Hearing it out

U.S. Department of Energy spokesmen James Bickel, center, and John Arthur listen as Don Hancock, standing, a Southwest Research and Information Center representative from Albuquerque, N.M., blasts a DOE study of a nuclear waste disposal site in southeast New Mexico. The DOE held a public hearing Monday in Odessa on the Waste Isolation Pilot Project.

WIPP to move ahead despite state concerns

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A federal group building a nuclear waste dump in southeast New Mexico still plans to open the facility in September, despite threats of litigation Monday from state officials in Texas.

U.S. Department of Energy representatives defended the Waste Isolation Pilot Project, a proposed storage facility near Carlsbad, N.M., at a public hearing attended by about 150 people.

Texas officials' and community representatives' arguments over waste transportation and the site's safety "lacked substance," WIPP managers James Bickel and John Arthur said.

"It's probably one of the more overengineered projects you've ever seen in your life," Bickel said. "We're going to cross every 't' and dot every 'i' before we get the thing open because we have the whole world looking over our shoulders."

Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox, speaking at the hearing, said unexpected seepage from the disposal project could endanger precious West Texas groundwater and end up in the Pecos River.

Mattox said the DOE has "rushed headlong into the operation of WIPP" and should wait until the Environmental Protection Agency issues new groundwater standards.

The attorney general said he wouldn't hesitate to file a lawsuit to halt the plant's opening if groundwater concerns are not addressed.

Mattox also questioned the safety of transporting truckloads of low-level radioactive waste across Texas via Interstates 20 and 40. Once into full-scale operations in five years, two trucks a week would roll through Midland and Odessa and turn north on U.S. Highway 285 at Pecos.

The Odessa hearing was one of eight across the United States in which the DOE heard citizens' comments about WIPP, where the government plans to store plutonium-contaminated, defense-related waste in a salt dome 2,150 feet underground.

Texas Agriculture Commissioner Jim Hightower at the hearing said that despite the DOE's assurances that WIPP is safe, the department still hasn't answered questions concerning possible leakage and transportation accidents.

Hightower also expressed reservations over the department's credibility and noted blemished track records at nuclear plants such as Rocky Flats, Colo., and Savannah River, S.C., the source of the waste which will travel Interstate 20.

"Your Waste Isolation Pilot Project is verse three of the same old song," Hightower said. "We got a song here and it's called 'Don't Mess With Texas.' When you're messing with our water, you're messing with our economy."

Hightower said the DOE could not be trusted until it cleaned up its problems at other nuclear facilities.

"Maybe you can make this thing work, but you have to have the trust of the people," he said. "Right now you don't have it. We find that WIPP is pretty much ugly to the bone."

Should the WIPP facility open on schedule, the next five years would be spent experimenting with small amounts of waste. Only 3 percent of the 6.2 million cubic feet capacity would be filled.

If deemed unsafe, the department has pledged to remove the waste, though it hasn't detailed how it would accomplish such a task.

HUD's problems could reach 'everywhere,' probe indicates

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abuse and mismanagement may be everywhere in the Department of Housing and Urban Development, say investigators who confess they don't know where their probe will be headed next.

"We have made the assumption that there is a problem within every unit within HUD, and until we learn that there isn't, we're going to assume that there is," said Rep. Christopher Shays, R-Conn., a member of the congressional panel investigating the department.

So far, the investigations have roamed from one unrelated program to the next and have been shotgunned from one part of the nation to another.

A sampling from around the country:

■ In Denver, U.S. Attorney Mike Norton says his office is investigating allegations that a suspended HUD accountant embezzled some $1 million in housing funds.

■ In Indianapolis, auditors are trying to account for $176,965 arising from 11 property sales.

■ In Philadelphia, a pair of real estate brokers are awaiting trial on charges of defrauding HUD of more than $900,000.

■ In Atlanta, U.S. Attorney Robert Barr's office has filed a civil suit against two Atlanta men the Justice Department says kept proceeds from HUD real estate closings. The lawsuit, which contends HUD lost $840,000 in payments and $860,000 in interest, seeks $7.5 million in damages.

■ In the Maryland suburbs of Washington D.C., a private escrow agent has confessed to stealing more than $5 million from HUD. Her role was to help the department close on sales of repossessed homes by signing papers and accepting the buyers' money for the property. Marilyn Harrell, nicknamed "Robin HUD" because she gave some of the stolen money to the poor, told investigators her operation was simple: She just didn't give the government its money.

On Monday, Ms. Harrell turned over her house to the department to cover part of the thefts. Ms. Harrell and unidentified agents in Texas and Alabama became the first agents that HUD will bar from future government contracts, the Washington Post reported today, quoting Frank Keating, HUD general counsel-designate.

Investigations involve 11 other private escrow agents around the country, and as much as $20 million of HUD funds may have been taken this way, according to Paul Adams, the department's inspector general.

Ruling draws strong opposition

WASHINGTON (AP) — Death penalty opponents are calling for new state laws to protect juveniles and the mentally retarded in the wake of Supreme Court rulings they say are "medieval and barbaric."

"To give up, with ultimate finality, upon a person even before they emerge from childhood ... is squarely in opposition to the fundamental premises of an enlightened juvenile justice system," said American Bar Association President Robert Raven.

"We strongly urge states to enact legislation which recognizes that minors ... should not be held to ... the ultimate sanction of death," he said.

Of the 37 states permitting capital punishment, 15 now bar its use for anyone who committed the crime before age 18.

The court, voting 5-4, said Monday the Constitution does not bar states from executing murderers who committed their crimes as young as 16 or mentally retarded adult killers.

In the case of the mentally retarded, the justices said convicted murderers may demand that sentencing juries and judges consider their limited reasoning capacity as a factor weighing against the death penalty.

The court upheld the death sentences of a Kentucky murderer who was 17 when he killed, a Missouri killer who was 16, and a Texas killer who has the mental capacity of a 7-year-old.

Last year, the court decided that 15 was too young for execution.

The justices, expected to wrap up the current court term on Thursday, have yet to issue a decision in a closely watched Missouri case in which the court's 1973 decision legalizing abortion is under attack.

The court must either announce a decision or schedule the case to be argued again during its next term beginning in October.

In other matters Monday, the court:

■ Ruled, 7-2, that skyrocketing punitive damage awards in personal injury lawsuits do not violate the Constitution's ban on excessive fines. The decision left open the possibility that such hefty awards violate due-process rights.

Odessa woman develops aids in Spanish for police

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

ODESSA — A former public school language instructor spent last weekend in El Paso, continuing research on her newest lesson plan. The research was done with Department of Public Safety troopers.

"That was something else, I'll tell you," said Linda Quiroz, shaking her head. "We did traffic stops, DWIs, we did everything. It was very interesting, to say the least."

Through her Odessa-based company, Bilingual Video Communications, Inc., Ms. Quiroz has developed "Specific Spanish for Law Enforcement," a curriculum designed to help officers communicate in the language foreign to them.

Montford begins new UTPB effort

By JAMES CULLEN
and ALLEN HOWLAND
Staff Writers

AUSTIN — Sen. John Montford said he was hopeful he would be able to resolve opposition to expansion of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin Monday after he filed another bill to authorize four-year status at the campus.

Montford, D-Lubbock, drafted Senate Bill 48, which he filed Monday, after Gov. Bill Clements last month vetoed a bill to expand UT-Dallas because the bill also would have authorized UT-Permian Basin to offer lower-level courses.

After Montford spoke Monday evening with two of the main opponents to the UTPB expansion — Rep. Tom Craddick, R-Midland, and Sen. Bill Sims, D-San Angelo — Montford said, "We're talking ... I'd say it's hopeful," although he cautioned against concluding there was any deal.

Sims this morning called Monday evening's meeting "an informal visit" that changed no one's mind.

"I still think this is not the time to consider expansion," Sims said.

"The Legislature has no business deciding these issues, that's what the Coordinating Board is for. If we're going to tell them what to do, we might as well get rid of the board."

Craddick said the meeting was an attempt to see if there is any common ground between the two sides in the university expansion controversy "that would protect the junior colleges while expanding UTPB."

While the common ground has yet to emerge, Craddick said both sides will keep looking for it.

Sims said he will push for examination of all the state's upper-level only universities to see how much effect expansions would have on existing schools. "The state can't afford to duplicate efforts.

Bush 'shows off' Midland County Clerk

By MATTHEW C. QUINN
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush lavished special attention Monday on Midland County Clerk Rosenelle Cherry during a White House ceremony in which he welcomed dozens of former Democrats to the Republican Party.

As Ms. Cherry was leaving a sweltering Rose Garden ceremony trumpeting 66 state and local officials who recently have switched their political affiliation to the GOP, Bush summoned the Midland woman, who has been county clerk since 1951.

"I want to show you off," Bush said as he draped his arm around Ms. Cherry for photographers. "Midland, Texas, 1951, County Clerk."

Ms. Cherry said Bush also told her, "We go back a long time."

Bush lived in Midland, where he founded an oil company, from 1948 to 1954. Ms. Cherry said she knew Bush during those years and their personal friendship "had a lot to do" with her conversion to the Republican Party last January.

But she said she made the switch "because the Democratic Party more and more left me and what I believe. What I believed when I grew up is what the Republicans believe in now," she added.

Ms. Cherry and two other Midlanders were invited to the White House for a series of meetings Monday celebrating the movement of Democrats to the Republican fold.

Midland County Treasurer Dee Thompson was unable to make the trip because of recent surgery.

According to Ms. Cherry, Midland Justice of the Peace Robert Pine did not make it to the ceremony because he was not permitted inside the White House gate because of a mixup with security agents. "I don't know what the problem is," she said as the ceremony broke up. "He is stuck at that gate."

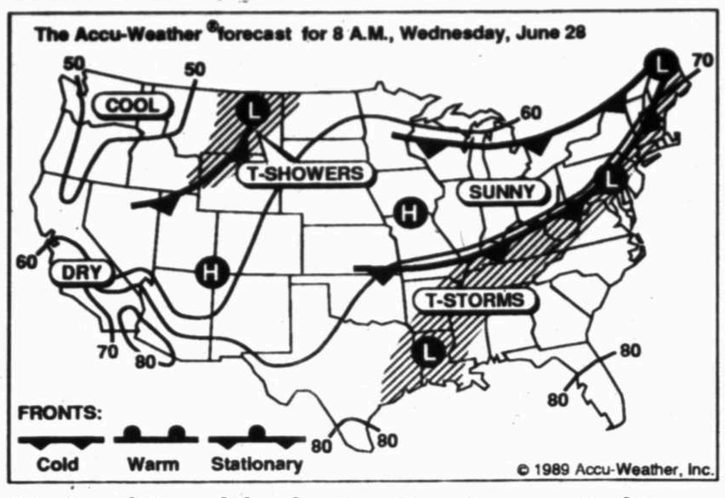

Minutes earlier, the party converts filed through the Oval Office for individual picture-taking sessions with Bush and Vice President Quayle.

They then were ushered into the Rose Garden for a ceremony with speeches by Bush, Republican Chairman Lee Atwater and Rep. Bill Grant of Florida, who switched parties in February.

During the Rose Garden ceremony, Bush commended the officials for their "courageous decision" to switch parties. "We're moving in the right direction," Bush said. "But the Democratic Party is moving too — to the left and out of the mainstream."

WEATHER SUMMARY

Fair skies likely in Basin tonight

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be in the upper 60s and winds will be from the southeast at 5-15 mph.

Wednesday is expected to be mostly sunny and very warm with the high in the upper 90s and winds continuing from the southeast at 10-15 mph.

Monday's high of 96 was seven degrees cooler than the record high of 103 set for that date in 1972. The overnight low of 65 was four degrees warmer than the record low of 61 set for this date in 1968.

STATE

Strong thunderstorms were reported from Toledo Bend to offshore near Beaumont and southward along the coast to the coastal bend area.

Rainfall amounts of more than 10 inches were common in the area around the storm and more rainfall was expected to continue throughout the day.

Forecasters warned of the possibility of isolated tornadoes in East Texas as the storm system continues its northward trek.

Forecasts are calling for continued cloudy skies with scattered strong thunderstorms through tonight in Southeast Texas and East Texas. It will be partly cloudy and warm over the rest of the state with scattered afternoon and evening thunderstorms possible through Wednesday.

Lows tonight will be in the 60s and 70s.

NATION

Thunderstorms drenched parts of the Midwest.

Elsewhere, a solid band of rain and thunderstorms extended from Illinois across much of Missouri and Kansas to the Texas panhandle today.

Some areas received heavy rainfall. In the Kansas City area, the storm flooded streets and downed trees and power lines.

Storm dumps rain before dissipating

HOUSTON (AP) — The remnants of Tropical Storm Allison battered parts of the Gulf Coast today with torrential rains, sending streams and bayous over their banks, turning roads into canals and killing at least one person.

Before it was downgraded to a tropical depression early today, the first named storm of the Atlantic hurricane season also was blamed for the partial collapse of the roof at Northline Mall in Houston, and for capsizing a tugboat in Galveston Bay. No serious injuries were reported in those incidents.

The slow-moving storm swept ashore Monday in Brazoria County about 60 miles southwest of Houston. Forecasters predicted that rainfall eventually might be measured in feet rather than inches.

"It's certainly a possibility," Ron Stagno of the National Weather Service in Houston said when asked if 2 feet of rain could fall. "We hope it won't become a reality but it is a possibility."

No relief was expected until late today because the system was moving so slowly — only 6 mph to the north.

At 5 a.m. CDT, the poorly defined center of the depression was near 30.5 north latitude and 95.5 west longitude, or about 50 miles north of Houston.

Maximum sustained winds dropped to 35 mph, with 45 mph gusts in heavy squalls along the east Texas-west Louisiana coasts, the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., said. Maximum sustained winds must be at least 39 mph for a depression to be a named tropical storm.

The morning rush hour today was a nightmare again for motorists, particularly those coming in from the north. Both major highways from the north, Interstate 45 and U.S. 59, were closed by high water.

Many freeway underpasses and service roads were littered with abandoned vehicles.

"It's a helpless feeling," said stranded motorist Miles Nye. "There's nothing you can do. You just watch the water moving up."

Some underpasses had as much as 15 or 20 feet of water. A city bus was stuck in one underpass leading to I-45 near downtown, its roof barely peaking over the water.

More than 10 inches of rain fell in the Houston area during the 24 hours that ended early today, the weather service said.

"The main thing is the rain," said weather ervice meteorologist Larry Vannozzi. "It's a heavy rainmaker."

Besides heavy rains, forecasters warned of isolated tornadoes.

The Chambers County Sheriff's Department reported a tornado Monday evening at Smithpoint and Double Bayou. Flooding also was reported in the county.

The storm was blamed for the fatal traffic accident of a 46-year-old Port Neches man Monday evening, police said.

Rain was falling at 1 inch per hour in some areas and deluges were expected to continue today into east Texas and southwest Louisiana.

Hardest hit areas were along the Texas coast although damage appeared to be minor, confined to downed power lines and some roof shingles blown away. Damage from high water also was reported.

Flash-flood warnings were in effect for the coastal counties south of Houston while the rest of southeast Texas was under a flash-flood watch.

"It's starting to come up pretty fast," Don Best, of Danbury in Brazoria County, said as his family tried to save household belongings from rising waters. "We're trying to put our furniture up as fast as we can."

WIPP

Bickel noted that WIPP would still be in its experimental phase by the time new EPA groundwater guidelines are issued, possibly by the end of 1991. He said project officials should have no trouble making adjustments to meet the EPA standards.

"We want to get started now," Bickel said. "I wouldn't characterize it as a rush. If we meet the earlier date, we get critized, and if we don't, we get criticized. We're not going to jeopardize the health and environment in meeting this opening date."

Al Hickerson, a chemical engineer in Odessa, was one of the few who stood before the DOE panel and praised WIPP.

"I don't believe we can live in a risk-free environment," Hickerson said. "I'm a conservative individual, but the longer we put off burying this waste, the more it's going to cost us."

Hickerson said a salt formation is ideal for nuclear waste storage.

Officials for Westinghouse, which will run the plant, and the DOE have said the salt dome exists because no water has seeped through the area in 200 million years. Radioactive waste likely will not contaminate any groundwater because salt formations contain no water, they say.

Carlsbad Mayor Bob Forrest and Rep. Robert Light of New Mexico hailed WIPP, saying the project has been a boon to the economy.

"I can't think of a better friend than the DOE," Forrest said. "The best jobs in Carlsbad are the WIPP jobs. It's the best thing to happen to our community.

"If this project isn't safe, I'd be the first person to lead the DOE out of Carlsbad."

Light, D-Eddy County, said he has gained confidence in WIPP since he took office four years ago.

"I don't want anything in our area that could be dangerous," he said. "I feel very comfortable with the DOE being down in southeast New Mexico."

The assurances, however, didn't convince some Permian Basin citizens.

Mike Gray of Midland criticized the department for not considering the "no-action alternative," or leaving the waste at the nuclear facility from which it originated.

Gray said WIPP will leave citizens powerless against the threat of injury through contaminated water or radioactive exposure from transportation accidents.

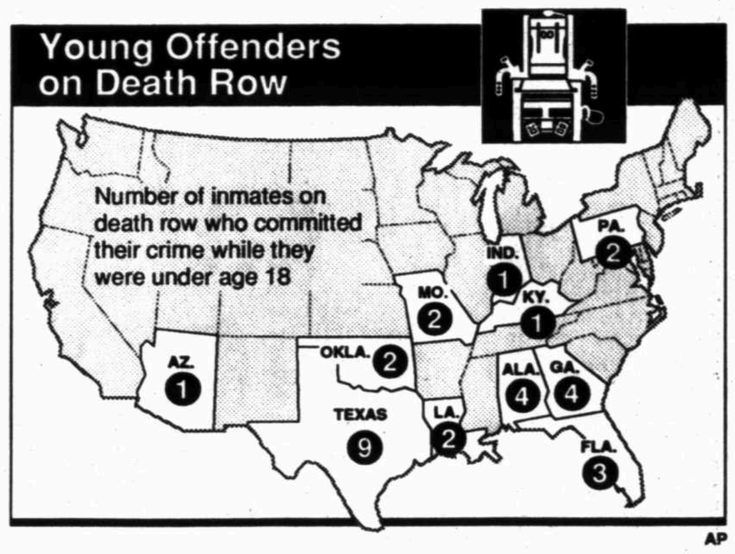

"In a world where oil spills have become routine, will we carry the same attitude about nuclear wastes?" Gray asked.

John Carpenter, a botanist and "farm boy" from Fort Stockton, pleaded for the DOE to wait until EPA groundwater standards are issued.

"Once it's (radioactive waste) in the water table, it will be in the water table until it dies of its own accord," Carpenter said.

Julie Breaux of Odessa said the DOE hasn't considered the effects WIPP could have on its neighbors across the state border.

"I'm glad they're so happy about the project, but I'm not impressed," Ms. Breaux said.

COURT

■ Said police may stray from the precise wording of the famous Miranda warnings given to criminal suspects, voting 5-4 to reinstate an Indiana man's conviction for attempted murder.

■ Unanimously interpreted a key federal anti-racketeering law broadly in a Minnesota case to make it easier to use the law in civil lawsuits against businesses accused of fraud.

■ Agreed to decide in an Ohio case whether states may outlaw possession of "lewd" photographs and films depicting child nudity. The court in 1982 said states could ban the promotion and distribution of such material, but stopped short of allowing its possession to be a crime.

Law enforcement authorities said the juvenile death penalty decisions will advance the fight against violent crime.

"In an era of growing concern over the increase and seriousness of violent crime, the court's decision ... reaffirms that state legislators, the juvenile justice system and local juries — not the federal courts — can and should decide upon the proper age to impose the death penalty," said Attorney General Fred Cowan of Kentucky.

"Clearly, some 16- and 17-year-olds in our society are fully mature and capable of plotting and carrying out the most heinous of crimes," he added. "The court has obviously responded to society's demand to hold youths who are mature enough to commit horrible crimes responsible for their actions."

The court's juvenile-killers ruling affects about 25 of the 2,200 death row inmates across the nation.

As for mental retardation, people who function at below-average intelligence comprise between 12 and 30 percent of all death row inmates, according to one group opposed to the death penalty.

The rulings prompted widespread concern among activists for individual rights.

"It is quite appalling that the Supreme Court would read the Constitution ... as not banning the execution of children," said Henry Schwarzschild of the American Civil Liberties Union. "To let the society hang children is medieval and barbaric."

James Ellis, president of the American Association on Mental Retardation, said, "It now falls to state legislatures to assure that no individual with this disability is ever put to death in this country. The execution of any such person would represent a tragic injustice."

Michele Coleman of the Missouri Coalition Against the Death Penalty said the rulings give states "rein to execute children."

But Missouri Attorney General William Webster said the rulings will not prompt more executions of minors.

"I think that's hogwash. There's a lot of people that say it's going to open the door. That's ludicrous," he said.

SPANISH

At least 2½ million Spanish-speaking citizens have come to the United States in the past five years, many of them settling in Texas and New Mexico, Ms. Quiroz said. Inevitably, the new citizens will come into contact with representatives of government entities, many of whom speak only English. The result of the contact is at best confusing, and at worst tragic.

"I'm trying to make the transaction that has to occur more efficient," the language specialist said. "Now there is no communication, no contact. If we as a society don't devise a need for that communication, we will remain divided ... I want to make those little networks, those little bridges."

After working on the project part-time for 18 months, last November she decided to leave the Ector County school system after 12 years and launch her company. Since then, she has been marketing the $595 program to law enforcement agencies in Texas and New Mexico.

The videotapes sold with the program show eight common situations, including traffic stops and interrogations, using Hispanic officers from the Dallas Police Department as actors. Captions appear on the screen in both English and Spanish.

A workbook, instructor's guide, and cassette tapes complete the curriculum. Also included for the officers is a dictionary of common Spanish street terms.

The program has been purchased by several agencies, including the Addison Police Department and police departments in Lovington and Belen, N.M. The Dallas Police Department is "very interested" in the curriculum, as are departments in Monahans, Pecos, and Tucson, Ariz., Ms. Quiroz said. The New Mexico state law enforcement officers' academy also is planning to use the curriculum.

"I am in the process of evaluating it and looking at it," said Midland County Chief Deputy Jim Chancellor. "I think anybody in law enforcement would be interested in the idea. There is always a chance you will run across someone who does not speak English."

The Midland sheriff's office has about 10 bilingual officers, so there is usually at least one available, Chancellor said.

Midland Police Chief Richard Czech said budgetary pressures and deployment of Spanish-speaking officers in the city make Ms. Quiroz' program unnecessary.

"We have a number of Spanish-speaking officers in the department, and they are deployed throughout the city," Czech said. "It would be nice if all of my officers could speak Spanish, but at this point we can't afford to do massive training."

Agencies who purchase the curriculum get a plus: it has been approved by the Texas Commission on Law Enforcement Officer Standards and Education (TCLEOSE) for officer training. Officers must complete 20 hours of training each year to remain certified.

Ms. Quiroz also has signed on with the Law Enforcement Training Network, a nationwide project headed by former Dallas Police Chief Billy Prince.

Her research is far from over. This fall, she plans to take a course in criminology at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

HUD

On another front, revealed just this week, HUD has moved to halt losses from a loan program where some $650 million in mortgages are in default. The department moved swiftly to suspend three mortgage companies indefinitely, put three others on six-month probations and review the operations of still three more.

HUD officials say a certain amount of fraud is to be expected in a $20 billion government agency involved chiefly in making loans and giving away money to help people get shelter and aid the nation's cities.

But what began quietly as an in-house investigation more than a year ago has since exploded into charges of influence-peddling, betrayal and mismanagement by the people who once held the highest offices in the department.

Former Secretary Samuel Pierce Jr. has been criticized for his hands-off style of management. His one-time top aide, Deborah Gore Dean, invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked about her role in handing out HUD grants to developers who sometimes paid six-figure sums to big-name Republicans to get favorable consideration for their projects.

Geography made little difference. Money went to projects in New Jersey as well as those in New Mexico.

"The problem was at the top," said Rep. Barney Frank, D-Mass., another member of the House committee investigating HUD. "Deborah Dean was in charge of America."

Shays agreed.

"People who were not fit to hold office were in charge of that agency," he said Monday. "Mr. Pierce had a good resume. He inherited an agency in disarray and left it worse than he found it."

"There is always a problem in a democratic society of a push-pull," said Frank. "The people who are trying to politicize a program are pulling against the people who are trying to run it non-politically.

"The difference with HUD was there were no people with real authority to run it non-politically."

Atwater said 118 elected and party officials had switched from the Democratic Party to the GOP since he became Republican chairman in January. Grant commended those gathered for standing up to charges by some Democrats that the new GOP members are "turncoats" and "traitors."

But Ms. Cherry said: "I had no bad reaction from anybody. None."

"I've been very proud I made the switch in January," she said. "At the time I first ran for country clerk, we were a one-party state, Democratic Party only. I ran as a Democrat. Now it's a two-party state and I believe I'm in the party I most believe in."

"We need to go about expansion in a business-like manner, not by the seat of our pants," Sims said.

On Friday, Craddick introduced a resolution in the House, which would require the Coordinating Board to look at expansion of all upper-level schools.

The bill was referred to the Higher Education Committee, where Craddick hopes the resolution will get a full hearing, he said.

The governor also would have to agree to allow the Legislature to consider the bill in the special session. "I'm going to work on the problem," Montford said.

The Texas House of Representatives on a 108-22 vote Monday approved House Bill 42 by Rep. David Cain, D-Dallas, which would authorize UT-Dallas to offer lower-level courses. The suburban Dallas campus now offers junior- and senior-level courses and graduate courses.

Lack of a quorum prevented passage of a similar bill in the Senate, where Sen. Carlos Truan, D-Corpus Christi, noted that North Texas already receives three times as much money per capita for higher education as South Texas receives.

The UT-Dallas expansion would be contingent upon approval of the Higher Education Coordinating Board. The bill Clements vetoed would have expanded UT-Permian Basin and would have made Pan American University in Brownsville a free-standing institution.

The Senate voted 17-3 for the UT-Dallas expansion, but the tally showed the 31-member Senate was one short of the two-thirds needed for a quorum, as storms delayed the arrival of many senators Monday.

Montford, who voted for the UT-Dallas bill, said he supported the expansion because the Dallas delegation agreed to let him run with his UTPB amendment during the regular session.

"They stuck with their word and now I'm just sticking to my word," he said, but he added, "I expect them to support my bill."

Rep. Gary Watkins, D-Odessa, said he still was looking for other bills that might carry a UT-Permian Basin amendment, although the governor's office was carefully restricting items that could be included in the special session, to exclude such amendments.

"We're still very much in the hunt," Watkins said. "We're still looking at all our options and we're looking for the best method to get there," he said.

Watkins, too, supported the UT-Dallas bill after it became clear he could not attach the local amendment. "Hopefully we'll get Dallas' help" when it comes UTPB's turn, he said.

President calls for amendment to ban desecration of flag

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, reacting to a Supreme Court decision that protects the right of protesters to burn the American flag, called today for a constitutional amendment that would prohibit desecration of the flag.

Bush

Bush said "support of the First Amendment need not extend" to desecration of the flag, which he termed "the unique symbol of America."

Bush fielded questions on subjects ranging from international diplomacy to child care legislation to baseball in a free-wheeling 45-minute news conference in the White House briefing room.

The president said:

■ He will carry a package of economic aid when he travels to Poland next month, but wants to first make sure that the communist government there will follow through on economic and political reform. He said Soviet leaders shouldn't be "uptight" about his journey to Poland and Hungary.

■ He still favors U.S. contacts with China despite the continuing crackdown in Beijing against pro-democracy leaders.

■ He has no plans to call for legislation to alter recent Supreme Court rulings on affirmative action that drew criticism from civil rights groups.

■ He intends to make sure that any wrongdoing at the Department of Housing and Urban Development is thoroughly aired and remedied.

■ He criticized legislation passed by the Democratic-controlled Senate on child care, but said he hopes agreement can be worked out on the subject.

Bush opened his visit to the briefing room by declaring his support for a constitutional amendment that would negate last week's 5-4 Supreme Court decision. The court held that burning the American flag as a form of protest is protected by the Constitution.

Bush said it was important to protect the free-speech guarantees of protest, but he didn't want to extend that to the flag.

The court's decision provoked an emotional response in Congress and elsewhere, and Bush said protection of the flag will "in no way limit" constitutional rights. He said he favored a constitutional amendment over legislation because a law "cannot correct, in my view, the egregious offense of burning the American flag."

Bush also he does not want to see contacts with the Chinese government cut off, despite a continuing crackdown in Beijing against leaders of a pro-democracy movement.

"I'm going to do my level best to find a way to see improvement there that will help the Chinese people," he said. He said it was too bad the Chinese have decided against a visit by Peace Corps volunteers this fall.

"I believe that it was contact with the United States and others in the west that moved the process of economic reforms forward and hopefully someday will move the process of political reform forward."

Bush said he does not expect his stops in Poland and Hungary next month to be disruptive to the Communist world, and said he does not expect Soviet leaders to be "uptight" abnout his presence in Eastern Europe. He noted that Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev recently went to West Germany, and was very well received there.

"I think it's important that the United States show its interest in these countries," he said of the two Eastern European nations currently undergoing delicate transitions to greater political rights.

He also vowed his administration would get to the bottom of scandals at the Department of Housing and Urban Development. "We are going to do everything we can to clean up any cronyism and see that matters of that nature do not recur," he said.

Bush said he would not try to assign blame for the problems at HUD.

"Something might be happening in some department today that I know nothing about. We've got an enormous bureaucracy. We've got a tremendous bureaucracy that extends all around the world and there might be some corruption going," he said.

Baker sees success in Chinese movement

NEW YORK (AP) — Secretary of State James A. Baker III is taking a long-range view of the repression in China, saying the reform movement had passed a painful threshold on a path to ultimate success.

Baker

"In Asia, as in Europe, a new order is taking shape," Baker said Monday in a speech summarizing Bush Administration policy on Asia. "While the rites of passage will be painful — China proves that — it is an order full of promise and hope."

"We and some other nations have suspended business as usual," Baker said. "But we and the rest of the world must not let our revulsion at this repression blind us to pressure for reform."

Baker spoke for 25 minutes before 1,000 guests at a black-tie dinner of the Asia Society, a private group dedicated to improving American understanding of Asia.

He outlined a proposal for a new association of Asian countries to increase trade and investment and handle other regional issues ranging from cultural affairs to the environment.

Baker said he plans to seek input on the form such an organization might take during a trip to Asia that starts July 3.

Baker will stop in Tokyo to help plan multinational economic aid for the Philippines. In Brunei, he will attend the annual meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations, an economic organization of Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand.

