Bush signals confusion

Advisers flip-flop on economic questions

■ Budget hearings draw conflicting answers from presidential staff.

By David E. Rosenbaum
N.Y. Times News Service

WASHINGTON — President Bush and his top economic advisers, undecided about what to propose to revive the flagging economy, sent mixed signals Thursday on cutting taxes and on whether to violate last year's budget agreement.

The confusion was clearest on Capitol Hill. On the first day of a series of congressional hearings on tax policy and the state of the economy, the economic advisers at first suggested that giving the economy a quick jolt was more important than holding to the budget agreement.

But they came back from a short lunch saying that breaking the agreement was unacceptable.

The contrary messages seemed to underscore what public opinion polls show to be the president's most serious political vulnerability: his administration's seeming lack of a coherent economic policy.

The president himself heightened political tension over the economy at a news conference. While his advisers at the hearing were urging lawmakers to work in a bipartisan fashion, Bush blamed Congress for worsening the economy by not passing measures he had proposed over the last three years.

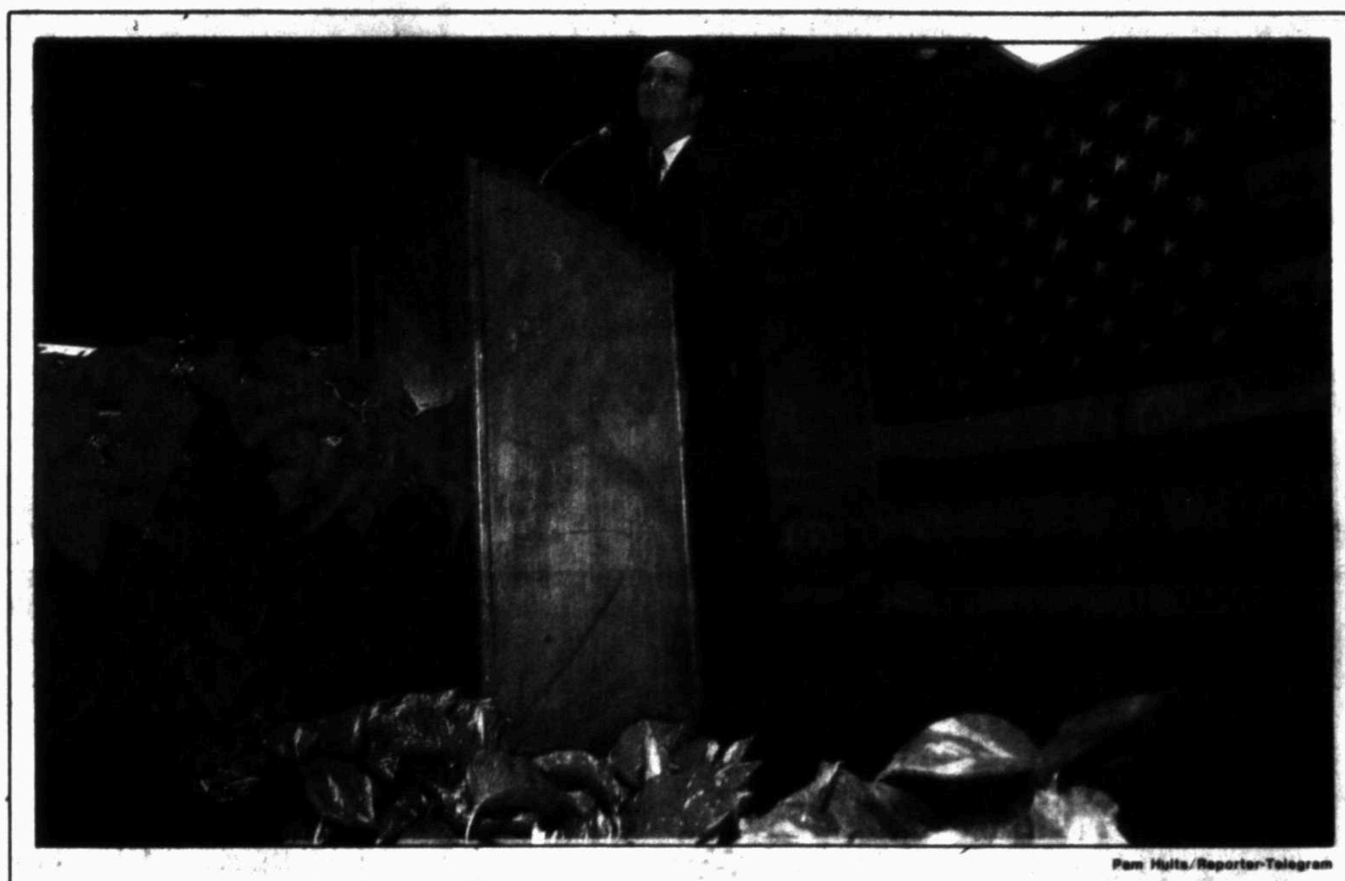

He said that after he reveals his new proposals in his State of the Union Message next month, he would go "directly to the American people, over the heads of the subcommittees and the Congress and say, 'Please support us in helping this economy.'"

The discussion of the economy Thursday came as Bush named a new chief of staff, Transportation Secretary Samuel K. Skinner, and a team of close associates to run his re-election campaign.

Bush also ordered the speedup of $9.8 billion in federal spending, but economists said the amount was too small to kick life into a $5 trillion economy.

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

David Eisenhower was in the company of "eagles," those former deadly flying rivals, now tempered by the years, who tried to shoot one another out of the skies during World War II.

Eisenhower, a Pennsylvania-based political scientist is the biographer of his famous grandfather, Dwight David "Ike" Eisenhower, who was supreme allied commander of the Allied Expeditionary Forces in Europe and the 34th president of the United States. He saluted those eagles in a way reminiscent of his grandfather Thursday night at the American Airpower Heritage Museum's.

"All nations recognize courage and valor and value (those qualities) in all people," Eisenhower said in greeting a delegation from the Japanese Zero Fighter Pilots' Association.

The group — including Sadamu Komachi, a Mitsubishi A6M3 Zero pilot who flew in the infamous air attack on Pearl Harbor 50 years ago this Saturday — is to appear on a panel at 10:15 a.m. today at the Holiday Inn to discusss the attack and to give a perspective on the war.

Pearl Harbor a treacherous deception, author says

By Ed Todd
Staff Writer

The Dec. 7, 1941, Japanese attack on U.S. naval and air forces at Pearl Harbor was a "treacherous" and "deliberately-ordered national deception" that galvanized and infuriated the American people.

So intense was America's rage and unity that, almost four years later, the dropping of atomic bombs on Japan seemed to be the right thing to do even though Japan was, in August 1945, a defeated nation, said Ned Beach, a naval historian, author, and World War II submarine commander.

The attack was a "carefully planned, full-scale national act of war during a time of peace ... when negotiations were taking place, thus converting what we thought was honest diplomacy to straight-out deception," Beach said Thursday at the American Airpower Heritage Museum's symposium "Prelude to Pearl Harbor: The Inter-war Years" at the Midland Holiday Inn.

After the attack, There could be no negotiations with militarized Japan's divine emperor, Hirohito, whose aim was to overwhelm the United States, and conquer China and the Pacific, he said.

"At Pearl Harbor, Japan burned all of her bridges," Beach said. "She was lucky to have been allowed to rebuild

Smith lawyer grills accuser on credibility

By David Margolick
N.Y. Times News Service

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — For more than five hours Thursday, William K. Smith's chief defense counsel tried to chip away at the credibility of the 30-year-old woman who has said his client raped her last March on the Kennedy family's estate.

Three times the woman broke down on the stand and the judge called recesses for the witness to regain her composure.

In his cross-examination, the defense lawyer, Roy E. Black of Miami, jumped from one stage of the couple's evening together to another, fast-forwarding and reversing course.

Trying to raise reasonable doubts about Smith's guilt in the jurors' minds, Black harped on what he charged was the complainant's selective memory. She recalled eating the Caesar salad and rigatoni alla vodka the evening of the episode, he pointed out, but not, for instance, when or where she had removed her panty hose.

Sharp announces state expenditure in Midland County

By John Powers
Reporter-Telegram Austin Bureau

AUSTIN — The state spent $123.9 million in Midland County and another $134 million in Ector County during fiscal 1991, according to a first-ever report on how expenditures are distributed throughout Texas.

State agencies spent $25.8 billion for goods, services and payroll in the Texas' 254 counties for the fiscal year ended Aug. 31. The 284-page report from the office of Comptroller John Sharp was ordered by House Bill 1, the 1992-93 budget appropriations bill.

"As can be expected, the report shows that expenditures follow the state's population," Sharp said. "Harris County, the state's biggest, with a population

Parents air gripes about busing, cluster plan

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

The problems with busing and Midland's cluster system were once again the main topics of Thursday night's community meeting.

About 80 persons gathered at Emerson Elementary School for the third of seven meetings hosted by Midland school board trustees.

The meetings were set up in each of the seven board members' districts to discuss school boundary changes. The changes are necessitated by the additions of a new junior high and elementary school.

"The boundary issues are the most important," said Joe Cummins, executive director of planning for the district.

"We haven't discussed boundaries or a feeder system as much as we want to," said superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. prior to opening the floor for discussion.

Adding the fourth junior high would allow the district the option of having a pure feeder system, with two junior highs "feeding" students to Lee High School and two feeding into Midland High School.

The three junior highs are currently "mixed" with students destined for both high schools attending each.

The first person who spoke brought up the issue of long bus rides, and others followed suit to air complaints about everything from the distance between cluster schools to the number of students sitting in each bus seat.

Several parents living near Goddard Junior High School and Emerson also said "bands of students were roaming" their neighborhoods while waiting for buses.

One woman, new to Midland, expressed confusion about the district's cluster system — a court-ordered system of integration which involves grouping schools into clusters for busing.

Japan's latest economic moves remain touchy subject

EDITOR'S NOTE: Today's attitudes toward the Japanese are still haunted by Pearl Harbor Ghosts and no Hawaiian ethnic group is more touchy about the Japanese then the Hawaiians of Japanese descent. Part five of a five-part excerpt from Pearl Harbor Ghosts.

By Thurston Clarke
L.A. Times News Service

In Hawaii, anger over Pearl Harbor has proved to be a resilient emotion, leaving several generations thin-skinned toward the Japanese. Like Hiroshima, Pearl Harbor has become a backdrop to Japanese-American interactions, the curtain against which political and economic transactions are projected. Since Pearl Harbor was uniquely shocking and humiliating, it is only logical that American attitudes toward Japan should be uniquely sensitive, and that today's economic disputes should be haunted by Pearl Harbor ghosts. And so Japan's trade policies are likened to a form of "treachery," a U.S. senator describes the export of Japanese cars to America as an economic Pearl Harbor," and advertisements for American automobiles feature references to Emperor Hirohito, exaggerated Japanese accents, and ridicule of the Japanese physique.

Opinion polls now reflect an increased dislike and distrust of the Japanese, corresponding to a rise in Japanese investment in America and the purchase of symbolic American assets such as Rockefeller Center, Pebble Beach, and Columbia Pictures. In 1988, 63 percent of Americans believed Japanese investment in the United States should "be discouraged," and 44 percent said Japan was "America's least trustworthy ally" (29 percent chose West Germany, and 18 percent France). Although the higher level of resentment and anger may be new, its existence is not. "There is anger left," a kamaaina who had lived through Pearl Harbor told me, "And it comes to the fore when the Japanese are overwhelming." This residual resentment is strong in Hawaii which, in addition to having the largest population of Pearl Harbor eyewitnesses of any state, has felt the impact of Japan's economic success and foreign investment more than anywhere else.

If I mentioned Pearl Harbor to a resident of Hawaii I usually heard something like, "They couldn't invade us, so now they're buying us." "What they couldn't do with their bombs they're doing with their yen." Or, if the speaker had a certain perspective, "We have turned their yen into bombs." (Cy Gilette told me, "It's our damn fault. . . . This is the difference now, we're doing Pearl Harbor to ourselves.") And always it was "they" or "them," telltale words signifying the enemy in any society under assault. "They" were the million and a half Japanese tourists a year, or the Japanese investors who owned most choice industries and commercial properties, or the Japanese speculators who were buying land and houses of every description.

No Hawaiian ethnic group is more touchy about Japanese tourists, real estate speculators, and the growing influence of Japan on island affairs than the Pearl Harbor generation of niseis, Hawaiians of Japanese descent.

It can be difficult listening to the Japanese of Hawaii damn Japanese nationals without letting on you find it somewhat surprising or ironic. But by doing so, you imply they should react to Japan differently from other Americans, precisely the misconception they struggled against during the war. In 1941, it was feared Japanese-Americans in the Hawaii Territorial guard could not be trusted to fight Japanese invaders. Now it is sometimes assumed they might be less opposed to the colonization of Hawaii by foreign Japanese. Perhaps I made an offhand comment in this regard, or perhaps it was an expression on my face that prompted Mr. Fujiyama to crank up his Japan-bashing and say, "We don't need Johnny-come-latelies with cash to run everything here. The postwar Japanese businessman has picked up some bad Western habits. As far as I'm concerned we should get a big bulldozer and bulldoze them into the ocean!"

Behind his anger was fear the foreign Japanese would encourage a new round of anti-Japanese prejudice. "These Japanese don't understand what they're doing to me and other niseis," he said. "They don't understand the sacrifices we made during the war. We worked hard to have our place in the sun and nobody says to me now, 'Hey, boy, cut my grass,' 'Park my car.' But now they're rocking the boat for all of us."

For 35 years, Richard Ishimoto has lived in Black Point, a thumb of land pushing into the Pacific from the back side of Diamond Head. It was once a laid-back neighborhood of breezy ranch houses, but is now the most expensive and desirable neighborhood on Oahu.

The neighborhood now has two kinds of houses — the new concrete villas of the absentee foreign Japanese and the simple wooden bungalows of the locals. It is only a matter of time, perhaps less than a decade, before the remainder of these are purchased by Japanese investors for astronomical sums, torn down, and replaced.

Ishimoto says his house will be the last to go.

Until two years before, he had a sweeping view of a beach so secluded and lovely it was often used as a backdrop for movies and television program such as "Hawaii Five-O." Look in the same direction now and you see the concrete wall and locked and shuttered windows of a new $5 million beachfront house bought six months ago by a Japanese family who have yet to use it. If they are like his other absentee neighbors, they will show up twice a year and stay a week or two each time. Theirs is one of six villas jammed together on a lot that once contained houses like Ishimoto's, a typical island bungalow with tanks of tropical fish, linoleum floors, and a breezy parlor opening onto a screened porch.

"Before, I had neighbors, breezes, and a view of the ocean," he says. "Now I have higher taxes." Because of this development and ones like it, the value of his house has increased by $240,000 in two years, and his property taxes have risen accordingly. He had hoped to leave the house to his son, but taxes will force his son to sell it. In the meantime, to afford the increased property taxes, Ishimoto has had to take a second job, as caretaker and general handyman for his new Japanese neighbors.

Before the attack, American animosity toward Japan was largely motivated by racism, and expressed in those terms. Afterward came a bitter loathing, intensified by Japanese treachery and the shock and humiliation of a defeat made more painful by the overconfidence preceding it. This poisonous hatred of Japan has eased, but not evaporated. What was pure racism in 1941 has become a more complex distrust of the Japanese nation, grounded in Pearl Harbor and amplified by Japan's economic success and its investors' obsession with acquiring American "trophies."

In 1941, Pearl Harbor was a symbol of American naval power in the Pacific. It was a trophy, just as houses in Black Point are the trophies of Oahu real estate, and just as Columbia Pictures, MCA, Rockefeller Center, and Pebble Beach are symbolic American trophies.

With the passing of the war and postwar generations, Pearl Harbor animosity will fade, the shadow December 7 throws over life in Hawaii will diminish, and the only strong Pearl Harbor legacy remaining will be a sense of vulnerability.

BUSH: Advisers send confused messages political pressure to take steps to speed the nation's recovery from recession, and the Democrats are determined to tighten the screws at every opportunity.

But the administration seems torn between conservatives who are interested primarily in tax cuts and care little about the budget deficit and moderates who see the deficit, about $350 billion this year, as a monstrous long-term weight on the economy that must be lifted.

The president and his inner circle may not disagree so much among themselves as they are worried about the potential for political damage in picking one course above the other.

The budget law enacted last year after tortuous negotiations between the White House and congressional leaders required that any tax cut be offset by tax increases elsewhere or spending reductions in domestic programs.

Early in a long day of testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee, Richard G. Darman, the budget director, was asked whether those budget rules should be broken in the interest of stimulating the economy.

He replied, "I would very much hope that we could continue to live within the discipline of the budget agreement. Our first objective has to be restoring short-term growth on a basis that is sustainable with respect to long-term growth."

"If we can do that within the budget framework, we should," he continued, "but the first priority is growth."

Michael J. Boskin, the chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, testified it was a "myth" that any measure that would increase the budget deficit would automatically lead to a counterproductive jump in long-term interest rates because of the fear of inflation.

But the administration's tune seemed to change after a 20-minute lunch break. Asked shortly after lunch whether he believed that the budget deficit should not be "violated," Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady replied, "That's correct. If it was violated, it would raise interest rates."

By the end of the day, Darman was saying that breaking the budget deal would shock the markets and central bankers around the world.

Darman told a Democratic questioner that it would be unacceptable to cut military spending or raise taxes on the wealthy to finance a tax reduction for middle-income taxpayers.

Dozens of Democrats are sponsoring bills that they say would provide middle-class tax relief. The measures differ widely. But almost all of them would cut by hundreds of dollars a year the taxes of households with annual incomes in the $20,000 to $60,000 range, and they would offset the cost with either cuts in military spending, increased taxes on the wealthy or both.

At his news conference, Bush seemed to vacillate over whether he supported tax cuts for those people. He had this exchange with reporters:

Q. Do you think the middle class deserve a tax cut?

A. Listen, I think every American deserves to pay less taxes.

Q. Do you think, though, that the need is such that that is an area where you would consider breaking the budget agreement?

A. I don't want interest rates to go sky high. I noticed tht when one proposal was proposed, long-term interest rates, just on the proposal, went up through the roof. So whatever we do has got to be economically sound. But if your answer is, do I think the middle class are paying a very heavy tax burden, the answer to the question is, absolutely."

The Democrats sponsoring the tax measures are scheduled to appear before the Ways and Means Committee Friday, as are conservative Republican representatives who are backing a package of tax cuts that they say would generate economic growth.

It was the Republicans' offering of that package just before Thanksgiving in the last days of the congressional session and the president's endorsement of the plan when it had barely been drafted that generated Thursday's hearing and the current political tussle.

The Democrats believe they can score politically by showing that the vast majority of tax relief from the Republican plan would go to the wealthiest Americans.

The president's advisers bobbed and weaved Thursday when they were asked about the plan. Brady kept repeating that the president was "enthusiastic" about the package but he added that "with regard to proposals in the package, some of them are ones that he has approved before, some of them are ones that he hasn't and some are the ones we are looking at.".

Among the many elements of the plan are a lower capital-gains tax, a new form of individual retirement account, an increase in the amount of money older people can earn without having their Social Security benefits reduced and new tax breaks for small businesses and real estate investments.

Asked whether he wished Congress had hastily passed the plan before adjournment, Brady responded, "I was enthusiastic about it, and I'm going to leave my comments there."

The president and his advisers say that redistributing income would do nothing to improve the economy.

BEACH: Attack angered Americans, author says

later. Other nations might not have been so compassionate (as was the United States) and, perhaps, this was an out-growth of the atomic bomb."

The dropping of the atomic bombs on Hiroshima on Aug. 6, 1945, and on Nagasaki three days later, was on an enemy that already was "prostrate before our everywhere-victorious forces," Beach said.

"Nonetheless, it's true that 'the bomb' made unnecessary the invasion (of Japan) that would have cost more Japanese lives than were lost (120,000) at the Hiroshima and Nagasaki together. There would have been many American lives lost as well," Beach said.

"But, no invasion was necessary. Japanese peace-feelers already had been received by Switzerland and Sweden and, of all nations, the Soviet Union."

Today, Beach said, most Americas probably regret the dropping of those two atomic bombs, but America need not apologize for the atomic bombing.

"We were still angry about Pearl Harbor."

"Had the war begun in any other way ... we most probably would have simply stood back and let the inevitable collapse take place," Beach said. "Japan had totally lost the war, and her leaders knew it. We had a complete naval blockade" of the island-nation. America's bombers were "systematically burning her cities. There was nothing whatsoever she could do about any of this."

In retrospect, Beach said, "It is an enduring principle of history (that) we must never forget the context of the times which things happen."

Pearl Harbor was not a "mere attack by zealot commanders or a result of misunderstanding, accident of mis-identification," Beach said. It was a national plot led by a militaristic emperor, who was loyally followed and worshiped by the Japan's military forces who, in the main, viewed him as divine and who could do no wrong.

By 1941, Japan already had conquered mineral-rich Manchuria, which it needed to fuel its military needs in conquering the rest of China and the Pacific.

In negotiations, the United States had sought to temper Japan's ruthless aggression and to get the nation to surrender some of its conquests.

"There was growing sentiment among some Japanese that our country forced the attack on them," Beach said, and "that Pearl Harbor was a great military victory."

Without doubt, the United States, which was convinced war with Japan was imminent, was putting pressure on Japan to ease her aggression, he said.

"Pearl Harbor was an ambush — not a military victory," said Beach, a prolific writer who has authored three novels, "Submarine," "Run Silent, Run Deep," "Cool Is The Sea" and the historical book "The United States Navy, 200 Years." He is a 1939 graduate of the U.S. Naval Academy.

"To call Pearl Harbor a 'battle' is the same as saying 'It is fair to shoot someone in the back while pretending friendship,'" Beach said.

Japan's dastardly attack on a "much larger, more populous, more industrially-developed United States" was enforced by "imperial narcissism" and by the devoted and selfish warriors, the samurai, who "lived every day ready to die for their emperor."

Japanese Admiral Isoroku Yamamoto, who was acquainted with America's industrial might and potential, engineered the surprise Pearl Harbor attack but misinterpreted the will and resolve of the American people.

"The attack on our base at Pearl Harbor was made during peacetime and on Sunday morning," Beach recalled.

"Yamamoto insisted on the surprise attack in order to weaken our resolve and to lead quickly to negotiated peace."

Though he was a "distinguished, thoughtful man," Yamamoto totally misjudged America's resolve. He surmised that the "attack would disheartened us enough" that United States would sue for a peace treaty.

On Dec. 11, four days after the infamous attack, Germany's Adolf Hitler personally declared war on the United States. The stroke was against the advice of Hitler's General Staff who preferred dealing with a neutral, though unfriendly United States that was supplying war machines and munitions to the the Allies, especially Great Britain.

"Germany's aggression in Europe would be matched by Japan's aggression in Asia," Beach said.

Hitler's declaration of war on the United States was "the greatest mistake of Hitler's entire misbegotten career, for it irrevocably doomed his murderous tyranny," Beach said.

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt "was as surprised as anyone else and probably a lot more dismayed ... by Germany's declaration of war on the United States."

Hurd art show opens today

Staff Report

A showing of 50 sketches and watercolors by American artist Peter Hurd opens today at the American Airpower Heritage Museum, Midland International Airport.

Free admission to the museum will be offered during its Grand Opening from noon to 5 p.m. Saturday and from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Hurd, recruited by both Life magazine and the Army Air Corps in 1942, created artistic documentation of the common lives of airmen, soldiers and sailors. His initial assignment was the first operational days of the Eighth Air Force in England.

Sketchbook always ready, Hurd made quick thumbnail sketches and took notes of everything — B-17E practice runs, the English countryside, crewmates at work. He wrote of "the fated look on these boys' faces" and later, described them as "a band of legendary heroes (whose) faces haunt me."

Hurd traveled the globe covering the war for Life — South America, Africa, India and Italy. In Italy with the Fifth Army, Hurd encountered his first ground combat, a frontal assault by tanks and infantry.

It was an experience he later described as being "too vast, too horrible, too paradoxical to be paintable (by me at least) ... "

The American Airpower Heritage Museum, located in the 85-acre Confederate Air Force Headquarters complex, is internationally recognized for its authentic World War II artifacts and memorabilia.

Open to the public year round except Christmas Day, visitors may tour the museum Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday and holidays from noon to 5 p.m.

Standard admission will be $4 for adults, $3 for teen-agers and senior citizens and $2 for children ages 6 through 12. Special group rates are available.

For more information on the Hurd exhibit, call Norma Webb, 563-1000.

EAGLES: Eisenhower discusses war in Europe

(From 1A)

Following that discussion, Joe Foss, a U.S. Marine Corps ace who scored 26 victories battling Japanese pilots in the Pacific, is to speak at noon. Among the aircraft he flew were the Wildcat and the Corsair.

Eisenhower outlined his grandfather's military career through insights from the general's diary and recalled his tour 10 years ago of the beaches of Normandy, France.

It was there on D-Day, June 6, 1944, when Allied forces, directed by Eisenhower, hit the beaches after having left England and crossing the English Channel.

Today, there is only faint reminders, mostly monuments, of the invasion of German-occupied Europe.

"There was almost no evidence of the battle at all," David Eisenhower said.

But there was, he said, an "unmistakable feeling among the French (that) they really didn't want to be reminded" of the battle. "They weren't sure they liked Americans that much. It was an effort to down-play Americans. We felt that."

But at a souvenir stand, dressed up with Normandy landscape artworks that were devoid of battle scenes, was a poster of U.S. Army Gen. George "Old Blood and Guts" Patton.

"I said, 'Now there's a guy who stands for nothing but American supremacy,' and they're selling posters of Patton."

The poster was headlined: "An Eagle in any Language appeals."

"That's what this fighter (pilots') bond is," Eisenhower said. "They recognize guys (of all nationalities) who suited up just like we did and survived."

Foss later noted that when American, British, German and Japanese pilots get together, "We have a lot of wild tales."

Ves Townsley, a U.S. Navy flying-boat (PBY Catalina) bombardier who was on the ground at Pearl Harbor shooting at attacking warplanes, noted today's lack of animosities.

"I was on the ground shooting at them, and they were shooting at me," said Townsley, who now lives in Abilene.

And Ryu Hatano, who was a Japanese Navy cadet when the war ended in 1945 and who admires the Zero fighter, said he was "very happy" to be in the United States at peacetime 50 years after Pearl Harbor. "Peace is best."

GRIPES: Meeting attracts unhappy parents

(From 1A)

Others just said they wanted to see the cluster system revamped so that some cluster schools were not "clear across town from each other."

Karen McCoy said she provided transportation rather than have one of her children leave for a bus at 7 a.m. and return home at 4:30 p.m.

Eddie Jones said, "I am all for integration. It is how we are doing it that I question."

In an impassioned speech which received some of the loudest applause of the evening, Ms. Jones challenged trustees to give parents a list of options for discussion, rather than just asking parents for input on issues.

"Give us a list of the advantages and disadvantages of magnet schools," she said. "We want to find the best way for all of our children — black, white or brown. We are losing one in four every year. This has got to stop ... Give us some input. You are asking for our input and we are saying: Where is the leadership? You are the experts. Help us."

Parents said there was a lack of supervision for students who arrived at Emerson by bus at 7:20 a.m. prior to school beginning at 8:15 a.m.

Other speakers recommended regrouping the cluster schools so that they would be closer to each other and shorten students' time spent riding or waiting for buses.

Alma Marshall, the chairman of FOCUS (Federation of Citizens United to Serve) read a statement from the organization, LULAC (League of United Latin American Citizens) and the Midland Chapter of the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored Persons). The statement — said in part — "... we are willing to discuss minor alterations to the implementation of the (court-decreed) plan, but we will vigorously oppose major conceptual changes."

