Bush's staff sworn in by Quayle

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush, declaring the lights in his White House will "burn brightly well after dark," instructed his senior staff today to put in long hours and avoid even the appearance of conflict-of-interest.

"Let's go to work," Bush said at a brief ceremony in the East Room at which 65 members were sworn-in by Vice President Dan Quayle.

Bush was to preside later in the day at his first Cabinet meeting, and was also to address anti-abortion demonstrators through a telephone hookup.

The new president, on his first working day, told the gathering "we are about to embark on a really great adventure."

Bush, seeking to prevent some of the lapses that plagued the White House staff of former President Reagan, gave special emphasis to the need to maintain the highest of ethical standards.

"It's not really very complicated. It's a question of knowing right from wrong, avoiding conflicts of interest, bending over backwards to see that there's not even a perception of a conflict of interest," the new president said.

"Our actions must always be of the highest integrity."

Bush addressed his staff at 8:30 a.m. By then, he had already been at work for more than an hour, meeting with Quayle at a 7:15 a.m. breakast session and with chief of staff John Sununu.

The president indicated he expected a similar work ethic from members of his staff. He appealed for understanding from spouses who watched the ceremony.

"Your husbands and wives are embarking on an ordeal that is known to be a time-consuming killer...The lights burn well after dark around this place," Bush said.

He said he expected "long hours and hard work...But these long hours can result in new opportunity for all."

Bush reiterated that his top priority was tackling the budget deficit — which he will focus on throughout the week, beginning with a meeting Tuesday with congressional leaders.

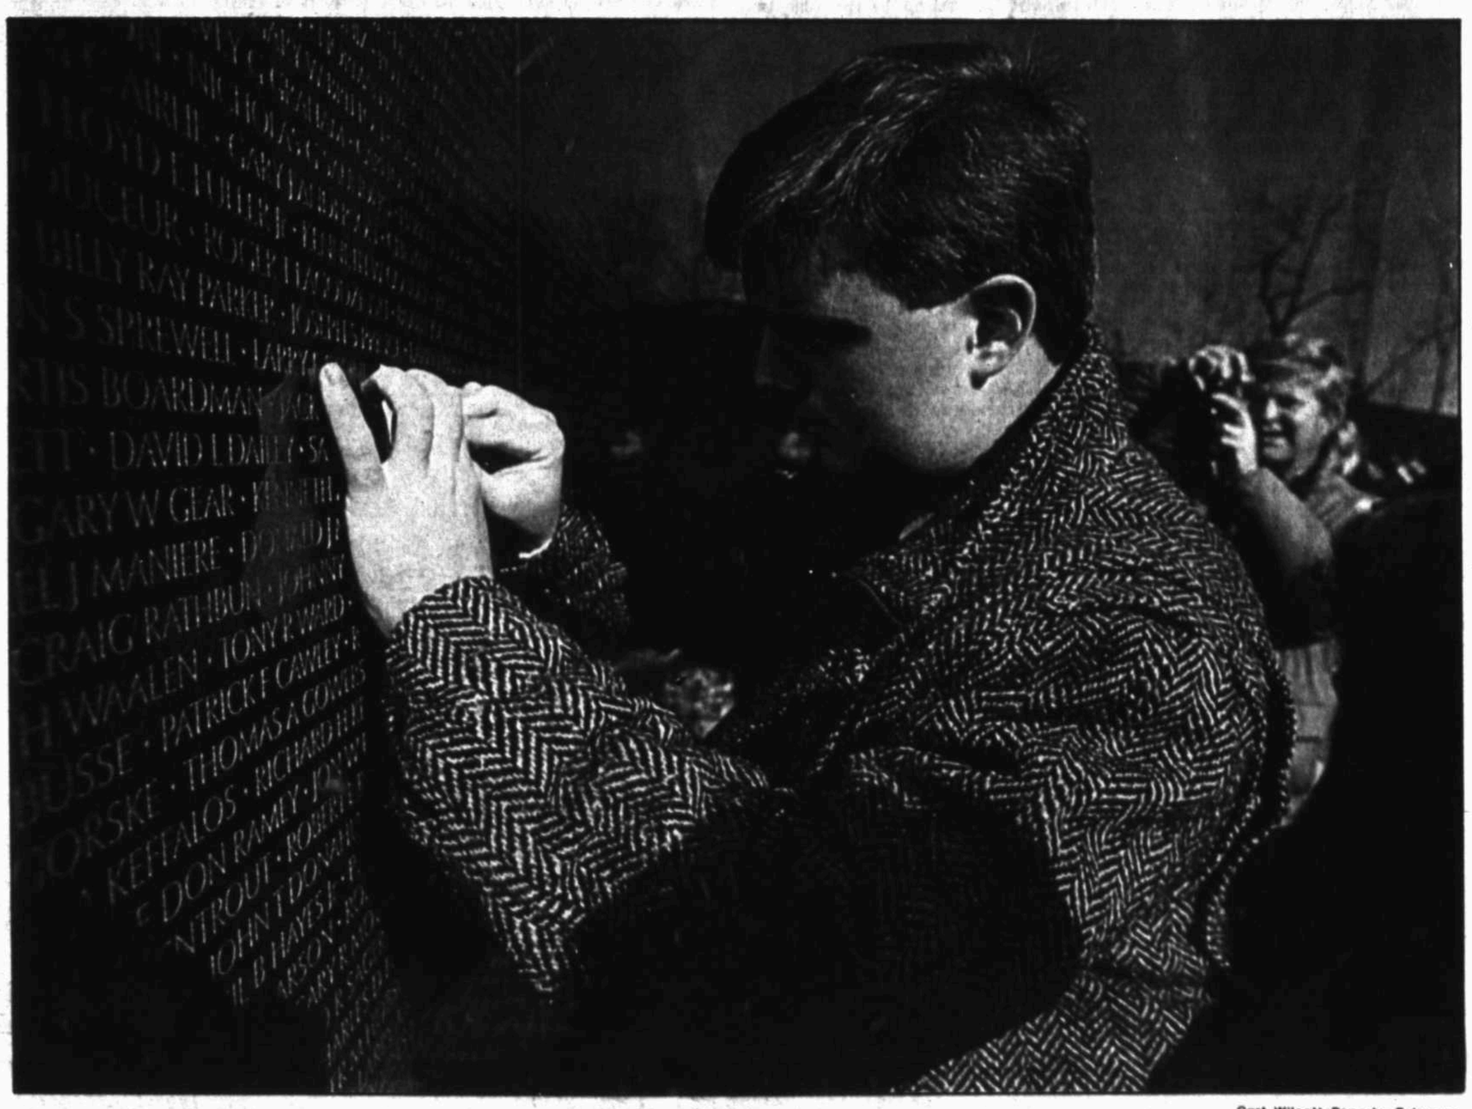

"We have an immense opportunity to make life better for the people in this country," He said. "We can, by hard work, make this a safer and more secure country."

Quayle had been asked by Bush to swear in the staff. He asked the aides to raise their right hands and take the oath to "support and defend the Constitution of the United States" and to "well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office of which I am proud to enter."

"It's my first official act," Quayle quipped.

At one point, as the voices of children in the audience began to rise, Bush interrupted his speech and joked: "I'm glad they're someone else's kids." He hinted that having his 10 grandchildren in the White House all weekend had been something of an ordeal. "In the last 48 hours, they've been everywhere," he said.

Quake kills 'almost everybody' in village, editor says

MOSCOW (AP) — An earthquake destroyed several mountain villages in Tadzhikistan today, killing up to 1,000 people and burying one village under a 45-foot wall of dirt and mud, officials said.

"Almost everybody died," said Zainiddin Nasreddinov, editor-in-chief of the official Tazhikistan news agency, who visited the buried village of Sharora in Soviet Central Asia.

A preliminary estimate indicated about 600 people died there, he said in a telephone interview from Dushanbe, about 10 miles northeast of Sharora. The population of the village was not known, but Nasreddinov said about 70 families lived there.

"The total number of deaths is now evaluated at up to 1,000," said the official Tass news agency. It said hundreds died in Sharora but did not give an exact figure.

The quake struck about 1,800 miles southeast of Moscow, north of Afghanistan and bordering China, at 2:02 a.m. (6:02 p.m. EST Sunday). It was the strongest quake to hit the Soviet Union since the Dec. 7 quake that struck Armenia and killed about 25,000 people.

Rescue teams were searching for survivors and soldiers were rushed to the area to keep order and restore communications and power and water to the buildings left standing, said Nasreddinov.

Roads into the area were damaged and thousands of head of cattle were killed, Tass said. Bulldozers and cranes were being sent into the area to help rescuers, the report said.

The magnitude of the earthquake was uncertain.

The U.S. Geological Survey in Golden, Colo. said it measured 6.0 on the Richter scale. The survey offices in Menlo Park, Calif. and Reston, Va., put the magnitude at 5.4 on the Richter scale.

A torrent of dirt and mud slid from a nearby hill and buried Sharora after the earthquake hit, Nasreddinov said.

Rains '95 percent' sure he will run for governor

DALLAS (AP) — Texas Secretary of State Jack Rains said he wants to run for governor next year — even if that should mean facing the President's son.

Rains, who said he is "95 percent" certain he will be in the race, said he won't be intimidated by the prospect of facing George W. Bush in the Republican primary.

George W. Bush told reporters and political supporters in Washington last week that he is "interested" in the governor's race, although he said he has made no final decision on whether to enter.

"I love George and Barbara Bush. And whether George W. runs or doesn't run, he's a fine man. I respect him," Rains said. "The issue is going to be who is qualified and who is electable and who can carry the message to grass-roots Texas.

"I know Texas, I'm a native Texan, I've lived here all my life and I've traveled it," Rains said.

In a Washington interview with The Dallas Morning News, Rains said he intends to quit as secretary of state when the current legislative session ends in June.

Rains, a Republican, said he plans to "run my traps across the state, and then (wife) Aileen and I will come back and make a decision."

"But if you ask me today, I'd say the odds are about 95 percent I'm going to make a race," Rains said. "I've reached that conclusion over a two-year period of what people have told me in traveling around the state, the encouragement I've received and the unsolicited grass-roots support."

A former Houston businessman and lawyer, Rains, 51, would be making his first run for public office.

Officer injured by suspect

From Staff Reports

A California resident was to be arraigned this afternoon in connection with the aggravated assault Sunday afternoon of a Midland police officer.

Officer Rene Flores received stitches for a head laceration he received Sunday after a struggle, Cpl. Jim White said today.

According to reports, shortly before 5 p.m., Flores arrived at Jimmy's Pit Stop, 200 S. Lee St., to investigate the theft of a bottle of wine.

Flores spotted the suspect walking away from the scene. He became "very beligerent" when the officer attempted to question him, reports said.

The suspect struck Flores on the head with a bottle of wine and a struggle ensued, White said.

The man was arrested shortly after backup police arrived at the scene, reports said.

The suspect refused treatment at Midland Memorial Hospital for injuries he received in the struggle, White said.

The suspect was to be arraigned this afternoon on the felony charge, the corporal said.

Quayle: Administration backs overturning Roe vs. Wade

WASHINGTON (AP) — Vice President Dan Quayle assured anti-abortion leaders today that the Bush administration shares their desire to overturn the landmark Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

"We have a lot of crusades," Quayle said, noting that "I have been involved with a lot of people in my state (Indiana) on this issue. I couldn't think of a more appropriate group to be meeting with."

Shortly before the meeting in the Old Executive Office Building, anti-abortion leaders called for a national prayer crusade. That came as thousands of demonstrators converged on the capital to culminate a series of nationwide protests against the Roe vs. Wade Supreme Court decision in 1973.

Ector County Commissioners approve new DA's proposal to restructure office

By FRANK TROMBLEY
Staff Writer

ODESSA — Ector County Commissioners have approved a proposal by new District Attorney Gary Garrison to restructure his office and today were expected to consider his request to redirect existing funds to enable the reorganization.

Garrison said he isn't asking for additional funds, only permission to use funds already allocated to fulfill pledges he made during his campaign.

The changes he wants to make, he said, will place much stronger emphasis on the Victim-Witness program and efforts to increase communication between his office and law enforcement agencies.

Referring to the his Victim-Witness program, Garrison said, "I want to develop a better program than what we've had."

He believes having two people, Art Allison and Sandra Smith, with law enforcement backgrounds will accomplish this.

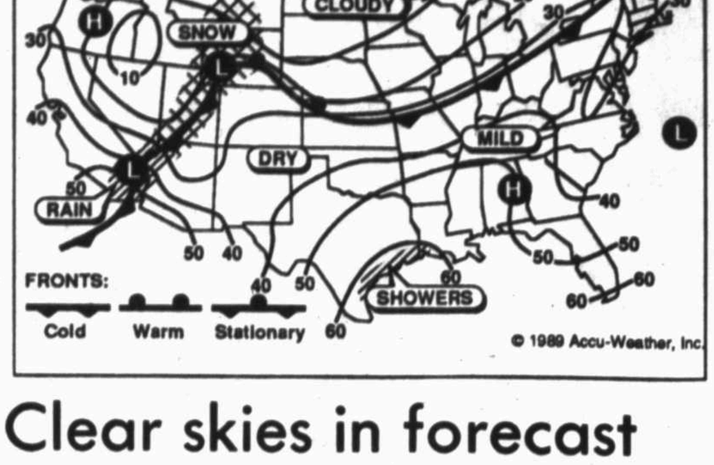

"I want my Victim-Witness program coordinator (Allison) to work more closely with the agencies involved in child abuse cases, which I indicated I would do when I was campaigning," said the new district attorney.

"I want that job to become more than just a handho'ding job. I wanted people who work in the program to have had law enforcement experience.

WEATHER SUMMARY

From Staff and Wire Reports

Clear skies are in the forecast for tonight, according to the National Weather Service at Midland International Airport. Winds will be southerly 10-15 mph.

Tuesday will be sunny and cooler with the high in the lower 60s, southeast winds 10-20 mph.

Sunday's high of 64 was 19 degrees cooler than the record high temperature of 83 set for that date in 1950. The overnight low of 34 was 27 degrees warmer than the record low temperature of seven set for this date in 1966.

STATE

Mid- and high-level cloudiness continued to increase over Texas just before dawn today as clouds and moisture streamed across Mexico into the state from the Pacific.

A ridge of high pressure continued to drift further off to the east as an area of low pressure developed over West Texas. This pressure pattern was allowing a southerly wind flow to return to most of the state.

The forecast called for mostly fair skies over West Texas and partly to mostly cloudy elsewere with a chance of widely scattered showers or light rain over parts of North Texas and South Texas through Tuesday. Highs this afternoon were expected to be mostly in the 60s, except along the Rio Grande in the Big Bend, where highs were expected in the lower 70s.

NATION

Snow fell across the northern Rockies and rain was scattered along the southern Atlantic Coast today. Fair weather prevailed over the rest of the nation.

Winter storm warnings were in effect today in southern Montana; a warning for heavy snow was issued for the northwest Wyoming mountains. More than a foot of new snow was reported late Sunday in Island Park, Idaho, and just over the Montana and Wyoming borders.

West Yellowstone, Mont., had 41 inches of snow on the ground Sunday.

Rain showers were scattered late Sunday from northern Nevada into the central California coast.

Dali dies of cardiac arrest at age 84

FIGUERAS, Spain (AP) — Surrealist painter Salvador Dali, whose fantastic and memorable dreamscapes were as eccentric and flamboyant as his behavior, died today in his hometown, his doctor said. He was 84.

Dali died at 10:15 a.m. at Figueras Hospital, said Dr. Charles Ponsati. "The cause of death was cardiac arrest brought on by his respiratory insufficiency and pneumonia," he told reporters.

The painter had been in poor health and confined to a wheelchair since suffering severe burns in an electrical fire in his home in August 1984.

He was rushed to the hospital five days ago. Suffering from a bad heart, Dali had been hospitalized three times since late November.

A founder of the surrealist movement, Dali, born on May 11, 1904, in this small Catalonian town. He was the last of an outstanding generation of Spanish painters that included Pablo Picasso and Joan Miro.

His "Persistence of Memory" — with its melting clocks and barren landscape — is perhaps the world's most celebrated surrealist painting: a vivid image that became an indelible part of 20th century culture.

Miguel Domenech, Dali's attorney, said Dali died "softly, without making any special last statement."

Condolences came quickly from King Juan Carlos, a personal friend of Dali, and from Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez. Spanish Culture Minister Jorge Semprun called Dali the "last of a generation of creators who revolutionized art in our century."

"The Divine Dali," as he liked to call himself, was instantly recognizable: his pointed, waxed mustache curling up like a bull's horns, his long hair falling over his neck and one of his more than 30 walking sticks draped over an arm.

What Dali called his "sublime craziness," began early — he was expelled from art school in 1926 for arrogance and briefly jailed for Catalonian separatist political activities.

Few critics faulted Dali's technical virtuosity, although his work was not held in the highest esteem. But he was overwhelmingly popular: in 1979 and 1980, a major retrospective drew more than a million visitors in Paris and 250,000 in London.

To most critics, Dali was a flawed talent — sometimes managing to balance realistic technique and irrational content, but all too often caught up in his own role as a poseur-painter. He completed most of his critically successful works before he was 35.

In addition to being a painter, Dali was a decorator, a fashion and jewelry designer and an author of poetry, prose and essays.

After being kicked out of the School of Fine Arts in Madrid, Dali went to Paris and quickly became involved in the surrealist movement.

The surrealists strove to locate the "real world" in the realm of the unconscious and dreams, removing it from its shell of "supposed reality."

At the end of the 1936-39 Spanish Civil War, he was drummed out of the movement as a "phony" and an "archfranquist dilettante." Dali made no secret of his support for the 36-year regime of Francisco Franco.

With a loan from Picasso, Dali made his first trip to the United States in 1934 with Gala, the Russian-born woman who became his faithful companion, muse and the touchstone of his personality and life.

Gala Dimitrovna Diaharoff met Dali in 1929 when she and her husband, French surrealist poet Paul Eluard, visited the painter at his seaside home on Spain's northeastern Costa Brava.

At Dali's request, she never left. They married in 1958, six years after Eluard's death. They had no childre; Dali said geniuses always produced mediocre children.

Dali said Gala was "the woman who always inspired me...without her, everything would be over."

Gala died June 10, 1982. After her death, the painter said he chose to remain inside the castle.

Two years later, a mysterious electrical fire broke out while Dali slept, sending the painter to the hospital and bringing to public attention what many termed his near imprisonment by three close associates. It was never clear why the fire burned several hours without being noticed when Dali was supposed to have 24-hour care.

A. Reynolds Morse, founder of the Salvador Dali Museum in St. Petersburg, Fla., and a longtime acquaintance of the painter, said at the time the three had refused him entrance to the castle.

After the fire, Dali moved into the Galatea Tower attached to his Theater-Museum in Figueras and remained there, confined to a wheelchair and fed through a tube. He received a pacemaker in 1986.

The highest price ever paid for a Dali was the $2.3 million a Japanese buyer paid in 1987 for a 1974-76 oil on canvas, "Gala Looking at the Mediterranean Sea, Which From a Distance of 20 Meters is Transformed into a Portrait of Abraham Lincoln (Homage to Rothko)."

Dali's estate has been estimated at nearly $90 million.

Band leader Xavier Cugat, a friend of Dali and fellow Catalan, told Spanish National Radio that Dali's death could prompt a whole new round of fakes. "Because now his works are going to start showing up like mushrooms and because no one can verify their authenticity, this is going to be awful," he said.

The painter's body was taken back to his Galatea Tower residence. Maria Teresa, Dali's housekeeper, said the residence was besieged by thousands of people who wanted to pay last respects.

The funeral is scheduled for Wednesday afternoon.

The Theater-Museum, where the artist will be buried, was closed Sunday so workers could build the tomb. His tomb will be in the inner court of the museum, just beneath a great glass dome crowning the building.

He said he decided to make his political plans public to "counter those who are spreading rumors that I am not a candidate."

Among the most frequently mentioned prospective Republican candidates for governor in 1990 are Rains, Bush, Texas Railroad Commissioner Kent Hance and Amarillo oilman T. Boone Pickens.

Attorney General Jim Mattox, state Treasurer Ann Richards and former Gov. Mark White, now a Houston lawyer, are the most often mentioned Democratic prospects.

Although it has been no secret among Texas politicians that Rains has been positioning himself for a gubernatorial run, he has denied he was planning a campaign to follow Gov. Bill Clements.

Clements, who appointed Rains to the secretary of state's post, has said he will not seek re-election.

Rains already has started organizing a campaign team and seeking pledges of financial support, The News reported.

"But I see tens of thousands of pastors...tens of thousands points of light on a prayer crusade."

Quayle said he was delighted to sit down "with various constituencies interested in the preservation of life."

When a reporter asked whether the Bush administration could succeed in getting the 1973 Roe vs. Wade decision reversed, Quayle replied, "Time will tell. We have the same commitment." He said it was important that someone stand up and speak for "those people who are not yet born."

White House chief of staff John Sununu accompanied Quayle to the meeting, and the vice president said Sununu was there because he wanted to hear the visitors' views.

President Bush was to speak to the demonstrators via telephone hookup at a noontime rally. Former President Reagan followed that practice in past years.

The rally on the Ellipse, south of the White House, also was to include speeches by Sen. Gordon J. Humphrey, R-N.H., and Reps. Robert K. Dornan, R-Calif., and Christopher Smith, R-N.J.

After the rally the anti-abortion protestors planned a parade along Constitution Avenue to Capitol Hill, reversing the route taken just a few days earlier by the newly inaugurated Bush.

Leonard Dinegar of the National Right to Life Committee said organizers hoped to match last year's turnout of 50,000 people for what has become an annual reminder of the divisive issue.

The debate has taken on added intensity this year, with a reconstituted Supreme Court considering a Missouri case with the potential to result in significant changes in the legal doctrine governing abortion.

The Washington protest capped a series of demonstrations marking the 16th anniversary of the Roe vs. Wade decision that women's privacy rights allow them to make their own decisions on abortion.

Anti-abortion demonstrators marched by the thousands in numerous cities on Sunday, in some cases confronted by advocates of free choice in abortion.

BUSH

Among those sworn in were national security adviser Brent Scowcroft; David Bates Jr., secretary to the Cabinet; Richard C. Breeden, assistant for issues analysis; Andrew H. Card Jr., deputy to the chief of staff; David Demarest, communications director; Marlin Fitzwater, press secretary; C. Boyden Gray, counsel to the president; Frederick D. McClure, assistant for legislative affairs; and Roger B. Porter, assistant for domestic policy.

Sununu attended the ceremony but did not raise his right hand; he had been sworn in by Quayle privately earlier today.

Bush was turning his attention to business after a $25 million inaugural extravaganza.

He planned to address anti-abortion protesters on the Ellipse, just south of the White House. The demonstration was called to protest the Supreme Court's Jan. 22, 1973, decision legalizing abortion.

Reagan addressed the annual march and rally in the same fashion in previous years.

Bush opposed a constitutional amendment banning abortions when he first ran for president in 1980, but later changed his position.

In his 1988 presidential campaign, he voiced support for an amendment that would prohibit abortions except in cases of incest or rape or to save the life of the mother.

And, as recently as his inaugural address on Friday, Bush made a passing reference to the issue.

There, he spoke of "young women to be helped who are about to become mothers of children they can't care for and might not love. They need our care, our guidance, and our education, though we bless them for choosing life."

