month for the past three months, compared with 65 monthly in the previous 18 months, Health Commissioner David Axelrod said.

"There are preliminary indications in New York City that the rate of increase is starting to decrease," Ms. Hardy said. AIDS may have saturated the susceptible population there, she said.

The disorder causes a breakdown in the body's immune system, making victims unusually susceptible to diseases.

Preventing deaths suicidology aim

Hearst Feature Service

On Feb. 19, 1977, Mitch Bolton, 20, shot himself in the bedroom of his Atlanta home. He left nothing to chance, using two revolvers to do the deed. His family never knew what had happened to trigger such drastic action.

"I believe he saw death as a release from failure, loneliness and hopelessness," Iris Bolton, Mitch's mother, says. "Apparenty, he felt he had failed to reach the goals of perfection he set up for himself."

The afternoon of Mitch's death, a psychotherapist visited the Bolton home and, according to Bolton, gave these words of advisement: "There is a gift in his death if you can find it. It won't jump out at you but if you look for it, you will find it."

HER SON'S DEATH is still painful for Bolton, but she has learned to go on and has found a new purpose in her life. She attended Emory University and received a degree in one of the newest sociological-psychological specialties — suicidology.

According to statistics, nearly 50,000 people kill themselves in the United States annually. Suicide is listed as one of the top three causes of death in young adults, ages 15 to 24, and is listed as the ninth leading cause of death overall.

Research points out that most people who contemplate suicide do not really want to die. Eight of 10 people who completed their suicide attempt gave warning signs that, if acted upon, could have saved their lives.

"If we are trained," says Bolton, "we can recognize the signals that someone is hapless, helpless and hopeless."

BOLTON USES THE "Three Hs" to describe the feelings experienced by those who seriously consider taking their lives: hapless being the self-destructive tendencies that are reinforced as one thing after another seems to go awry, helpless in that the individual feels powerless to do anything about the situation, and hopeless as the will to live diminishes.

"Usually, the victims show some symptoms," said Bolton. "Often teenagers look for someone they can let know they are hurting. Just someone knowing is such a relief."

THERE ARE seven recognized warning signs of suicide: threats, statements of a desire to die, previous attempts, sudden changes in behavior, depression, making final arrangements (such as writing a will), and a tendency toward isolation from friends and family. Once the signs are recognized, Bolton says there is a lot that can be done to alter the course of events.

"Young people don't have the experience that tells them things do get better," she explains, "but by having someone recognize they are hurting, an enormous weight has been lifted from their shoulders. There are things you can do, point out that things change, show concern for their well-being and make them see that someone has noticed. Build a relationship with the person. If there is one thing that can save a life, it's a relationship with another person."

WHERE THERE IS no one to reach out and help, there are organizations waiting to give people considering suicide a place to go and talk and feel comfortable and reassured.

Suiciders Anonymous began in 1978 in California. "Our principals are the same as Alcoholics Anonymous and Alanon," says Bud Hinke, who founded the group's Baltimore chapter in 1980. "The program isn't an end-all, cure-all; it doesn't work for everyone."

Religion is not a part of the program, but spiritual gowth is, according to Hinke. The hope is to provide the person thinking of taking his life a purpose for living and help him develop self-worth and self-love.

THERE ARE "12 steps" or tenents of SA. Boiled down, they simply mean admitting to the hopelessness and helplessness that is being felt, looking inside one's self to discover why those feelings exist, adjusting the perception of life and living in relation to personal relationships, learning to depend and believe in some Higher Power, and ultimately, working with others and sharing experiences. No dues are charged.

"There is so much pain out there," says Hinke. 'We have to learn that it's OK to fail. That failure is not final and overcoming the obstacles is also success."

But when all the effort fails and tragedy happens, it is the family that must cope, that must learn to accept and deal with what has happened. For those left behind, there are often many feelings to be dealt with in order to avoid what is termed the "snow-balling" effect — a close friend or family member may take his own life in response to the first suicide.

COMPASSIONATE FRIENDS is the oldest mutual-help organization aimed at reaching those touched by death. Established in England in the late 1960s, chapters began forming in the United States in the early '70s.

The goal of Compassionate Friends is to aid parents suffering the loss of a child, whether to suicide, disease or accident. Participants have in common only that a child has died before them.

Marilyn Mossman, a spokewoman and organizer for Compassionate Friends, says, "What makes it so difficult is you somehow feel responsible. Each type of loss is different. When you lose a parent, you lose your past; when you lose your spouse, you lose your present. But when you lose a child, you've lost your future."

"Death is not something our society deals with in terms of reality," says Bill Ermatinger, national vice president of Compassionate Friends. "The survivors feel so alone and helpless. The pain is intense and long-lasting; the average bereavement period is two years. What we provide — talking with others that have been there — is not therapy, but it is therapeutic."

Doctors link chemical to suicides

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — A chemical found in the spinal column may help doctors identify potentially suicidal patients.

Researchers at Karolinska Hospital say a chemical called 5HIAA is very low in patients suffering from severe depression, and that patients with low 5HIAA levels are twice as likely to attempt or commit suicide.

Suicide warning signs listed

Hearst Feature Service

Researchers have come up with the following signs that show someone is contemplating taking his or her life.

Not everyone will demonstrate all of these signs, but almost all — 85 percent — will exhibit at least one, according to studies.

Recognition can be important; it may save someone's life.

These suicide warning signs include:

1) Suicide threats — If they seem sincere and the potential victim knows how to do it, the threat is real.

2) Statements revealing a desire to die — "Things would be so much better without me."

3) Previous suicide attempts.

4) Sudden changes in behavior — If the person was quiet and is now extroverted or if he was outgoing and has suddenly become a loner, be concerned.

5) Depression — Watch for crying, sleeplessness, loss of appetite or over-eating, a feeling of helplessness.

6) Final arrangements — If the person makes a will or says a final "goodbye" to friends or family, suicide is a real possibility.

7) Tendency toward isolation — Such isolation can be from everyone, close friends, family, even a favorite pet.

Computer dating aids social life of handicapped

COOPERSBURG, Pa. (AP) — How does a person meet others if because of a limp or partial blindness he can't spend Friday nights on the dance floor or Saturdays playing volleyball at the YMCA?

What does a person do if he's too shy to ask someone to the movies or dinner because of a physical deformity or plastic surgery or a speech impediment?

Having a handicap can often be a barrier to romance or an active social life. But now there is Dr. Don Gibbons, a psychology professor at Allentown College of St. Francis de Sales in Center Valley.

Gibbons has set himself up as an unlikely Cupid who with his computer will play matchmaker for any and all handicapped people.With the help of Patricia Reinhard of Coopersburg, a computer science major at the college, Gibbons recently started a computerized dating service especially for handicapped people.

Called Handicapped Introductions (HI), his dating service may be the only one of its kind available to the more than 21.8 million handicapped or disabled people in the United States.

"I can't swear no one ever thought of this before, but I have been investigating for months and I haven't found anything like it," he said.

Gibbons said the idea for HI "just gradually jelled" when, after talking with some of his handicapped students, he realized they had few outlets for meeting people.

"Before us, the only 'dating' services the handicapped had were correspondence clubs," Gibbons said.

Handicapped Introductions works much like the computerized dating services available to those without handicaps. Gibbons even modeled the questionnaire he sends his clients after those used by nationally known dating services.

"I refined what they were using to fit our needs," he said.

The HI applicants must first fill out the four-page questionnaire, providing information about their likes and dislikes, their personality and physical traits and their family and ethnic backgrounds.

And applicants are also asked to describe their handicap, and encouraged to include a picture. Gibbons and Ms. Reinhard then feed the information from the questionnaires into their computer. From the initial screening, they come up with a list of potential matches in terms of interest, values and background.

Every client is issued a code number to enable him or her to correspond with potential partners. All correspondence is done initially through Gibbons' office. Clients' names are only revealed to each other "when they feel comfortable doing so," Gibbons said.

Women's movement symbolized by Grail

LOVELAND, Ohio (AP) — From the Victorian porch, rolling fields and huge old trees of a rural farm, a movement called Grail searches for truth and justice symbolized by the Holy Grail of Arthurian legend.

The Grail, a women's movement, carries that search from organic gardens and whole grain breads to the latest psychosynthesis, guided imagery and other psychological techniques of self-discovery.

"It all sounds very ethereal, cosmic or something, but it's not," said Peg Moertl, public relations director for Grailville, the group's largest American center, in Loveland.

Local children whisper that Grailville is a secret religious order, and women who live and work at the center surmise that other myths may be many. Even participants find it easier to say what the movement isn't than what it is.

The Grail has no dues-paying members. It is not a religious order, a lifestyle or a political organization, though it was at one time based in the Catholic church. Many of its programs revolve around feminism, nuclear disarmament, anti-militarism and similar issues.

"Part of it might be that, in other organizations, to be a part of an organization you all have to believe in the same things. In the Grail that may not be the case," Ms. Moertl said.

"We've probably always stood for an alternative life," said Joyce Deitrick, one of nine Grail participants at the center.

People who visit Grailville or smaller Grail centers in New York and New Mexico are "outsiders" unless they make a firm commitment to becoming a "participant." They then spend up to two years meeting with women in the movement to discuss their feelings and goals before they are invited to call themselves participants.

Ms. Deitrick joined the Grail in 1966 after she graduated from college as a religious studies major and found that the Grail's three tenets — spiritual growth, development of women's creative potential, and social justice — fit her own beliefs.

"I liked their vision of what women could contribute — I guess I always suspected that, but nobody had ever said it," she said. "There was a whole climate then that urged me to plug into that kind of thing."

For Ms. Deitrick, plugging in means leading programs to bring out visitors' inner spirituality with psychosynthesis, a method of using writing, drawing and imagination to bring out underlying religious experiences that she believes are repressed in the American culture.

About 800 people come to Grailville's 360-acre farm each year for such programs, and as the center approaches its 40th year, it is trying to tailor its teaching to women's more hectic lifestyles.

Study or meditation courses on "The Challenge of Peace," "Time and Seasons in Our Lives," "Life Context" and "Women in the Nuclear Age" that might have lasted a month or even a year in the past are now split into week, weekend or evening sessions, as the group tries to carry itself into the community.

Not that the movement is likely to start a membership drive.

The non-profit Grail has seldom counted more than 1,000 participants since it was launched by five Dutch women and a priest in the 1920s. It became independent from the Catholic church in the mid-1970s and now runs centers like Grailville, hospitals, schools and leadership training programs for women in 20 countries.

Grail women live throughout the United States, but many are clustered in greater Cincinnati and a dozen other American cities. They span all ages and have "every diversity of life choice," Ms. Moertl said. At Grailville, some married participants live nearby and some single women work at the center in return for room, board and a "subsistence wage."

Grail participants and their families "come home" to Grailville at Christmas and Easter feast days. The movement is rooted in Christianity although it has members of other faiths, said April McConeghey, a participant who lives at Grailville.

Tennis racquets come long way

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — The first tennis racquet took recognizable form in the 14th century and used parchment or scrap paper stretched over a crude wooden frame. Now, some tennis racquets are being made with boron, a material used in the Space Shuttle for its maximum strength and minimum weight.

Hazing creates problems

Hearst Feature Service

The new plumber is sent looking for a "pipe stretcher," while the novice printer looks for a "type stretcher" and the new cook goes after a "bacon stretcher."

The first day on the job, the new policeman is sent to an address which turns out to be a vacant lot. A new hospital orderly is asked to fetch the "Fallopian tube," and the new painter the "striped paint."

This is hazing, an old rite of passage that has become a new problem for women and minorities entering new job areas.

Natasha Josefowitz believes hazing has its good and bad sides. Josefowitz, a San Diego State University professor of management, is the author of "Paths to Power."

Josefowitz's interest was piqued several years ago by a new woman garbage collector who, just as she was dumping her first garbage can into the truck, was thrown off-base by the driver pulling the truck ahead a few feet. It happened twice. The woman cried and complained to her supervisor about discrimination.

"I talked to the people involved, and found they did this to the new men, too," Josefowitz says. "It wasn't discrimination, it was hazing. It's a testing process, to see if she's a good guy. If she laughs and goes along, she becomes a member of the group. If she complains to her boss, she's excluded because she's disloyal."

Josefowitz, who has studied 500 cases of hazing, believes the problem is that "hazing is a male experience." While men, from boyhood on, have been "tested" before admission to various groups, it's a new experience for many women.

The professor hastens to add that there's a thin line between hazing and discrimination.

