Encouragement key to boosting child confidence

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the fifth of a 13-part series on life-management skills. Stories run once a week.

Have you ever been pulled over by a police officer?

Ever been pulled over and complimented for good driving?

It's happened to some, because the Big Spring Police Department periodically writes out good driving certificates. However, it's a shock to many.

"The point is, we often don't expect compliments from authority figures," said Becky Moughon, a parent of 22 years and a child development specialist at Howard College.

But encouraging behavior, developing courage rather than discouraging behavior or encouraging fear, is a powerful tool, said Moughon, who on Tuesday taught the third of six weekly seminars on parenting skills, part of a 12-course "Brown Bag Seminars" program offered by the college.

"Encouragement is a subtle giant," she said.

She also referred to a well-known quote from psychiatrist Rudolph Dreikurs, "Kids need encouragement like plants need water."

Tuesday's workshop, called "Helping Your Child Develop Courage," is the fourth course of the Brown Bag series, held each Tuesday from noon to 1 p.m. The public is invited, but is asked to call 264-5020 the day before to ensure seating. About 30 people attended this week's session.

There are four basic ways to discourage children - negative expectations, focusing on mistakes, perfection and overprotection, according to Moughon, who's using the Active Parenting Curriculum developed by Michael H. Popkin for the six parent-

United Way drive lagging behind '92

By GARY SHANKS
Staff Writer

United Way donations in Howard County are lagging behind those of last year and volunteers are pulling out the stops in hopes of boosting the 1993 campaign.

The United Way has received $27,487, or about 11.7 percent of the goal. Volunteers are focusing efforts on the commercial division, hoping to get donations from area companies, according to United Way Executive Director Sherrie Bordofsky. "We're hoping to do a blitz on that next week," she said.

The need in Big Spring is greater than it has been in many years, Bordofsky said. With collections running behind last year's, volunteers are getting nervous since last year's collections fell short of this year's goal of $235,000.

Bordofsky stressed the need for everyone to work together to make the campaign successful.

United Way Campaign Manager Joe Cook said the 1993 goal is $235,000, but the need of the 11 community-service organizations funded by the United Way is $275,000.

Cook called this larger figure the "United Way Gold" and said it could be achieved, even without larger corporate donations, if Big Spring's working population would give only $20 per person.

The thrust of this year's campaign is education, letting people know about the United Way and all the agencies it assists. "There are a lot of people out there who will give if you merely ask them," Cook said.

At the United Way Kickoff Luncheon, Texas Tech women's basketball coach Marsha Sharp said United Please see CAMPAIGN, page 7

Youngsters scramble about playing indoor soccer during the after school program at the Big Spring YMCA. According to Y officials, some programs may have to be cut back because of reduced United Way funding this year. And even worse, United Way campaign officials say this year's campaign is currently running behind last year's event.

Deputies break up burglary, theft ring

By PATRICK DRISCOLL

A burglary and theft ring that has been active in Howard County as long as 10 years has been cracked by sheriff's deputies.

Several warrants for arrest are being issued, more warrants are being prepared and up to $6,000 worth of merchandise was recovered last week, some of it from a creek bed east of town, according to Deputy Sheriff Barney Edens, who's heading the investigation.

He declined to say at this time how many people or burglaries and thefts may be involved. "Numerous," was the only description offered.

The burglars and those who even suspect they have stolen goods, are asked to contact the sheriff's office.

"We will be able to work with any individual that has turned in stolen property," Edens said. "We have the names of several individuals (who) have been buying the stolen merchandise."

Items dug from a creek bed Tuesday with a backhoe include a typewriter, three channel switchers, a satellite receiver, a computer board, a safe and four newspaper racks. Recovered at various locations in the county were guns, jewelry, saddles and rugs.

McCown signaling sympathy

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — State District Judge F. Scott McCown is taking an active role in the trial over the school finance law, which is being challenged by property-rich and poor school districts.

On Tuesday, he showed little sympathy for arguments that the law levels the education system by limiting rich school districts' wealth.

McCown gave lawyers an analogy to chew on: Say a person requires six pieces of bread a day, he said, but four people have only 20 pieces among them.

Two of the people each have two pieces; one gets six; and one gets 10. The two who don't have enough bread can't get the others to vote for obtaining more. Then a court steps in and says everyone gets five pieces.

You might say there's no "nutritional justification" for leveling down, McCown said. But on the other hand, "Now we've got four votes for more bread."

His argument is like that made by poor school district officials, who for years have said that putting all school districts in the same financial boat will give all of them reason to lobby lawmakers for more education funding.

It was one of several times that McCown took a vocal role in the two-day old trial.

He questioned Education Commissioner Lionel "Skip" Meno about potential waste in the education system, advised some lawyers to stick to the subject, and reminded them that he has previously ruled in another trial in the long-running case that the state can fund education "100 percent through ad valorem property taxes as long as it's equitable."

The new law is the third to try to meet a 1989 Texas Supreme Court order to even out funding available to school districts. Schools rely on state aid and local property taxes.

The law gives the state's richest school districts several options for sharing some wealth. It is meant to ensure that no school district has more than $280,000 in property wealth per student.

Marta Greytok plans challenge for Mauro

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Former Public Utility Commissioner Marta Greytok says she wants the Republican nomination to challenge three-term Democratic Land Commissioner Garry Mauro.

In announcing her candidacy Tuesday, Mrs. Greytok charged that Mauro "is part of the entrenched political class that has created so much hate for politics and distrust of government among the people."

The land commissioner manages some 20 million acres of state-owned lands and oversees the state's Veterans Land Program that offers low-interest loans to Texas veterans for purchase of land and homes.

Mauro, first elected in 1982, is expected to seek re-election in 1994.

Mrs. Greytok, 60, ended a six-year term on the Public Utility Commission Sept. 1. She had been appointed to the regulatory panel by then-Gov. Bill Clements in 1987.

She also served three terms as mayor of the Houston suburb of Tarrylor Lake Village and as chair of the Harris County Central Appraisal District. Raised on a ranch in Jim Wells County, she's a graduate of the University of Texas School of Nursing.

Mrs. Greytok chided Mauro for having used state phones while heading President Clinton's campaign in Texas last year and for what she said was being out of touch with voters.

"He has turned the Texas Land Commission into an annex of the Clinton White House ... Garry has abused the public trust and abandoned what sense of responsibility he had to the taxpayers. Over the past decade, no state official has been investigated more than Garry Mauro," she said.

Mauro was in Washington Tuesday, working on an alternative fuels report for the president, and not immediately available to comment on the charges, said Land Office spokesman Ron Calhoun.

Last year, Mauro apologized for what he said was inadvertent use of state phones and fax machines. An internal agency audit found 1,440 local and long-distance phone calls made to political offices by 19 agency employees.

The Travis County district attorney's Public Integrity Unit reviewed the situation and said it failed to find "a conscious pattern of misuse of state property for political or personal purposes."

Mauro said there was no "systematic abuse" and that agency policies were updated "to ensure that such lapses will not occur in the future."

Groups express opposition to prohibition of income tax

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — A proposed constitutional ban of a personal state income tax is bad public policy and misleading to voters, several groups have charged.

The measure is No. 4 on the Nov. 2 ballot. Early voting runs from Oct. 13 through Oct. 29.

Under the amendment, an income tax, and any subsequent increase, could only be imposed if approved by voters.

If the levy ever is established, the amendment says that the income tax revenue would be used to reduce school property taxes and help fund education.

But the League of Women Voters, Common Cause Texas, and the Texas Alliance for Human Needs, says the measure could be a subterfuge for an income tax that benefits business and does nothing to protect education funding.

"The wording of the amendment is so convoluted that it is not clear how a person should vote," said Mary Nell Mathis, chairwoman of Common Cause Texas. "We think people should be able to determine the consequences of their actions, and we cannot figure out if this amendment makes a (income) tax more likely or less likely. So we vote 'No' on general principles."

Judge sentences man to college

FORT WORTH (AP) — A Fort Worth man arrested for selling cocaine to an undercover FBI agent could learn a lot from the sentence he received recently — to go to college.

U.S. District Judge Terry Means said he decided last week to give the 21-year-old man a second chance because he was a first-time offender who seemed to realize his mistake.

"I didn't see in him a hardened criminal heart," Means said.

The judge sentenced the man to five years' probation and, as part of the terms of the probation, ordered him to get a college education.

"When he said that, I only had one thought and that thought was, 'Thank you, Jesus,'" the man said.

He must maintain a course load of no less than 12 hours a semester and keep at least a "C" grade point average until he receives a baccalaureate degree, according to probation papers. If he doesn't make the grade, he stands a chance of going to prison, Means said.

Means said he watched the man, a first-time offender, express his remorse, without offering excuses or seeking favors.

"He was an earnest, humble, well-spoken young man who seemed to realize the gravity of his wrongdoing, had come to terms with it, accepted the responsibility for it and was willing to make amends," Means said.

The man and his family said they will pay for the college education. They asked that their names not be publicized because they fear retaliation for the man's testimony against co-defendants in a recent drug conspiracy trial.

Former grand jury foreman indicted

HOUSTON (AP) — A Harris County

grand jury has returned a perjury indictment against a former grand jury foreman who caused authorities to throw out more than 480 indictments.

The indicted returned Tuesday accused Ray Charles "R.C." Jones, 54, of deliberately lying about whether he was under indictment when he took an oath Aug. 2 that he had a clean record.

Bond was set at $2,000 for Jones, who was not in custody Tuesday.

Prosecutor Chuck Noll wouldn't identify his witnesses, but said people heard Jones say "no" when state District Judge Lupe Salinas asked potential members of the 351st grand jury if they then were under indictment or other accusation of theft or another serious offense.

Court records show that at the time Jones had been indicted on charges of theft in a case involving a $920 bad check.

Hutchison fires counsel, retains DeGuerin, Tigar

HOUSTON (AP) — U.S. Sen. Kay Bailey Hutchison has traded in her Washington counsel for a Texas legal team that includes famed criminal defense lawyer Dick DeGuerin, a newspaper reported Tuesday.

Nick Voinis, a spokesman for Mrs. Hutchison, confirmed that John Dowd had been dismissed and DeGuerin and Michael Tigar of Austin have been hired, The Houston Post reported.

"The senator said John Dowd did a great job but she needed someone with Texas experience," said Voinis.

Mrs. Hutchison, R-Texas, was indicted Sept. 27 on four felony counts and one misdemeanor charge of misusing state employees and equipment while Texas' state treasurer. She's also accused of altering state records as part of a coverup. Her first court appearance is Monday in Austin.

Advisors list options for Clinton

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton, disturbed by the heavy toll of casualties in Somalia and angered at the spectacle of an American corpse being dragged through the streets of Mogadishu, is weighing a range of options on U.S. involvement there.