Dealing with the budget appeared likely to command much of Bush's attention this first full week in office.

Fitzwater said Sunday the president will withhold specifics on his budget plans until a Feb. 9 address to a joint session of Congress. However, he plans to start the ball rolling on Tuesday when he meets with congressional leaders.

"These sessions are — as he proposed in his inaugural — to reach out a hand to Congress," Fitzwater said.

The new chief executive and his wife, Barbara, and many members of his family and Cabinet attended an interfaith prayer service at the Washington Cathedral on Sunday. The service was the last item on the script of inaugural activities that had begun last Wednesday.

Later, Bush hosted a White House reception for inaugural organizers and then watched the Super Bowl on television with members of his family. After the game, he called National Football League Commissioner Pete Rozelle and invited the victorious San Francisco 49ers to visit the White House.

At the prayer service, John T. Walker, the Episcopalian bishop of Washington, spoke of "a nation united in the person of our president. He is our symbol of unity."

Bush's eldest son, George W. Bush, 42, read a litany at the service, ending it with, "God protect our mother and father."

Meanwhile, White House national security adviser Brent Scowcroft said Sunday it would be premature to arrange a high-level Bush administration meeting with Palestinian leader Yasser Arafat until Arafat's intentions are more clearly known.

QUAKE

"Everything is destroyed — all the homes, the schools, the hospitals and clinics, the stores," he said. Communications, electricity and water were disrupted and many injured were rushed to hospitals in Dushanbe and other large cities.

Tass said the quake caused "destruction and casualties."

"Small buildings made from earth were hit especially hard," Tass said. "The quake caused a serious landslide, some two kilometers (1¼ miles) long, from a hill near the village." It said Sharora was buried beneath 45 feet of mud and rocks.

Nasreddinov said the buildings destroyed were all one-story structures made of brick. He said Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev called Tadzhikistan officials to promise help from the national government.

In addition to the deaths in Sharora, 70 more people were estimated to have died in the villages of Akulibolo and Akulipoyen, near the epicenter, according to Nasreddinov. He said several other villages were damaged.

Garrison wants people with law enforcement experience "so that they will understand how investigations are done, what effect these things (crimes) have on families and victims and, hopefully, to have a better feel for how to deal with that."

He observed that there are several "really model programs" around the country. Garrison described Midland's Victim-Witness program as "very good" and noted that Albuquerque, N.M., "is supposed to have one of the best programs in the nation."

He hopes one or both of his Victim-Witness people will be able to visit Albuquerque to learn more about that program.

Turning to child abuse, Garrison noted that deputies Troy Davis and Roy Gladden have been mostly responsible for investigating cases that come into Sheriff Bob Brookshire's office.

"In the past," he stated, "there seemed to be at least some animosity between this office and that office. Subsequently, not much got done on child abuse. I want my people to work hand-in-hand with those people (in the sheriff's office) to develop better cases. That's essentially the main change I see in their role," said Garrison.

Another element of restructuring, he said, is creating the position of outside investigator, a job for which he hired Mike Patton away from the sheriff's office.

Garrison said that Patton, while maintaining an office in the district attorney's office, will "work exclusively with other agencies...on developing information on cases that are pending and specifically on drug cases. That's where I want him spending most of his time," the new prosecutor said.

"When I was campaigning I said I was going to try to clean up our drug problem," Garrison said. "And, while someone told me it's a little bit like trying to haul off a mountain of dirt with a toy truck, it's very important to me and I want the people in the community to understand that I am fulfilling my campaign promise" in this area.

Garrison pointed out that, during Patton's first week on the job two search warrants were issued based on information developed out of his office that resulted in arrests.

All in all, he said, "Everyone seems to be learning their jobs. There's more pressure in the district attorney's office, more pressure to perform well and everyone seems to be handling that and getting their job done," stated Garrison.

"So I'm real pleased so far and the judges (in Ector County's four district courts) seem to be pleased too."

Garrison sought, and gained, approval to hire a first assistant district attorney whose primary responsibility will be handling the office's appellate work. He expects whoever he hires to be on board by March 1.

"Basically," he said, "I want someone to devote a lot of time to the appellate work because this office has a big appellate work load. We are behind and filing for extensions now until we get someone on board."

Also, Garrison says he wants someone who can relieve in the courtroom prosecutors who are overloaded with cases. For this reason he has sought permission from commissioners to pay that person hired a slightly higher starting salary.

During his first three weeks in office Garrison drew some criticism because a 15-year-old youth involved in the killing of a convenience store clerk was allowed to plead guilty and was only sentenced to a 10 year probated sentence "with intensive supervision."

He pointed out that this occurred during his first day on the job and his involvement in the case had been limited to deciding that the county attorney's office should seek to have the youth certified as an adult.

The decision to initiate a plea bargain, he says, was made under the former administration, but he doesn't disagree with the decision he says, noting that it was apparently made because "it is tough to take a kid to court on a capital murder charge and get a jury to convict."

The plea bargain agreement, he said, was apparently predicated on the fact that the youth has agreed to testify against an 18-year-old involved in the killing of the convenience store clerk.

One of Garrison's first official acts after taking office was to dismiss indictments against three people in connection with a controversial baby pageant contest staged to raise funds for the Ronald McDonald House.

Miami neighborhood calm despite shooting

MIAMI (AP) — A police officer shot a black sniper in a neighborhood torn by riots last week, but a recurrence of the violence that left one dead and stores looted and burned seemed unlikely, authorities said today.

"It's under control. It's all quiet," Police Sgt. Robert Edwards said a few hours after late Sunday's shooting in the Liberty City section.

The wounded man, David Ford, 20, was in "stable but not critical condition" at Jackson Memorial Hospital, said hospital spokesman Mark Santo.

No charges were filed against Ford pending a police investigation, said Metro-Dade police Detective Lucy Fitts.

The man fired on two police officers who had been called to assist firefighters at a house fire, police Sgt. William Harvey said. One of the officers, Paul Chahal, 26, returned the gunfire, striking the sniper, Harvey said.

"There were a lot of civilians at the scene and there was no adverse reaction," he said. "They saw the officers were shot at first and were acting in self-defense."

The shooting came near the end of a quiet day in which the riot-weary city was host to the Super Bowl.

Police put on shows of force in the troubled black neighborhoods of Liberty City and Overtown, where the shooting of a black motorcyclist a week ago today triggered three days of rioting.

Many residents of Overtown spent Sunday washing cars, playing basketball, cruising the streets past housing projects and watching the San Francisco 49ers defeat the Cincinnati Bengals 20-16.

"There's more excitement about the game now than about what happened," said Anthony Burnes, 28, who donned a Bengals T-shirt to watch the game with friends.

"Everything seems normal now."

A panel of police officers and Overtown residents were scheduled to hold their first working meeting today to investigate the shooting of Clement Lloyd, 23, who was shot in the head by Officer William Lozano while being pursued by another officer for speeding.

Lloyd was to be buried today.

His passenger, Allen Blanchard, 24, who suffered fatal injuries when the motorcycle crashed, was buried Saturday.

The Hispanic officer is on leave with pay pending the probe by local and federal authorities.

Miami had agonized about the tarnish to the city's image from rioting during what was supposed to be a week to showcase the city to the world.

"Put parties, anxiety behind: It's game day," implored a banner headline in The Miami Herald on Sunday.

Police allowed only Super Bowl ticket-holders close to Joe Robbie Stadium north of Miami. Twenty-four people were arrested on the stadium grounds on charges ranging from theft to loitering during the Super Bowl.

"We didn't get mugged at all. We were going to stay in the hotel because of the rioting, but we were a long ways from it," Pat Murphy of Great Falls, Mont., said outside the stadium. "I didn't see anything going on...I'll come back."

Rioting by blacks left one man dead, and 11 others wounded with gunshots. Thirteen buildings were torched and others looted, and 372 people were arrested, authorities said.

About 150 of those arrested were unable to post $250 bail and would not be arraigned again until today, police said. If they plead guilty, they probably would be released for time served, said Sgt. Mike Mazur.

'Subdued' Bundy meets with psychiatrists

STARKE, Fla. (AP) — Convicted murderer Ted Bundy, facing execution in less than 24 hours, met with a psychiatrist and defense attorneys today and was in a "subdued" mood, a prison official said.

In a last-ditch attempt, Bundy's attorneys filed an appeal with the U.S. Supreme Court in Washington to stay the execution of the 42-year-old law school dropout.

Bundy's appointment with the defense psychiatrist generated speculation that the suspect in up to three dozen slayings would try to halt his execution.

Gov. Bob Martinez reaffirmed his vow "that he has no intention of delaying the execution beyond Tuesday morning," press secretary Jon Peck said Sunday night.

Bundy is scheduled for execution at Florida State Prison on Tuesday for the 1978 rape and murder of a 12-year-old Lake City girl, one of three people Bundy killed in Florida. Bundy is under his fourth death warrant.

Meanwhile, Bundy has confessed to 20 killings in four Western states, officials said.

Bundy planned to meet this afternoon with representatives of the Colorado State Attorney General's office to discuss murders in that state, said Bob MacMaster, prison spokesman. Bundy also was to meet with California TV minister James Dobson, MacMaster said.

During the past four days, Bundy has admitted killing 20 young women in Washington, Utah, Idaho and Colorado, authorities said.

Salt Lake County sheriff's Detective Dennis Couch said Sunday night that Bundy mentioned his involvement in up to eight Utah killings, at least two more than authorities had believed.

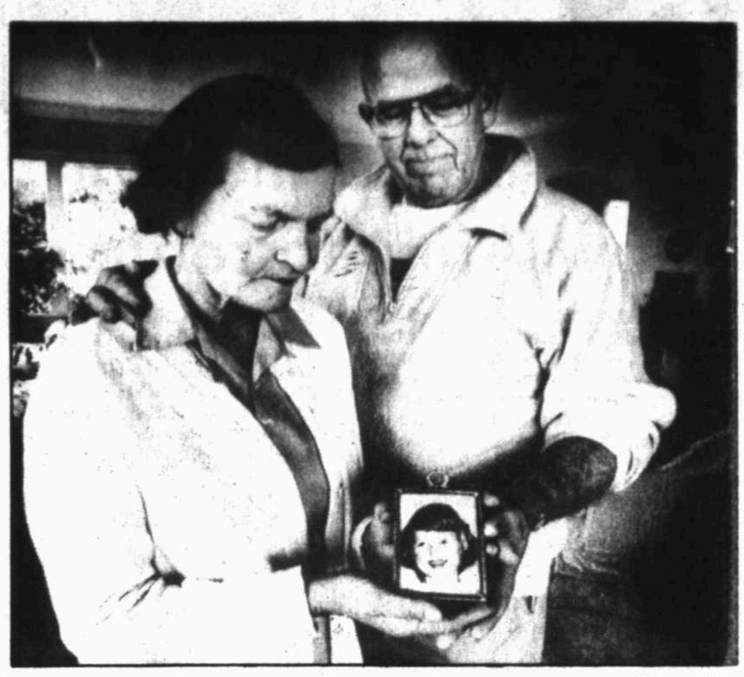

Earlier Sunday, Bundy confessed to two murders in Idaho, where officials had never linked him to any killings.

He also provided investigators Friday and Saturday with details of eight Washington killings and two in Colorado for which he has long been suspected but never charged, authorities said.

Colorado Attorney General Duane Woodard criticized Bundy's new cooperation, accusing the killer of stringing along investigators to avoid execution.

Woodard, who discussed Bundy confessions at length with Washington state Attorney General Ken Eikenberry on Saturday night, said Bundy has failed to give investigators from either state much new information.

"He picks out one woman in Colorado and one woman in Washington state just to whet the appetite of law enforcement," said Woodard, who called Bundy's 11th-hour statements a "hoax."

Relatives relieved to hear Bundy's confessions

Associated Press

Relatives of some murder victims said they were mostly relieved to hear about Ted Bundy's confessions, but at least one remained incredulous that he will go to the electric chair and one wanted to watch him die.

Meantime, Bundy's mother said she was "going through hell."

Thomas Leach, whose 12-year-old daughter, Kimberly, was Bundy's last victim, doubted the execution would proceed, saying, "They ain't going to do nothing."

But Kimberly's uncle Frank Fender wants to witness Bundy's execution for killing his niece, who disappeared from Lake City Junior High on Feb. 9, 1978.

"I want to look in his eyes and see him before they put the hood on," Fender said, referring to the dark hood placed over an inmate's head just before electrocution. State policy bars victims' relatives from attending executions, but a state official promised to review the request today.

Eleanore Rose of Burien, Wash., said she "felt a hatred even stronger than I had ever felt before" when she learned the 42-year-old law school dropout had confessed to killing her 19-year-old daughter, Denise Naslund.

"I can hardly wait for Tuesday to come," she said, referring to Bundy's scheduled execution in Florida. "It's like he completely governed my life, my existence. Just waiting, waiting."

Dale and Vivian Rancourt of LaConner, Wash., parents of victim Susan Rancourt, 18, said Bundy's confession in her slaying and his execution would end their 15-year-old ordeal.

"It's like a big puzzle that's been going on for ... years for us," said Rancourt. "There (were) two pieces left. One was the absolute, absolute, (confirmation) from the words of the perpetrator. The other will be his execution, and then the puzzle is complete."

"When this is over, I think we can finally start the end of the healing process," Mrs. Rancourt added. "It's been an open wound for 15 years, and every time we think it's settling down, something happens."

Bundy was sentenced to death nine years ago in Florida, but the execution repeatedly was delayed by his appeals.

Bundy's mother, Louise, who lives in Tacoma with his stepfather, John Bundy, said the confessions were unexpected "because we have staunchly believed — and I guess we still do until we hear what he really said — that he was not guilty of any of those crimes."

"But if this is true, if Ted did do these things, and if indeed he is substantiating it with facts that he really did those things ... it's the most devastating news of our lives.

"We're going through hell. ... We're suffering a lot. We didn't want him to do this.

"I agonize for the parents of those girls," she said.

Bakker's attorney once defended Krupp at Nuremberg

CHARLOTTE, N.C. (AP) — PTL founder Jim Bakker has selected as his attorney a flamboyant octogenarian whose legal career spans six decades and whose clients have included Alfried Krupp at the Nuremberg trials.

George T. Davis may not be a household name like Melvin Belli or F. Lee Bailey, but he has defended some notable clients, including Krupp, heir to the German munitions empire who was convicted in 1948 of war crimes and sentenced to 12 years. He was released after three years.

Among the others: Caryl Chessman, who was executed for kidnapping two women and sexually assaulting them in 1948, and labor agitator Tom Mooney, who was sentenced to death for his participation in the 1916 bomb killings of 10 people in California. Mooney was given an unconditional pardon in 1939.

Throughout Davis' long career, his courtroom style often has been colorful.

"I always try my cases a little differently," Davis said. "Let's just leave it at that."

His background includes paying his way through the University of California at Berkley's law school in the 1920s by playing drums in a jazz band. He has studied hypnosis, portrayed himself in a documentary, and is writing a book about the death penalty.

At 81, Davis remains active, as evidenced by his workout before an 8 a.m. interview last week. He still finds time to work on his horse ranch in Hawaii, where he lives with his fourth wife, Ginger. Davis walks his dog for an hour every morning and he occasionally surfs.

Explaining that he didn't want to jeopardize chances of getting a gag order he sought last week, Davis agreed to discuss the PTL case only in general terms.

Bakker, 48, and his former top deputy, Richard Dortch, 57, were accused in a Dec. 5 indictment of diverting more than $4 million in PTL funds for their personal use. Two other former aides, brothers David and James Taggart, were accused in a separate indictment.

Anti-Semitic slur airs during game

Hearst News Service

LOS ANGELES — Some Super Bowl viewers here watching yesterday's game on cable had the audio portion of the show disrupted by a mystery voice uttering an anti-Semitic slur and the playing of the theme song from "The Jetsons" cartoon show.

The interruption occurred during a television commerical for FTD florists after "a lot of snow (static)," said Jack Siegal, general manager of KSRF-FM radio.

"Hi, this is Bill Rosenthal for Century Cable," was how Doug Crichton, a consultant for McDonnell Douglas Corp., said the intrusion began. "Have you noticed how many Jews there are in the entertainment business?"

Siegal said the offensive sentence began, "There are too many..." and contained an obscenity. "It didn't sound like a trained voice," he said.

Ex-Klansman likely to get third of vote, hopeful says

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — A mainstream Republican says he believes former Klansman David Duke will receive at least one-third of the vote in a runoff election next month for state representative — as he did in Saturday's primary.

If that happens, "I think it would be damaging to Louisiana's political image," said John Treen, who received 19 percent of the primary vote.

Treen, who got 2,277 votes, faces Duke in a Feb. 18 election to represent the 99 percent white area of Jefferson Parish.

"I think if he (Duke) loses the election it will reaffirm some people's belief that Louisiana is making progress," said Treen, whose brother, David, was Louisiana's first Republican governor since Reconstruction.

But, Treen said, "I think if he were to win the election it would be news and it would be damaging to our political reputation and to our image and that it would probably impair investment in this area."

Duke, 38, who founded the National Association for the Advancement of White People after leaving the Klan in disgrace in 1980, said he's not a racist and he thinks it's unfair that his past as an imperial wizard in the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan continually gets mentioned.

Steinberg's fate with jury

NEW YORK (AP) — The jurors who begin deliberating Joel Steinberg's fate today can convict him of second-degree murder even if they believe his lawyers' assertions that he never hit the child he is accused of beating to death.

Before the jury gets the case, state Supreme Court Justice Harold Rothwax is expected to tell them that Steinberg had a parental duty to ensure the health and safety of 6-year-old Lisa Steinberg, the girl he obtained illegally at birth from a teenager and raised as his own.

The judge also is expected to instruct jurors that if they find Steinberg showed "depraved indifference" to the chubby-cheeked first-grader's life, they may convict the Greenwich Village attorney of second-degree murder — even if he never hit the child.

'Olympic' streak halted

WEST LAFAYETTE, Ind. (AP) — Campus police arrested four people who ran nude around a Purdue University quadrangle in the annual "Nude Olympics."

Two spectators in the estimated crowd of 1,000 at Cary Quadrangle also were arrested on suspicion of public intoxication and resisting law enforcement, police said.

The names of the four streakers, who were released after being arrested early Sunday on suspicion of public indecency, were not released, but Sgt. George Bittles said if any were students they would face disciplinary action from the university.

Indians launch campaign against grave robbing

OLNEY, Ill. (AP) — American Indians fed up with desecration of ancestral graves are launching a national campaign against what one organizer called "a mega-, megabucks" international trade in Indian bones and artifacts.

More than 25 Indian nations were represented Sunday at religious ceremonies followed by a meeting organized by the fledgling Society Against Grave Exploitations, or SAGE, said Terry Warren, the group's executive director.

"We are not going to stand for this any more," said 38-year-old Warren, an Osage-Cherokee mixed-blood Indian who owns a video store and participated in Sunday's activities.

He said 75 native American Indians, in a meeting with 200 non-Indians, decided to push for stronger federal laws against grave robbing, which could be despoiling as many as 175,000 ancestral burial sites a year.

"We are putting aside our social and custom differences and going to attack this thing as a body of united peoples," he said.

Dozens came in traditional dress to participate in ceremonies at graves that had been looted. Some wore warrior shawls, others carried drums or tobacco to the ceremonies, held over 40 holes that once were graves.

Warren said a Ricaree sun dancer came from St. Louis and a Choctaw drove all the way from Louisiana. Also present were Sioux from the Dakotas, Cherokees from Tennessee, a Seneca from New York and Comanches from Oklahoma.

Warren said robbers and the collectors they supply have created a sophisticated national computer network.

Saudi authorities will allow Amin to return

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — Former Ugandan dictator Idi Amin, who angered Saudi authorities by slipping out of the country, will be allowed to return and resume his life in exile, an authoritative Saudi source said Sunday.

The source, who spoke on condition of anonymity, said King Fahd was acting in response to requests by unidentified African leaders. He refused to say whether Amin had returned or whether a date had been fixed for that.

The African leaders reportedly included King Hassan II of Morocco, who has close ties with the Saudi monarch, and President Mobuto Sese Seku of Zaire.

Amin, 61, was ousted from his east African nation in 1979 and was granted political asylum in Saudi Arabia in 1980.

He slipped out of the desert kingdom on a forged passport and surfaced in Kinshasa, the Zairean capital, with one of his sons on Jan. 13.

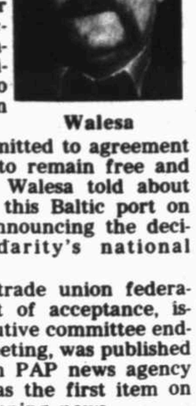

Uganda immediately demanded Amin's extradition to stand trial for the death of tens of thousands of his political opponents during the eight years of his tyrannical rule.

Following his arrival in Kinshasa, Zaire deported him to Senegal so that he could catch a flight back to Saudi Arabia.

But the Senegal authorities sent Amin back to Kinshasa after the Saudi authorities refused to take him back because of his abuse of their hospitality.

An Arab diplomat said the former dictator has long been unpopular with his Saudi hosts for meddling in African politics and for his links with personalities opposed to the Ugandan government.

Solidarity, party leaders to meet

Walesa

GDANSK, Poland (AP) — Solidarity chairman Lech Walesa urged caution and restraint following the independent labor movement's acceptance of Communist authorities' offer to discuss its return to legal status.

"We are committed to agreement ...But we have to remain free and self-governing," Walesa told about 5,000 people in this Baltic port on Sunday after announcing the decision by Solidarity's national leadership.

The banned trade union federation's statement of acceptance, issued as its executive committee ended a two-day meeting, was published by the state-run PAP news agency and broadcast as the first item on the national evening news.

It clears the way for the first formal talks between Solidarity and the authorities since Poland's leader, Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, ended the union movement's 16-month legal existence with a December 1981 military crackdown, interning thousands of union activists.

No date has been mentioned for the talks, but both sides have indicated they could begin within a few weeks.

Last week, the country's Communist leaders offered the prospect of lifting the seven-year ban on Solidarity on the condition the movement forfeit Western financial aid, embrace socialism and agree to a two-year moratorium on strikes.

The government that had for so long struggled to diminish Solidarity's influence was now offering a partnership of sorts for tackling Poland's chronic economic and social ills.

Though heartened by the offer, wary Solidarity activists said they suspected the government was seeking accord only to calm unrest caused by rising inflation and consumer shortages. Poland's foreign debt is $39 billion.

"I wish that there be no euphoria," Walesa cautioned the thousands of supporters after a Mass at St. Brygida's Roman Catholic church. "Anything is still possible."

"Is it true we will be solving Polish problems in a pluralistic free way? We will see very soon," he said.

Janusz Onyszkiewicz, Solidarity's national spokesman, said cooperation between the union movement and government now seems "the only solution" to Poland's crisis.

He rejected a strike ban, but added: "We want to discuss economic reform...If it works then there will be no need to have a general strike."

Walesa has said he will not sign any agreement at the cost of Solidarity's independence.

After Sunday's Mass, about 1,000 people marched from the church chanting, "Solidarity! Solidarity! Legalize Solidarity!"

Police blocked the march after a few blocks and the group disbanded peacefully.

Solidarity's statement Sunday said that by agreeing to negotiate its reinstatement, the government had met its conditions for beginning the talks authorities first proposed during a series of strikes in August.