"The difference is intent. Is it done to all new employees, or just to women and minorities? Does the hazing stop for all employees at the same point?"

She believes managers should be aware of hazing practices among their subordinates because of the possibility of discrimination and waste of productivity. The company loses, she notes, if the new employee becomes so discouraged that he or she quits, causing loss of valuable training time.

But moderate hazing, Josefowitz believes, has value by melding employees into a cohesive, productive unit. Her advice to new employees:

— "You may be excluded; not invited out to lunch, not told that everyone wears jeans on Fridays. They'll do it on purpose. Remember, new employees usually get the grunt work. Don't talk about your past experiences, your former job and how well you did.

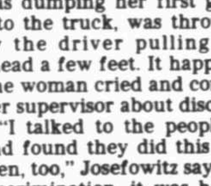

— "Don't initiate. Wait to be asked. Laugh at jokes. Try to render services to others. Try to cultivate one friend, if you can, to find out if they do these things to everyone or just to you."

Woman aviator flies over half century

Copley News Service

Two decades after the Wright Brothers achieved flight at Kitty Hawk, N.C., a teenager named Polly Potter soloed a biplane above an Oregon beach. Half a century later, she says she knew from that moment that airplanes would define her life.

She's 72 now — a grounded aviatrix looking back over the thrills: a drive into the countryside with Amelia Earhart, short aerial hops with Errol Flynn, ferrying bombers and fighters for the Royal Air Force — all before she turned 35.

You can find Polly Potter Ross behind an ivy-covered fence in suburban San Diego, living with a cocker spaniel and a desert tortoise named Gertrude. She has had recent cataract surgery with painful complications. In her convalescence, she wore scuffs and a terry cloth muumuu over her generous body.

THE HEALING EYE required drops regularly, so she set an alarm clock to remind her on the hour. From her easychair, with her feet propped up, she let her memories float from era to era. By the alarm's fourth call, she had moved up to World War II. Twenty thousand hours in the sky, she said later, with a little giggle, are hard to pack into a single stretch.

She is a engaging storyteller. She gets rolling on a 50-year-old anecdote and her voice speeds up and goes high and crackled. She is not one to overanalyze events; she's happiest remembering the faces, the places, the laughs. In the middle of memories she often muses, "I wonder if he (or she) is still alive."

SHE'S NOT ONE to go for the nutshell, but she came close to summarizing her life. "As a child, flying was all I could ever think about," she said.

And, as an adult, she went where she could fly, simple as that.

This business of flying was for daredevils when she first ogled a flying machine. The year was 1926. The planes of the day, left over from World War I, were called Jennys and Avros. In their postwar incarnation they had become thrill-producers, making meager livings for their pilots. Barnstorming pilots zigzagged the farmlands, selling rides to the public, awing crowds with barrel rolls through the clouds. To pay for her first flight, Polly hawked ride tickets to the public.

THAT FIRST RIDE has stayed with her all these years. "Flying was considered a rough man's game. I just remember I stood there on that Oregon beach looking at that plane, watching it. It was one of the most amazing things I had ever seen. I finally worked up my courage and asked the pilot if he would take me for a ride if I sold tickets for him. I just knew I wanted to fly. After that first time I never really thought about doing anything else.

"I don't really know what my parents wanted me to do. Then I mostly knew what they didn't want me to do — fly."

When she was 17 her parents issued the ultimatum — either quit flying or leave home. She never looked back. She took a job at a nearby airport for $15 a week, including four hours weekly flying time.

EARHART WAS ALREADY famous for her solo flight across the Atlantic, when the celebrated aviatrix came to Portland, Ore., to boost support of women pilots. For three days Ross chauffered Earhart about and introduced her to the handful of local female pilots.

Remembers Ross, "What impressed me was that in her pictures she looked so manly, with her short tousled hair. But in person she had the most beautiful skin. She was really quite beautiful. So delightful and sweet. She was as famous as (Charles) Lindbergh as far as I was concerned."

ROSS EVENTUALLY married a pilot and continued flying charter flights and air shows throughout the Northwest until her son, Don, was born. In the late '30s, after the couple had divorced, she took her pilot's license to Los Angeles, where she taught flying and sold airplanes at Mines Field, now Los Angeles International.

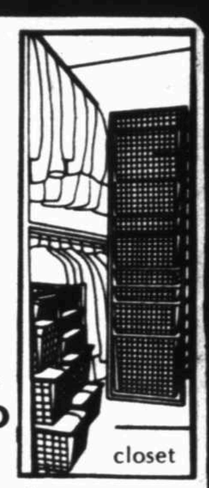

By that time, the flamboyance of flying had captured the Hollywood community. Airplanes were exciting new toys to Ray Milland, Flynn and the like. Ross taught them to fly. "Errol Flynn would come out to Mines Field if there was a storm.

Columnist's occupation housewife

Hearst Feature Service

Talking with Erma Bombeck, America's funniest housewife, is like pausing for a coffee klatch around the kitchen table. She reminds one instantly of everyone's crazy next-door neighbor, funny sister, understanding mother or "we-roomed together-in-college" type of best friend.

But the nationally-syndicated columnist still notes her occupation as housewife.

"It says so on my driver's license," says Bombeck. "I always think of myself that way.

Hausfrau Bombeck's latest book, "Motherhood Is the Second Oldest Profession," has hit the top of the New York Times non-fiction best-seller list.

"It's number one, but if Miss Piggy came out with a sex manual, it'd be all over," says Bombeck with a laugh. "The competition is very keen. It's precarious at the top."

Bombeck doesn't seem to be teetering. This is her seventh book. Her columns run in more than 900 papers worldwide. She draws an estimated three million readers. Add to that a few million viewers; Bombeck appears twice a week on "Good Morning America."

The mother of three now-grown kids, she says of her life now: "Relinquishing the mother role? Oh my God, I try to run their whole lives. I call my son in California every 15 minutes, leaving a message on his machine, 'Make me a grandmother. Goodbye.' "

Bombeck insists she's still just plain Erma. "I push the cart around Alpha Beta just like everybody else," she laughs, "and I go to the laundry." However, her life is no longer punctuated by the PTA, visits to the pediatrician, ironing or finding grape jelly on every doorknob. Bombeck has a full-time secretary and a housekeeper. When not on the road, Bombeck, who lives in Arizona with her husband of 32 years, is at her desk writing from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"I think people would be surprised to know how hard I work. This isn't something I dash off on the fender of the car. People ask me, 'How can you, at this point, relate to all that?' To me, 'housewife' is a feeling that you have about yourself. It's a feeling of what you're doing and where you're going.

"I always thought my fans were people who looked exactly like me. They were all 30 pounds overweight. They had college degrees and chapped hands all year round. They were chocoholics.

"But I began getting mail from the Ultrasuede set, women who were in the Junior League, and I thought, 'You have my feelings too?' Then after 'The Grass Is Greener Over the Septic Tank,' I mined a new group of fans. They were kids, teenyboppers, kids 9, 10, 11 and up who saw their families in my books, and I thought, that's really weird.

"After that came men. They were the last to succumb."

Bombeck speaks for the "commonwoman." At one time that meant "just a housewife." These days, says Bombeck, more often than not, the commonwoman is a working mother.

"Women have been given the opportunity to work, but the same job awaits them when they get home. They're doing two jobs. You know, there are only so many hours in the day and you deal it around to a husband, three kids, a dog, a house and you walk a tightrope and you think, 'Where's this time going to come from?' and you look in the mirror and realize you're looking at it.

"So, I always had enough guilt that I would make the casserole, write the note, (when to put it in and take it out), give a speech in Cleveland and get home in time to give the baths and put 'em to bed. I mean, you do these things. This is what women are doing now."

Bombeck's empathy for women goes beyond writing humor for and about women. She's performed benefits for abused women and children, and benefits for programs for displaced homemakers, becoming a vocal and visible fighter for women's rights. "I didn't become involved in the Women's Movement until I saw something that scared me to death," says Bombeck. "I saw that the ERA wasn't going to pass. And I thought, 'Why?' This is not such a big deal. I mean, equal rights under the law – that's not much to ask, and we weren't going to get it.

"So I took a serious look at it. Up until that time, I hadn't aligned myself with NOW. We disagreed on abortion and a few other things. So I went under my own banner."

Bombeck went out to talk to the housewives of America who had been turned off by the spokeswomen of the Women's Movement. She went to every unratified state.

"I said, 'You may not like Bella or Friedan, but those women have been putting it on the line for you for a long time and they've made things happen. And if you want things to happen, you're going to have to get off your buns and do something.' "

Bombeck says she went everywhere: "I went to senior centers, laundromats, parking lots and men's groups."

At one of them, she encountered a man in North Carolina: "He patted me on the head and said, 'Honey, you should be at home having babies,' " whereupon the usually soft-spoken Bombeck blustered, "My dear man, I tell you I'm somewhere between estrogen and death and I'm not about to go home and have babies."

AT WIT'S END

Rolodex records life

By ERMA BOMBECK

For years it has never been farther from me than the telephone.

It holds more drama than a soap opera, stores more data than a computer and records my past, my present and will record my future.

It's a little red plastic Rolodex listing names, addresses and phone numbers.

It's much more than that. Especially at Christmas.

Each card reflects change during the past year.

A mate dies and he gets a line drawn through him or her.

A child is born and the name, sex, and date are recorded. (Who spells Debye with a YE?)

Marilyn gets a new card because she is divorced and has a new address and next to her former husband goes the name of the new wife, Robin.

A child goes off to school and rates a card of his own.

A whole family moves to another state because Dan's job dried up.

Beside your own child's name are five phone numbers all crossed out and a new one that is added that barely fits on the card. (Will they ever settle down?)

Your friend who was always so independent now has a nursing home address.

A relative has left the convent, and has to be refiled under her real name.

The guy you called at the service station who understood your car left eight months ago. (They never have last names.)

An old acquaintance has a note penciled in beside it, "Christmas card returned in '82," so you tear it up and discard it.

There are riddles. Who is Father Debrosky of Wisconsin and what is he doing in your Rolodex?

Did the woman you met on the cruise die? Should you take a chance of sending her a card? (The worst that could happen is it could be forwarded.)

Is the butcher married? Does he deserve a 50-cent card just because he has great rolled rumps?

Change is supposed to be vital to our growth . . . our very existence. I know that.

Yet, every Christmas as I slowly weigh each card in the Rolodex, I experience some sadness and fear that things are moving along too fast and I am in control of nothing.

It's like a giant poker game where I discard, try to match up what I have, take a chance on an inside straight, shuffle again, deal, and hope to come up with a winning life.

I know what you're going to say. I came to play.

Secret to green trees

For extra Christmas tree freshness, Family Circle magazine suggests filling the Christmas tree stand's reservoir with a lukewarm aluminum sulfate or calcium chloride solution.

Combine one pound of either chemical (available from hardware or garden supply stores) with one quart of water. Add a little daily, along with additional lukewarm water, to the tree stand to replenish its water supply.

Model shows how alcohol affects brain

Hearst Feature Service

SAN FRANCISCO – University of California researchers have created a test tube model of alcohol use – from tolerance and intoxication to withdrawal -- that eventually could show how alcohol affects the human brain. The research also may explain why some people appear to be more susceptible to alcoholism than others, said Ivan Diamond, professor at UCSF and co-author of a paper published in Science magazine.

Alcohol's intoxicating effect has been familiar to people for centuries, but nobody has been able to figure out what it does in the brain to bring on mood changes and, in some cases, addiction and brain disease.

One reason its action has remained such a mystery is the complexity of the human brain. Medicine's familiar research model of caged animals has not helped alcohol research much, because most animals don't like to drink alcohol.

To get around those problems, researchers have taken from rats and mice a hybrid of nerve cells that survives in glass dishes and test tubes. These cells have surfaces dotted with special "receptors" that recognize and bind to free-floating chemical messengers called opiates, which may play a role in the mood changes brought about by alcohol and other drugs.

Home repair information free

Copley News Service

In these times of ever-increasing costs, it's nice to find something that doesn't cost anything. One of the biggest expenses today is taking care of your home. Here are some ideas that will make the upkeep a little easier.

SIDING INFORMATION

When you walk up to your own home, do you head straight for the front door, head down, so as not to see what's happening to your poor home's exterior? Then it's time to learn a little about how to give the dear old thing a facelift.

What Homeowners Want to Know About Solid Vinyl Siding covers just that. Arranged in a question and answer format, this eight-page pamphlet supplies the curious home owner with essential information about one home-facelift option.

What is vinyl siding? "Solid vinyl siding is manufactured from polyvinyl chloride (PVC)."

