Republican women hear rare program

Gramm is 'confident'

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, spoke of balancing the budget and licking the Democrats as he addressed the 15th biennial convention of the Texas Federation of Republican Women Saturday evening.

Gramm, who has stayed in the national limelight with the passage of the Gramm-Rudman bill in the U.S. Senate — a five year emergency plan to put the nation in the black by 1990 — told the group of about 600 people at the Midland Center that he "was confident" the measure would pass in the U.S. House as well, where it is currently in debate.

"Every special interest group in America is opposed to this bill," said Gramm. "Every group that's out there trying to get something for nothing from the federal government is banging on the doors of U.S. congressmen urging them to vote against the bill.

"But when the U.S. Senate voted in September, we won 75 to 24," he added. "Both of (House Speaker) Tip O'Neal's senators including Ted Kennedy voted for the bill."

Gramm blamed the Democratic party for the huge national deficit.

"The Democratic party has never been the party of the working people," he said. "They are the party of the non-working people."

Gramm referred to the Republican party as "the party of the forgotten people of the 1950's, '60's and '70's who do the work and pay the taxes."

The freshman Texas senator listed a balanced budget as a promise that was not kept by the Reagan administration.

Candidates show style

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Assistant City Editor

Three distinct styles of campaigning were modeled by the three announced candidates for governor on the GOP ticket before about 600 persons attending a Saturday luncheon of the Texas Federation of Republican Women at Midland Center.

Former Gov. Bill Clements was clad in his familiar coat of brashness, U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffer showed his candor and former congressman Kent Hance demonstrated his eye for humor during a rare joint appearance. Each gave a short talk and, as agreed to last week, spoke no ill of each other but concentrated their needling remarks toward incumbent Gov. Mark White.

Loeffler, who represents Midland in his 21st District, has served in Congress since 1978 and is the third-ranking Republican in the House. Looking back to 1981 when Ronald Reagan took over the presidency, Loeffler recalled the skeptical remarks about the tax cut program. Now, he said, "People say, 'My gosh, the Reagan Revolution is working,' and it does work."

It is Mark White's "lack of leadership and lack of commitment to excellence that make me want to return to Texas to bring the Reagan Revolution home. That's why I'm running for governor," said Loeffler.

He criticized White's fee hikes and manner in running the state prison system, which were echoed by Hance and Clements.

Statewide water package hinges on voters' decision

By MARK LEWIS
Staff Writer

Texas legislators agonized for months before agreeing on a comprehensive statewide water plan last session, but all that work could go down the drain if Texas voters fail to approve two constitutional amendments on the Nov. 5 ballot authorizing more than $1 billion in bonds for water projects.

"The water package doesn't go into effect unless the water amendments pass," said Midland's Rep. Tom Craddick, who sponsored the House version of the plan and helped work out a compromise with the Senate.

"The Texas Water Plan is a must," said Winston Barclay, the Midland-based manager of Texas Electric Service Co.'s western district and who is leading a local Water for Texas' Future committee to drum up support for the amendments.

"The plan's not going to go very far without the funding mechanism, and that's what propositions 1 and 2 are," he said.

The amendments have the support of Gov. Mark White, Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis; of all three Republican gubernatorial candidates; and of both mayoral candidates in Houston, where voters have traditionally opposed water-project bond issues as plots to transport their water to parched West Texas.

At issue is an impending statewide water shortage which has nothing to do with the recent drought. According to estimates by the Texas Water Commission, the state's economic growth will cause its demand for water to exceed its supply within a few decades if current trends continue.

■ A look at all the amendments — Page 4A

A mostly arid state cannot support a vastly larger population and industrial base without strict conservation efforts and maximum use of water resources, and the water plan's supporters feel voter approval of the amendments will be the first step toward assuring future growth.

"The Chamber feels like it's a key ingredient to our future," said Gregg Holmes, chairman of the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Government Affairs Committee.

But some fear the bonds will be a boondoggle for upstream developers, who may choke the state's waterways with unnecessary pork-barrel projects and leave coastal bays and estuaries with shrinking water levels.

"Projects can be premature, entirely unnecessary, inefficient, ill-designed and environmentally and financially disastrous, and yet still be allowed at the discretion of the Texas Water Commission," Audubon Society spokeswoman DeDe Armentrout told the Associated Press.

But the Society is the only major organization to actively oppose the amendments (the Sierra Club is staying neutral). In fact, the amendments face so little organized opposition that proponents are worried about voter apathy toward a non-controversial election with no statewide political races to excite interest.

"Voters are just not taking enough interest," fretted Barclay, and Holmes echoed his apprehension.

"One of the things I'm most concerned about is a complacent attitude setting in," Holmes said. "We can't take this election for granted."

Midland and West Texas have much to gain if the bonds are passed, Holmes said, because they could pay for construction of a pipeline to transport water from the yet-to-be-built Stacy Dam reservoir.

Amendment 1 would authorize the issuance of $980 million in bonds for water development, transportation, wastewater treatment, water quality, flood control and water-supply projects, and a $250 million state insurance fund to guarantee water bonds issued by smaller cities and other government units which have trouble attracting a good credit rating.

Amendment 2 would authorize $200 million in state bonds for low-interest loans to farmers to encourage conservation among users of water for irrigation.

"These amendments represent a compromise — nobody's coming out a winner," said Holmes.

According to Craddick, the amendments represent the last chance for a comprehensive state water plan to come out of the Legislature for years to come.

Italian warrant issued for Abbas

SIRACUSA, Sicily (AP) — Italian judicial authorities have issued an arrest warrant for PLO official Mohammed Abbas in connection with the hijacking of the Achille Lauro cruise ship, Italian news agencies reported Saturday.

The agency AGI said Abbas was charged with murder, kidnapping, hijacking and transportation and possession of arms and explosives.

Both AGI and the ANSA news agency said the warrant was issued by magistrates in Siracusa who are investigating the hijacking together with prosecutors in Genoa.

The prosecutors office in Siracusa was closed for the day and repeated attempts by The Associated Press to reach prosecutors there and in Rome and Genoa were unsuccessful.

The United States has formally charged Abbas, a member of the Palestine Liberation Organization executive committee, with masterminding the hijacking.

Abbas also is leader of the Palestine Liberation Front, one of the eight main groups under the PLO umbrella, to which the four men who seized the ship Oct. 7 said they belonged.

In Washington, State Department spokesman Pete Martinez refused to comment on the reports.

AGI and state-run RAI radio also reported Saturday that a seventh suspect had been arrested in connection with the hijacking, in which a 69-year-old American passenger, Leon Klinghoffer, was shot to death.

The news reports did not identify the suspect and said only that he had been arrested in Genoa. Genoa prosecutors could not be reached Saturday night to confirm the reports.

The four hijackers remain in custody, along with an Arab arrested in Genoa in September on other charges and now suspected in the hijacking. News agencies said a sixth suspect was arrested several days ago in Rome.

Warrants also have been issued for two unidentifed fugitives.

Hijacker allegedly in Hussein's care

WASHINGTON — Mohammed Abul Abbas, the Palestine Liberation Front leader who allegedly masterminded the hijacking of the Achille Lauro, arrived in Iraq late last week and has been offered the personal protection of Iraqi President Sadaam Hussein's elite commando units, U.S. intelligence sources disclosed.

"He is there as the personal guest of Sadaam Hussein," a key U.S. official said.

Perhaps even more startling, they revealed that Egypt was working closely with Iraq while the hijacking was under way to see that Abbas and his men would not be hurt.

Iraqi Vice President Tahar Yasin Ramadan secretly arrived in Cairo on Oct. 8, the day before the four Palestinians who had hijacked the Italian cruise ship surrendered to PLO officials, "in order to coordinate Iraqi steps" with Egypt and with PLO leader Yasir Arafat, the U.S. sources said.

The officials also provided new information on Abbas' link to he hijacking, including transcripts of conversations with the four Palestinians and a taped speech by Abbas, at the close of a secret PLF meeting in Tunis on Sept. 10, in which Abbas vowed to orchestrate spectacular terrorist acts.

Abbas, who was travelling on an Iraqi diplomatic passport when he was permitted to leave Italy, has had a close association with the Iraqi Government since the late 1970s when he quit Ahmed Jibril's pro-Syrian Front For the Piberathon of Palestine (PFLP) and founded the pro-Arafat PLF.

Nizar Hamdoon, Iraq's Ambassador to the United States, told The Hearst Newspapers: "Obviously if he (Abbas) came, he would be welcome. We don't consider him behind this one. We don't consider him with the extbemist froups like (George) Habash and the others. We know this man was a mediator."

Please see ABBAS, Page 2A

Abbas helped negotiate an end to the two-day hijacking and was with the four hijackers on an Egyptian jet when U.S. warplanes forced it to land in Sicily on Oct. 11. Egypt said it was trying to deliver the hijackers to PLO headquarters in Tunisia for trial.

Italy angered the United States by allowing Abbas to leave for Yugoslavia nearly two days later. He has since left Yugoslavia, and the PLF has refused to disclose his whereabouts.

Premier-designate Bettino Craxi, whose government fell in the dispute over Abbas' release, has said that Italian judicial authorities determined it did not have sufficient legal grounds to hold Abbas.

Craxi also said Abbas traveled on an Iraqi diplomatic passport and thus was protected by diplomatic immunity.

Earlier Saturday, the Siracusa investigators' probe into Abbas' possible role in the hijacking was revealed when a prosecutor in the Court of Cassation in Rome, Italy's highest criminal court, released a report on whether Genoa or Siracusa had jurisdiction over the accused hijackers.

The report said magistrates in Siracusa were investigating Abbas.

Genoa Deputy Prosecutor Luigi Carli told the news agency ANSA that he was "perplexed" by the Siracusa investigation because "there have not emerged any indications against Abbas" from Genoa's probe.

Genoa has claimed jurisdiction in the hijacking because the Achille Lauro began its cruise there. Siracusa magistrates say they should prosecute the case because the four men accused of hijacking the ship were arrested in Sicily.

The news agency ANSA reported that Siracusa magistrates said that they had received information about Abbas' possible involvement in the hijacking only after he had left the country.

Meanwhile, news agencies quoted another prosecutor in the Genoa investigation, Francesco Meloni, as saying Saturday that the suspect arrested earlier this week in Rome in connection with the hijacking probably had only a "marginal role" in the "preliminary phases" of its planning.

News agencies identified the suspect as Yousef Ali Youseb Esmail. ANSA quoted Meloni as saying, "He's not an important person. He may not have passed through Genoa, but if he did, he had a marginal role."

CAMPAIGN

"ASK WHY Mark White continues to spend and tax as if there is no tomorrow. He gives early release to prisoners as a solution to overcrowded prisons. His answer to water is 'Pass the glass.' And where is Mark White when we're moving forward on two constitutional amendments on water?

"Oh, he's in Honduras for a barbecue and photo session where he finally realizes the importance of Nicaragua to the United States," the congressman continued.

Hance, who represented Midland in his first congressional term when the Tall City was part of his 19th District, started his talk with a joke and ended with one. He recalled recently when he was waiting to give a talk to a Republican women's group and during the business session they raised fees "to get better speakers."

Rather than concentrate on White's flaws, Hance explained why he had taken off his Democratic garments to put on those of the GOP, which he said better reflects his inner philosophy.

He cited the welcome he had received by members of the Republican Party since switching last spring and contended the Republican philosophy "will be the dominant philosophy in Texas. People who want to be true to their philosophy need to be in the Republican Party."

BEFORE MAKING the switch, Hance said he considered staying with the Democrats and seeing if he could make that party turn to the right. But it was his wife, Carol, who pointed out he had tried it unsuccessfully for 10 years while the party seemed to be moving more toward the left.

In 1984, Hance ran for the U.S. Senate in the Democratic primary and narrowly lost in a runoff to Lloyd Doggett. After Doggett lost the general election to Republican Phil Gramm, Hance recalled the Democrat had attacked him for not giving enough support during the election and that some of his workers had joined the Gramm campaign. That was true, said Hance. "I wanted to be free to do what I thought was right."

The state's prison reforms haven't worked, according to Hance. Part of the problem is the farm project isn't being utilized properly. Some of the farm land isn't being used, and in other areas machinery is operated to pick cotton.

"I guarantee you if someone picks cotton all day he won't start a riot at night," he said.

One of the funniest rulings Hance said he has seen came from Attorney General Jim Mattox who ruled "that convicted felons had the right to vote and he ruled it while under indictment. I tell you, ol' Jim was just looking down the road."

In asking for the crowd's support during the campaign, Hance concluded: "If I'm not your first or second choice I want to be your third, because if I'm not your third that means White would have moved ahead and that would be offending me."

As the last to speak, Clements noted that he was the only one of the three who had the experience in running a state government and also had a previous record from which to base his campaign.

Indicating that he expects to win the primary, Clements said the general election will turn into a referendum, comparing his four years in office to those of Mark White. Clements was the first Republican govenor elected in Texas in more than 100 years and White defeated him in 1982.

"PEOPLE WILL HAVE a comparison that they've never had before," Clements said. "I want to ask this governor what happened to the $1 billion surplus when I left office. Who was it said we don't need to increase the gasoline tax or we don't need to increase college tuition or 'I will reduce your utility bills?'

"Have you paid your car license yet? Tax is now spelled F-E-E," said Clements in referring to the increase in gasoline taxes, college tuition, utility bills and car license fees that have occurred since White became governor.

Clements said the state is at a "fork in the road" and it is important who the Republican Party puts in the race against White. "We can't go with an untried hand. We need someone who can defeat White."

And turning to the no pass, no play rule endorsed by White as part of the education reforms, Clements said, "White has flunked the course and I will see that he doesn't play."

State Republican Chairman George Strake concluded the session by asking the TFRW members to "help the candidates stay on the issues and not each other."

GRAMM

"There were a lot of promises made," he said. "And most of them have been kept. This year the inflation rate is the lowest in 27 years. As of last year, nine million Americans have gone back to work — one million of them in Texas."

Gramm also praised Social Security, stating "that despite Claude Pepper and Tip O'Neal, it is once again in the black" and saluted the improvements in the military during the Reagan years, stating that "93 percent of military inductees are now high school graduates and that the average I.Q. is the highest in American history."

"But there is one promise that was not kept," said Gramm, "and that is a balanced budget."

"In the last week of September, we had to vote to raise the national debt ceiling to over $2 trillion to pay off the government's bills," he said. "At one point Jim Wright (D-Texas) said that it was like a family with bills due and that no respectable family could refuse to pay its bills.

"I said that's where the analogy ends," said Gramm. "All respectable families try to pay their bills, but when they run deficits, they sit down around the kitchen table and they call in the credit cards, get out the butcher knife and cut up the cards.

"I decided I was going to give the U.S. Senate the chance to call in the credit cards," said Gramm of the Balanced Budget Act.

Gramm was invited by the TFRW to present the annual "Ten Most Outstanding Women Awards" — a tradition started by former Sen. John Tower, his predecessor.

Gramm acknowledged the importance of the women in the Republican party.

"Before I became a Republican, I sensed that women were important in the party," he said. "What I found in serving in the U.S. Senate is that women are the foundation of the Republican party."

Named for the annual award were Jan Patterson, Jane Berberich, Pat Berry, Beulah Childress, Natalie Kern, Rickey Thompson, Fran Chiles, Ruth Tanzey, Martha Weisend and Gwen Clarkston Shea.

Also acknowledged at the ceremonies were Win and Lou Brown, a Midland couple, who received a special presentation.

Tropical storm moving toward Texas coast

HOUSTON (AP) — Tropical storm Juan was creeping closer to the Texas coastline Saturday, but weather forecasters predicted the late-season storm would bring only heavy rains and gusty winds to land.

Jim Nelson, meterologist at the National Weather Service Center in Galveston, said Juan is moving west "slow and erratically" at about 5 mph in the Gulf of Mexico.

"It's hard to tell how much rain it will bring once it hits land," Nelson said. "They're very unpredictable."

But Gil Clark, a specialist with the National Hurricane Center in Coral Gables, Fla., still cautioned that Juan could be nasty.

"It could bring some gale-force winds to the Texas coast by Saturday night) that would cause some problems with beach erosion and rain," Clark said. "The big problem right now is marine interests."

The hurricane center issued a gale watch at noon for Brownsville, Texas, to the mouth of the Mississippi River. It also advised all small craft from Apalachicola, Fla., to Brownsville to remain in port.

Officials in Brownsvill said they had taken a few precautions due to the tropical storm.

"We closed two beaches because the tide is up to the sand," said Darla Peters, dispatcher for the Cameron County Sheriff's Department. "We're warning the swimmers not to swim."

The two beaches, Andy Bowie and Boca Chica, are on either side of the ship channel in Brownsville, she said.

Juan, the 10th named storm of the 1985 Atlantic hurricane season, developed in the western Gulf of Mexico several hundred miles off Texas on Saturday.

At 6 p.m. EDT, Juan was centered near latitude 24.5 north and longitude 93.0 west, or about 300 miles southeast of Brownsville, according to the hurricane center.

The storm's maximum sustained winds were around 45 mph with squalls in excess of 50 mph north of its center, forecasters said.

Clark said it was unlikely that Juan would develop into a hurricane.

In 1979, a tropical storm caused 50 inches of rain to fall in Alvin near Houston.

Clark said tropical storms this time of year are more common in the north and northeast than off the Texas and Mexico coasts.

The Texas Almanac lists the hurricane to hit Texas latest in the calendar year as a storm which struck Oct. 2-3, 1949, in Freeport. The storm had winds of 135 mph, killed two people and caused $6.5 million in damage.

A depression becomes a tropical storm when maximum sustained winds reach 39 mph. A hurricane has maximum sustained winds of 74 mph or more.

So far, there have been five hurricanes in the 1985 Atlantic season, which started June 1 and ends Nov. 30.

ABBAS

Asked if Iraq would extradite Abbas to the United States, Hamdoon said firmly: "No. Arafat should be the one to try him."

But the Iraqi envoy said he does not believe his Government has any plans to turn Abbas over to the PLO. The U.S. has a 1938 extradition treaty with Iraq but it is not consideded leaally binding on the current regime. A State Department official said the U.S. has already protested directly to Iraq.

He said that Iraq has been the principal supplier of money, weapons and diplomatic documents to PLF members and explained that Iraq considers the group a useful tool against Syria, which has supplied Iran with weapons in the Iran-Iraqi war and supports the anti-Arafat forces of Abu Musa.

Egypt has been courting Iraq in recent months in an effort to bolster its ties with the Arab world and there have been consistent rumors that Iraq, which broke diplomatic relations after Egypt signed a peace treaty with Israel, would soon restore them.

The United States and Iraq resumed diplomatic relations this year after a 17-year break. Iraq also was removed from the list of terrorist nations the administration is required to provide to Congress after the regime expelled Abu Nidal, a notorious terrorist, and moderated its anti-Israeli stance.

It was not known whether the Reagan administration would now review its relationship with Iraq. U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Vernon Walters Friday vowed that the United Staes would not give up its effort to find Abbas and other terrorists and bring them to justice.

"The United States has fired a shot across the bow of terrorism and they now know there wil' be trouble," Walters said in an interview.

Abbas' full name is Mohammed Abbas Shakin Zaidan. He was born on Nov. 2, 1944 in Safed in what was then the British mandate of Palestine. He has been married twice and is the father of two sons.

According to documents in the possession of the U.S. government, he delivered the closing speech to a conference of PLF guerrillas that took place between Sept. 5 and 10 at the Palestinian refugee camp at Vadi-Zarka near Tunis. Approximately 137 delegates participated.

They included Yasir Arafat, who delivered the opening address. At the secret conclave, Abbas was elected secretary-general of the PLF. In his closing speech to the group, the text of which has been provided by Arab intelligence officials to the United States, he declared:

"We have decided here to participate in the developing of the traditional armed struggle and to step up our special military activity. During the conference this military activity was discussed and in particular the reasons why such armed activity has been foiled in the past."

"We also discussed the formation of a special committee which will explore the possibilities of orchestrating events in the conquered homeland (Israel)."

"The delegates who gathered here asked the special committee, which is headed by one of our members who is specially traine' in lhis sort of activity, to start at once to organize the acts to escalate the armed struggle to regain our homeland."

"It will not be long, I can promise you, before the world shall hear about these acts. We hope that this new method of armed struggle will give our people moral support. We are committed to succeed."

A transcript of the conversations between Abbas and the four hijackers aboard the Achille Lauro also was made available to The Hearst Newspapers. In it, as Israeli officials have already made public, Abbas asks that the 500 passengers be "treated very well."

"In addition, you must apologize to them and the ship's crew." Abbas then intructs the four Palestinians to tell the captain that "our objective was not to take control of the ship. Tell them what your main objective is...the occupied port...can you hear me well ?"

The "occupied port" apparently is a reference to Ashdod, the Israeli port, which may have been the original target of the terrorists. Israeli officials believe the four may have panicked when their weapons were discovered, or may have hijacked the ship because they didn't want to die in a suicide mission.

The following is the transcript of the conversation that took place on Oct. 9 over an international wavelength ship-to-shore radio frequency. In it, Abbas is known by his code name of Abu Haled and personally calls the four Palestinians by their code names.

There also is a significant effort by the PLF guerrillas to pin the blame for the aborted terrorist operation on the proSyrianfaction of the PLO. Abu-Jayed, the leader of the four, also asks Abbas to use his code name so that they can positively identify him as their commander.

Port Said authorities relayed the messages for Abbas and the hijackers.

From Abu Haled: This is Abu Haled speaking. This is Abu Haled. This is Abu Haled. How do you here me ?

Fpom Port Said officials to Ship: Listen to this message so that you can calm down. Abu Haled asks Manolyo and Majed to maintain the passenger's safety.

To Por4 Said from Ship: Roger. This is Abu Jayed.

To Jayed from Port Said: He (Abu Haled) will call you back the minute the communication improves.

To Majed from Haled: Who is speaking ? Is this Majed ?

To Haled from Majed: Right, right.

To Majed from Haled: How are you, Majed ?

To Haled from Majed: Good, thank God.

To Majed from Haled: Listen to me well. First of all, the passengers should be treated very well. In addition, you must apologize to them and the ship's crew and to the captain and tell them our objective was not to take control of the ship. Tell them what your main objective is...the occupied port. Can you hear me well?

To Haled from Majed: Right. We talked to them and we told them that our objective was not to take control Gf the s'ip. Roger.

To Port Said officials from Jayed: But if you can ask Abu Haled for me, get me a small sign from him so that I know he sent me the message.

To Jayed from Port Said: The passengers are well and the captain is the one who sent the message using a fishing boat. I can ask Abu-Haled for you and receive a sign from him for you that will prove he is the one who sent the message.

To Haled from Majed: Tell him this is not Fatah. Can you hear me ?

To Majed from Port Said: Roger.

Fans fall from railing

DALLAS (AP) — About a dozen fans attending a soccer match fell nine feet onto a concrete floor after a railing that surrounded the field collapsed, officials said.

None of the fans, who were mostly children, were seriously injured in the collapse following Friday night's Dallas Sidekicks-Los Angeles Lazers game.

Officials said the fans had been leaning against the railing trying to shake the hands of several Dallas players following the Sidekicks 7-5 win over the Lazers.

Several fans were treated for bumps and bruises at Reunion Arena.

No pass-no play gives teen no reason to cheer

AUSTIN (AP) — Tammy Ross is supposed to be a cheerleader. But she's a little short on cheer these days.

After spending $750 on her cheerleading uniform, $150 on a cheerleading clinic, and practicing her cheers all summer, Miss Ross found herself benched during the Johnston High School homecoming game Friday.

The culprit was a failing algebra grade.

And under the state's controversial new no pass-no play rule, a failing grade means no extracurricular activities for six weeks.

Cheerleading for the football team, she said, is "everything to us."

The other cheerleaders "have been using the team spirit to cheer me up," she said. "I tried, but I didn't succeed. It's the law."

The failing grade "wasn't because I wasn't trying," said Miss Ross, one of the more than 39 percent of Austin high school students who got an F during the current grading period.

She said she hopes to boost her algebra grade enough to wear the new uniform during basketball season.

But it won't be the same, she said.

"After football, everything is kind of anticlimactic," agreed her father, Tony Ross.

Ross said he approves of the intent of the no pass-no play rule, but thinks the school district should pay for cheerleading uniforms.

"Football players don't pay a nickel for their uniforms. If (Gov.) Mark White (who supports the rule) wants to do this, then maybe he should give her the money back," he said.

Miss Ross said she paid for her uniform by saving money from her allowance and from some part-time summer jobs, such as baby-sitting.

"I worked hard for that money, and I don't have money to throw away," she told the Austin American-Statesman.

Semi-conductor slump closes two TI plants

COLLEGE STATION (AP) — A shocked silence greeted news that Texas Instruments Inc.'s plan to weather a sharply depressed semiconductor industry did not include its College Station plant.

"It was a shock when someone tells you your job is going away," site manager Ed Kuehn said after TI announced Friday it was closing two plants, laying off 2,200 more employees and rearranging its operations.

"It was traumatic ... some cried," he said.

TI's College Station plant, which employs about 250 people, will be shut down along with the firm's 900-person operation in El Salvador, company spokesman Jim Bradbury said from TI's Dallas headquarters Friday.

In addition, the wafer-production facility at TI's Northwest Houston plant will close and be consolidated in Temple as the company tries to shave more than $70 million from its operating costs, Bradbury said.

The job cuts bring to 7,000 the number of layoffs the company has been forced to make since the year began, he said. After the latest round, TI will employ about 80,000 people.

"I can't speculate on whether there will be further cuts in personnel," Bradbury said. "What we really need is an improvement in the semiconductor industry."

The layoff news followed another quarter of depressed earnings for the Dallas-based electronics firm.

The company announced a third-quarter loss of $82.8 million, or $3.30 per share, compared with net income of $85.8 million, or $3.54 per share, in 1984's third quarter.

Excluding charges for plant closings and employment reductions, the third-quarter loss would have been 76 cents per share, TI Chairman Mark Shepherd Jr. said.

Net sales billed for the three months ended Sept. 30 were $1.2 billion, down 16 percent from last year's third quarter, and Shepherd attributed that loss to sharply reduced volume and lower prices for semiconductors.

During 1985's first nine months, net sales billed were $3.7 billion, down 12 percent from the same quarter of 1984. Year-to-date net loss was $77.6 million, or $3.12 per share, compared with net income of $251.5 million, or $10.43 per share, in the first three quarters of 1984.

In addition to the layoffs, TI will defer for at least six months wage and salary increases that would have taken effect in the first half of 1986, Shepherd said.

"We understand the personal impact of this decision on TIers throughout the world, but we believe this is a necessary step to keep operating costs under tight control during this difficult period," he said.

Charges for TI's write-down of manufacturing capacity and other plant consolidations weighed heavily on the company's third quarter earnings and "current market conditions indicate that these actions will not return the company to profitability in the short term," Shepherd said.

Shepherd said, "TI's balance sheet remains strong, and financial resources are adequate."

Amendments seek to channel state's varied water interests

GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In a state as diverse as Texas, the prospect of uniting a majority of voters on a single issue is challenging, to say the least.

Texas needs water, that much is a given.

Legislators, recognizing that fact, have tried repeatedly to put aside regional interests and develop a plan that melds the concerns of coastal shrimpers with those of West Texas ranchers.

Thus far, those efforts have failed.

In 1981, voters turned down then-House Speaker Billy Clayton's plan to dedicate state budget surplus to finance reservoirs and other water projects. Voters, particularly in Houston, viewed that plan as a scheme to help West Texas, and not much else.

Two years ago, lawmakers could not resolve differences in another water plan and voters never had a chance to have their say.

Almost without exception, lawmakers agree that the 69th Legislature succeeded where past sessions have failed. If they are right, voters will approve a water plan that legislators say adequately addresses the state's disparate needs and problems.

South and Central Texas cities are already dealing with severe water shortages that will only get worse as the state's population — and its water consumption — continues to climb.

Agriculture accounts for about 72 percent of the state's water consumed each year. And, as farmers continue to tap dwindling reserves of underground aquifers, the need for dams and reservoirs to maintain water supplies grows.

IN DEVELOPING A comprehensive package, lawmakers also had to consider the interests of coastal residents who are concerned that substantial upstream development might harm the ecological health of Texas bays.

That package will appear in the form of two constitutional amendments onthe Nov. 5 ballot: one to finance water projects generally and another to establish an agricultural water-conservation program. Voter approval is necessary for any extenstion of the state's credit.

Proposition 1 would authorize $980 million in new water development bonds. The Texas Water Development Board administers the fund, which assists local governments and water districts in financing water projects.

Since 1957, when legislators created the fund, voters have authorized cites and other entities to build dams, reservoirs, pipelines and treatment plants. The state has used a portion of that bond money to buy a share of the storage capacity in reservoirs, for later sale to political subdivisions as their water needs grow.

Of the $980 million in water development bonds under Proposition 1, $400 million would be earmarked for such state participation in reservoirs, pipelines and treatment plants. State participation could not exceed 50 percent of the cost of such projects. Legislators also limited the use of state participation to $50 million for the 1986-87 biennium.

CURRENTLY, STATE HELP is limited to projects involving reservoirs or treatment systems connected to reservoirs in which the state owns storage. The proposed amendment would allow the state to participate in regional water projects not connected to a reservoir.

Steve Stagner, a former aid to Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and executive director of the Texas Water Alliance, said the consolidation of water projects may be the element of the package most needed.

"One of things we've seen is the damage that can be done environmentally through the proliferation of small plants," Stagner said. "The thing that ties this all together is an emphasis on regionalization."

If approved, the amendment would expand eligibility for state assistance by increasing both the number of applicants and the types of projects that qualify for state assistance. The plan would require the water development board to finance projects that cannot achieve "optimum regional development" without state participation, provided the projects are good risks and serve the public interest.

The plan defines regional development as projects that would consolidate a number of smaller, existing water works and sewage-treatment plants into a single complex.

Almost $200 million is set aside to finance sewage-treatment projects in cities that could not otherwise sell their own water bonds. Another $190 million is designated for "hardship" water-supply projects and for areas converting from ground water to surface water.

THE PLAN ALSO makes nonprofit water-supply corporations political subdivisions of the state so that they may receive aid.

Stagner said he suspects many small cities who have difficulty selling bonds will apply for hardship aid from the state, especially in the Rio Grande Valley and East Texas.

The remaining $200 million in bonding authority would finance flood control projects.

Under the amendment, cities could use flood control bonds to develop management plans within a 100-year flood plain and to finance both structural and non-structural flood control projects.

Structural control usually means construction of reservoirs and levees to impound flood water. It also includes the enlargement of stream channels and re-building bridges. Non-structural control means zoning to discourage development in flood plains, providing advance-warning systems and evacuation plans.

The amendment would also pledge up to $250 million of the state's credit to insure repayment of $500 million in local governments' bonds for water development projects. Those projects include sewage treatment plants, pipelines and flood control.

The board may insure up to $100 million in bonds during any fiscal year. Before guaranteeing bonds, the board must determine that the local entity is likely to to meet its payments.

The amendment would also require cities, river authorities and other state-aid applicants to show "reasonable dilligence" in conserving water. The Texas Water Commission, which issues permits relating to water rights, will determine what constitutes reasonable dilligence.

PROPOSITION 2 WOULD initiate a four-year trial period during which the Legislature could authorize up to $200 million in bonds for agricultural water-conservation projects.

The amendment would create an agricultural trust fund with $15 million in water project development money. Of that amount, the plan would set aside $5 million for a pilot program to help farmers buy water-efficient irrigation equipment in the next two years.

The board must report to the Legislature on the status of the pilot program by Jan. 1, 1987 and Jan. 1, 1989.

The remaining $10 million would form the agricultural trust fund's principal. The water development board may invest that money. Half of the trust fund's investment income must go back into the principal and may not be spent.

The other half is set aside for an agricultural soil and water conservation fund. Money in that fund can be used for technical assistance and educational programs, desalinization, cloud seeding, projects relating to the production of native and water-efficient crops and brush-control.

Five propositions sit in judgment on criminal justice system

By DAVID ELLIOT
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — On Nov. 5, Texas voters will have a chance to add a few more patches to an already patchwork state constitution.

Included among the 14 constitutional amendments on the ballot are five propositions which deal with the criminal justice system.

Perhaps the most hotly debated of these amendments is Proposition 11, which would prevent appeals courts from throwing out cases on the basis of certain technicalities.

The author of the amendment is state Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson. Brown, a candidate for attorney general, said the change is needed to close "one of the worst loopholes in our criminal justice system."

"It is time we stopped the use of technicalities as a way of evading justice," Brown said. "Passage of Proposition 11 will eliminate the use of technical errors in indictments as a means to appeal a conviction."

But some defense attorneys are skittish and civil libertarians are scared at the thought of eliminating any constitutional protections, no matter how small.

Bob Towery, executive director of the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association, said the amendment would erode the due process rights of a defendent. "It avoids the constitutional protection, skirts it and in fact eliminates it," he said. "Let me ask you a question. Say you were charged with a crime. Wouldn't you think it would be in your interest to make the state prosecution conform to all the technicalities to protect your right as an individual? For our rights to be protected, we've got to protect the rights of the dope dealer as well."

TOWERY SAID BECAUSE of its unlimited resources, the state already enjoys an advantage when prosecuting defendants. "The state has every opportunity to clean up an indictment before it goes to trial," he said. "Why should we allow the state to screw up at the expense of the individual?"

While the defense lawyers' group is opposing the amendment, Towery fears it will pass because of its vague wording. "How many people do you think will understand what that says?" he asks. "I think if enough people understand the effect of this amendment, it would be defeated."

State Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls and chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee, said the change would speed up prosecution of the guilty without taking away their constitutional rights. "I think the protections are there through case law and through the remaining parts of the constitution, such as the Bill of Rights."

Jim Harrington, legal director for the Texas Civil Liberties Union, said it is the district attorney's responsibility to ensure that indictments are drafted correctly. "I don't see why we have to amend the constitution to make their job easier," he said. "We could speed up prosecution if we didn't have the Fourth Amendment, if we didn't have search and seizure laws."

Farabee is the author of another amendment. Proposition 6 would grant the Texas Department of Corrections authority to transfer inmates to prisons out of state.

"IT PROVIDES AN additional tool to deal with the internal management of prisoners," Farabee said. "It's particularly relevant to breaking up gangs."

Harrington said he has no "conceptual" problem with Proposition 5, as long as the state does not abuse it. "We see quite frequently that people are transferred 1,000 miles away, which puts quite a strain on the family," he said.

Proposition 12 would grant the Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals the power to answer questions of state law.

Often, federal judges rely upon interpretation of state law when deciding court cases. In these cases, federal judges must take into account rulings state courts make. Sometimes, however, the state courts have not ruled on the issue.

PROPOSITION 13 WOULD create a Judicial Districts Board to propose reapportionment plans for the state's 374 district courts. The board would include the chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court, who would serve as chairman, the presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the presiding judges of each of the nine judicial districts, the president of the Texas Judicial Council, and lawyer appointed by the governor for a four-year term.

Some Republicans oppose the amendment because they fear the only Democrats would serve on the board. "It looks to me like every member of that panel, when it's created would be a Democrat," said Brown.

While most of the proposed amendments apply to voters across the state, Proposition 7 would affect only Chambers County residents.

This amendment would allow Chambers County to retain up to six justice of the peace precincts. In 1983, voters approved an amendment requiring counties with populations between 18,000 and 30,000 to have two to five precincts.

Required health care one proposal

By DAVID ELLIOT
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Along with water and criminal justice reform, Texas voters Nov. 5 will face issues ranging from the state's budget process to the issuance of bonds for veterans and would-be farmers.

Proposition 5 would allow the Legislature to determine what health care services a hospital district must provide, and who would be eligible for those services.

The Texas Constitution requires hospital districts to "assume full responsibility for providing medical and hospital care for its needy inhabitants." But the constitution does not say how much care the districts must provide or what a resident must do to prove he needs free care.

Supporters of the amendment say many of the state's hospital districts have taken advantage of this ambiguity. Some districts, such as the one serving Dallas County, provide comprehensive coverage for indigent residents. But other hospital districts, including two in Jefferson County, exist only on paper, collecting no taxes and providing no services.

San Antonio representative Alan Schoolcraft, who sponsored the amendment in the House, said he would like to see the Legislature determine what level of services hospital districts should provide.

OPPONENTS CHARGE THAT the amendment is an attempt to pacify legislators who voted against the indigent health care package approved during a special legislative session in May. They say the amendment will destroy the statute requiring districts to provide health care for residents regardless of ability to pay.

Proposition 9 would permit the Legislature to require state agencies to obtain legislative approval before spending or making an emergency transfer of state funds. Voters have defeated similar amendments twice this decade.

Under the current budget-writing process, agencies submit budget estimates at least 14 months before the beginning of the two-year fiscal period the budget covers. Abilene Sen. Grant Jones, sponsor of the amendment, said the amendment is necessary to deal with changing economic conditions.

"Assume that you had to sit down today and set out a two-year budget under which you're going to operate. That's what the state government tries to do," he said.

But opponents say the amendment would violate a section of the state constitution which establishes a checks-and-balances system between the three branches of government.

LOIS CARPENTER OF Midland, president of the League of Women Voters, calls the proposed amendment "deceptive. This amendment could prevent state agencies from carrying out their legally required duties."

She said the League opposes the amendment because it does not specify who will be responsible for managing the budget between legislative sessions.

Proposition 8 would enhance the bonding authority of the Veterans Housing Program, which provides low-interest loans of up to $20,000 to help veterans buy a home. Since 1983, the program has made 24,000 loans and expects to reach the current $500 million limit on its bonding authority by the end of this year.

This amendment would allow the Veterans Land Board to issue an additional $500 million in bonds to continue the program. Supporters say this would allow the board to make an additional 25,000 loans.

Mike Connolly, spokesman for the General Land Office, said the program is a success. "It's been a good deal for Texas veterans," he said. "And it's been a good deal for Texans because for every dollar put into the construction industry, there's a ripple effect of $7 throughout the Texas economy."

Proposition 10 would authorize the Veterans Land Board to issue up to $500 million in bonds to help farmers and ranchers buy property.

CANYON SEN. BILL Sarpalius, the amendment's sponsor, said the average age of today's farmer is 58 because younger people can't afford to buy land. "There isn't much incentive for a person to go into farming," he said. "It costs too much."

Proposition 3 would authorize cities and towns to spend public funds to replace or reroute water lines on private property if the city is moving or replacing water mains that serve the property.

Under current law, homeowners must immediately reimburse the city for the rebuilding or rerouting of sewer lines. This amendment would allow homeowners to pay off this expense, which usually runs $1,000 to $3,000, in installments.

Proposition 4 would allow the School Land Board to use proceeds from the sale of public school land to buy other property. Currently, the board can only use these proceeds for investments in bonds and securities.

Death letters point to Neo-Nazi prison gang

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — While leaders of two warring Hispanic prison gangs are advocating a truce, prison officials confiscated letters from a rival neo-Nazi gang plotting to kill at least 50 of its enemies.

The letters, seized this month by Texas Department of Corrections search teams, were from members of the all-white Aryan Brotherhood — a group Hispanic gangs fear will take over profitable prison rackets.

One letter included a four-paragraph gang constitution and descriptions of the proper way to carry out killings, the Houston Chronicle reported in its Saturday editions.

Some of the letters originated from the leader of the approximately 100-member gang, Ronald Ballew, who is imprisoned at the Retrieve Unit near Angleton.

"If a (recruit) makes the hit and does not show that he was going for the kill, he will be dealt with because we are very serious about these hits," one letter obtained by the Chronicle said.

Engine fire halts jet

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A fire in the engine of a Lockheed L-1011 jumbo jet that aborted a takeoff came only hours after federal investigators recommended immediate inspections of all L-1011s.

The Delta Air Lines jet with 226 people aboard aborted its takeoff from the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Friday night after fuel caught fire in an engine at 7:41 p.m. CDT.

No injuries were reported on the three-engine Lockheed L-1011 Tristar, which was to fly to San Francisco as Flight 43, Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Gerrie Cook said.

About 15 of the 213 passengers fled down an emergency slide, and the remaining passengers and crew of 13 safely evacuated the plane minutes after the fire, Ms. Cook said.

Spills endanger sanctuary of whooping crane

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Two federal agencies are butting heads over how to clean up a toxic dredge spill that some scientists worry could harm the endangered whooping crane.

Dredge material laced with arsenic, nickel and mercury spilled into bay waters at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in July from a broken U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dike at the refuge.

The refuge is the winter home of the nation's main flock of whooping cranes.

One crane from the Texas-Canada flock has already appeared at the refuge, and the remaining birds are expected in the next several weeks.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife biologists are concerned that the toxic elements will enter the whoopers' food chain as they feed on blue crab, clams and other marine animals in the bay system.

USFW biologists want the Corps to build a new habitat to compensate for the loss of the bay bottom — buried under six to 10 inches of the silty dredge material.

A Corps spokesman in Galveston told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times that the Corps has offered to clean up the dredge material. Clean-up is all the Corps is authorized to do under the Rivers and Harbors Act, he said.

But the USFW has rejected that offer because they say dredging up the material will only cause more damage.

"It's the type of thing that if this happened to a private company it might involve a lawsuit. But as federal agencies, we can't do that," said Tom Stehn, biologist for the wildlife refuge.

The dike on Rattlesnake Island in Ayers Bay, a Corps dredge disposal island, broke the night of July 2 and the break was detected the next day.

Lady Bird exits hospital

AUSTIN (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson was released from an Austin hospital Friday after having spent more than a day under observation for stomach pains, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"There really was no diagnosis. She came in with stomach pains and was kept for observation," said Vicki Hahn, a spokeswoman for Seton Medical Center.

Mrs. Johnson, 72, had become ill Wednesday, an aide said.

"One the advice of her doctor, she entered Seton Wednesday night as a precautionary measure," said Betty Tilson, an assistant to Mrs. Johnson. She said doctors thought the former first lady might be suffering from diverticulitis, an inflammation of the lower intestine.

Corn grower's trial set

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox said a Nov. 4 court hearing date has been set for a Libery County grower accused of selling corn contaminated with a toxin.

Mattox said a temporary restraining order was issued late Thursday against the Red Wolf Ranch of Devers.

The lawsuit alleges that on Sept. 10, an inspector of the Texas Feed and Fertilizer Control Serivce tested a truckload of corn and found it contained 4,100 parts per billion of aflatoxin, a level which sould pose a severe health hazard to animals if consumed.

The defendant was advised not to sell the corn, the petition said, but officials found later that the corn had been sold to at least 12 individuals and businesses.

Bingo license pulled

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock suspended Friday the bingo license of Pull Lodge 118 of Houston, saying the operator gave only 1.84 percent of the gross receipts to charity.

"When the voters approved charity bingo games in Texas, they meant just that — bingo games that would use money tu support charity activities," Bullock said, "Those who won't live up to that requirement aren't going to hold bingo licenses."

Bullock said bingo operators are required on their January reports to show they distributed a minimum of 35 percent of their adjusted gross receipts to charity.

The comptroller's suspension order said Pull Lodge 118 reported it made charitable distributions of $7,585 out of $412,138 in gross receipts, about 1.84 percent.

Hustler liable in death

HOUSTON (AP) — A Channelview woman says a jury found Hustler magazine liable in the accidental hanging death of her 14-year-old son because the public is tired of pornography.

"People are tired of it. They're tired of what it's doing to their children, their husbands, their families. And they'd just rather do something about it, not sit back," said Diana Herceg, who sued Hustler.

Mrs. Herceg sought $1 million in damages from the sexually explicit magazine, alleging her son by a previous marriage — Troy Daniel Dunaway — accidentally hanged himself on Aug. 8, 1981 after reading a Hustler article titled "Orgasm of Death."

A federal jury in U.S. District Judge Woodrow Seals court on Friday awarded $182,000 to Mrs. Herceg and Andy Vines, a family friend who discovered Dunaway's body.

Thrift store head ousted

DALLAS (AP) — The suspended head of the Salvation Army's $3.2 million Dallas thrift store operation has been forced to retire from the organization because he allegedly transferred a donated boat into his name, Salvation Army officials said.

An investigation by the charity concluded that Maj. Lairon T. White violated the organization's rules.

County against farm workers' picket laws

HEREFORD (AP) — Deaf Smith County has decided to appeal a federal court decision that struck down seven Texas laws restricting picketing activities, although the state Attorney General's Office already has opted against an appeal.

Meeting in closed session Sept. 3, county commissioners and certain unnamed vegetable growers agreed that if growers would pay legal fees, the county would appeal the decision in the "Gault" case, according to minutes from the meeting obtained by the Amarillo Globe-News.

At the recommendation of Deaf Smith County Commissioner Austin Rose, commissioners approved the agreement "on condition that the county not pay the fees," the minutes state.

"We were willing to let it ride right there," Deaf Smith County Judge Glen Nelson told the Globe-News Friday. He said the county decided to appeal "because of the vegetable growers. They were the ones that wanted to appeal it. They were gonna fight it the whole way."

In the Aug. 7 "Gault" opinion, U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson struck down seven Texas laws restricting the right of workers to picket.

In the ruling, Ms. Robinson found in favor of Texas Rural Legal Aid, the Texas Farm Workers Union and several individual plaintiffs in two different cases that had been consolidated.

The ruling held that vegetable growers and their trade unions could no longer employ civil restraints to stop farm workers from organizing labor unions.

And the decision forbids law enforcement agencies from enforcing Texas criminal statutes that restrict people's ability to organize into labor unions.

Specifically, the laws limit the amount of picketing in a given area near a workplace; forbid picketing that stops or intimidates non-picketing employees from working; forbid picketing that presents libelous and slanderous statements.

Amendments seek to channel state's varied water interests

By GARY RASP
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — In a state as diverse as Texas, the prospect of uniting a majority of voters on a single issue is challenging, to say the least.

Texas needs water, that much is a given.

Legislators, recognizing that fact, have tried repeatedly to put aside regional interests and develop a plan that melds the concerns of coastal shrimpers with those of West Texas ranchers.

Thus far, those efforts have failed.

In 1981, voters turned down then-House Speaker Billy Clayton's plan to dedicate state budget surplus to finance reservoirs and other water projects. Voters, particularly in Houston, viewed that plan as a scheme to help West Texas, and not much else.

Two years ago, lawmakers could not resolve differences in another water plan and voters never had a chance to have their say.

Almost without exception, lawmakers agree that the 69th Legislature succeeded where past sessions have failed. If they are right, voters will approve a water plan that legislators say adequately addresses the state's disparate needs and problems.

South and Central Texas cities are already dealing with severe water shortages that will only get worse as the state's population — and its water consumption — continues to climb.

Agriculture accounts for about 72 percent of the state's water consumed each year. And, as farmers continue to tap dwindling reserves of underground aquifers, the need for dams and reservoirs to maintain water supplies grows.

IN DEVELOPING A comprehensive package, lawmakers also had to consider the interests of coastal residents who are concerned that substantial upstream development might harm the ecological health of Texas bays.

That package will appear in the form of two constitutional amendments onthe Nov. 5 ballot: one to finance water projects generally and another to establish an agricultural water-conservation program. Voter approval is necessary for any extension of the state's credit.

Proposition 1 would authorize $980 million in new water development bonds. The Texas Water Development Board administers the fund, which assists local governments and water districts in financing water projects.

Since 1957, when legislators created the fund, voters have authorized cites and other entities to build dams, reservoirs, pipelines and treatment plants. The state has used a portion of that bond money to buy a share of the storage capacity in reservoirs, for later sale to political subdivisions as their water needs grow.

Of the $980 million in water development bonds under Proposition 1, $400 million would be earmarked for such state participation in reservoirs, pipelines and treatment plants. State participation could not exceed 50 percent of the cost of such projects. Legislators also limited the use of state participation to $50 million for the 1986-87 biennium.

CURRENTLY, STATE HELP is limited to projects involving reservoirs or treatment systems connected to reservoirs in which the state owns storage. The proposed amendment would allow the state to participate in regional water projects not connected to a reservoir.

Steve Stagner, a former aid to Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and executive director of the Texas Water Alliance, said the consolidation of water projects may be the element of the package most needed.

"One of things we've seen is the damage that can be done environmentally through the proliferation of small plants," Stagner said. "The thing that ties this all together is an emphasis on regionalization."

If approved, the amendment would expand eligibility for state assistance by increasing both the number of applicants and the types of projects that qualify for state assistance. The plan would require the water development board to finance projects that cannot achieve "optimum regional development" without state participation, provided the projects are good risks and serve the public interest.

The plan defines regional development as projects that would consolidate a number of smaller, existing water works and sewage-treatment plants into a single complex.

Almost $200 million is set aside to finance sewage-treatment projects in cities that could not otherwise sell their own water bonds. Another $190 million is designated for "hardship" water-supply projects and for areas converting from ground water to surface water.

THE PLAN ALSO makes nonprofit water-supply corporations political subdivisions of the state so that they may receive aid.

Stagner said he suspects many small cities who have difficulty selling bonds will apply for hardship aid from the state, especially in the Rio Grande Valley and East Texas.

The remaining $200 million in bonding authority would finance flood control projects.

Under the amendment, cities could use flood control bonds to develop management plans within a 100-year flood plain and to finance both structural and non-structural flood control projects.

Structural control usually means construction of reservoirs and levees to impound flood water. It also includes the enlargement of stream channels and re-building bridges. Non-structural control means zoning to discourage development in flood plains, providing advance-warning systems and evacuation plans.

The amendment would also pledge up to $250 million of the state's credit to insure repayment of $500 million in local governments' bonds for water development projects. Those projects include sewage treatment plants, pipelines and flood control.

The board may insure up to $100 million in bonds during any fiscal year. Before guaranteeing bonds, the board must determine that the local entity is likely to to meet its payments.

The amendment would also require cities, river authorities and other state-aid applicants to show "reasonable dilligence" in conserving water. The Texas Water Commission, which issues permits relating to water rights, will determine what constitutes reasonable dilligence.

PROPOSITION 2 WOULD initiate a four-year trial period during which the Legislature could authorize up to $200 million in bonds for agricultural water-conservation projects.

The amendment would create an agricultural trust fund with $15 million in water project development money. Of that amount, the plan would set aside $5 million for a pilot program to help farmers buy water-efficient irrigation equipment in the next two years.

The board must report to the Legislature on the status of the pilot program by Jan. 1, 1987 and Jan. 1, 1989.

The remaining $10 million would form the agricultural trust fund's principal. The water development board may invest that money. Half of the trust fund's investment income must go back into the principal and may not be spent.

The other half is set aside for an agricultural soil and water conservation fund. Money in that fund can be used for technical assistance and educational programs, desalinization, cloud seeding, projects relating to the production of native and water-efficient crops and brush-control.

Five propositions sit in judgment on criminal justice system

By DAVID ELLIOT
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — On Nov. 5, Texas voters will have a chance to add a few more patches to an already patchwork state constitution.

Included among the 14 constitutional amendments on the ballot are five propositions which deal with the criminal justice system.

Perhaps the most hotly debated of these amendments is Proposition 11, which would prevent appeals courts from throwing out cases on the basis of certain technicalities.

The author of the amendment is state Sen. J.E. "Buster" Brown, R-Lake Jackson. Brown, a candidate for attorney general, said the change is needed to close "one of the worst loopholes in our criminal justice system."

"It is time we stopped the use of technicalities as a way of evading justice," Brown said. "Passage of Proposition 11 will eliminate the use of technical errors in indictments as a means to appeal a conviction."

But some defense attorneys are skittish and civil libertarians are scared at the thought of eliminating any constitutional protections, no matter how small.

Bob Towery, executive director of the Texas Criminal Defense Lawyers Association, said the amendment would erode the due process rights of a defendent. "It avoids the constitutional protection, skirts it and in fact eliminates it," he said. "Let me ask you a question. Say you were charged with a crime. Wouldn't you think it would be in your interest to make the state prosecution conform to all the technicalities to protect your right as an individual? For our rights to be protected, we've got to protect the rights of the dope dealer as well."

TOWERY SAID BECAUSE of its unlimited resources, the state already enjoys an advantage when prosecuting defendants. "The state has every opportunity to clean up an indictment before it goes to trial," he said. "Why should we allow the state to screw up at the expense of the individual?"

While the defense lawyers' group is opposing the amendment, Towery fears it will pass because of its vague wording. "How many people do you think will understand what that says?" he asks. "I think if enough people understand the effect of this amendment, it would be defeated."

State Sen. Ray Farabee, D-Wichita Falls and chairman of the Senate State Affairs Committee, said the change would speed up prosecution of the guilty without taking away their constitutional rights. "I think the protections are there through case law and through the remaining parts of the constitution, such as the Bill of Rights."

Jim Harrington, legal director for the Texas Civil Liberties Union, said it is the district attorney's responsibility to ensure that indictments are drafted correctly. "I don't see why we have to amend the constitution to make their job easier," he said. "We could speed up prosecution if we didn't have the Fourth Amendment, if we didn't have search and seizure laws."

Farabee is the author of another amendment. Proposition 6 would grant the Texas Department of Corrections authority to transfer inmates to prisons out of state.

"IT PROVIDES AN additional tool to deal with the internal management of prisoners," Farabee said. "It's particularly relevant to breaking up gangs."

Harrington said he has no "conceptual" problem with Proposition 5, as long as the state does not abuse it. "We see quite frequently that people are transferred 1,000 miles away, which puts quite a strain on the family," he said.

Proposition 12 would grant the Texas Supreme Court and Court of Criminal Appeals the power to answer questions of state law.

Often, federal judges rely upon interpretation of state law when deciding court cases. In these cases, federal judges must take into account rulings state courts make. Sometimes, however, the state courts have not ruled on the issue.

PROPOSITION 13 WOULD create a Judicial Districts Board to propose reapportionment plans for the state's 374 district courts. The board would include the chief justice of the Texas Supreme Court, who would serve as chairman, the presiding judge of the Texas Court of Criminal Appeals, the presiding judges of each of the nine judicial districts, the president of the Texas Judicial Council, and lawyer appointed by the governor for a four-year term.

Some Republicans oppose the amendment because they fear the only Democrats would serve on the board. "It looks to me like every member of that panel, when it's created would be a Democrat," said Brown.

While most of the proposed amendments apply to voters across the state, Proposition 7 would affect only Chambers County residents.

This amendment would allow Chambers County to retain up to six justice of the peace precincts. In 1983, voters approved an amendment requiring counties with populations between 18,000 and 30,000 to have two to five precincts.

Required health care one proposal

By DAVID ELLIOT
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Along with water and criminal justice reform, Texas voters Nov. 5 will face issues ranging from the state's budget process to the issuance of bonds for veterans and would-be farmers.

Proposition 5 would allow the Legislature to determine what health care services a hospital district must provide, and who would be eligible for those services.

The Texas Constitution requires hospital districts to "assume full responsibility for providing medical and hospital care for its needy inhabitants." But the constitution does not say how much care the districts must provide or what a resident must do to prove he needs free care.

Supporters of the amendment say many of the state's hospital districts have taken advantage of this ambiguity. Some districts, such as the one serving Dallas County, provide comprehensive coverage for indigent residents. But other hospital districts, including two in Jefferson County, exist only on paper, collecting no taxes and providing no services.

San Antonio representative Alan Schoolcraft, who sponsored the amendment in the House, said he would like to see the Legislature determine what level of services hospital districts should provide.

OPPONENTS CHARGE THAT the amendment is an attempt to pacify legislators who voted against the indigent health care package approved during a special legislative session in May. They say the amendment will destroy the statute requiring districts to provide health care for residents regardless of ability to pay.

Proposition 9 would permit the Legislature to require state agencies to obtain legislative approval before spending or making an emergency transfer of state funds. Voters have defeated similar amendments twice this decade.

Under the current budget-writing process, agencies submit budget estimates at least 14 months before the beginning of the two-year fiscal period the budget covers. Abilene Sen. Grant Jones, sponsor of the amendment, said the amendment is necessary to deal with changing economic conditions.

"Assume that you had to sit down today and set out a two-year budget under which you're going to operate. That's what the state government tries to do," he said.

But opponents say the amendment would violate a section of the state constitution which establishes a checks-and-balances system between the three branches of government.

LOIS CARPENTER OF Midland, president of the League of Women Voters, calls the proposed amendment "deceptive. This amendment could prevent state agencies from carrying out their legally required duties."

She said the League opposes the amendment because it does not specify who will be responsible for managing the budget between legislative sessions.

Proposition 8 would enhance the bonding authority of the Veterans Housing Program, which provides low-interest loans of up to $20,000 to help veterans buy a home. Since 1983, the program has made 24,000 loans and expects to reach the current $500 million limit on its bonding authority by the end of this year.

This amendment would allow the Veterans Land Board to issue an additional $500 million in bonds to continue the program. Supporters say this would allow the board to make an additional 25,000 loans.

Mike Connolly, spokesman for the General Land Office, said the program is a success. "It's been a good deal for Texas veterans," he said. "And it's been a good deal for Texans because for every dollar put into the construction industry, there's a ripple effect of $7 throughout the Texas economy."

Proposition 10 would authorize the Veterans Land Board to issue up to $500 million in bonds to help farmers and ranchers buy property.

CANYON SEN. BILL Sarpalius, the amendment's sponsor, said the average age of today's farmer is 58 because younger people can't afford to buy land. "There isn't much incentive for a person to go into farming," he said. "It costs too much."

Proposition 3 would authorize cities and towns to spend public funds to replace or reroute water lines on private property if the city is moving or replacing water mains that serve the property.

Under current law, homeowners must immediately reimburse the city for the rebuilding or rerouting of sewer lines. This amendment would allow homeowners to pay off this expense, which usually runs $1,000 to $3,000, in installments.

Proposition 4 would allow the School Land Board to use proceeds from the sale of public school land to buy other property. Currently, the board can only use these proceeds for investments in bonds and securities.

Amendment language often sketchy

STATE IN BRIEF

Death letters point to Neo-Nazi prison gang

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — While leaders of two warring Hispanic prison gangs are advocating a truce, prison officials confiscated letters from a rival neo-Nazi gang plotting to kill at least 50 of its enemies.

The letters, seized this month by Texas Department of Corrections search teams, were from members of the all-white Aryan Brotherhood — a group Hispanic gangs fear will take over profitable prison rackets.

One letter included a four-paragraph gang constitution and descriptions of the proper way to carry out killings, the Houston Chronicle reported in its Saturday editions.

Some of the letters originated from the leader of the approximately 100-member gang, Ronald Ballew, who is imprisoned at the Retrieve Unit near Angleton.

"If a (recruit) makes the hit and does not show that he was going for the kill, he will be dealt with because we are very serious about these hits," one letter obtained by the Chronicle said.

Engine fire halts jet

GRAPEVINE (AP) — A fire in the engine of a Lockheed L-1011 jumbo jet that aborted a takeoff came only hours after federal investigators recommended immediate inspections of all L-1011s.

The Delta Air Lines jet with 226 people aboard aborted its takeoff from the Dallas-Fort Worth International Airport Friday night after fuel caught fire in an engine at 7:41 p.m. CDT.

No injuries were reported on the three-engine Lockheed L-1011 Tristar, which was to fly to San Francisco as Flight 43, Federal Aviation Administration spokeswoman Gerrie Cook said.

About 15 of the 213 passengers fled down an emergency slide, and the remaining passengers and crew of 13 safely evacuated the plane minutes after the fire, Ms. Cook said.

Spills endanger sanctuary of whooping crane

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — Two federal agencies are butting heads over how to clean up a toxic dredge spill that some scientists worry could harm the endangered whooping crane.

Dredge material laced with arsenic, nickel and mercury spilled into bay waters at the Aransas National Wildlife Refuge in July from a broken U.S. Army Corps of Engineers dike at the refuge.

The refuge is the winter home of the nation's main flock of whooping cranes.

One crane from the Texas-Canada flock has already appeared at the refuge, and the remaining birds are expected in the next several weeks.

U.S. Fish and Wildlife biologists are concerned that the toxic elements will enter the whoopers' food chain as they feed on blue crab, clams and other marine animals in the bay system.