Ms. Marshall said revamping the cluster system would be acceptable provided it didn't hamper integration. "We fully intend to take those measures that will protect and defend the rights and privileges of minorities," she said. "We are reasonable people who represent reasonable people."

Ms. Marshall challenged persons who want a better cluster system to come up with a plan and present it to the board.

Mike Conaway also encouraged members of the audience to develop a plan to improve the system. "I support integration and the cluster system of integration in earnest," he said. "We need to present a plan first to make changes."

The community meetings will rersume in January with the next being at 7 p.m. Jan. 9 in Washington Elementary School.

TRIAL: Woman describes events at compound

"I assume you were trying to be accurate as well," Black replied.

Late in the day, the defense lawyer gave way to the prosecutor, Moira K. Lasch, who began a second round of friendly questions for the accuser. In what appeared to be a potentially serious misstep, the witness told Mrs. Lasch she had pursued her rape complaint against Smith because she did not want "to be responsible for him doing it to someone else."

Speculation about what a defendant might do in the future is not admissible, and the judge ordered the words stricken from the record. But it is possible that Black could use the remarks as a basis for saying the trial was tainted.

In a particularly confrontational part of his cross-examination, Black charged that in some instances, she had altered her testimony to counteract exhibits in the case and the expert defense testimony she knows to be on tap.

A defense expert will soon testify, for instance, that had she screamed in the direction of the house as she claimed, someone inside would have heard her; that is why, Black asserted, she was now saying her head had been turned toward the ocean, not the house, as she cried for help.

"It's not a matter of changing testimony," she said. "It's what I recall now."

Each time Black ventured in his questioning to the stairs and lawn where, according to his accuser, Smith chased, tackled and raped her, the woman's voice faltered and grew softer, as if in dread of what she knew she would have to discuss next.

She first broke down in the morning, after Black asked her if Smith's penis had been fully erect when he tried to rape her. The question is crucial for the defense, for the accuser has said both that Smith forced himself upon her and that he had been only partially erect — something an expert for the defense will testify next week is a physical impossibility.

"Why do you have to ask me questions like this?" she said, and she began to cry.

Black quickly asked her if she wanted a recess. "No, I will get through this," she said quietly. "This has been a nightmare for me. I want this over with."

bering those details," Black said.

The woman responded, "Those were not traumatic events."

Comparing the woman's trial testimony with earlier statements she had given to the police, Black noted inconsistencies at several stages of her version of events: when he had first proposed going for a swim and whether he had kissed her before or afterward; the words he used to invite her into the Kennedy estate; whether she had fallen to the ground or simply stumbled after she said Smith had tackled her at the top of the stairs; and how far from the house the purported rape occurred.

The woman acknowledged that she had "a lot of memory lapses."

"I was trying as hard as I could to forget everything that had happened to me, but everyone wanted to remember," she said at one point.

At another, she said that her psychologist had given her "the tools" to remember certain details, like the fact that she had addressed Smith as "Michael" after the incident. Sometimes, she said, she furnished responses just to be

Kravchuk takes oath as Ukrainian president

■ New leader says nation would have close ties to Russia and wants to eliminate nuclear weapons on its soil.

Associated Press

KIEV, Ukraine — Leonid Kravchuk was sworn in Thursday as Ukraine's president, and he sought to reassure those concerned about the nuclear weapons on its soil by pledging that Ukraine will be peaceful and democratic.

Kravchuk

He said Ukraine would have close ties to Russia and that his republic wants to eliminate all the nuclear weapons on its territory through negotiations with the United States and the Soviet Union.

The former Communist Party official, who has made a 180-degree political turnaround this year, also said he would carry out "radical economic reform," including turning industry over to private ownership, selling off state property and encouraging foreign investment.

"Only a free citizenry can create a free state," Kravchuk told the 450-member Parliament, which punctuated his 20-minute address with several joyous standing ovations.

"Ukraine does not have any territorial claims against other states and does not acknowledge any territorial claims against it."

In the evening, fireworks lit the sky above Kiev, and exuberant citizens celebrated in the streets, shouting "Glory to Ukraine."

Voters in Ukraine sent a strong message to Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev that they want no part of his proposed plan to hold the Soviet Union together. Gorbachev has said the new union would be unthinkable without Ukraine, which overwhelmingly approved a referendum on independence Sunday.

The Russian Federation, the union's biggest and most powerful republic, already accepted independence for Ukraine. The United States and other nations indicated they planned to do so.

The voices of a 50-member choir filled the ornate, skylit parliamentary chamber for Kravchuk's colorful inauguration ceremony, which included a formal renunciation of the 1922 treaty that established the Soviet Union.

The choir, dressed in embroidered folk costumes, sang "Prayer for Ukraine," and concluded the session with the doleful national anthem, "Ukraine Is Not Yet Dead."

Anna Sivolap, a milkmaid and mother of five, walked to the podium as a representative of the land long considered the breadbasket of the Soviet Union.

"In the name of Ukrainian women and mothers, I greet you as president!" said Mrs. Sivolap, wearing a traditional white blouse, embroidered with red and green flowers.

A smiling Kravchuk, dressed in a dark suit and red tie, then took the oath of office, followed by an address by Oles Honchar, Ukraine's most famous living author.

"No matter who became president, his task would have been to fight for a free Ukraine," the septuagenarian Honchar said. Parliament erupted in applause when he added that "Jews, Ukrainians, Crimean Tatars — all must have equal rights" in the newly proclaimed country.

Kravchuk promised in his inaugural address to carry out widespread privatization of the economy, convert defense factories to civilian production, create a customs service to control export of Ukrainian agricultural products and devote 10 percent of the country's gross national product to education.

He said Ukraine, the sixth most populous country in Europe, with 52 million inhabitants, will observe all international treaties of the former Soviet Union, protect the rights of ethnic minorities and guarantee freedom of religion.

Speaking to reporters later, Kravchuk reiterated that Ukraine would not sign Gorbachev's proposed Union Treaty. "The most important thing is that 93 percent of the Ukrainian people voted not to sign that treaty," he said.

However, he held out the possibility of special close ties with the Russian Federation. "Russia will always have a kind of priority for us, and Russia and Ukraine will have a kind of union," Kravchuk said, giving few details.

The president also said Ukraine would consider a loose economic union with both Russia and Byelorussia — with which it forms the Soviet Union's Slavic heartland — under a loose coordinating body rather than a central government "that could appropriate their powers."

Soviets mark 50th anniversary of Battle of Moscow

MOSCOW (AP) — Soviets waved flags and carried portraits of Josef Stalin outside the Kremlin on Thursday to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the Battle of Moscow.

Roughly 1,000 people ignored the snowy, cold weather and congregated on Manezh Square, many carrying black-and-white portraits of Stalin and war hero Marshal Grigory Zhukov. They remembered the day on which Red Army troops turned back Nazi battalions on the outskirts of the Soviet capital.

"Every city has a certain glorious and important role in the fate of the country, but Moscow is a symbol of patience and courage," the newspaper Moskovskaya Pravda wrote.

On Dec. 5, 1941, Soviet troops, aided by bitter winter weather, launched a counteroffensive against the advance of the Wehrmacht at the edge of the capital.

German soldiers had advanced so close to Moscow they could hear bells ringing from the city's churches. A monument marking the battle site was erected on the main road leading to St. Petersburg near Moscow's international airport.

"It was a terrible time. There were bombs everywhere. I was only 7 years old, but I remember everything," said retired economist Lydia Kuzminichnaya, 57, who came to Manezh Square holding a large hand-lettered sign protesting the policies of the Russian government.

"There were horrible bombings. They destroyed one house, then another and another. I remember going on my hands and knees to save a homeless cat," she recalled.

As the mournful strains of a Tchaikovsky funeral march droned from a loudspeaker, columns of both old and young people solemnly laid flowers at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier inside the Kremlin gates.

After brief moments of reflection, the crowd strolled to the Hotel Moskva, where representatives of extreme right-wing groups spoke.

"In 1944 I fought to liberate the Baltic states, and it makes my blood boil to think of the nationalists who are living there now," said Anatoly Ivanovich, who said he received a military medal at the age of 18.

"I have a comrade who is buried in the Baltics. I know what they're saying in Latvia. They're all lying. We weren't occupiers. What occupiers were we? It's all a perversion of history," he said.

On Wednesday, the national legislature appealed to all citizens to remember those who fought in the Battle of Moscow and to pay respects to all Soviet veterans.

Soviet President Mikhail Gorbachev smiles as he presents a medal Thursday to an unidentifed World War II veteran during a ceremony commemorating the 50th anniversary of Germany's invasion of the Soviet Union.

Coup plotters eavesdropped on Yeltsin, newspaper reports

MOSCOW (AP) — In plotting for the August coup, the KGB eavesdropped on everyone from first lady Raisa Gorbachev's hairdresser to Russian President Boris Yeltsin's tennis coach, the weekly Moscow News said Thursday.

No conversation was considered too sacred, from the banter in Yeltsin's favorite sauna, to the pillow talk of the Soviet Union's leading politicians, the newspaper said.

Quoting unidentified "reliable sources" involved in the investigation into the KGB's role in the botched attempt to overthrow Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, Moscow News said the list of wiretapping targets in the months before the coup read like the Who's Who of the Soviet reform movement.

Then-KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov even had some of his co-conspirators bugged during the three-day overthrow attempt, the newspaper said. Kryuchkov and seven other members of the coup committee are in prison awaiting trial for treason.

"The KGB bugged telephones in offices, apartments, dachas of the best known deputies (lawmakers) at all levels," Moscow News said.

"They bugged Raisa Gorbachev's hairdresser, Yeltsin's tennis coach. Yeltsin was surrounded on all sides. His daughter's telephone conversations were recorded. The sauna where he liked to go became transparent."

In the safe of Gorbachev's former chief of staff, Valery Boldin, investigators found tape recordings of conversations "people had in the most piquant, intimate moments of their life," the newspaper said.

The tapes now are in the possession of the Russian prosecutor's office, which is leading the investigation into the coup, it said.

Moscow News said reformers whose telephones were bugged included Eduard Shevardnadze, who has since resumed his post as foreign minister; Ivan Silayev, the Russian prime minister who has become the Soviet economic chief; Moscow Mayor Gavriil Popov; and Vadim Bakatin, who was appointed KGB chief after the coup.

When Oleg Kalugin, a former KGB general who became a reformist legislator, met with Gorbachev adviser Alexander Yakovlev on a Moscow street just before the coup, the KGB sent 72 officers to follow them and record their conversation on hidden microphones, the newspaper said.

Moscow News said planning for the coup began in January 1990 and Kryuchkov was the ringleader. It said the plotters tested their planning, strength and support during the January 1991 military crackdown in the Baltics, which left 22 people dead.

Anderson looks much the same, friends say

By Stephen Kinzer
N.Y. Times News Service

WIESBADEN, Germany — Terry A. Anderson, freed by his Iranian-backed captors in Beirut on Wednesday, looked vigorous and jubilant Thursday as he took his first steps on Western soil since being kidnapped nearly seven years ago.

Grinning broadly and seemingly bursting with energy, Anderson, who was the longest-held American hostage — bounded out of an Army helicopter as dawn broke over Wiesbaden. One of the first people he saw was his sister, Peggy Say, who had worked tirelessly for his release.

They threw their arms around each other, and then Mrs. Say ran her hands over her brother's face, as if seeking to reassure herself that he was finally free. Then she began weeping.

"It's great to have a sister like that," he said a few minutes later. "You get yourself in trouble, and she just comes along and gets you out."

Passing a crowd of reporters, Anderson, who is chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, stopped to shake hands with several he recognized.

"Thanks for everything," he told them, his voice breaking with emotion. "It's been so long. What can I say? It's just great."

The health and vigor that Anderson displayed was a sharp contrast to the gaunt appearances and shuffling gaits of some other American hostages released in recent months.

Two former hostages — Joseph J. Cicippio, who left Germany Thursday, and Alann Steen, who remains under medical care here — were both found to have suffered lasting injuries as a result of beatings administered by their captors.

Friends said that except for a small bald spot on his head, Anderson, 44, looked very much as he did before he was kidnapped in Beirut on March 16, 1985. Some were surprised that the former marine and Vietnam War veteran had survived his ordeal with such apparent success.

A medical bulletin issued late Thursday reported that Anderson was suffering from only a few minor ailments. He has a sinus infection that can be treated with antibiotics, and a minor lung inflammation that doctors said would be "resolved in several weeks without treatment."

He is also receiving dental care and treatment for a knee pain resulting from an injury he suffered while in his 20s.

Anderson arrived at the Rhein-Main Air Base near here shortly before daybreak. He was welcomed by a military honor guard and a warm handshake from Robert Kimmett, the U.S. ambassador to Germany.

Peggy Say, lefts, runs to her brother, freed hostage Terry Anderson after his arrival at the U.S. Air Force hospital at Wiesbaden, Germany. The U.S. ambassador to Germany, Robert M. Kimmitt, stands behind Anderson. The military officer behind Say is unidentified.

Mrs. Kimmett presented him with a bouquet of yellow flowers, which he was carrying when he arrived at Wiesbaden a few minutes later.

After entering the United States military hospital here, where he will undergo a series of medical examinations and debriefings, Anderson appeared briefly on the hospital balcony flanked by Cicippio and Steen. A crowd of about 200 people, many of them soldiers, cheered and clapped for them.

Journalists, many of whom had come to consider Anderson a close colleague even though they had never met him, had trouble maintaining their reserve. Several applauded and shouted words of welcome at him.

Anderson ebulliently greeted several relatives, but seemed especially captivated by his 6-year-old daughter, Sulome, whom he met Wednesday in Damascus for the first time. She wore a bright red parka, and stood quietly in front of him as he spoke, his arms draped over her chest.

Hospital officials reported that when they asked Anderson what he would like to eat, he asked for a Big Mac hamburger and a strawberry milkshake. But they served him a hearty breakfast of scrambled eggs, sausage, French toast, orange juice and coffee, a U.S. military spokesman said.

If further medical tests confirm Anderson's good health, he will probably leave Germany soon, officials said. He has scheduled a news conference for today, and could depart for the United States soon afterward.

6-year-old girl finally holds her dad's hand

WIESBADEN, Germany (AP) — As a baby, her first word was "daddy." In years to come, she'd study the photographs and brief videotapes of her father made by "the bad men" in Beirut.

On Thursday, she finally held her father's hand and showed off the curls she grew long just for this moment.

"My daughter flew with me from Damascus. It was great. It was beautiful," said Terry Anderson hours after meeting his 6-year-old daughter Sulome for the first time.

Sulome, born three months after Anderson's abduction March 16, 1985, grinned and leaned against her father when they arrived in Germany.

Air Force spokeswoman Judy Williams said Sulome was with Anderson on Thursday in a luxury suite at the U.S. military hospital in Wiesbaden, where Anderson is undergoing medical and psychological tests.

After his release Wednesday, Anderson told journalists in Damascus he had a date with "a couple of very beautiful ladies" — Sulome and her mother, Madeleine Bassil.

Throughout Anderson's more than 6½ years held hostage, Sulome and her mother sent messages to Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press.

In a message that went out in October for Anderson's 44th birthday, Sulome told her father about her work at school — math, spelling and dictation. She recited a poem she had written herself.

After seeing a videotape of her father earlier this year, Sulome told her mother: "I really want Daddy home. Now!"

Steen hopes his captors will be caught

WIESBADEN, Germany (AP) — Former hostage Alann Steen said Thursday a kidnapper's unprovoked attack left him with permanent brain damage that must be controlled with drugs.

He also urged intelligence agents to track down his captors.

Steen, freed Tuesday after nearly five years in captivity, said he was struck while he was exercising with other hostages in 1987.

"I sort of looked over my shoulder to see what the others were doing, and they had stopped and were looking at me doing deep knee bends," Steen said.

"I turned my attention back to my captor and he kicked me right in the diaphragm. I fell back. I hit my head on the wooden chair, perhaps the back of a chair, and then the back of my head on a concrete floor."

Doctors at the U.S. medical hospital said Steen, 52, suffered permanent neurological damage and must take medication for the rest of his life to control blackouts and seizures.

"I feel very well," he said. "My brain feels good, too."

Steen, who shouted his comments from a balcony, did not say what hostages were with him at the time of the attack.

Steen, a communications instructor from Beirut University College, said he hopes his Shiite Muslim captors can someday be brought to justice.

"They took five years out of my life," he said. "Unfortunately, I think they're probably going to get away with it. Maybe, with a little luck, the various intelligence groups will be able to track them down."

Of his captors, he said "there were some good ones and some bad ones. I have animosity toward the bad ones and I have no feelings against the good ones."

Steen said they did not even tell him why he was captured.

"At the very beginning, I don't think they even had a name for themselves," he said.

Wearing a gray tweed jacket and checked shirt, Steen was joined on the balcony by his wife, Virginia; two daughters and two grandchildren born while he was in captivity — 3-year-old Jordan Sardoni and 9-month-old Dillon Monday.

Steen marveled at the other events that passed him.

"Probably the Soviet Union, the reunification of Germany, the San Francisco earthquake" surprised him the most, he said.

Steen's wife said the two stayed up late catching up on the past.

"At 3:30 in the morning, here we are in bed eating Hydrox cookies with a glass of fresh milk in our hands, which is impossible to find in Beirut," she said.

He said he wants to teach again and that the family may move to either Michigan or California.

"I don't know quite where to begin," he said.

Bush: U.S. won't yet resume ties with Iran

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush said Thursday the release of American hostages by pro-Iranian radicals in Lebanon has not yet brought the United States and Iran closer to normal relations. "This ugly chapter, albeit nearly closed, is not closed," he said.

Bush told a news conference he thought the hostage-takers "should feel they'll eventually be brought to justice." But he gave no indication the United States was taking steps to apprehend them.

"I want to see this chapter closed before we go further along those lines," he said.

Iran's Tehran Radio reported this week that in exchange for the hostage releases, the kidnappers were promised that they would not be pursued by the United States, Germany or any other country.

At the State Department, spokesman Margaret Tutwiler refused to respond when asked if the United States had dicussed the extradition and prosecution of individuals involved in taking hostages.

Two German relief workers remain in captivity.

The principal unfinished business cited by Bush was the return of the bodies of two Americans — Lt. Col. William Higgins and William Buckley — were killed while held hostage.

"I'd like to see the return of Col. Higgins, who was serving under the U.N. banner," said Bush, who added he also wanted return of the remains of Buckley, who was CIA station chief in Beirut.

"And so the chapter — this ugly chapter, albeit nearly closed, is not closed, and so we'll wait and see when that is all finalized," he said.

With that issue pending, Bush said, the United States and Iran are "not closer at this moment" to resuming normal relations.

U.N. Secretary-General Perez de Cuellar, who has been negotiating hostage releases since August, said "I have some promises" about the return of the body of Higgins, believed killed in July 1989. Higgins was serving with a U.N. peacekeeping force.

Bush noted that after journalist Terry Anderson, the longest-held American hostage was freed on Wednesday, he thanked various countries as well as U.N. officials for their part in ending the hostage ordeal.

"I think we thanked Syria and Iran as well," he said.

Gadhafi vows to split with terrorists

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — Seeking to end Libya's international isolation, Moammar Gadhafi pledged in remarks published Thursday to stop supporting "liberation movements" turned terrorist.

It was his most direct offer to end relations with such groups, although Libya has broached the subject before. Libya said in June it would cut ties with the IRA if Britain restored diplomatic ties, but Britain did not respond.

Gadhafi also claimed he interceded with Muslim kidnappers to save the life of British hostage Terry Waite, then helped win his freedom. Waite was freed Nov. 18 after nearly five years.

"My efforts, thank God, were successful," Gadhafi was quoted as saying.

Britain called Gadhafi's pledge on terrorism "a first step," but reiterated demands for surrender of two Libyans wanted in the 1988 bombing of New York-bound Pan Am Flight 103 that killed 270 people.

Allegations of Libyan involvement in that bombing and of a French airliner have prompted increasing international pressure on Gadhafi from the United States, Britain and France.

"I think he's a worried man," said British Foreign Office Minister Douglas Hogg. "What has been made plain is that we are determined."

France wants four Libyans in connection with the French UTA airliner bombing over Niger in 1989, in which all 171 people aboard died.

The Egyptian government-owned, English-language Al-Ahram Weekly, published Friday, quoted Gadhafi as pledging to "break off relations with movements which were described in the past as movements of liberation but have turned into terrorist movements." He gave no timetable.

Under his 22-year rule, Libya has been accused of training, supplying or harboring terrorists, including Palestinian Abu Nidal and the Irish Republican Army. Gadhafi said he was merely aiding those fighting colonialism or other forms of oppression.

He denied in the interview that Abu Nidal — real name Sabri al-Banna — now lives in Libya or carried out terror operations from Libya when a resident.

ABC-TV correspondent Pierre Salinger reported from Libya Thursday that "the Libyans also wanted to tell us they were having nothing to do with the terrorist, Carlos."

The Venezuelan-born Carlos, called "the Jackal" — real name Ilich Ramirez Sanchez — had been living in Syria, which reportedly tried to foist him off on Libya.

Al-Ahram Weekly said Gadhafi offered as proof "to allow 'all investigators' to visit the specific sites where military training centers for terrorists are allegedly located on Libyan soil."

Salinger said on "World News Tonight" that he visited Rabta, the plant the United States says makes chemical weapons. Libya says it is a pharmaceutical plant. Salinger reported radar systems and anti-aircraft missiles installed behind the walls.

He said he visited Al Qalah camp, reportedly Abu Nidal's main terrorist training camp in Libya but now "by all appearances ... a Palestinian refugee camp."

Mubarak says he wants to help improve Libyan ties with the United States, Britain and France and the Al-Ahram Weekly interview clearly was designed to polish Libya's image.

The weekly quoted Gadhafi as saying he is a revolutionary but not a terrorist, and focused on measures he is taking to alter Libya's image.

On Wednesday, Libya's intelligence chief, Col. Yussef Abdulgader il-Dibri, was quoted as saying a cutoff of support to armed groups was "premature."

But he conceded Libya's image "has become distorted and must be reviewed."

Hogg said cutting off Libyan aid to terrorists wouldn't mollify Britain and the United States.

"It would be a useful first step, but it is not all," Hogg said in Cairo, where he was visiting to meet Mubarak on the extradition problem. "The requests we made last week were a total package. He cannot pick and choose."

Il-Dibri told the Saudi newspaper Asharq al-Awsat that Libya has detained all six men. He said a judge is investigating the Lockerbie bombing, and plans to look into the French case next.

State Department spokeswoman Margaret Tutwiler said Thursday, "What is needed from Libya is action to meet those demands, not further delay and farcical suggestions such as Libyan investigation of Libyan officials for undertaking acts of terrorism commissioned by the senior leadership of Libya."

Mayor of Dutch city refuses to meet with Schwarzkopf

EINDHOVEN, Netherlands (AP) — The mayor of this southern Dutch city has refused to meet retired Gen. H. Norman Schwarzkopf, saying the former commander of U.S. forces in the Persian Gulf War has "too much blood on his hands."

Schwarzkopf was in town Wednesday to give a lecture at the headquarters of the Philips electronics multinational corporation entitled, "Human Resources Management: What I Learned From The Gulf War."

Mayor Jan Ritsema declined to attend the lecture or a private VIP function — but more than 300 Dutch captains of industry paid $1,650 to listen to the views of the Gulf War hero on how to run their firms.

In a telephone interview, Ritsema said of Schwarzkopf: "He is the person who devised the most efficient way possible to kill as many people as possible.

Schwarzkopf also encountered a small protest during a brief visit to the seaside village of Bergen to attend the opening of a management office.

Outside the RBG Advisory Group building, about 20 people peacefully protested the Schwarzkopf visit, holding placards with photos of Iraqi civilians killed in the war.

During the Gulf War, opinion polls showed most Dutch supported allied intervention to free Kuwait from Iraqi rule. The Dutch sent Navy frigates to back the U.S.-led action.

Venezuelan plane fires shot at U.S. plane, embassy says

CARACAS, Venezuela (AP) — A Venezuelan air force jet fired a warning shot and forced down a plane carrying three U.S. Customs agents on an anti-drug flight, the U.S. Embassy said Thursday.

Venezuelan officials said the twin-engine plane crossed into Venezuelan airspace without permission on Sunday over the northern coast and was forced to land at Libertador air base near Maracay, 70 miles west of Caracas.

Both sides tried to play down the incident, which was kept quiet until Defense Minister Fernando Ochoa Antich briefed the Senate's defense commission Wednesday.

Barbara Moore, a spokeswoman for the U.S. Embassy, said the Venezuelan government filed a formal complaint about the incident.

She said American officials were not sure the plane was in Venezuela's airspace when it was intercepted. If the plane did cross into Venezuela, it was inadvertent, she said.

Ms. Moore said the plane was on an "anti-drug flight," but she refused to elaborate.

Drug trafficking through Venezuela has increased in the past two years as the government in neighboring Colombia intensified its campaign against drug barons there.

The three U.S. Customs agents who were aboard the Cheyenne Turbo plane were detained, questioned overnight and released Monday, Ms. Moore said.

The plane, which began its flight on the Caribbean island of Curacao off Venezuela's northwest coast, was spotted on radar in Venezuelan airspace and would not identify itself, Venezuelan officials said.

Antich said that after repeated attempts to establish contact, an F-16 fighter jet was sent to intercept the plane. The F-16's pilot fired a warning shot across the U.S. plane's path and the Customs agents switched on their radio, he said.

The fighter escorted the American plane to Libertador, he said.

It was not clear why the plane was forced to land after radio contact was established.

Ms. Moore said relations between the United States and Venezuela were not tense. Antich called it "a normal incident."

Tokyo most expensive city, survey indicates

GENEVA (AP) — The Japanese cities of Tokyo and Osaka remain the world's most expensive cities for foreigners to live in, according to a survey published Thursday.

With New York as the base of 100, Tokyo had an index of 171 and Osaka 157, the survey said. Libreville, Gabon, and Brazzaville, in the Congo, followed at 134 and 133 respectively.

The cost of living in West Europe continued to be higher than in the United States, while most Latin American cities were relatively cheap, the report said.

Bombay, India, with an index of 61, was the least expensive for expatriates of the 97 cities surveyed.

The survey is published twice a year by Corporate Resources Group, a Geneva-based consultant group. It is based on a survey of 151 products, including food, clothing, recreation and transport, but not accommodation.

The Norwegian capital Oslo and the Swedish capital Stockholm tied for fifth place, Finland's Helsinki was next and the Swiss financial center Zurich followed, narrowly edging Copenhagen and Geneva.

The survey showed Asia is becoming more expensive for foreign employees. Taiwan's capital Taipei was about as expensive as Geneva, Beijing was slightly cheaper, followed closely by Seoul and Hong Kong.

Ordeal held nation hostage

With the release Wednesday of Terry Anderson, the U.S. hostage held longest by Shiite Moslem kidnappers in Lebanon, a sad and trying ordeal finally came to an end. Anderson was the last American held by the captors.

For the first time in nearly seven years, the Moslem kidnappers do not hold a "bargaining chip" with the U.S. government. Those years should have convinced renegade nations that U.S. officials will not bargain with the lives of hostages.

Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for the Associated Press, was taken hostage more than six and a half years ago. He was the first hostage taken in what proved to be an aggravating and perplexing standoff between the captors and the U.S. government. Both the Bush administration and the Reagan administration before it wrangled with the captors, but to no avail. Much credit for bringing about the release of the hostages — including the three released in daily succession this week, Anderson, Alann Steen and Joseph Cicippio — is due U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cueller.

But de Cueller and his staff are not the only ones who worked diligently and tirelessly for the release of Anderson and the other hostages. The AP staff helped to keep the hostage situation alive in the minds of people throughout the world when the daily grind of world events threatened to eclipse it.

