Mail carrier reprimanded before shootings

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — A mail carrier who shot 14 co-workers to death and wounded six others before killing himself had sought union help after a history of work problems and faced the possibility of losing his job, officials said.

Patrick Henry Sherrill had been lectured by a supervisor Tuesday, the day before he walked into the post office and committed one of the worst mass killings by a lone gunman in U.S. history.

Sherrill, who carried a mail bag of ammunition and weapons, killed himself with a .45-caliber automatic handgun as police swarmed the building.

Today, postal employees from Oklahoma City and Texas helped Edmond workers resume sorting and delivering mail. While Edmond employees were not required to work today, Postal Service spokeswoman Barbara Haisley said all but one came in.

"I'm doing OK," employee Jerry Reed said. "But it is very rough, very rough to be back here."

The building was closed Wednesday, but the curious stopped to look, and some people put flowers on the front lawn.

Postal officials meeting in Texas on Wednesday called for a check on Sherrill's mental stability and for better security, including metal detectors, at the nation's post offices.

Postmaster General Preston R. Tisch ordered the flag flown at half-staff at all post offices. Gov. George Nigh ordered flags across the state lowered, too.

A crisis center team, last used in May when tornadoes ripped through the city of 35,000 and caused $8 million in damage, was in place today to deal with the anguish of survivors and citizens distraught over the shooting.

"You can bet I'll be on my knees thanking my God tonight," said postal worker Clint Turner, one of the 70 to 80 employees who fled without injury.

"God did not will this to happen," the Rev. Michael Potts told about 100 people at an impromptu noon memorial service. "Out of the depths of our grief, our shock, our pain, we cry, 'Why, O Lord?' But there are no easy answers."

Sherrill, a Marine veteran who never saw action and described by authorities as an expert marksman, lived alone in Oklahoma City. Coworkers described him as distant and friendless.

He had a history of discipline problems at the suburban post office since he began working there in April 1985, officials said.

On Tuesday, Sherrill was lectured for "non-performance," said Richard Carleton, postal service division general manager from Oklahoma City. He said officials could not be more specific about Sherrill's work problems.

Gas price drop stabilizes retail prices

WASHINGTON (AP) — The first drop in gasoline prices since April made up for the steepest rise in food costs in more than two years to hold retail prices steady in July, the government said today.

More good news for consumers: So far this year, prices have fallen 0.2 percent, at an annual rate, their best showing since 1949.

But analysts warn that the July report could mark the end of the best news on inflation. Yet, no economist was predicting that prices would begin rising rapidly.

The belief that prices will turn upward is based in part on the OPEC agreement earlier this month to temporarily cut oil production in an effort to boost sagging world oil prices.

As for last month, however, gasoline prices fell 6.6 percent, more than offsetting gains posted in May and June and their fourth drop this year.

Indeed, for the first seven months of 1986, gasoline prices have declined 27.4 percent and now stand 35.7 percent below their peak level of March 1981.

Food costs, however, rose a sharp 0.8 percent in July, their biggest gain since January 1984. All major food categories showed substantial increases, with beef prices rising for the second straight month after falling for the first five months of the year.

Poultry prices were up 7.4 percent, the Labor Department said, reflecting in part the Southeastern heat and drought, which makes it difficult for chickens to survive.

Fruit and vegetable prices also turned around in July, rising 0.8 percent after falling a sharp 2.8 percent in June. Prices for fish and eggs also rose last month.

Housing costs, which had risen 0.5 percent in June, held steady last month, largely a reflection of declines in the costs of electricity and natural gas.

Prices for both energy sources had surged in June after declining in the three preceding months.

Fuel oil prices fell 5.8 percent, the seventh straight decline. Those costs were 39.0 percent under their 1981 peak. Energy prices overall fell 4.1 percent last month.

Charges for telephone services, which had jumped 1.9 percent in June, were unchanged in July as an increase in local service costs was offset by continuing declines in long distance charges.

The good news on gasoline prices, analysts cautioned, may soon end. They said the OPEC pact could mean a 10-cents-a-gallon boost in pump prices.

On Aug. 5, after months of wrangling, the 13-member cartel reached an agreement to reduce production from a level of 20.5 million barrels a day to 16.7 million barrels daily.

For all of 1986, analysts are predicting that consumer prices will rise by just 2 percent, the best inflation performance in more than two decades.

Through the first seven months of the year, the news has been even better as the 0.2 percent rate of decline was the best first-seven-months-of-the-year price news retail costs fell 2.4 percent from January through July 1949.

As recently as 1980, prices soared 12.4 percent in a single year, following a 13.3 percent jump in 1979 as a revolution in Iran plunged oil markets into turmoil, causing gasoline lines in the United States and shortages around the world.

Senate OKs plan to legalize interstate, branch banking

By JIM WARREN
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The Senate, breaking a long Texas tradition, Wednesday approved an interstate banking package and a plan to legalize branch banking.

Interstate banking proponents argue that out-of-state financial groups could come to Texas and bail out troubled banks in the state. Opponents worry that out-of-state banks will take capital out of the state and make it hard for Texans to receive loans.

Sen. O.H. "Ike" Harris, R-Dallas and sponsor of all the banking bills, said big out-of-state holding companies will not try to take over healthy, small independent Texas banks. Out-of-state financial institutions realize, Harris said, that smaller banks generally are well run, understand the local community and would not be attractive targets for a buyout.

The branch banking bill is contingent upon voters approving a constitutional amendment in November. If approved, banks could branch out within the same city or county.

A similar set of banking bills is pending in the House.

"We're breaking down false geographic barriers," Harris said. "This will help the consumer."

Sen. Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, was the most vocal opponent of the bills. He tried to amend the branch banking bill to ensure that big banks will not take over small-town institutions, leaving residents with no place to obtain loans.

Senators voted down Parker's amendments, ignoring his claim that people in his Southeast Texas district already have lost money to out-of-town banks. He proposed a more restricted branch banking proposal that also was voted down.

The three major banking groups — Texas Bankers Association, Independent Bankers Association of Texas and Texas Association of Bank Holding Companies — had worked with certain lawmakers before they came to the special session and drafted the legislation the Senate approved Wednesday.

"I don't think the people ever intended us to come here in a special called session and change our banking laws like this," Parker said. "I don't like it when I come up for a session like this and am told, 'It's all worked out.' That smacks of backroom dealing."

Gov. Mark White officially opened the special session to interstate banking Wednesday morning.

"No bank will be compelled to sell to an out-of-state holding company and the vast majority of our nearly 2,000 healthy banks probably will elect to remain under local ownership," the governor said. "But troubled financial institutions that have been weakended by the precipitous oil price decline and the resulting economic difficulties will not be denied out-of-state sources of capital."

Harris expects fewer acquisitions of Texas banks than opponents anticipate. Also, he assured senators that branch banks will handle all the services of regular banks.

The interstate bill includes a provision that requires out-of-state banks that take over Texas institutions to meet the federal Community Reinvestment Act guidelines, which force banks to loan money to local projects.

Motorists line up to see Christ's 'face'

FOSTORIA, Ohio (AP) — City officials are concerned about traffic jams caused by hundreds of motorists who have been lining up to see a purported image of Christ on a soybean oil storage tank.

A spokesman for the owner of the tank says all people are seeing are rust stains illuminated by sodium vapor lights.

"It's got to be a combination of lighting, rust spots, fog and people's imaginations," said Ralph E. Senteney, spokesman for Archer Daniels Midland Co.

But J. Charles Macias, safety-service director of this northwest Ohio city, says he wants the company to keep the lights around the tank off.

For the second day in a row, several hundred cars lined up for miles Wednesday night in the city of 17,000 people, 50 miles south of Toledo, after reports that the image appeared on the tank each night for a week.

"It's there. It looks like a 3-D picture. It's incredible. I couldn't believe it," said Aggie Lowery of Fostoria.

"There is an image on the wall. What it is I don't know," said Doug Mick of Newark in central Ohio.

Four of the town's police officers directed traffic Wednesday, said police dispatcher Timothy Hatfield.

"It started about 5 or 6 o'clock ...and it's bumper to bumper right now," he said late Wednesday night. "The officers are doing the best job possible with the manpower we have, trying to keep traffic going."

Real or not, ice cream vendor Mark Jacobs saw both a commercial and spiritual opportunity. He parked his truck near the tank.

"A lot of people are saying that Jesus Christ is appearing here, and I thought, well, they're going to be hungry sitting out here waiting all this time," Jacobs said. "I'm waiting, too, in hopes of selling ice cream and seeing Jesus, too."

Area unemployment rates down

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

Reflecting the statewide trend of declining unemployment reported earlier in the month, local jobless figures dipped to 12.5 percent during July, down from the record high 14.2 rate in June. Odessa's unemployment rate came down a corresponding 1.7 percent, from 19.6 to 17.9 percent, from June to July.

Seasonal growth in service sector jobs combined with a degree of long-awaited stability in oil and manufacturing industries helped to absorb some of the jobseekers from the unemployment rolls, said Joe Hatcher, area manager for the Texas Employment Commission in Midland. Total employment in the city grew to 47,600 from 46,000 in June.

The additional 1,600 workers came equally from newcomers to the labor pool and those already among the total unemployed figures for June. The civilian labor pool grew to 54,400 from 53,600 a month earlier, while the total number of jobless shrank from 7,600 in June to 6,800 last month.

Odessa saw 500 individuals leave the pool of available workers and total unemployment decline by 1,200 — from 12,300 to 11,100. These factors combined to boost total employment to 51,000 out of 62,100 available workers in July, a 17.9 percent jobless rate; down from 50,300 of 62,600 workers drawing paychecks in June, when the city was at a record high 19.6 percent jobless rate.

Center wants more local customers

By DOUG DRUMMOND
Assistant City Editor

The Midland Center — hampered by the dull economy and sharp competition — announced plans Wednesday to unveil a new marketing plan designed to attract more local customers.

The plan, finalized earlier this week, will feature television spots, advertising, a re-birth of the center's newsletter and targeting smaller groups to use the center.

"We want a totally new image for the civic center," said Mitch Clark, director of the center. "We want to try to make community more aware of the services we provide."

The idea comes after revenues have dropped some $20,000 from last year and increasing competition from businesses such as the Holiday Inn.

Also, the center earlier had looked into becoming a non-profit corporation but decided Monday it was not feasible.

"Competition is the No. 1 reason," Clark said of the marketing plan. "In the past, we were the only civic center in town and didn't do a good job of marketing ourself."

Cost of the new strategy is not known, Clark said.

The plan includes the following:

— Targeting local events such as local civic clubs' business and smaller regional groups.

— Getting more public events in the Midland Center.

White: Economy, drugs factor in crime increase

AUSTIN (AP) — The nearly 19 percent increase in Texas crime so far this year should be blamed on the state's faltering economy and stepped-up drug trafficking, Gov. Mark White says.

The Department of Public Safety reported Wednesday that the total number of crimes in seven major categories was up 18.6 percent from January to June 1986, compared with the same period a year ago.

Last year, 497,524 major crimes were reported from January to June, compared to 589,985 for this year, the DPS said.

The crime rate — the number of crimes per 100,000 people — also was up, an increase of 15.8 percent to 3,604, the agency said.

DPS Director Col. Jim Adams said all seven major crime categories saw increases: murder, rape, robbery, aggravated assault, burglary, theft and motor vehicle theft.

The DPS also reported that crime was up in all 19 Texas cities of more than 100,000 population. Those increases ranged from 4.3 percent in Wichita Falls to 35.8 percent in Amarillo.

Asked about the sharp upsurge, White tied it directly to the rising unemployment that has accompanied the state's recent economic downturn.

"I think everyone knows that as economic conditions decline, that tends to increase and aggravate the criminal element," White told a news conference.

"Also, apparently there is an exaggeration of those numbers brought about by increased trafficking in cocaine and other hard narcotics into this country, something we have been pressing the federal government to tend to for several years," the governor said.

Although the DPS reported that drug-related arrests were down 7.4 percent, to 29,551, during the first half of 1986, White said drug abuse still is to blame for the overall crime increase.

"Monies that are used to purchase that (narcotics) are almost always brought about from burglaries of businesses and houses. That's almost the total reason for those burglaries," he said.

Adams said robbery showed the largest increase in violent crime, up 34.6 percent this year.

The number of aggravated assault cases increased 30.1 percent, while rape and murder posted increases of 13.6 percent and 1.1 percent respectively. Burglary was up 20.5 percent and thefts increased 15.6 percent.

"Motor vehicle theft led the three property crime categories, showing a 21.2 percent increase," Adams said.

The estimated total value of property stolen was more than $705 million, with $281 million in property recovered by law enforcement officers.

Twenty percent of the crimes reported were cleared by arrests in the first half of 1986, the DPS said.

"There were two Texas law enforcement officers killed in the line of duty by criminal action in the first six months of this year. One officer died in a duty-related accident," Adams said. In addition, 2,192 assaults on officers were reported.

Drunken driving arrests were down 9.2 percent, totaling 62,404, the DPS reported.

Clements' credibility under fire

HOUSTON (AP) — Negotiations between representatives of Gov. Mark White and former Gov. Bill Clements over a televised debate scheduled Oct. 6 were recessed after the Democrats questioned some of Clements' business ties.

Texas Democratic Party Chairman Bob Slagle said Wednesday at a news conference in Austin that Clements is a major stockholder in an oil well services company that gives "aid and comfort" to Libyan terrorists — a charge Clements' supporters labeled "disgusting."

Slagle's news conference, and Clements' rebuttals, apparently ended the debate negotiations under way in Houston Wednesday afternoon.

Negotiations were proceeding smoothly until word of Slagle's news conference reached the group, said Modelle Brudner, debate coordinator for the League of Women Voters in Texas.

Live contacts being made of freeze-dried corneas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Surgeons say they are making so-called living contact lenses out of freeze-dried corneas to rescue the vision of people with problems too severe to be corrected by eyeglasses.

"I'm very excited about the procedure," said Jesse D. Luera, 28, who became the first patient this week at St. Luke's Lutheran Hospital to undergo the technique.

Luera said the procedure protected his livelihood as a delivery truck driver and made possible his dream to enter law school to become an attorney.

He suffers from a progressive eye disease called keratoconus, which is characterized by a thinning of the cornea so that it becomes cone-shaped and makes focusing difficult or impossible, doctors said.

They said the innovative technique, approved for general surgical use in the spring, is called epikeratophakia.

Inmate high from card

WICHITA FALLS (AP) — A customized greeting card designed to raise a prisoner's spirits gave the inmate too much of a high for authorities' liking.

A Wichita County grand jury indicted Marsha Marie Shults Coleman, 26, Wednesday on charges of allegedly furnishing a controlled substance to a prisoner at the Wichita County Jail.

While delivering mail, jailers noticed the inner pages of a card addressed to a male prisoner had been torn and reglued. On closer inspection, officials noticed a "greenish, vegetable-like substance" concealed between the pages, an affidavit said.

Tests that day allegedly showed the substance was marijuana and police traced the card by using the return address on the envelope.

Stolen pottery returned

EL PASO (AP) — Authorities returned stolen pottery that predates the visit of Columbus to the New World to its rightful owners, the Mexican people, in ceremonies at the Mexican Consulate here.

Selected items were displayed Wednesday from the load which was confiscated by U.S. Customs Service agents after smugglers attempted to bring it into the United States.

Thieves stole the cache of 101 objects, pre-Columbian ceramic vessels and household items, from an archaeological excavation near Casas Grandes, Chihuahua, in April 1985.

A 1971 treaty between the United States and Mexico that covers the recovery of stolen archaeological, cultural and historic assets enabled the return 16 months later, officials said.

Smugglers who tried to bring the pottery across the border were fined and were the subject of continuing investigations by both nations, said Don Sherman, customs district director.

JOBLESS

"The slight upward movement in the rig count in recent weeks may have been a factor in the unemployment decline as well," Hatcher said.

While a break from continuing monthly deterioration is welcome, jobless rates continue to stand more than double those of a year ago. In June 1985, rates were 6.1 and 7.0 percent in Midland and Odessa respectively.

Statewide figures reported earlier in the month put Texas' unemployment at 9.3 percent, 1.8 points lower than the 11.1 percent recorded in June.

Surrounding counties in the Permian Basin followed the local and statewide trends as the jobless rates in six of seven outlying counties fell at least a full point.

TEC unemployment percentages for July (and decline from June) are: Dawson, 16.5 (down 3.1); Reeves, 20.7 (down 2.7); Winkler, 17.4 (down 2.6); Pecos,13.7 (down 2.2); Ward, 14.1 (down 1.4); Andrews, 9.4 (down 1.1); and, Howard, 13.7 (down 0.7).

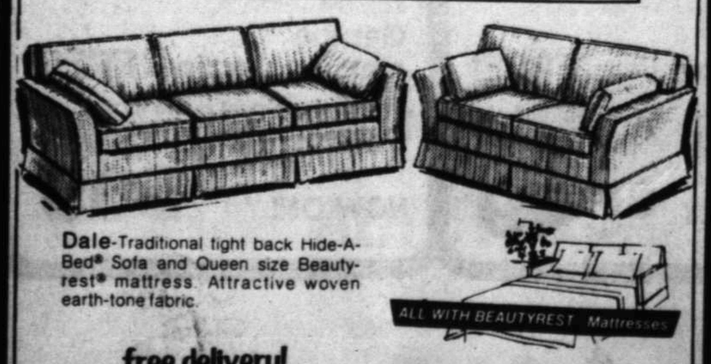

Odessa continues to rank 27th of the 28 metropolitan areas in Texas, with only McAllen showing a higher jobless rate — 19.6 percent, the first time in several months the border city has fallen below the 20 percent barrier.

Midland's ranking slipped from 17th in June to a tie for 20th, with Corpus Christi, during July. The state's lowest rates continue to be seen in Austin, 5.8 percent, and Dallas, 5.9.

Neighbors call gunman 'Crazy Pat'

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Crazy Pat. Neighbors began calling Patrick Sherrill that years ago, when the strange, hulking man would prowl their yards at night in camouflage fatigues, peering wordlessly into their windows.

They suspected him of stealing pets and trussing them up with baling wire so his Dalmatian could mutilate them. They recalled him standing behind the screen door, ignoring his elderly mother's cries for help when she fell on the front steps.

Crazy Pat unnerved people. Always staring at them in that weird way of his, they said. Children would taunt him as he pedaled around by himself on a tandem bicycle. "Fat Pat," they chanted, "Crazy Pat."

Few people who knew him expressed genuine surprise after learning that the 44-year-old mail carrier had coolly slaughtered 14 co-workers in a post office massacre Wednesday before killing himself.

"The expression on his face would never change," remembered Charles Thompson, 24, who grew up across the street from the modest, white house where Sherrill lived for 27 years.

"He'd gotten so he didn't talk to anybody," Thompson said. "He just lived in his own little world."

Sherrill's world appears to have been a lonely, unstable one that revolved around his fascination with weapons, radios and bicycles. Since his mother died several years ago, Sherrill had lived alone.

A former Marine and a member of the Oklahoma Air National Guard, Sherrill had an undistinguished military career but was a small arms instructor and considered an expert marksman.

He skipped from job to job, fixing traffic lights, repairing radios, working in the stockroom at the American Cancer Society. For nine years, until 1981, he volunteered his ham radio expertise to the Red Cross for emergencies.

Since April 1985, he had been a mail carrier at the Edmond Post Office, a job postal officials in Washington said he was on the verge of losing because of poor performance. No details were available.

On Wednesday morning, Sherrill was up before dawn, according to next-door neighbor Willy Brannon, who saw lights on in the house when he left for work at 4:45 a.m. "That was kind of unusual. His front door was open."

Brannon, 62, had had a series of run-ins with Sherrill. Brannon's wife, Crystal, 29, was afraid to go out on the front porch when her husband wasn't home; she complained that Sherrill stared at her and made suggestive remarks.

"Sometimes, he'd be coming right up here in the front and peeping through the windows at her," Brannon said. When confronted, Sherrill would deny harassing Mrs. Brannon.

When his wife complained that Sherrill was bothering her again Tuesday, Brannon marched over and found Sherrill sitting on his wooden porch swing. Sherrill laughed in his neighbor's face.

"I told police if they didn't do something about it, I'd take care of him myself," Brannon said Wednesday night.

Other neighbors also reported having called the police on several occasions over the years to complain about Sherrill peering through windows or jamming their television reception with his powerful radio equipment.

Authorities said Sherrill had no police record.

"He was strange," said neighbor Delores Coleman. "He didn't like kids and they didn't like him. He would ride his bike up and down the street after sunset. The kids would laugh at him and he always stared at them. He never smiled."

The band of 20 or so youngsters who enjoyed provoking Sherrill outgrew the sport at least five years ago, according to Charles Thompson, who was part of the group. Brannon, however, said his 10-year-old stepson had chased Sherrill off their property recently with an axe.

Thompson's sister, Jane, was frightened by Sherrill as a child.

"When I was 12, back in 1972, I would wake up at night and see Pat at my window, staring in," she recalled. "It got to be bad enough that Mother would put a glass of water by my bed so I could throw it at him and make him go away."

Ms. Thompson said Sherrill would also plant himself on the corner and leer at her when she was walking home from school, but he never touched her or threatened her.

"My mother used to take food and things over there to his mother when she was bed-ridden. She had Hodgkins disease. And after she died, Pat started hanging out here more," Jane Thompson said.

AP Laserphoto

A U.S. Postal employee is hugged by an unidentified person at a memorial service held Wednesday after 14 people were killed by mail carrier Patrick Sherrill in an Edmond, Okla., post office.

"We'd come in and Pat would be sitting here waiting for us. He would sit there for hours, sometimes not saying a word, until my mother would finally say, 'Pat, you have to leave now. Go home. Pat, you have to leave or I'll call the police.' Then he'd go outside and just stand there, staring."

The last time Jane Thompson saw Sherrill was Sunday, while she was mowing the lawn. "He was standing on his front porch, staring at me."

Once, Sherrill stormed into Mrs. Coleman's house without knocking, looking for a neighbor boy who had been taunting him. Another time, some kids were sitting on the trunk of the Colemans' car, laughing at Sherrill when hesuddenly picked up one boy and "threw him into the yard," Mrs. Coleman said. The boy wasn't hurt.

Though he usually appeared to ignore the mocking children, Sherrill at other times appeared to be overly sensitive.

Bill Wahler, who worked with Sherrill about seven years ago at Black Radio Co., said Sherrill quit one day after a customer called him "young man."

"He told the owner he had a given name, and it was Pat Sherrill," Wahler said.

Charles Thompson and his brother, Don, 29, said their most vivid memory of Sherrill involved the disappearance of neighborhood pets some 14 years ago.

The brothers said they rescued one dog that had been tied by all fours to Sherrill's back fence, later saw him carrying off another dog and found a dead cat trussed up in his garage on still another occasion.

The worst, Charles Thompson said, was when the children "untied a dog paw and tail from his fence. That's all that was left. It had been mutilated."

The Thompsons said they believed Sherrill's normally passive Dalmatian, Freckles, was trained to attack the helpless pets.

"That's when we started calling him Crazy Pat," said Charles Thompson.

SHOOTINGS

Beryl Jones, president of the Oklahoma City branch of the 288,000-member National Associal of Letter Carriers, said Sherrill was taken into the management office Tuesday and told he was "no good" and was going to be fired.

Carleton said today that he had not seen a statement released Wednesday by the postal workers union that said irresponsible management policies may have pressured Sherrill.

Jones said today that he would not use the term "pushed over the brink" to describe what happened to Sherrill after his meeting Tuesday with supervisors, but "I certainly think that had a lot to do with it."

"This was a totally depressed individual," said police Lt. Mike Wooldridge. "He had been reprimanded. He was 44 years old and was looking at the possibility of being out of a job."

Also Tuesday, Sherrill tried to contact Larry Vercelli, steward for the union, about troubles at work and apparently was seeking a transfer to Oklahoma City. Vercelli said he tried to return Sherrill's calls Tuesday night but got no answer.

After he began shooting in the post office, Sherrill did not respond to attempts to contact him by telephone and bullhorn.

Another union steward, Ron Blackwell, said most of Sherrill's work problems were "relatively minor. He didn't fly off the handle; he wasn't of a threatening nature. It was real passive aggressiveness."

"He had some social outpouring," Blackwell said today on ABC's "Good Morning America." "He was involved in ham radio, and he liked to tour bicycles, so he wasn't totally introverted, but he didn't make a lot of effort to make new friends."

Of the six wounded, one remained in critical condition early today.

Officers said Sherrill had checked out one of the weapons the day before from the Oklahoma Air National Guard, where he taught marksmanship.

"After the first shots were fired, one of our carriers yelled out, 'He's got a gun. Get down,'" said postal employee Diane Mason. "I crouched down in the littlest ball I could make."

"It was pretty madhouse," Blackwell said today. "Everybody was dashing for the nearest door."

Sherrill's body, clad in the postal service's summer uniform of a shirt and walking shorts, was found with a mailbag loaded with ammunition, two .45-caliber weapons and an apparently unused .22-caliber handgun.

Empty ammunition clips were strewn among the victims. Most had died at their stations, where they were preparing to deliver the day's mail when the shooting began about 7 a.m.

The National Association of Postmasters, meeting in San Antonio, called on the postal service "to see if (Sherrill) was mentally qualified to be a postal worker," said Hugh Bates, the group's president.

The post office killings were the third worst single-day massacre in the United States. Twenty-one people were slain in 1984 at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, Calif., and 16 by a sniper at the University of Texas in 1966.

It was the worst killing in Edmond since three employees of a supermarket were slain in a robbery in July 1985.

Acting Mayor Randel Shadid said the shootings left him frustrated and wanting to strike back at the gunman.

"I'm glad he's gone. I'm just sorry it was so swift," Shadid said.

Experts predict other interest rates will fall

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve Board is moving once again to try to stimulate a sluggish economy by slashing a key bank lending rate, and many financial analysts are predicting it won't be the last effort made this year.

The Fed announced that effective today it was cutting its discount rate, the fee it charges to make loans to U.S. banks, from 6 percent to 5.5 percent, the lowest it has been since August 1977.

Economists predicted the Fed action would be followed immediately by a cut in the prime lending rate charged by banks. They said other business and consumer interest rates, including mortgage rates, would fall as well.

Analysts predicted that in addition to the prime rate falling to 7.5 percent, mortgage rates would dip below 10 percent, down almost 4 percentage points from the highs of last year.

A variety of interest rates have already fallen to the lowest levels in nine years, and the Fed action is expected to accelerate that trend.

The Fed hopes the lower interest rates will stimulate consumer and business spending and provide the momentum needed to get the stalled U.S. economy moving again.

The central bank announced its decision Wednesday, one day after the government revealed that the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, slumped to an annual growth rate of just 0.6 percent, the weakest showing since the end of the last recession.

The GNP figure along with other weak economic signals have begun to raise new fears that the 44-month old economic recovery is in danger of toppling into another recession.

The Fed action marked the fourth time this year that the central bank has cut its discount rate in the wake of disappointing news about the economy's performance. Analysts already are predicting a fifth reduction could come in September if the economy remains in the doldrums.

Curran says he'll fight Vatican's efforts to punish him

WASHINGTON (AP) — Embattled theologian Charles Curran says he'll fight Vatican efforts to punish him for his views on sexual issues, arguing that "authority must conform to the truth" and not the other way around.

The priest said in a news conference Wednesday that his dissent from church leaders' views on such issues as birth control, abortion and divorce has been limited, respectful and proper.

And he said he won't retract it, even in the face of the Vatican's announced intention to revoke his church commission to teach as a Roman Catholic theologian.

That revocation theoretically would make him ineligible to hold onto his professorship of moral theology at Catholic University of America. And getting him out of that job at the only U.S. school directly controlled by the Vatican is the acknowledged aim of the action against him.

Curran said he is considering an appeal through the university's established procedures — a strategy that would eventually run him into a school board dominated by presumably unsympathetic bishops.

He also raised the possibility of legal action since he has a contract as a tenured professor with the university "and they have an obligation in American civil law to honor that contract."

CENTER

— Launching a mini-advertising campaign on television and in the newspaper.

— Looking into the possibility of providing free parking to Midland Center clients. Officials have targeted a parking lot east of the center for this purpose.

— Working out a more efficient agreement with caterers to provide better service for center clients.

— Reactivating a newsletter to help get more "personally" involved with the community.

"We have been going after the convention business — that's not bad, but I think this approach will be better for the community," Clark said.

Revenues for the center were $80,924 from Oct. 1 of last year to Aug. 1 of this year.

That compared to $100,767.23 from the same time a year before.

Expenses for the center — which come from the city's hotel-motel tax — are some $200,000 annually.

"We are concerned about the dropoff," Clark said, noting he has had to temporarily layoff two employees and operate on a shoestring budget.

"We hope go get more money by doing some of these things."

The announcement of the plan is some two months after Clark and Midland Center officials discussed about becoming a non-profit group.

That would have allowed the center to serve its own liquor, and, hopefully, make more money.

The center now is operated under the Chamber of Commerce and is funded by the city.

But Clark said the center could not come up with affordable liability insurance.

"After looking into it (non-profit), we felt it wasn't quite so crucial," he said, noting the spiraling liability insurance was the No. 1 reason for not making the move.

"The insurance is just too much."

The first priority of the marketing strategy is to attract the local civic club business, Clark said. Many of the civic clubs usually hold weekly luncheons.

"We also want to go after the state and regional groups. In the past, we have gone after the bigger convention groups, but we think this size will work out really well."

He cited the West Texas Justice of the Peace and Constable Convention as a prime example. That group will meet at the center later in the year.

Clark also said he hopes to get more public events in the center.

"Events such as gun shows, ski shows and others will also be a priority. We're just like a park. We want the community to use our facilities."

He also said plans to work out arrangements with caterers is under way.

"Instead of our client having to come to us and get the center and then (separately) having to set up the caterer, we would like to provide one-stop shopping."

By that, he said clients could set up the caterer and rent the center by talking to center officials.

"I'm very optimistic about the Midland Center," said Clark. "We are Midland, and we want to make this center a focal point for the community."

BANKS

Also, a majority of the acquired banks' board of directors must be Texans.

Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls, tried to amend the interstate bill to make the out-of-state institution pay a 1-percent take-over fee. Farabee called the 1-percent fee "a modest sum" and "a tremendous opportunity."

"One percent ain't going to break the bank," Farabee said, but his amendment failed, partly because senators thought it might be unconstitutional.

Edmond residents stunned by latest in string of recent tragedies

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — Boys shouting "Extra, extra," found eager buyers as they hawked The Daily Oklahoman's first special edition in 23 years on a dozen corners in this town that is no stranger to tragedy.

Everywhere, citizens were hungry for information about what happened in the post office Wednesday when a disgruntled employee unleashed a hail of gunfire that killed 14 co-workers and wounded six others.

Among the dead are five letter carriers, friendly visitors known to many homes in and around this affluent Oklahoma City suburb of 35,000.

"I don't know my postman's name," one man said, running his finger down the list of victims in a paper still inky from the afternoon press run.

"I knew some of those people," said an elderly woman, blinking back tears as she waited for a newspaper.

At the Hope Center of Edmond, a private agency that mobilized to help residents deal with the shock and horror, volunteer Julie Wilson said some callers were particularly distraught because they feared their own carrier had been killed.

"You recognize him. He's an important part of your day. But you don't know what his name is," she said.

The gunman was identified as part-time letter carrier Pat Sherrill, 44, who had been told Tuesday that he would be fired if he didn't shape up. Authorities said he walked into the building Wednesday morning, silently opened fire on co-workers with several weapons, and then killed himself.

It was the nation's worst attack by a lone gunman since a rampage at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, Calif., on July 18, 1984, left 21 people dead and 20 injured.

"This kind of insanity, you read about this kind of thing happening elsewhere," said Acting Mayor Randel Shadid. "But there are nuts running around everywhere. We're just sorry it happened here."

"I'm frustrated as hell. You want to go hit something," he said. "In the short term, it has destroyed everything we tried to do."

"I've never seen anything so horrible in my life. This is a good town. Just a good, good town. I thought that that mess at the IGA was the worst," said Lou Thomas, 22, referring to the slayings of three workers in a supermarket last year.

Two employees of Wynn's IGA supermarket were killed July 3, 1985, with shotgun blasts to the head and a third was stabbed to death in the back room of the store. Two men, one of them a former store employee, were convicted of first-degree murder and sentenced to death.

In May, about 80 Edmond homes were destroyed or heavily damaged when tornadoes swept through two subdivisions. No one was injured, but the storms caused up to $8 million in damage.

Ms. Wilson said the Hope Center has mobilized the same team it used to help victims of the tornado in a bid to help people deal with the latest tragedy.

"The work is not done immediately because people are in shock," she said. "They don't know what they need."

In spite of the string of tragedies during the past 13 months, Ms. Wilson said Edmond residents will stand up to it.

"Nobody seems to be giving up on our community," she said. "I think they're stunned by the tragedy. But we work together and pull together real well."

"This community has suffered greatly in the last year," said Lawrence Clayton, director of counseling services for the United Methodist Church.

As city merchants began organizing a campaign to provide yellow ribbons for mailboxes as a memorial to the slain workers, a tiny bar put its flag at half-staff Wednesday and a discount store lowered its huge flag until it nearly hit the ground.

Edmond, Okla., residents gather Wednesday at St. Mary's Episcopal Church for a memorial service only a few hours after a gunman went on a rampage at a local post office, killing 14 people before committing suicide.

Husband of dead woman had survived similar attack

ATLANTA (AP) — The husband of a woman killed in a disgruntled worker's rampage in an Oklahoma post office had been working in a post office here when a gunman killed two workers and wounded another last year, officials said.

Ron and Judy Denney moved to Edmond, Okla., about two months ago, said Kay Loggins, a postal spokeswoman here. Denney worked at the main branch and his wife worked at the post office in Kennesaw for 11 years.

Mrs. Denney, 39, began work at the Edmond post office on Saturday, said police Officer Brian Washburn in the Oklahoma City suburb. She died Wednesday when a disgruntled employee killing 14 co-workers and himself.

Mass murderer likely 'to be insane,' professor says

By MALCOLM RITTER
AP Science Writer

NEW YORK — What makes a mass murderer?

Delusions of persecution, excessive feelings of victimization, and even inner voices have been observed in such killers, experts say.

"Your average murderer is quite sane. Your mass murderer, statistically, is likely to be insane," said Dr. John Lion, clinical professor of psychiatry at the University of Maryland School of Medicine.

But relatively little is known about mass murderers, such as the 44-year-old part-time postal employee who killed 14 people Wednesday before taking his own life.

Not only are mass killers rare, but "they often do kill themselves after the mass murder, or are killed in the process of apprehension. So they're not well-studied," said Lion, an expert on aggression.

The few mass murderers studied often have been legally insane, with delusions of persecution and paranoia, hallucinations, urges to get even and sometimes inner voices that tell them to commit violence, Lion said Wednesday.

In contrast to serial killers, who commit killings over time rather than in a single episode, "a mass murderer has sort of an explosive outburst of rage," he said. "The serial killer controls his rage...and is quite meticulous in planning."

Dr. Park Dietz, professor of law and psychiatry at the University of Virginia, who specializes in violent behavior, defines three kinds of mass murderers. A number of people may resemble these types, and there is no clear answer why some of them become mass murderers and others don't, Deitz said.

One kind is the "pseudo-commando," such as James Huberty, the out-of-work security guard who killed 20 people at a McDonald's restaurant in San Ysidro, Calif., in July 1984.

Such killers don't have particular victims in mind, Dietz said. They show the suspiciousness and distrust that characterizes paranoia, and they keep track of their perceptions of how others have wronged them, he said.

"I see them as collectors of injustice," Dietz said. "Of course they're angry about this perceived injustice, they believe they're being treated unfairly, and they think they've exhausted the channels for seeking redress, which they usually don't do appropriately anyway."

Such people don't accept responsibility for their failures, but blame other people, Dietz said. If somebody suggests getting professional help, they reject the suggestion "and whoever made it gets on the enemies list, because it proves to them, here's someone else who can't be trusted," Dietz said.

Other tendencies include a long-standing interest in guns, he said. Such people like handling guns, they buy gun magazines and catalogs and they save their targets.

Another of Dietz's types of mass murderers is "set-and-run" killers, who use techniques that let themselves escape before the killings occur, such as bombs, arson and food tampering.

He calls the third type the "family annihilators," who are usually the senior men of the house. Depressed, paranoid and intoxicated, they kill all family members, even pets, in a single spree, and then usually kill themselves. Usually they have no previous criminal history.

Postal worker says office 'never going to be the same'

EDMOND, Okla. (AP) — Diane Mason normally can't wait to begin her work each morning as a postal carrier, but says she'll never feel that way again.

Ms. Mason, 38, was one of the survivors of Wednesday morning's massacre at the post office by Pat Sherrill, a disgruntled employee who police say shot and killed 14 co-workers before killing himself with a single gunshot to the head.

Six others were wounded, while 70 to 80 employees escaped unharmed.

"I've always loved going into work," said Ms. Mason, 38, who has worked at the post office for 18 months. "I've gotten into trouble for actually starting a little early.

"This is the greatest working environment you could ever ask for, but it's never going to be the same."

Police said Sherrill, 44, walked into the post office about 7 a.m. and opened fire on postal workers who were sorting mail for their morning routes.

"I heard moans and groans and it got real quiet, then I heard someone yell, 'He's got a gun.'" said Roger Nelson, an employee. "I knew then he was going to waste everybody he could."

"After the first shots were fired...I crouched down in the littlest ball I could make," Ms. Mason said. "He kept getting closer and closer...He stopped, then the footsteps started moving away. I never saw him, but if he came up close enough, he would have seen me...

"It's just a miracle he didn't get me."

Joyce Gragert of Douglas came to the City Council chambers Wednesday to hear about the shooting spree that took the life of her daughter, Jonna Hamilton Gragert. Mrs. Gragert said she and her husband were not bitter.

"He was a very sick man. I feel sorry for his family," she said. "I'm sure he had no animosity against her. I think it's just a matter of going berserk and being in the way."

Mother guardian of Samantha Smith's dream

By PETER JACKSON

MANCHESTER, Maine (AP) — Even now, almost a year after the fatal plane crash, Samantha Smith is everywhere in her mother's big white house.

Oversized political cartoons, recalling the young peacemaker's celebrated trip to the Soviet Union three years ago, share wall space with a memorial the Maine Legislature dedicated to "a beaming, sensitive child...who would not accept man's inhumanity to man."

A Life magazine foldout, featuring Samantha among dozens of other newsmakers, is displayed in a study along with a cover from Soviet Life showing her dressed in a Russian folk costume.

Upstairs, Samantha's room remains that of a young teen-ager. A deflated Snoopy balloon hangs over the bed. A poster of the pop star Prince hides behind the door.

Jane Smith says she has left the bedroom trappings intact so the script writer for a planned television movie about Samantha can learn about his subject when he visits late this month.

Jane Smith, mother of the late Samantha Smith, poses in what used to be her daughter's room.

AP Laserphoto

"After the writer comes, though, I'm dismantling it. I refuse to be one of these old ladies who keeps a museum room," she said in an interview in which she reflected on the tragedy and described efforts by the Samantha Smith Foundation to promote regular exchanges of U.S. and Soviet youngsters.

Samantha, then 13, her father, Arthur Smith, and six other people were killed Aug. 25, 1985, when their commuter plane crashed while trying to land at Auburn, Maine. They were en route home from England, where Samantha had been filming a segment of the short-lived TV series "Lime Street."

The cause of the crash remains unknown. The National Transportation Safety Board is not expected to complete its report until late August or early September.

Through her lawyer, Edgar F. Heiskell, Mrs. Smith is trying to negotiate a monetary settlement with Eastern Express Airlines, known as Bar Harbor Airlines at the time of the crash. Heiskell said a lawsuit would be filed if no settlement is reached shortly.

Samantha first attracted national attention when, at her mother's suggestion, she wrote to then-Soviet leader Yuri Andropov, mentioning her fears about the possibility of nuclear war. "She was very serious about this," Mrs. Smith said.

Andropov responded by inviting the girl to visit his country.

During the family's tour of the Soviet Union and the subsequent fanfare that launched Samantha's Hollywood career, Mrs. Smith remained less visible than her daughter and husband. While Smith, a college English professor, acted as Samantha's manager, Mrs. Smith kept her job with the Maine Human Services Department, managing residential services for children in state custody.

In January, she began a yearlong leave of absence to concentrate full-time on heading the Samantha Smith Foundation.

"I went back to work" after the crash, she said, "and was trying to do my job at work but I ended up getting phone calls all the time relating to the foundation...I was spending evenings on the phone constantly and I was exhausted and felt like I wasn't doing either job well."

She continued: "I didn't know how it would be to devote all my time to what seems like the past. I thought that might seem strange after awhile. But I think it's becoming such a forward-looking organization, and developing into a lot of terrific projects, that I don't think that it's...strange at all."

Sponge mimics human diseases, scientists claim

WOODS HOLE, Mass. (AP) — A type of sponge that has lived on Earth for a billion years mimics a human disease process so closely it has been patented for use in testing drugs to combat certain human illnesses, researchers say.

The way in which its cells clump together is remarkably similar to the clumping of human white blood cells in arthritis, gout and many other diseases that produce inflammation, said Dr. Gerald Weissmann, director of rheumatology at New York University Medical Center.

The red-bearded sponge of Moses is the oldest multicellular organism on Earth.

Weissmann said his latest finding, made in collaboration with Moseley Waite of the Bowman Gray School of Medicine in Winston-Salem, N.C., shows that the series of chemical steps thought to be important in triggering human inflammation occurs in exactly the same way in the sponge.

The finding was to be presented today at the General Scientific Meetings of the Marine Biological Laboratory in Woods Hole, where the research was done.

Reagan ready for veto battle over sanctions

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — President Reagan, taking a lesson from his recent congressional victory on the textile bill, is preparing for another veto battle with Congress over new sanctions against South Africa.

Donald T. Regan, the president's chief of staff, said Wednesday in an interview that Reagan "will never be reconciled" to sanctions against South Africa imposed by Capitol Hill.

Regan pointed out that the president was harshly criticized for his stand against the textile bill, designed to sharply limit imports to aid domestic industries battered by foreign competition. But the president's veto of the legislation was sustained earlier this year, a move Regan hinted might be repeated this fall.

"We've taken unpopular decisions before. The textile veto was not a popular thing to do, but we thought it was the right policy," Regan said.

"If what emerges from the Congress is something that in the judgment of the president would not be productive, would not be helpful...then I don't think he would accept it," Regan said of the sanctions legislation.

The chief of staff noted that the administration's policy is evolving. U.S. officials have been in close consultation with British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and other allies.

"There are discussions going on...with allies, with friends, trying to determine what courses of action remain open...We're probing," Regan said.

The feud between Reagan and Capitol Hill has been simmering since the House and Senate overwhelmingly passed sanctions with margins far in excess of those needed to override a presidential veto. The milder sanctions imposed by Reagan one year ago are due to expire Sept. 9.

Regan has said the president, vacationing at his ranch in the nearby Santa Ynez mountains, intends to renew the executive order, but not add new sanctions against the white-ruled regime. The chief of staff, acknowledging that the president has often made last-minute turnabouts on policy issues, said on Tuesday that the door remained "a little bit" open to expanding the curbs.

Regan was asked whether the administration, in the face of the overwhelming vote for sanctions in both houses of Congress, was resigned to accepting further steps against South Africa.

"No, we'll never be reconciled to that," he replied.

"We don't feel that further sanctions are helpful to the situation," he said.

Regan called the Senate bill "very punitive." That bill would ban imports of several minerals and commodities, prohibit new investment and end U.S. landing rights for South African Airways, while the House bill calls for a near-total trade ban.