Will vinyl siding burn? "Vinyl siding is difficult to ignite and will only support combustion when involved in a full-scale fire."

And it has no effect on radio or television reception.

Vinyl siding is touted as a revolutionary new material. It doesn't need painting, can be found in a variety of styles, textures and colors and can be cleaned up with soap and water.

Now wouldn't you go for a facelift like that? And no tuck marks. Offer good through Dec. 31, 1983.

Directions: Send a long self addressed stamped envelope.

Ask For: What Homeowners Want to Know about Solid Vinyl Siding.

Mail To: Vinyl Siding Institute, 355 Lexington Ave., New York, NY 10017.

REMODELING ADVICE

When the kitchen doubles as the TV room, the family room and your sewing room, then you know it's time to remodel.

Whether you plan to add a room or just enlarge what you already have, you may decide that the project is too much for your own carpentry gifts. That's when you call in a professional remodeler.

But how can you tell who is a professional and who isn't? How to Choose a Remodeler Who's on the Level is a good way to get started. This fold-out flyer is packed with practical suggestions and valuable information for the conscientious consumer.

In addition to outlining the responsibilities of an "on-the-level" remodeler, the flyer also explains what the home owner can do to ensure that a project goes smoothly, gives tips on evaluating the final contract and tells where to go for recourse if a problem arises. Offer good through Dec. 31, 1983.

Directions: Send a long self addressed stamped envelope.

Ask For: How to Choose a Remodeler Who's on the Level.

Mail To: National Association of Home Builders, Remodelers Council, 15th & M Streets, NW, Washington, DC 20005.

WALLPAPER GUIDE

So you're finally tired of the Moulin Rouge wallpaper someone put up so many years ago in every room of your house. But what can you do? Hiring a professional paper hanger could put you out of house and home altogether.

What you need is The No-Nonsense Guide to Hanging Wallcoverings. A big 22-by-34-inch poster, this freebie is exactly what its title implies. The illustrated, step-by-step instructions are detailed enough to get you started, but not complicated enough to scare you off from doing the job yourself.

Directions: Send 50 cents postage and handling.

Ambulance computerized

JAMESTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — A portable computer has been installed in its paramedic ambulance to provide patient information to squad members of the Chautauqua County Ambulance Service as they speed to an emergency, according to MIS Week, an information management publication.

Mounted on the ambulance dashboard, the battery-powered computer stores names, addresses and health problems of more than a thousand patients in the Jamestown area.

The mobile computer stores medical files that paramedics can consult before arriving at an emergency scene.

A more complete history file is available in the computer for high-risk patients who have already used the ambulance or for potential patients who give their medical records to the ambulance service in advance as a precaution.

The computer offers an additional benefit besides patient information. It also stores instructions on how to get to hard-to-find locations.

Copley News Service

The nation's largest trade association is about to take a major step into the computer world. And, if successful, it could be a big help to home buyers and sellers.

The step would create a system that could make it possible for home buyers to access almost-instant information on the best possible mortgage loans currently offered, keyed to their individual needs and qualifications.

These home financing loans could come from points throughout the United States. And the information can be in the buyer's hand, in printout form, within just a few minutes.

Also, built into the system is the capability to select a specific loan type and lender, then instantly transmit a loan application to the lender. It's all accomplished electronically, within a few minutes.

The system, now in the final stage of development, is the newest service project structured by the 600,000-member National Association of Realtors. It's called Realtors National Mortgage Access — RNMA, or "Rennie Mae."

Basically, it's a computerized mortgage communications network, plugging in major lenders throughout the country. The communication is funneled through realtor offices, via their office computer terminals.

The communications network setup is provided by General Electric Information Services Co., a major commercial data communications network. Realtors will access mortgage loan information via a hookup with this network.

In each local area, the system will be coordinated and controlled by the local board of realtors — all of which are affiliated with the National Association of Realtors.

DEAR ABBY

Loving parents yearn to reach gay daughter

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: Our 20-year-old daughter is gay. Don't ask me how I know, I just know. My husband and I love her and can accept her as she is without reservations.

Our question: Should we confront her and say, "We know you are gay, and it's OK, we love you," or should we wait until she tells us she's gay? I have suspected it since she was 15. When she was 17, I confronted her, but she cried and denied it.

This girl has always been very tense. She is often rude, especially to her father and people in authority. She has a poor self-image, although she is tall and very beautiful.

Her high school years were a nightmare. She smoked pot, skipped school and drank. We offered counseling to her, but she refused. Our home was always open to her friends, but she rarely brought anyone home. I've met some of her friends (girls) and I genuinely liked them.

How should we handle this? We want her to be open with us, but don't know how to go about it. - WITHHOLD OUR NAMES

DEAR WITHHOLD: Don't make an issue of her sexuality. Just let her know by your actions that you love her unconditionally. She may never "open up" and disclose her sexual orientation -- which is her right. Let her know you'll foot the bill for counseling if she wants it, and pray she takes you up on it. Only when she feels comfortable with herself will she feel comfortable with you. All gay children should have such understanding parents.

DEAR ABBY: My husband is 24, very athletic and health-conscious. We have a good marriage, but there is a slight problem. My husband does not want to make love as often as I would like to. He is able, and even willing, but he has it in his head that sex saps a man's strength and makes him weaker. He says that men who engage in sex too often "age" faster.

I believe that just the opposite is true - that sex is healthy, and makes a man stronger and keeps him young longer.

DEAR TIGER: You are.

DEAR ABBY: I have become friendly with a woman who recently moved into my apartment building. We have much in common -- we are both middle-aged, divorced women who grew up in the Middle West. We visit each other quite often, but on invitation only - no dropping in.

I enjoy her company, but she has a habit that I find very irritating. When I'm visiting her and her phone rings, she leaves me sitting while she carries on a lengthy conversation. She doesn't apologize to me; she just talks on and on as though I weren't there. Last evening she got three calls. (I finally found a magazine to occupy myself.)

When I have a guest and my phone rings, I tell the caller that I have company and will call back tomorrow.

How should I handle this without offending her? - LA JOLLA

DEAR LA JOLLA: Let your friend know that you are offended when she engages in long telephone conversations while you cool your heels. And if she does it again, interrupt her conversation just long enough to say, "I can see that you're too busy for company. Bye!" Then walk out.

'Lady Cowboy' enters U.S. Hall of Fame

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — For almost all of her 81 years, Alice Greenough Orr has lived by a simple creed.

"I never smoked. I never drank. I never swore. I was always taught by my father that you ought to conduct yourself like a lady," she says.

Yet some might see the way Mrs. Orr made her living as unladylike: performing handstands and cartwheels from the backs of galloping horses, being hurled from the saddles of bucking steers, biting the dirt in fairgrounds and bullrings around the world.

"I've done it all," she says. "I've been a producer, a relay rider. I rode bulls, I rode broncs, I trick rode. They used to call me 'The Queen of the Bronc Riders.'"

Mrs. Orr has just been inducted into the rodeo division of the National Cowboy Hall of Fame in Oklahoma City, an honor previously bestowed on only six women, three of them posthumously.

Installed at the same time were her sister, Margie, also of Tucson, and her brother, Turk, of Las Vegas, Nev. — two other members of the five-sibling group that was once known as "The Riding Greenoughs." Mrs. Orr's qualifications include four world bronc-riding titles and assorted awards from abroad.

"I probably won as much as any girl in the business," she said in a recent interview. "I rode a lot of horses and traveled many, many miles to different countries, so this is something I feel entitled to."

Those travels, Mrs. Orr said, began in the small town of Red Lodge, Mont., where she was the second oldest child of "Pack Saddle Ben" Greenough, who "won the first bronc-riding contest held in the state in 1898." Very early, she said, she became so at home with horses that for three years during World War I, she frequently substituted for her father on his 37-mile mail route out of Billings, Mont.

In 1928, after besting most of the other local women in various equestrian events, Mrs. Orr said, she and Margie answered an ad for women's bronc riders in the King Brothers Rodeo, a national touring group. Within a year, though, Mrs. Orr elected to leave her sister and the troupe behind because, she said, she grew tired of the Wild West show atmosphere that emphasized entertainment over competition.

From then on, she roamed the globe for more than a decade in quest of the top prizes available to women in rodeo. The well-oiled, ornate saddles kept under lock and key, along with a collection of trophies spread about her house, bear witness to the international bronc-riding championships she captured in Boston in 1933, 1935 and 1936 and New York City in 1940. Equally valued are the mementos from her victories at the 1935 and 1939 Royal Easter Show in Sydney, Australia.

She was subsequently invited to display her trick-riding and bronc-riding talents in Spain on a six-month excursion that played 32 cities.

But several years after she returned home, saddle-bronc riding for women was eliminated on the rodeo circuit, partly because of the need to cut transportation expenses during World War II. Another factor was the rash of serious injuries caused by the event — something Mrs. Orr said she was able to avoid throughout her career, with the exception of a broken leg.

"I had ribs broke and fingers broke, but that never did stop me," she said.

With competition thus curtailed, Mrs. Orr decided in 1942 to enter the other side of the rodeo business — producing and contracting

Video tape recorders popular yule present

Hearst Feature Service

Even the Cabbage Patch Kids are probably buying a video tape recorder this holiday season. Spurred by improved technology and lower prices, VCR sales have more than doubled during 1983, far exceeding even the most optimistic industry projections.

"My impression is where the VCR might have once been for the wealthy, for the videophile, it's now emerging as a mass market item," said Allan Schlosser, spokesman for the Electronic Industry Association. Schlosser said VCR sales are up 104.9 percent over last year, when just over 2 million units were shipped to retailers. The EIA projects sales this year will exceed 4.1 million machines, bringing the total U.S. VCR population to around 10 million, or more than 12 percent of all TV homes.

There are two VCR formats: Beta, which most experts feel offers slightly better image quality, and VHS, which allows more hours of programming to be stored on a single tape. VHS outsells Beta by about three to one.

Schlosser suggested the main reasons for the increase in sales are price cutting, which has made it possible to buy a machine for under $400; the increasing availability of pre-recorded programs, which can be rented at a reasonable price (from $1 to $5 per day); and the switch from 8mm film to color video cameras to make home movies. He noted that video camera sales are up 35.9 percent for the first 11 months of 1983.

VCR sales also have been spurred by the availability of higher quality pictures and sound, according to Lancelot Braithwaite, technical editor of Video Magazine. He said that sales of the Beta format machines had slipped to about 20 percent of the market until earlier this year when Sony introduced Beta hi-fi, with a far superior sound, and the Beta-movie player.

Holiday cards bring seasonal messages

By The Los Angeles Times—Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — The White House shines in the glow of the Christmas star (unaccountably misplaced to the south). In the sky, Santa Claus is urging on Donner, Blitzen, etc. On the lawn, a decorated tree gleams. The legend says: "A Presidential Merry Christmas to you."

Flip the page.

President Reagan's head is sunk deep on a pillow. A holly sprig floats above the bed. The legend says: "May you sleep through the whole thing."

The Christmas card is by political cartoonist Pat Oliphant.

Three wise men struggle across another card, following a star.

Flip.

When they reach their destination, the star reads: "Pizza."

Three wise men appear with the legend "And now a word from the wise."

Flip.

The word is: "Peace."

In darkest December, over the eons, it has become customary to look for the future in the caldron, the crystal ball, or perhaps today, the computer screen. Some societies predict the future with tarot cards. But most people use Christmas cards, perhaps not to predict the future, but at least to judge the mood of the present.

And this year, judging by a number of cards, views are variously: suspicious, satirical, sentimental and plugged in.

On the other hand, as Gary K. Smith, executive vice president of the Greeting Card Association puts it: "Many cards make a social statement this year. Very often the statement is: 'Merry Christmas.'"

Santa, standing in for Everyman, customarily romps through the more irreverent cards with the plaything of the year. In the past: Playboy Bunnies, campers, snowmobiles, jogging outfits. This year, Santa's playing the video games. One card shows him at the joy stick of a Blitzen video game with a logo of a frenetic reindeer. Standing behind him is an elf, collecting the winnings.

Many cards are cautionary notes: Santa's keeping his list of who's naughty and who's nice on a computer.

— One card is a mock computer printout, listing the various judgments on children across the world. The same idea comes through with Santa between two terminals, one for naughty, the other for nice.

— On another personal computer two angels dance out the message shown on the screen: "'Tis the Season."

— Charlie Brown offers hope: "Santa is watching to see if you're naughty or nice. With a little luck, maybe he'll get you mixed up with someone else."