"We are responding, stretching out our hand because the other side stretched out its hand too," said Walesa.

Prime Minister Mieczyslaw Rakowski on Sunday said he "could imagine" Solidarity one day becoming an opposition party but said the organization would have to renounce its status as a trade union to do so.

"The question is, what does Solidarity want to become," Rakowski said in an interview with the West German ZDF television network. "Does it want to become an opposition political party or a trade union. I would like to know."

He did not specify what scope or rights such an opposition party could have.

The statement from Solidarity's 20-member executive commission, adopted unanimously with one abstention, said it was "necessary to start negotiations as soon as possible."

Walesa told reporters that Solidarity, the only independent labor movement ever permitted in the Soviet bloc, could be ready within two months to hold its second nationwide congress. The first was held in October 1981.

He also indicated the union movement might resume its Weekly Solidarity newspaper because "without a press, we would be nothing."

Solidarity announced that a committee of three veteran union activists from the 1980 movement had been formed to "prepare negotiations with the authorities." They are Zbigniew Bujak, Wladyslaw Frasyniuk and Mieczyslaw Gil.

Gil, an organizer at the Nowa Huta steelworks outside the southern city of Krakow, said he forsaw "great difficulties" and warned that the talks have been viewed as a "panacea."

"Changing the model of the functioning of the Polish economy" is a major problem ahead, Gil said, but "what's most important is that pluralism was unblocked."

Sakharov advocates changing election law

MOSCOW (AP) — The confusing new Soviet election system could pit human rights activist Andrei D. Sakharov in a campaign battle against a member of the ruling Politburo and another Communist who ran afoul of party leaders.

"I believe a more democratic mechanism of nominating candidates is needed," said Sakharov, who was selected both as a Moscow district and at-large candidate for a the new 2,250-member Congress of People's Deputies.

More than 900 people jammed into a meeting Sunday that unanimously nominated the Nobel Peace Prize-winning physicist for the at-large post in the March 26 elections, an activist said. At least 500 people waited outside the hastily organized session at the House of Filmmakers.

Yuri Mityunov, a participant, said a city Election Commission member told the meeting that Politburo member Vitaly I. Vorontnikov and Moscow's deposed Communist Party leader, Boris Yeltsin, were running for the same at-large seat.

The still-popular Yeltsin sacked as Moscow party boss in 1987 for his outspoken criticism of conservatives he blamed for the slow pace of reforms.

The possible campaign battle among Sakharov, Vorontnikov and Yeltskin and the scramble among thousands of candidates nationwide depends on twists and turns in the new political system charted by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The new congress, announced in December by Gorbachev, will meet annually and choose the Soviet president and members of a new, smaller and more active sitting parliament, or Supreme Soviet.

One third of the deputies are to be chosen from candidates nominated not on traditional basis of geographic districts but from the party, unions, professional organizations and other officially recognized groups.

Candidates may not espouse views contrary to the constitution, which enshrines the Communist Party as the leading force in Soviet society.

Rank-and-file party members nominated 31,500 candidates for 100 seats. But on Jan. 10 the policy-making Central Committee recommended 100 of them and the Politburo put them on the ballot.

Sakharov, 67, was rejected as a candidate by the prestigious Academy of Sciences last week, causing an angry protest by his co-workers at the Lebedev Institute of Physics. They then nominated him as a candidate from Moscow's Oktyabr district.

With his selection as an at-large candidate, Sakharov must now make up his mind which seat he will seek.

His nomination goes to an official electoral commission that will select the candidates to actually be placed before voters. It could put forward all of those nominated, but it also could reduce the number to just one.

No date has been set for the commission's crucial meeting and the winnowing process has led to confusion and complaints of manipulation.

Argentinian civilians reportedly take over base

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Armed civilians apparently took over a small military base near the capital today after a gun battle with soldiers that left some people injured, the state-run news agency Telam reported.

The Ministry of Defense, anticipating a possible fourth insurrection against the government in the past 21 months, bolstered defenses at Government House and the official residence of President Raul Alfonsin and prepared to airlift reinforcements to the scene, according to the report.

"A report arrived that indicates the people (civilians) have taken over the regiment and are taking up positions with heavy arms," a town official in La Matanza, which encompasses the 3rd infantry regiment at La Tablada, was quoted as telling Telam.

La Tablada is 12 miles northwest of the capital Buenos Aires.

The agency reported earlier that a small group of armed civilians had broken into the base and begun exchanging gunfire with police and troops.

The incident comes less than two months after a short-lived barracks insurrection to protest Alfonsin's treatment of the military.

The motive of today's attack was unclear and it was not known whether the incident was connected to the earlier insurrection.

Defense Ministry officials made no statement on the attack, and the precise number of the civilians or soldiers involved was not known.

The attack began at about 3 a.m., when civilians threw several small explosive devices onto the base compound, the independent news agency DyN reported.

Employees at a nearby gas station said that at about 6:15 a.m., civilians in a truck crashed through the regiment's main gate, DyN said. Six cars followed.

Two hours later, shots still were being heard inside the base, which had been surrounded by Buenos Aires Province police.

The December insurrection began after officers at several army bases, including La Tablada, tried to incite troops. Their leader, Col. Mohamed Ali Seineldin, surrendered four days later.

The only clashes reported during the insurrection were between troops and civilians, many of whom harbor animosity for the military.

On Friday, President Alfonsin told a news conference that factions within the army still are angry over issues such as the prosecution of officers for human rights abuses committed during the 1976-83 military dictatorship, which he was elected in 1983 to replace.

"I affirm categorically that those factions are not going to have the possibilities to triumph," Alfonsin said. "But I should say with absolute seriousness that I am not in the position of assuring with the same force and certainty that there will not be other episodes."

Group of U.S. veterans will be building health clinic in Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — A dozen U.S. war veterans are returning to Vietnam to build a rural health clinic "to help the Vietnamese and also help ourselves," members of the group said today.

Ground-breaking for the project — believed to be the first reconstruction effort by U.S. veterans in Vietnam — is scheduled Jan. 31. The group, which includes carpenters, electricians and architects, is to spend 10 weeks building an eight-room clinic in the southern seacoast town of Vung Tau.

"It seemed like a way to heal the insanity of the war itself," said Ruben Robert Gomez of Santa Cruz, Calif. "We'd like to see American hands-on restoration in Vietnam and put it behind us."

Members of the Veterans-Vietnam Restoration Project, a small California veterans group, say the clinic will meet an urgent need for better medical care in rural Vietnam; help foster U.S.-Vietnamese ties; and perhaps serve to alleviate individual psychological and moral problems from the war.

A psychiatrist who specializes in helping Vietnam war veterans will accompany the group to evaluate effects of the effort on participants.

Gomez said the project cost of $60,000 to $100,000 and the supply of medicine and equipment is being met by a number of private organizations including Operation California, the Christopher Reynolds Foundation and the U.S. Committee for Scientific Cooperation with Vietnam.

"Everywhere I go people say: 'Hey, great, good luck to you,'" Gomez said in an interview, adding that more than 80 veterans had applied to join the group.

Vietnam's foreign minister, Nguyen Co Thach, in October personally wrote the group, giving them permission to build the clinic.

Gordon Smith, 38, of Monterey, Calif., said Vietnamese officials have expressed interest in the veterans carrying out other small-scale reconstruction projects, including the rebuilding of a fire-damaged orphanage in Ho Chi Minh City, formerly called Saigon, and another health clinic in northern Vietnam.

Smith said American veterans groups are limited in the kind of aid they can provide because of the U.S. trade embargo on Vietnam. The U.S. government can make exceptions on humanitarian grounds and has allowed the group to spend up to $32,000 in Vietnam itself.

"A lot of us are returning to finish unfinished business," Smith said. "We were dealing with destruction, now we want to do something constructive. American veterans have gone back to Vietnam as tourists or to talk about problems like the missing in action. But we're going to work, we'll be covered with sweat."

Cajun cooking spicing up rest of nation

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

ST. MARTINVILLE, La. (AP) — Hunched over his accordion in the shade of a live oak tree, Lennis Romero was letting his ethnic pride show.

"Cher, it don't surprise me one tam bit that Cajun food is a big, yeah, in London, Holland and Russia," he says. "The rest of the world just been a 'ti slow in catching up with the good things in life."

Lennis and his brother, Ophe, a virtuoso on the 'ti fer, or triangle, had just stomped out "Jambalaya" for some "foreign French" tourists who arrived on the banks of Bayou Teche in a bus marked "un voyage au vrai pays des Acadiens," a trip to the real Cajun country.

Me oh, my oh, Cajun culture has busted out of the bayou and gone global. Suddenly last summer, crawfish etouffee and file gumbo were on the menu at the summit in Moscow. Amsterdam's hottest new restaurant is Riekje Sluizer's Cajun Louisiana Kitchen, "geopend voor lunch." London has two Cajun-style restaurants and liberal doses of sauce piquant are spicing up traditionally bland British cuisine at such posh nosheries as Wilton's and the Savoy Grill.

Now busloads of European tourists, led by the French, are venturing deep into the bayous where before World War II paved roads seldom penetrated.

As Ophe conceded, there was a 'ti language problem at first. The Romero brothers speak quaint French that like the meandering bayou has been bent out of shape in the last two centuries. But once the visitors from Paris and Lyons figured out that 'ti was Cajun for petit and that an alligator was neither un caiman nor un crocodile, they were able to communicate their desire to sample "soupe de cocodrie."

In St. Martinville, the spiritual capital of Cajun-land, the tour group posed for photos around the statue of "Evangeline," the heroine of Longfellow's epic about the British expulsion of French settlers from Acadia, or Nova Scotia, in 1755. Then in the old Indian cemetery, they saw the grave of Emmeline Labiche, whose real-life separation from her lover inspired the poem.

Like Americans cramming into the Crazy Horse Saloon in Paris, the French contingent braved the overflow crowd at Mulate's, the Cajun nightclub in Breaux Bridge, for a fais do-do, literally "make go to sleep," the Saturday night dance named for the tiny room where small children dozed while their parents two-stepped until dawn.

Cajun music, like Cajun cooking, is echoing around the world. Bayou artists such as fiddler Michael Doucet and pianist Zachary Richard have rabid fans in Paris, Montreal, Quebec, Martinique, San Francisco and New York's Greenwich Village. Don Montoucet's Cajun combo had the comrades jumping when Chef John Folse from Lafitte's Landing in Donaldsonville set up a Cajun restaurant at the Moscow World Trade Center at the summit in June.

If Paul Prudhomme had shown up that night at Mulate's, he would have been mobbed like a young Charles Boyer for autographs by both the locals and the French pilgrims on the trail of what their culture has brought forth on this continent.

Prudhomme, the first American chef to be awarded the Merite Agricole by the French government, is proprietor of K-Paul's Louisiana Kitchen in New Orleans, a culinary superstar on TV, radio and videotapes, and the author of cookbooks that have sold more than 600,000 in hardback.

He is also the author of such insights into Cajun culture as:

"An authentic Cajun is one who anticipates the start of the crawfish season as much as his wedding night."

"Good Cajun cooking doesn't taste country; it tastes grandma."

"If you don't hover between pleasure and pain when you eat it, chances are you haven't made your sauce piquant hot enough."

Prudhomme popularized the "blackening" method of sealing in the flavor of meat and fish with intense heat, as if cooked over an open fire. Its ubiquitous popularity has produced such menu aberrations as blackened meatloaf and blackened omeletes and has made the lowly redfish, once snubbed in haute cuisine, an endangered species in Texas and Louisiana. Some months ago, undercover agents from the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department mounted a sting operation to foil a ring of commercial fishermen and food wholesalers dealing in illegally caught redfish.

"Dining out these days you don't know if that blackened menu special is the chef's favorite or his latest failure," laughs Joe Cahn, who presides over the New Orleans School of Cooking which daily instructs nearly 100 students and was the finishing school for Andre Numan, Amsterdam's Cajun chef.

Cajun cooking has been around since the earliest exiles from Nova Scotia found love at first bite of alligator tail meat, but its delights took a while catching on beyond the swamps of the Atchafalaya.

When Fannie Merritt Farmer collected America's best recipes for her Boston Cooking School cookbook in 1896, the word Cajun didn't make the index.

Even today, Antoine's in New Orleans, founded in 1840, doesn't mention the word Cajun in its extensive menu, although "Creole" has a half-dozen listings from "gombo (sic) creole" to "poulet a la creole." Bernard Guste, the great-great-grandson of founder Antoine Alciatore, admits however to being "a bit more heavy-handed with the pepper pot to please tourists who expect Louisiana cooking to be hot, real hot, which was never the creole style."

Prudhomme points out that "as Louisiana food has grown in popularity throughout the country, the distinction between Cajun and Creole has almost vanished."

In history, the distinction is clearer. Creoles are descended from aristocratic families who fled the terrors of the French revolutions, sometimes with their chefs, dressmakers and dancing masters. They intermarried with Louisiana's Spanish settlers, whose cooking pots bubbled with spices and condiments from the Aztecs, Incas and the Caribbean. Black cooks on the plantations added another dimension, like okra and gumbo, both African words. Creole culture was cavalier, gallant, refined; its cuisine elegant, subtle, rich in sauces.

Cajuns, a corruption of "archadia," the name given to Canada's maritime provinces by the explorer Verrazano on first sighting their virgin forests, were victims of one of this continent's worst human rights atrocities.

Originally from Normandy, Brittany and Picardy, they were deported from Nova Scotia, which France lost to England in the War of Spanish Succession. The year of Le Grand Derangement was 1755, and D-day was Sept. 5, when entire villages were summoned to their churches to hear King George II's proclamation confiscating their land, homes and cattle and exiling them along the Atlantic seaboard. Soldiers hurried them down to the waiting boats, sometimes separating husbands from wives, parents from children and parting lovers as in the tale Hawthorne told to Longfellow.

Their tragedy fell just short of genocide. The British commander, Lord Jeffrey Amherst, who got a liberal arts college named for him, was all for it. In a letter to a Col. Bouquet, he urged: "You will do well to try to spread smallpox by means of blankets and by every other means which might help exterminate that abominable race."

Mostly trappers, fishermen and farmers, the exiles settled into Louisiana's swamplands where their hardy, food-loving descendants seldom ventured beyond the range of their pirogues and pickup trucks until 1947 when the first oil rigs loomed over the marshes. Their cuisine, culled from the woods, bayous, tiny gardens and barnyard animals too old to produce, called for slow cooking and high octane sauces to tenderize briskets of squirrel, wild rabbit, alligator and senile sows.

Even down to this generation, as both Prudhomme and Cahn recall, Cajuns seldom went to the store, even more rarely to a restaurant.

"We grew virtually everything we ate," says Prudhomme, who grew up the youngest of 13 children on a farm near Opelousas. "If a chicken didn't lay or a rooster couldn't fertilize eggs or a mother pig was too old to have babies, we killed them for food for the family."

Cahn points out that "sauce piquant was a necessary camouflage when gourmandizing on 'possum, muskrat and nutria."

Gap between two cultures bridged

OPELOUSAS, La. (AP) — Rachel Thompson had never tasted shrimp in her native Louisiana, which is famous for its seafood, and Ronnie Emonet had never heard the wind moan through the piney hills of his own state.

Both are 16 and represent the best hope for dismantling a wall of mistrust built generations ago by two clashing cultures, says Carole Andrepont of Opelousas, who turned a joke into a serious experiment that worked.

Andrepont, a member of the Louisiana Tourism Board who has been active in international youth exchange programs for years, jokingly told a friend one day, "If you want to have a real cultural exchange, have folks from north Louisiana come to south Louisiana. It's like two different countries."

An almost visible line across the center of Louisiana separates the staid upstate Protestants from the Catholic Cajuns, who make time for work around a busy schedule of consuming the full cup of life.

The descendants of the exiles from Nova Scotia make up a third of the state's population and those of different ancestry living in south Louisiana have absorbed the laid-back lifestyle of the Cajuns.

Former Gov. Edwin Edwards, the first French-speaking Catholic elected to the state's highest office this century, says the division is more a perception than anything else, but "a perception can be real."

"The barrier exists in the minds of those who have not had the opportunity to visit one end of the state or the other," he says. "But, invariably when they do, they come away with an amazement of how much in common they have."

"The barrier is exaggerated but it's there," adds Gov. Buddy Roemer, whose family plantation is not far from the Arkansas border in north Louisiana.

"A real factor has been a lack of quality transportation. It's hard to get from upstate Shreveport to New Orleans. In fact, it's easier to get from Shreveport to Dallas."

Edwards and Roemer agree that an exchange program aimed at youths can eventually erase the perception.

The idea for the exchange program gnawed at Andrepont and finally she talked with Linda Graham, her Ruston counterpart at a tourism meeting in Baton Rouge.

"I told her I had an idea about two cities having an exchange program and the more we looked at it, the more we liked it," she says. "We talked to our mayors, school officials and civic leaders. Now, we've done it."

In a recently ended two-week program, about 20 Ruston high school students spent a week in Opelousas and an equal number of the south Louisiana students stayed in Ruston.

Host families provided homes and meals, treating their guests like their own kids, Andrepont says.

The mayors and civic leaders visited each other's municipalities and, like the kids, discovered that even with the cultural differences, people are just folks and get different views of what they see, depending on personalities.

"The people are more free, more open down here," says Rachel, who attends Ruston High School. "Up north, we're very polite, but down here...

"I called my mom and said I was staying here another two weeks. She just laughed."

"I like Ruston better than here," says Telameckus Anderson, a 16-year-old junior at Opelousas High School. "They're so nice. The hills are beautiful."

"The family I stayed with made me feel like we were related," says Emonet, a junior at Opelousas Catholic.

Asked if they laughed at his Cajun accent, Emonet said, "The girls thought it was cute. I laughed at their drawls. We laughed with each other."

Graham says she learned something important from her visit to south Louisiana:

"I need to go home and loosen up a bit. We're more conservative in Ruston and we are organized. I find myself regimented to the point where I get a little bit irritated when everything doesn't go just like clockwork.

New rights pact can be ignored

The so-called Helsinki accords, approved jointly by the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. in 1975, have always been full of promise, but only rarely has that promise been realized even in part. Largely, the Soviets ignored the agreement, which pledged that they would permit the free movement of their citizens, freedom of religious expression and other civilities that most in the West take for granted.

But recently, 35 nations, in the most ambitious accord in the 13-year history of the Conference on Security and Co-operation (known as the Helsinki process), pledged to strengthen human rights safeguards. Most important, delegates of the 16 members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, seven Warsaw Pact states and 12 neutral or non-aligned countries approved of the creation of a formal conference mechanism by which countries may complain to others about human rights abuses.

Under the mechanism, all signatory governments would be obligated to reply if another government requests information about suspected human rights abuses. Governments would also be empowered to demand bilateral meetings to discuss suspected abuse cases and to notify the 34 other conference states about such cases. The British chief delegate to the Vienna, Austria, meeting, summed up the importance of the agreement by saying, "In essence, it is an embryo of a human rights court for all Europe. It's a new and different means of keeping up the pressure."

The final document also adds new obligations to respect religious freedoms and the rights of minorities, prisoners and travelers.

This landmark accord is no doubt one more consequence of Soviet President Gorbachev's campaign to improve relations with the West. The same document establishing the embryo human rights court also calls for better conditions for East-West joint business ventures and barter deals. But clearly, the agreement will make it more difficult for the Soviets and their satellites to flagrantly abuse fundamental human rights. The truth of that is seen in Romania's partial dissent. It, the only country to do so, said that it would not feel bound to implement "those provisions to which Romania does not agree or which it considers inadequate."

Still, this simple accord hardly means the campaign for human rights in the communist countries has been won. It has been common practice all along for the Soviet Union, whenever the U.S. had accused it of some human rights abuse, to respond in kind, usually pointing to some incarcerated, politically active American Indian as an example of human rights abuses in the U.S. It proved a convenient trick to divert attention from its own horrendous human rights record. There is no guarantee that the same device will not be used to undermine the human rights conference mechanism just approved in Vienna.

Stricter regulations urged for gifts

WASHINGTON — The House of Representatives can expect trouble from within the ranks if it tries to reform the House rules to stem the flow of gifts to members of Congress.

Jack Anderson

The conviction of former Rep. Mario Biaggi, D-N.Y., for accepting illegal gratuities has piqued the moral outrage of Congress — at least the public moral outrage. Some members are loudly calling for stricter rules. But, privately, 48 of them went to bat for Biaggi asking the judge to go easy on him. The letters indicate how difficult it will be to get the monkey's hand out of the cookie jar.

If Biaggi did nothing else, he reminded members of Congress of something they can easily forget — that it is illegal for them to take anything of value because they performed an official act for the giver.

Now it's time Congress rewrote its official rules to conform to what is already federal law. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Texas, and Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., promised to assign an ethics reform task force to the job. That task force should begin with a trip to the file room of the federal court for the Eastern District of New York.

There, among three boxes of testimony and correspondence relating to the Biaggi case, the task force will find a raft of letters from members of Congress standing behind their compatriot. At the time the letters were written, Biaggi had already been convicted of accepting illegal gratuities. He accepted a Florida vacation for himself and a companion from a Democratic party boss after after he helped an ailing local shipyard in Brooklyn. The party boss owned an insurance brokerage firm and the shipyard was his client. (Biaggi was later convicted on a separate racketeering charge involving Wedtech Corp.)

Forty-eight lawmakers, including Wright and Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., and even former House Speaker Tip O'Neill, D-Mass., asked the judge to go light on Biaggi in the gratuities case because of his record of public service.

But two of those letters went beyond simply vouching for Biaggi as a nice guy who deserved a break. Reps. Mervyn Dymally, D-Calif., and Robin Tallon, D-S.C., argued that the gifts may have been proper.

Tallon's comments so concerned Judge Jack Weinstein that he read parts of the letter in court, although he didn't name the author. Here is Tallon's argument:

"When it comes to entertaining, suffice it to say that no one entertains his enemies and that socializing with a congressman is aimed, in part, at advancing the interest of the lobbyist's client. ... It seems that, under the standard applied in the Biaggi case, even legal campaign contributions could become the basis of a gratuity prosecution if the contributor were motivated by a desire to show his gratitude for past congressional action. I can assure you that most members of Congress are not aware of the broad scope of this law, and many who have taken free trips and the like are wondering what the implications of those activities are. ..."

If that is true, then it's high time members of Congress "wondered."

Dymally seemed more concerned that Biaggi's conviction might put a dent in the loot. "I fear that anything more than a suspended sentence in this case would ... cast doubt upon the entire range of legitimate political practices associated with gifts and contributions to elected officials, thereby creating a chilling effect on both donors and recipients alike."

A chilling effect? Bring on the ice.

Weinstein put it best before he sentenced Biaggi to two years and six months and a $500,000 fine. The judge said, "While accepting supplementation of income may not reveal as much corruption as outright bribery, it is corrupt. This action tends to cause a deterioration of the political system." Biaggi is free pending an appeal of his case.

KEEPING THE SEAT WARM — When George Bush picked William Reilly as the head of the Environmental Protection Agency, environmentalists saw it as a sign that Bush would make good on his promise to protect the environment. Reilly has earned bipartisan respect as president of the World Wildlife Fund. But insiders say he is simply warming the chair for Thomas Kean, the governor of New Jersey. Kean's term expires in 1990. At that time, our sources say, Bush will move Reilly out and Kean in. Kean campaigned hard for Bush and the new president repays such favors with jobs.

