LEWISTON, Idaho, Dec. 18.—(AP)—What does a woman find to talk about, when there's nobody to talk to but her divorced husband?

That question stirred the city somewhat today, while John Hall, barred from his own home and the society of his wife, raved vainly at the city council which denied him entry, and forced his wife to stay with her former husband.

The reason for it all was this: Ray Farrar came to the home of Mrs. Hall, from whom he had been divorced on cruelty grounds on an amicable mission. He brought Christmas toys for his small daughter, who was in Mrs. Hall's custody. While there, he became ill, and a small pot quarantine was slapped down over the house.

When John Hall returned to his home, they would not let him in. They wouldn't let his wife out. They wouldn't let Farrar, the cause of it all, out. The final blow came when after Hall offered to be quarantined with his wife, to keep her company, the city council turned him down and left him out. And this has to go on for 15 days.

Evening Elegance Balances Plain Street Wear

BY LUCY CLAIRE

Fashion Expert for Central Press and Avalanche-Journal

Conservation governs the frocks of daytime wear, balanced by anything but conservatism for formal afternoon and evening wear. The smart woman is never conspicuously dressed, yet there is always something about her clothes that makes her stand out as chic wherever she goes. In an ordinary crowd she may pass unnoticed, but in a small gathering of those in the know, she creates a little ripple of approval. Therefore, she dresses conservatively for the street, but for the evening function, where smart women gather, she goes to the extreme of individuality and elegance.

One of the modish afternoon frocks is shown at the left of the sketch. Its elegance consists in its simplicity. It is fashioned of tulle, with a high collar and the irregular neckline and the fullness achieved in shirring. A unique feature consists in the decorations of fine pin tucks applied in all-over leaf patterns on the bodice and at the wrist with bows. Rose beige kid shoes and fresh hose are worn with this frock.

Cocktail Jacket Appeals to Big Town

The little cocktail or evening jacket has taken New York by storm. We see it everywhere for formal wear. Creating a warm, cozy atmosphere, the sequin, lace or chiffon jackets are the most popular. The velvet have been found too warm. For the theater or dinner gown they are almost a necessary accessory to the formal costume, and more youthful than the scarfs of a season back. A very youthful jacket of black lace touched with silver sequins accompanies the charming dinner frock of black tulle shown at the center of the sketch. This frock, built on princess lines, features its fullness in a step arrangement raised at one side and dipping in the back, giving a slightly modernistic trend in the handling.

Lamesa Faces New Year With Greatest Is Greatest Feature of City's Growth

Permits Total More Than 3 Hundred Thousand For Year; Schools, Churches, Business-Houses Improve

(Special to The Avalanche)
LAMESA, Dec. 18.—Lamesa is continuing the forward march of steady and permanent development. Here you find no boom in process. There is a constant and ever steady building program in evidence that makes Lamesa take her place among the many West Texas growing and prosperous cities. Since the first of June when the city building permit ordinance went into effect there have been better than $300,000 permits granted. These have included two new churches, five brick stores, four brick and stucco filling stations and two dozen modern homes. With all the buildings that have been in process Lamesa has suffered a shortage of homes and rent-houses have been in demand. At the same time there has been ample labor here to take care of the labor needs.

At this time The First Baptist church people are contemplating plans for a new and elaborate edifice that will be in keeping with the homes of other denominations and the building program in the city.

PLAN FOR EXPOSITION
SAN ANGELO, Dec. 18.—A meeting of the oil division and the aviation committee of the Board of City Development will likely be held this week to determine the dates in January for the annual West Texas Oil Exposition and for the opening of San Angelo's new 250 acre airport.

Lamesa now has two very modern tourist camps whereas a year ago she had none. These camps are filled to overflowing every night according to the owners and plans are underway to enlarge them as soon as possible. The owners of the five hotels in the city report that their hotels are well filled every night. Lamesa now has a population of 3500, one thousand modern homes, 120 brick business and office buildings, 17 blocks of brick paving, electric lights and power, gas, city water, and sewerage, telephone system, and all modern conveniences, that go toward making up a city.

BIG SPRING, Dec. 18.—The Legislative Committee of the Western Cotton Growers Cooperative Association will meet in Big Spring at the Chamber of Commerce office on Wednesday December 19th where they will outline a program by which information will be furnished to the Legislature of Texas in their January term asking for remuneration to the cotton growers who have been compelled by the State and Federal Governments to sterilize and fumigate all cotton seed and cotton products in a restricted area.

The ginners of Howard county, the cotton buyers, Manager of the Big Spring compress will attend this meeting and will compile information as to the cost of this fumigation to the farmers and ginners and compress company. Entomologists and informed farmers are convinced that the sterilization requirements are as much protection to the eastern farmers as to the farmers of western Texas where climatic conditions are extremely unfavorable to the perpetuation of any form of insect. High altitude and dry climate make it practically impossible for insects to survive through the winter.

Texas Matrimony Has Rushing Time

DALLAS, Dec. 18.—(AP)—A department of commerce bulletin from Washington says there were 74,042 marriages performed in Texas during the year 1927, as compared with 69,902 in 1926, representing an increase of 4,140 or 5.9 per cent.

In 1916 there were 54,103 marriages performed. But while cupid was busy bringing loving youths to the altar, other forces were at work destroying tried marriages. During the year 1927 there were 17,290 divorces granted in Texas as compared with 15,472 in 1926, an increase of 11.8 per cent. In 1916 there were 8,504 divorces granted. There were 115 marriages annulled in 1927 as compared with 103 in 1926.

Estimated population of Texas on July 1, 1927 was 3,397,000 and on July 1, 1926 3,313,000. On the basis of these figures the number of marriages per 1000 of the population was 12.7 in 1927 as against 12.2 in 1926; and the number of divorces per 1000 population was 3.30 in 1927 as against 2.91 in 1926.

Two new automobile licenses were issued Tuesday by I. F. Holland, county tax collector, to O. H. Parker, Chevrolet coupe, and D. A. Hobbs, Ford coupe, both of Lubbock. Passenger car licenses issued this year, to date, number 8,932.

There were 32 re-registrations made Tuesday for 1928 licenses, bringing the total of these issued to date up to 228. You can see whether or not there will be a rush after January first, with 9,000 licenses to be paid and only about 50 or 60 people paying them now. Better get in now and save standing in line along about the time for the last days in which to pay them arrive.

Pet Dog Uncovers Mystery Slaying When Posse Fails To Dig Up Truth

Dr. J. P. Horton, Memphis preacher, with his dog, Jack, and, inset, Mrs. Mary Irene Meath Taylor.

By EUGENE TRAVIS
Staff Writer for Central Press and The Avalanche

MEMPHIS, Tenn., Dec. 18.—Some where along the Gulf coast a fugitive hide, close-knit and wary, dodging the law for a crime uncovered by a pet collie where sheriff's officers failed.

That is the picture painted by W. Tyler McLean, Memphis state's attorney, who has been directing a man hunt through the south for the slayer of Mrs. Mary Irene Meath Taylor, 40, wife of a baritone soloist, whose body was found in a trunk in a room of the Taylor home.

Police have been seeking Charles S. Taylor, the husband, for questioning in connection with the case. When the slayer is found, if at all, he can blame Jack, the pet collie owned by Dr. J. P. Horton, Baptist minister, for uncovering the crime. For Jack proved his animal sagacity keener than the wit of a posse of sheriff's deputies, who had searched the Taylor home a week before and had failed to uncover any evidence of the crime.

"I was out for a morning jaunt, walking leisurely by the little bungalow, when my dog, scooped around the house," Dr. Horton has told sheriff's deputies.

"He began to bark. I strolled on in the crisp air. His barking and growling grew louder. I whistled, called and coaxed in vain. But Jack was obstinate. Then I retraced my steps and found him in the backyard. He was standing resolute over a pair of blood-stained towels, half-hidden beneath the back steps. When I approached Jack sprang at the back door, and his growling frightened me. I called to two men across the street and asked them to join me in an investigation. We crashed in the door. My dog leaped past us and was upon the trunk with his paws, still growling. Feminine apparel was strewn topsy turvy over the room and on a bed behind which the trunk stood. We tried to lift the trunk. It was heavy. So we ripped off the lock—and there, jammed in the trunk, was the body of a fine-looking woman.

The crime was discovered 10 days after Taylor and his wife had been reported missing. Sheriff's deputies had been called to the house, searched it and overlooked the blood-stained towels in the yard and the corpse in that old trunk.