On another subject, Regan said the administration was "looking to see if something meaningful can be done in a summit" between Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Bolts blamed in oil spill

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — The failure of two bolts caused 7,500 barrels of oil to gush last month from the Strategic Petroleum Reserve's storage cavern at West Hackberry, La., the U.S. Department of Energy said Wednesday.

A brief statement from the DOE's Strategic Petroleum Reserve Project Management Office here said more than 6,100 barrels of the spilled crude oil was recovered and returned to the southwest Louisiana salt dome.

No one was injured in the July 7 spill, in which oil stored at high pressure spurted hundreds of feet into the air, landing in nearby Black Lake. It happened at 5:45 a.m. at Cavern No. 3, which has a capacity of nearly 10 million barrels of oil, and the spill was contained several hours later.

Macaw attacks intruder

COLDWATER, Mich. (AP) — Red the macaw turned into a feathered fighting machine, attacking a man who broke into a produce market and apparently foiling a burglary attempt, police said.

The cackling crimestopper, a popular fixture at Betty's Farm Market in this rural southwest Michigan city, was being hailed as a hero after police nabbed a suspect Wednesday in the break-in.

"This is a large parrot, it's monstrous," said police Chief Gary Chester. "He's really friendly, but apparently he didn't like the guy tearing the place apart."

Chester said about $1,500 in damage was done to the produce-and-flower shop, where the macaw has a perch and freely flies around the store.

He said officers were notified of the break-in early Wednesday, but had no suspects until a city employee found a man sleeping near a city garage and called police.

"The suspect said the only thing he remembers is being attacked by a large parrot that bit him several times on the arm," Chester said. "He said the parrot attacked him and he just went nuts and fled the scene."

Woman apprehended

WASHINGTON (AP) — A woman was arrested after she climbed the White House fence and jumped onto the lawn early today, Secret Service officials said.

Rosita Bourbon, 33, whose address was not given, was apprehended immediately after using a wooden pallet to scale the northeast side of the fence at about 1:15 a.m., according to William Corbett, a spokesman for the Secret Service.

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — A far-right white leader today demanded immediate action against Desmond Tutu for advocating anti-apartheid sanctions, and a Johannesburg newspaper likened the black prelate to a "religious pop star."

Tutu, the Anglican bishop of Johannesburg, was scheduled to return to South Africa today after a trip to Japan, China and Jamaica in which he repeated his call for international economic measures against his country as a way to force racial change.

Andries Treurnicht, leader of the Conservative Party, the country's largest extreme-right political organization, said Tutu's "actions and statements in any other country would be construed as treason."

"He should be dealt with immediately," said Treurnicht, who accused the government of weakness in its dealings with the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize winner.

Last week, Manpower Minister Pietie du Plessis issued what he called a "friendly warning" to Tutu, saying his calls for sanctions "border on high treason."

Tutu is scheduled to be installed Sept. 7 as archbishop of Cape Town, the top Anglican position in southern Africa, and he has invited politicians, entertainers and civil rights leaders from the United States and elsewhere to attend.

"Clearly, the bishop intends to gain a great deal of political mileage out of his ecclesiastical superstardom," said the pro-government Citizen newspaper, in an editorial which noted that the guest list included many critics of South African policies.

The Citizen said the invited entertainers — who include singer Stevie Wonder and actor Bill Cosby — "have as much right to attend his enthronement as the man on the moon."

"Whether the government should ignore him or prosecute him, and thus add martyrdom to his other qualifications, is a matter for argument," The Citizen said.

"But one thing is certain — there is no greater thorn in South Africa's side than this man of the cloth who strides through the world like a religious pop star."

Meanwhile, the government's Bureau for Information said today that four blacks had been killed in the previous 24 hours, including a 17-year-old shot by security forces in Chesterville, a township near Durban.

The bureau said the security forces fired two shots after a crowd threw stones at them.

The other deaths included a black man and woman killed when a house was set afire in a township outside Port Elizabeth and a man whose burned body was found in Tembisa, northeast of Johannesburg.

According to official count, about 250 people have died in unrest since the government declared a state of emergency on June 12. The government says most were blacks killed by other blacks.

The unrest has been blamed on apartheid, which by law and custom establishes a racially segregated society in which the 24-million black majority in South Africa has no vote in national affairs.

The 5-million white minority controls the economy and maintains separate districts, schools and health services.

Today marked the first day since June 16 that South African newspapers considered themselves free to report on security force actions of the past two months.

The Cape Times said among the actions were the arrest of about 1,000 striking employees at a dairy in Johannesburg, police raids on the homes of 12 members of the End Conscription Campaign, and a four-hour police interrogation of the head of the University of Cape Town's school of economics, Professor Francis Wilson.

The newpaper issued the report following a Wednesday court hearing at which the government conceded that two emergency restrictions on the press were improperly implemented and thus not binding.

The orders barred unauthorized reporting of actions by security forces, and unauthorized trips by journalists into unrest areas.

Lawyers for newspapers that brought the court case said the two orders could be legally reimposed if the government printed them in its official gazette, which was not done when the orders were issued four days after the emergency declaration.

Emergency press regulations that still stand include a ban on reporting "subversive statements" and an order authorizing the seizure and suspension of newspapers deemed to contain subversive material.

Jackson: Summit would help put end to apartheid

MAPUTO, Mozambique (AP) — The Rev. Jesse Jackson said a summit between President Reagan and the heads of black-governed nations surrounding South Africa would help end apartheid there.

"We are moving toward a major summit meeting between President Reagan and southern African leaders," the American black civil rights activist said Wednesday, adding that the State Department had been contacted about such a meeting.

Jackson visited Angola and Botswana before arriving in Maputo.

Apartheid, by law and custom, establishes a racially segregated society in South Africa. The 24-million black majority has no vote in national affairs, while the 5-million white minority controls the economy and maintains separate districts, schools and health services.

Oregon Pharmacist Making Cosmetic History!

Wrinkle Cream Great Success

It's an exciting story of a pharmacist who developed a wrinkle cream which women all over the country are clamoring for.

Robert Heldfond is making cosmetic history with his EB5 cream. His dream since Pharmacy School has resulted in a wrinkle cream which is enjoying record sales in department stores and which cosmeticians and customers are praising very highly.

Research lab tests show that by daily use of EB5 cream, morning and night, facial lines, lines around the eyes, lines on the forehead and around the mouth are smoothed. Thousands across the country are so pleased that EB5 is 5 creams in 1 jar ... EB5 is a wrinkle cream, a night cream, a moisturizer, an eye-cream, and a make-up base ... all in one.

EB5 appears to be the natural way to help aging skin. It contains natural Liprogen, collagen and lipoprotein with Vitamins E and B5, A and D, and other ingredients. Pharmacist Heldfond's EB5 cream is greaseless and leaves the skin soft, velvety and younger-looking.

If you are concerned about your skin appearing to be aging too quickly, hurry and find some EB5 cream. One jar lasts for months and is sold with a money-back guarantee.

Note: EB5 cream is available in most JCPenney Stores with cosmetic departments.

'Tyranny sowed bullet, reaped revolution'

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Filipinos today marked the third anniversary of the assassination of opposition leader Benigno Aquino with his widow, President Corazon Aquino, saying the killing was the seed of this nation's freedom.

"Tyranny sowed a bullet and reaped a revolution," Mrs. Aquino said at a nationally televised Roman Catholic Mass attended by 5,000 people at suburban Santo Domingo church, where her husband's body lay in state after his Aug. 21, 1983 shooting death.

Mrs. Aquino then traveled by motorcade to Manila airport, where she unveiled a brass and stone marker on the spot where her husband was gunned down upon returning to his homeland from voluntary U.S. exile.

Three hours later, the president's eyes glistened with tears when she told about 50,000 people at downtown Rizal Park: "This day has its sadness. But when I see you by the thousands...the sadness goes and I believe we will succeed."

The crowd responded with chants of "Cory, Cory, Cory," the president's nickname.

Aquino's slaying and charges that the military under then-President Ferdinand E. Marcos was involved were a prelude to the fraud-tainted Feb. 7 election called by Marcos, his flight into exile Feb. 26 in the face of a civilian-military revolt, and Mrs. Aquino's installation as president.

Marcos' armed forces chief, Gen. Fabian C. Ver, 24 other soldiers and a civilian accused of complicity were acquitted of the slaying in December. The Marcos government blamed the killing on an alleged Communist agent who was immediately slain by soldiers.

Mrs. Aquino, speaking at the Mass, compared her husband's death to a biblical reference describing the seed that falls to bring forth a harvest: "One man sprawled on the tarmac, one seed fallen to the ground watered with blood. One man threw in his life...and brought us home a harvest of freedom."

At the airport ceremony, Mrs. Aquino stood solemnly over the slab marking where her husband was killed. Aquino family relatives said it was her first visit to the site since the assassination.

A choir sang "Hallelujah," soldiers played taps, and Christian and Moslem priests recited prayers at the ceremony, attended by Coretta Scott King, widow of assassinated American civil rights leader the Rev. Martin Luther King Jr., government officials, foreign diplomats and others.

"Like Jesus Christ and Mahatma Gandhi, Martin Luther King Jr. and Ninoy (Benigno's nickname) Aquino proved that the blood of martyrs can be a powerful redemptive force," Mrs. Aquino said. "They proved that the forces of repression and brutality can slay the dreamer but they cannot slay the dream."

In her speech, Mrs. King told Mrs. Aquino: "I'm here to say that I support your efforts and will...return to the United States carrying the message that you need the support of all people of good will to rebuild this great nation."

At the Rizal Park rally, former Sen. Lorenzo Tanada, the nation's most prominent nationalist leader, urged Filipinos to pray for Mrs. Aquino when she visits the United States next month "to help her resist the pressure" to allow U.S. military bases to remain in the Philippines.

Tanada touched off cheering when, alluding to rumors that some factions in the military might mount a coup, he said, "In these times of difficulties, we must show everyone, especially the military, that the nation loves Cory."

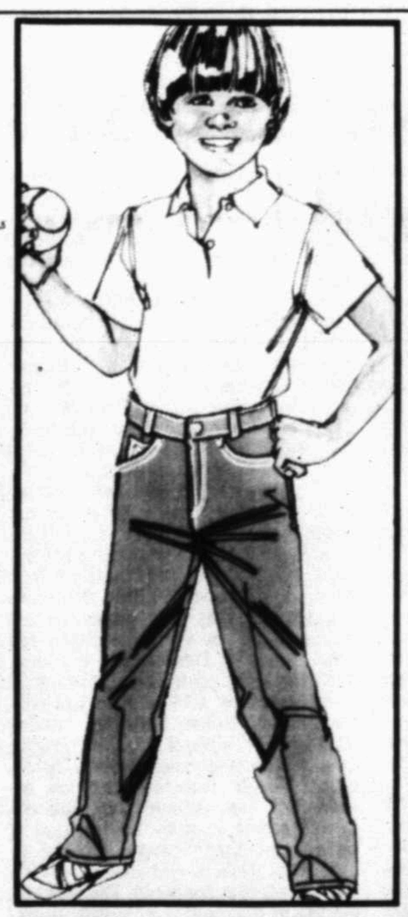

Some of the observances of Aquino's death were similar to the government-backed rituals that marked birthdays and other anniversaries of Marcos and his wife, Imelda, during their two decades in power.

Politicians, government agencies and corporations sponsored newspaper ads praising "Ninoy" Aquino.

"Freedom is never granted, it is taken," read a quotation from Aquino in an ad sponsored by the national sweepstakes office.

"Ninoy rendezvoused with an assassin and his death breathed new life into the struggle of his fellow Filipinos against a repressive regime," said the News Herald, a daily founded by Mrs. Marcos' brother, Benjamin Romualdez.

The Daily Express, owned by a businessman close to Marcos, carried articles and ads praising Aquino but said in an editorial that his death "deepened the conflicts" among Filipinos, an apparent reference to recent clashes between Marcos loyalists and supporters of Mrs. Aquino.

'Drug-net's' holes

The Reagan Administration was right in launching Operation Alliance, a major new effort intended to help stem the flow of illegal narcotics into this country from Mexico. But it would be naive to assume that even this massive assault on the drug trade will accomplish more than superficial results.

Attorney General Edwin Meese has called Operation Alliance "bigger and more complex" than any narcotics operation ever conducted along the U.S.-Mexico border. And that it is, bringing together 20 federal agencies along with state and local law enforcement officials in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona and California.

In addition to that concentration of efforts, 1,000 Border Patrol officers will be given the authority and the responsibility to carry out searches for drugs and arrest suspected traffickers. Their efforts will be bolstered by the work of hundreds of agents for the Customs Service, Drug Enforcement Administration, FBI, Internal Revenue Service and other agencies. The operation is expected to cost about $266 million.

Yet for all the manpower, all the tireless effort and all the money, the Reagan Administration is fighting an awesome enemy that possesses remarkable parallels to the threat this nation faces from communism.

■ Just as a communist hierarchy operates in a netherworld of secrecy and back-alleys, drug traffickers also rely on the dark of night and faceless participants to carry out their work.

■ Communists depend on support from within this country to carry out their moves here. Drug traffickers depend on the frailties of human beings to keep demand for their product high.

■ Public acceptance of drugs in this country also complicates efforts to bring the drug trade under control. As long as no consensus exists that drug use is wrong, it will not be controlled.

■ Both communism and the drug world operate on the basis of a promise — one promising a "workers' paradise," the other greater insight and pleasure in living. Both promises, of course, are false.

Still, because of those facts even a massive drug enforcement effort such as Operation Alliance faces a strong, uphill battle. Granted, any reduction in the flow of illegal narcotics into this country likely will be worth the effort and expense merely in the lives saved and human suffering avoided.

But this "drug-net" stretched across the U.S.-Mexico border, for whatever good it accomplishes, won't solve the problem. The problem can only be addressed through use of both law enforcement efforts and an educational program to teach Americans the dangers inherent in drug use, along with cooperative pacts that convince Mexican officials it's in their best interests to join the United States in combating the narcotics industry, and in enforcement efforts to get the real kingpins behind the drug industry.

Operation Alliance obviously is only a start. The goal of a drug free society is a commendable one, but it won't be reached inexpensively or overnight.

Another View: Don't unbuckle yet

Doubtless the folks who refuse to buckle up feel vindicated by the new report that the use of lap belts in back seats of cars might lead to more injuries, not fewer. Any gloating, however, is premature.

The National Transportation Safety Board concluded from a study of 26 frontal collisions that many rear passengers might have been less severely injured, or in some cases might even have lived, had they forgone the use of lap belts. The reason? A lap belt (which buckles only around the pelvis, in contrast to the triangular-shaped shoulder harness that restrains the entire torso) can cause the body to jackknife, concentrating the force of impact on a relatively small area. In light of that possibility, the board said it could neither recommend nor discourage the use of rear-seat belts.

Swell. Now what's a passenger to do?

The best bet is to buckle up anyway. At least three safety-minded organizations — the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, the National Safety Council and the American Automobile Association — have cast doubt on the board's report, and for good cause:

— The number of accidents studied was very small.

— All the accidents were of one type, front-end.

— The sample was not scientifically selected.

— Many previous studies seem to show conclusively that lap belts save lives by preventing the ejection of passengers. Unbelted youngsters, in particular, can become unguided missiles upon impact.

The safety board did make one sound recommendation: that government require automakers to install shoulder harnesses in rear seats, not only in front as is now the case. Failing that, far more research must be done before the public should be encouraged to unstrap back-seat belts. Twenty-six carefully selected accidents simply are insufficient to justify the abandonment of well-established safety practices.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Thursday, Aug. 21, the 233rd day of 1986. There are 132 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On Aug. 21, 1878, the American Bar Association was founded by a group of lawyers, judges and law professors at the Saratoga, N.Y., town hall.

On this date:

In 1680, Pueblo Indians took possession of Santa Fe, N.M., after driving out the Spanish.

In 1831, former slave Nat Turner led a violent insurrection against slavery in Virginia. He was later executed.

In 1858, Senatorial contenders Abraham Lincoln and Stephen Douglas began their famous debates.

In 1940, Communist revolutionary Leon Trotsky died of wounds inflicted by an assailant the day before in Mexico City.

In 1945, President Harry S. Truman ended the Lend-Lease program that had shipped some $50 billion in aid to America's allies during World War II.

In 1959, President Dwight D. Eisenhower signed an executive order declaring Hawaii the 50th state of the union.

Five years ago: Convicted spy Christopher Boyce, who had escaped from prison in January 1980, was recaptured in Port Angeles, Wash. (Boyce, convicted of selling secrets to the Soviets, was the subject of the book and movie "The Falcon and the Snowman.")

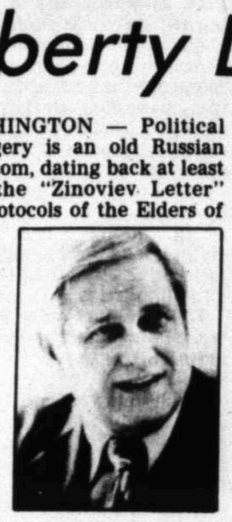

Today's birthdays: Britain's Princess Margaret is 56. Basketball player-turned-actor Wilt Chamberlain is 50. Singer Kenny Rogers is 48. Actor Clarence Williams III is 47. Singer Jackie DeShannon is 42.

Thought for today: "Even weak men, when united, are powerful." — Friedrich von Schiller, German dramatist, poet and historian (1759-1805).

Liberty Lobby creates 'Gorby letter'

WASHINGTON — Political forgery is an old Russian custom, dating back at least to the "Zinoviev Letter" and "The Protocols of the Elders of Zion," and continuing to this day with more or less sophisticated KGB disinformation documents.

Jack Anderson

Now a laughably sophomoric example of this dubious art has been circulated in a fund-raising appeal by The Spotlight, official organ of the ultra-rightwing Liberty Lobby, founded by Willis Carto, who is now its treasurer. The fake is a letter purporting to come from Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, "congratulating" the latest of Liberty Lobby's many enemies for using "Soviet tactics" to make life difficult for the right-wing organization.

The enemy in question is David Holmes, superintendent of the House Periodical Press Gallery, whose credentials committee rejected The Spotlight's application for gallery privileges. Holmes told our associate Corky Johnson that The Spotlight was rejected in part because it is the Liberty Lobby's house organ and not an independent journalistic voice.

The "Gorbachev Letter" is complete with a Russian-alphabet signature and a letterhead featuring a gold-embossed hammer-and-sickle emblem and Gorbachev's address ("The Kremlin, Moscow") in Old English script. It is addressed to "Dear Comrade Holmes" and reads:

"My congratulations on your decision to bar the Spotlight from covering activities of your Congress.

"The people of Soviet Russia understand just how important it is to control the press. I am pleased that you understand our position and have decided to use Soviet tactics.

"I extend my invitation to you to visit here soon, so you can teach us first hand some of the other techniques you use to keep those who disagree with the American 'free' press from having the right to cover important events.

"I am sure you can show us a great deal. Sincerely, Mikhail Gorbachev."

It's not clear whether the perpetrators of the undated letter expected its readers to take it as authentic, but in a postscript to the accompanying two-page appeal for money, Spotlight editor Vince Ryan refers to "the enclosed simulated letter from Soviet Communist Party General Secretary Gorbachev."

The fake letter may not have been the only imaginary part of the fund-raising appeal. Holmes is quoted in Ryan's letter as saying to The Spotlight: "There are a lot of people on the committee who are afraid of you people, and a lot who don't like you. You're a definite threat to a lot of people here." Holmes denied ever saying any such thing.

Ryan asks for contributions to the "Foundation to Defend the First Amendment," which has the same Capitol Hill address as The Spotlight and Liberty Lobby. He asks for money "to support FDFA's court battles to defend the First Amendment," but gives no particulars on this battle.

Carto told us that he did not author the phony Gorbachev letter, and said he is not an "officer or director or employee" of the Foundation to Defend the First Amendment. His denials were contained in a written response to an inquiry by us, in which he also gave his side of an internal fight over control of the Populist Party, founded by Carto in 1984.

Carto was recently kicked off the party's executive committee in a 5-4 vote, an action Carto described as illegal and thus "of no consequence." The party's parliamentarian, William K. Shearer, said the Populist Party disagrees with racist and anti-Semitic views expressed in The Spotlight. The party's director of communications, Conrad LeBeau, agreed: "The rift started in the Populist Party because Carto picks people (to run for office) who tend to be racist."

Carto did not reply to our request for comment on the party members' charges.

UNDER THE DOME: The fate of Rep. Les Aspin, D-Wis., as chairman of the Armed Services Committee will be decided by his performance at the House-Senate conference on the Pentagon's authorization bill. The House version requires that the SALT II treaty be adhered to, which doesn't sit well with either the White House or the GOP-controlled Senate. Speaker Thomas O'Neill, D-Mass., and other House Democrats will insist, though, and Aspin undoubtedly will be uprooted from his chairmanship if he fails to stand firm on this point. If he bends, it could be the last straw for Democrats disgruntled over his compromises with the White House.

EVANS & NOVAK

House Demos still want Carter-style taxes

WASHINGTON — Beneath bipartisan acclaim for the completed tax reform lies an unresolved ideological dispute promising a Democratic effort next year to bump up the radically low and flat tax rates scheduled to start in 1988.

Rowland Evans

Robert Novak

That explains the late decision in the Senate-House conference to superimpose for 1987 only the House Democratic bill's rate structure even though it actually increases revenue over present levels and ignores other revenue-gaining means. In private sessions, House Democratic conferees talked about extending those rates into 1988 if big budget deficits persist.

After two years of futile efforts to press Ronald Reagan into fulfilling Walter Mondale's tax increase forecast, Democrats still misread the man in the White House. Nor do they seem to understand the proven economic impact of delaying tax rate decreases. Just as the full velocity of the 1981 Reagan tax cut was not felt until its third year went into effect, the tax reform's benefits are not likely to appear until 1988 when nobody will be paying taxes at an overall rate above 28 percent.

Based on this economic model, House Democrats may unwittingly have handed a windfall to the 1988 Republican nominee. That makes it even less imaginable that a 1987-passed tax increase for 1988 will clear the Oval Office.

The wedding of liberal tax reform and supply-side tax reduction has not yet been consummated. Senate Republicans led by Finance Chairman Bob Packwood are for it, but not House Democrats. Their fear that permanent rate reduction will further shrink the revenue base for federal spending was unspoken but underlies the conflict last week between Senate and House negotiators.

Otherwise, the long nights, frayed tempers and intricate maneuvers are inexplicable. After all, had not House Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski approved in principle Packwood's magical 27 percent top rate so long as distribution for the "middle class" was sweetened? In truth, the entire three-week conference was a story of incessant Democratic pressure to push up rates.

The first House Democratic offer was similar to the five-rate graduated system finally adopted for 1987, supposedly to close the revenue gap. Other means were rejected. A Senate Republican proposal to pick up $17.6 billion through tougher Internal Revenue Service enforcement was greeted with contempt.

The IRS gimmick had been crafted at the Treasury in expectation that congressional numbers crunchers, using new economic projections, would find a shortfall for the bill. It turned out to be $17 billion. Treasury suggestions that this paper deficit ought to be set aside were greeted with howls of Democratic derision.

No wonder, considering the grenade suddenly lobbed into the conference by House Majority Leader (and speaker-apparent) Jim Wright. Just as the conferees neared agreement, Wright reiterated his low esteem for tax reform and Rostenkowski's role in it by urging that it be turned into a tax increase to achieve "deficit reduction." With that sniping at his back, Rostenkowski could scarcely overlook a shortfall based on economic projections.

The solution was — supposedly for 1987 only — a top rate of 38.5 percent, surpassing the House bill's 38 percent that President Reagan last year said he would veto. Contrary to talk about revenue neutrality, the finished bill is actually an $11 billion tax increase for 1987 alone, enough to avoid dreaded sequestration of funds under the Gramm-Rudman deficit bill.

But that was not enough for House Democrats. Having pushed the new permanent rate from 27 percent up to 28 percent in conference, they now wanted 29 percent. That was so unacceptable to the Senate that deadlock was averted when Democratic Sen. Bill Bradley, as he had before, retrieved tax reform from the fire. He offered an alternative plan and talked his friend Rosty out of 29 percent.

No sooner was reform agreed upon that Rostenkowski started talking about a separate tax increase. Democratic congressmen privately declared their intention to assail the two-rate (15 and 28) structure to go into effect in 1988.

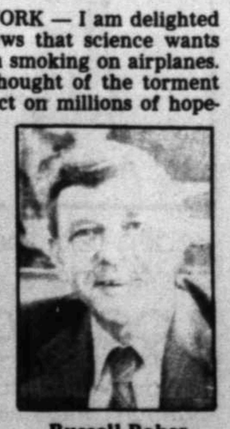

Whether or not they appreciate it, they are pushing Jimmy Carter-style tax reform: close tax shelters and continue graduated, relatively high marginal rates — a money machine to revitalize domestic spending. The one-year delay in radically reduced tax rates represents one last chance to achieve it.

RUSSELL BAKER

Consider 'pleasures' of a former smoker

NEW YORK — I am delighted by news that science wants to ban smoking on airplanes. The thought of the torment this will inflict on millions of hopelessly addicted tobacco fiends is delightful.

Russell Baker

Here is the sort of pleasure I was looking forward to when I abandoned the weed. Indeed I would probably still be a smoker had I not been overcome by envy of such non-smoker's pleasures. non-smoking, I observed, offered delights far more delicious than any to be had from a cigarette.

For instance, note the line above saying, "I would probably still be a smoker." For maximum pleasure it should be written, "I would probably be dead." Here's why:

I assume many people reading this are smokers, and one of the rewards of being a passionate non-smoker comes from constantly saying "dead" and "death" in the presence of a smoker.

The point is, you see, that 99 of every 100 smokers are already worried sick about not being able to quit because the whole publicity apparatus of the entire Western world has been geared up to persuade them that cigarettes are killing them.

Since it's a really tough addiction, though, they find that stopping is as painful as the rack and bastinado. So you can throw them into a fearfully depressing suicidal state of mind by saying "death."

If, like me, you're one of the excellent people who have had the strength of character to quit smoking, you're entitled to the pleasure of making smokers feel utterly miserable. Naturally, you wouldn't want any of them to go all the way, even though they are already killing themselves slowly with tobacco.

Here's something else that can give you terrific pleasure:

Invite a lot of formidable non-smokers to dinner and invite a single hopeless nicotine addict. Just inside your door post a sign saying, "Thank you for not smoking," so the wretched smoker will see it as soon as he enters.

Talk about misery. Instantly he realizes he's got to go through the entire dinner with these really formidable people, and can't have a cigarette!

The agony is exquisite. He will sit there, unable to concentrate on the formidable conversation, his nerves screaming for smoke. Watching him will make you feel superb about how wonderful you are because you had the strength to give up this foul, degrading, disgusting, vile, filthy habit.

To give you a little extra pleasure, when coffee is about to arrive sometimes the smoker will break under the torture, pretend he hasn't noticed he is with a better class of people and light up. O.K., here is your chance to really humiliate him.

Though you've deliberately put no ashtrays on the table, you know what he's thinking, don't you? He's thinking he'll use one of your saucers as an ashtray.

So you give him time to get his cigarette stoked up. Then set out the coffee cups ... but ... without saucers.

Some transparently false story about burglars stealing your saucers will satisfy the formidable guests who, in fact, will be so thoroughly delighted by the prospect of the smoker's imminent disgrace that they wouldn't care if you served coffee in paper cups.

Soon the smoker has only three options: (1) If he has the gall to ask for an ashtray, you explain that since you don't traffic in death at your house, you don't smoke, so have no ashtrays.

(2) He may start flicking ashes into his hand, then sneaking them into his jacket pocket. Soon, however, he has to stub out that odious butt, and he can't do that in his pocket without destroying his jacket. So what does he do? Drops the butt in his coffee cup. Noisy sizzling fills the room.

With a gasp of repugnance you can signal the guests that it's all right to recoil in dismay before such barbarism. Imagine how rotten, coarse and ill-mannered this smoker is going to feel for days to come.

(3) If he should react violently to having the vicious and reprehensible character of his tobacco habit called to his attention, he might grind his cigarette butt out on your tablecloth and stalk out of the house.

Though this can be costly in tablecloths, the pleasure afforded by the spectacle of a smoker betraying the depth of his dreadful enslavement to his vice is well worth its price in linen.

And now we may have the delightful opportunity of watching him and all his kind suffer smokeless in airplanes. Unless of course the government does the proper thing and orders that all persons too weak and immoral to quit smoking be moved onto a large isolated tract and forbidden to fly away, lest they contaminate those of us who have chosen not to die.

Chernobyl accident major setback, Soviets say

MOSCOW (AP) — Top Soviet atomic energy officials today said the Chernobyl disaster severely damaged the country's nuclear power program, caused 31 deaths and forced the evacuation of 135,000 people.

"The accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant has hurt the Soviet nuclear energy program badly," Andranik Petrosyants, chairman of the State Nuclear Energy Committee, said at a news conference. He did not elaborate.

Petrosyants reiterated that the accident forced consideration of changes in the location and output of Soviet nuclear reactors, and whether more safety systems were needed. No decisions have been made, he said.

Valery Legasov, first deputy director of the nation's leading nuclear power institute, said two explosions occurred in the No. 4 reactor at Chernobyl on April 26, one caused by a huge concentration of steam and the other a chemical blast.

The accident at the Ukrainian plant 80 miles north of Kiev could be blamed almost entirely on human error during an experiment in which workers tried to determine how long a turbine could keep operating in a total power failure, he said.

"It may sound paradoxical today, but they (plant workers) were concerned precisely about the safety of the plant," Legasov said.

The last official word on casualties was a Politburo statement issued July 19 which said 28 were dead. Since then, reporters had seen three new graves at a special Moscow cemetery plot for Chernobyl victims.

Petrosyants, who called the deaths a "great misfortune," said the 31 dead included two people killed in the accident itself and 29 who died at hospitals in Kiev and Moscow of radiation effects.

Leonid Ilyin, a vice president of the Soviet Academy of Medical Sciences who has monitored health consequences of the disaster, said 135,000 people were evacuated from the northern Ukraine and southern Byelorussia.

He indicated the evacuees were from an 18-mile danger zone around the power station as well as people ordered from areas beyond that limit.

Soviet officials have said 92,000 people were evacuated from the danger zone within a week of the accident. Media reports later said other evacuations were ordered in isolated areas outside the zone found to be contaminated.

All evacuees were given medical checks for radiation after the accident and most will be checked annually for the rest of their lives, Ilyin said.

He said 203 people were stricken by radiation sickness from the accident, including 22 with "fourth degree" exposure, which is the most severe.

Twenty-three people had "third degree" exposure, 53 received a "second degree" dose and the others were less lightly contaminated, he said, without explaining how the exposure levels were determined.

Three patients remain in serious condition, and 14 patients have burns over 80 to 90 percent of their body, Ilyin said.

Asked about a report by a Soviet newspaper Wednesday of a fire above the ruined reactor May 23, Legasov said there were minor fires in the reactor area that month.

Cease-fire won't be discussed

MEXICO CITY (AP) — El Salvador's president said the government would not negotiate a rebel proposal for a cease-fire during a third round of peace talks, while both sides met to work out details for such negotiations.

The government and rebels began discussions at an undisclosed Mexican site Wednesday to arrange a time, place and logistics for another attempt to end the 7-year-old civil war in which 61,000 people have died.

Notimex, the Mexican government news agency, said the session was held at a religious retreat for four hours Wednesday and was expected to resume today.

Gerardo Pena, spokesman for the leftist rebels' political-diplomatic commission, said in a telephone interview Wednesday night the discussions were likely to continue today.

He said the meeting began with an air of "mutual respect" and said "it is clearly possible" an agreement could be reached for a third round of talks.

Rodolfo Antonio Castillo Claramount, a Salvadoran representative who is foreign minister and vice president, said the government would have no comment until discussions end. He said the two sides were keeping a low profile at the request of Mexico.

Among the participants was Roman Catholic Archbishop Monsignor Arturo Rivera Damas of San Salvador, who has acted as mediator in arranging the peace negotiations.

WORLD in brief

Anti-goverment protests resume in south Pakistan

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Scattered anti-government protests resumed today in the south, and an opposition leader accused authorities of launching a "reign of terror" that could turn the region into a second Beirut.

Another leading dissident, however, said the drive to oust President Gen. Mohammad Zia ul-Haq was faltering because of poor organization and timing.

Minor clashes between police and opposition activists were reported in parts of Sind province in the south. More protests and marches were planned later today in Lahore, Rawalpindi and elsewhere.

Riot police used tear gas and clubs to disperse a few small protests in Sind, while opposition supporters attacked government buildings and blocked roads and railway tracks.

But the wave of rioting that has claimed at least 27 lives and left dozens injured in this Moslem Asian nation since Aug. 13 appeared to be dying down.

Anti-government protests diminished in several cities Wednesday and riot police generally were in control.

Bomb kills Irish officer

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — A roadside bomb exploded in southern Lebanon today, killing an Irish officer serving with the United Nations peacekeeping force and wounding two other soldiers, a U.N. spokesman said.

The Irishmen were on a foot patrol on a dirt road between the villages of Taire and Haddata at the time of the 7 a.m. explosion, spokesman Timur Goksel said.

He said the name of the dead officer would not be disclosed until his relatives were notified. The two wounded Irishmen were "doing well," Goksel said.

In Dublin, Irish state radio identified the officer as Lt. Angus Murphy, 25, of Tuam in County Galway.

The roadside bomb was probably triggered by remote control, according to Goksel.

Mexican probe ends

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The federal government has completed its investigation into the alleged torture of an American narcotics agent by Jalisco state police, but results first will be given to the U.S. government, a Mexican news agency reported.

The Excelsior news service Wednesday night quoted officials in the Federal Attorney General's Office as saying they knew what happened Aug. 13 when Drug Enforcement Administration agent Victor Cortez was arrested by state police in Guadalajara, 360 miles northwest of Mexico City.

The news service gave no indication when details of the investigation would be released. There was nobody available Wednesday night to comment on the report in the attorney general's office.

The United States lodged a diplomatic protest Monday against Mexico, charging Cortez was subjected to "unprovoked, brutal and criminal acts" by Jalisco state police. U.S. officials say Cortez was detained for six hours, beaten and abused with an electric cattle prod.

Earlier Wednesday, a senior Mexican official with direct access to the investigation said he expected a report to be issued by the end of the week. He said about a dozen state policemen, witnesses and employees at the state police headquarters have been questioned since Friday.

Warrant issued in death

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — An international arrest warrant was issued for a U.S. wildlife researcher in the murder of gorilla expert Dian Fossey, found hacked to death last year at her remote mountain camp, a Rwandan government publication said today.

Actualites Nationales, a daily French-language newsletter published by the Rwandan Ministry of Information, identified the suspect as Wayne Richard McGuire of Hoboken, N.J.

McGuire, 34, was a research assistant for Ms. Fossey in her study of the rare mountain gorillas that live on the slopes of Mount Visoke, a 12,175-foot dormant volcano in Rwanda.

The newsletter said the Rwandan government had issued an international warrant for McGuire's arrest and that he was "suspected of being implicated in the murder."

The publication said five Rwandans, whom it did not identify, also were suspects.

The newsletter said McGuire left the central African country July 27, but did not say where he went.

TORNADO or THUNDERSTORM

WATCH
(Conditions are right for a tornado or severe thunderstorm to form.)

WARNING
(A tornado or severe thunderstorm already is in existence.)

In North Texas, partly cloudy with a chance of thunderstorms through Friday. Thunderstorms mainly southeast Friday. Highs in the lower to mid 90s. Lows in the lower to mid 70s.

In West Texas, cattered thunderstorms most sections except far west through tonight. Some locally heavy rains possible south plains and Permian Basin tonight. Widely scattered thunderstorms all sections Friday. Lows tonight low 60s north. Mid 60s southwest mountains to the mid 70s along the Rio Grande. Highs Friday mid 80s north to near 90 southeast mid 90s far west and 105 Big Bend valleys.

In South Texas, partly cloudy and warm tonight. Lows near 80 coast to the mid 70s inland. Partly to mostly cloudy Friday with scattered to numerous thunderstorms. Highs near 90 coast to the low and mid 90s inland except near 100 southwest.

Cooler weather in area forecast

From Staff and Wire Reports

Slightly cooler temperatures and the possibility of thunderstorms are forecast for tonight and Friday by the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Airport.

Partly cloudy skies will cover the Midland area tonight and Friday. A 40 percent chance of thunderstorms and a low in the upper 60s are called for tonight. Thunderstorms may be locally heavy. The chance of storms decreases to 20 percent on Friday when the high is predicted to be near 90.

Easterly winds will blow over the area at 10-15 mph tonight, increasing to 10-20 on Friday.

Wednesday's high tied the previous record high of 105 set for that date in 1964. This morning's low was 16 degrees above the record low of 54 set for this date in 1947.

STATE

A slow-moving cold front triggered thunderstorms over much of the Texas Panhandle early today, and forecasters predicted additional rainfall to spread across the state later.

The front edged into the northern portion of the south plains just before sunrise. Elsewhere, isolated thunderstorms dotted a small section of South Central Texas near San Antonio.

The National Weather Service said middle- to high-level clouds were visible over the remainder of the Lone Star State.

The weather service said it should be fair to partly cloudy with scattered thunderstorms through tonight across most of the state.

Thunderstorms were expected mainly in southeast parts of North Texas on Friday. Highs should be in the lower to mid 90s, with lows in the lower to mid 70s.

NATION

Rain and thunderstorms dampened broad sections of the nation today, prompting high water alerts in the South and West, after a day of drenching rainfall and record high temperatures.

Flood watches were posted across much of North Carolina, South Carolina and in southwestern Virginia.

A flood warning was issued for a large section of northern Utah and a flash flood watch was in effect across northeast and east central Nevada.

Rain and thunderstorms extended along the eastern Gulf Coast and southern Florida as well as from the Virginias across eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Maryland and Delaware.

Hatfield works to change Hogs' boring numbers

SWC Preview, Arkansas

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — The numbers are amazingly consistent, almost boring. In 10 of its 11 regular-season games, the University of Arknansas football team threw nine to 12 passes. The exception was 18 against Texas.

Quarterback Greg Thomas threw a total of 72 times during the 11 games. That was 72 more than he threw the year before.

Naturally, the emphasis this spring was on the pass.

"Our No. 1 priority was to get confident with a wide range of passes," said Arkansas Coach Ken Hatfield.

"Greg Thomas did a tremendous job for us as a sophomore considering he had only a few plays under his belt," Hatfield said. "The thing he did good last year, he ran the option. The thing he needed the most improvement on was his passing. The previous spring, he spent all his time on option style plays.

"We feel good about throwing any down now," Hatfield said.

Quarterback coach David Lee says Thomas excels at protecting the ball.

Thomas is only one reason the Razorbacks should be more productive on offense. Running backs James Rouse, Sammy Van Dyke and Joe Johnson are back along with fullbacks Derrick Thomas and Marshall Foreman. Rouse was the Offensive Newcomer of the Year in the Southwest Conference last year after he netted 550 yards and scored nine touchdowns.

"Later on in the year, people tried to stop James and that opened things up for the quarterbacks and fullbacks," Hatfield said. "When you're in the I, everybody keys the tailback. If you're keying the tailback in the flexbone, the fullback will make a lot of yardage."

Foreman has 1,247 yards and 13 touchdowns during his career; Thomas has 1,148 yards and 10 touchdowns.

The wide receivers are James Shibest, already third on the UA career receiving list, and Donnie Centers. Jim Goodman took over as receiver coach in February and said, "Walking in and coaching Shibest and Centers is like being given a car dealership that sells only Cadillacs."

In the offensive line, Limbo Parks returns at guard and Chris Bequette, who plans to spend his final two years of football eligibility pursuing a law degree, has been moved from guard to tackle. Freddie Childress, 300-plus, and Bryan White, 280, are the largest guard and center ever to play at Arkansas.

The Razorbacks will be missing all three members of the secondary and the two inside linebackers from the 1985 defense that did not allow a rushing touchdown in its last nine games.

Rickey Williams, the fourth leading tackler last year, and Erik Whitted are the new linebackers. At 6-foot-4, 210, Steve Atwater could be an excellent safety.

The defensive line starts with noseman Tony Cherico, All-SWC as a sophomore. At tackle, Jerryl Jones and Rodney Beachum have been replaced by better athletes — David Schell and Wayne Martin. At 6-foot-4 and 6-foot-5, Schell and Martin should improve the Arkansas pass rush.

Arkansas, 10-2 last year, opens with three straight non-conference games in the state.

Napoleon may lose despite Navy ruling

OXNARD, Calif. (AP) — The decision allowing Ensign Napoleon McCallum to play pro football on the weekends may have been a departure from tradition for the Navy, but it may not be enough for the Los Angeles Raiders.

"We really need him on almost a full-time football season basis rather than just a weekend basis." Raiders Coach Tom Flores said Wednesday.

"With all that's needed during the course of a week, it would be very difficult for any player to be able to contribute on Sunday if he just showed up on Sundays or just Saturday and Sunday. There's just so much work to do."

"IT'S TOUGH to be a weekend warrior on a 45-man roster," said Raiders Assitant Coach Steve Ortmayer, who works with running backs. "We're going to be able to probably keep four running backs, and if one is only going to be here two days, it's going to be awfully tough on this team to practice and those kinds of things."

The 23-year-old McCallum was selected by the Raiders in the fourth round of the NFL draft last April — even though he faced a minimum five-year military commitment.

McCallum's schedule with the Navy has already been mapped out.

"Right now, his working hours are 5 a.m. to 2 p.m. Monday through Friday. He also has duty, 24 hours on the ship every fifth day, plus whatever else comes up," said Commander David Dillon, Director of the Navy Information Office, West.

"His availability to go to practice or play games is at the discretion of the commanding officer, Captain K.R. Barry."

Barry was on another ship and would not be available until late Thursday.

According to a Navy statement released at the Pentagon, Navy Secretary John F. Lehman accepted a recommendation from the chief of naval operations and the commandant of the Marine Corps "to allow Ensign Napoleon McCallum to participate in professional football games on a not-to-interfere basis with his military duties."