MINI-EDITORIAL — Here's one more reason to like Barbara Bush. Earlier this month when Nancy Reagan gave her a tour of the White House, Mrs. Bush pronounced it perfect and said she wouldn't change a thing. That's music to our ears. First ladies have made a habit of redecorating the White House at obscene expense. The money comes from private donors, but that doesn't make the redecorating any less onerous, especially when legitimate human service agencies are scrambling for money to keep people in shelters that look like the White House dumpster. We hope Mrs. Bush was not simply being polite to the outgoing first lady.

TODAY IN HISTORY

Today is Monday, Jan. 23, the 23rd day of 1989. There are 342 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

Two hundred years ago, on Jan. 23, 1789, Georgetown University was established at the future site of the nation's capital, Washington D.C.

On this date:

In 1845, Congress decided all national elections would be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November.

In 1849, Elizabeth Blackwell became the first woman to receive an M.D. degree. (The native of Bristol, England, was awarded her degree by the Medical Institution of Geneva, New York.)

In 1920, the Dutch government refused demands from the victorious Allies to hand over the ex-kaiser of Germany.

In 1932, New York Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt announced his candidacy for the Democratic presidential nomination.

PEGGY ROBERSON

Texans get ready to fight gas tax hike

WASHINGTON — Texas will fight a new federal gasoline tax this year and it won't be alone.

Texas Highway Commissioners recently denounced the tax-hike idea and urged the state's congressional delegation to oppose it, saying it would create "a potentially destructive situation" that could derail Texans' efforts to "recover from the effects of a depressed economy."

Roberson

It was not really necessary, of course, to press the state's congressional delegation into battle. House Speaker Jim Wright, D-Fort Worth, recently confronted House Ways and Means Committee Chairman Dan Rostenkowski, D-Ill., who proposed a 15-cent-a-gallon hike, and told him, "It is a bad idea."

Rostenkowski had suggested the gas tax hike as a way to help cut the federal budget deficit this year.

A 15-cent-a-gallon federal tax (added to the present 9.1 cents on gasoline and 15 cents on diesel fuel) could knock about $15 billion off the deficit.

President George Bush made "no new taxes" a major pledge during last year's election campaign, but Rostenkowski reported that Bush has described the gas-tax idea as "interesting."

Rep. J.J. Pickle, D-Austin, third-ranking Democrat on the Ways and Means Committee, where revenue measures originate, told an Austin audience last week that the only way he would consider an increase in the gasoline tax would be to make it very small and to tie it to an oil import fee in order to "spread the burden." An import fee also would raise the cost of home heating oil, manufacturing and electric power.

Representatives from the South and West contend that a higher gas tax would place an unfair burden on their states. Motorists there drive more than those in northeastern and midwestern states, which also have more public transportation than the Southwest does.

Figures for 1986 show Wyoming and Florida leading the nation with per-capita gasoline consumption of 949 gallons and 895 gallons, respectively. Texas is seventh, with 814 gallons per driver. And gasoline taxes clearly hit poor drivers the hardest.

Officials of state governments also are bitterly opposed to using what they perceive as "their" tax to pay off the federal government's debts, and they are joining forces with motorists' groups and highway builders to fight the proposal.

Al Zuck, a spokesman for the Texas Highways and Public Transportation Department, explained: "Any time the federal government increases gasoline taxes, it reduces the state's opportunity to raise its own gasoline tax. . . . At some point, you reach a threshhold where people are unwilling to purchase gasoline."

A strong argument for a higher gas tax is that much heavier taxes in Europe and Japan have not destroyed those economies and have created a demand for fuel-efficient cars. "We're paying far less for gas than anyplace else in the world," says Rostenkowski.

Gasoline taxes at both the state and federal level are nothing new. In 1919, Oregon became the first state to enact a gasoline tax to pay for road construction, and within a decade every state in the union had followed suit. Texas levied one cent a gallon in 1923. The legislature raised it to 4 cents in 1941 and to 15 cents in 1986.

In 1988, net revenue to the state from gasoline, diesel and other motor fuels brought in $1.4 billion. The state highway fund gets half; the school fund, 25 percent; the road district highway fund receives a set amount of $7.3 million a year, and any leftover money after enforcement costs are deducted goes also to the state highway fund.

In addition, the U.S. Department of Transportation in fiscal 1988 returned to Texas $901.2 million of federal gasoline tax collected in the state.

In Congress, the proposed gasoline tax has few supporters and plenty of enemies. But other prime sources of revenue appear to be off limits. Income tax rates are presumed to be untouchable because they were overhauled in 1986. So are mortgage-interest deductions and Social Security benefits.

Wycliff's praise of rights action on target

It is rare that I agree with anything that appears on the editorial pages of The New York Times.

Whatever I believe, the Times seems always to be to the left of it. That's OK. Phil Donahue has rarely said anything I can nod affirmative to either, and I even went against Judge Wapner twice last week in "People's Court."

Grizzard

But there was a smashing editorial in a recent Sunday Times. It was signed by Don Wycliff.

Don Wycliff is the first person I've read in years who gave this country credit due it in the area of civil rights.

Listen to Wycliff:

"The anti-African student riots of the last two weeks have opened a new window on China and the view isn't pretty: black students under attack ... beaten by police ... detained incommunicado ... shocked on the genitals with cattle prods. ..."

Continuing: "... The Chinese aren't alone in these attitudes or their uninhibited expression. Russians have long been known for racist contempt of the African students in their country.

"Amerasian children in Vietnam, especially those whose fathers were black suffer brutal ostracism. In Japan, senior political figures regularly give voice to insulting stereotypes of American blacks.

"As hopeless as race relations in America occasionally seem, this nation truly is decades ahead of most others. The late Bayard Rustin was right when he said America's civil rights revolution was unique in modern times. ..."

Bravo. The official policy of this country — the law of the land — for 25 years has been that it is unlawful to discriminate because of color.

Since then, that has been broadened to include outlawing of sexual discrimination, discrimination because of age and, if you will, discrimination period.

Don Wycliff is right. "... As hopeless as race relations in America occasionally seem, this nation truly is decades ahead of most others."

I know of no country that could have done what this one did — and that was to stare the customs of discrimination and oppression in the eye and declare there would be no more.

We'll never completely rid our society of racist feelings and anxieties, but we've come a million miles since 1964, and such a leap toward brotherhood is unparalleled.

It is that thought — and the thoughts of Mr. Wycliff of the Times — that causes my stomach to turn when I hear of the likes of the Rev. Al Sharpton, he of the Tawana Brawley fiasco, he of the "free James Brown" movement.

If Al Sharpton couldn't stir up a little racism every now and then, he'd have to cut his hair and get a regular job.

The same goes for Joseph Lowery of the Southern Christian Leadership Council. Give him an issue — any issue whatsoever — and the first thing out of his mouth is "Racism!"

Give it a rest, Joe.

"... And what does it say," concluded Mr. Wycliff, "when an African-American quarterback leads a team nicknamed 'the Fighting Irish' to the national collegiate championship?"

It says a lot. All of it good.

CHARLEY REESE

Castro, liberals keeping Cubans captive

Fidel Castro, until displaced by Mikhail Gorbachev, was the American liberal's favorite communist dictator. Castro is also a liar, a murderer, a pathological hater of America and Americans, and a vicious abuser of human rights.

Charley Reese

Castro took an island with the second highest living standard in Latin America and turned it into an economically depressed gulag with the second largest military establishment in the hemisphere. He took an island in which people were free to come and go and from which there were no refugees and so abused its people that a million have fled and millions more would, if they could do it.

It's hard to see the truth about Castro. Many American liberals simply decline to face ugly truths. The very active extreme left in America keeps up a steady drumbeat of propaganda in his behalf. American socialists, more hostile to capitalism than to communism, will turn mental somersaults to avoid facing the hideous truth of Castro's monstrous crimes.

Huber Matos, himself a socialist and once a close associate of Castro, told me some years ago that Castro is very much like Hitler, a paranoid, egomaniac with an insatiable lust for power and mainly driven by his generous hates.

A Castro official who defected recently and wrote of his life in Communist Cuba related a revealing incident which supports Matos' description. He tells of Fidel, on one of his public relations tours, challenging a child to a game of ping pong. The small child won. The great Fidel stormed off in a sulking rage.

Castro's sister, who has long lived in exile, can also tell you horror stories of this psychopath who can lie like a fish swims. Next to the loss of Cuba from the ranks of the West, next to the establishment in our soft underbelly of a Soviet military outpost, next to the abandonment by John F. Kennedy of the Monroe Doctrine, the perpetual whitewash of Fidel Castro by many of America's liberals stands as one of the blackest marks in the history of men's struggle for freedom.

Americans and Cubans, the peoples, have had a long love affair. In the dire days of the American Revolution, it was the Cubans who raised 1.2 million livres to help finance the French expedition that, with George Washington, settled the British hash at Yorktown.

After American independence, there was often talk that Cuba should become part of the United States and Cubans fighting Spanish domination, often sought help and refuge in America, just as the fighters against communist domination have done.

Aside from blundering politicians on both sides, aside from well-founded arguments over the behavior of corporations and their bought politicians, the same love of liberty runs through the veins of Cubans and Americans.

That's why no amount of Soviet aid, no amount of American appeasement, can save Fidel Castro and Cuban Communism. One day, the island will be free again. One day, Americans and Cubans will again sit and enjoy the sunlight of liberty on the beautiful streets of Havana.

This will happen sooner if the Bush administration avoids falling for Castro's quadrenniel trick of sending out false signals to each new administration, pretending that he wants better relations. The defector mentioned earlier was present when Castro laughed about doing this and about how the stupid Yankees always fall for it.

The trade embargo against Castro should remain and the United States should express its displeasure with those so-called allies who trade with this dangerous and abusive tyrant.

Furthermore, Congress should start Television Marti, which Castro greatly fears. Every Cuban coming out of Cuba in recent months talks emphatically about the benefits of Radio Marti.

Unless Bush is careful, however, the State Department will rescue Castro from his own self-inflicted misery.

Paralegal Maria Pax Rodriguez poses at her office door in Harlingen recently. Rodriguez, who works for Proyecto Libertad, a legal defense organization for Central American refugees, has been awarded a prize as a finalist for the Reebok Human Rights Award.

Paralegal honored for human rights' stand

HARLINGEN (AP) — Like so many who have fled the terror of El Salvador's countryside, Maria Paz Rodriguez wears the pain of a devastated people in her eyes.

Many who flee also want to forget.

But for Rodriguez, there is no forgetting. For the past three years she has worked as a paralegal at Proyecto Libertad, a legal defense organization for Central American refugees.

She was recently awarded a prize as a finalist for the Reebok Human Rights Award, which recognizes human rights work around the world by people under 30.

Sponsored by Reebok International Ltd., the award seeks to honor individuals "who, early in their lives and against great odds, have significantly raised awareness of human rights and exercised freedom of expression."

The four awardees and seven finalists included activists from South Africa, Cambodia, Chile and the United States.

"For me it was a very beautiful acknowledgment. It was like a dream. I felt very proud, and very happy," she said.

Daniel A. Katz, the former Proyecto associate director who nominated her for the prize, said her life is an example for all.

"She's an example of very selfless concern for individual rights combined with a broad understanding of how the human rights of a single person affect the rights of all," Katz said.

Katz said there were countless detainees, especially women, who relied on her legal, as well as personal and emotional, support while they were imprisoned.

Rodriguez said she certainly can empathize with refugees, especially those from El Salvador, a country that has been the scene of an eight-year civil war that has killed some 70,000 people.

Her family fled El Salvador when her brother-in-law, a trade union leader, was captured and held for several days. Only the outcry of the labor unions from around the world saved him from being tortured and from later disappearing, she said.

"What many people don't understand is that we have a war, a huge danger in (El Salvador), and growing repression against the civilian population," she said.

Her brother-in-law's union had organized a strike, demanding better wages and benefits, she said. "But to do this in El Salvador is to be called a terrorist. It's ridiculous, because I think every human being has the right to want to improve themselves."

Rodriguez and her family fled to Mexico, and her brother found political asylum in Canada. Though she only had a ninth-grade education, she began working at Proyecto as a paralegal in 1985.

At first, she worked with detainees at the Immigration and Naturalization Service Processing Center, helping them raise money for bail. She would also find family or church organizations to help the detainees.

Jury pool of 400 called for lawsuits in teens' deaths

KERRVILLE (AP) — The Kerr County Courthouse was bound to be crowded today — and not just from spectators drawn to Kerrville to watch the opening of a trial involving several multimillion dollar lawsuits.

Four hundred prospective jurors have been called to come to the courthouse so a jury can be picked to hear three civil lawsuits filed in connection with a July 1987 church bus accident at a Guadalupe River church camp.

Ten Dallas-area teen-agers were swept away in the rain-swollen river as the bus and a van tried to flee the camp, located near Comfort. Rescuers plucked 33 others from the river's bank and from treetops.

The trial before state District Judge V. Murray Jordan is expected to last three weeks.

Attorneys representing families who lost children in the incident will be seeking up to million of dollars in damages for their clients from owners and operators of the Pot O' Gold Youth Camp.

The bus and van were taking the 43 members of the Seagoville Road Baptist Church of Balch Springs out of the camp when they were immobilized by a wall of water that swept down the river during an 11-inch rain.

The suits accuse the defendants of failing to adequately supervise the departure of the campers.

Burglary suspects caught in Mexico

EL PASO (AP) — Two burglary suspects led police on a 5½-mile chase as they fired several shots, crashed through a roadblock and injured an officer at an international bridge before heading into Mexico, authorities said.

The men finally were captured in Cuidad Juarez on Sunday and were being held in the Juarez city jail, officials said.

El Paso police officer Richard Gonzales' knee was injured when his parked patrol car, which was used in the roadblock, was knocked into him as he stood near the U.S. Customs Service booths on the El Paso side of the Bridge of the Americas.

Gonzales was treated and released Sunday from Providence Memorial Hospital.

El Paso police Lt. Tom Naubert said the chase began after police surprised two men burglarizing a vacuum-cleaner repair business in El Paso at about 6:45 p.m.

Two police patrol cars chased the men down U.S. Highway 54, and others waited at the Bridge of the Americas.

Traffic on the freeway was light during the chase, which occurred just as the Super Bowl was ending.

Naubert said El Paso police didn't return fire in the chase, which reached speeds of 65 or 70 mph.

Seen in the company of some noble gentleman are these three Midland Lee High School band members. Clowning with George Washington's likeness, above, while a friend snaps a photo is Crystal Scheidman. Wendy Fields, right, chose to pose with Tim Christensen, a member of the honor guard at the U.S. Capitol. Choosing the company of the gigantic figure presiding at the Lincoln Memorial, far right, is J.R. Rosas. Rebel band members toured the capital city after an appearance in Friday's Inaugural Parade honoring former Midlander and 41st U.S. President George Bush.

How will Bush begin term already bound by debt?

By TERENCE HUNT
AP White House Correspondent

WASHINGTON — George Bush begins his presidency awash in political good will for the moment but strapped in the long run by the legacy of debt from the Reagan administration. The trick is to jump start his term without any money.

Bush has been trying to dampen expectations of a dazzling new start, perhaps hoping to insure that any early achievements seem larger than life.

Dismissing the notion of a dramatic first 100 days, Bush said in an inauguration-eve interview, "I'm not shooting for any 100 days. And I think it's kind of a concept that doesn't really apply."

Bush is guaranteed of making a splash, though, just by comparison with the way Ronald Reagan did things. There will be plenty of differences to highlight — many of them that will depict Bush as a busy, hands-on manager in contrast to Reagan's laid-back style.

A late sleeper, Reagan never got to work before 9 a.m. On his first day, Bush was on the move at 8 a.m., leading a tour of the White House for selected tourists. On regular work days, Bush is expected to be in the Oval Office between 7 a.m. and 7:30 a.m.

In public and private appearances, Reagan relied heavily on prepared scripts and "talking points" written on file cards. Bush is more comfortable speaking off the cuff, though he, too, depends on speech writers to write formal remarks.

Where Reagan's schedule was carefully choreographed, Bush is spontaneous and often unpredictable. While Reagan consented to always be accompanied by the press, Bush said he won't wait around for reporters and will come and go as he pleases. "You just don't want to be totally isolated," he said.

There will be a big emphasis on family and children in the Bush White House. He has four grown sons and a daughter and 10 grandchildren who will be frequent visitors.

In contrast, Reagan and his wife Nancy were often estranged from their family.

While Reagan was not fond of traveling overseas, Bush loves it, making 40 separate foreign trips and visiting 74 nations since 1981. He'll go to Tokyo for the Feb. 24 funeral of Emperor Hirohito and has not ruled out other stops on that trip. A NATO summit in Brussels is likely in April, and an economic summit in Paris is set for July.

As Reagan flew into retirement on Friday, he acknowledged, "I think there are a lot of things yet to be done. ... Certainly a change with regard to the abortion situation — (I) couldn't get that done yet." He also mentioned his futile efforts to get authority for line-item vetoes on the budget and to win passage of a constitutional amendment for a balanced budget.

For Bush, the realities of the deficit loom over everything else on the domestic agenda.

On Monday, Bush will have his first Cabinet meeting and the budget is sure to be Topic A. On Tuesday, he wants to meet at the White House with the bipartisan leadership of Congress to open talks on the $150 billion budget deficit bequeathed by Ronald Reagan. On Feb. 9, he will address a joint session of Congress to announce his budget priorities.

For now, at least, congressional Democrats are treating Bush warmly. "Bush is extending the hand of friendship and we intend to extend ours in return," said Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

Former House Speaker Thomas "Tip" O'Neill, who led the Democrats' budget battles with Reagan, exulted, "It's the dawn of a new era. We're back to normalcy in the White House. How delighted I am."

No one expects the honeymoon with a Democratic Congress to last forever, and some think it will end sooner than later. "The Hill is stacked against them. It will give this administration little or no slack," said Reagan's former political adviser, Mitchell Daniels. "The Hill will treat this as an extension of the Reagan administration."

Already the deficit has forced Bush to scale back on education initiatives and other plans. "Our funds are low," he said in his inaugural address. "We have a deficit to bring down. We have more will than wallet; but will is what we need."

DEATHS

J.W. Thames

Funeral services for J.W. Thames of Odessa have been set for 1 p.m. Tuesday at Calvary Baptist Church in Odessa with Rev. Raymond Buggs and Rev. Guy Roberts officiating. Interment, with military honors, will follow at Fairview Cemetery in Midland with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Thames

He died Saturday night at an Odessa hospital.

Thames was born March 28, 1929, in Oak Grove, La. His early life was spent in the Oak Grove area. He married Vernice Brumley on Oct. 18, 1950, in Oak Grove.

He served in the Korean War, returning to Oak Grove following his discharge. In 1978, the family moved to Odessa, where he was employed with different pipeline construction companies. He was a member of Calvary Baptist Church.

Survivors include his wife; two sons, Ronnie Thames and David Thames, both of Odessa; two daughters, Connie Morgan of Monticello, Miss., and Ann Volz of Pigeon, Mich.; his mother, Mrs. A.J. Thames of Midland; five brothers, Willie Thames, Robert Thames, David Thames, Bobby Thames and Andrew Thames Jr., all of Midland; one sister, Rosalee Grant of Midland and three grandchildren.

Lorene Barnett

Funeral services for Mrs. Lorene Barnett of Midland were to be at 1 p.m. today at the Ellis Funeral Home chapel with Rev. Bob Porterfield of West Kentucky Street Baptist Church officiating. Interment was to follow at Kermit Cemetery with Ellis Funeral Home in charge of arrangements.

Mrs. Barnett died Saturday at a Midland hospital.

She was born Aug. 5, 1916, in Electra where she was reared. She graduated from Electra High School in 1934. In 1938 she moved to Kermit where she trained as a nurse and worked for Dr. B.A. White. She met R.H. Barnett in 1939 and they were married Nov. 22, 1940, in Kermit. Following their marriage, the couple made its home in Jal, N.M. They moved to Midland in 1966.

Mrs. Barnett was a member of Calvary Baptist Church of Jal.

Survivors include her husband; one son, Joe Barnett of Farmington, N.M.; two brothers, Woodrow Smith of Arkansas and Ledford Smith of Odessa; and three grandchildren.

Pallbearers were to be R.C. Kiker, Al Shiplet, Mart Cope, M.E. McEwen, R.H. McKoy, Thurman Gaskin, J.T. Recer and Roy L. Tabb.

Honorary pallbearers were to be Tom Martin, Marvin Harrison, Jim Cronenberg, Fred Fleming, M.M. Edminston, Jack Hunnicutt, Phila Harris, J.W. Baulch Jr., H.O. Whitt and W.L. Drury.

The family requests memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland or to the West Kentucky Street Baptist Church General Fund.

Jim Eggleston

Graveside services for Jim Eggleston will be at 11 a.m. Tuesday at Fairview Cemetery with Rev. Ray Bristol of First Christian Church officiating.

Arrangements are being handled by the Ellis Funeral Home.

He died Saturday at his home.

Eggleston was born July 13, 1929, in Ada, Okla., and was reared there. He later moved to Houston and graduated from Rice University. He obtained a law degree from South Texas College of Law in Houston.

He also served in the U.S. Marines during the Korean Conflict. After his discharge, he worked for Chevron in Houston and was transferred to Midland in 1961.

In 1972, Eggleston was transferred to Denver, Colo. In 1975, he returned to Midland and was an independent landman. He was preceded in death by his wife Joan in August 1988.

He was a member of the First Christian Church.

Survivors include two daughters, Janice Hamilton and Cheryl Belk, both of Austin; two sisters, Mary Brady of Ada, Okla., and Lavonia McAdams of Spring; one grandchild and several nieces and nephews.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Hospice of Midland or the Allison Diagnostic Cancer Center in Midland.

Ira Henson

LAMESA — Funeral services for Ira Henson, 78, of Welch, will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday at the First Baptist Church in Welch, with the Rev. Phil Shelton officiating. Assisting Shelton will be the Revs. Joe Perkins and Rita Richards. Burial will follow in Lamesa Memorial Park under the direction of Brannon Funeral Home.

Henson died Sunday at a Lubbock hospital.

He was born June 4, 1910, in Knox County and married Laurane Fowler on Nov. 30, 1929 in Lamesa. He was a member of the First Baptist Church for 50 years.

Survivors include his wife of Welch; two sons, Darvin Henson of Midland and Edwin Henson of Welch; three daughters, Sharron Wheat and Patsy Cates, both of San Angelo, and Margie Wilkins of Friona; four sisters, Ola Maye Jones, Marie Adams and Ruth Rushing, all of Vernon, and Gladis Struck of Houston; a brother, Leon Henson of Oklahoma; 13 grandchildren and 16 great-grandchildren.

Pallbearers will be Jerry Doss, Patrick Sherman, Lex Stanfield, Gary Rector, D.C. Henson, Steve Matthews, Neil Wheat and Keith Mateo.

The family requests that memorials be directed to the American Heart Association.

Fannie L. Basini

Graveside services for Mrs. Fannie L. Basini were to be held today at 10:30 a.m. at Resthaven Memorial Park with the Rev. Fred Newarskas of St. Ann's Catholic Church officiating.

Arrangements were handled by Ellis Funeral Home.

The family requests that memorials be directed to Trinity Towers.

Sarah A. Alexander

Services for Mrs. Sarah A. Alexander are pending with Ellis Funeral Home.