Japan's new foreign minister, Hiroshi Mitsuzuka, who met with President Bush earlier Monday, spoke at the dinner before Baker.

He stressed the need for America "to maintain a strong political, economic and military presence and commitment to the region."

Baker, meanwhile, called for "a more creative sharing of global responsibilities," and praised Japan for shouldering 40 percent of the cost of keeping U.S. troops there. He said Japan soon will be the largest donor in the world of overseas development assistance.

Mitsuzuka also called China's "path toward isolation" regrettable and appealed to China's leaders to "govern in a spirit of reconciliation and restraint."

Last week, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, said that in view of the executions and other acts of repression in China, "the president must and should consider taking further steps, particularly in respect to trade."

But Baker defended U.S. policy, saying it would be a mistake to dismantle the relationship the United States built up over two decades with the Communist government in Beijing.

At the White House, President Bush told Mitsuzuka that the United States intended to "continue trying to convince the Chinese leadership that it is in their interest to keep reform moving forward," despite the recent bloodshed, said presidential spokesman Marlin Fitzwater.

Australia' Prime Minister Bob Hawke said that he, Bush and the leaders of Britain and France must walk "a very difficult dividing line" in supporting continued economic reform in China while denouncing the crackdown on political freedom.

Meanwhile, 11 Americans were detained Monday by Chinese officials in Kunming and charged with distributing religious tracts, said Adam Shub, a State Department spokesman.

The Americans were believed to be members of an evangelical Christian group, the Latter Rain Ministry of Litchfield, Ill.

A U.S. diplomat from the American consulate in Chengdu was investigating.

In the past, Americans who distributed religious tracts have been fined and asked to leave.

Deadline set for plan to pay families of airline tragedy

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — With relations improving between Iran and the Soviet Union, President Bush has ordered he be given a plan by July 7 for compensating the families of those killed when a missile from a U.S. warship downed an Iranian airliner over the Persian Gulf last July.

Two hundred ninety passengers and crew were killed on July 3, 1988, when a missile fired by the USS Vincennes accidently downed an Iranair flight in the mistaken belief that it was an attacking Iranian jet.

Natives of six countries were aboard the airliner, including India, Italy, Pakistan, Yugoslavia and the United Arab Emirates. Of the 290 victims, 250 were Iranians.

A high-ranking State Department official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said: "There's pressure from the president to arrive at a...at a dollar figure by July 7."

Bush reportedly is eager to compensate the families of victims of the crash and is leaning toward lump sum payments for families rather than taking the time the traditional "victim specific" approach for establishing payments would require.

Under the original approach to the issue of compensation that was devised by State Department legal adviser Abraham Sofaer, the value of each victim's life is determined by computing lost income, the value of his or her education, the number of dependents and the emotional anguish to relatives.

To date, U.S. officials have encountered difficulties in obtaining information for a victim specific approach to the compensation issue. While officials have been in contact with relief organizations in Iran, they have refused to deal with the Iranian government on the matter.

Asked if the death of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini or the recent warming in Iran's relations with Moscow were reasons for Bush's apparent impatience, the policymaker said: "Absolutely not."

"It's his (Bush's) determined moral conviction that this is the right thing to do and he promised to do this — he has his name behind this," the State Department official insisted.

Warren Nelson, an aid to the House Armed Services committee that has been discussing the compensation issue with Bush administration officials, said that Khomeini's death had caused some reappraisals on Capital Hill about the need to begin thawing relations with Iran.

Iranian Parliamentary Speaker Ali Akbar Hashemi Rafsanjani recently concluded a visit to Moscow during which the Soviet Union announced it would provide more than $6 billion in economic and military aid to Iran.

1970 survey says Americans disapprove of homosexuality

NEW YORK (AP) — A survey of more than 3,000 adults suggests that if there was a sexual revolution in the 1960s, most Americans missed it.

The survey, conducted in 1970 but published this week for the first time, found that Americans overwhelmingly disapproved of prostitution, extramarital sex and premarital sex and were fiercely opposed to homosexuality.

"The number of women jumping in and out of bed at random is exaggerated, I think, just as the number of homosexuals in the population has been exaggerated," one of the study's authors, Eugene F. Levitt, a psychologist at the Indiana University School of Medicine, said in a telephone interview Monday.

The survey, which could help researchers understand how AIDS spreads, was not released for so long because two of its authors fought over whose name should appear first on the title page, said Hubert J. O'Gorman, who edited the survey report to be published Thursday.

The survey's other authors were Albert D. Klassen of the University of North Dakota and Colin Williams of Indiana University-Purdue University at Indianapolis.

"This is the first major study that dealt with the morality aspect" of sexual behavior, said Levitt. "And, by the way, it shows how bitterly anti-homosexual the American people are."

More than two-thirds of respondents said homosexuals should not be allowed to be judges, teachers, ministers, doctors or government officials, Levitt said.

The study, "Sex and Morality in the U.S.," is the only survey of sex and morality taken in a representative sample of the U.S. population before AIDS, said Charles Turner, a sociologist and director of the committee on AIDS research at the National Academy of Sciences.

"It's unique data that cannot be reconstructed. It's of great historical interest," said Turner, who had prior access to the findings under a special arrangement with the Kinsey Institute for Research in Sex, Gender and Reproduction at Indiana University.

Among the findings:

■ Extramarital sex was described as "always wrong" or "almost always wrong" by 87 percent of respondents.

■ Homosexual relations among people who don't love each other were described the same way by 88 percent of the respondents. Even among individuals who love each other, homosexual sex was disapproved of by 79 percent of respondents.

■ Eighty-two percent disapproved of teen-age girls having premarital sex; 73 percent disapproved of teen-age boys having premarital sex.

■ Seventy percent disapproved of adult premarital sex by women, and 65 percent disapproved of adult premarital sex by men.

Fewer respondents disapproved of sexual acts if the partners loved each other, "leaving little doubt, therefore, that many respondents still cherished the ideal of love as a basis for sexual behavior," the authors said.

"These data will be indispensible to any attempt to describe the effects of AIDS on American sexual morality and behavior," O'Gorman of Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., said in an introduction to the survey.

The survey had been nearly forgotten when researchers at the Kinsey Institute began to search their files for information that could help explain the spread of AIDS, said June Reinisch, the institute's director.

Michigan prisoner protesting life sentence with lengthy hunger strike

MOUNT CLEMENS, Mich. (AP) — Rene Acuna is starving himself to protest a life prison sentence, but he's on a well-worn road that state corrections officials say will end in court-ordered force feeding.

"I am innocent and I don't eat," said Acuna, a Cuban immigrant who speaks broken English.

Acuna, 37, of Detroit, stopped eating — except for water and sugared coffee — March 3 after he was convicted of conspiracy and delivery of two pounds of cocaine. His sentence is life without parole.

Acuna once carried 180 pounds on his 5-foot, 5-inch frame. As of Friday, he had lost 64 pounds. His body swims in his prison blues. His cheeks are sunken.

"I see the food like a chair, like a sofa. The hunger? When you have a reason to support your spirit and your mind, you don't need anything more," he said in a telephone interview from the hospital at the State Prison of Southern Michigan, near Jackson.

But a series of court rulings across the nation have upheld the power of prison officials to force feed inmates on long-term hunger strikes. Corrections experts say no record is kept of how many hunger strikes occur each year in American prisons, but they believe long ones are rare.

Typically, courts decide that prison authorities' need to control their institutions outweighs prisoners' rights to privacy and control of their bodies, said Ed Koren, staff assistant for the National Prison Project of the American Civil Liberties Union.

"Obviously, they have an interest in controlling the institution and when a prisoner does something like this, he is embarrassing the heck out of them," he said.

Department of Corrections officials label Acuna's hunger strike a publicity stunt, and have doctors check him each day.

The department will go to court to get the authority to force feed him if his condition worsens, said Leo Lalonde, deputy director of the Department of Corrections, adding "that could be today. That could be tomorrow."

Michigan officials seek such authority about 10 times a year in order to safeguard the health of inmates who refuse food or medical care, said Chris DeWitt, spokesman for Attorney General Frank Kelley.

Acuna's lawyers say his determination poses an ethical dilemma.

"This is the stuff 'L.A. Law' is written about. What do you do when your client wants to die?" asked James Neuhard, director of the Michigan Appellate Defender's office, which will handle the appeal of Acuna's drug convictions.

"I told him if he dies from not eating, even if he is innocent, his appeal will be stopped right then," said Sandra Girard, director of Prison Legal Services of Michigan Inc.

In a New Hampshire case, inmate Joseph Calk decided to starve himself to death rather than serve a 180-year sentence.

Arpy Saunders, Calk's lawyer, said the New Hampshire Supreme Court allowed authorities to force-feed Calk to keep him alive so that he could face another charge.

Holocaust survivor stabbed

NEW YORK (AP) — Max Kowalski lived in the shadow of the swastika at Auschwitz, where the Nazis were killing 10,000 Jews a day by 1945. His father, mother, sister and brother perished, but he survived — until last weekend, when the shadow reappeared on the door of his boarding house room.

Police say it was the work of a fellow boarder, an apparently unbalanced man with whom Kowalski had quarreled in the past. He went to the man's room to complain, and a fight ensued. When it was over Kowalski, 72, was dead on the floor in a puddle of blood.

Ruben Martinez Zucarino, 36, was charged with second degree murder. Detectives said he stabbed the old man repeatedly with a fork and scissors, and hit him over the head with a religious statue. He admitted having drawn the swastika, they said.

"Max survived a monster," said Rabbi Israel Steinberg of the state's human rights office. "It's a shame he couldn't survive a bite from a mosquito."

Kowalski, a Polish Jew, came to the United States in 1949 and settled with many other Eastern European immigrants in the Brighton Beach section of Brooklyn. It was a simple but balanced life, built on rituals such as a chat with the card players under the trees in Asser Levy Park or a stroll along the boardwalk on the ocean.

Kowalski lived with his wife in an apartment complex, but rented a room in a house near the beach as a combination hangout and workshop. He was a handyman who seemed to do half his work for free.

"He fixed a closet in my house once, but I couldn't force the money on him," said Harry Zukoff, a friend. "He would do anything for you. I knew him 25 years — a beautiful man."

But a few months ago another room on the second floor of the boarding house was rented by Zucarino, with whom Kowalski quarreled over the condition of a kitchen area they shared. When Kowalski's son Lenny went to visit his father on Saturday morning, he found a swastika and scull-and-cross bones written on the door with blue ink.

Kowalski, whose arm still bore the five-digit identification number which the Nazis branded on him, had not noticed it, and he quietly cleaned the markings off his door. But as his son Robert later said, "If somebody put a swastika up and you had numbers on tatooed on your arm, you would be upset."

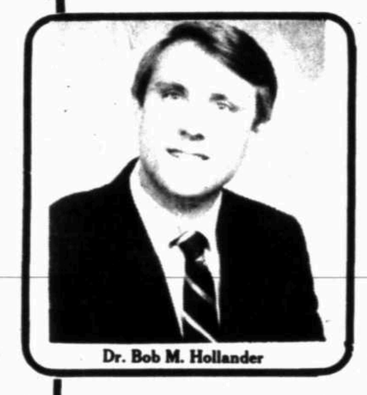

Kowalski's friends were struck by the irony: to survive Hitler, the greatest villain in history, only to be killed a man who they described as a garden variety anti-Semite.

Brighton Beach is still a fairly safe neighborhood, but there have been other incidents. These immigrants, who have seen the worst the Old World had to offer, and wonder if the new one will turn out any better.

"We came here to live, not to fight with people," said Eva Uszerowicz, another Auschwitz survivor with numbers on her arm.

State Department looking for Willie Star

WASHINGTON (AP) — Willie Star, the State Department wants to talk to you.

T.W. "Willie" Star is listed as the ambassador to the United States from Nauru, a tiny dot in the western Pacific, and is next in line to become dean of the diplomatic corps in Washington. That is, if he's still the ambassador and if he returns to the United States.

Star presented his credentials to President Carter on June 6, 1980, and then vanished. For a long time, he doubled as Nauru's ambassador to Australia and was living in Melbourne.

But while the State Department couldn't find Star, he was quietly going about his business as the consul-general in Guam, about 1,000 miles northwest of Nauru.

Star, reached by telephone from Hawaii, said he has been Nauru's consul-general there for about a year and seemed puzzled that the State Department was looking for him.

"I have to talk to my government," he said today, in response to questions.

But Star wasn't sure about his diplomatic status in the United States. Asked if he is still Nauru's ambassador to the United States, he answered, "I don't think so. I don't know. I'll have to talk to my government," and refused elaboration.

Star's presence on Guam, half a world away from Washington, explains why he's little known in the capital city.

"I've never met him, but I understand he's in his 40s and that he's been an ambassador for some time," said Fred Radewagen, a part-time consultant for the government of Nauru. "I'm told that he's articulate, gregarious and quite intelligent."

The State Department's manhunt began shortly after the retirement last month of Swedish Ambassador Wilhelm Wachtmeister, who was dean of the diplomatic corps for three years.

Under the rules of protocol, the largely ceremonial post goes to the foreign ambassador with the most seniority, based on the date when the envoy's credentials were presented to the U.S. president. To be eligible, an ambassador must maintain an official residence here.

That ruled out the diplomatic representative from Western Samoa, who was next in line but doesn't live in Washington. Next was the southwestern Pacific nation of Tuvalu, but its ambassador had already been transferred elsewhere.

Then came Cypriot Ambassador Andrew Jacovides, who had barely succeeded to the deanship when he was summoned home for a job in the foreign ministry. Next on the list was Turkey's Sukru Elekdag, but he's retiring.

So up popped the mystery name of T.W. Star, who was listed as the only ambassador of the steaming hot island of Nauru, the third smallest country in the world after Vatican City and Monaco and surely on nobody's list as a vacation paradise.

The fewer than 9,000 people who inhabit Nauru's eight square miles of coral just south of the Equator must endure an average 82 inches of rainfall annually. They are consoled, however, by the wealth of their phosphate mines, which produce $100 million a year in fertilizer exports.

The State Department sent a letter to Star via the U.S. ambassador in Australia earlier this month informing him of his opportunity to become dean of the diplomatic corps, provided he moves his residence to Washington. So far, Star has not replied.

If Star doesn't respond by the time Jacovides leaves Washington for Cyprus in early July, they said, the job probably will be offered to the next in line, Ambassador Jose Luis Fernandes Lopes of Cape Verde.

One State Department official, who spoke only on condition that he not be identified, said he has a hunch Star completed his Washington assignment some time ago and the Nauru government never bothered to name a successor.

Dinosaur skeleton found

OXON HILL, Md. (AP) — A free-lance paleontologist was explaining to a group of 7-year-olds what dinosaur bones looked like when he stumbled on the real thing.

The June 10 birthday party outing led by Peter Kranz to a housing construction site resulted in the discovery of what may be the most complete fossilized skeleton of the Dinosaur Age found in the Washington, D.C., area in a century, said Nicholas Hotton, a research curator of paleobiology at the Smithsonian Institution's Museum of Natural History.

Kranz said he was describing fossilized dinosaur bones to the children when he found a chunk of dark carbon. Other fragments were uncovered, then Kranz sent the young amateurs home and called the Smithsonian.

"I was nervous about handling such a large specimen," Kranz said. Hotton exposed more of the find and confirmed its significance.

The find included a portion of the head and skeleton of a 20-foot mosasaur, a large seagoing predatory lizard that thrived during the Late Cretaceous period about 70 million years ago, said Hotton, who has worked at the Smithsonian for 30 years, specializing in fossil reptiles.

For Kranz, the find is especially timely. His book, "Dinosaurs in Maryland," has just been published as part of an educational series by the Maryland Geological Survey.

NATION IN BRIEF

Firms fined for failure to report toxic chemicals

WASHINGTON (AP) — Scores of companies face nearly $4 million in fines because they did not report toxic chemical releases under a citizens' right-to-know law that took effect last year, says the Environmental Protection Agency.

The EPA announced its latest enforcement action Monday against companies that failed to comply with the law, saying that $1.65 million in fines were placed against 42 companies in 20 states.

The agency previously took action against 43 other companies.

EPA Administrator William K. Reilly said the agency will continue to pursue civil penalties against companies that do not comply with the disclosure law.

The penalties announced Monday ranged from $5,000 to a high of $262,000 against a California electronics firm, Diceon Electronics, which allegedly failed to report toxic chemical releases at facilities in Irvine and Chatsworth, Calif.

The second highest fine was against International Extrusion Corp., Waxalachie, Texas, which was assessed a $101,000 penalty.

Bennett defends staff

WASHINGTON (AP) — Drug czar William J. Bennett rejects criticism that he has hired people inexperienced with drug issues, saying his assistants understand the problem and what they don't know, he finds out from his "kitchen cabinet."

"There's plenty of experience," Bennett said in an interview. "There isn't anybody who knows all of it. All the people here know various pieces. We call on our colleagues in the government all the time, certainly on the Hill too."

He can call on other experts to fill in some of the gaps, said Bennett, director of the Office of National Drug Control Policy.

"Calling in the experts is fine," he said. "You don't have to have everybody on staff. I've been given a fairly small staff and I have to make it travel a long way."

Rep. Lawrence J. Smith, D-Fla., chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee's Task Force on International Narcotics, and New York City's chief narcotics officer said in interviews that Bennett will have difficulty drawing up a national drug strategy, due in September, with his current staff.

Greenspan hospitalized

WASHINGTON (AP) — Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan was hospitalized overnight for treatment of heat exhaustion, a Fed spokesman reported today.

"He's fine now and expected to be discharged this morning," the spokesman said. He said heart problems originally were suspected, but the diagnosis later was changed to heat exhaustion.

The spokesman said Greenspan had played tennis in Monday's 90-plus degree temperature and then attended a dinner at the home of Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher, where he became ill.

Greenspan was rushed to Georgetown University Hospital.

Bush urged to push treaty

WASHINGTON (AP) — Five former secretaries of state and defense urged the Bush administration to push for a nuclear weapons reduction treaty with the Soviet Union, but warned the U.S. does not know enough about Kremlin intentions "to justify extraordinary political or economic concessions."

A report released Monday and signed by the five secretaries and six other ex-officials also counseled President Bush to show restraint on developing space-based defenses.

The report concluded Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev is more inclined than any of his predecessors to reach accords with the United States that further Western interests.

But it added that U.S. knowledge of current and future Kremlin policy was "too problematical to justify extraordinary political or economic concessions which we would otherwise not consider."

Chinese executions rebuff to protests

In what seemed a direct rebuff to worldwide protests, the Chinese government has carried out its executions of pro-democracy demonstrators. It has been only weeks since the tanks rolled into Tiananmen Square, yet dozens more dissidents already have been sentenced to die. Some 1,500 protesters reportedly have been arrested. A mass trial staged in Jinan and attended by 10,000 people signaled the kind of swift "justice" the regime is intent upon. It's a horrifying spectacle.

But while that might explain the calls in this country for harsher sanctions against the Chinese government, it does not make them wise. President Bush's measured steps in the face of the Chinese leaders' brutality and intransigence, if not viscerally satisfying, are more likely than sterner measures to be effective.

The president first cut off American military contacts and support, and the other day tightened the screws by canceling Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher's scheduled trip to China in July and other high-level economic contacts. He also pledged to try to postpone further consideration of loans to China by the World Bank and other such organizations.

All of that seriously hurts the Beijing regime. And the very specific directness of Bush's moves makes the American message unmistakably clear: These are the things China can regain by equally unmistakable moves toward liberalization on its own part. The Bush approach bolsters and goads the moderates in the ongoing Chinese power struggle, rather than cutting off all of China indiscriminately.

It's disappointing that this tactic has not yet produced any noticeable positive results, but that does not mean the policy itself is wrong. Its sights are set, as they must be, for the longer run. If Americans were too blindly enthusiastic about the "new" China before the slaughter in Tiananmen Square, that does not make it any more sensible to respond now with an equally shortsighted and impetuous correction.

One can't help being outraged and horrified at what a few old men in China are doing to their own young. Anger, however, is not a foreign policy.

Another View:

What's in a name?

American schoolchildren often show abysmal ignorance of geography. But even their elders may be hard pressed to name the capital of the Union of Myanmar. The answer, as of last week, is Yangon.

Yangon is better known as Rangoon, and Myanmar as Burma. The country's new name, decreed last week by its military dictatorship, has been chosen to embrace all its peoples, not just the Burmese, after whom the British colonizers named the country.

Such new names may or may not stick. Cambodia stayed Cambodia, despite an official preference for Kampuchea. Saigon is now firmly Ho Chi Minh City.

Peking — or was it Peiping? — became Beijing, and Szechwan became Sichuan after the Chinese Government adopted the pinyin system of romanizing Chinese names. It became impractical for others to convert Chinese names, often obscure, into the old Wade-Giles terms.

"They can't change the name of a country," Cecil Rhodes once remarked, believing his name would live forever in Rhodesia. But those who repudiated the colonial yoke often rejected the names they had been saddled with, too.

When the former French colony of Upper Volta changed its name in 1984 to Burkina Faso — "The Land of Upright Men" — its wishes were generally observed.

Similarly, Northern and Southern Rhodesia, South-West Africa, Nyasaland and Ceylon have all disappeared, replaced by Zambia, Zimbabwe, Namibia, Malawi and Sri Lanka. The retired names follow into history the Holy Roman Empire, Byzantium, Bactria and Babylonia.

The names of countries often shift with changes in power. It's the names of rivers that attain longevity. Those that drain into the Black Sea — the Don, the Donets, the Dnieper and the Dniester — were named two or three thousand years ago by ancient Iranian-speaking peoples with their word for river, "danu." The Celts indelibly affixed their related word, "danuvius," to the Danube.

Long after the Union of Myanmar is dissolved and Burkina Faso falls prone before the not-so-upright, the Irrawaddy, the Volta, the Danube and the Don will flow on, unchanged, in maps and memory, time and terrain.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Tuesday, June 27, the 178th day of 1989. There are 187 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On June 27, 1950, President Harry S. Truman ordered the Air Force and Navy into the Korean conflict following a call from the U.N. Security Council for member nations to help South Korea repel an invasion by North Korea.

On this date:

In 1844, Mormon leader Joseph Smith was killed by a mob in Carthage, Ill.

In 1847, New York and Boston were linked by telegraph wires.

In 1880, author-lecturer Helen Keller, who lived most of her life without sight or hearing, was born in Tuscumbia, Ala.

In 1942, the FBI announced the capture of eight Nazi saboteurs who had been put ashore from a submarine on New York's Long Island.

In 1957, more than 500 people were killed when Hurricane Audrey slammed through coastal Louisiana and Texas.

In 1963, President John F. Kennedy spent his first full day in Ireland, the land of his ancestors.

In 1973, former White House counsel John W. Dean told the Senate Watergate Committee about the existence of an "enemies list" kept by the White House.

In 1977, in a 5-4 decision, the U.S. Supreme Court struck down state laws and bar association rules that had prohibited lawyers from advertising the fees they charge for routine services.

In 1982, the space shuttle Columbia roared off the launch pad at Cape Canaveral, Fla., carrying astronauts Thomas K. Mattingly and Henry W. Hartsfield Jr., with the shuttle's first military and commercial payloads.

In 1983, balloonists Maxie Anderson and Don Ida were killed during a race when their helium-filled balloon crashed in a West German forest.

In 1986, the International Court of Justice at The Hague ruled that the United States had broken international law and violated the sovereignty of Nicaragua by aiding the contras.

Ten years ago: In a victory for advocates of affirmative action programs, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled employers could voluntarily give minority workers special treatment in hiring, training and promotion.

Five years ago: The U.S. Supreme Court ended the National Collegiate Athletic Association's monopoly on controlling college football telecasts, ruling such control violated antitrust law.

One year ago: Mike Tyson retained the undisputed heavyweight crown as he knocked out Michael Spinks 91 seconds into the first round of a championship fight in Atlantic City, N.J. Fifty-seven people were killed in the collision of two trains in Paris.

Today's birthdays: "Captain Kangaroo," Bob Keeshan, is 62. Opera singer Anna Moffo is 55.

EPA staffers want battle with fluoride

WASHINGTON — William Reilly looks like the new white knight on the block fighting to reform his troubled kingdom, the Environmental Protection Agency. Now the workers in that kingdom want him to start with one of their biggest foes — fluoride.

Jack Anderson

Dedicated EPA staffers have tried for years to stop the EPA management from raising the maximum allowable levels of fluoride that cities can put in their drinking water. The official EPA line has been to allow fluoridation, which proponents say helps prevent tooth decay. But many of the rank-and-file employees think fluoride is dangerous, and they don't like being a part of any cavalier EPA policy.

In 1986, the EPA employees' union even tried to join in an environmental lawsuit against the EPA over the fluoride policy, but the judge refused to accept the union as a party to the suit, which was later thrown out of court.

Now, the union sees a possible new champion of its cause in Reilly, the first career environmentalist ever to head the EPA. The union recently wrote to Reilly asking him to stop the EPA's support for fluoride until better scientific studies are done on the health effects.

The fluoride issue has not had a minute of peace since 1945, when Grand Rapids, Mich., became the first city to fluoridate its drinking water. Fluoride has been called everything from the miracle cure for cavities to a communist plot. Today, 50 percent of Americans have fluoride in their water, and there is still no national concensus about whether it's a good idea.

Shelves of studies have asked the question, does fluoride prevent tooth decay? The resounding answer is, maybe. An equal number of studies have asked the questions, does fluoride cripple the bones, discolor the teeth and cause birth defects and cancer? The resounding answer has been, who knows?

Nowhere is the debate more heated than within the ranks of the EPA. The agency sets maximum allowable fluoride limits for drinking water, and it is up to individual cities to decide if they want any fluoride at all. The EPA employees' union thinks that when the EPA set the standard at 4 parts per million, in 1986, volumes of troubling evidence were ignored.

For instance, the EPA decided the possibility of dental fluorosis — pitting and discoloration of teeth — was a cosmetic problem instead of a health hazard and therefore not a worry for the EPA. The union also took the EPA to task, claiming the agency ignored the potential for bone deterioration in people who get large doses of fluoride because they drink a lot of water.

The fluoride controversy is just one millstone around the neck of an EPA workforce that has been demoralized by the pro-polluter policies of the Reagan administration.

The union has come to assume that the EPA will only react to environmental problems after the fact instead of trying to prevent them from happening.

Reilly has already given the employees reason to hope. He has gone on the offensive against polluters and brought a fresh tone of aggressiveness to the agency. But one of his toughest jobs may be to salvage the morale within the agency.

HEADS IN THE SAND — Politicians like to postpone unpleasant issues until the next person's term. For example, Congress and the Reagan administration ignored warnings that the savings and loan industry was in deep trouble, and now a massive bailout is needed.

The politicians have also ignored warnings that U.S. power-generating facilities could not keep up with future demand. But solutions were postponed. In some regions people are already beginning to suffer the consequences. They can expect brownouts this summer to conserve energy. Voltage reductions can be expected in the nation's capital and in the surrounding states of Maryland and Virginia. There are likely to be power shortages too in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky and West Virginia.

Meanwhile, it will take years to finance and construct the new power plants that are needed today.

CHARLEY REESE

Right to arms only guard against tyranny

We saw in Beijing what James Madison and other American revolutionaries hoped to prevent ever happening in the United States — unarmed civilians being shot down by their own country's standing army.

Charley Reese

There is a concerted move today to weaken or in effect do away with the Second Amendment, which guarantees the right of INDIVIDUAL Americans to keep and bear arms. We should oppose it as strenuously.

Shyster lawyers and propagandists will tell you that the Second Amendment was intended only to provide arms for the National Guard and Army reserve. That's stuff and nonsense. Neither of those existed at the time and both, unlike the militia, are today federal organizations.

Besides, the historical record is crystal clear that the amendment applied to individual Americans, that it was to be the means by which the people could protect themselves should the government turn tyrannical.

Let's go to the source:

James Madison said: Americans have the right and advantage of being armed — unlike the citizens of other countries whose governments are afraid to trust the people with arms.

Samuel Adams said: The Constitution shall never be construed ... to prevent the people of the United States who are peaceable citizens from keeping their own arms.

Thomas Jefferson: No free man shall ever be debarred the use of arms. The strongest reason for the people to retain the right to keep and bear arms is, as a last resort, to protect themselves against tyranny in government.

Of course, the idea that Americans might have to fight in their own streets against their own government strikes us today as absurd and impossible. That's because we are victims of a common enough human fallacy — the belief that if something has never happened to us before, it never will. Such optimism is unjustified by history. The Chinese students didn't think their own army would fire on them.

The men who made our Revolution were more realistic. At the very time of the victory over England, at the very time of greatest national enthusiasm for the new government, at the very time they themselves controlled the government, they recognized that sometime in the future this new government might turn tyrannical and that therefore, just as they took pains to spell out the basic political rights — assembly, speech, petition, and press — they also spelled out the right to private arms.

Here again is another principle modern Americans have difficulty in grasping because our experience for the past 120 years has been domestic peace. That principle is the inseparability of rights and the power to enforce them.

Without the means to enforce them, rights do not exist. There is no right to life if you lack the means to prevent someone from killing you. There is no right to trial by jury if you cannot prevent the mob from lynching you. There is no right against search and seizure if you lack the power to prevent someone from kicking down your door.

Rights are an intellectual concept which can only be realized in flesh and blood if there exists the physical power to enforce them. Our forefathers believed that people had rights and therefore of necessity must have the means to protect them. To have denied private arms would have been a contradiction of the Declaration of Independence.

A cruise liner which said they had never had a ship sink so therefore they do not carry lifeboats would never get my business. A government which said it had never censored speech and didn't intend to would not convince me to repeal the First Amendment.

So, too, just because we have not had the experience and cannot foresee a need, we should not abandon a right to private arms.

PEGGY ROBERSON

Kamasaki's Asian, but interests are Hispanic

WASHINGTON — Charles Kamasaki says the best part about being a Japanese-American lobbyist for Hispanic causes is that he stands out in the crowd.

Peggy Roberson

Kamasaki, 34, who absorbed Hispanic culture and became proficient in the Spanish language while growing up in Mexico and in the Texas border town of Weslaco, is policy director of the National Council of La Raza, one of the largest of the Hispanic advocacy groups.

He accepts without rancor the fact that he is never going to be president of La Raza. "I think that's the one place that being Hispanic is a job requirement," he said in an interview last week.

"That is a plus in some ways. Sometimes the internal politics of succession can be a real problem, but in my case it isn't an issue at all," Kamasaki said.

Kamasaki is second in command at La Raza to another Texan, Raul Yzaguirre of San Juan. They manage a staff of 50. (La Raza means "the race" and refers to the Hispanic people.)

