Sold for scrap

GALVESTON (AP) — The Norwegian tanker that exploded and burned in the Gulf of Mexico last month is being towed to Pakistan after it was sold for scrap.

The 886-foot Mega Borg, which threatened to break up and spew its 38 million-gallon cargo of Angolan crude into the Gulf, was sold for about $2.4 million, attorney Robert Klawetter said Monday. He said the buyers' identities have not been disclosed and that the sale was arranged through a ship broker in Gibraltar.

"The ship is going to be towed to Karachi, Pakistan, where it will be broken up for scrap," he said. "They anticipate it will take about two months to tow it to Karachi."

The new owners take possession Friday, he said.

An explosion ripped through the pump room of the vessel June 8 as it was transferring the cargo to another vessel for transport to a Houston refinery about 57 miles southeast Galveston.

Two men died in the explosion, two are missing and presumed dead, and 37 others were rescued by a nearby vessel.

The fire aboard the tanker burned out of control for four days. Salvage crews brought the blaze under control with water and foam and extinguished it a week after the explosion.

Bus hearing

WASHINGTON (AP) — The National Transportation Safety Board Tuesday blamed Texas' worst school bus accident on a soft drink truck driver who, the board says, failed to brake properly.

The accident near Alton last fall killed 21 junior and senior high school students on the bus, which skidded into a water-filled pit after it collided with the truck. Most of the victims drowned.

Cocker

SANTA BARBARA, Calif. (AP) — Rock 'n' roller Joe Cocker, who lives less than a mile from neighborhoods ravaged by a June fire that destroyed more than 400 homes, will give a benefit performance for fire victims with Pat Benatar.

The "With a Little Help For Our Friends" concert was scheduled for July 31 at the Santa Barbara County Bowl.

"Many of my neighbors and friends, people I have known for years, have been hurt by this tragedy," Cocker said Monday.

Cocker's best-known recordings include "With a Little Help From My Friends," "The Letter" and "Delta Lady."

One person was killed in the blaze.

Kohl foresees all-German vote by year's end

■ Chancellor Helmut Kohl announces a united Germany's freedom to join NATO, shares his hopes for quick treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland, and describes a new nation embedded in the "European security architecture."

Associated Press

BONN, West Germany — A jubilant Chancellor Helmut Kohl said Tuesday that all major obstacles to German unification had been swept aside and said elections for a united German parliament were likely in December.

Speaking to reporters the day after he returned from the Soviet Union with guarantees that a united Germany was free to join NATO, Kohl also said he hoped bilateral treaties with the Soviet Union and Poland could be concluded by early next summer.

"The practical problems, which lay before us on the way to German unity, have been solved," Kohl said.

He said elections for a united German parliament on Dec. 2 were "presumable." But whether East Germany merged with the West before or after the elections had to be decided by East Berlin, he added.

Kohl also used the occasion to reassure Germany's neighbors.

"We are no world power," he said, emphasizing that the new Germany would be embedded in the "European security architecture."

He said he was sensitive to the concerns of fellow Europeans. He noted that Britain had gambled "its very existence" in battling Hitler. He said it was no accident Germany had agreed to reduce the size of a united army to 370,000 and cut compulsory military service from 15 to 12 months.

East German Foreign Minister Markus Meckel, however, rejected the idea of one German army and said East Germany needed its own military. Currently, the two Germanys have about 600,000 men under arms, 480,000 of them in West Germany.

In evaluating the role of the new Germany in central Europe, Kohl said he

Midlander electrocuted while installing alarm

■ A 25-year-old employee of Aprotex Corporation, a local security systems company, was killed when he inadvertently snagged a "hot" wire during installation of a home alarm.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A 25-year-old Midland man was electrocuted Tuesday while he was installing a home security alarm, Midland police officials said.

Michael Jacobs, 5100 N. "A" St., was killed while wiring a security system at a home being remodeled at 1608 Stanolind Ave.

Midland Fire Department emergency services were notified at 12:09 p.m. and Justice of the Peace Keith Jobe, who pronounced Jacobs dead, was called about 1 p.m., officials reported. Next of kin was notified.

Jacobs, who worked for Aprotex Corporation, a Midland security systems business, reportedly was in the attic of the home pulling a metal "fish" tape between studs to retrieve an alarm wire, police said. A "fish" tape is used to pull wires through constricted spaces. While Jacobs was pulling the wire through, it caught on a "hot" wire — one carrying an electrical current — causing his electrocution, officials said.

Jacobs was transported to Midland Memorial Hospital in a state of "arrest," where attempts to revive him were unsuccessful, a hospital spokesperson said. He was later brought to Ellis Funeral Home.

A spokesperson for Aprotex Corportion would not comment on the incident.

The hot wire involved is believed to have carried a 110-volt current, officials said.

"It takes very little current to kill you — less than an amp," said Ronnie Branch, a local licensed electrician.

Branch said anyone working near electricity needs to avoid hot wires and, when in doubt, avoid contact with all wires.

"It's better to act like they are all hot if

New aftershocks strike Philippines this morning

MANILA, Philippines (AP) — Two strong aftershocks struck the Philippines early Wednesday, two days after a powerful earthquake devastated central Luzon island and left at least 279 people dead.

Officials said the aftershocks, which occurred before dawn, could have caused further damage and may complicate rescue efforts already hampered by lack of equipment and training to cope with a natural disaster of such magnitude.

In Golden, Colo., the U.S. Geological Service measured the aftershocks at 6.3 and 5.8 on the Richter scale. Monday's earthquake measured 7.7.

Erlinda Amin of the Philippine Institute of Vulcanology and Seismology said the aftershocks struck at 3:07 a.m. and 6:15 a.m. The shocks were felt in Manila's suburbs and in Baguio, the mountain resort most severely damaged by Monday's earthquake.

The earthquake Monday cut off communications with Baguio, 110 miles to the north, and there were no reports of damage there. Officials predicted aftershocks may persist two more weeks.

President Corazon Aquino left by plane for Baguio early Wednesday to inspect the damage.

On Wednesday, the Office of Civil Defense reported 279 people were con-

Opposition to smoking ban organized

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

Teresa Coleman saw the smokers' turf in Houston erode bit by bit during the years she spent living there.

Restaurants, the Astrodome and even her workplace toppled like legal dominoes as the Houston City Council passed citywide public smoking restrictions.

"It was a general invasion by the City Council into my personal life, and I resented that," said Ms. Coleman, 24, a receptionist who has been a smoker for about 10 years.

The native Midlander returned to her hometown about two months ago, only to find that city officials here were considering similar smoking restrictions.

This time, however, Ms. Coleman said she was no longer going to passively let anyone to rub smokers' noses in the public ashtray.

Smokers Rights of Midland, a group Ms. Coleman recently helped organize, has caught fire almost as fast as a gasoline cigarette.

"We're in full swing of a membership drive," she said, adding that Smokers Rights had about 55 members as of last week. "We want to keep this going without losing enthusiasm. I've never taken up a cause before, but I will take this one up."

A petition opposing additional smoking restrictions is rapidly gathering names as it circulates around the city, Ms. Coleman said.

"We intend to have several hundred signatures," she said. "They say this is the most effective political vehicle we have, and we're going to use it."

Meanwhile, Midland's non-smokers haven't remained silent in the shadow of the proposed smoking restrictions, which may include shopping malls, grocery stores, restaurants, bars and other public places.

Councilmen John Castro and Jose Cuevas said that between them they have received scores of telephone calls and letters from concerned non-smokers and smokers.

Castro said a committee of smokers and non-smokers will be meeting in early to mid-August to haggle over the severity of the upcoming ordinance, which should be finalized and in place in about a month.

The councilmen said he got the idea for the committee after a public outcry over the announcement in late May that the smoking policy may be expanded.

"I'm getting a lot of phone calls from smokers and non-smokers who want to participate on the committee," Castro said. "That's good. I'm really surprised we're getting this kind of reaction."

Smokers vs. non-smokers: Who is right?

By Brian Pearson
Staff Writer

A mall walker hurries past a man sitting on a bench and puffing on a cigarette.

A person waiting in a grocery line is more than displeased over the cigar-chomping man who has turned himself into a human smokestack.

The piqued restaurant patron shoots a venomous glance at the person in the next booth who has just ground out a cigarette in a plate of unfinished food.

All of these incidents are classic clashes between adamant smokers and equally obstinate non-smokers. The two factions silently war daily, with public places serving as the battleground.

Both sides say they have the right to the airspace, but in Midland it will be the City Council that ultimately decides where to draw the lines.

City officials are studying how much to expand the smoking ban, with restaurants, bars, grocery stores and shopping malls all included in the negotiations.

STATE

Dozens of families stayed in temporary housing and several highways were closed Tuesday after more heavy rains in South Central Texas prompted flash flood warnings.

Between 50 and 75 families remained away from their homes for a third day in Carrizo Springs, and emergency workers were feeding about 200 people in the wake of flooding that pushed some homes off their foundations and inundated others in up to 8 feet of water.

The National Weather Service in Victoria issued a flash flood warning for Calhoun and southern Victoria counties in South Central Texas.

A flood and flash flood watch was also in effect for Val Verde County and a large part of South Central Texas, along with a portion of the Rio Grande Plains and Coastal Bend.

Most home damage in Dimmit County occurred along Carrizo Creek, which flooded after storms swept the region Sunday, dumping up to 14 inches of rain in San Antonio and spawning a tornado in Kerrville that injured six people.

Dimmit County residents along the creek couldn't yet return to their homes Tuesday, said Dru Spalding, county Emergency Medical Services director and American Red Cross health services director for the area. Carrizo Springs is 127 miles southwest of San Antonio.

The Texas Highway Department said three state highways and several farm-to-market roads were closed, and water covered U.S. Highway 87 at Kamey, north of Port Lavaca.

The Associated Press contributed to this report.

Hearing begins on Canadian pipeline

By James R. Owen
Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Supporters and opponents of an ambitious plan to build a pipeline carrying natural gas from Canada to the energy-hungry Northeast clashed at a hearing before federal regulators Tuesday amid charges the project had already been approved.

The pipeline proposed by the Iroquois Gas Transmission System, a consortium of gas companies in Canada, the Northeast United States and the Houston-based Tennessee Gas Pipeline Company, would be the largest such project in the Northeast in almost 30 years.

The 364-mile pipeline would extend from Canada to Long Island Sound off New York City and deliver the equivalent of 30 million barrels of oil a year.

The $582 million project needs the approval of the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), which gave both sides of the debate an opportunity to air their views before the commission makes its decision next week.

But some industry observers said the hearing was merely a formality and that the four FERC commissioners had already made up their mind to certify the pipeline. On Tuesday, The Washington Post reported it had received a leaked FERC document confirming such a decision.

Tamara Young-Allen, a FERC spokeswoman, denied that the agency had already made a decision on the pipeline. She said the commission would reach its decision at a meeting scheduled for July 25, when the commissioners have four options: approve, reject, modify, or call for more hearings.

The pipeline's backers, including most of the Northeastern states, say the project would reduce the region's heavy dependence on foreign oil and eliminate temporary shortages such as those that plagued some areas during a December cold spell.

Opponents, which include oil producers and environmentalists, contend the pipeline would inhibit domestic oil exploration and foster more U.S. dependence on foreign energy sources. They have called for a full evidentiary hearing, a trial-like setting where witnesses for both sides would cross-examined under oath.

Frederick M. Lowther, an attorney for Iroquois, said the need for the pipeline "has been demonstrated conclusively" and urged his adversaries to "stop complaining and start competing."

He was backed by representatives from the governments of New York, Massachusetts, Vermont, Connecticut and Maine, who urged swift FERC certification of the pipeline.

"The need for more natural gas in the Northeast is critical," said Barbara Heffernan, a Connecticut official.

But Mark Siefert, a spokesman for the Independent Petroleum Association of America, said "there is no evidence of a pent-up demand" for more natural gas in the region.

He also said the presence of such a large gas pipeline would harm U.S. producers and possibly force many of them out of business. Domestic gas producers have said Canadian gas, which is subject to fewer regulatory controls than U.S. gas, would have an unfair price advantage in the United States.

Ronald Wilson, a spokesman for an environmentalist organization in Connecticut, said the pipeline's construction would damage fragile wetlands and forests in the state's Housatonic River valley.

"Our towns are wondering why that is going to be permitted to happen," he said.

And an attorney for psychologist Joyce Brothers, whose upstate New York estate would be intersected by the pipeline, complained that valuable, prehistoric artifacts would be disturbed by the pipeline. The path of the controversial pipeline has already been changed several times, once reportedly because of objections from prominent Connecticut residents such as playwright Arthur Miller and actor Dustin Hoffman.

MANILA: At least 279 killed

firmed dead in the earthquake and hundreds more remained trapped in the rubble. Nearly 700 were injured.

The U.S. military joined the search for survivors Tuesday. Japan and other countries also sent aid and medical teams.

Filipino reporters who visited areas of major damage said there was little sign of a coordinated, comprehensive government rescue operation.

Most rescuers were private citizens organized by local civic groups and lacked training to deal with the emergency. Reporters also said rescuers lacked heavy equipment such as cranes to lift debris.

In Baguio, Rep. Raul Roco, assistant House majority leader, stood helpless in front of the Nevada Hotel after shouting to his wife who was trapped inside.

Frustrated, Roco urged cadets of the Philippine Military Academy, located there, to help him rescue his wife.

"Sir, we want to help you but what can we do? How can we, with our bare hands?" a cadet responded.

The military said it was unable to bring cranes, tractors and other heavy equipment to Baguio because of landslides triggered by the earthquake. The landslides also trapped hundreds of people in passenger buses, trucks and private cars.

Filipino officials and reporters who visited the city said hundreds of the city's 120,000 residents have fled their homes and pitched tents in the city's park or are living in their cars.

Eighty-two people are known to have been killed in Baguio and hundreds are feared missing.

Food and fuel supplies in the city were reportedly running low. Col. Bienvenido Liclican, spokesman for the military rescue team, said the search for survivors had to be suspended at night because there is no electricity to power searchlights.

He appealed over Manila radio stations for tools, blood plasma, medicine and doctors to care for the injured.

Manila radio and television stations appealed to listeners to contribute to a fund for the victims of the quake.

"This is developing into a national tragedy," said a reporter for the ABS-CBN television network.

Mrs. Aquino declared a state of emergency throughout central Luzon island, which suffered the greatest damage during the earthquake, the strongest temblor to strike the Philippines in 14 years.

Defense Secretary Fidel Ramos, who visited Baguio on Tuesday, said 50 people may have been killed in the Hyatt Terraces Baguio hotel when the front section of the inner atrium collapsed.

STUDY: Panel to debate options

(From 1A)

But only 15 or 16 people will serve, he said. Restaurant owners, grocery store managers, retailers, hotel/motel managers and non-smokers and smokers will comprise the committee, he said.

Castro said the city will draft a rough ordinance for committee members to evaluate.

"It's a coming thing," Castro said of why the city needs to restrict smoking in public places.

"It's a proven fact that people who are smoking near you will affect you. That's what makes the issue so emotional."

Kevin Laughlin, assistant city attorney, will be in charge of designing the new ordinance.

"It's really kind of early to tell as to what might be in there," Laughlin said. "I've been directed to look more in the middle of the road.

"I'm hoping we can work this through without too much controversy."

Ms. Coleman, who will serve on the committee, said she doesn't expect talks between committee members to turn into a verbal boxing match.

"We're not going to sit down and fight," she said. "We're going to work out something we can all live with. It's a matter of choice and personal freedom."

However, smokers will not tolerate severe anti-smoking measures, she said.

"We're always the ones who are compromising," she said. "There needs to be a line drawn on how much harassment we will take.

"I'm in favor of separation of the areas, but there has been a trend of putting the smoking areas in a corner, in the dark and in back. We resent being treated like that."

In addition, Ms. Coleman said she wants to make sure grocers, restaurant managers and mall officials have enough say in how strict the expanded ordinance will be.

Susan Perkins, Midland Park Mall marketing director, said mall officials have taken no official stance on the issue.

"It has never been brought up as a problem here," Ms. Perkins said. "We have not had any complaints.

"As a shopping center we have smokers and non-smokers, so we don't want to alienate anyone. We want to accommodate everyone."

Henry Goulet, a former smoker who will serve on the committee, said he hopes for as severe a smoking policy as possible.

"I think it should be severe enough to where a non-smoker would not be bothered by someone who smokes," said Goulet, 69, who owns a furniture refinishing business.

"When I was a smoker, I always made sure I didn't light up without asking someone first," he said. "In my opinion the bottom line is real simple. If smokers and non-smokers were more considerate of each other, there wouldn't be any problems."

Goulet also said he expects amicable negotiations between committee factions.

"There's no reason in the world that some kind of compromise can't be reached," he said. "I don't see why smokers and non-smokers can't get along in the same small room — as long as the smokers don't smoke."

In addition to the proposed ordinance, the committee will review a recently completed survey of smoking policies in 25 Texas cities.

Laughlin, who conducted the survey, said all cities restrict smoking in retail stores, while every city but Arlington prohibits smoking in grocery stores except for designated areas.

Smoking is regulated in some way in all cities except in Tyler, whose restaurants and cafeterias were excluded from a smoking ordinance, he said.

SMOKERS: Battle lines drawn

(From 1A)

According to a random survey taken in Midland Monday, here is how people responded to the threat of an expanded smoking policy:

Sandy Gilmore, 39, of Midland: "I think it is stupid. Somebody's trying to tell people what they can and cannot do. They're going too far. That's kind of communistic."

Jeff Hawkins, 29, a Midland swimming pool installer: "As long as it's not in stores. A bar is a social place to meet people. There shouldn't be a ban there."

Mrs. Wayne Culvahous, no age given, of Midland: "I'm all for it. I'd like to see no smoking, period. It's hazardous to our health."

Dalye Binnion, a retired Midland teacher who also would not give an age: "I don't smoke, so I don't think they should smoke in any public place or any place there are large amounts of people. In restaurants and bars there should be a separate secluded area for non-smokers."

Margie Beach, 35, of Midland: "I think they should have designated areas. I have a child at home that has asthma that cannot tolerate cigarette smoke. There are certain health reasons that almost demand it."

Brandon Armstrong, 19, a Sears employee in Midland: "I agree that it (the ban) should be in all public places. It would be nice not to have smoking in places like the mall."

Mary Nimz, no age given, a self-employed Midlander: "I think it's up to the owners of the store to decide whether to have smoking there or not. I think they ought to put it on the polls and let the people vote for it."

James Churchwell, 36, an ex-smoker: "I've just recently moved here from Amarillo and the ordinance has been in effect there for some time. I don't know how they're going to do it, but they're going to have to be strong. Whether this area will push for it, I don't know."

Irma Saenz, a non-smoker: "I think that's taking it too far. They might have non-smoking or a section where you can smoke, but I think a lot of our privileges are being taken away."

Ilona Munzer, 18, a smoker: "I think anyone who wants to smoke should be able to smoke. They've already got no-smoking places in restaurants. It's your right to smoke if you want to smoke."

Cindy Thomason, 25, a Midland teacher: "I guess to be fair they should have special sections (in restaurants), but it would suit me fine if they banned it everywhere. Banning it sounds wonderful to me."

Lisa Melton, 25, an Odessa teacher visiting Midland: "It's not fair that the people that do not smoke that we have to be subjected to it. You have to respect other people's rights as well."

Kay Greene, 44, an Odessa homemaker visiting Midland: "I hate to stand in a (grocery store) aisle and people are smoking in my face. I hate to go to places where the smoke follows you around."

Jodi Hardesty, 20, a Midland YMCA employee: "In most public places they shouldn't allow smoking at all. It's bad for everybody. It makes me sick."

Al Zigelman, 71, a smoker and retired mail carrier: "I can see it (a smoking ban) in grocery stores, but in a place as big as the mall I don't see smoke hurting that much. If you're in a confined area, it's a little different."

Staff interns Todd Giese and Tim Walker contributed to this report.

ALARM: Experts urge caution when working on home wiring

(From 1A)

you don't know what you're doing," Branch said.

Jack Roseberry, a Midland electrical inspector, agrees.

"We discourage anyone that's not a master electrician or journeyman from doing electrical work," Roseberry said.

In the city of Midland, performing electrical work requires a licensed and bonded electrician. Home owners, though, are allowed to do work at their residence with a home-owners permit.

Roseberry said that electrical circuits should always be turned off when doing electrical work or when working around electric wires, as in the case of Jacobs. "Kill out the current and use a volt meter to make sure (current is off)," he said.

According to Roseberry, a low current, as in the case of Jacobs, is not deadly unless someone who receives a shock is grounded. Being grounded causes the current to flow through the body; without a ground there is no flow.

Branch said to avoid being grounded when working with or near electricity. He recommends a ground fault interrupter on all bathroom sockets, as required by law, to prevent accidents.

Branch said people need to be careful even when unplugging appliances.

"Pull out with the plug instead of the wire because if the wire was frayed and you are grounded you may get electrocuted," he said, adding that constant pulling by the wire can stretch it and cause it to fray over time.

GERMANY: 'Obstacles swept aside' envisioned it as a "transit point for ideas and perspectives" between West and East.

The treaty with the Soviets, Kohl said, could include economic aid. But he said no specific financial aid was offered during his weekend visit to induce the Soviets to remove one of their biggest obstacles to German unification — objections to a united Germany in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, who accompanied Kohl and Finance Minister Theo Waigel on the trip, also said West Gemany and the Soviet Union reached agreement on cooperation without West Germany giving specific aid promises.

"We reached agreement ... on long-term cooperation, but we have not discussed any numbers," Genscher said in Paris, where he was attending another round of talks on the international ramifications of German unification.

Waigel said the Soviets presented "no bill" for their acceptance of German reunification.

West Germany has already backed a $3 billion bank credit to help the Soviet Union revamp its economy and has agreed to pay $780 million toward the upkeep of Soviet soldiers stationed in East Germany in the second half of this year.

At last week's Houston summit of Western industrial powers, Kohl had pushed for a $15 billion international aid package for the Soviet Union. Instead, the leaders asked the International Monetary Fund to study what kind of aid would be most beneficial.

Kohl said the proposed treaty with the Soviet Union should be comprehensive and provide a "consultation mechanism" for the two countries. He said the treaty with Poland should also be wide-ranging and not just focus on the two countries' border.

West Virginia using coupon campaign for drug users

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — West Virginians can report suspected drug dealers by filling out a coupon — anonymously, if they prefer — and mailing it to state police under a unique new statewide program.

Civil libertarians said the program would create "a paranoid atmosphere," and put West Virginia on the level of Albania, the hardline Communist nation, or Nazi Germany.

The program started on a small basis in February when the Williamson Daily News printed similar coupons on its own and invited people to fill them out and mail them to state police.

As a result, police in Williamson and Mingo County have received nearly 700 coupons listing the names, addresses or license plate numbers of suspected drug dealers or users.

Last month, federal, state and local authorities arrested 46 people in Mingo County as a result of the coupon tips. Wally Warden, editor of the Williamson newspaper, said six people have been convicted in local courts and plea agreements are being worked out in federal court for other suspects. No one has been sentenced, he said.

State police announced their own, statewide program Monday.

Now, the coupons will be available at state police detachments and will be carried by troopers in their cruisers, Trooper Ric Robinson said. They'll also be passed out at the state fair in August, he said.

Tipsters, who get no compensation, can fill out the name and address of drug users, the address of suspicious activity or the license plates of cars in the vicinity. The information can be called to a toll-free phone number, or mailed to state police headquarters.

A spokesman for the American Civil Liberties Union said the program would create a spying system among residents.

"It's the wrong way to fight the drug war," said Bob O'Brien, West Virginia delegate to the national board of the ACLU. "It creates a paranoid atmosphere, just the way it was in Germany in the '30s and '40s when people were encouraged to spy on their neighbors.

"It's the thing going on today in Romania and Albania, where people complained to their government about the sense of always being watched. This kind of program will not make us drug free, it will just make us unfree."

Robinson said tipsters only will get the ball rolling.

"We don't expect the public to do the investigations for us," he said. "You supply us with the names, we'll do the investigation."

Senate limits debate on civil rights bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate voted Tuesday to speed up action on a major civil rights bill as critics complained the legislation was being "rammed down our throats." The bill bogged down in a fight over hiring quotas.

"If we're going to be treated like a bunch of bums on this side of the aisle, there won't be any agreements on anything," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said after the Senate action.

Civil rights supporters in a hall outside the Senate chamber cheered as lawmakers voted 62-38 to limit debate to 30 hours on the measure designed to combat job discrimination.

Democrats voted 54-1 in favor of limiting debate, while Republicans opposed it 37-8.

At the White House, reporters asked Chief of Staff John Sununu about the chance of reaching a compromise on the legislation.

Sununu said President Bush would continue to press for passage of a civil rights bill, but would veto any bill that appeared to impose hiring quotas on business.

Provisions of the bill sponsored by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., range from a ban on racial harassment in the workplace to punitive damages for victims of intentional discrimination.

The sharpest clashes have come over a provision that would require employers to end discriminatory practices or justify them in court on grounds of business necessity. That would reverse the most controversial of five 1989 Supreme Court rulings on job bias addressed by the bill.

The justices, in a case involving a salmon cannery in Alaska, held that it was up to those who file such lawsuits to prove the practices they objected to were not motivated by business necessity.

The Bush administration, business groups and some GOP senators say the bill would lead to employers using hiring quotas to avert any chance they would incur the costs of job discrimination suits.

Bush said last week he was encouraged by the negotiations after Kennedy and Sununu appeared to reach a compromise.

"I thought we had an agreement," Sununu said Tuesday. "The senator came in yesterday after we had an agreement, and then we didn't have it anymore."

However, Kennedy said on the Senate floor that the "president never claimed that there had been a deal and the situation was locked up ... and neither did I."