Mrs. Alexander died early today in Denver.

Dallas area abortion clinics step up security

DALLAS (AP) — Business has not fallen at Dallas area abortion clinics despite a rash of protests nationwide and three arson fires in Dallas.

"We have not had a drop in patient loads," said Danniece Smith, a registered nurse at Fairmount Center Clinic in Dallas where one of the fires occurred. "In fact, we've had an increase."

The center has seen an increase in security as well as patients.

Workers at all three clinics where fires occurred said security had been stepped up since the blazes and was increased even more this weekend for the 16th anniversary of the U.S. Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion.

Ms. Smith said some clinics that were not hit by the Christmas Day rash of fires also increased security. "Two have received bomb threats since the fires," she said.

In the landmark suit, Norma McCorvey, alias Jane Roe, of Dallas challenged in federal court a 19th-century Texas law banning abortion except to save the life of the mother.

The nation's high court ruled 7-2 for Ms. McCorvey on Jan. 22, 1973, and said she and others have a right "to be free from unwarranted governmental intrusion into matters so fundamentally affecting a person as the decision whether to bear or beget a child."

On Christmas Day 1988 — less than a month before Sunday's anniversary of the ruling — the three clinics were damaged within a 40-minute period by fires set with the same flammable mixture of gasoline and other solvents, authorities said.

Abortion rights activists say the fires at the North Dallas Women's Clinic, the Metroplex Gynecological Group and Fairmount Center were the worst outbreak of violence against abortion clinics anywhere in the nation last year.

Investigators with the U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms continue to probe the fires, which they say are linked and were deliberately set.

Chris Nelson, deputy agent in charge of ATF's Dallas office, said evidence gleaned from the three fires has been presented to a federal grand jury but investigators have no suspects.

"It's very difficult to investigate these cases unless the people involved leave physical evidence at the scene, because normally, from what we've seen, the people involved are not the types with criminal backgrounds," Nelson said.

As the Roe vs. Wade anniversary arrived, pro-choice groups mobilized to try to save the decision from being crippled or even reversed.

Meanwhile, anti-abortion groups were preparing to bid good riddance to the 1973 decision — a ruling, they contend, legalized murder. About 3,000 anti-abortion protesters marched through downtown Austin Saturday and claimed imminent victory at a rally near the state Capitol.

Pro-choice activists conducted a rally and candlelight vigil on the Capitol steps later Saturday.

"Two or three years ago, we were trying to put a good face on a bad situation," said Bill Price, president of the Greater Dallas Right To Life Committee Inc. and director of the Texas Coalition for Life. "We were discouraged and beaten down. This year, our prayers, our hard work and our perseverance is paying off."

Just as President George Bush was sworn in Friday, a group of pro-choice advocates gathered in Dallas to sign a petition defending legal abortion. Called "Millions of Voices, Silent No More," the petition drive targets people who are pro-choice but have not been outspoken.

"As long as the silence remains from women who have considered or had an abortion, then the advocacy falls to a small group of people," said Charlotte Taft, director of the Routh Street clinic in Dallas.

"This is really not about abortion because that (abortion) is not really what anybody wants," said Ms. Taft. "The issue is freedom. It's self-determination."

New MC courses involving video, lip reading offered

From Staff Reports

Three courses being offered through Midland College's Continuing Education Department are on the schedule for the first time. They are: Vision: The Melody of the Mind; Lip Reading; and Videography.

"We constantly seek new classes which might be of interest to local residents. All of these are different, serving interests or skills which haven't been presented through our various programs," said Dr. Camille Duchesne, director of continuing education.

Herb Haslam is teaching the Visions course, which begins Jan. 31. It will meet on Tuesdays from 7-9 p.m. through April 25. The fee is $43, and the class has a limit of 16 people. Haslam will lead students in an exploration of visual stimuli, how it influences our thoughts and feelings, and ways in which it can be widened. The sessions include viewing film, video, and laser disc productions, with special emphasis on visual communication as a unique avenue for the learning process.

For persons who own videocameras but feel uncertain about how to operate them, or make them do more than store basic images, the Videography class is a must. Veteran photographer and professional videographer F.T. "Spud" Levens will help students understand the operation of video equipment, how to deal with lighting and sound, editing, and titling. The class meets on Tuesdays from 7-8:30 p.m., beginning Jan. 31, for eight weeks. Cost is $23. Students should bring their videocameras, blank tape, and instruction book to the first class.

Persons with severe hearing loss can learn how to communicate through lip reading. The classes will explain how sounds are formed and how lip movements can be distinguished to help the hearing-impaired make conversation understandable and enjoyable. Rosalind Sommers will teach two classes on this subject during the spring. The first class meets Feb. 16 through March 21 on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 7-9 p.m., with a Lip Reading II course on the same days and times from April 4-May 4. Cost for each course is $37.

Registration for these courses is in the Continuing Education Office, Administration Building, between 8 a.m.-8 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 8 a.m.-5 p.m. Friday. More information is available by calling 685-4518.

Court strikes down minority-business plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, dealing a serious blow to some forms of affirmative action, today struck down a Richmond, Va., program aimed at helping construction industry businesses owned by minorities.

By a 6-3 vote, the court ruled the plan is an unlawful form of reverse discrimination.

Justice Sandra Day O'Connor, writing for the court, said, "Under Richmond's scheme, a successful black, Hispanic or Oriental entrepreneur from anywhere in the country enjoys an absolute preference over other citizens based solely on their race."

"We think it obvious that such a program is not narrowly tailored to remedy the effects of prior discrimination," she said.

The Richmond plan would require the prime contractor on any city building contract to subcontract at least 30 percent of the value of the project to firms that are at least one-half minority owned.

O'Connor said, "The 30 percent quota cannot be said to be narrowly tailored to any goal, except perhaps outright racial balancing. It rests upon the completely unrealistic assumption that minorities will choose a particular trade in lockstep proportion to their representation in the local population."

The ruling is expected to have far-reaching impact on the use of so-called set-aside programs by states and cities.

Most states and more than 190 local governments have such programs, according to a study by the Minority Business Enterprise Legal Defense Education Fund.

The high court in recent years has upheld key affirmative action programs in other areas, although always by narrow margins and with no clear consensus on how to evaluate their lawfulness.

In a stinging dissent today, Justice Thurgood Marshall said the Richmond ruling "marks a deliberate and giant step backward in this court's affirmative action jurisprudence. Cynical of one municipality's attempt to redress the effects of past racial discrimination in a particular industry, the majority launches a grapeshot attack on race-conscious remedies in general."

Marshall said the "harsh reality" of today's ruling will be to discourage or prevent cities and states from "acting to rectify the scourge of past discrimination."

He was joined by Justices William J. Brennan and Harry A. Blackmun.

O'Connor drew a distinction between Richmond's plan and one enacted by Congress that the court upheld in 1980. The congressional plan required 10 percent of federal public works contracts be earmarked for minority-controlled businesses.

O'Connor said Richmond officials are not entitled to rely on a finding by Congress that there has been nationwide discrimination.

Also, O'Connor said, the congressional set-aside excused local governments from complying under certain conditions.

SWC records will stay confidential, high court rules

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court, in a case sparked by a football recruiting scandal at Southern Methodist University, today refused to let news organizations see confidential investigation files on SMU and other Texas schools.

The court, without comment, let stand a ruling that files compiled by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the Southwest Athletic Conference do not have to be made public under the Texas Open Records Act.

In the wake of the SMU scandal that resulted in NCAA sanctions against the Dallas school, some Texas news organizations sought disclosure of investigation files compiled by the association.

They also sought files compiled by the nine-member Southwest Conference, which in addition to SMU has three other public Texas universities as members.

When the requests were denied, the news organizations sued, invoking the 1973 state law that requires "governmental bodies" receiving "public funds" generally to make public their internal documents.

SPELLING BEE 1989

The Reporter-Telegram will sponsor the 1989 Regional Spelling Bee April 15 at Midland College.

School spelling champions from Midland, Martin, Glasscock and Upton counties will compete for the top prize of an all-expenses-paid trip to the National Spelling Bee in Washington, D.C.

This daily column on words, their spellings, meanings and origins will be published through April 14. These words are typical of those used in bees but may not necessarily be used in competition.

ar'is

heiress — (noun) An "heiress" is a female "heir." An "heir" (pronounced with a silent h) is one who inherits possessions or property after the death of the owner. Many times the "heir" is a blood relative; such is the case when a father dies and leaves his possessions to his children, who would be his heirs. In England and in several other European countries that have kings and queens, an "heiress" would be the first-born daughter of the nation's king or queen who would inherit the rank of that monarchy and become queen.

Catching up with knee surgery

Surgeons repair torn knee ligaments, worn-out joints

By LEIGH FENLY
Copley News Service

In a modest U.S. laboratory, researchers are playing scientific catchup with donor knees and a unique contraption called the Oxford knee rig.

For years, orthopedic surgeons have repaired torn knee ligaments and replaced worn-out joints with artificial implants. In the typical course of action, physicians diagnose such problems; then, based on past experience, they decide on a specific surgical plan.

What has been missing from the scenario is an exact understanding of knee function based on laboratory findings, and data to compare one surgical technique with another.

What has evolved is a plethora of surgeries, as individual as the surgeon himself.

For example, orthopedic surgeon Clifford Colwell noted that more than 100 different surgical procedures have been described to rectify a specific kneecap problem — a clear signal that "none of them is really correct." And, a sign that there has been no scientific way to compare one to another.

"You wouldn't send up a space shuttle without testing it," explained Dr. Steve Shoemaker, an orthopedic surgical fellow, "but in medicine we're sometimes asked to treat patients without knowing the basic science behind that treatment.

"Sometimes the technology is just not available to do the basic science. So we do the best we can with what we've got. Then, when we get the technology, we try to catch up and address the problems that have arisen."

THE PROBLEMS are now being addressed and the technology is in place at San Diego's Joint Mechanics Laboratory, one of three such research centers in the United States.

The laboratory is run jointly by Scripps Clinic and Kaiser Permanente, with engineering assistance from Children's Hospital and cadaver knees donated by University of California at San Diego Medical Center.

Research projects are supervised by orthopedic surgeons Dr. Dale Daniel at Kaiser Permanente and Clifford Colwell at Scripps Clinic, with help from three research fellows.

The backbone of the laboratory is the computerized knee rig, a device designed in Oxford, England, less than a decade ago.

While quite phenomenal in function, the contraption itself looks more like a Rube Goldberg invention: a sculpture of metal weights and wires, pulleys and bolts to which a human cadaver knee — skin and fat removed — is connected.

WHAT THE knee rig does — which has never been done before — is submit cadaver knees to the same forces and range of motion as normal joints. To use it, the cadaver knee, including a portion of the thigh and calf, is connected to the machine at points that represent the "hip" and "ankle." Once loaded with weights, the knee can then be moved in such a way to simulate a deep-knee bend or other knee motion. Computers analyze the motion and produce numerical data.

"When you study motion of a joint," explained Kaiser's Daniel, "you want to be sure that the machine you're using doesn't impart motion itself. When we connect a knee to this machine we can see, for example, how the knee rotates, or slides one way or another during a deep-knee bend. This motion is not dependent on the machine. What it's showing us is the interaction between joint surfaces, the ligament guidance system and the muscle forces."

The first goal of such research is to understand normal motion. The second is to gauge the effectiveness of various surgical procedures. Colwell, said, "we may be able to tell a surgeon that that a particular operation will work, while another that he might have used would not work. In the future, we might even design new operations."

COLWELL AND research fellow Dr. Michael Ziebelman are using the rig to study problems in the patella, or kneecap, in relation to joint replacement. In the past decade, knee-joint replacement surgery has become highly successful, with excellent results 90 percent of the time. However, longevity of the artificial joint is a concern, Colwell said. Over time in some individuals, prostheses begin to loosen or slip — a problem that may be related to changing pressures in the knee cap.

Kneecap problems also can develop as a result of a degenerative thinning of the cartilage.

"What we're trying to do is establish what the pressure is in the normal knee," Ziebelman said. "Then, if there is thinner cartilage, why was it worn away? Is the pressure greater? Once, we establish what the pressure is, then we can do surgical procedures on the cadaver knee to see if the surgery re-establishes normal pressure."

KAISER'S RESEARCH is directed toward sports injuries, specifically torn ligaments. Tears in the anterior cruciate ligaments in the knee are common injuries among football players, amateur skiers and others involved in contact and jumping sports. Many of these injuries require surgical reconstruction.

"In ligament surgery, we frequently can't repair the ligaments, so we put in new ones," Daniel said. "The questions are: What are the best materials? How should you orient it? How much tension should be there when you put it in? How to fix it (to bone)?

"What we do with the Oxford rig is to first look at normal. Then we cut the ligament and see how motion changes. Then we put in a (new) ligament in a certain way and see if we can reproduce normal knee motion."

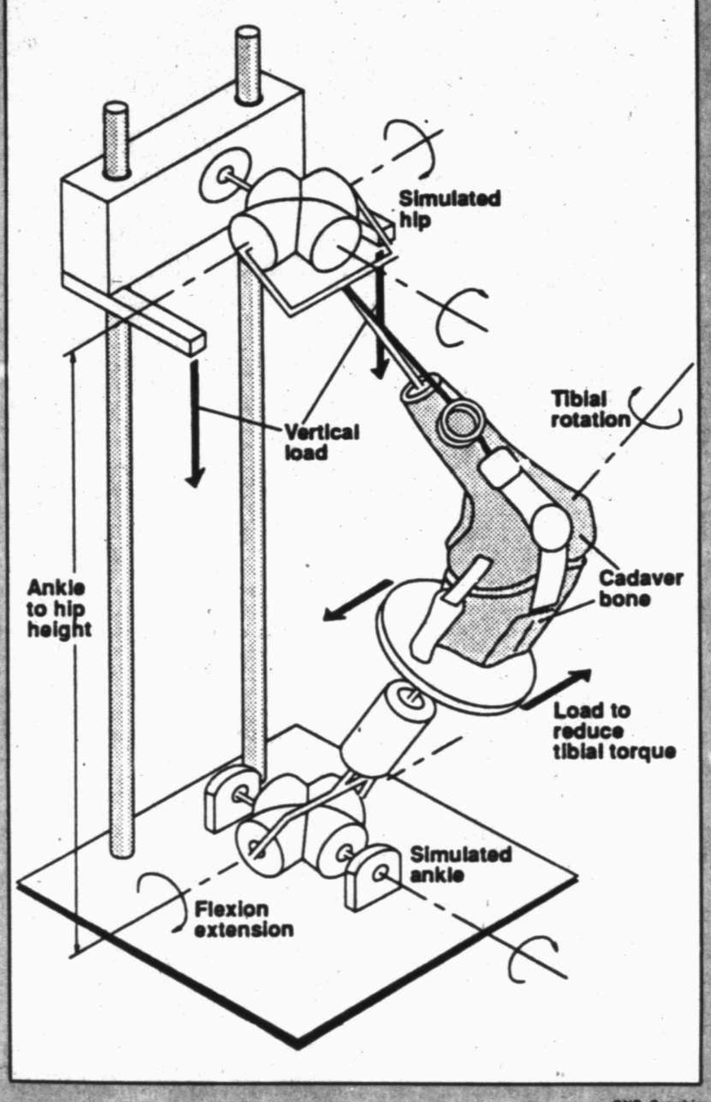

While research with the Oxford rig is still in its infancy, both Colwell and Daniel believe it can change the direction of orthopedic surgery. "For the first time, this will allow us to go back and forth from the clinic to the laboratory," Daniel said.

"With this technology, we can now take an idea we observe in clinical practice to the laboratory to see if it is indeed valid," Daniel said. "It will allow us as surgeons to move back and forth to fine tune our surgical procedures."

"This is an amazing tool — an unbelievable tool," Colwell said. "The exciting part is that we may be able to define the forces and movements of the knee and suggest exactly what operations should be done for what knee problem. If we are able to accomplish that, then it would be a dramatic breakthrough for medicine everywhere."

Knee test rig

The computerized knee test rig, developed in Oxford, England, uses cadaver knees to submit the joint to the same forces and range of motion encountered by normal human knees. In this way, scientists can evaluate and improve methods of treating knee injuries and joint replacement prostheses.

Surgery decreases spasticity in cerebral palsy patients

Associated Press

Surgery on impaired nerves can improve movement and coordination and decrease spasticity in people with cerebral palsy, according to a surgeon at New York University Medical Center.

'In the past few years, surgeons have improved a procedure called selective posterior (or dorsal) rhizotomy, which enables them to identify and sever the rootlets of sensory nerves which trigger spastic, reflexive tightening in the muscles," said Dr. Rick Abbott, assistant professor of neurosurgery.

An article in the center's health letter explains that cerebral palsy is a complete or partial muscular dysfunction, usually of the limbs, caused by interference with the brain's ability to send messages to trhe spinal cord to control movement. Most often a result of an injury to the brain or failure of appropriate brain development, it may, but need not, be accompanied by a degree of mental retardation.

"Until now, in order to give people with cerebral palsy some degree of comfort and movement, spasticity was checked by braces, physical therapy, medications and nerve blocks," Abbott states. "In severe cases, impaired joints have been surgically relocated, and tendons lengthened or transferred. When other procedures failed to relieve spasticity, spinal cord surgery was performed."

The goal of rhizotomy depends on the disease's severity. "For people with cerebral palsy who can walk, the surgery can improve both efficiency and balance enough for people to walk without crutches and canes. For those who can only crawl, the procedure may enable them to walk with the assistance of braces or walkers. For the more severely disabled, the procedure can loosen the muscles so the legs can be more easily separated, making the person more comfortable and easier to care for."

Currently, the surgery is being performed only to relieve spasticity in the legs. "The procedure cannot be done for arms without some loss of sensation," Abbott noted. Work is proceeding on refinements to reduce spasticity in the arms with minimal loss of feeling.

"Preoperative goals have been reached in 80 percent of patients, and all showed some improvement," the neurosurgeon asserted.

Device disintegrates patient's kidney stones

GALVESTON, Texas (AP) — The nation's first non-immersion kidney stone lithotripter, the Lithostar, has begun operations at the University of Texas Medical Branch at Galveston.

Lithotripsy uses electromagnetically generated shock waves to disintegrate kidney stones without surgery. The resultant sand-like particles pass out of the body in urine within a few weeks after treatment. Lithotripsy revolutionized kidney stone treatment, which previously had required surgery.

Reduction of anesthetics is the Lithostar's primary benefit, according to Dr. Michael M. Warren, chief of the division of urology. The Lithostar's shocks are less powerful than those of water-bath systems. Patients, therefore, feel little pain and usually receive only a local painkiller or intravenous analgesia.

During treatment, the patient lies on a specially designed table. Instead of a water-bath conduit, a gel disk is used to transmit shock waves. The single-use disk, about the size of a salad plate, is placed between the patient and the shock-generating device.

Unlike the water-bath machines, the Lithostar has no limitations on patient weight or height, according to the university. Very heavy, tall or short patients can receive treatment with the device.

"The procedure itself probably costs about the same as the operation," Warren says. "But you spend much less time in the hospital. Plus you go back to work much more quickly. There's a tremendous cost savings, but it's hard to accurately determine money saved by returning the person to the workplace."

High risks for heart attacks identified

Copley News Service

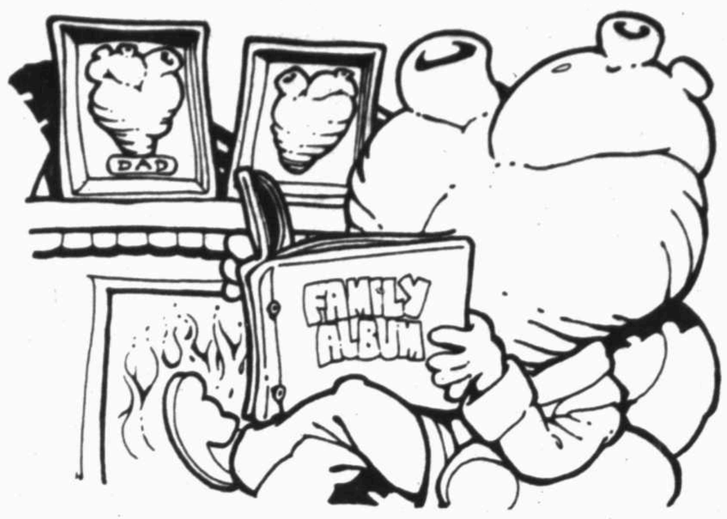

Early death from heart disease need not be a certain fate for the millions of Americans with a strong family history of early heart attacks, according to a prominent cardiovascular geneticist.

"We have an uncontrolled epidemic of a totally treatable disease in this country," said Dr. Roger Williams, a University of Utah researcher.

"We are losing sight that priority treatment should be given to those at greatest risk, whose average age for heart attack is 45," said Williams.

These are the 1 million people who have a genetic predisposition to premature heart disease coupled with blood cholesterol levels above 300, says Williams.

"With early detection through careful tracking of family medical history, proper diet and drug therapy, we can probably add as much as 20 years to their lives," he said.

CNS Graphic

AS HEART disease risk is redefined to include cholesterol levels above 200, Williams fears those at highest risk "will become the needle lost in an ever-growing haystack."

In addition to the 1 million people at highest risk, at least another 5 million Americans have a strong family history of heart disease, coupled with other complicating factors such as hypertension, a variety of lipid disorders and smoking.

"Family history is a powerful predictor," said Williams. "There is a 12 times greater risk of early heart attack if two or more first-degree relatives (mother, father, brother, sister) had any coronary problems before age 55," Williams said.

"That's why it's so important for people to know the medical history of their parents, grandparents, brothers and sisters. If these relatives have died, the treating physician needs to know what killed them and how old they were."

Williams says it is now possible with computerized genetic screening to identify people with inherited gene disorders leading to early heart attacks.

"But until we have identified all genetic markers — the place on a chromosome where major genes linked to disease disorders are located — we can use family history as a substitute," said Williams.

WITHIN 10 years, Williams hopes to set up a national computerized resource that will track high-risk families through several generations.

"Someday a physician will be able to rely on a computer to determine a patient's genetic predisposition to heart disease by tracing the family tree.

"Computers will help us determine the most probable cause for a particular family's heart problem and the treatment most likely to be effective," said Williams.

"Once you evaluate the genes, you begin treatment by changing the environment: eat less fat, quit smoking, get more exercise and reduce stress for starters. If that's not enough then use cholesterol-lowering drugs," he advised.

With drug and dietary treatment, total cholesterol has been known to drop from 410 to 110, a level considered to be preventive against heart attacks, according to Williams.

As for those not at high risk for heart disease, Wiliams advises a varied diet, keeping fat at about 30 percent of total calories; moderate exercise; cessation of smoking; keeping blood pressure within normal ranges.

More than a million people suffer from "familial hypercholesterolemia," an inherited disorder marked by extremely high LDL (bad) cholesterol levels. They have a high blood cholesterol by age 1 or 2 and their average age for heart attack is 45.

About 2 million people have inherited "familial combined hyperlipidemia," resulting in either high LDL levels, high triglycerides or a combination of the two. Blood lipid disorders in this group usually start in the teen-age years, and the average age for heart attack is 55.

STILL ANOTHER group has inherited abnormally low levels of the protective HDL cholesterol, which puts them at increased risk for heart attack, even if their total cholesterol is not high.