USFW biologists want the Corps to build a new habitat to compensate for the loss of the bay bottom — buried under six to 10 inches of the silty dredge material.

A Corps spokesman in Galveston told the Corpus Christi Caller-Times that the Corps has offered to clean up the dredge material. Clean-up is all the Corps is authorized to do under the Rivers and Harbors Act, he said.

But the USFW has rejected that offer because they say dredging up the material will only cause more damage.

"It's the type of thing that if this happened to a private company it might involve a lawsuit. But as federal agencies, we can't do that," said Tom Stehn, biologist for the wildlife refuge.

The dike on Rattlesnake Island in Ayers Bay, a Corps dredge disposal island, broke the night of July 2 and the break was detected the next day.

Lady Bird exits hospital

AUSTIN (AP) — Lady Bird Johnson was released from an Austin hospital Friday after having spent more than a day under observation for stomach pains, a hospital spokeswoman said.

"There really was no diagnosis. She came in with stomach pains and was kept for observation," said Vicki Hahn, a spokeswoman for Seton Medical Center.

Mrs. Johnson, 72, had become ill Wednesday, an aide said.

"One the advice of her doctor, she entered Seton Wednesday night as a precautionary measure," said Betty Tilson, an assistant to Mrs. Johnson. She said doctors thought the former first lady might be suffering from diverticulitis, an inflammation of the lower intestine.

Corn grower's trial set

AUSTIN (AP) — Attorney General Jim Mattox said a Nov. 4 court hearing date has been set for a Libery County grower accused of selling corn contaminated with a toxin.

Mattox said a temporary restraining order was issued late Thursday against the Red Wolf Ranch of Devers.

The lawsuit alleges that on Sept. 10, an inspector of the Texas Feed and Fertilizer Control Serivce tested a truckload of corn and found it contained 4,100 parts per billion of aflatoxin, a level which sould pose a severe health hazard to animals if consumed.

The defendant was advised not to sell the corn, the petition said, but officials found later that the corn had been sold to at least 12 individuals and businesses.

Bingo license pulled

AUSTIN (AP) — Comptroller Bob Bullock suspended Friday the bingo license of Pull Lodge 118 of Houston, saying the operator gave only 1.84 percent of the gross receipts to charity.

"When the voters approved charity bingo games in Texas, they meant just that — bingo games that would use money tu support charity activities," Bullock said, "Those who won't live up to that requirement aren't going to hold bingo licenses."

Bullock said bingo operators are required on their January reports to show they distributed a minimum of 35 percent of their adjusted gross receipts to charity.

The comptroller's suspension order said Pull Lodge 118 reported it made charitable distributions of $7,585 out of $412,138 in gross receipts, about 1.84 percent.

Hustler liable in death

HOUSTON (AP) — A Channelview woman says a jury found Hustler magazine liable in the accidental hanging death of her 14-year-old son because the public is tired of pornography.

"People are tired of it. They're tired of what it's doing to their children, their husbands, their families. And they'd just rather do something about it, not sit back," said Diana Herceg, who sued Hustler.

Mrs. Herceg sought $1 million in damages from the sexually explicit magazine, alleging her son by a previous marriage — Troy Daniel Dunaway — accidentally hanged himself on Aug. 8, 1981 after reading a Hustler article titled "Orgasm of Death."

A federal jury in U.S. District Judge Woodrow Seals court on Friday awarded $182,000 to Mrs. Herceg and Andy Vines, a family friend who discovered Dunaway's body.

Thrift store head ousted

DALLAS (AP) — The suspended head of the Salvation Army's $3.2 million Dallas thrift store operation has been forced to retire from the organization because he allegedly transferred a donated boat into his name, Salvation Army officials said.

An investigation by the charity concluded that Maj. Lairon T. White violated the organization's rules.

County against farm workers' picket laws

HEREFORD (AP) — Deaf Smith County has decided to appeal a federal court decision that struck down seven Texas laws restricting picketing activities, although the state Attorney General's Office already has opted against an appeal.

Meeting in closed session Sept. 3, county commissioners and certain unnamed vegetable growers agreed that if growers would pay legal fees, the county would appeal the decision in the "Gault" case, according to minutes from the meeting obtained by the Amarillo Globe-News.

At the recommendation of Deaf Smith County Commissioner Austin Rose, commissioners approved the agreement "on condition that the county not pay the fees," the minutes state.

"We were willing to let it ride right there," Deaf Smith County Judge Glen Nelson told the Globe-News Friday. He said the county decided to appeal "because of the vegetable growers. They were the ones that wanted to appeal it. They were gonna fight it the whole way."

In the Aug. 7 "Gault" opinion, U.S. District Judge Mary Lou Robinson struck down seven Texas laws restricting the right of workers to picket.

In the ruling, Ms. Robinson found in favor of Texas Rural Legal Aid, the Texas Farm Workers Union and several individual plaintiffs in two different cases that had been consolidated.

The ruling held that vegetable growers and their trade unions could no longer employ civil restraints to stop farm workers from organizing labor unions.

And the decision forbids law enforcement agencies from enforcing Texas criminal statutes that restrict people's ability to organize into labor unions.

Specifically, the laws limit the amount of picketing in a given area near a workplace; forbid picketing that stops or intimidates non-picketing employees from working; forbid picketing that presents libelous and slanderous statements.

Speeches complete, U.N. party's over

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Not everyone agreed when Pakistani President Mohammad Zia ul-Haq said at the close of the United Nation's 40th birthday celebration that it had been "an outstanding success."

Many delegates were disappointed that a committee of more than 100 national representatives could not agree on an anniversary declaration of purpose.

But from the 230 speeches leading up to the anniversary and more than 300 bilateral meetings of world leaders who gathered for it, some new proposals and encouraging diplomatic activity emerged.

Pakistani Prince Sadruddin Aga Khan, who spent 11 years as U.N. high commissioner for refugees, said the commemorative session generated goodwill and diplomatic initiatives.

He mentioned in particular the apparent thaw between Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Pakistan's Zia, who met and decided to start talks on trade, border issues and nuclear reassurance.

"If the personal chemistry that worked between Zia and Gandhi can be kept up you've won half the battle," he said.

Another initiative was Israeli Prime Minister Shimon Peres' offer to go to Jordan for peace talks. He also softened the Israeli position on the Arabs' demand that peace discussions take place at an international conference.

The prime minister of South Korea met with the vice president of North Korea for five minutes at a reception in the first such high-level contact between representatives of the countries.

Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze spent nearly half an hour in conversation with Peres at a reception given by President Reagan. Israel and the Soviet Union have no diplomatic relations.

Peres also met with Polish Foreign Minister Stefan Olzowski. Israeli sources said the talks facilitated the re-establishment of low-level diplomatic relations between the two countries, which broke ties after the 1967 Middle East war.

Reagan had a chance to soothe the feelings of Italian Premier Bettino Craxi, whose coalition government fell after it released a Palestine Liberation Organization official charged by the United States with involvement in the Achille Lauro cruise ship hijacking.

Reagan also met for a second time with Shevardnadze to prepare the ground for the November summit with Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

New Zealand's deputy prime minister, Geoffrey Palmer, and French Foreign Minister Roland Dumas agreed to set up teams to negotiate a solution to the crisis caused when French agents blew up a Greenpeace protest ship in New Zealand.

"The question is, how are you going to keep the momentum going after such meetings?" said Prince Sadruddin.

One of the new proposals came from the president of Bangladesh, Lt. Gen. Hussain Mohammad Ershad, who called for an international "Peace Corps" of youth volunteers.

At a commemorative meeting of the Security Council, Thailand's foreign minister, Air Chief Marshall Siddi Savetsila, suggested the council's staff include trained observers able "to investigate any dispute or situation which might lead to international friction."

HOW THEY VOTED

House votes to extend Daylight Savings Time

Hearst News Service

NATION

WASHINGTON — Votes of area members of Congress on key issues during the week ending Oct. 25, 1985.

KEY HOUSE VOTES

House Approves Extension Of Daylight Savings Time. The House approved a plan to begin daylight saving time (DTS) on the first Sunday in April and end it on the first Sunday in November by a 240-157 vote Oct. 22.

DST currently begins on the last Sunday in April and ends on the last Sunday in October. Congress imposed six months of DST on the nation with the 1966 Uniform Time Act. Only Arizona, Hawaii and part of Indiana chose to remain on standard time all year.

The measure was supported by many urban lawmakers as a way to increase energy conservation and improve traffic safety. Supporters also argued that extended daylight hours would lower crime rates and make Halloween safer for children.

Opponents argued that an extension of DST would place an unreasonable burden on farmers who would be forced to work in darkness during early morning hours. They also said that children in rural areas would be forced to wait for the school bus in darkness as a result of the extension. "What this bill really boils down to is that rural citizens will be put to some disadvantage in order that urban citizens can enjoy an extra hour of light in the evening," declared Rep. Pat Roberts, R-Kan.

Voting for daylight saving time extension: Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-San Antonio.

Voting against: Reps. Tom Loeffler, R-Hunt; Larry Combest, R-Lubbock, Beau Boulter, R-Amarillo.

Voting against: Rep. John Breaux, D-Crowley, La.

KEY SENATE VOTES

Trade Limits On Textiles And Shoes Approved By Senate. Lobbyists for the U.S. textile, appareland footwear industries scored a major victory Oct. 24 whenthe Senate attached anamendment designed to protect those industries to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 by a vote of 54-42.

The reconciliation bill contains adjustments inboth budget authority and revenues for a wide range of programs. It embodies committees' proposals for changes in tax and spending laws, "reconciling" them to conform with spending reductions and revenue increases required bythe congressional budget resolution adopted last summer. Members of Congress are under extreme pressure toreduce the deficit, and the reconciliation package is designed to save $85.7 billion over the next three years.

The Amendment's supporters argued that the measure would control inflation and encourage investment. The United States, they said, was losing jobs because of unfair competition and the Reagan administration has refused to do anything about it.

Opponents said that the budget reconciliation process was not the place for this amendment and that trade protectionism is counterproductive. "I shall work to see that the president vetoes this reconciliation bill if this (amendment) is a part of it," declared Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Voting to approve trade limits on textiles and footwear: Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas.

Voting against: Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas.

Senate Kills Move To Delay Medicare Coverage Of State Employees. The Senate killed a measure that would have delayed the mandatory Medicare coverage of current state and local employees for one year. The measure, tabled by a vote of 66-25 Oct. 22, would have raised the cigarette tax from the current level of 16 cents to 20 cents for a period of three years to cover the revenues lost by the federal government as a result of the delay.

The amendment was attached to the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, which contains sections requiring that all state and local government employees be covered under Medicare as of Sept. 30, 1986. The amendment would have delayed coverage only for current employees, not for new employees. As employers, state and ounicipalities would have to pay Medicare fees.

Supporters of the motion to table the amendment argued that most state and local employees are now eligible for Medicare benefits but pay no fees into the Medicare system. They also argued that the reconciliation package was a carefully crafted compromise that would fall apart if a cigarette tax were added to pay for the revenues that would be lost by delaying Medicare coverage of state employees.

Opponents of the motion to kill the amendment said that the delay in coverage was necessary to give the local governments time to raise the revenues needed for the employer's portion of the Medicare fees.

Voting to kill the amendment to delay state employees' Medicare enrollment: Gramm.

Voting against: Bentsen.

Senate Hits Automakers For Lagging On Fuel Efficiency. The Senate added a provision to the reconciliation bill Oct. 23 that would deny auto manufacturers the opportunity to earn "credits" from meeting automobile fuel efficiency standards that manufacturers recently succeeded in getting lowered. A motion to table the amendment failed 46-48, and the proposal was subsequently adopted on a voice vote.

The Department of Transportation announced Oct. 1 that automakers' new car fleets for the 1986 model year would have to average 26 miles per gallon (mpg), rather than the 27.5 mpg standard set in 1975. Credits for exceeding the standards in one year can be applied in later years against performance that fails to meet fuel efficiency standards.

Supporters of the motion to table argued that falure to give the credits would cost jobs and increase sales of imported cars at the expense of domestic models.

Opponents of the motion to kill the amendment argued that manufacturers should not be rewarded for exceeding the 26 mpg standard after failing to meet the 27.5 mpg goal.

Voting to kill the amendment suspending fuel efficiency credits: Gramm. Voting against: Bentsen.

House eyes forced balanced budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Democrats are raising questions about whether President Reagan would go along with mandated cuts in military spending that could be triggered by a plan to force a balanced federal budget by 1991.

The answers to their questions are critical to the future of the landmark proposal.

Congressional negotiators considering the Senate-passed plan to erase budget deficits by 1991 are set to begin serious bargaining this week in an attempt to draft a version that can pass both houses of Congress.

They have spent the last two weeks trying to understand the implications of the proposal for the way the government does business.

Under the Senate plan that Reagan has embraced, there would be statutory ceilings on budget deficits, beginning with $180 billion in the current fiscal year and decreasing by $36 billion a year until zero is reached in 1991.

If Congress and the White House are unable to agree on steps to meet the annual goals, the plan would direct the president to impose automatic, across-the-board spending cuts

So far, critics also are questioning:

— The constitutional implications of the automatic cuts that could be triggered in the plan and whether this represents an udue transfer of power from Congress to the White House.

— Whether such automatic actions, regardless of the nation's economic condition, could set off a string of recessions.

— How to figure when the automatic cuts should be triggered and then what would be cut.

— What is the base line to be used as the yardstick for determining whether specified goals are being met.

Takeover threat in Phillipines worries Bush

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President George Bush has joined those in the U.S. government expressing concern about the threat of a communist takeover in the Philippines.

But Bush said in an interview with The Associated Press on Friday he can't be sure President Ferdinand Marcos would adopt the political and economic reforms Washington is urging on him.

"We are concerned," Bush said in the interview. "I can't quantify that concern, but I think that all the leaders of the...Pacific rim countries have common ground on this."

"Obviously, we do not want to see an unfriendly communist takeover there," Bush said.

Bush said the two American bases in the Philippines — the Subic Bay naval base and Clark Air Base — are essential to American security. He said the United States should not be looking for alternative sites, as some members of Congress suggest.

"They are so important that I think it is essential that we maintain them there and we are not out looking for alternatives," he said.

Other administration officials, including senior officials in the Pentagon and the State Department, have warned publicly that the communists could be in a position to seize power in three to five years if present trends continue.

The Pentagon has been exploring possible alternatives for U.S. bases in the region in the event the United States has to abandon the Philippines bases in the event of a communist takeover.

Two possible locations that have received preliminary consideration are Tinian and Guam. Neither is as ideally situated as the Philippines, however, and the cost of moving the bases has been tentatively put at $8 billion.

American officials estimate the size of the communist insurgency known as the New Peoples' Army at up to 15,000 fighters, although Marcos disputes this figure.

Baby Fae's doctor maintains hope for baboon heart transplants

CORONADO, Calif. (AP) — Still dreaming of saving infants with fatal heart defects, the surgeon who put a baboon heart into Baby Fae a year ago Saturday says he hopes to do it again, despite criticism that such transplants are folly.

"We all want to achieve the same ends" of saving the lives of babies with severely malformed hearts, Dr. Leonard Bailey told a meeting of heart surgeons.

AIDS virus confirmed in 44 military blood tests

WASHINGTON (AP) — During three months of screening military blood donors this summer, the Pentagon discovered 44 people who had been exposed to the virus suspected of causing AIDS, according to a confidential internal report.

The 44 cases, however, amount to less than one-tenth of one percent of the 62,000 individuals who were screened, raising questions about how much of a threat the disease currently poses to the military.

The results also provide fresh evidence of how unreliable the blood test that is used for mass screening can be, and of the potential drain on medical resources that the Pentagon faces in confirming initial results, said Defense Department officials who discussed the report on condition they not be identified.

The 44 cases were discovered among 500 individuals who initially tested positive, the report said. The remaining 456 individuals were given a clean bill of health, but only after additional, expensive medical exams.

Nonetheless, Pentagon officials say the Defense Department will proceed with its plan to eventually test the blood of all active-duty military personnel and reserves.

Failure to establish such monitoring as quickly as possible could allow the disease to spread undetected, eventually jeopardizing combat readiness and wartime medical care, they say.

AIDS, short for acquired immune deficiency syndrome, is a fatal disease that attacks the body's immune system. It has been confined primarily to homosexuals, intravenous drug users and individuals who received tainted blood transfusions, although there is now some evidence the disease is spreading to the general population.

The blood screen now being employed by the Pentagon can do no more than indicate a person has been exposed to the suspected AIDS virus, and not whether he will actually contract the disease.

As of Sept. 30, according to the Pentagon report, 62,174 military personnel who volunteered donations of blood had been screened. Of those 62,174, 500 tested positive, suggesting exposure to the virus.

Those 500 were administered the same test a second or even third time, with 192 again testing positive and being classified "repeatedly reactive," the sources continued.

Those 192 were then given a much more sophisticated test, known as the Western Blot blood screen. It was that procedure which confirmed the 44 cases. The confirmations translate to a rate of 0.07 percent of those tested, the sources noted.

"What it says is that there is no huge number of individuals in the military right now who are showing evidence of exposure," said one source. "But nothing should minimize the seriousness of AIDS."

"It's a very frightening thing and it can't be dismissed," agreed another source.

"That 0.07 percent rate is higher than the 0.04 percent rate being reported by civilian blood agencies. And if you apply it against the active-duty population of 2.1 million, that's still 1,400-plus cases."

Overall, however, military medical officials are viewing the initial figures with some relief, one source said.

"We do expect our rate could be somewhat higher, because our military population may be more sexually active than the general population," one explained. "But the people who have suggested the military rates are going to be very large are going to be wrong."

The Pentagon began screening the blood donated to military blood banks on July 1. The move followed the lead of civilian agencies like the Red Cross and represented the Defense Department's first response to the disease's appearance.

NATION IN BRIEF

Abuse may cause multiple personalities

CHICAGO (AP) — The bizarre phenomenon of multiple personalities, brought to public attention through such movies as "Three Faces of Eve," is beginning to be taken seriously by psychiatry.

More doctors are accepting the disorder, say researchers at an international conference winding up today.

The conference is sponsored by Rush-Presbyterian-St. Luke's Medical Center, which established its inpatient Dissociative Disorders program in 1984 and now has a waiting list of 25 patients.

Ninety-seven percent of patients with multiple personality disorders were abused as children, a researcher reported at the conference from data collected in the largest study to date of such patients.

Of those abused, 48 percent were mistreated in all of four categories covered by the study — neglect, physical mistreatment, psychological mistreatment and sexual abuse, reported St. Louis pyschologist Rosalyn Schultz.

International crew set

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — When space shuttle Challenger soars into orbit Wednesday for a scientific mission with a record eight-member international crew, a foreign country will control the shuttle payload for the first time.

The crew of five Americans, two West Germans and a Dutchman is scheduled to lift off at noon EDT and conduct 80 experiments, most of them West German, in the pressurized Spacelab workshop mounted in the cargo bay.

The Federal German Aerospace Establishment, DFVLR, is paying the National Aeronautics and Space Administration $64 million to carry the experiments into orbit for a week of research. The control center for the experiments will be in Oberpfaffenhofen, near Munich.

Whale returns to bay

RIO VISTA, Calif. (AP) — Humphrey, the 45-ton humpback whale that has wandered for two weeks in the freshwater sloughs and byways of the Sacramento River, returned to the main channel Saturday and headed downstream, back toward San Francisco Bay.

As the whale swam southward, a small motorboat edged next to the bus-sized mammal and a scientist leaned out to stick a suction-cup radio transmitter or homing device on the whale's skin so biologists can keep track of it in the dark water. Similar beacons have been used to track whales in the wild.

"Humphrey" became trapped in the river two weeks ago after making a wrong turn into San Francisco Bay on its migration south.

Heart patients wait

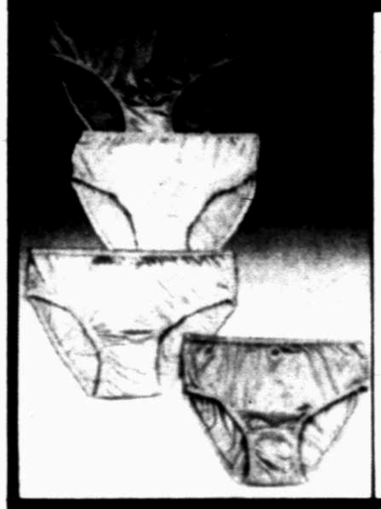

PITTSBURGH (AP) — One of Pennsylvania's two artificial heart recipients said he was "rooting" for the other Saturday as they waited for human organ transplants, hospital officials said.

Thomas J. Gaidosh, 47, who received a Jarvik-7 heart Thursday, remained in critical condition in Presbyterian-University Hospital of Pittsburgh following an "uneventful night," officials reported.

Two die in fighting as Lebanese factions draft peace treaty

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Top Christian and Moslem militia officials met in Syria Saturday to finish drafting a peace treaty that would end Lebanon's 10-year-old civil war, while sectarian fighting continued on several Beirut fronts, killing at least two people.

Five hours of sporadic tank, artillery and mortar exchanges across Beirut's dividing Green Line and in the mountains east of the capital killed two people and injured 10, police reported.

The Central News Agency, which is close to the government, said Christian officials accused the radical Shiite Moslem Hezbollah, or Party of God, of shelling Christian sectors, seeking to provoke clashes and sabotage the peace efforts. Hezbollah officials were not available for comment.

Hezbollah is a fundamentalist faction loyal to Iran's revolutionary patriarch, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini. It opposes the peace talks because of the Christians' former links with Israel.

Hezbollah also is challenging Justice Minister Nabih Berri, whose Amal militia is among those negotiating in the Syrian capital of Damascus, for leadership of Lebanon's 1 million Shiite Moslems.

The Lebanese army command, based in Christian east Beirut, said Christian army units along the Green Line were fired on by Moslem militias but were ordered not to retaliate, apparently to prevent an escalation in fighting.

Still, some Christian militia positions fired back. Christian officials, who spoke on condition of anonymity, warned that Christian militias would respond strongly if Moslem shelling continued and stressed the fighting would endanger the peace process.

The battles broke out as senior representatives of the three main Christian and Moslem militias left by road for Damascus for the fifth round of negotiations to end the war.

They met at the office of Abdul-Halim Khaddam, Syria's vice president who masterminded the peace accord that was hammered out in several weeks of closed-door negotiations in Damascus.

Syrian officials said the meeting lasted five hours and will resume later. None of the Lebanese militia officials made any comment when the talks adjourned.

But sources close to the negotiations said they expect a draft treaty to be drawn up during the weekend. They said the draft will call for an equal share of power between Christians, who have dominated Lebanon since independence from France in 1943, and Moslems.

The talks were attended by Mohammed Baydoun, a leading politburo member of the Amal movement; Akram Shehayeb, deputy commander of the Druse Progressive Socialist Party militia; and Michel Samaha and Assad Shaftari, senior advisers to Elie Hobeika, leader of the Christian Lebanese Force militia.

All were accompanied by legal advisers who will help write the accord to lay down "the foundations of a lasting solution," the sources reported.

Hobeika, Berri and Druse warlord Walid Jumblatt are expected to sign the treaty within the next two weeks to end the civil war, which has killed more than 100,000 people since April 1975.

It would be the first time all three have met face to face.

Syria, which has armed the Moslem militias and is the main power broker in Lebanon, will sign the pact as guarantor, the sources said.

The accord is the first hammered out by Lebanon's warlords. Previous agreements signed by political leaders foundered because they do not control the heavily armed militias.

President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, has not been directly involved in the peace talks. Syrian and Lebanese sources said last week he reluctantly endorsed the pact, which would trim his powers.

WORLD in brief

South African women arrested at station

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Police Saturday arrested 24 white and three black women, including three Roman Catholic nuns, who had gathered at a Soweto police station to protest the army presence in black townships, witnesses said.

Witnesses also reported that soldiers in Soweto, the black township outside Johannesburg, fired tear gas at stone-throwing black mourners returning from the funeral of a 6-year-old boy who reportedly died fleeing security forces.

Areas around Cape Town were reported quiet Saturday, the first day that a state of emergency was in force there. Police said they shot dead two blacks in rioting near Cape Town late Friday.

White Cape Town residents, nervous about anti-apartheid riots that have spilled into their neighborhoods, flooded police switchboards Saturday with anxious phone calls about blaring sirens, only to be told the noise came from vintage rescue equipment in a mid-morning parade.

The state of emergency affected 36 communities when imposed July 21. President P.W. Botha withdrew the decree in six areas Thursday night, but a day later extended it to the Cape Town area, where at least 60 people have been reported killed in recent rioting.

Emergency rule empowers police to arrest without warrant, impose curfews, seize property, seal off areas and restrict news coverage.

Mexico airlines to strike?

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The nation's two airlines were negotiating with pilots, flight crews and ground workers in hopes of averting strikes scheduled for next week.

A spokesman for Mexicana de Aviacion, which faces a Nov. 1 strike deadline, has reached contract settlements with pilots and flight attendants but was still bargaining with ground crews, the daily newspaper Excelsior reported Friday.

Aeromexico's workers have threatened to strike Nov. 6 and have yet to reach agreements. Excelsior quoted airline spokesmen as saying a settlement was near with pilots and flight crews but that the 6,500 ground workers were making unrealistic demands.

Spokesmen for both airlines noted that tourism has fallen sharply since last month's earthquakes.

French may aid Jews

PARIS (NYT) — Prime Minister Shimon Peres of Israel said on Friday that France had offered to help Jews emigrate from the Soviet Union by flying them directly to Israel if Moscow agreed to permit it.

Peres disclosed the French offer at a news conference Friday after meeting with President Francois Mitterrand, under whose government relations between Israel and France have significantly improved.

Peres's decision to discuss the offer publicly at this time tended to support reports circulating in diplomatic circles that the Soviet Union had signaled that it might be prepared to countenance such flights — and increases in Jewish emigration — after the summit meeting in November between President Reagan and the Soviet leader, Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

British protest bombs

LONDON (AP) — An estimated 80,000 people marched peacefully past the U.S. and Soviet embassies Saturday in a demonstration designed to pressure the superpowers into ending their arms race.

Participants waved banners reading, "Human Race or Nuclear Race."

The rally, organized by the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament, Britain's leading peace movement, was much smaller than a 1983 demonstration by the same group that drew 250,000 people. Police put the number of demonstrators Saturday at 80,000.

Shultz to visit Canada

OTTAWA (AP) — Secretary of State George P. Shultz visits Canada on Monday to discuss a possible free-trade deal between the United States and Canada, the world's biggest trading partners, and a long list of other topics.

In four hours of talks in Calgary, Alberta, Shultz is expected to brief Foreign Secretary Joe Clark on the fast-moving preparations for next month's summit meeting in Geneva between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev, officials said, including Shultz's own plans to visit Moscow next week.

Growers stalk wine in wilds of Africa

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Nigel Pavitt says his red wine is similar to an Italian Bardolino. John D'Olier compares his white to a Colombard from central California or a French dry from Alsace.

Kenya's first homegrown grape wines are in the bottle, products of an infant industry in a country better known for its wildlife.

Pavitt, managing director of Kenya Wine Agencies Ltd., and D'Olier, the country's first estate grower, are pioneers in Kenyan viticulture, which is already making a dent in Kenya's bill for imported wines. They hope to produce quality vintages that will bought outside East Africa.

D'Olier and Pavitt attended a luncheon recently to introduce the first grape wines — a white called Naivasha Dry White '85 and a red labeled Ol Doinyo Keri, a Masai term for snowcapped Mount Kenya.

The new vintages join two white wines made from pawpaws, fruits similar to papayas, and a rose produced seasonally from plums grown in the highlands around Nairobi. Kenya Wine Agencies introduced the fruit wines in March 1983 as a first tentative step toward breaking into an industry dominated by the giants — France, Italy and California.

But D'Olier, who grew and pressed the grapes for the white wine and sold it in bulk to the government-owned Kenya Wine Agencies for bottling and marketing, was not intimidated.

"We could produce a wine as good as anywhere in the world," said D'Olier, a native Kenyan from a settler family that once grew coffee. He now has a 50-acre vineyard along the shore of Lake Naivasha about 60 miles northwest of Nairobi.

AP Laserphoto

As maker of Kenya's first estate wine, Hohn D'Olier lefts a glass of Navaisha Dry White '85 in his vineyard.

Pavitt said, "Wine-making is an art, and we learn by experience. There are no short cuts to making fine wines, and we don't pretend to know all the answers."

D'Olier's vineyard is only about 50 miles south of the Equator and at an altitude of 6,200 feet.

His American wife, Eleanor, helped inspire the planting of the vineyard three years ago with vines from California, her home state. But she said she and her husband encountered polite disbelief when they outlined their hopes for a first grape crop at a convention last year of the American Society of Enology and Viticulture in San Diego, Calif.

"People were incredulous. They said you can't grow wine at that altitude — and on the Equator," said Mrs. D'Olier, who comes from Los Angeles and has relatives with vineyards in central California.

"We've proved them wrong," D'Olier said. "The soil is suitable and the climate in Naivasha makes it possible to combine temperate and tropical crops."

Naivasha has hot, sunny days and cool nights. D'Olier said the climate is similar to that around Lodi, Calif., a wine-producing area south of Sacramento.

The grapes that produced the red Ol Doinyo Keri were bought by Kenya Wine Agencies from small, experimental vineyards in Langata just outside Nairobi and in Makindu, about 100 miles southeast of the capital along the road to the Indian Ocean. Kenya Wine Agencies pressed the grapes and bottled the wine.

The crops of both red and white grapes were very limited this year because the vines have not fully matured. Kenya Wine Agencies managed to produce only 900 bottles of Ol Doinyo Keri red, which along with D'Olier's Naivasha white have started to appear at Nairobi vintners and on the wine lists of local restaurants.

The red retails for 54.45 Kenya shillings (about $3.20) a bottle and the white for 62 shillings ($3.65).

The 25 acres that D'Olier has planted in white grapes yielded only six metric tons early this year.

Half of test-tube baby attempts fail

LONDON (AP) — An Australian study published Saturday suggests that nearly half of all women who are impregnated through the test-tube baby technique fail to give birth and about 20 percent of the remainder have twins or triplets.

The study published in the British Medical Journal, official publication of the British Medical Association, also found that women undergoing the treatment are about three times more likely than other mothers to give birth prematurely. Because of the greater number of premature and multiple births, the rate of low birthweight also is higher among test-tube babies, according to the study by the National Perinatal Statistics Unit at the University of Sydney.

The researchers said, however, they found no evidence that the technique, known scientifically as in vitro fertilization, carries greater risk of major birth deformities. Problems that arise could be linked to the infertility of women who undergo the treatment, they speculated.

They said the findings of "high fetal losses at all stages of pregnancy suggested maternal reproductive causes and should not be interpreted as being due to factors peculiar to in vitro fertilization."

They also cautioned that further research involving larger numbers of patients will be needed before any conclusions can be drawn.

An estimated 1,000 test-tube babies have been born worldwide since the world's first, Louise Joy Brown, was born in Oldham, England, in 1978. The technique is most often used in women who have defects of the Fallopian tubes, the site of normal fertilization.

In the test-tube technique, a woman's ova, or eggs, are surgically removed and fertilized with the prospective father's sperm in a laboratory dish. After a few days, the fertilized embryo is replaced in the uterus in hopes that it will implant and a normal pregnancy will follow.

Conditions forecast for 8 p.m. Sunday

In West Texas, partly cloudy Sunday and Sunday night and sunny Monday. Lows mid 40s mountains and far west to upper 50s valleys of southwest. Highs 70s except near 90 Big Bend.

In North Texas, a chance of showers east through Monday, otherwise mostly cloudy through Monday. Lows mid 50s to mid 60s. Highs mid 70s to lower 80s.

In South Texas, mostly cloudy southeast and along the coast to partly cloudy west and central through Monday. A chance of mainly daytime thundershowers southeast, coast and coastal plains. Lows mostly in the 80s except 70s along the upper coast.

Fog should be clearing from Basin

From Staff and Wire Reports

Midlanders may have seen the last of the fog for awhile, according to the National Weather Service at Midland Regional Air Terminal.

Although this morning will have considerable fog cover, it should burn off to partly cloudy skies by the afternoon with high temperatures in the mid-70's and easterly winds at 5 to 15 mph.

Tonight and Monday will be mostly fair with low temperatures in the upper 40's and highs expected in the mid-70's.

The highest temperature recorded for Saturday's date was 90 degrees in 1950. A low of 33 degrees was recorded in 1967 for today's date.

STATE

Rain and thunderstorms spawned by Tropical Storm Juan pounded the Texas Gulf coast Saturday, and forecasters predicted some gusts could reach gale-force by Sunday.

Beaches on the southern tip of Texas were closed Saturday as the 10th named storm of the 1985 Atlantic hurricane season continued moving westward several hundred miles off the coast.

A spokeswoman for the Cameron County Sheriff's Department said two beaches, Andy Bowie and Boca Chica, were closed on either side of the ship channel in Brownsville.

Dispatcher Darla Peters said high tides forced the closures. The National Weather Service posted small craft advisories and issued a gale watch from Brownsville to the mouth of the Mississippi River.

Workers at an oil rig about 100 miles southeast of Port Arthur reported winds gusting to 66 mph.

The large area of rain and thunderstorms associated with Juan extended from east of Port Arthur to about 60 miles east of Brownsville, the weather service said.

NATION

Rain fell in scattered regions around the nation on Saturday, as Hawaii braced for Hurricane Nele and Tropical Storm Juan brought rain to the northern Gulf of Mexico and into southern Louisiana.

Nele, packing winds up to 110 mph, was about 485 miles southwest of Honolulu and moving northnortheast at 10 to 15 mph. Forecasters said it could pass just west of the island of Kauai on Sunday.

On Oahu, where 80 percent of Hawaii's population of one million lives, residents were urged to tie down loose items outside or move them inside.

Convention speaker stresses media's role

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

One of Texas' leading Republican businessmen says many Americans are "so far apart from the values that are depicted on television that they feel alienated from society."

Dr. William S. Banowsky, president of the Dallas-based Gaylord Broadcasting Company, was in Midland Saturday to speak to the Texas Federation of Republican Women during its statewide convention.

In his keynote speech, Banowsky described the mass media as "free enterprise run amok."

"Television is probably having more influence on our children than traditional values, the family and the home," said Banowsky.

"If we can pass a law that says you have to wear seatbelts, then why can't we pass a law that says you can't peddle this smut?" he asked.

Gaylord Broadcasting Company, the nation's largest privately-owned broadcasting firm, operates television and radio stations across the country as well as television and theatrical motion picture companies.

The company also operates Opryland, U.S.A., the Grand Ole Opry production company, Opryland Hotel, Opryland theme park and the Nashville Network.

A five-generation Texan, Banowsky is a past Republican National committeeman from California. In 1973, he served on the executive committee of the Republican National Committee under then Chairman George Bush. In 1974, Time magazine named him one of America's top 200 leaders of the future.

Prior to entering the broadcasting field, he served in the ministry and as president of two major universities — Pepperdine University at Malibu, Calif. from 1970-78, and the University of Oklahoma at Norman, Okla., from 1978-85.

In 1981, Ronald Reagan appointed Banowsky to the Intergovernmental Advisory Council on Education, and in 1984 to the Board of the Public Broadcasting System.

Banowsky is the recipient of the American Bar Association's Liberty Bell Award, the Jewish National Council's Distinguished Educator Award; and the Freedom's Foundation at Valley Forge George Washington Medal.

In addition, Banowsky serves as a director of the Oklahoma Publishing Company, Thrifty Corporation, National Medical Enterprises, Emmett & Chandler Companies, Flemming Companies, Oklahoma Gas and Electric Company, and is a member of the National Executive Board of the Boy Scouts of America.

Banowsky cited pornographic lyrics found in rock n' roll music as an example of the media's influence on society.

Pornography "is difficult to define, but I agree with the Supreme Court justice who said, 'I don't know how to define it, but I know what it is when I see it,'" Banowsky said.

He added, "I believe in censorship, but I believe in self-censorship."

"We are in a battle for the minds of men and women, particularly our young people and, in order to win the battle, we're going to have to be tough-minded," said Banowsky. "This is not a battle, this is the battle."

Limited alternatives await the 'unsuccessful' student

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The Texas Legislature dictates students who don't pass, don't play.

But many scholars who are concerned about a potential increase in the state's dropout rate say the Legislature failed to consider that students who don't pass won't stay in school.

The National Labor Relations Council reports 52 percent of the U.S. population did not complete high school. Of those, 1.5 million persons failed to complete the eighth grade and 240,000 failed to complete one year of education.

In Midland, as many as 15,000 citizens did not complete high school while about 3,500 received less than a fifth-grade education, according to Barbara Gideon, director of Adult Basic Education at Midland College.

"With our society becoming more technological and sophisticated, it makes (a high school diploma) more vital. Sixteen percent of all vocational jobs require less than a high school diploma," Ms. Gideon said. "If we continue that trend with our young people, we have a real problem."

According to local education officials, new state mandates — particularly the exit-level test and rules governing social promotion and extracurricular activities — may not resolve the problem. They fear such laws will only result in a higher dropout rate among high school students.

Then again, others "believe students will be well aware of the higher expectations placed on them," Commissioner of Education Dr. W.N. Kirby has said. "When you expect more from people, they usually rise to meet those expectations."

The Texas Assessment of Minimum Skills test, a math and English exit-level examination, is mandated by House Bill 72 and was first administered Oct. 1 and 2 to 11th graders comprising the 1987 graduating class.

Students who fail the math or English portions of the test will have three opportunities — one more during their junior year and twice during their senior year — to retake the test prior to graduation.

No-pass, no-play — a critical element of the public school reforms — prohibits students from participating in extracurricular activities if they fail one course.

House Bill 72 also prohibits school districts from promoting students who fail to meet academic requirements. Grades must be assigned based on the student's mastery of "essential elements," basic tenets identified as those the student should learn in each course or subject. (Seventy percent of the essential elements must be mastered for the student to receive a grade of 70).

Still, Ms. Gideon contends some high school students will be unsuccessful.

"For some students, public school isn't successful," she said. The General Education Development test "may be a better way."

The GED — a high school equivalency examination that evaluates mastery in the areas of reading, writing, social studies, math and science — is available to any person over the age of 17 who doesn't have a high school diploma.

The tests are administered at testing centers across the state and are recognized as an equivalent to a high school diploma by Texas and all state-supported colleges and universities.

Testicular cancer rate increasing

By RON GILMORE
Staff Writer

It's a disease that men are embarrassed about, admits Dr. David Snyder of Allison Permian Basin Cancer Therapy Center.

But cancer of the testes — the male reproductive glands — is one of the most common cancers in men 15 to 34 years of age, says the American Cancer Society, accounting for 12 percent of all cancer deaths in that group.

Indeed, a recent report from the United Cancer Council stated that the disease is on the increase in national statistics, although the cure rate is rising as well.

"The current increase in the number of cases of testicular cancer is due to the bulge in the population of this age — the 'Baby Boom Generation' — and not due to other events or circumstances," said the report. "The cure rate is rising as well. With early detection, fully 83 percent of all testicular cancer patients can be cured today. Just 20 years ago, the cure rate was only 63 percent."

Snyder sees testicular cancer as "a real success story."

"I attribute the tremendous cure rate to two important developments in the last few years," said Dr. David Snyder of the Allison Cancer Center. "One is the introduction of Cis Platinum, a salt of the heavy metal platinum and the other is the ability to measure certain blood proteins."

"Scientists have recently shown that testicular cancers may produce certain proteins that can be detected in the bloodstream," said a report from the ACS. "Two such proteins are called alpha-fetoprotein (AFP) and human chorionic gonadotropin (HCG). The measurement of these proteins can be helpful in the diagnosis of testicular cancer, as well as in detecting spread of the disease and following the effectiveness of therapy."

While such multi-syllabled medical applications are making breakthroughs in the youthful disease, overcoming the stigma of "losing one's manhood' by the removal of the affected testicle (a necessary procedure for diagnosis) can be likened to the hush-hush status of breast cancer among women, prior to its widespread public acceptance in the 1970's.

"Patients don't like to talk about things like this," said Snyder, referring to diseases of the reproductive organs. "It's embarrassing for them."

Unlike the public awareness campaign inspired by former first lady Betty Ford following the announcement of her own breast cancer, testicular cancer has neither the precedent nor the numbers to be in the public limelight.

"We see about five or six cases a year and that's probably an appropriate number for the population," said Snyder. "Breast cancer, comparatively, is an extremely common disease."

Snyder added that prostate cancer, another disease affecting men — mostly older — is more prevalent.

But still, more than 2,500 cases of testicular cancer are diagnosed in American men each year, said the ACS, and those numbers could be even higher.

"The actual number of cases may be much higher because malignancies that start in the testes and then spread to other sites such as the lymph nodes or lungs, are often reported under the latter sites," said the ACS.

While a relatively minor cancer when compared to its sibling afflictions, testicular cancer's two-sided nature cannot be ignored.

"If caught early, this is one of the most curable of cancers," said the ACS. "If not, it is one of the most deadly."

"It's a biologically aggressive disease," echoed Snyder. "In the case of breast cancer, it can sometimes take up to three years for the 'lump' or tumor to become palpable. In testicular cancer, it's a matter of months."

Detecting the 'lump,' according to the ACS, is the best method toward a prompt diagnosis. And like the brochures which taught millions of American women to do self-examinations of the breasts, the ACS now publishes a similar pamphlet which recommends a simple detection procedure.

Once again, it's time for change

WASHINGTON (AP) — Americans doing chores or driving in the evening will be in the dark starting Sunday, with the switch back to standard time.

Officially, clocks in most of the country were shifted back one hour at 2 a.m., effectively moving an hour of light from the evening to the morning.

The change gives back an hour of sleep lost in April, when daylight time can into use.

But the unaccustomed darkness in the evening can pose a hazard, and the American Optometric Association urges drivers to be especially careful at dusk when visibility can be most difficult.

Reduce speed and turn on car lights, the eye doctors suggest.

Some drivers need different glasses at night than in daytime, they report.

GARY OTT

'Doonesbury' factor: We've lost our sense of humor

A common complaint being aired of late is that the comic strip, Doonesbury, is not as funny as it was before author Garry Trudeau took a self-imposed sabbatical a couple of years ago.

When it returned to print, Trudeau's characters had grown up, most going from the college environment to the business world. Some even married and in at least one case a child was born.

As the author explained, for the strip to maintain its relevancy it had to deal with reality, and that included having students eventually joining the work force. Even your most dedicated, "professional students," he reasoned, will move on to other things after a decade or so of hanging out on campus. If for no other reason, boredom sets in. So does the nagging lack of funds. Even the most understanding parents will tire of footing the bill for a never-ending pursuit of that elusive degree. Likewise, friends can grow weary of putting you up for a weekend that, somehow, invariably turns into a month or more.

And, since Trudeau has a Pulitzer to his credit, who are we to argue?

Still, it is hard to adjust to the changes in his strip. When you grew up feeling like the characters — especially Mark, Zonker and Michael — were a part of your family, you hate to see them showing signs of maturity. They should remain young and impulsive. Their biggest concerns should be avoiding graduation and fighting the disco craze. These were the personality traits we first got to know and we don't want them to change, even though disco did us all a favor and died several years ago.

Having said that, though, I can see Trudeau's point. People do change and when you are creating a strip that deals with modern-day happenings it is imperative the characters resemble real people. We're not talking Dennis the Menace, here. Or, Nancy. Or, even Blondie, for that matter.

No, Doonesbury is different. It is a satire on the times in which we live. And a very good one. At least two presidents, Ford and Carter, have said they viewed the comic strip as a better reflection on Washington than the "serious" writings of all the so-called political pundits combined.

Trudeau has been accused — perhaps with some justification — of being out of touch with today's world because of his liberal slant, although an argument could be made against that assumption since some of his best, and most memorable, strips were those that incorporated sharp jabs at Teddy Kennedy, Jerry Brown and Tip O'Neill.

But, really, politics — conservative or liberal — is not the issue. Humor is and, more to the point, whether the strip has begun to show signs of growing stale.

Here's a vote in the affirmative. It's a reluctant vote, but a firm one, nonetheless.

By the same token, I refuse to place all the blame at the feet of Trudeau. That would be too harsh. Instead, I take this opportunity to issue a general indictment against society as a whole.

In short, we have lost our sense of humor. We refuse to laugh, particularly at ourselves. Life has become too serious. We have become a people obsessed with single issues — whether it be abortion, nuclear war, prayer in schools or whatever.

This is not to say these are not serious issues. They are. But, by the same token, it seems we've lost sight of the overall picture — which is life its ownself and, if I may say so, life should be laughed at. Otherwise, we'll all go crazy.

Perhaps Art Buchwald said it best. He once wrote a column entitled, "The Day America Stopped Laughing." It was written in the mid-1970s. He was ahead of his time.

It should have been aimed at America today. And, that's too bad.

GED

According to Ms. Gideon, one-third of all secondary education credentials issued by the state of Texas in 1984-85 were done so by means of the GED.

She said 126 students were enrolled in GED study courses in September at Midland College. Fifteen others earned GED certificates.

"We have seen an increase in enrollment and inquiries by young students," Ms. Gideon said, but "I would never encourage a student to drop out of school.... If a kid comes in who's in high school, I will suggest that he go back down there and do it right."

The GED is "not a give-away," Ms. Gideon asserted. The test first was administered after World War II to "credentially certify young men who dropped out of school to serve their country."

Today, 80 percent of all GED students are between the ages of 18 and 45. State statistics reveal the 15,000 Texas adults who received the GED in 1980 will earn $35 million more annually than their non-certified counterparts, she reported.

"We feel good about our GED graduates," Ms. Gideon said. "The motivation that exists for some students amazes me."

She cautioned, however, that the "burden of responsibility is on the student."

"Our staff is here and willing to make it happen any way they can, but the individual must pass the test," she said. "It may be their only viable alternative."

CANCER

"Your best hope for early detection of testicular cancer is a simple three-minute monthly self-examination," says the brochure. "The best time is after a warm bath or shower when the scrotal skin is most relaxed. Roll each testicle gently between the thumb and fingers of both hands. If you find any hard lumps or nodules, you should see your doctor promptly. They may not be malignant but only your doctor can make the diagnosis."

Snyder admits he is not sure why the disease appears primarily in young men, but agrees with the ACS that there is one over-riding risk factor — undescended testicles.

"Men who have an undescended testicle or partially undescended testicle are at a much higher risk of developing testicular cancer than others," said the ACS.

"In the male fetus, the testes are formed up in the body near the kidneys," said the ACS. "In normal development, they descend to the scrotum (the pouch in which they are encased) shortly after birth. If they fail to descend, or descend after the age of 6, the chance of developing testicular cancer in later years is increased — cancer occurs in 11 to 15 percent of undescended testes.

"If this abnormality — undescended testes — is found in an infant, it can be easily corrected. Parents can help prevent this cancer by seeing to it that every male infant is medically checked to assure proper descent of the testes."

Still, anxieties about the disease often prevents early detection.

"Testicular cancer is one of the most curable forms of cancer," said the UCC report. "However, fear of impotence and sterility often lead men to delay in seeking treatment. They thus give the cancer time to spread."

"I've seen it when it has spread to the brain and other areas," said Snyder. "It's not always because the man is afraid to be diagnosed, but many times because he doesn't know something is wrong until it has already spread."

The ACS warns of the five early symptoms of testicular cancer.

1. A small, hard lump, usually painless, in a testicle.

2. A heavy feeling in a testicle (extra weight from the tumor growth often feels "heavy" as an early indicator of trouble.)

3. Sudden accumulation of fluid or blood in the scrotum.

4. Swelling or tenderness of the breast.

5. Pain or discomfort in the groin.

While the symptoms are a good sign that testicular cancer may be present, only one procedure can accurately reflect a proper diagnosis, according to Snyder.

"The affected testicle is always removed and examined," said Snyder. The procedure, called an orchiectomy, often takes care of the cancer problem, indicated Snyder, but when it does not, radiation and or chemotherapy may be required.

Rarely does the cancer affect both testicles, added Snyder, and a man will continue to have a healthy sexual life with just one testicle.

And like women who have lost breasts to cancer, plastic surgery is available.

"An artificial testicle made of medical plastic can often be inserted at the time of surgery or it may be inserted at a later date," said the ACS.

The ACS added that even should a patient lose both testicles to the disease, hormone shots can allow him to maintain his sexual potency but not the ability to father children.

Laundry room fire safely extinguished

From Staff Reports

An apartment complex laundry room was found blazing Saturday afternoon when six units of the Midland Fire Department responded to a call, said reports.

The fire, reported at 2 p.m., was confined to the laundry room of the Quail Hollow Apartments, 3001 N. Midland Drive. The complex is owned by BenchMark Properties. The fire was reported by Jay Skinner.

According to reports, the blaze apparently started when spilled gasoline was ignited by the pilot light from a water heater in the utility room.

The fire did little damage and was extinguished in half an hour, reports indicated.

Midland police arrested three men on suspicion of possession of marijuana with a street value of $12,400, said reports. Police said they found 31 large plastic bags of a substance believed to be marijuana and weighing from 7½ to 7¾ pounds in the men's possession. The men were arrested at 5:50 p.m. Friday in the 2500 block of Copus.

Three burglaries were also investigated by the MPD, according to reports.

Bill Thornton reported that a gas-powered generator was stolen about 8:21 a.m. Saturday from Midland Suzuki, 1400 W. Florida.

Patricia Muller, 1003 S. Midkiff, reported an auto burglary at the Lexington Inn, same address, at 9:08 a.m. Saturday.

Phevine Rodriquez, 946 Baird reported the theft of a television, cable box and hand control, with a total value of $500, at 11:40 a.m. Saturday.

Six persons injured in five-car accident

From Staff Reports

ANDREWS — Six people were injured in a five-car pile-up near here early Saturday morning, said a spokesman with the Department of Public Safety.

According to reports, the accident which left an Andrews woman in serious condition at Permian General Hospital in Andrews, occurred at 12:40 a.m. about 12.5 miles south of Andrews near the intersection of FM 1788 and State Highway 385.

The accident occurred when Charles Walker, 48, of Odessa apparently lost control of a a 1981 tractor trailer while trying to stop at the intersection, according to the DPS. The rig, which was westbound on 1788, slid on wet pavement after one of its wheels locked up while braking, said the spokesman.

Four vehicles following the tractor trailer in heavy early morning fog plowed into the rig, which was blocking the roadway.

According to the DPS, Sherry Wake of Andrews did not see the truck in the fog and drove her vehicle under it, seriously injuring a passenger, Holly Cook, 21, of Andrews. The car came to rest about 200 feet north of the truck.

Following the Wake car was a vehicle driven by David Martinez of San Angelo, which he rammed into the back of the trailer, striking a ladder and winding up ahead of Ms. Wake's vehicle, according to the DPS.

A fourth vehicle driven by Craig Allen Weschke of Andrews drove under the back of the rig, striking a trailer stand.

A fifth vehicle, driven by Steve Hatley of Andrews, struck Weschke's vehicle.

Five people were treated and released in the accident, said reports.

The entrance to Buffalo Gap Historic Village, located next to the old Taylor County Courthouse and Jail in Buffalo Gap, Texas, is a look into early West Texas. The restored structures date back to the early 1800s.

Buffalo Gap friendly , old-fashioned

By OLGA FLORES

BUFFALO GAP (AP) — People are friendly here. They smile and wave, even if they don't know you. The sounds of children playing in the school playground and an occasional car driving along the highway are the only noises.

Old, restored houses located on streets such as Mulberry or Elm seem to capture passers-by with a down-home feeling, like going to Grandma's house for Sunday dinner.

With a population of 387, Buffalo Gap is located eight miles south of Abilene. Boasting a few restaurants, an elementary school and several unique shops, Buffalo Gap also has a tourist attraction — Buffalo Gap Historic Village.

The historic village is located in the center of town alongside homes with front porches and large shade trees. Its warm, friendly atmosphere can captivate visitors with its extensive history and its old-fashioned charm.

Virginia Richards, 67, is a clerk at the Buffalo Gap Historic Village Country Store, welcoming visitors that come through the large wooden door.

A resident of Wylie for the past 31 years, she commutes the 8-mile round trip to Buffalo Gap on the three days a week that she runs the store. Items housed in the country store come from the neighboring towns of Clyde and Ovalo. For instance, a portion of the building is the original Texas and Pacific Railroad depot from Clyde and the early 1900s antique fixtures were once in an Ovalo drugstore.

"The white tin ceiling and wooden floor were added to give this place the look of an early drugstore," Ms. Richards said. "People like to come here because it is similar to the way things used to look in the old days."

Other authentic antique features include the drugstore marble counter, barrels of root beer perched on top of the counter, a post office, and an early 1900s music machine equipped with a small accordion-type gadget, drums and cymbals.

"That old music machine was fixed a while back," Ms. Richards said. "It played real nice and loud, and even with a good ol' tone. But, it broke after about a month. No one around here knows how to fix it, so we'll probably leave it like that for a while."

Built to preserve a part of the early West Texas heritage, the historic village is a landmark honoring the pioneers who settled in the area with their families in the early 1800s. The cluster of buildings have been there since the late Ernie Wilson, an Abilene attorney, began the project in 1956 by making a museum of the old Taylor County Courthouse and Jail. After a series of owners through the years, R. Lee Rode, an Abilene physician, purchased the property and restored the buildings.

Open six days a week from 10 a.m.-7 p.m. and Sundays noon-7 p.m., the historic village allows visitors to tour the grounds at their leisure for an inexpensive admission charge. There are discounts for students and senior citizens. Also, group rates are available.

Green hills surround the town, emphasizing the peaceful valleys filled with colorful vegetation of wild flowers and large trees.

"Many years ago, the buffalo made a gap through these hills around here," Ms. Richards said.

Once the seat of Taylor County, Buffalo Gap has some structures more than 100 years old, such as the first Taylor County Courthouse and Jail, a train station, and a small log cabin.

The jail's walls were built with Civil War cannon balls between the large stones for stability and so the prisoners could not chisel their way out. In excellent condition, the courthouse and jail is listed on the National Registry of Historic Places and is a Texas historical site.

Other buildings to be found on the grounds are a blacksmith shop, a wagon barn, a typical doctor's office complete with a display of early surgical tools, a cabinet mill, a bronze casting foundry and the country store.

The wagon barn has an array of displays including stirrup and barbed wire collections, traveling and farm wagons used by early settlers and old-fashioned household necessities such as washers, curling irons, weaving looms, wooden bathtubs and children's toys.

The doctor's office gives visitors a firsthand look at medical tools and furniture used in the early 1900s. It has an interesting exhibit of medical paraphernalia such as a white frame operating table, scalpels, skin hooks, tonsil snares and incision scissors.

The most recent addition to the historical village is the Nazarene Church building which dates to 1902.

"Dr. Rode moved the church to these grounds when he was told he could have it," Ms. Richards said. "It's been restored to look like it once did.

"People from around here know it as the 'sweet church' because it had its own beehive for many, many years," she said laughing.

We remove kidney stones without surgery.

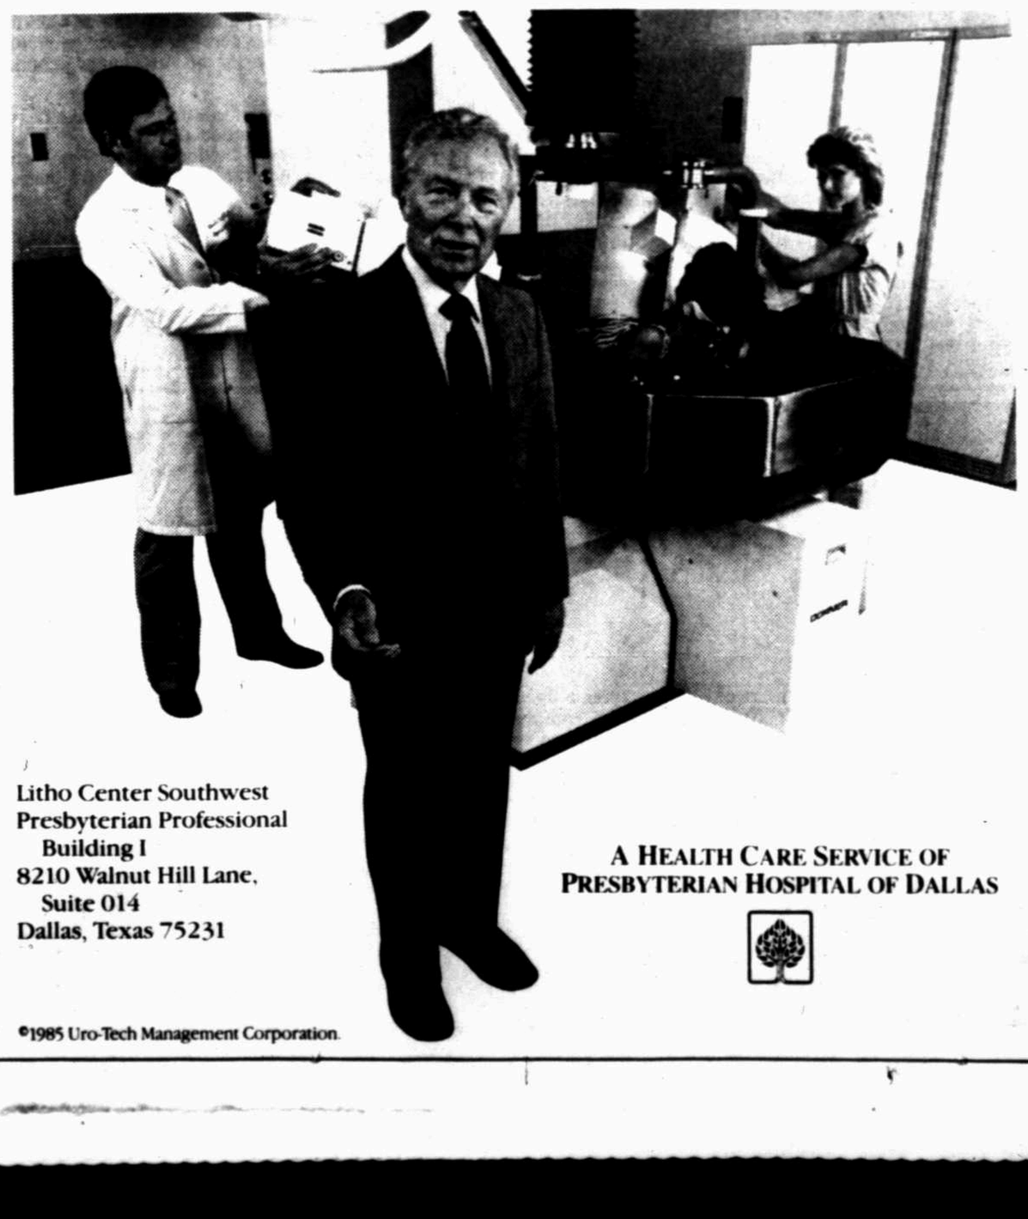

Not so long ago, a diagnosis of kidney stones often meant experiencing one of the most excruciating pains known to man. A frequent method of treatment was painful stone surgery, and with it came weeks of recovery and lost time from work and play.

But today, there's an alternative—a new non-surgical treatment called ESWL. Extracorporeal Shock Wave Lithotripsy. ESWL is both sophisticated and simple. You recline in a tub of warm water while high-pressure shock waves are focused with pin-point accuracy at your kidney stone. Within an hour or two the stone is pulverized, and you go back to your routine in a few days.

To date more than 50,000 people have been successfully treated with ESWL. Now the Litho Center Southwest, the first ESWL unit in north Texas, brings this "wave of the future" to the greater southwest area.

For more information on ESWL, call your urologist or the Litho Center Southwest at 1-800-24-STONE or 214-891-6000.

Chili, rib and brisket cooks from across Texas will gather Nov. 9 at the Midland County Exhibit Building for the first-ever cook-off sponsored by Permian Basin Cook-off Inc.