The Taylors married in Memphis 11 years ago. They had lived in Savannah, Ga., Port Gibson, Miss., and at Florida points. They returned to Memphis five years ago. He ceased his musical activities and was dabbling in suburban real estate operations.

Texas Insurance Is Benefited By Decision of Court

AUSTIN, Dec. 18.—Texas has taken a froward step in insurance more or less by accident, the annual report of Chairman R. B. Cousins, Jr., and the State Board of Insurance Commissioners point out.

The "accident" was a supreme court decision that no distinction could properly be drawn between fire and casualty insurance companies and that one corporation could do both classes of business.

This has resulted in both casualty and fire companies amending their charters and taking up both lines. Heretofore, Cousins says, it has been the general custom to divide insurance into three distinct lines, life, fire and casualty. Prior to the court decision that had been the practice in Texas and was generally thought to be necessary by law.

Confusion Results
"The result has not been bad from an insurance standpoint," Cousins reported though some confusion has resulted in supervision. The rule followed has been to enforce the more stringent regulation where a company takes up both lines.

Post Mortem insurance assessment is not recognized, the report says, calling it a fallacious plan against which the attorney general's department has been requested to take action by the insurance department. Regulation of mutual insurance associations is urged. Mutual insurance is sound. Cousins, but companies should not be begun on insufficient capital. After a concern has weathered its first few years, he says, it can reasonably hope for

She May Be Future Queen of England

Lady Anne Maude Wellesley, 18-year-old beauty, daughter of the Marquis Dour of England, is being mentioned in gossip as the future Princess of Wales and ultimately Queen of England. Efforts to obtain confirmation or denial of the rumors have failed. Lady Anne made her debut at the first royal court this year. It was noticed that at social events this season the prince has danced with her frequently and found much pleasure in her company.

How to Achieve Beauty

BY MME. HELENA RUBINSTEIN

Every skin needs regular beauty treatment, and there is no better way to proceed than by mapping out a simple routine for yourself. Once you have established the daily habit of caring for your skin (as you should whether you are 16 to 60) it will become as fixed in your mind as the daily bath or the use of your toothbrush.

There are usually three distinct steps in every beauty treatment; namely, cleansing, stimulating and toning.

First of all, take a mirror to the strong daylight and study the texture of your skin. Unless you are that somewhat rare "combination type," you can classify your complexion as either normal, dry or oily. The normal skin is firm in texture, the pores inconspicuous. It is elastic and the general tone healthy and fine. The fortunate possessor of this type of complexion never has to worry about shine, and powder adheres smoothly to its surface. Usually the girl between 19 and 25 has a normal skin.

From 25 on we find the dry skin more prevalent. The dry skin is fine, thin, sensitive and often fragile in texture. It is usually an exquisitely beautiful skin but it always shows a tendency to premature lines and wrinkles. This type requires constant counteractive treatment and must be carefully protected from the summer suns and winter snows! Last of the group is the oily skin, and this is an easily recognizable condition. Shine, large pores, blackheads and acne are only a few of the unpleasant aftermaths of this condition. It can, however, be easily cured so don't despair if you possess an oily skin. I suggest that you take a pencil and paper and plan your beauty treatment in just as common sense a way as you plan the evening menu.

YOUR CHILDREN

by Olive Roberts Barton

©1928 by NEA Service, Inc.

The ladies of the missionary society were preparing to pack the annual Christmas box to go to the Orphan's home designated by the Central Board.

In the letter that came from the secretary was this suggestion: "This home is in a very poor section of mountain country and is greatly in need of the common necessities of life. We suggest that your gifts for the children be the form of clothes and food. You need have no fear that the children will be disappointed for they haven't the slightest conception of toys. Anything you send will be appreciated."

When the corresponding secretary of the society had finished reading the letter she sat down and the president rose to ask for remarks.

They were forthcoming to the effect that twenty-nine of the ladies agreed most emphatically. Some of them even went a step further and suggested that if the places were as poor as it was painted, old clothes would be as welcome as new, and why not send the cash to the heathen across the sea, and forgo all their contribu-

A Couple of Hints for Santa

By MME. LISBETH

Everyone is glad to give the pretty girl a hand, but it is something more than a hand she is looking for at Christmas. So how about a swanky pajama suit or a comfy lounge robe.

The two models illustrated here are in particularly intriguing guise. At the left Alice White, one of our screen flappers, wears a pair of pajamas in the very latest mode. They are made of satin with hand-painted decorations. The high collar is the newest thing.

At the right, Nancy Carroll, another of the little girls of the cinema, is on the lookout for Santa in a particularly cuddly knee-length bathrobe made of soft angora. Burnt orange is being used in some of the latest pajamas, combined with peach and other tones.

The Woman's Day

By Alice Sumner

"The woman question" pops out in the new books. Not the old question as to whether woman may have home and career or home or career; not lambasting at "the new woman" and a showing of the boys into which her tender feet will fall. The woman question merely seems to be more interested in women than men, and weaves all sorts of themes about her.

Quite the most interesting of them all to me is Mary known in her community on the Gulf as "St. Mary's" in "Scarlet Sister Mary" by Julia Peterkin. Mary is a spruce colored, maybe a little darker than that—more like a lusciously ripe plum, and "St. Mary's" has more abundant personality than any heroine encountered in fiction for a long time.

The love of Mary's life is one John, loafer and roustabout, and much less of a catch as a husband than his brother, June. But Mary loves John and weeds him to the increase of corn, pine and possum in the grove. Her cup of happiness is running over when her little son christened Unexpected or Unex for short, is born.

DESERTING PARENT
Paternal responsibilities set Joe heavily upon July's broad shoulders and he has himself away from the plantation to the river boats. Fiction offers no competition to Julia Peterkin's presentation of Mary, a woman crushed by loss of love, the futility of living grips Mary in its clutches.

But Mary is the terrible mother, she is maternity so incarnate that even the plantation does not question over-much her right to what she calls a "cabinful of young-uns." The plantation knows that "St. Mary's young-uns" are the strongest, prettiest kids on the gulf and that's that.

Mary has her progeny in singles, doubles, even triples, never does she make any moon about one more child. They are her reason and only reason for living. Her vitality, her super-maternity, her come-back from the land of crushed spirits to a land of joy where she, too, sings at the cotton picking and pines even when turned out of church, make Mary an unforgettable figure, and her strength of character as she slams the door in John's face when, years later, he comes back, is one of the finest scenes in fiction.

Then, in another scale of living is Patricia Gordon, in Hamilton Gibbs' "Harnessed." This is a story of one of those made-in-heaven marriages, with the newlyweds ensconced in a made-in-heaven cottage with flagstone walk and brass knocker on a door as old as King Alford with pepper and brass and a yellow cat. It's a story of what happens when too much idyllic love makes men and women cry for roast beef rare in the way of a job.

Pat gets her job and Michael Alford with her and brass and a yellow cat. It's a story of what happens when too much idyllic love makes men and women cry for roast beef rare in the way of a job.

ANOTHER CLASS

Then there's Lily Christine in Michael Arlen's book by that name, also called "A Good Woman." Lily's tragedy is one, too, of blind love lavished on a husband whom other men do not hesitate to dislike and call "no good." Pat Somerset, the husband, falls terribly in love with a good woman—a brittle, scheming, conventional-minded woman who insists that Pat divorce Lily. She will not marry a man whom another woman has divorced.

Lily Christine's heart is broken, not so much from personal grief and hurt pride as from her complete appreciation of the fact that Pat himself is miserable and baffled and caught in the grip of something he resents, but against which he is powerless.

Lily Christine is a significant heroine because even like "St. Mary's" she does not cry out but takes her dose even though she can't take it.

Interesting heroines, all three!

Tech Letter Men Hold Annual Feed At College Cafe

Leader for Next Season's Grid Team One of Outstanding Performers On Gold and Black Machine

Without the traditional blare of trumpets, and, in fact, without even so much as a single advance announcement, the letter men of the 1928 Texas Tech grid squad silently stole away to the college cafeteria yesterday at noon, initiated the new letter wearers and elected a leader for the season of 1929.

The newly chosen chieftain is Vaughn Corley, of Lubbock, husky center and for the past two seasons one of the outstanding performers of the Scarlet and Black machine.

In addition to electing the captain for next season, the Tech eleven for the past four seasons with a scarlet and black sweater with a mascot design.