Prosecution nears end of testimony against Barry

AP Laserphoto

Betty L. Smith enters a federal courthouse in Chattanooga, Tenn. Tuesday for a hearing in connection with an arrest warrant charging her with refusing to answer a subpoena to testify in the cocaine-perjury trial of Washington Mayor Marion Barry. After a Washington police officer identified her as the person named in the warrant, U.S. Magistrate John Powers ordered Ms. Smith to be flown to Washington to testify in the trial.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Prosecutors neared the end of their month-long drug and perjury case against Mayor Marion Barry on Tuesday after two women — a former Carter administration aide and a Barry friend testifying under court order — outlined a history of drug use with him.

They were the ninth and tenth witnesses to testify they saw Barry use illegal drugs.

Doris Crenshaw, who was a White House small business aide, said she had snorted cocaine powder, smoked crack cocaine and used cocaine-laced cigarettes with Barry — including an episode at the 1988 Democratic National Convention. She said she began using drugs with him in 1985.

Bettye Lynn Smith, who was flown in from Tennessee under court order, testified she had used cocaine with Barry many times and supplied him with it for years, including less than a month before his Jan. 18 arrest in an FBI sting operation.

Reluctant to testify against Barry, whom she described as "a close personal friend of mine," Smith appeared in court only after being ordered by a U.S. magistrate to return to the nation's capital to testify. She had been undergoing treatment for stress at a psychiatric hospital in Chattanooga.

Crenshaw said she and the mayor used cocaine at the Democratic convention in Atlanta, where Barry was heading the District of Columbia's delegation.

"We used it at the hotel," Crenshaw said. "It was powder cocaine."

Crenshaw, who met Barry when both were active in the civil rights movement, described him as "a very kind and understanding and sympathetic person."

She said she first offered the mayor powder cocaine at her Capitol Hill home where "we snorted it ... off business cards."

Crenshaw also testified that she used drugs with Barry on Dec. 22, 1988, the day Barry's ties to Charles Lewis, who later pleaded guilty to drug charges, became public.

She said she visited the mayor that day at the Washington hotel room of Willie Davis, a former aide to Birmingham Mayor Richard Arrington.

There, Barry smoked crack cocaine out of a pipe fashioned from a drinking glass and tin foil, Crenshaw testified. She said she also used the drug.

Prosecutors expected to conclude their case Wednesday with testimony on Barry telephone records. The defense will then open its case, which could include testimony from 10 to 15 witnesses, said Barry attorney R. Kenneth Mundy.

Since testimony in the case began June 19, 10 witnesses have said they saw Barry use drugs at a total of 14 hotels, 20 private residences, two businesses and on four boats in a period ranging from 1984 to the mayor's Jan. 18 arrest at a downtown Washington hotel.

On Tuesday, Smith was questioned about her fitness to testify by U.S. District Court Judge Thomas Penfield Jackson, who had demanded her return pending the dawn magistrate's hearing in Chattanooga.

"I'll try," Smith said, choking back tears.

Once the trial questioning began, Smith described in a soft, calm voice a long history of drug use with Barry.

Smith told the jury that she and the mayor snorted cocaine powder at her Capitol Hill home "maybe five times" in 1983 and up to half a dozen times a year after that until 1986 when she stopped using the drug with him. She continued to supply him, she said.

On the other hand, Smith also testified she never saw Barry use or possess cocaine in the Bahamas — even though other witnesses have testified that she and the mayor used drugs during a Thanksgiving 1987 trip there.

Trade deficit increases despite boost in exports

WASHINGTON (AP) — The U.S. trade deficit widened to $7.73 billion in May as a big jump in imports of oil and foreign cars offset the second-highest level of exports on record, the Commerce Department reported Tuesday.

The May deficit was 5.8 percent higher than a revised April trade gap of $7.31 billion, but most economists discounted the report as a small worsening of the deficit.

They pointed out U.S. export sales remained strong and they predicted the trend would continue as economic growth overseas helps prop up a sluggish American market.

"Thank goodness for trade. It remains the brightest spot in the economy," said Allen Sinai, chief economist of the Boston Co. "The small increase in the May deficit is not of concern because we believe that strong growth overseas will keep U.S. exports rising."

Many analysts believe export sales are the only thing keeping the country out of a recession. In the first three months of the year, fully half of total economic growth was supplied by the rise in overseas sales.

In a separate report Tuesday, the Federal Reserve said industrial output rose by 0.4 percent in June, helping push the operating rate at the nation's factories, mines and utilities to 83.5 percent of capacity, the highest level this year.

Much of the June increase reflected a spurt in auto production in advance of a possible strike this fall and a heat wave which boosted utility demand. But analysts said a growing portion of U.S. manufacturing output is being shipped to overseas markets.

The Bush administration, which is counting on strong foreign demand to continue propping up the economy, was pleased with the May trade report.

Commerce Secretary Robert Mosbacher noted the U.S. trade deficit for the first five months of the year was almost $6 billion less than the same period a year ago.

"We can be encouraged by our continuing steady export growth of 8 percent this year, which is more than double the overall growth of imports," Mosbacher said.

House debates balanced budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House on Tuesday fought over a constitutional amendment to balance the budget as President Bush declared that the worsening federal deficit meant "the time for game playing is over."

Backers of the amendment said they expected to fall short of the required two-thirds majority. They argued that nothing short of a constitutional mandate could stop an increase in the national debt which now tops $3 trillion.

"None of us want to face the tough decisions at hand, but faced they must be," said Rep. Larry Craig, R-Idaho, co-sponsor of the amendment.

The amendment would, beginning in 1995, prohibit government spending from exceeding revenues, or any increase in government borrowing, unless the requirements are waived by a three-fifths vote of each chamber of Congress.

The House last voted on a balanced budget amendment in 1982, when it fell short by more than 40 votes.

The president's budget office estimated on Monday that the deficit in fiscal 1991, which begins Oct. 1, would reach $168.8 billion unless spending is cut or taxes raised. That figure would trigger automatic spending cuts under the Gramm-Rudman law of nearly $105 billion.

And the new administration estimate does not include the tens of billions of dollars needed for the bailout of the savings and loan industry.

Earthquake relief needed in islands

A major earthquake that struck the Philippines on Monday, killing at least 230 people and trapping hundreds of others in damaged buildings, will no doubt tax relief organizations in the United States already responding to other disasters.

Yet that assistance is sorely needed. The temblor that struck the islands was that nation's worst in 14 years and was at least as powerful as the destructive and deadly earthquake that hit Iran in June, killing about 40,000 people.

The quake Monday measured 7.7 on the Richter scale, strong enough to collapse buildings, injuring and trapping hundreds of people. Furthermore, Manila TV stations said local officials were short of blood, medicine and rescue equipment.

One of the hardest-hit areas was Baguio, a mountain resort 110 miles north of Manila, where reports indicated that 22 buildings were heavily damaged and as many as 1,000 people were trapped in debris.

Literally thousands of people were homeless following the quake and many of Baguio's 119,000 residents slept outdoors Monday night.

Shortly after the earthquake, Philippine President Corazon Aquino ordered the military to begin rescue operations and closed schools throughout the area. She then began touring affected areas to assess damage.

Following the vicious quake, the islands suffered 70 aftershocks, measuring up to 3 on the Richter scale, although officials said most people could not feel many of the aftershocks.

Assistance from the United States was quick in coming, as U.S. military units responded to the worst-affected areas with medical supplies and engineering equipment to help clear rubble, and assistance was also offered by Canada, Thailand, Switzerland and South Korea. It will all be needed; entire cities have been virtually devastated and with relief materials in short supply many more casualties could result if essentials such as blood, water and food are not forthcoming.

The Philippines need our assistance now.

Cuban learns it's best to keep quiet

WASHINGTON — Cuban exiles living in Miami came to the United States for freedom of speech, but they're learning that it's best to keep their mouths shut, especially if they advocate anything less than the violent overthrow of Fidel Castro.

Anderson

There is a feeling in Miami's Little Havana, as oppressive as the hot summer weather, that Cuban-Americans should toe a rabidly anti-Castro line. And if they don't, they are likely to be publicly censured by those who do. Or worse, they could be firebombed.

Ramon Cernuda, a Cuban-born publisher and art collector, knows the cost of independent thinking. Last month, the art museum he operates was bombed. Federal investigators believe he may have been targeted because of his moderate views on U.S.-Cuba relations.

The FBI is investigating 17 such incidents that have occurred in Miami in the last three years — most against Cuban-Americans who don't subscribe to the vehement anti-Castro doctrine. The situation is so bad that the FBI has dubbed Miami the terrorism capital of the United States.

The keeper of the anti-Castro flame is the Cuban American National Foundation, which is based in Miami. We reported recently on the group's heavy-handed influence in Washington, where it hands out substantial political contributions and lobbies for a hard-line approach toward Cuba.

The group has condemned the terrorist attacks including the bombing of Cernuda's gallery.

Led by Jorge Mas Canosa, the foundation views itself as the true representative of Cuban-Americans. But it doesn't have much time for exiles who support dialogue with Cuba. Mas Canosa has implied that those who disagree with him are close to Castro.

Mas Canosa renounces violence, but we have learned that the foundation has added to its ranks two brothers who were once members of the violent Cuban Nationalist Movement.

Guillermo and Ignacio Novo were recently assigned duties on the "information commission" of the Cuban American National Foundation. The commission's job is to generate better public relations in Miami.

The foundation could have picked better PR men. The Novo brothers were convicted and then acquitted in the 1976 murder in Washington of Orlando Letelier, the former Chilean ambassador to the United States. Letelier was living in semi-exile in the United States because of his open opposition to Chilean Dictator Augusto Pinochet. At the time, some Cuban exiles looked to Pinochet for leadership in overthrowing Marxist governments in Latin America, including Cuba. The Novo brothers eventually were granted a new trial by an appeals court and were found innocent.

Some of their other exploits were highlighted in the book "Assassination on Embassy Row," a detailed account of the Letelier murder written by John Dinges and Saul Landau. According to the authors, Guillermo Novo, in 1964, fired a bazooka at the United Nations headquarters in New York to protest the presence of a Cuban banking official there.

Guillermo Novo told our associate Scott Sleek that he doesn't regret any of his past activities, and he wrote off the bazooka attack to the enthusiasm of youth.

The foundation makes no excuses for recruiting the Novo brothers for its PR committee, since their murder conviction was reversed.

Right now the foundation has more important concerns — like the FBI investigation into Miami terrorist activities. Foundation officials don't like the way that investigation is going. Mas Canosa wants the FBI to find out if Cuban agents carried out the bombings to discredit exile groups. The FBI says that is possible, since Castro agents have infiltrated those groups before.

NOT THE FIRST TIME — The Central Intelligence Agency has been accused of using a Mexican drug dealer's ranch to train guerrilla forces. The allegations shouldn't come as any surprise. Through the 1980s, the CIA relied extensively on foreign security officials in Latin America to help them keep tabs on communist governments. But many of the security officials were involved in drug trafficking. In many instances, the CIA actually hindered the drug efforts of other agencies, including the Drug Enforcement Administration.

Population control can save world

The letter headlined "Overpopulation not cause of starvation" which appeared in the July 1 Midland Reporter-Telegram was rampant with errors and faulty logic.

There must be more land and resources than inhabitants in any ecological system. The world's population of 5.128 billion people (mid-1988 estimate), living in a Texas-sized city (262,017 square miles), would create a population density of 19,571.3 persons per square mile — far in excess of the density of Hong Kong, 14,321.6; Singapore, 10,924.4; or Japan, 854.6. The remainder of the "empty world" would still be unable to support this density.

The present world population, given the current rate of growth, is estimated to double during the second decade of the 21st century. Texas-sized cities or any other fanciful partitioning of the earth's surface will not increase the size of this planet.

Overpopulation is not a myth; the Third World is acutely aware of this fact, and it's only a matter of time before industrialized nations share in the acute misery of too many people on too little land. Ongoing conscious efforts of birth control provide our only hope of avoiding this misery. The people of a nation, whether that nation be Marxist, democratic, socialistic, or dictatorial, must decide which form or forms of birth control to employ.

"The simple believes everything, but the prudent looks where he is going." — Proverbs 14:15.

Firefighters deserve allowance for food

Recently it was brought to my attention that our firemen have to furnish all their own meals while on their required 24-hour shifts. In order for them to buy food they pool their money to buy groceries and take items from their homes, yet they are required to stay at their assigned station for the 24-hour shifts.

These guys can't get a raise, but have the added expense of their food bills. I could understand if they had lunch hours to eat at their home, but they are required to have their meals at the assigned stations.

Come on Midland! It seems there should be some sort of food allowance for the men who put forth their lives and dedicate themselves for voluntary call-in, if needed, on their days off. These people deserve to have their food provided by the city of Midland.

Fire department gives thanks for Fourth help

Northeast Volunteer Fire Department wants to say thanks for helping our volunteer fire department by allowing us to participate at the Fourth of July Rodeo.

We had lots of help from lots of people: Ralph Powell, Johnny Hackney of Johnny's Barbecue, Explorer Scouts from the Midland County Sheriff's Office, the Southwestern Bell Pioneers Club, Gene Connors for cooking the beans, Midland Reporter-Telegram and many, many more volunteers, too many to name.

We could not have had a success without your help. Thank you again.

Mandela makes history by visiting U.S.

There I was, along with thousands of others, waiting to see Nelson Mandela.

The guy next to me had long hair, a beard and an earring. He wore a T-shirt that said, "Anybody who don't like Hank Williams can kiss my tail."

Grizzard

"What do you think Willie will do first? 'Whiskey River'?" he suddenly asked me.

"I beg your pardon?" I said.

"What song do you think Willie will do first? He's done 'Whiskey River' first every time I seen him."

I almost laughed right in the man's face.

"You think Willie Nelson is appearing here tonight?"

"He's my favorite male artist."

"I believe I have a bit of bad news for you," I began to explain. "This isn't a Willie Nelson concert. Nelson Mandela is going to be here tonight."

"He any kin to Barbara?"

"Barbara who? Bush?"

"No, Barbara Mandrell. She's my favorite female artist."

"Where have you been?" I asked this man. "It's Man-del-a. He is head of the African National Congress, which is fighting apartheid in South Africa. The white government there practices overt racism against black citizens, and it even put Mr. Mandela in jail for 27 years."

"Merle Haggard was in jail once, too."

"It's not the same thing. Mr. Mandela was a political prisoner."

"What is he doing visiting here?"

"Drumming up support, both financial and otherwise, for the fight against racism in South Africa."

"So everybody likes this fellow?"

"Well, not everybody. There's the John Birch Society, for instance. It contends that Mr. Mandela is a Marxist."

"Which one? Groucho?"

"No, Karl. There are also those in this country who do not like the fact Mr. Mandela has embraced such leaders as Fidel Castro of Cuba, Yasir Arafat of the Palestine Liberation Organization, and Mohammar Khadafy of Libya."

"Birds of a feather?"

"Something like that."

"Where else has Mr. Mandolin played?"

"It's Man-del-a They gave him a ticker tape parade in N.Y. City, and he flew down to Washington in one of Donald Trump's planes to meet with President Bush."

"What did the president say to him?"

"He said he didn't like the fact that Mr. Mandela says it would be OK to use violence if necessary in the fight against aparthei.l."

"What did Mr. Man say to that?"

"He said, 'Want to buy a T-shirt?' "

"He sells T-shirts, too?"

"You can't run a revolutionary struggle on hope and bravery alone."

"Think I can get one here tonight? All I got is this one and the one I got at a Mel Tillis concert."

"I'm certain you can find one somewhere."

The man started to leave.

"You're not going to stay to see Mr. Mandela?" I asked him.

"No, I think I'll buy a six-pack and go home and put on a Willie CD."

"You might miss seeing history being made."

"I done seen that," he said. "I seen Charlie Pride on stage at the Grand Ol' Opry singing country music to white folks."

The man disappeared into the crowd. I craned my neck to get my first glimpse of the star of the show.

How much will perestroika cost U.S.?

When it comes to perestroika, the biggest question facing the United States is, how much is it going to cost us?

A friendly Russian bear does not come cheap, and the United States is now burning the midnight oil to add up the bill.

Buchwald

Deep underneath the Treasury Department building is a situation room where all the economic facets of the Soviet economy are played out. It is here that the president will push the button if he cannot find any good excuse to extend credit to Gorbachev.

The other day he came close. A grizzled economist named Mozart, buried under a mountain of computer printouts, announced, "We estimate that now that Gorby has won his battle in the Communist Party Congress, we will have to give him $300 billion just to replace the popcorn machines in his movie theaters."

President Bush bit his lip: "I'll never get Congress to approve that."

Elkins, the president's Chief Soviet Watcher, said, "Gorbachev has indicated that if we don't lend him $200 billion to improve the caliber of the Red Army soccer team, he will withdraw all his missile-reduction proposals and will go ahead with his plans to produce acid rain over Lithuania. Frankly, I think he's bluffing, but who am I to say?"

"You're my Soviet expert," the president said tersely. "When it comes to wanting money from us, I think Gorbachev is dead serious. While he was here, he kept borrowing quarters from me to go to the Washington Hilton men's room. That doesn't sound like someone who is kidding around."

Benny Boner from the CIA Savings and Loan Bank suggested, "Why don't we send Gorbachev 400 S&Ls and let him make his own loans? Then instead of the Soviet deficit being our problem, it will become his."

The president said, "If we give Gorbachev our S&Ls, and he finds out what condition they are in, he would have no choice but to declare war. We must advance him hard dollars or lose him as a friend."

"But how, Mr. President?"

"Read my lips."

Everyone watched the president intently.

Elkins spoke up, "You're saying that you want to tax the American people so that the Soviets can borrow money! During your campaign you promised that you would never raise taxes to pay for balalaika music at Lenin's tomb."

"I know what I promised," the President snapped. "Now read my lips again."

Benny laughed, "You said that you didn't say it, and if you did, you didn't mean it. That's a good one, Mr. President. Before we take any money from our day-care centers, let's examine some facts. The hard-liners are making headway in the Soviet Union and are trying to push Gorbachev to the wall. If they dump him, there will be no need to advance any money to the Soviets."

The president added, "If Gorbachev falls and the hard-liners take over, that could mean another arms race."

Mozart agreed, "Exactly. I'm not saying that it's the best of all solutions, but at least our money won't have to go abroad."

Benny said, "I've always maintained that it's better to fight the Russkies on the beaches of Easthampton than to foreclose on their condominiums on the Black Sea."

Elkins told the group, "I wouldn't trust a Soviet borrower any further than I could throw an Albanian oilman. Commies have always been lousy loan risks. I know one Red who turned out to be an FBI informer. He lost his car because he couldn't make his interest payments. Does that sound like someone we should be lending money to?"

The president repeated, "Read my lips."

Everyone stared at him.

Benny, the CIA man, said, "You mean you want us to make the loan if they'll take Noriega? Good thinking, Mr. President. We'll kill two stones with one bird."

Manhole covers mystery solved

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The mystery of the missing manhole covers was apparently solved Tuesday when some of the more than 185 purloined lids turned up at a scrap-metal yard.

The case had police and city workers scratching their heads as covers disappeared at a rate of more than 25 a day for the past week. They even considering the possibility of some bizarre new fad among children.

But on Tuesday, cast-iron manhole covers ranging in weight from 50 pounds to 200 pounds were found to have been sneaked into truckloads of higher grade iron sold to the Downtown Metal Center. The higher weight brought a higher price, said center manager Robert Kelman.

"The manhole covers are pretty flat so they can hide them well," said Kelman. "Basically, they just used them to weigh down the load."

No arrests had been made as of late Tuesday afternoon.

SS calls unanswered

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Social Security Administration's new telephone system is leaving many people waiting in vain for their calls to be returned, government auditors said Tuesday.

The General Accounting Office said that, in some types of cases, 42 percent of callers never received the follow-up calls they were promised when they dialed Social Security's toll-free 800 number.

Social Security follows up 97 percent of the time in other categories, the report said.

"It is difficult to avoid the conclusion that the Social Security 800 system is not a working number, or at least that it is not working very well," said Rep. Andy Jacobs Jr., D-Ind., chairman of the House Ways and Means Social Security subcommittee.

GAO, an arm of Congress, began investigating the phone system after Social Security blocked telephone access to its local field offices. Social Security officials insisted that requiring that all calls be made to the 800 number would improve service.

OSHA wants exposure cut

WASHINGTON (AP) — The federal limit on workplace exposure to asbestos would be cut in half under a change proposed Tuesday by the Labor Department.

About 700,000 American workers in general industry, mostly in auto repair operations, and up to another 1.4 million construction and building renovation workers would be affected by the revised guideline, said the Occupational Safety and Health Administration.

Now OSHA rules permit workers to be exposed to no more than 0.2 fibers of asbestos per cubic centimeter of air over an 8-hour period. The proposed change would cut that limit to 0.1 fiber per cubic centimeter of air over an 8-hour shift.

GOP challenges Cuomo

NICHOLS, N.Y. (AP) — Gov. Mario Cuomo said Tuesday that if Republicans keep challenging him to run for president, they just might get their wish.

Democrat Cuomo, speaking to reporters in this town west of Binghamton, took note of recent partisan attacks from federal drug czar William Bennett and U.S. Rep. Newt Gingrich.

Cuomo spokesman Gary Fryer said Cuomo, who's running for a third term as governor, was just being humorous at his Nichols stop.

Gerber sends supply of MBF to retarded boy

YANKEE LAKE, N.Y. (AP) — Raymond Dunn Jr. turned 16 Tuesday, but the profoundly retarded birthday boy feasted not on cake, to which he is allergic, but on the day's greatest gift: the bland, brown infant formula that keeps him alive.

Gerber Products Co., which stopped making the meat-based formula in 1985, resumed production two months ago after Raymond's doctors said he would die without it. Gerber employees volunteered to make a batch on their own time, and on June 26 the Dunns received a two-year supply, free of charge.

"Gerber says 'Babies are our business,' but Raymond's their business, too," said Carol Dunn, who spent five years trying to get the company to retool for a market of one.

The Dunns celebrate Raymond's birthdays quietly yet thankfully, because each is one more than they were told to expect after Raymond was born with a broken skull and a brain that had been deprived of oxygen.

At 16, Raymond is getting mail from Navy recruiters and college admissions offices, but he rarely leaves his house in this village in the Catskills.

As he sits in his wheelchair or lies on his special floor mat, Raymond moves only with the help of others, and sees only shadows. His expression ranges from a painful grimace to a slight smile. He snorts, gurgles, wheezes and occasionally burps.

He weighs 32 pounds, and his twisted, cramped body is 4 feet long. He suffers 15 to 20 major seizures a day and sleeps two or three hours a night, if at all. His asthma makes each breath a struggle; phlegm plugs repeatedly hospitalize him and threaten to kill him.

Raymond, the Dunns' only child, also is allergic to the foods that help most children grow. But he always was sustained by Gerber's MBF (meat-based formula).

When Gerber decided to drop the product five years ago, Mrs. Dunn was unable to find or create any substitute that did not make Raymond sick. Frantic, she hunted down every can she could find, and Gerber kept passing along its own backlog.

By July 1988, Gerber ran out of MBF, leaving Raymond with less than two years' supply.

Supported by the state Association for Retarded Children, Mrs. Dunn begged Gerber to make more MBF, and began a mail campaign asking others to pressure the company. Finally, the company's research director gave in.

Meanwhile, at Gerber, volunteers in the research division put their own projects on hold, hauled out old equipment and devoted several thousand square feet and several days of production space and time to Raymond's supply of MBF.

It arrived in Yankee Lake just in time. The Dunns had about two dozen cans of the old formula, enough to last through the end of July.

Vietnamese students increase demands for improvements

HO CHI MINH CITY, Vietnam (AP) — It's not grades and social events that preoccupy science students at Ho Chi Minh University, but crumbling buildings, primitive equipment, tattered books and crowded dorms.

In a decrepit building that wasn't new in French colonial days a half century ago, a stairway reeked with the stench of a toilet.

In the physics lab, students used equipment that belonged in a museum. The newest book in the dusty chemistry library was published in 1974.

Students said those who had to live on campus were packed seven or eight to rooms about 14 feet square that had one table, a single light bulb and only intermittent electricity.

Medical students said they didn't get enough to eat. "That's why we are so skinny," said Tran Thanh Cuong, 27.

For the past two years, Vietnamese students have been increasingly vocal in demanding better conditions and even got the Marxist curriculum revised.

Sources said the authorities have yielded in hopes of avoiding the kind of student protests that challenged the Chinese regime last year, helped bring down Communist governments in Eastern Europe and cause street battles with police in South Korea.

Although the leadership may fear it, students in Vietnam don't appear ready to demonstrate for democracy. Vietnamese and Western sources say there have been no major demonstrations since the war ended in April 1975.

No students have been detained for political activity, but any who advocated overthrowing the Communist Party would be arrested, said Do Van Chung, head of the Education Ministry's department of student enrollment and management.

"I'm sure some students think they can follow the example of the Chinese students, but we haven't seen it openly expressed," he said.

A Westerner said he heard many people question Communist rule during his year at a Vietnamese university, but never a student.

"I ask them and they say, 'Here, we are concentrating on money for food'," the Westerner said.

Thousands leaving Israel for career opportunities

By Karin Laub

JERUSALEM (AP) — While Israel welcomes tens of thousands of immigrants from the Soviet Union with hope and fanfare, thousands of Jews are leaving, their Zionist dreams faded or gone.

Officials expect more than 150,000 Soviet Jews this year, but about 40,000 Israelis will emigrate — roughly 1 percent of the Jewish population of 3.8 million.

About 14,000 Israelis left last year. The increase in emigration can be blamed in part on the Soviets' entry into already tight housing and job markets.

But emigration, especially to the United States, is a long-standing problem.

By conservative estimates, 400,000 Jews have left in the four decades since Israel was founded. Population experts say the number could be 800,000 if it included Israelis who say they are leaving temporarily but never return.

