Gas tanker hits wall, explodes

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — A 10,000-gallon propane truck exploded Friday on a highway, killing six people, sparking a huge fireball and sending pieces of the tanker crashing into a house 125 yards away, officials said.

Four people were critically burned, and eight others were taken to hospitals.

"I heard the explosion and saw the tanker flying through the air. It fell on the house and just blew up," said Marvin Mitchell, a witness.

The wood-frame, duplex house was destroyed and two people inside died, authorities said. One of the two was a child.

The four other deaths, including the driver of the truck, and most of the injuries occurred on Interstate 240 near downtown as the fireball engulfed the truck and several other vehicles, said fire Capt. Benny McDow. Later, the traffic jam caused by the crash lead to another accident which claimed a seventh life.

The people taken to hospitals suffered mostly from burns, McDow said. Six victims were admitted to the burn unit of the Regional Medical Center and four were in critical condition, authorities said.

The names of the dead and injured were not immediately available. Authorities said some of the bodies were so badly burned that they would have to be identified through dental records, said John Stonecipher, a city fire marshal.

The propane truck apparently skidded off an exit ramp on Interstate 240 as the driver tried to turn onto Interstate 40 toward Arkansas, McDow said. The roadway was dry.

"He was trying to exit and lost control and hit a retaining wall," McDow said. "That exit there is short. It's one of those tight turns."

Jed Tennison, who works at a sheet metal plant near the crash scene, said he rushed to a highway overpass when he heard the explosion.

"There was a guy on fire rolling on the road and there was another just lying on the ground where somebody must have put him," Tennison said.

Gaines Tennison, Jed's father and manager of the sheet metal plant, said he felt the shock of the blast and looked out to see what had happened.

Reagan mourns victims of Pan Am tragedy in Scotland

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan on Friday mourned the victims of the crash of Pan Am Flight 103 and insisted it would have been an "impossible thing to do" to warn the American public about all threats against commercial airliners.

Reagan and his wife Nancy then flew across the country for a holiday stay at his soon-to-be retirement home in an exclusive Los Angeles neighborhood after the president made his remarks in Washington.

The president, leaving the White House for his two-week California vacation, also asked Americans to "say a special prayer" this Christmas for the families and friends of those aboard the plane and those killed on the ground at Lockerbie, Scotland, on Wednesday. Some 280 people perished.

"I want to express our sorrow and concern to the families and friends of those who died in the Pan Am crash...There are difficult aspects of this tragedy, but none so compelling as the anguish of those families who will not have their loved ones with them this Christmas season," Reagan said as his wife stood beside him in the rain in Washington.

The president noted that some three dozen students from Syracuse University lost their lives in the fiery crash, calling them young people who "carried the twin promises of hopes and dreams."

Cartoonist responsible for jolly Santa

RICHMOND, Va. (AP) — Santa Claus might be a thin, disagreeable character in a stiff-brimmed hat if not for the 19th-century cartoonist Thomas Nast.

Nast, from whose pen also came the Democratic donkey and the Republican elephant, gave Santa his present shape — short, fat and jolly man with a stocking cap and a long white beard — as a morale booster during the Civil War.

Previously, Santa Claus was sometimes depicted as tall, thin and domineering, and often had black hair and a stiff-brimmed hat, said James I. Robertson, a history professor at Virginia Tech in Blacksburg.

"There was no stereotype of Santa Claus at that time," he said. "He tended to be in all shapes and sizes."

Nast, as a 21-year-old artist at Harper's Weekly in 1863, drew a short, fat, bearded Santa bringing gifts to Union troops in a star-spangled jacket, a cap and striped pants, Robertson said.

Man admits drugs his downfall

By BEAR MILLS

PAMPA, Texas (AP) — By his own admission, Clifford Teakell is a drug addict. By his own admission, he has used drugs for 17 of his 29 years on earth. By his own admission, Clifford Teakell's life is a wreck.

While most people are preparing to celebrate the birth of the Christ child on Dec. 25, Clifford Teakell is sitting in City Jail.

He has been charged with a string of burglaries around the area. Police say they have an oral statement in which he confessed to 10 break-ins and one attempted one.

In spite of that confession, Clifford Teakell says being a thief is not why he is in jail.

"I'm in jail because I've been a drug addict since I was 12 years old.

Decomposed child's body found in gym bag

WAYCROSS, Ga. (AP) — The decomposed body of a toddler was found stuffed in a gym bag, the bag in a suitcase encased in concrete and dumped along a dirt road, police said Friday.

An autopsy Thursday night was only partially conclusive, and police do not know who the child is. Ware County Sheriff Herbert E. Bond said there are no small children known to be missing from the area.

The body was found Wednesday by a trucker, 16 miles west of Waycross.

She had been wrapped in a blanket and stuffed in a gym bag, which then was placed in a metal suitcase, and the suitcase sealed with concrete. The suitcase was then placed in an abandoned TV console and nailed shut with plywood.

The driver, who was not identified, "cried like a baby when he found it," the sheriff said.

The autopsy at the State Crime Lab determined her sex, race and probable age. Bond said pathologists determined that the child had been dead about one to two months and was about 3, who was 2-feet-9 and weighed about 30 pounds.

"They were able to tell us she had not been shot or stabbed," Bond said Friday.

"I don't know whether it was an abused child that was accidentally killed, or a kidnap victim that was killed somewhere else and brought there," he said. "But somebody went to great extremes to put it together and then leave it out there in the open."

Bush expected to make key appointment today

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush, who has filled all his Cabinet positions except for labor and energy, intends to announce another key appointment on Saturday, aides said Friday.

Speculation for the energy job centered on Peter Johnson, the former administrator of the Bonneville Power Administration; former Louisiana Rep. Henson Moore and Lt. Gen. James A. Abrahamson, head of the Strategic Defense Initiative Organization at the Pentagon.

Those thought to be in the running for the labor job are Constance Horner, head of the Office of Personnel Management, and Patricia Diaz Dennis, a member of the Federal Communications Commission.

Craig Fuller, co-director of the transition office, noted that in addition to the Cabinet jobs, Bush also needs to fill the position of drug czar. William Raab, head of the U.S. Customs Service, is known to be interested in that position.

"We hope to finish most of the work by Christmas," Fuller said on NBC-TV's "Today Show."

"We're talking to some people...and we may get another one (appointment) done before we get out of here" for the holiday, he said.

Bush had no public appointments Friday. He planned to spend the Christmas weekend with his family before leaving Monday on a four-day hunting and fishing trip in Texas and Alabama.

So far, Bush has named 12 members of his Cabinet as well as a number of people who have Cabinet-level status such as Carla Hills, designated to be the U.S. trade representative, and William Reilly, administrator for the Environmental Protection Agency.

Some people mentioned as possibilities for the remaining cabinet posts were out of town Friday.

Johnson said in a telephone interview from McCall, Idaho that he had no word on whether he would be named.

Moore was in his law office in the nation's capital, but did not return a telephone call.

Maj. Alan Freitag, Abrahamson's spokesman, said the general is on leave through Christmas and cannot be reached.

"He has been asked the question about NASA and DOE. He has said he wants to continue serving the government, but has said nothing concrete about those jobs," said Freitag.

Abrahamson is slated to retire from the Air Force on Feb. 1.

Man arrested on drug charge

From Staff Reports

A 24-year-old Midland man was arrested and methamphetamine or "speed" with a street value of more than $10,000 was confiscated Friday night, according to Midland County Sheriff Gary Painter.

The man was jailed and will be charged on Tuesday with aggravated possession of a controlled substance with intent to distribute, Painter said.

Criminal Investigator Dale Walker was off-duty and driving east on Interstate 20 when he noticed a vehicle moving erratically on the roadway near the intersection with FM 715. Walker, a youth services officer, stopped the vehicle, the sheriff said.

The man was carrying two ounces of "uncut" speed in a plastic bag in a pocket, and according to the officer a loaded Israeli-made .357-caliber Magnum handgun known as a "Desert Eagle" was on the seat.

Possession of the weapon, and the fact the amount of controlled substance topped 28 grams aggravated the charge, Painter said.

A records check found the man had been arrested on a similar charge within the last three weeks, he noted.

Lawmen investigating jewelry theft

From Staff Reports

Midland County Sheriff's officers are investigating the theft of items valued at nearly $20,000 that may have been stolen from a residence over a period of five months.

The theft of jewelry from the residence on County Road 1206 south of CR 116 was reported early Friday.

Among the items reported stolen were a turquoise necklace valued at $10,000, a pearl and ruby ring valued at $6,000, a gold topaz and ruby ring valued at $1,300, two gold pins valued at $900, gold and diamond engagement ring valued at $500, and a gold bangle bracelet valued at $100.

The items may have been stolen as long ago as July, according to the report.

Burglars also stole items valued at $1,815, including several gift-wrapped Christmas packages, from a mobile home residence on CR 1199 south of CR 116, according to sheriff's department reports.

A door to the home was pried to gain entry, the report said.

The burglary occurred Thursday between 1:30 p.m. and 9:15 p.m., according to the report.

REAGAN

"The tragedy that steals the hopes and dreams from our society magnifies the loss to our society," he said.

A reporter asked Reagan whether all U.S. citizens, and not just diplomats, should have been warned about a Dec. 5 telephoned threat of terrorist attack against a Pan Am flight from Frankfurt.

"All the precautions that could be taken were taken with regard to warning the airline and all," he replied.

Of a possible public warning, the president added, "I think that would have been a virtually impossible thing to do on the basis of that telephone call."

"If you stop to think about it, such a public statement, with nothing but a telephone call to go on, would literally have closed down all the air traffic in the world," he said.

Asked whether he had any new information as to whether the Pan Am jumbo jet was the target of a terrorist bomb, he replied, "None of this is established. The search still goes on. We have no knowledge about how the accident happened. We're still trying to find out."

Phyllis Oakley, a State Department spokeswoman, said Thursday that an unidentified person telephoned the U.S. Embassy in Helsinki on Dec. 5 and said there would be a bombing attempt within two weeks against a Pan Am aircraft flying from Frankfurt to the United States.

Flight 103 originated in Frankfurt with a Boeing 727, with passengers and luggage switched to a Boeing 747 in London for continuation of the trip to New York.

The Reagans flew to California aboard Air Force One to celebrate Christmas in their new home in the posh Bel Air section of Los Angeles and ring in the New Year at the estate of multimillionaire publisher Walter Annenberg in Rancho Mirage, near Palm Springs.

JAIL

I'd take anything (in the way of narcotics) I could get my hands on. Something in my life is missing. I just kept thinking drugs could help," Teakell said recently.

He sat in a small office at the Pampa Police Department reflecting on a life that has brought nothing but pain to himself and his family.

"I had a good mom and dad. They made a good living. My daddy was strict, but he was also forgiving and caring. Anything you needed, you could just go to him," Teakell said.

He went on to describe his life as a student and a soldier in the U.S. Army. It sounds very much like the life of any young son of this rural community, but Clifford Teakell has left out the punchline.

"I had everything you could want, I guess, but I let drugs take it away. I'd run around with these kids who got drugs from their older brothers and sisters. Then I got to know these grown-ups who did it. They said it was a good thing and I believed what they said, 'cause I was just a little kid," he said.

He describes it as a "social thing." Before long, however, the drugs took control.

"Every time I got some dope, I never had none to share. I did all of it. I've over-amped so many times. Before you knew it, I was carrying pistols and selling. But I'd always wanted to do more than I'd sell and that would put me in behind with the people...you know?"

He paused, took a drag from his cigarette and stared at the floor.

"That commercial about the kid named Johnny who gives drugs away and sees who comes back and then starts chargin' them, that was me. I've been to the penitentiary. Drugs was the reason." He looked up. His eyes were wet and his face was twisted with shame.

"My problem ain't stealin'. It's the drugs. I'm a hard worker. Anybody'll tell you that. But not when I'm on drugs. When I'm on drugs, the next shot is everything. I mean everything," he said.

Teakell was caught by police on Dec. 15 shortly after a break-in at Baker Elementary School.

That arrest may have saved Clifford Teakell's life.

"It's lonely in jail. Usually when I'd get arrested, I'd just sit and stare at the ceiling and think about killing myself. I thought of a lot of ways. But this time, I was coming down. I kept thinking that I'm such a mess.

"I asked this officer if I could have a Bible. I don't know why. I don't guess I've ever even picked up a Bible before. Before you know, I've nearly read it plumb through," he said, looking up from the floor.

A tear ran down his left cheek, followed by another. He tried to hold them back, but suddenly they came in a flood.

"Reading that Bible keeps me from wanting to kill myself. I got a wife and two kids. They shouldn't have problems over me. I should take care of them. Right now, though, they just want to help me," he said.

Teakell said the time alone in jail reading the Bible has made him think. But the memories of his life are ripped with pain.

"My daddy once told me, 'Son, you're going to go so far one day that no one is going to want to help you.' That's how far I've gone."

He said he was put through drug treatment once in 1980 or '82, he can't quite remember. However, at the time he was only doing it to please those around him.

"I want to get counseling now, but I don't know — they're probably tired of wasting time on me. They're probably saying that ol' Cliff ain't gonna change. But I got to keep readin' that Bible they gave me. I've got to change."

The tears again filled his eyes.

"You know...I'd like to have some friends one day. Friends who come over to see you and how you're doin' and not just to sell you drugs.

"I don't think I'd know what to do if somebody ever came by my house just to see how I was doin' and 'cause they cared about me. I think I'd like it, though."

He said he believes he only has one true friend on earth, the officer who took his confession.

"Gary (Boydston) really wants me to get straight. I feel like he's my only friend," he said.

TANKER

"I thought it was an earthquake," he said. "The whole sky was white, just lit up. You could feel the heat inside the building."

Frank Baker, a deputy chief in charge of fire department crews on the scene, said victims killed by the blast had little chance to escape the flames.

"There was a huge fireball, maybe 700 to 800 feet. It engulfed three or four cars," Baker said.

In addition to the destroyed duplex, the fireball damaged five houses, three on one side and two on the other side of the six-lane highway, authorities said.

James Edgeston, who lives two doors away from the destroyed duplex, said a truck axle with four wheels attached ended up in his kitchen. He suffered a cut on the head but was not seriously hurt.

Stonecipher said the tanker ruptured on one end and blasted off like a rocket when the fuel ignited. "It was like an unguided missile," he said.

The National Transportation Safety Board planned to send a team of investigators, said Michael Benson, NTSB spokesman in Washington.

After the accident, traffic backed up for several miles north and south of town. A second truck driver was killed when his 18-wheeler plowed into the rear of a car tied up in the traffic jam, police said. That driver was identified as David Bailey, 29, of West Helena, Ark.

SANTA

"The drawing boosted the spirits of soldiers and civilians alike because it showed the spirit of Christmas had come to the Civil War," the professor said.

Nast was influenced by Clement Moore, whose 1823 poem "'Twas The Night Before Christmas" depicted a twinkly-eyed, white-haired Santa smoking a pipe, the professor said.

Almost every year after, Nast drew a similar Santa.

Hospitalized female mental patient sexually assaulted by male patient

AUSTIN (AP) — A female mental patient at Austin State Hospital was assaulted in June and again in December, police records show, and state officials say further changes will be made to prevent such attacks.

"We just screwed up" by leaving the door to the female dormitory unguarded by a mental health worker, said Kenny Dudley, superintendent of Austin State Hospital for the mentally ill.

"We just blew it," Dudley said Thursday.

The police officer who investigated the assault said he believes the attack could have been prevented with proper security rules, such as locking dormitory doors.

"I do think the staff was negligent," said Austin Sgt. Sam Bass of the sex crimes division. "I think that is obvious."

The newspaper said police records show a 34-year-old female patient was sexually assaulted about 1:30 p.m. on Dec. 14 by a 31-year-old male patient who entered the women's dorm area, pulled the woman into her bedroom and forced her to have sexual intercourse.

The attack occurred on the hospital's Extended Care Unit, which serves patients with long-term mental illnesses.

Unit policy calls for the doors to the women's and men's dorm areas to be guarded by a mental health worker, Dudley said. But last week, the worker guarding the door to the women's dorm also was assigned to closely watch a patient with active psychiatric problems, he said.

The assault occurred after the worker left the door unattended to accompany the disturbed patient to the restroom, Dudley said.

The Extended Care Unit has been operating with an increased staff since June, when three female patients were assaulted by a male patient who hid in a women's restroom, Dudley said.

The woman assaulted last week was one of those assaulted in June, records show.

Law enforcement officials cannot prosecute the case because the woman has declined to file a criminal complaint against the male patient, Bass said. The woman received a rape examination, but police have not analyzed the findings because the case cannot be pursued, Bass said.

The assaults last June also were not prosecuted because the three victims declined to file complaints or be examined by a physician for evidence of sexual assault, Bass said.

"I'm fed up with the same thing happening all the time with nothing being done," Bass said.

But Dudley said a procedure was set up after the June assaults to prevent attacks.

"We left the door uncovered, but in fact we were supposed to have the door monitored," he said.

As a "quick-fix" response to the assault, Dudley said, the Extended Care Unit this week began requiring doors to the dorm areas be locked at all times. Also, door monitors will have no other assignments, he said.

Dudley said he will be forced to increase the number of workers on the unit, which may cause hospital-wide problems because the institution is tightly staffed.

Hospital officials will continue to look for a more permanent solution to the security problems on the unit, Dudley said. They are working with Austin social worker David Pharis, who monitors the Texas Department of Mental Health and Mental Retardation mental hospitals for U.S. District Judge Barefoot Sanders of Dallas.

Salvation Army finds two Krugerrands in pot

BEAUMONT (AP) — A generous shopper turned a Salvation Army kettle filled with coins into a real pot of gold by tossing in two South African Krugerrands worth more than $800.

The one-ounce gold bullion coins were not discovered in the pile of nickels, dimes and quarters collected at a local mall until they arrived at a bank and jammed in a sorting machine, Salvation Army officials said.

Employees at Beaumont's First City National Bank, where the Salvation Army deposits its donations each night, found the coins Thursday morning, said James Fortney, Salvation Army commander.

"This is really a nice donation," Fortney said. "And we appreciate the honesty of the bank employees. They could have easily kept the coins."

The Krugerrands usually sell for slightly more than the current value of their gold content, and together are worth an estimated $824, he said.

Salvation Army officials do not know who made the donation.

Gramm: Base to be spared

DEL RIO (AP) — Laughlin Air Force Base won't be on the soon-to-be-released list of military bases to be closed beginning in 1990, U.S. Sen. Phil Gramm said Friday.

Gramm, R-Texas, declined to identify his source of information, the Del Rio News Herald said. But Gramm said he had been "authoritatively" informed that Laughlin was not on the list being drawn up by congressional and military officials.

Laughlin, six miles east of Del Rio, employs some 3,000 civilian and military personnel and trains pilots.

Laughlin's future came into question with unconfirmed reports that it was on the proposed "hit list."

Mother pleads innocent

CORPUS CHRISTI (AP) — A 22-year-old woman has pleaded innocent to charges that she exchanged her 2-year-old son for cocaine.

Rhonda Romero was indicted last week on charges that she sold Efrain Romero Jr., 2, to Tomas Casas of Skidmore, and either accepted or offered to accept cocaine in exchange for the child. She remained in the Nueces County Jail in lieu of $2,500 bond.

"I am not guilty," Ms. Romero said Wednesday before Judge Walter Dunham Jr. of the 28th District Court.

Casas, 40, and another Skidmore man, Jose Luis Gomez, were indicted on charges of purchasing the child. Casas remained in the Nueces County Jail in lieu of $10,000 bond, while Gomez is free on a $20,000 bond.

Mackerel season closes

AUSTIN (AP) — The National Marine Fisheries Service has closed the season on king mackerel off the Texas coast and other Gulf sttes until June 30, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department said Friday.

Horses found at slaughterhouse

FORT WORTH (AP) — Five horses were just a trot away from being slaughtered at a processing plant when the owner, who had reported them stolen, showed up and rescued them.

"All I could do was scream," said Jetta Richards of Dallas, the owner. "I was scared if I left them, they'd kill them, so I sent my son to the office to tell them I found the horses, while I stayed with them."

Ms. Richards found the horses, valued at about $20,000, Monday afternoon at the Beltex Corp., a horsemeat processing plant in north Fort Worth. A sixth horse had been sold to a processing plant in Palestine in East Texas and slaughtered.

The horses were discovered missing Sunday from Ms. Richards' ranch, about 35 miles north of Fort Worth. Ms. Richards notified Denton County Sheriff's Department officials, who told her to check with the Texas and Southwest Cattle Raisers Association. Officials there advised her to look for the horses at auction barns and slaughterhouses.

The animals would have been killed and shipped overseas for human consumption.

Clements won't be submitting own budget plan

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Bill Clements announced Friday that he won't submit his own spending plan to the 1989 Legislature, instead recommending as a "starting point for discussion" the budget prepared by legislative leaders.

Clements said he would submit the $29.1 billion spending plan adopted by the Legislative Budget Board last week. Lawmakers at that time said the LBB plan balances but fails to adequately meet the needs of the state for 1990-91.

The legislative panel has said it would cost $1 billion more than that total to continue state government services at their present level.

Clements has pledged to veto any tax increase next year, and his staff indicated Friday that the governor thinks there may be more money available later.

Reggie Bashur, the governor's press secretary, pointed to $1.5 billion set aside by Comptroller Bob Bullock for use in case the state loses a number of challenges to its current tax laws. Another $300 million in tax dollars can be saved by issuing bonds to build new prisons, Bashur said. And oil prices are rising, he noted.

"My decision allows the process to begin within a universally accepted framework," Clements said in a statement. "From there, we can negotiate and prepare a budget that ensures quality education, guarantees essential services and helps build — not weaken — the Texas economy."

Lawmakers and the governor's aides said his action could speed up budget negotiations and possibly head off a prolonged battle like that which occurred in 1987. That year, a dispute between Clements and lawmakers forced the Legislature to end its regular session without a budget and not finally adopt one until late July.

The governor's spokesman, Bashur, acknowledged that the LBB-approved budget proposal wouldn't be the actual spending plan finally enacted by lawmakers and signed by Clements.

"In presenting this budget, it does not mean that the governor supports each and every line item being proposed," Bashur said. "We've got ideas and proposals. He'll negotiate. This brings everyone together at a common point, a starting point."

Clements was out of town Friday and not available to answer questions about his decision.

> "From there, we can negotiate and prepare a budget that ensures quality education, guarantees essential services and helps build — not weaken — the Texas economy."
> Gov. Bill Clements

Lt. Gov. Bill Hobby and House Speaker Gib Lewis, both Democrats, issued statements approving of the Republican governor's action.

"I am encouraged by the spirit of cooperation in the governor's statement," said Lewis, D-Fort Worth.

"Reducing $1 billion from the current level of services was not a pleasant task for the Legislative Budget Board. Many imperative needs are still unmet, especially in education. But with the governor's support, the Legislature will succeed in reparing our tax system and allow us to recover critically needed revenue," he said.

