Crews begin removing fire debris

PASADENA (AP) — Crews and heavy equipment were brought in overnight to begin clearing tons of charred rubble at a Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant where 23 South Texas workers apparently died in a series of explosions and fires.

"They have moved in equipment overnight and they are beginning the process of searching for the missing," said Dick Robinson, Phillips' director of community affairs. "It's liable to be a slow process, but they are working in that area now and we'll take whatever time it takes to find them."

Robinson indicated it was unlikely that anyone in the debris is still alive.

"We always hope for the best but..." he trailed off.

Miles of twisted strings of pipe are piled haphazardly around the plant, blackened by Monday's accident. Some buildings are gone, and eight giant reactors now look like huge, battered tin cans.

"Any employee in that wreckage probably didn't survive," said Jere Smith, Phillips' director of public relations, looking on the scene.

Two bodies have been found so far and 21 other workers were still missing, he said. Officials at the company's Bartlesville, Okla., headquarters late Tuesday released a list of 19 missing Phillips employees and said four contract workers were also missing.

Robinson said the two fatalities are included in the list of the missing employees, but the bodies have not yet been identified.

Of the 124 injured in the blast, 35 remained hospitalized Tuesday, with as many as six people in critical condition. Robinson said doctors would be reporting to Phillips officials later today with updates on the employees' conditions.

The plant, which produces 4.5 million pounds a day of plastics used in milk jugs and grocery sacks, exploded in a series of blasts just after 1 p.m. Monday, sending metal and concrete debris flying as far as six miles.

Officials don't know yet exactly what caused the explosions, which stemmed from a leaking chemical reactor. At least two government agencies have joined Phillips in assessing the damage.

"We're going to do a thorough investigation — not only in procedures, not only in systems, but in training the employees had to assure ourselves that every precaution was taken," said Gilbert Saulter, regional administrator for the Occupation Safety and Health Administration.

But union officials say they are questioning work schedules that may have left less experienced or tired employees on the job.

"We feel like the number of hours that have been put in, particularly by some maintenance classifications, and the contractors — the number of them that are in there working and the lack of training on their part — it is a safety measure" that may have contributed to the blast, said W.T. Walker, representative of the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union Local 4-227.

Walker said many of the contract employees "don't have the skills necessary to maintain this kind of operation."

Meanwhile, authorities said it will be days and perhaps weeks before the missing workers are found.

Study challenges crime theory

Burglar Bumps

Homeowners can take measures to 'slow' theft

By PATRICK CRIMMINS
Staff Writer

Homeowners can reduce the chance of being burglarized by outfitting their property with "burglar bumps," which may slow thieves the way speed bumps slow traffic, according to researchers.

Paul Cromwell and James N. Olson, professors at the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), researched 30 active Midland burglars over a two-year period. Results of the $189,000 study, funded by the U.S. Justice Department, were released today.

Researchers found traditional crime prevention techniques, such as giving your home the "lived-in" look while you are away, work. But others, such as tall privacy fences, do nothing more than protect the burglar at work.

The study found burglaries can be prevented, or at least discouraged, if:

■ Risk to the burglar is increased.

■ The difficulty of getting into the home is increased.

■ The gain to the burglar is decreased.

■ The home looks lived in.

The most effective way to repel burglars is the "nosy neighbor" network. One Midland burglar, a 23-year-old woman, told researchers she feared most older inquisitive residents. Neighborhoods with many old or retired persons were on her "no-hit" list.

"These people are nosy," she said. "They watch out for strangers and they call police. I stay away from neighborhoods where old people live."

Children — who are territorial and will tend to ask a stranger what he is up to — and noisy, barking dogs also scare burglars, she told researchers.

Home security systems, or the appearance of a security system, are effective. If the system is too expensive, researchers recommend placing stickers that warn a system is in place.

Neighborhood Watch doesn't work.

Drug addiction may not cause burglary.

The fear of prison does deter criminals.

Most of the stolen property in Midland is bought by otherwise law-abiding citizens.

Those are just some of the conclusions from a two-year, $189,000 study of Midland burglars that challenges many widely accepted theories of burglary here, which investigators say is the area's number one crime. The research was funded by the U.S. Department of Justice.

Preliminary results of the study, authored by professors James N. Olson and Paul Cromwell of the University of Texas of the Permian Basin (UTPB), were released today at a luncheon sponsored by the Midland Crime Prevention Commission and the Downtown Lions Club.

A panel discussion followed at Midland Center.

The full examination, expected to be published in a few months, was based on hundreds of hours of interviews with 30 Midland burglars, each of whom was paid $50 for their cooperation. Some of the criminals told questioners they break in to as many as 2,000 Midland homes annually. All of them use drugs, mainly heroin and cocaine, and all abuse alcohol.

The research, designed to discover what prompts a burglar to break the law, was done this way: 300 Midland residences that had been broken into were compared to 300 with no record of burglary.

Cromwell, a criminologist and former head of the state parole board, and Olson, a professor of psychology, then compiled the information to determine what "cues" in neighborhoods attracted, or in some cases repelled, the burglars. It is believed to be the first research of its kind in the nation, according to Cromwell.

Surprisingly, drugs do not cause a person to break the law the first time, but are part of a vicious cycle of addiction, the research shows.

MISD rejects evangelist's tract plea

By DAVID MORRIS

Midland secondary students can have prayer meetings on campus, but a local evangelist can't distribute religious literature at school football games.

Trustees voted 5-1 to deny the Rev. Freddy Haltom's request that he be allowed to pass out Christian literature at sporting events on school district property, at their meeting Tuesday night.

Board member Jim Builta cast the lone vote in support of Haltom. Trustee Adela Marmolejo was not at Tuesday's meeting.

"I just don't think he was doing anything harmful," Builta said. "He was doing more good than harm."

Board member Larry Rusk said the board needed to remain neutral on religious matters. He told Haltom that allowing him to distribute his literature might be considered "an endorsement of your faith."

Board President James Fuller told Haltom, "I am personally opposed to the distribution of religious literature on school property ... The safe zone would be to remain where you are now — off campus."

Haltom said he had been distributing his literature at football games for five or six years. Confrontations this year with security guards prompted him to go before the board to make a formal permission request, he said. He said he wanted to be "up front" with the board.

Aftershock of numbers saturates quake area

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Recovery advanced into its second week today for an earthquake-rattled region feeling an aftershock of numbers — a stronger Richter reading, a 50-50 chance of a new jolt and an infusion of relief money.

Nine people remain missing, and the death toll from the Oct. 17 temblor climbed to 63 with a coroner's discovery of a 39th victim from double-decked Interstate 880 in Oakland.

The state Office of Emergency Services reported today that 13,892 people have been left homeless, nearly double the previous figure.

The first damage claim against the state was filed by two motorists injured in the collapse.

Zsa Zsa Gabor, Jim Bakker sentenced

Three days in jail, several fines assessed

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — The law slapped back at Zsa Zsa Gabor with a three-day jail term for slapping a policeman, ending a circuslike case that left the actress unrepentant and her husband fuming.

"Yes, I'm upset," said Miss Gabor's eighth husband, Frederick von Anhalt, as he stormed down the steps of the courthouse after Tuesday's sentencing. "I will ask the court if I can go to jail instead of my wife."

Miss Gabor, a one-time Hungarian beauty queen believed to be in her mid-60s to early 70s, snickered, smiled and made quips as Beverly Hills Municipal Judge Charles Rubin announced the sentence, peppering his statements with rebukes and warnings.

Fraud charges result in 45-year prison term

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — A judge sent evangelist Jim Bakker directly to jail to start a 45-year sentence for defrauding followers of millions of dollars, saying people were "sick of being saps for money-grubbing preachers."

U.S. District Judge Robert Potter on Tuesday also fined the defrocked PTL founder $500,000, concluding that Bakker had continued to milk the faithful even after his conviction for overselling memberships in a Christian vacation retreat.

The 49-year-old television evangelist left the courtroom in leg irons and handcuffs on his way to federal prison in Alabama. Depending on the outcome of an appeal, he will serve at least 10 years before being eligible for parole.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 60 and winds will be from the south at 10-20 mph.

Thursday is expected to be partly cloudy and cooler with the high reaching only into the upper 70s and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Winds will continue from the south at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 86 was six degrees cooler than the record high of 92 set for that date in 1933. The overnight low of 53 was 19 degrees warmer than the record low of 34 set for this date in 1955.

STATE

Dense fog formed in Southeast Texas and along the upper coast early today as low level moisture continued to pour into the state from the Gulf of Mexico.

Dense fog advisories were issued during the pre-dawn hours for the Galveston area and for the Port Arthur-Orange area. There were patches of dense fog in the San Antonio area.

Isolated showers were reported offshore in the Gulf of Mexico south and east of Brownsville.

Forecasts called for isolated to widely scattered thunderstorms to spread across most of West Texas tonight and Thursday. The rest of the state will have partly to mostly cloudy skies tonight and Thursday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the mid 40s in the Panhandle and mountains of Southwest Texas to the lower 70s along the coast.

Highs Thursday will be mostly in the 80s except in the areas of rain in West Texas where readings will be in the 70s and in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas where readings will be in the lower 90s.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the 40s in northern portions of the Panhandle and in the mountains of Southwest Texas to mid 70s along the coast in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 45 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 75 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 59 at Amarillo, 63 at Wichita Falls, 66 at Fort Worth, Waco, Austin and San Antonio, 65 at Houston, 68 at Brownsville, 64 at San Angelo, 56 at Lubbock.

Builta said, "He would have been better off if he had remained incognito."

Board member George Staley said, "I would be opposed to anyone distributing literature at football games. Period.

"The rationale behind it was simply that if we allowed him to do it, we would open it up for anyone of any persuasion to do the same."

Midland Federation of Teachers President Sam Manning rebuked Haltom's request.

"I don't want you handing my child at a sports event any literature promoting your particular brand of religion," he said.

Rusk said the board decision does not necessarily keep Haltom from talking to students at football games. He said the board voted strictly on Haltom's request to distribute literature.

"Anything else that he does is really a separate and different consideration that would be subject to board consideration if it was brought before the board," Rusk said.

Board member Ken Morrison said school policy prohibits outside groups and individuals from distributing literature on school grounds without permission.

Some students, such as athletes, drill teamers and band members, are required to attend athletic functions, Morrison said.

"If it's mandatory and required, then they should not be subject to this solicitation or evangelism," Morrison said.

Haltom said he was disappointed at the board's decision but not upset.

"They're just doing what they think is right," Haltom said. "I personally feel it's a public function — it's open to my right to distribute literature."

Haltom said he would continue to pass out his pamphlets, which outline a plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, across the street from the football stadium and in nearby parking lots.

Meanwhile, he plans to consult an attorney about the board's decision. If his lawyer agrees, Haltom said, "We would probably re-contact the board ... and see if we could have another hearing to reconsider."

In other action Tuesday, the board authorized the district to begin the search for an architect for a proposed new junior high school. Long-range plans call for construction of the new school by 1992.

"To do that, we've got to start now," said Wilson Heidelberg, auxiliary services director.

Superintendent Joe Baressi told the board that although the final decision to build has not been made, advance planning must be done to determine costs and assure completion of the school by 1992.

PREVENT

"Only the most professional burglar will take on a house with a burglar alarm," the study says. "It is not necesarry that your home be burglar-proof, only that the would-be burglar perceive it to be more risky than another potential target."

Security systems and dogs were found to be the two factors most often cited by the 30 burglars in their decisions not to break into a home.

Researchers also found that privacy fences are invaluable — to the burglar.

Most of the homes studied in Midland were found with a wood or masonry fence, six to eight feet high enclosing the back yard. According to the study, burglars love the fences.

"Once I'm over the fence, I own the house," said one of the burglars. "No one can see me and I can take my time."

Researchers recommend replacing privacy fences with a chain link enclosure or lowering fences to no more than four feet high.

Deadbolts and metal door jambs were found to be effective in slowing or thwarting the burglar's entrance into a home.

"Most burglars will not take the extra time and risk in defeating a quality deadbolt lock installed on a metal door in a metal frame ... if it takes more than two minutes to get in, forget it," the researchers found.

Locks should also be installed on windows, the study found.

Despite the emphasis on locks, the burglars reported they were often not used: in more than half of the homes they entered, doors and windows were left unlocked.

Burglars are also fond of open garage doors, in fact many cruise streets looking for open garages.

One burglar said: "On Saturday morning I drive around 'til I see some guy mowing his yard. I wait until he moves around to the back yard and I hit the garage then. He don't think about somebody robbing him while he's in his own back yard."

Invitations to burglars — such as wearing or displaying jewelry, furs and firearms to delivery persons, salesmen, or repairmen — should also be avoided. Some burglars also read wedding announcements and burglarize the home during the ceremony, researchers found.

The most important anti-burglary tool is the "illusion of occupancy," since 99 percent of burglars will avoid an occupied residence. Traditional advice, like having someone pick up mail and newspapers, is good advice "but it is not sufficient," the study found.

"Burglars look for lawns that are not mowed, the absence of the boat or cars from the driveway, and lights, particularly outdoor lights, kept on all day and all night," Olson and Cromwell found. "Closed windows and air conditioners not running on a very hot day are sure signs tha the occupant is not at home. The extra electric bill to keep some appliances running while you are gone is almost always less costly than a burglary."

The burglars also suggested these tips while away from home:

- Install a telephone answering maching that answers within two rings and tells callers you are out but will be right back.
- Don't put your name on a mailbox or anywhere outside the residence.
- Install inexpensive timers and use them for interior and exterior lights.
- A radio or television set should also be connected to a timer so that it can be barely heard through a door or window.
- Leave a car in the driveway.
- Use your neighbors. Ask them to visit your home twice a day, once in the morning and again at dusk.
- Install outdoor floodlights.

The study also found that the location of a home or apartment is important. Burglars like corner homes and apartments because of the number of escape routes, and avoid circular streets and cul-de-sacs for the same reason.

Houses near main thoroughfares, vacant homes or lots, parking lots, commercial businesses, schools, or parks are also more vulnerable, the burglars told researchers.

BAKKER

Prosecutors said the man who founded the once mighty PTL religious empire raised thousands of dollars since his Oct. 5th conviction and needed to be imprisoned to stop him from using TV and the mails to raise more.

"He's able to walk out of this courtroom today and continue to perpetuate this fraud," Assistant U.S. Attorney Jerry Miller told the judge. "He hasn't blinked."

Potter read a letter that Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, mailed last month from their new TV ministry in Orlando, Fla., asking 300 supporters to send in $1,000 apiece to alleviate a financial crisis.

"Those of us who do have a religion are sick of being saps for money-grubbing preachers and priests," Potter said. "Worst of all, it appears that Mr. Bakker feels he was deserving of his gains from the little people who sent in their savings."

Potter refrained from ordering Bakker to make restitution to his victims, saying that issue needed to be resolved in bankruptcy court.

Bakker's fall from power began in 1987 with revelations about a sexual encounter with former church secretary Jessica Hahn, who received hush money, leading to the unraveling of the ministry.

"I'm deeply sorry for those I have hurt," Bakker said before sentencing. "I have sinned. But never in my life did I intend to defraud anyone."

Prosecutors didn't accept his apology.

"This man is a con man, a common criminal," said Miller. "He's ready, willing and able to pick it up where he left it off. He's ready to go back to the henhouse."

Bakker stood and stared straight ahead as the sentence was read. Potter then sent him to the medium-security federal prison at Talledega, Ala., where he arrived late Tuesday.

Warden Don Southerland said Bakker was to spend the night in a cell with another inmate, and remain there a few weeks before being assigned to another institution.

Defense attorney Harold Bender had asked that Bakker be freed on bond pending an appeal. But Potter said he posed a substantial flight risk.

"He has supporters who think he can do no wrong and who say they are willing to do anything for him," Potter said. "I believe them."

Bakker's 19-year-old daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, was led sobbing from the courtroom. Mrs. Bakker did not attend the sentencing.

Bakker was convicted of 23 counts of fraud and one count of conspiracy in an indictment that charged him with diverting $3.7 million in ministry finances to finance his lavish lifestyle out of the $158 million sent him by followers.

Bakker had faced a maximum sentence of 120 years, but the judge consolidated the 24 counts to nine and sentenced Bakker to five years on each. Potter, known as "Maximum Bob," had given stiff sentences in the convictions of three top Bakker aides, Richard Dortch and brothers David and James Taggart. The three cooperated with the government in exchange for lightened sentences.

BURGLARY

"We were unable to locate a non-drug using burglar in Midland," the study said. "Proceeds of burglary were used to buy drugs and drugs were used to reduce the anxiety and fear burglars experience when committing their crimes. Most burglars committed their first burglary before they used drugs for the first time. However, after the cycle of drugs and crime begins, drugs and crime become inextricably interrelated aHd the influence of one on the other cannot be sorted out."

Most burglars are high when they commit their break-ins, "primarily to give them courage to do the crime. Many believe, however, that drugs make them better burglars by enhancing their hearing, eyesight, and 'speeding them up'," according to the study.

Olson and Cromwell also found that the burglars don't appear to need a minimum amount of drugs per day — which contradicts investigators who say a voracious appetite for drugs is the reason they steal.

"We found that addicts easily control their intake of drugs," the researchers say. "Addicts require what they can get each day."

That discovery means "situational" crime prevention — locks, dogs, alarms, neighborhood watch programs, and security patrols — may work without necessarily simply driving the burglar to another neighborhood, the researchers say.

The most popular program among Midland's crime prevention officers is neighborhood watch, but according to the study it is no more than an "excellent" concept.

"Watchfulness tends to decline after the first few months," the study says. "Burglars are aware of this and are emphatic in stating that, as practiced, neighborhood watch is ineffective."

Researchers point out to defenders of the program that over the study's two-year period, the study participants "drove and walked almost every street in the city," at all hours but were never reported to police as suspicious.

The burglars also ignored police patrols, and are apparently aware of that department's manpower shortage.

The study blasts Midlanders who provide a ready market for stolen merchandise. Researchers interviewed two "fences" and found at least 60 percent of ripped-off televisions, radios, appliances, lawnmowers, and other goods are bought by otherwise honest citizens.

Cromwell and Olson also surveyed 100 Midlanders, and were surprised to find that 65 percent had been approached to buy or had bought stolen goods, and 40 percent knew someone who had.

Because of chronic overcrowding in the Texas Department of Corrections, inmates receive liberal "good time" which often slashes terms to as much as a tenth. Therefore, prison — at least in Texas — is thought by officers and prosecutors to have questionable deterrent effect.

But the UTPB study challenges that assumption, and its conclusion clearly values prison sentences over probation.

"We concluded that once a burglar becomes known to police, he is more likely to be a suspect in future crimes and is more likely to be arrested and charged for his burglaries. As he continues in a criminal career and eventually serves one term in prison, the deterrent effect of prison becomes greater," the study says.

Researchers disagree with conventional thinking that crime cannot be prevented, but can only be displaced, or "chased" from one neighborhood to another.

Despite drug addiction, socio-economic factors, or "cultural deprivation," crime can be prevented, according to the new examination of burglars.

Investigators and politicians — including President Bush when he revealed the nation's drug policy — have linked drugs to crime. Police Chief Richard Czech and Sheriff Gary Painter have said as much as 95 percent of Midland's crime woes can be attributed to drug use.

But the UTPB study downplays the role of drugs, suggesting that narcotics do not necessarily cause a person to burglarize.

"Except for extreme cases of imminent drug withdrawal, addicts will be deterred by the same techniques as deter other burglars," the researchers write. When spotted, Midland burglars often will shoplift, borrow money, or sell something they legitimately own.

"Drugs don't cause crime, they facilitate it and reinforce it," the study contends.

Community-based correction programs, such as probation and parole, have become popular in Texas because of state prison overcrowding and a continually increasing inmate population. But such programs do not work, the researchers say.

"Sanctions less severe than 3-5 years of imprisonment have no effect on crime rates and imprisonment of 5 years or more has a significant impact on recidivism," or repeat offenders, the study says.

Burglars will turn to shoplifting, a misdemeanor, or may give up crime if the risk of getting caught and punished is great enough, the study says.

"The criminal justice system must provide a predictable chance of discovery and apprehension, as well as significant costs to the offender if convicted," Cromwell and Olson say.

"It does neither."

QUAKE

In Congress today, the Senate was expected to approve a House-passed bill that would send $2.85 billion to Northern California. Damage estimates have been set at $7.1 billion, making it the costliest natural disaster in U.S. history.

"We were hit by 10 times the amount of explosive power of World War II, including the atomic bomb," said U.S. Rep. Nancy Pelosi, who represents San Francisco's hard-hit Marina district.

Santa Cruz County got a $356,460 check from state Controller Gray Davis on Tuesday. The check is 75 percent of the money the county already has spent on earthquake response.

Church bells tolled at 5:04 p.m., one week to the minute after the quake. It packed more punch than first thought, according to the U.S. Geological Survey, which upped the magnitude to 7.1 from 6.9 on the Richter scale after checking 18 seismic stations around the world.

■ Santa Cruz baby born into shaky world; Related stories — 7A

The homeless figure climbed after rain forced many into shelters, where county officials are compiling counts of those displaced, according to OES spokeswoman Nancy Sutton.

A geologist warned that because of the recent rain, huge sections of land in Santa Cruz County cracked by earthquake fissures are in danger of sliding this winter and burying hundreds of homes.

"What's happening today is frightening to geologists who have looked at it," Professor Gary Griggs of the University of California, Santa Cruz, told county supervisors Tuesday. "I think there's a cause for alarm, but not instant alarm until we've had more rain."

Jumpy residents also were told that there is a 50-50 chance of a 5.0 aftershock during the next two months, and there is an 11 percent shot of a 6.0 shock. A 5.0 Richter reading can cause considerable damage; 6.0 can be severe, especially to buildings already weakened.

An aftershock of 4.5 was registered at 6:27 p.m. Tuesday, the latest of about 3,500 aftershocks since Oct. 17.

"I'm still shook up. Every time I hear a noise I jump," said Ela Mae Douglas, owner of a soul food cafe near I-880.

GABOR

"Now you laugh," the judge said, before lecturing Miss Gabor about the 25,000 Americans who die yearly in alcohol-related accidents. Among Miss Gabor's misdemeanor convictions was driving with an open container of alcohol.

"The law applies to everyone, whether they are rich or poor and whether they are famous or not," Rubin said before sentencing her. "In the absence of extremely mitigating circumstances ... if you strike a cop, you go to jail."

Along with the jail term, the judge ordered Miss Gabor to pay $12,937.50 in fines and restitutions and to perform 120 hours of community service in a women's homeless shelter, where she may not talk about her case or give media interviews. Miss Gabor, who returned home after the verdict, was given until Dec. 29 to complete the jail sentence.

She also was ordered to be interviewed by a psychiatrist and to refrain from driving until she gets her real age on her driver's license. During the trial, Miss Gabor claimed the license was stolen and altered by someone else.

The judge repeatedly attacked Miss Gabor's demeanor inside and outside of court, saying she was "milking this case for publicity" at the expense of the taxpayers who paid for the trial.

"She has demonstrated an attitude continually of contempt for law and order and these proceedings, without a hint of remorse or contrition of any kind," the judge said. "And that is very relevant to sentencing."

As Miss Gabor left the courtroom, she disputed the judge's contention that she not only slapped a police officer, but the American people by her statements out of court that the United States was worse than the Soviet Union or Nazi Germany.

"I'm a very good American. I love America," she said. "Why should I slap the face of America?"

Miss Gabor, star of such B-films as "Queen of Outer Space" and "Picture Mommy Dead," faced a maximum of 18 months in jail, and the judge warned that she could get more jail time if she violated her parole.

The tempestuous celebrity slapped Officer Paul Kramer on June 14 after he stopped her Rolls-Royce convertible. The actress testified she instinctively struck Kramer after he roughed her up. Kramer overreacted, she said, and used undue force in arresting her.

Besides the alcohol offense, a jury convicted Miss Gabor on Sept. 29 of battery on a police officer and driving without a valid driver's license. She was acquitted of failing to obey an officer. All the charges were misdemeanors.

"When she was first convicted, we felt that the police department and Officer Kramer were vindicated," said Lt. Robert Curtis, a police spokesman. "We certainly feel that this (sentence) is even further vindication."

The trial drew more than 100 reporters, camera crews and photographers from throughout the world.

The sentencing attracted a Zsa Zsa Gabor look-a-like, a man who wrote a poem for the trial, several people wearing "Fry Zsa Zsa" buttons, a man with "John 3:16" on a T-shirt and numerous tourists with pocket cameras.

Gramm considering '96 presidential race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Phil Gramm says he's considering a race for the White House in 1996, as he nears the end of his second term in the Senate.

"I don't think that anybody who ever runs for city council didn't ultimately think about running for president," said Gramm, a conservative first-term senator from Texas who is is up for re-election in 1990.

"If I ever heard the call (to the White House), I wouldn't be afraid to answer the call," Gramm, 46, said in an interview Tuesday.

Gramm said he remembers the day he was sworn into Congress for the first time, on Jan. 3, 1979, and leaning over to fellow Texas Rep. Kent Hance, who said: "'Reckon how many people standing here will be speaker of the House?' And I said, 'Kent, the people standing here think they're going to be president.'"

"I have great ambitions to serve America and to do things that I believe important to the working men and women of the country," said Gramm, who was first elected to Congress from College Station as a Democrat. Gramm later resigned from the House, switched parties, and was sent back to the House in a special election.

Gramm said he nominated George Bush for president at the 1988 Republican convention and "I meant for that nomination to last for eight years, not four, and I'll be out all over the country in 1992 campaigning for George Bush for president."

But by 1996, if re-elected to the Senate next year, Gramm would have been in Congress for 18 years. "By that point I hope to have learned this job," he said.

"I don't know what I would be looking at in 1996. It's an awfully long way away, and I have to be re-elected and I don't take that for granted," Gramm said.

Gramm's only announced opponent in 1990 is Democratic state Sen. Hugh Parmer of Fort Worth.

"But in terms of 1996, that is so far off, I certainly hadn't made any plans and hadn't thought about it. In my position, it's dangerous to be making jokes about it," Gramm said.

"Anybody's flattered when somebody writes about them possibly running for the nation's highest office, but I'm a long way from thinking about it, much less being a candidate."

Gramm said that after a newspaper columnist in Texas suggested that people ought to think of him as a candidate in 1996, he told The Dallas Morning News at a breakfast Monday with the paper's Washington bureau that "maybe I ought to start thinking about it myself."

The newspaper reported Tuesday that Gramm's 1990 re-election bid may be a forerunner to a race for the presidency in 1996.

Gramm said in Tuesday's interview with The Associated Press that he made that comment "in jest" and added: "I have not taken that breakfast as an opportunity to announce my candidacy for president."

Judge accused of conspiring in scheme to defraud HUD

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas judge has been accused of conspiring to defraud the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development by allegedly participating in a 1985 scheme to illegal obtain loans for residential real estate.

The misdemeanor charge names County Court-at-Law Judge Glenn R. Snyder and was filed last Friday with U.S. District Judge Robert B. Maloney.

The charge alleges that Snyder agreed to be the closing attorney in a number of real estate transactions in which the seller had secured HUD-insured loans fraudulently and claims Snyder submitted documents to HUD that falsely represented the transactions.

Charges against other participants in the conspiracy could follow, Assistant U.S. Attorney Lynn Hastings said.