Kamasaki gets high marks from others working for civil rights and better opportunities for Hispanics. Andrew Hernandez, executive director of the Southwest Voter Registration Project in San Antonio, describes him as "one of the smartest guys in Washington" and "an important player in Hispanic policy at the national level."

Kamasaki's route took several turns before he arrived in La Raza's national office in 1982.

After graduating from Weslaco High School, he studied two years at Baylor University then transferred to Pan American University in Edinburg, another small Texas town, where he earned a degree in public administration.

Intending to become a city manager, Kamasaki worked for the small town of Edcouch (named for pioneer settler Ed Couch) to develop a housing project. There, he met La Raza staffers working in community development and accepted their offer of an internship in the organization's Edinburg office.

Through "a series of happy accidents, I ended up running the office," he said. "I viewed it as temporary, a good way to get experience in working with community groups.

"But the Washington people came down and said they needed someone who knows housing and community development. I said I would come for a year and I've been here ever since."

Kamasaki, the son of a research scientist for the U.S. Department of Agriculture and a schoolteacher, was born in Hawaii. When Charles and his younger brother Alan were in elementary school, the department sent their father to Mexico to help try to avert an invasion of fruit flies into the United States. The effort was not a total success: fruit flies did enter California and Arizona.

In 1970, Kamasaki's father was assigned to work in Weslaco, the heart of the rich South Texas agricultural area, where 85 percent of the town's 30,000 people were of Mexican origin.

Job opportunities were few. "When I was growing up, if you didn't know somebody to help you get a sit-down job, you worked in the fields. I worked in the packing sheds and picked onions," Kamasaki said. His friends there called him "Carlitos" or "Carloso."

While he identifies with the Mexican-American community, Kamasaki said he doesn't really think of himself as Hispanic. "I'm reminded fairly often that I am not," he said, smiling.

To remain in touch with his own roots, he pays dues to the Japanese American Citizens League but rarely socializes in the Asian community. "I don't have much time to socialize anywhere," said Kamasaki.

He said his mother, who resumed teaching in Weslaco public schools last year after his father died, is hinting that he should get married. She also nags his brother Alan, who is city manager of the South Texas city of Mercedes, who is not married either, Kamasaki added.

Priority issues this year for the La Raza Washington office include improving education for Hispanics and reauthorization of the Job Training Partnership Act (JTPA).

"Hispanics are under-represented in all programs," said Kamasaki.

Last year La Raza, which boasts 110 community offices in 32 states, won approval for the first adult education program providing services to those with limited knowledge of English. "We're trying to keep that alive through a new appropriation," Kamasaki said.

On JPTA, Kamasaki noted that the program, passed in 1982, was coauthored by Vice President Dan Quayle. "It should be, but isn't, training disadvantaged people to take jobs that will be increasingly technical," Kamasaki said.

When Congress gets around to revising the laws that govern legal immigration, La Raza will argue for legislation that "does not pit one group of immigrants against another," he said.

La Raza tried unsuccessfully to derail the 1986 immigration law that sought to curb illegal immigration by imposing sanctions on employers who hired undocumented workers. Hispanic leaders insisted that it would result in job discrimination against Hispanic Americans.

Kamasaki said La Raza does not favor "open borders" and in fact urges stricter enforcement of immigration laws as "more humane" than allowing illegals to enter the country and develop relationships and then be ousted.

But, he says, La Raza was correct in its predictions about the effects of the new law. "It has resulted in job discrimination," he said.

RELIGION

Despite waning drama, 'God's smuggler' keeps organization working

NEW YORK (AP) — Slipping bits of religion into countries that oppose it used to be high adventure but it has mellowed, says a practitioner. Still, he adds, many barriers remain.

Hawley

The Rev. Robert K. Hawley, director of "Open Doors, USA," says that while some of the suspense and drama of its operations have waned, the organization continues tackling the stiffest restraints on faith.

"We go to the most restricted of restricted countries," seeking to bolster religious life, he said in an interview. "We do it officially if we can. If we can't, we do it unofficially.

"We always obey the government unless it's contrary to the Gospel."

He heads the U.S. branch of an interdenominational, international organization with an $11 million annual budget, a staff of 250, headquarters in the Netherlands and operations in 30 countries.

The U.S. branch, with offices in Santa Ana, Calif., has a staff of 36, along with hundreds of volunteers spending time in aided areas. Hawley, 40, is a Texas-born Baptist clergymen who previously led California congregations.

The organization was founded in 1955 by a Dutch Reformed minister, Brother Andrews, its president, with the objective of supplying Bibles and other religious materials in areas of religious oppression.

His widely sold book, "God's Smuggler," put a picturesque stamp on the organization — the undercover activities, secret missions and meetings, clandestine rendezvous — and some of that aura lingers, though tamer now.

"This kind of ministry has matured," he said. "The world generally has recognized religious restrictions as a human rights issue."

However, code names still are given to various undertakings, such as "Project Philip," by which Western volunteers now are providing theological training in homes in Soviet-bloc countries to equip ministers.

Hawley said 1,800 students now are involved, and 250 have become pastors.

He said circumventing regulations still is necessary in some cases, even in the thawing communism of China. Although Bibles now printed there go to registered church members, he said "house" Christians are left out.

"To buy a Bible, you usually have to show you are a member of a registered church," he said. In this category are about nine million Protestants and Catholics, but an estimated 50 million others worship in homes.

In trying to hand-carry Bibles to the "house" Christians last year, he said a batch of 200 in his bags were confiscated by customs agents, who cited a law forbidding entry of outside religious material.

"When they say they're open now, it's only what they define as open," he said. "We have about 500 couriers going into China every year. Many get caught. But many don't. We call it a miracle of God."

He said Chinese contacts are alerted in advance, with meeting places arranged to begin the distribution process. Rejecting criticism by some church officials that such smuggling worsens conditions for believers, he said:

"They encourage it, they encourage us," he said. "We as a ministry never take materials into a country unless specifically requested by Christians there. Our job is not to jeopardize but help them."

Nevertheless, he said, the situation has eased in most communist areas, and much work that once was done covertly now is carried on in the open, with official approval.

He has just returned from a two-week trip to the Soviet Union, and said he is "cautiously optimistic" about its expanding religious vitality. "There is more freedom," he said.

His organization now has a government-approved project under way to ship a million New Testaments, with Psalms, to Russian Orthodox Christians this year, the first batch of 100,000 delivered while he was there.

He said various groups, including the United Bible Societies, have shipped more than a million Bibles to the Soviet in the last two years with official permission.

More than 400 new churches opened there last year.

Dispute flares over Dead Sea Scrolls

NEW YORK (AP) — A smouldering controversy among Bible scholars has burst into the open over the long delay in publishing the rest of the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Although the first-century manuscripts were found 42 years ago, fewer than half has been published, and some researchers in ancient religious history say they're fed up with waiting.

"It's disgraceful," said historian Morton Smith of Columbia University, charging that the scrolls editors have "sat on the material for years," keeping it from other scholars and the public.

The scrolls contain portions of the Old Testament far older than any previously available. It also contains documents about Jewish life during the early days of Christianity.

Much of the material has remained only in the hands of a small team of scholars deciphering it.

David Noel Freedman, professor of biblical studies at the University of Michigan, said 40 years is "much too long to keep the material from public scrutiny."

Only the scroll scholars "and their friends know what is going on," he said in a telephone interview. "They've kept that work in the dark and a whole generation has gone by. It's long past time for some changes."

Smith said the inaccessbility has caused him to postpone research. "I've just been disgusted," he said.

"This is an important body of material for understanding both intellectual and religious history," he said. "For it to be kept secret from other scholars and general knowledge, I think is simply outrageous."

Renewed complaints about the matter were published in the current issue of the bimonthly, Biblical Archaeology Review, which headlined an editorial, "Dead Sea Scrolls Scandal."

Harvard University's John Strugnell, who heads the scroll team of about 20 scholars, said critics are unaware of the complexities of the work. He also said the work is being speeded up.

"They are ignorant of a project like this," he said in a telephone interview from Jerusalem. "They don't know the kind of material we're working with. We must deal always with small fragments that must be put together."

He acknowledged the work had gone too slowly for the first 20 years, mainly because of a lack of financing. Only three volumes of scrolls were put out during that period, but nine volumes have been produced since 1976.

"We are producing," he said. "It's slow business. But we're getting faster. An immense amount of work is being done."

Freedman, editor of a 30-volume Anchor series being publish by Doubleday on books of the Bible, said that within a year or two after such manuscripts are found, photographic slides should be available to any scholar.

"For a single person to retain access to these materials is simply unacceptable," he said.

The scrolls contain portions of every book of the Old Testament and are about 1,000 years older than any previously available biblical manuscripts, including the complete book of Isaiah and much of Lamentations.

There also are documents of the Qumron community of ascetics known as the Essenes, including a still unpublished, much-awaited letter from the head of the community, the Teacher of Righteousness, to Jerusalem's high priest.

"We hope to have that out by the end of the year," Strugnell said. "That's a top priority."

Leader of turmoil-ridden council gives resignation

NEW YORK (AP) — The head of the National Council of Churches is resigning amid turmoil over the future of the country's largest ecumenical organization, church sources said.

The Rev. Arie R. Brouwer, who came close to being dismissed as general secreatary of the council a month ago, was scheduled to announce his decision at a news conference today, according to the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Brouwer, 53, a Reformed Church in America clergyman has been general secretary of the council since 1985. The council includes most of the major Protestant and Eastern Orthodox churches in the country.

Speculation about his departure had circulated since the council's governing board at a mid-May meeting in Lexington, Ky., voted 57-57 on a motion to oust him.

There were 12 abstentions, some claiming full details of the interchurch conflict had never been made public. Since the vote, pressures for Brouwer to step down continued.

"I will be in prayer and fasting over the days and weeks to come," Brouwer said after the vote.

The council has been enmeshed in controversy for about three years because of problems of departmental accountability and authority, as well as financial difficulties.

A furor developed in mid-1988 when the service's executive, the Rev. J. Richard Butler, resigned because of conflict with Brouwer over integrating the service more closely with other council units.

As a result of the internal stress, general recommedations of a reorganizational committee were approved at the Lexington meeting, consolidating the council's 11 units into four.

Measures that would give member denominations more direct oversight of the council units were part of the plan, specifics of which were to be worked out in September.

Vatican rejects appeal to keep churches open

DETROIT (AP) — The Vatican has turned down an appeal by 14 Roman Catholic churches of an archdiocesan order to close by July 1, and five parishes that had planned to defy Cardinal Edmund Szoka were reconsidering their opposition.

The Vatican's Sacred Congregation for the Clergy rejected the 14 appeals filed in March as lacking foundation in law and fact, archdiocese spokesman Jay Berman said Monday. The archdiocese has announced plans to close 30 churches due to declining membership.

"There is a real discouragement among the people here that Rome didn't care about the injustices that have happened," Sister Jolene Van Handel said. Van Handel is coordinator of the Detroit Catholic Pastoral Alliance, a coalition of priests and laypeople opposed to Szoka's plan.

Nine parishes had said they would remain open, but some opposition eroded after a series of private weekend meetings between priests and Szoka, who ordered the closings in January after two committees made up of church and civic leaders recommended the plan.

Two parishes that had planned to defy the cardinal said they now expect to accept the order, and close by Friday. The pastor of a third congregation urged his parishioners to drop their opposition.

Another pastor said Monday he will try to convince his members to close and a fifth parish said it now was undecided.

Wayne County Circuit Court Judge James Hathaway is scheduled to consider a request by 18 parishes for an injunction against the closings at a hearing Wednesday.

Webb named head of Junior Achievement

By ED TODD

Norma Webb, Midland civic leader and former school teacher, has been appointed executive director of the youth-oriented Junior Achievement of Midland.

"We are going through some exciting changes, revising our perspective and heading in new directions," Ray Poage, JA chairman, said in announcing Mrs. Webb's appointment.

Mrs. Webb is former interim director of JA, a youth-based business program that is keyed to practical applications of the free-enterprise system.

Junior Achievement is the nation's largest and oldest organization which solely serves "to wake up the entrepreneurial spirit" in young people.

"We want to give children the skills that will allow them to make their dreams come true," Mrs. Webb said.

Through computerized mock companies, students in theory buy shares in companies which they organize, keep records, and operate their business — for profit or loss — under the supply-demand concept.

JA was founded in Springfield, Mass., in 1919 by Horace A. Moses, a paper manufacturer, and was established in Midland in the early 1950s.

The JA program, Mrs. Webb said, is designed to combat apathy, to promote democracy and to energize America's free-enterprise system.

Norma Webb

"We tend to become complacent about democracy and our free-enterprise system until we are jolted into realizing most young people in the world do not have the opportunities that our American youth experience," Mrs. Webb said. "The events in China have made me even more appreciative of the values Junior Achievement offers to students."

Mrs. Webb's interest in the JA educational program was born out of her interest in academics. Mrs. Webb, a former Dallas school teacher, holds a bachelor's degree in art and home economics from Texas Tech University and the master's degree in education from The University of Texas of the Permian Basin.

During her five-month period as JA interim director, Mrs. Webb achieved several of her JA goals, which include a record amount in funds raised for the JA school programs.

"The continued support of businesses, individuals and foundations has been vital to our success," she said.

And the JA board of directors is "excited by the new directions and momentum Norma has given to JA," said Darlene Gifford, JA vice president for community relations.

Mrs. Webb, a 20-year resident of Midland, formerly was executive director of the Arts Assembly of Midland and formerly directed Midland College's Senior Services. She recently served as vice president-secretary on the JA board of directors.

Assisting Mrs. Webb in JA's reorganization is Jessica Sehres, a recent business-marketing graduate of Barry University in Miami Shores, Fla.

"Sehres is invaluable as an administrative assistant, as we implement a fresher, more creative focus," Mrs. Webb said.

JA's administrative office is headquartered in donated space in the First City Center in downtown Midland. In turn, the office use, which is donated by Rubloff Property Management and Aetna Life & Casualty Company, allows JA to lease its building to a church.

"Now that we have shifted away from night programs, it was not cost-effective to operate from the large (JA) building," Mrs. Webb said.

As JA executive director, Mrs. Webb coordinates the partnership between the Midland business community and the public and private schools.

"The alliance between business and schools consistently pays high dividends to our community through better future employees, wiser consumers and more informed voters," Mrs. Webb said.

Dr. Joseph Baressi, superintendent of the Midland Independent School District, noted that JA and MISD have been "partners in training future leaders and professionals.

"Each year, thousands of students are taught about the American free-enterprise system through this partnership," Baressi said.

In the past school year, more than 2,000 Midland students and more than 100 volunteers participated in JA programs. Those programs include Business Basics, an introductory course to business concepts for elementary-school children; Project Business, an advanced program on the free-enterprise system for older students, and Applied Economics, a program in which high-school seniors establish companies on computers and on computers experience how their business decisions interact within the marketplace.

Business leaders volunteer as JA consultants, who employ their creativity and business knowledge in working with teachers to give insight into the business community.

"Junior Achievement," said former JA consultant Darlene Gifford, "can help to build a better business system with informed, trained, enthusiastic young people."

JA guided by people from local businesses

From Staff Reports

The Junior Achievement of Midland is guided by a group of businessmen and businesswoman who are concerned about youth's understanding of the free-enterprise concept and the survival of the system that is identified with "the American Dream" and America's way of doing business, according to supporters of the group.

The JA board of directors is guided by JA Chairman of the Board Ray Poage of KPMG Peat, Marwick, Main and by JA President Charles A. Spence, publisher of the Reporter-Telegram.

JA board vice presidents include JA President-elect Scott Matthews of Compressor Systems Inc.; Mike Talley of First City, Texas-Midland; Ron Dameron of Dameron Petroleum Corp, and Darlene Gifford of Southwestern Bell Telephone Company.

JA's governing body, which is responsible for the development, operation and policies of youth-directed business programs, includes Jim Alsup of Lynch, Chappell, Allday & Alsup Law Firm; Ernie Barbee of TU Electric; Dr. Joesph Baressi of the Midland Independent School District; Spencer Beal of BTA Oil Producers; Bill Berry of Phillips Petroleum;

Also, Alan Byars of Olney Savings & Loan Association; Glenn Culhane of Texas Instruments; John Foster of KMID-TV; Henry Hammons of Chevron USA; Cheri Hensley of Oakwood Medical Center; Max Jensen of Schlumberger Well Services; Roger Johnston of Grand Banks Energy; Murphy Markham IV of NCNB-Texas; Mark Mosley of Conoco Inc.;

Commissioners extend life of drug task force

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

Midland County commissioners Monday renewed their support for a 17-county undercover drug task force by passing a resolution to extend the program into 1990.

Tom Finley, interim director and the man who succeeded founding Commander Art Van Doren, said the resolution was required if the unit hoped to receive its' share of federal funding next year.

"We got the budget in on time this year," said Finley, a West Texas native and former Department of Public Safety narcotics officer. "So far, it's going real well."

Finley, who took control of the task force last month after Van Doren resigned to become commander of the Fort Worth-based Tarrant County Narcotics Control Program, said the area unit has requested about $800,000 in funding for next year's operations, a $280,000 increase over this year.

By signing the resolution, Midland commissioners agreed to continue to sponsor the unit and oversee its annual budget and operational matters.

The Midland-based task force is the largest regional unit of its kind in the country, and covers an area from Loving, Reeves and Pecos counties, east through the Midland-Odessa area to Howard County, and north to Dawson and Gaines counties.

The effort began on July 9, 1987, when 30 officers representing four different law enforcement agencies met in Midland. Prior to that meeting, Midland County District Attorney Al Schorre, a member of the governor's criminal justice task force, attended hearings in El Paso, Corpus Christi and Arlington.

From the hearings, Schorre found that multi-county task forces would have the best chance to share the $9.5 million in federal subsidies allocated to Texas for anti-drug efforts.

The initial proposal, drafted by Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter, requested $900,000 to hire eight investigators. The final proposal for 1988 was $30,000 less than that.

In December 1988, the task force was awarded $520,000 and began operations two months later.

In other action Monday, commissioners:

- Authorized funding for a new sheriff's department dispatcher.
- Authorized the county auditor to seek bids for a jail physician services.
- Tabled the presentation of a resolution on the Enterprise Zone.
- Opened bids on total mechanical equipment maintenance services, but tabled action to evaluate the proposals.
- Accepted the appointment of a horticulturist for the Midland County Extension Service.

Family attracts attention in 'Ghostbusters' hearse

SILSBEE (AP) — Curly Calloway always wanted a hearse, and in 1986, he found one at a municipal auction in Bryan.

A funeral home had donated it to the fire department, which transformed it into an ambulance, complete with red flashing lights. The department used it for years until it purchased newer models and put the old ambulance on the auction block.

When Curly drove the '66 Buick Wildcat home, neighborhood children followed him down the street, yelling "Ghostbusters!" And that's how Curly's car got its name. Now that the movie "Ghostbusters II" has been released, Curly and his 15-year-old son, Luther, are sprucing up the vehicle to drive to see the show.

Three years ago when the car acquired its name, he painted the Ghostbuster logo on the back and sides and trimmed it in red fluorescent paint. He took a small metal horse from a rodeo trophy and made it into a hood ornament. Oversize cloth dice hang from the windows. Why would anyone drive such a monstrosity around?

"You never meet a stranger when you're in this thing (decorated hearse)...I had a friend of mine tell me, 'you can't do anything now and get away with it,' That's OK, it'll keep me honest."

— Curly Calloway

"You never meet a stranger when you're in this thing," he says with a smile. And from his accounts, it would seem that way.

When he first drove it into town, a policeman stopped him and asked if he would sell him the flashing lights on the top of the car, he says. Full of awe, a little boy walked up to him in a store and said, "Are you a real ghostbuster?" Another little boy "just had to come up and touch me," Curly said.

He drove it to last year's Rainbow Family gathering in Zavalla, and people flocked around the car.

Another policeman stopped him on his way to Diboll, and when the officer walked up to the car, he told Curly, "You're doing all right — I just wanted to look at your car."

And everywhere, people just have to take his picture — even if they're driving alongside him on the highway.

"I had a friend of mine tell me, 'you can't do anything now and get away with it,'" Curly says with a laugh. "That's OK, it'll keep me honest."

At first, his wife Linda was embarrassed riding around in the car, she says, but she soon started enjoying the attention the car attracts.

And Luther can't wait to get his driver's license so he can drive it, too. Right now, the car needs a few repairs, which the self-employed mechanic never seems to have time for. It needs a new ball bearing, and "it's been smoking almost as long as I have," he jokes.

But it doesn't matter — the repairs will always be made, Curly said. "I'll never sell that car no matter what repairs cost."

Burn team says U.S., U.S.S.R. should exchange ideas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — American and Soviet medical personnel should exchange ideas about treating burn and trauma victims, a group of U.S. military burn specialists who worked at a Soviet disaster said.

Seventeen members of a 21-member team from Brooke Army Medical Center returned home late Sunday after spending two weeks in a hospital in Ufa, which is about 1,000 miles east of Moscow.

About 200 people were killed and another 800 injured on June 4 when two passing trains near Ufa ignited fumes from a liquified natural gas pipeline, causing an explosion.

The burn specialists from BAMC, home of the military's only burn unit, were dispatched five days later on June 9. The team, which also included Russian translators and administrative aides, went to the Soviet Union aboard a C-141 transport plane that also carried 18,000 pounds of medical supplies.

This was the first time since World War II that a U.S. military team has been allowed in the Soviet Union to help in a disaster.

Capt. Dennis M. Driscoll, an Army nurse, said he believed an American-Soviet medical exchange would benefit both countries.

"I think it's the only way we can truly grow," he said.

"What I saw there was a lot of compassion, a lot of dedication from their medical people and an outpouring from all their civilian counterparts. They were overwhelmed with this number of patients and their city came together," he said.

Others said they hoped they were able to leave some of their knowledge with their Soviet counterparts.

"We went to Russia not knowing what would be expected of us and hopefully we've taught the physicians and nurses some of our ways of doing things," said Maj. Lise C. Walker, one of two surgeons who headed the BAMC team in Ufa.

She said the team had to work in a large city hospital that lacked burn-care facilities and, by American standards, was stocked with outdated equipment.

"As far as the burn wounds were concerned, they were very open and wanted to know our technique, but as far as medical management, we had a little bit of frustration trying to impart our ways onto them," she said.

"We then realized that it wasn't the best way of doing it and then we tried to learn their ways of doing things, like their ventilator care, what kinds of medicine and antibiotics the patients were given and why," she said.

The American burn team worked 12-hour days, five days a week, to treat more than 100 patients in four hospital wards and performed about 30 operations, including skin grafting.

Mrs. Walker and other team members said at a news conference Monday that the Soviets gave them expensive jewelry boxes upon their arrival and a warm sendoff when they departed.

"We were a little apprehensive going over there and not knowing how we'd be received, but none of us had any problems and when we left people were crying, both on our side and their side," Mrs. Walker said.

A four-member team from BAMC remained in Ufa to monitor some of the patients and should return later this week.

Texan among progeria victims attending convention

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — Mickey Hays will be 17 on Friday. He loves fishing for bass, works on a '69 Mustang drag racer with a neighborhood friend and is somewhat of a celebrity around his hometown of Longview, Texas.

Part of his popularity is based on a movie role back in 1986, when he played a character from outer space in the film Aurora Encounter. And part of it is because he is a victim of progeria, the rare genetic condition that appears to age children way before their time.

The condition causes dwarfism, baldness, wrinkled skin, disfigurement of the face and limbs and usually results in death in the victim's teen-age years.

Mickey, who described himself Monday as a "tough little Texan," is one of the 16 known progeria victims attending the eighth annual Sunshine Foundation reunion in Central Florida. They range in age from 4 to 19 and come from seven countries, including the United States.

Mickey, an articulate, intelligent individual, has all the outer, physical symptoms of the ailment but is leading as normal a life as possible because he has few of the major problems associated with it such as hardening of the arteries, strokes, cardiac complications and loss of mobility.

He's unusual in that regard. Most are ill a good bit of the time and progressively restricted in movement.

"I do what I like," Mickey says proudly.

"He doesn't have any (organic) problems at all," says his mother, Cindy Wilkerson. "He just tough. He's got a strong will to live."

Mickey and South African Fransie Geringer, who will be 17 in December, are probably the two best-known victims of the syndrome estimated to strike one out of every 8 million children around the world. The two met when they were 8 years old, after Fransie made a well-publicized trip to this country to visit Disneyland in California.

Their informal meeting in 1981 led to the series of reunions by the Philadelphia organization founded in 1976 to grant the last wishes of terminally ill children. Its founder is former Philadelphia policeman Bill Sample.

Fransie, of Brakpan, South Africa, is in frail health now. He has suffered a series of heart attacks in recent months and had to drop out of school this past year.

"I don't miss school too much. I can sleep late now," he says in a soft voice.

The shy youngster thinks the annual reunions are great because he can see his friends. "It may be the last time," he adds sadly.

Most of the children are tiny, wrinkled and frail. They look alike, but are highly individualistic and usually intelligent, some with high IQs.

The oldest progeria victim, 19-year-old Greg Mercer, is also the worst off. He suffered a series of strokes shortly after birth, causing paralysis and limb deformities. He is the about the size of a 3-year-old and unable to walk and talk. His parents wheel him around in a baby stroller.

"He's a perpetual child," says his mother, Gertrude Barnard, who was feeding Greg strained baby food at a Sea World luncheon Monday. "It's just like caring for a baby all the time. It's a day-to-day situation for us...Been that way for 19 years."

The parents are grateful for the annual weeklong gatherings and the opportunity for exchanging information and having their children meet others who look as they do.

"We're a family," says Magda Geringer, Fransie's mother, of the progeria group.

The other kids and parents are "the only people in the world who can really understand his experience," said Cathy Ellison, mother of 14-year-old Jason.

Along with their parents and siblings, the youngsters are enjoying themselves at a nearby ranch, attending Sea World marine park and Walt Disney World.

The youngest victim is 4-year-old Courtney Arciaga of Bonita, Calif.

Sample said Monday that the number of children known by the group to have the ailment has remained at about 16 for several years.

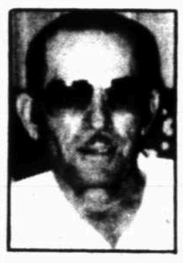

"This reunion is critically important — to the kids, the parents especially. But to the medical community, too," Sample said.

The annual gatherings may eventually lead to treatment, even prevention, if the experts succeed in isolating the genetic breakdown that causes the problem, said Drs. Ted Brown and Frank DeBusk, who have been conducting research on progeria for eight years.

Carlsbad Caverns officials get bomb threat

CARLSBAD CAVERNS NATIONAL PARK, N.M. (AP) — About 1,500 visitors were evacuated from Carlsbad Caverns National Park and authorities brought in an explosives-sniffing dog after a telephoned bomb threat to the popular park.

Wallace Elms, parks superintendent, said the call came in to the park dispatcher about 3 p.m. Monday.

"It sounded like a youngster and we believed it was a hoax or a youthful attempt at a prank," Elms said. "We decided we couldn't take a chance and closed the caverns as a precaution."

A bomb-sniffing dog from Fort Bliss in El Paso, Texas, completed a sweep of the caverns about 1:30 a.m. today and nothing was found, he said.

"We're terribly pleased that it did turn out to be a prank or a hoax. There was no injury to the cave or to the visitors or any of our staff, so that's a plus," Elms said.

The park was open as usual today, but the incident "caused a great deal of inconvenience and disappointment for our visitors who had come a long way to see the caves," Elms said.

Senator critical of PUC

AUSTIN (AP) — A state senator Monday blasted the Public Utility Commission, saying it ignored a call to promptly review the impact of a 1986 federal tax reduction on utility rates.

Sen. Carlos Truan sent a letter to commission members pointing out a recent report that Kansas utility customers received $81 million in federal income tax savings over the past two years.

"Unlike Kansas, the Texas Public Utility Commission has not been aggressive in acting on the opportunity for rate relief... Kansas is but one of 47 other states which passed along those corporate tax savings to utility customers, and its population is only one-seventh that of Texas, yet it managed to return $81 million in two years to its ratepayers," wrote Truan, D-Corpus Christi.

Suzi Sutherland, administrative assistant to PUC Chairman Marta Greytok, said Ms. Greytok and Commissioner William Cassin were in Chicago attending a regulatory conference. There was no answer at Commissioner Jo Campbell's office late Monday afternoon.

The Senate passed a resolution in February directing the agency to act on a petition, which was filed by the Office of Public Utility Counsel in January 1987, asking for action by the PUC to pass on utilities' federal tax savings to customers.

"My strong suggestion is that you see how they (Kansas) did it, examine the actions of the other states which have done the same thing, and act quickly to provide Texas utility customers with the benefits of the same quality of regulation that other states enjoy," Truan said.

The PUC has said the tax issue has been reviewed on a case-by-case basis.

WEST TEXAS IN BRIEF

Men charged with theft of oilfield equipment

From Staff Reports

Three men were charged today with theft of oilfield equipment, following an undercover police operation Monday set up following a telephone tip.

Ignacio, Ramon, and Javier Perez, who are cousins, were charged today with theft of oilfield equipment, Officer Ron Sartor said.

Police received a tip that the trio allegedly were involved in illegal activity. Officers set up a surveillance operation, and the men were arrested about 1 p.m. Monday at a business at 1403 Garden City Highway, Sartor said.

Drug charges expected

A 21-year-old Odessa man was expected to be charged today with marijuana trafficking, a day after he led officers on a high-speed chase through Alpine who later discovered a 145-pound bundle of pot.

The man was being held today at the Brewster County Jail in Alpine, an officer there said.

About 5 p.m. Monday, a U.S. Border Patrol officer attempted to stop a 1977 Ford Thunderbird on State Highway 118, south of Alpine, according to agency spokesman Lewis Reynolds. The officer wanted to stop the vehicle for a "routine immigration check," he said.

But the driver sped off, and a chase ensued along Highway 118 and later on U.S. Highway 67, west of Alpine. Speeds approached 100 mph at times, and after a few minutes the man lost control of his vehicle, Reynolds said.

The marijuana, with an estimated street value of $116,000, was found in the trunk of the car, Reynolds said.

The suspect was not injured in the mishap.

Officers from the Department of Public Safety, Alpine Police Department and the Brewster County Sheriff's Department assisted in the arrest, Reynolds said.

Marfa aerostat inflated

MARFA (AP) — A giant blimp designed to carry radar to detect drug-smuggling airplanes was inflated by two huge helium trucks.

The Mylar balloon, called an aerostat, will undergo tests beginning Aug. 7 and is scheduled to be deployed sometime this fall, U.S. Customs spokeswoman Kathy Hamor said Monday.