Anderson's sister, Peggy Say, became a primary advocate of his cause and carried out a relentless campaign worldwide to gain his release. Her advocacy helped to put the hostage dilemma on a personal level.

There were, of course, tragedies during the hostage years that must not be forgotten. William Buckley, a U.S. diplomat believed to have been the CIA Beirut station chief, was killed in 1985 by the captors and William Higgins, a colonel in the U.S. Marine Corps, was captured in 1988 and reportedly hanged the following year. White House spokesman Marlin Fitzwater appropriately called for the return of the remains of Buckley and Higgins. That pressure should be maintained on the captors. They must not be allowed to think that the American people or government will simply forget.

Steen suffered brain damage while during captivity, but doctors say he should be able to live a normal life with medication. Then, of course, were the countless precious moments of life that the hostages missed and will never regain. Anderson had never even seen his 6-year-old daughter, Sulome, until Wednesday.

The hostage years were bitter years not only for the captives and their families, but for all Americans. In a way the hostage crisis held our entire nation captive. We persevered and the captors gained nothing by their crime, but we will not soon forget that injustice. We should not.

TOM WICKER

White House works with witchcraft

There may be an ominous link between White House efforts to reinterpret the Civil Rights Act of 1991 and President Bush's veto of the so-called "gag rule" bill for doctors practicing in federally financed clinics.

Wicker

Congress first authorized such clinics in 1970, though it specifically banned use of federal funds to perform abortions. Nearly two decades later, in 1988, the Reagan administration issued a new interpretation of the 1970 legislation, ruling that doctors in the clinics could not even discuss abortion with a pregnant woman, or refer her to a doctor who could.

This novel regulation duly reached the Supreme Court, where Chief Justice Rehnquist wrote an opinion upholding it (by a 5-4 majority), on grounds that the executive branch was entitled to interpret the legislation's meaning. Congress hastened to pass a bill to overturn the court ruling and the gag regulation itself. Bush vetoed it, and the House failed by 12 votes to override.

Thus, the 18 years during which no one pretended that Congress had intended to restrict the free speech rights or professional conduct of doctors, and the overwhelming majorities that passed the subsequent bill that Bush vetoed, meant little. He and the Bush-Reagan Supreme Court majority reversed Congress and imposed their own view of the meaning of the 1970 legislation.

Last week, only bipartisan outrage in Congress and the discomfiture of some Republicans stopped a White House effort to make the same kind of end run around the new Civil Rights Act. The White House counsel, Boyden Gray — who hardly could have acted, as claimed, without Bush's knowledge — issued an interpretation of the legislation that would have stopped all federal affirmative action programs. This would have meant the violent overthrow of the meaning of the act, as attested even by numerous Republicans.

If the president didn't know what Gray was up to, he was remiss to the point of dereliction. If he did, the move backfired. Congressional resistance and concern among Republican strategists forced the White House to retreat, at least for now.

But at some point, with no such uproar, the White House may yet be able to issue new enforcement regulations — just as the Reagan administration did in 1988 — that would reverse what the majority that passed the Civil Rights Act thought it was doing. When that new interpretation goes before the Supreme Court, the Reagan-Bush majority could uphold it on the grounds Rehnquist already has cited — due deference to the executive branch's right to say what it considers to be the meaning of a statute.

Congress would have the right then to pass new legislation restoring the original act. That's just what it did this year, in the case of the gag rule. But if Bush then wielded his veto, as he did in the earlier instance, Congress would have to muster a two-thirds vote in both houses to override. If it failed, the White House interpretation of the Civil Rights Act would stand — as the family-planning clinic gag rule stands.

Something similar may be going on in the White House Council on Competitiveness, headed by Vice President Quayle. Acting under executive privilege, the council is empowered to issue enforcement regulations that can thwart attempts by Congress to regulate business practices, etc.

The new Clean Air Act, for which Bush claims great credit, provides a good example. The act requires plants and factories to get permits specifying their allowed emissions of pollutants. A ruling by Quayle's council makes it easy for these pollution sources to get increases in allowed emissions.

It's true that legislative intent is not always clear, and that both sides of a congressional dispute often attempt to influence "legislative history" to their own advantage. Justice Antonin Scalia claims to be philosophically convinced that such history is not a sufficiently reliable guide to congressional intent.

But the family-clinic gag rule — aside from its restrictions on speech, distortion of medical ethics and deprivation of poor women's rights — reversed the meaning of a statute that had been undisputed for 18 years. The temporarily thwarted attempt to stand the Civil Rights Act on its head appears to have been more of the same political black magic. Witchcraft might be a better word.

JAMES RESTON

We find peace with all but ourselves

WASHINGTON — With the Cold War over and with fears of another Pearl Harbor at rest, it's hard to remember when there were more reasons for the U.S. to give thanks than in this second year of the last decade of the century. But somehow there is little rejoicing. We seem to be at peace with everybody but ourselves.

How could this be? For 50 years since the invention of atomic weapons, we have lived in fear of a third world war. In the first two world wars, 70 million people were killed.

In the Cold War against communism, when the two political parties finally agreed on a non-partisan foreign policy, the U.S. avoided a third world war with comparatively few casualties. Surely this was a cause for rejoicing, but that's not the way it is.

Instead, we are engaged here in a series of mean and nasty arguments over abortion, racial politics, the cost of credit cards, who's to be blamed for the economic recession and unemployment, and what's the matter with George Bush and Gov. Mario Cuomo of New York.

You might have thought that at least for one holiday week the president would have brought a sense of historical perspective to the national debate. But in this year, when the "the evil empire" collapsed, he proposed a five-year military budget that, in constant dollars, would be 25 percent higher than 20 years ago, at the height of the cold war.

No opposition party can really compete with the president in changing the thought of the nation during such a revolution in world affairs. As Woodrow Wilson said, the president's "is the only national voice in affairs. Let him once win the admiration and confidence of the country and no other single force can withstand him. His is the vital place of action in the system."

President Bush seemed to sense the truth of this for a time, and talked of "a new world order," which he started with a war that took the lives of more than 150,000 Iraqis and Kurds, which he barely mentioned.

There was a kind of jingoistic rejoicing after the painful liberation of Kuwait, but since then the object of his policies seems to have been his own re-election, and the Democrats have responded with their own brand of bush league politics.

Accordingly, it's easy to understand why the American people were not rejoicing this Thanksgiving Day, for they are also suffering from the consequences of these wars, hot and cold.

While paying for the threats to their security from abroad — necessary as those payments were — their children have been short-changed in the schools; the problems of crime, drug abuse, health insurance and compassion for the homeless have been under-financed, if not neglected; and the nation's industries, once the envy of the world, have been losing their lead to our former enemies, Germany and Japan, whose budgets concentrate, not on military defense, but on research and development for products that are competing with ours and often beating us in world trade.

In short, we have changed the world, but haven't changed our minds, and this is not surprising.

For if the people are told for more than 12 years by their leaders that they should think about themselves and their own special interests, that they can spend their way to prosperity and happiness with borrowed money and that government is not the answer but the cause of all their problems, you shouldn't be surprised if they are disappointed in the pursuit of greediness, and ask, after their sacrifices in the Cold War and Operation Desert Storm, "Where's the rainbow?"

Tuberculosis threat calls for spending

New York's tuberculosis epidemic poses immediate threats to public health and public finances. It can be effectively met with familiar public health practices; expanding them on the necessary scale requires a coordinated response from Albany and City Hall.

Between 1950 and 1978, New York State's investment in tuberculosis prevention and treatment reduced the number of cases from more than 12,000 to 2,060. Public health officials began giving more resources to AIDS and substance abuse.

But in part because people suffering from AIDS or substance abuse are especially susceptible to active tuberculosis, the number of cases then rose sharply, to 4,176 in 1990, more than double the 1978 figure. That gives New York State the highest incidence in the nation. Some 84 percent of the New York cases occur in New York City. Poverty, poor health care, homelessness and illegal immigration also feed the trend.

Public health officials in the city are also alarmed at an increase in tuberculosis cases that resist common drugs. These may develop as patients neglect to take medications, thus remaining infected with organisms that survived initial doses.

Containing the new epidemic requires a new investment in systems designed to detect tuberculosis cases early and follow through with patients who are poorly educated, addicted, homeless or mentally ill.

Proven responses involve outreach caseworkers who visit patients and remind them to take their pills; special hospital wards; residences for the homeless, and for the most recalcitrant, involuntary confinement.

Doing all that would cost money, but the amounts appear manageable — and the spending necessary — even as the fiscal crisis deepens. Official estimates add up to $30 million annually to be shared by city and state.

Some of the money might be found in existing budgets; more could be offset by federal and private insurance payments.

A strong fiscal argument actually buttresses the case for public health spending. The hospital bill for a patient whose tuberculosis has gone undiscovered and untreated may exceed $10,000, and such a person might have infected several others. The arithmetic is persuasive: Whatever it may cost to contain the epidemic, it will cost more not to.

LEWIS GRIZZARD

All those 'crotchety' people baffle public

I'm not certain exactly when grabbing one's crotch became part of the entertainment industry.

Perhaps it began with baseball players. They grab their crotches a lot but usually they are doing more adjusting than grabbing.

Grizzard

Next came Madonna. Maybe Madonna was before Roseanne Barr but it really doesn't matter.

What matters is she went on stage in front of a lot of people and grabbed her crotch. Does that help a musical performer hit a wider range of notes?

Now comes Michael Jackson. I saw his new video, "Black or White," in which Michael Jackson grabs his crotch. There is a report that that particular part of the video is going to be cut out. Those who enjoy watching people do this sort of thing will be quite disappointed, I am sure.

Michael Jackson's message in the video seems to be it doesn't matter what color you are. It obviously doesn't matter to Mr. Jackson, who used to be black, but appears fairly white in the video. As a matter of fact, if one looks closely at him, one will notice a rather striking resemblance to today's Michael Jackson and the late Natalie Wood.

Natalie Wood, just for the record, once portrayed the famous stripper, Gypsy Rose Lee, but at no time during the movie did she grab her crotch.

Michael Jackson does a lot of dancing in "Black or White." He dances with some African guys carrying spears and shields. Then he dances with some Native American Indian persons. He also dances with the Siamese version of the June Taylor Dancers and next we find him dancing with Russians. If Michael Jackson was a Native American Indian person, and he might well be after his next facial overhaul, his name would be Dances with Half the Population of the World.

I've been trying to figure out the symbolism there. Maybe Michael is Fred Astaire, the panther is Ginger Rogers and the crowbar represents Michael's deep-seeded fear of automobiles (Isuzuphobia).

Michael also dances on top of the cars he is smashing. This time he dances alone and this is where he grabs his crotch.

Do you think he simply was hit with an irresistible urge to do that or did his choreographer tell him to do so?

"OK, Michael, right after you do your pirouette and the two leg kicks, grab your crotch. I'll signal you when it's time to let go."

I am hardly one to suggest artistic censorship of any kind. And if anybody wants to watch Michael Jackson, Madonna, Roseanne Barr or Jimmy Swaggart, for that matter, grab their crotches, it's OK by me.

I do want to point out a few things.

If Elvis had lived and was still performing, I don't think he would have ever gone as far as grabbing his crotch in public.

Elvis did engage in an occasional pelvic thrust, but I think it was more a natural response to his rhythm than something used to shock his audience. Also, isn't grabbing one's crotch in the aforementioned manner tantamount to encouraging our children to masturbate? You know where that can lead to ... shooting pool and blindness.

■ Jury takes less than an hour to sentence Fountain Smith Jr. to life in prison for the murder of Theresa Ann Smith.

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

A 38-year-old Midland man — with a past conviction of voluntary manslaughter for killing his wife — was found guilty of murdering a second wife and sentenced to life in prison on Thursday.

A 12-person 238th District Court jury took less than an hour to find Fountain Smith Jr. guilty and about the same time to consider the sentencing.

Smith was charged with fatally shooting 27-year-old Theresa Ann Smith during the early morning of July 28. Mrs. Smith sustained four gunshot wounds: one in the back, one in the head, and two in the upper chest area.

After the verdict was announced, Ida Mae Ross, Mrs. Smith's mother, said she had trusted the Lord to determine the fate of Smith.

Mrs. Ross added that after the shooting Smith asked for her forgiveness, which she granted.

"I don't have any hard feelings because I left this in God's hands," said Mrs. Ross, who now cares for the Smith's two daughters, ages 6 months and 3 years.

As for Smith's future, at minimum he can be released on parole in 15 years, although unlikely, said District Attorney Al Schorre, who prosecuted the case.

Smith, who called police after the shooting and confessed to the crime, pleaded not guilty to the murder charge on Tuesday.

Defense attorneys Glen Aaron and Robert Stevens maintained that Smith was temporarily insane because of paranoia and fear of drug dealers at the time of the shooting.

Considerable testimony showed that Smith had expressed to several people fear and paranoia.

Before buying a gun for $25 at an east-side eatery and hang-out, Smith attempted to borrow a gun from at least five people, testimony showed.

Smith also related to friends before the shooting and police afterwards that unidentified people were after him and that his wife may have been involved, testimony indicated.

There was no direct mention that those after him were drug dealers. Testimony did reveal that Smith and his wife both smoked crack cocaine.

After the trial, Aaron said he felt that jurors didn't buy the insanity defense or choose a lesser conviction of voluntary manslaughter because of the "common belief that if a person is found not guilty by insanity they are getting off." If found not guilty due to insanity, Smith would have been confined to a mental institution indefinitely until, if ever, a board of psychiatrists determined him to be sane.

Schorre said the evidence and testimony was rather straightforward in showing Smith's guilt.

A psychiatrist, who examined Smith, said the defendant was sane at the time of the shooting.

Smith was convicted of voluntary manslaughter in 1977 for the 1975 shotgun shooting death of a former wife.

Tax group rallies behind Shuffield

By Michael Kashgarian
Staff Writer

Six members of the Tax Assessor-Collector's Association of Texas said that if necessary a lawsuit will be filed to stop the Midland County Commissioners' Court from trying to prevent Tax Assessor-Collector Frances Shuffield from performing her duty as an elected official.

The group of tax assessor-collectors were in Midand Thursday to rally behind Ms. Shuffield in her "constitutional right" to collect Midland County taxes — a job she has done for 10 years.

Nick Lampson, tax assessor-collector for Jefferson County, said the Commissioners' 1992 budget cut of funding for Ms. Shuffield is the equivalent of shutting down that portion of her office.

Commissioners want to contract the county's ad valorem tax collecting with the Midland Central Appraisal District, claiming a savings of as much as $350,000 a year.

But commissioners cannot make such a change legally without Ms. Shuffield's consent, according to a Texas attorney general's opinion.

Commissioners maintain their actions are in the best interest of the public.

"That's not our intent (to violate her constitutional right to collect taxes). Our intent is to serve the public to the best of our ability," Commissioner Durward Wright said Thursday.

Wright agreed that cutting the budget is an attempt to persuade Ms. Shuffield to agree to a contract with the Midland Central Appraisal District.

Ms. Shuffield said savings could not exceed $80,000 at the most. Asked about the commissioners' calculations, she said "It is completely fictitious, and it is a lie."

When asked about Ms. Shuffield's figured savings, Wright replied that "$80,000 is still a lot of money" and maintained a greater savings.

"I think she (Ms. Shuffield) should think first for the expense factor to the taxpayers of this community," Wright said.

Wright added that commissioners will remain steadfast to position unless it can be shown that maintaining the current system will be more economical and/or convenience.

As for a lawsuit, Wright said, "I don't welcome it and don't think it's in the best interest of the community but if it happens, it happens."

Ms. Shuffield said she plans to remain firm to keep the tax collections as currently performed — despite the budget cut.

Commissioners cut Ms. Shuffield's 1992 budget, which went into effect in October, to $541,169. She had asked for $598,000 compared with the 1991 allocation of $617,155. Six deputy tax-collectors will lose their jobs as a result.

"We can run it, but we'll limp along," said Ms. Shuffield.

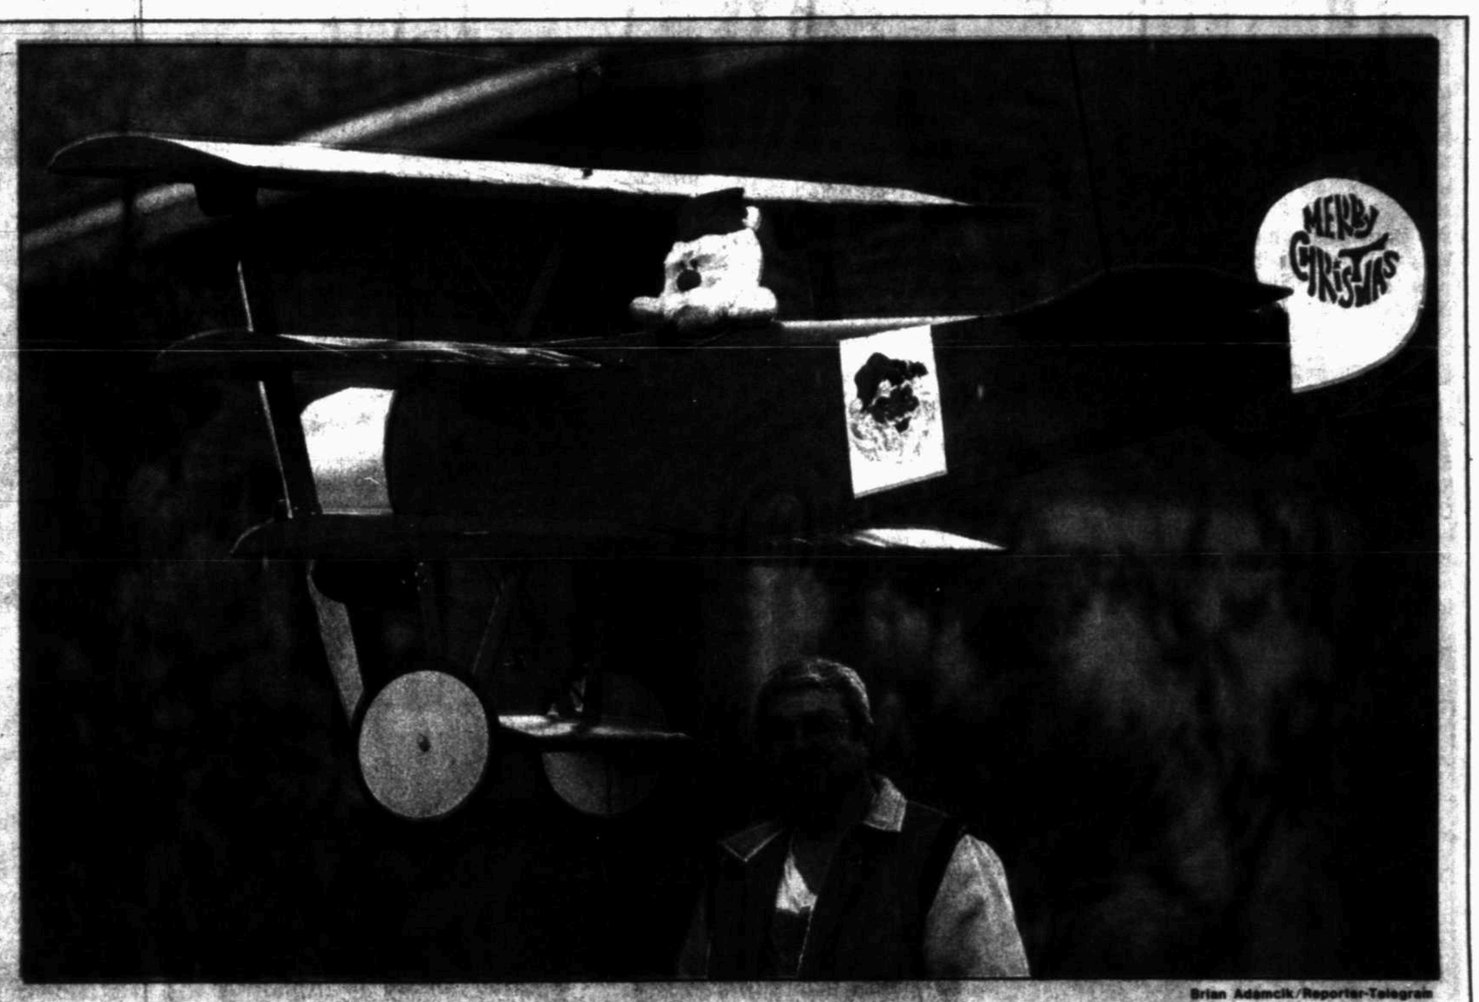

The tax assessor-collectors, who came to town on Thursday, said they would go so far as come to Midland and work behind the tax collection office counters during critical times.

"Ultimately the people who will feel the pressure (of the commissioners) are the citizens of this county," said Lampson.

Lampson said sharing employees that collect taxes with employees that collect automobile sales taxes and registration fees, as currently the practice in Midland, is more convenient and feasible economically.

Lampson said he would anticipate long lines to pay car registrations and other fees if the tax collection changed.

Members of the Tax Assessor-Collectors Association that were in Midland in addition to Lampson were: association president Donna Sprague of Kaufman County, Joyce Barrow of Hunt County, Chuch Wilson of Galveston County, Lea Taylor of Ector County and Diana Earp of Crane County.

Memories inspire man to build airplane models

By Darren J. Waggoner
Staff Writer

Building model airplanes has evolved into a lifelong passion for retired Midland coach and teacher Harry Dodd.

As a 10-year-old growing up in Odessa, Dodd often visited the old bombardier training facility at Midland Army Air Field — now Midland International Airport. The memory of those planes continues to serve as the inspiration for his hobby.

"When I was a kid, I used to build them all the time. Of course, back then they only cost ten cents to make. I used to love watching those planes," said the 60-year-old Dodd. "It's a funny thing about planes though — I like building them, I like watching them but I sure don't like to fly in them. I just don't trust them."

'It's a funny thing about planes though — I like building them, I like watching them but I sure don't like to fly in them. I just don't trust them.'
— Harry Dodd

"I remember one time when Dad took me out to the base. Two B-26's crashed in the air and killed the pilots and crew," said Dodd. "I remember it distinctly, they wouldn't let us go near it while they investigated. It was pretty awful."

Dodd's current yard-display is a Fokker D-1 plane with Santa Claus at the controls — the plane is flying a banner welcoming the Confederate Air Force to Midland. The work represents a compilation of Dodd's efforts to include three themes — Christmas, the arrival of the Confederate Air Force and planes.

"It's a replica of a model plane I built, only it's enlarged five times. It's a model like the one the Red Baron flew," said Dodd. "There's close to 900 hours of work in that thing."

"That was something else. It rotated with a motor I had hooked into the freezer," said Dodd.

Dodd was a high school football line coach a total of 18 years in Oklahoma, and Hobbs, N.M., before coaching at Midland Lee from 1966-68 and Midland High from 1969-71.

He retired from Midland High School as a drafting teacher in 1990.

City negotiates oil waste cleanup

Staff Report

The city is negotiating with two local companies for cleanup of three oil waste pits at Spraberry Farm.

Pits of oil-saturated dirt were discovered recently at the farm, where crops are irrigated with effluent, the water by-product of the wastewater treatment plant. When five new areas totalling 700 acres were cleared a few months ago, the waste pits were discovered at the site, apparently left by oil drilling that took place there.

"Our farmer's tractor sank in them," said Ken Jones, deputy director of utilities. "That's how we discovered they were there. We weren't concerned because we thought at first it was just drilling mud."

The pits had not completely dried, although years had passed since there was activity at the site. Contractors, hired by the city to clear the land for planting, scraped the material and deposited it in a nearby caliche pit.

But Texas Railroad Commission tests of the material confirmed it needed a more comprehensive disposal, which according to agency regulations would be the responsibility of the current owner of the area's mineral rights. MWJ and Phillips Petroleum must take over action from this point, Jones said.

According to Railroad Commission regulations, the material should be placed in a permitted disposal area — such as those in Odessa or Notrees. It may also be placed on lease roads, with a permit from the commission.

"It's a hazard of working in an oil production area," said Jones. "No matter who actually caused it, the responsibility goes to the current owner." He is in the process of contacting both companies.

City plans to rewrite job descriptions

■ The Americans with Disabilities Act will begin to affect state and city governments Jan. 26, 1992.

By Debbie Lincecum
Staff Writer

Federal legislation designed to eliminate job discrimation against people with disabilities will change many city procedures — beginning with hiring practices, officials said.

The Americans with Disabilities Act, signed into law July 26, 1990, begins affecting agencies and departments of state and city governments Jan. 26, 1992. It establishes the civil rights of people with disabilities — physical or mental impairments that limit major life actitivies.

"It's going to even the playing field for everyone," said Victor Pena, city personnel specialist. Title I of the act, dealing with hiring practices, will require rewriting of all city job descriptions, officials have said, and they have proposed working with a consulting firm to complete the task.

"We must have job descriptions for every job," said David Hunter, administrative services director. "Under the ADA, we must identify what are the essential tasks of that position and what tasks are less so."

"If you're ever challenged on the position (for discrimination), the job description is the first place a court would look," Pena said.

"We're not just talking about disabilities you can see," he said. "Something may not show up until the (required) physical (examination), after a job offer has been made." Cities are required to make "reasonable accommodations" to aid those with disabilities in performing non-essential or less-frequent tasks of a job.

The process will begin with a detailed analysis of each job. Employees will be asked to complete a questionnaire, then personnel

School board trustees reconsider rejected construction bid

By Myra Lee Salcedo
Staff Writer

Midland school board trustees are back at square one with bidding construction for Fannin, Pease and Washington elementary schools.

In a special meeting Thursday night, trustees unanimously voted to reconsider the original construction bid which was rejected at the Oct. 23 meeting.

The original low bid by Campbell Construction Co. was more than $536,000 over budget.

However, the board's architectural committee discovered 31 areas in which the scope of work could be changed to save the district an estimated $136,479.

Although the cost of the additions to the schools will still be over budget, Heidelberg noted that if all projects "come in on target" as estimated they will cost a total of $26.9 million.

The district passed two propositions in a $24.2 million bond election May 4. One proposition issued bonds in the amount of $10.8 million for construction and renovations of various schools, and another in the amount of $13.4 million was issued to build Abell Junior High School.

A bond advisory committee encouraged trustees to try to pass two smaller bond packages, rather than one large package after a $24.5 million bond election failed in Oct. 1990.

Now trustees are grappling with a shortage of funds and bids which are also coming in higher than anticipated.

"We have designed a good program," said superintendent Joseph Baressi Jr. "... the fact is: the bond money is too short."

Baressi said that money would have to come from the operating budget to staff the new schools. "We will need over $1 million for Greathouse (elementary school) and over $3 million when the junior high is on line. We will be compensated for some of that in state funds, but there is only so much we can carry over in the operating budget."

Heidelberg said all four bidders involved in the original Oct. 23 bid were notified that trustees might reconsider it.

"The contract can be awarded to the low bidder, and the total cost of the project can be reduced through change orders," Heidelberg said. "The process will net as much savings as changing the scope of the work and rebidding."

Trustees deliberated over items which would change the scope of the work including deleting some ceramic wall tiles in bathrooms and using less expensive roofing materials.

School board members may award the bid, which will be on the agenda, at Tuesday's meeting.

ADA: City updates definitions

(From 1B)

staffers will conduct interviews.

"Right now, some positions have the same names, although they don't do exactly the same jobs," Hunter explained. "We have to be very specific."

Information gathered by city staff could be compiled by the consulting firm, which would produce new descriptions for $35 per position. Hunter said there should be about 300 separate descriptions, and the process could be funded by excess monies set aside for Affirmative Action programs.

The rewriting process, Hunter said, although designed for compliance with the ADA, is likely to be of great benefit for other reasons.