"It curdles the stomach of every American to see that, because we went there for no purpose other than to keep those people alive," Clinton said Tuesday in an interview with Copley News Service.

"It really makes me angry," he said, adding that he is increasingly reluctant to operate under a United Nations structure that he said no longer provides "the help we need to protect our people."

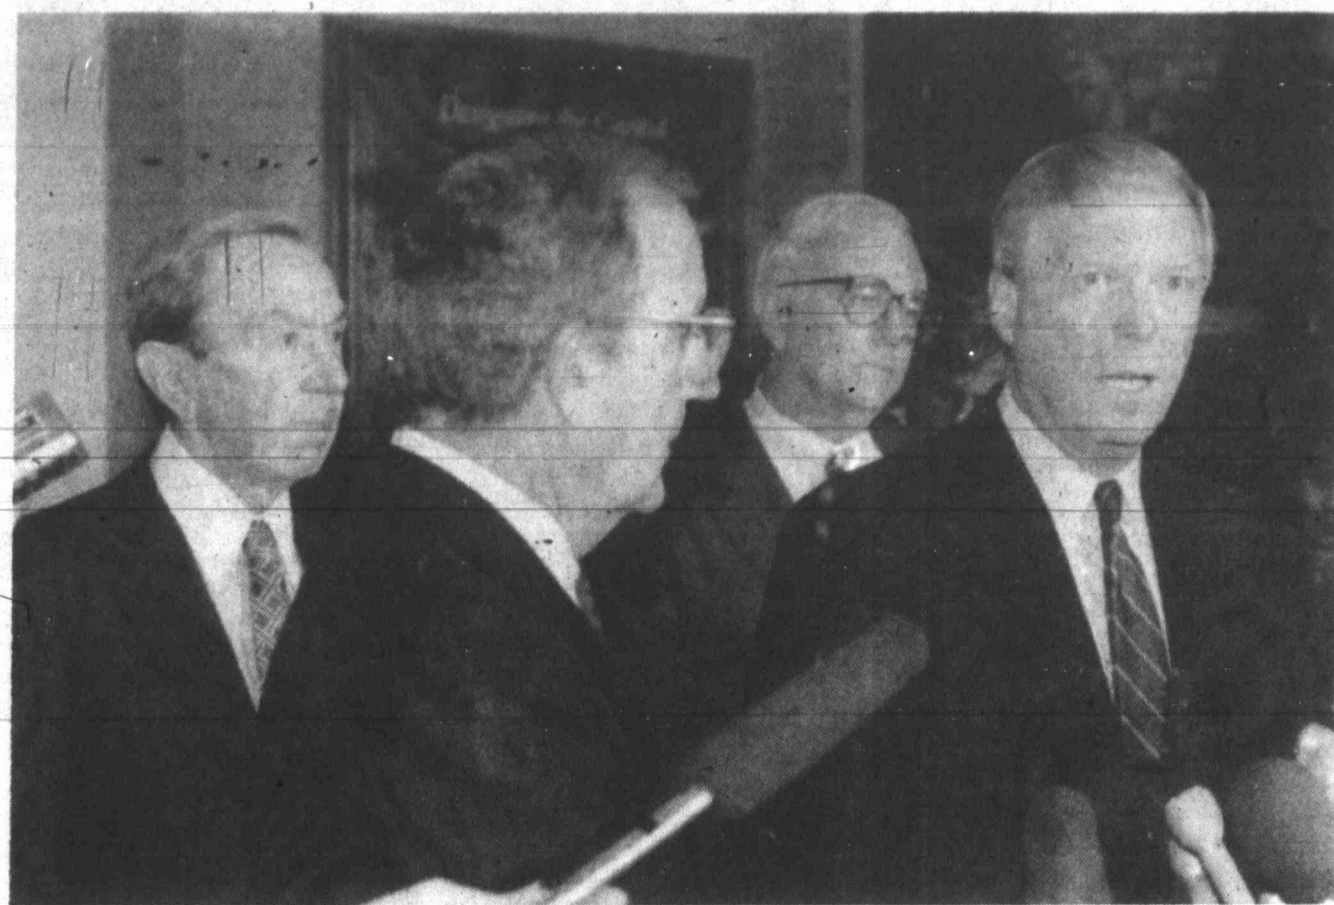

With congressional opposition to the U.S. presence mounting, Clinton planned a second meeting today with his top national security aides, including Secretary of State Warren Christopher, Defense Secretary Les Aspin, and Marine Gen. Joseph P. Hoar, the commander for the region.

The group met Tuesday night after Clinton returned from a three-day trip to California. Clinton made no decisions and said he wanted to meet with the same group again today to discuss next steps, presidential adviser David Gergen said.

A senior official who asked not to be identified by name suggested that Clinton was not about to order an abrupt withdrawal of troops from Somalia and that the basic goal remained "to draw down American troops as the security situation allows."

"President Clinton will have to weigh this morning whether our best option is in fact to defeat Aidid. ..."

Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., said this morning. "My guess is the president House Majority Leader Dick Gephardt of Missouri (right) speaks to reporters after a Congressional briefing by Secretary of State Warren Christopher and Defense Secretary Les Aspin on the situation in Somalia Tuesday on Capitol Hill. will go for an option in which he tries to rotate our troops out in favor of other troops from the United Nations."

"It would be a disgrace to cut and run in a way in which we lost more lives and put more people in jeopardy simply because we went into a national panic," Lugar, a ranking member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said on ABC.

But Sen. John Breaux, R-La., said "We've done the humanitarian mission. Now it's time to move on. ..."

"This isn't a test of the manhood of the United States of America. We won Desert Storm, we won the Cold War. The United States' pride is not on the line in Somalia," Breaux said on CBS.

In the interview Tuesday in California shortly before he departed for Washington, Clinton said the specter of Somalis cheering the death of U.S. servicemen "makes me sick and it's reprehensible since all the Americans ever did was go there and try to save children from starving, reopen the hospitals and the schools, and give people a safe place to sleep at night."

Contending that "most Somalis" appreciate that, he added that "the crowd around (Somali warlord Mohamed Farrah) Aidid have sort of a short memory. They've forgotten what it was like before the United Nations, led by the Americans, showed up."

Congressional Texans offer mixed responses on Somali involvement

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As frustration mounts on Capitol Hill over the United States' military involvement in violence-torn Somalia, Texas lawmakers say it's imperative that the Clinton administration re-evaluate the mission's objectives.

Democrats and Republicans alike suggest that what began as a humanitarian mission to help starving Somalis has disintegrated into a law enforcement exercise that's blindly forging on without clear policy objectives.

And while the Texans advocate everything from immediate troop withdrawal to a swift escalation of military power, they agree the status quo can't continue.

Following a day when television stations showed a U.S. soldier's body dragged through the streets of Mogadishu by a Somali mob, Defense Secretary Les Aspin and Secretary of State Warren Christopher briefed an angry crowd of House and Senate members Tuesday.

It appears they did little to sway the opinions of lawmakers worried by the deaths of 12 soldiers and injury of 78 others in battles with forces loyal to elusive warlord Mohamed Farrah Aidid.

"I think Aspin and Christopher bought some time today with Congress, but the clock is ticking and there's not much time left for them to show Congress why we should stay there," said Rep. Chet Edwards, D-Waco, a member of the Armed Services Committee.

Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said one message emerged from the meeting: "The bottom line is we don't have a clearly defined policy."

Gramm, who wants U.S. soldiers out of Somalia as quickly as feasible, has been lukewarm about the mission since President Bush dispatched U.S. troops there last December — in part because he feared the operation would drag on without conclusion.

"We went to Somalia to feed a hungry people," said Gramm, who sits on the Appropriations Committee's defense and foreign operations subcommittees. "We did our job."

"Now we're in the process of seeing our mission there turn from basically a relief mission into a combat, law enforcement mission," he said. "This is not what we signed on to do."

Edwards, whose district includes the nation's largest Army post, suggests a decisive military hit. "I think we need to send a strong show of military force immediately to protect our troops already there; and then, within the next several weeks, we need to either decide there's a realistic chance of creating political stability or withdraw."

Another Democrat favoring more military might is Rep. Charlie Wilson of Lufkin, who wants U.S. troops to have the necessary manpower and equipment to "root out Aidid and do whatever is necessary to save the lives and stop the killing."

Wilson isn't among those grumbling about the administration's policy, suggesting instead that Congress support the commander-in-chief. "It's troublesome, but all anybody can do responsibly is support the president and let him make the decision on this," said Wilson, who serves on the Appropriations Committee's foreign operations and defense subcommittees.

That call isn't echoed by fellow Texas Democrat Ron Coleman of El Paso. "I think it's time for the president to ask for congressional review of our mission," he said. "I have said that whether the president is a Republican or a Democrat and I still say that."

For many, the painful lessons of Vietnam echo loudly.

"I keep wondering 'Is this the beginning of a repeat performance like Vietnam?'" asked Rep. Sam Johnson, R-Dallas, an Air Force pilot who spent seven years as a Vietnamese prisoner of war.

Yeltsin's actions raise concerns in West

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Tanks shelling the parliament building. Opposition leaders under arrest. This is democracy? Even to some of Boris Yeltsin's strongest supporters in the West, the events in Russia are unnerving.

Official Washington desperately wants to believe.

President Clinton spoke to Yeltsin by telephone Tuesday and received assurances of "free and fair elections," according to Dee Dee Myers, the White House press secretary.

"Basically, I think the president wanted to speak to him and see how he's doing," Myers told reporters aboard Clinton's plane.

But at the State Department, spokesman Michael McCurry had to deal with the question of Yeltsin's order clamping down on opposition media and the banning of political parties viewed as too extreme.

The newspapers shut down were those "publishing inflammatory appeals to violence," said the spokesman.

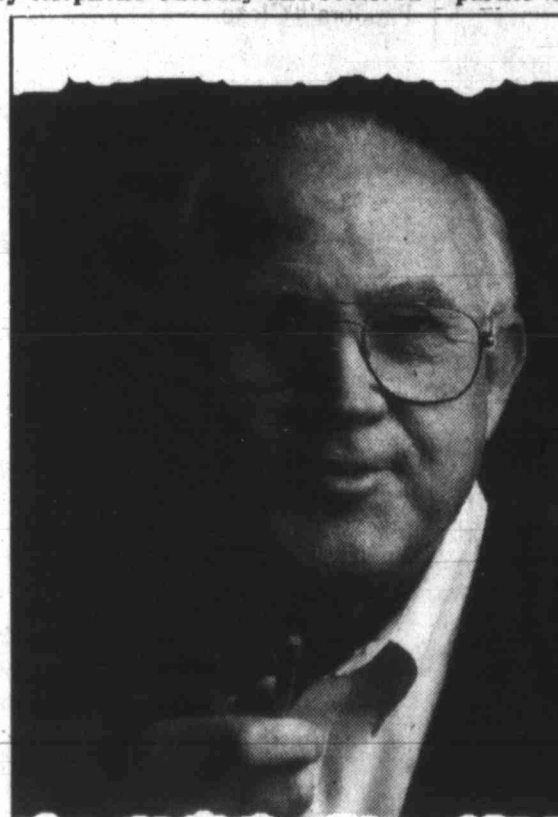

But he also made it clear U.S. support has limits.