Snyder, who was elected to office in 1986, could not be reached for comment Tuesday, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Ms. Hastings said the scheme involved inducing people to act as buyers of properties that they would immediately relinquish to others. The buyers, she said, would acquire HUD-insured loans with the assurance that they would not have to pay them back. The real estate agents involved agreed to pay the buyers for their role in the conspiracy, she said.

There is no reason to believe any HUD employees were involved in the scheme, Ms. Hastings said.

Snyder will probably be arraigned next week. He faces maximum penalty of a year in prison and a fine of $100,000 if he is convicted of the misdemeanor charge.

STATE IN BRIEF

Town to vote on incorporation

ROUND MOUNTAIN (AP) — This historic Blanco County community will have an election on whether it should incorporate as a city and claim a percentage of admission fees for a slated $35 million horse racing track.

Sixty-three of the proposed city's 214 residents signed a petition to require the election, Blanco County Judge Charles Scott said. If incorporation is approved, an alderman election will be Jan. 25.

As a city, Round Mountain would get part of the admission fees charged at the race track, which is to open in March 1991.

Based on projected daily attendance of 9,750 during 44 race days, an incorporated Round Mountain would get $21,450 as its share.

"Ever since the dawning about the thoughts of the race track at Longhorn Downs, the formation of Round Mountain as an incorporated town has been on the citizenry's mind," said Will Moursund, an attorney who drew up the incorporation petition.

Moursund, secretary-treasurer of Longhorn Downs, said incorporation could stave off moves by other cities to annex Round Mountain, which is 45 miles west of Austin.

He said the proposed city is expected to get enough from sales tax, the track fees and other fees so no city property taxes would be necessary.

Brooks 'feeling better'

WASHINGTON (HNS) — Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, was reported to be "feeling better" Tuesday at Bethesda Naval Hospital where he is undergoing tests to determine the cause of severe abdominal pains.

Brooks was stricken Sunday night while enroute to Washington from Houston and asked his wife to drive him to the hospital from the airport.

Marcie Murphy, a member of Brooks' staff, said, "The doctors are still testing. They must be keeping him pretty busy because he hasn't been on the telephone."

Brooks, 66, is expected to remain hospitalized for several days for observation and evaluation of tests.

The senior member of the Texas congressional delegation, Brooks is chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Skies will be fair tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. The low will be near 60 and winds will be from the south at 10-20 mph.

Thursday is expected to be partly cloudy and cooler with the high reaching only into the upper 70s and a 20 percent chance of thunderstorms. Winds will continue from the south at 10-20 mph.

Tuesday's high of 86 was six degrees cooler than the record high of 92 set for that date in 1933. The overnight low of 53 was 19 degrees warmer than the record low of 34 set for this date in 1955.

STATE

Dense fog formed in Southeast Texas and along the upper coast early today as low level moisture continued to pour into the state from the Gulf of Mexico.

Dense fog advisories were issued during the pre-dawn hours for the Galveston area and for the Port Arthur-Orange area. There were patches of dense fog in the San Antonio area.

Isolated showers were reported offshore in the Gulf of Mexico south and east of Brownsville.

Forecasts called for isolated to widely scattered thunderstorms to spread across most of West Texas tonight and Thursday. The rest of the state will have partly to mostly cloudy skies tonight and Thursday.

Lows tonight will be mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the mid 40s in the Panhandle and mountains of Southwest Texas to the lower 70s along the coast.

Highs Thursday will be mostly in the 80s except in the areas of rain in West Texas where readings will be in the 70s and in the Big Bend area of Southwest Texas where readings will be in the lower 90s.

Early morning temperatures were mostly in the 50s and 60s, ranging from the 40s in northern portions of the Panhandle and in the mountains of Southwest Texas to mid 70s along the coast in South Texas. Extremes ranged from 45 at Marfa in the Davis Mountains to 75 at Corpus Christi.

Other early morning temperatures around the state included 59 at Amarillo, 63 at Wichita Falls, 66 at Fort Worth, Waco, Austin and San Antonio, 65 at Houston, 68 at Brownsville, 64 at San Angelo, 56 at Lubbock.

MISD

Builta said, "He would have been better off if he had remained incognito."

Board member George Staley said, "I would be opposed to anyone distributing literature at football games. Period.

"The rationale behind it was simply that if we allowed him to do it, we would open it up for anyone of any persuasion to do the same."

Midland Federation of Teachers President Sam Manning rebuked Haltom's request.

"I don't want you handing my child at a sports event any literature promoting your particular brand of religion," he said.

Rusk said the board decision does not necessarily keep Haltom from talking to students at football games. He said the board voted strictly on Haltom's request to distribute literature.

"Anything else that he does is really a separate and different consideration that would be subject to board consideration if it was brought before the board," Rusk said.

Board member Ken Morrison said school policy prohibits outside groups and individuals from distributing literature on school grounds without permission.

Some students, such as athletes, drill teamers and band members, are required to attend athletic functions, Morrison said.

"If it's mandatory and required, then they should not be subject to this solicitation or evangelism," Morrison said.

Haltom said he was disappointed at the board's decision but not upset.

"They're just doing what they think is right," Haltom said. "I personally feel it's a public function — it's open to my right to distribute literature."

Haltom said he would continue to pass out his pamphlets, which outline a plan of salvation through Jesus Christ, across the street from the football stadium and in nearby parking lots.

Meanwhile, he plans to consult an attorney about the board's decision. If his lawyer agrees, Haltom said, "We would probably re-contact the board ... and see if we could have another hearing to reconsider."

In other action Tuesday, the board authorized the district to begin the search for an architect for a proposed new junior high school. Long-range plans call for construction of the new school by 1992.

"To do that, we've got to start now," said Wilson Heidelberg, auxiliary services director.

Superintendent Joe Baressi told the board that although the final decision to build has not been made, advance planning must be done to determine costs and assure completion of the school by 1992.

"Only the most professional burglar will take on a house with a burglar alarm," the study says. "It is not necesarry that your home be burglar-proof, only that the woul' be burglar perceive it to be more risky than another potential target."

Security systems and dogs were found to be the two factors most often cited by the 30 burglars in their decisions not to break into a home.

Researchers also found that privacy fences are invaluable — to the burglar.

Most of the homes studied in Midland were found with a wood or masonry fence, six to eight feet high enclosing the back yard. According to the study, burglars love the fences.

"Once I'm over the fence, I own the house," said one of the burglars. "No one can see me and I can take my time."

Researchers recommend replacing privacy fences with a chain link enclosure or lowering fences to no more than four feet high.

Deadbolts and metal door jambs were found to be effective in slowing or thwarting the burglar's entrance into a home.

"Most burglars will not take the extra time and risk in defeating a quality deadbolt lock installed on a metal door in a metal frame ... if it takes more than two minutes to get in, forget it," the researchers found.

Locks should also be installed on windows, the study found.

Despite the emphasis on locks, the burglars reported they were often not used: in more than half of the homes they entered, doors and windows were left unlocked.

Burglars are also fond of open garage doors, in fact many cruise streets looking for open garages.

One burglar said: "On Saturday morning I drive around 'til I see some guy mowing his yard. I wait until he moves around to the back yard and I hit the garage then. He don't think about somebody robbing him while he's in his own back yard."

Invitations to burglars — such as wearing or displaying jewelry, furs and firearms to delivery persons, salesmen, or repairmen — should also be avoided. Some burglars also read wedding announcements and burglarize the home during the ceremony, researchers found.

The most important anti-burglary tool is the "illusion of occupancy," since 99 percent of burglars will avoid an occupied residence. Traditional advice, like having someone pick up mail and newspapers, is good advice "but it is not sufficient," the study found.

"Burglars look for lawns that are not mowed, the absence of the boat or cars from the driveway, and lights, particularly outdoor lights, kept on all day and all night," Olson and Cromwell found. "Closed windows and air conditioners not running on a very hot day are sure signs tha the occupant is not at home. The extra electric bill to keep some appliances running while you are gone is almost always less costly than a burglary."

The burglars also suggested these tips while away from home:

- Install a telephone answering maching that answers within two rings and tells callers you are out but will be right back.
- Don't put your name on a mailbox or anywhere outside the residence.
- Install inexpensive timers and use them for interior and exterior lights.
- A radio or television set should also be connected to a timer so that it can be barely heard through a door or window.
- Leave a car in the driveway.
- Use your neighbors. Ask them to visit your home twice a day, once in the morning and again at dusk.
- Install outdoor floodlights.

The study also found that the location of a home or apartment is important. Burglars like corner homes and apartments because of the number of escape routes, and avoid circular streets and cul-de-sacs for the same reason.

Houses near main thoroughfares, vacant homes or lots, parking lots, commercial businesses, schools, or parks are also more vulnerable, the burglars told researchers.

"We were unable to locate a non-drug using burglar in Midland," the study said. "Proceeds of burglary were used to buy drugs and drugs were used to reduce the anxiety and fear burglars experience when committing their crimes. Most burglars committed their first burglary before they used drugs for the first time. However, after the cycle of drugs and crime begins, drugs and crime become inextricably interrelated aHd the influence of one on the other cannot be sorted out."

Most burglars are high when they commit their break-ins, "primarily to give them courage to do the crime. Many believe, however, that drugs make them better burglars by enhancing their hearing, eyesight, and 'speeding them up'," according to the study.

Olson and Cromwell also found that the burglars don't appear to need a minimum amount of drugs per day — which contradicts investigators who say a voracious appetite for drugs is the reason they steal.

"We found that addicts easily control their intake of drugs," the researchers say. "Addicts require what they can get each day."

That discovery means "situational" crime prevention — locks, dogs, alarms, neighborhood watch programs, and security patrols — may work without necessarily simply driving the burglar to another neighborhood, the researchers say.

The most popular program among Midland's crime prevention officers is neighborhood watch, but according to the study it is no more than an "excellent" concept.

"Watchfulness tends to decline after the first few months," the study says. "Burglars are aware of this and are emphatic in stating that, as practiced, neighborhood watch is ineffective."

Researchers point out to defenders of the program that over the study's two-year period, the study participants "drove and walked almost every street in the city," at all hours but were never reported to police as suspicious.

The burglars also ignored police patrols, and are apparently aware of that department's manpower shortage.

The study blasts Midlanders who provide a ready market for stolen merchandise. Researchers interviewed two "fences" and found at least 60 percent of ripped-off televisions, radios, appliances, lawnmowers, and other goods are bought by otherwise honest citizens.

Cromwell and Olson also surveyed 100 Midlanders, and were surprised to find that 65 percent had been approached to buy or had bought stolen goods, and 40 percent knew someone who had.

Because of chronic overcrowding in the Texas Department of Corrections, inmates receive liberal "good time" which often slashes terms to as much as a tenth. Therefore, prison — at least in Texas — is thought by officers and prosecutors to have questionable deterrent effect.

But the UTPB study challenges that assumption, and its conclusion clearly values prison sentences over probation.

"We concluded that once a burglar becomes known to police, he is more likely to be a suspect in future crimes and is more likely to be arrested and charged for his burglaries. As he continues in a criminal career and eventually serves one term in prison, the deterrent effect of prison becomes greater," the study says.

Researchers disagree with conventional thinking that crime cannot be prevented, but can only be displaced, or "chased" from one neighborhood to another.

Despite drug addiction, socio-economic factors, or "cultural deprivation," crime can be prevented, according to the new examination of burglars.

Investigators and politicians — including President Bush when he revealed the nation's drug policy — have linked drugs to crime. Police Chief Richard Czech and Sheriff Gary Painter have said as much as 95 percent of Midland's crime woes can be attributed to drug use.

But the UTPB study downplays the role of drugs, suggesting that narcotics do not necessarily cause a person to burglarize.

"Except for extreme cases of imminent drug withdrawal, addicts will be deterred by the same techniques as deter other burglars," the researchers write. When spotted, Midland burglars often will shoplift, borrow money, or sell something they legitimately own.

"Drugs don't cause crime, they facilitate it and reinforce it," the study contends.

Community-based correction programs, such as probation and parole, have become popular in Texas because of state prison overcrowding and a continually increasing inmate population. But such programs do not work, the researchers say.

"Sanctions less severe than 3-5 years of imprisonment have no effect on crime rates and imprisonment of 5 years or more has a significant impact on recidivism," or repeat offenders, the study says.

Burglars will turn to shoplifting, a misdemeanor, or may give up crime if the risk of getting caught and punished is great enough, the study says.

"The criminal justice system must provide a predictable chance of discovery and apprehension, as well as significant costs to the offender if convicted," Cromwell and Olson say.

"It does neither."

Prosecutors said the man who founded the once mighty PTL religious empire raised thousands of dollars since his Oct. 5th conviction and needed to be imprisoned to stop him from using TV and the mails to raise more.

"He's able to walk out of this courtroom today and continue to perpetuate this fraud," Assistant U.S. Attorney Jerry Miller told the judge. "He hasn't blinked."

Potter read a letter that Bakker and his wife, Tammy Faye, mailed last month from their new TV ministry in Orlando, Fla., asking 300 supporters to send in $1,000 apiece to alleviate a financial crisis.

"Those of us who do have a religion are sick of being saps for money-grubbing preachers and priests," Potter said. "Worst of all, it appears that Mr. Bakker feels he was deserving of his gains from the little people who sent in their savings."

Potter refrained from ordering Bakker to make restitution to his victims, saying that issue needed to be resolved in bankruptcy court.

Bakker's fall from power began in 1987 with revelations about a sexual encounter with former church secretary Jessica Hahn, who received hush money, leading to the unraveling of the ministry.

"I'm deeply sorry for those I have hurt," Bakker said before sentencing. "I have sinned. But never in my life did I intend to defraud anyone."

Prosecutors didn't accept his apology.

"This man is a con man, a common criminal," said Miller. "He's ready, willing and able to pick it up where he left it off. He's ready to go back to the henhouse."

Bakker stood and stared straight ahead as the sentence was read. Potter then sent him to the medium-security federal prison at Talledega, Ala., where he arrived late Tuesday.

Warden Don Southerland said Bakker was to spend the night in a cell with another inmate, and remain there a few weeks before being assigned to another institution.

Defense attorney Harold Bender had asked that Bakker be freed on bond pending an appeal. But Potter said he posed a substantial flight risk.

"He has supporters who think he can do no wrong and who say they are willing to do anything for him," Potter said. "I believe them."

Bakker's 19-year-old daughter, Tammy Sue Chapman, was led sobbing from the courtroom. Mrs. Bakker did not attend the sentencing.

Bakker was convicted of 23 counts of fraud and one count of conspiracy in an indictment that charged him with diverting $3.7 million in ministry finances to finance his lavish lifestyle out of the $158 million sent him by followers.

Bakker had faced a maximum sentence of 120 years, but the judge consolidated the 24 counts to nine and sentenced Bakker to five years on each. Potter, known as "Maximum Bob," had given stiff sentences in the convictions of three top Bakker aides, Richard Dortch and brothers David and James Taggart. The three cooperated with the government in exchange for lightened sentences.

In Congress today, the Senate was expected to approve a House-passed bill that would send $2.85 billion to Northern California. Damage estimates have been set at $7.1 billion, making it the costliest natural disaster in U.S. history.

"We were hit by 10 times the amount of explosive power of World War II, including the atomic bomb," said U.S. Rep. Nancy Pelosi, who represents San Francisco's hard-hit Marina district.

Santa Cruz County got a $356,460 check from state Controller Gray Davis on Tuesday. The check is 75 percent of the money the county already has spent on earthquake response.

Church bells tolled at 5:04 p.m., one week to the minute after the quake. It packed more punch than first thought, according to the U.S. Geological Survey, which upped the magnitude to 7.1 from 6.9 on the Richter scale after checking 18 seismic stations around the world.

The homeless figure climbed after rain forced many into shelters, where county officials are compiling counts of those displaced, according to OES spokeswoman Nancy Sutton.

A geologist warned that because of the recent rain, huge sections of land in Santa Cruz County cracked by earthquake fissures are in danger of sliding this winter and burying hundreds of homes.

"What's happening today is frightening to geologists who have looked at it," Professor Gary Griggs of the University of California, Santa Cruz, told county supervisors Tuesday. "I think there's a cause for alarm, but not instant alarm until we've had more rain."

Jumpy residents also were told that there is a 50-50 chance of a 5.0 aftershock during the next two months, and there is an 11 percent shot of a 6.0 shock. A 5.0 Richter reading can cause considerable damage; 6.0 can be severe, especially to buildings already weakened.

An aftershock of 4.5 was registered at 6:27 p.m. Tuesday, the latest of about 3,500 aftershocks since Oct. 17.

"I'm still shook up. Every time I hear a noise I jump," said Ela Mae Douglas, owner of a soul food cafe near I-880.

GABOR

"Now you laugh," the judge said, before lecturing Miss Gabor about the 25,000 Americans who die yearly in alcohol-related accidents. Among Miss Gabor's misdemeanor convictions was driving with an open container of alcohol.

"The law applies to everyone, whether they are rich or poor and whether they are famous or not," Rubin said before sentencing her. "In the absence of extremely mitigating circumstances ... if you strike a cop, you go to jail."

Along with the jail term, the judge ordered Miss Gabor to pay $12,937.50 in fines and restitutions and to perform 120 hours of community service in a women's homeless shelter, where she may not talk about her case or give media interviews. Miss Gabor, who returned home after the verdict, was given until Dec. 29 to complete the jail sentence.

She also was ordered to be interviewed by a psychiatrist and to refrain from driving until she gets her real age on her driver's license. During the trial, Miss Gabor claimed the license was stolen and altered by someone else.

The judge repeatedly attacked Miss Gabor's demeanor inside and outside of court, saying she was "milking this case for publicity" at the expense of the taxpayers who paid for the trial.

"She has demonstrated an attitude continually of contempt for law and order and these proceedings, without a hint of remorse or contrition of any kind," the judge said. "And that is very relevant to sentencing."

As Miss Gabor left the courtroom, she disputed the judge's contention that she not only slapped a police officer, but the American people by her statements out of court that the United States was worse than the Soviet Union or Nazi Germany.

"I'm a very good American. I love America," she said. "Why should I slap the face of America?"

Miss Gabor, star of such B-films as "Queen of Outer Space" and "Picture Mommy Dead," faced a maximum of 18 months in jail, and the judge warned that she could get more jail time if she violated her parole.

The tempestuous celebrity slapped Officer Paul Kramer on June 14 after he stopped her Rolls-Royce convertible. The actress testified she instinctively struck Kramer after he roughed her up. Kramer overreacted, she said, and used undue force in arresting her.

Besides the alcohol offense, a jury convicted Miss Gabor on Sept. 29 of battery on a police officer and driving without a valid driver's license. She was acquitted of failing to obey an officer. All the charges were misdemeanors.

"When she was first convicted, we felt that the police department and Officer Kramer were vindicated," said Lt. Robert Curtis, a police spokesman. "We certainly feel that this (sentence) is even further vindication."

The trial drew more than 100 reporters, camera crews and photographers from throughout the world.

The sentencing attracted a Zsa Zsa Gabor look-a-like, a man who wrote a poem for the trial, several people wearing "Fry Zsa Zsa" buttons, a man with "John 3:16" on a T-shirt and numerous tourists with pocket cameras.

Gramm considering '96 presidential race

WASHINGTON (AP) — Republican Sen. Phil Gramm says he's considering a race for the White House in 1996, as he nears the end of his second term in the Senate.

"I don't think that anybody who ever runs for city council didn't ultimately think about running for president," said Gramm, a conservative first-term senator from Texas who is is up for re-election in 1990.

"If I ever heard the call (to the White House), I wouldn't be afraid to answer the call," Gramm, 46, said in an interview Tuesday.

Gramm said he remembers the day he was sworn into Congress for the first time, on Jan. 3, 1979, and leaning over to fellow Texas Rep. Kent Hance, who said: "'Reckon how many people standing here will be speaker of the House?' And I said, 'Kent, the people standing here think they're going to be president.'"

"I have great ambitions to serve America and to do things that I believe important to the working men and women of the country," said Gramm, who was first elected to Congress from College Station as a Democrat. Gramm later resigned from the House, switched parties, and was sent back to the House in a special election.

Gramm said he nominated George Bush for president at the 1988 Republican convention and "I meant for that nomination to last for eight years, not four, and I'll be out all over the country in 1992 campaigning for George Bush for president."

But by 1996, if re-elected to the Senate next year, Gramm would have been in Congress for 18 years. "By that point I hope to have learned this job," he said.

"I don't know what I would be looking at in 1996. It's an awfully long way away, and I have to be re-elected and I don't take that for granted," Gramm said.

Gramm's only announced opponent in 1990 is Democratic state Sen. Hugh Parmer of Fort Worth.

"But in terms of 1996, that is so far off, I certainly hadn't made any plans and hadn't thought about it. In my position, it's dangerous to be making jokes about it," Gramm said.

"Anybody's flattered when somebody writes about them possibly running for the nation's highest office, but I'm a long way from thinking about it, much less being a candidate."

Gramm said that after a newspaper columnist in Texas suggested that people ought to think of him as a candidate in 1996, he told The Dallas Morning News at a breakfast Monday with the paper's Washington bureau that "maybe I ought to start thinking about it myself."

The newspaper reported Tuesday that Gramm's 1990 re-election bid may be a forerunner to a race for the presidency in 1996.

Gramm said in Tuesday's interview with The Associated Press that he made that comment "in jest" and added: "I have not taken that breakfast as an opportunity to announce my candidacy for president."

Judge accused of conspiring in scheme to defraud HUD

DALLAS (AP) — A Dallas judge has been accused of conspiring to defraud the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development by allegedly participating in a 1985 scheme to illegal obtain loans for residential real estate.

The misdemeanor charge names County Court-at-Law Judge Glenn R. Snyder and was filed last Friday with U.S. District Judge Robert B. Maloney.

The charge alleges that Snyder agreed to be the closing attorney in a number of real estate transactions in which the seller had secured HUD-insured loans fraudulently and claims Snyder submitted documents to HUD that falsely represented the transactions.

Charges against other participants in the conspiracy could follow, Assistant U.S. Attorney Lynn Hastings said.

Snyder, who was elected to office in 1986, could not be reached for comment Tuesday, the Dallas Times Herald reported.

Ms. Hastings said the scheme involved inducing people to act as buyers of properties that they would immediately relinquish to others. The buyers, she said, would acquire HUD-insured loans with the assurance that they would not have to pay them back. The real estate agents involved agreed to pay the buyers for their role in the conspiracy, she said.

There is no reason to believe any HUD employees were involved in the scheme, Ms. Hastings said.

Snyder will probably be arraigned next week. He faces maximum penalty of a year in prison and a fine of $100,000 if he is convicted of the misdemeanor charge.

STATE IN BRIEF

Town to vote on incorporation

ROUND MOUNTAIN (AP) — This historic Blanco County community will have an election on whether it should incorporate as a city and claim a percentage of admission fees for a slated $35 million horse racing track.

Sixty-three of the proposed city's 214 residents signed a petition to require the election, Blanco County Judge Charles Scott said. If incorporation is approved, an alderman election will be Jan. 25.

As a city, Round Mountain would get part of the admission fees charged at the race track, which is to open in March 1991.

Based on projected daily attendance of 9,750 during 44 race days, an incorporated Round Mountain would get $21,450 as its share.

"Ever since the dawning about the thoughts of the race track at Longhorn Downs, the formation of Round Mountain as an incorporated town has been on the citizenry's mind," said Will Moursund, an attorney who drew up the incorporation petition.

Moursund, secretary-treasurer of Longhorn Downs, said incorporation could stave off moves by other cities to annex Round Mountain, which is 45 miles west of Austin.

He said the proposed city is expected to get enough from sales tax, the track fees and other fees so no city property taxes would be necessary.

Brooks 'feeling better'

WASHINGTON (HNS) — Rep. Jack Brooks, D-Beaumont, was reported to be "feeling better" Tuesday at Bethesda Naval Hospital where he is undergoing tests to determine the cause of severe abdominal pains.

Brooks was stricken Sunday night while enroute to Washington from Houston and asked his wife to drive him to the hospital from the airport.

Marcie Murphy, a member of Brooks' staff, said, "The doctors are still testing. They must be keeping him pretty busy because he hasn't been on the telephone."

Brooks, 66, is expected to remain hospitalized for several days for observation and evaluation of tests.

The senior member of the Texas congressional delegation, Brooks is chairman of the House Judiciary Committee.

Abortion opponents confident they can sustain veto of bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — House Speaker Thomas S. Foley said today "it will be difficult to override" President Bush's veto of a bill allowing Medicaid-financed abortions for victims of rape and incest. Abortion opponents confidently predicted they would sustain the veto.

Rep. Henry Hyde, R-Ill., a leader of anti-abortion forces, said, "I think we will sustain the president's veto because it's quite a job to get two-thirds to override." A vote was scheduled later in the day.

A veto override requires approval by two-thirds margins in both the House and Senate.

Foley, D-Wash., commenting shortly before the House began debating the question of overriding Bush's veto, sounded a pessimistic note about chances for abortion-rights supporters.

"I hadn't thought that it was likely, but we'll see what the votes are," he told reporters.

"It will be difficult to override the president's veto," he said. "It is always difficult to override a president's veto."

Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., a leader of forces seeking to expand the availability of Medicaid abortions, all but conceded defeat but said pro-choice supporters would win ultimately in the next congressional elections.

"It's only because George Bush has sold out to the extreme right wing and has used a veto ... that they will pull out a victory here," AuCoin said. "But they will do so by thwarting the majority, and people will remember that in the next election."

Foley said that while House Democratic whips had sought votes to override, the Democratic leadership did not consider abortion to be a party line issue because of deep feelings on both sides.

In an indication of how politically difficult the issue was regarded, the House Republican leader, Rep. Robert Michel, R-Ill., said he would vote with Bush while suggesting he could change positions later.

"I'm obliged obviously as the leader to support the president in this effort," Michel said. "That isn't to say that sometime down the road that position won't be modified to some degree, but I think would ought to talk about it."

The liberalized abortion language passed the House on a 216-206 vote two weeks ago. The measure, which cleared the Senate by a wider margin, is part of a $156.7 billion appropriations bill for education, labor and health programs.

Bush said he was seeking "room for flexibility" on the issue immediately after the House vote. But under pressure from anti-abortion supporters he hardened his stand and vetoed the bill Saturday.

Meanwhile, White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said today the passage of tougher restrictions on abortion by the Pennsylvania House on Tuesday "certainly does show that there's strong feelings on both sides of this issue." He said the president has no plans to campaign for passage of state laws restricting abortion.

On Tuesday, freshman Rep. Frank Pallone Jr., D-N.J., reversed his previous stand and said he would vote in favor of an override.

"I think it's wrong for me as a congressman to dictate to women ... what decision they should make in the case of rape and incest," said Pallone, who added he remains personally opposed to abortion.

The abortion provision would reverse a law in effect since 1981 that bans all Medicaid abortions for poor women except when the mother's life is endangered by her pregnancy.

Pennsylvania House OKs abortion bill

HARRISBURG, Pa. (AP) — The state House approved a strong abortion control bill that advances Pennsylvania toward becoming the first state to take advantage of new restrictions allowed by the U.S. Supreme Court.

The state Senate delayed discussion of the bill until after it returns from a two-week break for elections. The state's Democratic governor, Robert P. Casey, has said he supports new controls on abortion.

"Pennsylvania sent to the nation this message," said Rep. Stephen Freind, a Republican and sponsor of the anti-abortion proposal. "Pennsylvania is, Pennsylvania was and Pennsylvania always will be down the road pro-life."

In Lansing, Mich., meanwhile, the Republican-controlled Senate was to begin debate today on a bill requiring parental consent for abortion until a woman is 18 years old.