THE EXODUS is a serious blow to a country that was founded to gather Jewish exiles and worries about a burgeoning Arab population in Israel and the occupied territories.

Many of the emigrants are young and educated. Some are offspring of pioneer Zionist families.

Most head for the United States. New York and Los Angeles are estimated to have attracted 200,000 Israelis each.

"When you walk around New York City, you rarely pass one or two blocks without hearing Hebrew," said Mordechai Heiblum, a physicist who has spent 17 years in the United States and works for IBM Research Laboratories.

"I left because the possibilities in Israel were non-existent," Heiblum said. He plans to return, but said that was because he had a job directing a new program to encourage the return of Israeli scientists.

Michael Kleiner, head of the Immigrant Absorption Committee in Parliament, said the government must act quickly to create jobs and housing.

"THE IMMIGRATION from the Soviet Union has sharpened the problems for young Israelis," said Kleiner, a senior legislator of Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's right-wing Likud bloc.

The warnings of growing emigration are echoed in the tent cities set up by homeless protesters outside the parliament building in Jerusalem and at city halls across the country.

One protester, Tal Yakov, said her brother plans to leave when he is discharged from the army because he has no hope of finding an apartment.

"There are many people today who are leaving: the best and the brightest, who gave their souls to this country," she told Israel television.

Some accuse the government of indifference.

"The whole country is excited that in the next few years, 300,000 Soviet Jews will arrive, but when you say at least that many people have left, this does not shock anyone," said Boaz Shviger of the Jewish Agency, which helps settle arriving Jews.

AVI PAZNER, an aide to Shamir, said: "If we have 100,000 immigrants and 10,000 who leave, we are still ahead by 90 percent. It disturbs us, but it's not something vital. There is not much we can do."

Increasing emigration also has changed the attitude that emigrants are deserters who betray the Zionist dream. People now talk freely about plans to leave and those with U.S. residency permits are envied, not criticized.

Half the respondents in a recent survey said emigration was an acceptable option for people who could not find housing or jobs, up from about 30 percent five years ago, said pollster Hanoch Smith.

Shviger said the new attitude resulted from a "deep ideological crisis" among young Israelis who no longer see the Jewish state as the center of their lives. "The young generation is running away from politics and ideology," he said.

This alienation is apparent from the growing number of emigrants among kibbutzniks, members of the communal farms that were the core of early Zionism.

The daily Yediot Ahronot said about 8,000 former kibbutzniks were among the 200,000 Israelis living in Los Angeles.

ONE IS 36-year-old Shraga Agam, who left Kibbutz Haogen in northern Israel 11 years ago and owns a successful home improvement company.

"I believe everyone has to do what's good for him," Agam told the newspaper. "For me, it's business, success and money."

Bright to rule on revoking club's license

■ Under provisions of an Ector County ordinance, one adult nightclub may lose its operating license.

By David Morris
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Admissions by the owner of an Ector County topless dance club Tuesday evening could result in the revocation of the business's license, County Attorney Tracey Bright said.

"I would expect that we would be filing some court action shortly," Ms. Bright said following a special Ector County Commissioners Court meeting Tuesday.

Precinct 1 Commissioner Jack Crider requested the meeting in order to clarify licensing procedures outlined in a county ordinance regulating sexually oriented businesses.

Jerry Lynn Henderson, who told commissioners she was half-owner of Fantasy's nightclub, said the business was not open at its current location when the ordinance passed in February.

Therefore, Fantasy's apparently does not qualify for the grace period given to pre-existing sex businesses to fully comply with the ordinance, Bright said.

Businesses in existence when the ordinance was enacted Feb. 28 have up to three years to comply with location requirements. Under these, sexually oriented businesses must be at least 1,000 feet from the nearest church, school, public park or residence.

Crider said Fantasy's, 3000 Farm to Market Road 1936, is 150 feet away from a residential property line.

Ms. Henderson argued that she merely re-opened the club in a new location following a Feb. 28 fire at a previous location and that the club ought to be classified as pre-existing.

The club re-opened March 20 at its new location, Ms. Henderson said.

According to tax records, Fantasy's is one of eight Ector County sexually oriented businesses granted licenses under the ordinance, which went into effect June 1.

Lyme disease, plague advance on West Texas

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

There's nothing like the mention of bubonic plague or Lyme disease to put a damper on summer fun in the great outdoors.

Health researchers advise that a little caution goes a long way in protecting yourself from the slight chance of contracting either of these bug-borne diseases.

Don't eat wild rabbits, for example. And don't squash ticks with your fingers.

Guy Moore, a zoonosis control specialist with the Texas Department of Health (TDH), said bubonic plague is endemic to West Texas, which means it always is present to some extent, but is in a period of low activity this year.

Mike Stanek shows how he's "sandwiched in" as the driver of Oscar Mayer Food Corp.'s wienermobile, which rolled through Midland Tuesday.

Frank promotion creates commotion

By Erin Blair
Staff Writer

He said reporters and police officers grill him at every opportunity and the public can't get enough of his buns, but Mike Stanek loves his job as an Oscar Mayer wienermobile driver.

The puns flew fast and furious as Stanek talked of having to "mustard" courage to attend Hot Dog High in Madison, Wis., where he learned to"ketchup" with the crowds.

Stanek is a junior at the University of Illinois, majoring in agricultural communication and marketing. The year's internship with Oscar Mayer Foods Corp. is a meaty assignment him.

"This is the best job in the world," Stanek said frankly. "There's no other job where you can drive a hot dog, wear shorts and make people laugh."

He's been driving the 23 foot-long "wienerbago" since June, averaging 1,000 miles a week in his dogged pursuit of publicity for National Hot Dog Month — July.

Two weeks ago the gull-wing wiener-on-a-bun-on-a-Chevy-chassis broke down at midnight near Van Horn.

"It was in the middle of nowhere," said the Atkinson, Ill., native. "I was up on top of the dog shining my flashlight and looking out for rattlesnakes and coyotes."

When tow-truck driver Cruz Mendez finally rescued the "Lamborwienie," he insisted on towing it around Van Horn before dropping it off for repairs.

"It took us a week to get recharred," Stanek said.

The wienermobile suffered more mechanical difficulties at a stop in Shreveport when a curious on-looker (his mouth no doubt agape in amazement) lost his dentures down the steam vents in the wiener's left bun.

Stanek said he never "sausage" a thing. The dentures are still lodged in the bun.

He said grown-ups seem to truly relish meeting the wiener when it stops at festivals and grocery store openings. Something about a 5,000 pound hot dog brings out the child in them, Stanek said.

"They remember it from their childhood. I think they love it more than the kids," he said.

The current wienermobile model — there are six on the road — is a resurrection of the 1936 rolling wiener that transported Little Oscar, a midget chef, across country.

After World War II the wienermobile developed buns and captured the American appetite for silliness. Not until the late '70s, when things got serious, were the wieners put in cold storage.

Now they're back, capitalizing on retro pop culture. A 1936 model is being restored for the Smithsonian.

Stanek hopes his time on the road will be his entree to the marketing world. Oscar Mayer has offered him an opportunity in sales after he graduates.

Even after living inside one for the past month, with 11 more months to go, Stanek said he likes hot dogs. "Cold, right out of the package."

Then he's off down the road to Big Spring.

The wiener makes good time, provided he doesn't get pulled over for hotdogging.

The family had just pulled out of the rest stop and were heading down the road, at a very safe speed. Suddenly the flashing lights of a police car told them they were in trouble.

However, the Jackson family of Long Island, N.Y., were not in trouble Tuesday, merely the recipients of the Midland Chamber of Commerce's M-Squad "Holdup 90," in which the M-Squad stops out-of-state drivers and treats them to a night in Midland.

"It's just a part of goodwill," said David Daniels, chamber member, as he and several other M-Squad members greeted the Jacksons at the Plaza Inn, 4108 N. Big Spring St.

The family — Bill and Donna Jackson and their sons Jeff, 14, Scott, 12, and Brett, 6 — stayed the night at the inn after having supper at Cattleman's Steak House and enjoying a Midland Angels' baseball game. They also were to receive a tank of gas from Jim Lindsay's Texaco before heading on their way.

The gifts for the program are donated by the businesses involved, with a new family being treated each Tuesday in July and August. By the end of the program, these gifts will have totaled some $2,000 to $3,000.

Candidates spar over PACs

■ Texas' lieutenant governor candidates traded jabs over campaign finances Tuesday.

AUSTIN (AP) — Candidates for lieutenant governor traded verbal jabs Tuesday, with each accusing the other of selling out to high-dollar special interests.

Republican Rob Mosbacher of Houston said in a news conference that Democrat Bob Bullock's campaign is fueled by donations from political action committees (PAC) and powerful lobbyists.

"How can you claim to have the independence to do what's right for Texas when you owe so much to so few lobbyists in Austin?" Mosbacher asked.

Following the news conference, Bullock's campaign said Mosbacher was trying to buy the election with his family's fortune.

The Bullock campaign also accused Mosbacher's father, U.S. Secretary of Commerce Robert Mosbacher, of shaking down people to contribute to his son's campaign.

"We're getting reports that his father is making phone calls for him, that he is leaning on people. He's leaning on them hard," said Bullock campaign spokesman John Bender.

Bender refused to divulge the names of people who he said were pressured by Secretary Mosbacher.

Mosbacher said his father has appeared with him at a couple of political events, but added, "To suggest that he's on the phone calling people, trying to raise money, the answer is no."

Bullock, the state's comptroller, reported raising $1.2 million and spending $641,000 in six-month statements filed Monday with the secretary of state's office.

Mosbacher reported receiving $1 million in contributions and spending $1.4 million. Mark Sanders, a spokesman for Mosbacher, said the Republican had $500,000 left over from the last reporting period.

Mosbacher said one-third of Bullock's contributions are from political action committees and special interest lobbyists.

Bullock's campaign said 78 percent of his money is from individuals. "He has the most diverse support, the widest support of any statewide candidate," Bender said.

Mosbacher also challenged Bullock to a televised debate and offered to pay for it. Bender said discussions are under way about a debate.

In other political developments:

— Nikki Van Hightower of Houston, Democratic candidate for state treasurer, received the endorsement of three organizations, which brought criticism from her Republican opponent, Kay Bailey Hutchison of Dallas.

Van Hightower was endorsed by the Texas Abortion Rights Action League, Texas Women's Political Caucus and Texas chapter of the National Organization for Women.

"Since there are two women in the race, I believe that my endorsement by three bipartisan women's political groups is very significant," said Van Hightower.

But Hutchison said describing those three groups as "bipartisan is laughable. They are auxiliaries of the Democratic Party."

Phyllis Dunham, executive director of the abortion rights league, said even though the treasurer's office does not directly affect abortion, "voting for pro-choice candidates is the only way to keep Texas politicians out of our most personal and private decisions."

Dunham said Hutchison refused to answer the TARAL questionnaire.

Hutchison said injecting the abortion issue into the state treasurer's race "is a smoke screen to draw attention away from the real issue" of who is most qualified to fill the post.

In financial statements filed with the secretary of state's office, Hutchison said her campaign had $511,982 cash on hand as of June 30, while Van Hightower had $7,000.

Williams, a Midland businessman, reported raising $4.6 million and spending $3 million from March 4 through June 30.

Ms. Richards, the state's treasurer, reported raising $2.8 million and spending $2.5 million during the same period.

Williams' campaign reports contained more than 2,500 pages listing 12,000 contributions and expenditures, including a $70,000 donation from the Republican National Committee.

Midland hosts hearing on public schools

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Fresh from a National Education Association (NEA) convention, Gilberto Garcia said he is fired up to testify at the statewide public hearing 1-3:30 p.m. Friday at Region XVIII Education Service Center.

Garcia, a teacher and math chairman at Goddard Junior High School, said he was pleased the State Board of Education scheduled the hearing in Midland.

Midland is one of nine cities selected as a site for the public forum that will give Texans a chance to speak out on the state's long-range school plan.

The board is soliciting suggestions on issues related to public education.

The hearing will be preceded by a 9 a.m.-noon session on the recent legislative update of Senate Bill 1. The morning session is targeted for school superintendents and school personnel, according to Ernesto Zamora, associate director of instructional services for Region XVIII. "But we won't shut the door on anybody," he said.

Both sessions will be presented at the Region XVIII center, 2811 La Force Blvd., near Midland International Airport.

Persons wishing to testify during the public afternoon session will be added to the agenda on a first-come first-serve basis, according to Zamora. Each speaker will be allowed five minutes to testify.

"All we can ask for is a chance to voice our opinions," Garcia said. "The hearing is a great opportunity for educators and parents to speak up."

REVOKE: Ordinance's legality challenged

(From 1B)

Crider said county officials had "dropped the ball" by licensing Fantasy's.

"It did wind up open and it did wind up licensed, and it was very distressful to me," said Crider. "I know that it (the club) was not in operation when the ordinance was passed."

He said he had told constituents living near the club that he believed the business would not be permitted to open.

Ms. Bright told Crider there had been some confusion as to when the club actually opened.

"We have differing facts on when Fantasy's was opened," she said prior to Ms. Henderson's statements.

Ector County Sheriff's Department officials said Ms. Henderson's license application indicated the business initially opened Feb. 20.

Joe Seay, former president of Odessans for Decency, urged officials to take swift action against Fantasy's in light of Ms. Henderson's admission that the club moved and did not re-open until after the ordinance was passed.

"They're operating and they're endangering the neighborhood children out there," Seay said. "I would encourage you...to go out and repeal the license. I think we need to get tough about enforcing this ordinance."

Ector County Sheriff O.A. "Bob" Brookshire said he will wait for instructions from Ms. Bright's office before taking action against Fantasy's.

Brookshire, county commissioners and other county officials are defendants in a $22 million lawsuit which claims that the sex ordinance is unconstitutional. The suit was filed by Sharon Lee Wright, owner of the B&L Adult Bookstore.

Crider said that the ordinance is worth enforcing in spite of the lawsuit and confusion surrounding enforcement.

"I'm certainly not for backing off on any of it," Crider said.

Search crews find boater's body

RED BLUFF (AP) — Authorities recovered the body of a New Mexico man from Red Bluff Reservoir Tuesday near where he and two companions were thrown from their boat. The search continued for a second man.

Reeves County Deputy Mitchell McLain said the body of Woody Duncan, 32, was found shortly after 2 p.m. CDT.

"He was spotted by some U.S. Customs helicopters," McLain said. Duncan had some lacerations on his legs and McLain speculated he might have been hit by the boat.

Officials have been searching since Sunday for Duncan and Billy Long, 32, both of Lovington, N.M. They were last seen by their companion, Ronnie Windsor, also of Lovington, trying to catch the boat.

Witnesses reported the accident occurred at about 9 p.m. Sunday. The boat was seen making circles in the water near Sandy Beach, at the northeast corner of the lake. It apparently got caught in its own wake and the turbulence threw the three men into the water.

Windsor swam about 400 yards to shore, he told officials, and called to the other two to follow him. They told Windsor they were going to try to catch the boat. Windsor said he never saw Long and Duncan again.

The lake is about 20 feet deep where the accident occurred but is as deep as 50 feet in some spots, said Reeves County Sheriff's Chief Deputy Jack Brewer.

Brewer said the boat was recovered at about 3 a.m. Monday.

Agencies from New Mexico and Texas joined in the search, Brewer said.

A dog used by a San Angelo search and rescue team also helped. The dog rides in the bow of a boat and sniffs for human scents.

Closing arguments ended Friday.

Staff Report

The Midland County Chapter of the American Red Cross has announced its new Nurse Assistant Training Course to be offered August 6-23 at the Red Cross Building in Midland.

In keeping with the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act legislation requiring that states certify and register all nurse assistants, the Red Cross has developed an 84-hour program which will meet or exceed all federal and state requirements.

Graduates of the course will be qualified to do nurse assistant's work for nursing homes or other extended-care facilities.

The American Red Cross Nurse Assistant Training Course has a unique philosophy which incorporates six principles of care throughout the manual: infection control, safety, communication, privacy, dignity and independence. To successfully complete the skills component of the course, students must implement all six principles of care with each skill they perform.

The course will be taught by a registered nurse using five basic educational techniques: activities, video, demonstrations, practice sessions and clinical practicum.

Applications must be completed, and preregistration is required by July 30. Prospective students should go the Red Cross Building to take a pre-test and pay the fee of $150 before the deadline. Office hours are from 8:30 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.

Loop 250 to be detoured next week

Loop detour planned

Drivers who use the West Loop 250 service roads should be prepared for slight delays caused by a detour at the intersection of State Highway 191, said Lynn Passmore, the project's resident engineer.

The detour will begin Monday and remain in effect through November, Passmore said.

It will affect the loop's north- and southbound service roads by reducing traffic to one lane at the intersection. It will not extend past the intersection.

Construction of a bridge system that will allow SH 191 to go under the service roads necessitates the detour, Passmore said.

The bridge is part of a $5.9 million project, extending the main lanes of the highway from just west of State Highway 158 to just east of Loop 250. The project is part of the conversion of SH 191 to a full freeway facility.

PLAGUE: Lyme Disease making inroads

(From 1B)

Julie Rawlings, a microbiologist and zoonosis control specialist with TDH, said Lyme disease is making inroads in West Texas, but is still more prevalent in East Texas.

People who work and play in ranchland and wilderness areas are susceptible to both diseases because ticks and fleas feed on wild animals there.

The plague is transmitted by fleas to rodents, including wild rabbits; while Lyme disease travels in flea bites.

Thirteen Texas counties out of 48 sampled in 1989 had evidence of bubonic plague among their predators — coyotes, bobcats, foxes and badgers — which commonly eat plague-infected rabbits and squirrels.

"That's a pretty impressive percentage, over one quarter of the counties we tested," Moore said.

Counties with the plague are Midland, Andrews, Mitchell, Borden, Glasscock, Crane, Sterling, Pecos, Nolan, Reagan, Culberson, Coleman and Brewster.

"Midland's been an active county consistently over the past two years. We realize it's a foci for the plague," Moore said.

But he is quick to explain that the presence of plague does not portend the reemergence of the Black Death that decimated the population of 14th century Europe.

Texas has had four cases of human bubonic plague since 1981. "That's not a high number, but historically in Texas we've had none," Moore said.

A 1981 case in Dell City and a 1982 case in Ector County were fatal. A 1984 case in Wink and a 1988 case in Fort Stockton survived. All four victims were outdoorsmen.

Bubonic plague symptoms include a severe headache, several days of high fever in the 105-degree range and "bubos," large lymph-gland swellings in the armpits.

"We don't know a lot about how the plague works," Moore said. "It has periods of very high activity and dormancy. There was a period two years ago when we had a full-blown rodent die-off and a full-blown outbreak.

"Since then it's been in low activity and it may be awhile before we reach high activity again."

The health department checks for plague in predators trapped by the U.S. Department of Agriculture on ranch land.

Rawlings said her research into Lyme disease depends on victims sending in ticks they've caught biting them.

She said there were 82 cases of the disease in Texas in 1989, 11 of which were in West Texas.

Like the plague fleas, the ticks both transmit the disease and catch it from their host animals.

"Basically, people should be aware that Texas ticks can carry Lyme," Rawlings said. She advised wearing tick repellent and conducting tick checks every few hours out in the wild.

If a person finds a tick sucked onto his body, he should not squash it with his fingers, because the exploding tick could transmit the disease to his skin. Rawlings suggests using a leaf instead.

Indications of Lyme disease include flu-like symptoms and a bull's eye rash, which develop within a week to a month.

Midland Memorial Hospital has seen no cases of Lyme disease, said public relations director Laurie Johnson.

NTSB blames driver for Alton tragedy

WASHINGTON (AP) — The driver of the truck that hit a Mission school bus last fall, sending it into a water-filled pit and killing 21 students, should have been able to stop despite faulty brakes, the National Transportation Safety Board said Tuesday.

Forty-nine other students were injured in the accident near Alton Sept. 21. It was Texas worst school bus accident ever and the nation's worst school bus accident since 1976.

The lack of emergency exits — there were only two — contributed to the number of deaths, the board said.

NTSB Chairman James Kolstad said that there were "clear deficiencies" in the truck's brakes but that driver Ruben Perez "did not respond soon enough and he did not respond aggressively enough."

Investigators found the truck's brakes were operating at about two-thirds strength, which should been enough to stop the truck. Perez had said he began applying the brakes 300 feet before the collision.

Perez said that the brakes failed and that he began to use those on the truck's trailer, then downshifted gears to try to stop.

Perez' attorney, Bob Binder of Austin, Texas, said the board was "compounding a tragedy to put the blame on the driver when he was given a truck with bad brakes."

"The brakes were failing. They were not in complete failure but they were failing. So he (Perez) downshifted, which is the proper procedure, and applied the trailer brakes by hand," Binder said.

Perez watched the NTSB hearing impassively. Binder would not let Perez talk to reporters, citing a lawsuit Perez has filed against Valley Coca-Cola Bottling Co., which owned the truck.

The NTSB urged the bottling company to improve its driver-training and fleet-maintenance programs.

Most of the victims drowned because they couldn't get out of the submerged bus, the NTSB said, calling for more emergency exits on school buses.

It made a similar recommendation last year in its report of the May 1988 bus and truck collision in Kentucky that killed 27. That accident involved a school bus converted for use by a church.

The Texas collision was the worst U.S. school bus accident since May 1976, when 29 were killed in a bus that plunged from a freeway ramp near Martinez, Calif.

In the Texas accident, the bus fell 25 feet into a water-filled pit, flipped on its front end and settled. The windshield was forced out and water rushed into the bus. The way the bus settled rendered the rear emergency door useless.

The NTSB recommended federal regulations requiring emergency bus exits that would not close once they are opened.

Investigators faulted the Mission Independent School District for not knowing the school bus driver was required to drive with eyeglasses. But the driver's failure to wear glasses was not a contributing factor in the accident, the board said.

The safety board also criticized the emergency response of local law enforcement officials. The rescue was "happenstance" and no one took charge for more than a half-hour, the NTSB said. It urged better development of response plans and better training of dispatchers and other emergency personnel.

Comal Springs get 'reprieve'

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Showers drenched South Central Texas for a third straight day Tuesday, further replenishing the Edwards Aquifer and easing fears that the nearby Comal Springs will dry up this summer.

In New Braunfels, city officials were thrilled that the Comal Springs had been revived — for now.

"We've got a reprieve from Mother Nature. We're very thankful," said David Whatley, parks and recreation director.

The Comal Springs are fed by the Edwards Aquifer, an underground water source used by 1.3 million people. The springs feed the Comal River, which runs into the Guadalupe River.

In June, water experts feared the dropping level of the Edwards Aquifer would cause the Comal Springs to dry up this summer. But now it appears that won't happen.

"The Comal Springs are very unlikely to go dry this summer," Whatley said. "We probably have missed that bullet."

The springs, which had been running at 58 cubic feet per second Saturday, on Tuesday were at 147 cfs, Whatley said.

Showers began in central Texas Sunday, when a storm system stalled over the area. High waters trapped motorists in their cars and tornadoes demolished homes in Kerrville to the northwest and Leming to the south.

Water overflowing from San Pedro Creek in downtown San Antonio damaged several businesses, many of which remained closed Tuesday while workers cleaned up the muddy mess.

Agency goes to bat for turtles

HOUSTON (AP) — The National Marine Fisheries Service says it will begin criminal prosecution of shrimpers who are ignoring laws aimed to protect sea turtles, and will beef up enforcement along the Texas Gulf Coast.

"We'll be intensifying enforcement efforts and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service is also beginning to help us," said Andrew Kemmerer, southeast regional director for NMFS. "But the major change is that we may be going to issue criminal citations, depending on the situation."

The decision came after about 15 representatives of shrimping associations, the U.S. Coast Guard, Texas Parks & Wildlife and the U.S. Fish & Wildlife Service met to discuss reports of turtle strandings and discoveries of dead turtles on the shore.

Environmentalists contend shrimpers who are not using turtle excluder devices, or TEDs, on their nets have prompted the increased number of fatal turtle strandings on the upper Texas coast.

Since the Texas shrimp season opened July 8, more than 31 sea turtles — 17 of them endangered Kemp's Ridley turtles — have been found dead in a stretch from Galveston to Matagorda County. NMFS has not completed necropsies on the animals, but environmentalists are convinced the turtles became ensnared in shrimping nets and drown.

"As soon as the Texas shrimp season opened, those turtles began floating in," said Carole Allen, founder of Help Endangered Animals-Ridley Turtles. "That's certainly one of the indicators to me."

Some shrimpers at the meeting said they would cooperate with authorities to see that members of their industry cooperate with the TED regulation.

Lucy Gibbs, right, president of the Texas Shrimp Association, Andrew Kemmerer, left, of the National Marine Fisheries Service (NMFS) and the NMFS's Suzanne Montero answer questions in Houston Tuesday concerning the decision to prosecute shrimpers who violate sea turtle-protection laws.

"We are all interested in the survival of the sea turtles," said Lucy Gibbs, president of the Texas Shrimp Association. "We are supportive of trying to do everything we can to protect these turtles and NMFS has very graciously agreed to continue to work with us."

Suzanne Montero, special agent in charge of NMFS' southeast region, said another 10 agents will be brought Wednesday to beef up enforcement along the Texas coastline. Already, six additional agents had been assigned to the Texas coast because of the opening of shrimp season, she said.

Likewise, the U.S. Coast Guard is adding additional boats and manpower in the area.

"We're going to increase our number of boats and man hours down there. We're sending about twice what we'd normally send," said Cmdr. Jim Force, chief of law enforcement for the Coast Guard's regional office based in New Orleans. "I would expect this to help compliance."

Force said he hoped to increase the use of TEDs on shrimpers from a 60 percent compliance on the Texas coast to 80 percent by the weekend.