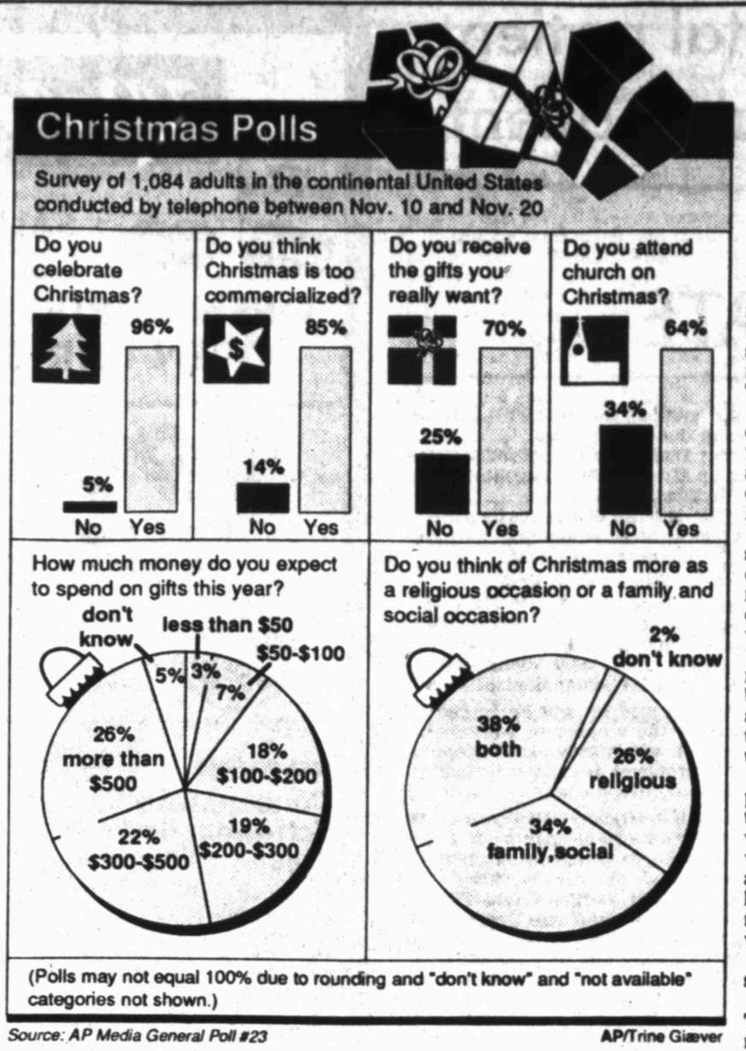
"This session is starting off on the best possible note of bipartisan cooperation," Hobby added.

Although Clements won't submit a separate proposal on where he thinks the state's money should go, some legislative budget experts said that wouldn't matter. Governors' budgets generally are ignored, anyway, they said.

"Any member of the House or Senate who would be candid with you would tell you that the first thing we do with a governor's budget — any governr's budget — when we get it in January is throw it in the trash can. I think he's saving the taxpayers quite a bit of money and saving legislators quite a bit of time," said Rep. Ric Williamson, D-Weatherford, a member of the House Appropriations Committee.

But Williamson said Clements' move looked like a good one.

"I've always felt like the legitimate debate of government ought to be on how the money's spent and not necessarily how much I think ought to be spent versus how much you think ought to be spent. This strikes me as a very conciliatory and diplomatic move on his part," Williamson said.



Smokestack can solve problem of acid rain, UT professor says

AUSTIN (AP) — A Texas firm's new smokestack device is a major breakthrough that promises to help solve the worldwide problem of man-made acid rain, a University of Texas engineering professor says.

"We've had a hard time keeping it quiet until the patent application was accepted," said Professor Leonardt Kreisle, director of engineering design projects program at UT-Austin.

Developed by Aerological Research Systems Inc., with help from engineering students, the synergistic reactor removes "essentially 100 percent" of sulfur dioxide without any waste byproduct, Kreisle said.

He said comparable equipment now in use, called "dry-air scrubbers," are more expensive to make and use and remove only 60 percent to 70 percent of the chemical that is the main component of acid rain.

Sulfur dioxide is released as a byproduct of making steel, refining petroleum and burning coal and other wastes. Combined in the atmosphere with nitrous oxide and with sunlight and rain, sulfur dioxide forms a highly corrosive acid that hurts human lungs, kills wildlife and otherwise damages the environment.

The government has said that a solution will cost billions of dollars.

The reactor was the brainchild of Thomas Ewan, an aerospace engineer and president of Aerological Research, of Daingerfield in northeast Texas.

In summer 1987, Ewan said, Aerological Research turned its device over to Kreisle and his senior engineering students. "The university is a wonderful place to do research because of the bright young minds there," Ewan said. "When you cross-pollinate them with a few gray hairs, you have a creative brain source."

Kreisle said students made prototypes of the synergistic reactor through four semesters ending in August. Six of the students shared in the patent application accepted by the government in late November.

Ewan said the prototype can remove 10 pounds a minute of sulfur dioxide, which is too little for a power plant. But Aerological Research plans to scale up the prototype to remove 5,000 pounds of sulfur dioxide a minute for power plants and factories.

Ewan said the firm is negotiating with major manufacturers of environmental-control equipment to produce the devices for a worldwide market beginning early next year.

"We've not looked at the price yet," he said, "but it will cost a lot less than conventional scrubbers. The design is quite simple even though the operation is sophisticated."

Kreisle said he is not a participant in the patent and has no financial stake in the device. He said it is a fraction of the size of comparable dry-air scrubbers, operates on about a third of their energy requirements, acts in seconds versus minutes for the scrubbers and its only byproduct is dry gypsum, "a very benign substance."

Kreisle said a variation of the device also could be developed for cars and buses.

Youths go out to play, find fistful of dollars

AUSTIN (AP) — Five restless youngsters who went to explore some woods behind an Austin antiques store returned 15 minutes later with their fists full of money — about $6,000 worth.

Mary Dailey, owner of Austin House Antiques, told the Austin American Statesman she sent her two children and their three friends out of the store about 2 p.m. Thursday because they were restless. They found the money, which police believe was from a Dec. 15 armed robbery of a Safeway store about a block from the lot that is thick with bamboo and tall grass.

Officials theorize the gunman may have dropped the money while fleeing from police or stashed it to pick it up later.

"He probably intended to come back for it when it was safe," said Sgt. James Beck. "The kids just found it first."

Zach Henwood, 12, said the youngsters left the store and went to explore the lot.

"As we were walking, all of a sudden I noticed fives ($5 bills) everywhere and I said 'Look, there's money all over the place,'" Zach said.

"I looked to my side and saw more money, mostly 20s. Then I saw a 50," said Zach's 10-year-old brother, Adam.

Laura Barker, 12, counted more than $2,000 in $20 bills, while Ms. Dailey's daughter, Jessica Elrod stumbled on the checks some 5 feet from the cash.

It was Jessica's 9-year-old sister, Melissa, who alerted her mother about the find.

"She looked so panic-stricken that I thought someone had been hurt. I looked again and she was standing there with two fistfuls of crushed-up money," said Ms. Dailey.

"It was then I remembered that Safeway had been robbed," she said.

The store was held up about 8:30 p.m. Dec. 15.

Three arrests made in bank fraud case

GRAND PRAIRIE (AP) — FBI agents arrested a Mansfield man, his brother and his mother-in-law Friday on indictments in a $5 million bank fraud and conspiracy case.

Robert Dexter Taylor, 24, of Mansfield; Eddie Don Taylor, 34, of Arlington; and Joyce McLane, 49, of Arlington, were arrested in Arlington on a multi-count indictment issued Dec. 21 by a federal grand jury in Dallas, the FBI and the U.S. attorney's office said.

The indictment alleges that Mrs. McLane, formerly a cashier at First State Bank of Grand Prairie, conspiring with the Taylors, illegally caused wire transfers of some $5 million of First State Bank money to bank accounts controlled by the Taylors. The transfers allegedly occurred between Jan. 1, 1988, and Oct. 21.

House call will make comeback

ROCHESTER, N.Y. (AP) — The house call will return in the future, predicts Dr. Paul F. Griner of the University of Rochester.

Technology in the 1990s will make it possible for treatment at home that once required hospitalization. A patient with a bone infection under control, for example, requires weeks of antibiotics delivered intravenously.

Griner foresees that this patient could take intravenous medication at home, with regular visits from members of a health care team. But, he says, such advances will also mean that families must take a more active role in caring for the patient.

Farmers trying to grow better-looking spuds

EDITOR'S NOTE: Ireland's potato farmers, who have a most colorful past, now are fighting for a future. Harried by falling demand and rising imports, the spud raisers are modernizing in order to compete.

By COTTEN TIMBERLAKE

WILKINSTOWN, Ireland (AP) — It was a dismal day, wet and cold and gray — the things most hateful about December. A few potatoes were rotting and their smell was vile, but John Sheridan didn't seem to mind.

Tramping across a muck-filled yard in his rubber boots, the 42-year-old potato farmer showed a visitor around with typical Irish generosity of time and spirit.

Highlights of the tour of J and C Sheridan Ltd., one of Ireland's biggest potato farms, included a new bagging machine and storehouses full of those humblest of tubers, whose irregular shapes and skins of homespun brown inspire instant affection.

"We are putting our potatoes in much more attractive packaging," said Sheridan, who is spending about 630,000 Irish pounds (nearly $1 million) to modernize the farm. "The emphasis all the time, every single day, is better quality. I am ensuring that my market will be there."

WELCOME TO the brave new world of the Irish potato industry, launching the praties of legend into the 21st century.

Ireland's potato farmers, who have a most colorful past, are fighting for a future dimmed by imports and a drop in demand.

In the 19th century, potatoes were the staple food of Ireland and blight caused a cruel famine. Lately, the Irish have strayed to such exotic foods as pasta and farmers are trying to woo them back by, among other things, developing better-looking potatoes.

What is a good-looking potato?

"What's a good-looking man?" responded Kevin Burke, general manager of Irish Potato Marketing Ltd. in Dublin, about 30 miles southeast of Wilkinstown. "Very subjective," he concluded.

The ideal spud is said to be large, well-rounded and shallow-eyed.

Presentation matters, too. Farmers are packaging their products better, offering consumers cleaner potatoes in smaller quantities and more uniform sizes.

THEY ARE investing in better machinery and storage facilities, breeding higher-yield varieties that are more resistant to disease and will deliver larger crops per acre. They now export, to counter imports from other Common Market countries, and support development of a potato processing industry.

Experts say the effort is paying off.

Gerry Doherty of the government's Department of Agriculture and Food said a long decline in output is stabilizing. The total was 400,000 tons last year and is expected to be about 370,000 for 1988, he said.

Imports are expected to be 30,000 tons this year and exports 13,400. A ton of potatoes brings about 90 pounds ($140).

"I'd say we're more competitive," Doherty said.

Potatoes have been grown in Ireland for more than 350 years and are woven into its culture and history. They have inspired poems and songs. They conjure many images, warm as Irish stew or wrenching as famine and emigration.

"SO GREAT has been its influence that the potato and the Irishman are often considered as somewhat synonymous," potato expert Edward McGivern wrote.

Spaniards brought potatoes to Europe from Peru in the 16th century. English explorer Sir Walter Raleigh usually gets the credit for introducing them to the Emerald Isle.

Ireland was the first European country to grow potatoes on a large scale. By the early 1840s they were the main food for one-third of its 8 million people.

Planting reached a peak of 2.5 million acres in 1845 but blight destroyed the crop and caused the Great Famine of 1845-1849, a catastrophe that killed an estimated 1 million people and caused another million to leave.

Emigration continues and the birth rate is declining, so Ireland's population now is but 3.4 million and potato acreage is a mere 75,000. Commercial growers, once tens of thousands, number only 6,000.

Burke, the Dublin potato dealer, said Ireland's entry into the European Economic Community in 1973 "has created competition, and a lot of people were not ready to cope."

"PEOPLE ARE now eating things which are considered alien to the Irish character, such as pasta and rice," he said.

Use of potatoes for industrial alcohol and animal feed has declined. With more women working and incomes growing, fewer potatoes are peeled and cooked at home.

Per capita consumption fell to 244 pounds in 1984 from 260 pounds in 1980, but still is nearly double that of the United States.

Sheridan surveyed the farm where he first planted 12 acres of potatoes in 1967 and today grows 250 acres of Kerr's Pink, the Irish favorite.

"We are managing to meeting the challenge," he said. "We believe we'll be in business another 20 years."

Irish sing song of potatoes

DUBLIN, Ireland (AP) — Here are a few lines from an Irish song about potatoes, attributed to Robert Owenson (1744-1812):

In the land of potatoes, O!
Hospitality
All reality,
No formality,
There you ever see;
But free and easy
'Twould so amaze ye,
You'd think us all crazy,
For dull we never be.

Volunteers use ingenuity to wrap pickle, ironing board

NORTH PLATTE, Neb. (AP) — How do you wrap a Christmas pickle? And what about the pressing problem of wrapping an ironing board in a pretty holiday package?

Those were just some of the dilemmas that faced the volunteers this year at a gift-wrapping booth in the North Platte Mall.

"We've done a dill pickle, an ironing board, a boat ladder and an ornamental yard windmill," said Eva Weber, a volunteer at the booth run by the North Platte Church of God.

By the time the booth closes on Christmas Eve, the 15 volunteers from the tiny congregation of 35 will have wrapped an estimated 2,000 packages.

"We use about 6,000 bows over Christmas," said Sheri Clark, whose husband, Bob, is the minister of the church.

Proceeds from the booth provide the church with money for community and mission work.

The volunteers said an important part of their job is to "scrounge the Dumpsters" for odd-sized boxes.

"We want the finished product to look professional. We take a lot of pride in how we do the job," Mrs. Weber said.

Even that special Christmas pickle.

American Santas come to rescue in Singapore

SINGAPORE (AP) — The Santa Claus shortage has been averted and it looks like Christmas as usual at the equator this year.

In this steamy tropical land, Christmas is Styrofoam snowmen and chestnuts roasted by street vendors in shorts. Department store Santas are flown in from Finland, and the turkey is often curried.

Most Singaporeans have never seen snow, let alone a reindeer. But "I'm Dreaming of a White Christmas" and "Rudolph the Red-nosed Reindeer" have been broadcast staples for weeks.

Any danger that a shortage of Santas might dampen the holiday spirit ended when more than 100 American tourists dressed as Santa Claus started arriving in early December.

Part of a "Santa goodwill tour" by the Telephone Pioneers of America, a charitable organization, they play Santa for charity while traveling each Christmas.

Toys 'R' Us and a few other stores won't have Santas because, in the words of one merchant, "it is hard to find a suitable candidate."

But one department store, Robinson's, flew in a man from Finland who store spokeswoman Lena Phua claims is "the real Santa." While his birth certificate identifies him as Saastamoinen Seppo, the resident of Rovaniemi in Finnish Lapland is the real thing, she insisted.

Illuminated trumpets, silver bells, angels, candles, fir trees, snowflakes, reindeer, lanterns, yule logs, fairy lights and other glitter adorn shopping centers and hotels.

Street vendors in T-shirts and shorts sell roasted chestnuts. The Centerpoint shopping center spent $207,254 on its fairytale Christmas theme, decorating its building as a medieval castle.

All this in a country 85 miles north of the equator where the average daily temperature is 80 degrees.

Only about 200,000 of the 2.6 million people in this island republic profess to being Christians, according to the last census in 1980. But apart from the country's independence day holiday in August, no other period comes close to being celebrated by the entire population.

The observance of Christmas, a British colonial import, appears to have intensified in recent years among a population that is 76 percent Chinese, 15 percent Malay and 6 percent Indian.

It blends Western trimmings with an Oriental flavor.

Roast turkey with stuffing is available, but so are a variety of other dishes based on the traditional bird, including curried turkey and turkey noodles.

NORAD tracking Santa's trek

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — The nation's sophisticated defense radars will be tuned once again to that familiar blip of Santa Claus and his entourage crossing the northern skies this Christmas Eve.

Officials at the North American Aerospace Defense Command say they are planning their annual tracking of the well-identified flying object, as they have for the past 32 years.

NORAD began the Santa Claus watch in when it scanned the skies for Soviet bomber attacks.

But a misprint in a local store's newspaper advertisement gave a telephone number for Santa that accidentally sent kids' calls right into the unlisted "red phone" at the combat operations center.

Col. Harry Shoup, after picking up the "hot line" to hear a child's voice ask, "Is this one of Santa's helpers?," played along, and other airmen took shifts on the "Santa line."

One airman, seized by the spirit, drew Santa with sleigh and reindeer over northern Canada on the center's glass "situation board" and tracked him over North America on Christmas Eve.

Rescue crews faced with clearing rubble from Armenian cities

LENINAKAN, U.S.S.R. (AP) — No more survivors will be found from the Dec. 7 earthquake in Soviet Armenia, and crews will concentrate on clearing 8 million tons of rubble in the crumbled cities, a government official said Friday.

"The gigantic problem now is the cleanup," Vardkes Artsruny, a deputy prime minister of the Armenian republic, said in an interview in makeshift offices previously used as a handicraft center for children.

Fields around Leninakan, whose shoddy buildings collapsed when the earth shook, are filled with debris. Twisted wire and remains of stairs protrude from piles of formless rubble trucked from the city.

Rescuers said a teen-age boy was found alive Monday, 12 days after the quake, in the remains of a nine-story building. A bed apparently shielded him from tons of concrete raining down.

One of the arms of the 16-year-old was broken and he asked rescuers to bandage his eyes so his first exposure to light after so many days would not blind him.

On Thursday, workers found a woman alive under what had been another building in Leninakan, but she later died.

Artsruny said: "We did everything to sift the ruins to save the lives of whomever might be under them. At this time, we know that no one can be alive." Lights in the two-story relief headquarters sputtered as he spoke because of the varying levels of power provided by portable generators. During a blackout Friday, he met with agricultural officials by candlelight.

Leninakan, Armenia's second-largest city, is on a mountain plateau near the Turkish border and had a population of 280,000 before the quake. About 18,000 people were found in the ruins, 8,000 of whom survived.

■ President-elect George Bush's son, Jeb, will visit Armenia over Christmas — 10A

Survivors taking part in the rescue, aided by 20,000 workers from elsewhere in the Soviet Union and 15,000 soldiers, live in heated tents sent from the Russian republic and in yurts, shepherds' tents sent by Kazakhs and Mongols.

Workers have nearly completed disinfecting and burying about 80,000 carcasses of cattle, sheep and pigs killed in villages, the official news agency Tass reported.

Government officials have said Leninakan, Spitak and the dozens of other cities and towns of northwestern Armenia destroyed by the quake will be rebuilt in two years, but Artsruny said it might take longer.

"It's not important that we reconstruct Leninakan in two years and three months," he said. "It's the fact that we're doing it."

Izvestia, the government newspaper, said Friday authorities had not decided whether to rebuild Leninakan and Spitak on the same sites or move them to nearby locations less susceptible to earthquake.

Members of an earthquake disaster commission of the national ruling Politburo met in Yerevan with the Armenian Central Committee, the republic's policy-makng body. Tass reported the meeting but did not give details.

The quake has brought world figures to Armenia as well as rescuers.

Most Armenians are devout Christians, but like other members of Eastern churches, will celebrate Christmas on Jan. 6.

Lack of quality goods sinks Poles' spirits

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Colored lights and tinsel add a twinkle to the drab store windows, but holiday shoppers' spirits often sink once they scour aisles of shoddy goods and gasp at the prices.

For many Poles, this year's Christmas rush through rainy streets under leaden skies caps a year of economic and political discontent.

Constant price increases and inflation have eroded the value of the zloty and shortages send shoppers scampering to better-stocked stores in nearby Czechoslovakia and East Germany.

The authorities have tried to stock the markets before the three-day Christmas holiday that starts with "Wigilia," or "Vigil," — the traditional 12-dish meatless meal that begins when the first star appears on the evening of Dec. 24.

Thousands of people crowded the cavernous hall at Warsaw's Hala Mirowska market Friday amid piles of oranges, nuts, and prunes. Outside, trucks unloaded Christmas trees and farmers sold spruce garlands.

At one meat counter, four saleswomen chatted as about 50 customers in line ignored old sausages hanging on hooks and waited for the next meat delivery in hopes of obtaining hams or smoked pork.

The situation in the stores is "very bad, especially meat," said Zdzislaw Kilinski, a private businessman. "Soon the government will end meat (ration) coupons, prices will be higher, and I think they are saving the meat until then."

In general, customers complained about the lack of good quality TVs, radios and clothes in state stores, and said they couldn't afford prices in private shops.

One effort at a major Warsaw department store to provide a better selection of goods frustrated and angered some shoppers — because it accepted only Western hard-currency — and police had to cordon off one newly opened, well-stocked store in a provincial city to prevent a near-riot.

Shoppers at the three-story Junior department store in downtown Warsaw enter another world when the escalator stops at the second floor.

Under bright fluorescent lights, the shelves are laden with brand-name Western household appliances, ski boots, and fashionable evening clothes.

But because all items in the state-run store are priced in dollars and must be paid for in hard currency, many Poles will still have to buy the shabby stitchings one floor down.

The shortage in normal stores of good toys, pretty clothes and fragrant scents has led more than 5,000 customers to part with their precious dollars since the floor opened for business on Monday, said the floor manager, Mariusz Dobrzynski.

Long lines have also formed at the Pewex and Baltona dollar stores for champagne, wine and vodka. The biggest lines were for games and toys from the West: tennis rackets, erector sets and dolls.

In the city of Bielsko-Biala, police were called in to restore order after an avalanche of customers tried to pour through the doors of the newly opened Klimczok department store, the state-run news agency PAP reported.

The department store in the Poland's southern highlands is being hailed as the country's biggest. When it opened last week, a near-riot erupted and Polish TV showed scenes of one shopper who got a bloody nose in the tumult. Others were shown being carried out after apparently fainting.

PAP complained that professional buyers were scarfing up anything on the shelves, and the goods appeared the next day at inflated prices on the Bielsko-Biala flea market.

Another shopping store in Lodz, in central Poland, was serving 200,000 customers a day and taking in the equivalent of $340,000 daily.

The Christmas bying season was seen by the new government of Prime Minister Mieczyslaw F. Rakowski as a test of its ability to improve public moods.

The government spent millions of zlotys to purchase extra supplies of holiday goods like oranges, lemons, bananas and raisins, and supplies of other traditional Christmas foods like carp and imported wines from Hungary and Soviet Georgia.

Families bitter about chance crash result of terrorist attack

Associated Press

Bitterness took hold Friday among friends and relatives of the Pan Am crash victims over the possibility the tragedy was a terrorist attack, and many wondered at the coincidences by which some people and not others were aboard.

If terrorists are responsible, "They should kill them. Who are they to take their political problems out on innocent civilians?" said Colgate University student Chris Quinn, who lost a fellow student in the crash.

The Boeing 747 en route to New York from London crashed into a Scottish hamlet Wednesday, killing all 258 on board.

The dead included business executives, 35 students taking part in a Syracuse University study abroad program and others coming home for the holidays.

Also among the victims were an Army navigator heading home for the funeral of his sister; a soldier flying home to be with his father while he awaited surgery, and a cabin attendant who planned to retire after the flight.

Traffic jams, a ticket mixup and a final exam that lasted too long were among the twists that saved the lives of others who nearly took Flight 103.