"We would expect and do expect that during and after the election campaign itself full freedom of the press and freedom of assembly would be granted to political parties and to groups," he said.

In Moscow, people tried to return to normal life after a 13-day crisis led to street battles that claimed more than 100 lives and left hundreds wounded.

Yeltsin's former vice president, Alexander Rutskoi, and the parliament speaker, Ruslan Khasbulatov, were in prison waiting to learn what charges will be brought against them.

Let's clear the confusion for those seeking help

Citizens of Big Spring have opened their hearts to Debra Lewis. After reading of her plight to find help for her and her six children, Big Spring has found a way to offer assistance to her. Living Waters Ministries is organizing the flood of support for Lewis.

But, while Big Spring citizens dig into their pockets to find the means to help Lewis, the question of her fruitless search through the federal and state welfare bureaucracies remains.

There are many avenues for help in Big Spring, but those who are seeking assistance usually do not know where to turn or who to turn to.

A clearinghouse to direct people where to go when seeking assistance has been batted around. This is a good idea, a central place with all the information about each agency and a person there to offer a needed hand in finding help.

One of the concerns about establishing a clearinghouse is the cost.

There are other ways to provide this same service until the money can be found to establish a true clearinghouse.

Think about where people often turn to when they are in need of assistance. Most people go to a church, some to the police, some to city hall or the courthouse.

If, at these places and many others, there was simply a list of all the agencies providing help to those in need and a telephone number of who to call would help to alleviate confusion when trying to find some help.

We all need help sometimes and when we do, confusion doesn't make a tough situation any easier. Easy the confusion and making the request for help easier to fill is something we need to work toward.

Bad sports on the field

Scripps Howard News Service

It was a week of contrition and repentance among college football coaches, following last weekend's ugly on-field brawling during games across the country. We'll soon see if the proclaimed regret is genuine, or as hollow as many of the self-serving attitudes common to big-time college football.

The worst brawl took place in the Miami-Colorado game before a national TV audience, and officials gave 12 players the heave-ho. But players also fought during the Maryland-Virginia Tech game (four players ejected), the Duke-Virginia game (four ejected), the Tennessee-LSU game (two ejected) and the North Carolina-N.C. State game (one ejected).

University officials, coaches and athletic governing bodies must quash this mayhem. If not, horrified spectators may someday see a player beaten to death at the 50-yard line.

It may seem odd to deplore violence in what is by design a violent sport. American-style tackle football is a collision game played by fast, strong, aggressive young men who accept the physical risks. But most athletes know what good sportsmanship is, even if they don't always practice it. Apparently, that standard is eroding.

More and more, football is being undermined by strutting, sneering, finger-pointing, filthy-talking bullies. Their behavior demeans them, their teams and the game itself, and it alienates fans. The decent athletes who let their play do the talking are being overshadowed by the goons.

Timid university presidents have failed to crack down. And coaches naturally have been more concerned about winning than about etiquette. That may change.

To his credit, Miami Hurricanes coach Dennis Erickson this week announced he will suspend players for future incidents of fighting. Some Atlantic Coast Conference coaches also voiced disgust and vowed to be more strict. Good. Colorado's football coach, Bill McCartney, seemed less apologetic about his brawling players. Yet he also announced stricter policies, after prodding by his university's president.

Various rule changes are being proposed by other coaches and league officials. For one thing, it's essential to stop sideline players from streaming onto the field each time they see someone lose his temper. And punishment must be swift for anyone swinging a helmet as a weapon (as in some of last weekend's frays).

Good football teams depend on discipline. Players must control their emotions, and coaches must control their players. Maybe if officials suspended a few coaches, the disgraceful on-field brawls would become rare.

'Maybe she's in a better place'

Lewis Grizzard

ATLANTA — It never occurred to me that Melissa Segars might die. Of course, she wouldn't die. I didn't die. When I was there on the operating table at Emory Hospital last spring bleeding to death during a heart operation, I needed a miracle, and I got one. Melissa would get a miracle, too, if she needed one. How could I get one and this precious child (she was 25 and looked 13) not.

Melissa and her family got the call. There was a donor heart and lung waiting for her at the St. Louis Children's Hospital. In the wee hours of Sunday morning the family boarded a private jet and flew to St. Louis.

Melissa would receive both a heart and lung transplant. She would not live much longer if she did not have the transplant.

She had said to me two weeks ago, "When this is over, I want to go on a cruise."

When she smiled, she lit up the room. When she spoke she gave it music.

Jim Minter and Furman Bisher, two men who helped my career a hundred years ago in the Atlanta Journal Sports Department, first told me about Melissa Segars.

She was this young woman down in Fayette County, Georgia, where they both lived, who was dying and desperately needed the operation. But there was no money to pay for it and maybe if I would write something it would help.

I wrote a column. It helped. The Fayette community had already been trying to raise the one million dollars necessary. And it had already responded with over half of the total.

I had lunch with Melissa at Furman Bisher's house. We exchanged a few heart surgery war stories. Melissa, like myself, had been born with heart problems.

She hit me squarely between my eyes, as she did anyone who met her. She was so tiny. She might have weighed 65 pounds.

She had that godawful oxygen tank she had to carry around and she had those tubes in her nostrils.

Furman's wife wanted me to see his library. We had to go down some stairs. Melissa could get down the stairs, but she was afraid she couldn't get back up again.

"We can go back out through the basement," said Furman's wife. Melissa's life was like that. Obstacles everywhere.

Jim Minter called me Sunday morning to tell me Melissa and her family had flown to St. Louis and that the operation would be Sunday afternoon.

"She wanted your home number so she could call you sometime and thank you for your help," Jim said. "OK if I gave it to her?"

Jim told me, "Your contributions, following your column, were running as much as $8,000 a day. God bless you for that."

Columnist Gerrie Ferris called me from the Atlanta Constitution Sunday afternoon. I was watching the Ryder Cup. She told me Melissa had bled to death on the operating table. She said the paper wanted a quote from me.

I rambled around and then said, "It's not fair."

The 6 o'clock news had all the details and they put Melissa's face on the screen. They interviewed a man in Fayette County who said, "Maybe she's in a better place."

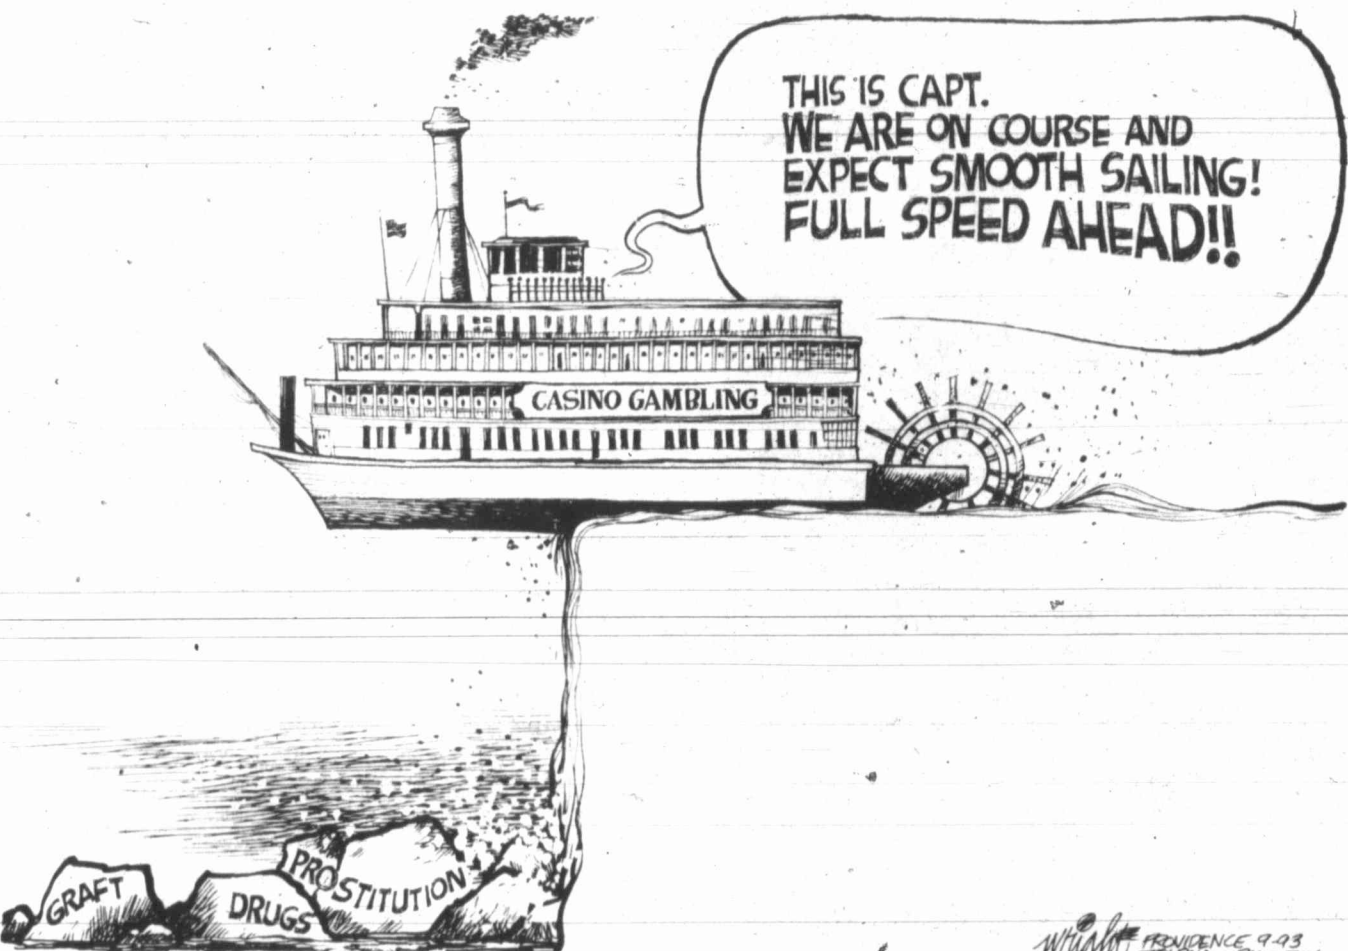

She leaves her legacy of courage.