"That's why a total cholesterol reading isn't enough," said Williams. "We have to know the breakdown between HDL and LDL, the protective and destructive forms of cholesterol, as well as the heart disease history of the family."

DEAR ABBY

Story has sad ending for helpful stranger

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: A few weeks ago, while leaving downtown Seattle, I was approached by a friendly looking young woman who told me that her luggage and purse had been stolen on the bus ride from Bellingham. She told me her name and asked if I was a Christian, saying that she was — then she told me how terrible it was to have been on the street all night.

To make a long story short, she persuaded me to go to a cash machine and get $40, which was how much she needed to get "home." She promised to repay me as soon as she got home.

Well, I never heard from her, and now I feel like a fool for having fallen for her story. I suppose I should have known better, but I kept thinking, "What if I were in such a spot and needed help; I would be grateful if a stranger helped me out."

Abby, how can a person tell the honest people from the phonies? These people can be so convincing. Please print this as a warning to others who are gullible and tenderhearted. — SEATTLE SUCKER

DEAR SUCKER: When you are approached on the street by a stranger with a friendly face and a sad story, suggest that he call a crisis hot line. You may have to shell out the price of a telephone call, but that's a far cry from $40. (In some cities, the operator will put the call through free of charge.)

Stranded travelers should be directed to Travelers Aid, which will provide temporary food, lodging and transportation home.

If I sound heartless, it's because I have also been taken in by a sob story when I was approached by a stranger who needed bus fare "home" where a job was waiting for her. She promised to repay me as soon as she got her first paycheck. This happened to me — twice. (I'm a slow learner.)

DEAR ABBY: We adopted a wonderful little boy 2 years old. "Micky" will be 5 soon. His birth mother had left him for three days, unattended. (She had a lot of problems — drugs, alcohol and mental.) At any rate, when Micky came to live with us, his appetite was enormous. Abby, you would not believe a child could eat that much. We were told that this was probably due to the three days he was left alone — and his need for food will always be with him.

It's a pleasure to have a child who will eat everything and ask for more, but Micky goes around asking the neighbors for food — and he stuffs himself! He is not a fat child, as he is hyperactive.

How can we control Micky's food glut? Or do you think he'll outgrow it? — MOM AND DAD

DEAR MOM AND DAD: The food glut problem and the hyperactivity should be discussed with your pediatrician. They could be symptomatic of Prader-Willi syndrome, or a physical or emotional problem that may require therapy and possibly medication. Don't ignore these symptoms hoping Micky will outgrow them.

Dear Abby's Cookbooklet is a collection of favorite recipes'— all tested, tried and terrific! To order, send your name and address, plus check or money order for $3.50 ($4 in Canada) to: Abby's Cookbooklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Male hormones are good for men's hearts

By DANIEL Q. HANEY

MONTEREY, Calif. (AP) — Doctors have long recognized the power of female sex hormones to keep women's hearts healthy. Now there's evidence that abundant levels of testosterone may be good for men's hearts.

"It's attractive to think that being male is good for men and being female is good for women," said Dr. Elizabeth Barrett-Connor, a physician at the University of California, San Diego.

Estrogen, the female hormone, is believed to one of the key differences between the sexes that explains why women typically live seven to eight years longer than men.

Barrett-Connor presented evidence Monday that men with high levels of testosterone, the male hormone, are in better shape than those with relatively low levels. Whether this means they are more likely to escape heart attacks is still unclear.

Her work, presented Monday at a meeting of the American Heart Association, is based on a followup of 5,000 California residents who were first examined in 1972.

She found that men with high testosterone also have higher levels of high density lipoprotein, or HDL, the so-called good cholesterol that protects people from heart attacks. They also have lower blood pressure and are less likely to be overweight.

"In other words, testosterone is good for men," she said.

However, despite these attributes that would seem to lower the risk of heart disease, there was no clear evidence that the men with higher testosterone actually lived longer. Barrett-Connor noted that the body's levels of sex hormones fluctuate throughout the day. And since her research was based on just one blood sample, it might not have accurately identified differences between the men's hormone levels.

She also noted that even if testosterone turns out to be good for men's hearts, she does not advocate taking extra doses of the hormone.

She said another major study has begun to see what effect estrogen pills have on women's risk of heart attacks after they go through menopause, when their bodies' natural production of the chemical drops sharply.

Some of the women will take estrogen alone, while others will get a combination of estrogen and progestin. Estrogen by itself can increase the risk of uterine cancer. But while the estrogen and progestin combination eliminates this hazard, some doctors fear that the extra progestin wipes out estrogen's benefits for the heart.

Among other research presented Monday:

■ Dr. Redford B. Williams Jr. of Duke University said that anger, not impatience, is the key element of Type A behavior that raises the risk of heart disease. He said that those with a heart attack-prone personality are more likely to get angry, to become suspicious of other people's motives and to show their hostility toward others.

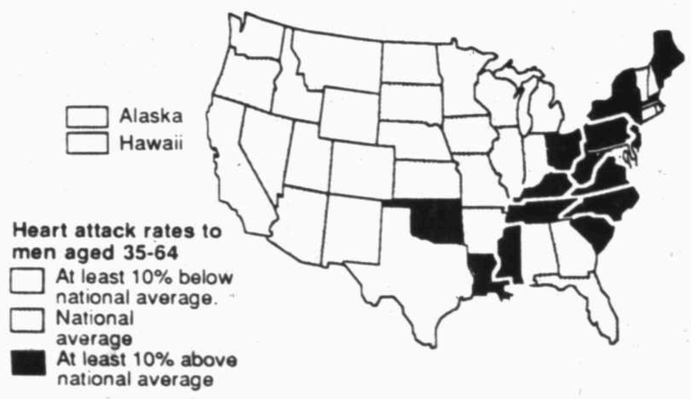

■ According to Dr. Wayne J. Katon of the University of Washington, panic attacks and depression are frequently mistaken for heart disease, especially among young and middle-aged women. During panic attacks, people may gasp for breath, grow dizzy, tremble, feel chest pain and believe they are going to die.

■ Strokes occur in two or three of every 100,000 children. Dr. Dorothy M. Aram of Rainbow Babies and Children's Hospital in Cleveland has found that when the stroke is limited to one side of the brain, these youngsters grow to have normal intelligence. However, they may have varying degrees of other problems, including physical weakness on one side and trouble reading and talking.

■ Dr. Louis R. Caplan of New England Medical Center in Boston reported that cocaine use is becoming a major cause of strokes in young adults. Studies at one hospital found it to be the single greatest cause of strokes in those under age 40.

The heart attack corridor

The Centers for Disease Control is studying a remarkable incidence of fatal heart attacks to men aged 35-64 that is above the national average. The highest heart attack rates occur in a band of states that runs from Maine to Louisiana.

Finally, a Super Bowl that is really Super

What would he have done with fit ankle?

By STEVE WILSTEIN

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — Was Jerry Rice's gimpy exit from practice at the start of Super Bowl week a ploy to sucker the Cincinnati Bengals?

If so, it worked. If not, Rice made one heck of a recovery.

He opened Sunday's Super Bowl with a reverse run, then made some spectacular leaping catches in the San Francisco 49ers' thrill-packed 20-16 victory over the Cincinnati Bengals.

Rice, named the most valuable player of the game, caught a 14-yard touchdown pass from Joe Montana early in the fourth quarter and set up John Taylor's winning touchdown with 34 seconds left by making three catches for 42 yards on the drive.

RICE, WHO had five touchdowns in the 49ers' two previous playoff games this year, finished with 11 catches for 215 yards.

"Today is a day I will never forget, it was just stupendous," Rice said as he held is 18-month-old daughter, Jaqui, in the 49ers' locker room.

Bengals coach Sam Wyche said Rice had "a world championship performance."

The week began with Rice's mysterious departure from practice on Monday. He had just caught a pass from Montana but left the field, complaining of a twinge of pain in his ankle. Rice had been bothered by a sprained ankle suffered in October, and didn't feel fully healthy until mid-December. The apparent injury on Monday, however, did nothing to slow him down.

MONTANA said he saw nothing wrong with Rice and said the wide receiver would play Sunday even if he had to drag him out on the field.

Rice didn't have to be dragged. He said his ankle problem was a bit of tendinitis that didn't give him any problem.

As if to prove the point, Coach Bill Walsh called for a reverse to Rice on the first play, and Rice ran it for five yards.

Rice didn't run with the ball again, but he soared on pass plays. By the end of the first half, he had three catches for 58 yards.

It was in the second half, though, that Rice really took off.

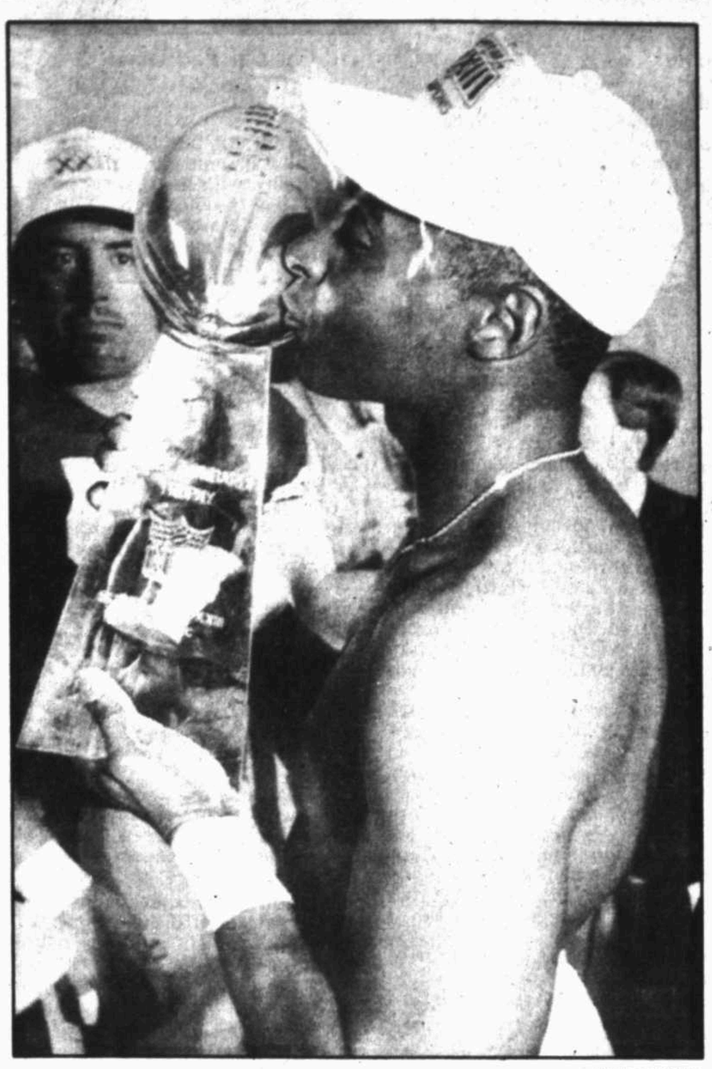

With the 49ers trailing 13-6, Rice caught a 31-yard pass from the San Francisco 15 to start a quick 85-yard touchdown march. Roger Craig then caught a 40-yard pass and, one play later, Rice caught a soft 14-yard pass, nearly stepped on the sideline, and dove over for the score.

RICE started the 49ers' next drive with a 44-yard pass play, catching the ball with a magnificent leap over cornerback Lewis Billups.

On the winning drive, Rice contributed catches of 8, 17 and 27 yards before John Taylor's 10-yard touchdown catch with 34 seconds left.

"I knew the receivers had to make some plays," Rice said.

Jerry Rice ....busses MVP trophy

Montana-Taylor aerial wins it in final 34 seconds

By DAVE GOLDBERG

MIAMI (AP) — Thanks to the drive of the decade, led by the quarterback of the decade, the San Francisco 49ers are truly the team of the decade.

And thanks to that, after XXIII years, the Super Bowl is finally super.

The 49ers' 20-16 win over Cincinnati came down to the final 3 minutes, 20 seconds — and 92 yards.

It started when San Francisco was forced to begin on its 8 after a penalty on the kickoff following a 40-yard field goal by Jim Breech that gave the Bengals a 16-13 lead.

It ended with 34 seconds left when Joe Montana hit John Taylor from 10 yards out, capping a drive in which he hit 8 of 9 passes for 97 yards. Montana set a Super Bowl record with 357 passing yards, 215 of them on 11 completions to Jerry Rice, the game's most valuable player.

"After 23 years, the Super Bowl was finally Super," said San Francisco center Randy Cross, who is retiring after 13 seasons. "It was one you could finally look back on and say 'that was a great game.'"

"I think when you look at it, that was a whale of a game," Cincinnati coach Sam Wyche said.

BUT HARDLY mistake-free.

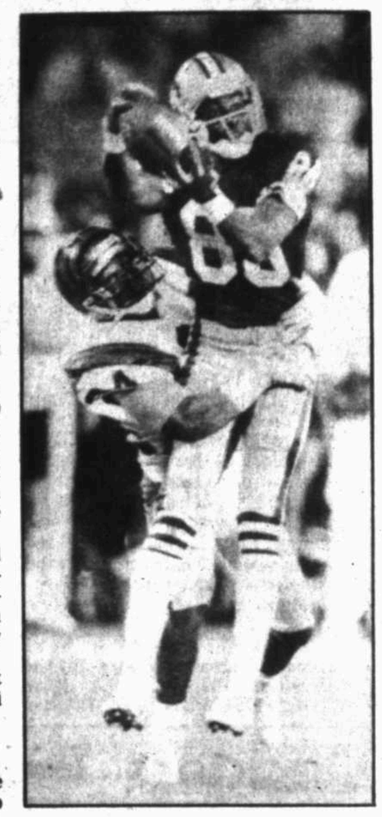

Cross himself was guilty of three major errors, including a bad snap that cost the 49ers a field goal and a penalty for going downfield illegally that almost aborted that final drive.

Cincinnati's Boomer Esiason, the top-rated quarterback in the NFL, was sacked five times and was just 11 of 25 for 144 yards — missing several open receivers.

The top-rated Cincinnati offense went without a touchdown — the only TD came on Stanford Jennings' 93-yard kickoff return, only the second of its kind in Super Bowl history.

It certainly didn't detract from San Francisco's effort.

"To a great, great team," said Coach Bill Walsh, who may well announce his retirement as coach next week after three Super Bowl victories in 10 years, although he declined to make a commitment after the game.

Jerry Rice pulls in long fourth period pass from Joe Montana despite presence of Bengals' Lewis Billups.

"We can't say we're the team of the '80s anymore than the Steelers or the Dolphins or the Cowboys can say they're the team of the '70s, We're just one of the teams that played as best we could."

But there was no question about it to Commissioner Pete Rozelle, who said: "The 49ers have firmly established themselves as the team of the '80s."

Super game kept viewers' attention

By RON BLUM
AP Sports Writer

Dick Enberg and Merlin Olsen didn't think the Super Bowl was all that super.

"It wasn't a great game until it finished," said Olsen, NBC's color commentator. "The fact that it kept (our attention) is the thing that we'll remember."

The San Francisco 49ers beat the Cincinnati Bengals 20-16 in Miami Sunday on Joe Montana's touchdown pass with 34 seconds left.

"I wouldn't call it a great game," said Enberg, who did the play-by-play. "There were some great efforts. You don't know until 10 years from now how great any game is. ... I think this game wil grow with time. It's the best we've done, just because we had a game down to the final seconds."

The announcers and Michael Weisman, the executive producer of NBC Sports, were proud of their broadcast.

"In the third quarter, I was a little concerned about the low scoring. I looked up and the Bud Bowl had more points than we did," Weisman said, referring to the advertising campaign by Annheuser-Busch.

Weisman said he wanted to make sure that NBC didn't get in the way.

"It would be easy to overwhelm you with graphics and overhwelm you with closeups, given all the equipment we have."

THE ONLY mistake the announcers made mas misidentifying Chuck Thomas as the player whose bad snap caused a missed field goal, instead of Randy Cross, the player who made the mistake. Even on the replay, Olsen said, it was hard to tell. But Enberg and Olsen corrected themselves as soon as they realized their error.

Early in the first half, NBC was worried that the 49ers would pull away and make it another blowout.

"This game had all the earmarks," Enberg said. "At that point, if you asked me what going to happen ... I looked at Merlin with my eyes raised, saying get ready for a long second half."

Enberg said the two-week layoff bothered the announcers as much as the players.

"Tuesday we were ready for the broadcast," he said. "The last two or three days we were on overload. By far the most difficult is all the aniticaption and the overconcentration on what was happening. Getting caught up in all the minutia."

NBC kept up the the off-the-field stories, too.

Bengals backup fullback Stanley Wilson was suspended by the NFL Sunday morning for violating the league's substance-abuse policy. NBC couldn't get Cincinnati coach Sam Wyche before the game, but got wide receiver Cris Collinsworth to talk and put in on the air within two minutes.

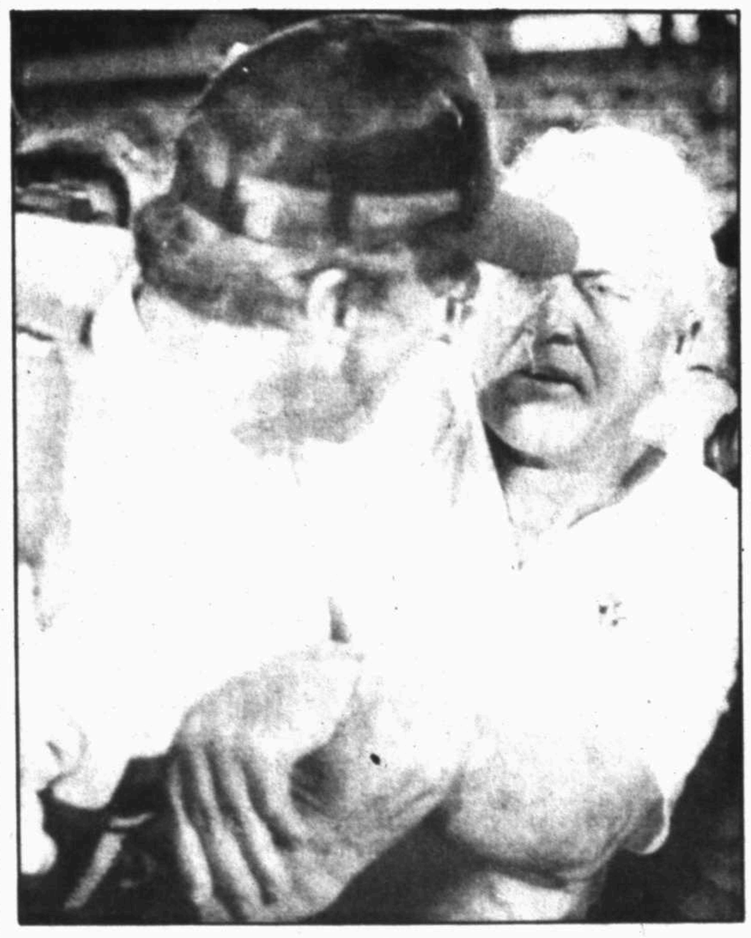

NBC followed Tim Krumrie into the Bengals' locker room, and reported his refusal to go the the hospital and then his change of mind.

And in the end, NBC made sure to let viewers know that it broadcast the Olympics, World Series and Super Bowl in a five-month period. The closing hightlights included tape from the Los Angeles Dodgers' victory over the Oakland Athletics and shots from Seoul.

"It was something that we thought was unparalleld in network history," Weisman said. "We just frankly wanted to put it in perspcetive. It was an unprecedented six months for NBC. I wanted to do it for all the engineers and all the production crews that sacrificed so much the last six months."

McCovery, Chaps face FPC tonight

From Staff Reports

BORGER- With a week off, what do you suppose Charles "Smokey" McCovery has up his sleeve for tonight?

Last time out, the sophomore guard set a Midland College single game point record, scoring 47 points in leading the Chaparrals over Clarendon College.

It wouldn't bother Coach Reggie Franklin if his star pupil threatened that figure again tonight when the Chaps play Frank Phillips College.

MC might be favored under ordinary circumstances, but there is the week layoff and it's a long way from Midland to Borger. The combination could spell trouble.

Frank Phillips is 1-1 in WJCAC and 11-4 for the season, which doesn't sound like a pushover under any circumstances.

Midland College is 3-3 and 12-7 and a victory is imperative the Chaps are to remain among the Favored Four. the top four finishers in the Western Junior College Athletic Conference qualify for the Region V tournament against the four best from the Eastern Conference. The tournament will be held Waco this year.

Odessa College, South Plains and Howard College are running one, two, three ahead of MC. Howard and SPC have lost just one league game each, to OC., the nation's No. 1 junior college team.

The Chaps return to the Chaparral Center Thursday night against Western Texas College in what will be the halfway mark of the conference season, although the Chaps still have a postpoined game to make up against NMMI in Roswell Feb. 18.

NMMI fell to OC, 83-68 last Thursday while Howard raished its league record to 5-1 with a 110-101 victory over Western while South Plain beat New Mexico, 76-73. The Thunderbirds are 1-4 in WJCAC, but for a few points the other way would be contending for second. NMJC is proof, perhaps, that it is no longer sufficient to be good in the WJCAC, but you've got to belucky as well.

TED BATTLES

A Super Bowl to leave 'em speechless

Battles

After the big build up, it was enough to leave a loyal fan speechless.

Letdown? Betrayal is more apt.

This wasn't what the Super Bowl was all about. The Super Bowl is War, Famine, Pestilence and Despair. The Super Bowl is ravaging, pillaging and looting.

Massacre, this is from whence came thy name.

It can't be said that the elements weren't there for a good old Super Bowl Game, a term normally employed in its loosest sense. All the ingredients were there for a rout and sickening, too, when they showed that leg break.

San Francisco made enough early mistakes to squander two Super Bowls.

Cincinnati was so bad they not only had a left-handed passer, but a left-footed punter who wore shoes.

PETE Rozelle's crusade for NFL parity had come to this.....Super Bowl incompetence.

For most of three periods, it looked like Pete might wind up with a close Super Bowl game, but at a prohibitive price.

One impression was that the participants were angered at the Super Bowl payoff shares....horrors, they were actually conducting a strike while the game was in progress.

Just when it seemed this might be headed for an 8-6 decision, Stanford Jennings returned a kickoff 93 yards and another dull Super Bowl game suddenly came alive.

IT WAS almost like a wake up call for Joe Montana, Jerry Rice, Roger Craig and company, the 49er offensive stars who appeared to be just going through the motions.

Funny, how a little thing can have such momentous results.

According to Merlin and Dick, if Stanley Wilson hadn't slipped off the drug wagon and been banished from further activity, Jennings might never have made an appearance.

Jennings apparently qualifies as this year's Timmy Smith, although it is hoped things work out better for Stanford next year than they did for the Redskins' Cinderella Super Bowl running back of a year ago. I mean, someone could pin him with a nickname like "USC" or "Golden Bear."

EXCITING? Yes. But this wasn't in the true tradition of the Super Bowl. Big build up and bigger letdown. This wasn't what fans and experts have come to expect....and, maybe, for that matter, the gamblers. This was a Super Bowl in which the winner didn't make a shambles of the point spread.

Disappointing for the Super Bowl traditionalist, perhaps, but don't be too critical. After all, one out of 23 isn't bad.

It has always been the policy here, "If you can't say anything derogatory about the Super Bowl, don't say anything." So I guess I just won't mention it.