"Some of these descriptions were written many years ago, and have never been updated," he said. "The tasks might have changed substantially since then. It's going to be helpful to get these things in writing.

"The act doesn't tell you how to organize your work, but you want the description to reflect the actual tasks," Hunter said.

Other sections of the act govern the accessibility of buildings, transportation systems, public accommodations and communications, with changes to be implemented over a period of time through 1994. It will affect businesses and services, employers of all sizes as well as both public and private entities.

City Hall, Loraine Center, Midland International Airport and other city-owned buildings must eventually meet accessibility requirements. Additionally, any building where services are offered or activities take place under city contract must meet the standards as well.

For its compliance, the city must name a task force to perform a study and make detailed plans. The group must perform a self-evaluation and create a document explaining how it is attempting to comply with the legislation.

Police seek men in attempted murder

Staff Report

ODESSA — Odessa police are searching for two men wanted for the early Thursday morning attempted murder of an Odessa man who was sitting in the drive-through of the Whataburger restaurant at 3716 Andrews Highway, Odessa police reports said.

James Dean Zeigenben, 32, is listed in stable condition in the intensive care unit of the Medical Center Hospital in Odessa.

Zeigenben and two men from another car became engaged in a verbal altercation from their respective cars when one of the black men got out of his vehicle and fired 14 rounds from a 9mm semiautomatic pistol at Zeigenben.

Zeigenben was hit by two of the rounds. Once in the left elbow and another lodged in his chest, reports said.

The two men fled the scene in their car and are still being sought by police. The vehicle had New Mexico plates.

Man survives chase

ODESSA — An Odessa man was listed in good condition at the Medical Center Hospital after his truck overturned two times following a high-speed car chase, Department of Public Safety officials said.

David Ray McBride, 26, was sitting in his 1981 Chevy pickup on Faudree Road, a half mile east of Loop 338, when a Department of Public Safety trooper stopped to assist him. McBride would not identify himself or exit the vehicle, and the trooper went back to his car to call for assistance.

McBride then fled in his vehicle east on Faudree Road with the officer in pursuit. Speeds in excess of 85 miles per hour were attained before McBride failed to negotiate a turn and flipped the truck.

State debt group convenes

AUSTIN (AP) — Three state treasurers joined Thursday to highlight the first meeting of an organization created to teach governors, legislators and other state officials how to control debt incurred by issuing bonds.

Texas Treasurer Kay Bailey Hutchison said the three-day conference, which ends today, had attracted 125 participants from 35 states.

Mrs. Hutchison and Louisiana Treasurer Mary Landrieu, co-chairs of the National Debt Management Network, held a news conference with Ohio Treasurer Mary Ellen Withrow, president of the National Association of State Treasurers.

Mrs. Hutchison said the goal is to make sure states don't get in over their head in debt and to teach states how to save millions of dollars in bond interest payments.

"All 50 states need to make sure that they have a debt management policy, that it works," Ms. Landrieu said. But she said the network "is not here to tell states there is one right way and this is the way."

"The purpose of the network is to define good models that have worked, to share information, to be a resource to states," she said.

Ms. Landrieu said the conference aims to help state officials create an efficient debt management policy that will serve both long-term and fiscal needs.

Such a program would lend states "fiscal integrity" to make states and, eventually, the United States strong, she said.

Ms. Withrow said, "This is so important to be a voice collective rather than a single voice."

Mrs. Hutchison said she is optimistic that state debt can be managed, because "I think we're getting much more sophisticated" in such matters.

Car turns restaurant into drive-in HALLSVILLE (AP) — The Hallsville Dairy Queen was closed for repairs Thursday, a day after a Louisiana woman injured three people by driving her car through a wall and into the restaurant.

A car driven by Gladys C. Williams, 81, of Vivian, La., went through the front of the restaurant Wednesday, pinning an employee between a cooking grill and a wall, said Hallsville City Marshal Jerry Stone.

Stone said the manager of the restaurant and two employees were taken to Good Shepherd Medical Center in Longview, where they were treated and released.

"She did between $15,000 and $20,000 in damages," he said. "She completely knocked that wall down. The car was totally inside the building."

Williams was trying to stop the car when she accidentally hit the accelerator instead of the brake, Stone said. The vehicle jumped the curb in front of the restaurant before going through the building, he said.

No one was charged with the incident, although an accident report was filed.

Hallsville has a population of about 1,800 and is located between Longview and Marshall.

Officials ponder stadium roof options

IRVING (AP) — Texas Stadium officials and the city of Irving are considering thriftier plans to put a lid on the distinctive arena.

Instead of a $30 million-dollar enclosure plan with weatherproofing, heating and air conditioning, a study committee wants to find out if it would be just as effective to cover the stadium and leave concourse areas partially open for about $6 million.

"The engineers say they can do it," Irving Mayor Roy Brown told The Dallas Morning News on Wednesday. "If they can do it, we'll probably end up doming it."

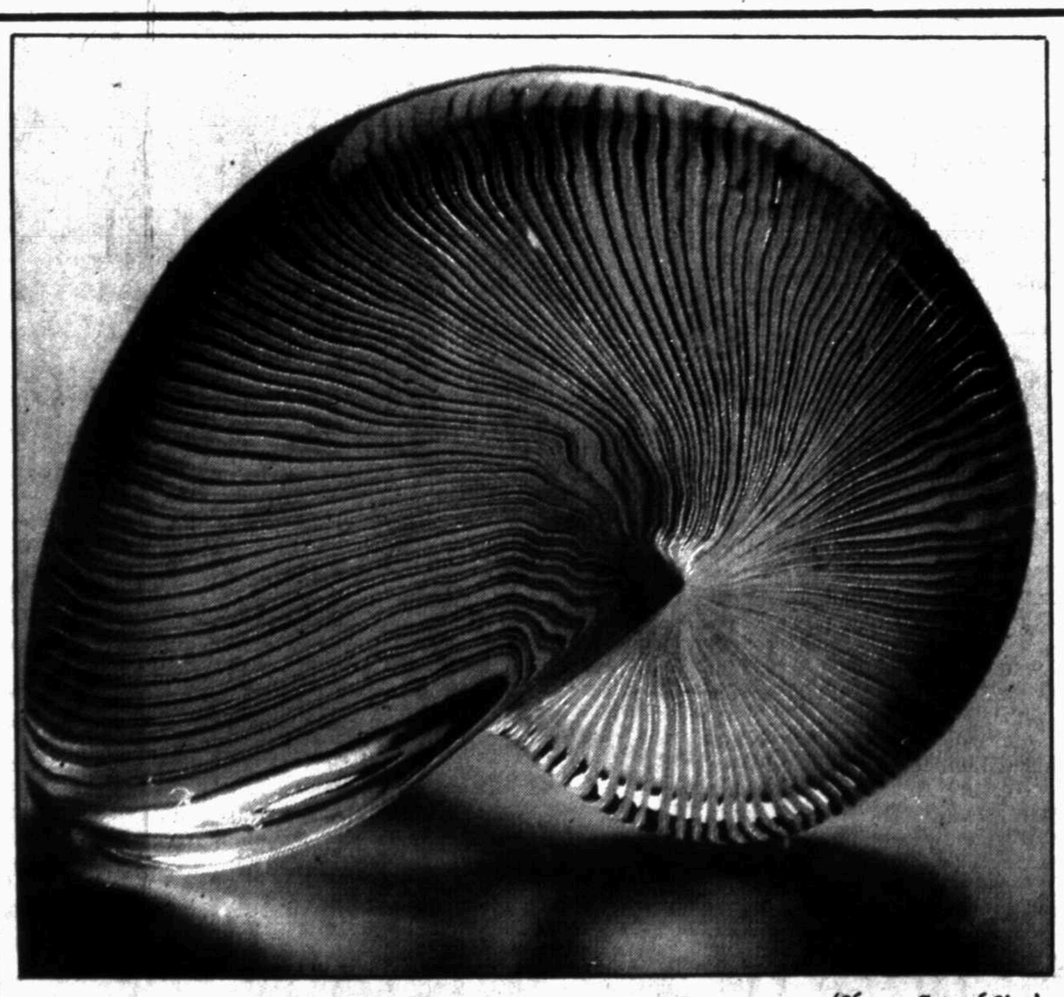

The city-appointed study committee has recommended the firm of Mammer, Siler, George & Associates of Georgia conduct a $20,000 study to see if the arena could still attract more events if it were covered but not weatherproofed.

The Texas Stadium Corp. leases Texas Arena from Irving, and corporation president Tommy Hodges said he is interested in the less expensive idea.

Court should write next school funding plan, governor says

AUSTIN (AP) — If the Texas Supreme Court throws out the latest school funding law, the justices should draw up a new one, Gov. Ann Richards said Thursday.

"If they cannot stand by what they told us to do originally, if they determine that they don't like what we've done for some little picayunish reason, then I think it's sure up to them, because otherwise whatever we do, we'll be back over there," Richards said.

There has been speculation among some state officials that the court may overturn the latest finance system, adopted by the Legislature this year.

The governor wouldn't say whether she will call lawmakers into special session if the new law is ruled unconstitutional. "I think we have to wait and see what they (the justices) say," she said.

Senate Education Committee Chairman Carl Parker, D-Port Arthur, has said there should not be a special session if this plan is ruled unconstitutional, but that the justices should devise a new one.

He said a ruling against the new law would effectively mandate massive school district consolidation, an income tax and possibly a statewide property tax.

None of those options are now politically viable, Parker said.

The law is designed to shift hundreds of millions of local property tax dollars from wealthier to poorer school districts within new education taxing regions, each made up of one or several counties.

Parker said in a recent letter to Richards that lawmakers believed they had a clear court mandate to pursue such tax base consolidation to even out school districts' access to funds.

The Supreme Court, which has twice ruled previous laws unconstitutional, is considering a challenge by property-rich school districts to the latest plan.

The state and a number of poor school districts have defended the new tax structure as constitutional, although some poor districts have expressed concern about other parts of the law, such as whether it includes enough state funding.

The Equity Center, a group of property-poor school districts, predicted the Supreme Court is likely to throw out the new tax system.

Consultant: Lottery could begin in April

HOUSTON (AP) — A consultant hired to start Texas' new lottery has said there is "more than enough time" to get the games underway by April, but the state's lottery director says a July beginning is more likely.

In the proposal that won the company a $1.3 million consulting contract, Georgia-based Lottery Support Group Inc. said instant-ticket games could get started in April and computerized lotto games in September.

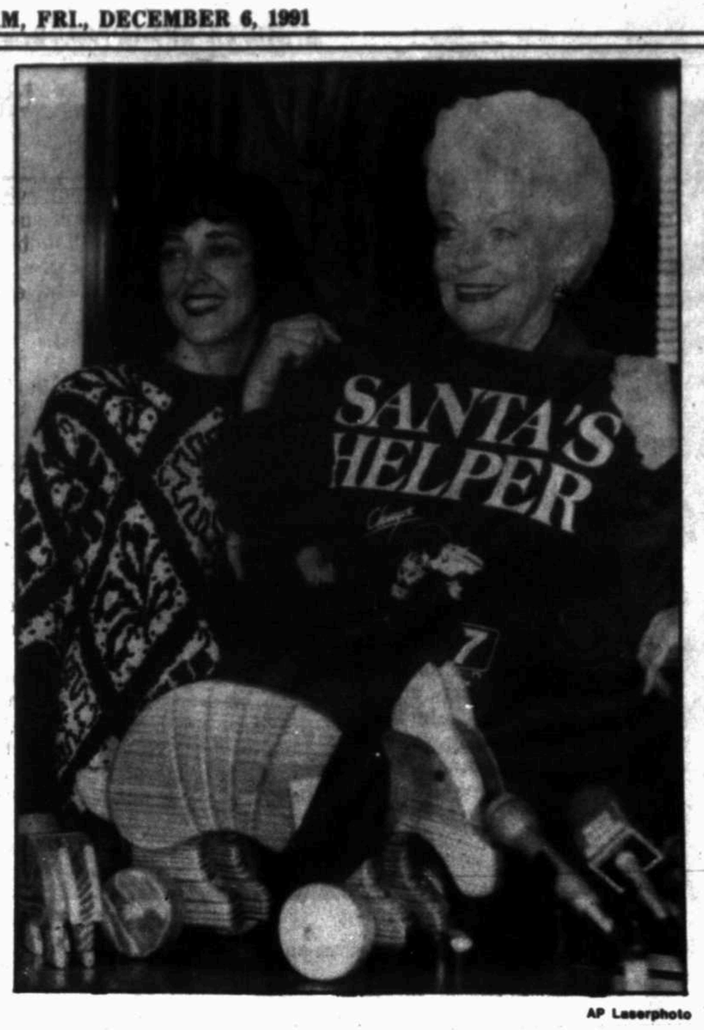

State Comptroller John Sharp has predicted a July start for instant games and a January 1993 start for the on-line games.

Lottery director Nora Linares said Wednesday that the July and January dates seem more reasonable.

"At this point, I really don't believe it is practical for us to talk about an April start-up date," she said. "If we move too quickly, we could compromise the short-term and long-term efficiency of the lottery. It makes no sense for us to rush it. We feel comfortable with July."

The lottery law passed by the Legislature requires Sharp to start instant games by mid-July and on-line games by 1993.

In their proposal, the consultants recommended a weekly TV show with a guaranteed prize of $1 million and a concerted effort to have tickets available for sale in ethnic minority neighborhoods when the games begin.

Deputy nabs trio before crime reported

BALCH SPRINGS (AP) — Three people accused of robbing a convenience store already were tracked down by a Dallas County deputy minutes before the crime was reported to police, authorities said.

Deputy Kevin Feinglass watched a truck pull out of the convenience store parking lot at 4:30 a.m. Wednesday. When the truck ran a stop sign, Feinglass pulled it over, sheriff spokesman Jim Ewell said Thursday.

As Feinglass stopped the truck, he checked in with a dispatcher, and heard a 911 call from the convenience store clerk to the dispatcher's office in the background over the air.

Ewell said Feinglass then pulled his revolver and ordered the occupants out of the truck, as a police dispatcher broadcast information on the robbery.

Gary Lynn Russom, 27, of Dallas remained in Dallas County Jail Thursday in lieu of $50,000, charged with aggravated robbery. His wife, Latricia Russom, 24, is being held for $750 in unpaid traffic fines and misdemeanor theft charges from Balch Springs. Latricia Russom's brother, Larry Eugene Lane, 25, of Dallas, also is being held in lieu of $30,000.

Ewell said Feinglass found a loaded gun inside the truck, and recovered the $34 reported stolen in the robbery.

The State

Health care access, cost need reforms, Richards says

AUSTIN (AP) — Gov. Ann Richards, who made health insurance a major campaign issue last year, Thursday urged a special task force to hunt for ways to provide affordable care to all Texans.

"We must develop some system in this state that gives Texas families access to health care in the most cost-effective manner possible," Richards said.

The governor said 4 million Texans have no health insurance protection, even though half of them hold full-time jobs.

Rural hospitals are closing faster in Texas than elsewhere, emergency rooms are clogged by people seeking such care as their only hope, some Texans stay on welfare rather than take jobs that lack health coverage, and health insurance costs for businesses have "gone out the roof," Richards said.

Problems are even more dire along the Texas-Mexico border, the governor said.

"We have children down there who have never seen a doctor, drinking water out of ditches filled with filth," she said.

The governor told the task force that the health care crisis is a national problem, and she said the experts might not be able to find a Texas solution.

But Richards urged them to look.

"The only answer may be a national answer. We may not be able to rectify these problems just here in the state of Texas," she said. "So I'm not going to tell you today that I think you can accomplish that. I am going to tell you I want you to try."

Richards, Lt. Gov. Bob Bullock and House Speaker Gib Lewis appointed the 26 members of the Texas Health Policy Task Force and asked them to make recommendations by November 1992 for action by the next regular session of the Legislature.

Richards also asked for recommendations for new federal laws.

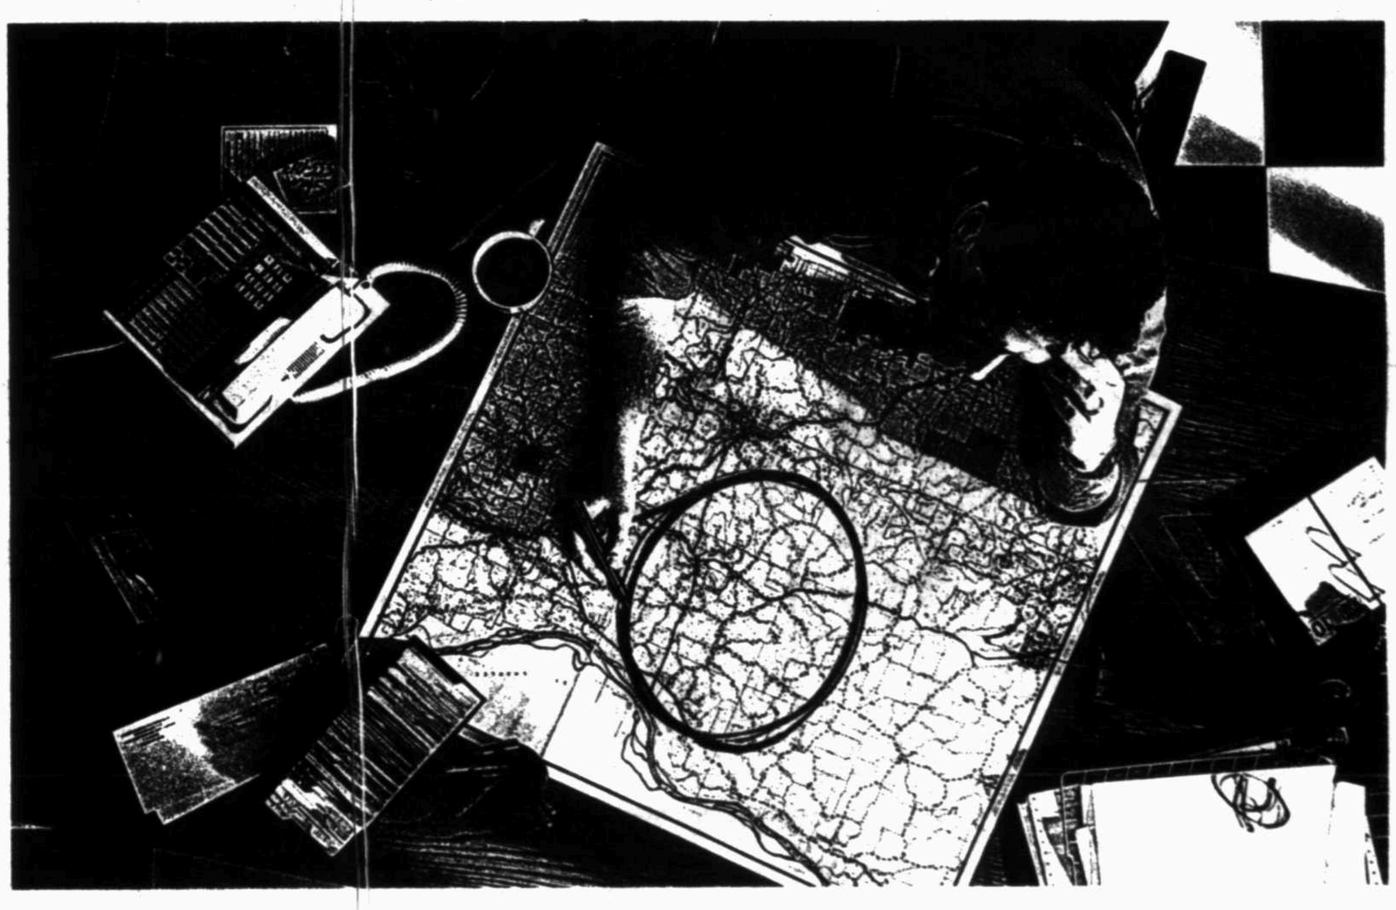

"We are a big and important state, and we can have a voice in the United States Congress," she said.

Bullock said there are numerous questions that need answering.

"Are we wasting health care money on questionable practices in one sector of medicine while basic health care needs go unmet in another sector?" he asked.

But Bullock reminded the panel that any action will involve big money — for patients, insurance companies, employers, health care providers and the government.

"Every area you delve into will have dollars attached to it," he said. "Where there are dollar signs, there are economic realities and political realities, and you must confront the realities of those cash concerns or your work is doomed from the start."

Experimenters try emu at dinner

AUSTIN (AP) — An estimated 200 gastronomical experimenters seemed "emused" with emu menu served at a benefit for the American Cancer Society.

Emu chili made with poblanos, emu roulade stuffed with carrots and onions, tiny whole wheat pastries with the emu filling, and deep-fried almond-crusted emu cutlets were served.

Medicine eases fears of meningitis

HOUSTON (AP) — Hundreds of students stayed away Thursday from a junior high school where three students have suffered meningitis, but school officials said administration of medicine that prevents the disease has helped soothe fears.

Some 1,500 parents and children lined up for medication Wednesday night at Mattie B. Hambrick Junior High School, following the death Monday of Steven Davis, 13, of meningococcoal meningitis.

Hambrick students Donyell Murphy, 13, who remained in Hermann Hospital in good condition Thursday, and Erica Battise, 13, in fair condition at Ben Taub Hospital, also contracted the disease.

Nurses and other employees of the Harris County Health Department on Wednesday distributed 500 doses of the medication rifampin, an antibiotic drug often prescribed to prevent the disease.

The first 400 doses went to students who shared classes or buses or participated on athletic teams with the afflicted students. Meningococcal meningitis, a bacterial form of the disease, can be transmitted by close contact but is not considered highly contagious, health officials said.

Aldine Independent School District spokeswoman Judy Williams said 371 children missed classes at the 1,289-student school Thursday, compared to 461 students absent Wednesday. Absenteeism at the school is usually 60-70 students each day, she said.

Ms. Williams said although the absenteeism rate still is much higher than normal, "We do feel that the clinic that we held last night to administer the medication to the designated students ... certainly has helped alleviate fears that parents and students have had."

"Because their fears have been quelled, they feel safer in coming to school," she said. "We feel we may be moving closer to coming out of the woods."

Also Thursday, the health department continued administering rifampin to Hambrick students at two off-campus health clinics.

"We are still working very closely with the health department, and we intend to continue doing so until this crisis passes," Ms. Williams said.

On Wednesday, officials said a second-grader at Alief's Chancellor Elementary School died over the weekend of an unrelated form of meningitis.

Dallas teachers save district money

DALLAS (AP) — By taking fewer sick days this fall, Dallas teachers have saved the district $202,000, which will be used to rehire 25 laid-off teachers.

By taking fewer sick days, Dallas Independent School District's 8,400 teachers saved $80,000 in September, $80,000 in October and $42,000 in November, district officials told The Dallas Morning News.

"There has been a conscious effort on a number of teachers' parts," said Maureen Peters, president of the Alliance of Dallas Educators.

In September, Dallas schools Superintendent Marvin Edwards unveiled a plan to rehire the last 52 of 257 teachers laid off because of budget cuts. The plan included saving $850,000 of the school's $5.6 million substitute pay budget.

"If the current trend of savings holds, we are confident that we will reach our goal by the end of the year," said Robby Collins, executive manager of governmental and internal relations with the school district.

The plan calls for each teacher to take two fewer sick days per year, allowing the school to save money on substitute teacher salaries. Teachers are allowed eight sick days and two personal days per year.

Peters said some teachers were skeptical of the plan when it was introduced, but it seems to be working.

Since the school year began, the district has spent about $1.1 million on substitute teacher salaries, compared to $1.3 million this time last year, officials said.

The dip in savings in November probably was caused by the beginning of flu season, said Matthew Harden, executive manager of budget and finance for the school district.

Collins said school officials are working with teachers to resolve stressful situations.

Hazardous wastes will bypass border crossing, official says

LAS CRUCES, N.M. (AP) — The border crossing scheduled to open next month at Santa Teresa, N.M., would be used for the shipment of hazardous waste out of Mexico only in emergency situations, according to a U.S. Customs Service official.

Rudy Cole, assistant district director for inspections and control in El Paso said Wednesday it is unlikely hazardous waste will be transported through the Santa Teresa crossing anytime soon.

The crossing is scheduled to open in mid-January.

"The one in Santa Teresa will be used only in case of emergencies or if a truck does show up there leaking hazardous waste," Cole said.

U.S. Customs Service officials last month said they were considering a plan to begin sending hazardous waste through the Santa Teresa border crossing rather than over the Bridge of the Americas in El Paso.

Dona Ana County Manager Donald Brooks said then he was concerned because trucks would have to drive on narrow and dilapidated roads in rural areas south of Las Cruces en route to Interstate 10. The roads wind through poor, unincorporated communities.

"It would take a lot of things to happen before we began shipping waste through Santa Teresa," Cole said Wednesday.

He said it would have to be shown that hazardous waste needed to be shipped through the Santa Teresa crossing.

Cole also said the Customs Service doesn't plan to change procedures for handling hazardous waste.

Under maquiladora rules, waste generated from the processing of materials originating in the U.S. must leave Mexico. Under the present arrangement, companies shipping waste from Mexico must contact the customs office in El Paso and specify a date to cross at the El Paso bridge.

Seven hunters die in accidents so far this year

AUSTIN (AP) — Texas hunters continue to shoot one another at an "alarming" rate, the Texas Parks and Wildlife Department reported Thursday. Through November, seven hunters had been killed and 67 injured.

"Everything you see and hear in the woods should be considered a human until there's absolutely no doubt," advised Steve Hall, education administrator for the agency.

"That's before you ever raise a gun. If there's any doubt, raise the binoculars," Hall said.

This year's accidents compare with eight deaths and 53 injuries during 1990 and 12 deaths and 78 injuries in 1989.

All seven of this year's fatalities and 26 of the injuries have occurred during the fall hunting seasons. The bulk of the accidents occurred in East Texas and Central Texas, officials said.

Since dove season opened Sept. 1, the region around Brownwood has seen 12 hunting accidents, including one death. Hunters in the region around Rusk have reported eight accidents, including two deaths.

Most of the accidents could have been prevented, said Terry Erwin, Parks and Wildlife recreation programs coordinator.

Erwin said such accidents could have been prevented by following basic rules of shooting safety or perhaps by wearing hunter orange clothing.

"We recommend that people wear blaze orange for the safety factor. I recommend wearing it all the time while in the field hunting. If it's not on, it's not doing you a bit of good," Erwin said.

FAMILY MATTERS

Money distribution causes trouble for couple

By Jim May, Ph.D.

DEAR FAMILY: My husband and I fight all the time about money. He is so tight that he squeaks when he walks. He is a very successful professional and makes a very good salary. I stay home with our three children by my choice (and he agrees). My problem is that he thinks that I should ask him whenever I want money. He handles his paycheck and pays all the bills. I feel like a little girl having to ask daddy for money when I want to buy something. He won't let me use the credit cards except for an emergency.

May

I am sick and tired of living my life like this. I have discussed this situation with some of my good girl friends and my mother and they all think that I'm crazy for putting up with this. I have to ask him for every penny I spend, even for groceries! I have to tell him when I'm going to go to the grocery store and he gives me a single check and I have to give him the grocery receipt when I come home. He says that's so that he can enter it into the checkbook but I think that it's so he can make sure I don't get any cash.

Every decision about any purchases for our house is a major fight. He doesn't want to spend any money on anything and if he does he wants to get the "best deal" which means "cheapest." Clothes for the children is also a big hassle. He insists on my going to (discount department store) to shop for sales and bargains when we can easily afford to go to a good store. The kids are young now and it only bothers me, but when they get a little older this is going to be a real mess.