The State Department warned U.S. embassies Dec. 7 of a bomb threat against Pan Am jets out of Frankfurt, where Flight 103 originated. Pan Am and law enforcement authorities were notified, but no public warning was issued.

President Reagan on Friday said a public warning would "literally have closed down all the air traffic in the world."

Genevieve Walters, whose son Richard Cawley, 43, of New York, was killed, said, "I certainly think the public should have been warned. They also had a responsibility to find out if the threat was true. If it was true they should not have let anyone get on."

"To know how she went, and to know they might have known something like this was going to happen, it would make any mother mad."

— Barbara Matthews Weedon, mother of victim

"To know how she went, and to know they might have known something like this was going to happen, it would make any mother mad," said Barbara Matthews Weedon of New York, who lost a 20-year-old daughter. "I think it is negligent. They should have done something about it, like checked into it."

Mildred Sachuck, the house mother at a Syracuse fraternity that lost a member in the crash and another in a Beirut terrorist bombing in 1983, said that if the crash was the work of terrorists, "We ought to blow 'em to hell."

Among the lucky ones was The Four Tops singing group, which was delayed by a British Broadcasting Co. TV taping. Lead singer Levi Stubbs said he called his wife to tell her he had missed Flight 103. "And she was crying and carrying on, and I asked, 'What's the matter?' And she told me what happened," he said.

Flight attendant Paul Garrett, 41, had planned to open a boutique in Paris after 15 years with the airline. "The terrible tragedy is that this was going to be his last flight," said Jan MacMichael, a friend in Millbrae, Calif.

Paul Walters, who was flying with his wife and son after serving with the Air Force, said he nearly switched from an earlier Pan Am flight to Flight 103 because he needed time to come up with $76 cash to ship the family dog home.

"I was reaching for the phone (to call Pan Am) when it rang," Walters said. It was a friend offering the money. Walter called his parents in Detroit to tell them he was OK. They were "never so glad to get a collect phone call."

Philip Bergstrom, 21, an Army helicopter navigator based in West Germany, was on his way to Forest Lake, Minn., to be with his father, who was to undergo heart surgery Jan. 9. "We were going to have our Christmas after the operation, just the main family opening presents," said his mother, Audrey.

Army Sgt. Lloyd David Ludlow, 41, was on his way to Hutchinson, Kan., for the funeral of his sister, who died a day earlier of a blood clot, said another sister, Aggie Coslett. "My sister's funeral is (Friday), and we need to get through that first," she said.

A mixup saved Curtis Rahilly, 21, of Wilbraham, Mass., who had been booked on Flight 103 but whose school in England mistakenly sent the tickets back home. He didn't have the means to buy new tickets for the flight right way.

"I looked at those pictures and saw my body strewn over Scotland," he said.

"I kept getting up during the night to check and see if he was really there," his mother, Dorothy, said after he arrived home safely.

Jennie Lee Aikenhead, 21, a student in the Syracuse program, had tried to make the flight, but her opera exam ran late. "That could have been me," she said.

High school headquarters for plane crash investigation

LOCKERBIE, Scotland (AP) — In a high school gymnasium against a backdrop of honor rolls dating back four decades, a Royal Air Force officer dispatches helicopter crews to hoist bodies and wreckage from the Scottish countryside.

In the school's library, where children's paintings are taped to the book shelves, Pan Am staff cluster around Flight 103's passenger lists, trying to match bodies to names.

Outside the town hall, which contains more than 80 bodies, are typewritten lists of villagers evacuated from their homes when the Boeing 747 fell from the sky.

So while the town hall is now a morgue, the red-brick Lockerbie Academy, the town's only high school, has become headquarters for the search and investigation operation for Britain's worst ever air crash.

The 900 students, from surrounding villages, are on Christmas vacation.

Their school has been taken over by the First Battalion of the Royal Highland Fusiliers, one of Scotland's oldest regiments.

They have set up operations on the school hall stage. Officers work under a board bearing the regiment's name and its previous title, Princess Margaret's Own Glasgow and Ayrshire Regiment.

People drift by and stop to read the list posted outside the town hall. A policeman on guard tries to be reassuring. "Just because a name isn't there doesn't mean they're dead," he tells each person who looks at the list.

Indeed, on Friday a Lockerbie woman listed as missing turned out to be staying with relatives. Authorities also said the driver of one car hit by flaming wreckage was treated for injuries and released, and the occupant of another vehicle had been counted twice.

But police list 17 other villagers as missing, and three people may have died in cars hit by falling debris on the nearby highway.

The rest of the 155 bodies collected by nightfall Friday are in the Lockerbie skating rink.

Flowers are piling up outside the makeshift morgues. A passenger who left the flight in London sent a bouquet to a child flying on to New York with the message:

"To the little girl in the red dress who lies here, who made my flight from Frankfurt such fun. You didn't deserve this."

Paper Christmas decorations made by the pupils dangle from exercise bars in the school hall. Class blackboards carry lists for dog handlers, helicopter crews and police who scour the countryside for bodies and debris.

Soldiers in camouflage uniforms and berets with the distinctive white cockade of Scottish regiments trudge out with spades or drive away in army trucks.

During the night, Jewish youths from Gateshead in northern England clambered over rubble, apparently looking for fragments of holy items belonging to Jews on the plane. They were sent here by the Gateshead Hevre Kadisha, or burial society.

Police from the Dumfries and Galloway county force, which with 350 uniformed officers is the tiniest in Britain, mingle with police from forces throughout Scotland.

Officers from the huge neighboring county force, the 7,000-member Strathclyde Constabulary, have arrived in the hundreds to help out in Lockerbie.

In an upstairs classroom, with lesson timetables and advertisements for performances of the Scottish National Youth Orchestra pinned to notice boards, the head of the Dumfries force, John Boyd, confers with senior officers.

The largest classroom is packed with rows of computers into which police and civilian personnel feed every scrap of information brought back from the crash site in Lockerbie and around the town.

Friends mourn loss of Syracuse students killed in plane crash

LONDON (AP) — A bouquet of red tulips lay on the steps of Syracuse University's study center as students and teachers ended a memorial service Friday for classmates killed in the Pan Am crash.

They hugged one another and wept, clustered in small groups outside the gray stone church where the morning service was held, and met at the elegant mansion that houses their school across the street.

"They had such a passionate interest in life and a desire to make the world better," Malcolm Ingrim, a Syracuse drama professor, said as he remembered the six he taught and the other students killed in the crash Wednesday night.

"When all that is snuffed out in 30 seconds it's impossible to make any sense of it," he said. "It's shattering."

The 35 Syracuse students were among 258 people who died when the New York-bound Boeing 747 crashed in the Scottish village of Lockerbie on Wednesday.

Paul Smith, an English major from Kennett Square, Pa., heard the news Wednesday night while in a London pub with friends.

"It wasn't real, I couldn't believe it," he said.

Smith shared a house with six friends including Amy Shapiro, a student from Stamford, Conn., who died in the crash. Like others, he knew just about all 270 students on the close-knit London program.

The students were chosen for the program for their academic ability, and studied at the 19th century mansion on fashionable Ladbroke Grove with Syracuse and London School of Economics professors. The term ended Dec. 17, and most had already gone home when the crash occurred.

After a friend got a call from the United States and went to the pub to tell them, Smith and the others raced to the study center to wait for news. Sometime past midnight, they learned the students had made the flight, and that there were no survivors.

"It still isn't real. You keep expecting Amy to walk through the door," he said, his hands in his pockets and his eyes downcast. Asked what she was like, he said, "She was the happiest person alive."

Kristin Huffmon, a junior from Madison, N.J., said Ms. Shapiro was studying photography and had always said, half-jokingly, that her dream was to work for National Geographic magazine.

"Doesn't every photojournalism student want to work for National Geographic? That was Amy's 'joke,'" said Ms. Huffmon, a political science major.

Ingrim, who is originally from London, said three of his students — Theodora Cohen, Miriam Wolfe, and Nicole Boulanger — were planning to set up a theater troupe at school upon their return. Three others, Jason Coker, Tim Cardwell and Turhan Ergin, also studied drama under him.

"They were all extremely gifted," he said. "When I see kids of such promise and energy...I cannot imagine how the parents are feeling right now. I just can't imagine."

At the memorial service at St. John's church in west London, vicar Harold Stringer and a local rabbi, Jacqueline Tabick, led the small group through prayers and hymns.

They read out the names of those lost and observed a moment of silence.

Bush writes Ortega that he wants to work for peace

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President-elect George Bush has written President Daniel Ortega saying he wants to work toward strengthening world peace, the leftist Sandinista government said Friday.

A statement from the presidential press office said Bush's letter responded to a message Ortega sent Bush congratulating him on his election in November.

The New York Times recently quoted Ortega as saying he would present a peace proposal to Bush but insisted any talks with the United States center on security issues, not Nicaragua's internal politics.

For the past eight years, the United States has pressured the leftist Sandinistas to undertake democratic reforms and to cut their military ties with Cuba and the Soviet Union. Washington has supported Nicaraguan rebels, known as Contras, as part of that campaign.

The Sandinistas seized power in a 1979 revolution that overthrew rightist President Anastasio Somoza, promising to install a "democratic, pluralistic" government.

U.S. officials and opposition leaders accused the Sandinistas of pursuing repressive policies, including national emergency laws of 1980-87 that imposed press censorship and restricted individual freedoms.

In 1981, the Reagan administration cut off all economic aid to Nicaragua.

Three years ago it imposed a trade embargo, saying Nicaragua was a beachhead from which to spread communism in Central America.

U.S.-Nicaraguan talks in 1985 to explore ways of improving relations ended in deadlock.

Friday's statement, published by the Sandinista newspaper Barricada under the title 'Message From Bush To Daniel," said Ortega received the vice president's letter on Thursday.

"Among other concepts, President-elect Bush said he enthusiastically looked forward to working to strengthen world peace," it said.

Also on Friday, the pro-government newspaper El Nuevo Diario said the Soviet Union donated a TU-154 jetliner and granted state-run Aeronica airline credits to buy two AN-32 passenger planes. It put the cost of the three airliners at $52.8 million.

The TU-154 can carry 141 pasengers will be used international routes. The AN-32s will be used on domestic flights, replacing older American planes which cannot be serviced due to lack of spare parts arising from the U.S. trade embargo.

Japanese legislators OK AIDS law

TOKYO (AP) — Legislators gave final approval Friday to a law intended to track and prevent the spread of AIDS.

The law, to take effect next year, would require doctors to report to local governors the name, age and sex of any AIDS patient and how the victim contracted the disease, said an official at the research office of the Standing Committee on Social and Labor Affairs, a government agency.

The law also authorizes governors to fine up to $800 anyone refusing to be tested for AIDS, and to punish doctors who disclose information about AIDS patients to anyone but the governor's office, said the official, speaking on condition of anonymity.

He said the law provides for banning entry to any foreigner believed likely to engage in activities that could spread acquired immune deficience syndrome, although AIDS tests are not mandatory for foreigners.

Most opposition members voted against the bill, saying it would lead to people avoiding seeing their doctors.

The government says 50 people have died of AIDS in Japan as of Aug. 31, with 90 confirmed AIDS patients and 1,048 known carriers of the virus.

Doctor to testify against Hamadi

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — The chief judge in the trial of confessed TWA hijacker Mohammed Ali Hamadi said Friday that another American witness will be asked to travel to West Germany and testify.

Richard Young Moon, a physician, sat near U.S. Navy diver Robert Stethem, who was beaten and killed during the hijacking.

Hamadi is charged with murder and air piracy in the June 1985 commandeering of TWA Flight 847 to Beirut, in which 39 Americans were held hostage 17 days. He admits being one of the hijackers, but denies killing Stethem.

Chief Judge Heiner Mueckenberger said Moon would be asked to testify when the trial resumes Jan. 17 after a holiday recess.

According to court records, Moon sat near Stethem after the diver was beaten and before he was killed. Stethem was shot behind a closed curtain and no one has testified to seeing who killed him.

More than two dozen American passengers and crew have testified since the trial began nearly six months ago, describing how Hamadi and the other hijacker, identifed in court records as Hassan Ezzeddine, beat Stethem and other passengers.

Also at Friday's session, Mueckenberger discussed a defense motion made Dec. 13 that President Hafez Assad of Syria and Nabih Berri, leader of the Shiite Moslem militia Amal in Lebanon, be asked to testify.

Mueckenberger said Friday he did not feel testimony by Assad or Berri had "any meaning" in the case and doubted either would come if asked.

Gun gets stuck on pants as suspect tries to aim

NEW YORK (AP) — A man who was being chased by police through the Port Authority bus terminal Friday turned on his pursuers and tried to pull a loaded Uzi submachine gun from his pants, police said.

The gun got stuck.

"It's a rather large gun and this particular individual was 5-foot-3 and 220 pounds," said Officer Michael Terribile, one of the arresting officers. "It got stuck on some clothing. Thank God it did."

The gun was fully loaded with 20 rounds of 9mm ammunition.

"One round was in the chamber ready to fire," said Terribile. "It sounds funny but it could have been a really tragic situation. The terminal was pretty full with holiday travellers heading out of town."

The incident occurred about 2 a.m. after Terribile and Sgt. Richard Murphy, both in plainclothes, arrested Rasheem McAllister for allegedly carrying 163 vials of crack inside a resealed potato chip bag.

They had McAllister under surveillance for about 40 minutes and noticed he kept putting down a red tote bag, walking away from it and then coming back to it near the Greyhound bus terminal, Terribile said.

They saw him talking to a second man, and when they asked about him, McAllister said, "'There's a guy out there with a gun and he's going to kill everybody,'" according to Terribile.

Terribile and Murphy were taking McAllister to the police desk when they noticed a man coming down the opposite escalator. McAllister did, too, and tried to duck.

Terribile and Murphy chased the man and called to a third officer, Ralph Williams, that "this was the guy."

The suspect, identified as Chidiakl Knight, was fighting to get past other people on the escalator while "attempting to try and pull the Uzi out of his waistband," Terribile said.

The officers caught up with him at the bottom of the staircase as the suspect continued tugging at the weapon, the officer said.

Knight, 19, of Brooklyn, was arrested on charges of the attempted murder of a police officer and second-degree criminal possession of a weapon.

McAllister, 19, of Brooklyn, was charged with first-degree criminal possession of a controlled substance.

Jews 'Pinch-Hitting' at hospitals on Christmas

ATLANTA (AP) — Volunteers from Jewish groups have become part of a Christmas tradition in Atlanta — filling in for non-emergency workers at hospitals who otherwise might have to work on the holiday.

The volunteer program started on a small scale in 1981 but has grown to a systemized effort involving about 500 volunteers who go to work on Christmas Day so that Christian workers may be with their families.

Members of the city's Jewish community launched the "Pinch Hitter" program when they saw that many people had jobs that required them to work on Christmas.

"Christmas, obviously, holds little significance to the Jewish community, and here was a chance to let our Christian counterparts celebrate the holiday," said Jeff Rubin, associate publisher of The Atlanta Jewish Times, a weekly newspaper which last year became a co-sponsor of the program.

"It's an opportunity to promote brotherhood and volunteerism in the same breath," Rubin said.

The volunteers do just about any task required, Rubin said, including janitorial work, kitchen duty and assisting in non-medical patient care.

Dave Abrams, co-chairman of the program, said some hospital officials at first were surprised by the willingness of the volunteers to do menial tasks.

"They'd think in many cases we don't want to get our hands dirty-...but that's what this game's all about," Abrams said. "We're not replacing the doctors, we're replacing the minimum wage people."

In addition to providing a break for some workers, the volunteers also help patients enjoy the holiday, said Judy Smith, spokeswoman for Emory University Hospital's rehabilitation center, one of the facilities participating in the program.

The volunteers have spent time with the center's patients, some of whom do not have family in the area and are alone for Christmas, Ms. Smith said.

As the program, started by Gate City Lodge of B'nai B'rith, the Jewish fraternal organization, has grown, there has been an effort to make it better organized, Rubin said.

Red Cross to build Armenian hospital

WASHINGTON (AP) — The American Red Cross will shift its earthquake aid efforts in Soviet Armenia from immediate to long-term assistance, including the building of a general hospital, the organization's president said Friday.

Richard F. Schubert told a news conference the Red Cross has received $3.5 million in cash contributions and pledges for disaster relief in Armenia and will use the funds to help replace health and medical facilities that were destroyed by the Dec. 7 earthquake.

He said the pipeline of emergency aid supplies is full and flowing well and that no further immediate aid is needed at this time.

The Red Cross will be prepared to help fill any gaps that appear at the request of the Soviet Red Cross, he said.

Schubert said priority long-term needs in Armenia, where an estimated 55,000 people are dead and 500,000 homeless, include:

— The building of a general hospital to replace a hospital that was totally destroyed in the quake.

— The creation of a facility to make and install artifical limbs.

— The establishment of a permanent tracking center to trace families of earthquake victims.

— A disaster preparedness program to reduce deaths and injuries in the event of another earthquake in Armenia.

— The rebuilding and expansion of a destroyed school for handicapped children.

Schubert, who returned on Thursday from an inspection tour of the disaster areas in Armenia, said all doctors nurses and staff members inside the destroyed hospital were killed. He said two doctors from the hospital staff survived because they were outside the building at the time of the quake.

He said 27,000 railroad cars of relief supplies have arrived so far in addition to 148 flights carrying emergency equipment.

He said Soviet officials have been concientious in keeping track of the incoming supplies. He said the Soviets have promised to return expensive equipment to donors or to seek permission to use it elsewhere once it is no longer needed in Armenia.

There have been reports of confusion and inept rescue efforts at the disaster scene but Schuster said he believes the work went well given the immensity of the destruction and the relative inexperience of Soviet officials in disaster relief.

"Given the size of the disaster, I think they responded well," he said. "It's impossible to have a disaster site in which there is not confusion initially."

In addition, he said, it should be noted that in the first day or so "all of the people present were affected; they all lost family members."

"The people displayed wonderful warmth and dignity," Schubert said. "Time after time they expressed their thanks to the American public, particularly to thank those in the American-Armenian community," he said. "When they stopped to thank us on the streets the profusion of gratitude made it difficult to hold back tears — theirs and ours."

In addition to the $3.5 million in cash and pledges, Schubert said the American Red Cross has received more than $8 million worth of medical and other supplies and shipped them to Armenia.

Jeb Bush to deliver toys, supplies to Armenia

WASHINGTON (AP) — President-elect George Bush's son and grandson are flying to Soviet Armenia over the Christmas weekend to deliver toys and medical supplies to victims of the devastating earthquake there, Bush's office said Friday.

Jeb Bush, 35, a Miami real estate developer, and his son, George, 12, will spend about six hours in Yerevan, the Armenian capital, on Christmas Day. They leave New York on Saturday, arriving in the Soviet Union the next morning.

The Bushes are traveling to Armenia as volunteers for Americares, a private relief agency that has chartered a DC-8 cargo plane to transport supplies to the region when 55,000 people were killed in the earthquake.

Steve Norman, an Americares spokesman, said the Bushes are among three people on the flight, loaded primarily with toys and medical supplies for children.

On arrival, the Bushes will tour Yerevan, Norman said. "They will go into the city and view some of the distribution points," he said.

Norman said the Bushes will only stay a few hours because of time restrictions imposed by the Soviets. "They are not allowing people to say much longer than that because of congestion at the airport," he said.

Family trying to cope with daughter's death

CARY, N.C. (AP) — The Barnes family is spending Christmas at a friend's townhouse while their home is repaired, and they are rebuilding their lives as well after losing their daughter last month in a spate of deadly tornadoes.

"We talk about it constantly," Libby Barnes said of the twisters that ripped through their community Nov. 28, killing their daughter, Janet, 9, and three other people.

"We laugh at things she did, we talk about things she did that we wish she hadn't done."

Janet was a vivacious third-grader whose fate her parents, Walt and Libby, brother Chip, 19, and sister Elizabeth, 16, are struggling to accept.

"I'm just finding the whole concept of it kind of hard to grasp," Elizabeth said as she and her family discussed their ordeal Wednesday night.

The family said they are trying to keep Janet's life in perspective and avoid the temptation to think of her as saintly.

"She was just like these other two," Mrs. Barnes said, gesturing at Chip and Elizabeth. "So when people talk about her being super-this or super-that — well, she did have some really good qualities, but she was a very normal 9-year-old child."

A few days after Janet's funeral, Walt Barnes spoke at a support gathering at a nearby elementary school.

"The point I tried to make is that the weather has been around this planet four and a half billion years, and we have been here a relatively short time," Barnes said. "And sometimes we get in the way of the weather or the elements or the environment. It's not something that's sent upon us. We wanted very much for the children to understand that."

The family has been touched by the outpouring of support from government and private agencies, their church, Barnes' colleagues at the state Department of Agriculture, Janet's school and dozens of individuals — many of whom they hadn't met before.

One couple, Ray and Elizabeth Martin, offered the Barneses the use of the townhouse and stocked it with food. Repair work has started on their North Raleigh house, to which the family is determined to return.

"At first, we weren't sure we wanted to do that," Barnes said. But they decided not to let one night of horror overshadow the happy years spent there. Other families are going back and "that'll be one of the tightest neighborhoods in this town," Barnes said.

Chip said the restored house would be almost identical to the original. "It kind of symbolizes the family — a few changes, but we're still going on, not trying to freeze time," he said.

Mother convicted of killing son found to be legally insane

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — The second-degree murder conviction of a woman who claimed the "baby blues" caused her to run over her infant son with a car was set aside Friday by a judge who found the woman legally insane.

Sheryl Massip, 24, who testified that post-partum depression drove her to kill the colicky, constantly crying boy, was legally insane at the time of the crime, said Superior Court Judge Robert R. Fitzgerald.

"I do not believe the prosecution's evidence established that she had the requisite mental state of malice aforethought," the judge said.

The ruling invalidates a Nov. 17 jury verdict of second-degree murder.

Mrs. Massip welcomed the verdict.

"I was praying the people would understand," she said outside court. "The jury did not understand, but I'm thankful that the judge did."

Mrs. Massip testified at the trial that on April 29, 1987, her own 23rd birthday, she hit her 6-week-old son, Michael, on the head with a garden tool, then put him under the wheels of the family station wagon, ran over him and put his body in a trash can.

Defense witnesses said an exceptionally bad case of post-partum depression, a hormonal ailment known as the "baby blues," was to blame. Defense attorney Milton Grimes said the young mother was wracked by lack of sleep and hallucinations and that she heard voices telling her to put the boy out of his misery.

Sanitation law to include planes

WASHINGTON (AP) — A new federal sanitation regulation is being expanded to include airplanes used to carry animals sold to foreign buyers, the Agriculture Department said Friday.

James W. Glosser, administrator of the department's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, said the new rule will take effect on Jan. 23. It was officially proposed two years ago.

Until now, he said, sanitation rules covered only ships, which were the principal carriers of animals exported by the United States. The regulations will not apply to the shipment of pets and other small animals.

"Today, most animals, like people, travel abroad by air, and air travel should be addressed by the regulations," Glosser said. "In fact, most airplanes already are disinfected before they are used to transport animals from the United States."

Vehicles used for animals can be contaminated with disease organisms or flies, ticks, lice and mites that carry disease, he said.

The expanded rule covers aircraft, loading ramps, fittings and other equipment. All will have to be cleaned and disinfected before animals are loaded, Glosser said.