After nine hours of debate Tuesday, the Pennsylvania House voted 143-58 in favor of a bill that would ban abortions after the 24th week of pregnancy in most cases.

Sirens over car phone lead police to victims

Carol and Charles Stuart

BOSTON (AP) — Police scoured the city today for suspects in the abduction and shootings of a pregnant woman and her husband, whose mobile phone transmitted the sounds of sirens that directed rescuers to them.

The woman died of a head wound after doctors delivered her one-month premature baby by Caesarean section. Relatives said they were told there was little hope for the infant's survival. The husband was in critical condition.

Charles and Carol Stuart were abducted while leaving Brigham and Women's Hospital, where they'd attended a birthing class Monday night.

Their abductor forced them to drive to the city's Mission Hill district, then robbed and shot them.

Stuart then used the car's cellular phone to call police, but could not give his location. When he lost consciousness, operators listened on the phone for the sirens of passing police cars.

Mrs. Stuart's baby was delivered at the hospital she'd left hours earlier. A hospital spokeswoman would say only that the baby was alive but would not comment further.

The couple had chosen Christopher as the baby's name because doctors had said he would be born the day after Christmas, said Rosemary Leone, aunt of the 33-year-old Mrs. Stuart.

"If you could only see how beautifully formed he is," she said. "He looked perfect. They told us to stroke his face because they said he would need a lot of love."

"She wanted this baby so badly. But they don't think there's much hope for him," she said.

"She had what she always wanted. A good job, a husband, a house, and soon a baby. And then one bastard came and took it all away," said Mrs. Stuart's cousin, Cheryl Leone.

Stuart, 29, general manager of a fur store in Boston's Back Bay, remained in critical condition today with a gunshot wound to the abdomen, a Boston City Hospital spokesman said.

Police have no suspects but Mayor Raymond Flynn said fingerprints were found in the Stuarts' car, along with two .38-caliber slugs.

"We now need people to come forward and provide whatever information they have, whether they saw something or heard something," Flynn said. "Police officers will be combing the (Mission Hill) public housing development and talking to everyone and anyone."

The gunman apparently thought the Stuarts were police officers after seeing the car phone, said Joseph Dunford, deputy police superintendent. Before shooting the couple, according to Dunford, the gunman said, "I think you're five-o," slang for police.

Stuart battled for himself and his wife in the minutes after they were shot and left for dead, police said. But as he spoke to police on his telephone, he faded in and out of consciousness while his pregnant wife lay dying next to him.

He cried in pain and confusion. Not knowing where he was, he couldn't tell state police dispatcher Gary McLaughlin where to send help.

"Oh man, it hurts and my wife has stopped gurgling, she's stopped breathing," Stuart called out, according to a transcript released Tuesday by police.

Then there was silence.

"Chuck, can you hear me? Chuck, Chuck can you hear me, buddy," McLaughlin pleaded. "Pick up the phone, Chuck. Chuck? Come on Chuck, can you hear me, Chuck? Chuck, pick up the phone, I can hear you breathing there Chuck, come on, buddy."

Still, nothing.

McLaughlin instructed Stuart at one point to open his door or window to see if he could identify some landmark, so that help could find him.

But Stuart only replied: "I'm blanking out."

"You can't blank out on me, I need you man. Chuck? Chuck?"

In a desperate effort to home in on the car, police in cruisers were told to flick their sirens off and on, one by one. McLaughlin was able to tell which cruiser was near the Stuarts' car by listening to the sirens coming over the phone.

The ambulance crew that came to the aid of the Stuarts had been riding with a camera crew from the CBS-TV series "Rescue 911," which tells real-life stories about rescue operations.

Judge allows Poindexter to seek Reagan papers

WASHINGTON (AP) — John Poindexter's daily meetings with President Reagan on Iran-Contra may entitle the former national security adviser to subpoena some of the ex-president's notes and diaries, a federal judge says.

U.S. District Court Judge Harold Greene on Tuesday gave Poindexter the go-ahead to seek "relevant" documents from Reagan. He set Jan. 22 for Poindexter's trial on charges of conspiracy, making false statements and obstructing Congress in the Iran-Contra affair.

Greene said Poindexter will assert in his defense that his activities were authorized by Reagan, contentions that suggest that Reagan was far more deeply involved in details of the Iran-Contra scandal than he has acknowledged.

Greene rejected a request by Poindexter for permission to subpoena notes of then-Vice President Bush, saying Poindexter failed to show that Bush might have authorized his activities. But the judge held open the possibility that Poindexter might be allowed to seek documents from Bush later if he can show "a more pressing need."

"If the claims" by Poindexter "are correct ... there is a 'sufficient likelihood' that the documents sought from President Reagan would be material to the Poindexter defense," the judge said.

"If the defendant submits ... subpoenas ... for specific, relevant documents in the custody of former President Reagan" or the National Archives, "the court will authorize their issuance," Greene said.

Reagan would have to produce any subpoenaed documents by Nov. 23, but such a subpoena could invoke a claim of executive privilege. Theodore Olson, a lawyer for the former president, declined to comment.

U.S. District Court Judge Gerhard Gesell quashed subpoenas for testimony from Reagan and Bush in the trial of Oliver North, the former White House aide who worked under Poindexter.

Poindexter, Greene said, contends that Reagan met with him "daily, frequently alone" and that they "routinely" discussed such matters as "the role of Richard Secord as a middleman in the transfer of arms to Iran."

Poindexter maintains in sealed papers that Reagan was briefed about a false chronology of the administration's arms sales to Iran involving four of the criminal charges against Poindexter.

The chronology stated that no one in the U.S. government knew before January 1986 that a November 1985 shipment to Iran contained Hawk missiles. The CIA assisted the shipment without a signed presidential finding as required by law.

Poindexter asserts that Reagan, on the inaccurate chronology and other matters, either "formulated the administration's position" or "entertained Poindexter's plans without voicing any objection."

Sioux City deserves first 'spirit' award

Sioux City, Iowa's residents, who gained national recognition for their compassion and generosity in reacting to a plane crash in July, were deserving of the first Midland Community Spirit Award announced Tuesday by Mayor Carroll Thomas.

Their response to the crash of United Airlines Flight 232 showed the caring and human kindness necessary for a community to overcome staggering odds, such as those encountered by the rescuers of Jessica McClure in October 1987.

It was that event and the recognition by Midland leaders that this community is not alone in having accomplished an awe-inspiring feat that led to the award, which will be presented annually to the community that reflects the spirit witnessed in Midland when Jessica was rescued.

In making the announcement, Mayor Thomas said, "Sioux City will represent, for 1989, all of the many victories — both large and small — communities are experiencing by working together."

The mayor also noted that President George Bush, who formerly resided in Midland, will present the award to civic leaders from Sioux City in the Oval Office on Nov. 1.

Following the crash in late July, residents of Sioux City offered assistance in numerous ways — donating more than 300 pints of blood, opening their homes to those in need of shelter, donating food and clothing, and even doing laundry for victims and their families.

Those are the kind of selfless acts that embody the spirit the Midland Community Spirit Award is intended to recognize.

Sioux City's response to the airplane crash was a community effort and deserving of an award which denotes outstanding community spirit.

Decision opens doors

Perhaps the Reporter-Telegram's headline of Oct. 11th should have read "School board opens door to satanists." In its unprecedented vote to radically alter the policy for student clubs on campus, the school board has (unwittingly?) opened the schoolhouse doors to any and all student clubs that want to meet.

In relying on its expert legal counsel, the school board decided that it could not prevent any student "club" from meeting as long as their meetings were legal, not disruptive, and not during academic time. In its effort to examine what it thought to be a narrow issue, the school board put on its blinders and made a decision that forever opens the door for any student group to meet, whether they be satanists, abortionists, homosexuals, communists, flag-burners, or any other group.

In addition, the board stated that they could not regulate any literature that these groups wish to distribute in their meetings. Does this mean the Safe Sex Club can hand out its "literature" printed on condom packages? The board also stated that it cannot interfere with these club meetings, that a school employee must be present for these meetings, but that the employee is prohibited from taking part or directing such meetings or clubs. This means we have now turned the schools over to the students for their meetings and by board policy cannot control them. After this decision was made, the public was informed that, by state definition of secondary schools, this policy must be carried down to the 7th grade level.

Wake up, school board! Take the blinders off and take a long, hard overall view of the action just taken. If I may paraphrase "The Book" often quoted at the recent school board meeting: "Forgive them Father, for they know not what they have done."

Parents think of children

Today is Tuesday, Oct. 17th, and it is 40 degrees with a wind-chill factor of considerably less than that. I have just returned home from the Main Street Post Office and have begun to dread winter once again.

Why do I dread the return of cold weather? I dread it for the young children of mothers who either don't care or don't realize that babies and young children need a sweater, jacket, coat or even a blanket around them in chilly weather. This morning it was a well-dressed young mother driving a late-model Suburban, wearing a sweatshirt to protect herself from the chill and carrying a toddler who only had on pants and a light-weight short-sleeved T-shirt.

Children are less complaining than adults and even if they are old enough to communicate, probably won't complain.

I am not an old crank who is down on young mothers; I am a concerned grandmother, however, who has the best interests of children and their parents at heart. I have written this letter in hope of reminding some otherwise good parents to be more aware of the comfort of their children.

Thankful for assistance

We wanted to drop you this note to let you know about some special people in your town — Mr. and Mrs. Vern Adams.

Recently on a trip to Colorado, we had pickup trouble. One man helped push our pickup and travel trailer from a very dangerous place on a highway down into a camping area. We did not get his name. Mr. and Mrs. Adams were camped at this campground. He parked our trailer and then offered his vehicle for us to go into town to get parts. The nearest town was about 20 miles away and he was willing for my husband to go on to the next town, which was 50 miles away, if necessary. He ended up taking him for the part. The next day he followed us back to town to be sure everything was OK.

Mr. and Mrs. Adams turned what could have been a bad experience into a nice one for us by the help they gave us and by getting to know them.

EPA doesn't like faultfinding scientists

WASHINGTON — "Bug bombs" are aptly nicknamed. Environmental Protection Agency scientist Dwight Welch has spent years tracking cases in which the over-the-counter indoor foggers have exploded or caught fire.

Jack Anderson

Now, for insisting that they be labeled as flammable, Welch has been moved out of his job to a position for which he has no training. In whistleblower terms, Welch has graduated to paper shuffling. His mistake was that he complained too loudly about something that his bosses weren't ready to change. The only thing that changed was Welch's job.

Welch, the EPA's leading expert on the hazards of indoor bug bombs, figured out 10 years ago that the foggers could catch fire when their spray came in contact with a heating source or flame, such as a pilot light. He thought it would be simple enough to require the manufacturers to label the products "flammable."

But the EPA dragged its feet and then reduced Welch's effectiveness by moving the squeaky wheel to a sound-proof room. Welch's new job has him reviewing toxicity figures, a spot where he has little impact on the issue of exploding insect foggers.

Welch's colleagues still consider him the expert on the subject. "He calls them like he sees them," one scientist told us. "People like that never fare well at this place."

Welch's case reflects a tendency of the EPA's pesticide office in Washington to roll over and play dead for the industry. Despite reports of severe injuries involving some bug killers, the EPA seems to go easy on the people who make the products.

Lower-level professionals don't like it. They told us that concern for public safety — a cornerstone of the EPA — is taking a back seat to the politics of deregulation.

Insecticide makers have a cozy relationship with the EPA. Some of the agency's top officials have quit to take industry jobs where they trade on their old ties.

The Chemical Specialties Manufacturers Association, which represents insect spray makers, says that indoor foggers aren't flammable if they are used properly. Gasoline won't catch fire either until you put a match to it.

Our associate Scott Sleek obtained an internal EPA memo that exposes the industry's cavalier attitude. The memo quotes a pesticide company official as saying that the company "does not need to worry about the side effects of flammable products since its insurance company settles on any damages or injuries."

The EPA had planned to take Welch's advice and require more specific labels on insect foggers, but backed down when the industry threatened a lawsuit.

EPA managers don't like it when their scientists are too critical of the industry. Welch is now afraid that his transfer to a backwater job is a setup to get him fired. The EPA denies that.

Agency officials told us they are moving on the bug bomb issue, but haven't been able to make it a priority. They said Welch has been put on a task force to study the problem, but what they didn't say is that Welch was appointed to the group only after he loudly protested his transfer.

Welch told us he doesn't regret taking a tough stand, even though he has paid for his outspokenness. "If I didn't do anything about it," he said, "every time I would have read about somebody getting hurt this way, I'd say, 'I could have done something about it.'"

MORE ON MILK — We reported last month on the growing controversy over potentially harmful growth hormones used to make cows produce more milk. The Food and Drug Administration hasn't heard the end of this story. The November issue of "The Progessive" magazine reports that some of the companies manufacturing the hormones are pouring thousands of dollars into lobbying efforts and millions of dollars into research. Meanwhile, the FDA is still refusing to make public the research the companies have done on the effects of the growth hormones.

MINI-EDITORIAL — U.S. Trade Representative Carla Hills is back from an official visit to Japan where she told her hosts they were the next best thing to sliced bread. Hills was eager to banish any notion the Japanese might have that she blamed them for the U.S. trade deficit. "I do not see the Japanese economic power as a threat," she said. Maybe Hills needs new glasses. She definitely needs a new approach. Soft words and conciliatory tones will not get the Japanese to drop their trade barriers.

WILLIAM SAFIRE

It's pity ex-associates can't get even with Nancy

WASHINGTON — "Scathing and cruel ... heartless and dumb ... vicious and unbelievable" are the adjectives chosen by Nancy Reagan's autobiographical collaborator to describe my writing about her, long before Nancyphobia became fashionable.

William Safire

The production of "My Turn," Mrs. Reagan's score-settling memoirs, certainly had the best of everything: the top ghost (William Novak, of "Iacocca" fame), the top book editor (Kate Medina of Random House) and the super-agent (Mort Janklow); no wonder it's a certain best seller.

But many of her longtime sychophants in the East Wing Dinner Invitation and Source Protection Association, no longer dependent on Reagan "access," are turning on her.

Even her real friend, Mike Wallace, exposed her shallowness and backstage power-brokerage unmercifully on CBS's "60 Minutes" in what she must have assumed would be a book promotion.

A contrarian temptation to spring to her defense endows me with a curious objectivity.

On the central issue raised during her incumbency as first lady: Did she use her undisputed influence on the president in a right and proper way?

This issue, both political and ethical, is sometimes twisted into "Does the president's wife have the right to opinions of her own, and to give her husband political advice?"

Of course she does.

When Mrs. Reagan's backstage manipulations in ousting Donald Regan as White House chief of staff were criticized in this space (scathingly, cruelly, etc.) an especially vapid New York Times editorial befogged the issue with: "It's unrealistic and unreasonable ... to suggest that the first lady should not advise her husband. Spousal advice is part of any marital relationship ..."

That truism, cited by Mrs. Reagan's writer in defense of her participation in a mini-coup, wasn't even in the ballpark of the point.

The issue was and is: Did she, without the knowledge of the president but with her derivative authority, actively interfere with the political workings of the administration?

She denies it.

"I didn't speak to a single reporter about Don Regan," she claims. "I spoke to Ronnie a number of times, but never to the press." She also insists that her reference at the time to "leeches" had nothing to do with human beings.

I believe those assertions to be untrue.

Perhaps one day a journalist who watched the media-manipulation firsthand will set the record straight.

When Mike Wallace asked, "What was your role in your move to dump Don Regan?" she replied, "I was never a part of a dump Donald Regan movement," and all the reporter said in comment was "Maybe not."

On the astrology influence, the news in the book is Mrs. Reagan's admission that she concealed from her husband "for quite a few months" that she was relying on a stargazer for advice on presidential scheduling, ranging from the timing of summit meetings to the holding of news conferences.

If a president decides to hire a witch doctor to help his planning by reading the entrails of chickens; or if he uses a divining rod to discover leaks, or prefers Tarot cards to CIA evaluations, that's the judgment we have elected.

But if the timing of his movements and selection of his appearances are determined by his fearful wife's superstition without his knowledge, that abuse of the first lady's authority cannot be dismissed as harmless or cute.

"Fearful" is the word that comes through in all of Mrs. Reagan's writings and appearances.

Fear of assassination led to her secret astrological addiction; fear of exposure of her husband to a news conference after the Iran-Contra scandal broke led to her vendetta against her husband's chief of staff; and fear of personal discomfiture led to her abandonment of a drug clinic.

That last item illustrates the effect of fear on character.

To all the Americans who wanted to believe the best of their first lady, Nancy Reagan's advocacy of resistance to drug addiction was not an image-making stunt but an exemplary personal commitment.

As Vanity Fair discovered, it turns out to have been a stunt.

She had prevailed on her friends to raise millions for a narcotics treatment facility, desperately needed by young addicts, in California.

But when some locals objected and picketed her Beverly Hills mansion, she panicked and directed her coterie to pull out:

"I certainly didn't come back ... to have demonstrations in front of my house."

Better that the lives of a few hundred kids go down the drain than Nancy Reagan be bothered at Bel-Air.

In her get-even best-seller, she's had her turn, but the pity is they will never have theirs.

Woman without underwear isn't for the taking

We have before us the case of a young woman from Fort Lauderdale who went out with her girlfriend one evening dressed in a sea-green tank top and a ruffled miniskirt. Actually, it's what she did not have on that is the key issue here. She didn't have on any underpants.

Lewis Grizzard

She gets raped by a 26-year-old man and then a jury ups and acquits him because, in the words of the jury foreman, the victim "advertised for sex."

Obviously, there has been outcries of injustice, and how can I remain silent when so many others have seen the wrong here and have made public their disdain for the obviously Neanderthal thinking of the jury?

Here's the deal:

You see a woman out in public dressed in a sea-green tank top and a ruffled miniskirt and you say to yourself, "Hey, this chick probably isn't wearing any underwear either, which obviously means she obviously wants to do the dirty deed."

OK, so there's some basis for logic there, I suppose, but here's the spoiler, Big Boy.

Just because she's advertising for sex, it doesn't necessarily mean she's advertising for sex with you.

She could be advertising for sex with her boyfriend, Harold, who's meeting her later.

She could be advertising for sex with her husband. Just because you're married doesn't mean you can't still be kinky. She even could be advertising for sex with a movie producer who might be hanging out and happen to see her, and a month from now, she'll be co-starring with Mel Gibson.

Here's all the jury had to know:

Did this woman want to have sex with the creep who raped her? The answer is, of course, no.

But, did the man force her to have sex with him?

The answer is, of course, yes.

Then, it doesn't matter if she were walking around buck naked. To force someone into sex is rape, and it doesn't say anywhere that it doesn't count if the victim is provocatively dressed.

Send the creep to the Big House. If you don't, what happens the next time he sees a woman dressed in a sea-green tank top and a ruffled miniskirt?

If it were OK for him to rape the first one, why not number two?

Listen, I'm a man and I know the stirrings that loosen themselves when I see a woman dressed in something she obviously isn't wearing to a Junior League meeting.

But there are ways a man can soothe himself when visited upon by such stirrings. Think of the least sexy thing you can think of. Like Harry Truman. Or gall bladder surgery. Or the infield fly rule. And, if none of that works, there's still the cold shower.

Just because you're wearing dancing shoes, doesn't necessarily mean you want to dance. And just because a woman isn't wearing underwear doesn't necessarily mean she is there for the taking.

Lewis Grizzard is a columnist for Cowles Syndicate.

California senators push for additional earthquake relief

WASHINGTON (AP) — California senators are pushing to expand a House-passed $2.85 billion earthquake relief plan for their state before tonight, when Congress must send the bill to President Bush.

Sens. Alan Cranston, D-Calif., and Pete Wilson, R-Calif., were working with Senate leaders on an amendment increasing the federal commitment to about $3.45 billion. They proposed adding about $600 million for Small Business Administration loans to the House bill.

"You have to go for what you can and we've done that. We hope to be even more successful in the Senate," said Rep. Vic Fazio, D-Calif., who led his delegation's effort in the House for even more money — $3.8 billion.

The House measure, passed 321 to 99 on Tuesday, included $500 million for the SBA, $1.1 billion for Federal Emergency Management Agency repair efforts and $1 billion for the Federal Highway Administration's emergency fund. It also set up a $250 million fund for Bush to spend at his discretion.

In addition to expanding the SBA money, senators hoped to win waivers of federal rules, denied in the House bill, that would let the state get more federal money quickly with less commitment of local and state funds.

Cranston estimated the total cost of the damage to the San Francisco Bay area from the Oct. 17 earthquake exceeded $7 billion.

"The House got part of the package but there are some essential pieces missing," said Bill Livingstone, Wilson's spokesman, who said the plan was being ironed out with the Senate leadership and he expected no major battles.

Quick Senate action was anticipated because the aid was attached to a stopgap spending bill needed to avert a government shutdown Thursday. The bill is required because Congress and the president have failed to enact 11 of the 13 annual appropriations bills required for the government to operate in fiscal 1990, which began Oct. 1.

A top House leadership aide said he expected a modest expansion in the Senate would be acceptable in that chamber. Both houses must agree on a single version before it can be sent to the president.

White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater said Tuesday the president could accept the House version of the assistance plan.

The administration had proposed $1.5 billion in new federal spending, plus earmarking another $1 billion for quake relief.

Because of the urgency of the situation, the Californians said they were seeking as much as they could get now, while the quake is still fresh on the nation's consciousness, but would come back for more later.

"Let me be honest," Fazio said. "If we don't accomplish everything we set out to accomplish, we'll have to come back again and again and again ... (but) we understand that in six months we'll be just another budgetary problem."

The allocation for the quake approved by the House was already several times larger than any previous disaster aid package.

Because of the extent of the damage, the Senate plan would waive or greatly expand legal limits to the federal obligation.

For example, one waiver would allow the federal government to pay for repairing the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, a vital link that is a toll road and thus not eligible for such aid.

The plan also would extend from 90 days to 180 days the period during which the state could get 100 percent federal reimbursement for road repairs. And the cost of earthquake repairs would be kept separate from the state's normal allocation from the Highway Trust Fund, so it would not slow road projects elsewhere in the state.

Rep. Nancy Pelosi, D-Calif., said one of her major concerns was lifting a cap on the amount of loan money that could go to owners of homes damaged or destroyed in San Francisco's fashionable Marina district, which she represents.

"If we can preserve the neighborhood, we can keep it intact, not only for the people involved, but as the economic tax base for our city and it's good for our city, therefore this ripple effect to the state and country as a whole," she said.

Baby girl born into shaky world

SANTA CRUZ, Calif. (AP) — Air filled the tiny lungs of Elizabeth Patrice Cupples for the first time on Oct. 17 at 5:03 p.m. One minute later, her new world shook violently.

"I thought, 'We'll just have to wait until it stops, then they can sew me up,'" Marilyn Cupples recalled one week after the bumpy delivery at AMI Community Hospital.

Drs. Katherine Corby and Marsha Muir had just delivered 7-pound, 14-ounce Elizabeth by Caesarean section when the operating room began shaking.

"The baby had just been born when the earthquake started. Things started moving around — the lights started to sway, the walls were moving and things were bumping along," said Corby.

At that moment, the newborn girl was whisked away to the nursery while Corby and Muir fought to stay on their feet to protect the mother and shield her from flying debris with their bodies.

Mrs. Cupples said: "The room started shaking and all I heard them say was, 'Let's get her (the baby) out of here.'"

Mrs. Cupples, 40, was awake during delivery but numbed from the waist down. Her husband, Jim, was at her side.

Corby was astonished by the way Mrs. Cupples handled the disaster. "While we were sewing her up, she talked about what the Richter reading would be," she said.

"He (Cupples) was in a bit of an altered state, though. He was laughing and telling his new daughter, 'You were born and the earth moved.' They named her Elizabeth but during all this they said they considered calling her Eartha," Corby said.

There was even more levity in the delivery room.

"I said, 'Why don't we do a tummy tuck while we're at it?'" the new mother said.

Elizabeth Patrice is the first baby for Mrs. Cupples, a personnel consultant. Her husband is an engineer.

"We have been thinking of all sorts of nicknames because of the earthquake," Mrs. Cupples said from her Santa Cruz home Tuesday.

"Eartha, Quaker, Tremblor and Epi are the ones we've thought of. Epi might stick because her initials are E.P. and it also sounds like epicenter," Mrs. Cupples said.

Retired people help to stretch disaster agency

OAKLAND, Calif. (AP) — Ann Smith likes to be where the action is when disaster strikes.

Bob Lytle's wife wanted him out of her kitchen.

Both retired, they are reservists for the Federal Emergency Management Agency who help the agency stretch when the pressure is on.

Last month they were helping victims of Hurricane Hugo. Now they're pulling 12-hours shifts at the Veterans Memorial Building in Oakland, where FEMA set up its disaster assistance center to handle applications for grants and low-interest loans.

Smith, 61, retired in June from the California Department of Transportation office in Redding, but has been a FEMA reservist for three years.

Before she retired, she saved up vacation time to work disasters.

"It's an organization that's there quickly and we like to be part of the action," said Smith, who is assistant manager of the disaster assistance center here.

Lytle, 78, of Tempe, Ariz., a retired associated professor of agricultural engineering, has been a reservist 12 years.

"My wife said she married for better or worse, but not for lunch," said Lytle. "She wanted to know, 'What are you going to do to stay out of my kitchen?'"

Until recently, neither one had been sent to a disaster in more than a year and a half.

On Sept. 1, Lytle was sent to Baton Rouge, La., to a flood. Three weeks later, he was sent to Charleston, S.C., for Hurricane Hugo. A day at home and he was in Oakland to help open an earthquake disaster assistance center.

Smith was packed and ready to go to the Grand Canyon on vacation with her husband, Larry, another FEMA reservist now working in Monterey County, when the call came Sept. 24 for Hugo.

"We split our clothes into two suitcases and off we went to Puerto Rico," she said.

Three weeks later, they both were sent to help out with the quake.

U.S. pleased by Shevardnadze's speech, wants Kremlin to do more

WASHINGTON (AP) — While applauding the Soviet admissions of past mistakes, some Bush administration officials are concerned that the Kremlin may be engaged in a sophisticated campaign to weaken U.S. resolve on key foreign and defense policies.

The administration's public response Tuesday to the speech by Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze was decidedly favorable, with spokesmen using words such as "extraordinary" and "striking" to describe the Soviet diplomat's statements.

In a speech Monday, Shevardnadze condemned the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1979 and, in effect, said the United States was correct in contending that a controversial radar station in Siberia violated bilateral agreements.

But one U.S. official, speaking anonymously, said Shevardnadze's statements on Afghanistan may have been aimed at rallying U.S. public opinion against continued U.S. military involvement in Afghanistan.

The United States has been providing substantial assistance to the Afghan rebels and encouraging them not to enter peace negotiations with the pro-Moscow regime in Kabul.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler welcomed Shevardnadze's admission that the invasion had set the Soviet Union "against all of humanity" but she added that the Kremlin should do more to erase its mistakes.

Specifically, she encouraged the Soviets to transfer power from the "illegitimate" government in Afghanistan to a "government acceptable to all the Afghan people."

■ Related stories — 8B, 8C

"The legacy of the Soviet invasion continues as long as the current Kabul regime retains power in the face of a determined effort by the Afghan people and the international community to see it removed," she said.

The Afghan war has continued to rage even though the Soviets completed their troop pullout eight months ago.