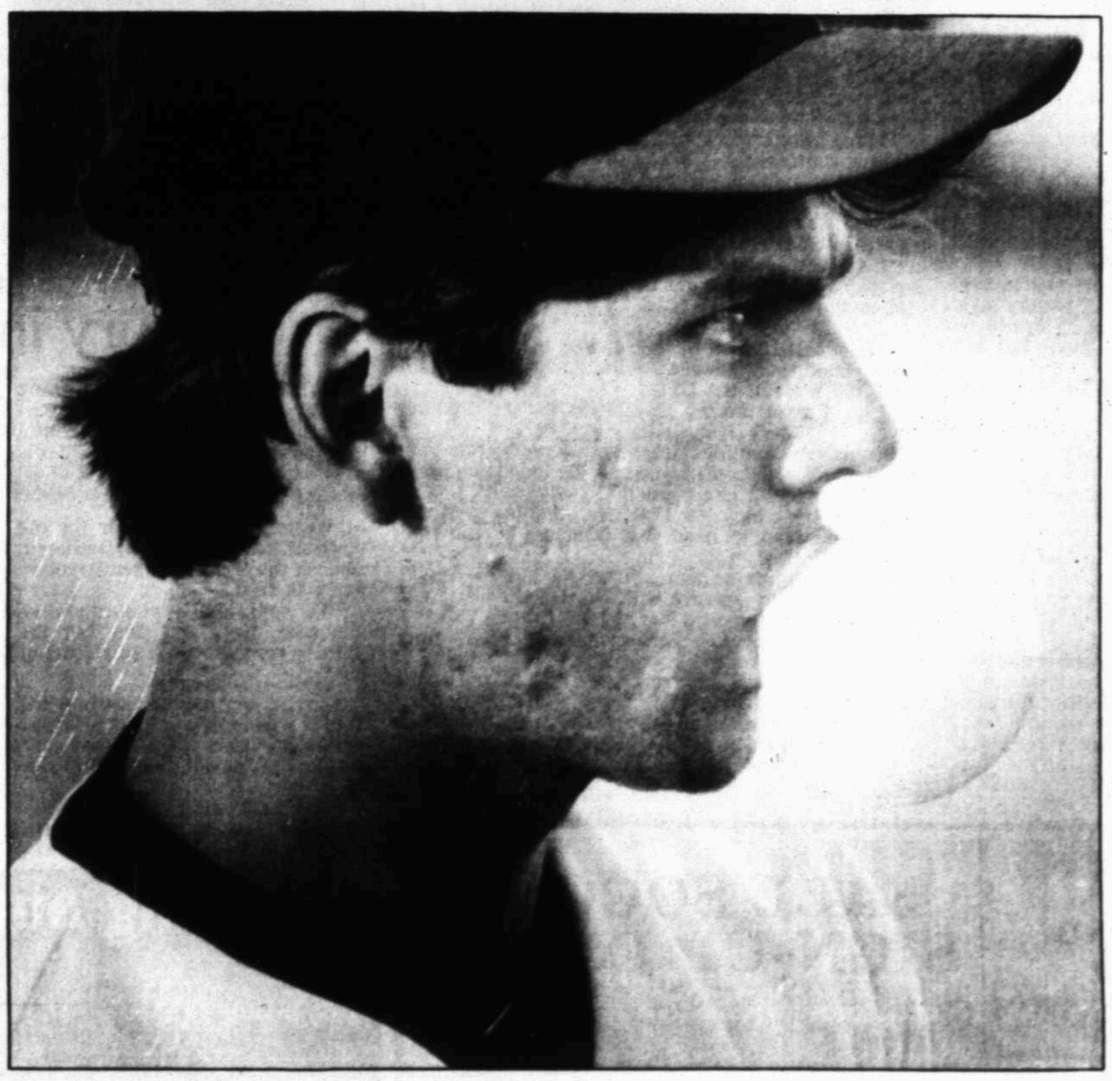

"The permission to participate is given to Ensign McCallum with the understanding that his responsibilities as a commissioned naval officer are primary and his participation will not be allowed to conflict with assigned shipboard duties."

THE NAVY, in its statement, sought to play down the decision by stressing it was consistent with the service's general policy on civilian employment. The Navy allows its personnel to hold second jobs "as long as there is no conflict with military duties."

Lehman's decision was described by one source who requested anonymity as something of a compromise. There is a faction within the service that foresees potential recruiting benefits for the Navy if McCallum is used on the weekends by the Raiders, the source said.

There is another group that stresses nothing should interfere with the military obligation incurred by individuals who are educated at taxpayer expense at military academies, the source added.

The compromise, however, may not allow the Raiders enough access to McCallum to make the move worthwhile.

SMU seeks reassessment

DALLAS (AP) — NCAA penalties that stripped Southern Methodist University of scholarship signings last football season and allowed only half the limit this year may send school officials pleading for a reassessment.

"They (the NCAA) told us they did not want to destroy the football program," said Bob Hitch, SMU athletic director. "They told us they would not destroy our football program and we will continue talking with them as we deem necessary."

SMU officials said they are drafting a plan to appeal for additional scholarships and expect to discuss their dwindling football program with the NCAA before next year.

SMU was placed on NCAA probation last August for recruiting violations. The Mustangs were prohibited from signing anyone to a scholarship in the past recruiting season and are allowed to sign only 15 of the 30 scholarship limit this year.

As a result, the Mustangs have 70 players on scholarship, 25 below the NCAA limit. They will lose 12 seniors this year and replace them with 15 freshmen or transfers.

Charles Smrt of the NCAA's enforcement division said the university has the right to appeal to the Infractions Committee if special circumstances exist.

"When they imposed grant cuts in the past they have said the committee is open for the institution to come back if there are special circumstances," Smrt said.

Hitch said he is also concerned that the lack of players may hurt the Mustangs' spring practice program. In the next two years inexperienced players may make up 75 percent of the team, he said.

Hitch wouldn't elaborate on the university's possible appeal or when it might be presented.

Angels leave Midland with victory

By TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

If only the Midland Angels had played the rest of the home season as they finished it, the final 11 games might carry some significance in the closing days of the Texas League pennant race.

Instead, the Angels will be playing out the string at El Paso and then San Antonio, with an eye toward compiling some negotiable figures for next year.

With the help of the San Diego Chicken, the Angels broke the season attendance record as 3,295 crowded into Angel Stadium Wednesday night and Midland responded with a 9-7 victory over Beaumont's Golden Gators. That gave Midland the final home series of the season four games to one.

IN TYPICAL Angel fashion, however, Midland made the final game win look tougher than it was while lefthander Mike Romanovsky, 2-4, was better than the bare figures indicate.

The southpaw from New Jersey led 5-4 when he was lifted after a lead off single by Randy Byers in the eighth. He should have been working on a three-hitter in the ninth and leading 4-1, which shows how much three errors can hurt a guy.

The only legitimate run off Romanovsky was Santos Alomar's lead off homer in the third. The rest were so tainted, the Environmental Protection Agency should have been called in.

BUT THE big story for a team that is 58-63 for the season, and so far out of the second half West Division race that even radar can't locate them, was the attendance.

Wednesday's crowd brought the season's total to 129,674 in 63 dates, 2,058 per game. The old record was set last year with 127,836 in 66 dates for a 1,936 average per game.

And as usual, the Chicken, who popped out of a Kentucky Fried Chicken box in the second inning, staged his customary entertaining show, adding several new wrinkles to an act that is heading into its second decade.

There were the four all-in-a-row chicks, the Jaws episode in which the Chicken terrorized everyone on the field before fainting from fright when the plate umpire suddenly turned on him with a double whammy and, of course, his Howard Cossell-stylized interviews.

As for the game, Midland finally ended the agony for Romanovsky, who must have been wondering by the seventh what it would take to win, by scoring five runs in the home seventh.

When starter Mike McClain loaded the bases with two walks and a single, he was replaced by lefty Paul Mancuso, who gave up a sac fly to pinch hitter Steve Liddle. That tied it at 5. A walk to David Heath and John Hotchkiss followed with a two-run single. Jeff Schaefer singled to left and Dave Montanari's bad-hop single over second plated a final run.

Terry Clark came in in the eighth and finished the game for Midland, surrendering two ninth inning runs and pitching to the tying run before it was over.

With Kevin King out of the lineup after suffering a shoulder injury Tuesday while endeavoring to make a diving catch, Manager Joe Maddon had to do some lineup juggling. The top four batters lashed out nine hits with Pete Coachman collecting three.

James Randall doubled Coachman home after his first hit in the first and in the third Dante Bichette's double plated Montanari while the single runs in the fifth and sixth came through the courtesy of some loose fielding.

Phillies' Don Carman ...loses perfect game bid

Carman, Terrell fail in no-hit bids

Associated Press

Philadelphia's Don Carman came close to a perfect game and a loss, but he wound up with neither Wednesday and Detroit's Walt Terrell was within one out of a no-hitter before, Wally Joyner made sure — again — that the California Angels were not part of history.

Carman did not allow a base-runner to the San Francisco Giants for eight innings before Bob Brenly hit a long drive to left-center field for a double off center fielder Milt Thompson's glove.

"When it was first hit, I was sure it was going to be a home run. I was thinking about going from a perfect game to a loss in one pitch," Carman said after his 1-0, 10-inning victory.

Carman got out of the ninth without giving up a run, then the Phillies won it in the 10th when Juan Samuel homered off former Midland Cub Mike Krukow, 12-7, with one out. Steve Bedrosian pitched the bottom of the 10th for his 17th save.

Terrell pitched 8⅔ hitless innings before Joyner lined a clean double to right field as the Tigers beat the Angels 3-0.

"I'm not disappointed. I just wanted to win the game," Terrell said after finishing with a one-hitter.

For Joyner, it marked the second time in his rookie season that he had broken up a no-hitter with a ninth-inning double. He spoiled the bid by Texas' Charlie Hough with a one-out double on June 16.

"I thought about the Hough game, not in the on-deck circle, but in the bottom of the eighth inning," Joyner said.

"I didn't want to walk off the field knowing that I made the last out of a no-hitter. That would have been embarrassing. I was relieved a little bit. I knew it was a base hit right away."

Terrell, 11-9, had retired 16 straight hitters before Joyner came to bat in the ninth. The left-handed Joyner pulled Terrell's first pitch into the right-field corner.

"I'd throw the same pitch to him again — maybe a little more inside. You can't second-guess yourself. If you do that, you're not going to last in baseball," Terrell said.

NATIONAL LEAGUE

Pirates 4, Astros 1

First-place Houston stayed 7½ games ahead of San Francisco despite losing to Pittsburgh and Rick Rhoden.

Rhoden, 14-7, knocked in the Pirates' first run and pitched a five-hitter, retiring the last 16 Houston batters after giving up a fourth-inning single to John Mizerock.

With Pittsburgh trailing 1-0, Rhoden tied the score with a single in the fourth inning and later scored on a three-run double by Bobby Bonilla off Bob Knepper 15-9. Rhoden's hit broke a streak of 21 consecutive scoreless innings by the Pirates overall and 36 straight against the Astros.

Reds 3, Cardinals 1

Buddy Bell hit his sixth homer in his last seven games and Bill Gullickson shut out St. Louis for eight innings before settling for a 3-1 victory.

Gullickson, 10-8, outdueled Bob Forsch, 12-7, who had his personal six-game winning streak snapped and lost for the first time since July 7.

Gullickson, who allowed nine hits in 8⅔ innings, struck out two and walked one. He got last-out relief help from John Franco, who collected his 21st save.

Mets 7, Dodgers 5

New York, leading the NL East by 18½ games, posted its first series sweep in Los Angeles since 1968 by beating the Dodgers for the third straight time.

Walker gives Dallas edge

Eagles, Cardinals chase with new coaches

NFC East Preview

DALLAS (AP) — Change is the word this year in the NFC East, where the Philadelphia Eagles and the St. Louis Cardinals have new head coaches and the Dallas Cowboys have seen a 1985 draft gamble pay off.

The Cowboys signed running back Herschel Walker, the 1982 Heisman Trophy winner freed from his contract by the New Jersey Generals of the dormant USFL. Dallas had drafted him in the fifth round in 1985, a move club President Tex Schramm acknowledges was a gamble at the time.

"I was worried some other team might pick Walker," he said. "I imagine there are a lot of people in the NFL today asking the question now why they didn't take him in the fourth round. Now, what we were hoping might happen has happened."

MEANWHILE, THE Eagles' 7-9 record and St. Louis' 5-11 marks last year triggered coaching changes.

Buddy Ryan, the defensive mastermind of the world champion Chicago Bears, has brought his 4-6 defense and tough talk to Philadelphia. Ryan immediately made headlines by predicting the Eagles will win the division.

Ryan put the Eagles through a rugged boot camp in West Chester, Pa., with grumblings galore.

"I want the best 11 on both sides of the ball," he says. "If it happens to be guys with 20 years experience, that's fine. If it happens to be with rookies, that's fine, too."

Less brash but just as determined is Gene Stallings, the head coach of the St. Louis Cardinals, who was in charge of the Cowboys' secondary.

The New York Giants and the Washington Redkins, who matched the Cowboys' regular season ledger of 10-6 last year, are expected to breathe hard on Dallas again.

In fact, the Giants and Cowboys get after it right away in a Sept. 8 Monday night opener in Texas Stadium.

Dallas Coach Tom Landry, the dean of the NFL coaches, predicts a tight divisional race.

"The chemistry that enabled us to come back in 1985 is what we've got to build on this season," Landry says. "It was a very successful season for us. It should be another tough race in our division. Anybody can win it."

Bill Parcells is the first Giants' coach in 22 years to lead the team to consecutive winning season and playoff appearances.

The Giants were rudely dismissed from the NFC playoffs by the Bears, and Parcells says "I'd like to improve the firepower of our offense. I'm also concerned about the age of our team at inside linebacker and on the defensive."

Parcells wants to hear no talk of the Giants being favored to win the division.

"You can't be favored until someone beats the Cowboys," he said.

THE GIANTS' offense is fueled by quarterback Phil Simms, who had 22 touchdown passes but gave up 20 interceptions, and Joe Morris, who scored 21 touchdowns and gained 1,336 yards.

The Redskins will be without the retired John Riggins and will move to a tandem, two-back offense featuring George Rogers, who gained 1,093 yards in 1985.

Also gone is quarterback Joe Theismann, who passed for eight touchdowns and 16 interceptions before he suffered a broken leg and decided to take his pension.

"I think we've had a little bit of everything happen around here and now it's time to get back into the playoffs," said Coach Joe Gibbs. "I think our guys right now should be hungry. That's what I'm hoping."

In this year's draft, the Cowboys traded up to take wide receiver Mike Sherrard, a speedster from UCLA. Dallas hadn't drafted a wide receiver in the first round since Dennis Homan in 1968.

And Tony Dorsett, despite asking for a raise or trade in a burst of anger over Walker's reported five-year, $5 million contract, is still the heart of the Dallas offense. He needs 1,481 yards to pass Jim Brown and become the NFL's second all-time leading rusher behind Walter Payton.

The defending NFC East champions enter the 1986 campaign with a new offensive coordinator, Paul Hackett, who has been given credit for much of Bill Walsh's success with the San Francisco 49ers.

The Cowboys, picked to finish third or fourth in the division last year, weren't all that bad in 1985. They beat the New York Giants 28-21 on Dec. 15 to capture their 13th division title and made the playoffs for the 18th time in 20 years. They were eliminated from the playoffs with a 20-0 loss to the Los Angeles Rams.

Fading into the Cowboys' past is the so-called "quarterback controversy." Former backup Gary Hogeboom was sent to Indianapolis and Steve Pelluer, who engineered the game-winning drive against the Giants that put the Cowboys in the playoffs, is now the No. 2 quarterback behind Danny White.

"It's a great feeling just knowing the team is counting on me," White says. "I don't feel as much pressure as I did in the past."

THE CARDINALS have switched to a 3-4 defense under Stallings. They allowed 34 touchdown passes in 1985, the most in the NFL.

"I don't want the big play to shatter us," Stallings says.

Offensively, Stallings needs better production from quarterback Neil Lomax who had 18 touchdown passes but served up 12 interceptions.

"I believe we have good players," Stalling says. "We certainly intend to head this franchise in the right direction."

The Eagles running game, which was 23rd in the NFL last year, should improve with No. 1 draft pick Keith Byars of Ohio State and No. 2 pick Anthony Toney of Texas A&M. They join Earnest Jackson, who gained 1,028 yards last year.

However, things are a big unsettled in the Dallas camp as running back Tony Dorsett says it's not economically feasible for him to remain on the team with Herschel Walker, but club officials say they don't intend to trade the veteran.

No-hitters highlight LL World Series play

WILLIAMSPORT, Pa. (AP) — After unprecedented back-to-back no-hitters, the 40th Little League World Series is down to the final four.

The teams remaining represent oil-rich Maracaibo, Venezuela, more than half a million residents of Tainan, Taiwan, and the Sun Belt cities of Tucson, Ariz., and Sarasota, Fla.

Sarasota's Philip Olson allowed just one baserunner, struck out 10 and had a bases-loaded double in throwing a 5-0 no-hitter to eliminate Brunswick, Md., Wednesday.

Not to be outdone, Tainan's Wu Chun-Liang no-hit Valleyfield, Quebec, striking out 12 and hitting a two-run homer in a merciless 26-0 rout.

Maracaibo was scheduled to play Tainan in today's 2 p.m. semifinal, with Tucson meeting Sarasota at 5 p.m..

Tainan tied a Series record with 21 hits and came within one of the runs record, both set by a 1973 champion from Tainan, while the French Canadians were reduced to trying to bunt their way on. They managed two grounders to second and put down three bunts.

No-hitters are not unheard of — there have been 11 in 40 Series — but there had never been two in one day.

"There are very good pitchers on all teams," Tainan manager Lee Ming Chen said. "We thought we would probably play the South or West team in the championship game."

He can't be blamed for looking ahead to Saturday's nationally-televised final. The Far East regional winner has gone to the finals 16 times in the past 19 years, winning 15 times. Taiwanese teams have reached the finals 10 times, Tainan twice.

The Sun Belt has dominated the U.S. bracket since 1973, with the West sending eight teams to the finals, the South sending five.

Olson and Wu shrugged off their no-hitters.

"Yes, it was easy," Wu said. "I was confident."

"I just throw the ball and listen to the manager," Olson said.

His manager, Ben Thurston, calls the pitches from the dugout.

"He was fantastic," Thurston said. "He's one of the best in Little League. He throws whatever I tell him to. Curve, drop, sidearm, underhand curve, overhand fastball, whatever."

Olson stands 5-foot-7, a few inches taller than most of the 11- and 12-year-olds at the Series. He is 9-0 in the tournament, including a 16-strikeout performance in the regionals.

Grand jury indicts Mets

HOUSTON (AP) — The attorney for New York Mets pitcher Ron Darling and second baseman Tim Teufel says he's not surprised his clients have been indicted on charges of assaulting two Houston police officers.

"We expected it. It's par for the course," attorney Dick DeGuerin said. "If the grand jury gets it, you're going to trial.

"We could have presented evidence to the grand jury but the place to try this case is in a court of law."

A grand jury indicted Darling and Teufel Wednesday on charges of assaulting Officers R.G. Gresham and D.L. Bristley outside a nightclub July 19.

Assistant District Attorney Mike Anderson said Darling and Teufel would be arraigned Aug. 29 before State District Judge Joe Kegans. No trial date has been set.

"If a New York Met or a Houston Astro hits a police officer who's trying to arrest him, he needs to be dealt with," Anderson said. "If you or I hit a police officer, we'd be on the docket without any hoopla."

The players and teammates Bob Ojeda and Rick Aguilera were arrested following an incident that started when Teufel was told he could not take an open beer bottle out of the club.

Ojeda and Aguilera were charged with hindering an arrest, a misdemeanor, and will have their cases heard in another court. All four players were held in jail overnight following the incident.

Darling and Teufel face maximum penalties of 10 years in prison and $5,000 in fines.

BASEBALL

Braves 8, Cubs 3

David Palmer pitched and batted Atlanta past Chicago.

Palmer, 9-8, allowed five hits in 7⅓ innings and combined with Jeff Dedmon on a six-hitter. Palmer also keyed a 17-hit attack by the Braves with three hits and three RBI.

Padres 3, Expos 2

Hot-hitting Kevin McReynolds homered twice in support of Eric Show as San Diego edged Montreal.

McReynolds hit an opposite-field drive to right in the fourth inning and a two-run homer deep into the left field seats in the sixth to account for all of the Padres' runs. McReynolds now has 12 RBI in his last five games.

AMERICAN LEAGUE

Rangers 7, Royals 1

Charlie Hough tossed three-hit ball for 8⅔ innings and reliever Dale Mohorcic tied a major-league record in getting the final out as Texas downed Kansas City.

Hough, 10-8, ended his four-game losing streak. He threw a run-scoring wild pitch in the first inning, but went on to retire 18 straight batters.

Red Sox 9, Twins 1

Roger Clemens, the top winner in the major leagues, pitched a two-hitter for his 19th victory as Boston beat Minnesota.

Clemens, 19-4, struck out six and increased his AL-leading total to 186, while walking a season-high six. He also lowered his league-best ERA to 2.54.

Blue Jays 4, White Sox 1

Lloyd Moseby connected for a two-run homer and Joe Johnson pitched eight strong innings as Toronto beat Chicago for its fifth straight victory.

Johnson, 3-1, shut out the visiting White Sox on five hits for eight innings before leaving after allowing a leadoff single in the ninth. Tom Henke, who gave up an RBI single to Ron Hassey, got the final three outs.

Yankees 5, Mariners 2

Don Mattingly and Dave Winfield hit two-run homers and New York broke a three-game losing streak by beating Seattle.

The visiting Mariners had won four straight games.

Brewers 6, Indians 3

Rob Deer and Ernest Riles hit three-run homers and Bill Wegman combined with two relievers on a six-hitter as Milwaukee, last in the AL East, got back to .500 by beating Cleveland.

Riles connected in the second inning and Deer hit his 28th in the third, giving the visiting Brewers a 6-0 lead.

Smiling outside. Crying within.

Often we live behind a mask. We hide our feelings, our problems, our emotions deep within ourselves, afraid to let them out. By not honestly dealing with our true emotions, we ultimately suffer. Depression sets in. Relationships flounder. We're robbed of the joys life should bring.

On August 15th, Permian General Hospital established a comprehensive mental health management unit within the hospital offering quality care for emotional disorders on an in and outpatient basis.

Because mental health care is sometimes misunderstood, all patient contacts and treatments are handled in the strictest of confidence. And because our mental health unit is found within the confines of a full-service hospital, the cost for treatment is covered by most hospitalization insurance plans.

Living behind a mask can rob you of the joy and happiness you deserve. Learn to feel the warmth life has to offer.

Wednesday's Stars
HITTING — Jim Rice, Red Sox, hit a home run and two doubles, driving in two runs, as Boston beat Minnesota 9-1.
PITCHING — Don Carman, Phillies, and Walt Terrell, Tigers. Carman pitched eight perfect innings before Bob Brenly doubled leading off the ninth inning. Carman allowed only one hit in nine innings, and Philadelphia beat San Francisco 1-0 in 10 innings. Terrell pitched 8 2-3 hitless innings before Wally Joyner doubled for California's only hit as Detroit defeated the Angels 3-0.

Rick Sutcliffe is puzzled over inability to shake pitching slump that has bedeviled him the past month.

Bad mound slump humbles Sutcliffe

CHICAGO (AP) — No one is more puzzled at Rick Sutcliffe's inability to shake the pitching slump that has bedeviled him the past month than the "Red Baron" himself.

"Believe me, believe me, believe," Sutcliffe said, "I've tried every way to figure it out. Everytime I go out there, with every pitch and every inning I expect things to fall into place. But they don't."

Sutcliffe, 30, won the Cy Young Award in 1984 after the Chicago Cubs acquired him from Cleveland in mid-June. He posted a 16-1 record in pitching the Cubs to the National League East title.

Since that glorious season, which earned him a five-year contract at a reported $2 million a year, Sutcliffe has posted a record of 12-19. He was 8-8 in 1985, a season in which he was on the disabled list three times because of a variety of injuries.

This season he is 4-11 and spent most of July on the disabled list because of tendinitis in his right shoulder.

Since returning early this month, he has four starts without a victory.

"I don't understand it," said Sutcliffe, an imposing individual at 6-foot-7, 215 pounds with flaming red hair to go with his full red beard.

"I honestly used to feel everytime I went out that I was going to win. Sometimes I was almost sure I was going to win.

"Now, I'm not making good pitches," Sutcliffe said. "With men on base, I'm completely going away from what I have to do and what we talked about before the game that I needed to do.

"Instead of concentrating, I get mad and try to throw the ball harder and harder," he said. "Pitching doesn't work that way. You have to throw free and easy and be relaxed. It's tough to relax."

SUTCLIFFE CONCEDES his multi-million dollar contract may be an added pressure.

"Sure it's something you think about. You try to earn everything you get and I haven't even come close," he said.

"I don't know if there is such a thing as trying too hard. This game can be so much fun, but it hasn't been fun this year, starting from Day One."

Have his recent injuries taken a physical toll on Sutcliffe?

"I don't know," he answered, shrugging his shoulders. "Mechanically, I'm not throwing the ball as I did before. At times I throw like I used to but a majority of the time, I'm forcing it.

"Mental, physical, I don't know. If I knew, I'd certainly correct it."

Manager Gene Michael and pitching coach Billy Connors are working overtime trying to correct what they consider flaws in Sutcliffe's pitching form.

"Billy's working with him," Michael said. "I think he's rushing and his stride is too long. I'd like to see him slow down and shorten his stride a hair.

"Physically, he's sound," Michael said. "His last injury was not serious. We put him down so we could get him right. He threw five or six pitches at 91 (mph) yesterday. The velocity's there but he doesn't have the location or command of his pitches."

Connors believes Sutcliffe is his own worst enemy in trying to get back on the winning trail.

"He puts too much pressure on himself," Connors said. "He knows what he gets paid. He's that kind of a person. He lost some tough games early and he takes everything to heart.

"When he tries to do too much, he gets into trouble," Connors said. "He has lost confidence in himself and we have to help him get that confidence back."

Stockbroker earns best of worst title

DAWSON, Pa. (AP) — Joel Mosser, a stockbroker from Aurora, Colo., shot a 47-over-par 119 to finish as the best of the worst in a reunion Wednesday of the nation's four worst avid golfers.

Kelly Ireland, a lawyer from Tyler, Texas, had the most wretched score of the day, shooting a 141 on the 6,675 yard, par-72 Linden Hall Golf Course in southwestern Pennsylvania.

Ireland was three strokes worse than Angelo Spagnolo, the grocery store manager from Fayette City, Pa., who had earned the distinction of the country's worst avid golfer at the Tournament Players Club last summer.

"I guess I'm the worst. But I could beat Angelo tomorrow if we played again," Ireland said after playing in a benefit tournament for the Multiple Sclerosis Service Society.

The other member of the foursome, restaurant owner Jack Pulford of Moline, Ill., had a 131.

"I don't know if we'll ever be good golfers. We had a lot of fun and we raised some money for charity. If you put the four of us in a bag and threw us out, we're all crummy," Spagnolo said after the round.

"We don't let pars and birdies get in the way of having fun," he said.

The gruesome foursome were pitted together by Golf Digest magazine last summer in a contest to determine the naton's worst golfer. Spagnolo shot a 257 for the round, including a 66 on one hole. Ireland had the low score with a 179.

In January, the magazine sent all four to its golf school in an effort to tone their games.

"Everybody in our foursome hits great shots from time to time. The difference is being able to hit a couple of good shots in a row," said Ireland.

Ironically, Ireland carded the only par of the day for the foursome. He parred the 425-yard finishing hole by hitting his third shot 12 inches from the cup and sinking the putt for a four.

Mosser, meanwhile, beamed about his winning score.

"I think it's a step forward. I usually choke. I'm always way ahead and then I lose," said Mosser, who had the second best score at 192 in the original tournament.

'Lam' Jones placed on injured reserve list

HEMPSTEAD, N.Y. (AP) — Injured reserve. It is a place Johnny "Lam" Jones is familiar with. It's also a place he hoped to avoid after being there for the entire 1985 NFL season.

But Jones is back on the disabled list, that land of limbo for football players. He's not happy about it, but, as Jets Coach Joe Walton noted, "at least he's still a Jet."

Not that the speedy wide receiver who won a gold medal in the 1976 Olympics as a member of the 400-meter relay, has proven he could make the team if healthy. The Jets are four-deep at wide receiver, including Wesley Walker and Al Toon, both superb longball catchers.

"All this means is I will get a chance to compete for a job," the Jets' top draft pick of 1980 said. New York traded two first-round selections that year to San Francisco in order to select second overall and grab the University of Texas standout. "I don't know if it will be here or if will be elsewhere.

"I know this team has a lot of good receivers, but I think I can play. I have to do what they say. They say I'm on IR (injured reserve for a minimum of the first four games), so I'm on IR. It's their decision, not mine."

Had Jones not been suffering from a pulled left hamstring and an injured finger, he might not have gotten this opportunity. He might have been cut.

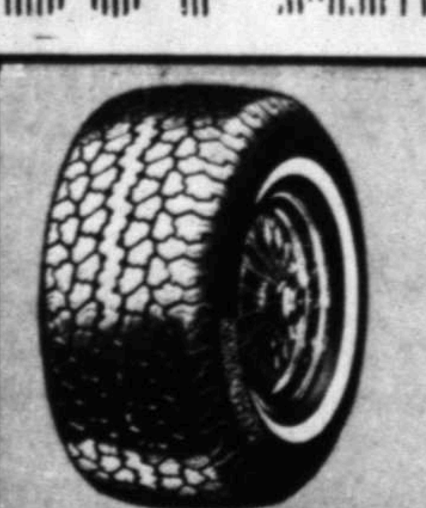

"A wide receiver needs his legs, they are his lifeline," Walton said. "When Lam gets healthy, we'll look at where he sits. We can't make him any promises."

Now, Jones again is lame, and his future with the Jets is tenuous, at best.

Dorsett still Cowboy bullet

Sports Analysis

By BOB SLOCUM
Copley News Service

Say what you want about Tony Dorsett — that he's too little, that his career has been peppered with personal problems, that he's a darned free spirit, that he's getting up there in years (32) for a running back — but don't say he isn't tough.

This guy is a bullet.

And don't say he isn't a producer.

Very few have done it better. He's the sixth best rusher in NFL history and needs only 521 yards to be the fourth best. If he gets 992 yards, he'll pass Jim Brown and move into second place behind Walter Payton — which is the high-rent district for guys who pack footballs for a living.

Sure, maybe you don't exactly have to pick him up to say hello, but we should remember that he's only 5-foot-10 and 185 pounds. And sure, maybe he's not a crotchety old guy with white hair and fake teeth, but at 32 he is the oldest active running back in the league. He calls Walter Payton, who is three months younger, 'son.' So, that's pretty old.

"Tony is the best running back for his size that I've ever seen," said Cowboys coach Tom Landry, who in his 61 years has seen most of the good ones. "He's had an amazing career. And he's still our catalyst."

SAID DORSETT, "I don't feel old and that is the important thing. I still feel like there are a lot of years left in me."

Curiously, though, controversy seems to follow Tony as though it were a faithful Cocker Spaniel. You would think it might eat into his production.

Nope.

You might remember that during his first week as a rookie Cowboy in 1977, he made news not for his legs, but his fists. He punched out a Dallas bartender.

Further, he's had several run-ins with Landry over the years. He has been moody, and there have been times when it seems all of greater Dallas has wanted to stone him with footballs for what has been perceived as a crummy attitude.

Last year, he had trouble with the IRS and lost a few of his houses. This year he was involved in uncomfortable contract negotiations, although he came out of it with a new four-year agreement.

And there has been some tragedy mixed in. On two occasions, Dorsett has had fiances who have died.

Yet, autumn after autumn, the 1976 Heisman Trophy winner out of Pitt takes a deep breath, blocks out distractions and simply plays great football. Year after year, the Cowboys offense revolves around Tony Dorsett.

It still does, though said Dorsett, "I wish it (the offense) would become more aggressive, and do more things in a kick-butt style."

Even Herschel Walker, Dorsett's 24-year-old partner in the Cowboy backfield this fall, will have to share the spotlight with Tony.

The doughty Dorsett has rushed for more than 1,000 yards in each of his nine seasons in Dallas with the exception of the strike-shortened 1982 campaign. And in that year, he won the NFC rushing title with 745 yards, and set an unsurpassable NFL record by making a 99-yard run from scrimmage for a touchdown. And he's led the Cowboys in rushing every single year he's been with the club.

So, it's a little tough to phase out a guy like Tony just because some USFL hotshot comes over.

Of course, there were many gridiron seers who said that Dorsett wouldn't even make an impact in the NFL, let alone do it for a decade.

"Ever since I've was in high school," Dorsett said, "I've been told I was too small to play the game. I'm used to people doubting me. I was told I wouldn't last in the pro game, that I didn't have the size, that I wasn't tough enough and couldn't take the punishment. And now I'm in my 10th year of it — and proud."

Dorsett has missed precisely three games in nine seasons because of injuries. That's being a bullet. Tony might have been the inspiration for the commercial about the product that takes that licking and keeps ticking.

"I grew up in a tough part of the country (Aliquippa, Pa.)," Dorsett said. "Hey, I learned what hard knocks are all about as a kid — that you have to overcome them and keep on going. I learned that you have to work hard, that there aren't free lunches out there. You pay a price if you want to get somewhere. I think my background has helped me in pro football."

BUT HE'S — pardon the expression — little, and he doesn't get hurt much. Why is that? How come this smurf doesn't spend more time on the stretcher?

"Well, first," Dorsett said, "I understand that my size makes it tough to run over people. So that's not my style, and I don't. You have to be smart about this. I can't be overly aggressive. I think my speed and acceleration have helped me to stay pretty healthy. I've been able to avoid a lot of real hard blows. But I've taken my share of shots. I've broken my back, my ribs, my wrist. I've had concussions. I've also been very blessed in this game. I'm going into my 10th year healthy."

His longevity and talent now have him flirting with numbers belonging to the all-time greats of the game. Dorsett, having moved into the fraternity of near-greats, will play as long as he's capable of making a contribution. And that could be a while.

But Tony admits the game isn't exactly a day at the carnival like it used to be.

"If you're in this game long enough," he said, "it can make you calloused. I used to love football as a game. But the fact is, on this level, it's reality. It's work. It's high finance. Plus, there's unbelievable pressure and all of that can harden you after a while. You just learn that pro football is very much a cold-blooded business where people risk their bodies and their health."

Roads, bridges in 'danger' if highways cut

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Cuts of a proposed $327 million in state highway construction and maintenance funds would cost 76 jobs in the Midland/-Odessa area, and double the time necessary to complete road projects, a state highway commissioner said following the release of an impact study Wednesday.

Odessan Ray Stoker, who serves on the three-member state commission, said the cut, which has been proposed by the Legislative Budget Board to help trim the state's multi-billion dollar deficit budget, would "seriously undermine" efforts to maintain the state's roads.

The study, done by a Washington, D.C., non-profit group to gauge the impact of funding cuts, said Texas' roads and bridge systems would be in serious danger of disrepair if the money is lost.

"While times are poor, it's also a poor time for us to damage ongoing projects," Stoker said. Stoker has also proposed that the Legislature boost the gasoline tax five cents for the second time in three years.

He also estimated the cut would eliminate 76 state jobs, both present and proposed, and eliminate $39 million in road projects in the Permian Basin's 12-county state highway district over a 10-year period.

"We in the highway department think it would be counterproductive to step backward," Stoker said. "People who like to drive on good roads don't mind paying for good roads."

Stoker said the highway commission had a good working relationship with the Legislature, but said if there was going to be a discussion of funding cuts, he wanted "a fair fight."

The study, conducted by The Road Information Program, or (TRIP), a non-profit group, said the cut would eliminate the improved maintenance of the state's roads funded by the most recent five-cent hike in the gas tax passed by the 1984 Legislature.

"TRIP studies conducted between 1982 and 1984 found that 60,230 miles of main roads and 17,276 bridges in Texas had deteriorated to substandard condition and needed immediate repairs or replacement," the study said. But, "since 1984...the state has been able to reduce the number of deficient miles by 25.5 percent and the number of bridges by 3.6 percent."

Public education and highways were the primary beneficiaries when a 1984 special legislative session enacted a $4.6 billion tax increase over three years. The increase included raising the state gas tax for the first time in 29 years, from five to 10 cents a gallon.

Sally Thompson, director of research for TRIP, said the funding cut would cost 7,750 jobs statewide and an immediate loss of $146 million in disposable income generated by those jobs.

The TRIP study was requested by the Texas Good Roads-Transportation Association. Drew Crutcher, area representative and board member of the group, said, as the largest contiguous state in the nation, Texas, even in the best economic situation, has to struggle to maintain its massive road network.

Ms. Thompson said the study made no recommendations to lawmakers about how to raise additional revenue to reallocate current monies, but did say delaying resurfacing of roads will require more expensive repairs in the future.

House may grant fund transfer from highways

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The House Wednesday found $94.6 million in accounts normally reserved for building and maintaining highways to help the state pay its bills.

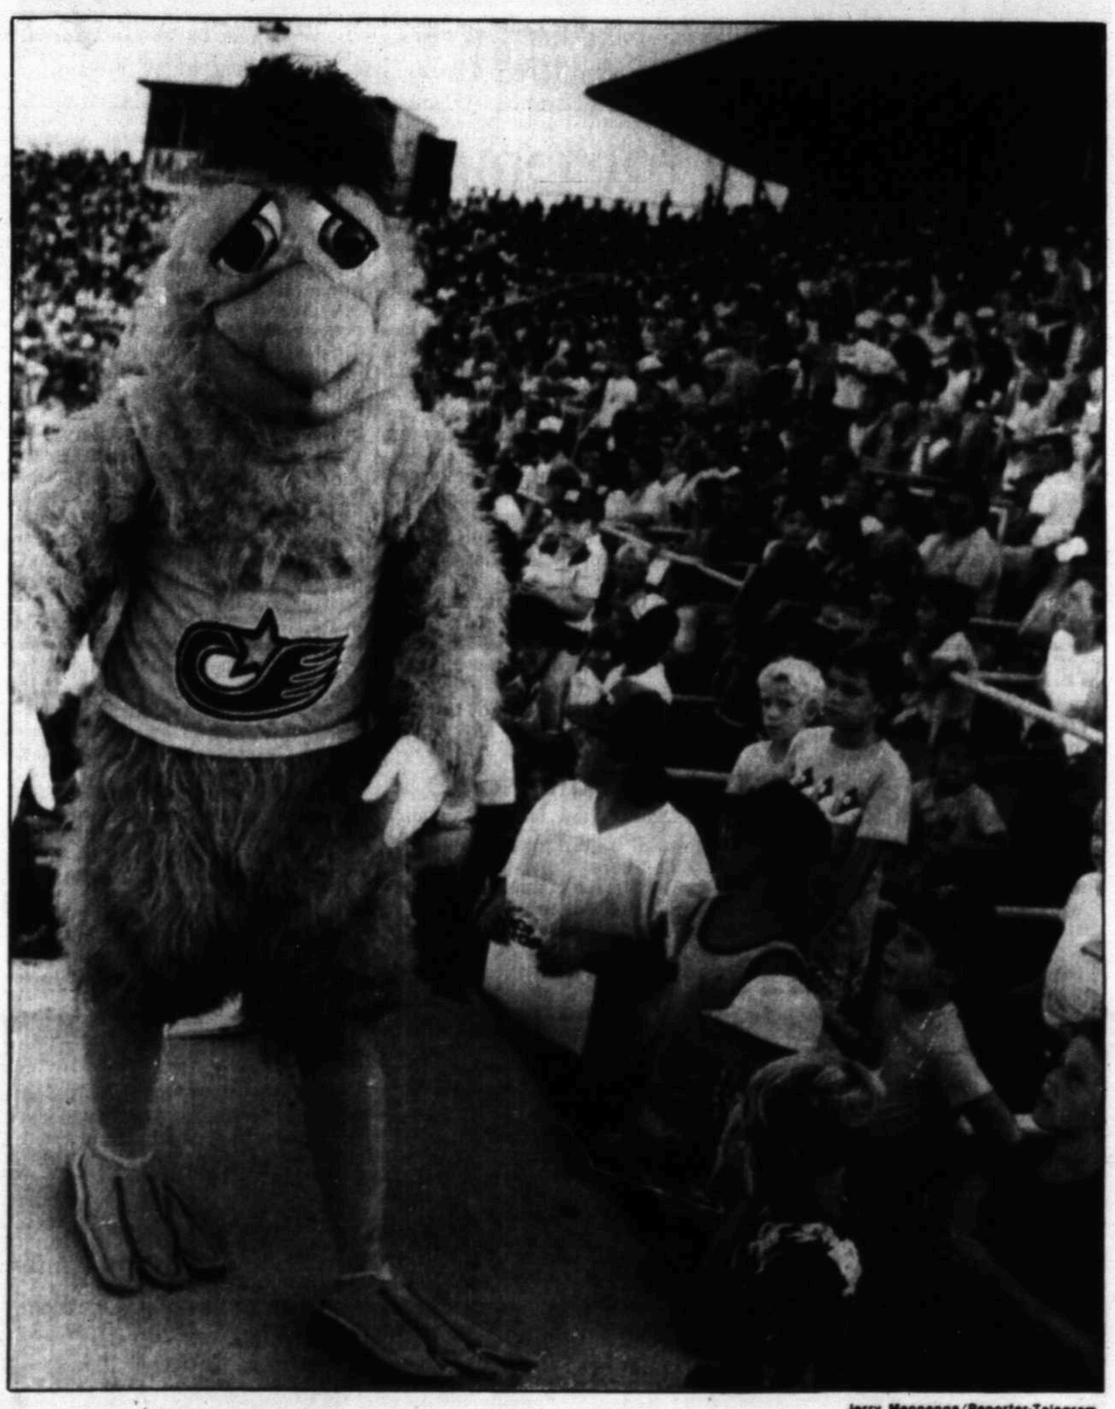

Despite objections from the Texas Good Roads-Transportation Association, a lobbying group of highway contractors, the House tentatively approved the temporary transfer of $24.6 million from the state highway fund to the general revenue fund to help alleviate the state's cash-flow shortfall.

The money comes from the Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation's savings for fiscal 1986 following Gov. Mark White's order in February that state agencies reduce spending by 13 percent.

The general revenue fund would have to pay back with interest any money it borrows.

The second measure tentatively approved Wednesday would free up about $70 million by removing the $60 million cap on money that can be transferred from the highway fund to the Department of Public Safety.

Many police chief applicants have come from out of state

By PATRICK CRIMMINS

More than 65 applications will make deadline in the search for a new Midland police chief, with 65 percent of those coming from out of state, according to a partner in the search firm hired by the city to fill the post.

Jerry Oldani, partner in the firm Jensen-Oldani of Bellevue, Wash., said "22 or 23" applications have been culled from the list for further review by the firm, and called those applicants "high quality."

"We're very, very pleased with the quality of the 22 or 23 people we have begun focusing on at this point," Oldani said. "We have some very high expectations of this group."

Oldani said the deadline for the applications was Aug. 15, but said at least some applications are expected to arrive late this week or early next week. About ten working days from the closing date is usually allowed for applications which may not have been postmarked by the closing date.

Oldani said the number of applications received is about ten percent of the 650 letters advertising the position that were mailed out several weeks ago to law enforcement officials nationwide. He said the response was about that expected, since normally a ten to 12 percent response rate is expected.

Panel announces location of two new businesses in Odessa

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — The Greater Odessa Chamber of Commerce Economic Development Division today announced location of two new businesses in Odessa.

At a news conference this morning, Chuck Bernhard, economic development director, said Capitol Trencher Corp. of San Dimas, Calif., recently purchased by locally-owned Capitan Enterprises, will move into the old Schill Steel Building in the 2500-block of Pearl Street.

Bernhard said Inter-Pipe Inc., primarily based in Phoenix, Ariz., is setting up a support facility at 2500 S. Edison that will be responsible for completing assembly of custom water trucks for the company.

"Both firms decided on an Odessa location," Bernhard said, "largely as a result of the low building, labor, supply and other costs associated with starting a business that has resulted from the recent decline in oil-related activity in the area.

Ted Stewart, president of Capitan Enterprises, said the Odessa facility will be building trenchers in support of their major manufacturing operation in San Dimas. Stewart said the facility initially will employ approximately 25 people in the fabrication and assembly of prototype ditching machines. The president of the Odessa-based company said the new facility also will generate work for local fabricators who will be asked to build ditching machine components.

Hance campaigning for Clements after losing Republican bid to him

By JANE DEES
Staff Writer

Kent Hance, who lost in his bid for the Republican nomination for governor earlier this year, was in Midland Wednesday to campaign for the man who defeated him — former governor Bill Clements.

"We think White's gonna run a dirty campaign," Hance said Tuesday during the 13th leg of his 19-city campaign tour for former Governor Clements.

"We've seen some evidence...he's (Gov. Mark White) desperate," Hance said without elaboration.

Hance said White has raised taxes little by little for the past four years and that he squandered state money in 1984 and 1985, inevitably aiding in the creation of the present sour Texas economy.

"I think that taxes, education and prison reform are going to be three key issues in the election this year.

"Bill Clements didn't raise taxes during his years as governor and, in fact, cut the state property tax out completely.

On the subject of educational system reforms, Hance said White wrongly neglected to ask for input on reform from those within the educational system themselves.