She leaves a community that responded to her need in such an overwhelming manner that it reminds us when we so need reminding, points of light do yet shine in the midst of so much darkness in the human soul.

She leaves me wondering what on earth I ever did to deserve the miracle she didn't get. Fairness.

Melissa is gone. For the rest of us, the dice roll on.

What is the NIE program?

Several weeks ago, the Herald ran the introduction of a new Newspaper in Education Coordinator. Since that time, I have been so busy getting the school year started, that I have neglected to really introduce myself.

Many of you know me from my former position, that of Narcotics Detector Dog handler. In other words, I was Hershey's Mom. That was my title for the past three years, and I worked with the Big Spring, Forsan, Coahoma and Monahans Schools.

I am a certified teacher and have five years teaching experience. I substitute taught for eight years while raising my children, Cody and Zane, and find that I am happiest when I have some contact with school systems. My husband and I have lived in Garden City since 1977 and look forward to being here for some time. I am very pleased to have the opportunity to serve the area schools in this capacity.

For those of you that do not fully understand the term Newspaper in Education or have not become familiar with the program, here is an explanation.

The NIE program is designed to help teachers use the newspapers in schools as part of their regular curriculum. In every classroom, students and teachers can find something interesting to learn from the newspaper. It is my job to make it as easy as possible for the teachers to use the newspaper in their curriculum.

Now that the teachers are registered, and the newspapers are coming to their classrooms regularly, I will be providing them with newsletters to keep them up to date on the program, teacher's guides to the Minipage, learning activities, advisory conferences and classroom presentations. I will also be working with the sponsors to ensure that they know what a worthwhile project they have undertaken and what a difference they have made in our community! We all have to work together to help lower the illiteracy rate and the community itself is the "Power Team" that will make the difference!

If you haven't looked at the sponsor list and called someone you know to praise them for their efforts, please do so now. If you haven't asked your child about the newspaper in their classroom, do so! If you haven't talked to your child's teacher to praise her for her efforts, please do so now! If you wish to support this program, in any way, please do so now! Call us at 263-7331.

Glenda Cummings is the NIE coordinator for the Herald. Her column will appear each Wednesday.

Letters to the Editor

What's the truth?

Editor:
Been following the mail, some of it pretty interesting. But the one that interested me today is the one from Louie Paulger on pornography. In it she states that Ted Bundy had read a pornography magazine when he was young, which he said caused him to do what he did. He (Ted Bundy) stated that most of the men on death row were there for reading it.

Now Mr. Paulger might have a point there. But what I'm saying is this. What about before these kind of magazines were printed. You have people like Richard Speck who killed eight nurses, Wayne Garcy who murdered 33 young boys, or Juan Corraza??? In California, who done in 25 farm workers. As far as that goes William Quantrill in the 1860's who done away with a couple of hundred people. Mr. Paulger should check out his history and see all of the people who was murdered, including the holocaust of WW II, and I will say this, this is soft pornography, what Ted Bundy was talking about was hard core and I know for a fact hard core is very hard to find in the state of Texas. That is almost as bad as the guy who killed the trooper, he said the rap music made him do it. Oh, yes before I forget, how about when the Christians was being fed to the lions, and generally just being killed.

Counts a help

Editor:
At the end of a legislative session it's easy to look back and remember the accomplishments. What is hard is remembering all of the people who helped make it a success. During the past session, Speaker of the House, Pete Laney did a fine, masterful job. In addition, in my opinion there were several other lawmakers who showed a tremendous amount of leadership and courage. While it is impossible to recognize each individual who made an important contribution to the session, I would like to take this opportunity to send a special message to the constituents of Representative David Counts, whom I think deserves a pat on the back. He is at the top of my ten best legislator's list!

David Counts was a strong leader always working hard to accomplish the job we came to do. His focus was always where it should be. Unless you were actually there you wouldn't know this because of the professionalism and correct manner in which he carried it out. His strong efforts helped us keep down unnecessary discussions and arguments that would have wasted time. It takes these kind of efforts to have a successful session and what is sad is that many times they go unnoticed. Thanks David!

Again, as I end this letter, I just wanted to say to the constituency of Representative David Counts, "thanks for sending one of the best to Austin! It meant a lot to me as a freshman legislator and to the state of Texas." To sum it up, regardless of whether or not I return for another session, I'm very happy to have shared the 73rd legislative session with such a courageous man!

Board saluted

Editor:
A salute to the Big Spring Citizens Advisory Board. As Mr. Kontz stated in his letter of September 29, 1993, he reflected that in nearly two years of existence they have heard relatively few cases. This is excellent proof that the advisory board has created the results we all sought when it was established two years ago.

Prior to the creation of this board there were numerous complaints concerning arresting procedures. Due to the diligent work of the council and citizens, the Big Spring Citizens Advisory Board was created.

I'm happy to report that since the creation of this board I have not had any person complain to me concerning police abuse of any kind. This is an excellent example of how a check and balance system operates and why it is necessary that all entities be accountable. However, just because there have been no complaints does not mean that the board is not necessary. The board must continue to exist for protection of the citizens and also for the protection of those officers who may be wrongfully accused. I personally believe this board provides a service for all citizens of Big Spring.

This is a personal thank you to each board member for their unselfish devotion of time and energy for the good of the City of Big Spring. The future looks bright.

Thanks

Editor:
The members of the Big Spring Evening Lions Club wish to thank you and your entire staff for the support you gave to the Lions Club prior to our Sept. 3 barbecue.

The daily articles in the sports section about the fund raising barbecue prior to the Steers football games and the article with photographs which were taken at the high school during our peeling potatoes for the salad and the ladies picking the beans was the best publicity any organization could ask for.

The barbecue was a great success, with a large turnout from Big Spring and 134 members from the Levelland High School Band and sponsors, which resulted in the Lions raising over $2300 for all the youth programs the Evening Lions Clubs sponsor along with the eyeglasses and exams we provide for students and the senior citizens who don't have the means to purchase their own.

It matters

Editor:
In regard to the piece I read in the paper dated 9-30-93. It matters what they do? Sure it matters (1) to God, (2) to citizens of our state (3) to our leaders, that's supposed to be setting the right examples before our children and our grandchildren, who will be our leaders in the near future. If she can't be honest and fair in a state office. She won't be fair and honest in our office in Washington, D.C. She should be punished just like anybody else that commits a crime. God doesn't respect one person above another, why should our laws.

Big Spring Symphony tickets on sale

Big Spring Symphony Association members and supporters met early Tuesday for a season Kick-Off Breakfast at the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce board room.

Following breakfast, provided by members of the Big Spring Symphony Guild, tickets were passed out to Symphony members and orders given to sell.

Symphony Association President Darryl Powell outlined the 1993-94 season of four concerts in Big Spring.

The first of these, on Nov. 13, will feature pianist Larry Wheat, son of local merchants Walter and Frances Wheat.

Wheat grew up in Big Spring, studying piano under the late Ann Gibson Houser. While attending Texas Christian University in Fort Worth he studied with world-famed concert pianist Madame Lili Kraus, according to Pam Welch, season ticket chairman for the association.

Wheat will join the symphony for Sergei Rachmaninoff's Piano Concerto No. 3. The symphony also will perform Rossini's Overture to the Barber of Seville and Tchaikovsky's Overture

Members and supporters of the Big Spring Symphony Association gathered for a breakfast to "kick-off" their ticket sales for the 1993-94 season. The breakfast was supplied, Tuesday, by the Symphony Guild at the Big Spring Area Chamber of Commerce Board Room.

Fantasy Romeo and Juliet.

Season tickets are now available for $35 for adults and $25 for seniors and students. Brochures have been mailed to various homes and include an order stub for season tickets that can be mailed back, Welch said.

Welch plans to have ticket booths at various civic clubs during the month of October. Tickets will be available at the Big Spring Mall and there will be ticket booths at the Confederate Air Show in Midland.

Tickets may also be purchased at Dunlaps, the Chamber of Commerce, Blum's Jewelers and the Heritage Museum.

Any member of the Symphony Guild or Association will be able to sell season tickets or tickets to a specific concert as well.

For the first time, season ticket holders for the upcoming season will be able to give their tickets to others if they cannot make a concert. "The association hopes this move will help to improve ticket sales as well as attendance," Welch said.

Also, if tickets are lost, a list of season ticket holders is maintained so that they can be replaced.

Other concerts this season are scheduled for Jan. 29, March 28 and May 7. For more information call Welch at 263-7641 or write the Big Spring Symphony Guild at P.O. Box 3711, Big Spring, 79721.

Tax-deductible contributions may be mailed to P.O. Box 682, Big Spring, 79721.

Jurassic Park eats 'ET'

The Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — The dinosaur movie "Jurassic Park" has earned $704.7 million worldwide, passing the alien film "E.T. The Extra-Terrestrial" as the all-time moneymaker at the box office, according to figures released Monday.

"Jurassic Park" has grossed $325.7 million in North American theaters and $379 million overseas, Universal Pictures said. The worldwide returns for "E.T." are $701 million.

Both films were directed by Steven Spielberg.

"Jurassic Park," Spielberg's adaptation of Michael Crichton's novel about a dinosaur theme park run amok, has broken ticket revenue records in Japan, the United Kingdom, Hong Kong and Mexico.

The one record "Jurassic Park" cannot claim is that of highest-grossing domestic release. "E.T." made $359.2 million in its initial release in 1982, compared to "Jurassic Park's" take of $325.7 million.

"E.T." which had a subsequent release in 1985, brought in a total of $399.8 million domestically and $301.6 million internationally.

When "E.T." was released, however, tickets cost less: $2.94 on average nationally, compared with more than $5.10 apiece now. But "E.T." did not face much competition from the home video industry or pay television, then both in their infancy.

"Jurassic Park," earned $1.1 million over the weekend, its 17th week of release, Exhibitor Relations Co. Inc. said Monday.

Meanwhile, Universal's "For Love or Money," a Michael J. Fox comedy that was shelved during the summer, made its debut over the weekend to weak returns of $4 million, despite a coupon for discounted popcorn at theaters showing the film.

Robert Altman's three-hour interpretation of Raymond Carver's stories, titled "Short Cuts," made $10,500 in one theater in one night in New York City.

"It was a virtual sellout all day long," said Ira Deutchman, president of producer Fine Line Features.

Robert De Niro's directorial debut in "A Bronx Tale" collected good but unremarkable returns of $3.7 million.

"The Joy Luck Club" continued to play very well in limited release, earning $2.8 million at just 340 locations.

In first place at the weekend box office was the new medical-sexual drama "Malice" with a gate of $9.2 million, followed by "The Good Son" in second on proceeds of $7.8 million.

'Hee Haw' now in hayseed heaven

The Associated Press

EDT.

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — The cornfield from "Hee Haw" has been placed in storage. Nurse Good Body has treated her last patient. The Empty Arms Hotel has accepted its final guest.