The huge white balloon — resembling a pregnant, albino Goodyear blimp — was hooked up to the first of two helium pumper trucks at midnight, and inflation was completed about 7:30 a.m. Monday, Ms. Hamor said.

Twenty-seven people attended the inflation of the aerostat, which has more than 500,000 cubic feet of space, making it 30.1 times the volume of the Garfield balloon featured in the annual Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade.

The aerostat will carry low-level radar designed to detect small planes.

Midlander named to board

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Jess Ann Estill Thomason of Midland has been named to the Board of Private Investigators and Private Security Agencies.

Gov. Bill Clements appointed Ms. Thomason, 58, an investor, to replace John W. Snelson of Houston, whose term has expired. Pending Senate confirmation, Ms. Thomason will serve through Jan. 31, 1995.

She earned a bachelor's degree from Texas Christian University. She is active in a variety of Midland civic organizations, including the Junior League of Midland, the Cerebral Palsy Center and the Children's Service League.

Arlington officer will be allowed to resign

ARLINGTON (AP) — An agreement between a police officer who fatally shot three people and the city of Arlington will allow the officer to resign without his record showing a disciplinary termination, officials say.

Brian Farrell was terminated after officials said that a blood test determined that he had taken medicine to help him "pass" a polygraph test.

Police spokesman Dee Anderson said Monday that there were problems with the blood test that prompted the city to accept the settlement.

The first test of Farrell's blood showed a heart medication was present, but Farrell's lawyers asked for a second test to confirm the results after Police Chief David Kunkle announced plans to fire Farrell.

There was not enough of the blood sample left to allow a second test, Anderson said.

Farrell then offered to resign, and the city's attorneys agreed because of the prospect that the officer might sue the city over that ambiguous findings, Anderson said.

Kunkle yesterday issued a three-sentence statement.

"We feel this is in the best interest of the Arlington Police Department and Brian Farrell," Kunkle said. "When we learned that a confirmatory blood test was going to be impossible to obtain, it became an issue of fundamental fairness.

"When Brian offered to resign, the decision was made to drop the discipline charges and accept the resignation," Kunkle said.

Kunkle declined further comment, and Farrell could not be reached Monday, the Fort Worth Star-Telegram reported.

Farrell has not decided whether he will seek another law enforcement job, his lawyer said. But the decision to allow him to resign will help if he decided to pursue police work, lawyer Jim Lane of Fort Worth said.

"It puts him in a position of being an officer who was not terminated under a cloud of a disciplinary hearing," Lane said.

Officers began the disciplinary investigation against Farrell when they found two carved notches on the trigger guard of Farrell's pistol after a forgery suspect was shot to death in Dallas, the third fatal shooting he was involved in.

Farrell denied knowledge of the markings and took two polygraph tests to answer questions about them, but the tests produced inconclusive results.

Farrell had been cleared of wrongdoing in the shootings by three internal investigations and three grand juries.

DPS says as many as 52 people may die on roads during holiday

AUSTIN (AP) — The Texas Department of Public Safety predicted as many as 52 persons could die on state roads during the holiday period, while health officials urged caution when using fireworks.

Col. Joe Milner, DPS director, however, said the number of traffic fatalities could be lower if drivers follow a few simple rules.

"...slow down, avoid drinking alcohol and use a well-known safety precaution — seat belts," Milner said Monday.

Boaters in Texas will face a new law over the July 4th holiday that is intended to curb drunken boating and water skiing.

The law, which takes effect Saturday, establishes a definition for intoxication and a means for law enforcement officers to perform a breath or blood test.

A first offense under the law would be punishable by a fine of $100 to $1,000, and a maximum jail term of 180 days, or both. Punishment would be tougher for subsequent convictions.

Penalties also would be increased if an intoxicated boater was involved in an accident that caused a serious injury.

Lawmakers, who passed the law during the regular legislative session, said it is already against the law to boat while intoxicated, but that the previous law was weak.

Physicians also urged caution in the use of fireworks.

Dr. Rich Cole, emergency room physician at Scott & White Memorial Hospital in Temple, said children should not play with fireworks without supervision.

"These are not toys," Cole said. "Even children with sparklers should be supervised. Toddlers will grab at the lit sparkler, which is hot enough to burn someone."

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

Are you getting bored with having nothing to do this summer? Try becoming a volunteer and fill your warm days with love and caring. Below are a few of the opportunities currently available at the Volunteer Center:

■ Are you a versatile person? If so, an agency needs you for office and courtroom work. A few of your duties would include sitting in on DWI trials, typing, communicating with the courthouse, and helping with a special awareness campaign. Here is an opportunity to expand your skills while benefiting the community.

■ You can be a positive role model for children this summer and all it takes is 2-3 hours per week. Men, women and couples are needed to spend time with a single-parent child. Take the time to care and volunteer.

■ Remember your camping days? You can revive all of the excitement of those carefree days by becoming a volunteer and assisting the camp director in a day camp. You would supervise day cap activities such as arts and crafts, games and swimming. If you are 18 or older, take a week off in July and volunteer for this fun and rewarding job.

■ Volunteers interested in technical production are needed to produce professional quality recordings for the blind/visually impaired, physically handicapped and certified learning disabled. If you have a good command of the English language you are the right volunteer for this worthwhile task.

■ Do you enjoy a variety of tasks and working with young people? A program volunteer is needed to assist in many areas such as physical fitness, arts and crafts, dance, swimming, drama, soccer and computers. This summer job can sharpen your skills while addressing a need in the community.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center at 697-8781.

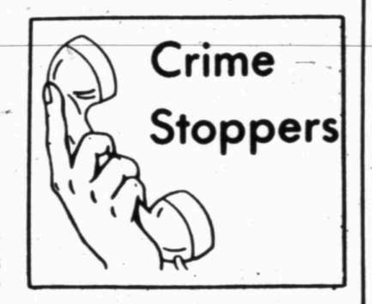

Information on theft sought

Odessa Crime Stoppers is asking the public for information about a theft that occurred in the parking lot of 4307 Wendover St.

On the evening of June 16, someone removed a large canvas carring a bag containing a set of Bashlin electrical linesmen pole climbing gear and hand tools such as wire strippers. The items are valued at more than $1,100.

The items, last seen about 8 p.m., were removed from the bed area of a white 1989 Toyota pickup truck. They were discovered missing at 11 a.m. the next day.

Information that leads to the arrest and indictment of the person(s) involved in the theft could be worth up to $1,000 cash this week only. Crime Stoppers pays cash rewards for the arrest of felony suspects and fugitives.

Cash rewards are also offered for the recovery of stolen property and seized narcotics valued at over $1,000.

Call Detective Cpl. Terry Gettings or Detective Cpl. Dean Johnson with Odessa Crime Stoppers at 333-TIPS. In Midland, Crime Stoppers can be reached at 694-TIPS.

Wright ends speculation he might seek House seat

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former House Speaker Jim Wright says he's leaving Congress for good on Friday, ending speculation that he might seek re-election to the seat that ethics charges forced him to give up.

Wright issued a statement saying he is gratified by supporters' calls for him to seek re-election — and political vindication — in a special vote to be called after he steps down.

"As deeply as I appreciate the devoted friendship which impels these sincere petitions, I must conclude that I was right in announcing my retirement from Congress," the Fort Worth Democrat said Monday.

"It is best for the institution and best for the people whom I've served that I step aside now and make room for others," he said. He said his nearly 35-year House career will end Friday and he will not seek elective office again.

The House ethics committee had charged Wright with 69 violations, involving whether he sidestepped House limits on outside income through bulk sales of a book he wrote, and whether he improperly accepted $145,000 in gifts from a business partner with a direct interest in legislation.

In an emotional speech to the House on May 31, Wright said he would step down as speaker and resign his House seat by the end of June. He was replaced as speaker by Rep. Thomas S. Foley, D-Wash., a week later.

But Wright had left open the possibility he might seek re-election to the House in an attempt to counter the ethics charges that made him the first House speaker ever to resign under fire. He said last week he might run if there were "an absolutely genuine draft of a bipartisan nature."

STATE

In Washington, however, colleagues were privately aghast at the suggestion he might seek to stay on.

An aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a weekend poll showing home-district support for Wright figured prominently in the decision not to run again. "He just felt like that was vindication," the aide said.

Sixty-five percent of Wright's constituents who were polled said they would vote for him again. About 81 percent believed Wright was doing an "outstanding" or "good" job in Washington and 67 percent said he gave up too soon in his fight against the ethics charges.

The poll, which sampled 407 residents last week and had an error margin of plus or minus 5 percentage points, appeared in Sunday's Fort Worth Star-Telegram.

"To seek and gain the splendid honor of a public endorsement one more time would be vainglorious," Wright said in the statement. "To do so without intending to serve for a prolonged period would be pointless. To postpone the moment when another may begin would be a disservice."

Had he run again and won, Wright still could have been subject to disciplinary action by the ethics committee, which apparently decided to set the case aside after he announced his intention to resign.

Wright said he has accepted "five or six" invitations to deliver speeches and is considering "some limited business and professional relationships" and writing opportunities. He will maintain an office in Fort Worth, he said.

He and his wife, Betty, plan to attend a "Welcome Home, Jim" celebration Thursday in Fort Worth, sponsored by Mayor Bob Bolen and former Rep. Tom Vandergriff, D-Texas.

Whitmire announces candidacy for fifth term

HOUSTON (AP) — Kathy Whitmire, saying that being the mayor of the nation's fourth-largest city is the best job in the country, announced she is running for a record-tying fifth consecutive term.

"I am very proud to be your mayor today and when the voters go to the poll this November, I'm going to ask them to compare the records and elect the better mayor for Houston," Mrs. Whitmire said in reference to her main challenger, Fred Hofheinz, who held the mayor's post in the mid-1970s.

She officially announced her candidacy at a rally attended by about 350 supporters Monday evening.

Mrs. Whitmire thanked supporters who braved heavy rain and traffic caused by Tropical Storm Allison to attend her campaign kickoff and fund-raiser that added a half-million dollars to her coffers.

"I'm so glad to see that a little tropical storm hasn't slowed down our campaign forces," she said.

Mrs. Whitmire said the drug problem in Houston is the most serious threat facing the city, but sees a community and police effort that can beat it.

"Just as Houston is leading Texas out of its economic doldrums, I believe Houston can lead the nation in winning the war against drugs."

For Mrs. Whitmire, 42, the race marks the second time she will face a former mayor. In 1985, she trounced Louie Welch, whose mayoral longevity mark she is trying to match. Two years ago, she won her fourth term against token opposition.

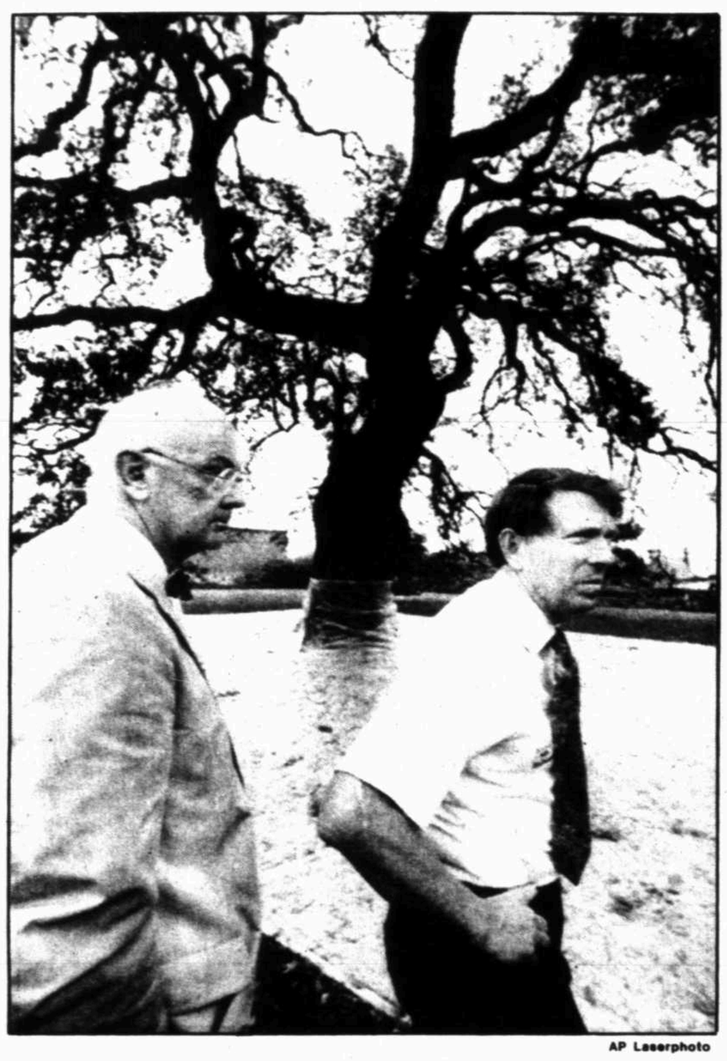

Like her race against Welch, she enters the campaign as an underdog in early polls.

In April, shortly after Hofheinz announced his candidacy, a Houston Chronicle poll showed Mrs. Whitmire trailing 41 percent to 32 percent among likely voters.

Hofheinz won two-year terms in 1973 and 1975.

Mrs. Whitmire's entry brings the number of candidates in the Nov. 7 non-partisan field to at least five. Also running are Rosie Walker, publisher of Houston Downtown Magazine; Shelby Oringderff, a retired Houston schoolteacher, and Hispanic leader James Galvan.

Mrs. Whitmire used her job as city controller as a springboard to the mayor's office in 1981, when the city was at the peak of its oil-driven economic boom. When oil prices plummeted, however, she was burdened with governing during the city's worst economic period since the Great Depression.

Dr. James Miller, left, of the U.S. Forest Service Research Center at Auburn University in Alabama, and Max Williamson, of the Forest Service's Atlanta office, join several other experts Monday in examining the poisoned Treaty Oak in Austin.

Perot offers money as well as advice to help Treaty Oak

Concerned people have lent moral support by leaving the tree get-well messages, bunches of flowers and rock crystals.

AUSTIN (AP) — Dallas billionaire H. Ross Perot is offering advice as well as money, and others have contributed gifts ranging from flowers to chicken soup to help the historic Treaty Oak recover from a poisoning attack.

Concerned people have lent moral support by leaving the tree get-well messages, bunches of flowers and rock crystals, which some believe have healing powers. Monday, a votive candle and a can of cream of chicken soup were among the offerings.

Meanwhile, an officer on the case said police are taking a "long, hard look" at a suspect in the poisoning.

"We're getting there," said Austin Police Sgt. John Jones. He said officers are concentrating on someone identified in telephone tips to make sure the person is a "legitimate suspect."

"The publicity and the reward tend to bring out everyone," said Jones, who is investigating the case as second-degree felony criminal mischief.

Velpar, a powerful herbicide, was poured around the oak's base.

According to legend, Stephen F. Austin, the father of Texas, signed a treaty with the Indians under the tree's branches. The Handbook of Texas, however, gives little credence to that story.

The tree was admitted to the American Forestry Association's Hall of Fame in 1927. The live oak is about 50 feet tall, has a 127-foot limb spread and is 52.5 inches in diameter at chest height.

The centuries-old live oak has been losing leaves and expending its reserve energy to replace them.

City forester John Giedraitis said Monday that Perot, who has pledged funds to help the tree, told him, "Don't worry about the bureaucracy, let's just do it."

Perot has recommended using dechlorinated water to mist the tree's foliage, Giedraitis said.

Workers from a private firm have sprayed the tree's leaves with a diluted fertilizer mixture and misted it with spring water donated by Utopia.

"What we're trying to do is lower the stress on the tree...When they (twigs) are cool, they're not under as much stress," he said.

Parks employees earlier removed contaminated soil and injected chemical-attacking microbes into the earth, and Giedraitis said recent soil tests showed no herbicide. He is awaiting test results to see if the chemical has been absorbed in the wood of the tree.

Perot has not yet been billed for any work, Giedraitis said. "We really haven't done anything other than fly a few people in at his expense. Once the treatment starts, then the money will start being spent."

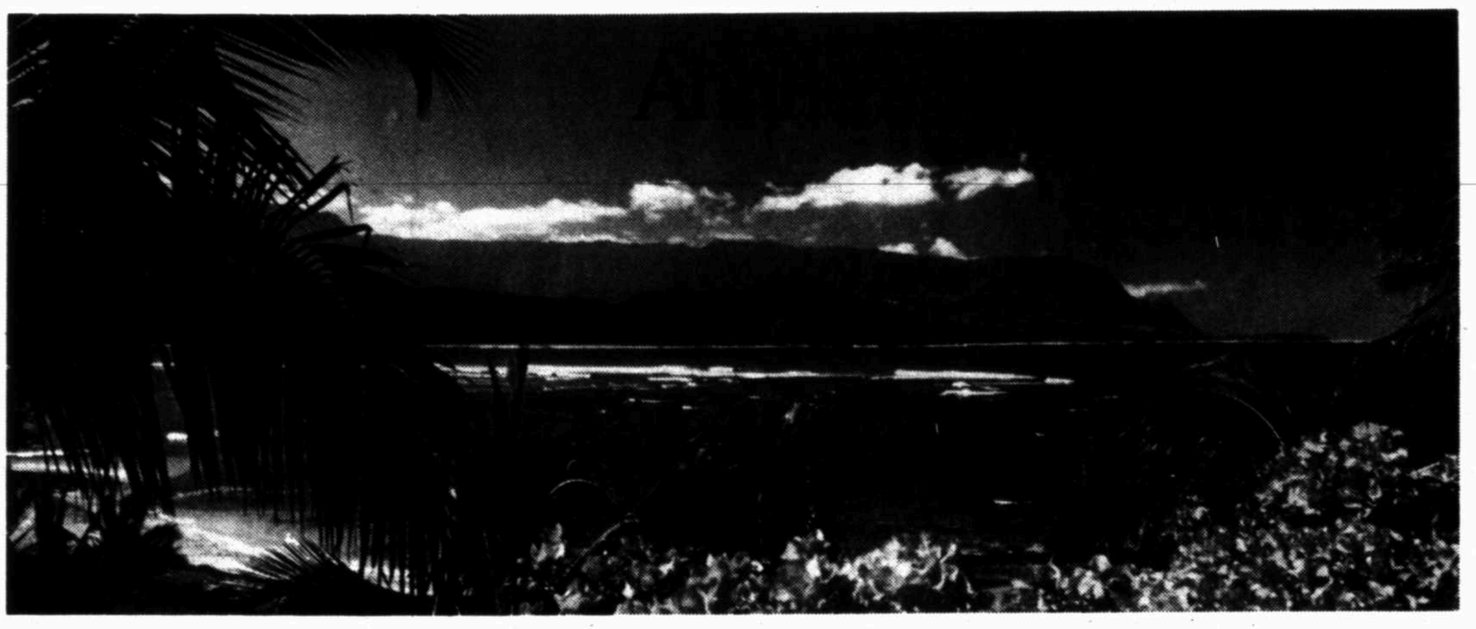

James Houser, head of a task force that gathered at the oak Monday and chairman of the Austin Urban Forestry Board, said the experts would work to come up with a coherent plan of action.

Task force members are from the U.S. Forest Service, North Carolina State University, Texas A&M University, University of Texas, Texas Department of Agriculture, Texas Forest Service, St. Edwards University, American Society of Consulting Arborists, the city and Du Pont, maker of Velpar.

A $10,000 reward for information leading to the conviction of the poisoner has been offered by Du Pont, and $1,000 has been offered by the Texas Forestry Association.

Amarillo bank has first armed robbery

AMARILLO (AP) — After 93 years, the Amarillo National Bank suffered its first armed robbery.

Two pistol-wielding men handcuffed a pair of bank guards and used their keys to take an undetermined amount of money from the night depository. The robbery occurred about 2:15 a.m. Monday, police said.

Authorities say the two robbers fled in a 1974 pickup bearing Indiana license plates that belonged to one of the bank guards.

The bank has offered a $25,000 reward for information that leads to the arrest of the two robbers.

Founded in 1892, the bank has had no previous armed robberies, but an employee embezzled once was convicted of embezzling after a 1982 audit showed $500,000 was missing.

Nun undergoes surgery

HOUSTON (AP) — A Roman Catholic nun who was shot in El Salvador was in critical condition in a Houston hospital early today after surgery to remove bullet fragments and damaged brain tissue.

Sister Stanislaus Mackey's condition deteriorated and doctors found her brain was swollen from several lodged bullet fragments Monday morning, said Ellen Durckel, a spokeswoman for St. Joseph's Hospital. Sister Mackey underwent the surgery, which took more than three hours, later Monday.

The nun, 73, was shot by someone in a passing car Wednesday as she and two other nuns were driving from San Salvador to nearby Zaragoza. Officials believe the shooting was a botched robbery attempt.

Sister Mackey was hit in the head and throat and has lost the vision in her left eye, Ms. Durckel said.

Waste facilities recognized

AUSTIN (AP) — Two Texas hazardous waste facilities have been chosen to receive the Environmental Protection Agency's award for "outstanding implementation of the hazardous waste program."

A news release Monday from the Texas Chemical Council said facilities run by Amoco Chemicals Co. in Alvin, and PPG Industries Inc. in La Porte, will receive the awards for "sound management of hazardous waste programs."

To qualify, the facilities must have had no significant violations of state or federal environmental regulations during the past three annual inspections, the news release said.

Clute sets mosquito festival

CLUTE (AP) — While some areas of the state are scrambling to control mosquitoes, Clute soon will celebrating the summer pest.

The July 27-29 Great Texas Mosquito Festival is expected to draw more than 1,500 to this town of about 9,500 near Hourton, said festival chairman Dana Pomerenke. Events during the three-day festival include a mosquito legs look-alike contest and a Ms. Quito beauty contest. Participants in the mosquito-juice chug-a-lug will try to guzzle beer from a baby bottle.

The festival, to be held at Clute Community Park, also will include a barbecue and fajita cookout, horseshoe pitching, and arts and crafts.

Pomerenke, who has helped organize four of nine festivals, said the event developed as an "off-the-wall" idea to promote tourism in Clute and Brazoria County.

Tires blow out on jet

GRAPEVINE (AP) — The pilot of an American Airlines flight from Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport to Madrid aborted takeoff Monday when four tires on the plane blew out, an airline spokeswoman said.

No injuries were reported on Flight 66, which carried 204 passengers and a crew of 12.

The plane returned to the gate under its own power, and the plane was expected to depart later Monday after an equipment change, said Sonda Byington, spokeswoman for American Airlines.

Court reverses Penry's death sentence

HOUSTON (AP) — The U.S. Supreme Court threw out the death sentence of mentally retarded Texas death row inmate Johnny Paul Penry but upheld the constitutionally of executions for mentally retarded people convicted of capital murder.

Penry

In a 5-4 vote, the court Monday vacated Penry's sentence because a judge refused a defense attorney's request at Penry's 1980 trial for further instructions to a jury. The court, also in a 5-4 vote, rejected arguments that capital punishment always is impermissible for retarded murderers.

"It looks like it's (the court's) saying that in a very narrow holding, in some cases, on request there should be instructions given on consideration of mitigating evidence in answering special issues," said Bob Walt, an assistant attorney general who handles capital cases. "It would affect him and probably those people who requested special instructions. Normally, people don't."

In Texas, jurors must agree on three questions before sentencing a convicted killer to death. Among the questions is whether the killing was deliberate. One of the instructions sought by Penry's trial attorneys was a definition of "deliberately."

"From what I read, it may only affect Penry or everybody whose attorneys had enough sense to ask the judge to give the jury those instructions," said Curtis Mason, Penry's attorney.

"It could affect more people than Penry. I know there's a lot of cases where instructions have been asked and they have not been given by judges. And there are quite a few death penalty cases where request has been made and the Court of Criminal Appeals has ruled there was no error in not giving further instructions."

Jurors who sentenced Penry were told they could consider all evidence presented by the defense, which included testimony about Penry's retardation. Penry has an IQ estimated at between 50 and 60 and the reasoning capacity of a 7-year-old.

But the judge refused to make special instructions aimed at highlighting Penry's mental condition.

Monday, the court said in an opinion written by Justice Sandra Day O'Connor that when such a request is made, it must be honored.

Gov. Bill Clements could commute Penry's sentence to a life term or Penry could get a new sentencing trial, Mason said.

"At this point, his general counsel expects to be in contact with local prosecutors in the case to obtain their recommendations on an appropriate form of action," Jay Rosser, Clements' deputy press secretary, said.

"It would be something we give serious thought to," Joe Price, the district attorney in Livingston who prosecuted Penry, said Monday.

"I probably would have to talk with relatives of the slain lady, her parents and her former husband. And obviously, I would want to see what the decision said. If all they're talking about is instructions, I doubt it would affect us on a retrial."

Penry has said he was abused by his parents, particularly his mother, and never attended school except for a few days in the first grade. He was in and out of mental hospitals while growing up near Houston. Convicted of rape in 1977, he served two years of a five-year prison term.

Three months after his release, he was charged with the murder of Pamela Mosely Carpenter. The Livingston housewife was raped, beaten and fatally stabbed with scissors being used to make Halloween decorations.

Price said Monday although the case was about 10 years old, the evidence against Penry was convincing and a trial would not be especially difficult.

"It was tried in early 1980. It's roughly 10 years old, and that can always pose a problem in difficulty of locating evidence and witnesses," Price said. "But this is probably as easy as a case can be for a retrial."

Mattox: Law should be changed so juries can consider defendants' mental conditions

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox says the Legislature should change the law in death sentence cases to allow judges to tell juries that they can consider the mental condition of the defendant.

Mattox's comments Monday came hours after the U.S. Supreme Court reversed the death sentence of Johnny Paul Penry, who was convicted in 1980 for the rape and murder of a Livingston woman.

The court rejected arguments by Penry's attorneys that the U.S. Constitution forbids the execution of mentally retarded persons, but said the jury in Penry's case should have been instructed about Penry's mental retardation.

Penry has an IQ estimated at between 50 and 60 and the reasoning capacity of a 7-year-old.

Because of the decision, Mattox said, "I think that the Legislature should review the matter right now."

He said lawmakers should change the statute to "allow the jury to consider all mitigating circumstances and allow the jury to make a decision on each individual case."

The Legislature could only consider amending the law if Gov. Bill Clements places it on the agenda of the current special legislative session. Mattox said he would not advise the governor to do that, but said lawmakers could start holding committee hearings on the law now.

But Rep. Bob Melton said he would ask Clements to open the call of the special session to consider changing the law. Clements' deputy press secretary Jay Rosser said the governor is reviewing the court's decision.

During the regular session, Melton, D-Gatesville, wrote legislation that would have allowed juries to consider mental retardation in death penalty cases as a mitigating circumstance. The bill failed.

Melton said he planned to file his measure again.

Mattox said he believed the Penry decision would affect "only a handful" of death row cases in Texas. Currently there are more than 300 persons on death row in Texas, he said.

Although he said the state should change its law, Mattox said he believed Penry had received a fair trial.

"It has been our view that Penry had sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and consequences of his acts...and that the jury looked at the case and properly made that decision," he said.

Commenting on the Supreme Court's decision, Mattox said, "If you looked at it from the perspective of the family of the deceased, they may very well view it as a very bad ruling."

"From a humanitarian point of view, it may be considered a very good ruling," he said.

Pilot's wife says detainment won't stop his flying

DALLAS (AP) — The wife of one of two Texas businessman who were detained in India for 10 days after flying over restricted air space says the experience won't deter his flying adventures.

Frank Haile Jr., 57, of Dallas, and Carson Gilmer, 61, of Rocksprings, near San Antonio, were detained after two Indian air force fighters forced down their single-engine plane on June 16.

Frances Jones of the U.S. State Department bureau of consular affairs said the men were "unconditionally" released Monday.

"My husband is an extraordinary person because he loves flying so much," Joan Haile said Monday night. "I think he will be undaunted by all of this."

Haile was expected to begin his journey home late Monday night, while Gilmer was making arrangements to take a commercial flight home. Mrs. Haile said she needn't remind her husband to return home promptly.

"I think I don't have to do that. I trust him to come home as soon as possible," she said with a laugh. "I don't think he will rest very long. It's a long way for him to get home."

Mrs. Haile said her husband and Gilmer were about halfway into their around-the-world trip when they were detained.

"I was really surprised that it happened so quickly and with no fanfare at all," she said of the release. "I expected an official statement to be released by the Indian government and then he would be released.

"In any case, we're just delighted at the way everything has turned out."

Gilmer's wife refused to comment on her husband's release when contacted by phone Monday.

Haile and Gilmer were suspected of espionage and were questioned by Indian officials, family members said. Two West Germans also were held at an airfield in Bhuj, a small town about 350 miles northeast of Bombay.

Haile and Gilmer began their trip from Addison Airport more than three weeks ago. They and the West Germans were part of an expedition attempting to fly around the world side-by-side in Beechcraft planes.

B.S. Rawat, an official at the Indian embassy in Washington, said he had not heard about the decision to release the men.

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, whose office had been working on the release with the State Department, criticized the detainment.

"I think India's behavior was irresponsible," Gramm said, "but I'm happy that they have been released."

Federal inmates served by shoddy medical care, report says

DALLAS (AP) — Ronnie Holley was a healthy 32-year-old when he was sentenced to federal prison for falsifying gun records.

He was released early — disfigured and impotent — because of what officials called the "devastating effects" of surgery he underwent at the U.S. Medical Center for Federal prisoners, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Criminologists and penal experts long have regarded the U.S. Bureau of Prisons and its health care for inmates as the star of the nation's network of state and federal prisons.

But The Dallas Morning News reported in a copyright story that the medical system is plagued by critical shortages of medical personnel and life-threatening delays in transfers of inmate patients to major prison hospitals.

The News investigated medical and surgical care within the U.S. Bureau of Prisons, but did not examine psychiatric treatment. The yearlong investigation included interviews with more than 150 people including doctors, nurses and physicians' assistants, inmates, lawyers, prison advocates and bureau officials.

The newspaper also examined 900 lawsuits in the federal jurisdictions in which the bureau's three largest prison hospitals are located.

The Morning News said prison officials denied the newspaper several requests under the Freedom of Information Act for internal audits, accreditation surveys and backgrounds on medical staff members. The bureau refused to discuss individual cases citing the Privacy Act.

The newspaper said it obtained several internal memos and other documents through individual sources.

There are 55 federal prisons in the nation. Texas has the most with seven. The federal inmate population as of June 3 was 48,521. The U.S. Bureau of Prisons operates on a $1.2 billion budget. Its medical budget is an estimated $118 million, and 1.9 million medical procedures have been performed.

Dr. Kenneth Moritsugu, medical director of the Bureau of Prisons, said inmates receive a "quality of care consistent with community standards."