I have put up with this for almost 12 years of marriage but it finally got to me yesterday. I didn't know what else to do but one of my friends suggested writing you. At breakfast we were talking about Christmas and I want a real Christmas tree. He wants to use the second-hand artificial tree that he bought in a garage sale two years ago again. I just can't stand that tree. I don't want to decorate it again. I want a real, live tree for once. Just for once, I want to do something that I want to do. I know that spending for gifts is going to be a problem but why can't I just have a $20 tree that I really want?

We haven't spoken since. Now I don't know what to do. I don't want to ruin Christmas for the kids, but I hate giving in every time to him. What can I do? He is a good provider and a nice man in many ways, but I just can't stand another Christmas like this. — FRUSTRATED

DEAR FRUSTRATED: You certainly have a lot to be frustrated about. You and your husband clearly have some rules about how the money will be handled in your family that you do not agree with. There is no "right or wrong" of family money allocation, but you two should agree on whatever is done.

Money is the number one issue in marital problems. In my experience, it is more personal than sex. People are a lot more likely to discuss their sex life than their financial life. So you are addressing a problem that is a difficult one for many couples.

At one level money is very easy to discuss because it is factual. The problem is that in this case "facts have feelings." I encourage you to make an appointment with your husband to discuss this matter. Select a time that you two can talk without any interruptions — no children, no television, no newspaper, etc. I suggest you share your displeasures with the present budget and money distribution process. Avoid any name calling — like "cheap" or "spendthrift." Focus on your desire for change.

The next step is to prepare a household budget. Your husband probably knows exactly what is spent where, so simply put that in a budget format with "Income and Expense" categories. The personal computer money management programs really aid this process. If you need a budget format, write me and send me a self-addressed stamped envelope and I will mail you a home budget form.

After the budget is prepared, then discuss distribution. I have found it to be helpful when couples prefer to keep two seperate checkbooks for there to be a "household distribution" to one spouse to handle all agreed upon household expenses. You should not have to feel that you have to beg for money. Marriage is a sharing. It is the sharing of all that we have. It is a team effort — not of one, but of two.

Write again and let me know if you get stuck. The mechanics of the process are straight-forward but the feelings it generates are not so clear. You might like to read Dr. Felton-Collins' book, "Couples and Money," if you want more detailed information about the couple-money interaction. I hope that you enjoy decorating your Christmas tree this year.

DEAR ABBY

Society has double standard when dealing with minors, sex

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: The following story is fictitious: A man in his late 20s goes to bed with a 14-year-old girl. He gets caught, is arrested, and goes to prison for a few years where he is subject to all kinds of dangers in prison because of his crime.

Van Buren

The following story is real: A married woman in her late 20s goes to bed with a 14-year-old boy. They are having an affair. The boy and this woman do their frolicking when her husband is at work during his graveyard shift. This boy is some kind of "hero" to his friends, and even to some adults! Why?

This is a double standard in its ugliest fashion. If an underage girl has sex with an adult male, then it is a case of, "Poor girl, he must have taken advantage of her."

When an underage boy has sex with an adult woman, it turns into, "What a stud, atta boy — learn early!"

Furthermore, I have never heard of a case where a woman went to prison for having sex with underage boys. Isn't it a crime? I am not saying that one is right and the other is not. They're both wrong. Why, however, do women get away with this awful crime? — FRESNO FRANK

DEAR FRESNO FRANK: Women "get away" with it if the parents of the underage boy are unwilling to charge the woman with having sex with a minor. But regardless of who takes advantage of a minor of either sex — that person is guilty of statutory rape.

DEAR ABBY: The problem I'm about to tell you is one you probably never heard before.

My husband and I have been married for 14 years and have two great sons. My husband and I have had problems we've tried to resolve with counseling, but the counseling didn't work, so I decided I wanted to leave him while I was young enough to make a happier life for myself.

I called my father-in-law and asked to see him privately so he wouldn't be too shocked when I left his son. Well, he picked me up and we went for a drive out in the country.

When I gave him my news — he gave me some. He said he and his wife never had a really good marriage, but he stayed with her because of their children, who are all grown now. Then he told me he's always had special feelings for me — but he would never follow through on them because I belonged to his son.

To make a long story short, we confessed our love for each other and want to spend the rest of our lives together, but we don't know how my sons will feel about having their grandfather for a stepfather. It's a mess, but you only live once. What should we do? — TRUE STORY

DEAR TRUE STORY: You both need to see a marriage counselor — but not the one you and your husband saw. Please, think this out carefully and make no announcements before you are certain that your decisions are sound, solid and will stand the test of time.

DEAR ABBY: After reading your wonderful booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," what advice do you have for people who are on the receiving end? How does one respond to people who have "lost it" and are venting their anger on you? — BEEN THERE

DEAR BEEN THERE: If they become physical, get out of their way and put as much distance as you can between them and you. But if they're venting their anger verbally, you'd be wise to simply listen. Anger expressed is anger defused.

This one's for everybody, from teens to seniors! To purchase Abby's new booklet, "The Anger in All of Us and How to Deal With It," send a long, business-size, self-addressed envelope, plus check or money order for $3.95 ($4.50 in Canada) to: Dear Abby, Anger Booklet, P.O. Box 447, Mount Morris, Ill. 61054. (Postage is included.)

Employees can cut costs for dependent care

N.Y. Times News Service

Most employees of large companies have the opportunity to set aside pre-tax dollars to pay for dependent care, which includes day care for children through age 12 or care for elderly relatives.

Yet only 5 percent of those who are eligible use these accounts, according to A. Foster Higgins & Co., an employee benefits consultant in Princeton, N.J.

George Faulkner, managing consultant at Foster Higgins, compared the tax advantages of the accounts with the dependent tax care credit, which is a credit against taxes due. He found that the account was almost always more advantageous.

Consider the case of a couple filing jointly with an adjusted gross income of $55,000 and $5,000 of child-care expenses, the maximum that can be reimbursed through a dependent-care account.

Assuming they have one child, take the standard deduction and pay 3 percent in state and local taxes, they will save $1,933 with an account.

If they used the credit instead, they would save $480.

NEW YORK (AP) — With good paper, imagination and professional advice, Christmas presents, once wrapped, can look expensive even if they're not.

Or if a lack of time forced you to buy in multiples, special wrapping can make them look hand-picked.

Robin Cohen, a custom gift wrap guru in Stockton, Calif., suggests painting the recipient's name on a ball tree ornament rather than a gift tag. And she likes to make the package decoration an accessory to the gift — by gluing chocolate kisses to a box of candy, for example, or tying grapes to a bottle of wine.

From Yoshiko Hase, a wrapping whiz in Japan, comes the art of origami to create personalized packages. It's all in a book called "Wrap It Up! Creative Giftwraping Ideas" (Kodansha America Inc., $14.95).

The merit of this well-illustrated soft-cover book is that it goes beyond color schemes and suit-the-occasion themes. It actually shows step by step how to wrap a bottle, the odd-shaped box, a single flower. It also illustrates how to craft an envelope for a gift when you're short of boxes.

The basics of bow-tying are there, too. But more interesting are ways to pleat the wrapping paper and use stickers to make mailed packages pretty.

"Wrapping Gifts Beautifully" by Packo Jansen (Sterling Publishing Co. Inc., $10.95), is also a paperback with full-color illustrations. But it's for the truly dexterous — and for those in search of novel ways to wrap special gifts. Jansen, for example, inserts an engagement ring in an apple, wraps a toy train as a candy chain, uses sheet music to make an envelope for a pair of concert tickets.

Cohen charges $6 to $50 for custom wrapping at the The Paper Plum, the Stockton, Calif., gift shop she owns with her mom. Now she's on videotape for $19.95. Again, you have to plan ahead. Many of her ideas call for materials from crafts and hobby shops — from glitter spray to glue guns.

IT'S YOUR LIFE

Lack of self worth is primary pain source

By Steve Edwards

QUESTION: What are the primary sources of emotional pain?

ANSWER: One primary source is a lack of self worth. The examples are many: Parents tend to place the heaviest demands on the oldest child, who is often the most successful in terms of career, yet the least happy about it. The youngest is frequently smothered and overprotected, and has a tendency to be a rebellious teenager, and develops a low self-worth because he feels inferior to others more independent that he is, and to compensate often ridicules the same group. The child with overly strict parents often assumes the parents are right and blames himself for not being perfect. The child with a cold, rejecting mother and a passive or absent father often develops a real fear of intimacy and is set up for repeated rejection by friends later in life. Lack of self-worth is definitely a major source of our emotional pain and underlines again the importance of love, caring, touching and personal warmth.

Edwards

QUESTION: In grief, what are some things we can do to help us heal?

ANSWER: One thing is to get support. Surround yourself with family and friends. Accept and ask for support and warmth. In doing so, strike a balance between solitude and being with others. Take time to grieve, to tune in to true feelings, but also to feel loved and comforted. Private time and social activities are both important. Learn who your "strong" friends are — the ones who can just be with you. Many of our friends are good and well intentioned, but cannot bear the pain of our sorrow or maybe have too many private burdens of their own. Come to know those persons who can indeed truly be with you in difficult times or sorrow. Gain strength from these friendships — this is not a time to isolate yourself.

QUESTION: Why is it so hard for us to enhance our self-esteem?

ANSWER: Because anything that's familiar to us is hard for us to recognize and let go, even when that something may be painful or troublesome. Thus, while we may long for something better, given the opportunity to have it, we often struggle because it's unfamiliar and we're insecure. It's scary! To enhance our self-esteem doesn't mean that we have to be someone else. We need only to change our attitudes and learn new personal skills. This can happen to anyone. What we need, we already possess. It's a matter of knowing, understanding and expanding our uniqueness and talents. You can enhance your feelings of self-esteem by your willingness to be open to new possibilities, trying them, and as they work, practicing them until they become yours.

QUESTION: Is talking a matter of habit for most people?

ANSWER: Yes, and as a result people often don't listen to what they say. Unless we listen to our words, we can say all kinds of things we don't really mean and give out messages we don't intend. It becomes embarrassing when we're confronted with this, yet have no awareness of what we've done. We pay so little attention to our habits, yet our talk is of such importance it's vital that we pay attention to it and recognize what we're actually saying or meaning. Change can only begin once something is recognized, acknowledged and we have the picture of a new possibility. In other words, "talk" just for the mere sake of talking is wasted rhetoric. Learn to say what you mean, and mean what you say.

QUESTION: Why are "ought" and "should" trap words?

ANSWER: When used by others, they often imply that there's something wrong with us, an accusation that somehow we've failed to measure up or we've done something really stupid. "You should have known better!"

Ought and should, when used by us in a personal way, often reflect our own entrapment, our dilemma that we're being pulled in two directions; a tip-off to those who listen that we're engaged in an inner struggle. The issue may be simple, like buying a shirt or dress, or complex involving extremely personal issues. Words do have power and it's essential for us to listen not only to what we say, to see if we're saying what we mean, but also for us to hear what others are really trying to say. The words we use do have an effect on our health and definitely influence relationships and how others can work together.

Steve Edwards is executive director of Community and Senior Services and consultant for the Visiting Nurse Service of Midland.

Pearl Harbor memories bring nostalgia, reality

By Dr. Henry F. Page

Remembering Pearl Harbor half a century after participating in the event creates a mixture of nostalgia and grim reality on retrospection. The abrupt change from an assured "living in Paradise" lifestyle, to that of survival in a threatening holocaust challenged the basic character of all those living in America's 'melting pot.' Happily the response proved positive!

Page

The first phenomenon that penetrated the fog of 50 years of memory was the sense of unreality that ensued immediately following the onset of the attack. From our perch on Aiea Heights in Navy Mobile Hospital #2 overlooking the whole of Pearl Harbor, we at first thought the explosions on Ford Island were practice smoke bombs. We soon comprehended the immediate if not the long term significance when right under our eyes bouncing torpedos exploded in the sides of ships and flames and billowing black smoke enveloped the entire area and a sailor standing right next to me was fatally hit by our own anti-aircraft fire.

Two other physicians and myself were immediately dispatched to take charge of the boxing arena at the Base which was being converted to a minor emergency and temporary shelter. Here we functioned for 72 hours, staffed by nurses, corpsmen, pink-lady volunteers, 'the Colonel's wife and Sadie O'Grady', and scattered civilians of all quality. Purposeful activity sublimated the otherwise severe anxiety reaction to the aweful events outside. There was no evidence of fear or panic despite an atmosphere rife with rumors.

Medical care for the entire area was supplied by the old, already over crowded Base Hospital, the Hospital Ship 'Solace' which had arrived Oct. 27th, and the USN Mobile Base Hospital #2, which had become functional December 6. These three units, one District and two Fleet operations, all cooperated smoothly. Supplies even for my Arena endeavor arrived mysteriously and promptly without the usual quadruple release forms. The end results from the three hospitals were all good and equally successful.

The one occurrence that has never faded from my memory took place on the morning of Dec. 8, when while listening to the Star Spangled Banner emanating from Washington via radio, I viewed the American flag flying gallantly above the smoky, smoldering ruin. It represented what over 2,000 of America's finest young men and women had sacrificed their lives to preserve. Any desecration of that flag is grossly obscene.

Habitual use of laxatives may create dependence

By Dr. Michael Freedman

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans, particularly older Americans, love laxatives; they spend about a half-billion dollars annually on them in the belief these medications will help them keep regular. They don't.

In fact, persistent use of some laxatives can result in loss of some essential vitamins and minerals because they speed food through the system before nutrients can be sufficiently absorbed.

Mineral oil, for example, can prevent absorption of vitamins A, D, E and K.

Vitamin D is crucial for the assimilation of calcium, particularly important for senior citizens because many of them are not exposed to enough sun to make their own supply. This particular vitamin enables people to absorb calcium from foods, essential for keeping bones strong.

Regular use of saline-type laxatives can deplete the body of fluid and mineral nutrients known as electrolytes, such as potassium, needed to keep the heart and muscles functioning properly.

And finally, it should be noted that habitual users of laxatives often become dependent on them because their bowels have become flabby and accustomed to responding only to the drug's artificial stimulation.

Dietary fiber, plenty of fluids and some physical activity are all most people need to stay "regular."

And while I'm at it, let me add some words about antacids which are often portrayed as harmless cures for overindulgence. Frequent use of large amounts of antacids can be far from harmless, and can possibly spell trouble instead of relief.

For example, antacids that contain the ingredient aluminum hydroxide may result in a deficiency of phosphorus which can lead to a condition known as osteomalacia or "soft bones."

People who make indiscriminate use of antacids to relieve what they might think is only heartburn or indigestion could be neglecting a more serious condition, such as a gastric ulcer.

Antacids should be taken only sparingly and occasionally — and for not more than two weeks at a time without consulting a doctor.

A recent Mayo Clinic Health Letter notes that a treadmill test can answer many questions about the health of your cardiovascular system.

It recommends the treadmill test before you begin a vigorous exercise program if you:

- Are over 40.
- Have risk factors for coronary artery disease, such as smoking or a family history of heart problems.
- Have a chronic disease, such as high blood pressure or diabetes.
- Experience chest pain or pressure, unusual shortness of breath or heart irregularity.
- Are unsure of your ability to exercise.

Farmers branch out and grow colored cotton

AUSTIN (AP) — When most people think of cotton, fluffy white puffs come to mind.

But many farmers are taking a technicolor view, growing naturally colored cotton in shades of brown and green and garnering a premium for their crop.

"With the addition of naturally colored cotton, Texas is on the cutting edge of a new, potentially very profitable development in the natural fibers market," said Julia Apodaca, a research associate with the Natural Fibers Information Center at the University of Texas.

About 40 growers in the state will produce 1,250 acres of brown cotton this year, up from about two acres in 1988.

All of the state's major growers are producing the colored cotton under contract for San Francisco-based Levi Strauss & Co., which is using it to make a new line of denim jeans. The brown jeans, which became available this month, actually darken when they are washed rather than fading.

Levi Strauss, which produces the brown denim at a mill in Littlefield, planted its first two-acre test plot in 1988 to see how the brown cotton would grow in Texas.

"From a pure agricultural and textile perspective, it's such an interesting innovation," said Jill Novack, spokeswoman for Levi Strauss.

The jeans, called "Levi's Naturals," initially will be sold in a small number of specialty stores because of the limited supply of colored cotton, Novack said. The company is working with farmers to meet their demand.

Other large clothing companies, such as The Gap, Patagonia and Esprit, have expressed interest in colored cotton, Apodaca said.

Colored cotton — grown in shades of white, brown and purple — has been around for more than 4,500 years in South America.

The companies are responding to the growing number of environmentally aware consumers. According to Cotton Inc., demand for 100 percent cotton garments has steadily increased as consumers clamor for "all natural" clothing.

The colored cotton also is more cost-effective for manufacturers because there are no costs related to bleaching or dyeing.

Colored cotton — grown in shades of white, brown and purple — has been around for more than 4,500 years in South America, where it played a significant role in the lives of the Andean people, said James Vreeland, a UT graduate student in anthropology, whose dissertation is on the revival of pre-Columbian techniques for growing and using colored cotton.

A group of Peruvian researchers, headed by Vreeland, created a line of colored cotton clothing eight years ago that was marketed in Japan and Europe. The test, he said, was a success.

But it took a California entrepreneur to spur commercial interest in the United States.

Sally Fox, a plant breeder and owner of Natural Cotton Colors Inc. of Wasco, Calif., has contracted with farmers to grow cotton from seed she provides. Her company has a three-year contract to sell the cotton to Levi Strauss.

Last week, Fox visited the Lubbock area, where most of the state's colored cotton is grown. Brown and green cotton also are being grown in Uvalde and the Trans Pecos area of the state.

Despite its lower yield, Eugene Bednarz of Slaton said he likes the fact he can sell his crop for a set price that is twice what he can command for white cotton.

"Everyone that's growing it right now wants more acres," said Bednarz, who coordinates the state's colored cotton crop.

Bednarz said he was attracted by the novelty of the crop. He grew 60 acres in 1988 and has expanded to 300 acres.

"All I know is it's been worth it to the farmers who have grown it," said Jane Dever, research scientist for Texas A&M University and a cotton breeder by trade.

John Kveton, the father of Dever and Apodaca, began growing brown and green cotton for Fox on his Lubbock farm three years ago. He has about 40 acres of brown cotton this year. "If it sells, we'll grow more," he said.

Although colored cotton is easy to grow, brown cotton will account for only a small percentage of the state's estimated 2.85 million to 3 million bales of cotton that will be harvested this year, Kveton said.

Christmas tree can become part of landscape

The boughs of holly have been used to deck the halls and sprigs of mistletoe hang over every door, but the one plant Christmas would not be complete without has yet to be brought in, the Christmas tree. The kids are anxious; they want to decorate the tree now! But this year for something new and longer lasting, use a living tree.

Kiker

The first thing to do is to pick out a tree. Consider the following: Aleppo Pine, Japanese Black Pine, Japanese Yew, Loblolly Pine, Deodar Cedar, Juniper or othee coniferous evergreens. If you prefer a broadleafed tree, possibilities include: American Holly, Burford Holly, Compact Cherry Laurel or Yaupon. Or possibly a tubbed plant to remain inside after the Christmas season? The Norfolk Island Pine, kumquats, colamondins or Yews could very easily full that request.

Once the tree is chosen, if it is not tubbed, a container must be chosen as well. If the tree roots are balled and burlapped, a container must be used that will allow at least an inch of peat moss, potting soil or compost around the ball to prevent drying out. If the plant has been grown in a container, it can be made much more attractive by placing it in a redwood tub, ceramic or clay pot or even a wooden box lined with polyethylene film liner. All containers should be well-drained to prevent damage to the roots caused by excess moisture. A pan underneath the container will also prevent floor damage.

Now that the tree is in the container and in the house, you can start to give the kids a little leeway; all you have to do now is to find a good place for the tree that is not in the stream of heat, or near a stove or radiator. When not occupied, the room should be kept as cool as possible and the plant should be watered when dry. A simple way to tell when the plant needs water is to push a sharpened pencil into the soil. If the pencil comes out dry and clean, the plant needs water, otherwise, wait until the next day.

After Christmas, it is best to plant the tree in the landscape as soon as possible. The selected site for the tree should fit into the landscape, as well as allow a sufficient amount of room for growth and development. The pit dug for the tree should be large enough to allow three to four inches of soil on all sides of the soil ball. It should be planted at the same depth it was at the nursery or in the container. One part peat moss, pine bark or compost to two parts soil should be mixed when preparing the backfill and then packed and then packed firmly around the ball. When the pit is three-fourths full, the tree should be watered thoroughly and then filled the rest of the way. If the plant was balled and burlapped, the burlap should be loosened before completely filling the hole.

The tree is now a permanent part of your landscape. To keep it healthy while it is adapting to its new environment, here are some tips:

- Water is regularly, but allow the soil to dry a little between waterings.
- Mulch the surface with some kind of organic matter to reduce weeds and conserve moisture.
- Avoid fertilization until June or July following planting.
- Keep weeds and grass sown to prevent competition.

The tree can be used to served another purpose — the beautification of your yard. Planted into your landscape, these trees can add a nice touch in the spring, summer and fall and can even serve as an outdoor Christmas tree next time Christmas rolls around.

Plant breeder produces new papaya variety

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — The city known for its tortillas and picante sauce has found a new product to export: papaya.

A specialist in plant breeding at the city's Botanical Center has successfully crossed two strains of papayas to produce a new one — itself of two varieties — that will bear the city's name.

The new strains, four years in development, will be known as the San Antonio Sweet and the San Antonio Early.

Ying Doon Moy, who joined the city 10 years ago as a gardener and now heads research at the Botanical Center, is part of the team developing the new varieties.

A geneticist in his native China, Moy, 61, has cultivated papayas for more than 30 years, working with varieties from Hawaii, Indonesia, Thailand, Malaysia and China.

"We have had a lot of interest from commercial growers and from individuals. We want to protect our proprietary interest and our name," said Eric Lautzenheiser, director of the Botanical Center.

Lautzenheiser said the patenting process should be completed within a few months. Seeds from the 39 hybrid trees growing at the center may be made available in 1992.

"The big advantage is that they ripen in one growing season," he said. Normally, papayas require up to 15 months to bear fruit, but the new strains produce within a year or less, Lautzenheiser said.

Moy said the San Antonio Early can be produced within 10 months.

The San Antonio Sweet, as its name implies, is sweeter than the Early and grows as large as 20 pounds.

To obtain the new varieties, Moy crossed a Mexican Yellow papaya with a Hawaiian Solo, gaining size from the Mexican variety and sweetness from the Hawaiian one.

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — A U.S. Navy pilot from Roanoke, Ala., landed his jet on an aircraft carrier with the cockpit canopy smashed, with no vision in his right eye and a broken shoulder, officials said recently.

"It is the most extraordinary flying feat I have seen in peace or war in my lifetime," said Capt. Jim Sherlock, air wing commander of the USS Dwight D. Eisenhower.

Lt. Cmdr. Joe F. Edwards of Fighter Squadron 142 and his radar intercept officer were in their F-14 Tomcat over the Persian Gulf last month when a piece of the plane snapped off.

Navy spokesman Lt. Cmdr. Tim O'Leary said Edwards, 33, of Roanoke, "sustained injuries to his right eye and right shoulder after the radar dome of his aircraft, at the nose of the Tomcat, came loose and smashed the jet's canopy while the jet was flying at 450 knots (450 mph) at 27,500 feet."

"It was some kind of structural failure, never heard of it occurring before," Edwards said later from a hospital bed in Bahrain. "It happened very quickly, it was like an explosion."

Edwards thought radar intercept officer Lt. Cmdr. Scott Grundmeier might be seriously injured, so he chose not to eject but to land aboard the Eisenhower to get immediate medical care for Grundmeier. He did not know his crewman was uninjured.

"Death comes to your mind, but you find yourself able to handle more under difficult circumstances," Edwards said.

He grappled with the plane for about 20 minutes, realizing halfway through that he had lost sight in his right eye. "Something cut the cornea, my eye was glazed," he said.

In his mirror, he could see no trace of Grundmeier in the seat behind him. Long minutes later, "I saw his head moving in my mirror and he signaled to me."

O'Leary said Edwards made a pass at the carrier at 500 feet to alert it of his predicament. Radio contact was lost as a result of the accident.

He made two more practice passes while the ship prepared for the landing. "Relying on his instruments for the final approach, Edwards piloted his aircraft despite the pain from his broken clavicle and the loss of vision from his right eye," O'Leary said.

Edwards said he and Grundmeier, originally from Minnesota, had flown together for six months. They were also classmates at the U.S. Naval Academy and "it made communications and teamwork easy."

"I am just glad we are in one piece, and we're just happy to bring the airplane back. It's a pretty expensive piece."

Edwards, with 2,500 flying hours since graduating from the academy in 1980, wasn't in the Gulf War. But he was aboard the Eisenhower in the Red Sea early in the gulf crisis and flew missions over Lebanon in 1983 when the carrier was based in the eastern Mediterranean.

Dads patrol school halls

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — A special security force is roaming the halls of Arlington High School, doing more with one stern look than some rent-a-cops could do with a badge and a billy club.

The men are Security Dads, a group of fathers recruited to help patrol the halls after a student was stabbed in the school cafeteria earlier this year.

"It's that father image," said Principal Jackie Greenwood. "They don't even have to say something. They just give them a look when students are doing something wrong."

"It makes you uncomfortable to do something wrong in front of someone's parent," said senior Maria Baker, whose father is a Security Dad.

"It's hard for me or anybody to disobey a friend's parent," she said.

Security Dads was an idea of Linda Wallace, president of the school's Organization of Parents, Teachers and Students.

Mrs. Wallace saw it as a way to get more men involved in school activities and to deter student violence.

"I think the students enjoy the fact that somebody cares," said Mrs. Wallace's husband, Anthony. "We approach them in a respectful manner and they respond in kind."

"It's good to see the parents involved," said Vickie Nowlin, an English teacher and club sponsor. "The kids respect them. It's like a non-threatening thing. They give the kids a feeling of security, as well as a friend."

AP Writer

San Angelo didn't have the points to get past Odessa Permian, but it had the people.

By virtue of their higher enrollment, the Bobcats advanced to the Division I playoffs, leaving District 4-5A foe Midland Lee to battle powerful Permian, the top-ranked team of the state's toughest district, in Division II.

San Angelo, Permian and Lee comprise a fourth of the surviving Class 5A schools as Division I enters its semifinal round and Division II plays its quarterfinals.

"We've (District 4) always felt pride in being a little stout," said Dan Gandy, whose Bobcats (10-2-1) came closer to Permian than anyone in a 21-15 loss. San Angelo battles Killeen (10-2) this week for a berth in the Division I title game.

"It's just a real good district to be in. The competition level out here is high. If you don't play your best you're going to get blown out."

"We've always said we had a strong district," Miller said. "I think that's the proof in the pudding."

Decades of facing the same opponents, including perennial juggernaut Permian, has toughened San Angelo, Gandy said.

"In a lot of the city districts, the teams change," he said. "Out here we've played each other since high schools started. You've got grandfathers saying 'I remember way back when we played them.' It definitely makes you play hard."

District 4 put away District 5 and the last two-thirds of District 8's playoff contingent last week.

Lee trounced Sherman 29-7 and Permian, led by Malcolm Hamilton's 199 yards and three touchdowns, whipped the bigger, stronger Arlington Lamar Vikings 25-7. San Angelo, meanwhile, used Shea Morenz's 258 yards passing and four touchdowns to oust Arlington Sam Houston 33-28.

At least one of the teams will be bumped this week as Permian (13-0) and Lee (12-1) face off in a Division II quarterfinal at 2 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock's Jones Stadium.

An Oct. 11 battle between Lee and Permian at Odessa's Ratliff Stadium proved easy for Permian, which won 33-0.

"They kicked our lungs in," Miller said. "We played about as poorly as we could. Sometimes you learn something, but it's tough when they (Permian) say it's the best team they've ever had. We're just glad to be where we're at right now."