Rodriquez skins Seniors crowd

LA QUINTA, Calif. (AP) — Chi Chi Rodriguez won only one hole but earned $120,000 and Billy Casper increased his winnings to $80,000 Sunday with a playoff victory over Arnold Palmer in the Senior Skins Game.

Rodriguez, 53, who collected $300,000 of the $360,000 purse at the inaugural Senior Skins a year ago, was blanked for all but one hole in the 1989 renewal. But that hole, the 16th, was worth $120,000.

Casper, 57, playing in the Skins competition for the first time, won $60,000 on the second playoff hole, No. 18, when he rolled in a 25-foot birdie putt, and Palmer missed his birdie attempt from 12 feet.

Palmer and Casper sent the sudden-death into a second extra hole when Casper made a 30-foot birdie putt on No. 10, the first playoff hole, and Palmer rolled in a 6-footer for a birdie three.

Rodriguez missed his birdie try from 12 feet, and Gary Player was barely off on his long try for birdie, eliminating both from the playoff.

In the playoff, unlike the other 18 holes of the Skins, only the low scorers continue in the competition.

Palmer, 59, won two holes and a total of $70,000 during the two-day event at La Quinta Hotel Golf Club, and Player, 53, also won two holes, earning $90,000.

Rodriguez ended his dry spell in this Skins tournament with a perfect tee shot to within 3½ feet of the pin on the 168-yard 16th hole.

Player hiked his total for the tournament to $90,000 with a 15-foot birdie putt on the par-4 No. 12, worth $40,000 since the 10th and 11th holes were tied.

Casper won his first money on the opening hole of the second day, the 381-yard No. 10. He hit his second shot to within 10 feet, then sank the putt.

Palmer, blanked on the second day, won two holes on the first day, including making a 15-foot birdie putt worth $60,000 on the ninth hole.

Player won one hole, No. 6, on the first day, earning $50,000.

In the Senior Skins Game, for players over 50, prize money is awarded for the low score on each hole unless there's a tie. If two or more players tie, the money carries over to the next hole, with all four players still in the hunt for the "Skin."

The foursome plays nine holes each day, with the first six holes worth $10,000 each, Nos. 7 through 12 worth $20,000, and the final six holes worth $30,000.

Chi Chi Rodriquez ...pockets $300,000

COM dominates Point trophies

From Staff Reports

The City of Midland finished so far ahead, the second place team couldn't even have been seen on a clear day.

COM compiled 1883 points to take first place in the 15-team meet.

The City of Richardson, expected to be the team to beat, was just that. COR managed 487 points, not enough to overtake second place El Paso Aqua Posse, which finished with 730 points.

COR missed Friday's long distance swimming competition and could not make up the lost events on the final two days.

United Swimmers of Abilene finished fourth with 250, beating out West Texas AC, 219.

The COM's domination of the three-day meet is reflected by the fact that it produced seven of the 10 High Point winners.

In senior boys, Matthew Houston earned 81 points, but the next five swimmers, Joseph Fennell, Matt Seay, Stacy Davis, and Petere Zubiate, were from the COM.

Michaela Hasek, 88 points, and Deona Reid, 50, were one, two in senior girls, beating out EPAP's Nicole Robertson.

Carrie Henry, 77, edged COM teammate Jamie Bobo, 67, in girls 13-14. Howard Flowers won High Point in boys 11-12; Craig Kieffer, Boys 10U; Am ber Goodwin, girls 8U; Scott Strauss, 8U boys; were COM winners.

Joanna Borzi, EPAP, 11-12 girls; Stephanie Kimble, WTAC, 10U girls; and Jay Hayes, Amarillo AC, Boys 113-14, also were high point trophy winners.

TCU holds off late Raider run

LUBBOCK, Texas (AP) — John Lewis sunk both ends of a one-and-one with 21 seconds remaining as Texas Christian, 13-5 and 6-0, held off a late Texas Tech, 6-10 and 1-4, rally to win 57-56 Sunday and stay on top of the Southwest Conference.

TCU led throughout the game but saw the Red Raiders whittle away at the margin during the second half. Tech's Todd Duncan, the former Midland College star, made the score 54-55 on a 3-pointer with 50 seconds left.

After Lewis' free throws, which gave him 12 points for the day, Tech's Jerry Mason followed his own miss with 11 seconds remaining. Duncan then fouled Danny Hughes, who couldn't sink the foul shot with six seconds left, but a half-court lob by Mason as time ran out was short.

Hughes, who had been in a shooting slump, led the Horned Frogs with 15, while Reggie Smith added 10.

Mason's 20 points paced the Red Raiders, and Sean Gay had 12 before fouling out with 21 seconds left.

Seton Hall 108, NHC 67

SOUTH ORANGE, N.J. — Andrew Gaze hit five 3-point shots and keyed a decisive 22-3 first-half run that carried No. 12 Seton Hall, 17-1, over 11-5 Division II New Hampshire College.

Gaze and John Morton each finished with 20 points, while Ramos and reserve center Anthony Avent added 13 apiece.

L-ville 92, UNLV 74

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Pervis Ellison matched his career high of 28 points as No. 4 Louisville, 13-2, let a 23-point lead slip to five before recovering to beat No. 10 Nevada-Las Vegas, 13-3.

A steal and dunk by Keith Williams with 14:40 left in the game gave Louisville its biggest lead, 59-36, before Las Vegas began its rally.

Stacey Augmon scored 12 points and Clint Rossum added eight as the Rebels outscored the Cardinals 25-7 over the next six minutes to pull within 66-61 at the 8:26 mark.

Payne and Tony Kimbro added 15 points apiece for Louisville, Smith had 13 and reserve Felton Spencer 12.

Augmon and David Butler paced Las Vegas with 17 points each, Anderson Hunt had 15 and Rossum 11.

Illinois 103, Ga. Tech 92

CHAMPAIGN, Ill.. — Kenny Battle scored 25 points Sunday as No. 2 Illinois, 17-0, rallied for a double-overtime victory over Georgia Tech, 11-5, and staked a claim to the No. 1 spot in college basketball.

ROBIN WHO? — Heavyweight champion Mike Tyson said he does "not really" want to get back together with his estranged wife Robin Givens. I ... don't want to talk about that situation. Both of us, you know, we made big mistakes and I said things that I really shouldn't have said. I meant them, but I shouldn't have made them publicized."

AOKI WINS— Isao Aoki scored a stroke victory in the Coca-Cola Classic at the Royal Melbourne course with a 71—279 to become the first Japanese golfer to win a major tournament in Australia.

TIAA PICK— Tarleton State's 6-8 freshman Roy Howard is TIAA player of the week, scoring 25 points in a 64-60 victory over St. Edward's University and 14 points in a 70-49 win over Howard Payne. Against St. Edward's game, Howard was 12-of-14 from the field and grabbed 13 rebounds.

Dodgers' Reading Rifle, Furillo, dies at age 66

N.Y. Times News Service

Carl Furillo, the right fielder for the Brooklyn Dodgers during their glory years in the late 1940s and 50s, died Saturday at his home at Stony Creek Mills, Pa. He was 66.

Furillo played his entire 15-year career with the Dodgers in Brooklyn and Los Angeles, taking part in seven World Series and finishing with a career batting average of .299. He hit 192 home runs and had 1,058 runs batted in.

His best season was in 1953, when he led the National League in batting with a .344 average. He won the title despite being sidelined with a broken finger incurred in a brawl.

Furillo had been hit by a pitch from the New York Giants' Ruben Gomez, and then charged the Giant manager, Leo Durocher.

"We hated the Giants," he recalled years later. "We just hated the uniform."

Furillo batted over .300 in four other seasons and drove in 90 or more runs for the Dodgers six times.

He was one of the star players for the Dodger teams recalled in "The Boys of Summer" by Roger Kahn and was a member of the only Brooklyn team that won the World Series, in 1955.

Furillo, who was raised in Lower Alsace Township, Pa., near Reading, started playing baseball as an outfielder for Pocmoke City in the Eastern Shore League at a salary of $80 a month.

He fought his way up through the Dodger organization, where he acquired the name Reading Rifle for his fine throwing arm.

49ERS—

AND MONTANA and Rice — "the finest game by a pair in Super Bowl history," Wyche said — certainly were at their best, even after Breech's third field goal seemed about to break a string of four straight victories by NFC teams by an average score of 41-14.

It was the closest Super Bowl since the 49ers beat the Bengals 26-21 in 1982.

"We were still confident. That's one thing we never gave up on and it paid off," said Montana, who also led an 89-yard drive to win the 1981 NFC title game over Dallas.

But that drive, and one led two years ago by Denver's John Elway in the AFC title game with Cleveland, weren't in pro football's ultimate showcase — the Super Bowl.

"You might as well forget about the great Denver drive that just got them to the Super Bowl. Now it's the great San Francisco drive that won the Super Bowl. That indicates how great Joe Montana is," Esiason said.

WYCHE, who was Montana's quarterback coach with the 49ers for four years, said: "He's one of the great quarterbacks of all time. I don't think anybody can say otherwise.

"I knew that when Joe got into the two-minute offense that there was a master.... he's done it before."

"As the drive went on, you could see (Montana's) eyes light up. Halfway through we knew we were going to score," Cross said. "You never doubt Joe Montana. You don't want anybody else who's played the game on a drive like that. Joe's one of the great clutch quarterbacks in history."

Still, even with Montana, it didn't look good after Breech's field goal and the ensuing kickoff, which was returned by Del Rodgers to the 15 but set back to the 8 by a holding call.

Montana hit Roger Craig for 8 yards; John Frank for 7 and Rice for 7 more. After Craig ran for 1 and 4 yards, Montana, who had thrown a 14-yard TD pass to Rice earlier in the period, hit Rice for 17 yards to the Bengals' 48.

But after a 13-yard completion to Craig and an incompete pass, Cross was called for being downfield on a short completion to Craig. That made it second and 20 back on the 45 with 1:15 left.

No problem, not with Rice around. Montana dropped back and connected with his favorite receiver on his favorite play — a post pattern over the middle for 27 yards to the 18.

Then, with double coverage on Rice, Montana went back over the middle for 8 yards to Craig at the 10 and then, right over the middle to a wide-open Taylor for the most dramatic touchdown in Super Bowl history.

"We got in the huddle ... and we said, 'Look, it's now or never.' We've been here before; let's just play the type of ball we know how to play," Taylor said.

THE ONLY other last-minute winner was Jim O'Brien's last-second field goal that gave Baltimore a 16-13 victory over Dallas in 1971. That, in fact, was the only other Super Bowl that was tied in the fourth quarter.

"We just got going, taking the ball downfield thinking about field goal, thinking about field goal, and we kept getting man-to-man with Jerry," Montana said. "When they doubled him, we came back with Roger underneath. On the final touchdown, John just split the safeties."

So simple, but so heartbreaking for the Bengals.

"We were 34 seconds away — 34 — and we're not going to forget this feeling," said Wyche, whose team was 4-11 last season. "This one hurts. It hurts more for us because we've come so far from a year ago."

Rice's reception total tied Dan Ross' Super Bowl record for Cincinnati in 1982 and Rice's yardage broke Rickey Sanders' record of 193 for Washington last year.

"I knew we had to make some plays," said Rice, who nursed an ankle injury all week. "Whenever Joe put the ball in the air we had to fight for it. I would rather give Joe the MVP. He took total control."

The game that was supposed to be a shootout went 44 minutes and 26 seconds without a touchdown, the longest dry spell in Super Bowl history.

Then came two within 91 seconds.

After Mike Cofer's 32-yard field goal tied the game 6-6 for San Francisco with 50 seconds left in the third quarter, Jennings took the kickoff 93 yards for a score, racing untouched through the San Francisco defense until Terry Greer ran him down and tripped him as he fell over the goal line.

BUT THE 49ers, whose offense sputtered, suddenly came to life, going 85 yards in just four plays to tie the score at 13. Montana hit Rice for 31 yards, Craig for 40, then Rice for a touchdown in the left corner of the end zone from 14 yards out.

On the previous play, Cincinnati defensive back Lewis Billups dropped what appeared to be a sure interceptio at the goal line.

The 49ers got as far as the Cincinnati 35 with 1:15 left.

The first half ended with the score tied at 3 — the first halftime tie in Super Bowl history and the first without a touchdown since Pittsburgh led Minnesota 2-0 in 1975.

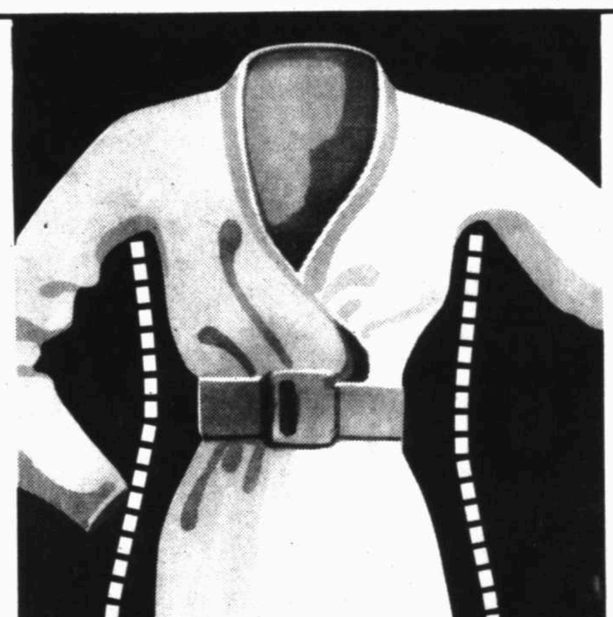

MVP—

Rice said Cincinnati "talked all week, but I guess we were the better team today."

Walsh credited Rice for taking advantage of the Bengals' man-to-man defense.

"They could not stay with him man to man," Walsh said.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 24, 1989

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will have to pursue your goals with zeal. Although success will not come easily, it will be won by those who persist. Foreign travel is both educational and good for business. Unless you have your say in the shaping of a relationship, it will not endure. Refuse to be pressured by a loved one who issues ultimatums. Start a new savings program and stick with it. Better cash flow will reduce everyday tensions.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Olympian Mary Lou Retton, actor Ernest Borgnine, singer Neil Diamond, evangelist Oral Roberts, dancer Maria Tallchief.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Work demands and a busy social life keep you on the run. Get ready to take on new duties and assume greater authority. Others welcome your guidance. Romance is wonderful. Be affectionate.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your wisdom and hard work can be put to good advantage now. Center your attention on projects you can complete by yourself. Share your evening with congenial friends and relatives. Relax and unwind.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Refuse to be downhearted or abandon hope. Foreign contacts will help you increase your earnings. The degree of freedom you achieve will be even greater than you anticipate. Defend your principles.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Renewing old acquaintances makes this a red-letter day. Younger people tend to confide in you. Be a good listener. Do the best you can under the circumstances today.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Ask favors, write letters and sign legal documents. Requests for loans are likely to be granted. Doublecheck travel and hotel reservations before starting out on a business trip. Errors are possible.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Think out your basic moves before you proceed today. Hasty words or impulsive behavior could prove costly. Set a good example for young people to follow. Contacting old friends stirs up fond memories.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): A great day to seal bargains, take trips and ask for favors. Community involvement is also accented. Others ask you to perform certain tasks. If you accept, you will bring great joy.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Seek the best professional advice you can find. Positive action will be almost impossible without the go-ahead from experts. Speak your mind and others will respect you more. Do not be wishy washy.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Quiet pursuits will prove very rewarding today. Be very industrious at work! In the afternoon, enthusiasm for a new opportunity takes over. Marital ties deepen. Do nothing to rock the boat.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): A feeling of being rushed could make you frantic. Slow down and take a deep breath. Obstacles can be surmounted. Choose the best path to follow and do not stray from it.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Make the most of this special day. Outstanding achievements are possible if you give free rein to your imagination. Streamline work methods. Team effort will boost profits. Romance is chancy.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Unusual events both startle and please you. Someone from your past re-enters the romantic picture. You begin to see this person in a new light. Write letters to people waiting to hear from you.

ANSWERS TO WEEKLY BRIDGE QUIZ

Q.1—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠QJ4 ♡AKQJ4 ◇J5 ♣A73
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass

What do you bid now?
A.—With this much strength opposite a one-over-one response, you would have jumped to two no trump to describe a balanced hand too strong for a one no trump opening bid. Since partner made a two-over-one response, jump to three no trump to show the same type of hand.

Q.2—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠AKJ65 ♡AJ ◇J76 ♣742
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♡	Pass	1 ♠	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—With an opening bid facing an opening bid, you have the values for game. And you know your side has an eight-card fit—on this sequence partner must have a six-card heart suit. Therefore, your support is more than adequate. Jump to four hearts.

Q.3—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠83 ♡KQJ7 ◇AQ62 ♣AJ2
The bidding has proceeded:

East	South	West	North
1 ♠	Dbl	Pass	2 ♡
Pass	?

What do you bid now?
A.—You have a pretty good hand, but there is no need to get carried away. Bear in mind that you have forced partner to bid, and he might have done so on a yarborough. The most you can do is invite game by raising to three hearts—if partner has a smattering of points, he will go on to game.

Q.4—Neither vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠KJ ♡Q10 ◇Q9873 ♣J1082
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	1 NT	Pass
2 ♡	Pass	2 ♠	Pass
2 NT	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—Partner is showing a 5-4-2-2 distribution and some 16-18 points. Not only are you maximum for your first response, but your honors in partner's suits must be upgraded. Anything other than a bid of three no trump should be treated with contempt.

Q.5—Both vulnerable, as South you hold:
♠Q962 ♡KJ8 ◇AK1085 ♣5
The bidding has proceeded:

North	East	South	West
1 ♠	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 ♡	Pass	?

What action do you take?
A.—For his jump shift, partner can hardly have less than A-K and A-Q in his two suits. Therefore, it's simply a matter of whether partner has the ace of clubs as well. Bid four no trump to find out. (If your partner habitually jump shifts with bad suits, you have our sympathy.)

Q.6—As South, vulnerable, you hold:
♠KQ73 ♡KJ65 ◇A7 ♣KJ9
The bidding has proceeded:

South	West	North	East
1 NT	Pass	2 ♣	Pass
2 ♠	Pass	3 NT	Pass

What action do you take?
A.—Partner's two-club bid was Stayman, searching for a possible 4-4 fit. Since his bid of three no trump denies four spades, he must hold four cards in hearts. Correct to four hearts.

Williams wants to do 'Godot' again

Williams

NEW YORK (AP) — Comedian Robin Williams says he never worked so hard, for so little, for so few and had so much fun as when he starred in "Waiting for Godot." And he's certain he'll do it again.

The Samuel Beckett play was sold out in last year's short run at a small Lincoln Center theater, and there have been reports that the cast — Williams, Steve Martin, Bill Irwin and F. Murray Abraham — would reunite to capture "Godot" on film or videotape.

"All the planets have to be in convergence and all of the agents have to be on the phone on the same date," Williams said in a recent interview.

Williams said he felt the play "really kicked in and it just felt perfect (at the end of the run). And that's why we want to do it again."

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. (AP) — Academy Award-winning producer-director Robert Wise was honored at a Hollywood gala attended by movie industry leaders and cast members from many of his films.

Saturday night's $1,000-a-couple dinner at the Beverly Hilton Hotel was a reunion of sorts for performers for such Wise productions as "West Side Story" and "The Sound of Music."

The gala, sponsored by the American Friends of Tel Aviv University, featured Wise's installation as an honorary fellow of the university's film and television school.

Actor Burt Lancaster ("Run Silent, Run Deep") was toastmaster, and singer-dancer Rita Moreno ("West Side Story") performed for the audience, which included actors Gregory Peck and Larry Hagman.

One table was occupied by the now-grown performers who played the rambunctious Von Trapp children in "The Sound of Music."

"I'm pleased honored and thrilled about all the things that have been said about me tonight," said Wise, whose pictures have received 19 Oscars and 67 Academy Award nominations. "I'm usually a behind-the-scenes guy, but tonight I have been thrust into the foreground...thank you from the bottom of my heart."

Wise twice has been a double Oscar winner as producer and director of "West Side Story" and "The Sound of Music."

• • •

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Rock star Gene Simmons and former Playmate of the Year Shannon Tweed have become parents. Nicholas Adam Simmons was born Sunday at Cedars-Sinai Medical Center one day after his due date, and weighed 8 pounds, 11 ounces.

Tweed was Playboy's Playmate of the Year in 1982, and became the magazine's first "Video Centerfold" when the Playboy Channel was introduced. She also has appeared in CBS-TV's "Falcon Crest."

Simmons is a member of the heavy metal rock group KISS, whose album, "Smashes Trashes and Hits," is at No. 23 on the Billboard Top Pop Album chart.

• • •

PATERSON, N.J. (AP) — Principal Joe Clark is becoming a Hollywood hero as the film featuring his efforts to whip Eastside High School into shape with bullhorns and a baseball bat was previewed.

But Clark, played by Academy Award nominee Morgan Freeman in the film "Lean On Me," said he's not letting his movie fame go to his head.

"I understand success and failure are impostors and I take them both lightly," he said.

The movie was shown in an advertised sneak preview Saturday night in theaters in Paramus and in Secaucus, said film producer Norman Twain, who was visiting Clark at Paterson's Eastside High, where the Warner Bros. production was filmed. The movie should make its official premiere March 3, Twain said.

Clark received national attention for his disciplinarian approach to education. He banned some underachieving students, strode the halls with a bullhorn and bat, and chained the doors to keep out drug dealers.

He was praised by the Reagan administration, offered a job as a White House adviser and appeared on Time magazine's cover.

• • •

NASHVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — Humorist Jerry Clower, who is active in the Southern Baptist Convention, says he wishes the media would give some attention to untainted Christians, not just controversial ones.

Asked recently about Jim Bakker and Jimmy Swaggart, television evangelists linked to personal and financial woes, he said:

"I am concerned and sorry that their foot slipped. I wish it had not have slipped. I'm real concerned that the media, namely television, would show that and keep showing that and comics would keep making fun of it and keep bringing it up.

"But, in all fairness, the networks ought to pick out a group of Christians who are accountable and not necessarily give equal time, but show that occasionally."

"You could start with my little old church. The first Wednesday night of every month, we put out a little old mimeographed sheet and it shows every dime we take in and every dime we send out. We are accountable."

Clower, of Liberty, Miss., has recorded 19 humor albums and appears regularly on the Grand Ole Opry. On Jan. 30, he will receive the 1989 Founder's Memorial Award by the Mississippi Religious Leaders Conference.

• • •

CHARLESTON, W.Va. (AP) — A boyhood problem with dyslexia led Gov. Gaston Caperton to appreciate the benefits of reading, and he says elementary school pupils should switch off their televisions and pick up books.

During a visit Friday to Pratt Elementary, Caperton told pupils he had difficulties during his school years because of dyslexia, a learning disability that affects how the brain processes written material. Dyslexics often transpose letters, words, numbers and other things they read.

Caperton said he was lucky because his problem was discovered when he was a third-grader and he was able to overcome it.

"All of you, be sure you learn how to read. It will open up the world for you," he said, advising the pupils against watching too much television.

• • •

AUGUSTA, Ga. (AP) — Soul singer James Brown says he was "flabbergasted" by his six-year prison sentence, which was ordered "just when I was reaching the young Caucasian kids" with his music.