Sandies To Meet Hollywood Team

AMARILLO, Dec. 18.—(AP)—Amarillo High School's "Golden Sandstorm" will meet the Hollywood, Calif., High School football team in a post-season game at Hollywood, December 29, local school officials announced today.

Previous announcements had said that Central High of Fort Worth would meet the coast team, but Amarillo was selected, according to school officials here, because the "Sandstorm" reached the bi-district flight of the state championship race while the Fort Worth team was eliminated early in the season.

Strolling Down Sports Lane

With Allan Carney Avalanche Sports Editor

With the baseball season scarcely more than two months gone, the winter sports league has begun to roar at full blast with a number of sensational trades that have revamped the lineup for almost every major league club. The annual trade involving Rogers Hornsby, the erstwhile St. Louis Cardinal, New York Giant and Boston Brave, broke before the magnates were ready to spring the big news. It seems that the talkative "Rajah" couldn't keep mum on the matter and an "inquiring reporter" got the news from him before he realized the boner he had pulled.

Planned at the outset to be the most sensational deal of the winter season, the trade was first hinted, reassured and then officially announced by William Wrigley, the chewing gum magnate and owner of the Chicago Nationals. The ill-tempered Hornsby went to the Cubs in exchange for Percy Jones, pitcher, Freddy McGuire, infielder, several rookies and a nice sized roll of cash. Despite the fact that he is one of the greatest right handed hitters of all times and led the senior circuit in batting for six seasons, Hornsby apparently has something to his makeup—that doesn't go so well with the bosses. His fiery nature and general cockiness has given him the name of the most traded personality in the big show.

Still there is no denying the fact that Hornsby is an asset to any baseball club and probably the most dangerous offensive threat in the National League. In spite of his bearing, he is still sought after and is able to draw the largest salary in the National loop. Since the name of Hornsby has been added to the Chicago Cubs' lineup, Joe McCarthy's outfit is considered as an outstanding favorite to lead the league next season.

Buddy Myer, sensational third baseman of the Boston Red Sox, was the center figure of the latest and most startling deal. Leading his team in hitting last season and ranking among the best in stolen bases, Myer was traded by the cellars of the American League to the Washington Senators for the scant sum of five players. These include pitchers Horace Dineen and Bill Gaston; infielders Grant Gillis and Bobby Reeves and Ed Bigelow, slugging outfielder with the Birmingham club of the Southern Association last season. Myer goes back to the club he left in 1927 when he failed to deliver to the satisfaction of the Senators. Detroit boss, who at that time was directing the destinies of the Senators from second base.

Considered as one of the best third basemen in the junior circuit, Myer has rapidly gained prominence until he has become one of the most sought-after infielders in the loop. Naturally one wonders why he left the Washington club. There is a story connected with his slump while playing with the Senators which if true throws considerable light on the matter. It so happened that Harris and Myer were

Powerful Abilene Line Expected To Handicap Jackets

Backfield of Contending Teams are Apparently On Par; Lines of Both Teams are Well Coached

DALLAS, Dec. 18. (AP)—A comparison of the average weights of the Abilene Eagles and Port Arthur Yellowjackets today revealed that the West Texas would have an advantage of approximately 10 pounds to the man over the Jackets in their game at Abilene Friday for state high school football championship.

Abilene's line is said to average about 175 pounds to the man, while Port Arthur's forward wall averages only 157. The rival backfields apparently are on a par, each averaging 157 pounds.

While critics who saw Port Arthur win from Marshall in the semifinals last week were impressed by the fine play of the Yellowjackets line, they were doubtful that it could be as effective against the hefty Eagle wall. Abilene's line, they pointed out, was just as well coached in the fundamentals as the Jackets.

both married at about the same time. In the club house one evening after a ball game, Myer suggested to Harris, who married a prominent debutante of Washington, society, that he (Myer) bring his bride over that night for a visit with the other couple. Harris promptly informed the third baseman that they were on the same social plane only on the baseball field, that they lived in entirely different worlds of the field. After that incident Myer never played his best for Harris, according to the story.

Another deal which has all the circles talking was that which sent George Uhle, veteran hurler of the Cleveland Indians to the Detroit Tigers in exchange for Rabbit Tavenor, former Fort Worth shortstop, and Kenneth Holway, right handed hurler. At one time Uhle was the ace of the Indians' pitching staff, but last season failed to deliver up to standard and as a result the critics have pronounced him through. Bucky Harris, the new Tiger pilot, evidently has figured out otherwise. Uhle has been dubbed the "in and out" pitcher on the Cleveland team and the season of 1929 may be his season to be "in."

A trade which sent Glenn Wright, Pittsburgh shortstop, to the Brooklyn Robins in exchange for Harry Riconda, infielder, and Jess Petty, pitcher is the other deal which has caused considerable. The passing of Wright breaks up one of the greatest infields of all time.

American League Magnates Hold Powwow

Engineers Defeat Liberal Arts Five

Intramural Championship Is Decided In Hard Fought Battle On Tech Court Last Night

The fast-stepping School of Engineering quintet played basketball like veterans on the Tech gymnasium court last night to defeat the Liberal Arts aggregation 35 to 25 and win the intramural cage championship of Texas Tech in one of the fastest class games seen here in many moons. Hitting the basket from all corners of the court and passing the ball uncanny skill, the season of 1929 may be his season to be "in."

A trade which sent Glenn Wright, Pittsburgh shortstop, to the Brooklyn Robins in exchange for Harry Riconda, infielder, and Jess Petty, pitcher is the other deal which has caused considerable. The passing of Wright breaks up one of the greatest infields of all time.

Engineers took the lead in the early periods and rumped away with the game in a decisive fashion. Leading 15 to 10 at the half and increasing their margin to a greater degree in the third period, the winners were met by a determined comeback on the part of the Arts five in the last quarter that threatened their lead but the final whistle found them with a 10 point advantage.

Robertson, forward on the Engineers' quintet, led both teams in scoring with 15 points. Marshall, Liberal Arts forward came next with eight points.

New Assistant To Tex Rickard Is Stranger To Boxing Game But Not To Professional Hockey Contests

The Nut Cracker By Joe Williams

Hot Stove Note: George Uhle, who has been spending several years on vacation in Cleveland, has been given a position with the Detroit Tigers. George says he doesn't know how it will feel to be back at work again.

Just to show how fearless this department is, it is hereby publicly recorded that the golfer, Miss Virginia Van Wie, who recently moved to Florida, has decided to spend the winter in California.

The battles for the Muldoon-Funney trophy cup continue merrily on, with the chosen people getting knocked off by the Homer Hendersons out in the timberlands. Why not put a good name like John L. Sullivan or Jim Corbett on the cup and file it away in the Smithsonian Institution?

A new code of sportsmanship has been adopted at Illinois university. The code forbids being and hissing and all abusive and irritating remarks from the side lines. What are the spectators supposed to do? Throw things?

William Muldoon invented the shower bath, according to a new story of the Old Roman by Ed Van Every. Now if he'd just think up some way of saving a man's neck from the slippery soap.

Col. John S. Hammond Is Drafted to Aid Rickard In Managing Madison Square Garden; Hopes to Learn

NEW YORK, Dec. 18. (AP)—Col. John S. Hammond, soldier of Uncle Sam, banker and aide to Tex Rickard as the new general manager of Madison Square Garden, hasn't missed a big fight since 1912—but he likes hockey better.

That isn't strange when you consider that the colonel, a graduate of West Point and commander during the world war of Camp McClellan and its 40,000 rookies at Annapolis, Ala., introduced professional hockey into New York with the Rangers, now the world champions. The tall, straight, white-haired soldier is a business man with a first sport love in hockey. Now he has been drafted to make the entire Garden, and not just the ice rinks his business.

"I don't know anything about boxing," he said as he pored over the masses of figures that mean so much to the sports fan and so much to the promoter, "but I hope rubbing elbows with Tex Rickard may do some good."

There's been a Hammond in every war since the battle of Lexington and this lean, fastidiously soldier has signed for the duration of the struggle to bring boxing out of the depression that followed the disintegration of the heavyweights.

INDIANS ELECT CAPTAIN ABILENE, Dec. 18. (AP)—Howard Miller of Abilene was elected captain of the 1929 McMurray College football team at the team's annual banquet tonight. Miller, a guard, is a three letter man.

Tilden Confers With Net Chiefs

Tennis Officials Silent On Outcome of Hearing Allowed Once King Of Amateur Sport

(By Associated Press)
NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—Big Bill Tilden was in town today to settle a dispute with representatives of the United States Lawn Tennis Association for the first time since he was barred from amateur courts by that body August 25.

The huddle took place quietly in the offices of the U. S. L. T. A. and lasted for an hour. It was generally peaceful but Tilden did his share of the talking. As to exactly what took place and what understanding was reached both Tilden and the tennis solons were silent.

"You'll have to ask the tennis association about it," said Tilden, when questioned about the conference, although he was perfectly willing to talk about his stage tour from which he is having a week's holiday.

Members of the amateur rule committee of the U. S. L. T. A. which conducted the interview, were fully as non-committal, pointing out that the information can not be made public until the executive committee at the meeting in Boston in February.

Today's confab with Tilden was arranged in accordance with the resolution of the executive committee adopted here Dec. 8 when it was decided not to reinstate the stormy petrel of the game at once but rather to have the special guardians of the amateur rule confer with Tilden to learn his attitude.

Bearg-Will Coach At Topeka School

Nebraska Football Mentor Goes to Washburn College As Director Of Athletics And Football Coach

TOPEKA, Kansas, Dec. 18.—(AP)—Ernest E. Bearg, who resigned the position of head football coach at the University of Nebraska early this month, will direct the new physical education program of Washburn College, Topeka. Bearg will be director of athletics and head of the department of physical education and also will have direct charge of the football team.

Announcement of Bearg's acceptance of the new post was made by Dr. Parley P. Womer, president of the school, at a dedicatory program for Washburn's new $200,000 field house tonight preceding the Washburn-University of Kansas basketball game.

The announcement confirmed rumors that have been flying since Bearg announced two weeks ago that he would not return to Nebraska, where he had successfully coached the football teams for four seasons.

Georgia Tornado Trains For Game

ATLANTA, Georgia, Dec. 18.—(AP)—Georgia Tech's Golden Tornado gathered strength today as it whipped across Grant Field in preparation for a trip across the continent to Pasadena, California, where on New Year's Day, it will clash out against California's Golden Bears.

The Tornado's bag of past plays was opened up during the afternoon. Two eleven were sent through stiff signal drills while a third squad continued its study of Bar formations in preparation for scrimmage tomorrow. It was announced today the squad would begin its western journey Thursday afternoon, arriving at Pasadena Sunday.

CONTRACT SUIT FILED

L. C. and A. D. Montgomery Sue T. M. Nowlin

A suit on a contract, involving the sale of a transfer and storage business, was filed in the Ninety-Ninth district court Tuesday by L. C. and A. D. Montgomery against T. M. Nowlin. The business is said to have been sold for a consideration of $16,145, and the original petition alleges that the defendant owed a number of notes and $300 a month rent for three months.

Another suit was filed in the court, that of R. Ricken versus A. A. Hopson, J. W. Whittle, C. E. Moudy and N. W. Smith, a suit on debt and foreclosure of a chattel mortgage.

INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

High prices being paid for industrial stocks in the East and the high rate of call money there centers the attention of the financial world on New York. Stocks are being sold at as high as three and one-half for one with as low returns as six per cent on the face of the stocks. The high rate of interest is concentrating much money in New York banks and the effect of this concentration, a condition the Federal Reserve system was designed to prevent, is being watched with no little interest.

It is a notable fact that local capital is finding ample places for investment and that the deposits of local banks are confined largely to the Federal Reserve District.

As time goes on there will be a surplus of capital in the South Plains country. Much of it now is being used in various forms of expansion in business and in farming. This section produces wealth. It will not be many years before our people will be looking for investments. Good vendors' lien notes are becoming scarce due to the first letting created through loans from the Federal Land Bank, the Joint Stock banks and the organized loan and the insurance companies. In larger sums safe investments with reasonable returns will always be available, but there is an opening for the investor of small sums. Our own building and loan and similar associations provide an outlet for those who wish to invest small amounts to make systematic investments.

But a thing which we are overlooking is the organization of small industries, which can be based on the careful survey of our conditions and fields of distribution. In the north such companies have proven profitable in many instances and from small beginnings have developed into real factors in the industrial world.

By pooling our capital in worthy undertakings none of us need take great risk yet we can get started in this way many small industries which will expand in keeping with the field, the merit of the product and our initiative in producing and distributing.

We long for industries in our section. We wish some Santa Claus would come along and give them to us. We are willing in many instances to pay a bonus for a good industry. Why not use that bonus money that we might raise for factories and a little more, too, and start small industries and stay behind them?

We have the business acumen and the organizing genius in many of our citizens to start them right. Let's study our field and try to develop and reap the financial reward that will follow judicious and businesslike investment.—Plainview Herald.

Modern Implement Company To Build

Successful bidder for the construction of a modern implement business house at Plainview has been awarded to the Underhill Construction company, of Wichita, Kan., according to an announcement made Tuesday. The contract was awarded last Saturday, the building to be erected for the Jarvis-Tull company, present machinery distributors. A floor space of 75 by 140 feet will be available when the building is completed, the contract price being $63,000 and construction is to begin immediately.

Billiard Champs Leading Tourney

(By Associated Press)
CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—Johnny Layton, the fisherman from Missouri and Ralph Greenleaf, the 28-year-old eight times pocket billiard champion, demonstrated today the type of billiards that will have to be excelled if they are to be de-throned as three-cushion and pocket billiard champions, respectively, in the combined championship tournament.

Playing the same steady billiards that carried them to national titles last spring, Layton defeated Otto Reisel, Philadelphia, former holder of the angle title, 50 to 40, in 38 innings while Greenleaf took the measure of Ervin Rudolph, Chicago, 135 to 95 in 14 innings.

The great development of the Southwest is attracting a great deal of attention among railroad builders in West Texas. Eastern New Mexico and other portions of the country, but the main building program seems to be in West Texas and Eastern New Mexico. The biggest building program of the United States was put on in the building of the Denver extension, on the Plains, and now there is another project that will in all probability eclipse the building programs of the United States this year and next, and that is the extension of the Santa Fe line into New Mexico, the probable building of the line of railroad from Roswell to a connection with the railroad at Rotan, in Texas and the extension of the Texas and Pacific from Monahans to Kermit, thence to Jal and then possibly to Lovington, New Mexico, and then another line from Rankin to Sheffield in Pecos county. This extension program of rails will likely be completed within the next twelve months.

The Woman's Day

By Aliene Sumner

I wish that parents would learn to pay more attention to a child's motives if he tells a lie, rather than the lie itself.

John lied! They can't get over that. All they see is the great big lie hung around John's neck like a millstone.

He was afraid of them or he wouldn't have told it in the first place. And the more they make him afraid of them the more lies he will tell in self defense.

About 99 out of a hundred lies are pretty harmless, at least in the beginning. They are usually not malicious but are caused by weakness. That is why I say, instead of attaching too much importance to the lie, look behind it and see what the motive was in telling it. And try to correct the motive. It may begin with yourself.

Let us follow the evolution of a white lie.

John's mother has baked a batch of doughnuts and put them in a covered bowl in the pantry. Then she writes a note and lays it on the kitchen table. "Have gone to the dressmaker's. Will be back at 5. Don't touch the doughnuts."

John comes in from school starving hungry. He smells the delicious tantalizing odor of the doughnuts. He follows his nose. The trail leads through the kitchen. He sees the note—and reads. His face falls. No doughnuts!

First Temptation
He'll just take a look. Oh, how tempting and beautiful they look. He lifts one to his nose and sniffs. He licks at a fleck of sugar. Now if he had chosen the other way and gone through the pantry first, he'd have eaten one before he saw that old note.

He is very hungry. Now just suppose— He falls. He eats two.

"I'm sorry, Mother! I—I— you see, I ate two doughnuts and then I saw your note afterwards. I was awfully sorry, but it was too late.

But circumstantial evidence gave him away. He had dropped the note in the doughnut bowl. His mother found it under the lid.

A hard whipping. John had told a terrible lie! Horrible!

How foolish! In the first place no sensible mother would write such a note. Why couldn't John have had a doughnut, or two? It wasn't a malicious lie that John had told.

When I got John by himself I'd given him a man to man talk on trust, and sportsmanship. I'd have said, "See here, son John, a fib has no place around here. You see we come of a family that treats its members. If you ever do what you shouldn't come and tell me about it. We'll talk it over. No more lies, John."

But that whipping made John more afraid. Later on he got exasperated at covering his tracks. Then his lies turned gray—then black.

RED TAPE AND FLU

The people of the United States are looking on with a good deal of interest to see just what this special "board of strategy" is going to do toward stopping the epidemic of flu that seems to be sweeping some portions of the Federal Health Department, and we wish them all the success possible. We believe it will be a mighty good thing to have only keep from getting too much red tape mixed up in the program. The most trouble with this thing is that it makes the machinery work so slow that a thing like the flu will have taken a toll that would be appalling before the preventatives could reach the spot. From the newspaper reports that have been put out the past few days it seems to be a mild form of the disease working its way through a number of states.

Fortunately the disease is of a much less violent character than that which spread over the United States and Europe during the war. Fewer deaths have been reported, and it appears that in some communities the epidemic ran its course within a few days.

There seems to be no substantial agreement as to the nature of the disease. It is called influenza or grip or a bad cold. But the communities afflicted have enough experience to justify the conclusion that it is probable that the epidemic spread from a central point. The question arises as to whether the country can be so organized as to discover incipient epidemics of infectious disease and check them before they spread. In attacking virulent communicable fevers in tropical countries, medical expeditions financed principally by American have been especially successful. They have, however, which the advantage of dealing with a native population which travels little except by sea, and rigid harbor quarantine regulations overcome this channel of distribution.

The surgeon-general of the public health service considered that the weight of scientific opinion favored isolation, even to the extent of closing schools and other places of public assembly but counseled against this relaxation of normal activity breaks down much of the discipline essential to the well-being of most people, especially school children. The individual can do much to fortify himself against infection by observation of the few essential health rules with which practically all authorities agree. He can follow the advice of a few days in bed, there is much less chance of serious illness. This appears to be as far as the country can go in its present state of social organization. Business goes on as usual. Each epidemic inspiring closer study of the problem of confinement to a small area about the source. It seems probable, in the light of recent progress in medical research, that all epidemics will be checked in time, either by barriers at the source, or immunization of the individual.

A couple recently celebrated their tin wedding by paying for their car that they had bought on the installment plan. That's fine anyway, for a great many people never pay for them at all.

A South Plains club boy earned $1.60 an hour for every hour he put in raising feed the past year. This youngster has figured the proposition down to a pretty fine point, but we suppose that is just the detail of the situation.

Game hogs are getting into it these days, and they should. They know the laws before they start out to hunt, and if the allowance for each hunter is not sufficient they should not start out. We notice that the wardens are getting pretty hot on the trail of some fellows, and it cost a North Plainsman $100 to get a few days ago, when it was found that they had too many quail for the day. Some guy will howl, however, that the punishment is too severe for the crime.

His car was reduced to junk when the train hit it at the crossing, but by a miracle he was practically uninjured. After he had crawled from under the wreck, an officer said witheringly, "You deliberately drove your car in front of that train. Did you expect to jump the track and pass behind you?"
"I didn't know but it might," returned the victim with a sheepish grin. "I understood it was an accommodating train."

A Washington Bystander

BY KIRKE L. SIMPSON
WASHINGTON, Dec. 18. — "Army Blues," sung to the tune of "Aura Lee," used to be West Point's favorite ditty. Jany comment on the order restoring blue pre-war garrison uniforms for military social affairs, if desired, justifies the suggestion that the song be revived for army use, revised to read "Army Blues."

At 60 per cent of the army commissioned strength came in during or since the war. Those officers have no blues.

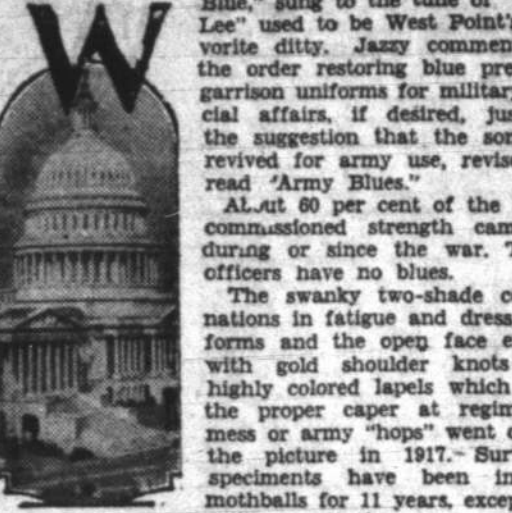

The swanky two-shade combinations in fatigue and dress uniforms and the open face effects with gold shoulder knots and highly colored lapels which were the proper caper at regimental mess or army "hops" went out of the picture in 1917. Surviving specimens have been in the mothballs for 11 years, except for military attaches and aides to the president at White House high ceremonies.

Army's Glory Revived.
It is these ancient trappings of military glory Secretary Davis, aided and abetted by General Sumner as chief of staff, has authorized for non-commissioned wear at the pleasure of the owners. Of course, officers who possess no blues but have $600 and up to spare, may order new outfits. What advantage will be taken of the permissive authority to dress up in colorful regimentals when a big party like the White House Army-Navy reception on New Year's day is being thrown remains to be seen.

Unquestionably the army nose has been out of joint for a decade. The land heroes, however high their rank, looked quite coolish in their sober olive drab field uniforms as they lined up for the annual White House show.

The navy, draped in long dress coats resplendent with brass buttons, encircled with golden sword belts and wearing cocked beavers in which John Paul Jones himself would have felt entirely at home, completely outshined the land parade contingent. A complete admiral, even a temporary one like Admiral Hughes, chief of naval operations, who will head the navy contingent on New Year's day, is gold-braided from wrist to elbow to carry all the cargo of distinction he rates. He's a four-stride admiral in navy parlance.

Glamorous To The Ladies.
General Sumner, heading the army column, aside from his impressive collection of war and campaign medals and perhaps an added touch, lost to the head of that institution said that one drunken student would attract more attention than all the balance of the number and it just seemed that there were more drunks than there really were. The same applies to the drunks in Lubbock. It sounds like there are more than there really are. We doubt if the publicity is the proper thing after all.

the president at White House high ceremonies.

We think it sounds mighty bad when the police records of the county show a number of drunks every day, but the thing that we believe is the worst feature is that the world knows about the drunks, but they do not take into consideration the large number of sober people in the city. It is said that one skunk in a cage with five hundred rabbits will create more excitement and attention than all of the rabbits, though they are five hundred to one. It was said of one school institution one time that there were more drinking students than there were sober ones, which statement was refuted by the Superintendent of the schools, and it might have been the head of that institution said that one drunken student would attract more attention than all the balance of the number and it just seemed that there were more drunks than there really were. The same applies to the drunks in Lubbock. It sounds like there are more than there really are. We doubt if the publicity is the proper thing after all.

We think since Governor Dan Moody has issued a wild cat, which the newspaper reports say he did a few days ago, that he will probably be in condition to grapple with the next session of the State Legislature which no doubt will not be a tame affair itself. There is a lot of legislation to be put over, so the people think, and of course every State Senator will want to put over, so that the state will be full, and the regular session will not be able to work it out.

We think that times have changed. Santa Claus was always pictured in our minds as being a person who had something to give away, but we have noticed the past few days that he has been taking up a collection on the important corners of the Square in Lubbock. We do not object one minute to the old fellow taking up this collection, but we were just remarking that times have changed some. We hope the Salvation Army gets barrels full of money instead of only a kettle full. They will spend it judiciously we are sure, and will possibly use it to a better advantage than we could. Make Christmas a cheerful time for more of the poor people that the Salvation Army is looking after, and it will be a brighter Christmas to you.

We think if all the business men were late to their store or to their office, as regularly as they are late to their Sunday School classes business would not go forward at the rate that it does.

We think that the use of tallow candles in the homes at Christmas time is a mighty good way to bring about a very sad Christmas. Fires might be started that would bring grief to many hundreds of people. The thing is to be careful. The best thing to do is not to use tallow candles at all.

We think that facts are like a great many people that we know they are awful stubborn.

We think grocerymen like newspapermen get into some very embarrassing positions sometimes. We hear of one groceryman getting thoroughly bewled out by a recent bride, because the flour the groceryman sent up was to tough that her hubby could not eat the biscuits that she made out of it.