According to U.S. estimates, the Soviets have been airlifting $250 million to $300 million worth of arms a month to Kabul. Soviet military involvement in Afghanistan, among other regional conflicts, was perhaps the main area of disagreement during Shevardnadze's talks last month with Secretary of State James A. Baker III in Wyoming.

The administration was clearly elated over Shevardnadze's remarks on the Krasnoyarsk radar site.

Ms. Tutwiler said: "We have long maintained that the radar is a violation of the ABM treaty. We therefore welcome Mr. Shevardnadze's statement just as we welcomed the Soviet decision in September to completely eliminate that radar."

NATION IN BRIEF

Eastern Europe package sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate Republicans who want to blunt Democrats' efforts to seize the upper hand on U.S. aid to Eastern Europe are proposing their own three-year, $585 million program.

Meanwhile, President Bush struck back at critics of his aid program, saying in an interview with The New York Times that he's tired of complaints from "people who found Poland on the globe about three weeks ago."

The GOP plan for Poland and Hungary, assembled by Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., and seven Republican colleagues, was a middle ground between Bush's $450 million proposal and an $837 million version passed by the House last week.

"We do not believe the test of American policy in Poland and Hungary is how many dollars we spend, but how we can best achieve our national goals in those two countries," Dole said in a statement.

Shuttle gets minor damage

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. — (AP) — Atlantis' heat-shield tiles sustained only minor damage during the five-day mission to launch the Galileo spacecraft to Jupiter, NASA said Tuesday.

"Everything has gone extremely smooth," said Conrad Nagel, Atlantis processing director for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. "The work is proceeding. It couldn't be any better, to tell you the truth."

Initial inspection showed only 25 nicks caused by debris that hit the tiles. Most can be repaired and only six tiles will need to be replaced, said Cindy Lodge, tile manager for the shuttle.

No tiles were lost, she said, adding, "It doesn't look like we'll have any major rework."

Atlantis landed at this Mojave Desert military base at 9:32 a.m. Monday following a five-day flight during which astronauts released Galileo from the shuttle's cargo bay for a looping six-year flight to the solar system's largest planet.

Park service commended

WASHINGTON (AP) — Environmentalists are giving National Park Service Director James Ridenour high marks for refusing to allow a lumber company to haul timber from national forests through Yellowstone Park.

"I think the park service is to be commended," Michael Scott of the Wilderness Society said Tuesday. "It did the right thing."

Ridenour rejected a U.S. Forest Service argument that an economic emergency justified the route.

Midland considering regional landfill

By BRIAN PEARSON
Staff Writer

Ernest Galindo is concerned about the rapidly filling landfill about a quarter of a mile from his Iraan home.

The weekly trucks bringing household garbage to the town's tiny storage hole represent a temporary solution to a mounting problem.

"It's not quite a problem yet," said Galindo, an oilfield worker who lives with his family near the dump. "But they're running out of area."

Like other small towns, Iraan has less than a Grand Canyon for a landfill and can no longer dispose of trash the old-fashioned way: burning it.

As of Aug. 31, the Environmental Protection Agency outlawed open burning of residential, industrial and other waste in Texas. The federal law was passed in 1981, but the Texas Department of Health fought its implementation until 1987, when the EPA granted a two-year grace period.

The law has left small towns to either stuff the small landfills they have or haul their garbage elsewhere. Rankin, Iraan, Stanton and Alpine officials have contacted the City of Midland and asked about using the landfill here.

Midland officials and councilmen discussed the proposal at a Tuesday meeting.

"Just in case I have to close mine up, I wanted to make sure I have another place," said Howard Floyd, Iraan utilities director. "My landfill is starting to fill up real rapidly.

"Right now it's starting to be a bad incovenience. I know everybody is having the same problems we're having."

Rankin officials were granted a request to haul about 20 tons a week of garbage to Midland's dump, about six miles east of here off the Garden City highway. The city is not expected to begin its weekly trash treks until November.

Midland City Manager Fred Poe said he expects others to follow, paying $9 a ton to dispose their waste.

"It would probably cost them $100 a ton to manage their own landfill," Poe said. "All these little communities are going to have to get out of the landfill business."

For a town to start its own landfill would mean hundreds of thousands of dollars poured into monitoring wells, excavation, linings and daily maintenance, Poe said.

"For a little community that's going to haul a couple of truckloads a week, they can't afford it," he said. Midland spends $670,000 a year for expanding and operating its landfill.

Poe said the small towns also probably could not afford a waste-burning facility which meets EPA and Texas Department of Health standards.

The 1981 EPA law banned the burning of residential, institutional, commercial and industrial solid waste in a facility which does not have emissions and temperature control among other devices.

Michael Edmiston, a solid waste engineer in the health department's Midland office, said the department opposed the law until 1987.

Department officials contended that open burning was better than burial because it reduces blowing litter, fly and rat breeding and organic matter, Edmiston said.

But the EPA prevailed, and stiff federal and state penalties have been established for those who violate the law.

The department can fine a violator up to $10,000 a day per violation. Federal penalties depend on emissions levels.

"As far as I know, no one is still burning trash," said Edmiston, whose service area covers 36 West Texas counties. "Most of them are working to borrow equipment and getting it to other sites."

However, Poe said Midland and other larger cities do not have the landfill space to accommodate every West Texas town needing a new garbage mecca.

Poe said one solution may be a centralized regional landfill for small and large West Texas cities. With recycling laws looming on the horizon for plastics, metals and even tires, a regional landfill could benefit all West Texas cities, he said.

"Everybody's anticipating that within the next 10 years that we'll be recycling at least half our garbage," Poe said. "They just haven't developed the technology yet to do it.

"Somebody is going to keep improving on these processes until it becomes economical."

Floyd, though, said any solution is going to put a financial burden on a small town.

"We know it's going to be very expensive," he said. "A lot of small communites are not going to be able to build a landfill of their own. The costs are astronomical."

In other action at Tuesday's City Council meeting, councilmen:

■ approved purchasing a $2,800 IBM 3370 Model BO2 disk drive for the city's computer center.

■ awarded a wrecker service contract to C & L Recovery Services Inc. The company will manage the city's vehicle impoundment yard and provide wrecker services.

County has few doctors able to do autopsies

By JULIE HILLRICHS
Staff Writer

The departure of two local pathologists from Midland in the past three months has left county law enforcement officials with few long-term solutions to the shortage of doctors willing and able to perform criminal autopsies.

Midland's chief prosecutor says he may have no choice but to ship a body as far away as Austin or San Antonio to determine cause of death in a criminal investigation.

"We could have a real expense in no time at all," District Attorney Al Schorre said, adding that the cost to taxpayers might very well double in the next few months.

Schorre estimated that as many as 15 forensic autopsies are performed each year by Midland pathologists who charge an average of $650 per autopsy. Out-of-town pathologists would charge up to $1,200 per autopsy, he said.

Dr. Christopher Hall, one of three remaining Midland pathologists, believes Midland's officials are spoiled; that they were lucky to have a pathologist like David Shneidman who was eager to work on criminal cases.

Hall said it's not a foregone conclusion that other physicians will have a knowledge or even an interest in performing criminal autopsies.

Unlike his former colleague, Hall said he lacks the "gut level" enthusiasm for forensic pathology exemplified by Shneidman who shut down his practice a week ago and moved to Seattle, Wash.

"Dave Shneidman was not your average pathologist," Hall said, referring to the former Midland doctor's interest in working on criminal investigations from a 20-county area.

"The bigger the area, the more expensive it's (hiring medical examiner) going to be. That's because we'd have to hire enough personnel to cover the entire territory."
— Al Schorre

With Shneidman gone, Hall said he'll do what he can to help out in the pinch, but declared that his primary responsibility will be to his medical patients and not to law enforcement.

"Forensic pathology is not my main interest; I'm not going to do everything that comes to my door," Hall said.

Schorre there may come a time when Midland officials have to seriously consider hiring a regional medical examiner.

Right now, Schorre said the expense of such a plan makes it prohibitive.

"The bigger the area, the more expensive it's going to be. That's because we'd have to hire enough personnel to cover the entire territory. But we may not have any other choice," he said.

Justices of the Peace Bob Pine and Keith Jobe say they would oppose setting up a regional medical examiner office because there isn't enough work to justify the expense.

Pine said he has ordered only two autopsies this year, while Jobe said he averages about 15 autopsies per month.

Seedlings to be available for planting as windbreaks

By ED TODD
Staff Writer

Windbreak trees, which can help the environment by decreasing wind erosion and by countering the greenhouse effect, will be available in 1990 to Midlanders who order the tree seedlings this fall.

"Windbreak trees are used primarily to protect farmsteads on rural areas that are subject to the spring winds that afflict this area," according to Tomas Dominguez, district conservationist for the Midland County Soil Conservation Service (SCS).

The Great Plains, which includes Midland and much of West Texas, is "very susceptible to wind erosion," noted Dominguez.

The hardwood and evergreen seedlings, which are provided by the Midland Soil and Water Conservation District (SWCD) through the Texas Forest Service in Lubbock, will be delivered here next spring.

Conifers (evergreens) that will be available are Afghanistan pine, the Arizona cypress, the Austrian pine, Ponderosa pine and Eastern red cedar, Dominguez said.

Hardwood varieties to be available will be the burr oak, the catalpa, cottonwood cuttings, desert willow, green ash, honey locust, little walnut, osage orange, pecan, red oak, Russian olive and sand cherry.

"We have had great participation year in and year out by local Midland County residents," said Dominguez. And the price for the trees is "very reasonable," he said.

Prices for the conifer trees are $40 per 30 seedlings, said Dominguez, while the hardwoods will be priced at $42 per 100 seedlings.

In addition to the hardwoods and conifers, wildlife packets that contain 100 hardwood seedlings "tailored for this part of Texas" will be available to Midlanders. The hardwood packets are designed "to enhance wildlife habitat. Packets will be $42 each.

Last year, the Midland SWCD sold almost 9,000 trees.

At 7 p.m. on Nov. 16, the Midland SWCD will sponsor a free windbreak tree seminar in the Sibley Environmental Learning Center in Midland's Hogan Park.

Melony Sikes, range conservationist for the Midland SCS Office, noted that windbreak trees properly laid out, as in staggered rows, reduce soil erosion by reducing the speed of the wind over the land.

"It takes a while for them to be effective — to get to maximum height," Ms. Sikes said.

"If you have trees 15 feet high, you multiply the effective height times 10," Ms. Sikes said, "and that will give you the amount in feet that the wind speed is reduced. You can be guaranteed that 10 times the height of the tree is protected, for sure."

In addition to keeping soil from blowing, windbreak trees arranged about houses, barns, shops, stores and other structures can "save energy" by acting as insulation.

"It will help conserve energy, especially in the home and especially in the winter time," Ms. Sikes said. "It keeps snow from blowing up against the house. In the summertime, it prepares a shade for the home."

Ms. Sikes said she "could really tell the difference" that trees make when she lived in the Texas Panhandle.

The windbreak seedlings will be available to urban and rural landowners, since the trees are being made available wherever wind erosion is a problem and "that covers Midland County," Ms. Sikes said. People "in town could benefit (from the windbreak trees) just because of energy conservation."

Ms. Sikes said. In addition, since trees make habitat for birds and since many trees produce food for birds, in-town trees will attract birds and enhance bird habitat to the delight of bird watchers.

Aside from the soil-conservation and energy-saving aspects of planting windbreak trees, trees planted in increased numbers, particularly in urban areas, could cut down on carbon dioxide emissions in the air.

"An urban tree has 15 times the benefit of forest trees because of its energy-saving value," Ms. Sikes said.

In that regard, some 51 million homes nationwide "could be shaded better." And if that meant planting only 100 million trees, she said, that would cut carbon dioxide emissions in the air by 20 million tons a year.

Planting more trees, Ms. Sikes noted, could help offset "the greenhouse effect" — the warming of the Earth's surface associated with increased atmospheric carbon dioxide. Trees produce oxygen and absorb carbon dioxide in photosynthesis.

The burning of rain forests, which each year leaves 25 million forested acres bare worldwide, is "very big program," Ms. Sikes noted.

"It's going to speed up the greenhouse effect," she said. "We are trying to counteract that in the United States by planting trees. That's only part of answer."

Odessa, Midland rank near bottom of most livable cities

From Staff and Wire Reports

Seattle has been named America's Most Livable City and San Francisco, now recovering from a devastating earthquake, was ranked second, according to the 1989 edition of the Places Rated Almanac.

Meanwhile, Odessa ranked as the second worst city in which to live. Midland missed the "bottom ten" by four spots, ranking 319.

The book ranks the top 10 metropolitan areas, in order, as Seattle, San Francisco, Pittsburgh, Washington, San Diego, Boston, New York, Anaheim-Santa Ana, Calif., Louisville, Ky., and Nassau-Suffolk, N.Y., according to The Pittsburgh Press and the Pittsburgh Post-Gazette.

The rankings in the almanac's third edition were based on scoring in categories including crime, health care, the environment, transportation, education, the arts, recreation and climate.

The bottom 10 areas, starting with the lowest ranking, were Pine Bluff, Ark.; Odessa, Texas; Laredo, Texas; Yuba City, Calif.; St. Joseph, Mo.; Victoria, Texas; Greeley, Colo.; Gadsden, Ala.; Casper, Wyo.; Alhany, Ga.; and Naples, Fla., according to USA Today.

"That really tends to be someone's subjective evaluation," said Odessa City Manager Bill Brown. "Most people who come out here, stay out here. They don't move away."

Brown said since he moved to Odessa from Houston two years ago, he's found the city, and the Permian Basin in general, refreshing. "I don't need to go see the Astros and spend 1½ hours in traffic getting home."

He said another advantage of Odessa and other West Texas cities is the "lack of stress"

Nitrates found in ponds near Las Cruces, N.M.-area dairies

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — State officials said they found high concentrations of nitrates in test wells near holding ponds at dairies south of here but doubt drinking water has been contaminated.

State Environmental Improvement Division officials said the agency plans to continue testing to determine what steps must be taken to ensure drinking water remains unaffected.

Scientists believe high nitrate levels in drinking water could hinder an infant's ability to absorb oxygen, leading to a condition that is sometimes fatal.

Samples from drinking water wells near the dairies did not show high levels of nitrates, said Albert Dye, EID's water resource specialist.

Most samples taken in July from the dairies' monitor wells exceeded the federal government's standard of a maximum of 10 parts per million of nitrates in drinking water, Dye said.

The highest nitrate level found was 280 parts per million, and several samples showed levels of 80 to 100 parts per million, Dye said. Others were in a range of 10 to 20 parts per million.

"It has to be kept in perspective that these are monitoring wells and that there aren't any drinking water wells that show high levels," Dye said. "Nevertheless, these are extremely high."

The nitrate levels found an individual dairies will not be released until they were confirmed, Dye said.

EID is waiting for the results of new samples it drew from the monitor wells in September.

"We expect them to be similar," Dye said.

The agency probably will require the dairies to line the holding ponds with clay to prevent leaks if high levels of nitrates are confirmed, he said.

EID officials think most of the nitrate contamination is coming from the holding ponds, which contain waste water from washing the cows.

The dairies wash their cows before each milking and some manure and urine, which are high in nitrates, usually are washed into the waste water.

Clovis' former mayor to be on trial for murder

CLOVIS, N.M. (AP) — Jury selection has begun in the second-degree murder trial of former Clovis Mayor Charles M. "Chick" Taylor Jr., charged in the death of a man whom witnesses said Taylor accused of seeing his wife.

More than 100 prospective jurors were called Tuesday.

Taylor, 56, was charged with the murder count and aggravated battery in the death of Dalton Taylor, 53, no relation.

Testimony is expected to last three days.

Dalton Taylor lapsed into a coma after he and the former mayor got into a fistfight March 21 at the Elks Lodge bar. Dalton Taylor died six weeks later.

Defense lawyers have argued that the fight was provoked, but state District Judge Stephen Quinn earlier denied defense motions to reduce the charges to voluntary manslaughter.

Most witnesses at a preliminary hearing said Chick Taylor struck the first blow after accusing Dalton Taylor of seeing his wife. Witnesses have said both men appeared all right after the fight, but Dalton Taylor collapsed 15 minutes later.

Law officers in Shreveport to receive raises

From Staff and Wire Reports

SHREVEPORT, La. — Shreveport police and firefighters will get $4,000-a-year pay raises beginning in 1990, Mayor John Hussey said.

The salary boosts will be paid for with proceeds from a half-cent sales tax approved by voters two weeks ago, Husssey said.

"This should be a major boost to our recruiting efforts," he said. "We think this will make us competitive and help fill our vacancies faster."

Starting pay for firefighters and officers recruited after Jan. 1 will be $19,044 annually, up from $14,964.

Midland voters will decide on Nov. 7 whether or not to grant a 10-percent additional raise to local police officers ans firefighters.

Fire and police officials in Shreveport have complained that low wages inhibited their abilities to recruit new employees and that experienced workers were leaving the departments for better-paying jobs.

"On our recruiting efforts we will begin immediately to emphasize that as our starting salary," Hussey told City Council members at Monday's work session.

Police Chief Charles Gruber called it a "big step in the right direction."

Fire Chief Dallas Greene said, "I think it definitely will be an asset in recruiting."

"I don't lock my car in Odessa, but I sure did in Houston. We have an airport. We're not landlocked here. And, I don't know any place in the country where you can drive four hours and get the kind of scenery that Big Bend has to offer."

As for other Odessa officials, the feelings were a little stronger.

Mayor Don Carter called the ratings and the book "ridiculous."

"I don't care to comment," said Carter. "What do people in New York know anyway."

That sentiment was shared by Odessa Chamber of Commerce President Bill Fowler. "I'm not going to comment on something you're reading to me over the phone," he said.

Added Brown: "I suppose they rated Boston in the Top 10. What about that couple who was shot after leaving a Lamaze class. That's really neat...random murder for a couple hundred dollars. Since I've been here (in Odessa) our crime rate has precipitously gone down."

The publisher, Prentice Hall Travel Books, had planned to announce the findings Nov. 3 in New York City. After the Pittsburgh newspapers and other news organizations obtained copies, the company moved the news conference to Thursday.

Pittssburgh was named America's Most Livable City in the 1985 edition of the almanac. It was also published in 1981.

Suzanne Smith, a senior publicist for Prentice Hall Travel Books, declined to comment on the rankings Tuesday, although bookstores in Pittsburgh already have received copies.

"At this point, we're not verifying anything," she said.

MC instructors attend seminar

From Staff Reports

Ten instructors from Midland College joined with other community college faculty members last weekend for the three-day Southwest Seminar For Great Teaching.

Sponsored by El Paso Community College, the annual event drew more than 70 instructors from 13 community colleges in Texas, New Mexico, Arizona, and Colorado to the Inn of the Mountain Gods, Ruidoso, N.M.

Mattox lists supporters

Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — Attorney General Jim Mattox Thursday released the names of 462 black community leaders, including Midlanders and Odessans, who have endorsed his Democratic campaign for governor.

The list of black supporters include members of the clergy, elected officials, political activists and businessmen and women.

In a news release from Mattox's campaign office, Pettis Norman, a former Dallas Cowboy who served as spokesman for the group, noted that early in his political career Mattox joined picket lines protesting segregation at Dallas restaurants.

"Some people talk about civil rights, Jim Mattox marched about it," Norman said.

Among the Mattox supporters from Midland are Beatrice Hurd and Iris Hall.

Supporters from Odessa include Edward Downing Jr. and Gene Collins.

Fannin plans carnival

From Staff Reports

Fannin Elementary School's fall carnival, "Fiesta '89" will be on Saturday from 6-9 p.m.

Preschoolers through junior high will enjoy fantastic game booths, disco and the Sweet Shop. Parents and children can play Bingo and visit the Craft Fair.

Catering will be by El Burrito and Burger Time from 5:30-9 p.m.

Local weatherman J. Gordon Lunn will be the master of ceremonies and will announce contest winners every half hour. The public is invited.

Haunted House to be held

From Staff Reports

Midland College Latin American Student Society is sponsoring The Haunted House at Midland College Student Center from 5:30-11 p.m. Thursday.

General admission will be $2, $1 for junior and senior high students, kids 12 and under free. Midland College students will also get in free with their student I.D.

MISD junior high orchestras to perform

Midland's junior high school orchestras will come together for their first concert of the year Thursday at 7:00 p.m., in the Alamo Junior High School auditorium, 3800 W. Storey Ave.

This concert will feature the orchestra students of Alamo Junior High School, Goddard Junior High School, and San Jacinto Junior High School.

"Our fall concert will show the public how much this program has grown, in quantity and quality," Amanda Villaret, strings instructor, Alamo Junior High School.

Other junior high school strings instructors are Charles Grissom at San Jacinto and Diana Goad at Goddard.

Voters uninformed about workers' comp problems, survey indicates

AUSTIN (AP) — Eighty percent of Texas voters say they've heard about workers' compensation problems, but only 30 percent know much about them, according to a new poll.

Harstad

"The bottom line is Texans have only limited knowledge and limited interest in the workers' compensation debate here in the Legislature," said Paul Harstad, vice president of Peter D. Hart Research Associates Inc. "This is not what you'd call a burning issue for voters."

The firm polled 605 Texas voters for the Texas Trial Lawyers Association, a group of attorneys who represents injured workers, and Texans for Civil Justice, described as a victims' rights group.

Lawmakers will try for the third time this year to pass workers' compensation reform legislation in a special legislative session that begins Nov. 14.

The system has been criticized as combining inadequate benefits for workers with skyrocketing premiums.

Even though Texas voters don't know much about workers' compensation, they do favor fair payments to injured workers, said the survey.

"Given a tough choice between cutting business premiums and ensuring fair compensation for employees, a strong majority comes down on the side of protecting fair compensation for employees," Harstad told a Tuesday news conference with Texans for Civil Justice, which released the poll.

The survey was dismissed as "worthless" by Dane Harris, president of the Texas Association of Business.

"They have picked emotional nonissues in an effort to put up a smoke screen to defeat true reform of the system," Harris said.

When asked about workers' compensation goals, 80 percent said ensuring fair compensation for injured employees either was very important or the single most import aspect of the system.

Preserving the right to trial by jury was ranked very important or the single most important goal by 68 percent of those polled, while 41 percent gave that ranking to reducing business premiums to below the national average to improve the business climate in the state.

Fifty-nine percent said injured workers should have a trial by jury option. Only 14 percent agreed with the notion of eliminating a right to jury trials in workers' compensation cases.

Harris, however, said the issue is not trial by jury but whether the administrative record built in a case before the Industrial Accident Board should be part of a trial. Cases now start from scratch when they go from the state agency to court.

Business also supports adequate compensation for workers injured on the job, he said, adding that one way to achieve that is by cutting the cost of attorneys and other "middle people."

DEATHS

Jayne Houston

Funeral services for Jayne Houston of Loveland, Colo., formerly of Midland, ill be held 10:30 a.m. Thursday at the Resurrection Fellowship in Loveland with the Rev. John F. Stocker officiating. Interment will follow at Loveland Burial Park.

Ms. Houston died Sunday at her home after a lengthy illness. She lived in the Midland and Kerrville areas of Texas for most her adult live until she moved to Loveland in 1983.

Born May 27, 1923 in Mount Pleasant, she was the daughter of Dave and Mari Elizabeth-Tabb Tidmore.

Ms. Houston graduated from high school in Midland and was self-employed as an international porcelain artist. She was a world-renowned artist and teacher in the field of porcelain art. She was the founder of Jayne Houston Products, which provides supplies to the porcelain art industry.

A teacher for more than 35 years, Ms. Houston taught porcelain art in the United States as well as Central and South America, Europe and Australia. She served as president of the International Porcelain Art Teachers Organization as well as curator of several exhibits at the Smithsonian Museum in Washington, D.C. She also wrote and published several books on porcelain paintings.

She is survived by two sons, Tom H. Houston Jr. of Loveland and Ronald H. Houston of Texas; one daughter, Mary Allice Allen of Texas; two brothers, Max Tidemore of Lubbock and Jim Tidemore of Texas; two sisters, Ann Wood of Irving and Martha Patterson of Midland; and six grandchildren.

Contributions can be made to Logos Ministries, 4976 N. Franklin Ave., Loveland, Colo., 80538.

Dana Mowell

Dana Mowell of Midland died late Monday night in a local hospital.

Services will be at 1 p.m. Thursday in the Ellis Funeral Home Chapel with Dr. James Denison, pastor of First Baptist Church, officiating. Burial will follow at Resthaven Memorial Park, North Cemetery.

Mrs. Mowell was born Nov. 29, 1916 in Snyder. She was reared in Rule and attended schools there. On Aug. 10, 1935 she married John Noble Mowell in Haskell County. The family moved to Midland in 1956. Her husband died in 1975.

Mrs. Mowell was a member of First Baptist Church. She also was a member of the Norman Read Chapter of the Order of Eastern Star, No. 1010.

Survivors include three daughters, Joanne Barr of Azle, and Marjolaine Young and Cheryl Tarpley, both of Midland; two brothers, Robert R. Perry of Midland and Carl Perry of Lamesa; five grandchildren, one great-grandchild; pne nephew and one niece.

Opal Shanor

CRANE — Services for Opal Shanor, 77, of Crane were to be at 11 a.m. today in the Richard W. Box Funeral Home Chapel in Crane with the Rev. John McClean, pastor of the First United Methodist Church in Crane, officiating.

Burial will be in the Crane County Cemetery under direction of Richard W. Box Funeral Home.

Mrs. Shanor died Monday in her home in Crane.

She was born on July 9, 1912, in DeLeon, was graduated from Iraan High School's first graduating class, and was married to Lawrence C. Shanor March 17, 1930, in Iraan. He died on Dec. 25, 1986.

Mrs. Shanor was a member of the Baptist Church.

Survivors include two daughters, Carla Jean McCarty of Midland and Gayla Phillips of Crane; a sister, Margaret LaVoyce Robbins of Albuquerque, N.M.; five grandchildren.

Jerry Saylor

DALLAS — Jerry Saylor, 42, of Dallas, formerly of Midland, died Tuesday at a Waco hospital following a lengthy illness.

Funeral services will be private.

A 1964 graduate of Lee High School, Saylor served with the U.S. Army in Vietnam and Panama. He received a bachelor of business administration degree in 1971 from the University of Texas at Austin.

Before moving to Dallas in 1985, he was a senior sales representative for Dresser Industries' Midland division, formerly Cardinal Chemical Inc.

Saylor is survived by a sister, Trish Sonnamaker of Dallas.

Arnold Nelson

Graveisde services for Arnold F. Nelson, 75, of Midland will be at 9:30 a.m. Thursday at Reathaven Memorial Park with Rev. G.A. McGee, pastor of Belview Baptist Church, officiating. Thomas Funeral Home is in charge of arrangements.

He was born April 8, 1914 in St. Paul, Minn., and had been a resident of Midland for the past 10 years. He was a member of Casa de Amigos, the senior citizens center, the Golden Agers and the VFW.

He is survived by his wife, Murial Nelson of Yankton, S.D.

OPPORTUNITIES FOR VOLUNTEERS

From South Carolina to San Francisco, we salute the many volunteers who have been there to meet the needs of others. Join this large corps of caring, sharing people as a volunteer in your community of Midland. Here are just a few of the opportunities currently available through the Volunteer Center.

■ One step at a time is how you can help disabled individuals to improve their ability to learn basic skills and job-related tasks. This is an opportunity to work directly with clients and to see growth as you help to simplify and reinforce basic tasks. A weekly minimum of two hours between 8 a.m. and 3:30 p.m. Monday through Friday is asked. Orientation and training are provided.

■ Answer a telephone warmline for children who are home alone. Volunteers are needed at a local agency for two afternoons a month from 2:30 p.m. to 5:30 p.m. weekdays. Those few hours will go far to assuring the safety and well-being of our children.

■ Fire up those kilns! Three full size kilns and a class of 15 seniors are looking for a ceramics teacher who will share creative knowledge and caring support each Tuesday at a local center. This is a showcase opportunity for the volunteer who desires to combine creativity with outreach.

■ Present the American economic system to the entrepreneur and consumers of the future. Experienced business people who enjoy communicating with youth are needed to share their expertise with students in sixth, ninth or 12th grades. A daytime commitment of one hour a week for either a four week (sixth grade) session or a 10 week (ninth and 12th grades) session is required.

For more information on how you can volunteer, please call the Volunteer Center of Midland at 697-8781.

Chemical complex called 'time bomb'

AP Laserphoto

Phillips Petroleum Co. employees wait outside the company credit union Tuesday for word about the fate of their co-workers. Twenty-one employees are still missing after Monday's explosion.

By MIKE COCHRAN

PASADENA (AP) — Welder Charlie Wilkinson and his friends say life in the Houston Ship Channel petrochemical complex is like working on a time bomb while sitting on a powder keg.

"And you can toss a Molotov cocktail in there somewhere, too," quipped Wilkinson, bitterly.

Charlie's buddy, James Davis, a pipefitter, was quick to agree.

"If a fire or an explosion doesn't get you, cancer will," Davis said. "I've lived across the channel at Mont Belvieu all my life, and that's the biggest time bomb around.

"But if you're gonna die, you're gonna die."

Wilkinson was in a barbershop and Davis was hunting Monday afternoon when a series of explosions turned the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant into an inferno.

At least two people died in the blast, and 21 missing were presumed dead.

"My heart just sank," Wilkinson said. "I knew something terrible had happened."

Tuesday, he and others converged on The Barn, a beer and barbecue joint surrounded by chemical plants and patronized by the men and women who work in the industrial maze.

Theirs is an unusual lifestyle.

"I wake up every morning wondering what I'm breathing," said Bonnie Cohen, who lives and works nearby and indicated that the perils of Pasadena are no secret.

"It's not like people come in here every day and say, 'Thank, God, I'm still alive,' " explained Peggy Webb, a waitress at The Barn. "But they do come in here to unwind. And the danger of a chemical explosion is always in the back of their minds."

Her customers concurred.

"I really think most of the hands working out here know this could happen to them today or tomorrow or next week," said Wilkinson, 40, who has worked in this Houston suburb of 100,000 for 14 years.

At least until Tuesday.

Wilkinson said he was fired Tuesday morning from his job at the Soltex Polymer's plastics plant, just down Battleground Road from The Barn and not far from the Phillips facility.

Wilkinson was a little vague about the circumstances of his dismissal, but seemed unconcerned.

"The Phillips thing made me realize I've got to find another way to make a living," he said. "I want to make a lot of money for my wife, but I want to live to spend it with her."

While no less cryptic, Davis, 30, said he has no intention of working elsewhere.

"Sure, you could move some place safe and make $3 or $4 an hour doing something," he said. "I've worked for all of them around here, and I'm never gonna get rich, but it's a living."

Ms. Webb said she was clearing tables at The Barn when the explosion occurred and was too stunned to realize at once what had happened.

"This place is made of sheet metal, and it was just quivering," she said. "It was a hideous sound. I thought somebody had run into the side of the building."

Phillips explosion reminds 'hero' of Vietnam

By DAVE PEGO

PASADENA (AP) — The scene reminded James Westerfield of his time in Vietnam — flames engulfing the ground and helicopters overhead.

Westerfield, 37, was at the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant, helping build a new reactor loop complex like the one that exploded Monday afternoon.

He saw a large bluish-white cloud start spreading quickly and knew something was terribly wrong. It was a leak, he surmised, and he realized those who hesitated were probably destined to die.

Acting on instinct as he did in war, Westerfield sprinted for safety, scooping up an injured person, as the plant exploded. At least two people were killed and more than 20 others were missing and presumed dead. Scores were injured.

"If there hadn't been dozens of heroes, there would be a lot more people dead out there," he said.

Westerfield said a huge ball of fire grew, hurtling across the ground and blowing down men like rag dolls.

"It was a red fireball, absorbing that white cloud, gobbling it up, eating up everything in sight," said Westerfield, a fabricator and supervisor for Brown & Root. "There was no way it was going to stop."

Westerfield said he saw a man knocked down five times as different waves of searing energy pulsed forth. Each time, he said, the man got up and kept running.

But as Westerfield ran, correctly anticipating more explosions, he spotted one of his company's pipe inspectors and he picked up a man he knows only as Gary.

Brown & Root spokesman Joe Stevens said the man, Gary Bogle, was treated for unspecified back injuries at Gulf Coast Hospital. A hospital official said he was still there Tuesday night, but she could give no further information.

"I carried him to safety," Westerfield said Tuesday, shrugging casually as he looked at thin wasps of smoke still rising from the plant. "I had to get him."

Westerfield said he thought he was in Vietnam again.

"I saw that fireball and the choppers overhead, and my first thought was I was back over there," said Westerfield, who carries enough shrapnel in his legs and back to classify him as a disabled veteran.

"You know, I didn't think about my injuries. I was more worried I might have done more damage to him. It was clear he had spine and neck injuries," he said.

He wants no thanks for what he did.

"There ain't no heroes out here," Westerfield said. "It was just everybody trying to help everybody else.

"Now, everybody that got out — they're all heroes."

"If a fire or an explosion doesn't get you, cancer will. I've lived across the channel...all my life, and that's the biggest time bomb around."

People wait for word of missing employees

By DAVE PEGO

PASADENA (AP) — The Phillips Employees Credit Union always has been the corner of dreams and hope in Pasadena.

People have long come here to lay away pay for the cars, homes and vacations that drive their ambitions.

But on Tuesday, some arrived clinging to thin hope that missing relatives and friends somehow survived Monday's deadly blast at the Phillips Petroleum Co. plastics plant.

Gathering around the one-story building in small groups, they talked quietly, trying to learn who was still among the missing, 21 workers presumed dead by company officials.

Mary De La Vergne, 38, found the name of her common-law husband, Cipriana Rodriguez, 43, who had been working in the building that exploded.

"I had just taken him lunch," said Ms. De La Vergne, dressed in black. "I heard the explosion when I was going back home."

She remembered how he had called quickly following a much smaller explosion several months ago, just to assure her that he was all right.

"He called me right away then, so when I didn't hear from him this time, I knew something was wrong," Ms. De La Vergne said.

Two officials from Phillips knocked on her door at 10:30 p.m. Monday and said he was among the missing.

"I can only keep on hoping," she said, then collapsed into tears onto the steering wheel of her pickup.

Albert Gonzalez, 27, who works in the plant's distribution department, was leaning against a highway overpass buttress, sunglasses masking reddish eyes.

"My best friend is in there, I think," he said. "He hasn't called his mother and sister, and he didn't come home last night."

Gonzalez has been calling his friend's relatives regularly, but hope dwindled as the smoke from the fire created by the explosion was reduced to thin wisps.

"They're sitting by the phone and it won't even go for a full ring before they pick it up. They say, 'Mark?' and I say, 'No, it's just me.' "

Ray Rodriguez, 50, of La Porte, said he came back Tuesday to see if it was safe to retrieve his truck, which is still parked inside the plant. His ears were still ringing from the blast, which knocked him to the ground from about 100 yards away.

He shook his head as he thought about how close he had come to death — only a football field away.

"We ran for our lives," he said. "Some people wanted to stop and I just told them to keep on going, because you can't tell what's going to happen next. And there were more explosions."

Albert Norvins, 21, watched silently, thinking about the fact he had applied for a carpentry job 10 days ago at the plant, but had been turned down.

"Maybe it was a blessing," he said, looking down as a plastic milk carton — one of the factory's primary products — blew by.

Robin Wilson said she was working out in the company gym with her husband when the alarm sounded.

"If you didn't run, you were dead," she recalled.

But her husband had to go right back. He is the shift captain for the plant's firefighting team. He never left the scene of the explosion and was still helping put out hot spots more than 26 hours after the accident, she said.

"Both of my kids got scared when dad didn't come home," she said. "My 6-year-old said, 'Please call daddy at work.' But there was nothing left at work to call."

THURSDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your finances and career demand the lion's share of your attention. The new year finds you ready to settle down to business. Breaking with a partner or company in February will put you in a positive, forward-looking mood. When you shed old baggage, you feel able to tackle almost anything. April is full of delightful surprises — some of them financial, others romantic. Take a more practical approach to a relationship and both parties will be happier.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: singer Mahalia Jackson, actress Jaclyn Smith, French president Francois Mitterrand, actor Bob Hoskins, TV host Pat Sajak.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If tempers are allowed to fly today, there is no telling how far they may go. Others respond more readily to reason and gentleness. Secret concern over finances requires your immediate attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This is the kind of day you just want things done. Difficulties or objections are raised by key associates. Curb your temper. Keep your personal possessions under lock and key.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be on the lookout for opportunities that can add to your stature and financial worth. Do not neglect routine tasks. A letter or cable has hidden meaning. Read between the lines.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be guided by your impulses today; they are being fired by fine planetary configurations. Events take place that will deepen your understanding of others. Reconnect with people you have not seen recently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Look forward to an electrifying day — mentally as well as emotionally. Have no regrets. Follow your instincts in career and romance. Dining in a great restaurant will put mate in a mellow mood.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Take whatever steps you deem proper to ensure your loved ones' financial future. Be certain you have enough insurance coverage. Someone who lives abroad may exert a powerful influence over your destiny.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Each step forward could be painfully laborious unless it is well planned in advance. Accept the assistance of your loved ones. Clean out your closets, contributing unwanted items to your favorite charity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Restrain your more extravagant urges today. By afternoon's end, you will feel a job is well done. A conversation may get around to subjects you have avoided in the past. Be discreet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be more practical. Keep a tighter rein on office politics and spending. Although a job offer is tempting, you might do better by staying put. A calm partner will bring you great happiness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Learn to recognize futuristic developments in business and finance. Old-fashioned methods will deplete your profits. Curb a tendency to be demanding or you risk losing a friend or lover.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An opportunity to buy land in a distant place arises. Family and business associates urge you to make decisions too quickly. Avoid talking with a neighbor who is easily upset.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An animated discussion could lead to achievement of your aims. Welcome ideas about self-promotion. News from foreign shores is encouraging. Romance is delicious.

Bridge players like to try a bit of one-upmanship against their peers. There's even a name—the Grosvenor Coup—for a deliberate play that could cost a trick but does not because your opponent won't ever believe you could be so foolish. It gives you the chance to smile pityingly at a player who has just missed a chance to pick up a trick. We came across this example at a rubber bridge game in New York's renown Cavendish Club.

With his wealth of aces and kings, South correctly decided his hand was too good for a one no trump opening bid. When North made a forcing jump in spades, South launched into Blackwood and settled in the small slam because of potential third-round losers in trumps, hearts and clubs.

West's natural lead was the queen of diamonds, taken in dummy. Declarer led the jack of spades and East followed with the nine! Had declarer played low, East's trump trick would have vanished, but what sane East would play low holding Q 10 9 in the suit? So declarer rose with the king and, when West discarded a club, East smirked wickedly and South's face turned beet red.

But it was declarer who had the last laugh. He cashed the ace of spades, king and ace of hearts and king of diamonds, then ruffed a heart in dummy and a diamond in hand. To complete the strip, the ace and king of clubs were cleared. Now East was given the lead with his high trump. Holding only one card in each red suit, he could do nothing other than give declarer a ruff-sluff, allowing South to discard a club from one hand while ruffing in the other.

McCartney glad he can play 'Yesterday'

ROME (AP) — Paul McCartney says his better relations with other former Beatles has made it possible for him to play the legendary group's songs in public again.

"My relations with former members of the band have improved. Those songs are wonderful memories for me and that is why I am playing them again," he told reporters Tuesday before his Rome concert, part of a world tour promoting his latest album "Flowers in the Dirt."

Those songs include "Can't Buy Me Love," "Eleanor Rigby," "Back in the USSR," "Hey Jude" and "Yesterday," which he called his favorite.

PLATTEVILLE, Wis. (AP) — Former astronaut Scott Carpenter says humans need to consider "a mission to planet Earth" before heading to other solar systems.

"The planet, our home, is in desperate need of intensive care," he said Monday night at the University of Wisconsin-Platteville. "The future of everything we do depends on this planet."

The mission to this planet is needed to combat the problems that are endangering Earth's ecology, he said.

Carpenter

Carpenter, one of the original seven Mercury astronauts on the United States' first manned mission in space, said 30 million acres of tropical rain forests are being destroyed each year, 70 million acres of forest in the industrial north are badly damaged, new deserts are being created and holes in the ozone layer are getting larger.

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — Mississippi's segregationist watchdog agency supplied state lawmakers, officials and educators a standard speech promoting segregation to deliver before Northern audiences in 1963.

The speech claimed separate drinking fountains and bathrooms were necessary because many blacks lacked morals, education and proper hygiene, according to a copy obtained by The Clarion-Ledger.

"There are many Negroes, of course, who have reached plateaus of citizenship," the speech says. "They are personally clean, have high morals and are educated. However, they are still in the minority."

The now-defunct, state-sponsored Sovereignty Commission spied on, infiltrated and harassed civil rights groups during the 1960s. It also funded the White Citizens' Council, an organization established to promote segregation.

Erle Johnston Jr. of Forest, who plans to describe the commission and the events of the 1960s in a book, said he wrote the speech and its accompanying answers to questions expected from the Northern news media.

Johnston, who usually accompanied the speakers, handled public relations for the commission in the 1960s before serving as its director from 1963 through 1967.

Johnston defended the speech as appropriate for its time. "We were trying to let people know how things worked in Mississippi. We didn't try to convert a soul. We just tried to tell them how things worked," he said.

Segregation in the 1960s was in its death throes and its defenders "resorted to any means of survival," said David Sansing, a professor of history at the University of Mississippi.

"A society that discriminates and exploits will not mind lying. It would just do whatever it had to do to justify a system that had no defense," Sansing said.

The commission paid air fare, meals and other expenses for the volunteer speakers, who included a reporter from The Clarion-Ledger, well-known in the 1960s for its hard line against integration.

Titled "The Message From Mississippi," the speech claims Mississippi blacks preferred segregationist ways.

"Many of our colored leaders, ministers, educators and newspaper editors openly endorse the separate school system and repudiate the outsiders who come into Mississippi to violate our laws," the speech says.

The questions and answers discuss two of Mississippi's most infamous civil rights slayings, referring to both as "unsolved murders:"

■ Seven days after 14-year-old Chicago native Emmett Till whistled at a white store owner's wife, his body was pulled from the Tallahatchie River in Tallahatchie County on Aug. 31, 1955. He had been beaten and shot once in the head.

An all-white jury acquitted two white men of the killing.

While Till's slaying "was a crime of violence we deplore," the speech says, what Till did was "a very serious offense, although it was not deserving of capital punishment."

■ On April 24, 1959, in Poplarville, a mob of at least 23 white men dragged Mack Parker, a black 23-year-old truck driver accused of raping a white woman, from his jail cell, shot him, weighted him with chains and threw his body in the Pearl River.

The speech claims the killing took place because "Mississippians had watched as court decrees stayed the execution of a St. Louis Negro, Robert Goldsby, who shot down a white woman as she was trying to protect her husband."

The speech also claims that the federal government was responsible for the riot that resulted in two deaths following the 1962 admission of James Meredith into the University of Mississippi as its first black student.

"There was no disturbance, no injury, no death, so long as the state of Mississippi was permitted to be responsible for law and order in Mississippi," the speech says. "It was only when the federal authorities acted hastily in firing tear gas into a group of students and others that violence, injury, death and destruction of property resulted."

RADNOR, Pa. (AP) — A new TV movie on Richard Nixon's final days as president won't seem tough enough to his detractors, say journalists Carl Bernstein and Bob Woodward.

"Nixon-haters won't be happy with the portrait because you're feeling sorry for him," Woodward said in the Oct. 28 issue of TV Guide magazine. "You see the crushing loss, and it's just very, very clear that ... it hurt."

Nixon

The movie is based on Woodward and Bernstein's book, "The Final Days," which was published shortly after the release of a film based on their first book, "All the President's Men."

When the book version of "The Final Days" came out, Bernstein recalls, "we were attacked on about every ground you can imagine."

The book, like the TV movie to be shown Oct. 29 on ABC, includes a scene in which Nixon and then-Secretary of State Henry Kissinger knelt on the rug in prayer.

"Our colleagues in the press had trouble believing that what we had written was true. Particularly the scene about Kissinger and Nixon," Bernstein said.

Gorbachev seeks aid during visit to Finland

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev today began a visit to a thriving Soviet neighbor, seeking Finnish help in bolstering his country's ailing economy.

Accompanied by his wife, Raisa, Gorbachev was given a red-carpet airport welcome by President Mauno Koivisto and driven under overcast skies to the waterfront presidential residence in downtown Helsinki.

A handful of demonstrators were among several hundred Finns who lined the street near the palace, many cheering and waving small Finnish and Soviet flags.

The demonstrators wanted their government to seek the return of Karelia, an eastern region which Finland ceded to the Soviets in 1944 after fighting two wars in five years.

"Give us back our Karelia!" the protesters shouted in Finnish as Gorbachev reviewed the honor guard in a light rain.

"I want the Soviets to discuss with us whether they would return it, since they said Stalin took it and that it was an unwarranted aggression. ... What would be wrong with correcting that mistake?" said Martti Siirala, 66, who said he was born in the annexed territory.

Finnish officials have said they did not expect the issue to be raised during Gorbachev's three-day visit, and they said most Finns accept Soviet control of the region. About 400,000 Finns were displaced by the annexation.

Gorbachev, whose economic reforms need an infusion of Western technology and business acumen, planned to sign a five-year trade agreement and several specific accords for new joint businesses.

One agreement is to set the groundwork for new industries in the Kola Peninsula, which until recently was a closed military area. It is the home of the Soviet Northern Fleet and the base for northern defenses.

In the Gorbachev entourage was Vaino Vyalyas, the Communist Party chief of Estonia. His inclusion reflected recognition of the cultural links between the Finns and the people of the Baltic republic across the Gulf of Finland.

Soviet government spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, also in the entourage, reiterated in an interview that Moscow has no plans to hinder East bloc countries instituting democratic reform.

"The Brezhnev doctrine as you called it is dead and there is no hope of revival," he told ABC's "Good Morning America," referring to the concept of intervention named after the late Soviet leader.

Despite a bloody history, the Soviets and Finns have close business ties.

Gorbachev could be forced to run for Soviet seat

MOSCOW (AP) — President Mikhail S. Gorbachev and other top Communists would have to campaign for their parliamentary seats in local districts in 1994, much as the British prime minister does, if the legislature gets its way.

The constitutional change throwing all seats in parliament up for popular election was approved by the Supreme Soviet Tuesday in a 254-to-85 vote. However, it must be confirmed by the legislature's parent body, the Congress of People's Deputies, which meets at the end of the year.

The change, part of a package of constitutional amendments approved Tuesday, denies the Communist Party and other special interests their guaranteed seats.

Last year's political reform allocated 100 seats to the Communist Party, which filled them by allowing the leadership to select just 100 candidates.

That allowed Gorbachev and most of the ruling Politburo to be seated in Congress without facing a public vote of confidence.

The Supreme Soviet, the 542-member full-time legislature, did not require Gorbachev to mount a national campaign to win re-election to the presidency, although some deputies had suggested a direct election. That post will continue to be filled by the Congress from among its members.

The decision by no means restricts the Communist Party from running candidates for geographical seats. Currently, 80 percent of the 2,250 deputies are Communist Party members.

Last year's political reform gave Soviet voters their first real selection of candidates. But the election system was complex and many people complained that the process was undemocratic and favored the status quo.

Two-thirds of the 2,250 deputies in the Congress were elected from geographical districts. The other one-third were elected by social organizations, and the reform package promised 100 seats each to the Communist Party, the official trade unions and cooperative organizations.

The package allocated 75 seats each to the Komsomol (Communist Youth League), to creative unions and to groups of women, academics and veterans.

Progressives complained that the system violated the principle of one person, one vote. They said members of these organizations had the opportunity to vote in each group.

Pro-democracy activists invited to talks

East German leader says 'no one' to be excluded

BERLIN (AP) — East Germany's new Communist Party leader today reversed the party's position and said pro-democracy activists will be invited to join in national talks on possible reforms.

In another change, state-run media reported that the government will propose a law next month allowing all citizens to travel to the West and dropping requirements that family members stay behind as insurance.

And party chief Egon Krenz hinted Tuesday he is considering amnesty for people jailed on charges of trying to flee to the West. Western sources estimate thousands are jailed on such charges.

Krenz, speaking in response to reporters' questions after meeting with a senior West German official, said pro-democracy activists could take part in the reform talks.

"No one will be excluded from the dialogue," he said.

Krenz did not say whether the nation's growing opposition would be officially recognized, or whether challenges to the socialist foundation of East Germany would be tolerated.

Communist Party officials previously had made it clear that opposition groups would be excluded from such talks, and staunchly reaffirmed the country's socialist basis.

In the first meeting between the new leader and a senior West German official, Krenz met for two hours with Wolfgang Mischnick, parliamentary leader of the Free Democratic Party, the junior partner in Bonn's governing coalition.

Tuesday, about 12,000 East Germans defied a warning from Krenz and protested in the streets of the capital after Parliament confirmed him as president. Police did not intervene.

After the ritual confirmation in the traditionally rubber-stamp chamber — some deputies voted "no" for the first time in the country's history — Krenz called for an end to street demonstrations by advocates of a more open society.

He also promised to investigate charges of police brutality during protests earlier this month and Communist authorities admitted, for the first time, that some police had used excessive force against peaceful activists.

Krenz was in charge of East Germany's police at the time.

The 52-year-old career politician replaced Erich Honecker last week as party leader, East Germany's supreme leadership post, and promised "a new course" for the country that young skilled workers have been leaving by the tens of thousands.

The state-run ADN news agency reported Tuesday that when the Communist Party's governing Central Committee begins its next session Nov. 8, it will consider reform proposals including a more liberal travel law.

ADN said the party's ruling Politburo would propose a system under which every citizen could get a passport and be allowed to travel "to all nations and West Berlin."

It said the Politburo would call for an end to the current requirements that family members stay behind as insurance that the travelers will return, and that current demands for "grounds" to travel should be dropped.

Since Hungary opened its Western border last month, more than 50,000 East Germans have fled to West Germany, which grants them automatic citizenship. Tens of thousands more have taken to the streets, saying they are staying to fight for reforms including free elections and speech.

ADN said the Politburo expressed the hope that the new travel law can be put into effect before the end of this year.

Krenz ran unopposed for the presidency and received 26 'no' votes in the 500-member Parliament, with another 26 deputies abstaining.

His election triggered the East Berlin demonstration, in which marchers demanding more democratic elections chanted "Egon, who asked us?" and "We are the competition."

The march was shown on East Germany's state-run television and reported by ADN with no hint of criticism. Witnesses estimated the number of marchers at 7,000, but ADN reported later that as many as 12,000 took part.

No violence was reported between protesters and police, who directed traffic to keep the march route clear.

During the election of East Germany's new head of state, Egon Krenz, an unidentified member of the parliament votes against Krenz Tuesday in East Berlin. Twenty-six of the 500-member chamber voted against the 52-year-old Krenz, the first time such a thing had happened to an East German leader.

Shevardnadze willing to meet with 'every party' in Poland

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — The Soviet foreign minister met jointly with Communist Party officials and one of their harshest foes today and said later his country is determined to maintain good relations with both sides.

Eduard Shevardnadze also emphasized the need to clear up "blank spots" in the countries' history. One such "blank spot" is a World War II massacre of Polish officers, for which Soviet forces have generally been blamed.

Shevardnadze met for more than an hour with the Communist Party's first secretary, Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski, and then invited Adam Michnik to join them. Michnik is editor in chief of the pro-Solidarity Gazeta Wyborcza daily and spent nearly five years in jail for his opposition activites.

Michnik, a close adviser to Solidarity leader Lech Walesa and perhaps Poland's best-known critic of one-party rule, was the only reporter allowed into the room. The three talked for about 10 minutes before Shevardnadze came out.

Shevardnadze told reporters he is willing to meet with "every party, with anybody" and said the Soviet Union wants close relations with both the Communist Party and with Poland's new government, which is led by Solidarity.

Speaking of "blanks spots" in Polish-Soviet history, Shevardnadze promised they would be cleared up.

"We want only the truth. It is needed by our two nations and is in the interest of friendship," he said.

Asked how much change the Soviet Union would tolerate in Poland, he responded: "We don't set up order in other countries. Would you want it to be so?"

Shevardnadze arrived in Poland Tuesday and, as a sign of goodwill, promised that Moscow will maintain fuel deliveries crucial to Poland's survival.

He also met Tuesday with Taduesz Mazowiecki, the East bloc's first non-Communist prime minister, and the two announced that Mazowiecki will visit Moscow next month.

The Kremlin has said it views the radical political changes in Poland to be an internal matter. Its decision to allow Poland and Hungary to chart an independent course marked a significant shift in Soviet policy toward its East bloc allies.

Mazowiecki and his Solidarity-led Cabinet have promised, however, to respect the country's military obligations to the Soviet-led alliance.

Shevardnadze, the highest-level Soviet official to visit Poland since Mazowiecki's took office in mid-August, held a meeting with the prime minister Tuesday.

A's workout at Arizona camp

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Before the World Series resumes at Candlestick Park, part of it will spend some time in Phoenix.

The Subway Series is taking a jet.

The Oakland Athletics were to work out today and Thursday at Phoenix Stadium, their spring training facility.

A week after a devastating earthquake hit the Bay area, San Francisco and Oakland worked out Tuesday after morning showers.

The World Series is scheduled to resume Friday at Candlestick after an 11-day delay between games. It's the longest delay in the history of the Fall Classic.

The decision to move to Phoenix was made after Tuesday's workout by General Manager Sandy Alderson.

"Sandy told the players this was their best chance to get ready," Oakland manager Tony La Russa said.

"We'll work out at 2 (p.m.) on Wednesday and noon on Thursday and leave at 6 (p.m.)," La Russa said.

"If they could guarantee we could do everything here that we need to do, we would stay here," La Russa said. "The people here just want us to be ready."

Scattered showers were predicted for the Bay area for today and Thursday.

The A's started their season in Arizona in February and played their first exhibition game at Phoenix Stadium on March 5.

It was suggested to La Russa that the A's are going back to spring training.

"I wouldn't put any label on it," the A's manager said.

"It's more like being on the 15-day disabled list," A's catcher Terry Steinbach said. "I'm sure everyone will feel a little strange on Friday at Candlestick."

The Giants will continue their workouts in San Francisco, where an aftershock of 4.5 was registered Tuesday. The aftershock, the latest of about 3,500 to hit the area since the quake, did not affect the teams nor the stadiums.

"We're feeling a lot better now because we know what's going on," Giants pitcher Kelly Downs said. "It would be real tough if they would've needed to delay it again. If that happened, I'm sure a lot of guys would feel that they should just cancel the World Series."

Candlestick Park, meanwhile, is set to go for Game 3 on Friday evening. San Francisco mayor Art Agnos on Tuesday certified the stadium as structurally sound.