"Our (prison) system is in a shambles and we need a governor to face up to judicial rulings that hinder prison reform and make some changes," Hance added.

Hance did agree that Clements' and White's stand on pari-mutuel betting is about the same.

"Clements believes we should put the question of betting and state lotteries up as a public referendum. If the state wants it, they can vote it in," Hance said.

Two arrested in car window smashing spree

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Two 18-year-old Midland men were arrested early today in connection with several thousand dollars damage that was done after they allegedly used a jack handle to smash windows on several vehicles parked at an apartment complex.

Midland Police Officer Leonard Hendon said he was called to the Greenhouse Apartments, 3212 W. Wadley Ave., before 5 a.m. this morning. He said he was completing reports at the scene of five of the vehicles that sustained damage, several automobiles and at least one van, when he saw a suspicious vehicle drive in the area.

Hendon said he and Lt. Lannie Lee chased the vehicle after it ran a red light. The vehicle was stopped at the intersection of Midkiff Road and Illinois Avenue. Hendon said the two 18-year-olds and a juvenile believed to be about 13 years of age were taken into custody.

"We found articles in the car believed used in the criminal mischief," Hendon said. "In the trunk we found a jack handle that had been chipped, like it had been used to break a lot of glass, and we also found a .44 Magnum pistol on the floor of the car," he said.

The men were arrested and taken to city jail.

Hendon said it did not appear anything was stolen out of any of the damaged vehicles. He said police were still working reports, but said at least nine vehicles were believed damaged at the complex.

"We found articles in the car believed used in the criminal mischief."

— Officer Leonard Hendon

Police received the first call about damage at the apartments about 3:35 a.m. today.

The men are expected to be charged with several counts of criminal mischief.

Several other reports of vandalized vehicles were also received by police, but there was no indication that any of the other incidents were related.

At least $200 damage was reported to a 1979 Dodge van after a window was broken. Reports said the incident occurred about 8:20 a.m. Wednesday. The vehicle was parked in the 3300 block of W. Wall Street when it was damaged.

A convertible top on a vehicle was reported torn, causing $275 damage, late Tuesday or early Wednesday. Debbie Brewster told police the vehicle was parked in the 100 block of South McDonald Street.

Also, police reported two tires valued at $230 were slashed on a vehicle that was parked at the Trinity Apartments, 3600 N. Midland Dr. Reports said police have a suspect in that case.

Statement to be made on replacement in JP race

From Staff Reports

A Midland County Democratic official said today a statement will be made this afternoon or Friday concerning a new candidate for the Midland County justice-of-the-peace position left open by Ken Arp's exit from the race.

"We are not ready to make a statement right now as we're still reviewing all our options," said Chris McCormick, chairman of the Democratic Party nominating committee.

Arp had been selected to be the Democratic nominee for the JP position left open by the exit of Charles Sprayberry who was removed from office earlier in the year.

However, it was learned that Arp was in violation of a Texas Elections Code rule that prohibits a candidate from voting in another party's primary election, Bettye Calvert, Midland County Elections Commissioner said.

Ms. Calvert said that she felt both Arp and the selection committee knew of Arp's voting record, but that neither realized it was a violation of the election code.

Midland Young Democrats president David Mandel said the new Democratic candidate will most likely be one of the other two candidates considered when Arp was chosen.

Center offers alternative to public education

From Staff Reports

Families seeking alternatives to public education will have still another option from which to choose this school year.

Word of Life Family Worship Center, 3838 W. Wall St., has announced the opening, Sept. 2, of the Word of Life Academy for kindergarten 4- and 5-year-olds.

Using a Christian school curriculum, students will learn through drills, group participation, memorization and individual work in a traditional classroom setting.

School administrator Mary Clark said the A Beka curriculum — proven to be 1 to 1½ years ahead of most public school curriculums — is known for its strong language arts and phonics program.

Instruction also includes mathematics, science, art and music.

"It's a foundation laid upon foundation from one year to the next," she said.

Ms. Clark founded Odessa Christian Faith Academy in 1984. About 100 students currently are enrolled.

Ms. Clark said her years of experience in education has led her to believe that "there is a great demand for a good phonics program."

"I feel parents want the best education possible for their children so that they may function in society.

"Once people are exposed to how our program works they're going to want it," she said.

Registration is underway at the Word of Life Academy through Aug. 29 for the 8:30 to 11:45 a.m. session. Classes will be conducted Monday through Friday.

"I feel parents want the best education possible for their children so that they may function in society. ...Once people are exposed to how our program works they're going to want it."

— Mary Clark

Tuition — payable in advance, by semster or monthly — is about $985 annually. All fees are non-refundable.

Ms. Clark said the class size is limited to assure pupils receive individual instruction. Class sizes average about 10 students.

She said plans already are in progress to offer elementary classes next school year. Pre-registration is tentatively set for Spring, 1987.

Consideration also will be given to offering an extended day program to care for children before and after school, Ms. Clark said.

For information, visit the Word of Life Family Worship Center or call 699-5610.

Building handmade instruments man's connection to history

By STELLA WINSETT

DENTON (AP) — Some places and things shine with an almost tangible patina of time. Great cathedrals, paintings by the old masters and natural wonders like the Grand Canyon can give a sense of events and efforts long past to the present.

That sense of being connected to history and tradition is an everyday experience for Christopher Savino. Savino follows in the centuries-old tradition of handmade instrument building.

Not only does Savino build his instruments entirely by hand, they are built in the traditional method, without the use of power tools. With a few minor exceptions, his workshop could be a duplicate of any such workshop in the last few hundred years.

"It's kind of an exciting feeling, knowing you are part of a line of history, whether I ever get to be known or not," said Savino, who specializes in building classical guitars.

"I enjoy knowing that I continue to be a part of the history of guitar making and that I continue to grow with it. Of course, where I started is hundreds of years down that line."

Savino began building his first classical guitar in his native Cleveland in 1982, when he studied with master violin-maker Peter Horn. That guitar, shown on the cover of the latest Dallas Classic Guitar Society brochure, sits in his workshop along with instruments he is building, restoring or repairing and next to the jazz guitar he uses as a professional musician.

"I do quite a bit of repair and restoration work on all types of instruments," said Savino, who builds his guitars in the Spanish method — from the bottom up. "But I mostly build acoustical guitars. As a musician I am fascinated with the immediate response and intimacy of the instrument."

Intimacy is a word Savino also used to describe the methods he uses to build his guitars. He uses original designs for his guitars, which are built on handmade forms, and he never uses power tools.

"I use a lot of traditional methods," he said. "There is a lot to be said for handling the wood throughout the process. It would be nice to produce more instruments, but I wouldn't be pleased if I had to compromise on the quality of the instruments. I also get a sense of gratification from the feel of the tools in my hand. Even if I used power tools for some of the steps, I still would have to put a lot of hand work into it.

"Really, most of the process can't be duplicated by machine, not if you want a fine quality instrument with a beautiful tone. You must have a refinement of all the individual parts for that, and you have to get that refinement by hand. If it takes physical effort, that makes it much more satisfying. I like to have a direct connection."

It takes about 300 hours of work to complete one classical guitar, said Savino, depending on the weather. The hand-rubbed French-polish finish, which helps give the bright, brilliant sound Savino works toward, is composed of 30 very thin layers. It sometimes takes a month of one hour of work per day to complete the finish — longer if the weather is wet, which inhibits the drying process.

"I make it known right off that any date I may give for completion is not a guarantee. I won't rush a job if the conditions are not right," he said. "I have to be honest in my work, and I don't feel the desire to compromise. There always will be a need for inexpensive instruments for students, but as an individual maker my goal is to make the finest instruments possible for people who want refinement in playing as much as I want to refine my guitars and my playing."

Savino, who moved to Denton in 1982 to attend the North Texas State University School of Music, has been playing guitar since high school. He plays some classical guitar, but mostly plays jazz. He and Paris Johnson teamed to form the group Romantic Knights, which plays throughout the North Central Texas area.

Savino said his desire to make quality instruments partially arises from the great pleasure he feels when he is constructing one of his guitars and partially from his desire for excellence as a player.

"If I can make an instrument that satisfies me, I think it will satisfy almost anyone who comes into contact with the instrument. I'm a picky kind of guy. It's almost a symbiotic relationship. As one area is refined, I want to refine the other to complement it. As my playing becomes more refined, I demand more of the instrument. As my abilities as an instrument (maker) are refined, the more I want to become a better player.

"The most important thing to me is to love doing what I'm doing, to have the satisfaction to be able to do it, expand and grow with it," he said.

"Every day there seems to be more to do and my interest seems to get greater and greater. I began to build guitars because I just had to do it. I don't think I — or anyone — could do this if it was just a job I happened to be just interested in.

LULAC calling for temporary gas tax

By DAVID PLESA
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Saying they "deplore" the massive budget cuts proposed by the House, members of LULAC on Wednesday called for a temporary gasoline tax to help solve the state's budget deficit.

"We will not tolerate any cuts in any education programs, including higher education," said Jose Garcia De Lara, state director for the Texas League of United Latin American Citizens. "We deplore the proposal by the Speaker of the House and we deplore the acceptance of this proposal by the House..."

The House has approved budget cuts totalling $750 million to deal with the state's $3.5 billion deficit, and has refused to consider a tax increase.

LULAC proposes raising state revenues with a temporary gasoline tax that would fluctuate with the price of fuel, Garcia De Lara said. He said the group also would support a temporary increase in the sales tax, including a broadening of the sales tax base.

"We recognize that the reason for the crunch that we are in today is because of the oil situation, so we believe that the oil situation should take the bulk of the solution for the problem," he said.

Garcia De Lara said that under the House's plan, LULAC also opposes the layoff of nearly 6,000 state employees, the curtailing of health and human services and dipping into the Permanent School Fund and the Permanent University Fund.

"Speaker of the House (Gib Lewis) is proposing a Band-Aid approach to solving the shortfall," Garcia De Lara said.

"We don't want the Legislature to take a single step backward on education and delivery of services," he said.

Garcia De Lara said LULAC is encouraging the Senate not to accept the House's plan. If it does, he said, the organization will ask the governor to veto the bill.

Police: Several vehicles from two area auto lots stolen

From Staff Reports

The Midland Police Department today reported several burglaries and thefts, including the burglary of several vehicles at two area car lots on the Rankin Highway.

Three vehicles at BJ's Auto Sales, 1900 S. Rankin Hwy., were burglarized late Wednesday or early today, according to reports. Bob Angeley, the owner of the business, was called to the scene after an officer noticed a car door ajar at the lot about 4 a.m. Two AM-FM radios valued at $200 and an AM-FM radio and eight-track player were reported stolen from the vehicles.

Two vehicles were damaged at Kids Auto Sales, 1310 Rankin Hwy., sometime before 4 a.m. today. A radio of unknown value was reported missing from a 1979 Toyota that had one window broken. Nothing was reported stolen from the other vehicle, police said.

In other reports, more than $10,000 in jewelry and cash was reported stolen Wednesday from the Midland Country Club. The victim, Charles Corbett, 1203 Sherley Ln., told police a yellow gold watch valued at $7,000, a yellow gold wedding ring valued at $2,200, a gold nugget ring valued at $2,200, and $440 cash was stolen sometime between 5 p.m. and 5:30 p.m.

More than $1,000 worth of jewelry was also reported stolen from a residence in the 1600 block of N. Garfield Street, police said. Gayla Ross, who reported the burglary, told police a wedding ring valued at $800, four gold chains valued at $150, a diamond pendant valued at $100, and a diamond cross valued at $80 were stolen from the resdidence.

The burglary of firearms worth several thousand dollars was also reported by police. The victim, Gary Powell of 4600 Teakwood, told police three shotguns valued at $3,050, two .22 caliber rifles valued at $430, and a .42 caliber revolver valued at $150 was stolen. The burglary apparently occurred about 11 p.m. Wednesday.

Failed teachers sue Houston Schools

HOUSTON (AP) — Forty-eight teachers who twice failed a state competency test are suing the Houston Independent School District for firing them without a hearing and failing to provide remedial courses.

The suit, filed Wednesday, asks that the teachers be allowed a year's leave to study and retake the state-required test.

Under an order signed by Ancillary Judge Louis Moore, the teachers will receive a hearing Monday, the day before all HISD teachers are to report to work.

Langtry Village to host open house

From Staff Reports

The board of directors of Langtry Village Inc., will host an open house from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday at 2200 N. Pecos.

A ribbon cutting ceremony will take place at 2 p.m. Refreshments will be available.

Langtry Village has a total of 85 apartments. As of last week, 54 had been rented.

Qualifications are based on age and income.

HANCE

Hance also said that both Clements and White supported an oil import tax to get oil prices back on their feet.

Hance also commented on Gov. White's exclusion from a spring-White House meeting with President Reagan and governors of oil-producing states.

He said it was not an example of a "good ol' boy" Republican network choosing to ignore a Democratic administration.

"Gov. White said some mean things about the president and we feel that was a greater disservice than President Reagan's not inviting Gov. White.

"President Reagan would have probably rather met with those he knew he could work with instead of with someone (White) badmouthing him all the time," Hance said.

Farmers Market officially opens Friday morning

From Staff Reports

The official grand opening of the Midland Farmers Market is set for 10 a.m. Friday at Loop 250 and Princeton, at the Wild River Canyon.

The market has been open for several weeks, allowing farmers to sell produce to customers.

The grand opening is open to the public and state representatives from the Texas Extension Service will be present.

APPLICANTS

Oldani said there was a "reasonable" number of applications received from Texas, and said applications had also been received from Virginia, Florida, Michigan, Illinois, New York, Arizona, Oklahoma, and Colorado.

Oldani said 14 or 15 of the applicants would be selected for personal interviews, which should take four to five hours each.

The firm is expected to submit five finalists to the City Council the first two weeks in October.

BUSINESSES

Stewart said the ultimate number of people employed by Capitol Trencher could be "significantly higher," but that will depend on the success of the initial operation.

Itner-Pipe President Tom Schnackenberg says the Odessa facility will employ only three or four people initially, but Inter-Pipe hopes to expand its workforce significantly "as the facility proves successul and as the market for their product expands," he said.

The custom water trucks built by Inter-Pipe, which range in size from 500- to 14,000-gallon capacities, are used primarily by contractors involved in various types of construction.

In an earlier interview, Bernhard indicated he expects to make another announcement shortly concerning location of another new business in the Odessa area.

Noting that many local companies are having a tough time because of the depressed oil economy, Bernhard said, lower building costs, an available labor supply, and other costs to be considered in starting a new, or relocating an existing, business have prompted many queries from interested individuals who are in a position to "take advantage of the tremendous opportunities available."

HIGHWAYS

The Legislative Budget Office estimates that $135 million can be transferred from the highway fund to DPS without jeopardizing essential road projects, thus releasing about $70 million the state can use to help balance the $3.5 billion shortfall.

Opponents to the money-raising measures say the bills would hinder the highway department's ability to properly maintain the state's highways. Officials with the Texas Good Roads-Transportation Association say the Legislature should look elsewhere for money to help alleviate the deficit.

"Our position is that education and highways are in a different category than the other programs," said Eugene Robbins, president of the association.

"It was important enough two years ago to increase (the gas) tax and therefore we think it is still important, and (current levels of spending) should be kept to education and highways," he said.

The association released a report Wednesday that says a proposed $327 million cut in state highway funding would erase the 1984 nickel gas tax increase and result in "thousands of lost jobs and millions of dollars in lost revenue for the state."

The report by The Road Information Program, a non-profit research group based in Washington D.C., says that 7,750 construction-related jobs — 76 in the Odessa district that includes Midland — would be lost as a result of a $327 million cut.

Over a 10-year period, such cuts would cancel 1,422 statewide highway projects worth about $3.27 billion. In the Odessa district, 29 projects worth about $32.1 million would be cancelled over that period, the association estimates.

The report said the cuts also would cause the state to lose an estimated $40.5 million per year — $38.2 million in taxes and fees from construction companies and $2.3 million in retail sales taxes paid by construction workers.

"It would be foolhardy to think this state can grow and prosper if we abandon efforts to improve and expand our highway and bridge system," said Harry Ledbetter, first vice-chairman of the association. "We would be taking a giant step backward, deferring repair and construction efforts to the future when costs will be much higher."

CURIOUS SHOPPER

Product's safety questioned

By SONJA HEINZE

Q. Are there some herbal teas that shouldn't be used, or perhaps used sparingly? Joan King, Farmington Hills, Mich.

A. In an article in FDA Consumer titled "Danger: Herbs Are Often More Toxic Than Magical," Tim Larkin, the author, states, "While many peppermint, rose hip, orange and others of the more usual herbal teas do offer delicious alternatives to coffee and common tea, we cannot conclude from these facts that all herbal teas are safe, nor that it's safe to consume large amounts of any herbal tea over extended periods."

Half of our prescription drugs are derived from plants or herbs which contain chemicals and have varying effects on the body such as inducing vomiting, lowering blood pressure, stimulating the heart or nervous system, sedating the brain and so on.

Herbal teas are made from plants, some of which are harmless, and some of which are not. Read the label carefully on any herbal tea you are considering buying. Some teas may only have a single ingredient, while some may be blends of as many as 20 different kinds of leaves, seeds and flowers.

Avoid teas made from senna, buckthorn bark, dock roots, aloe leaves, catnip, juniper, hydrangea, jimson weed, lobelia, nutmeg, wormwood and sassafras. If you have a ragweed allergy, stay way from camomile, goldenrod, marigold and yarrow.

Under the heading "Danger," the FDA Consumer also lists arnica, wolf's-bane, belladonna, deadly nightshade, bittersweet, bloodroot, Irish broom, horsechestnut, sweet flag, heliotrope, poison hemlock, spotted cowbane, henbane, jalaproot, lily of the valley, mandrake, May apple, mistletoe, morning glory, periwinkle, St. Johnswort, spindletree, tonka bean, wahoo bark and white snakeroot.

If you're planning to try a questionable herbal tea, make a weak solution the first time and watch for adverse reactions. Some general guidelines: Brew the tea fresh each time, vary the types you use and do not drink more than three or four cups a day.

Q. We recently moved. I read somewhere that when moving house plants they could be stored in a freezer, so I tried it. Maybe we should have propped the door open. By the time we unloaded the plants four or five days later, they were still alive but had a fungus on them, and the inside of the freezer smelled like a decomposed animal. I scrubbed the fungus off the plants, put them outdoors, and they are thriving. But I still can't use my freezer.

I washed it out with bleach and water, then full-strength bleach, then Borax and water, then baking soda and water. Between times I put boxes of baking soda inside and left the door open to air it out. The odor has diminished somewhat but is still apparent. I also plugged the freezer in, hoping that when operating the smell would subside. Wrong! I'm afraid to put my food inside as the food might absorb the odor and taste bad or, worse yet, be harmful to eat.

I don't know what to try next. Help!

A. I don't know what to tell you. You seem to have done everything my references advise to clean a freezer. I am reminded of a time years ago when I had a similar smell inside my car. After tearing its insides apart and scrubbing everything within reach, I suspected I might be going mad. Finally a wily mechanic found a decomposed bird in my heating system. Have you checked the freezing mechanism for such a possibility?

Readers who have experienced intractable odors in their freezers and have found a way to get rid of them, please help.

Q. I am on a low-sodium diet and would like to know the amount of sodium in a bottle of beer. Also, don't you think it would be wise for beer companies to print this information on their labels? Vincent Patermo, Atlantic City, N.J.

A. The amount of sodium in a bottle of beer varies slightly, but generally in an 8-ounce bottle there are between five and 15 mg of sodium. It doesn't matter whether this is regular beer or light beer; the amount of sodium is similar. The ales contain more. In an 8-ounce bottle of Black Horse Ale, for example, there are 33 mg of sodium.

In answer to your question as to whether I think beer companies ought to print this information on their labels — yes, I think they should, for the convenience of consumers. I also believe they should be required to list all their ingredients on the labels because beer is, after all, a food. But so far the beer, wine and liquor industry has managed to keep this information from us.

CONSUMING INTERESTS

Consumers make wishes known

By LINDA ANDERSON

The mother of a pre-teen daughter called me recently, expressing concern at her inability to find ordinary one-piece swimsuits for her child. The only ones that seemed to be available for 10- to 12-year-old girls, she said, were suits with high, French-cut legs which she thought were totally inappropriate for children.

Because it had been years since I had shopped for pre-teen bathing suits, I set out to see if my observations matched hers — I undertook my own unofficial and admittedly highly unscientific survey in Midland to check out the styles.

In major department stores I checked out, I discovered that suits for very young girls were available with ordinary leg holes, but suits for older little girls — pre-teens — were mostly either high-cut legs or made for larger girls (the infamous chubdebs, a name I found absolutely hideous even as a child).

A recent trip to Water Wonderland more or less confirmed the concerned mother's dilemma — most of the young pre-teen girls I saw wore suits with high-cut legs.

I'm sure children's one-piece swimsuits with smaller-cut leg holes are still available, but they seemed hard to find this year, and many of them were probably ugly; you know, the kind with ruffled skirts or something equally tasteless to pre-teen eyes.

In recent years, the emphasis on physical fitness has brought on these one-piece suits with French-cut legs, which are designed to show off long, lean, healthy legs.

Unfortunately, swimsuits like that only look good on women who are tall, 22 years old and have long legs anyway. Many who are older or younger, shorter and — well, more rounded — do not feel comfortable in anything that shows off too many physical imperfections.

One thing I have discovered to be a fact is that if enough customers complain about some product — specifically, by telling the makers in words and in their refusal to buy the item — the manufacturers will change the product.

Remember the midi-skirt? This mid-calf-length skirt was touted as high fashion and absolutely desirable for a total fashion look, but no one would buy it. Talk about a total bust — the movers and shakers in the fashion world still talk about the midi-fiasco, even though it happened in the late '60s or early '70s.

Perhaps if enough mothers are actually concerned about these swimsuits and made their wishes known to the manufacturers, more of a fashionable selection would be available next year.

And perhaps now is the time to get started, since the swimsuit season is finished for this year, but it isn't too soon to begin on next year's styles. That way, maybe next season customers — of all ages — will be offered more of a selection, and those who are not comfortable with high-cut leg openings will find something equally fashionable, but more to their liking — for themselves and for their children.

It's a shame that for this season (and a few seasons past), the choice for some was either to not go near the water at all, or to wear something that only felt comfortable if it was covered by a pair of shorts.

Hotline distributes auto recall information

WASHINGTON (AP) — More than 5 million cars were recalled in the United States last year, but while the manufacturers send out notices to the buyers, not everyone gets the word.

To help advise people who may own a car in need of safety-related service, the Department of Transportation operates the Auto Safety Hotline.

Callers can find out if their car make and model has ever been subject to a recall, and can report safety-related problems to hotline operators.

The toll-free number is 800-424-9393.

Operators are on duty from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. Eastern time, Monday through Friday. At other times a tape recording will take the caller's name and address and the question they need answered.

Callers whose car has been subject to a recall will be sent printed information on the problem, and manufacturers are required to make the needed repair no matter how long ago the recall occurred.

BBB member answers promoter

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT

Tired of being hassled, hustled and gouged by the long-distance office supply promoters? Take a tip from a Better Business Bureau member:

"Gentlemen: Please be advised that we have received an invoice totaling $279.00 for six (6) cartons of copy-machine paper.

"Since we did not place this order, we presume that you are leasing space from us to store your paper. Our rent for this will be $1.00 per roll per month.

"When you want your paper returned, please forward your rental fee C.O.D. and include postage and handling. If we have to handle your paper more than once a $15.00 handling charge will be included.

"Since our BBB is interested in unsolicited orders, and we understand the postal fraud authorities are also investigating you, we are sending copies of this letter to them for their files."

Lower cooling bills

By MARIAN FARR

With the temperature — and utility bills — soaring, now is the time to make sure you're getting the most from your air conditioner at the least cost. Good maintenance and operating practices can reduce cooling bills.

Probably the easiest energy-saving measure is to check the air conditioning filters monthly and to replace disposable filters or wash permanent filters regularly.

Then consider how you run the air conditioning system. Homeowners often set the fan selector on manual rather than automatic. This leaves the blower fan running constantly and makes them feel more comfortable.

From an energy standpoint, however, it's much better to set the blower fan on automatic because you get better moisture control. Part of the air conditioner's job is to remove moisture. When the blower fan is left on constantly, it re-evaporates water collected on the condenser coils and puts it back into the air. This means the air conditioner has to work harder to remove that recirculating moisture.

Using box fans, circulating fans or ceiling fans to move the air will achieve the same effect as constantly running the blower fan, and at less cost.

Some minor insulation jobs can also pay off in reduced energy costs. Many Texas homes have an attic access door which is uninsulated, inside the house. Fastening a batt of insulation to the inside of the attic door and putting weatherstripping around it will cut down on the loss of cool air into the unheated attic space.

A do-it-yourselfer can easily wrap insulation strips around attic ductwork and tape it with duct tape to reduce cool air loss. But attempt this job only if you feel comfortable working in an attic and take certain safety precautions, such as wearing a mask to keep from inhaling insulation.

If your ductwork is already insulated, check the duct tape to see that it's still secure, since it will often pull away and create gaps after two or three years.

As long as you're in the attic, take the time to vacuum the air conditioner unit if it is located there. The inside of lower ductwork can also be vacuumed from inside the house by removing the grates. Reducing accumulated dust will help the machinery run more efficiently.

The best time to have your air conditioning equipment checked and in peak operating condition is before the cooling season. If you have any reason to think your equipment is not performing as it should, the expense of having it checked and repaired by a qualified service person may be offset by lower utility bills.

DEAR ABBY

Sleep-talking man cheats wife of rest

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: My husband isn't E.F. Hutton, but when he talks, I listen. He doesn't talk much when he's awake, but he talks a lot in his sleep. Lately he has been mentioning two people — Jean and Marion. I don't know anyone by either name. I am losing sleep trying to get more information out of him, but I can't understand what he says because he mumbles. I am curious to know who Jean and Marion are, and why they are in my husband's dreams. My question to you, Dear Abby, is this: Is there anything to sleep-talking? He has been known to cheat. — WIDE-AWAKE READER

DEAR WIDE-AWAKE: Undoubtedly there is, but interpreting dreams (and "sleep talk") is a matter of theory — not fact. (The jury is still out on the accuracy of Freud's symbols.)

If you really want to know who Jean and Marion are, ask your husband. He may tell you the truth, and he may not. A man who cheats will usually lie.

DEAR ABBY: I am married to a jewel of a husband. He's 33 and I'm 28.

We have two beautiful daughters, ages 5 and 3. My problem is that my husband has a 7-year-old son by a previous marriage. The boy came to live with us on a temporary basis last year, but his mother is sickly (so she says), and now it appears that this boy will be living with us permanently, which is the problem I am leading up to.

Does this boy have to be in our family portraits? I don't feel comfortable having him included with the rest of my family. My husband says the boy will feel hurt if we leave him out, but I am just not comfortable with this boy in the portrait.

Please advise me. — UNCOMFORTABLE IN FLORIDA

DEAR UNCOMFORTABLE: The "boy" is your husband's son, and he belongs in your family portrait as much as your daughters do. You need family counseling to find out why you feel threatened by this innocent 7-year-old child who finds himself living with a stepmother who clearly doesn't want him. Your wonderful marriage to this jewel of a husband may turn sour if you don't sweeten up.

DEAR ABBY: I am a victim of allergies. Luckily, it hasn't caused my total withdrawal from society.

Coming up soon is an office party with many people who play key roles in my husband's future. My husband wants me to meet these people, and I want to attend, but there will be food served that I cannot and should not eat. (Just breathing fumes from vinegar can make me "tipsy.")

What is proper etiquette in these situations? I don't care to make my allergy a topic of conversation. — HIGHLY ALLERGIC

DEAR ALLERGIC: Eat at home — and don't call attention to your problem. Having allergies is not a crime; neither is it anything to be ashamed of. It might surprise you to know how many others share this condition to some degree.

DEAR ABBY: To "Loved in Montana and New Mexico" who understand a man's true worth: They are right. A test of a man's devotion, loyalty and love is not in the cards he sends, anniversaries and birthdays remembered, or gifts he buys.

My husband is very "sensitive and caring" about remembering special days, etc. — he always gives cards and special gifts. In fact, he often sends duplicate cards and gifts to his girlfriend. Sign me ... NOT FOOLED IN STEILACOOM, WASH.

(Every teen-ager should know the truth about sex, drugs and how to be happy. For Abby's booklet, send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to: Dear Abby, Teen Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

CPSC announces recall

New York Times News Service

WASHINGTON — The Consumer Product Safety Commission has announced that a toy flying helicopter caused serious eye injuries to at least 15 people and is being recalled voluntarily by one of its distributors.

"Nearly as many adults have been injured as children," said Cathy Downs-Lusby, a compliance officer for the commission. This is so, she said, because it normally requires an adult to put the toy together, with the adult then routinely testing it to see if it will fly for the child.

Some of the injuries have resulted in permanent blindness in one eye, Downs-Lusby said. The injuries occurred when people were struck by the whirling blades that have flown off the toy or by the falling helicopter itself.

Downs-Lusby said the helicopter is dangerous and should not be used. The recalled batch was sold at retail for $3.50 and was distributed by International Playthings Inc. of Bloomfield, N.J. The company said it had distributed 15,000 of the toys from March 1984 to October 1985.

The helicopter is described as seven and a half inches long, made of plastic, mostly white, with red plastic blades and a green launching handle. International Playthings' version comes in a box labeled "Flying Copter." It is made in Taiwan.

Other brands of the same helicopter were recalled by Stoddard in Hawaii and by all Woolworth's stores, Downs-Lusby said. Another distributor is expected to announce a recall next week, she added.

Consumers should return the toy to the store where it was purchased. Further information may be obtained by calling the commission's toll-free number, 800-638-CPSC (638-2772).

Higher-quality products desired by consumers

Associated Press

You open the door and the doorknob comes off in your hand. You take the appliance out of the box and it doesn't work. The new alarm clock doesn't ring. The sofa is delivered broken.

These home furnishings purchasing experiences are not as unusual as they should be. That's why nowadays, "if you ask 100 people if they want better quality products, at least 98 of them will say yes," says Dr. J. Edwards Deming.

According to Deming, a statistician who has recently been attracting attention through his efforts to tell us how to make better products, most employees are already doing their best and are not responsible for bad quality products. The problem is that management doesn't know what to do, and consequently sabotages employee efforts.

He says ploys such as upping production goals, grading employees and putting up slogans have been counterproductive. Most efforts have started at the end of the system, with a defective product, not at the beginning where they should, "because by the time the customer complains, it's too late."

DEMING'S MESSAGE that companies can improve their products by instituting a more rational production system and by trusting employees to get on with the job appears deceptively simple.

One reason corporate executives are now listening is that he taught these seemingly simple methods to the Japanese after World War II and in the process helped them restructure their industries.

Their postwar "miracle" was based on several ideas: first of all, that a good production system turns out quality products and that statistical methods can be used to test a system to see if it is working properly. Deming taught that if it were not operating properly, fixing the system would be more effective than blaming employees for its flaws.

The Japanese also accepted Deming's central idea that better quality products cost less to produce, since there is less re-work and less waste of time and materials. Further, since consumers greatly prefer quality to junk, he says there is a substantial competitive advantage to a company that produces excellent products.

Though Deming, an expert in using statistical methods to improve factory operations, is quick to say these ideas are not original with him, he is the one who happened to put them together into a coherent program for change.

IN RECOGNITION of his importance to them, the Japanese government in 1960 awarded Deming its Emperor's Medal. In the United States, an appearance on a network television program in 1980 popularized his ideas and led to an increase in corporate clients as well as greater attendance at the seminars he gives about 20 times a year under the auspices of George Washington University.

He has also published his ideas on productivity and competition in a book, "Quality, Productivity, and Competitive Position," and teaches at New York University's Graduate Business school.

The Deming program is embodied in a series of pointers which he says will improve the company's product quality and lead to lower costs and a more satisfactory work environment.

These pointers start with management rethinking company goals, making the improvement of products and service primary. He adds that after adopting this new philosophy, management has to convince workers the new policy is for keeps.

He says mass inspection as a method of assuring quality has to be eliminated, and a better production system substituted. Similarly, numerical production goals and piecework actually impede quality since employees concentrate on meeting the goal rather than producing good work.

TO GET A BETTER system may require getting better equipment or raw materials, changing manufacturing techniques or, perhaps, something as simple as rearranging work space.

Management also has to end the practice of awarding business on price alone and instead work with suppliers who do a good job.

Once some improvement is realized, the company will still have to continue working to make things better. Deming says better training on the job and more helpful methods of supervision are also necessary.

The way things are now in many factories, there is a climate of fear in which people are afraid to ask questions or suggest improvements. Many are also afraid that if products are made more efficiently, they may lose their jobs. Management should create a vigorous program of education and training to make clear to employees they will be trained for new jobs if their current position is no longer necessary.

He says fear often leds to barriers between research, design, production and sales departments, keeping people working at cross purposes.

WHAT CAN HOME furnishings consumers do to ensure better product quality? Never one to flinch at hard truths, Deming says they can't do much since they aren't responsible for the problems and don't have the power to fix them. However, making buying decisions based on quality and product value, rather than price alone, is one way to encourage those manufacturers who do care about quality.

Supermarket shoppers enter world of electronics

By CAROLE SUGARMAN
Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

The trout at the fresh-fish counter looks good, but you're tired of having it amandine. So you call on the Cuisine Machine.

You touch the scroll-ahead button on the computer screen until "trout" appears. You push "recipe" among the list of preparation and information choices, and six selections appear.

You choose the trout with crab and bearnaise sauce, push "print recipe" and it edges its way out of a slot above the computer screen.

If you thought check-out scanners were high tech, be prepared. We're on the cutting edge of an era of electronic marketing in supermarkets that makes the Jetsons look contemporary.

Performing any number of activities, from helping you choose a wine to helping you find the waxed paper, these computers aid, influence or control purchasing decisions in some subtle and not-so-subtle ways.

The disappearance of "Harriet Housewife," according to Peter Francese, president of American Demographics, Inc., has led to an increasing diversity of food shoppers, among them, men, teen-agers, working women, the elderly and singles.

As a result, retailers and advertisers must reach a vastly more segmented market — and one way to do that effectively is to reach them where they shop, according to Francese.

COUPLE THAT with the busy schedules of these diverse consumers (less time to do shopping in larger stores) and the tendency toward impulse buying, and the impetus behind electronic marketing and advertising begins to take shape.

Retailers, manufacturers and computer companies view these new computers as a benefit to all parties involved.

And Mona Doyle, president of Consumer Network, a Philadelphia-based consumer-research organization that conducts monthly shopper surveys, said that while some consumers do not trust computers, in general, her surveys have shown positive consumer feedback.

In addition, Doyle said that in this age of information, consumers view in-store advertising as an appropriate and helpful tool.

Nevertheless, there is a fine line between information and advertising, and consumers wooed by technology should be aware of the motivations behind these microchips. Consider the following examples of computer services that have been or are being used in supermarkets around the country, either on an experimental or limited basis:

Electronic Store Directories

You dash into the store to grab an extra box of toothpicks for your cocktail party. Where are they?

Using the supermarket's touch-screen electronic store directory, you push T and locate toothpicks among the items. A female voice says that toothpicks are in aisle five. Then, an "X" flashes on the screen to show you where you are, and a dotted line appears tracing the route to the toothpicks.

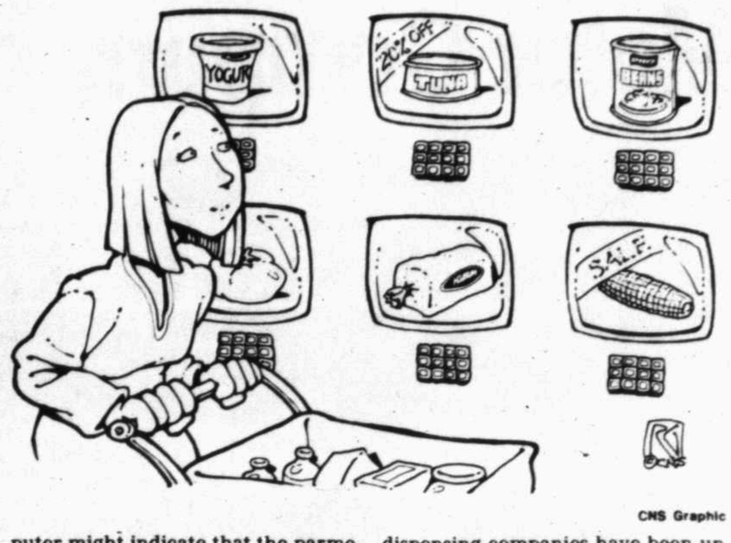

Marketers say that the growth of the superstore and the influx of new shoppers on the scene has created a situation where consumers don't know where to find items, even the most common ones.

According to Dowell of Inter-Ad, Inc, which also sells a store directory computer, a recent study showed that 47 percent of patrons who walk into supermarkets don't know where the items on their shopping lists are located.

Dowell said that Inter-Ad, Inc. has found that the items that patrons ask for the most in the company's Intertouch Shopper II computer are cereal, beer, lemonade mix, Jell-O, ice cream, peanut butter, rice, popcorn and soups.

Ads are flashed onto the screen for one second while Shopper II is in use; in addition, the computer has the ability to cross reference items.

For instance, after you find out where the pasta is located, the computer might indicate that the parmesan cheese is located in aisle 10, and the Italian bread is in aisle 12.

While at least some supermarkets find these systems successful, Giant supermarket tested Inter-Ad's electronic store directories in five stores this year and found that the cost wasn't worth it, according to Odonna Mathews, vice president of consumer affairs.

Instead, Giant decided that detailed store directories on shopping carts were more feasible and practical, and so is instituting them in all stores, Mathews said.

Coupon-Dispensing Terminals

Forgot the coupons you clipped out of the paper? Too lazy to find the scissors? A computerized coupon-dispensing terminal located right in the supermarket will spit out any of the coupons you desire. And all you have to do is touch the screen.

Safeway is experimenting with Coupon Systems, Inc.'s machines in its stores in San Francisco and Washington state, and the surveys show "a strong interest" and an increase in redemptions, according to Felicia del Compo, spokesperson for Safeway's corporate headquarters in Oakland. (Some electronic coupon-dispensing companies have been unsuccessful, however, and have already gone out of business.)

Other companies are experimenting with incorporating additional capabilities into their coupon-dispensing computers. For instance, Interstate Technologies, Inc.'s Smart Start system can be programmed with demographic information to target specific coupons.

Smart Start is actually a check-approval system. But if you wish to fill out a demographic survey, the data are then entered into the computer's memory. Then, if the computer knows that you own a dog, it may print out a coupon for Alpo after it approves your check.

Coupon Solution, the name of the computer developed by Catalina Marketing in Los Angeles and installed in 85 stores in Los Angeles and Chicago, takes coupon target marketing a step further.

Coupon Solution can perform a whole range of schemes, from cross merchandising to competitive marketing, by tying into the check-stand scanner.

For instance, after the scanner records the Universal Product Code (UPC) on your baby food, you might receive a coupon for baby lotion. Or if you have purchased Gerber peaches, you might get a coupon for Heinz's version. Or if you have purchased $30 worth of groceries, but no items from the deli department, the Coupon Solution might dispense a cents-off coupon for potato salad.

The coupons also contain bar codes, so that when the shopper redeems them on a follow-up visit, the computer can check to ensure that the coupon matches the item the shopper has purchased.

In addition, according to George Off, vice president of operations for Catalina, manufacturers can find out all kinds of marketing information, such as their redemption rates against other manufacturers.

Off said that the Coupon Solution is averaging a redemption rate of between 9 and 12 percent. (The average national redemption rate for coupons is about 4 percent, according to the Food Marketing Institute.)

Video Advertising

Marketing Technologies, Inc.'s video advertiser in Winn-Dixie's Dallas-Fort Worth stores flashes colorful graphics promoting various brand name products onto a screen.

Unlike the other systems, it is not a store directory, nor does it dispense coupons. (It can, however, flash public-service announcements such as the winner of the local Little League game, your horoscope or the date and location of an area church bazaar.)

The manufacturer pays Marketing Technologies Group, Inc. $13.50 per store per week for a 15-second advertisement that repeats itself every 3 to 7 minutes.

Stan Roban, co-owner of the 1½-year-old Long Island firm, said that companies such as Johnson & Johnson, Georgia Pacific and Coca-Cola are using the video advertisers.

Roban says the company guarantees product exclusivity. In other words, if Coke is advertising during that week, then Pepsi can't, nor can the store advertise its house-brand cola.

Roban says he likes to call it "point-of-purchase advertising," that the video advertisements function as the "last bastion" before the final purchase. The system is also good in stimulating impulse sales among people who don't make choices easily, Roban added.

Marketing Technologies Group, Inc. also sells a video advertiser for use at the check stands, although these systems promote such items as book clubs and other direct mail marketers.

While waiting in line, patrons view a monitor that may flash the latest promotion for the Disney Book Club, for instance. Order forms are available at the store.

Electronic Test-Marketing

To get a more accurate reading on consumer buying behavior, companies such as the Chicago-based Information Resources Inc. have been using a technique in a handful of test markets that some may view as having Big Brother overtones.

BehaviorScan, as Information Resources Inc.'s system is called, works like this: You volunteer as a participant and are given a computerized shopping card that records your purchases each time you shop.

Companies such as Campbell Soup, Procter & Gamble Co., Dart & Kraft and General Foods Corp. then buy advertisements that cut into ad programming as you watch specially monitored cable television.

But the ads are targeted according to your particular purchasing habits. For example, since the computer knows that you usually buy Tropicana orange juice, it may signal a cut-in with an advertisement from Sunkist.

Or if you own a microwave oven, maybe you will receive more ads for microwave products. Or perhaps you will view an ad for Shake 'n Bake while your neighbor views a different one for the same product.

You don't know which ads are part of regular programming, and which are part of the BehaviorScan program.

Then you go to the store and continue on your regular shopping routine, and the companies continue to receive information on what you purchase.

Various levels of protection available when moving

Associated Press

In an ideal world, every major household move would occur without a hitch. But in reality, goods get lost and damaged, so it's wise to plan accordingly, suggests Better Homes and Gardens.

For instance, you need to learn about liability. Liability is the amount of responsibility the mover accepts for your goods while handling, storing and transporting them. You choose the level of the mover's financial responsibility from three options outlined by the Interstate Commerce Commission (ICC).

■ Limited liability: Sixty cents per pound per item is the minimum responsibility you can choose. This comes free of added charge, but you must request and sign for it. Limited liability will not be enough in most cases. For instance, the mover's top liability on a $135, 4-pound lamp would be only $2.40.

■ Added valuation protection: When you sign the bill of lading without requesting limited liability, the mover must assume resonsibility for the load at $1.25 times the pound weight of your shipment. Recovery on each item is not limited by its weight. If you prefer to declare a specific higher dollar rate for the value of the entire load, you may do so for an extra charge.

■ Full-value protection: The most expensive option, such plans cover the full cost of repairing or replacing goods.

The mover's liability is contingent on the goods being properly packed. If the moving company handled the packing, it is their responsibility. If you've done the work, the movers may inspect the cartons before assuming responsibility.

At your new home, use the inventory as a checklist. No need to unpack every carton, but note any exterior damage and identify it by carton number on the delivery papers with a list of the contents.

When you sign delivery papers, you are indicating that you accept your goods in apparent good condition, except where otherwise noted.

Dollar sneaks higher

LONDON (AP) — The U.S. dollar quickly recovered in early European trading today from a mild fall sparked by a cut in the U.S. discount rate. Gold prices rose but were off their opening highs.

The dollar dropped to its lowest closing rate since the 1940s in Japan, where trading ends as Europe's business day begins. But it recovered against the Japanese yen in later European trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar finished at a closing low of 153.03 yen, down from Wednesday's close of 153.05 yen, he previous closing low. Later, in London, it was quoted at 153.50 yen.