But The Morning News reported inmates rarely are granted second opinions, even when they pay out of their own pockets. And inmates are not allowed to look at their own records.

More than half the doctors who practice in the nation's federal prison fall into two categories: young doctors fresh out of residency programs, most of whom are paying back the government for underwriting their medical training, or older doctors who have retired or who previously worked in other government institutions.

The Bureau of Prisons has 39 vacancies in its authorized medical-surgical staff of 129 doctors. Moritsugu said the prisons could be understaffed by as much as 40 percent by September.

"If there is a significant weakness to the system, it is the shortage of health care providers," Moritsugu said.

He said he has struggled to hire more personnel since taking the post as medical director in December 1987, but the negative image of prison medicine, bureaucracy and nursing shortages have hampered his efforts.

Moritsugu is skeptical of inmates' gripes, but the complaints about shoddy health care also are made by doctors, lawyers and prison medical personnel, The Morning News reported.

"As a former federal defender in this field for 25 years, I can say without equivocation, that medical service in the federal prison system is pathetic and unresponsive," said John J. Cleary, a San Diego lawyer.

David Irvin, a lawyer and former U.S. magistrate in Lexington, Ky., won a $625,000 judgment against the Bureau of Prisons on behalf of an inmate whose leg was amputated because of what state medical examiners termed incompetent care.

"If I were a sick inmate," Irvin said, "I would feel that my only real hope for treatment would be to get myself outside, either by furlough or to be referred outside for medical care."

The Morning News said it found many instances in which inmates received sophisticated treatment, including heart bypass surgery, kidney dialysis and even kidney transplants. Some prisoners have written the Department of Justice in appreciation of the medical care they received, the newspaper reported.

But in other cases, inmates had trouble scheduling appointments with a physician or obtaining the most simple diagnostic tests.

Critics said the problems in prison health care go unchecked because of a weak internal system of peer review, the Bureau of Prisons' self-imposed secrecy, inmates' lack of credibility among prison doctors and the public's attitude that inmates deserve whatever happens to them.

Among some of the findings by The Morning News:

■ Full-time doctors are not available at all of the 55 prison facilities. In smaller prisons, physicians' assistants decide if inmates need to be examined by doctors. As a result, many inmates do not get prompt, proper diagnoses.

For example, Larry Allphin said he complained for five months of nausea and abdominal pain at the U.S. Penitentiary in Terre Haute, Ind.; physician's assistants accused him of faking illness. Allphin was seen by a doctor only when he had urinated two pints of blood. The doctor diagnosed Allphin's illness as cancer. Allphin died two years later at the age of 38.

■ Treatment often is delayed so long that illnesses become life threatening.

Linda Clark, 39, sentenced to 25 years for bank robbery in Corpus Christi, Texas, underwent an emergency hysterectomy in Lexington, Ky. Even though doctors believed her life was in danger, she waited three months for a hysterectomy.

■ Despite a government airlift operated jointly by the Bureau of Prisons and the U.S. Marshals Service, ill inmates — including some emergency patients — are forced to undergo long circuitous trips to reach prison medical centers.

In one example documented by a prison doctor, an anemic inmate was transferred by emergency airlift while an inmate with bleeding around his brain was transported more than 300 miles by ground ambulance from Kansas to Missouri.

■ Medical records often do not accompany inmates, even emergency patients. According to a memo written by Dr. Dante Landucci, an inmate sent to the medical center at Springfield, Mo. "arrived with so little documentation that it was impossible to know where he came from, let alone what was wrong with him."

■ Some doctors who practice in federal prisons lack American medical training or board certification to perform the specialty work they practice.

■ When confronted with evidence of malpractice or neglect by medical personnel, officials have responded slowly, if at all.

Alberto Flores, an inmate at the Federal Correctional Institution in Fort Worth works on the parallel bars. He is paralyzed from the waist down and works out every day to try to regain some use of his legs.

Couple collects toys instead of bad habits

PALESTINE (AP) — The way C.D. and Trixie Gimnich see it, toys have saved them from more detrimental adult forms of entertainment.

Gimnich, who worked on drilling rigs in the North Sea in the 1960s, said he started collecting toys instead of drinking and gambling with his lonely co-workers. Still, his superiors said his decision to spend his spare time traveling around Europe with his family in search of old toys in antique shops and flea markets cost him three promotions.

"I didn't care if I was promoted or not because I would rather do this," he said. "Call it childish or whatever you want to. It cost me promotions to collect, but I didn't care.

"I came out of there with this," he said gesturing to his collection, "where a lot of guys came out of there with new wives because of infidelity or their livers messed up from drinking. I feel like I came out of my overseas job with a lot more than those people did."

Gimnich opened a toy museum at his home about six miles east of Palestine on U.S. 84 in March to display his collection. He remodeled the inside of a railroad shipping container to hold about a third of his collection.

Most of the items in the collection on display are model and toy trains, many of which he bought while in Europe. His favorite is a set of English passenger trains with a green engine and brown cars. He also has a Lionel train set with corporate logos of fast foods on the sides, and a Smurf train he bought in England where the popular cartoon characters "were going strong in 1965."

Trains are Gimnich's particular area of toy expertise and enjoyment. In fact, trains were one of the attractions that brought him to Palestine.

He wanted to live in a place near a railroad and where tourists could frequent his toy museum. His home is near the railroad tracks because he "loves the sound of that train."

Another of his favorites in the train collection is a 40-pound Scottish train that he bought for about $75. The scale model actually runs on steam and coal.

"It's not a simple hobby," he said.

Mrs. Gimnich, who works as an aide at the Palestine Public Library, said she prefers collecting "girls' toys." Her collection includes a wide assortment of games, dolls and doll houses. Although she thinks most of today's toys are "junk," she said that dolls and toys are an important ingredient in a child's development.

"G.I. Joe was the best thing that happened to little boys," she said. "They could play dolls and not feel silly. After all, playing dolls is just life. It's not sissy. It's just life."

Gimnich, who said he learned how to work on drilling rigs by playing with building toys, agreed.

"Play is an important thing for a child because he's learning," he said. "Playing with a toy like that is the same as working. People my age know more about working because we had better toys. Now when they play electronic games, they're just sitting there entertaining themselves."

The couple's collection started when they married and realized they each had saved many toys from their childhoods. Gimnich said the collection would be bigger, but it has suffered two setbacks — a leaky storage space that ruined much of his original collection and another storage space that was raided by children in his family.

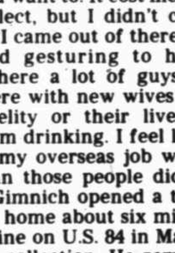

In addition to the large train sets, the collection includes nursery toys, a 1930s chemistry set, a small English limousine with a miniature Queen Elizabeth in the back seat, World War I lead soldiers like the ones Gimnich spent 10 of his 15 cents in lunch money on each day in the 1930s, and a Gene Autry pistol that reminded its collector of movies he saw as a boy in which the famous cowboy "saved the girl and kissed the horse."

Gimnich also has a few gag toys. He has a "Texas snowman," which consists of a plastic bubble of water with a floating hat and a carrot nose at the bottom. Someone also gave him a Rubik's cube with the same color on every side and "Aggie puzzle" written on it.

The Gimnichs have collected toys from all over the globe, including Denmark, West Germany, Hong Kong and Indonesia.

Despite its interesting collection, the museum has not been as well-received as Gimnich had hoped. After two months in business, he has collected only $2 in admission from visitors — admission is 50 cents a person.

But if called at (214) 723-4075, he'll tell any would-be visitor more about the museum or offer directions.

Disney launches campaign to destroy counterfeit items

By DENIS D. GRAY

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — They're burning Donald Duck, Mickey Mouse and Bambi in Bangkok — and Walt Disney executives couldn't be happier.

Torching toys, T-shirts and books emblazoned with the famous cartoon characters is part of an offensive by Disney against rife counterfeiting of its products across Asia.

The American entertainment giant is enjoying a boom on the continent, but also loses between $10 million and $20 million each year in royalties because of the pirates, according to John J. Feenie, who heads Disney's consumer products division in Asia. This estimate does not include losses to pirates of Disney videotapes.

Short of erecting their own Disneyland, adroit craftsmen fake virtually all the company's merchandise: fluffy Mickey Mouse dolls, videotapes of cartoon classics, children's clothing, books, pens, stationery, figurines and watches.

While many foreign companies are reluctant to become involved in the legal wrangles and costs of tackling Asia's teeming pirates, Feenie said Disney decided to take action after its fortunes surged in Asia about two years ago and local licensees began to complain about rip-offs.

Thailand was picked as the first target. The country affords copyright protection by law but has become a haven for pirates because of lax enforcement, low penalties, cheap labor costs and a vigorous entrepreneurial spirit. Copies of the world's leading brand name products can be found on Bangkok's streets.

Feenie said Thailand was also singled out because it is a big exporter of Disney fakes to the Middle East and, perhaps most importantly, is seen as major future market for and a legitimate manufacturer of the company's consumer line.

Disney already has licensed six companies in the country, including Srithai Superware Co. Ltd., which Feenie described as "a model for us" because it is following the rules and still making hefty profits. Srithai produces children's dinnerware sets and utensils for Disneyland and DisneyWorld in the United States, Tokyo's Disneyland and other foreign outlets.

"We're not just going to be the big foreigner clubbing the little guy," Feenie said in an interview. "We want to help develop local business. And it will be the locals who will fight for us because they will see their own interests hurt by the pirates."

Following complaints from the Thai licensees, Disney hired an outfit in the anti-counterfeiting field to run a three-month survey of the market.

A "pile of cases" accumulated, he said, and with police cooperation, raids were staged beginning in March against the most flagrant violators. Typically, these were sweatshop-type operators with their own retail outlets.

Confiscated merchandise worth about $30,000 has been burned in big piles at a city dump. Disney executives hope the bonfires will deter the fakers.

"We'll continue with the program. There will be no let-up until there is a significant drop in the level of counterfeiting," Feenie said. "We're hoping other companies will join us. More hands make lighter work."

The Disney vice president said similar campaigns to protect copyrights and trademarks will be launched in Taiwan, South Korea and Malaysia, while a "second phase" will focus on the Philippines and Indonesia. China, despite its "avalanche of counterfeits," is not a current priority because of recent political turmoil.

AP Laserphoto

A plainclothes policeman dumps counterfeits of Walt Disney clothing and books into a pile before setting them afire recently. The Walt Disney Co. is launching an Asia-wide offensive against pirates of their products.

The massive fakery reflects Disney's mass appeal among Asians — "Everyone loves Disney characters," says Feenie. The retail value of Disney's consumer products, excluding videotapes, in Asia is estimated at more than $1 billion and further growth is projected.

Legitimate Disney business in Taiwan has doubled in the last two years. "The Mickey and Donald Show," a potpourri of old cartoons dubbed in Mandarin, is seen by 250 million Chinese each week, making it the No. 1 TV show in the world in terms of viewership, Feenie said.

In Japan, which is virtually counterfeit-free, Disney is notching double-digit growth and considering another theme park along the lines of Tokyo's Disneyland which opened in 1983 and has been a money spinner since.

The company, Feenie said, is even thinking about markets such as Vietnam and the Indian subcontinent, where Mickey Mouse and his crew have yet to make an inroad.

'Indiana Jones' most recent character to seek Holy Grail

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — The Holy Grail may not exist but it's a proven moneymaker.

Scholars say the makers of the blockbuster movie "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade" are just the latest to cash in on the search for the impossible icon.

A 12th century abbot was the first to claim he had found the cup that Jesus used at the Last Supper, and his monastery became the wealthiest in England, according to Eckehard Simon, professor of Germanic medieval literature at Harvard University.

The Grail has since inspired romantic poems in several languages, a Wagner opera and even a Monty Python movie.

But it hadn't been a subject for archaeologists until filmmakers Steven Spielberg and George Lucas decided to dispatch their swashbuckling searcher for antiquities played by Harrison Ford.

In the movie, Dr. Indiana Jones sets out in search of his father (Sean Connery), who has disappeared while hunting for the Holy Grail. Together, they outsmart Nazi plunderers who are after the Grail because they believe anyone who drinks from it will gain immortality.

The truth about the Holy Grail is tangled in centuries of legend, stretching from the Druids to Adolf Hitler.

"Indiana Jones" screenwriter Jeffrey Boam said the different strands of Grail lore were so contradictory he chose among them and made up the rest.

The three knights guarding the cup are Boam's creation, for example, as is the notion that the Grail could not be taken from its resting place in an ancient temple in Jordan.

There is, however, some evidence that the Nazis were interested in the Grail.

Hitler used it in speeches as a metaphor for Aryan racial purity. Boam said Lucas discovered Hitler's interest in occult artifacts while making "Raiders of the Lost Ark." Boam's research turned up reports that the Nazis had looted a monastery in France in hopes of finding the Grail.

Simon and other scholars said the Grail myth flourished in 12th century England, though it has roots in earlier Celtic mythology.

According to the legend, Joseph of Arimathea used the chalice from which Jesus served the wine at the Last Supper to catch his blood during the crucifixion.

The apocryphal story has it that Joseph eventually brought the Grail to the monastery of Glastonbury — a tale the abbot of Glastonbury, Henry de Blois, promoted.

"If you had a precious relic, people would come on pilgrimages," Simon said. "They also managed to fabricate the story that King Arthur was buried there, and also that they had Excalibur," Arthur's sword.

"It was a tremendous publicity stunt, and it made Glastonbury the single wealthiest monastery in England until the Reformation," he added.

Grail tales also were written in medieval French and German.

One legend had the Grail coming to rest in the south of France, and by the 15th century, a French king had a collection of grail cups, according to popular book on the subject, "Holy Blood, Holy Grail."

A German version inspired Richard Wagner to write the opera "Parsifal" in 1882.

Hollywood took up the trail in 1954, when Paul Newman played a sculptor who made the cup for Jesus in "The Silver Chalice."

There is, however, no evidence the Grail existed, Simon said.

The Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York does have a figured silver cup that was once said to be the Grail. The Antioch Chalice, discovered in Syria in about 1910, was exhibited at the 1938 World's Fair, said curator Jane Hayward of the Cloisters, which once owned it. But the chalice was made 500 years after Jesus' birth, and scholars never believed the claims, she said.

Still, the Grail persists as a symbol of purity, faith and resurrection.

"The Holy Grail has come to take on a far greater meaning than the object itself," said Boam. "It stands for perfection, or any goal people might have."

Report pegs Rose as big bettor

Giamatti

NEW YORK (AP) — Baseball's 225-page report on Pete Rose paints a picture of an obsessed gambler willing to bet on virtually any sporting event, including games played by his Cincinnati Reds.

Rose bet $2,000 per game on the Reds and other baseball teams during the summer of 1987, lost $400,000 on baseball to one New York bookmaker in a three-month period that season, and made 52 bets on the Reds from April 8 to July 5, 1987, according to the report by baseball investigator John M. Dowd. If the allegations are found to be true, baseball's all-time hit leader could be banned from baseball for life.

Dowd's report, based on testimony, telephone records, canceled checks, betting sheets allegedly in Rose's handwriting and evidence provided by former Rose associates, was entered into evidence in an Ohio court last week and released Monday following a lawsuit by the Plain Dealer of Cleveland.

"The testimony and the documentary evidence gathered in the course of the investigation demonstrates that Pete Rose bet on baseball, and in particular, on games of the Cincinnati Reds Baseball Club, during the 1985, 1986 and 1987 seasons," the report said.

The primary evidence against Rose is provided by Ronald Peters and Paul G. Janszen, both convicted felons. But their testimony is corroborated by various records obtained during baseball's three-month investigation. The report says that Janszen and Thomas P. Gioiosa ran bets to Peters, a Franklin, Ohio bookmaker.

"The evidence revealed that in order to protect his stature as one of the most famous baseball players in major league history, Pete Rose employed middlemen to place bets for him with bookmakers and at the raetrack and to pay gambling losses and collect gambling winnings, thereby concealing his gambling activity," Dowd wrote.

Rose "admitted that he has bet on sports events since 1975," including NFL, NBA and college basketball games, the report said. However, Rose denied under oath that he ever bet on baseball.

Rose was granted a temporary restraining order Sunday, barring Commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti's hearing on the gambling allegations. On Monday, baseball's lawyers appealed the decision. Rose's answer is due Wednesday.

In an April 20 desposition, Rose was asked, "You don't bet on baseball on and you don't bet on your own team." Rose answered: "Absolutely."

However, Dowd's report quotes Rose associate Janszen as saying "within a three-month period of time, Pete Rose was in debt over $400,000 to the bookie in New York via Mike Bertolini in baseball betting alone." Bertolini is a Rose associate whom the report says placed bets with a Staten Island, N.Y., bookmaker identified only as Val.

Janszen, who recently completed a four-month sentence in a halfway house following his guilty plea to charges of falsifying his 1985 federal income tax, claims he is still owed money by Rose.

On Jan. 20, a month before baseball began its investigation, Janszen wrote to Rose's lawyer, Reuven J. Katz, about the Reds manager, saying, "It's time for him to take some responsibility for his actions and if need be get some professional help along the way before he has nothing left."

In the letter, Janszen claimed his relationship with Rose deteriorated. "Because I covered for him with his wife, while he was sleeping his way around town, she no longer wanted me in their house. ... Carol doesn't have the guts to leave him, so she has to blame his friends for his disgusting behavior."

Rose claimed a $34,000 check to Giosioa was to pay for bets he made on the 1987 Super Bowl and the 1987 NCAA basketball tournament. However, the 1987 NCAA tournament did not begin until March 12, the date the check was written.

"That's when I quit betting," Rose said in his deposition. "Because he (Gioiosa) called me up and said this guy was going to burn down my house and break my kid's legs if I didn't pay him."

Rose told Dowd that he didn't think much of bookmakers.

"See, what you have to realize, John, and you probably don't, I know you don't, but the majority of bookmakers are crybabies. You know, they could have the biggest weekend in the world and they're always complaining about they lose."

Janszen and his girlfriend, Danita Marcum, testified in the report that they placed bets on the Reds and other baseball games for Rose with Peters from mid-May 1987 to July 14, 1987.

"He bet on ...?" Dowd quotes himself asking Janszen.

"Baseball, only baseball," Janszen answered.

"Including the Reds?" Dowd asked.

"Yes, sir, every game," Janszen said.

Dowd's report said that, according to Janszen, Rose told Reds assistant clubhouse manager Mark Stowe this spring that he was betting through Janszen.

There was no comment from Stowe contained in the report. After Monday's game, Stowe denied that Rose told him that.

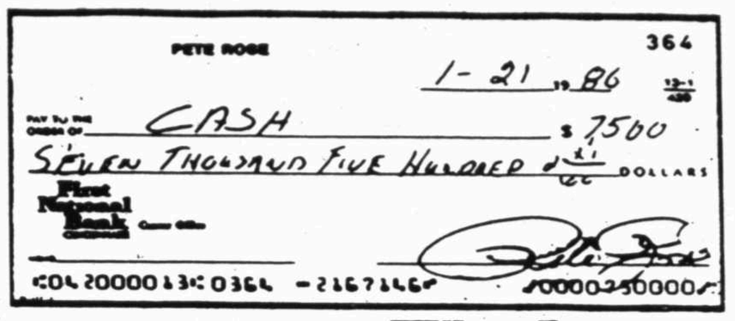

"No. Absolutely, not," Stowe said.

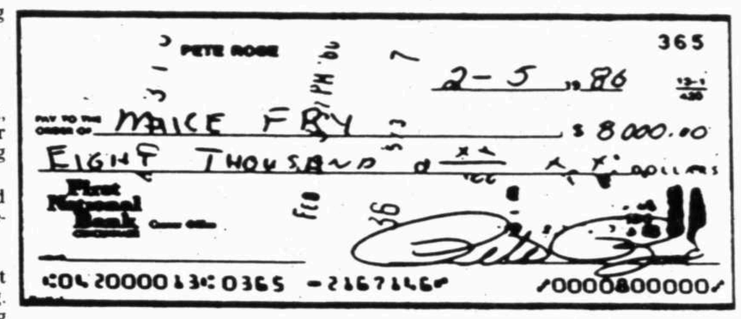

Dowd said a former FBI agent determined that three betting sheets were in Rose's handwriting. Rose was confronted with the evidence during his deposition, but denied any involvement. When Dowd asked whether the handwriting was his, Rose answered: "I couldn't tell you if that's my handwriting" and "I don't recognize it as my handwriting."

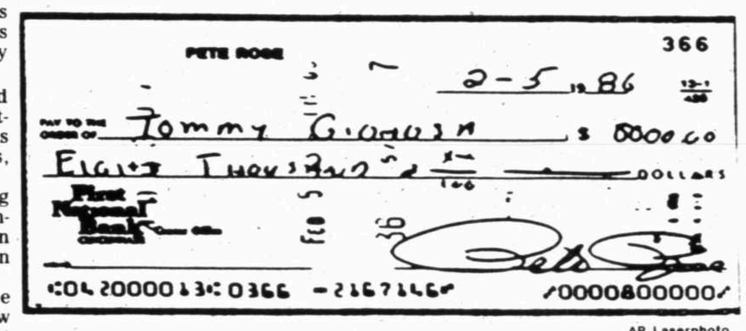

Dave Bernstein, a friend of Janszen's, testified that Rose called in bets on "baseball and basketball." Bernstein recalled hearing bets on teams such as the "Yankees, Cardinals, Pirates, Dodgers."

Bernstein said he did not recall the Reds being mentioned during these particular betting conversations, but he specifically recalled Janszen telling him during that period that Rose bet on Cincinnati.

Bernstein also said he witnessed Janszen give Rose hand signals during games indicating how Rose stood on his bets. Bernstein explained that Janszen, from a seat behind home plate, would indicate with his fingers and a thumbs-up or down sign how many games Rose was winning and how many he was losing.

Chang eludes upset

WIMBLEDON, England (AP) — The stage was set for the downfall of the teen-age clay-court king.

A switch to unfamiliar fast grass, a serve-and-volley opponent tailor-made for the surface and a first-round match in the world's most famous tennis arena.

But Michael Chang, 17 years, 4 months and 4 days old, carried on at Wimbledon Monday where he left off in the French Open at Paris — beating experienced professionals almost twice his age.

"There was a little bit more pressure on me coming here, but then I lost last year in the second round, so I don't have a lot to lose," Chang said after beating Bill Scanlon 6-4, 6-3, 2-6, 6-3. "People don't expect me to do well here."

Nobody expected Chang, a soft-spoken and devout Christian from Placentia, Calif., to win the French Open two weeks ago, either. But he became the first American to take the title in 34 years and the youngest men's champion of a Grand Slam tournament.

Scanlon, a 32-year-old who reached the quarterfinals here in 1979 but had to qualify this year, said he understood how Chang did it.

"He's a polite young man but when he goes on court he's going to do everything he can to beat you," Scanlon said. "You don't win the French Open easily."

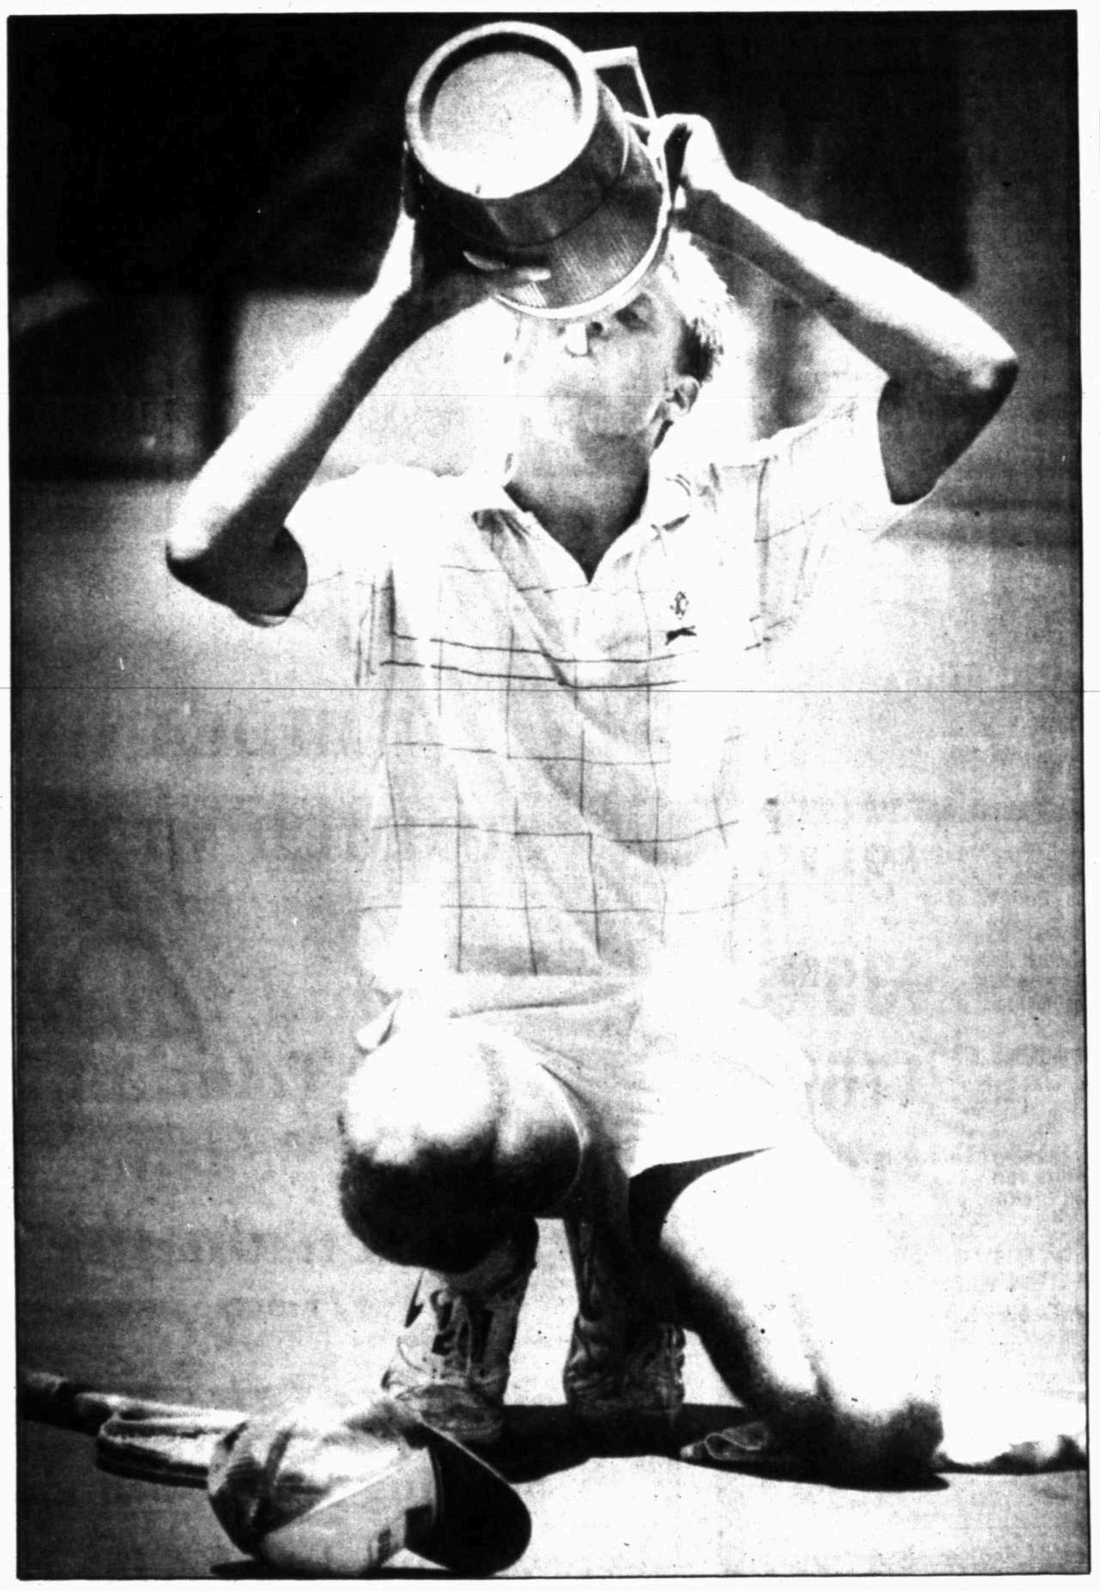

Chang, the No. 9 seed, was joined in the second round by nine other men's seeds, including the player he upset in the fourth round at Paris, Ivan Lendl, and the man he beat for the title, Stefan Edberg.

Lendl, the top seed despite his barren record at Wimbledon, almost was on the end of a first-round upset as he ground out a five-set victory over Venezuela's Nicolas Pereira, last year's world junior champion.

"I always have a hard time getting my rhythm but today was especially difficult," Lendl said after a 7-6, 4-6, 6-3, 6-7, 6-1 victory. "I didn't really break a sweat until the fifth set because there were no rallies."

Edberg, the defending men's champion, hardly perspired either as his smooth serve-and-volley game was too hot for Canadian Chris Pridham. Edberg, in the opposite half of the draw to Lendl and two-time champion Boris Becker, won 6-3, 6-4, 6-1 in the day's sun-splashed opening Centre Court match.

Commissioner hits back, files appeal

CINCINNATI (AP) — One hundred days after baseball announced the gambling investigation of Pete Rose, its commissioner is on the defensive and its report on the allegations are finally public.

A. Bartlett Giamatti struck back Monday against Hamilton County Common Pleas Judge Norbert A. Nadel's ruling that prevents the commissioner from deciding allegations that the Reds manager bet on his own team. Giamatti and other baseball officials had announced an investigation of the allegations on March 20.

Baseball also won a legal skirmish Monday when Nadel agreed to make public a report by investigator John M. Dowd that contains evidence Rose bet on Reds games from 1985 through 1987. Baseball's lawyers had tried for five days to get the report released.

Giamatti's lawyers told a state appeals court on Monday that the judge's ruling protecting Rose from any disciplinary action by the commissioner for the next two weeks has undercut Giamatti's ability to protect the integrity of baseball.

Giamatti's lawyers contend baseball will be irreparably harmed if the courts assume the power to decide baseball matters now handled by the commissioner.

"If every action by the commissioner to investigate and determine matters affecting the integrity of the game were to be subject to court intervention and delay, the commissioner's ability to safeguard the integrity of the game would be destroyed," Giamatti's lawyers told the 1st Ohio District Court of Appeals in a filing.

The Cincinnati-based appeals court gave Rose's lawyers until Wednesday to reply to the request that it suspend Nadel's decision to give Rose a temporary restraining order. Judges Rupert A. Doan, Harry T. Klusmeier and Lee H. Hildebrandt Jr. comprise the appellate panel.