Dolphin rescue operation canceled

VIRGINIA BEACH, Va. (AP) — The federal government has canceled an effort to rescue a bottlenose dolphin from Broad Bay, but the head of the rescue operation said Friday he remains worried the mammal will die in the cold.

Robert Schoelkopf, director of the Marine Mammal Stranding Center in Brigantine, N.J., said the National Marine Fisheries Service called off the rescue effort because the dolphin is not sick.

"The animal is considered not to be a stranding. It's healthy and swimming," he said by telephone.

The 6-foot-long dolphin known as "Rascal" led a rescue team on a chase around the bay for two days as divers tried to net it to move it to warm water. More than 50 volunteers and a dozen boats participated in the operation that ended Thursday.

Although the dolphin seemed robust, Schoelkopf said he is concerned it will weaken as the water temperature dips below 42 degrees. Schoelkopf also said the dolphin may not find enough to eat.

But Schoelkopf said he would take no more action unless invited to do so by the federal government, which has authority over rescue attempts.

Rescued Bryde's whale recovering

ORLANDO, Fla. (AP) — A 23-foot Bryde's whale rescued from the Gulf of Mexico has responded to antibiotics and gained 175 pounds since last month's stranding, scientists said.

They hope to return the 2-year-old mammal to the Gulf in January.

Sea World research biologist Dan Odell says he knows of no other case in which a Bryde's whale survived a stranding and was returned to natural habitat.

A boater discovered the whale Nov. 25 in shallow water off Honeymoon Island near Clearwater. During a daylong rescue it was towed to shore, hoisted by crane into a truck and transported to Sea World, 100 miles east.

Bryde's whales, which grow to 40 feet, are usually found in water more than 100 feet deep. Scientists don't know why the whale beached.

Blood tests showed a generalized infection which is responding to antibiotics. And with huge doses of vitamins and 105,000 calories daily in herring gruel and high-calorie liquids, the whale has steadily improved.

Group pursues purse snatcher

NORWALK, Conn. (AP) — A purse snatcher got much more than he bargained for when the victim was joined in pursuit by 10 to 15 shopkeepers, police said.

A Christmas shopper walking in Norwalk had her purse plucked Wednesday, and the thief headed up the street, according to Sgt. Richard Rilling.

The woman screamed and began to give chase. She was soon followed by the store owners and employees, police said.

The thief ran into a house, which his pursuers surrounded as police arrived. A police dog named Rex went into the house and turned up the pocket book in a upstairs room and the suspect in the basement, Rilling said.

David Fagan, 29, of Norwalk was charged with second-degree larceny for the Wednesday incident and other larceny charges for purse-snatchings in the area Dec. 14 and 20.

Martin Luther King day proclaimed

LOS ANGELES (AP) — President Reagan on Friday officially proclaimed Jan. 16 as Martin Luther King Jr. day, saying the slain civil rights leader's "work is not done, but neither is his witness stilled."

"We must reaffirm in every generation the lessons of justice and charity that Dr. King taught with his unflinching determination, his complete confidence in the redeeming power of love and his utter willingess to suffer, to sacrifice and to serve," the president said.

The day is a federal holiday and also is a holiday in some states.

Brownies face deja-vu situation

CLEVELAND (AP) — Not much has changed for the Cleveland Browns in the six days since they beat the Houston Oilers.

Once again, the Browns are in a must-win situation. Once again, the opponent is Houston. And once again, Cleveland is facing a game with the health of three key players uncertain.

"It's tough to play an opponent two weeks straight, especially when you beat them the first week," said Cleveland receiver Webster Slaughter, who caught the game-winning, 22-yard touchdown from Don Strock in the fourth quarter last Sunday. "They're not going to want to get beat twice in a row."

The Browns overcame a 16-point, third-quarter deficit and beat the Oilers 28-23 in the regular-season finale, setting up a rematch in today's AFC wild card game — same teams, same stadium.

Houston coach Jerry Glanville said the loss was devastating to his team, which had already clinched a playoff spot but would have added home-field advantage for the wild card game if it had won.

"I don't know that we're over it yet," Glanville said. "I guess the way that game ended up, you don't have the joy of going into the playoffs. Instead, you have the downer of losing a game you really felt you had a chance to win."

Despite the apparent gloom, Glanville noted that the Oilers have survived some tough times before, such as an upset loss to Pittsburgh this season.

"We rebound," he said. "We haven't lost two in a row in a year and a half (since November 1987). When you lose to a division rival, our team treats it like it's a death in the family. But we've always managed to come out of these things."

The Browns' players aren't buying that the Oilers are letting the loss get them down.

"After losing a game like that? Put yourself in their position," Slaughter said. "If it was me, I'd want to come back and play that much harder. I'd be pumped up."

Strock, 38, remains the likely starter for the Browns because of the sprained knee suffered by Bernie Kosar on Dec. 12. Kosar resumed practicing Wednesday but was listed as questionable for today's game.

Also listed as questionable was Cleveland fullback Kevin Mack, because of knee and calf problems. Cornerback Hanford Dixon was upgraded to probable this week after missing Sunday's game with a pulled thigh muscle.

"Don still has some zip on the ball," Slaughter said. "It's not any harder to catch. If you can catch one quarterback, you can catch any of them. But for a 37- or 38-year-old, he can throw it."

Strock passed for 328 yards and two second-half touchdowns after being intercepted on each of the Browns' first three series Sunday.

Mavs owner makes serious bid for Pokes

DALLAS (AP) — Dallas Mavericks owner Donald Carter backed up an offer for the Dallas Cowboys football team with a $10 million deposit and a written letter expressing his interest, a television station reported Friday.

Carter met with Cowboys' owner H.R. Bum Bright Thursday night to discuss his $130 million offer for the team, the report said. Bright had rejected that offer from Carter and an undisclosed investor earlier this week.

"He reiterated his offer is for 100 percent of the team and 100 percent of Texas Stadium," Jack Veatch, of the Dallas office of Salomon Bros., the New York investment company handling the offers, told KXAS-TV in Dallas.

"He had indicated that bid on Monday to Bum and he stands firmly behind it. The only difference right now is that to back that up he has put it in writing and he has put a $10 million cash deposit down for the purchase. He's depositing that with Salomon Bros."

H.R. "Bum" Bright, who owns 40 percent of the team, is asking $150 million for the Cowboys and the lease at Texas Stadium, but the price tag is actually $180 million — $100 million for the team, $60 million for the stadium and the rest for debts.

Ed A. Smith Jr., who already owns 27 percent of the team, is part of a group that has offered $147 million.

Jerry Jones, an Arkansas multimillionaire was in Dallas this week looking over the Cowboys' finances.

So. Miss outruns stalled Miners

SHREVEPORT, La. (AP) — James Henry returned two punts for touchdowns and set two Independence Bowl records to lead Southern Mississippi to a 38-18 victory over Texas-El Paso Friday night.

Henry scored on returns of 65 and 45 yards as Southern Mississippi ended the year at 10-2. Texas-El Paso finished at 10-3 with the loss in the 13th annual Independence Bowl.

After UTEP stalled on its first drive of the second half, Henry took the ensuing punt just inside the hash mark and cut toward the sideline, outracing the Texas-El Paso defenders to the end zone to put Southern Mississippi ahead 17-7.

With 5:38 left in the third quarter, the senior cornerback returned another punt 45 yards for a score to increase the Golden Eagles lead to 31-7.

The 65-yard return broke the game record of 60 yards set by Louisville's Kevin Miller in 1977 against Louisiana Tech. Henry returned three punts for 108 yards to break the mark of 67 yards, also set by Miller in 1977.

Shelton Gandy also scored twice in the second half to help put the game out of reach. Gandy scored first on a one-yard dive with 9:52 left in the third quarter. Southern Mississippi took over on the UTEP 25-yard line after sacking punter Lance Brownlee, who couldn't handle the snap, and scored four plays later.

Gandy added a seven-yard touchdown run early in the fourth quarter to cap a 60-yard, six play drive. Gandy carried on every play during the drive.

UTEP took a 7-0 lead in the first quarter on a 30-yard pass from quarterback Pat Hegarty to Reggie Barrett.

Chris Seroka kicked a 26-yard field goal late in the first quarter and Brett Favre hit Reginald Warnsley with a 3-yard pass with 19 seconds left in the first half to give Southern Mississippi the lead for good, 10-7.

The game was the last at UTEP for coach Bob Stull, who is leaving to take the coaching job at Missouri.

Texas-El Paso had several chances to take control of the game in the second quarter, but could not capitalize.

UTEP kicker Chris Jacke, who set an NCAA record this year by scoring 123 points, missed field goal attempts of 29 and 54 yards.

An offensive pass interference call against UTEP in the second quarter also nullified a 41-yard pass by Hegarty to Rob Housler. The completion would have given the Miners the ball on the Southern Mississippi 4-yard line. Instead UTEP wound up with a second-and-25 on its own 40 and punted three plays later.

No Cotton for 2 Hogs

FAYETTEVILLE, Ark. (AP) — Arkansas football coach Ken Hatfield on Friday suspended two senior players from his Cotton Bowl-bound team, saying they broke an unspecified team rule.

Defensive tackle Wayne Martin, the Southwest Conference defensive player of the year, and offensive guard Freddie Childress will not play when the Razorbacks meet UCLA on Jan. 2 in Dallas, Hatfield said in a statement read by UA Sports Information Director Rick Schaeffer.

"They broke a team rule and I will have no further comment on the matter. My only comments will be about those who will play in the Cotton Bowl," Hatfield said in the statement.

"That's all I have," Schaeffer said when asked to specify which team rule was broken.

Martin, 23, was one of two Arkansas players named to The Associated Press All America team this year. Martin, 6-5 and 263, made 18 tackles behind the line of scrimmage for 110 yards in losses. He had 13 quarterback sacks, caused seven fumbles, recovered three fumbles and broke up four passes.

Childress, 22, was as heavy as 367 pounds a year ago, but he played at 315 this fall. The 6-4 Childress made Third Team All-American and was named to the SWC All-Conference team.

Army hopes to rush past favored Tidemen

EL PASO (AP) — When Alabama meets Army Saturday in the Sun Bowl, the Cadets hope the rush is on.

Alabama, 8-3, is favored over Army, 9-2, by two touchdowns in the first meeting between the teams. Kickoff for the nationally televised game is scheduled for 11:13 a.m. CST.

Army has thrown only 61 passes this season, the fewest of any Divsion I school. And Coach Jim Young isn't planning on changing, even though Alabama's rushing defense is the ranked fifth in the nation.

Both the Cadets' losses, to Washington and Boston College, have come in games where the Cadets threw the ball 10 times or more.

Directing Army's wishbone offense will be sophomore Bryan McWilliams, who began the season as a third-stringer and finished as the team's starting quarterback and second-leading rusher.

McWilliams has 1,070 all-purpose yards, rushing 140 times for 815 yards and eight touchdowns. Even he is amazed at the growth of his role.

"At the beginning of the season, I couldn't have possibly done what I'm doing now, mostly with recognizing defenses," McWilliams said Friday. "With the wishbone you have to recognize different defenses so you can get the right blocking scheme.

"Right now I don't think there's a defense I wouldn't be able to recognize."

Despite his confidence, McWilliams said he's just one member of a team that doesn't stress individual performance. Every member of Army's starting backfield has had at least one 100-yard rushing game this season.

"The kind of people on our team are real unselfish," he said. "The wishbone is based around teamwork because everyone not only has to run the ball, but you also have to block. You could have a 1,000-yard season like Mike (Mayweather), but Mike still has to block."

Mayweather leads Army with 1,051 yards on 191 rushes and has nine touchdowns.

Alabama's defense, meanwhile, has held opponents to fewer than 96 yards rushing this season.

Keying the Crimson Tide's multiple defense is AP All-American and Butkus-award winning linebacker Derrick Thomas, who has 88 tackles and 27 quarterback sacks this season.

Alabama's defense forced 33 turnovers, but Army has lost the ball a scant 11 times this season.

NCAA tabs Kentucky star

LEXINGTON, Ky. (AP) — The NCAA has accused University of Kentucky basketball player Eric Manuel of copying off another student during his college entrance examination.

In an allegation released by UK on Friday, the NCAA said a comparison of answer sheets belonging to Manuel and "another student who sat next to Manuel during the test" indicated that "211 of the 219 answers on the exams were identical."

BILL GRIMES

Why not a holiday cage tournament in Midland?

Grimes

All my original ideas are kaput.

One of my estimable colleagues published his Christmas wish list, while another recapped the year for us. So I'll just have to go on the warpath.

Rowf.

Doesn't it get awful boring around here between Christmas and New Year's Day for sports fans? The Chaps are off and the high school teams might as well be, no closer than their holiday tournaments are.

That bothers a basketball junkie such as myself. Why should our local high schoolers travel so far?

Because there's no holiday tournaments here in town.

By now, you must be thinking "if this guy's so hooked on basketball, let him watch ESPN."

I don't want to watch ESPN. I want my basketball alive and in person, without the help of some little bitty ol' box.

To that end, I propose that the city fathers and athletic moguls organize a holiday tournment to fill in some dead time for this bored sportswriter.

The excuse that "those other tournaments have been going on for years,", just won't work in this case. You don't even have to go outside the state to find an example of a new holiday tournament.

I present to you the Lions Club Holiday Classic, played at four sites in Alvin next week. This tournament features 16 boys and 16 girls teams despite only being in its second year.

What happened was that a group of businessmen/basketball junkies decided that a basketball tournament would be a shot in the arm to an economicall depressed community. They were right.

The tournament brought in tens of thousands of dollars to fast food eateries (thus, enhancing the city's tax base) throughout this southeast city of about 20,000, and proved to be a viable alternative to the fabled Houston Jaycee Tournament, which has been increasingly dominated by Houston ISD teams.

Why couldn't we do that here in Midland? A correctly-run tournament could bring loads of money (though concentrated in the service sector) and esteem to our fair city.

Sure, there aren't very many 4A and 5A teams in the area. But that's why you have two divisions, one for the big guys and another for the little fellas. Surely, there's enough people from in a diamond-shaped area from Pecos to Sanderson to San Angelo to Lamesa that might be interested in such an event.

Local athletic departments and the Midland Chamber of Commerce should get on the stick to get this concept off the ground.

The best high school cage team in West Texas? How about the Andrews Mustangs, who convincingly knocked off perennial New Mexico state champion Hobbs last weekend? Coach Frank Bice's team is 12-1 overall and 1-0 in District 4-4A, which they should win easily. Fact is, they could finish the district ssason undefeated.

Seniors Gym Bice and Damon Clay lead the Mustangs with 29.8 and 18.4 points per game. Bice is a tremendous pure shooter, but Clay — the former Midland Lee player — may be the better all-around athlete. He's second on the team in rebounding with an 8.1 per game average and ranks in the district's top 10 in three-point percentage and free throw percentage.

Mustang postman Ara Baten has come through this season, too. Baten leads the league in field goal percentage with a 68.0 mark. Bice is eighth in FG percentage despite spending much of h ime on the perimeter.

Young Gym is also second in the league in assists with 5.8 helps per game. Teammate Scott Collins is sixth.

Big Spring had a losing record going into district play, but the Steers featured the fourth and ninth leading scorers in non-district play. Abner Shellman averaged 22.5 ppg in his first 14 games, while rotund guard Doug Young chipped in with 14.3 ppg.

Fort Stockton's Armando Trevino leads the loop in scoring with 33.8 points per game, connecting on 58.8 percent of his field goal attempts. Wow.

After having seen several 4-4A teams play so far this season, I can't see anyone staying with Andrews over the long haul, though Big Spring has the firepower to make things interesting, as does balanced Pecos.

Cummings, Humphries pace late rally over Mavs

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Terry Cummings had 30 points and Jay Humprhies scored seven in a late 13-2 run Friday night as the Milwaukee Bucks rallied to beat the Dallas Mavericks 113-101.

The Bucks, who had watched a 13-point lead slip away in the second half, trailed 89-84 when Humphries brought them back before a delirious crowd at the Bradley Center.

Humphries, who had 11 of his season-high 24 points in the fourth quarter, hit a 3-pointer to cut the Dallas lead to 89-87. He then added a driving basket and jumper that gave Milwaukee a 97-91 advantage with 4:02 to play.

A three-point play by Rolando Blackman and a 3-point basket by Mark Aguirre brought the Mavs back to within two with 2:20 to go.

But Cummings hit a jumper and Sidney Moncrief, who also had a season high with 25 points, scored on a fast break, making it 105-99 with 1:42 left.

Dallas then missed four consecutive free throws and the Bucks made eight straight in the final minute.

Blackman had 21 points to lead Dallas. Sam Perkins added 20 and Derek Harper 18.

With Milwaukee leading 80-68 with 1:36 left in the third quarter, the Mavericks went on a 21-4 run behind a pair of 3-pointers from Harper. That opened an 89-84 lead for the Mavericks with 6:54 to play, but they couldn't hold it.

Suns 119, Nuggets 107

Armon Gilliam scored 27 points, Eddie Johnson 21 and Kevin Johnson had 10 of his 18 in the fourth period as the Suns won their eighth straight home game.

Phoenix, 11-2 at home this season, led 61-48 at halftime and 90-81 after the third quarter before Denver mounted a rally.

Walter Davis, playing here for the first time against his former teammates, scored seven points in a five-minute span and cut the Nuggets' deficit to 106-101 with 3:55 remaining.

Clippers 114, Spurs 108

The Clippers recovered from a 15-point halftime deficit behind 25 points from Reggie Williams.

Williams came off the bench to score 21 points in the second half. Ken Norman added 20 and Quintin Dailey 19 for the Clippers.

San Antonio was paced by Willie Anderson's 22 points, and Alvin Robertson scored 21 before fouling out late in the game.

Hornets 103, Bulls 101

Kurt Rambis retrieved a loose ball for a layup at the buzzer to lift Charlotte.

Rambis' game-winner completed a strong fourth-quarter comeback by the expansion Hornets, who trailed 85-77 after Michael Jordan's free throw with 8:14 left.

Reserve center Tim Kempton scored six of his 16 points in a run of 10 straight points, and his free throw gave the Hornets an 87-85 advantage at the 6:23 mark.

Heat 101, Jazz 89

Rory Sparrow scored 19 points, including eight during a key third-quarter run, to pace the Heat to its first-ever victory at home.

Miami, which lost its first 17 games before winning against the Clippers at Los Angeles on Dec. 14, won at Miami for the first time in 12 games. The Heat is 2-21 overall.

Kevin Edwards added 18 points and Pat Cummings 17 for Miami. Utah was led by Karl Malone with 32 points, but no other Jazz player scored more than 13.

Cavaliers 119, Sonics 107

Larry Nance scored 27 points to lead six double-figure scorers and the Cavaliers outscored the SuperSonics 14-2 in overtime to earn their fifth consecutive victory.

Seattle, which trailed by 17 points midway through the second quarter, forced the overtime by bouncing back from a 103-97 deficit with 1:10 remaining. Seattle was led by Dale Ellis with 32 points.

Hawks 131, Pacers 114

Dominique Wilkins had 13 of his 28 points in the decisive third quarter and Moses Malone also scored 28 points to keep the Pacers winless on the road this season.

Wilkins, 3-for-13 from the field in the first half, was 6-for-7 in the third quarter as Atlanta took the lead for good.

Bullard's late goal extends Flyer skein

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Mike Bullard's goal with 29 seconds spoiled Hartford's comeback and gave the Philadelphia Flyers their seventh straight victory, a a 5-4 triumph over the Whalers Friday night.

The Flyers' winning streak is their longest of the season. Hartford has lost four straight games and is 0-5-1 in its last six.

Bullard got the rebound of Doug Sulliman's shot and slammed the puck past Hartford's goalie Mike Liut at 19:31 of the final period.

Joel Quenneville and Sylvain Cote scored goals within a five-minute span to enable Hartford to climb back from a 4-2 deficit in the third period.

Hartford closed to within 4-3 when Cote scored from the right faceoff circle, beating Flyers goalie Ron Hextall to the glove side 8:15 left in the game.

Penguins 2, Devils 2, OT

Defenseman Tom Kurvers scored on a 40-foot shot 8:54 into the third period to give the Devils a 2-2 tie.

The tie was the second between the two teams in the past two weeks. New Jersey is 5-0-2 in its last seven meetings with Pittsburgh since their last lost to the Penguins on Dec. 17, 1987.

Goalie Tom Barrasso, now 9-3-3 since being traded to the Penguins from Buffalo, stopped 38 of 40 shots, including two great saves against Mark Johnson — one on a second-period, short-handed breakaway and the other on a point-blank shot from 10 feet early in the third period. Barrasso also stopped John MacLean on a 30-foot slapshot in overtime, the only shot of the extra period.

Devils goalie Sean Burke faced only 28 shots, but came up big against Mario Lemieux from 20 feet out late in the third period with the Devils on a power play and the score tied 2-2.

Rangers 2, Capitals 2 OT

Kevin Miller, making his NHL debut, and Brian Mullen scored goals one minute apart late in the third period to lift the Rangers into a 2-2 tie with Washington.

The tie gave the Rangers a 3-0-1 record against the Capitals this season. The two clubs are tied for third in the Patrick Division with 17-14-5 records for 39 points, six points behind first-place Pittsburgh.

Miller, the younger brother of the Capitals' Kelly Miller, scored his first NHL goal with 3:33 remaining to make it 2-1 and Mullen tied it a minute later.

Mike Gartner scored twice for the Capitals.

Sabres 5, Maple Leafs 2

Ray Sheppard, Christian Ruuttu and Mike Donnelly scored second-period goals for Buffalo.

The victory extended Buffalo's longest unbeaten steak of the season to four games — two wins and two ties. Toronto is now 1-11-1 in their last 13 games and 1-2 under new coach George Armstrong, who took over from John Brophy on Monday.

The Leafs opened the scoring on the power play at 12:42 of the first period when Tom Fergus took a pass-out from Al Secord and beat Buffalo goaltender Daren Puppa through the pads.

Buffalo tied the game 3½ minutes later when Benoit Hogue took a pass just inside the Toronto blue line from Phil Housley, moved in on the left side and fired a low shot from 25 feet past goaltender Ken Wregget's glove.

Nordiques 5, Jets 4

Rookie Joe Sakic scored a power-play goal and added two assists as Quebec held off a late Winnipeg rally to beat the Jets.

The Nordiques were ahead 5-2 when Winnipeg's Randy Gilhen scored with 3:03 to play. Just 43 seconds later, Gaetan Duchesne was assessed a five-minute major and a game misconduct for high-sticking Winnipeg's Dale Hawerchuk.

Ex-Aggie uses holiday to preen for scouts

MONTGOMERY, Ala. (AP) — For Texas A&M linebacker Dana Batiste, Christmas Day will be anything but a holiday.

Batiste will be playing in the Blue-Gray All-Star game.

He said each player has spent all week at practice trying to impress some 100 scouts from the NFL and the Canadian Football League, but Sunday, a team spirit will prevail.

"You come here and you say, 'I' ... all week," Batiste said. "Then the competitive nature of an athlete comes out when the game time gets here.

"When another guy makes a great play, you don't frown and say, 'I need to make a big play to show the scouts I can do the same thing.' Instead, we clap our hands and say, 'Great play.' That's just team instinct and athletic competitiveness."

Batiste is one of four Aggies on the Gray squad. The others are wide receiver Rod Harris, offensive lineman L.B. Moon and defensive back Alex Morris.

Texas A&M finished 7-5, but couldn't go to a bowl because of NCAA probation. Despite a traumatic year that ended with Jackie Sherrill's resignation as coach, Batiste had a good season, including leading the Aggies in tackles with 110.

With such defensive standouts as John Roper, Adam Bob and Aaron Wallace, "that's pretty hard to do," Batiste said. "With those guys, you had to fight to get tackles."

Pass-happy Cougars battle Christmas Day

Aloha Bowl

HONOLULU (AP) — Protection of the quarterback figures to be the key in the Aloha Bowl between Houston and Washington State, two pass-minded teams.

Two of the nation's most potent offenses meet at Aloha Stadium Christmas Day. No. 18 Washington State and No. 14 Houston are ranked third and fourth, respectively, in the nation in total offense.

"I believe it will be a shootout," said Washington State quarterback Timm Rosenbach, the nation's most efficient passer. "I don't think 30 or 40 points is out of the question for both teams."

Houston, 9-2, is favored by four points over Washington State, 8-3.

"The defense that's successful at rushing the quarterback and not giving the quarterback time is going to win," Houston coach Jack Pardee said.

"The strength of our football team is our offensive line," Washington State coach Dennis Erickson said. "Houston is good up front. That matchup will be a key to the game."

Rosenbach, a junior, was rated first in the nation in passing efficiency this season. He completed 66 percent of his passes for 2,791 yards and 23 touchdowns, helping Washington State to only its fourth bowl appearance in the school's 93-year football history.

Rosenbach led the Pac-10 Conference and was third in the nation in total offense, averaging 286 yards pera game. He finished seventh in the Heisman Trophy balloting.

Steve Broussard rushed for 1,141 yards and Rich Swinton ran for 980 yards.

"Our defense is going to be tested against Washington State," Pardee said. "When you've got the top-ranked quarterback in football and a rusher who gained over 1,000 yards in a season ... the tribute goes to the offensive line.

"The key is getting past them, not giving Rosenbach time to throw," Pardee said.

Sophomore quarterback Andre Ware leads Houston's run-and-shoot offense, which ranked first in the Southwest Conference and second in the nation in passing offense, averaging 377 yards per game.

Ware, who started Houston's final seven games, passed for 2,501 yards and 25 touchdowns.

"I'm in love with this offense," Ware said. "There's no one else in the country that runs the run-and-shoot the way we run it."

The offense helped two Houston receivers compile impressive statistics this season.

All-American Jason Phillips, who caught 108 passes for 1,444 yards and 15 touchdowns, led the nation in receiving for the second straight season. Phillips is only the fourth receiver in NCAA history to lead the nation in consecutive seasons.

Oklahoma AD warns would-be crooks

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — While the long-term effect of Oklahoma's three-year football probation is difficult to gauge, the way in which athletic department matters will be handled in the future seems very clear.

"If you break the rules, you're fired," said Athletic Director Donnie Duncan.

Since his hiring in September 1986, Duncan has taken a hands-on approach with all sports, and has made moves to be sure the Sooners comply with Big Eight and NCAA rules.

Perhaps his most important hire was Ron Watson as assistant athletic director in charge of compliance. Watson has been charged with the unenviable task of writing a handbook that makes sense of the NCAA's rule book.

Duncan, in addressing the NCAA's sanctions against the football program last week, said those coaches who fail to learn the handbook will have only themselves to blame.

"We have to be more careful," he said. "We have to change some things, and we will change some things."

One thing that will not change — at least as a result of the NCAA sanctions — is the football coaching staff. Two assistant coaches, Scott Hill and Mike Jones, were targeted by NCAA investigators for breaking the rules, as was former recruiting coordinator Shirley Vaughan.

Mrs. Vaughan was removed from her position on Nov. 7, within a few weeks of Oklahoma's appearance before the NCAA Committee on Infractions. Jones has been taken off the recruiting road this year, and Hill — who directs recruiting — will not be allowed on the road next season.

While all three have had their salaries frozen for a year and have been placed on university probation, they're still employed, which the NCAA said it took into consideration when deciding on a penalty.

Duncan said firing the three never was seriously considered.

"Do you face the death penalty for everything you do? Not at all," he said. "We examined the circumstances, assessed the difficulty and determined what we were going to do about it.

"In the case of Mike Jones, the NCAA accepted the action. When is enough enough? In the case of Mike Jones, enough is enough now.

"In Scott Hill's case, enough is enough when we take him off the road in 1989-90. In Shirley Vaughan's case, enough was when we complied with what they told us to do."

Oklahoma's ban from live telecasts and a bowl game next year clearly are the most significant penalties. Not because it will scare recruits away — Coach Barry Switzer feels any recruit serious about the Sooners won't be shaken by the probation — but because of the money the athletic department stands to lose.

David Swank, interim university president, estimated the amount at between $750,000 and $1 million. Considering football provides 97 percent of the revenue in the athletic department, such a loss could lead to temporary cutbacks in scholarships in minor sports such as tennis or gymnastics.

"I would hope not," said Duncan. "But this department is a department that's a team. When things are on an upside, we all share in that. When they're in a downside, we'll share in that."

The reduction of seven scholarships during the 1989-90 and 1990-91 academic years, as well as the drop from 85 paid recruiting visits to 50, shouldn't be crippling.

Oklahoma has always attracted great talent. Sooner coaches will now have to be more selective in choosing who to invite for visits and to whom to offer scholarships.

Switzer points out that most of this year's recruits will be held out in their first season, and thus will only be affected by the bowl game Oklahoma can't play in after the 1990 season.

"If their school is the University of Oklahoma and they'd like to attend, then one game in their four-year career should not be a significant penalty to them," Switzer said.

It is significant for players already on hand, particularly seniors-to-be who won't get a chance to finish their careers on television or with a bowl trip.

"They're going to have that much less incentive," said lineman Anthony Phillips, who graduates this year. "What it always comes down to is the players get hurt, and they're the ones who should be protected the most."

The severity of the Oklahoma penalties came as a surprise to everyone from Swank to the players. Assistant athletic director Watson, a former NCAA staff member, said Oklahoma officials had been "up front and forward about it the whole way through ... we didn't try to hide things."

"We just had a spirit of cooperation, and I can't say that that totally ended up helping us," he said.

Duncan said the NCAA "wanted us and they got us." However, he insisted he is not bitter toward the body that governs intercollegiate athletics.

"I feel the investigation process was conducted on both sides fairly," he said. "The best way to keep 'em from having us (again) is to abide by the rules."

As many as 20 potential buyers, including a Canadian group, have expressed interest in the Cowboys.

Bright did not immediately return calls from The Associated Press and Cowboys President Tex Schramm said he was unaware of Carter's deposit.

One of Bright's aides, Jim Francis, confirmed that Bright received Carter's letter, The Dallas Morning News reported in its early Saturday editions.

The News also reported that Carter has proposed a meeting with Bright to negotiate a deal.

"For Bum and Don to get comfortable, they have to know that each other is serious," Jack Veatch, the managing director of the Dallas office of Salomon Bros. "Once that is achieved, they can sit down and work out the variables. The door has been opened for dialogue."

Veatch said Bright indicated he will respond to Carter, and that the two men probably will meet late next week after Carter returns from a holiday vacation.

Martin's mother, Naomi Martin, told The Associated Press that her son was home for the holidays at Cherry Valley, Ark., but that she had no information about his suspension. Martin did not return a telephone message left for him at his family's residence.

Childress' mother has an unlisted telephone number at West Helena, Ark., and there was no answer to repeated calls by the AP to the Wilson Sharp athletic dormitory on the UA campus.

Tony Ollison, who has been Martin's backup, will start in his place on the 10-1 Arkansas team, Schaeffer said. Another sophomore, Robert Wynn, will be the back in that position against 9-2 UCLA.

UK

Of the seven or eight answers that were different, "the blackened space marked by Manuel was adjacent to the space marked by the other student," the NCAA charged.

Manuel, a sophomore guard-forward, passed the American College Test on June 13, 1987, at Lafayette High School in Lexington after twice failing the Scholastic Aptitude Test in his hometown of Macon, Ga.

The allegation, one of 18 levied against the school's basketball program by the NCAA, also said Maneul took part in last season's Division I playoffs even though he knew he was ineligible "due to improper achievement on this test score."

It also accused UK of failing to question the validity of Manuel's score, even though it was inconsistent with his previous academic record.

The accusations against Manuel were the last to be disclosed under an order from Fayette Circuit Judge George Barker. Originally, the university had made the 18 allegations available in summary form.

Portions of Friday's text were blacked out and the other student was not identified.

The university released the texts of three other allegations Thursday, one of which charged that Manuel, along with Kentucky assistant coach Dwane Casey and Sean Sutton, gave three NCAA investigators "false and misleading information" last July 11-12 when they were interviewed about transportation to the test site.

Financial Focus BY VAN M. PEARCY

It's hard to find Santa Claus in the stock market

The October 1987 market meltdown led some investors to question the logic of long-term investing. After all, a market decline of almost 20 percent in one day is a good argument for short-term investing and market timing.

Wouldn't it be more profitable to anticipate market tops and withdraw before they occur? Yes, but no one has yet devised a system to accurately predict when the market will top or hit bottom.

If such a crystal ball existed, investors could prudently withdraw principal and profits from the market and reinvest in the safety and higher yields of bonds or other debt instruments. When the market bottomed, they could then return to equities.

Unfortunately, this seldom happens. Many refuse to recognize this, though, and cling to the hope that somewhere there is a Santa Clause.

Look at the historical case for long-term investing vs. market timing.

Kenneth Janke, president of NAIC, an organization of individual investors and investment clubs, recently pointed out that a market timer has to be right 80 percent of the time to match the performance of a long-term investor.

Although you might quibble with Janke's estimate, a strong case for a buy-and-hold strategy can be made by looking at the closing prices for the Dow Jones Industrial Average since 1946. The Dow has closed up in 28 of those 42 years.

In order to have profited from market timing, you would have had to have been right 67 percent of the time just to match the buy-and-hold strategy. Since bull-market gains are historically greater than bear market losses, Janke's 80 percent estimate could be correct.

That alone is a good argument for long-term investing. Add to it the cost and tax liabilities of in-and-out trading, and you have a convincing argument for even the staunchest trader.

Remember, there's a brokerage charge each time a security is bought or sold. This takes from the profit or adds to the loss. In addition, if there is a profit, taxes can claim up to 33 percent of that. All together it means you are taking the risk and sharing the profits with your broke and the Internal Revenue Service.

This does not mean it cannot be done effectively. The message is that investing should be a long-range plan of putting money to work now to benefit you later. How your investments perform over short periods is not as important as how much is there when you need it.

There are few guarantees in life, so it's important to keep the odds on your side when you plan.

Financial Focus is by Van Pearcy at 1509 W. Wall, Midland, TX 79701.

Seniors often fraud targets; tips given

By JOHN K. SCHMIDT
President, Permian Basin
Better Business Bureau

As consumers we all share a common bond - growing older. Age can mean many things. It often means that we have an asset in the marketplace, bringing experience and sophistication that youngsters and other novice shoppers lack. But it can also mean, in some cases, that our awareness is somewhat reduced, awareness that is needed to make wise consumer decisions.

As an aid for senior citizens in recognizing current or on going frauds, the Better Business Bureau lists below frauds that seem to be the most commonly directed at the elderly. It is suggested that photocopies be made of this list and given to those loved ones of age that may benefit from it.

- Any offer with an advanced fee required.
- Badge deals (Police, sheriff, state troopers, highway patrol).
- Charity solicitations from fast talking phone people asking for donations, ticket purchases, program ads or to help cover costs for children's safety education manuals or shelters for the abused or poor.
- Contests and "free vacation" promotions or offers for discount travel tours or non-scheduled airlines.
- Coupon books promotions that have little value to the consumer because of date, location or other requirements.
- Credit cards purchases through unknown mail order companies or telephone solicitors.
- Efficiency engineers, energy management experts making unrealistic energy saving claims.
- Fire and burglar alarm sales people using "scare tactics" or offering fictitious price cuts.
- Gypsy roof repairmen, house painters and other home repair or maintenance contractors offering too-good-to-be-true prices.

Community & Senior Services highlights

Community and Senior Services of Midland, Inc., through its Visiting Nurse Service, is conducting Wellness Clinics once a month at Hillcrest, Langtry, Manor Park and Trinity Towers retirement centers and at the Midland Senior Center and Hollowell Methodist Church.

The clinics provide blood pressure and blood sugar checks, weight monitoring and health education programs. The clinics are designed to promote wellness through health awareness and education.

Anyone interested in attending one of these clinics may call the CSS office at 689-6693 for more information.

Home-delivered meals are not just for low-income, elderly people. Although the guidelines for the Title XX funded program does use income as a basis for determining eligibility, CSS also delivers meals to clients who are able to pay part or even the full cost of the meal. The only criteria that must be met by all clients are:

- Confined to the home
- Unable to prepare meals
- No reliable resource to provide assistance or support (family, friends, or community resources)

* * *

The Permian Basin is rapidly becoming a major retirement center in West Texas with currently over 30,000 residents in this age group. While this area enjoys many positive factors, the downturn in the economy and the persistent four percent annual inflation trend has certainly impacted senior citizens.

In order to help offset, for many, this decrease in buying power, the Midland Gold program will be expanded to include Odessa merchants and will become Permian Gold.

Participating merchants will offer product/service discounts to Permian Basin residents 62 years and older. A directory listing all merchants and their discounts will be available at the Community and Senior Services of Midland, Inc. office and other designated distribution locations.

Snowball fight

Matt Bauer, 9, of Mount Shasta, Calif., braces for a snowball's impact and has return ammunition in hand. Matt and his friends took advantage of a heavy snow which fell in northern California Thursday.

Man buys his family a white Christmas

RIVERSIDE, Calif. (AP) — Shortly after 9 a.m., a freak snowstorm hit the Stewards' house with fury, burying the green lawn and blooming rose bush and plastering the windows with white stuff.

For $500, Gregg Steward had bought his family a white Christmas.

Since Dec. 13, the Riverside Ice Co. has shaved dozens of tons of ice to cover more than 20 green Southern California lawns with inches of pure white snow. Under blue skies, palm trees and basking in 70-degree temperature, children who have grown up with surfboards and skateboards have tried out sleds and toboggans for the first time.

While sun, sand and surf might sound attractive to Northerners shivering in their hats and mittens, Southern Californians apparently tire of the tanned life at Christmas time.

An Arcadia shop sells plastic icicles that customers use to cover the front of their homes, and sales of spray-can snow are up.

"They like a little taste of the Midwest," says Chuck Carter, general manager of the ice company, which usually blows its ice on vegetable trucks traveling to the East Coast in hot weather.

As ice company owner Gary Wittenmyer directed the blasting snow onto the Stewards' yard Thursday, 6-year-old Brett waited, wearing puffy blue mittens and Amazing Spiderman boots.

Beside him, in pink ribbons, pink turtleneck, bib-overalls and Reeboks, was his girlfriend Ashley Cunningham, 6, who already knew what the snow was for.

"I'm going to snow fight Brett," she said.

Gregg Steward, 31, said he had taken Brett and his wife, Bobby, 31, to the mountains the year before for Christmas, and they had enjoyed playing in the snow. But this year's schedule — Steward works as both a Costa Mesa firefighter-paramedic and a Riverside real estate agent — didn't allow the time.

"So we decided to bring the snow here" to the family home close to the Mojave Desert, he said.

By 9:30 a.m., his New England-style home was sprinkled with five tons of snow that coated the roof and windows. It lay 6 inches deep on the lawn, blocking the front door. Brett and the neighborhood kids attempted a snowball battle.

"Some of his friends coming over have — what do you call them? — those little round things," Steward said.

There's just not much need to know what toboggans are here, 50 miles inland from Los Angeles.

The company that coated Steward's yard has had calls from 60 miles west in Beverly Hills and Manhattan Beach, since news broke of their mini-blizzards. They are booked solid for Christmas Eve and have lined up jobs for New Year's and Valentine's Day.

The minimum snow-job costs $300 for 20 300-pound blocks of ice that are shaved into three tons of snow. Last week, the company put 15 tons of snow on a Moreno Valley lawn for a neighborhood block party.

The snow, which consists of fine ice pellets similar to snow cone ice, lasts for two to three days without rain, about one day with rainfall. The green grass usually survives despite the cold shower.

Wittenmyer said the ice company has made more snow in the past two weeks than in all his 15 years at the company, all because his wife, Sandy, ran an ad for the usually low-key business in the newspaper.

"It's just gone wild," he said.

But as a transplanted Ohioan, Wittenmyer sees the irony in his new business.

"I came to California to get out of that stuff," he said.

What would the folks back home think now?

"They're going to think I'm really a whiz kid selling ice and snow to Californians."

Service to remember those who died at party

CALUMET, Mich. (AP) — The holiday spirit will take on a somber tone today when this community remembers 73 people, most of them children, who were crushed to death or suffocated at a Christmas Eve party 75 years ago.

The town council voted this week to hold a memorial service at the site where 57 children and 16 adults died. They were killed in a human stampede after someone yelled a false fire alarm at a party sponsored by a union group at the height of a bitter strike.

"I don't suppose it will ever heal," said amateur historian Jack Foster.

At the time of the tragedy, members of the Western Federation of Miners had been on strike for 10 months over the Calumet and Hecla Mining Co.'s decision to switch from two-man drills to one-man drills. The union said the new drill was unsafe.

In the weeks before the disaster, two company guards chased a striker into a boardinghouse and fired gunshots, killing two men; three non-union Canadian miners were gunned down as they slept; and miner and a guard were killed in another shootout.

On Christmas Eve, the union's women's committee held a party for the children of striking miners on the second floor of Calumet's Italian Hall, above a saloon.

While the party was under way, witnesses said, someone from the first floor stairwell shouted out a fire alarm. Children and adults raced to escape, tripping over each other to get into the stairwell and out the only exit.

Witnesses said the victims were crushed to death or suffocated before anyone realized what was happening.

"I was so scared," said Lena Rigotti, an 88-year-old Hurley, Wis., nursing home resident who survived the tragedy. "I told my sister, 'Stay with me and we'll get home.' I don't know how we ever made it."

Nobody ever found out who sounded the false alarm, Foster said.

Sound of bells and caroling. Holiday greetings everywhere. Bags, boxes, wrapping and bows. Enchanting delightful window displays. Swarms of people pausing, pushing. Credit cards and lengthy lists. Shopping frenzy, last minute gifts. Packages, parcels and partying.

Yuletide trees and ribboned wreaths. Ornaments, tinsel, rings and things. Stocked stores with stacks of stuff. Girls and boys gazing at toys. Browsing and buying. Hustle and bustle. Being nice and not so naughty. Cookies, stollen and holiday cakes.

Stringing lights and lighting candles. Red poinsettias and greens of holly. Dickens' Scrooge, the Whosville Grinch. Snowflakes, sleds and Santa Claus. Warmth of fire, burning logs. Mistletoe kisses. Blushed cheeks and red noses. Sending out cards. Wish you were here. Memories remembered after all these years.

Have we forgotten anything? Remember why we celebrate this day. The glitter, glamour passes by. One thing remains in touch. God's love.

He gave us all we'll ever need — Himself
His Son
His Heart.

GOD'S 20th CENTURY GIANTS

Barth said Jesus God's 'yes' to people

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first of a five-part series on great modern theologians, "God's 20th Century Giants." It is about Karl Barth and his biblical lenses. Subsequent parts will appear on the Religion Page through January.

By GEORGE W. CORNELL
AP Religion Writer

While a crowd in a lecture hall awaited the appearance of renowned theologian Karl Barth, someone scrawled on the blackboard behind the podium: "God is other people."

The rumpled, bespectacled Barth ambled up onto the stage and paused, staring at the words. With a twinkle in his eyes, he picked up the chalk, added a comma and made the sentence read:

"God is other, people."

That total "otherness" of God, beyond any human calculation, conceit or ingenious devising, fueled the thunderbolt that the great Swiss scholar flung into the rationalizing arena of 20th century theology.

"Only God speaks well of God," Barth declared, contending that any human attempts to conceive or define him is to reduce and domesticate divinity to human dimensions, choices and control, a false idol.

"Let God be God," he said.

Barth — pronounced bart — is regarded by many as the century's preeminent Christian thinker, boldly original, penetrating, thorough, trenchantly gripping, a master in his field.

HE IS ONE OF AN extraordinary line of theological Titans who crossed the world's stage this century, probers of faith who changed the landscape of religious thought.

Among them were Barth's Swiss compatriot, Emil Bruner, with whom he often contended; the German martyr to Nazism, Dietrich Bonhoeffer; the Catholic "incarnationalist," Karl Rahner; the "demythologizing" Rudolf Bultmann; Judaism's "relationist" Martin Buber; the existentialist Paul Tillich and Christian "realist" Reinhold Niebuhr.

These modern religious giants now are dead, as are numerous other luminaries — John Courtney Murray, Thomas Merton, Abraham Heschel, Tielhard de Chardin, Albert Schweitzer and popularizers C.S. Lewis and G.K. Chesterton. Together they formed a constellation of insight rarely to endow any one phase of history.

"There were giants in the earth in those days," Martin Marth, University of Chicago church historian observed, giving it a biblical tone.

It's almost as though some special dispensation has ended, at least for a time, as the century of giants draws to a close. But their work, both emulated and criticized, still permeates the religious world.

To Barth, the inconceivability of a "wholly other" God constitutes his stern "No" to a ruthless, sin-twisted world.

TRYING TO KNOW anything about God through reasoning, nature, sentiments or philosophical arguments are vain and benighted, Barth says, reflecting humanity's original revolt by trying itself to "be as God."

"It is the attempted replacement of divine work by human manufacture," Barth says, an effort to "divinize man and to humanize God with romantic formulations" so as to "wipe out the distance between them...

"God is not to be sought out in his inscrutable loftiness."

However, he took the initiative to turn that overshadowing "No" into a ringing "Yes," through the work of Christ, the "Word of God," or "God's self-proclamation," Barth says, adding:

"And so his inevitable 'No' is always enclosed in his primary 'Yes' to man."

BARTH CALLS CHRIST both "God's man" and "man's God," and says:

RELIGION

"The biblical witnesses are better informed than are the theologians. For this reason theology must agree to let them look over its shoulder and correct its notebooks."

— Karl Barth

"In the midst of his people, God lets one become man, espousing totally the cause of this man," attesting identity with him, thus enacting "community with man" and exalting man to "community with him."

Barth, who died in 1968 at the age of 82, belonged to the Swiss Reformed Church, but his powerful, independent-minded scholarship carried weight not only throughout Protestantism but in Roman Catholicism, with whose thinkers he maintained a running dialogue.

His work "is the most thorough and forceful systematization of Protestant thought, and it is the closest approximation of Catholic thought," writes Catholic theologian Hans Urs von Balthasar.

In the scholarly world, Barth's approach became known as "neo-orthodox" or "Barthian," a term he deplored. He called his work "evangelical theology," a "solo effort" not attached to any system or school of thought. It is firmly, steadily rooted in Scripture.

"The biblical witnesses are better informed than are the theologians," he says. "For this reason theology must agree to let them look over its shoulder and correct its notebooks."

The task is always "on the road," he says, looking for fuller understanding. He says it might be compared to "circling a high mountain which, although it is one and the same mountain, exists and manifests itself in very different shapes."

FOR ALL HIS IMMENSE erudition and analytical skills, the pipe-smoking Barth had a kindly, cheerful disposition and whimsical, self-effacing wit, seeming to take himself much less seriously than did some of his colleagues.

"The theologian who has no joy in his work is not a theologian at all," he says. "Sulky faces, morose thoughts and boring ways are intolerable in this science."

He had a zest for history, literature, music and also detective stories, which he devoured in his relaxation. Once, fretting about whether he would be understood in some 1962 lectures in the United States, he remarked:

"My English is criminal because I learned it by reading detective stories."

Tender and gruff, modest but assured, he rode horseback, sang loudly — "like a lion," as a son put it — preached regularly to penitentiary prisoners and began his days listening to Mozart.

"If I ever get to heaven, I would first of all seek out Mozart, and then inquire" about the theologians, he says, adding:

"It may be that when the angels go about their task of praising God, they play only Bach. I am sure, however, that when they are together en famille, they play Mozart and then too our dear Lord listens with a special pleasure."

Besides Barth's driving theological work through a score of books, including his 12-volume Church Dogmatics, and in sermons and lectures around the world, he took a leading role in ecumenical efforts for Christian unity and earlier in forging church resistance to Nazism.

The church "would do better to become a tiny remnant and flee to the catacombs than to make peace with this terrible doctrine in any way," he says. "It could not let itself fall into the abyss, as was demanded."

BARTH, THEN TEACHING in Bonn, Germany, helped form the Confessing Church, a minority wing opposing Hitler's policies, and led in organizing the 1934 meeting that issued the famed Barmen Declaration, blasting attempts to subordinate the church to Hitlerism.

"We reject the false doctrine that the church could and should recognize as a source of proclamation" any ideologies other that the "one Word of God," the manifesto declared.

Shortly thereafter, Barth was expelled for refusing to take an oath of allegiance to Hitler or begin classes with the customary "Heil Hitler."

He hurled his blunt "No" to human presumptions about apprehending God at a time when Christian liberalism held that science and progress gradually would achieve earthly goodness — a notion shattered by the horrors of war and totalitarianism.

"The final root and basis of all human disorder is the dreadful, godless, ridiculous idea that humanity is the Atlas to hold up the vault of heaven," Barth told the 1948 founding assembly of the World Council of Churches.

Nevertheless, he says, God "is no lonely God, self-sufficient and self-contained ... He is not imprisoned by his own majesty, as though he were bound to be no more than the 'Wholly Other.'"

Rather, he freely chooses through Christ to be the "God of man," Barth says. "He exists neither next to man nor merely above him, but rather with him, by him, and most of all for him.

"A God who confronted man simply as exalted, distant and strange, that is, a divinity without humanity, could be only the god of dysangelion, of a 'bad news' instead of the 'good news' ... He would be the god of a scornful judging deadly 'No.'"

However, Barth says, "the content of God's word is his free undeserved 'Yes' to the whole human race, in spite of all human unreasonableness and corruption."

Jesus "exposes the gulf which separates God and man and by exposing it, bridges it," Barth says, leaving humanity "swamped by grace."

Barth emphasizes the Bible's centrality in conveying God's actions, both the Old and New testaments. However, he rejected biblical literalism, contending the Bible is not verbally infallible since everything human, including language, is limited and faulty.

Yet he saw Scripture as the medium elected by God as the most suitable within man's restricted sights for extending "God's Word" to humanity.

IN A CONVERSATION with Barth, fellow Swiss theologian Emil Bruner once raised the point that some of the Bible seemed profane.

"Nonsense, it's all profane!" Barth retorted. "The Bible was written by very profane men. But, and this is the distinction, they were profane men in conversation with God."

To Barth, the grandeur of Scripture is that its truths stand out in the midst of the time-bound nature of the documents, shining through all the human errors and smudges.

He sometimes compared reading the Bible to listening to one end of a telephone conversation, in which you hear only people speaking, yet their words reflecting the unheard voice of God at the other end.

Varied Christmas services scheduled

Midland's churches will celebrate Jesus' birth with a combination of musical and candlelight services scheduled today and Christmas Day.

Among those scheduled are:

First Presbyterian

The First Presbyterian Church, located across from Midland High School, has set a holiday schedule including two special Christmas Eve candlelight services featuring the traditional prophecies relating to the birth of the Messiah.

A brief meditation, special music and the singing of "Silent Night" while each member of the congregation lights an Advent Candle are highlights of the service.

This service is a favorite of many in the community and will take place in the sanctuary at 6 p.m. and be repeated at 8:30 p.m. today. The public is invited to attend. A nursery will be provided.

On Christmas Day the church plans a Potluck Continental Breakfast at 9 a.m. — everyone brings their favorite coffee cake to share.

Children are encouraged to bring one of their favorite Christmas gifts. At 10:30 a.m. in the sanctuary, a special service of Lessons and Carols will provide the fare for the morning. A nursery will be provided.

On New Year's Day there will be one service at 11 a.m.

All Midlanders are encouraged to join in these special activities.

St. Luke's Methodist

St. Luke's United Methodist Church, 3011 W. Kansas Ave., will celebrate Christmas Eve with two worship services.

The first service will be at 5 p.m. The format for this service will be carol singing, sharing of the Christmas story, solo music and a Christmas Eve message delivered by the Rev. Jarrell H. Sharp, senior minister at St. Luke's.

The 11 p.m. worship service will be a Holy Communion. The worship will end with a traditional candle lighting bringing in Christmas Day.

The youth of St. Luke will light more than 1,000 luminarias, which will surround the church, for the 11 p.m. service.

"This custom, which is native to the Southwest, will be a reminder to those coming to worship that we who walk in darkness are seeking the light which the Christ child brings," says a release from St. Luke's.

Sharp invites the public to attend the services.

St. Paul's Anglican

The parish of St. Paul's Anglican Church (American Episcopal) will mark an historic occasion this evening when the Holy Eucharist will be celebrated as the first worship service in the new church building, 3001 W. Golf Couse Road. The service begins at 11 p.m.

"There could be no more fitting time than the anniversary of the birth of Christ to mark the inauguration of regular services in a building dedicated to the teachings of Christ," said Hageman, rector of the congregation. The traditional liturgies of the 1928 "Book of Common Prayer" will be used for all worship services, preserving the common bond with worldwide Anglicanism.

Remodeling of the structure is not complete, but workers concentrated on the nave and sanctuary areas so Christmas services could be scheduled there.

A special book — to be entered in the parish archives — will be provided for the signatures of all those present at the service.

Midland Lutheran

Midland Lutheran Church, 2705 W. Michigan, invites everyone to share in today's celebration of the annual Christmas Eve Candlelight & Carol Services.

"The Greatest Gift" sermon theme will be presented by Rev. Charles Meyer at both the 6:30 and at the 9 p.m. services.

Special music will be provided by Eric Carlson at the 6:30 p.m. service and by Bonnie Kerley at the 9 p.m. service.

Only one service will be held on Christmas Day, with the Rev. Marvin Koenig preaching on "Christmas Riches" at 10 a.m.

Special music will be presented by the Chancel Choir, directed by Bonnie Kerley, with flutist Mary Len Stanton. Organist for the services will be Mary Ann Stice.

Holy Trinity Community

Holy Trinity Community Church, 1607 S. Main, will have Christmas Eve services at 11 p.m. today, according to the pastor, Rev. Glenn E. Hammett.

Rev. Hammett said that Holy Trinity Community Church is an ecumenical interdenominational church that welcomes all people regardless of background. The Christmas Eve service will consist of reading the Christmas story from the gospels, caroling, and holy communion. Rev. Hammett said that all Christians are invited to join in the communion service.

In addition to the Christmas Eve service, the church will have worship services at 10:30 a.m. Christmas Day.

St. Mark's Methodist

Pastor Earl Ball and the congregation of St. Mark's United Methodist Church, 1701 N. Main St., invite everyone to attend their service of worship at 6 p.m. today. This Christmas Eve observance will take the place of the customary Sunday morning worship hour, enabling families to share the holiday at home.

The time of worship will include both singing of Christmas music and a service of Holy Communion. Visitors and newcomers to the Midland area are welcome.

Bellview Baptist

Bellview Baptist Church, 1710 N. Big Spring, will have one big and beautiful service at 10:30 a.m. Sunday, Christmas Day. The church is making this a family day and everyone is invited. This will give families time to worship together and be together throughout the day.

Special music will be presented by the Stevenson family, Sharon Wood and Slim Mason. The message will be preached by pastor by G.A. Magee.

Crestview Baptist

Crestview Baptist Church, 3300 Thomas, will hold worship services at 10 a.m. Christmas Day. Dr. Rex Horne, pastor, will present "Christmas ... After All These Years" and Ty Morris Jr., minister of music, will provide a special music program.

The public is welcome and encouraged to attend.

The Rev. and Mrs. Zane Haun

Couple with 25 years experience accepts First Assembly pastorate

Rev. Zane Haun and his wife Sharon have accepted the pastorate at Midland's First Assembly of God. The Hauns have 25 years of pastoral experience with the Assemblies of God. Haun has served on the Board of Directors of Aglow International and has traveled for the Full Gospel Business Men's Fellowship as well as participating in several missions and charitable organization boards.

Haun is a graduate of Bethany Bible College of Santa Cruz, Calif., and holds a B.A. in pastoral theology. He also has received an A.A. in business administration from San Mateo Junior College in California and is presently in the process of obtaining his counseling certificate with a major in humanities.

Haun and his wife have been married for 28 years and have four children, Jeff, age 27; Linde, age 23; and Tracy and Trevor, both 16 years old.

The Hauns look forward to a very fruitful ministry at Midland's First Assembly of God as well as serving the needs of the community.

Husband's role vital to Christmas, bishop says

NEW YORK (AP) — Ordinarily in the story of the first Christmas, the man of the family is subordinated as a secondary figure. In actuality, he carried out an essential and decisive role.

That's the anomaly of Joseph, husband of Mary.

The generally scant attention given him is pointed out by Episcopal Presiding Bishop Edmond L. Browning, who suggests more appreciation is in order for Joseph's heroism.

He often "is omitted from our recollection of events" of Jesus's birth or portrayed "unobtrusively in the background, leaning on his staff" or leading a donkey, Browning says in his Christmas message.

The spotlight, meanwhile, is focused on Mary and the child.

Yet Joseph guided and protected that family through dangers which threatened it, Browning says, noting that it was no easy, placid affair, but one beset with troubles.

The burdens laid on Joseph began when he learned to his painful dismay that the young woman to whom he was betrothed, Mary, had become pregnant by someone else.

Being a just, law-abiding Jew, yet not wanting to "put her to shame" by openly renouncing her, the account says, he broken-heartedly "resolved to divorce her quietly."

Baptist church band makes use of ukeleles

By JERRY COFFEY

HALTOM CITY, Texas (AP) — Of the musical instruments that enrich and glorify Christianity, the ones that come immediately to mind are the pipe organ, the piano, various ensembles of brass and strings and, of course, the human voice.

One that almost never comes to mind is the ukelele.

But a bunch of senior citizens at Glenview Baptist Church in this Fort Worth suburb are challenging that omission.

The ukelele — most humble and playful of the strummed instruments, the instrument of tippy-toeing Tiny Tim, of moonlit luaus on the beach and old-fashioned fraternity sing-alongs — has become an instrument of spiritual uplift in the Haltom City congregation and the community.

Organized six months ago, Glenview's 28-member ukelele band, dubbed The Hallelujah Chorus, is increasingly in demand for performances at church functions and public appearances locally and on the road.

"We've given programs in North Little Rock and Copperas Cove and perform two or three times a week at rest homes and for retirement parties and things like that," said band member Bob Taylor, who ministers to seniors in the church.

"Folks respond to us real well, even though we're not real musicians," he said.

Taylor said that when the band was organized "maybe one person" in the group had a little musicial knowledge and experience. "The rest of us were starting from scratch. I couldn't carry a tune in a sack."

"We do mostly old-time religion songs and have worked up a novelty number, 'The Preacher and The Bear,' that people seem to like," he said.

The notion of forming the band came from Glenview's pastor, the Rev. Dennis Baw, who got the idea from a similar organization within his home congregation, Baring Cross Baptist Church in North Little Rock, Ark.

"I play a guitar and have used it in services, and when I heard about the ukelele band they'd started in Arkansas, the idea really clicked with me, and I decided we ought to have one for our seniors group at Glenview," Baw said.

"Sometimes older folks have insecurities and get to thinking they can't do anything any more, and it occurred to me that something like this would give our seniors a new opportunity to be helpful, to be successful and maybe do something they didn't think they could do."

Baw directs and instructs the band personally.

"I was afraid I'd have a hard time selling the idea, but everybody picked up on it right away, and I've really been surprised at how quick the band has caught on," he said.

"It's worked so well, we're going to start a ukelele band for children."

The Glenview band was formed from the congregation's Live Longer and Love It Sunday school class for senior citizens.

"Our members are from 65 on up to near 80," Taylor said, adding that membership is not limited to the current roster of 28.

"We're growing all the time," he said.

Women outnumber men 3 to 1 in the band, which practices for an hour every Sunday afternoon.

Glenview's Hallelujah Chorus may be the only church ukelele band in the are, but there are a number of them around the country, most organized by Buddy Griffin, who started the first one four years ago at First Baptist Church in Houston.

Two years ago, Griffin formed Happytime, Inc., based in Sugar Land, to promote and service the ukelele band phenomenon. Glenview's band is one of Happytime's clients.

"There are probably 30 to 40 ukelele bands around the country," said Sandy Griffin, who works with her husband. Most are in the South, though there are several in California.

"The majority are in churches, where there usually are musically trained people on the staff who can help with the bands. But some retirement centers and senior citizens centers have organized them, too," Griffin said.

Ukelele bands are proving to be popular activities and morale-builders for seniors, she said.

Why the ukelele?

"For one things, it's very easy to play," Griffin said. "Mostly, the bands play simple chords to accompany singing, and you can learn to do that in one lesson.

"Also, ukeleles are small, light and easy to carry. And inexpensive."

Glenview buys its instruments at discount — about $20 for the basic soprano ukelele, somewhat more for the larger baritone uke — and leases them for $10 or sells them at cost to band members, Taylor said.

Children as well as seniors are getting into ukelele bands, said Griffin, whose organization has school music programs, focusing on elementary grades, mainly the fourth-grade level.

"Ukes work in schools for the same reason they work for retirees," she said. "You can have fun and be successful right away."

Performance to be aired

The Permian Basin Meistersingers program of Handel's "Messiah," held in the sanctuary of the First Baptist Church of Midland on Dec. 18, will be broadcast on KMID Channel 2 at 4 p.m. Saturday and on KPEJ Channel 24 at 10:30 p.m. Sunday.

The Meistersingers features singers from the Basin area and is directed by the founder of the group, William Lucas. Soloists include Jerry Minster, tenor; Larry Frazier, bass; Mary Starnes, soprano; Tom Laney, bass; Janice Archer, soprano; and Jane Ward, soprano. Members of the Midland/Odessa Symphony joined in the performance.

Attitude 'ridiculed'

CHICAGO (AP) — Christmas services provide an opportunity to draw alienated Catholics back into regular worship, but priests tend to "ridicule and demean" them for attending so infrequently, says the Rev. Andrew Greeley.

Writing in U.S. Catholic, published by the Claretian Fathers, the noted priest-sociologist-novelist says:

"One of the more twisted and sick kinks in clerical culture is the propensity to ridicule and demean the 'Christmas Catholics' and, even when priests are on their best behavior, to patronize them."

Greeley says "Christmas Catholics," who show up only on such holidays, often are alienated from the church, having been hurt or confused by it, and they "need to know there's room for them in the inn, too."

He adds, "Welcoming the alienated and inviting them to come home and stay home permanently is surely far more in the spirit of Christmas than brutalizing them again."

Toy warnings issued

NEW YORK (AP) — In the busy shopping days before Christmas, members of Pax Christi have been handing out flyers warning shoppers that "war" toys and games may be damaging to children.

Daniel Crews, a member the Roman Catholic organization that seeks to promote a more just and peaceful world, says sales of war toys has increased 300 percent in the last six years.

Pastors due in Managua

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — An American "Pastors for Peace" convoy of trucks and humanitarian aid for Nicaraguans was expected to reach the capital of Managua in time to celebrate Christmas.

About 46 persons, Protestants and Roman Catholic, most of them pastors from various parts of the country, driving about 20 trucks, converged here last week before heading through Mexico.

The trucks range from a 10-ton, 22-foot rig to pickups, some of them loaded with medical supplies, rice, typewriters and other materials for the war-damaged country.

The project is sponsored by the Interreligious Foundation for Community Organization. Spokesmen said the trucks are particularly needed to get crops to market and provide transportation to medical facilities.

Celebrations canceled

BETHLEHEM, Israel (AP) — The traditional Christmas celebration in Bethlehem where Christ was born has been canceled by the town government because of the yearlong uprising of Palestinians against Israeli rule.

"We don't see any reasons to celebrate Christmas," Mayor Hanna Nasser told U.S. National Catholic News service. Noting that the usually brightly lit Manger Square will remain dark, Nasser added, "We have to show concern for our dead and for our detainees."

Many AIDS programs

CHICAGO (AP) — A survey finds that 36 of nearly 300 social ministries of the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America have special programs for people with AIDS.

Missionaries forced to leave Honduras

NEW YORK — In the course of pursuing what they consider to be a ministry of compassion for human rights, two missionaries and their families have been forced to leave Honduras this fall.

The Rev. Joe Eldridge, a missionary for the United Methodist Board of Global Ministries, was forced out in November, shortly before he was supposed to report back to the United States for home assignment.

The Rev. Fred and Marguerite Bronkema, who worked through the Presbyterian Church (USA) and the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) and often guided United Methodist work groups, returned home in October.

What was construed as an assassination attempt and inside information that the military wanted them deported led to their voluntary departure.

It is the military, according to the missionaries, which has absolute power in Honduras. "Honduras has a civilian government," Mr. Eldridge said during a recent interview with United Methodist News Service. "It is, however, not to be construed as a democratic government. The people and the people's will do not prevail.

"Friends are those who agree with the military." he explained. "Anyone who takes exception to what the military is doing is considered unwelcome."

The "unwelcome" label eventually was placed on Eldridge and the Bronkema family because of their involvement in a human rights organization, they said. The Bronkemas' two sons, who also had become involved in human rights work there, also have left Honduras.

Both Eldridge and the Bronkemas were assigned to work with the Christian Commission for Development. Eldridge, in Honduras nearly three years, was involved with Bible studies and theological education and served as a guide for U.S. church groups and work teams who came to Honduras.

Mr. and Mrs. Bronkema came to Honduras in 1982 to develop a "program of reconciliation" for Catholics and Protestants, reaching into the 67 poorest communities.

The program focuses on reconciling people with God, each other, with nature, and with the social, political, economic and religious structures there, according to Bronkema.

Construction began on a Center of Reconciliation, which provides a place for meetings, dialogues, workshops, and education for farmers on raising animals and growing medicinal plants.

United Methodist Volunteers in Mission have worked with the Bronkemas as part of the work camps who have been building the center, he said.

But, like the Good Samaritan, the couple could not ignore the Honduran people who were hurting and needed help. "You naturally become involved in human rights," Bronkema explained.

Eldridge, who founded the Washington Office on Latin America — an ecumenical human rights organization — in 1973, also considers involvement in human rights as part of proclaiming "the full gospel."

The warning signal for the Bronkemas came on Sept. 10. For several months, Mr. Bronkema had driven a pick-up truck carrying construction materials to the work camps. On that particular day, someone else drove the truck and was injured when shot at from a military vehicle.

A month later, the couple learned that a military intelligence battalion was going to investigate them in an attempt to force them out of Honduras. For reasons of safety, they left the country on Oct. 15.

Eldridge said he had no advance warning that the military was going to try to deport him. He did write an editorial critical of the Honduran military which was published Oct. 17 in the Los Angeles Times.

On Nov. 1, while Eldridge was on a trip to El Salvador, immigration officials came to his home and indicated to his wife that her husband's papers were not in order.

Friends who investigated the situation learned he would not be allowed back into Honduras. "I suspect that if I had tried to go back, they would have simply put me on the next plane out," Eldridge added.

Eventually, his wife, Maria Otero, their two sons, and a baby girl they were in the process of adopting, were able to leave Honduras and join him in the United States. For the present, Eldridge will be serving as an "international person in mission" for the Board of Global Ministries.

He believes his exile from Honduras will not be permanent because of the changing nature of the military establishment there.

"I expect to go back to Honduras at some point," he said. "I just don't expect to go back tomorrow."

Clinical ethicist helps with hard decisions

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. (AP) — At St. John's Regional Health Center, Tobias Meeker helps doctors and patients cope with moral issues such as when to deny life support to a terminally ill patient, or what measure of care to give an infant with an uncertain future.

"I'm very careful to let people know I'm not practicing medicine," says Meeker, the hospital's theologically trained clinical ethicist. "Also, I am not making the decisions. The physician and the patient, they are the decision makers — that's the only ethical way."

Meeker, 43, is one of the few ethicists in the country employed full time at a hospital, a rarity in a group that is itself small. Officials at the American Hospital Association estimate only 100-150 clinical ethicists are working in any capacity in the United States.

Meeker's work brings him up against such poignant dilemmas as that posed by an 83-year-old woman who, after her second bout with a serious illness, told doctors, "I would just as soon that you allow me to die, because my chances of recovery are so slim."

"Can we, ethically, allow her to die? Yes." Meeker said.

He also works often in the hospital's neonatal care unit, advising doctors to go to great lengths to save the lives of desperately ill newborns, even though adults in similar conditions might be considered hopeless.

"When in doubt, go all out," he said. "For newborn infants, it's a vast area of doubt. Our data base is very inadequate, so not to proceed aggressively is irresponsible."

Meeker said in one case, the family of an 80-year-old woman suffering from acute dementia was horrified at the process by which she was artificially fed. The woman was restrained at all times to keep her from pulling the feeding tube from her nose.

So, Meeker agreed with the family's decision to remove the tube, hastening the woman's death but giving dignity to her final days.

He noted a decline in what he calls issues of physician truth telling.

"Not too long ago, physicians would routinely not tell their patients they're dying, or they have cancer," he said. "Many physicians acting out of that model are protecting themselves, not the patient. The second reason that we've gotten away from that has been the discovery ... that people can deal much more easily with the truth than with illusion."

Concerning a patient who tested positive for AIDS but refused to tell his wife, Meeker said the patient was persuaded that he had a moral obligation to tell her. However, if he hadn't, the physician would have been ethically bound to do so, Meeker said, adding:

"Confidentiality is not an absolute right. It's a very strong right, but for very compelling reasons, it can be overruled. And a very compelling reason would be that someone else's life was in jeopardy."

Meeker said he acts as a facilitator, prodding physicians and patients to consider all necessary and available information before making a decision.

He also provides a few guideposts: that any decision must first and foremost benefit the patient; that it is wrong to take the life of the innocent; that suicide is wrong; and that "life is a great good ... but it's not the greatest good."

Rev. Kevin O'Rourke, director of the Center for Health Care Ethics based at St. Louis University Medical Center, said most hospitals refer such questions to ethics committees composed of doctors, nurses and clergymen and other professionals.

Only "a few, very few" hospitals have positions such as Meeker's, O'Rourke said.

"To have an ethics person on staff means that you have a continuing educational program. The progressive hospitals are moving toward that," O'Rourke said.

At St. John's, an 800-bed hospital operated by the Sisters of Mercy, Meeker said: "My job is integral to the Sisters of Mercy mission, to their commitment to really serve the sick and the poor."

Serving time: Prisoners sentenced to community service

EDITOR'S NOTE — Instead of putting non-violent and minor offenders in overcrowded prisons, why not have them repay society through community service? The logic seems inescapable, and more and more offenders around the country are serving their time in useful though unpaid employment. Sometimes it takes odd forms.

By LARRY MARGASAK

WASHINGTON (AP) — They pull debris from vacant lots in big cities. They weed community gardens. They paint, they plaster, they hammer and nail. They help old folks. They try to straighten out street kids on the verge of going wrong. If they know computers, they might wind up programming one for a community volunteer group.

And thus a growing number of non-violent criminal offenders pay their debt to society by doing useful tasks, without serving useless time and taxpayers' money if their alternative were prison.

The idea of community service in lieu of — or in addition to — prison time has been around for two decades or so, but has only recently gained widespread use.

It helps relieve overcrowding in America's prisons, a chronic problem, but not much is known about whether it is more effective than prison sentences in deterring further crime.

One study suggests it is not. It concluded that 46 percent of the petty thieves given community service in New York City six years ago were re-arrested six months after their release. The recidivism figure for similar criminals who went to jail was roughly the same, 44 percent.

"Being punished by community service does not make Boy Scouts out of petty recidivists — but neither does jailing them," wrote Michael E. Smith, who conducted the study.

But some of those who served the community rather than serving time don't doubt the effectiveness of that alternative.

"I paid back society. I'm a better person," says John Zaccaro Jr., son of Geraldine Ferraro, the Democratic vice presidential candidate in 1984.

AFTER GETTING in trouble for selling $25 worth of cocaine to an undercover officer, he worked off his community service hours at a youth center in Burlington, Vt. Along the way, he says, he exceeded his 300-hour sentence by an extra 200 hours of work.

Zaccaro's case gained some notoriety when it was found that he was serving the house-arrest portion of his sentence in the comforts of a $1,500-a-month luxury apartment, but he says life was anything but luxurious at Burlington's King Street youth program.

"The 10, 11, and 12-year-old kids I was working with after school were in state custody," Zaccaro says. "They would try to kick out windows, they would spit at you, throw things at you. On a daily basis I had to restrain the kids, because they would throw rocks and swing bats at each other."

Many judges let non-profit agencies or probation departments decide the many possibilities for how community service time is to be spent. Other judges like to come up with their own ideas.

Judge Ted Poe of Houston is one who relishes the task. He sentenced Edward Louis Young III, an airline baggage handler, to cleaning the stables for Houston's mounted police squad — the perfect sentence, the judge reasoned, for the man who stole the Lone Ranger's guns.

Young actually took the two Colt .45 revolvers from the man behind the famous mask — actor Clayton Moore.

"He stole from the one individual who represents law enforcement, and it's only right he do community service for a law enforcement agency," Poe said.

Michael Smith, who conducted the study on recidivism among those who serve community service sentences, is director of the Vera Institute in New York City. The institute assigns misdemeanor repeat offenders to 10-day, 70-hour community service programs. Jobs include clearing out vacant lots, removing trash, renovating buildings for homeless families, weeding community gardens, helping the elderly, and all sorts of construction tasks.

IN LOS ANGELES, Foundation For People works with federal courts to place mostly white-collar or skilled offenders in assignments where their talents are best used.

A computer whiz teaches his craft to people working at non-profit agencies; an offender with a theater background works with a performing arts group; a copyright violator makes videos for Amnesty International.

Chief U.S. District Judge Sherman G. Finesilver in Denver is known for his novel community service sentencing. He had violators of the Endangered Species Act set up a wildlife exhibit at the city's airport.

Finesilver cautioned. "If not used properly, the public can lose faith in the community service system...For example in sports, if you always have offenders speaking to youth groups. The sentence should not take on the aspect of a fix."

Judge Ted Poe of Houston has gained attention for handing down sentences with unusual community service stipulations.

Houston's Judge Poe has some 50 skilled tradesmen — welders, carpenters, painters and electricians — helping restore the battleship Texas, now drydocked.

His latest project, he says, is expanding an offender-run vegetable garden which provides food for Houston's hungry. "Next year it's going to be a big-time operation."

No hard figures exist to show how much community service sentencing has grown, but one indication was the formation four years ago of the National Community Service Sentencing Association.

Director Cres Van Keulen, whose office is in San Francisco, says there are some 500 formal, local programs placing offenders in community service jobs, averaging about 1,000 new cases a year.

She adds that there could be another 1,000 informally structured operations handling additional placements.

If her estimates are right, more than a half-million offenders a year are sentenced to community service time.

DR. ALAN Harland, professor of criminal justice at Temple University, says preliminary results of a study he's conducting indicate that more than 80 percent of those working off community service sentences complete their work.

One study concluded that 46 percent of the petty thieves given community service in New York City six years ago were re-arrested six months after their release. The recidivism figure for similar criminals who went to jail was roughly the same, 44 percent.

Ms. Van Keulen cited a California study that provides only a glimpse of the financial savings in cases where community service replaces imprisonment.

Sixty-three California programs reported in 1987 that 103,000 offenders worked more than 6.3 million unpaid hours, a saving of $21 million to volunteer organizations and government agencies if they had paid the minimum hourly wage of $3.35.

Another study by the Public Agenda Foundation in New York City indicates that the public accepts community service.

Observations by 125 people who participated in 10 small-group discussions said they favored alternatives to imprisonment if an offender would "face the implications of his crime and undertake work that could prove useful."

One unscientific sign of success comes from program participants. Petty thieves and white-collar criminals alike spoke favorably of the experience.

Sterling Hall, who says he was convicted three dozen times for shoplifting (a claim borne out by the Vera Institute's records), claims his second community service tour of 70 hours helped him develop "good work habits."

"It has shown me teamwork," he says. "It gave me personal self-worth. It got me getting up in the morning. It gets you used to taking orders.

"It saves the city quite a bit of money. It's more logical than having the city send a person to jail, where they have to take care of him and feed him."

But Hall wouldn't guarantee that he would go straight.

"I will probably have the same problems as before," he says. "You need money to pay rent."

YOUNG, THE MAN convicted of stealing the Lone Ranger's pistols, says he hopes his work at the stables will free officers to concentrate on patrolling the streets.

"Community service gives you time to re-evaluate your life and think about what's important," he says. "A lot of people take freedom for granted. It makes you see what the value of freedom is."

Zaccaro, now 24, says he began to pay back society with community service time even before his sentencing last spring, when he volunteered at Covenant House, a shelter for runaways in New York City.

"I went to work in their van, traveling to the worst neighborhoods in New York, talking to prostitutes and drug users," he says. "We gave them sandwiches and tried to get them on the right track. I saw the worst that any city has to offer."

At the King Street youth program, Zaccaro was closest to the teen-agers, and counseled them against the use of drugs.

"You get out of it what you put in," he says, recalling his 60-hour work weeks. "King Street would not be able to run without volunteers like myself."

Frances Ellen, who served three months in prison and 1,500 hours community service for income tax and securities violations, spent her time designing and leading support groups for other offenders.

"It's sort of like having a major heart attack," she says. "How do you restore yourself? We showed them how to deal with guilt, shame, embarrassment, the sense of self-esteem that had been destroyed" — all emotions she personally experienced.

Ms. Ellen, of Los Angeles, was co-owner of an investment firm. She says she and her partner were responsible for mismanagement that cost their customers $13 million.

"Community service made me come out of myself and to look at the consequences of my action on other people," she says.

Although her community service time is over, Ms. Ellen continues to volunteer her time with Foundation For People, the community service group for which she established the group sessions.

Also working for pay as a business consultant, Ms. Ellen says she never misses a chance to lecture employers on business ethics. And she has established a plan to pay some $5 million back to those who lost money with her now-bankrupt firm.

She says: "Now, my life is about contributions to the society I damaged."

Courthouse's restoration builds pride in Central Texas community

STEPHENVILLE (AP) — Two years ago, there were those here who grumbled about the Erath County tax dollars needed to bring a once-majestic but dying courthouse back to life. Today the grumbles have stopped.

After a 14-month renovation that finished about $200,000 under budget, the seven-story limestone monument stands pristine once again, almost exactly as it was when first completed in 1892.

Each day, dozens of tourists from across Texas and the nation visit the edifice listed in national and state historic registers. And in Stephenville, a town of 15,600 about 60 miles southwest of Fort Worth, lots of folks would claim the restoration as their idea, Stephenville florist Bob Scott said.

"They (Erath County residents) are proud that it's all fixed up and they should be proud," said Scott, vice president of the Erath County Historical Commission. "It's a remarkable edifice. People come to town and now the building is something to be proud of. Before it was so hideous."

It was indeed with a certain sense of urgency that in May 1987 county commissioners allocated $1.7 million to restore the structure that blends Gothic, Roman and Victorian architecture.

"The problem was that there had been no maintenance of the building since 1949 and it was about ready to fall down around their ears," Erath County Judge Bill Hailey said. "So they (county commissioners) figured they better renovate it."

During the renovation beginning in June 1987, architects and builders used old photographs and sketches of the courthouse to restore the building to its original dimensions, down to the frames around the doors and windows.

Sandstone needed to replace the deteriorating red-tinted blocks of rock that trim the building was hauled in from the same West Texas quarry that provided it in the 1890s.

"The same family still owned the quarry and they still had our specifications for the blocks of sandstone," Hailey said.

The courthouse atrium, long swallowed up by the need for office space, was reopened and topped by a chandelier that in most respects resembled the original.

"This one uses electric light bulbs instead of kerosene lamps," Hailey said.

By September, when the work was finished, the building had been restored to 95 percent of the original, said Hailey, one of those who fielded public complaints when restoration plans were completed in 1987.

"But once they've seen the workmanship, the craftsmanship, I haven't heard anyone complain," Hailey said. "Everyone's real proud. It's their courthouse now."

Raptor Center's clientele often fall prey to hunters

ST. PAUL, Minn. (AP) — Fall and winter are busy times at a clinic on the St. Paul campus of the University of Minnesota. That is when the big birds of prey, called raptors, start their annual migration, and men start their annual game hunts.

The Raptor Center, open since 1972, treats about 400 to 500 eagles, falcons, hawks and owls each year for injuries and accidents. According to the center, about 15 percent of the birds have been shot or trapped, with trapping injuries the hardest to treat successfully.

Of all raptors that come in, the center says, nearly 45 percent are returned to the wild, about 25 percent fail to survive their injuries and about 30 percent remain permanently crippled.

Crippled raptors are sent to zoos, nature centers and other educational institutions. Some are used in research studies and some are kept at the center for educational presentations.

Johnson to explain relationship with ex-wife Melanie Griffith

Johnson

LOS ANGELES (AP) — The publicist for Don Johnson said he will make a statement Monday that "will leave no questions unanswered" about the actor's on-again, off-again romance with actress and former wife Melanie Griffith.

Miss Griffith, wearing a huge diamond ring given to her by Johnson, was escorted by the "Miami Vice" star to a splashy party this week for Miss Griffith's new movie "Working Girl."

Spokesman Elliott Mintz said during the party that he would explain the meaning of it all on Monday.

Johnson and Miss Griffith were married in 1976, but the marriage dissolved less than two years later. More recently, Johnson has been dating singer Barbra Streisand.

EVANSVILLE, Ind. (AP) — It's her house, but Jeanette Noble wants everyone to know the disheveled, "tacky" dwelling cared for by comic Roseanne Barr in her hit show "Roseanne" does not always look that way.

Noble's modest frame bungalow has been cast as the home for the television sitcom. "Roseanne" creator Matt Williams grew up in Evansville and has featured his hometown's street signs and factories in several exterior shots for the show, which is set in Chicago.

Noble, who operates a day care business from the house, is quick to point out her home is not presented in its best light on the small screen.

"They junk it up," she said. "They get tricycles and wagons from my garage. And they take out flower pots and my sprinkling can and spread them around."

She once winced when the show's photographers stuck a red velvet reindeer in her mailbox.

"I said, 'Oh, that looks tacky. I would never do that,'" recalls Noble. "They said, 'No, but Roseanne would.'"

DENVER (AP) — Actor Kurt Russell served venison stew from his recent "Celebrity Hunt" to the homeless and needy at a Salvation Army center, but the act of charity failed to offset the ire of animal rights activists.

Russell, who held a hunt that drew 32 athletes, actors and popular musicians, donated 500 pounds of the big game meat to the Salvation Army in Denver and 500 pounds to the Rescue Mission in Grand Junction in western Colorado.

The actor, who wore a flannel shirt and blue jeans while serving meals Thursday, said he wanted the hunt to "show the reason that you take game is for providing either for yourself or your family or, in this case, for other people."

Nonetheless, the event troubled animal rights activists and some Hollywood celebrities who took out a full-page ad in the show-business publication Variety protesting the hunt.

STATELINE, Nev. (AP) — Bill Cosby says that while he was growing up his mother was more interested in admiring his Christmas presents to her than in using them.

"I tried to give her presents I really thought she needed — an electric toaster, a waffle iron, a percolator coffee pot; She loved them all," Cosby says. "But did she use them? No.

"She put them all on top of the refrigerator like they were trophies from the Olympics and she'd get really mad if anyone took them down and tried to use them."

Cosby, who is to appear at a hotel-casino Jan. 3-8, says he particularly remembers looking up at a shiny new toaster while browning bread the hard way.

"For years, we still made our toast in the bottom of the oven," he says. "You put it in, wait a while, then turn it over and burn your fingers while that terrific stainless steel toaster...sat on top of the refrigerator.

"My mother was a little strange about Christmas."

FIGUERAS, Spain (AP) — Salvador Dali remained in stable condition Friday, one day after a slight intestinal lesion caused him to vomit blood and suffer nausea, forcing the 84-year-old surrealist painter back into a hospital, doctors said.

Texan writes 'songs with a face'

By JOE EDWARDS

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Cindy Walker has spent about half a century writing "songs with a face" that have been recorded by performers like Elvis Presley and Bing Crosby.

Walker

The veteran composer, who lives in Mexia, Texas, has penned more than 450 songs that have been recorded. Known as "the queen of country songwriters," she was a finalist this year for induction into the Country Music Hall of Fame.

The best tunes, she said in a telephone interview, "are songs with a face."

"You recognize them. You know them. It's like a person. They have a face that's outstanding. Other songs don't have a face; you just hear them, that's all. The really good ones are few and far between."

Two of her best known songs are "You Don't Know Me" and "Dream Baby."

"You Don't Know Me" has been recorded by more than 75 singers, including Presley, Ray Charles, Eddy Arnold, Jerry Vale and Mickey Gilley.

Walker wrote the song in the mid-1950s after Arnold suggested the title though he had no music or lyrics to go with it.

"I was in Nashville for a music convention and he said, 'I've got a title for you.' He said you've got to promise me to write it. I was flippant about it (the title) because it didn't strike me at the time."

"It's about someone you think you know but you don't. I came on home and two months later, I was sitting in my chair in my studio and that song just started singing itself. I was just carried away with it.

"It took me three weeks to finish. Then I called Eddy and sang it over the phone to him. He had forgotten about it, but he recorded it three weeks later."

Her song "Dream Baby" was written in the mid-1960s and was a hit by Roy Orbison and later Glen Campbell among others.

"It's been recorded by lots of people," she said. "I hate to name names because I leave someone out."

Some of her other songs include "In the Misty Moonlight," "Take Me in Your Arms and Hold Me," "China Doll" and tunes with a western flavor like "Blue Canadian Rockies," "My Rancho Rio Grande," "Lone Star Trail" and "You're From Texas."

For the king of western swing music, Bob Wills, she wrote "Bubbles in My Beer," "Cherokee Maiden" and "Dusty Skies."

Her first big break, though, came in 1942 when she accompanied her father, a cotton buyer, on a trip to Hollywood from Texas. They drove past the Crosby Building and she decided to try to make an appointment with Bing Crosby.

"I went into the office and asked for Mr. Crosby," she recalled. "The secretary said Larry or which one. I didn't know there was but one. So I asked for the first one said named. It was Larry. He listened and I sang him the song. He said Bing had been looking for a western song. He said meet me here tomorrow and we'll let him hear it. I did."

As a result, "Lone Star Trail" was recorded by Bing Crosby and became her first song recorded by someone else.

"It started me off," she said.

Later, she signed her own recording contract with Decca Records. For five years she was a performer and songwriter and appeared in a few movies but eventually decided to concentrate on composing.

"I've always been a songwriter," she said. "Everything was an offshoot from my writing."

Her procedure has been to think of a title and then go from there.

"The title tells the story. If you can get a real good title, you've got something. I always write from the title. I've never written a song without the title."

Melodies flow from the lyrics, she said.

"The words and music come together. It just sort of comes to you. The songs just sing themselves to me."

"They kind of write themselves. I just stand back and listen."

ABC beams program to the stars — in space

By KATHRYN BAKER

NEW YORK (AP) — ABC has figured out a way around those low Nielsen ratings for news specials — produce one for a potentially vast new audience in outer space.

No kidding. "The Koppel Report: News From Earth," beamed by ABC on Monday, is a year-in-review by Earthlings for any alien intelligence out there that might tune in, demographics unknown.

It might seem a silly notion, but it is an often enlightening and occasionally amusing hour of self-examination that, who knows? might be the first interplanetary newsmagazine. And what better Earthling to represent us than Ted Koppel? Unless Mean Joe Greene. Or perhaps Pat Sajak and Vanna White.

See, while newspapers pile up in a corner and turn yellow, a television signal travels into space at 186,000 miles per second. "The thought may fascinate or horrify you," says Koppel, in an aside to fellow Earthlings who are probably more fascinated and horrified by the absence of "Monday Night Football," "but what if someday, a thousand light-years from now, some alien intelligence decoded the signal?"

In case they do, Koppel and guests address themselves to extraterrestrial viewers: "So what do we tell you, out there in the far reaches of space, about us and our planet? Well, for one thing, by the time you see this we'll all be long dead," Koppel informs them cheerily.

"During this year just past, we took detailed note of a great many things that were so important to us, and must seem so irrelevant to you," says Koppel, explaining the concept of the year-end wrapup. No doubt many here on Earth found such news nuggets as the resignation of U.S. Attorney General Ed Meese just as relevant as Venutians will.

But if our next-solar-system neighbors pick up "News from Earth," they'll hear, among others, Surgeon General C. Everett Koop on AIDS, environmentalist Jean-Michel Cousteau on pollution, fast-talking comedian John Moschitta on stress, South African Archbishop Desmond Tutu on racism, Billy Graham on God, Vladimir Pozner on no-God, and Richard Nixon on U.S.-Soviet relations.

The only prominent women on the program are the United Nations representative from Barbados, Dame Nita Barrow, who talks about hunger in the Third World, and anthropologist Jane Goodall, who discusses endangered species. A message to aliens: the sexual balance of the program notwithstanding, females are not on the endangered list.

Passers-by in person-on-the-street mostly act silly when offered the chance to talk to their neighbors on other planets. "If there's anybody out there," giggles one harried woman, "come get me." A man who can turn his hands upside-down on his head and encircle his eyes instructs the aliens to disregard all others, he is the true leader of the planet. A segment on narcissism is illustrated by a montage of TV commercials: "I'd like to get rid of this gray, but I don't want a total dye job and look ridiculous."

Koppel and company cover just about everything. The only apparent oversight is not taking the opportunity to issue an invitation to the Miss Universe Pageant.

Half-way through the program, Koppel gives an update on those travelin' TV signals, which, he estimates are "well past Mars, a mere five minutes from Jupiter and halfway to Saturn."

"We think about you all the time," Koppel tells outerspace audiences, introducing a segment on earthly fascination with UFOs illustrated with clips of sci-fi movies, from "War of the Worlds" to "E.T., The Extra-Terrestrial."

But he does offer in conclusion "a confession." "This program was designed much more for us on Earth than for you," he says.

"Sending messages out to the farthest reaches of the universe, or even to generations yet unborn here on Earth, is...a function of faith. It presumes that life goes on, either here or somewhere, and that you will feel some kinship to us and what was important to us. We have a great need to feel that this is so."

Nor does Koppel warn our neighbors light-years away that if they do receive the signal for "News from Earth," they may soon be subjected to a strange and uncontrollable forces from our planet — A.C. Nielsen Co. representatives looking to wire them up.

Talk show host Sally Jessy Raphael had her PR people issue a press release recently in which she patted herself on the back for refusing to do a show on necrophilia, even though "it would have gotten us more press, more ratings than anybody could possibly get in a ratings book." Rock superstar Phil Collins poses at the piano during an interview in New York City last month. Collins plays the title role in the movie "Buster," the story of Buster Edwards, one of the men who pulled off Britain's "great train robbery" in 1963.

Phil Collins breaks into movies with 'Buster'

By MARY CAMPBELL

NEW YORK (AP) — Rock superstar Phil Collins wanted a supporting role when he did his first movie, and he didn't want to sing in it because he wanted to be taken seriously as an actor.

Instead he's playing the title role in "Buster," the story of Buster Edwards, one of the men who pulled off Britain's "great train robbery" in 1963. He also talked himself into singing two songs: "Two Hearts," which plays over the "Buster" credits, and "Groovy Kind of Love," a hit single.

"I'd have been happy going in at the shallow end rather than the deep end," he says. "It's a mine field — rock stars acting." Critics have praised Collins' performance though they were lukewarm to the movie itself.

Collins also didn't intend to put himself in danger in his movie acting debut. However, for an early scene establishing Buster as a small-time thief, Collins said he'd bash in a store window himself, using a metal garbage can.

"A stuntman said the dustbin could bounce back and hit me in the face. He told me to hold it up in front of my face and make sure no huge splinters fell down and cut my head off."

Collins had beginner's luck. "When I break the huge plate-glass window, go in, get the dummy and come out, that was one take," he says.

Director David Green got the idea of casting Collins as Buster after seeing the rocker in his first acting role, as the host of a rigged game show on a "Miami Vice" episode.

Collins described Buster as "a bit different from most villains."

"A professional thief is what he was. He came out of prison and went straight back inside for shoplifting. For 13 years he has been on the straight. He's got a flower shop outside Waterloo Station. He's become a bit of a tourist attraction."

Collins met Buster Edwards. "We've become very good pals," he says. "In personality I don't think we're that far away. He's a very friendly bloke; I think I am, too. Our backgrounds are different and we come from different parts of London. Since I was 5 or 6 I just wanted to be involved with music; he obviously didn't have that kind of dream. When kids were going around causing trouble I was home practicing the drums."