Lou Deane Littlefield, entertainment and publicity coordinator, said proceeds from the cook-off, featuring chili, ribs and brisket, will go to benefit Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Midland, Epilepsy Association of West Texas and the Permian Basin chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Ms. Littlefield said the cook-off is sanctioned by the Chili Appreciation Society Inc. and the International Barbecue Society. Winners will receive CASI and IBS points in addition to trophies and plaques.

According to Ms. Littlefield, featured activities include chili, brisket and rib judging, a dunking booth, goat dressing and live entertainment. A country/western dance featuring "Midnight Cowboy" will begin at 7 p.m.

Admission to the cook-off is $3 at the door. Entry fee is $50 for each category.

Permian Basin Cook-off Inc. was founded in May by Midlanders Chris Brashear, John Hebert and Mike Thornton; and Odessans Lee Roy Childress and Larry Wadzeck. The purpose of the organization is to plan and produce fund-raising events and distribute the proceeds to charities in the Permian Basin.

Big Brothers and Big Sisters of Midland, a United Way agency, plans to use proceeds from the cook-off to "provide (big brothers or big sisters) to children not already placed" in the program, Ms. Littlefield said.

Epilepsy Association of West Texas will use proceeds to purchase medication and the Permian Basin chapter of the Multiple Sclerosis Society will purchase hospital beds, wheelchairs and other equipment with its share of the proceeds, she added.

Permian Basin Cook-off Inc. hopes to plan annual cook-offs to benefit other agencies in the future, Ms. Littlefield said.

Organizations planning to apply for benefits from future cook-offs must be designated as non-profit organizations under Section Five of the Internal Revenue Service Code.

Aviator shares views on South Africa

By RAMONA NYE
Staff Writer

Local aviator Gene Beggs went to South Africa for a flying contest this month and came back with some strong feelings about that country.

"I found that it's a beautiful, well developed country and the people are so warm and friendly — not at all like we've been led to believe," says Beggs, who spent three weeks traveling around the nation and participating in the 1985 South Africa Aerobatic Masters Tournament.

"It would be such a shame for them to suffer and go down the tubes by anyone who doesn't understand what their problems are," says the local flight and precision flying instructor, who opposes sanctions against South Africa.

Beggs says the United States doesn't understand South Africa and shouldn't try to influence them through boycotts and divestiture. He says South Africa should be left alone to solve its problems.

"We really can't stand in judgment of them. We really can't tell them how to run their country."

Beggs says he thinks Americans have been led to believe by the media that South Africa is an undeveloped and dangerous country full of riots.

"I do feel an obligation to tell other interested people what I found over there, just from my own viewpoint, because I think there's been a distorted picture painted of what the reality is over there."

Before he went to South Africa, Beggs says he didn't know much about the country, except from what he saw on television and read in newspapers.

Beggs says he was worried about his safety before the trip, because he thought there were riots everywhere. However, he says he did not see riots and he did not see discrimination against the blacks.

"I'm sure, had I been completely on my own and not been supervised by citizens, I would have seen a different picture," says Beggs, who was escorted with 14 other Americans to Johannesburg, Pretoria, Durban and Ermelon by South African hosts.

Beggs says he didn't see any blacks rioting because "I didn't go looking for trouble."

Beggs says he doesn't know whether he supports apartheid, a governmental law requiring separate development for blacks and whites, because he isn't familiar with the policy.

"I don't know enough about it to make a statement on it," he says.

In South Africa, Beggs placed fifth in the international precision flying competition. Many countries sent aerobatic teams, including the United States. The eastern block nations, Canada and Australia did not attend, Beggs says. Nor were any black pilots in attendance, he said.

It's wrong to mix sports and politics, he believes. Just as it was wrong for the United States to boycott the 1980 Olympics in the Soviet Union, it's not right for countries to boycott South Africa's flying contest, he said.

Vote for water

Water is the one crucial, limiting factor in a geographical area's existence. With water, an area can grow and prosper; without water, it will struggle at best or die at worst.

It was that realization that led the State Legislature to draw what is collectively referred to as the Texas Water Plan which will be presented to voters Nov. 5th as proposed constitutional amendments 1 and 2.

Constitutional amendment proposals typically face an uphill battle in being approved by Texas voters, yet the potential hostility of the voting public is not considered by legislators and state officials to be the biggest threat to the Texas Water Plan. The biggest threat, concede two of the plan's primary backers, Rep. Tom Craddick of Midland and Sen. John Montford of Lubbock, is voter apathy. It's a reality that the best made legislative proposal is worthless without widespread public support throughout the entire state — support strong enough to get voters to the polls on election day.

The Texas Water Plan embodies legislation that would give the state vitally-needed direction where its water resources are concerned. Little else is more important in a state this large in which certain areas — such as dry West Texas — exist by virtue of scarce lakes, rivers and rainfall, while other regions, such as the Gulf Coast and East Texas, enjoy abundant rainfall and surface water.

To a degree that has been the problem with drafting a state water plan in past years. There has been opposition to such forward-thinking plans as importing water from other states, and a definite difference of opinion has existed in the state as to the purpose of a state water plan. A previous plan fell by the wayside when Gulf Coast interests tangled with West Texas interests. The entire state suffered as a result. In 1981 the Legislature had even enacted and offered to voters a constitutional amendment that dedicated half of the state's surplus to water resources, but voters turned thumbs down on that plan.

The plan now being offered appears to address evenly and fairly the state's present and future water needs. It comes in two parts: the first offering initiatives to create new tools for state government to help finance water resources projects of all kinds. This would include projects such as transmission pipelines that would bring water from the recently-approved Stacy Dam project to Midland — and, thus, help to reduce the cost of water to Midland residents. Secondly, the state water plan offers initiatives to manage and protect existing resources through water conservation and the establishment of environmental goals. That aspect of the plan will be increasingly important in the next few years as Texas' population continues to expand.

Another attractive feature of this water plan is that all construction authorized will be accomplished through use of state bonds, and there will be no actual, direct tax burden on taxpayers as a result of the water plan.

With the federal government reducing its involvement in such programs, it's even more incumbent on the people of Texas to get involved in planning for the state's water needs. The two amendments attempt to realistically address that concern.

As recent droughts have dramatically shown, Texas needs to be assured of water for now and for the future. Constitutional Amendments 1 and 2 offer just such a comprehensive, affordable plan. We recommend voters approve both.

We can do it!

United Way volunteers heard both good and bad news at the finale dinner Thursday night. The good news was that Midland had for the first time in history passed $2 million in pledges for the United Way. The bad news was that almost $112,000 more is needed to reach this year's goal.

In our opinion and we feel sure the opinion of most, the good news far outweighs the bad in this case. To raise $2 million during the regular drive period will be judged by some as a remarkable feat considering today's less than ideal economic conditions. So hats off to all of those who made it possible — leaders, volunteers and contributors.

This year's goal of $2,120,000 was not "fat." It was the minimum amount needed by the 16 agencies which will receive the funds.

And while the balance may not seem to be very much considering what has been raised, traditional supporters of United Way have been generous and may not be able to give much more. The major challenge therefore shifts to those individuals and businesses who have not given this year at all.

Hopefully, they will come forward soon and this year's campaign can be closed out successfully. Midland frequently is touted as a "can do" city and its people as "can do" citizens. Once again they will be tested. We have no doubt what the outcome will be.

Canadians guinea pigs for CIA

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George Shultz is scheduled to meet tomorrow with his Canadian counterpart, Joe Clark, for their regular quarterly get-together. Along with acid rain, East-West relations and trade, the two will be discussing a matter that has become a sore point with the Canadians but has received little attention on this side of the border: CIA misbehavior in Canada 28 years ago.

Jack Anderson

Using the code name "Subproject 68," the CIA funded gruesome psychological experiments on Canadian citizens as part of its infamous MK-ULTRA program of brainwashing and mind-bending. According to a lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court in Washington by veteran civil-rights attorney Joseph Rauh, at least nine, and possibly more than 50, Canadians were unwitting CIA guinea pigs.

The suit has dragged on for five years, with the CIA refusing to negotiate a reasonable settlement with the victims. In a private letter this month to the chief of Canada's Labor Party, Clark wrote: "I am not satisfied with the slow pace of discussions in (U.S.) District Court, but this, of course, is beyond our control."

Sean Brady, Clark's press secretary, told our associate Tony Capaccio: "We expect to be discussing this issue in some detail" with Shultz at the Calgary, Alberta, meeting tomorrow.

Subproject 68 started in January 1957, when the CIA approved a $60,000 grant to Dr. Ewen Cameron, a world-renowned psychiatrist at the Allan Memorial Institute in Montreal. The CIA has insisted, in its defense of Rauh's lawsuit, that it had not solicited Cameron's application for the grant.

But that's not the way the agency's "project monitor" remembered it. In a sworn deposition two years ago, John W. Gittinger said he had asked a CIA undercover man to approach Cameron and encourage him to apply for a grant. (There is no evidence that Cameron was aware he was asking for or taking money from the CIA, which used a front group.)

Gittinger testified that he was interested in Cameron's work on voice-stress analysis, which he figured would help the CIA in its studies of the stress an individual undergoes during interrogation. He admitted, however, that Cameron's application for the grant contained no plans for such work.

"I went along with the idea of giving him the $60,000," Gittinger explained, "because that's what he asked for. We wanted contact with him and to know what he was doing, primarily in the audio area."

What, in fact, was in Cameron's application was a proposal to conduct the kind of experiments that even a CIA general counsel characterized years later as "repugnant." Cameron's proposal called, among other things, for "the breaking down of ongoing patterns of the patient's behavior by means of particularly intensive electro-shocks (depatterning)."

His proposal also called for "the intensive repetition (16 hours a day for six to seven days) of prearranged verbal signals" while the patient was "kept in partial sensory isolation."

Even more ominously, Cameron's application stated: "We propose to use LSD-25 and other similar agents as a means of breaking down the ongoing patterns of behavior."

This mention of the unpredictable hallucinogenic drug should have been a red flag to the CIA officials. Three years earlier, then-CIA Director Allen Dulles had chastised Dr. Sidney Gottlieb, head of the Technical Services Division, for its role in the suicide of Dr. Frank Olson, a civilian employee of the Army.

Olson was surreptitiously given a dose of LSD in a glass of liqueur. He leaped through a 10th-floor hotel room window a few days later.

Dulles wrote on Feb. 10, 1954, that Gottlieb showed "poor judgment" in allowing LSD to be administered on "an unwitting basis," and failing to have "proper consideration of the rights of the individual to whom it was being administered."

Three years later, Gottlieb was the chief supervisor of the MK-ULTRA program when Cameron's proposal to use LSD on Canadian subjects was approved.

Gittinger testified in his 1983 deposition that he hadn't noticed the LSD proposal in Cameron's application. He said: "I had no reason to have been even interested in whether he was going to use LSD or not." Gittinger did "categorically say" that it wasn't Cameron's proposed use of drugs that had sparked the CIA's interest in his application.

In any case, the CIA project monitor said it was not his job to raise questions about Cameron's testing methods. "That was not for me to judge," he testified. "That was for the doctor to judge."

If the CIA officials were unconcerned about LSD experiments three years after being admonished for using it, what exactly were they concerned with in the Canadian venture?

One reason for exporting MK-ULTRA, Gittinger testified, was that association with a psychiatrist of Cameron's renown would be "good cover" for the CIA front group that gave him the $60,000 grant.

Birthday creates travel, confusion

WASHINGTON — The celebration (yes, that word is used) of the United Nations' 40th birthday has caused much traveling to and fro. So has the pre-summit minuet. One wishes world leaders, especially our leader, could be more like Macon Leary.

George F. Will

Leary, a character in Anne Tyler's wonderful new novel, "The Accidental Tourist," hates traveling and writes guidebooks for people who feel as he does. The books tell people who would rather be at home where to find a Taco Bell in Mexico City, a Rome restaurant that serves Chef Boy-ar-dee ravioli, a Madrid hotel with Beautyrest mattresses. "Generally food in Britain is not as jarring as in other countries."

Consider the confusion sown by recent and anticipated travel:

Because the President is to travel to Geneva, he traveled to the United Nations to say, sensibly, there are summit issues other than arms control. But this attempt to lower expectations was vitiated by the proclamation of a utopian expectation: U.S.-Soviet "differences" can be "resolved" through "dialogue." Because the Geneva trip now drives all policy, the administration succumbs to the sentimentality of democracy.

A few days before announcing yet another Soviet violation of SALT limits on offensive weapons (deployment of the SS-25, a new mobile ballistic missile), the administration made an announcement. Under the pressure of pre-Geneva maneuvering, it said that it would bind itself with an unnecessarily restrictive reading of the treaty concerning defenses against ballistic missiles. Why this irrational decision to embrace what the administration says is a misreading of a treaty the Soviet Union is flagrantly violating?

Were the President not trying to tune the atmosphere for the trip to Geneva, he would not have said this: The correct reading of the ABM treaty allows development and testing of space-based defenses against ballistic missiles, but we shall abide by an incorrect reading that forbids even development of an integrated system. If Reagan thinks this is an innocuous concession to nervous allies and domestic opponents, he understands neither the sociology of a large scientific undertaking nor the politics of an expensive military procurement.

The Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) will require many scientists to devote their prime years to it. If the administration's commitment seems tenuous, they will find other devotions. Furthermore, Congress always is reluctant to diminish discretionary-spending opportunities by committing vast sums to weapons systems. Congress confronts, simultaneously, a future barren of discretionary spending and full of SDI, the most expensive public project in history.

Reagan says SDI is morally urgent — but less urgent than pacifying critics who make a fetish of a misreading of the ABM treaty. Congress will not fund an SDI system that is subordinated to the ABM treaty in any way that prevents all except inconclusive tests of sub-components. So the wounding, perhaps mortal wounding, of SDI is one result of the maneuvering for the Geneva trip.

Nancy Reagan traveled to the United Nations to give a lunch for the wives of world leaders, for the purpose of discussing drug abuse. Her guests included the wife of Nicaragua's dictator, who said she hoped our nations would improve relations. Mrs. Reagan, polite to a fault, did not ask the dictator's wife to autograph a photograph — the one showing Sandinista soldiers loading a plane with drugs bound for America.

Nicaragua's first couple taped "The Donahue Show," where the host asked, plaintively: Many of us abhor the Reagan administration's hostilities toward your regime. Why do you embarrass us by suppressing civil liberties? Nicaragua has finally gone too far. It has annoyed Donahue by making Reagan look correct.

In a ten-minute session with a representative of Solidarity, Poland's outlawed trade union, Reagan, who has raised optimism to a philosophy and has severed philosophy from evidence, said he has "high hopes" for happiness in Poland, happiness from "dialogue." An administration climatologist explained the mushiness of Reagan's remarks in terms of the "East-West climate." That is, the problem is travel — the trip to Geneva. The President who believes in dialogue between communists and their victims should read the forthcoming Reader's Digest account of the murder of Father Jerzy Popieluszko by the regime:

"His eyes and forehead had been beaten till black. His jaw, nose, mouth and skull were smashed, his fingers and toes dark red and brown from repeated clubbing. Part of his scalp and large strips of skin on his legs had been torn off....His muscles had been pounded again and again until limp....The teeth were found completely smashed. In place of his eloquent tongue, there was only mush."

A tongue like that makes dialogue difficult. But an early arrival at the U.N.'s birthday bash, Gen. Jaruzelski, asphyxiator of Poland, was given a dinner by the Council on Foreign Relations. Well, a traveler must eat. And at the council, the general found neither the food nor the talk jarring.

Shorthand language increasing

NEW YORK — Our house current is AC, not DC, but with the AC we can get both AM and FM on the radio. The radio also works without the AC if you put in D batteries. The TV is different.

Russell Baker

First you plug the TV into the AC and it gives you the VHF. Sometimes you get the UHF, too. The VHF brings you ABC, CBS and NBC, but unless you live in a big city you probably can't get PBS without UHF.

With the VHF bringing you ABC, CBS and NBC, you learn a lot about GE, GM, IBM and TRW. Also, of course you can find out what's happening with the USSR, the AFL-CIO, the UN, the UAW, the OAS, NATO, NASA and the Oakland A's.

That's all right, but for a little more variety you need CATV, which you can also supplement with a VCR. With a VCR you can enjoy the best from L.A. without interruption.

What's more, you can have your choice of G, PG, PG-13, R or X.

The VCR comes in two alphabets: VHS, which is English, or Beta, which is Greek as in Phi Beta Kappa.

The VCR at our house is VHS. I installed it myself by detaching the CATV wire from the TV and attaching it to the VCR at the VHF receptable, then running a VCR wire from the other VHF receptable to the TV.

It sounds easier than it is, but never mind because everything came out OK. As soon as I plugged the whole tangle of wires into the old AC, we were able to see an uninterrupted movie about space people who said, "A-OK."

The movie was just B-OK. It included newsreel film of JFK but had an actor playing LBJ as a clown with a whine. Another actor played Ike, who was never known as DDE, though he initialed his papers "DDE." Neither HST nor FDR appeared in old newsreel film or courtesy of professional actors.

It was a PG but would be an MTL if the movie industry expanded its alphabetic horizon to provide for such practical information as MTL (much too long), EOP (egregiously overpriced) and ODODE (outrageous display of directorial ego). Still it was good to see the X-1, X-15 and F-16, even though mixing alphabet with numbers in this way often leaves me feeling pretty darn queasy, or PDQ as it is called by alphabet aficionados.

Alphabet aficionados, incidentally, are not called AA. A normal percentage joins AA, of course, just as a normal percentage joins the AAA. I am not an alphabet aficionado, but it's hard for anybody to understand anything that's said anymore without first mastering alphabetic English.

If you doubt it, try to imagine Thomas Jefferson sitting around in his BVD's minding his P's and Q's while reading a communication from the VFW about scandalous doings in the VA.

Imagine George Washington being told that by adding CATV to his TV he will be able to escape all those BBD&O commercials, and also to pick up a lot more of the NFL, NBA and NHL than he can get on his standard VHF hookup.

People of Washington's time had no need to use alphabetic code. That's why no American knows whom you are talking about when you call John Quincy Adams "JQ," while a fictional cad on contemporary TV can become so well-known that half the Western world will be intrigued by the question, "Who shot JR?"

The trend that is reducing English to an alphabetic breeze seems fairly modern. There are two possible explanations.

One is that expansive technology, science and government have overloaded the language with so many big, hard-to-remember, hard-to-pronounce words that the substitution of a shorthand language is inevitable.

Who wants to spend all night pronouncing "Deoxyribonucleic acid" when you can say "DNA" and get home to bed? Who wants to wait for somebody to say "ultra high frequency" when "UHF" is so temptingly available? Does anybody even know what OSHA stands for?

So maybe the spread of alphabet English is a desperate makeshift attempt to keep communication open when the increasingly incomprehensible nature of formal English threatens to shut it down. The other possibility is that there is a mischievous impulse afoot among the egg-heads, who create most of this alphabet talk, to resist the calcification of the language by keeping it as breezy as a tabloid headline.

Whatever the explanation, the old mother tongue is anything but A-OK and getting murkier every day. Yet, with the right maps and a little luck, you can still use it to get a VCR humming without electrocuting yourself.

Focusing on Reagan's new role on diplomatic front

By WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST JR.
Editor-in-Chief, The Hearst Newspapers

Hearst

NEW YORK — Regular readers of this column have long known that I am an admirer of President Reagan and his accomplishments as chief executive. At the U.N. on Thursday, he cut through Soviet propaganda and urged the U.S.S.R. to withdraw its forces from Asia, Africa and Latin America, after which he pledged that America would do everything possible to welcome those rehabiliated countries back into the international family and suggested we would also help with their reconstruction.

The president, who was more intensely engaged on the diplomatic front than he probably has been throughout his years of office, conferred with many NATO allies including Britain's Prime Minister Mrs. Margaret Thatcher and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, who were all in New York for the 40th anniversary of the U.N.

He also conferred for a second time in two days with Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze, who is a close confidant of Party Chairman Mikhail Gorbachev. Shevardnadze also met with Secretary of State George Shultz who accepted an invitation to visit Moscow for presummit meetings next month. President Reagan meets at the summit with Gorbachev in Geneva on Nov. 19 and 20. The Soviet leader presently is in Bulgaria chairing a Warsaw pact meeting.

President Reagan dangled a suggestion for the Soviets that he was carefully examining "seeds" of their recent proposal on ballistic missiles. As the president has asserted publicly and privately, he will not yield one step on the SDI, which critics call "Star Wars" and the U.S.S.R. clamors to stop even in research before it can even be developed.

The U.S.S.R. has been working on its own defensive system for nearly 20 years.

As I have reported frequently in this space, and President Reagan told the United Nations in his speech, former Soviet Premier Aleksei Kosygin was asked about a moratorium on the development of an anti-missile defense system some 18 years ago at the Glassboro summit with President Lyndon Johnson.

Reagan told the General Assembly that the Soviet Premier replied that the "defensive systems, which prevent attack, are not the cause of the arms race, but constitute a factor preventing the death of people....."

And that's how it is with the SDI.

President Reagan's challenge to the Soviet Union for a "fresh start" in relations between the two nations and his outline for solving regional conflicts throughout the world was a bold and realistic beginning to his upcoming summit meeting with Gorbachev at Geneva.

The president's speech on Thursday before the General Assembly of the United Nations emphasized what the United States proposes to do "to bring about a safer, a more peaceful, a more civilized world."

The president told the members of the world body that the only way to resolve differences is to understand them, and said a full discussion of U.S.-Soviet differences is indispensable to making a "fresh start" in relations at Geneva when he meets with Gorbachev.

While he welcomed peaceful competition of ideas, the president said the United States cannot accept force and subversion to extend totalitarianism. On nuclear issues, Reagan said he will discuss Soviet violations of past agreements as well as recent Soviet proposals on arms reductions with Mr. Gorbachev, which the President said he hopes will generate "a genuine process of give and take."

Although the official Soviet news agency, TASS, waited only overnight to denounce President Reagan's bid for superpower cooperation to defuse tension in Afghanistan and four other hotspots occupied by Soviet troops, John P. Wallach, Foreign Affairs Editor for The Hearst Newspapers, reported that Moscow may not have said its last word on the matter.

Wallach wrote that economic considerations are the final incentive for the Soviet Union to move toward some accomodation with the U.S. on Afghanistan, Nicaragua, Cambodia, Angola and Ethiopia, pointing out that it is extremly costly for Moscow to maintain the hundreds of thousands of troops it has deployed in those countries, while it is spending unprecedented amounts of money on weapons.

President Reagan, in presenting his case for resolving regional conflicts, catalogued the outstanding Soviet oppressions. These were headed by the 118,000 Soviet troops in Afghanistan prosecuting the war and occupation against the Afghan people. Others included Soviet backed Vietnamese soldiers waging a war of occupation in Cambodia; 1,700 Soviet advisors in Ethiopia involved with military planning assisted by 2,500 Cuban combat troops; in Angola, 1,200 Soviet military advisors along with 35,000 Cuban combat troops serving as Castro's legionnaires; and Nicaragua where 8,000 Soviet bloc and Cuban personnel — including around 3,500 military and secret police backup the Sadinista regime.

The president was blunt and clear about how the U.S.S.R. has been conducting affairs externally. He did not mince words about how distaseful he found its practices and quoted liberally from Nobel Prize winner Andrei Sakharov, who is in enforced exile and watched by the KGB. President Reagan cited the direct message from académician Sakharov to the Nobel Prize Committee in which the renouned physicist urged the right to publish, travel and choose the country in which one wanted to live.

It is up to Gorbachev and his politburo to heed the words of the ancient Roman Senate: "Facta non berba," which translates as "deeds, not words."

Educational reforms not American way

I am an educator. My work has always brought personal satisfaction perpetuated by the support of my colleagues, gratitude of parents and the profit gained by students. My professional roll evoked high self-esteem.

Since Texas has been inundated with educational reform, I feel about as welcomed among traditional professions as a Jew at a Nazi War Council. I feel abandoned by Texans who have embraced the new legislation as a remedy to cure all educational ills. They anticipate that wrongs will be righted, such as stressing academics rather than athletics or band, eliminating incompetent teachers and dictating what must be taught and learned so that when a child graduates from high school, citizens won't be embarrassed by his lack of skills or low test scores that do not compare favorably with national norms.

The new legislation doesn't appear to be removing obstacles from effective education. It appears to be removing the students that interfere with the success of the program.

The law provides for an adequate education for children who are mentally retarded or have other physical or developmental handicaps.

The law does not provide for an adequate education for children with diminished learning capacities (often referred to as slow learners), who are handicapped only through the limitations of opportunities afforded them.

Human worth and indulgence in youth should not be determined by a numerical system.

How tragic that the governor of Texas and state elected officials have allowed the education of our children to be so heavily influenced by the tactics of a businessman, distinguished by his wealth and prominance. The rules of quality control in industry and manufacturing cannot always be applied to the production and refinement of human organisms.

Schools that do not discriminate should encourage discovering and developing individual potential and self-worth. Youths with good self-concepts make better members of society than those who are accustomed to failure.

All Texans who are interested in the present and future citizens of our state should protest and reverse this travesty of democratic education, not because your child has been penalized by "no-pass, no-play," or not because your child may be a high school dropout but because you know it is not the American way.

What do grades mean if student offended?

I am distressed at the tone of the reporting in the Jay Dee Martin trial for the use of profanity in the classroom at Midland College.

The articles point out that the two complaining students made grades of "a low C and a D" and refer to the students as "marginal," while the "honors students" found Martin to be a "high quality" instructor. It is this type of public ridicule that prevents students from complaining about incompetent teachers.

I don't see what their grades had to do with their complaint, but just for the record I took one semester of Economics from Jay Dee Martin and found his language and manner so offensive I decided not to take the second semester. And, I made an A in his class.

Stand on state prisons endorsement of Hance

Those of you who are native residents of Texas probably know that the Department of Corrections is having problems with overcrowded prisons. For those of you who are not native residents, believe me, it is.

Before I continue with my commentary, I would like to relate a certain incident that occurred three Saturdays ago while you were cheering on the football team against TCU. A friend and I were traveling back from Austin along Loop 820 when my Ford experienced difficulties. What else could my friend and I do but lock the doors and walk to a service station? Unfortunately, these difficulties occurred in the worst part of Fort Worth, the east side, and we soon became the victims of aggravated assault. Within ten seconds, we were robbed of our wallets and watches, not to mention the time and money spent to get a new SMU ID card and another driver's license.

We thank God for our lives. But we cannot thank Gov. Mark White, especially if the man who threatened our lives had already served a term in prison. You see, Mark White's idea of handling the prison situation is to let criminals go free on probation for "good behavior." I won't say anything more about this policy of his; I'll let it speak for itself.

However, I would like to comment on former Rep. Kent Hance's point of view concerning the prison issue. Hance has already openly said, "We're probably going to have to face up to the fact that we're going to have to build more prisons." If faced with the choices of either constructing new prisons or releasing prisioners because of lack of space, I'd rather have criminals kept behind bars. Wouldn't you agree? Kent Hance does, and for this reason and many others I'd like to see him elected governor of Texas.

Think seriously. Crime can happen to anyone (it did to my friend and me), but it doesn't have to happen. A strong deterrent, such as an assured long prison sentence, will help prevent crime before it happens. With Mark White refusing to build new prisons, over 10,000 criminals will be released within the next two years. Think seriously about this issue, and then think seriously about Kent Hance.

On 33rd anniversary: Well done, O'Brien

Greater love than this no one has, that one lay down his life for his friends"...or even be willing to do so.

Sunday, Oct. 27, 1985, marks the 33rd anniversary on which Second Lt. George H. O'Brien Jr., United States Marine Corps Reserve, displayed "conspicuous gallantry and intrepidity at the risk of his life above and beyond the call of duty" during the Korean War.

"By his exceptionally daring and forceful leadership in the face of overwhelming odds, Second Lieutenant O'Brien served as a constant source of inspiration to all who observed him.... His indomitable determination and valiant fighting spirit reflect the highest credit on himself and enhance the finest traditions of the United States naval service." For this, O'Brien was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor.

Well done, George O'Brien, and thank you.

Panel's judgment on jail questioned

At this point, after all this rain, I am sure Scott Welch is really glad he spent so much county money to fix his road. But what of the families that have been unable to get to and from work because of bad roads? Or in areas that have many more families than his road does? Maybe it was not illegal, but what about judgement?

Can we depend on his judgement on any other matter concerning money and the best use of it? With all the conflict over the jail situation, it seems the commissioners are going to spend all the money of the bond election on speculation instead of remodeling.

What with Winn Brown determined to build the Dallas Smith project jail and Scott Welch seeming to follow the judgement plan, has our county got a chance of balancing a budget?

Maybe the people will do well to remember these things and contact our commissioners by mail or phone even though they seem to forget the voice of the public, maybe we can get through their thick heads that best is not always the most expensive.

The citizens group that studied the jail situation before the bond election and their recommendation seem to have been lost in the maze.

The commissioners are constantly bringing up building a new jail instead of spending their time and energies on the remodeling. What good are bond elections if the officials refuse to accept the people's choice?

I am sure we would all like new houses to live in, but look at the waste of good houses if we all bought new ones and left the others to fall apart.

Folks, lets us not stop speaking out first because we voted to be conservative on the jail issue. Lets keep on until the commissioners are constantly reminded that they are elected and can be sent on their way. Months have already been wasted and we are still boarding our prisioners and are very little, if any, closer to remodeling the jail.

Let's hear from the public in a different manner this time. See if newspaper print works for us this time.

You can take twang out of country music

This letter refers to the article published Oct. 20, entitled "Will country music go back to being country?", as written by John Paul Pitts.

My sister and I are, and always have been, fans of "country" music. We were raised in Midland, members of a large, farming family. We are not of Mr. Pitt's generation, but we can distinguish an Eddy Arnold ballad on the second bar!

However, we subscribe to the "I like country, but I can't stand all those nasal, twanging singers" school of thought. Is our generation to understand that we're not real country music lovers if we cringe at the first strains of a Lefty Frizzell tune? Public performers ourselves, we prefer the smooth voices of Steve Wariner or Charly McClain.

And why is it so terrible that "people outside the ranks of hardcore country fans" are listening to country? Are you proposing we Texans (self-righteous as we are) keep this wonderfully American form of entertainment to ourselves? I am happy that what we call "progressive country" has come along to entice my friends, normally rock listeners, to experience it.

Furthermore, radio stations play what the public wants to hear. Every country radio station in town plays the top 40 hits as published by "Billboard Magazine" and/or "Radio & Records," which get their information from public record sales and requests. They also play tried and true oldies and requests. I can guarantee, they wouldn't play if the public (not all my generation) didn't want to hear it.

As a fellow fan of country music, surely you realize that country music is a certain rhythm, a beat and above all, an idea. Country music tells a story, whether it's a story of heartache, cheer, or of American patriotism. Country is, and always has been, a feeling in the heart of the listener stirred by the efforts of artists of varied talents from Johnny Cash to Janie Fricke. It is my feeling that whoever attempts to sing it, listen to it and enjoy it as much as we do, well...'magis potestas eis.'

We have some advice for you Mr. Pitts. KJBC plays "traditional" country as opposed to the music played on the more popular radio stations. You will hear a fine array of Hank Williams Sr., Jim Reeves, Patsy Cline, etc. But don't expect to hear our Entertainer of the Year, Ricky Skaggs...he's singing for us.

PBS' South Africa documentary 'shameful' propaganda

By J. EVETTS HALEY

On October 2 from 7-9 p.m. in Midland, Public Broadcasting System presented a two-hour documentary on South Africa, giving viewers the impression that the program was an honest report of today's South Africa. This was possibly shown nationwide. Instead of a genuine documentary, I found it biased in the extreme.

This program was a classic example of PBS' bias; a classic example of facts and truth left out. Honesty is the fulcrum on which balanced judgement must be made, but this was the example of the soft-sell planted "disinformation."

PBS showed blacks recently settled in huts without running water and toilet facilities but neglected to say that when the first settlers — not the blacks, but white Africaners — arrived, they too lived under the same conditions and suffered (if that be the right term) as did the American pioneers.

PBS feature Soweto, a black suburb of Johannesburg, as being a poverty area, but neglected to tell that the whites pay for the housing, education and medical care of the blacks.

This documentary gave much time to Nelson Mandela, who has been imprisoned for years, whose release some blacks now demand in order to lead the revolution in their "one-man, one-vote" campaign. PBS neglected to report that when he was arrested in 1963, Mandela's home was an arsenal containing 210,000 hand grenades, 43,000 land mines, 50 tons of explosives and plans to sabotage specific targets. Mandela pleaded guilty to three of the four charges against him but none of this was mentioned. Nor in their reported plea for "one-man, one-vote" did the commentator report that all the nations in Africa which were overthrown by Communists through the "one-man, one-vote" ploy are now slave nations controlled by white Russian communists, with the native whites dispossessed of power and property and their once thriving and successful countries now in anarchy.

J. Evetts Haley, rancher, author and noted historian, was reared in Midland. He received a degree in history from the West Texas State Normal College in Canyon and is the author of more than 20 books.

Bishop Desmond Tutu was shown as a great humanitarian leader of blacks but the truth avoided by PBS is that Tutu is the leader for the Communists, having publicly declared: "I deplore Capitalism. I am a Socialist."

Buthelezi, the black chief of the vast Zulu tribe, is strongly opposed to disinvestment and on a recent tour of the United States asked Americans to invest — not disinvest — in South Africa. He was not shown or given time in this so-called documentary, and his name was quickly passed over. Nor did PBS explain that "apartheid" is also a form of "separate development," a procedure created by the twelve major tribes in order that they live together peacefully. Nor did they say that the whites are a minority group. If apartheid in South Africa is so bad, why do two million blacks emigrate to South Africa each year from other parts of the continent to work?

Despite the charts and graphs shown by PBS, there was no reference during the two-hour program to the fact that South African blacks own more cars than the blacks in all the other 54 African nations combined.

PBS is underestimating the intelligence of the average American who is waking up to the propaganda snow job which PBS is foisting on them. People are learning that the United States depends on South Africa for essential defense minerals for their survival, despite the fact none of these critical needs were mentioned in the PBS "documentary."

I repeat my original charge that PBS is propagandizing for policies that will destroy South Africa and bring infinite harm to the United States.

Shame on Public Broadcasting System!

Basketball season opens with 'Meet Chaps Night'

By H.A. TUCK

Chaparral basketball season begins this week! The Chaps open at home against Jacksonville Baptist on Saturday evening. Game time is 7:30 p.m. in the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center.

Coach Jerry Stone returns four lettermen — Ricky Grace, Derrick Lewis, Eddie Frazier, and Tony Wright — and has added eight freshmen to the squad. With five of the players weighing in at 200 pounds or more, the chaps have some muscle to go with lots of speed.

After their opener, the Chaps wait five days before hosting their annual Chaparral Classic Nov. 7-9.

And to get ready for the season, you can come out to Chap Center at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 29, for "Meet the Chaps Night." Members of the golf and tennis teams will be there, along with the basketball players. The basketball team will stage a brief scrimmage at 7 p.m. to get the fans acquainted with the new players. You can purchase your season tickets that night or during the week at the Chap Center Office.

A Pep Rally to open the season is planned by the cheerleaders and drill team at 12 noon Friday on Beal Plaza, complete with band and all the players.

• • •

Not even clouds or drizzle could dampen the enthusiasm last Sunday, when the college held an Open House and Dedication for its new Health Sciences Building. The weather probably cut into the size of the crowd, but it still was a great success.

If you didn't get to see the new building, come by some time and get a tour of the facilities.

One of the highlights was when a guest conductor took over the baton to lead the Midland College Community Band during its Beal Plaza concert. Director Walter Osadchuk called on MC president Dr. Jess Parrish to lead the group. Since Parrish begin his educational career as a high school band director, it wasn't a totally strange experience!

• • •

This is the final day of the annual Oshman's Sporting Goods' pre-season Ski Sale in Chaparral Center. Hours are 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. for a good selection of skis, equipment, and clothing.

• • •

Students are preparing to combine a good time with community service on Wednesday when they hold a Halloween Blood Drive in the Student Center. But the blood donors aren't limited just to MC students and employees, so come on out between 8 a.m. and 1 p.m. if you'd like to donate blood for the Midland Memorial Hospital blood bank.

The drive is anotyher activity sponsored by the Student Senate.

Congratulations to the Midland College golf team for winning the fall segment of the conference golf action. The Chaps took third in the last of three conference tourneys in Snyder, but have 15 points and a two-point lead to carry into the spring trio of tournaments. They took a first, a second, and a third in the three conference events.

Sophomore Raymond Cole was medalist at Snyder with a nice 68. Sophomore Randy Winn was medalist at the Midland College tournament a couple of weeks ago.

The Chaps play their last fall event this weekend at Huntsville in the Sam Houston State Invitational.

• • •

And tennis coach Joe Williams has to be smiling a little after the way his women's team blasted three NCAA Division I schools last weekend in El Paso. They knocked off UT-El Paso 9-0, New Mexico University 8-1, and New Mexico State University 9-0.

This past weekend, both tennis teams were in action at Odessa College's new junior college invitational tournament.

While the women were in El Paso, members of the men's team were serving as line judges for the professional satellite tournament finals at the Midland Racquet Club.

Conference debates future of educational testing

By LEE MITGANG
AP Education Writer

NEW YORK — When future schoolchildren take tests, they might not be graded, they'll use computers rather than No. 2 pencils, and some who pass certain exams might even be allowed to graduate from high school as young as 12 years old.

Those and other future prospects in educational testing were discussed Saturday by leading educators at the Educational Testing Service's Invitational Conference on "The Redesign of Testing for the 21st Century."

To bring some of those visions to reality, ETS President Gregory R. Anrig announced that the Princeton, N.J.-based testmaker was creating a $30 million fund to develop a new generation of tests by the year 2000.

The aim of the new program, named "Project Jessica" after the 4-year-old daughter of an ETS executive, is to devise "helping tests," computer-based exams that might not even have scores.

Such tests would not be anything like the achievement or aptitude tests now used to grade, select or evaluate students.

Instead, they would be designed to tell students how they are doing, how they might improve, and what academic and career interests they might best pursue.

"These tests would be designed not to select, not to sort out, but to help," Anrig said.

He stressed that the new tests would not replace more traditional exams like the Scholastic Aptitude Test, the multiple choice exam administered by ETS and taken by about a million college-bound students a year.

"The SAT, much as some students would like, is not going to go away," he said.

A second speaker, Theodore R. Sizer, chairman of Brown University's education department, unveiled an even more sweeping testing proposal which he called a "Secondary School Leaving Exhibition."

The "exhibition," he said, would actually be a "national comprehensive examination" that a student could take voluntarily as young as age 12 as an alternative way of earning a high school diploma.

Sizer, whose 1984 book "Horace's Compromise" is one of the most widely cited education reform documents, said the proposed exam might consist of conventional tests as well as essays, demonstrations of a student's achievements, problem-solving exercises, and an oral interview.

He proposed that ETS, The College Board and the American Council on Education, higher education's chief lobbying group, form a commission to establish the test.

Such a national exam is a "frightening idea," Sizer admitted. It could end up dominating the standards and content of secondary school education. It would be extremely expensive to design and administer. It might be open to "endless" lawsuits. And it might spawn a whole new bureaucracy in an educational world "already smothered in administrative machinery."

Still, Sizer cited a number of reasons for his advocating it.

First, it fits in with the public's current clamor for school account ability. Second, the test would take enough forms and be flexible enough to answer the objections of critics who say that current, rigidly designed standardized tests discriminate against the poor and minority groups.

Such a national exam, Sizer said, would also recognize the growing reality that parents are now exercising more varied choices in where their children attend school.

Doctor Study Proves

New Hi-Tech 'Super Pills' Give Faster Weight Loss

Diet Pills Sweeping U.S. No Dieting—Eat Normally

BEVERLY HILLS, CA (Special)— Good news for overweight people! If you want to lose weight fast, you no longer have to guess which diet product to use.

A recent clinical weight loss study was conducted by a panel of medical doctors in California on groups of overweight people to determine which of the five most popular weight loss products was the most effective. One product, the amazing new "hi-tech super pills" proved to be vastly superior to all the others tested in the study and even gave almost "3 times faster" weight loss than the famous grapefruit diet pills.

All Lost up to 1 lb. Per Day

Best of all, the pills allow you to "continue to eat all of your favorite foods without changing your normal eating or exercising habits and still lose weight easier and faster than ever before, starting immediately." The manufacturer "guarantees" it. Remarkably, ALL people in the new 'hi-tech' super pills clinical test group lost weight (an average of ½ lb. per day up to 1 lb. per day or the equivalent of 15 to 30 lbs. per month.) It also helps eliminate bloat and puffiness.

"Pills Do All the Work"

According to the clinical study, "the pills alone do all the work while you quickly lose weight with NO starvation "diet menus" to follow, NO calorie counting, NO special exercise, and NO hunger pangs." You simply take the pills with a glass of water before meals.

Powerful Appetite Suppressants

The new pills contain a powerful clinically proven appetite suppressant that an advisory panel of doctors have determined to be "safe and effective for weight loss."

In addition, the pills also contain a remarkable calorie-free dietary fiber that expands in your stomach and tends to give you a partially satisfied feeling before you eat. Thus, the new combination of ingredients in the pills act 2 ways to aid in curbing your appetite, causing you to eat less, take in less calories, and lose weight without feeling deprived or hungry.

Pills Contain ALL Daily Vitamins

No need to take any vitamins to maintain your good health and energy because the pills are fortified with ALL (100%) of the U.S. Government USRDA recommended daily vitamin requirements.

The amazing 'hi-tech' super pills are already sweeping the country with glowing reports of easy and fast weight loss from formerly overweight people in all walks of life who are now slim, trim, and attractive again. Now Available to Public

You can order your supply of these new highly successful 'hi-tech' super pills (now available directly from the manufacturer by mail or phone order only) by sending $14 for a 15-day supply (or $20 for a 30-day supply, or $35 for a 60-day supply) cash, check or money order to: Hi-Tech Products, 717 Central Ave., Dept. 841, Kansas City, KS 66101. (30 day unconditional money-back guarantee if not 100% satisfied.) Visa, MasterCard, and Amer. Meese stand on civil rights dividing Reagan advisers

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Attorney General Edwin Meese III is meeting determined opposition in Congress and the Cabinet on his efforts to take the teeth out of anti-discrimination laws.

Meese wants to relieve federal contractors from the burden of meeting goals and timetables for hiring minorities and women. And in 1984, the Justice Department, which Meese heads, persuaded the U.S. Supreme Court of the view that a finding of racial or sex discrimination in hiring or services in one part of a program should not result in penalizing the entire institution or agency.

More than anyone else, Meese has heated up the civil rights issue, which he had cooled in the '70s. Questions of how to handle affirmative action, reproductive freedom and anti-discrimination have split the president's advisors and have energized and galvanized civil rights advocates like nothing since the Montgomery bus boycott.

In previous administrations, when the Justice Department went to court in voting rights cases, its lawyers almost always sided with black plaintiffs. In recent years, the Justice Department in every voting case has taken a position against the black plaintiffs, accusing some of criminal voting fraud.

Meese is President Reagan's loyal adviser, veteran administrator and first friend. A fellow California politician said privately last week it is difficult to overestimate his influence on the Reagan Revolution.

At the Cabinet Council meeting last Tuesday, however, the revolutionary troops were divided and not inclined to follow Meese, who sees timetables and goals as "quotas." Several preferred to march behind Labor Secretary William Brock in opposing changes in the longstanding requirement that federal contractors meet numerical goals in hiring minorities and women or face a cutoff of their contracts.

The Domestic Policy Council agreed to send the president several options -once of which was to leave the executive order on affirmative action, signed 20 years ago by Lyndon Johnson, virtually unchanged except for issuing new hiring rules to make them less cumbersome.

A Justice Department spokesman said Meese did not view the Cabinet's action as a setback, saying the attorney general was pleased to thresh out differences of opinion and did not object to presenting several options to the president.

Backing Meese on the issue were two leading black conservatives, Clarence M. Pendleton, chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, and Clarence Thomas, head of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Also giving him their support were Energy Secretary John S. Herrington and Education Secretary William J. Bennett.

The only black member of the Cabinet, Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel R. Pierce Jr., strongly supported Brock's moderate stance. He was joined by Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole. Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, who sometimes was at odds with Meese when both were top advisers to the president in the first Reagan term, sided with Brock also. And Secretary of State George P. Schultz, who was secretary of labor when former President Richard Nixon implemented the current rules, has said previously that he supports the continued use of goals and timetables.

Keeping the executive order on affirmative action in effect is a major aim of the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a bipartisan umbrella group for 185 organizations.

The civil rights coalition supported senators who earlier this year denied William Bradford Reynolds, the assistant secretary for civil rights, a promotion to associate attorney general, the Justice Department's No. 3 position, on grounds he had worked to dismantle anti-discrimination laws and regulations.

Ralph Neas, executive director of the NLCCR, honored last week as one of the "good guys" by the National Women's Political Caucus, said the group's No. 1 legislative priority is passing the Civil Rights Restoration Act of 1985.

"The radical right has launched a counter attack," Neas said. "It is a critical time. For two decades, we took these rights for granted."

The new civil rights act, sponsored by California Democratic Reps. Don Edwards and Augustus Hawkins and co-sponsored by 209 House members and 49 senators -close to a majority in both houses-is (HR 700). It would overturn the Supreme Court's decision in Grove City versus Bell that narrowed the coverage of four civil rights laws, resulting in a retrenchment in enforcement.

The court ruled 6-3 that Title IX of the 1972 Education Amendments banned sex discrimination only in a particular education "program or activity" receiving aid, not in the entire institution.

Civil rights lawyers and their friends in Congress claim the court misinterpreted Title IX and that Congress always intended an entire educational institution to be barred from discriminating if any of its departments received federal aid.

The ruling restricted enforcement of three other laws as well: Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, because they contain the same "program or activity" language as Title IX.

Rep. Edwards, another of the "good guys" honored by the women's political group, is chairman of the subcommittee on civil and constitutional rights, sometimes called "the Bermuda Triangle" by other congressmen who see legislation assigned there disappear forever. The controversial legislation is stalled now because of a dispute over abortion. Key House members are trying to overcome the objections of the U.S. Catholic Conference, the Bishops' policy-making arm. The conference believes the bill would expand abortion rights, possibly requiring Catholic hospitals to perform abortions.

Two committees have approved separate versions of the bill, but Edwards and Hawkins won't push for floor action until they resolve the abortion problem.

Rep. Mickey Leland, D-Houston, Texas, chairman of the Congression Black Caucus and a Catholic, wrote the bishops that their actions could jeopordize the relationship they have enjoyed with the civil rights community. The bishops responded they backed the Conference and believed their record on civil rights was solid.

HOW NEW HOMES FINANCED

There are many ways to finance the purchase of a new home. Last year, between a half and one million home were sold and all of them were financed through five basic sources. Here is the breakdown according to the Bureau of Census.

* Conventional mortgages 56.16%
* FHA insured mortgages 23.20%
* VA guaranteed mortgages 11.68%
* All cash (surprise) 7.68%
* FMHA (Farmer's Home Administration insured) 1.28%

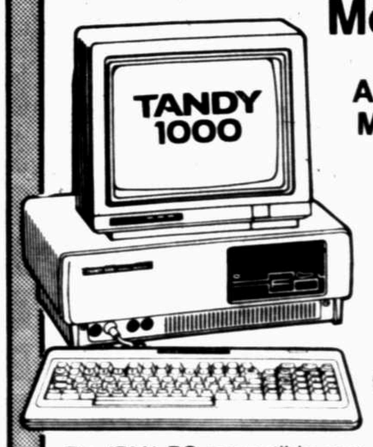

As you can see, over half of all the financing for the new homes is through conventional mortgages, but it's nice to know that there are other sources. Which one is best for you? That depends on your present income and the property in question. The job of the professional agent is to match the right house to the right buyer and to the right financing. Call us if we can be of assistance.

NWPC honors a dozen 'good guys'

By PEGGY ROBERSON
Washington Correspondent

WASHINGTON — Twelve "good guys" — nationally prominent men who have helped women win civil rights and gain political power — were honored here last week at a candlelit dinner hosted by the National Women's Political Caucus.

"These men have shown by their words and actions that they are committed to our goals of full equality for women and full participation of women in public affairs," said NWPC Chairman Irene Natividad. "That's why we honor them."

Accepting the award were:

— John Mack Carter, editor-in-chief of Good Housekeeping Magazine who sponsored national forums that pulled together hundreds of women leaders to lay the groundwork for building momentum behind a growing women's movement and a generous supporter of the caucus from its beginning.

— Actor Alan Alda, who stumped the country in support of the equal rights amendment.

— Pat Caddell, a Washington political consultant who has encouraged and represented women candidates and raises money for the NWPC.

— Television talk show host Phil Donahue, an avowed feminist, who has used television to tackle subjects once considered too controverisal for broadcast, including abortion and teenage pregnancy.

— Rep. Don Edwards, D-Calif., the "father of the ERA," who, as chairman of the subcommittee on Civil and Constitutional Rights, is leading the effort to overturn the Supreme Court's decision that reduced anti-discriminatory protection for women, minorities, the elderly and the disabled.

— Philanthropist Stewart Mott, a board member of several women's organizations and the founder of a Planned Parenthood chapter in Flint, Mich., in the mid-60's.

— Ralph G. Neas, director of the non-partisan Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, an umbrella for 185 organizations, whose strength is in coalition building. He is sprearheading the effort to pass the Civil Rights Restoration Act.

— Sen. Robert Packwood, R-Ore., chief Republican sponsor of the ERA and the leader of the fight against bans on federal funds to pay for abortions and decreasing funding for international and domestic family planning programs.

— Political consultant Bob Squier, an advisor to women candidates who has donated time and money to the NWPC.

— San Antonio Mayor Henry Cisneros accepted his award in a filmed speech. He was honored because he has appointed women to positions at all levels of government, education and employment and created a commission to study the "feminization of poverty."

— Los Angeles Mayor Tom Bradley sent a telegram regretting he could not be present for the ceremony. He was named because he proposed a $12 million pay adjustment for Los Angeles clerical workers and librarians and, with City Council members, negotiated an out-of-court settlement to institute "pay equity" in the second largest city in the nation.

— Cartoonist Gary Trudeau, creator of the cartoon character Ms. Joanie Caucus in his widely read "Doonesbury" comic strip, was not present. The NWPC said "Doonesbury" has been a "powerful tool for awakening the world to the women's movement."

Accepting his award, Donahue said there is no reason "to walk 'round slump shouldered" because of assaults on the women's movement. "Trust the common sense of the American people," he urged.

Cadell said he is "staggered" by recent polls that show "a revolution of women in society." Geraldine Ferraro's candidacy for the Democratic nomination for vice presidency changed politics for all time, he said.

Edwards warned that the Reagan administration is trying to reverse Roe verus Wade, the Supreme Court ruling that made abortion legal in all states, and is ganging up on women on other issues. "Their knives are out and they smell blood," he said. "But we have just begun to fight."

In 1963, when he ran an excerpt from a new book, "The Feminine Mystique," widely credited with raising the consciousness of millions of women, Carter said he didn't know what he was doing. "I'm still learning," Carter added. When he received a letter telling him he was a "good guy," Carter said, he experienced "a thrill that ran clear offthe end of the Richter Scale. To be one of the 12 disciples, the good guys, is heady stuff."

Sprinkled through the audience that paid from $50 to $150 a plate for the steak dinner, were other senators, representatives and political and theatrical personalties, including Sen. Alan Cranston, D-Calif.; Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill.; Reps. Claudine Schneider, R-R.I.; Patricia Schroeder, D-Col.; Ted Weiss, D-N.Y.; and actor Richard Dreyfuss.

Ms. Natividad, of New York City, said the NWPC plans to make the event an annual one and to encourage state caucuses to honor their local "good guys" at similar events around the country. The 77,000 member NWPC is a bipartisan organization widely considered as the political practitioners of the women's movement.

Three killed in car-bus mishap

TUSCOLA (AP) — Three teenagers were killed and two seriously injured after their car crashed head-on into a bus south of this West Texas community, authorities said.

Six of 18 people aboard the Sunset Stages bus, which was making a run from San Angelo to Abilene, were also injured, one of them seriously.

Tim Dean, the bus driver, said he was driving north on U.S. Highway 83 shortly after 7 p.m. Friday with 17 passengers aboard when the southbound car "just drifted" into the northbound lanes.

Dean said he swerved to avoid the car, but couldn't.

Trooper Bobby Shea said those killed in the car included the driver, Robert Green, 17; Joe Cavazos, 18; and John Key, 17; all of Winters, Texas.

Carlsbad's WIPP site remains quietly controversial

By JUDY GIANNETTINO

CARLSBAD, N.M. (AP) — The Waste Isolation Pilot Plant has been cursed and commended, both in court and in Congress, in the 10 years since its inception.

Today, it continues to be controversial, although the crusades against the nation's first home for low- and intermediate-level defense-related nuclear waste have quieted somewhat as the repository nears completion.

Construction of the $2.1 billion dump in the underground salt beds southeast of Carlsbad began in 1981, six years after the federal government first proposed placing in the area the radioactive waste generated by its defense activities.

Officials with the Department of Energy, the project's guardian, estimate the finishing touches will be put on the WIPP late next year. Waste, however, is not expected to be buried at the site until 1988.

On the surface, WIPP looks similar to any other construction site.

It is 2,150 feet below ground that the project's uniqueness becomes apparent.

A canary yellow elevator cage slowly glides visitors through the long, dark shaft, the length of which is more than twice the height of New York's Empire State Building.

The elevator jolts to a stop in the center of the repository's 5,200-feet main drift.

At the southern end of the cleanly excavated salt tunnel, rooms that eventually will be the burial ground for the waste are planned.

To the north, similiar cubicles already have been carved out of the massive salt beds — "rooms that are as close to simulating actual waste rooms as possible," said Wendell Weart, project director for Sandia National Laboratories, which is responsible for the scientific experiments supporting development of WIPP.

The rooms already are being used for a variety of tests related to the project that 10 years ago was only a proposal on a piece of paper.

In 1975, the federal government began studying the salt beds in southern New Mexico for possible nuclear waste disposal.

The DOE's original proposal was to use the site solely for defense-related waste and for limited experiments on the burial of high-level radioactive material.

Later, proposals included suggestions that storage of high-level waste from commercial nuclear reactors also could be placed at WIPP, but eventually, only the original defense-related facility was authorized.

Still, some experiments on the disposal of defense-related high-level waste will be conducted at WIPP beginning in 1990.

After a series of environmental reports on the site, the Energy Department announced in the summer of 1983 that it would proceed with full construction of the project. Limited construction had begun two years earlier.

"Temperature is the most important factor in how rapidly the walls will come in. What we're trying to do here is to provide real answers in a real setting to all those technical questions that have arisen."

— Wendell Weart, project director for Sandia National Laboratories

WIPP has been the subject of congressional and legislative action, dozens of technical documents, numerous hearings by government and environmental groups and at least two lawsuits.

Several attempts were made to block its construction. At one time, it was the federal government that nearly killed the project.

In 1979, the Carter administration tried to dump WIPP as the project was authorized, saying it should be studied as a possible repository for high-level waste from commercial nuclear reactors.

Congress, however, balked at the suggestion and continued funding for research and development at WIPP as originally authorized.

Today, as construction continues on the project, much of WIPP's focus is on experimentation.

Four of the testing rooms in the repository are being heated above the constant 85 degrees Fahrenheit temperature of the dump to allow scientists to study what could happen once nuclear waste is stored. Because many radioactive wastes produce heat and disseminated water trapped in the rock salt tends to move toward the heat source, the experiments should provide data on how well the salt walls close in on the stored waste, Weart said.

The salt beds are expected to seal themselves around the stored waste during the 25-year project lifespan.

"Temperature is the most important factor in how rapidly the walls will come in," Weart said. "What we're trying to do here is to provide real answers in a real setting to all those technical questions that have arisen."

With more than 1,000 different gauges collecting data from the experiment rooms, Weart said the tests are of the "largest scale ... ever conducted like this."

Weart said one storage room measuring 18 feet wide, 300 feet long and 18 feet high will close in by about one foot in three years.

Experiments also are being conducted on the permeability of the salt walls and on how well waste containers survive in the environment.

Nearly all the experiment rooms have been excavated, Weart said.

Drilling is to begin this month on the waste storage rooms. Two panels of seven rooms are expected to be completed in late 1986. The drilling of the waste rooms will continue throughout WIPP's life, Weart said.

"As soon as we begin filling in one panel with waste, the drilling will begin on another panel," he said.

About 6.3 million cubic feet of transuranic waste, such as sludge and contaminated workers' gloves, is expected to be dumped at WIPP during its lifespan.

To construct a facility to hold that much material, about 1.5 million tons of material must be mined, Weart said.

Already, 500,000 cubic feet of salt have been excavated. The salt rests above the surface on the WIPP site, where a waste-handing building and other project facilities, such as a security building, are being built.

Work also has been completed on 5.5 miles of railroad to the site, as well as on 13 miles of access road to be used in transporting waste shipments to WIPP.

The waste is to be transported by truck and train in a transuranic package transporter dubbed TRUPACT, a stainless steel box within another stainless steel box. In between the two boxes, rigid foam is sandwiched. The containers' steel doors are equipped with three seals.

It is TRUPACT that is the latest bone of contention for WIPP. State officials contend the containers are not safe enough.

Concerns about the project's safety remain in the minds of many, but a lot of the vocal opponents have been quieted over the years, said Robert Neill, chief of the New Mexico Environmental Evaluation Group, a state panel independently studying the project's development.

"I'm sure people still feel as strongly as they did before. There's always been a spectrum of views," Neill said. "You just may not hear them vocalized as much now."

Harvard Lampoon honors Robin Williams

Williams

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — Television and film comic Robin Williams has been honored by The Harvard Lampoon, which bills itself as the country's oldest humor magazine.

"This is the closest thing to an award I'll ever get," Williams told a crowd of about 750 Friday night at the ceremony at Harvard University's Science Center.

Williams, whose career began in stand-up comedy on the West Coast, has appeared in such films as "Moscow On The Hudson," "Popeye" and "The World According To Garp." He is working on a screen adaptation of Saul Bellow's book, "Seize The Day."

• • •

BLOOMFIELD HILLS, Mich. (AP) — Singer Willie Nelson has sent some of the money from the FarmAid concert to set up a telephone service to give Michigan farmers information about how to cope with foreclosures and bankruptcies.

The money was received Friday from Nelson, who organized the Sept. 22 fund-raising benefit concert at Champaign, Ill., said Richard K. Stout, executive director of the Michigan League of Rural Voters.

The $10,000 was donated to the Michigan Farm Unity Coalition, the first group in the state to receive money raised by the FarmAid concert, Stout said.

• • •

TRENTON, N.J. — Mayor Arthur J. Holland attracted national attention in 1964 when he bucked the suburban migration trend and moved into an integrated inner-city neighborhood, a move he says cost him the next election.

But Holland, 67, said Friday that his family of seven is moving out of the cramped 130-year-old row house in the Mill Hill section and into a spacious home in a wealthier area known as Hiltonia.

"It's a narrow house. There's no storage area," said Holland, who has been mayor since 1962 except for a four-year period from 1966 to 1970, following his move to Mill Hill.

He said his move to Mill Hill, when he and his wife decided to buy an old house and renovate it, was misunderstood. "Blacks thought we were doing it for political reasons," he said. "It didn't matter to us that we were across the street from a Puerto Rican family and next door to a black family."

Casaroli

NEW YORK (AP) — Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, Vatican secretary of state at the Vatican and second in rank to the pope, was in good condition Saturday after surgery to remove his spleen, hospital officials said.

His spleen was removed Thursday because of internal bleeding after a fall, but the injury was not life-threatening, said Geraldine Travali, a spokeswoman at Cabrini Medical Center in Manhattan.

Casaroli, 70, was admitted to the hospital Wednesday after falling at the Vatican's mission to the United Nations, Ms. Travali said.