Giamatti's lawyers claimed Nadel's unprecedented ruling an incorrect intrusion on Giamatti's authority and an attack upon baseball's foundation. Rose disagrees.

"I just want people to understand one thing about what we're trying to do," Rose said following the Reds' 5-3 victory Monday night over Los Angeles. "We're not trying to change the rules of baseball one iota.

"I'm not a pioneer of any sort. I love the game of baseball and baseball is my life. However, we feel the people who run baseball have to stay within the rules and the guidelines that they set, and we don't feel the commissioner did. And that's why we went to court.

"And lo and behold, the judge agreed with us, so we weren't as wrong as it seems."

Nadel's ruling prevents the commissioner from taking any action against Rose for 14 days and stipulates that he will remain manager of the Reds for that time. Rose could be banned from baseball for life if Giamatti concludes he bet on his own team.

In an interview with the Boston Globe in Tuesday's editions, Giamatti said he had not considered withdrawing from the process.

"No. Absolutely not," Giamatti said.

On the judge's decision to grant the restraining order, Giamatti said: " I was astonished. I just don't know, but again, I don't want to. I just don't know how you get from Point A to Point B."

Mid-City nine sweeps into city LL semifinals

From Staff Reports

The Mid-City Little League team secured a berth in the city championship semifinals with a 15-1 win over Tower Little League in Joe Mowles Memorial Tournament action Friday at Garrett Brown Park.

Mid-City played Greenwood Monday night. The Tower-North Central winner will play the Mid-City-Greenwood loser Tuesday.

Championship game is Wednesday, with the "if" game set for Thursday. If either Tower or North Central defeats Mid-City Wednesday, the teams will play again Thursday.

In Saturday action, North Central stayed alive by eliminating Eastern 16-4. Eastern had swamped Western 18-3 Friday to stay alive.

Potential top pick says health is fine

NEW YORK (AP) — A few days before the NBA draft is no time for one of the best seniors in college basketball to have questions raised about his health.

Sean Elliott of Arizona, winner of the Wooden award as the NCAA's best player this year, saw his future placed in jeopardy by reports that his liver was shot and he has a bad knee that would deteriorate in a few years.

"I don't where those rumors got started, but there are no questions about my health now," the 6-foot-8 Elliott said Monday on the eve of tonight's draft. "I don't have hepatitis or any blood problems and my knee is as fine as it can be."

Whether the bad health reports did any damage to Elliott's draft status is difficult to assess because the top 10 picks aren't falling into place as they have in recent years.

"I have no clue at all what will happen," Elliott said.

But the Arizona forward said he is convinced that teams are no longer worried about him.

"I took another blood test and it turned out my liver was fighting something in my body," he said. "But already reports and rumors were out that I had hepatitis or something. But everything's fine."

Elliott credited his attorney, Bob Woolf, with informing NBA teams that his health is good.

"(He) has put out the word from doctors and put the damage under control," Elliott said. "I don't know if the rumors have stopped, but I think all the teams have gotten the word."

Danny Ferry, another prospective No. 1 pick, said he saw too many drafts in his younger days to feel confident his future will be settled by tonight.

Reds get lift from O'Neill, Diaz; Gooden rocked

Associated Press

On the field at Riverfront Stadium, the Reds played the Dodgers. Everywhere else, the subject was Pete Rose.

The Cincinnati Reds, playing under a cloud caused by the public release of a report alleging their manager bet extensively on baseball, rallied to beat Los Angeles 5-3 Monday night.

Rose, granted a temporary restraining order Sunday that delayed Monday's scheduled hearing in New York before commissioner A. Bartlett Giamatti, did not appear on the field during the game.

Earlier in the day, baseball appealed the Ohio state court ruling. Later, a 225-page report prepared for Giamatti about Rose was released. It said the Reds manager had bet on his team and other baseball clubs.

"The atmosphere wasn't really good in our dugout after we had not scored in the 20-plus innings," Rose said. "We needed the win tonight. We needed a spark and got it from Jethro (Paul O'Neill) and then again from Bo (Diaz)."

Diaz hit a tiebreaking, two-run homer in the seventh inning off Tim Belcher, 4-7. Diaz, batting .186, had not homered since last Aug. 16.

"He can get on a tear and hit some home runs," Rose said. "Tonight's a start, isn't it? We needed a spark from someone like that."

Reliever Rob Dibble, 6-2, got the victory. John Franco went one inning for his major league-leading 20th save.

The victory gave the Reds something to celebrate after two lopsided losses to Los Angeles and Rose's continuing troubles over betting allegations.

"I played that game (as manager) like it was a World Series game tonight," Rose said. "I didn't want to lose that game."

Belcher relieved with the score tied 3-3 in the seventh. He walked Todd Benzinger to open the inning and then threw a high 1-2 fastball to Diaz, known as a fastball hitter.

"It was a bad pitch at the wrong time in the wrong place," Belcher said. "There are no excuses. It was a fastball up. I made the pitch that lost the game, and when you do that, nothing really matters."

Expos 5, Mets 1

Dwight Gooden, who experienced shoulder stiffness in his previous two starts, lasted only four innings and allowed a three-run homer to Spike Owen in a five-run fourth as Montreal beat New York at Olympic Stadium. It was the Expos' fourth straight victory and gave them a one-half game lead over the Mets and Chicago in the NL East.

Pascual Perez, 4-8, pitched a five-hitter and struck out 11 as the Expos snapped the Mets' four-game winning streak.

Pirates 2, Cubs 1

Doug Drabek pitched a seven-hitter as Pittsburgh beat Chicago at Wrigley Field to send the Cubs to their fourth straight loss.

The Pirates broke an eight-game losing streak against Chicago, dating back to last season. The Cubs have scored only two runs in their last four games.

Drabek, 5-5, has won four straight decisions and has three complete games.

Phillies 5, Cardinals 4

Dickie Thon's RBI single with the bases loaded capped a three-run ninth-inning rally as Philadelphia defeated St. Louis at Busch Stadium.

Giants 4, Astros 3

San Francisco got three pinch hits in a two-run seventh inning, including Ken Oberkfell's game-winning single, in beating Houston in the Astrodome. It was the Giants' eighth win in nine games.

Indians 4, Rangers 3

John Farrell won for only the second time in nine decisions and Doug Jones got his 17th save as Cleveland won in Texas.

Farrell, 4-8, ended his three-game losing streak. He gave up six hits in 6 2-3 innings and Jones finished with scoreless relief.

Bobby Witt, 5-8, retired only two batters and left with the Indians ahead 2-0. It was the shortest start in his four-year career.

Rangers catcher Geno Petralli was injured in a home-plate collision with Joel Skinner in the fourth inning and taken off the field on a stretcher.

Puckett earns yet more praise from boss

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnesota Twins manager Tom Kelly could only gush over Kirby Puckett, who once again showed his ability to make the big play when it counted the most.

"Kirby Puckett is a remarkable player," Kelly said after Puckett hit a solo home run with two outs in the 10th inning Monday night, lifting the Twins to a 4-3 victory over the Oakland Athletics.

"Most of the time when he swings the bat something good happens, and it did tonight," Kelly said.

In the only other AL action, Cleveland beat Texas 4-3. Seattle's game at Kansas City was rained out.

"This is only one game," said Puckett, who earlier drove in two runs with a triple and single. "Tomorrow is another day. A win is a win. We're just lucky to get this one.

"We've been a battling club all year," Puckett said. "We are just trying to keep our heads above water. Now we hope that things can get going for us. We can't worry about Oakland."

The Athletics have the best record in the American League, but are at their worst in extra innings. The loss Monday night dropped their record in extra-inning games to 0-6.

"It's frustrating to lose whether you go 8½ innings or into the 10th," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said.

The Athletics made it 3-3 with a run in the ninth, missing a chance for more runs by leaving the bases loaded.

Given a reprieve, Minnesota came back for its 12th victory in 17 games.

Puckett's home run was his fifth of the season. Todd Burns, 4-2, had not allowed a home run in 56 innings this season.

"I tried to be a little too fine with the pitch and he drove it," Burns said. "You make that pitch 10 times and half the time they are going to pop it up."

Jeff Reardon, 2-2, who gave up the Athletics' run in the ninth, pitched a perfect 10th inning for the victory.

DRAFT

"I may not even be sure what I'm playing until Wednesday or Thursday," said Ferry, the 6-10 Duke forward. "I remember Charles Smith and Mel Turpin both had interviews with their new teams after being drafted, and then got traded the same day."

Ferry's father, Bob, the general manager of the Washington Bullets, traded Turpin on draft day 1987 and Smith was traded by Philadelphia to the Los Angeles Clippers last year.

"The last few weeks have taken a long time and I'd like to know where I'm going to be," Ferry said. "But I know that draft day is traditionally a crazy day. I've seen so many things happen. I could end up with almost any team."

The first pick is expected to come from a group that includes Ferry, Elliott, Stacey King of Oklahoma, Louisville's Pervis Ellison and Glen Rice of Michigan.

"I'm getting a little antsy, so I've bent my dad's ear three of four times a day," Ferry said. "He says he's heard a million reports, but no one knows what's going to happen."

Ferry sees positives in each of the first three teams to choose in the first-ever nighttime draft. Sacramento is No. 1, followed by the Clippers and San Antonio.

"Sacramento hasn't said what they're going to do, so that makes it hard for other teams to know what they're going to do," Ferry said. "I could fit in with Sacramento's offense. They have a strong backcourt and I know some guys on the team — Kenny Smith and Vinny Del Negro."

Besides Ferry and Ellison, the most highly regarded forward prospects are Nick Anderson and Kenny Battle of Illinois, Ricky Blanton of Louisiana State, Chucky Brown of North Carolina State, Tony Dawson of Florida State, Vlade Divac of Yugoslavia, Tom Hammonds of Georgia Tech, Ed Horton of Iowa, Dyron Nix of Tennessee, J.R. Reid of North Carolina, Connecticut's Cliff Robinson, Brigham Young's Michael Smith and Randy White of Louisiana Tech.

The center position is thin in this year's draft, with only King and Gary Leonard of Missouri considered first-round prospects.

WIMBLE

Becker, the bookmakers' favorite, also won in straight sets over American qualifier Bryan Shelton, while Jimmy Connors, in his 18th Wimbledon at 36 years old, started with a four-set victory over Andrei Cherkasov of the Soviet Union.

"I feel comfortable about walking out on about five courts in the world and this is one of them," Connors said after a typically crowd-pleasing performance on Centre Court.

Also advancing were No. 4 Mats Wilander of Sweden, No. 7 Miloslav Mecir of Czechoslovakia, No. 12 Amos Mansdorf of Israel, No. 13 Aaron Krickstein of the United States and No. 15 Mikael Pernfors of Sweden.

Four women's seeds — No. 6 Helena Sukova, No. 9 Natalia Zvereva, No. 11 Monica Seles and No. 15 Lori McNeil — reached the second round.

Two men's seeds were upset on the first day.

No. 6 Jakob Hlasek was tripped up in straight sets by Thomas Hogstedt of Sweden and Andrei Chesnokov, a semifinalist at Paris, didn't have the game to cope with the grass and was ousted by Australian Brad Drewett.

Chang didn't play a grass-court game either and had sporadic lapses against Scanlon. In the middle of the third set, he lost 11 straight points and conceded 12 in a row during the fourth set.

But just as in Paris, Chang stayed cool and composed and wore down Scanlon, mainly from the baseline, in the dusk.

Blast wins 2nd tourney

From Staff Reports

DALLAS — The Midland Blast soccer team won its second tournament this month by sweeping through three opponents to win the Gatorade President's Cup tournament here recently.

The Blast pulled out the tourney with an 2-1 overtime win over the Mesquite Blast in the championship match. Midland got into the finals with a 2-1 semifinals win over the Dallas Invaders and a 2-0 shutout of the Denton Tornados in the first round.

Team members are Jason Brown, Ryan Hamblin, Jesse Land, Steve Lawrence, Danny Main, Todd Meade, Matt Perkins, Mario Rodriquez, Andy Self, Tim Tucker, Cody Welch, Matt Worley and guest players Joe Dominquez and Chris Murray.

Coach Tom Worley's team also won the Dr. Pepper Tournament here earlier this month.

Pursuit-Coors qualifies for national meet

From Staff Reports

LAFAYETTE, La — The Pursuit-Coors softball team captured a berth in the upcoming National Women's Open Tournament with a third-place finish in a national qualifying tournament here recently.

All-tournament selection Jeanette Amado led Pursuit-Coors, while Cindy Marlor, Deanne Hamilton, Aileen Miller, Kathy Condron and Janet Sloan.

Pursuit-Coors will travel to Hutchinson, Kan. on Labor Day weekend for the national tournament. They were ranked 16th in the nation last season.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 28, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: A study program or research grant will attract your attention. Spontaneous decisions work out great, especially in October and November. Long-distance travel is favored for the next few months. Heed the advice of a more experienced partner or consult an expert if a real estate or legal dispute arises. Try not to be so competitive with your work associates. Teamwork will bring swifter progress.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: comic Mel Brooks, King Henry VIII, musicman Richard Rodgers, slugger Don Baylor, philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau, author Eric Ambler.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A new job will exceed your expectations. Focus on money matters and protecting your credit rating. You learn from new experiences and high-powered associates. Avoid putting all your eggs into one basket.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Good eating habits will have you feeling better soon. Lots of new activities keep you on the run. A close relationship enters a different phase. The door to happiness swings wide open.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Things begin to come together for you at work and home. Your finances improve. Kindly but firmly discourage the extravagant expectations of your children and partner. Save money for investment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Today could find you hopping about in several directions. Put first things first. Reach a better understanding about money with a famiy member. Luxury purchases must be postponed a while longer.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): A meeting of minds today will provide a solid plank for building a lasting love relationship. Learn to control your emotions when facing a setback. Sound confident and others will help you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Optimistic people will be around to boost your morale today. Stop complaining about things you cannot change. That check really is in the mail this time. Count on your family for honest advice.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): An idealistic group could give you an opportunity to study or travel. It is time to stand on your own. Make a move toward greater independence. Those you admire applaud your initiative!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Outdoor activities are high on your priority list today. Try to change habits that you know irritate your partner. Self-discipline wins you new respect from influential friends. Seek introductions to prominent people.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Good reading skills will help a child do well in college. A confrontation only gives you new self-confidence. Your refusal to be bullied impresses pa. tner. Avoid making too many demands on loved ones.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Traveling for pleasure will bring you many dividends. Try to slow down. You will boost your productivity and feel less tense if you go about your chores more calmly. Postpone non-essential tasks.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Imaginative career moves are favored. You get a rare work opportunity, thanks to a solid day-to-day performance. Be loyal to those who have helped you behind the scenes. Repay past favors.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may feel more outgoing than usual. Reach out to people with new ideas. Keep your commitments to loved ones no matter what other pressures you face. Lifelong ties deserve top priority.

Truth is not only stranger than fiction, it can be far more amusing. If you don't believe us, try reading Eddie Kantar's new The Best of Eddie Kantar (Granovetter books, paperback, 214 pp., $13.95. Available from The Bridge World, 39 W. 94th St., New York, N.Y. 10024, post free) for proof. While we consider the price outrageous, it will afford several hours of merriment as you peruse the foibles and failings of some of the greatest names in bridge.

The late Lew Mathe dealt this hand at rubber bridge and score considerations plus his weakness in the majors led him to open three clubs. That ended the auction.

"West led a high heart which Mathe won in dummy. A diamond was led to the queen, followed by the ace of diamonds, under which East dropped the king.

"A third diamond was led and Mathe, carefully—very carefully—ruffed with dummy's four. A heart was ruffed back to the closed hand, followed by a fourth round of diamonds.

"West was pleased to be able to put his singleton three of trumps to work, and this turned out to be the setting trick.

"If Mathe carelessly ruffs the third round of diamonds with the deuce, he makes the hand. You can't win 'em all!"

Bob Hamman, Marshall Miles, Billy Eisenberg, Al Roth and Tobias Stone are among the characters that stroll in and out of the various chapters. Need we say more?

Miss Houston crowned Miss Texas

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — After finishing second in the Miss Texas USA pageant last year, Stephanie Kuehne hoped she would be crowned during her second try.

"I've been dreaming about this the past year," Ms. Kuehne said after her Miss Houston sash was replaced with Miss Texas USA Monday night.

Keuhne

As the new Miss Texas USA, the 21-year-old model from Missouri City won more than $90,000 in prizes, but also faces the pressure of keeping the state's streak at the Miss USA contest alive.

The past five Miss Texas USA winners have gone on to win the Miss USA pageant, under the tutorship of El Paso's Richard Guy and Rex Holt, who produced the Texas pageant.

"I'm already very honored to be Miss Texas and I'm going to work to be number six," said Ms. Kuehne, a former student at Texas Tech and Southwest Texas State.

Tammy Duncan, Miss Addison, was runner-up in the pageant that was telecast statewide and attended by 1,542 at San Antonio's Municipal Auditorium.

Second runner-up was Laura Marz, Miss Southeast Texas. Chris Bogard, Miss Tomball, was fourth and Lisa Barnes, Miss Coastal Bend, was fifth.

Ninety-six women from across the state competed in the pageant.

• • •

ASPEN, Colo. (AP) — "Miami Vice" star Don Johnson was decked out in a white tuxedo and Oscar-nominated actress Melanie Griffith wore a white lace wedding gown as they remarried at a ceremony at their rustic ranch.

Johnson, 39, and Ms. Griffith, 31, were married under a white, flower-entwined arbor in a non-denominational ceremony attended by about 30 people, publicist Elliott Mintz said in announcing the Monday afternoon ceremony.

"She looked beautiful," he said.

Ms. Griffith, who is expecting to give birth in autumn, was nominated for an Academy Award for her "Working Girl."

Johnson and Ms. Griffith were married in 1976 and divorced within two years.

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) — Tough-guy principal Joe Clark is recovering satisfactorily from open heart surgery and will be discharged from the hospital July 8, a spokesman says.

Clark, who attained nationwide fame at Paterson's Eastside High School for carrying a bat and a bullhorn to fight drugs and crime, has stayed busy reading fan mail, said Tom Casey, spokesman for Newark Beth Israel Medical Center.

"He's been upgraded to good condition," he said.

Clark, who was portrayed in the movie "Lean on Me," has received about 300 fan letters since he was admitted to the hospital May 24 with a bacterial infection in a heart valve, Casey said.

Clark, 52, underwent surgery May 28 to replace the infected valve.

UNIVERSITY CITY, Mo. (AP) — Rock 'n' roll star Chuck Berry was among 10 people honored with bronze stars along the St. Louis Walk of Fame.

"I am really flattered, as well as honored, and very proud...to have this sort of compliment paid to me," Berry, 62, said during Sunday's ceremony outside the Blueberry Hill tavern in suburban St. Louis.

The tavern owner, Joe Edwards, came up with the idea for the sidewalk tribute to honor the contributions of prominent figures in St. Louis' history.

Others honored were baseball Hall of Famer Stan Musial, dancer Katherine Dunham, architect and engineer James B. Eads, poet T.S. Eliot, musician Scott Joplin, aviator Charles A. Lindbergh, actor Vincent Price, St. Louis Post-Dispatch founder Joseph Pulitzer and playwright Tennessee Williams.

ATLANTA (AP) — Rob Lowe's lawyer challenged a federal lawsuit by the mother of a teen-age girl who allegedly was videotaped with the actor during a sexual encounter.

Attorney Edgar Neely III told U.S. District Judge G. Ernest Tidwell on Monday that Georgia law allows only a custodial parent the right to sue on a matter concerning a child. Neely said Lena Jan Parsons' parents have divorced during the past year and her father, John Parsons, was granted custody.

The attorney also argued that the mother, Lena Arlene Wilson, has suffered no direct harm from the tape, which has been copied, widely circulated and shown in edited form on television.

Tidwell did not indicate when he would rule on the motion to dismiss the lawsuit.

The lawsuit filed last month accused Lowe of seducing the then-16-year-old Miss Parsons during the 1988 Democratic National Convention in Atlanta. The lawsuit says Lowe inflicted emotional harm on the mother and seeks unspecified damages.

Mrs. Wilson's attorney, Hue Henry, said Miss Parsons was living with her mother at the time the videotape was made, and that the tape has caused direct harm by humiliating the family and straining the parent-daughter relationship.

Lowe, the 25-year-old star of such films as "St. Elmo's Fire" and "About Last Night," did not attend the hearing.

NEW YORK (AP) — Actor William Hurt became worried that his house was bugged when he learned his former live-in lover was suing him, and ordered his housekeeper to shred financial records, the former employee testified.

"He told me I had to take the financial records and quietly destroy them," Dianna Schiebel said Monday on the fifth day of a trial to determine whether Hurt, 39, had a common-law marriage with dancer Sandra Jennings, the 32-year-old mother of Hurt's son.

Jennings is suing Hurt for divorce, claiming that a common-law marriage exists between them, based on four weeks the couple spent in Beaufort, S.C., where he was filming "The Big Chill." She says the marriage began Dec. 9, 1982, when the actor learned he was divorced from actress Mary Beth Hurt. He and Jennings left the state Jan. 10, 1983.

Hurt and Jennings were together about three years, spending most of the time in New York, which does not permit common-law marriages.

Schiebel said she met Hurt in May 1987 when he hired her housekeeping firm. She said he often called Jennings and their son, Alexander Devon Hurt, now 6, "my family."

Schiebel, who eventually became Hurt's personal assistant, said Hurt became worried that his house was bugged when he learned Jennings was going to sue him.

She said Hurt told her: "We have to be very careful from now on in everything we say and do because Sandy will be looking for information that could hurt me."

Schiebel said she put the financial records through Hurt's personal shredder after she was asked to destroy them.

Schiebel said Hurt told her he was afraid he could lose everything.

Hurt, at the defense table, lowered his head and ran his fingers through his hair during the testimony. Jennings sat with her back to him and stared at the witness.

In another development in the state court case, a professor at the University of South Carolina Law School hired by Hurt testified Monday that Hurt and Jennings did not meet that state's requirements for a common-law marriage.

OIL SPILL

Tropical storm slows Texas spill cleanup

LA PORTE, Texas (AP) — A tropical storm that swept through the area slowed efforts to clean up an oil spill in the Houston Ship Channel, but workers have been able to collect nearly 4,000 or the 6,000 barrels of oil that spilled over the weekend, authorities said.

About a dozen huge vacuum machines, called "supersuckers," and regular vacuum machines are being used to pump the oil from the water, U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Bob Morehead said Monday.

"The weather is slowing the clean up a little bit, but it's still in progress," Morehead said of Tropical Storm Allison. "The wind makes the (water) choppy and the rain is a pain in the neck, but they're still going ahead."

Morehead said he couldn't speculate when the remaining oil would be removed.

The spill, which occurred Friday night, is the worst along the Houston Ship Channel since 1981, when the "Olympic Gloria" dumped about 7,000 barrels of oil after colliding with a tanker.

Crew members from a tugboat, the damaged barge it was pushing and the Panamanian-registered tanker involved in the collision underwent drug tests Saturday, but Morehead said Sunday the results are not expected for several days.

The barge's owner, Houston-based Coastal Towing Co., contracted with a firm to have all those aboard the tug and barge tested for drug use, officials said. The 433-foot tanker is owned by Iino of Japan.

All parties involved have been ordered to appear this morning at the Coast Guard's Marine Investigation Office in Houston for a hearing to examine what caused the mishap, officials said.

Most of the remaining slick Monday was contained in a turn basin at the west end of the channel, Morehead said. There were three booms around the basin to keep the oil from escaping, he added.

The collision of the tanker "Rachel-B" and the barge occurred about 6:20 p.m. Friday, and by Saturday the spill had coated a mile of shoreline between the mouth of the Bayport Channel — about two miles from the accident site — to the tip of Red Bluff, about a mile south, officials said.

Coast Guard officials have said the spill occurred at a site that is not considered as environmentally sensitive as other areas of Galveston Bay, and most of the oil that washed ashore affected industrial property.

However, officials said it will take time to determine whether any environmental damage will result from the accident.

Meanwhile, a prematurely dropped anchol is being blamed as a possible cause for an 800,000-gallon oil spill in the Delaware, River, where workers removed by hand "black Jello" that mechanical skimmers couldn't suck up.

The spill was one of three that occurred in U.S. waters last weekend.

Coast Guard hearings were to begin today on the spills off Rhode Island and Texas, which resulted from a collision of the tanker Rachel-B and an oil barge owned by Coastal Workers drag a sausage boom Monday in an effort to clean up 420,000 gallons of oil spilled into the ocean along the Rhode Island coastline.

Ways to Clean Up Oil Spills

Mechanical

- Floating booms contain the spill near the source or block it from sensitive areas
- Skimmer boats herd the oil together to be vacuumed up onto collection barges
- Strings of absorbent pads soak up oil on beaches and in water too shallow for skimmer boats

Fire

- Oil must be fairly concentrated to burn, and crude is hard to ignite
- Chemical burning agents and lasers improve effectiveness

Chemical

- Coagulating agents cause floating crude to gather together for easier pickup, or sink to the bottom where it does less harm
- Dispersing agents break slicks
- Disadvantage: Chemical agents are pollutants just as the oil is

Natural

- Wind and wave action emulsify some oil into the water (like shaking salad dressing)
- Bacteria consume some crude over time

Latest oil spills different from Valdez accident

WASHINGTON (AP) — Major oil spills in Rhode Island, Delaware and Texas provided a big challenge for the Coast Guard but the tasks differed sharply from the massive Alaska spill that is still being cleaned up three months after it happened.

"Here we have a spill that we hoped wouldn't happen, but we were prepared for it," said Coast Guard spokesman Rick Meidt, who worked on both the Alaskan spill and the spill last Friday at the mouth of Narragansett Bay off Rhode Island.

"Up there in Alaska, it was a spill that couldn't happen, but it did," he said.

The same pumps used to evacuate 40 million gallons of Alaskan crude from the Exxon Valdez after it ran aground March 24 in Prince William Sound and spilled more than 10 million gallons were being used on the World Prodigy in Naragansett Bay.

But they were pumping a far different substance.

While the Alaskan crude continues to pollute shorelines as far as 450 miles away from the original spill, the 420,000 gallons of refined heating oil that poured out of the World Prodigy have largely evaporated or dissipated.

On the Delaware River, cleanup crews were contending with yet a different consistency: basketball-sized globs of oil from 800,000 gallons that oozed out of a Uraguayan tanker Saturday. But that was also easier to clean up than the Alaskan crude.

Spills likely to hamper offshore drilling plans

WASHINGTON — The latest oil shipping accidents in U.S. waters are raising the likelihood Congress will widen restrictions on drilling in promising areas off the shores of Alaska, California and other states, oil industry analysts and lawmakers say.

The House Appropriations Committee is to consider Wednesday a bill containing tough limits on oil development in the Bristol Bay area of the southern Bering Sea and in federally controlled waters off California, New England and the Florida Keys.

Rep. Frank Pallone, D-N.J., predicted Monday the legislation will pass the full Congress this session, in part because of publicity about oil spills over the weekend in the Delaware River, in Houston's ship channel and near Newport, R.I.

"They just point out how delicate the near-shore environment is," Pallone said in an interview. He wrote letters to several major oil companies earlier this month asking them not to bid for federal lease sales off the New England coast.

Presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said Monday the latest spills show the "pervasiveness of the problem" but don't require new steps by President Bush such as initiatives to limit oil exploration.

The latest spills were a significant blow to the oil industry, which is still reeling from the devastating Exxon Valdez oil spill March 24 in Alaska's Prince William Sound.

That accident, the worst spill in U.S. history, almost immediately killed chances for congressional approval of legislation to open the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, on Alaska's North Slope, to oil and natural gas exploration.

A further consequence of the recent tanker accidents — and public criticism of the industry's cleanup response — may be a new ban on exploration in Bristol Bay, a rich fishing area Alaska's state government says is more vulnerable to spill damage than Prince William Sound.

"They'll stop Bristol Bay" exploration, Dillard Spriggs, president of the New York consulting company Petroleum Analysis Ltd., said Monday. "It's going to be hard to explore very much in Alaska" until the industry improves its public image.

Although most of the Capitol Hill focus on offshore oil exploration has been limited to Alaska, California, Florida and New England, movements to ban or slow down drilling have emerged in Oregon, Washington, North Carolina and South Carolina.

The oil industry, long aware of political pressures to limit offshore drilling, until recently sought to rely on its past safety record and assertions that less domestic drilling will mean more U.S. reliance on foreign suppliers.

MARKETS

Oil price rally loses steam

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices turned lower, after posting strong gains Monday.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, August contracts for West Texas Intermediate fell 13 cents to $20.12 at midmorning. Posted price continues to remain at $18.75.

Monday, the contract broke through the $20 barrier, surging 54 cents to close at $20.25. Septmeber contracts rose 47 cents to close at $19.42.

Among refined products, the July contract for unleaded gasoline advanced 0.77 cent to finish at 63.69 cents a gallon and heating oil rose 0.16 cent to 49.65 cents a gallon. Other contract months also finished higher.

With little economic news to drive prices, analysts attributed Monday's advances mainly to technical factors and to OPEC-related news.

Two separate publications reported that Kuwaiti oil output, while still above the quota set by the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, is declining. Kuwait at a meeting earlier this month had rejected its OPEC-imposed production ceiling and set its own quota, saying it needed to exploit its massive oil reserves.

"The reports came through, the market reacted briefly but the impact wasn't lasting," said Michael Hiley, energy analyst with Drexel Burham Lambert Inc.

Kuwait's oil minister Sheik Ali Khalifa Al-Sabah also was quoted as denying that Kuwait increased its oil sales after the OPEC meeting in Vienna, Austria, earlier this month. The minister said that the emirate's sales blitz, which started before the conference, was halted within days of the meeting's conclusion.

Dollar flat in quiet trading

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed in quiet, early European trading today, and foreign currency dealers said the market was waiting for cues from economic news to be released this week.

Gold prices fell.

"The dollar is completely flat today," said one trader in Milan, Italy.

He said investors are uncertain about where to go and are waiting for Thursday's release of U.S. leading indicators and for the outcome of the West German central bank's policy meeting the same day.

- 6.6343 French francs
- 2.2045 Dutch guilders

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $374.30 a troy ounce, compared with late Monday's $375.25. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $373.55 dollars.

In Zurich, the bid price was $373.85, down from $374.25 late Monday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 1.15 to close at a bid of $375.11.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.29 a troy ounce, down from Monday's $5.33.