Gandy said he likes the chances of District 4 taking two state championship trophies back to West Texas.

"That would be something, wouldn't it?" he said.

In the other Division I game Saturday,

Holtz extension

SOUTH BEND, Ind. (AP) — Lou Holtz signed a five-year contract extension Thursday, abruptly ending speculation that the Notre Dame coach might leave for the Minnesota Vikings.

Holtz feared the continuous speculation would hurt recruiting, but he proved unable to squelch rumors that he might take the NFL job.

"We determined that the best way to do that was with this contract," said the Rev. E. William Beauchamp, university vice president for athletics.

Holtz said repeatedly he intended to stay at Notre Dame, but talk flared anew when the Vikings announced Wednesday that Jerry Burns would retire and team president Roger Headrick said he would approach Holtz about the job.

Terms of the contract were not disclosed.

Cage teams meet in Tall City Classic

By Terry Williamson
Sports Editor

The annual Tall City Basketball Classic kicks off a two-day run at 5 p.m. today at Chaparral Center, but the tournament has been forced into a change of format after two teams dropped out.

The tournament was supposed to have an eight-team field, but three-time defending champion Austin LBJ dropped out as did Panhandle power Amarillo High.

"With only six teams, we had to make some changes in the tournament format," said Mike Stevens, tournament director. "Amarillo High made a commitment to us, but found out later this was the same date as their Amarillo tournament. LBJ also had a conflict.

"We're still looking at how we can make this tournament better by bringing in some top quality teams. We're tinkering with some ideas, and we still believe that we have some good teams here this weekend."

Under the format change, each team will play three games by switching opponents. The unique part is that Midland High will meet Midland Lee is a District 4-5A showdown preview at 8:30 p.m. Saturday in the tournament closer.

Midland High will bring a 3-3 record into the Classic, seeking to break a two-game losing streak. Jack Stephenson's Bulldogs lost in the championship round of the Uvalde tournament last weekend by a 73-64 margin and fell Tuesday to unbeaten Lubbock Monterey by a narrow 74-73 margin.

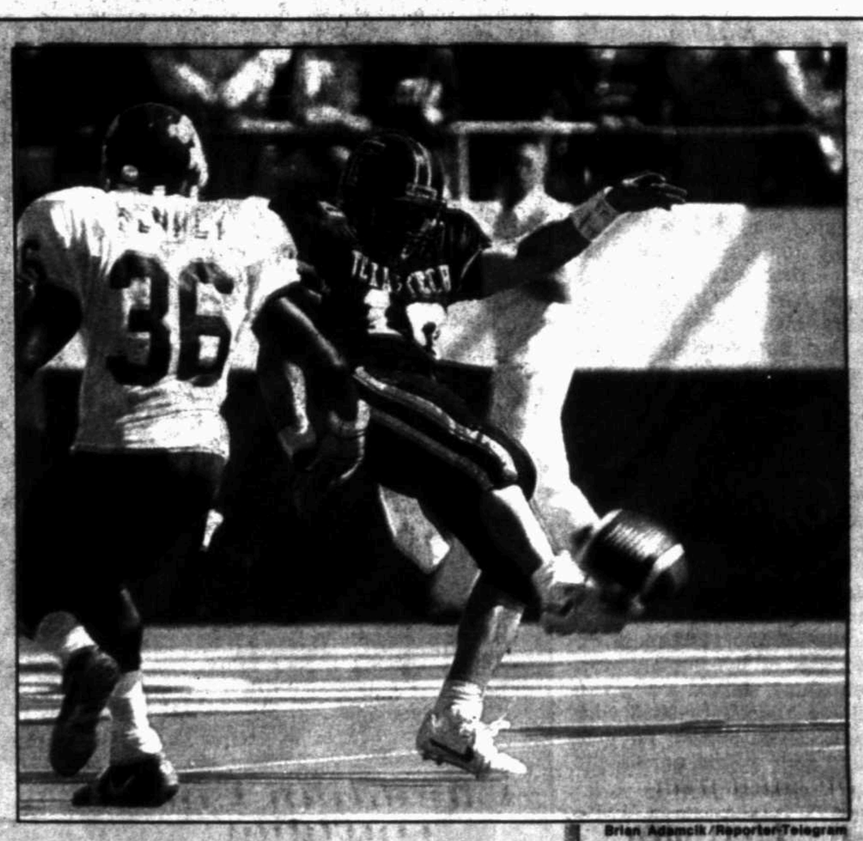

The Bulldogs will meet Fort Worth Paschal at 6:45 p.m. today, following the 5 p.m. Classic opener between El Paso Eastwood and Lubbock Coronado.

Midland Lee will bring a 4-1 record to the Chap tonight in an 8:30 meeting with Arlington Martin, a team that finished third in the Grapevine tournament last weekend.

The biggest question mark for the Rebels is coach Jon House, who spent last weekend in the hospital with blood clots in his leg. He got out of the hospital in time to see his Rebels win a 75-62 road game against Lubbock Dunbar.

In Saturday's action, MHS will face Martin at 10:45 a.m. and Lee will face Coronado at 12:30 p.m. Eastwood and Paschal will tangle at 9 a.m.

The teams will then break until 5 p.m. when Eastwood and Martin kick off the night session. Coronado and Paschal play at 6:45 p.m. and then the first meeting of the year between Lee and Midland High will be played at 8:30 p.m.

Heisman hopefuls top All-America grid team

By Rick Warner
AP Football Writer

Heisman Trophy favorite Desmond Howard of Michigan, freshman phenom Marshall Faulk of San Diego State and all-time passing leader Ty Detmer of Brigham Young were named to the 1991 Associated Press All-America college football team on Thursday.

Howard, who is nicknamed Magic, lived up to his billing with a spectacular season. The triple-threat wide receiver averaged 159 yards per game and was the nation's second-leading scorer with 23 touchdowns, many coming on his trademark diving catch. Two of his TDs came on a 93-yard kickoff return and a 93-yard punt return.

And speaking of punters, the AP selected Mark Bounds of Texas Tech as the nation's top punter. Bounds, who transferred from West Texas State after that school dropped football last December, led the nation in punting with a 46.8 average.

Faulk led the country in rushing and scoring, the first freshman to finish on top in either category. He is only the third freshman to make the AP first team since they became eligible for varsity competition in 1972. The others were Georgia's Herschel Walker in 1980 and Pittsburgh's Tony Dorsett in 1973.

Despite missing three games with an injury, Faulk rushed for 1,429 yards and scored 140 points. He gained 386 yards against Pacific, setting an NCAA single-game mark that was later broken by Kansas' Tony Sands.

Texas A&M dominates SWC team

■ Five Aggies are named to the All-Southwest Conference first-team football squad.

By Denne H. Freeman
AP Sports Writer

DALLAS — The Texas Aggies rolled unblemished through the 1991 Southwest Conference football race and the dominance is reflected in The Associated Press all-league team as selected by the coaches.

Eight Aggies made first team All-SWC and they grabbed all the individual honors. Five Aggies were on the second team.

R.C. Slocum was named Coach of the Year by his colleagues for the Aggies' first sweep of league competition since 1956 when Bear Bryant was at the helm. It was the first such honor for Slocum, who replaced Jackie Sherrill as head coach three years ago.

Quarterback Bucky Richardson, the glue that held together A&M's young offense, was named the Offensive Player of the Year. Running back Greg Hill, a redshirt freshman from Dallas Carter High School, was selected Offensive Newcomer of the Year.

Senior linebacker Quentin Coryatt of the Aggies was named the SWC's Defensive Player of the Year. Freshman Sam Adams of Cypress Creek was the Defensive Newcomer of the Year.

In addition to Richardson and Hill, the other first-team Aggies were junior guard John Ellisor and senior tackle Keith Alex.

Other first team offensive performers included wide receivers Marcus Grant and Rodney Blackshear of Texas Tech, running back Trevor Cobb of Rice, tight end Kelly Blackwell of Texas Christian, offensive linemen Montre Jones of Baylor and Trey Teichelman of Rice, center Mark Henry of Arkansas and placekicker Roman Anderson of Houston.

Lee-Permian III is UIL football history

Everything you wanted to know about Lee vs. Permian in the quarterfinals, thanks — again — to Tim McGraw.

Williamson

Lee and Permian will be making UIL playoff history at 2 p.m. Saturday in Lubbock's Jones Stadium by meeting for the third time in quarterfinal football action. No two teams from the same district have ever met three times at this stage of the playoffs.

Only two other districts have met as many as two times. Converse Judson and San Antonio Churchill have done it twice while Groveton and Alto in Class A have also done it twice.

It is also interesting to note that this will be only the eighth time in Class 5A that two teams from the same district have had a regular season game and met again in the playoffs. Of the previous seven meetings, there has never been a reversal of the outcome in regular season.

But if Lee needs hope, there is some room for improvement if you carry this to all classifications. There have been 27 previous matchups of this kind down through Class A and there has been nine reversals overall. That's about one-third of the time, and a much more reasonable number to deal with.

But there is more bad news for Lee. Permian has won 13 of 14 quarterfinal games in its history. The good news is that Permian's only quarterfinal loss was to Lee, 20-0, in 1983. Permian has won this title in five of the last seven years and the Panthers weren't even in the playoffs the two years they didn't win it during this span of time.

Converse Judson should also be mentioned here. Judson has been to the quarterfinals in nine of the last 10 years and have won four consecutive quarterfinal titles. They have won six of nine over that span of time.

Permian's Mojo mystique did not come about by accident. The Panthers own a 62-12-5 overall record in the state playoffs. Of the five ties, only once did Permian fail to advance by the tie-breaker rules. You could easily say that Permian is 66-13 in the playoffs, an .835 percentage. Lee is 19-9-1 in the playoffs for a .672 percentage. Lee's record isn't bad, but Permian still leads by .163 percentage points.

Midland Lee is 6-2 in games it has played in Lubbock's Jones Stadium, losing to Permian, 15-14 in 1984, and 14-0 to Amarillo High in 1986. Permian is believed to be 11-2 with the only losses to Lee in 1983 and 3-0 to Plano in 1977. However, Permian played Lubbock Monterey in Lubbock in 1965 and I'm still searching for someone who knows where in Lubbock that game was played.

This is the first time three teams from one district has advanced through four rounds of the playoffs, making District 4-5A the king of the state. However, that road has to end this week with Lee meeting Permian. Here's how the weekend will look:

Odessa Permian 26, Midland Lee 7: OK, let's say Permian played its very best game against Lee in the first meeting, and let's say Lee has improved on both offense and defense. Subtract a touchdown from Permian and give a touchdown to Lee and the Rebels still come up far short.

San Angelo 33, Killeen 24: Odessa High should have a keen interest in these games. The Bronchos lost four games this season and all the losses were to the four playoff teams mentioned here. Killeen beat OHS this year in a 52-41 score at will game, but the Bobcats play a little better defense.

Bowl officials express concern over IRS ruling

N.Y. Times News Service

Officials of several college football bowls expressed concern Thursday that a new IRS ruling imposing taxation of the bowls' corporate sponsorship money could substantially reduce payouts to colleges and impair the quality of the post-season games.

"The real losers are the universities, which will have fewer funds for their educational programs," said John Stuart, the president of the Cotton Bowl Athletic Association. "Since 1972, over 100 colleges and universities have gotten funds from bowl games. You drop that, you hurt them."

Stuart added that of the $64 million paid out by the bowls last year, an estimated $10 million came from the sponsorship money the IRS wants to tax. "That's big, considering that a lot of that money goes to tutoring programs and women's athletics," he said.

The IRS released its ruling earlier this week after audits of the tax-exempt organizations that operate the Cotton Bowl and the John Hancock Bowl. The agency said the bowls must pay taxes on the sponsorship money because the funds constitute corporate advertising, an activity unrelated to the games.

The IRS contended that the $2 million paid by Mobil to the Cotton Bowl Athletic Associaton and the $1 million paid by the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company to the Hancock Bowl were not charitable gifts but taxable payments for advertising.

"They're dead wrong," said Cricket Musch, executive director of the John Hancock Bowl. "We don't promote John Hancock's products or advertise their products. Whatever benefit Hancock gets is incidental."

The IRS contends that money for advertising comes under a law that compels non-profit organizations to pay tax on income unrelated to the educational purpose for which they received their tax-exempt status.

But Jack Mahoney, a sports marketing consultant to John Hancock, disputed that interpretation. "Not only is the money related to their purpose, it is necessary," he said. "In some cases, you couldn't have a game if you didn't have a sponsor."

The ruling could force the Cotton and the Hancock Bowls to ante up retroactive taxes back to 1987. Mahoney said the Hancock Bowl is putting $340,000 a year in escrow to pay possible taxes, based on the 34 percent corporate tax rate.

Said Stuart: "If they go back three years, a lot of bowls will go broke. I'm not sure the country will tolerate an entire industry broken like that."

Musch said the Cotton Bowl does not have enough of a surplus to make retroactive tax payments.

The ruling comes at a time of increased scrutiny paid to collegiate athletic finances. The Federal Trade Commission, for example, has been in an antitrust battle with the College Football Association over the association's $300 million television deal with Capital Cities/ABC.

The FTC has contended that the CFA conspired to limit the number of games on television and that the association abdicated its tax-exempt role as an educational body by entering into a television deal. An administrative law judge has denied the FTC's complaint, and the agency's counsel has appealed to the full commission.

The ruling refers specifically to the Cotton Bowl, which is played in Dallas, and the Hancock Bowl, which is played in El Paso, because they are in the jurisdiction of the Dallas office, which audited the two bowl organizations.

But college bowl officials expect the ruling to be applied across the country.

An IRS spokesman, Henry Holmes, declined to describe specifically how bowl organizers engage in advertising on behalf of their sponsors besides adding a corporate name, but the agency is adamant about what the payment of a sponsorship constitutes.

Still it is unclear at this point whether the IRS is focusing on events that have title sponsors, like the Federal Express Orange Bowl, or all events with some kind of sponsorship. But the former type presents easy and visible targets.

Nearly every bowl has a title sponsor.

NBA

HOUSTON — Dominique Wilkins matched his season high with 39 points and the Atlanta Hawks scored the game's final 12 points in a 109-97 victory over the Houston Rockets on Thursday night.

The Rockets' Sleepy Floyd scored five straight points to tie the score 91-91 with 7:33 left. Wilkins then hit three straight baskets for a 97-91 lead with 5:21 to play.

Houston, which lost its second home game after seven victories at the Summit, responded by tying the score again at 97-97, but the Rockets didn't score again. Wilkins' free throw with 3:39 to play put the Hawks on top to stay.

Otis Thorpe led the Rockets with 21 points and 11 rebounds and Floyd had 16 points. Kevin Willis, who grabbed a career-high 31 rebounds against Dallas on Tuesday, had 16 points and 13 rebounds and Rumeal Robinson scored 18 points for the Hawks.

Trailing 81-76, the Rockets took their first lead of the game on consecutive 3-point baskets by Matt Bullard, the last with 31 seconds left in the third quarter for an 82-81 lead.

Cavs 110, Pistons 101

AUBURN HILLS, Mich. — The Detroit Pistons dropped below .500 at home as Brad Daugherty scored 25 points in the Cleveland victory.

The Pistons, who opened the season 4-1, have lost 10 of 14 since then. They have dropped six of 11 at the Palace, where they were 32-9 last season and 72-10 in 1987-88 and 1988-89, the years they won championships.

The Cavs, who had a five-game winning streak snapped Wednesday night in Chicago, have won nine of 11 games.

Daugherty, who had 19 points and 12 rebounds when the Cavs defeated Detroit 96-89 on Nov. 23 in Cleveland, scored 15 points in the first half.

The game was tied 25-25 on a basket by Joe Dumars with 3:25 left in the first quarter. But John Williams hit two baskets and Daugherty had a three-point play as the Cavs outscored Detroit 9-2 the remainder of the period and led the rest of the way.

Isiah Thomas and Mark Aguirre each scored 21 points and Dennis Rodman had a season-high 21 rebounds for the Pistons.

A basket by Danny Ferry gave Cleveland a 97-80 lead with 6:19 left in the game. Until that point, the Pistons had only one basket in the fourth quarter — a 3-pointer by Thomas at the 11:03 mark.

But a basket by Dumars with 5:55 remaining started a 13-2 run that closed Detroit to 99-93 with 3:57 left. Thomas and Rodman each had four points during the spurt.

Nets 109, Bucks 101

MILWAUKEE — Drazen Petrovic scored 23 points as the New Jersey Nets spoiled Frank Hamblen's NBA head coaching debut with a victory over Milwaukee.

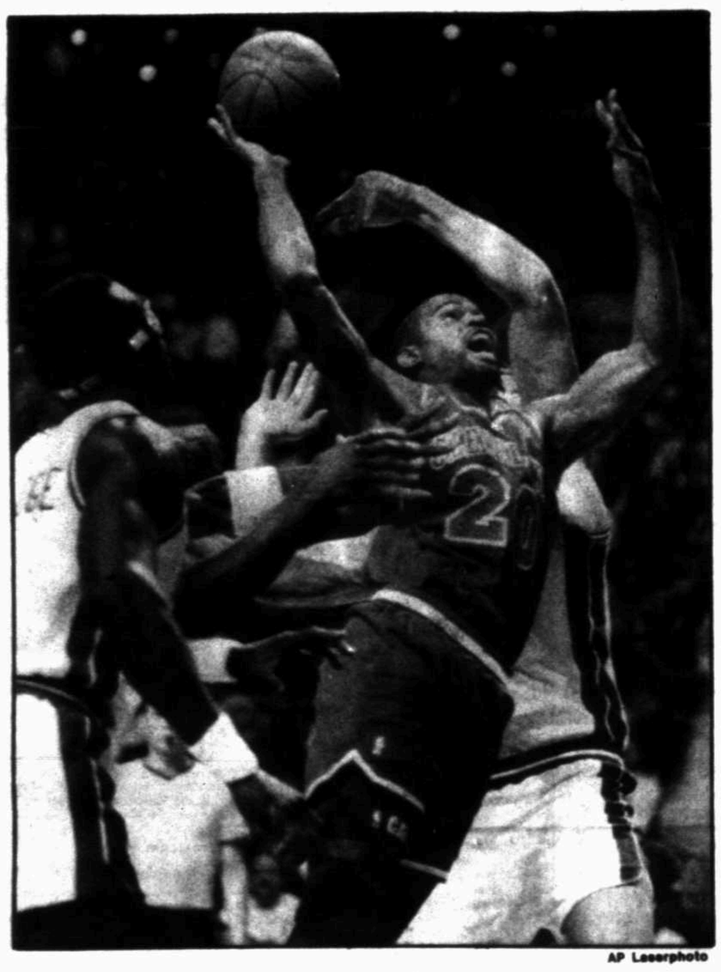

Hamblen, an assistant in the NBA and American Basketball Association for 22 years, took over Wednesday when Del Harris resigned as coach to become full-time vice president of basketball operations.

Mookie Blaylock scored 19 points and Sam Bowie 18 as the Nets won in Milwaukee for the first time since 1988. Dale Ellis led the Bucks with 19 points.

New Jersey took an 84-80 lead after three quarters when Chris Dudley came off the bench to spark a late 10-5 run with six points.

The Nets maintained the lead through most of the final period behind the scoring of Blaylock and Petrovic and the inside play of Dudley, who finished with eight rebounds and four blocked shots.

Terry Mills' basket with 1:59 to play put New Jersey up 102-96, and when he Mills missed the free throw after being fouled on the play, Blaylock sneaked in for an offensive rebound. After a timeout, Mills scored again for a 104-96 lead with 1:37 left.

Fort Bend Dulles (12-0) takes on Converse Judson (11-2). Dulles, ignited by Derras Wilmington's 95-yard kickoff return to open the second half, rolled to a 26-14 victory over Houston Lamar last week. Judson won a 45-42 slugfest over Corpus Christi Carroll.

In Division II, Waco (12-0-1) takes on Dallas Carter (12-1) for a semifinals berth against the Permian-Lee winner. Aldine (10-1-1) faces Fort Bend Willowridge (11-1-1) for the Region III title and San Antonio Marshall (11-2) battles cross-town rival Madison (10-3) for the title in Region IV.

Class 4A has Pampa (11-2) and District 3-4A member Sweetwater (11-1) playing for the Region I championship, and it's Waxahachie (11-1) vs. Carthage (13-0) in Region II, A&M Consolidated (11-2) vs. Chapel Hill (10-1-2) in Region III and Austin Westlake (12-0-1) vs. Calallen (12-1) in Region IV.

No. 1 Valley Mills (12-0) and No. 2 Rotan (12-0) meet Friday night in a battle of Class A powers. Rotan coach Pat Ward said the Yellowhammers have been waiting for this game.

"We kind of felt like it was inevitable," Ward said. "We're prepared and properly motivated. If we play flawless, we should have a chance to win the game."

Asked if the winner would cruise to the state title, Ward said, "I'd like to say yes to that, but then I might as well put both feet in my mouth. When you get to this point, all the teams are great."

Elsewhere in Class A, it's Memphis (11-1) vs. fourth-ranked Rankin (10-1), Oakwood (10-2) vs. Evadale (10-3) and Runge (10-1-1) vs. Bartlett (11-1-1).

Williams to lead Cadets against Navy

Associated Press

Army-Navy

PHILADELPHIA — Before the season, Myreon Williams expected to start in the Army-Navy game. Not at quarterback, though.

Despite junior varsity quarterback experience for the Cadets, Williams was set at split end this season, just like last year. A couple of freshmen quarterbacks came along to back up starter Willie McMillian heading into the 1991 season.

Circumstances conspired against that tidy setup, and now Williams will lead the Cadets (4-6) against Navy (0-10) Saturday at Veterans Stadium. The series is tied 42-42-7, with this meeting coming on the 50th anniversary of the bombing of Pearl Harbor.

Even after Williams spent last year at split end, the pre-med student from Paterson, N.J., had reason to think he might eventually have to fill in for McMillian in a pinch.

"There was nobody really behind him that really had sufficient playing time," he said.

First-year coach Bob Sutton settled on freshmen Mike Makovec and Reggie Thomas to be his second- and third-string quarterbacks, but knee injuries hit quickly. Both were put out for the season in a 24-hour span, Makovec in a scrimmage and Thomas in a junior-varsity game.

"When we lost those guys, we said, 'Myreon, guess what. You're back in,'" Sutton said.

Then came the Cadets' third game of the year, Sept. 28 against Harvard. Army was 1-1 and down 13-7 in the third quarter when McMillian suffered torn ligaments in his right knee, putting him out for the year. Williams stepped in to rally the Cadets to a 21-20 victory, but the offense had been dented.

"When we lost Willie, we lost two starters," said Sutton, whose club is 2-5 since the victory over Harvard.

At split end, Williams led the Cadets with 13 catches last season, including McMillian's only pass against Navy — a 35-yard touchdown. At Army, blocking is a receiver's first job. The Cadets average five passes a game; in 10 games, they've thrown 52 times.

Williams has put up some impressive rushing numbers in McMillian's absence, with 818 yards in the eight games. Last year, heading into the Army-Navy game, McMillian had 705 yards in seven starts and parts of three other games.

YOUR HOROSCOPE

By Jeane Dixon

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1991

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: New adventures and romance await you. Do not lose sight of your long-term business or financial goals. Enroll in special classes early in 1992. Starting a family business will increase your financial security next summer. Put your personal stamp on a major project in late fall; new business will result. Influential people seek you out as 1992 draws to a close. Reward loyal associates.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: actresses Lynn Fontanne and Agnes Moorehead, jazz great Dave Brubeck, photographer Alfred Eisenstaedt.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Chart a new course for yourself. It is time to make a major new commitment. A romance may be out of control. Urge a loved one to use common sense and slow down.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Luck may be yours in carrying out matters of a private nature. Contact with relatives could be surprisingly beneficial. The business outlook is golden. Move quickly when opportunity knocks.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Bargains abound for holiday shoppers. Get an early start! Seek the advice of someone who has helped you in the past. You feel real kinship with someone who remembers "the good old days."

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Toot your own horn for a change. Your creative genius will be ignited and your career invigorated. Share your innermost thoughts with mate or business partner. Their reactions will delight you.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): What you do for others today, especially people in high places, will have a tremendous impact on your reputation. Be as helpful as possible. Marriage sounds good.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Play it smart! Combining business with pleasure today would cause too much stress. You deserve some lighthearted fun this evening. Let mate know what you have in mind.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 21): This is no time to be a recluse. Get out and socialize with influential people. Take a small gift for your host; your thoughtfulness will be remembered and rewarded. More invitations could follow.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Sharing your knowledge with VIPs makes them trust you. Curtail spending. Skipping a social event may be your wisest course of action this evening. Stick close to home if under the weather.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Your best ideas come when you work in a secluded setting today. High-ranking people may promise big things but fail to deliver. Try to relieve tension, not create it.

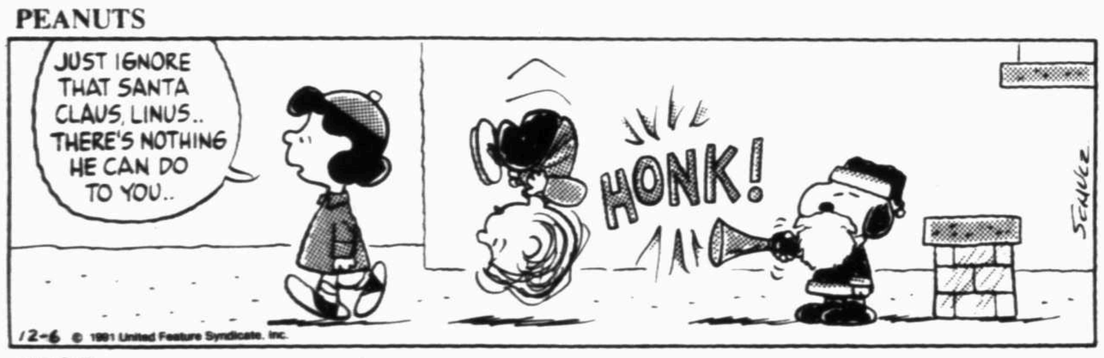

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Doing your holiday shopping by mail or telephone may be the answer for busy you. Homemade presents or baked goods make wonderful gifts, too. Send a card or short note to old friends.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): You are quite the artist when it comes to decorating your home. Tidy up your place in preparation for the busy holidays ahead. Cook and freeze a few special treats. Loved ones are appreciative.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A phone call or small package brings good news. Ignore someone who tries to fan your anger by repeating negative comments. A positive attitude will help you reach your goals.

TODAY'S CHILDREN: Fun-loving and independent, these Sagittarians need lots of space! Set schedules and routine chores will drive them up the wall. Wise parents will help these youngsters set priorities but let them work out the details for themselves. Although they are free spirits, these Sagittarians have their practical side, too. Thrifty by nature, they usually have a tidy nest egg tucked away for emergencies.

The bidding:

West	North	East	South
Pass	Pass	1 ♡	2 ◇
Pass	3 ♡	Pass	3 NT
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: Three of ♡

There's such a thing as being too clever at the bridge table. Here, East's psychic one-heart opening bid did not stop the opponents from reaching game. Nevertheless, it did get West off to the best lead. But then again declarer, totally misled about the lie of the cards, maneuvered adroitly to make the hand. Was the psyche worth it?

Since South's two-level overcall showed the equivalent of an opening bid, North was prepared to play in three no trump if South had hearts stopped. By partnership agreement, that's what the jump cue-bid of three hearts asked, and South duly obliged.

West led a heart and declarer won in hand. With only six fast tricks (assuming clubs were no worse than 3-2), declarer had to set up three more while losing the lead no more than once. The obvious suit to tackle was diamonds, and had there been no clue from the bidding, declarer would probably have led a diamond to the jack and gone down peacefully when East won the ace and the suit did not divide evenly.