— Santa Claus is also shown in front of a massive mainframe with a printout that reads: 1 pear tree, 1 partridge, 2 French hens ... "

— Santa, balancing on his knee a child who has an enormous list, punches it all into an immense computer.

— But watch out for real electronic tricks. Some cards light up when you open them . One uses a tiny micro chip to play a tune.

A number of cards take a "what the hell, ring the knell," attitude. The whole thing might well be expressed by the card whose cover reads:

"It's been said many times, many ways -"

Flip.

And "Merry Christmas" is spelled out with peaked caps. A legend reads: "But only to you with Elfbeanies."

On another card, a substantial woman expresses a proper sentiment: "Rush, Rush, Christmas is getting so commercial that people begin to think only of themselves and forget what this day is all about. So here's something I hope will make things nicer for you."

Inside the card: a check list of her clothing sizes.

A companion card, perhaps, is the one that reads: "Christmas is a time when Goodwill assumes a real meaning in my life — I buy all my gifts there."

This jaundiced view prevails throughout a number of Christmas card scenes:

— A cat, of the Cheshire breed, peers out of a box and says belligerently: "Merry Christmas or Else."

— Winged and haloed employees attend an office party. The boss plays Santa. The legend reads: "Miracles come once a year."

— In front of a felled Christmas tree, a beaver says: "Merry Christmas, heh, heh."

The Southwestern Bell Telephone guide to changes in business telephone service.

When the Bell System splits up and Southwestern Bell Telephone becomes an independent company, there will be some changes in the way we do business together. The biggest change is that the phones you now lease from Southwestern Bell Telephone will become the property of AT&T. Here's a look at what you can expect.

TELEPHONE EQUIPMENT.
If you want to continue leasing the equipment you now have—from single line telephones to complex equipment—you'll hardly notice a change. In fact, there will be nothing for you to do. You'll simply lease from AT&T instead of Southwestern Bell Telephone. If you call Southwestern Bell Telephone to inquire about this equipment between now and the first of the year, we'll refer you to AT&T.

Of course, you'll still have the option of purchasing new equipment from a variety of suppliers. In fact, Southwestern Bell Corporation has formed a subsidiary, Southwestern Bell Telecom, which, beginning next year, will market telecommunications equipment and services.

REPAIR SERVICE.
Because AT&T will own the equipment you once leased from Southwestern Bell Telephone, they will be responsible for its maintenance. Telephone equipment that you may have purchased from Southwestern Bell Telephone or AT&T will also be serviced by AT&T. But you'll be charged for repairs if your equipment is out of warranty. Repair of equipment purchased from companies other than Bell should be referred to the original vendor or manufacturer.

TROUBLE ON THE LINE.
Here's an important point to keep in mind. Southwestern Bell Telephone will continue to repair problems in your telephone lines at no charge. We're still responsible for the telephone network that enables you to complete calls. In fact, when you want to establish service, please continue to call us first, just like always.

However, if you call Southwestern Bell Telephone for repair service and the problem is found to be in the equipment you lease from AT&T and not on the line, there will be a charge if our technicians make a repair visit. And we won't be authorized to repair this equipment. So it's important that you try to determine if your trouble is in the equipment or on the line.

ABOUT THE BILL.
When the Bell System breaks up, your bill won't split with it. In most cases, you'll still get one monthly bill from Southwestern Bell Telephone for services previously provided by the Bell System.

Since different companies will provide different parts of your service, however, your bill will be broken out by suppliers on separate pages. For example, charges for leased equipment from AT&T will be on one page. Long distance calls placed within your local area and handled by Southwestern Bell Telephone will be shown on one page, while long distance provided by other companies will be shown on another.* Special telephone numbers will be on the bill in case you have questions.

WE WANT YOU TO KNOW.
These and other changes will affect the way we do business together. So please watch for more details in your bill insert and in ads like this. If you have questions about the breakup of the Bell System, call us toll-free at 1 800 555-5000. If you have specific questions about your telephone service, you should continue to call your Southwestern Bell Telephone Business Office.

*If you have long distance or other services from companies other than AT&T or Southwestern Bell Telephone, you will receive a separate bill from them.

Politicians asked to clean campaigns

WASHINGTON (AP) — Television advertising has become the dominant element in election campaigns, but it needs standards to raise it from "the level of mudslinging and graffiti," the president of the American Association of Advertising Agencies says.

Leonard S. Matthews, speaking as the Federal Communications Commission prepares to consider more controls on political ads, has urged politicians to join "in a collective resolution to improve the ethics of the upcoming 1984 campaigns."

The FCC on Wednesday is to begin wrestling with the issue of censorship. Broadcasters are prohibited from running pornography and they are prohibited from editing campaign ads in any way. The commission must decide which law takes precedence.

Matthews, speaking at a meeting sponsored by his organization, said the ethical level of ads in the 1982 congressional campaign hit an "all time low." He asked candidates, political action committees, advertising agencies, and political parties to pull political advertising above "the level of mudslinging and graffiti."

At the same meeting, Atlantic magazine national correspondent Nicholas Lemann said national political party headquarters have been transformed into TV production studios.

Lemann called 1982 "the year of the disappearing candidate." Gone, he said, are the days of "talking heads" where a candidate actually spoke on a political commercial.

The importance of television commercials to the fate of candidates prompted the treasurer of the Democratic National Committee, Paul Kirk, to say that the people who create the ads "have a public responsibility as great or greater than that of the candidates."

Given their power and impact, he said, ads give more information "than any speech, on any stand, on any issue that any candidate will take in any campaign."

The FCC decided to consider censorship of political advertising after Larry Flynt, publisher of the sexually-explicit Hustler magazine said he would purchase time for pornographic campaign ads. At the time, Flynt was a declared presidential candidate, but since then he has withdrawn his candidacy.

The ad agency association urged politicians to sign the code of the Fair Campaign Practices Committee which puts candidates on record as condemning the use of personal or character attacks, whispering campaigns, libel, slander, misrepresentation, distortions, and appeals to prejudice based on race, creed or national origin.

Scientists see new era of science with Spacelab

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP) — An eclectic group of scientists, toiling in a tin warehouse at the very frontiers of science, say the voyage of Spacelab is still taking them through "open doors that we never expected."

Days after the space shuttle Columbia dropped out of a cloud-streaked sky and rolled to a stop on the dusty lakebed, four members of its crew continue experiments that began during their 10-day mission, delighting the scientists in charge.

"It seems very much like a new discipline," researcher Helen Ross said Monday, noting that she and other scientists had never been able to conduct laboratory-quality research in orbit.

Ms. Ross and other scientists were interviewed during breaks from the tight experiment schedule both scientists and astronauts have maintained since the landing.

"I feel very privileged to be here," said Ms. Ross, from the University of Stirling in Scotland, whose experiment in having a weightless subject attempt to distinguish different masses of similar-sized balls was performed on Spacelab's maiden flight.

The ninth shuttle mission, with the European-built Spacelab in its cargo bay, gave scientists from widely differing fields a chance to conduct experiments through and on the four specialists in its crew.

Since landing, crewmen Owen Garriott, Byron Lichtenberg, Ulf Merbold and Robert Parker have continued as human guinea pigs for a battery of investigations into the effects of space flight, particularly the relationship between motion sickness and the functions of the eyes and vestibular system — the balance organs of the inner ear.

The scientists putting the astronauts through post-landing paces in a temporary lab here say Spacelab's capabilities and those of its astronaut-scientists presage a new era in research, and perhaps, answers to old questions.

Dave Chapman, a researcher from the University of Pennsylvania, on Monday interviewed the crewmen about how they performed an experiment to determine whether plants know which way is up — by sensing gravity or through an inherent mechanism theorized in the 19th century by the naturalist Charles Darwin.

"It's been in the scientific literature for I'd say about 100 years," said Chapman. "There has never been any way to determine it precisely, and this was one of the ways to do it."

With videotapes of sunflower seedlings growing in orbit, he said, "we feel confident that that question can be resolved."

"This is the kind of experiment that Spacelab was designed for," he said. "One of the objectives that we had in our own experiment was 'Can Spacelab provide the environment to conduct such tests?' and the answer is yes."

Jackson to back nominee if rejected

Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON —The Rev. Jesse Jackson, the first black presidential candidate to be taken seriously in the polls, said today he is "overwhelmingly inclined" to support the presidential nominee of the Democratic Party but will not do so in "blind faith."

If his bid for the nomination is rejected, Jackson said, he would not back the winner without first being convinced that the nominee is listening to the issues raised by what he calls the "Rainbow Coalition," made up of women, blacks, Hispanics, American Indians, the poor and the aged.

The 42-year-old minister described his drive to change the party's formula for delegate selection as one of unlocking the party to coalition members and not of so dividing the party it might defeat the presidential nominee.

"I'm overwhelmingly inclined to support the candidate (of the party)," Jackson said, explaining that he seeks to avoid the kind of bitterness that was created within the Democratic ranks in 1980 by Sen. Edward Kennedy's primary challenge to President Carter.

He maintained at a meeting with reporters that it is imperative that the Democrats defeat President Reagan in 1984. To accomplish that objective, Jackson said: "I'd probably choose a broken heart over a broken party...but I don't see why I should have a broken heart."

While he now is running third in public opinion polls, behind former Vice President Walter Mondale and Sen. John Glenn of Ohio, Jackson contended that the party's rules for selection of delegates to the national convention in San Francisco are unfair to members of the "Rainbow Coalition.".

He asserted that the current system of caucuses, primaries and delegate allocation was a "scheme" concocted after the last election by the forces of Mondale, Kennedy and organized labor to prevent the nomination of an outsider like Carter or former Sen. George McGovern, who led the Democrats to disaster in 1972.

But, in essence, the tall, dapper black minister said, the rules prevent the participation of "new people" who will give the party the "vitality to win."

"People become more angry when they are violated by their own friends than when they are violated by their opponents," Jackson added. He explained that he hopes to resolve the situation through negotiations or in a showdown at the San Francisco convention. "If we can expand the party, we cannot lose....otherwise, we can't win," said Jackson.

Biggest monopolist still considering it big mistake

WASHINGTON (AP) — On New Year's Day, Charles L. Brown can open the door of his Princeton, N.J., home and breathe deep the bracing winds of competition. The biggest monopolist in the world is entering the marketplace.

Brown still thinks it's a big, big mistake.

Charlie Brown is the soft-spoken, low-falutin' chairman of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. He is boss to about 1 million people. On Jan. 1, he will be boss to a mere 385,000.

He is a telephone man through and through. He started as a $13-a-week AT&T cable layer. Mom had been a telephone operator; Dad rose through the ranks to become district traffic manager in Richmond, Va.

But the old, comfortable telephone system that Brown grew up in is to be no more; the government has cracked the Bell in the name of free enterprise.

To settle an antitrust suit, Brown agreed to a plan that has resulted in breaking AT&T, one gigantic firm, into eight enormous companies. Each will be big enough to be among the 50 biggest corporations in the United States.

Now that that's about to happen, a lot of people are having second thoughts. They face the prospect of paying more for telephone service. They have to worry about things previously of no concern — buying a telephone, for one. Or having it repaired. Or whether somehow it is going to be more difficult to reach out and touch someone.

And stockholders in good old safe Ma Bell wind up worrying about what to do with their telephone portfolios.

(Brown, who owned 2,270 shares in AT&T as of last March 1, was asked after a speech a few days ago what he intended to do with his stocks.

"I get in trouble in lots of ways, but one of them is certainly not going to be shilling stock one way or the other," he said. "All I have to say is I'm not going to be selling mine.")

For Mr. Chairman — and all other Bell System employees and retirees — divestiture carries a little good-bye perquisite: He and they get to keep their home telephones (but, after Jan. 1 Brown and others staying with AT&T will have to pay local service fees to their local telephone company, a freebee lost.)

Brown says he has "five or six" telephones at home. No ordinary black phones, he says, but yes, an ordinary green one.

The star of the collection is a $350 model called the Genesis, being test-marketed in San Diego. It has a keypad for entering seven frequently called numbers that can be dialed with the touch of a single button.

Busy signal? Dial again with a single touch. A little screen displays the number called.

In an interview, Brown was asked if he, too, gets those unwanted telephone solicitors on his phone.

"Oh, yes," he said. "Those machines which dial numbers in progression get everybody."

Psychiatric test ordered for Flynt

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

LOS ANGELES — Acting on a government request, U.S. District Judge Consuelo B. Marshall ordered sex magazine publisher Larry Flynt to undergo psychiatric examination to determine whether he is mentally competent to stand trial on a flag-desecration charge.