The Italian-born prelate, who addressed the U.N. General Assembly during the 40th anniversary proceedings, had to cancel scheduled meetings with President Reagan and others who were in New York for the U.N. session.

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock singer-turned-evangelist Little Richard says he is still in pain but remembers nothing of an accident two weeks ago in which his car apparently went out of control and hit a telephone pole.

"All I remember is waking up in a Jewish hospital and saying 'Thank God,'" he said in a news conference Friday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center.

"I feel good. I'm just so glad to be alive," said Richard, 52, an ordained Seventh Day Adventist minister whose full name is Richard Wayne Penniman.

Dr. Edwin Gromis, an orthopedic surgeon, said Little Richard was lucky to survive the Oct. 8 accident. His right thigh bone was shattered into seven or eight fragments and a steel rod had to be implanted, Gromis said.

Little Richard said he would continue preaching and is pursuing film roles. He appeared as a preacher in a recent episode of NBC's "Miami Vice" and said he just finished a Walt Disney Productions film entitled "Down and Out in Beverly Hills," starring Richard Dreyfuss and Bette Midler.

Monroe death probe denounced

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A grand jury probe into the 1962 death of actress Marilyn Monroe would be nothing but a "pretend investigation," says District Attorney Ira Reiner.

He said Friday that no purpose would be served by reopening the case, which was investigated extensively as recently as 1982 by former District Attorney John Van de Kamp, who later became state attorney general.

"This would be no more than a pretend criminal investigation," Reiner said, accusing the grand jury foreman, Sam Cordova, of being the unnamed source of a news report that the grand jury plans to reopen the case.

Cordova acknowledged he released a statement about the case Friday, but denied saying the grand jury would reopen the case.

Miss Monroe's body was found in her bedroom early on Aug. 5, 1962.

Her death was the focus of a British Broadcasting Corp. documentary program shown in the United States last week that suggested that Miss Monroe had romances with President John F. Kennedy and his brother, Attorney-General Robert F. Kennedy, and that it was a visit by Robert Kennedy that made her suicidal.

Fans say they want Presley, not polkas

TRENTON, N.J. (AP) — Dozens of Elvis Presley fans rallied outside a radio station Saturday, "All Shook Up" about plans to move a weekend program of his tunes to Monday morning oblivion and replace them with polkas.

"It is an outrage for Elvis fans. People don't think that we care," said a woman who identified herself only as a devoted fan. She was one of more than 20 people who called The Associated Press at the behest of WTTM-AM disc jockey "Rockin' Ron" Cade, who has been host of the Saturday morning show for all of its seven years.

Cade, 33, said the station's manager gave him no official explanation for the decision to shift the three-hour "Elvis and Friends Show" from Saturdays at 10 a.m. to the same time Monday, when most Presley fans would be at work.

Station Manager Mark Scott, 32, could not be reached for comment. His mother Fay, president of the Scott Broadcasting Group which owns WTTM and 11 other radio stations, said he had gone wind-surfing.

"I'm happy that they care enough to make an uproar about this thing," Mrs. Scott said. "If they want it that badly I'm sure he (Mark) will give it great consideration."

"It's certainly not a ratings problem. This is the highest rated show on this radio station," said Cade, adding that it has about 25,000 listeners from northeastern Philadelphia to central and southern New Jersey.

He said the show was not having trouble obtaining sponsors, and noted that of about 500 people who called the station Saturday to voice their opinions on the programming change, only one favored the switch to polka music.

"I'm All Shook Up. Don't Be Cruel. Keep Rockin' Ron on Saturday."

— A protester's poster

"Our sales manager said he got some letters from people in Colorado, New York and Florida" opposing the switch, said Cade. "And they can't even hear the show."

The show, which was launched two years after Presley died on Aug. 17, 1977, will have its last weekend broadcast on Nov. 2.

Some of the more than 35 people who picketed the 1,000-watt station's studios carried signs quoting Presley songs.

Said one: "I'm All Shook Up. Don't Be Cruel. Keep Rockin' Ron on Saturday."

Another, "Honk If You Love Elvis," had the drivers of passing cars and buses blowing their horns, said one of the demonstrators, Dawn Burdick, 40, of Trenton. She vowed to protest again next week.

"The majority of people who have made this show successful are no longer going to be able to listen," said Cade.

"Saturday's our day. The radio really keeps us going," said Mrs. Burdick, adding that she and most of her friends who listen to the show work weekdays and won't be able to tune in on Mondays.

Cade said he had not yet decided whether to continue doing the show if it moves to Mondays.

"I've taken a lot of pride in building an audience and I don't know if I want to be a part of the blowout," he added.

Scott Broadcasting's stations are located in New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and Delaware, Mrs. Scott said.

Royal's Iorg forces Game 7; Cards fall 2-1

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A dream came true for Dane Iorg Saturday night and the Kansas City Royals moved within one step of the ultimate comeback in their season of dreamlike comebacks.

Iorg drove in two runs with a one-out, pinch single in the bottom of the ninth inning to rally the Royals to a 2-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals and force a seventh game in the World Series.

"How many kids get the opportunity to hit in that situation?" Iorg asked. "I've dreamed about it all my life. It's certainly a thrill."

The dream of winning a 10th world championship on this night turned into a nightmare for the Cardinals, who had gone ahead in the eighth inning with a pinch RBI single of their own by Brian Harper.

But that lead, as well as a 3-1 lead in games in the best-of-seven Series, vanished.

"We had the World Series won tonight," Cards Manager Whitey Herzog said. "I still think we're the team of destiny. We were picked to finish last."

Harper's go-ahead single for the Cardinals came off Royals left-hander Charlie Leibrandt, who lost Game 2 of the Series after taking a two-hit shutout into the ninth inning and who appe¼headed for another heartbreaker until the ninth. He retired the first 15 batters he faced and set down the Cardinals in order six of the first seven innings but stood to be the loser again.

Iorg's hit came off Todd Worrell, who had tied a World Series record by striking out six consecutive batters in relief in Game 5. The inning included a disputed play at first base, a misplayed foul ball, a botched sacrifice bunt attempt, a passed ball and an intentional walk.

"I wasn't nervous," Iorg said. "I have to concentrate on other things. I've pinch hit in other situations. I knew this was the most important."

Now, with Game 7 scheduled for Sunday night, the Royals face the last hurdle in their comeback of comebacks. And they must do it against the ace of St. Louis' staff, John Tudor, 21-8, who will face the Royals' ace, Bret Saberhagen, 20-6, in a dream matchup, the first between 20-game winners in the seventh game of a World Series since 1962.

"I think we deserved to win it," Iorg said. "May it does even out. Tudor against Saberhagen in the seventh game of the World Series. I don't think baseball could ask for any more."

Tudor already has won twice in the Series and Saberhagen once.

The Royals came back from one game behind California in the final week of the season to win the American League West, then rallied from 2-0 and 3-1 deficits to beat Toronto in the AL playoffs.

They lost the first two games to the Cardinals at home, a situation from which no World Series team has ever recovered, then they fell behind 3-1, a deficit from which only four teams have recovered.

"It started in Toronto," Royals Manager Dick Howser said. "We've had a lot of big ballgames and a lot of big losses. And we're looking at John Tudor tomorrow, so there's no need to get too excited yet. But we've got our best guy going, too."

Howser was saved from more second-guessing. He stayed with Leibrandt one batter too long in Game 2, despite having bullpen stopper Dan Quisenberry warming up. And Saturday night, he passed up the chance to pinch hit for Leibrandt with two on, two out and no score in the seventh.

Jorge Orta, pinch-hitting for pinch-hitter Darryl Motley, started the rally with an infield single to first base off Worrell, who had come in for left-hander Ken Dayley. Jack Clark fielded the bouncing ball and threw to Worrell covering first, but first base umpire Don Denkinger ruled that Orta beat Worrell to the bag.

"It was a bang-bang play," Denkinger said. "In that situation, you try to watch the foot and the ball. The throw was high. In my judgment, the runner was on first before the catch, and I called him safe."

Herzog came out of the dugout and argued briefly, but Orta remained on the bag as Steve Balboni came to bat. Herzog said he argued that the only way Orta could have been safe was if Worrell had missed the bag.

"I thought Orta was out at first," Herzog said. "I don't mean to get on the umpiring, but we're not getting too many calls. I'm really perturbed about it.

"I thought maybe Todd came off the bag. But he (Denkinger) said Orta had it beat by a half step. If the umpire had said he came off the bag, I wouldn't have said anything."

Bears stay on top, beat Frogs, 45-0

WACO (AP) — Three Baylor players — flankers Horace Ates and Darnell Chase and running back Charles Perry — scored their first touchdowns of the season Saturday as the No. 13 Bears crushed Texas Christian 45-0 in Southwest Conference football.

Perry, a 188-pound freshman, followed his 7-yard scoring run in the first half with a 55-yard touchdown dash in the fourth quarter.

Baylor, the SWC leader with a 5-0 conference record, celebrated its homecoming before 42,500 fans with a 28-point second-quarter explosion and 31-0 halftime lead.

Terry Syler started Baylor's scoring in the first quarter with a 40-yard field goal after Jack Hurd intercepted a pass by Texas Christian freshman quarterback David Rascoe.

Ates capped a 20-yard drive by scoring from the TCU 3 after Rascoe fumbled a center snap.

A 45-yard pass from quarterback Tom Muecke to Chase, a redshirt freshman, built the Baylor lead to 17-0, and Perry's 7-yard run raised the margin to 24-0.

Baylor quarterback Cody Carlson threw 37 yards to split end Leland Douglas for the final points of the first half.

Ponies post biggest win over 'Horns

IRVING (AP) — Not only will Southern Methodist's 44-14 strapping of the Texas Longhorns Saturday count in the Southwest Conference standings it will be a historic flogging they should never forget.

"Who would have thought it would come out like this?" said SMU Coach Bobby Collins after the Mustangs' biggest victory over the Longhorns in the history of the series.

"I'd say we are mighty pleased," said Collins. "We got some turnovers coming our way and cashed in on them."

Texas Coach Fred Akers had raised the Mustangs' hackles by saying SMU's games shouldn't count in the SWC standings.

"Sure our games should count," said Collins. "The league already decided that. We have to play everybody, you know. We are just as proud as we can be."

Akers said the loss "was really disappointing. We had seven turnovers. We kept giving it to them enough that they finally realized they could win.

"We had a day like this in 1981 when Arkansas beat us 42-11. We just can't afford to get down."

REGGIE DUPARD scored four touchdowns and linebacker Kit Case intercepted two passes in the rout.

It was Texas' worst loss to SMU in the 69-year history of the series and was the Mustangs' first victory against the 'Horns in Texas Stadium. Texas' previous worst loss to SMU was 20-0 in 1935 and no Longhorn team had ever yielded so many

Toney, Vick pace Aggies, 43-28

Loss ends Owls winning streak at two

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas A&M's Anthony Toney and Roger Vick each ran for two touchdowns and safety Domingo Bryant intercepted three passes, one a 49-yard touchdown return, to lead the Aggies to a 43-28 Southwest Conference victory over Rice Saturday.

The Aggies, 5-2 for the season and 3-1 in SWC games, ended Rice's winning streak at two games. The Owls dropped to 3-4 for the season and 2-2 in the SWC.

Toney's touchdown runs of five and two yards, Vick's 1-yard dive and quarterback Kevin Murray's 11-yard touchdown pass to Shea Walker rallied the Aggies to a 29-19 halftime lead.

The Owls took a 12-7 first-quarter lead on runs of two yards by Wayland Mason and three yards by Antonio Brinkley.

Rice freshman quarterback Quentis Roper hit a 67-yard touchdown bomb to Darrick Wells in the second quarter.

Bryant returned a third-quarter pass by Roper 49 yards for a touchdown and Vick's 40-yard touchdown run opened up a 43-22 lead.

Bryant also had a second-quarter interception that set up Walker's 11-yard touchdown catch and picked off his third pass in the fourth quarter at his own 10-yard line.

With 37 seconds left in the game, Bryant sacked the Owl quarterback for a 9-yard loss.

James Hamrick's 48-yard field goal and a 16-yard touchdown run by Brinkley, kept the Owls within striking distance.

The Owls were forced to settle for Hamrick's 48-yarder after an apparent 26-yard touchdown pass from Roper to Wells was nullified by a penalty.

A&M's Eric Franklin narrowly missed a 54-yard field goal attempt with 9:40 to play.

Roper, who replaced starter Mark Comalander, left the game with four minutes to play with a shoulder injury. He returned, however, in the closing seconds and finished with six completions on 19 attempts for 150 yards.

Toney was the game's leading rusher with 116 yards on 25 carries and Murray completed 16 of 25 passes for 195 yards.

Freshman Ed Freeney blocked A&M's first punt of the game to set up Rice's early 6-0 lead. Mason ran the final two yards and James Hamrick missed his first extra point of the season.

Hogs run wild in 57-27 win over Cougars

LITTLE ROCK (AP) — Backup quarterback Mark Calcagni completed five of his first eight passes for 166 yards and two touchdowns and guided 14th-ranked Arkansas to five straight scores in a 57-27 victory over Houston in a Southwest Conference football game Saturday.

Starting quarterback Greg Thomas suffered a hyperextended knee on the second play of the game.

Time after time, as Arkansas built a 31-13 halftime lead, the Razorback receivers got behind a Houston secondary fooled by play fakes.

Calcagni, a fifth-year senior, took Arkansas 80 yards in 12 plays, 71 yards in six plays, 77 yards in three plays and 80 yards in eight plays for second-quarter touchdowns.

The last two drives ended with passes of 51 yards to Bobby Joe Edmonds and 32 yards to James Shibest. Nobody was close to either one of them.

Lee's Garza wins district cross-country

From Staff Reports

BIG SPRING — Mike Garza took first place for Midland Lee in the District 4-5A boys cross country meet here Saturday while Midland High took second place in the team standings with San Angelo winning the meet.

The Bulldogs surprised everyone, including MHS coach John Ford, with their runner-up finish.

"We were very, very fortunate today, we worked hard all week and knew it would take our very best effort as a team to make it to regionals," Ford said.

Midland Lee beat out Odessa Permian for third while Abilene Cooper and Big Spring were tied for fifth.

Midland High qualified Valdemar Ruiz, who finished third, for the Region I meet next weekend in Lubbock. In addition to Garza, Lee qualified Mike's sister Sonja for the girls Region I competition after a fifth place finish.

Mike Garza, who was favored to win the district's individual title, posted a time of 16:22, nine seconds better than his best time this year. As a sophomore last year, Garza won two Region I berths in track in the mile and two-mile. Sonja posted a 13:50 in the two-mile girls edition, almost a full minute better than her best. No time was available for Midland High's Ruiz.

Ford said the performance of his young runners, who were moved up to varsity when the Bulldogs were faced with some ineligibilities last week, could have made the difference.

"Our sophomores, Tony Rodriguez and Junior Natividad, really ran super today," Ford said. "Maybe when you close the door in one area, you open it in another."

The Region I meet will be held at Lubbock's Mae Simmons Park with the first race at 9 a.m. and the last race at noon.

The top five boys and the top five girls from each district earn Region berths. The same will hold true Saturday at the Region level where the four regions will send their top five to the state meet.

Midland High Boys: 3.Valdemar Ruiz; 11.Braulio Sanchez. 12.John Fernandez. 14.Jose Hernandez. 17.Tony Rodriguez. 19. Ray Najera. 21. Junior Natividad. Girls: 11.Toni McEndree. 12. Natalie Thevenaz. Junior Varsity: 4. Brad Clark.

Midland Lee Boys: 1. Mike Garza. Rodney Clark 10th. Tom Wheeler 20th. Rich Prigmore 28th. Abel Hernandez 27th. Girls: 6. Sonja Garza.

The Quotebook...

"Believe me, this guy is unbelievable. I hope they don't keep bringing defensive lineman in there; they'll move out all the running backs. ... He's like a big waterbed that moves around." — Running back Walter Payton of the Chicago Bears, on 315-pound lineman William "The Refrigerator" Perry, who ran for one touchdown and cleared the way for two more in Chicago's 23-7 win over Green Bay.

1890 — Chicken Wolf had three hits and three RBIs to lead Louisville over the American Association champion Brooklyn team 9-8. The weather at the Brooklyn grounds was so cold and blustery, only 300 people came out to see the contest. After one more game, the Series, all tied up at 3 games apiece, was called off because of cold weather.

As first races go, this one went off without a hitch, according to winner Phil Stenforth, a physicl fitness instructor at UT in Austin.

The first annual Midland Reporter-Telegram-YMCA Half Marathon Relay tackled the obstacle of fog and the logistics of transportation and survived its debut season. The race was won by Stenforth, who was imported by Roland Wong director of the Central YMCA to speak at a pre-race dinner on Friday night, in a time of 1:13.53, more than a minute faster than runner-up Dave Moore, the winner of the SeptemberFest 10K last month.

"I was very impressed with the race, especially since it was the first one," Stenforth said. "I knew it would be good because I've been here before and I'm really impressed the community involvement in these things and the community spirit. But I really didn't expect things would be this organized."

More than 240 runners competed in Saturday morning's event in a day of festivity at the Courtyard Park Mall. Eighty-two individuals completed the 13.2-mile course and another 39 relay teams of four members each filled out the field.

The overall women's winner was Donna Reker in 1:35.50, while Mary Laird posted the second fastest women's time of 1:41.40, good enough to take first in the 19 and under division. Donna Thomas was the 30-39 age group winner in 1:41.59, and Arlyne Ragan, 1:52.43, took the 40-49 title. Donna Cherryhomes won the over 50 division at 2:08.51.

The other men's winners were Doug Grosso, the triathlete and member of the race board, in the 20-29 group in 1:19.13, L. Sawyer was the 40-49 age group winner for the men in 1:34.37. The 50 plus men's division was won by James Huddleston in 1:36.49, and the 19 and under winner was Tim Netsch in 1:49.28.

The competition, even for a well-traveled runner and fitness expert like Stenforth, was keen in all divisions.

"I know they wanted to have a strong field of local runners, but of outsiders too," Stenforth said. "I won by a little more than a minute, but spread out over 13 miles, it's only about six seconds a mile. The competition was good."

For Stenforth, the trip to the Tall City was made even more enjoyable with his first prize of a running outfit provided by the Athletic Department. Other runners were treated to leg massages provided by the YMCA or complimentary post-race beverages and snacks.

After the half marathon there was also a fun run followed by a shoe-tying contest, and all runners were eligible to win one of 11 pairs of running shoes provided by the Athletic Dept.

Long ties Big Ten TD pass record as Iowa wins, 49-10

Associated Press

Chuck Long tied a Big Ten record by firing six touchdown strikes, three to Bill Happel and a fourth covering 89 yards to Robert Smith, as No. 1 Iowa steamrolled Northwestern 49-10 Saturday.

Long, who entered the game ranked as the second-best career passer in the Big Ten and 12th in NCAA history, finished the day with 19 completions in 26 attempts for 399 yards. He was intercepted once. Although the Hawkeyes, 7-0 overall and 4-0 in the conference, managed just one score in the opening quarter, a 40-yard TD grab by Happel about four minutes into the game, Long crushed the Wildcats defense in the second quarter.

After John Duvic's 21-yard field goal drew the Wildcats within 7-3, Long promptly answered with an 80-yard, six-play drive capped by Ronnie Harmon's 44-yard scoring run with a screen pass.

Long came back with two more in the third period, and a 4-yard scoring strike to Craig Clark in the fourth. He then handed off to Kevin Harmon for a 2-yard touchdown that was the Hawkeyes' final score and their only touchdown on the ground.

Northwestern scored with 2:02 left in the game when Mike Greenfield hooked up with Marc Bumgarner for a 4-yard scoring play.

Long's performance tied or bettered several records. His six touchdown passes tied the Big Ten record established by Illinois' Dave Wilson against Ohio State in 1981, as well as Long's own school mark set last season against Texas in the Freedom Bowl.

Florida 35, Virginia Tech 18

Tailback Neal Anderson ran 13 yards for one touchdown and passed 46 yards to Frankie Neal for another as second-ranked Florida defeated Virginia Tech to extend college football's longest unbeaten streak to 17 games.

Kerwin Bell, the nation's passing efficiency leader, also threw two second-half TD passes and fullback John L. Williams ran for 140 of his 153 yards after intermission to pace the victory before a crowd of 70,119. Florida — whose unbeaten streak dates back to September 1984 and includes two ties — built a 15-10 halftime lead, and then wore down the Hokies with an 80-yard touchdown drive that consumed the first 6:17 of the third quarter.

Penn St. 27, West Virginia 0

Tailback D.J. Dozier ran for 125 yards and a touchdown while quarterback John Shaffer passed to split end Ray Roundtree for a pair of scores as unbeaten, third-ranked Penn State beat West Virginia.

The victory was the seventh of the season for Penn State's Nittany Lions, who joined Notre Dame, Michigan, Alabama and Texas as the only teams in college football history to win 600 or more games.

AP Top 20

Dozier, finally rounding into form after a season-long bout with a hamstring injury, carried 17 times as he gained 100 or more yards for the ninth time in his career. He became the 10th back in Penn State history to gain 2,000 or more career yards, with 2,081.

Michigan 42, Indiana 15

Michigan tailback Jamie Morris rushed for 179 yards and two touchdowns as the fourth-ranked Wolverines overcame a pair of early turnovers for a Big Ten victory.

Michigan, sluggish after its heartbreaking defeat at Iowa a week earlier, improved its record to 6-1 for the season, 3-1 in conference play. Indiana, after winning its first four, slipped to 4-3 overall and 1-3 in the Big Ten. The score was tied 15-15 at the half, but Michigan — behind the running of Morris and crisp passing of Jim Harbaugh — dominated the second half.

4

A 31-yard field goal by Mike Gillette put Michigan ahead for good 3:52 into the third quarter. Harbaugh hooked up with tight end Eric Kattus on a 34-yard TD pass play at 9:40 of the period to put the Wolverines ahead 25-15.

Nebraska 17, Colorado 7

Tom Rathman raced 84 yards for the go-ahead touchdown late in the third quarter to boost fifth-ranked Nebraska to a Big Eight victory.

Rathman rushed for 115 yards on 11 carries for the day as he produced Nebraska's longest scoring run of the season with 23 seconds left in the third period.

5

I-back Doug DuBose rushed for 125 yards on 26 tries and scored the Cornhuskers' first touchdown, a 1-yard run in the second quarter.

DuBose's score evened the game after the Buffaloes, 5-2 overall and 2-1 in the league, scored on backup quarterback Craig Keenan's 2-yard keeper in the first quarter.

Auburn 21, Mississippi 9

Bo Jackson ran for 169 yards and two touchdowns, including a 22-yard scoring dash that put Auburn ahead after trailing 6-0, as the sixth-ranked Tigers defeated Mississippi State.

Jackson's 22-yard touchdown run sparked a 14-point outburst by Auburn with less than two minutes left in the half. His 4-yard scoring run in the third quarter gave Auburn room to hold on for the victory.

6

UTEP 23, Brigham Young 16

EL PASO — Defensive back Danny Taylor intercepted a Robbie Bosco pass in Texas-El Paso's own end zone and raced 100 yards for a touchdown to put the Miners on top for good in a stunning upset of defending national champion and seventh-ranked Brigham Young.

The Western Athletic Conference win was the first of the season for Texas-El Paso in seven outings, four of which were league games. UTEP had one of the worst records among major colleges in recent history, having won only 14 of 121 games in the last 11 years including this season.

The Cougars, who had defeated Texas-El Paso in the two teams last 14 meetings, fell to 6-2 overall.

With just more than five minutes remaining in the second period, Taylor grabbed Bosco's intended touchdown pass and scampered down the length of the field to give the Miners their second touchdown of the game and put them up 17-10.

Texas-El Paso added three more points on a 31-yard field goal from Hugo Castellanos to go in at the half up 20-10.

Air Force 37, Utah 15

Fullback Johnny Smith rushed for 175 yards and a touchdown, halfback Kelly Pittman added 115 yards and scored three times, and Scott Thomas returned a kickoff 100 yards for another tally as No. 8 Air Force whipped Utah.

Air Force had three backs eclipse 100 yards in the game, as quarterback Bart Weiss also rushed for 105. The victory raised the Falcons' overall record to 8-0 and WAC mark to 5-0, while mistake-prone Utah slipped to 6-2 overall and fell out of a share of the conference lead at 4-1.

8

Smith bolted 13 yards up the middle for a second-quarter touchdown, snapping a 7-7 tie and starting a string of 23 unanswered Air Force points.

Ohio St. 23, Minnesota 19

Freshman tailback Vince Workman, playing in place of injured All-American Keith Byars, ran 16 yards for a touchdown with 10:36 to play as ninth-ranked Ohio State rallied for a Big Ten victory over 20th-ranked Minnesota.

With the Gophers, 5-2 overall and 3-1 in the conference, leading 19-10 midway through the third quarter, Ohio State quarterback Jim Karsatos completed four passes for 52 yards in a 16-play, 90-yard drive. His 1-yard, fourth-down touchdown pass to Ed Taggart on the second play of the fourth quarter brought Ohio State, 6-1 and 3-1, within 19-12.

Minnesota quarterback Rickey Foggie then threw his first incompletion in 13 passing attempts and, one pass later, was intercepted by William White at Ohio State's 47-yard line.

Karsatos' 23-yard pass to Mike Lanese highlighted the Buckeyes' winning 53-yard drive that was capped by Workman's run. Byars, who missed the first five games of the season with a foot injury, left the game when a defender stepped on his foot in the third quarter after he had rushed for 67 yards.

Oklahoma 59, Iowa St. 14

Freshman quarterbacks Jamelle Holieway and Eric Mitchel guided Oklahoma to a season-high 643 yards of offense as the 10th-ranked Sooners rolled over Iowa State.

Holieway, starting in place of the injured Troy Aikman, ran the wish bone superbly as the Sooners scored on five of their six first-half possessions. With the score 38-7 early in the third quarter, Holieway was replaced by Mitchel, who then scored touchdowns the first two times he led the offense. Mitchel wound up with 135 yards rushing on 15 carries.

10

Seven players scored touchdowns for the Sooners, who ran up 542 yards on the ground. Oklahoma improved to 4-1 overall and 2-0 in the conference, while Iowa State dropped to 3-4 and 1-2.

Florida St. 20, N. Carolina 10

Derek Schmidt kicked a 54-yard field goal with 2:17 left and Martin Mayhew's 62-yard interception return for a score led error-prone Florida State to a victory over North Carolina.

The 11th-ranked Seminoles committed five turnovers in the first half and the Tar Heels parlayed two of them into scores. The first was Kevin Anthony's 6-yard scoring pass to Earl Winfield in the first period, while the second was Ken Miller's school-record 54-yard field goal late in the period.

11

Anthony threw two interceptions in the third quarter, the second picked off by Tracy Sanders at the Tar Heels 20. Schmidt got a 28-yard field goal out of it with 1:30 left in the third period.

Oklahoma St. 17, Kansas 10

Thurman Thomas hurdled across the goal line from a yard out with 1:05 left and boosted 12th-ranked Oklahoma State to a 17-10 Big Eight victory over scrappy Kansas.

The Cowboys, frustrated most of the day, wasted no time after Mark Moore intercepted a Kansas pass with less than two minutes to go and carried 18 yards to the Kansas 45. Thomas went 13 yards to the 32 on a draw play, then took a screen pass from quarterback Ronnie Williams and sped 30 yards to the 2.

12

The victory hiked Oklahoma State's record to 5-1 overall and 1-1 in the Big Eight, while Kansas dropped to 5-3 and 1-2.

Miami, Fla. 45, Louisville 7

MIAMI — Vinny Testaverde, playing against the coach who kept him on the bench for most of two seasons, passed for 295 yards and three touchdowns as 15th-ranked Miami routed Louisville.

Testaverde hit tight end Willie Smith for a 48-yard touchdown in the first half. Then he drilled a 5-yarder to wide receiver Brian Blades and a 78-yarder to Michael Irvin on consecutive offensive plays in the third period. Benny Blades, Brian's younger brother, streaked 33 yards with an interception to complete a 21-point Miami barrage in 3:25 of the third quarter.

The Hurricanes, 6-1, also got touchdown runs of six yards by Alonzo Highsmith and three yards by J.C. Penny and a 44-yard field goal by Greg Cox on the way to their sixth straight victory.

Georgia Tech 6, Tennessee 6

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — Carlos Reveiz kicked a 51-yard field goal with four seconds remaining to give 16th-ranked Tennessee a tie with Georgia Tech.

Reveiz' kick was set up by a 24-yard pass from Daryl Dickey to Eric Swanson and redeemed the junior kicker for missing a 22-yard attempt minutes earlier. Thomas Palmer kicked a 22-yard field goal for Georgia Tech in the first period and David Bell added a 38-yarder as the fourth period opened to give the Yellow Jackets a 6-0 lead with 13:02 left in the game.

Reveiz hit a 55-yarder for Tennessee with 9:15 remaining as both teams' defenses repeatedly thwarted opponents' drives.

UCLA 34, California 7

PASADENA, Calif. — Redshirt freshman cornerback Marcus Turner returned an interception 21 yards for a touchdown to highlight a 17-point UCLA explosion in a span of 3:30 late in the first half as the Bruins pounded California to take over first place in the Pacific-10 Conference.

The convincing victory before a crowd of 61,530 at the Rose Bowl was the fourth in a row for the 17th-ranked Bruins, giving them a 4-1 conference record and a 6-1-1 overall mark. Cal fell to 1-5 in conference play and 3-5 overall. The win was also the 14th straight for UCLA over Cal, which hasn't beaten the Bruins since 1971. UCLA has a 31-4 record against the Golden Bears since 1950.

Irish change jerseys, destroy Southern Cal, 37-3

Associated Press

SOUTH BEND, Ind. — Allen Pinkett rushed for 110 yards and one touchdown and John Carney booted three field goals Saturday, leading Notre Dame to a 37-3 victory over Southern Cal.

Scoring on the first play from scrimmage after the Trojans fumbled away the opening kickoff, the Irish raced to a surprisingly easy 27-0 halftime lead.

Then Notre Dame switched from its regular blue jerseys to green for the second half.

It was reminiscent of the 1977 Southern Cal game when Dan Devine brought the Irish out in green jerseys for the first time in years and Notre Dame rolled to a 49-19 victory.

This time it seemed unnecessary. Notre Dame kicked off and Randy Tanner fumbled after being hit by George Streeter. Troy Wilson recovered on the Trojan 2-yard line and Pinkett scored on the next play.

The next time the Irish gained possession, they marched 71 yards in 9 plays with quarterback Steve Beuerlein scoring on a 6-yard bootleg run.

The victory was the second straight for Notre Dame, boosting the Irish record to 3-3. USC dropped to 3-3 after two previous victories.

S. Carolina 52, E. Carolina 10

GREENVILLE, N.C. — Mike Hold threw a 70-yard touchdown pass and rushed for another score, and reserve running back Raynard Brown scored twice as South Carolina blitzed East Carolina.

Hold scored on a 24-yard run with 6:05 left in the third period to cap an 81-yard drive as the Gamecocks, 4-3, stretched their halftime lead to 21-3 before a record crowd of 35,047 at Ficklen Stadium.

Army 45, Colgate 43

WEST POINT, N.Y. — Colgate failed twice on two-point conversions after fourth quarter touchdowns as Army held on for a victory.

Colgate, which trailed 45-24 going into the fourth period, came back on the arm of quarterback Tom Burgess, who threw for four touchdowns in the final 15 minutes.

Burgess started the dramatic comeback with a 12-yard scoring toss to Doug Grzibowski. Army's William Lampley fumbled the ensuing kickoff and Burgess capped a 20-yard drive with a 1-yard touchdown pass to Buddy Brown. But Burgess' pass attempt for a conversion failed.

Stanford 28, Arizona 17

STANFORD, Calif. — Quarterback John Paye, who suffered a separated shoulder last week, came off the bench in the second half to rally an inspired Stanford squad to three touchdowns and a stunning upset of Pacific 10 leader Arizona.

Stanford, 2-5, snapped a five-game losing streak with its first victory in four league games and dumped the mistake-prone Wildcats to 5-2 overall and 2-1 in the Pac-10.

College Football

Arizona's David Eldridge fumbled away a kickoff return with 10 minutes left and Stanford took over on the Wildcats' 19. Five plays later, Paye dove over from a few inches out for the TD.

That score came just 2½ minutes after Brian Morris' 5-yard TD run capped a 74 yard march by Stanford as the Cardinal took a 21-17 lead.

Arizona St. 21, Washington St. 16

PULLMAN, Wash. — Quarterback Jeff Van Raaphorst threw for two touchdowns and tailback Mike Crawford rushed for 101 yards and one score as Arizona State beat Washington State.

Washington State scored on two straight possessions to trail 21-14 and was driving in the fourth quarter, but Arizona State stopped Cougar quarterback Mark Rypien on fourth-and-one at the Sun Devils' 3-yard line with four minutes and 38 seconds to go.

Illinois 38, Wisconsin 25

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. — Quarterback Jack Trudeau ran for one touchdown and passed for another, and running back Ray Wilson added two TDs as Illinois defeated Big Ten rival Wisconsin.

Trudeau scored on a 1-yard plunge and an 11-yard touchdown pass to David Williams in the first quarter, and Wilson got into the end zone on 1-yard runs in the first and third quarters.

The Illini flexed their offensive muscle early, stunning Wisconsin 21-3 in the first quarter, then hung on as the determined Badgers outscored them through the last three quarters.

Alabama 28, Memphis St. 9

MEMPHIS, Tenn. — Junior quarterback Mike Shula threw four touchdown passes to give Alabama a turnover-marred victory over Memphis State.

Shula completed 24 of 34 passes for 367 yards as the Tide picked up its fifth victory against a pair of losses. Shula also threw three intercepted passes.

Memphis State, now 2-4-2, failed to score a touchdown, but junior Thomas Ingles kicked field goals of 44, 31 and 44 yards before 37,069 fans at Liberty Bowl Memorial Stadium. About 17,000 of the spectators were Alabama fans who made the trip to Memphis.

Mississippi 35, Vanderbilt 7

OXFORD, Miss. — Hot-handed quarterback Kent Austin hit split end J.R. Ambrose for two touchdown passes to spark Mississippi to a SEC victory over Vanderbilt.

Austin, returning to the lineup for the first time in 2½ games, engineered four touchdowns, three through the air, as the Rebels improved their record to 3-3-1 and claimed their first SEC victory of the season in outclassing the Commodores before an estimated crowd of 35,500 at homecoming.

Georgia 26, Kentucky 6

ATHENS, Ga. — Georgia attacked the nation's fourth best defense against the run for three rushing touchdowns and Greg Waters led a big-play defense that helped carry the Bulldogs to a SEC victory over Kentucky.

The Bulldogs never trailed after quarterback James Jackson scored on a 5-yard run in the first quarter and built their lead to 26-0 in the third when Tim Worley ran 9 yards for one score and Wayne Johnson 27 for another.

Georgia, 5-1-1 overall and 2-1-1 in the SEC, also got a pair of field goals of 41 and 26 yards from Steve Crumley in downing Kentucky for the eighth year in a row and lifting their home field record in the 1980s to 32-3.

Virginia 20, Wake Forest 18

WINSTON-SALEM, N.C. — Junior quarterback Don Majkowski passed for one touchdown and ran for another and tailback Barry Word rushed for 137 yards as Virginia held off Wake Forest.

Clemson 39, North Carolina St. 10

CLEMSON, S.C. — Kenny Flowers scored three touchdowns and Stacey Driver sprinted for another as Clemson crushed North Carolina State.

The Tigers, 4-3 overall and 3-1 in the ACC, reverted to their dominating style of recent years, combining ball-control offense with opportunistic defense.

While Driver and Flowers made mincemeat of the Wolfpack defense, Clemson intercepted four passes to shut down the Wolfpack offense.

MC athletes to hold open house, basketball scrimmage

From Staff Reports

The Midland College cagers, along with members of the golf and tennis teams, will be on hand at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday for photos and interviews and will hold a brief scrimmage at 7:30 p.m.

Season tickets also may be purchased Tuesday at the Center and during the week. Tickets for all Chap home games, including the Chaparral Classic Nov. 6-8 are $40.

"We are anxious to get started," says MC Coach Jerry Stone. "For two months, we've been practicing and it's time to start competing."

Stone returns four lettermen from last year's team that finished fourth in the nationals at Hutchinson, Kansas, last March, but there are a lot of unknowns and the eight freshmen hold the key yo the Chaps' success.

A year ago 6-10 Teviin Binns led MC to its fourth WJCAC title and third regional.

"With Ricky Grace, Eddie Frazier, Derrick Lewis and Tony Wright back, there's a good nucleus for a team, but the freshmen have to come through for us to be really solid," contends Stone.

After Jacksonville, the Chaps host the Chap Classic with teams coming from Odessa College, Howard College and South Plains from within the WJCAC along with Garden City, Kan.; Grayson County of Denison; Murray State of Oklahoma and the Lubbock Christian JV.

After that MC will be on the road for three weeks, playing Seward County, Kan., Nov. 14 on the way to the Garden City, Kan., Classic Nov. 15-16. Following a week off, the Chaps play in the OC Tournament Nov. 28-30.

The OC tournament is a new one, replacing the Amarillo Classic. When Amarillo decided to drop its program, OC stepped in.

MC opens its WJCAC schedule as host to South Plains Dec. 2. SPC will be coached by former Odessa Permian, OC head coach and MC assistant Ron Mayberry.

Grace, 6-1 guard from Wilmer Hutchins, was a 51.6 per cent shooter last year who averaged 7.8 points and 3.9 assists, contributing substantially to MC's late season success.

Wright, 6-4 from New York City, averaged 7.2 points and was 56.2 from the field. He had 3.6 rebounds and 3.1 assists.

Frazier and Lewis became eligible at mid-term last year. Lewis is one of two players at 6-7 1/2 and had 2.2 points and 2.2 rebounds for his 20 games.

Frazier, 6-6 1/2, 220 from Boston, had a 6.2 average in 4.8 rebounds in 23 games. He also blocked 20 shots and rocked the rafters with 15 dunks. Eddie's 59.2 from the field was the best on the team....his 47.2 from the line was the worst.

Led by Wright, 215, and Frazier, Stone has five players over 200 pounds.

Stone predicts "We're going to be a lot different this year than last, when we looked to Binns for the points," Stone said. "He was the only player who averaged in double figures for us. This year we may have five in double figures every night, but none hitting very many."

This year's team will be as large and as quick as any team the Chaps have put on the court.

The newcomers...

Daron (Mookie) Blaylock, 6-1, 165 from Garland; two-year starter who averaged 17.7 points and 10 assists; all-district, all-city and MVP for a 26-3 team...

Charles (Chase) Brown, 6-4, 210 DeLand, Fla., who is a transfer from NMMI where he averaged 15 points and eight rebounds and earned all-WJCAC honors. A three-year starter at DeLand, he averaged 20 points and 10 rebounds... Craig (Curtis) Curry, 6-7, 190 from Altoona, Pa., 12.5 points, seven rebounds, four assists and two-time all-stater in three years as a starter for a team that was 27-1 last season....

Todd Duncan, 6-1, 150, Lubbock Coronado; averaged 23 points and has a quick outside shot. He was all-Tall City tournament, all-district, all-city, all-South Plains and MVP for Coronado...

Eric Kelly, 6-1 160 from Dallas Kimball. Earned three letters and started two years on 30-5, 30-3 and 30-3 teams and reached the regional finals three times. Averaged 15 points...

Lincoln (Ice) Minor 6-3 1/2, 165 from Houston Westfield; two-year starter with 24.6 average; all-district and playedin Texas Shoot-Out All-Star game...

Bruce Nix, 6-7 1/2,217 from Leakesville, Miss., and a redshirt freshman at Southwest Louisiana. In high school, a three-year starter with 27.8 per game and 14 rebounds as a senior...

Mike Smith, 6-4 1/2, 215 from Cocoa, Fla., where he averaged 24.3 points and 12.1 rebounds. He was all-conference, team MVP and MVP of the Florida all-star game. He was also foptball team MVP as a sophomore...

Austin College tips McMurry

Associated Press

Austin College fumbled and recovered the lead four times before a David Goss field goal finally defeated McMurry College 26-23 Saturday.

McMurry, 0-8, controlled the first quarter with a field goal and a 46-yard touchdown pass. But Austin, 6-2, recouped with a Goss field goal, a 2-yard touchdown run and a successful kick.

In the third, McMurry came back on an 11-yard run, but Austin soon scored on a 5-yard run. McMurry countered with a 10-yard touchdown pass and two extra points but didn't score again.

Austin's fourth-quarter touchdown and kick tied the game 23-23. Goss' field goal then won the game.

N.Texas St. 0, McNeese St. 0

McNeese State's Flip Johnson had a 62-yard scoring punt return called back on a penalty, and North Texas State kicker Todd Smith missed two field goal attempts in the final quarter as the teams battled to a scoreless tie.

Johnson's fourth-quarter punt return was nullified by a holding call. Smith's field goal attempts, one from 51 yards and one from 42 yards, went wide. The second attempt came with 10 seconds left on the clock.

The only other time either team threatened was when McNeese got to the North Texas 13-yard line, but quarterback Subester Brooks was nailed for a 10-yard loss and fumbled the ball away.

Texas A&I 23, Angelo State 20

Freshman running back Heath Sherman scored from the three-yard line with 2:33 remaining in the game Saturday night to give Texas A&I a 23-20 Lone Star Conference football victory over Angelo State.

Texas A&I kicker Walter Rule field goals of 42, 30 and 25 yards to pace the Javelinas to the victory in the conference opener for both teams.

Anthony Jiles scored on a 60-yard run for the Javelinas, now 1-0 in conference play and 4-3 overall.

Rams quarterback Ned Cox tossed two scoring passes to Wesley Williams. Angelo State is 0-1 in LSC play and 4-3 overall.

Trinity 31, Colorado Col. 8

Quarterback Mike Frazier connected with split end Tim Horvath six times for 108 yards and one touchdown to lead Trinity over Colorado College.

Horvath, who caught a 46-yard touchdown strike from Frazier, also added a 33-yard field goal and two extra points for the Trinity Tigers.

Trinity and Colorado College are both 1-6 for the season.

Sam Houston St. 34, Lamar 22

Tailback Luther Turner rushed for 130 yards in 22 carries to help Sam Houston State spoil Lamar's homecoming.

Turner scored the go-ahead touchdown on a 12-yard run early in the third quarter to give Sam Houston a 17-15 lead. He also broke for a 31-yard scamper to set up his team's final score of the game.

The Cardinals, who led 13-10 at the half, lost star running back Burton Murchison after he suffered a concussion at the end of the first half.

Sul Ross 48, Tarleton St. 7

Sul Ross wide receiver Maurice Stephens caught three touchdown passes and ran for another score on a reverse as the Lobos dominated Tarleton State.

Stephens caught eight passes for 188 yards and also carried the ball three times for 45 yards, including a 42-yard touchdown run. Sul Ross threw for 456 yards and had 618 total yards in the game, while holding the Texans to just 195 yards.

The Lobos are now 4-2 and 3-1 in Texas Intercollegiate Athletic Association play. Tarleton falls to 2-6 and 2-2 in conference play.

E. Texas St. 51, E. New Mexico 38

Led by running back Donald Lee's five touchdown carries, East Texas State defeated Eastern New Mexico.

Lee's five TD carries tied a school record. The homecoming victory ups East Texas' record to 4-2 on the season and 1-0 in LSC play, while Eastern New Mexico fell to 2-4 and 0-1.

Tulsa 44, W. Texas St. 17

University of Tulsa quarterback Steve Gage rushed for 141 yards and two touchdowns as the Golden Hurricane marched over West Texas State.

The win lifts Tulsa to a 3-5 overall season record, and 2-0 in the Missouri Valley. West Texas fell to 4-3-1 overall and 2-1-1 in the conference.

The win was Tulsa's seventh straight over the Buffaloes, and puts the Golden Hurricane alone atop the Missouri Valley standings.

Tulsa was leading 24-10 at the beginning of the third quarter when it marched to the Buffalo 13-yard line where Jason Staurovsky kicked a 27-yard field goal to widen Tulsa's lead to 27-10.

West Texas narrowed the score to 27-17 during the next series of downs on a 17-yard pass from quarterback Todd Mayfield to tailback Wayne High.

It was all Tulsa from the point as Staurovsky kikced a 50-yard field goal later in the quarter and Gage ran for two fourth quarter touchdowns, one from 11 yards out and the other from 30 yards to give the Hurricane the 44-17 victory.

points to the Mustangs. SMU, which is on probation and not eligible to win the SWC title, is now 4-2 overall and 3-1 in conference games.

Texas dropped to 4-2 overall and 2-1 in SWC play because SMU's games count in the standings for the Mustangs' opponents.

Texas got an inkling it wasn't going to be a burnt orange day when SMU scored on a bizarre 95-yard play in the third quarter that had the crowd of 56,874 buzzing.

Coby Morrison broke from the SMU 5 to the Texas 43 where he was hit and fumbled forward to the 'Horn 31. Jeffrey Jacobs picked up the bounding ball without breaking stride and scored to give SMU a 27-6 lead.

Dupard scored on two short runs and a 41-yard dash in the second half after taking a nine-yard scoring pass from quarterback Don King for a 13-6 SMU halftime lead. Dupard rushed 25 times for 117 yards.

Texas' again relied on placekicker Jeff Ward for its offense. Ward, who kicked five field goals last week against Arkansas, hit shots of 42 and 43 yards against the Mustangs.

The 'Horns scored their first touchdown in 12 quarters late in the game on Bret Stafford's 15-yard toss to Russell Hays.

ROYALS

With Orta on first, Steve Balboni came to bat. He fouled the first pitch high in the air and it dropped untouched in front of the Royals' dugout as Clark and catcher Darrell Porter converged on it. It appeared Clark had the best chance to make the catch.

Balboni, the home run hitter who has yet to get an extra-base hit in the postseason, fouled off another pitch, then lined a single through the left side that sent Orta to second.

"I wouldn't say Clark missed the play," Balboni said. "It would have been a great play if he had made it. That's a tough play because you're looking down to see where the dugout is and the ball is moving away from you."

After taking two balls and then fouling off two bunt attempts, Jim Sundberg laid down a bunt that Worrell fielded toward the third-base side. The Cardinals' pitcher threw to third to force Orta for the first out.

Onix Concepcion ran for Balboni, who had taken second on the play, and a passed ball by Porter allowed both runners to advance one base. Pinch-hitter Hal McRae was walked intentionally after the passed ball and Iorg came up.

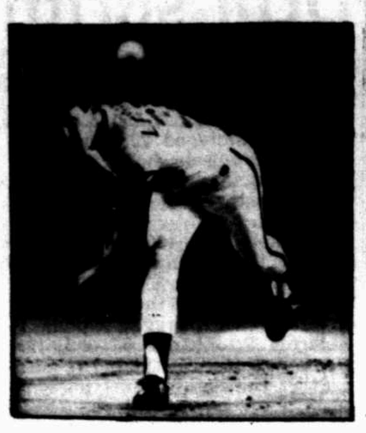

Iorg took one pitch out of the strike zone before hitting a soft line single into right field that scored both Concepcion and Sundberg, who just beat the throw from Andy Van Slyke.

"It was a fastball that jammed me," Iorg said. "But I knew it was a hit as soon as I hit it."

Game 7 Sunday night will match left-hander John Tudor of the Cardinals and right-hander Bret Saberhagen of the Royals, two 20-game winners and the aces of their respective staffs. It will be the first matchup of 20-game winners in the seventh game of a World Series since the New York Yankees' Ralph Terry faced Jack Sanford of San Francisco in 1962.

The Royals' comeback was especially satisfying for the left-handed Leibrandt, who lost Game 2 after taking a two-hit shutout into the ninth, and Manager Dick Howser. This time, Leibrandt retired the first 15 batters he faced and set the Cardinals down in order six of the first seven innings before Harper's pinch single with two out in the eighth. Howser had passed up an opportunity to pinch hit for Leibrandt with two on, two out and no score in the seventh. Leibrandt struck out.

Cardinal Manager Whitey Herzog did pinch hit for his starting pitcher, Danny Cox, a half-inning later, and it paid off.

Quiz finally at loss for words

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Dan Quisenberry, hardly ever at a loss for words, found it hard to describe how the Royals pulled off the Game 6 victory that kept them alive in the World Series.

"It certainly is strange how things have gone all year for the Kansas City Royals," he said. "There is no explaining it."

Quisenberry, with 1⅓ innings of relief, was the winning pitcher Saturday night in a 2-1 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals that pushed the Series to a seventh and deciding game.

A victory Sunday night will make the Royals, who recovered from a 3-1 deficit against Toronto in the American League playoffs, only the fifth team since the World Series began to win after falling behind three games to one.

They would be the first World Series champions ever to lose Games 1 and 2 in their home park.

"Tomorrow night is the biggest game for every player in this room," said second baseman Frank White. "We seemed to prefer playing under pressure. We've just reached a point where we believe everything is going to work out."

After Dane Iorg delivered a dramatic two-run pinch single in the bottom of the ninth, the Royals surged into their clubhouse with many shouting, "We aren't dead yet. We aren't dead yet."

The victory did more than keep the Royals alive. It also kept Manager Dick Howser from a barrage of second-guessing for not pinch-hitting for starting pitcher Charlie Leibrandt with two on and none out in the seventh inning.

Leibrandt struck out meekly and the Cardinals then took a 1-0 lead.

Reports say Piniella to replace Billy

NEW YORK (AP) — Former outfielder Lou Piniella will soon replace Billy Martin as manager of the New York Yankees, according to a published report.

The New York Daily News, in a story from Kansas City, site of the World Series, reported in Sunday's editions that an announcement of the move is expected to come shortly, "since the Yankee high command has made it known it does not want to leave the situation unresolved any longer."

The newspaper reported that the team's management met Saturday at Yankee Stadium to firm up plans for the change in managers.

Although Yankee principal owner George Steinbrenner has not made a public announcement about letting Martin go, he has put the decision about next year's manager in the hands of General Manager Clyde King.

Steinbrenner was openly critical of Martin's off-the-field conduct this season, especially late in the year when the manager was involved in a barroom brawl that included pitcher Ed Whitson.

Reached at Yankee Stadium, King would only say, "I would hope we'll have something to say soon. It's important that we have our manager in place as soon as possible. But that's all I can say at this time."

Reportedly, Piniella, now a Yankee coach, has been the only candidate in line for the manager's job.

Reached at his home, Piniella was non-committal, the News said.

"I really have nothing to say," Piniella said. "I haven't talked to anybody."

Big Spring clinches tie for volleyball title

From Staff Reports

The Big Spring volleyball team clinched at least a District 4-5A co-championship Saturday with a 15-13, 15-9 decision over Odessa High while local teams split matches.

The Steers own an 11-1 record with two games left to play, which is good enough to earn at least a share of the district crown.

Abilene High stayed in the thick of the 4-5A title race with a 15-4, 15-4 win over 2-10 Midland Lee. AHS is now 9-3 in loop play, tied with San Angelo for second place.

San Angelo won a 15-6, 15-2 decision over Odessa Permian Saturday. San Angelo has Cooper and Big Spring left while Abilene High has Big Spring and Cooper left.

Midland High increased its district record to 5-7 with a 15-12, 15-11 win over Abilene Cooper Saturday in the MHS gym.

MHS has Permian Tuesday and Lee Saturday left on the schedule and coach Sonja Pittman said, "We would really like to finish the season with three in a row to finish at .500. In the second half, we have been losing by one and two points, and in a way, that is discouraging and then again encouraging."

Pittman has really been pleased with the second half play of Amy Cumings and Liz Pratt and it was those two who helped lead MHS past Cooper Saturday.

Lee finishes with Odessa High Tuesday and MHS on Saturday. Saturday's contest will be the season finale for both teams.

Midland freshman teams claim three wins

Lee Freshman turned in an impressive football weekend with the White squad defeating powerful Odessa Nimitz by a 47-26 score and the Maroon team winning by a 19-13 count over Odessa Ector.

Midland Freshman split outings with the Gold earning a 14-0 win over Odessa Bowie Thursday before Purple lost a 21-0 decision to Odessa Hood.

The eighth grade Midland-Odessa Conference featured a battle of unbeatens as Odessa Bonham won a narrow 21-17 victory over Alamo in what was probably the championship contest. Alamo has one game left while Bonham has two. In other games, Goddard ripped San Jacinto 38-22 in an all-Midland battle and Nimitz slipped past Hood by a 13-6 margin in an all-Odessa confrontation.

In the eighth grade city conference, Alamo took a 6-0 win over Goddard while Trinity won a 12-8 decision over San Jacinto.

In the seventh grade American Conference, San Jacinto Green remained unbeaten with a 14-0 win over Alamo Scarlet while San Jacinto White took an 8-0 win over Goddard Red. Goddard White won a 6-0 decision over Alamo Grey.

In the seventh grade National Conference, Alamo Scarlet took a 16-0 win voer San Jacinto Green while Goddard Red posted a 36-0 shutout over San Jacinto White. Alamo Grey took Goddard White by a 20-0 score.

Sales Representatives

If you're the kind of career-minded sales person to whom "challenging" and "rewarding" aren't just words-but very real goals, then you're ahead from the very start at Xerox. We currently have immediate openings in the Midland/Odessa area.

As a Xerox Marketing Representative, you'll be working with and learning from some of the best sales teams in the industry. You'll begin your Xerox career by learning about our people and products-from the newest, most advanced copiers, duplicators and office equipment, to complete information management systems. You'll also learn all you need to know about proven selling techniques. How you use what you learn will directly determine your achievements.

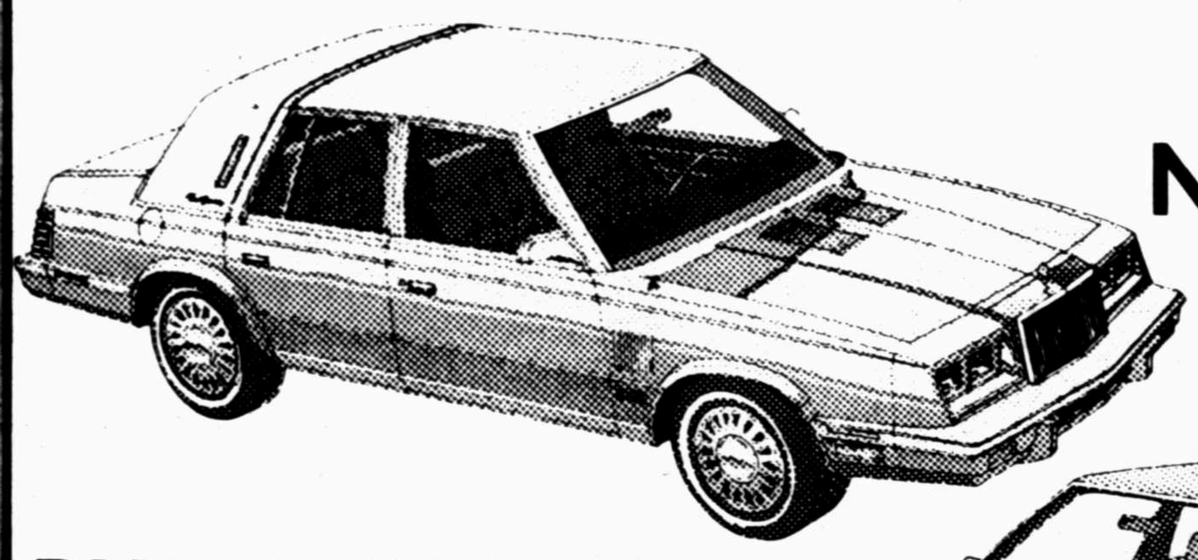

The competition has never been greater. But neither have the rewards. If you're competitive, looking for real challenge, and ambitious enough to want real rewards, please send your resume to: Xerox Corporation, 7718 Wood Hollow Drive, Suite 200, P.O. Box GLSF, Austin, Texas 78731, Attn: Littie Brown. Xerox is an affirmative action employer.

CLAYDESTA CENTER DOWNTOWN

Building on tradition

ClayDesta National Bank's downtown location in the old Gulf Building features beautiful wood tones and muted blues and pinks.

The Common Law library on the third floor of ClayDesta Center Downtown is one of the recently remodeled areas of the building.

North American Royalties, located on the 14th floor, is enjoying the space which was first planned for ClayDesta Communications.

In February 1959 ground was broken for a new Gulf Building at 306 W. Wall. The owner of the building was R. Dumas Milner of Jackson, Miss.

The building was completed in early 1960 and Gulf Oil Corp. occupied floors 6 through 14. Other original tenants were James E. Peterson; Rauscher, Pierce and Co., Inc.; TEX—AM Supply Co.; Jack G. Elam; C.L. Milburn; White Brothers Petroleum, Inc.; Verner P. Neissl, D.D.; Halliburton Oil Well Cementing Co.; International Minerals and Chemical Corp.; Petsar Supply Co.; William G. Ross; Warren D. Barton; Buffalo Petroleum Corp.; Charles N. Wallace and Thomas B. King; Jack L. Hart and Midland Development League, Inc.

In 1969, 1970 and 1971 Clayton Williams, Jr. and Bob Smith shared an office in the Gulf Building.

On June 10, 1970 Realty Income Trust of Providence, R.I. became the new owner of the building when the original owner encountered severe financial hardships. This company held the office building until July 22, 1971, when the facility was sold to Crosley Building Corp. of Ohio.

Meanwhile, West Texas oilman and rancher Clayton Williams, Jr. realized that his operation was quickly outgrowing its office headquarters in Ft. Stockton, Texas. "In 1974 I made a decision that I wanted to move my company headquarters from Ft. Stockton to Midland... So, here we came to Midland and I wanted to buy a building... Joe Bill Pierce said, 'The Gulf Building is probably for sale.' So we entered negotiations and we made a deal to buy the building." Williams recalls that a deed had been signed and was being kept at Midland National Bank (now First City National Bank).

Time for the original payment was approaching and "two hours before time, we heard that First National Bank had bought it (the Gulf Building)," Williams says. Apparently, he says, First National Bank even had a letter of agreement from the owner of the building.

The attorneys for the two organizations did some fast talking, he says. Williams and his attorney Tom Scott came out with the understanding that the bank would not file suit if Williams carried through with the purchase.

Williams recalls making that down payment and marching over to First National Bank to tell C.J. Kelly, "Thanks for letting me buy it."

Well, it wasn't a second until the new guy on the block realized that there had been some kind of misunderstanding. First National Bank had not given up on the idea of purchasing that 14-story building across the street from the bank, according to Williams.

"Here I am across the street having a fight with them... I kept hearing they were gonna sue me... They wouldn't talk," Williams says.

The bank did bring suit, says Williams, a Texas A&M graduate. "I had an Aggie flag made as big as I could," he recalls.

Williams hoisted that flag up the pole on the Gulf building and declared, "It'll take the Supreme Court of the United States before that flag comes down!" It was his war cry.

Eventually the dispute was settled, without the aid of the highest court in the land, but the maroon and white flag had become a trademark — a tradition — so it continued to fly above the downtown building owned by Clayton Williams, Jr.

When Williams bought the Gulf building, his offices were in Gihl's Towers. After the purchase, he had to wait one year before his offices could be moved into the Gulf Building, where he hoped to be able to do business with the many tenants who were independents.

However, there was one problem. Gulf was growing and they had an option for more space. Likewise, Williams' companies were expanding and needed additional office space. Even with 100,000 square feet, that building wasn't large enough for Gulf and Williams, little on an array of independents. In fact, Gulf occupied 87 percent of the leasable space and additional space in another building.