Stocks retreat 20 points

NEW YORK (AP) — Stock prices turned downward Monday as traders cashed in some of the gains that carried the market to new post-crash highs last week.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials, up 49.70 points on Friday, dropped back 20.49 to 2,511.38.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 4 to 3 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 630 up, 840 down and 498 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 143.60 million shares, down from 198.72 million in the previous session. Nationwide, consolidated volume in NYSE-listed issues, including trades in those stocks on regional exchanges and in the over-the-counter market, totaled 171.38 million shares.

The market's climb last week to new peaks since the debacle in the fall of 1987 was spurred by accumulating evidence of a slowing economy.

As interest rates fell in the credit markets, rumors circulated that the Federal Reserve might soon lower its discount rate, the charge it sets on loans to private financial institutions.

The Fed took no such step immediately, however, and traders began the new week in a more cautious mood.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Time rejects offer from Paramount

NEW YORK (AP) — Time Inc. rejected a sweetened $12.2 billion takeover offer offer from Paramount Communications Inc., calling the $200-a-share bid inadequate and restating its intention to pursue its own $14 billion offer for Warner Communications Inc.

Time reiterated its objections to Paramount's earlier $175-a-share, or $10.7 billion, bid, stating Monday that none of the conditions in Paramount's offer had been met.

The conditions include Paramount's obtaining of financing for the deal and the rights to operate some 800 cable television systems Time owns, as well as the termination of Time's merger agreement with Warner.

France threatens to back out of Europe '92

MADRID, Spain (AP) — Angered by Britain's rejection of a single European currency and central bank, France is threatening to renege on an agreement that forms part of the drive for a united European market by 1992.

British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher refused at the opening session of a two-day summit Monday to embrace a plan for a tight monetary union of the 12 nations of the European Economic Community.

Her opposition prompted French President Francois Mitterrand to threaten to renege on promises for more liberalized money markets.

Former employees charges Texaco defrauded oil firms

TULSA, Okla. (AP) — A former supervisor for Texaco Trading and Transportation Inc. alleges in a lawsuit that employees at a pipeline terminal defrauded seven major oil companies for up to eight years.

Gary Wade filed the $2.3 million civil racketeering lawsuit in U.S. District Court against Texaco Trading and four of its Cushing terminal employees.

Texaco Trading officials would not respond to Wade's 31-page list of allegations, filed at the request of U.S. District Judge Thomas Brett to support Wade's initial lawsuit filed April 18.

James Sturdivant of Tulsa, an attorney for Texaco Trading, said it would be improper for Texaco or its employees to respond to Wade's statements outside court.

"But remember, these are charges that have been hurled at us by a fired employee," Sturdivant told The Tulsa Tribune.

Wade was fired Nov. 17 after being accused of tampering with equipment used to test oil for quality and non-crude substances. Wade contends he was fired because he had complained about activities of Texaco Trading and its employees.

Wade alleged the illegal acts included theft from interstate shipment of oil, mail and wire fraud, transportation of stolen oil and sale or receipt of stolen oil.

Eastern pilots negotiate with judge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Eastern Airlines and its pilots' union are negotiating under court supervision over the strike-bound company's attempt to cancel the pilots' contract and impose wage concessions.

The meeting was the first between Eastern and ALPA since the airline last week sought court permission to cancel its contract with the pilots. The two sides met at the offices of David I. Shapiro, the court-appointed examiner overseeing the airline on behalf of the bankruptcy court.

ALPA spokesman Dan Ashby said Monday's meeting was mainly a "feeling-out process, a discussion of basic issues." Eastern declined comment.

Other ALPA officials said they did not expect Eastern to offer the job-security provisions the union says would be necessary for an agreement.

Most of Eastern's pilots and flight attendants have been honoring the pickets of the International Association of Machinists since the machinists began their strike March 4, forcing the carrier to sharply cut back the number of its flights.

Texas mourns Sears move

Could have brought 6,000 jobs to Dallas

DALLAS (AP) — An official who tried to lure Sears, Roebuck and Co.'s 6,000-employee Merchandising Group to the Dallas area likened the retailer's relocation search to a new car purchase.

"There's one you want and one or two others you're looking at in case the first doesn't work out," said Ray Kuchling of the City of Dallas economic development office.

The company announced Monday it will move to Hoffman Estates, a suburb about 20 miles northwest of Chicago. Sears officials made it known last year they were interested in moving the division from the 110-story Sears Tower in downtown Chicago to less costly quarters.

The Illinois site won out over in a bidding war over Dallas and two North Carolina cities.

Dallas-area officials said they made the best offer possible, but added they couldn't match the tax incentives offered by Illinois.

The Chicago Tribune said Illinois offered an incentive package worth an estimated $61 million to lure the Merchandise Group to a 200-acre site in Hoffman Estates. The newspaper said local tax breaks to Sears will be worth an estimated $178 million.

Dallas Partnership, an economic development affiliate of the Greater Dallas Chamber of Commerce, worked seven months compiling information and wooing Sears executives.

Borden strike flows 118 barrels

From Staff Reports

An unidentified oil discovery has been completed in Borden County, north of the Elsie field.

J. INGRAM OIL & GAS INC., Dallas, finaled the No. 1 Smith to flow 118 barrels of 42 gravity crude on a 14/64 inch choke with a flowing tubing pressure of 210 psi. The well flowed from perforations 9,220 to 9,288 ft., no treatment recorded. Gas-oil ratio is 763:1.

Permitted as a 10,500 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 9,770 ft. and plugged back to 9,486 ft.

The well topped the Canyon at 8,697 ft., Strawn at 8,920, and Ellenburger at 9,748 ft. on ground elevation of 2,952.6 ft. Pay was topped at 9,270 ft.

Location is 2,173 ft. from south and 2,040 ft. from east lines of Section 10, Block 32, EL&RR survey, 18 miles northwest of Gail.

J. Ingram Oil & Gas Inc. has completed a 118-barrel discovery in Borden County, north of the Elsie field.

Kent field gains southwest extension

A new Mays producer has been added to the Clairemont Southwest field of Kent County, extending the pay west and slightly south.

DAN A. HUGHES CO., Beeville, potentialed the No. 1-B Mays Trust to pump 12 barrels of 38.6 gravity crude and 190 barrels of water from perforations 6,897 to 6,905 ft. Gas-oil ratio is 2,083:1.

Permitted as a 7,700 ft. wildcat, the well was drilled to 7,200 ft., where 5 1/2 inch casing was set.

Drilling continues in Sugg Ranch field

IP PETROLEUM CO. INC., Midland, continues activity in the Sugg Ranch (Canyon) field, adding a new producer to the Sterling County portion.

On potential test, the No. 3103 Sugg "D" flowed 74 barrels of 44.1 gravity crude, 1 Mmcfd and one barrel of water on a 12/64 inch choke. Flowing tubing pressure was 1,550 psi and the well flowed from perforations 7,350 to 7,688 ft. The interval was treated with 96,600 gallons of gel and 180,000 lbs. 20/40 sand. Gas-oil ratio is 13,513:1.

Drilled to 7,800 ft., the well was plugged back to 7,744 ft. with 4 1/2 inch casing set at 7,793 ft.

The well topped the Spraberry at 4,600 ft., Dean Sand at 5,894, and Wolfcamp at 6,045 ft. on ground elevation of 2,579 ft. Pay was topped at 7,348 ft.

Location is 660 ft. from north and 760 ft. from east lines of Section 31, Block 7, H&TC survey, 16 miles southwest of Sterling City.

Odessa operator adds two to Andrews field

ROYALTY EXPLORATION INC., Odessa, has added two new gas producers to the Embar (Yates) field of Andrews County.

Royalty tested the No. 1 University "20-10" for a calculated absolute open flow of 1.3 Mmcfd from perforations 2,727 to 2,922 ft.

The No. 2 University "20-10" was completed for a calculated absolute open flow of 1.12 Mmcfd. The well flowed from perforations 2,676 to 2,805 ft.

Both wells are located in Sectin 20, Block 10, ULS survey, 12 miles southwest of Andrews.

STORM

Towing Co. of Houston.

Among those scheduled to testify in Providence, R.I., was Capt. David G. Leonard, a harbor pilot who The New York Times said tried to warn the tanker it was heading into dangerous waters but his radio message came too late.

Coast Guard Capt. Eric Williams of the Providence office said the only evidence found so far showed that human error played a role in the spill.

He said there was no evidence of mechanical failure and noted that the ship's captain, Iakovos Georgudis, told Gov. Edward DiPrete he had made a mistake. DiPrete has said that Georgudis told him he erred in plotting the ship's course and by not having a pilot guide the ship at the mouth of Narragansett Bay.

Along 20 miles of the Delaware River, workers in boats scooped up blobs of congealed oil larger than basketballs, stuffing the goo into large trash bags. Skimmers dispatched after the Uruguayan tanker Presidente Rivera ran aground Saturday jammed in the dense oil blobs.

"It's like black Jello, it's horrible," said Joseph Monigle of New Castle, Del., as he watched workers from the shore.

Coast Guard officials scheduled a hearing Wednesday in Philadelphia on the spill.

DRILLING

But since the Valdez accident exposed the industry's inability to handle large-scale spills, oil companies have tried to take the offensive by promising to devote more money, personnel and equipment to responding to major accidents.

The latest spills came just days after a special task force of oil executives announced plans to spend $250 million over five years to create a nationwide network of cleanup equipment and workers to handle a major spill on any coastal waterway. The cleanup system is not expected to be working until next summer.

The American Petroleum Institute, representing the major oil companies, gave a muted response to the weekend spills. It said although its proposed regional response centers will be designed to handle worse disasters, the centers could have been called into action by the government if they had been in place.

The industry counters anti-drilling arguments by noting that U.S. dependence on foreign oil has risen sharply in recent years. Imported oil makes up about 45 percent of total U.S. supplies and the foreign share is expected to grow unless major oil fields are discovered on federal land.

DIFFERENT— SEARS

Pennsylvania and New Jersey was almost nonexistent because the oil was thick and was not washing up on the shore. In Alaska, by contrast, the soft crude seeped deep into beach sand.

In the Galveston Bay outside Houston, 250,000 gallons of oil that spilled in the collision of a tanker and a barge was confined to a small shipping channel and most of the oil that washed ashore affected only industrial property.

Weather conditions after both the Alaskan and the recent weekend spills were mild, but brought far different results. Off the Rhode Island Coast, the sun speeded up evaporation of the light oil off the Rhode Island Coast.

He said booms also were used quickly and effectively in the East Coast spill to contain and divert the oil in a way that was never possible after Alaska's midnight spill 25 miles out in Prince William Sound.

"This one was literally in the Coast Guard's backyard," said Meidt. "We just went out and put a boom around it."

Officials said a response system being reviewed as a result of the Alaskan spill appears to be working well in handling the smaller spills. But officials still need to know how the response system would work with a much larger spill.

David Pascoe, chief of the Coast Guard's environmental response branch, said that response of officials may have been heightened over the weekend because of the reviews they are conducting, but he said there have been no policy or operational changes since the Alaskan spill.

"I think they probably had a tendency to stay in Illinois all along, and Illinois offered them what it took to keep them there," he said.

Sears Chairman Edward Brennan said Monday that Illinois offered incentives that were competitive with the alternative sites. Charlotte and Raleigh in North Carolina were considered to be other contenders for the relocation.

"It's always difficult to lose any competition like that, but I think it's equally important to understand the greatest competition comes from the place where the business is located," said Rick Douglas, president of the North Texas Commission, which tries to lure businesses to the region. "So it's disappointing, but not unusual."

INVESTOR'S GUIDE

Government cuts banks' check-holding options

By BILL DOYLE

Q. I took a $2,000 check, the result of a distribution from my individual retirement account at a major brokerage firm, to my local bank to deposit in the checking account I maintain at there. I was told the amount of the check would be held against my account for seven days. If I wrote a check larger than the amount in my account before that deposit, the check would bounce — even though the $2,000 would more than cover the check amount.

Why should it take seven days for the $2,000 to be added to my checking account balance? Is this a law or do the banks make their own rules?

A. There is a federal law — the Expedited Funds Availability Act, which took effect Sept. 1, 1988. It specifies how long "holds" can be put on checks by "depository institutions" — commercial banks, savings banks, savings and loan associations and credit unions. For simplicity sake, let's call them all "banks."

Doyle

That statute mandates that money deposited in the form of cashier's checks, certified checks and government checks must be made available to depositors the next business day.

Funds from "local" checks written on banks in the same metropolitan area or within the same Federal Reserve check-processing region must be available within three business days. There are 48 Fed check-processing regions around the nation.

Money from checks written on non-local banks can be held for up to seven business days.

That last item seems to be your problem. Brokerage firms are wont to practice "remote checking" by writing checks on faraway accounts: an East Coast office writing checks on a West Coast bank and vice versa.

The check hold periods set by the law are maximums and, on Sept. 1, 1990, are scheduled to drop to two business days for local checks and five days for out-of-town checks.

Even now, there is no federal, state or local statute saying banks must enforce the maximum hold periods. Banks can and often do release funds faster for good and/or favored customers. Surely, you have read multitudinous newspaper stories about such treatment being afforded to the likes of Bert Lance and Jim Wright.

If you had a truly friendly banker, you should have been able to use that $2,000 to write checks in less than seven days.

Q. My bank refused to cash any of the checks I write on my account to my son, even though he provides proper identification. The bank people know he is my son and the money is in my account. What gives?

A. Based on your story, your patience should be reaching the breaking point — of emptying that checking account and taking your banking business elsewhere.

Q. My husband and I have $120,000 in six-month certificates of deposit. That's all the money we have, other than a savings account, a $170 a month pension from my husband's former job and his present salary. He will retire in 16 months at age 65.

We have the CD interest credited to our savings account each month instead of leaving it in the CDs. We were told we get more money this way. Are we doing the right thing?

A. You are, only if you need the CD interest to meet living expenses. If you can get along without that money — and assuming interest compounds on your CDs — you would do better leaving the interest in the CDs.

Here, I'm making one other assumption — that the CD interest is higher than the savings account interest, as is virtually always the case.

By leaving the interest in the CDs to compound the interest will earn more interest than the stated CD interest rate. That's known as the "magic of compounding."

It's possible, but unlikely, that your CDs do not compound interest. If that's the case, switch to compound interest CDs when your present CDs mature.

Sun protection products get a fine-tuning

Copley News Service

Now that the need for sun protection is as accepted as the need for good hygiene, cosmetic companies are fine-tuning products to make the rituals of sun protection far more enjoyable.

Whatever your sun protection pet peeve — the messiness of sun creams, the headache of hourly reapplication, the inability of SPF makeups to stay on skin — this season's sun products offer innovative solutions, creative strategies for truly golden moments in the sun.

One common sun cream complaint: messy creams with an oil base lead to breakouts on acne-prone skin. The solution comes in the form of oil-free sun sprays, a sun block approach favored by three major cosmetic companies this summer.

Estee Lauder's Oil-Free Sunspray SPF 10 absorbs instantly and is recommended for skin that tans gradually but burns only modestly.

Lancome's Conquete du Soleil Spray de Soleil Non-Gras Oil-Free Sun Spray also provides SPF 10 coverage, and is a lightweight formula that is mess-free to apply.

Clinique's two sprays, Oil-Free Sun Block SPF 15 and Oil-Free Sun Screen SPF 6 are non-comedogenic, allergy-tested and fragrance-free in traditional Clinique fashion. The SPF 15 spray contains four sunscreens for extra protection while the SPF 6 spray utilizes two sunscreens for sunbathers who have built up a substantial base tan and need less sun protection.

As all of these sprays are oil-free, the formulas are designed to shield skin from summer blemishes as well as sun damage.

Neutrogena tackles the problem of frequent reapplication with its Paba-Free Sunblock. Reasoning that the best route to sun protection is the development of a cream that adheres to the skin for a long period of time (sunscreen that rubs off easily certainly doesn't keep skin protected!), a lot of research time and energy went into the creation of a special rub-resistant base that is said to stay on skin even after six hours in water.

The SPF 15 formula is resistant to abrasion (sand, toweling off after a swim), perspiration and water, and because it's paba-free it's less irritating to sensitive skin.

When Estee Lauder began rethinking sun products, the research and development team focused on the skin sensitivity that frequently occurs with high SPF products. In the past, the high chemical concentrations necessary for creating high SPFs caused stinging, burning and itching.

Lauder created a new Sun Protection Complex (SPC) that acts as a desensitizing barrier and reduces the irritating side effects. The sun protection complex filters out irritants so the skin can resist stinging, burning, itching and redness. In addition, it helps calm and soothe existing irritation.

Look for the addition of SPC to all Estee Lauder sun protectants ranging from SPF 15 to SPF 30+.

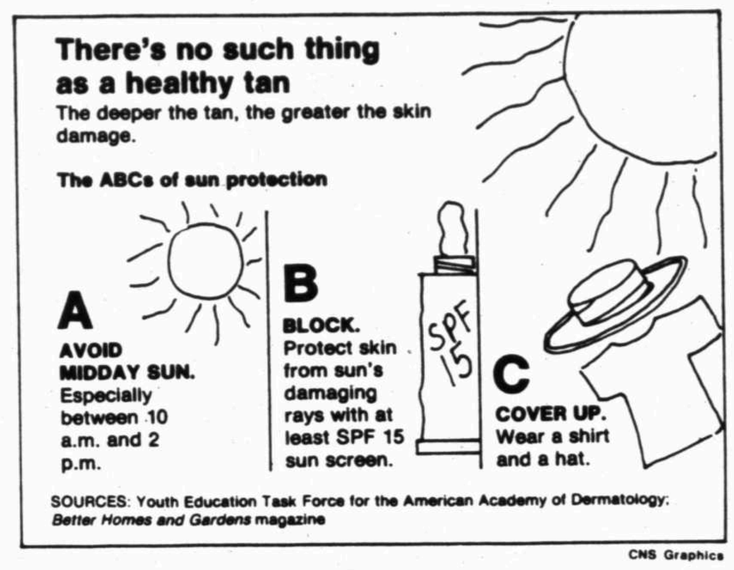

Biotherm contends that ultraviolet protection in a sun block simply isn't enough. New Triple Protector products neutralize free radicals associated with the breakdown of collagen and elastin, counteract the drying effects of sun exposure, and shield the skin from aging UV rays. This three-prong sun protection approach is at the heart of Biotherm's new sun care line.

New products include: Triple Protection Bronzing Gel, with an SPF 4, Triple Protection Tanning Lotion, SPF 8, Triple Protection Oil-Free Sun Gel, SPF 10, and Triple Protection Sun Block, SPF 20. All Biotherm Triple Protector sun products are formulated for use on the face as well as the body.

One approach to sun protection introduced in seasons past was the inclusion of sunscreens in cosmetics. In lipsticks, in particular, the marriage of color and screening ingredients has reached a new level of sophistication with exquisitely flattering shades that resist the tendency to melt off in the heat.

After-sun lotions have become more sophisticated, too. Seeking a way to deliver important post-sunning hydrators and nourishers to the skin, exactly where they are needed, Lancome incorporated their Niosome System into Soins Extreme Apres-Soleil avec Systeme Niosome for an Intensive After-Sun Lotion.

Progressive vision loss equals profusion of glasses

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

It has taken me a lot of years and progressive astigmatism, but I have finally amassed enough eyeglasses to have a pair in every room of the house. I can't see out of half of them, but it doesn't matter. I don't need them anyway.

Every time I got an eye examination and was advised that I needed stronger glasses, I'd never throw the old ones out. I'd put them in one of the rooms. Moving from room to room playing "musical eyeballs" is a romp through my life.

The pair I keep in the bedroom were my very first glasses. I got them in high school and look like Sally Jessy Raphael with a migraine in them. The glass is almost clear, and the only reason I wore them is that I thought they made me look smarter. They're painted with red nail polish. Someone sat on them and they're held together with a bunion bandage. The only thing I use them for is to help me set the thermostat each evening before I go to bed.

I bought the vintage pair in the living room soon after I was married. There was this silly mix-up where I cooked my turkey by its price with all the innards in the cavity. Nineteen hours is too long to cook a turkey. I got a pair of reading glasses.

The bathroom glasses are considerably stronger. They were prescribed when I confessed to going into a restaurant and pretending to drop the menu on the floor. I read it quickly before I lean over to pick it up. A lot of people do that.

The granny glasses were a long time coming. I didn't succumb to them perched on the end of my nose until one day, at one of the kids' parent conferences at school, I realized I said, "Excuse me, you were first" to a coat rack.

As we hit the kitchen, the glasses are a little more current. There's a flashy pair with fins going up the sides like an old Buick. I was talked into them by my husband, who got sick and tired of sitting at the table and telling me, "Your peas are at 11 o'clock, your steak at 3 o'clock, and the steak sauce at 5:30."

My present glasses are also expendable. Really. I just use them to match up my shoes, put on lipstick, recognize my mother before she speaks, and tell time. But I got extra pairs for my handbags, the glove compartment of the car and my coat pockets just to keep everyone happy.

DEAR ABBY

Possible drop out gets experts' advice

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: You told "Mixed Up in Bay City, Mich." not to drop out of school, but you weren't firm enough. Let me try: While some people make it without a high school diploma, most do not.

What kind of job can you get? You will probably have to work for minimum wages and possibly hold down two full-time jobs to make ends meet. The jobs most available to high school dropouts are in fast-food establishments, and it's often difficult to get 40 hours per week. Are you willing to knock on the door of the local welfare agency when you can't make the rent payment, buy food or pay other bills? You may or may not qualify for help. You say you hate to get up in the morning. Do you think your employer will allow you to sleep in? Most employers expect their employees to be at work on time and put in a full day's work every day.

Are you willing to go without clothes, or buy them at secondhand stores when you have a few extra pennies? What about entertainment? Gifts for friends and family? Things you take for granted now or consider necessities will suddenly become luxuries.

And don't kid yourself by thinking you can easily get a GED, or enter a program to finish high school "later." You will find yourself so busy surviving and making ends meet that you will not have the time, energy or money.

Now, where do I get off writing this letter? I've been watching my daughter struggle for the last four years. And believe me, that has not been easy. — DROPOUT'S MOTHER

DEAR MOTHER: Thanks for a mother's-eye view of what most high school dropouts can expect. I hope this dose of reality will inspire students to tough it out and graduate — no matter how rough the road.

For years I have urged students to take summer sessions, go to night school, get tutoring, do whatever is necessary to get that high school diploma. It's their ticket to better jobs and a more fulfilling future.

Now let's hear it from "Mary D." in Cooper City, Fla.

DEAR MIXED UP IN BAY CITY: Please, please, do not drop out of school!

I wish I had had someone to advise me years ago when I dropped out of eighth grade. To this day, I regret it. At the time, it was the easy way out. My grades were lousy, and I was way behind because I'd skipped so many classes. All I could think of was getting a job and making some money so I could be on my own.

I was ashamed to write on a job application that I didn't even graduate from eighth grade. I know from personal experience that I missed lots of promotion opportunities because of my limited education. I was passed up in favor of college kids.

Today, a college degree is almost a must! I could tell you many more reasons to take advantage of your high school years to get an education, but space does not permit.

Please take Abby's advice. Stay in school! Dropping out was the dumbest thing I ever did. — SORRY DROPOUT

DEAR ABBY: It's getting so that I hate to go to any family gatherings. I'm 33 and my husband is 35, and we've been married for nearly six years. I am sick of hearing, "When are you two going to start a family?" "Whose fault is it?" "Don't be so selfish — it's time you gave your parents some grandchildren."

Abby, we are childless by choice. We are both career-minded, have never felt the need to have a child, and we like our life the way it is. So how do we handle such prying questions — short of telling them it's none of their business?

For now, we are content to be ... MARRIED WITHOUT CHILDREN

DEAR MARRIED: What's wrong with the truth as you stated it? "We are both career-minded, have never felt the need to have a child, and we like our life the way it is."

Is your social life in a slump? Get Abby's booklet, "How to Be Popular" — for people of all ages. To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $2.89 ($3.39 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Popularity Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. Postage is included.

Fashion Board to be selected from local high school youth

From Staff Reports

Dillard's is now accepting applications for members to their 1989-90 Fashion Board. The Fashion Board will include males and females who will be a junior or senior in high school during the 1989-90 school year.

According to Jean Lawrence, Dillard's special events coordinator, applications are available in Dillard's Junior Department at Midland Park Mall. Applications are to be filled out with a photo attached and brought in person to Dillard's Fashion Board tryouts Saturday July 1 at 3:30 p.m. Each application will be reviewed and graded on leadership, honors, activities, grades and talents. After modeling tryouts, judges will make their decision on who will represent each school on Dillard's 1989-90 Fashion Board. Those selected to serve on the new board will be contacted by telephone with a follow-up letter.

Prerequisites for Fashion Board members are:

- Wear a junior size (5 through 11) or young men's sizes.
- Well groomed, with a sincere interest in fashion.
- Leaders in their school.
- Good grades (preferably a B average or above).
- Some dance training or ability.
- Some community service projects to their credit.

The first fashion show for the new Dillard's Fashion Board will be a "Back-to-School" production.

Beauty and fashion training are a part of the program for Fashion Board members. Each member will also receive training in store systems and policies, sales procedures and training in all aspects needed for their association with the store.

"Fashion Board offers a unique opportunity to meet top students from other Midland area schools, to be a part of the fashion world through modeling and monthly meetings, and to get an idea of what fashion merchandising is really about, as so many are considering careers in this field," Ms. Lawrence said.

Judges for the tryouts will include Phyllis Gonzales, P.S. Images; Mona Gale Gibson, model and assistant to Ms. Lawrence, and Ellinor Preston, 1985 Fashion Board member.

Daylight Donuts introduces Malsovit fiber bread, diet plan

Eddy Willmon, owner of Daylight Donuts, displays fresh baked daily Malsovit diet loaves as well as the Malsovit diet wafers. The bread contains no cholesterol, no sugar, no preservatives or additives. It is fiber and vitamin rich.

A revolutionary diet bread is now being baked fresh daily at Daylight Donuts. Eddy Willmon, Daylight Donuts owner, bakes the fiber-and vitamin-rich bread, called Malsovit, in his westside store at 315 N. Midland Drive.

Malsovit, which also comes in a handy wafer form, is sold at the Kent Kwik store at 2910 N. Big Spring. Daylight Donuts is the exclusive distributor for Malsovit in Midland.

The ingredients are whole wheat, barley, rye, oats, buckwheat, soy, wheat gluten, wheat germ and kelp. One slice has about 65 to 70 calories, no sugar, no cholesterol. The bread also offers carbohydrates, vitamins B-1 and B-2, niacin, potassium, calcium, iron and protein.

The diet plan recommends drinking a glass of water before and after a meal. The plan combines the bread with a variety of foods. To lose weight quickly, the plan suggests eating seven slices of Malsovit a day. Slower weight loss is achieved with eating less bread.

After just eight weeks, Willmon said use of the diet bread has swelled in popularity, and he now bakes and sells 300 loaves monthly.

"Most of our customers report losses of two to three pounds per week," he explained. Willmon is also a satisfied customer of the diet plan, adding, "That's about what I have been losing."

The cost of the bread is $2.80 per loaf, which contains 13-14 slices. A loaf is equivalent to six meals, or a two day supply to be used with the Malsovit eating plan (see box).

While the bread is baked fresh daily, Willmon recommends that orders be placed the day before the order is to be picked up. "Many people buy several loaves at once," he continued. Malsovit should be refrigerated because it contains no preservatives or additives to retain freshness. It may also be frozen for later use.

The Malsovit wafers offer a slightly higher fiber content for snacking and for people on the go. Two wafers and 16 ounces of water constitute a meal. Ten wafers (five meals) are priced at $3.25.

"The company stands behind us," concluded Willmon. "It has a toll-free number for those with questions."

Daylight Donuts is open from 6 a.m. to noon at the 315 N. Midland Drive store. Call 689-8923 for information or to place an order. The Kent Kwik at 2910 N. Big Spring is open 24 hours a day, and its phone number is 682-2303.

Malsovit eating plan

Breakfast: Three lightly buttered (toasted) slices of Malsovit bread topped with either cheese, honey, marmalade, low calorie preserves or half a hard-boiled egg (two eggs maximum per week).

Lunch: Two lightly buttered (toasted) slices of Malsovit topped either with a thin slice of chicken, low-fat cheese or thinly spread tuna (packed with water). Lunch might be two slices of Malsovit with a salad made of apples, celery, raisins and some low calorie plain yogurt or a lettuce salad with cottage cheese, bean sprouts and fresh fruits. One orange (or any citrus fruit) should be eaten after lunch or in the afternoon.

Dinner: Eat two slices of Malsovit and follow either the lunch menu or add something hot such as fish, chicken or turkey (baked, broiled or boiled) or fresh steamed vegetables. Try lightly sauteed vegetables such as green peppers, mushrooms, onions, tomatoes or a combination of them all. Or try a grilled chesse Malsovit sandwich made with two slices, topped with either an apple and cinnamon or a tomato with sprouts, pepper and garlic, etc. One apple or another piece of fruit should be eaten for dessert.

Beverages: Drink water all day and evening, but a glass of water must be drunk before and after each meal. Drink a glass of skim milk either at breakfast or lunch. You can drink unlimited unsweetened coffee or tea. In the evening you can drink one cup of hot bouillon. Alcohol, fruit juices and sweetened soft drinks are not recommended while dieting.

Chaparral Wash & Lube Center: Great service, open July 4

Summer is here and with the recent tar and gravel work on the streets, your car probably needs some new sparkle and shine. Add on to that vacation travel and the July 4 holiday coming up, and it makes good sense to take advantage of a thorough car cleaning, oil change and lube. The friendly professionals at Chaparral Wash and Lube, 2300 N. Big Spring can help make your car look as clean and as new as possible.

Chaparral Wash and Lube will get the dust and dirt off and prime your car quickly to help you prepare for hot summer and vacation driving.

The car wash and lube center will be open for your convenience on July 4.

If your car is showing the signs of nasty street tar, Chaparral detail experts can get that off so you won't have to work up a sweat. You may have even tracked the tar into your car. Carpet and upholstery shampooing are also available. Just ask for an estimate.

Or, come by and pamper your car with some of the other extra Chaparral services you can combine with your detail car wash. For a minimal charge, the staff can hand wax, add white wall cleaner, wire wheel cleaner, a polish wax, interior dash and door treatment, bumper and trim gloss, car freshener and a vinyl top treatment.

A full service car wash, which includes a wash by gentle cleansers, chamois brushes and soft water is just $6.95. Standard vans and Suburbans are just $2.00 extra. Each car is treated to a thorough wash down before is is cleaned gently by the brushes. Vacuuming, hand drying and window cleaning are included in the low price. A discount is given with the purchase of Texaco gasoline.