From South's point of view, however, the opening bid marked East with both missing aces, so an avoidance play was available. Declarer crossed to dummy with a club and then led a low diamond. Had East gone up with the ace, declarer would have been able to collect four tricks in diamonds for an overtrick, so East was forced to duck.

South's queen of diamonds won, and with seven tricks now in the offing, declarer did not make the mistake of persevering with diamonds. Instead, declarer made sure of two spade tricks by leading the queen from hand. Whether or not the defenders took the ace immediately made no difference—declarer could not be stopped from scoring two spade tricks, two hearts, one diamond and four clubs.

Jim Belushi looks in on William Smith rape trial

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — Actor-comedian Jim Belushi, who's filming a movie nearby, stopped by the courthouse Thursday where William Kennedy Smith's rape trial is under way.

"It's pretty intense, isn't it?" Belushi said as he visited the massive media center that's been set up for the trial.

Belushi

He was wearing a badge and makeup for the film "Trace of Red" in which he plays a police detective. He was touring the courthouse and police headquarters, doing research for his role.

Belushi said he had no connection with the case or any of its participants, and he was just curious about the proceedings.

NEW ORLEANS — Quincy Jones, winner of 24 Grammys, including five last spring, will be presented with an honorary doctor of music degree by Loyola University next month.

At the Dec. 9 ceremony, the College of Music Visiting Committee also will present Jones with its fourth Distinguished Guest Artist Award.

Jones

The school president, the Rev. James C. Carter, called Jones a role model for young musicians and youth everywhere through his generosity and his talent.

" He exemplifies many of the highest ideals of the Jesuit academic tradition and the aspirations of our Jesuit university," Carter said.

Jones, a composer, Hollywood producer and musician as well as owner of WNOL-TV in New Orleans, won Album of the Year and Record of the Year, at the 33rd annual Grammy awards in 1991.

JACKSON, Miss. — The Fat Boys have surprised students at two Jackson schools with impromptu performances urging them to get their degree and stay drug-free.

The rap duo appeared first at Jim Hill High School, then at Brinkley Middle School. They are touring about 50 cities to promote their new album, "Mack Daddy." At each stop, they are staging free performances at schools to deliver the message: stay in school, stay off drugs and practice safe sex.

They first hit the music scene in 1983, shortly after they were discovered at a talent show near New York City. Since then, they have produced eight albums.

The band originally had three members, but one broke away to make solo albums. The remaining two: Darren Robinson, 23, known as the Human Beat Box, and Damon Wimbley, 24, known as Kool Rock.

"We came here to tell you to stay in school," Wimbley told students at Jim Hill. "Without an education, you are a nobody. A lot of brothers are taking the easy way out — selling drugs. But they end up dead or in jail."

Wimbley, gave a similar 10-minute speech at Brinkley, urged the students to postpone having sex until they graduate and then "please wear a condom."

NEW YORK — Magic Johnson has given his first prime-time interview since announcing last month that he was retiring from professional basketball because he has the virus that causes AIDS, CBS said Thursday.

The network will broadcast an hourlong special "Face to Face with Connie Chung" at 9 p.m. CST Wednesday.

Chung's talk with Johnson as well as interviews with former teammate Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and his ex-coach Pat Riley will be aired.

NEW YORK — An old pair of Madonna's sneakers fetched $5,250 at an auction to help fight AIDS, but it was Elizabeth Taylor's black and gold sandals that had the highest material value. They went for $6,000.

The shoes of the two stars brought the highest bids at Wednesday's celebrity footware auction, which raised more than $38,000.

NEW YORK — Weatherman Willard Scott, who gives birthday greetings to 100-year-olds and also is known for on-again-off-again use of a toupee, has agreed to stay with the "Today" show at least through 1995.

NBC announced Wednesday that Scott has signed a new three-year deal with the morning news show. Earlier in the week NBC announced "Today" show host Bryant Gumbel had signed a similar contract.

Midland Lee Rebels
Football Team

Each of you has grown up and played high school football as part of the Lee High School "New Tradition." The New Tradition was born in 1983 when Lee defeated Permian twice and went on to the State Championship game. The following year, 1984, saw the Rebels play Permian twice and lose both games - but the New Tradition gained strength and prestige despite the losses. The 1983 and 1984 teams, along with the 1986 team that beat Permian and San Angelo back-to-back and was rated third in the State, and the 1987 team that went 11-0 before being eliminated in the third round of the playoffs, are considered Lee's most successful teams. But only the 1983 and 1984 teams reached the Quarter Finals and only the 1984 team had as good a record, (12-1), at this point of the season as the 1991 Rebels.

You, the 1991 Rebels, will long be remembered as a team that overcame adversity and reinforced the New Tradition for the 90's. Despite early season injuries and the need to utilize sophomores and juniors in many key positions, the seniors and the coaches have provided the leadership to achieve one of the most successful seasons in Lee history. You have now reached the Quarterfinals and face Permian, the Old Tradition, for the second time this year. You have the opportunity that few have had before. You have the opportunity to become The most successful team in Lee history.

Thanks for all the hard work, the effort, and the memories. Each of you, and most especially the seniors, deserve the undying respect and support of the students and teachers at Lee High School, your parents, and of the community as a whole. The 1991 Lee Rebels have earned their place in West Texas football history.

We will never forget you, and we will always love you.

Oil slides

Technical factors were the primary reason for the drop as crude oil continued a slide that began in mid-October after peaking at above $24 a barrel.

The January contract for West Texas Intermediate fell 37 cents to $20.39 per 42-gallon barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange after rising 25 cents the previous session.

It was the lowest closing level for a next-month oil futures contract since $20.08 on June 26.

Natural gas prices fell 0.59 cent to $2.024 per 1,000 cubic feet, adding to a 1.9-cent drop Wednesday.

Dollar slumps

NEW YORK — The dollar slumped Thursday on world foreign exchange markets on expectations that interest rates here may continue to fall.

In London, the British pound was quoted at $1.7935, compared with $1.7730 late Wednesday.

Late dollar rates in New York compared with late rates Wednesday also included: 1.5885 German marks, down from 1.6015; 1.4050 Swiss francs, down from 1.4160; 5.4315 French francs, down from 5.4750; 1,202 Italian lire, down from 1,210; and 1.13795 Canadian dollars, up from 1.13715.

Pan Am sale

NEW YORK — The next destination for Pan American World Airways is a bankruptcy court auction block, where the last international routes of the dead carrier will be up for grabs Sunday.

The sale will apparently be similar to the liquidation of assets from Eastern Airlines and Midway Airlines, the other two carriers that stopped flying this year.

IBM moves

NEW YORK — IBM said it would loosen its bureaucratic hold on some parts of its computer empire and consider carving off pieces to sell to other companies or the public.

The announcement Thursday filled in details of a broad decentralization plan IBM disclosed last week. The aim is to allow its businesses to compete more effectively in the fast-paced industry and boost anemic profits.

Burlington to spin off El Paso arm

Associated Press

SEATTLE — Burlington Resources Inc. announced plans Thursday to spin off El Paso Natural Gas Co. as a publicly held corporation. The move would complete the breakup of the old Burlington Northern Railroad empire.

Barring a stock market plunge or rejection by corporate directors, the move should be completed within a year, said Elena Sansalone of Adams & Rinehart Inc., a New York public relations firm representing Burlington Resources.

Virtually all current revenues for the Seattle holding company now come from the gas pipeline company based in El Paso, Texas, and Meridian Oil Holding Inc., a Houston-based oil and gas company that ranks as the eighth largest holder of U.S. gas reserves with 4.7 trillion cubic feet.

No change in employment at Meridian or El Paso is expected from the spinoff. "There might be some small reduction" in the 45-person Burlington Resources office, which will remain in Seattle, Sansalone said.

"The restructuring will allow the market to recognize more fully the values of BR's separate segments, eliminate regulatory disadvantages to both EPNG and Meridian and allow greater access to capital markets," according to a Burlington Resources statement.

One is for purchase of El Paso 9.45 percent notes due in 1999 for $1,102 per $1,000 principal plus accrued interest. The other is for buyout of 8.625 percent debentures due in 2012 for the principal plus accrued interest.

Burlington Resources is providing the money for both offers, and also for a planned call next month of 9.625 percent El Paso debentures due in 2011.

El Paso will issue new debt, an initial public offer of stock in El Paso is planned for the first quarter of next year and the spinoff should be complete about three to six months later, Sansalone said.

Burlington Resources reported $1.82 billion in revenues or $13.19 a share during 1990 with year-end assets of $6.36 billion. Revenue for the first nine months of the current year were $1.28 billion or $9.66 a share.

El Paso, acquired by Burlington Resources predecessor Burlington Northern Inc. in 1983, operates a 20,000-mile natural gas pipeline network in Oklahoma, Texas, Colorado, New Mexico, California, Nevada and Arizona.

Meridian added 1.13 trillion cubic feet of gas and oil reserves in 1990, a 3.71 reserve replacement ratio and a 17 percent increase in reserves. Production of gas increased by 16 percent and oil by 4 percent to 35.3 million barrels a day.

"What this is doing is similar to what the old BNI did in 1988," Sansalone said. "Burlington Resources has been gradually focusing on its core businesses."

Other holdings that remain with Burlington Resources include a general partnership in Plum Creek, some real estate holdings that are managed by Glacier Park, a majority interest in Burlington Environmental Inc., a waste cleanup outfit, and some coal and taconite reserves.

Daily News seeks bankruptcy cover

NEW YORK (AP) — The Daily News, once the nation's biggest newspaper, sought protection in bankruptcy court Thursday as the house of Maxwell was besieged on all sides.

The U.S bankruptcy filing came after the Maxwell family sought similar protection for their private holding companies in a London court.

A court-appointed administrator said in London that the Daily News likely would be sold, but Kevin Maxwell, who took charge of the News after his father's death, said the paper was "absolutely not" for sale.

He flew to New York from London Thursday and met with News executives.

"We are here actually to work out a viable long-term plan for the creditors, the employees and the shareholders," said Maxwell, 32.

Representatives of the paper's nine unions met with News management earlier Thursday, and said afterward they were optimistic about the paper's future.

News spokesman John Campi and Barry Lipton, leader of The Newspaper Guild local, said they thought the paper could be sold if need be. But media analysts were pessimistic, saying the recession and the paper's debts cast doubt on its chances for survival.

The bankruptcy petition in Manhattan listed assets of $37.4 million and liabilities of $53.3 million.

Campi said the News wasn't facing the kind of problems it was when Robert Maxwell ended a long, bitter strike last March by taking it over from The Tribune Co.

"When you see the vitality of this paper in 1992, it's a completely different picture than you had when the paper was bought by Maxwell," Campi said.

Seasonal cutbacks swell jobless ranks

WASHINGTON (AP) — Seasonal auto layoffs and other industrial cutbacks threw nearly a half million workers into the jobless ranks in late November, just weeks after factory orders registered the first upswing since July.

The Labor Department reported Thursday that 471,000 people filed initial claims for unemployment for the week that ended Nov. 23, a spurt of 57,000 over the previous week.

"People are out of work and we need to get this country back on its feet, people back on the job," Bush said, adding that he would make major new economic proposals in his State of the Union address in late January.

The Commerce Department, meanwhile, said factory orders increased 1.9 percent in October to a seasonally adjusted $242.12 billion. But much of that gain came from a 55 percent bounce in the volatile Pentagon sector, and reflected little improvement in the sagging consumer market so critical to the economy.

And even with the military boost, demand for factory products in October was below the level reached in July, a time when manufacturing was viewed as one of the few bright spots in the economy.

The data, especially the Labor Department's jobless claims report, provided mounting evidence that the U.S. economy is either at a standstill or sinking back into recession.

"It's not a death spiral," said David Rolley of DRI-McGraw Hill. "It just means we're on the bottom. We've stalled out."

"The economy is rapidly spinning its wheels," added Robert Dederick of the Northern Trust Co., "trying to make up its mind whether its going to gather strength or slide back."

As the dreary jobless claims number came out, Bush's chief economic adviser, Michael Boskin, told Congress that the economy is likely to remain sluggish until spring.

Ad hoc group studies development

By Melia McEwen
Staff Writer

There is a chance the Permian Basin could see a new commission modeled after the North Texas Commission, which promotes development of the Dallas-Fort Worth and surrounding area.

According to Midland businessman Charles Perry, "an ad hoc group" got together Thursday and heard from Jack Evans, chairman of the North Texas Commission.

"The thrust of it was (there is) a need for some kind of an area-wide organization to promote development of the entire area. I'm talking about the whole Permian Basin," he said, noting that "I think the consensus is that the entire area needs to work together."

He said the informational meeting was attended by approximately 30 to 35 people, including Midland and Odessa city councilmen, Odessa Mayor Lorraine Bonner, heads of the Chambers of Commerce, and business leaders from both communities.

The group was responsive and interested, he said, adding that, while nothing specific was decided, there is the possibility the group may attempt to organize a commission.

He said the group would not compete with the chambers of commerce but get involved with events of area-wide interest.

Perry, a friend of Evans', had asked him about the North Texas Commission, and Evans offered to visit with the group. The Commission has been immensely successful in promoting Dallas, Fort Worth and the surrounding area, working on the Dallas/Fort Worth Airport, Superconducting Super Collider and similar activities, Perry said.

"If the group here was 10 percent as successful, we would have a boom out here," Perry stated.

INVESTORS' GUIDE

Unreceived dividends don't count as tax loss

By Bill Doyle

Q. Shortly before our retirement, my husband and I invested $5,000 in a real estate investment trust. We realized it was not a guaranteed investment, but we were told by our broker there was little risk. The monthly dividend of about $33.35 was mailed to us, starting in June 1984.

Doyle

In December 1987, the company managing this REIT filed for protection under Chapter 11 of the bankruptcy code, supposedly with the intention of reorganizing by mid-1991. After numerous inquiries and no response from the mailing address given us, our broker recently informed us there will be nothing left for trust shareholders and we can enter the loss on our income tax return.

Can we also enter the loss of dividends we did not receive over the period of time?

A. NO! Although you can report the $5,000 you paid for the shares as a capital loss, there is no way you can claim a tax loss for dividends not received. There is no provision in the Internal Revenue Code allowing you to do so.

If there were, investors would file for tax losses every time dividends are reduced or omitted on stocks they own. And that happens with reasonable frequency.

Companies pay dividends from their profits. It's obvious the REIT in which you bought shares was unprofitable. That's the unhappy story of many REITs. Back in their heyday — the 1970s and early '80s — they were touted as similar to mutual funds, because they diversified in many investments under supposedly "professional" management. Instead of using shareholders' money to buy stocks, bonds and other securities, REITs invested in real estate.

Some REITs have done well. But all too many have been losers. Some have gone belly up, as yours did.

On Schedule D of your Form 1040 federal income tax return, you can report your REIT shares as having "zero" value on Dec. 31, 1991, the year in which they became worthless. That will give you the $5,000 capital loss. Get a letter from your broker, backing up your "worthless" claim, just in case the Internal Revenue Service questions your return.

Q. Presently living on a low fixed-income, we understand our investments — zero-coupon stripped U.S. Treasury securities, a mutual fund holding government securities and a money market mutual fund for emergency access — are all reasonably safe. Right?

A. Yes. But that doesn't mean they all are correct for you.

Stripped Treasuries are created by separating principal from interest on U.S. Treasury bonds and notes, then selling each. They are zero-coupon, because they pay no interest. You buy them at a big "discount" — below face value — and receive face value when they mature. The difference between the two prices is counted as interest and must be reported on your income tax return each year, as it accrues.

Aside from that tax angle, which is draining money from you annually, I fail to see why you have zero-coupon securities. With low fixed-income, you would be better off with interest-paying investments.

The government securities mutual fund is a conservative investment, even though the value of fund shares can rise or fall — going in the opposite direction of interest rates.

The money market mutual fund has virtually no risk, because that type of fund invests in short-term debt securities and normally uses accounting methods to keep the value of its shares constant at one dollar.

Q. I understand there is a booklet containing information about no-load mutual funds. Can you tell me where to obtain the booklet?

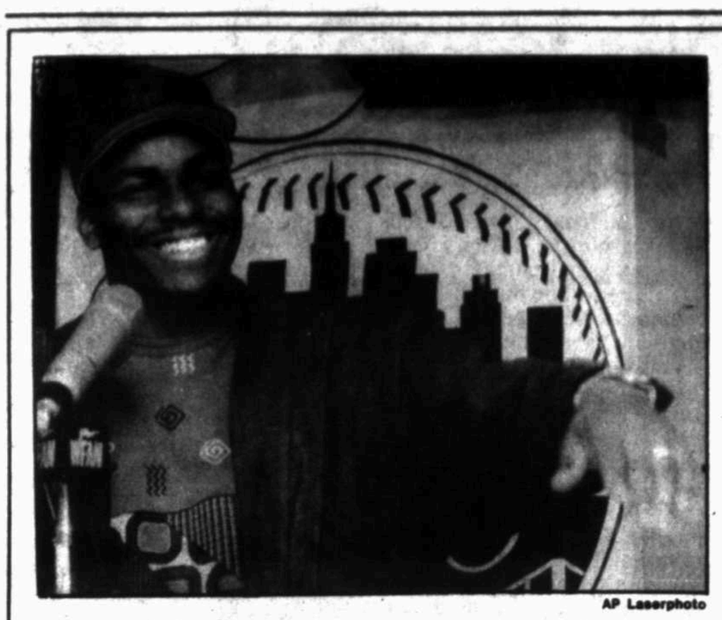

A. You must be thinking of the 100 Percent No-Load Mutual Fund Council's 60-page membership directory. It costs $3 and is available from the council, 1501 Broadway, New York, NY 10036.

Besides providing much basic information about mutual funds, the booklet gives details on 130 true no-load funds, whose shares can be purchased without commission and have no r-end load in the form of long-term redemption fee or contingent deferred sales charge, no 12b-1 fee and no dividend reinvestment charge.

The Mutual fund Education Alliance, The Association of No-Load Funds, 1900 Erie Street, Kansas City, MO 64116, has a 112-page directory, also for $3. Some of the members listed levy low-load commissions of up to 2.5 percent, as well as other charges.

Bonilla's smile wider than ever

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Bobby Bonilla's thoughts on Thursday were on the all money he's going to make from the New York Mets and the friends he left behind on the Pittsburgh Pirates.

Bonilla and about 20 members of his family came to Shea Stadium to say hello to the Mets front office staff and meet the media. After signing a record five-year contract for $29 million earlier in the week, Bonilla's beaming smile was even bigger than usual.

"I made a lot of money before," Bonilla, 28, said. "Now it's a mega amount."

A lot was made about Bonilla returning to his hometown. But he admitted that wasn't the most important factor.

"I wanted to make the best deal possible," the Bronx, N.Y. native said. "While I had the opportunity, I wanted any deal that would make me the highest-paid player."

Bonilla's choices came down to New York and Philadelphia. The Mets made his decision easy by increasing their offer on Monday.

"I wanted to come home, sure," Bonilla said. "But there isn't going to be 60 tickets a night. I've already had my news conference with the family."

Bonilla's future is secure and he has an understaning with family and friends about his time. His feelings about the Pirates, however, aren't quite as positive.

"The Pirates hade a chance to sign me," Bonilla said. "Every time a player would sign a big contract they would say 'that's ridiculous.'

"When Roger Clemens and Jose Canseco signed big deals the Pirates would ask how they could they pay them so much. But the Pirates were the only ones complaining. You didn't here Seattle saying anything about it."

Bonilla is gone, the Pirates say they may have to trade Barry Bonds, and they may also lose free agents Steve Buechele and Mike LaValliere.

"I'm crushed for Jim Leyland," Bonilla said. "The way he treated players was tremendous and I feel bad for what's happening to him. But it's a business."

Pirates general manager Larry Doughty said he repeatedly urged ownership to sign Bonilla to a long-term deal last winter, when his asking price was millions less.

"If our organization had done what I said last year, Bobby would have been signed. I told them before we took him to arbitration, 'Let's sign him. He wants to stay here. He's obviously a very important member of our team. Let's get it done,'" Doughty said. "My recommendations weren't regarded very highly in the previous regime."

While all the talk was about the contract dealings with Bonilla and Bonds in spring training, center fielder Andy Van Slyke quietly made a deal for $12.6 million over three years. Bonds later indicated there might have been some racial overtones to the Van Slyke signing.

"I'm not getting into that, no way," Bonilla said. "I got the deal I wanted and it's over."

Blue Devils knock off St. John's

Associated Press

GREENSBORO, N.C. — The last game ever played in the ACC-Big East Challenge was over in the first few minutes.

Top 25

Top-ranked Duke started the game with a 14-2 run, built a 31-point lead and was never challenged Thursday night in a 91-81 victory over No. 7 St. John's.

The Atlantic Coast Conference had already clinched this year's series when Virginia beat No. 18 Georgetown 76-66 in overtime in the first game of the doubleheader at Greensboro Coliseum for a 5-2 lead.

The three-year series between two of the nation's best basketball conferences finished in an overall tie as the Big East won 6-2 last year and the inaugural Challenge was split.

The opening run saw the Blue Devils convert every St. John's miss or turnover into points.

The Redmen managed to get within 34-26 with 4:20 left in the half on a three-point play by Malik Sealy, but Duke then scored the next eight points on the way to a 48-30 halftime lead. The first two points of the run came on free throws by Laettner, who had 19 first-half points, and they came on Sealy's third foul, forcing him to the sidelines after having scored 14 points.

Sealy finished with 37 points and Laettner had 26.

No. 13 Utah 65, Bradley 41

SALT LAKE CITY — Byron Wilson scored 10 of his 12 points in the first half as Utah held Bradley without a basket for nearly 14 minutes and beat the Braves.

Utah led 30-8 at halftime. Wilson played only briefly in the second half, while Paul Afeaki and Jimmy Soto each played 21 minutes and scored 12 points for the Utes (5-0).

Bradley (3-1) was led by Charles White with 14 points. James Hamilton added 12.

White scored Bradley's first field goal with 16:28 left in the first half, making Utah's lead 4-2. But Bradley did not score another field goal for 13:54, by which time Utah led 25-8.

Virginia 76
No. 18 Georgetown 66

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP) — Bryant Stith made up for a late miss in regulation by scoring four points in overtime and Virginia beat Georgetown in the ACC-Big East Challenge.

The victory gave the Atlantic Coast Conference a 5-2 edge in this year's series, which was to wrap with No. 1 Duke facing No. 7 St. John's in the second game of a doubleheader.

Stith made the first shot but missed the back end of a two-shot foul with 11.6 seconds left, leaving Virginia ahead 63-61. Georgetown's Joey Brown then drove the baseline and tied it with a short shot with one second left, his only basket in the second half.

No. 24 UNLV 80
James Madison 73

HARRISONBURG, Va. — Dexter Boney had 22 points and UNLV needed a second-half rally to beat James Madison.

Associated Press

RENO, Nev. — Heavyweights George Foreman and Jimmy Ellis and junior welterweights Roger Mayweather and Rafael Pineda all have something at stake when they enter the ring for their fights Saturday night.

Mayweather and Pineda are fighting to win the vacant International Boxing Federation title, Foreman to resume his comeback and Ellis to gain some respect.

"I'm the happiest man in the world," Foreman said at a news conference on Thursday. "Jimmy Ellis is not going to take this away from me."

But Ellis, who has said he respects the former world champion but does not fear him, promised a fight rather than the mismatch predicted by critics. "I'm going to go out there and give it my all," he said.

Boxing

Foreman, 69-3 with 65 knockouts and Ellis, 16-0-1 with 15 knockouts are scheduled for 10 rounds Saturday night following the Mayweather-Pineda fight for the IBF junior welterweight title.

"I know exactly why I'm here," Mayweather said on Thursday. "My job is to win the third world championship."

Mayweather, 40-6 with 25 knockouts, will be fighting in his 12th championship bout. The 30-year-old native of Grand Rapids, Mich., who now fights out of Las Vegas, has worn the World Boxing Association lightweight belt and the World Boxing Council super lightweight crown.

Pineda, 26-1 with 24 knockouts, is in his second title fight for the championship vacated when Julio Cesar Chavez moved up from the 140-pound weight class.

"Come Saturday night, you're looking at the next world champion," he said through an interpreter.

The only loss for the 25-year-old fighter from Barranquilla, Colombia, came when he was stopped by Mark Breland in his bid for Breland's WBA welterweight title.

Foreman, who will turn 43 next month, is resuming the comeback that was interrupted in April when champion Evander Holyfield got the decision in Atlantic City, N.J.

With the calendar catching up to him, he is eager for a victory on Saturday and one more shot at the championship he won from Joe Frazier in 1973 and lost 21 months later to Muhammad Ali.

"I think it's going to happen. It doesn't take a whole year to make a deal with George," he said.

He left the ring for the ministry in 1977 and returned 10 years later to win 24 fights, all but one by knockout, before meeting up with Holyfield.

Foreman, known for his formidable appetite between fights, has been working out at his home in Marshall, Texas, and watching his diet to trim down to between 250-260 pounds.

"I think I'm definitely qualified to fight George Foreman," he said.

Michael "Roxy" Roxborough of Las Vegas Sports Consultants, which provides betting lines to more than 30 Nevada sports books, has not even bothered to post odds on the match.

"We really don't view it as a fight. It's purely exhibition," he said.

Detmer was the nation's No. 2 passer this season, completing 249 of 403 throws for 4,031 yards and 35 touchdowns. He finished his career with more passing yards (15,031) and TD passes (121) than anyone in NCAA history, two of his 68 passing and total offense records.

Joining Detmer and Faulk in the backfield is Indiana's Vaughn Dunbar, the nation's No. 2 rusher with a 154-yard average. Although he only played two years for the Hoosiers, Dunbar finished his career as the school's third-leading rusher and TD scorer.

Ryan Benjamin of Pacific, who led the NCAA in all-purpose yardage with 2,996, is the squad's all-purpose back. His total yardage for rushing, receiving and kick returning was the second highest ever behind Barry Sanders' 3,250 in 1988. Benjamin is the first Pacific player to make the AP's first team.

Mario Bailey of Washington is the other wide receiver and Kelly Blackwell of Texas Christian is the tight end.

Rounding out the offense are center Jay Leeuwenburg of Colorado; guards Jerry Ostroski of Tulsa and Jeb Flesch of Clemson; tackles Greg Skrepenak of Michigan and Bob Whitfield of Stanford; and placekicker Carlos Huerta of Miami.

They are joined by linemen Brad Culpepper of Florida and Leroy Smith of Iowa; linebackers Robert Jones of East Carolina, Marvin Jones of Florida State and Joe Bowden of Oklahoma; and backs Kevin Smith of Texas A&M, Terrell Buckley of Florida State, Darryl Williams of Miami and Dale Carter of Tennessee.

Top-ranked Miami and No. 2 Washington, the only undefeated teams in Division I-A, each have two players on the first team. No. 4 Michigan and No. 5 Florida State also placed two players on the squad.

Bailey set school records for catches (62) and touchdown receptions (17) in a season, and became the career leader at Washington in receiving yards and TD catches.

Leeuwenburg played with a variety of injuries, including a broken bone in his right hand, but the three-year starter for Colorado allowed just one sack and was penalized only once all season.

Skrepenak, an Outland finalist, anchored a line that helped Michigan average 439 yards and 37 points per game. Whitfield, an All-Pac-10 selection for the second straight year, was a major factor in Stanford's high powered offense.

Flesch helped Clemson average 405 yards per game, second best in school history. Ostroski was the top lineman for a Tulsa team that went 9-2 and earned a trip to the Freedom Bowl.

Huerta made 17 of 21 field goal attempts and set an NCAA record with 157 consecutive extra points before finally missing against Oklahoma State. He is the second leading scorer in NCAA history with 397 points.