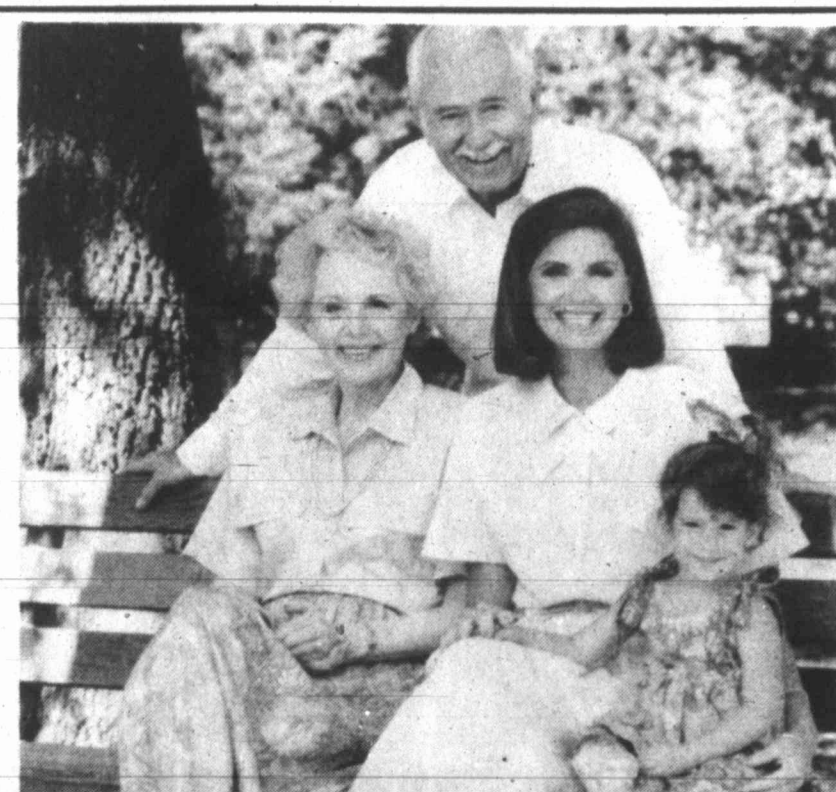

"Hee Haw," the cornball TV show that's out of production for the first time since 1969, has gone to hayseed heaven.

But cable TV's The Nashville Network gives another saaaaaa-lute to the hour-long show by airing reruns every Saturday at 10 p.m.

Ridiculed by some but embraced by others because of its Dogpatch look and outlook, "Hee Haw" became one of the longest running programs in TV history. There are 600 shows in the vault for rebroadcast.

The last syndicated "Hee Haw" show aired in June. Except for seven months in 1971, the program had been broadcast constantly for 24 years.

It is tempting to say that there will be no more new "Hee Haw" jokes, but then, no joke ever broadcast on "Hee Haw" was new.

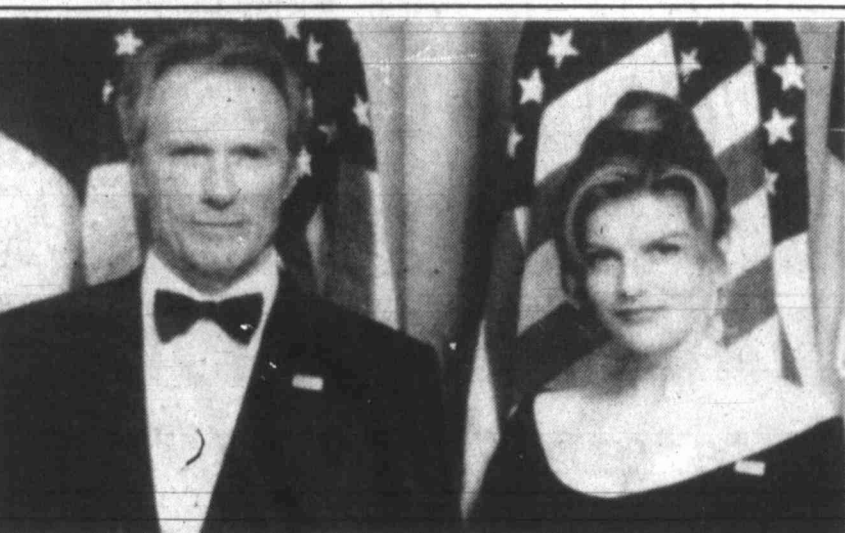

The Reflections Program in conjunction with Canterbury Retirement Center will offer an evening program entitled "Family Resources for the Elderly." The program will include information on resources available to the elderly in the local area and information on Alzheimer's disease.

To be held at Canterbury Retirement Center, 1700 Lancaster, Big Spring on Thursday, October 7, at 6:00 P.M.

Armed resistance collapses in Moscow

The Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soldiers disarmed and arrested several groups of gunmen today as violent resistance to President Boris Yeltsin collapsed and the government took full control of the capital.

Isolated attacks by snipers were reported overnight, but there were no casualties.

Yeltsin's government continued to crack down on the opposition. Several mainstream Moscow newspapers appeared today with blank spots on their pages where articles had been censored and removed. But the government later today ended censorship, saying it was a temporary emergency step.

Government troops and tanks stormed the parliament building Monday and crushed armed resistance by some 1,500 lawmakers and their supporters. Hard-liners were holed up in the building for almost two weeks after refusing Yeltsin's order to disband and hold new elections.

Fighting began after hard-liners rioted Sunday in central Moscow. The battles left more than 100 dead and hundreds more wounded.

Yeltsin had been locked in a power struggle with an informal alliance of Communists, fascists and ultra-nationalists opposed to the scale and pace of his political and economic reforms. Both sides had tried to oust each other during an 18-month power struggle that crippled the government.

Life was returning to normal in Moscow today with heavy commuter traffic headed to the city center. Tanks were pulled back from around the blackened parliament building and fewer troops were seen on the streets.

Officials were considering what charges would be filed against the parliament leaders, former vice president Alexander Rutskoi and parliament speaker Ruslan Khasbulatov. The two men and other top leaders were being held in high-security prisons.

Yeltsin continued to tighten his grip on the government.

The chairman of the Constitutional Court, who had sided with Yeltsin's foes in the fight over dissolving parliament, resigned today. Under Valery Zorkin's leadership, the court initially took an independent line after the Soviet collapse, but this year Zorkin increasingly aligned with parliament leaders.

On Monday, Yeltsin dismissed Russia's chief prosecutor Valentyn Stepankov.

Way contributions should not be thought of as simply money. "We're talking about people's lives here — not just things and money."

This year's Big Spring United Way video, "Winners All of Us/The United Way," was premiered at the meeting, prepared by KWAB videographer Loran Warren and Randy Lynn of KBST and KWAB.

The video, which focuses on various UW contributor's views of United Way, is available for public viewing by calling the United Way office at 267-5201.

The goal for this year's funding is the same as that of the last two years, $235,000, according to United Way officials.

City employees of the year are Pam Jordan, sitting, Perry Hall Jr., left, and Gary Fuqua. They are, respectively, female employee, male employee and supervisor of the year.

Fuqua, Jordan, Hall named city's employees of year

By PATRICK DRISCOLL
Staff Writer

The city of Big Spring this year began annual selection of a supervisor, male employee and female employee of the year, the first time it's been done in several years.

The decision to honor three municipal employees follows implementation in February of a "city employee of the month," program which denotes "Star" employees.

Employees of the year, picked by their peers, were recognized in August. Monthly employees are nominated by peers and citizens.

"We want to recognize employees for superior work," City Manager Lanny Lambert said of the programs.

Supervisor of the Year is Gary Fuqua, municipal service superintendent. He's been with the city since 1975.

"He is a key team player," said his boss, Public Works Director Tom Decell. "I was most pleased to see him get this well-deserved award."

Female Employee of the Year is Pam Jordan, a lieutenant in the police department, where she's the highest ranking female. She's been with the city since 1981.

"Pam's an excellent officer," said

Acting Police Chief Jerry Edwards. "She's always there doing the job. She's courteous, polite and an excellent employee."

Male Employee of the Year is Perry Hall Jr., a senior mechanic in the service center. He's been with the city since 1979.

"Perry Hall is an individual with a can-do attitude," Decell said. "He's ever willing and able to assist with any assignment regardless of time and location."

Employees were selected for cooperative spirit, dedicated service to the city and community, a caring attitude towards others and more, said Emma Bogard, the city's personnel director.

It's unknown how much merchandise is yet to be recovered.

"Oh God, we're talking 10 years. We're talking thousands of dollars worth," Edens said. "Some of the items recovered so far, from information, may go back as far as 10 years."

"Let's look at what the child can do and not what they're doing wrong," Moughon said. "Catch them doing good" and let them know.

Perfection can include comparisons to others. The opposite is to value the child for who he or she is.

"We need to give them unconditional positive regard, no matter what," Moughon said.

Overprotection involves shielding a child from the world and responsibility. The opposite is encouraging independence and interdependence with others.

"Independence and cooperation are essential for personal development and survival of the human species," Moughon said.

Sheriff

The Howard County Sheriff's Department reported the following incidents:

- Elias S. Bihl, 20, was arrested for criminal mischief.
- Johnny Dean Darden, 37, was arrested for burglary of a vehicle.
- Philip Price, 30, was arrested on a warrant for failing to provide court-ordered support.
- Daniel Albert Willey, 50, was arrested for driving while intoxicated, second offense.
- Theft over $200 was reported in the 1100 block of Cypress Rd.

Governor, GOP tangle over records requests

The Associated Press

AUSTIN — Texas Republicans are searching for documents from Gov. Ann Richards' office under the state Open Records Act, playing what Richards' spokesman calls a "silly game."

Bill Cryer, press secretary to the Democratic governor, said Tuesday that Republicans were costing taxpayers thousands of dollars by seeking photocopies of reams of Richards' office records.

"The Republican Party and its agents are asking the taxpayers of this state to underwrite their dirt-digging expeditions into the governor's office," Cryer said.

But Karen Hughes, Texas GOP executive director, said the material being sought is public information.

"The last time I checked, Republicans were still members of the public," she said.

Cryer said the GOP requests are so numerous and vague that it appears they don't know what they want.

"The kinds of records they are asking for suggest that they have no idea what they are looking for, but are content to let state employees do their research on the off-chance they will turn up some document they hope will embarrass the governor,"

Cryer said.

The Open Records Act requires that most executive and legislative governmental records be made available for public examination. Agencies have 10 days to either make the information public or seek an opinion from the attorney general.

Cryer said the governor's office is seeking to comply but has received requests for a listing of all its employees since Jan. 17, 1991, all speeches made by Richards, all her official schedules, all her appointees and background information about them, and all correspondence between the governor's office and the State Board of Pardons and Paroles.