"It's as safe as any facility can be, before or after an earthquake," he said.

Layoff will affect pitching, hitting

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The muscles have tightened. The timing has been lost. But who has been hurt more by the 11-day World Series layoff, hitters or pitchers?

"You'd think the pitchers would be on top. That what you always hear," said Scott Garrelts, the San Francisco Giants' scheduled starter in Friday's Game 3.

"I think the pitching will be the closest thing to normal this weekend," Oakland Athletics manager Tony La Russa said. "But baseball being baseball, the score Friday night will probably be 10-9."

Conventional baseball wisdom says pitchers are ahead of hitters at the start of spring training. That's what some players think will be the case this weekend.

"The pitchers are throwing," Oakland's Mark McGwire said. "Batting practice isn't anything close to a game situation. But then, pitchers definitely have the advantage in the World Series, anyway. You don't see them. You don't know their tendencies."

Oakland pitching coach Dave Duncan said his staff has done a lot of work, either in batting practice or on the sidelines.

"At this point in the season, you don't have to throw 130 pitches to stay in shape," Duncan said. "Physically, I'm not worried in the least about our guys being ready Friday."

Brett Butler of the Giants said timing is the key and that hitters lose it faster than pitchers.

"It's harder for batters to get back in the groove," he said. "We both have to get our timing back but it's more difficult for us to do it."

Candy Maldonado of the Giants thought pitchers would have an additional advantage.

"They'll be more rested," he said. "But sometimes too much rest is not so good for pitchers because they feel too strong and they tend to overthrow."

Dave Stewart, who threw a five-hit shutout in Oakland's victory in Game 1, will start Game 3. He's not worried about having too much rest.

"I think the rest does me good. It makes me stronger," he said. "I'm not worried about overthrowing. It just means picking up your concentration a little better."

Jose Canseco of the A's thought the mental layoff would play as big a role as the physical layoff.

"There's no intensity left," he said. "I think with the earthquake, it all went away. Most of the guys just want to play and get out of here."

Rozelle threatens to leave 'early'

CLEVELAND (AP) — Paul Tagliabue, one of Pete Rozelle's closest advisors, is three votes away from becoming Rozelle's successor as commissioner of the NFL.

The question now is whether Rozelle's implied threat to walk out of the job he had vowed to keep until a successor is chosen will be enough to break the deadlock among NFL owners.

The owners met for 11 hours Tuesday and adjourned after four votes with Tagliabue three short of the 19 needed for election. He had 16 votes to 11 for Jim Finks, the New Orleans Saints president and the candidate of the so-called "Old Guard" owners. Finks had seemed to have the job locked up in July until a group of 11 insurgents blocked his election.

Now it's Tagliabue, who is about as old guard as can be after two decades working closely with Rozelle and old-line owners, who seems in position to get the job.

"Jim Finks' candidacy is dead," Philadelphia's Norman Braman, one of the leaders of the insurgent group, said.

It is blunt statements like that made by Braman which have kept the deadlock going through 40 hours of meetings and 10 ballots. What might eventually break it is Rozelle's implied threat to walk out. He announced his retirement on March 22 and has been living in a New York hotel suite since Aug. 1 while his wife, Carrie, prepares for their move to the San Diego area.

Even if Finks lacks the votes for election, he has more than enough to block Tagliabue. Wellington Mara of the New York Giants and Art Modell of Cleveland are owners who like Tagliabue, a 48-year-old Washington lawyer, but don't want to cede control of the NFL to newcomers.

The new commissioner will have to get 19 votes from just 26 voters. The Los Angeles Raiders' Al Davis left town on Tuesday and San Diego's Alex Spanos won't be present for today's meeting. Both were aligned with Finks.

"There's going to have to be a solution that provides an opportunity for everyone to save face," conceded one of those newcomers, New England's Victor Kiam, who has owned the Patriots for less than a year. "Right now, there's a lot of pride involved."

Rozelle wasn't interested in face.

Clearly exasperated with the delay — it is now 218 days since he announced his retirement — he left some strong hints that he might walk away if the deadlock continues.

"I indicated my patience was becoming very short," he said. "I didn't give them an ultimatum, but they understood how I felt."

Then he added:

"I feel like I've lost some of my retirement already."

Moreover, the core of the Finks support seemed solid.

"I'm still committed to Jim Finks and I'll stay with him until he's voted down," said Modell, who had hinted last week he might switch in the interest of harmony. "If I lose, I lose."

Cindy Robertson of Midland High digs the ball off the hardwood in the Bulldogs' loss to Odessa High Tuesday night.

MHS falls to OHS

By BILL GRIMES
Sports Writer

The Midland High volleyball team has things backwards.

Everybody knows teams are supposed to win on their home court, field, track, mat or what have you — and just be respectable on the road. But Coach Sonja Pittman's Bulldog six continued to defy the norm with a 12-15, 15-12, 17-15 loss to Odessa High Tuesday in the MHS gym.

Volleyball

The Bulldogs, 7-4 in district play, are 5-0 on enemy District 4-5A courts going into Saturday's regular season finale against Abilene High, but finished 2-4 at home sour home after losses to Abilene High, Abilene Cooper, Odessa Permian and Odessa High.

MHS can still figure in the bi-district playoff picture despite Tuesday's loss that dropped the 'Dogs one full game behind co-leaders Odessa Permian and Abilene High. With a win at Abilene High Saturday, the Bulldogs can pull into a tie for second with the Eagles.

'Too Tall' to extend streak with start

IRVING, Texas (AP) — Dallas coach Jimmy Johnson has allowed Cowboys fans to override one of his decisions.

The team's switchboard was flooded Tuesday with more than 200 calls from people unhappy with the announcement that defensive lineman Ed "Too Tall" Jones had lost his starting job after 15 seasons.

Taken aback by the reaction, Johnson compromised.

"OK, we'll start him. If that's what the fans want, we'll keep Ed in there," the first-year coach said. "They want to see him start 200 consecutive games, so we'll do it."

But Cowboys fans wanting to see Jones play had better be on time for Sunday's game against the Phoenix Cardinals.

Jones will play the first several plays at left defensive end before giving way to rookie Tony Tolbert, who is expected to play a majority of the game.

Johnson announced Monday that he had decided to bench Jones in favor of Tolbert, a move that would have ended Jones' streak of 198 consecutive starts in non-strike games. Jones took a year off from the NFL to pursue a boxing career.

"Ed has an injured knee that has kept him out of practice," Johnson said in explaining the reasoning behind the lineup switch. "Ed will be the first to tell you we need to do what is in the best interest of the Cowboys to win football games."

At 0-7, the Cowboys are the NFL's only winless team.

Running through District 4-5A

Taking short shots at District 4-5A football:

Midland Lee's best friend — this week only — is Odessa Permian. A Permian victory over Abilene Cooper Friday will automatically put the Rebels into the state playoffs for the seventh consecutive year, the longest streak going in 4-5A at present.

Williamson

The Rebels can earn that honor without laying a pad on one poor soul. Lee is open this week after busting school scoring records on consecutive weekends with 61 points against San Angelo and 65 against Abilene High. Lee's 61-point victory over San Angelo, however, still stands as the biggest margin over another team.

Strambler Watch: Lee's Farris Strambler has 1,507 yards rushing through seven games, and is on a pace of 1,937 for regular season play, providing he can average 215 yards a game against Permian and Cooper. That would still leave him 57 yards short of the single season rushing record held by Isaac Garnett. However, Strambler has now scored 208 points in his career to take the school scoring record from Tyrone Thurman. Thurman and Strambler are tied for single season touchdowns with 18 each.

Midland High's speedy Albert Ray turned in his first career 100-yard game in a loss to Cooper last week with 108. His previous best was 90 yards against Lee.

MHS quarterbacks Patrick Mowles and Jason Stone need 32 yards between them against San Angelo Friday to reach the 1,000-yard passing mark for the year. That should be easy enough for a pair who are averaging over 200 yards a game.

It is believed that Lee kicker Arthur Donnelly has set at least four Rebel kicking marks, but records are sketchy in this area. Kicking records believed set by Donnelly are career field goals (12), career kicking points (138), single season field goals (8) and longest field goal (46 yards).

Bad news for Lee this week is that Permian's Chris Comer has returned to active Mojo duty and is expected to play against Cooper Friday and be in full stride for Lee and national TV next week at Memorial Stadium.

Permian quarterback Stoney Case (don't you love that name?) played six games before throwing an interception. And, wouldn't you know it, he threw two interceptions against hapless Dallas Jesuit Saturday.

Permian may be ranked No. 2 in the state, but at least until Friday, they will have to settle for being No. 2 in District 4-5A. Lee's 4-0 district mark owns first place until Mojo can put points on the board against Cooper at Ratliff Stadium Friday.

Cooper quarterback Lanny Owens turned in a rare feat against MHS last week, throwing for over 100 yards and rushing for over 100 yards — the double 100, so to speak.

The district probably has never seen so many single game 200-yard rushers in one season. Strambler has five in seven games. Odessa High's Patrick Brown had almost 300 yards against Cooper and Permian's Comer and Arvey Villa both have cracked the barrier this year. Great runners or poor defense?

Odessa athletic director John Wilkins says it's a bit of both.

"There is no question that we have some talented backs in this league," says Wilkins, "but you have to think that there is a lack of defense around the district. We've had great backs in this league before who couldn't turn in these kind of numbers."

He has a point. Four teams have given up 99 or more points (San Angelo 99, Odessa High 109, MHS 121 and Abilene High 137).

Texas teams win in NBA

NEW YORK (AP) — David Robinson scored half of his 22 points in the fourth quarter and Sean Elliott had 20 points Tuesday night as the San Antonio Spurs beat the New York Knicks 104-99 in a preseason game.

It was the Knicks' fourth straight loss after winning their first two exhibition games.

The Spurs, led by their high-priced rookies, outscored the Knicks in the first two periods to build a 48-37 halftime lead. But the Knicks made it close by scoring 62 points in the second half. Entering the final quarter trailing 75-62, New York cut the deficit to six by scoring seven straight points to start the period.

Gerald Wilkins, who had 24 points, hit two 3-point shots in the last 30 seconds, pulling the Knicks within 102-99. But Vernon Maxwell made a layup for the final points of the game.

Patrick Ewing led all scorers with 25 points and also blocked eight shots.

Robinson and Ewing matched up for the first time and the rookie outrebounded the veteran 9-4. But Robinson had only one blocked shot.

In Dallas, Rolando Blackman scored 28 points and Roy Tarpley added 22 Tuesday night to offset Dominique Wilkins' 39-point effort and lead the Dallas over Atlanta 121-106 in an NBA exhibition game.

Wilkins' three-pointer with 2:22 to play got Atlanta to within 109-101, their closest since the first quarter. Wilkins added a three-point play with 1:25 to pull the Hawks to within 112-106.

But baskets by James Donaldson and Blackman and Blackman's two free throws all in the final 1:09 sealed the win for the Mavericks.

Dallas improved to 2-4 in the exhibition season while Atlanta slipped to 2-4.

Canada fights for champ

N.Y. Times News Service

NEW YORK — The quick endings of Mike Tyson's bouts against Michael Spinks (93 seconds) and Carl (the Truth) Williams (91 seconds) have soured the casinos in Atlantic City and Las Vegas on Tyson as a spectacle for their high rollers.

When Tyson's promoter, Don King, sought a $2 million site fee for Tyson's defense against Donovan (Razor) Ruddock, a Jamaican who grew up in Toronto, the casinos passed.

Why, then, did a group from Edmonton, Alberta, ante up $2.5 million for the Nov. 19 bout?

As 44-year-old Garry Stevenson, the on-site promoter, tells it, wounded civic pride motivated his two financial backers, Wayne Barry, an accountant, and Ed Bean, a businessman, to help him acquire the rights to the match and stage it in the Northlands Coliseum in Edmonton.

"All of us are from Edmonton, population 600,000," said Stevenson, an executive with a building maintenance company, "and we did it because we wanted to offset the doldrums Edmonton got when we lost Wayne Gretzky to the L.A. Kings."

Gretzky is the All-Star hockey player who led the Edmonton Oilers to four Stanley Cups before he was traded.

"There were a lot of bad feelings about that," Stevenson said. "We wanted to do it for Edmonton. In fact, after we got the rights, we had an opportunity to move it to the Skydome in Toronto, which seats 62,000, compared to 18,600 seats in Northlands.

"But you know, to the big Eastern cities like Toronto, Edmonton is regarded as the hinterlands. There was talk from one promoter there of our being 'prairie flakes.' He said that we didn't have two nickels to rub together. When you hear stuff like that, it gets the hair on the back of your neck standing up. So we said the heck with it. We're staying in Edmonton. We'll show those Eastern boys."

The Northlands Coliseum is scaled for a gate of $2.7 million to $2.8 million. Stevenson said that a sell-out would bring him to the break-even point, and that the sales of Canadian television rights and bout sponsorships would put the promotion in the black.

Early this week, Stevenson said that nearly 10,000 of the 18,600 tickets were sold and that he expected a sell-out.

In spite of his undefeated record of 24 victories with 24 knockouts, Alex Stewart isn't given much of a chance against the No. 1-ranked heavyweight, Evander Holyfield, in their match Nov. 4, to be broadcast on Showtime.

But Eddie Futch, the veteran trainer who has been retained to advise Stewart, thinks his fighter, an 8-1 underdog, "has the tools to lick Holyfield."

What's more, Futch said he has a battle plan to take advantage of unspecified weaknesses he says he sees in Holyfield. While that sounds like so much prefight rhetoric, Futch has a history as an accomplice to long-shot heavyweight upsets.

Recently he talked about the strategy he devised for Ken Norton when Norton fought Muhammad Ali in March 1973.

"The orthodox way a fighter carries his right hand," Futch said, "is to position it in front of his jaw. Joe Louis did it this way. From that position, as you jab the right hand is there to parry the other man's punches. Now Ali, who had a great jab, carried the right hand out to the side. But because his jab was so good, it served as an offense and defense. He got away with carrying the right hand out there.

"What most fighters did against Ali was to pull back and shoot the right hand over his jab. Or duck under it and come up with a left hook. But Ali was too fast to make those tactics work. I told Norton, 'The only way to hit Ali is to jab with him, jab for jab. The difference is that your hand's in position to catch the jab. His isn't.' "

"Nobody ever tried to jab with Ali and, when Norton did it, it upset Ali's rhythm," Futch said. "Ali was being hit with a jab. I told Norton, 'The minute you hit him with the jab, step in and jab him again. Two, three moves like that in an 18-to 20-foot ring should force Ali back against the ropes.

" 'When you get him to the ropes, don't go like the others do with a left hook to Ali's head. Because what he'll do is he'll lean back and stretch the ropes, and the left will go in front of his face. You'll be off balance and he'll pepper you. Rather than hook to the head, work both hands to the body and make him bring his elbows in to his side to protect his body. When he does, his head will drop, his chin will be there for you. Then hit him with the right.'

"And that's how Norton broke Ali's jaw. Ali kept leaning into the right hand."

In that bout, Norton beat Ali in aju 12-round decision.

Michael Nunn vs. Marlon Starling is likely for January at the Mirage in Las Vegas. . . . Carl Williams has declined to fight Greg Page on the undercard of Tyson-Ruddock.

For all his complaining about the stopping of his July bout against Tyson, the truth about Williams is that he never bothered to get back into the gym. So King now plans to match Page against Michael Dokes as part of an April or May doubleheader to be headlined by Azumah Nelson against Pernell Whitaker. The winner of Page-Dokes would be in line for Tyson.

Hill looking to unify title

BISMARCK, N.D. (AP) — World Boxing Association champion Virgil Hill is looking Down Under to begin unifying the light heavyweight division after knocking veteran James Kinchen down and out of the ring.

Hill stopped Kinchen at 2:52 of the first round Tuesday night to remain undefeated at 26-0 and win a seventh defense of his WBA title.

After the fight, Hill yelled out to Charles Williams, the International Boxing Federation light heavyweight champion, "You're next, you're next." Williams had a ringside seat for Hill's victory.

Williams said before the Hill-Kinchen bout that he would like to fight Hill, saying he and Hill were the best fighters in the division.

"I will come here and fight Virgil because ... I'm the best light heavyweight in the world," Williams said before the fight.

During a post-fight news conference, Hill, 25, said he would prefer to fight World Boxing Council champion Jeff Harding of Australia. Harding also retained his crown Tuesday in Brisbane, Australia, when Tom Collins of Britain failed to answer the bell for the third round.

Hill, who has talked before about unifying the title, said he would even go to Australia.

He said his reasons were partly financial because the boxer who fights twice in a unification series would make the most money.

Williams still must get by Frankie Swindell in a mandatory defense of his belt Jan. 7 before he can look toward a unification match.

Hill said he would not consider fighting anyone from the World Boxing Organization because the WBO was not sufficiently recognized by the boxing world.

Hill entered the fight against Kinchen after fighting off a bout with hypoglycemia, which results from too little sugar in the blood. Hill showed no effects of the disorder as he dispatched Kinchen quickly.

The victory was the shortest defense of his WBA title, which he won in 1987 from Leslie Stewart.

"My finishing has been getting better," Hill said. "We've been working on that in the gym.

"Once I got him in the corner, he couldn't go anywhere," the champion said. "I think he was unable to slide down the ropes, and as a result he stood straight up ... and he got caught."

"I was moving really good, just hadn't got my stuff together yet, and I got caught," said the 31-year-old Kinchen, whose record dropped to 44-7-2. "I wasn't tired. I just hadn't warmed up good enough."

Kinchen mildly protested the referee's decision by shaking his head, but sat down on a stool in the middle of the ring so trainers could tend to him.

Hill, who grew up in North Dakota and lives in Las Vegas, danced around the ring throwing his arms into the air to the deafening cheers from the 8,000 fans at the Bismarck Civic Center.

It was Kinchen's first loss as a light heavyweight in 28 fights. Over his nine-year career, he had also fought as a middleweight and super middleweight.

Collins quits on Harding

BRISBANE, Australia (AP) — A British fighter whose purse was withheld after he quit in the second round of the World Boxing Council light heavyweight title bout claims he was hurt, a result of underestimating champion Jeff Harding.

"The fans might not like it, but I'm not going to risk my life," Tom Collins said Tuesday night after Harding beat him to retain his title. "I didn't think he would be as good as that."

WBC supervisor Edward Thangarajah of Thailand withheld Collins' purse of $25,000, saying he would recommend the fighter be permanently denied the money. Thangarajah said an inquiry would be held.

Harding, a 24-year-old Australian, sent Collins, 10 years his senior, to the floor with a short right hand to the head in the first round. Collins came out swinging wildly in the second round, but quit on his stool after the assault failed to hurt Harding.

Co-promoter Bob Arum called Collins' decision, roundly booed by a crowd of 8,000, "a disgrace."

"I'm delighted his purse is being withheld," Arum said. "The fans deserved better. His behavior was cowardly and inexcusable."

Collins said he found it difficult to cope with the intense heat and was unable to focus on the fight after being struck in the throat in the opening round.

"I felt I hurt him in the second round, but I didn't have the strength left to stop him," Collins said. "The energy just drained out of me and I couldn't continue."

Harding pummeled Collins relentlessly in both rounds, but there didn't appear to be any reason for the challenger's retirement. Ringside doctor Lou Lewis said Collins did not appear to be seriously hurt.

"There was just no reason for him to retire," Lewis said. "He was complaining about a throat injury, but he didn't ask for any treatment to alleviate it between rounds."

American referee Lou Filippo said Collins claimed he could not continue in the sultry conditions.

Harding was surprised when Collins decided to quit, but said it was immaterial.

"I would have stopped him in the third round anyway," Harding said.

Collins hit Harding with three rights during the second round, but they were ineffective.

"He hit me with his best shots, but I took the wind out of his sails," Harding said.

Harding improved to 16-0 with 13 knockouts. Collins, the former European champion and current British champion, dropped to 24-16-1.

Harding, who weighed 172 pounds, was making the first defense of the title he won on a 12th-round knockout of Britain's Dennis Andries at Atlantic City, N.J., four months ago.

Collins, who weighed 171¾, was challenging for the world title for the first time after a 12-year professional career.

Sprinter sues German magazine

NEW YORK (AP) — Olympic champion Carl Lewis has begun legal action against a West German magazine and a Canadian cable network for reporting that he used performance-enhancing drugs, according to a published report.

The New York Times reported in Wednesday's editions that Toronto lawyer Timothy Danson has sent letters seeking a retraction, an apology and damages from Stern magazine and The Sports Network.

Under Canadian libel and slander laws, plaintiffs are required to notify defendants of pending legal action, then must file suit within 90 days.

Also being notified is Darrell Robinson, the former American 400-meter champion who accused Lewis of using drugs in the Stern story, and Bill Watters, a commentator on TSN, who according to Danson said on the program "The Sports Page" that Lewis used drugs.

Six-Man Poll

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — Fort Hancock continued its rampage through the high school six-man football ranks with its sixth easy victory and remained in firm control of the top spot in the Texas high school six-man football poll, conducted weekly by the Lubbock Avalanche-Journal.

The Mustangs hammered Marathon, 48-0, to run their record to 6-0 and claimed all six first-place votes in balloting of a panel of West Texas sports writers.

The defending state champion Mustangs have five shutouts to their credit in their six games. They have outscored their opponents, 347-8.

There were few changes in the rankings this week. Strawn, which beated Sidney, 79-33, climbed past Loraine into the No.8 spot.

Newcastle, thanks to a 36-21 win against Luedera-Avoca, replaced Trent in the No.10 spot.

Here is this week's Lubbock Avalanche-Journal high school six-man football poll of West Texas sports writers with records, last week's ranking, and total points (tabulated on a 10-9-8-7-6-5-4-3-2-1 basis):

1 Fort Hancock 6-0 1 60
2 May 7-0 2 52
3 Christoval 6-0 3 50
4 McLean 7-0 4 39
5 Guthrie 6-0 5 36
6 Zephyr 6-1 6 30
7 Jayton 5-1 7 22
8 Strawn 6-1 9 16
9 Loraine 6-1 8 14
10 Newcastle 6-1 — 7

Other teams receiving votes: Trent 2, Ackerly Sands 1, Blanket 1.

Oilers, Isles end game in 3-3 knot

UNIONDALE, N.Y. (AP) — The Edmonton Oilers and New York Islanders, teams that dominated the NHL in the 1980s with four Stanley Cups apiece, are in a state of transition these days.

And it showed Tuesday night when they played to a 3-3 tie at the Nassau Coliseum.

"The third period was a good sign for us," Oilers coach John Muckler said. "I felt we played well enough to win the game. But you still have to be happy with a tie, the way we came back."

Muckler could be excused if he was willing to settle for a tie. His new-look team, with injuries and new additions, is just an echo of the powerful Oilers teams of the past.

"It's tough to fit all the parts together, with everything that's happened to us," Muckler said. "We have a lot of young players here and we're missing some key people."

Elsewhere in the NHL, it was Chicago 5, Detroit 3, and Philadelphia 6, St. Louis 1.

Since opening the season with two victories, the Oilers have been a team adrift, with but one win in seven games (1-4-2). An appendectomy to star goaltender Grant Fuhr was just the start of their troubles, which culminated when high-scoring center Jimmy Carson walked off the team on Oct. 14.

"That hurt us a lot," Muckler said. "You've got to miss a player who scores 100 points for you."

Just getting off shots on goal has been a problem of late for the Oilers, much less scoring goals. In a 3-0 loss to the Boston Bruins on Friday night, the Oilers managed only 11 shots, a team-record low.

Tuesday night, they had 28 against the Islanders, including the tying goal by Martin Gelinas with 4:26 left.

"We're proving we can play great hockey at times," Edmonton center Mark Messier said. "We just haven't been that consistent after the first two games this season. We're a young team, and it's up to the veterans to lead."

With one of the youngest teams in the league, the Islanders are virtually in the same shape.

They are particularly having trouble at home, where they are 0-2-2 in four games.

"They are more relaxed on the road," Coach Al Arbour said. "It may be they try to be a little bit fancy in front of the home fans. They tend to run around too much."

Arbour, who coached the Islanders' four Stanley Cup teams, could have asked for a better performance from his Islanders on Tuesday night in the late stages, especially from left wing Brad Lauer.

Lauer turned from hero in one period to goat in the next when he committed a bad penalty that opened the door for Gelinas' power-play goal.

Lauer, who scored in the second period, was called for tripping Charlie Huddy in the third and the Oilers capitalized for the tying goal.

"The penalty put a lot of pressure on me," said Lauer, who is on emergency recall from the minors because of an injury to Brent Sutter. "The penalty really bothered me."

Lauer later had a chance to make up for his goof, but missed an open net in overtime.

"I thought for sure I had it," Lauer said. "I rushed things and hit the post. I should have pulled it back, it was a bad angle."

There were some bright moments for the Islanders, though. Dave Chyzowski, their No. 1 draft pick of 1988, scored his first NHL goal on a power play for a 1-0 lead in the first period.

Edmonton's Jari Kurri scored the first of his two goals to tie the game in the second period. Pat LaFontaine and Lauer gave the Islanders a 3-1 lead, but the Oilers came back to tie on the third-period goals by Kurri and Gelinas.

"The puck hasn't been bouncing for us," Kurri said. "But maybe this will get our confidence level up. We got close to 30 shots tonight."

Blackhawks 5, Red Wings 3

Troy Murray scored three goals and set up a fourth as Chicago won its third straight game.

The Blackhawks (6-4-1) moved into first place in the Norris Division with their fourth victory against one defeat and a tie in six games.

Murray's third goal of the game and eighth of the season came on a power play 4:57 into the final period and stalled a Detroit comeback bid.

After the Red Wings' Steve Yzerman and Borje Salming scored 1:36 apart early in the period, Murray took a pass from Steve Thomas on the left wing and beat goalie Tim Cheveldae with a shot along the ice to increase Chicago's lead to 4-2. Murray had his fourth career three-goal game.

Flyers 6, Blues 1

Ilkka Sinisalo had two goals and an assist as Philadelphia won for the first time in four games.

The Flyers broke an 0-3-1 slump while St. Louis remained winless in its last three games. Despite the victory, the Flyers still have the worst record in the NHL.

Tim Kerr, Murray Craven, Rick Tocchet and Mike Bullard also connected for Philadelphia. Former Flyer Peter Zezel had the only goal for the Blues when he scored into an unguarded net as goalie Ken Wregget attempted to clear the puck around the boards. It deflected off defenseman Mark Howe's skate to Zezel.

Clay, Francis nab SWC grid honors

DENNE H. FREEMAN
AP Sports Writer

Jim Wacker had no idea what Leon Clay could do. Neither did Leon Clay.

Clay, a redshirt freshman from Gladewater, hadn't distinguished himself in his brief appearances at quarterback for the Texas Christian Horned Frogs. He had two fumbles lost and two interceptions.

But what he did on Saturday to the 19th ranked Air Force Falcons made him The Associated Press Southwest Conference Offensive Player of the Week.

With senior quarterback Ron Jiles coming out of the game with a sprained wrist on his passing hand, Clay threw two touchdown passes in the Frogs' stunning 27-9 upset of the high-flying Falcons.

Baylor linebacker James Francis, playing what coach Grant Teaff said was the best game since Mike Singletary held forth for the Bears, earned The AP's Defensive Player of the Week with 19 tackles, 12 of them solo, two quarterback sacks, a fumble recovery, a pass broken up, and a blocked punt for a safety.

"When I told Leon he had to go in he had a big frown on his face," Wacker said. "I told him to show me a big smile and have some fun. His face lit up. I had no idea what Leon would do. I don't think he had any idea either but he came through for us."

Clay, a 6-2, 210-pounder, said it made him nervous to know that just all of sudden he was "it" and that the responsibility for the Frogs' winning rested on his right arm.

"I had big butterflies," he said, "the biggest since my first game in high school."

Wacker said Clay, besides his touchdown passes of 86 and 23 yards, was clear headed enough to make audibles at the line of scrimmage.

"We had a second and 9 and Air Force was blitzing but Leon read it and checked off at the line of scrimmage," Wacker said. "Then he hit the receiver right over the middle for a big first down. I knew we were allright then."

Wacker said "Leon is going to be a great quarterback some day. He is going to be a big part of the future of the Horned Frogs."

Clay, a centerfielder in baseball, was offered $50,000 to sign with the New York Mets coming out of high school but decided to pursue a higher education at Texas Christian.

Francis, a senior who is considered one of the top picks in the upcoming NFL draft, dominated the A&M offense although the Aggies won 14-11.

"It was without a doubt the most dominating game by a linebacker since Singletary was here," Teaff said. "It was a tremendous performance."

Francis' block was his fifth kick block this year and 10th for his career. He's blocked two punts for safeties this year.

ND apologizes to USC

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Notre Dame has apologized to Southern California for the fight among players before last Saturday's game between the longtime college football rivals.

Athletic Director Richard Rosenthal telephoned his Southern Cal counterpart, Mike McGee, to smooth out the ruffled emotions left by the incident.

"He called to apologize and said to expect a letter of apology from Notre Dame and assured us they were working to correct the situation," Tim Tessalone, USC's sports information director, said.

Athletic administrators for the schools maintained public silence over the incident, in which USC and Notre Dame players battled near the tunnel leading to the locker rooms.

Rosenthal and McGee couldn't be reached for comment and Tessalone said USC coach Larry Smith, who had angrily denounced Notre Dame's failure to prevent the brawl, refused to discuss the matter further.

Notre Dame coach Lou Holtz discussed it at length, however, during a press conference Tuesday.

Holtz said he feared Notre Dame's reputation could be tarnished by the incident. He labored to polish the image, vowing to punish any players involved in the fracas and to resign if it happens again.

Yet Holtz weaved back and forth, holding his players blameless at one point, then later promising disciplinary action.

And while acceptig responsibility for the fight, the third since last fall involving Notre Dame players, Holtz implied Southern Cal may have been at fault, too. When pressed on that point, Holtz passed on the opportunity to absolve the Trojans and called the question "irrelevant."

On at least one crucial point, however, he was unchanged.

"We at Notre Dame take responsibility for that thing occurring," he said.

Hurricane QB likely to sit for contest with FSU

CORAL GABLES, Fla. (AP) — Second-ranked Miami will have an extra Erickson on the sidelines again on Saturday when the Hurricanes visit No. 9 Florida State.

As always, Dennis Erickson will handle the coaching. Craig Erickson, who began the season as the No. 1 quarterback, will probably be reduced to offering encouragement to his backup, Gino Torretta. Erickson the quarterback has been out for a month with a broken finger on his right hand.

"Craig is not ready," the coach said Tuesday. "He went out and threw today a little bit, and his hand is sore. I'd be surprised if he's available for any duty at all. Right now he can't even take a snap."

Statistically, Miami loses little with Torretta, a reshirt freshman, in the lineup. He is the fourth-ranked passer in the country, completing almost 64 percent of his passes. The injured Erickson, by comparison, is ranked 44th, completing just over 50 percent.

But Torretta rang up his impressive number against Cincinnati and San Jose State, teams hardly in the caliber of Saturday's opponent.

"Do I think he's ready? I sure as heck hope so," the coach said. "I think he is."

The Hurricanes' first-year coach said he learned last March about the intensity of the Miami-Florida State series.

"You get the sense more and more every day this week," Erickson said. "But I had a sense of the rivalry when I first came into town and people said, 'The two things you do are beat Florida State and Notre Dame.' That kind of tells you how important it is."

Miami takes a 6-0 record into the game. Florida State, staggered by losses in its first two games, has rallied to win five in a row, including a 22-14 defeat of Auburn last week.

The game will affect bowl bids and the national championship race. But even if it didn't, it would have special importance to players on both teams, since most are from Florida.

Florida State can draw motivation from Miami's four straight victories in the series.

Management led to bank crash

Report blames risk-taking managers for Texas plunge

DALLAS (AP) — Aggressive risk-taking by bank managers played a major role in the failures that led to Texas's largest banks having to be rescued by outside institutions, according to a study by a Federal Reserve Bank of Dallas economist.

Economist Jeffery W. Gunther said his study of banks in five metropolitan areas found greater financial instability among aggressively managed banks than those he classified as being conservatively managed.

But Gunther says the banks probably could not have avoided trouble altogether because of the seriousness of the economy's decline in the wake of falling oil prices.

"The conservatively managed banks were able to maintain a fairly high equity ratio, on average, while the equity ratio for the aggressively managed banks eroded," Gunther said.

"While it is true that falling oil prices precipitated the deterioration in banking conditions, the analysis here indicates that risk-taking contributed substantially to the severity of the financial losses incurred," he said.

"Most Texas banks encountered some difficulty after oil prices fell, but those banks that pursued less aggressive strategies were much more successful in avoiding financial losses than were the more aggressively managed banks," he said.

Since 1987, eight of the nine largest banks in Texas have received federal assistance or merged with out-of-state companies. This absentee ownership has led to concerns among some that Texas deposits are being used to fund growth elsewhere.

Gunther's study did not address the extent to which fraud was involved in the bank failures — which have set records for two consecutive years, but Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. William Seidman said last week investigations had found little fraud among the banks, although it is a significant contributor to problems among more loosely regulated savings and loans.

Gunther based his conclusions on an analysis of the assets and lending practices of banks in Houston, Dallas, Fort Worth-Arlington, San Antonio and Austin.

Auto sales off sharply for October

N.Y. Times News Service

DETROIT — Sales of U.S.-built cars plunged 19 percent in mid-October and sales of domestic light trucks dropped 22.8 percent as auto makers continued to feel the effects of earlier aggressive discounting.

The drop was not surprising to Big Three auto companies or to analysts, who said they had expected a sales "payback" from the summer months of the third quarter, when buying was stronger than normal.

"Anyone who didn't buy in the third quarter and decides to buy in the fourth must be desperate to be the first one on the block with a 1990 model," said Ron Glantz, an analyst for Montgomery Securities Inc.

Harvey Heinbach of Merrill Lynch pointed out that retail car and truck dealers now have relatively few 1989 models left on their lots.

Heinbach said slower-than-normal sales could continue for the rest of the fourth quarter unless auto makers unleashed another wave of deep discounts.

He estimates that about 10.1 million domestic and imported cars will be sold in the United States in 1989, compared with 1988 sales of 10.6 million. And he expects sales next year to drop further to 9.4 million because of a softening economy.

The eight domestic manufacturers, which consist of the Big Three and five Japanese automotive companies, sold 158,863 cars in the period from Oct. 11 to 20, compared with 196,196 sold in the comparable period last year.

General Motors Corp. posted a 24.8 percent decline, selling 69,980 cars, compared with 93,086 cars a year ago. Ford Motor Co. reported sales of 46,995 cars, a 21.2 percent decline from last year's 59,613. Chrysler Corp. sold 22,336 cars in the latest period, down 23.7 percent from a year ago.

Pioneers expecting record

From Staff Reports

A record attendance is expected to be on hand for the 16th Biennial Petroleum Pioneers Reunion set for Friday, according to Decker Dawson, chairman of the Pioneer's Association.

Registration and visitation for the day-long event will be from 8:30 a.m. to 11:30 a.m. at the Holiday Inn Country Villa, followed by a luncheon address by Sen. Phil Gramm for the men and a fashion show for the women. Tours of the Permian Basin Petroleum Association will be given in the afternoon, and the day will be concluded with a buffet banquet.

The event which is held every other year, when there is no Oil Show, is sponsored by the Permian Basin Petroleum Pioneers Association and the Midland Chamber of Commerce.

Greenspan under attack

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Federal Reserve, whose chairman is often described as the second most powerful man in America, is coming under attack by some in Congress for being too politically independent and secretive.

Congress is taking its first close look in years at how the central bank goes about setting policy. Those decisions, which are made in secret meetings held eight times a year, have an enormous impact on America's $5 trillion economy because of their influence over interest rates.

Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan was scheduled to testify before a subcommittee of the House Banking Committee today to answer critics' complaints that the Fed needs to be made more politically accountable.

At issue are two separate bills, one sponsored by Rep. Stephen Neal, D-N.C., and the other by Reps. Lee Hamilton, D-Ind., and Byron Dorgan, D-N.D.

Both measures have been drastically scaled back from their sponsors' original intentions to meet objections from the Fed. The Neal proposal has the backing of Greenspan, but the Fed is still strongly opposed to the other bill.

Greenspan

The Hamilton-Dorgan measure originally called for the secretary of the Treasury to be added to the Fed's key policy-making body, the Federal Open Market Committee.

That panel, composed of members of the Federal Reserve Board and presidents of the Fed's regional banks, meets secretly eight times a year to set interest rate policies. Decisions aren't made public for six weeks after a meeting, and even then only abbreviated minutes of the closed-door sessions are made available.

The revised Hamilton-Dorgan bill drops the effort to put the Treasury secretary on the Fed's policy board and instead calls for the Fed panel to meet twice each year with the Treasury secretary and other top administration officials.

Neal's measure would write into law that the Fed's chief mission is to eliminate inflation and establish a deadline of 1994 for having done so, although the measure does not include any penalties if the Fed fails to deliver.

Consumer prices have been rising at an annual rate of 4.4 percent through the first nine months of this year.

Current law directs the Fed to "promote effectively the goals of maximum employment, stable prices and moderate long-term interest ra-

Midlanders wishing to help victims of last week's earthquake in northern California or victims of Hurricanes Hugo or Jerry can travel to one of the local 7-Eleven stores to make a donation.

The Southland Corp. has just announced that it is placing collection canisters in its 7,000 7-Eleven stores across North America to collect money for the American Red Cross disaster relief fund.

The canisters will be available at participating 7-Eleven stores across North America through Nov. 30. Monies collected by the stores will be presented to the American Red Cross in mid-December.

"Our employees, franchisees and customers have a sincere desire to help the victims of the devastating California earthquake as well as other recent natural disasters such as Hurricanes Hugo and Jerry," said Jere W. Thompson, Southland's president and chief executive officer.

"We know how effective store-level collections at 7-Eleven can be because of our experience collecting money for the Muscular Dystrophy Association," said Thompson. "We hope people across North America will find their neighborhood 7-Eleven store a convenient place at which they can assist the American Red Cross by donating money to aid ongoing disaster relief efforts."

Oil prices show gains

From Staff and Wire Reports

Oil prices turned higher, recouping some losses suffered in nearly a week of declines.

On the New York Mercantile Exchange, December contracts for West Texas Intermediate had gained 11 cents to stand at $19.83 at midmorning. The contract lost 4 cents to close at $19.72 Tuesday.

Energy prices were mixed in lackluster trading as traders awaited the latest statistics on oil inventories.

Wholesale unleaded gasoline for November delivery slipped 0.69 cent to 52.79 cents a gallon while the December contract lost 0.47 cents to end at 52.31 cents a gallon.

Domestic heating oil, meanwhile, recovered slightly from sharp declines on Monday. Contracts for November and December delivery each gained 0.3 cent. The November contract settled at 58.45 cents a gallon, while the December contract closed at 58.87 cents. On Monday, the contracts fell 2.02 cents and 2 cents, respectively.

Analysts said the market continued the anemic performance of the last several days, reflecting concerns about the growing supply of crude on world markets and reports suggesting that the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries is continuing to increase its output.

Dollar lower against other currency

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mostly lower in early European trading today. Gold prices rose.

Trading was quiet, and foreign currency dealers said the market was waiting to hear what U.S. Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan would say about monetary policy in testimony before the U.S. House banking subcommittee later in the day.

In Tokyo, the dollar fell 0.55 yen to a closing 141.55 yen. Later, in London, it was quoted at 141.60 yen.

In London, the dollar fell against the British pound. It cost $1.6080 to buy one pound, compared with $1.6065 late Tuesday.

Gold opened in London at a bid price of $368.50 a troy ounce, compared with late Tuesday's $367.75. At midmorning, the city's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price of $368.35.

In Zurich, the bid price was $368.30 compared with $367.50 late Tuesday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold rose $1.72 to close at a bid $386.63.

Silver was quoted in London at a bid price of $5.14 a troy ounce, up from Tuesday's $5.12. .

Stocks off 3 in rollercoaster session

NEW YORK (AP) — Wall Street added to its casino image Tuesday in a heart-thumping session that saw the Dow Jones 30-stock industrial average plummet 85 points in the morning but rally to finish nearly even.

The Dow Jones average closed with a narrow decline of 3.69 points at 2,659.22.

Broader measures of the market showed bigger declines than the Dow average. Declining issues outnumbered advancing ones more than 3 to 1 on the New York Stock Exchange.

The market's wild behavior was attributed to speculation over the fate of buyout plans for UAL Corp. and continued skittishness dating from the Friday the 13th plunge, when the Dow industrials fell more than 190 points.

Adding to the market's volatility was computer-driven program trading, which seems to compress up and down trends into far briefer periods of time.

"This is clearly a market that you can't turn your back on for 10 minutes," said Barton Biggs, chief investment strategist at Morgan Stanley & Co.

In Chicago, the S&P 500 stock-index futures contract fell the 12-point limit permitted under "circuit-breaker" rules designed to slow heavy market selloffs. Index futures prices rebounded after trading resumed.

Adding to traders' nervousness Tuesday were lower-than-expected third-quarter profits from several major companies and worries about an economic slowdown. The Commerce Department reported that orders for "big ticket" durable goods slipped 0.1 percent in September.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Bush officials oppose airline takeover bill

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senior Transportation and Treasury department officials told a House panel that proposed legislation to restrict airline takeovers wouldn't be good for the industry — or the economy.

At the same hearing, Alfred A. Checchi, whose investor group recently acquired the parent of Northwest Airlines, said every deal is different and one across-the-board rule would be "naive and short-sighted."

Digital unveils its first mainframe computer

BOSTON (AP) — Digital Equipment Corp. unveiled what it called the first true mainframe computer in its 32-year history in what may be a direct challenge to International Business Machines Corp.

The announcement Tuesday came on the same day that IBM announced upgrades to its own aging but still dominant line of mainframes, which are the biggest kind of general-purpose computers.

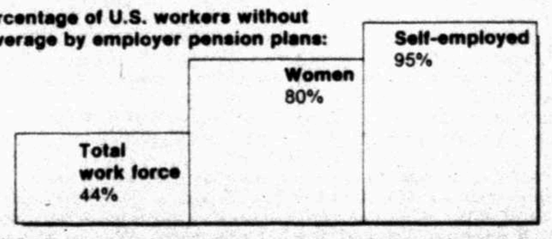
Jury selection begins in GAF retrial

NEW YORK (AP) — After two mistrials earlier this year, jury selection began in the retrial of GAF Corp. and its vice chairman on stock manipulation charges.

The most recent mistrial occurred March 23 when a jury announced after 12 days of deliberations that it was hopelessly dealocked. Jury selection in the third trial began Tuesday.

High numbers of Americans are not covered by pensions

Many U.S. workers are not covered by employer pension plans. Women-retirees and entrepreneurs are especially hard-hit by not having pensions and retirement plans.



(NOTE: Many women divorcees and widows are cast into the work force at too late an age to amass an adequate pension. Fewer than 5 percent of Keogh-eligible self-employed individuals actually invest in one.)

Home sales still up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sales of existing homes rose for the second consecutive month in September, climbing 4.3 percent to the highest level this year, a real estate trade group said today.

The National Association of Realtors credited lower mortgage rates for the spurt in home sales, which rose to a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 3.63 million units.

The September increase followed a 4.5 percent rise in August and marked the third time in the last four months that rates have increased since hitting a low-point this year in May.

For a year, the Federal Reserve pushed interest rates higher to battle inflationary pressures. But since the spring, the central bank has been gradually easing its grip on mortgage pressures, allowing mortgage rates and a variety of other consumer and business loan rates to fall.

At the end of last week, fixed-rate mortgages had dipped back below 10 percent, averaging 9.92 percent, according to a weekly survey conducted by the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. Last spring, mortgage rates hit a peak of 11.22 percent.

"Many people who were forced to put off trading up or entering the market earlier this year are making their move now," said Ira Gribin, president of the Realtors association. "With mortgage rates lower during the second half of the year than the first, the market is reaching a broader income range of buyers."

The national median price for an existing single-family home fell from August to September by $1,400 to $93,400. This was still 5.5 percent higher than a median priced home sold for a year ago. The median is the point at which half the homes sell for more and half for less.

Analysts attributed the one-month price drop in part to the fact that the market shifts in September away from larger families with children to smaller households looking for smaller houses.

Regionally, the sales advanced was paced by a 12.7 percent increase in the West, where homes were sold at a seasonally adjusted annual rate of 820,000 units in September.

Sales were up 3.7 percent in the South to an annual rate of 1.40 million units, while sales rose 1 percent in the Midwest to an annual rate of 990,000 units.

Sales were unchanged in the Northeast at 590,000 units. This is down 9.2 percent from a year ago.

Texas gears up to win chip plant

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texans are gearing up for an intense campaign to convince U.S. Memories Inc. to build its $1 billion computer memory chip plant in Austin, creating 3,000 jobs.

Gov. Bill Clements said it is now time to "redouble our efforts — to give it our best shot — and land U.S. Memories for Texas."

U.S. Memories announced Tuesday it had shortened the list of prospects for its manufacturing complex to four cities — Austin, Colorado Springs, Phoenix and Middletown, N.Y.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, wasting no time to begin lobbying for the plant, tried to reach Sanford Kane, U.S. Memories president and chief executive officer.

Gramm said he expects a tough fight among the finalists for the manufacturing complex, which would employ 3,000 people when it begins operation in 1993, with anticipated sales of $1 billion by 1994.

"I intend to continue to let the people at U.S. Memories know that we are strongly supportive of a decision to locate in Texas," Gramm said. "That in coming to Texas they're not just coming to state where people take pride in their work, but where we have members of Congress who believe in working with and being supportive of the people who invest in our future."

U.S. Memories said the finalists, chosen from 57 locations in 15 states, were picked on the basis of financial, business, and quality of life considerations.

"What set the finalists apart was that they showed a very balanced approach to satisfying our needs," Kane said. "These four locations came closest to meeting most of our site requirements and excelled in several areas."

The consortium of seven companies said its mission is to produce 4-megabit DRAM — Dynamic Random Access Memory — computer chips and to capture the market from Japan, which now holds the edge in the "increasingly critical technology."

DRAMs are a common memory chip found in electronic products that store memory, including microwave ovens, cars, VCRs, computers and supercomputers, and most defense projects.

U.S. Memories said it plans to choose and announce a final site by the end of November, breaking ground by the end of 1989 and to begin shipping its product by mid-1991.

Austin, which nearly two years ago won the Sematech semiconductor research consortium, has offered incentives worth more than $100 million in an effort to lure U.S. Memories.

"Austin is fast becoming the national's new mecca for the semiconductor industry, making our capital city a natural home for a consortium like U.S. Memories," Clements said. "What's more, Texas has the perfect climate — low taxes, a strong work ethic and able and talented people — to nurture a growing venture such as this."

Austin recently lured another major technology consortium after an intense national competition, the Microelectronics and Computer Technology Corp. or MCC.

In Phoenix, Gov. Rose Mofford said U.S. Memories had recognized the "unified commitment" in Arizona.

Ms. Mofford said she thought it was "cooperation among the administration, local governments, the universities, the state Legislature, and the private sector that made our package the powerful one that it is."

Gramm and Sen. Lloyd Bentsen, D-Texas, said they would stress Texas' other high-tech facilities, including Sematech and the super collider, as they make their pitch for the Austin site.

"Texas has made the first cut but it's the final choice that counts and we must continue our efforts. We are a strong contender, however, because we already have Sematech and the technical expertise that goes with it," Bentsen said.

tes" but says nothing about the trade-offs between these sometimes conflicting goals.

"The law as it is presently written is so broad that the Fed can do anything and say that they are following the law," Neal said in arguing for his proposal.

His new version, revamped to meet Greenspan's objections, simply calls for the elimination of inflation in five years and paraphrases language Greenspan has used to say that "inflation will be deemed to be eliminated when the expected rate of change of the general level of prices ceases to be a factor in individual and business decisions making."

Even the revised bills are given little chance of passing Congress, especially in light of objections from key members of the Senate Banking Committee.

Both Senate Banking Committee Chairman Don Riegle, D-Mich., and the senior Republican on the committee, Sen. Jake Garn of Utah, have reassured the Fed they would oppose efforts to weaken the central bank's independence.

Savings Notes similar to Series E, EE Bonds

By BILL DOYLE

Q. From time to time, I have cashed in some of my Series E and EE, U.S. Savings Bonds, at my bank. Recently, I took my U.S. Savings Notes to the bank and asked that they be redeemed.

The teller and other bank employees, including the branch manager, were perplexed. They obviously had never seen savings notes before and said they could not redeem these securities.

It is my understanding that these savings notes are a form of U.S. Savings Bonds and banks are authorized to cash them. Correct me it I am wrong.

A. You're right on both counts. U.S. Savings Notes, also known as "Freedom Shares," are similar to E and EE bonds. Any bank that is a savings bond paying agent, as yours clearly is, can redeem them.

Doyle

It's not surprising that some bank employees, especially younger ones, are not familiar with savings notes. Those securities were issued during a relatively short period, from May 1967 through October 1970. Back then, you could buy savings notes only by purchasing E bonds at the same time.

Savings notes originally accumulated interest at a higher rate than E bonds. Even that incentive, however, did not help. Sales were so low savings notes picked up the nickname Edsel, after Ford Motor Co.'s unsuccessful entry in the luxury car field.

Tell the people at your bank to study up on savings notes in "The Book on U.S. Savings Bonds," the manual provided to all savings bond issuing and paying agents.

And double-check the tables of redemption values to make sure you get the correct amount for each savings note you cash in.

Q. My aunt has a number of U.S. Savings Notes, which had maturities of four and a half years. Doesn't this mean those notes stopped accruing interest years ago?

A. Nope. When they were issued, savings notes had original maturity periods of four and a half years. However, as is the case with all types of U.S. Savings Bonds, savings notes have been given extended maturities.

Each savings note will reach final maturity and stop accumulating interest exactly 30 years after its "issue date." The issue date is the first day of the month in which it was purchased and issued.

Q. I'm told that I can scalp some interest from the U.S. Treasury by purchasing a Series EE bond late in the month, because interest starts building up on the bond on the first day of the month. Can that be true?

A. Yes. Even if you buy the EE bond on the very last day of the month, interest will accumulate from the first day of that month — all EEs are counted as being issued on the first day of the month.

This same rule applied to Series E bonds and U.S. Savings Notes. Es have not been issued since June 1980 and savings notes since October 1970.

Q. When will the various types of U.S. Savings Bonds reach final maturity and stop earning interest?

A. Depending on the type and when each was issued, savings bond final maturities are either 40, 30 or 20 years.

It's 40 years for E bonds issued before December 1965.

It's 30 years for E bonds issued after November 1965, all U.S. Savings Notes, all EE bonds and all Series H bonds that are still outstanding — owned by investors. Some older Hs matured after 29 years, eight months.

It's 20 years for HH bonds.

EEs and HHs are the only savings bonds currently being offered. EEs can be purchased outright or through payroll savings plans. HHs can be obtained only by exchanging Es, EEs and/or savings notes.

Amnesty report cites 2 dozen nations for killings

LONDON (AP) — Government agents in at least two dozen countries illegally killed tens of thousands of people in 1988 and more than half the world's governments tortured or mistreated prisoners, Amnesty International said today.

The London-based human rights group said in its annual global survey that human rights were violated in 133 countries last year. The violations ranged from death squad killings in Latin America to harassment of church groups in China and mistreatment of jailed Aborigines in Australia.

The 310-page report said the victims of deliberate, illegal killings in at least two dozen countries were government opponents, members of ethnic or religious groups and civilians living in areas of military operations.

It said the victims were gunned down in groups or shot by snipers, blown up by explosives, stabbed, strangled, hacked to death or poisoned. Many were tortured to death.

One-third of the world's governments jailed prisoners of conscience — defined by Amnesty as people locked up for the non-violent exercise of their human rights, the group said.

And it accused more than half the governments of either torturing or mistreating prisoners.

Also, 1,903 prisoners were executed under death penalty laws in 35 countries in 1988, the highest number of such executions since 1981, the report said. Amnesty, winner of the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize, opposes capital punishment in all circumstances.

The report was written before many of the sweeping democratic reforms in Eastern Europe and the Soviet Union.

An accompanying summary touched only briefly on the June killing of hundreds of unarmed civilians in Beijing by Chinese troops as the government moved to crush the student-led pro-democracy movement.

In Colombia, Guatemala, El Salvador, Syria and the Philippines, victims of illegal killings were often severely mutilated before being killed, the report said.

It called those killings, and the killing of hundreds of civilians by Sri Lanka's security forces, "striking examples of continuing extrajudicial executions this year."

It said governments made "enormous efforts" to conceal evidence of such killings, but details were reaching the international community more rapidly than ever before.

"Killings are carried out at night, when the victims are alone, or in remote rural areas where even large-scale troop movements can be undertaken unobserved," the report said.

"In urban areas, specialized squads are trained to function in secrecy and are authorized to conduct operations in areas under curfew and police control."

Amnesty said many such killings occurred during armed conflict in countries including Afghanistan, Ethiopia and Burma.

"Warfare makes it easier to evade accountability; not only is access by independent observers limited but the dead can be characterized as combatants ... or as the unavoidable civilian casualties of war," the report said.

Amnesty said many people became victims simply because they lived in areas where the overall population was seen as the enemy.

It said Iraqi forces attacked the Kurdish population with chemical weapons, deliberately killing some 5,000 men, women and children in Halabja. Survivors of chemical attacks were often summarily executed, and in villages near the town of Duhok, more than 1,000 executions in one day were reported, it said.

Many killings occurred during or after anti-government demonstrations, Amnesty said. It expressed concern about the Israeli-occupied territories where more than 300 Palestinian civilians were killed in 1988.

Concern voiced over 2 U.S. inmates

LONDON (AP) — Amnesty International said today that a Puerto Rican nationalist in lengthy pretrial detention and a former Black Panther sentenced to life on a murder conviction may have been shortchanged by the U.S. justice system.

In its annual global survey, the human rights organization reiterated its opposition to capital punishment and said the 11 prisoners executed in the United States last year raised the total since 1977 to 104.

The death row population grew to an unprecedented 2,182 prisoners in 34 states by the end of 1988, it said.

Amnesty International raised concerns about Filberto Ojeda Rios, a Puerto Rican independence supporter held in pretrial detention in Connecticut for 32 months on armed robbery charges.

A federal court ordered his release on bail in May 1988, saying "due process cannot tolerate any further pretrial detention."

However, he was arrested again three months later and charged with a new offense of assault relating to his original arrest in 1985. Ojeda Rios was denied bail and again placed in detention.

The human rights group also said it asked Gov. George Deukmejian of California to order an inquiry into the case of a former member of the Black Panther Party serving a life sentence in California for a 1972 murder conviction.