The judge granted a motion presented by Assistant U.S. Attorney Mark Healy Bonner after the wheelchair-bound paraplegic was rolled from the courtroom loudly reading a statement of his legal rights. She ordered Flynt's removal when he said he would not let the hearing proceed.

Flynt, 43, will be examined by two psychiatrists at the Federal Correctional Institution at Terminal Island while he is serving a 60-day contempt sentence for cursing and spitting at Chief U.S. Judge Frank McGarr in Chicago last week.

CITING WHAT HE CALLED "powerful evidence" of Flynt's mental incompetence, Bonner said the Hustler Magazine publisher "has a history of mental illness while in the U.S. Navy and has recently behaved like a lunatic."

The prosecutor summed up a list of incidents involving Flynt since late October when he summoned reporters to his mansion here and played a taped conversation in which a government informer purportedly threatened John Z. DeLorean to keep the automaker involved in a cocaine-trafficking deal. Bonner's motion said:

"He (Flynt) has exhibited bizarre behavior, apparently believes he is a messenger of God, and that the FBI works for him. He concurrently believes that the FBI had him shot, and has threatened to retaliate in kind. He has recently, he says, spoken with Marilyn Monroe, and has himself requested that a psychiatric study be performed on him.

"In his many court appearances (Los Angeles, District of Columbia, Alaska, Chicago), he has worn a Santa Claus outfit and a U.S. flag and has loudly used the language of a deranged degenerate. He has hurled objects, spit at judges, magistrates, court reporters and prosecutors. He has repeatedly fired his attorneys and has insisted on conducting proceedings himself in a totally incompetent manner.

"HE HAS SUFFERED IN the past from 'chronic brain trauma' and more recently from disabling gunshot wounds (Flynt was shot on a Lawrenceville, Ga., sidewalk in 1978) .... In more lucid moments, he can appear calm and reasonable, but even during these periods the content of what he has to say reflects a deep detachment from reality."

Flynt's problems with the judiciary, including the U.S. Supreme Court, have mounted week by week since his involvement in the DeLorean case. When he claimed that the mystery audio tape had been stolen, U.S. District Judge Robert M. Takasugi directed him to reveal the source and ordered daily fines of up to $20,000 when Flynt refused.

Appearing before Takasugi on Nov. 17, Flynt wore a U.S. flag as a diaper, a combat helmet and a bulletproof vest with a Purple Heart decoration pinned to it. He was arrested on charges of desecrating the flag and wearing an unauthorized medal.

Flynt twice violated the conditions of his release on bail on the flag charge, once showing up in Anchorage, Alaska, where he supposedly planned to fly the same route as the Korean Air Lines plane recently shot down by the Soviet Union. He was arrested and brought back to Los Angeles. Again released on bond with orders to remain in Los Angeles, Flynt flew to Chicago, where he was arrested and returned to Southern California.

Doctor's complaint prompts recall of heiress' biography

NEW YORK (AP) — A no-holds-barred biography of the late Woolworth heiress Barbara Hutton containing errors about her former physician has prompted Random House to pull 58,000 books from shelves in one of the biggest publishing recalls ever.

The publishing house announced Monday that all returned copies of "Poor Little Rich Girl: The Life and Legend of Barbara Hutton" would be destroyed, but made no decision on whether the book will be reissued after eliminating the allegedly libelous material.

Dr. Edward A. Kantor demanded the recall because of statements by the author, C. David Heymann, that Kantor treated Miss Hutton from the early 1940s to the 1970s and prescribed excessive drugs for her in 1943 — when Kantor was 14 years old.

The book also said in a footnote that Kantor gave an interview to another biographer in the 1960s, in which his real name was not used, describing his treatment of Miss Hutton. The footnote called it strange "that a physician would talk freely about an extant patient, even under the guise of a pseudonym."

Random House conceded in its statement that Kantor did not finish medical school until 1954 and his residency until 1960, and did not begin treating Miss Hutton until 1969.

"Dr. Kantor appears to have been confused with other doctors who treated Miss Hutton," the publisher said.

The biography deals with Miss Hutton's purported affairs with Howard Hughes and actor James Dean and with the dissipation of her $26 million fortune. Heymann wrote that when Miss Hutton died in 1979 she had only $3,500 in her bank account.

The book has been in bookstores since last month. It was excerpted in Vanity Fair magazine and was an alternate selection of the Book-of-the-Month Club.

Edward E. Fitzgerald, chairman of the Book-of-the-Month Club, said Monday: "We will absolutely not use that book now."

Industry experts say the recall could be one of the largest of its kind in publishing history, the New York Times reported today.

One publishing industry lawyer said Random House's unusual action might chill publishers' enthusiasm for controversial manuscripts.

"Every time something like this happens, it makes publishers that much more cautious, perhaps even over-cautious," said Irwin Karp, counsel of the Authors League of America. "It tends to fade away in time, but for a while it may lead authors and publishers to revise, delete or even to avoid controversy."

Random House said it has asked bookstores to return all copies to its warehouse in Westminster, Md., at the publisher's expense.

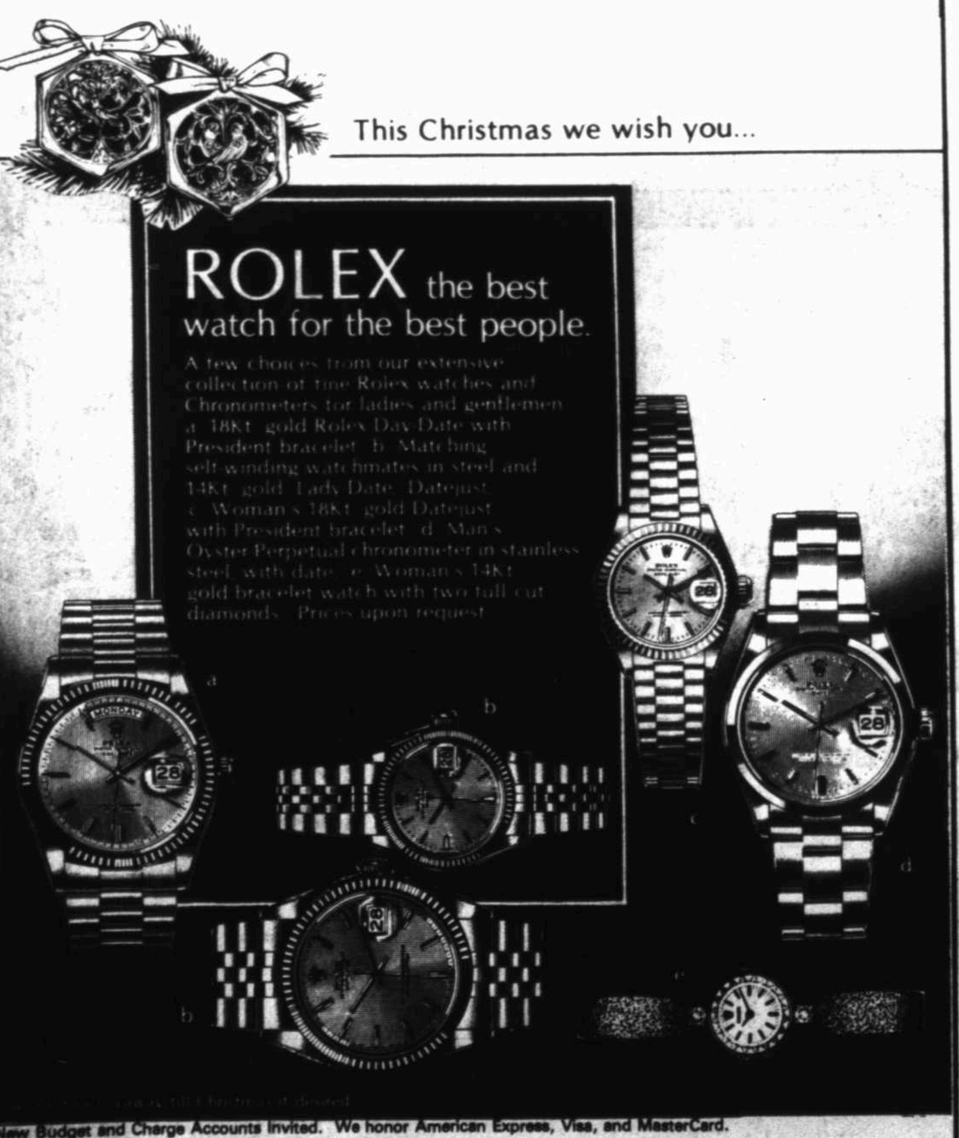

Barry Lee Cohen, Heymann's lawyer, called the problem "a comedy of errors."

"Information that had been given to the author by other people interviewed all pointed to Dr. Kantor, and one problem was he could never find out how old Dr. Kantor was," Cohen said.

Atmosphere hard to evaluate

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

Remember the SST scare? Not the dispute about noise at New York's Kennedy Airport, but the raging debate over the possibility that a fleet of supersonic transports would destroy the ozone layer in the stratosphere?

And how about the scare over spray cans and fluorocarbons and their effect on the ozone layer? Using pump containers of hair spray and roll-on deodorants became de rigueur among the ecologically in-the-know.

While those two scares have been largely forgotten, they have been replaced by two more worrisome examples of man's effect on the atmosphere: the acid rain controversy and the "greenhouse effect."

For the last 15 years, "we have had stories, thoughtful reports and scientific papers on what humanity was doing to the atmosphere and what the atmosphere was doing to humanity," said Robert M. White, president of the National Academy of Engineering, former administrator of the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration and former chief of the U.S. Weather Bureau.

"We don't know how to deal with these problems," White told science writers at a recent seminar sponsored by the Washington Journalism Center. "We're talking about a class of problems that we don't have the institutions to grapple with. They're cosmic in scope."

INDEED, BEFORE the beginning of the last decade, there was little public thought or discussion about larger environmental problems. We took for granted the presence, and indestructibility, of that life-sustaining envelope that is our atmosphere. Even today we tend to think about pollution as a generally local problem, such as the potential contamination of Long Island's groundwater supply or the poisoning of Times Beach, Mo.

One of the difficulties in taking the acid rain and greenhouse scares seriously is that well-meaning scientists were wrong on the SST issue, and only partly right on the spray-can controversy. In the SST case, the fear was that a fleet of the planes, girding the globe in the stratosphere, would release nitrous oxide emissions that would break down the ozone layer, allowing more ultraviolet radiation to reach the earth. This, it was feared, would warm the environment and cause an increase in skin cancer.

But $20 million later, the scientific evidence suggested that rather than reduce the amount of ozone in the stratosphere, the emissions would actually increase it.

While many scientists said that the initial doomsday predictions were the result of honest scientific work, there has been some suggestion that environmental politics, as well as science, played a role in the formulation of those dire predictions.

IT IS ALWAYS possible, of course, to choose to look more closely at some facts than at others; scientists, like other human beings, can allow their passions to muddy their science if their cause is at stake.

Take the "nuclear-winter" predictions, for example. A group of respected scientists, including astronomer Carl Sagan, recently predicted that a nuclear war would so devastate the atmosphere — creating years of heavy cloud cover and near-zero temperatures — that survival would, in effect, become impossible. While these scientists may be absolutely correct, there is no way to check their equations and predictions, since there is not enough hard data with which to compare their theoretical models.

Is this a case in which the scientists' anti-nuclear politics are coloring their views? Or are they simply providing an unbiased interpretation of the data at hand? Only the survivors of a nuclear holocaust would know for sure.

The effect on the environment of fluorocarbons, used as propellants in spray cans, is clearer. As with the SST, the fear was of damage to the ozone layer, a fear that the evidence has continued to substantiate. However, as White pointed out, the last congressionally mandated biennial report on the atmospheric effect of fluorocarbons predicted half the damage forecast in the previous study.

While the problems of acid rain and the greenhouse effect, or the warming of the atmosphere brought about by an increase of carbon dioxide — CO2 — in the environment, are undeniably real, White said, there is great debate over how to deal with them.

IN THE ACID RAIN case, White said, the core issue is whether for a certain amount of sulfur dioxide put into the air you get a given amount of acid deposited in streams, fields and forests.

Scientists have demonstrated a correlation between the emitting of sulfur dioxide into the air and its eventual deposition on the ground, as well as a connection between its removal from the air and the lowering of amounts at ground level. As a result, White said, society has some hard decisions to make.