He said requests were received from the state Republican Party and from a researcher who's worked in previous GOP campaigns.

"This is the beginning of the negative research for the 1994 election. The problem is, they are asking the taxpayers to pay for it," Cryer said.

Ms. Hughes said the Republican Party "always offers to pay for any copying costs. We do not want to make the taxpayers pay for our looking at state records."

She said the GOP sought documents "in specific instances where we were looking at questions of possible mixture of state business with political business."

Arty experience

Vieregge finds contacts, fun at festival, but gets urge to 'show' out of her system

By DEBBIE LINCEUM
Features Editor

Local artist Doris Vieregge always said she didn't want to do shows.

"I like to do my work, give it to a gallery and walk out," said Vieregge, whose ceramic pots, plates and one-of-a-kind creations have been seen locally at West Texas Center for the Arts. "Doing shows is too much of a hassle."

But, just this once, Vieregge broke her rule. She accepted an invitation to show her work at the Michael Martin Murphy WestFest in Copper Mountain, Colo.

Her work had to be judged by a panel of experts to win her the invitation. The event is described in promotional material as a gathering of "artists, poets, cowboys, Indians and mountain men."

"I had a great time," Vieregge admitted, adding that it was her first and probably her last such show. But while there, she did meet several artists and invite them to visit Big Spring.

Two possibilities are Daryl Howard, who mixes her own pigments of crushed rock and other natural ingredients; and Amado Pena, originally from Laredo, whose southwest art is recognized worldwide.

At WestFest, Big Spring's Vieregge was among more than 300 vendors from all over the country. She was one of only three potters.

But until May, the artist had not worked much since 1989 because of injuries sustained in two car accidents.

"From May until the end of August, I worked day and night," Vieregge explained. "At the end, I had about $14,000 worth of inventory ready to go."

Included in that were some of her unusual jewelry pieces. Vieregge uses figures from ancient pictographs and prints them on bark paper - the original paper of the western hemisphere.

Her next project is an ongoing study of the culture of the Pueblo

Doris Vieregge with one of her pieces.

Indians, reconstructing the original vessels found at archeological sites and using designs from pictographs found in cliff dwellings.

"I've always been interested in the historical aspect," Vieregge said. "I've always wanted to do it. But I needed to get more information. That's what I want to do now."

Vieregge, whose business Flo-Lite Signs is her "real job," is content to keep on the outer edges of the sometimes "exclusive club" that is the art world.

"I like to play with art," she said. "But I wouldn't want to make it my living. It's too much who you know rather than what you know. It's very trendy."

Art, to Vieregge, needs to say something - and often what's popular seems to have no meaning.

"I don't like to see just a few lines thrown down," she said. "You should be able to look at it and grasp it, at least something about what the artist is saying."

As for showing and selling her work in a huge festival setting, Vieregge said the idea is now out of her system.

"I made a lot of good contacts and such," she said. "But I don't know if I could go through that again."

Adele Tibbs looks over the needlepoint she made of Peter Hurd's mural that is displayed at the Howard County Library. Tibbs was too busy to watch the painter work in 1935, but 40 years later, her fascination for the painting prompted her to make the needlepoint.

Mural fan has own version

By DEBBIE LINCEUM
Features Editor

Adele Tibbs was too busy to spend much time watching Peter Hurd paint his mural at the post office.

While Hurd painted the work, beginning in 1935, Tibbs was putting in hours at the family grocery store. But that didn't mean she wasn't fascinated by his creation, which hangs today in the same building, now used for the Howard County Library.

"I thought it was fantastic," said the 81-year-old Tibbs recently. So interested was she in the mural of local pioneers that in 1978, she created a scaled-down needlepoint of the design.

That work hangs in her home today.

"I just got interested in it, I guess," said Tibbs. "I went down there for a picture, they said they had one postcard. They said, 'It's your life if you don't make it back with this.'"

"Well, my daughter (now an accomplished painter) helped me block it out on graph paper and I used that postcard for the colors."

Her needlepoint appears nearly identical to the mural, including its Walt Whitman quote at the bottom: "O pioneers, democracy rests finally upon us and our visions sweep through eternity."

Tibbs' brothers had a hand in creating the original - they cracked eggs for the master painter.

"Mr. Hurd came to my daddy for some legal work he needed done while he was in Big Spring," Tibbs explained. "While he was there, he asked if my father knew where he could find some boys to help him by cracking the eggs."

So her brothers pitched in, cracking crate after crate of fresh eggs into a bucket each day. Hurd used the eggs as a binding ingredient for his paint, according to reports.

Nearly 60 years after it was painted, talk has begun about the mural's fate. The Howard County Library plans to move into a new building in a couple of years, and the county is not sure what will happen to the old building.

Tibbs, like many who remember it fondly, is hopeful that the mural will survive.

"They should preserve it if they possibly can," she said. "I think they should get it out, even if they have to take the whole wall out."

Although her needlepoint is no amateur work, Tibbs said she taught herself the craft. Recreating Hurd's mural took a year and a half.

A longtime store operator, Tibbs also worked for Hall-Bennett Hospital, from which she retired.

Whole enchilada
Giant treat feeds 8,000

By The Associated Press

LAS CRUCES, N.M. — Don't even TRY to eat the whole thing.

The highlight of this weekend's Whole Enchilada Festival was just that: an 8-foot-diameter enchilada, made with 175 pounds of cheese, 50 pounds of onions and 60 gallons of red chile sauce.

Total calorie count, including toppings: 75,000.

"It cost us about $6,500 to make the enchilada, but it was worth the money," said Roberto Estrada, who owns a Mexican restaurant and donated the ingredients.

The three-layer concoction — on tortillas that weighed 25 pounds each — was cooked Sunday in 175 gallons of oil. Portions were served free to about 8,000 people at the 13th annual festival in Las Cruces, about 50 miles north of El Paso, Texas.

The fiesta included a parade Saturday as well as arts and crafts and other activities. About 200,000 people were expected to attend, said Debbie Pickett, the festival's executive director.

"This was the best year yet," police Sgt. Tom Austin said Sunday after the enchilada was all eaten up.

Value fish

Tilapia may not be a household word quite yet, but the editors of the national consumer seafood magazine, "Simply Seafood," report that the farmed fish will be the seafood value of the '90s.

Its popularity is expected to keep growing: Chefs from coast to coast are promoting tilapia, and aquaculturists report that the cost of its production is fairly low because the fresh-water fish is vegetarian. Also, its mild, white flesh suits American tastes.

Tilapia is now farmed in dozens of states, but most of the supply comes from farms in Latin America and Southeast Asia.

In Israel, where it is widely farmed, tilapia is sold as "St. Peter's fish." The biblical reference holds that it was tilapia caught by St. Peter that was used by Jesus to feed the multitudes on the shores of Galilee.

Salty sweet

It may seem weird to some, but lots of people find salty things good to eat along with vanilla ice cream: pretzels, potato chips, roasted peanuts.

A dash of salt cuts cloying sweetness in desserts. Now along comes a potato-chip promotion from the Snack Food Association, which suggests Chipper Sundae:

"Form one pint of vanilla ice cream into equal balls and coat heavily with 1-1/2 cups crushed potato chips. Freeze. Drizzle with hot fudge sauce."

Cheap lunch

For some tips on slimming down your school-lunch expenditures, try "The Tightwad Gazette" by Amy Dacyczyn (Villard Books, $9.99 soft-cover). It says you can prepare a box lunch for around 45 cents.

Bologna, turkey, tuna, egg salad or peanut butter sandwiches cost up to 20 cents, says the book's author. I wonder where she buys her tuna?

A cup of soup in a thermal bottle costs 5 to 10 cents; a dime or less will provide vegetable sticks, popcorn, breadsticks or some fresh fruit.

Jordan shocks sports world with retirement

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Michael Jordan, the world's most famous athlete and basketball's greatest player, will announce his retirement Wednesday, according to NBC and published reports.

"Dateline NBC," the Denver Post and the Chicago Sun-Times reported the news almost simultaneously Tuesday night.

Jordan, NBA scoring champion the last seven years, leader of the three-time champion Chicago Bulls, two-time Olympic gold-medal winner and NCAA champion as a freshman at North Carolina, is expected to cite his father's slaying this summer as the reason for his retirement at age 30.

"It's time for me to move on to something else," the Sun-Times said Jordan told friends. "I know a lot of people are going to be shocked by this decision and probably won't understand. But I've talked it over with my family and friends, and most of all I'm at peace with myself over the decision."

His father's death apparently robbed Jordan of his desire to play, the Post said.

Dateline NBC producer Neil Shapiro said the show learned of Jordan's plans from "authoritative sources close to the NBA."

The Bulls have scheduled a news conference at 11 a.m. EDT Wednesday to make what they called a "major announcement."

Jordan threw out the ceremonial first pitch at Tuesday night's playoff opener between the Chicago White Sox and the Toronto Blue Jays at Comiskey Park in Chicago.

He left after the seventh inning, got behind the wheel of a black Mercedes-Benz and drove off.

Jerry Reinsdorf, owner of the White Sox and Bulls, said from the ballpark: "I have nothing to say tonight. We'll have something to say tomorrow."

The NBA refused comment, deflecting queries to the Bulls.

In a copyright story, the Post said Bulls coach Phil Jackson had confirmed that Jordan was retiring.

The Post said Jackson would not say if Jordan had indicated his decision was irrevocable.

According to the paper, a source close to Jordan said he has told friends he just doesn't have the fire to play any more.

Jordan began his NBA career in 1984 after being named college player of the year at the University of North Carolina in both 1983 and '84. In 1982, Jordan, then a skinny freshman, helped Dean Smith win his first NCAA title at North Carolina when he hit the game-winning shot in the final seconds.

Jordan led the Bulls to their first NBA title in 1991. The Bulls won their second title in 1992, with Jordan again winning MVP honors. He made it three in a row when the Bulls beat the Phoenix Suns to win the NBA title in June.

Jordan also found nothing but success in the Olympics.

In 1984, before his rookie season in the NBA, he was coach Bob Knight's best player as the U.S. team went unbeaten through the basketball tournament in Los Angeles. It was the last time a team of collegiate players managed to win a gold medal for the United States.

Jays blast Sox in playoff opener

By The Associated Press

CHICAGO — John Olerud led the majors in hitting in spring training. He led the league in hitting in the regular season. One game into the postseason, he's at it again.

Olerud got three hits, scored three times and doubled home Toronto's go-ahead runs, sending the Blue Jays past Jack McDowell and the Chicago White Sox 7-3 Tuesday night in Game 1 of the AL playoffs.

It seemed like the only pitch thrown by a Chicago player that did not wind up as a hit was Michael Jordan's ceremonial first ball. A record crowd of 46,246 at Comiskey Park spent the later innings talking about the Bulls' superstar's rumored retirement from the NBA.