Kemmerer said the criminal conviction under the federal Endangered Species Act carries a possible $25,000 fine or six-month jail term. "Prior to this time, we made all our citations on a civil basis and that carries a fine of up to $12,000."

Ms. Gibbs said the $25,000 fine "is liable to put (a shrimper) out of business."

Fraternity named in $30 million suit

AUSTIN (AP) — The parents of a University of Texas student who died in a 1988 fraternity ritual have filed a $30 million dollar lawsuit against the fraternity.

Delta Tau Delta and Delta Tau Delta International, based in Indianapolis, were named in the lawsuit filed by Laura Boyle and Pat Boyle of Houston, the mother and stepfather of Gregg Scott Phillips.

The lawsuit, filed Friday, alleges that the fraternity was negligent in the Sept. 21, 1988, death of Phillips, who fell off a 125-foot cliff while being chased by two pledges.

It seeks $5 million in actual damages and $25 million in exemplary ddamages "to properly punish them for their wrongdoing and to deter other fraternities who might be tempted to engage in the same or similar conduct."

Phillips died as he was running from two pledges who were trying to throw him into the swimming pool of a sorority house as part of a fraternity ritual, according to the Austin American-Statesman.

In April 1989, the fraternity pleaded no contest to a charge filed under the state anti-hazing law, and agreed as part of a plea bargain to perform 2,000 hours of community service work, the newspaper said.

Texans on Hill expecting full SSC funding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The superconducting super collider will likely be fully funded for the first time by a Senate appropriations panel Wednesday, Sens. Phil Gramm and Lloyd Bentsen said Tuesday.

The senators said Sen. Bennett Johnston, D-La., chairman of the energy and water development subcommittee, supports the $318 million President Bush asked for the super collider in his 1991 budget.

Bentsen called Johnston's support a "big step."

Gramm said other subcommittee members also expressed support for the giant atom smasher, to be built south of Dallas near Waxahachie.

"I think we have an excellent opportunity for the first time to get the full presidential request for the SSC," Gramm said. The Senate in the last two years has cut spending requests for the super collider.

Both senators warned there are no guarantees this time.

"You never can count the chickens before the eggs hatch," Gramm said.

Bentsen said, "But it's a big help when you've got the chairman in your corner as we do."

"In the past, we have worked this hard," Gramm said. "I think we have steadily built a base of support."

Gramm, a Republican, said he and Democrat Bentsen divided the job of building support in the Senate along party lines.

The House last month appropriated $318 million in 1991 funds for the super collider. Of that, $169 million is devoted toward beginning construction.

STATE IN BRIEF

SBC committee fires 2 editors

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Southern Baptist fundamentalists on Tuesday fired the two editors who shaped the denomination's press agency into a news service respected by many as open and objective.

About 200 of the editors' supporters stood outside singing "Amazing Grace" and other hymns as the Southern Baptist Convention's executive committee voted to fire Baptist Press editor Alvin C. Shackleford and news director Dan Martin.

"The last thing the revolutionaries who've taken over the palace want is a free press," Martin said at a news conference. "I think we were fired because they want their own minister of information."

The editors had refused to resign.

Shackleford said they weren't given exact reasons for the dismissals, although he believed the denomination's ruling fundamentalists felt they were biased against the majority view.

Committee members refused to comment, saying only that Pace had ordered them to refrain from discussing the matter outside the session, which was closed to the public.

The 44-year-old news agency sends stories and press releases to about 400 clients, including 38 independent Southern Baptist weekly newspapers.

Editors of those state papers were discussing whether to form their own news agency.

Game violation leveled

DALLAS (AP) — Federal wildlife agents say a Dallas businessman killed an endangered Bengal tiger with an ice pick and had another killed later so that their pelts could be made into exotic rugs.

Joe Eldon Mills, 49, is scheduled for arraignment later this week. He was free on $5,000 bond Tuesday after his indictment in Tyler.

The indictment accused Mills of killing one tiger with an ice pick to the skull in July of 1989 and hiring others to kill the second tiger the same way a month later. "We think he killed these critically endangered tigers in order to sell them as rugs to people who want exclusive interior decorations," said John Neal, the wildlife service agent in the charge of the investigation.

Agents were alerted to the violations when the body of one tiger was found in the cooler of a funeral home in the Dallas suburb of Mesquite, but Neal would not provide any further information on the funeral home.

Mills is charged with six counts of violating the Endangered Species Act and with illegally transporting Bengal tigers for commercial gain.

Two taxidermists eventually became government informants and were expected to testify against Mills, the service said.

Panel reviews agency

HOUSTON (AP) — The Texas Department of Highways and Public Transportation is under fire for failing to hire minorities and making sure road projects don't harm the environment.

A legislative staff report recommended the agency hire more minorities and women for top jobs and meet stricter federal guidelines on projects that affect the environment.

The three-member Texas Highway Commission, which oversees the $2.8 billion per year, 15,000-employee agency, will receive a final version of the report this week.

Under the Sunset review process, hearings will be held on the recommendations before any changes are written into a bill for state lawmakers to consider next year.

Suit alleges Aetna fraud

HOUSTON (AP) — A cancer research firm experimenting with a non-FDA approved drug filed a $190 million racketeering lawsuit against Aetna Life Insurance Co., a spokeswoman said Tuesday.

The Burzynski Research Institute filed the federal lawsuit against Aetna and others alleging they fraudulently interfered with the business of the Houston-based institute in order to reduce Aetna's liability for the cancer treatments and to deprive BRI's patients.

Washington, D.C., attorney, Grace Monaco, and her Emprise company are also named in the lawsuit, said Le Trombetta, a spokeswoman for the institute.

Ms. Trombetta said the suit also alleges this is part of a national conspiracy to defraud insurers and their physicians by wrongfully denying health insurance benefits. Most of the institute's patients are terminally ill but have refused conventional treatment, she said.

The institute charges that Aetna's main tactics include harassing doctors and other medical professionals to force them to forego their fees for Aetna-insured patients by instituting or threatening to institute frivolous claims against them.

Aetna officials could not be reached for comment late Tuesday.

Trial pushed back

AUSTIN (AP) — The trial of former state Rep. Charles "Chip" Staniswalis on theft and fraud charges has been delayed until Thursday.

The case was on the June 18 docket of State District Judge Mace Thurman but was reset for Monday. It now has been pushed back again, said a spokeswoman in the judge's office.

The former Republican lawmaker from Amarillo served four terms in the House from 1981 through 1988. He did not seek a fifth term and ran for Congress, but was defeated in the GOP primary in 1988.

He was indicted in May on three counts of tampering with a government record in the alleged filing of false travel vouchers while a lawmaker, and a fourth charge of theft of money from the state in an amount between $750 and $20,000.

The charges stemmed from alleged activities during 1988, the district attorney's office said. All charges are third-degree felonies, each punishable by two to 10 years in prison and a maximum fine of $5,000.

Injunction, protests fail to halt utility's work at Mother Neff

MOTHER NEFF STATE PARK (AP) — A Central Texas man says a utility company did a hurry-up job to beat a court order when they trimmed trees along a road leading to Texas' first state park.

Clay Davis said he stood in Leon River Road early Monday morning and begged the crew not to cut the trees while court officials prepared the formal order stopping the work.

"If you've ever seen a grown man cry, I cried this morning," Davis said Monday. "They knew I was going to get a court order. I stood there begging and pleading for them not to cut the trees."

Davis has been leading the fight against McLennan Electric's plan to install electric poles and lines on a pair of half-mile stretches along the old, tree-shrouded road that extends west from Mother Neff State Park. The work involves trimming and topping trees.

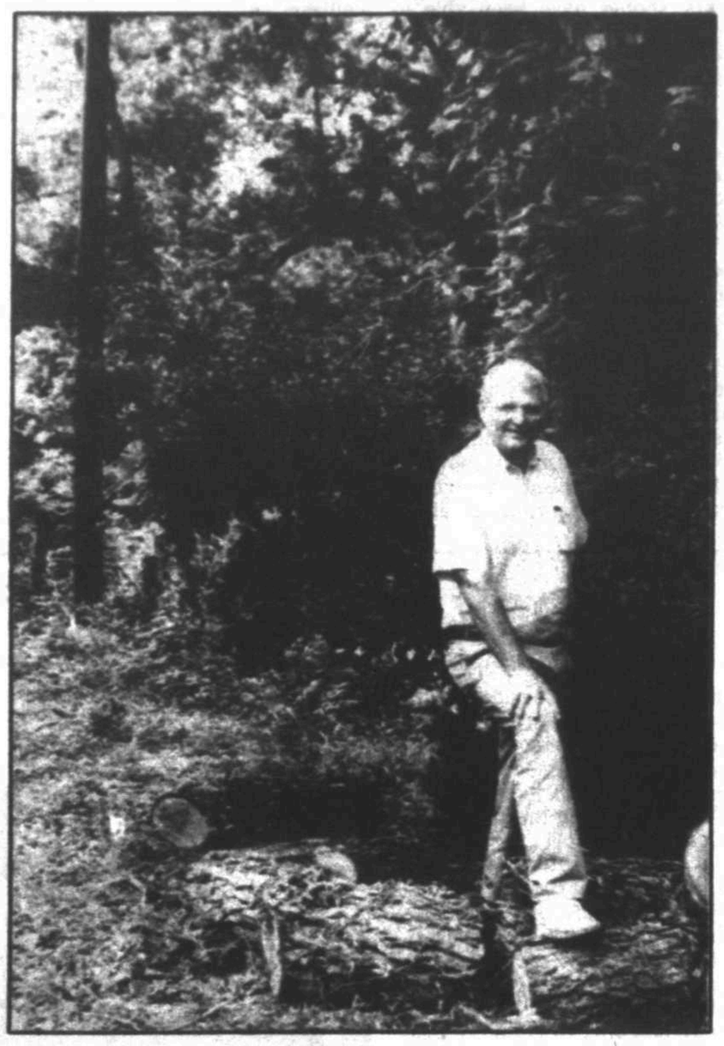
But Monday, neither rain, the Davis family nor Coryell County Sheriff Gerald Kitchens could stop utility workers from trimming the tree branches.

Davis called Kitchens, who showed up with an unofficial copy of the temporary restraining order that a Gatesville judge had approved Sunday night.

Utility manager Ron Golden of McLennan Electric, who was not at the work site, radioed his men to continue working until the official order was served.

Golden said he was not aware of Davis' weekend efforts to win court intervention.

"I had no knowledge of the injunction," Golden said Monday. "There was no injunction when the boys went down there to work (Monday) morning. Contrary to the way it looks, we're not trying to run over anyone, and we're not trying to do damage to anything that is environmentally or archaeologically significant."



AP Laserphoto

Clay Davis stands beside some recently cut tree limbs from Mother Neff State Park outside of Waco. Local residents have fought McLennan Electric Co.'s installation of new power lines through Texas' first state park.

The road cuts through an area rich in ancient Indian campsites dating back 8,000 years or more. The park was established in 1923 as the first official state park, on land donated by former Gov. Pat Neff in honor of his mother.

Davis has been trying to get the road listed on the National Register of Historic Places, citing the natural beauty of the parkside property and the politics under which the six-mile road was built 51 years ago.

He hopes a National Register listing will discourage the power project, although preservation officials say it can't legally forbid it.

Brooks leads budget-amendment fight

Hearst News Service

WASHINGTON — Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, Tuesday led opposition to a constitutional amendment requiring a balanced federal budget, describing it as "a mistake, a disgrace, a farce."

A majority of the house — 279 members — voted for the measure, sponsored by Rep. Charles Stenholm, D-Stamford, but that fell seven votes short of the two-thirds necessary to send a constitutional amendment to the states for ratification.

Brooks had kept the balanced budget amendment bottled up in the House Judiciary Committee for the year and a half that he has chaired the committee. It was discharged last month by a petition signed by 218 members.

Brooks and other opponents agreed that it is necessary to reduce enormous federal deficits, but they argued that the proposed constitutional amendment does nothing to guarantee a balanced budget and contains no "enforcement mechanisms."

"Our most sacred document should not be devalued by impulsive action to produce, at best, only sound and fury," Brooks said.

Stenholm, in an effort to get votes, attempted to change its effective date to fiscal year 1995 instead of 1993, the date in the original legislation.

"If anybody thinks it will work, why not put it into effect now?" Brooks asked just before the vote on the Stenholm amendment: "If it's a good thing, why not apply it in 1991, '92, '93? It's foolishness."

Stenholm and his allies argued that the experience of the last 30 years teaches the lesson that "without a permanent, fixed restraint locked into the Constitution, the Congress will continue to drive up massive budget deficits."

The absence of restraint, Stenholm declared, "has allowed Congress to triple the national debt in just eight years, from $908 billion in fiscal 1980 to an estimated $3.1 trillion in fiscal 1990."

The proposed balanced budget constitutional amendment — a perennial favorite with Republicans and conservative Democrats in election years — would prohibit federal outlays from exceeding estimated revenues each year unless three-fifths of the House and Senate voted to permit a specific deficit, or unless war was declared.

Some Cubans abandon effort

At least 12 still at diplomatic compounds seeking political asylum

WORLD

MEXICO CITY (AP) — At least 12 Cuban asylum-seekers remained holed up Tuesday in diplomatic compounds in Havana, but another 12 Cubans voluntarily abandoned the Czechoslovak embassy where they had sought refuge, according to officials and news reports.

Cuba's official Prensa Latina news agency quoted a foreign ministry statement as saying the Communist government would never yield to any "pressure or blackmail" by people seeking to leave the Communist island 90 miles south of Florida.

The Spanish news agency EFE reported that four Cubans seeking political asylum took refuge Tuesday afternon at the Italian ambassador's residence in Cuba's capital.

The two men and two women first climbed to the roof of the ambassador's house after failing to gain entry, EFE said in a report monitored in Madrid, Spain. They later managed to get inside the building.

Three Cuban asylum-seekers who took refuge last week remained at the Spanish embassy in Havana.

A Spanish foreign ministry spokeswoman said a Cuban family entered the Spanish embassy Tuesday seeking refuge and assistance in getting to Spain.

EFE reported the couple and their two children left the building several hours later after speaking to embassy officials. The four were carrying Cuban passports with exit visas to leave Cuba, and had come to the embassy to request visas permitting them to enter Spain, EFE said.

On Friday, Cuban police entered the embassy grounds in pursuit of a young Cuban who was attempting to seek refuge and arrested him. The Cuban foreign minister apologized for that incident after the Spanish ambassador sent a note or protest.

Five Cubans remained holed up Tuesday in the apartment of the Czechoslovak Charge d'Affaires Jan Doemoek, according to a statement released by the Cuban foreign ministry.

Another 12 Cubans voluntarily and unconditionally abandoned the Czechoslovak embassy on Monday evening, according to officials and news reports. The first Cubans had arrived there July 9.

There were conflicting reports about the terms of their agreement to leave the embassy.

The Cuban foreign ministry, in its statement released by Prensa Latina, described those who left the Czechslovak embassy as "antisocial elements" and "habitual bums" — most with criminal records.

The foreign ministry said the 12 Cubans were detained for questioning in an investigation into what the Cuban government described as "a planned provocation" around the Czechoslovak embassy, according to Prensa Latina.

Prensa Latina, monitored in Mexico City, quoted the ministry as saying "Czechoslovak diplomatic representatives have tried to call these elements political refugees despite our having informed them that these people are not the object of persecution."

It said the Cubans would not face prosecution because they had left the embassy voluntarily and would be allowed to return to their homes upon completion of the investigation to clarify the circumstances in which "this provocation was organized and executed."

However, the statement indicated that they would not be allowed to leave Cuba.

"The elements who enter ... any Western embassy, if they do not merit asylum, will never leave this country in that manner," the statement said.

A Czechoslovak foreign ministry official, Jindrich Opava, said by telephone Tuesday that he had no details on the circumstances of the asylum-seekers' leaving.

But the official East German news agency, ADN, in a dispatch from Havana earlier Tuesday, reported the asylum-seekers left after Communist authorities promised to help them find asylum abroad.

Seven of the 12 Cubans took several diplomats hostage Monday at the Czechoslovak embassy. Czechoslovak television reported later that all the diplomats were released unharmed.

Cuba and Czechoslovakia had been close allies until last fall's democratic upheaval toppled Prague's hard-line Communist leaders.

A South African youngster gazes at a Winnie Mandela doll in a Johannesburg shop.

Winnie doll a winner

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — In the heart of the white suburbs, Winnie Mandela is a hit. Not as a fiery activist, but as a stuffed doll.

Priced at $38, the two-foot high Winnie doll comes complete with headdress, gold-colored hoop earrings, an African print dress and lots of jewelry.

Mrs. Mandela, wife of African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela, has been a controversial anti-apartheid activist known for her provocative statements and flashy outfits.

Capitalizing on Mrs. Mandela's notoriety, two young white design students have been handmaking the Winnie dolls and selling them at an upscale shopping mall in the affluent white suburbs of Johannesburg.

PLO blocking Hezbollah's advance

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Palestine Liberation Organization guerrillas moved in Tuesday to block pro-Iranian fundamentalists' attack on a rival faction in south Lebanon. Police said 52 people were killed and 167 wounded.

A police spokesman said Yasser Arafat's guerrillas intervened after Hezbollah, or Party of God, overran the village of Jarjou Monday night. That stripped the Syrian-backed Shiite Moslem Amal of its main stronghold in Iqlim al-Tuffah, or the Apple Province.

A police spokesman called it the bloodiest battle in six months in the mountainous regions above Sidon, provincial capital of south Lebanon. Jarjou is 10 miles southeast of Sidon.

AP

The spokesman, who could not be named in line with standing regulations, said that in the final push that ended just before midnight, 40 people were killed and 117 wounded. Twelve people were killed and 50 wounded in clashes earlier in the day.

"It was close-quarter combat. The village square is littered with bodies that couldn't be evacuated by the Red Cross because of the savage fighting," the spokesman said.

He said the fatalities included 30 Amal fighters and 10 from Hezbollah.

An estimated 600 PLO fighters entered Iqlim al-Tuffah at 4 a.m. on orders from Arafat.

Their deployment blocked Hezbollah's advance toward Nabatiyeh, the main Shiite town in south Lebanon, some five miles south of Jarjou.

It also left the fundamentalists bottled up in a mountain enclave with no access west to the Mediterrnean coast, or south toward the major Shiite cities and towns.

A Hezbollah official in Sidon, provincial capital of south Lebanon, rejected what he described as Palestinian "expansion," and vowed to "confront it."

The official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said the Palestinian move would lead to "large-scale violence," but he refused to say what Hezbollah planned to do about it.

Zeid Wehbe, the PLO's representative in Lebanon, said Arafat appealed to Iranian President Hashemi Rafsanjani to "throw his weight behind the PLO intervention to stop the intra-Shiite bloodshed."

The PLO has about 5,000 hardcore fighters based in refugee camps around Sidon.

It fears Hezbollah might try to seize control of Sidon to gain an outlet to the Mediterranean.

Saddam, Rafsanjani optimistic direct talks will lead to peace

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — President Saddam Hussein said Tuesday he hopes Iraq's direct talks with Iran will lead to peace between the two nations, and Iran's Hashemi Rafsanjani also expressed optimism that a settlement was possible.

The two Persian Gulf neighbors fought for eight years before the guns fell silent under a United Nations-sponsored cease-fire in August 1988.

Foreign ministers Ali Akbar Velayati of Iran and Tariq Aziz of Iraq met in Geneva this month for their first face-to-face talks since the cease-fire.

"The Iranians responded favorably to our proposal for a summit meeting and we hope that recent diplomatic and ministerial meetings will pave the way for progress toward peace," Saddam said in a speech broadcast on state Baghdad Radio.

His address marked the 22nd anniversary of the coup that put his Baath Arab Socialist Party in power.

On Tuesday, Tehran Radio, monitored in Cyprus, quoted Rafsanjani as telling Tehran's Assembly of Experts: "The talks have been fruitful, and the two countries are expected to move toward peace.

"The Iraqis, too, have adopted a more positive stand toward the establishment of peace."

Rafsanjani was quoted as saying both Iran and Iraq realize now only "the arrogant powers," a common Iranian reference to the United States and its Western allies, "benefit from the no-war, no-peace situation in the gulf."

The English-language Tehran Times, a newspaper close to Rafsanjani, urged that future meetings be held in Baghdad or Tehran.

Iraq has been pushing for a Saddam-Rafsanjani summit.

The Tehran Times said nothing was achieved at Geneva beyond creating an "amiable atmosphere."

U.N.-brokered talks began five days after the cease-fire but quickly collapsed. Iran insisted Iraq withdraw from territories occupied in the last weeks of the war. Iraq said Iran must agree first to dredge the Shatt-Al-Arab waterway, confluence of the Tigris and Euphrates rivers, of war debris.

A 1975 treaty drew the border down the middle of the 120-mile channel, giving Iran navigation rights to the strategic waterway for the first time.

Iraq unilaterally abrogated that treaty when it invaded Iran in September 1980 following border clashes, and demanded full sovereignty over the waterway.

But Velayati told theologians in Qom on Tuesday the talks were being held within the framework of that treaty.

Poland's dispute with West Germany settled

PARIS (AP) — The seven nations negotiating German unification reached a historic agreement Tuesday on Poland's permanent border and cleared the way for the merger of East and West Germany by year's end.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III declared the Bush administration was pleased with the results of the session, held in an international conference center yards from the Arc de Triomphe, where German troops marched into Paris in victory 50 years ago last month.

Today's German leaders agreed to give up any claim to territory absorbed by Poland at the end of World War II and to make that commitment part of the new Germany's constitution.

"All agree that a unified Germany will consist of the Federal Republic of Germany, the German Democratic Republic and Berlin — no more, no less," Baker said.

"We are very happy with the results," Polish Foreign Minister Krysztof Skubiszewski said. "The border has been confirmed."

Poland, which lost 6 million people in World War II and barely survived as a nation, had been concerned that its powerful neighbor once again would start eying Polish territory, about one-third of which was part of pre-war Germany.

The treaty to be signed by the new Germany with Warsaw shortly after unification will accept the border the Allies set between Poland and East Germany in 1945.

The virtually simultaneous acts of German unification and conclude a border treaty with Poland will be followed by the four wartime allies — the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France — giving up their control of Berlin and other occupational powers held since 1945.

"We are keeping to the pace necessary to complete our work," Baker said.

The actions were announced at a news conference after talks involving the two Germanys, Poland, and the four World War II victors.

The path to German unity was largely cleared in Moscow on Monday when Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev agreed to Germany's membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and removed virtually all other obstacles to merger.

The Bonn government also agreed Tuesday to talks with Poland this summer designed to assure Warsaw that its contract with East Germany will be fulfilled after unification. The talks could result in German assistance to Poland's shaky economy.

A senior U.S. official, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said the agreement removes any possibility a peace treaty would be prepared that would legally confirm the end of World War II.

"It certainly seems dead as a doornail," the official said, adding: "Germany will give up any claim to land now held by Poland and will state it has no territorial claim to any other nation's land."

"Today will go down in history as the day in which the Polish border has been settled to the satisfaction of our Polish friends," Eduard A. Shevardnadze, the Soviet foreign minister, said.

Baker said the seven nations had established a "sound basis for European security and stability."

On the planned economic talks, Skubiszewski said West Germany was "fully understanding" of Poland's economic plight. He declined to give details of the talks, which he said might also involve East Germany.

Another result of the successful third round of the "two-plus-four" talks, to which Poland was added, is the increased likelihood of a 35-nation summit meeting in Paris in November. However, the United States has insisted on completion of a treaty beforehand to reduce U.S. and Soviet troops, tanks and other non-nuclear weapons in Europe.

Those talks now are being held in Vienna between NATO and the Warsaw Pact.

Monday, in the Soviet region of Stavropol, Gorbachev and Chancellor Helmut Kohl of West Germany also agreed to limit the army of a united Germany to 370,000 men.

The two Germanys now have about 600,000 men under arms, with 480,000 in West Germany.

Futures mixed

NEW YORK (AP) — Crude oil prices dipped lower and gasoline and heating oil futures closed mixed Tuesday as traders tested the energy market to see if it could hold its recent gains.

The August contract for West Texas Intermediate fell 2 cents to $18.65 a 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Later contract months either edged lower or were unchanged.

"Crude is still searching for its level after the big move up," said Jim Fiedler, an analyst with E.D. & F. Man International Futures Inc., referring to last week's gains, which were chalked up amid optimism that OPEC would finally curb its runaway production.

Tuesday's trading was volatile, with the August contract falling to $18.11 and then surging back. Fiedler said traders were testing the market to see how low it might go, but buyers moved in at the low end of Tuesday's range and moved prices higher.

He said the market was unlikely to sell off before next week's full meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. OPEC has made some progress recently toward achieving its goal of an average price for crude of $18 a barrel.

In natural gas trading, the August contract closed at $1.462 per 1,000 cubic feet, down from $1.495 Monday.

Dollar lower

NEW YORK (AP) — The dollar weakened Tuesday on worldwide currency markets after the government reported a widening U.S. trade deficit during May.

Gold prices also declined here and abroad.

On the Commodity Exchange in New York, gold bullion for current delivery settled at $362 a troy ounce, down $1.30 from late Monday.

In Tokyo, where the global trading day begins, the dollar closed at 148.20 Japanese yen, down from 148.43 late Monday. Sterling cost $1.8115 in London, up from $1.8040.

Dollar rates in New York: 1.6440 West German marks; 1.4048 Swiss francs; 5.5165 French francs; 1,204.25 Italian lire; and 1.16295 Canadian dollars.

The late bid price of gold in London was $361.25 an ounce, down from $362.75 Monday. On New York's Comex, silver bullion for current delivery settled at $4.814 a troy ounce, down from $4.847 Monday.