We think we law-abiding citizens are a bunch of inconsistencies. We want the officers to enforce the laws, and then we refuse to testify to anything that we have seen or heard, and will not take the

SO THINK WE

The Way Of The World
BY GROVE PATTERSON
SATURDAY?
Let's not worry about the saturation point in business whether we are producing motor cars or what not. Listen to Major Carson, of N. W. Ayer & Son, advertising people. He says:
"As long as men die and babies are born there will be ever changing markets. Six thousand new babies in the United States every day mean 25,000,000 new customers for every ten years. There are about 1,000,000 marriages every year, meaning a new untouched market for buttons and all their accessories. Changing styles are constantly creating new demands. The car you thought so wonderful this year will take a back seat for a new model in a new color next year. The same is true of sewing machines, pens, pencils, and vacuum cleaners. The American family is always ready to buy newer things."

KNOWING WHERE IT IS
Howard C. Dunn, of the United States bureau of commerce, tells fore-keepers some facts about their business. The facts come from analysis.
"One grocer," said Mr. Dunn, "carried forty-two kinds of tea, six of which made up half his total sales in tea."
"According to this grocer's trade," says Mr. Dunn, "his customers live within half a mile of his store and his purchases make up 20 per cent of his sales. Analysis of his deliveries showed the minimum use of a truck was to deliver two cakes of yeast to a customer living three miles away."
"Analysis of toilet goods sales in a city drug store for six months showed 74 per cent of total sales made on 150 items of 474 carried."
"Idle merchandise stocks on the shelves of retailers constitute one of the outstanding wastes. Merchandise which sleeps on the shelves gradually accumulates costs, such as storage, interest, insurance, taxes, shrinkage, depreciation of obsolescence. Furthermore, it ties up a retailer's capital and depreciates his credit."
Few who read this column are grocers, but the idea, the principle is sound. It is wise to know where the money comes from and where it goes. It is very wise to know where our time goes and what we are doing and why. The lack of analysis of our business and ourselves is one of the major reasons for failure.

WRITE IT OUT
It is a help to clear thinking to know rather definitely what you believe about the few important fundamental matters of life. Would it not be a good thing if we were to write out our own philosophy of life, what we honestly think about things? Not many of us would produce a piece of writing that any publisher would care to buy but we would clarify our thinking and prepare ourselves for more thoughtful living. Few live thoughtfully.

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Fate introduces JERRY RAY to ALESTER CARSTAIRS when he crashes his airplane into the camp she is sharing with her roommate. She likes his pilot, DAN HARVEY, but Alester showers her with attention. Dan tries to win her, but when he proposes she tells him she does not believe in love but hopes to marry money. Jerry loses her job on Alester's account, and he gets her a place in a chorus. She works hard and Alester drives her to Atlantic City for the opening, but she angers him by refusing to attend a midnight chorus party. But she wins promotion to a special dance number. The second week of the show is in Boston and Alester insists on driving her there. But he delays starting and then stops at a notorious roadside house for dinner. Jerry begs him to hurry but before she can get him away, it is night and raining. Car trouble spoils her slim chance of reaching Boston on time. The Alester thinks of the airplane, but Dan refuses to go up on account of the weather. Alester stubbornly prepares for flight, and when Dan sees they are determined he takes the wheel and goes up in the storm. He runs into an electric storm. Tragedy threatens when lightning sets fire to a plane wing, but he gets the machine down in a safe landing. They catch a train on into Boston but arrive too late for rehearsal. The press agent wants to play up the story using Alester's name, but Jerry objects. They persuade him to tell the truth—featuring Jerry for show publicity and Dan for his bravery. By the time the show reaches New York, Jerry has become quite a finished dancer and Alester is more conscious than ever. He asks her to marry him—deciding to risk the family wrath. She begs him to wait before announcing an engagement and objects to going to a party at LEONTINE LEBANDY's but he insists. Dan comes to attend the show and Jerry calls him back stage for a visit. Alester finds them together and brutally informs Dan they are going to a party to announce their engagement, and invites him to go along. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XLVI Dan was plainly dumfounded by Jerry's words. She saw in his eyes a mixture of anger and struggle to take control of him, though she understood only that he was disturbed. He wheeled upon Alester and in a cutting voice asked him if it were true. "Are you taking Jerry to Leontine Lebandy's place?" he demanded. Alester did not answer him directly. He spoke to Jerry. "Please go and get dressed," he said. "I will wait for you in the car." "Wait a minute," Dan spoke up as Jerry started to leave them. Then, to Alester, "Surely you aren't in earnest? You can't take the girl you're going to marry out there." Alester's eyes shifted furtively, then settled upon Dan's face with a challenging defiance. "Well, are you coming?" he asked gratingly. Dan studied him at length before replying. He recognized a desperate bravado behind Alester's defiance. He knew that Alester was not there to be turned from his purpose—a purpose that held a menace. "All right," he said tersely. "I'll go." Jerry turned away without a word and hurried to the dressing room where she slipped into her new evening frock. She had thrilled to the purchase of the lovely satin creation, but tonight she did not give it a thought. Here makeup had been removed quickly, but now that she stood before her mirror, ready, except for the drop of perfume on her delicate earlobe, she was reluctant to return to Dan and Alester. "I'll wait here for Evelyn," she said to herself, and sat down to polish her hair. Evelyn joined her shortly "don't sit in here," she cried when she saw Jerry. "Run along to Alester. I'll be out in two minutes." "I'll help you," Jerry said, and began getting Evelyn's things ready. She handed her a folded towel to pin around her head and removed the top from the cold cream jar. "You won't have to ride with Alester and me," she said as she pushed the stack of tissue cleaning towels within Evelyn's reach. "There's someone to share the rumble seat with you." Evelyn's eyes had been closed, to permit the removal of the blue cream from their lids, but at a soft note in Jerry's voice she opened them and looked at her. "Who?" she said, and waited anxiously for the information. "Dan," was all the Evelyn said to Jerry. But to herself she added, "I know it!" Once when Jerry had gone home

OUR ASSORTED PAPER MONEY
The amalgamation last week of the note issues of the British Treasury, and the Bank of England, brings out the contrast between the uniformity prevailing in European countries and the great variety in our own. In the United States there are now seven different kinds of paper money. Since they are freely interchangeable and readily convertible into gold, their variety offers no problem in ordinary cash transactions. For the average citizen it is immaterial whether he handles reserve certificates or Federal Reserve notes, and few people take the trouble to ascertain which they are handling. If any of these issues is to be withdrawn in the near future it is most likely to be the national bank note. This type of currency, secured by a deposit of Government bonds, once rendered the country a valuable service by displacing the heterogeneous issues of scores of State banks. On the other hand, it has always fallen in times of financial stringency to serve the business community as a good banking currency should. It has been perversely inelastic, expanding when business conditions favored its contraction, and vice versa. The passage of the Federal Reserve Act has removed the further need for this type of bank note, and its discontinuance was contemplated and even provided for in that legislation. But for some reason the national banks have hung on. The question of their retirement will be brought to the fore again when the "Federal Reserve" with the note circulation privilege matures in 1930. The only argument which can be advanced for the retention of the bank notes is the fact that their outstanding bonds bear a lower coupon rate than others, and the note issue thus saving the Treasury some thing in the way of interest charges. Every other consideration favors the retirement of this obsolete currency.

THE SANTA CLAUS TAX
A ban has been placed upon collection of funds from employees of the various departments in the capitol in Austin, for the purpose of purchasing Christmas gifts for the state officials. Mrs. Jane Y. McCullum, Secretary of State, started this movement to abolish the "Santa Claus tax" and other officials promptly gave it their endorsement. Needless to say, employees in the several departments have given silent but emphatic approval. The idea of taking up a collection to buy a Christmas present for the "boss" is as old as the hills, but is not compatible with modern ideas. The "boss" usually is somewhat embarrassed by the gift, and the employees frequently regard it as something that must be done grudgingly; therefore the custom is contrary to the true Christmas spirit. There have been administrations at Austin that sanctioned the "Santa Claus tax" and also insisted upon department employees subscribing to certain newspapers and otherwise paying indirectly into the coffers of department heads; but that day, happily, has gone and we hope it is to be gone forever. Employees of the several state departments in the capitol at Austin do not receive large salaries; but if there are men who can afford to be privileged to present individual gifts to their chiefs, Mr. McCullum and other officials are to be commended for having served no more than their duty by "passing the hat" which will be declined.—Brownwood Bulletin.