In a series billed as Toronto's hitting versus Chicago's pitching, the Blue Jays' bats dominated. Paul Molitor, who homered and drove in three runs, and Ed Sprague each had four of the 17 hits for the defending World Series champions.

The offensive onslaught enabled Juan Guzman to survive a wild ride. He walked a career-high eight, threw three wild pitches and hit a batter, all in just six innings, but wound up with the victory and a 4-0 lifetime record in the playoffs.

Meanwhile, McDowell, who tied for the major league lead with 22 wins, was tagged for an AL playoff record 13 hits in 6 2-3 innings. He is 0-3 against Toronto this year, and is 3-7 with a 5.60 ERA lifetime against the Blue Jays.

There was so much hitting that the game did not end until 11:52 p.m. EDT. Baseball moved up its starting time by a half-hour this year, partly to accommodate CBS-TV's desire not to delay David Letterman's show, but the Blue Jays still made it a late night.

Game 2 will be this afternoon.

Braves, Phillies start battle tonight

By The Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA — In this, their third attempt at a World Series title, the Atlanta Braves are expected to win. Nothing else will do.

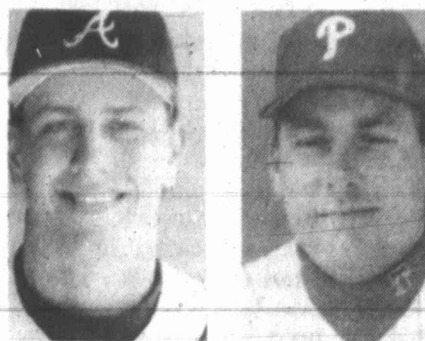

The Braves had to win 104 games before edging the San Francisco Giants on the last day of the season for the AL West title. They lost in the Series last year to Toronto and are even better this year with the additions of Greg Maddux and Fred McGriff.

Philadelphia, which finished last in 1992, led all but one day in winning the East with 97 wins.

The first two games are in Veterans Stadium, beginning tonight (8:12 p.m. EDT). After a Friday open date, the series moves to Atlanta for the next three, and back to Philadelphia for the final two, if necessary.

Both managers made surprising pitching choices for the opener. Bobby Cox of the Braves is going with Steve Avery over John Smoltz, and Phillies manager Jim Fregosi selected Curt Schilling instead of Tommy Greene.

Avery, 18-6 with a 2.94 ERA, was 1-1 in the regular season against the Phillies. Schilling (16-7, 4.02 ERA) was 0-2 with two no-decisions in four starts against the Braves, allowing 24 hits and 16 runs in 21 1-3 innings.

Avery

Schilling

The Braves are big favorites to give the West its sixth straight NL pennant despite splitting the 12-game season series against the Phillies.

Almost everyone concedes that the Braves have a strong edge in pitching with Avery, followed by Maddux, Tom Glavine (22-6) and Smoltz (15-11).

"They have the best staff in the NL," Fregosi said Tuesday. "We don't look at them as a group, however. We take them pitcher by pitcher. Avery is one of the top young pitchers in the league. What makes it especially harder for us is the fact that he has so much postseason experience."

The Phillies counter with Schilling, Greene (16-4), Terry Mulholland (12-9) and Danny Jackson (12-11), the only one with playoff experience.

"I like our guys very much," Fregosi said. "Schilling and Greene are two of the top young right-handers in the league. They each had seven complete games. Jackson has played experience and Mulholland is back."

Mulholland missed more than three weeks of the final month with a hip injury.

The Braves also have a big edge in power with David Justice's 40 homers and 120 RBIs, McGriff's 37 HRs and 101 RBIs and Ron Gant's 36 homers and 117 RBIs. The Phillies' best home run hitters are Darren Daulton and Pete Incaviglia, each with 24. Daulton drove in 105 runs.

"You'd have to say they (Braves) have more home run hitters than we do, but we scored 877 runs, so I'd have to say we're the more explosive team," Fregosi noted.

this season. He sandwiched two singles around his double and also walked before finally striking out against Scott Radinsky in the eighth inning.

The Blue Jays led the AL in hitting this year and the White Sox had the best pitching. But if good pitching is supposed to shut down good hitting, it didn't show.

Chicago had its share of offense, too, although most of it was created by Guzman's wildness. He set an AL record with 26 wild pitches, and he walked Frank Thomas three times.

Thomas started at designated hitter instead of at first base because of an injured left tricep. He drew a walk from Duane Ward in the ninth to set an AL Playoff record with four, and singled. Chicago, however, left 13 runners on base.

Big Spring whips Lake View

By STEVE REAGAN
Sports writer

Midway through the season, the Big Spring tennis team is definitely the class of District 3-4A. The only question remaining now is how good the team really is.

Borrowing a page from William Tecumseh Sherman, the Steers and Lady Steers plowed through San Angelo Lake View 18-0 at Figure 7 Tennis Center Tuesday afternoon. The performance was so dominating that Big Spring dropped only one set the entire evening.

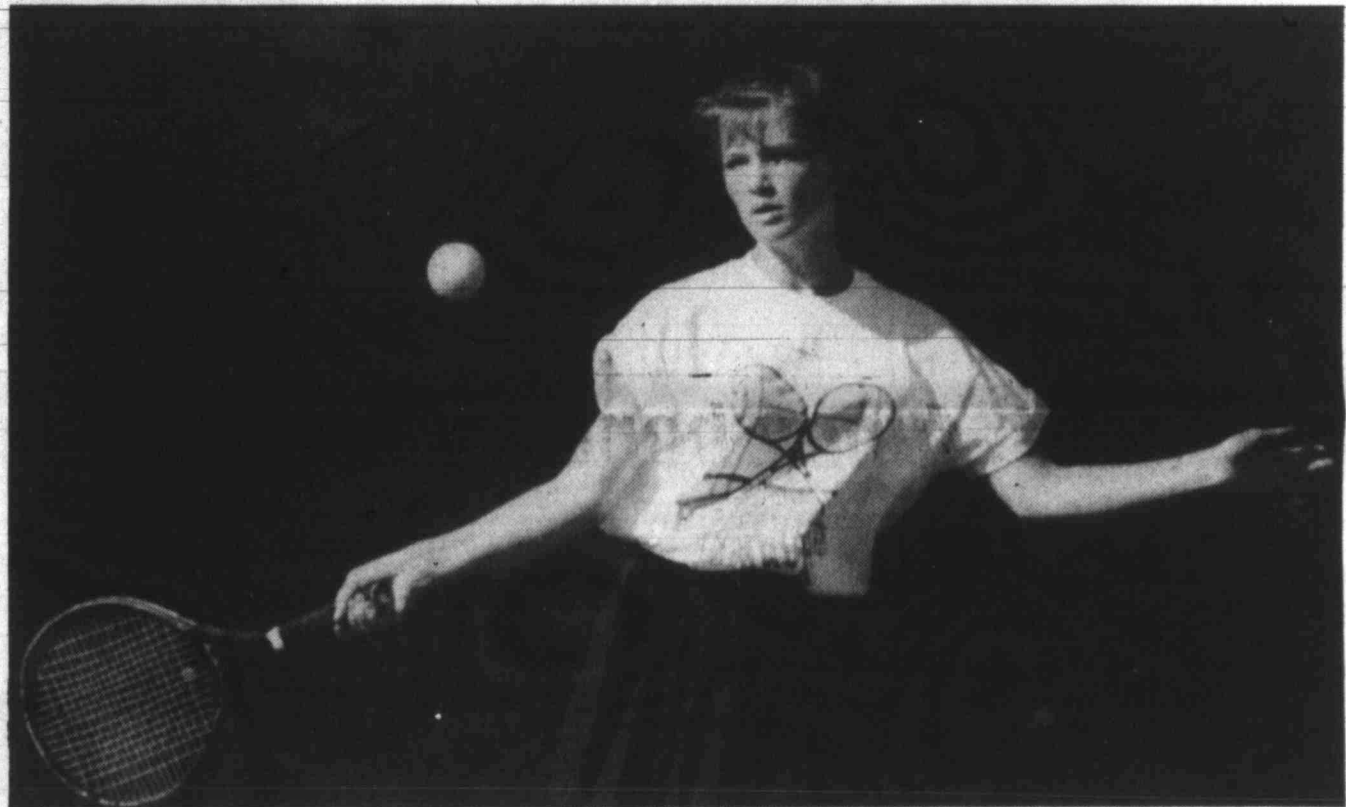

The Big Spring boys were particularly overpowering. Not only did they not drop a set, they lost only four games in nine matches. Greg Biddison, Rob Lee, Paul McKinney and Colby Wegman gave their singles opponents the double-bagel treatment, winning both sets at love; the same was true in the two of three doubles matches.

It was just another in a recent string of workmanlike wins for the team.

"This team has taken a very serious approach to matches," said coach Ralph Davis. "They have a goal and a purpose, and that's to get to the final of the regional tournament, which would be a huge step for the team."

The win improves the team's record to 9-0 overall and 4-0 in District 3-4A.

In its romp through the schedule so far, the team has hardly been challenged, which Davis sees as both good and bad: Good because the team has shown a consistent level of fine play; bad because Davis doesn't know how good the team really is at this point.

Big Spring's Lara Stevenson, above, returns a volley during Tuesday's tennis match at the Figure 7 Tennis Center. Stevenson and all of her teammates were winners as the Steers and Lady Steers defeated San Angelo Lake View, 18-0. Big Spring lost only one set. The team is still undefeated, both overall and in District 3-4A play, and its next match is Saturday in Fort Stockton.

"That's a big concern right now," Davis said. "Now that we've played the strength of the district, ... we need to keep sharp and focused on what winning a close match is all about, and we're not getting that right now."

Davis has no doubt that his team is steamrolling toward a berth at the regional tournament, but the lack of stiff opposition from district opponents has him concerned whether his team will be ready when the quality of play improves.

"The caliber of play we'll get at regional is a whole different ball of wax than what we're getting here," he said. "There's not going to be any easy matches there."

Members of the team, meanwhile, are not quite as perplexed at all of Big Spring's success.

"I think this team is better than it has been in a long time," said Lara Stevenson. "And it's not like the girls are carrying the guys. The guys are doing good too."

Her sentiments are echoed by her doubles partner, Amy Dominguez.

"I think we're doing pretty great," Dominguez said. "We've worked hard ... and put in a lot of practice. I think we deserve what we're getting right now."

"We're shooting for state," Dominguez added. "That's what I'd like to see. We know we'll have to work our way there. It's going to be really hard, but if we do work hard, we've got a real good chance."