Collins became a drummer in the hit British group Genesis. He revived the group's career in 1976 by stepping forward as vocalist and then he became a major rock soloist.

The movie takes a certain amount of poetic license, Collins said. Buster's wife, June (Julie Walters), returns to England from Mexico, where they'd fled. Buster followed because of his love for her. In reality, the rocker says, "June didn't like Mexico and they went back to England together. He walked into a police station and gave himself up. In the early '60s if you're working class you never traveled far. You didn't eat spicy food or have a suntan."

When shooting began, the director kept Collins away from the rushes, fearing he'd see things he'd want to do over. Then Collins happened to walk in while rushes were being shown one day.

"A professional thief is what he (Buster Edwards) was. He came out of prison and went straight back inside for shoplifting. For 13 years he has been on the straight. He's got a flower shop outside Waterloo Station..."

— Phil Collins, who plays Edwards in 'Buster'

"I saw a scene I didn't think I was very good in, where I come home from the robbery and have a confrontation with June's mother." He liked it, which gave him confidence.

Collins' sister, Carole, plays a nosy neighbor in the film. "She auditioned for the part and got it. She doesn't do it for a living, just the odd thing. She has her own talent agency, for adults. She was a professional ice skater for many years," he said.

"My mother is an agent for kids. My brother is a cartoonist. My father had the normal job in the family. He was in insurance in the City of London for 40 years."

Collins said he wouldn't do the music and put the production company in touch with Lamont Dozier. But he wound up being involved afterall.

"He came up with a couple of songs that needed words. I thought I should write the words. Because I was so involved with the film and the part, I felt I could summarize the feelings in the lyrics."

Collins got involved in helping choose other music in the film, too, such as "I Got You Babe" by Sonny and Cher, and "Sweets for My Sweet" by the Searchers, which was No. 1 the week of the robbery.

"A Groovy Kind of Love" was an uptempo hit for the Mindbenders in the '60s. "I thought it would be nice to have a slow version in the radio for background, somewhere. I did a little demo at home and the director liked it so much he used it at the end, over the arrest, when I get taken away," Collins said.

"We looked at a list of songs we could use in the film, 10 seconds of some of them," he said. "They're all just on the radio; they give an indication of the period.

"The only song that's loud is the Four Tops' 'Goin' Loco Down in Acapulco,' when they first get to Mexico. Lamont and I wrote it."

But lawyers wouldn't allow them to use any songs by the Beatles. "I found that very frustrating. I rang all the surviving Beatles. They said, 'yes,' but the lawyers wouldn't let us. I couldn't work out why."

Collins would like to do another film, playing a different type of character. He has an idea for a remake of "Goldilocks and the Three Bears," starring himself and three other actors.

B.B. King never gave up playing the blues

By LARRY McSHANE

NEW YORK (AP) — For years, playing the blues was a sure way to get them, says guitar great B.B. King.

"That has hit me pretty hard, that the blues were not popular for a long time," said King, recalling the days in the 1960s and '70s when he was more popular in Europe than at home. "It was like being black twice. But I kept working hard, kept practicing, kept playing."

He and "Lucille," his guitar, are still playing. After overcoming prejudice both racial and musical, King is now revered as a blues giant; he's just released his 52nd blues album, and he almost steals the show from U2 in their concert movie, "U2 Rattle and Hum."

"I was in Ireland, and (U2 lead singer) Bono came by," King said recently about their collaboration. "I'd always admired him and the group, and we talked about songwriting. I told him to think of me when he was writing, and he said, 'OK, I'll do it.'"

The result, "When Love Comes to Town," features King swapping vocals with Bono and playing his distinctive lead guitar over U2's backbeat — a merging of the Mississippi delta and the Emerald Isle recorded at the renowned Sun Studios in Memphis, Tenn.

King, 63, was born in Indianola, Miss., and took up the guitar at an early age. He started out playing and singing gospel, but soon began taking requests from churchgoers for more secular music. Making the guitar a career, he recalled, was a financial decision easily reached.

"I made $22.50 on a plantation driving a tractor all week. Playing guitar on a Saturday night I made $25 — understand, that's for one evening," King said. "That's when I decided."

King moved to Memphis after World War II, dubbing himself the "Beale Street Blues Boy" — later shortened to B.B. In 1951, he scored his first hit with "3 O'Clock Blues" and his career was off and running.

But during the British Invasion of the '60s and the disco craze of the '70s, King and his music slipped into the background. Despite the lack of acclaim, King never considered playing any other music.

"No, I didn't even think about it; I never felt that way," he said. "I felt bad, I felt ridiculed, looked down upon for doing this kind of music. I wished it was different, but everything I play is bluesy."

King said his instantly-recognizable guitar style was developed more because of his ears than his hands: "I can't hear lows, so I would turn the treble up. That's how it started."

But it's evolving to this day, he said before a Manhattan appearance at the Benson and Hedges Blues Festival to benefit the homeless.

"It's always changing. I'm influenced by everything. There are young people today who come up and say they idolize me — I learn from them. It's a round-robin."

Another thing that has the veteran musician smiling is the number of current artists who are acknowledging the blues "are the mother of all music." King cited Robert Cray as a particular favorite. Then he named another musician who loved the blues: the late John Lennon.

"I remember once an interviewer asked John Lennon what he'd like to being doing. And he said, 'Playing guitar, playing the blues like B.B. King.'" King said. "He never knew what that meant to me. It feels good to hear people talk like that."

Despite his advancing years, King keeps an active schedule; he estimates spending 300 days a year on the road. And he has no intention of hanging up "Lucille" any time in the near future.

"When the great creator says it's enough, that's when I'll stop," said King. "What else would I do? It's like Count Basie told me one time: My friends are around the world. If I stopped playing, how could I see them all?"

Boy's escape leads to truth about home

EDITOR'S NOTE: For a decade, in a bucolic corner of Mississippi, the Rev. Herman Fountain ran his Bethel Home for Children. From time to time, tales of abuse circulated, but nothing came of them. But as this summer began, a boy's tale of beatings, neglect and imprisonment brought state authorities to Bethel's door and ignited a conflict fueled by outrage from both sides. "Gates of Hell" is the story of these children — of their lives inside Bethel and of the emotional struggle over their futures and their souls — and of Fountain, who bitterly regretted his failure to defy authorities in the name of church rights.

"A wise man feareth, and departeth from evil ..."

— Proverbs 14:16

Gates of Hell

LUCEDALE, Miss. (AP) — The time had come. Patrick was ready. He would hide and wait, and when the moment was right, he would blow through the gates of hell and never look back.

Quietly now, quietly. He slipped inside the locker and waited, hardly breathing. The other kids at the Bethel Home for Children, were filing past, on their way to church.

Patrick opened the locker door. To the bicycle by the steps. Carefully now, carefully. If anyone saw, he would be caught, and there'd be more punishment, more pain, more humiliation.

No more. He'd had enough for a lifetime.

KATHY PRINE had just finished stabling her horse when the phone rang Sunday, May 8. It was after 7 p.m.

As a child welfare investigator in George County, she was used to calls at all hours, seven days a week. It was the sheriff's office: another runaway from Bethel. That wasn't unusual. The Baptist church home's 10-year history was rife with kids trying to escape its rigorous regimen.

Prine had dealt with some of Bethel's children but had never seen the operation firsthand. Because the state does not license its church-run boarding homes, and therefore cannot regulate them, it rarely ventures in.

Among those who have, some call them hospitals for the soul; others consider them spiritual torture chambers.

The truth about the Bethel Home for Children was a matter of opinion.

In 1980, a runaway brought assault charges against Bethel's founder, the Rev. Herman Fountain, for a beating he received with a switch — "licks," Fountain called them. After a hearing, the Youth Court judge removed all the children and directed the church to follow certain regulations. But the charges were dropped and the order was never enforced. Many of the children were returned to Bethel.

Since then, other children had run away, and others told stories of abuse and neglect. But few had been at Bethel long enough to be credible witnesses. But now there was Patrick.

HE HAD come to Bethel in October 1986 at age 13, a sometime truant sent from Florida by his mother.

Life might have been hard at home, but Bethel was like boot camp with a wrathful God as drill sergeant. Patrick's description was the same as those of other children and that of Herman Fountain himself.

Each day had a schedule: up at 5 a.m., so many minutes in the bathroom, so many minutes to dress, so many to clean the dormitory. There were prayer sessions morning and evening.

In the summers, the children picked beans, pulled weeds on the church's 28 acres, dug ditches, picked up trash and cared for Bethel's menagerie of goats, horses, ducks and deer. Sometimes crews of children would tear down abandoned buildings, including some at Keesler Air Force Base in Biloxi, and return to Bethel with what they salvaged, where it would become part of new structures they built themselves.

There was no payment for work, but plenty of punishment for slackers.

In the winters, they had Bible memorization and school. Lessons came from religious workbooks. Often, children had to erase other children's answers to fill in their own.

Like every new Bethel charge, Patrick spent his first month under the eye of more trusted child. Children "on watch" were allowed to speak only to designated individuals. It was a way to prevent them from planning escapes. Talking meant sure punishment.

There were no calls to parents for the first two months, and no visits for the first six.

INCOMING MAIL was allegedly opened and money was removed. Letters home that complained about Bethel were ordered rewritten. Telephone calls, when allowed, were monitored.

Meals were heavy on oatmeal, grits and rice. At the end of the week, leftovers were mixed together, a meal the kids called "compost stew." Failure to eat everything on the plate brought punishment.

No cigarettes, drugs, alcohol or carbonated drinks were allowed. There was no television, no radio, no movies because these were of the devil. So were newspapers, magazines and most music, except certain religious selections. At night, trusted children guarded the doors against runaways. No one was allowed out.

This was the program, steeped in fundamental religion, rooted in biblical principles and imbued, its supporters said, with the Lord's power to change incorrigibles into God-fearing, clean-living Christians. And anyone who deviated from it, in word, deed or spirit, learned a lesson about pain.

Patrick had learned those lessons well.

Mark Maples, George County prosecutor, questioned Patrick closely and had interviewed several other former Bethel residents. Maples, 30, had grown up in George County and knew a little about Bethel, because in a town the size of Lucedale (population 2,500), it was hard to avoid. Some days at lunchtime, Bethel preachers stood out on Main Street, hollering about hell and damnation.

THAT USUALLY prompted stories from the patrons at the nearby Coffee Pot restaurant, but mostly they left the subject alone. After all, they figured, none of the kids out there was local; they probably were bad kids who deserved what they got.

Now this boy was telling Maples stories as awful as any he had heard. It would take testimony from those who'd left earlier and knew Patrick, and two more who would leave after his escape, to corroborate his treatment from the day he arrived to the day he fled Herman Fountain.

In 1969, Fountain was a heroin addict dabbling in witchcraft. He had forsaken his native Oklahoma for the streets of New York; in three years, he says, he lost his family and his health, ending up in a Queens hospital with hepatitis from shooting up with a dirty needle.

Then he found the Lord. Born again, he won back his family and went off to bible college in Pensacola, Fla., later moving to Corpus Christi, Texas, to join the ministries of the Rev. Lester Roloff, an evangelist who ran a well-publicized home for troubled children before his death in a 1982 plane crash.

Fountain felt the call to begin his own ministry and his own children's home, and in 1978, he, wife Carol, and seven children arrived in Lucedale.

His Bethel Baptist church and children's home thrived. At one point, as many as 150 children were on campus. Parents who could afford it paid $275 a month plus $750 for materials and registration. Some paid less. Some paid nothing.

It didn't matter to Fountain. The Lord had called him for this work.

The state had tried to shut him down in 1980 and failed. Six years later, the welfare department raided the Bethesda Home for Girls in Hattiesburg, run by his friend, the Rev. Bob Wills, and Wills' wife, Betty Sue.

Mississippi State Police wait outside the Bethel Home for Children in Lucedale, Miss., last June after a judge ordered removal of the children due to suspicions of brutality and neglect.

THE 113 girls taken from the home spoke of strip-searches, paddlings and starvation diets. One-fourth of the girls reported missing their menstrual periods for two months to a year — the result, Mrs. Wills forthrightly explained, of stress brought on by much-needed discipline.

Discipline. That was the key to a spiritual life, the Willses believed, and Fountain agreed wholeheartedly. Children needed discipline. It said as much in the Bible, and his charges knew Proverbs 23:13 by heart:

"Do not withhold correction from a child,
For if you beat him with a rod, he will not die.
You shall beat him with a rod
And deliver his soul from hell."

That was Fountain's calling: delivering young souls from hell.

David Owens, assistant pastor at the Bethel Home for Children, is arrested outside the home last June. Police broke in and took the children after Owens and others — accused of abuse and neglect of the children — had barricaded parents and children inside the church.

Minister tries to prevent police from taking children

Fountain

LUCEDALE, Miss. (AP) — Friday's raid at the Bethel Home for Children was followed by Monday's last stand.

Over the weekend, word reached Judge Robert Oswald that some of the children who had fled police had returned to Bethel. He ordered authorities back to the church to retrieve any children they could find.

Bethel founder Herman Fountain, in Youth Court awaiting further hearing testimony, caught wind of the action and ordered his staff to ignore the subpoenas that had summoned them and return to Bethel. There would be no compromise on this day.

Fountain locked the church doors, barricading three dozen parents and children in the church they had built by hand. Dozens of state troopers and sheriff's deputies stood by for more than three hours, while Welfare Commissioner Thomas Brittain Jr. tried to negotiate the childrens' release.

Police finally broke in and took the children, while church members recited Bible verse and sang hymns.

"If God be for us who can be against us?" read the Bethel sign by the road.

FOUNTAIN; HIS eldest son, Herman Jr., nicknamed Bubba, and Brother David Owens were among eight people arrested that day. Fountain faces three counts of felonious assault on a police officer and one count of inciting a riot, all which were presented to the grand jury in September.

Troubles seemed to overrun the pastor like the locusts of Pharaoh's Egypt. A former Bethel resident, Rhonnda Traxler, gathered reporters outside the courthouse and alleged Fountain sexually molested her and another girl while they were at Bethel. Fountain denied the accusation and leveled his own: "You can't believe this girl. There's no telling how many men she's been with."

Another former Bethel child, Ray Friery, filed a $1 million federal lawsuit against Fountain, alleging assault and battery, abuse, neglect and false imprisonment.

Fountain wasn't the only one with problems. Many state workers involved in the case received harassing phone calls or believed they were being followed by Bethel supporters.

Brittain sent his 13-year-old daughter out of state after anonymous callers threatened to kidnap her and put her in a church home where she would never be found again.

Before the Youth Court hearings ended, about half of the more than 70 children taken from Bethel had testified. Some were too frightened to appear.

"THEY'RE REALLY wicked little kids," Fountain said in a later interview with The Associated Press. "I'm talking about homosexuals, I'm talking about lesbians, I'm talking about prostitutes. I'm talking about one boy who raped his 84-year-old grandmother. I'm talking about one who murdered his sister.

"I'm talking habitual runaways, I'm talking car thieves, I'm talking nymphomaniacs."

Brittain dealt with the same youngsters but saw something different.

"For the most part, they're pretty normal kids who have been battered around by life pretty badly," the welfare commissioner said. "They're children trying to put their lives back together."

Some parents had despaired of getting help from state agencies; for them, Bethel was a last resort. For others, it was a matter of convenience. One child was sent to Bethel because he "took food from the refrigerator," Brittain said.

But as the hearing continued after the raid on Bethel, some parents sat in the courtroom and wept, overwhelmed by stories of hair-pulling, face-slapping, lap-running and switchings. A 13-year-old girl with Down's syndrome said she ran laps all day long, received frequent spankings and sometimes stood for hours on tiptoe with her chin above a light switch.

"They said she was a little brat and had a demon in her," another girl said. "Parents agreed with it. They said that's what you deserve if you've acted in a wrong way."

SOME PARENTS said they were misled. They didn't know what Bethel really was. Other parents knew exactly what Bethel was.

"When I went down there, I was totally convinced what had occurred was not morally right, legally right or anyway right," said Jack Hicks of Birdsboro, Pa. But his two teen-age sons support Fountain, and they changed his mind.

"They love the man tremendously. If my children said to me, 'Dad, that's not the way it was, they were cruel and abused us,' I'd be after Brother Fountain," he said. "But they've solidified my support."

About 50 of the children were released to their parents, who signed a court agreement not to return them to Bethel without the judge's approval. Protecting the children this way was about all the state and Judge Oswald could do since Bethel is a private, unregulated facility.

Now a dozen parents, including Hicks, are preparing a lawsuit against the state for its action at Bethel.

"I look at this much beyond just an incident that occurred in the state of Mississippi," Hicks said. "Let's term it religious harassment."

LIFE IS slow at Bethel these days, with so few children around. The home remains open, but rows of girls' bunk beds stand empty except for the stuffed bears and rabbits left behind by former occupants.

A few new children have come since the hearings. A few former residents have returned.

No winner has emerged from the emotional battle over Bethel, which begins and ends with a collision of convictions.

Brittain and his team of investigators, Oswald and prosecutor Mark Maples consider it a matter of child protection.

Fountain, his faithful flock and other fundamentalists who came to lend support have called it an issue of religious freedom.

Conservative religious belief courses through Mississippi's veins and beats fiercely in its heart. The perception that the state is venturing into the realm of the church makes blood run hot. But so does the perception that church home operators are using fundamental religion and the Bible as justification to abuse and neglect children.

"I'm a Christian; they're supposed to be Christians," said welfare investigator Kathy Prine, who teaches Sunday school at her Baptist church. "I believe this is wrong. These kids are being physically abused. These people claim the kids are liars and are not being abused but are being raised by what the Bible says.

"IT MAKES you question your faith and your job. When we went in there, I asked someone, 'Am I hurting the church? Am I hurting God's work by doing this?' I thought about it, and I said, 'No. No, I'm not.'"

Oswald, in his order removing the children from Bethel, wrote, "If there is a conflict of interests between religion and the protection of children, this Court's decision must be to protect first the children."

Fountain sees it another way. "I dealt with (Oswald) in chambers, about his soul. He says, 'The laws of the land are first and that (the) Bible's second,'" Fountain said. "I said, 'That's wrong, that Bible's first and the law of the land is second.'"

Mississippi, along with North Carolina, South Carolina, Louisiana, Missouri and Florida, has no law licensing church-run boarding homes, although some voluntarily apply for licenses.

As a result, there is no way to reach many of the children in such homes, many of whom are denied communication with the outside for months at a time, or to ensure that basic educational, sanitation and safety standards are met.

"We've had to wait years to collect information in bits and pieces from runaway children," Brittain said. "We have no way of knowing what's going on inside those four walls."

MAPLES HAS filed a court petition to force Bethel to comply with state laws governing education, safety standards and child labor laws. The court has yet to act on it. If enforced, such an order could close Bethel, because Fountain has said he would never cooperate.

For the two years he has been welfare commissioner, Brittain has pushed for a law to open the doors of homes like Bethel; Fountain has prayed against one.

This might well be the year that the power of prayer is overcome by the power of politics: observers agree that outrage over conditions at Bethel has been so great that the Legislature might be forced to act.

Even Fountain agrees, saying, "It would take an act of God" to prevent a licensure law from emerging in the next legislative session.

At Bethel, they will be praying round the clock.

"They're going against God, and that's their problem. That's why we're going to win," Fountain said. "The gates of hell ain't going to prevail against our church."

Youths testify about abusive treatment

By LISA LEVITT RYCKMAN

LUCEDALE, Miss. (AP) — On June 1, Patrick took the witness stand. Herman Fountain was staring at him.

The story Patrick told was one of a child subjected to constant ridicule and bullying. Hardly a day passed of his 18 months at the Bethel Home for Children when he was not hit with a switch for some offense, real or imagined. Talking without permission, slacking off on a job, looking at a girl: all were unpardonable offenses at Bethel.

The whippings left bruises and raised welts. Some children later testified that they saw others bleed, and their clothing would stick to the dried blood.

Laps were another common punishment. Patrick said he would be awakened at 4 a.m., an hour before the Bethel day began, and ordered to run laps around a track. Twenty-five laps, or about 2½ miles, was a typical distance. Sometimes, the run would be timed: 45 seconds a lap. Those who couldn't keep up the 7.5 minute per mile pace had to run more, or received other punishment.

Push-ups were common; even the smallest boys might be told to do 50. The "rose garden" was a series of calisthenics — push-ups, leg lifts, sit-ups. Children ordered to do a "minefield" walked up and down a football field on their hands and toes.

Brother David Owens, in charge of the girls, was known among the children for two particular exercises: the "chair," in which a child had to assume a sitting position against a wall, and another where she would stand on tiptoe with her chin against the wall as high as she could hold it.

WHEN THE children were put to work, Patrick more often than not was in the "nigger crew," the boys assigned to do the dirtiest, most strenuous work. He might work his way to a good crew, but a moment of horseplay would send him right back to nigger crew, where he would be forced to do something even worse than before.

While a backhoe and bulldozer sat idle, the crew dug a ditch, 4-feet-deep and a half-mile long, and Patrick was ordered to dig in front of the rest, where the ground had yet to be broken.

When they started the ditch, Patrick said later, six children tried to run away.

Some children said they were injured while working or were forced to work or run laps while ill. Some received prompt medical attention, but others did not. A doctor testified he told Bethel adults that Patrick would lose sight in one eye without glasses, but they were never ordered.

Once, other children were told to throw dirt clods at him while he was in the ditch. Sometimes he was subjected to the "nigger pile"; on a leader's order, other children would hit him, knock him to the ground and pile on top of him.

Sleep was no escape. Patrick, who suffered from a bed-wetting problem, was put on all-night "pee watch," awakened hourly to urinate, whether or not he needed to, and punished if he refused. When he wet the bed, he was hit again.

On June 8, the second day of Patrick's hearing, Mark Maples, the county prosecutor, called Fountain to the stand.

It was about time, Maples felt, for Fountain to explain himself. Fountain had other ideas. The state was meddling. This was a church matter, and it would remain so.

Beyond giving his name and address, he refused to answer questions, citing the "separation of church and state."

"Who's in charge at Bethel?" Maples asked.

"The Lord Jesus Christ," Fountain replied.

"What mortal is in charge at Bethel?" Maples tried again.

"NO MORTAL is in charge," Fountain said. "We are a group of reborn Christians serving the Lord Jesus Christ, and he alone is in charge."

Questions about the childrens' nutrition, education, punishment, work and medical needs went unanswered. Judge Robert Oswald found Fountain in contempt of court and ordered him to jail, a sentence that lasted 30 minutes. Jail, the judge decided, was not going to compel this man to cooperate.

Later that week, Oswald found Fountain, Owens and another assistant, Brother Tom MacDonald, in contempt and ordered fines totaling $1,500 a day until they agreed to cooperate. The fines would top $100,000, but Fountain had made his decision.

So had the judge. Patrick's story had convinced him of physical abuse, medical neglect and unreasonable detention, at the very least. The other children would be removed from Bethel, and he would hear their stories, too.

Arrangements were made to take the children by bus to the Mississippi State Hospital at Whitfield, a mental institution with enough security and vacant dormitories to house them temporarily.

Back at Bethel, Fountain gathered the children in the church. "You're going to a nuthouse," he told them. "I have no more control over you."