A free car wash is offered with each oil change in the Chaparral lube center. Prices for the oil change and lube range from $15.50 to $21.50, and these prices have remained the same for more than three years. Pennzoil, Quaker State, Havoline and other major brands of oil are available. Jeffcoat recommends an oil change for your car every three months or 3,000 miles.

You get more than just an oil change and lube in the Chaparral lube center. Technician C.C. Banks enjoys a reputation for being friendly, knowledgeable and able to trouble spot car problems. Don't be caught without enough freon for your car's air conditioner. Banks and the staff offer a free freon check just in time for warmer weather.

You'll also get your battery, tires, belts and hoses examined. Your vehicle is checked for important proper fluid levels, including brake, power steering, transmission and windshield washer fluids. As a part of this service, these fluids are replenished, if your car needs it.

For an additional charge, Chaparral can install transmission oil, freon, light bulbs and windshield wiper refills.

Generally open on rainy days, Chaparral's lube center and gasoline pumps are at your service. With the purchase of gasoline or an oil change, if the clouds are threatening, you'll receive a rain check for your next car wash.

Chaparral Wash and Lube Center is conveniently located at the corner of Big Spring and Scharbauer Drive. Texaco, Visa, MasterCard, American Express and Discover cards are accepted.

Hours are 8 a.m. to 6:30 p.m. Monday through Friday and 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturdays. Call 682-8013 for more information.

Chaparral Wash and Lube customers are repeat customers because the service is consistently friendly and professional. From left are Chaparral owner Leon Jeffcoat, lube center technician C.C. Banks and customer Michael T. McCrary.

ICS cuts problems in filing Medicare, insurance claims

Are you facing a stack of doctor bills and Medicare forms that grow bigger and more confusing each week? Can't tell which doctor has been paid by Medicare or your secondary insurance and which ones you have to pay? If these questions sound familiar to you, or if you are helping a friend or a relative try to answer these questions, let ICS help!

To most people, understanding Medicare, insurance filing rules and regulations is not an easy task. ICS Insurance Assistance, located at 1909 West Wall, Suite M, across from Langston Monarch Realtors, was created to take care of this for you.

With ICS, there will be no more mystery and confusion about what, where and when to file claims. You won't have any more questions, such as "Have I received all the benefits I should?"

Owner Cindy Bridges and her assistants Nelle Drummond and Carole Walker have many years of medical office management experience, and are thoroughly familiar with insurance and Medicare.

ICS can handle all of the problems that may develop from incorrect claim filing. They make sure that every claim is followed through from Medicare to your private insurance companies, and then they organize it in a manner that's easy to understand.

Your file is available any time you have a question or would like to check on the status of any claims, and your file is kept completely confidential. When using the services of ICS, you can be assured that all insurance checks and information come directly to you.

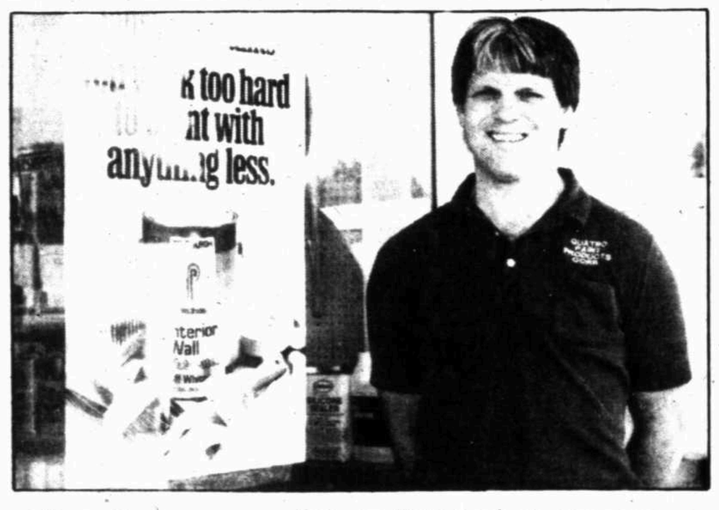

A low annual fee takes care of filing assistance for all your medical claims for the year, regardless of the number of doctors visits or hospital stays. They also provide a pick up service for your convenience.

Let ICS take care of:

- Filing all medical claims with Medicare and all of your private insurance companies. If your doctor files Medicare, ICS will file your supplements.
- Handling office charges, hospital and clinic charges — all of your medical bills for the year.
- All problems or questions that may arise.
- Making sure you receive all the benefits you can from your private insurance coverage and Medicare.
- Consolidating all your information and giving you a yearly report for tax purposes and review.
- Eliminating the worries.

The staff of ICS invites you to visit their office at 1909 W. Wall, Suite M. They can help you avoid the confusion of insurance paperwork. Call 686-0267, or stop by the office weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:00 p.m.

Quatro Paint offers quality paint, advice

Kenny Thayer, manager of Quatro Paint Products, encourages you to stop by 2507 W. Illinois for free painting advice.

Stop by Quatro Paint Products today and let Kenny Thayer and his staff help you select paint products to enhance and beautify your home's exterior. Quatro Products, your Pittsburgh Paints dealer, is located at 2507 W. Illinois.

Kenny, manager of Quatro Paint Products, can offer you tips for painting around the house. He will be happy to help you select what you need and give you advice.

Here's some guidance on how to use exterior paint to your advantage.

Paint does more than brush on color to enrich a home's style and appearance. It's primary function is to protect house surfaces from harsh weather and harmful elements in the environment. A paint film must provide an effective barrier, a renewable film that retains its strength and flexibility through snow, sleet, ice, rain, cold, heat, dust, drought and fungus attack.

When you consider the performance that is expected from the mere thickness of a paint film, you'll see why it's necessary for do-it-yourself painters to help that performance along. That means doing the best surface preparation work to assure the best performance for paint.

Pittsburgh Paints, when applied over a quality surface, will bring years of weather protection to your home. It's a logical and affordable way to prolong the life of your home and increase its value.

The difference between a good paint job and a bad one has to do with the adhesion of new paint to an existing surface. Experience has shown that most paint fails when moisture causes it to lose adhesion — and it flakes, peels, or disintigrates down to the bare wood. Moisture is the prime cause of paint failure. And unless a homeowner corrects or seals out the source of moisture, paint problems will reoccur.

Moisture can be traced to poor surface preparation that allows unfilled gaps, cracks and seams, leaky gutters, faulty flashing, or defective roof shingles to invite moisture in. It works its way behind the paint film and the resulting pressure forces the paint from the substrate. Moisture also can migrate through the wood siding from inside the home.

Two house areas that have a natural affinity for moisture are the so-called "protected areas" under eaves and overhangs, and siding that has been installed too close to the ground. This type of siding draws moisture by capillary action. And, to air it out and keep under surfaces dry requires using wood or, in extreme cases, metal wedges behind clapboards. Protected areas require special care prior to painting.

Kenny suggests several different exterior primers and finishes for you to choose from.

Sun-Proof Universal Wood Primer, Oil Type (1-70) is an excellent primer-sealer for new wood and for weathered repaint surfaces. Use it as a base coat for alkyd-oil or latex-type house paints.

Sun-Proof Exterior Latex Wood Primer (72-1) is an acrylic based primer suitable for use over new or repaint wood surfaces. Use under latex or solvent-based house paints. Excellent sealing, flexibility, blister resistance and also quick drying for recoating.

Note: These are the most popular primers used for painting or repainting wood surfaces.

Sun-Proof Latex Flat House Paint (72 Line) is the right exterior finish for wood and masonry surfaces. Its highly flexible paint film stretches and shrinks with changes in temperature and humidity to resist cracking, peeling and flaking.

Sun-Proof Latex Semi-Gloss House and Trim Paint (78 Line) is an easy to apply house paint that can be used on both siding and trim if an overall semi-gloss sheen is desired. Also, ideal for trim only on shutters, doors and decorative paneling.

Sun-Proof Oil Type House and Trim Paint (1 Line) is a glossy, durable, mildew resistant paint specially formulated to stay bright and color true. It produces a hard finish highly resistant to dirt adherance, staining and blistering.

When you are ready to paint, don't hesitate to contact the Pittsburgh Paints professionals at Quatro Products, 2507 W. Illinois. Store hours are 7 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. to 12:30 p.m. Saturdays. Call 687-3326 for more information.

EEC compromises on uniting of economies

MADRID, Spain (AP) — European Economic Community leaders agreed today to gradually unite their economies, but the timetable was left vague because of British fears that the plan goes too far in blurring the boundaries between nations.

Britain, which had blocked French and West German moves to adopt a broader economic agreement during the two-day EEC summit, said the compromise plan that was adopted was a victory.

"The French were seen off (defeated)," said a British official on condition of anonymity.

Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher had opposed a French attempt to set a deadline of December 1992 for the completion of preparations for establishing a single European currency and a central bank.

Spain presented a compromise plan, and British officials said the agreement that was adopted broadly followed that proposal.

Mrs. Thatcher and the other European leaders were to hold separate news conferences before leaving later today.

The 12 EEC leaders have been divided over how far and how fast to go toward closer economic and monetary union as part of the establishment of a single Europe-wide market in 1992.

But Britain differed with other nations over the scope of the accord.

Mrs. Thatcher regards a broad plan presented earlier in the summit as impractical and involving the surrender of national policy-making powers. It was drawn up by Jacques Delors, head of the EEC's executive body, the European Commission.

Besides Britain, some smaller EEC nations, including The Netherlands, Luxembourg and Portugal, have also expressed reservations about the Delors plan.

"We will make an effort to reach agreement because it is our duty and our dream," Foreign Minister Francisco Fernandez Ordonez of Spain told a news conference Monday night.

Mrs. Thatcher, now criticized within her Conservative Party for her often-combative stance toward Britain's partners in the EEC, agreed Monday to the first stage of the Delors plan, which is due to start in July 1990.

By agreeing to the intial stage, Mrs. Thatcher agreed in principle to link the pound to the exchange rate mechanism that aligns the value of the EEC's major currencies.

She hedged the move, which she has long resisted, with strict conditions. These included that Britain's 8.3 percent inflation must drop to near the 4.5 percent average in the EEC and that arrangements for the single market must be complete.

France and West Germany continued Monday to press for the three-stage plan.

"We commit ourselves to the goal of the economic and monetary union process," said a British official, demanding anonymity. "What we have not committed ourselves to is a process defined in Delors (report)."

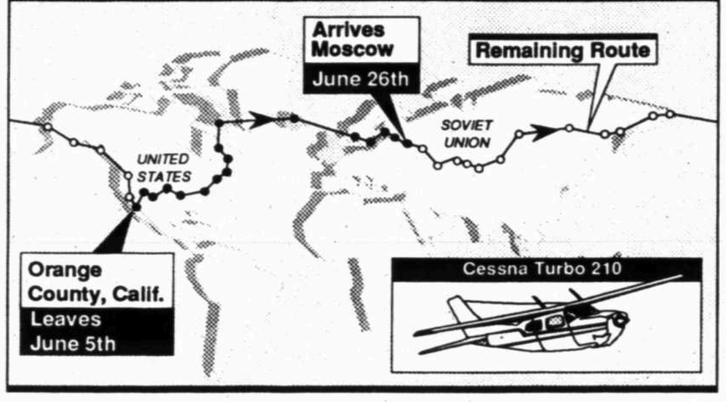

He added later, "The thing is what, how and at what speed to move."

In exchanges during debate Monday, President Francois Mitterrand of France suggested that if Britain holds out then France and other EEC nations may renege on pledges to allow free movement of capital.

The monetary dispute overshadowed a second major issue at the conference, a "social charter" guaranteeing worekrs' rights to which Mrs. Thatcher also objects.

Young American pilot, 11, lands his plane in Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — An 11-year-old Californian flew his single-engine plane into Moscow on Monday after collecting signatures of nearly 1,000 Soviet children to present to President Bush.

"It wasn't a difficult flight. It's just like flying anywhere," Tony Aliengena said as he made the second Soviet stop in his attempt to become the youngest person to pilot a plane around the globe.

He landed his blue and white Cessna 210 at Sheremetevo airport after a two-hour flight from Leningrad, where he collected 987 signatures for Bush's scroll.

In Moscow, the fourth-grader was welcomed by Young Pioneers, members of a Communist youth group who offered the traditional Russian bread and salt.

After the youngster taxied to the terminal, he was surrounded by the youths, journalists and about 10 curious Aeroflot pilots.

The young pilot, who has logged about 1,000 hours of flying time, will spend five days in Moscow. Among his stops will be Red Square, where West German teen-ager Mathias Rust gained worldwide fame by landing a single-engine Cessna in May 1987 after evading Soviet air defenses. Rust was convicted of illegally entering the Soviet Union and other crimes and released after spending nearly a year of a four-year prison sentence.

The young American brought a friendship scroll signed by 250,000 American children to present to President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, but it is not certain the Soviet leader will have time to meet him before he takes off Friday on a hopscotch journey across the Soviet Union and on to Alaska.

"I am not sure if I will get to meet him, but I sure want to," the young pilot said.

Bush already has agreed to meet him when he completes the journey scheduled to take 47 days and 19,000 miles around the world in short hops averaging three hours.

The youth from San Juan Capistrano began his global flight June 5 from California.

While flying in the Soviet Union, he is accompanied by a Soviet navigator because air controllers on many domestic routes do not speak English, as required on international routes.

Foreign press uses imaginative tactics

By TERRIL JONES

BEIJING (AP) — Covering the news in China under the growing obstacles created by martial law requires more in the way of imaginative tactics by foreign journalists than derring-do.

Reporting on China's political crisis has become increasingly difficult as soldiers and police strictly enforce restrictions on the press.

Newsgathering is basically banned under martial law, except for the infrequent government-orchiestrated peasant rally or news conference.

But virtually all reporters in the capital and other Chinese cities ignore the regulations, coming up with their own ways of getting around martial law.

"The most effective trick these days is to act like a dumb tourist," says an Asian photojournalist. "Wear bright clothes and shorts, and don't hide your camera."

If stopped by security personnel, he says, "the best defense is to go on the offense. Ask them some questions. It's better than trying to run away."

Martial law was imposed May 20 in Beijing in a move to quell the student-led democracy movement that was finally crushed June 4 when soldiers killed hundreds of unarmed civilians in the capital.

Under the vaguely worded decree, foreigners are prohibited from entering or taking pictures at schools, factories or "organizations".

Television networks face the greatest difficulties. Their equipment makes them easy to spot.

"For television, we don't have a story unless we have a picture that can convey the information," says a CBS News official. "We get chased away all the time. We're very frustrated at not being able to shoot pictures."

Coverage has been reduced to relying on government-controlled TV news.

"A great deal of what we're doing is recording their material and reworking it," said the CBS official. "We're very much at their mercy."

Foreign television networks can no longer send segments through state-run China Central Television to North America or Europe via satellite.

They must now somehow get their videotapes to Hong Kong or Tokyo.

"We smuggled out our tapes, did the double shuffle with the cassettes and that sort," said Vernon Mann, a correspondent for Britain's Independent Television Network whose videotape was "confiscated" by police after he filmed on a university campus in Chengdu, central China.

"Our piece, which would have greatly upset them, was aired all over the U.K. (United Kingdom)."

Mann was expelled from China for the incident.

Still photographers have an easier time. One wrapped his camera in a jacket and put the bundle in his bicycle basket, shooting frames as he passed soldiers guarding intersections.

Another put aside his complex single-lens reflex camera and instead went out with the automatic-focus variety so all he had to do was point and push.

Most photographers have resorted to taking pictures from cars, some with darkened windows, as they zip past soldiers on patrol or troops checking identification.

One cameraman from a European photo agency took a dramatic shot through the back window of a taxi of a man in handcuffs being led away by soldiers. "One guy saw me, and I just hit my driver on the back and said, 'Let's get out of here!,'" he said.

Print journalists face more subtle difficulties.

With most Chinese frightened into silence by widespread arrests, including the nationally publicized arrest of a man who talked to an American television crew, reporters' sources are drying up.

"I've simply stopped telephoning people," said one American reporter, noting that he and most colleagues assume their phones are tapped. "I think of my Chinese contacts first and foremost as friends and I've stopped making any attempt to contact them."

Other journalists discover that acquaintances refuse to meet them. A German reporter was turned away when he showed up at the doorsteps of some Chinese friends. He says now he does not even take notes on the streets, preferring to keep his eyes open and later write down what he saw.

The few who do make appointments do so with great caution, calling from public telephones, instructing friends not to say their names in phone conversations, making appointments by prearranged code and meeting sources furtively in discrete locations.

"I only move around at night," said a Japanese reporter. "Even though it's easier for me to blend into a crowd than Westerners, I still stand out."

He says while many people who have helped him have gone underground, he hasn't stopped seeing people because "Chinese have information you can't get otherwise."

He, too, says meetings are much harder to arrange. "You can't meet people in hotels — they have secret cameras everywhere," referring to footage taken by a hidden camera of a student leader feasting at the Beijing Hotel.

Now he finds the only place he can interview people is in his car — during the day, when soldiers aren't checking vehicles for fugitives.

"The greatest danger in China now is that the people have lost their voice," he said. "The reformists and intellectuals are all gone. China have lost its good-heartedness."

Pointing out damage to the steps of a martyrs' monument as he conducts a tour for foreign journalists of Beijing's Tiananment Square is Li Zhiyun of the Chinese martial law command. Li said students damaged the facility before they left the square and reiterated the government's line saying there was no gunfire and no killing in the historic plaza.

China puts off U.S. Peace Corps

BEIJING (AP) — China has asked the United States to delay the start of the Peace Corps program that was to begin sending American volunteers to China this fall to teach English, a U.S. official said today.

Authorities also ordered two Americans — a teacher and a student — to leave the country, apparently for participating in the student-led pro-democracy movement, the U.S. Embassy said.

In Tokyo, group tours to China involving 43,000 Japanese have been canceled since martial law was declared in Beijing in May and troops crushed the pro-democracy movement, Japanese officials said. Transport Ministry official Tokuji Nakamura said the cancellations cost the agencies $60 million in sales.

Official Chinese media reported today that the steering committee of China's legislature would meet in special session Thursday to endorse the Communist Party's tough stance on dissent.

Also to be discussed are a draft law on tightening controls over rallies and demonstrations. Plans to discuss a long-pending bill defining the rights and responsibilities of the press have been shelved.

The student demonstrations of April and May — now called the period of turmoil — called for greater press freedom, and for several weeks the press enjoyed unprecedented leeway in objectively reporting events.

But, since political hard-liners gained the upper hand, the press has reverted to its former role as mouthpiece of the party line.

The Chinese gave no reason for their request last week for the Peace Corps postponement, the U.S. official said, saying they just wanted to put the program off "until a more appropriate time."

WORLD IN BRIEF

Soviet press admits Souther was spy

MOSCOW (AP) — A U.S. Navy intelligence specialist who defected to the Soviet Union claiming he was harassed by the FBI was actually a Soviet spy, a newspaper said today in announcing the man's sudden death at age 32.

It was a rare admission of KGB spying activities.

The military paper Red Star did not give a cause of death for the man who had been known in the United States as Glenn Michael Souther.

It said his name was Mikhail Orlov, that he was "a staff member of the KGB" and that he died a "sudden death" on June 22.

It was not clear whether Orlov was a Soviet mole who had been masquerading as an American or had taken a Russian name upon defecting.

The FBI has identified Souther as a Navy veteran who disappeared in May 1986 after graduating from Old Dominion University in Virginia with a major in Russian. He was said to be under investigation for espionage at the time.

Soviet media reported in July 1988 that Souther had been granted asylum in the Soviet Union after he claimed he was being persecuted by U.S. agents.

Venetians stick together

VENICE, Italy (AP) — Venetians have decided to stay together, defeating a referendum that called for divorcing the romantic lagoon city from a dependent, blue-collar suburb on the mainland.

The referendum, with balloting on Sunday and Monday, was pressed for by officials in Mestre, a community that is administratively part of the city across the causeway but has little in common with the fabled place of singing gondoliers and smelly canals.

Mestre politicians say the growing community's needs are different from those of aging, tourist-choked Venice and that Mestre's identity is overwhelmed by Venice's fame.

While citizens of Mestre outnumber the citizens of historic Venice, 3-1, the measure nevertheless went down to defeat, 58 percent against separation, 42 percent in favor.

Lacking affordable housing, young Venetians have been steadily moving out of the lagoon city to Mestre.

In 1951, historic Venice had 175,000 people while Mestre had about 50,000.

In 1987, Venice's population stood at 83,000 while Mestre has 250,000.

Jets collide at Heathrow

LONDON (AP) — Two jets carrying more than 480 people collided on the ground at Heathrow Airport today as they were preparing to take off, but no one was injured, airline officials said.

The collision involved a British Airways Boeing 757 carrying 111 passengers and seven crew members to Brussels and a Thai Airways International Boeing 747 en route to Bangkok.

Both jets suffered minor damage when the wing of the Thai jet clipped the tail section of the stationary British Airways jet as the Bangkok flight was taxiing toward the runway, said Linda Jones, a spokeswoman for British Airways.

"It was actually a very minor accident," Ms. Jones said. "People on board probably were not aware of it."

British Airways passengers were transferred to another plane. Thai Airways was making alternative arrangements for its 348 passengers, said airline spokesman Jeff Bacall. The Thai flight had a 21-member crew.

The cause of the accident was being investigated.

Inmate kills other Arabs

JERUSALEM (AP) — A Palestinian inmate at Israel's desert prison camp killed two fellow Arabs, and Israel radio said the attacker was retaliating for the prisoners' alleged collaboration with Israel.

The killings, discovered today during the morning prisoner count, raised to four the number of prisoners slain in the last two weeks at the Ketziot prison in the Negev Desert.

In Jersualem, a spokesman for Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir said the Israeli leader planned to hold the first meeting on his peace plan in July with Palestinian leaders from the occupied territories.

Shamir spokesman Avi Pazner denied reports in the Israeli media that Shamir will meet with supporters of the Palestine Liberation Organization, which has rejected the plan.

Romania removes fence

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Romania is tearing down a barbed wire fence it had constructed along the Hungarian border in an apparent bid to stop people from fleeing, the state-run MTI news agency reported.

At a human rights conference in Paris last week, even the Soviet Union criticized its Warsaw Pact ally for putting up the fence.

"The 'wire curtain' and the concrete pillars were almost completely removed from Saturday to Monday," MTI said Monday.

Hungarian Foreign Minister Gyula Horn, on a visit to Austria, said Monday, "I haven't heard it yet, but the news delights me."

Horn called for Romania to re-establish an autonomous region to safeguard ethnic and cultural rights of its 1.7 million-member Hungarian minority. Many ethnic Hungarians have fled Romania, complaining of persecution.

Peruvian rebels slain

AYACUCHO, PERU (AP) — An army patrol battled leftist rebels at their remote highland stronghold and killed 42 of them in some of the worst fighting in the rebels' nine-year insurgency, a military official said Monday.

The military refused to provide information on army casualties.

The troops and Shining Path rebels fought Sunday evening near the village of Pampaccori, 40 miles northeast of Ayacucho, a military spokesman said on condition of anonymity.

The military spokesman said troops also captured a large number of weapons and "subversive propaganda."

He said it was one of the biggest losses of life suffered by the Shining Path in their nine-year-old fight against the government.

Japan to move capital?

TOKYO (AP) — One in three Japanese favor moving the capital out of Tokyo because the city of 11.6 million is so crowded, a government poll released today indicates.

The poll, conducted by the Prime Minister's office, found 32.6 percent of respondents to favor relocation, with 17 percent opposed. Another 34.3 percent were undecided and 16.1 percent had no answer.

Those favoring relocation say it is necessary to correct overconcentration of the population and solve housing and transportation problems. Those opposed say businesses should instead be distributed to places other than Tokyo.

Nearly 10 percent of Japan's people live in Tokyo.

The office said it questioned 10,000 people age 20 and older at random in December.

Filipino official resigns

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — The government's land reform secretary has resigned, but President Corazon Aquino said Monday she would not accept the resignation until scandals in his department are investigated.

Philip Juico said he submitted the resignation Saturday because of allegations of criminal conspiracy in the purchase of an estate in Camarines Sur province for distribution to peasants.

The purchase was blocked in December when officials said the government had agreed to pay $3 million for land worth only $142,000.

Juico and 20 department officials went on leave last month after newspapers disclosed the deal. At the time, Juico said he was taking leave so an investigation Mrs. Aquino ordered would not be influenced.

Troops fight uprising

KIETA, Papua New Guinea (AP) — Troops launched an operation on Monday to put down a 7-month-old secessionist uprising, burning homes and seizing villagers, according to news reports.

The revolt has closed an economically crucial mine of Bougainville Copper Ltd. on northern Bougainville island. The insurrectionists were reported overnight to have destroyed a power plant at a farm owned by the company.

Unrest shut down the mine May 15. Rebel landowners complain it damages the environment and want $10 billion in compensation. The pit had been contributing 20 percent of Papua New Guinea's total revenue through royalties and taxes.

Rebels spurned all attempts at conciliation, ambushing mine workers and soldiers. Three soldiers were killed and about 20 security force members and many civilians were wounded.

Dynamite blast inside train car kills 24 in accident near Shanghai

BEIJING (AP) — Dynamite exploded in a passenger compartment of a train outside Shanghai, killing at least 24 people and seriously injuring 11, official reports said today.

An official of the city's Foreign Affairs Office described Monday's blast as an accident. Western diplomats in Shanghai said there was no indication it was linked to this month's military suppression of the pro-democracy movement.

The national television news showed tape of a gaping hole in the side of the train from the explosion, which it said occurred in a toilet at the front of a third-class compartment.

The inside of the train was severely damaged but there was no fire, reported the Japan's Kyodo News Service

China's official Xinhua News Agency and government-run television said the blast was caused by dynamite but gave no details.

The Foreign Affairs Office official said the blast occurred on a train bound for Shanghai from Hangzhou, about 110 miles to the southwest.

The official, who did not give his name, said an unknown number of passengers suffered minor injuries and 11 were seriously hurt. He said 24 people were killed in the blast.

A local railroad official who identified himself only as Qi said he was uncertain how many people were on the train. But he said the capacity of the compartment where the blast occurred was 100 people.

The television news showed Mayor Zhu Rongji at the crash site investigating the damage and talking to the injured.

Explosions on Chinese trains are not uncommon. Sometimes they are the result of peasants carrying dynamite for their farms or fireworks for New Year celebrations.

Shanghai was the scene of major protests before soldiers killed hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing in crushing the pro-democracy movement.

On June 6, six people were killed in Shanghai when a train smashed through a barricade set up by demonstrators.

Three men convicted of setting fire to the train after the crash were subsequently executed.

Cuban military tribunal favors dishonorable discharge of general

HAVANA (AP) — A tribunal of Cuba's highest-ranking military officers recommended early today that a highly-decorated general be court-martialed for allegedly organizing rings that trafficked in cocaine, ivory and diamonds.

The state-run news agency Prensa Latina said the 47-member tribunal recommended after two days of hearings that Division Gen. Arnalfo Ochoa be dishonorably discharged and lose all his military honors.

The panel called Ochoa's acts a serious blow to Cuba's international prestige and said they threatened national security. It said a "serious lack of moral character and corruption, dishonest management, improper use and pilferage of economic resources" had been proved.

In testimony broadcast by state-run television Monday, witnesses told of officers under Ochoa's 1987-88 command in Angola selling troops' supplies on the black market, smuggling diamonds and ivory and receiving kickbacks.

They also said he had helped Colombian cocaine bosses use Cuba as a way station for smuggling operations to the United States.

The witnesses — three colonels, two lieutenant colonels and two captains — testified before the tribunal on Sunday, the day Ochoa admitted guilt and "accepted responsibility" for his actions, according to Prensa Latina.

Defense Minister Gen. Raul Castro, brother of President Fidel Castro, told the tribunal Sunday that Ochoa's punishment should "set an example."

Some Foreign Ministry officials interpreted this to mean Ochoa might face a firing squad. But others speculated Ochoa might be spared because of his combat service, his long friendship with the defense chief and his high rank.

In their testimony, the witnesses gave detailed accounts of black market dealings involving diamonds, ivory, sugar, TV sets, tape recorders, coffee, wheat, dried fish and beef.

SR-14 On term sales only, for owner occupied properties, seller will contribute 5% down payment on behalf of buyer if offer is submitted at or above listed term price.
SR-15 _____ believed inoperable and VA will not repair.
B A $500 bonus will be paid to broker by VA at closing.

The offer which best serves the interest of VA will be processed for acceptance. The name of the successful offeror and sales broker will appear in subsequent publications. VA will accept cash offers up to 10 percent below the advertised term sales price. VA also will pay reasonable loan discount points and buyers' closing costs on cash offers when requested on the Cash Sale Addendum to Offer to Purchase. However, the combined loan discount points, buyers' closing costs to be paid by VA and the discount for cash may not exceed 10 percent of the term list price. Offers must be submitted at term listed price when buyers request a new GI loan with $1.00 move-in. Interest rate of available financing is 10 percent (APR 10.1 percent).

Purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing (Term Sales) must have VA Form 26-6705B, Credit Statement of Prospective Purchaser and Verification of Employment/Income, as outlined in Sales of VA-Acquired Properties Manual, attached to their VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale. Effective June 8, 1988, all credit underwriting for purchase offers requesting VA vendee financing is being referred to Miller and Davis PC. All brokers are reminded to refer to PM letter #17-88 dated May 25, 1988, outlining these new procedures. Purchase offers not accompanied by the required employment/income verification WILL RESULT IN REJECTION OF THE PURCHASE OFFER.

Prior approval will be required by VA for the transfer of a property secured by a vendee loan if the loan is not paid in full as part of the transfer. Public Law 100-689 also permits VA to charge a one-half of 1 percent funding fee for the transfer as well as a fee for processing the approval of the transfer.

VA has properties for sale statewide. If you desire to purchase properties in other areas, please contact any sales broker located in the area in which you are interested.

FORFEITURE OF EARNEST MONEY DEPOSIT

Prior to signing the offer, broker must deposit in broker's trust account the $500 earnest money deposit. The Earnest Money Agreement (Exhibit "H") must be signed by the purchaser(s) and submitted along with the VA Form 26-6705, Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on all offers. The $500 earnest money deposit will be remitted to Miller and Davis PC upon acceptance of the offer. Once a purchase offer has been accepted for processing by VA and subsequently cancelled at the request of the purchaser, the earnest money deposit WILL NOT be refunded and the purchaser will be required to forfeit the earnest money to the VA as liquidation expenses. There will be no exception to this policy. Therefore, the VA suggests that all brokers interview their buyers to assure they want the property prior to submission of an offer to purchase. VA pays 6% sales commission. Offers are subject to the provisions of VA Form 26-6705. Offer to Purchase and Contract of Sale, on which all offers must be submitted. VA Form 26-6705 must be submitted in duplicate to:
