Slowdown not reflected in water use

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

On the surface, Midland's water supply appears to be running full enough to meet residents' demands for the next 20 years. Past that, it's anyone's guess as to whether it will be a dribble or a gully-washer coming out of the faucet.

To get a better grip on the ultimate yield of Midland's well fields and where expansion would be needed, the city has hired the hydrology firm of Ed Reed and Associates to conduct a study. That report should be completed by late February or early March, according to Utilities Director John Lowe.

Verbal reports that Midland's growth has slowed can't be proven with records from the water department. "I haven't seen any slowdown in growth," Lowe muttered, pulling out water usage figures.

In December 1982, 14.4 million gallons a day on the average were pumped into Midlanders' homes and businesses. For the same month in 1981, the figure was 11.0 million gallons per day.

"NOW THAT TELLS me there are a lot more people here. I see a continued growth on demands of the water system," he said. "Maybe some parts of the economy have slowed, but it will take time to see that in the water system."

During years of stabilization — when the city's growth was minimal — fluctuations in water usage came from pendulum swings of the weather. When it was a wet year, water usage was down. Conversely, it peaked during drought years, such as the summer of 1980.

In that sizzling summer, Midlanders used an average of 961 million gallons in July. Last summer, when it was cooler and wetter, July usage dropped to 792 million gallons.

Looking back, Lowe said the 961 million gallons "is the highest we've ever been in any summer. I could see where it could easily go into 1 billion gallons if we get another dry summer."

Even as the city has grown, residents are turning more to houses that require less water for maintaining yards, according to Lowe. "We're seeing more smaller yards, more townhouse development." In light of this, the increasing demand for water is an even stronger suggestion that Midland's growth hasn't slowed to a trickle.

In fact, average demand last year didn't drop much below that record year of 1980. Lowe said 1982 averaged 670 gallons per month while 1980 listed 679.

UNTIL ABOUT TWO years ago, Lowe said, the amount of sewage traveling through the sewage treatment plant each day truly reflected how much water was being used. But the ground water table has been rising and Midlanders have been pumping it out of their basements and into the sewer system, he said.

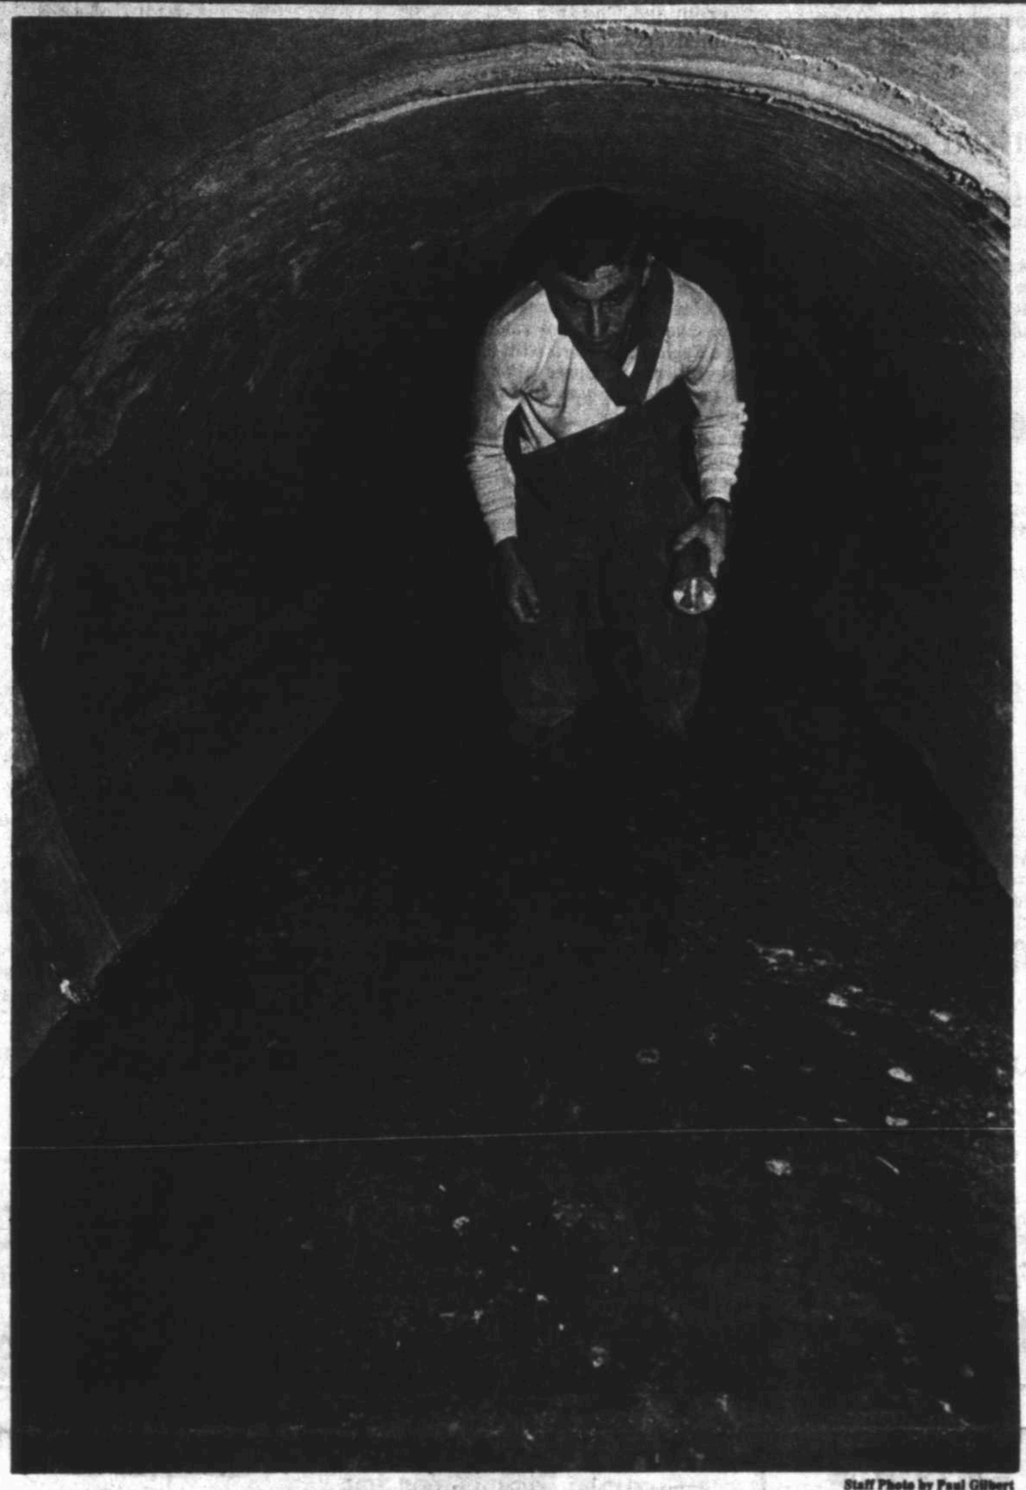

"We can't tell what's going on," he said. "There's too much infiltration."

The city pumps its water supply out of Paul Davis Well Fields to the north with additional water tossed in from the Colorado River Municipal Water District. And for backup in the far future is the T-Bar Ranch about 60 miles west of the city.

Determining the amount of water available in the Paul Davis field and T-Bar Ranch primarily is the focus of the Reed report, according to Lowe.

"Growth will shorten our timetable for development of the Paul Davis Well Field. It's less than 30 percent developed now," Lowe noted.

Water woes

Donned in latex pants, Mike Stevens squishes through an air duct under Al G. Langford Chaparral Center. The rising ground water table seeped its way into the air duct last fall.

The economy may have slowed down last year, but figures from the city's water department reflect more people turned on their faucets.

Problem won't dry up

Cellar swimmin' holes unplanned

It was in early 1981 that some Midlanders began to detect something strange in their basements. Like a dark creature in the horror movies which can slide under doors, it appeared slowly. First a drop, then a trickle, then a flood.

In the arid plains of West Texas, the ground water had started to rise under Midland.

City Hall was no exception. The basement there, too, began to fill.

In all cases, pumps were installed to pull the water out and into the city's sanitary sewer system.

City Council couldn't slide through the issue. When the dried up playa lake at Wadley-Barron Park began to get wetter and wetter, they discovered no amount of pumping could get rid of it. After testing the water, the city determined it came from the ground.

The city dived into the issue and eventually decided to turn it into a lake. And, as Utilities Director John Lowe pointed out, the ground water level isn't dropping.

"Wadley-Barron Park Lake is still wet, isn't it?" he asked rhetorically. And the Northwest Drainage Channel north of Wadley usually stands bone-dry in the summer. Last year, it didn't dry up until August, he added.

Nearby, Midland College unwillingly found itself knee-deep in the pumping business one day last fall.

"We certainly do have ground water," said Mike Stevens with the Al G. Langford Chaparral Center, where the creature popped up.

It appeared in an air duct under the center, explained Stevens. "It got up about 2½ to 3 feet. We tried to seal it, but it kept coming in at such a force. We took it and got it tested. The salt level was high so we knew it was ground water."

Now, two sump pumps pull the water out of the duct, which is about 25 feet below ground level, and dump it into the city's sewer line.

"For a while, it was taking four to five hours to clear it out," he said. And without the pumps, "We would have been flooded."

Without pumps, the basketball team might be swimming its way through games.

Israelis meet to consider future tasks

JERUSALEM (AP) — Faced with mounting pressure to fire Defense Minister Ariel Sharon, the Israeli Cabinet met today to review a judicial report blaming Sharon and other military leaders for the massacre of hundreds of Palestinians in Beirut.

Israel radio said Sharon would propose that the Cabinet adopt the judicial panel's recommendations to penalize officials at the political level, and ignore its demand for the ouster of senior army officers.

The radio did not specify whether Sharon would advise that the Cabinet fire him as recommended by the commission.

About 400 members of the Peace Now movement gathered in Tel Aviv to demand Sharon's resignation, but hundreds of Israelis demonstrated outside the Cabinet building here in support of Sharon and the rest of the government.

Mounted police had to escort ministers past the enthusiastic crowd, which pressed around Sharon's car as he arrived for the meeting.

Earlier reports in newspapers and on the radio said Sharon was resisting mounting pressure for his resignation.

The three-man panel urged Prime Minister Menachem Begin to fire Sharon if he did not step down voluntarily, and Israeli newspapers said most Cabinet ministers favored removing the defense minister.

Israel radio said most Parliament factions believed that in light of the the commission's criticism of himself and his government, Begin's only viable option was to resign and schedule an early election.

The news reports said some ministers were willing to give Sharon another government post.

Most major newspapers, meanwhile, urged the government to accept the findings of the commission.

The daily Haaretz editorialized, "The commission having said what it said about Mr. Ariel Sharon, he has no place in the Israeli government, plain and simple."

Maariv, which usually is more friendly to Begin than other papers, said:

"If we throw the conclusions of the commission in the trash can, we will once again be giving ammunition to all the enemies and slanderers whose arguments were silenced when Israel decided that there would be an Israeli investigation into the circumstances of the massacre."

Police officer named in suit

By RICHARD ORR
Staff Writer

A $140,000 assault and battery suit has been lodged against a Midland police officer who allegedly beat a Martin County man following the man's arrest on a DWI charge last fall.

Named as defendant in the suit, which was filed Tuesday in 142nd State District Court by Odessa attorney Michael McLeaish, is Bobby Welborn, a three-year veteran of the force who works in the traffic division.

The plaintiff is 32-year-old Michael Kozlowski of Stanton.

Kozlowski says in the suit that he was involved in a traffic accident in the 1700 block of East Highway 80 last Oct. 17 and was subsequently arrested for driving while intoxicated.

He claims he "offered no resistance" but "received a devastating blow to the head with a heavy object wielded by the Defendant, Welborn."

After allegedly being knocked to the ground by the blow, Kozlowski maintains he "was sat upon by the enraged officer and viciously beaten about the head and body in general."

The suit is accompanied by Polaroid pictures showing face and head wounds Kozlowski says he received at the hands of Welborn.

Records at Midland Memorial Hospital and Martin County Hospital, where he was also treated, indicate Kozlowski suffered numerous contusions and abrasions to the face, head, shoulder, neck and thigh.

Both eyes had hemorrhaged and were swollen partially shut. He also received several stitches to close a lip injury.

Kozlowski claims the "aforementioned assault and battery was completely unprovoked and was the result of the cruel, premeditated, wanton, malicious action of the Defendant...a person (who holds) a public trust."

First National Bank disputes suit's allegations

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Allegations that The First National Bank of Midland engaged in racketeering, charged usurious interest rates and engaged in discriminatory trade practices are untrue, reckless and unfounded, the bank has contended in response to a $100 million class action suit filed against it in federal court in Midland.

The bank says the charges are "harmful," "embarrassing" and "unfair."

"The defendant (FNB) is proud of its record, its reputation and its employees and it resents the cavalier and irresponsible attitude of the plaintiffs and their counsel as reflected in the unfounded claims made in the complaint," the bank says in its response.

The $100 million suit against the bank was filed last December by Dale A. Paul and his wife, Joan Edy Paul, who claim that the bank's floating interest rates and rates offered to preferred customers are discriminatory.

The suit was spawned after the Pauls lost by foreclosure Christy's Boutique, a women's apparel shop at Plaza Center, to its former owner, Jo Ann Jonsson. Ms. Jonsson, who is accused by the Pauls of conspiring with the bank to deprive them of the business and of lining up with the bank in violating the Racketeer Influenced and Corrupt Organizations Act (RICO), is being sued for $500,000.

The Pauls in September 1981 agreed to buy the shop from Ms. Jonsson for about $220,000, including inventory. They took control of the shop but lost it a year later by default when they failed to meet a $50,000 payment which was due on Oct. 1, 1982. Ms. Jonsson resumed ownership of the boutique on Oct. 20.

PAUL, WHO apparently was having difficulty making the business profitable, was unable to meet the payment deadline and was refused a second $50,000 loan from the bank by Vice President Marilyn Culp. A year earlier, in October 1981, Paul had borrowed $50,000 from the bank to make an initial payment to Ms. Jonsson and then put the note in the name of Christy's Boutique. He had not paid that particular note off when a second $50,000 payment was due Ms. Jonsson. The business apparently was faltering and Ms. Culp, after reviewing the boutique's financial statements, decided not the lend a second $50,000 to Paul. Paul, however, claimed the business had shown an "excellent profit" under his and his wife's management.

MISD trustees agree on elementary school site

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

An option on a site for a future elementary school and revised architectural designs for an addition to Rusk Elementary School were approved during a regular meeting of the Midland Independent School District board of trustees Tuesday afternoon.

Following an executive session, trustees announced the authorization of Dr. James H. Mailey, consultant for school plant planning, to offer a six-month option on 20 acres located in far northwest Midland.

The land, owned by Clyde White, is located directly west of Oriole Drive. The 20 acres, priced at $15,000 an acre, would be used as the site for the remaining of two elementary schools approved in the April 1982 bond election.

The other school approved, Santa Rita Elementary School, is expected to be ready for classes in September.

The $9.475 million bond election included $6,868,000 for the construction of the two elementary schools, architect's fee, furniture, equipment, utilities and site work. In addition, $1,209,000 was approved for the construction of 20 elementary classrooms, including the architect's fee, furniture and equipment. The remainder of the bond money was allocated for additions to Midland Freshman High School.

Earlier during Tuesday's board meeting, trustees expressed alarm when informed the Travis Elementary School addition of six of the 20 classrooms totaled $478,965 for construction costs. According to Don Furgeson, MISD business manager, only $360,000 had been appropriated for construction at Travis.

About $118,000 from a contingency fund, which consists of money from projects that came in under the projected costs and the interest earned on the money, was used to make up the difference in projected and actual costs at Travis, he said.

White announces alcoholism fund raising

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White announced Tuesday "the first public fund-raising effort" for research into the causes of alcohol addiction and abuse.

"Austin is the first city in the nation to have these coin-collection containers in public establishments," White said, dropping two quarters into a clear plastic bottle to launch the campaign.

He said funds collected in Texas will be used in the state's universities for research on drunken drivers, the fetal alcohol syndrome and alcoholism itself.

G. Carlton Edmonds, president of the Alcoholism Research Council, said he did not know how much money the campaign could raise in Texas, but he said an experiment in North Carolina showed about one person out of 1,000 contributes change at retail store cash registers. He said at that rate, $100,000 could be collected in Texas.

Bill would prevent bail for certain crimes

AUSTIN (AP) — Rep. Randy Pennington, R-Houston, introduced a bill Tuesday that would prevent people convicted of violent or sexual crimes from being released on bail while the conviction is appealed.

Under current law those convicted in such categories are routinely released on bail pending the result of their appeal, which may be for a number of months.

Pennington said he introduced the bill at the request of constituents in his district who have worked with Parent-Teacher Associations around the state to gather support for the measure.

Crime stopper groups may get donations

AUSTIN (AP) — The Senate approved a bill Tuesday to allow counties to donate up to $25,000 a year to a local or statewide crime stopper organization.

Sen. Lindon Williams, D-Houston, said citizens "fear" crime in the streets, "and this (bill) will help put fear into criminals."

Former Gov. Bill Clements created a statewide crime stopper organization that works to develop local citizen groups to fight crime.

William's bill was sent to the House on a 29-0 vote.

Oil, gas discoveries for January reported

AUSTIN (AP) — Chairman Mack Wallace of the Railroad Commission said Tuesday Texas operators reported 60 oil discoveries and 93 gas discoveries in January.

In January a year ago, Wallace said, there were 43 oil discoveries and 121 gas discoveries.

Oil discoveries in January of this year included 17 in West Central Texas; 10 in North Texas; eight in Southeast Texas; six in the San Angelo area; five each in South Texas and the Midland area; four in East Texas; two in East Central Texas; and one each in the Panhandle and the Lubbock and Refugio areas.

Gas discoveries last month included 38 in South Texas; 15 in Southeast Texas; 12 in West Central Texas; six in East Texas; five each in North Texas and the Midland and Refugio areas; three in East Central Texas; and two in the San Antonio and San Angelo areas.

Operators reported 620 dry holes in January.

Bill filed to expand UTPB programs

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Bills have been filed by state legislators relating to courses offered at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin and relating to consent as a defense to assault-related charges.

Rep. Jay Gibson of Odessa has filed HB 598, which would allow the board of regents of the University of Texas System to establish a four-year undergraduate program at UTPB with the approval of the Coordinating Board, Texas College and University System.

Currently, the university accepts only junior, senior and graduate-level students with at least 60 semester hours of accredited college work completed.

Gibson's bill also states the university "shall emphasize the teaching of energy-related technology."

Rep. Joe C. Hanna of Breckenridge has filed HB 601, which permits a victim's consent to be a defense to prosecution of assault charges. The measure applies if no serious bodily injury has been inflicted or if the victim knew the conduct was a risk of his occupation, a recognized medical treatment or a scientific experiment.

Four persons recommended for parole

Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Four persons sent to prison from the West Texas area have been released on parole by Gov. Mark White upon the recommendation of the Board of Pardons and Paroles.

Barbara N. Graves, convicted in Midland County June 7, 1982, of forgery by passing, and robbery by threats, was paroled to Midland County after serving and earning one year and four months of a three-year sentence.

David A. Johnson was convicted in Hale County Aug. 5, 1980, of theft; in Potter County Oct. 20, 1980, of credit card abuse; in Lubbock County June 12, 1980, of robbery; and in Howard County May 19, 1980, of theft over $200.

Johnson was paroled to Potter County after serving and earning five years and seven months of an eight-year sentence.

Ronald Gene Simmons, convicted in Ector County Oct. 28, 1980, of burglary of a habitation with intent to commit theft, was paroled to Midland County after serving and earning four years and one month of an eight-year sentence.

David Whitcher, convicted in Ector County June 9, 1982, of theft over $200, was paroled to Harris County after serving and earning one year and six months of a three-year sentence.

Coast Guard evacuates crippled ship's crew

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — A crack in the forward hold of a 259-foot Panamanian freighter forced the U.S. Coast Guard to evacuate the crew and move the crippled vessel to shallow water.

The Eaglecliffe, laden with 3,500 tons of milo (grain sorghum), was anchored offshore when the crack in the starboard side was discovered, said Petty Officer Don Hope.

Water began leaking into the ship but could not be pumped out because the milo was absorbing it and vessel was listing about 20 degrees, Hope said.

Hope said a crew of 19, mostly from the Philippines and Honduras, the captain and and a pet dog named Blondie were taken off the ship and to a Galveston hotel.

"We were scared at first. We didn't know what was happening," the captain's wife, Juanita Lopez, told the Galveston Daily News.

The ship was moved and anchored in 46-foot water about two miles north of the north jetty, Hope said. A marine salvage crew was expected to assess the damage today and decide what to do with the ship.

Hope said the ship started taking on water Monday and was in danger of sinking near the end of the jetties.

Three Coast Guard vessels and a helicopter were sent to the scene to help take the crew off the ship, Hope said.

Hope said the cause of the crack in the vessel's hold was unknown.

No injuries were reported.

Agent says he searched without warrant

HOUSTON (AP) — An FBI agent says he searched the luggage of a man charged in a $15 million bomb-extortion plot because he thought it might contain the same deadly explosives found at a Gulf Oil Chemicals Co. plant.

Michael Allen Worth, 34, verbally agreed to allow agents to search two suitcases after he and Theodore Duane McKinney, 45, were arrested Oct. 1 outside Phoenix, Ariz., agent Thomas Tarla said Tuesday.

Tarla, testifying in a hearing on 40 pretrial motions, said a warrant was unnecessary because the search was an emergency.

"I was concerned about the fact that there might be explosives in the suitcases," he said.

But defense lawyers contended the evidence gathered in searches of suitcases, as well as their clients cars, homes and businesses, was obtained illegally.

Worth and McKinney are among five people charged with threatening to blow up Gulf's Cedar Bayou plant, about 30 miles east of Houston, unless they were paid $15 million.

Also named in the 12-count indictment are Jill Renee Bird, 34; her common-law husband John McBride, 46 and Timothy K. Justice, 30.

Justice has pleaded guilty to two counts and agreed to testifiy against the other four defendants. Prosecutors said the remaining 10 counts against him would be dismissed.

Max Secrest, Worth's attorney, contends the government's search of Worth's suitcases was illegal and wants U.S. District Judge Gabrielle McDonald to suppress the evidence.

Caller says lake would be poisoned

HUNTSVILLE (AP) — Authorities at Huntsville and Livingston were operating on water wells today after an anonymous caller said pollutants and poison were going to be dumped into Lake Livingston.

Huntsville and Livingston as well as some small water districts in the area normally use water from Lake Livingston, a 90,000 surface feet lake covering a 56-square mile area of Southeast Texas.

Grady Manis, spokesman for the Trinity River Authority at Huntsville said authorities believe the call was a hoax, but said the TRA immediately switched to the water well system because the authority "isn't taking any chances."

Spending, taxing alternatives emerge

WASHINGTON (AP) — Slowly but surely, House Democratic leaders are preparing specific alternatives to President Reagan's taxing and spending plans for 1984.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill, D-Mass., said Tuesday that, in contrast to the first two years of Reagan's presidency, "stimulating the economy, not cutting budgets, is the first order of business for the 98th Congress."

And the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, called for a freeze on a variety of tax reductions scheduled to take effect in 1983 as a means of reducing federal deficits.

But Rostenkowski, D-Ill., also became one of the fewer senior Democrats on Capitol Hill to argue that a 10 percent tax cut scheduled for July should be allowed to take effect.

That reduction in withholding is the last of Reagan's 25 percent tax cut, approved in 1981, and it has been criticized by both Democrats and Republicans as illogical in a time of growing deficits.

As key members of Congress continued to scrutinize the president's 1984 budget blueprint there were these developments Tuesday:

—The chairman of the House military appropriations subcommitee said he would seek to cut about $30 billion from Reagan's $238.5 billion defense budget. Rep. Joseph Addabbo, D-N.Y., a consistent critic of the Pentagon, said targets would include the B-1 bomber and the MX missile system.

AP Laserphoto

House Speaker Thomas P. "Tip" O'Neill calls on President Reagan to join Congress in stimulating the economy.

—A House Democratic leader said an emergency package of recession relief for food and shelter being considered by Democrats would cost about $1 billion. A parallel federal jobs program would probably run about $4 billion to produce 6 million jobs, said the congressman, who spoke on condition he not be named.

—Rostenkowski called for negotiated changes in the tax laws, freezing tax cuts starting Dec. 31, 1983.

The changes include the likely repealing of indexing, which would tie personal income tax rates to the rate in inflation beginning in 1985. Indexing was intended to prevent "bracket creep," where taxpayers are subjected to higher taxes merely because their incomes kept abreast of increasing prices.

He also urged keeping, instead of phasing out, existing tax rates on cigarettes, telephones, estates, gifts, and windfall profits as a means of lowering the federal deficit.

The cigarette tax is now scheduled to go from 16 to 8 cents a pack on Sept. 30, 1985.

Rostenkowski also called for delaying three Reagan proposals — tuition tax credits for parents of private school students, special education savings accounts and special tax breaks for employers in low income city neighborhoods.

The freeze on tax cuts, Rostenkowski said in a speech to a securities group, would raise enough money — $130 billion — to offset the increases in Reagan's own 1984 budget plan.

"It is the deficit that will largely determine the nation's long-term recovery," Rostenkowski said. "Unless we can narrow the gap between spending and revenue — especially in the second half of the decade — the economy may well be doomed to paralysis."

Reagan has urged a standby tax on oil and income taxes for 1985 if deficits continue to skyrocket.

While Rostenkowski indicated he would not make an issue over the income tax cut scheduled for July, O'Neill said "there is a lot of sentiment in the House" for denying the cut to wealthy taxpayers.

Social Security hearings over too soon, critics say

WASHINGTON (AP) — House tax writers are ending their hearings on a $168 billion Social Security rescue plan a day early amid complaints from some critics that the speedy deliberations have been "a mockery."

The House Ways and Means subcommittee on Social Security was completing hearings today with a marathon session that was to include nearly 50 witnessess. Staffers said the subcommittee would begin drafting legislation next week.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., chairman of the full Ways and Means Committee, has said he wanted to keep the legislative pace moving quickly to keep opponents from mounting serious attacks on the bailout package, which was submitted last month by the National Commission on Social Security Reform.

Leaders of organizations representing federal workers have attacked recommendations to extend Social Security coverage to new government employees, but they are now conceding that they may be fighting a losing battle.

During Tuesday's hearing, Robert L. White, president of the National Alliance of Postal and Federal Employees, said it would be "dastardly" to force new federal workers into "an alien plan of social insecurity" next year.

Moe Biller, president of the American Postal Workers Union, claimed the reform commission exaggerated the savings from bringing new workers into the system. "The commission is wrong. This is a window-dressing job," he said.

Paring of Pentagon budget easier said than done

By DON WATERS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger is getting a lot of congressional advice to cut back on the Pentagon's proposed budget, but specific suggestions about where to make the savings are few and far between.

As Weinberger continued his round of budget briefings on Capitol Hill Tuesday, he was met once again with calls to trim the spending plan in the face of soaring budget deficits.

He appeared before the House defense appropriations subcommittee to talk about the fiscal year 1984 budget plan.

Rep. Charles Wilson, D-Texas, said any cuts should come by dropping a major weapon system rather than reducing day-to-day military operations and other spending that enhances readiness.

Rep. Norman Dicks, D-Wash., saw a budget crunch in the years ahead as bills for a host of weapons come due. "I think you have too many competing priorities," and should move to scale them back now. The only alternative, he said, would be to raise taxes.

Neither they nor others offered a specific cut figure, but the panel's chairman, Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo, D-N.Y., told reporters that he hopes to reduce the Pentagon's $265.3 billion budget-authority request by $30 billion, which would translate into about $15 billion in money actually spent in fiscal 1984.

Addabbo's targets include such major programs as the B-1 bomber, MX missile and nuclear-powered aircraft carriers, although he acknowledged that chances of getting this past his subcommittee were "questionable."

But, he said, the odds were "pretty good" that he could secure major cuts when the appropriations bill is considered on the House floor this summer.

Addabbo tried a similar approach when the defense bill for the current fiscal year reached the House last fall, but he was successful only in getting the House to delete $988 million earmarked for MX missile production.

Weinberger promised only that he would share with the panel a list of "the damage that would result" to national security if defense spending were held to an inflation-adjusted growth of 8 percent, 6 percent or 4 percent instead of the 10 percent the administration wants. The Senate Budget Committee asked Weinberger last week to prepare the list.

"I think the United States can afford what it has to afford" for its security, Weinberger said.

Reagan's panel expected to seek more time for MX basing decision

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Commission on Strategic Forces, named by President Reagan to find a politically acceptable MX missile basing system, is having difficulty making a recommendation and will seek an extension of its Feb. 18 deadline, a published report said today.

The Washington Post quotes administration sources as saying the panel is struggling to devise a proposal that would win backing in the White House and broad support in Congress.

"We're not going to report until we're done," a high-ranking official was quoted as saying in today's editions of the Post.

Spring-like weather in Midland air

With fair skies and warm daytime temperatures expected to continue, Midlanders may be getting the impression that if spring hasn't already sprung, it's "wound up" pretty tight.

According to the National Weather Service forecast, tonight should be fair and cool with a low in the low 30s and northwest winds at 5-10 mph. Thursday should bring fair skies and a high near 60, with northwest winds kicking up to 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 68 fell a dozen degrees short of the record 80 set in 1963. The overnight low of 39 compares favorably with a record low 12 set in 1936.

Midland received .05 of an inch of rain overnight, pushing monthly and yearly precipitation totals to .08 and 1.22 inches, respectively.

Sunset tonight is at 6:30 p.m.; sunrise Thursday comes at 7:36 a.m.

Loftis has been nominated to serve on the Texas Water Well Drillers Board.

The subcommittee also sent the nominations of Jesse Donald Cone III, M.D., and Mary Lou Parsons, both from Odessa, to the full Senate.

Cone has been nominated to serve on a medical District Review Committee and Parsons to serve on the Texas Water Well Drillers Board.

The subcommittee also passed the name of James Harold Clack of Andrews, nominated to serve as Judge of the 109th Judicial District, to the full Senate for consideration.

Water use belies growth slowdown

Midlanders keep pumping water

The last expansion still is under way, he said, looking at a completion date in May. Bonds for that project, estimated to cost $4.2 million, were approved by voters in September 1979.

A pump station that will be located halfway between the well field and Midland is being installed, he said, and this project should boost the well field's capability from 19 mgd up to 27 mgd. Additional wells have been drilled and are on line. And the monitoring system is going in. Meanwhile, an injection line connecting the Paul Davis field to an abandoned McMillen Well Field west of the city is completed and the wells are being prepared to take additional water.

Lowe explained that 500 million gallons of water can be stored in that field. The city has been drawing it out during the summer when demand peaks. "We need to replace that water," he said, and the injection lines serve that purpose.

EVEN WITHOUT the Reed report, Lowe sees that, as Midland continues to grow, "we'll need to expand the Paul Davis Well Field."

Midland's contract with CRMWD is for a set amount each year, unlike Odessa, Big Spring and Snyder, which draw all their water from that company, said the utilities director.

The Tall City, on the other hand, uses it as a supplement to the Paul Davis supply, according to Lowe. "We try to make it a ratio of 80 percent Paul Davis and 20 percent from CRMWD. But when demands on our system are higher and our contract is finite, we have to serve more from Paul Davis."

How well Midland can supply future demands depends on two items: CRMWD's ability to build Stacy Dam and the city's desire to develop its water supply under the T-Bar Ranch at a high cost.

Noting that the city would prefer to keep its ground water in reserve (T-Bar Ranch), Lowe said he would opt to draw out of Stacy Dam if it is ever built. "It's a renewable source."

Although approved by the state, the case was appealed to higher courts, and it now sits before the State Supreme Court for a final ruling. According to O.H. Ivie with CRMWD, the answer should be coming out this spring or by mid-summer. "I think we'll get a positive ruling and as soon as we do, we'll start in earnest on the project," he said.

However, if water does flow into Midland from Stacy Dam, Lowe said that would mean an expansion to the city's water treatment plant. It is designed for 12 mgd and can hydraulically treat 18 mgd. "But I feel comfortable operating at 15. It's a timing situation; there's very little room for error at 18. It's like driving a car at 60 or 90 mph."

In a cursory study done on the T-Bar Ranch in Winkler County several years ago, Lowe said it showed the field had 920,000 acre feet of water. By comparison, the city uses 12,000 acre feet of water per year from CRMWD amd 1,600 per year from the Paul Davis field, which has about 300,000 acre feet. T-Bar, concluded Lowe, should fill the city's needs for many years.

WHEN THE NEED for more water begins to flood everyone's thoughts, Lowe said the city would have to consider developing that source, and it would include a pump station to lift the water toward Midland. "It would be an expensive venture...65 miles of pipeline. But it's the best option available. Either you pay the price or you go without water."

At its last meeting on Jan. 25, the council advertised for trade four sections of land on the T-Bar Ranch. This doesn't mean the city is giving up its rights to part of that water supply, according to Lowe. Rather, the city is attempting to get additional land with more water under it.

And four sections are only a small part of the ranch, Lowe said, noting that it consists of 20,000-plus acres.

Key to timing for the future is Stacy Dam, he said. "When it comes on line, it could sustain Midland 50, 75, even 100 years."

Gov. Mark White shakes hands with Randy Sheilds, one of several shanty dwellers White and the press met during a tour of Austin's less-desirable living areas Tuesday.

White shows press Austin's shanty side

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Mark White took a group of reporters on a walking tour of the seamier side of Austin to back up his statement that some jobless Texans are living in Depression-like poverty.

Nancy Hunt and Randy Sheilds, shanty dwellers within a mile of the Capitol, dramatized White's point.

"To me it's a little hard to believe we have these circumstances here in this country," White said during the Tuesday walking and bus tour.

The tour was prompted by a comment White made Saturday in Washington.

"All you have to do is walk a few blocks from our Capitol there in Austin as I did two days ago, to find people living in makeshift shacks of cardboard with a piece of plastic the only roof over their head," White told the Democratic National Committee.

One day later, a newspaper story headlined "Austinites Can't Find the Shacks" quoted Austin officials as saying they didn't know what White was talking about.

The governor made good on his comments Tuesday.

"I want the community to recognize we do have these problems. It's also important the members of the press recognize it," said White.

The governor sent employees earlier Tuesday to make sure the shanties he had spotted were still there, and to tell the residents he might drop by.

Near the banks of Waller Creek, about a dozen blocks from the Capitol, White pointed out a small encampment among the bare trees.

Ms. Hunt told White aides she didn't want to talk to the governor.

"Why did someone try to get him down here?" she said, seated near a fire in a barrel.

"I have nothing to say to him. I meant no offense in any way," she said. "I would get dressed properly to see the governor."

Three people live at the site. The only shelters are a plastic-covered tent and a shanty made of wood, cardboard and other scavenged materials.

Nevertheless, Ms. Hunt said it's "no different than camping out anywhere." She's been at the site for six months, she said.

"I have a possibility of getting back into cafe work," she said.

White's next stop was the Salvation Army, where a bus took him and reporters to the second shanty he found.

"Have you been to the Texas Employment Commission?" White asked Sheilds.

"Every time I've been before they just sent me on a runaround," Sheilds replied.

Sheilds, 21, lives in a shanty with his wife, Beverly. The makeshift home is about 50 feet from the railroad tracks leading to the nearby Amtrak station. The Sheilds and friend Charlie Norton collect cans and copper to buy food.

FNB says charges in class action suit 'untrue, embarrassing'

However, according to the bank's response, Ms. Culp granted Paul an extension on the note due the bank, suggested Paul seek an extension on the payment due Ms. Jonsson, and suggested he consider having a sale to generate cash "since she was not very hopeful that the bank would be able to loan Mr. Paul any more money."

Results of the subsequent sale were "very disappointing," and Paul still was "unable to take care of his obligations."

An income statement indicated that under Paul's management, the boutique had been averaging $1,500 monthly in profits but that the shop had a "net loss" of $10,687.46 in seven months.

THE CRUX of the Paul complaint seems to be this: Paul in October 1981 borrowed the $50,000 from the bank at a 19.5 percent rate; however, a notation on the note said that the "Rate is to be FNB Prime Floating."

In the petition, Paul alleges that the FNB notes "are illegal and unlawful...because the interest rate...is utterly uncertain, vague, unclear, indefinite, imprecise and thus the 'prime rate' and/or 'FNB prime floating' rate cannot be known."

Furthermore, Paul claims that the bank's prime rates were "extortionate credit transactions" and that at least 5,000 Midlanders have fallen victim to the bank's prime rate over a four-year period, paid $25 million on interest that is usurious in nature and that members of the class "cannot possibly know what the 'prime rate' or 'FNB Prime Floating' rate was or is."

The bank, which denied any extortion at all, says that the prime rate "changes from time to time" but that the rate "is known at a particular time," can be readily discerned, and that "there is nothing uncertain, vague, unclear, indefinite or imprecise about it."

The bank suggested that Gerald Fugit, an Odessa attorney who represents the Pauls in the suit, and the Pauls "perhaps do not understand the basis for the interest charged by The First National Bank." However, the bank contends that "that lack of understanding hardly justifies the scurrilous assertion that the amounts charged were in fact 'extortionate credit transactions.'"

Furthermore, the floating interest rate was to the advantage of the complaining party, since the rates did drop. In the Paul case, Ms. Culp had provided a "floating rate" on the $50,000 Paul note "because she thought it would be in the best interest of the borrower, since she anticipated that interest rates would decline, which, in fact, they did," the banks says.

ON THE CLASS action suit, the bank asserts that "There is no aggrieved class to be represented."

The "prime rate" has been a guide or standard in establishing an interest rate to be charged to each customer, but the rate may vary depending on the customer.

"Thus, there is no class to be protected by the plaintiffs and their attorney," the bank argues, "and if there were, neither the plaintiffs nor their attorney is qualified to represent such class."

The Paul charge that the bank's interest rates were "usurious is another example of the irresponsible and untrue claims made by these plaintiffs," the bank said in its petition, prepared by Midland attorney Charles Tighe.

In readying for a possible trial, Fugit in early February requested that the bank's officers, including Ms. Culp, be at Tighe's office in the FNB Building at 9 a.m. Feb. 17 for the taking of depositions. Depositions of Ms. Jonsson and her attorney, James Boldrick, are to be taken that day, also.

Furthermore, Fugit asked that the bank's officers bring with them extensive bank memoranda, reports and records, including minutes of the FNB board of directors' meetings, dealing with the prime-interest rate, and related rules and regulations and reports from the Federal Reserve Board and federal and state banking commissions and agencies.

While bank officers may be preparing to meet with Fugit, the bank in its reponse to the lawsuit has "given notice" to Fugit and the Pauls "that if their irresponsible and unfounded charges are made outside the protection of a court proceeding, appropriate civil action will be filed by and in behalf of the bank and/or its employees for their damages."

Trustees agree on new school site

"When we talked about the bond issue, we talked about 10 pairs of classrooms," Mailey explained. "We didn't include mechanical rooms or rest rooms. In terms of Travis, we decided the restrooms were not adequate. It grew from the standpoint of additional storage; it grew from the standpoint of toilet facilities and mechanical rooms. Those were the things beyond the three pairs of classrooms."

According to Terry Harden, architect with Geren Associates/CRS, the revised plans for the additions at Rusk call for a 12,500-square foot addition at $55 per square foot. Estimated cost of the project is $687,500.

However, only $615,000 was allocated for construction costs at Rusk.

Trustees, concerned that the $1 million remaining in the contingency following the Rusk addition would not be enough to complete the Santa Rita project, the new school and the six remaining classrooms, were assured by superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr. that the funds would be available.

"If (bids on) the new school come in lower, then the new school would have a contingency of its own and not even touch the others," Baressi explained. Construction costs for the new school were budgeted at $2.8 million.

According to Furgeson, interest earned on the bond money is $578,047.86, while the interest for the few remaining months is estimated to grow by $188,811.16.

An architectural design committee, including trustees Joe Golding, Ron Britton and Bill Jackson, recently met with Harden and Mailey to discuss revisions to the architectural design of the Rusk addition.

"It kind of threw me when we sat in that meeting and found out we were out of money," Golding told fellow board members.

Baressi hastily reassured him that after the construction of the Rusk addition and the new school, there would be sufficient funds for at least four if not all six remaining classrooms.

When Jackson tossed out a question concerning funds needed to buy land for the new school, Golding said about $500,000, around the original estimate for the purchase of property, would be available.

Trustees later approved the six-month option to purchase the 20 acres for the new school at $300,000.

Human rights reports names Israel, U.S.S.R.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Israel's relations with Arab residents in the occupied territories are causing significant human rights problems, which are bound to continue until there is a peace accord, a Reagan administration human rights report says.

The report singled out Communist countries as among the worst abusers of human rights. It said the Soviet Union "continues to fall far short of accepted international standards," and was especially critical of its practices in Afghanistan.

Frustrated by their inability to suppress the stubborn resistance, Soviet troops and Moscow-backed Afghan forces had begun "increasingly to target and kill the civilian populace" in areas of high rebel activity, the report said.

Prepared by the State Department, the annual report on the status of human rights in 162 countries showed political repression continued on a broad scale throughout the world in 1982.

Attorney: Chagra verdict bodes well for co-defendents

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Defense attorneys say Jamiel "Jimmy" Chagra's acquittal in the assassination of U.S. District Judge John H. Wood Jr. could help three co-defendants win appeals, but two jurors say the three received fair trials.

A Jacksonville, Fla., jury on Monday found Chagra innocent of hiring a hit man to murder Wood.

However, in a separate trial here last year, Charles V. Harrelson was convicted of accepting $250,000 from Chagra to kill Wood. Chagra's wife, Elizabeth, was convicted of conspiring to murder Wood and to obstruct justice, and Harrelson's wife, Jo Ann, was convicted of conspiracy to obstruct justice.

Harrelson's lawyer, Tom Sharpe Jr. of Brownsville, said Tuesday that extensive publicity in San Antonio made a fair trial impossible.

Chagra was acquitted, Sharpe said, because "you had a forum in Florida who were not prejudging everything."

But two of the jurors in the San Antonio trial said the proceedings were fair and unbiased.

"I live in San Antonio and I was not up to date on things," said jury foreman Kathleen Mills. "In fact, I was amazed at how little I knew."

Patricia Schultz-Ormand, who broke down in tears as the verdicts were read Dec. 14, said the defendants "got a fair trial."

Sharpe said he filed a motion in federal court Friday to have the case against his client dismissed, and that more motions were forthcoming. He said he planned to meet with Harrelson today.

Bexar County District Attorney Sam Millsap Jr. says he still wants to seek the death sentence for Harrelson in state court.

Prosecutors contended Chagra ordered Wood killed because the judge was scheduled to preside over his trial on a charge of continuing criminal enterprise. Chagra subsequently was convicted and sentenced to 30 years in prison.

Lawyers for Mrs. Harrelson and Mrs. Chagra also expressed optimism about their clients' cases.

"Speaking for my client's standpoint, I would hope that we would have a change of venue and separate trials," said Mrs. Harrelson's attorney, Charles Campion.

Mrs. Chagra's lawyer, Warren Burnett, said she also would seek a new trial.

A Texas Department of Highways worker uses an front end loader to demolish one of the plastic and wood huts that was used by people living in the roadside park on the San Jacinto River east of Houston. The last of the residents moved out Monday after a district judge upheld a fire marshal's order to close Tent City down because of fire hazards.

Legislator files bill to prevent future Tent City

HOUSTON (AP) — A state legislator has filed a bill to prevent makeshift communities similar to the controversial Tent City from springing up.

State Rep. Tony Polumbo, D-Houston, introduced the bill Tuesday as highway workmen tore down the tents and lean-tos of the modern-day Hooverville about 30 miles east of Houston.

Polumbo, who represents the district that includes the site, said the bill would make it illegal to stay at similar rest areas more than 24 hours. It also would ban building a "tent, shelter or structure of any kind" at a state-owned rest area.

Tent City, a state picnic and overnight campground that once was crammed with about 200 unemployed residents, was barricaded Monday by order of the Harris County fire marshal.

Polumbo said residents had been offered space at a Baytown center, but turned it down because it banned drinking and required them to look for jobs.

"If they're so down-and-out, where did they get all the money to buy all the beer they have out there?" Polumbo said. "They had no intention of working. That was not their lifestyle.

"Everyone used Tent City for whatever purpose they had in mind," he said. "The national press used it to kick Texas, because of the very lucky economic condition we had for years. The international press used it to show that democracy is failing. It was a media hype."

Polumbo said a wrecking yard owner across the highway from Tent City offered work for some of the campers but got no takers.

"One guy was offered a job with a trucking company and the morning he was supposed to show up for work, he went fishing instead," Polumbo said.

Harris County Fire Marshal J.J. Pruitt issued strict fire safety regulations last week after camp resident James "Scotty" Bolland, 41, died when fire destroyed his small tent.

Bill allows grandparents visitation rights

AUSTIN (AP) — Grandparents win legal access to grandchildren they have been separated from only by filing "knock-down, drag-out" custody lawsuits, a Senate panel was told before it approved legislation allowing courts to give grandparents visitation rights.

Houston Assistant City Attorney Fred Spence testified Tuesday before the Senate Jurisprudence Committee on the legal implications of the bill, but told a reporter outside the hearing room later that his own "horrible situation" had sparked his interest it.

Spence said his 21-year-old daughter was killed in a 1980 automobile accident, leaving behind two children, then 1- and 3-years-old. Her husband remarried three months later, and has since been less than cooperative about allowing the Spences to see their grandchildren, Spence said.

The law is needed to clarify conflicting court opinions,

MISD employees' kids' transfers OK'd by board

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The Midland Independent School District Board of Trustees unanimously endorsed allowing children of MISD employees to transfer to schools where their parents work, slashed standardized testing in half for grades 1-9 and waltzed Choreographic Dance, as well as several other new courses, into the high school curriculum for 1983-84 during a regular meeting Tuesday.

The revisions to the transfer policy, testing program and course offerings were interspersed with action pertaining to the 1983-84 school calendar, a report on the Midland Arts Assembly's plan for an annual Celebration of the Arts and a summary of the successful, year-old teacher inservice program.

During the second and final reading of the revised transfer policy, trustees approved an amendment stating that requests from MISD employees to transfer their children to the schools at which they work will be administratively granted. Last summer, the board came under fire for the elimination of a policy which allowed transfer requests for child-care purposes to be administratively granted. Several teachers spoke publicly at that time about the unfairness of having to appeal to the board.

The approved revision states the transfer shall be administratively approved as long as the employee remains at the school to which the transfer is requested and that a student must attend the school where the parent is assigned as a full-time school employee. However, a student may be granted a transfer in the the 9th grade on the basis of the parent's assignment to a senior high school.

The excessive amount of time spent away from classes during the administration of the California Achievement Tests prompted Dr. Duane Moore, assistant superintendent of instruction,and a committee to cut out the testing in the fall in grades 1-9. The CAT spring tests will continue to be administered and the Texas Assessment of Basic Skills tests, required by the state in grades 3, 5 and 9, will continue, he said. Bilingual students new to the district will continue to take the CAT in the fall.

Students who score on or above the 50th percentile in the ninth grade CAT test will be given the Preliminary Scholastic Aptitude Test in the fall of the 10th grade. A program including counseling of students taking the PSAT and their parents, and of sophomores with the potential to become merit scholars, will be implemented.

Bilingual students new to the district will continue to take the CAT in the fall. Also, the revision calls for the development of departmental assessment instruments to administer on a pre- and post-test basis.

Trustees approved new courses for secondary students and clarification of electives which may be substituted for English IV. Courses which may be substituted for English credit include Developmental Reading, Vocabulary Development, Film Composition, Creative Writing, Career English, Debate, Introduction to Speech Communication, Interpersonal and Group Communication and Journalism I.

New course offerings include Career English, Advanced Photojournalism, Food Nutrition, Clothing and Textiles General Agriculture Mechanics, Vocational Office Education/Word Processing Pre-lab, Vocational Office Education Cooperative, Health Occupations Pre-lab, Health Occupations Cooperative, Home Economics Cooperative Education I and Education II, Homemaking I and II and Choreographic Dance.

According to superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., the dance class was added with hopes it will lead to a performing group. The course will begin next year with one instructor teaching at both freshman and high schools, Baressi noted.

"If we feel we have sufficient interest, we'll come to the board with a request for drill teams," he said, adding an individual budget would then be required.

The course will include instruction in aerobic dancing, rhythmic skills, sequential motion and how to choreograph motion with rhythmic activities.

In other action, trustees pledged support to the Midland Arts Assembly in its effort to begin a Celebration of Arts, approved a resolution authorizing agreement for a joint election April 2, adopted a school calendar for the 1983-84 year that was approved by a majority of MISD teachers and approved an easement at Santa Rita Elementary School.

A report on the new teacher inservice program, implemented at the beginning of the school year, indicated 212 employees, or 19 percent of those required to attend inservice programs, participated in more than 40 hours. Only 35 hours of teacher inservice are required.

FAA manager Kubiak given additional duties

Gerald E. Kubiak, who was named manager of the Federal Aviation Administration's radar approach airport traffic control tower at Midland Regional Airport in September 1980, has been assigned the additional duties of FAA local coordinator for the Midland area.

C.R. Melugin Jr., FAA's Southwest Region director, announced Kubiak's selection today.

"As my representative in Midland," Melugin said, "Kubiak will serve as the single point of contact for the agency. In this role he will coordinate the efforts of all FAA offices when various agency programs are involved. He will coordinate the efforts of all FAA offices when various agency programs are involved. He will be the primary point of contact with the public."

Prior to his assignment to Midland, Kubiak was Air Traffic Representative for Laughlin Air Force Base at Del Rio. He also has served at Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Anchorage, Washington, Oklahoma City, San Antonio, Austin, Fort Worth, Tampa and Longview.

Irish Derby winner kidnapped

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Gunmen raided the Aga Khan's stud farm and stole Shergar, an Irish Derby winner and one of the world's most high-priced racehorses, police said today.

A groom said the gunmen told him Tuesday night they planned to demand a $3 million ransom for the safe return of the horse.

Police declined to speculate on whether suspicion might fall on the Irish Republican Army, which has resorted to kidnapping as a method of fund-raising in recent years.

"I was over at the stud last year and saw Shergar," breeding expert Tony Morris recalled today."An American woman visitor there said they should keep padlocks on the stable doors. They can't of course because of the fire risk, but it seems amazing that such a valuable horse could be stolen."

Police in the Irish Republic launched a full-scale hunt after the horse was taken from its retirement home at the Aga Khan's stud farm in County Kildare, near the Curragh race track 30 miles from Dublin.

Police said two gunmen locked up head groom John Fitzgerald's family in a room at their house on the farm around 9 p.m. Tuesday night.

Then they forced Fitzgerald at gunpoint to the adjoining stables and ordered him to identify Shergar, valued at around $18 million.

Fitzgerald was blindfolded and made to lie face down as one of the raiders drove a horse box into the yard, and Shergar was loaded inside, police said.

The gunmen drove for several hours before releasing Fitzgerald early today, with a warning not to contact police.

The groom was told the horsenappers would make contact again later today about the ransom demand.

Public scribes write letters for illiterate Mexicans

MEXICO CITY (AP) — Just as half a century ago, Don Miguel Angel Mendez can be found six days a week at the decaying Plaza of Santo Domingo, waiting patiently with his typewriter.

Don Miguel, 69, is dean of Mexico City's public scribes — curbside figures with battered typewriters who write letters for the city's illiterate masses.

Most ply their ancient profession under the arcade stretching along the west side of the Plaza of Santo Domingo, a few blocks north of the Zocalo, the great square that is the heart of this megalopolis of 15 million people.

The scribes fill out government forms, translate documents into plain language and even write love letters for illiterate or tongue-tied suitors.

But Don Miguel, the "don" is a Spanish title of respect, says the days when people lined up for his services are past.

"There were many more people before," he says. "Today's youths are better prepared."

A literacy campaign started by the government in 1944 has made it possible for millions of adults to learn to read and write. By 1981, 72 percent of Mexicans over age 15 were literate, in contrast to only 26 percent in 1910, the first year of the Mexican Revolution, and 56 percent in 1950.

The National Institute for Adult Education says 700,000 adults learned to read and write in 1982. The institute's program includes neighborhood workshops and classes at places of work.

In March 1982 the institute also began using television to carry the literacy program to remote areas of the country and its population of 70 million people.

Still, on a recent day, at least half of the 30 scribes under the Santo Domingo arcade were busy helping Mexicans decipher legal documents and write letters.

One man was seeking "financial assistance" from Mexico City's mayor, others were requesting meetings with influential government officials and still others were having scribes prepare job applications.

Another scribe was helping a woman in a flower-embroidered Mayan dress compose a letter requesting a divorce.

Some of the younger scribes wear sports shirts and whip out pocket calculators when they have to total up figures.

But Don Miguel dresses conservatively in a brown suit and hat. A small man with a neatly trimmed white mustache, he displays a graciousness in tune with his surroundings.

Three little boys race around a sparkling fountain as sunlight glitters on the black stones of the plaza. A half dozen uniformed boot cleaners equipped with shaded chairs line the south side of the square.

At the north end of the plaza, the baroque Santo Domingo Church tilts wildly, a victim of Mexico City's spongy subsoil. To the east, stands a colonial-era building with 25-foot wooden double-doors tattooed with iron studs.

Crowded under the arcade with the public scribes are two dozen printers with hand presses who specialize in calling cards and wedding invitations.

For more than 46 years, from early morning to dusk, the plaza has been Don Miguel's work place.

"Someone comes by and looks us over and decides which of us will do the best work," he says. "My clients always leave happy."

Don Miguel likes to discuss the merits of various typewriters — when he started out, "only Remingtons were used," but now he works with an old upright Olivetti — and he recalls how people "lined up waiting for us" in the old days.

"There were more clients than we could attend to. We didn't even have time to chat. And now, look," he says, nodding toward the line of scribes, many of them idle.

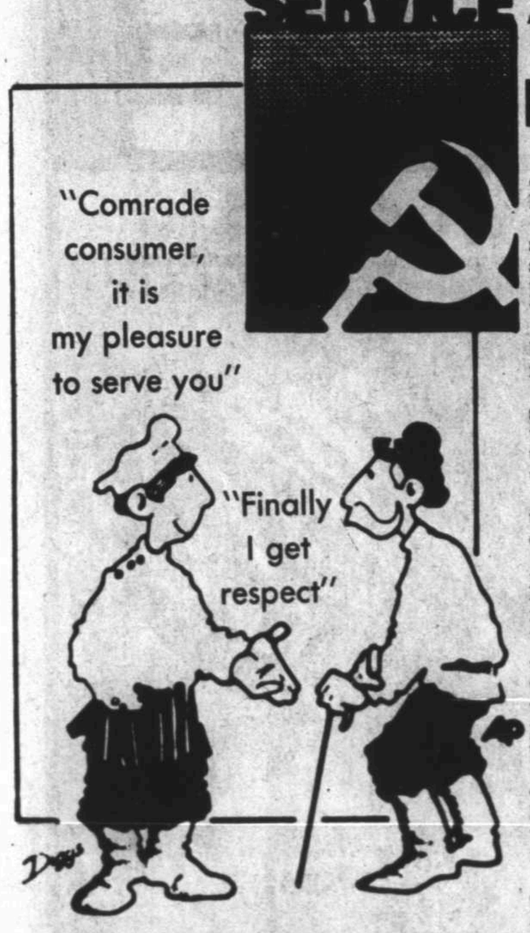

He prepared for his profession by studying Spanish grammar, typing and other subjects at a private academy. But Don Miguel says "love letters are an art" learned best through living.

He says some young men who know how to read and write still come to him because they want a love letter that will be certain "to please the one who is to receive it."

He charges 40 to 50 pesos (25 to 30 cents) for a one-page letter, in contrast to 10 to 15 pesos years back "when that was money." He says each scribe charges "according to his ability."

Don Miguel earns about 450 pesos a day, the equivalent of $3.

SERVICE Andropov initiates campaign to provide Muscovites better services

MOSCOW (AP) — Waving her broken scissors at the deputy director, the Moscow matron demanded to know why his shop would not repair them.

Her daughter had the same kind of manicure scissors repaired last week at the same first-floor scissors stall in the "House of Services Central Repair Enterprise." But today, she complained to the House of Services official, the clerk told her to go elsewhere.

"If there are more cases like that clerk, they should be eliminated immediately," the unhappy woman insisted.

The scene, witnessed by a Western reporter at the seven-floor repair center on Novoslobodskaya Street, was an everyday Moscow encounter, but one with an unusual ending: The woman got action from the deputy director.

Ordinarily in the Soviet Union, customers who venture more than a docile inquiry at a shop risk a stream of abuse.

But since Yuri V. Andropov became Communist Party chief, the state-run news media have been trumpeting the ruling Politburo's campaign for "labor discipline," including better services for the public.

The authorities appear to be serious, and a revolution of sorts is under way in the shops of Moscow. At the House of Services last week, a delegation from the Moscow Communist Party City Committee was poring over the center's customer complaint logs for the third day.

The government may not be out to make Moscow a consumer's paradise, but better service is one way it hopes to tackle a costly national problem: the need for workers to sneak off the job for hours at a time to buy food, have repairs made or run other errands.

Kremlin leaders are concerned over labor laxity and other inefficiencies. According to statistics released last month, industrial output grew only 2.8 percent in 1982, compared with 3.4 percent in 1981.

Andropov showed his determination to boost productivity Monday by visiting a Moscow metal-working plant, where he talked with workers and supervisors and hammered away at the discipline theme.

The official news agency Tass said Andropov also heard complaints from the workers about shoddy materials, poor training of new employees and the burden of hazardous work on women.

Moscow consumers seem to believe the new policy means they will now get some respect.

A young woman shopping at the Yelisyev food shop near the Kremlin was asked whether she expects an improvement in service.

"In my opinion there will be, because it must be done," she said, stressing "must." Asked how it would affect her, she smiled and said, "It will give me more personal time."

The middle-age woman with the scissors said her daughter first noticed the change.

"She was here Thursday. She was so happy she called me at home and said everything was like a piece of cake, a miracle, like being on another planet," the mother said. "Everything was taken care of immediately, on the spot."

After she appealed to Deputy Director Oleg Kontor, he telephoned the scissors stall. The clerk complained that the woman had threatened to get everyone at the stall fired. Kontor smoothed over the dispute, and told the woman to return to the stall, where her scissors would be repaired.

"People are starting to feel the power," Kontor said. "The customers have become more demanding, especially during the lunch hour. But we are going to meet their demands."

The House of Services, where Muscovites take small appliances, shoes, clocks and watches, jewlery, skis and other items to the appropriate state shop, recently eliminated its one-hour closure for lunch. It is open from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m., but Kontor has announced a 9 p.m. closing time.

Employees are being instructed not only to be more efficient, but also more polite, the deputy director said.

Will things really change?

"Definitely, because it is time for it. The complaints were increasing, so they decided to stop it," he said. "It is being done to satisfy the demands of the people. I can say with certainty that my workers have become better."

Flue catches man

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio (AP) — A 24-year-old man who got stuck in the chimney of a country club said he was only trying to make a delivery. But police didn't believe him, and charged him with burglary.

"We read him his rights when he was standing on the damper inside the fireplace," said police Capt. Earl Smith after Michael Linton was arrested Tuesday.

Linton was found by Forest Hills Country Club custodian Bill Steele, who said he heard a voice from the fireplace asking, "Hey, give me a cigarette before they take me to jail."

Correction

A story on page 10B of last Wednesday's edition of the Midland Reporter-Telegram incorrectly stated that former Democratic Rep. Phil Gramm of College Station had received more than $400,000 in contributions from political action committees for the Feb. 12 special election.

In that election for his former House seat, Gramm in fact received only $58,000 in contributions from political action committees by Jan. 23. He received $433,880 from private individual contributors.

The Reporter-Telegram regrets the error.

Doctors transplant mismatched bone marrow

NEW YORK (AP) — Doctors at Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center have succeeded in transplanting genetically mismatched bone marrow in humans, an often deadly procedure until a new technique they developed made it safe.

Dr. Richard O'Reilly, chief of the Bone Marrow Transplant Service at the research hospital, called the technique "a first step" to the wider use of bone marrow transplants to cure leukemia, some blood diseases, immune deficiencies and some congenital defects that together afflict about 14,000 people a year.

Jeffrey Grabelsky, whose 17-month-old daughter Shira was among the first to undergo such a transplant, said the year-long ordeal showed him "the best and worst of Western medicine."

The "best" was his daughter's survival after a severe attack of pneumonia almost killed her. Shira, the name means "Song" in Hebrew, suffered from severe combined immune deficiency, a rare blood disease in which the victim has no immunity to disease. It strikes about 60 people a year. To such children, who are hospitalized in sterile plastic bubbles, a common cold can be deadly.

The "worst," Grabelsky said, was not being able to touch his daughter without wearing a mask and sterile gloves for the 11 months she was in the hospital, and the insensitivity of doctors involved in experimental surgery.

"They've got big things on their minds — how to reconstitute one's immunilogical system," Grabelsky said. "To think about how you feel about it, or how your child feels, that is secondary to them. I'm not faulting them for that."

The "big things" Grabelsky talked about was the procedure in which bone marrow was successfully transplanted into recipients, despite genetic differences between the patient and the donor. Bone marrow is transplanted in blood disorders because it is where new blood cells are made.

Grabelsky, 31, and his wife, Karen Leitson, 32, of Syracuse, N.Y., brought their daughter to New York in March 1982, after Shira contracted pneumonia. Tests showed she had severe combined immune deficiency. But no family members were genetically matched.

Genetically mismatched marrow contains cells that "attack" healthy cells in the recipient — they literally reject the patient, causing something called Graft Versus Host disease and death.

A cell in bone marrow called the "T-cell" causes the GVH disease. In Sloan-Kettering's new procedure, the T-cell is removed by injecting a soybean extract into a vial containing the marrow. The extract merges with the T-cells, which become heavy and drift to the bottom of the vial, where they can be removed.

Swiss burn signal fires to protest planned army training area

ROTHENTHURM, Switzerland (AP) — As they did in medieval times, signal fires are burning again on the mountainsides here, a traditional Swiss warning of approaching danger.

They are being set by farmers and ecologists who perceive the danger in these modern times as coming not from abroad but from Switzerland's army.

As so often in the past when signal fires burned, the struggle is over land — 435 acres used for farming and part of a nature sanctuary. The army wants to turn it into a training ground.

The dispute has taken on national dimensions, with some incidents of violence.

The signal fires, first seen in early January, are being lit by the army's opponents, who include the Swiss chapter of the World Wildlife Fund.

The land is in the cantons of Schwyz and Zug, sites of several ancient battles over land in the stormy history of Swiss independence.

Farmer Adolf Besmer spearheads the opposition. While not setting a time limit, the army, seeking to expropriate what it cannot buy, has announced that Besmer, his pregnant wife and their two children must leave the leased land worked by his family for the last 150 years.

"They'll have to drag me off by force, along with my animals," vows Besmer. "I've refused to negotiate with the army and intend to continue doing so."

Besmer, 31, heads the Action Committee against the Rothenthurm Training Area, one of several regional citizen's coalitions against the planned training area.

The committee and the Wildlife Fund seek a national referendum on the issue and are trying to gather the 100,000 signatures needed to call one.

Mayor Josef Beeler of Rothenthurm is another opponent. His community of 2,000, bordering on the disputed land, voted 375-238 in a 1980 general assembly to oppose the army plan.

Beeler said a farmer wants "to farm where his roots are," not on land offered elsewhere by the army in compensation.

While the army has succeeded in purchasing about 120 acres so far, most landowners are holding out, despite the threat of expropriation.

Members of the Korporation Oberaegeri, a cooperative founded in the 16th century and which owns about 170 acres of the land, voted 496-354 against selling last December. Another old cooperative here voted 104-0 against selling its 32 acres.

About 40 other individuals with title to a total of about 100 acres also are refusing to sell, including 13 who farm on the land sought by the army.

But the proposed project also has its advocates, who insist it will bring increased prosperity to Rothenthurm.

They argue that the army has pledged to favor local contractors when it starts to build and that local shopkeepers will see the long-term benefits of extra business from the 1,000 recruits who will be living nearby.

The issue has driven "a wedge into some families and friendships," says Mayor Beeler, causing wounds "so deep that it might take them generations to heal."

Spokesmen for Schwyz and Zug say their cantons back the proposed training area.

Originally a regional dispute, it has spilled over into the letters sections of many Swiss newspapers, assuming a strident political tone in the process.

"Why do we elect (our politicians) when our wishes remain ignored," demanded a reader in a Lucerne newspaper.

A letter to Zurich's Tages-Anzeiger asked whether government reluctance to oppose the army was a sign that the Swiss are living "in a much-vaunted democracy that doesn't really exist."

Another reader sees those opposing the training area as "part of a centrally elected and financed" conspiracy against the armed forces in which all Swiss able-bodied men 20 to 50 years old must do some yearly service.

This conspiracy "has set itself the goal of undermining the determination of the Swiss to defend themselves... and of ultimately liquidating our army," the reader charged.

Such fears are bred by the sporadic violence which has accompanied the dispute. On Jan. 12, arsonists set fire to two trucks in a military motorpool about 40 miles northeast of Rothenthurm.

Last Oct. 7, vandals set fire to army property in Rothenthurm, causing significant damage to several buildings.

Police in Bern, the national capital, defused a pipe bomb in the doorway of a Defense Ministry building Jan. 24.

Female pilot biding time until she pins on captain's bars

AP Laserphoto

Emily Warner, 43, at the controls of a Frontier Airlines 737 which she co-pilots. Warner, who expects to be soon promoted to captain,became the first female commericial pilot 10 years ago.

DENVER (AP) — When women first began debating the relative merits of "Miss," "Ms." or "Mrs.," Emily Warner decided that only one title would do: captain.

Ten years ago, she became the first woman to pilot a commercial jet, and today, more than 7,000 flight hours later, she wears monikers such as "first officer" with easy grace.

Ms. Warner co-pilots a Boeing 737 jet for Frontier Airlines, and expects to be promoted to captain within a year or so.

"I can hardly wait," she said. "It's such a beautiful plane to fly."

Her dreams don't stop there. At age 43, she still has 17 years left to fly a commercial plane, and plans to spend at least a few of them in the captain's seat of the "Super 80," the latest addition to the Frontier fleet. Then, she says, she may write a book.

Before she was hired by Frontier, she worried that she might be too old to break the sex barrier among commercial airline pilots.

"Then my attitude changed," she said in an interview in Denver, where she lives. "I realized there was no reason why they shouldn't have a woman in the cockpit."

Frontier couldn't find a reason either, and hired her on Jan. 29, 1973.

It all started on a crisp winter day 25 years ago, when then 18-year-old Emily Hanahan took her first flight over the snowswept Colorado Rockies. She had thought she wanted to be a stewardess — until she entered the cockpit.

"My whole life changed," she said. "The look, the smell of it, everything was right."

The next week, she signed up for flying lessons at Denver's Stapleton International Airport, using almost half of her $30-a-week salary as a department store employee to pay the tuition.

Her family, including four brothers and a twin sister, who is a captain in the Air Force, worried at first about her flying lessons, but relaxed after she made her first solo flight.

"I took my parents for a ride, and my dad had never been in a plane before," she said. "It was wonderful. He became my biggest fan.

"He always said, 'If you keep this up, you will amount to something someday.'"

She became a flight instructor at Stapleton, then took the big step up to the uniform of a Frontier Airlines pilot 10 years ago.She won her captain's rating flying a Frontier Twin Otter.

Becoming a commercial pilot thrust her into the public eye, more than she was comfortable with at first.

"For a long time, I was just concentrating on getting that job," she said recently, sitting in a 737 at Stapleton. "But once I got it, it did hit me that there were a whole lot of people watching me. I had a great sense of responsibility...I certainly didn't want to fail.

"I tried not to think about what a big deal this was for women in aviation."

Now, however, Ms. Warner is one of dozens of female commercial airline pilots.

She still hears an occasional, "Gosh, we got a girl in the cockpit," she said. But being a woman at the controls really isn't an issue any more. These days, she is just "part of the crew."

She is the mother of an 18-year-old son, Stan, by a previous marriage. Her husband, Julius, works in real estate.

The two met — how else? — in the air.

"He was taking flying lessons with me," she said, "and pretty soon we began to go to lunch more than we flew.

"It took him many years to get his license," she added, laughing.

Juggling the roles of pilot, mother and wife doesn't show in her face, which is virtually unlined save for crinkles around her hazel eyes.

'Burning' Texas issue

The fire that raced through the century-old Texas Capitol early Sunday morning should have served to awaken state officials and residents to the fire danger inherent in the structure. Sunday's fire claimed the life of a 23-year-old New Caney man and threatened to destroy one of the state's great historic structures.

Even though the state Capitol is constructed of granite, the fire stayed ahead of firemen and caused vast damage because numerous remodelings performed through the years have created false ceilings and air spaces that impede efforts of firefighters and feed flames. Austin Fire Chief Brady Pool termed the Capitol "a very fine building" but virtually a fire trap.

Fortunately the fire broke out during the early morning hours in Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby's Capitol apartment. Had the fire occurred when the Legislature was conducting business, the results might have been even more tragic.

Gov. Mark White summed up the situation adequately immediately after the fire when he noted, "This building is over 100 years old. They've made a lot of renovations from time to time that didn't take into account problems like this. This is a real good opportunity to make those checks."

Lt. Gov. Hobby, whose daughter was in the apartment at the time of the fire, said, "There are too many air drafts. We need to reassess our total fire protection."

They're both correct. The people of the state will be negligent if they do not take heed of this warning to remove fire dangers throughout the Capitol building. One life has already been lost to fire. Steps should be taken to make that life the last tragedy.

Incident in Beirut

The face-off last Thursday in Beirut between a U.S. Marine captain and an Israeli lieutenant colonel was a regrettable incident, but it must not be blown out of proportion by the press, the military or the public.

According to the American side, an Israeli tank patrol crossed into Marine territory. Captain Charles B. Johnson told the Israeli tank commander to halt and, when two tanks broke away, Johnson drew his pistol and said if the tank wanted to pass, "You're going to have to kill me."

By the Israeli account, the sector was in Israeli military territory, and Lt. Col. Rafi Landsberg answered, "Don't worry. I won't kill you," and withdrew.

This was the sixth confrontation between Marines and Israelis in the area. After it was over, diplomats decided on the proper boundary lines and marked them with colored barrels. A hotline was installed between U.S. and Israeli commanders to forestall future confusion and disagreements.

But not before the news was beamed around the world that the Israelis and Americans were at each other's throats.

We are not. Peacekeeping is a difficult mission anywhere, and in the Middle East it is even more complicated and perilous. The actions of soldiers, who must be aggressive in carrying out dangerous orders, must not be taken as a symbol of relations between nations. The deep and historic friendship between Israel and America is in more danger today than it has ever been. It must not be compromised by this incident, but neither must a repeat be allowed to occur.

Another View:

U.S. recovery-bound

President Reagan declared last fall that "the nation is recovery-bound and the world knows it." This month has brought the best evidence yet of the country's emergence from the long dark night of one of its worst recessions.

The Labor Department reported Feb. 4 that unemployment in January declined from 10.8 percent to 10.2 percent, or 10.4 percent not counting the military personnel who were included in the jobless figures for the first time.

The traditionally cautious Congressional Budget Office forecast in its annual economic report that the economy will grow 4 percent in 1983 and 4.7 percent in 1984 — exceeding the Reagan administration predictions.

These developments follow an upturn in the government's Index of Leading Indicators, a compilation of measures designed to show future economic trends. It jumped 1.5 percent in December, the biggest rise in two years.

This prompted the president of the American Business Conference to observe: "The long awaited recovery is no longer illusory." Combined with other positive statistics, he said, it "implies that December marked the turning point for the economy."

The Commerce Department the other day said that construction spending rose 1.4 percent in December and orders to American factories for new manufactured goods rose 4.8 percent, providing grist for the recovery of the hard-hit industrial sector.

Assembly plants are being reopened by General Motors, Ford, and Chrysler, and GM is recalling 21,000 furloughed workers as auto sales perk up — along with retail sales and activity in the housing industry, which has led the way out of past recessions.

The Commerce Department anticipates "vigorous growth" in residential housing "as lower mortgage interest rates are reflected in further increases in housing starts." Builders are expected to start about 1.5 million housing units in 1983.

Even Federal Reserve Board Chairman Paul Volcker, usually tight with optimism, ventured the other day that "progress on inflation and productivity gains point to the possibility of a really extended recovery."

Volcker made his comments as the Reagan administration sent Congress its mid-term economic report forecasting sustained economic growth over the next six years — "assuming we do not see a repeat of the mistakes of the past."

Martin Feldstein chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, who presented the report to legislators, warned against mistakes such as loosely pumping money into the economy through the federal budget or the Federal Reserve.

He also warned that delaying this year's installment of the president's tax cut would tell consumers to cut their spending just when it's needed for recovery, and that any major jobs program would add to budget deficits while having tardy results.

Estimated federal deficits of $200 billion and $189 billion this fiscal year and next darken the economic outlook, along with unemployment, which is expected to remain in double digits, and strains on the international financial system.

But the positive signs give Americans reason to move forward in 1983 with confidence. If enough businesses and consumers act on it in their economic decisions, we can do far more than moaning about the remaining problems to revive industry and put people back to work.

— The Sacramento Union

ART BUCHWALD

Will they ever tell good news?

WASHINGTON — Larry Speakes, as all presidential press secretaries seem to do when their boss is in trouble, took out after the press the other day. In a speech he complained about coverage of the bad economic news by the media, as opposed to the good news.

Art Buchwald

When inflation was at 13 percent, he complained, the media reported it. Now that it is 3 percent (that's Larry's figure, not mine) the press has ignored the fact that the Reagan administration licked the country's number one problem.

Speakes also questioned the public opinion polls that indicated the American people considered unemployment the present No. 1 problem.

"And why not?" he asked his audience. "Every night we have seen the unemployed line up and march across the television screen, and I certainly would not make light of the people who are unemployed ... But why is it that 10.8 percent is news, but 89.2 percent of Americans who are employed and enjoy the highest standard of living is not?"

Larry posed a good question. Why aren't the news programs covering the employed people instead of the unemployed? And how would they handle it, if they did?

"This is Tom Brokaw in New York. The big news tonight is that 89.2 percent of all Americans who want jobs have them. Irving R. Levine reports on the plight of one of these men in Scarsdale, New York."

"This is Irving R. Levine and I'm standing here with Frank Davis, broker for E.F. Hutton, who is one of the millions of people now employed in the United States. To the Reagan administration, Davis is just another statistic. But in human terms, he and his family tell the real story of what is going on in America today.

"Frank, this is a lovely house you have."

"Yup. It's worth $250,000. But since I'm working, I'm not about to sell it."

"How much do you make a year?"

"With bonuses about $100,000."

"Then you don't have to depend on food stamps, unemployment insurance or use up your savings to keep going?"

"Certainly not. We eat very well, and we have enough money left over to own a boat, and send our kids to private schools, and go out to a good restaurant when it moves us. If the stock market keeps up the way it is, we might buy a second home in East Hampton."

"Does being employed make you feel any different than being unemployed?"

"Very much so. It makes me feel good. I like to work, and I enjoy being paid for it, and I'm not mad at anybody."

"How does your wife feel about you being employed?"

"She thinks it's just great. She's very supportive, as are the children, that I'm making it during the recession. I don't know what I'd do without them."

"But don't you get discouraged sometimes and say to yourself, 'I'm sick and tired of working, and I'm going to throw in the towel.'?"

"I imagine the thought has occurred to me. But my wife and I like nice things, and if I threw in the towel, we couldn't afford them. We're going on a ski trip next week to Vail."

"Then you're not angry at President Reagan because you have a job?"

"Why should I be mad at Reagan? He's not to blame because I'm making a good living."

(Cut to Irving R. Levine standing beside the Davis swimming pool, alone.)

"Frank Davis is an example of one of the 89.2 percent of the American working class, blessed with all the things this country has to offer. Unlike the 10.9 percent who are unemployed, he believes in tax cuts, military aid to foreign governments and an increase in defense spending. He may not represent all the employed people in this country, but his story is worth telling because it gives a true picture of what is really going on in the country today.

"Tomorrow we'll talk to another employed person who is doing very well as a golf pro in Palm Springs, California. This is Irving R. Levine in Scarsdale, New York."

WASHINGTON MERRY-GO-ROUND

Ed Wilson greased palms of key officials

WASHINGTON — With a habit he developed in the CIA, renegade agent Edwin P. Wilson was able to lubricate his illicit international business deals by greasing the palms of key officials here and abroad.

Jack Anderson

I reported last week the allegations by a former Wilson aide that he witnessed Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., accept cash payoffs on two occasions. The Justice Department is investigating the allegations, which Thurmond flatly denied.

Another ex-associate claims he witnessed payoffs to several members of Congress. One was actually bold enough to visit Wilson's corporate headquarters in Washington, D.C. and pick up envelopes full of cash.

On one occasion, a senator, no longer in Congress, accepted a payoff in a Capitol Hill bathroom, relates the source. Fearful of discovery, the senator insisted that he and Wilson's courier crowd into a stall, where the swag was passed to the sound of a flushing toilet.

One thing is certain: Wilson knew at least half a dozen members of Congress he felt entitled to ask for favors. One former associate said Wilson sometimes paid off his congressional pals by picking up the salaries of various secretaries.

In most cases, the initial contacts were made at Wilson's sprawling Virginia estate, where the hunting was considered some of the best in the Washington area. Intoxicated by the camaraderie of the sporting life, and impressed by the other movers and shakers who knew Wilson, the congressional guest would figure that his host must be all right.

At least two high-level officials in the Carter White House got to know Wilson that way. One of them may have delayed the investigation of Wilson because of their friendship — or because the prosecutors were getting uncomfortably close to Billy Carter's Libyan shenanigans.

On June 25, 1981, I reported that the Justice Department had evidence that Wilson and his partner, another ex-CIA man named Frank Terpil, were "known to bribe U.S. government officials to enhance their businesses." I referred to a former Energy Department official who subsequently was convicted of taking illegal gratuities from Wilson.

Terpil later told Mike Wallace of "60 Minutes" that he and Wilson had bribed military officers for inside information, that they had also paid off a State Department official for help with false passports.

A former employee of Wilson's told my associate Dale Van Atta how his ex-boss' bribery worked:

"Ed always carried thousands of dollars in his pocket," the source said. "He would often drag me to the bathroom of whatever restaurant we were in and hand me wads of hundred-dollar bills, instructing me what particular job he wanted done.

"He made constant payoffs to a variety of Washington (D.C.) undercover policemen, some of whom would come directly to his office, others of whom we would encounter on late-night visits to the city's watering holes."

The former employee said one or another of Wilson's people would travel to Geneva and withdraw large amounts of cash from Wilson's accounts there. Usually, he said, it was two female employees, but he pulled the courier duty three times himself.

"I flew directly from Geneva to Montreal and followed Ed's careful instructions to go through the customs line manned by someone wearing a multi-colored ribbon," the source recalled. "From Montreal I flew to Dulles Airport, where a special badge signaled the safe customs agent. Ed seemed to have the right people well taken care of."

Some of Wilson's secret, illicit lines of communication into the federal government were almost unbelievable. For example, without too much trouble he could get a full financial readout on just about any American taxpayer from at least one contact in the Internal Revenue Service, whose files are supposedly the most carefully guarded of any federal agency.

LET THEM LIVE: I have made a personal appeal to Gen. Chun Doo Hwan, the president of South Korea, to spare the lives of two young political dissidents.

Their names are Mun Bu Shik and Kim Hyan Jan. They have been sentenced to death for a fire that destroyed the American Cultural Center at Pusan last March, killing one person. U.S. government sources consider the death sentences too severe.

Publicly, the Reagan administration has taken no stand on the fate of Mun and Kim, which is now in the hands of the South Korean Supreme Court. Behind the scenes, though, the State Department has been quietly trying to persuade President Chun to spare the two men's lives. Our diplomats feel that execution would make martyrs of the two men, and would only inflame anti-American sentiment among the Korean people.

What makes the case even stickier is the conviction of Father Choi, a priest who hid Kim. Even though it was the priest who persuaded Kim and Mun to turn themselves in to the authorities, he was sentenced to three years in prison for harboring Kim.

I have urged Chun to commute the two death sentences and set the priest free. They were impetuous youths, not communist subversives.

HEMISPHERE REPORT

U.S. in no-win war effort in El Salvador

WASHINGTON — The United States is helping El Salvador fight a no-win war.

William Giandoni

U.S. military assistance to the strife-torn little Central American country is not intended to enable President Alvaro Magana's regime to beat the Marxist guerrillas on the field of battle.

Quite the contrary.

"We are trying to give it (El Salvador) enough military assistance to hold off the insurgents, not to defeat them militarily, but to prevent them from prevailing while we get on with the reforms," Assistant Secretary of State Thomas O. Enders explained in a recent briefing.

The way career diplomats seem to see it, if Salvadoran political institutions and political habits were changed, presumably to accommodate the Marxists who are the only ones engaged in violent opposition to the existing regime, it would "make the insurgents irrelevant."

There's nothing new about the theory. It dates back at least to the 1950s when the "democratic leftists" were speaking up in favor of the Cuban revolution.

But after Fidel Castro took power in 1959 and they had an opportunity to get to know him, such Latin statesmen as Jose Figueres of Costa Rica and the late Luis Munoz Marin of Puerto Rico, became much less enthusiastic about revolutionaries who shoot their way into office.

Nevertheless, the idea that if only the capitalists would reform their institutions and mend their ways the Marxists would be placated, seems to die hard.

That it has been disproved in Cuba and Nicaragua does not sway its advocates.

In the late 1950s Cubans seemed to feel that if only they could get rid of President Fulgencio Batista, honest elections would be held and all would go well on their Caribbean island. In the late 1970s, Nicaraguans were convinced that if only President Anastasio Somoza were dislodged, they would achieve the democracy the Somoza dynasty had denied them for 45 years.

In both instances, Washington shared their feelings.

Yet things went so badly, so quickly in Nicaragua after July 1979, when Somoza gave up and the Sandinistas took over, that Washington looked with favor on the Oct. 15, 1979, coup that toppled Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero from the Salvadoran presidency, Salvadorans say. The rationale was that Romero had to be removed because he presented too facile a target for the Marxists who were emerging, and eventually took over, in Nicaragua.

Three different juntas ran the country, with lots of advice and some economic and military assistance from the United States, until the elections of March 1982 gave El Salvador a really representative constituent Assembly.

International observers who witnessed the elections were unanimous in proclaiming it a massive, popular repudiation of the Marxist guerrillas.

The United States was surprised, though, that conservative parties, rather than the Christian Democrats, won a majority of the seats in the assembly. U.S. chagrin still shows through in such as the recent State Department report on the situation in El Salvador. The department noted that "centrist forces have dominated on significant occasions in the Assembly," and cited the defeat of a far-rightist resolution "rejecting all dialogue with the FDR-FMLN," the political and military arms of the guerrillas, as an example.

Although President Magana, Defense Minister Gen. Jose Guillermo Garcia and other centrists, as well as the far rightists, have proclaimed there will be no negotiations with the guerrillas, the United States still emphasizes "dialogue," "amnesty," "reconciliation" and the U.S. concern for human rights.

Magana has said that El Salvador has become a U.S. domestic political issue and Garcia has indicated he feels that the United States is mistaken.

For example, during one of the many congressional visitations to El Salvador during the January recess, Garcia complained to a group of U.S. legislators that the Salvadoran armed forces "are expected to go, dressed in white, into a dirty battle imposed by the subversives, and come out without a stain. What really hurts is that interest is shown that only one side not violate human rights, but when they are violated by the subversives against the civil population, it is of no importance."

Nevertheless, El Salvador is making an effort to comply with U.S. conditions. Even El Salvador's critics concede that conditions are improving. Now between 200 and 250 civilians a month are dying in political violence, as opposed to 800 last year, the State Department reported in certifying El Salvador for another 180 days of security assistance.

But, if what Latin military experts say privately is true, and Enders' statement would seem to confirm it, U.S. aid will not permit El Salvador to defeat the Marxists.

Treasurer surprised by query

BILLINGS, Mont. (AP) — The Yellowstone County treasurer was surprised when she received a property tax check asking if she had recently committed an unnatural act with a large animal.

Treasurer May Jenkins admits she sometimes finds "negative comments" scrawled on checks to the county, so managed to be entertained by the latest message.

The payment for $285.12 from the N.B. Hunt Ranch in Dallas arrived earlier this week. Typed on the check was a query: "Have you hugged your cow today?"

'Jimmying' with figures depends on who's doing statistical adjusting

By WALTER R. MEARS

An Analysis

WASHINGTON (AP) — It's the season for seasonal adjustment, and no one has been jimmying with the figures this time.

That about sums up President Reagan's latest appraisal of the sometimes mysterious ways of federal statisticians.

Seasonal adjustment is a system through which the statisticians try to lessen the impact of such predictable changes as harvests, changes in the weather and major holidays.

It proved a boon to the administration when the latest unemployment figures came out, showing a drop in the unemployment rate between December and January. The adjustment sometimes has worked the other way, prompting the president to complain about the system.

The employment picture also was enhanced by a change in the way the government counts, since military personnel stationed in the United States were included for the first time. All of them have jobs, so the unemployment rate was lower for the revision.

With seasonal adjustment, the unemployment rate declined from 10.8 percent in December to 10.2 percent in January when the military is included, 10.4 percent counting only the civilian labor force. Had military personnel been factored into the December rate, it would have been 10.7 percent.

WITHOUT SEASONAL adjustment, the January rate for civilian workers would have been 11.4 percent.

"The figures that they give are the seasonally adjusted and most of the time I've always, I've questioned and said explain that to me, because most of the time the unadjusted figures show more people employed," Reagan said. "But they've used this."

He's done more than question. He has complained that there has to be something wrong when the numbers show unemployment declining and the adjustment shows it increasing. Reagan did so when the unemployment rate showed an increase last March even though there were fewer people out of work than the month before.

"The statisticians in Washington have funny ways of counting," he said then. Reagan said that they had anticipated that unemployment would decline by about 200,000 between February and March 1982, "and when the decrease in unemployment wasn't as big as their projection, even though it decreased they called that an increase in unemployment."

It happened again last May; the unemployment rate went up even though the number of people out of work went down. "I'm not sure that we live in a seasonally adjusted world," Reagan said then.

THE PROCESS CUT the other way in January. The weather was relatively mild, so there was more work to be had outdoors. Because of the recession, Christmas business was off, so fewer holiday workers were hired than in the past. As a result, not too many people were laid off after the holidays.

"The evidence suggests that the seasonal adjustment process may have somewhat exaggerated the December to January change," said Janet L. Norwood, commissioner of labor statistics.

Nonetheless, she said the new unemployment figures showed clear signs of improvement in the labor market.

The government explains seasonal adjustment this way:

"Over the course of a year, the size of the nation's labor force and the levels of unemployment and unemployment undergo sharp fluctuations due to seasonal events such as changes in the weather, reduced or expanded production, harvests, major holidays and the opening and closing of schools. Because these seasonal events follow a more or less regular pattern each year, their influence on statistical trends can be eliminated by adjusting the statistics from month to month."

The change by which military personnel are figured into the unemployment statistics was not prompted by the Reagan administration. It dates back to the report of a review commission while Jimmy Carter still was in the White House.

CARTER'S LABOR Department approved the revision, and Secretary of Labor Raymond J. Donovan did, too. When and if the revised figure comes to be generally accepted as the standard measurement of unemployment, rates will be a bit lower, because it adds about 1.7 million people to the roster of Americans who do have jobs.

"This is only simple justice, because every time someone left the service and didn't have a job, they automatically counted them as unemployed," Reagan said.

In any event, the government still will be issuing figures under the old system, too, with the unemployment rate based on the civilian labor force.

When one of the economic indicators issued by the Bureau of Labor Statistics was changed during the 1980 presidential campaign, Reagan protested. That revision had been a long time in the making, too, but Reagan blamed it on Carter.

It was the inclusion of year-end discounts in automobile prices in the computation of wholesale prices, beginning in October 1980. Because of it, the wholesale price report showed a .2 percent decline. Without the change, it would have showed a .4 percent increase.

Reagan called that a "highly questionable use of official government statistics to sugarcoat the bitter pill that has regularly come from Washington in the line of economic news."

He also said it amounted to the "jimmying of official government statistics."

Udall won't make '84 bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — Rep. Morris K. Udall of Arizona, a past presidential contender who had been eyeing another try, will not seek the Democratic Party's presidential nomination in 1984, according to sources.

Udall

Udall, a party liberal who finished second to Jimmy Carter in five presidential primaries in 1976, was to announce his decision at a news conference today.

But several sources said Tuesday night that Udall, who has Parkinson's disease, decided against the prospects of two years of campaigning. And, they said, he "didn't want to be a spoiler" of other liberal candidates like Sens. Alan Cranston of California and Gary Hart of Colorado.

Udall himself hinted at what his decision would be in a speech to college students here Tuesday night. Recalling his 1976 bid, he said wistfully, "It was a good experience. I just wish I could do it again."

Without saying what it would be, Udall told the students he telephoned former President Carter Tuesday night to tell him of his decision.

Udall, although popular with many Democrats around the country, would have faced a presidential campaign with no organization and little money against others like former Vice President Walter F. Mondale, who have been campaigning actively for a year or more.

The sources who discussed Udall's decision against running did so on the provision that they remain unidentified.

In advance of his appearance at the National Press Club today, aide Mark Brand would say only that the congressman plan to deliver "a highly upbeat" speech discussing his own future as well as that of the Democratic Party, the House and the nation.

A member of the House since 1961, Udall suffers from Parkinson's disease, a gradually debilitating ailment which made walking occasionally difficulty, and caused his hands to shake.

When he began seriously considering whether to run, Udall was examined by a panel of doctors who concluded that despite his affliction, he would be physically fit to serve as president.

"I take my medicine regularly," Udall said when he announced he was considering another presidential race. "I find I'm in good shape. My doctor tells me I should be in good health for the next 12 to 15 years."

He quoted Dr. Tom Chase of the National Institutes of Health, an authority on Parkinson's disease, as telling him, "I have many active and productive years ahead of me."

Udall is closely allied with the liberal wing of the Democratic party, and when Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., announced he would not be a presidential candidate in 1984, Udall announced he would take a close look at running himself.

For several months before that, Udall had traveled to 22 states testing sentiment for a possible White House run.

During the past two months, Udall conferred with family and friends and supporters about running.

Many people close to Udall urged him not to get into the race, even while pledging to support him if he did.

"My wife's state of mind is that she hopes I won't go, but that she'll go if I go," Udall said during the period he was trying to make up his mind.

Sources said between now and 1984, Udall would attempt to become a spokesman for the Democrats in challenging Reagan's economic policies, and also call for broad reforms in political action committees which contribute millions of dollars to congressional and presidential campaigns.

Bendix Corp. chairman announces Allied's second surprise departure

Agee

MORRIS TOWNSHIP, N.J. (AP) — Bendix Corp. chairman William M Agee, who triggered a mammoth takeover war that ended in the sale of his company to Allied Corp., "reached an understanding" with the head of Allied and announced his resignation.

The resignation, effective June 1, was announced by Agee and Allied Chairman Edward L. Hennessy Jr. in a statement released Tuesday by Allied here and at Bendix's Southfield, Mich., headquarters.

It was the second surprise departure of an Allied executive since stockholders of both companies approved the $1.8 billion merger Jan. 31. Bendix announced Monday that company President Alonzo L. McDonald Jr. would "step aside" March 1.

Ireland withdraws from parade

NEW YORK (AP) — The Irish government says it is withdrawing from the St. Patrick's Day parade because the appointment of an admitted IRA gunrunner as grand marshal links the New York City tradition with "support for violence in Ireland."

"We regret that the situation has been created which forces all Irish government representatives and agencies to break with our long record of participation," the Irish Consulate General said in a statement Tuesday night, minutes after Michael Flannery, a gunrunner for the Irish Republican Army, was named grand marshal.

The statement charged that the organizers of the March 17 parade selected as grand marshal a man "who has an avowed personal involvement in sponsoring violence in Ireland...."

Shark deaths remain unexplained

SAN DIEGO (AP) — The deaths of 16 sharks at Sea World apparently were caused by "some unknown contaminant" that probably entered their tanks after being stirred from the ocean by recent storms, officials say.

The mysterious deaths among the 50-shark collection at the marine park began about two weeks ago. Biologists tried frantically to determine what caused the fearsome creatures to suddenly die, with few apparent symptoms and without regard to species.

Studies of tissue and water samples were continuing and incomplete results have not isolated the problem, the park said. Although "higher than normal concentrations" of heavy metals and some other contaminants were found, none was high enough to kill the sharks, the park said.

Placement of flag, statue decided

WASHINGTON (AP) — The last bitterly disputed question surrounding the nation's most controversial monument has been settled: the veterans who opposed putting a statue within the stark black walls of the Vietnam Veterans Memorial won.

Forced to choose between warring camps, the government's Fine Arts Commission decided Tuesday to locate the statue and a flagpole at the side of the memorial — by a pathway in a grove of trees, forming an entrance point.

Those who lost the battle spoke of betrayal and vowed to fight on.

Speed limit law 'unconstitutional'

WOODBURN, Ore. (AP) — Oregon's 55 mph speed limit violates the U.S. Constitution, a justice of the peace says, but the local sheriff says he plans to ignore the ruling.

Justice Dewey Newton said Tuesday that the speed limit, imposed in 1974 by the Oregon Transportation Commission because of a fuel shortage, is unconstitutional because the state's failure to review the fuel supply situation is arbitrary and unfair.

But Marion County Sheriff Chuck Foster said the ruling would not affect enforcement of speed laws in the county. District Attorney Chris Van Dyke said he is certain the ruling will be appealed.

Prosecutor calls man 'storyteller'

ALBUQUERQUE (AP) — A prosecutor told a jury here that Marion Albert Pruett was "a skillful and prolific storyteller," who beat his wife to death with a hammer and had no regard for human life.

Assistant District Attorney George Guzowski Tuesday also said the state will produce a witness who would testify he saw Pruett hit his wife on the head with a hammer.

LAS CRUCES (AP) — Albuquerque attorney William Marchiondo today faced more questions concerning material on FBI wiretap tapes which have become a focal point of a $17 million libel lawsuit.

EPA counsel violated law, official says

WASHINGTON (AP) — A chairman of a House subcommittee claims the general counsel of the Environmental Protection Agency violated the law by trying to impede congressional interviews with agency employees, a congressional source says.

The source said Rep. John Dingell, D-Mich., made the charges against EPA general counsel Robert Perry after the staff from a House Energy subcommitee tried to interview agency employees Feb. 2.

According to the source, who spoke only on condition that he not be identified, the subcommittee staff had scheduled interviews beginning Feb. 2 with 25 EPA employees about the Stringfellow disposal site in Glen Avon, Calif., which EPA lists as California's worst disposal site.

Dingell chairs both the full Energy Committee and its oversight subcommittee.

The Energy Committee's oversight subcommittee is the same one that initiated the unresolved contempt proceedings against EPA Administrator Anne M. Gorsuch for withholding documents in its investigation of the handling of the "Superfund" earmarked for the cleaning up of toxic waste dumps.

Imposter steals banquet show

BY TED BATTLES
Sports Editor

Scheduled Master-of-Ceremonies Cactus Pryor was late showing up, so a Dr. Morley, a TV mogul from England in West Texas to explore the feasibility of bringing American sports to "British telly", volunteered to pinch hit until the tardy Cactus showed up for the annual Midland Sports Banquet at Green Tree Country Club Tuesday night.

As it turned out, he stole the show with his impartial digs at American football and The Crown. And during the pre-banquet mixer volunteers eagerly gave the Very English Doctor a quick course in Texas and American sports.

Alas, it turned out Dr. Morley, after his monologue, was exposed as an imposter, none less than Cactus in disguise.

"I WANT to thank Bill Rigney for telling me all about the Alamo..." he said in exposing his hoax. "And Gil Brandt for filling me in on Lady Bird's TV monopoly in Austin...I've been working for that monopoly for 35 years."

He also thanked Bobby Layne for telling him about a Chicken Ranch he frequented in central Texas, but he took exception to Kelly Cox's explanation of football in the U. S.

"It takes a lot of guts for a TCU man to explain the game of football to someone from the University of Texas."

Otherwise, the banquet went off without a hitch in anybody's swing. Chicago Cubs General Manager Dallas Green and Farm Director Gordon Goldsberry expounded on the National League club's building program and the importance of the Midland Texas League club to Chicago's future. Midland fans met young Tom Harmon, Midland's new manager, whom Green described as a "hard-nosed guy who will give the young players at Midland the direction and discipline" they need at that stage of their development.

THE COWBOYS' director of player personnel Gil Brandt and former Redskins' coach Jack Pardee, now a Midlander, represented football at the fete. Referring to John Riggins' decision to sit out a season, Gil said, "If Riggins hadn't fumbled, Jack Pardee, and not Joe Gibbs, would have been coaching the world champion Redskins this year."

Allie Reynolds, a fireball pitcher from the Yankees glory days of the 1950s, was 7-2 in World Series with the Yankees, "I made as much in six World Series as they make nowadays in one."

For the most part, Allie, now an Oklahoma engineering consultant and part owner of the Oklahoma City American Association team, favors the direction baseball has taken. He doesn't even envy the big money players get nowadays. "The money they get doesn't bother me. But I do question the long term contracts. Otherwise, baseball still uses a round ball and round bat and they tell you to hit it square."

BILL STEIN, Texas Ranger pinch hitter extraordinary, predicted better days for the American League club, blaming injuries for some of the troubles in 1982. "We've got to be better this year. In fact, I think we'll be contenders. We just weren't as bad as our record last year."

In view of Dallas' third straight loss in the NFC finals, Brandt dealt with charges by critics that quarterback Danny White "will never win a Super Bowl for the Cowboys. Danny's problem is that in succeeding Roger Staubach as quarterback, he gave Dallas fans too much, too soon. He was 12-4 in 1980 and 12-4 again in 1981. He gave the Cowboys the lead against San Francisco in 1981. The defense just couldn't hold it."

He also cited the reason why the Cowboys, in this era of parity when rules legislate against continued success, remain a contender year-after-year —Tom Landry. "When we draft we go after people with good character. People who are smart and people who are stable."

GREEN, referring to Chicago's continuing relationship with Midland, said, "We feel fortunate to have the facility and fans we have here in Midland. And we are grateful to Max (Christensen) and Bernie (Lankford) for sticking with us."

As for the progress under the new Chicago Cubs ownership, Goldsberry pointed out, "In 1981, the Cub farm teams, collectively, finished 20 games under .500. This year we added one Class A club, and, collectively, we finished 20 games over .500."

MHS in tie for 1st

Pannell's buzzer shot beats OHS

By ROBERT BRUNDAGE
Sports Writer

"I knew it was in. I've seen those things too many times and I knew it was in," said Midland High Coach Jack Stephenson after Johnny Pannell's 15-foot jumper at the buzzer gave Midland a 59-58 win over Odessa High at Langford Chaparral Center Tuesday night. The win gave Midland a share of first in District 4-5A.

Calling it a come-from-behind victory doesn't seem to fit the total outlook of the game, although that's what MHS did. After four ties in the first quarter, the Bulldogs scored first to break each one, the Bulldogs never gave up the lead until the final seconds.

With 10 seconds remaining, Bulldog James Pitts was hit with his fifth personal foul, sending Howard Harris to the line to shoot a one-and-one. Midland High held a one-point lead, 57-56.

Before Harris could get off his first shot, Stephenson called for a time out to plan the strategy based on the assumption Harris would put the Bronchos into the lead.

Harris didn't, but Boyd Cowan did. The free throw missed its mark and Midland High missed the rebound. Cowan got it underneath the basket and put it in for a 58-57 lead with about six seconds left.

The Bulldogs put Stephenson's plan into effect. Doug Hixon got the inbounds pass to Tony Carrasco who threw the ball down court to Pannell. According to Stephenson, Pannell was supposed to look for "a cutter underneath the basket and if one wasn't there, put it up."

Pannell didn't have time to look. He went up and fired the shot that caused the screaming Odessa High fans to fall into stunned silence while Midland fans went crazy.

"I was ready for it," said Pannell about the pass that came to him. "I was expecting it. All I could see was that guy coming (an OHS defender) and I put it up. I had looked at the clock and there were only six seconds left and then I saw the ball coming so I took it. That was a heck of an assist."

Carrasco described, "I threw the ball down court and Johnny put it up. It was very pretty. It had a nice arc on it. I didn't think it was going to go in at first and then it seemed drop right through."

AFTER FIGHTING off the four ties, Midland High pulled out to a 16-13 first quarter lead and was up by 10 at the half, 33-23.

OHS, paced by Joe Terry who led all scorers with 22, started clawing its way back in the third quarter, outscoring the Bulldogs 14-11. Two quick Midland buckets at the start of the final frame punched the lead to 11, 48-38, before the Bronchos made their final run.

Harris added to Terry's scoring with 12 points while MHS got double figures from Pannell and Hixon with 17 each and David McFarland with 10.

"We became too deliberate in the fourth quarter," said Stephenson. "We weren't looking for our shots, we were looking to run off time. We passed up too many shots in the final quarter."

Too deliberate or not, 20-point victory or a one-pointer, Stephenson was still happy. Going into the game, Midland High and San Angelo trailed Odessa High and Abilene High by one game. Abilene's 61-53 loss to San Angelo caused dded celebration in the Midland High locker room.

Friday The Bulldogs travel to San Angelo and Odessa hosts Abilene, showdowns which will narrow the first place congestions.

The junior varsity also posted a buzzer-shot victory over OHS Tuesday night, 52-50 while the MHS sophomores suffered a defeat.

Iowa State upsets Tigers

By Associated Press

Everything went in for Iowa State's Barry Stevens, even a 18-foot "prayer shot" at the buzzer that gave the Cyclones a 73-72 overtime upset over 10th-ranked Missouri.

"We had a hand in his face on the last shot and it still went in," said Missouri Coach Norm Stewart. "It looked short, but it got there. We tried everybody in the dugout, but couldn't get Stevens stopped."

COLLEGE ROUNDUP

The sophomore forward finished with 40 points and halted Missouri's record string of 11 Big Eight victories on the road. It also snapped Iowa State's 10-game losing streak to Missouri as the Tigers dropped their first conference game of the season.

"As I was fading away, I was just praying it would go in," Stevens said of his winning shot, "and I had a gut feeling it would."

In other games involving ranked teams, No.12 Villanova beat Connecticut 86-79 and No.13 Kentucky crushed Mississippi State 88-67.

Iowa State gained possession of the ball for the final shot after Missouri's Mark Dressler missed the first of a one-and-one free throw opportunity with 12 seconds remaining in the extra session. The Cyclones called timeout with nine seconds left, then worked the ball to Stevens, who sank the winning shot over the outstretched arms of Missouri's Ron Jones.

"This is the greatest win in Iowa State's history and one of my greatest wins as a coach," said Iowa State Coach Johnny Orr. "We had to have a good night out of Barry and we got it. He was phenomenal."

Missouri had a chance to win the game in regulation when Jon Sundvold, an 88-percent free throw shooter for the season, stepped to the line for two shots with six seconds remaining. He made the first to tie the score at 65, but missed the second.

Steve Stipanovich led Missouri, 18-4 overall and 6-1 in Big Eight play, with 26 points. Prince Bridges came off the bench to score 20 points and Sunvold added 17.

Top Twenty

Senior guard Stewart Granger scored 24 points, including 10 in a three-minute stretch, to spark Villanova over Big East rival Connecticut. John Pinone added 16 and Mike Mulquin 13 for the victorious Wildcats, now 15-4 overall and 8-2 in league play. Connecticut, 9-11 and 2-7, was paced by freshman guard Earl Kelley with 20 points.

Kenny Walker came off the bench to score 23 points and lead Kentucky's Southeastern Conference victory over Mississippi State. Kentucky increased its record to 15-5 — 5-6 in conference play.

"The other players are really gaining a lot of confidence in Kenny Walker," said Kentucky Coach Joe B. Hall. "They are taking the ball to him and looking for him in the zone."

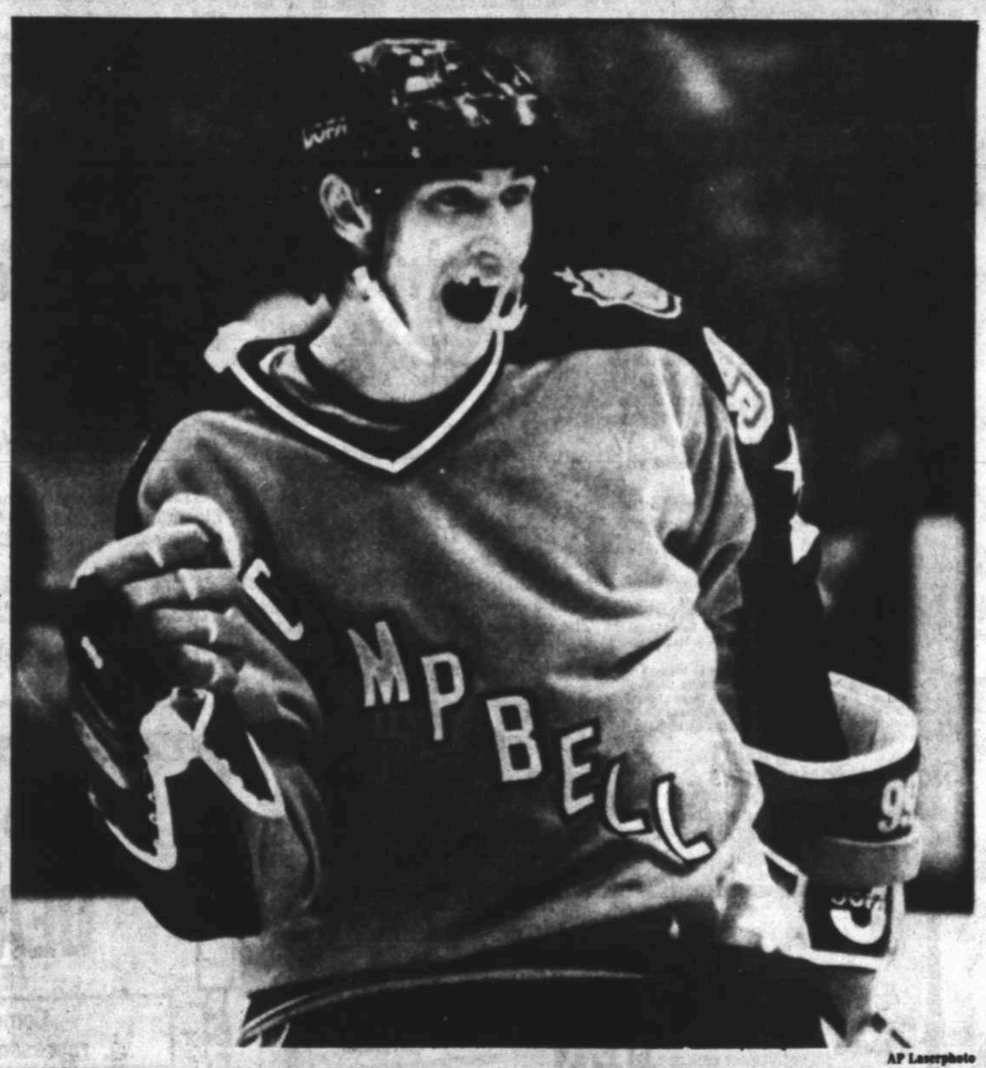

A freshman forward, Walker had 12 points and 10 rebounds in the first half. Derrick Hord added 15 points for Kentucky, while Jeff Malone, the SEC's leading scorer, led the Bulldogs with 26 points.

Other Games

Dwayne Johnson's 16 points, including two free throws with 26 seconds left, gave Marquette a 53-50 victory over Old Dominion.

Johnson's free throws gave the Warriors, 15-5, a 51-48 lead.

Old Dominion, 12-7, was led by sophomre Charlie Smith, who scored all but two of his 18 points in the second half.

Panthers top Lee to inch near 1st

By CHAD PUERLING
Sports Writer

ODESSA — In Midland Lee's only District 4-5A victory the Rebels jumped ahead of Odessa Permian 6-0 in the opening quarter and held on to win 36-33. But Monday night the Panthers reversed the situation, jumping to a 9-0 lead on the way to a 37-27 win.

The victory moved Coach Charles Pattillo's fifth place Panthers to to within one game of the district lead behind Midland High, San Angelo, Big Spring and Odessa High at 7-4.

For Lee, 1-10, it was a another nail in the coffin reserved for last place finishers.

THE REBELS, who have been playing better, or at least, closer games of late, were within reach of victory.

Trailing by as many as 11 points in the third period, Lee cut the gap to three, 24-21, with just over six minutes to play.

"Yes I was worried at that point," Patillo said, "I was worried about the momentum of the game."

But Lee got only one basket in its next seven possessions and quickly fell behind by 10.

Permian co-captain, Paul Peacock, who had been held to three points, came alive to spark the Panther rally with three baskets in just over three minutes.

DESPITE LEE'S fourth quarter surge, Rebel coach Paul Stuckler felt the game was lost in the opening period.

We missed a lot of shots early," he said. "And I'm talking about some easy shots. Layups. Shots that are easier than layups. We just missed everything."

Indeed, the Rebels hit only one of seven attempts in the first quarter and three of 10 in the second.

"We aren't a great shooting ball club," Stueckler said, "But we can shoot better than that."

Lee's best period was the third when the Rebels hit four of nine shots but dropped another three points to Permian.

The Rebels finished hitting on 13 of 40 shots for 32.5 per cent.

In their first meeting Lee hit 10 of 18 for 56 per cent.

The other major factor in the game was rebounds.

According to Patillo, the Panthers hit the boards for 29 while Lee's stats showed the Rebels gathered in only 18 carroms.

"THEY GOT some good transfers from Ector," Stueckler said. "I know Hendrix is a transfer and I think Logan is too. They really help with their quickness."

Rocky Hendrix and Paul Logan led the Panthers with 12 and 11 points respectively. Derek Westbrook was the only Rebel in double figures with 14, all from the field.

The Rebel junior varsity lost to Permian 73-60. Alton Davis had 13 points for Lee.

Green Bay Packers' Starr disappointed with extension

GREEN BAY, Wis. (AP) — Coach Bart Starr says he is disappointed that the Green Bay Packers' executive committee awarded him only a one-year exention of his contract with the National Football League club.

Starr, whose team reached the NFL playoffs in 1982 for the first time in his eight seasons as coach, had one more year remaining on his contract. The extension awarded Tuesday means he is under contract through the 1984 season.

Asked if he was disappointed that the extension was not for a longer period, Starr said, "Yes, I am."

"We apparently haven't earned the confidence of our people to a point where they feel like a longer contract is appropriate," he said. "But we'll just keep working until we do.

"We'll continue our program," he said. "I don't really have a lot to say about it. It affords us an opportunity to continue our building process. There's continuity, and that's important."

Starr, the Packer quarterback on five NFL championship teams in the 1960s, has a 44-68-3 regular-season record in eight years as coach of the team.

However, the Packers are 11-5-1 since the middle of the 1981 season. They were 5-3-1 in the strike-abbreviated 1982 season and qualified for the playoffs for the first time since 1972.

They defeated the St. Louis Cardinals 41-16 in the first round of the NFC playoffs and lost to the Dallas Cowboys 37-26 in the second round.

Starr's contract extension was announced in a prepared statement by club president Robert J. Parrins.

"The 1982-83 season, although shortened, was not without its problems, both on and off the field," the statement said. "But the performance of the 1982 Packers justifies the optimism we expressed for the team and the coaching staff a year ago."

On Dec. 29, 1981, the executive committee had extended Starr's contract through the 1983 season.

Who holds the most consecutive home runs as a pinch hitter in the major leagues?

The Quotebook...

"In the National League, they almost always play every run as the game-winner, going from first to third, hitting and running, bunting and stealing. Because of the designated hitter, American League teams worry about giving up outs and play for the three-run homer. I never realized how much the DH takes out of the game until I went back to playing without it," Shortstop Mark Belanger after moving from the Orioles to the Dodgers last season.

Ex-champion still checking cobwebs

Los Angeles Times and Washington Post News Service

Compared to Michael Weaver, the pug, Rocky Balboa was Jack Dempsey, an international celebrity. Cinderella was Zsa Zsa Gabor.

Compared to Michael Weaver's life story, "Requiem for a Heavyweight" was a comedy. Either way, it's a great script for Sylvester Stallone. Not too many years ago, Michael Weaver, a peaceful sort with these sleepy eyes and a voice so low you have to read his lips to hear him, was standing by a jukebox in the Marine base at Camp Lejeune, N.C., when this burly NCO showed up with a growl and pushed him aside and punched his own song. When Weaver protested, the man swung. Weaver ducked, then unloaded on the fellow.

Michael Weaver had never had a fight in his life, not even in the schoolyard in his native Pomona; so, he was surprised when the fellow went down and out. He was even more surprised when he found out he had just KOed the heavyweight champion of the United States Marine Corps.

SOMEWHAT TO Michael's further surprise, he became a prize fighter then and there. It was a way to get out of marching in the swamps. "It was just a way to pass the time, is all," Weaver admits. I mean, Gene Tunney could rest easy.

But, suddenly, Marine Weaver found himself competing in finals in Diamond Belts, AAU Nationals, All-Service finals. All he knew was, it beat working. And it was certainly better than Vietnam, as Michael was to find out when he went there.

Even out of the Marine Corps, when he became a professional of sorts, Michael Weaver found pugilism hard to take seriously. "I was never a violent fellow. I never liked fighting. I took fights on one-day notice. I never trained. I just got a haircut and showed up," he admitted. Sometimes the ring announcer didn't catch the name. Michael fought in some dingy pugilistic dungeons where he was more afraid of the toilets than his opponents.

His record reflected his indifference. Four losses in his first eight fights, three by knockout. Michael was what is known as a "crowd-pleaser." He was as fun to watch as a train wreck.

INTO THIS less-than-idyllic setting strode Michael's own Apollo Creed. Michael Weaver was exactly what Heavyweight Champion Larry Holmes was looking for. A pay night. A low-risk workout. A tuneup for an upcoming shot at Earnie Shavers.

Michael Weaver looked perfect for the spot. Slow, not dangerous. Brave, not experienced. That most satisfying of challengers, the fighter-who-could-take-it. Better yet, a fighter who needed the money. What the fight mob calls "an opponent." Not a fix, exactly. The next-best thing to it: What they call a "set-up."

Holmes was nearly the one set up. By the 10th round, he thought he was locked in a closet with a bobcat. The fight was stopped, to the intense relief of Holmes, who was looking for the clock at the time, in the 12th. If it went the route, he likely would have lost.

What Holmes didn't know was that Michael Weaver, after knocking around creating character for prospects from Honolulu to Anchorage for years, had come under the management of Dan Manual and had stopped training on doughnuts and orange pop and had quietly become a seasoned technician whose stomach was hard and fists were harder.

John Tate, the Tennessee fat man who had the other half of the heavyweight championship (WBA), was another who saw Michael Weaver as a quick buck. Weaver knocked Tate out with 45 seconds to go in the 15th round. Suddenly, Michael Weaver was at one with history with Dempsey, Tunney, Louis, Ali and John L. Sullivan. Heavyweight champion of the whole world.

HE WENT to South Africa to fight Gerie Coetzee for $2.5 million and immediately an orchestrated protest was sent up. Michael Weaver is sure under the direction of promoters like Don King. "They said what was I going to a place that had prejudice like that for? I said I didn't have to go to South Africa to find prejudice, I could find it in Knoxville."

When Michael beat Coetzee in Bophuthswana, he was waiting confidently for his big-money shot with Gerry Cooney, when suddenly lawyers and Caribbean boxing commissioners and promoters and managers got loudly into the act. Somehow it evolved that Weaver's obligation to the Sweet Science lay not in fighting Gerry Cooney for $5 million or so but in fighting somebody or something called "Quick" Tillis for $750,000.

That little piece of bunco would draw gasps of admiration from a guy who had just sold the Brooklyn Bridge, but Tillis wasn't that quick and Weaver got his decision. To the surprise of no one, Larry Holmes go the big-money Gerry Cooney shot. To the surprise of no one, Randy Cobb, the other white hope, pulled out of a Weaver fight to fight Larry Holmes instead.

TO THE SURPRISE of no one, Weaver was forced to give the title shot to a man named Michael Dokes whose principal claim to fame was that he was managed by the son of the promoter of the fight, Don King. To the surprise of no one, that fight was stopped in one minute and three seconds and awarded to Dokes.

Now, you would not stop a Christian-lion fight in one minute and three seconds. You don't stop a fight one minute and three seconds if both principals are alive, let alone conscious. The fight mob was desperate to get the title away from Michael Weaver, the champion-who-didn't-belong, the Great-Mistake-of-the-Division, the Cinderella who had to be turned back into a pumpkin again.

Michael Weaver today has a piece of paper saying Michael Dokes has to fight him in 90 days to redress an obvious miscarriage of justice and fair play. But Michael has had lots of pieces of paper like that in the last three years. The trouble with the Cinderella story is, it always ended with the glass slipper fitting. A sequel probably would have had the step-sister suing, the fairy godmother demanding her cut, and the government stepping in to claim the glass slipper for taxes. Maybe Prince Charming had a wife already in Perth Amboy.

For Michael Weaver, waiting for the phones to ring and Michael Dokes or promoter Don King to right a wrong, there are times when he wishes he didn't cold-cock that Marine heavyweight champion at the PX in the first place. Who knows? Maybe he would even have liked his selection on the Wurlitzer better than his own.

Clippers surprise to Nuggets

By Associated Press

The San Diego Clippers figured to be one team that wouldn't hold the Denver Nuggets under 100 points.

"I filed an official protest to the league because they played too hard," Denver Coach Doug Moe said in jest after the Clippers beat the Nuggets 125-98 Tuesday night. "We had a very bad game effort-wise, they worked too hard and played too good. They deserved to win by as many as they did and more."

Only two other teams, New York and Washington, have held Denver under 100 points this season.

San Diego got 31 points from Terry Cummings and 27 from Tom Chambers while holding Alex English, the NBA's leading scorer, to seven points on 3-of-16 shooting.

Moe was most concerned that the Nuggets were outrebounded 62-35. Forward Kiki Vandeweghe, despite leading Denver in scoring with 27 points, had only one rebound.

Walter Davis led Phoenix with 21 points.

Mantle banned from baseball

NEW YORK (AP) — Mickey Mantle was getting ready for the luncheon at which he would be introduced as director of sports promotions for a hotel and casino in Atlantic City, N.J., when he was handed a letter from Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn.

The message, Mantle said Tuesday, was clear. "I'm gone ... I'm out of baseball," said the former New York Yankees great.

Kuhn had told Mantle he would have to give up his part-time coaching position with the team if he took the $100,000-a-year promotions job with Claridge Hotel and Casino.

Mantle, a member of the Hall of Fame, chose the casino job and said he understood Kuhn's order.

"I don't blame him," he said. "He did what he thinks is right or he wouldn't have done it. He set a precedent and he has to stick by it."

The precedent was set in 1979 when Kuhn told Willie Mays, another Hall of Famer, to give up his $50,000-a-year job with the New York Mets after Mays accepted a casino promotions job at Bally's Park Place.

Though both were described by their teams as coaches, their major value was in public relations, and Mantle saw his banishment as no great loss to the Yankees or himself.

"I was going to spring training with the Yankees as a batting instructor," he said. "But I was just hanging around signing autographs. I went to the old-timers games and a couple of dinners for (Yankees owner George) Mr. Steinbrenner. I really wasn't on the payroll, so I'm not going to miss what I was doing."

Mays and Mantle are two of baseball's greatest players of the modern era. Mantle played 18 years in the Yankee outfield, hitting 536 home runs, driving in 1,509 runs and batting .298.

Gretzky explodes in NHL Star game

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — For two periods, he had been just another player, out for an All-Star skate.

Then, in the final 20 minutes of Tuesday night's National Hockey League All-Star game, Wayne Gretzky went into overdrive, exploding for four goals in the Clarence Campbell Conference's 9-3 romp over the Prince of Wales Conference.

He left the losers dumbfounded.

"He transfers defensive chances into offensive chances," said Washington Caps' defenseman Rod Langway, a touch of wonder in his voice. "When the puck is going one way, if somebody makes a bad play and he's there, he's gone. It's anticipation. It's acceleration. It's Gretzky."

THE NHL

Gretzky's four goals set an All-Star record, shattering the mark of three set by Ted Lindsay 33 years ago. They came after Edmonton's record-busting center had been held without a shot for the first 40 minutes of the game, leading some observers to believe that he was merely mortal after all.

"I didn't play well the first two periods," he said. But he more than made up for that in the third.

"I'm just one of 500 players in this league, trying to help his team," Gretzky continued. "I'm just fortunate to have things go really well for me."

But that was not the way it looked to Langway, stationed on the losing blue line.

"He's opportunistic," the Caps' defenseman said. "That's how he's always played. He makes everything out of nothing. He isolates. If you give him time, he'll hold the puck. If you come to him, he'll make the pass. There's nothing you can do. If you're a defenseman, he'll make you look bad. He's a master."

Gretzky victimized Philadelphia's Pelle Lindbergh for the four goals which earned him the Most Valuable Player award and the car that goes with it.

"He should share the car with me," said Lindbergh. "Four goals in one period, it's embarrassing."

But Lindbergh tried to shrug it off.

"It's an exhibition," he said. "It's over, in the books. I never get too upset with a bad game or too happy with a good one."

Vancouver's John Garrett, who was in goal for the Campbell Stars when Gretzky went on his binge, felt sympathy for Lindbergh.

Cagers go from 34-0 to 0-17

BALTIMORE (AP) — It's a character-building season for the Loyola College Greyhounds and Coach Mark Amatucci.

Just a year after he directed the local Calvert Hall High School team to a 34-0 record — with what many experts said was the best team in the nation — Amatucci finds himself at the other end of the spectrum.

With an 0-17 mark, Loyola goes into into tonight's game against the University of Baltimore as the only winless team in the NCAA's Division I ranks.

"I've seen better days," Amatucci joked, trying to keep his incredible personal flip-flop in perspective. "I just turned 30, and I feel like 45."

"To tell the truth," Amatucci said, "I don't mind talking about the streak if it can be understood what has gone on before. Some of it I inherited, and some cropped up during the course of the year."

Amatucci was emphatic in his dislike of the schedule arranged by predecessor Bill Burke, who posted an 11-16 record during his one season at Loyola and then left to become a stockbroker.

University of Louisville President Donald Swain is reviewing a recommendation that the school leave the Metro Conference by the end of the year if the league's bylaws aren't changed as a result of dissatisfaction with inequitable contributions to the MC by members schools and the lack of conference football.

The most a school has to pay in one season is $50,000, which Louisville has done in each of the conference's eight seasons. SWC coaches begin rush on high school talent

By Associated Press

Months of telephone calls and visits pay off for Southwest Conference football coaches today in the final turn of the schoolboy recruiting roulette wheel.

All the oral commitments become official at 8 a.m. when the cream of the Texas high school crop put their signatures on nationally binding leters of intent.

SWC head coaches could not be there with pen in hand because of an NCAA rule. They waited nervously by the telephone.

However, hordes of assistants covered Texas from the Red River to the Gulf of Mexico, signing up Texas' finest.

Such blue chip stars as running backs Edwin Simmons of Hawkins and Jeff Atkins of Fort Worth Eastern Hills made verbal commitments to Texas and Southern Methodist, respectively.

There were late additions such as Temple tight end Albert Reese saying he had decided on SMU over Texas A&M and Texas Christian.

There were a lot of broken hearts and broken promises among the coaches and alumni.

Hawkins, who stands 6-4, weighs 215-pounds and runs like a deer, rushed for 2,935 yards and 38 touchdowns last year. He has been compared to SMU's Eric Dickerson and Georgia's Herschel Walker.

Atkins is a 5-11, 205-pounder who rushed for 2,333 yards and scored 25 touchdowns. He has tremendous leg drive and speed.

Dallas Cowboys suffer from familiar stigma

AP Sports Analysis
By DENNE FREEMAN

The Dallas Cowboys face a similar stigma to the one that haunted them before they won their first Super Bowl a decade ago.

In the late 1960s, they called the Cowboys "Next Year's Champions."

That title or "Next Year's Chumps" should serve nicely for the early 1980s going into camp this July. Dallas has blown the National Conference championship gave three years in a row.

There was a lot of "third time is a charm" chatter before Dallas was dismantled by the eventual Super Bowl champions 31-17. Was that supposed to put some kind of a magical spell over the Redskins?

Remember Minnesota? They went to the Super Bowl four times and never won one.

OF COURSE, you can't give the Cowboys the same "choke" label they had before they won two Super Bowls.

Here's a team that has been in the playoffs 16 out of the last 17 years. That's not exactly chopped garbage.

But the players and the coaches will have to hear the same question a thousand times this summer in Thousand Oaks training camp.

Question: "Will the team be bothered psychologically by the fact that it has come so close yet failed to make the Super Bowl the last three seasons?"

BY LOSING to Philadelphia, San Francisco, and Washington the last three years in the NFC title game, the Cowboys must now live with the such probing.

There are already signs that the training camp may be the toughest ever under Tom Landry with some personnel shakeups on tap.

The Redskins showcased some items in their 27-17 victory over Miami that the Cowboys don't have in stock.

You can start with the lines of scrimmage for openers.

The Redskins' offensive and defensive lines dominated the Dolphins as they did the Cowboys in the NFC championship game.

There will be other goodies on Landry's shopping list.

Does he shake up the ineffective linebacking corps?

WHAT ABOUT the falling productivity of his front four?

Does upstart Gary Hogeboom get the nod over Danny White at quarterback?

There will be questions, questions, questions in Thousand Oaks next summer and sweat, sweat, sweat.

Landry served up hard-working camp last summer and it paid off in Dallas' visit to the National Football League playoffs and victories over Tampa Bay and Green Bay.

"It (camp) will be even tougher this year," said a Cowboys' insider. "Tom is tired of all the whining among the receivers and some of the borderline players who are just trying to get by. There will be some shakeups."

If so, Landry's "shakeups" can be subtle changes. They might not be apparent until the opening day of the regular season.

There is general consensus among the Cowboy watchers that the 1982 lineup won't be the same one that starts the '83 campaign.

"IT MAY take us two years to get back to a Super Bowl level," Landry said after the Cowboys were bounced by the Redskins.

"That was a significant statement by Tom," said the insider. "He is as much as admitting there will be some fine tuning that may scramble the picture for a season."

Landry cautioned not to get too far down on his team.

"This team has the talent to come back," Landry said. "We were just never able to bring out the best in ourselves."

Cowboy training camp 1983 is where Landry starts correcting that problem.

Landry is tired of the "best" team on NFC championship day not being the guys with stars on their helmets.

Land Commissioner sticks to his guns

By LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

State Land Commissioner Garry Mauro stuck to his guns last night and earned the respect, if not necessarily the total agreement, of the Permian Basin Landmen's Association which met here.

Garry Mauro

In his first public appearance in Midland since taking office five weeks ago, Mauro restated his position on the law regarding oil and gas leasing on state owned lands.

He said a supposed loophole allowing people to obtain prospecting permits for lower rates than normal, and offer the state only a 1/8th royalty instead of the usual one-quarter to one-third, is invalid.

"I am going to stand on this," Mauro said. "I'm not going to accept any prospecting permits filed, and the people who filed them I don't consider to have filed in good faith, and I will treat them accordingly."

Governor Mark White and Lieutenant Gov. Bill Hobby agree with his position, he added.

"This could mean $100 million in revenue over the next five years," Mauro said. "We just want a fair shake. A one-eighth royalty is not fair, it's robbery."

The General Land Office (GLO) manages oil and gas leasing and production on 22.5 million acres of state land, much of it in West Texas. Production from those acres currently yields about $1 billion a year for the state's education fund.

An East Texas attorney discovered the prospecting permit loophole last summer. He brought it to the attention of the GLO by filing a permit to drill on state land in Eastland County on behalf of West Texas Minerals Inc.

"He found a time-sensitive piece of property that was losing its reservoir rapidly," Mauro said, "so we had to deal with him and with the law."

As a result, last week Gov. White signed a bill closing the alleged loophole — but not before 32 applicants tried to take advantage of it at the last minute by filing prospecting permits with the GLO; 22 of them listed Midland addresses.

More than one million acres of state land were involved; many were intended for wildcat drilling.

Mauro gave them until Feb. 4 to withdraw their applications or face possible court action.

Some have done so, but about 20 have not yet withdrawn, he said.

Of those 20, some, including at least one Midland energy company, are considering legal action in an attempt to get Mauro to accept their applications.

Mauro told the Reporter-Telegram he was upset that the applicants filed at the last minute, after learning of the loophole through the news media, "in order to make a quick buck at the expense of the state's school children."

Mauro said he thought they did not file in good faith, that they knew (or should have known) the law, and that they were trying "to cheat."

"The vast majority of people in the oil and gas industry just want a chance to make a fair profit," Mauro said.

"I respect West Texas Minerals Inc. if they figured out a way to make the law work for them to make a bigger profit than they normally would have. I am sorry it's at the expense of the public school fund.

"But these people who just read about it in the newspaper and tried to make a quick buck through a loophole — they didn't work for it. They listened to the radio. And, that's not free enterprise."

Through the years, paying the state a 1/4 royalty has been the norm for oil companies drilling on Texas lands, although the figure is negotiable. The law allowing citizens to get a lease for just a $100 filing fee, $2-per-acre bonus payment and 1/8 royalty was repealed in 1939, Mauro said. Since that time, no leases have been awarded on state lands under those terms.

Due to a mixup in 1975 when lawmakers were recodifying portions of Texas law, specifically the Natural Resources Code, the prospecting provision allowing 1/8th royalty payments was re-inserted.

No one realized the mistake, or tried to take advantage of it, until West Texas Minerals filed prospecting applications with the GLO last summer.

"They found a piece of property (to test the loophole) and they had us in a hot box," Mauro said.

In an out-of-court settlement, the General Land Office negotiated a 33.3 percent royalty agreement with West Texas Minerals. The company agreed to drill 30 to 40 shallow wells on the site in 2-acre spacing.

Mauro said the settlement was reached because he feared lengthy court action would jeopardize state land lease sales scheduled in April and October 1983.

"If it were still in the courts, nobody would bid 30 percent or 35 percent royalty on a property when they could file a prospecting lease (for 1/8th royalty). So at the very least, we would lose the April lease sale, and probably the October sale, too."

Farmer's fortune falls with sugar price

FLAT Third World Economy in a series

EDITOR'S NOTE — In the 1960s and 1970s, developing countries were an engine of economic growth for the world, rapidly expanding their output of minerals, farm products and other exports. But the current recession has deflated the boom, further impoverishing the world's poor. This is the third of a five-part series.

By DAVID BRISCOE
Associated Press Writer

CANLUBANG, Philippines (AP) — Carlos Tapay ought to be well-off.

His steady job pays better than the minimum wage and he is a landowner who annually hires dozens of laborers to plant, till, weed and harvest his crop.

But Tapay, 46, grows sugar cane, and sugar is selling for barely 6 U.S. cents a pound in the world's commodities markets, down from 43 cents a pound in 1980. This small farmer's fortunes have fallen with it.

"We've been depending on the cane," his 40-year-old wife, Nelia, said glumly as she and her husband stood with three of their four children among the swaying purple stalks and fluttering leaves of their cane field.

Since recession began taking hold around the globe in 1979-80, the Tapays' story has been repeated untold millions of times in the Third World.

MANY POORER nations rely heavily on exports of raw materials to the industrialized world to earn the dollars they need to buy manufactured goods, fuel and other necessities.

But since 1980 the world price of cotton, for example, a prime export of Egypt and Sudan, has fallen to 57 cents a pound from 92. The price of copper — all-important to the economies of Chile and Zambia — has been halved to about 65 cents a pound. And the price of cocoa — mainstay of some African nations — has dropped from $1.18 to 75 cents a pound.

A combination of factors sent sugar prices into their steep plunge: world overproduction, new quotas protecting American sugar producers by limiting imports of sugar into the United States, and the general economic slowdown, which has cut deeply into demand for sugar.

The Tapays' troubles are reflected on a national scale in the Philippines.

In 1982, Philippine exports of minerals, lumber, coconuts, sugar, rubber, rice, furniture, fabrics, shoes, handicrafts and even San Miguel beer were all down — an average 12.4 percent decline for all exports from the first half of 1981.

JUST AS THE Tapays do not know how they will make ends meet this year, the Manila government and large Philippine concerns may soon feel the pinch of their outstanding debt — some $16 billion owed to foreign banks and governments.

If sugar were a more stable commodity, the Tapays might be moving into this country's small middle class. Instead, they are sinking deeper into poverty.

They live in a two-room wooden house on stilts 25 miles south of Manila and just a few yards off the main road into Lipa City. When it rains, their tiny yard turns to mud.

Their only luxury is a 12-inch black-and-white television, run off an automobile battery. Mrs. Tapay cooks with firewood. The light by which eldest son Ernesto, 18, studies civil engineering comes from a kerosene lamp.

Tapay said electricity would cut too much into their tight budget.

"We want to get another house, but it's hard. We have children in school," he said.

ALMOST 6,000 Philippine pesos — equivalent to $650 — went to send Ernesto to Western Philippine College in nearby Batangas last year. That and the $32 a week Mrs. Tapay says she needs for food and school allowances add up to more than Tapay's estimated $2,065 annual income.

He earns about $980 of that at his regular job, helping identify sugar varieties at a government laboratory. Last year, after paying for water buffalo to plow his field, fertilizer, planters and cane-cutters, he earned $1,085 from the four-acre plot, which he inherited from his father.

This year he will earn less, and in 1984, when long-term government contracts to export sugar above world prices run out, local prices may drop below the cost of production.

Some farmers have tried to save money by cutting back on fertilizer, weeding and plowing, and their crops have suffered. Others plant peanuts or beans between the rows.

But they could be worse off. They could be growing coconuts, whose prices are at their lowest in a decade.

EXPORTS OF COPRA and other coconut products slipped 3.5 percent in 1982, and the $603 million they earned was 20 percent less than 1981 receipts.

Industry sources estimate one-third of the 50 million Filipinos depend at least partly on coconuts for their income. On most of the smaller islands — there are more than 7,000 in the archipelago — people's only sources of income are the sea and coconut palms.

Leo Ignacio, executive secretary of a coconut research association, says a farmer who gets $15 for 100 kilograms — 220 pounds — of coconut meat today got $36 five years ago.

"These people have learned to take the ups and downs. Filipinos traditionally have flexibility," Ignacio said.

There are signs, however, that many of the nation's rural poor have reached their limit.

A growing communist guerrilla movement, dedicated to ending President Ferdinand E. Marcos' 17-year rule, is finding supporters in the most remote and poorest rural areas. Thousands of rural people migrate each month into Manila and other cities, filling squatter settlements, where disease, crime and discontent fester.

For the Tapays, there is the temptation to sell off their land to speculators or industrial firms moving into the area.

Tapay says he might consider it if he cannot make a living from sugar. But his wife is adamant — they must hold onto their four acres. The family can do without luxuries.

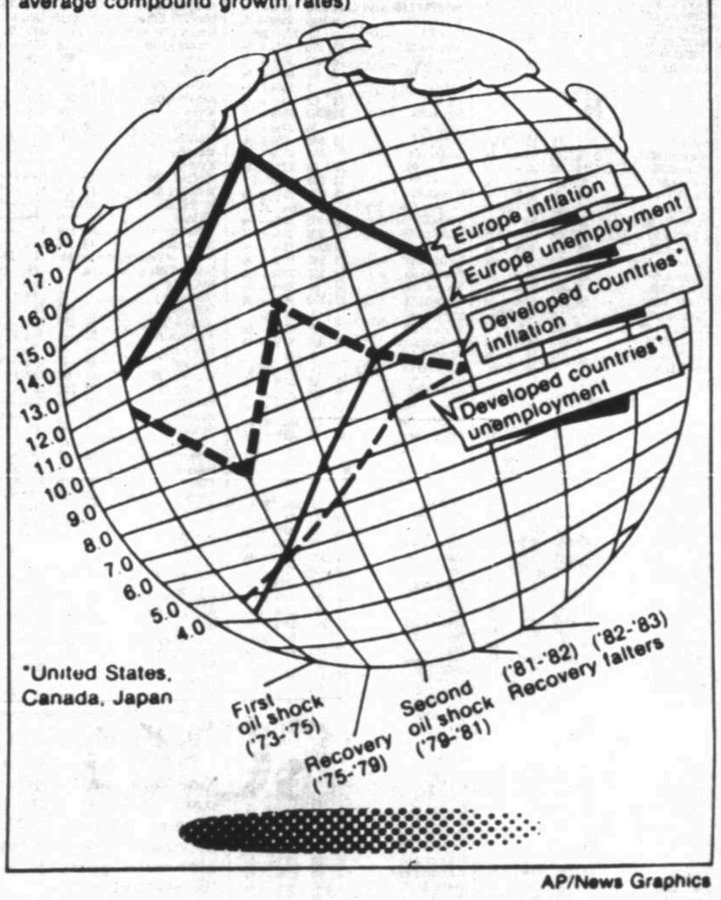

"If you ask what's our most valuable possession," Mrs. Tapay said, "it's our land. It's the only hope for our children."

Broken porthole caused sinking of Ocean Ranger

WASHINGTON (AP) — A broken porthole set off a chain of events that led the Ocean Ranger drilling vessel to capsize a year ago in the North Atlantic, taking 84 people to their death, the government says.

The National Transportation Safety Board concluded Tuesday that water, pouring through the porthole, caused an electrical failure that resulted in some ballast tanks flooding. The rig then capsized.

Investigators concluded the crew of the $125 million floating rig should have been able to control the problem, but that they had not been adequately trained to use a backup valve control system after the electrical system failed.

"If they had been trained to do that I think the report reflects that the accident could have been avoided," said Jim Burnett, the safety board's chairman.

The investigators said they could not determine what caused the porthole, which was in the ballast control room and 32 feet above the sea, to break. They said it should have withstood the 70-foot waves that battered the Ocean Ranger during the early hours of Feb. 15, 1982.

The Ocean Ranger was conducting exploratory drilling under a lease with the Mobil Oil of Canada Ltd., about 166 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, Canada.

While the safety board said Mobil should have had a more extensive evacuation plan, it leveled stronger criticism at the rig's owner, the Ocean Drilling & Exploration Co., for not providing adequate training.

The New Orleans-based company failed "to have an effective program to provide sufficient training and familiarization in the operation of the ballasting system," the safety board said.

The safety board said the deaths resulted in part from difficulty in launching lifeboats and because workers were not supplied with thermal protection suits that would have allowed them to withstand the icy waters for hours instead of minutes.

The investigators said the Ocean Ranger did not have a structural failure. But the board recommended that the design of such rigs be examined to see if they can be made more stable in severe weather even if two adjacent ballast tanks are flooded.

Administration takes new approach to deregulation

By MARTIN CRUTSINGER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration, stymied for two years in efforts to remove all price controls from natural gas, is taking a new approach. It is emphasizing consumer benefits.

In a brief statement on natural gas Tuesday, the White House never once mentioned the word "decontrol."

Instead the administration attacked the current law for "certain fundamental flaws."

The present law "is not protecting the consumer from rapid price increases and is instead operating to subsidize more expensive imports and uneconomic production of natural gas," the administration said.

The statement was released following a meeting Reagan held with his Cabinet Council on Natural Resources to discuss escalating natural gas prices.

Reagan campaigned on a pledge to speed up decontrol of natural gas. However, administration efforts to introduce a bill to accomplish this have been sidetracked for two years by stiff congressional opposition.

Opponents of decontrol claim that removing government lids can cause consumer prices to increase substantially. The administration has always argued that decontrol in a totally free market would insure the best price for consumers.

A White House official, who spoke on condition that he not be named, said there was nearly unanimous agreement at the Cabinet council meeting that Reagan should push for decontrol legislation.

This source said Reagan decided to tell his aides "to explore legislation with key people on Capitol Hill." In addition to decontrolling supplies, the administration bill will include a "consumer protection section," the source said.

Sources at the Energy Department, who also spoke on condition that they not be named, said one option being considered would require local gas utilities to make refunds to customers if gas prices rise above the equivalent cost of heating oil. Another option would place a cap on just how high the well-head price of gas could rise if the current decontrol schedule is abolished.

Past proposals have never included clauses to moderate possible price hikes brought on by full decontrol.

Consumer groups fighting gas decontrol were not impressed with the latest wrinkle in administration strategy.

"They are trying to cloak themselves in the rhetoric of consumer protection, but there is no doubt in my mind that their intent would be to speed up the current decontrol," said Edwin Rothchild, of the Citizen-Labor Energy Coalition, one of the groups fighting decontrol.

Under the law passed in 1978, natural gas prices have increased by 150 percent, leading some in Congress to call for a freeze to the current decontrol schedule to give consumers relief.

However, proponents of faster decontrol say it is the law itself, with its complicated pricing categories, which is actually boosting prices higher than they would be in a totally unregulated market.

The 1978 law is removing price controls from about 60 percent of supplies, but so-called old gas will remain under controls forever. The Reagan administration wants to remove controls on all gas.

DOE sources said the administration could send a bill to Congress by the end of February or early March.

Japan extends export limits

TOKYO (AP) — Japan decided today to offer the United States a third-year extension on voluntary restrains on its auto exports to the U.S. market, Kyodo News Service reported.

The Japanese news agency said the government will request the nation's auto industry to hold shipments to the United States to 1.68 million units in fiscal 1983 beginning in April, the same level maintained the past two years.

Failure prevention first topic of business seminars

"Why Businesses Fail — And How to Prevent It" will be the topic of the first of six seminars sponsored by the Midland Chamber of Commerce's Small Business Council, begining February 22.

Gas executives say industry needs cooperation

BY LESLIE HAINES
Energy-Business Writer

Executives of two Texas natural gas companies warned Tuesday that as market demand falls and competition intensifies, the gas industry will have to cooperate on pricing and regulate itself more closely.

"If the industry does not act, the so-called 'public interest' groups will do it for us," said Carol L. Neaves, president of Lone Star Gas, Dallas.

"The next few months are critical for us to get our houses in order and demonstrate we don't need Congress to manage our business."

"We can't afford a squabble among natural gas competitors," cautioned Ellis E. Wind, senior vice president of Valero Energy Corporation, San Antonio. The pair spoke to the West Texas chapter of the Natural Gas Society in Midland yesterday.

Before the meeting convened, rumors and questions about pipeline companies calling in gas contracts for renegotiation were heard by many in the crowd.

Production at many gas wells in Texas and Oklahoma is curtailed or shut in for lack of a suitable price, or lack of a market at all. Demand for gas has declined by 40 percent from this time a year ago, although record drilling has created a surplus of gas deliverability.

As a result, Neaves and Wind said Lone Star and Valero reduced their profit margins in 1982 and 1983 in an attempt to hang on to customers. Valero was able to renegotiate some of its contracts, Wind said.

Both men fear more federal and state intervention in the natural gas industry, which is already heavily regulated by the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978.

"While we are firm believers in negotiation as the best method to prevent legislation limiting producers and pipeliners, we can see the possibility of legislation," intruding into contracts signed by these two parties, Neaves said.

He cited a ruling last week by the United States Supreme Court which upheld a 1979 Kansas law allowing that state to regulate natural gas contracts and prices at the wellhead.

Neaves said similar laws might be introduced in Texas, especially given Gov. Mark White's emphasis on utility reform during the recent gubernatorial campaign.

"Any sweeping reform for (electric utilities), including abolishment of fuel cost adjustments, could likely mean equal 'bad news' for gas utilities and ultimately affect the producer."

Other than the sluggish economy which causes factories to use less natural gas, competing energy sources such as Number 6 fuel oil are the biggest worry, Valero's Wind said.

To compete, he said intra- and interstate gas producers and pipeliners should cooperate in having a temporary rollback in prices.

"Residual fuel oil prices just can't be allowed to go below natural gas prices," Wind said. "It would be terrible for us and for producers, and would be a long term problem."

Between 1977 and 1979, residual fuel oil prices dropped below gas prices and many end users, especially refineries and heavy industrial users, switched to fuel oil from gas. Many in the gas industry lost customers as a result. Wind said Valero lost market to the tune of 250 billion cubic feet per day.

"If the price of number 6 goes lower again, industries with the capability to burn that kind of fuel will switch again," he said.

Lone Star's Neaves estimated some users would take up to three months to switch from gas to fuel oil.

Heavy industrial users are still extremely price sensitive, he said.

"We found our customers with dual fuel capability would switch on as little as a penny difference in price," Neaves said. "They did a constant rollover just on a couple pennies."

Industrial users are more price sensitive and capable of changing fuels than are residential or commercial customers. He noted that for maintenance reasons, industrial users prefer gas — as long as the price is reasonable.

Both Neaves and Wind said the gas industry must act soon to avoid further regulation by government and further deterioration of the market.

"I have got to believe we are smart enough to develop innovative marketability and renegotiation provisions (in gas contracts) to provide flexibility," Neaves said.

Accounting seminar offered Saturday

The second of two professional development seminars sponsored by the Permian Basin Chapter of the National Association of Accountants will be held Saturday, beginning at 8:30 a.m. at the Midland Holidome. Armco Inc. hopes to sell coal

MIDDLETOWN, Ohio (AP) — Armco Inc., which lost $345 million last year, is hoping to sell all of its West Virginia coal properties for some $320 million.

Armco, the nation's seventh-largest steel producer, cut its dividend to 20 cents a share from 30 cents in January after it announced layoffs of 2,200 workers at its Kansas City and Houston plants. About 800 workers have been laid off at Middletown.

Armco said Tuesday it had an agreement in principle to sell the properties to a subsidiary of Arch Mineral Corp. of St. Louis.

Hitachi pleads guilty

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In charges stemming from an FBI "sting" operation, Japan's largest electronics company admitted conspiring to buy computer secrets stolen from IBM before a judge who warned "corporations around the world" to halt espionage.

Expressing a "deep and immeasurable regret" over the case, Hitachi Ltd. entered the plea Tuesday in exchange for a guarantee of no further prosecution.

The company must pay a $10,000 fine within 30 days and provide U.S. District Judge Spencer Williams with written details of its plans to ensure "nothing like this ever happens again," the judge said.

FERC OKs price lowering plan

By WILLIAM GARLAND
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission unanimously granted preliminary approval to a proposal Tuesday that for the first time would lower the price of some natural gas production under the Natural Gas Policy Act.

The price of gas produced from formations called "tight sands," found primarily in Texas and a few other Southwestern states, would drop from the current price of about $5.50 per thousand cubic feet to about $3.50 per thousand cubic feet, according to a FERC spokesman.

The decision, if given final approval, would adopt a "floating cap" on natural gas production from those formations and tie the price to a certain category of fuel oil.

Other natural gas production affected by the ruling would be gas produced with certain enhancement techniques and sold in the intrastate pipeline market.

Both categories of gas previously had been controlled under the NGPA, but had been given an incentive price higher than the controlled price for "old" or "new" gas. New gas, produced after April 20, 1977, gets a higher price than old gas.

An attorney for Texas gas producers said Tuesday that some natural gas from tight sands formations could be "shut in" if the proposal is approved.

The commissioners set a 45-day public comment period before FERC would make a final decision.

The attorney for the Texas Independent Producers and Royalty Owners Association said that some producers and pipeline companies are renegotiating contracts for those categories of gas production because of the current high supply of gas.

"For those producers to come in and roll back their prices at this stage without any regard for factors between producers and purchasers could cause some severe problems," said TIPRO attorney Scott Anderson.

In a recent letter to Rep. Philip R. Sharp, D-Ind., chairman of the House Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, FERC chairman C. Mike Butler III explained that the higher incentive price for some categories of gas caused consumer prices to rise higher than the market-clearing price. He told Sharp that decontrol of all natural gas would probably therefore lower the price of gas to the consumer rather than raise the price.

Mexico arranges loan

MEXICO CITY (AP) — The Treasury Department has arranged virtually all of an unprecedented $5 billion loan from private banks and is close to completing the renegotiation of $20 billion of its existing massive foreign debt.

A statement was issued Tuesday on Treasury Secretary Jesus Silva Herzog's report to President Miguel de la Madrid after a two-week trip to New York, Western Europe and Japan.

It said that during his tour Silva Herzog met with government officials, financial authorities and directors of the major international private banks.

Those officials "expressed to him their most frank and absolute confidence in the policy of economic reordering of the country put into place by the Mexican chief of state," the statement said.

Silva Herzog, who returned Friday from Japan, met with the president Monday night. He leaves Wednesday to attend the international financial meeting under way in Washington.

The statement said about 500 banks have made commitments for more than $4.8 billion in new loans and the proposed $5 billion package — "which does not have a precedent in world financial history" — should be completed by the end of February.

Earlier reports have said that 25 European and Japanese banks will be responsible for the actual management of the loan.

The new loan package is "indispensable," the Treasury Department said, to be used for imports necessary to keep industrial development going.

Little-known American remembered in Japan

By ANDREW JAFFE
Hearst Feature Service

W. Edwards Deming is little-known in his native America, but in Japan the annual Deming Prize — awarded by the Union of Japanese Scientists and Engineers — is the most coveted honor a company can get. And the Emperor of Japan has decorated the aging American consultant with the Second Order of the Sacred Treasure.

In one of the great ironies of this century, it was Deming — a dry, determined statistician first sent to Japan by the U.S. Census Bureau — who gave the Japanese the theoretical basis for their economic revolution. And now that the Japanese "miracle" has shattered the invincibility of American manufacturers, some companies have finally turned to Deming for help in regaining customer confidence.

The answer, Deming says, is relatively straightforward: Stop trying to "inspect in" quality after a product has been built. Instead, build quality into the process and into the materials that create the product.

Deming is still remarkably active, despite his 82 years and somewhat fragile health. Pontiac, Ford and a handful of other American manufacturers have invited Deming into their plants to help them completely overhaul their defective manufacturing processes.

Deming has developed a list of "obligations" that he tries to impose on management. What that list boils down to is that management has to bite the bullet and pledge to make a quality product, virtually without concern for cost.

Instead of trying to "inspect out" defects, it must provide everyone along the assembly line process with statistical methods by which to determine how the faults were made and how to corrected them, even if it means shutting down the assembly line and taking some losses.

And finally, he believes, American management has to break down the barriers between workers and supervisors and between different departments within a company.

"What Dr. Deming has done," says Ron Moen, director of statistical methods at Pontiac headquarters in Michigan, "is to institute massive training at Pontiac in the use of statistical methods to improve doing the job. A simple analogy I have heard him use is that most companies today say, 'You burn the toast, and I (the inspector) will scrape it.' Quality, though, is either there or it isn't."

Arriving in Japan in 1950, Deming met with the group assembled top management of all the leading companies in the country. For several days he lectured them on the elimination of work standards based on numerical quotas and of giving supplier contracts to the lowest bidder.

Instead, Deming taught them to find dependable suppliers and build long-term relationships, and to concentrate on quality within their plants, letting productivity follow instead of the other way round. It took 30 years — which Deming does not find surprising — but today the Japanese have developed the strongest manufacturing base in the world.

"The Japanese started with nothing — less, because they had a reputation for shoddy quality," he says. "But America had a reputation for product the world over. Instead, they let the Japanese lose the war and win the peace.

"Take the question of suppliers. If a supplier constantly has to cut corners to win a contract, you can't expect improvement. Price has no meaning unless you know what you're getting for it.

"General Motors has 5,000 suppliers; a Japanese auto manufacturer has about 400. How do you expect GM to be able to keep track of products built by 5,000 suppliers, let alone by its employees?"

Deming believes the time has come for "a whole new management philosophy" in this country. As a first step, he thinks the "mobility of American management" has to be curtailed. "They're all here today, gone tomorrow," he says. "As a result, executives have no association with a company."

Next, he would have companies take a new approach to quality.

Withholding requirement could ruin credit unions

By PEGGY SIMPSON
Hearst
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — Hundreds of small credit unions may go out of business unless Congress rescinds requirements that they withhold 10 percent of interest on all savings accounts and forward the funds to the Treasury each month, Rep. Norman D'Amours, D-N.H., warned Monday.

D'Amours cited the plight of the credit unions to refute accusations that the snowballing grass roots revolt against the withholding requirement is a "big bank" bill.

"This isn't a bankers' issue. This is an effort by a coalition of groups, including the most apple-pie of them all, credit unions. The interest and dividends requirement will destroy them—they can't afford the cost of implementing this," said D'Amours, a member of the House Banking Committee whose bill to repeal the withholding requirement has been backed by 190 members.

On the eve of a Capitol Hill rally by supporters of the attempt to repeal the withholding requirement before it takes effect in July, D'Amours told the National Savings and Loan League, which is meeting here, to keep the heat on Congress on this issue.

He conceded that much more is needed—and that "the Achilles heel" of the anti-withholding crusade is the fear of increasing the enormous deficits, since Congress is preoccupied both with spending cuts and enacting new taxes to reduce those deficits.

DESPITE THE opposition of the bipartisan congressional leaders (and House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill reiterated his view yesterday that repeal legislation had no chance of passage), a formidable grass roots revolt has been occurring, fed by the savings and loan industry but also encouraged by banks and other financial institutions.

"Let's stop this ill-conceived law dead in its tracks," League president Frank L. Coffman Jr. of Arkansas urged the executives, noting it would cost financial institutions "hundreds of millions of dollars that doesn't need to be spent for the government to catch the few taxpayers who aren't reporting interest income."

The withholding provision was added in last-minute negotiations on the 1982 tax increase bill last summer, despite never having been the subject of a full congressional hearing. D'Amours failed by 10 votes to separate the withholding provision from the main tax-increase bill. The last time Congress voted on a similar withholding proposal, in 1980, it lost 400-4.

If there were a vote on the issue today, it would pass, predicted Senate Finance member Sen. John Chaffee, R-R.I., but the problem is finding a tax-related vehicle so that Congress can raise the issue despite the leadership's determination not to let such a bill get to the floor.

Chaffee reminded the savings and loan executives that Senate Finance Chairman Bob Dole, R-Kan., last week threatened that if banks persisted in trying to repeal the withholding provision they might get stuck with other taxes they wouldn't like.

"He also was talking about you," Chaffee said. It happened last year to restaurant owners, Chaffee noted, who lobbied against Dole's proposal to require that they report estimates of tips received by their employees; they found themselves facing the loss of tax deductions for business lunches.

CHAFFEE questioned, however, the Treasury rationale for the withholding measure, saying that the Internal Revenue Service's estimate after spot checks was that only 3 percent of taxpayers were not reporting income from savings and dividends—far less than the 15 percent claimed by Treasury.

D'Amours vowed to work hard to force a House vote on the withholding issue by midspring, in time for both sides to correct their bookkeeping well before the July 1 changeover under the law.

If O'Neill and Ways and Means Chairman Dan Rostenkowski continue to oppose the change, he said he will try to wrest the issue from the jurisdiction of the tax-writing committee through a discharge petition, which requires 219 signatures and could not be attempted before late March.

In addition to the 190 persons who have signed his bill, D'Amours said similar bills sponsored by other colleagues have attracted an additional 60 signatures—far more than the 219 needed for the parliamentary procedure he has in mind.

"Our only hope is the intensity of the grass roots reaction to this. If it continues, Washington, even as isolated as it is, will have to change," D'Amours said.

"The government says they want to encourage people to save but on the other hand they're requiring that 10 percent of the people's savings be taken out of their accounts each month—losing the compound interest—and be sent to Washington," said Harry Challel, president of the Fox Chase Federal Savings and Loan Association in Philadelphia.

"It doesn't make sense. The IRS should do a better job of collecting that money by cross-checking the interest-paid forms we send them and not ask us to do the collection job for them," said Challel.

Capital goods industries see no sign of upturn

Copley News Service

The consumer is beginning to pull the nation out of the recession, but as is typical, capital goods industries have seen no signs of the upturn: "There has been no optimism in our capital goods businesses," said Robert Anderson, chairman and chief executive officer of Pittsburgh-based Rockwell International Corp. in an interview.

Rockwell International has done extremely well the last few years during the recession, mainly because it gets more than half its business from government contracts — defense and space. Much of this work is done in the Los Angeles area: The old North American Aviation became part of Rockwell in 1967.

Rockwell has long since sold off the parts of its business that were consumer-intensive, such as Admiral, the TV-set maker, and its subsidiary that manufactured lower-priced power tools. "We're essentially out of the consumer business," said Anderson. But top executives of such companies as General Electric tell him that the consumer is reviving.

"We're seeing ahich is relatof improved business) in our power tool business, which is related to housing, and a little bit in our automotive business," said Anderson.

However, more than 70 percent of Rockwell's automotive business is in making components for medium- and heavy-duty trucks, "and in that business, we're running at one-third the volume that we were operating at in 1979. And that's just about what has happened to the industry itself: In 1979, the industry was turning out 210,000 trucks a year; now it's 65,000 trucks a year and there are no signs of recovery yet," said Anderson.

The company's other capital goods businesses are still in the doldrums, he spment; indull's industrial machinery; printing and graphics equipment; industrial sewing machine, and other industrial businesses are seeing no signs of recovery.

Similarly, Rockwell's energy-related enterprises have not yet smelled the roses: It is selling measurement equipment, valve lubricants, pipe clamps, couplings and such to utilities, oil and chemical companies — and those markets remain weak.

Nonetheless, Rockwell's earnings have been growing sharply for several years and its stock has been a consistent star on the New York Stock Exchange. Since 1977, Rockwell's earnings per share have leaped forward as follows: $1.90, $2.31, $3.38, $3.59, $4.07, and $4.22 (for the year ended Sept. 30 last year).

The reason: defense and space. Last year, Rockwell got 52 percent of its total $7.4 billion sales from the U.S. government.

In 1982, aerospace accounted for $2.8 billion of Rockwell's volume. The company makes the orbiters for the Space Shuttle program for NASA. Despite all the talk of slashing the federal budget, "the NASA budget is pretty well set," said Anderson.

The company is the prime contractor on the B-1B long-range combat bomber. Rockwell will delivery 100 planes by mid-1988. The total program is $20.5 billion: More than half, or over $10 billion, will go to Rockwell.

Wall Street is a bit nervous over the bomber program: The big risk in Rockwell's stock is that Congress may stretch the B-1 program and delay some other programs," said John V. Pincavage of Paine Webber Mitchell Hutchins.

But Anderson is confident: "This is the first year that the B-1 is not a matter of discussion. I feel confident the B-1 will be supported. The Soviet Union has been producing its Backfire bomber for four or five years."

Dollar weaker

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mostly weaker in Europe today in what dealers described as nervous and thin trading. Gold bullion prices also declined.

West German dealers said the dollar made a weak technical recovery at the opening from lower overnight prices.

But they said investors were unnerved by unsubstantiated rumors of an imminent German Supreme Court ruling on the constitutionality of the March 6 election.

Investors also were said to be still awaiting a possible U.S. discount rate cut following Tuesday's inconclusive meeting of the Federal Reserve Board's Open Market Committee. The Fed has not reduced the rate it charges large commercial banks since dropping it to 8½ percent in December.

Violence dwindles; Strike still trucking

By The Associated Press

Fruit and vegetable buyers reported ample supplies but higher prices as the nationwide truckers strike, today moving into its 10th day, appeared to be winding down with less violence and more rigs on the road.

"The increased visibility of law enforcement is restoring confidence...in drivers," Patrick Riordan, a spokesman for Florida Gov. Bob Graham, said Tuesday as truck volume rose and violence dwindled in that state.

More than 1,200 incidents in 38 states involving shootings, rock-throwing, nails on roads, arsons, tire-slashing and threats to truckers have been reported since the strike began Jan. 31. One man was killed while at least 64 were injured and 93 arrested.

But truck convoys to state capitals seemed to be replacing snipers in the night as the primary means of expressing solidarity. Horn-blaring truckers demonstrated Tuesday in Florida, Oregon and California. Some hung banners from their rigs to demonstrate their anger at rising federal gasoline taxes and highway user fees.

Although some convoys blocked traffic briefly in congested downtown areas, the protests went off without incident, authorities said.

While the independents represent just 15 percent of the nation's truck fleet, they carry most of the fresh food, household goods and half the steel. Still, it was business as usual Tuesday with only a few shortages reported at terminals.

Jack King, with the California Farm Bureau in Sacramento, said increased use of rail service, as well as rain that slowed harvesting, had reduced the demand for trucks in that fruit- and vegetable-growing state.

"Our preliminary reports show things are moving with no hitches today," King said Tuesday. "What was a good situation yesterday is improving today. Certainly from the standpoint of moving produce, we've had no problems."

In Pennsylvania, wholesalers reported that apple, onion and potato prices were holding steady, but produce from Florida, Texas and Mexico was priced 25 percent to 35 percent higher than last week.

"I'm paying $24 a case for cucumbers that were only $13 a case last week, and green peppers went from $15 to $18 a case to $24 to $30," said Ron Casertano, manager of Galioto's Produce in Pittsburgh. "Shipments are almost normal but prices sure aren't."

Mike Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association which called the strike Jan. 31, hinted he would call off the shutdown if Congress makes a "goodwill commitment" to meet the truckers grievances, three House members said Tuesday.

Parkhurst met two hours with Reps. Peter H. Kostmayer, D-Pa., Douglas Applegate, D-Ohio, and Ed Jenkins, D-Ga.

Kostmayer said he and the other congressmen agreed to draft a document outlining a proposed plan of action. If the draft is approved by truckers, it will be circulated among other lawmakers for support and could be the basis for legislation.

The main concerns expressed by the independents are looming increases in highway user fees and excise taxes — both mandated under legislation enacted in December that provides for a 5-cent-a-gallon boost in the gasoline tax.

The truckers say those increases would put them out of business.

Mob informant says Lombardo arranges hits

CHICAGO (AP) — One of four men facing sentencing in the Teamsters bribery-conspiracy case authorized executions for the Chicago crime syndicate, a mob informant has testified.

"If you got anything to do, especially hits, make sure you get an OK from (Teamsters defendant) Joe Lombardo," Frank Cullotta, a former member of the Chicago mob, said he was told.

In testimony Tuesday during the second day of sentencing hearings in the Teamsters case, Cullotta, 44, said he entered the federal witness protection program because Lombardo and Anthony Spilotro were threats to his life.

"I know certain things about them," Cullotta said. "I've been involved with them in one way or another for the last 20 years."

Spilotro is a reputed high-ranking member of Chicago's crime syndicate who allegedly controls mob gambling interests in Las Vegas. He recently was jailed there after Chicago authorities charged him with two 20-year-old slayings.

Congressmen study truckers' stand

WASHINGTON (AP) — Several congressmen, seeking to end the independent truckers strike, are working on a blueprint designed to show Congress' "goodwill commitment" to examine the truckers' concerns.

Rep. Peter H. Kostmayer, D-Pa., also said that Mike Parkhurst, president of the Independent Truckers Association, indicated that truckers might end the strike if Congress made the commitment to look into and help resolve the truckers' problems.

But Parkhurst, who met with Kostmayer and Reps. Douglas Applegate, D-Ohio, and Ed Jenkins, D-Ga., Tuesday, said: "We're not looking for good will; we're looking for specific commitments."

Of the meeting, Parkhurst said: "A dialogue was established with the leaders of the nationwide truckers' shutdown...which could lead to a sharper focus of attention to solving some of the problems of the independent truckers."

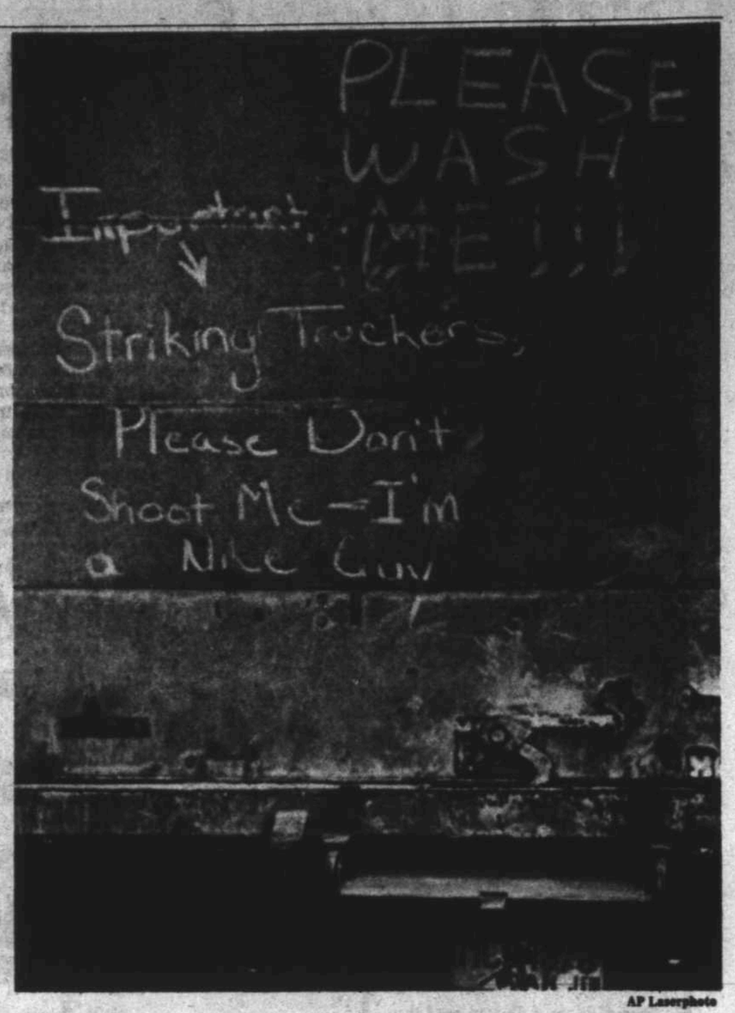

Specifically, Parkhurst said he is "looking for a commitment on the part of other key Congressonal leaders, on both sides of the aisle, to launch a series of hearings and specific legislative reforms to address many of the problems that obviously plague the trucking industry, and the independent trucker in particular."

Kostmayer, in whose office the meeting was held, said he planned to have document, which he described as a "goodwill commitment," available today. If the working paper is approved by the truckers, it would be circulated on Capitol Hill for further congressional support, he said.

Then, he said, the document would be taken to congressional leaders to carry out its proposals that could include possible legislation and committee hearings.

Kostmayer said the truckers indicated their two biggest concerns are the large increases in highway users fees, which would go up from $240 a year to $1,900 over a period of years, and excise taxes, which were included in the 5-cent-a-gallon increase in the gas tax Congress enacted in December..

"The problem came from Congress, so it has to be resolved by Congress," Applegate said.

The message scribbled in the dirt on a Utah truck illustrates one non-striking driver's feeling about a strike by independent truckers. Fewer violent incidents have been reported in the stoppage, which began Feb. 1.

Neighborhood Service District rejected

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Residents living along Bluebird Lane in north Midland won another round Tuesday in their continuing battle to keep their area free of businesses as the City Council rejected a proposal for a Neighborhood Service District.

During the session in City Hall Council Chambers, the council also approved zoning for a veterinary hospital and an office district and reneged from taking a vote on a nightclub permit.