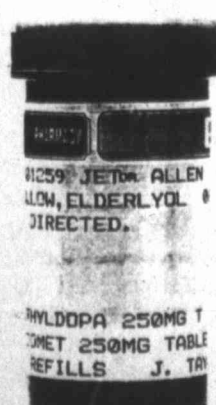

Big Spring returns to action Saturday at Fort Stockton.

Astros start shakeup, fire manager

Howe out as manager, Wood out of front office

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON — As a player, Bob Watson scored baseball's 1 millionth run. Now he's moved into the managerial ranks.

Watson was named as general manager several hours after Houston Astros owner Drayton McLane fired general manager Bill Wood and manager Art Howe on Tuesday.

McLane, completing his first season as owner, said he wanted more aggressive leadership that would move forward in unconventional ways. Watson, assistant general manager the past five years, convinced him he could move the team.

"We'll be looking at a lot of different ways to do things," Watson said. "I'll look at all the avenues. It could be trades, we may infuse one of those young guys into the lineup or we could go for free agents on a limited basis.

Watson has a pair of spikes in the Hall of Fame for scoring the game's 1 millionth run in 1975. He follows former Atlanta general manager Bill Lucas as the second black general manager in major league baseball.

"It's a very important step for baseball, the Houston Astros and for Bob Watson," Watson said. "All of those steps are positive. Drayton wouldn't have offered me the job if he didn't think I could do it."

McLane jumped in to explain his reasons for hiring Watson: "Bob was selected because I am convinced that he is the best man for the job."

Watson, played for 15 years with Houston, Oakland, the New York Yankees, Boston and Atlanta and more recently has been mentioned as a possible successor to National League President Bill White.

"In my years as a business executive, I've always focused on the leadership," McLane said. "And I think that's what Bob brings to the organization."

"He's highly qualified. He has two World Series rings that I see every time that I see him. That represents success and that's what we're looking for."

McLane was unhappy with the Astros record against the upper echelon teams.

He pointed to the club's 18-32 record against Atlanta, San Francisco, Philadelphia and Montreal.

"We had more potential than what we achieved," McLane said. "The leadership didn't make the progress that we should have made."

McLane called Howe a fine man and capable baseball person but said the club needed "more imagination and more aggressiveness."

"We want to be unconventional in our approach," McLane said. "I judged this season not by wins and losses but by the mood of how I felt. We would win three or four and then we would lose three or four."

Sometimes we lost to the wrong guys. We'd let leads slip away. That's what we've got to overcome."

Wood was named general manager in 1987 and had been with the organization 17 years.

"I think I just wasn't the right guy from a personality and style standpoint," Wood said. "My background and the way I approach things were not what he was looking for."

"He's a real go-getter, a dynamic person. I'm more measured in the way I do things. Maybe I go a little slower."

Howe's even-handed approach to managing was questioned by his critics, but McLane said that wasn't the reason for his dismissal.

"I'm not looking for someone to come in here ranting and raving and throwing bats in the dugout," McLane said. "I don't yell and scream and shout. You get there by having vision of what you want done and knowing how to do it."

Howe wondered if his personality affected McLane's decision.

"He (McLane) used the term 'dynamic leader' but I'm proud of what we achieved here," Howe said.

Jordan's retirement is shocking, but not all that surprising

Don't you hate it when you're watching a baseball game and the announcers interrupt themselves to bring you late-breaking news from another sport?

When watching baseball, you should get baseball.

However, when CBS interrupted its coverage of the American League Championship Series last night to bring us late-breaking news, there was no time to get ticked off or yell "Get back to the baseball game."

Faster than CBS could say "Michael Jordan will apparently retire," jaws were hitting the floor in record numbers.

Michael Jordan.

The best basketball player in the world. Ever.

An Olympic gold medalist. Twice.

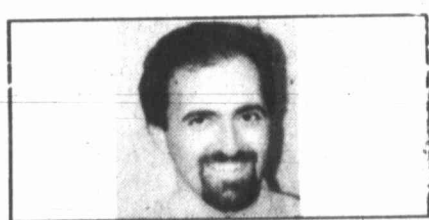

The most recognizable face in sports. Number 23, Chicago Bulls.

The man on the Wheaties boxes and the McDonald's commercials.

Didn't we just see him throw out the first ball of the AL playoffs? Did he look like a guy that was ready to put his Nikes in the closet? He's only 30 years old - he can't retire, can he?

Actually, though, could you blame him for wanting to get out early?

Even before his father's murder, Jordan's life wasn't exactly swimming along. On the court, he was helping the Bulls win their third straight world championship, but off court he was trying to have a life, period. His privacy was gone.

Dave Hargrave

A book came out about Jordan's gambling habits, and suddenly helicopters were following him around golf courses. Aerial photos of Jordan sinking a putt on the third hole became hot items.

Regardless of your views on Jordan's gambling habits, shouldn't Jordan be allowed to golf in peace? Shouldn't he be allowed to go to a casino, even if it's 2 a.m., without reading about it in the papers the next day?

It's never been proven that Jordan broke any laws, but at times during the 1993 NBA playoffs he was treated like a criminal.

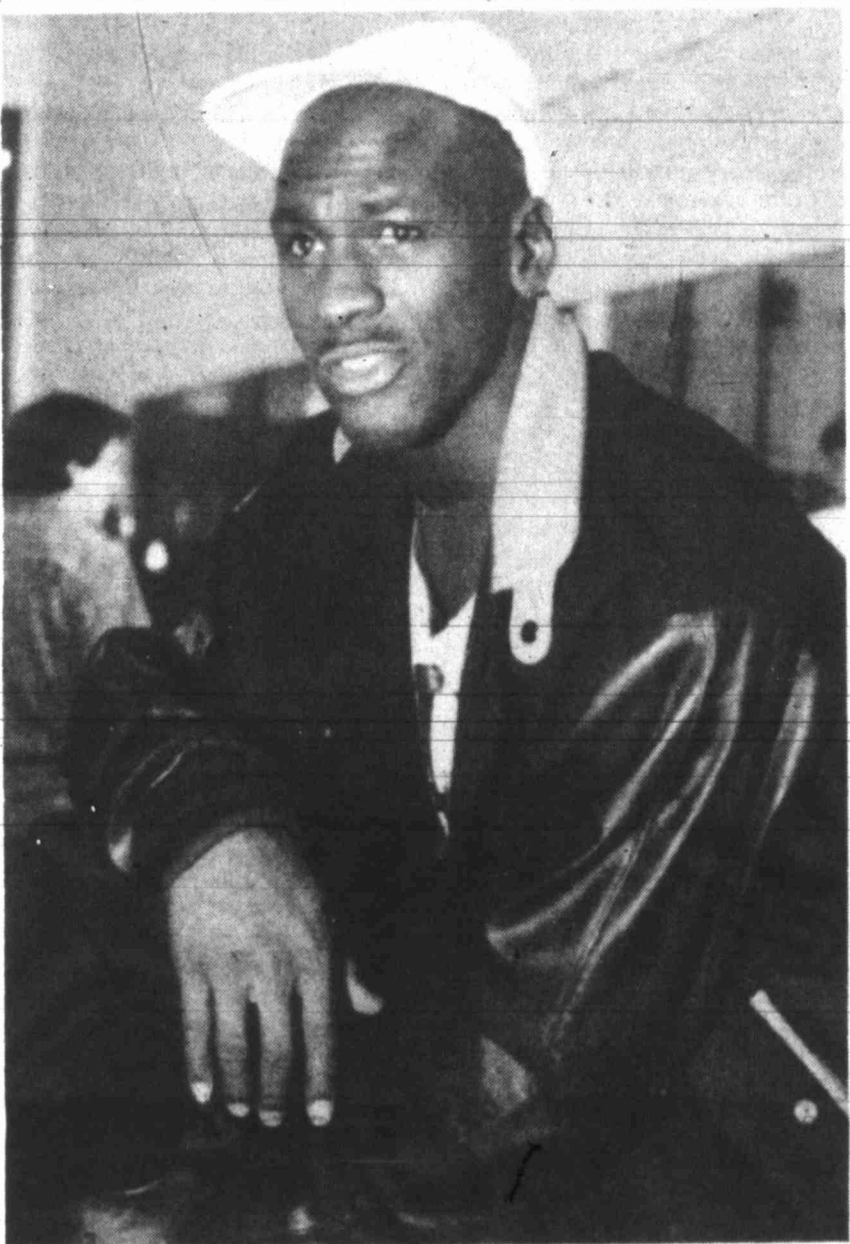

It's no wonder he wants to get out.

At least for a while.

Jordan is still in the prime of his career. He can rewrite the record book if he plays maybe just five more years. He can make millions and millions of dollars, on top of what he already has.

OK, so Jordan is gone for now, but he'll be back. The game is just too much to walk away from.

Jordan is too great of a superstar to leave under any terms other than his own. The media and two alleged teen-aged murderers won't push Jordan out of the game permanently.

Just for a while.

Love him or hate him, Jordan is basketball's greatest ambassador. The NBA will survive without him. The Bulls will reach the playoffs, though they surely can't win the NBA title without him.

Life goes on. Watching pro basketball just won't be as much fun. That's all.

Dallas wins first game

By The Associated Press

DALLAS — The Dallas Stars got off to a successful start in their new home Tuesday night, scoring two goals in a 31-second span of the first period en route to a 6-4 victory over the Detroit Red Wings and new coach Scotty Bowman.

The Stars, who moved to Dallas from Minneapolis after the franchise failed to draw enough fans, played before a sellout crowd of 16,914 at Reunion Arena that included NHL Commissioner Gary Bettman.

Neal Broten scored the first goal 3:51 into the first period, taking a pass from Mike McPhee and putting it past Detroit's Tim Cheveldae during a wild scramble in front of the net.

Mike Modano scored 31 seconds later for the Stars.

Detroit, the highest scoring team in the NHL last year, cut the deficit to 2-1 just before the end of the first period on a short-handed goal by Steve Yzerman.

Cheveldae suffered a knee injury in a collision with Jarkko Varvio in the first period and had to leave the ice. Substitute goalie Vince Riendeau was victimized 34 seconds into the second period on Broten's second goal, a backhand wraparound from behind the net.

After a goal by Detroit's Sergie Fedorov, Dallas extended the lead to 4-2 on a 25-foot slap shot by Dave Gagner from the top of the faceoff circle.

Detroit's Dallas Drake and the Stars' Varvio traded goals in the second period, which ended with Dallas ahead 5-3.

Grant Ledyard also scored for Dallas and Greg Johnson got his first NHL goal for the Red Wings in the third period.

The game started 35-minutes late so the Stars could have a laser light show and introduce dignitaries.

"The Stars have a first-class arena and this is a great sports town. The NHL is very excited to be here," Bettman told the crowd.

Bowman, who coached in the past at Pittsburgh and Montreal, is starting his 22nd season in the NHL.