In an interview in today's USA Today, the 55-year-old "Godfather of Soul" also said he's been mellowed by his five weeks in prison and has gained 14 needed pounds.

"I wore myself all the way out last year," said Brown, who is serving a six-year sentence at a minimum-security prison in South Carolina for aggravated assault and failing to stop for police during a wild, two-state chase in September. "A lot of people would like to see me fall, but you can't make a winner a loser."

Brown, who entered prison Dec. 16, was due to stand trial today in Augusta on 10 misdemeanor weapons and assault charges, most related to the chase.

His attorney, Buddy Dallas, said Brown has been in good spirits at the State Park Correctional Center.

Meeting disappoints Texas Eastern

HOUSTON (AP) — Texas Eastern Corp. executives said they were disappointed Coastal Corp. officials did not sweeten their $2.6 billion buyout offer during a weekend meeting between the two companies.

Dennis R. Hendrix, Texas Eastern president and chief executive officer, said the Texas Eastern board would meet again next weekend to consider Coastal's bid when more details are known and further analysis has been completed by their advisers.

"We expect then to be in a position to form an opinion as to the Coastal offer," Hendrix said during a Sunday afternoon news conference.

James R. Paul, Coastal's president and chief operating officer, and James R. Cordes, executive vice president of Coastal, met Sunday morning with Texas Eastern's board and with what Paul termed "an army" of anti-takeover lawyers and advisers of about 20 people at Texas Eastern's offices in downtown Houston.

Coastal announced last Monday it was commencing a cash tender for all of Texas Eastern's outstanding common stock at $42 per share.

Following Sunday's meeting, Hendrix said the Texas Eastern board was disappointed Coastal did not increase their offer.

Coastal officials told the board "they continue to believe $42 is a full and fair price despite the fact that Texas Eastern's stock has traded above the Coastal bid price since the bid was announced," Hendrix said.

Since Coastal made their bid, Texas Eastern's stock has soared, closing Friday at 47⅜. Prior to Sunday morning's meeting, industry observers had predicted a friendly merger agreement could emerge from the talks, particularly if the offering price was raised to between $45 and $47 a share.

Paul said Sunday's 20-minute meeting was "brief, disappointing and unproductive."

"They gave no information or reason to justify a higher offer price for their stock. They didn't ask questions of us and they didn't respond to our questions of them," Paul said. "We do not think the meeting was designed to provide a meaningful conversation regarding either the best interest of Texas Eastern stockholders or to further Coastal's offer."

Hendrix said their investment bankers reported that there are numerous alternatives to the Coastal offer, some of which involve companies that have previously expressed an interest. He would not disclose the companies or when they had expressed interest in Texas Eastern. Hendrix, however, did not rule out the possibility that Texas Eastern would eventually accept Coastal's bid.

He also said he had not had any discussions to date with other potential bidders.

Southmark hires Drexel

New York Times News Service

DALLAS — The Southmark Corp., whose two top officers resigned under pressure from dissident creditors last week, said Friday that its directors had hired Drexel Burnam Lambert Inc. to advise the company on the sale of all or part of its assets.

The real estate and financial services company also said it would appoint new directors to represent the interests of preferred securities that are in arrears.

Southmark also announced in a statement that its board had adopted a "poison pill" to "protect the shareholders from various abusive takeover tactics.

Several investor groups have expressed interest in the company, Southmark said.

Gene E. Phillips, Southmark's former chairman and chief executive, and William S. Friedman, the former vice chairman, kept their 21.7 percent stake in Southmark as part of a settlement.

Builders warned of higher rates

By THOMAS C. HAYES
New York Times News Service

ATLANTA — With nearly a third of the nation's home mortgage debt now tied to short-term interest rates, the economy is likely to be jolted by cutbacks in consumer spending next year if those rates continue to rise as expected.

"You will see consumer pocketbooks hit in ways they have never been hit before," David Jones, an interest rate analyst with Aubrey G. Lanston & Co. in New York, said at a convention of the nation's home builders here this weekend.

He predicted that the Federal Reserve Board, in a move to halt slowly rising inflation, would push rates higher by mid-summer, setting the stage for much higher mortgage expenses for millions of American home owners in 1990.

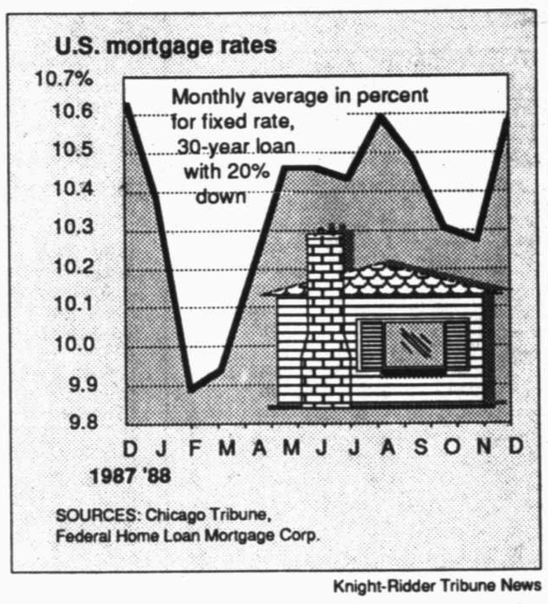

For example, an increase of 2 percentage points, to 13 percent, on a $100,000 adjustable rate mortgage would raise the monthly payment to $1,106, from $952.

Such an increase would require home owners with adjustable rate mortgages to pay a total of $10 billion more in annual payments.

"George Bush's biggest problem in 1989 could well be with the Federal Reserve," Jones said.

The analyst's remarks reflected the widespread foreboding at the convention, sponsored by the National Association of Home Builders, which drew an estimated 65,000 people.

The home builders heard other warnings as well. Reps. Raymond J. McGrath, R-N.Y., and Richard T. Schulze, R-Pa., told them that sentiment is building on Capitol Hill for sharp cuts in the deductions allowed for mortgage interest payments.

Popeye's bid must wait on Church's auction

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Popeye's Famous Fried Chicken owner Al Copeland will wait almost another month before finding out if he can buy competitor Church's Fried Chicken.

Copeland has agreed to keep his $292 million takeover offer on the table until Feb. 19, when Church's board of directors said it would finish an auction of the company. The agreement means Copeland is willing to see if anyone wants to top his $8 a share bid for Church's 36.6 million shares.

A federal judge in San Antonio has said he would probably rule that day on Church's key anti-takeover defense, often called a poison pill.

The hearing in federal court in San Antonio was on the validity of Church's shareholder rights plan. If triggered, it would dilute Church's shares and make it too expensive for Copeland to acquire Church's.

Under an agreement announced Saturday in San Antonio, Copeland gets to look at Church's books.

A dozen companies have seen financial records of the nation's No. 2 fried chicken chain under a standstill agreement that says they can't try a hostile takeover for a year. Copeland gets to see them without signing the standstill agreement.

Church's had asked that Copeland agree not to lower his offer below $8 a share, but it wasn't known if he agreed.

Copeland reportedly is worried that Church's books will show his offer is too high and that could hamper financing arrangements for any deal.

So far, he either owns or has been tendered 45 percent of outstanding Church's stock.

New Mexico oil leases brings in $1.8 million

SANTA FE (AP) — The New Mexico Land Office collected $1.8 million in bonuses on oil and gas leases on state trust land during the January lease sale, said Commissioner W.R. Humphries.

Leases on 90 tracks of state trust land were offered during the sale, covering 31,413 acres. Sealed bids averaged $69.71 per acre and oral bids averaged $35.90 per acre.

Humphries said the highest sealed bid was from Mitchell Energy Corp. of The Woodlands, Texas, which paid $205,000 for a 560-acre tract in Lea County 12 miles south of Maljamar.

The highest oral bid was made by Doug J. Schutz of Santa Fe, who offered $56,000 for 640 acres 17 miles west of Eunice in Lea County.

The highest per-acre sealed bid was made by Santa Fe Energy Operating Partners of Midland, Texas, offering $410 per acre for 320 acres 12 miles west of Hobbs in Lea County.

The highest per-acre oral bid was made by Yates Petroleum Corp. of Artesia, offering $700 per acre for40 acres 14 miles east of Roswell in Chaves County.

Most Land Office income is deposited in the $2.7 billion state permanent fund and invested for the benefit of the institutions for which the land is held in trust.

Interest rates should stay steady until mid-February

By KENNETH N. GILPIN
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — Barring sudden weakness in the dollar, credit market analysts predicted that interest rates should remain in a fairly narrow range for the next week or so. But the next real test will not come until mid-February, when the Treasury will hold its quarterly refunding auctions.

"Relationships between short- and intermediate-term moving averages show the money markets to be near equilibrium and capital markets to be mildly overbought," analysts at Technical Dimensions Inc., a bond advisory firm in Mount Kisco, N.Y., noted late last week. "This suggests that the current pause in bonds is mostly for correction and not a shift toward weakness. A firm underlying tone should persist and recoveries are likely after this pause."

By the end of last week, yields on the Treasury's 9 percent bonds of 2018 stood at 8.88 percent, virtually unchanged from where it closed Jan. 13.

Analysts anticipate that yields on the closely watched issue are likely to remain below 9 percent for a while longer.

Antitrust lawyers seeing signs times are a'changing

By STEPHEN LABATON
New York Times News Service

NEW YORK — A recent decision by a federal appeals court about a proposed merger of the two biggest herbal tea companies is being seen as a signal by antitrust lawyers that times could be changing.

The Manhattan panel said last week that a competitor of the tea companies had the right to challenge the merger, even if the Government did not think there was an antitrust problem.

A 1986 Supreme Court ruling put restrictions on challenges to mergers by private parties, but the latest decision indicates a sharp shift in the interpretation of antitrust regulations.

The action arose last year after Thomas J. Lipton Inc. a major maker of tea, said it would buy Celestial Seasonings, the largest producer of herbal teas.

After the Federal Trade Commission decided not to stop the merger, it was challenged by R.C. Bigelow Inc. A closely held company that began in 1945 in the Manhattan kitchen of Ruth C. Bigelow, the concern has grown to become the third-largest producer of herbal teas.

Lawyers for Lipton's parent company, Unilever N.V., last year convinced a Federal District Court that a challenge based on the size of a market share was merely speculative and did not demonstrate that Bigelow would suffer from "an antitrust injury."

But the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit disagreed. Writing for a unanimous three-judge bench, Frank X. Altimari said that the combined market share of the merging tea companies was sufficient to show a possible violation of Section 16 of the Clayton Antitrust Act.

Bigelow had asserted that a Lipton-Celestial Seasonings merger would form an entity controlling 84 percent of the market for herbal teas.

Eventually the deal between the two companies fell through, although the appeals court ruled that this fact did not make the legal issues moot.

An adviser to Unilever said the company planned a further appeal, either by asking for a rehearing or by requesting that the full membership of the Second Circuit consider the case.

But antitrust specialists said that, for now, the ruling would encourage rivals to seek to block large takeover attempts through the use of the antitrust laws.

"Before Bigelow there had been few private cases challenging horizontal mergers," said Stephen M. Axinn, head of the antitrust department at Skadden, Arps, Slate, Meagher & Flom. "Now it will almost be malpractice not to file a challenge once a tender offer is announced. The Second Circuit will enjoy a renaissance of antitrust cases, and I think we are all going to be awfully busy."

March contracts open weakly

From Staff and Wire Reports

Technical factors and profit-taking are depressing crude oil and refined product markets.

In moderate trading Friday on the New York Mercantile Exchange, the February contract for West Texas Intermediate lost 42 cents to $18.86 a barrel, after rising 2 cents on Thursday.

The February contract, which expired Friday, reached a 14-month high on Wednesday after breaking the psychologically important $19-a-barrel level. It shot up to $19.45 a barrel at one point Thursday before falling back largely on profit-taking.

In its first day as the near-month contract, March delivery contracts lost 44 cents this morning, trading at $17.95 at midmorning.

Among refined contracts traded on the exchange Friday, February home heating oil settled 1.15 cents lower to 52.60 cents a gallon.

The February contract for unleaded gasoline settled at 51.78 cents a gallon Friday, down 0.32 cent.

Peter Beutel, an energy analyst with Elders Futures Inc., said Friday's price decline was mainly because of technical conditions, which included profit-taking from the earlier rally.

But Beutel said the downturn also appeared to show a change in market sentiment to one of cautiousness from bullishness.

"It's a very jittery market right now," he said.

Dollar mostly higher in mixed market

LONDON (AP) — The dollar was mixed in early European trading today as traders assessed its near-term prospects following last week's increase in European interest rates and central bank interventions.

Gold rose in quiet trading.

In Tokyo, the dollar rose 0.15 yen to a closing 128.20. Later, in London, it was quoted at 128.30 yen.

In London, one British pound cost $1.7690, slightly more expensive for buyers than $1.7670 Friday.

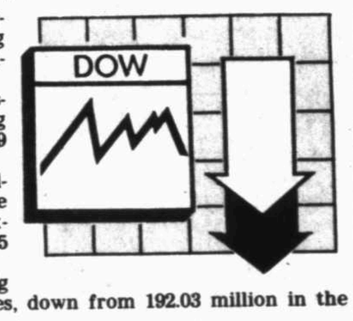

London's five major bullion dealers fixed a recommended price for gold of $407.75 a troy ounce at midmorning Monday, unchanged from the opening bid, but up from $405.25 bid late Friday.

In Zurich, the bid price was $407.60, up from $404.85 bid late Friday.

Earlier, in Hong Kong, gold fell 33 cents to close at a bid $409.15.

Silver rallied in London and was quoted at a bid price of $6.16 a troy ounce, up from Friday's $6.05.

Stocks stalled by inauguration

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market declined slightly Friday, biding its time through the change of command in Washington.

The Dow Jones average of 30 industrials slipped 3.75 to 2,235.36, closing out the week with a net gain of 9.29 points.

Declining issues outnumbered advances by about 8 to 7 in nationwide trading of New York Stock Exchange-listed stocks, with 659 up, 755 down and 547 unchanged.

Volume on the floor of the Big Board came to 166.10 million shares, down from 192.03 million in the previous session.

The market's recent rally stalled when the Dow Jones industrial average moved close to 2,250 — about the level where it stood on Oct. 16, 1987, just before the crash on Black Monday.

Brokers said that could turn out to be something of a psychological barrier for investors.

As measured by Wilshire Associates' index of more than 5,000 actively traded stocks, the market lost $0.13 billion, or less than a hundredth of 1 percent, in value.

The NYSE's composite index of all its listed common stocks dipped .09 to 161.16.

Standard & Poor's industrial index dropped 0.46 to 331.41, and S&P's 500-stock composite index was down 0.27 at 286.63.

The NASDAQ composite index for the over-the-counter market rose .54 to 391.62. At the American Stock Exchange, the market value index closed at 319.53, up .96.

BUSINESS IN BRIEF

Holly Farms chickens out on Tyson bid

MEMPHIS, Tenn. (AP) — The board of directors of Holly Farms Corp. rejected a sweetened $1.15 billion buyout offer from rival poultry producer Tyson Foods Inc., but invited Tyson and ConAgra Inc. to continue bidding for the firm.

Holly Farms acknowledged Friday that Tyson's $63.50-a-share cash bid topped ConAgra's offer to buy the company in a stock swap valued at $1 billion.

However, Holly Farms said, its board had doubts that Tyson could in fact pay $63.50 a share for the firm, and that Tyson would be able to close the deal because of litigation resulting from Holly Farms' proposed merger with ConAgra.

Home builders expects 7.4% drop in starts

ATLANTA (AP) — The nation's home builders are forecasting a 7.4 percent decline in housing starts and a 5 percent drop in new home sales this year.

The forecast Friday by the National Association of Home Builders came a day after the Commerce Department reported 1988 housing starts of 1.49 million, an 8.2 percent decrease from 1987's 1.62 million.

European ministers delay tougher duties

BRUSSELS, Belgium (AP) — European foreign ministers will likely delay implementation of tough duties on some U.S. imports in an effort to defuse tensions over a ban on hormone-treated meat from America, officials say.

The foreign ministers of the 12 nations of the European Economic Community will meet Monday to discuss the conflict sparked Jan. 1 when the trading bloc banned imports of U.S. meat from cattle treated with growth hormones.

The United States retaliated by imposing higher tariffs on a variety of products from the Common Market.

Cabinet business causes big Whirlpool loss

BENTON HARBOR, Mich. (AP) — Whirlpool Corp. said a poor showing by its kitchen cabinet business and expected losses from selling the business contributed to a $12 million fourth-quarter loss and a 51 percent drop in earnings for all of 1988.

But the appliance maker said Friday it posted sales gains of 3.8 percent for the quarter and 4.9 percent for the year despite declining sales industrywide, capturing greater market shares in most product categories.

Couple finds belief in anti-abortion battle, jail time binds them together

By JULIA DUIN
Hearst News Service

HOUSTON — One of the first dates Jason Boone had with Crystal Ann Markham was in the driveway of an abortion clinic.

On the morning of Oct. 29, Boone, a nursing student at San Jacinto College, was chained to another protester in front of the Houston Women's Clinic, 4820 San Jacinto. Markham, a nurse at St. John's Hospital in Nassau Bay, was sitting in the middle of the driveway.

Both went to jail on charges of obstructing a passageway, a Class B misdemeanor punishable by a maximum of six months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

After 26 hours, the two were released from Harris County Jail with 20 other protesters. That night, after discovering how similar their religious beliefs are, they talked about marriage. Six weeks later, they were husband and wife.

"It's time pro-lifers came out of the woodwork," said Jason Boone. "People are afraid to stand up for anything these days."

He and Crystal, who attend Clear Creek Friends (Quaker) Church near Clear Lake, say that studies of prenatal anatomy, physiology and organic chemistry convinced them that life begins at conception.

Genetically, a new person begins when the nuclei of the egg and sperm fuse, she said.

"Everything in those genes is what a person will be. There are no changes; it's just a matter of growth.

"As a nurse, I'm dedicated to preserving life. I wouldn't stand by and let someone kill a 2-year-old to give the mother freedom of choice. The pre-born are the same."

The couple were among 2,212 protesters in 42 cities who were arrested Oct. 29 in a nationwide flurry of protests organized by a Binghamton, N.Y., group called Operation Rescue.

Unlike previous anti-abortion efforts that revolved around letter writing, political lobbying or sidewalk "counseling" outside the clinics, this involved outright civil disobedience.

What's different about Operation Rescue is its makeup: Conservative Protestants, fundamentalists, charismatics and evangelicals who have not been active are coming out of the pew and into the street in ever-increasing numbers for sit-ins, demonstrations and jail sentences. According to the National Catholic Register, 658 protesters were arrested nationwide in 1986, 818 in 1987, and 12,000 in 1988.

Operation Rescue organizers are gambling that more and more people from this newly radicalized section of the "religious right" will get arrested and clog jails enough to bring about social change to overturn Roe vs. Wade, the landmark U.S. Supreme Court decision that legalized abortion.

Today, an estimated 50,000 marchers will parade down Constitution Avenue in Washington, D.C., to commemorate the 16th anniversary of Roe vs. Wade, which was Sunday.

Jim Horan, a history major at the University of Houston, joined the 197 demonstrators on Oct. 29 by locking himself to a 55-gallon barrel with a steel rod around his neck. The other end of the rod was encased in concrete in the barrel. Houston police officers freed him with the help of cutting torches.

Some abortion foes' strategy is to attach themselves to bulky landmarks to keep the police occupied moving them off the property, closing the clinic for the day or at least slowing its reopening.

"I was watching TV one day and I saw some other Christians being arrested in another anti-abortion demonstration in Atlanta," Horan said. "That really said something to me. I'd been saying that abortion was murder for years but never doing anything about it. I wasn't living out my faith."

Women recall first-hand experiences with consequences of illegal abortions

By BARBARA KARKABI
Hearst News Service

The four women come from very different backgrounds, but a common experience binds them. Each had a brush with the back-alley world of illegal abortions, in the years before the 1973 Supreme Court decision making the procedure legal.

Because of what they saw and experienced, the four women want their stories to be heard and remembered.

"I don't ever want anyone to have to go through what I did," said Jill, a social worker in her early 40s who, like three of the women, asked that her real name not be used. When she was a college sophomore, Jill went to Mexico for what she thought would be a safe abortion. Instead, she landed in the hospital with a life-threatening infection.

"It was a time in my life when I was scared to death. I was filled with horror, terror and shame," she said.

In the Roe vs. Wade case, the Supreme Court decided 7-2 on Jan. 22, 1973, that American women had a right to have an abortion, based on their right to privacy. Their decision launched a nationwide debate that gains strength each year.

Anti-abortion advocates — who equate abortion with murder — have protested at clinics and lobbied in hopes of having Roe vs. Wade overturned. With equal determination, the pro-choice side — which believes in a woman's right to choose when to have a child — has worked to preserve the decision.

As the 16th anniversary rolls around, both sides believe Roe vs. Wade is as close as it has ever been to reversal. Since 1973, the makeup of the court has changed, with four new justices appointed and a more conservative tilt evident.

Last week, the court agreed to review a Missouri law regulating abortions and stating that life begins at conception.

"This case could be what really does it," said Kate Michelman, executive director of the National Abortion Rights Action League.

"The justices don't even have to reverse their decision on Roe vs. Wade. All they have to do is send it back to the states to decide, and it would be overturned that way."

"When I see it threatened, I have that really helpless, powerless feeling — similar to what I felt when I was trying to get an abortion," said Jill, dressed in a business suit and looking like the consummate professional.

Jill is still haunted by the fact that she and her boyfriend worked hard to avoid back alleys and find a safe place for an abortion.

Looking back, she realizes they had found the underground route to Mexico — complete with pre-arranged flight, motel and taxi pickup.

Unfortunately, Jill found it to be as dangerous as the back alley. She ended up in the hospital with a serious infection that almost sterilized her.

When the hospital called her parents, it precipitated a family crisis that was never resolved. Until Jill bore a son years later, she worried about her ability to have a child.

"It would have been a painful personal decision to make, but not a life-threatening, criminal one. It wouldn't have affected me, my boy friend or my parents the way it did."

It is estimated that 1.2 million illegal abortions were performed annually before 1973. As a nurse in the emergency room at Jeff Davis and Ben Taub hospitals in the early '60s, Cookie Mirsky saw the effects of back-alley abortions. It was so commonplace, she said, that doctors and nurses would not even bat an eye.

As a sophomore at a leading black university for women in the '50s, Betty saw desperation firsthand when one of her six suite mates became pregnant.

In spite of their middle-class innocence, the five friends managed to pool their money and find a place for their friend to get an abortion.

"It was typical what you would think — in the slums, the dingiest, darkest place you can imagine," she said. "I went in with my friend, and she was crying. The woman told her: 'You got into this situation, now shut up.' "

Ursula believes rich women will always be able to get abortions.

"A change of that law will not affect the well-to-do, it will only hurt the poor. They will return to the back alley again, and they will be sterilized or die, just like they did before," she said.

Wish you were here — It's great!

Saddle Club

Chris-
Just wanted to drop you a line to let you know I'm all settled into my new spot at Saddle Club Apartments. And it's just fantastic! This place has everything I need and even more! I never imagined that apartment living could be like this, or I would have moved here months ago. Spacious and affordable. Private, but the people are really friendly. And the amenities are out of this world!
Give me a call soon. Or drop by sometime-I'm sure you'll enjoy it. Life at Saddle Club Apartments is simply...GREAT!