'Big blocks' may speed S&L bailout

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration Monday approved a trial plan to speed up the savings and loan bailout by selling sour real estate and other thrift assets in multimillion-dollar blocks.

The Resolution Trust Corp. Oversight Board, headed by Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady, authorized the bailout agency it oversees to sell up to $2 billion in assets in portfolios of several hundred million dollars.

It will put together packages of similar assets such as commercial loans, commercial real estate, apartment properties or apartment loans. By mixing problem real estate with more attractive properties and sour loans with sound loans, it hopes to sell the problem assets faster.

In its first 11 months, the RTC has taken over about 460 failed S&Ls, selling or closing about 210 of them. But, in S&L sales so far, the agency has been stuck with about half of the institutions' assets, usually the delinquent loans and repossessed real estate.

The oversight board is permitting the bailout agency to loan portfolio buyers up to 85 percent of the purchase price for up to five years.

"Ideally we'd like it to be shorter term ... but we wanted to give (the agency) the flexibility," said Felisa Neuringer, an oversight board spokeswoman.

Ed Kane, Ohio State University business professor and thrift expert, said $2 billion is a small amount compared with the huge volume of assets that need to be sold, but he praised the bulk-sales concept.

Selling properties one-by-one, he said, is "terribly inefficient."

"I think the important thing is to get these things out of the hands of the government, which is run for bureaucratic purposes, and put them into the hands of private people who can make decisions for entrepreneurial reasons. That will be best for the taxpayers in the long run," Kane said.

Bulk sales have been criticized by others, who label it a fire sale that could depress asset values by flooding the market.

However, Kane said, "when you have the financial equivalent of a fire, a fire sale is the first thing you do."

After the trust corporation completes $2 billion in sales, the oversight board will evaluate the program's success and consider extending it.

On a related matter, the oversight board authorized the trust corporation to give some properties away to local governments and non-profit agencies for use as day-care centers, housing for the homeless or other public purposes.

Properties will be eligible for the program if the agency determines that the cost of holding and selling them exceeds their value.

Another part of the S&L bureaucracy, the Federal Housing Finance Board, announced approval of a $669 million housing program for low-income people.

Pennzoil increases Chevron shares

■ Pennzoil has put the remainder of its Texaco settlement into Chevron stock, but comes short of a poison pill provision.

Associated Press

HOUSTON — Pennzoil Co. has announced that it will invest the remaining $480 million from its $2.6 billion Texaco lawsuit in additional Chevron shares.

The investment would give Pennzoil just under 10 percent of Chevron's stock, Pennzoil officials said Monday.

In a letter written to Pennzoil shareholders and filed with the Securities and Exchange Commission Monday, Pennzoil also griped openly for the first time about how Chevron management is running the company.

Chevron declined to comment on Pennzoil's latest statement of intentions Monday.

The San Francisco oil giant has been fighting Houston-based Pennzoil since last year, when Pennzoil used its Texaco spoils to accumulate 8.8 percent of Chevron's stock. Chevron filed suit, claiming Pennzoil lied when it said it was buying the stock for investment purposes only.

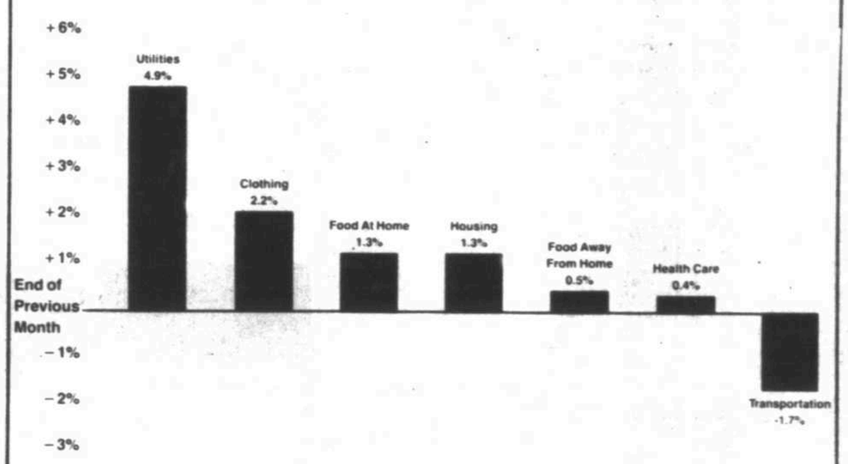
Pennzoil said Monday it does not currently plan to acquire 10 percent or more of Chevron, a larger stake would trigger Chevron's "poison pill."

But Pennzoil also applied Monday to the Federal Trade Commission for clearance under the Hart-Scott-Rodino Antitrust Act that would allow it to purchase 15 percent or more of the stock.

Pennzoil spokesman Bob Harper said the main reason Pennzoil made the Hart-Scott filing is that Chevron had brought that up in earlier court hearings, and Pennzoil wanted to get that issue out of the way.

"We believe Chevron has the potential to be an attractive long-term investment for Pennzoil and its shareholders," Harper said of the additional shares Pennzoil plans to purchase.

The balance of the $2.6 billion Texaco settlement is in short-term securities, and the company wants a more lucrative home for them that will provide the tax shelter Pennzoil is seeking, Harper said.



Midland Cost-of-living up

By John Paul Pitts
Business & Oil Editor

The cost of living in Midland jumped .09 percent in June as utilities took the biggest jump with a 4.9 percent increase.

On an annualized basis the rate of inflation for June was 10.7 percent, according to ClayDesta National Bank, which produces the Cost of Living Survey.

The only indicator to show a decrease in June was transportation, which was down 1.7 percent, primarily as a result of lower gasoline prices, which had been increasing over the past three months.

In addition to utilities, which jumped as the result of a 14 percent increase in electric bills in both cities, clothing, housing, foods, restaurant dining, and health care all showed increases.

For the tenth straight month the cost of living in Odessa, where utilities increased 5.2 percent, was higher than Midland.

Housing costs in Midland increased approximately 1.3 percent, but registered no increase in Odessa, reflecting the on-going fact that properties values in Midland are recovering much faster than Odessa. In the last year, housing costs in Odessa have gone down 2.4 percent.

Food costs at home were driven up primarily by meat and shelf items, while produce and alcoholic beverages decreased. Eating out was also affected by meat prices, as chicken prices took an upturn.

FHA mortgage limit varies between Midland, Odessa

■ Odessa realtors are angry at what they say is an unfair FHA formula that gives Midland a loan-making advantage over Odessa.

By Sue Gutierrez
Staff Writer

Virgil Trower, regional vice president of the Texas Association of Realtors is up in arms over what he calls Federal Housing Administration's (FHA) favorable attitude towards Midland.

Odessa real estate agents say Midland agents have an unfair advantage in the real estate market due to the difference in the maximum mortgage limits between the two cities.

The FHA currently limits the mortgage amount for single family homes in Midland County to $101,250 while the Odessa is limited to $71,450 which was raised from $67,500 on June 14.

Trower said, in a recent Odessa American news article, he is asking officials such as President Bush, Housing and Urban Development director Jack Kemp and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas to explain the difference in the FHA lending formula between Midland and Odessa.

Roy Proctor, Midland Board of Realtors president says: "I am in favor of Odessa being able to increase their loan amount with the FHA. I would like to see them the same, but I don't feel Midland has an unfair advantage over Odessa" Proctor attributes the higher limit to the large number of oil companies in Midland.

"Midland is a more mobile town with people moving in and out a lot. People who work for large oil companies in the Permian Basin are looking to live in the same town where they work. If these companies were located in Odessa, people would be living in Odessa," he says.

Proctor noted that although the higher mortgage loan limit has helped sales in the $75,000 - $100,000 bracket the average sale amount is still around $75,000. He says the total dollar volume of FHA mortgages fell from 33.48 percent to 28.94 percent in 1990 while the total dollar amount for conventional loans increased from 43.2 percent in 1989 to 48.14 percent in 1990.

Secretary embezzles $60,000

DALLAS (AP) — A two-month investigation by the Dallas County District Attorney's office has culminated in a charge of embezzlement against a woman who for 35 years was personal secretary to Stanley Marcus, chairman emeritus of Neiman Marcus.

Prosecutors say Alice Gilbreath Snavely, 62, is accused of embezzling more than $60,000 from Marcus over the past two years.

The charges, filed Monday, accused Mrs. Snavely of one charge of misappropriation of fiduciary property involving more than $10,000, according to Assistant District Attorney Ted Steinke, chief of the specialized crime division.

If convicted of the second-degree felony, Mrs. Snavely could be sentenced to 20 years in prison and fined $10,000.

"All I can say is it involves an amount of money in excess of $60,000 between February 1988 and October 1989," Steinke said. "I can't comment beyond that until the grand jury hears the facts.

Marcus, 85, is credited with transforming Neiman Marcus from a small specialty women's shop co-founded by his father into an international retailing chain.

RTC sells $536 million in its first five months

Real estate seized in Texas and Oklahoma by the RTC sold in the first five months of 1990 for $536 million. Real estate experts say government thrift bail out is becoming more difficult.

Associated Press

DALLAS — Federal regulators sold $536 million of real estate seized from failed thrifts in Texas and Oklahoma in the first five months of this year, but still hold properties worth $7.6 billion.

That doesn't include what the government may gain through continued failures.

But real estate experts said Tuesday a credit crunch, and the government's reluctance to help finance purchases, are making the thrift bailout effort more difficult.

"We basically have no financing in the real estate market," J.R. Kimball, a real estate appraiser from Fort Worth, testified at the first meeting of the Resolution Trust Corp.'s Region 4 Advisory Board.

"Banks don't want to make real estate loans, and the savings and loans are virtually non-existent. ... Everything's still on a downward slope,"

"Prices are declining ... as the markets continuing to erode with or without financing from the RTC," said Elizabeth B. Sink, president of Real Estate-Asset Information Management Systems Inc. in Dallas.

"I don't think we've seen the end of the (downward) spiral," she said.

The RTC was created last year to oversee the thrift bailout, estimated to cost taxpayers between $300 billion and $500 billion. The advisory boards were designed to provide guidance to the regional RTC offices from industry experts.

Tuesday's meeting of the Region 4 board, which oversees Texas and Oklahoma, is the second to be held nationally. Like the previous meeting in New York, few people other than witnesses and RTC officials attended.

Carmen Sullivan, the RTC's regional director, told the board the agency now controls 122 thrifts in the two states, including 48 that have been resolved by selling off deposits and some assets from the failed institutions.

As of May 31, she said, the RTC had retained 17,000 assets in the two states worth $7.6 billion, all but $135 million of it in Texas. Of those properties, 11,000 are single family residences valued at about $2 billion, 4,400 parcels of vacant land valued at $3.6 billion and 1,600 commercial properties valued at $2 billion.

Of the $536 million sold this year, $248 million was in single family residences, $98 million in vacant land, with the remaining commercial property, she said.

All of last year, government regulators sold off $579 million of thrift real estate, she said.

Several board members and witnesses questioned Ms. Sullivan on the problems caused by scant financing, and some board members indicated they backed government guaranteeing of loans.

But Ms. Sullivan said, "I don't believe that we're necessarily turning away any creditworthy purchasers."

Regulations allow the RTC to finance sales under certain restrictions, and she said the agency provided $16 million in residential financing and $10 million in commercial financing during the first quarter of the year.

Cars race for sun

INDIANAPOLIS (SWN) — It's more than just a competition for the 500 university students participating in GM Sunrayce USA. It's also a lesson in teamwork, sportsmanship and perseverance.

While sleep has been in short supply for all the teams, Western Washington University gave up some shut-eye to help Arizona State University, after three unsuccessful days, try to qualify for the race.

The WWU team helped ASU revise its braking system and streamline the team's "Sun Devil Cruiser." "We wanted to see everyone start," said Sage McCallum, WWU driver. "We knew exactly how we would feel if we were in their shoes."

Their efforts were successful. The "Sun Devil Cruiser" officially entered the competition on the first day.

Vehicle maintenance is a fact of life for all race crews, and solar vehicles are no exception. Stark Technical College brought along welding equipment and a professional welder to service their car, "Solis Tyrannus Cognoscis." The team has offered free welding service, by appointment, to all the other "sunraycers."

Auburn University also is providing technical support, in the form of a traveling machine shop.

Ken Croston, a driver for the Stark team, summed it up quite simply. "We help other teams and they help us," he said.

Sunny weather and the opportunity to drive the solar vehicles around the Indianapolis Motor Speedway track boosted the teams' spirits. Stephen Brady, a driver for the Maryland team, said their car averaged between 30 and 40 mph throughout the day and 44 mph during the two laps on the track.

University of Michigan systems coordinator Justin Beres said the "Sunrunner" "got into a little race with Western Washington and cranked it up to 40 mph for about 10 miles." He said that if the team "can keep this pace and continue to get good sun, we should do very well."

As the vehicles head for Greenville, Ohio, today, with just hours and, in some cases, minutes between the leaders, race officials are predicting an exciting finish July 19, in Warren, Mich., near Detroit.

GM Sunrayce USA is sponsored by General Motors, its Chevrolet Motor Division, the U.S. Department of Energy, and the Society of Automotive Engineers.

Japan wants to make lighter auto material

N.Y. Times News Service

TOKYO — Japanese steel and non-ferrous metals producers are increasing their efforts to develop new materials that will enable automakers to produce lighter, more fuel-efficient cars.

"It's troubling to do research on aluminum and plastics that compete with steel, but we cannot lose touch with changes in materials in view of the direction in which the auto industry is heading," said an executive of one Japanese steel maker.

Japanese automakers expect the United States and Europe to pass new, stricter fuel-efficiency requirements for cars in the near future and Japan to eventually follow suit.

Mitsubishi Metal Corp., a leading non-ferrous smelter that supplies sintered and cast parts to automakers, formed a division July 15 to oversee development of new materials such as aluminum, ceramics, titanium, magnesium and composite materials that are suitable for use in cars.

Development of new materials was previously handled by different sections within the company. The division will also coordinate work with other Mitsubishi group companies, such as Mitsubishi Mining & Cement Co. and Mitsubishi Aluminum Co.

In May the steelmaker NKK Corp. formed a committee of salesmen and researchers to develop steel plates, aluminum, plastics and other materials aimed at helping automakers build lighter cars.

Earlier this year Sumitomo Metal Industries, Ltd., another major steelmaker, began coordinating development of new materials for cars with its affiliated firms. In

Feds settle against Eureka S&L

Hearst News Service

SAN FRANCISCO — Federal regulators have agreed to settle a lawsuit against former officers of Eureka Federal Savings and Loan for $68 million — the government's biggest recovery to arise from the 1980s lending industry debacle.

The agreement, which was reached Sunday, abruptly ends a trial in U.S. District Court in San Francisco over $400 million in damages stemming from losses the government contended were caused by mismanagement by former President Kenneth Kidwell and four other officers of the institution.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Stock's par value, no bearing on tax figures

By Bill Doyle

Q. My cousin gave me 1,000 shares of his company's common stock three years ago. The par value on the stock certificate was $1 per share, but the market value of the stock at the time of the gift was $5 per share. Today, the stock is trading at $10 per share.

If I sell the 1,000 shares for $10,000, will my gain be $9,000, based on the $1 par value, or $5,000, based on the $5 market value on the date of I received the gift?

A. It's unlikely it will be either. Forget the par value. That has no bearing on your tax calculation — unless your cousin purchased or otherwise acquired the stock at the $1 number.

Doyle

When stock or other capital assets received as a gift is sold at a profit, your basis is the donor's basis. To report this correctly, you have to learn your cousin's basis on those shares. The difference between that figure and your selling price will be your capital gain.

Q. Several years ago, I reinvested the dividends from a utility stock in a program available at that time to defer payment of income tax.

I reinvested $2,000 and the shares I purchased through those reinvestments now are worth only $1,500. If I sell, how and where is the loss reported?

A. You won't have a loss on that sale. Instead, assuming you sell for $1,500, you will have a $1,500 capital gain, which you will be required to report on Schedule D of the Form 1040 federal income you file for the year of the sale.

You are referring to the tax break in effect from Jan. 1, 1982 through Dec. 31, 1985. During that four-year span, stockholders of "qualified utilities," which included most electric and/or gas companies as well as some telephone and water companies, who reinvested their dividends were allowed to exclude and not pay tax on up to $750 of dividends annually. For a married couple filing a joint income tax return, that number doubled to $1,500 a year.

That tax was deferred — not forgiven. The Internal Revenue Service gets its bite when and if you sell the shares on which the exclusion was taken.

The Economic Recovery Tax Act that authorized the tax exclusion on those reinvested shares also specified that the tax-cost basis of the shares was zero. When you sell, the difference between your basis and your sales proceeds is either a capital gain or a capital loss. With a zero basis and a $1,500 sale price, you will have a $1,500 capital gain. This applies even when the amount of reinvested dividends was higher — $2,000, in your case.

Q. Three years ago, I invested $30,000 in over-the-counter stocks. "Threw away" might be a better description than "invested." The current market value of those stocks is about $1,200.

My chances of using this as a tax write-off are as remote as my winning the state lottery. Can I transfer these stocks to my son, who will be able to utilize the tax loss? If so, how do I go about it?

A. You can transfer the stocks to your son by filling out the assignment form on the back of each stock certificate, having your signature there guaranteed by a brokerage firm, commercial bank or trust company and sending the certificates to the stocks' transfer agents, where new certificates will be issued in your son's name and sent to him.

You son will have to sell the stocks to establish a capital loss for tax purposes. That loss probably won't be as large as you think. On gift stocks and other capital assets sold at a loss, the recipient's basis is either the donor's basis or the market value on the date of the gift, whichever is lower.

Q. Exactly what is par value?

A. In the case of bonds and other debt securities, such as debentures and notes, it is the face amount of the particular security. On most debt securities, annual interest is paid as a percentage of par value.

With preferred stocks, par signifies the dollar amount on which dividends are paid. But, other than for bookkeeping purposes, par value has no meaning on common stock, where it is an amount assigned to each share by the company charter or is a number used to compute the dollar amount of common shares on the balance sheet.

Oil boom giant now corporate ghost

FORT WORTH, Texas — It was 1981, crude oil was commanding the outrageous price of $35 a barrel and all the experts just knew prices would keep going higher.

Those were heady times for Kendavis Industries, a family-owned business empire with its fortunes wedded largely to the oil industry.

Kendavis did everything from drill wells to sell oilfield pipe to manufacture lighting for drilling rigs, as well as operate a variety of non-energy businesses. The conglomerate's 1981 revenues zoomed to $2.2 billion, its net profit skyrocketed to $105 million and its 40-plus companies boasted a payroll of 16,000 workers in 35 countries.

Now, less than a decade later, once-proud Kendavis is little more than a corporate ghost.

The parent company, Kendavis Holding Co., employs a scant seven people at its eerily quiet six-story headquarters building in downtown Fort Worth. The walls are virtually bare, with the exception of a few aging photos of drilling rigs.

All the Kendavis operating companies, or their functioning assets, have been dismantled or sold. Approximately $350 million in proceeds have gone primarily to 22 bank creditors of Kendavis that were owed more than $500 million by the conglomerate.

By September, Kendavis is expected to have only two employees lingering on to do the mop-up work involved in folding up the company. Even the headquarters has been sold, with Kendavis now leasing the space back.

For the past three years, Joe B. Freeman, a lanky, laid-back executive with a passion for horses and polo, has been chairman and chief executive officer of Kendavis. Freeman was the choice of bank creditors who booted brothers Kenneth Davis Jr. and Cullen Davis from the company's hierarchy after the banks gained majority ownership under a bankruptcy judge's order.

Freeman says philosophically of Kendavis' demise, "Hindsight is a wonderful teacher."

Such 20-20 vision would have shown the Davis brothers that the oil boom would quickly become a monumental bust. The industry began a general downturn in 1982. By 1985, bank creditors of Kendavis had shoved the company into bankruptcy court, seeking repayment for hundreds of millions of dollars in loans. Then came a nightmarish 1986, with oil prices crashing to less than $10 a barrel and drilling activity plummeting to a post-World War II low.

That would prove the downfall of Kendavis, which had bought heavily into the logic that the energy boom would be a sustained one.

One of the Kendavis giants, Loffland Brothers Co. of Tulsa, Okla., sank $477 million into the purchase of new drilling rigs from 1979 to 1983. Loffland proudly billed itself as "the world's oldest and largest contract drilling firm."

Another Kendavis behemoth, Mid-Continent Supply Co. of Fort Worth (which labeled itself "the world's largest independent oilfield supply company"), suddenly found itself saddled with $250 million in excess oilfield pipe.

As late as 1984, Forbes magazine had estimated the wealth of Kenneth and Cullen Davis and an estranged brother, Bill Davis of Fort Worth, at a total of $500 million, placing the trio on its list of the 400 wealthiest people in America. Kendavis ranked among the largest privately held companies in the United States. Kenneth and Cullen together owned nearly 100 percent of the conglomerate.

But in 1985, Forbes magazine, citing the declining fortunes of the oil industry, dropped the Davises from their most-wealthy list. That same year, Kendavis bank creditors involuntarily thrust the company into a Dallas bankruptcy court.

Under a reorganization plan approved by U.S. Bankruptcy Judge Robert McGuire of Dallas, the Davises' stock ownership in Kendavis was canceled and 22 bank creditors took control. When Freeman became chief executive officer in 1987, Kendavis Holding Co. began putting the conglomerate's operations up for sale.

The remnants of Mid-Continent, which had become a sad shadow of its once-formidable self, were sold in pieces. Loffland, once described by Kenneth Davis as the "crown jewel" of Kendavis, was sold this spring for $60 million to Nabors Industries, a Houston drilling contractor.

Other substantial Kendavis operations sold were Stratoflex Inc. of Fort Worth, a manufacturer of flexible hoses and fittings; and Unit Rig & Equipment Co. of Tulsa, a manufacturer of off-highway trucks and loaders.

Most Kendavis companies shrank substantially in value after the oil boom. For example, Nabors acquired Loffland and about 60 of its drilling rigs for $60 million.

CINCINNATI (AP) — A rose is a rose by any other name, but the name of the defendent should not make any difference to a court of law.

Pete Rose shouldn't expect the judge to go easier — or harder — on him just because he's baseball's all-time hits leader, according to lawyers familiar with S. Arthur Spiegel.

"I don't think he would cut anyone a break or be harder," said laywer Martin Pinales, who represented Rose's former housemate, Thomas Gioiosa. "I think he would do what he felt was right regardless of outside pressures."

"I find him to be impeccably fair," said lawyer Stanley Chesley. "I don't think he would become in any way influenced by the media or public opinion or any of those things."

Colusion ruling

NEW YORK (AP) — After three years of charges, countercharges and legal confrontations between owners and players, arbitrator George Nicolau is expected to rule Wednesday on baseball's third collusion case.

Arbitrator Thomas Roberts found owners guilty of conspiring against free agents following the 1985 season and Nicolau found owners guilty of a conspiracy following the 1986 season. The Collusion III case, as it is known, deals with players who became free agents following the 1987 season.

Angel express derailed by Jackson, 7-4

■ Midland strands runners in scoring position on six occasions, missing out on big opportunities as the first-place Jackson Mets down the Angels 7-4.

By Jimmy Patterson
Assistant Sports Editor

Jackson's Twin Peaks may or may not know who killed Laura Palmer on the cultish ABC television series, but the Mets' opening and closing pitchers combined to solve the mystery of the suddenly resurgent Midland Angels, 7-4, Tuesday night at Angels Stadium.

Met starter Eric Hillman, a rather lanky 6-10, received the win to move his record to 2-3, and the tall Terry Bross, measuring in at 6-8 — who ironically happens to be the short reliever — picked up his 24th save of the season — one short of the Mets' season record.

Midland, which had won six out of its last eight, fell to 11-13 and remains in last place of the Texas League West Division. Jackson rose to 15-9, still atop the TL East.

The Angels squandered numerous opportunities. Only eight runners were left on base, but of those eight, six were left stranded in scoring positon. And of those six, five initially reached base with less than two out.

Bross, a menacing sort with the Mad Hungarian look and delivery of former St. Louis Cardinal Al Hrabosky, came on with one out in the ninth after a Scott Cerny single chased middle reliever Doug Cinnella (a short 6-0 in comparison to his teammates). After allowing a single to Mark Howie, Bross got Howard Nichols to ground into a game-ending double play.

Angel starting pitching gave way to its first half luck as Carl Hamilton, after a one-two-three first inning, allowed five straight hits — including two doubles — as the Mets jumped to a 4-0 lead before the blink of an eye in the second.

Things might've been even worse for Midland had the entire Jackson batting order chosen to participate. The bottom four in the Mets' order combined for six of the Mets' nine hits, all six of the team's RBIs and five of the seven runs scored. The top five in the Jackson order had three hits in 20 at bats and scored three runs.

Midland had a two-run spurt in the seventh which got the crowd a bit excited. It was all for naught, however, despite a two run double by second baseman Scott Cerny. Cerny, who finished 3-for-5, drove in Doug Davis and Kevin Davis with the smash. (There were, incidentally, four players named Davis in the game, three for Midland, and Jackson's Steve Davis. Midland's Davis's outhit Jackson's Davis, 3-1.)

The Angels' fourth and final run came in the bottom of the ninth — to give the crowd another little tease — as Wiley Lee singled, stole second and came home on a one-out, RBI single by Mark Howie.

Midland opened its scoring in the second when Howard Nichols singled, reached third on a sacrifice by Peters and came in on a Hillman balk.

Thunder roars back

■ In a rumble between two local teams, Pink Thunder won two straight games over White Lightning to claim the UGSA AAA Division III national championship.

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

Just like cream rising to the top, Midland's Pink Thunder won back-to-back games against Midland's White Lightning Tuesday at Ulmer Park to capture the United Girls Softball Association's AAA Division III national title.

Thunder won a tight-fisted 5-3 victory in the first game and put the title away with a 13-4 victory in the finale — game, set, match and title.