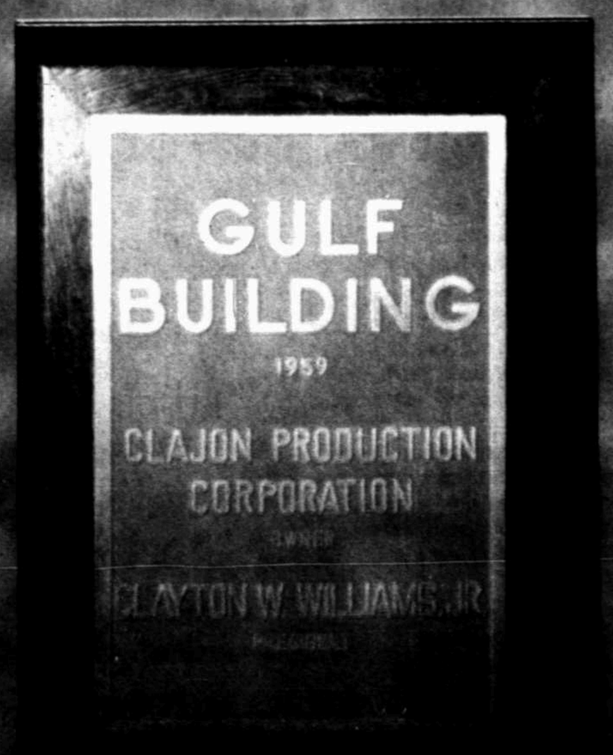

Thus, in 1982 ClayDesta Corp., the real estate arm of the Clayton W. Williams Jr. companies, offered Gulf the opportunity to build their own building on 13 acres at ClayDesta Plaza, which was just being developed on Big Spring Street. ClayDesta Corp. General Manager Bill Sandlin says that Gulf's move gave credence to the ClayDesta project. "They were the bell cow," he says.

The plaza was off to a strong start. However, Gulf's move and the almost simultaneous relocation of Williams' offices first to Petroleum Center and then to the plaza; left the old Gulf building only 5 percent leased, according to Sandlin.

Williams says that they tried to sell the building, but could not locate a qualified buyer.

CLAYDESTA

On September 18, 1984, Williams announced that ClayDesta Corp. would spend approximately $2.5 million to renovate the 24-year-old Gulf Building.

His announcement was accompanied with the comment, "We believe the project is necessary if we are to be competitive in the downtown office building market."

Sandlin points out that there is a great amount of class 'C' office space in Midland. He says this is accounted for by the fact that as class 'A' buildings age they move to the 'B' classification and push buildings which had been class 'B' into the 'C' category. "We didn't want to compete there," Sandlin says.

ClayDesta Corp.'s original intent was to update the fire and safety systems, the elevators, security system and the mechanical systems. Plaster walls made remodeling difficult, thus seven of the 14 floors were to be demolished and rebuilt, leaving Gulf's previous top management offices as they were.

Later it was decided to update the plumbing on all 14 floors, not just seven. Likewise, plans to improve the heating and air conditioning delivery system were expanded to include the entire building.

"As we changed scope we also really changed the building. Essentially what we ended up with was a class 'C' building that we just totally gutted... We've taken the structure and made it a class 'A' building, but we can't call it a class 'A' building because by definition a class 'A' building has been built in the last two years," Sandlin says.

Thus, after what turned out to be a $3.8 million project, Sandlin tags the building a 'B+.'

"We've got the bills to show it better be a new building," Williams said on October 22 at the ribbon-cutting for ClayDesta National Bank's downtown location.

The architect for the project was Pate and Associates of Midland and the construction was done by Campbell and Coats also of Midland.

Highlighting the exterior changes are new sidewalks, a reflective film coating on the glass building, a Monterrey-red band and a new name — ClayDesta Center Downtown.

The Monterrey red is used throughout the building's common areas. On each floor these areas are bordered with carpet of this color. The plaques outside each office are also Monterrey red. When asked if the color theme was selected to match the A&M flag, Sandlin says, "No. We almost didn't select it because it is a maroon color... We are concerned that not everyone is a Texas A&M fan." Ultimately, Sandlin says the color was chosen because it is a rich color which makes it easy to read the signs.

Williams wife', Modesta, had the final approval on all the interior design work. "She has a lot of class and a good concept of what she wants the building to look like," Sandlin comments.

The ground floor is now graced with an atrium, along with many beautiful wood tones, muted blues and pinks in the ClayDesta bank lobby. Even, the long-time popular Terry's Coffee Shop has been remodeled, Sandlin says.

Prior to the renovation, the elevators were exceptionally slow, thus the single largest expenditure was for new elevators. Explaining the investment, Sandlin says, "Clayton doesn't like to wait on elevators and doesn't figure other people do either."

Williams says that before he goes on a hunting trip he will often go to the 14-story building and climb the stairs to get in shape. "When I climb the stairs I like to ride down. So, I had them (employees) meet me at the top with the elevator so I could zip back down and start again."

The three new "state-of-the-art" elevators by Dover are seven times faster than the original ones. Sandlin says these elevators are the most sophisticated ones made by Dover. With micro-processing capabilities, they automatically stage themselves. In the morning the three elevators are staged on first floor, and in the evening they are spaced throughout the building to cut waiting time. A screen on the first floor allows one to monitor the elevators' movement. It reveals where the elevators are, where people are waiting, when people board the elevator, how many seconds they had to wait and the expected time of arrival.

Sandlin says these are the first elevators of this type that he knows of located in Texas.

On each floor the restrooms were redecorated and all the plumbing was replaced. In addition, the stand pipe for fire hoses was replaced, Sandlin says.

Other safety features which were added include a new fire and smoke detection system, new fire hose stations and a new smoke exhaust system for the stairwells.

ClayDesta's tradition of going with state-of-the-art equipment was continued in the selection of a security system. The system features 24-hour video monitoring from the security room at ClayDesta Plaza, a roving security patrol and a card access system.

The fourteenth floor was originally planned as office space for ClayDesta Communications; however, the company outgrew the space before it could be completed, reports Sandlin. Fortunately, he says, the design was well-suited for North American Royalties. With a few slight changes the floor was ready for one of the building's major tenants. The fifteenth floor is still utilized for ClayDesta Communications equipment.

Overall, ClayDesta Center Downtown is 38 percent occupied and the tenant list reflects Williams' 10-year-old dream of a haven for independents. "We feel like we're gonna see a tremendous amount of the small independents (leasing space in the building)," Sandlin says.

Sandlin also expects to see more law firms in the remodeled facility. The Common Law Library on third floor adds to the attractiveness of this building.

ClayDesta Corp. is writing three and five year leases. The rate varies depending on the area rented and the terms of the lease. Some covered parking is available at no extra cost and daytime janitorial service is provided. With 7,227 square feet available on each floor, the office space is being built-out to suit new tenant needs.

The flag? It's still flying and will probably fly as long as Williams owns the building.

Reagan tax proposal could eliminate tax credits

A minimum 15 percent tax credit for the rehabilitation of certain older structures will be eliminated if Ronald Reagan's proposed tax reforms become law.

"Under current law, a 15 percent tax credit is allowed to rehabilitate nonresidential buildings that are 30 to 40 years old, a 20 percent credit for those older than 40 years and 25 percent for a historic structure of any age," explains Dr. Jack Friedman, a certified public accountant and senior research economist with the Texas Real Estate Research Center (TRERC) at Texas A&M University.

Historic structures are eligible for the tax credits regardless of use. Other buildings must be used for commercial purposes (except lodging) to receive the rehabilitation credit.

"Rehabilitation expenditures must exceed the greater of $5,00 or the adjusted basis of the qualified structure to be eligible for the tax credit. If a structure has an adjusted basis of $22,000, at least $22,000 must be spent before a credit can be realized. This floor essentially eliminates trivial modifications or historically insignificant alterations," says Dr. Larry Crumbley, a certified public accountant and holder of the Deborah D. Shelton professorship at Texas A&M.

"Electrical wiring, plumbing, heating and air conditioning expenditures qualify for a full credit if incurred in conjunction with qualified rehabilitation," Crumbley says.

Sidewalks, sewers and parking lots do not qualify. The law is vague about architectural, engineering and real estate fees.

There are many other restrictions relating to exterior wall retention and building enlargement. The time allowed to complete the restoration work is limited.

If the Reagan tax proposal is passed in its present form, tax credits will be repealed for expenditures after January 1, 1986, except for commitments entered into previously for substantial rehabilitation.

Wallcoverings can be easy to install

This room demonstrates the look you can get with wallcoverings.

If you like the look of wallcovering but hesitate because you lack the skills of a competent home handyman, don't worry. Modern manufacturing techniques have made the art of wallcovering a lot easier.

Choose a wallcovering that is strippable, pre-trimmed and prepasted and application all but takes care of itself. Strippable means the wallcovering can be completely removed from the wall without scrapping or streaming. Pre-trimmed is wallcovering from which the edges have been trimmed to make it ready for installation. Pre-pasted means that all you have to do is dip the strip of wallcovering in water to activate the adhesive on the backing.

A good place for first timers to begin, says the Wallcovering Information Bureau, is in a hallway or foyer where there are fewer breaks and angles as well as windows or doors. Start in a corner where any mistake will be less moticeable.

Decorating stores, home centers, department stores and paint and wallpaper stores are all excellent sources for advice on the amount of wallcoverings you will need.

Remember to bring along the dimensions of the room where you plan to install the wallcoverings. These retail outlets are also good sources for information about wallcovering styles, colors and patterns.

Doorways reflect residents' personality

There's nothing like the looks of a handsome wood panel door to win praise from visitors. This attractive entry with leaded glass panels, says the National Wood Window and Door Association, has been stained to bring out the warmth and richness of the natural wood grain.

The life of the front door to many American homes is open and shut. Or is it? This beautiful example of form following function is too often taken for granted. But, we would all be exceedingly inconvenienced if the door ceased to exist.

Besides keeping out intruders and the elements, doors provide a passageway into the comforts of a home. Doors reflect the personality of the people who reside within, whether warm and inviting or cool and inhospitable.

A door is also the focal point of the exterior of a house. "This piece of architecture conveys so many things about the homeowner that it should be chosen with the utmost care," says the National Wood Window and Door Association.

The ultimate in impressive detail and natural warmth, wood is the perfect choice for distinctive doors. And now door manufacturers offer completely integrated entry ways consisting of not just the door but frames and sidelights. These precision-made entry ways are not only more energy efficient than a plain door, but are easier to install than you may think.

Before selecting a new wood entry way, remember that some may look like wood but can not match a genuine wood entry way for elegance and dependability. Wood is a natural insulator and can be painted, varnished or stained to show off the richness of the grain.

Choosing the right wood entry way to complement any architectural style is easy. Wood entry way manufacturers meticulously design many styles from colonial to contemporary.

Warning: your driveway may be hazardous to your car

For many people, the biggest pot-hole their car will face is in their own driveway. Without a cement truck at his beck and call, pot-hole patching can be a problem chore to the homeowner, and one he's tempted to postpone. But with each fresh rain more driveway crumbles away - and the hole grows a quarter-of-an-inch larger. Starting from scratch by mixing sand, water and cement with the garden shovel doesn't promise a lasting repair job - since the conditions that cause the pot-hole in the first place will now attack the patch.

A new patching cement called Thorocrete offers a do-it-yourself solution. A modified polymer with special bonding power, Thorocrete is quick-setting and waterproof, and a Thorocrete patch is stronger than the adjacent driveway. Thorocrete can be troweled and formed in any shape, making it perfect for the repair of cement steps, patios and walls, as well as the driveway. It can also be used as an underlay for tile or carpeting, or as a setting bed for flagstones, patio blocks and quarry tile.

Fixing broken cement is now simple and permanent. Chip all the loose and cracked concrete down to a good, sound surface. Then flush clean with water - and you're ready to fill.

Start with the "slurry" coat, a soupy mix that you brush over the surface of the hole in order to fill tiny cracks and improve adhesion. Then thicken the mix to trowel consistency and work it into the hole, making sure that all the air pockets are filled. Don't over trowel though, or you will leave "burn" marks (darkened patches on the surface of the concrete). Mix up only as much Thorocrete as you figure you'll use in 30 minutes.

Always keep your trowel wet, so that the concrete doesn't set on it, and when you're done with the whole job clean up with warm, soapy water. Wait one day before you walk over the patch, and two before you drive over it.

For more specialized jobs, like fixing a loose handrail or a wobbly mailbox, there is a non-shrinking anchoring cement called Thorogrip. Drill out a hole around the base of the post and remove all the dust, dirt and broken particles. Lightly dampen the sides of the hole, mix Thorogrip to pancake consistency, and pour it in. Ninety minutes later the Thorogrip will have set harder than the concrete around it.

Thorogrip's super-quick hardening quality also makes it good for setting piers in the ground to hold an outside structure - like a deck, shed or garage for your newy repaired driveway.

Thorocrete and Thorogrip are made by: Thoro System Products, 7800 NW 38th Street, Miami, FL 33166.

Consider life cycle when selecting roofing

Smart consumers know that though the price of quality may cost a little more initially, it is often less expensive in the long run. When it comes to a home improvement, they also realize that there are other things to consider, such as installation fees, repair and operating costs and the design life of the product.

Take reroofing , for example. In selecting a roofing product, says the Asphalt Roofing Manufacturers Association, keep in mind that the roof works continually, protecting everything underneath. Another thing to remember is that there is a broad range of materials and prices.

Asphalt shingles, the most popular in both new construction and reroofing, are attractive, economical, durable, and require little maintenance. Those with a fiber glass base or an organic base are available in a range of colors and styles.

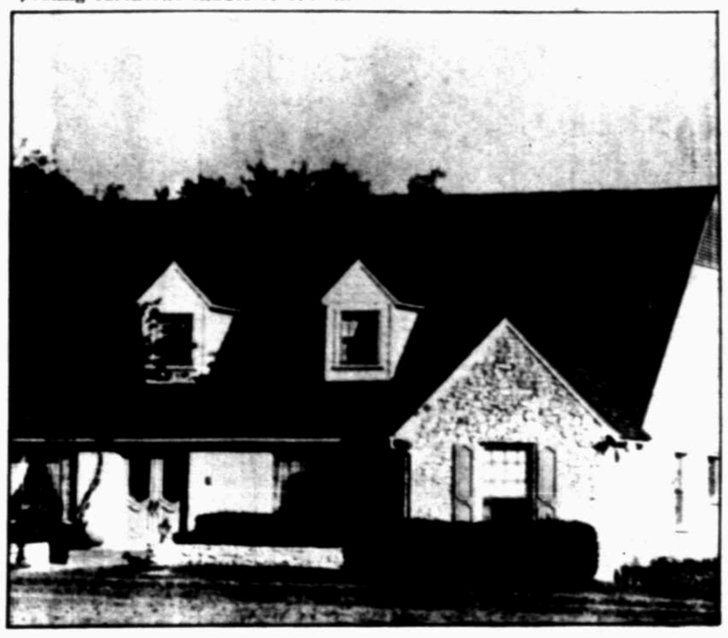

Especially popular are three-dimensional asphalt shingles in eye-appealing earthtone shades of browns and beiges that help relate a home to its environment, yet set it off from other roofs in the neighborhood. Their high-style, random appearance also creates ruggedly attractive shadow lines. Designed to last up to 25 years or more they require little maintenance.

When reroofing, another thing to consider is the cost of labor for application of the roofing material. In many cases, asphalt shingles can be applied over the old roofing, eliminating the cost of a 'tear off.' Since the cost of application is often the same regardless of life expectancy of the roofing, it may be more economical in the long run to specify asphalt shingles with a longer design life because the cost of materials and labor will be amortized over a longer period. To determine the probable annual cost of a new roof, add the cost of labor and materials and divide the result by the number of years the shingle is designed to last.

The quest is for contrast

Sometimes the key to good looks is not what matches but what contrasts. If it's time to replace or repair gutters, using the same color as the house could cut out exciting options. Why not use a contrasting color on your shutters and guttering?

Asphalt shingles are the most popular material in both new construction and reroofing. Designed to last 25 years or more, they are attractive, durable, economical and require little maintenance.

Caulking helps to stop heat stealers

Even in the most well-built and well-insulated home, a significant amount of heat in the winter is lost around windows, doors and through a variety of other "heat stealers" in a house's structure. In fact, it is estimated that windows and doors alone can account for as much as 25 percent of the total heat loss in a home.

The incidence of heat loss can be dramatically reduced by caulking cracks and gaps around doors and windows, cutting energy costs by as much as 10 percent a year.

Caulking is the process of applying a flexible, adhesive substance which is dispensed out of a cartridge b a special caulking gun. It is an inexpensive, yet highly effective method of improving a home's energy efficiency.

Among the many varieties of caulking compounds on the market, silicone caulks are perhaps the most durable. This interior and exterior sealant is often warranted to remain durable for up to 50 years and adheres to all painted and unpainted woods, all metals, most plastics, as well as masonry and concrete.

SHED SOME LIGHT ON CHILDREN'S FEARS

Graphic by Suzan Conder

Mary and John had put Tommy in bed, kissed him good night and closed his bedroom door. They walked down the hall to the den, snuggled together on the couch and began to watch television and talk about the day.

Then there was a small voice that echoed down the hall. "Mom, I'm thirsty," Tommy said.

Mary got Tommy a glass of water, tucked him back in bed and joined her husband on the couch. Only a few minutes passed before they heard the small voice from down the hall. This time Tommy wanted his favorite stuffed Teddy Bear, Herber. Then he had forgotten to brush his teeth. Then he needed help. Herber had fallen from the bed.

Tommy's parents were becoming very annoyed with their son's bedtime procrastination.

When Mary and John went to Tommy's room to put Herber back in bed they found him curled in a tiny ball, trembling at the head of the bed clutching his covers. Herber on the floor next to the bed.

In a small frightened voice, Tommy told his parents there was someone in the closet and they were going to take him away from his home.

All along, Tommy had been scared.

Fear of the dark is only one of many fears, but it is probably the most common, according to Irene M. Josselyn, M.D., author of "The Happy Child," but with increased experience and more ability to clarify reality, gradually the fear of the dark subsides.

The scenario above exemplifies the fear many children have of the dark and the way in which they deal with it.

Often, teaching a child they can control feared situations and showing them ways fears can be combated will make the fears vanish.

For example, Lucille Vaughan, head teacher of Midland's Heritage School, said, "If the child is afraid of the dark, turn on the light to show him nothing has changed. Take him outside to show him how beautiful the night is. Let the child have body contact with things in the dark so it becomes familiar to him."

Mrs. Vaughan also suggested placing a night light close to the bed. Teach the child how to turn the light on and off. Begin by leaving the light on during the night so the child can see there is nothing in the dim lit room that is unusual.

Gradually begin to turn off the light, Mrs. Vaughan said, but let the child know if he thinks there is something in the room he can turn on the light. When the child realizes he can control the darkness and will no longer be afraid of it.

According to Ms. Josselyn's studies, the light reassures the child that objects are not absent, therefore he is not alone — it places him back in a familiar world.

In his book, "Child Psychology," Arthur T. Jersild said children frequently make self-initiated efforts to overcome their fears.

Sometimes a child will choose to cope with the fear by directly facing the situation, and sometimes he will deal with it by bringing it into his make-believe play.

Codi Manley and Brent Brannon, seven-year-old second graders at Travis Elementary, both said they used to be afraid of the dark when they were little, but each devised methods to overcome their fears.

"I used to think there were scary things under my pillow and under my bed in the dark. So I would leave my closet light on and my brother would come and turn it off after I fell asleep. That way I wasn't scared," Codi said. "I thought of doing that so I could see if anything was coming to get me.

"My brother and I play this game, too. When we're scared, we pretend like our heads are television sets and we just change the channel," she said. "When we get scared we like to watch cartoons. It makes us laugh, so we just change the channel on our heads to cartoons."

Brent had a different approach.

"I used to be afraid of the dark because I had a dream that this monster came and took me out of my bed and left me in the living room. I don't remember what he did to me," Brent said, "But I remember I was real scared.

"When I was about three years old I used to pretend I had this device. See, I'd push this button and this shield would come over my bed. Then if anything tried to hurt me, the shield would turn to stone," Brent said. "But I only used that until I was about four.

"I pretended I had special equipment too, like 'Ghostbusters.' I could get rid of anything that came around. Then I didn't get scared," Brent said.

Older children couple their fear of the dark with dangerous fantasy persons.

Ms. Josselyn said these fantasy people often represent the punishing or revengeful parents, separated off from the reality parents of daytime who are kind and protecting as well as punishing.

The child's fear is not helped by punishment, ridicule, exposure to the fear or anxious solicitude. Ms. Josselyn recommends that parents give their children calm reassurance. She adds that it also helps if the parent is not afraid of the situation.

Jersild believes that adults can have a distinct influence on a child's fears through examples they set with own fears. He also believes parents can share a fear with their child to help ease the tension. A show of fear in others may give the frightened child assurance that he is not unusual or cowardly.

Herman Roiphe, M.D., author of "Your Child's Mind," agrees that increasing identification with the parents helps the child to overcome his fears. The child learns that Mom isn't afraid of ghosts in the closet and Dad isn't afraid of the dark, therefore learns to not be afraid.

For this reason, parents must be aware of their own fears. In several cases, teachers at Heritage School said they have been aware of parents who invoked their fears on their children.

One example is of the child's first day at school. Mrs. Vaughan said that most of the students are a little scared because it is something new.

"Our three- and four-year-olds are sometimes frightened. They suffer from what we call separation anxiety. They are afraid to leave their parent for the first time," Mrs. Vaughan said.

Mrs. Vaughan and Brenda Bradshaw, another teacher at Heritage School, both cited incidents where the parent placed the fear in the child.

"Sometimes a parent will tell the child 'Everything is going to be all right, don't be afraid of the new people, I'll stay right here if you want me to, don't worry — I'm sure the teachers will be nice to you,'" Ms. Bradshaw said. "By the time the parent has finished trying to console the child, he is more frightened than he had even thought to be in the first place.

"Parents need to help prepare their children for new adventures and they need to be positive and not to put fears into their children's mind's."

Another frequent fear in children ages three to eight years old is the fear of animals.

Dealing with children's fears

Here is some additional advice from "Child Psychology" by Arthur T. Jersild on how to help your child deal with fear:

— Explain the situation. Try to convince child there is nothing to be afraid of. This method touches on the reason for the child's fear. Be careful not to make the child feel foolish for having the fear.

— Set an example of fearlessness. This may bolster a child's assurance that others will take care of him and protect him. Fearlessness shown by other children is also helpful.

— Try "positive reconditioning" by presenting the feared stimulus in combination with an attractive or benign stimulus.

— Help the child to gain confidence in his ability to face a feared situation by bringing him, by degrees, into active dealings with it. This method, according to parents, frequently is helpful.

The following ways of dealing with a child's fear will probably do more harm than good, Jersild claims:

— Consistently ignoring fear.

— Ridiculing or punishing the child for being afraid.

— Forcing the child into fearful situations.

In honor of the Museum of the Southwest's Auction '86 Committee and to benefit the auction, an a fashion show luncheon was held last Monday at the museum.

Women members of the museum, its service organization, Las Manos, and the President's Club were invited to the event to acknowledge the work of the 20-member committee, which is headed by Suzy (Mrs. James) Boldrick.

During the luncheon, plans were revealed for the auction, the Museum of the Southwest's major fundraising event and invitational black tie gala to be held Feb. 6 at Midland Center. In addition to dinner and dancing, the triennial event will offer a variety of items for bidding.

Work on the auction began last spring and when finished, more than 100 Midlanders will have contributed their time and efforts to the success of the evening.

The festive luncheon, featuring chicken a la king and chocolate mousse with raspberry sauce, was served at tables for eight scattered throughout two spacious adjoining rooms. Decorations featured terra cotta pots of multicolored pansies and floor-length blue and salmon-colored print cloths, which matched the invitations.

Following lunch, The Canopy presented a lively showing of fall and holiday fashions. Nancy Coleman was the show's coordinator. Models included Debbie (Mrs. Sam) Bakke, Nancy (Mrs. Richard) Gibson, Kathy (Mrs. David) Childress, Dawn Collins, Ruth (Mrs. Kelly) Bell, Harriet (Mrs. Paul) Sidone, Brownyn (Mrs. Albert) Conly, Ann (Mrs. Robert) Canon, Teresa Tankersley and Pam (Mrs. Gary) Feist.

MRS. THELMA KELLY, a longtime resident of Midland, was honored on her 80th birthday last weekend with a reception at St. Ann's Parish Parlor.

The honoree was pleased that all six of her children and their spouses could be present for the occasion. They are Donna and Frank Repman, Dr. Donald J. Kelly and Janis and Henry Hermann, all of Midland; Sharon and Nicholas Montgomery of Santa Fe, N.M.; Sue and Jerry Kelly of Angleton, Texas, and Ann Barr of Philadelphia, Pa. A number of her 16 grandchildren and nine great-grandchildren also attended.

Other family members sharing the occasion were Mrs. Kelly's sisters, Pearl Metcalf of Midland and Minnie Siebert and her husband, Carl, of Belen, N.M., and her brother and sister-in-law, Casey and Sue Metcalf of Arvada, Colo.

The guest of honor and her husband, the late J.J. Kelly, moved to Midland in 1930 with Honolulu Oil Co. and resided for many years at 602 W. Kansas St. Mrs. Kelly was born Oct. 19, 1905, in Denver, Colo.

JEANIE PARKS, director of the J.W. Parks Gallery, and her husband, Walter, recently attended the 80th birthday celebration honoring internationally-recognized artist Una Hanbury. The reception was given by Una's four daughters and their husbands and children at the Simmons Way Inn in Middleton, N.Y.

Una is well known for her life-like sculpture, particularly of animals and happy, active children.

THREE MIDLANDERS, Dell (Mrs. George) Davis, Linda George and Patti (Mrs. Watson) LaForce, were among the many alumnae who attended the 75th anniversary celebration of the University of Oklahoma's Pi Beta Phi chapter.

The two-day reunion was highlighted by a dance at the Skirvin Hotel in downtown Oklahoma City. Attended by more than 800 persons, the party featured a cocktail buffet, and the Sooner fans were able to watch the OU-Minnesota game at Minneapolis on a big screen TV in the ballroom. Other events planned for alums were tours of the sorority house and campus, informal meetings of pledge classes, and a luncheon at the Student Union, where the sorority's Grand President, Carolyn Lichtenberg of McLean, Va., addressed the group.

MARY FRANCES (MRS. JIM) BEVERLEY has returned from a delightful 18-day trip to England and Scotland. She particularly enjoyed a return visit to the University of Edinburgh, where she studied during the summer of 1949, and church services at St. Giles, which she had attending during her student days.

Choosing the bus as her chief mode of transportation, Mary Frances enjoyed a leisurely trip from Edinburgh down to London, taking time to enjoy the beautiful countryside and staying in bed and breakfast inns along the way to get to know the British people. Stopping off points included Windermere in England's lake district, York, one of the country's most interesting medieval towns, and the village of Beverley, which is Jim's ancestral home. Mary Frances was fascinated by York's new museum, the Viking Centre, built at the exact site of the excavation of the Viking settlement.

A free-lance writer, Mary Frances had a busy and enjoyable time in London, working on a story assignment about the Texas Lone Star Saloon Restaurant and seeing the many interesting and historic sights, as well as two plays, "Me and My Girl" and "Steppin' Out."

Sister Baer: Saint of the St. Louis streets

Copley News Service

ST. LOUIS — Just around the corner from "the stroll" — a street notorious for its ladies of the night — Sister Agnes Marie Baer is offering prostitutes a second chance through her "New Life Style Program."

Prostitution often is called a victimless crime, but Sister Baer views it differently. She sees inner city streetwalkers as "the most oppressed working women in America."

"These women are victims. They come from a background of abuse — physical, sexual and emotional. This is a survival tactic. They are turning tricks for as little as $15 just to make rent or to support a drug habit."

That blunt description of street life seems out of character for a 63-year-old nun, who looks more like a school principal than a social activist. Yet, this soft spoken, gentle-humored woman has proven to be a fiesty pioneer and crusader in her work with prostitutes.

Her program has gained national recognition as a model for change and an alternative to jail sentences. Prostitutes often duck in and out of the legal system with lighter penalties than an errant driver. The cycle continues no matter how many times police pick them up.

Sister Baer's successes have caught the attention of the Crimial Justices of Washington, D.C., the National Office for Alternatives in Raleigh, N.C., and other law enforcement and judicial groups. Sister Baer has consulted with representataves from Rochester, N.Y., and Kansas City, Mo.

MOST RECENTLY, a group of Springfield social service workers visited the New Life Style Program to gather information that may be helpful in developing an alternative treatment program for prostitutes, especially juveniles, in the Springfield area.

Besides details about the actual programs, Sister Baer provided insights into some common difficulties encountered by groups trying to help prostitutes.

"There are so many minds set against prostitutes. This is a hard group of women to get volunteers for, and funding is non-existent," she says.

"I was helped along the way by an overcrowded jail. Judges were looking for ways to alleviate the problem and they were open to jail alternatives."

The fatal shooting of a St. Louis police officer several years ago also galvanized attention on the crime-ridden area. At the time, Sister Baer was teaching at a nearby Catholic high school and doing volunteer work with St. Louis Archdiocese's Office of Human Rights.

"There were no social services for prostitutes. I started by spending one day a week at the work house counseling women. I worked for a year without receiving a penny," she says. The program, an independent, non-profit corporation, still operates on a shoestring budget of $50,000. The money comes from private donations from businesses and individuals. Annually, she says, the program saves taxpayers about $200,000 in prison costs.

Sister Baer initially faced some difficulties in gaining acceptance, but as she has told doubters, "A doctor doesn't have to be suffering from cancer to treat it."

SHE SAYS her work with "women of the street' is compatible with the mission of her religious order — the Sisters of St. Francis. When the order was founded in France in the 17th century, the convents were directed to keep a room for wayward women. Sister Baer's work was viewed as a return to those roots.

Since the program began six years ago, more than 230 women have received counseling, tutoring and training to help break their ties with prostitution. Most of the women are assigned by judges to the program, as an alternative to incarceration. The women receive suspended jaiX sentences and are probated to New Life Style.

"It's true that some women are not lily white as far as their motives in coming to this program," Sister Baer says. "They would rather be here than in a work house or medium security facilty."

Life Style is not a live-in program. The women are encouraged to continue their education and find jobs. More than half of the program's clients have children, so the program helps them keep their families intact.

"If you are a mother with five children, this is the only way to keep from putting them in foster homes. Although sometimes the kids would be better off in a foster home."

Concern for the children of prostitutes led to the development of youth counseling at New Life Style.

"There is a real problem. Recently, the 3-year-old son of a client tried to sexually assault a little girl in a play care center. The boy lives in a single room apartment with his mother and her boyfriend. Some kind of intervention is necessary."

WITH THE help of a child psychologist, the program hopes to break the cycle of abuse. The children's center will also be a place for the youngsters to stay while their mothers participate in self-help sessions.

Rehabilitation may involve finding housing or applying for welfare and food stamps. Drug detoxification may be necessary. Eventually, the client may get tutoring or training to find a job.

But the first step is for the prostitute to change her appearance. "The cheap flashy clothes are like an addiction," Sister Baer says. "Most of these women suffer from a poor self-image and a fear of being discovered for what they are."

New Life Style staff members also offer intangibles like moral support in making the break from a pimp and former street friends. In some cases, relocation to another city or state has been the only way for former prostitutes to start a new life.

Despite her concern for streetwalkers, Baer is a tough realist. Fewer than half of the women who have come through the program have changed their ways. Without resentment, she admits she's been "burned."

"There goes one of our former clients," she says, gazing out the window at a passing streetwalker. "Her husband was shot when he asked some drug dealers to move from in front of his home. Now he's got his arm in a sling. She came back to the program, and we gave her another chance. But she was only trying to use the program to get free food and she didn't use the self-improvement aspects."

SISTER BAER cautions the Springfield representatives of "The Street Kids Task Force" that teenage prostitutes are even harder to work with.

"Their attitude toward change is different. At 16, they haven't been burned by it yet. It is harder to get control of them or tuBn them around. There is no leverage like keeping a family together."

Sister Baer does not generally work with minors, but many of the women who come to the program have been working on the streets since they were young. They don't all start out in the inner city. Many are recruited from small towns and cities like Springfield.

Take Sylvia (not her real name) who was from a Springfield family of 14 children. Her life story reads like a pulp novel. She was still a young child when her mother died. Her father split up the children and Sylvia went to a foster home. She was beaten and mistreated, so she ran away. She wasn't even in her teens when she ended up at a youth center in Lincoln. There she met with an older and more streetwise girl. The two hitchhiked to Chicago where the girl's "friends" put Sylvia out on the street at 10 o'clock at night. They put a wig and make-up on her and told her what to do.

Despite the grown-up trappings, it wasn't long before Sylvia was picked up by police. After a string of arrests, the pimp brought her from Chicago to St. Louis. She was still under 20 when she had a long arrest record in both cities.

SYLVIA HAS been coming to the New Life Style program since 1980. Staying off the street isn't easy. Sometimes she slips back into old habits. Her apartment is condemned, and she needs emergency shelter. Her boyfriend is jealous that she is spending time looking for a job or attending tutoring sessions at the New Life Style center.

"You can't get your hopes up. It sounds great, but it's not," Sister Baer says. "But we always try to keep the doors open for them. Not many people are in the position to go a step forward and say, 'What can we do to make them (the prostitutes) better.?'"

On community groups, she says, "I found they just wanted their neighborhood cleaned out. The streetwalkers were dashing up on porches and guns were fired regularly. It was a bad environment for kids."

Ironically, Sister Baer also warns against relying too much on religious groups for help in rehabilitating streetwalkers.

"A minister from a rural area used to come through the area yelling at the girls with a bullhorn, trying to save them with religion. Preaching at them doesn't change their conditions."

Despite her religious background, Sister Baer takes a non-dogmatic approach. Several St. Louis civic groups have awarded her for undertaking her ministry "without moralizing or proselytizing."

"I go to the gospel and read that Christ first fed the poor, and then he told them about God. We have to educate people that there are reasons that these women are out there," she said

FEARS

According to Jersild, this fear usually declines around the middle of elementary school, although it is frequently reported as persisting from childhood to early adult years.

Fear of animals is the result of various conditions ranging from an actual threatening encounter with an animal, to the knowledge to the potential danger they represent, to a phobic fear that mixes reality with imaginary creatures. Animals most frequently listed as frightening are wolves, bears, snakes and spiders.

Loud noises also are feared by children. Vacuum cleaners, sirens and loud engines (such as fire trucks and airplanes) are noises which frighten many children.

Noise begins to lose some of its effect as children grow older, according to Jersild, but it still remains one of the most common causes of "startled reactions" throughout life.

Among fears most commonly carried over into later years, Jersild wrote, are fears of animals, of bodily harm (such as illness, drowning and death), of dangers associated with the supernatural, of the dark and of being alone.

A child may also reach a point where one of his fears is showing fear, Jersild said. Therefore, children learn to disguise their fears.

"One of the most important things for adults to do is to not have an adult attitude toward children's fears," Ms. Bradshaw said.

Fears may be expressed in innumerable forms and occur in countless disguises. These displays of fear may range from an obvious show of fear to a show of complete confidence. Mood changes from good conduct to stubbornness, resistance and defiance may also be disguises for fear. Often these reactions will resemble anger rather than fear, Jersild said.

Time will work to take away most childhood fears, Roiphe said, once the child has learned to deal with his own emotions and learn what is real and what is fantasy. His best advice is for parents to encourage their child to talk about what has happened or letting him play-act the event.

Parents should also try to help the child understand what is real and what isn't and — most of all — have patience.

"Parents need to communicate with their child and show them they understand," Ms. Bradshaw said.

FIX YOUR KID'S REPORT CARD WITH AN UNFAIR ADVANTAGE.

There's a perfectly accepted, proven way to boost your child's grades: the Sylvan Basic Skills Program.

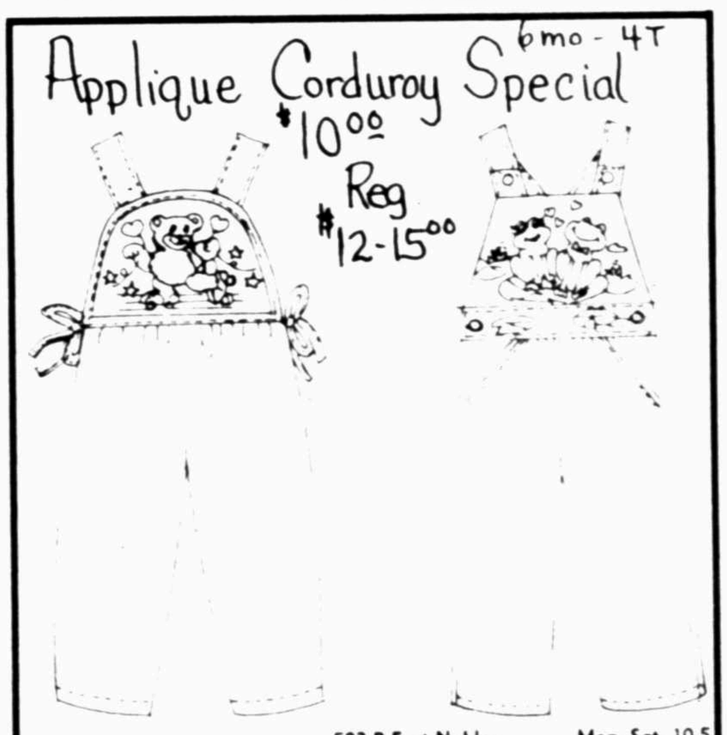

This personalized program gives your child such intensive teaching that the average Sylvan student gains more than one school year in reading or math during the first 36 hours of instruction.

Some people call this unfair. And it is. But only to students who don't sign up.

DR. KURIANSKY

Choosing partner personal decision

By DR. JUDITH KURIANSKY

Q. I've been divorced for five years, and in the past year I have been dating two men. It's been difficult to juggle time with both of them so I want to choose one. I can't do it, though. They're both nice to me. But one has a lot of money and was educated in fine schools. He has a beautiful car and country house. He's divorced and wants to remarry. My friends say he's good looking, but I think he's not really my type.

The other one is younger has never been married, and though he's smart, he didn't go to such good schools. He makes a decent living, but I don't think he'll ever be wealthy. He's funny and I love being with him.

Most of all, I'm excited with him and feel sexy around him. I'm standoffish physically with the other, but I don't know why. I'm tending toward the one who amuses me and turns me on. Could I be making a mistake?

A. The choice for you seems to be a love from your heart or a match that makes sense in your head. One man looks great on paper (with his money and background) and the other feels good for you. Which is better to make you happy: marrying a person or a resume?

Love is not always rational. Two people could even have the same qualifications, yet the essence of their personality and the way they interact with you could be entirely different.

Decide what your priorities and values are. Some people are influenced in their love choices by external factors, like a desire to be comfortable. Others put spiritual connections high on the list.

List the qualities that matter to you. What are those things that go through your mind when you decide to spend time with someone?

Order those qualities by their importance to you. For example, does being excited by him mean more to you than having a country house?

Check off how these two men fit that list. Such an exercise has been called determining a person's "eligibility score": how well they fit your internal and sometimes unconscious criteria for a suitable partner.

NOW HERE'S an important twist. Go back over your list and check off those items that are truly your priorities and notice which ones are priorities of other people.

Was your mother always telling you to marry someone who was well educated, while you never considered that as much? You're marrying the man, not your friends or your mother. Separate your values from theirs.

Most people — men as well as women — have a type they seem to gravitate toward. It is important to recognize the sources of these attractions.

We are creatures of habit. If you had pleasurable experiences with a certain type you will be pleasantly disposed toward other men who resemble him. This follows basic learning principles. We repeat what has worked or rewarded us in the past.

We are also influenced by what we learned from our family. What were your parents attracted to in each other? Whom did they tell you to pick? Many women constantly search for the man their mother wanted them to marry, or reject him once they do (as a rebellion against mother's choice).

Images and ideals in movies and books also condition what we respond to.

AT THE TOP of my list would be being treated well. Too many relationships involve physical — or psychological — abuse. If someone treats you that way, regardless of his wealth or sexiness, cross him off your list. If you chronically pick partners like that, get professional help.

You say both men treat you well. Good. So my next suggested criteria is how does he make you feel? We are often attracted to people who allow us to express parts of ourselves we like. One of your men, though not rich, brings out happy, joyful parts of you. That's worth a mint in my book.

Another valuable quality: Is he there for you? Can he understand your feelings and reasonably respond to your needs?

Besides going over your list of qualities, examine the nature of your sexual attraction. Are these genuine feelings of the desire to share and please one another? Or are you stimulated to be seductive just to win his approval? If that is so, once you get what you want, will you be off to another challenge?

Once you trust that excitement, trust your instincts about your choice. You will gravitate toward the one who best suits your inner self. Ultimately that will mean more fulfillment and happiness for both of you.

These questions about choosing between two possible partners are further highlighted by this woman's dilemma:

Q. I am seeing two men. With one I feel very sexy. The other is like a good friend. I feel secure with him, but I can't ever allow myself to be affectionate. And I can't give either of them up. Is there something wrong with this?

A. Some people purposefully pick partners who only fulfill part of their needs. Essentially they cannot be with just one person. There are several explanations for this.

You may be unable to make a commitment. As long as you see the holes in any one relationship, you feel justified in not getting more involved. Or you could be testing the field, to see what you really want. Perhaps you believe no one is ever really good enough for you.

Or you may be seeking to escape the pressures of one relationship, by having a safety valve in the other.

Men who must maintain two partners — one who is pure, nurturing and non-sexual, and the other who is erotic — have been said to suffer from the madonnaprostitute syndrome. They always typecast women as either mothers or lovers.

Recently experts note that women have a similar condition. For example, a woman might choose a rational, dependable man for a husband. But for excitement she fantasizes about (or has an affair with) a more unpredictable, sensuous man. She cannot allow one man to be both a family man and a lover.

IN PSYCHOLOGICAL terms, this is called splitting. People or experiences have to be either good or bad. Seeing shades of a gray is anxiety-provoking. Usually this stems from a troubled childhood where the child has learned that a mixture of feelings is dangerous. Safety comes from seeing a person one way.

Typecasting partners also protects the woman from the incest taboo. If her husband is loving and fits the image of her real or ideal father, she has to cut off her sexual feelings from him.

Sometimes the woman is afraid to reveal her innermost sexual feelings to her lifelong partner. She only can feel safe if she feels she may never have to face the man again.

When you compartmentalize partners in this way, you are essentially compartmentaling yourself. You are saying, "I can either be sweet and nurturing or I can be sensuous and naughty." You cannot accept both parts of you together.

Thus, the problem lies not in the men you choose. Don't get caught up obsessing about which is better. To get out of this trap of opposites, examine your own contradictory or unacceptable needs and feelings.

Accept the fact that you can be loving and sensuous at the same time and that a partner you love can see you in both those ways. The goal is not to piece two men together, but to put the pieces of your own self together.

Dolls popular collectible items

WINNETKA, Ill. (AP) — The most popular objects for collectors are plates, figurines, bells, graphics, steins and dolls, according to the Collector's Information Bureau.

Dolls are the fastest-growing category, stemming from the European "golden age" of dollmaking in the 19th century, the bureau reports, adding that bells, available since ancient times, are the oldest category.

Figurines, such as the M.I. Hummel children, were not available to any but the wealthiest collectors until the 1930s, when European studios began issuing limited-edition figurines cast from molds created from a master artist's original sculpture.

They had previously appeared as individual original pieces.

Folklore used for learning

NEW YORK (AP) — Teachers College, Columbia University, is offering teachers two programs in the use of folklore to develop students' language, reasoning and writing skills.

The Folklore Research Center's course, "Finding One's Folklore" will develop teacher-initiated folklore research in the secondary schools. The center is also sponsoring "The Uses of Folklore to Develop Literacy and Critical Thinking," a series of Continuing Education workshops.

Singles mingle inside museums, bookshops

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — There is more to museums and bookstores than art and books.

For many single men and women in New York City and elsewhere, the potential for romance at cultural centers has become an increasing allure. Indeed, those who work at them note — and sometimes foster — the courting rituals.

Patrons and employees commonly give several reasons for the popularity of museums and bookstores for "scoping" — the current expression for the ancient custom of eyeing romantic prospects.

The emphasis at a museum or bookstore, unlike at a singles bar, is on the cerebral rather than the sexual, and this allows less obvious maneuvering. Furthermore, as their parents discovered before them, these places often attract a metaphysical, sensitive clientele that like-minded people find appealing. And the shelves and walls inspire a broad range of conversation topics — from black female poets to Abstract Expressionism.

On the Upper West Side, Shakespeare & Co., is typical of many Manhattan bookstores that have extended their hours and have jazz and classical background music. The effect is a sophisticated, cocktail-party atmosphere without the cocktails.

"People come here all the time just to meet others with like interests," said William Kurland, coowner of Shakespeare & Co., which is open every day from 10 until midnight. "I think there's a stigma attached to singles bars. Bookstores and museums facilitate meeting, and you're bound to find fairly educated, interesting people there."

WHILE NIGHTCLUBS and singles bars frequently cater to individuals whose concerns center on dating, museums and bookstores attract people who are genuinely interested in art and literature. The quest for romance, if a quest at all, is peripheral. Apparently that makes these places more attractive to single people who disdain the blatant sexual pursuit they encounter elsewhere.

"It's a more congenial atmosphere for socializing," said Niel Bonnabel, sitting on the steps of the Metropolitan Museum of Art on a recent Saturday. "Cocktail parties and bars are so tense and contrived, and you feel all this pressure to operate. Museums and bookstores are more relaxed because people don't go there simply to check each other out."

"I met one of my closest friends three years ago at Books & Co. on Madison Avenue," said Bonnabel, a 30-year-old interior designer who lives in Manhattan.

Even more significant than how one socializes, interviews with people in museums and bookstores indicated, is the kind of people with whom one socializes. It seems that where there are great paintings and important books, there is a certain breed of man and woman.

The men are "nicer and — not necessarily preppy — but cultured," said Patricia Ahlstrand, 19, an English major at the State University of New York at New Paltz.

The women were summed up by Daniel Latendresse as he stood in front of the Italian futurist collection at the Museum of Modern Art. "Women here have a certain walk and air," said the 29-year-old actor and film maker, who lives in Manhattan. "They've got an independent look that says, 'I don't want to walk around barefoot and have babies.'"

JUST AS alcohol is supposed to bridge the distance between strangers and ease communication at bars and parties, books and art provide a point of departure for conversation at stores and museums.

RUGS AS ART

Durability and portability were probably the major reasons that Oriental rugs emerged as primary artworks of the Middle East. If war or famine threatened, these treasures could simply be rolled up and carried along with little worry that they would be damaged in transit. Most Oriental rugs that are in good condition and made in the last 200 years will survive for a very long time with appropriate care. This care includes using natural, not foam, pads underneath, keeping them out of direct sun, vacuuming once a week and turning occasionally. Then again, many buyers of these textile treasures cannot stand to put them beneath trodding feet at all. Instead, they hang them like marvious tapestries on the walls.

A knowledgeable staff and a full selection of window and wall coverings are the major reasons people come to WINDOW DECOR, 30 West Industrial Loop 685-0875. We custom make draperies and bedspreads to your individual requirements in our own work room and have an installation service. Call for a free in-home consultation. Open: Mon. thru Fri. 8am-4:30pm, and by appointment.

HINT:
Consult an expert before hanging an Oriental rug on a wall.

DEAR ABBY

'Mr. Right' doesn't measure up

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have never written to you before, but I have a problem I haven't discussed with anyone because I know I will get a lot of flak.

I've been dating a wonderful man whose company I really enjoy. He's intelligent, sensitive, caring and kind, has a great sense of humor, and a bright professional future. We're both in our 30s and have a lot in common. My problem is that I am 5 foot 8 and he is 5 foot 6½. I feel very comfortable with him — except when we walk together in a shopping mall, movie, restaurant or anywhere that requires us to stand next to each other.

In my heart I know what a good person he is, but in my mind I can't forget that I am taller. I suppose I am nuts to let this bother me, but it does. Please don't tell me to see someone about this because I am too embarrassed. I can't even tell my best friend or anyone in the family how I feel. Please help. — TIRED OF FLATS

DEAR TIRED: You are not nuts, and I won't tell you to see someone. The problem is your value system. The sum total of all his attributes is not as important to you as how you think other people perceive you as a couple. (As though they give a hoot or even notice that you are 1 1/2 inches taller than he.)

Retire your flats, put on your heels and start looking for a taller man. This "wonderful, intelligent, sensitive, caring and kind" man deserves a woman who will love him just the way he is.

DEAR ABBY: How does a mother get her able-bodied 28-year-old son to go out and get a job and start living his own life? I am getting too old and tired to support him. He has not worked steady since he graduated from high school 10 years ago. He hasn't worked a day in the last three years! He doesn't even try to find a job. He eats and sleeps and watches TV. I've tried to talk to him, but he just goes into his room and slams the door.

My daughter, who lives in another state, says, "Throw the bum out!" How do I go about doing that? He's too big!

Could you ask your readers who may have had some experience with this kind of problem how to handle it? I'm not financially able to support him forever. — DESPERATE WIDOW

DEAR DESPERATE: You don't have to physically throw him out. Give him a time limit to move his belongings, and if he isn't out by then, lock him out. And be sure to change the locks on your doors.

DEAR ABBY: We live in an old-folks home in Oregon. Our ages range from 55 to 99 years old. We would like to know how women like us can find men to socialize with. Men are scarce here, and we can't get out to meet any. When we mention it to anyone on the staff, we're told we are too old to think about things like that. I don't think people ever get too old to desire companionship with the opposite sex, do you?

Don't suggest that we look over the men in this home. There are three women for every man here, and most of the men are in worse shape than we are. — OLD BUT NOT DEAD

DEAR OLD: You're absolutely right. You're never too old to desire companionship with the opposite sex.

You don't say where in Oregon you are, but I'll bet some public-spirited local service club would be willing to arrange transportation from the home to a senior citizens' mixer for a little recreational "fishing" expedition.

DEAR ABBY: What did Lord Chesterfield say on the subject of sex that has been quoted ad nauseum? — NIGEL IN TORONTO, CANADA

DEAR NIGEL: The only quote I can find by Lord Chesterfield on sex is "The price is exorbitant, the pleasure transitory, and the position is ridiculous."

(Getting married? Send for Abby's new, updated, expanded booklet, "How to Have a Lovely Wedding." Send your name and address clearly printed with a check or money order for $2.50 and a long, stamped (39 cents) self-addressed envelope to Dear Abby, Wedding Booklet, P.O. Box 38923, Hollywood, Calif. 90038.)

Football seats a personal foul

By ERMA BOMBECK

Bombeck

There's a lot of things I don't understand about football.

Take seats.

There is a scramble for them for months before the game begins. Fans will bring blankets and camp out all night in front of the ticket office. Corporations will pirate talent from other corporations by using tickets as a "perk." Scalpers will retire to a condo in Vail on their profits. People will stand around at funerals and whisper, "Who got his Super Bowl tickets?"

I went to a Super Bowl once and you know what? No one sits in those seats. There were more people sitting on the bench than there were in the stands.

Football games are a study in perpetual motion. No one sits.

One of the first things a football fan does is to look for his seat. This is really crucial and he is assisted by an usher who will move an entire row over to make sure his ticket and seat number match. He wants to know where it is... just in case he decides to sit in it. Having found it, he is off to fight the crowds to get a pillow for the seat so it won't be so hard... just in case he decides to sit in it.

Having dropped off his pillow, he goes in search of a program. A program is a necessity. Every seat ought to have a program on it just to show someone sits there... just in case...

Once the game is underway, the ticket holders are off to join the lines of hungry and thirsty fans who queue up to line their arms with hot dogs, popcorn, and beverages.

This takes him through the first quarter. He spends most of the second quarter trying to find his seat again. He remembered marking it with a cushion and a program. However, so did the other 104,999 in attendance, so it's a matter of climbing one row after the other trying to find his number.

He dares not to sit down as it is nearing half-time and he must plan for his pilgrimage to the restrooms. If he waits too long, the journey will take him into another season, so he hotfoots it to the lower level to beat the crowd. The crowd has done the same thing.

On the way back to his seat, he drops off to sift through the T-shirts and key rings to mark the day he was here. As he approaches his seat, the game is in the final three minutes. As he prepares to sit down for the first time, the crowd rises to its feet as one. A team is on the three-yard line and is ready to score.

Scarves costly

NEW YORK (AP) — Feeling starry-eyed? Then accessorize your newest outfit with one of Japanese artisan Kazuko Oshima's diaphanous scarves, decked in a rich constellation of antique jewels on antique fabrics.

"My scarves are touchstones, healing stones," says the 42-year-old Oshima. They include translucent, red-silver spiderwebs, weighted with chunks of pure pyrite, amethyst and quartz.

Especially popular are her wedding veils — a nine-foot-long black lace one was used by Madonna in her music video, "Like A Virgin."

The drawback is price. Some cost as much as $2,800, which may be out of this world for most.

Opposites attract

Associated Press

Opposites attract, but when they marry the very differences in personality that seemed so attractive can become abrasive.

The good news, according to the experts quoted in an article in the November issue of Redbook, is that couples who learn to balance those differences may fall in love all over again.

"People who choose partners similar to themselves may end up being comfortable together," said family therapist Dr. Jan Raynak, medical director of the Colorado Institute for Marriage and the Family.

"But they may not grow and change much over time, and their relationship may lack vitality. Couples with more differences may experience more conflict, but generally people who are interested in growth can handle a certain amount of strife and discomfort."

Serious problems arise when marriage partners become isolated in positions of polarization and struggle.

The Midland Gem and Mineral Society — currently preparing for its annual show Nov. 2-3 in the Midland County Exhibit Building — has its own shop at 801 N. Fort Worth St., where members can do such tasks as cutting open nodules, like the one in the above photo.

Geodes, like these in the photo at right, are close relatives of nodules. Geodes, distinctive for their hollow interiors lined with crystals, will be among the geological specimens displayed at next weekend's show.

TEXT BY DAVID FORREST

Once, deep beneath the surface of the earth, the rock was under such pressure and heat that it flowed, like melted wax.

During some volcanic upheaval that occurred in the dim, distant past this molten rock was forced upward, carrying hot, dissolved gases with it. After pouring out onto the earth's surface, it cooled and hardened, riddled with bubble holes created by the gases within it.

After the fire came the water. Rain showered down and, over millions of years, dissolved tiny portions of the minerals in the rock. The water seeped downward, carrying the dissolved minerals.

Some of these minerals gradually accumulated inside the old gas pockets, and crystals grew slowly on the inside walls of these tiny volcanic caves, forming geodes.

Not all these had such a dramatic origin. Many others formed from pockets in sedimentary rocks that were quietly deposited, layer by layer, underwater.

However created, these rocks all weathered as ages passed. Mankind — a young upstart compared to the ancient stones — came along and, eventually, took up the curious hobby of collecting pretty stones.

Noticing that some ordinary-looking, roundish rocks seemed unusually light for their size, he naturally tried opening them up. He discovered those semi-hollow pockets now studded with intricate crystals of quartz, amethyst and calcite.

"When you cut in there, you're the first human being to see that," explained geode fancier Lovell Linthcum, a member of the Midland Gem and Mineral Society. "Nobody knows but me and God what's in there."

OTHER MIDLANDERS will have the opportunity to view the crystalline interiors of geodes at the Gem and Mineral Society's 23rd Annual Show and Sale next weekend.

Geodes will also be sold "and for the truly adventurous," said society member Frances Daniel, "uncut geodes will be offered for sale. Club members will be on hand to cut all geodes purchased."

Geodes aren't the only exhibits at the show, which is set for 9 a.m.-6 p.m. Nov. 2 and 10 a.m.-6 p.m. Nov. 3 in the Midland County Exhibit Building on East Highway 80.

"As well as geodes, a great variety of fossils, mineral specimens and examples of the lapidary arts will be on display," Ms. Daniel said.

Club members will be demonstrating basic lapidary skills, including cutting and polishing cabochons, faceting and silversmithing. Dealers will be showing marble-making and wire-wrap techniques.

A show exhibiting fluorescent minerals, which glow eerily when exposed to ultraviolet lighting, is supposed to be given every 20 minutes during both days.

CHILDREN WILL have their own "Kid's Korner," which will include a special "Touching Table" featuring, Ms. Daniel said, "large specimens of fossils and mineral specimens meant to be touched by little hands, with simple explanation of each."

Perhaps the most offbeat exhibit planned for the show is a "Lapidary Banquet," contributed by the Gulf Coast Gem and Mineral Society of Corpus Christi.

The display, Ms. Daniel said, "consists of various types of rocks fashioned by nature and man to resemble a remarkable assortment of food items. From soup to nuts, it will include ham, roast, beans, poached eggs, bacon, jello and even wine."

Advance tickets for the Midland Gem and Mineral Society's show are available for $1.50. Adult admission at the door will be $2. Children ages 6-12 will be admitted for 25¢.

For advance tickets, or more information, call 683-2336 after 5 p.m.

Germany celebrates 150th anniversary of train system

By CARL LARSEN
Copley News Service

"Watch out for the cinders!"

The warning went unheeded as scores of craning necks stretched out from open coach windows to watch the German steam locomotive belch its way around a curve and then up a grade on its way from Nuremberg to Bayreuth — home of composer Richard Wagner.

With a minimum of effort, the train climbed the hill and headed into one of seven tunnels along the route, which is part of the main line linking West Germany and Czechoslovakia.

The spectacle wasn't lost on those outside, either. At crossings throughout the Franconian countryside, in northern Bavaria, families and rail buffs waited to greet the passing train with waves and to record its passing with elaborate photo equipment.

Inside the highly varnished coaches, passengers in compartments savored the smell of smoke and the occasional blast of the whistle as the excursion train progressed through fields of hops and along the banks of the Pegnitz River.

AT EACH STOP, passengers would get out to shoot photos of the crew — attired in historical uniforms — or to marvel at the steam behemoth, newly painted black with red driving wheels.

This is the year of the train in West Germany. Throughout the nation, the Federal Railway system — known to Germans as DB — is celebrating the 150th anniversary of German railroading with discount fares, special excursions and a preview of what's in store for rail passengers.

Nowhere is the celebration more evident than in Nuremberg, where on Dec. 7, 1835, William Wilson, an Englishman, pushed the throttle on the locomotive Adler to start the 4-mile trip to the town of Furth and to begin what today has become an 18,000-mile network of track.

Seemingly every business in Nuremberg is celebrating the anniversary with wares tied to the anniversary. Even the city's famous lebkuchen — or gingerbread — is packed in special tins displaying a picture of the Adler's first trip.

ON THE DAY of the German railways' 150th anniversary, Dec. 7, Nuremberg will open a new leg of its subway system roughly paralleling the route of the original Adler run, with a series of celebrations.

Even without this year's railway anniversary, Nuremberg remains a "must stop" for the rail buff, who will be intrigued by the city's trolley-car system featuring clanging cars brightly painted with advertising on the exteriors and by the turn-of-the century architecture of the city's hauptbahnhof, — or central railway station.

But more important is the city's Transport Museum, the best in Germany.

The museum includes exhibits on railway construction, a large model railway and magnificently maintained engines and rolling stock, including carriages from King Ludwig II's royal train and the Pullman carriage of Prince Bismarck.

An annex displays motive power that includes a TEE diesel locomotive and steam and electric locomotives.

TO EXPERIENCE German railroading firsthand, a number of unlimited mileage travel plans are available, including the Eurailpass.

For those whose travel will strictly be in West Germany, the best bargain is the DB Tourist Card. The card allows unlimited travel on the German railway system and is good for seasonal travel on two scenic bus journeys: the Romantic Road between Frankfurt and Fssen and the Rhine-Mosel trip between Frankfurt and Trier. The card also can be used on Rhine cruises operated by the KD Line with payment of a supplementary fare.