In London, the dollar gained against the British pound. It cost $1.4970 to buy one pound, cheaper than $1.5045 late Wednesday.

Other midmorning dollar rates in Europe, compared with late Wednesday:

—2.0520 West German marks, up from 2.0487

—1.6535 Swiss francs, up from 1.6477

—6.7245 French francs, up from 6.6875

—1.3915 Canadian dollars, up from 1.3905.

Gold opened in London at $382 a troy ounce and the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended selling price of $381.75 at midmorning. Both were higher than Wednesday's closing bid of $377.50.

In Zurich, gold was also up, though off its opening level, at $381.50 compared with $377.50 late Wednesday.

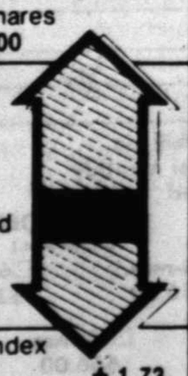

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold closed at $378.96, up from $375.73 the previous day.

Silver bullion prices also rose on the London market where the metal was trading at a bid $5.16 a troy ounce, compared with Wednesday's $5.14.

Jerry Elger, geologist with Parallel Petroleum Corp., addresses a group of Congressional assistants from Washington D.C. at the company's offices in the United Bank building.

Congressional aides visit area

By ALLEN E. HOWLAND
Business/Oil Writer

The old maxim 'it's not what you know, but who you know' is true in many fields, but maybe nowhere more so than in the world of politics.

An effort to cultivate influential friendships and understanding between national politicians and the oil industry is the aim of a two-day 'Texas Field Trip' sponsored by the West Texas Producers' Forum (WTPF).

The second annual field trip brings congressional assistants to key senators and representatives to the oilfield to explain some of the intricacies of the petroleum industry. The 15 guests arrived Wednesday.

"This field trip gives us the opportunity to gain a better understanding of the details of the facts behind the concepts we deal with in following legislation in Washington," says Ed Meyer, administrative aide on taxation matters for Rep. Phillip Crane, R-Ill. Crane is the fourth-ranking minority member of the House Ways & Means Committee and chairman of that committee's Trade Subcommittee.

The WTPF targeted aides to members of the Appropriations and Ways & Means committees in Congress because of their jurisdiction over important tax issues, according to the organization's president Richard Dulaney.

"Educating these important advisors to key congressmen and establishing an acquaintance and rapport is a key in improving the effectiveness of call-ups and lobbying trips to Washington," says Dulaney, an independent producer.

"Familiarity and understanding are crucial," he adds.

The visiting aides primarily — but not exclusively — work for legislators representing non-oil producing districts or states. But even those who advise representatives from producing areas can gain insight into the petroleum industry.

For example, Sandy Strohm works as an assistant to six-term Rep. Virginia Smith, R-Neb., whose district includes the Nebraska portion of the Denver-Julesburg producing basin. However, Strohm is a native of Wisconsin with no first-hand experience in oil operations.

Many of the aides, mostly in their mid-20s, are not from the home districts of their employers, nor have many of them even necessarily visited the district, particularly those from Midwest and points west. So, putting concrete facts and individual faces behind the key national issues is important for the WTPF.

The aides, whose research on pending legislation influences their bosses' positions, have diverse educational backgrounds, but agree that educational field trips are beneficial.

The aides' visit on Wednesday included a stop at Parallel Petroleum Co., where company personnel briefly explained some of the inner workings behind generating, promoting and completing an exploration deal.

"It's easy to lose sight of the people and lives behind the issues we're researching," says Meyer.

Other participants on the field trip, which includes a trip to a drilling rig and production facilities today, are aides to House Appropriations Committee members. They, and their bosses, are: Bill Boger, Rep. Robert Livingston, D-La.; Gale Smith, Rep. Edward Royball, R-Calif.; Marsha Knutson, Rep. Jerry Lewis, R-Calif.; Andy Grow, Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif.; and, Jennifer Groat, Rep. John Porter, R-Ill.

Aides to House Ways & Means Committee members making the trip are: Woody Keeney, Rep. Judd Gregg, R-N.H. and John Ortmans, Rep. Robert Matsui, D-Calif. Other House aides along are: Julie Blankenship, whose boss Rep. Mike Oxley, R-Ohio, serves on the Energy & Commerce Committee; and Chuck Lewis, who works with Rep. Bill Hendon, R-N.C., who serves on the Energy & Environment Subcommittee of the House Interior Committee.

Senatorial aides taking part in the trip are Jay Willer, Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.; Robert Roach, Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio; Bruce McKay, Sen. Quinton Burdick, D-N.D.; and O.B. O'Brien, Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Personal income rises 0.5 percent in July

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans' personal incomes, bolstered by a variety of one-time special factors, rose 0.5 percent in July, the best showing in three months, the government said Wednesday.

While some economists hailed the increase as the best economic news in some time, others cautioned that the increase in wages and salaries, the key component of the income statistic, remained sluggish and that consumer spending rose at a lackluster pace.

On another front, the government said housing construction edged down 1.8 percent in July to an annual rate of 1.82 million units. While it was the third consecutive monthly decline, housing construction for the first seven months of the year is 9.1 percent ahead of last year.

Analysts attributed the string of declines to a rise in mortgage interest rates after a dramatic fall earlier in the year. They said with mortgage rates now declining again, the housing industry is well on its way to having its best year since 1978.

The Commerce Department said the gain in personal incomes was the best since a 1.3 percent April increase. It followed a 0.1 percent June increase and a 0.1 percent May decline.

David Wyss, an economist with Data Resources Inc., said the stronger income gain should provide the support necessary to keep consumer spending growing in the months ahead.

"This is the first good news we have seen on the economy in quite a while," he said. "The consumer is all that is holding this economy above water right now."

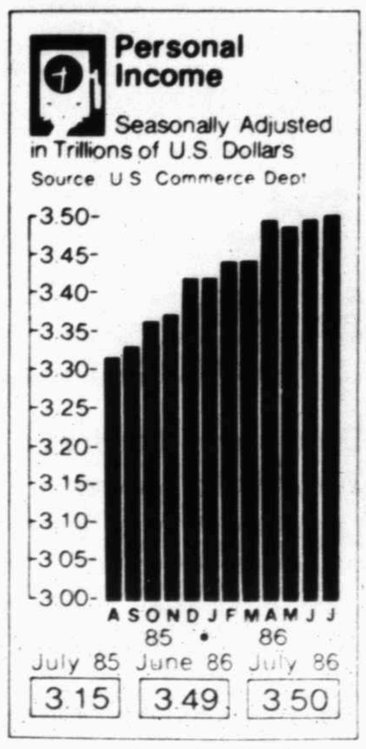

The government said Tuesday that the overall economy, as measured by the gross national product, grew at a barely discernible 0.6 percent annual rate in the April-June quarter, the poorest showing since the last recession. This weak growth has heightened concerns that the country could be in danger of slipping into a recession.

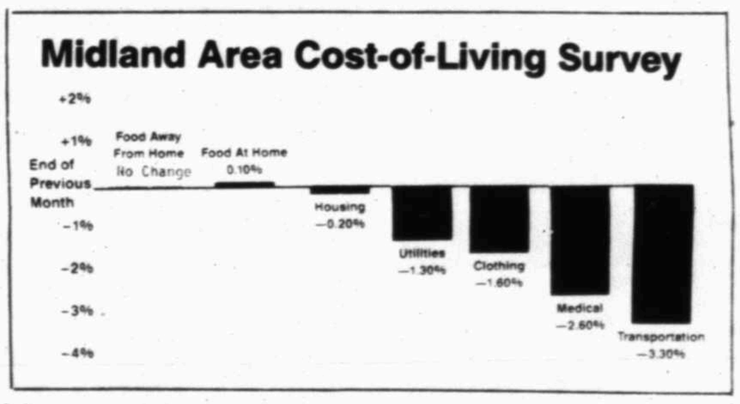

While the Reagan administration is predicting economic growth will rebound to a 4 percent rate in the last half of the year, many private analysts are forecasting a much weaker growth pattern.

Some economists said the 0.5 percent rise in incomes in July, while better than previous months, was inflated by special factors that overstated the strength that otherwise would be reflected in the number.

The government said a large part of the increase came from retroactive adjustments to Social Security benefits for recent retirees and a bounceback from the strike against American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which had depressed the June figure.

Cost of living declines

From Staff Reports

Following two months of increases, the cost of living in Midland fell 0.7 percent for July, according to a report from ClayDesta National Bank. Annualized, the city would show a deflation rate of 1.4 percent.

At the same time, Odessa had a 0.2 percent decrease in the cost of living in July, the second straight decline.

Food at home costs were raised slightly by increases in alcohol and shelf items, which offset decreases in produce and meat prices. For the year, Midland's food prices have risen 1.4 percent.

Midland's clothing costs fell 1.6 percent in July, a reversal of June's trend. The fall was led by lower prices for clothing for both men and children.

Although gasoline prices were mixed, they were generally lower, which accounted for the 3.3 percent decline in transportation costs in the Tall City, the third decline in a row. The city's transportation costs have fallen 22.9 percent over the past 12 months.

Lower costs for dental care offset slightly higher non-prescription drug prices as medical expenses fell 2.6 percent in July, the third consecutive month the category has shown a decline.

Midland residents paid 1.3 percernt less in utility bills, led by a 4.1 percent decline in gas rates. The electric fuel adjustment charges remained stable, and local water rates also remained stable, for the tenth month in a row.

Housing costs continue their ix month see-saw action, showing a 0.2 percent decline in July. Higher rents were offset by lower costs for home maintenance.

For the fifth month in a row, the cost of eating out in Midland restaurants remained stable for July.

Australian may be bidding for USX

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Robert Holmes a Court, a rich Australian who failed in five bids to buy his country's biggest company, may have turned his sights toward USX Corp., the American petroleum and steel giant with a relatively inexpensive stock.

"I don't think he's going to get it. He'll have to have a hell of a big war chest," said George Zimmerman, analyst for Gruntal & Co. of New York.

Word that Holmes a Court might be launching an attack on Pittsburgh-based USX, formerly U.S. Steel Corp., sent the company's stock up $2.12½ to $19.50 per share in heavy trading on the New York Stock Exchange Wednesday.

"You're playing the pretty big leagues when you're talking about going after U.S. Steel. But this guy is no dope, and he's got more money than me," said Robert Maloney, a securities analyst for Wood Gundy Inc. of New York.

At $19.50 per share, USX's 257 million shares of common stock would be worth $5 billion. The per share price represents a steep discount off the $33 per share high for the preceding year and reflects diminished opportunity for profits because of low prices for petroleum and steel.

Even so, such a takeover would be considerably bigger than Holmes a Court's previous raids.

USX spokesman William Hoffman Jr. said company officials would have no comment beyond the brief announcement that Holmes a Court's investment firm of Bell Resources Ltd. said in a letter it intended to buy up to 15 percent of USX's stock.

The principal holdings of USX, formerly known as U.S. Steel Corp., are Marathon Oil Co., Texas Oil & Gas Corp. and USS Corp., the nation's largest steelmaker.

Holmes a Court, known for his hostile takeover attempts worldwide, is rumored to be Australia's richest man, with a personal fortune exceeding $214 million.

One of his most notable forays was against Broken Hill Proprietary Co., a steel and natural resource conglomerate that is Australia's largest company.

Robert Holmes a Court

Holmes a Court tried and failed five times since 1983 to get control of Broken Hill in a hostile takeover valued at about $2.7 billion. He owns about 30 percent of the company.

Outplacement — The Final Frontier

Along with the growth in the number of people leaving area companies, either voluntarily or through layoffs, there are a growing number of former employers who are feeling a greater responsibility to those departing workers.

Several major oil companies, including Exxon, Amoco and Marathon, have instituted formalized 'outplacement' programs to help workers make the transition intc new careers.

Among the most ambitious of these programs is the Job Search Assistance Program (JSAP) being offered to early retirees or workers laid off from Chevron USA.

Chevron has contracted with an international personnel consulting firm to conduct career continuation workshops in preparation to get the best possible use out of the company's newly established outplacement resource center.

The workshops are conducted by Drake, Beam, Morin, who has also conducted such programs for Exxon and Amoco locally, and emphasize:

- self-analysis to identify transferable accomplishments and skills or outside interests that could hold potential for a suitable new career as well as the personal priorities that will determine the suitability of a new job;
- personal marketing skills needed to put forward the best possible image — both on paper, through an effective resume, and in person — through refined interview techniques; and,
- executing the job search itself using as many job sources and search tools as possible.

After completing the workshop, the former employees will have access to the resource center to make the most of their newly acquired jobhunting skills.

ONE NICE TOUCH about Chevron's center is that it is located away from the company's office building at ClayDesta Plaza, which allows users to avoid the awkwardness and added stress of confronting former co-workers in order to make use of the center's services.

In addition to the basic services of resume typing, photocopying and telephone access, the center will have a job source library with background information on employers as well as a variety of available job references.

But one of the most impressive components of the center is the Job-Hot-Line, a computerized national job bank of available positions from private and public sources, cross-referenced by job description, geographic location and salary requirements.

The national scope of the job bank is vital in light of the limited job availability in this area for many oil professionals.

In addition to typing resumes, the secretarial staff at the center can use memory typewriters to create personal cover letters and/or customized resumes for specific job openings on behalf of center users.

CAREER TRANSITION can be a traumatic and confusing process for displaced workers but one key to maintaining an upbeat attitude toward a voluntary or involuntary job change is getting into a professional, methodical jobhunting routine. "We tell workshop participants that they already have a full-time job, and one of the toughest ones going — looking for a career," says Mike Tharp, vice president and Midland site manager for Drake, Beam, Morin.

"We encourage them to set up regular 'office hours' for using their resource center, whether it is provided by their former employer, or if they use our company's individual service."

"Fellow job seekers provide an informal support group for each other, and can exchange practical tips based on successful hunting methods," notes Chevron human resources manager Henry Hammons.

The first graduates of the three-day Chevron workshop are expected to begin using the resource center by the middle of next week, according to Tharp.

Several companies offer career transition workshops, but it is the quality of the post-workshop facilities and services that makes Chevron's program more comprehensive, Hammons believes.

In addition to the resource center and computerized Job Hot-Line, the company offers a resume circulation service and candidate search process for qualified former employees. The resume circulation system is an adjunct to a national media marketing campaign conducted at the corporate level by Chevron.

What was widely believed to be endangered — if not thoroughly extinct — that rare creature, corporate compassion, seems to be surviving in the form of responsible local companies trying to help victims of economic circumstances through some of the hardest of times.

OIL & GAS DIGEST

Walker to assume operation of 940 wells

HOUSTON (SWN) — Walker Energy Partners (WEP) announced that on August 13, the preliminary injunction sought by Envirogas Inc. against WEP seeking to enjoin it from terminating Envirogas as operator of approximately 940 oil and gas wells in the Appalachian Basin was denied by the U.S. District Court for the Western District of New York. Accordingly, WEP will now take steps to expedite the takeover of operations in an orderly transition from Envirogas.

WEP also announced financial results for the quarter ended June 30, 1986. It reported a net loss for the quarter of $9,985,000 ($1.17 per unit) on revenues of $4,159,000 resulting in a net loss of $15,623,000 ($1.84 per unit) on revenues of $9,512,000 for the six month period ended June 30, 1986.

NRM Energy reports six-month financial results

DALLAS (SWN) NRM Energy Co. reported financial results for the second quarter and the first six months of 1986 and announced the closings of its exchange offer and public debt offering.

Gross revenues for the first six months of 1986 were approximately $33,191,000. Cash flow from operations (before depletion, depreciation and amortization) was $15,971,000. This compares with gross revenues of $35,125,000 and cash flow from operations of $18,773,000 for the first six months of 1985.

For the second quarter ended June 30, 1986, NRM Energy reported gross revenues of approximately $14,457,000 and cash flow from operations of about $7,027,000. This compares with gross revenues of $17,559,000 and cash flow from operations of $9,703,000 during the second quarter of 1985.

Bogert Oil announces increased earnings

OKLAHOMA CITY (SWN) Bogert Oil Co. announced increases in earnings and revenues for both the three months and nine months ended June 30, 1986.

Revenues for the nine months ended June 30, were $15,704,468, up 22 percent from the same period last year. Net income was $1,484,259, or $.69 per share, up from $1,326,186, or $.62 per share, reported for the first nine months of fiscal 1985. Cash flow from operations was $7.6 million for the current nine-month period, up $1.3 million from fiscal 1985.

Revenues for the second quarter of fiscal 1986 were $4,779,756, a seven percent increase over the prior year's $4,474,543.

Seisdata shows profit first time since '84

HOUSTON (SWN) Seisdata Services, Inc. returned to profitability for the first time since 1984 during the second quarter ended June 30, 1986.

Income from operations for the second quarter of 1986 was $111,000, or nine cents a share, compared with a loss of $883,000, or $1.11 a common share, for the period ended June 30, 1985. Per share figures have been adjusted for a one-for-three reverse stock split. Weighted average common shares outstanding were 1,273,000 at June 30, 1986, compared with 796,000 a year earlier.

The company recorded an extraordinary gain of $10,909,000, or $8.57 a share, for the second quarter as a result of its reorganization under Chapter 11 approved by the court June 25, and effective July 7. "We anticipate continued profitability from operations. We also plan to attempt to negotiate possible acquisitions with companies that have proprietary information, field equipment and computer equipment compatible with our own" said Raymond W. Clawson, president and chief executive officer.

Owners sell Dr Pepper to group of investors

NEW YORK (AP) — The owner of Dr Pepper Co. has agreed to sell the soft-drink maker to a group of investors for $416 million after antitrust objections blocked the sale of the company to Coca-Cola Co. for $470 million.

Forstmann Little & Co. scrapped the proposed Coca-Cola deal earlier this month after the Federal Trade Commission won a court injunction against it.

"While we were, of course, disappointed that the injunction obtained by the FTC did not permit us to complete the sale of Dr Pepper to Coca-Cola, the (current) transaction is an attractive one," Theodore Forstmann, a general partner of Forstmann Little, said in a statement Wednesday.

The investor group planning to buy Dr Pepper includes Dr Pepper executives, the securities firm Shearson Lehman Brothers Inc., and Hicks & Haas, a Dallas investment firm, Forstmann Little said.

The acquisition is expected to be completed Friday, Forstmann Little said.

Under the agreement, the two principals of Hicks & Haas, Thomas O. Hicks and Robert B. Haas, would become co-chairmen of Dr Pepper and its current chairman and chief executive, W.W. Clements, would become chairman emeritus.

John Albers, Dr Pepper's president, also would assume the post of chief executive.

The proposed purchase of Dr Pepper would be the third major purchase in the soft-drink industry for Hicks & Haas. In May the firm bought A&W Brands Inc., a leading root-beer maker, for about $75 million. And in March 1985 the firm bought Dr Pepper's bottling operations in Dallas, Fort Worth and Waco, Texas, from Forstmann Little for about $100 million.

Dr Pepper, with about 6.5 percent of the U.S. soft-drink market, ranks fourth among the nation's top soft-drink producers, according to Jesse Meyers, publisher of the trade journal Beverage Digest.

Coca-Cola is the industry leader with about 39 percent, PepsiCo Inc. is second with 29 percent and Seven-Up Co., a unit of Philip Morris Inc., is third with 6.7 percent, Meyers estimates.

Coca-Cola agreed to buy Dr Pepper shortly after PepsiCo agreed to acquire Seven-Up for $380 million. If those two acquisitions had been completed, Coca-Cola and PepsiCo together would have controlled about 80 percent of the domestic market.

But the FTC objected to both deals on antitrust grounds, and PepsiCo shelved its plan to buy Seven-Up. Coca-Cola initially pressed on with its bid for Dr Pepper, but scuttled the effort after the FTC secured the injunction.

AOI Coal announces revenues

MIDLAND (SWN) — AOI Coal Co. announced revenues of $13,284,000 and net earnings of $162,000, or $.01 per share, for the second quarter of 1986. Per share data is based on 11,552,780 common shares outstanding. Revenues and net earnings for the comparable period in 1985 were $13,119,000 and $496,000, respectively, with earnings per share amounting to $.04. Increased depreciation expense on certain classes of mining equipment accounted for the majority of the decrease in second quarter 1986 net earnings as compared to the second quarter of 1985.

The AOI board of directors met on June 2, 1986 and unanimously approved the acquisition of all the outstanding stock of Robert L. Herndon, Inc. and Coal Associates, Inc. for 3,300,000 shares of AOI Common Stock. This matter has been submitted to stockholders for approval and will be voted upon at the 1986 Annual Meeting of Stockholders scheduled for 9:00 a.m. on September 25, 1986 at RepublicBank First National Midland in Midland, Texas.

Loan losses cause Illinois bank to fail

SPRINGFIELD, Ill. (UPI) — A tiny, western Illinois bank that was declared insolvent by federal and state officials was the first Illinois bank to go under since August 1985.

Officials with the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. said the Mendon State Bank of Mendon was closed about 3:10 p.m. Wednesday. The institution was scheduled to reopen at 9 a.m. today as a branch of First Midwest Bank of nearby Quincy.

Mendon State is the 91st bank to fail this year in the United States.

FDIC officials said the Mendon bank had assets of $20.5 million. No depositors will lose money because of the failure, FDIC officials said.

Normally the FDIC protects deposits of up to $100,000, but since First Midwest purchased all Mendon's assets and liabilities, even deposits exceeding $100,000 will be covered, officials said.

William Harris, Illinois banks commissioner, said the bank failed because of excessive loan losses and poor management practices.

"The insolvency resulted from excessive loan losses, including several sizable loans made to out-of-territory borrowers," Harris said.

In addition, Harris said "unsafe and unsound " banking practices on the part of management and the bank's board of directors contributed to the failure.

First Midwest will assume about $18.8 million in 3,900 deposit accounts and has agreed to pay the FDIC a purchase premium of $215,010. It also will purchase some of the failed bank's loans and other assets for $11.8 million.

To facilitate the transaction, the FDIC will advance $6.6 million to First Midwest, officials said.

INCOME

"After you sort out all the special factors, incomes, particularly in the important wage and salary component, are growing rather slowly," said Sandra Shaber, director of consumer economics at Chase Econometrics.

She said the weak income growth was partly to blame for the sluggish 0.2 percent rise in personal consumption spending in July.

"The income gains we have been having are too weak to increase people's purchasing power," she said. "It is the job market and wages and salaries which are going to determine people's purchasing power."

Personal consumption spending, which includes virtually everything except interest payments on debt, had risen by a much stronger 1 percent in June and 0.8 percent in May.

The weak July advance was attributed in part to slumping sales of new cars with analysts predicting demand for cars is likely to remain depressed for the rest of the year despite sales incentives.

Wages and salaries rose at a modest annual rate of $5.3 billion in July, up somewhat from the June gain of $4.7 billion.

Payrolls at manufacturing plants, which have been in a deep slump for some time, declined $800 million in July following a $1.9 billion June drop.

Farm income fell $1.1 billion in July following a huge $11.1 billion June drop. The weakness came from a drop in government subsidy payments, which fell by $2.3 billion in July and $11.4 billion in June.

JEANE DIXON'S your horoscope

© 1986, Los Angeles Times Syndicate

By Jeane Dixon
Friday, August 22, 1986

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Be more independent in your personal life. You must not allow your heart to rule your head if you want to achieve success. Do please yourself when choosing how to spend your leisure time. Loved ones are easy-going and quicker to accept your plans. Let your feelings be known and romance will bloom.

CELEBRITY BIRTHDATES: Milwaukee infielder Paul Molitor and righthander Ray Burris, BoSox all-star outfielder Carl Yastrzemski, sportscaster Paul Maguire, actresses Valerie Harper and Cindy Williams, Dr. Denton Cooley, science-fiction writer Ray Bradbury and author-poet Dorothy Parker.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Listen carefully and find out what people's needs are. Displaying too much ego could deny you some valuable input. Replace old habits with some healthy new ones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A promotion could require relocation. Consult mate or partner before making a final decision. Make greater use of the phone to avoid expensive business travel.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Complete pending projects before instigating new ones. Bargains abound for those who can afford cash outlays. A show of independence could jeopardize an ongoing romantic relationship. Avoid sounding stubborn.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Give offspring more choices. Actively cultivate new contacts in the business community. This is not the time to gamble or take unnecessary risks with your money. Keep any diet or exercise resolutions.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A stubborn attitude could cost you a job or close relationship. Make the best possible use of your special skills to earn extra money. Work out a babysitting exchange with a neighbor.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Jot down new ideas before you forget them. You need to be realistic when planning next week's work schedule. Publicize your professional accomplishments by writing reports. Romance is a source of excitement.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Children are drawn to you. Display your genuine affection for them. Share decisions with mate or partner. Watch a tendency to buy things on impulse. Make a list before going grocery shopping.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Wearing brighter colors boosts your spirits. Reading for enlightenment as well as pleasure puts you ahead of your competitors in the job market. Avoid getting involved with petty people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A friend or work associate rallies to your cause. A family dilemma proves easier to solve than you imagined. A conference will help you correct a budget problem.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could feel a bit restless today. Concentrate on important work. The results will make you feel more confident! Influential people now look on your ideas with favor.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Keep in touch with friends and colleagues at a distance. You feel more confident about the future. Differences with a partner will be ironed out. Past complications could be due to poor communication.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Trust your intuition when a family member challenges your judgment. Be extra careful with jewels and cash. Take care of those home repairs you have been postponing. Travel enjoys highly favorable influences.

Opening lead: Queen of ♡

You can't go through life without insurance. Social Security is insurance; you can't drive a vehicle without insurance; and the odds are that your home and your life are insured.

At the bridge table, your insurance is the safety play. It is folly not to take out a policy if you are playing rubber bridge or in team competition scored at International Match Points; at matchpoints pairs, other factors have to be considered before you can decide whether or not to take a safety play.

This hand stems from rubber bridge. North-South were playing four-card majors with all jump raises forcing. As the cards lie, North would have been wiser to pass three no trump, at which contract South would have had an easy 10 tricks. But he had slam in mind and pushed his partner to a shaky contract.

Declarer won the opening lead in hand and foresaw no problem. He cashed the king-ace of diamonds and led a club to the king and ace. East exited with a heart and, when West then failed to follow to the queen of clubs, declarer had two more unavoidable club losers—down one.

The only distribution that could cause problems was a 4-1 club split. To guard against that, declarer should first draw trumps and then strip the major suits from his hand and dummy. All that remains is to make the safety play of leading a low club and ducking it. If the suit is 3-2, declarer will next force out the ace with an honor and he can lose only one more club. If the suit is 4-1 and the ace is singleton, declarer has solved his problem there and then. If the cards are as in the diagram, whoever wins the club trick is forced to return the suit. South simply lets the club run round to fourth hand and again he can lose only one more club trick. Try it!

Stars to be voted in New Jersey's GI's Entertainers Hall of Fame

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) — Donald O'Connor, Jackie Gleason, Rosemary Clooney and Dinah Shore are eligible for inclusion in a GI's Entertainers Hall of Fame in this gambling resort.

All those stars are among dozens of other big names of today and yesterday who performed for the thousands of GIs who took basic training, convalesced or worked here during World War II.

Other celebrities who came to Camp Boardwalk included: Mickey Rooney, Clark Gable, Tommy Dorsey, baseball star Joe DiMaggio, the Glenn Miller Band, Harry James, Sammy Kaye, Guy Lombardo, the Andrews Sisters, and the Marx Brothers.

People are being asked to vote before Sept. 19 for their favorites, said spokesman William Elliott. Photographs of the 20 entertainers who win the most votes will be put on permanent display in Atlantic City.

The announcement of the winners is part of events planned for Nov. 2-4 during a reunion of veterans dubbed "Camp Boardwalk Revisited." An estimated 350,000 men and women served here during the war.

Griffin

LOS ANGELES (AP) — After chewing the fat on the air with more than 25,000 guests over 23 years, Merv Griffin has hung up the microphone.

"It's tough to say goodbye," the veteran television talk show host said Wednesday as he called an end to his 23-year reign. It was his 5,520th show.

In the last "Merv Griffin Show" he looked back at clips of shows that reflected changing newsmakers and stars from the time of John F. Kennedy to Ronald Reagan.

"It's been on my mind about a year to end the show," Griffin said after taping the 90-minute show. "But I felt if you're going to leave, it's better to leave when you're on top."

The final show, which will be telecast Friday, Sept. 5, marks the passing of an era. Griffin began his first talk show on NBC on Oct. 1, 1962 on the same day and in the same studio that Johnny Carson did his first "Tonight Show."

Within a year after the NBC afternoon show, he had his own syndicated talk series. In 1969, he went to CBS and became a late-night rival to Carson until 1972, when he left and went back to syndication.

Asked if he regretted leaving the air before Carson, he laughed and said, "I had dinner with Johnny the other night and we laughed about it. But there was a time when the competition was very fierce and we took it very seriously."

Carson's brother, Dick, has been Griffin's director for the past 16 years and directed the last show.

Part of Griffin's final show included an interview with Reagan at the White House, which Griffin said was "the greatest thrill of my life.

"This is a history of these past decades," Griffin said, "and it can only increase in importance as time goes by."

Griffin said he will begin a new big band show called "The Coconut Ballroom" in prime time later this year on one of the three major networks. He declined to say which.

Griffin, who recently sold his production company, said he also has contracts to produce two TV movies, several specials, a situation comedy and four game shows. He already produces "Wheel Of Fortune," "Jeopardy," and "Dance Fever."

Romero

SANTA MONICA, Calif. (AP) — Actor Cesar Romero, who plays the husband to Jane Wyman's matriarch in the CBS-TV series "Falcon Crest," will be in hospital traction for at least one week because of a herniated disc.

Romero, 79, experienced severe back pain Tuesday while on location filming in California's Napa Valley.

He is being treated at St. Johns Hospital and Health Center in Santa Monica, Lorimar-Telepictures spokeswoman Marge Baker said Wednesday. There was no word on when Romero would be well enough to return to the set.

• • •

Stallone

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Sylvester Stallone never loses a fight on film, but the star of "Rocky" and "Rambo" was beaten by California commuters before his latest flick was ever finished.

Cannon Films, producers of "Over the Top," abandoned plans to block the Simi Valley Freeway for filming and completed the movie without that planned sequence, a California Film Office spokeswoman said Tuesday.

"Over the Top," in which Stallone plays an arm-wrestling trucker trying to win back his son's love, called for a series of truck stunts on a 3.5-mile stretch of the freeway through the hills between the San Fernando and Simi valleys.

But the plan led to protests to government bodies by outraged drivers and the company decided the film could do without the scenes, said spokeswoman Lisa Rawlins.

• • •

Rooney

WESTLAKE VILLAGE, Calif. (AP) — Entertainer Mickey Rooney will be camera shy for at least a few weeks as he recovers from a bite on the nose by a friend's dog.

Publicist Red Doff said Rooney was bitten by the Doberman pinscher of producer Jim Aubrey as he played with the animal on Monday.

"He feels sorry that it happened," Doff said. "He was playing with the dog and the dog turned on him. He feels like it was his own fault."

Aubrey took Rooney, 65, to Westlake Hospital, about 40 miles northwest of downtown Los Angeles, where his nose was stitched up, Doff said.

Baddeley

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Hermione Baddeley, a British actress known to American television viewers as the housekeeper on "Maude," died Tuesday of complications from a stroke. She was 77.

Miss Baddeley made her London stage debut at 12. She appeared in 22 films from 1928 to 1979. They included "Room at the Top" in 1959, for which she received an Oscar nomination, "Brighton Rock-Young Scarface" in 1947 and "Mary Poppins" in 1964. Miss Baddeley spent three years playing Mrs. Naugatuck, the housekeeper on CBS' "Maude," before quitting in 1977.

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Split share participation lets shares go to other accounts

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I have a "self-directed" individual retirement account through which I buy two stocks. Both stocks have dividend reinvestment plans, which permit stockholders to use their dividends to automatically buy additional full and fractional shares.

My broker says I cannot use the dividend reinvestment plans in my IRA, because my stocks are held in "street name" — registered in the brokerage house's name.

As a result, my dividends go into a money market mutual fund, which presently pays low dividends. The broker says the only way I can reinvest the dividends is by giving him an order to buy more of those shares with the cash available in the money market mutual fund. That, of course, means paying more commissions.

Is there any way I can beat this system?

Doyle

A. Yes. Transfer your IRA to a different brokerage firm, one that will permit you to do what you have in mind. Your broker's claim that it can't be done is so much hogwash.

All too many brokerage houses refuse to allow customers who have stocks in street name to participate in dividend reinvestment programs. This applies to self-directed IRAs and Keogh self-employed retirement plans, as well as to customers who leave stocks with brokerages for convenience.

Those brokerages usually come up with the lame excuse that their computers can't be programmed to handle dividend reinvestment plans. That's just not true, if the plan has "split share participation," as most such plans do. Split share participation provides a method through which fractional shares can be allocated to different accounts at a brokerage firm, bank or other "nominee" holding stocks for customers.

You put your finger on the real reason brokerages steer customers away from dividend reinvestment plans — commissions. Brokers don't get commissions on reinvested dividends in those plans.

Some brokerage firms put the shaft to customers even worse than yours does. Those brokerages don't put the dividends from street name stock into money market mutual funds, where some income is earned. Instead, they just credit that money to customers' accounts and keep it in "free credit balances," where it doesn't earn a penny.

• • •

Q. Can you provide a list of brokerage firms that allow customers to take part in dividend reinvestment plans with stocks held in street name?

A. Sorry, but one hard and fast policy I must follow is NEVER to point readers toward specific brokerages. Printing names here would be taken as recommendations, which might backfire. Over the decades I've been pounding out this column, complaints have come in about almost every brokerage house in the business.

You'll have to get on the phone and keep calling brokerages until you find some willing to permit dividend reinvestment plan participation with stocks they hold for customers. Then, it will be up to you to choose the firm with which to do business.

• • •

Q. I have been in dividend reinvestment plans of three companies for a number of years. If I sell any of these stocks, how do I report the cost on Schedule D of my income tax return, so I can calculate my profit or loss?

A. You received a statement every time a dividend was reinvested. At the end of each year, you received a summary statement. Those statements are the records of your cost "basis," in most cases.

The exceptions are reinvested dividends of "qualified" utility companies, which you were allowed to exclude from income tax from 1982 through 1985. On those reinvestments, your cost basis is zero.

• • •

Q. I lost the records of my dividend reinvestments. My broker has telephoned the dividend reinvestment plan agent — a New York City bank — requesting duplicate records. No results. What should I do?

A. Write to the plan agent yourself. If you still get no results, contact the office of corporate secretary of the company in which you own stock. As a stockholder, you're a part owner of the company. The corporate secretary is one of your employees.

• • •

Q. Is there any publication I can readily obtain which gives the full names of the stocks which appear in newspaper tables in abbreviated form?

A. There are a number of sources. Probably the handiest is the Standard & Poor's "Stock Guide," which is published monthly. You'll find it in every brokerage office and many libraries.

Time to make a big noise

Into the life of every company comes the need to make some noise. About a new product, a line extension or a corporate position.

In newspapers you can command attention in a news environment with large space—a page, a double truck, a special section. Newspaper flexibility and short lead time lets you get into the paper before the news value of your message sputters out.

Remember us when you want to sound off.

RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS
OIL AND GAS DIVISION

DISTRICT 8 CASE NO. 101,611

July 21, 1986

NOTICE OF HEARING

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN to the public and to all interested persons that under the legal authority anbd jurisdiction of Title 3, Oil and Gas, Subtitles A, B, and C of the Texas Natural Resources Code, and pursuant to Article 6252-13a, Revised Civil Statutes of Texas, the RAILROAD COMMISSION OF TEXAS will hold a hearing on AUGUST 28, 1986 at 9:00 a.m.

at the William B. Travis State Office Building, 1701 N. Congress Avenue, Austin, Texas. For room assignment, on the date of the hearing please check the bulletin board in the 1st Floor lobby. Persons planning to attend this hearing are urged to contact the applicant (see service list) immediately prior to the hearing date to be sure that the hearing will proceed on the scheduled date. The Commission will consider the application of:

Parker & Parsley Petroleum Co.
P. O. Box 3178
Midland, TX 79702

for a spacing exception permit under the provisions of 16 Texas Administrative Code Section 3.37 (Railroad Commission Statewide Rule 37), to drill Well No. 1, Jones "A" Lease, 55.7 Acres, 8, S.F. 15387, MA 43004 Survey, Spraberry (Trend Area) Field, Midland County, being 14 miles in a southeast direction from Midland, Texas.

The location of this well is as follows:

230' from east line and 2628' from north line of lease and survey. This well is to be completed at an approximate depth of 8850 feet.

If a continuation is necessary, this hearing will proceed at the William B. Travis State Office Building, 1701 N. Congress Avenue, Austin, Texas, and, to the extent possible, on subsequent working days. The room number and exact time of the continuation will be announced on the record in this proceeding and recorded with Docket Services, Oil and Gas Division, Railroad Commission of Texas.

PURSUANT TO SAID HEARING, the Commission may enter such rules and orders as in its judgment the evidence may justify, including placement of the proposed well at a different location from that requested by applicant.

TO APPEAR in support of or in opposition to this proceeding, a party other than the applicant must file with the Rule 37 Department, at least five (5) days in advance of the hearing date, a notice of intent to appear.

ALL EXHIBITS filed as a part of the record in this cause must be specific, and, if a reference includes an exhibit filed in prior proceedings before the Commission, a copy of such exhibit properly identified shall be submitted for this record.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC SALE

Notice is hereby given that Walter R. Davis ("Secured Party"), intends to sell at public sale in accordance with the provisions of the Texas Uniform Commercial Code to the highest bidder or bidders for cash the following described property:

The shares (the "Shares") of common stock, constituting all of the outstanding capital stock of the Companies set forth below (the "Companies"), having the Certificate Nos. set forth opposite the names of the Companies, in which property Secured Party holds a security interest granted by JOC Oil Exploration Company, Inc. ("Debtor") pursuant to the terms of the Security Agreements dated as indicated below between Debtor and the Secured Party:

Company	Cert No	Dt of Sec Agreement
Seminole Oil Company	1	August 30, 1979
Williamson-Patterson, Inc.	30	January 31, 1981
JOC Realty, Inc.	1	March 14, 1985

The public sale will take place at the office of Walter R. Davis, 3101 North Pecos, Midland, Texas 79705 on August 28, 1986 at 10:00 a.m., Midland, Texas time. The certificates evidencing the Shares are on display and available for inspection at the office of Walter R. Davis at the address shown above, telephone no. 915/682-9418.

Secured Party reserves the right to bid for and purchase the Shares and to credit the purchase price against the expenses of sale and principal, interest and any and all other amounts due and payable to Secured Party pursuant to the terms of any and all indebtedness secured by the security intertest in the Shares.

Prospective bidders are advised that (i) the Shares will be sold only in single blocks for each of the Companies and will not be split up or broken down; (ii) the certificate evidencing the Shares to be received by the purchaser at the sale will bear a legend to the effect that the Shares have not be registered under the Securities Act of 1933, as amended the ("Act"), or any state securities laws and that no transfer of the Shares may be made unless the Shares are registered under the Act and any applicable state secrities laws or an exemption from such registration is available; and (iii) the purchaser will be required to provide written representations stating that: (a) purchaser either alone or with such purchaser's attorneys, accountants or other advisors possesses the requisite business and investment knowledge and experience to effectively evaluate the potential risks and merits of the investment in the Shares; (b) purchaser has sufficient financial ability and net worth to bear the economic risk of the investment for an indefinite period of time and to withstand a total loss of purchaser's investment in the Shares; (c) purchaser is acquiring the Shares for investment, solely for purchaser's own account, and not with a view to distribution or resale of the Shares; and (d) purchaser will not resell the Shares, except pursuant to an effective registration statement under the Act and any applicable state securities laws or pursuant to an available exemption therefrom.

Prospective purchasers will furnished, upon request, with such financial information about the Companies as is in the possession of the Secured Party. The Shares will be sold without representation or warranty, express or implied, of any kind.

Walter R. Davis, Secured Party

THE STATE OF TEXAS

TO: R. J. PATTERSON and JEAN PATTERSON
Defendants in the cause herein described:

You and each of you are hereby commanded to appear and answer before the 142nd District Court in the Midland County Courthouse in Midland, Midland County, Texas, at or before 10:00 o'clock a.m. on the first Monday after the expiration of 42 days from the date of issuance hereof, being at or before 10:00 a.m. on Monday, the 15th day of September, 1986, then and there to answer the petition of MAX FEARNOW, Plaintiff in Cause No. A-35,186, styled Max Fearnow, Plaintiff vs. R. J. Patterson and Jean Patterson, in which Max Fearnow is Plaintiff and R. J Patterson and Jean Patterson are Defendants. The said petition, filed September 6, 1985, discloses that the nature of said suit is as follows:

The Defendants materially misrepresented the area of a property that they sold to the Plaintiff. Their representations were both fraudulent and deceptive trade practices.

If this citation is not served within ninety (90) days after date of its issuance, it shall be returned unserved.

ISSUED AND GIVEN UNDER MY HAND AND THE SEAL OF SAID COURT on this the 1st day of August, 1986, at 4:00 o'clock P.M. at Midland County, Texas.

Fall Fashion '86

Dressing Constructively

The blueprints have been drawn up, the plans have been approved, the foundations have been laid and it's time to begin building. Building what? Fall fashions.

As summertime begins to melt into fall, it's time to take a serious look at what styles will be the building blocks of a fashionable wardrobe. Inside Fall Fashion '86 there are predictions, suggestions and advice from local retail stores on what styles will grace the fall season.

In women's wear on page 2G, there will be a move toward professional, yet feminine, styles and on building a wardrobe that works for business and pleasure. There is a resurgence of femininity and women will see garments that are molded more to a woman's figure.

Big and bright are the fashion words in children's wear on page 4G. Baggy sweaters reaching below the knee, oversized shirts and baggy or stirrup pants will be the rage for girls as they head back to school, while boys will sport multi-colored shirts and sweat suits.

Men's wear, found on page 7G, will lean toward the conservative, professional look with a high fashion flair with an added splash of color.

Fall fashions 'fit' feminine form

Sophisticated Styles

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Writer

Fashion-conscious women may want to pull out their calorie counters as they begin to build their fall wardrobe. No longer will the feminine form be hidden under straight-lined, male-inspired suits or bulky, baggy sweaters. Local fashion experts agree that fall styles will be cnstructed to fit the woman's body more than in recent past.

Don't panic though. "Fitted" doesn't mean designers have gone back to creating skin-tight clothing that will complement only the figures of the leanest runway models. Instead, this season's designs are created to smoothly follow a woman's figure.

"All styling is going back to the body form," said Andrew Swartz, owner of Swartz.

THERE ARE some fashion building blocks that will help create the finished, put-together look of fall. In constructing — or adding to — a fall wardrobe, advisors say the foundation is on a more feminine look flattering a woman.

Designs emphasizing the feminine form for fall include garments with defined waists, straight skirts, skirts with hemlines at or above the knee and knit garments.

"In the broad sense, femininity is back in style," said John Ingram, manager of Julian Gold. "Not necessarily with ruffles, but rather a very sophisticated look. The little black dress for evening will be very popular."

Swartz said the trend and attitude in Midland, and around the country, is to not put too much emphasis on one-time items — like the dress that is worn once, then hung in the back of the closet because everyone has seen it.

"There has been an interest by a number of people in the tea-length or street-length dresses for evenings rather than the elegant ballroom gown," Swartz said. "They want a garment that will go places.

"Due to the economic conditions here, people are being particular about one-time items. They would rather have something they can wear more than once, but they still want these items to be special," Swartz said.