But you have to go back a bit to understand the significance of this one. The Lightning squad, Midland's No. 2 All-Star team, handed Pink a 4-2 loss during tournament pool play Saturday. Then the Lightning girls became the tournament darlings by making the finals.

Douglas, King settle

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Heavyweight champion James "Buster" Douglas can't get Don King out of his hair.

A settlement Tuesday of their acrimonious lawsuit gives Douglas the go-ahead for his first title defense — against Evander Holyfield in Las Vegas on Oct. 25 — but allows King to remain as the champion's promoter in future fights.

The split decision means Douglas' first fight since his Feb. 10 knockout of Mike Tyson will be at The Mirage, the Las Vegas hotel-casino which was a co-defendant in the federal lawsuit brought by King.

But Holyfield's promoters said Tuesday they want the fight held on its original date, Sept. 21, and only a court order will change their minds.

Either way, King will be shut out of that fight. The flamboyant promoter will then be back in business — albeit without any friends in the Douglas camp — for the current champion's subsequent fights. Douglas had hoped to oust King completely.

The settlement, reached in marathon negotiations which ended at 2 a.m. Monday, was announced at U.S. District Court in Manhattan, where the suit was in its third week of trial. Douglas' manager John Johnson said his side was satisfied they had emerged victorious.

"We're fighting who we want, where we want, and with the greatest deal in sports history," said Johnson, who emerged from the courthouse with his arm around Mirage owner Steve Wynn.

"I got what I wanted. I'm satisfied with it. I wanted to fight in Las Vegas at the Mirage, I wanted to make my own decisions," Douglas said upon his return to Ohio. "And that's what we're going to do."

King, who after the Holyfield fight will again be making money when Douglas steps in the ring, was pleased as well: "Due process is wonderful. Only in America. ... My rights are restored."

Douglas had signed a two-fight contract with Wynn which guaranteed him $60 million for the Holyfield fight and a rematch with Tyson. That deal was the crux of suits filed in Nevada and Manhattan to determine who would promote Douglas' next two bouts.

Wynn will promote the Douglas-Holyfield fight, while King will be involved in the tentative Douglas-Tyson fight, scheduled for the spring. That fight would also be held at The Mirage. King would then have right of first refusal in promoting subsequent Douglas fights, Johnson said.

King signed a three-year promotional deal with Douglas in December 1988, with the stipulation that he would promote the fighter as long as he was champion.

The legal battles delayed the Holyfield fight for more than a month, but Top Rank-Monitor, which promotes the challenger, said another court fight could follow about that date.

Solving the great golf club mystery

When I saw her, my curiosity was immediatly piqued. What in tarnation was a beautiful woman, attired in her Sunday-best dress, doing crossing Highway 80 carrying a sole golf club?

Price

It looked to be a 7-iron, but I couldn't swear to that fact. But where were the other clubs, where was any semblence of a golf ball, and why would she be hitting practice shots while wearing a dress — even though she was in the general vicinity of Ulmer Park? Things were getting, as the old adage goes, curiouser and curiouser.

With all these questions remaining unanswered, something dangerous happened; I began to think, long and hard.

At first, my conclusions were of the milder variety. Golf is, according to all recent research, one of the nation's (and the world's) fastest growing participant sports. If she wanted to work the kinks out of her swing while wearing spiked heels, that's her business.

Maybe, as an ardent golfer, she just wanted to take a new club out for walk, sort of introduce it to the world and show it off to friends and family. Or maybe she just found it laying in the gutter and figured it was worth a buck or two.

But, my imagination being what it is, sane reasoning soon was losing ground and more bizarre visions began doing the two-step in my brain. What if she was mad at her husband or boyfriend, who could have been hitting a few balls at the park. Maybe she went over there, snatched the first available club from his bag and whopped him over the head. Maybe it was the same ol' story — the "you love that putter more than you love me" line of reasoning could have set in. What if?

And wasn't there a rash of serial 7-iron murders in Chicago a few years back? No? Or was it the St. Andrews Day Massacre? Well, maybe not. This thing was getting out of hand, and I would have gotten hold of myself if I could've found a good place to grab.

I told myself it was none of my business what she was doing with that golf club, so just butt out. But I just couldn't get that sight out of my mind. I was beginning to lose sleep over the whole matter, so it had to be resolved.

Every time I drove down that particular stretch of road I looked for the 7-Iron Phantom Lady, as I began to call her. But after a month there was no hint the 7-IPL was going to return to the scene of the sighting, at least not while I was driving by. What if she was some sort apparition? My head was aching from notions of unidentified flying objects, ghosts and goblins going off like so much popcorn in my skull.

Finally, I resigned myself to the fact that I would never find out what the devil that lady was doing that day. If nothing else, maybe it meant that golf is still enjoying its biggest boon ever, even here in Midland where the oil prices are dropping on a scale proportionate to the game's rise in status.

Yes, I do sleep better at night now, even though the mystery is as yet unresolved. Maybe that's because, in a manner of self-defense, I keep my bag of clubs next to my nightstand. The way I play golf, at least I'm getting some good out of them — even if it's just peace of mind.

Rose won't get preferential treatment

Associated Press

CINCINNATI — Pete Rose won't have the home court advantage Thursday when he's sentenced for federal tax crimes.

Rose shouldn't expect the judge to go easier — or harder — on him just because he's baseball's all-time hits leader, according to lawyers familiar with S. Arthur Spiegel.

"I don't think he would cut anyone a break or be harder," said laywer Martin Pinales, who represented Rose's former housemate, Thomas Gioiosa. "I think he would do what he felt was right regardless of outside pressures."

"I find him to be impeccably fair," said lawyer Stanley Chesley. "I don't think he would become in any way influenced by the media or public opinion or any of those things."

Spiegel already has sentenced two of Rose's reputed gambling associates — Gioiosa and bookmaker Ronald Peters — to jail on tax and drug charges. The sentences fit Spiegel's reputation for toughness on white-collar crime tempered with compassion.

Last year, Spiegel sentenced Peters to concurrent two-year sentences for tax evasion and cocaine distribution. Peters said he took Rose's bets, including wagers on the Cincinnati Reds — an allegation Rose still denies.

Spiegel later presided over the drug and tax-evasion trial of Gioiosa, who lived with Rose for about five years and placed his bets with bookmakers. A jury convicted Gioiosa of transporting cocaine and two tax violations, and Spiegel sentenced him to five years on the drug charge and two concurrent five-month sentences on the tax charges.

The judge has had two weeks to mull over a pre-sentence report on Rose's admissions that he failed to claim income on his taxes. The two felony counts carry a maximum jail sentence of six years and a $500,000 fine.

Rose isn't expected to get anywhere near the maximum jail term, but federal sentencing guidelines hold the most likely possibility of six to 16 months in a jail or halfway house.

This judge doesn't take sentencings lightly. In an interview shortly after he was named to the federal bench in 1980, Spiegel said he considers sentencing defendants his most important responsibility.

"You're dealing with a person's life, and it's playing a little like God," Spiegel said.

He considers three factors in sentencing: deterrence, protection of society and rehabilitation.

"I let my heart speak," he said. "But I also have to fashion a sentence to serve society."

Unlike Norbert A. Nadel, a low-profile Common Pleas Court judge who went to bat for Rose last summer in his fight against baseball, Spiegel has handled a number of nationally prominent cases.

Most recently, Spiegel presided over a $78 million settlement to lawsuits filed over the Fernald uranium processing plant operated by the federal government north of Cincinnati. When the U.S. Department of Energy balked at some of the settlement terms, Spiegel ordered the Secretary of Energy to come to his courtroom to explain his position in person.

The judge later backed off the unusual demand, and the Energy Department went along with the settlement. But Spiegel's point was made — he wouldn't stand for any such legal maneuvering, even by a cabinet member.

USA drops Cuba

Associated Press

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia — The United States, trailing by eight points in the second half, rallied behind Teresa Edwards for an 87-78 win over Cuba in its first final round match of the women's World Basketball Championships Tuesday night.

The defending champion Americans, who have won the title four times, fell behind 7-0 to the the Pan-American Games champion before Edwards, who finished with 32 points, hit a three-point basket.

GIRLS: Odessa contingent excels

From 1D

But Pink never skipped a beat after the loss and exacted its revenge in the finals.

"To tell you the truth, I'm glad they beat us the first time because it made us play a lot harder," said Pink shortstop Tara Stanley, who hit two tournament homers, including one in the championship finale.

It was Stanley's two-run shot in the second inning that sent the Pink off and running to a 4-0 lead. And they never looked back, scoring five in the fifth inning to put the game away.

"I was surprised to hit the homer," said Stanley. "I had been popping up a lot, so I didn't swing hard, just trying to hit the ball in the hole. It went out."

Cindi Starritt had a two-run single to start the big five-run fifth in a frame that also had RBI singles by Jennifer Roach, Christian Lant and a sacrifice fly by Trish Wyatt.

"I guess they decided they didn't like losing too much and wanted to get back at the Lightning," said an elated Pink coach Bruce Stanley. "But I'm tickled that both Midland teams got into the finals. If you win something like this, you can't do it in any better fashion. This was the best. It was good for Midland softball."

Gordon Lambert, the Lightning coach, knew realistically that it would be super tough to beat the No. 1 Pink team, so he was very happy at the showing of his squad.

"We had both teams in the finals and that was just great. We had our day in the sun and they had theirs," said Lambert before adding, "This was more than winning and losing in softball. We had girls out here doing something besides drugs and getting into trouble and it was a positive experience. That makes it all worthwhile."

Odessa's softball program is on the rise, winning two of four championships and have a chance at a third.

Odessa's Division IV team made it to the finals by beating Midland in a 1-0 playoff. They then lost to Abilene North Red in the first game of the finals before erasing a 12-2 Red lead in the second game for a 13-12 victory to force a third contest. However, Odessa finally ran out of comeback gas with a 9-4 loss to Abilene. It was the only finals matchup that went the full three games. All other decisions were won in two games.

Odessa's Green teams won both the Division I and II crowns with straight victories over Abilene North Red and Abilene South Red, respectively.

San Angelo, playing in the AA competition for the first time, won two of three titles, beating Snyder in both Division III and IV.

Snyder, however, came back with a Division II title over Andrews, winning the last game by a 12-11 margin. Snyder, like Odessa, had teams in three of the four finals.

Fort Stockton took the Division I title and finished with a perfect 8-0 tournament record. But it wasn't easy in the finals against Brownwood. Fort Stockton won the first game 8-7 in seven innings and had to come from behind in the second game for a 13-10 win.

The Class A tournament now begins a run at Uliner Park with teams from Bangs, Jal, Breckenridge, Coahoma, Colorado City, Hawley, Brownfield, Kermit and Lovington, N.M., entered Wednesday through Saturday.

Kent Hrbek celebrates the completion of the first of two Minnesota Twin triple plays as Boston's Tom Brunansky crosses first base in the Twins' 1-0 loss to the Red Sox Tuesday.

Tripled-off Bosox win; Bo blasts three homers

Associated Press

AL

Minnesota became the first team in major league history to pull off two triple plays in one game, but it wasn't enough to overcome eight shutout innings by Tom Bolton as the Boston Red Sox beat the Twins 1-0 Tuesday night.

The victory was Boston's second in 10 games and the first by a starter in 12 games.

Bolton (3-0) allowed five hits, struck out six and walked four. He left after walking the leadoff batter in the ninth and Jeff Reardon finished for his 16th save.

With one out in the Boston fifth, Mike Greenwell's grounder went through shortstop Greg Gagne's legs for an error. Greenwell went to second on Tony Pena's single and third on Billy Jo Robidoux's grounder that forced Pena.

Tim Naehring, a shortstop promoted from Pawtucket of the International League last Saturday, then singled off starter Scott Erickson (1-2) to score Greenwell for the only run of the game.

Minnesota's first triple play came in the fourth after Erickson walked Wade Boggs, allowed a double to Jody Reed and walked Carlos Quintana. Tom Brunansky, who played for Minnesota from 1982 through 1988, then hit a sharp grounder to third baseman Gary Gaetti. He stepped on third and fired to second baseman Al Newman for the second out. Newman's throw to Kent Hrbek beat Brunansky by a full stride.

It was Minnesota's first triple play since Aug. 8, 1988 and the first against Boston since July 4, 1988.

In the eighth, reliever John Candelaria gave up a double to Naehring leading off and then walked Boggs. Reed hit a one-hopper to Gaetti, who relayed to Newman, forcing Boggs. Newman then threw to Hrbek, again beating Reed by a full stride.

Royals 10, Yankees 7

Bo Jackson hit three homers and drove in seven runs but had to leave Tuesday night's game in the sixth inning after injuring his left shoulder while diving for a fly ball as Kansas City beat New York.

Jackson hit two-run homers in the first and third innings off Andy Hawkins (1-8) and hit a three-run shot off Hawkins in the fifth. The third home run gave Jackson 19 for the season and 100 for his career.

But he never got an opportunity to tie the major league record of four home runs. Jackson hurt his shoulder in the sixth when he attempted to catch Deion Sanders' sinking liner to right-center field and left the game. The ball rolled to the wall for an inside-the-park, two-run homer which pulled New York to 8-7.

Jackson was taken to a hospital to have the shoulder examined. Steve Fink, a Royals spokesman, said it appeared Jackson's shoulder had popped out and back in. It was described as a partial dislocation and not considered serious.

Jackson's first two homers were monster shots. He followed George Brett's first-inning walk with a 412-foot drive over the center-field wall.

After Bill Pecota led off the third with his first home run in a year, Hawkins walked Brett again and Jackson hit a 464-foot, opposite-field homer halfway up the right-field bleachers.

Orioles 5, Rangers 3

Pete Harnisch retired 22 consecutive batters after a shaky start to earn his first victory in nearly a month Baltimore handed Texas its third straight loss.

Harnisch (8-5) allowed three runs, four hits and struck out eight in 8⅔ innings.

After a single by Rafael Palmeiro in the first inning, Harnisch did not allow another base runner until Geno Petralli led off the ninth with a single. Julio Franco doubled with two out in the ninth and Gregg Olson relieved and gave up a two-run single to Palmeiro before getting the final out for his 20th save.

Indians 4, Athletics 2

Cory Snyder doubled to lead off the seventh inning and scored on Jerry Browne's sacrifice fly to break a 2-2 tie and send Cleveland to a win over Oakland.

Cleveland starter Greg Swindell (5-5), won for the first time in eight road starts this year, walking one and striking out five in 6⅔ innings. The Indians are now 8-0 in Swindell's last eight starts and he is 3-0 with five no-decisions since June 6.

White Sox 7, Tigers 3

Dan Pasqua's two-run homer capped a three-run sixth inning rally as Chicago beat Detroit.

The White Sox have won 12 of their last 13 road games and 21 of 24.

Winner Melido Perez (9-7) pitched a six-inning, rain-shortened no-hitter against against New York last Thursday, but had a shaky start against the Tigers.

Sixteen hits back Gooden

Associated Press

NL

Dwight Gooden won his seventh straight start and Kevin McReynolds went 4-for-4 as the New York Mets beat the Houston Astros 6-2 Tuesday night.

Gooden (10-5), who hasn't lost since June 2, gave up seven hits, struck out 10 and walked three over 7⅔ innings. John Franco finished for his 19th save.

The Mets had 16 hits, including two doubles and a homer by Howard Johnson. New York has won 20 of its last 26 games and 10 of its last 15 on the road.

Bill Gullickson (6-7) took the loss, giving up five runs on 10 hits in 5 2-3 innings.

New York took a 1-0 lead in the first when Johnson led off the game with his 15th homer of the season. It was his second lead-off homer in five days.

The Mets made it 2-0 in the second when McReynolds led off with a single, moved to second on Mackey Sasser's single and scored on a double by Daryl Boston.

Houston scored a run in the bottom of the inning when Craig Biggio walked, stole second, went to third on a throwing error by catcher Sasser and scored on a grounder by Javier Ortiz.

In the Mets third, Darryl Strawberry singled, stole second and scored on a single by McReynolds to make it 3-1.

Cubs 7, Padres 2

Rookie Shawn Boskie allowed six hits in 6⅔ innings and capped a six-run, fifth inning with a two-run double to lead Chicago to a victory over San Diego.

It was the third straight win for the Cubs and the 15th loss for the Padres in their last 18 games.

Boskie (4-5) walked two and struck out two before leaving in the seventh following singles by Tom Lampkin and Shawn Abner. Lampkin, who had singled in the fifth for his first major league hit, scored on a sacrifice fly by Bip Roberts.

Andy Benes (6-7) was the loser, allowing 8 hits and 5 runs, three of them unearned. Five of Chicago's seven runs were unearned.

Dave Clark opened the fifth with the first of his two singles in the inning and scored on a double by Ryne Sandberg.

Giants 6, Pirates 3

Matt Williams hit a tie-breaking grand slam in the sixth and Don Robinson pitched eight strong innings as San Francisco beat Pittsburgh.

Robinson (6-1), traded to the Giants by Pittsburgh in August 1987, was facing the Pirates for the first time since going 0-3 with an 8.20 ERA against them last season. He struck out four and walked one.

Robinson took a 6-1 lead into the ninth, but was lifted after giving up a single to Jay Bell and a double to Andy Van Slyke. Reliever Atlee Hammaker then gave up consecutive sacrifice flies to Bobby Bonilla and Barry Bonds before getting Sid Bream on a game-ending fly to left.

Reds 6, Expos 2

Scott Scudder struck out a career-high nine in an unexpected start Tuesday night, leading the Cincinnati Reds to a victory over Montreal.

Scudder (2-2) got a last-minute call when left-hander Danny Jackson couldn't get his shoulder loose in the bullpen before the game.

Braves 14, Phillies 10

Jim Presley hit two of Atlanta's four homers as the Braves outslugged Philadelphia to break a three-game losing streak.

Presley hit a solo homer in the first inning and a three-run shot in the fourth, his 14th of the season. Ron Gant and Francisco Cabrera each hit two-run homers for the Braves.

Both teams had 15 hits.

Atlanta starter Tom Glavine (6-6) allowed seven runs on nine hits in 6⅓ innings. Kent Mercker, who came in with one out in the eighth, finished for his first major league save.

Cardinals 3, Dodgers 0

Bryn Smith won his first game in six weeks and Pedro Guerrero had two doubles and two RBIs as St. Louis beat Los Angeles.

Fernando Valenzuela, facing the Cardinals for the first time since throwing a no-hitter against them on June 29, gave up six hits in six innings. Five of the hits were doubles.

Guerrero doubled off Valenzuela (7-8) to lead off the second, and had a two-run double in the fourth.

SWC presidents hire consultants

Associated Press

DALLAS — Southwest Conference presidents hired a consulting company on Tuesday for an extensive study of all facets of the league's operation before deciding what to do about expansion and realignment.

Commissioner Fred Jacoby said the report by McKenzie and Co., of Dallas and Houston, would be ready for the presidents by late September.

The move put on the back burner any immediate action by the SWC about the threat of the University of Arkansas leaving the league. The Southeastern Conference is courting Arkansas, and the SWC fears that Texas and Texas A&M would follow suit should the Razorbacks leave.

"The presidents want more concrete information before they determine the future of the Southwest Conference," Jacoby said.

Arkansas chancellor Daniel Ferritor was on hand for the meeting which included a unanimous vote to hire the consulting firm.

Ferritor said after the meeting that the Razorbacks' upcoming meeting with the SEC still was without a date. Athletic director Frank Broyles was in Scotland for the British Open.

Crowd roars at Lyons' miscue

Associated Press

DETROIT — Sparky Anderson called him a "showvenist." Friends call him "Psycho."

Steve Lyons just wants to be known as a hustling ballplayer — not the guy who dropped his pants in front of 14,770 baseball fans and some all-seeing television cameras.

Lyons is the Chicago White Sox utility man with a reputation for doing the unexpected.

He did it again Monday night during Chicago's 5-4 loss to Detroit. Lyons dropped his double-knits to his knees after sliding safely into first base in the fifth inning. He said he wanted to shake the dirt out of his pants. He got a roar from the crowd.

He tried again on Tuesday to explain the latest highlight of a career more colorful than successful.

"I'm not sure still why I did it," the career .262 hitter said. "I just thought, 'Shoot, you got to get that stuff out of there.' I guess I just picked the wrong time to do it."

Lyons didn't show much skin. He was wearing mid-thigh support shorts under his uniform. Still, a few appreciative female fans waved dollar bills at him on his way back to the dugout.

Detroit fans rode Lyons mercilessly before Tuesday night's game.

"Hey Steve, want to wear my belt?" one fan yelled.

"Hey Lyons, Dave Stewart sent the Chippendales over here for an interview," another fan shouted, referring to the famous male strippers.

Lyons and the Oakland Athletics pitcher feuded earlier this year. Stewart called Lyons a jerk and said Lyons should be selling insurance instead of playing baseball.

"I knew sooner or later someone would find out I should be selling insurance," Lyons said. "I just didn't figure it would be him."

Lyons and his teammates want to forget the strip show. But it probably won't be long before Lyons does something else to raise eyebrows.

During an otherwise undistinguished career, Lyons has:

— Jumped into the stands to give a high-five to a fan who had caught a fly ball he was chasing.

— Scrawled a note in the dirt at third base for Luis Aguayo of the Cleveland Indians after he had hit a home run against the White Sox — "No mas Home Runs."

— Played all nine positions in an exhibition game against the Chicago Cubs earlier this year. He once played every position but pitcher in a regular-season game.

— Earned the nickname "Psycho" from former Boston Red Sox catcher Marc Sullivan when Lyons threw his helmet in the dugout after striking out.

"Nobody calls me Steve anymore, so I'm used to it," he said. "I just want to make sure people know I'm not a mass murderer."

Lyons still plays tic-tac-toe in the dirt with opposing first basemen when he gets on base.

That happens less often than many thought it would. Lyons was a No. 1 draft pick by Boston in 1981. After six major league seasons, his potential is unrealized.

"Anything he does doesn't surprise me," White Sox manager Jeff Torborg said Tuesday. "He's one of our resident characters.

"But I like him for what he does baseball-wise. I'm not into the jokes."

LeMond keeps closing, just five second off lead

Tour de France

Associated Press

LUZ ARDIDEN, France — The yellow jersey of the leader seems to be all that separates American Greg LeMond from a second consecutive victory in the Tour de France.

And that seems to be just a matter of time — five seconds to be exact.

p and down the hills of Tuesday's mountainous 16th stage, LeMond pulled into second place and within easy striking distance of overall leader Claudio Chiappucci of Italy and established himself as the clear favorite with five stages left in the three-week race.

LeMond didn't mind at all being second by seconds.

"It's very good that I didn't get the yellow jersey today," he said. "Chiapppucci still has the pressure because he knows I am only five seconds behind."

LeMond finished second in Tuesday's 133½-mile leg from Blagnac to Luz Arididen, six seconds behind Spain's Miguel Indurain.

Chiappucci, the leader since the 12th stage, struggled across in 14th place for the stage, 2:25 behind Indurain and 2:19 behind LeMond. That allowed Chiappucci to cling to the yellow jersey — at least for another day.

LeMond showed he may be capable of erasing that lead whenever he wants. He pulled away over the final 4.2 miles up the final hill with Indurain and Marino Lejarreta of Spain.

Lejarreta was left behind with 1.2 miles to go up the 5,600-foot mountain.

Chiappucci headed the pack during the first half of the final climb, as others waited to see if the Italian could last.

Then Fabio Parra of Colombia decided to attack.

LeMond went right at him, taking the lead. Only Indurain and Lejarreta could respond as the trio moved away from the others.

Indurain hung on LeMond's shoulder until the final 400 yards, when LeMond finally let up.

Indurain won in 7 hours, 4 minutes, 38 seconds.

Lejarreta followed LeMond in third and Spaniard Miguel Martinez-Torres was fourth.

Pedro Delgado, LeMond's main rival, was eighth, 1:38 behind. He is now 3:42 back of Chiappucci and 3:37 behind LeMond overall.

Eric Breukink of the Netherlands, second entering the day, dropped to fourth overall by coming in 22nd, 4:22 behind Indurain.

Chiappucci had mounted a fast pace over the first two mountain passes, building a lead of more than a minute over LeMond at the top of the second peak.

"I just wanted to see what the other ones were going to do," Chiappucci said.

But coming down Tourmalet peak, about 6,900 feet high, LeMond took command. He caught Chiappucci just before the start of the third climb, descending at speeds approaching 62 mph, and Chiappucci faded in the final climb.

"I'm not disappointed today. I feel very very well," LeMond said."My idea was to attack at the beginning. But everybody was waiting for me. I didn't want to be the one to lead the others so I waited for someone else."

Wednesday's stage is another hill climb, 93-miles from Lourdes to Pau.

"I won't let any chances get away from me," LeMond said. "With Delgado being three minutes, I would have to have a very, very bad day for Delgado to close. But I am in good shape to go attack Chiappucci."

Calcavecchia looks to repeat

Associated Press

ST. ANDREWS, Scotland — There's an imp inside Mark Calcavecchia.

As he glanced out his hotel window, overlooking the 17th hole at the Old Course, he spotted Ben Crenshaw, Tom Watson and Paul Azinger.

"I thought about holding the trophy out the window and yelling, 'Hey, guys, is this what you're chasing?' " the defending British Open champion said Tuesday.

But he didn't.

The trophy, a battered old sliver claret jug and the emblem of Calcavecchia's 1989 playoff triumph, is to be returned Wednesday to the Royal and Ancient Golf Club of St. Andrews for presentation to the winner of the 119th Open championship.

Calcavecchia hopes it will be a brief parting. Like four days.

"Now that I've won one, I know what it's all about and I want to win another real bad," he said.

Calcavecchia has won quite a lot this season.

"It's been a great year for me," he said. "Great things have happened. There have been the appearance fees, the outings, the money has been great. I don't know why they do it. I wouldn't pay me that much money just to show up and play golf.