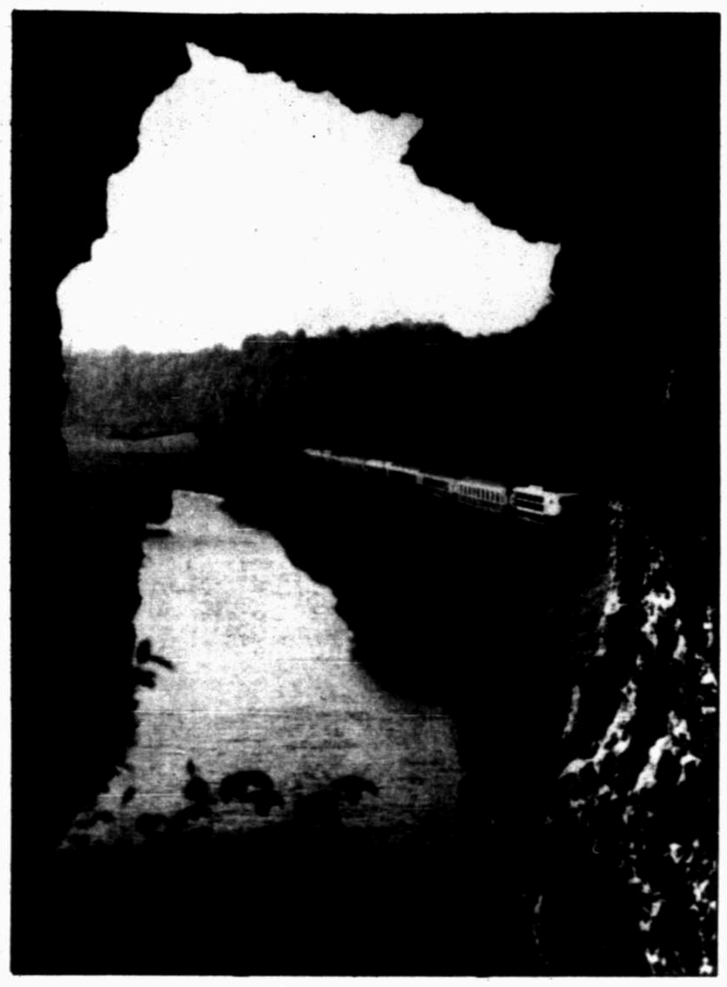

Cost of the Tourist Card for four days of second-class travel is $70, or $100 for first class. Longer plans are available for nine and 16 days of riding, costing $110 and $150 for second class, respectively. The nine-day first-class card costs $150 while the 16-day costs $205.

Children under 4 travel free while those 4 to 11 travel for half price.

Bargain fares also are available for youths under 26, who can buy a nine-day second-class pass for $70 or a 16-day pass for $90.

The Tourist Card is accepted for travel on Germany's InterCity trains, which connect major cities with frequent high-speed trains equipped with restaurant cars. It also is honored on the deluxe Rheingold as it passes through Germany on its route along the Rhine.

The card can be obtained from travel agents and GermanRail offices in the United States, or at major rail stations in West Germany.

Copley News Service

The quest for modern high-speed rail travel has left the West Germans a laggard fourth behind the Japanese, who were first with their bullet trains; the French, whose TGV trains claim the present world-speed title for scheduled service, and the British, with their own high-speed InterCity expresses.

But the Germans have been racing to catch up and this year will begin demonstration runs of a prototype InterCity Express that initially will travel at nearly 190 mph and which eventually will have a top speed of 217 mph.

The French TGV, by comparison, travels at an average of 168 mph and can do well over 200 mph.

The new German trains are dubbed InterCity Experimental and will make their first demonstration runs in November and December on the 75-mile route between Hamburg and Bremen and on a shorter route between Oelde and Rheda-Wiedenbruck.

West German Federal Railways officials say they expect to put the experimental trains into regular passenger service by the end of the decade, running from Hamburg to Munich once a high-speed line is built through central Germany.

The German railways — or DB for Deutsche Bundesbahn — began the InterCity network six years ago with runs linking 50 cities. InterCity trains have first- and second-class seating and each has a restaurant car. Many of the InterCity trains have pay telephones for use by travelers.

Esterhazy Palace, 'Hungary's Versailles,' colorful attraction

By PAUL LEWIS
New York Times News Service

Few visitors to Budapest these days realize that just two hours' drive away by car lies "Hungary's Versailles," a Baroque palace once famous throughout Europe, that has just been splendidly restored.

Guidebooks generally ignore the great Esterhazy Palace at Fertod, perhaps because, after years of decline, it was looted by Soviet troops at the end of World War II and lay derelict until quite recently.

The Hungarian tourist authorities for their part seem a bit bashful about recommending this magnificant remnant of their feudal past to Western visitors.

Nevertheless, the enterprising traveler can rent a car in Budapest and in a comfortable day's drive see a bit of rural western Hungary, before returning past the great castles that line the Danube at Esztergom and Visegrad. There will even be time for a dinner stop at the pretty artists' village of Szentendre.

THE MOST STUNNING part of the tour, certainly, is the lavish 18th-century home of Prince Nikolaus Esterhazy. During the prince's lifetime, his palace became famous throughout Europe as a center of art, culture and extravagant living. The modern symphony was invented here by Franz Joseph Haydn, the prince's court composer for nearly 30 years.

Prince Nikolaus, nicknamed the Magnificent, built his palace in a spot originally called Esterhaza, after his family. But that name — honoring the greatest of Central European aristocratic dynasties — proved too much for Communist Hungary's present-day rulers, who changed it to Fertod.

Today, with its freshly painted plaster work, bright new gilding and elaborately remodeled balustrades, moldings and statuary, the palace must be considered the equal to any of the great Baroque palaces of Austria.

WHAT FIRST STRIKES the visitor to the Esterhazy Palace are the elaborate wrought-iron gates, great masses of curling roses and monuments to the ironsmith's art. The official guidebook recounts a legend that the master forger was blinded after the gates' completion to insure he would never make a copy (though such an act seems out of keeping with what we know of the character of Prince Nikolaus, who provided Haydn with a handsome pension).

Beyond the gates stands the ornate palace itself, a fine central building approached by a pair of staircases, decorated with plinths, statues, columns and intricately carved putti holding lamps. On each side, lower buildings stretch out like curving arms to embrace a formal garden.

All the palace structures are painted in a brilliant ocher Austrians still call "Maria Theresa yellow." It is the color of the Schonbrunn Palace in Vienna 40 miles away, indeed, the approved color for all great palaces in the Hapsburg Empire.

Prince Nikolaus determined to build the palace after visiting France as Maria Theresa's envoy and being received with great pomp at Versailles. So splendid was the life that he created at his palace, with a private theater, orchestra and ballet, great feasts and fireworks displays, that the reputation spread all over Europe.

BUT THE DAYS of glory were brief, and after Prince Nikolaus's death in 1790, the palace fell into decay, hastened by Russian troops who pillaged the buildings in 1945. The official guidebook makes only a vague reference to the looting, noting that "during the last weeks of the war its furnishings were carried away and the palace abandoned."

The looting has its wry side, for it shows there was more than a grain of truth to a story about Stalin that was popular in the United States and Britain after World War II.

The scene is the Yalta Conference, where the victorious Allied leaders have gathered. Churchill proudly displays a silver cigar lighter inscribed, "To the Savior of the British Empire From the People of the Empire." Not to be outdone, Roosevelt produces a cigarette case inscribed, "From the People of the World to the Savior of the World."

Finally, Stalin fumbles in his pocket and pulls out a truly magnificent lighter bearing the legend, "To Prince Esterhazy from the Vienna Jockey Club."

VISITORS TO FERTOD today will find that more than the family cigarette lighter ended up in Stalin's pocket. Wandering through the palace, one is continually struck by the contrast between the high quality of the restoration work in its salons and drawing rooms and the paucity of the furnishings. There are some fine old decorated heating stoves, a few mementos of Prince Esterhazy's famous clock collection, the occasional pieces of china and furniture. But this compares sadly with the fine chinoiserie panels the looters left intact and the rich new gilding on the walls that is superior to anything found in Schonbrunn or the Hofburg in Vienna. The most magnificent room is the huge ballroom on the first floor, a baroque dream of spotless white and lustrous gold, where Haydn conducted the first performance of his "Farewell Symphony." Adjacent salons contain a collection of Haydn memorabilia, including manuscripts and letters.

After a morning's tour of the palace, drive a half mile to the local village for lunch. You might try the Haydn Restaurant, on the left as you enter town. If, as often happens, it has been reserved by one of the many bus tours visiting the palace, take the side road marked Fentoszentmiklos, turn right after the level crossing and stop at the excellent restaurant opposite the railroad station where there is always a table. Both restaurants offer traditional Hungarian fare; a meal will cost about $1.20.

A FEW WORDS ABOUT Hungarian cuisine: It is usually copious, rich and heavy, a diet of various kinds of goulashes as well as pork chops and vinegary salads. Remember that in Hungary goulash is not a stew but a thick, spicy soup. Many people find a bowl of goulash with bread and a salad quite sufficent for lunch. (For a change, you might try the excellent Hungarian lake fish called forgas, which is very similar to perch.) Remember, too, Hungarians still drink spritzers, mixing soda water with white wine. After lunch, follow the road on to Sopron about 20 miles away. This almost perfectly preserved 15th- and 16th-century town miraculously escaped damage in World War II. Today it would only take a little paint and gilding to transform Sopron's shabby buildings into the Hungarian equivalent of Williamsburg or the restored Old Town in Warsaw.

In 1921, Sopron voted to join Hungary rather than become Austrian, an event commemorated by the Gate of Loyalty. Cut through a medieval tower topped with a Baroque onion-shaped dome, the gate leads into Foter, the main square largely unchanged since the 16th century.

The palace-like building at No. 8 contains a museum of old furniture. Opposite is an old pharmacy also turned into a museum. The interior of a 13th-century church is thickly encrusted with Baroque ornamentation, most of it badly in need of regilding. The Kolostor Utca and the Templom Utca, which lead off the square, are lined with old houses built in the Italian Renaissance style. Covered balconies overlook interior courtyards, like stage sets for Romeo and Juliet.

THE UJ UTCA, also leading off the main square, houses the remnants of a rare Gothic synagogue dating back to the 14th century. All that remains are the timbers of a small, circular, vaulted chamber. Nearby is a rare ritual bath or mikvah — a deep, stone-lined well with a wooden ladder leading down into the water. Skip the Liszt Museum mentioned in the guidebooks; it contains nothing of interest.

The main road back toward Gyor leads past Nagycenk, another stately home that offers an interesting commentary on Communist attitudes toward such symbols of the feudal past. Nagycenk, badly damaged in the war, was restored much earlier than Fertod and very well, even though it is a far less interesting building. The reason: Nagycenk was the ancestoral home of Count Stephen Szechenyi, a famous patriot, reformer and inventor who is admired even by today's rulers as a symbol of Hungarian nationalism.

Space shuttle may provide ultimate vacation in future

Hearst News Service

A vacation that's really out of this world may be available within about a decade — a three-day space trip to nowhere aboard the Space Shuttle, priced at only $1 million.

NASA already has been approached by several outfits, according to an article by Science Editor Dennis Eskow in the November issue of Popular Mechanics, including a Seattle-based travel company, a British group that wants to go to Mars and a German outfit that wants to buy its own shuttle.

The Seattle firm, Society Expeditions, began offering applications for a Space Shuttle cruise to nowhere this year to people in good physical condition who wanted to spend $1 million for two days of flight preparation and a three-day journey.

"Typical clients of Society Expeditions are experienced travelers who desire something different," said Coke Mead, spokesperson for the firm that has run tours to Antarctica and Easter Island.

The company expects to start taking passengers into space by 1995.

"NASA has been approached by a British group that wants to use the Space Shuttle to go to the Space Station and then on to Mars," said NASA public affairs officer William J. O'Donnell.

The German group has offered $1 billion for a NASA Space Shuttle for use as a tourist vehicle, but so far NASA has said no. Among other things, $1 billion wouldn't cover NASA's costs.

Several aerospace companies have developed plans for a tourist module that could be flown in the shuttle cargo bay. One plan would seat 40 and contains an exercise unit, bar and astronomy bridge where amateurs could point their telescopes.

The Shuttle cargo bay is 60 feet long and 15 feet wide — plenty of room, NASA officials say — for 24 passengers.

The first space tourists would report two days before the voyage for briefing and to present their medical certificates.

Once in orbit, passengers could leave their seats to experience weightlessness in space. Overhead walkways would allow them to stroll parallel to the floor or even upside-down. During those first hours, space tourists would learn to eat, drink and relax in weightlessness.

Once all passengers were battened down, the cargo bay doors would open to provide direct views of space and the earth below.

Even more ambitious than the trip to nowhere is the plan of a British group called Mars Flight to organize the first nongovernmental expedition to Mars, just after the year 2000.

"Exploration of space should not be confined to quasi-military government agencies," British astronomer Malcolm Ebersol said.

"Some of the best explorers on earth have been adventurers and tradesmen. They had a certain naivete that let them go beyond dangers and unknowns into new worlds such as the Himalayas and the poles."

There even has been a proposal to equip a Mars expedition with chemicals designed to alter the Martian atmosphere to make it more hospitable for humans.

Now that NASA has sent a U.S. senator into space and is planning to send a school teacher, space tourism seems possible.

Those interested in Society Expeditions can write to them at 723 Broadway East, Seattle WA 98102.

Formerly run-down building latest 'hot' new hotel

By LOREEN ARBUS and NORM CHANDLER FOX
Copley News Service

We've all had the experience of returning from a trip to New York and being besieged with questions on what's the newest, most exciting restaurant or the best new nightspot in town. If you want to spread the news on the hottest new hotel, try staying at Morgans.

Located at Madison Avenue and 37th Street, which is one block north of the J.P. Morgan Library, the 154-room hotel is housed in a building dating back to 1929. Formerly a run-down residential hotel with a dubious reputation, the premises were purchased last year by Steve Rubell and Ian Schrager, two dynamic young men who pioneered New York's night scene in the '70s with their Studio 54 discotheque.

As their first hotel venture, Schrager and Rubell wanted a place that would be both elegant and informal. Hating the pretentiousness of many large, luxurious hostelries, they sought to convey a home-away-from-home feeling that would combine the stylized grace of a small European hotel with the comfort of a country inn.

NOTED FRENCH interior designer Andree Putman was given the challenge of inventing the decor primarily because she had never done a hotel before. Her only mandate was to create a friendly environment that was not intimidating in any way.

She started out by making lists of everything she hated in today's hotels: oversize floral arrangements, informational cardboard tent cards that are placed in hotel lobbies and rooms, television sets hidden in ostentatious pieces of furniture, outspoken color schemes and, her most hated object, the bedspread. Much of her design was inspired by luxury liners; since both the guest rooms and bathrooms are relatively small, every inch of space is maximized like the staterooms of a ship. Although she had to think small, she still was able to turn each room into a soothing, relaxed space.

Using no wallpaper, Putman chose to finish the rooms and hallway walls with Zolatone — a spray-applied wall coating that combines a mixture of colors resembling speckled paint and has been called "Monet in a can." Most of the furnishings are in Art Deco style, utilizing a black, gray and white color scheme. Queen-size beds are topped with comforters covered in gray and white pin-striped oxford cloth, and the headboards also are covered with the same material.

EACH ROOM CONTAINS custom-commissioned black-and-white photographs by avant garde photographer Robert Mapplethorpe. The bold black-and-white tiled bathrooms with see-through glass shower doors and stainless-steel sinks are reminiscent of luxurious European trains. Putman left her stamp on every detail: the distinctive steel and glass night tables, the tiny gray-covered writing pads, the black-and-white matches and the black pencils with white erasers.

Rubell believes that despite the overall ambience, a hotel is only as good as its staff. He personally interviewed 2,000 people who vied for the 65 jobs available at Morgans. You won't run into a surly doorman or arrogant room clerk in this hotel since the young, wholesome women and men — dressed alike in Calvin Klein shirts and Giorgio Armani sweater vests — were chosen for their friendly, non-"big city" demeanor.

Morgans' futuristic feeling is found in the state-of-the-art stereo cassette systems, remote-controlled televisions and videocassette recorders in every bedroom. If there's not enough to entertain you in Manhattan, you can always rent (at a nominal fee) a motion picture cassette of your choice from the hotel's library of over 500 titles.

While the hotel's main restaurant is still under construction, guests at Morgans need not go hungry. A complimentary breakfast of fresh juice, coffee, hot croissants and breakfast pastries is served daily in a small salon on the fourth floor. The room service kitchen and the newly opened Morgans Bar are supervised by the renown superstar chef Larry Forgione, whose An American Place restaurant on East 70th Street is world famous.

IT'S A DIFFICULT choice deciding whether to dine in one's room on such Forgione specialties as grilled butterflied chicken or veal chop in a lemon basil sauce, or to savor the atmosphere of Morgans Bar where the same chef has devised an avant garde menu of salads, sandwiches, entrees, exquisite desserts and extraordinary "finger foods" that seem to be the cuisine of the '80s. These appetizer-size plates of delicacies such as salmon tartare, ham croutons with tomato-apple relish, homemade potato chips with sour cream and caviar, deviled crabcakes with mustard sauce and barbecued pork on chili corn pancakes can easily become the focus of an entire meal.

Although recent hotel guests have included Bianca Jagger, Claude Montana, Duran Duran, Rod Stewart, Cheryl Tiegs, Billy Joel, Boy George, Brooke Shields and Keith Carradine, the relatively reasonable price structure, starting at $95 per night, signifies the hotel's desire to appeal to an up-and-coming market where guests don't have to sacrifice lifestyle for economy.

With so many New York hotels evoking the feeling of clones all over the country, Morgans has a zippy flair that makes guests know they could only be staying in the Big Apple.

Nostalgic flight marks aviation anniversary

New York Times News Service

On Nov. 22, 1935, as 20,000 spectators looked on from the shores of Alameda Bay, a Pan American Martin 130 flying boat named the China Clipper, with the airline's chief pilot Edwin C. Musick, at the controls, lifted off on a pioneering flight. Powered by Pratt & Whitney WASP 3,320-horsepower engines, the China Clipper's flight from San Francisco to Manila inaugurated commercial air service across the Pacific Ocean.

On Nov. 22, 1985, Pan American World Airways plans to celebrate 50 years of trans-Pacific service by staging a nostalgic re-enactment of the inaugural flight.

Once again, the journey will be made by a China Clipper. But this plane — dubbed China Clipper II — will be a Boeing 747 Jet Clipper, powered by 48,000-pound thrust turbofan engines. Takeoff from San Francisco is scheduled for 9 p.m. Nov. 22 and arrival in Manila scheduled for 5:55 p.m. Nov. 24.

The anniversary flight is priced at $5,500 in first class, $4,400 in Clipper class and $2,900 in economy class.

More information is available from Pan American World Airways (Pan Am Building, Room 908, New York, N.Y. 10166; 800-327-1600).

Trains accommodate business persons

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

In a move to attract more business travelers, BritRail is launching two programs geared toward the corporate man or woman on the move.

Kings Cross Station in London now has a lounge for use by first-class passengers, and before the end of the year lounges will be opening in other London stations. Designed to provide a comfortable and quiet environment for brief business meetings or a quick meal, the lounges include photocopiers as well as hotel reservation and car hire facilities.

For more elaborate business meetings, confidential discussions, small sales conferences or corporate lunches, an entire rail car can be rented. The car, which seats a maximum of eight around a conference table, can be attached to trains serving major cities. Basic cost of hiring the coach is around $425, and each passenger also must pay the first class fare to the destination.

New uses named for fiber glass

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) — Fiber glass, best known in auto circles for its use in sports cars, is now finding new uses in all types of cars.

"Today," says William P. Jenks of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., "the auto industry is extending beyond traditional fiber glass outer body parts, such as hoods and doors, to structural applications."

He says examples of these applications are front and rear leaf springs and drive shafts.

Children's toys used as latest home decorating accessory

Associated Press

Are there toys in your attic? Before you bundle them up for the next charity rummage sale, examine them more closely.

Toys such as dolls, trains, cars and boats and even old games and plastic figures from the 1950s are finding their way into the living room as decorative accessories. Not only are toys that were made originally for children being used, but, in addition, contemporary artist-made toys are now being shown and sold in galleries and shops.

Besides being colorful, unusual, and appealing to today's nostalgia for the past, old toys and dolls are fine for making a personal decorating "statement" at a time when the personal approach to home decor is quite popular, according to interior designer Rebecca Davidoff, of Stamford, Conn., a board member of the American Society of Interior Designers.

Furthermore, adds Dana Hawkes, director of the collectibles department of the New York auction house, Sotheby's, old toys as collectibles are keeping pace with inflation.

Mrs. Davidoff recently furnished an old-fashioned armoire with dolls, thereby creating a focal point in a sitting room for a client. The woman, already a doll collector, derived special pleasure from the display. As for the decorative value of the armoire whose interior was lined with fabric on which the dolls are placed, "the eyes of everyone who enters the room go immediately to the piece," she said.

While the toys used as decorative accessories are more commonly old, some are made by contemporary artists. According to Suzanne Vanderwoude, of Vanderwoude Tananbaum Gallery in New York, toys being made by artists are snapped up for decorating purposes. One reason is that while toys are just as imaginative as other products of artists' imaginations, they are often less expensive than more traditional pieces.

Last year the gallery hosted its second annual toy invitational exhibition after a first try in 1983 produced good sales, publicity and attendance. Prices ranged from $25 to $2,500, but most of the objects in the shows cost between $300 and $600.

"There is a tradition of artists making toys either for their own children or for fun," said Ms. Vanderwoude. Perhaps the best-known recent artist-made toys are Alexander Calder's circus mobiles. But gallery personnel found that many artists have made toys used primarily for display over the years.

Mrs. Davidoff offers some advice to individuals who want to employ toys as decorative accessories. "Keep the backgrounds simple but create an environment in which the toys can be displayed." Remember you need more than one to create an effect; one toy should play off the others so the collection becomes more than the sum of its parts, she said.

Arrange the lighting to highlight the toys and employ the same principles as in arranging any decorative objects, grouping items of similar size, function, color or shape. Furniture and other surfaces which look great with toys include bookcases, glass-fronted display cases, tabletops and armoires. You might choose to arrange a group of toys on a mantelpiece, or a soft table.

What type of toys are the most popular? Alexander Acevedo, who has added a toy annex to his art gallery in New York, says transportation toys remain the most popular. They seem to be especially appealing to men who are not tempted by other types of home accessories.

Acevedo, a toy collector himself, prefers trains, boats, cars and planes.

"A doll just sits there and whines, but you can play with a car or a boat," he said. Furthermore, toy cars are part of the American love affair with the automobile.

You could pay $22,000 for a 19th-century painted tin boat — as Acevedo did at a Sotheby's auction recently. Or, he said, you could collect toys for much, much less. Among inexensive contemporary collectibles are small die-cast cars and battery-operated items from the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s.

Toy "royalty," which naturally commands higher prices, are items made before World War I. Dale Kelley, of Chicago, founder and editor of Antique Toy World Magazine, says there's almost nothing not being collected today.

Fifteen years ago when he started the magazine, there were only a few auctions and sales, and toy collectors had no way of getting together. Nowadays, each month's issue of the magazine has pages of listings for sales held in virtually every part of the country.

Proportion pleasing

NEW YORK (AP) — When a newborn baby first identifies its mother's face, it's not by color, shape, smell or heat, but rather the way the eyebrows, eyes, nose and mouth are arranged in proportions artists have known for centuries as the "Golden Ratio," a noted child psychiatrist says.

"It seems clear that the apparatus of nature has built in a certain sense of proportions into the human organism which have survival value," said Dr. Eugene J. Mahon. "In other words, since it is essential for children to get to know the imprint of their mother's face, nature has not left it to chance."

Those proportions, Mahon says, happen to be the same as the famous proportion known for centuries by artists and architects as the "Golden Ratio" or "Golden Section."

The Golden Ratio has been proven by experiments as particularly harmonious and pleasing to the human senses. It is not surprising, therefore, if it catches even the untrained eyes of a newborn, he says.

The Irish psychiatrist, who is on the faculty of Columbia University's Psychoanalytic Clinic for Training and Research as well as Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons, presented his findings recently in "The Psychoanalytic Study of the Child," an international publication whose founders included Anna Freud, Sigmund Freud's daughter.

"A mask constructed with two eyes, a nose and a mouth enclosed in an oval that resembles the human face will hold the attention of the infant as much as the human face itself," Mahon said an interview, citing his and others' experiments.

"A mask with features out of porportion to expectable human anatomy, or the human face itself in profile does not attract the attention of the infant nearly as intently as well a human face."

The Golden Ratio, Mahon explained, is the ratio in which the relationship between the two parts is roughly the same as between one part and the whole. Roughly, that corresponded to the fraction five-eighths.

"The distance from the top of the human head to the eyebrows and the distance from the eyebrow to the end of the chin are rougly 5 and 8, no matter what units of measurements are used. The distance from the tip of the nose to the lips and the distance from the lips to the end of the chin also relate to each other as 5 and 8," he said. "In the human face and body, we can find many combinations of the Golden Section."

Man's preference for this partricular proportion, which abounds in nature, architecture and classical paintings, has been known through the ages, the psychoanalyst said.

As early as 1876, he said, German physicist-psychologist Gustav Theodor Fechner conducted an experiment in which a large number of subjects were asked to evaluate the aesthetic merits of a selection of rectangles of different dimensions. More than 75 percent of the people chose rectangles with width of 5 and a length of 8.

Examples of Golden rectangles are found in paper money, traveler's checks and credit cards, he said.

While recent rains have played havoc with local cotton crops, oil, the county's top crop, continues to fare well. Oil prices remain stable and anticipated future price declines have yet to surface, despite continuing downward pressure on the market.

Oil library dream coming true

By JOHN PAUL PITTS
Business/Oil Editor

The oil business succeeds and fails on the basis of its geological data. Soon, Midland may have a geological library with the most extensive geological data available on the Permian Basin.

The Midland Energy Library, a concept which grew from the ranks and minds of the West Texas Geological Society is up and running and anticipates being operational by the end of the year.

"Donations of files and data are coming in so fast that we are working overtime just to get them inventoried," said Sara Robbins, a member of the Library Board of Directors. "Many geologists in town are donating their time on the project."

The Midland Energy Library will be a non-profit association dedicated to the preservation of valuable scientific and engineering data about West Texas and Southeast New Mexico oil fields.

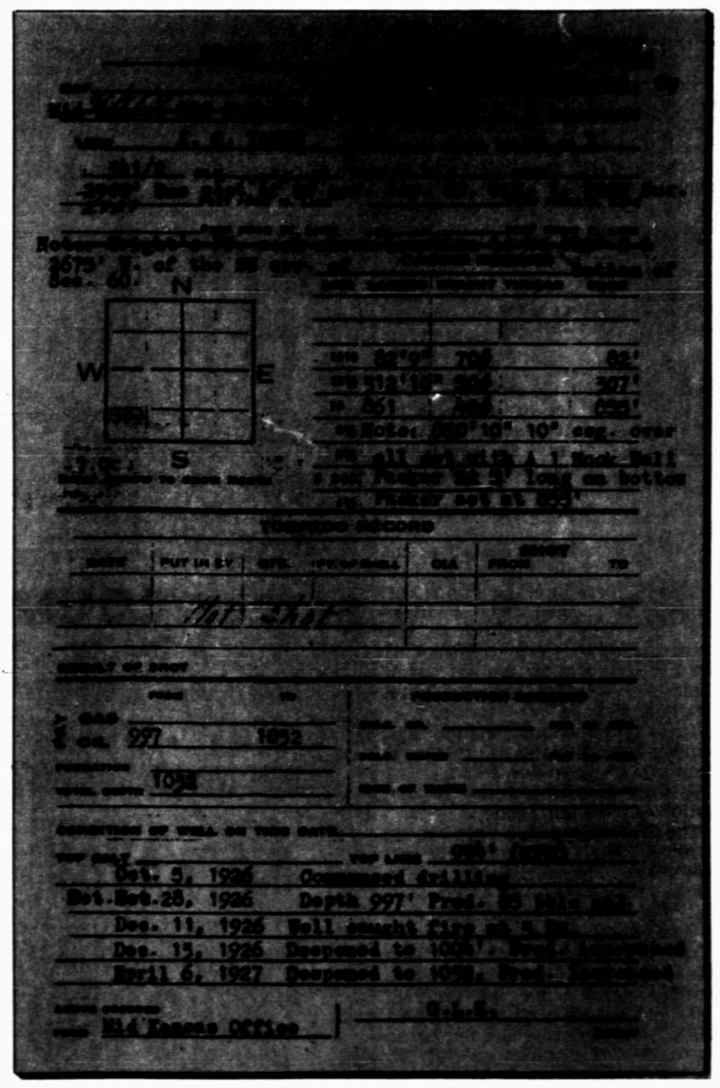

Included in the data being preserved are electric logs (large and reduced scale) geophysical data, well cards, scout tickets, sample logs, mud logs, paleontological data, land and topographic maps, aerial photos, land satellite surveys, drill stem tests, production data, water analysis, drilling reports, well cuttings and cores. For the most part all of the information is coming from donation of private files.

To the wealth of historical information, the Midland Energy Library will add a broad data base of current well information to become a first class research center for local and visiting geologists. In the initial stages data will be available on a hard copy basis, but plans are now in process to acquire a computer system capable of storing much of the system and providing geologists access from their offices. Terminals will also be provided at the library to access the data.

According to Hugh Frenzel, president of the Midland Energy Library and a consulting geologist, a computer firm in now studying the feasibility of programming logs and well cards, even handwritten ones, into a computer system.

Says Frenzel: "It may be possible to call up sections of a log on a screen and compare it to another log, using split screen capabilities." He said the library had also discussed buying access to a comprehensive data base such as Petroleum Information.

"When we are fully operational," he said, "we hope to have a facility that will provide the small independent oilman with the same data advantages that the major oil companies now enjoy."

The Midland Energy Library may be open by year-end. It will contain such historical information as the well data card for the discovery well of the prolific Yates field in Pecos County, shown above, and a core sample.

Midland firm fills technical software gap

By MELLA McEWEN
Business Oil Writer

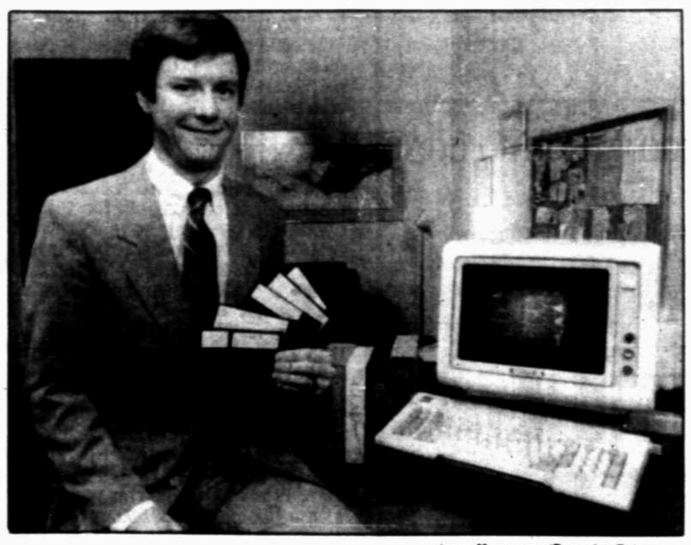

Accounting programs for the oil industry evolved before technical programs because of the need to immediately address mountains of bookkeeping associated with new rules and regulations. As a result, the industry has been long on accounting software and short on technical software. A Midland software firm is seeking to resolve that gap by providing a full inventory of both technical and accounting software.

Local companies that purchase software usually had to go to Dallas or Fort Worth for training, then were given a toll free number if they had questions or problems. Engineering Software Center of Midland, Inc. has positioned itself as a Midland-based, single-source supplier of technical software, offering local training, support and consultation. The firm opened in May and has had a good response, accumulating 30 to 40 clients so far, according to Richard Bowdon, president of the commpany.

The company offers such software applications as petroleum economics, decline curve analysis, log analysis, fluid properties, scout ticket database management and contouring, but the company can custom-design software to the client's specifications. All applications are written for the IBM-PC, and cost anywhere from $500 to $5,000, depending on the application. Besides Bowdon, the company has a geologist and another engineer on the staff.

It took a while for technical applications to be made available, Bowdon explained, because "First, computers had to become inexpensive, and second, people had to write the technical programs for the computers. The programs are so new, most people don't know where to get them."

Experts disagree on value of new 15-year mortgages

Copley News Service

A new option for home buyers — the 15-year mortgage — is gaining new popularity, according to realtors and bankers.

For a mere 15 percent extra payment per month, they say, buyers can own their homes outright in 15 years and save 15 years of extra interest required on a 30-year mortgage.

But some accountants argue that the choice is not so clear cut. They say that holders of 30-year mortgages can pocket a sizable amount in a savings account, compound the interest and maintain maximum liquidity if economic problems hit the family.

When all is said and done, said Fred Davis, an investment consultant, "There doesn't appear to be an advantage either way."

But in general, he said, the higher-income family would be better off with a 30-year mortgage and a lower-income family could benefit more from a 15-year mortgage.

However, the results in the marketplace appear to be just the opposite. Higher-income, money-savvy people are opting for the shorter mortgage. Lower-income, first-time buyers are signing up for 30-year and adjustable-rate mortgages because that is the only way they can afford to buy.

The shorter-term mortgage used to be the industry norm. But when the Great Depression hit, the federal government created programs to encourage more homeownership and the 30-year, fixed-rate mortgage became the standard for the next half century.

Then came the high-inflation, high-interest, recession-ridden early 1980s. And the 30-year standard mortgage became just one of many options in the homeownership supermarket.

Automobiles: They're better dead than broke

All over the country, doctors are raging about the high cost of malpractice insurance, and we the patients wonder if we have a malpractice problem in this country, or an insurance problem.

Things are not much better down at the local garage and body shop. If you have had your car in for a fender-bender or repairs lately, you don't need to be told that the cost is astronomical — not "expensive." If it were only expensive, it would be nice, and perhaps tolerable. But there is much consumer rage these days over the cost of automobile repairs, and much finger pointing in assessing the blame. A recent news story revealed that most people had rather pay a trip to the dentist than the garage.

Is it because cars are more expensive now days, making the cost of parts much more expensive? Is it because automobile mechanics have suddenly decided to join the ranks of the wealthy? Do dealers make too much money?

Granted they are paid better than newspaper people, but I have yet to meet a rich mechanic. I have known some rich car dealers in my time, but I have also seen a few go belly-up. So I'm not sure if rich dealers and not-so-rich mechanics are the root of the problem.

Parts! Do you suppose it could be high-priced automobile parts? The Alliance of American Insurers Auto Crash Repair Study says it is. One would normally think it cheaper to replace a few parts on an automobile rather than build a complete one from scratch. Not so.

KNOW THAT 1985 Chevrolet Camaro that cost about $10,682 at the factory? If you were to buy the parts and build it yourself, it would cost you $37,014, just for the replacement parts — no labor included. Add labor to the parts bill and it could easily push the value of the $10,000 car to near $80,000.

While Detroit's automobile assembly line has proven to be a technological and cost-efficient marvel, the automobile repair business is anything but that. Today, even fractional damage to a new car can cause repair costs to exceed its value.

What would the sticker price of a 1985 Camaro buy you? According to Alliance of American Insurers, you could get a Flintstone-like contraption that would include:

- two front fenders and inner panels — $1,050
- two front doors, windows and mirrors — $2,282
- two reclining bucket seats and tracks — $955
- dash, instrument panel, and console — $2,282
- steering wheel and column — $1,082
- power disc front brakes and drum rear brakes — $1,472
- two sun visors — $89.

Want an engine for the contraption? That's another $5,000.

FROM THAT itemization it is easy to see why many cars that could easily be repaired are written off as junk by automobile insurance companies. It's not that they can't be fixed, it's just that it would be too expensive.

"It's this fact of high automobile parts that accounts for much of the high cost in automobile insurance and repairs," said Larry Soular, Alliance research manager. He said that about 60 percent of the premiums for a late-model car covered vehicle damage, while only 40 percent covered personal injury.

Then, even after years of paying high auto insurance premium, the chances are the unfortunate customer will end up taking a beating if and when he has an accident. When an insurer elects to write off a damaged vehicle, says Soular, it will pay the owner the car's pre-crash "actual cash" value and take title to the vehicle. Actual cash value means the car's replacement cost less annual depreciation, plus or minus mileage and valuable options. "It doesn't necessarily mean market value of even the remaining loan balance," said Soular. In short an insured motorist could end up paying for a car in the junk yard.

THE ONLY way around this problem is with a much more expensive car insurance policy that pays for actual replacement cost.

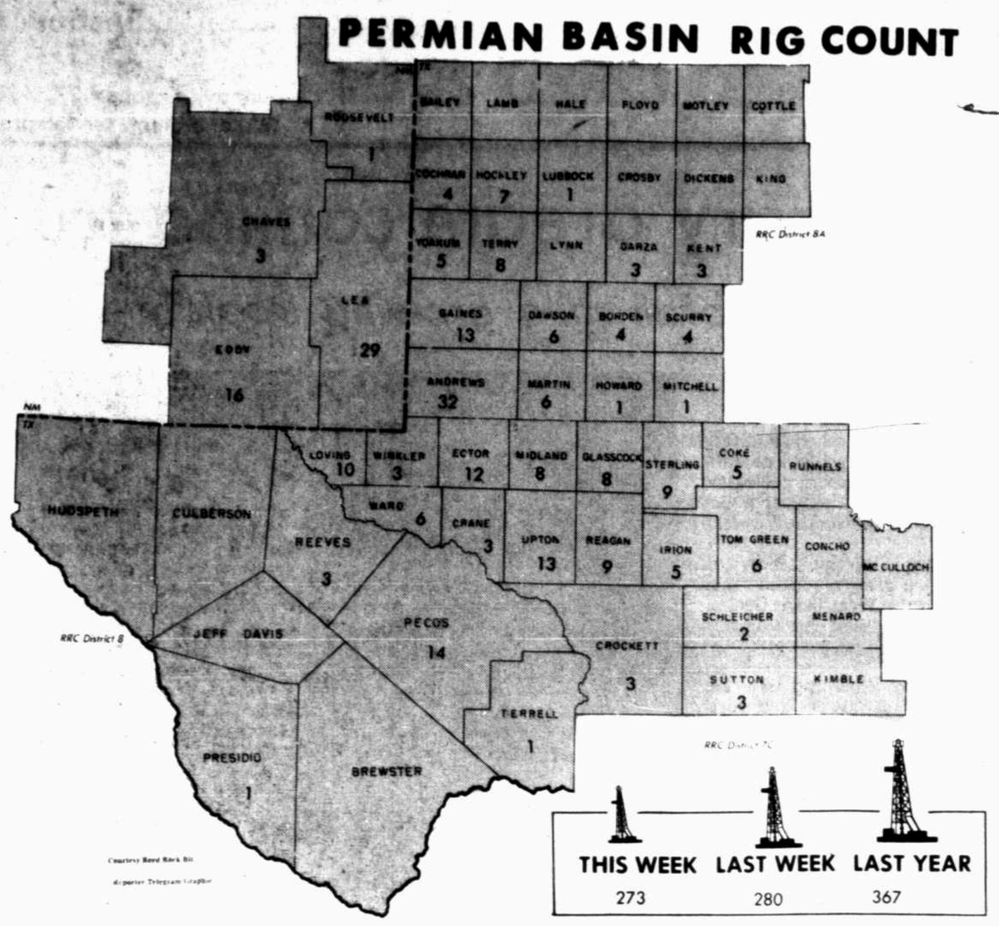

So what do we have here? An insurance problem, or a malpractice problem?

"I don't think you can really point a finger," says Barry Walker, associate vice president for public affairs for Alliance, "It just seems to be one of those things that is a fact of life — like high medical costs. For as long as we have been doing these surveys, the cost of a part on the shelf has always been slightly over three-times the cost of a part on the car. So it doesn't appear to be any recent development."

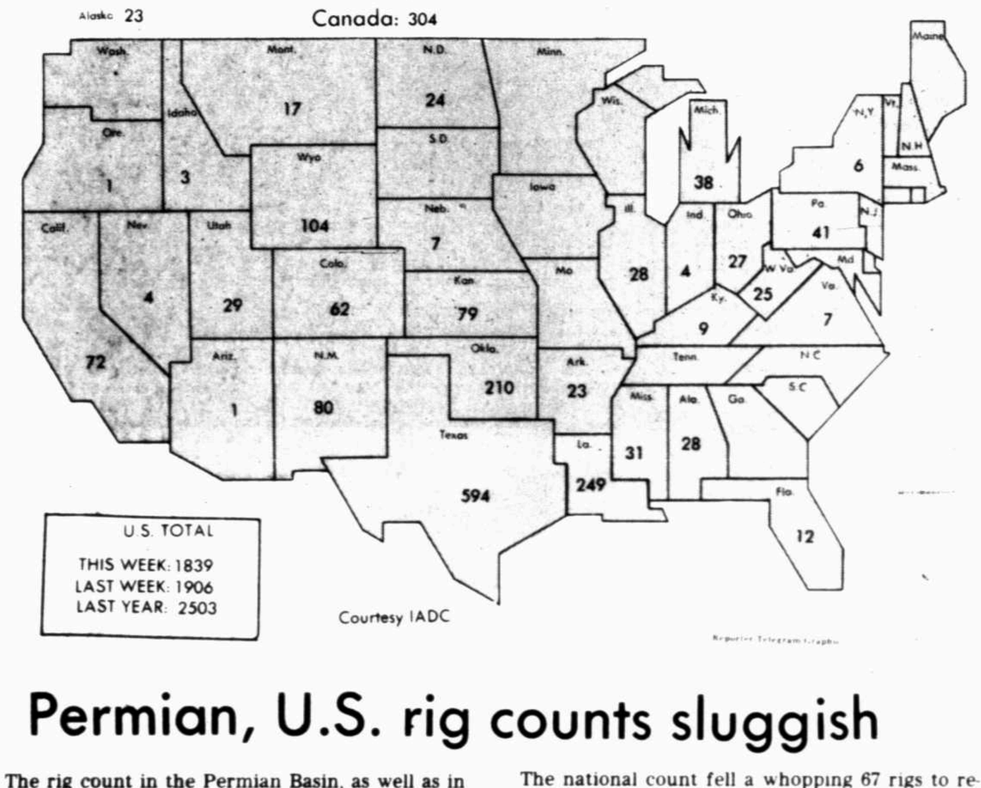

Perhaps, Mr. Walker is too kind. I personally do not think it speaks well of any industry when it is cheaper to junk a product than fix it. We can only hope it doesn't go that far in the housing industry. Otherwise we will be bulldozing down homes and building new ones everytime a roof leaks.

John Paul Pitts is business-oil editor of the Reporter-Telegram.

U.S. DRILLING PERMITS

Permits escalate

Permits issued to drill for oil and gas in the U.S. totaled 1,921 for the week ending October 18, up 9.6 percent from the previous week's total of 1,752, according to Petroleum Information Corp.

During the same week in 1984, 2,384 permits were issued. Two years ago, 2,175 permits were issued.

Year-to-date, 71,434 permits have been issued, down 15.7 percent from year ago totals of 84,779 permits. New field wildcat — purely exploratory — permits total 7,597 for the year. That compares with 8,451 permits issued during the same period in 1984, down 10.1 percent.

Development permits are down 16.6 percent from 1984 totals. To date, 55,389 permits have been issued, compared to 66,988 for the same period one year ago.

Permian, U.S. rig counts sluggish

The rig count in the Permian Basin, as well as in the U.S., was sluggish this week, continuing to drop by several rigs.

Permian Basin totals fell seven, down to 273. Midland and Ector counties each dropped 3 to post a rig total of eight and twelve, respectively. Rig totals during the same week a year ago stood at 367.

The national count fell a whopping 67 rigs to record a total of 1,839. Texas was the biggest contributor to that drop, with a 31 rig loss. The rig count in Texas stands at 594, 40 of which are working offshore. New Mexico managed to post a six rig gain this week, bringing its total to 80. A year ago the U.S. count was 2,503.

American Petrofina announces earnings

DALLAS (AP) — American Petrofina Inc. reported third-quarter net income of $10.2 million, compared with $1.8 million during the same period of 1984.

Paul D. Meek, president and chief executive officer, said Thursday the jump "was chiefly attributable to a gain in the refining activity where better refining margins prevailed."

Earnings for the third quarter were 85 cents per share, compared to last year's 15 cents per share.

But net income for the first nine months of 1985 dropped to $24.4 million, or $2.04 per share. For 1984, earnings for the nine-month period were $27.8 million, or $2.54 per share.

In the 1985 third quarter, the company obtained sufficient information to record an after-tax gain of $4 million, or 34 cents per share, as a result of an anticipated insurance settlement of the damage caused by a fire at the Big Spring refinery in March.

Company officials said the gain is not reflected in the operations results for the third quarter of 1985, but had been included in the operations results for the nine months ending Sept. 30.

Gross revenues for the third quarter totaled $599.3 million, up from $567 million in the same period last year. Gross revenues for the first nine months rose to $1.8 billion, compared to $1.6 billion in 1984.

Kaneb Services reports quarterly operations

HOUSTON (SWN) — Kaneb Services, Inc. has reported operating results for the three months and nine months ended Sept. 30, 1985.

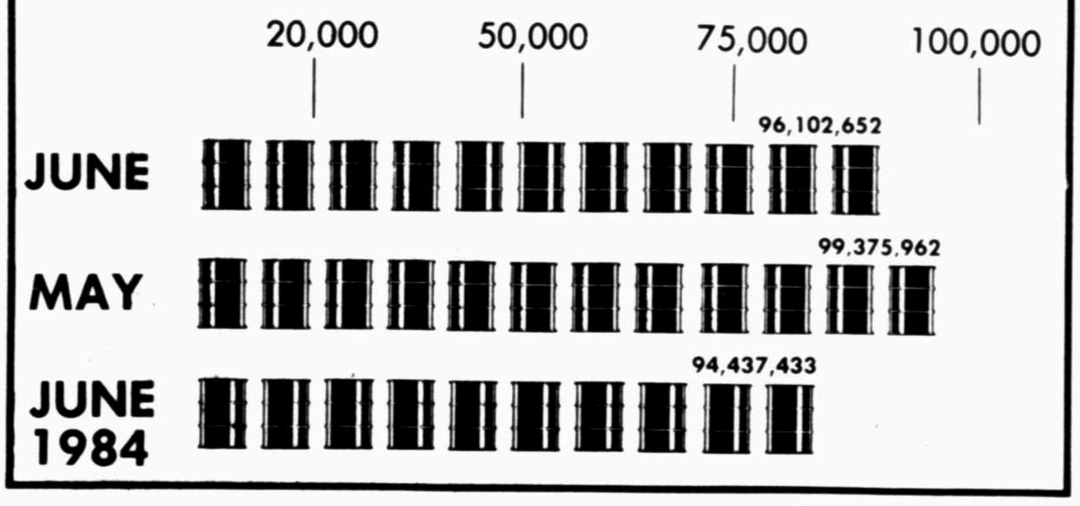

Operating results for the three and nine months ended September 30, 1985 and 1984, have been stated to give effect to the sale in the second quarter of 1985 of the company's Appalachian coal operations and the discontinuance of its land drilling operations. Consequently, the operating results of those segments have been reported herein as discontinued operations. This accounting treatment is responsible for the reduction in the magnitude of certain reported income statement and balance sheet amounts as compared with amounts reported in previous shareholder reports.

Revenues for the third quarter of 1985 were $65,687,000 compared with $73,751,000 in the third quarter of 1984. Operating income was $8,264,000 compared with a loss of $1,770,000 in the previous year. Net income from continuing operations was $4,586,000 or $.11 per common share in the third quarter compared with a loss of $27,223,000 or $.80 per common share in the third quarter of 1984. The combined net income including both continuing and discontinued operations amounted to $4,047,000 compared with a loss of $51,406,000 in 1984. Earnings per share of common stock were $.09 in the third quarter of 1985 compared with a loss of $1.48 in the 1984 period.

For the nine months ended September 30, 1985, revenues totalled $215,378,000 compared with $225,114,000 in the previous year. Operating income was $33,055,000 versus $14,342,000 in the 1984 nine-month period. Net income from continuing operations amounted to $15,027,000 or $.33 per common share for the first nine months of 1985, compared with a loss of $23,489,000 or $.77 per share in the 1984 period. The combined net income including both continuing and discontinued operations for the first nine months of 1985 was $23,560,000 or $.57 per common share.

Operating results for the 1984 periods include the effect of asset write-downs of $26,454,000 net of tax, in continuing operations and $26,060,000 net of tax, in discontinued operations. These write-downs, related primarily to contract drilling equipment, reduced earnings per common share from continuing operations and discontinued operations.

TEXAS CRUDE OIL REFINERY RUNS (BBLS)

Pennzoil earnings down

Pennzoil Co. reported 1985 third quarter net income of $44.4 million, down 25 percent from $59 million earned during the same quarter in 1984. Net income for the first nine months of 1985 was $154 million, down 14 percent from the $180 million earned during the same period in 1984.

Earnings per common share amounted to 94 cents for the third quarter versus $1.08 per share for the 1984 quarter. For the first nine months of 1985, earnings per share were $3.26 versus $3.24 earned during the nine months of 1984.

Sales for the third quarter of 1985 amounted to $564 million versus $599 million for the same period last year. Sales were $1.7 billion for the nine months, versus $1.8 billion for the 1984 period.

Chairman J. Hugh Liedtke said Pennzoil's agricultural minerals division continued to realize significant improvement in lower operating costs.

Pennzoil's petroleum manufacturing and marketing division also reported another substantial increase in operating income during the quarter, primarily due to improved lube manufacturing operations, reductions in refining operating costs and improved margins.

These gains were offset by lower prices for oil and natural gas, lower natural gas and liquids volumes and higher depletion and depreciation rates.

Elcor elects directors, officers

Shareholders also ratified the appointment of Arthur Andersen & Co. as independent auditors of the company for the current fiscal year ending June 30, 1986.

Following the shareholders meeting, the directors reelected all current officers and elected two new officers.

ARE YOU SEARCHING FOR OIL AND GAS?

We would like to help you narrow down that search. A seminar of significance to every explorationist in the area will be held in Midland, Texas on October 29, 1985.

Emphasis will be placed on data application to current exploration activity in eight geological provinces. Each geological area was complied by professional geologists with considerable expertise in his/her own area. You will meet some of these professionals and personnel from Exploration Graphics who have designed the input of the finished product. Sample uses of the product will be displayed.

"Microcomputers are just now becoming common on engineers' and geologists' desks," Bowdon said, and computerizing the two sciences will change them the same way accounting was changed when it was computerized. "Bookkeeping was done by hand; it was time consuming, and people made mistakes. Computerizing the two sciences will change them the way accounting was changed when it was computerized, he commented. "Bookkeeping was done by hand; it was time consuming, people made mistakes."

"Now," he continued, "productivity is the name of the game. Computers will make oil and gas companies more efficient. Fewer people will generate more prospects," he predicted. "Computers will help companies become more productive with the people they have."

Bowdon, who has an engineering degree, has been working with computers in oil and gas since 1979, he said, since he was employed with Schlumberger. After leaving Schlumberger, he was Midland Branch Manager for David P. Cook & Associates, a Dallas-based firm best known for their OGRE program for petroleum economics, one of the programs Engineering Software sells.

MORTGAGES

WITH INFLATION low and interest rates stabilized, homeowners now can pick the mortgage of their choice.

Get out your calculators and lots of yellow pads, because the differences come down to what is best for your personal financial situation.

To understand the principles, assume the following: a $100,000 home, $20,000 down payment, $80,000 mortgage, 35 percent federal income tax bracket and 12 percent rate for 30-year, fixed-rate mortgages.

The monthly payment on a 30-year, fixed rate mortgage for this house would be $823 in principal and interest. At the end of one year, the interest paid would be $9,548; the total paid on the principal balance, $290.

By Year 7, at which the typical family sells its house, the total interest paid to date would stand at $66,131, the principal balance still remaining, $77,009.

A 15-year mortgage carries a lower interest rate but a higher monthly payment. Current rates stand at about 11.75 percent. The monthly payment works out to $947, or $124 more than the 30-year mortgage — a 15 percent premium.

In the first year, interest paid totals $9,290 ($294 less than the 30-year loan) and principal paid so far is $2,077 ($1,787 more than the 30-year loan total and approximately the same as paid in the first seven years of the longer mortgage).

By end of Year 7, the 15-year mortgage holder will have paid $58,487 in interest ($7,644 less than paid on the longer loan) and the principal balance left to pay would stand at $58,944 ($18,065 less than with the 30-year mortgage).

By the end of the 15-year mortgage period, all $80,000 would have been paid off (the 30-year mortgagee would still owe $68,565).

SOUNDS LIKE a simple choice. Pay a little more per month for 15 years and own your house then.

"But it's not that simple," said Jim Parker.

A certified public accountant who works for Hewlett Packard, Parker has been massaging the numbers as he and his wife, Charlotte, contemplate buying a new home in Southern California. He provided the computer printout and analysis used here in comparing the mortgage alternatives.

He finds that the extra payment made each month on the 15-year mortgage is hardly peanuts.

Over 15 years, that extra $124 in monthly payments totals $22,320. Invested in a money market account with an after-tax interest rate of 4 percent — what Parker calls the "after tax opportunity cost" — the cumulative savings amounts to $50,690.

If the thrifty homeowner had left this fund untouched all those years, he could pay it all toward the remaining balance of $68,149 and owe only $17,459.

In 1985 dollars, that $17,500 is worth only about $6,808 — assuming the lower amount were invested today in an 8 percent-bearing account.

"You could be doing something with your money," Parker said. "The 15-year mortgage holder saved $17,459 (in equity buildup by making higher monthly payments), but it's worth only $6,800 in 1985 terms."

HE SAID THE homeowner thus has two financial choices:

— Make higher payments on the 15-year schedule, a decision that leaves less money in his pocket every month; or,

— Save the money for either other purchases and unexpected expenses or pay off the majority of the balance in 15 years.

In the first seven years, Parker and other experts said, the principal build-up on the 15-year mortgage is so low that it does not make sense to have paid the extra $124 per month. But if a homeowner plans to live in the same house for 15 years or more, the shorter mortgage may be a good strategy.

Ed Dick, Southern California loan regional manager for Great American First Savings Bank, said that homeowners must consider their cash-flow requirements. Instead of taking a 15-year mortgage, he said that a family might be able to qualify for a more expensive home at the same monthly carrying cost under a 30-year fixed- or adjustable-rate mortgage.

Gaming executive heads Caesars World rebound

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Saddled with $63 million in shaky receivables, a 3-to-1 debt-to-equity ratio and an anemic balance sheet, the Caesars World gaming empire was on rocky financial ground when Henry Gluck took the reins 2½ years ago.

But Gluck, who had retired at 45 "to smell the roses" then returned to take on the Caesars challenge, talks today of new directions for a company that has been synonymous with gaming's glitter for 20 years.

"The Palace has just completed the most profitable year it has ever had," Gluck said in a interview at his flagship Caesars Palace on the Las Vegas Strip. "This is the first year in Caesars' history that all the properties have been profitable at one time."

Caesars World Inc. reported net income of $31.8 million for the 1985 fiscal year, which ended July 31, compared with $18.8 million for fiscal 1984. The company sustained a loss of $21 million in fiscal 1983 due mainly to $63 million in doubtful debt — primarily casino credit that could not be collected.

Revenues for fiscal 1985 totaled $660.8 million — up $40 million from the previous year — for the Los Angeles-based company's seven Caesars resorts in Las Vegas and Lake Tahoe, Nev., Atlantic City, N.J., and the Pocono Mountains of Pennsylvania.

Gluck, 57, was coaxed onto the Caesars board by business associates three years ago during a very troubling time in the company's history.

"The company had a very poor balance sheet, it had approximately a three-to-one debt-to-equity ratio, it had a lot of receivables that we knew were going to be a problem and it had very substantive problems with New Jersey regulatory authorities," Gluck recalled. "When I got in I found out it was worse than I expected."

Henry Gluck

Gluck had retired in 1973 to spend more time with his family after traveling 2 million miles putting together Monogram Industries, a $300 million conglomerate. He remains on the board of half a dozen companies.

He said he faced some difficult choices in early 1983 after spending several months on the Caesars board.

"I wasn't taken by the idea" of becoming chairman of Caesars, he said. "I was enjoying the life I was leading, and, quite honestly, I was worried about the downside of the problems potentially affecting a reputation it had taken me a lifetime to build. I just didn't see that as an appropriate risk or worry at that stage of my life.

"But I was faced with one of three choices. I could sit by and hope that as a board member I could be in a position to watch things correct themselves. I could leave the company. Or I could put myself in a position where I could do something about it. I chose the third."

His first goal as Caesars chairman and chief executive officer was strengthening the corporate balance sheet and handling the problem of receivables.

The company attacked the receivables problem by keeping a closer eye on casino credit.

Caesars has long been known for courting casino customers around the globe.

"We felt we were using credit too much as a marketing tool," Gluck said. "We felt that was a mistake. As you go around the world, there is no way that a property can accurately predict whether you're going to have a real estate depression in Hong Kong, a peso devaluation in Latin America, a stock market crash in Kuwait, a depression in the price of oil in the Middle East."

One of Gluck's first moves was to set up a subsidiary, Caesars World International, with experts on Latin America, the Far East and the Middle East sitting on a credit committee with the presidents of each gaming property. The experts provide an insight into the economic climate of their respective areas.

"These people are primarily responsible to the president of Caesars World, who acts as an overseer and a balance to make sure we don't have a recurrence of the problems we had a few years ago," Gluck said. "Their decisions weigh heavily on marketing, granting of credit or collection of receivables."

Under Gluck, Caesars has begun to negotiate package deals with name entertainers rather than each property booking stars independently. The company is also consolidating many other management functions, is beginning to market products to capitalize on the strong Caesars name and is looking at other properties for possible expansion in the resort field.

The company's debt ratio is now 1-to-1, which Gluck calls "probably the strongest of any pure gaming companies in the business."

The turnaround has given Caesars a sense of direction and much higher credibility, Gluck said.

"Our credibility was very poor when I took control. Only 3 percent of the Caesars World stock was in institutional hands. It is now 37 percent. You don't get institutional support without a very high credibility factor," he said.

He said he is disappointed by the continuing public perception of the gaming industry as a less than respectable business.

"Today, most of the gaming companies are run by well-educated, solid professional people," he said. "They're public companies with shareholders. And they have reporting responsibilities not only to gaming authorities, but to the Securities and Exchange Commission, the New York Stock Exchange and many other reporting authorities.

"However, I guess old images die hard."

Texas cotton crop booming; cotton farmers aren't

This year has been kind to the Texas cotton crop, but it has been beating the stuffing out of Texas cotton farmers.

"I've never seen people so down in the mouth," said Cotton Fanning, spokesman for the Plains Cotton Growers Inc. in Lubbock. "I'm hearing nothing but gloom and doom up and down the street."

The problem is relatively simple: Booming production from what may be a near-record year is swamping a market already glutted with cheaper foreign cotton. And that means prices have dropped below survival level for many farmers.

The solution is far more complex. Farmers, marketing experts and politicians are sharply divided over how to change federal price supports as well as what to do with a farm bill package now before Congress.

Economists say Texas' 30,000 cotton farmers are looking for a bumper production year that should surpass last year's performance. And that's despite recent cold snaps that have hampered West Texas harvests.

"We're expecting a better yield than last year because we had good weather conditions in most areas of the state," said Dr. Robert Metzer, a Texas A&M University cotton specialist.

Out of approximately 4.7 million acres planted with cotton, Texas farmers should reap about 4.2 million bales (one bale equals 480 pounds) by the time harvests are completed next month, he said.

That's lower than the 4.3 to 4.4 million bales estimated earlier this year, but it is still significantly higher than the 3.7 million bales harvested last year, he said.

That news is only so good.

"The market price for cotton is horrible," Metzer said. "Our price is very, very depressing, and it's hurting a lot of our farmers."

Fanning agreed.