"The question you have to ask is whether it would be worth it" to invest the dollars needed to bring about a cleansing of the atmosphere. That's not a question a scientist can answer, White said, it's "a political question.

"We need an ability to predict what the effect will be on the atmosphere of what we're doing to the atmosphere," said White, who added that in the past, "there's certainly been a lot of hype" on these issues.

However, he said, hype is not the question when it comes to predictions of the greenhouse effect.

"THIS ONE IS for real," he said. "If you increase the CO2 content of the atmosphere it will warm up. Nobody's kidding anybody."

There is data showing a "very, very systematic increase over the years of the CO2 content of the atmosphere," he added.

White said that there was "very little research" in the EPA report released in October warning of the possible dire consequences of the greenhouse effect. But the report was still significant, since it was the first time a government agency had stated so clearly that the problem exists.

What the EPA report predicted, and scientific data seems to suggest, is that the continued burning of fossil fuels will increase the world's temperature 3.6 degrees within 60 years, and nine degrees by the year 2100.

The report warned that "temperature increases are likely to be accompanied by dramatic changes in precipitation and storm patterns and a rise in global average sea level. As a result, agricultural conditions will be significantly altered, environmental and economic systems potentially disrupted, and political institutions stressed."

Possible black hole sucking in gas

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Spiraling clouds of gas are falling into a possible black hole at the heart of the Milky Way, according to two astronomers who say they've made the first detailed picture of the center of our galaxy.

"This is the first time we've seen the actual intricate details of how the gases look as they're falling in," said Dr. K.Y. "Fred" Lo, an assistant professor of radio astronomy at the California Institute of Technology.

"If there is indeed a black hole at the galactic center, then this picture represents the first time we are actually seeing material falling into a black hole," Lo said.

Lo and Caltech research fellow Mark J. Claussen published their findings today in Nature, a British scientific journal.

Scientists have found a few spots both in and out of the Milky Way where evidence points to the possible presence of black holes, but the existence of such objects has never been proved, Lo said.

A black hole would be created when a star collapses into a small, extremely dense object with a gravitational pull so great that even light could not escape.

Outside the black hole, however, enormous amounts of radiation, including radio waves, would be emitted by heated gas or dust being sucked in by its gravity. Lo said scientists believe that could explain the large amounts of radiation emanating from the centers of certain galaxies.

"A natural explanation for these energetic effects is matter falling into a black hole," he said.

Marvin Leventhal, an astrophysicist at AT&T Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, N.J., said that while he hasn't seen the article by Lo and Claussen, it may provide "a big push in the direction of (theoretical) models that would have a large black hole at the center of the Milky Way."

Such a black hole might have 200 to 2 million times the mass of the sun, he added.

Device keeps nuclear weapons dry

Copley News Service

LIVERMORE, Calif. — One of the insidious enemies of man in this modern electronics society is so miniscule that it probably couldn't be measured without special equipment. It's moisture.

Left to its own devices inside the sealed components to be found in innumerable kinds of electronic equipment, from television cameras to the most sophisticated kind of computers, it can cause serious electrical malfunctions that are difficult to prevent — and current methods used in electronic manufacture to ward them off can add significantly to their cost.

That is the significance behind a new development by a Lawrence Livermore National Laboratory researcher, who — inspired by the human sweat gland — has developed a tiny metal and plastic sandwich that he says can "continuously pump water electrically from enclosed spaces."

Developed by chemist Tomas Hirschfeld for the federal Department of Energy to keep the insides of nuclear weapons dry during their years of storage, the tiny "Microdryer" — not much larger than a pencil eraser — contains no moving parts and consumes a very small amount of electrical energy. The Microdryer, he said, "draws just a few milliamps from the electronics device's own power supply. Besides keeping the electronics dry and more reliable over time, the device will also save money by allowing the use of less expensive sealed enclosures. And it also will allow electronic devices to be used at lower temperatures which otherwise might lead to vapor condensation inside these components.

CONVENTIONAL MANUFACTURING TRIES to meet this need by enclosing drying agents, such as silica gel — similar to the crystals placed inside camera boxes — to absorb internal vapor. But they can soon reach their capacity to absorb, and it is impractical to continually replace them inside sealed electronic components.

Water vapor does not necessarily have to leak into a component from outside, Hirschfeld added. As the plastics used in many electronic devices grows old, they can release small amounts of water vapor, which can cause electrical malfunction inside computers or other electronic devices.

Hirschfeld, therefore, was seeking a way to expel the moisture from the sealed component when he thought of the human sweat gland — which is designed to pump water in only one direction. "The sweat gland," he said, "does not just let water out, it pumps it out. That's just what I needed, so I studied how our sweat glands work. In our Microdryer, electrochemical reactions and various membranes with different permeabilities to different liquids and gases combine to pump water out of an enclosure."

Such a device, he said, can pump out "several ounces of water a year, which is more than ample to keep an enclosure dry."

The device, he said, consists of a small cylinder capped by porous metal seals that is placed through the skin of an enclosure, one seal facing outside, the other facing in. Water vapor within the enclosure diffuses through the inner seal to the center of the Microdryer, where it is captured on a film of DuPont's "Nafion" plastic, Hirschfeld explained. And electrical current flowing across the film splits the trapped water molecules into hydrogen and oxygen gases. Half of the gases diffuse out of the dryer, never to return. A fluorosilicon plastic film on the outside seal allows the gases to escape, but prevents water vapor or humid outside air from diffusing back into the dryer or the enclosure it is guarding.

"The remaining gases," he said, "diffuse toward the inside but recombine into water vapor on a coating of palladium black on the inner porous metal seal of the Microdryer."

A native of Uruguary, Hirschfeld became a U.S. citizen in 1971, and has worked at the Livermore laboratory for four years.

Social Security says reduced benefits possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security Administration says its reserves are thinner than previously estimated and there is a possibility beneficiaries could get reduced cost-of-living increases in 1985 and 1986.

However, as the forecast now stands, the agency's actuaries still expect beneficiaries will get their regular increases in those years, matching the full rise in the Consumer Price Index.

But the margin of financial safety is slimmer than they told Congress just a few months ago.

The Social Security rescue package adopted last spring provided that cost-of-living hikes would be limited to either the annual growth in workers' wages or consumer prices, whichever is lower. That provision, however, is contingent upon the old age and disability trust funds having less than 15 percent of their annual outgo in reserve at year's end.

The actuaries had projected the trust funds would have 16.3 percent in reserve at the end of 1984 and 15.2 percent at the end of 1985.

But the new estimates, disclosed Wednesday, are that the reserves will fall to 15.9 percent at the end of 1984 and 14.6 percent a year later.

The latter would trigger the so-called "stabilizer" and limit the January 1986 benefit hikes to the lower of wage or price increases. However, the actuaries expect wages to rise faster than prices in 1985, so beneficiaries' increase would still match the Consumer Price Index.

Robert Ball, a former Social Security commissioner who served on the National Commission on Social Security Reform, said in an interview, "If it does happen, that's what it's intended to do (stabilize the system). I'm not at all disturbed about it, and not at all sure it will happen."

Under the new forecast, prices are expected to rise faster than wages during the periods Social Security will measure to determine the January 1985 increase. Price increases from the third quarter of 1983 through the third quarter of 1984 are projected at 5.9 percent and wage hikes from 1983 to 1984 at only 4.5 percent.

But if the trust funds stand at a 15.9 percent reserve level in December 1984, as expected, the stabilizer would not be triggered.

The 3.5 percent hike due next month will not be affected. That increase, the first in 18 months, will show up as scheduled in the Jan. 3 checks.

Social Security's actuaries informed Congress "there is a greater possibility than previously thought" that the 1985 and 1986 benefit hikes could be reduced, but the likelihood "remains uncertain."

The agency said Social Security is taking in $1 billion less and paying out $1.5 billion more this year than expected.

Although the robust economic recovery redounds to Social Security's benefit, the system got less than expected in taxes during last year's recession, and has had to repay $2 billion to the Treasury.

Safety group lists cars with weaker bumpers

WASHINGTON (AP) — Even the $50,000 top-of-the-line Mercedes isn't what it used to be, says a consumer group. This year it comes equipped with weaker bumpers that insurance companies say will mean higher repair costs.

But the Center for Auto Safety said Monday its survey of 1984 car models shows that many carmakers are keeping stronger bumpers on at least some of their models even though the government lowered its bumper standard last year. It said four out of 10 models still have stronger bumpers that were required before the government lowered the standard in March 1982.

The insurance industry has estimated that the weaker bumpers, capable of protecting a car in up to a 2½ mph crash, instead of a 5 mph crash, means higher insurance and repair costs.

The Center for Auto Safety has filed suit to get the stronger bumper rule reinstated.

None of the auto manufacturers has publicized the use of stronger bumpers or their switch to weaker ones. Those that have switched completely to the weaker bumpers included Volvo, Honda, Mitsubishi and Mercedes-Benz. Chrysler Corp., General Motors Corp. and Volkswagen of America Inc. are among the manufacturers that switched to the weaker bumpers in most of their car lines, the consumer group said.

The group singled out Ford Motor Co. as the leader among U.S. automakers in keeping the stronger bumpers. All Ford cars except the Escort Turbo retained the 5 mph bumpers. Other manufacturers that kept the stronger bumpers in all models were BMW, Mazda, Puegeot, Renault, Saab and Toyota Motor Co. Nissan uses the stronger bumpers in many models.

The Transportation Department last year lowered its requirements for automobile bumpers, saying they must now only protect a car in a 2½ mph crash, instead of the 5 mph standard previously used.

The government, in its justification for lowering the bumper requirement, argued that higher car prices and greater fuel costs because of increased weight wipe out any insurance and repair savings provided by the stronger bumpers.

The National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, which issues the regulations, had estimated when the 5 mph bumper rules went in effect that they would save consumers $400 million a year in repair and insurance costs.

Crash tests by the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety have shown sharply higher repair costs in similar cars when the weaker bumper is used. And while widespread real-experience statistics are not yet available, insurance companies have said an examination of some insurance claims shows a sharp increase in the number of claims and increased repair costs involving cars with the 2½ mph bumpers.

Here is a list of 1984 car models compiled by the Center for Auto Safety and rated "Good" or "Poor" depending on whether they have 5-mph or 2½-mph bumpers.

The cars under the "Good" category are models that have retained the stronger bumpers. Those under the "Poor" category are cars in which manufacturers have said they are using the 2½-mph bumpers or have altered the bumpers to comply with the weaker bumper regulation.

Panda looking alert

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Zoo's ailing giant panda, Ling-Ling, is looking more alert as officials prepare to administer blood tests which they hope will show she is recovering from a kidney infection.

"We're all keeping our fingers crossed," zoo spokesman Mike Morgan said Monday.

The 14-year-old panda has been receiving antibiotics since last week when she was so ill that veterinarians ordered a blood transfusion from her mate, Hsing-Hsing.

Your horoscope

By JEANE DIXON

Friday, December 16, 1983

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Composer Ludwig van Beethoven, novelist Jane Austen, anthropologist Margaret Mead, Israeli Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion and playwright Noel Coward were born on this date. Also sharing your birthday: CBS White House correspondent Lesley Stahl, stage and screen star Liv Ullmann and New York Mets pitcher Tom Gorman. Be more discriminating when choosing your confidants. It is simply not possible to trust everyone. Travel and romance enjoy highly favorable influences. Go ahead and indulge in some small luxuries now that you can afford them. Someone special is about to enter your life. Stop dwelling on the past and look to the future.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): That tired feeling disappears when you receive good news about a business deal. Accept an apology and get on with your life. Children cannot mature properly unless given a chance to handle responsibility.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Invest in your loved ones. An emotional plea will not work as well as laying your cards on the table. New companions lift out of a rut. Romance follows.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A good day for asking questions. Others are happy to share their information and research. Luck is on your side. Keep your opinions to yourself until it is time to announce a decision.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): The old-fashioned way is always best for you. Follow your instincts. Travel plans bring new excitement to a romance. You find a creative solution to a nagging money problem.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A young couple nears an important decision. Display decisiveness and a leadership post will soon be yours. Contracts can be signed. Romance is more rewarding than in the past.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Timing is everything now. Business associates are receptive to your suggestions. Take care of your financial obligations. Your social life accelerates when you renew an old acquaintance. Protect your valuables.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You are happier about your work now. Focus on the future. Once you translate your enthusiasm into action, money problems will disappear. Mate needs your encouragement and support to succeed.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Go to the bargaining table thinking about yourself as well as others. Although you are very productive, your stubbornness sometimes slows progress. Refuse to let your anger consume you. Let it out.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Listen to those who urge you to buy less and save more. A cash shortage could cause you to miss out on a golden investment opportunity. You make a wonderful first impression.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Sow the seeds for future financial security. Put your faith in those who have been loyal to you the longest. You will feel less worried once you have all the facts.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make a list of your positive qualities and build on them. Artistic talent needs time to develop. Experience is the best teacher when it comes to love and money.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have to work very hard for a while. Once business grows strong, however, you could be set for life! Modeling is the first step for a would-be actress.