"But if I hadn't made a dime off the Open, that'd be fine, too. Winning the tournament was more important. If you can win golf tournaments, the money will come. That's what I'm trying to do, win golf tournaments, not money.

"I'd give back to the R and A every dime I made if I could win this one again."

And there's every good chance that the husky, hard-hitting Calcavecchia can do just that.

"I had some goals after winning the Open. I've accomplished all of them, except winning again," he said. "I wanted to keep on playing good. Except for a couple of months right after the Masters — when I had the foot trouble and the back trouble — I've played good all the time. I just haven't won."

He's come close.

In the year since beating Greg Norman and Wayne Grady for his first major title, he has recorded six runner-up finishes.

"I'm playing good again now. It's just a matter of time before I win again," said Calcavecchia.

While he' bubbling with enthusiasm, some of the other prominent contenders were having their problems.

The two Spanish stars, Seve Ballesteros and Jose-Maria Olazabal, were less than confident. Ballesteros, in a mild slump, said he suffered from a lack of confidence. Olazabal said he is "playing worse than I have in years."

Ian Woosnam of Wales, winner of the last two events on the European tour, is hampered by a chronic back ailment. Curtis Strange talked about some putting difficulties. So did Tom Kite.

Nick Faldo, winer of the last two Masters, was a solid choice as the pre-tournament favorite.

"Off what he's done the last few years, he's obviously the favorite," Kite said.

Others in the 156-man field include PGA title-holder Payne Stewart, Greg Norman, recent winner Lanny Wadkins and Hale Irwin, the 45-year-old who scored his third U.S. Open victory last month.

Calcavecchia, who admits to a love affair with the Old Course, is the top American hope.

"I love this golf course," he said. "I was standing out there on the third or fourth hole just chuckling to myself, looking around and thinking, 'Isn't this the neatest place.' "

TAC hands DeBus lifetime suspension

Associated Press

INDIANAPOLIS — Chuck DeBus, the longtime coach of the Los Angeles Track Club and a former coach at UCLA, has been suspended from track and field for life, The Athletics Congress announced Tuesday.

William Hickman, chairman of a three-member TAC panel that investigated charges against DeBus, said it concluded that DeBus had incited athletes to use banned substances, was guilty of providing banned substances to an athlete, and guilty of conduct detrimental to the purpose of TAC and amateur sports.

The panel announced its ruling in a 52-page document received Tuesday at TAC headquarters.

TAC, the national governing body for the sport, had charged DeBus, 45, with assisting athletes in the use of doping substances, incited athletes to use doping substances and had distributed doping substances. All three charges are in violation of the rules of the International Amateur Athletic Federation, the international governing body for the sport, and TAC.

The ruling follows an investigation that lasted more than a year. DeBus, of Santa Monica, Calif., was served a notice of a hearing on the charges on May 31, 1989. Following a series of continuances, the three-member panel met with DeBus and his attorney, Craig Dummit, in Los Angeles, on April 5-6.

Mackey admits he abused drugs, alcohol

Associated Press

CLEVELAND — Cleveland State basketball coach Kevin Mackey, describing the last three years of his life as "the descent into hell," admitted Tuesday he is an alcohol and drug abuser.

"I was on a collision course to kill myself or somebody else, the way my life was going out of control," he said.

Mackey, 43, was arrested in his car along with a woman companion Friday night after police, acting on a tip, staked out a suspected drug house, saw Mackey emerge and then drive away erratically.

He pleaded innocent Monday in Cleveland Municipal Court to driving under the influence and having an open beer can in his car. Later Monday a crime lab's test of a urine sample Mackey voluntarily provided while being booked showed traces of cocaine.

As of Tuesday, Mackey had not been charged with a crime stemming from drug use.

At a news conference on Tuesday, Mackey said he had been a drug abuser for about three years and was unable to control his drinking the past five years. The father of three spoke with his wife Kathleen, son Brian and brother Steven near him.

Lawyer David Roth asked Cleveland State officials Tuesday to grant Mackey a medical leave of absence.

Cleveland State spokesman Ed Mayer confirmed on Tuesday that university officials met with Roth. He said a "decision on the course of action regarding Kevin Mackey might come in a few days."

Mackey has posted a 144-67 record since he became Cleveland State's basketball coach March 16, 1983. Before that he was an assistant at Boston College and a head coach at Boston Cathedral High School.

He signed a new, two-year contract Wednesday, largely as a result of his successful recruiting efforts in the inner city neighborhoods of Cleveland and elsewhere.

Mackey said he hopes to salvage his coaching career.

"Should I be given the opportunity, I will devote all my energy to leading one life, a clean life, to go home at night, to be with the people that love me and care about me," he said. "I think abuse of alcohol led to situations where I would move toward drugs. ...

"I brought this on myself. This is my fault. There isn't anyone else to blame in this matter. I always tell my players to look in the mirror. When I look in the mirror now, I don't like what I see. I sincerely believe that I am sick, that I have a problem."

Mackey's 1986 team went 29-4 and advanced to the NCAA tournament's round of 16. That team upset Indiana in the tournament, and Mackey labeled the season "The Magic Carpet Ride."

THE SHOCKING TRUTH! Most people know that good shock absorbers are essential for a smooth, comfortable ride. But good shocks are even more critical to safety. Because the proper dampening action of a good working shock absorber will help keep your vehicle's wheels on the road over bumps, in sudden turns, and under hard braking. And if the wheels aren't on the road, the driver has no control! So remember: a rough ride due to worn shocks may indicate a potential for danger. Don't risk an accident—replace old, worn out shocks right away.

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Give career aims top priority now and you will reap one success after another! Increased expenses may cut into savings. Careful budgeting is crucial. A financial windfall is a distinct possibility in December. Welcome changes in both your professional and personal relationships next January. Stick to a longtime alliance in March. The loyalty of your mate or partner will provide the margin for victory in May.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actor Hume Cronyn, comedian Red Skelton, country singer Ricky Skaggs, actor James Brolin.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): A friendly chat or lunch with an associate could promote teamwork. Be flexible. A financial matter can be resolved satisfactorily today. Romance is foremost in the minds of older singles.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do those little things that mean so much to others. Negligence could be costly. Someone you adore prefers to think that you are "hard to get." Go ahead and be a challenge!

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Make certain you attend to routine assignments early in the day. Seek the company of a new friend at lunch or dinner. Things should shape up nicely for you where romance is concerned.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Get busy early in the day. Your employer could give you an extra assignment this afternoon. Any stumbling blocks in the way of progress should be passed over lightly in conversation. Romance is fabulous!

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Seek cooperation from family in keeping down expenses. Postpone making any large purchases. Devote evening hours to hobbies. Working around the clock can leave you exhausted.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Tackling a tough job in your usual environment will be more productive than taking a business trip right now. Use evening hours to improve your home surroundings and tend to personal chores.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A new course of study or line of research gives great satisfaction. Browse through your favorite stores for bargains. Domestic activities prove rewarding tonight. Enjoy the company of children.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Perseverance and tact will help you achieve your goals. Be independent, but not arrogant. Cash flow could be temporarily impeded. Someone influential may help by pulling strings on your behalf.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): You could be the victim of wishful thinking where business or money is concerned. Revise your budget. A platonic relationship turns romantic. An attractive appearance is particularly important now.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Afternoon is excellent for clinching smaller business deals. Welcome suggestions from younger associates when planning for the future. Pay more attention to the spiritual side of life.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Reading journals helps you keep abreast of the latest developments in your field. Mate seeks extra attention. Plan a happy surprise for the weekend. Someone who offers help could have hidden motives.

TODAY'S CHILDREN are born leaders, able to convince their peers to follow in their footsteps. Wise parents will not allow these youngsters to boss their siblings around. It is very important that these Cancerians learn to compromise instead of always getting their own way. A knack for languages could lead to a foreign service career. These children are eager to see the world and should be taught to show respect for other countries' customs.

The bidding:

South	West	North	East

Opening lead: King of ♣

It goes without saying that the more you know about a situation, the better placed you are to come up with the right decision. That has wide applications at the bridge table, as this hand demonstrates.

North-South were playing 15- to 17-point opening no trump bids. Therefore, North had no inclination to probe for a grand slam and simply made the value raise.

Declarer won the opening lead and could count 11 fast tricks. Obviously, the 12th would have to come from spades, and there were several possibilities—a 3-3 split; dropping a doubleton jack; or a third-round finesse of the ten.

Declarer cashed four rounds of hearts, noting East's diamond discard. Next came three diamonds as West parted with a club. Since a 4-4-3-2 distribution is more likely than 5-4-2-2, declarer decided to play West for four clubs and three spades. So he cashed the three high spades—down one. Did declarer play the spades wrongly?

Yes, and we're not resorting to hindsight. Declarer overlooked the chance to find out more about the hand. And it required the simplest of maneuvers—declarer should have allowed the king of clubs to win the first trick!

When East discards on the second round of clubs, declarer will eventually be able to get a complete count of the hand. West will show up with five clubs, four hearts, two diamonds and, therefore, only two spades. When the jack doesn't drop after declarer cashes the king-queen of spades, the finesse of the ten becomes a sure thing.

Alpine, Texas, man suing Nolte over movie advice

SAN ANTONIO (HNS) — Joaquin Jackson says he taught Nick Nolte how to walk, talk and shoot like a Texas Ranger.

Now he wants his money.

Jackson, a senior Ranger, has sued Nolte for $70,000 on grounds the actor did not pay him for his technical advice in the making of the movie "Extreme Prejudice."

"Joaquin called me up and said, 'I don't want to sue, but this just ain't right,'" said Jackson's attorney, Charles Butts.

Jackson said in the suit filed July 13 in U.S. District Court that Tri-Star Pictures Inc. contracted with him for $70,000 for the technical advice.

But Jackson, who lives in Alpine, Texas, said he completed his contract March 29, 1987, and has not been paid.

Butts said Jackson, an old friend, molded Nolte into his own character.

"He taught him how to shoot, walk and talk," Butts said.

Butts said that when Jackson saw Nolte at the premiere, Nolte walked so much like the Ranger it scared him.

Jackson had his boot and saddle makers fashion the same items for Nolte to use in the movie, Butts said.

The suit notes that Jackson participated in a Hollywood news conference with Nolte when the movie was released.

Also named as defendants in the suit are Extreme Prejudice Productions Inc. and Carolco Pictures Inc.

The suit was filed in federal court because of the diversity of residences of the parties. The movie was shot near El Paso, Texas. Nolte lives in Malibu, Calif.

Hepburn

MIDDLETOWN, Conn. (AP) — Actress Katharine Hepburn and many of her neighbors are suing the town of Old Saybrook because of property tax bills.

Hepburn and 45 neighbors in the Old Saybrook borough of Fenwick claim in a lawsuit against the town assessor and the Board of Tax Review that the town unfairly assessed their properties. The lawsuit was filed Monday in Middletown Superior Court.

According to the suit, Hepburn owns three building lots in Fenwick, totaling about 3.5 acres, including wetlands, assessed at $1.17 million and a house originally assessed at $373,100.

Hepburn appealed her tax bills to the Board of Tax Review in February and her house assessment was lowered to $282,100, but the board notified her in May that it would not reassess her land, the suit said.

A woman who answered the telephone at Hepburn's home and identified herself as the actress' sister-in-law, said the actress was in New York City and could not be reached for comment.

Old Saybrook tax assessor Lucille Kelley did not immediately return a telephone message left by The Associated Press.

Thomas

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Detroit Piston Isiah Thomas says a celebrity basketball game will benefit the homeless, and his wife might end up cooking for some homeless children as part of the bargain.

Besides Thomas, Los Angeles Lakers star Magic Johnson and Pistons Joe Dumars, Vinnie Johnson, Dennis Rodman, John Salley and Mark Aguirre are set to play in the Summer Classic All-Star Game at The Palace Aug. 10. Comedian Billy Crystal is also scheduled to attend, said Thomas.

Detroit Health Care for the Homeless Project and Comic Relief, which raises money for the homeless, will benefit from the game, which is expected to bring in about $300,000.

After a news conference Monday to announce the game, a homeless youth from Detroit Health Care asked Thomas: "Do you live in a mansion?"

"Why don't you come over and see," answered Thomas, who invited the boy and five other children from the shelter to his suburban home soon for pizza.

"Forget pizza," one boy told Thomas. "I want your wife to cook."

Thomas said he though his wife, Lynn, would agree.

CHICAGO (AP) — Robert DeNiro and Kurt Russell are getting a crash course on firefighting and arson investigation from the Chicago Fire Department.

Instructors from the department's Fire Academy are giving up to three hours of training each night to the cast of "Backdraft," a movie about a conflict between two brothers, both firefighters, and life in an urban fire department, Chief Stanley Span said Tuesday.

The film stars DeNiro and Russell.

Span, coordinator of special events for the fire department, said training is conducted on the movie's set.

DeNiro is being taught how to investigate fires suspected to be arson. Russell and other actors, including Billy Baldwin, are learning firefighting techniques such as raising ladders and knocking down walls and ceilings, Span said.

Boz' NFL career over; Chandler upset at Indy

Associated Press

It looks like Brian Bosworth's future is in Hollywood instead of the NFL.

The brash, talented linebacker, who signed an $11 million, 10-year contract with the Seattle Seahawks after taken in the 1987 supplemental draft, was waived by the Seahawks on Tuesday after flunking a physical on the injured right shoulder that kept him out most of last season.

"Brian Bosworth had tremendous potential as a professional football player coming out of college," coach Chuck Knox said. "Unfortunately for him, injuries have prevented him from realizing his full capabilities. We wish him the best."

But don't weep for Bosworth.

Not only does he have an insurance policy that reportedly pays him $7.3 million for a career-ending injury, but he seems to have a budding film career.

He currently is filming a movie called "The Brotherhood," in which he plays an undercover FBI agent who infiltrates a motorcycle gang. Director Bruce Malmuth says Bosworth, whose hair is long and curly rather than in the Mohawk "Boz" style he made famous, may be a budding superstar.

"Boz is great," says Malmuth, whose description of Bosworth's work is even less modest than the "The Boz" himself is known to be.

"He's just picked up right where he left off in the sports world and he's zoomed to the foreground. I see in him Marlon Brando, James Dean and Gary Cooper, all in one package. He's got the same appeal of a Stallone or an Arnold Schwarzenegger."

Bosworth, who wrote an autobiography before even playing a game, started 12 games as a rookie in 1987. He was hampered by an injury to his left shoulder in 1988 and played in only 10 games. Last season, Bosworth played in two games before injuring his right shoulder.

He finished his NFL career with 175 tackles in 24 games. He also had four sacks, forced three fumbles, recovered three fumbles and blocked one kick.

NFL Training Camps

Colts

Quarterback Chris Chandler, already rattled by the Colts' pre-draft trade to get rookie Jeff George, says the team will withhold a $50,000 bonus because his offseason workout program wasn't done in "good faith."

Chandler wants to renegotiate his contract and has threatened to boycott the start of training camp Thursday at Anderson University.

Chandler said it was coach Ron Meyer who told him the money might be withheld but said he thought the decision may have come from higher up in Colts management. His contract calls for the bonus if he works out regularly in the off-season.

The quarterback said Meyer indicated he didn't work out in "good faith." Sources at the Colts' complex said team officials were upset by what they perceived as Chandler's bad attitude after the George trade.

"All I know is, I was there all 16 weeks," Chandler said. "I lived in Indy from February to July. I was there fulfilling what it said in the contract."

Broncos

He's tired of having sand kicked in his face at the Super Bowl, so John Elway has reported to camp looking like a linebacker.

The Denver quarterback, who in the past has played at around 200 pounds, reported in at 213 pounds after spending the offseason lifting weights. He recently bench-pressed 285 pounds.

"I think he's easily the strongest quarterback in the league," strength coach Al Miller said.

The Broncos are coming off a 55-10 defeat to San Francisco, the third time in four years they've been blown out of the Super Bowl.

"We've won the AFC championship three times. That doesn't seem to do it," he said. "For us to succeed, we've got to win a Super Bowl. There's only one thing for us to do — and that's win a Super Bowl."

Miami coach Don Shula discusses a play with quarterback Cliff Stout, who along with four other free agents signed contracts Tuesday.

Saints

The New Orleans Saints opened camp missing seven unsigned rookies and 10 veterans. But fullback Craig "Ironhead" Heyward, often a controversial figure, led the first contingent of Saints reporting to the team's camp in LaCrosse, Wis.

Heyward's main problem has been his weight, which has fluctuated between 255 and 290 pounds since the Saints picked him in the first round of the '88 draft. He lost his starting job last year after coach Jim Mora said he wasn't paying enough attention to learning plays.

"I just have to get back to being my old self," he said. "Have fun, not take everything that's said personally. That's what I kind of got away from."

The unsigned veterans include nine starters — offensive linemen Stan Brock, Jim Dombrowski and Steve Trapilo; defensive backs Toi Cook and Brett Maxie; wide receiver Lonzell Hill; outside linebackers Rickey Jackson and Pat Swilling. Reserve linebacker Brian Forde and quarterback Bobby Hebert, who said he no longer wants to play for the Saints, are also unsigned.

How much is Keith McCants really making?

Associated Press

TAMPA, Fla. — Until Tampa Bay Buccaneers first-round draft pick Keith McCants signed a five-year contract last week, the question was how much he was worth. Now the question is how much he's getting paid.

Reports on the former Alabama linebacker's contract have pegged the total package at anywhere from $4.5 million to $7.4 million.

The latest figure comes from the St. Petersburg Times, which Tuesday reported the NFL Players Association told agents for other rookies that McCants signed for $6.05 million. The figure is important to agents of unsigned high draft picks, who can argue that their players should receive a similar amount.

There also is debate as to the amount of McCants' signing bonus. Several reports have said the contract includes a record $2.5 million non-deferred bonus.

The Buccaneers announced the signing of the No. 4 pick in the draft last Wednesday. Neither McCants nor the Bucs have commented on the dollar figures.

The Times said package is believed to include an annual base salary of $450,000 in 1990, $550,000 in 1991, $600,000 in 1992, $850,000 in 1993 and $900,000 in 1994. In addition, the newspaper said, the linebacker will be paid a $50,000 reporting bonus each season from 1991 to 1994.

McCants is one of only five first-round draft picks to sign so far. His contract compares with a $3.55 million, five-year deal for the No. 4 pick last season, Kansas City linebacker Derrick Thomas.

"I think it's a good deal," said agent Steve Feldman, who represents Junior Seau, the San Diego Chargers' first-round pick and No. 5 overall. "As for how it relates to Junior Seau, we've told the Chargers all along that he should be worth more than Keith McCants."

If none of McCants' signing bonus is deferred, it would be the largest cash bonus in NFL history. Some agents contacted by the Times were skeptical that none of the $2.5 million was deferred.

"If those are the right numbers, I'm pleased," said Steve Zucker, who represents offensive lineman Richmond Webb, the Miami Dolphins' first-round pick.

"I've been told there are a lot of deferrals," he added. "Those kind of numbers normally aren't done when a player tells his agent to go in and get a deal."

McCants was determined to report to training camp on time and pushed his attorney, Lance Luchnick, to reach an agreement with the Bucs last week. He was once considered the best player available in the draft, but slipped to fourth after questions were raised about the health of his right knee.

The former Alabama star underwent arthroscopic surgery two days after the draft and had been working out in Tampa for two months before signing. The Bucs begin training camp Friday.

The other 1990 first-round picks who have signed are Indianapolis quarterback Jeff George, Chicago defensive back Mark Carrier, Atlanta running back Steve Broussard and New Orleans defensive end Renaldo Turnbull. George and Carrier signed either before or during the draft.

Twelve NFL training camps will be open by the end of this week.

Warnings may affect beer company sponsorship of some sporting events

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The beer industry said Tuesday that beer producers may drop sponsorship of major sports if Congress requires new health warnings to accompany any advertising for alcoholic beverages.

Bracing for a House hearing on Wednesday, the Beer Institute launched an offensive against legislation that would require an expansion of warnings, now required on beer cans and bottles, to also be carried on advertising.

The Beer Institute also said poll results show a majority of Americans don't think the warnings will curb alcohol abuse.

"The American people want real solutions, not gimmicks, to address the problems of alcohol abuse," James C. Sanders, president of the Beer Institute, said at a news conference in the Capitol.

He said if the bill passed, he expected beer companies would withdraw advertising that underwrites sports events or television coverage of the sports because ads would be no longer effective.

Bud Selig, owner of the Milwaukee Brewers baseball team, said in a written statement that Miller Brewing Co.'s television advertising is worth millions of dollars to the team and would be difficult to replace. He said more than 70 pro sports teams have beer sponsors.

"Passage of this legislation could spell the end of family entertainment across the country," he said.

The bill is sponsored by Rep. Joseph P. Kennedy, D-Mass., and Sen. Albert Gore, D-Tenn. It would require all ads for alcoholic beverages to include one of five safety warnings.

The warnings include messages that drinking during pregnancy may cause birth defects, that drinking and driving is dangerous, that drinking may become addictive.

Backers of the bill say television and other types of ads glamorize alcohol use and encourage drinking.

Pat Taylor, director of alcohol policy for the Center for Science in the Public Interest, said there was no evidence the ad warnings would bring an end to sports sponsorship. She said the bill does not limit sports sponsorship by beer or other alcoholic products.

"Clearly there is a veiled threat here," she said. "It's impossible for me to imagine the alcohol industry in America will stop advertising if this bill goes into effect.

"Their undertaking this kind of campaign indicates the bill ... will probably be an effective part of what needs to be done to control the alcohol problems," she said.

Taylor dismissed the beer industry's poll as an attempt to counter earlier polls suggesting different findings.

Athletes arrive for Turner's Goodwill Games

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Athletes from the Soviet Union and 50 other nations streamed in Tuesday to prepare for the Goodwill Games, and almost immediately got into some serious souvenir shopping.

The so-called Glasnost Games, the brainchild of broadcaster-sportsman Ted Turner, begin Friday. The 17-day, seven-city Olympic-style extravaganza features 2,500 athletes in 21 sports.

An arts festival, trade show, human rights and science conferences, and the largest-ever homestay program for Soviet citizens are planned.

Athletes began arriving Sunday night, with the first of 30 Aeroflot charter flights touching down with 132 Soviets Monday night.

Competitors and coaches will arrive in waves, usually three days before their events, games spokeswoman Barbara Smith said.

The latest arrivals, mostly swimmers, gymnasts and volleyball competitors, had little time to settle into the athletes' village on the University of Washington campus before being whisked to their venues for some early practice. But there was a little time devoted to sightseeing, munching snacks and shopping.

An early favorite at the village was the Pacific Northwest pizza, topped with salmon and pesto. Trading of national teams pins began immediately.

A local hotel matched athletes with townspeople in an "adopt-an-athlete" program.

During the 17 days of competition, 186 medal events will be staged at Seattle, Tacoma, Spokane, Kennewick, Federal Way, Enumclaw and Redmond.

With a theme of "Uniting the World's Best," the games feature a top eight format — the best American and Soviet participants, plus the six best athletes or teams from around the world in each sport or event. Invitations were issued by the organizing committees for each sport.

That guarantees the Americans a slot in sports in which they don't shine, such as team handball, and the Soviets a guaranteed spot in such sports as baseball in which they probably wouldn't have qualified, Smith said.

The competition will be conducted with a finals-only format, with only one, medal-deciding heat for each event. Team competitions will include preliminary round-robin play leading to single-elimination play.

"This is the ultimate format for the athlete," six-time Olympic gold medalist Carl Lewis said. "You can focus on your best performance and your best times."

Jackie Joyner-Kersee, heptathlon gold medalist in the 1988 Olympics and the 1986 Goodwill Games, added, "I don't think there is any better way to compete than to have the world's top athletes go up against one another."

Turner is calling the games "cable television's largest original programming event ever" and figures a potential U.S. audience of 42 million homes and a worldwide audience of 1 billion, many in the Soviet Union. Producer Tony Verna called it "global telepresence."

Turner Broadcasting has scheduled 86 hours of programming, including 68 hours during prime time in the Eastern United States.

Opening ceremonies Saturday night at Washington's Husky Stadium have been put together by the same experts who staged the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics ceremonies. It will include former President Ronald Reagan, entertainers Kenny Rogers and rap star Young M.C., massed choirs, Indian dancers, and actor-strongman Arnold Schwarzenegger, who will represent President Bush.

Competition begins Friday, including women's volleyball at the Spokane Coliseum, men's and women's swimming events at the King County Aquatics Center in nearby Federal Way, and men's gymnastics team events.

Turner, who lost $24 million in the inaugural games in Moscow four years ago, figures this year's loss will be at least $10 million. By the time the next games are staged in Moscow and Leningrad in 1994, he expects to erase the deficit.

Boxer's identity uncertain

PENSACOLA, Fla. (AP) — The Florida State Athletic Commission is investigating charges that the boxer knocked out by Olympic silver madalist Roy Jones Jr. on Saturday is not the man he said he was.

Jones thought he beat Texas junior middleweight champion Derwin Richards. But Richards was quoted today as saying it wasn't him.

"I was definitely not there," Richards, a security guard at a Houston correctional facility, said in a telephone interview published by the Pensacola News Journal. "I would like to fight Roy Jones, but that wasn't me fighting."

His manager, Willie Savannah, also of Houston, backed up his fighter. He said he didn't know anything about the bout held in this Florida Panhandle city, Jones' hometown.

The fight is being investigated by the Florida State Athletic Commission, said Shelly Bradshaw, assistant to the panel's executive director.

Seasonal summer fare best cooked outdoors

By Jacques Pepin
N.Y. Times News Service

The most sensible way to cook is to base menus on what is available in the market and what is seasonal. To prepare for a meal, I go to the market and look for specials and seasonal foods of good quality that are reasonably priced.