Request for the NS District was taken to the council on appeal by Larry Hahn, who owns the land south of Bluebird Lane and 2,300 feet west of Garfield Street. It had been given an unfavorable recommendation by the Planning and Zoning Commission.

Representatives for Hahn asked first that it be delayed or continued since their legal counsel wasn't available, and to give them time to come up with a plan that would be suitable to the residents.

But since numerous residents had appeared for the public hearing, the council proceeded.

Hal Rucker, who at 2601 Bluebird Lane is adjacent to the property, said he would be willing to listen if Hahn would present a development for 1F-1, or single family residences. But if the representative was going to come up with a plan for retail "that's pretty with trees, we don't want it. I've even offered to buy the property from him (Hahn) and he won't sell it."

Bill Black, who along with Clyde White built homes that abut Hahn's land to the south, noted he had put in single family homes, and felt Hahn should be able to do the same.

Mayor G. Thane Akins pointed out to Hahn's spokesmen, including Leslie Hahn, that "since annexation of this land, our discussion has been protection of residential and Agricultural Estates district. The 1F-1 to the south has been a good transition zone. From our standpoint, it's good planning as well. Your acreage would have to fit in with acreage on three sides of it."

Several residents opposed the idea of a convenience store, such as 7—Eleven or Colonial, going in that spot, citing the increased traffic on Bluebird, selling of gas and particularly the video games which lure their children into the store.

While the mayor pointed out that sale of gasoline isn't allowed in the NS district, Ms. Hahn added they had no intention of putting in a convenience store. Instead, they had been aiming at boutiques, such as an ice cream shop.

She then blamed the city planning department for blocking previous plans to turn that tract into a residential area designed with a cul-de-sac so houses wouldn't face onto Whitman. She contended that street will become a major thoroughfare off Loop 250 and dead-ending into the new elementary school on Bluebird Lane.

Questioned by the mayor, Richard Hennessy, director of planning and community development, said he didn't see any reason why that tract couldn't be developed as residential. None of the major streets in that area, he added, are more than half a mile in length and should discourage fast traffic.

In voting against the zone change request, Councilman Tom Sloan noted the developer could take it back through the planning process in less than the year waiting period if a different use and design is submitted.

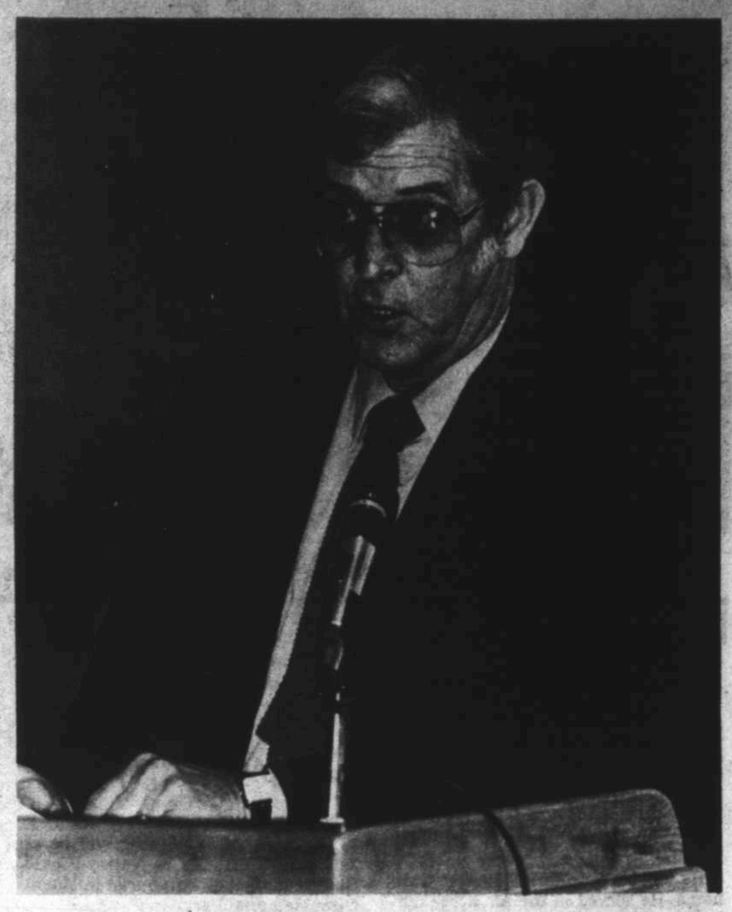

Mary Chandler was given the go-ahead for a veterinary hospital to be located 100 feet south of Highway 349 and Tejas in 349 Ranch Estates. However, she was told her piece of land sits in the middle of a playa lake and she might want to build up the land before building her clinic for small animals.

An office center was approved for the triangular piece of land where Andrews Highway intersects with Golf Course Road. Architect Walter Pate said the buildings will be arranged so that none backs onto the streets.

And a restaurant planned by Larry Lumpkin and Associates in a shopping center being built by that company on the southwest corner of Loop 250 and North Garfield stands a chance of being denied a nightclub permit. Brian Chandler with the firm explained the restaurant is similar to Bennigan's and Harrigan's. The bar would be selling drinks after the restaurant portion closes.

Councilman Jesse Hatfield was abstaining from voting, and with four councilman it appeared to be a 2-2 tie, meaning the proposal would die. Chandler decided to hold off the issue until the absent member — Gordon Marcum II — could be at the next meeting on Feb. 22.

Bennigan's was granted a temporary beer permit to allow a St. Patrick's Day celebration March 17. A representative explained a 40-by-80 foot tent will be set up north of the restaurant to take care of overflow business that day.

This issue is viewed as a moral concern and will not disappear until it, in one form or another, becomes a permanent part of our pay package."

Teachers demand compensation for Social Security

By HALLYE JORDAN
Staff Writer

The outcome of Tuesday's early salary requests for Midland Independent School District teachers, usually presented during budget considerations in April, will depend on two items: salary raise recommendations from Austin and the tax base in Midland.

During a presentation from the joint salary committee of the Classroom Teachers Association of Midland and the Midland Educators Association following a regular meeting of trustees, one concern was spelled out on the chalkboard:

Despite a decrease in the housing shortage, despite the salary bonus granted last year and despite current local salaries ranging from 32 to 50 percent above the state salary base, Midland teachers still demand compensation for the board's decision to withdraw from Social Security, effective Jan. 1, 1982.

"This issue is viewed as a moral concern and will not disappear until it, in one form or another, becomes a permanent part of our pay package," Don McCartney, Midland High teacher and spokesman for the joint salary committee, said of the first of three recommendations presented.

ALL THREE salary proposals presented to the board contained the following requests:

—To retain the present salary structure plus any and all state increases.

—An additional pay grade to be attached to the scale.

—Any state monies allocated by the legislature for medical protection become an adjunct to teachers' current policy to provide improved coverage.

The first proposal also included an additional 6.65 percent of gross salary to replace the lost Social Security package. The second proposal requested "an annuity into which the district contributes an amount equal to 6 percent of the employee's gross salary while the employee contributes 3 percent."

"The annuity contract would allow the employee to retrieve in full his contribution at the end of each year without disturbing the district's tax deferred contribution," McCartney said.

"THIS CONTRACT would also contain provisions to reward teachers who remain with the district and those who retire before being fully vested," he said, adding that a committee consisting of teachers, administrators and trustees, with financial advice, would decide the details of the contract.

The third proposal asked for a "6 percent bonus exempt from teacher retirement deductions to be paid in two equal portions — one half at the onset of Christmas vacation and the remaining sum to be paid at the end of May each year," McCartney said.

The committee does not prefer any of the three proposals over the others, he added.

In action last spring, trustees approved a bonus based on 4 percent of a third-year bachelor of arts degree salary with a maximum amount of $650 to be paid at the end of the school year to teachers who had completed an entire year of teaching. That action came following teachers' concerns over the shortage of affordable housing in Midland.

"IT IS TRUE that there are now far more vacancies on the market than last year, but Midland possesses the dubious honor of leading the state in the cost of housing and utilities by a substantial margin," McCartney said.

According to board president Parker Humes, the source for the joint committee's figures concerning housing and utilities is inaccurate.

"The American Chamber of Commerce (Research Association) is not recognized as a very valid or accurate picture of the cost of living," he said, explaining that those statistics are based more on trends "and should not be taken in cents and dollars."

Furthermore, Humes contended that Texas Electric Service Co. reports Midland ranks tenth highest in the state in costs of utilities — not first.

According to MHS instructor Kerry Davis, the committee is aware of the ACCRA's "error being as much as five (points), one way or another. But they do compare like things (such as costs of houses with similar square-feet or apartments with the same number of bedrooms)."

Humes pointed out that, according to the Texas Research League, Midland ranks 39 percent over the state salary base and pays the second highest salaries of districts the size of MISD.

McCARTNEY NOTED that Texas State Teachers Association said Midland ranks 80th in the state for beginning teachers. "We are number one for the top of the master's degree (schedule) in the state, but we're number four for bachelor's degrees," he said.

Humes said the district has attempted to provide an incentive for teachers to stay by rewarding those who have given service to the district over the years, "but if the thrust is going to be this year on how much the beginning salary is, we'll address that first."

Davis told Humes that was not the case. "We're simply pointing out the situation. We want to keep the scale base where it is."

According to MISD superintendent Dr. Joseph P. Baressi Jr., the average teacher salary in the district is 40 percent above the state base. About 100 teachers in the district receive salaries 50 percent above state base.

"There are a number of factors to contend with, the state legislature being probably the one with the most impact," Baressi said.

Also, he cited a local factor: value of mineral properties and a decline in the oil industry may have a negative effect on the tax base.

ACCORDING TO McCartney, Texas teachers have received a 35 percent increase in salaries over the past three years. The increase has "only allowed Texas teachers to stay even with the cost of living during that period. Actually, teachers have lost 8.3 percent of their buying power over the past ten years," he said.

In a survey conducted by the joint salary committee last November, 543 responses indicated the following, he said:

—Twenty-two percent of MISD teachers currently moonlight during the school year.

—Thirty-four percent are not major breadwinners of their families.

Councilman vows to make taxi drivers honest

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

Midland City Council drove one way, then another, ran into dead-ends and made U-turns. But the panel still couldn't find a solution on how the local taxi companies should charge for trips from Midland Regional Airport to the city.

On Tuesday in City Hall Council Chambers, the council looked at one proposal for rate charges prepared by Susan Howell, administrative assistant to City Manager James Brown. It called for dividing the city into zones with rates set according to those zones.

"I don't see how you're going to enforce it," said Councilman Tom Sloan. "I get people calling and complaining about being overcharged. I'm going to make these people (taxi drivers) honest or as near that as possible."

The council discussed throwing out the zoning idea and using meters from the airport. Or, there was the proposal to charge a set fee from the airport to the city limits. Once the edge of town is reached, the driver could turn on the meter and that charge would be added.

City Attorney Joe Nuessle murmured he thought the council had decreed taxi drivers would post prices from the airport into Midland in the cabs, and Mayor G. Thane Akins agreed it had been done. "And if they don't have it in the taxis, they should be pulled off the streets," Akins said.

In his campaign to "keep the taxi drivers honest," Sloan suggested instituting a $200 fine if the rates aren't posted in the taxis, and $50 reward for anyone reporting such an offense.

Agreeing to postpone a decision on the options, the council decided that police at the airport should check taxis on the rates. If rates aren't posted as set into law earlier, "police should send them home," the mayor added.

In other action, Fred Baker, director of public works, illustrated three maps on drainage problems in a developing area of northeast Midland, pointing to five playa lakes. Drainage problems will affect 349 Ranch Estates, Adobe Meadows and Pavilion Park subdivisions, he said. Also included is an area stretching from Mockingbird Lane to Loop 250 and from Lamesa Highway to Fairgrounds Road.

How to resolve the problem appeared to be a muddy issue and the council delayed action. During his discussion, Baker noted various structures are being built in the middle of the playa lakes, including some mini-storage houses.

No action was taken on bids to tear down three city-owned structures — Cinema I, Heath Furniture and Kruger Jewelry. All are vacant. The council decided to check out a proposal by Earl C. Lewis for tearing down the buildings and to consider a request by some Midlanders for use of Cinema I.

Under the agenda item to discuss various city projects, the council looked at a letter written by a resident near House Park, complaining of that park's lack of development.

"We need to clean it up," said Councilman Steve Davidson. "It's a pretty well developed area to the east." The mayor said he had told another resident to submit a letter for consideration during the budget hearing this summer.

Looking at a trailer park on 1600 S. Fort Worth St. which has been found in violation of numerous city ordinances, Davidson said he is concerned not all the residents can find other places to live.

"Where do they go? A cardboard box," he asked, before adding, "Well, it might be safer than what they're living in." Ms. Howell explained that two churches offered assistance.

The council also approved letting the county elections administrator handle city elections and deferred action on designating an area of town as blighted so it can qualify for industrial development bonds.

Controversial Osbourne concert still up in the air

By GEORGIA TEMPLE
Entertainment Writer

Tickets for the controversial March 8 Ozzy Osbourne concert at Ector County Coliseum went on sale Tuesday, with the answer on whether or not the "show will go on" still unresolved.

In past weeks the British rock star's pending performance has attracted considerable opposition from an Odessa group, Odessans for Decency, which had petitioned Ector County commissioners to halt the performance. At the same time, a counter-petition was circulated by the "Ozz Patrol," a group advocating individual choice in concert attendance.

The showdown was set for Monday when the Ector County Commissioners' Court met with both groups and interested parties to reach a decision.

Ector County Attorney Steve Groh told the packed courtroom that he believes the county has a binding contract to allow Osbourne to perform. In addition, if the county commissioners' court refuses to allow Osbourne to perform at the county-owned facility, it could be liable under a "federal statute which makes it illegal for a person to deprive another of his constitutional rights under color of state law or by state action," Groh said Tuesday in a telephone interview with The Midland Reporter-Telegram.

"A vote of the commissioners' court would be a state action. Aside from the actual damages, attorney's fees and punitive damages could be awarded against the individual commissioners personally," Groh said.

It was decided at Monday's meeting to waive a decision on the concert until a declaratory petition could be filed with a federal judge, in this case U.S. District Judge Lucius D. Bunton, who sits in Midland.

"We're going to be submitting the question to Lucius Bunton in the form of a declaratory petition seeking a declaratory judgment on whether or not Ector County would be violating Ozzy Osbourne and his promoters' First Amendment rights by breaking the contract," Groh said.

The petition was to be filed today in federal court in Midland, although it had not been filed by press time today. Also,according to federal court officials, Bunton was to leave town today and is not expected to return until Friday.

"We're hoping because of his (Osbourne's) past conduct, by alleged violations of the law, we have grounds for this decision."

Osbourne is reported to have committed certain acts during his performances which have involved the mutilation and death of animals.

Of these stories Groh said, "We've heard all kinds of allegations and very little in the way of substantiation, no proof that would be evidence in a court of law."

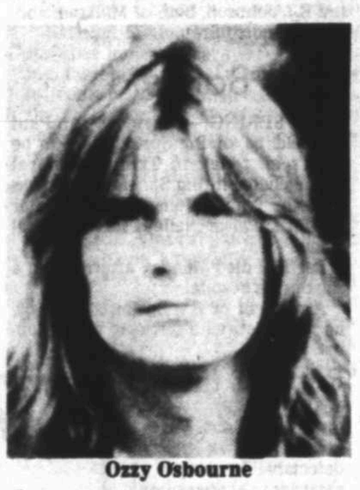

The stories which have been substantiated include Osbourne biting the head off a dead bat during a concert and urinating on the Alamo. For the latter action, Osborne was charged with "being drunk in a public place."

Also, there was an incident in California as well as a dead pigeon "apparently" turning up "after his concert in Wisconsin," Groh said.

"Beyond that we get into the rumor stage," Groh said. "It's a combination of hype, rubber animals and rampant rumor as far as I can tell."

Groh said it was up to Bunton to decide "to accept jurisdiction" over the issue. If Bunton decides to rule on the petition, Groh said, "We're hoping for some kind of decision as early as the end of next week."

In the event that Bunton rules that the commissioners' court would not be in violation of the 1983 statute by canceling the concert, Groh said it would still be unwise for the court to break the contract.

Ozzy Osbourne

"If we break the contract the county government could be liable for damages for lost profits," Groh said. In this case, the lost profits could amount to "$60,000 to $80,000 plus attorney's fees" as well as a possible "penalty on top of the actual lost profits."

Taking all aspects of the issue into consideration, Groh said, "It is my feeling that the concert will probably take place."

'Early summer' accounts for drain on water tank

By VINCE GIORGI
Staff Writer

With no evidence of leaks and the Shell Avenue water tower back to normal capacity, city utilities employees are assuming that Midlanders — thirsty for an early summer or taking television breaks en masse Monday night — put an unseasonably heavy drain on the million-gallon tank.

Don Collier, superintendent for water purification, said that after the tank's water level dipped dramatically overnight Monday, city crews spent much of Monday night and Tuesday searching unsuccessfully for leaks or water line breaks.

At about 8:30 p.m. Monday, the tank's water level began receding inexplicably at the rate of about 1-2 feet per hour. Although two pumps were used to pour 4,700 gallons of water per minute into the tank, the 28-foot deep tank, which had been about two-thirds full, continued to drain before reaching a low water mark of about 11-12 feet.

Collier said a third pump — normally called upon only during arid summer months when demand is at its peak — was put to work Tuesday and by about 4 p.m., water in the tank had returned to the 21-22 foot level.

"Evidently all it was was summer hitting us in February," said Collier. "Really and truly, that's the only explanation I can think of. This time of the year, I just didn't expect it. It's probably just an early summer that hit us.

According to the National Weather Service, the temperature Monday in Midland reached a high of 64 degrees at 4 p.m. Midland has received .08 of an inch of precipitation in February, and 1.22 inches thus far in 1983.

"I'm glad to know it wasn't a leak and we didn't have any low pressure," Collier said. "Evidently they just hit us a little heavier than usual for this time of year."

TEFRA largest change in Medicare, Liley says

By GAIL BURKE
Staff Writer

While most health care experts are issuing a bleak prognosis for hospitals seeking government reimbursement dollars this year, Parkview Hospital officials say their Medicare vital signs are strong and steady.

The Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) 1982, enacted in October, is the largest change in Medicare since the beginning of the government reimbursement program in 1965, according to Dick Liley, Parkview adminstrator.

Before the law change, Medicare, which pays hospital costs for 26 million aged and 3 million disabled persons in the U.S., reimbursed hospitals for the cost of services provided to Medicare patients. The program never reimbursed the actual hospital costs.

Now, although reimbursements to hospitals based on cost will continue, several limitations also have been imposed to encourage efficiency and slow down escalating hospital costs.

Dick Liley

The three-year tax package is expected to slash Medicare reimbursements nationwide by $12.5 billion with a reduction of $2 billion this year. Midland Memorial Hospital officials have said they expect a possible $1.2 million loss in Medicare reimbursement in the next two years.

"It will not have the impact to Parkview that it will have on public hospitals," Liley said. "I believe we're running an efficient hospital and under TEFRA efficiency is rewarded."

If hospitals stay within a predetermined target rate, they will be rewarded, according to Liley. One of the reimbursement limitations includes a complicated formula — based on the hospital's previous year's cost per discharge rate — designating a target rate for hospitals. This target rate is buffered with a 7.9 percent inflation factor.

Companies to bid on pipeline placement

By LANA CUNNINGHAM
Staff Writer

John Lowe has $23 million sitting on his desk.

At least 40 companies have displayed an interest in getting their share. But only one will be selected as winner of the contract after bids are opened at 10 a.m. this morning in City Hall Council Chambers.

The eye-appealing meaty bone at the end of a stick is a 15-mile pipeline that the city is trying to get installed from the sewage treatment plant out to J. "Timber" Floyd's land southeast of Midland. This is a major part of the city's sewage disposal plan approved by the state last fall.

The plan calls for the pipeline taking primary treated effluent out to Floyd's land where it will be dumped into a holding pond and kept until used for irrigation.

Estimated cost of the project is $20 million. Midland added another $3 million to install new water lines in the city. Water revenue bonds amounting to $23 million to finance the projects were issued through the Colorado River Municipal Water District.

A copy of the book-like bond issue has been encased in a block of plastic, and that is what Lowe, public utilities director, has on his desk.

Lowe said 40 companies throughout the country had requested plans and specifications for the pipeline, although he suspected only 15 to 20 companies would submit bids.

Requests came from numerous companies in Texas, several in New Mexico and others in Kansas, Tennessee and North Carolina.

"Fifteen miles of pipeline will stir anybody" right now with the slow economy, said Lowe.

Final decision on who gets the contract will be made by the City Council.

Boy will be tried

HOUSTON (AP) — A 15-year-old boy who strangled his stepmother with a shoelace after discovering she had secretly recorded his telephone conversations has been certified to stand trial as an adult on murder charges.

Terry L. Carr, who lives in the suburb of Deer Park, was referred to the adult criminal courts by State District Judge Criss Cole in the Dec. 6 slaying of his 38-year-old stepmother, Janet Carr.

If convicted, the Carr could be sentenced to 99 years or life in prison and fined $10,000.

City Councilmen tell their feelings about re-election

One will, one won't, one doesn't know.

A check of three city councilmen who are up for re-election this spring revealed a different attitude from each.

Jesse Hatfield, who is completing his first term in Place 1, indicated he hasn't decided about re-election.

Gordon Marcum II, who is finishing his third term in Place 2, said he definitely would be trying for another two years.

And Carroll Thomas, who has sat in Place 3 for eight years, has decided he's been in one spot too long. David Godfrey announced on Monday he would be seeking that chair.

Thomas said he wanted to spend more time with his family and get involved in other interests, such as church. Besides, he laughed, he and his wife have been thinking about starting tennis.

In addition, he said, Midland is past that major boom and resulting problems the city was facing two years ago.

Deadline for filing with the city secretary is March 2.

Police probe Kruger's diamond robbery

Police today are looking for two suspects who reportedly took $40,000 worth of diamonds from a safe at Kruger's Jewelers in Midland Park Mall early Tuesday night.

A 20-year-old clerk said a black couple in their mid-20s came in shortly after 6 p.m. and purchased a jewelry box. As the clerk was busy wrapping it, the woman apparently took a pouch full of diamonds from a safe located in a ring of display cases in the center of the store.

The couple then left the mall in a bronze-colored late model Monte Carlo. The man was described as about 6 feet tall, weighing 170 pounds, wearing a beard and moustache and having a gap in his front teeth. The woman was said to be about 5 feet, 7 inches tall, weighing 130 pounds and having stringy, shoulder length hair.

In serious condition at Midland Memorial Hospital this morning was Bill Terry, 28, of 4713 W. Illinois Ave. According to sketchy police reports, Terry was stabbed once in the abdomen by an unidentified assailant at the Four Seasons Lounge, 3421 W. Wall Ave., about 11 p.m. Tuesday. An investigation continues.

Also in serious condition as the result of a traffic accident Tuesday night was 37-year-old Ronald Stevens of Box 4023, Midland.

According to the Department of Public Safety, Stevens lost control of his 1970 Honda motorcycle on County Road-1260, about three miles west of Midland, shortly before 9 p.m. Tuesday. Stevens suffered head injuries after he was thrown from the bike.

First National Bank sues Rigco

Midland's First National Bank, which last March 12 loaned Rigco Inc. of Hobbs, N.M., $5.47 million to buy two drilling rigs, has filed suit in Midland's 142nd State District Court to recover its money even though Rigco has filed for bankruptcy in U.S. Bankruptcy Court in New Mexico.

Last year, the bank filed a similar suit against Rigco, which is also known as U.S. Drilling Co., and its principal officers when Rigco failed to pay off the loan despite three extensions.

Defendants in the suit are Rigco President Nolan H. Brunson of Hobbs, Vice President John B. Castle of Midland and Kenneth R. Marsh of Lovington, N.M.

Rigco defaulted on the loan, which was made at 17.5 percent interest, on Nov. 8 and filed for voluntary bankruptcy later that month.

Teachers demand compensation

—Eighteen percent have other sources of income in addition to their teaching salaries.

—Twenty-six percent of MISD teachers are "surviving" on their salaries alone.

"Surviving is the proper word," he said. "Many of those individuals who are the sole support of their families are forced to work all summer and forego further college education.

"(The survey and one conducted by the TSTA) clearly attest that teaching, both in Midland and the state of Texas, is in jeopardy of becoming feasible only as a second income for the family," he continued. In Midland, the situation is worse, he added.

"Teachers have little choice: work two jobs or change occupations."

Particles found

AUSTIN (AP) — A Houston-area legislator says a study shows barely detectable levels of toxic particles in a grass sample taken from his home town of Deer Park.

Rep. Ed Watson said the grass sample was one of a number of air, soil and vegetation samples taken from October 1981 to January 1982 in an Air Control Board study requested by Watson because of an increase in reports of skin problems.

TEFRA largest difference in Medicare, administrator says

Liley said the target rate is established by comparing a specific hospital to its hospital peer group — relatively the same size facility with the same number of beds. The target is then adjusted for "extraordinary salary expenses and other unusual costs."

For example, if a hospital's target rate is $1,000 cost per discharge, but the hospital's actual cost is $900, the government will pay 50 percent of the difference between the target and the acutal cost — $50 above the $900.

"The government will continue to reimburse (Medicare) dollars on cost basis," Liley said. "Since our cost is below the target rate, we will not lose any reimbursement unless we go above the 7.9 percent inflation factor which we don't expect."

According to Liley, "the easiest way to trim hospital operating costs is to keep the overhead to the lowest level."

And Liley said Parkview has a low overhead. Sixty-four percent of the hospital's operating cost are in salaries, and "we have an extremely limited administration. And our department heads are working managers and not merely figure heads. The easiest way to trim cost is to reduce the number of administrative and management employees."

Parkview's patient load runs about 50 to 60 percent occupancy per day, according to Liley, and "the hospital continues to be profitable with the charges no higher than Midland Memorial Hospital."

American Petrofina sues Wings Fuel

American Petrofina (Fina) Marketing Inc. has filed a lawsuit on a debt in Midland's 142nd State District Court against Wing Fuels of Midland and six petroleum distributors who, Fina claims, owe it $465,605.99 in past-due bills for gasoline, diesel fuel and motor oil.

Defendants in the suit are Wing Fuels, which is headed by Mike Kimbrow, and Hugh Harkrider and James E. Bradley, both of Midland; John Findley of Longview, Dearl Gunter of Forney, Wallace McDaniel of Mineral Wells and Don E. Williams of Longview.

Wing in 1981 and 1982 had entered in a contract with Fina to buy fuel and oil for distribution to working rigs in the oil fields. The first one-year contract made in June 1981 called for the purchase of 3 million to 4 million gallons of gasoline, 1.5 million to 2 million gallons of diesel fuel, and 60,000 to 70,000 gallons of motor oil and lubricants. In the 1982 contract, the agreement was for 1 million to 1.5 million gallons of gasoline, 1.5 to 2 million gallons of diesel fuel, and 20,000 to 30,000 gallons of motor oil and lubricants.

Each of the six individual defendants had signed written guaranty contracts that they would pay their bills.

However, the slowdown in the oilfield boom apparently cut down on the demand for petroleum products and on the tankers needed to service the rigs.

Water tank level normal

John Lowe, Midland's utilities director, said the decline may have been caused by a host of residents drawing water during breaks in the television broadcast of ABC's "The Winds of War" Monday night.

Lowe said popular television programs — most notably Super Bowls — have put strains on water systems in the past as viewers rush to draw water during commercial breaks.

Man reports theft of $500-$600

ODESSA — An elderly Odessa man told police he was robbed of $500 to $600 by three or four young men who assaulted him in his back yard Tuesday afternoon.

Thomas Byrnes, 73, of 816 Humble, said he was in the yard about 3:20 p.m. when the youths grabbed him, threw him to the ground and took his wallet.

They removed the money and threw the wallet back at him as they fled on foot. Byrnes was unable to provide a good description of his assailants, according to police, who said an investigation is continuing.

Miss Texas USA 1983 visits Midland

Lisa Allred, 1983 Miss Texas USA, toured the Reporter-Telegram on her recent visit to Midland.

Miss Allred, formerly a student at North Texas State University, attributes her title in 1983 as a part of "God's will."

"As a Christian, I have dedicated my life to serving the Lord. This is where He wants me," she said.

Her interest was stirred when the pageant's area director visited her sorority Alpha Delta Phi last year, to speak with the members about the competition.

The pageant, said Allred, is based on three criterion: the swimsuit category, the evening gown category and interviews.

Performing talent is not included in the Miss Texas USA pageant, because "being able to speak with people is the talent they're looking for," she said. "Just because someone can play a piano on stage doesn't nean they can represent the companies who sponsor the pageant."

Prizes Allred has received include a $10,000 scholarship, a 1983 car, a full-length fur coat, a western wardrobe, boots, a pendant, the use of a $25,000 jewelry collection and a $5,000 day-wardrobe.

Since the pageant in San Antonio last August, her schedule has involved a trip to London, a tennis match with John McEnroe, an appearance on NBC's "Days of our Lives."

Prior to being crowned Miss 1983 Texas USA, Allred competed in the 1982 Miss Texas USA pageant, where she placed first runner-up.

The 5-ft.7-in. 20-year-old is a native Texan from Fort Worth where she was homecoming queen and a cheerleader at Richland High School.

After Allred's reign in 1983 she plans to resume her studies in fashion merchandising at NTSU.

The Midland trip, part of her official tour, is sponsored by Dillard's Department Stores.

Although rare, deaths from herpes do occur

By NICOLE YORKIN
Hearst Feature Service

A 28-year-old chemist was admitted to a Florida hospital complaining of fever, malaise and pain in her genital area. She was diagnosed as suffering from an initial attack of genital herpes.

Four days later, the young woman slipped into a coma. On the fifth day, despite all efforts to save her life, she died — apparently from the herpes virus.

The story of her death, as documented in the January issue of the Southern Medical Journal, is one of the first reported fatalities from Herpes Simplex II — or genital herpes — in a young adult without any other signs of illness.

For herpes sufferers — their numbers range from 10 million to 20 million, according to Dr. William Wittington, chief of veneral disease control research at the National Center for Disease Control in Atlanta — the unidentified woman's death in 1980 sounds like a frightening new aspect of a malady that while often painful is most often a benign disease causing only minor physical problems.

As with any other virus infection, complications with herpes — although rare — do occur, medical experts said. They agreed that the "last thing" the medical journal report should do is touch off a panic among the nation's herpes-sufferers.

Doctors and herpes researchers say that while death from genital herpes can occur, it is "a true medical rarity."

"I believe this must be interpreted as a tragedy affecting one person and the family of that person," said Whittington, "but not as any indicator of an overall problem."

"I think these things are exceedingly rare," said Dr. C. Merrill Whorton, a pathologist at the Jacksonville, Fla., Blood Bank, who treated the woman who died and co-authored the medical report. "You wouldn't anticipate this type of devastating illness with genital herpes. Normally, it would not kill a healthy young adult."

According to the report, the woman, a chemist whose name was not disclosed, was admitted to a Jacksonville hospital with a diagnosis of severe genital Herpes Simplex and a 103-degree temperature — symptoms not uncommon with severe first-time herpes.

By the fifth day, her temperature dropped to 94 degrees, she lapsed into a coma and then died "despite vigorous resuscitative efforts."

Whorton said the autopsy revealed that the herpes virus had spread through the woman's bloodstream into her liver and caused her death — an extremely unusual chain of events.

"It was a real shock," he said. "In the general population, maybe one or two deaths have been reported from hemophiliacs or Haitians (segments of the population which are often afflicted with Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome or AIDS — a deadly breakdown of the body's immune system), but in a young American girl, you wouldn't anticipate this demise."

Most medical experts now agree that people suffering from immune deficiencies can have "severe complications" if they contact herpes-type viruses. These deficiencies can be caused by everything from AIDS to chemotherapy or even cancer, said Dr. Trudy Larson, a researcher in the University of California-Los Angeles' Pediatric Infectious Disease department.

"Everytime you have a viral infection, each person responds differently," Larson said. "Obviously, her body did not put up enough response to fight that infection, and she died."

According to Larson, most herpes-related deaths result from encephalitis, a diffuse brain infection caused by the Herpes Simplex I virus (generally oral herpes) traveling to the brain.

Larson, like most other experts, agreed that "overwhelmingly, herpes — both genital and oral — is a benign disease."

National Center for Disease Control statistics indicate that herpes is growing faster than any viruses except influenza or the common cold — so fast that an estimated 300,000 to 500,000 new cases of genital herpes occur each year.

By looking at the minute number of reported herpes-related deaths, however, said Dr. Jerome Eder, a Canoga Park, Calif., obstetrician-gynecologist, "You can see how truly rare death from herpes is. This is a case that makes the medical journals," added Eder, who is the medical adviser for the Los Angeles chapter of HELP, a nationwide organization for education about genital herpes.

"The doctor said it was very important."

A survey of Massachusetts doctors revealed what behavior they call "very important" to good health. Here's part of their list and the percentage of doctors who find each item "very important."

Computers, games connected to older TVs may cause possible hazard

Be careful if you plan on connecting a home computer or video game to a color TV built before Jan. 15, 1970 — you might be zapped by excessive radiation.

According to a health tip in the current Family Circle magazine "Here's News in Medicine" column, one-sixth of these older sets may exceed the radiation emission standards set in 1970. The magazine item notes that the intensity of the radiation increases as you get closer to the radiation source. Keep in mind that both computer users and video game players sit very close to the TV screen. So, caution investigators of the Veterans Administration Medical Center, Washington, D.C., in the magazine, to be on the safe side, attach video games and computers only to sets made after Jan. 15, 1970.