Elmer "Geronimo" Pratt may have been denied a fair trial because of his political activities, Amnesty said.

It said new evidence obtained after Pratt's trial indicated he was targeted for "neutralization" by the FBI between 1968 and 1971 because of his political activities.

It said the evidence also revealed the chief prosecution witness was an FBI informant and that the FBI planted informers in Pratt's defense teams.

Drug barons' threats mean tighter security

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica (AP) — Tight security will be in effect for an 18-nation summit meeting because "drug barons have put a price on the heads of some presidents," presidential spokesman Jorge Urbina said Tuesday.

Urbina did not say if the government knew which presidents had been threatened. Among the heads of state expected to attend the conference Friday and Saturday are President Bush and Colombian President Virgilio Barco, who are at the center of campaigns against drug traffickers in their countries.

Urbina said 4,000 policemen and security agents will be on duty for the summit.

Police were seen Tuesday stationed along the road from the airport to San Jose and at strategic points in this city of 1 million.

President Oscar Arias said Monday, "We want to talk of fraternity, dialogue, understanding" at the meeting, which will celebrate the 100th anniversary of Costa Rican democracy.

He said he hoped the meeting would "serve to eliminate fears and encourage common undertakings that cannot wait any longer."

Arias won the 1987 Nobel Peace Prize for his drafting of a Central American peace accord.

Also expected for the summit are the heads of state of Canada, Brazil, Argentina, Venezuela, Uruguay, Paraguay, Bolivia, Ecuador, Nicaragua, El Salvador, Honduras, Suriname, Bahamas, Belize and Jamaica and the governor of Puerto Rico.

Leaders of Cuba, Chile, Haiti and Panama were not invited.

NATO ministers welcome Soviet promises of cuts

VILAMOURA, Portugal (AP) — NATO defense ministers today welcomed Soviet promises to cut its powerful military forces but urged the Kremlin to do more to slash its tactical nuclear weapons.

U.S. Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and other ministers of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization also applauded in their final statement Moscow's pledge to remove a disputed radar station in Siberia.

Cheney cautioned that the Soviet Union remains a powerful military force and said "there is great uncertainty about how events will unfold in the Soviet Union."

Wrapping up two days of nuclear strategy talks on the southern Portuguese coast, the officials said they "looked forward to the prompt and full implementation of this commitment."

After the meeting, Cheney was to fly to London for talks with British officials on the European leg of a three-week foreign tour.

In the final statement, the ministers said they "were encouraged by the changes underway in the Soviet Union and some of its allies."

"Nevertheless, we recognized the continuing capability of the forces of the Warsaw Pact for offensive military action," it said.

It expressed concern about "substantial capabilities" in Moscow's space program and its nuclear modernization program.

"We welcomed the announced Warsaw Pact unilateral force reductions and looked forward to their full implementation," the statement said.

WORLD IN BRIEF

Rushdie denies that he misled publisher

LONDON (AP) — Novelist Salman Rushdie denied a newspaper's claim that he misled his publisher about the likely impact his novel "The Satanic Verses" would have on the Moslem world.

In a letter published today in The Independent, Rushdie accuses the daily of telling a "blatant untruth" in a profile it published Saturday of Peter Mayer, head of Viking Penguin publishers.

Rushdie has been in hiding for eight months since the late Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini called on Moslems to kill him for allegedly blaspheming their faith.

The threat also extends to Rushdie's publishers.

"Rushdie was asked twice, once before Penguin bought the book and again afterward, what the now notorious Mahound chapter was supposed to mean."

Bomb explodes in Colombia

BOGOTA, Colombia (AP) — A car bomb exploded in the resort city of Cartagena just hours after the government pledged to resist a terror campaign and keep extraditing suspected drug traffickers to the United States.

The bomb went off late Tuesday in the Bocagrande section of the city near the Barlovento hotel, injuring two people and causing extensive damage, the radio network Caracol reported. The hotel is popular with U.S. tourists.

Sixteen people have been killed and 201 injured in bombings blamed on drug gangs since mid-August, when the government launched its anti-drug campaign and cocaine barons reciprocated with a declaration of war.

Soviets asked to mediate

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — The Soviet Union could play an important role in helping to initiate talks between South Africa's white government and its black adversaries, state radio said today.

The South African Broadcasting Corp., in a commentary, said the Soviet Union was the only major power with influence over the African National Congress guerrilla movement.

The ANC has said it will neither halt its use of violence nor enter negotiations until the government legalizes it.

Halloween is entertaining holiday

Party foods reflect colors, contrasts of season

By DESIREE VIVEA
Copley News Service

The startling contrast of orange and black can mean only one thing — Halloween — and for a proper Halloween party, you must decorate with the colors of the day.

Black is the color of witches' hats, bats and spiders, while orange is for pumpkins, the autumnal fruit of jack-o'-lantern faces and creamy, spicy pies.

Other holidays are pretty: hearts and flowers for Valentine's Day, rich red bows and green boughs at Christmastime. But for Halloween, you want all the macabre and spooky trappings you can scare up.

Hang orange and black streamers from the ceiling and let black paper bats dangle from strings.

Carve eerie grinning faces in round pumpkins and light a glow with small fat candles.

Fill a candelabra with orange and black candles and hang black widow spiders from wispy webs in the corner.

Don't forget a few rubber snakes and skeletons here and there for effect.

For extra fun, have the foods you serve reflect the theme, and go for all the orange and black goodies you can think up.

The relish tray might include carrot sticks and ripe black olives (and black caviar, if you're a particularly sophisticated ghoul).

Set out pumpkin pie alongside a chocolate mousse, and offer black licorice whips in the candy dish.

If you really want to go all-out, try the spectacular Pumpkin-Chestnut Soup-in-the-Shell as a first course at a sit-down Halloween supper. (If you can't find — or afford — expensive porcini mushrooms, saute 1 cup regular chopped mushrooms with the butter, onion and garlic.)

This recipe comes from Patricia Tennison's "Glorious Vegetables in the Microwave," Contemporary Books, 1987.

(Recipes in this column are tested in 625- to 700-watt microwave ovens.)

MICRO-TIP OF THE WEEK

Microwaved cakes generally emerge from the oven with an uneven, hilly surface. For a more even surface, let cake batter settle in pan for 10 minutes or so before microwaving, or run a knife through batter to release hidden air bubbles.

PUMPKIN-CHESTNUT SOUP-IN-THE-SHELL

½ ounce porcini mushrooms
1 cup hot water
2 tablespoons butter
½ cup diced onion
1 teaspoon minced garlic
2 cups diced fresh pumpkin
1½ cups diced celery
½ cup diced carrots
½ pound fresh button mushrooms, chopped
1½ tablespoons minced fresh parsley
¼ teaspoon ground allspice
¼ teaspoon freshly ground white pepper
2 cups chicken broth
2 cups beef broth
1 (15-ounce) can chestnut puree
1 cup heavy cream
3 tablespoons cognac
Salt to taste

Preparation time: 30 to 35 minutes.
Cooking time: 30 to 37 minutes.
Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power).

Soak porcini mushrooms in hot water in small bowl for at least 15 minutes.

Put butter, onion and garlic in 3-quart microwave-safe casserole. Microwave 2 to 3 minutes, until tender.

Add pumpkin, celery, carrots, mushrooms, parsley, allspice and pepper. Cover. Microwave 10 to 15 minutes, or until vegetables are tender, stirring every 4 minutes.

Strain porcini mushrooms, reserving mushrooms and adding 1 cup of soaking liquor to vegetable casserole.

Add chicken and beef broths to casserole. Cover and microwave 10 minutes.

Stir in chestnut puree. Cover and microwave 5 minutes, until chestnut puree is incorporated.

Cool slightly. Puree in blender or processor. Stir in porcini mushrooms, cream, cognac and salt to taste.

Microwave 3 to 4 minutes to heat through, but do not boil. Serve hot in pumpkin shells.

NOTE: To make pumpkin serving shells, cut off top of each pumpkin and scoop out seeds and stringy center.

A 2-pound pumpkin will hold about 1½ cups of soup. Mini-pumpkins hold about ⅓ cup if you scoop out flesh, leaving a ¼-inch shell. Replace tops.

DEVIL'S FOOD MOUSSE

2 (1-ounce) squares semisweet chocolate
3 eggs, separated
⅓ cup granulated sugar
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
Dash salt
1 cup milk or half-and-half
1 tablespoon triple sec
⅓ cup granulated sugar
1 cup heavy cream, whipped
Red and yellow food coloring

Preparation time: 20 to 25 minutes.
Cooking time: 6 to 8 minutes (plus 3 hours to chill).
Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power); MEDIUM (50 percent power).

Place chocolate in large microwave-safe mixing bowl; microwave on HIGH setting just until melted, 1 to 2 minutes.

Blend in egg yolks, sugar, gelatin and salt. Drizzle in milk or half-and-half, blending thoroughly.

Beat with wire whisk or rotary beaters about 1 minute then microwave, uncovered, 4 minutes at MEDIUM setting.

Beat again with wire whisk or beaters (about 1 minute), and microwave 1 to 2 minutes longer at MEDIUM setting, or until mixture begins to thicken.

Beat in triple sec. Cover and refrigerate until cool.

When chocolate mixture is thoroughly cooled, beat egg whites until soft peaks form. Add remaining sugar, a little at a time, beating until stiff peaks form.

Fold into chilled chocolate mixture with whipped cream, reserving ½ cup of latter for garnish.

Spoon mousse into 6 or 8 small serving dishes and chill at least 3 hours.

Just before serving, whip a drop or 2 each of red and yellow food coloring into remaining whipped cream, blending well until it is colored orange.

Place a small spoonful atop each serving of mousse, or pipe with a pastry bag. Serve immediately.

HALLOWEEN CAKE

1 cup all-purpose flour
⅓ cup granulated sugar
⅓ cup light brown sugar
2 teaspoons baking powder
1 teaspoon pumpkin pie spice
¼ teaspoon ground cinnamon
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup canned pumpkin
½ cup milk or half-and-half
2 tablespoons vegetable oil
½ cup chopped walnuts
½ cup chocolate chips
1¾ cups water
¾ cup light brown sugar, packed
1 tablespoon butter or margarine
2 teaspoons grated orange rind

Preparation time: 15 to 20 minutes.
Cooking time: 13 to 18 minutes (plus 1 hour standing time).
Oven setting: HIGH (100 percent power).

In large mixing bowl combine first 7 ingredients. Blend in pumpkin, milk or half-and-half, and vegetable oil; beat until smooth, then fold in nuts and chocolate chips.

Spread mixture evenly in 8-inch round microwave-safe baking dish. Set aside.

Measure water into 4-cup glass measure, microwave 5 to 7 minutes, or until water boils.

Add all remaining ingredients, stirring to dissolve sugar and melt butter.

Pour immediately over pumpkin batter in baking dish.

Microwave 8 to 11 minutes, rotating dish ¼ turn every 2 minutes.

When done, cake will be set around edges but will still appear damp in center (standing time will complete cooking). Let stand in baking dish until thorouhly cooled (do not remove from baking dish).

Serve with whipped cream or Chocolate Fudge Sauce and pumpkin ice cream, if desired.

NOTE: If you don't have "pumpkin pie spice," substitute with ¼ teaspoon each ground cinnamon, ginger, cloves and allspice.

CHOCOLATE FUDGE SAUCE

1 (5-ounce) can evaporated milk
1 cup light brown sugar, packed
⅛ teaspoon salt
2 (2-ounce) squares unsweetened baking chocolate
2 tablespoons butter or margarine
1 teaspoon vanilla

In 2-quart microwave-safe casserole combine evaporated milk, brown sugar and salt; stir to blend well.

Microwave 4 to 6 minutes, stirring every 2 minutes, until sugar dissolves and mixture boils vigorously.

Add chocolate, stirring until completely melted, then blend in remaining ingredients. Serve warm.

GHOSTLY GHOULISH GLUG

Vanilla ice cream
Cold milk
Hubba Bubba Bubble Gum soda

For each child, you will need a balloon-shaped glass, a 14-inch square of white plastic, a 12-inch piece of orange yarn, black marker and straw. Have the children draw ghostly grins on the white plastic square with the black marker.

Place small scoop of ice cream in glass. Top with ½ cup cold milk. Top with soda. Fill all glasses, then refill with soda as bubbles subside.

Place plastic square on top of glass, gather bottom and tie with yarn. Make snip in top of plastic to insert straw.

Children's parties are in Halloween tradition

NEW YORK (AP) — A witches' brew of ideas for a safe, spooky and happy Halloween is conjured up by Meredith Brokaw and Annie Gilbar in "The Penny Whistle Halloween Book" (Weidenfeld & Nicolson, New York; $9.95).

This illustrated guide includes the story of the first Halloween, suggests appropriate activities for children from 2-year-olds to teens, and lists sources for ordering sound effects and make-up kits.

Some suggestions from the book:

■ Make ice cubes with raisins in them to look like insects. Serve in punch.

■ Put trick-or-treat goodies in a homemade cardboard coffin. Let the kids lift the lid and get the candy themselves.

HOT FUDGE PUDDING CAKE

1 cup all-purpose flour
3 tablespoons cocoa
2 teaspoons baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
½ cup milk
½ cup butter or margarine, melted
1½ teaspoons vanilla extract
½ cup granulated sugar
1½ cups packed light brown sugar
4 tablespoons cocoa
1¼ cups hot water
Whipped topping

Heat oven to 350 degrees. In medium bowl, combine ¾ cup granulated sugar, flour, 3 tablespoons cocoa, baking powder and salt. Blend in milk, melted butter and vanilla. Beat until smooth. Pour batter into 8- or 9-inch square pan.

In small bowl combine ½ cup granulated sugar, 1½ cups brown sugar and 4 tablespoons cocoa. Sprinkle mixture evenly over batter. Pour hot water over top; do not stir. Bake 35 to 40 minutes at 350 degrees or until center is almost set. Let stand 15 minutes. Spoon into dessert dishes, spooning sauce from bottom of pan over top. Garnish with whipped cream.

GREMLINS IN THE MIST

1 package angel-food cake mix
Hubba Bubba Bubble Gum soda
1 package whipped topping mix

Bake angel-food cake mix according to package directions, substituting Hubba Bubba soda for water in recipe. Check cake after first baking time listed, as it may brown quickly. Cool according to package directions. When cooled, place cake on a round platter or covered pizza pan.

Prepare whipped topping. Have the children make and decorate gremlins from construction paper. You can also use yarn scraps and colored sprinkles. Glue gremlins to popsickle sticks.

Prepare one envelope of whipped topping mix according to package directions, substituting Hubba Bubba soda for water. Fill center of angel food cake with whipped topping and gently mound remaining frosting like clouds around base of cake. Decorate cake with gremlins.

CANDY APPLES

8 wooden ice-cream bar sticks
1 cup water
½ cup light corn syrup
½ teaspoon red food coloring
8 small Red Delicious apples
3 cups sugar
¼ cup red hot candies

Insert wooden stick part way through stem end of apples. Grease large cookie sheet; set side.

In 2-quart saucepan, combine remaining ingredients. Over medium heat, heat mixture to boiling without stirring. Boil, without stirring, until candy thermometer reads 290 degrees, or when bit of mixture dropped into cool water separates into thin hard threads, about 20 minutes. Remove saucepan from heat. Tip saucepan, swirl each apple into mixture to coat. Quickly swirl apple over saucepan to allow any drips to fall back into pan. Place apples on cookie sheet to cool. Cool at least 1 hour before serving.

DEAR ABBY

Siblings not 'package deal'

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A mother signed "Frustrated" asked, "Is it rude to invite only my child's playmate, even though there are three other children in his family?"

You replied, "It's not rude to invite only your child's playmate — regardless of how many siblings he has."

As a teacher, I think your answer was right on target. We do our children a disservice when we fail to teach them that they are not a package deal, but individuals, with separate friends, interests, activities and lives.

Life isn't always fair or equal, but invitations usually balance out. If one child is consistently excluded, it may be because he (or she) has a problem (behavior, personality, etc.). If so, perhaps the parents need to give that child more time doing special things and let that child choose a special friend for an outing. — HELEN MOLLES, SEAL BEACH, CALIF.

DEAR HELEN: I agree. Brothers and sisters who are close in age can easily become a "package deal," because it's more convenient for parents to send all the kids over to the "Joneses" than to make separate plans for each child. But it's worth the extra effort to help a child develop as an individual.

DEAR ABBY: The next time I read about all these women asking where are all the good men, I'd like to bop them on the side of the head to wake them up!

People can be so blind that they can't see the forest for the trees. In all the singles ads, women are looking for tall, athletic professionals with the spending power of Donald Trump. These women are looking for the wrong things in a man — that's why they keep getting jerks.

So, the next time you go looking for "Mister Right," he might not be tall, he might wear a blue collar and carry a lunch pail instead of a briefcase, he might not have as much hair or be as trim as your dream man, but don't turn up your nose. You could be passing up the sweetest guy in the world!

Let's not judge a man by his height, collar or what he carries his lunch in. You could make yourself — and some nice guy — happy, too.

Not all the trees in the forest are tall. — SINGLE AND SHORT IN MINNEAPOLIS

DEAR SINGLE AND SHORT: Right on! The world is full of towering midgets and "giants" from the eyebrows up. Women, give a little guy a break. You could get the prize (and surprise) of your life. Trust me.

DEAR ABBY: You almost scored a direct hit. The name of the person who invented the flush toilet was not "John" — it was Thomas Crapper. (Really!) He lived in Chelsea, England.

You can find the story of this invention in Mr. Crapper's biography titled "Flushed With Pride."

As to where the term "John" came from, I'm afraid you'll have to come up with another explanation. — DARWIN WILLIAMS

Boxed cake mixes personalized through use of flavorful additions

Associated Press

Even when you're pressed for time you can create a special-occasion cake with a cake mix. Use one of the following suggestions to put your personal stamp on a yellow, white or chocolate two-layer cake mix.

To dry mix, add:

- ¾ teaspoon ground cinnamon
- ¾ teaspoon ground ginger
- ½ teaspoon ground allspice
- ¼ teaspoon ground nutmeg

Add one of the following with the eggs:

- ½ cup applesauce
- 1 tablespoon instant coffee crystals dissolved in the water called for in the mix directions
- 1 tablespoon finely shredded orange peel
- 1 teaspoon maple flavoring
- ½ teaspoon almond extract

For the water called for:

- Substitute an equal amount of unsweetened pineapple juice for the water in a white or yellow cake mix.

Stir one of the following into the mixed cake batter:

- 1 cup coconut
- ½ cup finely chopped nuts
- ½ cup miniature semisweet chocolate pieces
- To ⅓ of the white or yellow cake batter, add ⅓ cup chocolate-flavored syrup. Pour the plain batter into the baking pans; pour chocolate batter on top of the plain batter. Swirl gently with a spatula.

Baking tips:

- If the cake will be removed from the pan, grease and flour the bottom and the sides.
- If the cake will be served from the pan, grease only the bottom of the pan; do not flour it.

Frosting sensations:

- Chocolate Cream Cheese Frosting: In a bowl beat together two 3-ounce packages cream cheese, ⅓ cup softened margarine or butter, and 2 teaspoons vanilla until light and fluffy. Gradually add 2 cups sifted powdered sugar and ¼ cup unsweetened cocoa powder, beating well. Add 2¼ to 2½ cups more powdered sugar to make frosting of spreading consistency. Frosts tops and sides of two 8-or 9-inch cake layers. Cover cake; store in refrigerator.
- Peanut-Butter Frosting: In a bowl beat ⅓ cup creamy peanut butter until fluffy. Gradually add 2 cups sifted powdered sugar, beating well. Slowly beat in ¼ cup milk and 1½ teaspoons vanilla. Slowly beat in 2½ cups more powdered sugar. Beat in additional milk if needed to make of spreading consistency. Frosts tops and sides of two 8- or 9-inch cake layers.

Fast-food menus changing

By PAMELA YIP
Hearst News Service

In the beginning was the hamburger, with french fries and a milkshake on the side.

How different the menu looks now. Ronald McDonald, the trademark clown of the golden arches, may soon be sitting down to pizza with a side order of carrot sticks.

Across the country, fast-food menus are changing rapidly as chains gear up for tougher competition and changing consumer tastes.

"As people have more experience at eating out, expectations have grown," said Howard Hansen, a restaurant industry analyst at Kidder, Peabody & Co.

One thing consumers expect is more choice.

"People are getting tapped out on hamburgers," said William Norton, president of Foodmark Inc., restaurant industry consultants in Minneapolis. "There's very little variety at the chains."

Even McDonald's, which traditionally offers few choices, has been tinkering with its menu.

"We are committed to a limited menu, and that will never change, but as our customers' tastes change, we have to change with them," said Melissa Oakley, a McDonald's spokeswoman.

One possibility: Fried chicken, which McDonald's is testing at six restaurants in Dallas and Houston. And the pizza is being test marketed at McDonald's outlets in Evansville, Ind., and Owensboro, Ky.

It's made with a quick-cooking crust and the toppings are added fresh with each order. The four varieties cost from $6 to $10.

But the pizza is designed to expand more than just the menu.

Fast food facts

One-fifth of all Americans eat fast food every day. In general, fast food is high in fat, salt and protein but low in fiber, vitamins and other nutrients.

- Single hamburger: Up to 13 grams of fat
- Six chicken nuggets: Up to 20 grams of fat
- Fish sandwich with cheese and sauce: Up to 25 grams of fat

Suggested guidelines for fast food restaurants

Identify fat and nutrient content in food.
Offer low-fat or skim milk, margarine, low-fat dressings, whole-grain buns.

Associated Press

McDonald's is looking to pump up its evening business and lure people who want more than a burger on the run.

"It's an attempt to gather a wider share of the audience, especially evening customers," said Robert Bernstein, an analyst at Edward D. Jones & Co., a St. Louis investment firm. "Chicken and burgers are finger food on-the-go. Pizza food is 'sit down and enjoy the evening meal.' They think that could improve their overall business."

While McDonald's is cautiously adding variety, San Diego-based Jack In The Box has been going at it whole hog. The chain has popped up almost 30 new menu items in the last nine years. The most recent addition is a hamburger served on grilled sourdough bread with cheese.

Fast-food restaurants are also trying to address the health concerns of their customers. The chains have long been criticized for their deep-fat frying and heavy use of salt.

The latest assault came from the Massachusetts Medical Society, which found that a fast-food chicken sandwich, often considered a more healthful choice than a hamburger, has as much fat as one and a half pints of ice cream.

"The key words now in fast foods are fiber and freshness — trying to give more of a perception of freshness," Norton said.

In recent years, fast-food chains have begun offering more healthful alternatives, such as whole-wheat buns, salad bars and pre-packaged salads. McDonald's, which has already added salads, is considering selling packages of celery and carrot sticks.

But beyond the attempts to meet customers' demands for convenience, variety and healthful foods, the fast-food menu shuffle is driven by harsh fiscal reality, analysts said.

"A lot of the activity is caused by flat sales," said Norton of Foodmark Inc. "People are getting nervous about not seeing growth."

Breakfast foods' fat content researched

N. Y. Times News Service

Breakfast entrees offered by fast-food restaurants over the last decade, and more recently by makers of frozen microwaveable products, have expanded the consumer's choices, but the customer may be paying a nutritional price for convenience.

Most of the fast-food breakfast entrees, like croissants with sausage, provide more than half their calories from fat.

The New England Journal of Medicine published a report on Sept. 14 stating that the fast-food industry did not offer enough low-fat choices for meals in general. The report said 40-55 percent of the calories in most fast-food meals come from fat.

Fast-food companies have taken exception to the report.

Cori Zywotow, director of media relations for the Burger King Corp., said, "Consumers are aware of the report and they are making their own decisions. We have options and variety on the menu that allow them to make those decisions."

In a separate study, the Mayo Clinic Nutrition Letter reported in June that of the breakfast items offered at five fast-food chains, only three items provided 30 percent or less of their calories from fat.

Most major health organizations recommend that Americans consume no more than 30 percent of their day's calories from fat.

But eating a quick breakfast at home is certainly no guarantee that the meal will be healthful and nutritious. Several frozen breakfast entrees designed for the microwave oven provide as much as 73 percent of their calories from fat.

Eating breakfast at home can provide one unbeatable advantage: control.

Control over the amount of margarine, if any, that is used on toast, the size of the pancakes and the percent of fat in milk chosen can save hundreds of calories in a week.

In fast-food restaurants, the consumer often has little control over the situation.

Getting a special order like an English muffin without butter or a biscuit sandwich without cheese is a little like ordering a meal in a country where you don't speak the language. The time required for special requests usually takes the fast out of fast food.

Even fast-food restaurants and microwaveable products, however, offer a few good breakfast choices that are both convenient and healthful.

Among the usual breakfast entrees, pancakes are among the lowest in fat content, supplying about 19 to 35 percent calories from fat. Waffles, too, with about 35 percent of calories from fat, can also be healthful choices.

The original fast food, cold cereal, is a perennial favorite in most American households, offering well over 100 varieties. While some cereals are little more than fortified sugar, several are good sources of fiber, complex carbohydrates, vitamins and minerals.

Busy cooks need shortcuts in kitchen

NEW YORK (AP) — Are you living life in the fast lane?

Fifty-six percent of the respondents to a Food Marketing Institute survey say they eat dinner at home every day. Yet today's busy cooks don't have hours to spend in the kitchen — or shopping at the grocery store.

Shortcuts — without compromising wholesome, family dining — are important. Delicious and healthy alternatives to commercial fast-food are a must.

For example, plan meals with only one or two dishes that require a recipe, then fill in with quick-to-fix dishes like steamed vegetables, or a baked potato, which can be prepared in 5-7 minutes in the microwave. Choose items from the supermarket salad bar or deli counter to fill in the menu.

Look for recipes that require no more than 10 ingredients. You'll save time in preparation — and in shopping at the grocery store.

Choose recipes that can be prepared ahead, refrigerated or frozen until ready to serve. Flank steak can marinate all day and then be ready to broil for dinner. Many recipes can simmer all day in a crockpot. Serve fresh fruit instead of baking dessert.

To save shopping time, the experts at Sweet One, a new diet sweetener, suggest that you check the ingredients in your pantry before going to the supermarket. Check this list against the ingredients you need for your recipes. This can save an extra trip to the market.

The following recipe for Vegetable Tacos is from the American Dairy Association's leaflet, "In 30 Minutes." This leaflet contains 10 recipes for beating the clock including Blue Cheese Burgers, Vegetable Tacos and Double Strawberry Bavarian Cream.

VEGETABLE TACOS

⅔ cup sliced green onion
½ cup chopped green pepper
1½ cups cooked corn, drained
1 cup kidney beans, drained
3 tablespoons chili sauce
½ teaspoon chili powder
⅛ teaspoon garlic powder
1½ cups Monterey Jack cheese, shredded (6 ounces)
12 prepared taco shells, heated
2 cups tomatoes, chopped
2 cups lettuce, shredded
1½ cups Cheddar cheese, shredded (6 ounces)

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Melt butter in medium-size saucepan. Saute onion and pepper until tender, about 5 minutes. Stir in corn, beans, chili sauce and seasonings. Heat over medium heat, stirring occasionally, for 5 minutes. Remove from heat. Stir in Monterey Jack cheese.

Fill taco shells with cheese-vegetable mixture. Place on cookie sheet. Bake 5 to 7 minutes or until hot. Remove from oven and top with tomatoes, lettuce and Cheddar cheese. Serve immediately. Serves 12.