Emtman was the leader of the nation's best defense, which limited opponents to 237 yards and 9.2 points per game. He had 19½ tackles for losses, including 6½ sacks, and intercepted one pass.

Dotson led a strong Baylor defense with 60 tackles, four sacks, a fumble recovery and two blocked kicks. Leroy Smith set a Big Ten record with 18 sacks and Culpepper anchored one of the nation's strongest defenses against the run.

Robert Jones made an amazing 151 tackles for East Carolina, which won its last 10 games to gain a berth in the Peach Bowl. Marvin Jones was Florida State's leading tackler with 125, including a season-high 15 against Miami.

ALL-SWC: Slocum is top conference coach

(From 1C)

Defensively, first teamers included linemen Shane Dronett and James Patton of Texas, Santana Dotson of Baylor, and a tie between Roosevelt Collins of TCU and Robin Jones of Baylor.

Also selected was linebacker L'Shai Maston of Baylor. Texas Tech's Tracy Saul and Michael James of Arkansas joined a brace of Aggies in the defensive backfield.

Richardson became the leading rushing quarterback in SWC history, but his biggest asset was leadership. The Aggies lost — 35-34 to Tulsa — the only game he couldn't play, sidelined by an ankle injury.

Coryatt led the team in tackles and big hits. He was the heart of the A&M defense which was ranked No. 1 in the nation before the bowls.

Jones talks Super Bowl, but first come the Saints

By Dave Goldberg
AP Football Writer

Some of Jerry Jones' optimistic predictions have already been fulfilled. But the Dallas owner went out on a slightly longer limb.

"If we can win 11 games, I think we have a good chance at winning the Super Bowl," Jones says.

First there's the small matter of the New Orleans Saints, who themselves harbored Super Bowl hopes earlier this year before they lost three straight and put their hopes of their first-ever NFC West title in jeopardy.

Their defense carried them to a 9-1 record. Now they're 9-4 because that same defense has worn down under the burden of trying to carry a banged-up offense that wasn't very good to start with.

COWBOYS, 24-20

Buffalo (plus 2) at Los Angeles Raiders

The relevant numbers are 51-3.

That's what the Bills beat the Raiders by last season in the AFC title game, numbers that are duly remembered and registered in Al Davis' long memory.

Two other relevant items.

—This game is being played in the Coliseum, rather than in Rich Stadium.

RAIDERS, 24-21

Denver (pick 'em) at Cleveland

Speaking of AFC title games, the Browns haven't exactly done well against the Broncos. In fact, if you want to blame anyone for having to watch Denver get blown out of Super Bowls, blame the Browns — they sent them there.

BROWNS, 10-9

Philadelphia (plus 3) at Giants

Why are the Giants favored?

The Eagles have won six of seven from New York, including a 30-7 decision earlier this year. The Giants, coming off a loss to 2-11 Cincinnati, are playing like a team that won the Super Bowl ... last year.

EAGLES, 24-10

New York Jets (plus 5½) at Detroit

Detroit hasn't lost indoors this year.

LIONS, 20-17

Cincinnati (plus 8) at Miami (Monday night)

So the Bengals showed they can beat a team that won a Super Bowl a year ago. Now they return to Joe Robbie Stadium, where they almost won a Super Bowl three years ago.

DOLPHINS, 24-17

San Francisco (minus 3) at Seattle

49ERS, 21-6

Pittsburgh (plus 10) at Houston

The Oilers' two-game slide started with a 26-14 loss in Pittsburgh.

OILERS, 27-14

Green Bay (plus 9½) at Chicago

BEARS, 24-3

San Diego (plus 9) at Kansas City

CHIEFS, 19-6.

Atlanta (minus 6) at Rams

FALCONS, 31-13

Washington (minus 14) at Phoenix

The last time they met, the Cards were 2-0 and the Redskins won 34-0.

Now the Cards are 4-9, the Redskins have won the NFC East and ...

REDSKINS, 34-7

Indianapolis (plus 8) at New England

Once upon a time, the Patriots could ONLY beat Indianapolis.

PATRIOTS, 17-6

Minnesota (minus 4½) at Tampa Bay

BUCS, 13-7

Last Week: 7-7 (spread), 9-5 (straight up).

Season: 87-91-4 (spread) 112-70 (straight up).

'Skins add no-huddle to potent attack

By Rickard Keil
AP Writer

HERNDON, Va. — If the NFC is the better conference, featuring tough, in-your-face football, and the AFC, losers of the last seven Super Bowls, has lots of gimmicks, what are the Washington Redskins doing using a no-huddle offense?

"To me, it's not something that really fits our team because we're looking to keep people off the field by running," Redskins coach Joe Gibbs said, a slight grimace crossing his face. "Should we choose to go to it or should we get forced to it, it's one more tool."

But until now, the no-huddle has been mostly the province of the AFC, where the Buffalo Bills use it and Houston mixes it into their run-and-shoot on occasion. And now Washington, whose offense is already ranked third in the NFL, has added the hurry-up approach.

"I think it helps us," said offensive tackle Jim Lachey. "It keeps the other guys off balance and gets us in sync."

So far, the scheme has been used only three times, but all three have produced a touchdown. Clearly, it also provides an emotional lift.

The first time came when Washington's offense failed to show up and had gained just 109 yards in almost three full quarters against Dallas two weeks ago. Then, Washington used the no-huddle on two touchdown drives to get back into the game. The second score cut the Cowboy lead to 24-21 in what turned out to be Washington's only loss so far this season.

Last Sunday, with Washington holding a 14-6 third-quarter lead against the Rams, the Redskins turned to the hurry-up, using just 2:44 to move 62 yards and go up 21-6 when Ricky Ervins caught a 24-yard scoring pass from Rypien. The Redskins ended up winning 27-6.

"The way we've been going the last two or three weeks offensively, sputtering at times, its a good weapon to use to switch gears to gain momentum ... get us kickstarted," said quarterback Mark Rypien. "If things go well, we won't have to use it the rest of the time."

Others around the NFL can't be pleased that Washington's already-formidable offense has added another weapon, especially when it means covering wide receivers Clark, Ricky Sanders and Art Monk and tackling running backs Ervins and Earnest Byner without a breather.

"I see that as a great advantage for them," said Phoenix coach Joe Bugel, whose Cardinals (4-9) host the Redskins on Sunday. "With that offense they can do a lot."

But what about concerns that by using the no-huddle, the Redskins are violating some sort of unwritten NFC code that requires stand-up, smash-mouth football at all times?

"It's true," Clark said. "It's not us. It surprises us too when we use it. It's not our style of football."

Woman reporter barred from Indiana locker room.

BLOOMINGTON, Ind. (AP) — Coach Bob Knight was following Indiana University policy when he barred a woman Associated Press reporter from the basketball locker room, officials said.

Reporter Beth Harris said she was prevented from entering the men's facility Tuesday night, while attempting to get player comment following Indiana's game against Notre Dame.

"It's our policy to deny access to members of the opposite sex to all locker room areas," said Kit Klingelhoffer, sports information director for IU.

Harris, a sports writer from the AP's Indianapolis bureau, said it was the first time she had ever been barred from the dressing room.

Klingelhoffer said Knight "probably was not aware" that Harris had previously been in the locker room.

JOLIET, Ill. (AP) — Mass murderer Richard Speck, who in 1966 stabbed and strangled eight Chicago student nurses, died Thursday, one day shy of his 50th birthday.

Friends and relatives of Speck's victims expressed relief upon hearing the news.

Speck

Betty Jo Purvis, the sister of Speck victim Patricia Ann Matusek, said she was happy that she will no longer have to attend the periodic parole hearings for Speck.

"There was always something new that would come up that I hadn't known about, and I would have to go through the whole ordeal over and over and over," said Mrs. Purvis. "I think that it's a shame that it has taken this long for him to leave this earth."

Speck was pronounced dead at 6:05 a.m. at Silver Cross Hospital, near Stateville Correctional Center where he had been held for nearly 24 years, Corrections Department spokesman Nic Howell said.

Will County Coroner Duane Krieger said after an autopsy Thursday afternoon, that Speck appeared to have suffered a heart attack. He said the convict had an enlarged heart, severe emphysema and clogged arteries.

"He just ended up with a sick heart," said Krieger, who added that Speck's family had declined custody of the body. The coroner said the body would be cremated immediately and the ashes would probably be buried at a cemetery just outside the prison.

Speck suffered an apparent heart attack after his arrest for the July 14, 1966, slayings. The tattooed drifter was in guarded condition for several days after police confronted him in his hospital room with the only survivor of his rampage, nurse Corazon Amurao.

Amurao had said the killer had a "Born to Raise Hell" tattoo on his arm. An emergency room surgeon at Cook County Hospital noticed the same tattoo on Speck after he was brought in for an apparent suicide attempt.

Speck first was sentenced to death, but the U.S. Supreme Court struck down the death penalty and he was later resentenced to serve eight consecutive terms of 50 to 150 years each.

He had seven parole board hearings in which the testimony of the victims' families helped send him back to prison.

"His death sort of relieves a great burden from all the families, I would say," said Jack Wilkening, whose sister Pamela was one of Speck's victims. "It eliminates us going to Stateville (for parole hearings) every three years — and that is a very traumatic experience to go through."

"... Judgment Day has finally arrived for that sucker," said retired police officer Jack Wallenda. "And he died an easy death ... he should have suffered a lot more than he did."

Speck broke into the residence late at night and repeatedly told the young women he only wanted money and wasn't going to hurt anyone. But he then bound each of them with bed sheets and led them one by one to other rooms of the townhouse, where he killed eight of them.

Miss Amurao escaped by crawling under a bed while Speck was out of the room. The young Filipino woman later climbed out on the ledge of the building, screaming, "They are all dead! My friends are all dead! Oh God, I'm the only one alive."

Speck reportedly adjusted well to life in prison, where he worked on a wall-painting crew and sometimes did oil paintings of his own. His last reported tangle with prison authorities was in 1978, when he allegedly got drunk on home brew.

"I love Stateville," he said in a 1983 interview. "This is my home."

Speck said at the time that he expected to die in prison of old age.

"I really don't give a damn since my mother died," he said. "That's the only person I wanted to get out to see."

Speck was born Dec. 6, 1941, in Monmouth, Ill., one of seven children, and spent much of his childhood in Dallas. As an adult, he worked at a succession of unskilled jobs — trucker's helper, bakery worker, construction worker, seaman — but never for long.

Bush names Skinner, Teeter to run staff, campaign

WASHINGTON (NYT)— President Bush tried to halt his political slide on Thursday by appointing Samuel K. Skinner and Robert M. Teeter, a pair of pragmatic moderates, to run his staff and his reelection campaign.

As he appointed Skinner, who is now transportation secretary, as his chief of staff, and Teeter, who is his poll-taker, as his day-to-day campaign manager and chief political strategist, Bush also made a new attempt to demonstrate his concern for what he called the "extraordinarily sluggish" economy.

He announced that he was speeding up $9.7 billion in federal spending for 1992 in hopes of spurring economic growth, but made it clear that he was still planning to wait until his State of the Union address in late January before making any substantive economic proposals.

Bush named Skinner to replace John H. Sununu, the combative former governor of New Hamsphire who tendered his forced resignation on Tuesday. Skinner is to take up his new duties on Dec. 16, and White House advisers predicted a sharp departure from Sununu's autocratic, exclusionary operating style.

At a White House news conference, the president also named the seven top officials of his 1992 campaign staff, who included Commerce Secretary Robert A. Mosbacher as the general campaign chairman. It was an array of longtime advisers and political tacticians chosen more for their closeness to the president and their campaign resumes than for their adherence to conservative Republican ideology.

As six of the seven immediately huddled in a White House office for their first organizational session, members of the party's rebellious right wing promptly denounced the lineup, including Skinner.

Bush brushed off the challenge to his candidacy from the Republican right. Instead, he seemed eager to clear the air of confusion in his White House after weeks of buffeting from Democratic and conservative Republican attacks on his economic policies.

Incongruously, Bush still declined to announce his candidacy for re-election, a formality that he said he was putting off until early next year. But Bush's appearance was suffused with the words and tone of a presidential candidate trying to recoup lost ground, even as he acknowledged that he had lost some of the confidence of the public.

Asked why Americans' faith had been shaken in a president who once soared in the opinion polls and whether he could win the election if the economy is still bad next year, Bush said: "The answer to the first question is the economy. The answer to the second — you said if the economy is bad can I get re-elected —and the answer is, 'Yes, 'cause I'm a good president.'"

Skinner will will control the president's schedule, have a strong hand in policy and help formulate what the White House has to say on all issues. In this way, he will have a major voice in the campaign from his office, an arrangement that many Republicans thought would have been virtually impossible under Sununu.

Government temporarily awards routes to three airlines

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Transportation Department, dividing the remains of once-proud Pan American World Air Ways, gave three other airlines temporary permission Thursday to fly Pan Am routes to Paris, Caracas and Grand Cayman.

The department also accepted competing applications from a number of other airlines to fly other Pan Am routes temporarily.

Pan American, founded in 1927, pioneered air travel across the oceans and was for years the premier U.S. flag carrier on overseas routes. It shut down Wednesday after losing its battle to reverse years of losses.

Pan Am's international routes will be auctioned Sunday in the U.S. bankruptcy court in New York. The sales, which must be approved by DOT, eventually will lead to permanent route assignments, a process expected to take several weeks.

The department, meanwhile, is assigning routes on a temporary basis to make sure passengers are accommodated.

In the first such action, DOT on Thursday assigned three routes for which there was just one application each.

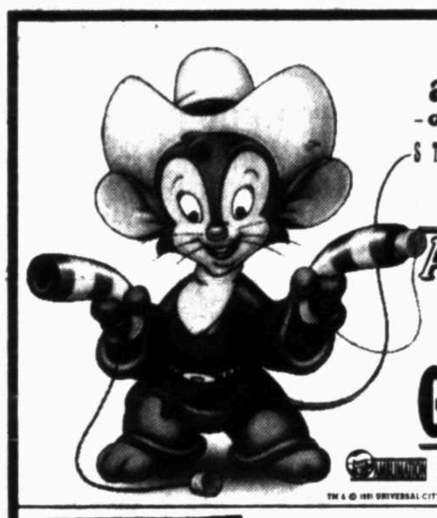

It granted American Trans Air temporary authority to fly the Pan Am route from Miami to Paris. United Airlines was given temporary authority to fly from New York to Caracas. And American Airlines was given temporary permission to fly additional frequencies on the route between Miami and Grand Cayman.

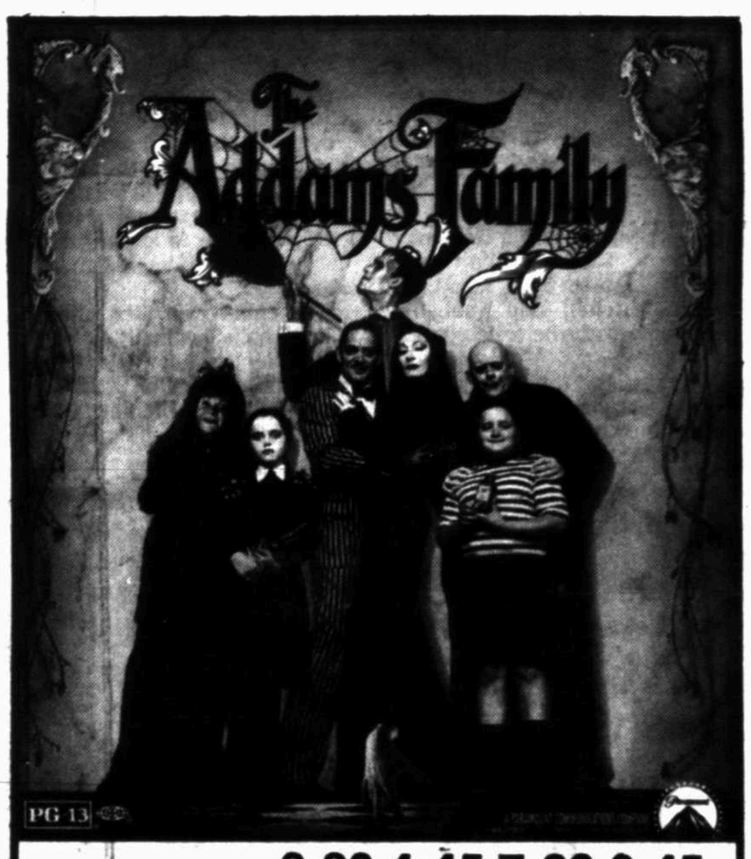

Ed O'Hara, a department spokesman, said DOT would assign additional routes based on how soon an applying airline can fly, whether they already have facilities in place on those routes and on the capacity of the aircraft they propose using.

The department said it is considering competing applications for temporary permission to service a number of other Pan Am routes.

In addition, the department said it was reopening bidding for temporary route authority for six Pan Am routes for which there have been no applicants so far and for any other route Pan Am has stopped flying.

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration spurned on Thursday an Arab appeal that it set a new date for negotiations with Israel but tried to arrange informal talks between the two sides as early as Friday.

The Arabs jointly requested a new starting time as a way of avoiding an appearance of giving in to Israel, which boycotted the talks this week and notified the State Department it would send negotiators here to talk on Monday.

"That would fall into the category of issuing a new proposal and that is something we are not going to do," State Department spokeswoman Margaret D. Tutwiler said of the request the Arab delegations made publicly and privately.

Behind the scenes, meanwhile, Assistant Secretary of State Edward P. Djerejian took up an Israeli request for informal meetings with the Arabs and got tentative approval from the Palestinians, diplomatic sources said.

The talks would be devoted to procedural matters and would be held outside the State Department, said the sources, who declined to be identified.

"We are waiting for the co-sponsors to set a new date for the talks. That is why we are here," Mohamed Zakariya Ismail, a member of the Syrian delegation, said.

"The Palestinian delegation has requested that the co-sponsors arrange a time for the next session of these negotiations and to press for an immediate halt to Israel's procrastination and delaying tactics," said Hanan Ashrawi, a member of the Palestinian advisory group.

— Margaret D. Tutwiler

But Ms. Tutwiler told reporters: "There will be no new co-sponsor proposal."

At the same time, she declined to give assurances that the negotiations would open on Monday. "We cannot force anyone," the U.S. official said.

However, she also said, "We have no reason to believe the talks aren't going to go forward." She said the State Department will be open every day for negotiations between Arabs and Israels.

Earlier, Palestinians said they were willing to negotiate with Israel next week, while Syria sought assurances from the United States that Israel would go ahead with the Mideast peace talks.

Syria's chief negotiator, Muwaffak Allaf, said after seeing Djerejian he hoped "as a result of these consultations things will move forward shortly."

But Sari Nusseibeh, a member of the Palestinian advisory group, objected to negotiations on Monday, the fourth anniversary of the rebellion against Israel control of the West Bank and Gaza.

"We cannot have any talks on the 9th of December. We hope for talks before that or after that. But not the 9th, which is a national day for us," he said.

Secretary of State James A. Baker III set 10 a.m. Wednesday in Washington as the time and place for a resumption of the peace conference that recessed in Madrid, Spain, Nov. 4.

All the Arabs showed up, but Israel held to its decision to delay until next Monday. Israeli officials said they needed more time to prepare to negotiate with the Arabs on three fronts. Also, they insisted Baker acted without consulting them.

On Thursday, Israel did not appear again and the Arabs turned up only for talks with State Department officials.

Meanwhile, the Palestinian had some harsh words for the Bush administration.

"We are very angry with the United States' position on the process," Nusseibeh said. "We feel it is very negative, especially because of what's happening with the settlements and the Israeli escalation in the occupied territories."

Israel announced plans to build a new settlement on the occupied West Bank even as the talks were about to start. The move was criticized sharply by Ms. Tutwiler on Wednesday.

Chief Syrian negotiator Allaf said his purpose in calling on Djerejian, a former U.S. ambassador to Damascus, was "to have some reassuring information from the American co-sponsor in order to be able to proceed with the peace process."

Tomorrow's phones may make calls inescapable

WASHINGTON (AP) — Tomorrow's telephones may let you run, but they won't let you hide. They may let you call from anywhere, but the phone at the other end will be smart enough to screen the call and either let you through or banish you to the appropriate answering machine.

There'll be no more excuses such as, "I was at lunch," "I was in Bill's office" or "I was in the bathroom." The phone can go with you — and some boss will probably want to know why it didn't.

Everyone in the home can have his own pocket phone. If yours is ringing, or beeping, or maybe even softly repeating your name, the call's for you.

"By the end of the 1990s, a telephone with its bell ringing insistently for attention will strike us — and especially our children — as a crude anachronism," Dr. W. Russell Neuman told the Federal Communications Commission on Thursday.

"In retrospect, we will come to see such a telephone call as something akin to an electronic Scud missile, not well targeted and often unwelcome," said Neuman, who teaches communications policy at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

The phone on the receiving end will be able to identify a caller, then decide whether to sidetrack him to an answering machine and what recording to play for him, Neuman said.

But John E. DeFeo, president of U S West NewVector Group Inc., said that worry may translate into a business opportunity.

"There's going to be degrees of privacy," DeFeo told the commission. "Some customers may be willing to pay for more privacy."

U S West is one of the seven regional operating companies formed from the breakup of the Bell System.

The FCC is trying to sort out these problems, so it can decide what rules it will need to write and how to make room on the airwaves so all this message traffic can get through. In addition to the little phones in everyone's pocket, there will still be pagers, mobile satellite services and portable computers that don't have to be plugged into a phone to communicate.

Keating victims fear indictment will delay their recovery

LOS ANGELES (AP) — You'd think investors who lost $250 million in the Lincoln Savings fiasco would applaud the imminent federal indictment of former Lincoln owner Charles Keating Jr.

But with the Arizona land developer and financier convicted of fraud in state court Wednesday, they fear another criminal case will delay true justice. For them, that's a shot at recovering their money in a civil lawsuit set to begin Feb. 17 in federal court in Tucson, Ariz.

Lincoln, owned by Keating's American Continental Corp., was seized in April 1989, with a record $2.6 billion bailout tab to taxpayers. American Continental collapsed into bankruptcy proceedings, rendering $250 million of its bonds worthless.

With a federal indictment still unreturned, speedy criminal justice is already out of the question, Jeri Mellon, the leader of a bondholders support group, said Thursday.

"We can't wait another two and a half years. Some of these people are in their 80s. Some are in their 90s. Some are ill. Some aren't even with us anymore to enjoy the conviction today. We just can't afford to have it postponed anymore," Ms. Mellon said. She lost $40,000 on American Continental bonds.

Ms. Mellon questions the timing of the expected federal indictment. "The Republicans are doing it just so they'll look good in an election year," she said.

Keating crystallized for the nation all that went wrong with S&Ls, paying his family huge salaries, lining the pockets of politicians who intervened with regulators on his behalf, pouring taxpayer-backed funds into risky land and junk bond deals.

He faces a possible 10-year prison sentence for his conviction on 17 counts of duping investors into believing risky American Continental junk bonds were safe investments, like government-insured certificates of deposit.

Woman wins $1.5 million libel judgment from tabloid

LITTLE ROCK, Ark. (AP) — Ninety-six-year-old Nellie Mitchell isn't pregnant and she doesn't live in Australia. Because of that, she expects to be a rich woman.

But she was more concerned with washing dishes Thursday than deciding what to do with the $1.5 million libel judgment she won from a supermarket tabloid that falsely identified her as pregnant Australian newspaper carrier.

"The house is a mess now," she said in a telephone interview, explaining the trial interrupted her routine for three days.

Mrs. Mitchell said she has no plans to retire from the newsstand she operates in her northern Arkansas community of Mountain Home. She delivered newspapers until she was 90.

She said she had no plans yet for the money.

"I'll wait until I get it," she said, but added that winning the $1.5 million award "was just lovely."

A U.S. District Court jury on Wednesday awarded Mrs. Mitchell $850,000 in compensatory damages and $850,000 in punitive damages from the Sun, based in Boca Raton, Fla., and the company that publishes it, Canada-based Globe Communications Corp. She had sought $1 million.

Mrs. Mitchell's picture appeared in a 1990 issue of the Sun with an article that claimed a 101-year-old Australian newspaper carrier had quit her route because she had gotten pregnant by a millionaire customer. The story didn't mention Mrs. Mitchell by name.

Mrs. Mitchell said publishing her photo with the article humiliated her.

Lawyers for the Sun conceded the article was made up, as are other Sun stories, and that use of the photo was a mistake. But they argued that publishing Mrs. Mitchell's picture didn't harm her. They said they will appeal.

During the trial, the jury was shown a videotape in which a Sun editor said he selected Mrs. Mitchell's picture to accompany the article because he assumed she was dead.

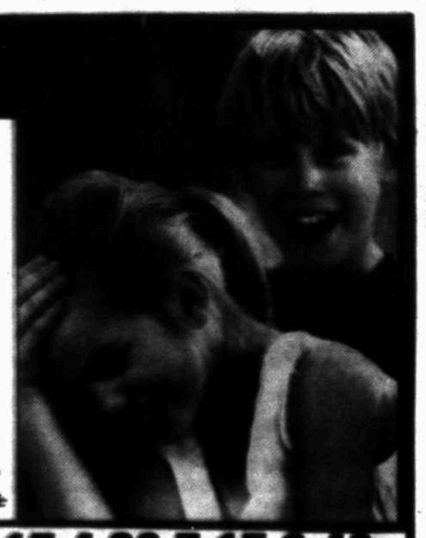

The editor said Mrs. Mitchell's photographs originally were used in 1980 by another Globe Communications publication, The Examiner, which published a story about Mrs. Mitchell's newspaper route.

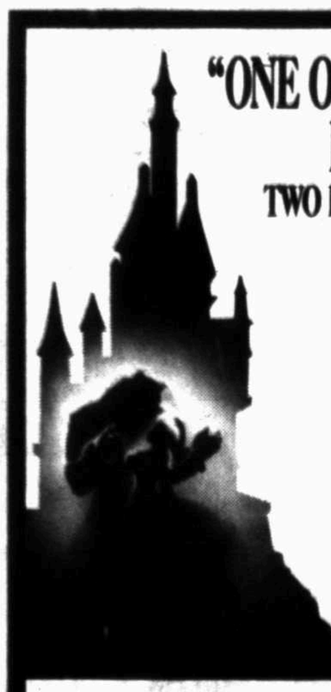

Mrs. Mitchell said wealth wouldn't interrupt her routine, which is to arrive at her newsstand at 6 a.m. and remain until 1:30 p.m. She and her eldest daughter, Betty, run the stand.

MOONLIGHTING!
The Midland Reporter-Telegram has several distributorships which need to be filled with responsible individuals.
OFTEN ASKED QUESTIONS:
Is it worthwhile for adults also? Yes! Our current distributor force is already 90% adult and 10% youth. Morning newspaper routes are attractive for:
• ADULTS who have full-time jobs, yet want to supplement their income with a steady part-time job.
• MOTHERS who can't justify a small job and daycare, because as a distributor, you do not need daycare!
• COLLEGE STUDENTS needing a part-time job which will work with classes!
• SENIOR CITIZENS wanting regular exercise, added income, or just want to work with people, neighbors, and friends.
How long does it take?
The actual delivery takes 1 - 2 hours Monday - Saturday, and 2 - 3 hours on Sunday, again depending on the size of the distributorship. Also, a few hours a month are needed to collect from subscribers. Many distributors choose to handle some of this by putting envelopes in subscribers' papers. Collecting in person will be necessary though!
When do papers have to be delivered by?
6 a.m. Monday - Friday and 7 a.m. on Saturday, Sunday and holidays.
Do I ever get a day off?
The job requires a 7-day a week commitment. However, distributors do take days off by finding a friend or family member to substitute for them!