'Buffalo Bill' returns — to cancellation

By TOM JORY

NEW YORK (AP) — "Buffalo Bill" Bittinger is back on NBC, starting tonight, but the rest of the news is not so good: his show's been canceled, knocked off the air by reruns of "M*A*S*H."

"I'll do some traveling, do some charity work," he tells Woody, his stage manager (John Fiedler), and the rest of the crew. "God knows, I miss that."

In private, of course, he's hard up for a job...but proud. "Oh, come on, Bernie," he tells his agent, "the Dubuque 'Action News' team? I don't even know how to spell Dubuque."

So he dyes his hair blond, calls himself Rudy, and takes a job selling cars ...for Woody.

Dabney Coleman plays Bill in the unconventional half-hour comedy introduced in June. The summer-replacement series about an obnoxious talk-show host in Buffalo, N.Y., was critically acclaimed — nominated for five Emmy awards — and moderately successful in the ratings, indeed, seemingly on the upswing when its limited run ended in August.

And when "We Got It Made," one of NBC's new fall series, stumbled in the ratings, the network temporarily pulled the show, moved "Cheers" up a half-hour, from 9:30 to 9, and dropped "Buffalo Bill" into the vacated timeslot, just ahead of "Hill Street Blues."

NBC says "We Got It Made" will return, sometime after the first of the year.

The network's pre-broadcast feedback on "Buffalo Bill" was not promising: folks simply didn't take to the leading character. "When the research is so unfavorable," reasoned Brandon Tartikoff, president of NBC's entertainment division, "then you know that the audience wasn't bored, that you touched some chords."

After the summer run, Tartikoff suggested "Buffalo Bill" might add an adversary character, someone who would stand up to Bill. A likely candidate is the station's headstrong owner — a fellow who talks like Ted Turner, the flamboyant cable-TV entrepreneur.

He's the one who cancels "Buffalo Bill" in Buffalo, though only his feet appear on screen in tonight's episode. Word is that Martin Landau will be introduced before long as the station's new owner, Hayden Stone.

Bill, in the meantime, is no more humble than he was four months ago, maybe even less so. His boss, Karl Shub (Max Wright), calls him pompous, arrogant, selfish and audacious. He's offensive, that's for sure, and Coleman — who played the director in "Tootsie" and the boss in the movie version of "9-to-5" — can act the louse with style.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
2 ♠	Pass	3 NT	Pass
6 ♠	Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of ♡.

We are indebted to British author Victor Mollo for this hand. Test your declarer play by covering the East-West hands, then decide how you would play six spades after the lead of the king of hearts.

The auction was practical and accurate. North's jump to three no trump showed scattered positive values, and South decided that a small slam would be enough since his partner probably had some wasted values in hearts.

At the table, declarer decided that his best shot was to rely on the diamond finesse. He won the ace of hearts and ran the jack of diamonds to West's queen. Since he still had to lose a trump because of the 3-1 break, he was down one.

There is a far superior line available. Declarer should not waste his ace of hearts so early and rely on the diamond finesse. He does better to ruff the opening lead and cash the two high trumps. If spades are 2-2, declarer gives up a diamond and claims his slam.

When trumps split 3-1, declarer cashes the ace-king of clubs and then concedes a trump trick. If East holds the third trump, his only safe return is a diamond, and declarer must fall back on the diamond finesse.

But note what happens if West has the three trumps, as in the diagram. Declarer can now claim the contract. No matter what suit West leads, he must put declarer in dummy, and declarer can discard his losing diamonds on the ace of hearts and queen of clubs.

A baby tarsier, named E.T. by officials at the Skansen Zoo in Stockholm because it resembles the science fiction movie cult figure, clings to a human finger five days after its birth. Philippine tarsiers belong to a zoological group called Asiatic profimians, live in trees, are active at night and grow to the size of a human fist. E.T. weighs four-fifths of an ounce and is two inches long. This is the first such animal born in capitvity and she is doing well according to zoo officials.

Computer to analyze police information

FORT WORTH (AP) — A project that could stop another Henry Lee Lucas before a killing spree gets rolling was conceived in the Los Angeles public library more than 20 years ago.

But the idea had to wait for computer technology to catch up with the vision of the police officer, who spent hours in a library looking for real-life horror stories in an attempt to keep them from happening elsewhere.

What former Los Angeles police detective Pierce Brooks calls "my little dream" is not titled the Violent Crime Apprehension Project. Law enforcement agents in Texas and around the country hope that within a year, killers who travel will have VICAP's computers and expertise on their trail.

VICAP will be a national clearinghouse for information on unsolved "serial" slayings, unidentified dead bodies and missing people.

But unlike the FBI's missing persons file or the National Crime Information Computer, from which police agencies can draw information on criminal records of suspects, VICAP not only will provide facts, but analyses of facts.

Using a computer and the services of experienced investigators and crime analysts, VICAP will attempt to compare information on slayings in various locales, to seek out patterns that would indicate the characteristics of a traveling killer, and where he might strike next.

"WE'VE GOT TO eliminate solving these kinds of cases by accident," said Brooks, who worked on the infamus Onion Field murder case in Los Angeles. With VICAP, he theorized, police might have been able to stop a Ted Bundy without depending on a chance traffic stop that led to his arrest, or apprehend a Henry Lucas without depending on his eight-year-delayed sense of remorse.

VICAP is something that Texas Ranger Phil Ryan has been wishing for ever since he began listening to Lucas calmly tell his grisly tale.

"I'd really like to see a central file of unsolved murders, nationwide — something like we have in Austin, where I could ask for all the unsolved homicides over a certain period or with certain characteristics," Ryan said. "A traveling criminal is probably the hardest to catch," because his crime string doesn't become noticeable to any particular police agency, he added.

Ryan took on the job of notifying other agencies when Lucas would talk about crimes in their jurisdictions, but he soon was swamped. Some police agencies ended up calling newspaper reporters to get their information on Lucas' travels and reported crimes. To everyone involved, the need for central coordination became evident.

BROOKS, WHO served as police chief in three different cities after leaving the Los Angeles police department, said the idea for VICAP began when he was an investigator "in the '50s and '60s."

"There are murders and there are murders," he said. "Some of them are done by a punk holding up a gas station; others are between family members or friends. But then there are the murders by people like Henry Lucas, the serial murders — not mass murders in the sense of all them being done at one time or place — but done by somebody who just sort of wanders around."

After a while, Brooks said, the last type of killing "wasn't too difficult for me to recognize. They would be lust murders, with disfigurement or something like that. My gut feeling got to be that they were done by someone who was passing through, and had probably done it before and would do it again."

Brooks said when he was assigned to a slaying that looked like that type, "I got into the habit of wandering abut six blocks down the street to the Los Angeles public library. I would start reading papers from all over the country, to see if there were similar cases somewhere. It was a primitive method, but it worked for me two or three times."

A LITTLE LATER, he said, "someone explained to me what computers were and I thought, boy, that's just what I need. But at that time, a computer to do this would have cost $50 million and been half the size of the police building."

But a couple of years ago, thanks to advances that had made computers compact and inexpensive, Brooks resurrected his idea. He got other agents interested, and the federal criminal justice planning grant was obtained.

VICAP proponents are hopeng for about $1 million in funding from Congress this year to actually put it into operation. It would employ a central computer, probably based at the FBI training center in Quantico, Va., to analyze information on slayings provided by police and sheriff's departments around the country.

The information on victims, circumstances, locations, vehicles and causes of death and physical evidence would be fed into the computer to see if any of the information matched crimes reportd from other localities. In addition, the information would be run past experienced investigators and crime analysts at the VICAP center.

U.S. seeking ranch to protect condors

By the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service

In one of the largest acquisitions ever made to save an endangered species, the federal government is negotiating for the purchase of all or part of a 13,000-acre ranch that serves as a crucial feeding ground for the California condor.

The ranch, located near the town of Maricopa in southern Kern County, currently is being studied by a team of biologists and land appraisers from the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. This fall, Congress appropriated $5 million for acquisition of the property, known as the Hudson ranch, and other lands critical to the condor's survival.

Purchase of the property became vital, condor specialists say, after the current owners announced plans to convert the ranch to an "agriminium" development with up to 700 housing units known as "ranchettes."

Condors, which range over much of Southern California, have been slowly losing ground to civilization for many decades. Only about 20 of the huge vultures are believed to remain in the wild.

For the last three years, the federal government and the National Audubon Society have embarked on an elaborate project to save the species from extinction. The plan involves capturing wild birds and subsequently breeding them in captivity. If all goes as planned, subsequent generations will be returned to their habitat to restore the wild population.

The proposed land acquisition, however, is the first move the government has made to expand protected habitat used by the condors since the 55,000-acre Sespe condor sanctuary was established 30 years ago.

At present the ranch supports a livestock operation, and condor biologists believe the birds settle in the area each year to feed on the carcasses of dead cattle. "The attraction of the ranch definitely seems to be associated with food," Odgen said.

Thieves rip off Dirty Harry

REDDING, Calif. (AP) — Even the sight of Dirty Harry's .44-caliber Magnum failed to stop three men who snatched the ficticious police inspector from a theater lobby.

Two men burst into the Cascade Theater on Sunday, grabbed a 9-foot cardboard likeness of the movie tough-guy cop, ran through a crowd and jumped into a waiting car with a getaway driver.

Theater manager Bob Wells said two other attempts have been made to nab the San Francisco cop played by Clint Eastwood in the new film "Sudden Impact," but the latest was the best-planned.

Theater employees foiled the other attempts by telling the would-be kidnappers to put Harry back where he belonged.

The culprits struck at about 5:45 p.m. as scores of moviegoers were waiting in line to buy tickets for the 5:50 p.m. show.

Another crowd was leaving one of the theater's two downstairs auditoriums and the men took advantage of the confusion, running through the crowd and out the rear exit of the emptying theater, Wells said.

Theaters in New York and Los Angeles also have been hit, Warner Brothers spokesman Marty Weiser said Monday in Burbank.

Weiser said 2,000 of the $150 cardboard stand-ups made for the film were distributed to 1,200 theaters showing the film, which opened Friday. "Sudden Impact" was the weekend box-office winner nationwide, grossing $9.7 million in its first three days, he said.

Newscaster recovering from mild heart attack

James Lehrer

WASHINGTON (AP) — James Lehrer, co-anchor of public TV's "MacNeil-Lehrer News Hour," will be back on the air in a matter of weeks after a mild heart attack, his colleague Robert MacNeil reports.

On the broadcast Wednesday night, MacNeil announced Lehrer's illness and said he was resting comfortably.

Lehrer, 49, "suffered an extremely mild heart attack," said Snijtha Prakash, a staff member for the program. "We have no cause for concern."

Chris Ramsey, a staff member in New York, said Lehrer developed chest pains Sunday night and was taken to Georgetown University Hospital on Tuesday morning. Ann Sherman, a spokeswoman for the hospital, confirmed that Lehrer was a patient but said she had no information concerning his condition.

The MacNeil-Lehrer program originates at WNET in New York City, with a hookup to WETA in Washington, where Lehrer is based.

Johnny Cash

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Country music star Johnny Cash had a special reason to help out at Baptist Hospital's ground-breaking ceremony — since he's still a patient there recovering from intestinal surgery.

"I'm just happy to be here today — happy to be alive," said the 51-year-old Cash, all decked out in a black jogging suit Wednesday as he braved a chilling wind and temperatures in the low 40s.

Cash, known for hits including "A Boy Named Sue" and "I Walk the Line," wielded a small sledgehammer and helped Mayor Richard Fulton pound spikes into asphalt where the hospital is building a $13 million "wellness center."

The singer, who underwent surgery Nov. 22 to correct a bleeding ulcer in the small intestine, is due out in two or three days, a spokesman said.

R.F. Kennedy Jr.

ALBANY, N.Y. (AP) — Robert F. Kennedy Jr., son of the late Sen. Robert Kennedy, has passed the New York state bar exam, but it's not yet known when he will be admitted to practice law in the state.