TO MAKE a suit go from dawn to dusk can be simple. The transition is created with accessories. There is a renewed interest in shawls and scarfs to complement day outfits for the office or a luncheon, Swartz said. Jewelry and blouses will be tools used to transform suits from day- to eveningwear.

"We have a suit in our store right now that has a blouse with ruffles at the neck and on the cuffs which would work beautifully for evening-wear. But if you put a tailored blouse with it, it would easily be appropriate for the office," Swartz said.

For casual- and eveningwear, leather and suede separates and coordinated outfits are selling well, according to Swartz.

Bea McGrath, public relations manager for Pappagallo, agreed that dresses and skirts made from smooth leathers and suedes are important for the fall wardrobe.

"Of course in leather, the earth tones are always popular and black is a basic color for almost everyone. But suits in the jewel tones are selling well too," Swartz said.

"Jewel tones," among the most popular shades this fall, are basically just what they sound like — shades of jewels such as sapphire blue, ruby red and emerald green. Black also will be a part of the fall fashion statement, according to Ingram.

"Last year we saw an overabundance of prints and fullness. Everything had a lot of different colors," Swartz said. "This season I think we will be seeing more geometric designs and color-coordinated outfits."

Many customers are looking for outfits they can mix and match with other items to create numerous different coordinated-looks.

"The big news for fall is an emphasis on outfits rather than separates," said Ms. McGrath.

WOMEN WILL see many suits in the fall line of designer clothes, but these will not be the man-style suits of former years. Women's suits will have a more sophisticated look, Ingram said.

"The suit-look is very strong, especially in Midland," said Swartz. "and it will be very feminine. It will have a more defined waist with accented shoulders, but still a very soft look. Wools and knits will be very popular. Some of the suits will have peplums," Swartz said.

"There will be differences in the lapels, cuffs and tails of the suit jacket and the jackets will often be fuller," Ingram said.

"Treatment of the sleeve will include pushing them up to elbow length," Ingram said. "There will also be suits which have a fitted bodice, particularly in (Bill) Blass, where the jacket can be worn without a blouse because it is form-fitted."

Ms. McGrath said that many outfits will nip in at the waist, have softer shoulders and some will feature a peplum.

"There will usually be some kind of special treatment at the waist," she said. "I think belts will be strong, even sat the hip, but particularly at the waist."

Ingram also agreed the waist area would have some emphasis, but in a different manner.

"The waist will be made an attraction in that the area below the waist will feature designs like blouson skirts," Ingram said.

THE SKIRT also will show a more feminine flair. Straight, slim skirts with a hemline at the knee or slightly below the knee, and suits with short jackets and fuller skirts will be included in the fall line, according to Swartz.

"Skirts will be very important," Ms. McGrath said. "There will be a great variety in length and style. Lengths will vary from the ankle to above the knee."

Pants also will be seen in women's attire, but the emphasis will be on "put-together" outfits. Ingram said that pants will be worn with the great coat — an over-sized long jacket with a hemline below the knee. Blazers which coordinate with pants also will be popular.

"I hesitate to say pant suits will be in because that brings back bad memories," Swartz said, referring to the formerly popular polyester pant suits. "But pants as a suited-look — a coordinated outfit — is what will be seen."

TO COMPLEMENT fall fashions, accessories will lean toward complementing the suit, Swartz said. Many accessories will follow what is called the Chanel-look with long gold chains, around 30 inches in length, worn in abundance.

Ingram and Swartz both agreed that pearls will be an important accessory for day and evening wear.

"Accessories will cover a full gamut. For fun, the large, bright, bulky jewelry in electric blues and pinks will be popular. But for cocktails it will be pearls," Ingram said.

Fall fashion will add a few new dimensions to shoes and hose as well.

"There will be a lot of metallic used in shoes," Ms. McGrath said. "There will be a lot of back interest" with textures and leathers used for designs in the heel area.

Textured stockings and even hose with seams will be in, according to Ms. McGrath, and they will feature more colors.

Fall styles are creating a foundation for women's clothing to work for them. Women's styles and attitudes are providing opportunities for women to build a wardrobe which can take them from the office to a party without a complete change.

"Women can still be feminine in a professional world, they just do it in an understated format," Swartz said.

Accessories active in accenting attire

NEW YORK (UPI) — Like the clothes they accompany, fall accessories will be classic and luxurious-looking.

"We like the whole idea of luxe accessories in general," said Patricia Kenney, fashion director for accessories at Macy's New York, "starting with crocodile as a texture."

The two-inch-wide crocodile belt, like the ones worn with cashmere turtlenecks and full suede skirts at the Calvin Klein show, is the big fall accessory. The expensive skin also will be popular on old-fashioned loafers, which will make a comeback, and structured handbags.

Fall is an explosive season for shawls, an item that debuted on the runways at Ralph Lauren, Perry Ellis, Donna Karan and Calvin Klein, among others. High-fashion shawls are made of cashmere and tossed elegantly over the shoulder or in the belt of a new long-waisted fit-and-flair coat.

"I think there is a lot more elegance and old-world money, that kind of feeling," said Jane Tuma, fashion director for accessories and shoes at Saks Fifth Avenue.

What Tuma calls "old world money" will be popular in the form of faux pins and jewelry that look like they came from your grandmother's jewelry box — but if you have access to or can afford the real thing, including fine jewelry from legendary establishments like Bulgari, you'll really be in vogue.

"If you're not a socialite," concluded Tuma, "you want to look like one."

Tuma likes chic Chanel-like chains that include beads and pearls and fit into the category of "important" and elegant. The Hermes accessory that stores are stocking for fall is the trademark leather wrist band with buckles on it.

Clothes that work for working women

NEW YORK (UPI) — Look at the stars on the fall fashion front — Donna Karan, Calvin Klein, Mary Ann Restivo, Adrienne Vittadini — and you'll notice striking similarities, most notably in realistic attitudes.

After the horror of the 1984 fall season, devoted to making women look like men, followed by a reactive spring 1985 season making women look so much like women they couldn't move, designers at every price level have decided to be realistic.

The result here in America, where the fall shows were the best in years, and in Europe were day clothes that are repeatedly referred to as "classic" and "wearable."

From Alistair Blair and Jasper Conran on the British runways, to Giorgio Armani in Milan and Karl Lagerfeld, Yves Saint Laurent and Valentino in Paris, modern, spare, luxurious business clothes reigned.

"I think all clothes are related to business clothes," said Ellin Saltzman, fashion director at Saks Fifth Avenue.

It wasn't always that way. In fact, it's shocking how long it's taken the fashion industry to meet the real needs of working women.

Bernie Ozer, vice-president of fashion for the Associated Merchandising Corporation, a consulting organization with enormous influence on what department stores buy, thinks women themselves are one reason for the delay.

"They thought they had to wear a hard-edged business suit and a shirt and a string tie," he said. "It's not necessary. If she's got a good head and a decent personality there's no reason for her to be any different from what she is."

And Ralph Lauren said of this fall, "There is so much more flexibility. A woman has to feel that she looks attractive. Part of that is the confidence that comes from dressing for the occasion but also to suit herself. You can't feel sexy and attractive if you feel uncomfortable in what you are wearing."

So, here women are, finally, with a laundry list of comfortable options for all salary and taste levels.

But working women don't have to buy luxury fabrics or spend top dollar to have the right look. Sweater dressing, whether twin sets, dresses, skirts or tunics, is big for fall and less expensive stars of the genre include Rebecca Moses, Andrea Jovine and Adrienne Vittadini.

Although skirts in every shape and length are available, long is outselling short.

"It is definitely selling better," said Louis Dell'Olio, the designer for Anne Klein. "But I'm a strong advocate of options. I'd hate to see every woman across the country wearing long skirts and I think women with great legs ought to show them."

Vintage clothing fever returns

Off the Retro-Rack

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

There you are, forking out your hard-earned cash for a dress that looks like it's been around since the Titanic — and you're chuckling over your purchase.

You, who shudder at the thought of buying a dress off the clearance racks at Nordstrom or the bargain table at Marshall's, have gotten the vintage clothing fever and you're snapping up 1940 Hawaiian shirts and 1955 tulle-skirted prom dresses at the neighborhood thrift shop like they were the hottest designer bargains in town.

You aren't alone. The passion for vintage clothes has primarily afflicted young professionals in their 30s, those same folks who cut their teeth on recycled rags in the '60s when patched jeans and funky jackets were the rage.

Now they're grown up with money to spend — and they're often spending it on more old clothes. Only now the clothes are older, and often restored to their original elegance. Couture dresses of paper-thin silk accented with glass beads or handmade lace bespeak an era when style and taste were everything and mass merchandising was unheard of. Yes, those were the days when dressing was an art — an art that's back in vogue.

Designers are reveling in the past with new creations, but often it's the originals that are becoming today's showstoppers. Part of the intrigue is their one-of-a-kind enchantment, but others admire them for exquisite workmanship.

And then there's the fun of stepping back in time.

Consider a Victorian wedding gown never worn, a gun moll's flapper dress or a dressing robe created for a famous movie vamp. When you're dealing with vintage clothing, the possibilities for nostalgia are endless.

While some are vampy, other vintage clothes are campy. They're fun fare for proms and costume parties and, just like antiques, go in and out of fashion.

What's current are Hawaiian shirts, car club jackets, ballerina-styled prom dresses, Bakelite jewelry, Art Deco cigarette holders, '40s rhinestone brooches and fur pelts with the heads and tails still intact

CNS Photo

The feminine, foxy look is alive in vintage fashions.

More classic items of an investment-quality include Victorian gowns, '20s tea dresses, '30s chemises and vintage wristwatches set with emeralds.

Wear your vintage treasures with contemporary accents — don't indulge in overkill when assembling the ensemble. Keep in mind that antique clothes are similar to furniture — they're timeless, as well as eclectic.

Designers recapture glamour of '50s

By JANIS O'CONNOR
Copley News Service

Not since the '50s have classics taken over the way they have this fall.

They're everywhere, from Europe and New York to trendy shops and malls across the country: clean, spare looks, sweater dressing, lengthy skirts, dresses for day, soft jerseys, tweeds and corduroys, penny loafers and pumps, stoles, capes and big coats.

Like the blond goddess appeal of Grace Kelly or the gamine charm of Audrey Hepburn, the new classics are ladylike, but don't mistake their good manners for shyness. These are not plain little basics to be taken for granted; they're "superclassics" — traditional ideas used as the starting point for zesty new looks perfectly at ease in the spotlight front and center, thank you.

"We're seeing a more refined glamour," said Ed Razek, a spokesman for The Limited, a nationwide fashion retailer. "We're not getting the great pileon of jewelry we had last year. Instead, we're seeing a long sweater or sweater dress with one great belt ... and maybe a pin, maybe not. It's a much neater look, but it definitely asserts itself. The colors are stronger; there's a great mix of textures and a narrow silhouette that's very striking."

Paris designer Daniel Tribouillard of Leonard, known for his lush, Matisselike florals on silk jersey, said he notices a return of the ladylike dress for day. "I think women who work are now gaining the confidence to wear a more traditionally feminine look instead of severe suits day after day. This is good, as long as the dresses fit well and don't look fussy."

Also in Paris, Isabel Canovas, the designer of luxury accessories, has found echoes of classic elegance in demand for evening gloves, "the more splendid, the better." In her Manhattan boutique, she's seeing heightened interest in soft capes, which she believes is the influence of the fluid jerseys and knits from American designers such as Oscar de la Renta, Calvin Klein and Donna Karan. "I've always believed in capes, especially for evening wear — they have such a sweep and drama to them," she said, "but now I see them stronger than ever."

Everyone is happy over this year's crop of coats. They're bigger, fuller and fit beautifully over everything. The three-quarter length has returned after a long absence, looking particularly lively over slim lines. Lynn Manulis of Martha spoke for many when she said, "We have not had such attractive coats in years. They're marvelous."

In sportswear, there's renewed vitality in sweater dressing. Two shapes are standouts: a waist-length sweater with bold patterns or rich texture, worn with corduroys; and a long, lean, over-the-hip sweater paired with a long tube skirt or short skirt with color-coordinated tights.

Kenzo noted a "ski sweater" quality to patterned knits this year. His Album collection definitely shows the Nordic and Barvarian influences of the slopes, but the designer has added his signature mix of intensified colors with splendid effect. Other designers are using dramatic graphics, such as the polar bear knit in the Moods by Krizia collection.

It's easy to update old classics such as wool tweed toppers and Nordic-patterned sweaters.

Classic blue jeans make comeback

NEW YORK (UPI) — After a surge in sales through the '70s and a dip in popularity in the early '80s, blue jeans, that mainstay of American fashion dating to 1853, are expected to reach new heights this fall.

Levi Strauss & Co., the world's largest apparel and jeans manufacturer, experienced dramatic growth through the '70s when sales went from $898 million in 1974 to a peak of $2.85 billion in 1981.

The next year, however, the total dipped to $2.57 billion. But sales have been climbing since then and are expected to rise through 1986.

The reasons for the climb are many.

Ellin Saltzman, fashion director at Saks Fifth Avenue, thinks jeans have benefited from many top designers who have featured denim in their collections. These include Azzedine Alaia, Karl Lagerfeld, James Galanos and Donna Karan.

As president of Murjani International, Warren Hirsh spearheaded the popularity of Gloria Vanderbilt jeans at the height of the 1977 designer jeans craze. Hirsh, who recently licensed the Michael Jackson name for jeans, considers jeans, like all fashions, to run in five-year cycles.

The current cycle finds renewed interest in what have been called "fashion jeans" as well as antifashion jeans.

Indeed, the new status jeans are distinctly antistatus. They're classic western five-pocket button-fly Levi's 501s.

Whatever the style, both Saltzman and Hirsh agree that blue jeans are a crucial part of an overall denim resurrection.

"I see a whole denim revival which has been going on all spring and summer but seems to be continuing, whether it's studded denim, faded denim, torn denim, washed-out denim or black denim," said Saltzman.

The interest in jeans coincides with a general trend toward classic clothing ranging from the popularity of the Gap, which sells standard casual clothes, to the world of high fashion, where American designers this fall concentrated on straightforward, classic investment clothes.

In addition to emphasizing classics, the American collections (which many insiders felt topped the Europeans) were sportier than in past years. The key to that sportiness was the mixing of easy classic pieces with dressier ones.

Likewise with jeans, the newest way to wear them is with dressy tops or jackets. Just imagine yourself tossing on a pair of jeans and then diving into Imelda Marcos' closet for a Valentino or Chanel jacket.

Fueled by rock star Madonna, jeans, along with other downscale clothes, are also frequently worn with dressy or at least funky accessories.

"We love the old ripped, faded, patched jeans worn with the most expensive accessories like Hermes bags, Chanel jewelry, Hermes scarfs," said Mary Russell, fashion director for Elle magazine.

Elle, the sister publication of European Elle, champions the notion of taking classic pieces like jeans and giving them European panache, the essence of which is the ability and daring to mix the old and the new.

Back-to-school bigger, brighter

Classy Kids

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Bigger and brighter are the words for back-to-school fashions this year. For students, going "back to the old grind" should be a very colorful transition.

Pat Craig, manager of Upstairs, Downstairs-Next Door, said some of the favored colors for constructing a back-to-school wardrobe are bright gold, hot pink and aqua. "Soft colors will probably come in for the holidays, but not right now."

Jane Paul, manager of Kids Factory, said she has seen "a lot of purple — more than usual — and turquoise. They seem to be the biggest colors; and a lot of black.'

Jungle prints and bright colors are in style at Kids Mart, according to manager Judy Pool. Popular colors are khaki, black and red in jungle prints, and yellow, hot pink and royal blue in the brights.

"It's a new look — we're getting away from the traditional look and going more for ... trendy bright colors," said Kathy Hendrickson, salesperson with Kid's Kountry.

In girls' fashion, big is better this season, the managers agreed. They are showing "a lot of stirrups pants, long sweaters that come down to the knees," as well as leggings, big sweaters and big shirts, said Ms. Paul.

"Stirrup pants are very good," said Ms. Pool, as are "suspender pants, long tunic-type tops — of course, denim is always good — mini-skirts. The oversized shirt is a very good look, and baggy pants."

"Skirts' length can be anything from mini to mid-calf," Ms. Craig said.

Boys' clothing is still primarily shirts and jeans, Ms. Pool said, and some of the basic colors are navy, burgundy, "a brighter blue than usual," cream and black.

Boys aren't stuck with dull colors this year, said Ms. Craig. "Last year it was dark gray and brown ... this year is bright colors."

Hot pink is a good color for boys, too, said Ms. Pool, and Miami Vice, a look known for its bright colors, "is still good for boys."

The vivid, splashy prints so popular this summer may not be completely gone. These bright prints "were big this spring," Ms. Paul said. "I think it will be strong in the summer next year."

Boys liked "jams" — essentially Bermuda shorts with an elastic waistband — this summer, Ms. Hendrickson said, but for school they are more traditional, more conservative in pretty colors.

"Hawaiian prints for boys may be back-to-school, but not for girls," Ms. Craig said. "Most of their (girls') tops are rather plain. There's a lot of big sweaters."

Another traditionally roomy look that is enjoying a certain amount of popularity this season is sweatshirts and pants, Ms. Pool said.

For boys, the colors are royal blue with yellow, red and black, gray and yellow with black, she said. Girls seem to like fuchsia, plum, yellow, royal blue with lime green, hot pink with light pink and black with brilliant designs.

Young shoppers at Kid's Kountry like "gold, red and a lot of black," Ms. Hendrickson said. "They really like bright colors splashed around. We still have some who wear the more traditional look, but those are the ones whose mothers still pick out their clothes."

Great makeup debate: Is 12 too young?

NEW YORK (UPI) — They start as young as twelve. They pile it on until they look, as one makeup artist whispered, "like whores," and they use products that "can take the polish off furniture."

The subject is makeup, the user is in high school and the featherweight topic has a way of bringing on heavyweight opinions.

"Twelve is too young," said Molly Pomerance, co-author of "The Successful Face," after giving a makeup lesson to Sharon Rosenberg, a 15-year-old from West Hartford, Conn., who started at 13.

It's not a moral decision, she said, it's just that teen-agers have a habit of "going crazy" and hiding behind makeup.

Pomerance works at Henri Bendel, a chic New York specialty store whose makeover department is popular with teen-agers. And pre-teens.

After Rosenberg, the department gave lessons to a 13-year-old and her 12-year-old friend.

Both were self-conscious and said they had been sent by their mothers who wanted them to learn proper makeup application before it was too late.

Sharon Rosenberg, like other post-tenth graders, doesn't need the help.

She already knew Pomerance's "inside tips" about putting a drop of blush at the ends of the eyes, about using moisturizer daily no matter what your age, about powdering one's eyelids before applying shadow, and about styling eyebrows with hair mousse.

The only thing she didn't know were the evil effects of astringent (it causes dryness under eyes).

Rosenberg's 45-minute lesson began with moisturizer, followed by the Maybelline foundation she already uses, powder, horizontal stripes of aqua, pink and eggnog eye shadow, teal eye liner above and below the eye, teal mascara and powdered blush.

Pomerance used teal mascara because black is "too old," favored lip gloss over lipstick because it is softer and a favorite with teens, put vitamin E stick around the eyes "to fight flakiness," a neutralizer over the face to combat sallowness and a concealer around the eyes to camouflage dark circles.

For problem skin, she suggest a cover-up on blemishes, cleansing twice a day and water base and hypo-allergenic cosmetics.

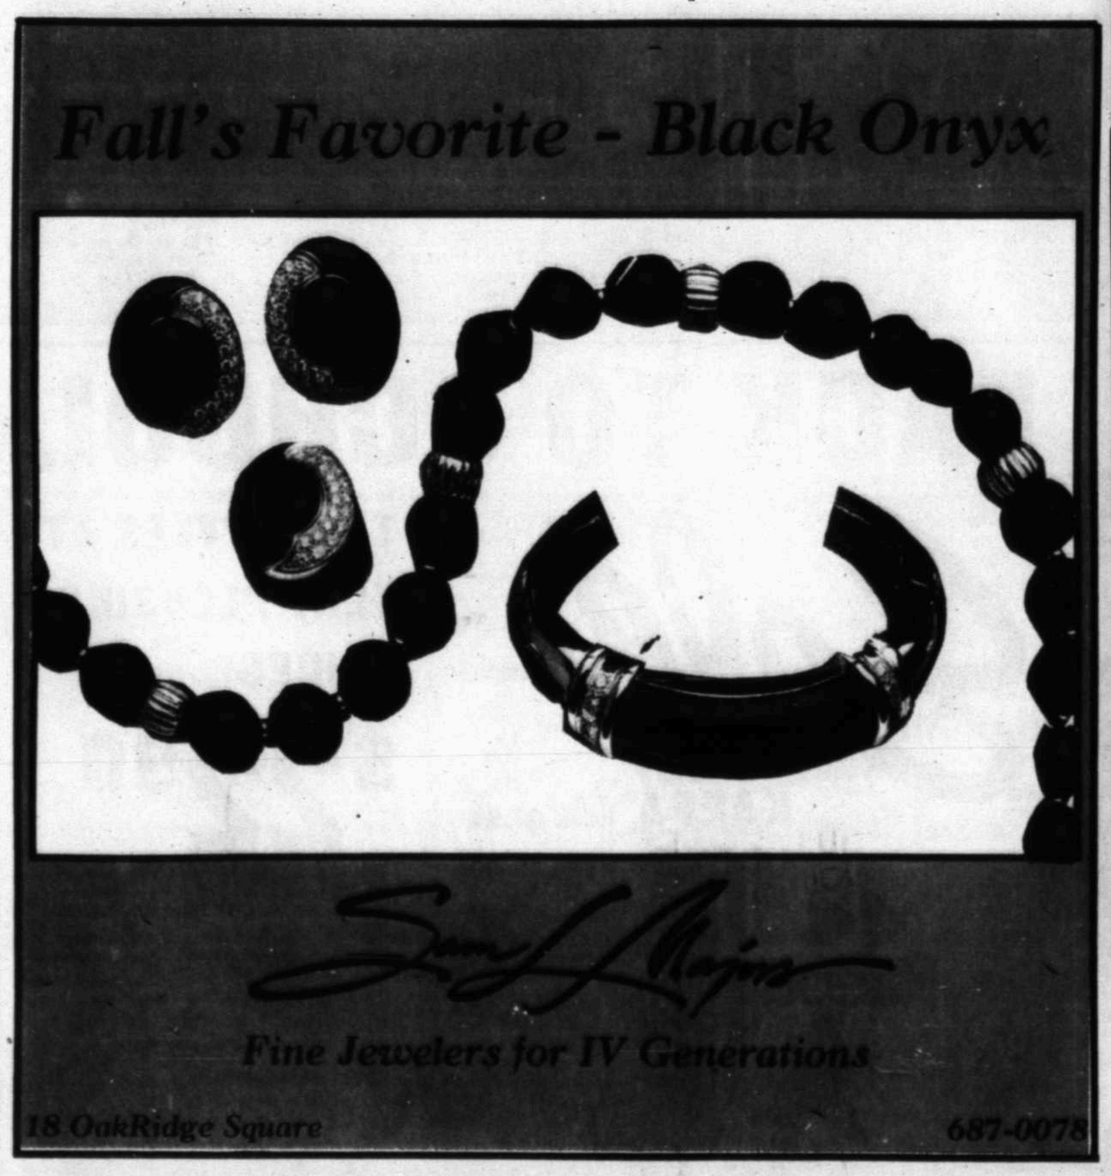

If Rosenberg were an adult, Pomerance said she would use more foundation, more complex eye shadow, cream rouge and would recommend night cream. Otherwise, teens and adults are basically the same, she said.

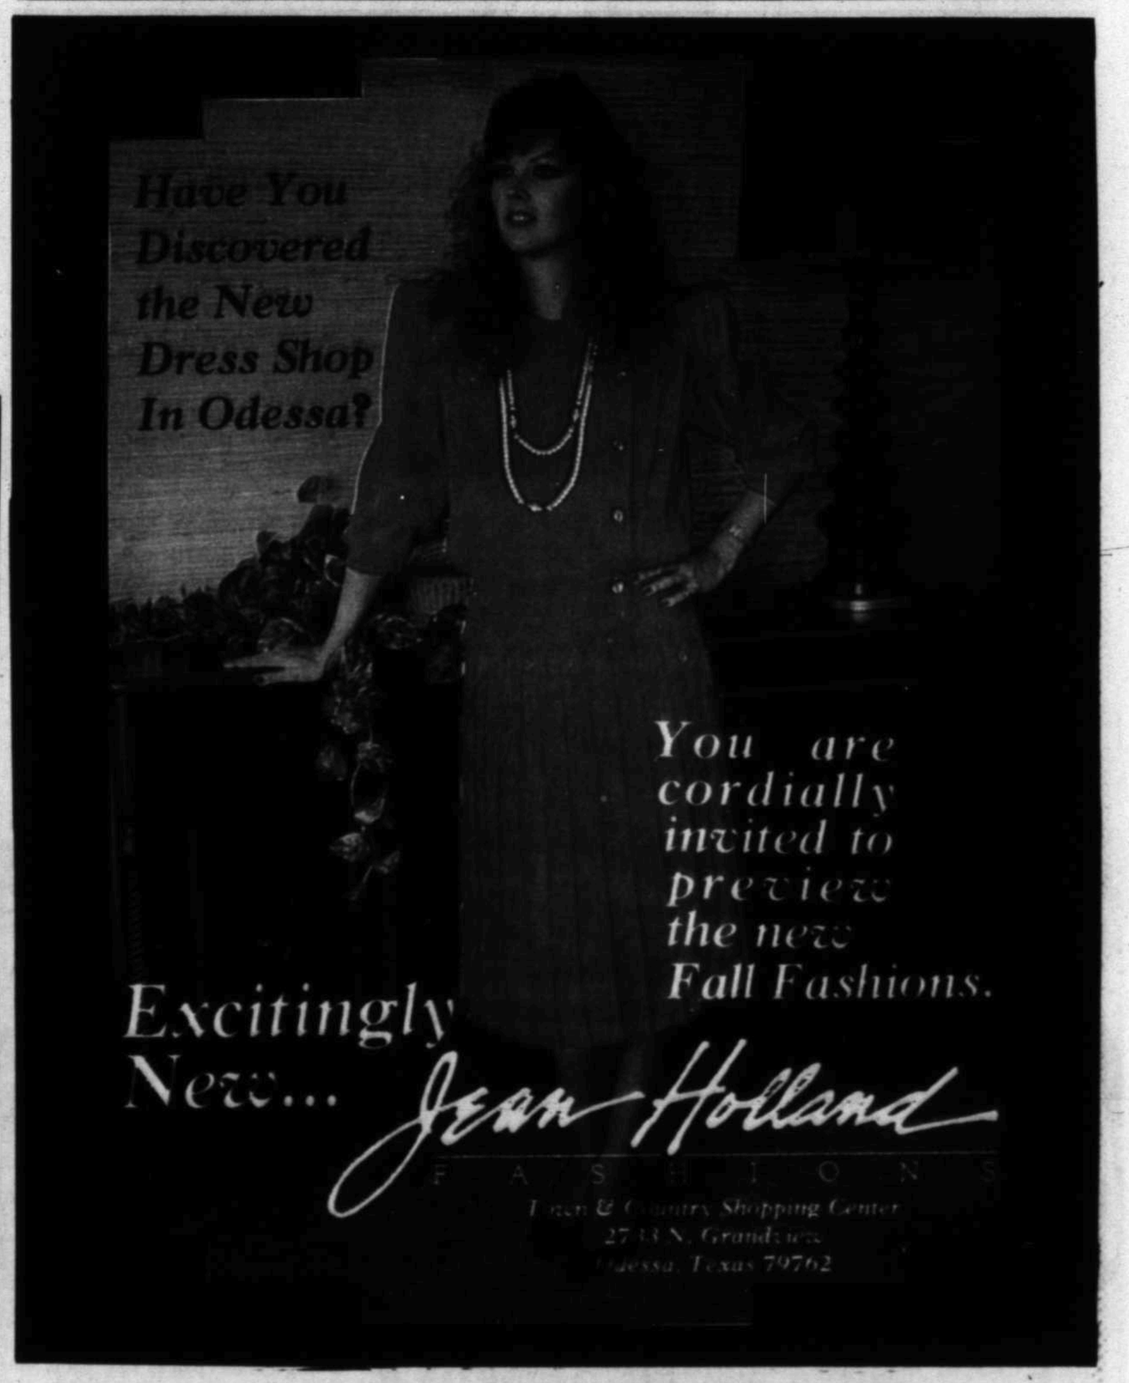

Apparently, just how much makeup a teen-ager wears to school, the mall or a disco depends on factors including their friends, magazines like "Mademoiselle" and "Glamour" and where they live.

Some makeup artists and cosmetics executives think the bigger the city, the less makeup worn and the later teen-agers start to wear it.

Linda Mason, a makeup artist who has worked with avant-garde designers Jean-Paul Gaultier and Vivienne Westwood, is known for her experimental approach and thinks it's good for teen-agers — at night.

"You can get away with a lot more makeup in night clubs or discos because of the special lighting," she said.

Stylish child's clothes sport grown-up look

By LINDA SUSAN DUDLEY
Copley News Service

Pint-sized sophisticates or ruffled-to-the-max little darlings or Western belles and cowpokes — take your pick. These are the trends for children's wear for fall.

Designers say youngsters want to look just like their older brothers and sisters and insist on some of the same styling, as well.

"Guess?Kids takes its cues from the junior sportwear market," confirms Guess? President and designer Georges Marciano. "It's designed with the style-conscious child in mind as well as the practical parent."

The Guess?Kids line includes printed denim for fall and the zipper-leg stone-washed jean that mirrors the styling for the juniors.

Classy Kids

There is a five-pocket jean and skirt, as well as two variations of the overall in both long pants and shorts.

Basic style jeans and jackets are being shown with plaid flannel shirts, just introduced for fall. Some denims have the same flannel trim along the yoke and pockets. There is a paper bag pant with a loose-fitting waist that is pulled in with a leather belt. The fall collection also includes cable-stripe jeans and prairie shirts with front ruffles.

Other designers have turned away from the Western or prairie look to designs that take the trend toward putting children in grown-up styles one step further.

Take for example a hot pink mega-ruffled dress shown at the Dallas Fashion Mart. It was one-shouldered, leaving one arm and shoulder bare. Or a sequin strapless bandeau top and miniskirt for little girls. Lamb and rabbit fur and textured fake fur also were popular for chasing the chills.

But don't fret if you love little girls in frilly dresses. They're coming in for fall, too. Plan on plenty of petticoats under ruffled and laced confections. Fabrics for fall dress-up include taffeta, lace, velvet and satin.

For back-to-school looks, there's plenty of plaid — especially in red or yellow.

Don't worry so much, parent, if your youngster wants to wear colors that don't "match." That's what's trendy today, anyway. Consider an outfit from Bravo for Kids: raspberry jumper, mustard yellow T-shirt, plum leggings and raspberry socks.

Trim Fit's line includes a bright red Santa suit and pink bunny rabbit suit snuggly enough to make any child sleep through with pleasant dreams. All Pro introduced black shirt and pull-on pants with a skeleton imprinted on it.

Practical, yes, but fun to wear, too.

What's the drawing card for top names designing little kids' clothing? The industry is bigger than you might expect — manufacturers spend about $15.9 billion annually.

The price tag for dressing these little darlings in stylish frocks isn't small. The average price for a girl's top is about $16, a girl's skirt or pair of slacks about $22 and a boy's shirt and pants about $16 and $20. Parents still shell out almost $40 an outfit for grade school and middle-school-age kids.

Youngsters status-conscious

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Many parents will soon discover that back-to-school shopping means $60 blue jeans, pricey sneakers endorsed by basketball stars and purses covered with designer labels.

Children have joined the ranks of the status-conscious, and that can be a healthy sign, says a San Diego psychologist. But parents should help keep things in perspective by establishing a set of financial rules.

Dr. Robert Leone, a professor at United States International University (and father of four), says that children value status because "they have to successfully resolve that they can fit in with their peers when they want to."

But when kids' efforts to keep up with their friends become expensive, Leone offers parents these tips:

- Be honest about what you can afford. "If your child wants $50 tennis shoes and you have six children, say you can't afford it," he says. "If you do say no, tell them why. Don't use the old excuse, 'Because I say so.'"
- Set up a financial system at home when children are young that matches money and other rewards to good deeds. "Never give an allowance for nothing," Leone advises. "The world doesn't work that way."
- Make your child a "partner." If your daughter wants designer jeans costing $40, offer to split the cost with her, or have her perform extra chores to help defray the expense.

We've just returned from New York where we attended a make-up seminar on new trends and colors. We visited with Ilana, make-up artist for Il-makiage, who explained that the new trends are more subtle, not the harsh, vibrant lines of last season. The theme this season is "Coffee Time" with the brown and neutral colors (Amaretto & Kahlua). Coming in September we will be introducing the new fall lines of make-up to enhance the other services currently provided by the salon.

Down through history, men's hair had flair

Men On The Move

Hearst News Service

Experimenting with hair styles has been a preoccupation of mankind at least since the Stone Age, according to HAIR, an acronym for the Hair Awareness, Information and Research Group, a professional service of the Upjohn Co.

As early as 8000 B.C., humans were using hair pins and ornaments to enhance their appearance, says HAIR. And historians note that at least one common thread running through the ancient civilizations of the Egyptians, Greeks, Assyrians, Babylonians and Jews was a major interest in hair grooming.

Hair styles of the ancients were derived from both practicality and vanity. To keeep their scalps cool and clean, the Egyptians often shaved their heads. For religious rites requiring a more ceremonious look, they topped their bald pates with wigs made from human hair, black sheep's wool or palm leaf fibers. For variety's sake, the wigs came braided or curled.

In ancient Greece and Rome, short hair combed forward was the rule. Men in both cultures sometimes wore a narrow band called a fillet around their heads to keep the hair in place. And blond hair that set off dark complexions was so popular that some, including the Roman Emperor Nero, were not above powdering their locks with gold dust.

What powder couldn't achieve, dyes could. The Gauls dyed their hair red, a custom so appealing to the Romans that they soon followed suit.

One look considered taboo, even a curse, among the Romans was no hair at all. The Romans viewed baldness as a deformity and to hide the embarrassment the "have nots" took to wearing wigs. Even the Emperor Hadrian was among those who resorted to such camouflage.

For the men of Europe, the Romans were fashion trendsetters, and short hair was the standard up through the 9th and 10th centuries. By the 12th century, however, change was in the air. Hair was worn longer, with shoulder-length tresses becoming such an endearing style that it lasted for three centuries.

As Roman influence waned, the power of the church was on the upswing. Priests and monks took to shaving a patch called a tonsure on the crown of their heads. Wigs fell into disfavor because their power of disguise made church elders feel uncomfortable. Besides, who knew if the human hair of a wig might possibly have come from a sinner?

Toward the 14th century, men started wearing their longer hair, with more flair. Beards emerged as a popular complement. Edward IV epitomized the style-consciousness of the day with his carefully curled mustaches and well-groomed beard.

Renaissance man had the freedom to express himself by wearing his hair a number of ways: long or short, straight, curled or frizzed. The Florentine cut, worn shoulder length and curled, was a particularly popular style that's seen today in many paintings from the period.

Blond was back by the 15th century, and so were golden powders and dyes that helped make lackluster locks shine. Although black hair was mildly acceptable, red hair was not — it was considered a curse.

To Henry VIII, it wasn't color that mattered so much as length. He so admired the short styles sported by French noblemen that he ordered his subjects to keep their locks shorn.

For the upper class, the 16th and 17th centuries were prosperous times — and it was reflected in the hair styles. Extravagence was the fashion and lifestyle the keynote.

To suit their increasingly flamboyant dress, prominent gentlemen turned to elaborate wigs. So popular did the trend become that some historians mark 1660 as The Year of the Wig. Louis XIII wore one to hide his bald spot, while Charles II of England depended on a wig to conceal his graying hair.

Wigs continued to be popular in the early 18th century, but the emphasis shifted from ornamentation and bulk to variety. As the fashion grew in popularity, even the average man could afford one. Those who could not often styled their natural hair to resemble a wig.

To accommodate the demand for variety, wigmakers became more imaginative in their use of materials. Besides human hair, horse and goat hairs were used. Sportsmen could even purchase a special, water-resistant variety made from duck tails for wearing outdoors.

By the end of the 1700s, wigs were passe and natural hair was back. Short haircuts, first popular in France, spread.

Since trimmer locks required regular haircuts, the demand for skilled barbers and hairdressers grew significantly. One result was the establishment in the United States in 1893 of the first barber college.

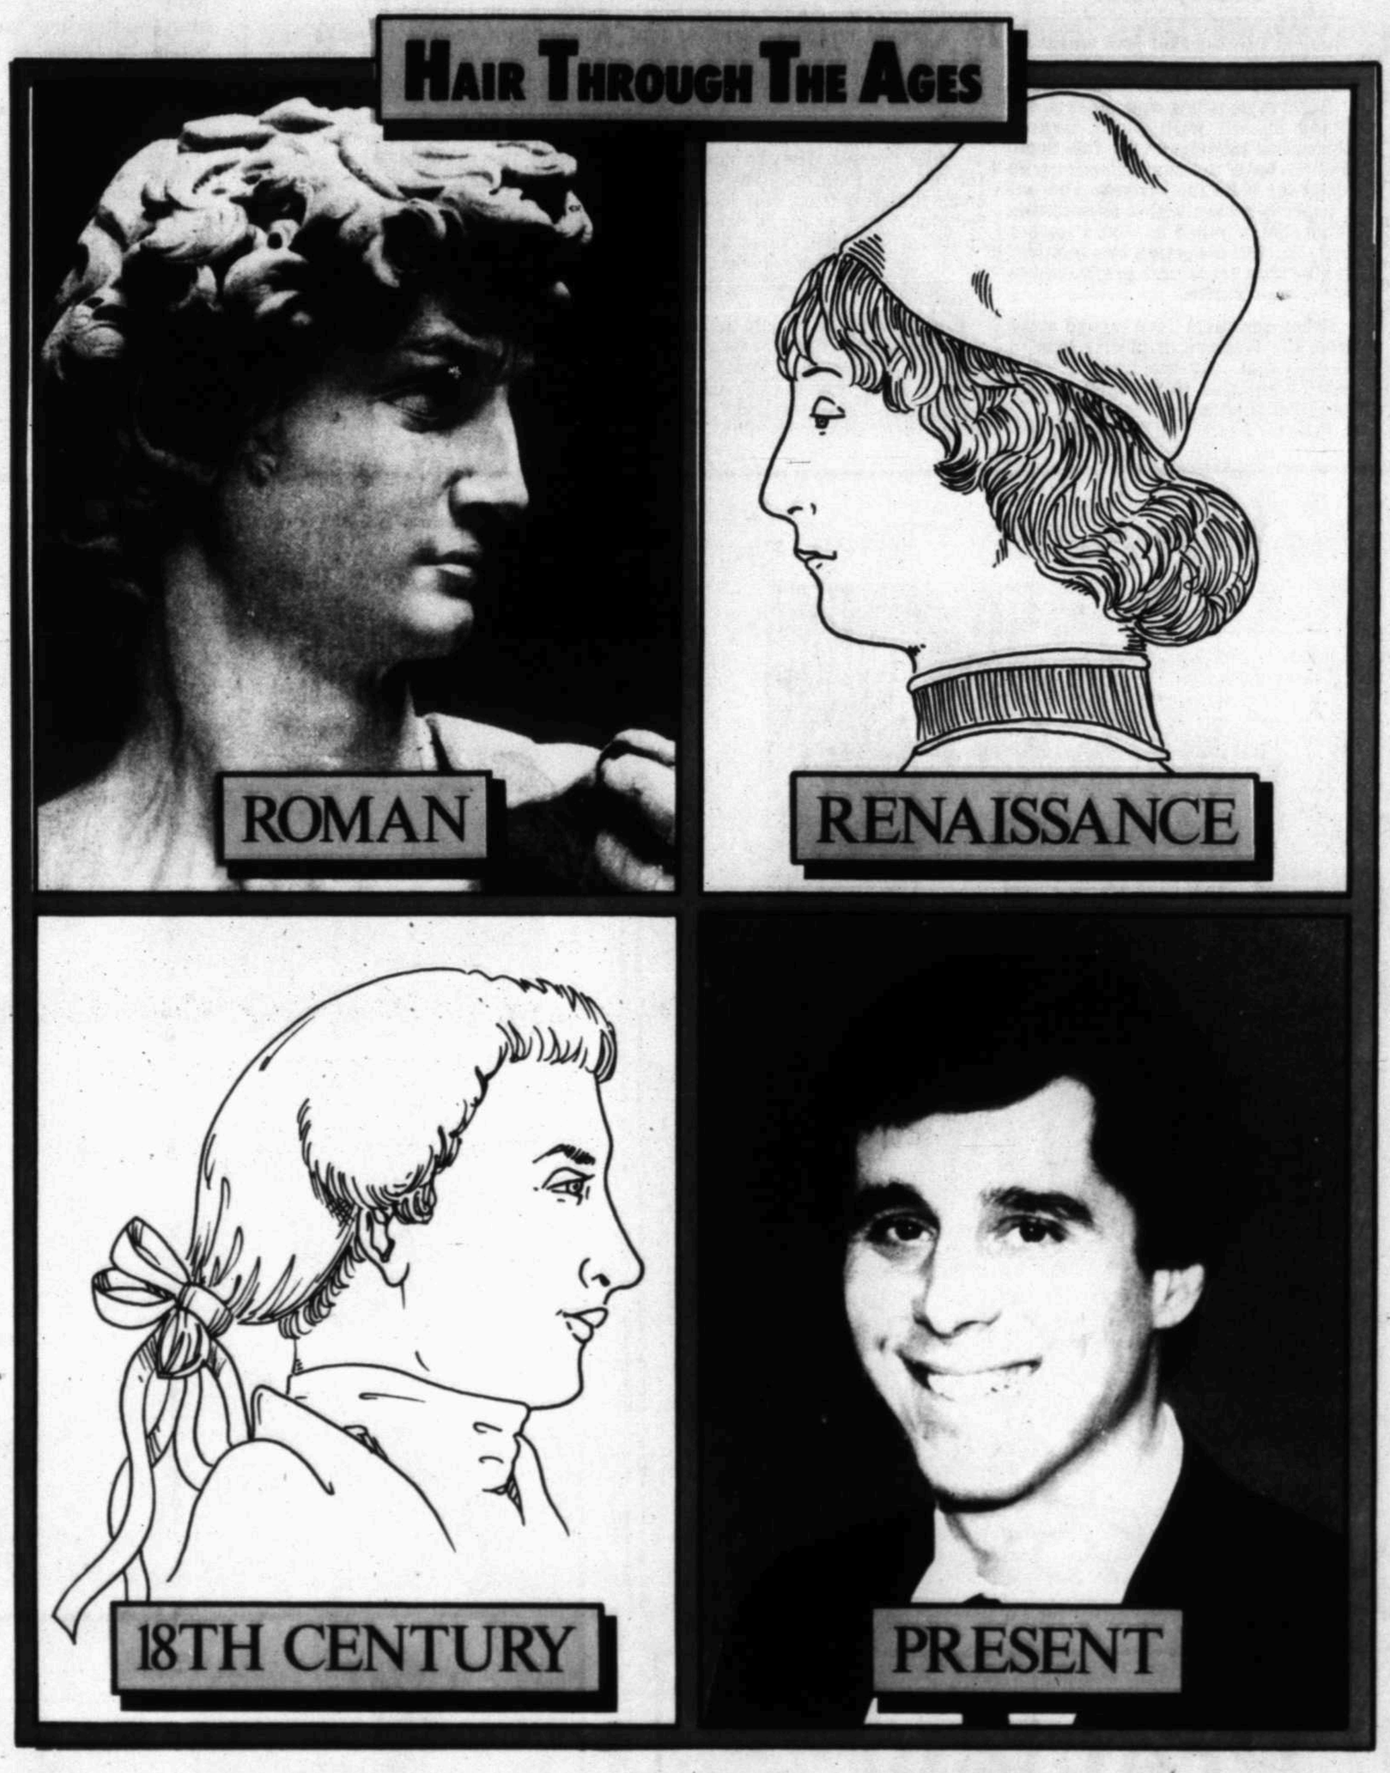

Short haircuts and clean-shaven faces were the norm in the early 1900s. Anyone with even slightly long hair was labeled a "poet" or "musician."