"This means doomsday for some farmers, especially those already in bad financial shape," he said. "They don't know what kind of credit will be available. They don't know what kind of farm program will exist next year or how their farm crop can be financed. We've seen quite a few farm sales."

Dean Ethridge, a National Cotton Council economist, said U.S. prices are inflated abroad because of a strong dollar and a government loan program that establishes a floor on American cotton prices well above the world market.

"U.S. cotton is best, the most trouble-free, but we are not in business because we are in love with U.S. cotton," Nadikianda Subbian Chinnapa of Indonesia said at a recent National Cotton Council meeting in Memphis, Tenn.

"If the U.S. price does not drop appreciably, we will not be able to buy U.S. cotton," said Abu Sayeed of Bangladesh, who said his mill once bought more than 75 percent of its cotton from the United States. Now, that figure is more like 10 to 15 percent.

Last year, Texas cotton drew on average 65.8 cents per pound, while in June 1985, the open-market price was closer to 49 cents, Metzer said.

"There is so much foreign competition," Metzer said. "So many textiles are being imported because of our strong dollar. There is severe competition with our domestic mills. It's all wreaking havoc with our U.S. cotton industry."

As a balm to the troubled industry, the Texas Cotton Association advocates a loan program tied to cotton's value on the world market, TCA executive vice president Bob Poteet said.

Federal judge rejects $1.5 million Pan Am settlement as 'inadequate'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A $1.5 million settlement reached between Pan American World Airways and a federal agency representing 81 pilots forced to retire at age 60 is inadequate, a federal judge has ruled.

"The settlement agreement offers claimants inadequate compensation for their years of involuntary retirement" from April 1978 to the present and is unreasonable in view of their chances of winning the case, Chief U.S. District Judge Robert Peckham said in a ruling released Wednesday.

Peckham said the agreement fell far short of the amount the pilots might collect in a trial: between $26.7 million and $31.2 million for lost salaries, plus additional damages, and a doubling of the entire amount if Pan Am's violations were found to be willful.

Similar suits have been filed against most other major airlines because of their responses to a federal law effective in April 1978 prohibiting mandatory retirement before age 70.

The Federal Aviation Administration sets a maximum age limit of 60 for pilots, but not for flight engineers, who also are part of the cockpit crew. The case involves Pan Am's refusal to let pilots automatically transfer to flight engineer at age 60 after April 1978.

Peckham did not say whether Pan Am had violated the law but indicated the pilots had a strong case in light of a recent Supreme Court ruling against Trans World Airlines in a similar case.

He said 45 of the 81 pilots nationwide had objected to the proposed settlement, which also included reinstatement for all those who wanted to work as flight engineers until age 70.

The suit was filed on behalf of the pilots in 1981 by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. A proposed settlement that included $250,000 as compensation for the pilots was rejected two years ago by another federal judge, James Ingram.

The airline and the EEOC now have the choice of appealing Peckham's ruling, reaching a new settlement or going to trial.

Pan Am spokesman James Arey declined comment. EEOC lawyer Fritz Wollett said the agency is reviewing the decision.

The judge said Pan Am allowed pilots younger than 60 to become flight engineers when vacancies existed, but forced most of them to retire at age 60 until February 1983. Pan Am then started allowing pilots who had qualified as flight engineers to transfer at age 60 if a vacancy existed and keep working until 70. If no vacancy existed, however, retirement was mandatory.

BUSINESS NOTEBOOK

Chemical exposure may be regulated

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Health is moving to draft rules on exposure of workers to chemicals used in the workplace, although TDH officials say the effort is being hampered by a lack of funding.

Legislators this year approved legislation, effective Jan. 1, 1986, requiring employers to inform workers of hazards known to be associated with chemicals used by the employers, and protective measures to be taken.

Employers also must file annual reports with TDH on chemicals in use, and training efforts to reduce hazards.

However, the Legislature didn't appropriate the funds requested by TDH, which had estimated $400,000 would be required.

William Elliott, of TDH's occupational health section, notes the agency is looking for donations, either directly to TDH or through the Texas Health Foundation, to help implement the program.

TDH held a public meeting Oct. 3 to discuss the new law and its problems in implementing it, and expects to begin rule-making efforts next month.

Elliott notes TDH must contact "at least 75,000 addresses" in starting the program, adding, "we foresee a problem in getting everything started by Jan. 1."

We may have to set a timetable for different industries to report in to us," he adds.

However, he says, employees will be expected to comply with training of employees, to make lists available to employees and to maintain chemical safety data sheets.

The State Board of Health may adopt emergency rules before adoption of the final rules.

Elliott notes TDH hopes that eventually the program will be supported by fees collected from businesses regulated under the program.

At least one public hearing on rules and fees is expected, Elliott reports.

An ad hoc committee of the Texas Credit Union Commission has begun work on revision of standard bylaws for State-chartered credit unions, the first such revision in 10 years.

Credit Union Commissioner John Hale says the "overriding objective" of the revision is to assure that the standard bylaws are "consistent with current statutes and operating procedures."

Lawmakers revised Texas' credit union statutes in 1983, Hale notes. "We want to correct the deficiencies in the existing bylaws to meet today's needs."

The new bylaws will "not be in any way more restrictive, but more beneficial to credit unions," Hale says.

The revision will draw on bylaws in use in other states and by Federal credit unions, with the committee hoping to develop a model set of bylaws.

The project will take nine to twelve months to complete, Hale says.

The State Board of Insurance reports that no requests for changes in accident and health policies due to increased concern over acquired immunity deficiency syndrome (AIDS) have been received — despite concern by insurers regarding costs of treating AIDS victims.

Various published reports indicate insurers have growing concern over such costs, but no applications for exclusion of coverage have been received by SBI.

Kay Simonton, director of SBI's policy approval section, notes most accident and health policies (and major medical and hospital indemnity policies) cover all illnesses including AID's but says coverage could be denied on grounds of an uninsurable pre-existing condition.

Only one Texas company has written AIDS coverage specifically, Simonton says.

SBI has delayed the hearing on title insurance rules and rates from Nov. 13 to Nov. 19 due to a scheduling conflict.

SBI also announced appointment of an advisory committee to study title insurance rates as requested by title insurance industry representatives.

Texas Land Title Association says changes in the economy over the past decade have resulted in many title insurance policies being issued with premiums not adequate to cover the costs involved.

New corporate charters issued in Texas declined in fiscal 1985, compared to fiscal 1984, the Secretary of State's Office reports.

The Corporations Section reports 41,881 new charters for for-profit corporations were issued during the 12 months ending August 31, compared to 44,459 issued in the prior fiscal year.

FDIC handling of Penn Square Bank questioned

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Two Oklahoma congressmen say they want to meet with the new chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to discuss the liquidation of the failed Penn Square Bank.

Democratic Sen. David Boren and Republican Rep. Mickey Edwards requested the meeting and according to a statement issued by their offices in Oklahoma City, want to talk with FDIC Chairman William Seidman about the agency's progress in the liquidation of the bank and the return of funds to the bank's uninsured depositors.

Penn Square Bank was declared insolvent and closed by federal regulators July 5, 1982.

Boren and Edwards said Seidman had a "more reasonable and balanced attitude" toward banking policy in his Senate confirmation hearings than did former chairman William Isaac.

"We want to talk to Mr. Seidman about the problems which have arisen concerning FDIC's handling of Penn Square, our inability to receive an audit of the agency's expenditures in the bank liquidation and the FDIC's apparent double standard in dealing with Penn Square as compared with other bank failures," when purchasers were found and all depositors were protected, the two lawmakers said.

Thus far, those who had deposits in excess of the FDIC's $100,000 insured limit have received $68.4 million with $127.2 million outstanding. Creditors have been paid $12.2 million, with $22.7 million outstanding.

In October 1984, Boren and Edwards held a public meeting with uninsured depositors, Isaac and other FDIC officials. The two lawmakers then introduced legislation to require the FDIC to report monthly to Congress on its expenses in handling bank liquidations and asked the General Accounting Office to audit the agency's handling of the Penn Square Bank liquidation.

IRI International locates to Pampa

PAMPA — Formation of IRI International, a major manufacturing and service company for the drilling and workover segments of the oil and gas industry has been announced by Victor P. "Vic" Raymond, president and CEO.

The new company will build and market the Ideco line of drilling rigs and the Franks line of servicing rigs and mud pumps, rotary tables, blocks, swivels and power swivels as formerly offered by the Ideco Division of Dresser Industries, Inc. and the Oilfield Products group of Ingersoll-Rand Co. It will also melt and forge a wide variety of electric furnace, vacuum degassed and electroslag refined steels.

"The combination of these two respected lines of drilling and workover equipment will provide our customers with the broadest offering available in the world wide market today," Raymond explained. "Equally important is the combination of the key management and technical personnel of the two companies into IRI International," he added.

Corporate headquarters and principal manufacturing facilities will be located at Pampa, with sales and service operations in place for nearly every major oil producing area in the world.

Conoco begins gas program

HOUSTON — Conoco's natural gas department has created a new unit to sell gas directly to industrial, commercial and local distribution customers nationwide.

Glen Kinder, as director of commercial and industrial gas marketing, is responsible for the new organization under gas sales manager Ed McMillan.

"The natural gas environment is going through some fast and far-reaching changes right now," McMillan said. "Our plans are to take advantage of our knowledge and experience as a major producer and consumer of natural gas — to increase profits by adding new customers and to position ourselves to take advantage of future changes in the marketplace."

Traditionally, Conoco and most other natural gas producers have sold their production to pipeline companies, which in turn sold the gas to other users. Conoco is continuing this traditional function under pipeline gas marketing director Cathy Wining.

Sales in the commercial, industrial and local distribution areas have become more significant of late within Conoco, increasing from 14 million cubic feet a day of gas in 1983 and 160 million cubic feet in 1985. These non-traditional sales will continue to grow in 1986, McMillan said.

In addition to seeking new accounts for Conoco-produced gas, the new organization also will purchase non-Conoco gas from other producers for direct sales to Conoco customers.

IBM introduces high speed system to link independent computers

NEW YORK (AP) — After several years of talk that created confusion throughout the computer industry, the International Business Machines Corp. has introduced the key elements of its long awaited local area network, a high-speed communications system intended to link hundreds of independent computers.

IBM officials and industry experts hope the introduction will finally bring order to a morass of computer communications problems which many believe forced the nation's largest computer users to temporarily halt their buying. "We've cleared a lot of smoke away today," said Stephen B. Schwartz, the IBM vice president who directs the company's fledgling telecommunications efforts. "We have given the industry a far better view of where we are going."

No one was more eager for that view than IBM's competitors, whose survival often depends on their ability to improve upon — or at least peacefully co-exist with — IBM technology. There was particular anxiety, however, surrounding the local area network. Like the inner workings of the telephone system, the network, or "data highway," is virtually invisible to most users.

But just as no telephone maker could prosper unless its phones could operate on an AT&T switching system, no computer maker could ignore the standards IBM sets, particularly in office equipment communications.

For its network, IBM chose a "token ring" design, a specific approach to linking computers that is basically incompatible with Ethernet, the technology used by the Digital Equipment Corp., Xerox and others. Experts, however, said they thought that in time it would be possible to build high-speed "bridges" between the networks, allowing a variety of equipment to communicate.

IBM was praised for designing a system that can run over ordinary telephone wire, rather than requiring customers to install expensive cabling systems for small networks. IBM said its system would cost a little more than $800 per attached computer, making it one of the more expensive offerings in the local area network industry. On the other hand, IBM executives quickly found themselves on the defensive Tuesday when it became clear that only part of the network was ready.

Initially, they said, it would connect up to 260 IBM Personal Computers. However, they later acknowledged that the company's System-36 minicomputer — the machine that IBM promotes as the "centerpiece" of departmental computing in the office — could not yet be directly connected to the new network. Nor is IBM ready to connect any of its mainframes, except through awkward indirect links that will store and retrieve data far slower than the 4 million bits — or pieces — of information that can flash through the network every second.

Thus, they were under tremendous pressure to get this thing out the door as they are doing it one piece at a time, said Gerald Mayfield of the DRW Group, a telecommunications consulting firm. Louise Hoskinson Wells, telecommunications analyst at Dataquest Inc., a Silicon Valley market research firm, added, "Customers are going to be frustrated for a while. We now have a network, it's just that you can't connect anything to it."

Schwartz declined to say when IBM would complete the software needed to add System 36 to the system. "All development schedules are not designed in heaven," he said, "and they don't all come together when you would like."

Almost nothing about the company's local area network effort has come together the way it was planned. For years, IBM engineers have floundered in their efforts to surmount a host of communications problems, primarily relating to methods of keeping track of millions of pieces of data headed to hundreds of different terminals or printers on the network. The company endured one delay after another, and 18 months ago it warned that the network could be two to three years away.

"Our customers required connection to a broader and broader array of equipment," Schwartz said. "And as you try to satisfy that, the complexity of the problems increases exponentially."

Using a technique that greatly increased sales of its PC, IBM is now hoping that many of those problems will be solved by outsiders. It has made the specifications of the system public, and Texas Instruments — which has been involved in the design of specialized semiconductors for the system — said Tuesday that it would market a five-chip set that allows other manufacturers to connect their equipment to IBM's.

Not surprisingly, IBM's competitors — especially those committed to Ethernet — were critical of the company's move Tuesday. "IBM gets a lot of publicity, just because it's IBM," said Kenneth H. Olsen, president of Digital, IBM's biggest competitor. "But there are 30,000 Ethernets out there, and they have worked for a long time. It seems that IBM had to pick something different, something they could control, and so they chose the second-best."

Ethernets are best envisioned as a pipeline between computers, through which messages are sent barreling in both directions. If messages collide, they return to their point of origin and are sent again, a split-second later. The chief advantage of Ethernets is that they are relatively inexpensive — about $400 per attached computer in large configurations — but they can slow greatly when a big volume of data causes frequent collisions.

Deep gas drilling costly

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The director of the state Geological Survey said Tuesday that drilling 15,000 to 20,000 feet to get at Oklahoma's deep deposits of natural gas will not be profitable while companies employ methods used in shallower wells.

Charles J. Mankin, head of the geological survey and executive director of the University of Oklahoma Energy Resources Center, said exploration companies must invest in technology to make the drilling of deep wells less expensive.

There's a company in the Anadarko Basin that drilled over 100 wells to depths of 18,000-20,000 feet, he said. They found gas, but they also spent $10 million a hole.

And Mankin said it was a $1 billion investment that will not produce profits when natural gas prices hover around $3 per thousand cubic feet.

Mankin was one of three members of a panel at the Governor's 1985 Energy Conference. Others discussing deep gas wells were University of Oklahoma economist Don Murray and Robert A. Hefner IV, manager of exploration and development for The GHK Companies, an energy firm in Oklahoma City.

Mankin said developers have found vast deposits of natural gas in the Anadarko Basin and Arkoma Basin. But he said companies are using methods employed to drill holes for 7,000-8,000 foot wells and those will not work at greater depths.

The Arkoma Basin runs from eastern Oklahoma into western Arkansas. The Anadarko Basin runs from the Texas Panhandle through Oklahoma into Kansas.

They have run into different rock formations, different pressures and the present system of drilling just won't work, he said. "There's no way a company can spend $6 per thousand cubic feet on cost of production and get a return of only $3 at the market."

Hefner said companies are discovering and are eager to drill wells to get at deep deposits of natural gas. But he said with restrictions on the use of natural gas in manufacturing plants, the mistaken impression that there is a glut of natural gas on the market and attractiveness of other fuels is hurting the gas industry.

The use of this domestic glut can in itself displace one or two million barrels of oil imports, thereby adding to the check on oil prices while reducing both inflation and our trade deficits, Hefner said.

He said the increased use of natural gas will move industry away from oil and keep OPEC prices in check. Hefner also said producers would be glad to sell their natural gas at prices equivalent to the $10-$12 per barrel of oil.

Swift buyout considered

CHICAGO (AP) — Swift Independent Corp., the nation's largest pork packer, is the target of a $135 million leveraged buyout offer from a partnership led by a Texas investor, a company spokesman said Tuesday.

The proposed cash and preferred stock transaction comes from a partnership comprised primarily of trusts of the Edwin L. Cox Jr. family of Dallas, who have interests in livestock production operations and other activities related to agriculture and food production, said Swift spokesman Bill Dillman.

Swift's board of directors will consider the offer at meetings on Wednesday and Thursday, he said.

The proposal calls for each share of Swift to be converted into $21 in cash and a $7 face value of a 15 percent cumulative exchangeable preferred stock, Dillman said.

Dividends for the first three years would be payable in additional shares of preferred stock, and the preferred is subject to mandatory redemption of 20 percent a year beginning in the 11th year, he said.

In a leveraged buyout, an investment group usually finances the acquisition of a company's outstanding shares with borrowed money. The debt is secured by, and repaid with, cash generated by the target company's operations or the sale of its assets.

"The potential purchaser has advised Swift Independent that it has entered into an agreement with Esmark Inc., a subsidiary of Beatrice, to buy Esmark's 35 percent interest in Swift Independent for $25 a share in cash," Dillman said.

Shares acquired by Beatrice would be canceled in the proposed merger.

Beatrice, one of the world's largest food and consumer-products companies, recently rejected a leveraged buyout offer from Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., a New York investment banking firm.

Government seeking access to citizen's private tax data

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration is seeking to expand the government's use of tax data and give federal agencies access to confidential information about citizens, a published report said.

Under the proposal, the tax information would be used to determine the eligibility of people applying for federal programs such as guaranteed student loans and veterans insurance, the New York Times reported.

If approved by Congress, federal agencies would be allowed to look at anyone's tax data to make sure they were not eligible for privately financed insurance benefits before paying benefits under government programs like Medicare, the Times said.

The government currently does not have authority to use such information. Congress ruled that tax information should be kept confidential in 1976 after congressional investigators learned President Richard Nixon and others had improperly used individuals' tax returns.

A spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, who was not named, told the Times the proposal was designed to "eliminate the drain on the federal government of improper and inappropriate payments."

Tyler oilman given award

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — A Tyler oilman who drilled his first well in 1934 with second-hand pipe and equipment was given the 1985 Dad Joiner Award Thursday night.

Isadore Roosth drilled the 3,600-foot well near Gladewater only four years after C.M. "Dad" Joiner, the legendary wildcatter, sparked the East Texas oil boom.

Roosth was honored with the Joiner award at the first East Texas Producers and Royalty Owners convention.

"I am quite surprised and deeply honored," said Roosth. "I did not expect to get this because I'm in Smith County and this is in a different county."

Roosth had the backing of 100 investors who each put up $100 when he drilled the well north of Gladewater for Roosth and Genecov Production Co., which his father founded and where Roosth served as president from 1971 to 1977.

A Texas A&M graduate, Roosth still consults with the company. He also presides over Business Properties, Inc.

Murchison, creditors agree on estate sale

DALLAS (AP) — Bankrupt financier Clint Murchison Jr. and a committe representing his unsecured creditors have agreed on a plan for the sale of Murchison's lavish North Dallas estate, lawyers for both sides said.

According to a report published in the Dallas Times Herald, Murchison, 61, will get the proceeds from the sale of his 42,000-square-foot residence and the unsecured creditors will split the proceeds from the sale of the 25 acres that surround it.

"There is a great deal of interest in the property and a number of offers have been received," said Murchison's attorney, Robert Hoffman.

It took 13 years and more than $3 million to build the home, which features handcut stonework, travertine marble floors and two swimming pools, Hoffman said.

In documents Murchison filed with the bankruptcy court in June, the house was valued at $5 million and the land at $10 million, the newspaper said. The June filing also listed potential liabilities of nearly $400 million, some of which have now been paid.

The deadline for offers, which must be made separately on the house and the land, is Nov. 15, Hoffman said.

The ailing Murchison, who once owned the Dallas Cowboys football team, filed for protection from his creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankrupcty code to forestall an attempt by creditors to force the liquidation of his assets.

Hoffman said a reorganization plan for paying Murchison's remaining debts will be made public this week.

Federal judge rejects $1.5 million Pan Am settlement as 'inadequate'

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A $1.5 million settlement reached between Pan American World Airways and a federal agency representing 81 pilots forced to retire at age 60 is inadequate, a federal judge has ruled.

"The settlement agreement offers claimants inadequate compensation for their years of involuntary retirement" from April 1978 to the present and is unreasonable in view of their chances of winning the case, Chief U.S. District Judge Robert Peckham said in a ruling released Wednesday.

Peckham said the agreement fell far short of the amount the pilots might collect in a trial: between $26.7 million and $31.2 million for lost salaries, plus additional damages, and a doubling of the entire amount if Pan Am's violations were found to be willful.

Similar suits have been filed against most other major airlines because of their responses to a federal law effective in April 1978 prohibiting mandatory retirement before age 70.

The Federal Aviation Administration sets a maximum age limit of 60 for pilots, but not for flight engineers, who also are part of the cockpit crew. The case involves Pan Am's refusal to let pilots automatically transfer to flight engineer at age 60 after April 1978.

Peckham did not say whether Pan Am had violated the law but indicated the pilots had a strong case in light of a recent Supreme Court ruling against Trans World Airlines in a similar case.

He said 45 of the 81 pilots nationwide had objected to the proposed settlement, which also included reinstatement for all those who wanted to work as flight engineers until age 70.

The suit was filed on behalf of the pilots in 1981 by the U.S. Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. A proposed settlement that included $250,000 as compensation for the pilots was rejected two years ago by another federal judge, James Ingram.

The airline and the EEOC now have the choice of appealing Peckham's ruling, reaching a new settlement or going to trial.

Pan Am spokesman James Arey declined comment. EEOC lawyer Fritz Wollett said the agency is reviewing the decision.

The judge said Pan Am allowed pilots younger than 60 to become flight engineers when vacancies existed, but forced most of them to retire at age 60 until February 1983. Pan Am then started allowing pilots who had qualified as flight engineers to transfer at age 60 if a vacancy existed and keep working until 70. If no vacancy existed, however, retirement was mandatory.

Chemical exposure may be regulated

AUSTIN — The Texas Department of Health is moving to draft rules on exposure of workers to chemicals used in the workplace, although TDH officials say the effort is being hampered by a lack of funding.

Legislators this year approved legislation, effective Jan. 1, 1986, requiring employers to inform workers of hazards known to be associated with chemicals used by the employers, and protective measures to be taken.

Employers also must file annual reports with TDH on chemicals in use, and training efforts to reduce hazards.

However, the Legislature didn't appropriate the funds requested by TDH, which had estimated $400,000 would be required.

William Elliott, of TDH's occupational health section, notes the agency is looking for donations, either directly to TDH or through the Texas Health Foundation, to help implement the program.

TDH held a public meeting Oct. 3 to discuss the new law and its problems in implementing it, and expects to begin rule-making efforts next month.

Elliott notes TDH must contact "at least 75,000 addresses" in starting the program, adding, "we foresee a problem in getting everything started by Jan. 1."

We may have to set a timetable for different industries to report in to us," he adds.

However, he says, employees will be expected to comply with training of employees, to make lists available to employees and to maintain chemical safety data sheets.

The State Board of Health may adopt emergency rules before adoption of the final rules.

Elliott notes TDH hopes that eventually the program will be supported by fees collected from businesses regulated under the program.

At least one public hearing on rules and fees is expected, Elliott reports.

An ad hoc committee of the Texas Credit Union Commission has begun work on revision of standard bylaws for State-chartered credit unions, the first such revision in 10 years.

Credit Union Commissioner John Hale says the "overriding objective" of the revision is to assure that the standard bylaws are "consistent with current statutes and operating procedures."

Lawmakers revised Texas' credit union statutes in 1983, Hale notes. "We want to correct the deficiencies in the existing bylaws to meet today's needs."

The new bylaws will "not be in any way more restrictive, but more beneficial to credit unions," Hale says.

The revision will draw on bylaws in use in other states and by Federal credit unions, with the committee hoping to develop a model set of bylaws.

The project will take nine to twelve months to complete, Hale says.

The State Board of Insurance reports that no requests for changes in accident and health policies due to increased concern over acquired immunity deficiency syndrome (AIDS) have been received — despite concern by insurers regarding costs of treating AIDS victims.

Various published reports indicate insurers have growing concern over such costs, but no applications for exclusion of coverage have been received by SBI.

Kay Simonton, director of SBI's policy approval section, notes most accident and health policies (and major medical and hospital indemnity policies) cover all illnesses including AID's but says coverage could be denied on grounds of an uninsurable pre-existing condition.

Only one Texas company has written AIDS coverage specifically, Simonton says.

SBI has delayed the hearing on title insurance rules and rates from Nov. 13 to Nov. 19, due to a scheduling conflict.

SBI also announced appointment of an advisory committee to study title insurance rates, as requested by title insurance industry representatives.

Texas Land Title Association says changes in the economy over the past decade have resulted in many title insurance policies being issued with premiums not adequate to cover the costs involved.

New corporate charters issued in Texas declined in fiscal 1985, compared to fiscal 1984, the Secretary of State's Office reports.

The Corporations Section reports 41,881 new charters for "for-profit" corporations were issued during the 12 months ending August 31, compared to 44,459 issued in the prior fiscal year.

Texas Economic Development Commission is accepting applications for a "limited time" for low cost bond money for small and medium size businesses, through its "Capital" program, administered by Texas Small Business Industrial Development Corp.

The program provides loans of $250,000 to $750,000 for qualified projects and businesses, using proceeds from tax-exempt bonds authorized by TSBIDC.

FDIC handling of Penn Square Bank questioned

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — Two Oklahoma congressmen say they want to meet with the new chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. to discuss the liquidation of the failed Penn Square Bank.

Democratic Sen. David Boren and Republican Rep. Mickey Edwards requested the meeting and according to a statement issued by their offices in Oklahoma City, want to talk with FDIC Chairman William Seidman about the agency's progress in the liquidation of the bank and the return of funds to the bank's uninsured depositors.

Penn Square Bank was declared insolvent and closed by federal regulators July 5, 1982.

Boren and Edwards said Seidman had a "more reasonable and balanced attitude" toward banking policy in his Senate confirmation hearings than did former chairman William Isaac.

"We want to talk to Mr. Seidman about the problems which have arisen concerning FDIC's handling of Penn Square, our inability to receive an audit of the agency's expenditures in the bank liquidation and the FDIC's apparent double standard in dealing with Penn Square as compared with other bank failures," when purchasers were found and all depositors were protected, the two lawmakers said.

Thus far, those who had deposits in excess of the FDIC's $100,000 insured limit have received $68.4 million with $127.2 million outstanding. Creditors have been paid $12.2 million, with $22.7 million outstanding.

In October 1984, Boren and Edwards held a public meeting with uninsured depositors, Isaac and other FDIC officials. The two lawmakers then introduced legislation to require the FDIC to report monthly to Congress on its expenses in handling bank liquidations and asked the General Accounting Office to audit the agency's handling of the Penn Square Bank liquidation.

IRI International locates to Pampa

PAMPA — Formation of IRI International, a major manufacturing and service company for the drilling and workover segments of the oil and gas industry has been announced by Victor P. "Vic" Raymond, president and CEO.

The new company will build and market the Ideco line of drilling rigs and the Franks line of servicing rigs and mud pumps, rotary tables, blocks, swivels and power swivels as formerly offered by the Ideco Division of Dresser Industries, Inc. and the Oilfield Products group of Ingersoll-Rand Co. It will also melt and forge a wide variety of electric furnace, vacuum degassed and electroslag refined steels.

"The combination of these two respected lines of drilling and workover equipment will provide our customers with the broadest offering available in the world wide market today," Raymond explained. "Equally important is the combination of the key management and technical personnel of the two companies into IRI International," he added.

Corporate headquarters and principal manufacturing facilities will be located at Pampa, with sales and service operations in place for nearly every major oil producing area in the world.

Conoco begins gas program

HOUSTON — Conoco's natural gas department has created a new unit to sell gas directly to industrial, commercial and local distribution customers nationwide.

Glen Kinder, as director of commercial and industrial gas marketing, is responsible for the new organization under gas sales manager Ed McMillan.

"The natural gas environment is going through some fast and far-reaching changes right now," McMillan said. "Our plans are to take advantage of our knowledge and experience as a major producer and consumer of natural gas — to increase profits by adding new customers and to position ourselves to take advantage of future changes in the marketplace."

Traditionally, Conoco and most other natural gas producers have sold their production to pipeline companies, which in turn sold the gas to other users. Conoco is continuing this traditional function under pipeline gas marketing director Cathy Wining.

Sales in the commercial, industrial and local distribution areas have become more significant of late within Conoco, increasing from 14 million cubic feet a day of gas in 1983 and 160 million cubic feet in 1985. These non-traditional sales will continue to grow in 1986, McMillan said.

In addition to seeking new accounts for Conoco-produced gas, the new organization also will purchase non-Conoco gas from other producers for direct sales to Conoco customers.

IBM introduces high speed system to link independent computers

New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — After several years delay that created confusion throughout the computer industry, the International Business Machines Corp. has introduced the key elements of its long-awaited local area network, a high-speed communications system intended to link hundreds of independent computers.

IBM officials and industry experts hope the introduction will finally bring order to a morass of computer communications problems, which many believe forced the nation's largest computer users to temporarily halt their buying. "We've cleared a lot of smoke away today," said Stephen B. Schwartz, the IBM vice president who directs the company's fledging telecommunications efforts. "We have given the industry a far better view of where we are going."

No one was more eager for that view than IBM's competitors, whose survival often depends on their ability to improve upon — or at least peacefully co-exist with — IBM technology. There was particular anxiety, however, surrounding the local area network. Like the inner workings of the telephone system, the network, or "data highway," is virtually invisible to most users.

But just as no telephone maker could prosper unless its phones could operate on an AT&T switching system, no computer maker could ignore the standards IBM sets, particularly in office equipment communications.

For its network, IBM chose a "token ring" design, a specific approach to linking computers that is basically incompatible with Ethernet, the technology used by the Digital Equipment Corp., Xerox and others. Experts, however, said they thought that in time it would be possible to build high-speed "bridges" between the networks, allowing a variety of equipment to communicate.

IBM was praised for designing a system that can run over ordinary telephone wire, rather than requiring customers to install expensive cabling systems for small networks. IBM said its system would cost a little more than $800 per attached computer, making it one of the more expensive offerings in the local area network industry. On the other hand, IBM executives quickly found themselves on the defensive Tuesday when it became clear that only part of the network was ready.

Initially, they said, it would connect up to 260 IBM Personal Computers. However, they later acknowledged that the company's System-36 minicomputer — the machine that IBM promotes as the "centerpiece" of departmental computing in the office — could not yet be directly connected to the new network. Nor is IBM ready to connect any of its mainframes, except through awkward indirect links that will store and retrieve data far slower than the 4 million bits — or pieces — of information that can run through the network every second.

"They were under tremendous pressure to get this thing out the door, so they are doing it one piece at a time," said Gerald Mayfield, of the DMW Group, a telecommunications consulting firm. Louise Herndon Wells, telecommunications analyst at Dataquest Inc., a Silicon Valley market researcher, added. "Customers are going to be frustrated for a while. We now have a network, it's just that you can't connect anything to it."

Schwartz declined to say when IBM would complete the software needed to add System-36 to the system. "All development schedules are not designed in heaven," he said, "and they don't all come together when you would like."

Almost nothing about the company's local area network effort has come together the way it was planned. For years, IBM engineers have floundered in their efforts to surmount a host of communications problems, primarily relating to methods of keeping track of millions of pieces of data headed to hundreds of different terminals or printers on the network. The company endured one delay after another, and 18 months ago it warned that the network could be two to three years away.

"Our customers required connection to a broader and broader array of equipment," Schwartz said. "And as you try to satisfy that, the complexity of the problems increases exponentially."

Using a technique that greatly increased sales of its PC, IBM is now hoping that many of those problems will be solved by outsiders. It has made the specifications of the system public, and Texas Instruments — which has been involved in the design of specialized semiconductors for the system — said Tuesday that it would market a five-chip set that allows other manufacturers to connect their equipment to IBM's.

Not surprisingly, IBM's competitors — especially those committed to Ethernet — were critical of the company's move Tuesday. "IBM gets a lot of publicity, just because it's IBM," said Kenneth H. Olsen, president of Digital. IBM's biggest competitor. "But there are 30,000 Ethernets out there, and they have worked for a long time. It seems that IBM had to pick something different, something they could control, and so they chose the second-best."

Ethernets are best envisioned as a pipeline between computers, through which messages are sent barreling in both directions. If messages collide, they return to their point of origin and are sent again, a split-second later. The chief advantage of Ethernets is that they are relatively inexpensive — about $400 per attached computer in large configurations — but they can slow greatly when a big volume of data causes frequent collisions.

Deep gas drilling costly

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — The director of the state Geological Survey said Tuesday that drilling 15,000 to 20,000 feet to get at Oklahoma's deep deposits of natural gas will not be profitable while companies employ methods used in shallower wells.

Charles J. Mankin, head of the geological survey and executive director of the University of Oklahoma Energy Resources Center, said exploration companies must invest in technology to make the drilling of deep wells less expensive.

There's a company in the Anadarko Basin that drilled over 100 wells to depths of 18,000-20,000 feet, he said. "They found gas, but they also spent $10 million a hole."

And Mankin said it was a $1 billion investment that will not produce profits when natural gas prices hover around $3 per thousand cubic feet.

Mankin was one of three members of a panel at the Governor's 1985 Energy Conference. Others discussing deep gas wells were University of Oklahoma economist Don Murray and Robert A. Hefner IV, manager of exploration and development for The GHK Companies, an energy firm in Oklahoma City.

Mankin said developers have found vast deposits of natural gas in the Anadarko Basin and Arkoma Basin. But he said companies are using methods employed to drill holes for 7,000-8,000 foot wells and those will not work at greater depths.

The Arkoma Basin runs from eastern Oklahoma into western Arkansas. The Anadarko Basin runs from the Texas Panhandle through Oklahoma into Kansas.

They have run into different rock formations, different pressures and the present system of drilling just won't work, he said. "There's no way a company can spend $6 per thousand cubic feet on cost of production and get a return of only $3 at the market."

Hefner said companies are discovering and are eager to drill wells to get at deep deposits of natural gas. But he said with restrictions on the use of natural gas in manufacturing plants the mistaken impression that there is a glut of natural gas on the market and attractiveness of other fuels is hurting the gas industry.

The use of this domestic glut can in itself displace one or two million barrels of oil imports, thereby adding to the check on oil prices while reducing both inflation and our trade deficits, Hefner said.

He said the increased use of natural gas will move industry away from oil and keep OPEC prices in check. Hefner also said producers would be glad to sell their natural gas at prices equivalent to the $10-$12 per barrel of oil.

Swift buyout considered

CHICAGO (AP) — Swift Independent Corp., the nation's largest pork packer, is the target of a $135 million leveraged buyout offer from a partnership led by a Texas investor, a company spokesman said Tuesday.

The proposed cash and preferred stock transaction comes from a partnership comprised primarily of trusts of the Edwin L. Cox Jr. family of Dallas, who have interests in livestock production operations and other activities related to agriculture and food production, said Swift spokesman Bill Dillman.

Swift's board of directors will consider the offer at meetings on Wednesday and Thursday, he said.

The proposal calls for each share of Swift to be converted into $21 in cash and a $7 face value of a 15 percent cumulative exchangeable preferred stock, Dillman said.

Dividends for the first three years would be payable in additional shares of preferred stock, and the preferred is subject to mandatory redemption of 20 percent a year beginning in the 11th year, he said.

In a leveraged buyout, an investment group usually finances the acquisition of a company's outstanding shares with borrowed money. The debt is secured by, and repaid with, cash generated by the target company's operations or the sale of its assets.

"The potential purchaser has advised Swift Independent that it has entered into an agreement with Esmark Inc., a subsidiary of Beatrice, to buy Esmark's 35 percent interest in Swift Independent for $25 a share in cash," Dillman said.

Shares acquired by Beatrice would be canceled in the proposed merger.

Beatrice, one of the world's largest food and consumer-products companies, recently rejected a leveraged buyout offer from Kohlberg, Kravis, Roberts & Co., a New York investment banking firm.

Government seeking access to citizen's private tax data

NEW YORK (AP) — The Reagan administration is seeking to expand the government's use of tax data and give federal agencies access to confidential information about citizens, a published report said.

Under the proposal, the tax information would be used to determine the eligibility of people applying for federal programs such as guaranteed student loans and veterans insurance, the New York Times reported.

If approved by Congress, federal agencies would be allowed to look at anyone's tax data to make sure they were not eligible for privately financed insurance benefits before paying benefits under government programs like Medicare, the Times said.

The government currently does not have authority to use such information. Congress ruled that tax information should be kept confidential in 1976 after congressional investigators learned President Richard Nixon and others had improperly used individuals' tax returns.

A spokesman for the Office of Management and Budget, who was not named, told the Times the proposal was designed to "eliminate the drain on the federal government of improper and inappropriate payments."

Tyler oilman given award

LONGVIEW, Texas (AP) — A Tyler oilman who drilled his first well in 1934 with second-hand pipe and equipment was given the 1985 Dad Joiner Award Thursday night.

Isadore Roosth drilled the 3,600-foot well near Gladewater only four years after C.M. "Dad" Joiner, the legendary wildcatter, sparked the East Texas oil boom.

Roosth was honored with the Joiner award at the first East Texas Producers and Royalty Owners convention.

"I am quite surprised and deeply honored," said Roosth. "I did not expect to get this because I'm in Smith County and this is in a different county."

Roosth had the backing of 100 investors who each put up $100 when he drilled the well north of Gladewater for Roosth and Genecov Production Co., which his father founded and where Roosth served as president from 1971 to 1977.

A Texas A&M graduate, Roosth still consults with the company. He also presides over Business Properties, Inc.

Murchison, creditors agree on estate sale

DALLAS (AP) — Bankrupt financier Clint Murchison Jr. and a committe representing his unsecured creditors have agreed on a plan for the sale of Murchison's lavish North Dallas estate, lawyers for both sides said.

According to a report published in the Dallas Times Herald, Murchison, 61, will get the proceeds from the sale of his 42,000-square-foot residence and the unsecured creditors will split the proceeds from the sale of the 25 acres that surround it.

"There is a great deal of interest in the property and a number of offers have been received," said Murchison's attorney, Robert Hoffman.

It took 13 years and more than $3 million to build the home, which features handcut stonework, travertine marble floors and two swimming pools, Hoffman said.

In documents Murchison filed with the bankruptcy court in June, the house was valued at $5 million and the land at $10 million, the newspaper said. The June filing also listed potential liabilities of nearly $400 million, some of which have now been paid.

The deadline for offers, which must be made separately on the house and the land, is Nov. 15, Hoffman said.

The ailing Murchison, who once owned the Dallas Cowboys football team, filed for protection from his creditors under Chapter 11 of the federal bankrupcty code to forestall an attempt by creditors to force the liquidation of his assets.

Hoffman said a reorganization plan for paying Murchison's remaining debts will be made public this week.

Inventor claims moon phases can determine gasoline use

Cox News Service

WASHINGTON — After twice rejecting, then accepting, a French inventor's claim that phases of the moon can determine how much gasoline a car uses, the Patent Office has reversed itself again and revoked his patent.

The inventor argued that a small magnetic device attached to the carburetor of a car would improve the air-gasoline mixture so that the vehicle would consume only half the normal amount of fuel.

However, the user of the device would have to watch the moon, the inventor claimed, for if the invention were pointed in one direction during new moon and caused a car to use half the normal amount of gasoline for 15 days, it would have to pointed in the opposite direction at full moon or it would cause the car to use twice the normal amount for the next 15 days.

The claims were rejected with little comment after Jean Claude Imbert of St. Maximin, France, filed his application for a U.S. patent in 1981.

Then in 1984, after months of arguments and counter-arguments, the Patent Office granted Imbert a patent on his "fuel saving device."

Last month — 48 full moons and 48 new moons after the patent application was initially submitted — officials reviewed the matter again and revoked the patent.

Records in the odd case illustrate the kind of exchange of argument that can underly a decision to grant or withhold a U.S. patent.

Imbert's claimed invention was a coil of wire that he said could be attached to an automobile carburetor and used to create a magnetic field. The magnetic field would surround the carburetor whenever an electric current from the car battery was passed through the coil, he said.

The lines of force from this magentic field would "sequence" the molecules of the air-fuel mixture, he said, and thereby cause the car to use from 40 percent to 50 percent less fuel than it otherwise would.

"There is a relation between the operation of the device and the lunar cycle," Imbert said in the description of his device. "This is not a scientific observation of the phenomenon, but a simple experimental verification.

"Indeed, the magnetic field should be reversed (by reversing the solenoid or the terminals connecting it to the battery) every 15 days or on every new or full moon....

"If this is not done, the engine will consume now half, now twice its normal consumption...."

He said it would be up to the user to determine which way worked best during waxing and waning moons. One other thing: Imbert said the copper wire used in the coil had to be colored red for the device to work.

The applicaiton was rejected. A patent examiner said devices that purported to improve engine efficiency by subjecting the fuel stream to a magnetic field had been previously patented — although no one had been able to say why they seemed to work. Imbert had provided no proof that his innovation — adjusting the coil according to the moon's phases — would work.

Next, Imbert amended his patent. Instead of seeking a patent for a device, he said, he now wanted a patent for a "method of operating" an engine: by attaching to the carburetor a magnetic device, oriented according to the phases of the moon, and so forth. He also argued that unless the Patent Office could cite facts or theory supporting its belief that his moon-phase application would not work, he was not required to produce affirmative evidence that it would work.

The patent examiner agreed with the latter point. However, the amended application was also rejected.

"The disclosed method has absolutely nothing to do with 'operating' the engine, but rather treating the fuel," the examiner ruled.

Imbert amended the application again. Instead of a method of operating an engine, he said, he was now seeking a patent for a "method of treating the fuel supplied" to the engine.

This time, the patent was approved.

Late last year, the Patent Office decided to review Imbert's Patent No. 4,424,786 again. A different patent examiner declared that Imbert had not invented a new way to treat fuel for a gasoline engine, but had simply discovered a way to use a pre-existing device — the already-patented coil.

When Imbert did not respond to the latest ruling within a prescribed 60 days, his patent was revoked. The action was finalized last month.

Austin's La Martinique salad oil gets 50-year salute

AUSTIN (AP) — When La Martinique debuted at The Liberty Bell restaurant in Austin five decades ago, it was a simple but lively little thing that never dreamed how much its French taste would impress the people.

Today it's known in New York, although its biggest fans remain Texans, especially those living in Austin, San Antonio, Dallas and Houston.

La Martinique is a salad bowl belle, a snappy dressing. And although it has only three varieties to its name, it has held a place in society for 50 years. Perhaps you have known it personally, but never guessed that this saucy little number with the French airs is a hometown dish.

La Martinique's creator was Esther Allidi, a native of Cannes-Nice area of France, who came to Austin in the early part of this century. She brought with her an old French family cookbook from a relative who had studied under that famous French chef, Escoffier.

When Mrs. Allidi opened the Liberty Bell restaurant on South Congress Avenue in the mid-1930s, she referred to that cookbook for a French vinaigrette dressing. The Escoffier-inspired recipe become the house dressing, although Mrs. Allidi modified it to suit Austin's taste, replacing the French olive oil with cotton seed oil. La Martinique was born.

It was a charmer and Austinites began requesting containers of the oil, vinegar and garlic for home use. When local groceries chose to stock it for their customers, Mrs. Allidi set up shop in her kitchen. La Martinique (the name has no special significace) had put her in the French salad dressing business.

In 1940, Mrs. Allidi introduced a poppy seed dressing, made famous by the late Helen Corbitt, a food expert who was teaching home economics at the University of Texas at the time. (Miss Corbitt writes in her book "Helen Corbitt's Cookbook" that she didn't actually dream up the idea of putting poppy seed in a salad dressing. She had eaten a similar recipe in New York early in her life. But she does take credit for popularizing poppy seed dressing by "serving it on the best grapefruit in the world, Texas grapefruit.")

That was La Martinique's second number.

The third came in the early '50s, and it, too, was from Mrs. Allidi's family cookbook. A blue cheese vinaigrette, it is unique among blue cheese dressings because it is thin and clear, not thick and creamy. Once again Mrs. Allidi Americanized the French version, substituting cotton seed oil for olive oil and also Wisconsin blue for French Roquefort.

Mrs. Allidi has died, as has her husband, Peter, a recognized Austin painter during that period. But La Martinique lives on, despite hard times during World War II.

Mrs. Allidi had trouble getting supplies during the war, said Irving Smith, an Austinite who became her partner in the late '40s. After 11 years as partners, Smith bought her out and continued making the three La Martinique dressings in Austin until 1983. At that time he sold La Martinique to Pace Foods in San Antonio, but was retained as a consultant. A couple of days a week Smith goes down to San Antonio to keep an eye on La Martinique and be sure that they are still making the dressings by hand like Mrs. Allidi used to do.

Seven women peel and chop the onions and garlic, and stir the ingredients together. Up until three months ago, they also put the labels on the bottles by hand, said Tom Clarke of Pace Foods. Now a machine does the labels.

The recipes are the same, according to Clarke, although Pace has made a change in the name of the French dressing. It is now called a French vinaigrette because that is what it really is and Texas cooks today are familiar with the term.

La Martinique salad dressing was created five decades ago by Esther Allidi when she opened the Liberty Bell restaurant in Austin.

Although Escoffier may not have worried about calories, salad eaters of the '80s do. Recently Pace had nutritional analyses done on the trio of dressings and all came out under 100 calories per tablespoon, average for dressings. The French is the highest at 97 calories per tablespoon, the blue cheese is 91 calories and the poppy seed is 77.

Teaching youngsters about money can start at home

Copley News Service

One way to stretch your dollars today is to show your family just how tough they are to earn and how fast they can be spent.

Youngsters today get sex education in school, but there are few if any classes teaching money management, budgeting and bargain hunting.

Worse yet, families almost never discuss financial matters at the dinner table. Mom and/or Dad pay the bills at the end of every month and hope they can put away some cash in savings.

This takes discipline. Family members who take a hard look at their spending find themselves using credit cards too freely, running up their charge accounts too easily and forgetting the cardinal rule of financial independence — to pay yourself first every month.

But you can get off that merry-go-round. Once a month, every family should turn the kitchen table into a conference table with everyone attending. A written agenda should be drawn up and everyone should get a copy.

Start with the budget first. How many dollars are available at the start of the month? How many go to pay fixed expenses — rent or home mortgage, auto payment, utilities, groceries — and how much is left over for discretionary spending, saving and investing? I suggest that you account for every dollar every month.

Then, ask your family the same question the president of a corporation asks his or her accountants every month. "What's the bottom line?" Are you showing a profit or are you digging into your savings, running up your charge accounts and showing a loss?

Plan major purchases at your monthly meetings. If there are disputes over what to buy, put it to a vote. It's not only a democratic process, it forces everyone to think before he or she acts.

List purchases by priority, but be realistic. Make sure the first item has an affordable price tag, and pay for it in cash. This will motivate family members to stick to a preset budget on necessities so they can buy some of the luxuries in life.

Next, check your credit card and charge account purchases. Dining out is a great treat, but did you have to spend $40 for dinner for four on a Tuesday evening because no one wanted to cook? Are you putting expensive items on a credit card because you want to "keep up with the Joneses"? Well, the Joneses may be eyeball deep in debt and living beyond their means.

Take the time to explore investments where you are sure your money will grow. For example, if your children are college bound in the next 10 years, it might be wise to buy zero coupon U.S. government bonds that will generate enough cash to pay the tuition when they are redeemed.

Many families never plan on how to pay for their child's college education because they feel it's too far away or that Junior will get a scholarship or student loan. They're in for a big surprise. Government backed student loans have been cut sharply, and grants and scholarships are not as plentiful as they once were — and are often limited to economically disadvantaged youngsters.

Selling to car companies secret to taking top spot in robotics industry

Washington Post News Service

TROY, Mich. — The secret of success in the U.S. robot industry is not too hard to figure out: Sell lots of machines to car companies.

Because the auto industry is far and away the nation's largest user of industrial robots and other automated manufacturing equipment, it is clear that the company that sells the most robots to the biggest auto company will have a pretty good shot at taking over the top spot in robotics.

After just three years in business, GMF Robotics, based in this Detroit suburb, has followed that basic formula with a vengeance. A 50-50 joint venture between General Motors and Fanuc Ltd., a Japanese robotics company, GMF has suddenly emerged as the most dominant robotics company in the United States, almost entirely on the strength of the huge orders that it has been receiving from GM for hundreds of robots that are supposed to help modernize the auto giant's domestic car plants.

Last year, orders from General Motors, which accounted for about 70 percent of GMF's business, helped GMF nearly quadruple its unit sales in one year and vaulted the joint venture into first place in the robot industry for the first time. The company sold 1,208 robots last year, compared with just 332 in its first full year of operations in 1983.

Its dollar sales of $102.8 million were almost double those of the old leader, Cincinnati Milacron, giving GMF a commanding 26 percent of the $395 million robotics market in 1984, according to Prudential-Bache Securities, which compiles authoritative figures for the industry. Cincinnati Milacron is now a distant second with a market share of just 13.3 percent.

"We've grown even faster than we thought we would," GMF President Eric Mittelstadt notes.

GMF has won its leading position by becoming the main robotics supplier to many of GM's biggest projects, including GM's new, high-tech Poletown assembly plant in Detroit and its "Buick City" manufacturing complex in Flint, Mich. And, with GM set to make even larger robot purchases in the near future for its proposed Saturn small-car plant and its ambitious intermediate-size car project known as GM-10, industry observers predict that GMF will become even more dominant, because it has an excellent chance of winning the majority of those orders as well.

Laura Conigliaro, a robotics industry analyst with Prudential-Bache, predicts that GMF's sales will grow by more than 50 percent this year to $155 million and that its share of the fast-growing market will rise to 28.4 percent. Mittelstadt says the company's long-range goals are even more ambitious — to hit the $500 million-sales mark by 1990 while maintaining a market share of at least 27 percent.

Although the joint venture doesn't make public its financial results, GMF turned a profit for the first time last year, earning about $3 million, company officials say.

GMF's payroll, meanwhile, has already jumped from 345 at the start of 1984 to about 520 today, and company officials expect to add 80 more by the end of the year. Most are in professional, marketing and technical positions; almost all of GMF's robots are built by Fanuc in Japan and are then integrated into custom-designed robotics systems by GMF engineers here. GMF only assembles one line of robots in the United States — expensive, complex painter systems for auto plants.

But GMF's instant success at selling robots to GM has prompted GMF's competitors to complain that the automaker has been playing favorites with its fledgling joint venture. GMF denies the charges, but other robot makers say that GMF built up its No. 1 position over the last year or two by taking advantage of the close ties between its executives (many of whom, including Mittelstadt, had transferred from GM when GMF was established in 1982) and the GM officials buying robots for the company's plants.

"They have the inside track at GM because most of the GMF people came from GM and can get audiences with their old buddies," says one disgruntled executive at another major robot maker. He adds that some companies have lost General Motors business to GMF even when they have turned in lower bids than the joint venture.

While legal, such practices would go against GM's initial pledge to treat GMF the same as all other robot suppliers. They also would violate at least the spirit of the automaker's longstanding policy, designed to keep its parts operations cost efficient, of forcing its own components divisions to win GM business through competitive bidding against outside suppliers.

Competing companies have been so irritated by what they see as an "old boy" network in action between GM and GMF that they have complained openly to General Motors. One GM official says that company executives constantly hear such griping at robot trade shows and conferences, even from officials of companies like Cincinnati Milacron and Prab Robots, a smaller company based in Kalamazoo, Mich., that still do quite a bit of work for GM.

It's easy to see why robot makers are so sensitive about what happens at GM. The automaker is already the industry's largest customer, and the robot market inside GM just keeps getting bigger.

Richard C. Beecher, GM's manager of advanced manufacturing engineering and its coordinator of robot purchasing, says GM expects to have about 10,000 robots either in its plants or on order by the end of 1985. He adds that GM's earlier estimate that it would have a total of 20,000 robots in its plants by 1990 has been significantly revised — upward.

As a result, GM dwarfs every other customer of the robotics industry by comparison.

"GM has been buying a lot more robots than we thought they would," Mittelstadt says.

And Conigliaro adds that being successful with the industry's largest customer has already helped GMF build momentum in the marketplace. She says sales to GM are giving GMF the economies of scale and experience necessary to become a top competitor for non-automotive robot business as well.

"Regardless of why they are winning the (GM) business, the point is they are winning it, and so they are benefiting from it," Conigliaro says.

New York Times News Service

Letitia Baldrige remembers them well. The night she neglected to attend a black tie dinner given in her honor because she had written down the wrong date. The day she prepared a five-course meal for a Mormon Cabinet member who could not touch the food because every dish contained alcohol. The time she greeted a top Washington official and forgot his name.

"I've learned from my mistakes," said Baldrige in an interview at her Park Avenue apartment.

She wants others to do as well. This week marks the appearance of "Letitia Baldrige's Complete Guide to Executive Manners," published by Rawson Associates, for $22.95 a copy. It is a book of rules and tips culled from the former White House social secretary's experiences and observations. Based on the theory that good manners are the cornerstone of a successful company, the book is geared toward helping individuals attain poise and confidence within the workplace and outside it.

As a desk-top compendium of social savvy, it covers the basics — how to make an introduction, how to become a good conversationalist, how to be a good host or guest. Several chapters are devoted to quirky matters, such as "Divorce Etiquette in the Office" and "Using Nicknames in the Workplace."

But the book's meat and potatoes stem from classic corporate protocol — conducting annual meetings, evaluating subordinates, entertaining out-of-town clients and making public appearances.

Say, for example, a high-powered executive is invited to a gala fund-raising benefit and asked to sit on the dais, beside the guest of honor. What if the day before the gala, he is called out of town unexpectedly to attend an important sales meeting? Should he send an assistant to take his place at the benefit?

Absolutely not, Baldrige advises. Never send a substitute. It is the host's responsibility to find another guest or to eliminate the place setting. And never fail to let the host know you will not be coming — the empty seat "will look like a front tooth missing in someone's smile."

Doing the "correct" thing in this and other touchy situations is not only polite, Baldrige says — it is good business. "Good manners are cost-effective," she maintains. "They play a major role in helping to generate sales and profits."

Baldrige is eminently qualified to hold forth on acquiring social savvy. For 37 years, she has been polishing the manners of diplomats, corporate big wigs and budding entrepreneurs. A Vassar alumna, she served as an aide to the United States ambassador at the American embassies in Paris and Rome and as Jacqueline Kennedy's social secretary in the White House. Since forming her own public relations and marketing company three years ago, she has served as a consultant to 60 companies, including Hill & Knowlton, Christie's and Mark Cross.

"I've watched the little fish swimming around the big fish. I've seen the politicking that goes on," she said. "I've found that people who are well-mannered and supportive of others tend to rise to the top."

There is another school of thought, however, that dictates that niceties are extraneous in the competitive world of big business. Company officials who scale the corporate ladder, these doubters say, are often ill-mannered and occasionally downright rude.

To which the doyenne of the social graces responds: "For every rude executive who makes it to the top there are nine successful executives with good manners."

Following are exerpts from the book.

Getting Through Doors

Our grandparents were taught that ladies should always walk through the door first. Not so in today's workplace. Common sense and efficiency dictate that whoever arrives at the door first, male or female, should hold it open for the others directly behind and keep it open until all have passed through. However, younger executives should still defer to very senior ones — by managing to get to the door fast, ahead of the others, to hold it open. And the executive the outside people have come to see should act as their host, including opening doors for them and motioning them to walk ahead.

Business and Small Talk

The more at ease you become in conversation, the better at small talk you become. It's a good way to survive common sticky social situations like being seated at dinner between two people whom you have never met, don't care about ever meeting again, and have absolutely nothing in common with except that you happen to work in the same company or industry as one of them.

The following are examples of topics suited to small talk: Landscape gardening, passing the bar exams, Princess Diana, Luciano Pavarotti, the use of hypnotism to stop smoking, robots doing housework, and how to write an on-target resume.

Screening Calls

The best advice one can give on screening calls is not to do it. When your secretary asks a caller, "May I ask what this call is about?" there is always disappointment and often hostility on the other end of the line. The caller feels as though he is deemed inadequate, unimportant, and unworthy of speaking directly to the person seated in splendor behind his executive desk.

Jacket Etiquette

—A double-breasted jacket on a man or woman is meant to be left buttoned and not hang open.

—A man who often works without his jacket in an office should never wear short-sleeved shirts.

—If you are working without your jacket in the office and the big boss comes in, put on your jacket and keep it on for as long as he or she is present.

Designing the Business Card

The standard size of a business card is 3½ inches by 2 inches or variations thereof. Cards may be made in unusual shapes to represent certain types of businesses. (I have seen clever cards in the shape of a hamburger, automobile, French poodle and typewriter.) If you have cards of this nature made for you, remember that what you gain in cleverness, you may lose in one respect: People cannot easily put an odd-shaped card in their wallets or card cases.

Going for Coffee

The "going for coffee syndrome" has been blown out of all proportion.

In my opinion, a secretary should use her precious energy to improve her position with the company in a constructive manner, not waste it fighting requests to serve coffee or tea. However, the boss should go fetch the coffee for everyone on the office staff from time to time, too, just to show that he or she shares responsibility for the comfort as well as the work of the staff.

Congratulating Those You Know Well

... Great news! You are climbing the ladder of success so fast that I'm dizzy looking up and trying to keep you in view. We're all celebrating for you.

... Your new position is certainly a recognition of your contributions to this company during the past few years. No one is more deserving of the promotion and the added responsibilities it brings. We all wish you great luck.

Place Cards

Elsa Maxwell, the late and internationally famous party-giver, once stated that "the most certain route to chaos at a dinner party is not having place cards telling everyone where to go."

A place card, either flat or folded, sits on top of the napkin, on the tablecloth, propped against a glass, or placed above the plate at the place setting.

Invitation to a Single Person

Some single people think it is perfectly all right to show up at a cocktail party with a date (or even with members of their family). If the place where the party is being given is small, the host may have had to pare down his or her guest list carefully. Your showing up with someone who was not invited can cause hostility in your beleaguered host's mind.

Care of an Out-of-Town VIP

Here are some things to remember.

He (or she) should be met at the airport by someone of sufficiently high rank, such as a company vice-president.

The guest should be provided with a complete schedule of events for his stay.

The VIP should be given a carefully annotated guest list for every meeting and every business and social event, so that the VIP will be well-briefed on the cast of characters.

Texans eye Central American nation

DALLAS (AP) — Texas investors are eyeing the tiny Central American nation of Belize, where English is spoken, taxes take long holidays and rich soil, clear water and reggae music abound.

Dozens of Texans are exploring business opportunities in Belize, said Kim Kennedy of the accounting firm of Coopers & Lybrand, which has a contract with the Belize Chamber of Commerce to attract investment.

"There's no other state that's had as many people come into this office to talk about investments," he told the Dallas Morning News.

Belize officials, who say business seems to have picked up since January after a conservative, free enterprise-minded government was elected, agree.

"It is my sense that we're getting more inquiries, a quickening of interest from Americans doing business," said Foreign and Economic Development Minister Dean Barrow. "A lot of the proposals are coming from Texas."

The biggest deal is the recently announced economic development package involving Houston banking and development mogul Walter Mischer, Houston businessman Paul N. Howell and Houston based Coca-Cola Foods.

Belizean businessman Barry Bowen, who is a participant in the project, told The News that the deal could have a net value of $150 million to $200 million.

If so, it could surpass the country's entire 1984 gross domestic product of $154 million.

Belize, only a two-hour flight from Houston, is attractive for a number of reasons, businessmen say.

The country offers foreign investors a "tax holiday" of up to 15 years that can exempt their companies from income taxes and import duties on machinery and equipment.

Belize is also an oasis of calm in a volatile region.

"Belize doesn't want to get involved in Central America," said William Schofield, a spokesman for the U.S. State Department's Office of Central American Affairs.

Bordered by Mexico on the north and west and Guatemala on the south and west, Belize has 250 miles of paved roads, Mayan ruins, the longest barrier reef in the hemisphere and thick jungles.