Valentine's Day brings thoughts of romance, and what better time to scan America for its most eligible bachelors. To the editors of Harper's Bazaar, who list their favorites in the February issue, "eligible" means more than simple being unmarried. It implies their choices belong to a special breed of bachelor — talented, independent, fun — who make life exciting. Here's their cast of six of the sexiest men around, shown with one of the most dazzling women anywhere. Left to right: Dudley Moore, O.J. Simpson, James Caan, Loni Anderson, George Burns, Alexander Godunov and Kirs Kristofferson.

Many European spas are attracting U.S. visitors

By TOM HOGE
AP Wine and Food Writer

Americans vacationing in Europe are reviving the centuries-old custom of "taking the cure" at a health spa where mineral water gushes from the earth. It also gives them a chance to enjoy the native dishes.

Ever since the 18th century when tourists began drinking the waters at the Belgian community of Spa in the Ardennes, many European countries, including Switzerland, France, Portugal and Germany, have used the name spa for their watering spots.

Natural mineral water serves a triple purpose, I was told recently by Luis Gregorio, president of the Portugal-U.S. Chamber of Commerce, whose homeland boasts one of Europe's best-known spas in the Portuguese town of Pedras Salgadas.

"Mineral water is not only a digestive that helps settle the stomach. It also whets the appetite and is a good base for a spritzer when mixed with wine," he said.

"We have been exporting our water to the United States for the past six or seven years, incidentally," he added, "which may explain the influx of American visitors to our spa."

Pedras Salgadas, once a vacation retreat for Portugal's kings, is a quaint village dominated by a 15th-century church, I'm told.

All manner of food is available along the Iberian Peninsula, but the Portuguese specialize in a wide array of fish, from the moray eel to the octopus.

A friend who spent a summer in Portugal says the food is flavorful, without being too heavy, rich or greasy. Garlic, for instance, is a popular seasoning in sauces, but it is sparingly used.

The country features a delectable fish stew called Caldeirada, which is said to have inspired the famed bouillabaisse of France.

Perhaps the most popular fish in Portugal is Bacalhau, a dried, salted cod, that is prepared in numerous ways. It moved the noted French chef Escoffier to say that Portugal put the world in its debt with the discovery of Bacalhau. Here is a relatively simple recipe for the dish.

1½ pounds dried salt cod
2 pounds potatoes, peeled and thickly sliced
1 cup olive oil
4 medium-sized onions, sliced
1 garlic clove, crushed
White pepper
12 black olives, pitted
4 hard-cooked eggs, sliced
1 tablespoon chopped parsley

Soak cod 24 hours, changing water once. Put cod in saucepan, adding enough water to cover, and bring to a boil. Reduce heat and simmer 30 minutes. Add potatoes and simmer 20 minutes or till they are tender and fish is cooked. Lift out fish. Remove and discard skin and bones and flake fish into 1-inch pieces.

Heat oil in large casserole. Add onions and garlic and fry till onions are soft. Season with a little pepper and stir in olives, fish and potatoes with their liquid. Simmer about 5 minutes. Arrange egg slices on top of dish, sprinkle with parsley and serve hot. Serves 4. Good with chilled dry white wine.

Canadian brothers self-proclaimed 'beer experts'

By JOE BROWN
The Los Angeles Times — Washington Post News Service

"Lately I've been drinking a lot of Iron Horse," says self-proclaimed Canadian beer expert Doug McKenzie, who, with his brother Bob, presides over "Great White North," their own television talk show. "It's light, without being a light beer (the McKenzies despise light beer), and yet heavy enough, as you might gather from the name, 'Iron Horse,' to be kind of satisfying and full-bodied."

"Listen to you, you sound like the Galloping Gourmet," mutters Bob.

The hopheaded McKenzies (a.k.a. Rick Moranis and Dave Thomas, stars of the late-night "SCTV" comedy show) derive much of their expertise from their unparalleled consumption of malted beverages on the bottle-strewn set of their talk show. Beer is the beverage of choice for the brothers, who think nothing of washing down a pound of back bacon and french fries or a dozen donuts from the all-night donut store.

Typical "topics" for discussion on their improvised show: "What kind of donuts go best with beer?" "Whose turn is it to return the empties?" and "Is it true you can get free beer if you squeeze a mouse carcass into an empty beer bottle (the McKenzies claim this is called a "passenger" in the beer biz) and return it to the brewery?"

THE BROTHERS, currently in Toronto doing post-production work on their first feature film, aptly named "Strange Brew," interrupted their schedule to discuss the merits of Canadian beer.

"Oh, jeez, it's my favorite food, never mind drink," Doug says.

"Yeah, it's very nutritious," Bob agrees. "It's got hops and barley in it, eh? It's like, high in protein."

"If you have to go for a long time without food and you could pick a liquid to live on, beer would be the one, eh?," Doug says, with typical lager-clouded logic.

The McKenzies say they prefer Canadian beer to American because, Doug says, "It's got like 5 percent alcohol, eh?"

"Yeah, it's got more juice in it," Bob says. "And also up here, you have to take your empties back."

"Also, the bottle itself is a little, kind of a cute brown bottle that you just kind of get used to holding, eh," Bob explains. "Brown bottles are better than green, eh, 'cause they kept the beer colder in hot weather and cooler in cold weather.

"We don't like cans, we just use cans for 'Beer Hunter,'" he says. "That's a game sometimes we play at parties where you shake up one beer in a six-pack. It's like Russian Roulette, eh, with beer. You get a soaked head."

"Yeah," Doug says, "you have to open it pulling the tab right against your forehead, eh?"

WITH SOME EFFORT, the conversation is steered to the brothers' favorite brews of the moment. "Basically, our beer preferences are, pretty open-ended, eh," Bob says. "Like if we're at a party, we'll drink what's going. If we're in a bar, since our record came out, like, a lot of people know us, so if we're in a bar and guy comes up and says, 'Hey, McKenzies, let me buy you ... a so-and-so beer, I know you like it,' we're not gonna say, no way, eh, that's not our brand. We're gonna say, 'Yeah, that's our brand, what a coincidence. We'll have two, eh?'

"And the only other time we don't drink Canadian beer is when we're on dates," Bob continues. "Then we drink Heineken. Cause we hear that that's the way to score, eh. They're impressed by when you drop the extra bucks, eh?"

"My brother took it too far, and like spoke with like a German accent all evening," Doug says with thinly disguised contempt. "Well that was supposed to turn them on, too, eh?"

"It ain't from Germany, it's from Deutschland. It's Dutch," Bob says.

"They left," Doug says. "Cause of that bad German accent."

"They left cause of your breath," Bob counters, precipitating a new squall of bickering.

McKenzie Brothers' Guide to Major Canadian Exports:

MOLSON

Bob: "Molson is a good, solid beer $nd they always bring interesting sports to television. But we are not drinking it anymore. ... (Moranis says Molson and Labatts refused to allow them to film in their breweries for fear of people attempting the "mouse in a bottle" stunt).

Doug: "They're chicken, that's why. They're afraid of a mouse turning up in one of their bottles."

Bob: "And we figure, if they have no guts, how can their beer have guts?"

MOOSEHEAD

Doug: "Moosehead's a beauty beer. Any beer that Willie Nelson drinks is fine with us, eh?"

Bob: "Also it's named after an animal. That's always safe in a beer."

Doug: "'Cause it's a name you can trust. There's certain car names that you wouldn't trust, and similarly, we always look for a good animal name in a beer."

LABATTS

Bob: "Labatts is also a beauty beer, consistent, very few passengers in that beer. If it turns up at a party it's okay. My only objection with Labatts is all their commercials show these beautiful guys and girls ballooning, eh? And waterskiing and doing all this stuff. And I have two questions. First of all, how can you afford to do all those things and drink beer? And second of all, how can you do all of those things loaded? I tried to waterski loaded and I almost killed myself."

O'KEEFE

Doug: "The beer ain't bad, but once again, those guys are chicken. So it's colored our ability to drink their beer."

BRADOR

Bob: "Brador's a malt, eh? It's got 6.5. It's beauty. It's like having a boilermaker, eh? You get real looped fast on that."

Doug: "Originally, I believe they shortened the name because it wouldn't fit on the bottle. It was Labrador. And they just cut it to Brador."

Bob: "Yeah. They wanted to name it after an animal. And then there wasn't room on the label cause they had to put 6.5 percent alcohol. So that killed the whole dog angle."

"Beer is a cold friend on a hot day," philosophizes Doug. "Beer, to me, you know how sometimes, like you see one of those old war movies and they play the national anthem of the country and you sort of get this feeling in your stomach? That's what happens to me."

"You know sometimes when something real important happens," Bob says, "and you look in the eyes of the guys that you're with, and without saying anything, you know that you better sit down and have a beer. That's what it means to me, eh?"

"He always has that look in his eye," Doug says. "I've seen him do that to complete strangers. They look at each other like they're old cronies. And then they sit down and have a beer. And of course, I don't want to be rude so I join 'em."

Chili more traditionally American than apple pie

By KIT SNEDAKER
Hearst Feature Service

Nothing is more American than chili. Apple pie, on the other hand, is international — there's an English version, and the French have apple tarts. Even the Russians have apples baked in a crust.

But chili — there's a red, white and blue meal for you. And last year, Bill Bridges' "The Great American Chili Book" (Rawson Wade, $12.95) slipped into print and into bookshops so quietly that I just discovered it recently. It's the definitive chili book, for chili is as much a passion as a meal.

Bridges deals with the history of chili from the pemmican of the Southwest to astronaut Tom Stafford, who quipped to his Russian counterpart during the 1975 Apollo-Soyuz link-up: "Hey, wouldn't a hot bowl of chili go great right now?" Chili still is out of this world in the memory banks of the Houston Space Flight Center.

Chili is usually claimed by Texas, but other sources attribute it to the U.S. Army, Confederate officers, American Indians, a Spanish nun, a Chinese chuckwagon cook, an Irish chuckwagon cook, Canary Islanders, Czechs, Greeks, Magyars and people in the Caucasus mountains. Mexico lays no claim to it, although the peppers that make it so good — or so hot — originated there.

Chile in the Midwest; chili in New York — Bridges documents them all. But his favorite chili receipe is Brown Derby Chili from an old paperback cookbook. It was made by a Texan, a born wanderer who had to be bailed out of jail and put back to work in the kitchen from time to time. But he made superb chili.

BROWN DERBY CHILI

3/4 pound kidney fat, diced
3 pounds lean beef, ground or diced small
1 pint of water
3 small onions, chopped
4 cloves garlic, finely chopped
8 tablespoons chili powder
1 pint solid pack tomatoes
1-1/2 tablespoons paprika
1-1/2 tablespoons salt

Cook kidney fat until melting, then add meat and water and cook one hour. Add onions and garlic and cook 30 minutes longer. Then add chili powder, the best obtainable, and cook 30 minutes longer. Next, add tomatoes and cook an hour.

Season with paprika and salt; stir well. Serve by itself or with kidney beans, enchiladas and tamales.

The secret of good chili, says Bridges, is fresh chili powder made from sun-dried chili pods. (Dark red chili pods were dried on a dryer at a heat that cooks, rather than dries them.) He uses New Mexico native sun-dried chili which he gets from Chimayo, a town between Santa Fe and Taos.

It took him three years to write the book, but he's been fascinated with chili and food since he was a tot.

"My grandfather was a great cook," Bridges said. "He had his own well because he didn't like city water and his own barbecue pit with an awning over it to keep out the sun. He even made his own beer."

This was in Palestine, Texas, where Bridges grew up. He went to school in Texas and became a writer/photographer for Life magazine, among other publications.

Bridges' favorite chili place is The Blue Front in Dallas, but "tears came to my father's eyes," he says, "whenever he talked about Lang's chili parlor in Dallas."

Bridges' book gives recipes for every possible chili, including the basic powder, itself:

BASIC CHILI POWDER

1 part pungent chili molido (powdered, dried chili). Look for a bright red New Mexico chili — Italian peperone rosso; a "cayenne" will do.
4 parts mild chili molido, a dark red, brownish red, or almost black ground chili, no yellow seed flecks, labeled California ancho, pasila or mild or sauve
4 parts paprika, sometimes called "sweet" paprika, since some imported paprikas are hot, but most supermarket brands are very mild; use less paprika if a less red chili color is desired.
3 parts ground cumin
1-1/2 parts ground dry oregano
1 to 3 parts garlic powder, to taste

Mix or blend well (an electric blender is useful here) and store, tightly sealed, in a cool, dark, dry place (the refrigerator is best for this and for all chili products, except unopened bottles and cans).

One or two tablespoons of this basic chili powder to a pound of meat will imbue that meat with the classic chili flavor.

Beans or no beans, Bridges is for freedom of choice, which, he says, is what chili is all about and what makes it so American. However, purists insist that chili con carne is redundant, that chili is meat and the beans that get in there are decoration.

DELUXE CAMP CHILI WITH JERKY

6 ounces jerky
3 tablespoons rendered suet, drippings or oil
1 teaspoon whole cumin seed
4 to 6 tablespoons unsalted chili powder
1 teaspoon onion flakes
1 teaspoon oregano
1/2 teaspoon powdered cumin
1/4 teaspoon garlic powder (not garlic salt)
Water
Flour for thickening (optional)
Salt (if necessary) to taste

Cut jerky into small bite-size pieces, keeping in mind that it will swell. In a heavy pot, simmer jerky and cumin seeds gently in moderately hot fat for 1-2 minutes, stirring steadily to prevent burning. Add chili powder and continue to stir until well mixed. (Amount of chili powder will depend on hotness of the jerky and your taste.) Add onion flakes, oregano, powdered cumin, garlic powder and enough water to cover generously. Stir. Simmer for 1-2 hours, adding water as the jerky absorbs it.

Allow chili to cool, and reheat before serving. If a thicker chili is preferred, add a little flour mixed to a paste with hot liquid from the pot and cook to desired consistency, stirring frequently.

Note: Chances are no salt will be needed at all, since there probably will be plenty in the jerky.

WICK FOWLER'S ORIGINAL CHILI

A few whole, dried red chiles japones, about 2 inches long, used to be included with Wick Fowler's packages of chili mix. They were carefully floated on top of the chili pot in the final stages of simmering. As the pot was brought to the table for serving, their presence, riding wicked and red on top of the steaming chili, was highly intimidating to the uninitiated. This was their purpose — as long as the slender chilies remained whole and unbroken, and the fiery hot seeds were not released into the chili, they were harmless. Those in the know ate carefully aound them, unless they liked them. This is Fowler's Scratch recipe, from which his famous 2-Alarm mix evolved.

3 pounds chili grind beef, mostly lean
1-1/2 cups canned tomato sauce
Water
1 teaspoon Tabasco
3 heaping tablespoons chili powder
1 teaspoon oregano
1 teaspoon cumin seed or powder
2 onions, chopped
6 or more cloves garlic, chopped
1 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon cayenne
1 tablespoon paprika
12 or more whole dried Japanese chilies (very hot)
6 to 8 chilipiquins (very, very hot)
3 tablespoons flour for thickener

Sear meat in a large skillet until gray in color. Transfer meat to chili pot, along with the tomato sauce and enough water to cover meat (about 1/2 inch), mixing well. Stir in the Tabasco, chili powder, oregano, cumin, onions, garlic, slt, cayenne, and paprika.

Add Japanese chilies and chillipiquins, taking care not to break them open lest the hot seeds escape into the pot. Leave this for each chili eater to decide after serving.

Let simmer for 1 hour and 45 minutes, stirring gently at intervals.

About 30 minutes before the end of cooking time, skim off the grease that has risen to the top. Mix flour with a little water to make it liquid without lumps. Add this paste to ingredients in the pot and blend in thoroughly. Adjust salt and seasonings. Unless you are chili hungry at the moment, let the chili remain in the pot overnight, then reheat and serve. Freeze any leftover cili.

Serve with sliced or chopped onions and pinto beans on the side.

Note: If you want to put out the fire, drink a pint of buttermilk; this is the drink that professional pepper-tasters use.

RALPH BELLAMY'S CHILI

2 pounds ground sirloin
2 rounded tablespoons chili molido
1 rounded tablespoon paprika
1 rounded tablespoon cumin
2 cloves garlic, sliced
1 large onion, diced
1 sliced bell pepper
1 8-ounce can tomato sauce
2 cups dry red wine
1 can Mexicorn
Salt

Sear meat until grayish. Add chili, molido, paprika, cumin, oregano, garlic, onion and bell pepper. Stir to mix. Add tomato sauce and wine. Cover and simmer 1-1/2 hours. Stir occasionally.

Add Mexicorn, salt to taste and let simmer for 15 minutes before serving.

Note: Serve with raw chopped onion, crackers, beer and a cold, raw apple.

THE BUTCHER

Enjoy English dishes

By MERLE ELLIS

Who but a mad dog or an Englishman would eat something called Toad-in-the-Hole? It's little wonder that English cooking so often is considered a joke. The names of some English dishes are, you must admit, laughable. Toad-in-the-Hole, however, is no joke. It is a delicious English dish that has as its basis bangers. Now don't laugh, bangers are no joke, either — they're English sausages. Toad-in-the Hole is bangers baked in Yorkshire pudding. Served with a salad of endive and watercress, and a pint of good ale, it makes a marvelous meal.

Good bangers are a bit hard to find here in the Colonies, but if you're into (or up to) making sausage yourself you can make great bangers in your own kitchen. And, if you want to taste Toad-in-the-Hole, you may have to!

Here is a recipe for British bangers, with a couple of English variations, along with one for Toad-in-the-Hole.

BRITISH BANGERS

2 pounds fresh pork butt
2 teaspoons salt
2 cups fresh bread crumbs
1 teaspoon ground white pepper
1/4 teaspoon ground mace
1/4 teaspoon ground coriander
1/4 teaspoon ground nutmeg
2 egg yolks, beaten
Hog casing

Cut fresh pork into approximately 1-inch cubes and pass through the coarse (3/8-inch) plate of the food chopper. Add all remaining ingredients and grind a second time through the fine plate. Stuff into narrow or medium hog casings and twist into 4-inch links. The stuffing can be done with a hand stuffing tube after the final grind or with a stuffing tube attachment on the front of the grinder during the final grind. Or, the sausage meat can be left unstuffed to be formed into patties or used for Scotch Eggs.

CAMBRIDGE STYLE SAUSAGE

Instead of 2 cups of fresh bread crumbs, use 2 cups of boiled rice and add 1/4 teaspoon ground cayenne and 1/4 teaspoon ground ginger to the spice mixture.

OXFORD-STYLE SAUSAGE

Substitute 1 pound of veal for 1 pound of the pork. Omit the mace and coriander and use 1/4 teaspoon each of thyme and marjoram instead. Add 1 teaspoon sage.

TOAD-IN-THE-HOLE

8 bangers, Oxford or Cambridge-style sausages

(approximately 1 pound)
Yorkshire Pudding batter:
1 cup sifted flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 cup milk
2 eggs, beaten
Preheat the oven to 450 degrees.

Fry the sausage in a heavy skillet, turning frequently to brown well on all sides.

Make a Yorkshire Pudding batter: Sift the flour and salt into a large mixing bowl. Make a well in the center, add the milk gradually and stir until smooth. Beat the eggs in a separate bowl until fluffy and stir into the batter, beating well. Refrigerate until the sausage is cooked.

Pour off all but approximately 1/2 cup of the pan drippings. Place the skillet in a very hot oven for 3 or 4 minutes to make sure the fat is good and hot before you add the batter. Pour over the batter and bake at 450 degrees until the batter begins to rise (8 to 10 minutes), then lower the heat to 375 degrees and bake until well risen and nicely browned.

DEAR ABBY

From the mouths of babes...

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: This isn't a problem, but as it concerns you, I thought it was worth sharing.

I love children and have served as a summer camp director for many years. A few years ago, the children asked me to tell them a Christmas story, so I told them about the story of Abigail, the innkeeper's daughter in Bethlehem. Briefly, my story goes like this:

An innkeeper had a daughter named Abigail who was the brat of the village. Nobody could stand her, and she was generally known as the Bethlehem brat. However, on the night that Jesus was born, when she heard the goings-on in the stable, she went down to have a look, and there she found Mary and Joseph and the baby. Mary let Abigail hold the baby Jesus, with the result that she became a very changed little girl, and she never again was known as "that brat, Abigail," or the brat of Bethlehem.

At this point in the story, a 10-year-old boy raised his hand and said, "I'll bet I know what they called her!" I said, "Do you, Luv?" And he replied, "Yes, 'Dear Abby'!"

I'd never have thought of that in a million years, would you? — KATHLEEN PEATIE CUMMING, VICTORIA, B.C.

DEAR KATHLEEN: Probably not. But the folks back in Sioux City, Iowa, might have guessed: "One of the Friedman twins."

DEAR ABBY: I had guests for dinner three times during the holidays. I set a beautiful table and take a great deal of pride in my cooking.

I made everything from scratch, including the turkey dressing, hot breads and desserts. All my efforts seemed so worthless because my guests tore into the food and ate so fast you would have thought they were on a 15-minute lunch break at a hamburger stand!

What is a hostess to do? Should I have tapped my water glass with a fork to get everyone's attention and said, "Whoa ... please slow down"? — DISCOURAGED

DEAR DISCOURAGED: Although it's discouraging to see hours of careful preparation gobbled up in a matter of minutes, hold your tongue. Your guests are paying you a compliment.

To suggest that they slow down would embarrass them and make everyone feel self-conscious.

DEAR ABBY: Thank you for saying that a doctor doesn't always "know" how long a patient has to live; he can only predict.

My grandfather was told that he had six months to live in 1919, 1924, 1927, 1944, 1958 and then again in 1968.

Grandpa went to be with the Lord in 1982, outliving every doctor who told him when he was going to die. — J.P. IN BAY SHORE, N.Y.

Flavorful soup features unusual ingredient combination

By CECILY BROWNSTONE
AP Food Editor

My friend Jonathan Dudley, who entertains constantly, is an inveterate tester of recipes in new cookbooks.

He told me recently that one of the new recipes he has served many times in the past couple of years, at the request of friends, is called Broccoli and Apple Soup.

"Only I never call it that," Jonathan said, "because broccoli and apple sound like an odd combination. If I had mentioned it, some of my friends might have been prejudiced against the soup before they downed even a spoonful."

The soup recipe comes from "Cooking the Nouvelle Cuisine in America" by Michele Urvater and David Liederman. The book was first published in hard cover in 1979 by Workman, who has now issued it in paperback.

A few weeks ago Jonathan and I made the soup in my kitchen. At my house, too, it was a success. Here is our slightly adapted version of the Urvater-Liederman recipe.

BROCCOLI AND APPLE SOUP

1 bunch (1½ pounds) broccoli
3 tablespoons butter
1 small onion, thinly sliced
1 medium apple, pared and cored and diced (¾ inch)
4 cups clear fat-free chicken broth
Salt and fresh ground pepper to taste
Sour cream or creme fraiche, if desired
Minced fresh chives or parsley, if desired

Trim ends from broccoli. Wash in cold water. Cut off flowerets and break or cut into small clusters. With a swivel-blade peeler, pare the outer fibrous covering from the stalks; slice stalks fairly thin.

In a 4-quart covered saucepan over low heat in the hot butter cook onion and apple, stirring a few times, until softened — about 10 minutes. Add broccoli flowerets, sliced stalks and broth. Bring to a boil; simmer, covered, for about 30 minutes.

In an electric blender whirl the soup in several batches, until smooth; for a coarser texture puree, in as many batches as necessary, in a food processor. Return to saucepan and stir in salt and pepper; reheat.

If desired, garnish each serving with a spoonful of sour cream sprinkled with chives.

Save by sewing

Clothing costs are increasing along with everything else, but sewing your own clothes can be one way to save money. Consumer Price Index figures show clothing to be increasing by 5 percent while most other items have been increasing by 10 percent. This makes clothing a good buy, but even a 5 percent increase can hinder your budget. A dress, for example, can be made for about 30 percent of what it costs to buy one of comparable style and quality.

It has been forecast that nationwide interest in home sewing will increase. Companies that sell fabrics or notions have observed significant sales increases. Many pattern companies have come out with patterns that are fast and easy to sew. Look for patterns that have few pattern pieces, clear instructions and useful tips like special fitting ideas or secial sewing techniques.

You may want to start out with something simple like a T-shirt before you try a blouse. It is a good idea to sew shorts before attempting culottes or tailored slacks. Other items that are fast and easy to make are lingerie, unpleated shirts and dresses.

You may want to consider buying items that are more difficult to make. Involved patterns with secial features may be too time-consuming. Whether you make all your clothes or sew only to supplement your wardrobe, home sewing can save money on clothing costs.

Protesters gathered outside Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's office Tuesday, above, after publication of the Beirut massacre inquiry commission's report. Meanwhile, a smiling Ariel Sharon, right, waves as he leaves Begin's office later Tuesday.

Arab press calls for Israeli trials

By The Associated Press

Arab newspapers today likened Israeli Defense Minister Ariel Sharon to Nazi war criminals and said there should be trials of Israeli leaders criticized in a judicial commission's report on the Beirut refugee camp massacre.

A Damascus newspaper warned that Israel might attack Syria to divert attention from the report on the Sept. 16-18 massacre of hundreds of Palestinians. And in Kuwait, newspapers called for a Nuremburg-type trial of every leader faulted by the Israeli commission.

"Anyone from (Israeli Prime Minister) Menachem Begin downward who had anything to do with Israel's invasion of Lebanon and its sequel is guilty of the foul deeds of Adolf Eichmann, Rudolf Hess and Klaus Barbie," said the English-language Kuwait Times, referring to prominent Nazi officials.

The commission's report, released Tuesday, said Sharon — a close ally of Begin — was personally responsible for the massacre and should resign. It said Begin had some responsibility but did not recommend his resignation.

Jordan's daily newspapers described the report released Tuesday as "cosmetic" and "play acting."

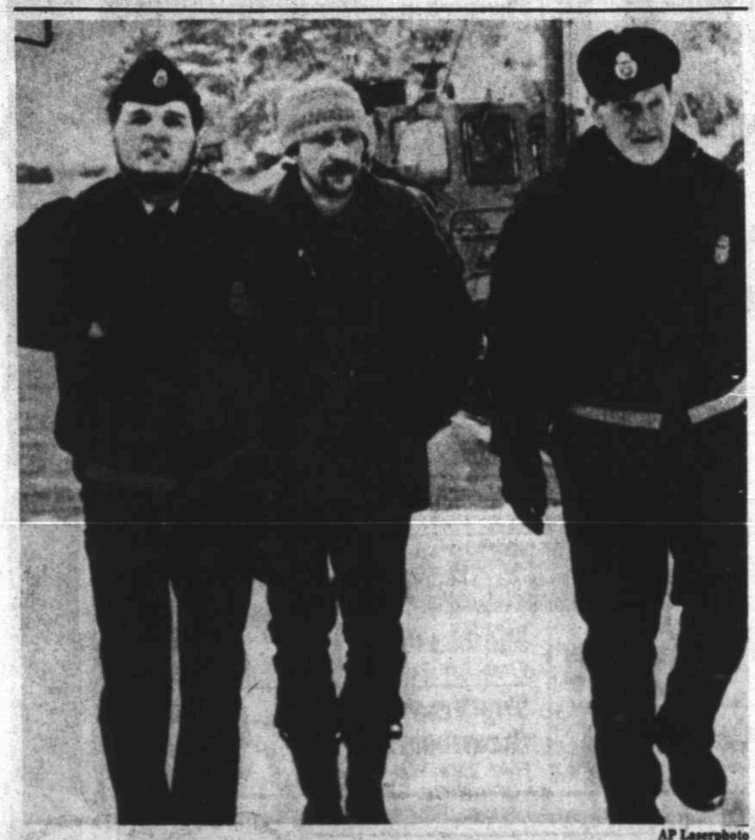

Beirut's leftist as-Safir demanded a trial for Sharon, but said a Lebanese inquiry commission should follow up on the Israeli finding that Phalangist militia were responsible for the execution of the massacre in West Beirut's Sabra and Chatilla camps.

The right-wing Beirut newspaper Al-Amal of Lebanon's Phalange Party paid tribute to Israel's "amazing" democratic system. However, the paper made no mention of the Israeli commission's finding that Phalangist intelligence chief Elie Hobeicha was the architect of the massacre.

Other Lebanese rightist Christians shrugged off the commission's conclusions. But American Jews praised the findings as proof of Israel's willingness to criticize itself.

Nathan Perlmutter, national director of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith, said the commission's report was "a remarkable testimonial to a vibrant democracy...Letting the chips fall where they may is a bold confirmation of this democracy's vitality."

Swedish police escort one of two Polish men who landed a helicopter on a southern Swedish island Tuesday and requested political asylum.

Poles request Swedish asylum

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two Poles who say they are military officers flew an army helicopter to a Swedish island and asked for political asylum, police reported.

Swedish newspapers said the Polish helicopter had flown unchallenged through Swedish airspace Sunday before landing on Tarno island in a restricted military zone along the southern coast.

Officials said the Poles contacted a fisherman on the island, and he called police. A pilot boat was sent for the two men and they were taken to the Karlshamn police station for interrogation.

Police said the Poles, both in their late 20s and wearing civilian clothes, told Swedish officials they flew the helicopter from the port city of Gdansk on Poland's Baltic coast.

Koreans protest U.S. military move

TOKYO (AP) — More than 100,000 North Koreans jammed into the main square in Pyongyang to protest military maneuvers being conducted by South Korean and U.S. troops, the official North Korean news agency said today.

The report, monitored in Tokyo, said North Korean youths staged an "indignation meeting" Tuesday, marching through the streets of the capital and shouting denunciations of the United States.

North Korea announced last week it was placing its army on a "semi-war" alert while the United States and South Korea carried out joint exercises called "Team Spirit 1983." The eighth annual exercises began Feb. 1 and involve about 188,000 soldiers, including 70,000 Americans.

Zaire, Israel discuss defense pact

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Zaire's minister of defense, Lumpunda Wa Botanda, has begun a five-day visit to Israel aimed at working out details of a new defense cooperation agreement.

The minister was met at the airport Tuesday by Maj. Gen. Avraham Tamir, senior security adviser to Defense Minister Ariel Sharon.

Liar wins silver tongue

TERLINGUA (AP) — The crowd may not have believed Vann Lister's tale about a case of Mexican moonshine that gave him a real lift — right up to the sky — but they liked it well enough to give him the Silver Tongue award.

The tale was tall enough to edge out Richard Sharp's story of cucumbers that migrate to New Mexico.

Four contestants faced five judges and an audience of about 100, swigging beer as they perched on the tailgates of station wagons and pickup trucks backed up to the the Chisos Mining Co. store in this West Texas ghost town.

Standing on the store's porch, Lister, a 37-year-old carpenter, spoke for 10 minutes last weekend about how he bought a dozen bottles of "sokol" — fermented cactus juice — from a Mexican moonshiner to savor during the Christmas holidays.

"I had 12 — that was too heavy," Lister explained. "So I drank one..., which lightened my load."

It also lightened his memory, he said: He forgot where he had stashed the other 11.

Then, a traveling band of schoolteachers happened and asked if they could come in from the cold. Lister lit his fireplace — "and with a flash I remembered where I had hidden the sokol."

To the cheers of the crowd, Lister detailed how his house flew off into the sky, powered by the flaming bottles of cactus juice. "Upon the blast," he said, "they (the teachers) looked reverentially toward the sky. They thought it was the Second Coming."

For his efforts, Lister was given Terlingua's Silver Tongue Award — a plaque depicting a man with an enormous tongue — was named first president of the Silver Tongue Club and was promised a free car wash.

Sharp, who came in second, nearly got that car wash with a story of desert cucumbers that spawn during their march from Texas' Marathon Basin to "the great cucumber crossing in New Mexico."

But Sharp conceded halfway through his tale that "most of this is a lie," and the discriminating audience tossed crumpled beer cups in jest. Others bellowed, "Liar!"

Ken Kyte of North Carolina took third place with a tale of a $15,000 white-faced steer that was purchased for "herd improvement" purposes; he conceded his story was "a lot of bull."

The Liar's Contest, focus of a weekend of activities in this town of 100 near the Big Bend National Park, was the idea of professional river-runner Steve Harris.

Man weds pet dog

MERRITT ISLAND, Fla. (AP) — After 13 years with his brown-eyed gal, Clifford Edwards decided it was time to acknowledge that his companion was more than just his best friend.

The 32-year-old handyman invited 100 guests to his small house to witness the simple ceremony where Edwards was joined in muttrimony to Spunky, a tan-and-white dog.

Wedding vows — slightly altered — were exchanged in the crowded living room. The stubby-legged dog entered from the bedroom, to the strains of a wedding march played on an electric keyboard.

"Do you take this lady to be your lawless wedded wife...to love, honor, comfort, and throw in an occasional can of Alpo?" asked Paul Fink, who presided in a leather-banded straw hat, thongs and a black robe thrown over denim jeans and a jacket.

"With this kerchief I thee wed," Edwards concluded.

Edwards tied a bandana around Spunky's neck, and the two were given a round of applause and a shower of rice.

Treaty protects vultures

LAKE HARBOR, Fla. (AP) — The world takes note each March 19 when the swallows return to Capistrano, but no one seems to give a hang when the vultures come back to Lake Okeechobee.

The annual migration generally slips by unnoticed, except to some bird watchers like Dr. Joseph Orsenigo, a professor emeritus of the University of Florida and head of the research division of the Florida Sugar Cane League in nearby Clewiston.

With naked heads and hooked bills, vultures are described as ugly even in encyclopedias, but to Orsenigo these birds of prey are a necessity of life.

"They may not be very elegant and they don't look all that great," said Orsenigo, "but they clean up all the decay. They keep the roads sanitary."