By the early 1920s, the emergence of movies as a major social influence was making its mark in the changing fashions, behavior and attitudes of the times. Many men emulated Rudolph Valentino and George Raft by using a gel-like grooming called "lustre." The effect was a flat, plastered-down style, usually parted in the middle.

Throughout the '30s and '40s, the slick look gave way to a more natural looking wavy style, popularized by such stars as Cary Grant. In the 1950s, both long and short hair styles were worn. Some teenage boys sported crew cuts; others were influenced by the longer style worn by Elvis Presley.

In the 1960s, the Beatles arrived in the United States with their modish, long-haired look that was considered revolutionary for the times. Teenagers and college students soon were growing their hair over their ears.

In the 20 years since the Beatles first made their musical and fashion mark, almost every conceivable barrier surrounding men's hair styles has been broken.

Menswear moves into Americana

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — After an infatuation with European shapes and shades, American menswear designers have found inspiration in their own back yard. Ivy League charm, Old West ruggedness, beefy Heartland sweaters and New England elegance define this fall's offerings.

Interpretations run from the obviously patriotic to the more sublime. Robert Stock Salutes Lady Liberty's 100th birthday with a beefy, wool pullover emblazoned with the statue's face. On a subtler note, Robert Comstock's robust wools and butter-soft leathers boast authentic patterns borrowed from Native Americans.

"American fashion is finally coming into its own," says Stock. "We are beginning to draw upon our heritage. Men still love European clothes but we are developing our own look here in the United States. Now Europe is looking to us."

Some designers depend on color to carry this Americana theme through their collections. Homespun hues of barn red, ivy green and Yankee blue tint the patchwork quilt patterns of Perry Ellis' sweaters. A liberty close of red, white and blue punches up Henry Grethel's sportswear collection. Old West desert tones of pink, turquoise, plum, yellow and brown shade woven sweaters from Bianculli.

"Color is actually writing the story for fall," says Chip Tolbert of the Men's Fashion Association. "The designers have finally gotten around to using bold shades in a season that is traditionally fraught with drab tones. I haven't seen this much color in a fall season in my 29 years in this business."

"Men are not afraid of color anymore. In fact, they are looking for bright colors. They are demanding them," says Jerry Lauren referring to brother Ralph's collection. "Just because it's fall, men don't want their wardrobe to suddenly look drab. This season, Ralph did a selection of cashmere and Fair Isle sweaters in an array of brights — pink, yellow, emerald, purple — colors you aren't used to seeing in this season."

For fall, two shades often shunned by power-dressers — green and brown — race to the front as trend-setting tints. "Brown — especially that gray, mushroom brown — has become a neutral tone in menswear," says Tolbert. "Men finally accept it as a Correct color to wear despite the John Molloy dress-for-success attitude that prevailed for so long."

Green, notoriously a hard hue to sell in menswear, emerges in almost every collection.

While the majority of the menswear designers emphasize tints and textures, a few mavericks defy the safer silhouettes in an effort to offer more of a fashion statement. Double-knit bodysuits form the base of Christian Kenth's collection. The long-sleeved bodysuit mixes with a variety of bright tunics, vests, cardigans and coats.

No matter what you opt to wear underneath, when temperatures dip, button up an overcoat. "Topcoats are extremely important for fall," says Cesarani of the season's must-have accessory. "They look right whether worn over a casual sweater and pants or a tailored suit."

'Fishy' necktie business reeling in buyers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After their conversation had rambled for a couple of hours at Saz's, a popular sports bar in Milwaukee, Mark Abramoff and his best friend from high school, Jim Stratte, put it all together. There are 70 million fishermen in the country, they agreed, and as far as they could tell nobody had made a tie that would appeal only to them.

"Heck, if we got 1 percent of them to buy a tie, we'd have a good business," Abramoff, 32 years old, recalled telling Stratte, 31, late in the evening. "We researched this thing. We checked every mail-order catalogue, and nobody had them."

Blaine Heilman, 31, an artist and another member of the class of '72 from Brookfield Central High just outside Milwaukee, drew a prototype on paper and at the next Milwaukee Bucks game Abramoff attended, he wore Heilman's paper prototype — a barracuda — pinned onto his own necktie.

"Two people bumped into each other trying to get a look at it," he recalled. "I knew I had a winner right there."

Certain of the tie's potential for success, Abramoff dropped out of the real estate broker's course he was taking and hit the road to try to reach those 70 million fishermen — visiting tackle shops, fishing equipment shows and fishing derbies. The other day, talking by telephone from his Milwaukee office, he said he had just returned from a "Walleye Weekend" on Lake Winnebago in Wisconsin, a tough experience for a man who wears a glove fishing because he cannot stand to touch fish.

Each of the trio initially invested $5,000 toward the business of 100 percent polyester neckties — each showing a fish in its natural colors, upside down, as if dangling by its tails from the wearer's chin.

So far, they have sold 6,000 or 7,000 ties and have orders for 20,000 more.

Leather rides again

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The classic leather jacket will never go out of style, but these days leather is also the stuff of office wear and dress shirts in a palette of colors and even patterns.

North Beach Leather, a California-based clothier with outlets in nine major cities and two mail order catalogs a year, has pioneered the use of supple, lightweight leathers and suedes in a variety of designs.

The firm naturally offers standard (and not-so-standard) leather jackets, and it also has an array of office and evening wear.

This fall, under the direction of designer Michael Hoban, North Beach will continue to emphasize clinging "body-conscious" lines, says a company spokeswoman, and "zippers are going to be a very hot look." The big colors for men and women alike will be kelly green, cherry red and peacock blue.

"As a carryover from spring, lacing and fringe will be popular," she said, "and we're also seeing black-and-white combinations."

In casual wear for men, the traditional baseball and varsity jackets get a facelift in lambsuede in a variety of blues.

For more information, contact North Beach Leather, P.O. Box 640682, San Francisco, Calif. 94164-0682.

Conservative dress still king of board room

Men at Work

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

"The economic times dictate the fashion trends," said Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers.

During tight economic times, fashion — especially menswear — styles don't change as much, he said, because people can't afford to buy entire new wardrobes just to stay trendy.

"Things are going to be more conservative" in Midland because of the economic slump, he predicted.

"We're rather conservative here" anyway, noted Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear.

"Business wear, you know, never changes that much," said Randy Conatser, manager of K-G Mens Store. It remains "very conservative."

"On a first job especially, you want to look as conservative as you can," he said. "You want to look stable and serious about the job."

"Everything counts" in projecting a business image, O'Connor said. "I think you're going to see a more professional look" this fall and winter among Midland businessmen.

"You see a little more accents of color throughout business clothing right now," though, he observed.

"A bit more color has crept in," Conatser agreed. He's selling quite a few pastel dress shirts — "even pastel pink" — and colorful ties, including yellow and paisley ones.

Nevertheless, he said that — as "Dress for Success"-type books also stress — dark gray and navy blue suits seem to project stability, and "that's the image people have."

Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop said that his business suits are staying "dark and dressy" this fall, with deeply-colored shirts accenting them.

"Basically, you're still seeing that people are sticking to the darker basic colors, but with a some added color accents," said James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing.

For example, one of Borron's popular items for the upcoming fall season has been "a dark gray pinstripe suit with a teal and burgundy stripe in it instead of the usual white."

"In ties, there's a lot of interest in a small, neat pattern," he said, "but with a pattern you almost have to look at twice to see."

"They're asking more for paisley ties than for any other type of tie." Paisley ties are making up 20 percent of Borron's tie sales this year, compared to only five percent last year.

Suspenders are another accessory springing up in some board rooms.

Suspenders on suits are "almost a power statement on Wall Street," Borron said. "You can dress differently, yet still fit the mold."

Bartus said the major changes he has seen in this fall's office wear is an increased acceptance of double-breasted blazers and pleated pants.

Bartus said that men buying business clothing should remember that "you want something you can build on."

Business wear building blocks blueprinted

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

The Reporter-Telegram recently surveyed several local menswear retailers and asked each for his list of basic business wear building blocks.

Not surprisingly, a navy blue blazer and a gray suit topped virtually everyone's lists.

The following are the dress items they suggested that a man — either newly entering the workforce or just getting more serious about his career — should invest in first:

James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing

- Navy blue blazer.
- A "good, conservative gray suit," preferably a solid gray because "you can accessorize it more" than one with stripes.
- Perhaps add a tan or camel blazer sportcoat later on, especially "if you can get away with wearing a sportcoat at work."

Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop

- Navy blazer and gray slacks. "They get you in a lot of doors and don't offend anyone."
- A "real pretty" mid- to Oxford gray suit with a muted plaid pattern.
- "Keep in mind that in this part of the country, the weight of the garment is of the utmost importance." He recommended buying dress items in tropical weights.

Randy Conatser of K-G Mens Store

- Navy blue blazer.
- A pair of gray slacks.
- One or two white shirts.
- A blue shirt and an ecru shirt.
- Red or burgundy tie.
- Dark blue tie.
- Gray pinstripe or navy blue suit.

Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear

- Pinstripe or solid suits in navy blue or charcoal gray.
- A multi-stripe suit in a "very, very subdued" pattern.
- "Your blazers are still very important."

Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers

- Charcoal gray or navy blue suit, preferably "solid or simple stripe simply because of the versatility."
- Navy blue blazer, which he describes as "one of the most accepted items."
- Charcoal gray, medium gray or some shade of tan or khaki slacks.

Many young professionals spend surpluses of time and money in pursuit of the perfect wardrobe, but it's easy to accumulate a closet full of clothes that don't work well with each other. It's the "I don't have anything to wear" syndrome, even through your closet might be bulging.

Cathy Lawhon, syndicated fashion writer, offers several suggestions for pulling together a basic, yet stylish wardrobe without breaking the bank.

Blue and gray suits provide the most contrast with most men's coloring and are thus most flattering. It's best to start with a blue or gray suit for business.

There seems to be a return to the crisp, white shirt in fashion. These shirts provide a nice background for colorful ties. Quality and fit should be top priority.

You should buy the best you can afford — within reason — since quality says status. Look for name brands on sale and natural fabrics.

Shop at stores known for their service. Inquire about in-store fashion consultants or personal shoppers who know the merchandise and can put it all together quickly and economically.

Menswear builds on tradition

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Menswear this fall is building on tradition, with formerly old-fashioned apparel once again becoming high fashion, according to many Midland menswear retailers.

Such late '50s and early '60s wardrobe items as pleated pants, suspenders and double-breasted suits are among the hot items for the cool fall.

One Midland menswear merchant is even predicting that hat sales — a casualty of John F. Kennedy's stylishly tousled hair in the early '60s — are headed back up.

"Hats are coming back," claimed Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop. One reason for this, he suspects, is "because the hair's getting a little shorter." The most popular hats have a two- to three-inch brim and a "down-and-around look."

While few other retailers mentioned hats, almost all saw pleated pants as making a big comeback.

"Midland is just beginning to see" high sales of pleated pants, said Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers.

James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing also said he was selling "a lot of pleated trousers." Borron saw the pants as part of a trend toward "more variation in body styles than before."

"What you see is a lot of sportswear tops that are a little bit oversize and a little less tailored," he said, including such features as "larger size pockets than normal."

"They're tending to loosen up the trousers, too," Borron added.

The only retailer contacted who said he didn't see too much enthusiasm for pleats was Gauthier.

"I know a lot of that pleated pants business is going on in New York," he said, "but most of my customers are older men anyway and they've been down that road before."

Old-fashioned suspenders are also popular with "both the younger and the older" customer, according to O'Connor. He ties the return of suspenders to the revival in pleated pants.

"Pleated pants and suspenders just kind of go hand-in-hand," he explained.

Suspenders have always sold reasonably well at J.E. Borron, but they have become much more popular recently, according to Borron. He thinks comfort may be a big factor in this upsurge.

"Most people who try them find them to be more comfortable" than belts with suits, he said. "Most of the suits being shipped now come with buttons for suspenders."

Double-breasted suits are staging a comeback, too, several menswear merchants noted.

"I'm selling quite a few of those this year," said Randy Conatser of K-G Mens Store.

"We're hearing and seeing more about the double-breasted blazers," said Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear.

O'Connor disagreed, however, saying "the double-breasted suit just doesn't seem to touch base yet."

New color has been added to suits and sportcoats this year, but autumn tones seem as likely to be subtle and subdued as bright and lively.

"There's a lot more variation in colors this year than ever before," said Borron, "from brights to deep jewel tones ... such as amethyst, sapphire and those colors."

"Most everything in suits is still dark and dressy," according to Gauthier. Shirts in "deeper, darker colors," are also popular, he said, to "spiff up some of these real conservative suits."

Gauthier said he's also seeing "lots of 'mixy' colors" that can be teamed with various slacks and shirts for many different combinations.

"Dark colors are still real good in suits," O'Connor said. Dark gray and a dark blue shade he calls "charblue" are among his big sellers.

For added color, paisley prints and plaids are popular, especially on ties, most menswear retailers agreed.

Cotton and wool seem to be the preferred fabrics for this fall.

"The natural fabrics — you know, cotton and wool — seem very important," Bartus said. He's also seen increased interest in silk sportcoats.

"Wool blazers are going to be big again this year," O'Connor predicted.

"I'm gearing more of my sales to sportcoats" said Gauthier, especially in "beautiful natural fabrics like wool and cashmere blends."

Wool sportcoats with patches on the sleeves are also popular at K-G Mens Store, Conatser said.

Because it is so cool — and Permian Basin autumns can be so warm — cotton is also popular in sweaters, said Gauthier. "Sweaters are real strong" this season, he added.

Conatser also said that one popular casual look consisted of Shaker sweaters with knit shirts underneath.

In casual slacks, "the big thing this year is button-fly, shrink-to-fit 501 jeans," Conatser noted, as well as other pants "with a little bit more of a rugged look."

Summing up this season's menswear, Conatser said there's a conservative look and a high fashion look and the most popular styles this fall seem to spring from "where those two meet."

Fall male styles not 'shy'

By STEVE HURTADO

CNS Photo

A traditional herringbone pattern plays off a windowpane overplaid in this wool sportcoat.

Menswear ... it's often neglected when the glitz and glimmer of women's haute couture steal the spotlight season after season.

After all, there are no skirts to lengthen or shorten every year. Men's basics don't change a lot — the widening of a tie here, tapering of a lapel there.

Well, this season's collections may turn some heads. There's nothing shy or understated about menswear for fall/winter '86.

It's a bold and bright season, a season of multiples: more varied approaches to the classics, more alternatives to spice up basic clothing and more new color treatments.

"No matter which category of apparel you examine, one or more of the key words — bold, bright, brawny, beautiful — tells the story," said Chip Tolbert, director of the Men's Fashion Association of America. "Patterns in fabrics and sweaters are big and bold. In sports outerwear, color is primary. Brights such as red, yellow and royal blue are standouts."

The options are without limits, but the bywords are consistent and precise, as evidenced by the following checklist of some of the season's strongest trends:

Suits: The new spirit for fall '86 suits begins with fabric and pattern.

The silhouette evidences relatively little change. Basic shapes incorporate natural or softly padded shoulders, slight waist suppression, two-button closures and side or center vents. Forward fashion gets a broader shoulder, either padded or clearly defined and a distinct narrowing at the hip.

A prime example is the leaner, longer look of the double-breasted models cut without vents. Notched lapels prevail on single-breasted models while the double-breasteds are most often seen with wider, peaked lapels. Lapel widths can vary from 3¼ to 4½ inches.

There is renewed interest in traditional patterns — glen plaids, houndstooth checks, bird's eye weaves, district checks, herringbones and stripes.

Fabrics range from soft flannels, cheviots, sturdy twills and brawny tweeds in woolens often blended with man-made fibers.

The two predominant color ranges are brown and black-and-white. Tonal shades of brown have become the new neutral with a predominance of lighter shades — taupe, tan, toast and nutmeg. The perennial favorite combo, black and white, shows up in new-looking novelty patterns. Both color families are often enhanced with color accents.

Sport coats: Liberal doses of color enliven this season's traditional patterns.

On the American scene, designers have taken a wide range of brawny, beefy tweeds — with both dark and light grounds — and infused them with unexpected vibrance. The result is color-shot-tweed.

Even brighter are the solid crayon-color sport coats in lofty tweeds, brushed textures and velvety corduroys. Most are single-breasted and offer endless choices for coordination.

Options this season are abundant for sport coat dressing. Paired with a shirt and tie and possibly a sweater vest, the look is classic. The new look of a T-neck or polo underneath results in a softer, more casual turnout. The younger man may opt for teaming a sport coat with a hooded sweatshirt and knit pants or jeans for his own individual look.

Coordinated slack silhouettes are somewhat fuller, with a 22-inch knee tapering slightly to a 19-inch bottom.

Skiwear slides downhill — stylishly

Alpine Attitude

By SHARON WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Clothes don't make the skier, but most will admit hitting the slopes in style is an image-booster.

After all, it's comforting for a skier to know he'll still look good if he takes a tumble on the bunny hill or his form is less than perfect when attempting an expert run.

This winter, skiers don't have to worry about blending in with the scenery. Everyone from snow bunnies to fearless experts will turn heads on the hill, chairlift or in the lodge when sporting the bright colors of the season.

For many skiers, fashion is as important on the slopes as it is on the street. The look is second only to the warmth and protection the outfit gives. Designers get inspiration from American and European ski enthusiasts.

No ski hill would look right without the dots of vivid parkas. This year will be no exception ... the brights are back in grand style for '86. Skiers will find a bold palette with colors like reds and yellows side by side with bright pastels and even winter white on the store racks.

Roffe, a Seattle-based skiwear manufacturer, calls their bright pastels Deco Brights ... cool blues, cantaloupe oranges and mint greens. The hues are pastels, but brighter than one would expect. For an up-to-the-minute look, pair a Deco Bright parka with black ski pants, says Tracy Nichols, assistant advertising director.

Cool "Miami Vice" pastels are also fashion news on the slopes.

CNB Photo

Versatile high-tech fabrics, texture and topstitching make ski apparel soar this winter.

"Color stories range from vivid primaries, pastel blues to frosty pale shades. Silver adds zap as a new neutral," says Susan Rafter, public relations representative for Sport Obermeyer of Aspen, Colo.

Designers add graphics to skiwear for impact. Graphics can bring two or three different colors to a parka, making it more visible and bringing more possibilities for accessorizing.

Many skiers lauded the coming of the one-piece ski suit. The look is sleek and chic, and the skier doesn't have to tote both bibs and a parka all the way to the ski hill and back.

This year, Nichols predicts the one-piece suit will be even more popular than it was last year.

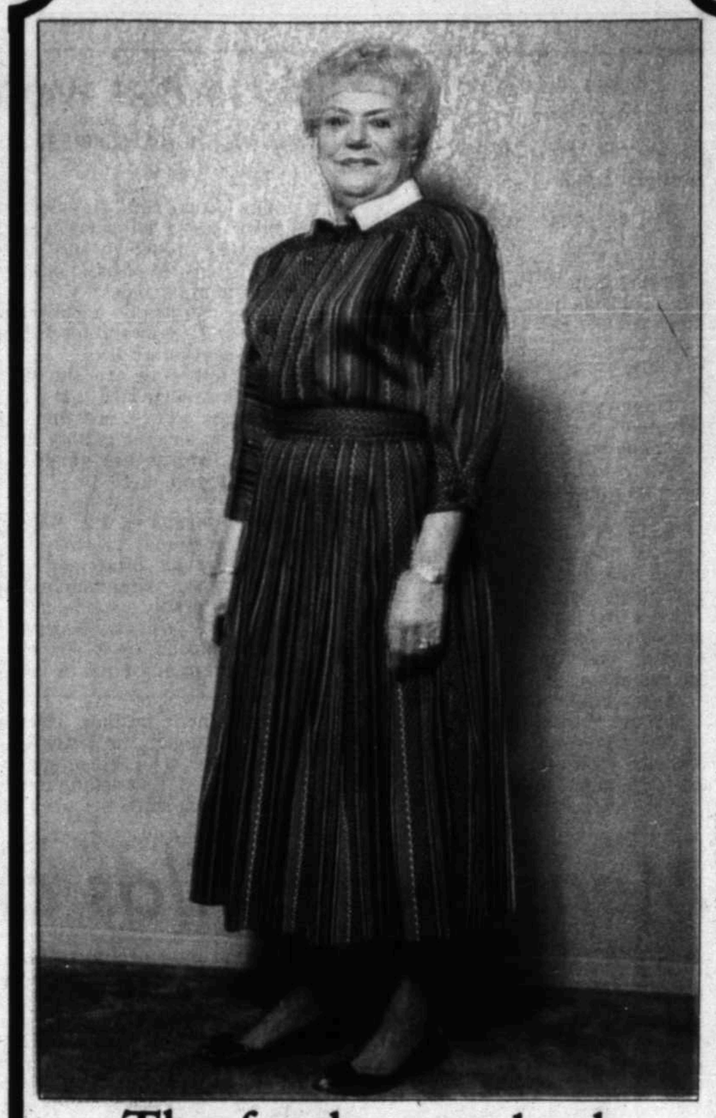

"Most bought it last year for fashion," she says. "Now more people are realizing they're very comfortable, too."

Pants are back in the boots for winter '86. The tight in-the-boot stretch pants topped by an oversized jacket creates a sleek, fashionable silhouette.

"It's a trend I like to term 'big over small,' " Nichols says.

Underneath it all, ski sweats are the newest rage. The sweats are the answer for the many skiers who wanted the warmth of long underwear, yet wanted to shed outerwear after a day on the hill without changing their entire outfit.

Materials for '86 skiwear allow maximum protection and warmth, yet freedom for the newest designs. Gortex linings let water out, but not in. Insulators like Thinsulate keep the wearer toasty warm without adding a lot of excess bulk to an outfit.

Fall Fashion '86

Dressing Constructively

The blueprints have been drawn up, the plans have been approved, the foundations have been laid and it's time to begin building. Building what? Fall fashions.

As summertime begins to melt into fall, it's time to take a serious look at what styles will be the building blocks of a fashionable wardrobe. Inside Fall Fashion '86 there are predictions, suggestions and advice from local retail stores on what styles will grace the fall season.

In women's wear on page 2G, there will be a move toward professional, yet feminine, styles and on building a wardrobe that works for business and pleasure. There is a resurgence of femininity and women will see garments that are molded more to a woman's figure.

Big and bright are the fashion words in children's wear on page 4G. Baggy sweaters reaching below the knee, oversized shirts and baggy or stirrup pants will be the rage for girls as they head back to school, while boys will sport multi-colored shirts and sweat suits.

Fall fashions 'fit' feminine form

Sophisticated Styles

By ELIZABETH EDWIN
Lifestyle Writer

Fashion-conscious women may want to pull out their calorie counters as they begin to build their fall wardrobe. No longer will the feminine form be hidden under straight-lined, male-inspired suits or bulky, baggy sweaters. Local fashion experts agree that fall styles will be cnstructed to fit the woman's body more than in recent past.

Don't panic though. "Fitted" doesn't mean designers have gone back to creating skin-tight clothing that will complement only the figures of the leanest runway models. Instead, this season's designs are created to smoothly follow a woman's figure.

"All styling is going back to the body form," said Andrew Swartz, owner of Swartz.

THERE ARE some fashion building blocks that will help create the finished, put-together look of fall. In constructing — or adding to — a fall wardrobe, advisors say the foundation is on a more feminine look flattering a woman.

Designs emphasizing the feminine form for fall include garments with defined waists, straight skirts, skirts with hemlines at or above the knee and knit garments.

"In the broad sense, femininity is back in style," said John Ingram, manager of Julian Gold. "Not necessarily with ruffles, but rather a very sophisticated look. The little black dress for evening will be very popular."

Swartz said the trend and attitude in Midland, and around the country, is to not put too much emphasis on one-time items — like the dress that is worn once, then hung in the back of the closet because everyone has seen it.

"There has been an interest by a number of people in the tea-length or street-length dresses for evenings rather than the elegant ballroom gown," Swartz said. "They want a garment that will go places.

"Due to the economic conditions here, people are being particular about one-time items. They would rather have something they can wear more than once, but they still want these items to be special," Swartz said.

TO MAKE a suit go from dawn to dusk can be simple. The transition is created with accessories. There is a renewed interest in shawls and scarfs to complement day outfits for the office or a luncheon, Swartz said. Jewelry and blouses will be tools used to transform suits from day- to eveningwear.

"We have a suit in our store right now that has a blouse with ruffles at the neck and on the cuffs which would work beautifully for evening-wear. But if you put a tailored blouse with it, it would easily be appropriate for the office," Swartz said.

For casual- and eveningwear, leather and suede separates and coordinated outfits are selling well, according to Swartz.

Bea McGrath, public relations manager for Pappagallo, agreed that dresses and skirts made from smooth leathers and suedes are important for the fall wardrobe.

"Of course in leather, the earth tones are always popular and black is a basic color for almost everyone. But suits in the jewel tones are selling well too," Swartz said.

"Jewel tones," among the most popular shades this fall, are basically just what they sound like — shades of jewels such as sapphire blue, ruby red and emerald green. Black also will be a part of the fall fashion statement, according to Ingram.

"Last year we saw an overabundance of prints and fullness. Everything had a lot of different colors," Swartz said. "This season I think we will be seeing more geometric designs and color-coordinated outfits."

Many customers are looking for outfits they can mix and match with other items to create numerous different coordinated-looks.

"The big news for fall is an emphasis on outfits rather than separates," said Ms. McGrath.

WOMEN WILL see many suits in the fall line of designer clothes, but these will not be the man-style suits of former years. Women's suits will have a more sophisticated look, Ingram said.

"The suit-look is very strong, especially in Midland," said Swartz. "and it will be very feminine. It will have a more defined waist with accented shoulders, but still a very soft look. Wools and knits will be very popular. Some of the suits will have peplums," Swartz said.

"There will be differences in the lapels, cuffs and tails of the suit jacket and the jackets will often be fuller," Ingram said.

"Treatment of the sleeve will include pushing them up to elbow length," Ingram said. "There will also be suits which have a fitted bodice, particularly in (Bill) Blass, where the jacket can be worn without a blouse because it is form-fitted."

Ms. McGrath said that many outfits will nip in at the waist, have softer shoulders and some will feature a peplum.

"There will usually be some kind of special treatment at the waist," she said. "I think belts will be strong, even sat the hip, but particularly at the waist."

Ingram also agreed the waist area would have some emphasis, but in a different manner.

"The waist will be made an attraction in that the area below the waist will feature designs like blouson skirts," Ingram said.

THE SKIRT also will show a more feminine flair. Straight, slim skirts with a hemline at the knee or slightly below the knee, and suits with short jackets and fuller skirts will be included in the fall line, according to Swartz.

"Skirts will be very important," Ms. McGrath said. "There will be a great variety in length and style. Lengths will vary from the ankle to above the knee."

Pants also will be seen in women's attire, but the emphasis will be on "put-together" outfits. Ingram said that pants will be worn with the great coat — an over-sized long jacket with a hemline below the knee. Blazers which coordinate with pants also will be popular.

"I hesitate to say pant suits will be in because that brings back bad memories," Swartz said, referring to the formerly popular polyester pant suits. "But pants as a suited-look — a coordinated outfit — is what will be seen."

TO COMPLEMENT fall fashions, accessories will lean toward complementing the suit, Swartz said. Many accessories will follow what is called the Chanel-look with long gold chains, around 30 inches in length, worn in abundance.

Ingram and Swartz both agreed that pearls will be an important accessory for day and evening wear.

"Accessories will cover a full gamut. For fun, the large, bright, bulky jewelry in electric blues and pinks will be popular. But for cocktails it will be pearls," Ingram said.

Fall fashion will add a few new dimensions to shoes and hose as well.

"There will be a lot of metallic used in shoes," Ms. McGrath said. "There will be a lot of back interest" with textures and leathers used for designs in the heel area.

Textured stockings and even hose with seams will be in, according to Ms. McGrath, and they will feature more colors.

Fall styles are creating a foundation for women's clothing to work for them. Women's styles and attitudes are providing opportunities for women to build a wardrobe which can take them from the office to a party without a complete change.

"Women can still be feminine in a professional world, they just do it in an understated format," Swartz said.

Accessories active in accenting attire

NEW YORK (UPI) — Like the clothes they accompany, fall accessories will be classic and luxurious-looking.

"We like the whole idea of luxe accessories in general," said Patricia Kenney, fashion director for accesscries at Macy's New York, "starting with crocodile as a texture."

The two-inch-wide crocodile belt, like the ones worn with cashmere turtlenecks and full suede skirts at the Calvin Klein show, is the big fall accessory. The expensive skin also will be popular on old-fashioned loafers, which will make a comeback, and structured handbags.

Fall is an explosive season for shawls, an item that debuted on the runways at Ralph Lauren, Perry Ellis, Donna Karan and Calvin Klein, among others. High-fashion shawls are made of cashmere and tossed elegantly over the shoulder or in the belt of a new long-waisted fit-and-flair coat.

"I think there is a lot more elegance and old-world money, that kind of feeling," said Jane Tuma, fashion director for accessories and shoes at Saks Fifth Avenue.

What Tuma calls "old world money" will be popular in the form of faux pins and jewelry that look like they came from your grandmother's jewelry box — but if you have access to or can afford the real thing, including fine jewelry from legendary establishments like Bulgari, you'll really be in vogue.

"If you're not a socialite," concluded Tuma, "you want to look like one."

Tuma likes chic Chanel-like chains that include beads and pearls and fit into the category of "important" and elegant. The Hermes accessory that stores are stocking for fall is the trademark leather wrist band with buckles on it.

Clothes that work for working women

NEW YORK (UPI) — Look at the stars on the fall fashion front — Donna Karan, Calvin Klein, Mary Ann Restivo, Adrienne Vittadini — and you'll notice striking similarities, most notably in realistic attitudes.

After the horror of the 1984 fall season, devoted to making women look like men, followed by a reactive spring 1985 season making women look so much like women they couldn't move, designers at every price level have decided to be realistic.

The result here in America, where the fall shows were the best in years, and in Europe were day clothes that are repeatedly referred to as "classic" and "wearable."

From Alistair Blair and Jasper Conran on the British runways, to Giorgio Armani in Milan and Karl Lagerfeld, Yves Saint Laurent and Valentino in Paris, modern, spare, luxurious business clothes reigned.

"I think all clothes are related to business clothes," said Ellin Saltzman, fashion director at Saks Fifth Avenue.

It wasn't always that way. In fact, it's shocking how long it's taken the fashion industry to meet the real needs of working women.

Bernie Ozer, vice-president of fashion for the Associated Merchandising Corporation, a consulting organization with enormous influence on what department stores buy, thinks women themselves are one reason for the delay.

"They thought they had to wear a hard-edged business suit and a shirt and a string tie," he said. "It's not necessary. If she's got a good head and a decent personality there's no reason for her to be any different from what she is."

And Ralph Lauren said of this fall, "There is so much more flexibility. A woman has to feel that she looks attractive. Part of that is the confidence that comes from dressing for the occasion but also to suit herself. You can't feel sexy and attractive if you feel uncomfortable in what you are wearing."

So, here women are, finally, with a laundry list of comfortable options for all salary and taste levels.

But working women don't have to buy luxury fabrics or spend top dollar to have the right look. Sweater dressing, whether twin sets, dresses, skirts or tunics, is big for fall and less expensive stars of the genre include Rebecca Moses, Andrea Jovine and Adrienne Vittadini.

Although skirts in every shape and length are available, long is outselling short.

"It is definitely selling better," said Louis Dell'Olio, the designer for Anne Klein. "But I'm a strong advocate of options. I'd hate to see every woman across the country wearing long skirts and I think women with great legs ought to show them."

Vintage clothing fever returns

Off the Retro-Rack

By BARBARA DeWITT
Copley News Service

There you are, forking out your hard-earned cash for a dress that looks like it's been around since the Titanic — and you're chuckling over your purchase.

You, who shudder at the thought of buying a dress off the clearance racks at Nordstrom or the bargain table at Marshall's, have gotten the vintage clothing fever and you're snapping up 1940 Hawaiian shirts and 1955 tulle-skirted prom dresses at the neighborhood thrift shop like they were the hottest designer bargains in town.

You aren't alone. The passion for vintage clothes has primarily afflicted young professionals in their 30s, those same folks who cut their teeth on recycled rags in the '60s when patched jeans and funky jackets were the rage.

Now they're grown up with money to spend — and they're often spending it on more old clothes. Only now the clothes are older, and often restored to their original elegance. Couture dresses of paper-thin silk accented with glass beads or handmade lace bespeak an era when style and taste were everything and mass merchandising was unheard of. Yes, those were the days when dressing was an art — an art that's back in vogue.

Designers are reveling in the past with new creations, but often it's the originals that are becoming today's showstoppers. Part of the intrigue is their one-of-a-kind enchantment, but others admire them for exquisite workmanship.

And then there's the fun of stepping back in time.

Consider a Victorian wedding gown never worn, a gun moll's flapper dress or a dressing robe created for a famous movie vamp. When you're dealing with vintage clothing, the possibilities for nostalgia are endless.

While some are vampy, other vintage clothes are campy. They're fun fare for proms and costume parties and, just like antiques, go in and out of fashion.

What's current are Hawaiian shirts, car club jackets, ballerina-styled prom dresses, Bakelite jewelry, Art Deco cigarette holders, '40s rhinestone brooches and fur pelts with the heads and tails still intact

CNS Photo

The feminine, foxy look is alive in vintage fashions.

More classic items of an investment-quality include Victorian gowns, '20s tea dresses, '30s chemises and vintage wristwatches set with emeralds.

Wear your vintage treasures with contemporary accents — don't indulge in overkill when assembling the ensemble. Keep in mind that antique clothes are similar to furniture — they're timeless, as well as eclectic.

Designers recapture glamour of '50s

By JANIS O'CONNOR
Copley News Service

Not since the '50s have classics taken over the way they have this fall.

They're everywhere, from Europe and New York to trendy shops and malls across the country: clean, spare looks, sweater dressing, lengthy skirts, dresses for day, soft jerseys, tweeds and corduroys, penny loafers and pumps, stoles, capes and big coats.

Like the blond goddess appeal of Grace Kelly or the gamine charm of Audrey Hepburn, the new classics are ladylike, but don't mistake their good manners for shyness. These are not plain little basics to be taken for granted; they're "superclassics" — traditional ideas used as the starting point for zesty new looks perfectly at ease in the spotlight front and center, thank you.

"We're seeing a more refined glamour," said Ed Razek, a spokesman for The Limited, a nationwide fashion retailer. "We're not getting the great pile-on of jewelry we had last year. Instead, we're seeing a long sweater or sweater dress with one great belt ... and maybe a pin, maybe not. It's a much neater look, but it definitely asserts itself. The colors are stronger; there's a great mix of textures and a narrow silhouette that's very striking."

Paris designer Daniel Tribouillard of Leonard, known for his lush, Matisselike florals on silk jersey, said he notices a return of the ladylike dress for day. "I think women who work are now gaining the confidence to wear a more traditionally feminine look instead of severe suits day after day. This is good, as long as the dresses fit well and don't look fussy."

Also in Paris, Isabel Canovas, the designer of luxury accessories, has found echoes of classic elegance in demand for evening gloves, "the more splendid, the better." In her Manhattan boutique, she's seeing heightened interest in soft capes, which she believes is the influence of the fluid jerseys and knits from American designers such as Oscar de la Renta, Calvin Klein and Donna Karan. "I've always believed in capes, especially for evening wear — they have such a sweep and drama to them," she said, "but now I see them stronger than ever."

It's easy to update old classics such as wool tweed toppers and Nordic-patterned sweaters.

Everyone is happy over this year's crop of coats. They're bigger, fuller and fit beautifully over everything. The three-quarter length has returned after a long absence, looking particularly lively over slim lines. Lynn Manulis of Martha spoke for many when she said, "We have not had such attractive coats in years. They're marvelous."

In sportswear, there's renewed vitality in sweater dressing. Two shapes are standouts: a waist-length sweater with bold patterns or rich texture, worn with corduroys; and a long, lean, over-the-hip sweater paired with a long tube skirt or short skirt with color-coordinated tights.

Kenzo noted a "ski sweater" quality to patterned knits this year. His Album collection definitely shows the Nordic and Barvarian influences of the slopes, but the designer has added his signature mix of intensified colors with splendid effect. Other designers are using dramatic graphics, such as the polar bear knit in the Moods by Krizia collection.

Classic blue jeans make comeback

NEW YORK (UPI) — After a surge in sales through the '70s and a dip in popularity in the early '80s, blue jeans, that mainstay of American fashion dating to 1853, are expected to reach new heights this fall.

Levi Strauss & Co., the world's largest apparel and jeans manufacturer, experienced dramatic growth through the '70s when sales went from $898 million in 1974 to a peak of $2.85 billion in 1981.

The next year, however, the total dipped to $2.57 billion. But sales have been climbing since then and are expected to rise through 1986.

The reasons for the climb are many.

Ellin Saltzman, fashion director at Saks Fifth Avenue, thinks jeans have benefited from many top designers who have featured denim in their collections. These include Azzedine Alaia, Karl Lagerfeld, James Galanos and Donna Karan.

As president of Murjani International, Warren Hirsh spearheaded the popularity of Gloria Vanderbilt jeans at the height of the 1977 designer jeans craze. Hirsh, who recently licensed the Michael Jackson name for jeans, considers jeans, like all fashions, to run in five-year cycles.

The current cycle finds renewed interest in what have been called "fashion jeans" as well as antifashion jeans.

Indeed, the new status jeans are distinctly antistatus. They're classic western five-pocket button-fly Levi's 501s.

Whatever the style, both Saltzman and Hirsh agree that blue jeans are a crucial part of an overall denim resurrection.

"I see a whole denim revival which has been going on all spring and summer but seems to be continuing, whether it's studded denim, faded denim, torn denim, washed-out denim or black denim," said Saltzman.

The interest in jeans coincides with a general trend toward classic clothing ranging from the popularity of the Gap, which sells standard casual clothes, to the world of high fashion, where American designers this fall concentrated on straightforward, classic investment clothes.

In addition to emphasizing classics, the American collections (which many insiders felt topped the Europeans) were sportier than in past years. The key to that sportiness was the mixing of easy classic pieces with dressier ones.

Likewise with jeans, the newest way to wear them is with dressy tops or jackets. Just imagine yourself tossing on a pair of jeans and then diving into Imelda Marcos' closet for a Valentino or Chanel jacket.

Fueled by rock star Madonna, jeans, along with other downscale clothes, are also frequently worn with dressy or at least funky accessories.

"We love the old ripped, faded, patched jeans worn with the most expensive accessories like Hermes bags, Chanel jewelry, Hermes scarfs," said Mary Russell, fashion director for Elle magazine.

Elle, the sister publication of European Elle, champions the notion of taking classic pieces like jeans and giving them European panache, the essence of which is the ability and daring to mix the old and the new.

Back-to-school bigger, brighter

Classy Kids

By LINDA ANDERSON
Lifestyle Writer

Bigger and brighter are the words for back-to-school fashions this year. For students, going "back to the old grind" should be a very colorful transition.

Pat Craig, manager of Upstairs, Downstairs-Next Door, said some of the favored colors for constructing a back-to-school wardrobe are bright gold, hot pink and aqua. "Soft colors will probably come in for the holidays, but not right now."

Jane Paul, manager of Kids Factory, said she has seen "a lot of purple — more than usual — and turquoise. They seem to be the biggest colors; and a lot of black.'

Jungle prints and bright colors are in style at Kids Mart, according to manager Judy Pool. Popular colors are khaki, black and red in jungle prints, and yellow, hot pink and royal blue in the brights.

"It's a new look — we're getting away from the traditional look and going more for ... trendy bright colors," said Kathy Hendrickson, salesperson with Kid's Kountry.

In girls' fashion, big is better this season, the managers agreed. They are showing "a lot of stirrups pants, long sweaters that come down to the knees," as well as leggings, big sweaters and big shirts, said Ms. Paul.

"Stirrup pants are very good," said Ms. Pool, as are "suspender pants, long tunic-type tops — of course, denim is always good — mini-skirts. The oversized shirt is a very good look, and baggy pants."

"Skirts' length can be anything from mini to mid-calf," Ms. Craig said.

Boys' clothing is still primarily shirts and jeans, Ms. Pool said, and some of the basic colors are navy, burgundy, "a brighter blue than usual," cream and black.

Boys aren't stuck with dull colors this year, said Ms. Craig. "Last year it was dark gray and brown ... this year is bright colors."

Hot pink is a good color for boys, too, said Ms. Pool, and Miami Vice, a look known for its bright colors, "is still good for boys."

The vivid, splashy prints so popular this summer may not be completely gone. These bright prints "were big this spring," Ms. Paul said. "I think it will be strong in the summer next year."

Boys liked "jams" — essentially Bermuda shorts with an elastic waistband — this summer, Ms. Hendrickson said, but for school they are more traditional, more conservative in pretty colors.

"Hawaiian prints for boys may be back-to-school, but not for girls," Ms. Craig said. "Most of their (girls') tops are rather plain. There's a lot of big sweaters."

Another traditionally roomy look that is enjoying a certain amount of popularity this season is sweatshirts and pants, Ms. Pool said.

For boys, the colors are royal blue with yellow, red and black, gray and yellow with black, she said. Girls seem to like fuchsia, plum, yellow, royal blue with lime green, hot pink with light pink and black with brilliant designs.

Young shoppers at Kid's Kountry like "gold, red and a lot of black," Ms. Hendrickson said. "They really like bright colors splashed around. We still have some who wear the more traditional look, but those are the ones whose mothers still pick out their clothes."

Great makeup debate: Is 12 too young?

NEW YORK (UPI) — They start as young as twelve. They pile it on until they look, as one makeup artist whispered, "like whores," and they use products that "can take the polish off furniture."

The subject is makeup, the user is in high school and the featherweight topic has a way of bringing on heavyweight opinions.

"Twelve is too young," said Molly Pomerance, co-author of "The Successful Face," after giving a makeup lesson to Sharon Rosenberg, a 15-year-old from West Hartford, Conn., who started at 13.

It's not a moral decision, she said, it's just that teen-agers have a habit of "going crazy" and hiding behind makeup.

Pomerance works at Henri Bendel, a chic New York specialty store whose makeover department is popular with teen-agers. And pre-teens.

After Rosenberg, the department gave lessons to a 13-year-old and her 12-year-old friend.

Both were self-conscious and said they had been sent by their mothers who wanted them to learn proper makeup application before it was too late.

Sharon Rosenberg, like other post-tenth graders, doesn't need the help.

She already knew Pomerance's "inside tips" about putting a drop of blush at the ends of the eyes, about using moisturizer daily no matter what your age, about powdering one's eyelids before applying shadow, and about styling eyebrows with hair mousse.

The only thing she didn't know were the evil effects of astringent (it causes dryness under eyes).

Rosenberg's 45-minute lesson began with moisturizer, followed by the Maybelline foundation she already uses, powder, horizontal stripes of aqua, pink and eggnog eye shadow, teal eye liner above and below the eye, teal mascara and powdered blush.

Pomerance used teal mascara because black is "too old," favored lip gloss over lipstick because it is softer and a favorite with teens, put vitamin E stick around the eyes "to fight flakiness," a neutralizer over the face to combat sallowness and a concealer around the eyes to camouflage dark circles.