Kennedy, 29, who faces a felony heroin possession charge in South Dakota, still must gain the approval of the Committee on Character and Fitness of the Appellate Division of state Supreme Court.

He passed the exam on his third try, the Board of Law Examiners reported Wednesday. He took the test in July.

On Sept. 15, Kennedy was charged with possesion of heroin, five days after becoming ill on a Republic Airlines flight from Minneapolis to Rapid City, S.D. He is undergoing drug-dependency treatment at a hospital in Fair Oaks, N.J.

NEW YORK (AP) — Anthony Lewis, columnist of The New York Times, has won the ninth Arthur D. Morse Fellowship in Communications and Society, the Aspen Institute for Humanistic Studies announced Wednesday.

The award was made to Lewis for his writings on law and justice and concern for the First Admendment, said J.E. Slater, president of the institute, which issues the award as a memorial to Morse, a writer and broadcaster.

In accepting the award, Lewis said it was important that the press alert the public to "a determined and persistent effort" by President Reagan "to close down information about what his government is doing in vital areas of policy."

Previous newspapermen and broadcasters to receive the award have included Bill Moyers, Daniel Schorr and Jacobo Timerman.

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — French writer Marguerite Youreenar was knocked down by a car while crossing a road and suffered minor head injuries, police and hospital spokesmen said.

The 80-year-old Ms. Yourcenar, a resident of North East Harbor, Maine, was in "satisfactory condition" at Nairobi Hospital's intensive care unit after being treated for a cut over her right eye, a doctor on duty told The Associated Press.

"She is not in bad shape," said an intensive care unit nurse. "She is able to talk."

The accident occurred Wednesday night in downtown Nairobi. A police spokesman said that Ms. Yourcenar was struck by a car while taking an evening walk with friends near the University of Nairobi campus.

Officials of the French Embassy, including the ambassador, visited the elderly writer today at her bedside to check on her condition, hospital staff said.

Born in Brussels, Belgium, in 1903, her real name is Marguerite de Crayencour. Her best known works is "Hadrian's Memoirs."

LONDON (AP) — The Swedish rock group ABBA, branching out into children's fare, got mixed reviews for the music it provides in a Christmas offering at the Lyric Theater — a show appropriately called "Abbacadabra."

In the musical, three children who begin playing a video game on their classroom blackboard end up accompanying Cinderella, Aladdin, and Pinocchio through a metallic fantasyland of video, motorbikes, and super-sleek hardware.

One newspaper critic called the show "an enjoyable high-tech musical...(for)...the digital kids of the Eighties." But another described ABBA's music as "repetitiously pulsating." And another said the whole evening was a "ramshackle affair."

All the reviewers, however, sang the praises of the show's star, Elaine Paige, better known as the original Eva Peron in "Evita." This time on stage she doubles as a dowdy schoolteacher and a wet-haired, punk witch named Carabosse who employs four crows to carry out her evildoing.

LONDON (AP) — Prince Andrew, who flew as a Royal Navy helicopter co-pilot in last year's Falklands War, has been given new orders and will report to duty with the frigate Brazen when it comes back from the Middle East for maintenance in April.

In the meantime, the 23-year-old son of Queen Elizabeth II is about halfway through a six-month course in flying the Royal Navy's Lynx choppers at the Portland naval air station in southwest England.

The prince will spend most of his time aboard the frigate on surface search operations, the base said Wednesday.

PONTIAC, Mich. (AP) — Soul singer Aretha Franklin is in tax trouble with the state of New York, according to documents filed in court.

The state is suing Ms. Franklin, a resident of the Detroit suburb of Bloomfield Hills, to pay more than $100,000 in back taxes, interest and fines, a suit filed Tuesday in Oakland County Circuit Court shows.

In the legal action, the 41-year-old singer is accused of refusing to pay a May 2 judgment against her by the New York State Department of Taxation of Finance. The case involves income taxes of $46,250.08 which the state says built up between 1972 and 1977.

Telephone calls were not returned Wednesday by Andrew Feinman, Miss Franklin's lawyer, or by Roger Hyde, a lawyer representing the state of New York in Michigan. A telephone listing could not be obtained for Miss Franklin.

Jane Fonda

LONDON (AP) — A London newspaper reported Wednesday that movie star and fitness guru Jane Fonda suffered a mild heart attack but is fully recovered now. Her publicist denied the story.

Nigel Dempster, the London Daily Mail's gossip columnist, quoted unidentified friends of Miss Fonda as saying the attack was caused by the strain of suddenly taking off weight gained for a film role.

But Pat Kingsley, Miss Fonda's publicist in Los Angeles, said, "These rumors have been going on for several months now. It wasn't true then and isn't now.

"To the best of my knowledge she hasn't even had a cold," he said

Dempster said Miss Fonda, who turns 45 next week gained about 20 pounds for her role in the television movie "The Doll Maker."

Eddie Murphy

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — "Saturday Night Live" comic Eddie Murphy will share top billing with Santa Claus and Miss South Carolina Thursday at a Christmas party for disadvantaged children at Sen. Strom Thurmond's home in West Columbia, S.C.

Thurmond's wife, Nancy, "was very eloquent in her request, and it was something that we just felt was a really good thing to do," Robert Wax, Murphy's manager, told The Charlotte Observer Tuesday. "I spoke to Eddie and Eddie said, 'Yeah, let's go do it.'"

Several hundred children from child care institutions across South Carolina are expected to attend the afternoon party, said Mark Goodin, the 81-year-old Republican senator's press secretary.

"They are setting up a circus tent and Santa Claus will be there," said Wax. "They are just trying to give these kids a few hours of something joyous."

Murphy, 22, appears on the NBC television show "Saturday Night Live" and starred in the films "48 Hours" and "Trading Places."

Joining him will be Miss South Carolina, 21-year-old Dalia Mereedes Garcia; the Saluda River Chorus and the Benedict College Choir.

SPRIGG, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginia Gov. Jay Rockefeller says he was approached about becoming baseball commissioner, but the search committee struck out.

"I told them I'm happy where I am," Rockefeller said Tuesday night at a banquet honoring the 1983 Gilbert High School football team.

Although he characterized himself as "a real sports nut," Rockefeller said he had no intention of leaving the political field for the playing field. Rockefeller, a two-term Democrat who is constitutionally prohibited from seeking a third consecutive term, is running for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated next year by retiring Sen. Jennings Randolph.

The baseball search committee, which has been having difficulty finding a replacement for outgoing Commissioner Bowie Kuhn, contacted at least one other political figure for the job — presidential aide James Baker. Baker said he rejected the offer.

• • • DETROIT (AP) — After a proposal "right out of the movies," Chrysler Corp. Chairman Lee Iacocca's 24-year-old daughter plans to get married in June, Iacocca announced.

"Dad was in on the whole caper," Kathi Iacocca, of Alexandria, Va., said Tuesday, calling 24-year-old Jeffrey Rhodes Harper's proposal "right out of the movies."

She said she and her father flew to Burlington, Vt., where she met Harper. They went skiing at Stowe, Vt.

"On the final run of the day, I got off the chairlift and there was a 15-foot-long banner that said, 'Kathi, will you marry me?' After I said yes, Jeff popped open a bottle of champagne he had buried in the snow."

Miss Iacocca, who works for the Alexandria consulting firm of Black, Manafort and Stone, met Harper, of Washington, about two years ago when they both were employed by the Gray and Co. public relations firm.

Harper is employed by Canzeri and Co., a consulting firm.

His parents are the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. John C. Harper of Washington. Harper is rector of St. John's Episcopal Church facing the White House.

LONDON (AP) — Singer Robin Gibb won back control of his British music publishing company Wednesday when a court ordered his partner, Brian Morrison, to sell his half-interest to the former Bee Gee.

The High Court ordered Morrison removed as chairman of Robin Gibb Publishing Ltd. after allegations of mismanagement that cut into Gibb's income.

Gibb's attorney, Michael Burton, said that since 1977, Gibb had received only $14,000 in royalties from the company despite several hit recordings.

Edward Koch

NEW YORK (AP) — Mayor Edward Koch has threatened to personally jail any college student who eats one of the six goldfish that appeared Wednesday in a historic horse trough outside City Hall.

However, the mayor said the tiny fish were not the city's responsibility because they were not homeless.

The fish were swimming in rainwater that had collected over the last few days in the 1909 trough, part of a Municipal Art Commission exhibit of "street furnishings" from old New York.

On seeing the fish, Koch said, "Any college student who eats our goldfish will be placed in jail — by the mayor, personally."

But when asked if the city was obliged to take care of the tiny fish, Koch said, "These are not homeless goldfish. They belong to somebody, not me."

City Hall reporters bought a goldfish bowl, filled it with warm water and took the fish inside.

Bachelor finds it pays to advertise

EASTON, Mass. (AP) — A desperate bachelor who said he "tried everything in the book to find a wife" got at least a dozen bids from women interested in romance after he posted signs on his lawn asking for Mrs. Right.

Barry Butkus, 35, hammered signs proclaiming "I Need a Wife. Please Can You Help" and "Wife Wanted By Unhappy Bachelor" outside his brown ranch house in North Easton. A red heart hangs in his living room window.

The signs and a newspaper story about his plight apparently did the trick for the 35-year-old competition ballroom dancer and prison guard.

"I've tried everything in the book to find a wife, but I've just been plain unlucky," Butkus said in an interview published Wednesday in the Boston Herald. "I have the feeling nobody wants me. Basically, I'm looking for matrimony with a capital M."

Today's editions quoted women who wanted to get in touch with him.

"I guess he really hit the home fires for me," said Marsha Golden, 37, who says she is a ballroom dancer, too.

"I think he has a lot of spunk," said Linda Stuart, a 32-year-old bank bookkeeper.

"If he's got enough nerve to put up signs," said Cheryl McDonald, 24,"I have enough nerve to go out with him."

"It'll keep me pretty busy," said Butkus. "But I guess the odds are in my favor ... I'm optimistic that one of them will be my wife."

A guard on the graveyard shift at Norfolk state prison, Butkus doesn't meet many women in his work. In addition to ballroom dancing, canoeing and cooking chicken gumbo.

He says his Mrs. Right need not be Mrs. Perfect.

"I'm not fussy. I'll take a plain Jane. I'm more interested in what's inside."

However, he says he's partial to red-haired women and would not say "I do" to anyone "obese, lazy or stupid."

"I'm looking for a caring, compassionate person," he says, "one you could take home to mother."

Butkus has never been married, even though his four sisters have been playing matchmaker for years.

He says singles' bars aren't for him. He tried computer dating, but was paired with a woman who was "almost a midget and she wouldn't talk." And he took a bus to New York City to see a marriage broker, who charged him $75 and turned out to be phony.

He complained and got his money back but no suitable prospects.

"Marriage is something I've always wanted in the worst way. I believe in matrimony. I believe in loving and sharing," he says.

The signs in his yard have attracted a little attention.

"I've had a couple of girls drive by slowly and wave, but they didn't stop," he said.

However, if prospective spouses decide they would prefer to call first, before dropping by, they will have a problem: Information operators say Barry Butkus has an unlisted telephone number.

Ethicists: Expensive care of dying not wasteful

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
AP Science Writer

BOSTON — Even though the medical needs of the dying are extremely expensive, there is no evidence that they represent a "morally troubling" misuse of money, an ethics panel said today.

The committee said that steps can be taken to make sure doctors are not wasteful in treating the terminally ill, and added such patients might decline some costly procedures if given more say in their treatment.

While some people are repelled by such discussions, committee members insisted the subject should not be ignored.

"If such issues are not brought out into the open," they wrote in the today's New England Journal of Medicine, "decisions may be made in a way that is beyond the pale of public scrutiny or accountability."

The 20-month investigation was conducted by a team of philosophers, political scientists and bioethics specialists who set out to determine whether the price of caring for the dying is too high.

They operated under a grant from Blue Cross-Blue Shield of Greater New York.

They acknowledged that the treatment is expensive. For instance, about 5 percent of all Medicare enrollees die each year, even though they account for 22 percent of the money spent by the federal program.

However, there is often uncertainty in predicting the nearness of death. Sometimes patients who seem hopelessly ill surprise doctors with full recoveries.

"It is not appropriate to conclude that such expenditures represent a morally troubling misallocation of societal resources," they wrote.

"At present, there is no justification for arguing that the crisis in health care finance in America can be attributed to mistakes or misallocations that may be taking place in caring for the terminally ill," said the study's director, Dr. Ronald Bayer of the Hastings Center.

"There is no need at this point for hard choices regarding the terminally ill," he added.