HIS FLIGHT

1925 BY NATHANIEL GROSS "WHEN A GIRL LOVES LOVE FOR TWO"

THIS HAS HAPPENED
Fate introduces JERRY RAY to ALESTER CARSTAIRS when he crashes his airplane into the camp she is sharing with her roommate. She likes his pilot, DAN HARVEY, but Alester showers her with attention. Dan tries to win her, but when he proposes she tells him she does not believe in love but hopes to marry money. Jerry loses her job on Alester's account, and he gets her a place in a chorus. She works hard and Alester drives her to Atlantic City for the opening, but she angers him by refusing to attend a midnight chorus party. But she wins promotion to a special dance number. The second week of the show is in Boston and Alester insists on driving her there. But he delays starting and then stops at a notorious roadside house for dinner. Jerry begs him to hurry but before she can get him away, it is night and raining. Car trouble spoils her slim chance of reaching Boston on time. The Alester thinks of the airplane, but Dan refuses to go up on account of the weather. Alester stubbornly prepares for flight, and when Dan sees they are determined he takes the wheel and goes up in the storm. He runs into an electric storm. Tragedy threatens when lightning sets fire to a plane wing, but he gets the machine down in a safe landing. They catch a train on into Boston but arrive too late for rehearsal. The press agent wants to play up the story using Alester's name, but Jerry objects. They persuade him to tell the truth—featuring Jerry for show publicity and Dan for his bravery. By the time the show reaches New York, Jerry has become quite a finished dancer and Alester is more conscious than ever. He asks her to marry him—deciding to risk the family wrath. She begs him to wait before announcing an engagement and objects to going to a party at LEONTINE LEBANDY's but he insists. Dan comes to attend the show and Jerry calls him back stage for a visit. Alester finds them together and brutally informs Dan they are going to a party to announce their engagement, and invites him to go along. NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER XLVI Dan was plainly dumfounded by Jerry's words. She saw in his eyes a mixture of anger and struggle to take control of him, though she understood only that he was disturbed. He wheeled upon Alester and in a cutting voice asked him if it were true. "Are you taking Jerry to Leontine Lebandy's place?" he demanded. Alester did not answer him directly. He spoke to Jerry. "Please go and get dressed," he said. "I will wait for you in the car." "Wait a minute," Dan spoke up as Jerry started to leave them. Then, to Alester, "Surely you aren't in earnest? You can't take the girl you're going to marry out there." Alester's eyes shifted furtively, then settled upon Dan's face with a challenging defiance. "Well, are you coming?" he asked gratingly. Dan studied him at length before replying. He recognized a desperate bravado behind Alester's defiance. He knew that Alester was not there to be turned from his purpose—a purpose that held a menace. "All right," he said tersely. "I'll go." Jerry turned away without a word and hurried to the dressing room where she slipped into her new evening frock. She had thrilled to the purchase of the lovely satin creation, but tonight she did not give it a thought. Here makeup had been removed quickly, but now that she stood before her mirror, ready, except for the drop of perfume on her delicate earlobe, she was reluctant to return to Dan and Alester. "I'll wait here for Evelyn," she said to herself, and sat down to polish her hair. Evelyn joined her shortly "don't sit in here," she cried when she saw Jerry. "Run along to Alester. I'll be out in two minutes." "I'll help you," Jerry said, and began getting Evelyn's things ready. She handed her a folded towel to pin around her head and removed the top from the cold cream jar. "You won't have to ride with Alester and me," she said as she pushed the stack of tissue cleaning towels within Evelyn's reach. "There's someone to share the rumble seat with you." Evelyn's eyes had been closed, to permit the removal of the blue cream from their lids, but at a soft note in Jerry's voice she opened them and looked at her. "Who?" she said, and waited anxiously for the information. "Dan," was all the Evelyn said to Jerry. But to herself she added, "I know it!" Once when Jerry had gone home

Nothing happened on the way to the inn to indicate to her the state of mind under which her three companions were laboring. There had been a hurried greeting between herself and Dan and then a hasty departure. Upon their arrival they found the party in full flower. Guests were gathered at the tables. There was one, however, that was unoccupied. It was laden with costly blooms and sparkling glass. Leontine welcomed them in the hall and when they had left their wraps in the dressing room she led them to the reserved table and told them to find their seats. Evelyn saw with a sinking heart that the favors and place cards were dolls dressed as if they were common, holding bits of cardboard she leaned over to read what was written on one of them: "Miss Lebandy invites Miss Estelle Agnew to sit her and partake of the pre-nuptial feast she is giving in honor of Miss Jerry Ray and Mr. Alester Carstairs." Evelyn straightened and looked at Jerry. But the latter was standing before a table where Leontine had placed a special arrangement. Her eyes were downcast, staring at the significant decoration.

Evelyn moved on in search of her own card. A waiter was placing an extra chair for Dan. Shortly Evelyn found herself seated. She wondered how he got over this dead man that revealed nothing. Leontine had greeted him with no sign of displeasure as his unexpected arrival. Dan would have seemed to her a strange figure, but she was no longer sensitive over small matters. Leontine made a supreme effort to bring a festive spirit to the occasion. Her guests seemed to her to be the most perfect. She took up the new songs that she had learned and their friends. Jerry was frightened. Full realization of the meaning of her promise to Alester seemed to come to her here. And marriage—marriage was no longer a mere formality. It was a solemn vow that she was fully aware of at last. She could not touch the food before her, and only the mineral water that she had requested could she force down her dry throat. She had a queer sense that Dan or Evelyn had just divine her terror. Once she spilled a few drops of water on her gown. Leontine witnessed the little accident and smiled.

Soon afterward a waiter appeared at Jerry's elbow with a note on a silver salver. She glanced at Alester and saw that he likewise was receiving a message. She read the message. Leontine handed her and Alester to go upstairs during the next dance and receive in the privacy of her boudoir the gift she had prepared for them. Down the table Leontine turned to Jerry's intervention. "Miss Alester," she said, "has a beautiful looking . . . she smiled at him with serene mockery. Dan and Evelyn had not been dancing, but when the music started out again she jumped impatiently to her feet and exclaimed: "Let's dance. I can't sit still another instant!" Her voice was raised almost to shrillness with suppressed longing.

High Flight

teria. She knew now, beyond a question of doubt, that Jerry had got himself into a mess. The girl's face was white, and utterly devoid of its usual bright glow. It made Evelyn's heart ache to look at her.

"And she's such a quiet little soul," she thought she said to herself as Dan swung her into the rhythm of the dance. Actually she was speaking aloud, just barely escaping broken utterance.

"I can't see his head near— but made no reply. 'Oh, well,' Evelyn thought, realizing that he had caught what she had said, 'what's the difference?'

"What do you mean?" Dan asked as she remained silent.

"She made no attempt to evade," I mean that Jerry is just idiotic enough to stick to her word when she's already given it. If she finds out that she's made a horrible mistake."

"She's had plenty of time to make up her mind," Dan returned.

"I guess she knows what she's doing."

"I'm sure she didn't really know before tonight," Evelyn exclaimed.

"Don't forget that she's just an untrained kid who longed for the moon. Alister is the moon and the stars too in his world. You can't blame Jerry for being dazzled."

"I'll never forget anything about her," Dan replied miserably.

"Yes, I know," Evelyn said softly, "but don't say 'happen'— it might sound sappy, but I do believe that real love is ordained. Some of us can't escape it."

"Oh, get over it," Dan replied. "I've tried to."

"He looked across her shoulder at the table they had left and saw that Jerry was still there. He saw a crowd over the room, he did not see her among the dancers."

Evelyn felt him lean step and glanced up to catch him frowning.

"What's the matter?" she asked. "Jerry's not around," he said.

"I don't like it," he said. "I don't like it. To tell you the truth, Miss Starr, I've had a queer feeling about Alister all evening. He's not himself."

"I've noticed it, too," Evelyn admitted. "Do you suppose we ought to look for them?"

"Let's take a turn around the grounds," Dan suggested, and they walked over to one of the half open French doors that looked upon the garden.

"They did not go about stealthily, but they crept out the grounds thoroughly before starting back to the inn. There had been an interruption and another dance since they had come out. They could see the dancers through the French doors, and Jerry and Alister had not returned to join them.

"Let's sit here just a moment," Evelyn said as they neared a bench. "I'm not entirely sure that we should be trying to intrude into other people's affairs."

Dan did not sit down beside her. Instead he leaned against a pedestal that upheld a small Bacchus and touched a match to light a cigarette. As he tipped it away he glanced to glance his eyes upward.

Evelyn saw him stiffen. They were in the direct rays of an outside lamp, she could discern even the intensity of his gaze as he continued to stare at the upper part of the building.