For problem skin, she suggest a cover-up on blemishes, cleansing twice a day and water base and hypo-allergenic cosmetics.

If Rosenberg were an adult, Pomerance said she would use more foundation, more complex eye shadow, cream rouge and would recommend night cream. Otherwise, teens and adults are basically the same, she said.

Apparently, just how much makeup a teen-ager wears to school, the mall or a disco depends on factors including their friends, magazines like "Mademoiselle" and "Glamour" and where they live.

Some makeup artists and cosmetics executives think the bigger the city, the less makeup worn and the later teen-agers start to wear it.

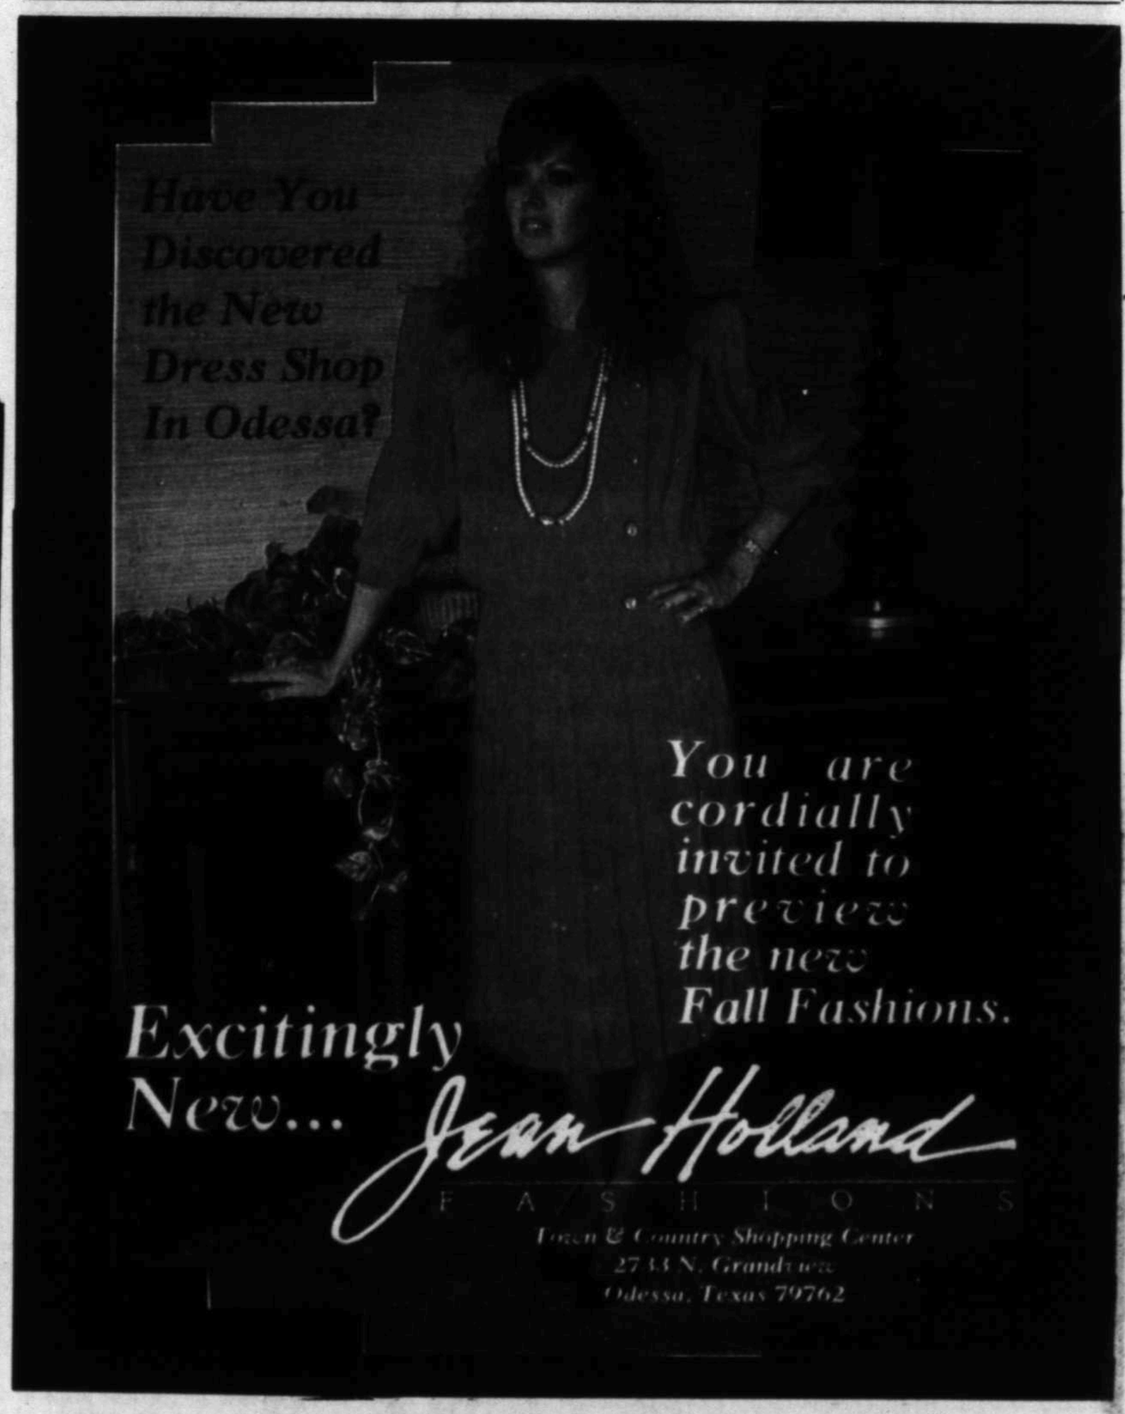

Linda Mason, a makeup artist who has worked with avant-garde designers Jean-Paul Gaultier and Vivienne Westwood, is known for her experimental approach and thinks it's good for teen-agers — at night.

"You can get away with a lot more makeup in night clubs or discos because of the special lighting," she said.

Stylish child's clothes sport grown-up look

By LINDA SUSAN DUDLEY
Copley News Service

Pint-sized sophisticates or ruffled-to-the-max little darlings or Western belles and cowpokes — take your pick. These are the trends for children's wear for fall.

Designers say youngsters want to look just like their older brothers and sisters and insist on some of the same styling, as well.

"Guess?Kids takes its cues from the junior sportwear market," confirms Guess? President and designer Georges Marciano. "It's designed with the style-conscious child in mind as well as the practical parent."

The Guess?Kids line includes printed denim for fall and the zipper-leg stone-washed jean that mirrors the styling for the juniors.

Classy Kids

There is a five-pocket jean and skirt, as well as two variations of the overall in both long pants and shorts.

Basic style jeans and jackets are being shown with plaid flannel shirts, just introduced for fall. Some denims have the same flannel trim along the yoke and pockets. There is a paper bag pant with a loose-fitting waist that is pulled in with a leather belt. The fall collection also includes cable-stripe jeans and prairie shirts with front ruffles.

Other designers have turned away from the Western or prairie look to designs that take the trend toward putting children in grown-up styles one step further.

Take for example a hot pink mega-ruffled dress shown at the Dallas Fashion Mart. It was one-shouldered, leaving one arm and shoulder bare. Or a sequin strapless bandeau top and miniskirt for little girls. Lamb and rabbit fur and textured fake fur also were popular for chasing the chills.

But don't fret if you love little girls in frilly dresses. They're coming in for fall, too. Plan on plenty of petticoats under ruffled and laced confections. Fabrics for fall dress-up include taffeta, lace, velvet and satin.

For back-to-school looks, there's plenty of plaid — especially in red or yellow.

Don't worry so much, parent, if your youngster wants to wear colors that don't "match." That's what's trendy today, anyway. Consider an outfit from Bravo for Kids: raspberry jumper, mustard yellow T-shirt, plum leggings and raspberry socks.

Trim Fit's line includes a bright red Santa suit and pink bunny rabbit suit snuggly enough to make any child sleep through with pleasant dreams. All Pro introduced black shirt and pull-on pants with a skeleton imprinted on it.

Practical, yes, but fun to wear, too.

What's the drawing card for top names designing little kids' clothing? The industry is bigger than you might expect — manufacturers spend about $15.9 billion annually.

The price tag for dressing these little darlings in stylish frocks isn't small. The average price for a girl's top is about $16, a girl's skirt or pair of slacks about $22 and a boy's shirt and pants about $16 and $20. Parents still shell out almost $40 an outfit for grade school and middle-school-age kids.

Youngsters status-conscious

SAN DIEGO (UPI) — Many parents will soon discover that back-to-school shopping means $60 blue jeans, pricey sneakers endorsed by basketball stars and purses covered with designer labels.

Children have joined the ranks of the status-conscious, and that can be a healthy sign, says a San Diego psychologist. But parents should help keep things in perspective by establishing a set of financial rules.

Dr. Robert Leone, a professor at United States International University (and father of four), says that children value status because "they have to successfully resolve that they can fit in with their peers when they want to."

But when kids' efforts to keep up with their friends become expensive, Leone offers parents these tips:

■ Be honest about what you can afford. "If your child wants $50 tennis shoes and you have six children, say you can't afford it," he says. "If you do say no, tell them why. Don't use the old excuse, 'Because I say so.'"

■ Set up a financial system at home when children are young that matches money and other rewards to good deeds. "Never give an allowance for nothing," Leone advises. "The world doesn't work that way."

■ Make your child a "partner." If your daughter wants designer jeans costing $40, offer to split the cost with her, or have her perform extra chores to help defray the expense.

We've just returned from New York where we attended a make-up seminar on new trends and colors. We visited with Ilana, make-up artist for Il-makiage, who explained that the new trends are more subtle, not the harsh, vibrant lines of last season. The theme this season is "Coffee Time" with the brown and neutral colors (Amaretto & Kahlua). Coming in September we will be introducing the new fall lines of make-up to enhance the other services currently provided by the salon.

Down through history, men's hair had flair

Men On The Move

Hearst News Service

Experimenting with hair styles has been a preoccupation of mankind at least since the Stone Age, according to HAIR, an acronym for the Hair Awareness, Information and Research Group, a professional service of the Upjohn Co.

As early as 8000 B.C., humans were using hair pins and ornaments to enhance their appearance, says HAIR. And historians note that at least one common thread running through the ancient civilizations of the Egyptians, Greeks, Assyrians, Babylonians and Jews was a major interest in hair grooming.

Hair styles of the ancients were derived from both practicality and vanity. To keeep their scalps cool and clean, the Egyptians often shaved their heads. For religious rites requiring a more ceremonious look, they topped their bald pates with wigs made from human hair, black sheep's wool or palm leaf fibers. For variety's sake, the wigs came braided or curled.

In ancient Greece and Rome, short hair combed forward was the rule. Men in both cultures sometimes wore a narrow band called a fillet around their heads to keep the hair in place. And blond hair that set off dark complexions was so popular that some, including the Roman Emperor Nero, were not above powdering their locks with gold dust.

What powder couldn't achieve, dyes could. The Gauls dyed their hair red, a custom so appealing to the Romans that they soon followed suit.

One look considered taboo, even a curse, among the Romans was no hair at all. The Romans viewed baldness as a deformity and to hide the embarrassment the "have nots" took to wearing wigs. Even the Emperor Hadrian was among those who resorted to such camouflage.

For the men of Europe, the Romans were fashion trendsetters, and short hair was the standard up through the 9th and 10th centuries. By the 12th century, however, change was in the air. Hair was worn longer, with shoulder-length tresses becoming such an endearing style that it lasted for three centuries.

As Roman influence waned, the power of the church was on the upswing. Priests and monks took to shaving a patch called a tonsure on the crown of their heads. Wigs fell into disfavor because their power of disguise made church elders feel uncomfortable. Besides, who knew if the human hair of a wig might possibly have come from a sinner?

Toward the 14th century, men started wearing their longer hair, with more flair. Beards emerged as a popular complement. Edward IV epitomized the style-consciousness of the day with his carefully curled mustaches and well-groomed beard.

Renaissance man had the freedom to express himself by wearing his hair a number of ways: long or short, straight, curled or frizzed. The Florentine cut, worn shoulder length and curled, was a particularly popular style that's seen today in many paintings from the period.

Blond was back by the 15th century, and so were golden powders and dyes that helped make lackluster locks shine. Although black hair was mildly acceptable, red hair was not — it was considered a curse.

To Henry VIII, it wasn't color that mattered so much as length. He so admired the short styles sported by French noblemen that he ordered his subjects to keep their locks shorn.

For the upper class, the 16th and 17th centuries were prosperous times — and it was reflected in the hair styles. Extravagence was the fashion and lifestyle the keynote.

To suit their increasingly flamboyant dress, prominent gentlemen turned to elaborate wigs. So popular did the trend become that some historians mark 1660 as The Year of the Wig. Louis XIII wore one to hide his bald spot, while Charles II of England depended on a wig to conceal his graying hair.

Wigs continued to be popular in the early 18th century, but the emphasis shifted from ornamentation and bulk to variety. As the fashion grew in popularity, even the average man could afford one. Those who could not often styled their natural hair to resemble a wig.

To accommodate the demand for variety, wigmakers became more imaginative in their use of materials. Besides human hair, horse and goat hairs were used. Sportsmen could even purchase a special, water-resistant variety made from duck tails for wearing outdoors.

By the end of the 1700s, wigs were passe and natural hair was back. Short haircuts, first popular in France, spread.

Since trimmer locks required regular haircuts, the demand for skilled barbers and hairdressers grew significantly. One result was the establishment in the United States in 1893 of the first barber college.

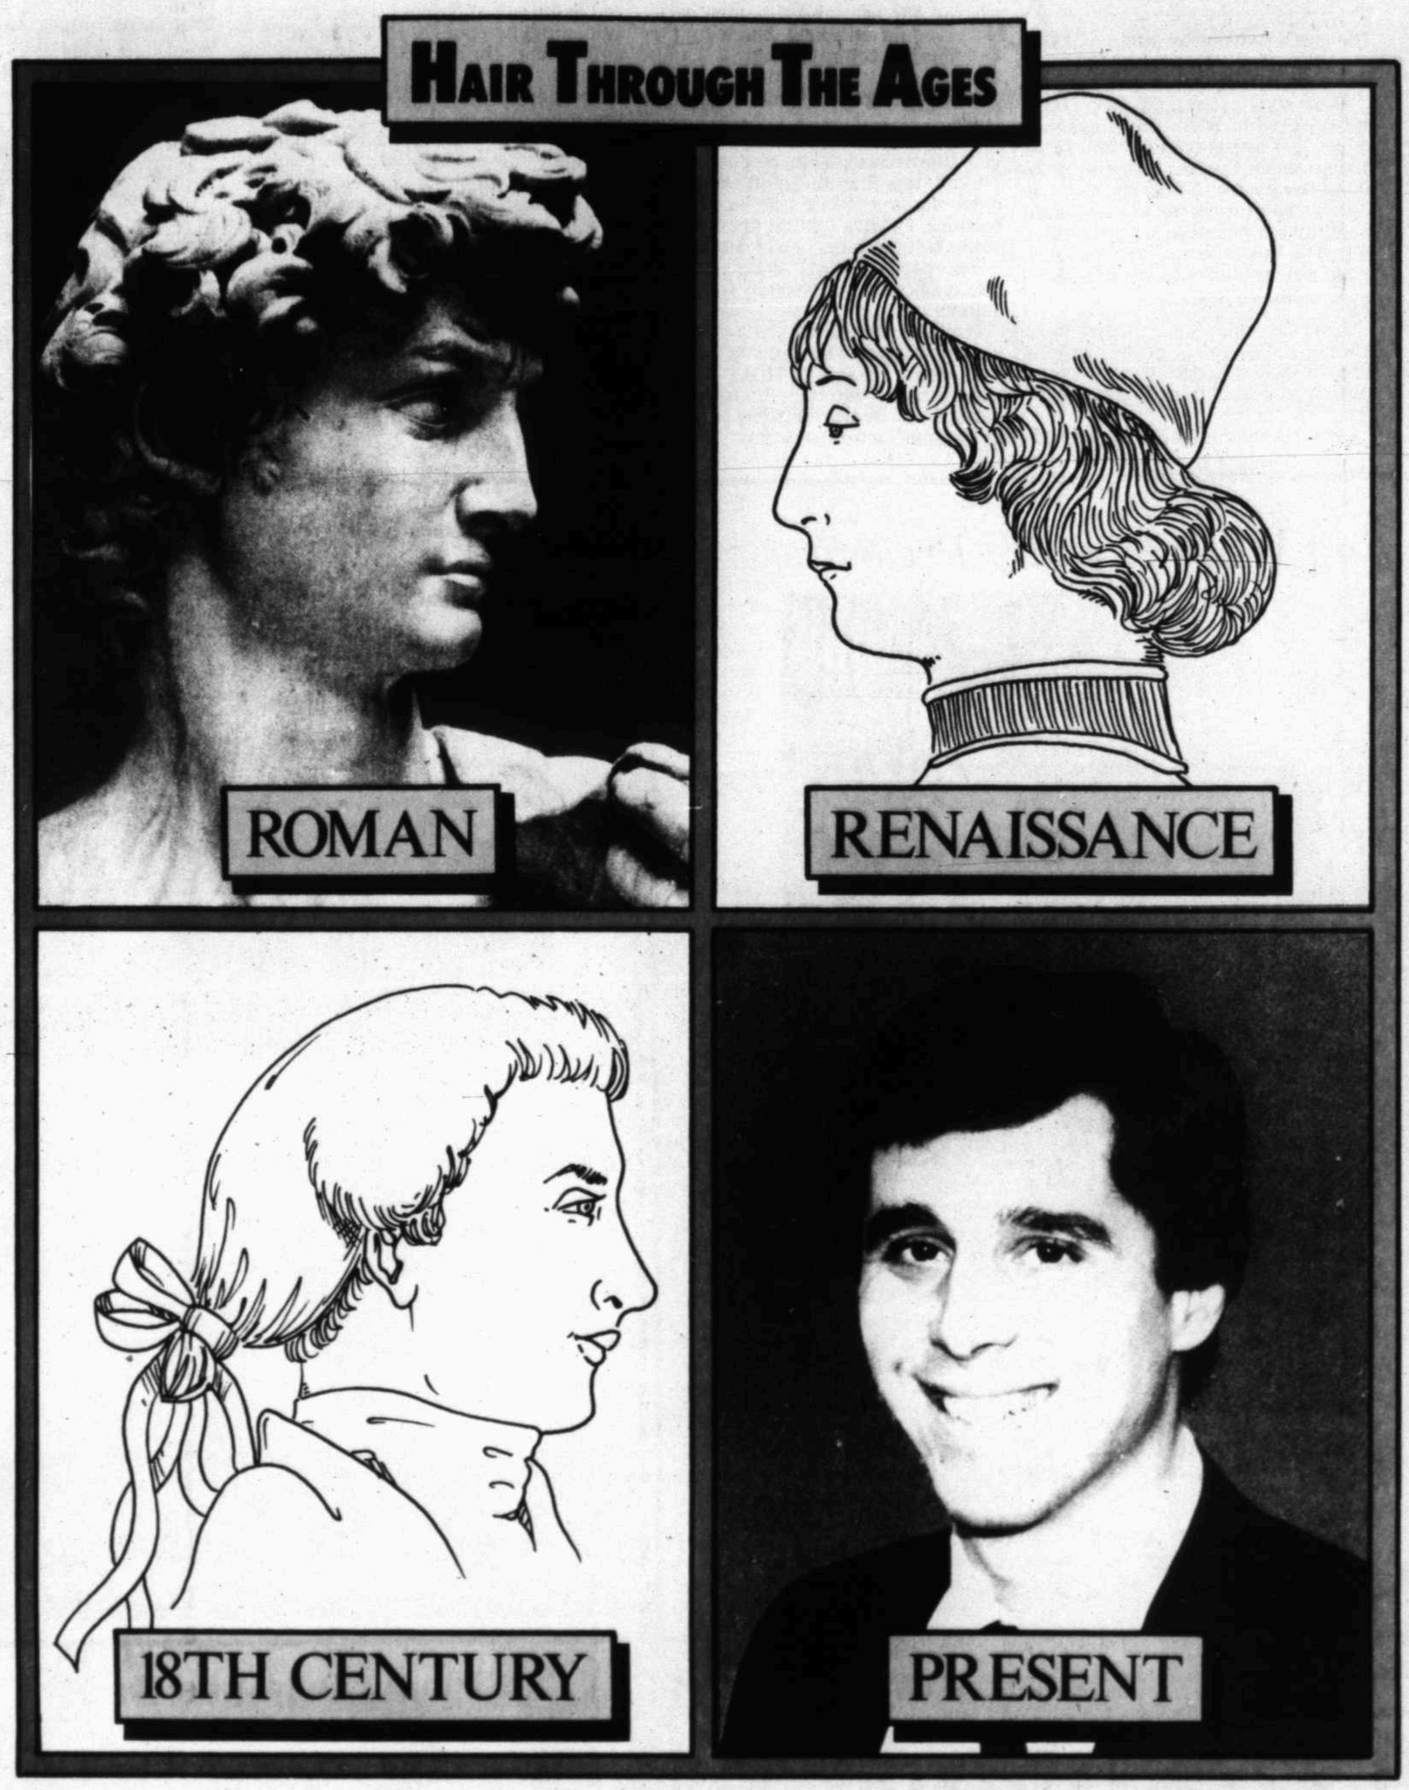

Short haircuts and clean-shaven faces were the norm in the early 1900s. Anyone with even slightly long hair was labeled a "poet" or "musician."

By the early 1920s, the emergence of movies as a major social influence was making its mark in the changing fashions, behavior and attitudes of the times. Many men emulated Rudolph Valentino and George Raft by using a gel-like grooming called "lustre." The effect was a flat, plastered-down style, usually parted in the middle.

Throughout the '30s and '40s, the slick look gave way to a more natural looking wavy style, popularized by such stars as Cary Grant. In the 1950s, both long and short hair styles were worn. Some teenage boys sported crew cuts; others were influenced by the longer style worn by Elvis Presley.

In the 1960s, the Beatles arrived in the United States with their modish, long-haired look that was considered revolutionary for the times. Teenagers and college students soon were growing their hair over their ears.

In the 20 years since the Beatles first made their musical and fashion mark, almost every conceivable barrier surrounding men's hair styles has been broken.

DALLAS — After an infatuation with European shapes and shades, American menswear designers have found inspiration in their own back yard. Ivy League charm, Old West ruggedness, beefy Heartland sweaters and New England elegance define this fall's offerings.

Interpretations run from the obviously patriotic to the more sublime. Robert Stock Salutes Lady Liberty's 100th birthday with a beefy, wool pullover emblazoned with the statue's face. On a subtler note, Robert Comstock's robust wools and butter-soft leathers boast authentic patterns borrowed from Native Americans.

"American fashion is finally coming into its own," says Stock. "We are beginning to draw upon our heritage. Men still love European clothes but we are developing our own look here in the United States. Now Europe is looking to us."

Some designers depend on color to carry this Americana theme through their collections. Homespun hues of barn red, ivy green and Yankee blue tint the patchwork quilt patterns of Perry Ellis' sweaters. A liberty close of red, white and blue punches up Henry Grethel's sportswear collection. Old West desert tones of pink, turquoise, plum, yellow and brown shade woven sweaters from Bianculli.

"Color is actually writing the story for fall," says Chip Tolbert of the Men's Fashion Association. "The designers have finally gotten around to using bold shades in a season that is traditionally fraught with drab tones. I haven't seen this much color in a fall season in my 29 years in this business."

"Men are not afraid of color anymore. In fact, they are looking for bright colors. They are demanding them," says Jerry Lauren referring to brother Ralph's collection. "Just because it's fall, men don't want their wardrobe to suddenly look drab. This season, Ralph did a selection of cashmere and Fair Isle sweaters in an array of brights — pink, yellow, emerald, purple — colors you aren't used to seeing in this season."

For fall, two shades often shunned by power-dressers — green and brown — race to the front as trend-setting tints. "Brown — especially that gray, mushroom brown — has become a neutral tone in menswear," says Tolbert. "Men finally accept it as a Correct color to wear despite the John Molloy dress-for-success attitude that prevailed for so long."

Green, notoriously a hard hue to sell in menswear, emerges in almost every collection.

While the majority of the menswear designers emphasize tints and textures, a few mavericks defy the safer silhouettes in an effort to offer more of a fashion statement. Double-knit bodysuits form the base of Christian Kenth's collection. The long-sleeved bodysuit mixes with a variety of bright tunics, vests, cardigans and coats.

No matter what you opt to wear underneath, when temperatures dip, button up an overcoat. "Topcoats are extremely important for fall," says Cesarani of the season's must-have accessory. "They look right whether worn over a casual sweater and pants or a tailored suit."

'Fishy' necktie business reeling in buyers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After their conversation had rambled for a couple of hours at Saz's, a popular sports bar in Milwaukee, Mark Abramoff and his best friend from high school, Jim Stratte, put it all together. There are 70 million fishermen in the country, they agreed, and as far as they could tell nobody had made a tie that would appeal only to them.

"Heck, if we got 1 percent of them to buy a tie, we'd have a good business," Abramoff, 32 years old, recalled telling Stratte, 31, late in the evening. "We researched this thing. We checked every mail-order catalogue, and nobody had them."

Blaine Heilman, 31, an artist and another member of the class of '72 from Brookfield Central High just outside Milwaukee, drew a prototype on paper and at the next Milwaukee Bucks game Abramoff attended, he wore Heilman's paper prototype — a barracuda — pinned onto his own necktie.

"Two people bumped into each other trying to get a look at it," he recalled. "I knew I had a winner right there."

Certain of the tie's potential for success, Abramoff dropped out of the real estate broker's course he was taking and hit the road to try to reach those 70 million fishermen — visiting tackle shops, fishing equipment shows and fishing derbies. The other day, talking by telephone from his Milwaukee office, he said he had just returned from a "Walleye Weekend" on Lake Winnebago in Wisconsin, a tough experience for a man who wears a glove fishing because he cannot stand to touch fish.

Each of the trio initially invested $5,000 toward the business of 100 percent polyester necktie — each showing a fish in its natural colors, upside down, as if dangling by its tails from the wearer's chin.

So far, they have sold 6,000 or 7,000 ties and have orders for 20,000 more.

Leather rides again

SAN FRANCISCO (UPI) — The classic leather jacket will never go out of style, but these days leather is also the stuff of office wear and dress shirts in a palette of colors and even patterns.

North Beach Leather, a California-based clothier with outlets in nine major cities and two mail order catalogs a year, has pioneered the use of supple, lightweight leathers and suedes in a variety of designs.

The firm naturally offers standard (and not-so-standard) leather jackets, and it also has an array of office and evening wear.

This fall, under the direction of designer Michael Hoban, North Beach will continue to emphasize clinging "body-conscious" lines, says a company spokeswoman, and "zippers are going to be a very hot look." The big colors for men and women alike will be kelly green, cherry red and peacock blue.

"As a carryover from spring, lacing and fringe will be popular," she said, "and we're also seeing black-and-white combinations."

In casual wear for men, the traditional baseball and varsity jackets get a facelift in lambsuede in a variety of blues.

For more information, contact North Beach Leather, P.O. Box 640682, San Francisco, Calif. 94164-0682.

Midland Park Mall

Conservative dress still king of board room

Men at Work

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

"The economic times dictate the fashion trends," said Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers.

During tight economic times, fashion — especially menswear — styles don't change as much, he said, because people can't afford to buy entire new wardrobes just to stay trendy.

"Things are going to be more conservative" in Midland because of the economic slump, he predicted.

"We're rather conservative here" anyway, noted Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear.

"Business wear, you know, never changes that much," said Randy Conatser, manager of K-G Mens Store. It remains "very conservative."

"On a first job especially, you want to look as conservative as you can," he said. "You want to look stable and serious about the job."

"Everything counts" in projecting a business image, O'Connor said. "I think you're going to see a more professional look" this fall and winter among Midland businessmen.

"You see a little more accents of color throughout business clothing right now," though, he observed.

"A bit more color has crept in," Conatser agreed. He's selling quite a few pastel dress shirts — "even pastel pink" — and colorful ties, including yellow and paisley ones.

Nevertheless, he said that — as "Dress for Success"-type books also stress — dark gray and navy blue suits seem to project stability, and "that's the image people have."

Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop said that his business suits are staying "dark and dressy" this fall, with deeply-colored shirts accenting them.

"Basically, you're still seeing that people are sticking to the darker basic colors, but with a some added color accents," said James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing.

For example, one of Borron's popular items for the upcoming fall season has been "a dark gray pinstripe suit with a teal and burgundy stripe in it instead of the usual white."

"In ties, there's a lot of interest in a small, neat pattern," he said, "but with a pattern you almost have to look at twice to see."

"They're asking more for paisley ties than for any other type of tie." Paisley ties are making up 20 percent of Borron's tie sales this year, compared to only five percent last year.

Suspenders are another accessory springing up in some board rooms.

Suspenders on suits are "almost a power statement on Wall Street," Borron said. "You can dress differently, yet still fit the mold."

Bartus said the major changes he has seen in this fall's office wear is an increased acceptance of double-breasted blazers and pleated pants.

Bartus said that men buying business clothing should remember that "you want something you can build on."

Business wear building blocks blueprinted

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

The Reporter-Telegram recently surveyed several local menswear retailers and asked each for his list of basic business wear building blocks.

Not surprisingly, a navy blue blazer and a gray suit topped virtually everyone's lists.

The following are the dress items they suggested that a man — either newly entering the workforce or just getting more serious about his career — should invest in first:

James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing
- Navy blue blazer.
- A "good, conservative gray suit," preferably a solid gray because "you can accessorize it more" than one with stripes.
- Perhaps add a tan or camel blazer sportcoat later on, especially "if you can get away with wearing a sportcoat at work."

Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop
- Navy blazer and gray slacks. "They get you in a lot of doors and don't offend anyone."
- A "real pretty" mid- to Oxford gray suit with a muted plaid pattern.
- "Keep in mind that in this part of the country, the weight of the garment is of the utmost importance." He recommended buying dress items in tropical weights.

Randy Conatser of K-G Mens Store
- Navy blue blazer.
- A pair of gray slacks.
- One or two white shirts.
- A blue shirt and an ecru shirt.
- Red or burgundy tie.
- Dark blue tie.
- Gray pinstripe or navy blue suit.

Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear
- Pinstripe or solid suits in navy blue or charcoal gray.
- A multi-stripe suit in a "very, very subdued" pattern.
- "Your blazers are still very important."

Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers
- Charcoal gray or navy blue suit, preferably "solid or simple stripe simply because of the versatility."
- Navy blue blazer, which he describes as "one of the most accepted items."
- Charcoal gray, medium gray or some shade of tan or khaki slacks.

Many young professionals spend surpluses of time and money in pursuit of the perfect wardrobe, but it's easy to accumulate a closet full of clothes that don't work well with each other. It's the "I don't have anything to wear" syndrome, even though your closet might be bulging.

Cathy Lawhon, syndicated fashion writer, offers several suggestions for pulling together a basic, yet stylish wardrobe without breaking the bank.

Blue and gray suits provide the most contrast with most men's coloring and are thus most flattering. It's best to start with a blue or gray suit for business.

There seems to be a return to the crisp, white shirt in fashion. These shirts provide a nice background for colorful ties. Quality and fit should be top priority.

You should buy the best you can afford — within reason — since quality says status. Look for name brands on sale and natural fabrics.

Shop at stores known for their service. Inquire about in-store fashion consultants or personal shoppers who know the merchandise and can put it all together quickly and economically.

Menswear builds on tradition

By DAVID LEE FORREST
Lifestyle Editor

Menswear this fall is building on tradition, with formerly old-fashioned apparel once again becoming high fashion, according to many Midland menswear retailers.

Such late '50s and early '60s wardrobe items as pleated pants, suspenders and double-breasted suits are among the hot items for the cool fall.

One Midland menswear merchant is even predicting that hat sales — a casualty of John F. Kennedy's stylishly tousled hair in the early '60s — are headed back up.

"Hats are coming back," claimed Craig Gauthier of Cal's Man Shop. One reason for this, he suspects, is "because the hair's getting a little shorter." The most popular hats have a two- to three-inch brim and a "down-and-around look."

While few other retailers mentioned hats, almost all saw pleated pants as making a big comeback.

"Midland is just beginning to see" high sales of pleated pants, said Tim O'Connor of S & Q Clothiers.

James Borron of J.E. Borron Traditional Clothing also said he was selling "a lot of pleated trousers." Borron saw the pants as part of a trend toward "more variation in body styles than before."

"What you see is a lot of sportswear tops that are a little bit oversize and a little less tailored," he said, including such features as "larger size pockets than normal."

"They're tending to loosen up the trousers, too," Borron added.

The only retailer contacted who said he didn't see too much enthusiasm for pleats was Gauthier.

"I know a lot of that pleated pants business is going on in New York," he said, "but most of my customers are older men anyway and they've been down that road before."

Old-fashioned suspenders are also popular with "both the younger and the older" customer, according to O'Connor. He ties the return of suspenders to the revival in pleated pants.

"Pleated pants and suspenders just kind of go hand-in-hand," he explained.

Suspenders have always sold reasonably well at J.E. Borron, but they have become much more popular recently, according to Borron. He thinks comfort may be a big factor in this upsurge.

"Most people who try them find them to be more comfortable" than belts with suits, he said. "Most of the suits being shipped now come with buttons for suspenders."

Double-breasted suits are staging a comeback, too, several menswear merchants noted.

"I'm selling quite a few of those this year," said Randy Conatser of K-G Mens Store.

"We're hearing and seeing more about the double-breasted blazers," said Gene Bartus of Gene Bartus Fine Mens Wear.

O'Connor disagreed, however, saying "the double-breasted suit just doesn't seem to touch base yet."

New color has been added to suits and sportcoats this year, but autumn tones seem as likely to be subtle and subdued as bright and lively.

"There's a lot more variation in colors this year than ever before," said Borron, "from brights to deep jewel tones ... such as amethyst, sapphire and those colors."

"Most everything in suits is still dark and dressy," according to Gauthier. Shirts in "deeper, darker colors," are also popular, he said, to "spiff up some of these real conservative suits."

Gauthier said he's also seeing "lots of 'mixy' colors" that can be teamed with various slacks and shirts for many different combinations.

"Dark colors are still real good in suits," O'Connor said. Dark gray and a dark blue shade he calls "char-blue" are among his big sellers.

For added color, paisley prints and plaids are popular, especially on ties, most menswear retailers agreed.

Cotton and wool seem to be the preferred fabrics for this fall.

"The natural fabrics — you know, cotton and wool — seem very important," Bartus said. He's also seen increased interest in silk sportcoats.

"Wool blazers are going to be big again this year," O'Connor predicted.

"I'm gearing more of my sales to sportcoats" said Gauthier, especially in "beautiful natural fabrics like wool and cashmere blends."

Wool sportcoats with patches on the sleeves are also popular at K-G Mens Store, Conatser said.

Because it is so cool — and Permian Basin autumns can be so warm — cotton is also popular in sweaters, said Gauthier. "Sweaters are real strong" this season, he added.

Conatser also said that one popular casual look consisted of Shaker sweaters with knit shirts underneath.

In casual slacks, "the big thing this year is button-fly, shrink-to-fit 501 jeans," Conatser noted, as well as other pants "with a little bit more of a rugged look."

Summing up this season's menswear, Conatser said there's a conservative look and a high fashion look and the most popular styles this fall seem to spring from "where those two meet."

Fall male styles not 'shy'

By STEVE HURTADO
Copley News Service

CNS Photo

A traditional herringbone pattern plays off a windowpane overplaid in this wool sportcoat.

Menswear ... it's often neglected when the glitz and glimmer of women's haute couture steal the spotlight season after season.

After all, there are no skirts to lengthen or shorten every year. Men's basics don't change a lot — the widening of a tie here, tapering of a lapel there.

Well, this season's collections may turn some heads. There's nothing shy or understated about menswear for fall/winter '86.

It's a bold and bright season, a season of multiples: more varied approaches to the classics, more alternatives to spice up basic clothing and more new color treatments.

"No matter which category of apparel you examine, one or more of the key words — bold, bright, brawny, beautiful — tells the story," said Chip Tolbert, director of the Men's Fashion Association of America. "Patterns in fabrics and sweaters are big and bold. In sports outerwear, color is primary. Brights such as red, yellow and royal blue are standouts."

The options are without limits, but the bywords are consistent and precise, as evidenced by the following checklist of some of the season's strongest trends:

Suits: The new spirit for fall '86 suits begins with fabric and pattern.

The silhouette evidences relatively little change. Basic shapes incorporate natural or softly padded shoulders, slight waist suppression, two-button closures and side or center vents. Forward fashion gets a broader shoulder, either padded or clearly defined and a distinct narrowing at the hip.

A prime example is the leaner, longer look of the double-breasted models cut without vents. Notched lapels prevail on single-breasted models while the double-breasteds are most often seen with wider, peaked lapels. Lapel widths can vary from 3¼ to 4½ inches.

There is renewed interest in traditional patterns — glen plaids, houndstooth checks, bird's eye weaves, district checks, herringbones and stripes.

Fabrics range from soft flannels, cheviots, sturdy twills and brawny tweeds in woolens often blended with man-made fibers.

The two predominant color ranges are brown and black-and-white. Tonal shades of brown have become the new neutral with a predominance of lighter shades — taupe, tan, toast and nutmeg. The perennial favorite combo, black and white, shows up in new-looking novelty patterns. Both color families are often enhanced with color accents.

Sport coats: Liberal doses of color enliven this season's traditional patterns.

On the American scene, designers have taken a wide range of brawny, beefy tweeds — with both dark and light grounds — and infused them with unexpected vibrance. The result is color-shot-tweed.

Even brighter are the solid crayon-color sport coats in lofty tweeds, brushed textures and velvety corduroys. Most are single-breasted and offer endless choices for coordination.

Options this season are abundant for sport coat dressing. Paired with a shirt and tie and possibly a sweater vest, the look is classic. The new look of a T-neck or polo underneath results in a softer, more casual turnout. The younger man may opt for teaming a sport coat with a hooded sweatshirt and knit pants or jeans for his own individual look.

Coordinated slack silhouettes are somewhat fuller, with a 22-inch knee tapering slightly to a 19-inch bottom.

Skiwear slides downhill — stylishly

Alpine Attitude

By SHARON WILLIAMS
Copley News Service

Clothes don't make the skier, but most will admit hitting the slopes in style is an image-booster.

After all, it's comforting for a skier to know he'll still look good if he takes a tumble on the bunny hill or his form is less than perfect when attempting an expert run.

This winter, skiers don't have to worry about blending in with the scenery. Everyone from snow bunnies to fearless experts will turn heads on the hill, chairlift or in the lodge when sporting the bright colors of the season.

For many skiers, fashion is as important on the slopes as it is on the street. The look is second only to the warmth and protection the outfit gives. Designers get inspiration from American and European ski enthusiasts.

No ski hill would look right without the dots of vivid parkas. This year will be no exception ... the brights are back in grand style for '86. Skiers will find a bold palette with colors like reds and yellows side by side with bright pastels and even winter white on the store racks.

Roffe, a Seattle-based skiwear manufacturer, calls their bright pastels Deco Brights ... cool blues, cantaloupe oranges and mint greens. The hues are pastels, but brighter than one would expect. For an up-to-the-minute look, pair a Deco Bright parka with black ski pants, says Tracy Nichols, assistant advertising director.

CNB Photo

Versatile high-tech fabrics, texture and topstitching make ski apparel soar this winter.

Cool "Miami Vice" pastels are also fashion news on the slopes.

"Color stories range from vivid primaries, pastel blues to frosty pale shades. Silver adds zap as a new neutral," says Susan Rafter, public relations representative for Sport Obermeyer of Aspen. Colo.

Designers add graphics to skiwear for impact. Graphics can bring two or three different colors to a parka, making it more visible and bringing more possibilities for accessorizing.

Many skiers lauded the coming of the one-piece ski suit. The look is sleek and chic, and the skier doesn't have to tote both bibs and a parka all the way to the ski hill and back.

This year, Nichols predicts the one-piece suit will be even more popular than it was last year.

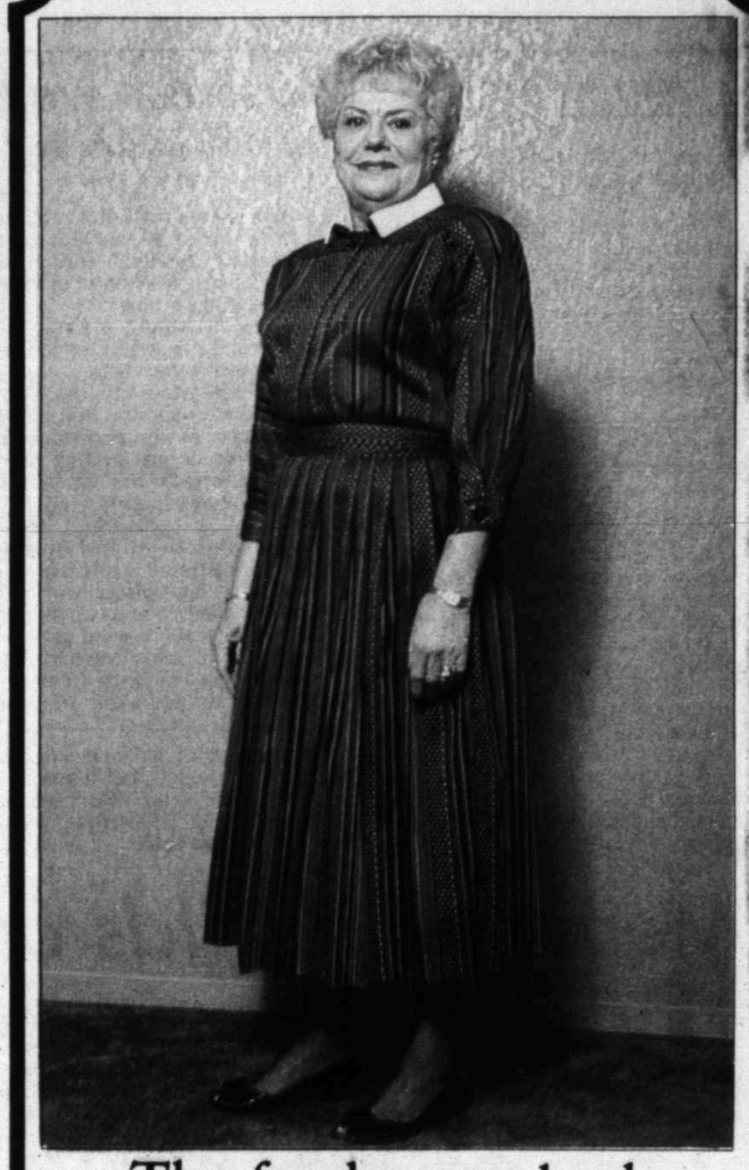

"Most bought it last year for fashion," she says. "Now more people are realizing they're very comfortable, too."

Pants are back in the boots for winter '86. The tight in-the-boot stretch pants topped by an oversized jacket creates a sleek, fashionable silhouette.

"It's a trend I like to term 'big over small,' " Nichols says.

Underneath it all, ski sweats are the newest rage. The sweats are the answer for the many skiers who wanted the warmth of long underwear, yet wanted to shed outerwear after a day on the hill without changing their entire outfit.

Materials for '86 skiwear allow maximum protection and warmth, yet freedom for the newest designs. Gortex linings let water out, but not in. Insulators like Thinsulate keep the wearer toasty warm without adding a lot of excess bulk to an outfit.