Vultures, or buzzards, eat only dead flesh. If that isn't enough to spoil their image, ornithologists say vultures also tend to vomit when disturbed.

Although vultures are ugly and unmannerly, both the federal and state governments can jail people for harming them.

"They are protected by the Migratory Bird Treaty Act," said Richard Endress, senior resident agent of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service in Miami. "That means they can't be taken or disturbed without federal permit."

Taking or harming a vulture carries a maximum penalty of six months in jail and a $500 fine. Trying to sell one is even worse — two years in prison and a $2,000 fine.

Vultures start migrating to Florida from as far north as Canada around Oct. 20, Orsenigo said, and their visits usually last until March 1.

"They come for only two reasons — climate and food supply," he added.

Hordes of vultures winter here at the south end of Lake Okeechobee because of the thousands of acres planted with sugarcane. It's not the plants that attract them, but what's left when sugarcane is harvested.

The fields are torched to clear away brush so the cane can be cut just above the ground. The flames do not damage the cane, but do provide assorted vulture tidbits and delights — dead field mice, rats, snakes and anything else that was crawling around.

There are two kinds of vultures in the United States — the turkey vulture and the black vulture. Both are black, have small heads and resemble eagles in flight.The turkey vulture is distinguished by its red head.

Wing span of the full-grown turkey vulture is about 6 feet while the black is usually under 5 feet. Neither variety builds nests, and females lay one to three eggs on bare surfaces.

Townspeople don't want sidewalks

RUBY, S.C. (AP) — The state Highway Department says it's ready to shell out $33,439 for a new sidewalk along Deacon Street, but some residents of this rural community say they'd rather have the trees.

"We just don't need it," according to William Rushing, who says 13 of 16 people who own land along the street have signed a petition against the sidewalk.

"The money needs to be used on filling potholes or paving," Rushing insisted in a recent interview. "Besides, we don't have enough lawn space now, and before long, they'll be cutting down our trees."

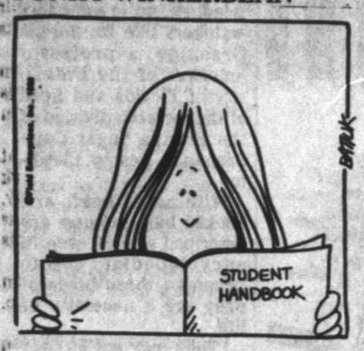

Mayor Calvin Gulledge said the town council in this community of 256 people approved the project three years ago because Deacon Street residents said a sidewalk was needed for children's safety.

"I guess it took so long to get it that their kids are out driving instead of playing on the sidewalks," Gulledge quipped.

Town is one big truck stop

ROAD FORKS, N.M. (AP) — Rising out of the desert sands between Tucson and El Paso is Road Forks, a town that has an around-the-clock forest of 18-wheel vehicles and the Truck Driver's Hall of Fame.

For the 100 or so folks who live just off Interstate 10 near the Arizona-New Mexico border, Road Forks is not just another roadside attraction. Their town exists solely because of the truckers.

Road Forks is paradise among many of the nation's 300,000 professional truckers because the town caters exclusively to the drivers and has honored them with the one-room Hall of Fame.

At The Forks, named because I-10 and U.S. Highway 80 intersect there, truck drivers are treated royally. They have showers, a barber shop, two saloons, a restaurant, game room, gift shop and chapel where they can be blessed Sundays while on the road.

TUCSON'S SHERRY Spears spoke glowingly of the profession: "At age 15, I ran away from home and fell in love — I fell in love with 21 wheels. Eighteen on the ground, one in the rack, one between my hands and one hooking it all together."

Ms. Spears' ode to her truck is framed amid three walls of memorabilia in the Driver's Hall of Fame, which shares space with the Shady Grove Chapel inside Road Forks' crowded post office.

The Driver's Hall of Fame, run by the American Trucker's Historical Society, also has pictures of vehicles only a trucker could love.

The 1939 Panlus Select Milk truck, called "Baby Mack," proudly makes the Hall of Fame; the vehicle is white and shaped like a milk bottle.

Also in the hall is a keg-shaped wooden vinegar truck and the post office's first parcel post truck, a three-wheeler manufactured in 1899.

THE U.S. POSTAL Service promised each three-wheeler would come "equipped so that a mule may be hitched to it should it refuse to turn." In those days, vehicles physically were cranked in the front to start up.

"What we have here is a little bit of history that means an awful lot to us," independent trucker Byron Stearns said. Stearns has visited 48 states as a trucker, hauling goods in his 18-wheeler ranging from steer to canned Mexican food.

Stearns lovingly pointed to his truck, equipped with a cabin sleeper, AM-FM stereo, a small refrigerator and photos of his wife and family. A bumper sticker read, "Have You Hugged Your Truck Today?"

Truckers say Road Forks is known nationwide: on cross-country treks to rush California fruits to the Eastern seaboard, drivers crackle on their ever-present citizen band radios about meeting at The Forks.

"They've got everything here just for the trucker," said Stearns, grizzled after two days on the road. "I can do my laundry here and grab a bite to eat while my rig is being greased."

WHILE THEY ARE refueling themselves and their vehicles, they can shop for gifts: clerks say "T-shirts for Truckers" is a best-seller.

Road Forks sees many of the estimated 17 million trucks that cross America's highways because I-10 is one of the most widely used cross-country routes in the nation.

On this day, dozens of trucks line up along two giant parking lots on both sides of the Shady Grove Truck Stop Mall where truckers congregate 24 hours a day. The trucks' shadows block the sun around the mall as drivers pause before continuing their highway runs east and west.

Six Chris-Craft racing boats are piled piggyback on the rear of one rig traveling from Florida to San Diego. Another carries Old El Paso canned goods.

One woman, traveling with her poodle, is driving an open-aired trailer full of cattle.

Truckers say spots such as Road Forks that cater to them are godsends.

"IT'S ALL HERE, specially for the trucker," Chicago trucker Marvin Bauer said.

Road Forks, essentially a huge truck stop and service pit with gasoline pumps and a mobile home park where the town workers live, remains a sight for sore eyes, Ms. Spears said.

Her love is steadfast for an 18-wheeler "that deafens you, beats you to death on rough roads, hypnotizes you on straight smooth roads...and breaks down in the middle of nowhere."

For a while we will be studying the technique of some of the world's great players. The hands will be from the recent World Olympiad, held in Biarritz, France.

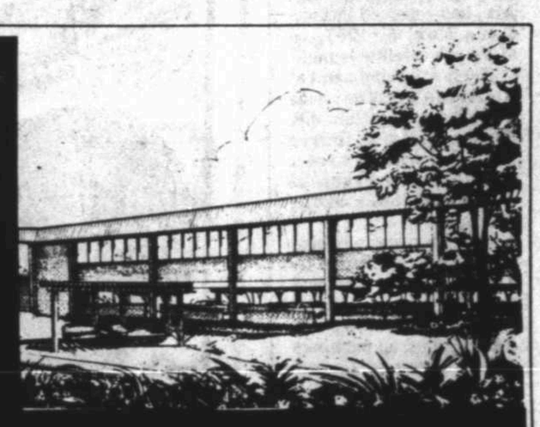

Our first hero is Tony Priday who, with his partner Claude Rodrigue, has been the mainstay of Britain's teams for the past 20 years. North's double was for penalties, but Priday was not prepared to settle for a non-vulnerable set. Instead, he overbid to game and then proceeded to make it. West's double was predicated on the fact that the suits were going to break badly for declarer.

West led the ace of hearts and shifted to his singleton club. Declarer won in hand and led a low spade. West played low and dummy's king won. Four club winners followed, and West found himself under pressure. He sluffed three diamonds and the jack of hearts, but the writing was on the wall.

West was thrown on lead with the ace of spades. He cleverly exited with a low diamond, in the hope that declarer would carelessly win with dummy's nine and so get his entries tangled. But Priday won the king, cashed the ace and tucked West back on lead with a diamond. The best that West could do was to cash the king of hearts and then present declarer with the queen of hearts and his ninth trick.

Rubber bridge clubs throughout the country use the four-deal bridge format. Do they know something you don't? Military launched satellite

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Canvas shrouds concealed the slender, 70-foot rocket on the launch pad on that night 25 years ago as engineers, technicians and managers crowded into a small, reinforced concrete blockhouse 500 yards away.

As test conductor Bob Moser began tolling the countdown, the canvas covers were parted to reveal the hybrid military missile given the task of putting this country's first satellite into space.

Gleaming white in the searchlight stood Jupiter C, its payload a 30-pound sphere expected to become at least a partial answer to the Soviet Union's orbiting Sputniks.

Within the past 90 days, the Soviet Union had surprised the world by launching the first man-made objects to orbit the Earth.

CONGRESS and the press demanded action, unaware that the nation did not have a rocket that could orbit 1,100 pounds — the weight of Sputnik II and its passenger, a dog named Laika.

The Army Ballistic Missile Agency in Huntsville, Ala., had received instructions Nov. 8, 1957, to attempt a satellite launch.

The missile command at Redstone Arsenal was headed by Maj. Gen. J.B. Medaris and had former German rocketry expert Wernher von Braun as technical operations chief.

The group was schooled in its exotic profession by Kurt H. Debus, who was lab director, Hans Gruene, Karl Sendler and Albert Zeiler, all members of von Braun's Peenemunde center, which developed the World War II German V-2 rockets.

AS THE count proceeded, Medaris chatted with Debus and Jack Froelich of Cal Tech's Jet Propulsion Laboratory, which had packaged the satellite mounted atop Jupiter C.

Moser, wearing a headset, worked from a long checklist he had prepared as the count approached ignition of the 31-ton rocket.

At about 9 p.m., 250 reporters assembled on a mound 7,500 feet from the launch site. It was the first time a military launch had been open to the press.

At T-minus-6 seconds, Moser called out: "I have a jet vane deflection. Shall I hold?" Debus and Medaris shook their heads and motioned to continue.

"Firing Command!"

Jim Sweat pushed the firing button. Flame flickered under the rocket. Then its engine burst into a thunderous roar.

"MAIN stage," Moser exclaimed as the missile rose at 10:58 p.m.

Signals from the rocket confirmed first-stage burnout and the separation of upper stages and the precious satellite.

Ernst Stuhlinger and Walter Haeussermann of von Braun's inner circle worked feverishly to determine the missile's velocity and position. Stuhlinger would trigger a radio signal at the exact apex of the flight: too soon and Jupiter C would soar off into space, too late and it would tip over and plunge back down to Earth.

The signal was flashed at 403.75 seconds, igniting the second stage successfully. The third and fourth stages fired automatically.

WHILE early indications looked favorable, the United States at that time lacked a worldwide tracking network, and there was no way to confirm the data right away. The firing team and Army brass had to wait until the satellite could travel around the Earth and come within hearing range of a ground station at Goldstone, Calif.

In a Pentagon conference room, von Braun, William Pickering of the Jet Propulsion Lab, Army Secretary Wilbur Brucker and Army Chief of Staff Maxwell Taylor waited for confirmation.

It came when Pickering called the West Coast station. "Goldstone has the bird," Pickering yelled.

Lepers pessimistic about life

SIAN ISLAND, China (AP) — Chen Huajing, his clothes in patches, his crutches nearby, sits on a grimy cot and stares out the window here on the Banana Palm Island of outcasts where he has lived for 13 years.

"I think I will live here forever," says the 47-year-old leper matter-of-factly. "I am worthless and my family doesn't want me. They are too poor to send money and they never visit me."

In a gray, impoverished room, a few ragged lepers keep him company, listening to shrill Cantonese opera and giggling sadly at questions about the compassion of the outside world. The answers, they say, are obvious.

"Some people understand us," says Chen, a man with a sunken face and ruined legs. "But in remote villages, many people shun us and are afraid. Some throw stones and sticks to drive lepers, even cured ones, away."

THE LEPER chorus nods. Because of years of physical decay and years of treatment ahead they wear the air of inmates and say things like, "I am useless," "I live day by day," "I wait for my next meal."

Chen, who is almost cured, receives $6 a month to buy food and raises a few chickens for eggs. He lives in a room with three other lepers, off an unlighted corridor.

"I am one of the poorest lepers because I cannot work," he said in an interview.

Chen is one of 310 patients at the Sian Island Leper Hospital. More than 100 others have been cured but have decided to stay at the hospital in Guangdong province's only leper colony.

Some stay because they are too disabled to earn a living outside, some because they can earn at least $30 a month growing cash crops like bananas, tangerines and sugar cane. Many also remain because they are rejected by their families and villages.

IN CHINA'S vast countryside many peasants do not realize that leprosy, or Hansen's disease, is curable and not easily communicable.

Most of the lepers here are old or middle-aged. A few are teen-agers, the youngest a 15-year-old boy, and they seem out of place on the geriatric island.

The hospital is a huddle of concrete buildings on an island in the Pearl River, 60 miles from Canton. It opened in 1965, taking new patients and older, more pathetic cases from the former French, British and German leprosy hospitals in surrounding Duguan County.

Many received inadequate treatment with a single drug before doctors realized that a combination of drugs worked best. Patients also are treated with acupuncture and traditional Chinese medicine to relieve pain and other problems.

For more than 2,000 years, China was plagued by leprosy, but it has an impressive record of cure and steady eradication since 1949.

THE DRUG treatment is like that of other countries, says Dr. Liu Nuchu, the hospital director who has devoted 30 years to treating lepers. But China is advanced in training rural health workers, "barefoot doctors," to spot symptoms at an early stage. Most new cases are light.

In the 1950s, China had 500,000 known lepers. Today it has 150,000, most in the southern coastal region. Guangdong province had 70,000 lepers in the late 1950s but now has 6,000. This is the only one of four leprosy hospitals that remains.

In comparison, India has 3.2 million lepers and the United States has 5,000.

For patients here who are active or interested, there is television, ping-pong and an occasional film. They pay a few cents for food in a dark, cavernous dining room and rush to eat in their rooms, or they cook over their own stoves.

Businessman restores old businesses as labor of love

DECATUR, Ill. (AP) — When old businesses die, their furnishings can go to heaven in John Ballog's private museum.

Ballog has made it his business to save the interiors of failed enterprises like Michl's Cigar Store and the Williamsville Barbershop from the trash heap.

Then he restores the look and feel of the old companies in displays on the second story of his office building.

His exhibits are complete with brass cash registers, oak display cases and dusty 60-year-old prescriptions.

"I just enjoy the original beauty of old things," said Ballog, who began his collection in 1980.

Ballog, who sells office furniture and business machines for a living, says restoration of five businesses is nearly complete. But he has no timetable.

"It is a labor of love, and I haven't set any deadlines because that would make it work," said Ballog, who has invested more than $15,000 and 3,000 hours in the project.

The hallway where Ballog rebuilds the businesses resembles a turn-of-the-century sidewalk, lined with now-defunct businesses like the cigar store and barbershop.

Also on his restoration list: the Hotel Orlando, Roth Johnson Drugs and the Williamsville Barbershop.

When the stores are finished, Ballog says he may rent them to people who sell antiques and collectibles, or he may turn the second floor into a museum of early 20th century commerce open to the public.

He frequently gives impromptu tours.

"I like to see somebody else get to enjoy this too," said Ballog.

On Ballog's second floor, a visitor can find the original store acquired for the collection, Michl's, founded in 1868. It served as a recruiting center for Union soldiers during the Civil War.

"In all those years, it never was remodeled, altered or changed in any way," said Ballog. "It is just the way it was when it opened, and that's why it holds so much charm for me."

Except for its location, Michl's still hasn't changed. Ballog photographed, then disassembled everything at the store's original downtown Decatur location. Using the pictures as his blueprint, he reassembled Michl's in a room just six inches larger than the original.

It's all there: the wooden display cases with curved glass; ceiling fans and light fixtures; the rolls and presses used to make cigars; pipe tobacco with names like Wild Cherry No. 525, and even a couple of packs of Marvels cigarettes.

The Bullpit Saloon includes a 24-foot long mahogany bar and matching backbar. Ballog found it frozen in the dirt floor of a leaking shed and pried it loose with a crowbar. Since the bar is one piece and would not fit in the elevator or stairwell, it had to be hoisted through a second-story window with a block and tackle.

Included with the purchase of Roth Johnson Drugs were pill-making devices, old chemicals and medicines, and drawers containing more than 360 prescriptions dating to the 1920s.

In an adjoining room, is a three-chair barbershop that opened in the lobby of a Chicago hotel, was moved to Springfield, and later to Williamsville, where it closed. The mirrors in etched glass frames reflect tall bottles of oily hair tonic and sweet-smelling aftershave lotion.

Often, Ballog has to act quickly to buy a defunct business while it still is intact. His offer for Michl's was accepted just before the building was to be torn down.

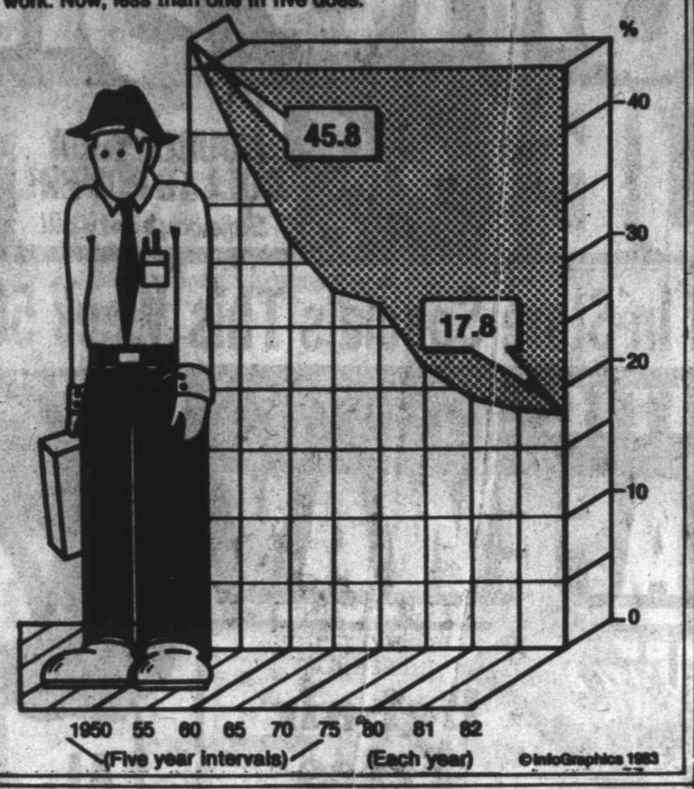

"We had to fight the wrecking ball to get everything out," he said. "The crew was knocking down the upper floors while we worked downstairs."

Ballog enjoys restoring the big pieces of a business, but his real love are all the tiny details, like the canceled checks and bills that came with Michl's.

"Some of the things that are of the most interest to me," Ballog admits, "are junk to other people."

Percentage of male workers over 65 drops dramatically

The percentage of men over 65 who continue working has dropped steadily and dramatically since 1950. Almost half of them used to work. Now, less than one in five does.

Book called offensive

Hearst Feature Service

Why take an expensive Spanish course that will teach you such trite phrases as, "In which direction is the restaurant?", when for only $11.95 you can learn to spout off demands like, "Clean up this camp, you live like a pig!"

"Spanish for the California Farmers," a 72-page mail-order book is written, according to its preface, "with the farmer-worker relationship in mind." Included in the book are phrases such as, "Go to hell," and "Don't throw beer bottles in the field."

"That phrase about the pig, well, there's one word in there that's a profanity, but it was only inserted to show a little bit more anger or stress, like if you get tired of repeating yourself," explained author Tom Hagopian, himself a Fresno, Calif., farmer.

Hagopian wrote the book, which he says has sold more than 6,000 copies in 35 states, two years ago with the help of interpreter Pilar Granada.

"I feel like the Richard Nixon of the '80s," said Hagopian, referring to the criticism his book has drawn from the Mexican-American Legal Defense and Educational Fund, a Hispanic rights organization.

Hagopian insists the phrases included in the book are not insulting to Hispanic farm workers. "We're not advocating cussing, hollering or screaming. I have good rapport with my workers.

"Everybody calls these phrases racist, but not one person (who purchased the book) said they were offended or asked us to delete anything in it."

Hagopian claims he has workers who have bought the guide and "they just laughed" about the phrases. "They didn't see the book as derogatory or demeaning.

"My next door neighbor is Mexican, and he hasn't said anything about the book. After all, I never said Mexicans lived like pigs," Hagopian said.

Annette Oliveira, spokeswoman for MALDEF in San Francisco, had quite an opposite view. "How can he say he didn't mean' to cuss at anyone if he uses those curse words?" she said. "There are some phrases in that book that are really offensive, insulting and encourage people to be abusive of farm workers."

Oliveira said while Hagopian claimed the book was not being offensive, "there is another point of view — that of the worker."

Liberal PAC tries to build better ad

WASHINGTON (AP) — Calling Sen. Jesse Helms "the symbolic godfather of the New Right," the head of a liberal political action committee says his group will spend $100,000 in negative advertising against the Republican senator.

Victor Kamber, head of the Progressive Political Action Committee, said the aim is to "plant the seeds of doubt" about Helms in newspaper ads throughout the senator's home state of North Carolina.

Helms, in his second term, is up for re-election in 1984. He is expected to be opposed by two-term Democratic Gov. Jim Hunt.

PROPAC will formally announce on Thursday that it will spend up to $100,000 running the ads over the next six to eight months. Kamber says $20,000 is already on hand to start the campaign, with the remainder to come from the fund-raising appeals included in the ads.

Helms was out of Washington, according to Barbara Lukens and Clint Fuller of his staff, and could not be reached for comment. Both refused to comment.

Calls to Helms' Raleigh, N.C., office, to the Washington and Raleigh offices of the National Congressional Club, Helms' main political organization, and to the Helms for Senate Committee office in Cary, N.C., failed to turn up either the senator or anyone connected with him who would comment. Tom Ellis, executive director of the Congressional Club, was on vacation, his office said.

A spokesman for Hunt, however, denounced the ads and said he did not think they would help.

"We would prefer that they not do this," said Hunt spokesman Brent Hackney. "I don't think it is helpful...If they think this will hurt Sen. Helms, I don't think it will do that either."

The ads will be independent expenditures, unconnected with any candidate who might oppose Helms. Negative ads by groups such as the National Conservative Political Action Committee have been a key weapon in the New Right arsenal for attacking liberal senators in 1978, 1980 and 1982, with varying success.

Kamber founded PROPAC in 1982. A political consultant with strong ties to organized labor, he also is working for Democratic presidential hopeful Alan Cranston.

Kamber said he actually opposes the kind of independent, negative expenditures he is engineering. But he said he formed PROPAC as a counterweight to New Right groups with the hope that all such independent expenditures may someday be outlawed.

Hundreds attend Carpenter funeral

Singer 'graced world with life, song'

DOWNEY, Calif. (AP) — Karen Carpenter, singing half of the popular 1970s brother and sister team, was buried following a funeral that drew hundreds of fans as well as family, friends and fellow musicians.

"The world is weeping because Karen's story graced this world with life and with song," the Rev. Charles A. Neal said Tuesday in his eulogy at the packed United Methodist Church in Downey, the Los Angeles suburb where Miss Carpenter and her brother Richard rose to fame in the early 1970s.

The singer died of cardiac arrest at age 32 Friday morning.

About 650 invited guests, including entertainers Herb Alpert, Olivia Newton-John, Burt Bacharach, John Davidson, Toni Tenille and Dionne Warwick crowded into the church sanctuary and an adjoining hall for the service.

A private interment ceremony followed at Forest Lawn Memorial Park in nearby Cypress.

Several hundred fans who were not allowed inside the church stood quietly outside, some carrying floral tributes and cameras.

The traditional 45-minute service was marked with reminders of the many Carpenters hits that made Miss Carpenter's clear, full-bodied voice instantly recognizable.

As guests entered, a pianist played such songs as "Close To You," "We've Only Just Begun," and "Superstar."

Neal, a Dallas pastor who became close to members of the Carpenter family during their years in New Haven, Conn., sprinkled his eulogy with lines from the songs and at one point quoted the entire lyric to "We've Only Just Begun."

He described Miss Carpenter as "one of God's truly talented and gifted persons" who "captured not only our hearts but the world's hearts with friendship and love and joy."

Noting that the Carpenters sold 60 million records and earned three Grammys, eight gold albums, five platinum albums and 10 gold singles, Neal said "There is no place on earth that Karen is not singing, singing, singing."

The service also featured music from the chorus of California State University at Long Beach, where Miss Carpenter had been a student.

On the sanctuary, behind the gleaming ivory-colored casket, a floral arrangement of Mickey Mouse — sent by Miss Carpenter's parents because she had always been fond of the cartoon character — struck a colorful note in the otherwise simple church decor.

'Winds of War' attracts record audience first night

LOS ANGELES (AP) — "The Winds of War," ABC's 18-hour epic on the events leading to World War II, attracted a record audience estimated at 85 million for the first episode Sunday night.

ABC said the opening chapter of the seven-part program drew the largest audience ever for the opening of a miniseries. The rating was slightly lower than "Roots," still television's No. 1 miniseries, but the total audience has grown since 1977.

"The Winds of War" was the No. 1 show of the week ended Feb. 6 and boosted ABC to a big victory in the network ratings.

Figures from the A.C. Nielsen Co. showed the three-hour telecast had 39.1 rating and a share of 53. This means that 39 percent of the nation's homes with television watched some part of the show and 53 percent of the homes watching television at the time were tuned to ABC.

The number of viewers was higher than "Roots" because the television audience is larger. "Roots" had a first-night rating of 40.5 and a share of 61. A ratings point represented 712,000 homes in 1977, but today it represents 833,000 homes.

ABC estimated that 32.5 million homes and 85 million people saw some part of the $40 million miniseries. The number of viewers was higher than "Roots" because the television audience is larger. "Roots" had a first-night rating of 40.5 and a share of 61. A ratings point represented 712,000 homes in 1977, but today it represents 833,000 homes.

The second chapter of "The Winds of War" had a drop in viewership Monday night in six cities. New York had the highest rating, 42.5, compared to 45.5 on Sunday. Audience shares in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, Philadelphia, Detroit and San Francisco all exceeded 50 percent.

ABC won the week with a rating of 21.2. The networks say this means that in an average prime-time minute, 21.2 percent of the nation's homes with TV were tuned to ABC. CBS was second with 18.5 and NBC was third with 16.6.

The second highest-rated show of the week was CBS' "Magnum, P.I.," closely followed by CBS' "60 Minutes." CBS had six of the Top 10 and ABC had five. Both the Top 10 and the second 10 had 11 shows each because of ties. NBC's highest-rated show was the first part of the rerun of the "Shogun" miniseries, which was in 14th place.

The ratings listed are those provided by NBC, which ranked the Pro Bowl game in 19th place. CBS listed the game in 13th place with a slightly higher rating. ABC, which telecast the game, did not list it at all because it does not count events which begin in the afternoon and spill into prime time.

HOW TO BUILD A CONGRESSIONAL OBSTACLE:

The Progressive Political Action Committee plans to run this and another ad to attack Sen. Jesse Helms.

NEIL SOLOMON, M.D.

Allergy, intolerance cause different effects

Dear Dr. Solomon: At times my pediatrician speaks of a food allergy and at other times he talks about food intolerance. Sometimes I think he's talking about the same thing, and then I think he's talking about two different things. Are they the same? — Mrs. F.L., Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mrs. L.: A child is said to have a food allergy when consumption of a particular food causes diarrhea, vomiting, hives, wheezing or a runny nose. Food intolerance, which causes the intestinal tract to become irritated, results from lack of the enzyme needed to digest a specific food. Either condition may be associated with a great deal of discomfort.

Dear Dr. Solomon: I've been told that my cholesterol level is high and I'd like to do something about it. I've changed some of my eating habits and I'm also thinking of enrolling in an exercise program. Would exercise help lower my cholesterol? — Bill, Petersburg, Va.

Dear Bill: Most studies indicate that exercise has little effect on cholesterol levels unless there is a weight loss at the same time. However, this does not mean that exercise is without value. Even though the total cholesterol concentration may remain unchanged, the high-density lipoproteins (HDL) are increased by exercise, and HDL has been found to be associated with an increased life expectancy.

I would encourge you to go ahead with your plans to enroll in the exercise program, but check first with your doctor.

Dear Dr. Solomon: A friend of mine showed me a column of yours in which you warned against the use of drugs to lose weight. As far as I can see, there are drugs and more drugs, and the drugs that are used to help a person lose weight are not dangerous. Have you possibly changed your mind since you wrote this column? — Walter, Newport, R.I.

Dear Walter: When you write "as far as I can see," I can only suggest that you do not see far enough. I have never said that drugs should never be used in a program of weight control; what I have said is that if drugs are to be used, they should be used only under a physician's supervision and even then only for brief periods of time.

I would agree that some drugs are more potent than others, but that does not mean that even the least potent are risk-free. Phenylpropanolamine, for example, which is used in many weight control preparations, can cause serious psychological problems, particularly when combined with caffeine, which is often the case. Sudden withdrawal of these drugs after long-term use can cause anxiety and depression.

An additional argument against the use of these agents is that they are generally not needed. Only rarely have I had to prescribe such drugs for any of my patients. A well-balanced diet, behavior modification and exercise, such as I describe in my book, "Dr. Solomon's High Health Diet and Exercise Plan," can be just as effective, safer and a more permanent method of weight control.

Brucellosis cutback sought

AGRICULTURE

By PHILLIP SWANN
Washington Bureau

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Agriculture Department has proposed a $32.8 million cutback in the $83 million federal brucellosis program, which has been highly successful in preventing outbreaks of that disease among Texas cattle.

Texas farm officials and other cattlemen are urging Congress to reject the cuts. They claim the disease can be brought under control and perhaps eradicated in this decade if the program is funded at the same level.

"This is a public health problem," says J.D. Jordan, beef cattle director for the Texas Farm Bureau. "We feel that this disease needs to be brought under control and it can be."

The USDA proposal, part of the Reagan administration's $848 billion spending blueprint for 1984, would cut the brucellosis program, which provides funds for vaccination and slaughter of infected animals. Agriculture Department officials explain the national disease infection rate is now at "manageable level" — .5 percent, down from a level of 1.2 percent in 1980.

"We've gotten (the disease rate) down to such a low level that funding doesn't buy as much as it used to," says David Gradick, deputy budget director for the USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service.

But the cattle interests aren't buying the USDA's argument.

"We've made great strides but we're talking about eradication," says Tom Cook, director of animal health at the National Cattlemen's Association. "They're talking about a level that would keep the program below its effectiveness."

The department also proposes to use $6.3 million earmarked for the 1983 brucellosis program to establish a "contingency reserve" for emergency animal disease and plant pest outbreaks.

The Reagan administration budget proposal is the first step in a series of complex and lengthy negotiations to determine the final spending plan for 1984. If the cuts are approved by Congress, the administration says the states and the ranchers themselves will be expected to assume the increased cost of controlling brucellosis.

Farm state congressmen are likely to fight the Reagan administration proposal. The president last year also requested a cut in the brucellosis program, but Congress voted to keep it at the same funding level.

Farm interests say it's doubtful that state governments, which are undergoing financial hardships of their own, can afford to pick up the additional costs.

"(The USDA proposal) is a travesty," says Robert Frederick, legislative director for the National Grange. "We've come so far with good cooperation from farmers, ranchers and state governments. It makes no sense to quit this close to complete success."

Jordan of the Texas Farm Bureau said the number of quarantined herds in East Texas last year dipped from 2,300 to 1,900. He added that brucellosis could be controlled in Texas in the next five to 10 years.

"We do have hope of controlling and eradicating the disease," Jordan says. He adds: "If the program continues as is."

USDA using volunteers to combat erosion

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Agriculture Department says a new federal program to use volunteers to help against soil and water erosion is firmly rooted and is growing rapidly.

The volunteer program was announced last May 11 by USDA's Soil Conservation Service and now has 324 people working full or part-time.

Leading states where the volunteers are at work include: Colorado, 17 workers; Illinois, 12; Iowa, 12; Missouri, 19; Nebraska, 13; New York, 19; Ohio, 17; Pennsylvania, 24; and Virginia, 13.

Peter C. Myers, chief of the agency, said Tuesday that nearly 600 actually volunteered to work and that more than half have been put on jobs so far. More volunteers will be needed this year, he said.

Types of duties available to volunteers include: clerical, information, conservation planning, surveying conservation education, drafting, mapping, roadside seeding and re-vegetation, and contracting assistance.

Myers said that age is not a factor. For example, he said, in South Dakota a second grade Brownie troop worked 72 hours to make crop residue measuring devices for farmers to use after tillage operations. A retired person in southeast Iowa is helping coordinate a county-wide educational program.

Introducing...
Mission Square Plaza
Retail and Office Condominiums

Owning is better than renting.

If you're presently renting retail or office space, you already know some of the disadvantages-frequent cost-of-living rent increases, leases that give the landlord all the advantages, costly sales overrides on your retail sales. In short, you're not in control.

From a pure economic standpoint, ownership beats renting. Consider these advantages:

- You mortgage payments are fixed and not subject to escalation or overrides to a landlord.
- You receive tax deductions for interest and tax payments.
- You get a tax deduction for depreciation over the next 15 years.
- You have control over your space, and no one can cancel your lease.
- You can buy enough space to meet your future growth plans and lease the expansion area until it's needed.
- All maintenance and upkeep is furnished through the Owner's Association.
- Your real estate investment gains value.

In addition to all this, Mission Square is strategically located in one of the city's fastest growing areas; North Big Spring and Loop 250, just northeast of ClayDesta Plaza.

Mission Square is an ideal location for professionals, service businesses, and a variety of retails stores. Contact our office now, for a full color brochure and further details.