"She turned her head and looked in the same direction. All that met her eyes was a lighted window. That couldn't be all that Dan had seen, she thought, for he was now running toward the inn and calling back over his shoulder for her to follow him.

Local demand remains slack, one or two of the larger firms buying most of the cotton. Basis is around 200 off for middling, 300 off for strict low, 400 off for strict good ordinary.

SUMMARY

Market up three to five points in New York trading, unchanged to three points in New Orleans trading. The opening was steady trading, slight gains but soon sold off of the issuance of a bearish estimate of the ginnings to Dec. 13 by the Fossick Bureau of Memphis. The bureau placed its figures at a total of 13,700,000 bales ginned or 708,000 bales for the period. Trading again was very light and the market was a dull, sluggish affair. The undertone, however, seems to be very strong and the smallest incentive causing a rally. We continue to advise buying on any break.

Two private estimates on the ginnings to Dec. 13 were issued today, the first, that of the Fossick Bureau, said 13,700,000 bales or 708,000 bales for the period and the second, that of a Chicago brokerage firm said 13,122,000 bales or 561,000 bales.

for the period. Ginnings to Dec. 13 last year were 12,074,100 bales and for the same period last year were 32,000 bales.

Liverpool cable, "Continued but cotton."

Manchester cable, "Encouraging both sales to China and South America. Improved turnover in yarns."

The New Orleans News Bureau wired at nine-thirty: "Cotton very steady. Weather over belt wet and cold and trade fears much cotton will be lost."

McCrory, Ark.—About 90 per cent of cotton spinning done. Not many weavels in this section.

Strington, Okla.—Picking and ginning of cotton about over. No plying.

Roseade, Miss.—Picking of cotton at an end but no new crop plying done. Heavy hibernation of weavels.

Livingston, Ala.—Cotton gins all shut down. Not much field work will be done until after the first of January.

Stanley, S. C.—Cotton nearly all picked and ginned. Soil too dry to plow.

The New Orleans and New York Cotton Exchanges will be closed on Tuesday, December 25 and Tuesday January 1.

Cotton on shipboard—New Orleans 44,368 vs. 46,424. Houston 23,281 bales vs. 33,416. Galveston 94,000 vs. 51,500.

New Orleans—Total spot cotton sales in southern markets yesterday 24,938 bales vs. 17,115 for season 4,822,767 bales vs. 3,384,439.

Exports of cotton—All ports thus far for this week 208,134 bales vs. 164,792. For season 4,325,333 bales vs. 3,570,906.

WEATHER

The weather map showed dry weather in extreme west of cotton belt and considerable rain elsewhere. At noon the western belt weather belt was mostly clear, the central belt generally fair and the eastern belt clear to cloudy. Forecast, Eastern: fair and somewhat colder, light frosts in some localities. Western: generally fair and continued cold. West Texas generally fair and continued cold, probably freezing in southeast portion Wednesday morning.

FT. WORTH LIVESTOCK

PORT WORTH, Dec. 18.—(AP)—An unusually light supply of cattle and calves was listed for today's trading, but they met with a rather indifferent demand and buyers were inclined to bid a bit lower on some classes. However, the total number listed was so light it did not fully develop the tone of the market. The tone of the market suggests that a normal supply would have found a lower close.

One car of steers included in the day's receipts. It was light in weight and rather common and sold at the noon hour.

Trading in bulls limited to a few old head that came as part of mixed loads with the common light, around 6.25 and the heavier Slaughter yearlings and heifers scarce. The common kind sold at 6.50@7.50. While one desirable trucked in yearlings sold at 13.50.

Even the supply of cows was light and consisted mostly of mixed loads. The canners and cutters were slow and unevenly lower in spots. The bulk of the sales around 5.00 on canners with a few at 4.50; cutters sold up to 5.50, while a few butchers, sold in the 6.00 range and one car of cows sold at 7.15 with package lots at 6.50 and a few choice cows at 9.25.

Hardly enough calves on hand to make a market and those here were rather common. Buyers, however, displayed little interest in them and bid a little lower. Cull calves sold mostly around 5.50. No good loads offered.

Early sales in the sheep division consisted of a few truck lambs at 13.00, other receipts consisted of feeder lambs and yearlings but unsold.

Hogs sold 5 to 10, quality considered, rail top 8.85, paid for 2 loads, truck top 8.55. Packing sows sold at 7.25 to 7.75 and bulk of the 175-225 pound averages at 8.00 to 8.85; bulk pigs sold around 6.50, or about in line with yesterday's decline.

CHICAGO, Dec. 18.—(AP)—Unaware that the United States government

HE "WILLED" . . . THAT THE CHRISTMAS CHECK SHOULD NEVER FAIL . . .

Christmas had always been a lovable weakness with him. How he loved it all . . . the tree, the candles, the presents, and the glowing table. The poor he never forgot . . . baskets of food and toys, he carried to fatherless tots and worn mothers. Thank Heaven his family should never want for food. Life Insurance, plenty, provided for that.

But would it provide for Christmas, . . . a real Christmas, without skipping? By Heaven he'd see about it! He did. A special policy for Christmas purposes only. They miss him. Money can't replace his loving presence, but it does make Christmas a little merrier . . . and their love for his memory deeper.

crop report issued this afternoon would prove bullish, most wheat traders believe. In the selling side of the market today. In this connection an increase of 9,061,000 bushels in the world's available stocks of wheat counted as a special influence tending to pull values down, and the close was at the day's bottom level.

A.—Further strength developed around the 11-market circuit in fat lambs; prices were steady to 25c higher; most points outside of Chicago in a strong to 25c higher basis; Chicago had a top of $14.75, while at Kansas City, St. Louis and St. Joseph $14.00 was realized. NEW YORK STOCKS

NEW YORK, Dec. 18.—(AP)—The stock market made substantial headway today in another quiet session reminiscent of midsummer. As most traders are marking time until after the holidays, specialists books were thin, and it was difficult to buy or sell except at substantial higher or lower prices.

Although bankers had generally predicted that the expected money stringency would make itself felt today, call money renewed at 7 per cent and again dropped to 6. This encouraged pool operations in the high priced specialties, and prompted accumulation of dividend-paying issues by investment trusts.

A wide assortment of issues advanced from 4 to 23 points, with copper and merchandising shares prominent in the upturn. Total sales aggregated 2,200,000 shares, and shade higher than yesterday's total. The Associated Press average price of 20 industrials advanced about 4 points cancelling the losses of the past two sessions, while the rails gained nearly a point.

The drop in the call money rate failed to inspire any ambitious undertakings, with 30-day time money at 8 1/4 per cent, the highest rate in years. Bankers explained that the abundance of call money was not surprising, in view of the credit resulting from the unexpected large government overdraft at the reserve banks, estimated at $250,000,000, in connection with the treasury refloating Saturday. The treasury will withdraw about $66,000,000 of its deposits tomorrow, and it is expected to pay off the entire overdraft within the next few days.

National Tea, one of the more volatile issues, shot up 23 points in a small turnover. Montgomery and Ward displayed more activity than at any time since the rights came off last week, mounting nearly 13 points to 128 3/4 but a fraction under the high price for the present stock. The rights sold up 25 points to 220.

National Bellas Hess touched a new peak at 185, up 10, and Associated Dry Goods and Sears Roebuck closed about 4 points higher.

Strength of the copper was accompanied by predictions that the price would soon reach 17 cents a pound, as a result of the heavy demands from the electrical trade. Greene Cananea touched a new peak at 174 7/8, up about 11, and closed at 172.

Automotive issues were accumulated in the expectation of the upturn in this group that normally precedes the automobile show. Chrysler and Packard gained about 3 points, and General Motors nearly 2. Pierce Arrow touched a new high at 38. New York traction went forward on announcement that Charles E. Hughes had been retained as counsel in the interborough's case before the supreme court for a 7-cent fare.

Columbia Carbon, Detroit Edison, and McCall Corporation mounted 7 to 12 points to record high prices, and Wright Aero jumped nearly 13 points. Standard Sanitary Manufacturing lost about 4 points in profit taking and By-Products Coke, and Eastman Kodak were under pressure. Gloss Sheffield Steel lost 7 points.

Foreign exchanges were generally higher reflecting the buying of holiday remittances for friends abroad. Sterling cables mounted more than 1-8 of a cent to $4.85 5-16. Japanese Yen, however, practically cancelled yesterday's gain of 20 points.