Also, since I have my own garden and grow a great variety of herbs, I prepare dishes at this time of year that showcase them. They are plentiful, in peak condition, and I make great use of them in my cooking.

At home or at the beach, this is also the best time of year to grill outdoors. I built a stone-and-cement barbecue pit years ago and make wood-burning fires in it occasionally to cook for large outdoor parties.

BUT FOR EVERYDAY use and small parties, I use a hooded gas grill with a burner on the side that is on my back porch. Cooking outside helps keep the house cooler and there is a casualness and freedom out of doors that is compatible with straightforward summer fare.

Use either wood charcoal or gas for grilling. Conventional briquets, a petroleum derivative, can impart an unpleasant flavor. If you must use them, be sure they have burned until they are white and have stopped smoking before you put the meat on.

The flan of green herbs is a variation on a fines herbes omelet recipe. This version, using only four eggs for six people, is less caloric.

It is served lukewarm or at room temperature and makes use of every herb in my garden.

FOR SIX SERVINGS, it contains — in addition to four cups of spinach — a loosely packed six-cup mixture of sorrel, cilantro, parsley, chervil, chives, basil, tarragon, oregano and arugula. This mixture of herbs and greens can be altered.

Bear in mind that certain herbs — tarragon, basil and cilantro, for example — have a stronger flavor and should be used in smaller quantities than milder herbs like parsley or chives.

The sauce served with the flan is a refreshing puree of raw tomatoes flavored with a little olive oil and vinegar. It is equally good served over poached fish or mixed with pasta.

The grilled spicy beef roast came about as the result of my search for less expensive main dishes. For this recipe, you can use a piece of chuck eye roast or a shoulder underblade roast (part of the same chuck and shoulder area).

ALTHOUGH BOTH OF these cuts are usually for braising or roasting, cooked this way they are juicy and tender and much less expensive than top round, sirloin tip or shell. This small roast is actually a large steak that you carve on the bias into thin slices.

If you don't have access to a barbecue grill, the meat can be cooked in a skillet. Brown it on top of the stove over high heat for about one and a half minutes on each side, then place it in a preheated 425-degree oven for about 15 minutes to cook a one-and-a-half-inch-thick steak medium rare (adjust time if thicker or thinner).

The swiss chard gratin is made with young chard (half-inch wide ribs), so both the ribs and leaves can be used. These tender ribs don't require peeling like the more mature, thicker ribs available later in the season.

If the green Swiss chard is not available, use the bright red Swiss chard the same way. Both are good in gratins like this one, or sauteed with oil and garlic.

To complete this summer meal, serve a seasonal fruit — cherries, perhaps — for dessert. Accompany the meal with a glass of cold Cote de Provence rose wine.

Spicey tomato, herb sauce tops flan

N.Y. Times News Service

FLAN OF GREEN HERBS WITH FRESH TOMATO SAUCE

FOR FLAN:
6 cups (lightly packed) mixed herbs and greens (sorrel, cilantro, parsley, chervil, chives, basil, tarragon, oregano and arugula)
4 cups (loosely packed) spinach leaves
1 tablespoon unsalted butter
2 tablespoons olive oil
1 small leek, thoroughly washed and coarsely chopped (1½ cups)
¼ cup pignola nuts
4 eggs
¼ cup milk
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
FOR FRESH TOMATO SAUCE:
2 pounds ripe tomatoes (about 4), peeled, seeded and chopped fine in a food processor (2½ cups)
1 tablespoon jalapeno pepper, chopped fine (optional)
1 teaspoon salt
½ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
1½ tablespoons vinegar
¼ cup olive oil

To make the flan, first wash the herbs, greens and spinach thoroughly and drain well. Chop coarsely.

Preheat oven to 375 degrees.

In a large stainless steel saucepan melt butter with olive oil. Add leek and saute over medium to high heat for 2 minutes. Add nuts and continue sauteeing another minute. Stir in herbs and spinach and cook for 3 minutes until soft and tender.

Break the eggs into a bowl and whisk with the milk until blended. Add the mixture to the saucepan with the salt and pepper and stir for about 15 seconds, until semi-solid. Place in the oven for 10 minutes.

To make the tomato sauce, mix the tomatoes, jalapeno, salt, pepper, vinegar and olive oil in a bowl and set aside until serving time.

Cut the hot flan into wedges and serve with the sauce.

Yield: 6 servings. Preparation time: 10 minutes. Cooking time: 16 minutes.

SPICY GRILLED BEEF ROAST

1 teaspoon dried rosemary
1 teaspoon dried oregano
¼ teaspoon cayenne pepper
½ teaspoon salt
1 2-pound beef roast or large steak (chuck eye or shoulder underblade) 1½ inches thick

Preheat a charcoal or gas grill.

In a small bowl mix the rosemary, oregano, pepper and salt, crushing the rosemary with your fingers. Spread the seasoning mixture on both sides of the roast.

Place the roast on the grill and cook, covered, about 8 to 10 inches from heat for about 8 minutes on each side for medium-rare meat.

Transfer the meat to a platter and let rest in a warm place for 10 minutes before carving. To serve, cut on a slant into very thin slices. Arrange on individual plates and serve with the Swiss chard gratin.

Yield: 6 servings. Preparation time: 5 minutes. Cooking time: 16 minute.

SWISS CHARD GRATIN

1½ pounds young (2-inch wide ribs) Swiss chard, ribs and leaves cut into 2-inch pieces and throughly washed
1 cup grated Swiss cheese
½ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon freshly ground black pepper
3 tablespoons olive oil

Bring ½ inch of water to a boil in a large saucepan. Add the Swiss chard, cover, and bring back to a boil. Boil for 5 to 6 minutes, until tender. Most of the moisture will have evaporated.

Arrange the Swiss chard in a gratin dish and mix in the cheese, salt, pepper and olive oil. (The recipe can be prepared to this point a few hours ahead.)

When ready to cook, preheat oven to 375 degrees and place the dish in the oven for 15 minutes. Serve with the spicy grilled beef roast.

Yield: 6 servings. Preparation time: 10 minutes. Cooking time: About 20 minutes.

Preparing fish takes care

By PIERRE FRANEY
N.Y. Times News Service

Certain lean, meaty fish, like halibut, swordfish and marlin, require utmost care in preparation to prevent dryness.

If you barbecue or broil them, frequent basting is necessary. Sauteeing is less risky, but you must check frequently to avoid even the slightest overcooking.

In this recipe for halibut with lemon sauce, I take the safest route, poaching. This method leaves the flesh moist and infused with flavor.

The steaks are placed in a large skillet and covered with water and a little milk. The cooking liquid is seasoned with black peppercorns, bay leaf, thyme, cayenne, onions, parsley sprigs, salt and pepper. Total cooking time is about four to five minutes, depending on the thickness of the fillets.

The quick lemon sauce is made with a little bit of the cooking liquid, sauteed shallots, butter, olive oil and lemon juice. The result is a tasty and healthful seafood dish.

As an accompaniment, I suggest a cauliflower mimosa. Most people associate mimosa with a flower or a tropical drink. In cooking, a mimosa refers to a salad that contains chopped hard-boiled eggs.

The most common mimosa is made with warm cubed potatoes, artichoke hearts, green beans and crumbled hard-boiled eggs. My variation is made with warm cauliflower florets, eggs and parsley.

POACHED HALIBUT STEAKS WITH LEMON SAUCE

4 halibut steaks, each about 1 inch thick and weighing about ½ pound
¼ cup milk
6 peppercorns
1 bay leaf
2 sprigs fresh thyme or ½ teaspoon dried
⅛ teaspoon cayenne pepper
¼ cup sliced onion
4 sprigs fresh parsley
Salt and freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons finely chopped shallots
2 tablespoons olive oil
2 tablespoons fresh lemon juice
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley

Arrange the steaks in a skillet large enough to hold them in one layer. Add water to cover. Add the milk, peppercorns, bay leaf, thyme, cayenne, onion, parsley sprigs, salt and pepper. Bring to a simmer and cook gently 4 to 5 minutes. Cooking time will depend on the thickness of the fish. Cook only until the fish flakes easily when tested with a fork.

Heat 1 tablespoon of the butter in a saucepan and add the shallots. Cook briefly, stirring. Remove ¼ cup of the cooking liquid from the fish and add it to the shallots. Bring to a boil and simmer about 3 minutes or until reduced by half. Add the remaining butter, the olive oil and lemon juice. Bring to a simmer. Add the parsley, salt and pepper.

Drain the fish and serve hot with the sauce.

CAULIFLOWER MIMOSA

1 head cauliflower, about 1¾ pounds
Salt to taste
¼ cup milk
2 tablespoons butter
1 hard-boiled egg, peeled and chopped fine
Freshly ground pepper to taste
2 tablespoons finely chopped parsley

Trim away and discard the leaves of the cauliflower. Break the vegetable into florets. Add the pieces to a saucepan and cover with water. Add salt and the milk. Bring to a boil and simmer for 10 minutes or until tender. Do not overcook. Drain and keep warm.

Heat the butter in a nonstick skillet and add the cauliflower pieces. Toss and stir until the pieces start to color. Add the egg, salt, pepper and parsley. Toss and stir. Serve immediately.

Fried chicken is microwave quick

Declare your independence from day-long picnic preparations, yet treat your family to chicken so crisp they'll swear it was fried. Your treat is its 13-minute microwave cooking time.

RUB-A-DUB MICROWAVE-FRIED CHICKEN

2 cups crisp rice cereal
¼ cup toasted wheat germ
½ teaspoon Italian seasoning
½ teaspoon paprika
¼ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons margarine or butter
1 2½- to 3-pound broiler-fryer chicken, cut up

Place rice cereal in a plastic bag; use a rolling pin to crush. Add wheat germ, Italian seasoning, paprika and salt to crushed cereal in bag. Shake to mix.

In a bowl cook margarine or butter, uncovered, on 100 percent power (high) 15 to 45 seconds or until melted. Rinse chicken pieces. Pat dry. Brush chicken pieces with melted margarine or butter. Put chicken, 1 or 2 pieces at a time, into bag with crushed cereal mixture; shake to coat.

Place a microwave-safe rack in a 12x7½x2-inch microwave-safe baking dish. Arrange chicken on rack with the meatiest portions toward the outside of the dish. Sprinkle any remaining crushed cereal mixture on top of the chicken. Cover loosely with waxed paper. Cook on high 12 to 14 minutes or until tender, giving dish a half-turn after 8 minutes. Melting chocolate can be tricky

At times it will "seize".

Here's how to keep it smooth:

1. Melt small chocolate pieces in a double boiler, never over direct heat.
2. Do not cover; condensed water will drip onto chocolate and cause it to "seize" — pull together and toughen.
3. Use low heat; do not allow chocolate to go beyond 120 degrees.

'Healthy Dividends' helps balance dietary fat

By Mary MacVean

NEW YORK (AP) — Even if you pay attention to dietary recommendations, it's often hard to translate them to the shopping cart or the dinner table.

Much of the advice these days focuses on fat and on the many diseases associated with eating too much of it. So it makes sense to learn what foods contain lots of it and steer clear of them.

The National Dairy Council recently introduced a plan it calls "Healthy Dividends" to help people do that. Based on height, sex and weight, a person sets a fat "budget" that must be lived within to maintain weight.

For example, a 30-year-old man who weighs 170 pounds would be budgeted for 95 grams of fat a day; a 30-year-old woman who weighs 135 pounds would be budgeted for 75 grams.

To lose weight, adjust the budget. It's an alternative to calorie counting.

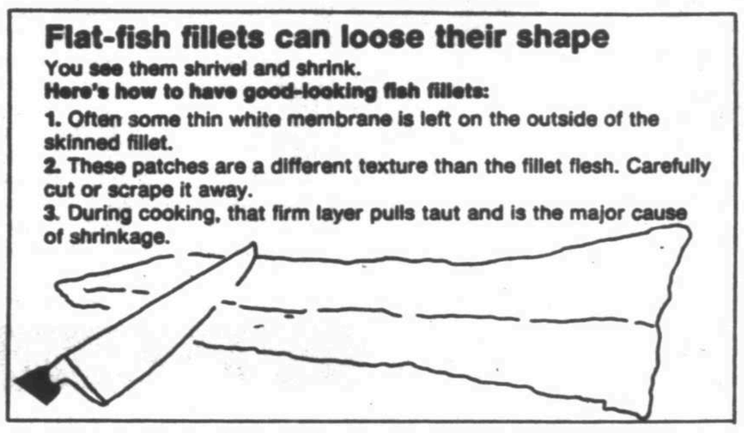
"You balance fat just as you do your checkbook," says Anita Owen, senior vice president of the Dairy Council's nutrition education and research.

Of course, portions count, too. Even foods with no fat cannot be eaten with total abandon. But a gram of fat has about twice the calories (9) as a gram of protein or carbohydrate.

CURRENT DIETARY recommendations are for diets with no more than 30 percent of calories from fat, with 10 percent or less from saturated fats. But surveys by the U.S. Department of Agriculture show that adult women get an average 37 percent of their calories from fat, 13 percent from saturated fats, and that adult men get 36 percent of their calories from fat, with 14 percent saturated.

Many people are confused about dietary advice, says Nancy Wellman, president of the American Dietetic Association. "The key to healthy eating is balance, variety and moderation."

Anyone can do this without a special program; it just takes work to figure it all out. "Healthy Dividends" may help some people learn how to eat and stay healthy. And most specialists say exercise is just as important as the foods that are eaten.



Under a fat budget, no food is forbidden so long as the total intake of fat doesn't exceed what's budgeted. So, a person can plan for a steak or a dish of ice cream by making up for them with low-fat foods the rest of the day.

"You can have your cake and eat it too if you budget the total amount of fat within your overall diet," says Doris Derelian, a behavior specialist who helped develop the program.

The following recipe is provided by the National Dairy Council.

BROILED SALMON STEAK WITH CITRUS BUTTER

1½ pounds salmon steaks
1 tablespoon butter, melted
¼ teaspoon salt
⅛ teaspoon ground black pepper
Citrus Butter (recipe follows)
2 cups mixed salad greens

Preheat broiler to hot. Place salmon steaks on a rack in broiler pan; brush both sides with melted butter; sprinkle with salt and black pepper. Broil 3 to 4 inches from heat until fish is firm but still moist, about 4 minutes per side. Top each portion with 1 slice Citrus Butter; broil until butter just begins to melt, about 30 seconds. Serve over salad greens; garnish with lemon, lime and orange slices, if desired. Makes 4 servings.

CITRUS BUTTER

2 tablespoons finely chopped grapefruit
1 tablespoon finely chopped orange
1 tablespoon finely chopped lemon
1 tablespoon finely chopped lime
¼ cup (½ stick) butter, softened
2 teaspoons chopped fresh tarragon leaves or ½ teaspoon dried tarragon, crushed ½ teaspoon grated fresh ginger
¼ teaspoon salt
Dash ground black pepper

Place grapefruit, orange, lemon and lime in a fine strainer; drain well; discard juice. In a small mixing bowl place butter, tarragon, ginger, salt and black pepper; beat with an electric mixer until fluffy.

Stir in fruit pulp; drain off any juice that doesn't incorporate into the butter. On a sheet of plastic wrap shape butter into a 2-inch log; cover with plastic wrap. Refrigerate until firm, 1 to 2 hours. Cut into 4 slices. Makes 4 servings, about ⅓ cup.

Nutrition information per serving, including Citrus Butter: 380 cal., 25 g fat.

One way to celebrate summer is with nutritious strawberries served with whipped dips for a light and festive snack, hors d'oeuvre or after-dinner treat.

Celebrate summertime with a favorite strawberry dessert

By John DeMers
Associated Press

The European settlers who reached the New World had always celebrated summer with strawberries, but they'd never tasted anything like the large, juicy, bursting berries the Indians taught them to adore.

From the Pilgrims' entry into Massachusetts, where they "regaled themselves" with a berry they called "fragaria virginiana," they forgot about those puny predecessors Europeans had devoured since the days of Virgil, Ovid and Pliny.

The colonists loved these strawberries so much — and spread their fame back to the Continent with such zeal — that within a few years most of the old varieties had been replaced by berries from the New World.

Today, Americans still celebrate summer with a host of strawberry desserts, some as simple as strawberries and cream, some as native as strawberry shortcake, some as sophisticated as strawberry crepes. Good cooks have learned it doesn't matter much how you serve strawberries in season. They'll be a hit every time.

American strawberry growing has touched most parts of the nation at one time or another, starting about 1800 between Boston and Baltimore. With better shipping available, the industry shifted a bit farther afield, ranging from Chesapeake Bay to Michigan and Illinois.

By the turn of this century, strawberries were grown with great success not only down through Tennessee and as far south as Florida but as far west as the Santa Clara Valley of California and the Pacific Northwest. Although the season kicks off in the spring, early summer usually brings the lowest prices, thanks to the tons upon tons produced in California.

The following recipe for Strawberry Cake is a French-inspired delight.

STRAWBERRY CAKE

3 eggs
2 cups all-purpose flour
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 tablespoon water
¾ pound strawberries, stem and stem ends removed Vinegar
1 teaspoon strawberry liqueur
Whipped cream

Beat the sugar with the eggs. Slowly add the flour, baking powder and water. Mix well. Wash the strawberries in water to which a tiny bit of vinegar has been added. Drain the berries and set them on a paper towel to dry.

Powder the strawberries with flour and shake off the excess. Add to the cake batter along with the strawberry liqueur; mix well. Pour into a buttered 9-inch square cake pan and bake in a preheated 400-degree oven for 40 minutes. Cool the cake, cut and serve with topping of whipped cream.

DEAR ABBY

Birthday prompts disappointment

By Abigail Van Buren

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: Well, it happened again. Our son's birthday has come and gone without any acknowledgment from the grandparents on my husband's side. (My parents always remember.) How do I deal with the pain it causes Junior when these grandparents forget his birthday? It's not as though they didn't know it was coming. Last Christmas, I gave each member of my husband's family a large calendar with all the family members' birthdays and anniversaries circled. And just this last Sunday, my husband's parents stopped by for a visit, and I reminded them that Wednesday would be Junior's birthday. When they said they remembered, we felt relieved that our calendar had worked.

Well, Junior didn't even get a card from them. (They always give their daughter's children money or gifts on their birthdays. She makes a point of letting us know about it.)

What should I tell Junior when he asks how come these grandparents didn't give him anything? — BIRTHDAY BOY'S MOM

DEAR MOM: Had you not primed Junior to feel that he had a gift coming, he wouldn't feel the pain of disappointment. And if you want to protect Junior from the pain of disappointment, you would be wise to place less emphasis on gift-giving, which is apparently very important to YOU.

I suspect that your having given marked calendars to family members to "help them remember" special occasions might have been more resented than appreciated. Now would be an ideal time to teach Junior that nobody "owes" anybody a gift — so he should not expect one.

DEAR ABBY: My hand is shaking so much I can hardly write this. Last night I had a dream that was so real I thought it had actually happened. I had the wildest, most heavenly lovemaking session with a fellow I had a secret longing for in high school.

Abby, I'm 35 years old, happily married and the mother of three great kids, and I never even dated this guy who appeared in my dream. I haven't even seen him since high school and have no idea where he is. What is wrong with me?

I love my husband very much. He's the only man I have ever slept with, and it never even entered my mind to have sex with anyone else. Am I losing my mind? Why would I dream of anything so bizarre? It all seemed so natural and right in my dream. I didn't feel a bit guilty until I woke up. I probably should confess this to my priest, but I'm too embarrassed. Please help me. — ALL SHOOK UP

DEAR SHOOK: Don't feel guilty. You are not responsible for your dreams — only your actions. Thoughts of this long-forgotten high school crush have been deeply buried in your subconscious, and for some unknown reason were awakened. You've nothing to confess. Don't give it another thought.

CONFIDENTIAL TO NEEDS TO KNOW IN SHERMAN OAKS: I would be in no hurry to marry a man who absolutely refuses to take a blood test. Instead of trying to find out where couples can marry without a blood test, find out why he's so opposed to taking one.

Family Reading Challenge 1990

Rhyme Time

Choose one story from today's newspaper that interests you. Read it carefully to make sure you understand the information. Now use the information from the story to write a rap song. Then perform the rap song for your family.

If "rapping" doesn't interest you, try a poem or limerick instead.

And if you are really feeling creative, try to set the words of your poem to music! Use a familiar song, like "Oh Susanna" or "My Country 'Tis of Thee."

Have the entire family write a rap song!

Rex: Here's a limerick Rita and I made up about reading:

If you want to grow up to be smart,
You need to read books from the start.
You'll have more in your head
If you share what you read,
So have your whole family take part.

The latest Family Reading Challenge winner is SARAH ADAMS.

Sarah will receive a $15 gift certificate to Pages & Prints, #40 Plaza Center.

The Family Reading Challenge is a nationwide program to encourage family reading. Young readers ages 5-12 are required to read at least two newspaper articles, two books and two magazine articles during the summer and to discuss what they have read with parents, guardians or other adults.

Children are then eligible for the Reporter-Telegram's weekly drawing, as well as one that is being held nationwide and includes computers and bicycles. The rules are simple and appear on the entry forms which are available at the Reporter-Telegram.

Healthful eating starts when shopping

CNS Photo

Look for healthful foods when making selections.

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Healthful eating starts when you shop for family groceries. As you wheel your cart through the aisles, look for the most healthful choices in each department.

FRESH PRODUCE

■ For salad making, choose dark green, leafy vegetables; they're high in vitamin A.

■ You need vitamin C every day. Citrus fruits, strawberries, peppers, broccoli, brussels sprouts and cabbage are good sources.

■ Know which fruits and vegetables hide calories and fat. Winter squash, corn and potatoes have slightly more calories. Avocados have more calories than other produce items because of the monounsaturated fat they contain.

DAIRY

■ Low-fat cheeses are tastier and more varied than ever.

■ Try light cream cheese and sour cream.

■ Compare labels when buying yogurt. Some brands are made with whole milk (32 calories per ounce); others with low-fat or non-fat milk (20 calories per ounce). Some fruit yogurts are made with artificial sweeteners.

MEAT-SEAFOOD

■ Look for Meat and Poultry Nutri-Facts posters at the meat case. They'll guide you to the leanest choices.

■ Buy Select grade beef; it has less marbling fat throughout the muscle and less visible fat than Prime or Choice.

■ Compare nutrition labels on ground turkey. Some brands have almost as much fat as lean ground beef.

■ Experiment with fish, an excellent lean, protein-rich food. Remember that ready-to-cook products such as breaded fish fillets may have hidden fat.

■ Choose fresh poultry pieces with skin removed. Most of the fat in poultry is in or just beneath the skin.

BAKERY

■ Buy breads that list whole grain flour, not just wheat flour, as the first ingredient; these are generally higher in fiber.

■ For rolls, try bagels, pita bread and English muffins, which have only 1 to 2 grams of fat per servings.

PACKAGED FOODS

Take a little extra time and read ingredient and nutrition labels; they'll lead you to the most nutritious buys.

■ Opt for no-salt-added vegetables, water-packed or juice-packed fruits.

■ As you hunt for lower-calorie frozen dinners or entrees, look for those that have: 300 calories or less per serving; no more than 30 percent of calories from fat; 100 milligrams cholesterol or less; 1,000 milligrams sodium or less.

■ Buy plain frozen vegetables more frequently than those packed in sauces.

■ Of all frozen desserts, fruit and juice bars are lowest in calories and fat.

■ Oat bran is not the only healthful choice. Most cereals range from 1 to 3 grams fiber per serving with some bran and multigrain varieties at 5 to 7 grams. Lowest in sodium: puffed wheat or rice or shredded wheat. Lowest in calories: puffed unsweetened cereals.

Catfish popularity reaches 'top five' among seafoods

Associated Press

NEW YORK — When seafood is mentioned, usually shrimp, crab or lobster comes to mind. But, for the first time, catfish has entered the "top five" most popular seafoods among Americans, according to the National Fisheries Institute in Arlington, Va.

Lee Weddig, the group's executive vice president, says the growth of American aquaculture — or fish farming — is a factor in the increase in catfish consumption.

Aquaculture has allowed American producers to raise healthier, more economically-priced catfish on farms with controlled enviroments, the Institute says.

Consumption of Alaska pollock has also increased, Weddig says. Alaska pollock is the basic raw material in surimi seafood, a form of "imitation" shellfish.

Turkey makes tasty, low-fat fajitas

By Nancy Byal
Associated Press

Five years ago, most of us couldn't even pronounce "fajita," let alone attempt the meat-strip-filled tortillas at home. Now they're good sellers at family restaurants, and innovative home cooks are coming up with new versions. This low-fat adaptation starts with skinless, boneless turkey breast that is stir-fried in just 1 tablespoon of oil. The Oriental sauce carries lots of flavor, allowing you to skip the sour cream, guacamole, or other high-fat toppings.

STIR-FRY TURKEY FAJITAS

4 10-inch flour tortillas
¼ cup sodium-reduced soy sauce
2 tablespoons sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon cornstarch
¼ teaspoon crushed red pepper
Non-stick spray coating
1 medium onion, chopped
3 medium green, red or yellow sweet peppers, cut into thin strips
3 cloves garlic, minced
1 tablespoon olive oil or cooking oil
12 ounces skinned, boned turkey breast, cut into thin strips

Wrap tortillas in foil; warm in 300-degree oven. Combine soy sauce, sugar, lemon juice, cornstarch and crushed pepper. Spray a skillet with non-stick spray coating. Stir-fry onion, sweet peppers and garlic in skillet over medium heat 3 to 4 minutes; remove from skillet.

Add 1 tablespoon oil to skillet. Stir-fry turkey over medium heat 3 to 4 minutes or until no longer pink. Add soy sauce mixture. Cook and stir until bubbly. Add sweet pepper mixture; heat through. Spoon onto tortillas; roll up.