"It's the closest thing to Gilligan's Island that I've come across," said state Rep. Charles Gandy of Dallas, a frequent visitor.

With 8,867 square miles, Belize is about the size of New Hampshire; 93 percent of its 160,000 inhabitants are literate.

It's largest legal cash crop is sugar. It's largest cash crop is marijuana (U.S. drug officials estimate $55 million last year).

Of the four U.S. citizens arrested in the past seven months for marijuana trafficking, three were Texans, said Belize Police Commissioner Maxwell Samuels.

From 1980 to 1984, legitimate U.S. businesses invested $25 million in Belize, according to Sylvan Roberts, the country's chief statistician.

The News said that public records and interviews with government officials and other sources show that:

—Fort Worth-based Williamson Industries Ltd, makers of Dickies overalls and coveralls, has operated an assembly plant in Belize since 1961 and, with 560 workers, is one of the largest employers in the country. The workers make 65 cents to 95 cents an hour.

—Maya Mariculture of Belize, a shrimp farming operation, is owned by Houston developer Keith Jackson.

—United Farm Industries of Belize Ltd., which plans to plant and process aloe vera, is a joint venture with Pampa, Texas, farmer Thomas Etheredge and Belizean farmers.

Middle managers no longer have essential corporate role

Los Angeles Times —
Washington Post News Service

— American Telephone Telegraph Co. announces layoffs of 24,000 employees at its Informations Systems group — nearly one-third of that number will be management.

— Ford Motor Co. says that it is committed to trimming its management rolls by 9,000 over the next five years.

— Since 1983, Eastman Kodak Co. has reduced its worldwide work force from 136,500 employees to under 124,000 and now is "only hiring for selective functions and specialized skills," and is not adding generally to its management ranks.

These events, multiplied many times throughout American industry, demonstrate the new plight of middle managers in today's cost-conscious, hyper-competitive business environment.

Middle managers, the staff people long thought essential to a smooth-running corporate operation, are becoming increasingly expendable because of the rapid increase in office automation and a new corporate emphasis on pushing decision-making far down into the operations.

There is also a new concept taking hold in business of the value of a manager. Now companies want managers who contribute directly to the value of the enterprise through research, product development, manufacturing and sales. That shift spells trouble for managers whose expertise lies in administration or staff support.

"There is a good bit of cost and overhead in the middle management ranks and its being squeezed from two directions," asserts Quinn Mills, a Harvard Business School professor who consults for International Business Machines Corp., General Motors Co. and Bethlehem Steel Corp.

"The first is the competition both domestically and internationally — companies simply can't afford to carry people who don't directly contribute to the bottom line. The second is that it's become increasingly clear that if they reorganize, they can push middle management functions lower down into the work force and save a good deal of money.

"I think companies are going to continue to seek to reduce the number of employees they have and I don't think we've seen the end of this."

THE PRESSURE ON middle management is further intensified by the mergers and acquisition binge sweeping across the Fortune 500 landscape. When one company buys another, "whole divisions can be divested," said Audrey Freedman, a labor-economist with The Conference Board in New York. "There is an enormous human impact in an acquisition. You have people being divested out of jobs."

But the impact on middle management has perhaps been most brutal on the basic manufacturing industries where the strong dollar, automation, global competition and a sense of desperation have all conspired to redefine both the nature and the number of middle management positions. This has most clearly been the case in the automobile industry, the nation's largest manufacturing enterprise.

For a variety of reasons, the nation's current automotive work force, production and management, will decrease 5 percent per year through 1990, followed by continued but smaller annual declines thereafter, predicts a newly-released Arthur Andersen & Co. study entitled "Cars and Competition."

The idea is to renew a focus on the core elements of the enterprise: design, manufacture and sales and eliminate the managerial redundancy that was once key in assuring top management edicts were followed. Gone are the days of "checkers checking checkers checking checkers" — a favorite top-management description of redundancy in middle-level management ranks.

ALTHOUGH FORD'S cuts are across the board, they reflect the company's willingness to slice middle managment ranks that had once enjoyed relative immunity to layoffs.

At General Motors, the world's largest car company, there have been some complaints by Wall Street analysts who see the company still sporting a bulge of middle managers while its domestic competitors have trimmed down. In 1979, the company had 150,000 white-collar workers in the United States — the same number it has today.

But GM officials and some auto industry analysts say that the figure is misleading. The current white-collar staff level reflects GM's acquisition last year of Dallas-based Electronics Data Systems Corp., a big computer-services firm which has taken over GM's vast internal data processing operations. The extensive shake-up in GM's organizational structure has added to middle management, GM says.

"It is a temporary bloat, and the pressure is on to reduce it," said an auto industry consultant who requested anonymity. "A number of GM departments have business plans to reduce the number of heads in their shops by specific numbers. The pressure is really on."

The capital-intensive, labor intensive and ultra-competitive automobile industry is just the most obvious and dramatic example of the trend. The high technology industries — notably computer and telecommunications companies — have also trimmed their white-collar rolls in the face of recession, competition and the reality that the value added didn't compensate for the cost.

"While it would be inappropriate to single out middle management as the sole target, in the past ... layoffs were more or less limited to the manufacturing types," said Marc Schulman, a computer industry analyst for Salomon Bros.

BUT SCHULMAN stresses that the pattern of hiring in the industry has now changed dramatically.

"What we're now seeing is a greater emphasis in employment growth in areas that produce sales growth — sales, product development and research, et cetera.

"The problem was that lots of these firms grew for many years without any problem and the natural tendency was to get bloated at the staff level."

With the new era of competition and the constant specter of IBM, Schulman notes, "I don't think staff positions will expand as the business recovers."

The employment situation at AT&T Information Systems, the company's computer and telecommunications equipment arm that, confirms that. The group announced it would lay off over 24,000 employees over the next six months — the largest single layoff in the history of AT&T, a firm that took pride in holding onto its work force come what may.

"There's no question that we're emphasizing cost reduction in our staff area to improve our profitability," said Lawrence S. Conterno, AT&T's director of human resources planning, employment systems and minority hiring. "I would guess that other communications companies in the industry will be doing the same thing."

ADMITTEDLY, THE break-up of AT&T created a unique opportunity to examine the organization and consolidate redundant positions. But Conterno, who said there were five internal task forces with missions to deal with the employment situation, stresses a more subtle but important point:

"Now that we have the opportunity to reorganize, do you really need X levels of management below you? How can we re-organize the span of control and skip level reporting in the organization?" he asked.

Caught between a desire to centralize policy and decentralize authority, the company is facing critical questions of just how many managers it needs to effectively compete. The answer clearly is "fewer."

In effect, the classic questions of centralization and decentralization have re-emerged as the business environment has changed. In the past, the lower echelons of the company bore the brunt of the trade-offs. In the 1980s, it appears that the pain of retrenchment cuts even higher

Harvard's Mills predicts that the retail industry will be the next target of middle management retrenchment and the fast-growing financial services industries will be soon to follow.

"The financial services companies seem to be bloated with people and many of them are inefficient and unproductive," he said. "We're going to see major layoffs there one of these years."

Wonderful new life

By JANE ARDMORE
King Features Syndicate

"Bewitched, Bothered and Bewildered," she sings. "The Days of Wine and Roses," "Easy Living." "That's my grandson Nathaniel's favorite song," says Rosemary Clooney, and in that smooth, lyric voice sings along with the record. "Imagine a jazz song for a lullaby! He's 9 months old now, but from the beginning, all I had to do to make that little face light up was sing this song."

We are sitting beside the pool at the same big house she's had for years in Beverly Hills with its five bedrooms and a den and the servants' rooms and the bath house and the pool house and the old-fashioned kitchen where she does the cooking.

"The most wonderful part of it all is that the children grew up here and now the grandchildren come almost every day. We celebrate the birthdays and the holidays," says Ms. Clooney. In the background plays her newly released album, "Rosemary Clooney Sings Ballads," which includes, among her favorites, "Thanks for the Memory" with choruses that have never been done before.

"It was during this tour that I discovered the real difference between my first success and my new success. I no longer have a burning ambition to reach the top. My ambition now is to do as well as I can and enjoy...Each night that I go to work...the joy of being in that dressing room and looking forward to the joy that awaits me when I set foot on that stage. I look outside and see my friends — those people in the audience are my friends — and I feel their warmth immediately. It took me a long time to realize that I deserve this love affair that goes back and forth between me and the audience. Now I accept, enjoy. It's a wonderful new life!"

— Rosemary Clooney

"A very nostalgic song," she says and means it. For this lady's memories run the gamut from glad to sad, from loving to losing and back again. They include the miracle of having landed in the big time with Tony Pastor's band at the age of 19, becoming America's "singing sweetheart" during the '50s, starring in such hit movies as "White Christmas" and "Here Come the Girls," hosting her own network television show. While in private life she was the wife of actor Jose Ferrer and mother of five.

And then, in 1968, after witnessing the assassination of Bobby Kennedy, she suffered a terrifying mental breakdown which landed her in psychiatric ward, pounding the walls.

Ms. Clooney documented it all in her book, "This for Remembrance": the pressure of trying to be the wife she thought Ferrer wanted her to be; feeling constantly torn between her family and her work; making choices which always short-changed someone — usually herself; the addiction to sedatives, the increasing depression, the break-up of her marriage (she and Jose were married and divorced twice); the crack-up. She spent three years in intense analysis, three more in group therapy and then began the long, slow road back.

But today finds her career again moving into high gear, and all she has gone through has only added to the depth and mellow quality of her voice. The new album is moving up on the charts, and her current concert tour has taken her back and forth across the country four times. In November she joins Tony Bennett for more of the same, and Christmas will find her in Vancouver working with a symphony and an 80-piece choir.

In November, a Good Housekeeping special will air on television, recording her activities in concert, at home, with her children. Also, she has just completed her first acting assignment in a long time, with Bonnie Franklin in "Sister Margaret and the Saturday Night Ladies" to be aired on CBS.

"Such a pleasure," Ms. Clooney says. "I enjoyed it totally because of Bonnie. She was so helpful and generous with her time and her talent. She plays the nun who is setting up a half-way house for women from a maximum security prison. I am a parolee who has been totally institutionalized for 17 years — never have been outside the prison, never had a visitor except lawyers."

She continues, "So I come out into the world and meet this nun. There are six of us, all with wonderful stories. Remember when for years the only stories you saw on television were men's stories? Well this is a woman's story from the word 'go.'"

She explains, "I hadn't acted in so long, I went to my son, Miguel — he's the one who used to play drums, now he's an actor, a director and a well-thought-of coach — and asked him for help. 'I'm too close to you, Mama, to really help,' he said, and recommended Frederick Combs, a really fine acting coach. Working with him for six weeks gave me confidence.

"Also, of course, I was able to relate to the character. I have been a prisoner too — not in jail but in a psychiatric hospital, and I remember it vividly. I went through hell, but wonderful things come out of everything; and I really believe that out of chaos you get the strength and self-knowledge that makes joy possible.

"There is no such thing as a life without problems, but I can handle problems now. When I speak of joy — look at my children! I've always been close to them. I've always been myself with them.

"I think a lot of people present one face to their children when in essence they are someone else and behave very differently. My children have always known me."

"I laid it all out for the kids. When I came home from the hospital, I explained that I was going to be in analysis for a long time and I wanted them to know my feelings, that it was important [illegible] priorities straight.

"That meant a lot of communication, but then [illegible] ing their world through [illegible] barriers [illegible]

BETWEEN THE LINES

The Monkees

Q. Whatever happened to The Monkees?

D.B.
Lawrenceville, Ga.

A. Michael Nesmith, 42, was on NBC recently in "Michael Nesmith in Television Parts," an experimental video melange that grew out of his 1981 Grammy-winning video album, "Elephant Parts."

He lives in Carmel, Calif., with his second wife, Kathryn, on a huge inheritance (his mother, Bette, invented the typewriter correction fluid, Liquid Paper, sold it in 1979 for $47 million, and died a year later, leaving her son her sole heir).

Peter Tork, 43, lives in New York where he still performs in clubs and teaches. His post-Monkee years were probably the rockiest. Three failed marriages, drug and drinking problems, a three-month jail stint in 1972 for hashish possession; failed attempts at career comebacks, twice with Monkees-knockoffs. He seems to have pulled his life together now.

Davy Jones, 39, is still performing and is the only member of the band to actively encourage a Monkees reunion. Following the band's breakup, he and Mickey, now Michael, Dolenz went on the road with the Monkees revival tour and then appeared together onstage in London. Lately, though, Davy has been on British TV shows as a solo. He lives with his second wife, Anita, and their daughter in Hampshire.

Michael Dolenz, 39, now lives in England, where he's an award-winning TV producer-director. He didn't do much immediately following the Monkees' breakup, then toured with Davy Jones. In 1977, when offered a chance to direct an episode of a BBC show called "Premiere," he grabbed it and never came back. He lives in Nottinghamshire with his second wife, Trina, and their children.

Q. Can you give me a little background on Chris Sarandon? Is he married? Will he be doing any more movies?

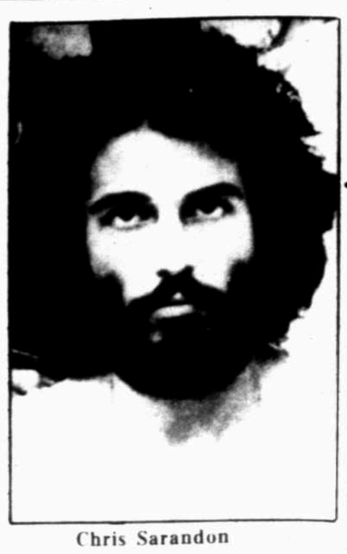

Dorothy Gianacaci
Bordentown, N.J.

A. He's 41, of Greek extraction (the family name was originally Sarondonethes), and from Beckly, W. Va., where his father ran a restaurant, the Eatwell Cafe. He attended West Virginia University and Catholic University in Washington, D.C., where he met and married his ex-wife, Susan (she accidentally became an actress because of him when she accompanied him to an audition and got a part herself).

Chris did get his own roles in the theater in New York and on the soap "The Guiding Light" before making his memorable film debut as Leon, the lover for whom Al Pacino robs a bank to finance his sex-change operation, in "Dog Day Afternoon."

After that film, he made two unfortunate role choices: that of a rapist in the film "Lipstick" and of a man in league with the devil in the film "The Sentinel."

As a result, he received only offers of bizarre roles, so he took off for East Africa for a stretch to cool off. When he returned, he went back to the theater and to an occasional TV show, such as CBS's "A Tale of Two Cities."

Chris Sarandon

Last winter, he got a "normal" role in the movie "Protocol" which he followed with "Fright Night." Lately he's been in production with the NBC TV movie "In the Best Interest of Tracy," co-starring Lindsay Wagner.

He is married to model Lisa Cooper and they have two daughters.

Q. I really liked Powers Boothe in "Red Dawn." Can you tell me where he's from and what he'll be doing next?

Betty Taller
Las Vegas, Nev.

A. He's 35, the son of a cotton farmer from Snyder, Texas, and a graduate of Southwest Texas State University and Southern Methodist University. He moved to Ashland, Ore., to perform with the Oregon Shakespeare Festival before moving to New York in 1974 to get work in the stage.

He did, most notably in the Texas-set play "Lone Star" on Broadway, which led to his casting in the TV series "Skag," TV movie "The Plutonium Incident" and his big break, the TV movie "The Guayana Tragedy," for which he won an Emmy.

Films include "Southern Comfort," with Keith Carradine, the controversial "Cruising" and the current "The Emerald Forest."

Q. I am a true fann of Roy Rogers and Dale Evans. What are they doing now? Will they ever do films again?

Mrs. Angie Osborne
Sanger, Calif.

A. According to a longtime associate of Roy's, it's doubtful that they'll do films again, although they did recently go before the cameras to tape a new series of openings and closings for showings of their old films on the Nashville Network.

They've also made personal appearances, most recently with Billy Graham, and Dale has been writing books — 23 at last count. Roy has been quite occupied with his business ventures: his 562 restaurants, his spokesman position with the company that operates the 1000 Trails recreation vehicle parks (their first resort, the Roy Rogers/Dale Evans Happy Trails Resort, opens in Surprise, Ariz., in January) and his licensing enterprises.

Dale Evans and Roy Rogers

Q. What can you tell me about Raul Julia? I think he's fantastic.

Michelle Maresca
Trenton, N.J.

A. Raul Rafael Carlos Julia y Arcelay is 45, the son of a successful restaurateur in Puerto Rico who decided, while playing the devil in a Catholic school stage production, that he wanted to become an actor.

Later, while appearing in a revue in one of the island's hotels, he was spotted by actor Orson Bean, who encouraged him and suggested that he come to New York. In the mid-'60s, he did and with Bean's help, he got a few roles Off-Broadway. He supported himself, though, by teaching Spanish.

His big break came in 1966 courtesy of Joseph Papp and the New York Shakespeare Festival when he was cast as MacDuff in Papp's Spanish "Macbeth."

Papp has given him good roles ever since, in "As You Like It," "The Threepenny Opera," "The Cherry Orchard," "The Taming of the Shrew" (opposite Meryl Streep), "Othello," "Hamlet" and "Two Gentlemen from Verona" on Broadway.

He's also been on Broadway in "Nine," "Betrayal," "Indians" and the recent "Arms and the Man," as well as in the touring company of "Dracula." His movies include "Tempest," "One from the Heart," and the current "Kiss of the Spider Woman" and "Compromising Positions."

ROSEMARY

"We survived. Miguel (30) is a fine young actor and he is married to the daughter of Netta and Josh Logan, who was with Joe (Jose Ferrer) at Princeton with the Triangle Club. Isn't it wonderful to have in-laws who have been close friends for so many years?

"Gabriel (28) is married to Debbie Boone and they have Jordan who is 5 and the twin baby girls, just 2. Monsita, who looks just like me when I was 27, is married and the mother of Nathaniel; she and her husband and the baby joined me when I was working recently at Tahoe. I'm so proud of them all.

"Maria (29) is the loveliest thing, and doing so well. She designs, actually handpaints ties and scarves with French dyes for her own company, M.P. Ferrer, and has a designer collection showing in New York. She's at home but will probably move to New York soon because of business.

"Rafael (25) is still at home and probably will be here for the duration. He likes the way I cook, his shirts are done just right, and he has his own separate entrance. It's perfect. Right now he's en route to Toronto to read for a part in 'Police Academy III.'"

She reflects, "It was a long comeback trail. Much harder than making it at the beginning. It's amazing how you are written off. I could work, but in small places. When I was in therapy, I couldn't do much traveling anyway. Occasionally I'd get an engagement at Las Vegas, but it would be very, you know, touch and go. I never had the big offers any more. They were afraid to take a chance on someone who had sort of flunked out. And I was not enjoying my work."

"I was getting fat, which was OK; I felt I could hide inside that fat lady. I was executing the songs all right, but it was a totally mechanical performance."

Then several things happened that changed the scene. In 1972, Ms. Clooney went to Denmark to play the Tivoli Gardens in Copenhagen. She found the city delightfully refreshing. It was summertime. Tivoli has a million tiny lights outlining every building, the orchestra was marvelous, the music pavilion extraordinary.

"I suddenly discovered I was getting back that kind of spark, the joy of performing. The audience was enthusiastic. For me it was like coming outdoors after being locked in for a long time. The joy was so great it almost frightened me."

When she returned home and told her doctor, he took her off medication. "I started taking charge of my own life! The weight started peeling off. But I was still having difficulty getting engagements. My manager, Bill Loeb, proved his loyalty, but it wasn't easy for him to convince the club owners I was a good risk.

"Merv Griffin tried to help. He never talked to me openly about what was wrong, but there wasn't a two-month period that he didn't ask me to be on his show."

Rosemary Clooney

And then something even more wonderful happened. A couple of days after Christmas 1973, she was driving down Santa Monica Boulevard when a car pulled alongside her at a red light and a voice out of the past called, "Rosella!"

It was Dante Di Paolo whom she had known when they were both a Paramount 20 years before, before she married Jose Ferrer. He wrote her phone number on the dust of his dashboard, and an hour later they were talking on the phone.

If I had ever doubted the existence of a higher plan, this would have dispelled that doubt, because the joy of rediscovering this kind of a relationship, timed to fill the need I had, the missing element in my life, had to have been planned by God.

Dante walked back into my life and has been there ever since. He made it possible for me to make it again. Without him, well it would have been the whole thing of starting over again, being on the road by yourself, the very situation that brought about my original condition.

"And my association with Bing Crosby changed everything. At Christmas time, 1975, Bing called me, said he was doing a show on March 17 and would I join him? I said of course. I had terminated therapy. I figured this was some sort of benefit show.

"What he didn't tell me was that this was his 50th anniversary show! A big deal. When I discovered that, I panicked. 'Who else is going to be on and how much do you want me to do?' He said, 'Twenty minutes.' I said, 'Twenty minutes? I haven't done that in that kind of venue forever.' And he said, 'Well, I think it's time you got it together, Rosemary.' No sympathy. Just 'Let's get on with it.'

"We chose for a duet 'Slow Boat to China' which we recorded together. That was really the beginning. It all went so well he decided to do the British tour, which was a tremendous success, and of course I was right with him. Like a homecoming. Dante was with us, and his first picture as a kid dancer had been in '38 or '39 with Bing Crosby. Another circle.

"It was during this tour that I discovered the real difference between my first success and my new success. I no longer have a burning ambition to reach the top. My ambition now is to do as well as I can and enjoy.

Ms. Clooney has grown and matured. The death of her beloved sister, Betty, brought her much closer to her brother, Nick, NBC anchorman in Los Angeles. "When we were children in Cincinnati, we dreamed of the places we would visit together. But Nicky and I have now suddenly made those dreams real.

"With his wife, Nina, and Dante, we went to Singapore year before last, and we went on the Orient Express from London to Venice for two weeks. In January, we're going to Paris and then take the Orient Express back to Venice for a week and then down to Rome. When you lose someone you've loved, as Nicky and I loved Betty, you realize how important it is to make the time count.

In memory of Betty, there is now the Betty Clooney Foundation for the Brain Injured (she died of a cerebral hemorrhage). The foundation is dedicated to helping young people with brain injuries by supporting an independent living center so that they may attend Coastline University at Long Beach. The first fund raising concert was at Long Beach Auditorium with Tony Bennett and Ms. Clooney.

Yes. Each night that I go to work I start dressing for the show a couple of hours early, just for the joy of being in that dressing room and looking forward to the joy that awaits me when I set foot on that stage. I look outside and see my friends — those people in the audience are my friends — and I feel their warmth immediately.

It took me a long time to realize that I deserve this love affair that goes back and forth between me and the audience. Now I accept, enjoy. It's a wonderful new life."

Pregnancy never stopped Arnaz from being on stage

Hearst News Service

Lucie Arnaz was once "a tall, skinny, shapeless little girl." She's still tall, but if 125 pounds on a 5-feet-9-inch frame isn't skinny, Clint Eastwood isn't macho.

Somewhere between the ages of 23 and 29, Ms. Arnaz got "chunky — couldn't take off a pound. Of course, I would go on chunky granola and ice cream binges."

But wonder of wonders, Ms. Arnaz's weight problem solved itself. She remarried and started having babies — three of them in five years. And with each baby, Lucille Ball's little girl lost 10 pounds.

Ms. Arnaz now is a model-slim stunner with jet-black hair cut and permed into a smart bob, a classic Ipana smile and saucer-shaped eyes. It's not hard to keep your girlish figure when you're chasing after three little kids who travel with her when she's performing — "I just need more hotel rooms and schlep a lot of stuff" — and dancing, which she does eight times a week as Tommy Tune's co-star in the touring musical, "My One and Only."

Pregnancy never stopped Ms. Arnaz from performing.

"I enjoyed being pregnant," Ms. said Arnaz, the wife of actor Laurence Luckinbill. "I was expecting Simon and performing in 'The Mating Season,' and did 'Whose Life Is It Anyway?' pregnant and opened the Academy Awards when Simon was 5 weeks old."

For Ms. Arnaz, show business and motherhood is a familiar drill. Her mother never stopped being Lucy Ricardo when she was pregnant with Lucie's little brother, Desi. The blessed event, the birth of "Little Ricky," was even written into "I Love Lucy," a first for network TV.

"My mother had this perfect world," said Arnaz. "When I was born, she had the 'Lucy' show. Little did she know how successful that would be. We did move to New York when she did 'Wildcat,' but really, we never had to be uprooted."

Marriage, a family and the demands of Tune's choreography have basically changed the way Ms. Arnaz behaves on the road. It's like being an athlete in training.

REVIEWS

Cline's voice true star of 'Dreams'

By DAVID LEE FORREST

Forrest

While Jessica Lange puts in a good performance in "Sweet Dreams," the true star is the voice of the late Patsy Cline.

"Sweet Dreams," based on the life of the 1950s country singer, must, inevitably, be compared to 1980's "Coal Miner's Daughter" about Loretta Lynn.

Even though "Sweet Dreams" is a good movie, it suffers from the comparison because it lacks the depth and style of "Coal Miner's Daughter."

It's a shame the two films had to be so similar. With just a little more flair and a broader approach, "Sweet Dreams" could have been a great original movie rather than merely looking like a good imitation of another film.

Ms. Lange, nearly unrecognizable under thick, curly locks of dark hair, is excellent. She gleefully projects warmth and energy as a good ol' country girl singer who slowly works her way up from beer joints in Virginia to the stage of the Grand Ole Opry.

She easily out-countrys her farmwife character in "Country" and continues to belie the dumb-blonde tag she was mistakenly labeled with because of her Fay Wray imitation in the 1976 remake of "King Kong."

Ed Harris, still best-known for his role as astronaut John Glenn in 1983's "The Right Stuff," is the main male costar as her second husband, Charlie.

Even though Charlie is depicted as an almost alcoholic, less-than-completely faithful husband with a serious violent streak, Harris still manages to make him seem so charming that it's possible to understand why Patsy would have loved him.

In a strange way, Charlie, despite his bad flaws, is actually an easier character to understand than his wife.

The screenplay occasionally weakens Ms. Lange's otherwise strong depiction of Patsy by skimming over important points. Once, she casually suggests that her father sexually abused her. Despite how critical this could have been in shaping her personality, the film never mentions it again.

The story is also limited a bit too tightly to Patsy's marriage to Charlie. Particularly for those viewers who aren't well acquainted with her career and music, the movie could have told much more about the professional struggles she faced.

The scope of Patsy's ambitions is only hinted at when her manager, played by David Clennon, asks her, "You want to be Kitty Wells, right?" and she quickly replies, "Hell no, I want to be Hank Williams."

The film has also received a bit of criticism for alleged inaccuracies. The real-life Charlie Dick has been quoted by the Los Angeles Times as saying, "I don't think anything in there is a total lie; they just altered the sequence of events and stretched the hell out of it, that's all."

Patsy's mother, Hilda Hensley — who is played by Ann Wedgworth in a wonderfully lively supporting role — has reportedly refused to comment the film at all.

One thing that definitely rings true in "Sweet Dreams" is Patsy's voice. Ms. Lange lip-synchs nicely, but it's the original recordings of Patsy's singing that the audience hears. Some of the instrumental music has been remixed for better sound, but most of the songs have not been altered.

Despite the film's weak points, Patsy's voice nearly brings her "Sweet Dreams" to life.

"Sweet Dreams," rated PG-13 for strong language, some sexual innuendo and brief scenes of domestic violence, is now showing at the North Park Cinemas.

'Marie' good, could have been better

"Marie" stacks the deck in favor of its title character, played by Sissy Spacek, at the very beginning.

We first see her as a young wife and mother who is beaten by her abusive husband. Then we jump ahead several years, after she has left her husband and gone back to college, just in time to see her youngest son almost choke himself to death on a pistachio shell.

Only after it has gotten all of this out of the way, does the movie get on with the main story, a fact-based — although probably not completely accurate — account of Marie Ragghianti's fight against corruption in Tennessee during the administration of former Gov. Ray Blanton, who is now serving a three-year sentence for extortion and conspiring to sell liquor licenses.

Back in 1976, as the first woman to head Tennessee's Board of Pardons and Paroles, Marie very slowly ran afoul of Blanton's attempts to sell pardons.

Believing that, as Edmund Burke once wrote, "evil flourishes when good men do nothing," Marie informs the FBI of her suspicions — although, oddly, she fails to publicly blow the whistle on him and his cohorts.

In many respects, "Marie" is a good, solid film. It does give a nice feel for how casual crime could slowly creep into a state government, although it doesn't go into the root causes of this problem.

The acting is also rock solid. Spacek has been a superb actress, all the way from the crazed teens in "Badlands" and "Carrie" on up to the mature women of "Coal Miner's Daughter" and "The River."

In "Marie," when Spacek's character says, "If they think I'm a cupcake, they've got another thing coming," you believe her.

Jeff Daniels, who played Debra Winger's husband in "Terms of Endearment," also stands out in "Marie," by giving a very convincing protrayal of a typically unctuous bureaucrat.

One of the few big surprises in this film is Fred Thompson, Marie Ragghianti's real-life lawyer, who plays himself. It's not a superspectacular performance, but it is a peculiarly clever bit of casting since, naturally, no one else likely could play Thompson as well as Thompson himself.

"Marie" does have some serious flaws, however. The screenplay glosses over a lot of crucial points about the parole-for-payola scheme; at times it's difficult to be sure who's doing what for — or to — whom.

Other than hints of simple greed, none of the politician's motivations are explained, which makes even high-level government corruption seem rather boring.

Finally, unlike the comparable "Silkwood," this film lacks much tension. It's a real shame that the most suspenseful moments in a social injustice drama like "Marie" involve a kid's breathing difficulties.

"Marie," rated PG-13 for some strong language and some brief violence, is now showing at the Midland Park Mall Cinemas.

David Lee Forrest is film critic of the Reporter-Telegram.

ENTERTAINMENT IN BRIEF

Dyke to address club

Artist Larry Dyke will be the guest speaker at 7 p.m. Nov. 4 at the Hilton Hotel, Lorraine Street and Wall Avenue, for the Midland Christian's Women's Club Guest Night Dinner.

"His work inspires reflection and brings a welcome peace to a frequently turbulent world," says Janet McCall, chairman of Midland Christian Women's Club. Dyke's trademark is the Scripture passage that accompanies each of his works.

In 1982, during a private audience, he was commissioned by Pope John Paul II to produce an original painting to hang in the vatican. In 1984, Dyke presented "Sharing the Faith" to the pontiff during a special audience in Rome. The painting depicts two priests, one of whom bears the countenance of Pope John Paul II, in front of one of this country's earliest missions. This commissioned work makes Dyke one of the few living American artists whose work is included in the art collection at the Vatican.

Tickets, priced at $12.50, are available at Midland Art Gallery, 1028 Andrews Highway, Frames 'N Things, North Park Mall, or by calling 686-9277.

Raffin likes character, but won't see movie

LOS ANGELES (AP) — It's hard to imagine the willowy, wholesome, sweet-faced Deborah Raffin paired with the hard-bitten Charles Bronson, the man who wrote the book on revenge movies. But it happened. They appear together in "Death Wish 3."

At her tasteful home above Coldwater Canyon, Miss Raffin talked about her reasons for appearing in "Death Wish 3."

"I've known (director) Michael Winner for a long time. We did a film together, 'The Sentinel,' and I enjoy working with him. I've known Charlie and Jill (Ireland) socially; they used to have a home near our home in Vermont," she said.

"I liked the character I was to play, a public defender. As with all my roles, I did research, following a public defender around as she practiced her profession in Los Angeles. I had great admiration for her. She must push aside her own feelings, emotions and judgments to represent the person assigned to her."

Miss Raffin said she probably won't see "Death Wish 3" because she doesn't like violence. "I may be the only person in town who hasn't seen 'Rambo.' It's just not my cup of tea."

The new film again casts Bronson as architect Paul Kersey. When he discovers a friend's body in a New York apartment, he is arrested on suspicion of murder. A police officer recognizes the famed vigilante and enlists him to help clean up the neighborhood, a plot turn that will no doubt astonish the New York Police Department.

The vigilantism of Paul Kersey has come under criticism, especially in the aftermath of the Bernard Goetz case in New York in which Goetz was charged with shooting what he thought were would-be muggers in a subway train. The case is pending.

"If you look at it intellectually, you certainly can't condone people taking the law into their own hands," she said. "But you can also feel compassion for people's anger when they or someone they love are victimized and the criminals are not brought to justice."

Ms. Raffin said Bronson was very shy, "desperately shy."

"I can sympathize with that. I'm not extroverted myself, and I can be shy around people I don't know. I can see how Charlie is troubled by the pressures of being a star."

Miss Raffin and her manager-husband, Michael Viner, plan to make their fifth visit to China in as many years. They have taken contingents of film people to exchange views and expertise with Chinese movie makers. Through their production company, Dove, Inc., the Viners have sold American films for release in China, and they brought the much-praised "My Memories of Old Beijing" to the United States.

"I'm hoping that the Chinese will agree to a co-production with America," the actress said. "The Chinese are very bright and astute, and they want their artists and technicians to be equally involved."

Vincent Spano trying to overcome image problems

NEW YORK (AP) — Vincent Spano enters the room flashing a warm smile that almost makes one forget that he's over an hour late.

However, the smile soon fades as the young star of "Alphabet City," "Baby It's You" and "Rumblefish" talks of his battle to overcome serious image problems.

"My main problem is the media. When you're young, attractive and make a movie opposite a beautiful woman right away they want to label you a sex symbol with no regard for whether or not you can act," he said in an interview.

The 22-year-old actor, who grew up in New York and attended the prestigious Stuyvesant High School, said: "I'm from a close knit Italian family, the values that were stressed made me want to be a good actor not a sex symbol."

However, Spano's early roles helped to shape his image. In "Baby It's You" he played a high school Don Juan nicknamed "The Sheik."

Spano currently appears as the lovelorn graduate assistant, Boris Lafkin, in "Creator." He co-stars with Peter O'Toole and Mariel Hemingway.

"The hardest part about making this film was trying to develop a peer relationship with the greatest actor I've ever worked with; I didn't know whether to call him Peter or Mr. O'Toole," Spano said. "I actually watched every one of his old movies on video to familiarize myself with him before we met."

As Lafkin, Spano plays a somewhat sappy character pining away for his dying girlfriend while dealing with an eccentric professor (O'Toole) who is obsessed with cloning his long-dead wife.

"This is certainly my best part," said Spano. "'Creator' is a very special film with its own little heart beating inside it."

Spano also complains of being considered a newcomer by his peers. He has been on the stage since he was 14. In 1977, he landed the part of Steve in a Broadway production of "The Shadow Box," which won the Tony Award for best play and best director.

At 16, he starred in his first feature film, "The Double McGuffin," with Ernest Borgnine and Elke Sommer. He went on to do "Over the Edge" that same year, which marked the theatrical debut of his close friend, Matt Dillon.

Televison offers followed immediately. He accepted the role of Jackie Peterson on the CBS soap opera, "Search for Tomorrow." But Spano soon grew tired of the rigorous demands of a daytime drama and returned to the screen.

MIDLAND COMMUNITY THEATRE announces

AUDITIONS SET FOR HARVEY

October 27 & 28

HARVEY has become an American theatre classic. Mary Chase's comic creation of Elwood P. Dowd and his best friend, Harvey, confound and confuse friends and relatives, but delight audiences everywhere. This is due simply to the fact that Harvey is an invisible six-foot tall white rabbit. The script calls for five women and seven men. Ages range for both sexes from twenty to seventy, so there should be a part for nearly anyone. Auditions will be held October 27th and 28th in the Redfern Room at 7:30 P.M. Scripts may be checked out in the business office.

'Caged bird' realizes potential for being free

By SHIRLEY YASKIN
King Features Syndicate

She wrote in her journal: "I was a black baby delivered to the doorstep in a brown paper bag; I was raised by a loving stepmother. She was a real mama to me and now she's gone and I feel so alone."

Her coal-black eyes would stare back at me in class as we read Maya Angelou's "I Know Why the Caged Bird Sings." She nodded, silently acknowledging an understanding of the black poet's feelings. Myra, parodying Angelou's description of a black girl, described herself as caramel and chocolate, dripping with a center of love.

"I feel like a caged bird," she once said to me, when she felt more comfortable.

"Since mama died I feel so alone," she explained. The 16-year-old was living with a maiden aunt, who worried about Myra's conversations with her boyfriend, James, and who kept encouraging her to study harder to go on to college. Myra (not her real name) felt she needed the freedom to move out of her aunt's charge, maybe join the Air Force and symbolically soar like an eagle.

Often she stopped by at lunch to say hello and touch base, but this particular noontime she handed me a clipping from the newspaper.

"Read this," she instructed. "It's about my sister."

I thought it might be a story about an award that "Little Red" had received; Myra had often talked about her favorite sibling. Instead, the clipping announced the little girl's death.

"Bad morning," she later wrote in her journal. "I can't stop crying. Yesterday my little sister got shot in the chest and she died instantly. She and her boyfriend were playing with a gun and they thought there were no bullets in it. So he pointed it at her chest and the gun went off and ripped open her chest. I cannot express my unhappiness in words."

With the loss of her mother and sister, Myra was lost. "It seems to me God has forsaken me and left me in the cold. Why?" she wrote.

Several students and teachers were planning a trip to Italy during the vacation months. One father offered to finance the trip for a child who could not afford to go.

I suggested Myra. Perhaps she could forget her troubles somewhere on the other side of the world. Maybe the trip would motivate her to go to college and reach out for the happiness she desperately sought.

"I'm not sure I deserve to go," she confessed a few weeks before they were to leave. "I'm not as good a person as you think. Sometimes I fight, physically fight, with my friends. I get so angry."

And I assured her she had every right to be angry. She needed to channel her anger in another way. Writing in her journal might help; getting more involved in school and service organizations was another way. And I assured her she had every right to enjoy the trip.

So she joined the others at the Coliseum, made wishes in the Trevi fountain and marveled at the statue of David. Sometimes she didn't feel part of the group. Sometimes she went off alone.

"I had a wonderful time," she wrote her benefactor. "It changed my life."

She thanked me through a note. "I'm going to Florida State University in the fall. You've changed my life and I'm going to work hard. I love you. Suddenly, this caged bird is going to sing."

Number of female college presidents increasing

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the third of a four-part series examining aspects of college education.

By SUSAN CRAIN BAKOS

The zenith of the modern women's movement in the '70s coincided with the highest level of college-age baby boomers like two lines peaking on a graph. It was a very good time for women on campus, particularly women students. Women's studies courses were developed and women's centers were opened even on conservative campuses. Title IX, the legislation which bars sex discrimination in educational institutions, was taken seriously.

Times have changed, women's studies programs and women's centers have been the victim of political fallout on many campuses.

It's only fair to point out many educators, including women, feel the women's studies loss is not a great one. Miriam Burns, former professor of law, says bluntly, "They don't help women get ahead. And they don't really win converts to feminism, since only feminists sign up for them."

Still, Ms. Burns is critical of the "the manner in which they're being made to disappear from curricula."

In the spring of '82, California's Eagle Forum (Phyllis Schlafly's national organization) was successful in eliminating the women's studies program at the University of California in Long Beach — because the Eagles felt the course promoted "lesbian values" rather than "traditional American values."

Nationwide, conservatives have had other, if less dramatic, victories.

And women's studies aren't the only casualties of the new conservatism. Title IX is being challenged in the Supreme Court by a Pennsylvania college. Magazines geared to young women have been running features on the increasing problem of campus sexual harassment — when male professors force their attentions on young female students.

A casual glance at some of these headlines might lead one to believe the role of women on campus is shrinking at the same pace as the nation's population of 18-year-olds.

That isn't altogether true.

Older women students are being actively courted by many institutions now. Their growing importance to those schools is bound to be reflected in curriculum and policy decisions made in the '80s. While women professors still have more trouble getting tenure than men — and while the average woman still earns $5,000 or 18.5 percent less than the average male professor — some of these women have taken their schools to court and won.

Perhaps the most encouraging sign for women, whether students, professors or administrators, is this: The number of women college presidents across the country has almost doubled since 1975, according to the American Council on Education.

For the first time in history, women have headed all of the elite Seven Sisters schools: Barnard, Bryn Mawr, Smith, Vassar, Radcliffe, Mount Holyoke and Wellesley.

"The more women in power, the closer we are to realizing what would be the Utopian dream of all scholars: an academia in which all persons, male and female, are truly equal," Ms. Burns says.

Obviously she doesn't expect "true equality" soon. She left the classroom for private practice.

The Women's College Coalition did a survey and discovered that most women college presidents, whether male or female, were college teachers first. And women were "significantly more likely" than men to have been teaching when they were chosen for the presidency. Nannerl Keohane, president of Wellesley College in Massachusetts, was teaching full-time at Stanford University in California when she was offered her present job.

But, according to Debra K., a professor of English literature, who has presidential aspirations, teaching isn't a guaranteed path to power. You can't even count on it leading to tenure anymore.

Only 50 percent of women teachers have tenure, as compared to 70 percent of men.

Debra says, "The figure can be explained in part by the fact that we've been in the field in sizable numbers for a shorter duration of time than men have. In recent years tenure is harder to get for men and women.

"So there's a whole new group of young academics, labeled gypsy scholars, precisely because they don't have tenure. They travel from one appointment to another, filling in a year at one school when enrollment is up, moving to the next place for a year when someone is on sabbatical."

While Debra does have tenure, she sees as "slight" her chances of being made chairman of the department, an administrative position representing an upward move. She teaches in a small church-affiliated college where the politics are "conservative." Men are usually department heads. The exceptions are older, much older, women, or "safe" departments, like elementary ed.

Debra believes she will need some administrative credentials in addition to her academic ones if she is ever going to become a college president. Why not look for a job at a school which is more amenable to moving women up?

"It's almost impossible for tenured professors to move now," she says. "We're in a position a colleague recently described as a gridlock. There just aren't any openings, and ironically the ones that do exist are for people who have had some administrative duties in addition to teaching responsibilities."

She's volunteering now for department assignments which will give her administrative experience to enliven her resume. Her publications list is already recognized as the most impressive in the department. But she doesn't plan "any direct action" if, once again, she is bypassed for a chair when the position is open next year.

Women professors protesting sex discrimination in salaries or tenure appointments do not always win. The recent court rulings in different states have been conflicting and confusing. Recently a court upheld the University of Indiana when they refused to disclose the individual votes of a tenure committee in a suit brought by a woman professor.

In a similar case in Georgia, the male professor who refused to disclose his vote was jailed.

"The standards in higher education are more subjective than in the corporate world," says lawyer Andrew J. Boswell. "Many courts are reluctant to rule on the questions of academic freedom. Now, of course, the legal climate is not as favorable to women and minorities as it was a few years ago.

"The laws may not have changed, but the attitudes of the judges have."

Debra says, "Women who aren't being promoted in the corporate world have more recourse than we do — and more options for seeking other employment. Often we are stuck. We can lose even if we win a court case."

One of the most famous examples of losing while winning is Shyamala Rajender, a chemistry professor, who challenged the University of Minnesota several years ago when she was denied tenure. Her victory led to widespread reform in the school's tenure system. But she had to leave the university.

Now she works as a patent lawyer in California because she couldn't find another position in academia. No one would hire her.

"Class-action participants fare better than individuals," Boswell says. "A university is not likely to fire 25 women who sue them for equal pay. But I don't think you'll see any of those 25 being made president either."

No one really believes the way to the top is a bulldozed path, created by forcing universities to grant tenure, equal pay or administrative assignments to women.

The American Council on Education's Office of Women in Higher Education recognizes that academic women need help in moving up.

A spokeswoman for the council says, "We are trying to expand the pool of women who will be considered for leadership positions when they come open. The council's Fellow Program in Academic Administration helps."

Fellows serve for a year in prestigious administrative positions. The success rate of the program is high: 75 of 748 women who've taken part since 1965 have become presidents; 450 have become vice-presidents, deans or other senior administrators.

By the time they reach the level of forum participation, however, they already have, or don't have, some of the essential qualifications for becoming a college president.

Most search committees are looking for outstanding scholars who have earned graduate degrees from elite universities and have published works which have received considerable academic acclaim. Ivy League schools usually select Ivy League alumnae — and preferably one of their own.

Still, there's more to becoming a college president than being a graduate of the right school.

Administrators today are faced with a new set of problems; and the root of them is money.

Enrollments are declining; expenses are going up. Tuition must be raised, which threatens enrollments again. A college president is part business manager and fund raiser. She has to be very good at public relations — to attract wealthy students and their families, and wealthy donors.

That's why administrative skills have become important to search committees.

According to Donald Metzger, a former provost, "An increasingly important route to the top for men or women will be through the office of director of development. Someone with fund-raising skills who does well in this job will probably find herself tapped for the presidency of a college someday."

Patti McGill Peterson, president of Wells College in Aurora, N.Y., just laughs when asked if financial acumen was one reason behind her selection. She's involved now in a $7 million fund-raising campaign. Peterson, who did her post-graduate work at Harvard, had an outstanding combination of academic and administrative credentials.

She was serving as vice president for academic services and planning at the State University of New York in Oswego when she was selected as Wells' president in 1980.

She says, "A college president has to be a good business manager in the '80s. I won't let the financial part of the job consume all of my time, but I would not be honest if I said it wasn't a crucial issue."

Some observers believe that any college president, male or female, will ultimately be judged a success or a failure on this one "crucial issue" alone.

"In the '60s, one was judged on the ability to deal with student unrest," Metzger says. "Everything else was secondary. Well, money is that issue for the '80s. And it is even more important, a true life-or-death situation.

"The better a president is at fund-raising, the more power she will have. The old phrase, money is power, was never more appropriate."

He thinks women will be coming to the collegiate presidency in growing numbers in the '80s — just when the job is getting tougher.

Hannah Holborn Gray, president of the University of Chicago, one of the very few women to head a large nonsectarian coeducational institution, says women will be able to handle the challenge.

Ms. Gray, whose influence is felt well beyond her academic world, sits on several elite boards, including the Pulitzer Prize Board. But she insists, "It's easier to be a woman at the top than in the teaching levels. If a woman is strong enough to make it to the presidency, then she will be strong enough to handle the job."

Is College Worth the Cost?

Perhaps the most encouraging sign for women, whether students, professors or administrators, is this: The number of women college presidents across the country has almost doubled since 1975, according to the American Council on Education.

West leads the queen of clubs against four spades. — J.G., New Haven, Conn.

A. — This one has been around for a while. Cover the queen of clubs with the king and, when East ruffs, dump the ace of clubs from hand! Win any return, draw trumps and then strip West of his exit cards by cashing the ace-king of hearts and ace of diamonds. Now throw West on lead with a club.

West wins and has nothing but clubs to lead. Don't ruff. Discard a diamond from dummy and a heart from your hand. On the next club lead, discard dummy's remaining diamond while ruffing in hand. You can now crossruff your red-suit losers. You make the contract by turning two winning club tricks into three losers!

This play has, over the years, been credited to many players as having been found at the table. Believe them if you like, but we'd rather trust a used car salesman.

Q. — When using the Stayman convention, what do you respond when you hold four cards in each major suit? — L.D., Baton Rouge, La.

A. — There is unanimity only if you are playing a weak no trump. Then it is incumbent on you to show hearts first, because partner might be looking for a cheap get-out.

If you play strong no trumps, there are several schools of thought. In his book, Stayman says you should bid spades first. A number of experts maintain you should bid hearts first. The minority take a position that makes a considerable amount of sense to these tired ears: Bid your stronger major first.

It makes little difference which method you play. What is important is that you have a firm partnership agreement on the matter, so that, when you make a bid, partner can draw the negative inferences, as well as positive assumptions from your action. And once you have an agreement, abide by it for the sake of partnership harmony.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

Monday, October 28, 1985

YOUR BIRTHDAY TODAY: Handle business transactions with greater finesse and you will see a wonderful financial turnaround. A dramatic rise in profits is part of the picture. A romantic commitment must be total, or love will go out the window. Do not mistake infatuation for the real thing! Your feelings for member of opposite sex will intensify over the winter holidays. Highly creative and ambitious, you will find your best fulfillment in your work.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): There are things you can do to improve your work record before an important decision is made. Listen to the experts. Romantic partner makes a request you should honor.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Learn how to dress for success. An improvement in your personal appearance could win you that special job. Woman power affects the outcome of a competition. Travel is best postponed.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Do whatever you can to brighten an older person's day. A part-time relationship could grow into something more permanent. Romance soars to new heights this evening. Be sensitive to partner's mood.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You remain strong when other people panic. Someone influential is very impressed by your performance. Trust your intuition. The colors red and purple could have special significance now.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not despair. Time and the facts are on your side! Financial pressures subside if you continue to act in a responsible way. Help a fledgling employee learn the ropes.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Today's events offer you a new opportunity and hope. Introduce a young person to someone who will be a good influence. A patient attitude and hard work help you solve a complex problem.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): What appears to be a negative development could work to your advantage. Refuse to be rushed into making a decision. There are alternatives. Play a waiting game and collect more information.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Your powers of persuasion are truly amazing today. Be careful not to get carried away by your influence. The sooner you start a new project the better. Choose your allies with care.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Facing reality now will smooth your path in the future. It is not a moment too soon to act on a financial matter! A romantic pursuit may be in vain.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Open your eyes to what is happening in your office. You may want the advice of someone at a distance. Believe in yourself and there is no limit to what you can accomplish.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): If romantic partner blows both hot and cool, back off for a while. Attention to detail is essential if you are to succeed in business. A flight of fancy triggers an idea.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Look for the good and you will find it. A word from someone special sends your spirits soaring! Be specific when setting new goals. Strong-minded people usually get their way.

"The Weight Loss Professionals"
Serving the Permian Basin Since 1977

I kept gaining and losing the same 20 pounds. Then I said, this time it's going to be different.

I tried every pill, every gimmick to lose weight. Only to feel miserable when I gained it all back. Finally, I said no, never again—this time I'm going to Diet Center. I lost the weight, without hunger. And I'm keeping it off.
My only regret?
Not going sooner!

Arabian laws strict on women's rights

Copley News Service

The 1984 Summer Olympics from Los Angeles came across loud and clear on television, but something was missing: The women's events had been edited out.

The Wall Street Journal, and Time and Newsweek magazines looked about the same as always, too — except pictures of women in bathing suits or other revealing attire had been censored.

Out on the streets, women were prohibited from going anyplace alone, were never allowed to drive an automobile and could never sit in the front seat with a man when they did ride in a car.

To the 10.4 million people living in the Middle East kingdom of Saudi Arabia — seat of the Islamic religion, largest exporter of petroleum and oil in the world and richest country on Earth in terms of reserves of wealth — these are simply the facts of everyday life. In their homeland, under Islamic code, women have an inferior legal status.

Families changing, according to survey

NEW YORK (AP) — Nearly one-fourth of all Americans now live in single-person households, says a New York marketing organization reporting on a national survey.

Historically, from the 1930s through the early 1970s, the typical American family was made up of a working husband, housewife and two children, according to the Howard-Marlboro Group.

But now, the survey indicated, about one-third of all households include working couples, with the remainder of the population composed of single parents, impromptu gatherings of unrelated adults or people living in institutions.

Psychologist says working women often 'burn out'

Hearst News Service

"Those who believe they can balance work, love, children, friends and families will surely destroy themselves trying," says Herbert J. Freudenberger, author of a new book, "Women's Burnout." "This isn't meant to be a sexist remark, but in my 30 years as a psychoanalyst and psychologist I've seen far too many who have tried to do just that, only to burn out, sometimes with disastrous results.

"Women," he said, "are historically nurturers used to giving, doing and being for others. Men are not. Women face a biological time clock, with all the pressures that can bring; men don't. Women feel a great sense of responsibility for the home, while men traditionally put all their energies into their work. And women feel a sense of guilt about leaving their children at home, which men do not."

Secretary ends up in White House

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

WASHINGTON — Fifteen years ago, Linda Faulkner was receiving the kind of liberal arts education common for women who expected to graduate to wife and motherhood.

Ten years ago, she was a secretary in an office.

Eight years ago came the turning point: Faulkner took vocational testing and decided to apply herself to her career. Within three years, she became deputy social secretary of the White House; last week, she became social secretary. Her duties: conferring almost daily with first lady Nancy Reagan, planning state dinners and official social functions, making guest lists, ordering flowers and food.

Faulkner, 35, says that it is not the life she envisioned. "I wanted to marry and have children, that's what women were reared to plan on when I was going to school. I remember going to my college adviser when I was having a traumatic time making a decision about my major: whether it should be history or philosophy. I'll never forget what he told me. 'My dear, it doesn't really matter.'

She chose philosophy, which, she said, "doesn't prepare you for anything. I didn't think it would matter because I would eventually get married. I certainly didn't plan on being social secretary to the White House."

So what propelled Faulkner? "After I graduated from college, until I was 27, I did not take my career seriously. I made a conscious decision to work hard and give as much effort as it took. From that point on, things began to turn for me."

After she was contacted by the White House about the job of deputy social secretary, Faulkner had two interviews with Reynolds and then one with Nancy Reagan. "Nancy Reynolds was terribly down to earth and put me at ease," Faulkner said, adding that she did not feel hopeful, even when she was asked a couple of weeks later to come back for the visit with Nancy Reagan.

Women from Harvard Business School class of 1975 researched

Hearst News Service

What's it going to be, a job at the top or a family?

The dilemma businesswomen faced in the 1970s — and still face — has been resolved. If you have the brains, the savvy and enough drive, it's possible to do "it all."

That's one discovery made by Liz Roman Gallese during her research into the lives and loves of the women of Harvard Business School's class of '75. Gallese reports on 82 of the 88 women in her book "Women Like Us."

Gallese has other observations after two years of delving into her subjects' professional and personal lives.

— The most important ingredients in corporate success are drive and an almost fanatic loyalty. "You have to want it (success) above almost anything else. And you not only have to embrace the tenets of a particular organization, you have to be a cheerleader for that organization," Gallese believes.

— Contrary to expectations, Gallese found no correlation between women managers and their marital status in the group she surveyed. Successful managers were as apt to be married as single; as apt to come from a poor background as a rich one; as apt to come from the bottom of their class as the top.

— One key decision is selecting the right industry and the right company. Some companies promote women, others do not. Young firms and rapidly expanding industries are usually best. "There isn't time or space for discrimination."

Meet J. Robert Anderson, philanthropist.

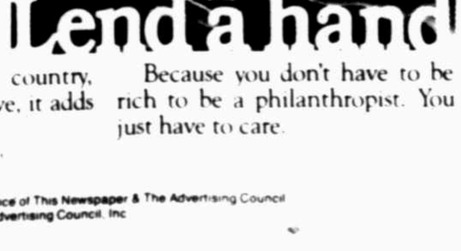

He's not a millionaire. In fact, he's not even rich. But he gives.

Most of the giving in this country doesn't come from the wealthy. Almost half of it comes from people who earn less than $20,000 a year. Everyday, ordinary people. Like the guy down the street. Or your next-door neighbor. Or 100 million others who, every year, give unselfishly just to help people.

And while those who give may sometimes go unnoticed, their contributions don't. Because in this country, when a lot of people give, it adds up to a lot.

It helps fund important research. It helps run community church programs. It helps support local charities. It helps people out.

There are so many things in this country that could use your hand. Your time, your talents, your money. What you give isn't so important. That you do give is.

Because you don't have to be rich to be a philanthropist. You just have to care.

Female writers polled

WASHINGTON (AP) — A survey of University of Maryland journalism graduates found that most female journalists earn lower salaries than their male colleagues and have less job satisfaction, researchers said Monday.

The report — based on interviews with Maryland journalism graduates from 1951 to 1981 — said nearly 75 percent of the male journalists surveyed were "extremely" or "very" satisfied with their jobs, compared with 63 percent of the women.

Ninety-five percent of those earning annual salaries over $45,000 were men, 70 percent with incomes between $35,000 and $45,000 were men, and 61 percent of journalists making $25,000 to $35,000 were men, the survey said.

In the lower ranges, 64 percent of journalists earning $15,000 to $25,000 were women, and 77 percent earning $10,000 to $15,000 were women.

Suffragist fought for vote

Los Angeles Times-
Washington Post News Service

DALLAS — The news greeted the nation in late August 1920: At 4 a.m. on Aug. 26, Tennessee had been certified as last state to ratify the 19th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. More than 50 years after Susan B. Anthony began her lifelong struggle for women's suffrage, women had received the right to vote.

Myrtle Bales Bulkley, now 86, remembers reading about the amendment's passage in the newspaper. But she also remembers the years of struggle just before its passage, when she was a student at Iowa State Teachers' College working with other young women to lobby for suffrage. She was a bright, ambitious young woman from the Iowa countryside who was determined to live her life her own way, regardless of what other people thought. She and her college friends gave talks, made posters and wrote letters in favor of suffrage.

Bulkley admits her grass-roots role was small compared with that of the suffragist leaders who, dressed in white, marched in front of the White House and were carted off to jail for their efforts. Still, it was women like Bulkley who carried the banner of suffrage to the cities and small towns across the country.

Today, she is one of the country's last surviving suffragists, a living link with history.

"Before the 1920s, girls were only in the background," says Bulkley, who in 1972 moved from New York to Dallas. "You were just dragged along in the background like a little nobody, a little know-nothing. I don't know if it came from my mother or my father, but I just had the feeling that if something needed to be done, I'd do it.

"I told other girls that everybody in the world has the right to do as they please, and if you can go somewhere in life, you ought to do it. At the time, it seemed like I was just making stuff up. But it was true, wasn't it? It's just ordinary common sense to me."

Book discusses female executives

Hearst News Service

Female executives rate male chauvinism as the major obstacle blocking their rise in the business world.

Male executives say, "Sure, there is some male chauvinism, but women don't really have a professional attitude, the education, training and experience."

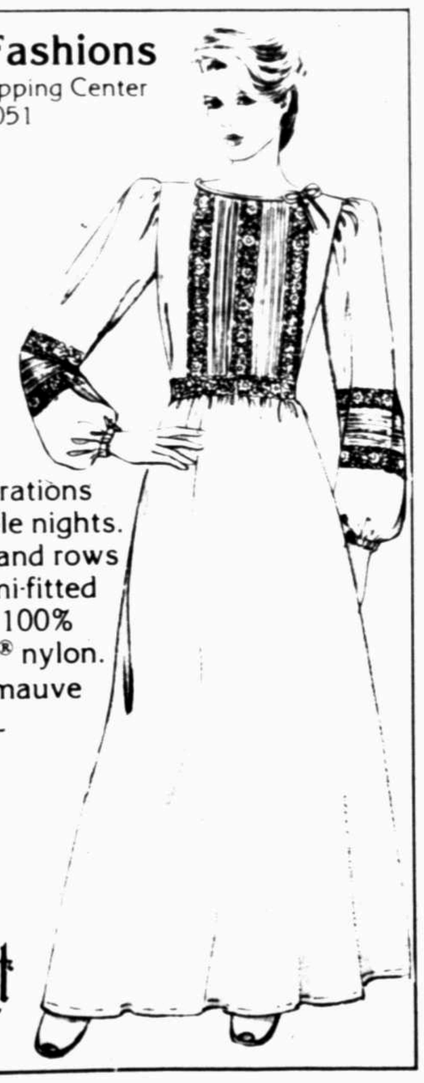

Researcher Edith L. Highman queried top men and women in major firms across the country for their feelings on the factors that help or hurt a woman's corporate ladder climb. Their answers are the basis of her new book, "The Organization Woman."

When good moms have bad days, kids can suffer.

The phone keeps ringing. The dishwasher won't work. You've got a splitting headache. And now the baby's crying her head off in the back bedroom. You drop a dish, you bump your elbow, the crying gets louder... and suddenly you're headed for the baby determined to shut her up. Stop.

Take time out.

Sit down, breathe deeply, count to ten very slowly. If the anger's still there, punch a pillow. Take a hot bath or a cold shower. Whatever you do, don't take hold of your child until you get hold of yourself.
